The court of appeal affirmed the order, stating that in granting a new trial on the ground of error in law, the trial court apparently concluded that it had erroneously refused the adjoining landowners' offer to prove that a retaining wall of the property was built by their predecessors in interest. One of plaintiff's contentions was that the adjoining landowners were under a duty not to maintain a dangerous condition adjacent to a public parking lot. However, the court noted that the rejected evidence was admissible to show who was responsible for creating and maintaining the dangerous condition (27 Cal. 2d 449, 456) . Therefore, the court concluded that the granting of the motion on this ground was proper. After examining the record, the court also determined that the motion was properly granted on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence. Hence, the court affirmed the order (27 Cal. 2d 449, 455-456) .

[c] Discretion of Trial Judge

In De Victoria v. Erickson (1948) 83 Cal. App. 2d 206, 188 P.2d 276 , plaintiff brought an action for personal injuries against defendants. During cross examination, defense counsel attempted to lay a foundation for the impeachment of plaintiff's witness by implying that he had a witness who saw that a car, other than defendants', caused the accident. Defense counsel then offered a written statement, signed by the new witness, but written by another person, as impeaching evidence. However, the written statement was excluded from the record because defendants did not show the persons present or the circumstances surrounding the signing of the statement. Plaintiff then moved to strike the evidence previously claimed to be grounds for impeachment. The court failed to rule on the motion. After a verdict was rendered for defendants, plaintiff's motion for a new trial was granted. Defendants appealed the order.

The court of appeal affirmed the order, stating that if an error of law has occurred in the admission of evidence over the objections and failure of the court on proper motion to eliminate the evidence from consideration, the trial judge may consider all the circumstances surrounding the ruling of the court, including the weight that may be accorded to the questioned evidence, the attitude of the interrogator, and any other fact tending to show the importance of the admission or rejection of the evidence. The reviewing court, confined to the record on appeal, and without opportunity to precisely weigh the effect of the ruling on the triers of fact, is warranted in assuming that the action of the trial court in granting a new trial is an indication of the importance that the trial court placed on the questioned ruling and its influence in causing a miscarriage of justice (83 Cal. App. 2d 206, 208-209) . In this case, the court concluded that the order was properly granted, and, accordingly, it affirmed the order granting a new trial (83 Cal. App. 2d 206, 208-210) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Erroneous Admission of Evidence

Post v. Camino Del Properties, Inc. (1959) 173 Cal. App. 2d 446, 343 P.2d 294 , was an action for personal injuries in which the court of appeal reversed judgment for defendant notwithstanding the verdict and affirmed an order granting defendant a new trial on the grounds of errors in law and insufficiency of the evidence. The court agreed that the evidence of previous accidents had been erroneously admitted since the evidence was indefinite and did not show similarities in conditions between the previous accidents and the one in question. Furthermore, the court felt that the error had been compounded by the lower court's failure to give a limiting instruction (173 Cal. App. 2d 446, 453-454) .

Savoia v. Moorehead (1948) 83 Cal. App. 2d 147, 188 P.2d 260 , was a personal injury action in which the court of appeal affirmed an order granting plaintiff a new trial on the ground of error in law. The lower court erroneously admitted evidence relating to the possibility of plaintiff's having received consideration for dismissing the action against some of the defendants. Since the admission of the evidence appeared to be prejudicial, and there was no manifest abuse of discretion in the trial court's action, the court of appeal affirmed the order (83 Cal. App. 2d 147, 151-152) .

[b] Erroneous Exclusion of Evidence

Stow v. Superior Court (1918) 178 Cal. 140, 172 P. 598 , was a breach of contract action in which the Supreme Court affirmed an order granting plaintiff a new trial on the ground of error in law occurring at trial. At trial, the judge sustained defendant's objection to the introduction of any evidence by plaintiff on the ground that the complaint did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The court then granted judgment for defendant on the pleadings. The Supreme Court stated that any erroneous ruling, by which a party is precluded from introducing evidence in support of his or her cause of action as set forth in the complaint for the defense, is an error of law occurring at trial (178 Cal. 140, 143) .

Scott v. Gallot (1943) 59 Cal. App. 2d 421, 138 P.2d 685 , was an action for personal injuries in which the court of appeal affirmed an order granting plaintiff a new trial on the ground of error in law. During trial, the court ordered that certain evidence be stricken and instructed the jury that it should not consider the evidence. However, the court of appeal stated that the evidence was relevant under the affirmative issue of contributory negligence raised by the answer to the complaint and that the trial court was therefore justified in granting a new trial (59 Cal. App. 2d 421, 424-425) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 155 MOTIONS AFTER TRIAL
PART II. FORMS
B. Motions for New Trial
8. Error of Law

15-155 California Points & Authorities § 155.252

§ 155.252 Supporting Motion for New Trial [Code Civ. Proc. § 659]--Error of Law [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(7)]--Erroneous or Misleading Jury Instructions

[1] FORM

[The following should be combined with a general form of memorandum of points and authorities supporting a motion for new trial on the ground of error in law (see § 155.250).]

A NEW TRIAL SHOULD BE GRANTED ON THE GROUND OF ERROR IN LAW, OCCURRING AT TRIAL AND EXCEPTED TO BY THE PARTY MAKING THE APPLICATION, BECAUSE THERE WERE _____ [ERRONEOUS and/or MISLEADING] JURY INSTRUCTIONS GIVEN AT TRIAL THAT MATERIALLY AFFECTED _____ [PLAINTIFF'S or DEFENDANT'S] SUBSTANTIAL RIGHTS.

A. Erroneous or Misleading Jury Instruction Is Error in Law. An erroneous or misleading jury instruction is an error in law for which a new trial may be granted (see Mazzotta v. Los Angeles Ry. Corp. (1944) 25 Cal. 2d 165, 170, 153 P.2d 338 ; Bruck v. Adams (1968) 259 Cal. App. 2d 585, 587, 66 Cal. Rptr. 395).

B. Erroneous Instruction Deemed Excepted To. An erroneous instruction given by the court to the jury is considered excepted to as a matter of law (see Code Civ. Proc. § 647; Stoneburner v. Richfield Oil Co. (1931) 118 Cal. App. 449, 453, 5 P.2d 436).

C. Determination of Error May Require Examination of Evidence. An instruction should not be considered as merely an abstract statement of a principle of law, but must relate to and be measured by the circumstances of the case in which it is given; the question of whether or not there was any error frequently requires an examination of the evidence in the case (Stoneburner v. Richfield Oil Co. (1931) 118 Cal. App. 449, 453, 5 P.2d 436).

D. Order Granting New Trial Affirmed If Challenged Instruction Erroneous in Any Degree. An order granting a new trial for error in instructions will be affirmed if the challenged instruction was erroneous in any degree or even if it is only fairly debatable that the instruction may have been misleading (Shaw v. Pacific Greyhound Lines (1958) 50 Cal. 2d 153, 159, 323 P.2d 391).

[Optional] E. Instructions Overemphasizing One Side of Case. Jury instructions that overly emphasize one side of a case and that result in substantial detriment to a party may be grounds for granting a new trial (Smith v. Shankman (1962) 208 Cal. App. 2d 177, 187, 25 Cal. Rptr. 195).

[Optional] F. Incorrect or Incomplete Statement of Law. A new trial may be granted on the ground of error in law occurring at trial when an instruction has been given that includes an incorrect or incomplete statement of law applicable to a material issue and the error was not cured by the charge as a whole or otherwise rendered harmless (Brignoli v. Seaboard Transportation Co. (1947) 29 Cal. 2d 782, 790, 178 P.2d 445).

[Optional] G. Instruction on Inapplicable Doctrine. A new trial may be granted on the ground of error in law if the court instructs the jury on a doctrine of law that is inapplicable to the evidence presented in the case (see Herman v. Shandor (1970) 8 Cal. App. 3d 476, 483, 87 Cal. Rptr. 443).

[Optional] H. Failure to Give Certain Instructions. Each party is entitled to have his or her theory of the case submitted to the jury in accordance with the pleadings and proof, and it is incumbent on the trial court to instruct on all vital issues involved; the failure of the court to instruct on a vital issue may be grounds for the granting of a motion for new trial (Christian v. Bolls (1970) 7 Cal. App. 3d 408, 415-416, 86 Cal. Rptr. 545).

[Optional] I. Correct but Misleading Instructions. The test of error in giving a correct instruction of law is whether or not it is misleading; if the instruction, correct as an abstract proposition, may have misled the jury, a new trial may be granted (Strandt v. Cannon (1938) 29 Cal. App. 2d 509, 513, 85 P.2d 160).

[Optional] J. Conflicting and Misleading Instructions. If the court gives conflicting instructions that contain inconsistent ideas that may have confused the jury, a new trial may be granted on the ground of errors in law occurring at trial (Brown v. George Pepperdine Foundation (1943) 23 Cal. 2d 256, 262, 143 P.2d 929).

[Add further points and authorities, if appropriate, discussing the substantive law pertaining to the particular cause of action or defense in order to show that the jury instruction was erroneous.]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion for new trial on the ground of error in law occurring at trial and excepted to by the party making the application [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(7)] when the court has given erroneous jury instructions. It does not provide a complete form, but is designed to be combined with a general form of points and authorities in support of the motion for new trial on the ground of error in law [see § 155.250].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case Thus, counsel should discuss how the court's instructions were erroneous or misleading and how these instructions prevented the moving party from having a fair trial and materially affected the moving party's substantial rights. Counsel should also add further points and authorities discussing the substantive law pertaining to the particular cause of action or defense in order to show that the jury instruction was erroneous or misleading. For example, in a medical malpractice action in which plaintiff moves for a new trial on the ground that the court's jury instruction on plaintiff's burden of proof constituted an error in law, plaintiff should discuss the substantive law regarding the standard of proof in civil cases in order to show that the instruction was erroneous and misleading [see Bruck v. Adams (1968) 259 Cal. App. 2d 585, 587-588, 66 Cal. Rptr. 395] .

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of notice of intention to move for a new trial on the ground of error in law [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(7)] and other related forms, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 371, Motions After Trial (Matthew Bender).

[d] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities set out in § 155.270 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose a motion for a new trial supported by this memorandum.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Erroneous or Misleading Jury Instruction Is Error in Law

In Mazzotta v. Los Angeles Ry. Corp. (1944) 25 Cal. 2d 165, 153 P.2d 338 , plaintiff bus passenger brought an action for personal injuries suffered as a result of a collision between an automobile driven by one defendant and a bus operated by a transit corporation, another defendant. After the jury returned a verdict for plaintiff, defendants moved for a new trial. Both motions were granted. The ruling in favor of defendant car driver was based on certain jury instructions that the court found to be erroneous. Plaintiff appealed the order granting a new trial to the automobile driver.

The Supreme Court affirmed the order, noting that the lower court's instruction included a formula and failed to contain all the elements essential to the cause of action. The Court stated that it has been held that such an instruction does not constitute prejudicial error when, considered in its entirety, it fully and fairly charges the jury with the law applicable to the case (25 Cal. 2d 165, 170) . However, the Court concluded that the trial judge was in a position to determine far more accurately the effect of the particular instruction on the jury (25 Cal. 2d 165, 170-171) . In view of the conflicting testimony concerning the accident, the Court stated that its conclusion that the defendant had been prejudiced by the instruction rested on sound grounds. Since there was no showing of any abuse of discretion, the Supreme Court affirmed the order (25 Cal. 2d 165, 171) .

In Bruck v. Adams (1968) 259 Cal. App. 2d 585, 66 Cal. Rptr. 395 , plaintiff brought an action for medical malpractice against defendants. At the conclusion of trial, the court told the jury that plaintiff had the burden of proving his case by a preponderance of the evidence. Later, however, the court instructed the jury on the same subject and told it to use a reasonable certainty standard. After the jury returned a verdict in favor of defendants, plaintiff's motion for a new trial was granted. Defendants appealed the order.

The court of appeal affirmed the order, stating that Code Civ. Proc. § 657(7) provides for the granting of a new trial on the ground of error in law occurring at trial. An erroneous or misleading jury instruction is such an error (259 Cal. App. 2d 585, 587) . In this case, the court concluded that the second jury instruction was erroneous as a matter of law. In civil cases, the decision must be made according to a preponderance of evidence. However, the court explained that the burden of proof by "reasonable certainty" suggested a standard between preponderance of the evidence and beyond a reasonable doubt. Here, the effect of the instruction was to impose a standard of proof that plaintiff was not bound to meet (259 Cal. App. 2d 585, 587-588) . Since the court of appeal found no abuse of discretion in the granting of the motion, it affirmed the order granting a new trial (259 Cal. App. 2d 585, 588-589) .

[b] Erroneous Instruction Deemed Excepted To

In Stoneburner v. Richfield Oil Co. (1931) 118 Cal. App. 449, 5 P.2d 436 , plaintiff brought an action for personal injuries suffered in an automobile collision with defendants. At the conclusion of trial, the court instructed the jury on the issue of contributory negligence. However, contributory negligence was neither raised by the pleadings nor presented by the evidence. After the jury returned verdicts in favor of all defendants, plaintiff's motion for a new trial was granted on the basis of erroneous jury instructions. Defendants appealed the order.

The court of appeal affirmed the order, stating that the giving of the instruction concerning contributory negligence was an error in law (118 Cal. App. 449, 456) . The court added that it is a well-settled rule of law in California that an erroneous instruction given by the court to the jury is an error of law that is considered excepted to as a matter of law (118 Cal. App. 449, 453) . In this case, the court noted that contributory negligence is an affirmative defense and should be affirmatively pleaded and proved. However, there was nothing in the record that indicated that contributory negligence was an issue in the case. The court concluded that the trial court did not abuse its discretion in granting plaintiff's motion, and accordingly it affirmed the order (118 Cal. App. 449, 456-457) .

Note that a party may not later object to a jury instruction if he or she has requested that instruction or a similar one [see Davis v. Nelson (1963) 221 Cal. App. 2d 62, 65, 34 Cal. Rptr. 201] .

[c] Determination of Error May Require Examination of Evidence

The factual and procedural background of Stoneburner v. Richfield Oil Co. (1931) 118 Cal. App. 449, 5 P.2d 436 , is discussed in [b], above. In that case, the court noted that while an instruction gives the law of the case to the jury, its applicability, and often its correctness depends on the evidence in the case. An instruction should not be considered as merely an abstract statement of a principle of law; it must relate to and be measured by the circumstances of the case in which it was given. To determine the question of whether there was any error in giving an instruction frequently requires an examination of the evidence in the case (118 Cal. App. 449, 453) .

[d] Order Granting New Trial Affirmed If Challenged Instruction Erroneous in Any Degree

In Shaw v. Pacific Greyhound Lines (1958) 50 Cal. 2d 153, 323 P.2d 391 , plaintiff brought an action for personal injuries allegedly due to the negligence of a bus driver. At the conclusion of trial, the court instructed the jury that the mere happening of an accident does not support an inference of negligence. However, there was evidence in the case that may have warranted the application of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, and thus, the instruction contained an idea that might be understood to be inconsistent with this doctrine. When the jury returned a verdict for defendant, plaintiff's motion for a new trial was granted. Defendant appealed the order.

The Supreme Court affirmed the order, noting that if the challenged instruction was erroneous in any degree, or even if it is only fairly debatable that the instruction may have been misleading, the broad discretion of the trial court may not be disturbed (50 Cal. 2d 153, 159) . The Court found that the lower court did not abuse its discretion in granting a new trial, even though it would have affirmed the judgment if the lower court had denied the motion (50 Cal. 2d 153, 158-159) . The Court stated that the determination of a motion for a new trial rests so completely within the lower court's discretion that its action will not be disturbed unless a manifest and unmistakable abuse of discretion clearly appears (50 Cal. 2d 153, 159) .

[e] Instructions Overemphasizing One Side of Case

In Smith v. Shankman (1962) 208 Cal. App. 2d 177, 25 Cal. Rptr. 195 , plaintiffs brought an action to recover damages for wrongful death allegedly resulting from defendant's medical malpractice. At the conclusion of trial, the court gave jury instructions that repeatedly emphasized defendant's side of the case. After a verdict was returned for defendant, plaintiffs' motion for a new trial was denied. Plaintiffs appealed the judgment.

The court of appeal reversed the judgment on the basis of the cumulative effect of errors in the case (208 Cal. App. 2d 177, 187) . The court concluded that the instructions overly emphasized the defense side of the case. The court stated that although none of the instructions, standing alone, would appear to be prejudicially erroneous, the overall effect of these instructions tended to clothe the doctor in a cloak of legal immunity in the eyes of the jury. At the very least, the court said, the defense aspects of the case were given undue prominence. This practice is not to be commended and undoubtedly resulted in substantial detriment to plaintiffs. The court concluded that these erroneous jury instructions compounded by other errors in the case, such as the bailiff's misconduct, compelled a reversal (208 Cal. App. 2d 177, 186-187) .

[f] Incorrect or Incomplete Statement of Law

In Brignoli v. Seaboard Transportation Co. (1947) 29 Cal. 2d 782, 178 P.2d 445 , plaintiffs brought an action to recover for trucking services rendered to defendants. Defendants admitted liability of $7,111 but cross complained against plaintiff for the loss of goods entrusted to plaintiffs. In answering the cross complaint, plaintiffs admitted that they had received the goods, but denied that they were acting as a common carrier, claiming that they were acting as private or contract carriers in the transaction. At the conclusion of trial, considerable emphasis was placed by the trial judge on the liability of different types of carriers; however, the judge did not adequately define these carriers. The jury returned a directed verdict in favor of plaintiffs on the complaint, and also found in favor of plaintiffs on the cross complaint. Defendants' motion for a new trial was granted, and plaintiffs appealed the order. Defendants cross appealed the judgment.

The Supreme Court affirmed the order, stating that a new trial may be granted on the ground of error in law occurring at trial when an instruction has been given that includes an incorrect or incomplete statement of the law applicable to a material issue, if the error was not cured by the charge as a whole or otherwise rendered harmless (29 Cal. 2d 782, 790) . The Court added that when it appears that an erroneous instruction confused or misled the jury, a new trial is justified. In this case, the characteristics of the relationship of a common carrier and that of a contract or private carrier were of vital importance. The Court felt that the instruction concerning a contract carrier was incomplete and therefore erroneous (29 Cal. 2d 782, 791) . Since the Court found no abuse of discretion in the trial court's granting of the motion, it affirmed the order (29 Cal. 2d 782, 792) .

[g] Instruction on Inapplicable Doctrine

In Herman v. Shandor (1970) 8 Cal. App. 3d 476, 87 Cal. Rptr. 443 , plaintiff brought an action for personal injuries against defendant. After the jury returned a verdict for plaintiff, defendant moved for a new trial and for judgment notwithstanding the verdict. The court granted both motions, stating that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence, and that error in law was committed by the court in instructing the jury on the doctrine of last clear chance. Plaintiff appealed the orders.

The court of appeal affirmed the order granting a new trial and dismissed the appeal from the order granting judgment notwithstanding the verdict. After examining the facts of the case, the court concluded that the requirements of the last clear chance doctrine were not present in the case (8 Cal. App. 3d 476, 484-485) . It stated that the instruction concerning last clear chance should not have been given (8 Cal. App. 3d 476, 486) . Therefore, the court found that the lower court did not abuse its discretion in granting a new trial on that issue, and accordingly it affirmed the order (8 Cal. App. 3d 476, 486) .

[h] Failure to Give Certain Instructions

In Christian v. Bolls (1970) 7 Cal. App. 3d 408, 86 Cal. Rptr. 545 , plaintiff brought an action for personal injuries suffered in an automobile collision with defendant. During trial, plaintiff requested an instruction on the doctrine of last clear chance. The court refused to give an instruction of this doctrine, and also refused to give an instruction on joint or common venture. The jury returned a verdict in favor of defendant. Plaintiff moved for a new trial, which was granted. Defendant appealed from the order granting a new trial.

The court of appeal affirmed the order, stating that each party is entitled to have his or her theory of the case submitted to the jury in accordance with the pleadings and proof, and it is incumbent on the trial court to instruct on all vital issues (7 Cal. App. 3d 408, 415) . It added that a reviewing court must review the evidence most favorable to the contention that the requested instruction is applicable since the parties are entitled to an instruction thereon if the evidence so viewed could establish the elements of the theory presented (7 Cal. App. 3d 408, 415-416) . In this case, the court concluded that the elements of the doctrine of last clear chance were applicable and that the trial court should have instructed on this doctrine (7 Cal. App. 3d 408, 416) . With regard to the other instructions, the court of appeal stated that it was well within the sound discretion of the lower court to determine whether or not these other instructions were necessary for the jury's complete understanding of the legal principles involved. However, the court could find no abuse of discretion on the part of the lower court in granting a motion for a new trial based on its own failure to give these additional refinements or explanatory instructions (7 Cal. App. 3d 408, 417-418) . The court of appeal concluded that the ruling of the trial court with regard to the instructions on last clear chance and joint venture were sufficient grounds for the granting of the motion. Therefore, it affirmed the order granting a new trial (7 Cal. App. 3d 408, 418) .

[i] Correct but Misleading Instructions

In Strandt v. Cannon (1938) 29 Cal. App. 2d 509, 85 P.2d 160 , plaintiff passenger of a car with an unlicensed driver brought an action for personal injuries against defendant, the driver of the other car. At the conclusion of the trial, the court instructed the jury that the lack of a driver's license was prima facie evidence of a driver's incompetence and also instructed the jury on contributory negligence. When the jury returned a verdict in favor of defendant, plaintiff moved for a new trial. The court granted the motion since it felt that the two instructions, when given together to the jury, may have misled it into inferring that there was evidence of contributory negligence on the part of plaintiff. Defendant appealed the order.

The court of appeal affirmed the order, stating that the test of error in giving a correct instruction of law is whether or not it is misleading. If instructions, correct as abstract propositions, may have misled the jury, a new trial may be granted (29 Cal. App. 2d 509, 513) . In this case, the court noted that there was no evidence of contributory negligence on the part of plaintiff passenger. The negligence of the driver of the car cannot be imputed to the guest without evidence that showed that the guest exercised some control over the driver or possessed the power to supervise the manner in which the automobile should be operated (29 Cal. App. 2d 509, 513-514) . The court concluded that even though the instruction may have been correct as an abstract statement of law, it was inapplicable to the case (29 Cal. App. 2d 509, 514) . Furthermore, the court disagreed that the lack of a driver's license was prima facie evidence of incompetence (29 Cal. App. 2d 509, 514-518) . Since the court felt that one instruction was clearly erroneous and the other instruction was not applicable, it affirmed the lower court's granting of plaintiff's motion for a new trial (29 Cal. App. 2d 509, 518) .

[j] Conflicting and Misleading Instructions

In Brown v. George Pepperdine Foundation (1943) 23 Cal. 2d 256, 143 P.2d 929 , plaintiffs brought an action for personal injuries suffered from a fall down an elevator shaft. At the conclusion of trial, the court gave several instructions that erroneously stated the law as well as two instructions that contained inconsistent ideas. When the jury rendered a verdict for defendants, plaintiffs moved for a new trial. The court granted the motion on the basis of errors in law occurring in the instructions. Defendants appealed the order.

The Supreme Court affirmed the order, stating that the two instructions given to the jury contained inconsistent ideas and that the jury may have been confused by them (23 Cal. 2d 256, 261-262) . Furthermore, the court, in attempting to correct its mistakes, told the jury to disregard certain instructions, then told the jury not to disregard a certain instruction that was then reread. The Court felt that the lower court's determination that its actions confused and misled the jury was not an abuse of discretion, and accordingly the Court affirmed the order (23 Cal. 2d 256, 262) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Order Granting New Trial Affirmed If Challenged Instruction Erroneous in Any Degree

The factual and procedural background of Christian v. Bolls (1970) 7 Cal. App. 3d 408, 86 Cal. Rptr. 545 , is discussed in [3][h], above. In affirming plaintiff's motion for a new trial on the basis of the trial court's error in failing to give certain jury instructions, the court of appeal stated that if the challenged instruction was erroneous in any degree or even if it is only fairly debatable that such an instruction may have been misleading, the broad discretion of the trial court may not be disturbed (7 Cal. App. 3d 408, 415) .

[b] Incorrect or Incomplete Statement of Law

Pease v. Beech Aircraft Corp. (1974) 38 Cal. App. 3d 450, 113 Cal. Rptr. 416 , was an action arising out of an airplane crash in which the court of appeal affirmed an order granting a new trial on the issue of punitive damages on the ground that there had been an error in instructing the jury. The lower court, when instructing the jury on fraud, omitted the element of actual and justifiable reliance. The court of appeal stated that the lower court decided correctly that the omission made it necessary to grant a new trial as to punitive damages, and accordingly it affirmed the order (38 Cal. App. 3d 450, 465, 474) .

Scott v. Renz (1945) 67 Cal. App. 2d 428, 154 P.2d 738 , was a wrongful death action in which the court of appeal affirmed an order granting plaintiffs' motion for a new trial on the ground of errors in law occurring at trial. During trial, the court stated an incorrect principle of law when instructing the jury (67 Cal. App. 2d 428, 437) . The court of appeal stated that the lower court was in a better position to determine whether or not the incorrect instruction was prejudicial, and that there appeared to have been no abuse of discretion in granting the order (67 Cal. App. 2d 428, 438) .

[c] Instruction on Inapplicable Doctrine

The factual and procedural background of Stoneburner v. Richfield Oil Co. (1931) 118 Cal. App. 449, 5 P.2d 436 , is discussed in [3][b], above. The court of appeal affirmed an order granting plaintiff's motion for a new trial based on erroneous jury instructions. The trial court had instructed the jury on contributory negligence when there was nothing in the record that indicated that it was an issue in the case. The court of appeal concluded that the instruction was sufficiently prejudicial and constituted an error in law (118 Cal. App. 449, 456) .

[d] Failure to Give Certain Instructions

Kimball v. Whetzel (1970) 10 Cal. App. 3d 836, 89 Cal. Rptr. 373 , was an action for personal injuries in which the court of appeal affirmed an order granting plaintiff's motion for a new trial on the ground of error in law. The trial court based its order on its failure to give an instruction indicating that a driver could give a signal either by hand or by use of a signal lamp or mechanical device. The jury was, in effect, instructed that plaintiff's failure to give a hand signal was negligence (10 Cal. App. 3d 836, 841) . The court of appeal found that the instruction was sufficiently misleading so that the trial court could have found that the instruction was improper, and it therefore affirmed the order (10 Cal. App. 3d 836, 842) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 155 MOTIONS AFTER TRIAL
PART II. FORMS
B. Motions for New Trial
8. Error of Law

15-155 California Points & Authorities § 155.253

§ 155.253 Supporting Motion for New Trial [Code Civ. Proc. § 659]--Error of Law [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(7)]--Erroneous Denial of Jury Trial

[1] FORM

[The following should be combined with a general form of memorandum of points and authorities supporting a motion for new trial on the ground of error in law (see § 155.250).]

A NEW TRIAL SHOULD BE GRANTED ON THE GROUND OF ERROR IN LAW, OCCURRING AT TRIAL AND EXCEPTED TO BY THE PARTY MAKING THE APPLICATION, BECAUSE THE COURT ERRONEOUSLY DENIED _____ [PLAINTIFF or DEFENDANT] A JURY TRIAL, THUS MATERIALLY AFFECTING HIS/HER/ITS SUBSTANTIAL RIGHTS.

A. Erroneous Denial of Jury Trial Is Error in Law. The court's erroneous denial of a jury trial to a party in an action triable by jury is an error in law for which a new trial may be granted (see Hernandez v. Wilson (1961) 193 Cal. App. 2d 615, 619, 14 Cal. Rptr. 585 ; see also Johnson v. Superior Court (1932) 121 Cal. App. 288, 292, 8 P.2d 1047).

B. Denial of Jury Trial as Miscarriage of Justice. The court's denial of the right to a jury trial is a miscarriage of justice within the provisions of Article VI, Section 13, of the California Constitution, and a new trial may be granted thereon (Hernandez v. Wilson (1961) 193 Cal. App. 2d 615, 619, 14 Cal. Rptr. 585).

[Optional] C. Denial of Jury Trial Deemed Objected To. If the moving party has taken actions at trial that make his or her position known on the issue of the denial of the right to a jury, that party will have been deemed to have objected to the court's order denying a jury, and a new trial may be granted on the ground of error in law (see Code Civ. Proc. § 647; Medeiros v. Medeiros (1960) 177 Cal. App. 2d 69, 73, 1 Cal. Rptr. 696).

[Add further points and authorities supporting the contention that the denial of a jury trial was erroneous.]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion for new trial on the ground of error in law occurring at trial and excepted to by the party making the application [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(7)] when the court erroneously denied a jury trial to the aggrieved party. It does not provide a complete form, but is designed to be combined with a general form of points and authorities in support of a motion for new trial on the ground of error in law [see § 155.250].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. Thus, counsel should discuss why the court's denial of a jury trial was erroneous, showing how it deprived the moving party of a fair trial and materially affected the moving party's substantial rights. Counsel should also add further points and authorities supporting the contention that the denial of a jury trial was erroneous.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of notice of intention to move for a new trial on the ground of error in law [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(7)] and other related forms, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 371, Motions After Trial (Matthew Bender). For a discussion of when a jury trial is required, see Ch. 326A, Jury Verdicts in that publication.

[d] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities set out in § 155.270 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose a motion for a new trial supported by this memorandum.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Erroneous Denial of Jury Trial Is Error in Law

In Hernandez v. Wilson (1961) 193 Cal. App. 2d 615, 14 Cal. Rptr. 585 , plaintiff waived the right to a jury trial in open court on the first day of trial. However, defendant desired a jury and the case proceeded to trial with a jury for three days. On the morning of the fourth day of trial, defendant's attorney stated that he was then waiving further trial by jury, but then plaintiff withdrew her previous waiver and demanded that the trial proceed and conclude as a jury trial. The court concluded that plaintiff had already waived her right to a jury, refused to permit further trial by jury, heard the conclusion of the case, and ordered judgment for defendant. Plaintiff moved for a new trial, and the court granted the motion on the ground that there was an error in law. Defendant appealed the order granting a new trial; plaintiff cross appealed from the judgment.

The court of appeal affirmed the order, stating that the judge's comments made at the granting of the motion indicated that he misapprehended his duty and power at the time the jury was dismissed. These remarks affirmatively showed that he did not deem a motion to be relieved of a waiver to be one requiring the exercise of discretion. With commendable frankness, he took proper action by granting the motion for new trial. Furthermore, the court noted that any doubt concerning the waiver of a jury trial should be resolved in favor of granting one. Accordingly, the court affirmed the order (193 Cal. App. 2d 615, 619) .

In Johnson v. Superior Court (1932) 121 Cal. App. 288, 8 P.2d 1047 , the case came to trial with a jury present; however, defendant objected to a trial by jury, claiming that it had been waived by plaintiffs when they failed to request one at the time the action was first set for trial several months earlier. After argument, the court in effect sustained this objection and held that a jury trial had been waived. The trial proceeded before the court and without a jury. When judgment for defendant was ordered, plaintiffs moved for a new trial on several grounds including error in law. The trial court granted the motion, stating that the plaintiffs had not waived a jury trial and that the court committed error in denying plaintiffs a trial by jury.

The court of appeal affirmed the order even though the court failed to specify the statutory ground on which the order was based. The court stated that the order was based on the ground that the previous action of the court in denying a jury trial was erroneous as a matter of law. After argument, the lower court in effect sustained defendant's objection and held that a jury trial had been waived. This ruling, the court explained, was one made during trial and, if erroneous, was an error of law occurring at trial. Since the lower court concluded that its action was an error in law, and the order did not appear to have been in excess of its jurisdiction, the court of appeal affirmed the order granting plaintiffs a new trial (121 Cal. App. 288, 292-293) .

[b] Denial of Jury Trial as Miscarriage of Justice

The factual and procedural background of Hernandez v. Wilson (1961) 193 Cal. App. 2d 615, 14 Cal. Rptr. 585 , is discussed in [a], above. The court of appeal affirmed an order granting plaintiff a new trial on the ground that there had been an error in law when the court denied plaintiff a jury trial. The court stated that any doubt concerning the waiver of a jury trial should be resolved in favor of granting one. This is because the denial of the right to a trial by jury is a miscarriage of justice within the provisions of former Cal. Const, art VI, § 41/2 [now see Cal. Const., art. VI, § 13]. In this case, the court of appeal stated that the lower court took proper action in granting plaintiff's motion for a new trial because an error of law was involved. Accordingly, the court affirmed the order (193 Cal. App. 2d 615, 618-619) .

[c] Denial of Jury Trial Deemed Objected To

In Medeiros v. Medeiros (1960) 177 Cal. App. 2d 69, 1 Cal. Rptr. 696 , plaintiff brought an action to quiet title to certain real and personal property. Prior to trial, plaintiff amended her complaint to allege that defendants were in possession of the property and were wrongfully withholding it. Thereafter, a memorandum to set the cause for trial was filed. Plaintiff requested a jury trial and filed a motion asking the court to determine and set forth the equitable and legal issues raised by the pleadings, so that she could know which issues were to be tried by the court and which by the jury. The court denied the demand for a jury trial and also denied the motion to determine the legal and equitable issues. The cause proceeded to trial without a jury and the court decided that plaintiff was to be denied relief. Plaintiff moved for a new trial, contending that the court erred in denying her a jury trial. The trial court granted the motion, and defendants appealed the order. Plaintiff cross appealed from the judgment.

The court of appeal affirmed the order, stating that plaintiff was entitled to a jury trial in this case because her action to quiet title was legal and not equitable. In this case, defendants contended that plaintiff failed to object or except to the order denying a jury trial and therefore the error could not constitute a ground for an order granting a new trial. However, the court of appeal stated that the argument was without merit. By the proceedings that plaintiff took, including timely demand, deposit of jury fees, and a motion for determination of the issue of her rights, she made fully known to the court her position on the issue of her right to a jury trial. Therefore, the order of denial is deemed to have been excepted to [see Code Civ. Proc. § 647]. The court thus concluded that the order granting plaintiff a new trial was proper (177 Cal. App. 2d 69, 73-74) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Erroneous Denial of Jury Trial Is Error in Law

City of Redondo Beach v. Kumnick (1963) 216 Cal. App. 2d 830, 31 Cal. Rptr. 367 , was an eminent domain action in which the court of appeal reversed an interlocutory judgment of condemnation and concluded that the lower court erred in denying defendant's motion for a new trial based on the court's denial of a jury trial to plaintiff. The court stated that plaintiff's failure to post jury fees could not constitute a waiver and that the trial court erred in proceeding to trial without a jury (216 Cal. App. 2d 830, 834) . The court also noted that plaintiff's subsequent participation in the trial did not constitute a waiver or estop him from asserting his right on appeal (216 Cal. App. 2d 830, 835, 837) .

The factual and procedural background of Medeiros v. Medeiros (1960) 177 Cal. App. 2d 69, 1 Cal. Rptr. 696 , is discussed in [3][c], above. The court affirmed an order granting plaintiff a new trial on the basis of the lower court's erroneous denial of a jury trial. The court concluded that plaintiff was entitled to a trial by jury and that the trial court did not err in granting plaintiff's motion for a new trial (177 Cal. App. 2d 69, 73) .

Cowlin v. Pringle (1941) 46 Cal. App. 2d 472, 116 P.2d 109 , was a personal injury action in which the court of appeal reversed judgment for defendants and remanded the case for a new trial on the basis of the trial court's erroneous denial of a jury trial to plaintiff. The court found that plaintiff did not waive her right to a jury trial when she failed to deposit jury fees for the first day of trial since one defendant had already prepaid the fees and there was no reason why plaintiff should tender another fee for the same day of trial (46 Cal. App. 2d 472, 475) . The court concluded that the denial of a jury trial resulted in a miscarriage of justice and that a reversal of the judgment was required (46 Cal. App. 2d 472, 476-477) .

[b] Denial of Jury Trial as Miscarriage of Justice

City of Redondo Beach v. Kumnick (1963) 216 Cal. App. 2d 830, 31 Cal. Rptr. 367 , is discussed in [a], above. The court of appeal stated that the denial of the right to trial by jury to one justly entitled thereto amounts to a miscarriage of justice and that a reversal of the judgment is required (216 Cal. App. 2d 830, 839) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 155 MOTIONS AFTER TRIAL
PART II. FORMS
B. Motions for New Trial
8. Error of Law

15-155 California Points & Authorities § 155.254

§ 155.254 Supporting Motion for New Trial [Code Civ. Proc. § 659]--Error of Law [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(7)]--Improper Granting of Nonsuit

[1] FORM

[The following should be combined with a general form of memorandum of points and authorities supporting a motion for new trial on the ground of error in law (see § 155.250).]

A NEW TRIAL SHOULD BE GRANTED ON THE GROUND OF ERROR IN LAW, OCCURRING AT TRIAL AND EXCEPTED TO BY THE PARTY MAKING THE APPLICATION, BECAUSE THE COURT IMPROPERLY GRANTED _____ [PLAINTIFF'S or DEFENDANT'S] MOTION FOR A NONSUIT, THUS MATERIALLY AFFECTING HIS/HER/ITS SUBSTANTIAL RIGHTS.

A. Order Granting Nonsuit Deemed Excepted To. An order granting or denying a nonsuit is deemed excepted to without formal objection (Code Civ. Proc. § 647).

B. Improper Granting of Nonsuit Is Error in Law. The improper granting of a nonsuit is an error in law for which a new trial may be granted (Castillo v. Warren (1941) 44 Cal. App. 2d 903, 907, 113 P.2d 232).

[Optional] C. Court's Dismissal of Action After Erroneously Compelling Election. The action of a trial court in dismissing a cause of action after erroneously compelling a party to elect between two causes of action is, in effect, the improper granting of a nonsuit for which a new trial may be granted on the ground of error in law (Horstman v. Krumgold (1942) 55 Cal. App. 2d 296, 298-299, 130 P.2d 721).

[Add further points and authorities discussing substantive merits of case to show reasons why granting of nonsuit was improper.]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion for new trial on the ground of error in law occurring at trial and excepted to by the party making the application [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(7)] when the court has erroneously granted a nonsuit. It does not provide a complete form, but is designed to be combined with a general form of points and authorities in support of a motion for new trial on the ground of error in law [see § 155.250].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. Thus, counsel should discuss the reasons why the court's granting of a nonsuit was erroneous, showing how it deprived the moving party of a fair trial and materially affected the moving party's substantial rights. Counsel should also add further points and authorities pertaining to the substantive merits of the case in order to show that the nonsuit was erroneously granted. For example, in a wrongful death action in which plaintiff moves for a new trial after the court has granted defendant's motion for a nonsuit based on plaintiff's failure to show his or her capacity to sue, plaintiff's counsel should discuss the substantive merits of the case in order to show that the nonsuit was erroneously granted [see Castillo v. Warren (1941) 44 Cal. App. 2d 903, 909, 113 P.2d 232] .

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of notice of intention to move for a new trial on the ground of error in law [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(7)] and other related forms, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 371, Motions After Trial (Matthew Bender).

[d] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities set out in § 155.270 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose a motion for a new trial supported by this memorandum.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Improper Granting of Nonsuit Is Error in Law

In Castillo v. Warren (1941) 44 Cal. App. 2d 903, 113 P.2d 232 , plaintiff administrator brought an action for wrongful death against a hospital and a doctor. After the close of plaintiff's case, the trial court granted defendants' motion for a nonsuit, and judgment was entered for defendants. Subsequently, the trial court granted plaintiff's motion for a new trial and defendants appealed the order.

The court of appeal affirmed the order, stating that the improper granting of a nonsuit is an error in law for which a new trial may be granted (44 Cal. App. 2d 903, 907) . The court noted that it was apparent from the record that the trial court granted the nonsuit on the sole ground that plaintiff had not shown a legal capacity to sue, and that on motion for new trial, the lower court believed that it had erroneously determined that question, as a matter of law (44 Cal. App. 2d 903, 906) . The court of appeal concluded that a defect in plaintiff's petition for letters of administration did not deprive him of the capacity to bring a suit on behalf of the estate that the represented (44 Cal. App. 2d 903, 908-909) . Hence, the lower court's conclusion that it had improperly granted a nonsuit was proper. Accordingly, the court affirmed the order granting a new trial (44 Cal. App. 2d 903, 909) .

[b] Court's Dismissal of Action After Erroneously Compelling Election

In Horstman v. Krumgold (1942) 55 Cal. App. 2d 296, 130 P.2d 721 , plaintiff passenger brought an action against defendant driver in which the first cause of action was based on the theory that plaintiff was a passenger for compensation and the second cause of action was based on the theory that she was a guest. Defendant presented a motion to the court to compel plaintiff to make an election between the first and second causes of action. The motion was granted, and plaintiff decided to proceed under the first cause of action. The court then granted defendant's motion to dismiss the second cause of action. When all the evidence had been presented, the court, on defendant's motion, directed the jury to return a verdict for defendant. Thereafter, the court granted plaintiff's motion for a new trial as to the second cause of action.

The court of appeal affirmed the order, stating that the trial court committed errors in law when it compelled plaintiff to elect between two causes of action and when it dismissed the second cause of action (55 Cal. App. 2d 296, 298) . A litigant who has stated the facts in different counts so as to meet any possible developments in the evidence may not be required to elect between the various causes of action presented either before the trial or at the close of the case (55 Cal. App. 2d 296, 297) . The court noted that an action of a court in improperly granting or refusing a nonsuit is also an error in law, whether made on the opening statement of counsel or after the close of the evidence (55 Cal. App. 2d 296, 298-299) . In this case, the court concluded that the lower court's action in dismissing the second cause was, in effect, the granting of a nonsuit, and was reviewable on a motion for a new trial (55 Cal. App. 2d 296, 299) . Since the court felt that the lower court did not abuse its discretion in granting a new trial, it affirmed the order (55 Cal. App. 2d 296, 300) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Improper Granting of Nonsuit Is Error in Law

Carton Corporation v. Superior Court (1926) 76 Cal. App. 434, 244 P. 932 , was an action involving a petition for a writ of mandate directing the court to hear and determine a motion for new trial. At the conclusion of plaintiff's case, defendant's motion for a nonsuit was granted. Plaintiff served and filed a notice of intention to move for a new trial, but it was stricken from the files on defendant's motion. Even though the court of appeal denied the writ, it stated that a motion for new trial could properly be entertained in this case (76 Cal. App. 434, 437) . It added that the action of the court in improperly granting or denying a motion for nonsuit, whether made on the opening statement or after the close of evidence, is an error of law occurring at trial for which a new trial may be granted (76 Cal. App. 434, 436) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 155 MOTIONS AFTER TRIAL
PART II. FORMS
B. Motions for New Trial
8. Error of Law

15-155 California Points & Authorities § 155.255

§ 155.255 Supporting Motion for New Trial [Code Civ. Proc. § 659]--Error of Law [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(7)]--Improper Denial of Motion for Directed Verdict

[1] FORM

[The following should be combined with a general form of memorandum of points and authorities supporting a motion for new trial on the ground of error in law (see § 155.250).]

A NEW TRIAL SHOULD BE GRANTED ON THE GROUND OF ERROR IN LAW, OCCURRING AT TRIAL AND EXCEPTED TO BY THE PARTY MAKING THE APPLICATION, BECAUSE THE COURT IMPROPERLY DENIED _____ [PLAINTIFF'S or DEFENDANT'S] MOTION FOR A DIRECTED VERDICT, THUS MATERIALLY AFFECTING HIS/HER/ITS SUBSTANTIAL RIGHTS.

Improper Denial of Motion for Directed Verdict Is Error in Law. The improper denial of a motion for a directed verdict constitutes an error in law occurring at trial that justifies the granting of a new trial by the trial court (Steele v. Werner (1938) 28 Cal. App. 2d 554, 556, 83 P.2d 56).

[Add further points and authorities discussing substantive law pertaining to particular cause of action or defense in order to show why directed verdict should have been granted.]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion for new trial on the ground of error in law occurring at trial and excepted to by the party making the application [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(7)] when the court has improperly denied a motion for a directed verdict. It does not provide a complete form, but is designed to be combined with a general form of points and authorities in support of a motion for new trial on the ground of error in law [see § 155.250].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. Thus, counsel should discuss the standards for granting a motion for a directed verdict and show that the motion was improperly denied, thus depriving the moving party of a fair trial and materially affecting the moving party's substantial rights. Counsel should also add further points and authorities discussing the substantive law pertaining to the particular cause of action or defense in order to show that the motion for a directed verdict should have been granted.

Note that a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict may also be appropriate in this case, and counsel may desire to make a combined motion for new trial and for judgment notwithstanding the verdict. For a memorandum in support of a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, see § 155.10 et seq.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of notice of intention to move for a new trial on the ground of error in law [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(7)] and other related forms, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 371, Motions After Trial (Matthew Bender). For a discussion of motions for directed verdict, see Ch. 326A, Jury Verdicts in that publication.

[d] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities set out in § 155.270 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose a motion for a new trial supported by this memorandum.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Improper Denial of Motion for Directed Verdict Is Error in Law

In Steele v. Werner (1938) 28 Cal. App. 2d 554, 83 P.2d 56 , plaintiff brought an action to recover damages for the alleged alienation of affection of her husband. During trial, defendant moved for a directed verdict when plaintiff rested her case and again when all the evidence, including defendant's, had been received. Both motions were denied. Defendant moved for a new trial on several grounds, including errors in law occurring at trial. The motion was granted, and plaintiff appealed the order.

The court of appeal affirmed the order, stating that it is well settled that the improper denial of a motion for a directed verdict constitutes an error in law occurring at trial that justifies the trial court in granting a new trial. The motion for a directed verdict may be granted when, disregarding conflicting evidence and giving to the evidence adduced on behalf of the plaintiff all of the value to which it is legally entitled, and indulging in every legitimate inference that may be drawn from that evidence, the result is a determination that there is no evidence of sufficient substantiality to support a verdict in favor of plaintiff if such a verdict were received (28 Cal. App. 2d 554, 556) . In this case, the court concluded that the record clearly demonstrated that plaintiff's husband's affections were never alienated to the extent of giving rise to an action for damages. The court felt that the motions for a directed verdict were improperly denied, and that the trial court was therefore justified in granting a new trial (28 Cal. App. 2d 554, 560-561) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 155 MOTIONS AFTER TRIAL
PART II. FORMS
B. Motions for New Trial
8. Error of Law

15-155 California Points & Authorities §§ 155.256-155.269

[Reserved]

§§ 155.256[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 155 MOTIONS AFTER TRIAL
PART II. FORMS
B. Motions for New Trial
8. Error of Law

15-155 California Points & Authorities § 155.270

§ 155.270 Opposing Motion for New Trial [Code Civ. Proc. § 659]--Error of Law [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(7)]

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 155.60[1].]

A NEW TRIAL SHOULD NOT BE GRANTED, BECAUSE THERE WAS NO ERROR IN LAW OCCURRING AT TRIAL THAT MATERIALLY AFFECTED _____ [PLAINTIFF'S or DEFENDANT'S] SUBSTANTIAL RIGHTS.

[EITHER]

A. No Error in Law Occurring at Trial. When no error in law has been committed, there is no basis for the court's exercise of discretion, and a new trial is properly denied (Stoddard v. Rheem (1961) 192 Cal. App. 2d 49, 53, 13 Cal. Rptr. 496).

[AND/OR]

B. Error Must Be Prejudicial. The trial court is expressly enjoined by Article VI, Section 13, of the California Constitution from granting a new trial for error in law unless such error is prejudicial; if it clearly appears that the error could not have affected the result of the trial, the court is bound to deny the motion (Sparks v. Redinger (1955) 44 Cal. 2d 121, 125, 279 P.2d 971 ; Bristow v. Ferguson (1981) 121 Cal. App. 3d 823, 826, 175 Cal. Rptr. 571).

[Optional] C. Admission of Irrelevant Evidence. Admission of irrelevant evidence is not a ground for granting a new trial in the absence of a showing that the movant for a new trial was prejudiced by the evidence (Townsend v. Gonzalez (1957) 150 Cal. App. 2d 241, 249-250, 309 P.2d 878).

[Optional] D. Exclusion of Evidence. The court is not required to grant a new trial for alleged error in excluding certain evidence when it is extremely unlikely that a different result would have accrued from the admission of the evidence (Dankert v. Lamb Finance Co. (1956) 146 Cal. App. 2d 499, 503, 304 P.2d 199).

[Optional] E. Erroneous or Misleading Jury Instructions. A new trial will not be granted on the basis of erroneous or misleading jury instructions if the errors were not prejudicial and could not have affected the result of the trial (Sparks v. Redinger (1955) 44 Cal. 2d 121, 123, 279 P.2d 971 ; Bristow v. Ferguson (1981) 121 Cal. App. 3d 823, 829, 175 Cal. Rptr. 571).

[Optional] F. Failure to Object to Erroneous Admission of Evidence. Failure to make a timely objection or motion to strike inadmissible evidence constitutes a waiver of the right to later complain of its erroneous admission into evidence (Mosesian v. Pennwalt Corp. (1987) 191 Cal. App. 3d 851, 865, 236 Cal. Rptr. 778).

[Optional] G. Denial of Jury Trial After Waiver. After a party has waived the right to a jury trial, the trial court may reject the request for a new jury trial, and may consider such factors as delay in rescheduling the trial for jury, lack of funds, timeliness of the request, prejudice to the litigants, prejudice to the court or its calendar, the reason for the demand, and whether the other parties to the action desire a jury trial (Day v. Rosenthal (1985) 170 Cal. App. 3d 1125, 1176, 217 Cal. Rptr. 89).
Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for _____ [party's status and name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a motion for new trial on the ground of error in law occurring at trial and excepted to by the party making the application [see Code Civ. Proc. § 657(7)]. In an appropriate case, it may be submitted in opposition to a motion for new trial supported by the points and authorities set out in § 155.250 et seq.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should show that there was no error in law occurring at trial or that if error did occur, the error was not prejudicial to the moving party.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a notice of intention to move for a new trial as well as an order denying the motion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 371, Motions After Trial (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Error in Law Occurring at Trial

In Stoddard v. Rheem (1961) 192 Cal. App. 2d 49, 13 Cal. Rptr. 496 , plaintiffs brought an action for wrongful death allegedly caused by the negligence of defendants in the operation of a gas-producing well. At the conclusion of trial, the court gave a certain jury instruction separately after it had given all other instructions. After the jury returned a verdict in favor of plaintiffs, defendants moved for a new trial, claiming that the manner of giving the instruction overly impressed it on the minds of the jury. The court granted the motion on the ground of error in law. Plaintiffs appealed the order; defendants appealed the judgment.

The court of appeal reversed the order, noting that the instruction was correct and proper and should have been given. The court stated that it was concerned with a pure question of law and found that there was no legal error. It added that when no error has been committed, there is no basis for the exercise of discretion. The inquiry as to whether or not instructions are erroneous presents purely a question of law, and if it appears that the trial court granted a new trial based on an erroneous concept of legal principles applicable to the cause, its order will be reversed (192 Cal. App. 2d 49, 53) . Since the court concluded that the instructions did not constitute an error in law, it reversed the order granting a new trial (192 Cal. App. 2d 49, 53-54) .

[b] Error Must Be Prejudicial

In Sparks v. Redinger (1955) 44 Cal. 2d 121, 279 P.2d 971 , plaintiffs brought an action for personal injuries suffered in an automobile-tractor collision with defendants. At the conclusion of trial, the court failed to give a proposed instruction on last clear chance. When the jury returned a verdict for defendants, plaintiffs moved for a new trial. The court granted the motion on the sole ground that it erred in failing to give plaintiffs' proposed instruction. Defendants appealed the order.

The Supreme Court reversed the order, stating that the trial court is expressly enjoined by former Cal. Const, art VI, § 41/2 [now see Cal. Const., art. VI, § 13], from granting a new trial for error of law unless such error is prejudicial. If it clearly appears that the error could not have affected the result of the trial, the court is bound to deny the motion. Here, the Court stated that the record affirmatively showed that the proposed last clear chance instruction did not constitute prejudicial error, and the trial court erred in so holding. Accordingly, the Court held that the order granting plaintiffs a new trial had to be reversed (44 Cal. 2d 121, 123) .

In Bristow v. Ferguson (1981) 121 Cal. App. 3d 823, 175 Cal. Rptr. 571 , plaintiff brought an action for fraud and conspiracy in his removal from a general partnership. At the conclusion of trial, the court instructed the jury on the required elements of conspiracy. After the jury rendered a verdict for defendants, plaintiff's motion for a new trial was granted on the basis of an erroneous or misleading instruction. Defendants appealed the order.

The court of appeal reversed the order, stating that the trial court is expressly enjoined by former Cal. Const, art VI, § 41/2 [now see Cal. Const., art. VI, § 13], from granting a new trial for error in law unless such error is prejudicial. If it clearly appears that the error could not have affected the result of the trial, the court is bound to deny the motion (121 Cal. App. 3d 823, 826) . In this case, the court of appeal concluded that the instruction was misleading and should not have been given; however, the parties potentially prejudiced by the instruction won the case. Since the error could not have affected the result of trial, the court reversed the order granting a new trial and directed the trial court to reinstate the judgment for defendants (121 Cal. App. 3d 823, 829) .

[c] Admission of Irrelevant Evidence

In Townsend v. Gonzalez (1957) 150 Cal. App. 2d 241, 309 P.2d 878 , plaintiff brought an action for the balance due under a contract for the sale of beans. After the jury returned a verdict for plaintiff, defendants moved for a new trial on several grounds including errors in law occurring at trial. Defendants claimed that the court erred in admitting certain irrelevant evidence. The court granted the motion, and plaintiff appealed the order.

The court of appeal reversed the order, stating that the admission of irrelevant evidence is not a ground for a new trial in the absence of a showing that the movant was prejudiced by the evidence (150 Cal. App. 2d 241, 249-250) . In this case, the court examined the facts established by the evidence and the testimony to which objection was made, and it concluded that the proof was clear that defendants received beans for which no payment was made (150 Cal. App. 2d 241, 249-252) . The court felt that it was inconceivable that the exclusion of the testimony would have resulted in a different judgment. Thus, the court reversed the order granting a new trial (150 Cal. App. 2d 241, 252) .

[d] Exclusion of Evidence

In Dankert v. Lamb Finance Co. (1956) 146 Cal. App. 2d 499, 304 P.2d 199 , plaintiff brought an action on a promissory note against a finance company and its vice-president. Defendant vice-president defended on the theory that she signed only as an officer of the corporation and not in her individual capacity as a comaker and that she was therefore not personally liable. However, the court excluded certain evidence that it was the business custom of the finance company to require the signatures of two officers on all company obligations. When the court found in favor of plaintiff, defendants moved for a new trial on the grounds of newly discovered evidence and error in law. The court denied the motion, and defendants appealed the judgment.

The court of appeal affirmed the order, stating that the trial court is vested with considerable discretion in determining the relevancy of evidence and weighing that relevance against undue prolongation of the trial and the consideration of extraneous issues. In this case, admission of the proffered evidence would not have been error; however, the court was at liberty to rule that the inference that it raised was not worth the time expended. The court added that even if error were conceded, it was extremely unlikely that a different result would have accrued from the admission of the evidence. Several persons present at the execution of the note testified that defendant expressly stated her intent to be personally obligated on the instrument. Accordingly, the court concluded that the denial of the motion for new trial was proper, and it affirmed the judgment (146 Cal. App. 2d 499, 503-504) .

[e] Erroneous or Misleading Jury Instructions

The factual and procedural background of Sparks v. Redinger (1955) 44 Cal. 2d 121, 279 P.2d 971 , is discussed in [b], above. The Supreme Court, reversing an order granting plaintiffs' motion for a new trial, stated that the lower court's alleged error in failing to give last clear chance instructions to the jury could not have been prejudicial (44 Cal. 2d 121, 123) . When a jury finds that defendant driver is not guilty of any negligence contributing to the accident, there is no place for the jury's application of last clear chance principles (44 Cal. 2d 121, 124) . Since the failure to give the proposed last clear chance instruction did not constitute prejudicial error, the Court reversed the orders granting plaintiff a new trial (44 Cal. 2d 121, 123, 126) .

The factual and procedural background of Bristow v. Ferguson (1981) 121 Cal. App. 3d 823, 175 Cal. Rptr. 571 , is discussed in [b], above. The court of appeal reversed an order granting plaintiff's motion for a new trial even though it concluded that the instruction was misleading and should not have been given. The court stated that when an instructional error could not have misled the jury because it was inconsistent with the verdict, the trial judge's finding of prejudice cannot stand. Here, the court explained, the parties that were potentially prejudiced by the instruction won the case. Since the error clearly could not have affected the result of trial, the court reversed the order granting a new trial (121 Cal. App. 3d 823, 829) .

[f] Failure to Object to Erroneous Admission of Evidence

In Mosesian v. Pennwalt Corp. (1987) 191 Cal. App. 3d 851, 236 Cal. Rptr. 778 , an action for damages resulting from crop losses allegedly caused by a chemical spray, defendants called an expert witness, who referred to opinions of several other experts with whom he had consulted. Plaintiff objected with regard to one outside expert's opinion on the ground of hearsay, and defendant countered that the evidence was not offered for its truth, but rather to show how the witness arrived at his opinion. Plaintiff conceded that the substance of the conversation was admissible, but objected on the ground that the witness's answer on direct examination was not responsive. The trial court overruled the objection contingent on any future motion to strike. During testimony regarding further outside experts, the trial court admonished the jury to remember that the substance of the conversations were not being offered for their truth. Toward the end of the testimony, plaintiff unsuccessfully moved for a mistrial, asserting that the witness's reliance on numerous other opinions cast doubt on his expertise. Plaintiff successfully objected to the introduction of hearsay opinions, but only with respect to two of six outside experts. After jury verdict for defendants, plaintiff moved for a new trial, which the trial court granted on the ground that it erred in introducing out-of-court expert opinions into evidence. Defendants appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, holding, inter alia, that failure to make a timely objection or motion to strike inadmissible evidence constitutes a waiver of the right subsequently to complain of its erroneous admission. Procedurally, plaintiff should have moved to strike the witness's testimony instead of moving for mistrial. When there is no motion to strike an expert's answers to questions, a reviewing court cannot reach the claim of error. Plaintiff's initial accession to the admissibility of hearsay testimony, and later failure to object on the ground of hearsay until the motion for new trial, constituted a waiver of any objection to the hearsay. Due to plaintiff's waiver, there was no error at all, and absent any error, the motion for new trial could not be granted (191 Cal. App. 3d 851, 865) . However, even assuming that the introduction of hearsay was erroneous, the error was harmless in light of the substantial evidence supporting the judgment, and the admonitions to the jury (191 Cal. App. 3d 851, 867) . Harmless error does not justify the granting of a motion for new trial (191 Cal. App. 3d 851, 866) .

[g] Denial of Jury Trial After Waiver

In Day v. Rosenthal (1985) 170 Cal. App. 3d 1125, 217 Cal. Rptr. 89 , the court of appeal affirmed a judgment for plaintiff for damages for attorney malpractice. Prior to trial, both parties waived their right to a jury trial. Defendant subsequently moved for a jury trial and the trial court rejected the motion. On appeal, the court held that the rejection was within the trial court's discretion and that the court, in determining the motion, could properly consider such factors as delay in rescheduling the trial for jury, lack of funds, timeliness of the request, prejudice to the litigants, prejudice to the court or its calendar, the reason for the demand, and whether the other parties to the action desire a jury trial (170 Cal. App. 3d 1125, 1176) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Error Must Be Prejudicial

Osborne v. Cal-Am Financial Corp. (1978) 80 Cal. App. 3d 259, 145 Cal. Rptr. 584 , was an action for damages for defendant buyer's failure to purchase real property. The court of appeal granted plaintiff's motion for a new trial on several grounds, including errors in law occurring at trial. The court stated that the trial court is bound by the rule of Cal. Const., art. VI, § 13, that prejudicial error is the basis for a new trial, and that there is no discretion to grant a new trial for harmless error (80 Cal. App. 3d 259, 265-266) . Since the court determined that no prejudicial error occurred at trial, it reversed the order (80 Cal. App. 3d 259, 266-268) .

[b] Admission of Irrelevant Evidence

Keller v. Cleaver (1937) 20 Cal. App. 2d 364, 67 P.2d 131 , was an action involving support of a minor in which the court of appeal reversed an order granting plaintiff's motion for a new trial, made on several grounds, including error in law. Plaintiff claimed the court erred in sustaining and overruling objections to questions asked of witnesses and in denying motions to strike out portions of the answers to certain questions. However, the court of appeal concluded that most of the rulings were obviously correct, all related to matters that were largely immaterial, and no possible error could have affected the result under all the evidence shown by the record (20 Cal. App. 2d 364, 371-372) .

[c] Exclusion of Evidence

Bush v. Lane (1956) 139 Cal. App. 2d 376, 293 P.2d 465 , was a conversion action in which the court of appeal affirmed judgment for defendants, finding that an order denying plaintiffs' motion for a new trial based on the lower court's exclusion of certain evidence was proper. The court of appeal stated that the evidence could in no way have affected the final outcome of the trial, and hence the trial court could not have erred in excluding it (139 Cal. App. 2d 376, 378-379) .

[d] Erroneous or Misleading Jury Instructions

In Caldwell v. Paramount Unified Sch. Dist. (1995) 41 Cal. App. 4th 189, 48 Cal. Rptr. 2d 448 , plaintiff sued a school district for race and age discrimination. A jury returned a special verdict in favor of the district, and plaintiff moved for a new trial on the ground that the court had improperly instructed the jury on the plaintiff's burden of proof of age and race discrimination. The trial court granted the motion for new trial, and the court of appeal reversed, holding that the granting of a new trial was an abuse of discretion. The court stated that the instruction, which dealt with shifting burdens of proof, was an accurate statement of the law. More importantly, however, the jury did not address the question with which the challenged instruction dealt. On the special jury form, the jury determined that the defendant did not discriminate against the plaintiff. The form then instructed the jury to skip the question of whether plaintiff had made his prima facie showing, to that the challenged question never came into play in the deliberative process. Since the extraneous instruction could not have misled or confused the jury, the trial court abused its discretion in ordering a new trial (41 Cal. App. 4th 189, 206) . The court thus vacated the order granting a new trial.

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 155 MOTIONS AFTER TRIAL
PART II. FORMS
B. Motions for New Trial
8. Error of Law

15-155 California Points & Authorities §§ 155.271-155.289

[Reserved]

§§ 155.271[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 155 MOTIONS AFTER TRIAL
PART II. FORMS
B. Motions for New Trial
9. Final Judgment on All Causes

15-155 California Points & Authorities § 155.290

§ 155.290 Opposing Motion for New Trial [Code Civ. Proc. § 659]--Action Has Not Reached Final Judgment on All Causes

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 155.60[1].]

A NEW TRIAL SHOULD NOT BE GRANTED AS TO SOME ISSUES BECAUSE, AS YET, THERE IS NO FINAL DETERMINATION OF ALL ISSUES IN THE ACTION.

Order Granting New Trial as to Certain Issues Before Final Determination of All Issues Is Premature and Ineffectual. The grant of a new trial as to certain issues in an action, before there has been a final determination of all the issues in the action, is premature and ineffectual (Cobb v. University of So. California (1996) 45 Cal. App. 4th 1140, 1143-1144, 1146, 53 Cal. Rptr. 2d 71).
Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for _____ [party's status and name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a motion for new trial on the ground that not all the issues in the action have yet come to a final determination, and any order granting a new trial would therefore be ineffectual.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, if the action has two causes of action, and one has been determined by the court but another must still be submitted to a jury for verdict, Counsel should discuss this procedural status, showing clearly that no final determination of all causes has yet been reached. While Code Civ. Proc. § 659 permits a party to file a notice of intention to move for a new trial before the entry of judgment, the statute clearly contemplates that a final determination of all the causes of action has been rendered, and a final judgment may timely be entered [Cobb v. University of So. California (1996) 45 Cal. App. 4th 1140, 1143, 1146, 53 Cal. Rptr. 2d 71] .

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a notice of intention to move for a new trial as well as an order denying the motion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 371, Motions After Trial (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Order Granting New Trial as to Certain Issues Before Final Determination of All Issues Is Premature and Ineffectual

In Cobb v. University of So. California (1996) 45 Cal. App. 4th 1140, 53 Cal. Rptr. 2d 71 , plaintiff filed suit against defendant university alleging two causes of action, one for racial discrimination and one for breach of contract. After trial, the jury deadlocked on the discrimination claim, but reached a verdict for plaintiff on the breach of contract cause of action. The trial court ordered a mistrial on the discrimination claim, and set that matter for retrial. Later, the trial court granted motions by defendant for judgment notwithstanding the verdict and for a new trial on the breach of contract claim. Plaintiff appealed these orders granting these motions.

With regard to the appeal of the order for new trial, the court of appeal concluded that the order granting a new trial was not appealable, and dismissed the appeal (45 Cal. App. 4th 1140, 1143-1145, 1146) . One basis for this decision was that the order granting a new trial was ineffectual in that it was improperly made before a final determination of all the causes in the suit; therefore no appeal would lie from the order (45 Cal. App. 4th 1140, 1146) . The court reasoned that an order granting a new trial is appealable only because it contemplates a final judgment. noted that an order granting a new trial is generally appealable because the order contemplates a final judgment. While Code Civ. Proc. § 659 permits a party to file a notice of intention to move for a new trial before the entry of judgment, the statute clearly contemplates that a final determination of all the causes of action has been rendered, and a final judgment may timely be entered. However, where some issues are to be tried by a jury and others by the court, the trial proceedings are premature when instituted after a verdict has been rendered but before determination of all issues in the case. Similarly, in this situation, due to the hung jury on the discrimination claim, there could be no final determination of plaintiff's action until retrial of that claim (45 Cal. App. 4th 1140, 1143-1144) . Any order purporting to grant a new trial as to certain issues, before there has been a final determination of all the issues in the lawsuit, is improperly premature and ineffectual (45 Cal. App. 4th 1140, 1144, 1146) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 155 MOTIONS AFTER TRIAL
PART II. FORMS
B. Motions for New Trial
9. Final Judgment on All Causes

15-155 California Points & Authorities §§ 155.291-155.299

[Reserved]

§§ 155.291[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 155 MOTIONS AFTER TRIAL
PART II. FORMS
B. Motions for New Trial
10. Appeal From Order Granting New Trial

15-155 California Points & Authorities § 155.300

§ 155.300 Supporting Appeal From Order Granting New Trial [Code Civ. Proc. § 659]--Trial Court Failed to Specify Grounds or Reasons for Order [Code Civ. Proc. § 657]

[1] FORM

[The following may be used in appellate brief supporting relief from order for new trial.]

THE TRIAL COURT'S ORDER GRANTING _____ [identify party, e.g., PLAINTIFF]'S MOTION FOR A NEW TRIAL IS DEFECTIVE BECAUSE _____ [THE ORDER FAILS TO STATE THE GROUNDS FOR THE NEW TRIAL and/or THE ORDER FAILS TO CONTAIN A SPECIFICATION OF REASONS FOR GRANTING THE MOTION AND THE COURT FAILED TO FILE A SPECIFICATION OF REASONS WITHIN 10 DAYS AFTER THE FILING OF THE ORDER].

[EITHER]

A. Specification of Grounds. When a new trial is granted, on all or part of the issues, the court must specify the ground or grounds on which it is granted. Judicial failure to specify grounds renders the order defective (Code Civ. Proc. § 657; Sanchez-Corea v. Bank of America (1985) 38 Cal. 3d 892, 899-900, 215 Cal. Rptr. 679, 701 P.2d 826).

[AND/OR]

B. Specification of Reasons. When a new trial is granted, on all or part of the issues, the court must specify the court's reason or reasons for granting the new trial on each ground stated. If an order granting a motion for a new trial does not contain such specification of reasons, the court must, within 10 days after filing such order, prepare, sign, and file such specification of reasons in writing with the clerk. Any judicial attempt to file a written specification of reasons beyond the 10-day period is an act in excess of jurisdiction and is therefore a nullity (Code Civ. Proc. § 657; La Manna v.

Stewart (1975) 13 Cal. 3d 413, 418, 118 Cal. Rptr. 761, 530 P.2d 1073).

[Optional] C. Oral Pronouncement of Reasons Inadequate. A judge's oral statement of reasons cannot amount to compliance with section 657 of the Code of Civil Procedure, no matter how thoroughly the specification may have been prepared (Code Civ. Proc. § 657; La Manna v. Stewart (1975) 13 Cal. 3d 413, 423, 118 Cal. Rptr. 761, 530 P.2d 1073).

[Optional] D. Reference to Transcription of Oral Statement of Reasons Inadequate. A judge's incorporation by reference, in an order granting a new trial, of a transcript of an oral statement of reasons made by the judge at a earlier time does not amount to compliance with section 657 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Code Civ. Proc. § 657; Steinhart v. South Coast Area Transit (1986) 183 Cal. App. 3d 770, 774, 228 Cal. Rptr. 283).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted as part of an appellant's opening brief, in support of an appeal from a trial court's order granting a motion for a new trial on the ground that the trial court failed to provide a statement of grounds or reasons [Code Civ. Proc. § 657].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should show that the trial judge failed to include a statement of grounds in the order granting the motion for a new trial, or that the trial judge failed to file a statement of reasons within 10 days of such order.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion and forms relating generally to motion proceedings for new trial, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 371, Motions After Trial (Matthew Bender). For discussion and forms relating to appeals, see Ch. 40, Appeal: An Overview et seq., in that publication.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Specification of Grounds

In Sanchez-Corea v. Bank of America (1985) 38 Cal. 3d 892, 215 Cal. Rptr. 679, 701 P.2d 826 , the trial court entered a judgment in favor of plaintiffs. Defendant timely moved for a new trial, asserting six grounds for its motion. Exactly 60 days after notice of entry of judgment was mailed, the trial court granted defendant's motion for a new trial. The minute order entered by the clerk stated "Defendants [sic] motion for new trial is granted. Specifications to follow." No grounds for the new trial order were specified at that time. One week later, the trial court filed an Order Granting New trial vacating the judgment and granting defendant's motion. This second order explained that the sole ground for granting the motion was insufficiency of the evidence. Plaintiffs appealed, contending that the first order was defective for failure to state the ground on which the motion was made and that the second order was invalid because it was made after expiration of the 60-day period in which the court had jurisdiction to rule on the motion.

The Supreme Court reversed. The Court found that the absence of specification of grounds in the first order made it defective but not void under Code Civ. Proc. § 657 (38 Cal. 3d 892, 900) . As to the second order, which was not filed until 67 days after notice of entry of judgment, the Court found that, to the extent it purported to rule on the motion and state insufficient evidence as the ground therefor, it was defective as in excess of the 60-day jurisdictional period (38 Cal. 3d 892, 903) . Addressing the issue of appellate review, the Court noted that Code Civ. Proc. § 657 requires an appellate court to affirm a new trial order if it should have been granted on any ground stated in the motion. However, an appellate court cannot affirm on grounds of sufficiency of the evidence or of inadequate or excessive damages unless such ground is stated in the new trial order. Limited to considering the first order (the second order having being deemed an act in excess of jurisdiction), the Court indicated that, since the order stated no grounds, the Court could not affirm the order on grounds of insufficiency of the evidence or excessive damages (38 Cal. 3d 892, 905) . The Court evaluated the other four grounds asserted by defendant, finding that these grounds did not warrant affirming the trial court's order granting a new trial (38 Cal. 3d 892, 906-910) .

[b] Specification of Reasons

In La Manna v. Stewart (1975) 13 Cal. 3d 413, 118 Cal. Rptr. 761, 530 P.2d 1073 , plaintiff's motion for a new trial was granted by the trial court. In granting the motion, the court gave an oral statement of its reasons. The written minute order stated only that "Motion is granted. Verdict is vacated on all the issues. The court shall file its specifications and mail a copy [to] each counsel." The court did not timely file such a specification of reasons. Nearly two months after the first minute order was filed, the court filed a "nunc pro tunc minute order" purporting to amend the first minute order by adding thereto a verbatim description of the oral statement of reasons given on the prior date. Defendant appealed from the order granting plaintiff a new trial.

The Supreme Court reversed. Code Civ. Proc. § 657 requires a court granting a motion for a new trial to set forth a specification of reasons, either in the order itself, or in a writing that is to be prepared, signed, and filed with the clerk within 10 days after filing the order. The Court noted that the first minute order contained no specification of the court's reasons for granting a new trial and that the only written specification of reasons in the case was filed not 10, but 57 days after the order granting a new trial. The Court concluded that since the trial court exceeded the 10-day period of Code Civ. Proc. § 657 in declaring its reasons, the late specification of reasons was a nullity (13 Cal. 3d 413, 418) .

[c] Oral Pronouncement of Reasons Inadequate

The facts and procedural background of La Manna v. Stewart (1975) 13 Cal. 3d 413, 118 Cal. Rptr. 761, 530 P.2d 1073 , are discussed in [b], above. The Supreme Court, reversing an order granting a plaintiff's motion for a new trial, rejected plaintiff's assertion that an oral statement of reasons given by a judge in open court substantially complies with the requirements of Code Civ. Proc. § 657. The Court observed that an oral recital, no matter how thoroughly it may have been prepared, cannot amount to compliance in any degree "substantial" or otherwise, with a statutory directive that such a statement be in writing (13 Cal. 3d 413, 422) .

[d] Reference to Transcription of Oral Statement of Reasons Inadequate

In Steinhart v. South Coast Area Transit (1986) 183 Cal. App. 3d 770, 228 Cal. Rptr. 283 , plaintiff moved for a new trial after a defense verdict. At the hearing, the trial court orally granted plaintiff's motion. The court filed a minute order which referred to the trial court's oral statement, but contained no grounds or reasons for the granting of the motion. Several weeks later, the court filed a second order. This order stated a ground for granting the motion, and purported to incorporate by reference a transcript of the oral statements made at the earlier hearing.

The court of appeal reversed, concluding that both orders were fatally defective (183 Cal. App. 3d 770, 772) . The court noted that under Code Civ. Proc. § 657, a court granting a motion for a new trial must either specify the reason or reasons for granting the new trial in its order or file a separate specification of reasons within 10 days after filing the order (183 Cal. App. 3d 770, 773) . The court of appeal remarked that the trial court's reference, in its first order, to the trial court's oral statement was insufficient to comply with Code Civ. Proc. § 657, since Code Civ. Proc. § 657 requires a written statement of reasons (183 Cal. App. 3d 770, 773-774) . Similarly, the trial court's reference, in the second order, to the transcript of the earlier hearing would be insufficient to turn an oral statement of reasons into a written one (183 Cal. App. 3d 770, 774) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Specification of Reasons

In Stewart v. Truck Ins. Exchange (1993) 17 Cal. App. 4th 468, 21 Cal. Rptr. 2d 338 , the trial judge granted a motion for new trial as to a portion of the compensatory damages, and a motion for new trial as to punitive damages. However, the trial court stated reason only with regard to the compensatory damages, and gave no reason for granting the motion as to punitive damages. The court of appeal reversed as to the new trial order on punitive damages, holding that the trial court failed to comply with Code Civ. Proc. § 657 with respect to that order. The court rejected the argument that no separate reasons were required because the trial court had given reasons for granting the new trial on compensatory damages. Rather, the two motions were separate motions made by separate parties, and compliance with § 657 was not excused. The award of punitive damages was not so interwoven with a compensatory award as to make it unfair to have a retrial limited to compensatory damages. The jury never considered the issue of punitive damages, and its decision with regard to compensatory damages was not affected or impacted by the punitive damages issue (17 Cal. App. 4th 468, 484-485) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 155 MOTIONS AFTER TRIAL
PART II. FORMS
B. Motions for New Trial
10. Appeal From Order Granting New Trial

15-155 California Points & Authorities § 155.301

§ 155.301 Supporting Appeal From Order Granting New Trial [Code Civ. Proc. § 659]--Order Based on Harmless Error

[1] FORM

[The following may be used in appellate brief supporting relief from order for new trial.]

THE TRIAL COURT'S ORDER GRANTING _____ [identify party, e.g., PLAINTIFF]'S MOTION FOR A NEW TRIAL SHOULD BE OVERTURNED BECAUSE THE ERROR ON WHICH IT IS BASED DID NOT PREJUDICE _____ [identify party asserting error, e.g., PLAINTIFF].

Prejudice Is Required. A trial court has no discretion to grant a new trial for harmless error and, therefore, a new trial order is valid only if prejudicial error occurred at the trial (Osborne v. Cal-Am Financial Corp. (1978) 80 Cal. App. 3d 259, 266, 145 Cal. Rptr. 584).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted as part of an appellant's opening brief, in support of an appeal from a trial court's order granting a motion for a new trial on the ground that no prejudicial error occurred at the first trial.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should set forth the specific grounds on which the trial judge based the new trial order and demonstrate how the error or errors relied on by the judge did not affect the outcome of the trial.

[c] Grounds for Affirming Order

On appeal from an order granting a new trial, the appellate court ordinarily must affirm the order if it should have been granted on any ground stated in the motion, whether or not specified in the trial court's order or specification of reasons [see Code Civ. Proc. § 657]. Therefore, in an appropriate case, counsel should address the other grounds for new trial that were raising by the opposing party in the motion but not specified in the order under review. An order cannot, however, be affirmed on the ground of insufficiency of evidence or excessive damages unless the ground is stated in the order. In addition, on appeal from an order based on insufficiency of the evidence or excessive damages, it is conclusively presumed that the order with regard to that ground was made only for the reasons specified in the order or specification of reasons and the order can be reversed with regard to that ground only if there is no substantial basis in the record for those reasons [Code Civ. Proc. § 657].

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion and forms relating generally to motion proceedings for new trial, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 371, Motions After Trial (Matthew Bender). For discussion and forms relating to appeals, see Ch. 40, Appeal: An Overview et seq., in that publication.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Prejudice Is Required

Osborne v. Cal-Am Financial Corp. (1978) 80 Cal. App. 3d. 259, 145 Cal. Rptr. 584 , was an action brought by a seller for breach of a real estate contract. The jury returned a verdict for defendant, who had terminated the contract. The trial court granted plaintiff's motion for new trial on the ground that the court had admonished plaintiff and his counsel in front of the jury and had refused to allow plaintiff to call an expert witness on rebuttal to establish damages. In its memorandum opinion granting the new trial, the court indicated it was convinced beyond any reasonable doubt that plaintiff's case had no merit, that plaintiff's own conduct produced the court's admonitions, and that there was no excuse for not calling the expert witness during plaintiff's case in chief. Nevertheless, the court granted a new trial, stating that to ensure justice for all it must be afforded to "the worst." Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that no prejudicial error occurred at the trial. The court held that, while all presumptions favor the order granting a new trial and such orders are rarely reversed, the trial court is bound by the rule of Cal. Const., art. VI, § 13, which dictates that prejudicial error is the basis for a new trial and that there is no discretion to grant a new trial for harmless error (80 Cal. App. 3d. 259, 265-266) . The trial court's apparent belief that a new trial was required as a matter of form to foster the appearance of justice, even in the absence of prejudicial conduct, was an unsound basis for the order (80 Cal. App. 3d. 259, 266) . The court went on to address plaintiff's contention that specific errors in law occurred at the trial, noting that Code Civ. Proc. § 657 requires the appellate court to review all grounds raised by plaintiff in the motion for new trial, not only those specified by the court in its resulting order (80 Cal. App. 3d. 259, 265) . However, after reviewing the record, the court held that the trial court was correct in concluding, as a matter of law, that defendant's recision was timely and in instructing the jury to that effect (80 Cal. App. 3d. 259, 267-268) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Prejudice Is Required

Mosesian v. Pennwalt Corp. (1987) 191 Cal. App. 3d 851, 236 Cal. Rptr. 778 , was a products liability case in which the jury returned a verdict for defendants. Plaintiff moved for a new trial on the ground that prejudicial hearsay statements from outside experts were admitted into evidence through the testimony of an expert witness for the defense. The trial court granted the motion, finding that it had erred in admitting the hearsay opinions, that the entire controversy revolved around an issue over which the experts had battled, and that it could not say that the jury was not prejudiced by the hearsay. Defendant appealed. The court of appeal reversed, holding that plaintiff had waived any objection to the hearsay evidence by failing to make a timely objection on the correct ground (191 Cal. App. 3d 851, 865) . The court went on to hold that, even if the introduction of hearsay was erroneous, the error was not prejudicial. Mere error, the court held, is not enough to sustain a trial court's granting of a new trial motion. There has to be some finding by the trial court of prejudice or injustice to the party asserting the error. The error need not be substantial but must somehow work an injustice (191 Cal. App. 3d 851, 866) . In so holding, the court expressly followed Osborne and rejected the decision in Richard v. Scott (1978) 79 Cal. App. 3d 57, 144 Cal. Rptr. 672 , in which the court held that the party prevailing on a motion for new trial was not required to demonstrate that prejudice resulted from the error for which a new trial was granted (191 Cal. App. 3d 851, 859) .

Garcia v. County of Los Angeles (1986) 177 Cal. App. 3d 633, 223 Cal. Rptr. 100 , was an action for battery and false imprisonment. The trial court involuntarily rested defendant's case after its last witness, who was not under subpoena, failed to appear. Defendant did not request a continuance or make an objection when the court had indicated its intention to proceed with the trial. After the jury returned a verdict for plaintiff, the trial court granted defendant's motion for new trial on the ground that there had been an irregularity in the proceedings (see Code Civ. Proc. § 657(1)) and plaintiff appealed. The court of appeal reversed on the ground that there was no irregularity on which the trial court could base its order (177 Cal. App. 3d 633, 639-640) . The court followed Osborne to hold that a new trial cannot be granted for harmless error (177 Cal. App. 3d 633, 641) . The court found that there would have been no good cause for the trial court to grant a continuance, given that the absent witness was neither under subpoena nor out of subpoena range, and that the testimony of the absent witness, if admitted, would have been cumulative (177 Cal. App. 3d 633, 640) . Even if there was an irregularity in the proceedings, the court held, defendant caused it and so can have no relief (177 Cal. App. 3d 633, 641) . The court concluded that any error committed that provided the basis for the trial court's order granting a new trial was harmless and not prejudicial (177 Cal. App. 3d 633, 641) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 155 MOTIONS AFTER TRIAL
PART II. FORMS
B. Motions for New Trial
10. Appeal From Order Granting New Trial

15-155 California Points & Authorities §§ 155.302-155.309

[Reserved]

§§ 155.302[Reserved]

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 155 MOTIONS AFTER TRIAL
PART II. FORMS
B. Motions for New Trial
10. Appeal From Order Granting New Trial

15-155 California Points & Authorities § 155.310

§ 155.310 Opposing Appeal From Order Granting New Trial [Code Civ. Proc. § 659]--Reasonable Finder of Fact Could Find in Favor of Moving Party on Trial Court's Theory

[1] FORM

[The following may be used in appellate brief opposing relief from order for new trial.]

THE TRIAL COURT ACTED WITHIN ITS DISCRETION IN GRANTING THE ORDER FOR NEW TRIAL, AND ITS RULING MUST BE SUSTAINED ON APPEAL BECAUSE _____ [identify opposing party, e.g., DEFENDANT] HAS NOT DEMONSTRATED THAT NO REASONABLE FINDER OF FACT COULD FIND FOR _____ [identify moving party, e.g., PLAINTIFF] ON THE TRIAL COURT'S THEORY.

A. Statutory Rule of Review on Appeal From Order Granting New Trial. On appeal from an order granting a new trial, the appellate court generally is required to affirm the order if it should have been granted on any ground stated in the motion, whether or not specified in order or in the trial court's specification of reasons for the order (Code Civ. Proc. § 657). [The appellate court may, however, affirm an order granting a new trial either on the ground of the insufficiency of evidence to justify the verdict or other decision, or on the ground of excessive or inadequate damages, only if that ground is stated in the order (Code Civ. Proc. § 657)]. [In the case of an order granting a new trial on the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict or other decision, or on the ground of excessive or inadequate damages, it is conclusively presumed on an appeal from that order that it was made, as to either of these grounds, only for those reasons specified in the order or in the trial court's specification of reasons. The appellate court may reverse an such an order, as to either of these grounds, only if there is no substantial basis in the record for any of the reasons thus specified (Code Civ. Proc. § 657)].

B. Abuse of Discretion Standard of Review Applicable on Appeal From Order Granting New Trial. A trial court's order granting a new trial under Code of Civil Procedure Section 657 must be sustained on appeal unless the opposing party demonstrates that no reasonable finder of fact could have found for the moving party on the theory upon which the trial court based its order (Lane v. Hughes Aircraft Co. (2000) 22 Cal. 4th 405, 409, 93 Cal. Rptr. 2d 60, 993 P.2d 388 ; see also Jiminez v. Sears, Roebuck & Co. (1971) 4 Cal. 3d 379, 387, 93 Cal. Rptr. 769, 482 P.2d 681).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted as part of a respondent's opposing brief opposing the reversal of a trial court order granting a motion for a new trial. The ground for the opposition is, under the applicable standard of appellate review, the order must be upheld on appeal unless the appellant demonstrates that no reasonable finder of fact could find in favor of the respondent on the theory adopted by the trial court as the basis for granting a new trial.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should set forth the theory on which the trial judge based its order, and argue how the appellant has failed to show, or how he or she cannot show, that no reasonable finder of fact could find in respondent's favor on that theory.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion and forms relating generally to motion proceedings for new trial, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 371, Motions After Trial (Matthew Bender). For discussion and forms relating to appeals, see Ch. 40, Appeal: An Overview et seq., in that publication.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Abuse of Discretion Standard of Review Applicable on Appeal From Order Granting New Trial

In Lane v. Hughes Aircraft Co. (2000) 22 Cal. 4th 405, 93 Cal. Rptr. 2d 60, 993 P.2d 388 , one plaintiff sued his employer for breach of contract, breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, fraud, failure to promote due to race discrimination, and retaliation in violation of the Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA) [Gov. Code § 12900 et seq.]. A second plaintiff sued the same employer on similar causes of action, claiming demotion and constructive discharge for refusing to write a poor job evaluation of the first plaintiff. After trial, the jury returned verdicts for both plaintiffs, finding defendant employer breached its contracts with plaintiffs in that it terminated them without good cause, that it discriminated against the first plaintiff, that it retaliated against both plaintiffs for reporting the discrimination, and that it constructively discharged the second plaintiff. The jury also found that defendant was subject to punitive damages, awarding the first plaintiff approximately $46 million, and the second plaintiff $43 million, these awards including $40 million each in punitive damages (22 Cal. 4th 405, 409-410).

On defendant's motion, the trial court granted a judgment notwithstanding the verdict (JNOV) under Code Civ. Proc. § 629, concluding, among other things, that the record contained no substantial evidence to support the jury's findings as to termination of the first plaintiff or constructive discharge of the second, nor as to any discrimination or retaliation by the defendant. The court specified it was granting JNOV as to the damages for future wage loss because both plaintiffs rejected unconditional offers of reinstatement, and as to the punitive damages because there was no clear and convincing evidence of malice. Alternatively, the court granted a new trial under Code Civ. Proc. § 657, concluding that the record contained insufficient evidence of either discrimination or retaliation, as well as insufficient evidence to support the damage award. With respect to punitive damages, the court specifically found that passion and prejudice had motivated the jury, that the damages did not bear a reasonable relationship to Hughes's actions or plaintiffs' injuries, and that they were grossly disproportionate to the amount of actual damages (22 Cal. 4th 405, 410-411).

Plaintiffs' appeal followed. The court of appeal reversed the JNOV, finding sufficient evidence in the record to support the jury's verdict as to liability and compensatory damages, but found the punitive damages excessive, reducing the first plaintiff's punitive damage award to $5 million, and the second plaintiff's punitive damage award to $2.8 million. The court of appeal also stated that it "need not consider the trial court's grant of a new trial on the bases of insufficiency of evidence and excessive compensatory damages, as we already analyzed the record with respect to the judgment notwithstanding the verdicts" (22 Cal. 4th 405, 411).

Defendant petitioned for review. It did not contest the court of appeal's reversal of the JNOV, but argued that the court of appeal had improperly reversed the order granting a new trial, in that it had applied the same standard in reviewing the new trial order as that which it had applied in reviewing the JNOV order. The Supreme Court granted review, initially remanding the case to the court of appeal to reconsider its decision in light of the "highly deferential" standard of review articulated in Jones v. Citrus Motors Ontario, Inc. (1973) 8 Cal. 3d 706, 710-711, 106 Cal. Rptr. 28, 505 P.2d 220 and Neal v. Farmers Ins. Exchange (1978) 21 Cal. 3d 910, 932-933, 148 Cal. Rptr. 389, 582 P.2d 980 . After the court of appeal reached the same decision as before, the Supreme Court granted review a second time and reversed the court of appeal's decision, remanding with instructions to affirm the trial court's order granting a new trial (22 Cal. 4th 405, 411, 416).

The Supreme Court stated that the standards for reviewing an order granting a new trial are well settled. After authorizing trial courts to grant a new trial on the grounds of excessive damages or insufficiency of the evidence, Code Civ. Proc. § 657 provides as follows: "on appeal from an order granting a new trial upon the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence ... or upon the ground of excessive or inadequate damages, ... such order shall be reversed as to such ground only if there is no substantial basis in the record for any of such reasons" (22 Cal. 4th 405, 411-412). Thus, an order granting a new trial under Code Civ. Proc. § 657 "must be sustained on appeal unless the opposing party demonstrates that no reasonable finder of fact could have found for the movant on [the trial court's] theory," and an "abuse of discretion cannot be found in cases in which the evidence is in conflict and a verdict for the moving party could have been reached ... " (quoting Jones v. Citrus Motors Ontario, Inc. (1973) 8 Cal. 3d 706, 710, 711, 106 Cal. Rptr. 28, 505 P.2d 220). In other words, when reviewing an order granting a new trial, the "presumption of correctness normally accorded on appeal to the jury's verdict is replaced by a presumption in favor of the [new trial] order" (quoting Neal v. Farmers Ins. Exchange (1978) 21 Cal. 3d 910, 932, 148 Cal. Rptr. 389, 582 P.2d 980) (22 Cal. 4th 405, 412).

The Court explained that this degree of deference was because the trial court, in ruling on a motion for new trial, sits as an independent trier of fact, and its factual determinations, as reflected in its order granting a new trial, are entitled to the same deference that an appellate court would ordinarily accord a jury's factual determinations. Because the trial court is in the best position to assess the reliability of a jury's verdict, the Legislature has granted them broad discretion to order new trials, the only relevant limitations on which are the requirement that trial courts state their reasons for granting a new trial, and the requirement that there must be some evidence in the record to support those reasons (22 Cal. 4th 405, 412).

In this case, the trial court granted a new trial on the basis of insufficient evidence and stated reasons in support. Specifically, the court found that plaintiffs had not established racial discrimination or retaliatory bias. These findings by the trial court undermined the essential assertions that form the basis of the jury's liability verdict, and therefore provided a sufficient basis for ordering a new trial as to liability (22 Cal. 4th 405, 412).

The Court rejected plaintiffs' argument that the trial court's specification of reasons were too summary and did not establish the requisite degree of deliberation. The specification of reasons, the Court observed, was not a mere a mere statement of ultimate facts, such as that Hughes did not discriminate or retaliate, but included findings that the first plaintiff's promotion history was comparable to that of whites, that the second defendant had not significantly supported the first plaintiff's discrimination complaints, and that defendant had a good faith business reason for its management assignments. Moreover, at the beginning of the order, where the trial court was addressing both the grant of a new trial and the JNOV, it found that defendant did not instruct or force the second defendant to fabricate a poor job evaluation of the first plaintiff, that defendant tried to find job opportunities for the second defendant, and that defendant's managers did not refuse to meet with the second plaintiff after he complained of discrimination (22 Cal. 4th 405, 412-413).

The Court noted that the trial court's specification of reasons also clearly incorporated by reference a number of prior findings made with respect to the JNOV, including findings that defendant's failure to promote the first plaintiff was due to his performance and not his race, and that the first plaintiff's statistical evidence was flawed because it did not indicate the qualifications of employees who were passed over for promotion. The Court concluded that such cross-reference to findings located in a different part of the order was adequate to satisfy Code Civ. Proc. § 657. A court need not unnecessarily burden a new trial order by reiterating what it has already said at length with respect to another issue before it, so long as it makes clear to a reviewing court the basis for its decision (22 Cal. 4th 405, 413).

The Court noted that the trial court's order "described in detail" why the evidence was insufficient as to compensatory damages, giving several specific findings which undermined the evidentiary foundation of the compensatory damage award and therefore provided sufficient basis for ordering a new trial as to compensatory damages. With respect to punitive damages, the trial court noted that the award was "excessive" and disproportionate to Hughes's conduct and to the extent of plaintiffs' injury and compensatory damages (22 Cal. 4th 405, 413-414). The Court concluded that the record supported these findings, and emphasized again that, so long as the evidence in the record is in conflict and can support a verdict in favor of either party, a properly constructed new trial order is not subject to reversal on appeal. In this case, although the jury verdicts were in plaintiffs' favor, the evidence could have supported a jury verdict in defendant's favor on all causes of action (22 Cal. 4th 405, 414).

The Court similarly rejected plaintiffs' argument that the new trial order was invalid because it borrowed extensively from briefs filed by defendant. This argument is based on language in Code Civ. Proc. § 657 that the court "shall not direct the attorney for a party to prepare either or both [the new trial] order and ... specification of reasons." The Court, giving this language a reasonable and practical construction, and bearing in mind its purposes, to promote judicial deliberation before judicial action and to make appellate review more manageable, concluded that, while Code Civ. Proc. § 657 bars a trial court from imposing on counsel preparation of new trial orders, does not also bar the trial court from adopting material in a party's brief. The Court noted that if a trial court could not rely on reasons advanced in such briefs, their utility would be undermined and they would serve little purpose. In the Court's view, the critical factor is the reasoning process, not whose language is being employed. Thus, a trial court satisfies Code Civ. Proc. § 657 if its new trial order indicates, as in this case, that it deliberated over the issues (22 Cal. 4th 405, 415).

The Court concluded by reaffirming the deferential standards of review articulated in Neal v. Farmers Ins. Exchange (1978) 21 Cal. 3d 910, 932-933, 148 Cal. Rptr. 389, 582 P.2d 980 and Jones v. Citrus Motors Ontario, Inc. (1973) 8 Cal. 3d 706, 710-711, 106 Cal. Rptr. 28, 505 P.2d 220 , and holding that the court of appeal erred in failing to apply these standards properly (22 Cal. 4th 405, 416).

Jiminez v. Sears, Roebuck & Co. (1971) 4 Cal. 3d 379, 93 Cal. Rptr. 769, 482 P.2d 681 , was a products liability action in which the jury returned a verdict for defendants. The trial court gave jury instructions concerning strict liability but refused to give plaintiff's proposed instructions on negligence and res ipsa loquitur. The trial court subsequently granted plaintiff's motion for new trial on the ground that, under the pleadings and evidence, plaintiff was entitled to have the issues of negligence and res ipsa loquitur go to the jury. Defendant appealed.

The Supreme Court affirmed the order for new trial, holding that plaintiff was entitled to a new trial because, given the evidence introduced at trial, the jury could properly have found for plaintiff had the res ipsa loquitur instruction been given (4 Cal. 3d 379, 386-387, 388) . In its discussion of the standard for review of the trial court's order, the Court held that the determination of a motion for new trial rests so completely within the court's discretion that its action will not be disturbed unless a manifest and unmistakable abuse of discretion appears, particularly when the discretion has been exercised in favor of awarding a new trial. An order granting a new trial will not be set aside as long as a reasonable or even fairly debatable justification under the law is shown for the order (4 Cal. 3d 379, 387) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 155 MOTIONS AFTER TRIAL
PART II. FORMS
B. Motions for New Trial
10. Appeal From Order Granting New Trial

15-155 California Points & Authorities §§ 155.311-155.319

[Reserved]

§§ 155.311[Reserved]

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 155 MOTIONS AFTER TRIAL
PART II. FORMS
C. Motions to Set Aside and Vacate a Judgment and Enter Another and Different Judgment

15-155 California Points & Authorities § 155.320

§ 155.320 Supporting Motion to Set Aside and Vacate Judgment and Enter Another Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 663, 663a]--Incorrect or Erroneous Legal Bases for Court Decision [Code Civ. Proc. § 663(1)]

[1] FORM

SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA,
COUNTY OF _____

	)
	)	NO. _____
	)	MEMORANDUM OF POINTS AND AUTHORIT-
_____ [name], Plaintiff,	)	IES IN SUPPORT OF MOTION TO SET ASIDE
vs.	)	AND VACATE JUDGMENT AND ENTER AN-
_____ [name], Defendant.	)	OTHER AND DIFFERENT JUDGMENT
	)	[Telephone Appearance]
	)	Date: _____
	)	Time: _____
	)	Location: _____
	)	[Judge: _____]
		Date Action Filed: _____
		[Trial Date: _____]

_____

THE _____ [JUDGMENT or DECREE] SHOULD BE SET ASIDE AND VACATED AND ANOTHER AND DIFFERENT JUDGMENT ENTERED BECAUSE THERE ARE INCORRECT OR ERRONEOUS LEGAL BASES FOR THE DECISION THAT ARE NOT CONSISTENT WITH OR NOT SUPPORTED BY THE FACTS, AND THAT MATERIALLY AFFECT THE SUBSTANTIAL RIGHTS OF _____ [PLAINTIFF or DEFENDANT], THUS ENTITLING HIM/HER/IT TO A DIFFERENT JUDGMENT.

A. Motion to Set Aside and Vacate and Enter Another and Different Judgment. On motion of the party aggrieved, a judgment or decree, when based on a decision by the court, may be set aside and vacated by the same court, and another and different judgment entered when there is an incorrect or erroneous legal basis for the decision, not consistent with or not supported by the facts, if substantial rights of the party are materially affected thereby, thus entitling the party to a different judgment, and in such case when the judgment is set aside, the statement of decision must be amended and corrected (Code Civ. Proc. § 663(1)).

B. Incorrect Legal Conclusion or Erroneous Judgment on Facts. The motion to set aside and vacate a judgment and enter another and different judgment may be made if the court draws an incorrect legal conclusion or renders an erroneous judgment on the facts found by it to exist (Alameda v. Carleson (1971) 5 Cal. 3d 730, 738, 97 Cal. Rptr. 385, 488 P.2d 953 (decided before 1981 amendment of Code Civ. Proc. § 663).

[Optional] C. Legal Conclusion Contrary to Express Statutory Provision. The motion to set aside and vacate a judgment and enter another and different judgment may be granted if the court comes to a legal conclusion that is contrary to an express statutory provision (see Gibson v. Hammang (1904) 145 Cal. 454, 456, 78 P. 953 (decided before 1981 amendment of Code Civ. Proc. § 663).

[Optional] D. Legal Conclusions Inconsistent With Uncontroverted Facts. The motion to set aside and vacate a judgment and enter another and different judgment may be granted if the court's legal conclusions are inconsistent with the uncontroverted facts of the case (see Swanson v. Wheeler (1952) 112 Cal. App. 2d 43, 44-45, 245 P.2d 699 (decided before 1981 amendment of Code Civ. Proc. § 663).

[Optional] E. Court Wrongly Considers Element as Part of Settled Legal Doctrine. The motion to set aside and vacate a judgment and enter another and different judgment may be granted when the court considers a specific element to be part of a settled legal doctrine when, in fact, it is not (see Crook v. Leinenweaver (1950) 100 Cal. App. 2d 790, 792-794, 224 P.2d 891 (decided before 1981 amendment of Code Civ. Proc. § 663).

[Optional] F. Moving Party May Raise New Legal Theory. Section 663(1) of the Code of Civil Procedure empowers a trial court to consider new legal challenges not previously raised before the verdict or judgment when the court is ruling on a motion to vacate (Hoffman-Haag v. Transamerica Ins. Co. (1991) 1 Cal. App. 4th 10, 15-16, 1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 805).

[Add further points and authorities setting out substantive law pertaining to cause of action or defense to show why motion should be granted.]
Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for _____ [party's status and name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion to set aside and vacate a judgment and to enter another and different judgment [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 663, 663a]. It is to be used when there is a statement of decision by the court that contains legal bases that are not consistent with or not supported by the facts [see Code Civ. Proc. § 663(1)].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. In particular, counsel should show how the court's legal bases for the decision are not consistent with or not supported by the facts found by the court. Counsel should also add further points and authorities that set out the substantive law pertaining to the particular cause of action or defense to show why the motion should be granted. For example, in an action involving a disputed boundary line in which the court has incorrectly concluded that a dispute is a necessary element of the agreed boundary line doctrine, counsel should discuss the elements of the doctrine to show how the court's legal conclusions were erroneous [see Crook v. Leinenweaver (1950) 100 Cal. App. 2d 790, 794, 224 P.2d 891] .

Counsel should cite relevant case authority supporting these substantive points of law. In preparing the memorandum, counsel may refer to the substantive chapters contained in this publication and in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Statement of Decision

Note that the language of Code Civ. Proc. § 663 was amended in 1981 to conform to the concurrent revision of Code Civ. Proc. § 632. Code Civ. Proc. § 632, as amended, has replaced findings of fact and conclusions of law with a statement of decision explaining the factual and legal basis for the court's decision on each of the principal controverted issues at trial, to be issued by the court when properly requested by any party appearing at trial.

Accordingly, Code Civ. Proc. § 663 now refers to a judgment based on a decision by the court, rather than one based on findings of fact. This judgment may be vacated and a different judgment entered under Code Civ. Proc. § 663(1) when the legal basis for the decision is inconsistent with, or not supported by, the facts, and in such case, the statement of decision must be amended.

It appears that the changes in terminology only minimally affect the import of the statute. Therefore, case law interpreting the old version of Code Civ. Proc. § 663, which referred to "findings of fact" and "conclusions of law," are probably still persuasive, if not controlling, authority in interpreting the amended version of Code Civ. Proc. § 663. Care should be used, however, in relying on case law decided under the prior law.

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of notice of intention to move to set aside and vacate a judgment and to enter another and different judgment, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 371, Motions After Trial (Matthew Bender). For a discussion of the statement of decision generally, see Ch. 529, Statement of Decision in that publication.

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities set out in § 155.330 et seq. may be used in an appropriate situation to oppose a motion that is supported by this memorandum.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Incorrect Legal Conclusion or Erroneous Judgment on Facts

Alameda v. Carleson (1971) 5 Cal. 3d 730, 97 Cal. Rptr. 385, 488 P.2d 953 , was a consolidated action involving the question of whether or not a state welfare program conformed to certain provisions of the Social Security Act [42 U.S.C. § 602(a)]. In one action, plaintiff counties brought an action for declaratory and injunctive relief against defendant Carleson, Director of the Department of Social Welfare. Since the effect of a judgment in the counties' favor would be to terminate welfare granted to certain recipients, California Welfare Rights Organization (hereafter referred to as CWRO) sought to intervene as parties in the action. The trial court denied intervention. Subsequently, the court entered its judgment declaring certain of Carleson's regulations invalid. CWRO filed a motion to vacate the judgment and renewed its application to intervene, but both motions were denied. CWRO then appealed the entire proceeding.

The Supreme Court stated that one who is legally aggrieved by a judgment may become a party of record and obtain a right to appeal by moving to vacate the judgment pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 663 (5 Cal. 3d 730, 736) . The Court said that CWRO was legally aggrieved by the judgment because its rights or interests were injuriously affected by it (5 Cal. 3d 730, 737) . The Court also stated that Code Civ. Proc. § 663 furnished sufficient statutory basis for CRWO's motion in the instant case. The section in part provides that a judgment may on motion be vacated for incorrect or erroneous conclusions of law not consistent with or not supported by the findings of fact. The Court stated that it interpreted the language to mean that the motion may be made whenever the trial judge draws an incorrect legal conclusion or renders an erroneous judgment on the facts found by it to exist. In this case, the Court noted that CWRO contended that the trial court incorrectly concluded on the basis of the findings of fact, which included applicable provisions of the Social Security Act, that existing regulations promulgated and interpreted by Carleson were incorrect. If the court's conclusion was indeed incorrect, the Court stated that the error could have been reviewed by a motion to vacate under Code Civ. Proc. § 663. The Court concluded, therefore, that CWRO became a party of record in the action, that it had standing to appeal from the judgment, and that the Supreme Court had jurisdiction to determine the substantive issues on appeal (5 Cal. 3d 730, 738) .

[b] Legal Conclusion Contrary to Express Statutory Provision

In Gibson v. Hammang (1904) 145 Cal. 454, 78 P. 953 , plaintiffs brought an action to annul the deed to certain lands. The trial court decided in favor of plaintiffs, but it stated that plaintiffs were not entitled to reimbursement for costs. Plaintiffs moved to vacate the part of the judgment that disallowed costs and to enter judgment for costs under Code Civ. Proc. § 663.

The court of appeal remanded the case with directions to set aside that part of the judgment relating to costs, to correct the conclusions of law to conform to its opinion, and to amend the judgment by awarding costs to plaintiffs. The court noted that a statute expressly stated that the reimbursement of costs was not discretionary, but mandatory in actions for the recovery of real property. The court stated that the pleadings, findings, and judgment showed that the action involved the title to the land, and although plaintiffs recovered part of the land only, they were entitled to their costs as a matter of right (145 Cal. 454, 456-457) .

[c] Legal Conclusions Inconsistent With Uncontroverted Facts

In Swanson v. Wheeler (1952) 112 Cal. App. 2d 43, 245 P.2d 699 , plaintiff brought an action to money due under an express oral agreement which became due on mutual cancellation of the agreement. The trial court found that there was an oral agreement between the parties; plaintiff was given the right to withdraw from the enterprise and if he did so, his down payment of $5,000 would be refunded; plaintiff withdrew; the agreement was terminated by mutual agreement; and defendant promised to refund plaintiff's money but did not do so. However, the court then determined that plaintiff was not entitled to $5,000 from defendant. Plaintiff moved under Code Civ. Proc. § 663 to set aside and vacate the judgment and to enter another and different judgment that awarded him $5,000 plus interest. The motion was denied. Plaintiff appealed the judgment and order denying the motion to vacate.

The court of appeal reversed the judgment with directions to vacate the judgment and the conclusions and to make new conclusions of law that were consistent with its opinions, and to enter judgment in favor of plaintiff for $5,000 plus interest. The court noted that the findings were all in favor of plaintiff and the conclusions and judgment were in favor of defendant for specific performance of the agreement. However, the factual findings clearly showed that plaintiff was entitled to judgment. The court added that although it is the policy to give findings a liberal construction in support of the judgment, even liberality has its limits, and the court may not, through purported construction, ignore clear and positive factual findings or supply those that are missing. The court stated that it could not understand why the previous motion was denied when it was clear that the judgment could not stand. Accordingly, the court remanded the case with directions (112 Cal. App. 2d 43, 45-46) .

[d] Court Wrongly Considers Element as Part of Settled Legal Doctrine

In Crook v. Leinenweaver (1950) 100 Cal. App. 2d 790, 224 P.2d 891 , plaintiffs brought an action to establish a boundary line and compel the removal of certain structures. The trial court made findings favorable to defendants, but concluded that the facts required a judgment in favor of plaintiffs. Defendants moved to vacate the judgment under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 663, 663a. The court denied the motion, and defendants appealed the order.

The court of appeal reversed the order with directions to vacate the judgment and enter a judgment in favor of defendants (100 Cal. App. 2d 790, 795) . The lower court stated in its decision that there was no dispute between the parties such as to bring this case within the doctrine of an agreed boundary line (100 Cal. App. 2d 790, 793-794) . However, defendants contended that the essential elements of an agreed boundary line appeared from the facts of the case (100 Cal. App. 2d 790, 792) . The court stated that the doctrine of an agreed boundary line is well settled and that an actual dispute or argument is not necessary in such cases (100 Cal. App. 2d 790, 792) . The court stated that the lower court's conclusion was clearly erroneous because the matter of a dispute or argument was a false quantity. The conclusions drawn by the trial court were inconsistent with the facts found and not supported by those facts (100 Cal. App. 2d 790, 794) . It appeared to the court that the facts dictated a judgment for defendants, and accordingly the court reversed the order (100 Cal. App. 2d 790, 794-795) .

[e] Moving Party May Raise New Legal Theory

The facts and procedural background of Hoffman-Haag v. Transamerica Ins. Co. (1991) 1 Cal. App. 4th 10, 1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 805 , are discussed in § 155.234[3][e]. In Hoffman-Haag, the court of appeal considered the plaintiffs' contention that reliance by the defendant's insurer on an Insurance Code section for the first time on the insurer's motion for new trial and to vacate judgment is not permitted. The court held that legal challenges that may be brought by way of Code Civ. Proc. § 663(1) are not limited to those raised before verdict or judgment (1 Cal. App. 4th 10, 15) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 155 MOTIONS AFTER TRIAL
PART II. FORMS
C. Motions to Set Aside and Vacate a Judgment and Enter Another and Different Judgment

15-155 California Points & Authorities § 155.321

§ 155.321 Supporting Motion to Set Aside and Vacate Judgment and Enter Another Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 663, 663a]--Judgment Inconsistent With Special Verdict of Jury [Code Civ. Proc. § 663(2)]

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 155.320.]

THE _____ [JUDGMENT or DECREE] SHOULD BE SET ASIDE AND VACATED AND ANOTHER AND DIFFERENT JUDGMENT ENTERED BECAUSE THE _____ [JUDGMENT or DECREE] IS NOT CONSISTENT WITH OR NOT SUPPORTED BY THE SPECIAL VERDICT, THUS MATERIALLY AFFECTING THE SUBSTANTIAL RIGHTS OF _____ [PLAINTIFF or DEFENDANT] AND ENTITLING HIM/HER/IT TO A DIFFERENT JUDGMENT.

A. Motion to Set Aside and Vacate and Enter Another and Different Judgment. On motion of the party aggrieved, a judgment or decree, when based on the special verdict of the jury, may be set aside and vacated by the same court, and another and different judgment entered when the judgment or decree is not consistent with or not supported by the special verdict, if substantial rights of the party are materially affected thereby, thus entitling the party to a different judgment (Code Civ. Proc. § 663).

B. Motion Properly Granted If Judgment Not Consistent With or Supported by Special Verdict. A motion to set aside and vacate a judgment and to enter another and different judgment is properly granted when the judgment is not consistent with or not supported by the special verdict (see Code Civ. Proc. § 663).

[Add further points and authorities, if appropriate, showing how court's judgment is incorrectly drawn from jury's factual conclusions.]
Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for _____ [party's status and name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion to set aside and vacate a judgment and to enter another and different judgment [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 663, 663a] when there is a special verdict of the jury. A special verdict is one in which the jury finds the facts only, leaving judgment to the court. It must present conclusions of fact as established by the evidence rather than the evidence used to prove these facts. The conclusions of fact drawn by the jury must be presented in such a manner that nothing remains for the court to do but draw conclusions of law from them [Code Civ. Proc. § 624]. This form is to be used if the court's judgment is not consistent with or not supported by the special verdict [see Code Civ. Proc. § 663(2)].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. In particular, counsel should show how the court's legal conclusions are incorrectly drawn from the jury's factual conclusions.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of notice of intention to move to set aside and vacate a judgment and to enter another and different judgment, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 371, Motions After Trial (Matthew Bender). For a discussion of special verdicts generally, see Ch. 326A, Jury Verdicts in that publication.

[d] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities set out in § 155.331 and § 155.332 may be used in an appropriate situation to oppose a motion that is supported by this memorandum.

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 155 MOTIONS AFTER TRIAL
PART II. FORMS
C. Motions to Set Aside and Vacate a Judgment and Enter Another and Different Judgment

15-155 California Points & Authorities §§ 155.322-155.329

[Reserved]

§§ 155.322[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 155 MOTIONS AFTER TRIAL
PART II. FORMS
C. Motions to Set Aside and Vacate a Judgment and Enter Another and Different Judgment

15-155 California Points & Authorities § 155.330

§ 155.330 Opposing Motion to Set Aside and Vacate Judgment and Enter Another Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 663, 663a]--Legal Bases Consistent With Facts Found by Court

[1] FORM

SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA,
COUNTY OF _____

	)
	)	NO. _____
	)	MEMORANDUM OF POINTS AND AUTHORIT-
_____ [name], Plaintiff,	)	IES IN OPPOSITION TO MOTION TO SET ASIDE
vs.	)	AND VACATE JUDGMENT AND ENTER AN-
_____ [name], Defendant.	)	OTHER AND DIFFERENT JUDGMENT
	)	[Telephone Appearance]
	)	Date: _____
	)	Time: _____
	)	Location: _____
	)	[Judge: _____]
		Date Action Filed: _____
		[Trial Date: _____]

_____

THE _____ [JUDGMENT or DECREE] SHOULD NOT BE SET ASIDE AND VACATED AND ANOTHER AND DIFFERENT JUDGMENT ENTERED BECAUSE THE LEGAL BASES FOR THE DECISION ARE CONSISTENT WITH AND SUPPORTED BY THE FACTS FOUND BY THE COURT, THUS THE SUBSTANTIAL RIGHTS OF _____ [PLAINTIFF or DEFENDANT] ARE NOT MATERIALLY AFFECTED AND HE/SHE/IT IS NOT ENTITLED TO A DIFFERENT JUDGMENT.

A. Judgment Consistent With Facts. If the judgment rendered in an action is the correct legal conclusion to be drawn from the facts found by the court, a motion to set aside and vacate a judgment and enter another and different judgment is properly denied (see Dahlberg v. Girsch (1910) 157 Cal. 324, 326-327, 107 P. 616 ; Brown v. Jones (1935) 11 Cal. App. 2d 30, 31, 52 P.2d 962 (both decided before 1981 amendment of Code Civ. Proc. § 663).

B. Motion Improper to Challenge Factual Bases for Decision. A motion to set aside and vacate a judgment and enter another and different judgment is a remedy to correct a court's incorrect or erroneous legal bases for the decision; it is not available to challenge the court's factual bases for the decision (see Code Civ. Proc. § 663; see also Jones v. Clover (1937) 24 Cal. App. 2d 210, 211-212, 74 P.2d 517 (decided before 1981 amendment of Code Civ. Proc. § 663).

[Add further points and authorities setting out substantive law pertaining to cause of action or defense to show why motion should be denied.]
Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for _____ [party's status and name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a motion to set aside and vacate a judgment and to enter another and different judgment [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 663, 663a] when there is a statement of decision by the court [see Code Civ. Proc. § 663(1)]. It may be submitted in opposition to a motion supported by the points and authorities set out in § 155.320.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. In particular, counsel should show how the legal bases for the decision are consistent with or supported by the facts found by the court. Counsel should also add further points and authorities that set out the substantive law pertaining to the particular cause of action or defense to show why the motion should be denied. For example, in an action in which the moving party contends that the court's legal conclusions are contrary to an express statutory provision, counsel should set out the substantive law to demonstrate that the action does not come under the terms of the statute [see Gibson v. Hammang (1904) 145 Cal. 454, 456, 78 P. 953] .

Counsel should cite relevant case authority supporting these substantive points of law. In preparing the memorandum, counsel may refer to the substantive chapters contained in this publication and in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Statement of Decision

Note that the language of Code Civ. Proc. § 663 was amended in 1981 to conform to the concurrent revision of Code Civ. Proc. § 632. Code Civ. Proc. § 632, as amended, has replaced findings of fact and conclusions of law with a statement of decision explaining the factual and legal basis for the court's decision on each of the principal controverted issues at trial, to be issued by the court when properly requested by any party appearing at trial.

Accordingly, Code Civ. Proc. § 663 now refers to a judgment based on a decision by the court, rather than one based on findings of fact. This judgment may be vacated and a different judgment entered under Code Civ. Proc. § 663(1) when the legal basis for the decision is inconsistent with, or not supported by, the facts, and in such case, the statement of decision must be amended.

It appears that the changes in terminology only minimally affect the import of the statute. Therefore, case law interpreting the old version of Code Civ. Proc. § 663, which referred to "findings of fact" and "conclusions of law," are probably still persuasive, if not controlling, authority in interpreting the amended version of Code Civ. Proc. § 663. Care should be used, however, in relying on case law decided under the prior law.

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of notice of intention to move to set aside and vacate a judgment and to enter another and different judgment, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 371, Motions After Trial (Matthew Bender). For a discussion of the statement of decision generally, see Ch. 529, Statement of Decision in that publication.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Judgment Consistent With Facts

In Dahlberg v. Girsch (1910) 157 Cal. 324, 107 P. 616 , plaintiff brought an action to recover money alleged to be due for services performed and materials furnished in the construction of a building for defendant. Plaintiff was awarded $3,492.81 by the court. Defendant then moved under Code Civ. Proc. § 663 to vacate the judgment and enter a different judgment because of incorrect or erroneous conclusions of law not supported by the findings of fact. The court granted the order and judgment was given for plaintiff in the sum of $939.78. Plaintiff appealed the order and the judgment based on the order.

The Supreme Court reversed the order and the judgment, stating that so far as the original conclusions of law and judgment were against defendant, they were in accord with and compelled by the findings of fact. Even though the lower court found that plaintiff had willfully failed to complete the building's foundation to contract specifications, defendant could not urge that this willful failure barred a recovery on the contract because of the terms of the contract (157 Cal. 324, 332) . Under the terms of the contract, defendant completed the work, then charged the expense of completion to plaintiff. The trial court deducted the reasonable cost of defendant's labor from the contract price, leaving the sum of $3,492 that was originally awarded to plaintiff (157 Cal. 324, 329-330) . The Supreme Court held that this conclusion was not erroneous, and therefore it reversed the order vacating the original judgment (157 Cal. 324, 332-333) .

In Brown v. Jones (1935) 11 Cal. App. 2d 30, 52 P.2d 962 , plaintiffs brought an action to quiet title to certain real property. Defendant cross complained, seeking to have his title quieted. The trial court found in favor of defendant, but ordered defendant to pay plaintiffs the amount of taxes on the property that plaintiffs had previously expended. Plaintiffs attempted to obtain an order based on Code Civ. Proc. § 663 in order to set aside certain conclusions of law and enter another and different judgment. The motion was granted, and defendant appealed.

The court of appeal reversed the order, stating that the judgment and the conclusions of law were consistent with and supported by the findings of fact, and were not incorrect or erroneous. The court noted that plaintiffs, in moving for the order, desired to amend the judgment in order to provide that, unless the amount of taxes were paid within a certain time, plaintiffs would have judgment entered in their favor. However, the court of appeal stated that if the order appealed from had any effect, it would bring about a modification of the judgment, and that result may not be brought about under the circumstances disclosed by the record (11 Cal. App. 2d 30, 31) .

[b] Motion Improper to Challenge Factual Bases for Decision

In Jones v. Clover (1937) 24 Cal. App. 2d 210, 74 P.2d 517 , plaintiff brought an action to recover on certain promissory notes. After trial, the court entered its judgment for plaintiff. Defendant moved for a new trial and to set aside and vacate the judgment and enter another and different judgment. The court set aside and vacated the judgment and entered a new judgment in favor of plaintiff, awarding him a smaller amount of damages. The court made new findings and conclusions of law. Plaintiff then moved for a new trial. When the motion was denied by operation of law, plaintiff appealed the judgment.

The court of appeal reversed the judgment and remanded the case with instruction to the lower court to reenter the original judgment entered by the court. It stated that the lower court was not authorized to alter its findings under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 663 and 663a. Under those sections, the court may only correct erroneous conclusions of law. The court emphasized that the limits set by the sections cannot be transgressed (24 Cal. App. 2d 210, 211) . The statutes do not authorize an attack on the findings (24 Cal. App. 2d 210, 211-212) . The court added that Code Civ. Proc. § 663 authorizes the substitution of the judgment that should have been given as a matter of law on the findings of fact in a case in which the judgment already given is an incorrect conclusion from such findings. In ruling on the motion, the court cannot change any finding of fact. The sole remedy in the trial court of a party who is aggrieved by any finding of fact is a motion for a new trial (24 Cal. App. 2d 210, 211-213) . Hence, the court held that the lower court's order was ineffectual for any purpose, because the court was limited to a substitution of judgment that should have been given as a matter of law on the findings of fact. Accordingly, the court reversed the judgment on which the appeal was taken (24 Cal. App. 2d 210, 212) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 155 MOTIONS AFTER TRIAL
PART II. FORMS
C. Motions to Set Aside and Vacate a Judgment and Enter Another and Different Judgment

15-155 California Points & Authorities § 155.331

§ 155.331 Opposing Motion to Set Aside and Vacate Judgment and Enter Another Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 663, 663a]--Judgment Consistent With Special Verdict

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 155.330].

THE_____ [JUDGMENT or DECREE] SHOULD NOT BE SET ASIDE AND VACATED AND ANOTHER AND DIFFERENT JUDGMENT ENTERED, BECAUSE THE _____ [JUDGMENT or DECREE] IS CONSISTENT WITH AND SUPPORTED BY THE SPECIAL VERDICT, THUS THE SUBSTANTIAL RIGHTS OF _____ [PLAINTIFF or DEFENDANT] ARE NOT MATERIALLY AFFECTED AND HE/SHE/IT IS NOT ENTITLED TO A DIFFERENT JUDGMENT.

Judgment Consistent With Special Verdict. A motion to set aside and vacate a judgment and enter another and different judgment will not be granted if the judgment or decree is consistent with the special verdict of the jury (see Code Civ. Proc. § 663).

[Add further points and authorities, if appropriate, showing how the court's judgment is correctly drawn from the jury's factual conclusions.]
Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for _____ [party's status and name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a motion to set aside and vacate a judgment and enter another and different judgment [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 663, 663a] when there is a special verdict of the jury. A special verdict is one in which the jury finds the facts only, leaving judgment to the court [see Code Civ. Proc. § 624]. The ground of opposition set out is that the court's judgment is consistent with the jury's special verdict [see Code Civ. Proc. § 663(2)]. This form may in an appropriate case be submitted in opposition to a motion supported by the points and authorities set out in § 155.321.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. In particular, counsel should show how the court's legal conclusions are correctly drawn from the jury's factual conclusions.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of notice of intention to move to set aside and vacate a judgment and to enter another and different judgment, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 371, Motions After Trial (Matthew Bender). For a discussion of special verdicts generally, see Ch. 326A, Jury Verdicts in that publication.

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 155 MOTIONS AFTER TRIAL
PART II. FORMS
C. Motions to Set Aside and Vacate a Judgment and Enter Another and Different Judgment

15-155 California Points & Authorities § 155.332

§ 155.332 Opposing Motion to Set Aside and Vacate Judgment and Enter Another Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 663, 663a]--Motion Not Applicable to Interlocutory Judgment

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 155.330.]

THE MOTION TO SET ASIDE AND VACATE THE _____ [JUDGMENT or DECREE] AND ENTER ANOTHER AND DIFFERENT JUDGMENT SHOULD NOT BE GRANTED, BECAUSE THE JUDGMENT INVOLVED IS INTERLOCUTORY.

Motion Improper to Set Aside Interlocutory Judgment. A motion to set aside and vacate a judgment and enter another and different judgment is not applicable to an interlocutory judgment, and if made to vacate an interlocutory judgment, it is properly denied (see Remington v. Davis (1951) 108 Cal. App. 2d 251, 253, 238 P.2d 662).

[Add further points and authorities, as appropriate, supporting contention that judgment is interlocutory.]
Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for _____ [party's status and name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a motion to set aside and vacate a judgment and enter another and different judgment [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 663, 663a]. It is to be used when the judgment rendered is interlocutory and not final. This memorandum may be submitted in opposition to a motion to set aside and vacate a judgment supported by the points and authorities set out in §§ 155.320 and 155.321.

As a general rule, if no issue is left for future consideration except the fact of compliance or noncompliance with the terms of a decree, the decree is final; whereas, if anything further in the nature of a judicial action on the part of the court is essential to the final determination of the rights of the parties, the decree is deemed interlocutory [Woodman v. Ackerman (1967) 249 Cal. App. 2d 644, 650, 57 Cal. Rptr. 687] .

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. Counsel should also add further points and authorities showing that the judgment is interlocutory.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of notice of intention to move to set aside and vacate a judgment and to enter another and different judgment, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 371, Motions After Trial (Matthew Bender). For a discussion of interlocutory judgments and a listing of those types of actions in which a statutory provision for an interlocutory judgment exists, see Ch. 318, Judgments in that publication.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Motion Improper to Set Aside Interlocutory Judgment

In Remington v. Davis (1951) 108 Cal. App. 2d 251, 238 P.2d 662 , plaintiff brought an action to recover certain properties alleged to have been obtained by fraud. After trial, the court made findings of fact and conclusions of law and entered an interlocutory judgment decreeing that certain instruments be canceled and that certain properties be transferred to plaintiff. The judgment further decreed that jurisdiction be retained for the purpose of taking an accounting, ascertaining the credits allowable to defendants, and rendering a final judgment for the amount found due to plaintiff. Defendants moved to vacate and set aside this judgment and to enter another and different judgment that decreed that plaintiff's cause of action was barred by certain statutes of limitation and that quieted title in defendants to certain properties that defendants claimed. The motion was denied, and defendants appealed the order. Plaintiff moved to dismiss the appeal on the grounds that the order was not appealable, and that the appeal was frivolous and taken solely for delay.

The court of appeal, granting plaintiff's motion and dismissing defendants' appeal, stated that Code Civ. Proc. §§ 663 and 663a are not expressly made applicable to interlocutory judgments, and that there is nothing in the language of the statute to indicate that they were so intended. Code Civ. Proc. § 663, the court stated, provides for a motion to set aside a judgment and enter a different judgment based on the facts already found if there are improper conclusions of law that have been drawn from those facts. This situation involves questions of law only and strongly indicates that the judgment that must be changed is one that is final in nature and not one that leaves issues still to be determined. Furthermore, the court concluded that Code Civ. Proc. § 663a refers to a final judgment and was a further indication that the judgment referred to in Code Civ. Proc. § 663 was a final judgment. Therefore, the court held that the interlocutory judgment was not appealable under Code Civ. Proc. § 663a, and accordingly the court granted plaintiff's motion and dismissed defendants' appeal (108 Cal. App. 2d 251, 253) .

146 of 173 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
Chapters 156through 157 RESERVED

15-156 California Points & Authorities Chapters 156through 157

RESERVED

Chapters 156RESERVED

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 158 MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER AND RENEWED MOTIONS

15-158 California Points & Authorities 158.syn

§ 158.syn Synopsis to Chapter 158: MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER AND RENEWED MOTIONS

§ 158.01 Scope of Chapter

§ 158.02 Governing Law

§ 158.03 Page Limitation on Points and Authorities

§ 158.04 Motion to Reconsider

§ 158.05 Renewed Motion

§ 158.05A Motions Regulated by Code Civ. Proc. § 1008

§ 158.06 Sanctions

§ 158.07 Use of Case Law

§ 158.08 Motion to Reconsider and Renewed Motion Distinguished

§ 158.09 Order on Motion to Reconsider

§ 158.10 Mistitled Motion

§ 158.11 Time Limitations

§ 158.11A Appeal

§ 158.12 Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

§§ 158.13-158.29 [Reserved]

§ 158.30 Supporting Motion to Reconsider Prior Order [Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(a)]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Ruling on Motion

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Jurisdiction of Trial Court

[b] Statutory Authority for Motion to Reconsider

[c] Reconsideration of Order Granting Motion to Dismiss Action for Failure to Effect Service Within Two Years

[d] Motion to Reconsider Ruling on Demurrer

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Statutory Authority for Motion to Reconsider

§ 158.31 Supporting Renewed Motion [Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(b)]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Governing Statute

[b] Inapplicability of 10-Day Limitation Period

[c] Sufficiency of New Facts to Support Motion

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Inapplicability of 10-Day Limitation Period

[b] Sufficiency of New Facts to Support Motion

§ 158.32 Opposing Motion to Reconsider--Statutory Requirements [Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(a)] Not Complied With

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Jurisdictional Provisions of Statute

[c] New or Different Facts, Circumstances or Law

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Not Based on New or Different Facts, Circumstances, or Law

[b] Adequate Explanation For Failure to Provide Evidence Earlier Lacking

[c] Adequate Explanation For Failure to Provide Different Law Earlier Lacking

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Not Based on New or Different Facts, Circumstances, or Law

§ 158.33 Opposing Motion to Reconsider--Order Granted Judgment Which Has Been Entered

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Unavailability After Judgment of Motion to Reconsider Order Granting Judgment

§ 158.34 Opposing Renewed Motion--Prior Class Certification Motion Was Denied by Order Which Has Become Final

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Unavailability of Renewed Motion to Certify Class Action After Time to Appeal Has Expired

§ 158.35 Supporting Contention That Court Cannot Avoid Jurisdictional Limits of Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(e) by Ignoring Prior Order

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Code Civ. Proc. § 1008 Applies to Interim Orders and Is Jurisdictional

[b] Prior Order Cannot Be Ignored

§ 158.36 Supporting Ex Parte Motion to Revoke or Set Aside Order Obtained on Renewed Motion--Party Failed to Comply With Statutory Requirements [Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(a), (b), (d)].

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

§ 158.37 Supporting Motion to Dismiss Appeal as Untimely [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 8.104, 8.108, 8.54, 8.705]--Order Denying Motion to Reconsider Appealable Order Based on Same Facts Is Nonappealable

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Caption

[c] "Order" and "Judgment" Distinguished

[d] Time to Appeal and "Judgment" Defined

[e] Appealability of Orders on Motions for Reconsideration

[i] In General

[ii] When Original Order Is Not Appealable

[iii] When Original Order Is Appealable

[f] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Order Made After Judgment Is Appealable

[b] Order Denying Motion to Reconsider Appealable Order on Same Facts Is Nonappealable

§ 158.38 Supporting Motion to Dismiss Appeal as Untimely [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 8.104, 8.54, 8.705]--Appeal From Original Appealable Order After Denial of Motion for Reconsideration Is Untimely When Not Filed Within Extended Times Specified in Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.108

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] When Motion to Reconsider Extends Time to Appeal

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Entry of Judgment in Superior Court

[b] Appeal From Original Order Is Untimely

§ 158.39 Supporting Motion to Dismiss Appeal as Untimely [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 8.104, 8.54, 8.705]--Time to Appeal Is Not Extended Under Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 8.104, 8.108 by Motion to Reconsider Order Granting Judgment Filed After Judgment Has Been Entered

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Motion to Reconsider After Entry of Judgment

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Motion to Reconsider After Entry of Judgment

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 158 MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER AND RENEWED MOTIONS
PART I. INTRODUCTION

15-158 California Points & Authorities § 158.01

§ 158.01 Scope of Chapter

This chapter discusses motions to reconsider and renewed motions and contains forms of memoranda of points and authorities for use in supporting [see § 158.30] and opposing [see §§ 158.32, 158.33] a motion to reconsider, supporting [see § 158.31] and opposing [see § 158.34] a renewed motion, supporting an ex parte motion to revoke an order made on a renewed motion without compliance with statutory requirements [see § 158.36], and supporting a motion to dismiss an appeal as untimely [see §§ 158.37 -158.39]. It also includes a form of contention to oppose any type of motion that does not expressly seek reconsideration but would implicitly result in the reconsideration of a prior motion [see § 158.35].

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePleading & PracticeMotion PracticeOpposing MemorandaCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeMotion PracticeSupporting MemorandaCivil ProcedureJudgmentsRelief From JudgmentMotions for New TrialsCivil ProcedureJudgmentsRelief From JudgmentMotions to Alter & AmendCivil ProcedureAppealsMotions on Appeal

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 158 MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER AND RENEWED MOTIONS
PART I. INTRODUCTION

15-158 California Points & Authorities § 158.02

§ 158.02 Governing Law

Motions to reconsider and renewed motions are governed by Code Civ. Proc. § 1008, case law, and local court rules.

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 158 MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER AND RENEWED MOTIONS
PART I. INTRODUCTION

15-158 California Points & Authorities § 158.03

§ 158.03 Page Limitation on Points and Authorities

Generally, a memorandum of points and authorities must not exceed 15 pages in length, or, in the case of a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication, 20 pages in length. A reply or closing memorandum may not exceed 10 pages in length [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1113(d)]. Any party desiring to file a longer memorandum must obtain leave of court [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1113(d)]. For further discussion of this and other basic requirements governing memoranda of points and authorities imposed under Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1113 and local court rules, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs, § 1.05.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePleading & PracticeMotion PracticeOpposing MemorandaCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeMotion PracticeSupporting MemorandaCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticePleadingsAmended PleadingsLeave of CourtCivil ProcedureSummary JudgmentSupporting MaterialsMemoranda of LawGovernmentsCourtsRule Application & Interpretation

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 158 MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER AND RENEWED MOTIONS
PART I. INTRODUCTION

15-158 California Points & Authorities § 158.04

§ 158.04 Motion to Reconsider

Any party affected by an order made on application and refused in whole or in part, or granted, or granted conditionally, or on terms, may, within 10 days after service on the party of written notice of entry of the order and based on new or different facts, circumstances, or law, apply to the same judge who made the order to reconsider the matter and modify, amend, or revoke the prior order [Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(a); see § 158.30]. Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(a) on its face authorizes a motion to reconsider [see, e.g., Stephen v. Enterprise Rent-A-Car (1991) 235 Cal. App. 3d 806, 816, 1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 130 ; Graham v. Hansen (1982) 128 Cal. App. 3d 965, 970, 180 Cal. Rptr. 604] . Code Civ. Proc. § 1008 applies to all applications for interim orders [Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(g)].

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProceduresPleading & PracticeMotion PracticeOpposing MemorandaCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeMotion PracticeSupporting MemorandaCivil ProceduresJudgmentsRelief From JudgmentMotions for New TrialsCivil ProceduresJudgmentsRelief From JudgmentMotions to Alter & Amend

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 158 MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER AND RENEWED MOTIONS
PART I. INTRODUCTION

15-158 California Points & Authorities § 158.05

§ 158.05 Renewed Motion

Renewed motions are governed by Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(b) [Stephen v. Enterprise Rent-A-Car (1991) 235 Cal. App. 3d 806, 816, 1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 130 ; Graham v. Hansen (1982) 128 Cal. App. 3d 965, 971, 180 Cal. Rptr. 604] . That statute provides that when the party who originally made an application for an order which was refused in whole or in part, or granted conditionally, or on terms, makes a subsequent application for the same order on new or different facts, circumstances, or law, it shall be shown by affidavit (or declaration under Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5) what application was made before, when and to what judge, what order or decisions were made on it, and what new or different facts, circumstances, or law are claimed to be shown [see § 158.31]. For a failure to comply with this requirement, any order made on such subsequent application may be revoked or set aside on ex parte motion [Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(b); see § 158.36]. This provision is substantially the same as former Code Civ. Proc. § 1008 [see discussion under § 158.07].

Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(b) does not on its face authorize the filing of a renewed motion; rather, it assumes that such motions supported by new facts are proper and merely imposes requirements on what must be shown and a penalty for failure to comply [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(b), (d)].

Code Civ. Proc. § 1008 applies to all applications for interim orders [Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(g)].

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 158 MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER AND RENEWED MOTIONS
PART I. INTRODUCTION

15-158 California Points & Authorities § 158.05A

§ 158.05A Motions Regulated by Code Civ. Proc. § 1008

In Standard Microsystems Corp v. Winbond Electronics Corp., the court opined that there is some question as to what characteristics bring a motion within one of the two classes regulated by Code Civ. Proc. § 1008, and stated that a number of decisions have implicitly refused to apply § 1008's own language, inferring a legislative desire that § 1008 be applied broadly to bar motions that may not fall within its terms [Standard Microsystems Corp. v. Winbond Electronics Corp. (2009) 179 Cal. App. 4th 868, 886, 102 Cal. Rptr. 3d 140 (approach appears to rest on Legislature's declaration that Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(e) restricts court's "jurisdiction" over motions governed by it); see Morite of California v. Superior Court (Grayson) (1993) 19 Cal. App. 4th 485, 23 Cal. Rptr. 2d 666 (reading § 1008 to prevent judge, to whom case had been assigned for eventual trial, from setting trial date in face of order by another judge staying action pending determination of related suit, making no attempt to apply statutory language to situation before it, and acknowledging that if "reconsideration" had been sought at all, it was only "by implication")]. Some courts have also referred to an uncodified declaration of intent, adopted with the 1992 amendments to § 1008, expressing the Legislature's wish to reduce the number of motions to reconsider and renewals of previous motions heard by judges in California [Standard Microsystems Corp. v. Winbond Electronics Corp. (2009) 179 Cal. App. 4th 868, 886, 102 Cal. Rptr. 3d 140] .

Section 1008 describes motions for reconsideration as "applications for reconsideration" of a court's orders [Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(e)]. A motion for reconsideration is thus one that explicitly directs the court's attention to a previous order and seeks to "modify, amend, or revoke" that order [Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(a); Standard Microsystems Corp. v. Winbond Electronics Corp. (2009) 179 Cal. App. 4th 868, 886-890, 102 Cal. Rptr. 3d 140 (case law used phrase "motion for reconsideration" when § 1008 was first amended in 1978 to describe motion explicitly asking court to "reconsider" order previously made, and to make different order in its place--in effect, to reverse itself)]. Consistent with this understanding, merely asking the court to grant relief that is inconsistent with a prior order, whether by the same or a different judge, is not a "motion for reconsideration." It may be barred by other, court-made rules of law, but it is not barred by Code Civ. Proc. § 1008 [Standard Microsystems Corp. v. Winbond Electronics Corp. (2009) 179 Cal. App. 4th 868, 886-891, 102 Cal. Rptr. 3d 140 (extent defendants' motion relied upon mandatory provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 473(b), it did not ask court to reconsider its previous order, and order was entirely correct when made; motion rested on entirely different legal theory, invoked different statutory ground, and relied in very substantial part on markedly different facts and was not described in or regulated by Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(a))].

Section 1008(b) governs a second application for "the same order" the court has already declined to make [Standard Microsystems Corp. v. Winbond Electronics Corp. (2009) 179 Cal. App. 4th 868, 891, 102 Cal. Rptr. 3d 140] . An "order" is a "direction of a court or judge, made or entered in writing, and not included in a judgment" [Code Civ. Proc. § 1003]. It would appear that two motions seek the "same order" when they ask the court to issue the same "direction," however, insofar as two motion rest on entirely distinct factual and legal predicates, there is a latent ambiguity in the phrase "same order" as used to define sweep of § 1008(b) [Standard Microsystems Corp. v. Winbond Electronics Corp. (2009) 179 Cal. App. 4th 868, 891, 102 Cal. Rptr. 3d 140] . For example, a defendant moves to dismiss on the ground that the plaintiff failed to serve and return summons within three years [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 583.250(a)(2), 583.210(a)], and the trial court denies the motion, but the plaintiff sits on his hands for another three years. Section 1008 will not bar a second motion to dismiss asserting the plaintiff's failure to bring the matter to trial within five years [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 583.360(a), 583.310; Standard Microsystems Corp. v. Winbond Electronics Corp. (2009) 179 Cal. App. 4th 868, 891-892, 102 Cal. Rptr. 3d 140] , even though the second motion seeks "the same order" as the first, a directive that the complaint be dismissed, falling within its scope of renewed motions based on "new or different facts, circumstances, or law." In Standard Microsystems Corp. v. Winbond Electronics Corp., the court that opined that this problem illustrates one of the central defects in section 1008 as presently drawn: It attempts to prescribe a simple categorical rule to govern a subject whose nuance and complexity make it eminently better suited to the evolutionary, incremental processes of common law adjudication, or at least to the close and sustained attention of experts. The court then assumed without deciding that defendants' second motion, which was a motion for relief from a default judgment on the ground of defective service, sought the "same order" in part as the first, which was a motion for mandatory relief from default based on attorney fault, and determined the effect the overlap should have. The court emphatically rejected the proposition that a motion seeking a previously denied order in addition to newly requested relief was thereby entirely barred. Assuming the second motion was a renewal of the first motion insofar as it sought relief from the underlying default, the court concluded that it was not barred by that fact, in whole or part, because the relief thus sought was ancillary to, and would be necessary to carry into effect, the order vacating the judgment, which was subject to no such constraint [Standard Microsystems Corp. v. Winbond Electronics Corp. (2009) 179 Cal. App. 4th 868, 891-893, 102 Cal. Rptr. 3d 140] . Further, because defendants had made the required prima facie showing for mandatory relief under Code Civ. Proc. § 473(b) by submitting the affidavit of their original attorney detailing the erroneous opinions, advice, and fundamental procedural misconceptions and missteps of their previous attorney that produced the original default, as well as the ensuing judgment, insofar as a conflict actually existed between Code Civ. Proc. §§ 473(b) and 1008, it had to be resolved in favor of allowing relief under § 473(b), not denying it under § 1008 [Standard Microsystems Corp. v. Winbond Electronics Corp. (2009) 179 Cal. App. 4th 868, 893-896, 102 Cal. Rptr. 3d 140] .

In D.R.S. Trading Co., Inc. v. Barnes, as in Standard Microsystems Corp. v. Winbond Electronics Corp., the court set out as its task to harmonize Code of Civil Procedure Sections 1008 and 473(b) [D.R.S. Trading Co., Inc. v. Barnes (2009) 180 Cal. App. 4th 815, 817, 103 Cal. Rptr. 3d 329] . In D.R.S. Trading Co., the trial court vacated a default and judgment entered against defendants, despite plaintiff's contention that the trial court had no jurisdiction to reconsider its order denying defendants relief from default because Code Civ. Proc. § 1008 authorizes reconsideration only before final judgment was entered and while the case was still pending in the trial court. The Court of Appeal found that the trial court had the power to reconsider an order it was specifically authorized to make, in the first instance, after entry of the judgment under Code Civ. Proc. § 473(b), and that the existence of a judgment did not preclude the court from reconsideration of a motion it was explicitly empowered to consider after judgment. Code of Civil Procedure Section 473(b) specifically authorized the court to grant defendants relief from the judgment taken against them if it was the result of mistake, inadvertence, surprise or excusable neglect for up to six months after entry of that judgment. The existence of the judgment itself was no bar to relief; it was, in fact, a prerequisite. Nothing in the language of Code Civ. Proc. § 1008 limited the court's reconsideration authority to pretrial, i.e., "interim," orders. To the contrary, § 1008(e) specifies that it "applies to all applications to reconsider any order of a judge or court, or for the renewal of a previous motion, whether the order deciding the previous matter or motion is interim or final" [D.R.S. Trading Co., Inc. v. Barnes (2009) 180 Cal. App. 4th 815, 819-820, 103 Cal. Rptr. 3d 329] . The court found that § 1008 allows the trial court to reconsider interim orders that might later be incorporated into the judgment and orders made after the judgment, as long it does so in accordance with the requirements of the statute [D.R.S. Trading Co., Inc. v. Barnes (2009) 180 Cal. App. 4th 815, 821, 103 Cal. Rptr. 3d 329] .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 158 MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER AND RENEWED MOTIONS
PART I. INTRODUCTION

15-158 California Points & Authorities § 158.06

§ 158.06 Sanctions

A violation of Code Civ. Proc. § 1008 may be punished as a contempt, and an order made contrary to it may be revoked by the judge or commissioner who made it, or vacated by a judge of the court in which the action or proceeding is pending [Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(d); see Lucas v. Santa Maria Public Airport Dist. (1995) 39 Cal. App. 4th 1017, 1028, 46 Cal. Rptr. 2d 177 (order imposing sanctions reversed for insufficient findings even though motion for reconsideration improperly relied on matters that could have been previously presented)].

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureJudgmentsRelief From JudgmentMotions to Alter & AmendCivil ProcedureSanctionsBaseless FilingsFrivolous LawsuitsCivil ProcedureSanctionsContemptCivil ContemptCivil ProcedureSanctionsContemptCriminal Contempt

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 158 MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER AND RENEWED MOTIONS
PART I. INTRODUCTION

15-158 California Points & Authorities § 158.07

§ 158.07 Use of Case Law

Case law must be used with caution because there have been significant changes in Code Civ. Proc. § 1008 over the years. The present version of the statute was enacted in 1978 and amended by Stats. 1992, ch. 460, operative January 1, 1993, and by Stats 1998, ch. 200, § 2, operative January 1, 1999. It relates to two distinct remedies, a motion to reconsider, which was formerly governed by case law, and a renewed motion [Stephen v. Enterprise Rent-A-Car (1991) 235 Cal. App. 3d 806, 816, 1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 130 ; Rains v. Superior Court (1984) 150 Cal. App. 3d 933, 943-944, 198 Cal. Rptr. 249 (construing the 1978 version of the statute)]. The 1978 version of Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(a) (discussed under § 158.04) broadened the case law by permitting any party affected by the proceeding to file a motion for reconsideration; under former case law, the motion normally could be made only by the original moving party [see Stephen v. Enterprise Rent-A-Car (1991) 235 Cal. App. 3d 806, 816, 1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 130 ; George Ball Pacific, Inc. v. Coldwell Banker & Co. (1981) 117 Cal. App. 3d 248, 253, 172 Cal. Rptr. 597] . In former Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(b) (discussed under § 158.05), the Legislature left the prior law virtually unchanged with respect to subsequent applications by the moving party for the same order.

In 1992, the Legislature further amended Code Civ. Proc. § 1008, and, among other things, explicitly limited jurisdiction to reconsider orders, whether interim or final, to the provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 1008 [Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(e) (implicitly overturning holdings of contrary cases; see, e.g., Ziller Electronics Lab GMBH v. Superior Court (1988) 206 Cal. App. 3d 1222, 1231, 254 Cal. Rptr. 410 (motion to reconsider may not be subject to 10-day limit of Section 1008(a) if made under court's inherent jurisdiction))]. The current statute also explicitly limits jurisdiction with regard to renewals of previous motions, whether the order deciding the previous motion is interim or final, to the provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 1008 [Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(e)].

The current statute also permits the court to reconsider on its own motion a prior order it entered and enter a different order any time it determines that there has been a change of law, not including a later enacted statute without retroactive application, that warrants reconsideration of the prior order [Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(c); see Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(f)].

In 1998, subsection (g) was added to the current statute. It provides that Code Civ. Proc. § 1008 applies to all applications for interim orders [Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(g)].

In 2005, the California Supreme Court held that Code Civ. Proc. § 1008 prohibits a party from making a renewed motion not based on new facts or law, but § 1008 does not limit a court's ability to reconsider its prior orders on its own motion [Le Francois v. Goel (2005) 35 Cal. 4th 1094, 1096-1097, 29 Cal. Rptr. 3d 249 , discussed in § 158.32[3][a]]. The court reviewed the case to resolve a split of authority in the courts of appeal as to when a trial court has inherent power to reconsider prior interim orders. The court concluded that the Legislature intended to preclude parties from bringing repetitive motions not based on new facts or law, and that this was a permissible exercise of the Legislature's authority. However, the court held that there was no indication the Legislature intended to hinder the courts' ability to act. Rather, it merely wished to protect the courts from the parties' repetitive motions. Therefore, the court ruled that Code Civ. Proc. § 1008 does not preclude the court from reconsidering its own prior interim orders on its own motion [Le Francois v. Goel (2005) 35 Cal. 4th 1094, 1106, 29 Cal. Rptr. 3d 249] .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProceduresPleading & PracticeMotion PracticeOpposing MemorandaCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeMotion PracticeSupporting MemorandaCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeMotion PracticeTime LimitationsCivil ProceduresJudgmentsRelief From JudgmentMotions to Alter & AmendCivil ProceduresJudgmentsRelief From JudgmentMotions to Vacate

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 158 MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER AND RENEWED MOTIONS
PART I. INTRODUCTION

15-158 California Points & Authorities § 158.08

§ 158.08 Motion to Reconsider and Renewed Motion Distinguished

Code of Civil Procedure Section 1008 creates two distinct subclasses of repetitive motions: Applications (motions) for reconsideration, and renewals of previous motions [Standard Microsystems Corp. v. Winbond Electronics Corp. (2009) 179 Cal. App. 4th 868, 885, 102 Cal. Rptr. 3d 140] . Motions for reconsideration are regulated by Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(a), which requires the following:

- The motion be filed "within 10 days after service upon the party of written notice of entry of the order" of which reconsideration is sought.

- The motion be supported by new or additional facts, circumstances or law.

- The motion be accompanied by an affidavit detailing the circumstances of the first motion and the respects in which the new motion differs from it.

Renewed motions are governed by Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(b), which echoes the latter two requirements, but does not impose a time limit [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(b); Standard Microsystems Corp. v. Winbond Electronics Corp. (2009) 179 Cal. App. 4th 868, 885, 102 Cal. Rptr. 3d 140 ; Graham v. Hansen (1982) 128 Cal. App. 3d 965, 970-971, 180 Cal. Rptr. 604] .

A "motion to reconsider" seeks to reopen consideration of a previous motion that the court either granted in whole, in part, or on conditions, or denied. It may be brought by any party; it is not limited to the original moving party [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(a)].

A "renewed motion" may be brought only by the party who made the prior motion which was denied in whole or in part, or granted conditionally or on terms. It is normally based on new or different facts, circumstances, or law, but seeks the same relief sought by the prior motion [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(b)].

Notwithstanding the distinction between the two kinds of motion, the term "motion to reconsider" is often applied mistakenly to both kind of motions [see, e.g., Stewart v. Superior Court (1985) 163 Cal. App. 3d 915, 916, 209 Cal.

Rptr. 870 (court describing motion under Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(b), which governs renewed motions, as motion for reconsideration); Graham v. Hansen (1982) 128 Cal. App. 3d 965, 969-970, 180 Cal. Rptr. 604 (renewed motion entitled motion for reconsideration)].

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePleading & PracticeMotion PracticeOpposing MemorandaCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeMotion PracticeSupporting MemorandaCivil ProcedureJudgmentsRelief From JudgmentMotions to Alter & AmendCivil ProcedureJudgmentsRelief From JudgmentMotions to Vacate

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 158 MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER AND RENEWED MOTIONS
PART I. INTRODUCTION

15-158 California Points & Authorities § 158.09

§ 158.09 Order on Motion to Reconsider

Care should be taken to distinguish a court's decision for or against reconsideration from its decision after reconsideration. If a litigant seeks reconsideration of an order denying a motion, such as a motion to intervene, the trial court may sometimes enter an order "denying reconsideration" when it is plain from the record that the first motion was denied without prejudice and the second ruling was intended to be a ruling on the merits of the motion for intervention rather than simply a denial of reconsideration [Blue Mountain Development Co. v. Carville (1982) 132 Cal. App. 3d 1005, 1011, 183 Cal. Rptr. 594 (prior law; disapproved on another point in Passavanti v. Williams (1990) 225 Cal. App. 3d 1602, 1607-1608 n.5, 275 Cal. Rptr. 887 , discussed in §§ 158.33[3][a], 158.39[3][a])].

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProceduresPleading & PracticeMotion PracticeOpposing MemorandaCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeMotion PracticeSupporting MemorandaCivil ProceduresPartiesInterventionMotions to IntervenеCivil ProceduresJudgmentsRelief From JudgmentMotions for New TrialsCivil ProceduresJudgmentsRelief From JudgmentMotions to Alter & Amend

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 158 MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER AND RENEWED MOTIONS
PART I. INTRODUCTION

15-158 California Points & Authorities § 158.10

§ 158.10 Mistitled Motion

An otherwise sufficient motion improperly entitled as one for reconsideration made after judgment which is actually a motion for some other authorized form of judicial relief may be treated by the trial court for what it actually is [see, e.g., City of Los Angeles v. Gleneagle Dev. Co. (1976) 62 Cal. App. 3d 543, 553-554, 133 Cal. Rptr. 212 (decided prior to the enactment of the 1978 version of Code Civ. Proc. § 1008)]. Thus, in City of Los Angeles, a motion, filed pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 473, to reconsider an order dismissing the action for want of prosecution (which order, when signed by the court and filed, constitutes the judgment [see Code Civ. Proc. § 581d]) was treated as a motion for relief under Code Civ. Proc. § 473(b), based on mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect [City of Los Angeles v. Gleneagle Dev. Co. (1976) 62 Cal. App. 3d 543, 552-554, 133 Cal. Rptr. 212] . In addition, an appellate court in unusual circumstances may apparently do likewise [see Passavanti v. Williams (1990) 225 Cal. App. 3d 1602, 1608, 275 Cal. Rptr. 887 (prior law; treating motion for reconsideration as motion for new trial in accordance with prior decisions that it was overruling, but adding that, generally, appellate courts should not construe a motion expressly identified as being a particular motion to be an entirely different motion when it was not so treated in the trial court)].

However, a party may not circumvent the jurisdictional prerequisites to a motion for reconsideration under Code Civ. Proc. § 1008, by mistitling the motion as a motion for relief under Code Civ. Proc. § 473 [see Gilberd v. AC Transit (1995) 32 Cal. App. 4th 1494, 1501, 38 Cal. Rptr. 2d 626] .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProceduresPleading & PracticeMotion PracticeOpposing MemorandaCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeMotion PracticeSupporting MemorandaCivil ProceduresJudgmentsRelief From JudgmentExcusable Neglect & MistakesGeneral OverviewCivil ProceduresJudgmentsRelief From JudgmentMotions to Alter & Amend

159 of 173 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 158 MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER AND RENEWED MOTIONS
PART I. INTRODUCTION

15-158 California Points & Authorities § 158.11

§ 158.11 Time Limitations

Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(a) imposes a limit of 10 days after service on the party of written notice of entry of the order in which to file a motion to reconsider; it does not, however, set a time limit for ruling on the motion. Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(b) sets no time limit on either the making of a renewed motion or for ruling on it.

Nevertheless, time limits may be imposed because of the nature of the order sought on the motion to reconsider or renewed motion. For example, the Court of Appeal of the First Appellate District, Division Two, citing cases, has pointed out that a timely motion to reconsider an appealable order granting a new trial, in order to be consistent with the jurisdictional 60-day limit for acting on new trial motions [see Code Civ. Proc. § 660], must be ruled on within that 60 days or is deemed denied by operation of law, and that, by parallel reasoning, an order denying a timely motion to reconsider an appealable dismissal order must be entered within the jurisdictional 60 days following entry of judgment or it will not extend the time under Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.108, in which to file a notice of appeal from the dismissal order [Stephen v. Enterprise Rent-A-Car (1991) 235 Cal. App. 3d 806, 818, 1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 130 (discussed in § 158.34[3])]. (To the extent Stephen suggests that a motion to reconsider a properly entered written order of dismissal, which constitutes the judgment [see Code Civ. Proc. § 581d], is permissible, it is inconsistent with the holding in Passavanti v. Williams (1990) 225 Cal. App. 3d 1602, 275 Cal. Rptr. 887 , that a court cannot reconsider an order granting a judgment after the judgment has been entered and that judicial error may be corrected only through certain limited procedures such as motions for new trial and motions to vacate the judgment [Passavanti v. Williams (1990) 225 Cal. App. 3d 1602, 1606, 275 Cal. Rptr. 887 (prior law); see Ramon v. Aerospace Corp. (1996) 50 Cal. App. 4th 1233, 1236-1238, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 217 (following Passavanti, both cases discussed in §§ 158.33[3][a], 158.39[3][a])]).

The Stephen court further pointed out that if jurisdictional considerations compel implying time limits on motions under Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(a), they must in some cases also limit Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(b). Thus, for example, an open ended time for "renewed" motions is incompatible with California law deeming death-knell class certification denials final and binding when not timely appealed. The onus is thus on a plaintiff to bring such a motion within whatever time limit [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.104] applies for fixing the finality of the order [Stephen v. Enterprise Rent-A-Car (1991) 235 Cal. App. 3d 806, 818, 1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 130 (discussed in § 158.34[3])].

Once a trial court has entered judgment, the court lacks jurisdiction to grant a motion for reconsideration even if the motion was brought before the judgment was entered and is still pending at the time of entry of judgment [APRI Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1999) 76 Cal. App. 4th 176, 180-182, 90 Cal. Rptr. 2d 171] .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePleading & PracticeMotion PracticeOpposing MemorandaCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeMotion PracticeSupporting MemorandaCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeMotion PracticeTime LimitationsCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticePleadingsTime LimitationsExtensionsCivil ProcedureJudgmentsRelief From JudgmentMotions to Alter & Amend

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 158 MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER AND RENEWED MOTIONS
PART I. INTRODUCTION

15-158 California Points & Authorities § 158.11A

§ 158.11A Appeal

An order denying a motion for reconsideration pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(a) is not appealable [Annette F. v. Sharon S. (2005) 130 Cal. App. 4th 1448, 1459, 30 Cal.Rptr.3d 914 ; Rojes v. Riverside General Hospital (1988) 203 Cal. App. 3d 1151, 1161, 250 Cal. Rptr. 435 , overruled on another ground in Passavanti v. Williams (1990) 225 Cal. App.3d 1602, 1607, 275 Cal. Rptr. 887 ; but see Blue Mountain Development Co. v. Carville (1982) 132 Cal. App. 3d 1005, 1010-1011, 183 Cal. Rptr. 594 (order denying motion for reconsideration appealable when order on original motion appealable and motion for reconsideration based on facts new or different from those contained in original motion); Santee v. Santa Clara County Office of Education (1990) 220 Cal. App. 3d 702, 710, 269 Cal. Rptr. 605 (order denying motion for reconsideration which raises new facts is appealable)].

An order denying a renewed motion pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(b) is not appealable [Tate v. Wilburn (2010) 184 Cal. App. 4th 150, 159-161, 109 Cal. Rptr. 3d 18] .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 158 MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER AND RENEWED MOTIONS
PART I. INTRODUCTION

15-158 California Points & Authorities § 158.12

§ 158.12 Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For discussion and forms of ex parte motions, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 372, Motions and Orders (Matthew Bender).

For discussion and forms of notices of motion to reconsider and notices of renewed motions, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 374, Motions to Reconsider and Renewed Motions (Matthew Bender).

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePleading & PracticeMotion PracticeOpposing MemorandaCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeMotion PracticeSupporting MemorandaCivil ProcedureJudgmentsRelief From JudgmentMotions to Alter & Amend

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 158 MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER AND RENEWED MOTIONS
PART I. INTRODUCTION

15-158 California Points & Authorities §§ 158.13-158.29

[Reserved]

§§ 158.13[Reserved]

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 158 MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER AND RENEWED MOTIONS
PART II. FORMS

15-158 California Points & Authorities § 158.30

§ 158.30 Supporting Motion to Reconsider Prior Order [Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(a)]

[1] FORM

SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA,
COUNTY OF _____

_____ [name],	)	NO. _____
Plaintiff,	)	MEMORANDUM OF POINTS AND AUTHORITIES IN SUPPORT OF MOTION FOR RECONSIDERATION OF ORDER _____ [e.g., DENYING] MOTION
vs.	)	_____ [FOR or TO]
_____ [name],	)	_____ [specify]
Defendant.	)	Date: _____
	)	Time: _____
	)	Location: _____
	)	[Judge:_____]
	)	Date Action Filed: _____
	)	Discovery Cut-Off: _____
	)	Motion Cut-Off: _____
	)	[Trial Date: _____]

_____

THE MOTION BY _____ [specify party, e.g., PLAINTIFF] FOR RECONSIDERATION OF THE ORDER MADE HEREIN ON _____ [date] BY THE HONORABLE _____ [name of judge] _____ [DENYING IN _____ (WHOLE or PART) or GRANTING or GRANTING _____ (CONDITIONALLY or ON TERMS)] THE MOTION OF _____ [specify party, e.g., DEFENDANT] FOR _____ [specify relief sought by prior motion] SHOULD BE GRANTED AND, ON RECONSIDERATION, THE ORDER SHOULD BE _____ [specify, e.g., AMENDED TO PROVIDE THAT _____ (specify)] FOR THE REASON(S) THAT _____ [specify].

A. Jurisdiction of Trial Court. A decision on a motion is not res judicata, and a trial court has jurisdiction to reconsider a prior ruling or to entertain a renewal of a previous motion (Curtin v. Koskey (1991) 231 Cal. App. 3d 873, 876, 282 Cal. Rptr. 706).

B. Statutory Authority for Motion to Reconsider. Any party affected by an order made on application and refused in whole or in part, or granted, or granted conditionally, or on terms, may, within 10 days after service upon the party of written notice of entry of the order and based on new or different facts, circumstances, or law, make application to the same judge who made the order to reconsider the matter and modify, amend, or revoke the prior order (Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(a); see also Graham v. Hansen (1982) 128 Cal. App. 3d 965, 970, 180 Cal. Rptr. 604 .

C. Statute Applies to All Applications For Interim Orders. Code Civ. Proc. § 1008 applies to all applications for interim orders (Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(g)).

[Optional] D. Reconsideration of Order Granting Motion to Dismiss Action for Failure to Effect Service Within Two Years. An order granting a motion for discretionary dismissal of an action for failure to serve process within two years after the action was commenced is subject to reconsideration on motion (Ladd v. Dart Equipment Corp. (1991) 230 Cal. App. 3d 1088, 1092, 1104-1107, 281 Cal. Rptr. 813).

[Optional] E. Motion to Reconsider Ruling on Demurrer. A demurrer is "an application for an order" within the meaning of Code of Civil Procedure Section 1008(a) and will support an application to reconsider an order sustaining a demurrer without leave to amend (Rains v. Superior Court (1984) 150 Cal. App. 3d 933, 943, 198 Cal. Rptr. 249 ; see also Careau & Co. v. Security Business Credit, Inc. (1990) 222 Cal. App. 3d 1371, 1386, 272 Cal. Rptr. 387).
Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,
_____ [firm name, if any]
By: _____ [signature]
_____ [typed name]
Attorney for _____ [party's status and name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion to reconsider a prior order denying in whole or in part, or granting, or granting conditionally, or on terms, a motion [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(a)] or an order sustaining or overruling a demurrer. Optional Paragraph D should be included when the motion to be reconsidered is one dismissing the action under Code Civ. Proc. § 583.420(a)(1). Paragraph E is for inclusion when the motion seeks reconsideration of the court's ruling on a demurrer. Any of the points and authorities set out in the optional paragraphs may, instead of being presented in the supporting memorandum of points and authorities, be included in a memorandum of points and authorities in reply to the opposing party's memorandum of points and authorities raising the issues [see § 158.32].

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Ruling on Motion

An order denying a motion for reconsideration is interpreted as a determination that the application for reconsideration does not meet the requirements of Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(a). If the requirements have been met to the satisfaction of the court but the court is not persuaded the earlier ruling was erroneous, the proper course is to grant reconsideration and to reaffirm the earlier ruling [Corns v. Miller (1986) 181 Cal. App. 3d 195, 226 Cal. Rptr. 247] .

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in §§ 158.32, 158.33 may be used to oppose this memorandum of points and authorities.

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion and a form of notice of motion for reconsideration, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 372, Motions and Orders (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Jurisdiction of Trial Court

Curtin v. Koskey (1991) 231 Cal. App. 3d 873, 282 Cal. Rptr. 706 , was an action for damages for breach of contract and fraud by the purchasers of a used mobilehome against the sellers and the sellers' real estate agent. The mandatory dismissal statute for failure to bring the action to trial within five years [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 583.310, 583.360] was about to expire. Plaintiffs' original attorney had withdrawn from the case, and plaintiffs had experienced difficulty in finding another attorney. The new attorney promptly moved the trial court for a preferential trial date, which was granted. The same day defendants filed a motion to dismiss for failure to bring the action to trial within three years [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 583.410, 583.420(a)(2)(A)], now two years [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 583.410, 583.410(a)(2)(B)]. Six weeks later another judge heard and granted the motion to dismiss and vacated the trial date. Plaintiff appealed from the subsequent judgment of dismissal.

The court of appeal reversed. The court indicated that the issue presented was whether the second judge was empowered to issue a ruling contrary to the first judge. Determining this issue required reconciliation of two established rules: (1) a decision on a motion is not res judicata, and the trial court has jurisdiction to reconsider a prior ruling or to entertain a renewal of a previous motion; and (2) one trial court judge may not reconsider and overrule a ruling of another judge (231 Cal. App. 3d 873, 876-877) . The court explained that the conflicting principles were reconciled in Ziller Electronics Lab GMBH v. Superior Court (1988) 206 Cal. App. 3d 1222, 1232, 254 Cal. Rptr. 410 , which concluded that on a renewed motion or motion for reconsideration, the second judge must direct the moving party to the first judge and that only if the first judge is unavailable may the second judge hear the reconsideration motion (231 Cal. App. 3d 873, 877) . The court said that the considerations in a motion for preferential trial setting are the same as the considerations in a motion to dismiss, both of which are addressed to the discretion of the trial court and governed by the factors set forth in Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 373(e) [now see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1342] (231 Cal. App. 3d 873, 877) . Unable to discern in the record on appeal the basis for the first judge's ruling, that is whether the issue of plaintiff's diligence in prosecuting their action was left to be decided later in a motion to dismiss, the court of appeal reversed the dismissal with directions to the trial court to refer the subsequent motion to dismiss to the first judge who had granted the preferential trial setting (231 Cal. App. 3d 873, 877-878) .

[b] Statutory Authority for Motion to Reconsider

The procedural background of Graham v. Hansen (1982) 128 Cal. App. 3d 965, 180 Cal. Rptr. 604 (construing the 1978 version of the statute), is discussed in § 158.31[3][a]. In affirming the summary judgment, the appellate court said that then newly enacted Code Civ. Proc. § 1008 contains provisions relating both to motions for reconsideration and for subsequent applications for the same order, and that former Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(a) now permits any affected party to seek reconsideration of a court's order, regardless of how the court ruled on the motion, provided the motion is based on an alleged "different" set of facts and is made within 10 days of knowledge of the court's order (128 Cal. App. 3d 965, 970) .

[c] Reconsideration of Order Granting Motion to Dismiss Action for Failure to Effect Service Within Two Years

Ladd v. Dart Equipment Corp. (1991) 230 Cal. App. 3d 1088, 281 Cal. Rptr. 813 , was an action filed on November 21, 1986, by an injured employee against his employer and two of the employer's closely related but legally separate business entities for damages for injuries resulting from a work-related accident. Two of the defendants were not served with the summons and complaint until April 13, 1989, nearly 29 months after the action was filed. The third defendant was not served until June 14, 1989, nearly 31 months after the filing. On July 7, 1989, plaintiff voluntarily dismissed the complaint as to his employer. The remaining defendants moved to dismiss the action for failure to serve the summons and complaint within two years after the action was commenced [see Code Civ. Proc. § 583.420(a)(1)]. The motion was granted on October 10, 1989. Plaintiff's subsequent motion for reconsideration, filed on October 20, 1989, was also granted. On reconsideration, the trial court again ordered the action dismissed, feeling it was bound by a prior court of appeal decision to do so. Plaintiff appealed. The court of appeal concluded that the trial court acted within its discretion in granting the original dismissal motion and in granting the reconsideration request, and affirmed those orders (230 Cal. App. 3d 1088, 1091-1092, 1095) . However, the appellate court reversed the second dismissal order on the ground the trial court failed to exercise its discretion in ruling on the dismissal motion after granting reconsideration (230 Cal. App. 3d 1088, 1092, 1104-1107) .

Note that the appellate court's decision does not clearly show whether a judgment of dismissal had been entered on the motion to dismiss when the motion to reconsider was filed; that is, whether the court's order granting the motion to dismiss was in writing (as opposed to a minute order), signed, and filed before the motion to reconsider was filed. Code Civ. Proc. § 581d provides that all dismissals ordered by the court shall be in the form of a written order signed by the court and filed in the action, and such orders when so filed shall constitute judgments and be effective for all purposes, and the clerk shall note those judgments in the register of actions in the case. If the trial court in Ladd followed this procedure, then it would appear that the judgment of dismissal had been entered before the motion to reconsider was filed. If this is so, then the appellate court's holding that the motion to reconsider was properly granted would appear to be contrary to the holding of the Fourth Appellate District, Division Two, in Passavanti v. Williams (1990) 225 Cal. App. 3d 1602, 275 Cal. Rptr. 887 , which was not discussed in Ladd. The Ladd court did cite for another point Blue Mountain Development Co. v. Carville (1982) 132 Cal. App. 3d 1005, 1013, 183 Cal. Rptr. 594 (230 Cal. App. 3d 1088, 1102) , which also was decided by the the Fourth Appellate District, Division Two, and which was disapproved in part in Passavanti (Passavanti is discussed in §§ 158.33[3][a], 158.37[2], 158.39[3][a]).

[d] Motion to Reconsider Ruling on Demurrer

Rains v. Superior Court (1984) 150 Cal. App. 3d 933, 198 Cal. Rptr. 249 , was a mandate proceeding arising out of an action for battery occurring as an aspect of an in-patient psychiatric treatment program in which plaintiffs participated and consented to defendants using physical violence on them as a therapeutic measure. The trial court (1) sustained defendants' demurrer without leave to amend; (2) denied plaintiffs' motions for new trial and for reconsideration and for leave to file a proposed amended complaint; and (3) imposed monetary sanctions against plaintiffs and their attorney for bringing (a) a reconsideration motion without alleging a new and different state of facts as required by former Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(a), and (b) a wholly inappropriate motion for new trial. In granting the writ, the reviewing court pointed out, with respect to the motion for reconsideration, that under Code Civ. Proc. § 1003, an application for an order is a motion, and held that a demurrer, which is a pleading (Code Civ. Proc. § 422.10), is also an application for an order within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(a) and will support an application to reconsider the matter when supported by a proposed pleading containing new allegations not previously included by the pleader (150 Cal. App. 3d 933, 943) .

Careau & Co. v. Security Business Credit, Inc. (1990) 222 Cal. App. 3d 1371, 272 Cal. Rptr. 387 , involved consolidated actions arising out of a dispute as to whether the bank defendants had made a binding commitment to provide debt financing to the plaintiffs for a leveraged buyout, and whether the plaintiffs justifiably relied on it. The court sustained without leave to amend defendants' demurrers to 16 of the 22 causes of action alleged in the consolidated complaints. Plaintiffs moved for reconsideration of the "without leave to amend" portion of the order, submitting with their motion proposed second amended complaints for both of the actions. The court denied the motion on the ground no "new" facts were presented. The court further granted defendants' subsequent motion for judgment on the pleadings as to five additional counts. Plaintiffs voluntarily dismissed without prejudice the remaining count, and appealed from the subsequent judgment.

The court of appeal, citing Rains v. Superior Court (1984) 150 Cal. App. 3d 933, 943-944, 198 Cal. Rptr. 249 (discussed above), said plaintiffs were entitled to submit proposed second amended complaints by way of a motion for reconsideration, and that if those amended complaints stated any causes of action the trial court was obligated to (1) vacate its order which had sustained the demurrers without leave to amend and (2) make a different order granting plaintiffs leave to file an amended complaint, which would include the causes of action which the trial court, in deciding the merits of the motion for reconsideration, determined were valid (222 Cal. App. 3d 1371, 1386) . The court noted that the trial court denied the motion for reconsideration because "there were no new facts." The appellate court said that this was not correct, that former Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(a) does not require that a motion to reconsider be based on "new facts," but only that the motion be based on an alleged different state of facts than the original motion, and that the trial court should have specifically examined the proposed pleadings attached to the reconsideration motion to determine whether the added allegations were sufficient to state one or more valid causes of action (222 Cal. App. 3d 1371, 1387, n.9). The court examined the proposed amended complaints and held that the trial court should have overruled the demurrers as to two causes of action and granted plaintiffs the right to amend as to certain other causes of action, and reversed the dismissal orders to that extent, affirming them in all other respects (222 Cal. App. 3d 1371, 1379, 1388-1405) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Statutory Authority for Motion to Reconsider

In Glade v. Glade (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 1441, 45 Cal. Rptr. 2d 695 , plaintiff, the trustee of a revocable family trust, obtained a summary judgment in a foreclosure action against defendant after defendant had obtained an order from a family law court which had consolidated the foreclosure action with a marital dissolution action and had stayed the foreclosure action. However, the trial court for the foreclosure action did not receive notice of the stay, and entered the summary judgment. Later, the trial court for the foreclosure action then denied defendant's motion for reconsideration for the stated reason that the stay was ineffective because the courts were of equal jurisdiction.

The court of appeal concluded that the family law court had priority of jurisdiction, and addressed the issue of whether the motion for reconsideration should have been granted. The court noted the requirement that the party seeking reconsideration must provide not just new evidence or different facts, but a satisfactory explanation for the failure to produce it at an earlier time (38 Cal. App. 4th 1441, 1457) . The record indicated that the family law court's stay order was issued just two days before the summary judgment motion was set to be heard. The attorneys for both parties tried unsuccessfully to contact the trial court to inform the court of the stay prior to the hearing although the plaintiff's attorney was taking the position that the order was invalid. However, when defendant's attorney arrived five minutes late for the summary judgment hearing, apparently due to construction work which concealed the courthouse as he drove past, plaintiff's attorney failed to inform the court of the stay order. When defendant's attorney's presence was called to the court's attention as the matter was being submitted, the trial court did not permit him to speak. The court concluded that on these facts there was a reasonable and credible explanation for defendant's failure to apprise the trial court of the stay order (38 Cal. App. 4th 1441, 1457) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 158 MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER AND RENEWED MOTIONS
PART II. FORMS

15-158 California Points & Authorities § 158.31

§ 158.31 Supporting Renewed Motion [Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(b)]

[1] FORM

SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA,
COUNTY OF _____

	)
	)	NO. _____
	)	MEMORANDUM IN SUPPORT OF MOTION
	)	_____ [TO or FOR]
_____ [name],	)	_____ [specify]
Plaintiff,	)	[Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(b);
vs.	)	Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1113]
_____ [name],	)	Date: _____
Defendant.	)	Time: _____
	)	Judge: _____
	)	Location: _____
	)	Date Action Filed: _____
	)	Trial Date: _____
	)

_____

THIS RENEWED MOTION SHOULD BE GRANTED BECAUSE A RENEWED MOTION BASED ON NEW OR DIFFERENT FACTS, CIRCUMSTANCES, OR LAW IS AUTHORIZED BY STATUTE, AND THE NEW FACTS SET FORTH IN THE _____ [AFFIDAVIT or DECLARATION UNDER PENALTY OF PERJURY] ATTACHED TO THE NOTICE OF MOTION SHOW THAT THE MOTION _____ [specify, e.g., FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT] SHOULD BE GRANTED ON THE GROUND(S) THAT _____ [specify, e.g., THERE IS NO MERIT TO THE ACTION] FOR THE REASON THAT _____ [specify, e.g., THE ACTION IS BARRED BY THE STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS].

A. Jurisdiction of Trial Court. [See § 158.30, Paragraph A.]

B. Governing Statute. Renewed motions are governed by Code of Civil Procedure Section 1008(b) (Graham v. Hansen (1982) 128 Cal. App. 3d 965, 970-971, 180 Cal. Rptr. 604).

C. Statute Applies to All Applications For Interim Orders. [See § 158.30, Paragraph C.]

D. Statutory Requirements. When the party who originally made an application for an order which was refused in whole or in part, or granted conditionally or on terms, makes a subsequent application for the same order on new or different facts, circumstances, or law, it shall be shown by affidavit (or declaration under penalty of perjury [Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]) what application was made before, when and to what judge, what order or decisions were made thereon, and what new or different facts, circumstances, or law, are claimed to be shown (Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(b)).

[Optional] E. Inapplicability of 10-Day Limitation Period. The provision in Code of Civil Procedure Section 1008(a) requiring that a motion for reconsideration be made within 10 days after service upon the party of written notice of entry of the order does not apply to a renewed motion under Code of Civil Procedure Section 1008(b), which is not subject to any time limitation (Monsan Homes, Inc. v. Pogrebneak (1989) 210 Cal. App. 3d 826, 831, 258 Cal. Rptr. 676 (prior law; criticized on another point in Passavanti v. Williams (1990) 225 Cal. App. 3d 1602, 1608 n.5, 275 Cal. Rptr. 887); Graham v. Hansen (1982) 128 Cal. App. 3d 965, 970-971, 180 Cal. Rptr. 604).

[Optional] F. Sufficiency of New Facts to Support Motion. Whether the "new" facts alleged on a renewal motion are sufficient to satisfy the requirements of Code of Civil Procedure Section 1008(b) is a question confided to the sound discretion of the trial court, the exercise of which the appellate court will not interfere with absent an obvious showing of abuse (Graham v. Hansen (1982) 128 Cal. App. 3d 965, 971, 180 Cal. Rptr. 604 (prior law)).

[Add points and authorities establishing the ground for the particular substantive order sought.]

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,
_____ [firm name, if any]
By: _____ [signature]
_____ [typed name]
Attorney for _____ [party's status and name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities is for use in support of a renewed motion. The facts required to be shown by affidavit (Paragraph D) should be set forth in the affidavit, or declaration under penalty of perjury [Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5], accompanying the notice of motion. Optional Paragraph E should be included if more than 10 days have elapsed between the time the moving party was served with written notice of entry of the original order and the date the renewed motion is filed. Optional Paragraph F should be included if counsel anticipates that opposing counsel will challenge the sufficiency of the new or different facts, circumstances, or law; however, to avoid focusing opposing counsel's attention on the sufficiency of the new or different facts, circumstances, or law, counsel may wish to omit the point here and include it in a reply memorandum of points and authorities after the issue has first been raised by opposing counsel.

Additional points and authorities should be included to establish the ground for the order sought. For points and authorities that may be incorporated in the form, see the specific chapter in this set. For example, for points and authorities supporting a motion for summary judgment, see Ch. 221, Summary Judgments .

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 158.34 may be used to oppose the points and authorities set out in this form.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of notice of renewed motion, see Ch. 372, Motions and Orders , Pt. II, in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Governing Statute

Graham v. Hansen (1982) 128 Cal. App. 3d 965, 180 Cal. Rptr. 604 , was a medical malpractice action in which the trial court originally denied defendants' motion for summary judgment on the ground the action was barred by the statute of limitations, but granted defendants' renewed motion for summary judgment made about a year later on the same ground. Plaintiff contended the second motion was untimely because it was not made within 10 days after defendants received notice that their first motion had been denied, as required by former Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(a). In affirming the summary judgment for defendants, the court of appeal said a renewed motion is not governed by Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(a), but that the statutory provisions relating to motions for renewal (i.e., subsequent applications for the same order) are found in Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(b) (128 Cal. App. 3d 965, 969-970) .

[b] Inapplicability of 10-Day Limitation Period

Monsan Homes, Inc. v. Pogrebneak (1989) 210 Cal. App. 3d 826, 258 Cal. Rptr. 676 (Sixth Appellate District) , was an appeal from a denial of relief from a default and default judgment. The court of appeal affirmed. Defendant had also filed a motion asking the appellate court to take evidence and to make factual determinations contrary to those made by the trial court, as authorized by Code Civ. Proc. § 909, based on new evidence presented to the appellate court. The appellate court ordered that the motion be considered with the appeal (210 Cal. App. 3d 826, 829) , but concluded that relief could not be granted under Code Civ. Proc. § 909 (210 Cal. App. 3d 826, 830-831) . The court then considered whether to treat the motion as a petition for writ of error coram vobis, but rejected this remedy on the ground that plaintiff had a remedy under Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(b). The court pointed out that former Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(b) provides for renewal of an earlier motion based on "new facts," and, citing Graham v. Hansen (1982) 128 Cal. App. 3d 965, 180 Cal. Rptr. 604 , added that the motion is not subject to the 10-day limitation governing applications under Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(a) (210 Cal. App. 3d 826, 831) .

Note that in Passavanti v. Williams (1990) 225 Cal. App. 3d 1602, 1608 n.5, 275 Cal. Rptr. 887 (discussed in §§ 158.33[3][a], 158.39[3][a]), the Court of Appeal of the Fourth Appellate District, Division Two, disagreed with Monsan to the extent Monsan apparently approved of "postjudgment motions for reconsideration" of a judgment.

The procedural background of Graham v. Hansen (1982) 128 Cal. App. 3d 965, 180 Cal. Rptr. 604 , is discussed under § 158.31[3][a]. Plaintiff contended the second motion was untimely because it was not made within 10 days after defendants received notice that their first motion had been denied. In rejecting this argument and affirming the summary judgment for defendants, the court of appeal said that Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(b) contains no requirement that a motion for renewal be made within the 10-day time period as required for motions for reconsideration under Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(a) (128 Cal. App. 3d 965, 970) . The court explained that in Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(b), the Legislature left the prior law [former Code Civ. Proc. § 1008, repealed by Stats. 1978, ch. 631, operative January 1, 1979] virtually unchanged with respect to subsequent applications by the moving party for the same order, that the 1978 version of Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(b), as did its predecessor section, applies to renewals based on "new" facts and imposes no time limitations on such motions, and that the appellate court had found nothing in the legislative history to indicate any such limitation was intended (128 Cal. App. 3d 965, 970-971) . The court said that to place a time limitation on motions for renewal would produce a result inimical to the efficient administration of justice, and that, when "new" facts come to the attention of the moving party sufficient to justify renewal of a motion previously made, it would be nonsensical to disallow the later motion simply because discovery of the "new" facts was not made within the 10 day limit of § 1008(a). Trial courts should be allowed to review, reweigh, and modify an order when new facts are presented which demonstrate the need to do so. To apply a time limitation beyond which the court lacks power to so act would needlessly burden the courts and the litigants with plenary trials that were otherwise capable of summary resolution. The court said it could not conceive that the Legislature intended such a result and that it was apparent to it that the 10-day limitations period for motions for reconsideration based on "different" facts [Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(a)] describes a remedy wholly discrete from the motion for renewal based on "new" facts long provided by statute and presently found in the then recently enacted Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(b) (128 Cal. App. 3d 965, 971) .

[c] Sufficiency of New Facts to Support Motion

The procedural background of Graham v. Hansen (1982) 128 Cal. App. 3d 965, 180 Cal. Rptr. 604 , is discussed under § 158.31[3][a]. In response to plaintiff's argument that the claimed "new" facts (plaintiff's answer to an interrogatory and a declaration by plaintiff's counsel) were insufficient to support a motion for renewal, the appellate court, in affirming the summary judgment for defendants, said that whether the "new" facts alleged on a motion for renewal are sufficient to satisfy the requirements of Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(b) is a question confided to the sound discretion of the trial court, the exercise of which the appellate court would not interfere with absent an obvious showing of abuse, and that the record manifested no such abuse (128 Cal. App. 3d 965, 971) . Turning to the merits of the trial court's ruling under review, the appellate court was satisfied that the trial court correctly determined that the action was barred by the statute of limitations as a matter of law (128 Cal. App. 3d 965, 971) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Inapplicability of 10-Day Limitation Period

The facts and procedural background of Stephen v. Enterprise Rent-A-Car (1991) 235 Cal. App. 3d 806, 1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 130 , are discussed in § 158.34[3]. In discussing Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(b), the appellate court said that the Legislature left the prior law [former Code Civ. Proc. § 1008] virtually unchanged with respect to subsequent applications by the moving party for the same order. As its predecessor section, Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(b) applies to renewals based on "new" facts and imposes no time limitations on such motions (235 Cal. App. 3d 806, 816) .

[b] Sufficiency of New Facts to Support Motion

In Mink v. Superior Court (1992) 2 Cal. App. 4th 1338, 4 Cal. Rptr. 2d 195 , plaintiffs sued a residential property developer, who filed a motion for summary adjudication on the ground that the 10-year statute of limitations ran on January 17, 1987, three days before the complaint was filed. After the motion was granted, plaintiffs' attorney discovered January 17, 1987, was a Saturday, and the following Monday was a court holiday in celebration of Martin Luther King, Jr.'s birthday. Thus, the last day to file suit was Tuesday, January 20, 1987, the day the complaint was filed (2 Cal. App. 4th 1338, 1341) . The court of appeals held that the trial court abused its discretion in denying the motion to reconsider. The appellate court found that the new facts presented were sufficient to require reconsideration of the summary adjudication ruling. The court assumed defendant's counsel had brought the summary adjudication motion in good faith and had inadvertently overlooked the weekend and court holiday. Thus, defendant was in no position to argue that the same mistake, when made by his adversary, was inexcusable (2 Cal. App. 4th 1338, 1343) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 158 MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER AND RENEWED MOTIONS
PART II. FORMS

15-158 California Points & Authorities § 158.32

§ 158.32 Opposing Motion to Reconsider--Statutory Requirements [Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(a)] Not Complied With

[1] FORM

SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA,
COUNTY OF _____

_____ [name],	)	NO. _____
Plaintiff,	)	MEMORANDUM OF POINTS AND AUTHORITIES IN OPPOSITION TO MOTION FOR RECONSIDERATION OF ORDER
vs.	)	_____ [e.g., DENYING] MOTION
_____ [name],	)	_____ [FOR or TO]
Defendant.	)	_____ [specify motion]
	)	Date: _____
	)	Time: _____
	)	Dept.: _____
	)	Judge: _____
	)	Date Action Filed: _____
	)	Trial Date: _____

_____

THE MOTION FOR RECONSIDERATION SHOULD BE DENIED BECAUSE THE STATUTORY REQUIREMENTS HAVE NOT BEEN MET, IN THAT THE _____ [MOVING PARTY IS NOT AFFECTED BY THE PRIOR ORDER or MOTION IS NOT TIMELY or MOTION IS NOT BASED ON NEW OR DIFFERENT FACTS, CIRCUMSTANCES, OR LAW or all or any combination of these].

[EITHER]

A. Moving Party Not Affected by Prior Order. Only a party affected by an order refusing in whole or in part, or granting, or granting on condition an application for an order may seek reconsideration of the order (Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(a)).

[AND/OR]

B. Motion to Reconsider Is Not Timely. A motion for reconsideration must be made within 10 days after the party is served with written notice of entry of the order (Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(a)).

[AND/OR]

C. Not Based on New or Different Facts, Circumstances, or Law. A motion for reconsideration is authorized only when the motion is based on new or different facts, circumstances, or law (Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(a); Le Francois v. Goel (2005) 35 Cal. 4th 1094, 1096-1097, 29 Cal. Rptr. 3d 249 ; Nieto v. Blue Shield of California Life & Health Ins. Co. (2010) 181 Cal. App. 4th 60, 71-74, 103 Cal. Rptr. 3d 906 ; McPherson v. City of Manhattan Beach (2000) 78 Cal. App. 4th 1252, 1265, 93 Cal. Rptr. 2d 725 ; Gilberd v. AC Transit (1995) 32 Cal. App. 4th 1494, 1500-1501, 38 Cal. Rptr. 2d 626).

[Optional] D. Adequate Explanation For Failure to Provide Evidence Earlier Lacking. The party moving for reconsideration on the basis of new or different facts must make a threshold showing of diligence which requires a satisfactory explanation for failing to provide the evidence earlier (McPherson v. City of Manhattan Beach (2000) 78 Cal. App. 4th 1252, 1265, 93 Cal. Rptr. 2d 725 ; Garcia v. Hejmadi (1997) 58 Cal. App. 4th 674, 688-691, 68 Cal. Rptr. 2d 228).

[Optional] E. Adequate Explanation For Failure to Provide Different Law Earlier Lacking. The party moving for reconsideration on the basis of different law must make the same showing of diligence required of those seeking reconsideration on the basis of different facts, i.e., provide a satisfactory explanation for failure to present this information earlier (Baldwin v. Home Savings of America (1997) 59 Cal. App. 4th 1192, 1193, 1198-1200, 69 Cal. Rptr. 2d 592).
Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,
_____ [firm name, if any]
By: _____ [signature]
_____ [typed name]
Attorney for _____ [party's status and name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities are for use in opposition to a motion to reconsider when the moving party has failed to comply with the requirements of Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(a), set out in § 158.30, Paragraph B.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be used to oppose a motion supported by the points and authorities set out in § 158.30.

[b] Jurisdictional Provisions of Statute

Under former case law, the requirements of Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(a) did not apply to motions to reconsider interim orders. In 1992, the Legislature amended Code Civ. Proc. § 1008, and, among other things, explicitly overturned case law which had found that the section did not apply to interim orders [Stats. 1992, ch. 460, § 1(b)-(d)]. One court has stated that it could comfortably assume that the substitute language "new or different facts, circumstances, or law," was designed to approve generally, the case law relaxation of what constitutes new or different facts justifying reconsideration. This does not mean, however, that all facts not previously presented to a court now suffice [Garcia v. Hejmadi (1997) 58 Cal. App. 4th 674, 690, 68 Cal. Rptr. 2d 228] . In any event, a showing must be made that there is a satisfactory explanation for failing to provide the evidence earlier [Garcia v. Hejmadi (1997) 58 Cal. App. 4th 674, 689-690, 68 Cal. Rptr. 2d 228 (case discussed in § 158.32[3][b])]. Similarly, when the basis for the motion is "different law," a showing must be made that there is a satisfactory explanation for failing to provide this information earlier [Baldwin v. Home Savings of America (1997) 59 Cal. App. 4th 1192, 1193, 1198-1200, 69 Cal. Rptr. 2d 592 (case discussed in § 158.32[3][c])].

The current statute also curtails the availability of reconsideration by explicitly limiting jurisdiction to reconsider to the procedures set forth in Code Civ. Proc. § 1008 [Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(e) (overturning holding of Ziller Electronics Lab GMBH v. Superior Court (1988) 206 Cal. App. 3d 1222, 1231, 254 Cal. Rptr. 410)]. However, the California Supreme Court has interpreted Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(e) as only limiting the parties' ability to file motions to reconsider and not the court's authority to reconsider interim rulings on its own motion [Le Francois v. Goel (2005) 35 Cal. 4th 1094, 1096-1097, 29 Cal. Rptr. 3d 249] .

[c] New or Different Facts, Circumstances or Law

The 1992 amendment of Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(a) changes the basis for a motion to reconsider from "an alleged different state of facts" to "new or different facts, circumstances, or law." Since the terms "new" and "different" presumably have unique meanings, a reconsideration motion may be based on material that is either new (or newly discovered) or different (but previously known). Under former Section 1008(a), it was unclear whether "different" facts were required to be "new" or "newly discovered" [see Blue Mountain Development Co. v. Carville (1982) 132 Cal. App. 3d 1005, 1014, 183 Cal. Rptr. 594 (prior law; requiring newly discovered evidence and satisfactory explanation for failure to produce earlier); but see Rains v. Superior Court (1984) 150 Cal. App. 3d 933, 944, 198 Cal. Rptr. 249 (prior law; in contrast to renewed motions, no requirement that "alleged different state of facts" supporting reconsideration motion be "new" or newly discovered)].

In 1998, the Legislature again amended Code Civ. Proc. § 1008 to add subsection (g) which explicitly provides that Code Civ. Proc. § 1008 applies to all applications for interim orders [Stats 1998, ch 200, § 2].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Not Based on New or Different Facts, Circumstances, or Law

In Le Francois v. Goel (2005) 35 Cal. 4th 1094, 29 Cal. Rptr. 3d 249 , plaintiffs sued their former employer and three of its officers for misrepresentation. Defendants moved for summary judgment, and the trial court denied the motion. Over a year later, defendants filed a second motion for summary judgment based on the same grounds as the first motion. Plaintiffs opposed the motion, both on the same grounds as they had opposed the first motion, and on the ground that the motion violated the provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(f)(2). A different judge heard the second motion and granted it.

Plaintiffs appealed, and the court of appeal affirmed the judgment, holding that the trial court had inherent power to rule on the second motion despite the fact that it was not based upon new facts or law, as both Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(f)(2) and Code Civ. Proc. § 1008 require. The California Supreme Court granted review to address a split in the courts of appeal regarding the interpretation of Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(e) and to decide whether the trial court had authority to consider and grant the second summary judgment motion.

One line of appellate court cases had held that Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(e) only limits the parties' ability to bring motions to consider and does not limit the court's power to reconsider its rulings [see, e.g., Darling, Hall & Rae v. Kritt (1999) 75 Cal. App. 4th 1148, 1156-1157, 89 Cal. Rptr. 2d 676 ; Schachter v. Citigroup, Inc. (2005) 126 Cal. App. 4th 726, 738, 23 Cal. Rptr. 3d 920 ; Kerns v. CSE Ins. Group (2003) 106 Cal. App. 4th 368, 388-390, 130 Cal. Rptr. 2d 754] . A second line of cases held that a trial court has the power to reconsider its prior rulings regardless of whether the reconsideration is on its own motion or on the motion of a party [see, e.g., Scott Co. v. U.S. Fid. & Guar. Ins. Co. (2003) 107 Cal. App. 4th 197, 206-212, 132 Cal. Rptr. 2d 89 (disapproved by Le Francois v. Goel (2005) 35 Cal. 4th 1094, 1107 n.5, 29 Cal. Rptr. 3d 249); Wozniak v. Lucutz (2002) 102 Cal. App. 4th 1031, 1041-1042, 126 Cal. Rptr. 2d 310 (disapproved by Le Francois v. Goel (2005) 35 Cal. 4th 1094, 1107 n.5, 29 Cal. Rptr. 3d 249); Remsen v. Lavacot (2001) 87 Cal. App. 4th 421, 427, 104 Cal. Rptr. 2d 612 (disapproved by Le Francois v. Goel (2005) 35 Cal. 4th 1094, 1107 n.5, 29 Cal. Rptr. 3d 249)]. The court examined separation of powers principles in the context of legislative restrictions on judicial functions and concluded that "the Legislature may adopt reasonable regulations affecting a court's inherent powers or functions, so long as the legislation does not defeat or materially impair a court's exercise of its constitutional power or the fulfillment of its constitutional function" (35 Cal. 4th 1094, 1103 n.3 , quoting Superior Court v. County of Mendocino (1996)13 Cal. 4th 45, 58-59, 51 Cal. Rptr. 2d 837).

The court concluded that Code Civ. Proc. § 1008's limitation on the parties' ability to file repetitive motions was clearly within the Legislature's authority and did not defeat or materially impair the courts' functions (35 Cal. 4th 1094, 1104) . However, the court interpreted the statute as placing no restrictions on a court's ability to reconsider its rulings on its own motion. The court noted that Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(e) speaks only of the court's reconsideration of a party's motion and does not speak to the court's ability to act on its own. The court saw nothing in the legislative history indicating that the legislature intended to hinder the courts' ability to act. Rather, the legislature wished to protect the courts from repetitive motions (35 Cal. 4th 1094, 1106) . Therefore, the court held that Code Civ. Proc. § 1008 limits the parties' ability to file repetitive motions but does not limit the court's ability, on its own motion, to reconsider its prior interim orders so it may correct its own errors (35 Cal. 4th 1094, 1107) .

The court cautioned that any action to reconsider a prior order must formally begin with the court on its own motion. A party may not file a motion with procedural significance unless the requirements of Code Civ. Proc. § 1008 are met. The court suggested that if a court wants to reconsider a ruling on its own motion, it should inform the parties of its concern, solicit briefing, and hold a hearing (35 Cal. 4th 1094, 1108) .

In Nieto v. Blue Shield of California Life & Health Ins. Co. (2010) 181 Cal. App. 4th 60, 103 Cal. Rptr. 3d 906 , plaintiff failed to disclose information about her medical condition and treatment on a health insurance application she submitted to defendant. She filed an action against defendant after it rescinded her insurance policy, asserting claims for breach of contract, breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, declaratory relief and violation of Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200. She alleged that the rescission of her policy constituted unlawful postclaims underwriting in violation of Ins. Code § 10384 and was an unreasonable use of her insurance application in violation of Ins. Code § 10381.5. Defendant answered and cross-complained, seeking a declaratory judgment that it rightfully rescinded the insurance contract, thereby precluding plaintiff from maintaining her action on the ground that plaintiff made material false representations and omitted material facts in her application concerning her medical condition and history and that it would not have issued the policy had she provided complete and accurate information. The trial court granted defendant's motion for summary judgment on the complaint and cross-complaint, on the ground that defendant had no duty to further investigate plaintiff's medical history because her application did not provide notice of any concerns; however, the trial court vacated its own order on the basis of new case law, reconsidered its prior order and denied it without prejudice. The trial court denied defendant's renewed motion for summary judgment on the ground that, although, even given recent authority, an insurer retains the right to rescind an insurance policy due to the insured's fraud, defendant's separate statement failed to establish that the material facts were undisputed with respect to each element of fraud. The trial court granted defendant's subsequent motion for summary judgment, ruling that it was entitled to rescission as a matter of law in view of the undisputed evidence that plaintiff made material misrepresentations and omissions regarding her medical history (Imperial Merchant Servs., Inc. v. Hunt (2009) 47 Cal. 4th 381, 393, 97 Cal. Rptr. 3d 464, 212 P.3d 736 .

The Court of Appeal affirmed. With regard to plaintiff's challenge that the summary judgment motion was improperly refiled in violation of Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(f)(2), even disregarding that defendant's motion for summary judgment fell outside the scope of Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(f)(2), because the prior motion was one for summary judgment rather than summary adjudication, the trial court properly exercised its discretion in determining that this provision did not bar summary judgment because the operative motion addressed an issue not raised by the prior motion. In its order denying the prior motion the trial court expressly stated that the motion's failure to address the elements of fraud was the basis for its denial. The operative summary judgment motion addressed this previously omitted issue, asserting that defendant was entitled to judgment because plaintiff committed fraud on the application and specifically identified the elements of fraud established by the undisputed evidence. The trial court had no reason to reach the question of whether the operative summary judgment motion relied on the same facts and law presented in the prior motion because the motion targeted an issue, plaintiff's fraud, not previously asserted. Even assuming that the operative summary judgment motion did not assert a new issue, the court nevertheless concluded that the trial court had inherent authority to reconsider sua sponte its prior order denying defendant's second motion for summary judgment, citing Le Francois v. Goel (2005) 35 Cal. 4th 1094, 1096-1097, 1105, 29 Cal. Rptr. 3d 249, 112 P.3d 636 , in which the California Supreme Court concluded a trial court has the authority to reconsider sua sponte an earlier interim ruling on a motion for summary judgment even though the moving party may not have asserted any new issues or newly discovered facts or law that would support the filing of a second or renewed motion for summary judgment pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(f)(2) or 1008. The record supported the conclusion that the trial court effectively sua sponte reconsidered its prior order denying defendant's second motion for summary judgment. In the prior order, the trial court indicated that it would consider whether defendant was entitled to summary judgment on the ground that the undisputed evidence satisfied the elements of fraud. It characterized defendant's second summary judgment motion as seeking adjudication on the theory that plaintiff's concealment of material information entitled defendant to rescind coverage and found that theory insufficient. Though the trial court observed that the unstated inferences from the evidence identified in the separate statement might support the existence of fraud, the trial court believed that each of the elements of fraud (as enumerated in CACI No. 1900) had to be set forth explicitly in the separate statement and defendant's separate statement was insufficient to support summary judgment or summary adjudication. At the time it denied the second summary judgment motion, the trial court had already determined that it would reconsider its order if defendant could demonstrate that there was no triable issue of fact as to each element of fraud. That reconsideration may have been prompted by a motion filed in violation of § 437c(f)(2) did not alter the trial court's inherent authority to reconsider its prior order denying summary judgment (181 Cal. App. 4th 60, 71-74) .

McPherson v. City of Manhattan Beach (2000) 78 Cal. App. 4th 1252, 93 Cal. Rptr. 2d 725 , involved an action for a writ of mandate against the City of Manhattan Beach to compel it to rescind a land use permit granted to a developer allowing construction exceeding the city's legislated height limitations. In 1990, the city approved the developer's application for a vesting tentative parcel map and a corresponding use permit for its planned condominium project. The project then stalled due to the developer's inaction. During this time, in 1991, new municipal code provisions took effect, lowering the maximum height limitations that applied to the project. The final parcel map was not recorded until 1996, and the city granted the developer a new conditional use permit in 1997.

The plaintiff sought a writ of mandate compelling the city to rescind the 1997 permit because the project would violate the municipal code's height limitations. The defendants city and developer argued that the right to proceed with the project vested prior to the change in height limitations. The plaintiff countered with section 11.24.020 of the city's municipal code, which provided that the failure to record a parcel map within thirty-six months of approval or conditional approval shall terminate all proceedings. The defendants argued that section 11.24.020 was preempted by California's Subdivision Map Act ("the Act"). The trial court rejected the defendants' preemption argument and granted the plaintiff's petition. The defendants brought a motion for reconsideration, attaching as "new evidence" a declaration from a city planning employee stating that the city had interpreted section 11.24.020 to be preempted by the Act. The trial court denied the motion for reconsideration, and the defendants appealed.

The court of appeal, in affirming, noted that to merit reconsideration a party must give a satisfactory reason why it was unable to present its "new" evidence at the original hearing. The court rejected the appellants' claim that they had been unable to present evidence of their interpretation of section 11.24.020 because it was not part of the administrative record before the trial court. The court of appeal reasoned that the plaintiff had raised the issue of untimely recording and expiration of the tentative parcel map throughout the administrative proceedings. The court also noted that section 11.24.020 had figured prominently in the trial court briefs and hearing, and that the appellants had waited until after the trial court ruled to submit the declaration regarding its interpretation of 11.24.020 and the Act. Thus, the city employee's declaration could not qualify as "new" evidence (78 Cal. App. 4th 1252, 1265-1266) .

Gilberd v. AC Transit (1995) 32 Cal. App. 4th 1494, 38 Cal. Rptr. 2d 626 , involved a personal injury action against a public transit agency under the Tort Claims Act, Gov. Code § 810 et seq. Plaintiff presented a claim, which named both the county and the transit agency, to the county but not to the agency. The county denied the claim and the plaintiff filed a complaint naming both the county and the agency. The county then informed plaintiff that it had no liability and that the transit agency was a separate public entity. The plaintiff then presented a petition to file a late claim against the agency, which the agency denied.

Following a motion for summary judgment filed by both the county and the agency, the plaintiff filed a petition, pursuant to Gov. Code § 946.6 for relief from the claim filing requirements and a motion for leave to file an amended complaint alleging facts supporting the petition. The petition was based on counsel's inability to locate the County's Roster of Public Agencies, notwithstanding repeated inquiries to the County Clerk on the subject and subsequent reliance on the clerk's advice that a claim against defendant agency should be presented to the County Clerk in triplicate on a form provided by the County Clerk.

The trial court granted plaintiff's motions and dismissed the summary judgment motion as moot. Defendant agency filed a notice of motion for reconsideration of all of the court's rulings and, alternatively, requested a new trial or relief from the rulings under Code Civ. Proc. § 473 on the ground that defendant's counsel's error in failing to comply with a local rule by neglecting to timely call the trial court to schedule a hearing on the tentative rulings in plaintiff's favor was due to mistake, inadvertence, and excusable neglect, and filed a demurrer to the first amended complaint, incorporating its arguments from its summary judgment motion. The trial court granted the motion for reconsideration, vacated its order granting relief pursuant to Gov. Code § 946.6, denied plaintiff's petition under Gov. Code § 946.6, sustained the demurrer without leave to amend, and entered a judgment of dismissal.

The court of appeal reversed, finding that the exclusive avenue for reconsideration of the trial court's orders was under Code Civ. Proc. § 1008 and that the provisions of Section 1008 are jurisdictional (32 Cal. App. 4th 1494, 1498-1499) . The court stated that according to the plain language of the statute a court acts in excess of its jurisdiction when it grants a motion to reconsider that is not based on "new or different facts, circumstances, or law." The court rejected as utterly specious defendant's contention that the trial court misinterpreted California law in its initial decision that therefore defendant relied on "different" law when it reiterated its prior reasoning and authorities. The court also rejected the argument that defense counsel's failure to request oral argument constituted a new fact or circumstance sufficient to comply with the statute. It noted that issues collateral to the merits of the initial motion, such as a failure to request oral argument, do not constitute a new or different facts or circumstances (32 Cal. App. 4th 1494, 1500) .

The court further rejected defendant's contention that relief was appropriately ordered under Code Civ. Proc. § 473, since it was used in this instance as a means of circumventing the jurisdictional requirements for a motion for reconsideration (32 Cal. App. 4th 1494, 1501) . Furthermore, the court rejected defendant's meritless that the trial court's ruling could be appropriate as a motion for new trial (32 Cal. App. 4th 1494, 1501-1502) .

[b] Adequate Explanation For Failure to Provide Evidence Earlier Lacking

McPherson v. City of Manhattan Beach (2000) 78 Cal. App. 4th 1252, 93 Cal. Rptr. 2d 725 , is discussed under § 158.32[3][a].

In Garcia v. Hejmadi (1997) 58 Cal. App. 4th 674, 68 Cal. Rptr. 2d 228 , about 10 months before trial defendants moved for summary judgment or summary adjudication and the matter was assigned to a judge who issued a tentative ruling to grant the motion on November 4, but was unavailable the next morning when the matter was to be argued. Plaintiff declined to stipulate to a commissioner presiding in the judge's place and the matter was assigned to another judge for review and decision. On November 12, reacting to the first judge's tentative ruling, plaintiff filed a supplemental brief in opposition to summary judgment providing further argument and cited, as creating triable issues, the first paragraph of plaintiff previously filed declaration with plaintiff's original opposition and second, a new declaration by plaintiff further elaborating on the subject. Meanwhile, the second judge had on November 10 signed an order granting summary judgment and finding, as had the first judge, no triable issue and the judge's order was filed on November 16. On November 29, plaintiff filed a motion to reconsider and revoke the summary judgment under Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(a) and/or set it aside under Code Civ. Proc. § 473 as taken through mistake, inadvertence or excusable neglect. The second judge heard the motion and acknowledging the two grounds for relief ruled only on one granting plaintiff relief under Code Civ. Proc. § 473. Thereafter, the matter was tried resulting in judgment in favor of the plaintiff. Defendants appealed (58 Cal. App.4th 674, 678-679) .

The court of appeal reversed. The defendants claimed that the pretrial grant of summary judgment in their favor was vacated without jurisdiction, thus nullifying the subsequent trial. The court found the jurisdictional point dispositive (58 Cal. App.4th 674, 679) . First the court addressed the issue of the superior court's discretion under Code Civ. Proc. § 473 to vacate the summary judgment. The court concluded that the trial abused its discretion in vacating summary judgment under Code Civ. Proc. § 473. The type of mistake, inadvertence, surprise or excusable neglect that might have permitted the original order to have been vacated was simply not present in the record (58 Cal. App.4th 674, 685) . Next the court considered whether the ruling could be affirmed by resort to Code Civ. Proc. § 1008. Plaintiff had argued in plaintiff's motion that while Code Civ. Proc. § 1008's former call for a "different state of facts" had been judicially construed as requiring both newly discovered evidence and an explanation for not producing it earlier, the 1992 amendment to Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(a) requiring "new and different facts, circumstance, or law" signaled legislative conformance with certain cases that had construed "different" as not necessarily requiring "newly discovered facts." Thus, plaintiff reasoned any fact not previously "presented" to a court now qualified as "different" (if not "new") facts or circumstances justifying reconsideration (58 Cal. App. 4th 674, 688) . The court rejected this argument concluding that the amendment's reference to "new or different" facts did not make the section's prerequisites less restrictive. Plaintiff's argument, if accepted, would effectively eviscerate the threshold showing of diligence which has long required an explanation of why the "newly discovered" matter ws not presented earlier. Plaintiff would have the court say this requirement is met merely by anything not previously "presented" to the court. This miserable result would be to defeat the Legislature's stated goal of reducing the number of reconsideration motions and would remove all incentive for parties to efficiently marshall their evidence (58 Cal. App. 4th 674, 689) . Moreover, the court noted that it could comfortably assume that the substitute language "new or different facts, circumstances, or law," was designed to approve generally, the case law relaxation of what constitutes new or different facts justifying reconsideration. This does not mean, however, that all facts not previously presented to a court now suffice; nor does it mean the Legislature dispensed with the court-declared need to show a satisfactory explanation for failing to provide the evidence earlier, which can only be described as a strict requirement of diligence (58 Cal. App. 4th 674, 690) . Under the circumstances of the case, plaintiff's showing failed to satisfy Code Civ. Proc. § 1008 as a matter of law. The information consisting of plaintiff's own declared knowledge was always in plaintiff's possession, and no satisfactory explanation appeared for not bring it out earlier. Similarly, the tardy supplemental brief filed on November 12, between the order's signing and filing, contained none of the claimed different facts later submitted with the motions for relief, and absolutely no explanation for this was offered (58 Cal. App. 4th 674, 690-691) . The court concluded that the superior court lacked jurisdiction to reconsider the grant of summary judgment, enter a new order and proceed with trial, and remanded the case back to the superior court to consider solely an issue of attorney fees under an earlier settlement agreement (58 Cal. App.4th 674, 692) .

[c] Adequate Explanation For Failure to Provide Different Law Earlier Lacking

In Baldwin v. Home Savings of America (1997) 59 Cal. App. 4th 1192, 69 Cal. Rptr. 2d 592 , a jury awarded plaintiffs compensatory damages. Plaintiffs thereafter moved for attorney fees and costs and defendant filed a motion to tax costs. Ultimately, plaintiffs were awarded attorney fees and defendant filed a motion for reconsideration pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1008 and to vacated the judgment as it relates to attorney fees pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 663. The court granted the motion for reconsideration and vacated the judgment as to the award of attorney fees. An appeal followed.

The court of appeal reversed. The court noted that defendant's motion for reconsideration was accompanied by an affidavit of its counsel which declared that a case cited in it was not considered at the initial hearing and provided the "new or different law" that justifies reconsideration. The declaration explained that at the initial hearing defendant believed that the more relevant issue was plaintiff's tort recovery as opposed to recovery under contract. The court based its award of attorney fees on reciprocity under Civ. Code § 1717. In considering further options following the initial hearing to tax costs, the cited case was found. Since it appeared relevant to the facts of the case, defendant requested that it be considered in connection with the motion for reconsideration (59 Cal. App. 4th 1192, 1196) . The court concluded, however, that the cited case clearly does not provide the "new" law that authorizes trial court reconsideration of a prior order, because the opinion issued in 1994 and could therefore have been provided prior to its ruling on the motion for attorney fees. On the other hand, the opinion does present "law," or at least a legal principle, different from that originally produced defendant when it opposed plaintiffs' motion for attorney fees (59 Cal. App. 4th 1192, 1196) . Although, the fact that defendant presented "different law" in support of it motion for reconsideration does not mean the motion fully complied with all applicable requirements, however, as there remains the question whether defendant also had to provide a satisfactory explanation for its failure to present this information earlier (59 Cal. App. 4th 1192, 1197-1198) . The court answered this in the affirmative holding that parties applying for reconsideration must make that same showing of diligence required of those seeking reconsideration on the basis of "different facts" (59 Cal. App. 4th 1192, 1193, 1200) . Moreover, the prevailing view is that Code Civ. Proc. § 1008 now imposes a jurisdictional constraint. If a trial court has no jurisdiction to reconsider a prior order on the basis of "different facts" in the absence of a satisfactory explanation for the failure to present them earlier, it cannot have jurisdiction to reconsider on the basis of "different law" absent the same showing of diligence, because there is no basis for any distinction either in the statute or in reason (59 Cal. App. 4th 1192, 1200) . Absolutely no showing of diligence was made in the case as counsel made no effort to explain whatsoever the failure to previously present the case, then two years old, or the principle for which it stands, as an alternative basis for denial of plaintiffs' motion for attorney fees (59 Cal. App. 4th 1192, 1200-1201) . It should be noted that the court in discussing its holding, that the diligence requirement applicable to motions to reconsider on the basis of different facts is also applicable to motions to reconsider on the basis of different law, pointed out that the court was not unmindful of the awkward consequences likely to flow from its holding, which in some instances will bar trial judges from correcting rulings belatedly shwn to be erroneous. Judicial inefficiencies may also result from the need for an appeal that would not have been required if correction could have been made by a trial court willing to do so. These problems do not stem from the holding, however, but from the 1992 amendment to § 1008. Given the jurisdictional nature of the present statute, the answer, if there is one, must come from the Legislature ((59 Cal. App. 4th 1192, 1200 n.10).

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Not Based on New or Different Facts, Circumstances, or Law

In Pazderka v. Caballeros Dimas Alang, Inc. (1998) 62 Cal. App. 4th 658, 670, 73 Cal. Rptr. 2d 242 , defendant made a Code Civ. Proc. § 998 offer which was accepted by plaintiffs. Plaintiffs presented the signed agreement to the superior court clerk who entered judgment pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 998. Thereafter plaintiffs successfully moved for an award of attorneys' fees. Defendant filed a motion, which among other things, requested reconsideration of the award of attorneys' fees. The trial court granted reconsideration, vacated the judgment and the plaintiffs appealed (62 Cal. App. 4th 658, 662-663) . The court of appeal reversed. In so doing the court noted that a court acts in excess of jurisdiction when it grants a motion to reconsider that is not based on new or different facts, circumstances, or law. The possible "new facts" offered were presented in defendant counsel's declaration wherein counsel stated that counsel mistakenly believed the section 998 offer included the issues of attorneys' fees and costs. The court held that this statement did not disclose new facts, but merely asserted counsel's mistake. A mistake based on ignorance of the law or imprecision in drafting the offer is not a proper basis for reconsideration (62 Cal. App. 4th 658, 670) .

See Baldwin v. Home Savings of America (1997) 59 Cal. App. 4th 1192, 69 Cal. Rptr. 2d 592 , discussed in § 158.32[3][c].

See Garcia v. Hejmadi (1997) 58 Cal. App. 4th 674, 685-691, 68 Cal. Rptr. 2d 228 , discussed in § 158.32[3][b].

In Lucas v. Santa Maria Public Airport Dist. (1995) 39 Cal. App. 4th 1017, 46 Cal. Rptr. 2d 177 , plaintiff alleged that an Airport District violated law and the public trust by entering into a multiyear employment contract with its general manager. The trial court granted the District s demurrer and denied plaintiff s motion for reconsideration. In affirming the denial of the motion for reconsideration, the court of appeal noted that a motion for reconsideration must be based on new or different facts, circumstances or law. Since the only significant statements relied on by plaintiff in his declaration in support of the motion were dated prior to the filing of his original complaint, and there was no explanation as to why he had not brought the matter to the attention of the trial court earlier, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying the motion (39 Cal. App. 4th 1017, 1027-1028) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 158 MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER AND RENEWED MOTIONS
PART II. FORMS

15-158 California Points & Authorities § 158.33

§ 158.33 Opposing Motion to Reconsider--Order Granted Judgment Which Has Been Entered

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 158.32.]

THE MOTION TO RECONSIDER THE ORDER OF THIS COURT GRANTING _____ [specify, e.g., DEFENDANT'S MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT] MADE AND ENTERED ON _____ [date] SHOULD BE DENIED BECAUSE THE JUDGMENT IN THIS ACTION HAS ALREADY BEEN ENTERED.

Unavailability After Judgment of Motion to Reconsider Order Granting Judgment. Although a court may reconsider its order granting or denying a motion and may even reconsider or alter its judgment so long as judgment has not yet been entered, once judgment has been entered, the court may not reconsider it and loses its unrestricted power to change the judgment. The court may correct judicial error only through certain limited procedures such as motions for new trial and motions to vacate the judgment (Ramon v. Aerospace Corp. (1996) 50 Cal. App. 4th 1233, 1236-1238, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 217 (Second App. Dist., Div. Three) Passavanti v. Williams (1990) 225 Cal. App. 3d 1602, 1606, 275 Cal. Rptr. 887 (Fourth App. Dist., Div. Two)) . [Once a trial court has entered judgment, the court is without jurisdiction to grant a motion for reconsideration even if the motion was brought before the judgment was entered and is still pending at the time of entry of judgment (APRI Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1999) 76 Cal. App. 4th 176, 180-182, 90 Cal. Rptr. 2d 171 (Second Dist., Div. Four))] .
Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,
_____ [firm name, if any]
By: _____ [signature]
_____ [typed name]
Attorney for _____ [party's status and name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a motion to reconsider an order granting a motion for judgment, or an order that is in effect a judgment, for example, an order dismissing an action [see Code Civ. Proc. § 581d], when the judgment has already been entered. The form is based on the holding in Passavanti v. Williams (1990) 225 Cal. App. 3d 1602, 275 Cal. Rptr. 887 (Fourth App. Dist., Div. Two) , which overruled or disapproved certain of its prior decisions and criticized decisions of other courts of appeal which stated or suggested a contrary rule. For a listing of these cases, see § 158.39[3][a]. Some cases handed down after Passavanti continue to cite cases overruled or disapproved by Passavanti and do not cite or discuss Passavanti [see, e.g., Ladd v. Dart Equipment Corp. 230 Cal. App. 3d 1088, 1102, 281 Cal. Rptr. 813 , discussed in § 158.30[3][c]]. For a case raising, but not deciding, the issue of whether Passavanti applies to renewed motions, see Stephen v. Enterprise Rent-A-Car (1991) 235 Cal. App. 3d 806, 817 n.6, 1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 130 , discussed in § 158.34[3].

The optional language in the form is for use when a judgment has been entered before the court has ruled on the motion.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the point of law stated.

Counsel should also request the court to take judicial notice under Evid. Code § 452(d) of the appropriate papers and entries in its file and records [see Evid. Code § 453].

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in this form may be used to oppose a motion supported by the points and authorities set out in § 158.30.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Unavailability After Judgment of Motion to Reconsider Order Granting Judgment

In Ramon v. Aerospace Corp. (1996) 50 Cal. App. 4th 1233, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 217 (Second App. Dist., Div. Three) , the trial court granted defendant's motion for summary judgment on March 22, 1993. A notice of ruling was filed on March 26, 1993. Plaintiff moved for reconsideration pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1008 on April 5, 1993, but the trial court did not rule on the motion. Judgment was entered and filed on April 29, 1993, and plaintiff refiled plaintiff's motion for reconsideration on May 21, 1993. Notice of entry of judgment was filed and served on June 10, 1993, and on July 20, 1993, the trial court granted plaintiff's motion for reconsideration, but on reconsideration reaffirmed the grant of summary judgment. Plaintiff filed a notice of appeal on September 16, 1993.

The court of appeal dismissed the appeal because the requirements for appellate jurisdiction had not been satisfied. The court held that plaintiff's notice of appeal was not timely filed pursuant to former Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 2 (now Rule 8.104). After entry of judgment, a motion for reconsideration pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1008 does not extend the time in which to file a notice of appeal under Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 2 (50 Cal. App. 4th 1233, 1235) . Thus, plaintiff's motion for reconsideration filed after entry of judgment and the trial court's ruling on July 20, 1993, on that motion had no effect on the time period for filing a notice of appeal under Rule 2. The reason for this is that a trial court has no further power to rule on a motion for reconsideration after entry of judgment (50 Cal. App. 4th 1233, 1236) .

The court also pointed out that the entry of judgment had other effects. With regard to the April 5 motion for reconsideration that was never ruled on, entry of judgment had the effect of denying that motion by implication. Furthermore, after entry of judgment, plaintiff should have abandoned the invalid motion for reconsideration filed thereafter and attacked the judgment in one of three ways, i.e., by a motion for new trial, by a motion to vacate, or by filing a timely notice of appeal (50 Cal. App. 4th 1233, 1238) .

The court further held that although entry of judgment has the above legal effects, service of notice of entry of judgment on June 10, 1993, established the crucial date for determining if plaintiff's appeal was timely filed, i.e., service of notice of entry of judgment triggered the 60-day limitation period in which a notice of appeal must be filed under Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 2(a) (50 Cal. App. 4th 1233, 1238-1239) . Plaintiff's notice of appeal was not filed within 60 days of June 10, 1993 (50 Cal. App. 4th 1233, 1239) .

In reaching the conclusion that a motion for reconsideration filed after entry of judgment can have no effect on the period in which to file a notice of appeal, the court of appeal rejected the argument that the grant of reconsideration was a new judgment that commenced the time period specified in former Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 2(a) (now Rule 8.104(a)) and rejected that portion of Fryer v. Kaiser Foundation Health Plan (1963) 221 Cal. App. 2d 674, 676-677, 34 Cal. Rptr. 688 , that so held (50 Cal. App. 4th 1233, 1238 n.4).

In Passavanti v. Williams (1990) 225 Cal. App. 3d 1602, 275 Cal. Rptr. 887 (Fourth App. Dist., Div. Two) , the trial court granted defendant's third motion for summary judgment on June 14, 1989; the judge signed the order granting the motion for summary judgment and judgment on June 19, 1989; and on the same day the order was entered and filed. A conformed copy of the order and judgment was served on plaintiff on June 22, 1989. On July 5, 1989, plaintiff filed a motion for reconsideration of the order granting the motion ("Notice of Motion and Motion for an Order Revoking Order Granting Defendant's Third Motion for Summary Judgment Made Pursuant to CCP Section 1008"). The motion for reconsideration was denied on August 16, 1989. On August 29, 1989, more than 60 days after service of the conformed copy of the judgment but within 30 days after the court denied the motion for reconsideration, plaintiff filed a notice of appeal from the judgment entered on June 19, 1989 [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 2, set out in § 158.38, first alternative Paragraph A]. Although the court of appeal treated the motion to reconsider as a motion for new trial or to vacate the judgment and reversed the judgment on the merits, it held that a trial court may reconsider its order granting or denying a motion and may even reconsider or alter its judgment so long as judgment has not yet been entered, but that once judgment has been entered, the court may not reconsider it and loses its unrestricted power to change the judgment. It may correct judicial error only through certain limited procedures such as motions for new trial and motions to vacate the judgment (225 Cal. App. 3d 1602, 1606) .

For further discussion of Passavanti and a listing of the cases it overruled, disapproved, or criticized, see § 158.39[3][a].

In APRI Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1999) 76 Cal. App. 4th 176, 90 Cal. Rptr. 2d 171 , the trial court granted defendant's motion to quash and defendant lodged a proposed order granting the motion for signature by the court. Plaintiff then filed a motion for reconsideration. Thereafter the court signed and entered the order granting the motion to quash and dismissing defendant from the action, and defendant served and filed a notice of entry of the order. Defendant thereafter filed opposition to plaintiff's motion to reconsider. The court granted the reconsideration motion, vacated and set aside its order quashing service of summons and dismissing all claims against defendant, and denied the motion to quash. Defendant filed a petition for a writ of mandate.

The court of appeal granted the petition for mandate directing the trial court to vacate its order granting the motion for reconsideration and denying the motion to quash (76 Cal. App. 4th 176, 186) . Initially, the court noted that under Code Civ. Proc. § 581d a written order of dismissal is a judgment. The trial court failed to observe the critical distinction between an order of dismissal, which is a judgment, and other orders (76 Cal. App. 4th 176, 181) . Rejecting plaintiff's argument that there was no judgement entered in the register of action, and hence there was no judgment within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. 581d, the court noted that the "Civil Register Report" for the case reflected entry of the order which satisfied the requirement of Code Civ. Proc. § 581d (76 Cal. App. 4th 176, 181) . The court held that once a trial court has entered a judgment it is without power to grant reconsideration. Thus, a court is without jurisdiction to grant a motion for reconsideration even if the motion was brought before judgment was entered and is still pending at the time of entry of judgment (76 Cal. App. 4th 176, 180-182) . Furthermore, the court rejected plaintiff's argument that the trial court could have treated plaintiff's motion for reconsideration as a motion to vacate or for a new trial, agreeing with the reasoning of Passavanti v. Williams (1990) 225 Cal. App. 3d 1602, 1610, 275 Cal. Rptr. 887 so as not to construe the motion for reconsideration as something that it was not (76 Cal. App. 4th 176, 182-184) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 158 MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER AND RENEWED MOTIONS
PART II. FORMS

15-158 California Points & Authorities § 158.34

§ 158.34 Opposing Renewed Motion--Prior Class Certification Motion Was Denied by Order Which Has Become Final

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 158.32]

THE RENEWED MOTION FOR CLASS CERTIFICATION SHOULD BE DENIED BECAUSE THE ORDER DENYING THE ORIGINAL MOTION WAS NOT APPEALED AND HAS BECOME FINAL.

Unavailability of Renewed Motion to Certify Class Action After Time to Appeal Has Expired. An order denying a motion for class certification is an appealable order and is not subject to renewal after the time to appeal has expired (Stephen v. Enterprise Rent-A-Car (1991) 235 Cal. App. 3d 806, 811-812, 1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 130).
Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,
_____ [firm name, if any]
By: _____ [signature]
_____ [typed name]
Attorney for _____ [party's status and name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

The foregoing memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a renewed motion to certify an action as a class action, when the order denying the first motion was not appealed and has become final.

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the point of law stated.

Counsel should also request the court to take judicial notice under Evid. Code § 452(d) of the appropriate papers and entries in its file and records [see Evid. Code § 453].

In an appropriate case the foregoing points and authorities may be used to oppose a motion supported by the points and authorities set out in § 158.31.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Unavailability of Renewed Motion to Certify Class Action After Time to Appeal Has Expired

Stephen v. Enterprise Rent-A-Car (1991) 235 Cal. App. 3d 806, 1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 130 , was an action brought by an individual as a purported class action seeking relief against defendant, on various theories, for alleged unconscionably high rates charged by defendant for a risk-allocation option called collision damage waiver in its rental contracts. Plaintiff's motion for class certification in March 1989 was ordered off calendar for failure to comply with local rules. Plaintiff filed a second motion in September 1989 after intervening discovery, and the motion, after hearing, was denied on the merits by minute order on January 11, 1990. A formal, signed order was filed January 23, 1990. Notice of entry of the order was mailed on January 24th. Plaintiff did not appeal, and the order became final on March 26, 1990. On July 7, 1990, plaintiff filed a "Renewed Motion for Class Certification" pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(b) on the basis of new facts. The motion was denied as untimely, and plaintiff appealed, contending that, although the prior order denying certification was final, a renewed motion was authorized (1) on new evidence (Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(b)) regardless of the lapse of time, and (2) under class action policy assertedly allowing successive certification motions to be brought up until the time of final judgment.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding first that no policy in the law allowed plaintiff to renew a class certification motion which had been denied on the merits by a final, appealable order (235 Cal. App. 3d 806, 811) . The court acknowledged that an order denying class certification does not finally dispose of an action since it leaves it intact as to the individual plaintiff, but the order is appealable because it effectively terminates the entire action as to the class, in legal effect being tantamount to a dismissal of the action as to all members of the class other than plaintiff. The appeal is allowed, as a matter of state law policy, because the order has the death knell effect of making further proceedings in the action impractical. Because California allows direct appeals of death-knell orders, a plaintiff who fails to appeal from one loses forever the right to attack it. The order becomes final and binding (235 Cal. App. 3d 806, 811) . The court said the order denying the certification motion was a death knell order precluding maintenance of a class action on any cause of action, it was on the merits, was never appealed, and became final (235 Cal. App. 3d 806, 812) . The court acknowledged that the rule in federal courts is different (235 Cal. App. 3d 806, 811-812, 814) and that it is different in California courts when the motion to certify is granted; in this latter event successive motions based on new evidence to decertify the action are allowed (235 Cal. App. 3d 806, 812-813) . The court concluded that, because no appeal was taken from the order denying certification, the ruling became final and binding; the court said that state law policy did not allow plaintiff a "renewed" opportunity to seek certification (235 Cal. App. 3d 806, 816) .

Note that the court, for the sake of discussion, assumed that a renewed motion could be brought. The court pointed out that the Court of the Appeal of the Fourth Appellate District, Division Two, in Passavanti v. Williams (1990) 225 Cal. App. 3d 1602, 175 Cal. Rptr. 887 (discussed in § 158.33[3][a], 158.39[3][a]), had recently disapproved several of its own and other published opinions to the extent they held or implied that Code Civ. Proc. § 1008 authorizes motions to reconsider entered "judgments" as opposed to mere "orders." Passavanti reasoned that true "judgments" may be attacked for judicial error only by prescribed procedures such as motions for new trial or to vacate once they are signed and entered; and held that a postjudgment motion for reconsideration does not lie. The court said that, using this analysis, defendant urged it to hold that a death-knell "order" is in effect a "judgment" and that, since plaintiff's motion under Code Civ. Proc. § 1008 came long after an entry of judgment, the motion was improper. Plaintiff countered that the Passavanti rationale only applies to motions to "reconsider" brought under Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(a) because a motion under Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(b) involves a completely new application for relief, not an attack on the prior order. The Stephen court found it unnecessary to resolve the issue, because even if plaintiff were correct, his motion was late because it came after the earlier order (or judgment) was final, and held that this was a sufficient basis for affirmation (235 Cal. App. 3d 806, 817 n.6).

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 158 MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER AND RENEWED MOTIONS
PART II. FORMS

15-158 California Points & Authorities § 158.35

§ 158.35 Supporting Contention That Court Cannot Avoid Jurisdictional Limits of Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(e) by Ignoring Prior Order

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE SECTION 1008 PLACES JURISDICTIONAL LIMITATIONS ON MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER AND ON RENEWED MOTIONS. THE COURT CANNOT AVOID THE REQUIREMENTS OF SECTION 1008 BY IGNORING A PRIOR ORDER AND GRANTING A MOTION THAT IMPLICITLY MODIFIES, AMENDS, OR REVOKES THAT ORDER.

A. Code Civ. Proc. § 1008 Applies to Interim Orders and Is Jurisdictional. Code of Civil Procedure Section 1008 is the exclusive means for modifying, amending, or revoking an order. That limitation is expressly jurisdictional and applies to interim orders (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1008(e), (g); Morite of California v. Superior Court (1993) 19 Cal. App. 4th 485, 490-492, 23 Cal. Rptr. 2d 666).

B. Prior Order Cannot Be Ignored. If courts may simply ignore interim orders instead of modifying, amending, or revoking them after due consideration, then the procedural, substantive, and jurisdictional requirements of Code of Civil Procedure Section 1008 are meaningless. A court cannot avoid the jurisdictional limits of Section 1008 by consciously ignoring a prior order and implicitly revoking it by a later order (Morite of California v. Superior Court (1993) 19 Cal. App. 4th 485, 492-493, 23 Cal. Rptr. 2d 666).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of contention may be used in a memorandum of points and authorities to oppose a motion, that, although not made as a motion to reconsider or as a renewed motion, will implicitly have that effect. It may also be used in proceedings to review an order granting such a motion.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Specifically, counsel should show how the motion being opposed will of necessity implicitly modify or revoke the earlier order.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Code Civ. Proc. § 1008 Applies to Interim Orders and Is Jurisdictional

In Morite of California v. Superior Court (1993) 19 Cal. App. 4th 485, 23 Cal. Rptr. 2d 666 , a judge in 1991 ordered trial of a declaratory relief action stayed pending disposition of a related case. In 1993, the case was assigned as a directly calendared matter to another judge, who ordered a status conference. In a footnote to the status conference questionnaire, the plaintiff stated that it believed the stay should be lifted to allow a motion for summary judgment. The defendant objected to plaintiff's use of a footnote to raise the issue rather than a motion for reconsideration. At the status conference the judge stated that the court was not reconsidering any prior motions, but was managing its own calendar, and set the matter for trial. Defendants petitioned for writ relief.

The court of appeal issued a peremptory writ of mandate directing the court to vacate the order setting the matter for trial. In deciding to issue the writ, the court first held that Code Civ. Proc. § 1008 governs motions for reconsideration and under Section 1008(e) is the exclusive means for modifying, amending or revoking interim orders (19 Cal. App. 4th 485, 490) . The court found that the trial court proceedings had failed to comply with the requirements of Section 1008 (19 Cal. App. 4th 485, 492) . The court also found that the court's refusal to recognize that its ruling amounted to a reconsideration of the stay order deprived the petitioners of a meaningful opportunity to argue the provisions of Section 1008 or to argue that the stay order should not be modified, amended, or revoked expressly or by implication (19 Cal. App. 4th 485, 492) .

[b] Prior Order Cannot Be Ignored

The facts and procedural background of Morite of California v. Superior Court (1993) 19 Cal. App. 4th 485, 23 Cal. Rptr. 2d 666 , are discussed under Code Civ. Proc. § 1008. In issuing the writ, the court held that a court could not circumvent the jurisdictional limits of Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(e) by consciously ignoring the stay order that had been entered by a different judge of the same court. Even though the judge stated that he was not reconsidering the prior order, and the order setting for trial did not specifically lift the stay, it by implication had the same effect (19 Cal. App. 4th 485, 492) . Allowing courts so to ignore interim orders rather than modifying, amending, or revoking them after due consideration would render the jurisdictional requirements of Section 1008 meaningless and would undermine the Legislature's intent that courts should not modify, amend, or revoke prior orders without due reconsideration (19 Cal. App. 4th 485, 492-493) . The court also noted that the order undermined the general rule that one judge of a trial court may not reconsider an interim ruling of another (19 Cal. App. 4th 485, 493) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 158 MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER AND RENEWED MOTIONS
PART II. FORMS

15-158 California Points & Authorities § 158.36

§ 158.36 Supporting Ex Parte Motion to Revoke or Set Aside Order Obtained on Renewed Motion--Party Failed to Comply With Statutory Requirements [Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(a), (b), (d)].

[1] FORM

SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA,
COUNTY OF _____

_____ [name],	)
Plaintiff,	)	NO. _____
vs.	)	MEMORANDUM IN SUPPORT OF EX PARTE
_____ [name],	)	MOTION FOR ORDER SETTING ASIDE ORDER
Defendant.	)	OF THIS COURT _____
	)	[specify order, e.g.,
	)	GRANTING DEFENDANT'S RENEWED MO-TION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT] MADE AND ENTERED ON
		_____ [date].

_____

THE EX PARTE MOTION OF _____ [party, e.g., PLAINTIFF], _____ [name], FOR AN ORDER REVOKING THE ORDER OF THIS COURT MADE ON _____ [date] GRANTING THE RENEWED MOTION OF _____ [party, e.g., DEFENDANT] FOR _____ [specify, e.g., SUMMARY JUDGMENT] SHOULD BE GRANTED BECAUSE _____ [party, e.g., DEFENDANT] FAILED TO COMPLY WITH THE REQUIREMENTS OF CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE SECTION _____ [1008(a) or 1008(b) or both], IN THAT _____ [party, e.g., DEFENDANT] FAILED TO SHOW BY AFFIDAVIT OR DECLARATION [OR OTHERWISE] WHAT APPLICATION WAS PREVIOUSLY MADE FOR THE SAME ORDER, WHEN IT WAS MADE AND TO WHAT JUDGE, WHAT ORDER OR DECISIONS WERE MADE ON IT, AND WHAT NEW OR DIFFERENT FACTS, CIRCUMSTANCES, OR LAW WERE CLAIMED TO BE SHOWN.

[EITHER, relating to order on motion to reconsider]

A. Requirements of Motion to Reconsider. When the party who originally made an application for an order which was refused in whole or in part, or granted conditionally or on terms, makes an application within 10 days after service upon the party of written notice of entry of the order and based on new or different facts, circumstances, or law, to reconsider the matter and modify, amend, or revoke the prior order, it shall be shown by affidavit what application was made before, when and to what judge, what order or decisions were made thereon, and what new or different facts, circumstances, or law are claimed to be shown (Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(a)).

[OR, relating to order on renewed motion]

A. Requirements of Renewed Motion. When the party who originally made an application for an order which was refused in whole or in part, or granted conditionally or on terms, makes a subsequent application for the same order on new or different facts, circumstances, or law, it shall be shown by affidavit what application was made before, when and to what judge, what order or decisions were made thereon, and what new or different facts, circumstances, or law are claimed to be shown (Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(b)).

[CONTINUE]

B. Order Obtained by Noncompliance With Foregoing Requirements Is Subject to Revocation. For a failure to comply with the above requirement, any order made on such subsequent application may be revoked or set aside on ex parte motion (Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(b), (d)).

[Optional] C. Penalty for Violating Code of Civil Procedure Section 1008. A violation of Code of Civil Procedure Section 1008 may be punished as a contempt and with sanctions as allowed by Code of Civil Procedure Section 128.7; and an order made contrary thereto may be revoked by the judge or commissioner who made it, or vacated by a judge of the court in which the action or proceeding is pending (Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(d)).
Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,
_____ [firm name, if any]
By: _____ [signature]
_____ [typed name]
Attorney for _____ [party's status and name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of an ex parte motion to revoke an order granting a renewed motion by a party who failed to comply with the requirements of Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(a) or (b).

The penalty provisions in Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(b) and (d) (Paragraphs B and C, respectively) are permissive and not mandatory. Hence, in the ex parte motion, the moving party should aver any facts that would show that the party's failure to comply with the statute was prejudicial to the party seeking revocation or sanctions, or to the court [see Moore v. Moore (1955) 133 Cal. App. 2d 56, 60-61, 283 P.2d 338 (construing identical provisions in former Code Civ.

Proc. § 1008)].

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 158 MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER AND RENEWED MOTIONS
PART II. FORMS

15-158 California Points & Authorities § 158.37

§ 158.37 Supporting Motion to Dismiss Appeal as Untimely [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 8.104, 8.108, 8.54, 8.705]--Order Denying Motion to Reconsider Appealable Order Based on Same Facts Is Nonappealable

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 158.36.]

THIS MOTION TO DISMISS THE APPEAL FROM THE ORDER OF THE _____ [e.g., SUPERIOR] COURT OF _____ [county] DENYING THE MOTION OF _____ [party, e.g., PLAINTIFF] TO RECONSIDER ITS ORDER _____ [specify, e.g., TAXING COSTS] SHOULD BE GRANTED BECAUSE AN ORDER DENYING A MOTION TO RECONSIDER AN APPEALABLE ORDER BASED ON THE SAME FACTS IS NONAPPEALABLE; ANY APPEAL MUST BE TAKEN FROM THE ORIGINAL ORDER, AND THE TIME TO APPEAL FROM THE ORIGINAL ORDER HEREIN INVOLVED HAS EXPIRED.

A. Order Made After Judgment Is Appealable. _____ [Cite statutory and/or case authority, as appropriate, authorizing appeal from original order, e.g., In other than a limited civil case, an appeal may be taken to the court of appeal from an order made after an appealable judgment (Code Civ. Proc. § 904.1(a)(2), or In a limited civil case, an appeal may be taken to the appellate division of the superior court from an order made after an appealable judgment (Code Civ. Proc. § 904.2(b))]. An order denying a motion to tax costs, made after the judgment has been entered, is appealable (Gill v. Hughes (1991) 227 Cal. App. 3d 1299, 1310, 278 Cal. Rptr. 306)].

B. Order Denying Motion to Reconsider Appealable Order on Same Facts Is Nonappealable. An order denying a motion for reconsideration of an appealable order based on exactly the same factual showing as was offered in support of the original motion is nonappealable. Any appeal would have to be taken from the original order (Gill v. Hughes (1991) 227 Cal. App. 3d 1299, 1310, 278 Cal. Rptr. 306).
Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,
_____ [firm name, if any]
By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]
Attorney for _____ [party's status and name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be included in a memorandum submitted in support of a formal written motion to dismiss an appeal from an order denying a motion to reconsider a prior appealable order based on the same facts as the original motion.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Caption

A memorandum in support of a motion to dismiss an appeal will not normally have a separate caption. The fact that points and authorities are included in the papers filed will normally appear from the caption of the Motion to Dismiss. With respect to appeals to the superior court, local court rules should be checked for any requirements that might be imposed by the specific court to which the appeal is taken. For further discussion of format of papers, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[c] "Order" and "Judgment" Distinguished

Orders may be made before trial, during trial, after trial, or after entry of a final judgment. An order is any "direction of a court or judge, made or entered in writing, and not included in a judgment"; an application for an order is a motion [Code Civ. Proc. § 1003]. Notwithstanding use of the word "direction" in the foregoing statutory definition, not every order need include a direction to do anything but may, for example, simply deny a motion and yet be an appealable order [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 904.1(a)(2), (4)-(6), 904.2(b), (c), (e)-(g); see also Passavanti v. Williams (1990) 225 Cal. App. 3d 1602, 1605 n.3, 275 Cal. Rptr. 887] .

A judgment, on the other hand, is the final determination of the rights of the parties in an action or proceeding [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 577, 1064]. While there may be numerous orders made throughout an action or proceeding, there is only one judgment [Passavanti v. Williams (1990) 225 Cal. App. 3d 1602, 1605, 275 Cal. Rptr. 887] .

However, some determinations, although characterized as orders, are in effect final judgments for purposes of appeal, and orders of dismissal, when properly signed and filed, are considered judgments under Code Civ. Proc. § 581d. Moreover, judgments are sometimes mislabeled as orders. Nevertheless, a judgment, no matter how designated, is the final determination of the rights of the parties in an action, and an order that acts as the final determination in the action is the judgment [Passavanti v. Williams (1990) 225 Cal. App. 3d 1602, 1606, 275 Cal. Rptr. 887] .

[d] Time to Appeal and "Judgment" Defined

The time for filing a notice of appeal from a superior court judgment or appealable order is set forth in Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.104 [see § 158.38, first alternative Paragraph A]. The term "judgment," as used in the rule, is defined in Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.10(4) as including any judgment, order, or decree from which an appeal lies. The term "judgment" is likewise defined as including any judgment, order, or decree from which an appeal lies [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.765(7)].

[e] Appealability of Orders on Motions for Reconsideration

[i] In General

Most orders are not appealable [see Passavanti v. Williams (1990) 225 Cal. App. 3d 1602, 1606, 275 Cal. Rptr. 887] . Appealable orders in civil actions and proceedings generally [see Code Civ. Proc. § 904] are listed in Code Civ. Proc. §§ 904.1 (other than a limited civil case) and 904.2 (limited civil case). These statutes do not specifically list an order granting or denying a motion to reconsider as an appealable order.

[ii] When Original Order Is Not Appealable

All courts seem to agree that an order denying reconsideration is not appealable if the original ruling is not final and appealable in its own right. For example, in Blue Mountain Development Co. v. Carville (1982) 132 Cal. App. 3d 1005, 1010, 183 Cal. Rptr. 594 (prior law; disapproved on another point in Passavanti v. Williams (1990) 225 Cal. App. 3d 1602, 1607-1608 n.5, 275 Cal. Rptr. 887 , discussed in § 158.39[3][a]), the court of appeal, citing Litvinuk v. Litvinuk (1945) 27 Cal. 2d 38, 43-44, 162 P.2d 8 , said that an appeal may not be taken from a nonappealable order by the device of moving to vacate the order and appealing from a ruling denying the motion [see also Rogers v. Silverman (1989) 216 Cal. App. 3d 1114, 1127, 265 Cal. Rptr. 286 ; Jade K. v. Viguri (1989) 210 Cal. App. 3d 1459, 1466, 258 Cal. Rptr. 907 (criticized on another ground in Passavanti v. Williams (1990) 225 Cal. App. 3d 1602, 1607 n.5, 275 Cal. Rptr. 887 , discussed in § 158.39[3][a])].

[iii] When Original Order Is Appealable

The courts of appeal seem divided as to whether the denial of a motion to reconsider an appealable order is appealable.

In Rojes Riverside General Hospital (1988) 203 Cal. App. 3d 1151, 250 Cal. Rptr. 435 (overruled on another point in Passavanti v. Williams (1990) 225 Cal. App. 3d 1602, 1607, 275 Cal. Rptr. 887 , discussed in § 158.39[3][a], the Court of Appeal of the Fourth Appellate District, Division Two, held that the denial of a motion for reconsideration, whether based on the same facts or new facts, is nonappealable. Rojes rejected the earlier ruling in Blue Mountain (discussed under § 158.37[2][e][ii]), to the extent Blue Mountain held that an order for reconsideration may be treated as an order made after judgment and, thus, an appealable order, if the original ruling is an appealable order and if the motion for reconsideration is based on new and different facts [Rojes Riverside General Hospital (1988) 203 Cal. App. 3d 1151, 1160, 250 Cal. Rptr. 435 (overruled on another point in Passavanti v. Williams (1990) 225 Cal. App. 3d 1602, 1607, 275 Cal. Rptr. 887] . Rojes has been followed by the Court of Appeal of the First Appellate District, Division Four [see In re Jeffrey P. (1990) 218 Cal. App. 3d 1548, 1550 n.2, 267 Cal. Rptr. 764 (stating that an order denying a motion for reconsideration is not an appealable order, and holding denial of a motion for reconsideration of a juvenile court's dependency order was not appealable)]; and the Court of Appeal of the First Appellate District, Division Three [see Estate of Simoncini (1991) 229 Cal. App. 3d 881, 891, 280 Cal. Rptr. 393 (stating that orders denying reconsideration are not generally appealable, and holding meritless appellant's contention that the probate court erred in denying her application for reconsideration of the preliminary distribution decree because her application purportedly met the requirements of Code Civ. Proc. § 1008, dealing with applications for reconsideration based on an allegedly different state of facts)].

In Santee v. Santa Clara County Office of Education (1990) 220 Cal. App. 3d 702, 710, 269 Cal. Rptr. 605 , the Court of Appeal of the Sixth Appellate District held that an order denying a motion for reconsideration of an order denying a petition for relief from the claim presentation requirements of the Tort Claims Act [Gov. Code § 900 et seq.] is an appealable order if the motion raised new facts. Note, however, that, because the order denying a petition for relief is in effect a judgment, a motion to reconsider it would not be proper under the holding in Passavanti v. Williams (1990) 225 Cal. App. 3d 1602, 1607-1608, 275 Cal. Rptr. 887 (discussed in § 158.33[3][a]). Conversely, in Gill v. Hughes (1991) 227 Cal. App. 3d 1299, 1310, 278 Cal. Rptr. 306 (discussed in § 158.37[3][b]), the Court of Appeal of the Fifth Appellate District held that the denial of a motion for reconsideration based on exactly the same factual showing as was offered in support of the original motion is not appealable. At page 1310 n.3, the court acknowledged the conflict between Santee and Rojes.

[f] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of motion to dismiss an appeal in an unlimited civil case, see Ch. 48, Appeal: Abandonment, Dismissal, and Stipulated Reversal , in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender). For a form of motion to dismiss an appeal in a limited civil case to the superior court appellate division, see Ch. 345A, Limited Civil Cases , in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Order Made After Judgment Is Appealable

The facts and procedural background of Gill v. Hughes (1991) 227 Cal. App. 3d 1299, 278 Cal. Rptr. 306 , are discussed under § 158.37[3][b]. In affirming the summary judgment for defendants, the court of appeal said that an order denying a motion to tax costs, made after the judgment has been entered, is appealable (227 Cal. App. 3d 1299, 1310) .

[b] Order Denying Motion to Reconsider Appealable Order on Same Facts Is Nonappealable

In Gill v. Hughes (1991) 227 Cal. App. 3d 1299, 278 Cal. Rptr. 306 , a physician who had been denied full surgical staff privileges at a hospital in administrative proceedings sought writ review of the denial. He appealed for denial of the writ. While the appeal was pending, he filed a complaint for damages for alleged violation of his constitutional rights, violations of California's antitrust statute (Cartwright Act), interference with existing business relations, interference with prospective business advantage, intentional and negligent infliction of emotional distress, and slander per se. The trial court sustained defendants' demurrer to the first three causes of action and stayed those causes of action on the ground they were based on the same subject matter as the relief sought in the writ proceeding which was then pending on appeal. After the appellate court affirmed the trial court's denial of the writ petition, the trial court granted summary judgment to the defendants on the remaining causes of action. Defendants submitted memoranda of costs requesting attorney fees on the civil rights causes of action; plaintiff moved to tax costs, and the motion was denied on December 16, 1988. Plaintiff filed a motion for reconsideration of the order on December 22, 1988. The judgment awarding attorney's fees and costs was entered on December 27, 1988. The hearing on the motion for reconsideration was held on January 30, 1989, but the court did not rule on the motion until April 26, 1989. The court granted plaintiff's motion at that time and ordered defendants to resubmit their itemized statements of attorney fees. On June 14, 1989, the court denied the motion for reconsideration. In addition to appealing from the judgment, plaintiff also appealed from the order denying the motion for reconsideration and order denying motion to tax costs on July 13, 1989.

Among other things, plaintiff argued that the June 14 order awarding attorney's fees should be reversed. The court of appeal rejected the argument on the ground that the June 14 order denied the motion for reconsideration and that the order awarding attorney fees was entered on December 27, 1988. The court said that an order denying a motion to tax costs, made after the judgment has been entered, is appealable and that when, as in the case before it, the motion for reconsideration of an appealable order is based on exactly the same factual showing as was offered in support of the original motion, the order denying the motion for reconsideration is not appealable (227 Cal. App. 3d 1299, 1310) . Thus, plaintiff could not appeal from the order of June 14, 1989, denying his motion for reconsideration. Rather the appeal had to be taken from the order entered December 27, 1988 (227 Cal. App. 3d 1299, 1310-1311) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 158 MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER AND RENEWED MOTIONS
PART II. FORMS

15-158 California Points & Authorities § 158.38

§ 158.38 Supporting Motion to Dismiss Appeal as Untimely [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 8.104, 8.54, 8.705]--Appeal From Original Appealable Order After Denial of Motion for Reconsideration Is Untimely When Not Filed Within Extended Times Specified in Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.108

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 158.36.]

THE MOTION OF _____ [party, e.g., DEFENDANT] TO DISMISS THE APPEAL FROM THE ORIGINAL APPEALABLE ORDER OF THE _____ [e.g., SUPERIOR] COURT OF _____ [county] _____ [specify, e.g., DENYING] THE MOTION OF _____ [party, e.g., PLAINTIFF] TO _____ [specify, e.g., TAX COSTS] AFTER DENYING THE MOTION OF _____ [party, e.g., PLAINTIFF] FOR RECONSIDERATION SHOULD BE GRANTED BECAUSE THE APPEAL WAS UNTIMELY FILED.

[EITHER]

A. Time to Appeal From Superior Court Other Than In Limited Civil Case. In an appeal, other than in a limited civil case, except as otherwise provided by Code of Civil Procedure Section 870 or other statute or California Rules of Court, Rule 8.108 (relating to extension of time to appeal), a notice of appeal shall be filed on or before the earliest of the following dates: (1) 60 days after the date of mailing by the clerk of the court of a document entitled "notice of entry" of judgment or appealable order; (2) 60 days after the date of service of a document entitled "notice of entry" of judgment or appealable order by any party on the party filing the notice of appeal, or by the party filing the notice of appeal, or (3) 180 days after the date of entry of the judgment. For the purposes of this provision, a file-stamped copy of the judgment or appealable order may be used in place of the document entitled "notice of entry" (Code Civ. Proc. § 904.1(a); Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.104(a)).

[OR]

A. Time to Appeal From Superior Court Limited Civil Case. Although California Rules of Court, Rules 8.750, 8.751 dealing with the filing of a notice of appeal concerning a municipal court case are silent concerning a superior court limited civil case, because Code of Civil Procedure Section 904.2 provides that an appeal in a limited civil case is to the appellate division of the superior court, the time limits for filing a notice of appeal in California Rules of Court, Rule 8.751(a) should also apply to an appeal concerning a superior court limited civil case. Thus, except as otherwise specifically provided by law, a notice of appeal shall be filed within 30 days after the date of mailing notice of entry of judgment by the clerk of the court pursuant to Code of Civil Procedure Section 664.5, or within 30 days after the date of service of written notice of entry of judgment by any party on the party filing the notice of appeal, or within 90 days after the date of entry of the judgment, whichever is earliest, unless the time is extended by California Rules of Court, Rule 8.752 (relating to motions for new trial, motions to vacate, and cross appeals) (Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.751(a)).

[EITHER]

B. Entry of Judgment in Superior Court. The date of entry of a judgment is the date of its entry in the judgment book, or in a county following the procedure specified in Code of Civil Procedure Section 668.5 (relating to date of entry in counties in which clerk places individual judgments in file of actions and either a microfilm copy is made, or judgment is entered in register of actions, or judgment is entered in court's electronic data-processing system) in lieu of maintaining a judgment book, the date of filing the judgment with the clerk pursuant to that section (Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.104(d)(1)). In a county following Code of Civil Procedure Section 668.5, Rule 8.104(d)(1) requires only that the judgment be signed by the judge and file stamped by the clerk; it does not require entry of the judgment in the register of actions or entry of the judgment in the court's electronic data-processing system, or microfilming the judgment (Ten Eyck v. Industrial Forklifts Co. (1989) 216 Cal. App. 3d 540, 544-545, 265 Cal. Rptr. 29).

[OR]

B. Entry of Order in Superior Court. The date of entry of an appealable order which is entered in the minutes is the date of its entry in the permanent minutes, unless such minute order as entered expressly directs that a written order be prepared, signed, and filed, in which case the date of entry is the date of filing of the signed order (Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.104(d)(2)). The date of entry of an appealable order which is not entered in the minutes is the date of filing of the order signed by the court (Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.104(d)(3)).

[OR]

B. Entry of Decree of Distribution in Probate Proceeding. The date of entry of a decree of distribution in a probate proceeding is the date of its entry at length in the judgment book or other permanent record of the court (Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.104(d)(4)).

[CONTINUE]

C. Appeal From Original Order Is Untimely. Although a motion to reconsider under Code of Civil Procedure Section 1008(a) is treated for purposes of California Rules of Court, Rule 8.108 (relating to extension of time to appeal) in the same manner as a motion for new trial or a motion to vacate, that is, it extends the time to appeal from the original order, the appeal is untimely if not filed within the extended period (Gill v. Hughes (1991) 227 Cal. App. 3d 1299, 1311-1312, 278 Cal. Rptr. 306). [This rule should also apply to California Rules of Court, Rule 8.752 with regard to a _____ (superior court limited civil case or municipal court case)].
Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,
_____ [firm name, if any]
By: _____ [signature]
_____ [typed name]
Attorney for _____ [party's status and name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be included in a memorandum submitted in support of a formal written motion to dismiss an appeal from an original appealable order taken after a motion for reconsideration was denied when the appeal was not filed within the time authorized under Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 8.108 or 8.752. With regard to the date of entry of a judgment or order discussed in paragraph B, however, neither Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.104 nor Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.751 have as of yet been amended to explicitly address this point with regard to a superior court limited civil case. For the absence of a caption from the form, the distinction between orders and judgments, the time to appeal, and appealable orders, see discussion in § 158.37[2].

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] When Motion to Reconsider Extends Time to Appeal

The California Rules of Court provide for an extension of time to appeal from the judgment (defined in § 158.37[2][d]) after denial of a motion for new trial or motion to vacate [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 8.108(b), (c) and 8.752(a), (b)].

Although a motion to reconsider is not expressly listed in Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.108 or 8.752, as a motion that extends the time to appeal from an appealable order, it has been held that a motion for reconsideration of an appealable order is treated in the same manner as a motion for new trial or motion to vacate, for purposes of Rule 8.108. Thus, subject to the qualifications stated in that rule, the timely filing of a motion to reconsider would normally extend the time for filing a notice of appeal from the original appealable order until 30 days after entry of the order denying reconsideration [Blue Mountain Development Co. v. Carville (1982) 132 Cal. App. 3d 1005, 1009-1010, 183 Cal. Rptr. 594 (Fourth Appellate District, Division Two) (disapproved on another point in Passavanti v. Williams (1990) 225 Cal. App. 3d 1602, 1607-1608 n.5, 275 Cal. Rptr. 887 (Fourth Appellate District, Division Two) , discussed in § 158.39[3][a]].

However, this rule applies only to appealable orders that are not judgments and not to appealable orders that are in effect judgments [Passavanti v. Williams (1990) 225 Cal. App. 3d 1602, 1605, 275 Cal. Rptr. 887] . While a motion for reconsideration of an appealable order will extend the time to file a notice of appeal from the appealable order, a motion for reconsideration filed after judgment has been entered will not extend the time to appeal from the judgment [Passavanti v. Williams (1990) 225 Cal. App. 3d 1602, 1605-1608, 275 Cal. Rptr. 887 ; see § 158.39].

Thus, to determine whether the time for appeal is extended by a motion to reconsider, orders must first of all be distinguished from judgments [see discussion in § 158.37[2][c], and, second, it must be determined whether the order for which reconsideration is sought is appealable [see Passavanti v. Williams (1990) 225 Cal. App. 3d 1602, 1605, 275 Cal. Rptr. 887] ; discussion in § 158.37[2][e].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Entry of Judgment in Superior Court

Ten Eyck v. Industrial Forklifts Co. (1989) 216 Cal. App. 3d 540, 265 Cal. Rptr. 29 , was an action for personal injuries in which the defendant's motion for summary judgment was granted on October 28, 1988. The judgment was signed by the court and file stamped on November 2, 1988. Defendant served plaintiff with a notice of entry of judgment on November 8, 1988. On November 7, 1988, plaintiff filed a motion for reconsideration of the order granting summary judgment, which was not heard or ruled on until January 6, 1989, on which date the court affirmed the order granting summary judgment. The 60-day period within which to appeal expired January 9, 1989. On January 10, 1989, plaintiff appealed from the October 28th minute order granting summary judgment. The judgment was entered in the register of actions on September 8, 1989. The court of appeal rejected plaintiff's argument that because the judgment was not entered in the register of actions until September 1989, the November 8, 1988 notice of entry of judgment was ineffectual for purposes of Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 2, and dismissed the appeal. The court pointed out that Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 2(b)(1) [see now Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.104(d)(1)] requires only that the judgment be signed by the judge and file stamped by the clerk, and does not require that the judgment be entered in the register of actions (216 Cal. App. 3d 540, 544) . The court held that the use of the word "filing" by Code Civ. Proc. 668.5 and Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 2(b) [see now Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.104(d)] does not include or require entry of the judgment in the register of actions or entry of the judgment in the court's electronic data-processing system, or microfilming the judgment and, hence, the fact that judgment was not entered in the register of actions until September 1989 is of no consequence to the issue of the timeliness of the appeal (216 Cal. App. 3d 540, 545) .

[b] Appeal From Original Order Is Untimely

The facts and procedural background of Gill v. Hughes (1991) 227 Cal. App. 3d 1299, 278 Cal. Rptr. 306 , are discussed in § 158.37[3][b]. In affirming the judgment, the court of appeal said that Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 2(a) (now see) 8.104(a) requires that the notice of appeal be filed within 60 days of the mailing of the notice of entry of judgment or appealable order except as otherwise provided by statute or by Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3 (now see) 8.108 (relating to extension of time to appeal), and that because the notice of entry of the order was mailed January 9, 1989, to be timely, the notice of appeal must come within Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3 (now see) 8.108 (227 Cal. App. 3d 1299, 1311) . The court said that this rule applies when a party seeks postjudgment relief in the trial court. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3(a) (now see) 8.108(a) pertains to a new trial motion and states that when such a motion is filed and denied, the time for filing the notice of appeal from the judgment is extended for all parties until 30 days after entry of the order denying the motion or denial thereof by operation of law, but in no event may such notice of appeal be filed later than 180 days after the date of entry of the judgment whether or not the motion for new trial has been determined. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3(b) (now see 8.108(b)) applies to motions to vacate and again extends the time for filing the notice of appeal until the earliest of 30 days after entry of the order denying the motion to vacate; or 90 days after filing the first notice of intention to move to vacate the judgment; or 180 days after entry of the judgment (227 Cal. App. 3d 1299, 1311) . The court, quoting Blue Mountain Development Co. v. Carville (1982) 132 Cal. App. 3d 1005, 1009, 183 Cal. Rptr. 594 (disappoved on another point in Passavanti v. Williams (1990) 225 Cal. App. 3d 1602, 1607-1608 n.5, 275 Cal. Rptr. 887 , discussed in § 158.33[3][a], 158.39[3][a]), said that a motion for reconsideration under Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(a) is treated for purposes of Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3 (now see 8.108) in the same manner as a motion for a new trial or a motion to vacate (227 Cal. App. 3d 1299, 1311) . Although the court found it unclear from prior case law which of the two rules applies, it held that the time limits of either rule precluded the appeal (227 Cal. App. 3d 1299, 1311) . The court pointed out that in Miller v. United Services Automobile Assn. (1989) 213 Cal. App. 3d 222, 226, 261 Cal. Rptr. 515 , the court held that Code Civ. Proc. § 660, which denies a new trial motion by operation of law 60 days after the notice of entry of judgment, applies to a motion for reconsideration, and said that thus, the 30-day appeal extension following denial of the motion plus the 60 days for denial of the motion by operation of law indicates the maximum extension of time to appeal under Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3(a) (now see 8.108(a)) is 90 days after notice of entry of judgment (227 Cal. App. 3d 1299, 1311) . The court pointed out that in the present case the order awarding attorney fees was entered December 27, 1988, and notice of entry of the order was mailed on January 9, 1989. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 660, the trial court lost the power to rule on plaintiff's motion for reconsideration 60 days after notice of entry of the order was mailed on January 9, 1989, i.e., March 10, 1989. The court did not make its first ruling until April 26, 1989. Since the court had already lost jurisdiction, this order was a nullity. Plaintiff's notice of appeal was due

30 days after March 10, i.e., April 9, 1989 (227 Cal. App. 3d 1299, 1311-1312) .

Similarly, Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3(b) (now see 8.108(b)) extends time for filing the notice of appeal only until 90 days after filing the first notice of intention to move to vacate the judgment. Plaintiff's motion for reconsideration was filed on December 22, 1988. Thus, the last day for filing the notice of appeal under this rule was March 22, 1989 (227 Cal. App. 3d 1299, 1312) .

The court added that, additionally, both Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 3(a) (now see 8.108(a)) and 3(b) provide an absolute outer limit for extensions. The notice of appeal cannot be filed later than 180 days after entry of judgment. Here, judgment was entered December 27, 1988. Thus, the notice of appeal could not be filed after June 25, 1989. Having been filed on July 13, 1989, the notice of appeal was untimely (227 Cal. App. 3d 1299, 1311) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 158 MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER AND RENEWED MOTIONS
PART II. FORMS

15-158 California Points & Authorities § 158.39

§ 158.39 Supporting Motion to Dismiss Appeal as Untimely [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 8.104, 8.54, 8.705]--Time to Appeal Is Not Extended Under Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 8.104, 8.108 by Motion to Reconsider Order Granting Judgment Filed After Judgment Has Been Entered

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 158.36.]

THE MOTION TO DISMISS THE APPEAL SHOULD BE GRANTED BECAUSE THE APPEAL WAS NOT TIMELY FILED.

[EITHER]

A. Time to Appeal From Superior Court In Limited Civil Case. [See § 158.38, first alternative Paragraph A.]

B. Entry of Judgment, Order, or Decree in Superior Court. [See § 158.38, first, second, or third alternative Paragraph B.]

[OR]

A. Time to Appeal From Superior Court Limited Civil Case. [See § 158.38, second alternative Paragraph A.]

[CONTINUE]

C. Motion to Reconsider After Entry of Judgment. A motion to reconsider an order granting a judgment after the judgment has been entered does not extend the time to appeal under Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 8.104, 8.108 or 8.752 (see Ramon v. Aerospace Corp. (1996) 50 Cal. App. 4th 1233, 1235-1238, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 217 (Second App. Dist., Div. Three) ; Passavanti v. Williams (1990) 225 Cal. App. 3d 1602, 1607-1608, 275 Cal. Rptr. 887 (Fourth App. Dist., Div.

Two) ; see also Ten Eyck v. Industrial Forklifts Co. (1989) 216 Cal. App. 3d 540, 545, 265 Cal. Rptr. 29 (Second Appellate District, Division Three)) .
Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,
_____ [firm name, if any]
By: _____ [signature]
_____ [typed name]
Attorney for _____ [party's status and name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum is for use in supporting a motion to dismiss an appeal from a judgment as untimely when the appeal was not filed within the periods specified in Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.104 or 8.751. The point of the motion is that the motion to reconsider the granting of a judgment made after the judgment was entered was improper [see § 158.33] and did not extend the time to appeal from the judgment under Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.108 or 8.752 (discussed in § 158.38[2][b]). For the distinction between judgments and orders, see discussion in § 158.37[2][c]. For discussion of the absence of a caption to the form, see § 158.37[2][b].

With regard to the date of entry of a judgment or order, neither Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.104 nor Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.751 have as of yet been amended to explicitly address this point with regard to a superior court limited civil case. Counsel will have to determine the applicable rule concerning a superior court limited civil case.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of motion to dismiss an appeal in an unlimited civil case, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 48, Appeal: Abandonment, Dismissal, and Stipulated Reversal (Matthew Bender). For a form of motion to dismiss an appeal in a limited civil case to the superior court appellate division, see Ch. 345A, Limited Civil Cases , in California Forms of Pleading and Practice.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Motion to Reconsider After Entry of Judgment

Ramon v. Aerospace Corp. (1996) 50 Cal. App. 4th 1233, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 217 (Second App. Dist., Div. Three) is discussed in § 158.33[3][a].

The facts and procedural background of Passavanti v. Williams (1990) 225 Cal. App. 3d 1602, 275 Cal. Rptr. 887 , are discussed in § 158.33[3][a]. The court of appeal held that a postjudgment motion for reconsideration will not extend the time to appeal from the judgment (225 Cal. App. 3d 1602, 1607-1608) . The court pointed out that in its prior decisions it had held that a motion for reconsideration of an appealable order would extend the time to file a notice of appeal from the order (citing Rojes v. Riverside General Hospital (1988) 203 Cal. App. 3d 1151, 250 Cal. Rptr. 435 (Fourth App. Dist., Div. Two) ; Blue Mountain Development Co. v. Carville (1982) 132 Cal. App. 3d 1005, 183 Cal. Rptr. 594 (Fourth App. Dist., Div. Two) ; and Dockter v. City of Santa Ana (1968) 261 Cal. App. 2d 69, 67 Cal. Rptr. 686 (Fourth App. Dist., Div. Two) (225 Cal. App. 3d 1602, 1605). The court explained that in reviewing these cases, it found they made no distinction between final orders, which are actually judgments, and orders which clearly are not judgments but nonetheless are appealable. The court said that, on further consideration, it now recognized that, while Blue Mountain was correctly decided, Rojes and Dockter were incorrect to the extent that they suggested that a postjudgment motion for reconsideration will extend the time to file a notice of appeal (225 Cal. App. 3d 1602, 1607-1608) .

Thus, the court overruled Dockter and Rojes to the extent they held that a postjudgment motion for reconsideration will extend the time within which to file a notice of appeal from the judgment (225 Cal. App. 3d 1602, 1607) . The court noted that in Blue Mountain Development Co. v. Carville (1982) 132 Cal. App. 3d 1005, 183 Cal. Rptr. 594 , it reaffirmed the rule that a valid motion for reconsideration brought under Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(a) is treated, for purposes of Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3, (now see Rule 8.108) in the same manner as a motion for new trial or a motion to vacate, but disapproved language in that case that might be interpreted as approving the filing of postjudgment motions for reconsideration (225 Cal. App. 3d 1602, 1607-1608 n.5).

However, because of its prior decisions, the court felt compelled out of fairness to treat the motion for reconsideration in the case before it as a motion for new trial or a motion to vacate the judgment under Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3 (now see Rule 8.108), and, accordingly, held that the filing of the motion extended the time to file the notice of appeal, that the notice of appeal was filed within 30 days after the court denied the motion for reconsideration, and that the appeal was therefore timely, and reversed the judgment on the merits (225 Cal. App. 3d 1602, 1610-1611) .

The Passavanti court criticized contrary language or holdings relating to postjudgment motions to reconsider in the following appellate cases: Miller v. United States Automobile Assn. (1989) 213 Cal. App. 3d 222, 261 Cal. Rptr. 515 (Fourth App. Dist., Div. Three) ; Jade K. v. Viguri (1989) 210 Cal. App. 3d 1459, 1467, 258 Cal. Rptr. 907 (Fourth App. Dist., Div. One) ; Stratton v. First Nat. Life Ins. Co. (1989) 210 Cal. App. 3d 1071, 1082, 258 Cal. Rptr. 721 (Second App. Dist., Div. One) ; and Monsan Homes, Inc. v. Pogrebneak (1989) 210 Cal. App. 3d 826, 831, 258 Cal. Rptr. 676 (Sixth Appellate District) (225 Cal. App. 3d 1602, 1607-1608 n.5).

The Passavanti court agreed with the statement in Eddy v. Sharp (1988) 199 Cal. App. 3d 858, 863 n.3, 245 Cal. Rptr. 211 (Third App. Dist.) that a motion for reconsideration may only be considered before the entry of judgment, but questioned the Eddy court's further statement that the court is free to consider a motion regardless of the label put on it by the moving party (suggesting a postjudgment motion) on the ground the opinion in Eddy does not state when the judgment was entered or when the order denying reconsideration was made (225 Cal. App. 3d 1602, 1608-1609). Moreover, the case cited by Eddy in support of the quoted statement, Graham v. Hansen (1982) 128 Cal. App. 3d 965, 180 Cal. Rptr. 604 (Third App. Dist.) , did not involve a motion for reconsideration made after entry of judgment, but, rather, a motion for reconsideration of the court's prior order denying a motion for summary judgment and for summary judgment, which the appellate court characterized as a renewed motion for summary judgment under Code Civ. Proc. § 1008(b), which imposes no time limitation on when the motion must be made [Graham v. Hansen (1982) 128 Cal. App. 3d 965, 970-971, 180 Cal. Rptr. 604 ; see § 158.31].

The procedural background of Ten Eyck v. Industrial Forklifts Co. (1989) 216 Cal. App. 3d 540, 265 Cal. Rptr. 29 , is discussed in § 158.38[3][a]. In affirming the summary judgment, the court of appeal said that the fact that plaintiff had filed a motion for reconsideration was of no consequence (216 Cal. App. 3d 540, 545) . Citing Rojes v. Riverside General Hospital (1988) 203 Cal. App. 3d 1151, 1158-1160, 250 Cal. Rptr. 435 (overruled on another point in Passavanti v. Williams (1990) 225 Cal. App. 3d 1602, 1607, 275 Cal. Rptr. 887), the court said that, under Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3, a valid motion for reconsideration, like a valid motion for new trial or a valid motion to vacate a judgment, will extend the time for filing a notice of appeal, but that plaintiff's motion for reconsideration did not have that effect because it was filed after the judgment was signed and was therefore invalid and did not extend the January 9th deadline for filing the notice of appeal. The court said that once plaintiff received the notice of entry of judgment, he should have abandoned the motion for reconsideration and filed a notice of appeal (216 Cal. App. 3d 540, 545) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Motion to Reconsider After Entry of Judgment

In Crotty v. Trader (1996) 50 Cal. App 4th 765, 57 Cal. Rptr. 2d 818 , in partially dismissing an appeal the court noted that a motion for reconsideration is not to be equated with a motion for a new trial. The court when deciding a motion for reconsideration, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1008 has no authority to reanalyze or reevaluate facts or authority that has been presented in the earlier motion. Rather, the court may only grant reconsideration if the court is presented with new or different facts, circumstances, or law. On the other hand, the court on a motion for new trial does not examine new or different facts, but instead looks to determine if any error has been committed. Thus, the court held that Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3 (now see Rule 8.108) does not apply to a postjudgment motion for reconsideration (50 Cal. App 4th 765, 771) .

173 of 173 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
Chapter 159 RESERVED

15-159 California Points & Authorities Chapter 159

RESERVED

Chapter 159RESERVED

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 160 MOTIONS TO STRIKE: PLEADINGS

16-160 California Points & Authorities 160.syn

§ 160.syn Synopsis to Chapter 160: MOTIONS TO STRIKE: PLEADINGS

§ 160.01 Scope of Chapter

§ 160.02 Governing Law

§ 160.03 1982 Reorganization of Governing Statutes and Prior Case Law

§ 160.04 Restricted Use of Motion in Limited Civil Cases

§ 160.05 Court's Inherent Power to Strike

§ 160.06 Relationship to Demurrer

§ 160.07 Time Tolling Effect of Motion to Strike

§ 160.08 Speaking Motion Not Proper

§ 160.09 Time for Hearing

§ 160.10 Trial Court Delay Reduction Act

§ 160.11 Page Limits on Memoranda

§ 160.12 Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

§ 160.13 Related Points and Authorities Chapters

§§ 160.14-160.29 [Reserved]

§ 160.30 Supporting Motion to Strike Whole or Part of Pleading [Code Civ. Proc. § 435]--General Form

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[c] Related Memoranda

[d] Opposing Memoranda

§ 160.31 Supporting Motion to Strike Whole or Part of Pleading [Code Civ. Proc. § 435]--Pleading Matter Not Filed or Drawn in Conformity With Law [Code Civ. Proc. § 436(b)]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Pleadings Violating Specific Statutes, Rules, or Court Orders

[c] Opposing Memoranda

§ 160.32 Supporting Motion to Strike Whole or Part of Pleading [Code Civ. Proc. § 435]--Pleading Matter Not Filed or Drawn in Conformity With Law [Code Civ. Proc. § 436(b)]--Amended Pleading Not in Conformity With Court's Prior Ruling

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Pleading Not in Conformity With Court's Prior Ruling Subject to Motion to Strike

§ 160.33 Supporting Motion to Strike Whole or Part of Pleading [Code Civ. Proc. § 435]--Pleading Matter Not Filed or Drawn in Conformity With Law [Code Civ. Proc. § 436(b)]--Amended Pleading Without Permission of Court [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 472, 473(a)]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Use of Pre-1982 Case Law

[c] Only Added Parties May Move to Strike Addition of Parties

[d] Related Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Amended Complaint Filed Without Permission Is Subject to Be Stricken

[b] Permission Is Required Unless Statute Provides for Amendment of Course

[c] Permission Required After Responsive Pleading Is Filed or Time for Filing Response Passes

[d] Amendment Adding New Parties Always Requires Permission

[e] Permission to Amend Does Not Authorize Addition of New Parties

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Permission Required After Responsive Pleading Is Filed or Time for Filing Response Passes

§ 160.34 Supporting Motion to Strike Whole or Part of Pleading [Code Civ. Proc. § 435]--Pleading Matter Not Filed or Drawn in Conformity With Law [Code Civ. Proc. § 436(b)]--Pleading Filed by Stranger to Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 387]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Use of Pre-1982 Case Law

[c] Related Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Leave of Court Required for Intervention by Nonparty

[b] Pleading Filed Without Permission by Stranger to Action May Be Stricken

§ 160.35 Supporting Motion to Strike Whole or Part of Pleading [Code Civ. Proc. § 435]--Pleading Matter Not Filed or Drawn in Conformity With Law [Code Civ. Proc. § 436(b)]--Untimely Responsive Pleading [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 412.20(a)(3), 430.40, 432.10, 438(i)(1), 472a(b); Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1320(g)]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Use of Pre-1982 Case Law

[c] Necessity of Moving to Strike Before Default Entered

[d] No Necessity of Moving to Strike in Case of Untimely Amended Complaint

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] An Untimely Responsive Pleading Filed Before Entry of Default May Be Stricken

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] An Untimely Responsive Pleading Filed Before Entry of Default May Be Stricken

§ 160.36 Supporting Motion to Strike Whole or Part of Pleading [Code Civ. Proc. § 435]--Pleading Matter Not Filed or Drawn in Conformity With Law [Code Civ. Proc. § 436(b)]--Unverified Answer to Verified Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 431.30(d), 446]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] When Answer to Verified Complaint Must Be Verified

[c] Validity of Pre-1985 Case Law

[d] Necessity of Raising Objection

[e] Motion for Judgment on Pleadings as Alternative

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] An Unverified Answer to a Verified Complaint Is Subject to Be Stricken

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] An Unverified Answer to a Verified Complaint Is Subject to Motion to Strike

§ 160.37 Supporting Motion to Strike Whole or Part of Pleading [Code Civ. Proc. § 435]--Irremediable Failure to State Cause of Action [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 426, 431.10, 436]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Basis of Authority for Striking

[c] Related Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Allegations Which Cannot Be Rendered Sufficient to State Cause of Action May Be Stricken

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Allegations That Cannot Be Rendered Sufficient to State Cause of Action May Be Stricken

§§ 160.38-160.40 [Reserved]

§ 160.41 Supporting Motion to Strike Whole or Part of Pleading [Code Civ. Proc. § 435]--Irrelevant Matter in Pleading [Code Civ. Proc. § 436(a)]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Use of Pre-1982 Case Law

[c] Irrelevant Matter

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Allegation of Probative Facts Is Subject to Be Stricken

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Allegation of Probative Facts Is Subject to Be Stricken

§ 160.42 Supporting Motion to Strike Whole or Part of Pleading [Code Civ. Proc. § 435]--False or Improper Pleading Matter [Code Civ. Proc. § 436(a)]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Validity of Pre-1982 Case Law

[c] Sham Pleadings

[d] Defect Must Appear on Face of Pleading or From Matter Subject to Judicial Notice

[e] Matter Subject to Judicial Notice Must Be Identified

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Inconsistency With Prior Pleadings May Show Matter in Pleading to Be False or Improper

[b] Denial on Information and Belief of Matters Within Defendants' Knowledge May Be Stricken

[c] Allegations Inconsistent With Unambiguous Instrument Incorporated Into Complaint May Be Stricken

[d] Allegations Requesting Improper Relief

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Denial on Information and Belief of Matters Within Defendants' Knowledge May Be Stricken

§ 160.43 Supporting Motion to Strike [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 435, 436]--Improper Amended Pleading [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 472, 473(a)]--Amendment Fails to Correct Defect in Original Pleading

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Sources of Court's Authority to Strike

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Court Not Required to Tolerate Improper Amended Complaint

[b] Court May Strike Amended Pleading That Merely Repeats Original Pleading

[c] Amendment Cannot Revive Defective Complaint by Omitting Previously Sworn Facts

§§ 160.44-160.59 [Reserved]

§ 160.60 Opposing Motion to Strike Whole or Part of Pleading [Code Civ. Proc. § 435]--Speaking Motion Not Permitted [Code Civ. Proc. § 437]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Judicial Notice

[c] Validity of Pre-1982 Case Law

[d] Related Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Motion Relying on Extrinsic Evidence Is to Be Treated as Motion for Summary Judgment

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Motion Relying on Extrinsic Evidence Is to Be Treated as Motion for Summary Judgment

§ 160.61 Opposing Motion to Strike Whole or Part of Pleading [Code Civ. Proc. § 435]--Motion Not Timely [Code Civ. Proc. § 435(b)(1)]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Time to Respond to Pleadings

[c] No Time Limit on Court's Power to Strike

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Motion to Strike Complaint After Answer Has Been Filed Is Improper

§ 160.62 Opposing Motion to Strike Whole or Part of Pleading [Code Civ. Proc. § 435]--Hearing Date Improperly Specified [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 435(b)(2), 1005]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

§ 160.63 Opposing Motion to Strike Whole or Part of Pleading [Code Civ. Proc. § 435]--Defect Can Be Corrected by Amendment

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Validity of Pre-1982 Case Law

[c] Permission to Amend Pleading

[d] Related Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Striking Should Be Avoided When Defect May Be Corrected

[b] Court May Grant Leave to Verify Answer Rather Than Striking Answer

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Court May Grant Leave to Verify Answer Rather Than Striking Answer

§ 160.64 Opposing Motion to Strike Whole or Part of Pleading [Code Civ. Proc. § 435]--Pleading Not Filed or Drawn in Conformity With Law [Code Civ. Proc. § 436(b)]--Amended Pleading Adding New Parties Without Leave--Only Added Parties May Move to Strike

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Validity of Pre-1982 Case Law

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Only Added Parties May Move to Strike Amended Pleading Adding New Parties Without Permission

§ 160.65 Opposing Motion to Strike Whole or Part of Pleading [Code Civ. Proc. § 435]--No Absolute Right to Have Untimely Responsive Pleading Stricken

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Validity of Pre-1982 Case Law

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Technically Late Pleading Should Not Be Stricken When There Was No Purposeful Delay or Prejudice

[b] Opposing Party Has No Absolute Right to Have Untimely Pleading Stricken

§ 160.66 Opposing Motion to Strike Whole or Part of Pleading [Code Civ. Proc. § 435]--Irrelevant Matter [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 431.10(b), (c), 436(a)]--Motion Too Broad

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Validity of Pre-1982 Case Law

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Motion Attacking Relevant Matter in Pleading Should Be Denied in Its Entirety

§ 160.67 Opposing Motion to Strike Whole or Part of Pleading [Code Civ. Proc. § 435]--Improper Amended Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 436]--Reasons Exist Why Earlier Pleading Should Not Bar Later Inconsistent Action

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Validity of Pre-1982 Case Law

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Rule Against Dropping Sworn Allegations Applies Only to Sham Amendments

[b] Allegations Incidental to Cause of Action May Be Withdrawn

[c] Necessary Allegation in an Original Complaint Should Not Bar Inconsistent Cause of Action Against Different Defendant

§ 160.68 Opposing Motion to Strike Whole or Part of Pleading [Code Civ. Proc. § 435]--Improper Amended Pleading [Code Civ. Proc. § 436]--Amended Complaint Stating Cause of Action Not Sham

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Validity of Pre-1982 Case Law

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Amended Pleading Stating Cause of Action Not Sham

§ 160.69 Opposing Motion to Strike Whole or Part of Pleading [Code Civ. Proc. § 435]--Amendment of Pleading to Bring in New Parties Allowed as Matter of Course Prior to Answer or Demurrer [Code Civ. Proc. § 472]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Amendment of Pleading to Bring in New Parties Is Allowed as Matter of Course Without Leave of Court If Made Prior to Filing of Answer or Demurrer

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 160 MOTIONS TO STRIKE: PLEADINGS
PART I. INTRODUCTION

16-160 California Points & Authorities § 160.01

§ 160.01 Scope of Chapter

This chapter contains memoranda that may be submitted in civil actions to support or oppose motions to strike pleadings in whole or in part.

Forms supporting motions to strike include:

- A general form for use in supporting motions to strike [see § 160.30].
- Forms for use in supporting motions to strike pleading matter which was not filed or drawn in conformity with the laws of California [see §§ 160.31, 160.32].
- Forms setting out specific instances of failure to conform to the laws of California for which pleading matter may be stricken [see §§ 160.33 -160.37].
- Forms for use in a motion to strike pleading matter as irrelevant [see § 160.41] or as false or improper [see § 160.42].
- A form for use in supporting a motion to strike improper amended pleadings [see § 160.43].

Points and authorities opposing motions to strike in general and for specific reasons [see §§ 160.60 -160.63].

Points and authorities opposing motions to strike made on specific grounds [see §§ 160.64 -160.68].

Points and authorities opposing a special motion to strike a SLAPP suit [see §§ 160.70 -160.73].

This chapter does not contain forms or memoranda for use in support of or opposing SLAPP suits under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16 et seq., often known as a "special motion to strike." For discussion and forms relating to anti-SLAPP motions, see Ch. 161, Motions to Strike: Anti -SLAPP.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsMotions to StrikeGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsMotions to StrikeImmaterial MattersCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsMotions to StrikeIrrelevant Matters

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 160 MOTIONS TO STRIKE: PLEADINGS
PART I. INTRODUCTION

16-160 California Points & Authorities § 160.02

§ 160.02 Governing Law

Statutory authority and time limits for motions to strike are set out in Code Civ. Proc. § 435. Grounds for which pleading matter may be stricken are set out in Code Civ. Proc. §§ 436 and 431.10(b), (c). Limits on the means by which grounds for striking pleading matter may be established are set out in Code Civ. Proc. § 437.

A special motion to strike causes of action brought to inhibit the right of people to exercise their constitutional rights of petition and free speech on matters of public interest (SLAPP suits) is authorized and governed by Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(b).

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsMotions to StrikeGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsMotions to StrikeImmaterial MattersCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsMotions to StrikeIrrelevant MattersCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsMotions to StrikeRedundant MattersCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeMotion PracticeTime Limitations

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 160 MOTIONS TO STRIKE: PLEADINGS
PART I. INTRODUCTION

16-160 California Points & Authorities § 160.03

§ 160.03 1982 Reorganization of Governing Statutes and Prior Case Law

In 1982, the Legislature substantially reorganized the statutory law governing motions to strike. The primary effect of the 1982 statutory scheme appears to be to provide for explicit statutory authority for making motions to strike and for most, if not all, of the grounds on which pleading matter may be stricken [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 435, 436]. The only provisions in the scheme that restrict either a party's right to move to strike or the court's power to strike pleading matter are the timeliness and hearing date provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 435 [see §§ 160.61 (timeliness) and 160.62 (hearing date requirements)] and the prohibition of speaking motions to strike set out in Code Civ. Proc. § 437 [see § 160.60]. There are no statutory provisions stating that the grounds for striking pleading matter set out in Code Civ. Proc. § 436 or Code Civ. Proc. § 431.10(b), (c) are meant to be exclusive.

Because the 1982 statutory scheme does not restrict the grounds for which courts may strike pleading matter, with the exception of Code Civ. Proc. § 437 (speaking motion not proper), most of the pre-1982 case law dealing with motions to strike appears to be still valid. When using pre-1982 cases, counsel should cite the case together with the statute that now provides the authority for striking the challenged pleading on the grounds urged.

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 160 MOTIONS TO STRIKE: PLEADINGS
PART I. INTRODUCTION

16-160 California Points & Authorities § 160.04

§ 160.04 Restricted Use of Motion in Limited Civil Cases

In limited civil cases, motions to strike are allowed only on the ground that the damages or relief sought are not supported by the allegations of the complaint [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 91(a), 92(d); see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 431.10(b)(3), 436(b) (general authority for motion to strike on ground that relief sought not supported by allegations)].

Code Civ. Proc. § 435(a) provides that the term complaint includes a cross-complaint. Code Civ. Proc. § 92(d) only uses the term complaint. Although it is probable that Code Civ. Proc. § 92(d) may be read in light of the language of Code Civ. Proc. § 435(a) to permit motions to strike cross-complaints in limited civil cases, this is not clear from the language of the statute.

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 160 MOTIONS TO STRIKE: PLEADINGS
PART I. INTRODUCTION

16-160 California Points & Authorities § 160.05

§ 160.05 Court's Inherent Power to Strike

Prior to 1982, the courts of appeal had developed the doctrine that a court may strike pleading matter under the court's inherent power, by summary means, in order to prevent frustration, abuse, or disregard of court processes. This inherent power was explicitly recognized as being apart from statute [Stafford v. Ballinger (1962) 199 Cal. App. 2d 289, 297, 18 Cal. Rptr. 568] . It appears that the grounds on which the pre-1982 cases allowed the striking of pleading matter are now subsumed under the statement of grounds for striking such matter set out in Code Civ. Proc. § 436. Thus, it appears that it is no longer necessary to cite the inherent power of the court as authority for striking a pleading. However, the statutory scheme contains no provision restricting or abolishing the court's inherent power to strike pleading matter. Thus, if a case should arise in which grounds permitting the striking of pleading matter under an inherent powers theory are not authorized by statute, the court's inherent powers may probably still be used as good authority for striking.

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 160 MOTIONS TO STRIKE: PLEADINGS
PART I. INTRODUCTION

16-160 California Points & Authorities § 160.06

§ 160.06 Relationship to Demurrer

A motion to strike is generally used to reach defects in a pleading which are not subject to demurrer. Hence, a motion to strike does not lie to attack a complaint for insufficiency of allegations to justify relief, as that is a ground of general demurrer [Pierson v. Sharp Memorial Hospital, Inc. (1989) 216 Cal. App. 3d 340, 342, 264 Cal. Rptr. 673] .

The precise demarcation between the function of a motion to strike and of a demurrer is not clear in every case. It has been held that a motion to strike may not be used for purposes of a demurrer, and that for instance, matter may not be stricken on motion to strike for uncertainty [Allerton v. King (1929) 96 Cal. App. 230, 234, 274 P. 90 ; see § 160.66].

In contrast, it has been noted that although a party may not demur to a portion of a cause of action, when a substantive defect is clear from the face of a complaint involving only a portion of a cause of action, that portion may be attacked by filing a motion to strike [see PH II, Inc. v. Superior Court (1995) 33 Cal. App. 4th 1680, 1681, 1683, 40 Cal. Rptr. 2d 169] . One practical difference between a motion to strike and a demurrer is that when a demurrer is sustained, leave to amend the defective pleading is deemed granted unless the court specifies otherwise, while there is no provision stating that leave to amend is deemed granted when a motion to strike is granted [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1320(g)]. It has been held that a motion to strike should not be granted when the purported defect in the challenged pleading can be corrected by amendment [Allerton v. King (1929) 96 Cal. App. 230, 234, 274 P. 90 ; see § 160.50]. However, when a motion to strike is granted, the court may order that an amendment or amended pleading be filed on terms it deems proper [Code Civ. Proc. § 472a(d)].

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsDemurrersCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsMotions to StrikeImmaterial MattersCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsMotions to StrikeIrrelevant MattersCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsMotions to StrikeRedundant Matters

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 160 MOTIONS TO STRIKE: PLEADINGS
PART I. INTRODUCTION

16-160 California Points & Authorities § 160.07

§ 160.07 Time Tolling Effect of Motion to Strike

The motion to strike is now statutorily recognized as a pleading. Filing of a notice of motion to strike has the same effect for default purposes when it is filed within the time for response to a pleading as an answer, demurrer, or other recognized pleading [see Code Civ. Proc. § 585 (entry of default)]. Thus, if a party serves and files a notice of motion to strike without demurring to the complaint, the time to answer is extended and no default may be entered against that defendant while the motion to strike is pending [see Code Civ. Proc. § 435(c)]. However, after the motion has been heard, within the time specified by Code Civ. Proc. § 1005(b) [see § 160.62] and ruled on, the obligation to answer or otherwise respond may be partially reinstated. If the motion is denied, the party who made the motion must respond to the pleading within the time allowed by the court. Code Civ. Proc. § 472a(d) provides that the court must allow the party that is filing the motion to strike a complaint time to answer if the motion is denied. If the motion is granted, the moving party must still respond to any unstricken portions of the pleading within the time allowed by the court. Failure to respond in either of these cases may result in entry of default [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 585, 586 (default)].

The filing of a notice of motion to strike does not extend the time within which to demur [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 435(d), 585(f)].

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsDemurrersCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsMotions to StrikeImmaterial MattersCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsMotions to StrikeRedundant MattersCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeMotion PracticeTime LimitationsCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticePleadingsAnswersCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticePleadingsTime LimitationsGeneral Overview

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 160 MOTIONS TO STRIKE: PLEADINGS
PART I. INTRODUCTION

16-160 California Points & Authorities § 160.08

§ 160.08 Speaking Motion Not Proper

A motion to strike may not rely on extrinsic evidence [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437(a)]. For a full discussion of this restriction, see § 160.60.

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 160 MOTIONS TO STRIKE: PLEADINGS
PART I. INTRODUCTION

16-160 California Points & Authorities § 160.09

§ 160.09 Time for Hearing

For a discussion concerning the time when a hearing on a motion to strike must be scheduled, see § 160.62.

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 160 MOTIONS TO STRIKE: PLEADINGS
PART I. INTRODUCTION

16-160 California Points & Authorities § 160.10

§ 160.10 Trial Court Delay Reduction Act

Under the Trial Court Delay Reduction Act, courts have discretion to strike pleadings for noncompliance with program rules, if, after taking into account the effect of previous sanctions or previous lack of compliance in the case, it appears that less severe sanctions would not be effective [Gov. Code § 68608(b); see, e.g., Los Angeles Super. Ct. Rules, Rules 7.13, 8.0; see also Code Civ. Proc. § 575.2; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 2.30]. Counsel in cases governed by trial delay reduction programs should consult the local rules for specific provisions governing the striking of pleadings as a sanction.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsDemurrersCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsMotions to StrikeImmaterial MattersCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsMotions to StrikeRedundant MattersCivil ProcedureSanctionsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureSanctionsContemptCivil Contempt

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 160 MOTIONS TO STRIKE: PLEADINGS
PART I. INTRODUCTION

16-160 California Points & Authorities § 160.11

§ 160.11 Page Limits on Memoranda

Generally, a memorandum must not exceed 15 pages in length. A reply or closing memorandum may not exceed 10 pages in length [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1113(d)]. Any party desiring to file a longer memorandum must obtain leave of court [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1113(d)]. For further discussion of the page limitations under Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1113, and of other basic format requirements of memoranda, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs, § 1.01[4].

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 160 MOTIONS TO STRIKE: PLEADINGS
PART I. INTRODUCTION

16-160 California Points & Authorities § 160.12

§ 160.12 Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For forms and a discussion relating to motions to strike, see Ch. 375, Motions to Strike: Pleadings in California Forms of Pleading and Practice. For forms and discussion relating to demurrers, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 206, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

For special motions to strike under the California anti-SLAPP statutes [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16 et seq.], see Ch. 376, Motions to Strike: Anti -SLAPP.

For orders striking the whole or parts of pleadings as a sanction under Code Civ. Proc. § 2023(b)(4)(A) [Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(d)(1)] for failure to obey a discovery order, see Ch. 190, Discovery: Scope, Regulation, and Timing .

For forms and a discussion relating to motions for summary judgment, see Ch. 537, Summary Judgment in California Forms of Pleading and Practice.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsDemurrersCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsMotions to StrikeImmaterial MattersCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsMotions to StrikeRedundant MattersCivil ProceduresPretrial JudgmentsJudgment on the Pleadings

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 160 MOTIONS TO STRIKE: PLEADINGS
PART I. INTRODUCTION

16-160 California Points & Authorities § 160.13

§ 160.13 Related Points and Authorities Chapters

For memoranda supporting and opposing anti-SLAPP special motions to strike, see Ch. 161, Motions to Strike: Anti -SLAPP.

For memoranda supporting and opposing a demurrer, see Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

For memoranda supporting and opposing motions for summary judgment, see Ch. 221, Summary Judgments .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsDemurrersCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsMotions to StrikeImmaterial MattersCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsMotions to StrikeRedundant MattersCivil ProcedurePretrial JudgmentsJudgment on the Pleadings

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 160 MOTIONS TO STRIKE: PLEADINGS
PART I. INTRODUCTION

16-160 California Points & Authorities §§ 160.14-160.29

[Reserved]

§§ 160.14[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 160 MOTIONS TO STRIKE: PLEADINGS
PART II. FORMS
A. Supporting Motion to Strike

16-160 California Points & Authorities § 160.30

§ 160.30 Supporting Motion to Strike Whole or Part of Pleading [Code Civ. Proc. § 435]--General Form

[1] FORM

SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA,
COUNTY OF _____

	)
	)	NO. _____
_____ [name],	)	MEMORANDUM IN SUPPORT OF MOTION TO Plaintiff,	)	STRIKE [WHOLE or PART OF]
vs.	)	_____ [specify
_____ [name],	)	pleading, e.g., COMPLAINT]
Defendant.	)	Date: _____
	)	Time: _____
	)	Location: _____
	)	[Judge: _____]
	)	Date Action Filed: _____
		[Trial Date: _____]

_____

THE _____ [specify pleading, e.g., COMPLAINT] IS SUBJECT TO A MOTION TO STRIKE THE WHOLE OR ANY PART THEREOF.

A. Timely Motion to Strike Is Proper. Any party, within the time allowed to respond to a pleading, may serve and file a notice of motion to strike the whole or any part thereof (Code Civ. Proc. § 435(b)(1)).

B. Pleadings Subject to Motion to Strike. The pleadings at which a motion to strike may be directed include demurrers, answers, complaints, and cross complaints (see Code Civ. Proc. § 435(a)).

[Add points and authorities setting out specific grounds for striking pleading matter (see §§ 160.31 -160.43)].
Dated: _____.

Respectfully submitted,
_____ [firm name, if any]
By: _____ [signature]
_____ [typed name]
Attorney for _____ [party's status and name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a motion to strike the whole or any part of a complaint, cross complaint, answer, or demurrer. The foregoing sets out points of law establishing the statutory basis for bringing a motion to strike [see Code Civ. Proc. § 435]. Counsel should add points and authorities setting out specific grounds for a motion to strike, such as those set out in §§ 160.31 -160.43.

Counsel should insert facts and arguments into the foregoing form and any form that is used in combination with it to show the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

The time restriction stated in Paragraph A does not apply if the motion to strike is made as part of a motion under Code Civ. Proc. § 438(i)(1)(A), directed at a pleading filed after a motion for judgment on the pleadings was sustained with leave to amend [Code Civ. Proc. § 435(b)(1), (e); see also § 160.35 and Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings].

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For forms and discussion relating to motions to strike, see Ch. 375, Motions to Strike in California Forms of Pleading and Practice. For forms and discussion relating to demurrers, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 206, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

For forms and discussion relating to motions for summary judgment, see Ch. 537, Summary Judgment in California Forms of Pleading and Practice.

[c] Related Memoranda

For memoranda supporting and opposing a demurrer, see Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

For memoranda supporting and opposing motions for summary judgment, see Ch. 221, Summary Judgments .

[d] Opposing Memoranda

Memoranda in opposition to a motion to strike are set out in §§ 160.60 -160.68.

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 160 MOTIONS TO STRIKE: PLEADINGS
PART II. FORMS
A. Supporting Motion to Strike

16-160 California Points & Authorities § 160.31

§ 160.31 Supporting Motion to Strike Whole or Part of Pleading [Code Civ. Proc. § 435]--Pleading Matter Not Filed or Drawn in Conformity With Law [Code Civ. Proc. § 436(b)]

[1] FORM

[This form should be used in combination with a general form of memorandum supporting a motion to strike (see § 160.30) and with appropriate memoranda setting out specific points in which the pleading to be wholly or partially stricken fails to conform with state law (see §§ 160.33 -160.37).]

THE _____ [specify pleading, e.g., COMPLAINT] SHOULD BE STRICKEN BECAUSE IT WAS NOT _____ [DRAWN or FILED] IN CONFORMITY WITH LAW.

Improperly Drawn or Filed Pleading Matter Subject to Motion to Strike. The court may, on a motion to strike pursuant to Code of Civil Procedure Section 435 (statutory authority for motion to strike) or at any time in its discretion, strike any pleading or part thereof not drawn or filed in conformity with state law (Code Civ. Proc. § 436(b)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be used to support a motion to strike all or part of a pleading on the grounds that the matter to be stricken was not drawn or filed in conformity with California law [see Code Civ. Proc. § 436(b)]. This form sets out the statutory basis for the court's power to strike pleading matter that was not drawn or filed in conformity with California law. The form should be used in combination with a general form in support of a motion to strike [see § 160.30] and with points and authorities setting out specific points in which the matter to be stricken fails to conform with state law, such as those set out in §§ 160.32 -160.37.

Counsel should insert facts and arguments into this form and into any points and authorities used in combination with it, showing how the points of law stated relate to the facts of the case.

[b] Pleadings Violating Specific Statutes, Rules, or Court Orders

Code Civ. Proc. § 436(b) gives the court the explicit power to strike all or part of any pleading that violates any particular law governing the drawing or filing of pleadings. A rule of law which matter in a pleading violates would ordinarily be subject to judicial notice [see Evid. Code §§ 451, 452, 453]. Matter subject to judicial notice under Evid. Code § 452 or 453 that is the basis for a motion to strike must be specified in the motion or in the accompanying points and authorities, except as the court may otherwise permit [Code Civ. Proc. § 437(b)]. In arguing that the pleading matter, which the motion to strike is directed against, violates a statutory rule of pleading or a rule of court, counsel should cite both Code Civ. Proc. § 436(b) and the specific statute or rule that the pleading matter violates. In arguing that the pleading matter violates a court order, counsel should cite Code Civ. Proc. § 436(b) and ask the court to take notice of the order that the matter violates, pursuant to Evid. Code §§ 452, 453; see Evid. Code § 453 and Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 3.1113(m), 3.1306(c) on procedure concerning requesting judicial notice]. Local rules concerning procedure for obtaining judicial notice of court files should also be consulted.

[c] Opposing Memoranda

Points and authorities in opposition to motions to strike, including motions to strike a pleading not filed or drawn in conformity with the laws of the state are set out in §§ 160.60 -160.65.

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 160 MOTIONS TO STRIKE: PLEADINGS
PART II. FORMS
A. Supporting Motion to Strike

16-160 California Points & Authorities § 160.32

§ 160.32 Supporting Motion to Strike Whole or Part of Pleading [Code Civ. Proc. § 435]--Pleading Matter Not Filed or Drawn in Conformity With Law [Code Civ. Proc. § 436(b)]--Amended Pleading Not in Conformity With Court's Prior Ruling

[1] FORM

[This form should be combined with a general form of memorandum supporting a motion to strike setting out the statutory basis for making a motion to strike (see § 160.30) and a form of memorandum setting out the statutory basis for the court's power to strike pleading matter that was not drawn or filed in conformity with law (see § 160.31).]

THE AMENDED _____ [specify pleading, e.g., COMPLAINT] SHOULD BE STRICKEN BECAUSE IT WAS NOT FILED IN CONFORMITY WITH THE PRIOR RULING OF THE COURT.

Pleading Not in Conformity With Court's Prior Ruling Subject to Motion to Strike. A trial court has authority to strike a pleading that is not filed in conformity with its prior ruling (Janis v. California State Lottery Com. (1998) 68 Cal. App. 4th 824, 829, 80 Cal. Rptr. 2d 549).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of a motion to strike an amended pleading that was not filed in conformity with the court's prior ruling. This form should be used in combination with a general form [see § 160.30] and a form setting out the point that pleading matter that was not drawn or filed in conformity with the laws of this state may be stricken [see Code Civ. Proc. § 436(b); see also § 160.31].

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Pleading Not in Conformity With Court's Prior Ruling Subject to Motion to Strike

Janis v. California State Lottery Com. (1998) 68 Cal. App. 4th 824, 80 Cal. Rptr. 2d 549 , involved a class action against the California State Lottery Commission (CSL) and GTECH Corporation (GTECH), seeking recovery of moneys lost by Keno players during the four years that CSL operated the lottery Keno game. Ultimately, GTECH filed a motion for summary judgment which was granted. In so doing, however, the court also granted plaintiff's request for leave to amend, noting that plaintiff was free to assert a new cause of action against GTECH, but cautioned plaintiff that plaintiff could not amend to add any new claim back in on any of the theories as to which summary judgment had been sustained. Plaintiff filed a first amended complaint reasserting the original causes of action and adding language to each concerning a violation of Gov. Code §§ 8880.4(a)(2) and 8880.63. Thereafter, GTECH filed a motion to strike the allegations against it which was granted and judgment was entered. Plaintiff appealed (68 Cal. App. 4th 824, 827-829) .

The court of appeal affirmed. The court noted that the trial court has authority to strike sham pleadings, or those not in conformity with its prior ruling (68 Cal. App. 4th 824, 829) . Plaintiff's first amended complaint reasserted the original causes of action against GTECH and merely appended a sentence to each concerning the alleged violation of the Lottery Act. Thus, plaintiff failed to comply with the court's ruling. Consequently, the motion to strike was properly granted (68 Cal. App. 4th 824, 829) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 160 MOTIONS TO STRIKE: PLEADINGS
PART II. FORMS
A. Supporting Motion to Strike

16-160 California Points & Authorities § 160.33

§ 160.33 Supporting Motion to Strike Whole or Part of Pleading [Code Civ. Proc. § 435]--Pleading Matter Not Filed or Drawn in Conformity With Law [Code Civ. Proc. § 436(b)]--Amended Pleading Without Permission of Court [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 472, 473(a)]

[1] FORM

[This form should be combined with a general form of memorandum supporting a motion to strike setting out the statutory basis for making a motion to strike (see § 160.30) and a form of memorandum setting out the statutory basis for the court's power to strike pleading matter that was not drawn or filed in conformity with law (see § 160.31).]

THE AMENDED _____ [specify pleading, e.g., COMPLAINT] SHOULD BE STRICKEN BECAUSE IT WAS FILED WITHOUT PERMISSION OF THE COURT WHEN SUCH PERMISSION WAS REQUIRED.

A. Amended Complaint Filed Without Permission Is Subject to Be Stricken. An amended complaint filed without permission, when such permission is required, may be stricken upon motion (Stafford v. Ballinger (1962) 199 Cal. App. 2d 289, 297, 18 Cal. Rptr. 568 (case decided under Code Civ. Proc. § 435, which has been amended to authorize motions to strike pleadings in general and not merely complaints)).

[Optional] B. Only One Timely Amendment of Course Is Provided for. Any pleading may be amended once by the party of course, and without costs, at any time before the answer or demurrer is filed, or after demurrer before trial of the issue of law thereon (Code Civ. Proc. § 472).

[Optional] C. Permission Is Required Unless Statute Provides for Amendment of Course. Under the statutory provisions allowing amendments at the court's discretion, when the conditions for allowing an amendment of course are not satisfied, amendments must be sought by noticed motion for leave to amend, which should be supported by affidavits showing why leave should be granted (see Code Civ. Proc. § 473(a)(1); Loser v. E.R. Bacon Co. (1962) 201 Cal. App. 2d 387, 390, 20 Cal. Rptr. 221).

[Optional] D. Permission Required After Responsive Pleading Is Filed or Time for Filing Response Passes. Once the response to a pleading has been filed, or the time within which a response may be filed has passed, the right to amend the pleading is gone, and any amendments require permission of the court sought by appropriate motion (Tingley v. Times Mirror (1907) 151 Cal. 1, 11, 89 P. 1097 ; Asia Investment Co. v. Borowski (1982) 133 Cal. App. 3d 832, 840, 184 Cal. Rptr. 317 ; see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 472, 473(a)(1)).

[Optional] E. Amendment Adding New Parties Always Requires Permission. The statutory right to amend a pleading once of course, which is set out in Section 472 of the Code of Civil Procedure, does not encompass the bringing in of new parties without permission of the court (Taliaferro v. Davis (1963) 220 Cal. App. 2d 793, 795, 34 Cal. Rptr. 120).

[Optional] F. Permission to Amend Does Not Authorize Addition of New Parties. An authorization to amend a complaint that does not specifically permit the addition of new parties applies only to the causes of action alleged against the parties already named and does not authorize the addition of new parties (Taliaferro v. Davis (1963) 220 Cal. App. 2d 793, 794-795, 34 Cal. Rptr. 120 ; see also Code Civ. Proc. § 473(a)(1); see Phoenix of Hartford Ins. Companies v. Colony Kitchens (1976) 57 Cal. App. 3d 140, 147, 128 Cal. Rptr. 893).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of a motion to strike an amended pleading that was filed without leave of the court, or includes matter beyond the scope of the court's leave, in a case when leave to file an amended pleading is required. The form sets out the point that an amended pleading filed without leave of the court when leave is required is subject to a motion to strike. It also sets out the points that leave of the court is required to file more than one amended pleading and to file any amended pleading after the time to answer the original pleading has run. Finally, the form sets out the point that permission is always required for an amendment adding new parties, and that leave to amend a pleading does not entail permission to add new parties unless the leave explicitly so provides. This form should be used in combination with a general form [see § 160.30] and a form setting out the point that pleading matter that was not drawn or filed in conformity with the laws of this state may be stricken [see § 160.31].

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Use of Pre-1982 Case Law

The cases cited in this form were decided before the 1982 revision of the statutory scheme governing motions to strike. However, since none of the rules set out in these cases are inconsistent with the current statutory provisions, it appears that they are still good law. For discussion of the effect of the 1982 reorganization on prior case law, see § 160.03.

[c] Only Added Parties May Move to Strike Addition of Parties

One court of appeal has held that a motion to strike a pleading on the ground that it adds new parties without leave of the court should be granted only in favor of those defendants that were added without leave and has declined to uphold such a motion in favor of defendants named in the original pleading [People ex rel. Dept. Pub. Wks. v. Clausen (1967) 248 Cal. App. 2d 770, 782, 57 Cal. Rptr. 227 (cross complaint)].

[d] Related Memoranda

For forms relating to amended pleadings generally, see Ch. 16, Amended and Supplemental Pleadings, § 16.30 et seq., in this set.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Amended Complaint Filed Without Permission Is Subject to Be Stricken

In Stafford v. Ballinger (1962) 199 Cal. App. 2d 289, 18 Cal. Rptr. 568 , plaintiff sought to acquire title to certain real property either through a judgment quieting title or by a decree of specific performance. The trial court sustained the defendants' demurrers to the plaintiff's third amended complaint without leave to amend. The plaintiff nevertheless filed a fourth amended complaint. The defendants moved to strike the fourth amended complaint, and the trial court granted the motion. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal upheld the trial court's order striking the fourth amended complaint. The court stated that an amended complaint filed without permission may be stricken on motion. The court stated that authority for striking such a pleading derived from Code Civ. Proc. § 435, which provided for motion to strike a complaint in whole or in part [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 435 as amended, authorizing motions to strike pleadings in general; see also Code Civ. Proc. § 436(b) authorizing the striking of pleading not filed in conformity with law or order of the court], and from the inherent powers of the court to prevent frustration, abuse, or disregard of court processes (199 Cal. App. 2d 289, 297) .

[b] Permission Is Required Unless Statute Provides for Amendment of Course

Code Civ. Proc. § 473(a)(1) provides that the court may, in furtherance of justice, and on such terms as may be proper, (1) allow a party to amend any pleading or proceeding by adding or striking out the name of any party, or by correcting a mistake in the name of a party, or a mistake in any other respect and (2) in the court's discretion, allow an amendment to any pleading or proceeding in other particulars, after notice to the adverse party, on such terms as may be just. Code Civ. Proc. § 473 appears to overlap partially with Code Civ. Proc. § 472 (see Paragraph B, above) which provides for an amendment of pleading by the party of course if the conditions that it sets out are met. The apparent effect of these statutes taken together is that if the conditions of Code Civ. Proc. § 472 are not met, an amended pleading must be filed pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 473(a)(1). However, since Code Civ. Proc. § 473(a)(1) does not give the party a right to amend a pleading, but rather gives the court the power to permit such an amendment in its discretion, it appears that permission by the court is necessary to provide the statutory authorization to amend a pleading when Code Civ. Proc. § 472 does not apply.

Loser v. E.R. Bacon Co. (1962) 201 Cal. App. 2d 387, 20 Cal. Rptr. 221 , was an action for personal injuries sustained in an industrial workplace. Plaintiff sued defendants on the theory that defendants had supplied plaintiff's employer with a defective machine, thereby causing plaintiff's injuries. After plaintiff had filed one original and one amended complaint and defendants had answered, plaintiff filed a second amended complaint stating an additional cause of action based on breach of warranty. Plaintiff had sought no prior permission to file the second amended complaint. The trial court struck the second amended complaint without prejudice to defendants' existing rights to file another amended complaint if permission to do so were granted after proper notice.

The court of appeal upheld the trial court's striking of the complaint. The court noted that because plaintiff filed the amendment after defendants had filed the answer, the conditions of Code Civ. Proc. § 472 for filing an amended complaint of course had not been met [see discussion under § 160.33[3][c]] and so applied Code Civ. Proc. § 473 (201 Cal. App. 2d 387, 389-390) . The court held that under Code Civ. Proc. § 473 amendments prior to trial ordinarily must be sought by noticed motion for leave to amend, which should be supported by appropriate affidavits explaining the purpose and need for the amendment and the reason for failure to raise the issues earlier. The court further held that the nature of the proposed amendment should be indicated by presenting the amendment itself to the court in the noticed motion (201 Cal. App. 2d 387, 390) . The court noted that the procedures for obtaining permission to file an amended complaint under Code Civ. Proc. § 473 had not been followed in the case before it and stated that the court may by virtue of its inherent power to prevent abuse of its processes strike an amended complaint that has been filed in disregard of established procedural process (201 Cal. App. 2d 387, 390) .

The court held that the court could strike the pleading even though the motion to strike for failure to seek permission was brought by only one of the defendants. The court further held that the action of the trial court was not an abuse of discretion because the order to strike was made without prejudice to the rights of plaintiff to file another amended complaint if permission to do so were to be granted after proper notice (201 Cal. App. 2d 387, 390) . The court also rejected plaintiff's argument that prejudice must be shown before a court may strike a complaint (201 Cal. App. 2d 387, 389) .

This case was decided before the enactment of Code Civ. Proc. § 436(b), which provides that a court may strike pleading matter that was not drawn or filed in conformity with the laws of this state or an order of the court. Since an amended pleading filed without permission when permission was required is not filed in conformity with Code Civ. Proc. § 473(a), Code Civ. Proc. § 436(b) seems to provide explicit statutory authorization for the kind of strike order upheld by the court in this case. Counsel should therefore cite Code Civ. Proc. §§ 436(b) and 473(a) along with this case.

[c] Permission Required After Responsive Pleading Is Filed or Time for Filing Response Passes

Tingley v. Times Mirror (1907) 151 Cal. 1, 89 P. 1097 , involved an action for libel. Defendant filed an answer after a demurrer to the complaint had been overruled. Plaintiff filed no demurrer to the answer. On the day before the trial was to commence, defendant served on the plaintiff and filed an amended answer, which introduced additional pleas. At commencement of the trial, plaintiff moved to strike the amended complaint on the ground that it had been filed without leave of court or authority of law, and had changed issues raised in the action by introducing the new pleas. The trial court granted the motion. After commencement of trial, defendant moved the court for permission to file the amended answer that had previously been stricken and the trial court denied the motion. Defendant then eliminated certain pleas that had been added to the amended answer and filed the answer thus amended with the consent of plaintiff. Trial resulted in judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appealed, arguing, inter alia, that the court had erred in striking its amended answer and refusing permission to file the amended answer until the defendant had dropped certain pleas from it.

On appeal, the defendant argued that under Code Civ. Proc. § 472, it had an absolute right to amend its answer at any time before trial, since the plaintiff had not closed the time within which a pleading may be amended by filing a demurrer to the answer (151 Cal. 1, 9) . Plaintiff argued that Code Civ. Proc. § 472 conferred a right only on the plaintiff to amend a complaint and did not extend to amendment of the answer (151 Cal. 1, 9) . The Supreme Court upheld the decision of the trial court to strike the amended answer, but did not accept either of the proffered interpretations of Code Civ. Proc. § 472. Rather, the Court held that under Code Civ. Proc. § 472, the right of a plaintiff to amend his or her complaint as a matter of course is extended only up to the time when defendant's answer is filed or, if defendant demurs, only while the issue of law raised by the demurrer is undetermined. Thus, the Court stated that plaintiff's right to amend under Code Civ. Proc. § 472 is gone if defendant answers without demurring or if defendant's demurrer is overruled (151 Cal. 1, 10-11) . As to amendments by defendant, the Court held that under Code Civ. Proc. § 472, if plaintiff demurs to the answer, the right to amend can be exercised only during the time when the issues raised by the demurrer are undetermined. If plaintiff does not demur, the Court held that defendant's right to amend extends only up to the end of the time within which the demurrer might have been interposed (151 Cal. 1, 11) .

In supporting its conclusion, the Court stated that the obvious purpose of Code Civ. Proc. § 472 is to aid and further the right of all parties to a litigation to amend all pleadings with a view of presenting for trial the real merits, assertive and defensive, of the controversy (151 Cal. 1, 9) . Thus, the Court stated that it would be unjust to read that statute in such a way as to confer a right to amend on either party that is not conferred on the other, or to work a hardship on either party, or to interfere with the progress of a trial after the issues of fact have been made. The Court held that therefore, while the right to amend is granted to both parties, it is limited to the time period within which either party may exercise it (151 Cal. 1, 9-10) .

Asia Investment Co. v. Borowski (1982) 133 Cal. App. 3d 832, 184 Cal. Rptr. 317 , involved an action for malicious prosecution and interference with contract based on a prior action filed by the present defendants that had been dismissed for laches. This action was ultimately consolidated with other actions in a complex series of litigations. Defendants answered the malicious prosecution aspect of the action and subsequently moved for summary judgment, on the ground that dismissal of the prior action because of laches did not constitute a termination favorable to the present plaintiffs in the sense in which such a favorable termination is required in order to prosecute a malicious prosecution action. Plaintiff opposed the summary judgment motion and moved, inter alia, for leave to amend its complaint. The trial court granted defendants' summary judgment motion, and denied plaintiff's request for leave to amend. Plaintiff appealed, arguing, inter alia, that it should have been granted leave to amend since it had a right to amend its complaint as a matter of course, pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 472.

The court of appeal upheld the trial court's decision. With respect to the plaintiff's argument that it had a right to amend its complaint as a matter of course, the court stated the rule that the right of a plaintiff to amend his or her complaint under Code Civ. Proc. § 472 is extended only up to the time that the defendant's answer is filed, and that once the answer is filed, plaintiff's right to amend as a matter of course is gone. In the case before it, the court noted that defendants had answered some time before plaintiff had filed its motion for leave to amend (133 Cal. App. 3d 832, 840) .

[d] Amendment Adding New Parties Always Requires Permission

In Taliaferro v. Davis (1963) 220 Cal. App. 2d 793, 34 Cal. Rptr. 120 , a demurrer to plaintiff's original complaint was sustained and motions to strike several portions of the complaint were granted. Plaintiff was allowed to amend his complaint and subsequently filed an amended complaint bringing in an additional defendant. The new defendant thus brought in moved to have the amended complaint stricken insofar as it attempted to add her as a defendant. The trial court granted the motion to strike on the grounds that the complaint was filed without leave of the court. Plaintiff appealed this ruling.

The court of appeal upheld the trial court's striking of the amended complaint. The court held that the right to amend as a matter of course that is set out in Code Civ. Proc. § 472 does not permit the bringing in of new parties (220 Cal. App. 2d 793, 795) . Rather, the court stated, the bringing in of new parties is dealt with by Code Civ. Proc. § 473, which requires express permission of the court (220 Cal. App. 2d 793, 795) .

[e] Permission to Amend Does Not Authorize Addition of New Parties

The facts and procedural background to Taliaferro v. Davis (1963) 220 Cal. App. 2d 793, 34 Cal. Rptr. 120 , are discussed under § 160.33[3][d]. In that case, the demurrer of one of the defendants to the original complaint was sustained and the same defendant's motion to strike portions of the complaint was granted, the plaintiff being allowed to amend his complaint. An amended complaint was filed bringing in the present respondent as defendant. This defendant moved to strike the amended complaint insofar as it attempted to add her as a party defendant on the ground that it was filed without authority from the court. The trial court granted the motion and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal upheld the trial court's order granting the motion to strike. Plaintiff had argued that the permission to amend the original complaint, which the trial court had given on sustaining the originally named defendant's demurrer to the original complaint, authorized plaintiff to bring in an additional party in his amended complaint. The court labeled this argument a non sequitur. The court stated that the permission to amend granted by the court pertained only to the cause of action against the originally named defendant (220 Cal. App. 2d 793, 794) . In conclusion, the court stated that leave of court specifically to add new parties was required under Code Civ. Proc. § 473 before new parties could properly be added (220 Cal. App. 2d 793, 795) .

Phoenix of Hartford Ins. Companies v. Colony Kitchens (1976) 57 Cal. App. 3d 140, 128 Cal. Rptr. 893 , involved a personal injury action in which the original plaintiff alleged that he had sustained damages as a result of an automobile accident caused by negligence of defendant's servant. Defendant answered the original complaint and moved for judgment on the pleadings, asserting that the original complaint showed on its face that the action was barred by the statute of limitations. The trial court sustained the motion for judgment on the pleadings with leave to plaintiff to amend the complaint. Subsequently, an amended complaint was filed adding the original plaintiff's insurer, who had made payments to the original plaintiff under an uninsured motorist policy provision, as a party plaintiff suing by and through its assured, the original plaintiff. In the amended complaint the insurer sought to recover the money it had paid to the original defendant under the uninsured motorist's provision pursuant to Ins. Code § 11580.2 (uninsured motorist insurer as subrogated to rights of insured against persons causing damage). The trial court entered judgment in favor of the plaintiffs, and defendant appealed.

The court of appeal reversed the trial court's decision, holding inter alia, that the insurer's action had been improperly joined to that of the original plaintiff. The court stated that the insured's cause of action as stated in the amended complaint was distinct from the original plaintiff's cause of action in that the insurer was seeking to enforce statutorily conferred subrogation rights, while the original plaintiff had been suing in common law tort. The court stated further that if the insurer's action could have been joined to that of the original plaintiff, the joinder might have been effected only on permission by the court to file an amendment pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 473, or to intervene pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 387 (57 Cal. App. 3d 140, 146) . The court found such permission to be lacking, holding that the trial court's order that granted permission to amend the original complaint did not authorize an amendment to add a new cause of action on behalf of a new party (57 Cal. App. 3d 140, 147) .

The court stated that this was not a case in which a plaintiff in an original complaint amends the complaint so as to prosecute the action in a representative capacity, since the amendment did not state a cause of action under Ins. Code § 11580.2 on behalf of the original defendant in any capacity, and Ins. Code § 11580.2 did not authorize the original plaintiff to bring a suit under its terms on the insurer's behalf (57 Cal. App. 3d 140, 147) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Permission Required After Responsive Pleading Is Filed or Time for Filing Response Passes

The facts and procedural background of Loser v. E.R. Bacon Co. (1962) 201 Cal. App. 2d 387, 20 Cal. Rptr. 221 , are set out under § 160.33[3][b]. In that case, the court held that the right of a plaintiff to amend his or her complaint under the provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 472 (one timely amendment to pleading allowed as a matter of course) is extended only up to the time when the answer is filed (201 Cal. App. 2d 387, 389) . The court held that once the answer is filed, the plaintiff's right to amend as a matter of course is gone (201 Cal. App. 2d 387, 389) . Thus, the court applied Code Civ. Proc. § 473 to the amended complaint filed by the plaintiff (201 Cal. App. 2d 387, 389-390 ; see discussion under § 160.33[3][b]).

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 160 MOTIONS TO STRIKE: PLEADINGS
PART II. FORMS
A. Supporting Motion to Strike

16-160 California Points & Authorities § 160.34

§ 160.34 Supporting Motion to Strike Whole or Part of Pleading [Code Civ. Proc. § 435]--Pleading Matter Not Filed or Drawn in Conformity With Law [Code Civ. Proc. § 436(b)]--Pleading Filed by Stranger to Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 387]

[1] FORM

[This form should be used in combination with a general form of memorandum supporting a motion to strike (see § 160.30), and with a memorandum setting out the point that pleading matter may be stricken for failure to conform to state law (see § 160.31).]

THE _____ [specify pleading, e.g., COMPLAINT] FILED BY _____ [name] SHOULD BE STRICKEN BECAUSE HE/SHE/IT IS NOT A PARTY TO THIS ACTION AND HAS NOT BEEN GRANTED LEAVE TO INTERVENE.

A. Leave of Court Required for Intervention by Nonparty. An intervention takes place when a third person is permitted to become a party to an action between other persons and is made by complaint filed by leave of court (Code Civ. Proc. § 387; see Mercantile T. Co. v. Stockton etc. Co. (1919) 44 Cal. App. 558, 186 P. 1049 (case decided under former Code Civ. Proc. § 24; now see Code Civ. Proc. § 387).

B. Pleading Filed Without Permission by Stranger to Action May Be Stricken. A pleading by means of which a person not named as a party defendant seeks to interject himself or herself into a case without leave of the court may be stricken (Milstein v. Turner (1951) 107 Cal. App. 2d 184, 185, 236 P.2d 606).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of a motion to strike a pleading filed by a person who was not named as a party to the action and who has not obtained leave of the court to intervene in the action. This form sets out the points that leave of court is required for a nonparty to intervene in an action, and that a pleading filed by a nonparty without such leave may be stricken. The form should be used in combination with a general form [see § 160.30] and a form setting out the point that pleading matter that was not drawn or filed in conformity with the laws of this state may be stricken [see § 160.31].

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Use of Pre-1982 Case Law

The cases cited in this form were decided before the 1982 revision of the statutory scheme governing motions to strike. However, since none of the rules set out in these cases are inconsistent with the current statutory provisions, it appears that they are still good law. For discussion of the effect of the 1982 reorganization on prior case law, see § 160.03.

[c] Related Memoranda

For forms relating to intervention by third parties generally, see Ch. 124, Intervention .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Leave of Court Required for Intervention by Nonparty

Mercantile T. Co. v. Stockton etc. Co. (1919) 44 Cal. App. 558, 186 P. 1049 , involved an action to foreclose on a mortgage. The complaint named a railroad company and several fictitious persons under the names of First Doe, Second Doe, etc. as defendants. The complaint alleged that the true names of the fictitious defendants were unknown to plaintiff and prayed that when their names were ascertained the complaint might be amended by inserting their true names in place of the fictitious names. Before the case came to trial, a person who had not been named in the complaint and had not been served with process filed a demurrer to the complaint, identifying himself as a stockholder in the named defendant corporation and alleging that he was in fact the unknown First Doe defendant named in the complaint. Plaintiff moved to strike the demurrer, and the trial court upheld the motion. The person who had filed the demurrer appealed.

The court of appeal upheld the striking of the demurrer. In support of its holding, the court, stated inter alia, that if the person who had filed the demurrer had in fact had an interest that he felt it was his duty to protect by becoming a party to the suit, he could have asked leave of the court to file a petition in intervention pursuant to former Code Civ. Proc. § 24 [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 387]. Citing extensively from an earlier case on the same point, the court stated that former Code Civ. Proc. § 24 [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 387] clearly provides that the court and not the intervener determines whether the intervener may come into the case. The court further stated that in order to come into a case, an intervener must obtain leave of the court to make a showing by complaint and must serve the complaint on the other parties, who may answer or demur (44 Cal. App 558, 563) .

[b] Pleading Filed Without Permission by Stranger to Action May Be Stricken

Milstein v. Turner (1951) 107 Cal. App. 2d 184, 236 P.2d 606 , involved an action for ejectment. An action had originally been brought by plaintiff against one Turner Sr. to quiet title to a certain plot of land. The decree in that action adjudged that title to the land was vested absolutely in plaintiff with a right to immediate possession. Turner Sr. subsequently brought an action against plaintiff charging that any title that plaintiff had in the land was based on judgments obtained through fraud. This action was still undetermined at the time of the present action. The present action for possession of the premises and damages was brought by plaintiff against one Turner Jr., son of Turner Sr., and his wife, who were in actual possession of the land. Turner Jr. and his wife answered, alleging that since the action for fraud brought by Turner Sr. was still undetermined, plaintiff's title to the land was unclear. After the case had been tried and submitted to the court for decision, Turner Sr., who had not been named a party defendant in the ejectment action, filed an answer, without leave of court and without notice to plaintiff. Plaintiff moved to strike this answer, and the trial court granted the motion. Turner Sr. thereupon appealed.

The court of appeal upheld the trial court's striking of the answer without referring to the facts on which Turner Sr. rested his appeal. The court stated that it was enough to say that, even if Turner Sr. had a most meritorious case against plaintiff, he was not entitled to inject that case into a case instituted by the plaintiff against other parties by the simple device of filing an answer to it. The court therefore concluded that the trial court's order striking Turner Sr.'s answer was correct (107 Cal. App. 2d 184, 187) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 160 MOTIONS TO STRIKE: PLEADINGS
PART II. FORMS
A. Supporting Motion to Strike

16-160 California Points & Authorities § 160.35

§ 160.35 Supporting Motion to Strike Whole or Part of Pleading [Code Civ. Proc. § 435]--Pleading Matter Not Filed or Drawn in Conformity With Law [Code Civ. Proc. § 436(b)]--Untimely Responsive Pleading [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 412.20(a)(3), 430.40, 432.10, 438(i)(1), 472a(b); Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1320(g)]

[1] FORM

[This form should be used in combination with a general form of memorandum supporting a motion to strike (see § 160.30) and a form of memorandum setting out the point that pleading matter may be stricken for failure to conform to California law (see § 160.31).]

THE _____ [specify responsive pleading, e.g., ANSWER or DEMURRER] SHOULD BE STRICKEN BECAUSE IT WAS NOT FILED WITHIN THE TIME FOR FILING SUCH PLEADINGS.

A. An Untimely Responsive Pleading Filed Before Entry of Default May Be Stricken. Although the filing of an untimely responsive pleading before entry of default will prevent the default from being entered, the court may in its sound discretion grant a motion to strike such a pleading (Buck v. Morrossis (1952) 114 Cal. App. 2d 461, 464-465, 250 P.2d 270).

[Optional] B. Time to Respond to Complaint Is 30 Days. The summons served on a defendant must contain a direction that the defendant file or cause to be entered on the docket a pleading in response to the complaint within 30 days of service of the complaint (Code Civ. Proc. § 412.20(a)(3); see Code Civ. Proc. § 430.40(a) (time to demur)).

[Optional] C. Time to Respond to Cross Complaint Is 30 Days. A party served with a cross complaint may within 30 days after service move, demur, or otherwise plead to the cross complaint in the same manner as to an original complaint (Code Civ. Proc. § 432.10).

[Optional] D. Time to Answer or Amend After Demurrer. If a demurrer is overruled, leave to answer within 10 days is deemed granted, unless the court orders otherwise on terms as may seem just (Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1320(g); see Code Civ. Proc. § 472a(b) (terms of leave to answer after demurrer as set by court)).

[Optional] E. Time to Demur to Answer Is 10 Days. A party who has filed a complaint or cross complaint may, within 10 days after service of the answer to his or her pleading, demur to the answer (Code Civ. Proc. § 430.40(b)).

[Optional] F. Failure to Timely File an Amended Pleading After Losing Motion for Judgment on the Pleadings. The party against whom a Code of Civil Procedure Section 438 motion for judgment on the pleadings is granted with leave to amend has 30 days to file an amended pleading (Code Civ. Proc. § 438(h)(2)). If the party fails to file an amended pleading within that time, or otherwise violates the court order granting the motion, the party that brought the motion for judgment on the pleadings must respond by bringing a motion to strike the amended pleading and for entry of judgment in its favor (Code Civ. Proc. § 438 (i)(1)(A)). The provision of Code of Civil Procedure Section 435(b)(1), limiting the time for motions to strike to the time allowed for responding to a pleading, does not apply when the motion to strike is being made as part of a motion pursuant to Code of Civil Procedure Section 438(i)(1)(A) (Code Civ. Proc. § 435(b)(1), (e)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of a motion to strike when the defendant has filed his or her pleading in response to the complaint or other pleading after the time allowed for such response, but before default was entered. This form sets out the point that late-filed responsive pleadings are subject to be stricken at the discretion of the court, and sets out the statutory response times for various responsive pleadings. The form should be used in combination with a general form, setting out the statutory basis for making a motion to strike [see § 160.30] and a form setting out the point that pleading matter that was not drawn or filed in conformity with the laws of this state may be stricken [see § 160.31].

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. In particular, counsel should cite the statute setting out the response time for the responsive pleading and show that the time had run before the responsive pleading was filed by calling the court's attention to the appropriate filing dates. Counsel should insert additional argument showing why the court, in its discretion, should strike the untimely pleading.

[b] Use of Pre-1982 Case Law

The cases cited in this form were decided before the 1982 revision of the statutory scheme governing motions to strike. However, since none of the rules set out in these cases are inconsistent with the current statutory provisions, it appears that they are still good law. For discussion of the effect of the 1982 reorganization on prior case law, see § 160.03.

[c] Necessity of Moving to Strike Before Default Entered

A responsive pleading does not become a nullity because it was untimely filed, and it will serve to preclude the taking of default unless it is stricken. Thus, when the defendant files a responsive pleading late but before default has been entered, the plaintiff must move to strike the pleading and the motion must be granted before the plaintiff can proceed to obtain entry of default [Goddard v. Pollock (1974) 37 Cal. App. 3d 137, 141-142, 112 Cal. Rptr. 215 (see discussion under § 160.35[4][a])].

It should be noted that in Goddard, plaintiffs had filed a motion to strike defendants' untimely responsive pleading after the trial court had erroneously directed entry of the default despite the fact that the pleading was on file before the default had been entered. The court of appeal did not consider this motion to strike in directing that the default be vacated, but stated that the case would have created no problem if the court had had an opportunity to consider the plaintiffs' motion to strike before entry of default had been directed. Thus, it is particularly important that counsel move to strike before attempting to obtain entry of default.

[d] No Necessity of Moving to Strike in Case of Untimely Amended Complaint

The proper procedure for the defendant to follow when a plaintiff untimely files an amended complaint after a demurrer has been sustained is to move to strike the complaint. After the complaint is stricken, the defendant may then move for dismissal under Code Civ. Proc. § 581(f)(2) [Gitmed v. General Motors Corp. (1994) 26 Cal. App. 4th 824, 828, 31 Cal. Rptr. 2d 625] .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 160.61 may be submitted in opposition to a motion to strike supported by this memorandum.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] An Untimely Responsive Pleading Filed Before Entry of Default May Be Stricken

Buck v. Morrossis (1952) 114 Cal. App. 2d 461, 250 P.2d 270 , involved an action for unlawful detainer and damages brought by plaintiffs as owners and lessors of certain business property against defendant as subtenant in possession of the property. The complaint alleged that defendant had refused to vacate the premises after the lease under which defendant had come into possession of the premises had expired, despite notice from plaintiffs that the lease would not be renewed after it expired. Defendant filed a general and special demurrer 14 days after he had been served with the complaint. Plaintiffs thereupon moved to strike the demurrer on the grounds that it was filed too late, and that it was sham and frivolous. The trial court granted the motion to strike without designating its reasons for so doing, and ordered that defendant's default be entered. The default judgment that was subsequently entered recited inter alia that the demurrer had been stricken for untimeliness. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal upheld the striking of the demurrer. In framing its holding, the court assumed without deciding that the defendant can raise the question of whether the court had power to strike its demurrer after he had defaulted (114 Cal. App. 2d 461, 464) . The court also proceeded from the premise that the demurrer was clearly 11 days late, since the defendant in an unlawful detainer action must plead within three days after service of summons and the defendant in the present case had not filed its demurrer until 14 days after service of summons, and since defendant had conceded that the demurrer was not timely (114 Cal. App. 2d 461, 464) .

Preliminarily, the court stated that it is probably the law that a default cannot properly be entered if there is already a pleading on file before the entry of default is made, even if that pleading was untimely (114 Cal. App. 2d 461, 464) . With respect to the propriety of the court's order to strike the demurrer, the court restated at length the rule and discussion set out on the point by the court in Cuddahy v. Gragg (1920) 46 Cal. App. 578, 580-581, 189 P. 721 . Citing Cuddahy, the court stated that it is proper practice for the plaintiff to move to strike a pleading that was filed late, but before entry of default, and that the trial court may very properly grant such a motion in the exercise of a sound discretion. The court further restated from Cuddahy the thesis that the plaintiff has no absolute right to have a pleading stricken from the files merely because it was not filed in time; and that on the other hand the defendant has no right to have his or her belated pleading remain in the files, since a defendant cannot as of right after the expiration of the time prescribed by statute (114 Cal. App. 2d 461, 465) . The court further stated that it would be a logical absurdity to hold that a defendant in an unlawful detainer proceeding, which under the law is entitled to priority and in which speedy determination is essential, could stall proceedings and engage in dilatory tactics by the simple device of filing a late demurrer (114 Cal. App. 2d 461, 465) .

The court dismissed defendant's argument that the court had no power to strike the demurrer as sham and frivolous, stating that it was because of its lateness and not because of its character as sham that the demurrer was stricken. Thus, the court noted that although the strike order itself had not stated a reason for striking the demurrer, the default judgment had recited that the demurrer had been stricken on the grounds of untimeliness. The court stated furthermore that even if this judgment cannot be used to explain the order, the order standing alone would have to be upheld if it can be sustained on any of the grounds urged in the motion (114 Cal. App. 2d 461, 465) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] An Untimely Responsive Pleading Filed Before Entry of Default May Be Stricken

In Goddard v. Pollock (1974) 37 Cal. App. 3d 137, 112 Cal. Rptr. 215 , plaintiffs alleged that they had purchased certain bonds from defendants that defendants had refused to redeem and on which defendants had refused to pay interest. After the time for a responsive pleading stated in the complaint had passed, defendants filed a motion to quash service. Plaintiffs' request to enter defendants' default was received after the motion to quash had been filed. The trial court subsequently ordered defendants' default to be entered and denied a motion by defendants to vacate the default. After the trial court had directed the entry of default, plaintiffs filed a motion to strike defendants' motion to quash. Defendants appealed the trial court's order denying the motion to vacate the default.

The court of appeal overturned the trial court's order. The court held that the notice of motion to quash had been in the files at the time when the request for entry of default was received by the clerk and that the presence of this motion in the files was sufficient to preclude entry of the default (37 Cal. App. 3d 137, 141-143) . The court cited Buck v. Morrossis (1952) 114 Cal. App. 2d 461, 464-465, 250 P.2d 270 , for the rule that the proper procedure in a case in which an untimely pleading has been filed is for the plaintiff to move to strike the defendant's untimely pleading and if the court grants such relief, thereafter to proceed to obtain the entry of default (37 Cal. App. 3d 137, 141) . The court further stated that the case would have created no problem if plaintiffs had filed their motion to strike the defendants' motion to quash service before the court had directed the clerk to enter the default. However, the court noted that the plaintiffs did not file their motion to strike until 12 days after the court had directed entry of the default, and made no further comment as to whether the motion should or should not have been granted (37 Cal. App. 3d 137, 141, 142) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 160 MOTIONS TO STRIKE: PLEADINGS
PART II. FORMS
A. Supporting Motion to Strike

16-160 California Points & Authorities § 160.36

§ 160.36 Supporting Motion to Strike Whole or Part of Pleading [Code Civ. Proc. § 435]--Pleading Matter Not Filed or Drawn in Conformity With Law [Code Civ. Proc. § 436(b)]--Unverified Answer to Verified Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 431.30(d), 446]

[1] FORM

[This form should be used in combination with a general form of memorandum supporting a motion to strike (see § 160.30), and a memorandum setting out the point that pleading matter not drawn or filed in conformity with California law may be stricken (see § 160.31).]

AN UNVERIFIED ANSWER TO A VERIFIED COMPLAINT IS SUBJECT TO BE STRICKEN.

A. Answer to Verified Complaint Must Be Verified. When the complaint is verified, the answer must be verified, unless the complaint is subject to Code of Civil Procedure Sections 90-100, governing economic litigation in limited civil cases (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 92(b), 446). In addition, subject to the same exception, the answer to a verified complaint, must deny allegations positively or according to the information and belief of the defendant (Code Civ. Proc. § 431.30(d)). [Even if the complaint is subject to Code of Civil Procedure Sections 90-100, if the cause of action is a claim assigned to a third party for collection, the answer must deny allegations positively or according to the information and belief of the defendant (Code Civ. Proc. § 431.30(d))].

B. An Unverified Answer to a Verified Complaint Is Subject to Motion to Strike. When verification of the complaint requires the defendant to file an verified answer, the defendant's unverified answer constitutes an admission of all material allegation in the verified complaint, and either an order granting a motion to strike the answer or an order granting a motion for judgment on the pleadings may properly be made by the court (see Code Civ. Proc. § 431.30(d); see also DeCamp v. First Kensington Corp. (1978) 83 Cal. App. 3d 268, 282-283, 147 Cal. Rptr. 869).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of a motion to strike an unverified answer to a verified complaint. The form sets out the point that an unverified answer to a verified complaint may be stricken, unless the complaint is subject to Code Civ. Proc. § 90 et seq. (economic litigation in limited civil cases) [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 92(b), 446]. Verification of the complaint also precludes a general denial, unless the compliant is subject to Code of Civil Procedure Sections 90-100. However, even if the complaint is subject to Sections 90-100, if the cause of action is a claim assigned to a third party for collection, general denial is precluded [Code Civ. Proc. § 431.30(d)]. The optional phrase in brackets at the end of Paragraph A, is for use in the latter situation.

The form should be used in combination with a general form setting out the statutory basis for making a motion to strike [see § 160.30] and a form setting out the point that pleading matter that was not drawn or filed in conformity with the laws of this state may be stricken [see § 160.31].

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] When Answer to Verified Complaint Must Be Verified

The general rule of verification of pleadings is that when the complaint is verified, the answer must be verified [see Code Civ. Proc. § 446]. However, an answer to a complaint or cross complaint filed pursuant to economic litigation procedures in limited civil cases need not be verified, even if the complaint or cross complaint is verified [Code Civ. Proc. § 92(b)]. All limited civil cases are subject to the economic litigation provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 90 et seq. except actions in small claims court, unlawful detainer, forcible detainer, and forcible entry [Code Civ. Proc. § 91(b)].

If the complaint is not verified or if it is subject to the economic litigation procedures, a general denial is sufficient, but only puts in issue the material allegations of the complaint. If the complaint is verified, the denial of the allegations must be made positively or according to the information and belief of the defendant, unless the complaint is subject to the economic litigation procedures. Even if the verified complaint is subject to the economic litigation procedures, if the cause of action is a claim assigned to a third party for collection, the answer must be made positively or according to the information and belief of the defendant [Code Civ. Proc. § 431.30(d)].

[c] Validity of Pre-1985 Case Law

DeCamp v. First Kensington Corp. (1978) 83 Cal. App. 3d 268, 147 Cal. Rptr. 869 , which is cited in Paragraph B of this form, was decided before the 1985 amendments to Code Civ. Proc. § 431.30, operative January 1, 1986. In addition, the action was decided before the 1982 revision of the statutory scheme governing motions to strike. Because the rule set out in Decamp is not inconsistent with the current statutory provisions, it appears that it is still good law. For discussion of the effect of the 1982 reorganization on prior case law, see § 160.03.

[d] Necessity of Raising Objection

If there is a defect in the verification of the defendant's answer, the plaintiff must move in timely fashion, either to strike the answer or for judgment for want of an answer. If the plaintiff goes to trial on the merits without objecting to the verification defect he or she will be deemed to have waived all objections on the point [McCullough v. Clark (1871) 41 Cal. 298, 302 ; Zavala v. Board of Trustees (1993) 16 Cal. App. 4th 1755, 1761, 20 Cal. Rptr. 2d 768 ; Ware v. Stafford (1962) 206 Cal. App. 2d 232, 237, 24 Cal. Rptr. 153] .

[e] Motion for Judgment on Pleadings as Alternative

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 446, the filing of an unverified answer to a verified complaint constitutes an admission of all of the allegations of the complaint, unless the complaint is subject to Code Civ. Proc. § 90 et seq. (economic litigation in limited civil cases) [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 92(b), 446]. Thus, a motion for judgment on the pleadings on the grounds that the answer does not state a defense may be used as an alternative procedure to a motion to strike the answer when the answer is unverified and not within any statutory exception to Code Civ. Proc. § 446 [see Code Civ. Proc. § 431.30(d); see also Hearst v. Hart (1900) 128 Cal. 327, 328, 60 P. 846 ; DeCamp v. First Kensington Corp. (1978) 83 Cal. App. 3d 268, 282, 283, 147 Cal. Rptr. 869 (decided prior to 1985 amendment to Code Civ. Proc. § 431.30(d))].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] An Unverified Answer to a Verified Complaint Is Subject to Be Stricken

DeCamp v. First Kensington Corp. (1978) 83 Cal. App. 3d 268, 147 Cal. Rptr. 869 , was an action for fraud. After defendants' demurrer was overruled, defendants filed an unverified answer to the complaint containing only a general denial. A statement was included in the answer asserting that to require defendants to verify their answer would violate defendants' right to protection from self-incrimination under the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution. Plaintiff thereupon filed a motion to strike the answer or, alternatively, for judgment on the pleadings on the ground that the answer failed to comply with former Code Civ. Proc. §§ 431.30(d) (denials to verified complaint as required to be made positively or according to information and belief) and 446 (answer to verified complaint as required to be verified) and therefore constituted an admission of the allegations of the complaint. After continuing hearing on the motion several times due to the continuing absence of the personal defendant and all officers of the corporate defendant from the state, the court granted plaintiff's motion to strike the unverified answer and entered defendants' default. Defendants appealed.

The court of appeal upheld the trial court's decision. The court cited Hearst v. Hart (1900) 128 Cal. 327, 328, 60 P. 846 , for the rule that when the defendant's answer is not properly verified the plaintiff should move in the trial court either to strike out the answer or for judgment for want of an answer (83 Cal. App. 3d 268, 283) .

Defendants had argued that the trial court should have granted them leave to amend by verifying the answer after ordering the answer stricken, relying on a rule that a party who has sustained an adverse judgment on the pleadings is entitled to the same opportunity to amend his or her pleading that such party would have had after normal ruling on a demurrer. The court acknowledged that this argument would have merit if the court's order were a judgment on the pleadings based on substantive insufficiency of the allegations. However, the court stated that the basis of the court's ruling was not substantive insufficiency, but rather the fact that the unverified complaint constituted an admission of all of the material allegations of the complaint (83 Cal. App. 3d 268, 282) . In support of this holding, the court cited Hearst, above, to the effect that there is no substantive difference between a judgment rendered on default for want of an answer, as was done after the answer was stricken in the present case, and a judgment rendered on an answer that under the Code of Civil Procedure admits all of the allegations of the complaint (83 Cal. App. 3d 268, 283) . The court concluded that while, as noted above, either an order striking the answer or a judgment on the pleadings would have been appropriate under the circumstances, neither type of order was equivalent to sustaining a demurrer under the circumstances of the case (83 Cal. App. 3d 268, 282) .

The court did, however, hold that the personal defendant should have the opportunity to add a verification by way of amendment for the separate reason that because the law had not yet been clarified on the point when the defendant had filed his answer, the defendant had reasonably feared that a verified answer might be used against him in criminal proceedings (83 Cal. App. 3d 268, 283) . The court stated that the corporate defendant had no right to add a verification on this ground, since as a corporation it had no self-incrimination privilege of its own and it had never had standing to assert the personal defendant's self-incrimination privilege on its own behalf (83 Cal. App. 3d 268, 280, 282) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] An Unverified Answer to a Verified Complaint Is Subject to Motion to Strike

Hearst v. Hart (1900) 128 Cal. 327, 60 P. 846 , was a suit on a promissory note in which defendant responded to the complaint with an unverified answer containing a general denial. Plaintiff moved for and the trial court granted judgment on the pleadings, from which defendant appealed.

The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment of the trial court. The Court stated in response to the defendant's argument that the proper procedure for plaintiff would have been to move to strike the answer that either a motion to strike or a motion for judgment on the pleadings on the ground that the answer set up no defense would have been proper (128 Cal. 327, 328) .

In Zavala v. Board of Trustees (1993) 16 Cal. App. 4th 1755, 20 Cal. Rptr. 2d 768 , a medical malpractice action, the defendant filed an unverified answer to the complaint, which had been verified by the plaintiff's attorney. When the defendant moved for nonsuit after the plaintiff had presented her case, the plaintiff moved for judgment on the pleadings based on defendant's failure to verify the answer. On appeal, the court held that the plaintiff had waived the objection by proceeding to trial. The court noted that the proper objection where a party fails to verify a pleading is a motion to strike (16 Cal. App. 4th 1755, 1761) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 160 MOTIONS TO STRIKE: PLEADINGS
PART II. FORMS
A. Supporting Motion to Strike

16-160 California Points & Authorities § 160.37

§ 160.37 Supporting Motion to Strike Whole or Part of Pleading [Code Civ. Proc. § 435]--Irremediable Failure to State Cause of Action [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 426, 431.10, 436]

[1] FORM

[This form should be used in combination with a general form of memorandum supporting a motion to strike (see § 160.30). This form may also be used in combination with a form of memorandum setting out the point that improper pleading matter may be stricken (see § 160.42), a form of memorandum setting out the point that irrelevant matter may be stricken from a pleading (see § 160.41) and a form of memorandum setting out the point that pleading matter may be stricken for failure to conform to the laws of California (see § 160.31).]

THE COMPLAINT SHOULD BE STRICKEN BECAUSE IT IS EVIDENTLY UNABLE TO STATE A CAUSE OF ACTION.

A. Complaint Must State Facts Constituting Cause of Action. A complaint or cross complaint must contain a statement of facts constituting a cause of action in ordinary and concise language (Code Civ. Proc. § 425.10(a)).

B. Demand for Relief Not Supported by Allegations May Be Stricken. A demand for judgment requesting relief not supported by the allegations of the complaint or cross complaint is an immaterial allegation and may be stricken as irrelevant matter (Code Civ. Proc. § 431.10(b)(3); see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 431.10(c), 436(a)).

C. Allegations That Cannot Be Rendered Sufficient to State Cause of Action May Be Stricken. Allegations that do not state a cause of action may be stricken from a pleading if it appears that amendments could not have corrected the defects of any part of the pleading and the party who filed the challenged pleading is not prejudiced by the order to strike (Wilson v. Sharp (1954) 42 Cal. 2d 675, 677, 268 P.2d 1062 ; see Hill v. Wrather (1958) 158 Cal. App. 2d 818, 823, 323 P.2d 567 (decided under former Code Civ. Proc. § 453; now see Code Civ. Proc. § 436(a))).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form should be used when the opposing party's complaint or cross complaint fails to state a cause of action, and it is evident that the complaint or cross complaint would not be able to state a cause of action even if it were amended. The form should be combined with § 160.30, which sets out the basic statutory authority for making a motion to strike. This form may also be combined with § 160.41, which sets out the statutory basis for the court's power to strike immaterial allegations from a pleading as irrelevant matter, and § 160.31, which sets out the statutory basis for the court's authority to wholly or partially strike a pleading that was not drawn in conformity with law.

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Basis of Authority for Striking

Most of the pre-1982 cases upholding the striking of pleading allegations that irremediably fail to state a cause of action simply uphold such orders to strike without discussing the authority therefore [see, e.g., Wilson v. Sharp (1954) 42 Cal. 2d 675, 677, 268 P.2d 1062 (discussed in § 160.37[4][a])].

Since Code Civ. Proc. § 425.10(a) requires that a complaint state a cause of action, counsel might also urge that a complaint or cross complaint that irremediably fails to state a cause of action should be stricken under Code Civ. Proc. § 436(b) as being not in conformity with the laws of California.

[c] Related Memoranda

For memoranda and opposing a demurrer which asserts that a complaint fails to state a cause of action, see Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings in this set.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Allegations Which Cannot Be Rendered Sufficient to State Cause of Action May Be Stricken

Wilson v. Sharp (1954) 42 Cal. 2d 675, 268 P.2d 1062 , involved an action by a taxpayer purporting to be acting on behalf of the county to recover salary alleged to have been illegally paid to one of the defendants, to enjoin future payment of such salary, and to obtain judgment declaring the rights and duties of the defendants. The complaint alleged that the defendant who had received the salary had been appointed to his position through an invalid promotional examination. An amended complaint filed by the plaintiff, inter alia, purported to state a cause of action against the county counsel of the county that had employed the defendant official for failure to act to recover the salary paid to the official before the statute of limitations for such recovery ran. The trial court granted a motion to strike this cause of action. This order removed the only cause of action alleged against the county counsel, thus rendering the order appealable (42 Cal. 2d 675, 677) . The plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal upheld the trial court's order. The plaintiff had argued that Gov. Code § 26525 (illegal payments by Board of Supervisors) required the county counsel to take action to recover salary paid illegally by the county to county officials (42 Cal. 2d 675, 677-678) . The court held, however, that Gov. Code § 26525 did not create a cause of action for private persons against a county counsel who, in exercising his or her discretion, failed to take action to recover salaries that were purportedly illegally paid to county officials (42 Cal. 2d 675, 678-679) . The court held that it followed from this that the challenged allegations of the amended complaint failed to state a cause of action, and that the plaintiff was therefore not prejudiced by the order striking the allegation (42 Cal. 2d 675, 679) .

The court did not specify what it meant in holding that the plaintiff was not prejudiced by the order to strike the challenged allegations. However, at page 677, the court cited a series of cases in support of its holding in which the court had found the challenged pleading matter to have not only failed to state a cause of action as written, but to be incapable of stating a cause of action even if amended [see Barr Lbr. Co. v. Shaffer (1951) 108 Cal. App. 2d 14, 23, 238 P.2d 99] .

The court also held that the objection that a complaint does not state a cause of action is not waived by a failure to demur, but may be raised at any time (42 Cal. 2d 675, 677) .

Hill v. Wrather (1958) 158 Cal. App. 2d 818, 323 P.2d 567 , was an action on a promissory note arising out of a transaction involving transfer of interest in a television station. Defendants filed a cross complaint and a first amended answer alleging fraud on the part of plaintiff. The factual basis of defendants' fraud allegation was that plaintiff and one Alvarez, who held interest in the television station with plaintiff, had misrepresented the nature of their relationship, causing the defendants to believe that they were dealing at arms length with each other, when they were in fact either married or living as husband and wife. Defendants alleged that they had relied on their belief that plaintiff and Alvarez were dealing with each other at arms length in agreeing to purchase the plaintiff's interest in the television station and convey a portion of their interest in the station to Alvarez in return for her services in managing the station. The trial court granted a motion to strike the cross complaint and those portions of the first amended answer that set out the fraud allegations, and placed plaintiff's demurrer to the cross complaint off calendar. Judgment for plaintiff followed, and defendants appealed.

The court of appeal upheld the trial court's order to strike. The court cited language of former Code Civ. Proc. § 453 providing that irrelevant and redundant material may be stricken from a pleading as authority for striking the material in the present case [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 436(a) (irrelevant material as subject to be stricken)] (158 Cal. App. 2d 818, 823) . However, the court acknowledged that the rule that irrelevant and redundant material may be stricken from a pleading was qualified by the rule that a motion to strike cannot be made to serve the purposes of a special demurrer, and that when a motion to strike is so broad as to reach matters that are relevant it should be denied in its entirety. In this case in particular, the court noted that since the entire cross complaint was stricken and the demurrer to it was placed off calendar without ruling, the defendants were deprived of the right to amend if the pleading was faulty in any particular way that could have been corrected by amendment. Thus, the court indicated that the basic issues were whether the cross complaint stated a cause of action, and whether under the facts alleged an amendment might correct any defects in the pleading (158 Cal. App. 2d 818, 823) .

Applying the above-stated reasoning to the facts, the court stated that there was no allegation or suggestion that the concealed relationship caused the value of the stock purchased to be less than it would otherwise have been, or that Alvarez failed to carry out the services that she was expected to perform in managing the station (158 Cal. App. 2d 818, 824-825) . The court held that measured against the rules governing pleading of fraud, the cross complaint failed to state a cause of action in that its allegations failed to establish that the defendants had suffered any detriment as a result of the claimed fraud, and that it further appeared from the facts pleaded that the amendment could not serve to correct this defect (158 Cal. App. 2d 818, 823) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Allegations That Cannot Be Rendered Sufficient to State Cause of Action May Be Stricken

In Lodi v. Lodi (1985) 173 Cal. App. 3d 628, 219 Cal. Rptr. 116 , plaintiff filed a complaint against himself, in which he alleged that defendant was the beneficiary of a "charitable trust," the estate of which was to revert to plaintiff on notice. Plaintiff further alleged that he had given defendant written notice of termination of the trust, but defendant refused to relinquish control of the estate. Plaintiff sought to terminate all claims to his estate by defendant or any person claiming under him. Plaintiff served himself, as defendant, and mailed a complimentary copy of the complaint to the Internal Revenue Service. Defendant failed to file a timely answer, and plaintiff requested entry of a default judgment. The trial court denied this request and dismissed the complaint. Plaintiff appealed the dismissal, and the court of appeal affirmed (173 Cal. App. 3d 628, 630, 632) . The court held that the trial court was empowered to strike or dismiss the complaint sua sponte under Code Civ. Proc. § 436(b), because the complaint failed to state a cause of action under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.10 and was therefore not drawn in conformity with the laws of the state. The court noted that there was no apparent prospect of saving the pleading by amendment (173 Cal. App. 3d 628, 630-631) .

Garza v. Kantor (1976) 54 Cal. App. 3d 1025, 127 Cal. Rptr. 164 , involved an action by several minor children for the loss of consortium of their father. The trial court entered a minute order striking plaintiffs' allegations as to loss of parental consortium from the first amended complaint, and plaintiffs appealed. The court of appeal upheld the order to strike for the stated reason that there was no cause of action for loss of parental consortium under California law, without comment on the propriety of striking pleading matter that thus fails to state a cause of action (54 Cal. App. 3d 1025, 1027-1028) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 160 MOTIONS TO STRIKE: PLEADINGS
PART II. FORMS
A. Supporting Motion to Strike

16-160 California Points & Authorities §§ 160.38-160.40

[Reserved]

§§ 160.38[Reserved]

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 160 MOTIONS TO STRIKE: PLEADINGS
PART II. FORMS
A. Supporting Motion to Strike

16-160 California Points & Authorities § 160.41

§ 160.41 Supporting Motion to Strike Whole or Part of Pleading [Code Civ. Proc. § 435]--Irrelevant Matter in Pleading [Code Civ. Proc. § 436(a)]

[1] FORM

[This form should be used in combination with a general form of memorandum supporting a motion to strike, which sets out the statutory basis for making such a motion (see § 160.30).]

THE COURT SHOULD STRIKE THE MATTER SPECIFIED IN THE NOTICE OF MOTION FROM THE _____ [specify pleading, e.g., COMPLAINT] BECAUSE THAT MATTER IS IRRELEVANT TO THIS ACTION.

A. Irrelevant Matter May Be Stricken From Any Pleading. The court may on timely motion to strike by a party, or at any time in its discretion, strike from any pleading any irrelevant matter (Code Civ. Proc. § 436(a)).

[Optional] B. Immaterial Allegation Is Subject to Be Stricken. Immaterial allegation as defined by statute means irrelevant matter that is subject to be stricken (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 431.10(c), 436(a)).

[Optional] C. Nonessential Allegation Is Subject to Be Stricken. An allegation that is not essential to the statement of a claim or defense is an immaterial allegation that is subject to be stricken as irrelevant matter (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 431.10(b)(1), (c), 436(a)).

[Optional] D. Allegation of Probative Facts Is Subject to Be Stricken. Allegations of probative facts in a pleading are surplusage and may be stricken (Dabney v. Key (1922) 57 Cal. App. 762, 763, 207 P. 921 ; see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 431.10(b)(1), (c), 436(a)).

[Optional] E. Allegation Not Related to Claim or Defense Is Subject to Be Stricken. An allegation that is not pertinent to or supported by an otherwise sufficient claim or defense is an immaterial allegation that is subject to be stricken as an irrelevant matter (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 431.10(b)(2), (c), 436(a)).

[Optional] F. Unsupported Demand for Judgment Is Subject to Be Stricken. A demand for judgment requesting relief not sup- ported by the allegations of the complaint or cross complaint is an immaterial allegation that is subject to be stricken as irrelevant matter (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 431.10(b)(3), (c), 436(a)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of memorandum may be used together with a general form of memorandum, supporting a motion to strike when counsel wishes to move to strike irrelevant matter from a pleading. The foregoing sets out the basis for the court's power to strike irrelevant matter from any pleading, the point that an immaterial allegation constitutes irrelevant matter for purposes of a motion to strike, and the statutory definition of an immaterial allegation. Paragraph A may be cited in all cases in which matter is sought to be stricken from a pleading as irrelevant. If the matter to be stricken falls within one or more of the statutory definitions of an immaterial allegation, optional Paragraph B and any of the optional paragraphs following it that apply to the challenged pleading matter should also be cited. The foregoing also sets out the point that allegations of probative facts may be stricken as surplusage.

The foregoing should be used in combination with a general form setting out the statutory basis for making a motion to strike [see § 160.30].

Counsel should insert facts and arguments into this form and any form it is used in combination with, showing how the particular matter to be stricken is irrelevant to the questions at issue in the case, or how the matter to be stricken constitutes an immaterial allegation.

[b] Use of Pre-1982 Case Law

The current statutory scheme governing motions to strike [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 431.10(b), (c), 435-437] was enacted in 1982. However, prior to 1982, a number of cases had upheld the striking of irrelevant matter from pleadings. The statutory scheme has added to this body of case law the explicit statutory authorization to strike irrelevant matter [see Code Civ. Proc. § 436(a)] and an explicit definition of an immaterial allegation that may be stricken as irrelevant matter [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 431.10(b) (definition of immaterial allegation), 431.10(c) (immaterial allegation as irrelevant matter), 436(a) (irrelevant matter as subject to motion to strike)]. However, these provisions do not appear to restrict the types of pleading matter that may be stricken as irrelevant [see discussion under § 160.41[2][c]], nor are there any other provisions in the statutory scheme that set out such restrictions. Thus, the statute appears only to clarify and not to restrict the courts' power as it existed before 1982 to strike pleading matter as irrelevant. Pre-1982 case law on the striking of irrelevant matter from pleadings is therefore probably still good law.

Those cases dealing with pleading matter that is now covered by the statutory definition of immaterial pleadings should be cited together with Code Civ. Proc. §§ 431.10(c) and 436(a) and with the paragraph or paragraphs of Code Civ. Proc. § 431.10(b) that apply to the pleading matter in question.

[c] Irrelevant Matter

Code Civ. Proc. § 431.10(c), which provides that an immaterial allegation as defined in Code Civ. Proc. § 431.10(b) constitutes irrelevant matter, contains no provision stating that only such an immaterial allegation may be deemed irrelevant matter. That an allegation may be material as defined in Code Civ. Proc. § 431.10(a), but still subject to be stricken as irrelevant is suggested by a pre-1982 case that is probably still valid under the current statutory scheme. In that case the court upheld the striking from a complaint as irrelevant of certain allegations that stated no issue on which plaintiff could legally have tendered proof even though the striking of such allegation rendered the complaint subject to a general demurrer under applicable substantive law [Kline v. San Francisco Unified School District (1940) 40 Cal.

App. 2d 174, 178, 104 P.2d 661, 105 P.2d 362] . Thus, the definitions set out in Code Civ. Proc. § 431.10(b) do not appear to be exhaustive of the types of pleading matter that may be deemed to be irrelevant.

An overall definition of irrelevant matter, other than the one for immaterial allegations is not given in either the statutes or cases. However, the Supreme Court in an early case based its upholding of the striking of certain factual allegations from a complaint on the observation that the claim that the facts alleged had a bearing on the rights of the parties to the case was without foundation in law or reason [People v. Hawley (1929) 207 Cal. 395, 407, 279 P. 136] . This reasoning suggests a rule of thumb criterion for determining whether pleading matter is irrelevant that appears to be representative of the reasoning of subsequent cases.

The following are some of the circumstances in which irrelevant material has been held to be subject to be stricken. Allegations supporting a claim that the pleading party could not legally make have been held properly stricken [see Doran v. Biscailuz (1954) 128 Cal. App. 2d 55, 61, 274 P.2d 691 (allegation of losing candidate as to own participation in election in case challenging winning candidate's eligibility when finding of winner's ineligibility would not have given loser right to take office); Kline v. San Francisco Unified School District (1940) 40 Cal. App. 2d 174, 178, 104 P.2d 661, 105 P.2d 362 (allegation of timely letter to defendant's officer detailing injury when under law such letter is no substitute for required verified demand)]. Allegations that for one reason or another were deemed insufficient to support particular claims they were asserted to support have also been stricken as irrelevant [see Enos v. Murtaugh (1941) 47 Cal. App. 2d 269, 274, 117 P.2d 905 (unembroidered allegation that land deed had mistakenly named wrong grantee as neither stating independent cause of action nor supporting claim of prescriptive title); Woodson v. Winchester (1911) 16 Cal. App 472, 474, 117 P. 565 (allegations of misrepresentations designed to induce persons to move to California and to buy land in colony being offered for sale by seller, but not relating to specific land parcels bought by buyer as not satisfying fullness and particularity requirement for fraud claims)]. Finally, allegations of facts that in context of the general fact situation alleged would not have affected the rights of any of the parties have been held properly stricken [see People v. Hawley (1929) 207 Cal. 395, 407, 279 P. 136 (allegations as to location of land in flood control district as irrelevant in abatement action); McCarthy v. McColgan (1929) 99 Cal. App 492, 498-499, 278 P. 918 (allegation of forgery that would have affected only persons not arty to case as irrelevant)].

[d] Related Memoranda

For memoranda and opposing motions for summary judgment, see Ch. 221, Summary Judgments in this set.

[e] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in §§ 160.60 -160.63 and 160.66 may be submitted in opposition to a motion to strike supported by this memorandum.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Allegation of Probative Facts Is Subject to Be Stricken

Dabney v. Key (1922) 57 Cal. App. 762, 207 P. 921 , involved an action to enforce a specific contract to lease certain lands for the purpose of developing oil wells. Plaintiffs filed an amended complaint and defendants interposed a demurrer and a motion to strike. The motion to strike was granted in part and denied in part, and the demurrer was sustained with leave to amend. One of the assignments of the motion to strike with respect to which the motion was granted was directed to language in an allegation that at the time of the execution of the agreement, plaintiff J.B. Dabney had paid a sum of money in consideration of the lease by and through one Clifford R. Dabney. Acting on the assignment in the motion to strike, the trial court struck out the words by and through Clifford R. Dabney. Plaintiffs did not amend their complaint, and judgment was awarded to defendants. Plaintiffs appealed from this judgment.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment. With respect to the motion to strike, the court noted preliminarily that the whole of the complaint clearly showed that it was plaintiffs' theory that if a lease were made, if would run to plaintiff J.B. Dabney and that the negotiations were carried out at least in part by one Clifford R. Dabney acting as agent for J.B. Dabney (57 Cal. App. 762, 762) . The court held that the clause in the complaint averring that plaintiffs' alleged payment to defendants in consideration of the lease was made "by and through Clifford R. Dabney" stated only a probative fact that was not necessary to the sufficiency of the pleading. Thus, the court concluded that the clause was properly stricken (57 Cal. App. 762, 763) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Allegation of Probative Facts Is Subject to Be Stricken

Stafford v. Shultz (1954) 42 Cal. 2d 767, 270 P.2d 1 , involved a medical malpractice action alleging that injury to plaintiff resulted from the defendants' failure to properly care for the plaintiff's injured leg. Before trial, two of the defendants successfully demurred on the grounds that, inter alia, the complaint was uncertain in that it did not state in what respect defendants had been negligent in caring for plaintiff's leg. On appeal, the Supreme Court held it was not necessary to allege in what respect the treatment given the plaintiff might have been deficient as long as the allegations of the complaint charged the breach of a legal duty, proximate causation, and resulting damage (42 Cal. 2d 767, 782) . In concluding that defendants' demurrer should have been overruled, the Court stated that probative facts alleged in a pleading are surplusage and may be stricken out or disregarded (42 Cal. 2d 767, 782) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 160 MOTIONS TO STRIKE: PLEADINGS
PART II. FORMS
A. Supporting Motion to Strike

16-160 California Points & Authorities § 160.42

§ 160.42 Supporting Motion to Strike Whole or Part of Pleading [Code Civ. Proc. § 435]--False or Improper Pleading Matter [Code Civ. Proc. § 436(a)]

[1] FORM

[This form of memorandum should be used in combination with a general form of memorandum supporting a motion to strike (see § 160.30).]

THE MATTER IN THE _____ [specify pleading, e.g., AMENDED COMPLAINT] SHOULD BE STRICKEN BECAUSE IT IS _____ [FALSE and/or IMPROPER].

A. Court May Strike False or Improper Matter. The court may, on timely motion to strike by any party, or at any time in its discretion, strike from any pleading any false or improper matter (Code Civ. Proc. § 436(a)).

[Optional] B. Inconsistency With Prior Pleadings May Show Matter in Pleading to Be False or Improper. Allegations in an amended pleading that contradict sworn allegations in earlier pleadings may show that the subsequent allegations are sham or filed in bad faith (see Tostevin v. Douglas (1958) 160 Cal. App. 2d 321, 330, 331, 325 P.2d 130 ; see also Evid. Code §§ 452(d), 453 (records of court subject to judicial notice)).

[Optional] C. Denial on Information and Belief of Matters Within Defendants' Knowledge May Be Stricken. If a matter alleged in a complaint is within the defendant's actual knowledge or by its nature is presumed to be within the defendant's actual knowledge, or the defendant has the means of ascertaining whether or not the matter is true, a denial on information and belief or for lack of either will be deemed sham and evasive and may be stricken out or disregarded (Mulcahy v. Buckley (1893) 100 Cal. 484, 487-489, 35 P. 144 ; Dobbins v. Hardister (1966) 242 Cal. App. 2d 787, 791, 51 Cal. Rptr. 866).

[Optional] D. Allegations Inconsistent With Unambiguous Instrument Incorporated Into Complaint May Be Stricken. When a written instrument is unambiguous and incorporated by reference into the complaint, any allegations in the pleading inconsistent with the incorporated instrument may be stricken (Nichols v. Canoga Industries (1978) 83 Cal. App. 3d 956, 965, 148 Cal. Rptr. 459).

[Optional] E. Allegations Requesting Improper Relief. A motion to strike is an appropriate vehicle to attack allegations requesting improper relief (Satz v. Superior Court (1990) 225 Cal. App. 3d 1525, 1533 n.9, 275 Cal. Rptr. 710 ; Saberi v. Bakhtiari (1985) 169 Cal. App. 3d 509, 517, 215 Cal. Rptr. 359).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of memorandum may be combined with a general form of memorandum, supporting a motion to strike [see § 160.30] when matter in an opposing party's pleading can be shown to be false or improper without resort to extrinsic evidence [see discussion under § 160.42[2][d]]. This form sets out the statutory basis for the court's power to strike false or improper matter from any pleading. This form also sets out the point that falseness of matter in a pleading other than the original complaint may be shown by comparing averments in the challenged pleading with sworn allegations in prior pleadings, which are subject to judicial notice, and the point that denial on information and belief of matters presumably within a defendant's knowledge or allegations inconsistent with an unambiguous instrument incorporated into a pleading are false or improper. The point set out in this form that an amended pleading may be shown by comparison with prior pleadings to be false or improper is often related to the points that an amended pleading has failed to amend a prior pleading that was found to be deficient, or that an amended pleading has attempted to withdraw a sworn allegation in a prior pleading [see Kronsberg v. Milton J. Wershow Co. (1965) 238 Cal. App. 2d 170, 173, 47 Cal. Rptr. 592 ; Tostevin v. Douglas (1958) 160 Cal. App. 2d 321, 327, 325 P.2d 130] . Thus, when appropriate, this form may be used in combination with a form setting out the above stated points regarding amended pleadings [see § 160.43].

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Validity of Pre-1982 Case Law

For a full discussion of the effect of the 1982 statutory revision of the statutory law governing motions to strike, see § 160.42[2][c].

[c] Sham Pleadings

Both statutory law and case law in effect before 1982 permitted the striking of pleading matter as sham [see former Code Civ. Proc. § 453 (repealed by Stats. 1982, ch. 704, § 5); Kronsberg v. Milton J. Wershow Co. (1965) 238 Cal. App. 2d 170, 173, 47 Cal. Rptr. 592] . A sham pleading was traditionally defined as a pleading that is good on its face but false in fact and pleaded in bad faith [see Gostorfs v. Taafe, McCahill & Co. (1861) 18 Cal. 385, 387-388] . The 1982 revision of statutory law governing motions to strike deleted reference to sham pleadings, and no post 1982 cases have ruled on the point. However, it is probable that the types of pleadings and pleading matter that the pre-1982 cases held to be subject to striking as sham may now be stricken under the provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 436(a), authorizing the court to strike false or improper matter, provided that the sham character of the pleading matter can be shown without resort to extrinsic evidence [see discussion under § 160.41[2][d]]. If statutory law is no longer sufficient to provide authority for the striking of sham pleadings, such pleadings can still probably be stricken under the court's inherent power to prevent frustration, abuse, or disregard of their judicial processes, by summary means [Tostevin v. Douglas (1958) 160 Cal. App. 2d 321, 330, 331, 325 P.2d 130] . For discussion of the court's inherent power to summarily strike pleadings, see § 160.05.

[d] Defect Must Appear on Face of Pleading or From Matter Subject to Judicial Notice

Code Civ. Proc. § 437(a), which was enacted in 1982, provides that the grounds for a motion to strike must appear on the face of the challenged pleading or from any matter of which the court is required to take judicial notice. Counsel should be aware that under Code Civ. Proc. § 437(a), certain pre-1982 cases that upheld the striking of pleading matter as frivolous and sham based on affidavits or other extrinsic evidence are no longer good law. The restriction on motions to strike based on extrinsic evidence particularly affects motions to strike a party's original pleadings. By the nature of the concept, the character of a defect which, according to the traditional definition of a sham pleading, shows a pleading to be false in fact and pleaded in bad faith, though the pleading is good in form, is unlikely to appear on the face of the pleading [see discussion under § 160.41[2][c]]. Unlike amended pleadings that may be shown to be false by comparison with prior pleadings [see Paragraph B, supra], original pleadings ordinarily have no judicially noticeable matter to which they may be compared to demonstrate their falsity. Thus, a challenge to matter in an original pleading on the ground that it is sham or frivolous cannot usually be made without resort to extrinsic evidence. Such a challenge should therefore be made by way of motion for summary judgment rather than motion to strike. For a full discussion of motions to strike that purport to rely on extrinsic evidence and the treatment given to such motions by the courts, see § 160.44.

For further discussion of the striking of improper amended pleadings as sham, see § 160.43.

[e] Matter Subject to Judicial Notice Must Be Identified

Code Civ. Proc. § 437(b) provides that when a motion to strike is based on matter of which the court should take notice pursuant to Evid. Code §§ 452 or 453, such matter must be specified in the notice of motion, or in the supporting points and authorities, except as the court may otherwise permit. Evid. Code § 452(e) provides for judicial notice of the records of any court in the state [see Evid. Code § 453 (permissive judicial notice provided for in Evid. Code § 452 as becoming mandatory when conditions are met)]. Thus, a motion to strike relying on prior pleadings on record in the case should specify the pleadings relied on in the notice of motion or the accompanying points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Inconsistency With Prior Pleadings May Show Matter in Pleading to Be False or Improper

Tostevin v. Douglas (1958) 160 Cal. App. 2d 321, 325 P.2d 130 , involved an action for declaratory relief and accounting on an alleged oral, personal service contract. Plaintiff filed one original complaint and three amended complaints. Demurrers to the original, first, and second complaints were sustained with leave to amend. Leave to amend the second amended complaint was qualified by direction that any variation from the previous verified complaint in the allegations set out in the forthcoming amended complaint must be explained. Plaintiff filed a third amended complaint, which defendant moved to strike. The trial court granted the motion to strike, stating that the amended complaint had made no substantial amendment of and had given no explanations for changes from the former complaint. Plaintiff filed no further amendments, and the trial court entered a judgment of dismissal. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal upheld the trial court's action. The court noted from the record that the complaints filed by plaintiff showed numerous changes in essential averments, including omissions, variations, and contradictions in material allegations relating to the services required to be performed by plaintiff under the contract, the termination date of the contract, and the date of defendant's repudiation of the contract, none of which were explained or accounted for by plaintiff (160 Cal. App. 2d 321, 324) . The court also noted that although entitled "Complaint for Declaratory Judgment and an Accounting," the complaint was really one to recover an amount due for breach of the terms of an oral agreement. The court stated that on the facts alleged no real cause of action for accounting appeared in any of the pleadings, and concluded that plaintiff's reason for filing an action for an accounting was that the statute of limitations had run on an action for breach of contract and plaintiff was attempting to seek refuge in the longer limitations period provided for accounting actions (160 Cal. App. 2d 321, 328, 329) .

Looking at the pattern of averments in the various complaints in detail, the court concluded that plaintiff was in essence attempting to correct fatal defects in the earlier complaints by avoiding the effect of the statute of frauds and the statute of limitations (160 Cal. App. 2d 321, 327-330) . However, the court held that the second and third amended complaints utterly failed to and could not under the sworn facts remedy the defects in the previous pleadings. The court stated that the later pleadings made no substantial amendments even though plaintiff was given substantial opportunity to clarify ambiguities, amend insufficiencies, eliminate surplusages and explain mistaken statements, and that plaintiff simply changed his story with regard to the terms and conditions of the oral agreement and the time of repudiation. The court stated that it could only conclude from this that the various changes made by plaintiff in his second and third amended complaints were the result of efforts to conform to a theory of recovery, rather than to the facts as they actually existed. The court held that the trial court has the right to strike pleadings of this kind from the files on the ground that it is frivolous and a sham under the courts' inherent power to prevent, by summary means, the frustration, abuse, or disregard of their processes (160 Cal. App. 2d 321, 331) .

[b] Denial on Information and Belief of Matters Within Defendants' Knowledge May Be Stricken

Mulcahy v. Buckley (1893) 100 Cal. 484, 35 P. 144 , was an action to enforce a mechanic's lien. The complaint alleged, inter alia, that plaintiff had recorded a claim of lien in the recorder's office. In his answer, defendant stated that he had no information or belief on the subject sufficient to enable him to answer the allegation or any allegation contained in the paragraph in which the allegation was set out, and that he placed his denial of the allegations on this ground. After trying the case without a jury, the trial court disregarded this part of the answer and, holding that all material allegations of this paragraph of the complaint should be deemed admitted, entered judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appealed.

The Supreme Court upheld the trial court's action. The Court acknowledged that former Code Civ. Proc. § 437 [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 431.30(e)] provides that if the defendant has no information or belief on the subject to enable him or her to answer an allegation of the complaint, he or she may so state in the answer, and place the denial on that ground. However, the Court held that this provision did not give a defendant the right to answer an allegation on information and belief, or lack of these, when he or she may be presumed to know whether or not the allegation is true, or when he or she is aware that the means of ascertaining the truth of falsity of the allegation is available (100 Cal. 484, 487) . Citing a commentary on code pleading, the Court noted that because the obligation to verify implies the obligation to tell the truth, an answer based on a denial of information and belief when the fact charged is evidently within the defendant's knowledge is clearly false or evasive, and should be disregarded (100 Cal. 484, 487-489) .

The Court noted from the commentary that a fact is evidently within the defendant's knowledge so as to require a positive denial when it concerns an act done by the defendant himself or herself within the period of memory, or when the defendant has the means of information (100 Cal. 484, 487) . Along the lines of this rule, the Court cited out-of-state authority for the proposition that a party cannot plead ignorance of a public record to which he or she has access, and that affords all the means of information necessary to obtain positive knowledge of the fact (100 Cal. 484, 488) . In the present case, the Court noted that defendant knew at least that he could ascertain whether or not plaintiff had recorded his claim of lien, as alleged in the complaint, by examining a public record in the city and county in which the lots on which the lien is claimed were situated (100 Cal. 484, 487) . The Court limited its opinion to the circumstances and facts disclosed by the record before it (100 Cal. 484, 489) .

Dobbins v. Hardister (1966) 242 Cal. App. 2d 787, 51 Cal. Rptr. 866 , was an action to recover the purchase price of certain goods that plaintiff alleged he had sold and delivered to defendant at defendant's special request and instance. Defendant answered, denying all of plaintiff's allegations on the basis of information and belief. Plaintiff demurred to the answer, arguing that the answer did not state a defense since a denial based on information and belief is not sufficient to controvert allegations of fact that are presumptively within the defendant's knowledge, as were the facts alleged by plaintiff in this case. The trial court overruled the demurrer. However, plaintiff subsequently moved for judgment on the pleadings on the same grounds, and the trial court sustained the motion. Defendant appealed from the resulting judgment for plaintiff.

The court of appeal overturned the judgment in the lower court, holding that the trial court should have given defendant an opportunity to amend his answer so as to state positive denials before ruling on the motion for judgment on the pleadings (242 Cal. App. 2d 787, 795-798) . However, the court upheld the trial court's determination that the denials based on lack of information and belief stated in the original answer were insufficient.

The court cited an extensive series of cases, beginning with Mulcahy v. Buckley (1893) 100 Cal. 484, 486-489, 35 P. 144 (discussed supra), for the rule that if the matter alleged by the plaintiff is within the defendant's actual knowledge or by its nature is presumed to be within his or her knowledge, or if the defendant has the means of ascertaining whether or not it is true, a denial on information or belief or lack of either will be deemed sham and evasive and may be stricken out or disregarded (242 Cal. App. 2d 787, 791) . Citing other authorities, the court held that the facts as to whether goods were sold and delivered by plaintiff to defendant and whether defendant made any payments to plaintiff for such goods are matters presumptively within defendant's knowledge. The court held further that if defendant were actually ignorant of the items of the account or of the payments, if any, for such items at the time when defendant was served by the complaint, it was defendant's duty to become informed before he filed his answer since these were material facts that he should have known (242 Cal. App. 2d 787, 794) . The court stated that it made no difference for the operation of this rule whether the facts alleged by plaintiff encompassed only a single sales transaction, or whether they encompassed multiple transactions, as in the present case (242 Cal. App. 2d 787, 793) .

The court stated that since the complaint was framed in the form of common counts, defendant was entitled to demand a bill of particulars under Code Civ. Proc. § 454, requiring plaintiff to furnish defendant with the details regarding the items charged against him (242 Cal. App. 2d 787, 794) . This, stated the court, clearly gave defendant access to a legal procedure that afforded him the means of obtaining positive knowledge of the facts charged in the complaint (242 Cal. App. 2d 787, 795) . In citing demand for a bill of particulars as a procedure available to defendant, the court acknowledged the theoretical possibility that the trial court might decline to extend defendant's time for answering so as to give defendant the time to demand a bill of particulars or that plaintiff might not return the bill within the time the court is empowered to extend the time to plead. If either of these circumstances should occur, the court stated that they should be averred in the answer, together with the other circumstances indicating actual ignorance of the facts that the defendant ought to know, in explanation of the defendant's inability to answer positively (242 Cal. App. 2d 787, 795) .

The court concluded that on remand defendant should be given the election of standing on his answer or amending it so as to state positive denials (242 Cal. App. 2d 787, 797) .

[c] Allegations Inconsistent With Unambiguous Instrument Incorporated Into Complaint May Be Stricken

Nichols v. Canoga Industries (1978) 83 Cal. App. 3d 956, 148 Cal. Rptr. 459 , was an action on a contract wherein plaintiff agreed that he and the corporation of which he was sole shareholder would transfer substantially all assets of the corporation, subject to the corporation's liabilities, to defendant corporation in return for stock in defendant corporation. The written agreement stated in part that (1) in consideration of the transfer of the assets of plaintiff's corporation, defendant corporation would sell to plaintiff's corporation 20,000 shares of its own stock and (2) in the event that during a specified period the value of the 20,000 shares of stock thus transferred dropped below $20.00 per share, defendant corporation would issue up to 12,000 additional shares to plaintiff's corporation to make up the difference between the existing value of the 20,000 shares and the value of the shares at $20.00 per share. In addition, the agreement included a warranty of the defendant corporation's financial condition. Plaintiff incorporated the written agreement into his complaint by reference and alleged that he had carried out his part of the agreement, that a total of 32,000 shares of defendant's stock were finally transferred to his corporation, but that as of a specified date the 32,000 shares were worth only $100,000. Finally, plaintiff alleged that defendant had breached the warranties of its financial condition, damaging plaintiff in the amount of $300,000. Plaintiff's claim for damages rested on a paragraph in the complaint that alleged that defendant had agreed to pay the plaintiff $400,000 in the form of 20,000 shares of the defendant's stock, to be supplemented with the additional transfer of up to 12,000 shares in the event of the fall in stock value as recited in the agreement.

Defendant demurred, raising the bar of the statute of limitations, and moved to strike the portion of the complaint alleging that the defendant had agreed to pay $400,000 in the form of its stock shares and the portion asking for damages. The trial court sustained the demurrer, granted the motion to strike, declared that its ruling on the demurrer compelled denial of leave to amend the complaint, and dismissed the action. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal upheld the motion to strike but overturned the demurrer, holding for unrelated reasons that the action was not barred by the statute of limitations, and remanded the action to the trial court for further proceedings as set out below. The court held that when a written instrument is unambiguous and is incorporated into a complaint, any allegations in the pleadings inconsistent with the incorporated writing may be stricken (83 Cal. App. 3d 956, 965) . The court observed that while the complaint alleged an agreement calling for consideration of $400,000 payable in the form of stock, the agreement that the complaint incorporated by reference in facially unambiguous terms treated the $20.00 per share value of the stocks that made up the consideration merely as the standard by which shares of defendant in addition to the 20,000 contemplated by the agreement would be issued, while limiting the additional shares to 12,000 (83 Cal. App. 3d 956, 965) . The court stated that no facts were alleged establishing the ambiguity of the written instrument. As to the allegation of damages in the complaint, the court stated that it depended on the stricken allegation of the promise of $400,000 consideration and was therefore also properly stricken.

The court further stated, however, that conceivably facts may exist to establish ambiguity of the agreement within the definition of existing law (83 Cal. App. 3d 956, 965-966). Since the trial court's decision to refuse leave to amend was based on that court's holding that the action was barred by the statute of limitations, which holding the court of appeal overturned, the court ordered the case remanded to the trial court to permit plaintiff to amend his complaint if he can truthfully allege facts which establish that the additional 12,000 shares were not to be his exclusive compensation for diminution in value of the shares (83 Cal. App. 3d 956, 966) .

It should be noted that the case was decided before the 1982 enactment of the legislative scheme governing motions to strike, and the court did not cite any authority for striking the allegations, nor did the court state that allegations were properly stricken as sham, irrelevant, or for any other general grounds. It is probable, however, that allegations of the sort in issue could now be stricken as false matter under Code Civ. Proc. § 436(a).

[d] Allegations Requesting Improper Relief

Satz v. Superior Court (1990) 225 Cal. App. 3d 1525, 275 Cal. Rptr. 710 , was an action for defamation by persons who had previously been defendants in a child abuse prosecution. The defendants in the defamation action included a television newscaster who had reported on the earlier prosecution. The newscaster's motion to strike portions of the complaint based on broadcasts aired more than one year before the defamation action was filed on the ground they were barred by the statute of limitations [Code Civ. Proc. § 340(3)] was denied, and the newscaster petitioned the court of appeal for a writ of mandate. The court of appeal held that the newscaster was not a witness, within the meaning of Civ. Code § 48.7, which prevents a person charged with abuse from suing the child, parent, or any witness for defamation arising from statements made by the child, parent, or witness until after the criminal charges are resolved (225 Cal. App. 3d 1525, 1527, 1532) , and ordered issuance of the writ with directions to vacate the order denying the motion to strike and to grant it insofar as it was based on Civ. Code § 48.7. In so doing, the court cited Saberi v. Bakhtiari (1985) 169 Cal. App. 3d 509, 517, 215 Cal. Rptr. 359 , discussed below, for the proposition that a motion to strike is an appropriate vehicle to attack allegations requesting improper relief (225 Cal. App. 3d 1525, 1533 n.9).

Saberi v. Bakhtiari (1985) 169 Cal. App. 3d 509, 215 Cal. Rptr. 359 , was a proceeding in unlawful detainer in which a default judgment awarding plaintiff possession of commercial premises plus damages and costs was entered. Defendant appealed contending, among other things, that the complaint was jurisdictionally defective because it combined a request for possession of the premises based on service of a 30-day notice to quit with a request for rent due prior to termination of the tenancy. Although the court of appeal reversed the judgment on other grounds, it rejected the jurisdiction argument, stating the inclusion in the complaint of an improper request for pretermination rent did not render the entire complaint invalid because an objection to the request could be made by a motion to strike the improper allegations or as a defense in the answer to the complaint (169 Cal. App. 3d 509, 517) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Denial on Information and Belief of Matters Within Defendants' Knowledge May Be Stricken

Sociedade Do Espirito Santo v. Santa Clara Valley Bank (1914) 24 Cal. App. 592, 141 P. 1054 , involved an action to recover money that plaintiff alleged had been received by defendants for the use and benefit of plaintiff. One of the defendants answered, averring, inter alia, that he had no information or belief sufficient to enable him to answer the allegation that the plaintiff had demanded payment of the money before commencement of the action, and denying the allegation on the basis of this. On motion, the trial court struck this averment. On appeal, the court of appeal held that it was not error to strike the averment, since a defendant cannot deny knowledge of his or her own acts, or knowledge of his or her personal transactions. The court stated that with respect to allegations of such facts a positive answer is required (24 Cal. App. 592, 594) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 160 MOTIONS TO STRIKE: PLEADINGS
PART II. FORMS
A. Supporting Motion to Strike

16-160 California Points & Authorities § 160.43

§ 160.43 Supporting Motion to Strike [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 435, 436]--Improper Amended Pleading [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 472, 473(a)]--Amendment Fails to Correct Defect in Original Pleading

[1] FORM

[This form should be used in combination with a general form setting out the statutory basis for making a motion to strike (see § 160.30). When appropriate, this form may be used in combination with a form setting out the point that sham or frivolous pleadings may be stricken as false or improper matter (see § 160.42) or a form setting out the point that a pleading not filed or drawn in conformity with California law may be stricken (see § 160.31).]

A. Court Not Required to Tolerate Improper Amended Complaint. A court is not required to tolerate a purported amended complaint that fails to amend the previous pleading, is not filed in good faith, is filed in disregard of established procedural requirements, or is otherwise violative of orderly judicial administration (Kronsberg v. Milton J. Wershow Co. (1965) 238 Cal. App. 2d 170, 173, 47 Cal. Rptr. 592).

[Optional] B. Court May Strike Amended Pleading That Merely Repeats Original Pleading. A pleading that in its essential averments repeats a pleading previously found to be insufficient is properly stricken (Kronsberg v. Milton J. Wershow Co. (1965) 238 Cal. App. 2d 170, 174, 47 Cal. Rptr. 592).

[Optional] C. Amendment Cannot Revive Defective Complaint by Omitting Previously Sworn Facts. A party may not withdraw facts once alleged under oath by simply filing an amended pleading eliminating such facts without explanation (Tostevin v. Douglas (1958) 160 Cal. App. 2d 321, 327, 325 P.2d 130 (complaint); see Silica Brick Co. v. Winsor (1915) 171 Cal. 18, 22, 151 P. 425 (answer)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of a motion to strike an amended pleading that either entirely fails to remedy a defect already found in a prior pleading, or that attempts to remedy the defect by omitting previously sworn allegations of fact without explanation. This form sets out the points that a court need not tolerate a frivolous amended pleading, that an amended pleading that merely repeats the essential averments of the previous pleading may be stricken, and that facts sworn to in a prior pleading may not be withdrawn from consideration by omitting them from an amended pleading. The form should be used in combination with a general form setting out the statutory basis for making a motion to strike [see § 160.30]. When appropriate, this form may also be used in combination with a form, showing that pleading matter that is sham or frivolous may be stricken as false or improper matter [see § 160.42], and a form showing that pleading matter that is not filed or drawn in conformity with the laws of California may be stricken [see § 160.31].

Counsel should insert facts and arguments into this form, showing how the points of law stated relate to the facts of the case.

[b] Sources of Court's Authority to Strike

The cases upholding the striking of ineffective amended pleadings that were decided before the 1982 revision of the statutory law governing motions to strike [see discussion under § 160.03] have generally characterized such pleadings as sham or frivolous, or as being filed in bad faith [see Kronsberg v. Milton J. Wershow Co. (1965) 238 Cal. App. 2d 170, 173, 47 Cal. Rptr. 592] . Under the statutory scheme enacted in 1982, such pleadings may probably be stricken under Code Civ. Proc. § 436(a) (power of court to strike improper pleading matter). For a discussion of the law regarding sham pleadings or false or improper pleading matter, see § 160.42.

Statutory authority for striking ineffective amended pleadings filed by leave of court may also be found under the provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 436(b), which authorizes the court to strike pleading matter that was not drawn or filed in conformity with the laws of California or of any order of the court. Thus, it may be said that when the court grants leave to amend an original pleading after it has been found to be defective, such leave should not be construed to authorize an amendment that merely repeats the previous defective pleading, is filed in bad faith or disregard of established procedural requirements, or is otherwise violative of orderly judicial administration. Thus, an amended pleading that shows any of these improprieties may be said to be out of conformity with the terms of the leave to amend and therefore subject to be stricken under Code Civ. Proc. § 436(b). Furthermore, it may be said that since under Code Civ. Proc. § 473(a) it is only by leave of court that a party may amend a pleading after a demurrer has been ruled on, an amended pleading that is out of conformity with the leave to amend is also out of conformity with Code Civ. Proc. § 473 [see Code Civ. Proc. § 472 (right to amend as a matter of course only until demurrer tried)].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Court Not Required to Tolerate Improper Amended Complaint

Kronsberg v. Milton J. Wershow Co. (1965) 238 Cal. App. 2d 170, 47 Cal. Rptr. 592 , involved a written agreement for sale at auction by defendant of certain property belonging originally to plaintiff. Plaintiff alleged that defendant had failed to sell the two major items included in the property as had been agreed and had failed to reconvey one of the items to plaintiff. Plaintiff filed numerous complaints and amended complaints, all of which were found to be deficient on demurrer or on motion to strike. After the trial court had sustained a demurrer to the second amended complaint it filed a seven page memorandum in support of its rulings. After the third complaint had been filed, the court sustained yet another demurrer, stating that its written views on the deficiencies in the earlier pleadings had still largely been disregarded. After a fourth amended complaint had been filed, defendant filed a motion to dismiss. The trial court, stating that its views on the deficiencies of the pleading had still been disregarded, treated the motion to dismiss as a motion to strike and ordered the pleading stricken, with leave to amend within 20 days. Plaintiff filed no amendment, and the trial court granted defendant's motion to dismiss. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal upheld the action of the trial court. The court stated that if the rulings in which the trial court had found the pleadings filed by plaintiff prior to the fourth and final amended complaint to be defective were correct, it cannot be doubted that the trial court had discretion to strike the fourth amended complaint on the ground that it was frivolous and sham. The court stated that the fundamental principle running through the prior case law on the subject is that the court is not required to tolerate a purported amended complaint that fails to amend the previous pleading, is not filed in good faith, is filed in disregard of established procedural requirements, or is otherwise violative of orderly judicial administration (238 Cal. App. 2d 170, 173) .

Reviewing the original complaint and the amendments following it, the court concluded that the trial court's rulings as to the pleadings preceding the fourth amended complaint had been correct.

[b] Court May Strike Amended Pleading That Merely Repeats Original Pleading

The facts and procedural background of Kronsberg v. Milton J. Wershow Co. (1965) 238 Cal. App. 2d 170, 47 Cal. Rptr. 592 , are set out in the discussion under § 160.43[3][a]. In that case, the court of appeal, after discussing the facts alleged and causes of action averred in the pleading preceding the stricken fourth amended complaint, concluded that the fourth amended complaint failed, and in fact did not attempt, to remedy the defect in the pleading that preceded it. The court held that it is proper to strike such a pleading on the ground that it is in all its essential averments merely a repetition of a complaint previously found to be deficient (238 Cal. App. 2d 170, 174) .

[c] Amendment Cannot Revive Defective Complaint by Omitting Previously Sworn Facts

The facts and procedural background of Tostevin v. Douglas (1958) 160 Cal. App. 2d 321, 325 P.2d 130 , are set out in § 160.42[3][a]. In that case, the court noted that throughout the various pleadings filed by plaintiff in an attempt to state a cause of action, numerous material facts alleged under oath had been withdrawn from consideration, entire allegations set out in earlier pleadings had been omitted from subsequent amendments, and variations and changes in essential allegations resulting in contradictions and ambiguity had been effected, all without any justification or explanation (160 Cal. App. 2d 321, 326). The court stated the well-settled rule that facts once alleged under oath cannot be withdrawn from consideration by merely filing an amended pleading eliminating them without explanation. The court further stated that a party should not be allowed to breathe life into a complaint by omitting facts, previously alleged in a verified pleading, which made it fatally defective (160 Cal. App. 2d 321, 327) .

Silica Brick Co. v. Winsor (1915) 171 Cal. 18, 151 P. 425 , was an action to recover the amount of a subscription for capital stock. In his second amended answer, defendant admitted that he had executed the document by which he had subscribed for the capital stock, and that he had refused a demand for payment on the subscription. By way of excuse, defendant averred the existence of a complex agreement of stock exchanges, and alleged that an oral agreement to cancel the stock subscription had been part of this agreement. A resolution of the stockholders of the corporation that had issued the stock, which defendant averred embodied the agreement, was included in the answer. The trial court rejected defendant's second amended answer. Defendant filed a third amended answer, which omitted reference to the resolution, but averred that certain individual members of the corporation's board of directors had orally told defendant that he could rely on the corporation to carry out the understanding to surrender the stock subscription. The third amended complaint further averred that the corporation had never demanded payment on the subscription until a specified date and had treated the subscription as canceled and annulled until this date. The court also rejected this pleading. After judgment on the pleadings had been entered for plaintiff, defendant appealed.

The Supreme Court upheld the action of the trial court. Preliminarily, the Court held that the shareholder's agreement that had originally been included in defendant's answer represented a written executed agreement that was fundamental to the transaction on which defendant must stand or fall (171 Cal. 18, 22) . Since the resolution made no reference to an agreement to cancel defendant's stock subscription, the court held that it was fatal to defendant's defense (171 Cal. 18, 20-21) .

Regarding the third amended complaint, the Court held that the trial court was justified in refusing to file it, since the answer was sham and not made in good faith. The Court noted that wherever the third amended complaint deviated from its predecessor, it sought to aver conclusions instead of facts. The Court stated its view that defendant was trying to avoid the effect of the shareholders' resolution as a written executed agreement by omitting it from the third amended answer. Regarding this attempt to avoid the effect of the resolution, the Court held that defendant should not be permitted to allege, as ultimate facts, matters at variance with facts to which he had previously sworn. The Court held further that it could look to earlier pleadings to determine whether the one finally offered was sham (171 Cal. 18, 23) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 160 MOTIONS TO STRIKE: PLEADINGS
PART II. FORMS
A. Supporting Motion to Strike

16-160 California Points & Authorities §§ 160.44-160.59

[Reserved]

§§ 160.44[Reserved]

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 160 MOTIONS TO STRIKE: PLEADINGS
PART II. FORMS
B. Opposing Motion to Strike

16-160 California Points & Authorities § 160.60

§ 160.60 Opposing Motion to Strike Whole or Part of Pleading [Code Civ. Proc. § 435]--Speaking Motion Not Permitted [Code Civ. Proc. § 437]

[1] FORM

SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA,
COUNTY OF _____

_____ [name],	)	NO. _____
Plaintiff,	)	MEMORANDUM OF POINTS AND AUTHORIT-
vs.	)	IES IN OPPOSITION TO
_____ [name],	)	MOTION TO STRIKE _____
Defendant.	)	[WHOLE or PART OF] _____
	)	[specify pleading, e.g., COMPLAINT]
	)	[Code Civ. Proc. § 435]

_____

THE MOTION TO STRIKE SHOULD NOT BE GRANTED BECAUSE IT RELIES ON EXTRINSIC EVIDENCE TO ESTABLISH THE GROUNDS OF THE MOTION.

A. Grounds for Motion to Strike Cannot Be Established by Extrinsic Evidence. The grounds for a motion to strike must appear on the face of the challenged pleading or from any matter of which the court is required to take judicial notice (Code Civ. Proc. § 437(a)).

B. Matters Subject to Judicial Notice Must Be Specified. When the motion to strike is based on matter of which the court may take judicial notice pursuant to Section 452 or 453 of the Evidence Code (matters subject to permissive judicial notice, or mandatory judicial notice if conditions are met), such matter must be specified in the notice of motion, or in the supporting points and authorities, except as the court may otherwise permit (Code Civ. Proc. § 437(b)).

C. Motion Relying on Extrinsic Evidence Is to Be Treated as Motion for Summary Judgment. Speaking motions relying on extrinsic evidence are governed by the procedure governing motions for summary judgments set out in Code Civ. Proc. § 437c, and such motions will be treated as motions for summary judgment even if labeled as motions to strike by the moving party (Vesely v. Sager (1971) 5 Cal. 3d 153, 157, 167-169, 95 Cal. Rptr. 623, 486 P.2d 151 (specifically overruled on unrelated point by Bus. & Prof. Code § 25602(b), (c) and Civ. Code § 1714(b), (c)); Mediterranean Exports, Inc. v. Superior Court (1981) 119 Cal. App. 3d 605, 615, 174 Cal. Rptr. 169 (both cases decided before enactment of Code Civ. Proc. § 437, as set out in Paragraph A., supra)).

Dated: _____.

Respectfully submitted,
_____ [firm name, if any]
By: _____ [signature]
_____ [typed name]
Attorney for _____ [party's status and name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in opposition to a motion to strike the whole or part of any pleading when the motion purports to rely on extrinsic evidence to establish the grounds for striking. The foregoing sets out the points that the grounds for striking a pleading upon a motion to strike must appear on the face of the challenged pleading or from matters of which the court may take judicial notice, and that a motion to strike that relies on extrinsic evidence in order to establish grounds for striking pleading matter will be treated as a motion for summary judgment. This form may be submitted in opposition to any speaking motion to strike, including, when appropriate, any motion to strike supported by the points and authorities memoranda in this chapter [see §§ 160.30 -160.43].

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Such facts and arguments should point out any extrinsic evidence of which the court cannot properly take judicial notice that was included with the motion to strike, and should show that the grounds for striking stated in the motion cannot be established without resort to such evidence. When appropriate, counsel may also insert argument, showing that matters that do not appear on the face of the challenged pleading, but on which the motion relies in purporting to establish grounds for striking, are not subject to judicial notice (see discussion under § 160.60[2][b]). Counsel should also be prepared to argue that the motion is insufficient as a motion for summary judgment as well as improper as a motion to strike. For forms opposing a motion for summary judgment, see Ch. 221, Summary Judgments .

[b] Judicial Notice

Those matters of which the court must in all cases take judicial notice are set out in Evid. Code § 451. Additional matters of which judicial notice may be taken are set out in Code Civ. Proc. § 452. The court may take judicial notice of the matters set out in Code Civ. Proc. § 452 on its own initiative [see Code Civ. Proc. § 452]. The court must take notice of the matters set out in Code Civ. Proc. § 452 if a party requests it and (1) gives each adverse party sufficient notice, through the pleading or otherwise, to enable such adverse party to prepare to meet the request and (2) furnishes the court with sufficient information to take judicial notice of the matter [Code Civ. Proc. § 453].

[c] Validity of Pre-1982 Case Law

The cases cited in this chapter were decided before the enactment of Code Civ. Proc. § 437 in 1982. In enacting Code Civ. Proc. § 437, the Legislature essentially adopted the basic rule prohibiting speaking motions to strike that was set out in those cases. The corollary to the basic rule set out in Vesely v. Sager (1971) 5 Cal. 3d 153, 157, 167-169, 95 Cal. Rptr. 623, 486 P.2d 151 (specifically overruled on unrelated point by Bus. & Prof. Code § 25602(b), (c) and Civ. Code § 1714 (b), (c)), and the cases following it that a speaking motion to strike shall be treated as a motion for summary judgment also still appears to be good law under Code Civ. Proc. § 437.

[d] Related Memoranda

For forms opposing and supporting a motion for summary judgment, see Ch. 221, Summary Judgments .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Motion Relying on Extrinsic Evidence Is to Be Treated as Motion for Summary Judgment

Vesely v. Sager (1971) 5 Cal. 3d 153, 95 Cal. Rptr. 623, 486 P.2d 151 (decided before the enactment of Code Civ. Proc. § 437, which is set out in Paragraph A, above), involved an action for personal injuries and property damage sustained in an automobile accident. The complaint alleged, inter alia, that defendant driver of the automobile stated to be responsible for the accident was driving the automobile with the consent, knowledge, and permission of the remaining defendants, that each defendant was the agent and employee of the other defendant, and that each of the defendants was at all times acting within the purpose and scope of this agency and employment. The only defendant involved in the present appeal moved to strike these allegations. In support of the motion to strike, the appealing defendant submitted his own declaration stating that the defendant driver and owner of the automobile were not in his employment on the date of the accident, and that the declarant had never had any ownership interest or other interest in the automobile. The trial court granted the motion to strike, sustained a demurrer interposed by the appealing defendant on an unrelated point without leave to amend, and dismissed the case as to the appealing defendant. Plaintiff appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed the action of the trial court in granting the motion to strike. The Court noted from the points and authorities submitted in support of the motion that the motion was intended as a speaking motion (defined as a motion supported by facts outside of the pleadings) addressed to the inherent right of a court to strike or dismiss a complaint when it is made to appear by extraneous evidence that the complaint is sham and based on false allegations (5 Cal. 3d 153, 167) . The Court then cited Pianka v. State of California (1956) 46 Cal. 2d 208, 211, 293 P.2d 458 (see § 160.60[4][a]) in which it had earlier held that such nonstatutory speaking motions have been superseded by the procedure governing motions for summary judgment contained in Code Civ. Proc. § 437c (5 Cal. 3d 153, 167-168) . The Court disapproved a court of appeal case decided subsequently to Pianka, which had held that the Legislature's enactment of Code Civ. Proc. § 435 (authorizing motions to strike; see § 160.30 for present provisions of statute) had reaffirmed the right to make a speaking motion to strike. In disapproving that case, the Court stated that the legislative history of Code Civ. Proc. § 435 indicated that this statute had been enacted merely to make the motion to strike a pleading, and to establish procedures for its use, so that it did not have the substantive effect of reinstating the speaking motion to strike (5 Cal. 3d 153, 168-169) . The Court concluded by stating that it would treat defendant's motion to strike as a motion for summary judgment (5 Cal. 3d 153, 169) .

Reviewing the motion under the standards for determining whether summary judgment should be granted, the Court concluded that the defendant's declaration was insufficient to warrant summary judgment, despite the fact that the plaintiff had not filed a counteraffidavit or declaration. The Court held that since the declaration had not negated the possibility that the driver of the car might have been acting in an agency relationship with the defendant, it did not meet the burden of establishing the facts of every element necessary to entitle the moving party to a judgment, as is required under summary judgment procedure (5 Cal. 3d 153, 169-170) .

It should be noted that the Legislature has subsequently enacted Bus. & Prof. Code § 25602(b), (c) and Civ. Code § 1744(b), (c), which specifically overruled this case on an unrelated point, dealing with the liability of a commercial provider of alcoholic beverages for injuries caused to third persons.

Mediterranean Exports, Inc. v. Superior Court (1981) 119 Cal. App. 3d 605, 174 Cal. Rptr. 169 (decided before the enactment of Code Civ. Proc. § 437, which is set out in Paragraph A, supra) involved an action for damages arising out of an alleged breach of a written lease. The real party in interest, a corporation that was the defendant in the underlying action, filed an answer and cross complaint. Plaintiff thereupon filed a motion to strike both of the real party's pleadings on the grounds that the real party was a foreign corporation doing intrastate business in California, which was delinquent in paying corporate franchise tax owed to the state, and had therefore forfeited its right to prosecute and defend actions in the state. Extensive declarations and other documents were filed on the motion by both parties, and further documents were requested by the trial court. The trial court subsequently granted the motion, and the real party in interest petitioned for writ of mandamus.

The court of appeal overturned the trial court's action in granting the motion to strike and ordered the real party's pleadings to be reinstated. Preliminarily, the court stated that under applicable statutes and case law a mandatory forfeiture of the right to defend or appeal an action in California, which would deprive the real party of the right to file the pleadings that it had attempted to file, is prescribed for foreign corporations doing intrastate business (119 Cal. App. 3d 605, 614-615) . Addressing plaintiff's motion to strike, the court noted that plaintiff had made its motion to strike under Code Civ. Proc. § 435 and former Code Civ. Proc. § 453, which authorized the striking of cross complaints and sham and irrelevant answers (moving to strike both types of pleadings is now authorized by Code Civ. Proc. § 435, while striking pleadings on grounds substantively similar to those stated above is now authorized by Code Civ. Proc. § 436; see § 160.30). The court noted, however, that the extensive evidentiary showing on the motion made it a speaking motion. The court cited Vesely v. Sager (1971) 5 Cal. 3d 153, 157, 167-169, 95 Cal. Rptr. 623, 486 P.2d 151 (discussed supra) for the rule that such a speaking motion to strike was not authorized by Code Civ. Proc. §§ 435 and 453 and must therefore be treated by the court as if it were a motion for summary judgment (119 Cal. App. 3d 605, 615) .

Treating the motion as a motion for summary judgment, the court held that the evidence presented was not sufficient to sustain a judgment in favor of the plaintiff, and that the motion therefore failed under the applicable test for summary judgment (119 Cal. App. 3d 605, 616) . The court stated that the evidence failed to show that summary judgment was warranted for two reasons: (1) There remained at least a triable issue of fact as to whether the real party's activities in the state constituted intrastate business, and (2) the forfeiture prescribed by statute for failure to pay franchise tax owed takes effect only when the Franchise Tax Board transmits the name of the delinquent corporation to the Secretary of State, and the showing on the motion in the present case included uncontradicted evidence that this had not been done in the present case (119 Cal. App. 3d 605, 615, 619) .

Finally, the court held that mandamus was the proper procedure for real party to seek relief in the present case, since the forfeiture urged by the defendant would deprive the real party of the right to seek relief by appealing from the judgment, and in any event, the final judgment from which the real party might appeal would necessarily be a default judgment since the trial court's order had stricken both the answer and the cross complaint of the real party (119 Cal. App. 3d 605, 618) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Motion Relying on Extrinsic Evidence Is to Be Treated as Motion for Summary Judgment

Pianka v. State of California (1956) 46 Cal. 2d 208, 293 P.2d 458 , involved an action against the National Guard for injuries sustained by a minor resulting from the explosion of a shell left on a firing ground after a public demonstration. Without answering, defendants filed a motion to dismiss. An affidavit supporting the motion stated facts indicating that the public demonstration had been a proprietary activity of the state that is protected by the doctrine of sovereign immunity. The trial court granted the motion, and plaintiff appealed from the judgment of dismissal.

The Supreme Court reversed. The Court stated that although a speaking motion of the sort that defendants had filed had been permitted by the courts under certain circumstances, such speaking motions have been superseded by the procedure governing motions for summary judgment contained in Code Civ. Proc. § 437c (46 Cal. 2d 208, 211) . Thus, the Court stated that in the interest of orderly and efficient administration of justice, the litigant should be required to employ the statutory remedy set out in Code Civ. Proc. § 437c, and a speaking motion to dismiss should be treated as a motion for summary judgment in order to preserve the safeguard provided by the statute (46 Cal. 2d 208, 212) .

In City and County of San Francisco v. Strahlendorf (1992) 7 Cal. App. 4th 1911, 9 Cal. Rptr. 2d 817 , plaintiff City filed a paternity suit against Strahlendorf, identified by a woman on public assistance as the father of her infant son. After filing an answer, Strahlendorf purported to challenge the complaint through a motion to strike. Despite the lack of timeliness of the motion, and the lack of grounds for the motion on the face of the pleading, the trial court relied on factual representations made by counsel for both parties, and granted the motion (7 Cal. App. 4th 1911, 1913) . The court of appeal declined to reverse on procedural grounds, instead treating the procedurally deficient motion to strike as a "speaking motion" supported by facts outside the pleading, and applied the standards for a motion for summary judgment. Under those standards, the court of appeal reversed the trial court's ruling on the merits (7 Cal. App. 4th 1911, 1914) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 160 MOTIONS TO STRIKE: PLEADINGS
PART II. FORMS
B. Opposing Motion to Strike

16-160 California Points & Authorities § 160.61

§ 160.61 Opposing Motion to Strike Whole or Part of Pleading [Code Civ. Proc. § 435]--Motion Not Timely [Code Civ. Proc. § 435(b)(1)]

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 160.60.]

THE MOTION TO STRIKE SHOULD BE DENIED AS UNTIMELY BECAUSE IT WAS NOT FILED WITHIN THE TIME ALLOWED TO RESPOND TO THE _____ [specify pleading, e.g., COMPLAINT].

A. Time Limit for Filing Motion to Strike. A notice of motion to strike must be filed within the time allowed to respond to the challenged pleading (see Code Civ. Proc. § 435(b)(1)).

[Optional] B. Motion to Strike Complaint After Answer Has Been Filed Is Improper. From the language of former Code of Civil Procedure Section 435 stating that the defendant, within the time required in the summons to answer, may serve and file a notice of motion to strike, and that if the defendant serves and files such a notice of motion without demurring, his time to answer the complaint shall be extended, it expressly appears that a defendant can move to strike a complaint only before he or she has answered it and not afterward (Adohr Milk Farms, Inc. v. Love (1967) 255 Cal. App. 2d 366, 370-371, 63 Cal. Rptr. 123). Substantially similar language is continued in Section 435 as amended by Stats. 1993, ch. 456, which provides that any party may serve and file the motion within the time allowed to respond to a pleading (Code Civ. Proc. § 435(b)(1) (also giving one exception)) and that the service and filing of the notice of motion to strike a complaint without demurring extends the time to answer (Code Civ. Proc. § 435(c)).
Dated: _____.

Respectfully submitted,
_____ [firm name, if any]
By: _____ [signature]
_____ [typed name]
Attorney for _____ [party's status and name]

[2] Comments

CAUTION:

The time restriction stated in Paragraph A of this form does not apply if the motion to strike is made as part of a motion under Code Civ. Proc. § 438(i)(1)(A), directed at a pleading filed after a motion for judgment on the pleadings was sustained with leave to amend [Code Civ. Proc. § 435(b)(1), (e); see also § 160.35 and Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings].

Counsel using this form must be aware of Code Civ. Proc. § 436, under which the court has discretion to strike matter without any time limit. For discussion, see 160.61[2][c].

[a] Use of Form

This form of memorandum may be used to oppose a motion to wholly or partially strike any pleading on any grounds if the motion was not timely. This form sets out the point that a motion to strike must be filed within the time allowed to respond to the challenged pleading. It also sets out the point that a defendant's motion to strike a complaint must be filed before filing the answer. Counsel should insert facts and arguments into this form showing how the points of law stated relate to the facts of the case.

[b] Time to Respond to Pleadings

The times within which responses to pleadings must be filed are set out in the Code of Civil Procedure as follows:

(1) Answer or demurrer to complaint--30 days [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 412.20(a)(3) (response to complaint generally), 430.40(a) (demurrer)];

(2) Answer or demurrer to cross complaint--30 days [Code Civ. Proc. § 432.10];

(3) Answer to complaint or cross complaint if demurrer overruled--10 days or as otherwise determined by court [see Code Civ. Proc. § 472a; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1320(g)]; and

(4) Demurrer to answer--10 days [see Code Civ. Proc. § 431.50(b)].

In determining whether a motion to strike is timely, counsel should determine which statute applies to the pleading that opposing counsel has moved to strike and then determine if the response time limit set out in that statute has been exceeded.

[c] No Time Limit on Court's Power to Strike

The time limits for moving to strike set out in Code Civ. Proc. § 435(b)(1) apply only to the making of the motion by a party. In contrast to Code Civ. Proc. § 435(b)(1), Code Civ. Proc. § 436, which is the source of the court's power to strike pleading matter, states that the court may strike such matter on a motion made pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 435 or at any time in its discretion. Since the court's power to strike at any time is given in the alternative to the power to strike on a motion made pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 435 (setting forth time limits), it appears that the time limits governing a party's right to move to strike do not apply to the court's power to strike [see Code Civ. Proc. § 436]. It is not clear from the language of these two statutes whether the response time limit of Code Civ. Proc. § 435(b)(1) requires the court to deny an untimely motion to strike, or whether the broad language of Code Civ. Proc. § 436 gives the court the power to strike pleading matter if it deems it proper to do so, even though the motion to strike was untimely.

It should be noted that Code Civ. Proc. § 435 does not set up new and independent time limits for filing a motion to strike, but rather makes those time limits that apply in general to pleadings responding to the challenged pleading applicable to motions to strike as well [see Code Civ. Proc. § 435(b)(1)]. The courts have read the statutory time limits applying to responsive pleadings such as answers and demurrers to mean that a party cannot as of right file such a pleading after the time has passed, but that the court may in its discretion allow such late filed pleadings to stand [see § 160.35]. Although there have been no cases on point, it is possible that in applying the statutory time limits for responsive pleadings generally to motions to strike, the courts will also apply the rule of discretion evolved by the courts to govern the consequences of violating those time limits.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Motion to Strike Complaint After Answer Has Been Filed Is Improper

Adohr Milk Farms, Inc. v. Love (1967) 255 Cal. App. 2d 366, 63 Cal. Rptr. 123 , was an action by an employer to recover from its employee the amount of workers' compensation benefits paid to an employee for damages alleged to have been sustained through the negligence of the employee. The defendant employee answered, pleading as an affirmative defense that the statute of limitations on the action had run. Thereafter, defendant filed a notice of motion stating that she would move for dismissal of the action, or in the alternative that the complaint be stricken or for a judgment on the pleading, on the ground that the statute of limitations had run. The trial court granted the motion in an unsigned minute order without specifying the nature of the motion it was granting, and the plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed the trial court's minute order. Preliminarily, the court discussed the nature of the motion that was granted by the trial court's order. The court stated that neither an unsigned motion to dismiss nor a motion for judgment on the pleadings is appealable, and that the appeal would have to be dismissed if the trial court's order were to be treated as one granting either kind of motion (255 Cal. App. 2d 366, 368, 369) . However, the court stated that an order granting a motion to strike that would, as in the present case, operate to remove from the case the only cause of action alleged against defendant and leave no issues to be determined between the opposing parties is appealable (255 Cal. App. 2d 366, 370) . In order to be able to make its decision on the trial court's order, the court held that it was an order granting a motion to strike, and that defendant's motions to dismiss and for judgment on the pleading were still pending in the trial court (255 Cal. App. 2d 366, 371, 372) .

Regarding defendant's motion to strike, the court held that it appears expressly from the language of former Code Civ. Proc. § 435 (authorizing motion to strike complaint; now see Code Civ. Proc. § 435, authorizing motion to strike most pleadings) that a defendant may move to strike a complaint only before he or she has answered and not afterward (255 Cal. App. 2d 366, 371) . In coming to this conclusion, the court relied on language in former Code Civ. Proc. § 435 stating that (1) the defendant within the time required by the summons to answer may serve and file a notice of motion to strike [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 435(b)(1), stating that any party within the time allowed to respond to a pleading may file and serve a notice of motion to strike], and (2) if the defendant files and serves a notice of motion to strike without demurring, his or her time to answer the complaint shall be extended [now contained, as amended to expand coverage of the statute to other parties moving to strike as well as defendant, in Code Civ. Proc. § 435(c)] (255 Cal. App. 2d 366, 370-371) .

The court held that since the defendant in the present case had already answered when she filed her motion, a motion to strike under Code Civ. Proc. § 435 did not lie. Thus, the court concluded, the trial court's order, insofar as it purported to grant a motion to strike, was void (255 Cal. App. 2d 366, 370) .

For discussion of a possible limitation on the court's statement that an order striking a complaint is void when made on a motion to strike filed after the answer, see § 160.61[2].

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 160 MOTIONS TO STRIKE: PLEADINGS
PART II. FORMS
B. Opposing Motion to Strike

16-160 California Points & Authorities § 160.62

§ 160.62 Opposing Motion to Strike Whole or Part of Pleading [Code Civ. Proc. § 435]--Hearing Date Improperly Specified [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 435(b)(2), 1005]

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 160.60.]

THE MOTION TO STRIKE SHOULD BE DENIED BECAUSE IT DID NOT SPECIFY A HEARING DATE WITHIN THE TIME REQUIRED BY STATUTE.

A. Notice of Motion to Strike Must Specify Hearing Date Within Statutory Time Limits. A notice of motion to strike the answer or the complaint, or a portion thereof, shall specify a hearing date in accordance with Section 1005 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Code Civ. Proc. § 435(b)(2)).

B. Statutory Time Limits. The notice of motion and supporting papers must be served and filed at least 16 court days before the time appointed for the hearing; if the notice is served by mail, the required 16-day period of notice before the time appointed for the hearing shall be increased by five days if the place of mailing and the place of address are within the State of California, 10 days if either the place of mailing or the place of address is outside the State of California but within the United States, and 20 days if either the place of mailing or the place of address is outside the United States, and if the notice is served by facsimile transmission, Express Mail, or another method of overnight delivery, the required 16-day period of notice before the time appointed for the hearing is increased by two court days (Code Civ. Proc. § 1005(b)).
Dated: _____.

Respectfully submitted,
_____ [firm name, if any]
By: _____ [signature]
_____ [typed name]
Attorney for _____ [party's status and name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of memorandum may be used to oppose a motion to wholly or partially strike any pleading on any grounds if the notice of motion did not specify a hearing date allowing the minimum amount of time from the time of service of the notice required by statute. This form sets out the minimum amounts of time within which a hearing may be set for notice not served by mail and for notices served by mail to various locations.

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should indicate the date and mode of service of the notice of motion, the place of address if service was by mail, and the amount of time allowed for between the date of service and the specified hearing date.

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 160 MOTIONS TO STRIKE: PLEADINGS
PART II. FORMS
B. Opposing Motion to Strike

16-160 California Points & Authorities § 160.63

§ 160.63 Opposing Motion to Strike Whole or Part of Pleading [Code Civ. Proc. § 435]--Defect Can Be Corrected by Amendment

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 160.60.]

THE MOTION TO STRIKE SHOULD BE DENIED BECAUSE THE DEFECT IN THE _____ [specify pleading, e.g., COMPLAINT] CAN BE CURED BY AMENDMENT, WAS NOT THE RESULT OF WILLFUL NEGLECT OR INEXCUSABLE CARELESSNESS BY _____ [specify party opposing motion, e.g., PLAINTIFF], AND WILL NOT CAUSE IRREPARABLE HARM TO _____ [specify moving party, e.g., DEFENDANT].

A. Striking Should Be Avoided When Defect May Be Corrected. To strike out a pleading that is susceptible to being amended by a statement of facts known to exist and that constitutes a cause of action is a harsh proceeding and should only be resorted to in cases of willful neglect, inexcusable carelessness, or irreparable injury to the opposing party (Burns v. Scooffy (1893) 98 Cal. 271, 276, 33 P. 86 ; Allerton v. King (1929) 96 Cal. App. 230, 234, 274 P. 90 ; see Hopkins v. Hopkins (1953) 116 Cal. App. 2d 174, 179, 253 P.2d 723).

[Optional] B. Court May Grant Leave to Verify Answer Rather Than Striking Answer. The court may overrule a motion to strike an answer as unverified and allow the defendant leave to verify the answer before trial unless this in some way takes the plaintiff by surprise (Angier v. Masterson (1856) 6 Cal. 61, 62 ; Jenssen v. R.K.O. Studios, Inc. (1937) 20 Cal. App. 2d 705, 707, 67 P.2d 757).

[Counsel should add a proposed amendment and argument showing how the proposed amendment would correct the purported defect in the challenged pleading matter as well as argument showing that neither inexcusable neglect in failing to correct the defect originally nor prejudice to the plaintiff would warrant granting the motion to strike despite the proffered amendment.]
Dated: _____.

Respectfully submitted,
_____ [firm name, if any]
By: _____ [signature]
_____ [typed name]
Attorney for _____ [party's status and name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in opposition to a motion to strike all or part of a pleading when the defect in the pleading matter, if any, could be corrected by amendment. It sets out the point that when an amendment stating facts known to exist and constituting a cause of action could correct the defect in pleading matter, the matter should not be stricken unless the circumstances of the case show willful neglect or inexcusable carelessness by the party that filed the challenged pleading or irreparable harm to the opposing party. In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to any of the arguments for motion to strike supported by the points and authorities set out in §§ 160.30 -160.43. The point set out in Paragraph B may be submitted in opposition to the arguments for a motion to strike set out in § 160.37.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Validity of Pre-1982 Case Law

The cases cited in this form were decided before the Legislature reorganized the law governing motions to strike in 1982. However, since none of the rules set out in these cases are inconsistent with any of the provisions of the 1982 legislative scheme, it appears that the cases are still good law [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 431.10, 435, 436, 437]. For a further treatment of the continuing validity of pre-1982 case law, see the discussion in § 160.03.

[c] Permission to Amend Pleading

In opposing the motion to strike, counsel may also move for permission to amend a challenged pleading. When appropriate, counsel may argue, as an alternative to arguing that the motion to strike should be denied, that if the motion is granted, leave to amend the defective pleading should be also granted [Code Civ. Proc. § 472a(d); see also Code Civ. Proc. § 473(a)]. Although leave to amend is deemed granted when a demurrer is sustained unless the court states otherwise, there are no provisions that deem the granting of leave to amend when a motion to strike is granted [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1320(g)].

[d] Related Memoranda

For discussion and forms regarding amended pleadings, see Ch. 16, Amended and Supplemental Pleadings in this publication.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Striking Should Be Avoided When Defect May Be Corrected

In Burns v. Scooffy (1893) 98 Cal. 271, 33 P. 86 , plaintiff filed an action to establish his right to purchase certain land from the state and to have similar applications by defendants to purchase the same land declared invalid. One of the defendants duly answered, setting out his own application to purchase the land in dispute, but failed to aver, as was required by applicable law to prevent the application from becoming void, that he had within six months of filing the application demanded an approval of the application or an order of reference, or that an order of reference to a court had been had. Plaintiff moved to strike the answer. Defendant's counsel offered to file an amendment to the answer making the necessary averments on information and belief, or positively if given time to send the answer to defendant.

The Supreme Court reversed. The Court noted that the affidavits in support of the motion indicated that the omission of the allegations in question was probably an oversight on the part of the attorney who drew up the pleading. The Court held that to strike out a pleading that is susceptible of being amended by a statement of facts known to exist, and that constitutes a cause of action or defense to an action, is a harsh proceeding and should only be resorted to in extreme cases. The Court stated further that to refuse permission to answer with a valid defense in hand can only be justified in the face of facts showing willful neglect, inexcusable carelessness, or irreparable injury to the plaintiff (98 Cal. 271, 276) .

This case was decided before the rule stating that grounds for a motion to strike may not be shown by extrinsic evidence was set out [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437(a)]. Under current law, the case would have been treated as a motion for summary judgment [see Vesely v. Sager (1971) 5 Cal. 3d 153, 157, 167-169, 95 Cal. Rptr. 623, 486 P.2d 151] . However, it appears that the point that defective pleadings which can be made whole by amendment should not be stricken except in extreme cases is still valid.

The facts and procedural background of Allerton v. King (1929) 96 Cal. App 230, 274 P. 90 , are set out in § 160.66[3][a]. In that case, the court of appeal noted that defendant's answer in an action on an indemnity bond, in a case involving certain disputed property, was inartfully drawn and perhaps uncertain, but that defendant's repeated averment that the property in question was worth no more than an amount that was considerably less than the amount prayed for by plaintiff made it clear that defendant was trying to raise the valid defense that plaintiff's recovery should be limited to the value of the disputed property (96 Cal. App 230, 234) . The court held that the proper procedure in the case would have been to file a special demurrer for uncertainty. In connection with this holding, the court cited Burns v. Scooffy (1893) 98 Cal. 271, 276, 33 P. 86 (discussed above) and restated the rule set out in Burns that when an amendment stating a cause of action is known to be possible, a defective pleading should not be stricken except in extreme cases (96 Cal. App 230, 234) .

Hopkins v. Hopkins (1953) 116 Cal. App. 2d 174, 253 P.2d 723 , involved an action on a marriage dissolution settlement. Plaintiff alleged a written agreement, incorporated into the judgment of dissolution, providing that defendant would make monthly support payments. The complaint included two counts alleging failure to make any payments. The first count alleged failure to make any payments on the judgment within the five-year period prior to the date on which plaintiff instituted the action. The second count alleged failure to make any payments on the judgment and contract since a date some 18 years prior to commencement of the action. Defendant answered, averring inter alia that the action was barred by laches and by the statute of limitations. Plaintiff did not interpose a demurrer, but moved to strike the averments as to laches and the statute of limitations. With respect to the statute of limitations, plaintiff argued that the plea was defective in that, while setting forth the code sections in which the applicable limitations were set out, it failed to specify the subsection relied on. After plaintiff made her motion, defendant requested permission to amend his answer so as to be able to specify the required subsections. The trial court granted the motions to strike with respect to both the plea of laches and the plea of the statute of limitations. With respect to the statute of limitations plea, however, the court stated that its ruling was without prejudice to defendant's right to renew his motion to amend the answer at the close of the trial. Defendant did so renew the motion, but the motion was denied by the trial court and judgment was entered for plaintiff. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal reversed the judgment and remanded the case to the trial court with instructions that defendant be permitted to amend his answer in accordance with the court's opinion. Preliminarily, the court noted that defendant on appeal did not complain of the order striking the plea of laches and stated that this order was clearly correct, since the plea of laches does not lie in an action at law. The court further stated that the trial court's ruling with respect to the plea of limitations was correct as regarded plaintiff's first count, since the first count only sought to recover payments that had accrued within the statutory limitations period.

Concerning the statute of limitations plea as to plaintiff's second count, the court conceded that under applicable law the defendant's answer was insufficient in that it failed to specify the particular subsections relied on, and that this insufficiency would have made the answer susceptible to a demurrer (116 Cal. App. 2d 174, 177, 178) . However, the court noted that the answer did allege facts showing that some portion of the claim at least was barred by limitation, and evidenced an intention to plead limitations (116 Cal. App. 2d 174, 178-179) . Thus, the court concluded that the answer was not so devoid of allegations of fact as to compel the court to say that it was a nullity or fatally defective in the absence of a demurrer (116 Cal. App. 2d 174, 179) .

The court further stated that even if it was in error in the reasoning set out above, it was an abuse of discretion for the trial court not to permit defendant to defend his answer so as to conform it to the applicable pleading requirements (116 Cal. App. 2d 174, 179) . In support of its holding the court noted that the proposed amendment would do no more than add the correct subsections for the statutes relied on in raising the bar of limitation. The court further observed that plaintiff's stating her single cause of action in two counts, one of which alleged only failure to pay during a period falling within the limitation period, indicated that plaintiff knew that she would be faced with the statute of limitations.

[b] Court May Grant Leave to Verify Answer Rather Than Striking Answer

Angier v. Masterson (1856) 6 Cal. 61 , involved an action to foreclose on a mortgage. The complaint was verified but the answer was not. On the day of trial, plaintiff moved to strike the answer as unverified. The trial court overruled the motion and allowed defendants to verify the answer. After trial by jury, judgment was entered for defendants. Plaintiff appealed.

The Supreme Court upheld the action of the trial court in denying the motion to strike and allowing defendants to verify the answer. The Court stated that it was not error to allow defendant to verify his answer before trial, unless it in some way took plaintiff by surprise, and it was not shown that this was the case (6 Cal. 61, 62) .

In Jenssen v. R.K.O. Studios, Inc. (1937) 20 Cal. App. 2d 705, 67 P.2d 757 , plaintiff's verified complaint alleged that defendants had unlawfully retained and used a literary composition of plaintiff's. At the opening of the trial and before any evidence was introduced, plaintiff moved for judgment on the pleadings on the ground that the verifications of the answers were insufficient in form. The trial court indicated that the motion for judgment would be denied without making a formal ruling on it, and allowed defendants until five o'clock of the following afternoon to file properly verified answers. Plaintiff asked for no postponement of the trial, and trial proceeded immediately. The amended answers were duly filed within the time allowed, without change from the original answers except in the form of the verification and an elaboration of some of the denials. Judgment was entered for defendants, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal upheld the action of the trial court in allowing defendants to verify their answer by way of amendment. The court acknowledged that if the verifications in the original complaint were insufficient, there existed a failure to deny and which constituted an admission of the allegations of the complaint. However, the court stated that proper verification is not a jurisdictional requirement and that a failure to properly verify amounts to no more than a mere defect in the pleading, the right to object to which might have been waived (20 Cal. App. 2d 705, 707) . Since the court had jurisdiction to proceed, the court applied the basic rule that permitting or refusing amendments to pleadings is with in the sound discretion of the trial court, which should be exercised liberally, and will be overruled only for gross, clearly apparent abuse (20 Cal. App. 2d 705, 707) . The court cited Angier v. Masterson (1856) 6 Cal. 61 (discussed above), for the rule that an amendment may be allowed at the time of trial in the absence of a showing of prejudice to the adverse party (20 Cal. App. 2d 705, 707) . The court added in pertinent dicta that in view of the fact that some 16 months had elapsed between the time of filing the original answers and the time that objection was first made as to their sufficiency, it would have been error had the trial court refused permission to amend (20 Cal. App. 2d 705, 707) . Finally, the court stated that since plaintiff had not shown that she had suffered prejudice from the trial court's action in permitting the amendments, the trial court's action, if it had been erroneous, would have been harmless error (20 Cal. App. 2d 705, 707) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Court May Grant Leave to Verify Answer Rather Than Striking Answer

Ware v. Stafford (1962) 206 Cal. App. 2d 232, 24 Cal. Rptr. 153 , involved an action to cancel an oil lease held by defendant on plaintiffs' land. After judgment had been rendered for plaintiffs and had been affirmed on appeal, defendant unsuccessfully moved the trial court to vacate the judgment, quash summons, and dismiss the action. Defendant then appealed the trial court's denial of the motion. The court of appeal upheld the trial court's action. Defendant had argued, inter alia, that the verification of the complaint had been made by a person not a party to the action and was therefore defective. The court held that the verification was not defective under the circumstances of the case, and that even if it were defective there is no authority for the position that a defective verification deprives the trial court of jurisdiction so as to render its judgment void (206 Cal. App. 2d 232, 237) . To illustrate the nonjurisdictional character of a defect in verification, the court cited Jenssen v. R.K.O. Studios, Inc. (1937) 20 Cal. App. 2d 705, 707, 67 P.2d 757 (discussed under § 160.63[3][b]) for the rule that such a defect may be cured by amendment.

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 160 MOTIONS TO STRIKE: PLEADINGS
PART II. FORMS
B. Opposing Motion to Strike

16-160 California Points & Authorities § 160.64

§ 160.64 Opposing Motion to Strike Whole or Part of Pleading [Code Civ. Proc. § 435]--Pleading Not Filed or Drawn in Conformity With Law [Code Civ. Proc. § 436(b)]--Amended Pleading Adding New Parties Without Leave--Only Added Parties May Move to Strike

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 160.60.]

THE MOTION TO STRIKE SHOULD BE DENIED WITH RESPECT TO _____ [specify parties not added by challenged amended pleading] BECAUSE ONLY PARTIES THAT WERE ADDED BY AN AMENDED PLEADING MAY MOVE TO STRIKE AN AMENDED PLEADING ON THE GROUND THAT THE PLEADING ADDS NEW PARTIES WITHOUT PERMISSION.

Only Added Parties May Move to Strike Amended Pleading Adding New Parties Without Permission. When an amended pleading is defective because new parties were added without permission of the court, only the added parties may move to strike the challenged pleading on this ground (see People ex rel Dept. Pub. Wks. v. Clausen (1967) 248 Cal. App. 2d 770, 782 fn. 7, 57 Cal. Rptr. 227 (cross complaint).
Dated: _____.

Respectfully submitted,
_____ [firm name, if any]
By: _____ [signature]
_____ [typed name]
Attorney for _____ [party's status and name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in opposition to a motion to strike an amended pleading that added new parties without permission of the court when the party that made the motion to strike was not one of the parties added by the challenged pleading. The foregoing sets out the point that a motion to strike on the above-stated grounds should be granted only in favor of those parties who were improperly named as new parties by the challenged pleading. In an appropriate case, this memorandum may be submitted in opposition to a motion to strike supported by the points and authorities set out in § 160.42.

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Validity of Pre-1982 Case Law

People ex rel Dept. Pub. Wks. v. Clausen (1967) 248 Cal. App. 2d 770, 782, 57 Cal. Rptr. 227 (cross complaint), which is the basis for this form, was decided before the Legislature reorganized the law governing motions to strike in 1982. However, since none of the rules set out in this case are inconsistent with any of the provisions of the 1982 legislative scheme, it appears that the cases are still good law [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 431.10, 435, 436, 437]. For a further treatment of the continuing validity of pre-1982 case law, see the discussion under § 160.03.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Only Added Parties May Move to Strike Amended Pleading Adding New Parties Without Permission

People ex rel Dept. Pub. Wks. v. Clausen (1967) 248 Cal. App. 2d 770, 57 Cal. Rptr. 227 , involved a condemnation action initiated against defendant by the State of California (hereinafter called State). Defendant answered and filed a cross complaint charging State with trespass, to which the trial court sustained State's demurrer with leave to amend. Subsequently, defendant, without obtaining further leave from the court, filed an amended cross complaint that named, inter alia, two corporations as additional cross defendants. State filed a demurrer and moved to strike the cross complaint. The trial court sustained the demurrer without leave to amend and in addition granted the motion to strike on the stated grounds that defendant had not obtained permission of the court either to file an amended cross complaint or to add new parties, and subsequently entered judgments of dismissal of the cross complaint in favor of State and in favor of the added corporate defendants. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal reversed the order striking the amended cross complaint and judgment of dismissal as to State and upheld the order as to the corporate defendants who had been added by the cross complaint. The court noted that the trial court's granting of leave to amend the original cross complaint in conjunction with sustaining State's demurrer to the answer and cross complaint was sufficient to give defendant permission to amend the cross complaint (248 Cal. App. 2d 770, 783) . However, the court held that permission to file an amended cross complaint did not entitle permission to bring in new parties by means of the amended cross complaint, and that the amended cross complaint was therefore defective as against the corporate defendants brought in by the amended pleading (248 Cal. App. 2d 770, 784-785). As to the motion by State, however, the court stated in a footnote that the defect created by the addition of the new parties would support the granting of a motion to strike only in favor of the cross defendants who were named in the cross complaint as parties without leave of court and that State cannot, on the basis of this defect, obtain an order striking the amended cross complaint with respect to itself (248 Cal. App. 2d 770, 782 fn. 7).

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 160 MOTIONS TO STRIKE: PLEADINGS
PART II. FORMS
B. Opposing Motion to Strike

16-160 California Points & Authorities § 160.65

§ 160.65 Opposing Motion to Strike Whole or Part of Pleading [Code Civ. Proc. § 435]--No Absolute Right to Have Untimely Responsive Pleading Stricken

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 160.60.]

THE PLAINTIFF HAS NO ABSOLUTE RIGHT TO HAVE A RESPONSIVE PLEADING STRICKEN MERELY BECAUSE IT WAS FILED LATE.

A. Technically Late Pleading Should Not Be Stricken When There Was No Purposeful Delay or Prejudice. When it cannot be said that the filing party was purposely dilatory and the opposing party suffered no prejudice from the delay, it would be unjust to deprive the filing party of its day in court by striking the pleading simply because of a minor delay in the filing of the pleading (Amacorp Ind. Leasing Co. v. Robert C. Young Associates, Inc. (1965) 237 Cal. App. 2d 724, 730, 47 Cal. Rptr. 294).

B. Opposing Party Has No Absolute Right to Have Untimely Pleading Stricken. When the late filing of a pleading is a mere irregularity, the striking of such a pleading is left to the discretion of the trial court and does not rest on any absolute right of the opposing party to have the pleading stricken (Bowers v. Dickerson (1861) 18 Cal. 420, 421 ; Tuck v. Thuesen (1970) 10 Cal. App. 3d 193, 196, 88 Cal. Rptr. 759 (disapproved on unrelated grounds in Neel v. Magana, Olney, Levy, Cathcart & Gelfand (1971) 6 Cal. 3d 176, 190, 98 Cal. Rptr. 837, 491 P.2d 421); see Code Civ. Proc. § 436 (court as empowered to strike on terms it deems proper)).
Dated: _____.

Respectfully submitted,
_____ [firm name, if any]
By: _____ [signature]
_____ [typed name]
Attorney for _____ [party's status and name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in opposition to a motion to strike a responsive pleading on the ground that it was not timely filed. The form sets out the point that the opposing party has no absolute right to have a pleading stricken merely because it was untimely filed and that the court may at its discretion permit such a pleading to stand.

In an appropriate case, this memorandum may be submitted in opposition to a motion to strike supported by the points and authorities set out in § 160.36.

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss any facts making it appropriate for the court to permit the untimely pleading to stand, such as facts showing that the failure to file on time was a mere irregularity and that there was neither purposeful delay nor prejudice to the opposing party as a result of the delay.

[b] Validity of Pre-1982 Case Law

The cases cited in this form were decided before the Legislature reorganized the law governing motions to strike in 1982. However, since none of the rules set out in these cases are inconsistent with any of the provisions of the 1982 legislative scheme, it appears that the cases are still good law [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 431.10, 435, 436, 437]. For a further treatment of the continuing validity of pre-1982 case law, see the discussion under § 160.03.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Technically Late Pleading Should Not Be Stricken When There Was No Purposeful Delay or Prejudice

Amacorp Ind. Leasing Co. v. Robert C. Young Associates, Inc. (1965) 237 Cal. App. 2d 724, 47 Cal. Rptr. 294 , was an action for money alleged to be due on a lease contract. Defendant cross complained against plaintiff corporation and added a second corporation as a new cross defendant. The added cross defendant filed a general and special demurrer, which the trial court granted with leave to amend within 10 days. Subsequently, defendant received an extension of the time within which to amend. Defendant thereupon served an amended cross complaint on both the original plaintiff and the added cross defendant, but did not file it with the court. The amended cross complaint was in substance a repetition of the original cross complaint. The added cross defendant again demurred and additionally filed a motion to strike the cross complaint stating as grounds, inter alia, that it had not been timely filed. The original plaintiff answered the cross complaint. Defendant had still not filed the amended cross complaint on the day on which the added cross defendant's demurrer and motion to strike were heard. It was stipulated that the defendant could file the cross complaint on that day, which was a Friday. However, defendant did not actually file its amended cross complaint until the following Monday. The trial court subsequently sustained the demurrer without leave to amend, granted the motion to strike, and entered a judgment of dismissal in favor of the added cross defendant. Defendant appealed from this decision.

The court of appeal overturned the trial court's order to strike the amended complaint. The court acknowledged that there is no doubt that the trial court may in its sound discretion grant a motion to strike a pleading because it was not timely filed (237 Cal. App. 2d 724, 730) . However, the court stated that recent California cases upholding the striking of a pleading for untimely filing all involved aggravating circumstances. Thus, the court distinguished Buck v. Morrossis (1952) 114 Cal. App. 2d 461, 464-465, 250 P.2d 270 (cited in § 160.35, supporting motion to strike untimely responsive pleading, for the rule that an untimely pleading may be stricken), as involving a purposely dilatory defendant. The court distinguished other cases as involving pleadings that were sham and frivolous as well as untimely (237 Cal. App. 2d 724, 730) .

With respect to the present case, the court stated that it could not be said that defendant had been purposely dilatory, nor was the cross complaint sham and frivolous. The court also stated that the added cross defendant suffered no prejudice because of the delay. From these factors, the court concluded that it would be most unjust to prevent defendant from having its day in court because its amended cross complaint had, as appeared from the record, been filed one day beyond the date set. Thus, the court held that the trial court had erred in striking the cross complaint from the files (237 Cal. App. 2d 724, 730) .

The court also overturned the trial court's order sustaining the added cross defendant's demurrer to the cross complaint (237 Cal. App. 2d 724, 727-729) .

[b] Opposing Party Has No Absolute Right to Have Untimely Pleading Stricken

Bowers v. Dickerson (1861) 18 Cal. 420 , was a suit on a promissory note. After the complaint was filed and the summons was served, defendant interposed a demurrer, which was overruled. Defendant answered on the same day on which the demurrer was overruled. It was subsequently established that summons had actually been served seven days earlier than the date that appeared on the return, so that both the demurrer and the answer were untimely. The return was corrected, and plaintiff moved to strike the demurrer and answer on the ground of untimely filing. Defendant thereupon, by leave of the court and over exception of plaintiff, produced witnesses to show that the error on the return was the fault of the sheriff, that defendant had supposed summons to be served on the erroneous date appearing on the original return, and that therefore defendant's failure to answer within the time required was due to mistake, surprise, or excusable neglect. The trial court overruled the motion to strike and subsequently entered judgment for defendant, the plaintiff failing to prosecute further. Plaintiff appealed.

The Supreme Court upheld the trial court's decision to overrule the motion to strike. The Court stated that defendant's filing the answer after time had expired without leave of the court was a mere irregularity, for which the answer might have been stricken out, but on account of which plaintiff was not entitled to have it stricken out, unless the court in exercise of its discretion deemed such to be proper. The Court stated further that the trial court had absolute power to either retain the answer or to permit another to be filed, or to pursue whatever course with respect to the striking or retaining of the answer that the justice of the case required (18 Cal. 420, 421) .

Tuck v. Thuesen (1970) 10 Cal. App. 3d 193, 88 Cal. Rptr. 759 (disapproved on unrelated grounds in Neel v. Magana, Olney, Levy, Cathcart & Gelfand (1971) 6 Cal. 3d 176, 190, 98 Cal. Rptr. 837, 491 P.2d 421), was a malpractice action against an attorney. Plaintiff filed a complaint and one amended complaint. Defendant filed a demurrer to the amended complaint after the 10-day period for such filing had passed. The demurrer alleged that the statute of limitations had run on the action. Plaintiff moved to strike the demurrer. The trial court denied the motion to strike and sustained the demurrer without leave to amend. Plaintiff thereupon appealed.

The court of appeal upheld the decision of the trial court denying the motion to strike. The court cited Bowers v. Dickerson (1861) 18 Cal. 420, 421 (discussed above), for the rule that there is no absolute right to have a pleading stricken for lack of timeliness when no question of jurisdiction is involved and when the late filing was a mere irregularity. The court further cited Buck v. Morrossis (1952) 114 Cal. App. 2d 461, 464-465, 250 P.2d 270 (discussed in § 160.35[3][a]), for the rule that the granting or denial of a motion to strike a pleading for untimely filing is a matter that lies within the discretion of the trial court (10 Cal. App. 3d 193, 196) . With respect to the present case, the court stated that defendant's late filing was a mere irregularity, and that there was nothing in the record to show that the trial court abused its discretion in denying the motion, particularly in view of the nature of the issue raised by the demurrer (10 Cal. App. 3d 193, 196) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 160 MOTIONS TO STRIKE: PLEADINGS
PART II. FORMS
B. Opposing Motion to Strike

16-160 California Points & Authorities § 160.66

§ 160.66 Opposing Motion to Strike Whole or Part of Pleading [Code Civ. Proc. § 435]--Irrelevant Matter [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 431.10(b), (c), 436(a)]--Motion Too Broad

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 160.60.]

THE MOTION TO STRIKE SHOULD BE DENIED BECAUSE THE MOTION IS TOO BROAD IN THAT IT ATTACKS RELEVANT MATTER CONTAINED IN THE PLEADING.

Motion Attacking Relevant Matter in Pleading Should Be Denied in Its Entirety. A motion to strike cannot be made to serve the purposes of a special demurrer and should be stricken out in its entirety if it is so broad as to include relevant matters within the scope of its attack (Triodyne Inc. v. Superior Court (1966) 240 Cal. App. 2d 536, 542, 49 Cal. Rptr. 717); Allerton v. King (1929) 96 Cal. App. 230, 234, 274 P. 90).
Dated: _____.

Respectfully submitted,
_____ [firm name, if any]
By: _____ [signature]
_____ [typed name]
Attorney for _____ [party's status and name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in opposition to a motion to strike all or part of a pleading on the ground of irrelevance when the motion is so broadly framed as to challenge matter in the pleading that is relevant as well as matter that may be irrelevant. It sets out the point that a motion to strike that includes relevant matter in a pleading within the scope of its attack should be denied in its entirety, regardless of whether some of the matter challenged in a pleading might be stricken as irrelevant. In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a motion to strike supported by the points and authorities set out in § 160.41.

When appropriate, counsel may use this form to support an argument offered as an alternative to a basic argument that none of the matter being attacked by the motion to strike is irrelevant.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Validity of Pre-1982 Case Law

The cases cited in this form were decided before the Legislature reorganized the law governing motions to strike in 1982. However, since none of the rules set out in these cases are inconsistent with any of the provisions of the 1982 legislative scheme, it appears that the cases are still good law [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 431.10, 435, 436, 437]. For discussion of the continuing validity of pre-1982 case law, see § 160.03.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Motion Attacking Relevant Matter in Pleading Should Be Denied in Its Entirety

Triodyne, Inc. v. Superior Court (1966) 240 Cal. App. 2d 536, 49 Cal. Rptr. 717 , involved an action on a contract. Plaintiffs sued defendant for breach of contract, and defendant filed a cross complaint. In the fourth count of the cross complaint, defendant alleged that it had been induced to execute the contract by false representations made by plaintiffs. Plaintiffs demurred to the fourth count, arguing that under the law applicable to the case defendant was limited to out-of-pocket expenses as the measure of damages, and that the measure of damages alleged in the fourth count was improper. The trial court sustained the demurrer with leave to amend, and defendants filed an amended fourth count. Plaintiffs moved to strike this amended fourth count on the grounds of sham and irrelevance. The trial court granted the motion to strike, stating in its minute order that the amended fourth count was improperly using the loss of profit rule as the theory on which to base an evaluation to substantiate an out-of-pocket claim. Defendant filed a petition for writ of mandate.

The court of appeal reversed the determination of the trial court. The court acknowledged that it appeared from the record that defendant was mistaken or uncertain as to the proper measure of damages (240 Cal. App. 2d 536, 541) . However, the court went on to state that it is the general rule that when the facts stated in the complaint show that the plaintiff is entitled to some sort of damages, it is not a fatal error that the pleader has mistaken the rule by which such damages should be determined (240 Cal. App. 2d 536, 541-542). In light of this rule, the court stated that the fourth count was sufficient, at least in the absence of a special demurrer. The court stated the rule that a motion to strike cannot be made to serve the purposes of a general demurrer, and that when a motion to strike is so broad as to include relevant matters, the motion should be denied in its entirety (240 Cal. App. 2d 536, 542) .

Applying this rule to the motion to strike before it, the court held that insofar as it was made on the purported ground of irrelevance, the motion was not directed to any particular allegations and no showing of irrelevance was made. Thus, the court concluded that the motion must be considered as a motion to strike solely on the ground of sham. The court further concluded that the motion, considered as a motion to strike on the ground of sham, should not have been granted (240 Cal. App. 2d 536, 542-543) .

Allerton v. King (1929) 96 Cal. App 230, 274 P. 90 , involved an action on a bond of indemnity. In that case, defendant had procured a writ of attachment against a certain steam shovel in a justice court action. Plaintiff presented a rival claim based on a promissory note for $6,500, with a chattel mortgage on the same property. On the demand of the constable, defendant gave a bond of indemnity as required by law with himself and two others as sureties. The owners of the steam shovel defaulted in the justice court action, and the steam shovel was sold under execution of the resulting judgment for $550. Subsequently, plaintiff brought an action against the former owners of the steam shovel to foreclose her chattel mortgage, in which judgment was rendered for plaintiff, decreeing that the former owners and all persons claiming under them, including defendant who had intervened in the action, were barred from all interest in the property. When execution on this judgment was returned unsatisfied, plaintiff began the present action against the sureties on the bond of indemnity, including defendant. For undisclosed reasons, the sureties on the bond other than defendant did not further appear in the record. Defendant answered, and plaintiff moved to strike considerable portions of the answer. Plaintiff then demurred generally to the remainder of the answer, and the general demurrer was sustained. When defendant failed to amend his answer, default was entered, and judgment was rendered against defendant for $10,058.44 and costs. Defendant appealed from this judgment.

The court of appeal overturned the trial court's motion striking portions of defendant's answer. Preliminarily, the court stated that the measure of damages on the bond that was the basis of the action was the value of the steam shovel, and that when, as in the present case, the value of the property was less than the amount of the bond, this fact is properly raised as a defense (96 Cal. App 230, 232, 233) . The court noted further that defendant had clearly tried to make out this defense in his answer (96 Cal. App 230, 233) . However, the court noted that the answer was filled with recitals, legal conclusion, and other irrelevant matters and endeavored to relitigate the validity of the chattel mortgage. The court stated that most of this matter was properly stricken out (96 Cal. App 230, 233) . However, the court also noted that although defendant had failed to make a direct, positive allegation unconnected with irrelevant matter as to the value of the steam shovel when taken, his contention that the shovel was worth no more than $600 appears throughout the answer. The court held that it was error to strike out those contentions (96 Cal. App 230, 233). The court held further that since the motion was so broad as to include relevant matters it should have been denied in its entirety. The court added that a court should never strike out matter that will leave the complaint defective and thus lead to the dismissal of the action (96 Cal. App 230, 234) . Citing one of the averments in the answer in which defendant had stated the value of the steam shovel, the court stated that read in connection with the irrelevant matter that was averred along with the claim, the averment was at most uncertain, and therefore subject to a special demurrer. However, the court held that a motion to strike cannot be made to serve the purposes of a special demurrer. Finally, the court held that with the allegations as to the value of the shovel in the answer, the general demurrer should not have been sustained, since it was not the facts alleged in the answer, but only their statement, which were arguably insufficient (96 Cal. App 230, 234-235) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 160 MOTIONS TO STRIKE: PLEADINGS
PART II. FORMS
B. Opposing Motion to Strike

16-160 California Points & Authorities § 160.67

§ 160.67 Opposing Motion to Strike Whole or Part of Pleading [Code Civ. Proc. § 435]--Improper Amended Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 436]--Reasons Exist Why Earlier Pleading Should Not Bar Later Inconsistent Action

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 160.60.]

THE MOTION TO STRIKE SHOULD BE DENIED BECAUSE A CAUSE OF ACTION STATED IN AN AMENDED PLEADING SHOULD NOT BE BARRED BY SWORN INCONSISTENT ALLEGATIONS IN A PRIOR PLEADING WHEN CIRCUMSTANCES SHOW THAT THE LATER PLEADING IS NOT SHAM AND THAT A CAUSE OF ACTION MAY BE STATED TRUTHFULLY.

A. Rule Against Dropping Sworn Allegations Applies Only to Sham Amendments. The rules that allegations of fact made under oath may not be dropped without adequate explanation merely to avoid their harmful effect to the pleader and that verified allegations in a prior pleading may be considered at a hearing of a challenge to a later pleading should be applied only when the challenged amended pleading is a sham and when it is apparent that no cause of action can be stated truthfully (see McGee v. McNally (1981) 119 Cal. App. 3d 891, 896, 897, 174 Cal. Rptr. 253).

[Optional] B. Allegations Incidental to Cause of Action May Be Withdrawn. When allegations in the original pleading are lightly traced, without reference to particulars or allegations of specific damages, while obvious emphasis is placed on other allegations, reasons for excluding the allegations are conceivable and the party should be permitted to withdraw them with a proper explanation (McGee v. McNally (1981) 119 Cal. App. 3d 891, 896, 897, 174 Cal. Rptr. 253).

[Optional] C. Necessary Allegation in an Original Complaint Should Not Bar Inconsistent Cause of Action Against Different Defendant. When the original complaint contained allegations that are required to state a cause of action against a party who has since been dropped from the suit, but that are inconsistent with a cause of action against the present party defendant, such allegations should not bar the cause of action against the present defendant (Callahan v. City and County of San Francisco (1967) 249 Cal. App. 2d 696, 699-700, 57 Cal. Rptr. 639).

Dated: _____.

Respectfully submitted,
_____ [firm name, if any]
By: _____ [signature]
_____ [typed name]
Attorney for _____ [party's status and name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in opposition to a motion to strike an amended pleading on the ground that it attempts without explanation to drop, or makes allegations inconsistent with, a sworn allegation in an earlier pleading. The foregoing sets out the point that the rules that a sworn allegation may not be dropped without explanation in order to avoid its harmful effects, and that such an earlier sworn allegation can be considered in ruling on a challenge to a later pleading, must be applied in light of their purpose of avoiding sham amended pleadings when it is clear that no cause of action can be truthfully stated. This form also sets out the points that a sworn allegation that is sketchily drawn and appears incidental to the main thrust of the damages alleged may be withdrawn on proper explanation, and that an earlier allegation that was necessary under the law to state a cause of action against a defendant who was subsequently dropped from the case should not bar an inconsistent cause of action stated in a later pleading. In an appropriate case, this memorandum may be submitted in opposition to a motion to strike matter from an amended pleading supported by the points and authorities set out in § 160.43.

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Validity of Pre-1982 Case Law

The cases cited in this form were decided before the Legislature reorganized the law governing motions to strike in 1982. However, since none of the rules set out in these cases are inconsistent with any of the provisions of the 1982 legislative scheme, it appears that the cases are still good law [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 431.10, 435, 436, 437]. For a further treatment of the continuing validity of pre-1982 case law, see the discussion under § 160.03.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Rule Against Dropping Sworn Allegations Applies Only to Sham Amendments

McGee v. McNally (1981) 119 Cal. App. 3d 891, 174 Cal. Rptr. 253 , involved an action for intentional infliction of emotional distress in which plaintiff alleged in effect that while employed by defendant hospital he was the victim of a campaign of harassment designed by his supervisors, who were also named as defendants, to deprive him of his job and replace him with a fellow worker. Defendants demurred, arguing that the exclusive remedy for these complaints lies with workers' compensation law. The trial court sustained the demurrer without leave to amend and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal upheld the demurrer but held that plaintiff should be granted leave to amend and remanded the case for further proceedings. Preliminarily, the court held that an action against an employer for intentional infliction of emotional distress is not barred by Lab. Code §§ 3600 and 3601 (exclusivity of workers' compensation remedy) (119 Cal. App. 3d 891, 896) . The court agreed, however, with the defendant's argument that the complaint as written did not state a cause of action, since it alleged physical as well as emotional injuries (119 Cal. App. 3d 891, 896) . Nevertheless, the court held that plaintiff should be given permission to amend the complaint so as to exclude the allegations of physical injury (119 Cal. App. 3d 891, 896) . The court acknowledged the rule that verified allegations may not be discarded without an adequate explanation and that the court may look to verified allegations in an earlier pleading in hearing the demurrer to a later pleading (119 Cal. App. 3d 891, 896). However, the court stated that the purpose of the rule is to prevent amended pleading that is only a sham when it is clear that no cause of action exists. In the present case, the court held that circumstances showed that this was not the case (119 Cal. App. 3d 891, 896, 897) .

[b] Allegations Incidental to Cause of Action May Be Withdrawn

The facts and procedural background of McGee v. McNally (1981) 119 Cal. App. 3d 891, 174 Cal. Rptr. 253 , are set out under § 160.67[3][a]. In that case, the court noted that the allegations of physical damage were only lightly traced in the original pleading, without reference to particulars and without allegation of physical disability cognizable by the Workers' Compensation Act, while the obvious and repeated emphasis was placed on the aspects of humiliation and anguish and other forms of purely emotional trauma. Under these circumstances, the court stated, it was able to conceive of a number of reasons why the language regarding physical injury was included that would support its exclusion now without impugning the credibility of the plaintiff's cause of action (119 Cal. App. 3d 891, 897) .

[c] Necessary Allegation in an Original Complaint Should Not Bar Inconsistent Cause of Action Against Different Defendant

Callahan v. City and County of San Francisco (1967) 249 Cal. App. 2d 696, 699-700, 57 Cal. Rptr. 639 , involved a personal injury action against the defendant city for negligent maintenance of a traffic intersection that was alleged to have resulted in a traffic accident causing injury to the plaintiff, who was a passenger in a car. The original complaint did not name the city as a defendant and stated a cause of action against the driver of the car, charging the driver and others with willful misconduct and with racing vehicles on the road. The city was first named as defendant in the first amended complaint which, like all subsequent amended complaints, omitted any allegations of willful misconduct or racing cars on the road. At some point, the driver of the car was dropped from the action as defendant. The city demurred to the third amended complaint on the ground that it stated no cause of action, and called on the court to view plaintiff's amended pleadings in light of the original verified complaint. The demurrer was sustained without leave to amend. Plaintiff appealed from the resulting judgment.

The court of appeal overturned the trial court's order sustaining the demurrer. The court recognized that plaintiff's allegation of willful misconduct against the driver might rule out her action against the city if it were taken as proven (249 Cal. App. 2d 696, 700) . The court also acknowledged the rule that allegations of fact, once made under oath, may not ordinarily be dropped without adequate explanation merely for the purpose of avoiding their harmful effect to the pleader, and that the verified allegations of an earlier pleading may be considered in ruling on a demurrer to a later pleading (249 Cal. App. 2d 696, 699). However, the court stated that the rule must be taken together with its purpose, which is to prevent amended pleading that is only a sham, when it is apparent that no cause of action can be stated truthfully (249 Cal. App. 2d 696, 699) .

In the present case, the court noted that the allegation of willful misconduct was not directed against the city, which was not even a party to the action when the original complaint was filed, but against a third party, and that under the law then applicable such an allegation was necessary in order to establish a cause of action against the driver of the car (249 Cal. App. 2d 696, 699). The court further stated that under then applicable law an allegation of willful misconduct on the part of the driver by the passenger in a car was but an allegation of a conclusion concerning the mental state of the driver and that in the present case it would never be known whether plaintiff would be able to prove her allegation (249 Cal. App. 2d 696, 699, 700) . The court held that to give the city the benefit at the pleading stage of assuming that such generic allegations against another party may be taken as proven would put plaintiff to a choice that the law did not intend to impose on her. Thus, the court noted, if plaintiff alleged willful misconduct on the part of the driver in order to state a cause of action against him she would run the risk of ruling out her action against the city, while if she failed to make this allegation she would have no cause of action against the driver (249 Cal. App. 2d 696, 700) .

With respect to plaintiff's original allegation that the driver had been racing with his car, the court held that since under the present structure of the case the allegation of willful misconduct was no longer relevant, such racing was best characterized as merely negligent (249 Cal. App. 2d 696, 700, 701) . The court held that concurrent negligence on the part of the driver would not necessarily absolve the city from liability (249 Cal. App. 2d 696, 701) . Thus, the court concluded that the allegations of plaintiff's earlier pleadings were not destructive of her cause of action against the city.

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 160 MOTIONS TO STRIKE: PLEADINGS
PART II. FORMS
B. Opposing Motion to Strike

16-160 California Points & Authorities § 160.68

§ 160.68 Opposing Motion to Strike Whole or Part of Pleading [Code Civ. Proc. § 435]--Improper Amended Pleading [Code Civ. Proc. § 436]--Amended Complaint Stating Cause of Action Not Sham

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 160.60.]

THE AMENDED COMPLAINT SHOULD NOT BE STRICKEN AS SHAM, EVEN THOUGH IT REPEATS THE SUBSTANCE OF THE PREVIOUS COMPLAINT, BECAUSE IT NEVERTHELESS STATES A CAUSE OF ACTION.

Amended Pleading Stating Cause of Action Not Sham. An amended pleading that states a cause of action is not sham, even if it is in substance a repetition of the original pleading that had been held insufficient (Amacorp Ind. Leasing Co. v. Robert C. Young Associates, Inc. (1965) 237 Cal. App. 2d 724, 727, 729, 47 Cal. Rptr. 294).
Dated: _____.

Respectfully submitted,
_____ [firm name, if any]
By: _____ [signature]
_____ [typed name]
Attorney for _____ [party's status and name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in opposition to a motion to strike an amended pleading on the ground that it fails to amend a pleading previously held to be insufficient when it can be shown that the amended pleading nevertheless states a cause of action. The foregoing sets out the point that an amended pleading that states a cause of action is not sham regardless of whether it amends a prior pleading that was held to be insufficient. The procedure of filing an amended pleading that substantially restates a pleading previously held to be insufficient and arguing that it nevertheless states a cause of action may be used as a means of seeking reconsideration of a trial court order holding the original pleading insufficient.

In an appropriate case, this memorandum may be submitted in opposition to a motion to strike supported by the points and authorities set out in § 160.43.

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Validity of Pre-1982 Case Law

Amacorp Ind. Leasing Co. v. Robert C. Young Associates, Inc. (1965) 237 Cal. App. 2d 724, 727, 729, 47 Cal. Rptr. 294 , on which this form is based was decided before the Legislature reorganized the law governing motions to strike in 1982. However, since none of the rules set out in this case is inconsistent with any of the provisions of the 1982 legislative scheme, it appears that the case is still good law [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 431.10, 435, 436, 437]. For a further treatment of the continuing validity of pre-1982 case law, see the discussion under § 160.03.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Amended Pleading Stating Cause of Action Not Sham

The facts and procedural background of Amacorp Ind. Leasing Co. v. Robert C. Young Associates, Inc. (1965) 237 Cal. App. 2d 724, 47 Cal. Rptr. 294 , are set out in § 160.65[3][a]. In that case, the trial court sustained general and special demurrers to defendant's original cross complaint. Defendant thereupon filed an amended cross complaint that was in substance a repetition of the original cross complaint. The trial court sustained a general demurrer without leave to amend and simultaneously granted a motion to strike the cross complaint on the grounds that it was sham and untimely filed. The court of appeal stated that it was clear from reading the amended cross complaint that defendant was trying to state a cause of action for breach of warranty, and that facts establishing such a cause of action were inferrable from reading the cross complaint as a whole (237 Cal. App. 2d 724, 728) . The court concluded that the allegations of the cross complaint were sufficient as against a general demurrer to afford the defendant an opportunity to more fully explain the circumstances of the transaction alleged (237 Cal. App. 2d 724, 729) .

Regarding the motion to strike, the court stated that an amended pleading that states a cause of action is not sham, and reiterated that it had decided that the amended cross complaint in the present action did state a cause of action (237 Cal. App. 2d 724, 729) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 160 MOTIONS TO STRIKE: PLEADINGS
PART II. FORMS
B. Opposing Motion to Strike

16-160 California Points & Authorities § 160.69

§ 160.69 Opposing Motion to Strike Whole or Part of Pleading [Code Civ. Proc. § 435]--Amendment of Pleading to Bring in New Parties Allowed as Matter of Course Prior to Answer or Demurrer [Code Civ. Proc. § 472]

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 160.60.]

THE MOTION TO STRIKE SHOULD BE DENIED BECAUSE AN AMENDMENT OF A PLEADING TO BRING IN NEW PARTIES IS ALLOWED PURSUANT TO SECTION 472 OF THE CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE AS A MATTER OF COURSE WITHOUT LEAVE OF COURT IF IT IS MADE PRIOR TO THE FILING OF AN ANSWER OR DEMURRER BY ANY DEFENDANT.

Amendment of Pleading to Bring in New Parties Is Allowed as Matter of Course Without Leave of Court If Made Prior to Filing of Answer or Demurrer. A complaint may be amended pursuant to Section 472 of the Code of Civil Procedure to add new parties without leave of court before any defendant has filed an answer or demurrer, and permission to amend under Section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure is not required under such circumstances (Code Civ. Proc. § 472; Gross v. Department of Transportation (1986) 180 Cal. App. 3d 1102, 1104, 226 Cal. Rptr. 49).
Dated: _____.

Respectfully submitted,
_____ [firm name, if any]
By: _____ [signature]
_____ [typed name]
Attorney for Plaintiff _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in opposition to a motion to strike an amended pleading on the ground that an amendment adding new parties requires permission of the court. The form sets out the point that the motion to add a new party may be made as a matter of course without the necessity of the granting of leave by the court if no answer or demurrer has been filed by any defendant.

In an appropriate case, this memorandum may be submitted in opposition to the motion supported by the points and authorities set out in § 160.33.

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss the fact that no answer or demurrer had been filed when the amendment of the pleading was made.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Amendment of Pleading to Bring in New Parties Is Allowed as Matter of Course Without Leave of Court If Made Prior to Filing of Answer or Demurrer

In Gross v. Department of Transportation (1986) 180 Cal. App. 3d 1102, 226 Cal. Rptr. 49 , a minor sued several defendants for the wrongful death of her mother in a highway collision. She later added the Department of Transportation (Department) as a defendant because of the alleged defective design of the highway where the accident occurred. At the time plaintiff amended the complaint, none of the defendants named in the initial complaint had been served or appeared. The Department moved to strike the complaint insofar as it was named as defendant. The motion was granted on the ground that Code Civ. Proc. § 473 requires leave of court prior to amending a complaint to add a party as a defendant. The action against the Department was dismissed, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. The court stated that Code Civ. Proc. § 473 was inapplicable in this situation. The court held that the applicable section is Code Civ. Proc. § 472, which allows amendment of a complaint to add new parties as a matter of course without leave of court before any defendant has filed an answer or demurrer (180 Cal. App. 3d 1102, 1104-1105) . The court stated that the language in Taliaferro v. Davis (1963) 220 Cal. App. 2d 793, 795, 34 Cal. Rptr. 120 (for discussion of Taliaferro, see § 160.33[3][d]), stating that Code Civ. Proc. § 473 is controlling with respect to all amendments adding parties, was merely dictum because in that case the amendment took place after the sustaining of a demurrer (180 Cal. App. 3d 1102, 1106) . The court stated that because Code Civ. Proc. § 472 is a narrower provision than Code Civ. Proc. § 473, it takes precedence over Code Civ. Proc. § 473 in all instances in which a plaintiff seeks to amend his or her complaint once prior to the filing of an answer or demurrer (180 Cal. App. 3d 1102, 1107) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 161 MOTIONS TO STRIKE: ANTI-SLAPP

16-161 California Points & Authorities 161.syn

§ 161.syn Synopsis to Chapter 161: MOTIONS TO STRIKE: ANTI-SLAPP

§ 161.01 Scope of Chapter

§ 161.02 Governing Law

§ 161.03 Rationale for Special Motion to Strike and Subsequent Legislation

§ 161.04 Two-Part Test for Applicability of Statute

§ 161.05 Procedural Requirements for Special Motion to Strike

§ 161.06 Stay of Discovery Proceedings

§ 161.07 Attorney Fee Awards

§ 161.08 Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

§ 161.09 Related Points and Authorities Chapters

§§ 161.10-161.29 [Reserved]

§ 161.30 Supporting Special Motion to Strike Action Against Constitutionally Privileged Conduct (SLAPP Suit) [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(b)]--General Form

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Timing of Motion and Hearing

[c] Attorney's Fees and Costs

[d] Stay of Discovery

[e] Statutory Exceptions to Anti-SLAPP Motion

[f] Circumstances Under Which Statutory Exceptions Are Inapplicable

[g] Motion Not Available in Action Brought by Public Prosecutor

[h] Some Provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16 Are Inapplicable if Action is a "SLAPPback"

[i] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[j] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Defendant is Not Required to Demonstrate or Plead an Intent to Chill First Amendment Rights

[b] Plaintiff's Burden Arises After Defendant's Prima Facie Showing That Code of Civil Procedure Section 425.16 Applies

[c] Plaintiff Cannot Establish Probability of Prevailing on Claims Against Defendant

[d] Constitutional Protection Available for Speech Alleged to Constitute Intentional Interference With Prospective Economic Advantage

[e] Averments on Information and Belief Are Inadequate in Supporting Declaration

[f] Discovery Proceedings Are Stayed

[g] Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16 to Be Construed Broadly

[h] Petitions for Injunctive Relief From Harassment Are Subject to Anti-SLAPP Motion to Strike

[i] The Exemption to the Anti-SLAPP Law for Enforcement Actions Applies Only to Actions Brought by a Governmental Agency Aimed Generally at Public Protection

[j] "Mixed" Cause of Action Is Subject to Anti-SLAPP Statute Unless Protected Conduct Is Merely Incidental to Unprotected Conduct

[k] Protected Conduct Does Not Lose Its Protected Status Merely Because Plaintiff Alleges the Conduct is Unlawful or Unethical

[l] Appeal Upon Denial of Anti-SLAPP Motion Stays All Trial Court Proceedings Upon Affected Causes of Action

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Plaintiff's Burden Arises After Defendants's Prima Facie Showing That Code of Civil Procedure Section 425.16

Applies

[b] Plaintiff Cannot Establish Probability of Prevailing on Claims Against Defendant

[c] Prevailing Defendant Is Entitled to Attorney's Fees and Costs

[d] Activity in Anticipation of Litigation

§ 161.31 Supporting Special Motion to Strike Action Against Constitutionally Privileged Conduct (SLAPP Suit) [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(b)]--Conduct or Speech in Connection With Official Proceedings [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(e)(1) and (2)]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Separate Showing of Public Significance Required if Action Arises From Statements Made Before, or in Connection With Issue Under Consideration by, Official Proceeding

[b] Commercial Conduct and Speech Made in Connection with an Issue Of Public Concern Under Consideration By a Legislative Body are Subject to Protection Under Code Of Civil Procedure Section 425.16.

[c] Not All Speech By A Business Enterprise Constitutes "Commercial Speech"

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] No Separate Showing of Public Significance Required If Action Arises From Statements Made Before, or in Connection With Issue Under Consideration by, Official Proceeding

§ 161.32 Supporting Special Motion to Strike Action Against Constitutionally Privileged Conduct (SLAPP Suit) [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(b)]--Malicious Prosecution Action

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Malicious Prosecution Actions Are Subject to Anti-SLAPP Motion to Strike

§ 161.33 Supporting Special Motion to Strike Action Against Constitutionally Privileged Conduct (SLAPP Suit) [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(b)]--Statement or Writing Made in Public Forum or in Connection With an Issue of Public Interest [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(e)(3) and (4)]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] The Conduct at Issue Concerned a Matter of Widespread Public Interest

[b] The Conduct at Issue Concerned an Issue of Interest to a Definable Portion of the Public and Occurred in the Context of an Ongoing Controversy, Dispute, or Discussion

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] The Conduct at Issue Concerned an Issue of Widespread Public Interest

§ 161.34 Supporting Special Motion to Strike Action Against Constitutionally Privileged Conduct (SLAPP Suit) [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(b)]--Governmental Entities and Their Employees, Like Private Parties, May Bring a Special Motion to Strike

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16 Applies to Governmental Entities, Their Employees, and Private Parties

[b] Public Employee's Comment on Issues of Public Interest Relating to Official Duties Is Protected

[c] Government Is Protected in Performing its Role in CEQA

[4] Additional Authorities

§ 161.35 Supporting Special Motion to Strike Action Against Constitutionally Privileged Conduct (SLAPP Suit)--Action Is Not Brought Solely in the Public Interest [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(b)]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Reply to Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] The Action, if Successful, Would Not Enforce an Important Right Affecting the Public Interest or Confer a Significant Benefit on the General Public or a Large Class of Persons

[b] Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(b) Does Not Apply Where Plaintiff Is Not Seeking Relief Solely in the Public Interest

[c] Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(b) Does Not Apply Because the Action Falls Within the Exception Enumerated in Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(d)(2)

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] The Action, if Successful, Would Not Enforce an Important Right Affecting the Public Interest or Confer a Significant Benefit on the General Public or a Large Class of Persons

§ 161.36 Supporting Special Motion to Strike Action Against Constitutionally Privileged Conduct (SLAPP Suit) [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(c)]--Requirements of Code Civ. Proc. 425.17(c) Not Met

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Defendant Is Not Primarily in the Business of Selling or Leasing Goods and Services

[b] Defendant's Statement or Conduct Was Not a Representation of Fact

[c] The Statement or Conduct About Defendant's or a Competitor's Business Operations, Goods, or Services Was Not Made for the Purpose of Obtaining Approval for, Promoting, or Securing Sales of the Defendant's Goods or Services or Made in the Course of Delivering the Defendant's Goods or Services

[d] The Burden of Proving the Applicability of the Exception Set Forth in Code Civ. Proc. § 426.17(c)(1) Is On the Plaintiff

§§ 161.37-161.59 [Reserved]

§ 161.60 Opposing Special Motion to Strike Action Against Constitutionally Privileged Conduct (SLAPP Suit) [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(b)]--Grounds for Motion Lacking

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Defendant Bears Initial Burden to Make a Prima Facie Showing

[b] Defendant Must Show a Lawful Exercise of Constitutional Rights

[c] Anti-SLAPP Motion Must Be Denied if Plaintiff Demonstrates a Probability of Prevailing on the Claim

[d] Analysis of Plaintiff's Probability of Prevailing on Claim Must Include All Available Defenses

[e] Merely Having Some Connection With Official Proceedings Does Not Mean Anti-SLAPP Protections Apply

[f] Mere Acts of Governance Are Not Exercises of Free Speech or Petition

[g] Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17 Exceptions Apply Retroactively

[h] Plaintiff Opposing a Late Anti-SLAPP Motion Need Not Demonstrate Prejudice

[i] Defendants Who Represent Themselves in Litigation Are Not Entitled to Attorney Fees When Prevailing on an Anti-SLAPP Motion

[j] The Anti-SLAPP Statute Does Not Apply to Non-Judicial Proceedings

[k] A Plaintiff Prevailing on an Anti-SLAPP Motion Shall Be Awarded Costs and Attorney's Fees if the Court Finds the Motion Is Frivolous or Is Solely Intended to Cause Unnecessary Delay

[l] An Amorphous Public Interest Is Insufficient to Invoke the Anti-SLAPP Statute

[m] Code of Civil Procedure § 425.16 Only Applies When First Amendment Free Speech or Petition Rights Are At Stake

[4] Additional Authorities

§ 161.61 Opposing Special Motion to Strike Action Against Constitutionally Privileged Conduct (SLAPP Suit) [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(b)]--Action Brought Solely in the Public Interest [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(b)]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Circumstances Under Which Statutory Exceptions Are Inapplicable

[c] Opposing Memoranda

§ 161.62 Opposing Special Motion to Strike Action Against Constitutionally Privileged Conduct (SLAPP Suit) [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(b)]--Action Brought Against a Person Primarily Engaged in the Business of Selling Goods or Services [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(c)]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Exception Does Not Apply in Public Utilities Commission Proceedings

[c] Circumstances Under Which Statutory Exceptions Are Inapplicable

[d] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17 is Constitutional and Not An Invalid Attempt to Regulation Speech Concerning Important Public Issues

[b] Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17 Applies Retroactively

[c] The Action Arises Out of Commercial Speech and Conduct and Is Therefore Exempt From Anti-SLAPP Scrutiny

§ 161.63 Opposing Special Motion to Strike Against Constitutionally Privileged Conduct (SLAPP Suit) [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(b)]--Action Is a SLAPPback [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.18]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Special Provisions Applicable to SLAPPbacks

[c] Section Does Not Apply to SLAPPback Filed by Public Entity

[d] Exception For Prior Cause of Action Which Was Illegal

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Plaintiff's Complaint Qualifies as a SLAPPback

[b] Defendant May Not Recover Attorney's Fees

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 161 MOTIONS TO STRIKE: ANTI-SLAPP
PART I. INTRODUCTION

16-161 California Points & Authorities § 161.01

§ 161.01 Scope of Chapter

This chapter contains memoranda that may be submitted in civil actions to support or oppose special motions to strike under the Anti-SLAPP statutes found in Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16 et seq., in whole or in part.

Forms supporting Anti-SLAPP motions to strike include:

- A general form to support a special motion to strike a cause of action against constitutionally privileged conduct (i.e., a SLAPP suit) [see § 161.30].

- A form to support a special motion to strike a cause of action arising out of or in connection with an official proceeding [see § 161.31].

- A form to support a special motion to strike a malicious prosecution action [see § 161.32].

- A form to support a special motion to strike a cause of action arising out of a statement or writing made in a public forum or in connection with a public issue [see § 161.33].

- A form to support a special motion to strike brought by a governmental entity or its employee [see § 161.34].

- Forms to support a special motion to strike where the plaintiff or cross-complainant alleges the action falls within the exceptions to the Anti-SLAPP statute found in Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17 [see §§ 161.35 -161.36].

Points and authorities opposing a special motion to strike a SLAPP suit include:

- A general form opposing a special motion to strike a cause of action against constitutionally privileged conduct because the grounds for the motion are lacking one or more essential elements [see § 161.60].

- A form opposing a special motion to strike a cause of action arising out of or in connection with an official proceeding because the action is brought solely in the public interest under the exception of Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(b) [see § 161.61].

- A form opposing a special motion to strike because the action is brought against a person primarily engaged in the business of selling goods or services as defined by Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(c) [see § 161.62].

- A form opposing a special motion to strike a cause because the action is a SLAPPback as defined by Code Civ. Proc. § 425.18 [see § 161.63].

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 161 MOTIONS TO STRIKE: ANTI-SLAPP
PART I. INTRODUCTION

16-161 California Points & Authorities § 161.02

§ 161.02 Governing Law

A special motion to strike causes of action brought to inhibit the right of people to exercise their constitutional rights of petition and free speech on matters of public interest (SLAPP suits) is authorized and governed by Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(b).

The legislature has also created exceptions to the Anti-SLAPP statute for actions brought solely in the public interest and certain causes of action brought against a person primarily engaged in the business of selling or leasing goods or services. These exceptions are found in Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17.

A "SLAPPback," which is a cause of action for malicious prosecution arising out of a suit which was dismissed pursuant to the Anti-SLAPP statute, is defined and governed by Code Civ. Proc. § 425.18.

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 161 MOTIONS TO STRIKE: ANTI-SLAPP
PART I. INTRODUCTION

16-161 California Points & Authorities § 161.03

§ 161.03 Rationale for Special Motion to Strike and Subsequent Legislation

The legislature passed the Anti-SLAPP legislation in 1992 in response to what it noted was a "distributing increase in lawsuits brought primarily to chill the valid exercise of the constitutional rights of freedom of speech and petition for the redress of grievances" [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(a)]. The statute's enactment created a new type of motion to strike, referred to as a "special motion to strike." In 2003, the legislature enacted Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17, creating exceptions to the Anti-SLAPP statute in response to an abuse of the Anti-SLAPP law. Finally, in 2005, the legislature passed the "SLAPPback" legislation now found in Code Civ. Proc. § 425.18. This section addresses motions to strike in malicious prosecution actions arising out of actions dismissed pursuant to the Anti-SLAPP statute.

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 161 MOTIONS TO STRIKE: ANTI-SLAPP
PART I. INTRODUCTION

16-161 California Points & Authorities § 161.04

§ 161.04 Two-Part Test for Applicability of Statute

The Anti-SLAPP statute contains two "prongs": the first prong tests whether the action is a SLAPP suit and the second determines whether the action may survive despite its SLAPP character because plaintiff or cross-complainant has established a probability of prevailing on the merits of the action. As used in Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16, an act in furtherance of a person's right of petition or free speech under the United States or California Constitution in connection with a public issue includes:

(1) any written or oral statement or writing made before a legislative, executive, or judicial proceeding, or any other official proceeding authorized by law;

(2) any written or oral statement or writing made in connection with an issue under consideration or review by a legislative, executive, or judicial body, or any other official proceeding authorized by law;

(3) any written or oral statement or writing made in a place open to the public or a public forum in connection with an issue of public interest;

(4) or any other conduct in furtherance of the exercise of the constitutional right of petition or the constitutional right of free speech in connection with a public issue or an issue of public interest.

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 161 MOTIONS TO STRIKE: ANTI-SLAPP
PART I. INTRODUCTION

16-161 California Points & Authorities § 161.05

§ 161.05 Procedural Requirements for Special Motion to Strike

A special motion to strike may be filed within 60 days of the service of the complaint or, in the court's discretion, at any later time on terms the court deems proper. The motion must be scheduled by the clerk of the court for a hearing not more than 30 days after service unless the docket conditions of the court require a later hearing [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(f)].

Any party who files a special motion to strike, and any party that files opposition to a special motion to strike must, promptly on so filing, transmit to the Judicial Council, by e-mail or fax, a copy of the endorsed-filed caption page of the motion or opposition, a copy of any related notice of appeal or petition for a writ and a conformed copy of any order issued pursuant to the statute [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(j)(1)].

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 161 MOTIONS TO STRIKE: ANTI-SLAPP
PART I. INTRODUCTION

16-161 California Points & Authorities § 161.06

§ 161.06 Stay of Discovery Proceedings

The filing of a special motion to strike automatically stays all discovery proceedings, including pending discovery motions [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(g)]. Discovery is stayed until notice of entry of the order ruling on the Anti-SLAPP motion, except on noticed motion and for good cause shown. The discovery stay does not apply to SLAPPback actions [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.18(c)].

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 161 MOTIONS TO STRIKE: ANTI-SLAPP
PART I. INTRODUCTION

16-161 California Points & Authorities § 161.07

§ 161.07 Attorney Fee Awards

A prevailing defendant on a special motion to strike is entitled to recover his or her attorney's fees and costs [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(c)]. There are limited exceptions for certain Government Code actions [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(c)(2)]. A prevailing plaintiff may recover fees if the court finds that a special motion to strike is frivolous or is solely intended to cause unnecessary delay [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(c)(1)].

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 161 MOTIONS TO STRIKE: ANTI-SLAPP
PART I. INTRODUCTION

16-161 California Points & Authorities § 161.08

§ 161.08 Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For analyses and forms relating to Anti-SLAPP special motions to strike, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 376, Motions to Strike: Anti -SLAPP.

For analyses and forms relating to motions to strike pleadings, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 375, Motions to Strike: Pleadings .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 161 MOTIONS TO STRIKE: ANTI-SLAPP
PART I. INTRODUCTION

16-161 California Points & Authorities § 161.09

§ 161.09 Related Points and Authorities Chapters

For memoranda supporting and opposing motions to strike pleadings, see Ch. 375, Motions to Strike: Pleadings .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 161 MOTIONS TO STRIKE: ANTI-SLAPP
PART I. INTRODUCTION

16-161 California Points & Authorities §§ 161.10-161.29

[Reserved]

§§ 161.10[Reserved]

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 161 MOTIONS TO STRIKE: ANTI-SLAPP
PART II. FORMS
A. Supporting Special Motion to Strike

16-161 California Points & Authorities § 161.30

§ 161.30 Supporting Special Motion to Strike Action Against Constitutionally Privileged Conduct (SLAPP Suit) [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(b)]--General Form

[1] FORM

SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA
COUNTY OF _____

	)
	)	NO. _____
_____ [name],	)	MEMORANDUM IN SUPPORT OF SPECIAL MO-
Plaintiff,	)	TION TO STRIKE PURSUANT TO CODE CIV.
vs.	)	PROC. § 425.16
_____ [name],	)	Date: _____
Defendant.	)	Time: _____
	)	Location: _____
	)	[Judge: _____]
	)	Date Action Filed: _____
		[Trial Date: _____]

THE COURT SHOULD STRIKE _____ [specify the matter identified in the notice of motion, e.g., THE COMPLAINT FOR INTERFERENCE WITH CONTRACTUAL AND PROSPECTIVE ECONOMIC RELATIONS] BECAUSE DEFENDANT'S CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHT[S] OF _____ [specify, e.g., PETITION AND FREE SPEECH] WILL BE CHILLED IF IT IS ALLOWED TO STAND AND PLAINTIFF IS ALLOWED TO CONTINUE PROSECUTING IT.

A. Action Against Constitutionally Privileged Conduct Is Subject to Special Motion to Strike. A cause of action against a person arising from any act of that person in furtherance of the person's constitutional right of petition or free speech in connection with a public issue is subject to a special motion to strike unless plaintiff establishes that there is a probability that plaintiff will prevail on the claim (Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(b)). Code of Civil Procedure § 425.16 is to be construed broadly (Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(a)).

B. Act in Furtherance of a Person's Constitutional Right of Petition or Free Speech in Connection with a Public Issue Defined. As used in Section 425.16 of the Code of Civil Procedure, "act in furtherance of a person's right of petition or free speech under the United States or California Constitution in connection with a public issue" includes: (1) any written or oral statement or writing made before a legislative, executive, or judicial proceeding, or any other official proceeding authorized by law; (2) any written or oral statement or writing made in connection with an issue under consideration or review by a legislative, executive, or judicial body, or any other official proceeding authorized by law; (3) any written or oral statement or writing made in a place open to the public or a public forum in connection with an issue of public interest; (4) or any other conduct in furtherance of the exercise of the constitutional right of petition or the constitutional right of free speech in connection with a public issue or an issue of public interest (Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(e)).

C. Defendant is Not Required to Demonstrate or Plead an Intent to Chill First Amendment Rights. Code of Civil Procedure § 425.16 contains no requirement that a defendant show that the plaintiff brought the lawsuit with an intent to chill defendant's rights, nor does the statue require an intent-to-chill pleading or proof requirement (Equilon Enterprises, LLC v. Consumer Cause, Inc. (2002) 29 Cal. 4th 53, 60, 124 Cal. Rptr. 2d 507 ; City of Cotati v. Cashman (2002) 29 Cal. 4th 69, 75, 124 Cal. Rptr. 2d 519 ; Navellier v. Sletten (2002) 29 Cal. 4th 82, 88, 124 Cal. Rptr. 2d 530).

[Optional] D. Plaintiff's Burden Arises After Defendant's Prima Facie Showing That Code of Civil Procedure Section 425.16 Applies. To prevail on a special motion to strike under Code of Civil Procedure Section 425.16, defendant must make a threshold showing that plaintiff's suit arises from defendant's acts in furtherance of his or her rights of petition and free speech under the United States or California Constitution in connection with a public issue. Once the defendant has made such a showing, the burden shifts to the plaintiff to establish a probability that he/she/it will prevail on the claim (Equilon Enterprises, LLC v. Consumer Cause, Inc. (2002) 29 Cal. 4th 53, 60, 124 Cal. Rptr. 2d 507 ; City of Cotati v. Cashman (2002) 29 Cal. 4th 69, 75 ; Navellier v. Sletten (2002) 29 Cal. 4th 82, 88, 124 Cal. Rptr. 2d 530 ; Seltzer v. Barnes (2010) 182 Cal. App. 4th 953 ; Stewart v. Rolling Stone LLC (2010) 181 Cal. App. 4th 664, 677-692, 105 Cal. Rptr. 3d 98 ; Fox Searchlight Pictures v. Paladino (2001) 89 Cal. App. 4th 294, 307, 106 Cal. Rptr. 2d 906 ; Dixon v. Superior Court (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 733, 742, 36 Cal. Rptr. 2d 687 ; Wilcox v. Superior Court (1994) 27 Cal. App. 4th 809, 820, 33 Cal. Rptr. 2d 446). Defendant has clearly met his/her/its burden in that _____ [tie facts in with one or more of the four Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(e) definitions of acts in furtherance of a person's rights of petition and free speech under the United States or California Constitution in connection with a public issue].

[Optional] E. Plaintiff Cannot Establish Probability of Prevailing on Claims Against Defendant. To establish a probability of success on the merits, the plaintiff must make a prima facie showing of facts that would, if proved at trial, support a judgment in plaintiff's favor (Taus v. Loftus (2007) 40 Cal. 4th 683, 742, 54 Cal. Rptr. 3d 775, 151 P.3d 1185 ; Mendoza v. ADP Screening & Selection Services, Inc. (2010) 182 Cal. App. 4th 1644, 1655-1659, 107 Cal. Rptr. 3d 294 ; Dixon v. Superior Court (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 733, 744, 36 Cal. Rptr. 2d 687 ; Wilcox v. Superior Court (1994) 27 Cal. App. 4th 809, 824, 33 Cal. Rptr. 2d 446).

[Optional] F. Constitutional Protection Available for Speech Alleged to Constitute Intentional Interference with Prospective Economic Advantage. The First Amendment to the United States Constitution protects speech consisting either of true facts or opinions that are alleged to constitute intentional interference with prospective economic advantage (Hofmann Co. v. E.I. Du Pont de Nemours and Co. (1988) 202 Cal. App. 3d 390, 402-403, 248 Cal. Rptr. 384 ; accord, Paradise Hills Associates v. Procel (1991) 235 Cal. App. 3d 1528, 1542-1545, 1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 514).

[Optional] G. Averments on Information and Belief Are Inadequate in Supporting Declaration. An averment on information and belief is inadmissible at trial, and thus cannot show a probability of prevailing on a claim (Evans v.

Unkow (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 1490, 1498, 45 Cal. Rptr. 2d 624).

[Optional] H. Timely Motion to Strike Is Proper. The special motion to strike may be filed within 60 days of the service of the complaint or, in the court's discretion, at any later time upon terms it deems proper (Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(f)).

[Optional] I. Prevailing Defendant Is Entitled to Attorney's Fees and Costs. A defendant prevailing on a special motion to strike is entitled to recover his or her attorney's fees and costs (Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(c)).

[Optional] J. Discovery Proceedings Are Stayed. All discovery proceedings are stayed upon the filing of a notice of special motion to strike, including discovery motions pending at the time the special motion to strike was filed (Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(g); Britts v. Superior Court (2006) 145 Cal. App. 4th 1112, 1127, 52 Cal. Rptr. 3d 185).

[Optional] K. Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16 to Be Construed Broadly. In Section 425.16(a) of the Code of Civil Procedure the Legislature has declared that it is in the public interest to encourage continued participation in matters of public significance, and that this participation should not be chilled through abuse of the judicial process. To this end, the section shall be construed broadly (Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(a); last sentence added by Stats. 1997, ch. 271 § 1). The 1997 amendment to Section 425.16 mandates a broad construction of that section (Kibler v. Northern Inyo County Local Hospital Dist. (2006) 39 Cal. 4th 192, 199, 46 Cal. Rptr. 3d 41, 138 P.3d 193 ; Briggs v. Eden Council for Hope and Opportunity (1999) 19 Cal. 4th 1106, 1119-1121, 81 Cal. Rptr. 2d 471, 969 P.2d 564).

[Optional] L. Petitions for Injunctive Relief From Harassment Are Subject to Anti-SLAPP Motion to Strike. The Legislature specifically exempted some forms of legal proceedings from the purview of Code of Civil Procedure Section 425.16, but Code Civ. Proc. § 527.6 petitions for injunctive relief from harassment were not among them, and the Legislature did not intend to except Code Civ. Proc. § 527.6 petitions from the Anti-SLAPP statute (Thomas v. Quintero (2005) 126 Cal. App. 4th 635, 24 Cal. Rptr. 3d 619 ; City of Los Angeles v. Animal Defense League (2006) 135 Cal. App. 4th 606, 37 Cal. Rptr. 3d 632).

[Optional] M. The Exemption to the Anti-SLAPP Law for Enforcement Actions Applies Only to Actions Brought by a Governmental Agency Aimed Generally at Public Protection. The exception to the Anti-SLAPP statute found in Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(d) does not apply to a petition for a workplace violence restraining order designed to protect only the city's employees and not the public at large (City of Los Angeles v. Animal Defense League (2006) 135 Cal. App. 4th 606, 618, 37 Cal. Rptr. 3d 632).

[Optional] N. "Mixed" Cause of Action Is Subject to Anti-SLAPP Statute Unless Protected Conduct Is Merely Incidental to Unprotected Conduct. Where a cause of action alleges both protected and unprotected activity, the cause of action is subject to Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16 unless the protected conduct is merely incidental to the unprotected conduct (Salma v. Capon (2008) 161 Cal. App. 4th 1275, 1287, 74 Cal. Rptr. 3d 873 ; Gallanis-Politis v. Medina (2007) 152 Cal. App. 4th 600, 614 ; Peregrine Funding, Inc. v. Sheppard Mullin Richter & Hampton LLP (2005) 133 Cal. App. 4th 658, 672, 35 Cal. Rptr. 3d 31 ; Fox Searchlight Pictures, Inc. v. Paladino (2001) 89 Cal. App. 4th 294, 308, 106 Cal. Rptr. 2d 906).

[Optional] O. Protected Conduct Does Not Lose Its Protected Status Merely Because Plaintiff Alleges the Conduct is Unlawful or Unethical. The exception to the Anti-SLAPP statute for illegal conduct only applies if a defendant concedes, or the evidence conclusively establishes, that the assertedly protected activity was illegal as a matter of law (Kemps v. Beshwate (2009) 180 Cal. App. 4th 1012, 1017-1018, 103 Cal. Rptr. 3d 480 ; Cabral v. Martins (2009) 177 Cal. App. 4th 471, 482, 99 Cal. Rptr. 3d 394).

[Optional] P. Appeal Upon Denial of Anti-SLAPP Motion Stays All Trial Court Proceedings Upon Affected Causes of Action. Trial court proceedings on the merits following an appeal from the denial of an Anti-SLAPP motion under Code of Civil Procedure Section 425.16 are embraced in or affected by that appeal. Such proceedings are therefore stayed under Code of Civil Procedure Section 916(a) (Varian Medical Systems, Inc. v. Delfino (2005) 35 Cal. 4th 180, 191, 25 Cal. Rptr. 3d 298).

Dated: _____.

Respectfully submitted,
_____ [firm name, if any]
By: _____ [signature]
_____ [typed name]
Attorney for Defendant _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of a special motion to strike the whole or any part of a complaint or cross complaint setting forth a cause of action against a person arising from any act of that person in furtherance of the person's constitutionally protected right of petition or free speech in connection with a public issue [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(b)]. That is, this motion provides a procedure to cut off strategic lawsuits against public participation, commonly known as SLAPP suits.

Depending on the circumstances, the language in the parentheticals in optional point D, and optional point F, may be more appropriate to be included in a defendant reply memorandum.

Counsel should insert facts and argument in the form to show the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Timing of Motion and Hearing

In contrast to the usual form of motion to strike matters from a complaint or cross complaint [see Code Civ. Proc. § 435(b)(1) (notice of motion must be filed within time allowed to file response to pleading)], the special motion may be filed within 60 days of the service of the complaint or, in the court's discretion, at any later time upon terms the court deems proper [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(f)]. One court has held that the 60-day requirement in Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(f) for filing an Anti-SLAPP motion runs from the service of the complaint or an amended complaint, and if the amended complaint is served by mail, defendant has an extra 5 days in which to file the motion [Lam v. Ngo (2001) 91 Cal. App. 4th 832, 840-842, 111 Cal. Rptr. 2d 582] .

The motion must be scheduled by the clerk of the court for a hearing not more than 30 days after the service of the motion unless the docket conditions of the court require a later hearing [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(f)]. The Legislature amended Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(f) in 2005 to specifically overrule decisions denying special motions to strike based on the fact that counsel had scheduled the hearing more than 30 days after service of the motion [see, e.g., Decker v. U.D. Registry, Inc. (2003) 105 Cal. App. 4th 1382, 129 Cal. Rptr. 2d 892 and Fair Political Practices Commission v. American Civil Rights Coalition, Inc. (2004) 121 Cal. App. 4th 1171, 18 Cal. Rptr. 3d 157] .

[c] Attorney's Fees and Costs

Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(c) expressly authorizes a defendant who prevails on a special motion to strike to recover attorney's fees and costs. Effective January 1, 2010, this entitlement to fees is subject to limited exceptions if plaintiff's cause of action is brought pursuant to Gov. Code § 6259 (verified petition alleging public records improperly withheld from member of public), Gov. Code §§ 11130 or 11130.3 (involving meeting provisions of the legislative body of a local agency or a state body) or Gov. Code §§ 54960 or 54960.1 (actions to obtain a judicial determination that an action taken by a legislative body of a local agency or a state body is null and void) [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(c)]. Nothing in Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(c) shall be construed to prevent a prevailing defendant from recovering attorney's fees and costs in the above actions if the actions are clearly frivolous, pursuant to those sections of the Government Code. Conversely, if the court finds that a special motion to strike is frivolous or is solely intended to cause unnecessary delay, the court is required to award costs and reasonable attorney's fees to a plaintiff prevailing on the motion, pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 128.5 [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(c)].

Code Civ. Proc. § 128.5 applies only to actions filed before 1995. Code Civ. Proc. § 128.7 provides for sanctions with regard to complaints filed on or after January 1, 1995 and with regard to pleadings and other papers filed in those matters. Although Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16 refers expressly only to Code Civ. Proc. § 128.5, Code Civ. Proc. § 128.7 by its own terms applies to all papers presented to the court. For points and authorities pertaining to sanctions under Code Civ. Proc. § 128.7, see Ch. 207, Sanctions. For further discussion of Code Civ. Proc. §§ 128.5, 128.6, and 128.7, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 510, Sanctions (Matthew Bender).

When a plaintiff voluntarily dismisses an alleged SLAPP suit while a motion to strike is pending under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16, one court has held that the trial court has discretion to determine whether the defendant is the prevailing party for purposes of attorney's fees under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(c) [Coltrain v. Shewalter (1998) 66 Cal. App. 4th 94, 107, 77 Cal. Rptr. 2d 600 (Fourth Dist., Div. Two; voluntary dismissal without prejudice)] . Another court has held that a defendant who voluntarily dismisses, with or without prejudice, after filing a Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16 motion to strike, is nevertheless entitled to have the merits of the motion heard as a predicate to a determination of the defendant's motion for attorney's fees and costs under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(c) [Liu v. Moore (1999) 69 Cal. App. 4th 745, 751, 81 Cal. Rptr. 2d 807 (Second Dist., Div. Three; disagreed with Coltrain reasoning); but see Law Offices of Andrew L. Ellis v. Yang (2009) 178 Cal. App. 4th 869, 100 Cal. Rptr. 3d 771 (court held trial court had no jurisdiction to entertain Anti-SLAPP motion to strike where plaintiff dismissed the action without prejudice the day before the scheduled hearing; court retained limited jurisdiction only to award costs and statutory attorney fees); see also Chambers v. Miller (2006) 140 Cal. App. 4th 821, 826, 44 Cal. Rptr. 3d 777 (defendants were not entitled to have merits of Anti-SLAPP motion heard for purposes of determining their entitlement to attorney fees in case where plaintiff dismissed her claims against defendants before defendants filed Anti-SLAPP motion)]. Similarly, an appellate court upheld a trial court's award of attorney fees under the Anti-SLAPP statute in a case in which the court had granted defendants' motion for judgment on the pleadings but also granted defendant's Anti-SLAPP motion and awarded fees accordingly as an "alternative ruling" [ARP Pharmacy Services, Inc. v. Gallagher Bassett Services, Inc. (2006) 138 Cal. App. 4th 1307, 1323, 42 Cal. Rptr. 3d 256 (court "reluctantly" upheld award of attorney fees)]. Moreover, it has been held that Code Civ. Proc. § 128.7 is not a viable alternative to the attorney's fees and costs relief afforded by Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16 when there has been a voluntary dismissal while a Section 425.16 motion to strike is pending [Liu v. Moore (1999) 69 Cal. App. 4th 745, 750-751, 81 Cal. Rptr. 2d 807 (also discussing relationship of Code Civ. Proc. §§ 425.16, 1032 and 1033.5(a)(10)(B))]. However, where plaintiffs voluntarily dismiss their action before defendants file their Anti-SLAPP motion, defendants are not entitled to attorney fees (S.B. Beach Properties v. Berti (2006) 39 Cal. 4th 374, 383, 46 Cal. Rptr. 3d 380).

Even if the special motion to strike is granted only as to some claims, the partially successful defendant is entitled to attorney's fees. The lack of success on other claims is relevant to the amount of, but not the right to, fees. However, only those attorney fees and costs related to the special motion to strike, not the entire action, may be recovered under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(c) [Jackson v. Yarbray (2009) 179 Cal. App. 4th 75, 92, 101 Cal. Rptr. 3d 303] .

In awarding fees, the trial court is not constrained by the amount sought by the successful moving parties, but is obligated to award reasonable attorney's fees that adequately compensate them for the expense of responding to a baseless lawsuit [Jackson v. Yarbray (2009) 179 Cal. App. 4th 75, 92, 101 Cal. Rptr. 3d 303] . The fees awarded should include services for all proceedings, including discovery initiated by the opposing party pursuant to § 425.16(g), directly related to the special motion to strike [Jackson v. Yarbray (2009) 179 Cal. App. 4th 75, 92, 101 Cal. Rptr. 3d 303] .

In determining the fee award pursuant to § 425.16, the court may utilize the lodestar method addressed in Serrano v. Priest (1977) 20 Cal. 3d 25, 141 Cal. Rptr. 315, 569 P.2d 1303 , and in appropriate cases may include a fee enhancement for the purpose of compensating the attorney for contingent risk, exceptional skill or other factors [Jackson v. Yarbray (2009) 179 Cal. App. 4th 75, 93, 101 Cal. Rptr. 3d 303] .

Once the court has decided the amount of attorney's fees that adequately compensates the defendants in the underlying lawsuit for their efforts in moving to strike the complaint under § 425.16, relitigation of that specific issue--that is, the reasonable value of that portion of the total attorney's fees incurred in the underlying action that relate to the successful special motion to strike--in a subsequent malicious prosecution action will usually be precluded by the doctrine of collateral estoppel (or "issue preclusion") [Jackson v. Yarbray (2009) 179 Cal. App. 4th 75, 93-95, 101 Cal. Rptr. 3d 303] .

[d] Stay of Discovery

All discovery proceedings are stayed upon the filing of a notice of special motion to strike until notice of entry of the order ruling on the motion, unless the court, on noticed motion and for good cause shown, orders that specified discovery be conducted notwithstanding the statutory stay [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(g)]. This includes discovery motions already pending at the time the special motion to strike is filed [Britts v. Superior Court (2006) 145 Cal. App. 4th 1112, 1127, 52 Cal. Rptr. 3d 185] .

[e] Statutory Exceptions to Anti-SLAPP Motion

There are exceptions to the Anti-SLAPP motion to strike that make it unavailable in certain circumstances defined by statute [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17]. The special motion to strike procedure of Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16 does not apply to any action brought solely in the public interest or on behalf of the general public provided that all of the following conditions exist [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(b)]:

- The plaintiff does not seek any relief greater than or different from the relief sought for the general public or a class of which the plaintiff is a member. Claims for attorney's fees, costs, or other penalties do not count as seeking "greater" or "different" relief.

- The action, if successful, would enforce an important right affecting the public interest, and would confer a significant benefit, whether pecuniary or nonpecuniary, on the general public or a large class of persons.

- Private enforcement is necessary and places a disproportionate financial burden on the plaintiff in relation to the plaintiff's stake in the matter.

In addition, the special motion to strike procedure of Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16 does not apply to any action brought against a person primarily engaged in the business of selling or leasing goods or services, including, but not limited to, insurance, securities, or financial instruments, arising from any statement or conduct by that person. Both of the following conditions must exist [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(c)]:

- The statement or conduct consists of representations of fact about that person's or a business competitor's business operations, goods, or services, that is made for the purpose of obtaining approval for, promoting, or securing sales or leases of, or commercial transactions in, the person's goods or services, or the statement or conduct was made in the course of delivering the person's goods or services.

- The intended audience is an actual or potential buyer or customer, or a person likely to repeat the statement to, or otherwise influence, an actual or potential buyer or customer, or the statement or conduct arose out of or within the context of a regulatory approval process, proceeding or investigation not withstanding that the conduct or statement concerns an important public issue.

- The exception found in this provision does not apply where the statement or conduct was made by a telephone corporation in the course of a proceeding before the California Public Utilities Commission and is the subject of a lawsuit brought by a competitor.

[f] Circumstances Under Which Statutory Exceptions Are Inapplicable

There are circumstances when the foregoing statutory prohibitions against bringing a special motion to strike do not apply. An Anti-SLAPP motion is permitted as an exception to the foregoing prohibitions as follows [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(d)]:

- The Anti-SLAPP motion can be employed against claims arising from gathering, receiving or processing information for communication to the publisher, editor, reporter or other person connected or employed upon a newspaper, magazine or other periodical publication, press association or wire service, or a person engaged in the dissemination of ideas or expression in any book or academic journal [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(d)(1)].

- The Anti-SLAPP motion can be employed against claims against any person or entity based upon the creation, dissemination, exhibition, advertisement or other promotion of any dramatic, literary, musical, political or artistic work [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(d)(2)].

- The Anti-SLAPP motion can be employed against claims against any non-profit organization that receives more than 50 percent of its annual revenue from federal, state, or local government grants, awards, programs, or reimbursements for services rendered [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(d)(3)].

[g] Motion Not Available in Action Brought by Public Prosecutor

The Anti-SLAPP motion to strike is not available to defendants in any enforcement action brought in the name of the people of the State of California by the Attorney General, a district attorney, or a city attorney acting as a public prosecutor [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(d)]. This provision does not violate the equal protection clause of the constitution [People v. Health Laboratories of North America, Inc. (2001) 87 Cal. App. 4th 442, 451, 104 Cal. Rptr. 2d 618] .

[h] Some Provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16 Are Inapplicable if Action is a "SLAPPback"

In 2005, the Legislature added Code Civ. Proc. § 425.18 in order to provide different rules for a special motions to strike a "SLAPPback." The statute defines "SLAPPback" as any cause of action for malicious prosecution or abuse of process arising from the filing or maintenance of a prior cause of action that has been dismissed pursuant to a special motion to strike under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16 [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.18]. For further discussion, see § 161.63.

[i] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For forms and discussion relating to the special motion to strike, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 376, Motions to Strike: Anti -SLAPP, and Ch. 565, Unfair Competition, § 565.130 et seq. (Matthew Bender).

[j] Opposing Memoranda

The contentions set out in §§ 161.60 -161.63 may be used in opposition to the points and authorities in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Defendant is Not Required to Demonstrate or Plead an Intent to Chill First Amendment Rights

Equilon Enterprises, LLC v. Consumer Cause, Inc. (2002) 29 Cal. 4th 53, 124 Cal. Rptr. 2d 507 resolved a split in the California Courts of Appeal over whether a defendant who moves under the SLAPP statute must, in order to prevail, demonstrate that the cause of action was brought with the intent of chilling the defendant's exercise of constitutional speech or petition rights. In Equilon, defendant Consumer Cause, Inc. served on Shell Pipe Line Corporation and Texaco, Inc., predecessors in interest to Equilon Enterprises, LLC, a notice of intent to sue arising out of Equilon's alleged violations of Proposition 65. Equilon then filed a lawsuit for declaratory and injunctive relief claiming the notice did not comply with the California Code of Regulations. Consumer Cause responded by moving under the Anti-SLAPP statute to strike Equilon's complaint. The trial court granted the motion and the Court of Appeal affirmed. The Supreme Court agreed to hear the case and noted that the courts of appeal had divided over the issue of "intent to chill."

The court began by explaining that the plain language of Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16 contains no requirement that a defendant show plaintiff brought the lawsuit with an intent to chill defendant's rights. The court, quoting Fox Searchlight Pictures, Inc. v. Paladino (2001) 89 Cal. App. 4th 294, 307, 106 Cal. Rptr. 2d 906 stated that "'[t]he legislative concern,' rather, 'is that the cause of action arise from an act in furtherance of the constitutional right to petition or free speech'" (29 Cal. 4th 53, 59). The court then examined legislative intent in attempting to determine whether an intent-to-chill requirement would be appropriate. The court concluded that the legislature's objective was to ensure that public participation not be chilled, and imposing an intent-to-chill proof requirement would undermine that objective (29 Cal. 4th 53, 60) .

The court concluded by summarizing the court's task in deciding the outcome of an Anti-SLAPP motion to strike. First, the court should decide whether the defendant has made a "threshold showing" that the challenged cause of action is one arising from protected activity. The defendant must prove that the act or acts of which plaintiff complains were taken "'in furtherance of [defendant]'s right of petition or free speech under the United States or California Constitution in connection with a public issue'" (29 Cal. 4th 53, 58 , quoting Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(b)(1)). If the court finds the defendant has made this showing, it is then to determine whether plaintiff has demonstrated a probability of prevailing on the claim. Based on the above standards, the California Supreme Court affirmed the Court of Appeal's decision in the Equilon case (29 Cal. 4th 53, 68) .

The Equilon case has two companion cases, one of which is City of Cotati v. Cashman (2002) 29 Cal. 4th 69, 124 Cal. Rptr. 2d 519 . In Cotati, the California Supreme Court reiterated that the Anti-SLAPP statute in Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16 does not contain an intent-to-chill pleading or proof requirement. The Cotati court also explained that the Anti-SLAPP statute's requirement that the cause of action be one "arising from" protected activity is not synonymous with "in response to" protected activity. In Cotati, plaintiff City of Cotati adopted a mobile home park rent stabilization program, and subsequent owners of mobile home parks sued the City in federal court. City then sued the owners in state court, outlining a cause of action for declaratory relief. The owners responded to the state court lawsuit with a SLAPP motion to strike, alleging that the City's state court action arose from the owners' filing of their earlier federal action. The court held that simply because City filed its state court action after owners had filed their federal lawsuit did not mean the state court action was "arising from" the federal court action within the meaning of the Anti-SLAPP statute. The court pointed out that to construe "arising from" as meaning "in response to" would in effect render all cross-actions potential SLAPPs (29 Cal. 4th 69, 77-78) . The court held that City's state court cause of action arose from the actual controversy giving rise to both the federal and state actions--the City's rent stabilization program--and not the owners' federal lawsuit. Therefore, City's state court action was not subject to a special motion to strike (29 Cal. 4th 69, 80-81) .

Equilon's other companion case is Navellier v. Sletten (2002) 29 Cal. 4th 82, 124 Cal. Rptr. 2d 530 . In Navellier, plaintiffs had organized an investment company and defendant Sletten was an independent trustee of the fund. Years later, Sletten and the other trustees terminated Navallier's management contract for the fund. Plaintiffs then sued Sletten and the other trustees in federal court claiming that the trustees had breached fiduciary duties to the fund. After plaintiffs filed the federal suit, the parties came to an agreement whereby plaintiffs would return as investment advisor to the fund. As a part of this agreement, Sletten signed a general release of all claims. Thereafter, plaintiffs filed an amended complaint in federal court and Sletten filed counterclaims. Defendants won the jury trial in the federal case, and plaintiffs appealed. The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals affirmed the judgment. A few days before plaintiffs noticed their federal appeal, they filed a state action alleging that Sletten had committed fraud in misrepresenting his intention to be bound by the release. Defendant Sletten responded by filing a motion to strike under the Anti-SLAPP statute. The trial court denied the motion and the Court of Appeal affirmed, citing the intent-to-chill requirement.

The California Supreme Court began to stating that the Court of Appeal had erred in ruling that the case turned on whether plaintiffs subjectively intended to chill Sletton's speech. The court noted that they had discussed this issue at length in companion case Equilon (29 Cal. 4th 82, 88) . The court also reiterated its Cotati holding, stating that the mere fact that an action was filed after protected activity took place does not mean the action arose from that activity for purposes of the Anti-SLAPP statute (29 Cal. 4th 82, 89-95) . But for the federal lawsuit, the court reasoned, plaintiffs' present claims would have no basis; therefore, the action fell squarely within the "arising from" prong of the Anti-SLAPP statute. The court reversed the Court of Appeal's holding and remanded the case to the appellate court for a determination on the second prong of the Anti-SLAPP test, whether the plaintiffs have established a probability of prevailing (29 Cal. 4th 82, 95-96) .

On remand, the appellate court held that plaintiffs had not established a probability of prevailing on their fraud or breach of contract causes of action. Plaintiffs' claims did not have the minimal merit required to survive the SLAPP motion, and therefore the motion to strike was granted [Navellier v. Sletten (2003) 106 Cal. App. 4th 763, 767, 131 Cal. Rptr. 2d 201] .

[b] Plaintiff's Burden Arises After Defendant's Prima Facie Showing That Code of Civil Procedure Section 425.16 Applies

The facts and holdings of Equilon Enterprises, LLC v. Consumer Cause, Inc. (2002) 29 Cal. 4th 53, 124 Cal. Rptr. 2d 507 , City of Cotati v. Cashman (2002) 29 Cal. 4th 69, 75, 124 Cal. Rptr. 2d 519 , and Navellier v. Sletten (2002) 29 Cal. 4th 82, 88, 124 Cal. Rptr. 2d 530) are discussed in § 161.30[3][a].

In Seltzer v. Barnes (2010) 182 Cal. App. 4th 953 , an attorney who owned a condominium unit in a condominium development sued the homeowners association and a management company hired by the association, seeking to enjoin a range of alleged unlawful conduct on the part of the development's management. The association filed a cross-complaint alleging claims based on the attorney damaging and destroying trees without the association's permission and claims arising from her failure to pay assessments. The attorney tendered the cross-complaint to the provider of her homeowner insurance policies, which retained a law firm to provide advice concerning coverage for the cross-complaint under the attorney's insurance policies. Through one attorney, the insurer informed the attorney it would defend her against the cross-complaint, subject to a reservation of rights to deny coverage. The insurer took the position that the assessment claims in the cross-complaint were not covered under her policies. The insurer retained another law firm as her defense counsel. The first attorney hired by the insurer negotiated a settlement of the trespass claims with counsel for the association. The settlement did not encompass the assessment claims. The insurer and the association signed a settlement and release agreement, and the association filed a request for dismissal in accordance with the agreement, which was entered the same day. The attorney who owned the condominium unit filed a complaint against the association, the management company, her insurer, the attorney who negotiation the settlement, and the association's counsel, alleging that the insurer and the other defendants colluded to defraud the attorney, defeat her coverage under her insurance policies, and convert the proceeds of her insurance policies to the association. In particular, following secret negotiations, the insurer and the association entered into an agreement to dismiss the claims the insurer considered covered under her insurance policies, to justify the insurer's denial of a defense on the remainder of the cross-complaint and to provide the association with funds to continue its litigation against her. The attorney who owned the condominium alleged causes of action against the attorney who negotiated the settlement for fraud and intentional infliction of emotional distress, principally based on his participation in the negotiations that resulted in the partial settlement in the earlier Action. The attorney who negotiated the settlement filed a demurrer and, pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16, a special motion to strike the claims against him. His declaration, with attachments, detailed the negotiations resulting in the partial settlement of the cross-complaint in the earlier action. Specifically, pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 998, the association offered to settle the cross-complaint in its entirety in exchange for a specified sum and a commitment by the condominium owner to execute a hold harmless agreement and waiver of responsibility for maintenance by the association. The insurer, through the attorney who negotiated the settlement counteroffered to pay the association a smaller sum in exchange for dismissal of the cross-complaint. The association accepted the insurer's offer to settle the entire cross-complaint. However, the attorney who negotiated the settlement informed the association's counsel that the insurer could not agree to any settlement that would waive the condominium owner's right to seek her attorney's fees and costs from the association. The association offered to settle only the covered claims in the cross-complaint, preserving her right to pursue her attorney's fees and costs from the association on the remaining claims. The attorney who negotiated the settlement sent her a letter summarizing the ongoing settlement discussions and asking for her preference among three options: (1) Settlement of the entire cross-complaint, (2) settlement of the trespass claims alone, or (3) withdrawal of her insurance claim. In response, she impliedly rejected all three options and effectively insisted that the matter continue to be litigated at the insurer's expense. The insurer and the association entered into the partial settlement agreement, which preserved her right to seek attorney's fees and costs from the association on the remaining claims. The trial court denied the motion to strike (182 Cal. App. 4th 953, 958-960) .

The Court of Appeal reversed. The court held that settlement negotiations were an exercise of the right to petition and statements made as part of the negotiations were in connection with the underlying lawsuit for purposes of Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(e)(2). The condominium owner's claim was based on the attorney's communication of an offer to settle and the content of the offer (182 Cal. App. 4th 953, 963-964) . Although the condominium owner's contentions raised questions about the propriety of how the settlement negotiations were conducted, the attorney was not obligated to show his actions were constitutionally protected as a matter of law (182 Cal. App. 4th 953, 964) . The attorney's intent was a disputed factual issue, and he submitted evidence that the ultimate settlement was preceded by disclosure to the condominium owner and an opportunity for her to express her preference regarding options to settle the cross-complaint. Moreover, he averred in his declaration that he never misrepresented facts to her, concealed any evidence from her, or intended to cause her any emotional distress (182 Cal. App. 4th 953, 964-966) . The settlement did not violate Pen. Code § 550(a)(1), which prohibits presentation of any false or fraudulent claim for the payment of a loss or injury, including payment of a loss or injury under a contract of insurance. The negotiations were also not unlawful under Civ. Code § 2860(f) (182 Cal. App. 4th 953, 966-967) . Even if Civ. Code § 2860 was applicable, the insurer had, as a general matter, the right to settle covered claims in the cross-complaint (182 Cal. App. 4th 953, 967) . Finally, because the Civ. Code § 47 litigation privilege applied as a matter of law, the condominium owner could not demonstrate a probability of prevailing on her causes of action against coverage counsel (182 Cal. App. 4th 953, 969-972) .

In Stewart v. Rolling Stone LLC (2010) 181 Cal. App. 4th 664, 105 Cal. Rptr. 3d 98 , plaintiffs, indie rock musicians, sued the publishers of a magazine for unauthorized use of name in violation of Civ. Code § 3344, unauthorized use of name for commercial advantage (right of publicity), and unfair business practice in violation of Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 et seq., based on an editorial feature that appeared in an issue of the magazine. The gravamen of the complaint was that defendants and a tobacco company used the artist names of plaintiffs knowingly and deliberately for the commercial purpose of advertising cigarettes without their prior authorization. The trial court denied defendants' motion to strike pursuant to section 425.16. In their moving papers, defendants argued that all three causes of action were subject to § 426.16, because they arose from alleged conduct involving the magazine's exercise of its free speech rights about a matter of public interest, and that plaintiffs would be unlikely to prevail on the merits of their claims, primarily because the editorial feature represented non-commercial speech, which was absolutely protected by the First Amendment, and because the bands' names were not used for a commercial purpose. The trial court based its denial on the ground that a trier of fact could conclude the editorial feature had been transformed into commercial speech by virtue of having become inextricably entwined with a surrounding cigarette advertisement (181 Cal. App. 4th 664, 670-674) .

The Court of Appeal reversed. The court held first that the feature was protected under § 425.16, because the act from which the complaint arose constituted conduct in furtherance of defendants' right of free speech in connection with a public issue or an issue of public interest. The court found that the feature was a statement or other conduct is made in connection with a public issue or an issue of public interest [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(e)(4)], concerning a topic of widespread public interest and contributing in some manner to a public discussion of the topic if the statement or conduct. The feature concerned an extremely popular genre of music and was a creatively crafted, whimsical editorial commentary on the many bands whose musical works have contributed to the development of the genre (181 Cal. App. 4th 664, 677-679) . Further, plaintiffs did not make a showing of probability of prevailing on the merits because, assuming the feature was commercial speech, even commercial speech was entitled to a measure of First Amendment protection. However, the speech was not commercial as a matter of law, and because plaintiffs did not demonstrate that defendants acted with actual malice, constitutional principles of freedom of speech and the press required that the lawsuit be dismissed (181 Cal. App. 4th 664, 679-692) .

In Fox Searchlight Pictures v. Paladino (2001) 89 Cal. App. 4th 294, 307, 106 Cal. Rptr. 2d 906 , on learning that its former in-house counsel planned to sue for wrongful termination, the corporation sued the former counsel for disclosing confidential information. The defendant filed an Anti-SLAPP motion to strike. In opposition to defendant's SLAPP motion to strike and in support of its own disqualification motions, plaintiff corporation submitted documents under seal which purported to establish certain information contained in defendant's complaint for wrongful termination was privileged or confidential. The court reviewed the sealed documents in ruling on the SLAPP motion and denied the defendant's motion (89 Cal. App. 4th 294, 299-300) .

The court of appeal reversed, holding that the only thing defendant need establish in bringing an Anti-SLAPP motion to strike is that the challenged lawsuit arose from an act on the part of the defendant in furtherance of defendant's right of petition or free speech. From that fact the court may presume that the purpose of the action was to chill the defendant's exercise of First Amendment rights. Plaintiff corporation argued that the motion should be denied because defendant did not show that the complaint was intended to chill defendant's first amendment right to petition for the redress of grievances through litigation. No mention is made in the controlling statute regarding proof of the plaintiff's motives or intent, and the court refused to impose a burden on the party seeking protection from the SLAPP statute of proving the plaintiff was motivated by an improper purpose. The intent and purpose of the lawsuit may be addressed by the plaintiff when it attempts to establish its ability to prevail on the merits (89 Cal. App. 4th 294, 306-307) .

In Dixon v. Superior Court (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 733, 36 Cal. Rptr. 2d 687 , a firm that had performed archaeological tests on a site on the campus of California State University at Long Beach, believed by many Native American Indians to be an ancient village, brought an action for intentional and negligent interference with contractual relations and prospective economic advantage, libel, slander, and trade libel against a professor who opposed development on the site through a letter-writing campaign. Defendant professor allegedly wrote the letters for the sole purpose of participating in the California Environmental Quality Act (CEQA) public comment and review process by informing university officials about the cultural, historical, and archaeological significance of the site and potential environmental effects that further excavation and commercial development would cause. Defendant filed a motion to strike the complaint pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16, which the trial court denied (30 Cal. App. 4th 733, 740) .

The court of appeal issued a peremptory writ of mandate directing the trial court to vacate its order denying the motion to strike and to enter a new order granting the motion and dismissing the complaint (30 Cal. App. 4th 733, 746) . It described SLAPP (strategic lawsuits against public participation) suits as generally meritless suits brought by large private interests to deter common citizens from exercising their political or legal rights or to punish them for doing so. It then applied the rule set forth in Wilcox v. Superior Court (1994) 27 Cal. App. 4th 809, 820, 33 Cal. Rptr. 2d 446 (discussed below), that the party moving to strike a complaint under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16 has the burden of making a prima facie showing that the lawsuit arises from an act of defendant in furtherance of defendant's right of petition or free speech under the United States or California Constitution in connection with a public issue (30 Cal. App. 4th 733, 741-742) . It noted that the dispute in this case was whether the professor's allegedly tortious statements were made in connection with the CEQA proceedings. The court rejected the plaintiff's argument that the defendant's statements were not made in connection with the CEQA proceedings and concluded that the professor had made a prima facie showing under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16 (30 Cal. App. 4th 733, 742-744) . The court went on to hold that the plaintiff failed to establish a probability of success on its complaint and ordered the trial court to grant defendant's motion to strike the complaint (30 Cal. App. 4th 733, 744-746) .

In Wilcox v. Superior Court (1994) 27 Cal. App. 4th 809, 33 Cal. Rptr. 2d 446 , certified shorthand reporters brought suit against a certified shorthand reporters' alliance, alleging that "direct contracting," as practiced by defendants, constituted an unfair business practice, intentional interference with plaintiffs' prospective economic advantages, and interference with existing contracts. Defendants filed a cross complaint against plaintiffs, and other individuals, for defamation and conspiracy to unlawfully restrain trade through a boycott of defendants' reporting services. Wilcox, one of the cross defendants, filed a motion to strike the cross complaint against her based on Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16, the Anti-SLAPP suit statute. The trial court denied the motion, and Wilcox filed a petition for writ of mandate (27 Cal. App. 4th 809, 814-815) .

The court of appeal issued a peremptory writ directing the lower court to vacate its order and to enter a new order striking the cross-complaint in its entirety as to Wilcox (27 Cal. App. 4th 809, 830-831) . The court noted that although the statute clearly places the burden on the plaintiff or cross complainant to establish a probability of prevailing on the claim, the burden does not arise unless the claim falls within the ambit of the statute. The court observed that the statute is unclear as to whether the moving party bears the burden of establishing the action arose out of acts in furtherance of his or her First Amendment rights in connection with a public issue or whether the plaintiff bears the burden of showing its claim does not arise out of such acts by the defendant. The court concluded that it was not only logical but fundamentally fair that, before putting the plaintiff to the burden of establishing probability of success on the merits, the defendant be required to show that imposing that burden was justified by the nature of the plaintiff's complaint (27 Cal. App. 4th 809, 819) . It then held that Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(b), requires the defendant to make a prima facie showing the plaintiff's suit arises from an act of defendant in furtherance of defendant's right of petition or free speech under the United States or California Constitution in connection with a public issue. The defendant may meet this burden by showing that the act that forms the basis for the plaintiff's cause of action was a written or oral statement made before a legislative, executive, or judicial proceeding; a statement made in connection with an issue under consideration or review by a legislative, executive, or judicial body; or a statement made in a place open to the public or a public forum in connection with an issue of public interest, citing Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(e). The court also made clear that the definition of an "act in furtherance of" a person's First Amendment rights is not limited to oral and written statements (27 Cal. App. 4th 809, 820-821) .

The court rejected the cross complainants' contention that defendant had failed to show the acts alleged in the cross complaint were done in connection with the consideration of direct contracting by any legislative, executive, or judicial body, and that there was no rational connection between legislative, administrative and judicial challenges to direct contracting and defendant's alleged defamatory statement and conspiracy to injure the cross-complainants' businesses. It noted that this argument highlights the reason for the Anti-SLAPP suit legislation since in a SLAPP complaint, the defendant's acts in petitioning the government are made to appear as defamation, restraint of trade, and the like. The court stated that for this reason, the Legislature specifically provided in subdivision (b) to Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16 that "the court shall consider the pleadings and supporting and opposing affidavits stating the facts upon which the liability or defense is based." It then found that Wilcox's alleged defamatory statements were clearly made in connection with the underlying judicial challenge to direct contracting and that the alleged economic boycott of cross-complainants' businesses was arguably protected by the petition clause of the First Amendment (27 Cal. App. 4th 809, 821-822) . The court went on to hold that the cross complainants had failed to establish a probability of success on the merits of the cross complaint and ordered the trial court to grant Wilcox's motion to strike the cross complaint (27 Cal. App. 4th 809, 823-829) .

[c] Plaintiff Cannot Establish Probability of Prevailing on Claims Against Defendant

In Taus v. Loftus (2007) 40 Cal. 4th 683, 54 Cal. Rptr. 3d 775, 151 P.3d 1185 , plaintiff sued the authors and publishers of two different articles that appeared in The Skeptical Inquirer, a magazine published by the Committee for the Scientific Investigation of Claims of the Paranormal. The articles had been published in response to an earlier article in Child Maltreatment, a scientific journal. The Child Maltreatment article presented the case history of a girl who had been sexually abused as a young child and later allegedly spontaneously remembered previously unrecallable memories of that abuse. The girl, whom the article referred to as Jane Doe, was plaintiff. The two Skeptical Inquirer articles called into question the findings of the Child Treatment article and provided details about Jane Doe's history that were not included in the original article (which was written with Jane's permission). Shortly after the articles were published, plaintiff sued defendants for negligent infliction of emotional distress, invasion of privacy, fraud, and defamation. In response, defendants filed a motion to strike under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16.

The trial court denied the motion as to the negligence infliction of emotional distress and invasion of privacy claims. As to the other two claims, the court granted the motion as to one defendant and denied it as to the other named defendant. Defendants appealed the denials; plaintiff did not appeal the portions of the ruling granting defendants' motion. The court of appeals found that the two articles forming the basis of the lawsuit called into question the validity of the original Jane Doe article, which was part of an ongoing controversy in academic and clinical psychology circles regarding abuse and repressed memory. Thus, the conduct at issue fit squarely within Code of Civ. Proc. § 425.16(e)(3) and (4). As to the second prong of the Anti-SLAPP test, probability of success on the merits, the court of appeals concluded that plaintiff was only able to show a probability of success on the merits with respect to a cause of action for improper disclosure of private facts based on the disclosure, while speaking at a conference, of plaintiff's military position and based on the disclosure of plaintiff's initials during a deposition in an unrelated case, one cause of action for improper intrusion into private matters, based on misrepresentations to plaintiff's foster mother and based on a search of juvenile court files, and a cause of action for defamation based again on the disclosure of plaintiff's military position (40 Cal. 4th 683, 711) . Defendants again appealed, and the California Supreme Court granted review.

The court agreed that the conduct from which plaintiff's causes of action arose was clearly in furtherance of defendants' right of free speech in connection with a public issue. At the time of the conduct, there was a substantial controversy in the mental health field regarding suppressed memories of abuse. The burden therefore shifted to plaintiff to show a probability of prevailing on her claims. The court explained that plaintiff "must demonstrate that the complaint is both legally sufficient and supported by a prima facie showing of facts to sustain a favorable judgment if the evidence submitted by the plaintiff is credited. ... In deciding the question of potential merit, the trial court considers the pleadings and evidentiary submissions of both the plaintiff and the defendant; though the court does not weigh the credibility or comparative probative strength of competing evidence, it should grant the motion if, as a matter of law, the defendant's evidence supporting the motion defeats the plaintiff's attempt to establish evidentiary support for the claim" (40 Cal. 4th 683, 713-714 , quoting Wilson v. Parker, Covert & Chidester (2002) 28 Cal. 4th 811, 821, 123 Cal. Rptr. 2d 19, 50 P.3d 733). The court noted that since plaintiff had not appealed, the only causes of action before it were the four claims on which the court of appeal had ruled that plaintiff established a prima facie case.

On appeal, the California Supreme Court held that plaintiff was only able to establish a prima facie case on one cause of action: defendant's alleged misrepresentation of his relationship with the author of the initial article in order to obtain information from plaintiff's foster mother. After discussing the elements of the tort of public disclosure of private facts, the court concluded that because the facts disclosed regarding plaintiff's military service were newsworthy, they could not properly be the subject of such a cause of action. Additionally, the disclosure of plaintiff's initials during a deposition could not support such a cause of action because the deposition took place after plaintiff filed her complaint in the instant case, and plaintiff had disclosed her full name when she filed her complaint. The court further held that because defendants made the allegedly defamatory statements at a professional conference, the statements were protected by the common-interest privilege of Civ. Code § 47(c)(1) and therefore could not form the basis for a defamation cause of action. The court then examined plaintiff's cause of action for intrusion into private matters based on defendants' review of allegedly confidential court records and concluded that the evidence showed defendants only reviewed court files that were a matter of public record and not confidential at all (40 Cal. 4th 683, 726) .

Finally, the court turned to plaintiff's cause of action for improper intrusion into private matters based on defendants' misrepresentations in order to obtain personal information from plaintiff's foster mother. The court found that, based on evidence submitted by plaintiff, defendant was seeking to obtain personal information from plaintiff's foster mother and this information was of the type as to which a person would have a reasonable expectation of privacy. If defendant obtained this private information by misrepresenting herself to plaintiff's foster mother, a jury could reasonably find that defendant violated plaintiff's reasonable expectation of privacy in a highly offensive manner and therefore plaintiff did establish a prima facie case on this cause of action (40 Cal. 4th 683, 742) .

The facts and procedural background of Mendoza v. ADP Screening & Selection Services, Inc. (2010) 182 Cal. App. 4th 1644, 107 Cal. Rptr. 3d 294 , are set forth in § 160.40A[3][c], below. The Court of Appeal agreed with the trial court that plaintiff could not prevail on his cause of action for violation of Pen. Code § 290.46 as a matter of law because defendant had not "used" information disclosed on the Megan's Law Website (MLW) in a manner contemplated by the provisions prohibiting disclosure of information found on the MLW for employment purposes. The Legislature recognized a distinction between the "use" of sex offender information, and the "reproducing" or "republishing" of such information, and, in creating statutory liability for the "use" of the information disclosed on the MLW, the Legislature did not intend to extend liability to persons, including businesses, who merely reproduce or republish the information, without actually acting on the information. Plaintiff's cause of action, if any, lay against his prospective employer. Further, as a matter of law, plaintiff could not show a probability of prevailing on second cause of action for an alleged violation of Civ. Code § 1786.20(c), prohibiting an investigative consumer reporting agency from inquiring for the purpose of preparing an investigative consumer report on a consumer for employment purposes if the inquiry by an employer or prospective employer of the consumer would violate federal or state equal employment opportunity law or regulation. The prohibition against the use of information disclosed on the MLW did not mean that registered sex offenders were a protected class for purposes of housing discrimination under the California Fair Employment and Housing Act (Gov. Code § 12900 et seq.; 89 Ops. Cal. Atty. Gen. 85 (2006)), and the court saw no reason to come to a different conclusion in the employment discrimination context (182 Cal. App. 4th 1644, 1655-1659) .

The facts and procedural background of Dixon v. Superior Court (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 733, 36 Cal. Rptr. 2d 687 , are discussed under § 161.30[3][b]. In that case, the plaintiff contended that its evidence submitted in opposition to the motion demonstrated that the defendant-professor's statements were made with actual malice and with knowledge of their falsity or with reckless disregard for their truth. It argued that since defendant was not entitled to First Amendment protection, it had established a probability of prevailing at trial. The court of appeal disagreed. It found that where there is a statutory invitation for public participation and comment, such as existed here with the California Environmental Quality Act (CEQA) public comment period, any inquiry into the motives behind such statements or comments is barred. Since there was no dispute that the defendant's statements were made in response to a matter of public concern, the statements were entitled to absolute immunity, and plaintiff could not establish a probability of prevailing at trial (30 Cal. App. 4th 733, 745) .

The court also rejected plaintiff's constitutional challenge to Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16 on the grounds that it violates the right to due process by requiring a plaintiff to establish probability of success without the opportunity to conduct discovery. Although it did not directly address the issue of the statute's constitutionality, the court found that in this case, discovery would not have benefitted plaintiff's case since defendant's motivation behind his statements was irrelevant (30 Cal. App. 4th 733, 746). It further found that in ruling on the motion, the court does not weigh the evidence but accepts as true all evidence favorable to the plaintiff, thus rejecting plaintiff's contention that the statute violated its rights to trial by jury (30 Cal. App. 4th 733, 746).

The facts and procedural background of Wilcox v. Superior Court (1994) 27 Cal. App. 4th 809, 33 Cal. Rptr. 2d 446 , are discussed under § 161.30[3][b].

The court determined what the Legislature meant by requiring the plaintiff to establish a probability that the plaintiff will prevail on the claim in Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(b), by examining the legislative purpose behind the statute as well as the constitutional rights of the plaintiff to due process and a jury trial. It noted that the statute was intended to provide a fast and inexpensive unmasking and dismissal of SLAPP suits. It stated that to satisfy due process, the burden placed on plaintiff must be compatible with the early stage at which the motion is brought and the limited opportunity to conduct discovery and to preserve the right to a jury trial. The court cannot weigh the evidence (27 Cal. App. 4th 809, 823) .

The court then adopted the standard for establishing a substantial or reasonable probability of success enunciated in Hung v. Wang (1992) 8 Cal. App. 4th 908, 931, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 113 , which held that the plaintiff must demonstrate the complaint is legally sufficient and supported by a sufficient prima facie showing of facts to sustain a favorable judgment if the evidence submitted by the plaintiff is credited. If either requirement is not met, the motion to strike must be granted; if both are satisfied, it must be denied (27 Cal. App. 4th 809, 823-824) . Applying this standard, the court found that cross complainants failed to establish a probability of prevailing on the defamation claim, since the defendant would have a qualified privilege defense, or on the conspiracy claim since cross complainants failed to submit legally sufficient evidence that defendant had concurred with anyone in a tortious scheme to injure them (27 Cal. App. 4th 809, 826-828) .

[d] Constitutional Protection Available for Speech Alleged to Constitute Intentional Interference With Prospective Economic Advantage

In Hofmann Co. v. E.I. Du Pont de Nemours and Co. (1988) 202 Cal. App. 3d 390, 248 Cal. Rptr. 384 , two plant managers of the defendant toxic chemical plant made statements that appeared in a front-page news story criticizing a housing development proposed to be constructed next to the plant. The developer brought an action against the chemical company and the plant managers alleging that the employees' comments constituted false statements of fact actionable as trade libel and as intentional interference with prospective economic advantage (202 Cal. App. 3d 390, 395-396) . The trial court sustained defendants' demurrers to the two causes of action without leave to amend.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that the statements were either assertions of true facts or ambiguous opinions, and thus not actionable as trade libel (202 Cal. App. 3d 390, 401) . The court further held that the statements, which involved a matter of public concern, were constitutionally protected (202 Cal. App. 3d 390, 407-408) .

In Paradise Hills Associates v. Procel (1991) 235 Cal. App. 3d 1528, 1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 514 , plaintiff was the owner and developer of a residential subdivision. Defendant and her husband, who purchased a house from plaintiff, asserted numerous construction defects and breaches of contract. Defendant posted signs on her house to call attention to her dispute with plaintiff, spoke to newspaper reporters about her house, distributed leaflets in front of plaintiff's model home, spoke to prospective customers, urging them not to buy from plaintiff, and displayed large signs that disparaged plaintiff. Plaintiff obtained a preliminary injunction restricting defendant from the above and other activities. Defendant appealed the denial of her application for an extraordinary writ reversing the injunction (235 Cal. App. 3d 1528, 1534-1536).

The court of appeal reversed the order granting the preliminary injunction. The court found that the injunctive relief granted was overbroad to the extent it restricted protected speech, such as truthful information and honestly held opinions, and activity, such as peaceful picketing (235 Cal. App. 3d 1528, 1545-1546) .

[e] Averments on Information and Belief Are Inadequate in Supporting Declaration

In Evans v. Unkow (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 1490, 45 Cal. Rptr. 2d 624 , plaintiff had been recalled from political office in a recall election. He then brought an action for defamation against 10 defendants who had initiated the recall drive. The defendants filed a SLAPP motion to strike. In opposing the motion, plaintiff submitted a declaration alleging on the basis of information and belief that a political adversarial relationship between himself and the individual who was the main source of information for defendants was a matter of common knowledge. The trial court granted the motion to strike, and also said that it had not considered substantial portions of plaintiff's declaration which were argument and mere opinion.

The court of appeal agreed with the trial court, noting initially that in opposing the motion to strike plaintiff had the burden of establishing a "probability" that he would prevail, so that he had to present evidence showing he would establish a prima facie case at trial (38 Cal. App. 4th 1490, 1496) . The court agreed that if defendants were relying solely on a source known to be hostile toward the plaintiff, that would support a finding or reason to doubt the source's veracity. However, it concluded that plaintiff failed to establish that the defendants knew of such hostility. Plaintiff's sole assertion on this point was his averment, on information and belief that the "adversarial relationship" between the two was a matter of common knowledge. However, an averment on information and belief is inadequate to show a probability that the plaintiff will prevail on the claim sufficient to satisfy Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(b). An assessment of the probability of prevailing on the claim looks to trial, and the evidence that will be presented at that time. Such evidence must be admissible, and the testimony of a witness concerning a particular matter is inadmissible unless he has personal knowledge of the matter. Therefore, an averment on information and belief is inadmissible at trial, and thus cannot show a probability of prevailing on the claim (38 Cal. App. 4th 1490, 1497-1498) . The court thus affirmed the judgment of dismissal.

[f] Discovery Proceedings Are Stayed

In Britts v. Superior Court (2006) 145 Cal. App. 4th 1112, 52 Cal. Rptr. 3d 185 , petitioners did not file opposition to a discovery motion but instead filed an Anti-SLAPP motion on the day the opposition was due. The Anti-SLAPP motion was still pending in another department of the superior court when the discovery motion was later heard, when the order was subsequently entered, and on the date petitioners were to comply with the order by providing discovery responses and paying sanctions 20 days later. At issue was whether the stay on "all discovery proceedings" [Code Civ. Proc., § 425.16(g)] imposed upon the filing of an anti-SLAPP motion extended to discovery motions.

The court held that the language of the statute had to be read to mean that discovery motions, including those that were pending, were also stayed upon the filing of an anti-SLAPP motion. Accordingly, the trial court erred not only in proceeding with the hearing on the creditor's discovery motion while petitioners' second anti-SLAPP motion was pending, but also in issuing its order compelling their compliance with discovery requests, imposing monetary sanctions against them, and finding a waiver of their objections. The court issued a peremptory writ of mandate directing the trial court to vacate its discovery order, to schedule a new hearing on the creditor's motion to compel and for discovery sanctions with a briefing schedule that allowed petitioners a reasonable time to file opposition to the motion on its merits, and to consider the motion anew in accordance with the views expressed in the court's opinion (145 Cal. App. 4th 1112, 1125-1130)

[g] Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16 to Be Construed Broadly

In Kibler v. Northern Inyo County Local Hospital Dist. (2006) 39 Cal. 4th 192, 46 Cal. Rptr. 3d 41, 138 P.3d 193 , plaintiff Dr. George Kibler had been a physician at defendant hospital since the 1970's. In 2001, the hospital brought a lawsuit against Dr. Kibler seeking an injunction against workplace violence after hostile encounters between Dr. Kibler and other hospital employees. The hospital's peer review committee subsequently suspended Dr. Kibler from its staff. Shortly thereafter, Dr. Kibler and the hospital came to a written agreement under which Dr. Kibler's privileges were reinstated in exchange for Dr. Kibler's agreement to refrain from hostile, violent, intimidating, or demeaning conduct. Several months later, Dr. Kibler filed a lawsuit against the hospital, alleging causes of action for defamation, abuse of process, and interference with his practice of medicine. The hospital filed an Anti-SLAPP motion, contending that the lawsuit arose out of the hospital's peer review proceeding, which was an "official proceeding" within the meaning of the Anti-SLAPP statute. The trial court agreed, and dismissed Dr. Kibler's lawsuit. The court of appeal affirmed, the California Supreme Court granted Dr. Kibler's petition for review to decide whether a hospital peer review proceeding is an "official proceeding authorized by law" under the statute (39 Cal. 4th 192, 195) .

The Supreme Court affirmed, noting at the outset that the phrase "official proceeding authorized by law" appears in both Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(e)(1) and (2). The trial court found that the lawsuit arose out of oral or written statements or writings made in connection with the peer review proceedings. Therefore, the court only addressed whether the lawsuit targeted conduct protected under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(e)(2). The court then acknowledged that the Legislature explicitly intended for the Anti-SLAPP statute to be broadly construed (39 Cal. 4th 192, 199) . Because the hospital peer review proceedings are governed by a comprehensive scheme set forth in the Business and Professions Code, the proceedings qualify as an "official proceeding authorized by law." Moreover, a hospital's peer review decisions are subject to judicial review by administrative mandate and therefore are quasi-judicial in nature. Because Dr. Kibler's lawsuit was aimed at statements or writings made in connection with the hospital's peer review proceedings, the Supreme Court affirmed the dismissal of Dr. Kibler's lawsuit (39 Cal. 4th 192, 203) .

The facts and procedural background of Briggs v. Eden Council for Hope and Opportunity (1999) 19 Cal. 4th 1106, 81 Cal. Rptr. 2d 471, 969 P.2d 564 , are discussed under § 161.31[3][a]. In Briggs, the court noted the 1997 legislative amendment to Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16 mandates a broad construction of that section (19 Cal. 4th 1106, 1120) and disapproved of several cases that narrowly construed the scope of Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16 (see 19 Cal. 4th 1106, 1114, 1120-1121, 1123 n.10).

[h] Petitions for Injunctive Relief From Harassment Are Subject to Anti-SLAPP Motion to Strike

In Thomas v. Quintero (2005) 126 Cal. App. 4th 635, 24 Cal. Rptr. 3d 619 , plaintiff filed a Code Civ. Proc. § 527.6 petition for injunction prohibiting harassment against defendant, alleging that defendant appeared at plaintiff's church and harassed members of the congregation with the purpose of embarrassing plaintiff. Shortly after plaintiff filed the petition, the court granted a TRO and set a hearing date for the injunction petition, which was later continued. Defendant then filed an Anti-SLAPP motion, which the trial court judge denied. At the hearing, the trial court judge ruled that the Anti-SLAPP statute did not apply to proceedings under Code Civ. Proc. § 527.6. The judge's reasons were as follows: 1) a petition under Code Civ. Proc. § 527.6 is not a "cause of action" under the Anti-SLAPP statute; 2) the application of the Anti-SLAPP statute to such proceedings would undermine the speed with which the proceedings were meant to be conducted; and 3) the provisions allowing for discovery in connection with the Anti-SLAPP motion were counter to the purpose of Code Civ. Proc. § 527.6 (126 Cal. App. 4th 635, 646) . Defendant appealed the Anti-SLAPP ruling, and the court of appeals reversed.

The appellate court pointed out that no court had previously decide the question of whether a Code Civ. Proc. § 527.6 petition is subject to the Anti-SLAPP statute. The court noted that the Anti-SLAPP statute uses the term "cause of action" interchangeably with the terms "claim," "complaint," and "action," and defines "complaint" to specifically include a "petition." Furthermore, the Legislature specifically exempted some forms of legal proceedings from the purview of the statute, but Code Civ. Proc. § 527.6 petitions were not among them, suggesting the Legislature did not intend to except Code Civ. Proc. § 527.6 petitions from the Anti-SLAPP statute. The court also pointed to other Anti-SLAPP cases involving claims for injunctive relief filed under different procedural statutes. The court similarly dismissed the trial court's concerns about the timing of the harassment petition proceedings, stating that, if granted, a TRO can remain in effect during the pendency of the Anti-SLAPP motion and that the harassment statute allows for continuances. As for the trial court's concerns about discovery, the court stated that the norm would be for both the Anti-SLAPP hearing and the hearing on the petition to take place without discovery, so there was no apparent conflict.

However, the court held that an Anti-SLAPP motion cannot be filed in response to the TRO procedure set forth in Code Civ. Proc. § 527.6(c), as a request for a TRO is simply an "application" and not a "cause of action" (126 Cal. App. 4th 635, 652). The appellate court reversed the trial court's decision and granted defendant's Anti-SLAPP motion, holding that defendant's conduct arose out of protected activities and plaintiff had no likelihood of prevailing on the merits (126 Cal. App. 4th 635, 664).

In City of Los Angeles v. Animal Defense League (2006) 135 Cal. App. 4th 606, 37 Cal. Rptr. 3d 632 , the city of Los Angeles filed petitions under Code Civ. Proc. § 527.8 seeking workplace violence protective orders on behalf of two of its employees against an animal rights activist and the Animal Defense League. The city filed its petitions following a demonstration at one of the employee's homes. The trial court granted temporary restraining orders and set the matters for hearing, and defendants filed Anti-SLAPP motions in response. The court denied the Anti-SLAPP motions, holding the petitions fell within the Anti-SLAPP statute exemption found in Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(d) and therefore were not subject to Anti-SLAPP scrutiny. Defendants appealed, and the court of appeals reversed.

The court of appeals began by pointing out that petitions under Code Civ. Proc. § 527.8 are subject to the Anti-SLAPP statute. Such petitions are substantially similar to petitions for civil harassment restraining orders, which have been held subject to Anti-SLAPP scrutiny under Thomas v. Quintero (2005) 126 Cal. App. 4th 635, 645, 24 Cal. Rptr. 3d 619 . The court then addressed the issue of whether such petitions were "enforcement action[s] brought in the name of the people of the State of California by the Attorney General, district attorney, or city attorney, acting as a public prosecutor" under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(d). The city argued the petitions were enforcement actions because the conduct targeted was a crime. The court noted that Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(d) does apply to both criminal prosecutions and civil enforcement actions, and that actions brought in the name of a city or county itself rather than in the name of the "people of California" could still qualify under the exemption. However, the exemption only applies to actions brought by a governmental agency to enforce laws aimed generally at public protection. The city's petitions in this case were not aimed at public protection, but rather were tools to ensure a safe workplace for the city's employees. Additionally, the city was not acting in its capacity as "public prosecutor" when it filed the petitions; it was acting as an "employer" (135 Cal. App. 4th 606, 619) .

After holding that the petitions were not exempted from Anti-SLAPP scrutiny under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(d), the court addressed the merits of the motion. Demonstrations targeting government policy constitute a classic exercise of the constitutional rights of free speech and petition in connection with a public issue, within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(e)(4). Because the city failed to show a probability of prevailing on its claims, the court granted defendants' Anti-SLAPP motions (135 Cal. App. 4th 606, 627) .

[i] The Exemption to the Anti-SLAPP Law for Enforcement Actions Applies Only to Actions Brought by a Governmental Agency Aimed Generally at Public Protection

In City of Los Angeles v. Animal Defense League (2006) 135 Cal. App. 4th 606, 37 Cal. Rptr. 3d 632 , the city of Los Angeles filed petitions under Code Civ. Proc. § 527.8 seeking workplace violence protective orders on behalf of two of its employees against an animal rights activist and the Animal Defense League. The city filed its petitions following a demonstration at one of the employee's homes. The trial court granted temporary restraining orders and set the matters for hearing, and defendants filed Anti-SLAPP motions in response. The court denied the Anti-SLAPP motions, holding the petitions fell within the Anti-SLAPP statute exemption found in Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(d) and therefore were not subject to Anti-SLAPP scrutiny. Defendants appealed, and the court of appeals reversed.

The court of appeals began by pointing out that petitions under Code Civ. Proc. § 527.8 are subject to the Anti-SLAPP statute. Such petitions are substantially similar to petitions for civil harassment restraining orders, which have been held subject to Anti-SLAPP scrutiny under Thomas v. Quintero (2005) 126 Cal. App. 4th 635, 645, 24 Cal. Rptr. 3d 619 . The court then addressed the issue of whether such petitions were "enforcement action[s] brought in the name of the people of the State of California by the Attorney General, district attorney, or city attorney, acting as a public prosecutor" under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(d). The city argued the petitions were enforcement actions because the conduct targeted was a crime. The court noted that Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(d) does apply to both criminal prosecutions and civil enforcement actions, and that actions brought in the name of a city or county itself rather than in the name of the "people of California" could still qualify under the exemption. However, the exemption only applies to actions brought by a governmental agency to enforce laws aimed generally at public protection. The city's petitions in this case were not aimed at public protection, but rather were tools to ensure a safe workplace for the city's employees. Additionally, the city was not acting in its capacity as "public prosecutor" when it filed the petitions; it was acting as an "employer" (135 Cal. App. 4th 606, 619) .

After holding that the petitions were not exempted from Anti-SLAPP scrutiny under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(d), the court addressed the merits of the motion. Demonstrations targeting government policy constitute a classic exercise of the constitutional rights of free speech and petition in connection with a public issue, within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(e)(4). Because the city failed to show a probability of prevailing on its claims, the court granted defendants' Anti-SLAPP motions (135 Cal. App. 4th 606, 627) .

[j] "Mixed" Cause of Action Is Subject to Anti-SLAPP Statute Unless Protected Conduct Is Merely Incidental to Unprotected Conduct

Salma v. Capon (2008) 161 Cal. App. 4th 1275, 1287, 74 Cal. Rptr. 3d 873 involved an Anti-SLAPP motion to strike defendant's cross-complaint against plaintiff where Capon sued Salma for rescission and violations of the Home Equity Sales Contracts Act, alleging that he sold his home for far less than it was worth due to duress. Salma cross-complained for conversion and intentional interference with prospective economic advantage, among other causes of action. Capon filed an Anti-SLAPP motion as to those two causes of action in the cross-complaint. After Capon filed the Anti-SLAPP motion but before the trial court ruled on the motion, Salma filed an amended cross-complaint, revising the two causes of action subject to the Anti-SLAPP motion. The court granted Capon's motion to strike the conversion claim and denied his motion as to the interference with economic advantage claim. The court also ruled that because Salma's conversion claim as stated in the amended cross-complaint was different from the first, the motion to strike did not apply to the amended cross-complaint and the conversion claim could proceed. Capon appealed.

The court of appeals reversed, striking both causes of action under the Anti-SLAPP statute. The court found that the conduct underlying the interference with economic advantage claim was Capon's filing of the notice of rescission, filing and recorded a notice of lis pendens, naming Salma's lenders as defendants in his complaint, contacting the police department where the property was located, and trespassing on the property. Filing the notice of lis pendens and naming defendants in the complaint were clearly protected activities under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(e)(1). Filing the notice of rescission was also protected as a legal prerequisite to filing the rescission action. The cross-complaint also contained allegations of unprotected activity, such as Capon's trespassing onto the property after he had sold it. However, the protected conduct was not merely incidental to the unprotected conduct. In fact, the court held that the allegations of protected conduct "represent the bulk of the allegations underlying the cause of action." Because Salma was unable to demonstrate a probability of success on the merits, the court dismissed both causes of action. The court of appeals also held that a plaintiff or cross-complainant may not amend his complaint or cross-complaint prior to the court's ruling on an Anti-SLAPP motion. The trial court should have stricken, without analysis, the amended causes of action (161 Cal. App. 4th 1275, 1290-1293) .

In Gallanis-Politis v. Medina (2007) 152 Cal. App. 4th 600 , plaintiff sued her employer and one of the employer's directors for Fair Employment and Housing Act and civil rights violations arising out of her employment. Plaintiff alleged, among other claims, that male and Latino co-workers had received a pay increase due to their bilingual status and she did not. Plaintiff later amended her complaint to add two additional supervisors and to state causes of action for race discrimination, harassment and retaliation. Many of the allegations of the amended complaint arose out of alleged retaliation after plaintiff filed her original complaint. The two supervisors filed a special motion to strike plaintiff's complaint, asserting the complaint arose out of oral and/or written statements made by them in connection with the investigation of an issue pending before the court: whether or not plaintiff was entitled to bilingual pay. The trial court denied defendants' special motion to strike, ruling that because the action arose out of both protected and nonprotected activity, the complaint was not subject to a special motion to strike and, additionally, that plaintiff showed a reasonable probability of prevailing. Defendants appealed.

The court of appeals reversed. The court held that defendants had made the necessary threshold showing that plaintiff's retaliation claim arose from activity protected under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(e)(2), which protects "any written or oral statement or writing made in connection with an issue under consideration or review by a ... judicial body ... ." The basis for the retaliation claim was the investigation regarding whether or not plaintiff was entitled to bilingual pay. This investigation arose out of plaintiff's initial complaint against her employer. The retaliation claim also alleged some acts on defendants' part which did not constitute protected activity, such as restricting plaintiff's job duties and requiring plaintiff to reinitiate the bilingual bonus paperwork. Plaintiff argued that because the majority of the conduct alleged was not protected, the action was not subject to a special motion to strike. The court disagreed, citing case law stating that a cause of action is subject to Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16 "unless the protected conduct is merely incidental to the unprotected conduct" (152 Cal. App. 4th 600, 614) . In this particular case, the allegations regarding the investigation were "at the heart of" the retaliation claim and were not merely incidental to the nonprotected conduct. In contrast, the nonprotected actions were extraneous to the primary allegations, which arose from protected conduct. Plaintiff also failed to show a probability of prevailing on her retaliation claim, and therefore defendants' special motion to strike was granted (152 Cal. App. 4th 600, 619) .

Peregrine Funding, Inc. v. Sheppard Mullin Richter & Hampton LLP (2005) 133 Cal. App. 4th 658, 35 Cal. Rptr. 3d 31 involved an action arising from a Ponzi scheme. Defendant, a law firm that represented the scheme's architect, was sued by plaintiffs, investors, and a bankruptcy trustee for the law firm's corporate clients. The action alleged professional malpractice and aiding and abetting a breach of fiduciary duty. The firm's clients included an individual who planned the scheme, funding entities that were used in the scheme, and a management corporation for the entities. The action against the firm was based in part on its allegedly conflicted representation of the clients in an action by the Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC). The trial court denied the law firm's motion to strike under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16.

The appellate court reversed the decision noting that the some of the claims were based on the firm's protected activity in that litigation. Therefore, it was proper to apply § 425.16, the anti-Strategic Lawsuit Against Public Participation (Anti-SLAPP) statute, even though some of the allegations did not concern protected activity. The protected conduct included petitioning activities, such as opposing the SEC's efforts to obtain restraining orders, and litigation tactics, such as refusing to allow the individual client to testify and threatening to put the funding entities into bankruptcy if the SEC persisted in seeking testimony (133 Cal. App. 4th 658, 672) .

The facts and holding of Fox Searchlight Pictures, Inc. v. Paladino (2001) 89 Cal. App. 4th 294, 308, 106 Cal. Rptr. 2d 906 are discussed in § 161.30[3][b].

[k] Protected Conduct Does Not Lose Its Protected Status Merely Because Plaintiff Alleges the Conduct is Unlawful or Unethical

In Kemps v. Beshwate (2009) 180 Cal. App. 4th 1012, 103 Cal. Rptr. 3d 480 , a subpoenaed witness in a prior criminal case sued the attorney and investigators for the criminal defendant for abuse of process and other torts, based on her arrest for failing to appear. The trial court granted defendants' special motion to strike under Code Civ. Proc., § 425.16. Plaintiff appealed, contending that defendants' conduct in filing a false proof of service and declaration to obtain the bench warrant that resulted in plaintiff's arrest was illegal conduct as a matter of law and that, accordingly, defendants were not entitled to invoke the special motion procedure (180 Cal. App. 4th 1012, 1015-1016) .

The Court of Appeal affirmed, rejecting plaintiff's characterization of defendants' conduct. If plaintiff's version of the events leading up to her testimony at the criminal trial was correct, it could be that some portion of the conduct of the various defendants was illegal. Defendants' version of events, to the contrary, established, at most, innocent confusion concerning the individual to whom some of them had spoken--that is, they may have wrongly assumed they were speaking to plaintiff--and attachment of incorrect documents to the declaration in support of the application for warrant. As plaintiff acknowledged in her trial testimony, she had received several subpoenas for the criminal trial; defendants could have innocently attached the wrong one to the declaration. Defendants categorically denied any illegal conduct, and the evidence was in conflict concerning the events in question. While it was not impossible that a finder of fact could resolve all of the conflicts in the evidence in favor of plaintiff and conclude as a matter of fact that some portion, possibly all, of defendants' conduct was illegal, the state of the evidence did not establish that the conduct was illegal as a matter of law. Accordingly, the trial court correctly concluded defendants made the threshold showing that plaintiff's causes of action arose from their exercise of constitutionally protected conduct in a judicial proceeding (180 Cal. App. 4th 1012, 1017-1018) .

In Cabral v. Martins (2009) 177 Cal. App. 4th 471, 99 Cal. Rptr. 3d 394 , plaintiff brought a series of actions against her ex-husband and his two siblings to attempt to collect unpaid child support. In this particular action, plaintiff sued her ex-husband, his two siblings and several attorneys who had represented the other defendant parties. One of the attorneys had revised the ex-husband's mother's estate plan in a manner that disinherited the ex-husband. The other attorneys represented the defendant parties in probate court proceedings and/or had defended the ex-husband and his siblings in actions brought by plaintiff to collect child support. As to the attorney defendants, plaintiff alleged that they violated a statute authorizing treble damages against those who assist a child support obligor in avoiding payment of child support. Defendants filed an Anti-SLAPP motion to strike, and the trial court granted the motion. Plaintiff appealed.

Because plaintiff had settled with the non-attorney defendants while the appeal was pending, the court of appeals addressed only the attorney defendants' motion to strike, and affirmed. The court found the action did arise out of defendants' activities in revising the mother's estate plan, putting the estate plan through probate proceedings and defending the parties in actions brought by plaintiff. The court then looked to whether this activity was protected, and found it was. The second and third activities were clearly protected under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(e)(1) and (2). Under the pertinent case law, all communicative acts performed by attorneys in representative of their clients in a judicial proceeding are protected (see, e.g., Rusheen v. Cohen (2006) 37 Cal. 4th 1048, 39 Cal. Rptr. 3d 516, 128 P.3d 713). Plaintiff then alleged the activity was not protected because it violated the child support evasion laws, under case law such as Flatley v. Mauro (2006) 39 Cal. 4th 299, 46 Cal. Rptr. 3d 606, 139 P.3d 2 (holding conduct illegal as a matter of law is not subject to protection under the Anti-SLAPP statute). The court distinguished these cases, in which the evidence had clearly shown the defendants engaged in illegal conduct. In the instant case, the defendant attorneys' conduct was neither inherently criminal nor outside the scope of routine legal services. The exception for illegal conduct only applies if a defendant concedes, or the evidence conclusively establishes, that the assertedly protected activity was illegal as a matter of law (177 Cal. App. 4th 471, 482) . Because plaintiff could not show a probability of prevailing on the merits, the trial court's ruling was affirmed (177 Cal. App. 4th 471, 490) .

[l] Appeal Upon Denial of Anti-SLAPP Motion Stays All Trial Court Proceedings Upon Affected Causes of Action

In Varian Medical Systems, Inc. v. Delfino (2005) 35 Cal. 4th 180, 25 Cal. Rptr. 3d 298 , the California Supreme Court addressed the issue of whether an appeal from the denial of an Anti-SLAPP motion effects an automatic stay of the trial court proceedings and concluded that it does. The case involved two disgruntled former employees of plaintiff Varian, which was a medical products manufacturing company. Defendant former employees, one of whom was fired and one of whom resigned in sympathy, posted derogatory messages about the company on the Internet. In response, plaintiff filed suit against defendants, alleging seven causes of action arising out of the internet postings. Each defendant then filed a special motion to strike under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16, each of which was denied by the trial court. Defendants appealed the trial court's rulings and sought to stay the proceedings pending the appeal, both by way of ex parte application with the trial court and by petition for writ of supersedeas with the court of appeal. Both courts rejected defendants' attempts to stay the proceedings. After a trial, the jury found in favor of plaintiff, awarding both compensatory and punitive damages totaling $775,000. Defendants appealed the judgment and the Court of Appeal affirmed, holding that the court had the discretion to grant a stay but was not required to do so.

The California Supreme Court granted review solely on the issue of whether defendants' appeals from the rulings on the Anti-SLAPP motions effected an automatic stay of the trial court proceedings, and held that they did (35 Cal. 4th 180, 191) . The Court noted that under Code Civ. Proc. § 916(a), the perfecting of an appeal stays trial court proceedings "upon the matters embraced therein or affected thereby." Put another way, stated the Court, the issue was whether post order proceedings would have any "effect on the 'effectiveness' of the appeal" (35 Cal. 4th 180, 189 , quoting In re Marriage of Horowitz (1984) 159 Cal. App. 3d 377, 381, 205 Cal. Rptr. 880). The Court concluded that because the reversal on appeal of a denial of a special motion to strike results in a dismissal of a cause of action on the merits, continuing with such a proceeding pending an appeal is irreconcilable with a judgment for plaintiff on the merits (35 Cal. 4th 180, 190) . The very purpose of the Anti-SLAPP statute, noted the Court, is that litigants have a right not to be dragged through the courts for exercising their constitutional rights. The Court also examined legislative history and determined that the Legislature intended that the perfecting of an appeal from the denial of an Anti-SLAPP motion would stay further trial court proceedings on the merits. Because the matter should have been stayed upon defendants' appeal of the Anti-SLAPP ruling, the trial court lacked subject matter jurisdiction and the judgment was void. The Court therefore remanded the case for a new trial (35 Cal. 4th 180, 201) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Plaintiff's Burden Arises After Defendants's Prima Facie Showing That Code of Civil Procedure Section 425.16 Applies

In Fontani v. Wells Fargo Investments, LLC (2005) 129 Cal. App. 4th 719, 28 Cal. Rptr. 3d 833 plaintiff sued his former employer, Wells Fargo. His claims included a contention that defendant defamed him and interfered with his prospective business advantage in submitting a Form U-5 to the National Association of Securities Dealers (NASD) describing the reasons for his termination. Defendant moved to strike the defamation and interference with business advantage claim under the Anti-SLAPP statute. The trial court denied the special motion to strike, and defendant appealed. On appeal, Wells Fargo contended that the U-5 form was made in connection with an official proceeding within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(e)(1). The court agreed, holding that the NASD is an official body for purposes of Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(e)(1) and that the U-5 form was a communication before an official proceeding. The NASD exercises governmental power because it is the primary regulatory body for the broker-dealer industry and acts as a regulatory surrogate for the Securities and Exchange Commission. The fact that it is not publicly funded was not dispositive of its status as "official." NASD is exactly the type of body before which communication is routinely protected by the Anti-SLAPP law, the court stated. Therefore, the communication was protected under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(e)(1). Moreover, the communication independently qualified for Anti-SLAPP protection under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(e)(4) because it was in connection with an issue of public interest. The statement made to the NASD concerned conduct capable of affecting a large number of investors. Because plaintiff could not show a probability of prevailing on his defamation and interference with prospective advantage claims, the court of appeals reversed the trial court's ruling and granted defendant's Anti-SLAPP motion.

Conroy v. Spitzer (1999) 70 Cal. App. 4th 1446, 83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 443 , involved an action for libel, slander per se, intentional infliction of emotional distress and negligent infliction of emotional distress brought by plaintiff against a political rival in 1996 elections for the Orange County Board of Supervisors. The trial court granted defendants' motion to strike under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16. In affirming, the court of appeal noted that once defendant showed that his statements were acts in furtherance of his right of free speech and made in connection with a public issue, plaintiff, to defeat defendant's motion, had the burden of showing a probability of prevailing on his defamation claim which he failed to do (70 Cal. App. 4th 1446, 1450-1454) .

Monterey Plaza Hotel v. Hotel Employees & Restaurant Employees (1999) 69 Cal. App. 4th 1057, 82 Cal. Rptr. 2d 10 , involved a defamation action brought by plaintiff against a labor union and its research analyst based on a statement made by the analyst during a television newscast concerning plaintiff's firing of two of employees. The trial court granted defendants' motion to strike under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16. In affirming, the court of appeal noted the defendants carried the initial burden of establishing a prima facie showing that plaintiff's complaint arose from defendants' free speech activity. The burden then shifted to plaintiff to establish a probability that the plaintiff would prevail on the claim of defamation, i.e., make a prima facie showing of facts that would, if proved at trial, support a judgment in plaintiff's favor (69 Cal. App. 4th 1057, 1063-1064) . Plaintiff failed to make such a prima facie showing supporting its defamation claim (69 Cal. App. 4th 1057, 1064-1066) .

In Dove Audio, Inc. v. Rosenfeld, Meyer & Susman (1996) 47 Cal. App. 4th 777, 54 Cal. Rptr. 2d 830 , a law firm sent letters to various individuals in preparation of a lawsuit in which it stated that its client had been damaged by business activities of the plaintiff. Plaintiff then filed an action against the law firm for libel and interference with economic relationship. The law firm moved to strike the complaint as a SLAPP suit. The trial court granted the motion and dismissed the complaint. On appeal, plaintiff argued that its action did not fall within the statutory definition of a SLAPP suit because neither of its causes of actions related to a statement made before a legislative, executive, or judicial proceeding, or made in a place open to the public or in a public forum. However, the court of appeal held that the fact that the communication was made to other private citizens rather than to an official agency does not exclude it from the shelter of the Anti-SLAPP suit statute. The court also stated that the constitutional right to petition, which includes the act of filing litigation, covers communications preparatory to or in anticipation of the bringing of an action (47 Cal. App. 4th 777, 784) . Concluding that the trial court correctly applied Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16, the court affirmed the judgment of dismissal.

In Averill v. Superior Court (1996) 42 Cal. App. 4th 1170, 50 Cal. Rptr. 2d 62 , plaintiff, a company developing a plan for a housing shelter for battered women, filed an action for slander against an opponent of the shelter project based on comments the defendant had made to co-employees. Defendant filed a motion to strike pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16. Plaintiff argued that the action did not fall within the scope of the SLAPP statute because the allegedly slanderous comments were not made in public. The trial court denied the motion and defendant filed a petition for writ of mandate. The plaintiff's argument was founded on Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(e), which states that the SLAPP statutes protects an act in furtherance of a person's First Amendment rights, including any written or oral statement or writing made in a place open to the public or a public forum. However, the court of appeal held that even if the defendant's statements were not expressly covered under subdivision (e) of the statute, the categories there are not all inclusive because the acts identified there are preceded by the word "includes." The court concluded that it could not say that the Legislature intended to exclude private conversations from protection since the list of covered activities does not act to eliminate such conversations from protection (42 Cal. App. 4th 1170, 1175) . The Court thus issued a peremptory writ of mandate directing the trial court to vacate its order denying the motion to strike the complaint, and to enter a new order granting the motion.

In Church of Scientology v. Wollersheim (1996) 42 Cal. App. 4th 628, 49 Cal. Rptr. 2d 620 , a church filed an action to set aside a judgment the defendant had obtained against the church on the basis of newly discovered evidence. The trial court granted a defense motion to dismiss the complaint pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16. On appeal the church contended that the trial court erred because its action to set aside the judgment was not a SLAPP suit. The court of appeal agreed with the trial court. The court reasoned that Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16 applies to a cause of action against a person arising from any act of that person in furtherance of the person's right to petition in connection with a public issue, and that the right of access to the courts is an aspect of the First Amendment right to petition the government for redress of grievances. Furthermore, the church's lawsuit was consistent with a pattern of employing every means to frustrate or undermine the defendant's attempts to petition, and the court held that when one party to a lawsuit uses the litigation process to bludgeon the opponent into submission then those actions must be closely scrutinized for constitutional implications (42 Cal. App. 4th 628, 649) . The court thus affirmed the judgment of dismissal.

In Robertson v. Rodriguez (1995) 36 Cal. App. 4th 347, 42 Cal. Rptr. 2d 464 , the plaintiff appealed from a judgment striking the plaintiff's complaint and dismissing the action pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16. The court of appeal affirmed. The court held that Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16 applies to causes of action that accrued before that statute's effective date. Thus, the court rejected the plaintiff's contention that the statute was inapplicable to the plaintiff's libel claim because the cause of action arose in October, 1992, the complaint was filed in November, 1992, and the statute became effective January 1, 1995 (36 Cal. App. 4th 347, 356) .

Ludwig v. Superior Court (1995) 37 Cal. App. 4th 8, 43 Cal. Rptr. 2d 350 , involved a defendant that wished to build a discount mall in a city and had taken at least preliminary steps to do so. The plaintiff, another city, desired to have such a mall built in its city. Because of the geographic proximity of locations and their situation along the same transportation corridor, however, it would be economically advantageous for either mall not to face competition from the other. Plaintiff alleged causes of action for interference with contractual relations, interference with prospective advantage, and unfair competition (37 Cal. App. 4th 8, 11) . The crux of plaintiff's case was that, based on self interest, the defendant was behind, encouraged and instigated various third parties to oppose the development in plaintiff city by appearances at public meetings and filing two lawsuits (37 Cal. App. 4th 8, 12-13, 18) . The trial court denied the defendant's special motion to strike under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16 and the defendant sought a writ of mandate to compel the trial court to grant the motion (37 Cal. App. 4th 8, 11) . The court of appeal issued a peremptory writ holding that the plaintiff failed to show a probability of success on the merits within the scope of Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16 (37 Cal. App. 4th 8, 11, 30) . Initially, the court noted that Section 425.16 is appropriately applied to litigation involving defendant's conduct that was directed to obtaining a financial advantage. On the face of the matter, the defendant's activities qualified under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16 in that development of the city's mall with potential environmental effects such as increased traffic and impaction on natural drainage, was clearly a matter of public interest (37 Cal. App. 4th 8, 15) . The court also rejected plaintiff's arguments that the defendant could not claim the protection of the statute because he did not personally perform any of the challenged acts, citing Pacific Gas & Electric Co. v. Bear Stearns & Co. (1990) 50 Cal. 3d 1118, 1135-1136, 270 Cal. Rptr. 1 (37 Cal. App. 4th 8, 17) . Therefore, as a threshold matter, the plaintiff was seeking to hold the defendant liable for the exercise of rights protected by Section 425.16 (37 Cal. App. 4th 8, 18) . The court also rejected the plaintiff's argument that the defendant could not shelter under Section 425.16 because the statute only protects communicative conduct and that the plaintiff sought to hold the defendant liable for noncommunicative conduct. Rather, the court concluded that the defendant's activities in recruiting and encouraging the defendant's agents were communicative (37 Cal. App. 4th 8, 18-20) .

[b] Plaintiff Cannot Establish Probability of Prevailing on Claims Against Defendant

In Kemps v. Beshwate (2009) 180 Cal. App. 4th 1012, 103 Cal. Rptr. 3d 480 , a subpoenaed witness in a prior criminal case sued the attorney and investigators for the criminal defendant for abuse of process and other torts, based on her arrest for failing to appear. The trial court granted defendants' special motion to strike under Code Civ. Proc., § 425.16. The Court of Appeal affirmed, holding that the tort claims were barred by the litigation privilege [Civ. Code § 47(b)], so that plaintiff failed to demonstrate the probability of prevailing in the tort action (180 Cal. App. 4th 1012, 1018-1019) .

In Tutor-Saliba Corp. v. Herrera (2006) 136 Cal. App. 4th 604, 39 Cal. Rptr. 3d 21 , plaintiff, a contractor who had done work for the city of San Francisco, sued defendant, a city attorney, for defamation based upon comments the city attorney had made about plaintiff in a speech before the Chinese-American Democratic Club. The comments concerned ongoing litigation between plaintiff and the city. Both parties acknowledged that the case fell within the ambit of the Anti-SLAPP statute; the issue was whether plaintiff could establish a probability of prevailing on his claim. Because defendant's statements fell within the official duty privilege of Civil Code § 47(a), plaintiff could not establish a probability of prevailing (136 Cal. App. 4th 604, 619) .

The background of Conroy v. Spitzer (1999) 70 Cal. App. 4th 1446, 83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 443 is discussed under § 161.30[4][a]. In concluding that the plaintiff failed to show a probability of prevailing on the defamation action, the court noted that to establish a probability of prevailing on a defamation claim, a plaintiff has to make a prima facie showing of facts which would, if credited, support a judgment in plaintiff's favor. As a public official, plaintiff could not recover damages for defendant's statements about plaintiff's fitness for office unless plaintiff proved by clear and convincing evidence that the statements were made with actual malice, i.e., with knowledge that they were false or with reckless disregard of whether they were false or not. The factual statements made during the campaign by the defendant were true or based on reliable evidence (i.e., an Assembly investigation report and reprimand letter, newspaper articles and plaintiff's own statements) and thus defendant did not make them with actual malice. Moreover, defendant's expressions of personal opinion about plaintiff's fitness for office are not actionable (70 Cal. App. 4th 1446, 1451-1452) .

The background of Monterey Plaza Hotel v. Hotel Employees & Restaurant Employees (1999) 69 Cal. App. 4th 1057, 82 Cal. Rptr. 2d 10 , is discussed under § 161.30[4][a]. In concluding that the plaintiff failed to make a prima facie showing in its pleadings and supporting declarations to support its defamation claim, the court of appeal, quoting from Gregory v. McDonnell Douglas Corp. (1976) 17 Cal. 3d. 596, 600, 131 Cal. Rptr. 641, 552 P.2d 425 , noted that California courts early extended constitutional protection to statements relating to labor disputes provided they are not made maliciously. Similarly, the United States Supreme Court in Linn v. United Plant Guard Workers (1966) 383 U.S. 53, 86 S. Ct. 657, 15 L. Ed. 2d 582 applied the standard of New York Times Co. v. Sullivan (1964) 376 U.S. 254, 84 S. Ct. 710, 11 L. Ed. 2d 686 , formulated to protect statements made regarding public officials, to statements issued during labor controversies. This standard requires a determination of whether a statement was made with knowledge that it was false or with reckless disregard whether or not the statement was false (69 Cal. App. 4th 1057, 1064-1066) .

In Beilenson v. Superior Court (1996) 44 Cal. App. 4th 944, 52 Cal. Rptr. 2d 357 , plaintiff, a defeated candidate for political office, sued his political opponent for libel based on a campaign mailer which stated that plaintiff "ripped off" California taxpayers because he maintained a private law practice on the side while he was on the public payroll. Defendant brought a SLAPP motion to dismiss the action. The trial court denied the motion, finding that plaintiff met his burden of proof that there was a "possibility" that he would prevail. Defendant sought relief by way of extraordinary writ. The parties subsequently settled the dispute, but the court of appeal issued a decision because of the importance of the issues. The court initially held that the term "rip off" is hyperbole that is common in political debates, and was not defamatory. The court then noted that plaintiff established that there was nothing illegal or unethical in keeping his law practice while in the employ of the state. However, the court reasoned that a citizen could possess the belief that doing so violated a higher code of ethical precepts. The court held that the accusation that plaintiff committed a breach of ethics was a statement of opinion entitled to the protection of the First Amendment (44 Cal. App. 4th 944, 951-952) . Concluding that plaintiff did not establish the probability that he would prevail, the court dismissed the petition as moot.

In Matson v. Dvorak (1995) 40 Cal. App. 4th 539, 46 Cal. Rptr. 2d 880 , plaintiff sued the primary contributor to a group which had opposed plaintiff in his campaign for a political office, alleging libel and invasion of privacy based on the contents of a campaign flyer. The defendant moved to strike the complaint, and the trial court granted the motion. On appeal, plaintiff contented that he had made a sufficient prima facie showing of libel. However, plaintiff did not allege that defendant participated in preparing the mailing, knew of its contents, or knew that the charges in the mailer were false. The court of appeal concluded that one whose only contribution to a political campaign is financial, and is not involved in the preparation of campaign literature, cannot be subjected to liability in a defamation action for statements contained in that literature (40 Cal. App. 4th 539, 549) .

In Lafayette Morehouse, Inc. v. Chronicle Publishing Co. (1995) 37 Cal. App. 4th 855, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 46 , a university filed a libel complaint against a newspaper for publishing articles which described the school as a "sensuality school" and stating that it offered a "unique course in carnal knowledge." The trial court granted the newspaper's SLAPP motion to strike the cause of action. The court of appeal affirmed, rejecting plaintiff's contention that it had established a probability that it would prevail. The court stated that plaintiff failed to identify what evidence was sufficient to meet the requirements of Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16, and that its briefs did not even include a statement of facts. Furthermore, the court found all of plaintiff's examples of alleged libel to be statements which were either true or to be statements not capable of being proven true or false (37 Cal. App. 4th 855, 868-869) .

In Robertson v. Rodriguez (1995) 36 Cal. App. 4th 347, 42 Cal. Rptr. 2d 464 , the plaintiff appealed from a judgment striking plaintiff's complaint and dismissing the action pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment. The plaintiff was a city council person as were the defendants. The defendants were the proponents of a recall petition against the plaintiff. Plaintiff brought a libel action against the defendants alleging that the defendants made several libelous statements, but plaintiff's brief only challenged the trial court's ruling concerning an alleged libelous statement contained in a recall mailer. The court of appeal concluded that a plaintiff may withstand a motion to strike by demonstrating sufficient facts to establish a prima facie case (36 Cal. App. 4th 347, 352, 357) . An analysis of the pleadings and affidavits pursuant to the applicable standard disclosed that the trial court correctly concluded that the plaintiff could not establish a probability of prevailing on the plaintiff's libel claim, given the requirement of showing actual malice (36 Cal. App. 4th 347, 357-358) . The plaintiff did not make an adequate prima facie showing of actual malice, and thus, the plaintiff failed to establish a probability of prevailing on the claim (36 Cal. App. 4th 347, 357-359) .

The facts and procedural background of Ludwig v. Superior Court (1995) 37 Cal. App. 4th 8, 43 Cal. Rptr. 2d 350 , are discussed under § 161.30[4][a]. In Ludwig, the court of appeal issued a peremptory writ, holding that the plaintiff failed to show a probability of success on the merits within the scope of Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16, and therefore the trial court had erred in denying the defendant's motion to strike (37 Cal. App. 4th 8, 11, 30) . The court noted that Section 425.16 does not bar lawsuits against persons who are involved in matters of public interest. Rather it merely requires that the plaintiff show that there is a probability that the claim asserted will be successful (37 Cal. App. 4th 8, 20) . Thus, assuming the section applies, the plaintiff had the burden of establishing probability of success on the merits. In this regard, the court followed College Hospital, Inc. v. Superior Court (1994) 8 Cal. 4th 704, 34 Cal. Rptr. 2d 898 (construing Code Civ. Proc. § 425.13, which requires the plaintiff to establish a substantial probability of prevailing on a punitive damage claim against health care providers before the claim can be made) to hold that the court should not weigh the evidence in making an assessment of the claim. Rather, the determination should be based on whether the evidence introduced either negates or fails to reveal the actual existence of a triable claim. The showing must be made on competent admissible evidence within the declarant's personal knowledge, similar to the standard applied to evidentiary showings on summary judgment motions (Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b), (d)) (37 Cal. App. 4th 8, 15) . The court rejected the plaintiff's argument that the standard is too high in the context of Section 425.16, which requires the motion to be made within 60 days of service of the complaint, when the plaintiff has only had a limited opportunity to conduct discovery (37 Cal. App. 4th 8, 16) . The court then recognized the principle that generally those that petition the government are immune from liability, and that this principle applies to commercial speech and competitive activity, and even anticompetitive activity. The court then determined that the plaintiff failed to show a probability of proving that portion of its claims based on appearances at public meetings because it failed to show that the concerns expressed were without merit, as would be required to prevail (37 Cal. App. 4th 8, 21-23) . Similarly, with regard to the filing of the two earlier lawsuits that were subsequently settled, the court noted that the plaintiff had to allege that the litigation was brought without probable cause and that it was concluded in the plaintiff's favor (37 Cal. App. 4th 8, 21-25) . The court concluded that the plaintiff failed to do so and could not do so because the dismissal of the earlier lawsuits resulted from a settlement that did not reflect on the merits (37 Cal. App. 4th 8, 27-29) .

[c] Prevailing Defendant Is Entitled to Attorney's Fees and Costs

In Ketchum v. Moses (2001) 24 Cal. 4th 1122, 104 Cal. Rptr. 2d 377 , the defendant sought mandatory attorney fees after he prevailed on a motion strike allegations in a SLAPP action under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16. The trial court awarded attorney fees to the defendant's counsel, using a lodestar amount of approximately $70,000 and then applying a fee enhancement of 2.0 to that figure based on contingent risk and the exceptional quality of the legal services provided, for a total of approximately $140,000. The court later awarded supplemental attorney fees and costs of approximately $112,000. The court of appeal reversed the trial court's judgment, concluding that the trial court lacked authority to apply a fee enhancement to the lodestar figure. The Supreme Court reversed the court of appeal decision and remanded the case for recalculation of the attorney fee award. The court noted that the fee-shifting provision encourages private representation in SLAPP cases, including situations where the defendant is unable to afford fees or the lack of potential monetary damages precludes a standard contingency fee arrangement (24 Cal. 4th 1122, 1237) . The court held that by its terms, Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16 permitted the use of the lodestar adjustment method whereby the lodestar is the number of hours reasonably expended multiplied by the reasonable hourly rate, and that figure may be adjusted based on consideration of factors specific to the case, in order to fix the fee at the market rate for legal services provided. (24 Cal. 4th 1122, 1136) . The court noted that where the Legislature has determined that that lodestar adjustment approach is not appropriate, it has expressly so stated in a particular statutory provision; thus where the Anti-SLAPP provisions referred to attorney fees and costs without indicating any restrictions on how they are to be calculated, the Legislature presumably intended courts to use the prevailing lodestar method (24 Cal. 4th 1122, 1135-1136) . The Supreme Court held that the court of appeal erred in concluding that the trial court lacked authority to award a fee enhancement under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16 (24 Cal. 4th 1122, 1136) . The court rejected the contentions that permitting a fee enhancement for contingency cases under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16 would (1) encourage unmeritorious claims; (2) permit attorneys to pool the risk in contingency cases and thus, in effect, receive payment for cases in which their clients did not prevail; or (3) inevitably result in unfair double counting or a windfall to attorneys representing SLAPP defendants (24 Cal. 4th 1122, 1137-1138) . Noting that the trial court is not required to include a fee enhancement to the basic lodestar figure for contingent risk, exceptional skill or other factors, but retains discretion to do so, the Supreme Court remanded the case as to the amount of the fee enhancement (24 Cal. 4th 1122, 1138, 1142) . The court found that it was improper to impose an enhancement for contingent risk as to the attorney fees on fees accrued after the motion to strike was granted. The court also remanded on the issue of whether the enhancement factor for exceptional representation had been improperly double counted. Lastly, the court directed that any disapproval on the part of the trial court as to the plaintiff's litigation strategy (to keep the defendant in court) could not be a basis of imposing an enhancement for contingent risk or quality of representation merely for the purpose of punishing the plaintiff (24 Cal. 4th 1122, 1142) .

In Christian Research Institute v. Alnor (2008) 165 Cal. App. 4th 1315, 81 Cal. Rptr. 3d 866 , the court of appeals previously overturned the trial court's denial of defendant's Anti-SLAPP motion to strike. Defendant then filed a motion to recover his costs and attorney fees, submitting documents to support his claim that his attorneys worked 638.6 hours on the motion and ensuing appeal. The trial court found that the claimed amount (over $250,000) was excessive and awarded defendant $21,300 in attorney fees as a "reasonable" amount. Defendant appealed the trial court's determination. The court of appeals affirmed. The court explained that a moving defendant bears the burden of documenting the appropriate hours expended and hourly rates. The award should include compensation for all hours reasonably spent. The California Supreme Court has held that the trial court has broad discretion to adjust a fee downward or deny an unreasonable fee. As such, the court of appeals reviews the trial court's attorney fee award under an abuse of discretion standard. In this case, defendant failed to establish that the trial court abused its discretion. The court used the lodestar method, which is the number of hours reasonable spent multiplied by the prevailing hourly rate in the community. The trial court reasonably found that counsel had inflated the fee claim by including entries devoted to matters other than the motion to strike, seeking to recover the fees for all work done on the case. The motion involved little to no time spent on discovery, and the documents defendant provided to counsel were not voluminous. The motion was not complicated. For all of those reasons, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in its award of attorney fees (165 Cal. App. 4th 1315, 1330) .

Melbostad v. Fisher (2008) 165 Cal. App. 4th 987, 81 Cal. Rptr. 3d 354 was an action alleging violations of San Francisco's campaign finance laws. In response, defendant filed an Anti-SLAPP motion to strike, and the trial court granted defendant's motion and stated that defendant was entitled to attorney fees. Plaintiff filed a motion for reconsideration, which the court granted, but the court again granted defendant's motion. Plaintiff did not appeal the order granting the motion. Several months later, defendant filed a motion for attorney fees pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(c). After plaintiff sought to conduct discovery in connection with that motion, defendant filed a motion for protective order, which the court granted. The court also granted defendant's request for attorney fees and subsequently entered judgment. Plaintiff filed a notice of appeal from that judgment. On appeal, plaintiff conceded that because he did not appeal from the court's Anti-SLAPP ruling in a timely manner, the court was precluded from reviewing that ruling. However, the court of appeals addressed whether plaintiff's appeal from the award of attorney fees was timely. The court noted that a party prevailing on an Anti-SLAPP motion may seek attorney fees along with the motion to strike, by subsequent noticed motion or as part of a cost memorandum at the conclusion of the litigation. The court acknowledged that whether an order granting attorney fees to a defendant prevailing on Anti-SLAPP motion is independently appealable is an unresolved question. However, the court stated that the court's original order granting the Anti-SLAPP motion was a written order of dismissal of the entire action, and therefore constituted a judgment. Plaintiff therefore should have appealed the attorney fee award within 60 days of the original Anti-SLAPP ruling (165 Cal. App. 4th 987, 997) .

In Mann v. Quality Old Time Service, Inc. (2006) 139 Cal. App. 4th 328, 42 Cal. Rptr. 3d 607 , plaintiff Water Systems Support, Inc. (WSSI) sued two former contractors for violating confidentiality agreements and making false statements. Defendants filed an Anti-SLAPP motion as to four of 13 causes of action, and the trial court denied the motion. Defendants appealed, and the court of appeals reversed the trial court's holding as to plaintiffs' trade libel claim (see Mann v. Quality Old Time Service, Inc. (2004) 120 Cal. App. 4th 90, 15 Cal. Rptr. 3d 215). On remand, the trial court awarded defendants $57,000 in attorney fees as well as $1,906 in costs under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(c). The court of appeal held that while the trial court was correct in determining that defendants were prevailing parties, the court should have reduced the amount of the fee award to reflect defendants' partial success on the motion. The court stated that a defendant need not be successful in striking every claim in order to be considered a prevailing party; rather, a "party who partially prevails on an Anti-SLAPP motion must generally be considered a prevailing party unless the results of the motion were so insignificant that the party did not achieve any practical benefit from bringing the motion" (139 Cal. App. 4th 328, 340) . In this case, the results were significant in that defendants eliminated plaintiffs' trade libel cause of action, which was distinct from the defamation cause of action, and therefore narrowed the scope of the lawsuit. The court then considered the amount of the award. The trial court had reduced defendants' claimed fees by $7,065. Defendants' argument the reduction was inappropriate because the facts and law involved in the trade libel claim were identical to the facts and law in their unsuccessful claims and that it was impossible to apportion the fees. The court of appeals disagreed, holding that a defendant is not entitled, as a matter of right, to his or her entire attorney fees incurred on successful and unsuccessful claims merely because the work on the claims was overlapping. The court set forth the following procedure: the court should first determine the lodestar amount for the hours expended on the successful claims, and, if the work on the successful and unsuccessful claims was overlapping, the court should then look at the defendant's relative success in achieving his or her objective and reduce the amount accordingly (139 Cal. App. 4th 328, 345) . In this particular case, the court held a reduction of 50% of the claim fees was appropriate, taking into account (139 Cal. App. 4th 328, 346) .

Premier Medical Management Systems, Inc. v. California Ins. Guarantee (2008) 163 Cal. App. 4th 550, 77 Cal. Rptr. 3d 695 involves a lawsuit filed by a group of physicians against various worker's compensation insurers, employers and other entities alleging the defendants conspired to contest, delay and avoid payment of the physicians' bills for treating worker's compensation patients. The parties litigated and appealed defendants' Anti-SLAPP motion, and on appeal the court reversed the trial court's denial of the motion and awarded the moving defendants their fees and costs on appeal. The subject of this appeal was the amount of fees the court had awarded under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(c). The court noted that an award of attorney fees is mandatory in favor of a successful defendant on an Anti-SLAPP motion. Review of such an award is subject to an abuse of discretion standard. On appeal, plaintiffs asserted that the fees were "grossly excessive, unnecessary, duplicative, and an unreasonable number of claimed work hours" (163 Cal. App. 4th 550, 558) . However, plaintiffs filed no declarations and submitted no evidence in support of their contentions regarding the fees, instead simply claiming the fees were excessive and citing Maughan v. Google Technology, Inc. (2006) 143 Cal. App. 4th 1242, 49 Cal. Rptr. 3d 861 , in which the court of appeals upheld a trial judge's reduction of claims fees in connection with an Anti-SLAPP motion. The court stated that in Maughan and in the instant case, courts of appeal are reluctant to substitute their judgment for that of the trial judge, who is familiar with the issues raised. The court emphasized that a party challenging the amount of an attorney fee award must bear the burden of pointing to the specific items challenged, with a sufficient argument and citations to the evidence. In this case, plaintiffs did not do so and the attorney fee award was affirmed (163 Cal. App. 4th 550, 555) .

In Endres v. Moran (2006) 135 Cal. App. 4th 952, 37 Cal. Rptr. 3d 786 , defendants appealed from the trial court's denial of attorney fees under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(c) after defendants were successful in striking one of eight causes of action plaintiffs had brought against them. The court of appeals upheld the trial court's denial of attorney fees, stating that defendants sought to strike the entire complaint but instead obtained "only the most illusory victory" and did not change the factual allegations of the complaint or plaintiffs' possible recovery by striking plaintiffs' civil conspiracy cause of action (135 Cal. App. 4th 952, 954) .

The background of Conroy v. Spitzer (1999) 70 Cal. App. 4th 1446, 83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 443 is discussed under § 161.30[4][a]. In affirming the trial court's granting of defendants' motion to strike under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16, the court of appeal noted that Section 425.16(c) authorizes an award of attorney fees and costs to the prevailing party. Further, the right of a prevailing defendant to recover attorney fees and costs adequately compensates the defendant for the expense of responding to a baseless lawsuit (70 Cal. App. 4th 1446, 1454-1455) .

In Robertson v. Rodriguez (1995) 36 Cal. App. 4th 347, 42 Cal. Rptr. 2d 464 , the plaintiff appealed from a judgment striking plaintiff's complaint, dismissing the action pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16, and awarding the defendants a certain amount of attorney fees. The defendants also appealed the award of attorney fees contending that they were entitled to a larger amount. The court of appeal affirmed. The court held that Section 425.16 limits a prevailing party's recovery to reasonable attorneys fees, irrespective of whether the prevailing party is the plaintiff or the defendant (36 Cal. App. 4th 347, 360-361) . The defendants contended that the trial court erred in awarding only $15,000 rather than their incurred attorney fees and costs of $23,847. The court concluded that the trial court was not bound by the amount sought by the defendants and had discretion to award them a lesser sum. The defendants failed to show that the trial court abused its discretion and thus the attorney fees award had to be upheld (36 Cal. App. 4th 347, 362) .

[d] Activity in Anticipation of Litigation

Feldman v. 1100 Park Lane Associates (2008) 160 Cal. App. 4th 1467, 74 Cal. Rptr. 3d 1 was a landlord-tenant dispute. 1100 Park Lane filed an unlawful detainer action against the Feldmans after serving them with a three-day notice to quit. The unlawful detainer action alleged that the Feldmans were unauthorized subtenants. The Feldmans in turn filed a cross-complaint against 1100 Park Lane for retaliatory eviction, negligence, negligent misrepresentation, breach of the implied covenant of quiet enjoyment, wrongful eviction, breach of contract, and unfair business practices. 1100 Park Lane responded with an Anti-SLAPP motion, arguing the cross-complaint arose from protected activity on its part. The trial court found that all causes of action did arise from protected activity, but that the Feldmans demonstrated a probability of prevailing on all but one cause of action. Both parties appealed. On appeal, the court agreed that all causes of action arose from protected activity. Filing a lawsuit such as the unlawful detainer suit is indisputably protected activity within the meaning of the Anti-SLAPP statute. Because service of the three-day notice to quit was a legally required prerequisite to the unlawful detainer action, it also constituted protected activity. The court stated that just as communications in anticipation of litigation are protected under the litigation privilege, such statements or actions are also protected by Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16. Other statements by cross-defendants threatening unlawful detainer, made in anticipation of litigation and forming the basis for the cross-complaint, were also protected under the statute. The court held that all causes of action with the exception of the negligent misrepresentation action were based on 1100 Park Lane's protected activity in filing the unlawful detainer suit, serving the three-day notice, and communications made threatening the unlawful detainer suit (160 Cal. App. 4th 1467, 1478-1491) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 161 MOTIONS TO STRIKE: ANTI-SLAPP
PART II. FORMS
A. Supporting Special Motion to Strike

16-161 California Points & Authorities § 161.31

§ 161.31 Supporting Special Motion to Strike Action Against Constitutionally Privileged Conduct (SLAPP Suit) [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(b)]--Conduct or Speech in Connection With Official Proceedings [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(e)(1) and (2)]

[1] FORM

[This form should be combined with a general form of memorandum supporting a special motion to strike setting out the statutory basis for a special motion to strike (see § 161.30).]

THE COURT SHOULD STRIKE _____ [specify the matter identified in the notice of motion, e.g., THE COMPLAINT FOR INTERFERENCE WITH CONTRACTUAL AND PROSPECTIVE ECONOMIC RELATIONS] BECAUSE DEFENDANT'S CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHT[S] OF _____ [specify, e.g., PETITION AND FREE SPEECH] WILL BE CHILLED IF IT IS ALLOWED TO STAND AND PLAINTIFF IS ALLOWED TO CONTINUE PROSECUTING IT, AND THE CONDUCT OR SPEECH THAT IS THE SUBJECT OF THE SUIT WAS PART OF AN OFFICIAL PROCEEDING.

A. No Separate Showing of Public Significance Required if Action Arises From Statements Made Before, or in Connection With Issue Under Consideration by, Official Proceeding. A defendant moving to strike a cause of action arising from a statement made before, or in connection with an issue under consideration by, a legally authorized official proceeding need not separately demonstrate that the statement concerned an issue of public significance (Briggs v. Eden Council for Hope and Opportunity (1999) 19 Cal. 4th 1106, 1123, 81 Cal. Rptr. 2d 471, 969 P.2d 564 ; Miller v. Filter (2007) 150 Cal. App. 4th 652, 662-671, 58 Cal. Rptr. 3d 671).

B. Commercial Conduct and Speech Made In Connection With an Issue of Public Concern Under Consideration by a Legislative Body Are Subject to Protection Under Code of Civil Procedure Section 425.16. Commercial conduct and speech made in connection with an issue of public concern under consideration by a legislative body are subject to protection under Code of Civil Procedure Section 425.16. Code of Civil Procedure Section 425.16 is to be broadly construed to be applicable to any statement, writing or conduct made in connection with an issue of public concern which is under consideration or review by a legislative body or which is made in preparation for such review (

Midland Pacific Building Corp. v. King (2007) 157 Cal. App. 4th 264, 272, 68 Cal. Rptr. 3d 499 ; Mission Oaks Ranch, Ltd. v. County of Santa Barbara (1998) 65 Cal. App. 4th 713, 728, 77 Cal. Rptr. 2d 1 (disapproved on other grounds in Briggs v. Eden Council for Hope and Opportunity (1999) 19 Cal. 4th 1106, 1123 n.10, 81 Cal. Rptr. 2d 471, 969 P.2d 564).

[Optional] C. Not All Speech By A Business Enterprise Constitutes "Commercial Speech." Not all speech by a business enterprise constitutes "commercial speech." Business-entity speakers have a First Amendment right to express themselves on social and political issues (Mendoza v. ADP Screening & Selection Services, Inc. (2010) 182 Cal. App. 4th 1644, 1652-1653, 107 Cal. Rptr. 3d 294 ; see, e.g., First National Bank of Boston v. Bellotti (1978) 435 U.S. 765, 98 S. Ct. 1407, 55 L.Ed.2d 707). Speech does not lose its constitutional protection because it is undertaken for profit, and the fact that a party seeks to make a profit from its speech is not constitutionally significant (Mendoza v. ADP Screening & Selection Services, Inc. (2010) 182 Cal. App. 4th 1644, 1653, 107 Cal. Rptr. 3d 294 ; see Guglielmi v. Spelling-Goldberg Productions (1979) 25 Cal. 3d 860, 868, 160 Cal. Rptr. 352, 603 P.2d 454).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form, combined with the appropriate points and authorities contained in § 161.30, may be submitted in support of a special motion to strike the whole or any part of a complaint or cross-complaint setting forth a cause of action arguably arising out of (1) any written or oral statement or writing made before a legislative, executive, or judicial proceeding, or any other official proceeding authorized by law; or (2) any written or oral statement or writing made in connection with an issue under consideration or review by a legislative, executive, or judicial body, or any other official proceeding authorized by law.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Separate Showing of Public Significance Required if Action Arises From Statements Made Before, or in Connection With Issue Under Consideration by, Official Proceeding

Plaintiffs in Briggs v. Eden Council for Hope and Opportunity (1999) 19 Cal. 4th 1106, 81 Cal. Rptr. 2d 471, 969 P.2d 564 , owned residential rental properties. The defendant (ECHO) was a nonprofit corporation, partly funded by city and county grants, that counseled tenants and mediated landlord-tenant disputes. ECHO provided assistance to tenants of the plaintiffs in filing a discrimination complaint with the Department of Housing and Development and in prosecuting a small claims suit against the plaintiffs. Plaintiffs, alleging that ECHO employees referred to one of them as racist and that ECHO directors had discussed whether one of the plaintiffs was mentally unbalanced, brought suit for defamation and intentional and negligent infliction of emotional distress. ECHO filed a special motion to strike the complaint pursuant to the Anti-SLAPP statute. The trial court granted the motion and dismissed the complaint. On plaintiff's appeal, the court of appeal reversed, and the Supreme Court granted ECHO's petition for review.

The Supreme Court reversed the court of appeal. The Court recognized that the courts of appeal were split on the question whether a defendant moving to strike a cause of action arising from a statement made before, or in connection with an issue under consideration by, a legally authorized official proceeding must separately demonstrate that the statement concerned an issue of public significance (19 Cal. 4th 1106, 1113) . Analyzing the statutory language and the Legislature's 1997 amendment of Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16, which expressly rejected the narrow view, the court held that a defendant need not separately demonstrate that the statement concerned an issue of public significance in that situation (19 Cal. 4th 1106, 1113-1121) . To the extent they hold to the contrary, the Court disapproved Linsco/Private Ledger, Inc. v. Investors Arbitration Services, Inc. (1996) 50 Cal. App. 4th 1633, 1639-1640, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 613 , Ericsson GE Mobile Communications, Inc. v. C.S.I. Telecommunications Engineers (1996) 49 Cal. App. 4th 1591, 57 Cal. Rptr. 2d 491 , Zhao v. Wong (1996) 48 Cal. App. 4th 1114, 55 Cal. Rptr. 2d 909 , and Mission Oaks Ranch, Ltd. v. County of Santa Barbara (1998) 65 Cal. App. 4th 713, 77 Cal. Rptr. 2d 1 (19 Cal. 4th 1106, 1123 n.10

).

Because in the case before it, the plaintiffs' causes of action all arose from ECHO's statements or writings made in connection with issues under consideration or review by official bodies (HUD or the courts), it was not necessary to consider whether ECHO's statements in fact concerned issues of public significance (19 Cal. 4th 1106, 1115) .

Miller v. Filter (2007) 150 Cal. App. 4th 652, 58 Cal. Rptr. 3d 671 arose out of a statutorily-sanctioned contractual agreement authorizing attorneys from the California District Attorneys Association (CDAA) to prosecute a Sierra County mine and mine owner for safety violations resulting in a death on behalf of the District Attorney of Sierra County. Following dismissal of the criminal charges, the mine and mine owner sued the CDAA and its employees for malicious prosecution, intentional interference with economic advantage, intentional and negligent infliction of emotional distress, and negligent employment and supervision. The CDAA filed a special motion to strike, contending the action arose from constitutionally protected activity and that plaintiffs could not show a probability of success because, as prosecutors, the CDAA employees were entitled to immunity. The trial court denied the motion, holding the CDAA employees' were not entitled to protection under the Anti-SLAPP statute.

The court of appeal reversed the trial court's decision. Plaintiffs contended that defendants were not entitled to the protections of the Anti-SLAPP statute because the Sierra County attorney had failed to file the CDAA attorneys' appointments with the county clerk, as required by the statute authorizing the prosecution. Therefore, plaintiffs reasoned, the prosecution of the mine and mine owner was illegal as a matter of law and not entitled to Anti-SLAPP protection. The court of appeals disagreed, stating that defendants' actions as district attorneys prosecuting the mine and mine owner was not the type of conduct that was undeserving of Anti-SLAPP protection simply because the Sierra County attorney had not complied with a "ministerial" duty (150 Cal. App. 4th 652, 662) . Defendants' actions in filing a criminal action against the mine and mine owner and presenting evidence to the grand jury were within the scope of Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(e) as statements or writings made in official proceedings or in connection with issues under consideration or review by judicial bodies or proceedings. The filing and maintenance of litigation is protected activity under the Anti-SLAPP statute, and because defendants were entitled to immunity, plaintiffs could not show a probability of success on the merits (150 Cal. App. 4th 652, 666, 671) .

[b] Commercial Conduct and Speech Made in Connection with an Issue Of Public Concern Under Consideration By a Legislative Body are Subject to Protection Under Code Of Civil Procedure Section 425.16.

In Midland Pacific Building Corp. v. King (2007) 157 Cal. App. 4th 264, 68 Cal. Rptr. 3d 499 , defendants, the Kings, owned 27 acres of property in San Luis Obispo County and entered into a contract with plaintiff, Midland, for the sale of that property. As a part of the contract, the Kings agreed to obtain city approval of a specific plan and vesting tentative tract map at their own expense. Escrow was not to close until the Kings had obtained all approvals necessary for the construction of a subdivision in substantial conformance with the draft specific plan and draft vesting tentative tract map. Several years later, Midland sued the Kings for breach of contract and fraud, based on the fact that the Kings attempted to obtain approval for a high density tract map rather than the map initially agreed upon. In response, the Kings filed a special motion to strike, arguing the action arose from their presentation of the high density map to the city and therefore their acts constituted statements made before a legislative body or in an official proceeding, or in connection with an issue under consideration by such a body, within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(e)(1) and (2). The trial court denied the motion, holding the statute was not intended to protect "purely business transactions" (157 Cal. App. 4th 264, 272) .

The court of appeals reversed, stating that Navellier v. Sletten (2002) 29 Cal. 4th 82 stated the Anti-SLAPP statute does not categorically exclude any particular type of action and that the focus on the statute is the activity giving rise to the action, not the form of the plaintiff's cause of action (157 Cal. App. 4th 264, 272). The breach of contract action was clearly based on the Kings' submission of the map to the City Planning Commission and therefore the acts were in the course of an official proceeding. Because plaintiff was able to show a probability of prevailing, however, the court of appeals affirmed the trial court's ruling (157 Cal. App. 4th 264, 275) .

In Mission Oaks Ranch, Ltd. v. County of Santa Barbara (1998) 65 Cal. App. 4th 713, 77 Cal. Rptr. 2d 1 , a developer, who was disgruntled with the findings of a draft environmental impact report (DEIR) prepared by a consultant the county had hired to evaluate the developer's proposed project, hired its own consultant who prepared and submitted a report that contradicted the DEIR. The county's final environmental impact report (FEIR) adhered to the DEIR, and the county's planning commission recommended denial of the project. The board of supervisors, after holding four hearings, denied the project proposal and adopted findings and conclusions in support of its decision. Ultimately, the developer sued the county, the county's consultant, and others over the denial of project approval. Except for a Williamson Act (Gov. Code § 51200 et seq.) claim concerning agricultural preserves, the trial court sustained defendants' demurrers without leave to amend and granted the consultants' special motion to strike pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16. Plaintiff then dismissed the Williamson Act claim, and the trial court entered judgment in favor of the defendants. Pursuant to stipulation of the parties, the court awarded attorney's fees and costs to the individual defendants, but denied attorney fees to the County. Plaintiff appealed, and the defendant county cross-appealed regarding attorney's fees (65 Cal. App. 4th 713, 718-720) .

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment in all respects except the denial of attorney's fees and costs to the county and remanded the cause to the trial court to determine and award reasonable attorney's fees to the county at trial and on appeal (65 Cal. App. 4th 713, 730-731). Initially the court held that administrative mandamus is the exclusive means by which to attack compliance with the California Environmental Quality Act, and that plaintiff could not sue the county for damages for failure to prepare a proper EIR. Moreover, the action against the county was untimely (65 Cal. App. 4th 713, 722). Furthermore, the county owed no duty to provide an EIR acceptable to the plaintiff (65 Cal. App. 4th 713, 723-724) . The court then disposed of other claims against the consultants concluding under the facts that the consultant defendants could not be held liable for negligence and that plaintiff's allegations did not support a claim for misrepresentation or a conspiracy to commit tortious conduct (65 Cal. App. 4th 713, 724-727) . Moreover, plaintiff's tort claims could not be prosecuted because the privilege of Civ. Code § 47 applies to the preparation and certification of an EIR (65 Cal. App. 4th 713, 726-727) .

Regarding the special motion to strike under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16, the court noted that Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16 applies to the defendants. The court rejected plaintiff's argument that because it sued the consultant for conduct as a paid environmental consultant SLAPP does not apply. Commercial conduct and speech made in connection with an issue of public concern under consideration by a legislature body are subject to SLAPP. Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16 is to be broadly construed to be applicable to any statement, writing or conduct made in connection with an issue of public concern which is under consideration or review by a legislative body or which is made in preparation for such review (65 Cal. App. 4th 713, 727-728) . The court also rejected plaintiff's argument that the instant situation was akin to the one presented in Ericsson GE Mobile Communications, Inc. v. C.S.I. Telecommunications Engineers (1996) 49 Cal. App. 4th 1591, 57 Cal. Rptr. 2d 491 , which simply involved two companies competing for a contract to provide a product in the absence of public participation or concern. The instant case differed from Ericsson in that the contracts before it directly concerned the preparation of an environmental impact report for required public hearings concerning the potential development of projects. Ericsson merely involved private concerns regarding the sale of a telecommunications system without public hearings or interest (65 Cal. App. 4th 713, 728-729) .

In the instant case, defendants met their burden of proof to establish a prima facie case showing that SLAPP applies to the facts alleged, and the burden to establish the probability of success on the merits of its allegations shifted to the plaintiff. Plaintiff did not and could not bear its burden to show the probability of success on the merits of the causes of action it alleged. Plaintiff sought to coerce the county and the consultants to change their views on its development proposal. SLAPP is designed to quickly put an end to suits such as this one (65 Cal. App. 4th 713, 729) .

Mission Oaks has been disapproved by Briggs v. Eden Council for Hope and Opportunity (1999) 19 Cal. 4th 1106, 1123 n.10, 81 Cal. Rptr. 2d 471, 969 P.2d 564 , to the extent it may suggest that a defendant moving to strike a cause of action arising from a statement made before, or in connection with an issue under consideration by, a legally authorized official proceeding (Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(e)(1), (2)) must separately demonstrate that the statement concerned an issue of public interest.

[c] Not All Speech By A Business Enterprise Constitutes "Commercial Speech"

The facts and procedural background of Mendoza v. ADP Screening & Selection Services, Inc. (2010) 182 Cal. App. 4th 1644, 107 Cal. Rptr. 3d 294 , are set forth in § 160.40A[3][c], below. The plaintiff alleged that defendant company's accessing of the Megan's Law Website (MLW), compiling information disclosed on the MLW, and providing the information for a fee to plaintiff's prospective employer, a client, as a result of which plaintiff was allegedly not hired, was not protected activity within the meaning of the anti-SLAPP statute. The Court of Appeals agreed with the trial court that defendant made its requisite prima facie showing that, in publishing information disclosed on the MLW, it engaged in constitutionally protected speech on a subject of public interest. The court found first that, as a foundational, broad-based proposition, providing employment-screening reports is a constitutionally founded, protected activity within the meaning of the anti-SLAPP statute. Defendant's conduct was not illegal or criminal under Pen. Code § 290.46(j), providing that, if a person used information disclosed on the MLW to commit another crime, the punishment for the other crime was increased, because § 290.46(j) was essentially an enhancement statute and did not define a substantive crime, and there was no other language in the MLW statute providing that a violation of any other part of § 290.46 was a misdemeanor or a felony. Thus, defendant's underlying conduct involved speech activity in furtherance of its First Amendment rights, and defendant did not concede that its underlying conduct was criminal, nor did the evidence conclusively establish that its conduct was criminal (182 Cal. App. 4th 1644, 1653-1655) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] No Separate Showing of Public Significance Required If Action Arises From Statements Made Before, or in Connection With Issue Under Consideration by, Official Proceeding

Dible v. Haight Ashbury Free Clinics (2008) 170 Cal. App. 4th 843, 88 Cal. Rptr. 3d 464 was a defamation action brought by plaintiff after the termination of her employment from the defendant organization. Plaintiff, who was a social worker in jail psychiatric services, was terminated after one of the inmates she worked with committed suicide. Plaintiff alleged that she was told her negligence resulted in the inmate's death, and that statements to this effect were made to the Employment Development Department in connection with her unemployment insurance claim. Plaintiff's first amended complaint alleged causes of action for wrongful termination, declaratory relief, defamation, interference with business opportunity and unfair business practices. Following defendant's demurrer, the only cause of action remaining was for defamation. Defendant filed an Anti-SLAPP motion to the defamation complaint, and the trial court granted the motion. Plaintiff appealed. The court of appeals affirmed. Because the allegedly defamatory statements were made in the court of the unemployment insurance investigation, they qualified as part of an "official proceeding" within the meaning of the Anti-SLAPP statute. The court also found that plaintiff could not establish a probability of success on her defamation claim (170 Cal. App. 4th 843, 855) .

In Sipple v. Foundation for Nat. Progress (1999) 71 Cal. App. 4th 226, 83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 677 , plaintiff, a nationally known political consultant, brought an action for libel, intentional interference with contract, and intentional interference with prospective economic advantage concerning an article that focused on a custody dispute between the plaintiff and his first wife. The trial court granted defendants' motion to strike under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16. In affirming, the court of appeal noted with regard to Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(e)(1) and (2) that in crafting the statute, the Legislature equated public issue with the authorized official proceeding to which it connects. Thus, in making a motion to strike, a defendant need not demonstrate the existence of a public issue for purposes of Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(e)(1) and (2) (71 Cal. App. 4th 226, 237) . The court concluded that the custody dispute came within Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(e)(1) as a legislative, executive, or judicial proceeding, or any other official proceeding authorized by law, and hence the article insofar as it discussed statements made during the deposition, or at the hearing at the custody trial, fell within the ambit of subsection (e)(1) and defendants did not need to separately show that these statements concerned an issue of public interest (71 Cal. App. 4th 226, 237-238) . The plaintiff also contended that wife-beating allegations gathered from interviews that were not part of the custody hearing fell within Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(e)(3) and that the article should not be privileged because wife-beating is not an issue of public interest. The court rejected this argument noting that domestic violence is an extremely important public issue (71 Cal. App. 4th 226, 238) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 161 MOTIONS TO STRIKE: ANTI-SLAPP
PART II. FORMS
A. Supporting Special Motion to Strike

16-161 California Points & Authorities § 161.32

§ 161.32 Supporting Special Motion to Strike Action Against Constitutionally Privileged Conduct (SLAPP Suit) [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(b)]--Malicious Prosecution Action

[1] FORM

[This form should be combined with a general form of memorandum of points and authorities supporting a special motion to strike setting out the statutory basis for a special motion to strike (see § 161.30).]

THE COURT SHOULD STRIKE _____ [specify the matter identified in the notice of motion, e.g., THE COMPLAINT FOR INTERFERENCE WITH CONTRACTUAL AND PROSPECTIVE ECONOMIC RELATIONS] BECAUSE DEFENDANT'S CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHT[S] OF _____ [specify, e.g., PETITION AND FREE SPEECH] WILL BE CHILLED IF IT IS ALLOWED TO STAND AND PLAINTIFF IS ALLOWED TO CONTINUE PROSECUTING IT, AND THE MALICIOUS PROSECUTION ACTION THAT FILED IS SUBJECT TO THE ANTI-SLAPP MOTION TO STRIKE.

A. Malicious Prosecution Actions Are Subject to Anti-SLAPP Motion to Strike. Code of Civil Procedure Section 425.16 is not ambiguous with respect to whether its protection of "any act" furthering protected rights encompasses suing for malicious prosecution, and nothing in the statute itself categorically excludes any particular type of action from its operation (Jarrow Formulas, Inc. v. LaMarche (2003) 31 Cal. 4th 728, 735, 3 Cal. Rptr. 3d 636, 74 P.3d 737). The Anti-SLAPP motion to strike will assess whether the termination of the prior action was in one party's favor (StaffPro, Inc. v. Elite Show Services, Inc. (2006) 136 Cal. App. 4th 1392, 1401-1402, 39 Cal. Rptr. 3d 682). The Anti-SLAPP motion to strike also will assess the probability of the plaintiff prevailing on the claim of malicious prosecution, i.e. the initial action was brought without probable cause and was initiated with malice (Paiva v. Nichols (2008) 168 Cal. App. 4th 1007, 1018, 85 Cal. Rptr. 3d 838).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form, combined with the appropriate points and authorities contained in § 161.30, may be submitted in support of a special motion to strike the whole or any part of a complaint or cross-complaint stating a cause of action for malicious prosecution.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Malicious Prosecution Actions Are Subject to Anti-SLAPP Motion to Strike

In Jarrow Formulas, Inc. v. LaMarche (2003) 31 Cal. 4th 728, 3 Cal. Rptr. 3d 636, 74 P.3d 737 , plaintiff Jarrow Formulas hired defendant LaMarche to design labels for its products. A dispute arose over the ownership of some artwork, and Jarrow Formulas sued LaMarche for rescission and fraud. LaMarche cross-complained for slander and interference with economic advantage. Jarrow obtained summary judgment and dismissal of the cross-complaint, but LaMarche prevailed on the original complaint. Jarrow then filed a malicious prosecution action against LaMarche, claiming LaMarche and her attorney Brutzkus had filed the cross-complaint maliciously and without probable cause. LaMarche and Brutzkus moved to strike the malicious prosecution claim pursuant to the Anti-SLAPP statute. The trial court denied the motion, ruling that malicious prosecution actions are not subject to Anti-SLAPP scrutiny. Defendants appealed. The court of appeal reversed, holding that plaintiff's malicious prosecution action arose from acts in furtherance of LaMarche's and Brutzkus's free speech and petition rights and that Jarrow did not meet its burden of establishing a probability of success on the merits. The Supreme Court granted review to address the issue of whether a malicious prosecution action is subject to the Anti-SLAPP statute.

The Supreme Court noted that resolution of an Anti-SLAPP motion requires the court to first decide whether the defendant has made a threshold showing that the challenged cause of action is one arising from protected activity, meaning in furtherance of the defendant's right of petition or free speech under the U.S. or California Constitution in connection with a public issue. If the court finds such a showing has been made, it then determines whether the plaintiff has demonstrated a probability of prevailing on the claim (31 Cal. 4th 728, 733) . The trial court had decided defendants did not meet their burden on the "arising from" prong and did not reach the second prong. The appellate court reversed on this prong and found in favor of defendants on the second prong as well. In its review of the appellate court's decision regarding the first prong, the Supreme Court stated that under the plain language interpretation embraced in cases such as Briggs v. Eden Council for Hope & Opportunity (1999) 19 Cal. 4th 1106, 81 Cal. Rptr. 2d 471, 969 P.2d 564 and Navellier v. Sletten (2002) 29 Cal. 4th 82, 124 Cal. Rptr. 2d 530, 52 P.3d 703 , malicious prosecution actions clearly fall within the purview of Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16 (31 Cal. 4th 728, 733-744) . However, plaintiff argued there was no evidence the Legislature intended for the Anti-SLAPP statute to apply to malicious prosecution claims. The court rejected this contention, noting that the Legislature made its intentions clear by the plain language of the statute and by its command that "this section shall be construed broadly" (31 Cal. 4th 728, 735). Furthermore, the Legislature specifically excluded certain actions and it chose not to exclude malicious prosecution actions. For these and other reasons, the California Supreme Court declined to create a categorical exemption from the Anti-SLAPP statute for malicious prosecution actions (31 Cal. 4th 728, 741).

The court then ruled on the second prong of the Anti-SLAPP test, the probability of prevailing. Plaintiffs argued that a summary judgment in their favor in the underlying matter was sufficient to meet the burden under the second prong of the Anti-SLAPP test in the malicious prosecution matter. In other words, they argued that the fact that defendants' lawsuit had been resolved on summary judgment was sufficient to meet their burden to show a probability of prevailing on their malicious prosecution claim. The court disagreed, stating that summary judgment on the underlying claim does not establish a lack of probable cause as a matter of law. A loss on summary judgment does not necessarily establish that an action lacked probably cause when filed. Additionally, a summary judgment for the defense does not establish the malice element of the malicious prosecution tort. The court thus affirmed the appellate court's judgment that plaintiffs did not meet their burden on the probability of prevailing prong (31 Cal. 4th 728, 743) .

In StaffPro, Inc. v. Elite Show Services, Inc. (2006) 136 Cal. App. 4th 1392, 39 Cal. Rptr. 3d 682 , Elite had sued StaffPro, one its competitors, alleging three causes of action related to unlawful business practices. Elite dismissed the third cause of action before trial, and the action went to trial on the first and second cause of action. The court granted judgment on the second cause of action pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 631.8. At the end of trial, the court granted relief to Elite on the first cause of action. StaffPro then sued Elite for malicious prosecution, and Elite filed an Anti-SLAPP motion in response. The trial court granted Elite's motion.

On appeal, the issue was whether StaffPro could show a probability of prevailing on its malicious prosecution claim. The court of appeals agreed that StaffPro could not carry its burden with respect to the "favorable termination" element of the malicious prosecution cause of action. Because the court's order in the first action required StaffPro to take a number of remedial actions, it was of no consequence that the court's order was more favorable to StaffPro than StaffPro's previous settlement offer had been. StaffPro therefore failed to show a probability of success on its malicious prosecution claim (136 Cal. App. 4th 1392, 1401-1402) .

In Paiva v. Nichols (2008) 168 Cal. App. 4th 1007, 85 Cal. Rptr. 3d 838 , plaintiff homeowner brought a malicious prosecution claim against defendants, his neighbors and their lawyer, based on a prior trespass suit that was ultimately unsuccessful, despite the grant of a preliminary injunction. The trial court denied defendants' motions to strike under Code Civ. Proc., § 425.16. The appellate court reversed the order denying defendants' Anti-SLAPP motions and remanded the matter for the trial court to enter an order granting the motions to strike, and to conduct proceedings as appropriate to determine costs and reasonable attorney fees, including attorney fees on appeal, to be awarded to defendants. The appellate court held that defendants' underlying trespass suit was unquestionably protected activity under the Anti-SLAPP statute and that plaintiff failed to meet his burden of showing a probability that he would prevail in his malicious prosecution action. Although defendants did not prevail at trial, their trespass suit was a claim that succeeded at a hearing on the merits for purposes of establishing probable because they were granted a preliminary injunction. The preliminary injunction conclusively established probable cause to initiate the prior suit, irrespective of the fact that the order for the preliminary injunction never became legally effective because of defendants' failure to post a bond. The court also found that there was no basis for concluding that the injunction was procured through fraud. Finally, plaintiff failed to demonstrate that new facts or new law arose after the trespass suit was initiated but before it was concluded that would have indicated to defendants that their suit was without merit; accordingly, there was no basis for the contention that the prior suit, although initiated with probable cause, was later maintained without probable cause (168 Cal. App. 4th 1007, 1017-1038) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 161 MOTIONS TO STRIKE: ANTI-SLAPP
PART II. FORMS
A. Supporting Special Motion to Strike

16-161 California Points & Authorities § 161.33

§ 161.33 Supporting Special Motion to Strike Action Against Constitutionally Privileged Conduct (SLAPP Suit) [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(b)]--Statement or Writing Made in Public Forum or in Connection With an Issue of Public Interest [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(e)(3) and (4)]

[1] FORM

[This form should be combined with a general form of memorandum of points and authorities supporting a special motion to strike setting out the statutory basis for a special motion to strike (see § 161.30).]

THE COURT SHOULD STRIKE _____ [specify the matter identified in the notice of motion, e.g., THE COMPLAINT FOR INTERFERENCE WITH CONTRACTUAL AND PROSPECTIVE ECONOMIC RELATIONS] BECAUSE DEFENDANT'S CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHT[S] OF _____ [specify, e.g., PETITION AND FREE SPEECH] WILL BE CHILLED IF IT IS ALLOWED TO STAND AND PLAINTIFF IS ALLOWED TO CONTINUE PROSECUTING IT, AND STATEMENTS OR WRITINGS THAT ARE THE SUBJECT OF THE SUIT WERE MADE IN A PUBLIC FORUM AND/OR WERE IN CONNECTION WITH AN ISSUE OF PUBLIC INTEREST.

A. The Conduct at Issue Concerned a Matter of Widespread Public Interest. Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(e)(4) includes the conduct of private persons and entities when the subject is a matter of widespread public interest (Nygard, Inc. v. Uusi-Kerttula (2007) 159 Cal. App. 4th 1027, 1042, 72 Cal. Rptr. 3d 210 ; McGarry v. University of San Diego (2007) 154 Cal. App. 4th 97, 110, 64 Cal. Rptr. 3d 467 ; Morrow v. Los Angeles Unified School Dist. (2007) 149 Cal. App. 4th 1424, 1436-1437, 57 Cal. Rptr. 3d 885 ; Integrated Healthcare Holdings, Inc. v. Fitzgibbons (2006) 140 Cal. App. 4th 515, 523, 44 Cal. Rptr. 3d 517).

B. The Conduct at Issue Concerned an Issue of Interest to a Definable Portion of the Public and Occurred in the Context of an Ongoing Controversy, Dispute, or Discussion. The public interest requirement of Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(e)(4) is satisfied when the conduct at issue concerns an issue of interest to a limited, but definable portion of the public and the activity occurs in the context of an ongoing controversy, dispute, or discussion (Hailstone v. Martinez (2008) 169 Cal. App. 4th 728, 736-739, 87 Cal. Rptr. 3d 347 ; Ruiz v. Harbor View Community Association (2005) 134 Cal. App. 4th 1456, 1468, 37 Cal. Rptr. 3d 133).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form, combined with the appropriate points and authorities contained in § 161.30, may be submitted in support of a special motion to strike the whole or any part of a complaint or cross-complaint setting forth a cause of action arising out of (3) any written or oral statement or writing made in a place open to the public or a public forum in connection with an issue of public interest; (4) or any other conduct in furtherance of the exercise of the constitutional right of petition or the constitutional right of free speech in connection with a public issue or an issue of public interest.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] The Conduct at Issue Concerned a Matter of Widespread Public Interest

In Nygard, Inc. v. Uusi-Kerttula (2007) 159 Cal. App. 4th 1027, 72 Cal. Rptr. 3d 210 , the defendant ended his employment with plaintiff company in 2005. After terminating his employment with the company, defendant gave an interview to a magazine about his former working conditions, painting the employer in an unflattering light. The company filed a suit against defendant, the magazine, and the publisher for breach of contract, breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, intentional interference with contract, breach of the duty of loyalty, and defamation. All defendants filed Anti-SLAPP motions, claiming that the magazine article addressed an issue of public interest. The court granted the motion on the basis that the company's founder, Peter Nygard, was an internationally known public figure and therefore the activity giving rise to the lawsuit fell within Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(e)(3). Additionally, plaintiff failed to demonstrate a probability of prevailing on its claims.

The court of appeals affirmed. The court agreed that the magazine article at issue in the case fell within the ambit of Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(e)(3). The court noted that courts of appeal have disagreed as to whether a newspaper is a public forum within the meaning of the statute. In Lafayette Morehouse, Inc. v. Chronicle Publishing Co. (1995) 37 Cal. App. 4th 855, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 46 , the court held a newspaper was not a public forum because members of the public cannot freely publish their opinions in a newspaper. By contract, in Damon v. Ocean Hills Journalism Club (2000) 85 Cal. App. 4th 468, 102 Cal. Rptr. 2d 205 , the court held that the homeowners' association newsletter was a public forum because it was "a vehicle for communicating a message about public matters." The Nygard court concluded that magazines and newspapers are public for a. The statute provides that the statement may be made in a "place open to the public" or a public forum, suggesting the two are not one and the same. Therefore, a newspaper need not be open to the public to be considered a public forum. With regard to the "issue of public interest," plaintiff contended that "celebrity gossip" was excluded by the Anti-SLAPP statute. The court disagreed, noting that the Anti-SLAPP statute is mandated to be broadly interpreted and defining an issue of public interest as "any issue in which the public is interested." The fact that there is extensive interest in Peter Nygard among the Finnish public was sufficient to render the magazine article an issue of public interest (159 Cal. App. 4th 1027, 1042) .

The libel and slander lawsuit in McGarry v. University of San Diego (2007) 154 Cal. App. 4th 97, 64 Cal. Rptr. 3d 467 arose out of the university's termination of plaintiff McGarry as head football coach. Plaintiff's defamation claims arose out of a newspaper article reporting on the reasons for plaintiff's termination as well as statements made during a meeting with the parents of football players after the termination. Defendants filed a special motion to strike the defamation action, arguing the action arose from protected conduct in connection with an issue of public interest (Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(e)(4)). The trial court agreed, and granted defendant's motion.

The court of appeal affirmed. The reason for plaintiff's termination was an issue of importance to a substantial segment of the public in San Diego. Citing Terry v. Davis Community Church (2005) 131 Cal. App. 4th 1534, 33 Cal. Rptr. 3d 145 that Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16 does not provide a definition for "an issue of public interest," the court adopted a few guiding principles may be derived from decisional authorities. First, "public interest" does not equate with mere curiosity. Second, a matter of public interest should be something of concern to a substantial number of people. Thus, a matter of concern to the speaker and a relatively small, specific audience is not a matter of public interest. Third, there should be some degree of closeness between the challenged statements and the asserted public interest; the assertion of a broad and amorphous public interest is not sufficient. Fourth, the focus of the speaker's conduct should be the public interest rather than a mere effort "to gather ammunition for another round of [private] controversy". Finally, "those charged with defamation cannot, by their own conduct, create their own defense by making the claimant a public figure." A person cannot turn otherwise private information into a matter of public interest simply by communicating it to a large number of people (154 Cal. App. 4th 97, 110) . The appellate court concluded the coach was a public figure in San Diego, and his termination was a matter of widespread public interest because his termination was of concern to a substantial number of people, and it is difficult to imagine a greater "closeness" between the topic of the public interest (the termination) and the challenged statements (the reasons for the termination). Indeed, the focus of the speakers' statements were to respond to the public interest "rather than a mere effort 'to gather ammunition for another round of [private] controversy.' " Additionally, the defendants did not by their conduct create a defense by thrusting the couch into the public eye; his role as head coach of a local university's football team already made him a public figure, and his employment termination was already a topic of widespread public interest (154 Cal. App. 4th 97, 110-111) .

In Morrow v. Los Angeles Unified School Dist. (2007) 149 Cal. App. 4th 1424, 57 Cal. Rptr. 3d 885 , a high school principal sued the school district, its superintendent, and a local superintendent for invasion of privacy and defamation as a result of comments the superintendents made to the media about the principal's inability to competently handle various violent incidents on campus. The superintendent had told the Los Angeles Times that the district planned to replace the principal based on a need for stronger leadership and that the principal's handling of the violence had accelerated the decision to replace him. In response to the principal's lawsuit, defendants filed an Anti-SLAPP motion, and the trial court granted the motion. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeals affirmed. On appeal, plaintiff claimed the information divulged to the Los Angeles Times regarding the school violence and his handling of it were private personnel details. The court disagreed, stating that the school violence incidents were matters of public interest, and that the article only mentioned personnel issues to the extent they were relevant to the broader issue of the school violence. The Times had run approximately seven articles regarding the incidents, and the subject was a matter of city-wide concern. Therefore, defendants' conduct in speaking to the press was entitled to the protection of Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16 (149 Cal. App. 4th 1424, 1436-1437) .

Integrated Healthcare Holdings, Inc. v. Fitzgibbons (2006) 140 Cal. App. 4th 515, 44 Cal. Rptr. 3d 517 was a lawsuit for defamation, intentional and negligent interference with a contractual relationship, breach of contract, breach of the duty of good faith and fair dealing, and unfair competition based on an e-mail message that defendant sent. The controversy arose out of plaintiff's purchase of four Orange County hospitals. Both the county and the California Senate had held public hearings regarding plaintiff's proposed acquisition of the hospitals due to concerns about plaintiff's financial health. Defendant was a doctor at one of the four hospitals. Following plaintiff's purchase of the hospitals, which included an agreement that the medical staff at defendant's hospital would express public support for plaintiff's acquisition of the hospitals, one of plaintiff's lenders served plaintiff with a notice of default and this was reported in the Orange County Register. Defendant then sent an e-mail to medical executive committee members at his hospital expressing concern about plaintiff's financial status and the threat of bankruptcy. Plaintiff sued defendant based on this e-mail message. In return, defendant filed an Anti-SLAPP motion. The trial court denied the motion, and defendant appealed (140 Cal. App. 4th 515, 521) .

The court of appeal reversed, holding that defendant met his burden of demonstrating that the e-mail concerned an issue of public interest within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(e). The court noted that plaintiff's acquisition of the hospitals was the subject of public hearings by both the county and the State Senate and had been discussed in numerous newspaper articles. The court stated that the phrase " 'issue of public interest' has been broadly construed by courts to include not only governmental matters, but also private conduct that impacts a broad segment of society and/or that affects a community in a manner similar to that of a governmental entity" (140 Cal. App. 4th 515, 523 , quoting Damon v. Ocean Hills Journalism Club (2000) 85 Cal. App. 4th 468, 479, 102 Cal. Rptr. 2d 205). The court explained that when an issue is not a matter of widespread public interest, but rather is of interest to a limited, but definable portion of the public, the activity must occur in the context of an ongoing controversy, dispute or discussion under the standard set forth in Du Charme v. International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers (2003) 110 Cal. App. 4th 107, 1 Cal. Rptr. 3d 501 and Rivero v. American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees, AFL-CIO (2003) 105 Cal. App. 4th 913, 130 Cal. Rptr. 2d 81 . In this case, the financial survival of four hospitals within the county was a matter of widespread public interest, and therefore no ongoing controversy was required. Because plaintiff was unable to establish a probability of prevailing on any of its claims, defendant's motion was granted (140 Cal. App. 4th 515, 534) .

[b] The Conduct at Issue Concerned an Issue of Interest to a Definable Portion of the Public and Occurred in the Context of an Ongoing Controversy, Dispute, or Discussion

In Hailstone v. Martinez (2008) 169 Cal. App. 4th 728, 87 Cal. Rptr. 3d 347 , plaintiff was a senior business agent for a local Teamsters union. In 2007, defendant Martinez, the union's secretary-treasurer, suspended plaintiff for allegedly receiving both mileage reimbursement and a gas allowance and therefore "double-dipping" into union funds. Martinez sent plaintiff a letter notifying him of this suspension and copied the letter to other union and management individuals. Plaintiff was subsequently terminated and filed the instant defamation lawsuit against Martinez and two other local union employees. Defendants responded by filing an Anti-SLAPP motion to strike, asserting the alleged defamatory statements concerned an issue of public interest. The trial court denied defendants' motion on the basis that the statements did not concern a public issue or an issue of public interest.

The court of appeals reversed the trial court's ruling on the Anti-SLAPP statute, but nevertheless determined that plaintiff was able to show the required degree of merit to proceed with his complaint. The court noted that while the statute does not specifically define "issue of public interest," the courts have provided some guiding principles. The court summarized that in each case where it was determined that a public issue existed, the subject statements either concerned a person or entity in the public eye, conduct that could directly affect a large number of people or a topic of widespread, public interest (169 Cal. App. 4th 728, 736-737 , quoting Rivero v. American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees, AFL-CIO (2003) 105 Cal. App. 4th 913, 924, 130 Cal. Rptr. 2d 81). The court found that in this case, the issue was of interest to a limited but definable portion of the public; a narrow segment of society (the local union, which had more than 10,000 members). Moreover, because plaintiff's ties with the union had not been completely severed when the statements were made, the activity did take place in the context of an "ongoing controversy, dispute or discussion," as required by the courts in cases such as Du Charme v. International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers (2003) 110 Cal. App. 4th 107, 115, 1 Cal. Rptr. 3d 501 . Because plaintiff was able to demonstrate that his claim had at least minimal merit, the order denying the motion to strike was affirmed (169 Cal. App. 4th 728, 743) .

In Ruiz v. Harbor View Community Association (2005) 134 Cal. App. 4th 1456, 37 Cal. Rptr. 3d 133 , plaintiffs sued their community association after the association denied plaintiffs' plans to rebuild their house. Plaintiffs' house was on one of 523 lots governed by the association. One of the nine causes of action was for libel and arose out of a dispute regarding the association's rejection of plaintiffs' plans. Following the rejection of the plans, plaintiff (Mr. Ruiz) attended an architectural committee meeting and a board meeting and subsequently prepared a letter to the committee and the board disputing their decision. In response, the association's attorney sent a letter to plaintiff stating, among other things, that it was reprehensible that plaintiff, as a licensed attorney, "undertook to negotiate, monitor, observe, harangue, cajole and intimidate laypersons ... " Plaintiff responded to this letter and several letters went back and forth. Several months after the initial letter, the association's attorney sent another letter to plaintiff with sharp wording. Plaintiff's cause of action for libel arose out of these two letters sent by the attorney. Defendant moved to strike the libel cause of action under the Anti-SLAPP statute. The trial court denied the motion, ruling that the two letters did not fit within the ambit of Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16. Defendant appealed (134 Cal. App. 4th 1456, 1465) .

The court of appeals reversed, holding that the two letters fell within Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(e)(4). Courts had previously ruled that the Anti-SLAPP statute protects private communications regarding public issues (see, e.g., Averill v. Superior Court (1996) 42 Cal. App. 4th 1170, 1175, 50 Cal. Rptr. 2d 62). Conduct involving issues of interest to a limited but definable portion of the public can still be the subject of a SLAPP suit when it occurs "in the context of an ongoing controversy, dispute or discussion, such that it warrants protection by a statute that embodies the public policy of encouraging participation in matters of public significance" (134 Cal. App. 4th 1456, 1468 , quoting Du Charme v. International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers (2003) 110 Cal. App. 4th 107, 119, 1 Cal. Rptr. 3d 501). The court found that when defendant's attorney wrote the two letters, plaintiffs and defendant were involved in ongoing disputes over approval of plaintiffs' plans. Moreover, the dispute was of interest to the residents of over 523 lots, which was a large enough group to satisfy the "limited but definable portion of the public" requirement. Because plaintiff failed to meet his burden of establishing a probability of prevailing on the libel claim, the court granted the motion to strike (134 Cal. App. 4th 1456, 1475) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] The Conduct at Issue Concerned an Issue of Widespread Public Interest

Plaintiff in Hall v. Time Warner, Inc. (2007) 153 Cal. App. 4th 1337, 63 Cal. Rptr. 3d 798 was the housekeeper of the late famous actor Marlon Brando. After Brando's death, it came to light that Hall was named as a beneficiary in Brando's living trust. A reporter visited Hall and interviewed her about Brando and his will, and portions of the interview were televised. Plaintiff sued the producers of the television show for trespass, intrusion upon seclusion, public disclosure of private facts, intentional infliction of emotional distress, and elder abuse. Defendant filed an Anti-SLAPP motion, and the trial court denied the motion, finding the complaint did not arise from an act in furtherance of the defendants' right of petition or speech in connection with a public issue. The court of appeals reversed. The court held that the terms of Brando's will and trust were an issue of widespread public interest. Newspapers and other publications had published the details of Brando's will and there was some controversy over the fact that Brando specifically did not provide for one of his adopted daughters or the offspring of his predeceased daughter in his will. The court held that the public's fascination with Brando made his decisions concerning his will an issue of public interest. Therefore, on remand, the trial court was required to determine whether Hall could show a probability of prevailing on her complaint (153 Cal. App. 4th 1337, 1347-1348) .

In Ampex Corp. v. Cargle (2005) 128 Cal. App. 4th 1569, 27 Cal. Rptr. 3d 863 , plaintiffs sued an anonymous poster on an Internet message board for defamation. It turned out that the anonymous poster was a former employee of one of plaintiffs' wholly owned subsidiaries. The issue was whether defendant's postings on the message board were made in a public forum in connection with an issue of public interest. The court held that they were. A message board is a public forum since the term "public forum" includes forms of public communication other than those in a physical setting. Web sites that are accessible to any member of the public, free of charge, are public forums for purposes of the Anti-SLAPP statute. Additionally, the postings were in connection with an issue of public interest because Ampex is a publicly traded company with a large number of investors and it had promoted itself by means of press releases. Because Ampex did not demonstrate a probability of prevailing on its defamation claim, defendant prevailed and was entitled to attorney fees (128 Cal. App. 4th 1569, 1580) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 161 MOTIONS TO STRIKE: ANTI-SLAPP
PART II. FORMS
A. Supporting Special Motion to Strike

16-161 California Points & Authorities § 161.34

§ 161.34 Supporting Special Motion to Strike Action Against Constitutionally Privileged Conduct (SLAPP Suit) [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(b)]--Governmental Entities and Their Employees, Like Private Parties, May Bring a Special Motion to Strike

[1] FORM

[This form should be used in combination with the form of memorandum supporting a special motion to strike action against constitutionally privileged conduct (see § 161.30)].

WHEN A GOVERNMENTAL ENTITY AND ITS EMPLOYEES ARE SUED AS A RESULT OF WRITTEN AND VERBAL COMMENTS ON ISSUES OF PUBLIC INTEREST RELATING TO THEIR OFFICIAL DUTIES, BOTH MAY SPECIFICALLY MOVE TO STRIKE UNDER CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE SECTION 425.16.

A. Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16 Applies to Governmental Entities, Their Employees, and Private Parties. Public entities are "persons" for the purpose of the SLAPP statute. The Anti-SLAPP suit statute is designed to protect the speech interests of private citizens, the public, and governmental speakers (Vargas v. City of Salinas (2009) 46 Cal. 4th 1, 19, 92 Cal. Rptr. 3d 286, 205 P.3d 207 ; Mission Oaks Ranch, Ltd. v. County of Santa Barbara (1998) 65 Cal. App. 4th 713, 730, 77 Cal. Rptr. 2d 1 (disapproved on other grounds in Briggs v. Eden Council for Hope and Opportunity (1999) 19 Cal. 4th 1106, 1123 n.10, 81 Cal. Rptr. 2d 471, 969 P.2d 564 ; Bradbury v. Superior Court (1996) 49 Cal. App. 4th 1108, 1113, 1117, 57 Cal. Rptr. 2d 207).

B. Public Employee's Comment on Issues of Public Interest Relating to Official Duties Is Protected. The word "person" as used in Code of Civil Procedure Section 425.16. includes a governmental entity, and extends to public employees who issue reports and comment on issues of public interest relating to their official duties. If a governmental entity and public employee are sued as a result of written and verbal comments on issues of public interest relating to the employee's official duties, both may move to specially strike under Code of Civil Procedure Section 425.16. (Bradbury v. Superior Court (1996) 49 Cal. App. 4th 1108, 1113-1117, 57 Cal. Rptr. 2d 207).

[Optional] C. Government Is Protected in Performing its Role in CEQA. Government has a legitimate, independent, statutory role to play in the consideration of environmental impact reports and the approval of development proposals. As such, it should be protected in performing its role on matters of public interest, including purported inadequate performance of its role under the California Environmental Quality Act (Mission Oaks Ranch, Ltd. v. County of Santa Barbara (1998) 65 Cal. App. 4th 713, 730, 77 Cal. Rptr. 2d 1 (disapproved on other grounds in Briggs v. Eden Council for Hope and Opportunity (1999) 19 Cal. 4th 1106, 1123 n.10, 81 Cal. Rptr. 2d 471, 969 P.2d 564)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form, combined with the appropriate points and authorities contained in § 161.30, may be submitted in support of a special motion to strike the whole or any part of a complaint or cross-complaint setting forth a cause of action against a public entity and its employees arising from any of their acts in furtherance of their constitutionally protected right to petition or free speech in connection with a public issue [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(b); for further discussion, see § 161.30[2]].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16 Applies to Governmental Entities, Their Employees, and Private Parties

Vargas v. City of Salinas (2009) 46 Cal. 4th 1, 92 Cal. Rptr. 3d 286, 205 P.3d 207 arose out of a local ballot measure proposing the repeat of a utility users tax. Proponents of the measure sued the city, claiming the city and its officials had engaged in unlawful campaign activities intending to influence the voters against the ballot measure. After defendants succeeded on a motion for judgment on the pleadings and plaintiffs filed a supplemental complaint, defendants filed an Anti-SLAPP motion as to the supplemental complaint. The trial court granted the motion, and plaintiffs appealed. The court of appeal affirmed, and the California Supreme Court granted review.

Although the court primarily granted review to address issues related to plaintiffs' claim on the merits, on appeal plaintiffs argued that defendant city was not entitled to the protections of the Anti-SLAPP statute. Plaintiffs argued that the communications in question were those of a governmental entity and not a private individual or organization, and therefore the statute did not apply. Although the courts of appeal had uniformly held that government entities could invoke the protections of the statute, plaintiffs contended those cases were wrongly decided. The California Supreme Court disagreed, holding that the Anti-SLAPP statute clearly applies to statements and writings of government entities and public officials on matters of public interest that would fall within the statute's protections if they were made by a private individual or entity. Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(e) defines "act in furtherance of a person's right of petition or free speech" very broadly and does not draw any distinction between conduct by a private individual or entity and a government entity or public official. Additionally, the legislature removed any ambiguity in the original statute by expressly recognizing that public entities may bring "SLAPPback" actions. Therefore, the court found that defendants had met their burden of demonstrating that plaintiffs' complaint arose from protected activity. Because plaintiffs failed to meet their burden of demonstrating a probability of prevailing on the merits, the lower courts properly granted the Anti-SLAPP motion (46 Cal. 4th 1, 40) .

The facts and procedural background of Mission Oaks Ranch, Ltd. v. County of Santa Barbara (1998) 65 Cal. App. 4th 713, 77 Cal. Rptr. 2d 1 , are discussed in § 161.30[3][f]. Although the trial court, ruled in the County's favor on the Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16 motion, it denied attorney fees to the County by ruling that the county was not a "person" for purposes of SLAPP, and because the County did not prevail on the Williamson Act claim. On County's cross-appeal regarding attorney's fees, the court held that public entities are "persons" for the purpose of the SLAPP statute. The Anti-SLAPP suit statute is designed to protect the speech interests of private citizens, the public, and governmental speakers. In particular the court recognized the government's legitimate role in considering environmental impact reports and development proposals (65 Cal. App. 4th 713, 730) . That the demurrers were not sustained on one of the eight causes of action, the Williamson Act cause, did not preclude an award of attorney's fees and costs. The trial court did not believe it had merit, but simply did not have the agricultural contract before it, and plaintiff voluntarily dismissed that cause of action (65 Cal. App. 4th 713, 730) .

In Bradbury v. Superior Court (1996) 49 Cal. App. 4th 1108, 57 Cal. Rptr. 2d 207 , a Los Angeles County Deputy Sheriff shot and killed an individual during a search of the individual's residence. A search warrant had been issued. The incident was highly publicized and resulted in a federal civil rights action against the Los Angeles County Sheriff, the deputy county sheriff who killed the individual, and others. The district attorney conducted an investigation, and then issued a report that exculpated the deputy sheriff from criminal liability. However, the report questioned the veracity of the search warrant affidavit suggesting that the county deputy sheriff's primary motivation was to seize property as part of a drug forfeiture. The report in part stated that the county deputy sheriff had obtained a search warrant unsupported by probable cause, and that the search warrant became the individual's death warrant (49 Cal. App. 4th 1108, 1112) . The sheriff conducted his own investigation, exculpating the county deputy sheriff, and reached a conclusion contrary to that of the district attorney. (In the court of appeal's view, however, there was no need to resolve this dispute, and none was attempted, in that a theoretical resolution of this dispute was irrelevant to the first amendment issues presented (49 Cal. App. 4th 1108, 1112) .) Thereafter, the deputy county sheriff brought suit against the county, the district attorney, several assistant district attorneys, and a district attorney investigator, alleging several causes of action including defamation, intentional infliction of emotional distress, and violation of federal civil rights. The complaint alleged that the defendants defamed the plaintiff in the report, and in subsequent media interviews, including an appearance on the television show "20/20." The defendants successfully demurred to some of the causes of action, but when their demurrers were overruled as to other causes of action they filed a petition for writ of mandate challenging the court's ruling on the demurrer. While the writ proceeding was pending, the defendants brought a special motion to dismiss pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16. The trial court denied the motion on the ground that Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16 does not protect a governmental entity or its representative on the theory that a governmental entity and its representatives have no First Amendment rights (49 Cal. App. 4th 1108, 1113-1114) .

The court of appeal issued an alternative writ, stayed the trial court proceedings, consolidated both writ proceedings (49 Cal. App. 4th 1108, 1113), and thereafter issued a peremptory writ of mandate directing the trial court to vacate its order and enter a new order granting the motion to dismiss, and denied the petition for writ of mandate challenging the orders on the demurrer as moot (49 Cal. App. 4th 1108, 1119). The court held that the trial court erred in finding that Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16, the Anti-SLAPP suit statute, did not apply to governmental comment on a matter of public interest (49 Cal. App. 4th 1108, 1116) . A governmental entity and its representatives have First Amendment rights (49 Cal. App. 4th 1108, 1114-1115) . First amendment principles applied in this case because the investigation, report, and utterances made thereafter involved a matter of public interest (49 Cal. App. 4th 1108, 1116) . The word "person" as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16 includes a governmental entity, and extends to public employees who issue reports and comment on issues of public interest relating to their official duties (49 Cal. App. 4th 1108, 1115) . If a governmental entity and public employee are sued as a result of written and verbal comments on issues of public interest relating to the employee's official duties, both may move to specially strike under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16 (49 Cal. App. 4th 1108, 1115) . With regard to the burden of proof, the court noted that the defendants made a prima facie showing that the report and media statements related to an official investigation, were made in a public forum, and involved an issue of public interest. Private conversations concerning the report were also protected under the Anti-SLAPP statute. Moreover, the request that the Los Angeles County and other law enforcement agencies investigate the matter was in furtherance of the right to petition the government for grievances. The defendants also submitted declarations establishing their good faith belief in the accuracy of the report and media statements (49 Cal. App. 4th 1108, 1117) . The burden shifted to the plaintiff to show that he met the test enunciated in New York Times Co. v. Sullivan (1964) 376 U.S. 254, 279-280, 84 S. Ct. 710, 11 L. Ed. 2d 686 , and that he would probably prevail at the trial. The plaintiff had to show by competent evidence that the defendants made the statements with actual malice, i.e., knowing they were false or making them with a reckless disregard of the truth. The plaintiff failed to do this in that no evidence was offered in the opposition papers on this issue (49 Cal. App. 4th 1108, 1117) .

[b] Public Employee's Comment on Issues of Public Interest Relating to Official Duties Is Protected

Bradbury v. Superior Court (1996) 49 Cal. App. 4th 1108, 57 Cal. Rptr. 2d 207 , is discussed under § 161.34[3][a].

[c] Government Is Protected in Performing its Role in CEQA

Mission Oaks Ranch, Ltd. v. County of Santa Barbara (1998) 65 Cal. App. 4th 713, 77 Cal. Rptr. 2d 1 , is discussed under § 161.34[3][a].

[4] Additional Authorities

In Santa Barbara County Coalition Against Automobile Subsidies v. Santa Barbara County Association of Governments (2008) 167 Cal. App. 4th 1229, 84 Cal. Rptr. 3d 714 , plaintiff sued defendant for injunctive and declaratory relief based on its opposition to a ballot measure imposing a sales tax increase to fund transportation costs. In response, defendant filed an Anti-SLAPP motion. In response to the motion, plaintiff argued that defendant, as a government agency, had no free speech rights. The trial court granted the defendant's motion, and plaintiff appealed. The court of appeals affirmed. Government agencies and their representatives have First Amendment rights and are protected under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(b). Defendant's statements forming the basis of the complaint were made in the course of official proceedings, and plaintiff could not show a probability of prevailing (167 Cal. App. 4th 1229, 1237-1238) .

55 of 62 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 161 MOTIONS TO STRIKE: ANTI-SLAPP
PART II. FORMS
A. Supporting Special Motion to Strike

16-161 California Points & Authorities § 161.35

§ 161.35 Supporting Special Motion to Strike Action Against Constitutionally Privileged Conduct (SLAPP Suit)--Action Is Not Brought Solely in the Public Interest [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(b)]

[1] FORM

[This form should be used in combination with the form of memorandum supporting a special motion to strike against constitutionally privileged conduct (see § 161.30)].

THE SPECIAL MOTION TO STRIKE SHOULD BE GRANTED BECAUSE PLAINTIFF DID NOT BRING THE ACTION SOLELY IN THE PUBLIC INTEREST OR ON BEHALF OF THE GENERAL PUBLIC PURSUANT TO THE REQUIREMENTS OF CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE SECTION 425.17(b).

A. Plaintiff Seeks Relief That Is [Greater Than or Different From] the Relief Sought For the [General Public or Class]. The first prong of the Anti-SLAPP statute exception set forth in Code of Civil Procedure Section 425.17(b) is not met if the plaintiff seeks relief that is greater than or different from the relief sought for the general public or a class of which plaintiff is a member. A claim for attorney's fees, costs, or penalties does not constitute greater or different relief for purposes of this subdivision (Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(b)).

B. The Action, if Successful, Would Not Enforce an Important Right Affecting the Public Interest or Confer a Significant Benefit on the General Public or a Large Class of Persons. Even if a lawsuit's success might affect a large class of persons, the action does not meet this element unless the benefit it confers is legally significant (Blanchard v. DIRECTV, Inc. (2004) 123 Cal. App. 4th 903, 916-917) .

C. Private Enforcement Is Unnecessary in This Instance or Private Enforcement Does Not Place a Disproportionate Financial Burden on the Plaintiff in Relation to the Plaintiff's Stake in the Matter Because the Claim Is Entirely Personal to Plaintiffs. To meet this element, a plaintiff's objective in the litigation must go beyond those things that concretely affect that plaintiff to affect the general public. A claim that is entirely personal to plaintiffs does not qualify (Blanchard v. DIRECTV, Inc. (2004) 123 Cal. App. 4th 903, 916, 20 Cal. Rptr. 3d 385).

D. Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(b) Does Not Apply Where Plaintiff Is Not Seeking Relief Solely in the Public Interest. Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(b)'s exception only applies to actions brought "solely in the public interest." The exception bars a litigant seeking any personal relief from relying on the exception (Club Members for an Honest Election v. Sierra Club (2008) 45 Cal. 4th 309, 316-317, 86 Cal. Rptr. 3d 288, 196 P.3d 1094 ; Ingels v. Westwood One Broadcasting Services, Inc. (2005) 129 Cal. App. 4th 1050, 1067, 28 Cal. Rptr. 3d 933).

E. Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(b) Does Not Apply Because the Action Falls Within the Exception Enumerated in Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(d)(2). Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(b) does not apply to any action against any person or entity based upon the creation, dissemination, exhibition, advertisement, or other similar promotion of any dramatic, literary, musical, political, or artistic work, including, but not limited to, a motion picture or television program, or an article published in a newspaper or magazine of general circulation (Major v. Silna (2006) 134 Cal. App. 4th 1485, 1497, 36 Cal. Rptr. 3d 875).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form, combined with the appropriate points and authorities contained in § 161.30, may be submitted in support of a special motion to strike the whole or any part of a complaint or cross-complaint setting forth a cause of action alleged to be solely in the public interest or on behalf of the general public within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(b). For further discussion, see § 161.30[2]. For discussion of requirements for exception to Anti-SLAPP statute set forth in Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(b), see § 161.61.

Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17 does not apply to any of the following:

1. Any person enumerated in Cal. Const. Art. I, § 2(b) or Evid. Code § 1070, or any person engaged in the dissemination of ideas or expression in any book or academic journal, while engaged in the gathering, receiving, or processing of information for communication to the public [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(d)(1)].

2. Any action against any person or entity based upon the creation, dissemination, exhibition, advertisement, or other similar promotion of any dramatic, literary, musical, political, or artistic work, including, but not limited to, a motion picture or television program, or an article published in a newspaper or magazine of general circulation [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(d)(2)].

3. Any nonprofit organization that receives more than 50 percent of its annual revenues from federal, state, or local government grants, awards, programs, or reimbursements for services rendered [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(d)(3)].

[b] Reply to Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, this form may also be used in a reply to an opposition to a special motion to strike alleging the action was brought solely in the public interest (see § 161.71).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] The Action, if Successful, Would Not Enforce an Important Right Affecting the Public Interest or Confer a Significant Benefit on the General Public or a Large Class of Persons

In Blanchard v. DIRECTV, Inc. (2004) 123 Cal. App. 4th 903, 20 Cal. Rptr. 3d 385 , plaintiffs were recipients of demand letters from DIRECTV, a satellite television company. DIRECTV sent out the letters in an effort to persuade the recipients to stop using decryption devices that enabled the users to steal DIRECTV's programming. The letters explained that the use of the devices in question was illegal and offered the recipients a way to resolve the matter before DIRECTV filed suit in federal court. DIRECTV did eventually file suit in federal court against approximately 600 purchasers of the devices (123 Cal. App. 4th 903, 910). Plaintiffs in the instant action alleged three causes of action against DIRECTV in state court: 1) violation of the Unfair Competition Law (Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200), 2) interference with civil rights (Civ. Code § 52.1, and 3) extortion and duress (123 Cal. App. 4th 903, 911) .

In response, DIRECTV filed a special motion to strike pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16, the Anti-SLAPP statute. DIRECTV claimed that the demand letter was an exercise of DIRECTV's constitutional right to seek redress of grievances. DIRECTV further claimed that plaintiffs could not show a reasonable probability of success on the merits because the demand letters were protected by the litigation privilege of Civ. Code § 47. Plaintiffs opposed the Anti-SLAPP motion solely on the basis that they could show a reasonable probability of success on the merits. Plaintiffs did not assert the exception stated in Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(b) because that statute had not yet taken effect (123 Cal. App. 4th 903, 912) .

The trial court granted DIRECTV's Anti-SLAPP motion, finding that the demand letters constituted communications in furtherance of DIRECTV's right of petition under both the United States and California Constitutions. The court further found that the letters were protected by the litigation privilege and therefore plaintiffs could not show a probability that they would prevail on their claims (123 Cal. App. 4th 903, 912) .

On appeal, the court considered not only the second prong of the Anti-SLAPP statute but also the newly enacted exception to the Anti-SLAPP motion set forth in Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(b). Previous courts had already settled the fact that the statute could be applied to orders entered before its effective date because the statute constitutes a change in procedure only (123 Cal. App. 4th 903, 912) . The court noted that in order to take advantage of the exception of Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(b), the action must meet all three of its elements. (For discussion of Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(b), see § 161.71). In this case, the court found that the action did not meet the second or third element of the exception, and therefore was subject to an Anti-SLAPP motion (123 Cal. App. 4th 903, 915) . The action did not meet the second element because the claim, if successful, would not "enforce an important right affecting the public interest." The court found there was no public interest principle vindicated by an action seeking to prohibit DIRECTV from sending demand letters to specific customers. The court contrasted the action with a hypothetical action seeking to enjoin demand letters in general and noted that regardless of the instant action, demand letters would remain a standard practice in the legal community (123 Cal. App. 4th 903, 915). The court made certain to point out that even if the action could be seen as affecting a large class of persons, the benefit it would confer--no longer subjecting people to the demand letters--would not be legally significant (123 Cal. App. 4th 903, 916-917).

Furthermore, the court held the third element of the exception was not met because the claim was entirely personal to plaintiffs. In order to meet the third element, the court held, the plaintiffs' objective must "transcend" their own interests and affect the general public (123 Cal. App. 4th 903, 916) . The plaintiffs' personal stake in this instance far outweighed any effect the action could have on the greater public.

After finding that the plaintiffs could not take advantage of the newly acted exception to the Anti-SLAPP statute, the court went on to affirm the trial court's ruling on the merits of the Anti-SLAPP motion based on the litigation privilege and affirmed the judgment (123 Cal. App. 4th 903, 922) .

[b] Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(b) Does Not Apply Where Plaintiff Is Not Seeking Relief Solely in the Public Interest

Club Members for an Honest Election v. Sierra Club (2008) 45 Cal. 4th 309, 86 Cal. Rptr. 3d 288, 196 P.3d 1094 had a complex procedural history. The litigation arose out of a rift in the Sierra Club's board of directors over the organization's policies. The board voted to disseminate an article to all chapter newsletters regarding low member participation and also directed that an urgent election notice be attached to the front of voting materials, warning members that outside groups may be attempting to intervene in the election. Plaintiff Club Members for an Honest Election supported plaintiff Robert van de Hoek in the election. Plaintiffs' initial and first amended complaints sought injunctive relief, which was not granted. The election went forward and plaintiff van de Hoek was not elected to the board. Following the election, plaintiffs filed a second amended complaint alleging the following causes of action: 1) a challenge to the validity of the election under Corp. Code § 5617, 2) a petition for declaratory relief, 3) breach of fiduciary duty, and 4) violation of Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200. The complaint sought removal of five elected or appointed board members and the installation of van de Hoek and four other candidates who had not succeeded in the election.

Defendant moved to strike the second amended complaint based on the Anti-SLAPP statute. The court granted defendant's motion as to the third cause of action, holding that voting as a director was protected First Amendment activity. The court denied the remainder of the special motion to strike, but granted defendant's motion for summary judgment and dismissed the complaint in its entirety. The court awarded defendant fees and costs in the amount of $37,010.76 based on its partially successful Anti-SLAPP motion. Plaintiff Club Members appealed the Anti-SLAPP rulings and related fee and cost awards, and defendant appealed the partial denial of the Anti-SLAPP motion.

The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's ruling that plaintiffs' third cause of action for breach of fiduciary duty arose from protected activity and thus affirmed the trial court's ruling on the Anti-SLAPP motion. The court of appeal also held that the first, second and fourth causes of action were exempt from the Anti-SLAPP statute under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(b)'s public interest exception because the "principal thrust or gravamen" of the causes of action were consistent with a public interest action. Defendant appealed.

The California Supreme Court held that the court of appeal erred in applying the "principal thrust or gravamen" test in its analysis of the causes of action under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(b). Under the plain meaning of the statute, the exception applies only to actions brought "solely in the public interest or on behalf of the general public." The court held the language is therefore "unambiguous and bars a litigant seeking 'any' personal relief from relying on the exception" (45 Cal. 4th 309, 316-317) . The court noted it was undisputed that portions of plaintiffs' prayer for relief sought a personal advantage, such as the request that the court order defendant to install van de Hoek to the board. The exception found in Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(b) may not be analyzed cause of action by cause of action, but rather the action must be treated as a whole. The statutory exception clearly refers to an "action" as opposed to a "cause of action" (45 Cal. 4th 309, 319-320) .

In Ingels v. Westwood One Broadcasting Services, Inc. (2005) 129 Cal. App. 4th 1050, 28 Cal. Rptr. 3d 933 , plaintiff was a caller attempting to participate in a call-in talk radio show. The screener on the show told plaintiff he was too old for the target audience of the show and when plaintiff objected, he was allowed on the air, where he voiced his displeasure at being a victim of age discrimination rather than comment on the topic the host was discussing. Plaintiff then sued the producers and talk show host for age discrimination under the Unruh Act and unfair competition. Defendants filed a special motion to strike, and the trial court granted the motion, finding that the action fell within the scope of the Anti-SLAPP statute and that plaintiff failed to show a probability of prevailing on the merits. Plaintiff appealed (129 Cal. App. 4th 1050, 1055) .

The court began by finding that defendants' actions in providing an open forum by means of a radio call-in show fit within the scope of Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(e)(4). The court then addressed plaintiff's contention that Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17 applied to the case as an exception to application of the Anti-SLAPP statute. Specifically, subdivision (d) of the statute applied to preclude application of Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(b). The court noted that there were not yet any cases construing Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(b). The first condition of the exception requires that the plaintiff not seek relief greater than or different from the relief sought for the general public or a class of which the plaintiff is a member. Because plaintiff in this case sought recovery of damages personal to himself in alleging emotional upset and distress, his claim did not meet the first requirement. (129 Cal. App. 4th 1050, 1067) .

Additionally, plaintiff's claims were exempted from Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(b) pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. §

425.17(d)(2). That subdivision excepts from Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17 "[a]ny action against any person or entity based upon the creation, dissemination, exhibition, advertisement, or other similar promotion of any dramatic, literary, musical, political, or artistic work, including, but not limited to, a motion picture or television program, or an article published in a newspaper or magazine of general circulation." The Senate analysis of the bill specifically stated that the statute would exempt news media and other media defendants from the exception when the underlying act relates to news gathering and reporting to the public. The court found no reason to distinguish a radio show from other media organizations, and therefore subdivision (d)(2) applied. Because plaintiff could not demonstrate a probability of prevailing on his claims, the court of appeals affirmed the trial court's ruling (129 Cal. App. 4th 1050, 1067-1068, 1074) .

[c] Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(b) Does Not Apply Because the Action Falls Within the Exception Enumerated in Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(d)(2)

In Major v. Silna (2006) 134 Cal. App. 4th 1485, 36 Cal. Rptr. 3d 875 , defendant Silna had mailed a letter to residents of the City of Malibu supporting various city council candidates. Plaintiff Major sued Silna for injunctive relief based on this mailing, alleging that Silna had violated provisions of Malibu's campaign finance law by spending more than $100 on the mailings. Major also sought a temporary restraining order. In response, Silna filed a motion under the Anti-SLAPP statute. Two days later, Major dismissed his action against Silna. Silna requested an award of attorney fees under the Anti-SLAPP statute, but the trial court held that the action fell within the exception to the law as codified in Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(b). Silna appealed.

The court of appeals held that Silna was entitled to attorney fees because the case fell within the exception to the "public interest" exception found in Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(d)(2). By its plain language, section 417(d)(2) exempts from the public interest exception "[a]ny action against a person ... based upon the ... dissemination ... or other similar promotion of any ... political ... work ... " (134 Cal. App. 4th 1485, 1494) . The court found that Silna's letters supporting candidates for city council were "political work" within the meaning of the statute and did not differ from any newspaper article or editorial circulated in Malibu. Additionally, in enacting Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(b), the Legislature sought to reaffirm free speech rights such as those exercised by Silna. Therefore, the action fell outside the "public interest" exception of Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(b) and because Major could not show a probability of prevailing on the merits, Silna was entitled to attorney fees (134 Cal. App. 4th 1485, 1503) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] The Action, if Successful, Would Not Enforce an Important Right Affecting the Public Interest or Confer a Significant Benefit on the General Public or a Large Class of Persons

Holbrook v. City of Santa Monica (2006) 144 Cal. App. 4th 1242, 51 Cal. Rptr. 3d 181 involved a lawsuit by two members of the Santa Monica City Council against the city. The members claimed that the late-running council meetings violated the United States and California constitutions as well as the Brown Act and Cal-OSHA regulations. In response, the city filed a demurrer and an Anti-SLAPP motion. The trial court granted the city's motion, and plaintiffs appealed. The court of appeal affirmed. The city's actions arose from governmental speech and legislative action, which are protected activity within the meaning of the Anti-SLAPP statute. Plaintiffs claimed on appeal that Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(b) applied to remove their lawsuit from the purview of the statute. The court disagreed, holding that the action was not brought in the public interest; rather it was brought because plaintiffs disliked working late into the night. Additionally, ending the meetings earlier would not confer a significant benefit on the general public or a large class of persons. Plaintiffs could not show a probability of success on the merits and therefore their case was dismissed (144 Cal. App. 4th 1242, 1250) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 161 MOTIONS TO STRIKE: ANTI-SLAPP
PART II. FORMS
A. Supporting Special Motion to Strike

16-161 California Points & Authorities § 161.36

§ 161.36 Supporting Special Motion to Strike Action Against Constitutionally Privileged Conduct (SLAPP Suit) [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(c)]--Requirements of Code Civ. Proc. 425.17(c) Not Met

[1] FORM

[This form should be used in combination with the form of memorandum supporting a special motion to strike against constitutionally privileged conduct (see § 161.30)].

THE SPECIAL MOTION TO STRIKE SHOULD BE GRANTED BECAUSE PLAINTIFF'S COMPLAINT ARISES OUT OF SPEECH THAT DOES NOT AMOUNT TO A REPRESENTATION OF FACT PURSUANT TO THE REQUIREMENTS OF CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE SECTION 425.17(c) or DEFENDANT IS NOT PRIMARILY ENGAGED IN THE BUSINESS OF SELLING OR LEASING GOODS AND SERVICES or THE INTENDED AUDIENCE OF THE SPEECH WAS NOT AN ACTUAL OR POTENTIAL BUYER OR CUSTOMER.

A. Defendant Is Not Primarily in the Business of Selling or Leasing Goods and Services. The Anti-SLAPP exception set forth in Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(c) does not apply unless defendant is primarily in the business of selling or leasing goods and services (Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(c); All One God Faith, Inc. v. Organic & Sustainable Industry Standards, Inc. (2010) 183 Cal. App. 4th 1186, 1211-1219, 107 Cal. Rptr. 3d 861 ; Taheri Law Group v. Evans (2008) 160 Cal. App. 4th 482, 492, 72 Cal. Rptr. 3d 847).

B. Defendant's Statement or Conduct Was Not a Representation of Fact. The first prong of the Anti-SLAPP statute exception set forth in Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(c) is not met if defendant's statement or conduct does not consist of representations of fact about defendant's or a competitor's business operations, goods, or services, that was made for the purpose of obtaining approval for, promoting, or securing sales or leases of, or commercial transactions in, the person's goods or services, or the statement was made in the course of delivering goods or services (Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(c)(1); Navarro v. IHOP Properties, Inc. (2005) 134 Cal. App. 4th 834, 36 Cal. Rptr. 3d 385).

C. The Intended Audience of Defendant's Statement Was Not an Actual or Potential Buyer or Customer. The second prong of the Anti-SLAPP statute exception set forth in Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(c) is not met unless the intended audience of defendant's conduct or statement is an actual or potential buyer or customer, or a person likely to repeat the statement to, or otherwise influence an actual or potential buyer or customer (Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(c)(2)).

D. The Statement or Conduct About Defendant's or a Competitor's Business Operations, Goods, or Services Was Not Made for the Purpose of Obtaining Approval for, Promoting, or Securing Sales of the Defendant's Goods or Services or Made in the Course of Delivering the Defendant's Goods or Services. Even if the challenged statement or conduct was a representation of fact, the Anti-SLAPP exception set forth in Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(c) does not apply unless the statement or conduct was made for either the purpose of obtaining approval for, promoting, or securing sales of the defendant's goods or services or the statement was made in the course of delivering such goods or services (Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(c); Simpson Strong-Tie Co., Inc. v. Gore (2010) 49 Cal. 4th 12, 22-26, 109 Cal. Rptr. 3d 329, 230 P.3d 1117 ; Mendoza v. ADP Screening & Selection Services, Inc. (2010) 182 Cal. App. 4th 1644, 1652, 107 Cal. Rptr. 3d 294 ; Contemporary Services Corp. v. Staff Pro Inc. (2007) 152 Cal. App. 4th 1043, 1053-1055, 61 Cal. Rptr. 3d 434 ; Sunset Millennium Associates v. LHO Grafton Hotel (2006) 146 Cal. App. 4th 300, 312, 52 Cal. Rptr. 3d 828).

E. The Burden of Proving the Applicability of the Exception Set Forth in Code Civ. Proc. § 426.17(c)(1) Is On the Plaintiff. The burden of proof as to the applicability of the commercial speech exemption, therefore, falls on the party seeking the benefit of it, i.e., the plaintiff (Simpson Strong-Tie Co., Inc. v. Gore (2010) 49 Cal. 4th 12, 22-26, 109 Cal. Rptr. 3d 329, 230 P.3d 1117).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form, combined with the appropriate points and authorities contained in § 161.30, may be submitted in support of a special motion to strike the whole or any part of a complaint or cross-complaint setting forth a cause of action alleged to have arisen out of the statement or conduct of a person primarily engaged in the sale or leasing of goods and services within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(c). For further discussion, see § 161.30. For discussion of requirements for exception to Anti-SLAPP statute set forth in Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(c), see § 161.62.

Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17 does not apply to any of the following:

- Any person enumerated in Cal. Const. Art. I, § 2(b) or Evid. Code § 1070, or any person engaged in the dissemination of ideas or expression in any book or academic journal, while engaged in the gathering, receiving, or processing of information for communication to the public [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(d)(1)].

- Any action against any person or entity based upon the creation, dissemination, exhibition, advertisement, or other similar promotion of any dramatic, literary, musical, political, or artistic work, including, but not limited to, a motion picture or television program, or an article published in a newspaper or magazine of general circulation [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(d)(2)].

- Any nonprofit organization that receives more than 50 percent of its annual revenues from federal, state, or local government grants, awards, programs, or reimbursements for services rendered [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(d)(3)].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Defendant Is Not Primarily in the Business of Selling or Leasing Goods and Services

In All One God Faith, Inc. v. Organic & Sustainable Industry Standards, Inc. (2010) 183 Cal. App. 4th 1186, 107 Cal. Rptr. 3d 861 , a soap company sued a trade association, which was in the process of developing a standard to define "organic" differently than federal law and certifying members meeting the standard to advertise their products as organic. The soap company alleged that the certification would constitute unfair competition and misleading advertising. The trade association moved to strike the complaint claim against it pursuant to the anti-SLAPP statute, which the trial court denied on the ground that the alleged conduct of certifying did not constitute an "act in furtherance of a person's right of petition or free speech under the United States or California Constitution in connection with a public issue" within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16. The trial court stated that its ruling was not based in any part upon Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17; defendant's alleged conduct did not fall under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(c), because defendant, while a trade group consisting of, and acting on behalf of, its members who were in the business of selling goods, was not itself "a person primarily engaged in the business of selling or leasing goods or services," and the plain language of § 425.17(c) did not extend to trade associations not themselves engaged in the business of selling or leasing goods or services (183 Cal. App. 4th 1186, 1191-1198) .

The Court of Appeal affirmed. With regard to the applicability of Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(c), it was undisputed that the association's members were in the business of selling goods and the association, as a nonprofit trade association, acted on its members' behalf. However, the plain language of § 425.17(c) made clear that the exception did not apply here. For the exception to apply, the speaker must be a person primarily engaged in the business of selling or leasing goods or services. Further, the legislative history showed that the Legislature explicitly considered and rejected an exception that would have applied to an entity merely "involved in the stream of commerce" (183 Cal. App. 4th 1186, 1211-1219) .

Taheri Law Group v. Evans (2008) 160 Cal. App. 4th 482, 72 Cal. Rptr. 3d 847 involved a dispute between attorneys over a client. Plaintiff Taheri sued attorney Evans for intentional interference with prospective economic advantage and intentional interference with business relations, alleging it had represented a client for 18 months when suddenly the client discharged Taheri and hired Evans. Evans filed an Anti-SLAPP motion in response to Taheri's complaint, asserting the complaint arose during pending litigation, which constituted protected activity under the statute. The trial court granted the Anti-SLAPP motion, holding the complaint did arise from protected activity, and Taheri could not establish a probability of prevailing on his claims. Taheri appealed, arguing first that his causes of action did not arise from protected activity, and second that lawsuit was subject to the commercial speech exception found in Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(c).

The court of appeals disagreed with Taheri. Taheri had argued that the lawsuit arose from Evans' soliciting a client, not litigating on behalf of that client. The court found that the complaint arose from Evans' communications with his client regarding the litigation and Evans' efforts to enforce a settlement agreement on behalf of his client. With regard to the commercial speech exception, the court explained that the Anti-SLAPP statute does not apply to causes of action arising from specified claims against business entities involving commercial speech or conduct. Although a lawyer may be said to be in the business of providing services, the court declined to find that a cause of action arising from a lawyer's conduct in advising a client on pending litigation could fall within the exception to the Anti-SLAPP statute. The court noted the legislative history surrounding the exception to the statute showed that the legislature only intended to except purely commercial disputes from the Anti-SLAPP statute. A dispute involving a lawyer's advice, the court reasoned, was different than a purely commercial dispute. The court also feared that applying the exception to a case such as this one would thwart a client's fundamental access to the courts. The court made it clear that it was not exempting all lawyers' activities from the Anti-SLAPP exception; for example, lawyer advertising would constitute commercial speech. In this case, however, there was no such advertising or solicitation. Because Taheri could not demonstrate a probability of prevailing on his claims, the judgment was affirmed (160 Cal. App. 4th 482, 492) .

[b] Defendant's Statement or Conduct Was Not a Representation of Fact

In Navarro v. IHOP Properties, Inc. (2005) 134 Cal. App. 4th 834, 36 Cal. Rptr. 3d 385 , plaintiff was a franchisee of defendant IHOP. IHOP had filed an unlawful detainer action against Navarro, and that action ended in a stipulated judgment. Under the judgment, Navarro was to have until a certain date to sell the franchise to avoid execution of the judgment by IHOP. IHOP subsequently filed an application for writ of possession and Navarro filed an application for stay of enforcement of that writ. The application was denied, and IHOP pursued execution of the judgment. Navarro then filed the instant action against IHOP for breach of contract, breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, and fraud. Navarro claimed that IHOP had deliberately refused to consider offers from potential franchise buyers in a timely manner so that it could execute the judgment against Navarro (134 Cal. App. 4th 834, 838) . IHOP filed a demurrer and a special motion to strike under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16. The trial court found that Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17 did not apply, denied the motion under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16 and sustained the demurrer with leave to amend. IHOP appealed from the portion of the ruling denying the special motion to strike (134 Cal. App. 4th 834, 838) .

The court of appeals agreed with the trial court that Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17 did not apply in this case. The speech at issue was IHOP's allegedly false promise to process potential buyers of Navarro's franchise without undue delay. Navarro claimed this speech met the requirements of Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(c)(1) and therefore the action was exempt from Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16. However, the court held that such a promise did not qualify as a representation of fact but was instead an agreement to take certain actions in the future. Additionally, the promise was not made in the course of delivering goods and services, but rather in the context of settling a dispute. Any promises or statements were made in the context of settling a dispute, not in the context of a commercial transaction. Therefore, Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17 did not apply to this action (134 Cal. App. 4th 834, 840-841) . The court went on to find that IHOP's statements were made in the course of negotiating the stipulated judgment, and therefore warranted protection under the Anti-SLAPP statute. Because plaintiff could not show a probability of prevailing on the merits, IHOP's special motion to strike should have been granted (134 Cal. App. 4th 834, 844-845) .

[c] The Statement or Conduct About Defendant's or a Competitor's Business Operations, Goods, or Services Was Not Made for the Purpose of Obtaining Approval for, Promoting, or Securing Sales of the Defendant's Goods or Services or Made in the Course of Delivering the Defendant's Goods or Services

The facts and procedural background of Simpson Strong-Tie Co., Inc. v. Gore (2010) 49 Cal. 4th 12, 109 Cal. Rptr. 3d 329, 230 P.3d 1117 , are set forth in [d], below. The California Supreme Court, in affirming the judgment of the Court of Appeals, which had affirmed the granting of a special motion to strike finding that the exception in Code Civ. Proc. § 426.17(c) did not apply, held Code Civ. Proc. § 426.17(c)(1) exempts a cause of action arising from a statement or conduct that consists of representations of fact about that person's or a competitor's business operations, goods, or services that was made either "for the purpose of obtaining approval for, promoting, or securing sales or leases of, or commercial transactions in, the person's goods or services" or "in the course of delivering the person's goods or services" (Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(c)(1)), rather than prescribing a "content exemption" and a "delivery exemption" with distinctly different elements, creating two independent and parallel theories of exemption from the anti-SLAPP law, as the Court of Appeal had held. Section 425.17(c) exempts from the anti-SLAPP law a cause of action arising from commercial speech the following when each of the following is true (49 Cal. 4th 12, 26-30) :

1. The cause of action is against a person primarily engaged in the business of selling or leasing goods or services.

2. The cause of action arises from a statement or conduct by that person consisting of representations of fact about that person's or a business competitor's business operations, goods, or services.

3. The statement or conduct was made either for the purpose of obtaining approval for, promoting, or securing sales or leases of, or commercial transactions in, the person's goods or services or in the course of delivering the person's goods or services.

4. The intended audience for the statement or conduct meets the definition set forth in § 425.17(c)(2).

In Simpson Strong-Tie Co., defendant did not dispute that he was in the business of selling legal services, plaintiff's causes of action arise from his advertisement, the purpose of the advertisement was to promote his legal services, or the advertisement was addressed to a qualifying audience under § 425.17(c)(2). However, the causes of action did not arise from representations of fact about defendant's business operations, goods, or services." They arose from allegedly false statements about plaintiff's products, falling squarely outside § 425.17(c)'s exemption for commercial speech. The commercial speech exemption applies only to a cause of action "arising from" a statement or conduct consisting of representations of fact about the person's or a business competitor's business operations, goods, or services (49 Cal. 4th 12, 30-33) .

In Mendoza v. ADP Screening & Selection Services, Inc. (2010) 182 Cal. App. 4th 1644, 107 Cal. Rptr. 3d 294 , plaintiff filled out an application for employment. As part of defendant's pre-employment background check on him, defendant accessed the Megan's Law Website (MLW). Although plaintiff's complaint did not expressly allege whether information regarding plaintiff was disclosed on the MLW or that plaintiff's prospective employer decided not to hire him based on information disclosed on the MLW, those factual allegations were implicit. Defendant filed a special motion to strike the complaint pursuant to the anti-SLAPP statute, arguing that plaintiff's claims for violation of provisions relating to the MLW prohibiting the use of information disclosed on the MLW for purposes relating to employment, and that any use of information disclosed on the MLW for such a purpose makes the user liable for actual damages, and attorney's fees, exemplary damages, or a civil penalty (Pen. Code, § 290.46(l)(2)(E), (4)(A)) arose from the company's actions in furtherance of its constitutional free speech rights, i.e., defendant had a constitutional free speech right to republish information on the MLW to its clients. Defendant essentially conceded that it accessed the MLW, compiled information disclosed on the MLW, and provided the information for a fee to plaintiff's prospective employer, a client. The trial court granted the motion on the ground that defendant's conduct arose in furtherance of its First Amendment rights of commercial speech on a matter of public interest, i.e., the identities of registered sex offenders, and the commercial speech exemption to the anti-SLAPP statute (see Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(c)) was inapplicable. The trial court also found plaintiff could not establish a probability that he would prevail since defendant was not his prospective employer and did not "use" the MLW in violation of Pen. Code §§ 290.4 and 290.46, but instead simply "disclosed" information it found on the Web site; that he would prevail on his counts for violations of Civ. Code § 1786.20(c) and Pen. Code §§ 290.4 and 290.46; or that he had good cause to conduct discovery to oppose the motion (182 Cal. App. 4th 1644, 1648-1651) .

The Court of Appeal affirmed. The court found that the plain language of Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(c) did not apply, because the statements by defendant upon which plaintiff based his complaint were not made by defendant about its own business or about one of its business competitors, but about plaintiff's presence on the MLW. Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(c) does not provide that every case arising from statements uttered by a commercial enterprise is exempted from the anti-SLAPP statute's purview (182 Cal. App. 4th 1644, 1652) .

Contemporary Services Corp. v. Staff Pro Inc. (2007) 152 Cal. App. 4th 1043, 61 Cal. Rptr. 3d 434 involved a lawsuit between competitors in the event staffing and audience management services business. Initially, in 2001, Contemporary Services Corp. (CSC) sued Staff Pro and its president for violations of the Unfair Practices Act. In 2004, Staff Pro sued CSC for defamation and unfair competition, and CSC cross-complained, stating the same causes of action. During the 2004 action, the discovery referee found that CSC had conducted discovery in an unfair manner and sanctioned CSC. The court also imposed evidentiary sanctions against CSC for stealing a disc from Staff Pro. Eventually, Staff Pro dismissed its complaint in the 2004 action in order to focus its energies and resources on the 2001 action. In 2006, shortly before trial was scheduled to start, the president of Staff Pro sent an e-mail to its customers updating the customers on the status of the litigation. The e-mail detailed various allegations regarding CSC's conduct in the litigation and the sanctions levied against CSC by the court. Also in 2006, CSC dismissed its cross-complaint in the 2004 action and filed a new action against Staff Pro for malicious prosecution (based on the 2004 action), abuse of process, defamation, and interference with economic advantage. The defamation action was based on the e-mail the Staff Pro president sent to its customers. In response to CSC's lawsuit, Staff Pro filed a special motion to strike. The court granted the motion, ruling that the statements and conduct forming the basis of the lawsuit were protected speech and plaintiffs failed to establish a probability of prevailing. Plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. On appeal, plaintiffs argued that Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(c) applied because their cause of action was brought against a person primarily engaged in the business of selling or leasing goods or services and the statements made fell within the exception to the Anti-SLAPP statute carved out by Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(c). The court agreed that Staff Pro was primarily engaged in the business of selling event staffing services. However, Staff Pro's actions in filing the underlying action did not constitute "representations of fact about [Staff Pro's] or a business competitor's business operations, goods or services, that is made for the purpose of obtaining approval for, promoting, or securing sales or leases of, or commercial transactions in, [Staff Pro's] goods or services" as required by the statute. Additionally, the e-mail in question did not contain statements regarding Staff Pro's or CSC's goods or services but rather provided a summary of what was happening in the litigation. Therefore, the commercial speech exception did not apply. Because plaintiffs could not show a probability of prevailing on any of their claims, the Anti-SLAPP motion was properly granted (152 Cal. App. 4th 1043, 1053-1055) .

In Sunset Millennium Associates v. LHO Grafton Hotel (2006) 146 Cal. App. 4th 300, 52 Cal. Rptr. 3d 828 , plaintiff sued defendant for breach of contract and injunctive and declaratory relief based on a written agreement between the two parties not to challenge the expansion of the other party's hotels. Plaintiff alleged that defendant had objected to the city's approval of an environmental impact report relating to an expansion of plaintiff's hotel. Defendant filed an Anti-SLAPP motion, which the trial court granted. Plaintiff appealed.

On appeal, the issue was whether the action fell within the exception to the Anti-SLAPP statute stated in Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(c). The exception states that the Anti-SLAPP statute does not apply to a cause of action brought against a defendant primarily engaged in the business of selling or leasing goods or services, providing certain other circumstances exist. The challenged statement or conduct must be a representation of fact about defendant's or a business competitor's operations. In this case, defendant was in the business of selling or leasing goods or services, and the challenged conduct did consist of statements about plaintiff's business operations. However, the statements were not made for the purpose of "obtaining approval for, promoting, or securing sales or leases of, or commercial transactions in, [defendant's] goods or services"; rather, they were made during the environmental impact report approval process. The statements also were not made in the course of delivering defendant's goods or services. Because neither of these elements applied to the facts of the case, the exception did not apply (146 Cal. App. 4th 300, 312) .

[d] The Burden of Proving the Applicability of the Exception Set Forth in Code Civ. Proc. § 426.17(c)(1) Is On the Plaintiff

In Simpson Strong-Tie Co., Inc. v. Gore (2010) 49 Cal. 4th 12, 109 Cal. Rptr. 3d 329, 230 P.3d 1117 , a corporation in the business of designing, manufacturing, and marketing building products, including metal connectors and other hardware for use in wood frame construction, which, at the recommendation of the United States Environmental Protection Agency, industry stopped selling lumber treated with chromium copper arsenate, due to health hazards posed by its arsenic content and substituted alternative lumber products, such as wood treated with alkaline copper quaternary and copper azole, which were "more corrosive" to galvanized steel products, which the corporation communicated to the building industry and to the public generally through its Web site, annual catalog, articles in engineering and building magazines, bulletins issued to the building industry, point-of-sale information, and annual report, sued a California attorney who had arranged for an advertisement to be placed in a newspaper to locate individuals who had purchased galvanized fasteners and connectors manufactured by plaintiff and two other companies, which together were responsible for most of the metal fasteners sold to consumers in California. In a letter sent before filing the complaint, counsel for plaintiff advised defendant that the advertisement falsely implied that plaintiff's galvanized screws failed to meet appropriate industry standards and that a valid claim could exist against plaintiff based upon negligence or product liability, demanded defendant cease publication of any further defamatory advertisements directed at plaintiff and reserved plaintiff's right to recover against defendant for any costs or damages that might have already resulted from the advertisement or any similar publication. Defendant did not respond to the letter or to a subsequent letter indicating that defendant's failure to respond suggested the claims were without merit, and the newspaper advertisement was false, misleading, and defamatory, and that unless defendant could present specific evidence to support the charges, plaintiff intended to pursue its defamation claim against defendant's firm and vindicate its rights. Prior to filing the action, plaintiff retained an opinion survey firm to confirm that the advertisement had caused injury to plaintiff's reputation. The survey revealed that selected shoppers, after reading the advertisement, were significantly more likely to believe that plaintiff's galvanized screws were defective or of low quality and were significantly less likely to purchase galvanized screws manufactured by plaintiff. Plaintiff then filed the action for defamation, trade libel, false advertising, and unfair business practices, seeking compensatory and punitive damages as well as injunctive relief. Defendant moved to strike the complaint under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16, and plaintiff invoked the exemption to the anti-SLAPP law for commercial speech under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(c). The trial court granted the special motion to strike and entered a judgment of dismissal, finding defendant had made a threshold showing that the statements were made in furtherance of his right of petition or free speech on an issue of public interest, plaintiff had failed to demonstrate a probability of prevailing on the merits, and the commercial speech exemption did not apply because the advertisement made no statement about a business competitor's products or services. The Court of Appeal affirmed in a published opinion. The court first assigned the burden of persuasion with respect to the applicability of the section 425.17(c) exemption to plaintiff as the party invoking the exemption, disagreeing with Brill Media Co., LLC v. TCW Group, Inc. (2005) 132 Cal. App. 4th 324, 33 Cal. Rptr. 3d 371 , which had assigned the burden to the defendant to establish that the cause of action is not exempt. The court next determined that while the advertisement was made for the purpose of promoting defendant's services as an attorney, plaintiff's causes of action did not arise from any representation of fact about defendant's or a competitor's services or business operations. Concluding that the anti-SLAPP statute applied and that plaintiff had failed to establish a probability of prevailing on any of its claims, the Court of Appeal affirmed the order granting the special motion to strike and the judgment of dismissal. The California Supreme Court granted review to address the conflict in the case law concerning the construction of the commercial speech exemption to the anti-SLAPP statute (49 Cal. 4th 12, 17-21) .

The California Supreme Court affirmed the judgment of the Court of Appeal. The Court held that although Evid. Code § 500, providing that, except as otherwise provided by law, a party has the burden of proof as to each fact the existence or nonexistence of which is essential to the claim for relief or defense the party is asserting, superseded former Evid. Code § 1981, which had provided that the burden of proof was on the party holding the affirmative of the issue, the change in wording did not upset the traditional rule of statutory construction that when a statute has exemptions, exceptions or matters that will avoid the statute, the burden is on the claimant to show that the claimant falls within that category. Because establishing the commercial speech exemption was essential to plaintiff's defense to the special motion to strike, Evid. Code § 500 placed the burden of proof on plaintiff. Further, although the ordinary rules governing allocation of the burden of proof may be disregarded for policy reasons in exceptional circumstances, the reasons justifying a shift in the normal allocation of the burden of proof must be compelling, and plaintiff failed to identify any compelling justification. Plaintiff failed to explain how a plaintiff would be significantly disadvantaged in demonstrating that the statement or conduct underlying its cause of action consisted of representations of fact about the defendant's or a business competitor's business operations, goods, or services; that the defendant's statement or conduct was made for the purpose of obtaining approval for, promoting, or securing sales or leases of, or commercial transactions in, the person's goods or services or in the course of delivering the person's goods or services; or that the intended audience was an actual or potential buyer or customer, or a person likely to repeat the statement to, or otherwise influence, an actual or potential buyer or customer, as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(c)(1), (2)). Thus, the burden of proof as to the applicability of the commercial speech exemption falls on the party seeking the benefit of it, i.e., the plaintiff (49 Cal. 4th 12, 22-26) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 161 MOTIONS TO STRIKE: ANTI-SLAPP
PART II. FORMS
A. Supporting Special Motion to Strike

16-161 California Points & Authorities §§ 161.37-161.59

[Reserved]

§§ 161.37[Reserved]

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 161 MOTIONS TO STRIKE: ANTI-SLAPP
PART II. FORMS
PART B. Opposing Special Motion to Strike

16-161 California Points & Authorities § 161.60

§ 161.60 Opposing Special Motion to Strike Action Against Constitutionally Privileged Conduct (SLAPP Suit) [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(b)]--Grounds for Motion Lacking

[1] FORM

SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA
COUNTY OF _____

	)
	)	NO. _____
_____ [name],	)	MEMORANDUM IN OPPOSITION OF SPECIAL
Plaintiff,	)	MOTION TO STRIKE PURSUANT TO CODE CIV.
vs.	)	PROC. § 425.16
_____ [name],	)	Date: _____
Defendant.	)	Time: _____
	)	Location: _____
	)	[Judge: _____]
	)	Date Action Filed: _____
		[Trial Date: _____]

THE SPECIAL MOTION TO STRIKE SHOULD NOT BE GRANTED BECAUSE THE DEFENDANT'S ACTS WERE NOT IN FURTHERANCE OF DEFENDANT'S RIGHT OF _____ [PETITION and/or FREE SPEECH] IN CONNECTION WITH A PUBLIC ISSUE AS DEFINED IN CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE SECTION 425.16(e).

A. Defendant Bears Initial Burden to Make a Prima Facie Showing. A defendant who brings a special motion to strike under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16 bears the initial burden of making a prima facie showing that the plaintiff's cause of action arose from the defendant's acts in furtherance of the defendant's right of petition or free speech under the United States or California Constitution in connection with a public issue. A defendant's special motion to strike should be denied if the defendant fails to meet this initial prima facia showing (Guessous v. Chrome Hearts, LLC (2009) 179

Cal. App. 4th 1177, 102 Cal. Rptr. 3d 214 ; Castillo v. Pacheco (2007) 150 Cal. App. 4th 242, 251, 58 Cal. Rptr. 3d 305 ; Kurwa v. Harrington, Foxx, Dubrow & Canter, LLP (2007) 146 Cal. App. 4th 841, 849, 53 Cal. Rptr. 3d 256 ; Dyer v. Childress (2007) 147 Cal. App. 4th 1273, 1283, 55 Cal. Rptr. 3d 544 ; Consumer Justice Center v. Trimedica International, Inc. (2003) 107 Cal. App. 4th 595, 599-605, 132 Cal. Rptr. 2d 191).

B. Defendant Must Show a Lawful Exercise of Constitutional Rights. Even if the acts alleged in the complaint are done in furtherance of the constitutional rights of free speech or petition for redress of grievances in connection with a public issue, if those acts are themselves illegal, defendant is not entitled to protection under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16 (Flatley v. Mauro (2006) 39 Cal. 4th 299, 320, 46 Cal. Rptr. 3d 606 ; Cohen v. Brown (2009) 173 Cal. App. 4th 302, 318, 93 Cal. Rptr. 3d 24 ; Novartis Vaccines and Diagnostics, Inc. v. Stop Huntingdon Animal Cruelty USA, Inc. (2006) 143 Cal. App. 4th 1284, 1296, 50 Cal. Rptr. 3d 27 ; Paul for Council v. Hanyecz (2001) 85 Cal. App. 4th 1356, 1363-1367, 102 Cal. Rptr. 2d 864).

C. Anti-SLAPP Motion Must Be Denied if Plaintiff Demonstrates a Probability of Prevailing on the Claim. Even if the initial burden is met that the plaintiff's cause of action arose from the defendant's acts in furtherance of the rights of petition or free speech, the Anti-SLAPP motion should be denied if the opposing party demonstrates the probability that the plaintiff will prevail on the claim; that is, the opposing party demonstrates that the complaint is both legally sufficient and supported by a sufficient prima facie showing of facts to sustain a favorable judgment if the evidence submitted by the plaintiff is credited (Zamos v. Stroud (2004) 32 Cal. 4th 958, 965, 12 Cal. Rptr. 3d 54, 87 P.3d 802 ; Tichinin v. City of Morgan Hill (2009) 177 Cal. App. 4th 1049, 1062-1089, 99 Cal. Rptr. 3d 661 ; Sycamore Ridge Apartments v. Naumann (2007) 157 Cal. App. 4th 1385, 1412, 69 Cal. Rptr. 3d 561).

D. Analysis of Plaintiff's Probability of Prevailing on Claim Must Include All Available Defenses. When ruling on the second prong of an Anti-SLAPP motion, the court must take into account not only the substantive merits of plaintiffs' complaint, but also all available defenses (Traditional Cat Assn., Inc. v. Gilbreath (2004) 118 Cal. App. 4th 392, 398, 13 Cal. Rptr. 3d 353).

[Optional] E. Merely Having Some Connection With Official Proceedings Does Not Mean Anti-SLAPP Protections Apply. Code of Civil Procedure Section 425.16 does not accord Anti-SLAPP protection to suits arising from any act having any connection, however remote, with an official proceeding; the statements or writings in question must occur in connection with an issue under consideration or review in the proceeding (Hylton v. Frank E. Rogozienski, Inc. (2009) 177 Cal. App. 4th 1264, 1273, 99 Cal. Rptr. 3d 805 ; United States Fire Ins. Co. v. Sheppard, Mullin, Richter & Hampton (2009) 171 Cal. App. 4th 1617, 1624-1629, 90 Cal. Rptr. 3d 669 ; Wang v. Wal-Mart Real Estate Business Trust (2007) 153 Cal. App. 4th 790, 810-811, 63 Cal. Rptr. 3d 575 ; Kolar v. Donahue, McIntosh & Hammerton (2006) 145 Cal. App. 4th 1532, 1540, 52 Cal. Rptr. 3d 712 ; Blackburn v. Brady (2004) 116 Cal. App. 4th 670, 10 Cal. Rptr. 3d 696). The scope of the protections afforded to litigation-related communications under the Anti-SLAPP statute and that afforded by the litigation privilege (Civ. Code § 47) are not identical, and to suggest that nearly any attempt at negotiation is covered by the privilege, especially when attorneys are involved, is unduly overbroad, and will not support a claim of official proceedings for purposes of applying the Anti-SLAPP statute (Haneline Pacific Properties, LLC v. May (2008) 167 Cal. App. 4th 311, 319-320, 83 Cal. Rptr. 3d 919).

[Optional] F. Mere Acts of Governance Are Not Exercises of Free Speech or Petition. Acts of governance mandated by law are not exercises of free speech or petition within the meaning of the Anti-SLAPP statute of Code of Civil Procedure Section 425.16 (San Ramon Valley Fire Protection Dist. v. Contra Costa County Employees' Retirement Assoc. (2004) 125 Cal. App. 4th 343, 354, 22 Cal. Rptr. 3d 724).

[Optional] G. Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17 Applies Retroactively. Code of Civil Procedure Section 425.17 is properly characterized as a procedural statute applicable to pending actions, and the new statutory scheme may be applied to pending actions without triggering retrospectivity concerns (Brenton v. Metabolife International, Inc. (2004) 116 Cal. App. 4th 679, 689-690, 10 Cal. Rptr. 3d 702).

[Optional] H. Plaintiff Opposing a Late Anti-SLAPP Motion Need Not Demonstrate Prejudice. A plaintiff need not establish prejudice for a late-filed Anti-SLAPP motion (Olsen v. Harbison (2005) 134 Cal. App. 4th 278, 286-287, 35 Cal. Rptr. 3d 909).

[Optional] I. Defendants Who Represent Themselves in Litigation Are Not Entitled to Attorney Fees When Prevailing on an Anti-SLAPP Motion. A defendant who performs his or her own legal work is not entitled to recover attorney fees under Code of Civil Procedure section 425.16(c) (Witte v. Kaufman (2006) 141 Cal. App. 4th 1201, 1213, 46 Cal. Rptr. 3d 845).

[Optional] J. The Anti-SLAPP Statute Does Not Apply to Non-Judicial Proceedings. By its own terms, Code of Civil Procedure section 425.16 only applies to court proceedings (Garretson v. Post (2007) 156 Cal. App. 4th 1508, 1521, 68 Cal. Rptr. 3d 230 ; Sheppard v. Lightpost Museum Fund (2006) 146 Cal. App. 4th 315, 323, 52 Cal. Rptr. 3d 821). The Anti-SLAPP statute only applies to a "cause of action," which must be contained in a complaint, cross-complaint, petition or similar pleading initiating a judicial proceeding; and a request for a subpoena does not fit this requirement (Tendler v. www.jewishsurvivors.blogspot.com (2008) 164 Cal. App. 4th 802, 807, 79 Cal. Rptr. 3d 407). A lawsuit existing before the activity that is the subject of the Anti-SLAPP motion does not automatically make the activity part of a court proceeding (McConnell v. Innovative Artists Talent and Literary Agency (2009) 175 Cal. App. 4th 169, 176, 96 Cal. Rptr. 3d 1).

[Optional] K. A Plaintiff Prevailing on an Anti-SLAPP Motion Shall Be Awarded Costs and Attorney's Fees if the Court Finds the Motion Is Frivolous or Is Solely Intended to Cause Unnecessary Delay. Code of Civil Procedure section 425.16(c) authorizes an attorney's fee award to a plaintiff if the court finds defendant's Anti-SLAPP motion is frivolous (Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(c); see Ketchum v. Moses (2001) 24 Cal. 4th 1122, 1131, 104 Cal. Rptr. 2d 377 ; see also Premier Medical Management Systems, Inc. v. California Ins. Guarantee (2008) 163 Cal. App. 4th 550, 555, 77 Cal. Rptr. 3d 695). A party prevailing on an Anti-SLAPP motion may seek an attorney fee award by three different avenues: as a part of the motion to strike itself, by a subsequent noticed motion, or as part of a cost memorandum at the conclusion of the litigation (Carpenter v. Jack In The Box Corp. (2007) 151 Cal. App. 4th 454, 461, 59 Cal. Rptr. 3d 839).

[Optional] L. An Amorphous Public Interest Is Insufficient to Invoke the Anti-SLAPP Statute. The fact that a broad and amorphous public interest can be connected to a specific dispute is not sufficient to meet the statutory requirements of Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16 (World Financial Group, Inc. v. HBW Ins. & Financial Services, Inc. (2009) 172 Cal. App. 4th 1561, 1573, 92 Cal. Rptr. 3d 227).

[Optional] M. Code of Civil Procedure § 425.16 Only Applies When First Amendment Free Speech or Petition Rights Are At Stake. Code of Civil Procedure Section 425.16 does not come into play unless the right of free speech or the right to petition is involved. The cause of action itself must be based on the speech or petitioning activity. If neither of those rights is at stake, Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16 is inapplicable, irrespective of whether the subject of the dispute may otherwise be a matter of public interest (Graffiti Protective Coatings, Inc. v. City of Pico Rivera (2010) 181 Cal. App. 4th 1207, 104 Cal. Rptr. 3d 692 ; Turner v. Vista Pointe Ridge Homeowners Assn. (2009) 180 Cal. App. 4th 676, 102 Cal. Rptr. 3d 750).
Dated: _____.

Respectfully submitted,
_____ [firm name, if any]
By: _____ [signature]
_____ [typed name]
Attorney for Defendant _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in opposition to a defendant's special motion to strike under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16 when the grounds for the motion are lacking, that is, when the defendant's acts were not done "in furtherance of ... [the defendant's] right of petition or free speech under the United States or California Constitution in connection with a public issue," as that phrase is defined in Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(e).

Counsel should insert argument in the form, to show what element or elements of the definition is missing from the case. In doing so, counsel must be aware that under Briggs v. Eden Council for Hope and Opportunity (1999) 19 Cal. 4th 1106, 81 Cal. Rptr. 2d 471, 969 P.2d 564 , cases that have narrowly construed the scope Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16 have been disapproved. In Briggs the court held that under Section 425.16, a defendant moving to strike a cause of action arising from a statement made before, or in connection with an issue under consideration by, a legally authorized official proceeding need not separately demonstrate that the statement concerned an issue of public significance. To the extent they hold to the contrary, the Court disapproved Linsco/Private Ledger, Inc. v. Investors Arbitration Services, Inc. (1996) 50 Cal. App. 4th 1633, 1639-1640, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 613 , Ericsson GE Mobile Communications, Inc. v. C.S.I. Telecommunications Engineers (1996) 49 Cal. App. 4th 1591, 57 Cal. Rptr. 2d 491 , Zhao v. Wong (1996) 48 Cal. App. 4th 1114, 55 Cal. Rptr. 2d 909 , and Mission Oaks Ranch, Ltd. v. County of Santa Barbara (1998) 65 Cal. App. 4th 713, 77 Cal. Rptr. 2d 1 [Briggs v. Eden Council for Hope and Opportunity (1999) 19 Cal. 4th 1106, 1123 n.10, 81 Cal. Rptr. 2d 471, 969 P.2d 564] . The analysis should be based on each of the four independent clauses of Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(e) [see Briggs v. Eden Council for Hope and Opportunity (1999) 19 Cal. 4th 1106, 1117, 81 Cal. Rptr. 2d 471, 969 P.2d 564] .

[b] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, this form may be used to oppose the memorandum set out in § 161.30.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Defendant Bears Initial Burden to Make a Prima Facie Showing

In Guessous v. Chrome Hearts, LLC (2009) 179 Cal. App. 4th 1177, 102 Cal. Rptr. 3d 214 , a United States citizen living in California and a French limited liability company with its principal place of business in Paris, sued a Delaware limited liability company with its principal place of business in Los Angeles. Defendant had previously sued plaintiffs in federal court twice for trademark and copyright infringement with respect to jewelry offered for sale by one of the plaintiffs. As a result, defendant and the American plaintiff entered into a written settlement agreement containing a covenant that defendant would not sue plaintiff for trademark infringement, trade dress infringement, unfair competition, or similar or related claims whose gravamen was alleged consumer or buyer confusion or potential confusion, including any claim based on the alleged similarity between the overall look and feel of defendant's products and products designed, manufactured, or sold by the American plaintiff. The covenant applied worldwide to existing lines of clothing and jewelry manufactured and sold by the parties and to future products not yet designed, manufactured, or sold. After defendant opened its own boutique in Paris, it sued the French plaintiff in the Paris Court of First Instance (Tribunal de Grande Instance), alleging infringement of defendant's trademarks and seeking to enjoin that plaintiff from using these marks. The French court enjoined the French plaintiff from using defendant's marks. The French plaintiff appealed, and the Paris Court of Appeals (Cour d'appel de Paris) affirmed the lower court. The French plaintiff appealed to the French Supreme Court (Cour de Cassation), and filed a request for reappraisal in the Paris Court of Appeals. These appeals were still pending at the time of the trial court's ruling on the motion to strike at issue here. Defendant filed a second action against the French plaintiff in France, alleging infringement of its trademark, which was also still pending. Plaintiffs then filed suit in Los Angeles against defendant for breach of contract and declaratory relief, alleging that the filing of the French actions violated the covenant not to sue. They also sought to permanently enjoin defendant from proceeding with the two trademark infringement actions being prosecuted in France, and from ever filing another lawsuit against plaintiffs anywhere in the world alleging trademark infringement, trade dress infringement, unfair competition, or any similar or related claim, with certain exceptions. In response, defendant filed a special motion to strike the complaint under the anti-SLAPP statute. The trial court ruled that the statute applied to plaintiffs' causes of action, but found that plaintiffs had established a prima facie case for their claims and denied the motion (179 Cal. App. 4th 1177, 1180-1182) .

The Court of Appeal reversed, holding that the anti-SLAPP statute did not apply to plaintiffs' claims. The court found that the express language of the anti-SLAPP statute limits motions to strike to causes of action arising from any act "in furtherance of the person's right of petition or free speech under the United States or California Constitution in connection with a public issue" (Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(b)(1)), and it clearly limits the petitioning or free speech activity to that made pursuant to rights granted by the United States or California Constitutions, and neither Constitution grants a United States citizen the right to petition a foreign government. Plaintiffs' two causes of action were not subject to a special motion to strike under § 425.16, because the first cause of action for breach of contract arose from the lawsuits filed by defendant in France, and the second cause of action for declaratory relief also arose from the filing of the trademark infringement lawsuits in France. The trial court's contrary finding that § 425.16 applied to plaintiffs' declaratory relief claim focused on the requests for prospective declaratory and injunctive relief based on the viability of future actions defendant might file in the United States. However, there was no basis for a prospective grant of protection. Moreover, § 425.16 applies only to a cause of action, not to a remedy. Even if prospective relief could implicate the anti-SLAPP statute, when a cause of action alleges both protected and unprotected activity, a court must examine the cause of action to determine whether protected activity forms the "principal thrust or gravamen" of the claim. It was clear from plaintiffs' complaint that the gravamen of the declaratory relief claim was a request for a determination of the extent to which the covenant not to sue limited defendant's ability to proceed with the two trademark infringement lawsuits filed in France, which constituted the core of the declaratory relief claim and did not implicate conduct protected by the United States or California Constitutions. Plaintiffs' requests for a judicial determination concerning lawsuits filed elsewhere in the world (which therefore included the United States) and an injunction against future lawsuits violating the covenant not to sue were merely incidental to the core claim, and not sufficient to trigger § 425.16. Because the court concluded that defendant failed to meet its initial burden of demonstrating that plaintiffs' causes of action arose from an act in furtherance of the right of petition or free speech under the United States or California Constitutions, the burden never shifted to plaintiffs to demonstrate a probability of prevailing on their claims (179 Cal. App. 4th 1177, 1184-1187) .

In Castillo v. Pacheco (2007) 150 Cal. App. 4th 242, 58 Cal. Rptr. 3d 305 , plaintiffs sued their neighbors for nuisance as a result of numerous ceremonial outdoor fires. In response, defendant neighbors filed an Anti-SLAPP motion, alleging the conduct complained of arose from their conduct in furtherance of their constitutional right of free speech of a religious nature. Defendants claimed the outdoor open fires were a part of a sacred Native American tribal ritual. The trial court denied the motion, holding that the creation of fires is not a constitutionally protected act of speech of petition. Defendants appealed.

The court of appeals affirmed, holding that a cause of action arising from an act in furtherance of a person's free exercise of religion is not subject to an Anti-SLAPP motion. The court noted that Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16 mentions only two of the rights found in the First Amendment: the rights of speech and petition. Although the Legislature amended the statute to mandate a broad interpretation of Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16, the statute still does not "import wholesale the protections of the First Amendment" (150 Cal. App. 4th 242, 252) .

In Kurwa v. Harrington, Foxx, Dubrow & Canter, LLP (2007) 146 Cal. App. 4th 841, 53 Cal. Rptr. 3d 256 , two ophthalmologists formed a corporation to enter into an agreement with an HMO to provide care for the HMO's patients. After a period of time, one of the doctors, Dr. Kislinger, wished to disassociate with Dr. Kurwa and consulted attorney Goldfarb. Goldfarb wrote a letter to the HMO on Dr. Kislinger's behalf, stating that Dr. Kurwa had had his medical license suspended (which was accurate) and that Goldfarb had formed a new medical corporation for Dr. Kislinger. The letter requested that the HMO transfer its provider agreement to the new medical corporation. Based on this letter, the HMO did terminate the prior agreement and enter into a new agreement with Dr. Kislinger's new corporation. Dr. Kurwa filed suit against Dr. Kislinger, the HMO, Goldfarb, and Goldfarb's law firm, Harrington, Foxx, Dubrow & Canter, LLP. Harrington filed a special motion to strike, arguing that the sending of the letter to the HMO constituted protected activity within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(e). The trial court denied the motion, stating that Harrington had failed to establish that the mailing of the letter was protected activity. Harrington appealed.

The court of appeals affirmed, agreeing that writing and sending of the letter was not protected activity under the Anti-SLAPP statute. On appeal, Harrington claimed that the letter was sent in a "public forum," analogizing to cases holding that "speech by mail," such as the mailing of a campaign flyer, is a recognized public forum under the Anti-SLAPP statute. The court held that mailing a letter to the president of the HMO was not analogous to sending a campaign flyer to thousands of people, and that the letter was not sent in a public forum. Additionally, the contents of the letter were not a matter of public interest. In prior cases, courts have held that statements made regarding an issue of public interest to a limited but definable portion of the public in the context of an ongoing controversy are entitled to protection under the Anti-SLAPP statute (see, e.g., Damon v. Ocean Hills Journalism Club (2000) 85 Cal. App. 4th 468, 102 Cal. Rptr. 2d 205 ; Macias v. Hartwell (1997) 55 Cal. App. 4th 669, 64 Cal. Rptr. 2d 222). Nor did the letter concern a matter of interest to the general public. Instead, the letter involved a private matter between the HMO and the two doctors. Therefore, defendant's Anti-SLAPP motion was denied (146 Cal. App. 4th 841, 849) .

Dyer v. Childress (2007) 147 Cal. App. 4th 1273, 55 Cal. Rptr. 3d 544 was a defamation action arising out of the 1994 movie "Reality Bites." Plaintiff Troy Dyer attended film school with defendant Childress, who wrote the screenplay for Reality Bites. The main character in the movie is named Troy Dyer. The lawsuit followed the release of a Tenth Anniversary Edition DVD of the movie, and plaintiff claimed his career as a financial consultant had been negatively affected by association with the movie character. Defendants filed a special motion to strike, claiming the release of the DVD constituted protected activity because the issues addressed in the film were matters of widespread public interest. The trial court denied defendants' motion, and defendants appealed.

The court of appeals affirmed. Defendants contended that because the film Reality Bites addresses topics of broad public interest, the film involved the right of free speech in connection with a public issue or an issue of public importance. The court disagreed, stating that the specific dispute underlying the lawsuit was the alleged misuse of plaintiff's "persona." Because the portrayal of Troy Dyer in the movie is not itself an issue of public interest, the lawsuit was not subject to a special motion to strike regardless of the fact that the movie as a whole might concern issues of public interest (147 Cal. App. 4th 1273, 1283) .

In Consumer Justice Center v. Trimedica International, Inc. (2003) 107 Cal. App. 4th 595, 132 Cal. Rptr. 2d 191 , plaintiffs sued Trimedica for false advertising, consumer fraud and related claims with respect to the product Grobust. Trimedica's literature states that Grobust is a pill that "offers a revolutionary breakthrough that provides a 100% natural alternative to breast implants." According to a "doctor" endorsing Grobust, "Claims of a breast enlargement of one half inch in 45 days have been substantiated." Trimedica filed a special motion to strike pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16 (the Anti-SLAPP statute), arguing the complaint constituted a SLAPP suit because the claims arose from acts in furtherance of Trimedica's rights to petition and to engage in free speech under the federal and California Constitutions. CJC countered by arguing the Anti-SLAPP statute was not intended to protect allegedly false commercial speech. The trial court denied the motion, stating that Trimedica's commercial speech regarding Grobust did not implicate a public issue within the meaning of the Anti-SLAPP statute.

On appeal, the court held defendants were unable to satisfy the first prong of the Anti-SLAPP statute because the commercial speech involved did not implicate a matter of public interest within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(e); defendant's claims of an "herbal product that provides a 100% natural alternative to breast implants" was commercial speech about the specific properties and efficacies of a particular product and not a matter of public interest; if the court were to find a matter of public interest in this case, nearly any product could claim its speech was about a topic of public interest (107 Cal. App. 4th 595, 600-602) .

[b] Defendant Must Show a Lawful Exercise of Constitutional Rights

In Flatley v. Mauro (2006) 39 Cal. 4th 299, 46 Cal. Rptr. 3d 606 , plaintiff was a well-known Irish dance performer who sued defendant, an attorney, for civil extortion, intentional infliction of emotional distress, and wrongful interference with economic advantage. The suit arose out of allegations that plaintiff had raped a woman named Tyna Marie Robertson in a hotel suite in Las Vegas. Plaintiff acknowledged the two had spent the night together, but contended all activities were consensual. Shortly after the encounter between plaintiff and Robertson, defendant Mauro sent plaintiff's attorney a letter making a claim for settlement and making various threats, including the filing of suit and press releases. Plaintiff's attorney called Mauro in response to the letter and Mauro gave the attorney a deadline within which to offer sufficient payment or else they would "go public." Plaintiff did not pay Robertson and Mauro, and Robertson both sued Flatley for battery and intentional infliction of emotional distress and appeared on television with defendant Mauro to describe the alleged rape. In response to plaintiff's lawsuit, defendant Mauro filed an Anti-SLAPP motion, contending that his letter to plaintiff's attorney was a prelitigation settlement offer which was protected by Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(e)(1) and (4). The trial court denied the Anti-SLAPP motion, holding that Mauro had not satisfied his burden of showing that his conduct was protected by the Anti-SLAPP statute. The court of appeal affirmed, holding that Mauro's conduct constituted extortion, and the Supreme Court granted Mauro's petition for review.

The Supreme Court affirmed as well, and in doing so addressed the issue of illegal conduct in connection with the Anti-SLAPP statute. The court noted that, in order to effectuate the Legislature's intent, it has thus far rejected attempts to read into the statute requirements not explicitly contained in the statute. The court discussed with approval Paul for Council v. Hanyecz (2001) 85 Cal. App. 4th 1356, 102 Cal. Rptr. 2d 864 . In Paul, the appellate court held that the activity underlying the litigation--defendants' campaign money laundering--was not a valid activity undertaken in furtherance of defendants' constitutional right of free speech. In Paul, the defendants had conceded the illegal nature of their conduct and therefore there was no factual dispute in this regard. Illegal conduct, the appellate court held, does not fall within the purview of the Anti-SLAPP statute. The Supreme Court explicitly stated its agreement with the Paul rationale in stating that " ... section 425.16 cannot be invoked by a defendant whose assertedly protected activity is illegal as a matter of law and, for that reason, is not protected by constitutional guarantees of free speech and petition" (39 Cal. 4th 299, 317) . The question of whether defendant's conduct was illegal as a matter of law is a preliminary question, and is unrelated to the second prong of the Anti-SLAPP test. The court held that defendant Mauro's letter to plaintiff, along with his subsequent telephone calls, amounted to the crime of extortion as a matter of law. Mauro threatened to publicly accuse plaintiff of rape unless he paid Mauro and Robertson a sum of money. Therefore, Mauro's conduct was not entitled to Anti-SLAPP protection and the trial court properly denied Mauro's special motion to strike (39 Cal. 4th 299, 333) .

Cohen v. Brown (2009) 173 Cal. App. 4th 302, 93 Cal. Rptr. 3d 24 originally arose out of a personal injury suit relating to an automobile accident. Defendant Brown, an attorney, filed suit against those at fault in the automobile accident on behalf of the injured party in the underlying accident. Defendant then asked plaintiff Cohen to associate in on behalf of the plaintiff to assist in the case, as Cohen was both a licensed attorney and physician. Cohen's complaint against Brown alleged, however, that Brown did not disclose that his license to practice law had been suspended. Cohen's complaint further alleged that Brown did not obtain the client's consent to the fee sharing arrangement that Cohen and Brown agreed upon, as required by State Bar rules. Cohen also contended that Brown misrepresented the extent of the work he had done on the case prior to Cohen's involvement. Cohen eventually withdrew, and Brown hired another attorney to associate in. The case eventually settled for $2 million. Brown then informed Cohen that he was not entitled to any portion of the attorney fees, as the client had never consented to any such arrangement. Brown told Cohen, in writing, that he would file a complaint with the State Bar if Cohen did not permit the entire amount of the attorney fees to go to Brown. Cohen responded that the attorney fee portion of the settlement should be kept in a joint account pending determination of the fee dispute, but Brown would not agree to that proposal. Brown then filed a false complaint with the State Bar against Cohen, in the client's name, and told Cohen that he should sign off on the settlement check or else he would live to regret having a State Bar complaint pending against him.

Cohen then filed suit against Brown for intentional misrepresentation, breach of contract, conversion, extortion, unfair competition, unjust enrichment and intentional infliction of emotional distress. In response, Brown filed an Anti-SLAPP motion, alleging that his activities in helping his client file a State Bar complaint against Cohen constituted protected activity. The trial court denied the motion, finding that the filing of the State Bar complaint was illegal and therefore not protected activity. The court of appeals affirmed, stating that the California Supreme Court has held that extortion is not constitutionally protected speech. The record supported the trial court's conclusion that Brown's actions in filing the State Bar complaint constituted extortion. Therefore, the court did not need to reach the issue of whether Cohen showed a probability of prevailing on the merits (173 Cal. App. 4th 302, 318) .

Novartis Vaccines and Diagnostics, Inc. v. Stop Huntingdon Animal Cruelty USA, Inc. (2006) 143 Cal. App. 4th 1284, 50 Cal. Rptr. 3d 27 involved litigation between defendant Stop Huntingdon Animal Cruelty USA, Inc. (SHAC USA) and plaintiff Novartis, which used Huntingdon Life Sciences, a biomedical testing laboratory, in testing some of its products. Novartis filed suit against SHAC USA for injunctive relief, alleging that SHAC USA targeted Novartis employees by breaking windows at their homes, leaving excrement on their doorsteps, setting off piercing alarms in their front yards, threatening further attacks by posting web messages, and vandalizing their cars. In response, SHAC USA filed an Anti-SLAPP motion, claiming the activities complained of arose out of their constitutionally protected rights of petition and free speech in connection with a public issue. The trial court found that SHAC USA had not demonstrated that the conduct complained of arose from protected activities. The court therefore denied SHAC USA's motion, and SHAC USA appealed (143 Cal. App. 4th 1284, 1295) .

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that the gravamen of plaintiff's complaint was not speech, but rather acts of harassment, infliction of emotional distress, intrusion, and trespass. SHAC USA conceded that the acts complained of were unlawful and there was evidence that SHAC USA conspired with the demonstrators to commit the unlawful acts. The court, citing Flatley v. Mauro (2006) 39 Cal. 4th 299 , stated that where the defendant concedes, or the evidence establishes, that the allegedly protected speech or activity was illegal as a matter of law, the defendant is not entitled to Anti-SLAPP protection. The trial court was therefore correcting in denying defendant's Anti-SLAPP motion (143 Cal. App. 4th 1284, 1296).

In Paul for Council v. Hanyecz (2001) 85 Cal. App. 4th 1356, 102 Cal. Rptr. 2d 864 , a political candidate who unsuccessfully ran for city council filed an action against several defendants who had illegally laundered campaign contributions to plaintiff's opponent. The defendants filed an Anti-SLAPP motion to strike, arguing that their campaign activities were covered by Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16. The trial court ruled in favor of the defendants and dismissed the action after the plaintiff failed to establish a probability of success on his claims (85 Cal. App. 4th 1356, 1359) .

The court of appeal reversed the trial court's ruling and reinstated the action. The court concluded that the making of a political campaign contribution is a type of political speech, and "[a] contribution serves as a general expression of support for the candidate and his views ... ." However, the court next addressed Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(a), the preamble of that statute, which states that the statute was enacted to combat suits brought primarily to chill the valid exercise of a defendant's constitutional rights of speech and petition. The probability that the Legislature intended to give defendants protection from a lawsuit based on injuries they are alleged to have caused by their illegal campaign money laundering scheme "is as unlikely as the probability that such protection would exist for them if they injured plaintiff while robbing a bank to obtain the money for the campaign contributions or while hijacking a car to drive the campaign contributions to the post office for mailing." Under the facts demonstrated by this record, the court could not permit the defendants to wrap themselves in this vital legislation. While it is technically true that laundering campaign contributions is an act in furtherance of the giving of such contributions, that is, in furtherance of an act of free speech, the court rejected the notion that the statute exists to protect such illegal activity. Because the defendants did not show that plaintiff's suit was brought primarily to chill a valid exercise of their constitutional rights of free speech or petition for redress of grievances in connection with a public issue, plaintiff had no obligation to establish a probability that he would prevail on his causes of action, and the trial court was therefore required to deny defendants' motion to strike plaintiff's causes of action (85 Cal. App. 4th 1356, 1364-1367) .

[c] Anti-SLAPP Motion Must Be Denied if Plaintiff Demonstrates a Probability of Prevailing on the Claim

In Zamos v. Stroud (2004) 32 Cal. 4th 958, 12 Cal. Rptr. 3d 54, 87 P.3d 802 , the plaintiff brought a case for malicious prosecution. The question presented was whether an attorney could be held liable for malicious prosecution when he commenced a lawsuit properly but then continued to prosecute it after learning it was not supported by probable cause. The parties agree that plaintiffs' malicious prosecution action arises from acts in furtherance of defendants' right of petition or free speech. Thus, the issue is whether plaintiffs presented evidence in opposition to defendants' Anti-SLAPP motion that, if believed by the trier of fact, was sufficient to support a judgment in plaintiffs' favor. In opposition to defendants' motion, plaintiffs presented evidence that defendants were given transcripts shortly after the fraud lawsuit was filed that showed that defendants knew or should have known that the fraud lawsuit had no merit. Plaintiff presented evidence in support of the Anti-SLAPP motion to show that the facts available to Stroud at the time the lawsuit was filed were sufficient to support a cause of action for fraud. But in opposition to the motion, Zamos presented evidence that Stroud was given transcripts shortly after the fraud lawsuit was filed that, Zamos contends, show that Stroud knew or should have known that the fraud lawsuit had no merit. The trial court dismissed the malicious prosecution claim after granting defendants' motion to strike. The appellate court reversed, finding a likelihood of success on the plaintiff's claim.

In a case of first impression, the supreme court affirmed the decision of the court of appeal, finding that plaintiffs presented evidence in opposition to defendants' Anti-SLAPP motion that, if believed by the trier of fact, was sufficient to support a judgment in plaintiffs' favor. The court conclude an attorney may be held liable for malicious prosecution for continuing to prosecute a lawsuit discovered to lack probable cause (32 Cal. 4th 958, 973) .

In Tichinin v. City of Morgan Hill (2009) 177 Cal. App. 4th 1049, 99 Cal. Rptr. 3d 661 , an attorney sued a city council under 42 U.S.C. § 1983, after the council adopted a resolution condemning the attorney for hiring a private investigator to conduct surveillance of the city manager and then denying that he had done so, alleging the city unlawfully retaliated against him for exercising his constitutional rights. The city answered and filed an anti-SLAPP motion under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16 to strike the action. After a hearing, the trial court granted the anti-SLAPP motion, struck the amended complaint, awarded the city attorney's fees, and entered judgment (177 Cal. App. 4th 1049, 1055-1060) .

The Court of Appeal reversed, holding that the trial court erred in granting the motion. In conducting an independent review of the city's anti-SLAPP motion, the court articulated the two fundamental issues as whether the § 1983 action was based on activity by the city that qualified for protection under the anti-SLAPP statute; and if so, whether the attorney made a prima facie showing of facts that would support judgment in his favor (177 Cal. App. 4th 1049, 1061) . The attorney conceded that his action was based on acts by the City qualifying for protection under the anti-SLAPP statute, and the court agreed (177 Cal. App. 4th 1049, 1061) . The court then found, however, that the attorney showed a probability of prevailing on the merits of his § 1983 action by demonstrating that the complaint was both legally sufficient and supported by a sufficient prima facie showing of facts to sustain a favorable judgment if the evidence submitted by the plaintiff was credited. The city conceded that the acts underlying plaintiff's claims were performed under color of state law, and the court agreed. The court then found that he made a prima facie showing that he was engaged in conduct protected by the First Amendment of petitioning the government for redress and free speech, the city's actions would have deterred or chilled a person of ordinary firmness from engaging in that protected conduct, and the city's actions were motivated, at least in part, by his protected conduct; and the record did not conclusively establish any fact that would negate a requisite element of plaintiff's claims or preclude his success on the merits as a matter of law (177 Cal. App. 4th 1049, 1062-1089) .

Sycamore Ridge Apartments v. Naumann (2007) 157 Cal. App. 4th 1385, 69 Cal. Rptr. 3d 561 was a lawsuit for malicious prosecution brought by plaintiff Sycamore Ridge against a multitude of defendants. The malicious prosecution suit stemmed from a prior suit by a group of 45 plaintiffs who had lived and/or worked at plaintiff's apartment complex. The initial suit alleged that plaintiff had failed to maintain the apartments in a habitable condition and that plaintiff had engaged in unfair business practices with respect to its operation of the apartments. One of the defendants, Powell, developed poor health during the first suit and eventually dismissed her portion of the suit against the apartment complex owner with prejudice in exchange for a waiver of costs. Sycamore Ridge then filed a malicious prosecution suit against Powell and her attorneys. In response, defendants filed an Anti-SLAPP motion. The trial court denied the motion as to Powell and one set of attorneys, and granted the motion as to another set of attorneys. Both rulings were appealed.

The court of appeals reversed as to the Anti-SLAPP motion the trial court had granted, and affirmed as to the other ruling, finding that in both cases Sycamore Ridge had demonstrated a probability of prevailing on its malicious prosecution claim. Because filing a lawsuit constitutes an exercise of a party's right of petition, the malicious prosecution suit arose from protected activity within the meaning of the Anti-SLAPP statute. The question on appeal was whether Sycamore Ridge had demonstrated a probability of prevailing on its malicious prosecution claim. The court of appeals ruled that, as to both sets of defendants, it had. Sycamore Ridge was required to plead and prove that (1) the prior action was commenced by or at the direction of the defendant and was pursued to a termination in Sycamore Ridge's favor; (2) was brought without probable cause; and (3) was initiated with malice. The court held that voluntary dismissal is considered a favorable termination. Additionally, Powell's interrogatory responses established that she was not claiming to have suffered any personal injuries, property damage, or lost income, yet her attorneys continued to prosecute a lawsuit seeking such damages and even filed a statement of damages on Powell's behalf. Finally, there was evidence of malicious intent in that the defendants continued to prosecute Powell's suit although they were aware there was no factual basis for most of the claims. Sycamore Ridge therefore met its burden of establishing a probability of prevailing on its claim, and the trial court's ruling granting one of the Anti-SLAPP motions was reversed (157 Cal. App. 4th 1385, 1412-1413) .

[d] Analysis of Plaintiff's Probability of Prevailing on Claim Must Include All Available Defenses

In Traditional Cat Assn., Inc. v. Gilbreath (2004) 118 Cal. App. 4th 392, 13 Cal. Rptr. 3d 353 , plaintiffs and defendants were all interested and involved in cat breeding. Initially, all parties were involved in an organization called Traditional Cat Association (TCA). When a dispute developed amongst the officers and directors of TCA, the president of TCA formed another organization called The Traditional Cat Association, Inc. (TTCA). TTCA then sued for TCA for various causes of action, including conversion, misappropriation of funds, copyright infringement, unfair competition, trademark, and trade secret infringement. In response to this lawsuit, one of the defendants started a website to track the status of the litigation. The website was very unflattering to the plaintiff, who had started TTCA. This led plaintiff and TTCA to file the instant action for defamation, unfair competition, and conversion. Defendants filed an Anti-SLAPP motion in response.

The trial court found that the statements on the website were made in furtherance of defendants' rights of petition and free speech within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(b)(1). However, the court denied the defendants' motion because it found plaintiffs had a probability of prevailing on the merits, despite a viable statute of limitations defense on defendants' part. The court of appeals reversed, holding that the court must take into account not only the substantive merits of plaintiffs' complaint, but also all available defenses, when ruling on the second prong of the Anti-SLAPP statute. An analysis of the timeliness of plaintiffs' complaint for defamation should have been taken into account in ruling on the Anti-SLAPP motion. Because the defamation cause of action was barred by the statute of limitations, defendants' Anti-SLAPP motion should have been granted (118 Cal. App. 4th 392, 402) .

[e] Merely Having Some Connection With Official Proceedings Does Not Mean Anti-SLAPP Protections Apply

Hylton v. Frank E. Rogozienski, Inc. (2009) 177 Cal. App. 4th 1264, 99 Cal. Rptr. 3d 805 was an action by plaintiff against his former attorney. Defendant attorney represented plaintiff in a dispute with the software company plaintiff had founded. The software company, DivX, terminated plaintiff and failed to notify him that it was exercising its right to purchase unvested stock shares, as required by the founder stock purchase agreement between plaintiff and DivX. Defendant attorney advised plaintiff that he should file a wrongful termination suit and seek to confirm ownership of the stock at issue. The attorney induced plaintiff to sign a contingency agreement whereby defendant attorney would recover one-third of all money collected as a result of the suit, including one-third of the stock. Based on advice from the attorney, plaintiff settled his claims with DivX and defendant attorney received one-third of the stock, which had a value of $6 million. The instant action was an action by plaintiff against his former attorney for rescission of the contingency agreement, restitution of the stock shares, declaratory relief and breach of fiduciary duty. The complaint alleged that plaintiff's ownership of the stock was never in dispute and that the attorney had induced him to enter into an unconscionable fee agreement. In short, defendant attorney had schemed to recover an excessive fee by convincing plaintiff that legal action was necessary to recover the stock. In response to plaintiff's complaint, defendant filed an Anti-SLAPP motion, claiming the challenged conduct arose out of his protective activity in connection with his representation of plaintiff in the wrongful termination and stock recovery action. The trial court disagreed, denying his motion on the basis that plaintiff's complaint did not arise from protected activity.

The court of appeals affirmed. Under established case law, courts must examine the principal thrust or gravamen of the complaint to determine whether the Anti-SLAPP statute applies (see, e.g., Ramona Unified School Dist. v. Tsiknas (2005) 135 Cal. App. 4th 510, 37 Cal. Rptr. 3d 381). The "core injury-producing conduct" must rest on protected speech or petitioning activity in order for the statute to apply (Martinez v. Metabolife Internat., Inc. 113 Cal. App. 4th 181, 189, 6 Cal. Rptr. 3d 494 (2003) . In this case, the gravamen of plaintiff's complaint was that defendant falsely advised him there was doubt about his entitlement to the stock and schemed to recover an excessive fee. Those activities were not protected under the Anti-SLAPP statute, and therefore the trial court was correct in denying defendant's motion (177 Cal. App. 4th 1264, 1275) .

In United States Fire Ins. Co. v. Sheppard, Mullin, Richter & Hampton (2009) 171 Cal. App. 4th 1617, 90 Cal. Rptr. 3d 669 , defendant law firm represented plaintiff in asbestos litigation involving Kelly-Moore paint in 2001. Plaintiff alleged it had entrusted defendant with confidential information during the course of that litigation. In 2006, plaintiff was sued in litigation involving Plant Insulation Company, a defendant in additional asbestos litigation. Plant alleged that plaintiff owed it a duty to defend in the litigation. In the instant litigation, plaintiff alleged that defendant was representing asbestos creditors in the Plant litigation. Because of defendant's representation of plaintiff in the Kelly-Moore litigation, and the similarities regarding the insurance policy provisions involved in the two cases, plaintiff alleged defendant possessed confidential information giving rise to a conflict of interest. Plaintiff's complaint sought declaratory relief and a general request for damages resulting from the breach of the duties of loyalty and confidentiality. In response to the complaint, defendant filed an Anti-SLAPP motion, alleging its representation in the lawsuits was in furtherance of its rights of petition and free speech. The trial court agreed, finding the complaint implicated protected activity.

The court of appeals reversed. The court noted that recent case law has held that not all attorney conduct in connection with litigation and in connection with representing clients is protected by the Anti-SLAPP statute (171 Cal. App. 4th 1617, 1624 ; citing California Back Specialists Medical Group v. Rand (2008) 160 Cal. App. 4th 1032, 1035, 73 Cal. Rptr. 3d 268). In the instant case, the event giving rise to the cause of action for breach of loyalty is the acceptance of employment by the adverse client. Thus, the "principal thrust" of the misconduct alleged in the complaint is defendant's acceptance of representation of the parties in the Plant litigation. Therefore, the protected litigation-related activities are only incidental to the principal thrust of the complaint (171 Cal. App. 4th 1617, 1629) .

Wang v. Wal-Mart Real Estate Business Trust (2007) 153 Cal. App. 4th 790, 63 Cal. Rptr. 3d 575 arose out of a contract for the sale of two of plaintiffs' parcels of property to a company which eventually assigned the contract to defendant Wal-Mart. Plaintiffs retained two adjoining parcels for future development. The two Wal-Mart parcels were separated by a street, Gannett Parkway, which the parties anticipated would have to be relocated so that the Wal-Mart parcels could be unified. This street created the access to the plaintiffs' remaining parcels. The end result was that instead of creating a street to replace Gannett Parkway, there was only an easement for emergency vehicles along with a truck alley. Plaintiffs claimed that as a result of now fronting a dead end, their property value was impaired. Plaintiffs filed suit against Wal-Mart for breach of contract, fraud, and conspiracy to defraud. In response, Wal-Mart filed a special motion to strike, contending that the action arose from constitutionally protected conduct. The trial court granted the motion, holding that each cause of action was based directly on Wal-Mart's permitting activity.

The court of appeals reversed. The court began by noting that the proper initial inquiry in an Anti-SLAPP motion is examining the principal thrust or gravamen of plaintiff's cause of action. The court stated that there is no bright line rule that all cases involving development and permitting applications necessarily involve the type of petitioning activity protected by the Anti-SLAPP statute. Although the challenged conduct on the part of Wal-Mart occurred in the course of the preparation of traffic studies and the submission of applications for permits to the city, the complaint was not based essentially on protected conduct. Wal-Mart's alleged improper conduct in implementing plans for the construction of its store did not arise from its petitioning activities in pursuing the permits, but rather from its conduct in executing its contract with the plaintiffs. The protected conduct in pursuing governmental approval was merely collateral to the activities which formed the gravamen of the complaint (153 Cal. App. 4th 790, 810-811) .

Kolar v. Donahue, McIntosh & Hammerton (2006) 145 Cal. App. 4th 1532, 52 Cal. Rptr. 3d 712 was, in the words of the court of appeals, a "garden variety legal malpractice action." Plaintiffs sued defendants for legal malpractice based on the outcome of litigation defendants had brought on plaintiffs' behalf. Defendants filed an Anti-SLAPP motion, contending that their work on plaintiffs' behalf constituted protected activity within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(e). The trial court disagreed and denied defendants' motion. Defendants appealed.

The court of appeals affirmed, holding that a "garden variety legal malpractice action" does not fall within the purview of the Anti-SLAPP statute. Although courts have placed a wide variety of litigation-related activities within the scope of the statute, the actual claim in this case "arose from" the failure of defendants to provide competent legal representation, not defendants' petitioning activity. A malpractice suit does not have the effect of chilling petitioning activity (145 Cal. App. 4th 1532, 1540) .

In Blackburn v. Brady (2004) 116 Cal. App. 4th 670, 10 Cal. Rptr. 3d 696 , plaintiff Blackburn sued defendant Brady for partition, an accounting, and fraud after Blackburn allegedly acquired ownership of a one-half interest of real property at a public Sheriff's auction in partial satisfaction of a money judgment against a man, Lanser, who had previously owned the subject real property as a tenant in common with Brady. The auction took place after Brady failed to pay Blackburn rents and profits generated by Lanser's share of a business co-owned by Brady and Lanser and from the four-unit subject rental property. As a part of the fraud cause of action, Blackburn alleged Brady's statements made at the auction were false and fraudulent. In response, Brady filed a demurrer and a motion to strike under the Anti-SLAPP law. Brady argued that his conduct arose from the exercise of his rights of petition and free speech in protecting his property interests and were ancillary to judicial proceedings between Blackburn and Lanser as well as the auction, which was an "official proceeding." The court overruled the demurrer and denied the Anti-SLAPP motion. Brady appealed.

On appeal, Brady argued that Blackburn's third cause of action for fraud was subject to the Anti-SLAPP law because it arose out of Brady's written bid or oral statements made at the auction. He argued the auction was an "official proceeding authorized by law" within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(e)(1). The court disagreed, stating that the fraud cause of action did not arise from an act of free speech or right of petition for the redress of a grievance, but rather only from Brady's actions affecting bidding at a court-ordered sale. The court held that the auction was a "purely business type event or transaction and ... not the type of protected activity contemplated under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(e)" (116 Cal. App. 4th 670, 677) .

The court also noted that the Anti-SLAPP statute requires that the statements or writings made at the official proceeding be "in connection with an issue under consideration or review." This was clearly not the case, the court pointed out, as the "ministerial event of a Sheriff's sale or auction simply does not concern an issue under review or determine some disputed matter as contemplated under the Anti-SLAPP law." (116 Cal. App. 4th 670, 677) .

Haneline Pacific Properties, LLC v. May (2008) 167 Cal. App. 4th 311, 83 Cal. Rptr. 3d 919 involved real property in Laguna Beach owned, in part, by defendant May. The property was leased an operated as a hotel. In 2006, plaintiff received an offer from defendant's co-owner to purchase the co-owner's 50% share in the property, but the sale was not completed. Around the same time, defendant decided the rent was below market and sought to terminate the hotel's lease. Defendant also believed the co-owner was attempting to sell its share in the property for too little. Plaintiff sued the seller for breach of contract based on the incomplete sale. That suit settled, culminating in the sale of the half share of the property to plaintiff. Plaintiff then sued co-owner May for interference with contract and interference with prospective economic advantage. May filed an Anti-SLAPP motion to strike, arguing that the action alleged in the complaint was protected by the litigation privilege. The trial court granted defendant's motion and dismissed the complaint. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeals reversed, finding the complaint did not arise out of protected activity. Defendant's only argument on appeal was that the actions alleged in the complaint constituted activity protected by the litigation privilege. The court noted that while prelitigation communications can fall within the ambit of the Anti-SLAPP statute, the scope of the two statutes is not identical. The communications at issue were letters between defendant and the property's prior co-owner in which defendant tried to persuade the co-owner to agree to terminate the lease. The court found that the communications forming the gravamen of plaintiff's complaint did not fall within the litigation privilege. The tone of the communications was one of persuasion and desire to cooperate. The communications did not consist of threats to litigate or in serious consideration of litigation (167 Cal. App. 4th 311, 319-320) .

[f] Mere Acts of Governance Are Not Exercises of Free Speech or Petition

In San Ramon Valley Fire Protection Dist. v. Contra Costa County Employees' Retirement Assoc. (2004) 125 Cal. App. 4th 343, 22 Cal. Rptr. 3d 724 , plaintiff fire protection district was a special district within Contra Costa County and within the purview of the county retirement system. Defendants were the retirement association's board of directors as well as the actual retirement association itself. The litigation arose out of the Board's decision that the District would have to pay $2.3 million in order to fund increased retirement benefits for the District's employees. The District then filed suit against the Board in the form of a petition for administrative mandamus and a complaint for declaratory relief. The Board responded by moving to strike the petition and complaint under the Anti-SLAPP statute, Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16. The trial court denied the motion.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that plaintiff's cause of action did not arise from protected activity within the meaning of the statute. The court noted, quoting City of Cotati v. Cashman (2002) 29 Cal. 4th 69 that the "mere fact an action was filed after protected activity took place does not mean it arose from that activity" (125 Cal. App. 4th 343, 353-354). The court went on to state that acts of governance mandated by law are not exercises of free speech or petition within the meaning of the Anti-SLAPP statute. The Board's decision to require the District to pay $2.3 million to the retirement association did not implicate the right to free speech or petition (125 Cal. App. 4th 343, 355) . The court gave a hypothetical example in contrast, explaining that if the Board had authorized its own participation in a campaign to amend state pension laws, such a vote might implicate the Board's right of free speech or petition (125 Cal. App. 4th 343, 357) .

[g] Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17 Exceptions Apply Retroactively

In Brenton v. Metabolife International, Inc. (2004) 116 Cal. App. 4th 679, 10 Cal. Rptr. 3d 702 , a consumer alleged that she developed a mental illness as a result of consuming a defective dietary supplement produced by the manufacturer. She also alleged false advertising and misbranding of the product. The manufacturer moved to strike the complaint under the Anti-SLAPP statute, contending that the complaint targeted its constitutionally protected commercial speech. The trial court denied the manufacturer's motion under the Anti-SLAPP statute, Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16, to strike plaintiff consumer's complaint alleging causes of action for product liability, negligence, breach of express and implied warranty, and fraud.

The court affirmed the denial of the motion, holding that because protected speech was not the gravamen or principal thrust of claims seeking recovery for personal injuries to a consumer caused by a defective product, such claims did not arise from protected activity within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(e) (116 Cal. App. 4th 679, 687) .

The court also addressed the issue of retroactive application of Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17, enacted by the Legislature during the appeal. The appellate court held that Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(c) removed remove the plaintiff's unfair practices claim (as well as her individual claims) from the types of claims against which an Anti-SLAPP motion can be filed. The manufacturer agreed that application of Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(c) would be fatal to the motion to strike but asserted that the statute could not be applied retroactively and that the statute was unconstitutional. The court found that the presumption against retrospective construction does not apply to statutes relating merely to remedies and modes of procedure. Procedural changes "operate on existing causes of action and defenses, and it is a misnomer to designate them as having retrospective effect." In other words, procedural statutes may become operative only when and if the procedure or remedy is invoked, and if the trial postdates the enactment, the statute operates in the future regardless of the time of occurrence of the events giving rise to the cause of action. In such cases the statutory changes are said to apply not because they constitute an exception to the general rule of statutory construction, but because they are not in fact retrospective. There is then no problem as to whether the Legislature intended the changes to operate retroactively (116 Cal. App. 4th 679, 689) . Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17 is properly characterized as a procedural statute applicable to pending actions. Where the Legislature has conferred a remedy and withdraws it by amendment or repeal of the remedial statute, the new statutory scheme may be applied to pending actions without triggering retrospectivity concerns (116 Cal. App. 4th 679, 690) .

[h] Plaintiff Opposing a Late Anti-SLAPP Motion Need Not Demonstrate Prejudice

In Olsen v. Harbison (2005) 134 Cal. App. 4th 278, 35 Cal. Rptr. 3d 909 , plaintiff was an attorney who had associated defendant, another attorney, during a personal injury case under a fee splitting contract. The personal injury plaintiff then discharged plaintiff as counsel and when the case settled, defendant received the attorney fees. Plaintiff filed suit to recover a portion of the attorney fees. After lengthy law and motion proceedings, defendant filed an Anti-SLAPP motion. Plaintiff moved to strike the Anti-SLAPP motion on the ground that it could not be filed more than 60 days after service of the complaint without a court order. The court denied both motions, ruling that plaintiff could not file a motion to strike the Anti-SLAPP motion and that defendant's Anti-SLAPP motion, filed nine months after service of the second amended complaint, was not timely filed. Defendant appealed from the ruling, and plaintiff moved to dismiss the appeal as frivolous (134 Cal. App. 4th 278, 283) .

On appeal, defendant argued that Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(f) contains no express requirement that defendant show good cause for filing a late Anti-SLAPP motion. Therefore, he reasoned, it was an abuse of discretion for a trial judge to deny a late Anti-SLAPP motion absent a showing of prejudice on plaintiff's part. The court disagreed, stating that the argument that a trial court has no discretion to deny hearing an unexcused, belated, but meritorious Anti-SLAPP motion absent a showing of prejudice to plaintiff is without merit. The statute expressly provides that a late Anti-SLAPP motion may not be filed unless the court exercises its discretion. Defendant's reading of the statute would mean that the trial court has no discretion to refuse to hear a late Anti-SLAPP motion unless plaintiff demonstrates prejudice. The appellate court found no support for such an interpretation of Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(f) and the order denying defendant's untimely Anti-SLAPP motion was affirmed (134 Cal. App. 4th 278, 286-287) .

[i] Defendants Who Represent Themselves in Litigation Are Not Entitled to Attorney Fees When Prevailing

on an Anti-SLAPP Motion

Witte v. Kaufman (2006) 141 Cal. App. 4th 1201, 46 Cal. Rptr. 3d 845 arose out of an action for dissolution of a partnership. Defendant Kaufman represented one partner, and the law firm of Knox, Lemmon & Anapolsky (KLA) represented the other. KLA ended up suing its client for nonpayment of fees, and plaintiff Witte represented the client in that action, which was arbitrated. The client eventually fired plaintiff. Plaintiff sued his client, attorney Kaufman, and KLA for breach of contract, interference with contract, and fraud. KLA and Kaufman filed Anti-SLAPP motions, which were granted, and both attorney defendants were awarded attorney fees. Plaintiff appealed the trial court's decision (141 Cal. App. 4th 1201, 1207) .

The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's decision on the merits of the Anti-SLAPP motion, but reversed the award of attorney fees. The court reasoned that an award of attorney fees under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(c) is intended to compensate a SLAPP defendant rather than to punish a SLAPP plaintiff. Because defendant KLA's own attorneys did all of the work involved in bringing the motion to strike, the firm was not entitled to attorney fees. Defendant Kaufman contended that he was entitled to fees because outside counsel helped him with his motion to strike. Because the court could not differentiate the time spent by Kaufman as opposed to his outside counsel, the court of appeals remanded the issue of Kaufman's attorney fees to the trial court for reconsideration (141 Cal. App. 4th 1201, 1213) .

[j] The Anti-SLAPP Statute Does Not Apply to Non-Judicial Proceedings

Garretson v. Post (2007) 156 Cal. App. 4th 1508, 68 Cal. Rptr. 3d 230 arose out of nonjudicial foreclosure proceedings after plaintiff defaulted on a promissory note secured by a deed of trust on a property defendant sold plaintiff. Plaintiff paid the amount necessary to avoid foreclosure, then sued defendant for wrongful foreclosure. Defendant filed an Anti-SLAPP motion, asserting nonjudicial foreclosure is an official proceeding within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(e)(1) and (2). The trial court disagreed, and denied the motion. The court of appeal affirmed. Nonjudicial foreclosure proceedings are statutorily based and private in nature. Such proceedings are not linked to any governmental, administrative, or judicial proceedings or regulation and therefore such proceedings cannot form the basis for a SLAPP suit (156 Cal. App. 4th 1508, 1521) .

Sheppard v. Lightpost Museum Fund (2006) 146 Cal. App. 4th 315, 52 Cal. Rptr. 3d 821 arose out of plaintiff's wrongful termination claim against defendants and defendants' breach of contract claim against plaintiff. Those matters went to binding nonjudicial arbitration and the arbitrator did not award any relief to either side. Subsequently, defendants requested that the arbitrator revisit his rulings because plaintiff had allegedly violated a confidentiality clause after the arbitration was concluded. In response, plaintiff filed a complaint against defendants in the superior court alleging tort causes of action and seeking a judicial termination that defendants' conduct was a violation of Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16. Shortly thereafter, plaintiff filed an Anti-SLAPP motion in the superior court, seeking to strike defendants' pending arbitration claim. Defendants responded that the superior court could not properly rule on the Anti-SLAPP motion defendants had not filed any causes of action in superior court. The trial court disagreed and granted plaintiff's motion in part. Defendants appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that the Anti-SLAPP statute does not apply to claims pending in nonjudicial forums. The statute itself refers to "causes of action" stated in a "complaint," which includes a cross-complaint or petition. Furthermore, the statute requires a defendant to bring such a motion within a certain time period after "service of the complaint." In using language that applies exclusively to actions brought in court, the legislature limited the pleadings that are subject to an Anti-SLAPP motion to pleadings that are brought in court. Because plaintiff's Anti-SLAPP motion targeted only defendants' arbitration claims, the court erred in ruling on the motion (146 Cal. App. 4th 315, 324) .

In Tendler v. www.jewishsurvivors.blogspot.com (2008) 164 Cal. App. 4th 802, 807, 79 Cal. Rptr. 3d 407 , appellant Tendler was a New York resident who obtained an order from an Ohio court providing his Ohio attorney with subpoena to obtain IP addresses and other information from Google concerning individuals who had allegedly published defamatory statements about him on weblogs. After Google declined to respond to the subpoenas, the attorney filed a request in Santa Clara County Superior Court asking the court to issue a case number and endorse the subpoenas. The court assigned a case number to the matter. The targets of the subpoenas became aware of the proceedings and filed a motion to quash and an Anti-SLAPP motion. The trial court granted the Anti-SLAPP motion and awarded the subpoena targets their attorney fees. Tendler appealed.

The court of appeals reversed, holding that a request for a subpoena does not fall within the Anti-SLAPP statute. The statute uses the term "cause of action" and states that the cause of action must be contained in a complaint, cross-complaint, petition or similar pleading initiating a judicial proceeding. A request for a subpoena does not contain a cause of action or initiate a judicial proceeding, and therefore it is not subject to an Anti-SLAPP motion (164 Cal. App. 4th 802, 807) .

In McConnell v. Innovative Artists Talent and Literary Agency (2009) 175 Cal. App. 4th 169, 96 Cal. Rptr. 3d 1 , plaintiffs were two talent agents employed by defendant. Plaintiffs filed lawsuits asserting that their employment contracts contained illegal provisions. Following the filing of the lawsuits, plaintiffs were told their job duties were modified and were escorted off the premises. Although they remained employees, plaintiffs were provided with a list of restrictions; for example, they were not permitted to enter the building without defendant's consent, use e-mail or communicate with other employees. Plaintiffs' attorney then notified defendant that plaintiffs had been constructively terminated, after which plaintiffs were terminated for cause. Plaintiffs then amended their complaint to allege causes of action for wrongful termination and retaliation. In response, defendant filed an Anti-SLAPP motion, claiming the new causes of action arose out of defendant's exercise of its free speech and petition rights. The trial court denied the motion, holding that the causes of action did not arise out of protected activity.

The court of appeals affirmed. The acts underlying plaintiffs' claims of retaliation and wrongful termination were defendant's "modification" of plaintiffs' employment, which precluded plaintiffs from performing their job duties. The court noted that the fact these modifications were reduced to writing did not convert the actions to protected activity. Additionally, the fact that plaintiffs' lawsuits pre-existed the employment modifications did not mean the modifications constituted a "writing made in connection with an issue under consideration or review by a judicial body" within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(e)(2). There was no connection between the modifications and the issue under review in the original lawsuit, as the modification was directed at preventing plaintiffs from taking clients with them when they left, not at establishing that plaintiffs were legally required to stay (175 Cal. App. 4th 169, 176) .

[k] A Plaintiff Prevailing on an Anti-SLAPP Motion Shall Be Awarded Costs and Attorney's Fees if the Court Finds the Motion Is Frivolous or Is Solely Intended to Cause Unnecessary Delay

In Ketchum v. Moses (2001) 24 Cal. 4th 1122, 104 Cal. Rptr. 2d 377 , the defendant sought mandatory attorney fees after he prevailed on a motion strike allegations in a SLAPP action under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16. The trial court awarded attorney fees to the defendant's counsel, using a lodestar amount of approximately $70,000 and then applying a fee enhancement of 2.0 to that figure based on contingent risk and the exceptional quality of the legal services provided, for a total of approximately $140,000. The court later awarded supplemental attorney fees and costs of approximately $112,000. The court of appeal reversed the trial court's judgment, concluding that the trial court lacked authority to apply a fee enhancement to the lodestar figure.

The Supreme Court reversed the court of appeal decision and remanded the case for recalculation of the attorney fee award. The court noted that the fee-shifting provision encourages private representation in SLAPP cases, including situations where the defendant is unable to afford fees or the lack of potential monetary damages precludes a standard contingency fee arrangement (24 Cal. 4th 1122, 1237) . The court held that by its terms, Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16 permitted the use of the lodestar adjustment method whereby the lodestar is the number of hours reasonably expended multiplied by the reasonable hourly rate, and that figure may be adjusted based on consideration of factors specific to the case, in order to fix the fee at the market rate for legal services provided (24 Cal. 4th 1122, 1136) . The court noted that where the Legislature has determined that that lodestar adjustment approach is not appropriate, it has expressly so stated in a particular statutory provision; thus where the Anti-SLAPP provisions referred to attorney fees and costs without indicating any restrictions on how they are to be calculated, the Legislature presumably intended courts to use the prevailing lodestar method (24 Cal. 4th 1122, 1135-1136) .

The Supreme Court held that the court of appeal erred in concluding that the trial court lacked authority to award a fee enhancement under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16 (24 Cal. 4th 1122, 1136) . The court rejected the contentions that permitting a fee enhancement for contingency cases under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16 would (1) encourage unmeritorious claims; (2) permit attorneys to pool the risk in contingency cases and thus, in effect, receive payment for cases in which their clients did not prevail; or (3) inevitably result in unfair double counting or a windfall to attorneys representing SLAPP defendants (24 Cal. 4th 1122, 1137-1138) . Noting that the trial court is not required to include a fee enhancement to the basic lodestar figure for contingent risk, exceptional skill or other factors, but retains discretion to do so, the Supreme Court remanded the case as to the amount of the fee enhancement (24 Cal. 4th 1122, 1138, 1142) . The court found that it was improper to impose an enhancement for contingent risk as to the attorney fees on fees accrued after the motion to strike was granted. The court also remanded on the issue of whether the enhancement factor for exceptional representation had been improperly double counted. Lastly, the court directed that any disapproval on the part of the trial court as to the plaintiff's litigation strategy (to keep the defendant in court) could not be a basis of imposing an enhancement for contingent risk or quality of representation merely for the purpose of punishing the plaintiff (24 Cal. 4th 1122, 1142) .

Premier Medical Management Systems, Inc. v. California Ins. Guarantee (2008) 163 Cal. App. 4th 550, 77 Cal. Rptr. 3d 695 involves a lawsuit filed by a group of physicians against various worker's compensation insurers, employers and other entities alleging the defendants conspired to contest, delay and avoid payment of the physicians' bills for treating worker's compensation patients. The parties litigated and appealed defendants' Anti-SLAPP motion, and on appeal the court reversed the trial court's denial of the motion and awarded the moving defendants their fees and costs on appeal. The subject of this appeal was the amount of fees the court had awarded under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(c). The court noted that an award of attorney fees is mandatory in favor of a successful defendant on an Anti-SLAPP motion. Review of such an award is subject to an abuse of discretion standard. On appeal, plaintiffs asserted that the fees were "grossly excessive, unnecessary, duplicative, and an unreasonable number of claimed work hours" (163 Cal. App. 4th 550, 558) . However, plaintiffs filed no declarations and submitted no evidence in support of their contentions regarding the fees, instead simply claiming the fees were excessive and citing Maughan v. Google Technology, Inc. (2006) 143 Cal. App. 4th 1242, 49 Cal. Rptr. 3d 861 , in which the court of appeals upheld a trial judge's reduction of claims fees in connection with an Anti-SLAPP motion. The court stated that in Maughan and in the instant case, courts of appeal are reluctant to substitute their judgment for that of the trial judge, who is familiar with the issues raised. The court emphasized that a party challenging the amount of an attorney fee award must bear the burden of pointing to the specific items challenged, with a sufficient argument and citations to the evidence. In this case, plaintiffs did not do so and the attorney fee award was affirmed (163 Cal. App. 4th 550, 555) .

In Carpenter v. Jack In The Box Corp. (2007) 151 Cal. App. 4th 454, 59 Cal. Rptr. 3d 839 , the trial court awarded attorney fees and costs to an employee under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(c) in the employee's action for wrongful termination and related causes of action. The employers filed a special motion to strike pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16, claiming that the employee's causes of action arose from an investigation of suspected sexual harassment and that this investigation was a constitutionally protected activity. The trial court denied the motion, and the employers unsuccessfully appealed that order. Following issuance of the remittitur, and approximately two years after the denial of the special motion to strike, the employee sought statutory attorney fees and expenses pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(c).

The Court of Appeal affirmed, holding that the time limits imposed by Cal. Rules of Court, Rules 3.1702, 8.104 for filing a motion for attorney fees under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(c) do not commence to run until entry of judgment at the conclusion of the litigation. Thus, the employee's motion was timely because it was filed before entry of judgment. The trial court's order imposing fees and costs included sufficient factual details under Code Civ. Proc. § 128.5(c). Because unlawful workplace activity is not necessarily an issue of public interest, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in finding that the special motion to strike was frivolous (151 Cal. App. 4th 454, 461) .

[l] An Amorphous Public Interest Is Insufficient to Invoke the Anti-SLAPP Statute

In World Financial Group, Inc. v. HBW Ins. & Financial Services, Inc. (2009) 172 Cal. App. 4th 1561, 92 Cal. Rptr. 3d 227 , plaintiff was a corporation providing insurance, financial and pension services. Defendants were plaintiff's major competitor and former employees of plaintiff who worked for defendant competitor. The suit arose out of non-competition agreements defendants signed in connection with their employment. Plaintiff's complaint alleged that defendants violated these agreements and stated causes of action for breach of contract, breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, conversion, violation of the Uniform Trade Secrets Act, interference with economic advantage and unjust enrichment. Defendants filed an Anti-SLAPP motion, alleging that plaintiff's claims were based on their conduct in furtherance of the exercise of their right of free speech in connection with a public issue. They further alleged that the pursuit of lawful employment and workplace mobility were matters of public interest. The trial court denied the motion, finding that the challenged conduct did not fall within the ambit of the Anti-SLAPP motion, and defendants appealed.

The court of appeals affirmed. All of the conduct at issue was committed in the course of business and was directed at marketing the defendant business as superior. The court drew a distinction between specific issues of public interest and a "broad and amorphous public interest" such as that alleged in this case, citing such cases as Rivero v. American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees, AFL-CIO (2003) 105 Cal. App. 4th 913, 130 Cal. Rptr. 2d 81 and Consumer Justice Center v. Trimedica International, Inc. (2003) 107 Cal. App. 4th 595, 132 Cal. Rptr. 2d 191 . Although employee mobility and competition are, in the abstract, issues of public interest, the focus for purposes of the Anti-SLAPP statute must be "on the specific nature of the speech rather than the generalities that might be abstracted from it" (172 Cal. App. 4th 1561, 1572). The Anti-SLAPP statute only applies in situations where the statement or conduct at issue is about a person or entity in the public eye, has the potential to affect large numbers of people beyond the participants or involves a topic of widespread public interest (172 Cal. App. 4th 1561, 1573) .

[m] Code of Civil Procedure § 425.16 Only Applies When First Amendment Free Speech or Petition Rights Are At Stake

In Graffiti Protective Coatings, Inc. v. City of Pico Rivera (2010) 181 Cal. App. 4th 1207, 104 Cal. Rptr. 3d 692 , through competitive bidding, plaintiff was awarded a municipal contract to maintain defendant city's bus stops. The city later terminated the contract as permitted, but, without inviting competitive bids, entered into a new contract with one of plaintiff's competitors. Plaintiff sued, seeking a writ of mandate and declaratory relief to invalidate the new contract and to compel the city to award the contract through competitive bidding. The city filed a special motion to strike under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16, and the trial court granted the motion, reasoning that the maintenance of the city's bus stops was an issue of public interest and plaintiff was not likely to prevail on the merits of its claims (181 Cal. App. 4th 1207, 1211-1214) .

The Court of Appeal reversed, concluding that, even if plaintiff's claims involved a public issue, they are not based on any statement, writing, or conduct by the city in furtherance of its right of free speech or its right to petition the government for the redress of grievances. The court first recognized a distinction between speech or petitioning activity that serves solely as evidence in proving liability, which is not subject to the anti-SLAPP statute, and speech or petitioning activity that is the basis of liability, to which the anti-SLAPP statute applies. Assuming plaintiff's claims against the city involved a public issue, the city's petition and free speech rights were not implicated. Plaintiff's claims were not based on any communications between the city and others or on any petitioning activity by the city. Rather, the claims were based on competitive bidding laws found in the Public Contract Code and the city's municipal code. The city's communications may be of evidentiary value in establishing that it violated the law, but liability was not based on the communications themselves. Thus, the claims were not subject to the anti-SLAPP statute, and plaintiff did not have to demonstrate a probability of prevailing on the merits at the pleading stage, risking the dismissal of its claims and the payment of the city's attorney fees. Had the court concluded otherwise, the anti-SLAPP statute would discourage attempts to compel public entities to comply with the law (181 Cal. App. 4th 1207, 1214-1225) .

In Turner v. Vista Pointe Ridge Homeowners Assn. (2009) 180 Cal. App. 4th 676, 102 Cal. Rptr. 3d 750 , the owners of residential real property subject to conditions, covenants and restrictions sued their homeowners association. The owners had obtained association approval for an addition to their home and substantial outdoor improvements, including a casita, which could not exceed a specified height. According to their own admission, the owners increased the height without first obtaining a variance from the association. After a neighbor complained about the height of the casita, and purportedly threatened to sue the association because the casita constituted an unreasonable view obstruction, the association was reluctant to grant the variance, and was concerned about the attorney's fees it was incurring in addressing the compliance matter. In addition to the dispute concerning the height of the casita, there were issues about whether a number of other improvements the owners had constructed were approved by the association or in conformity with the association's architectural guidelines. The association ultimately levied a reimbursement assessment in connection with the disputed matters in administrative costs and attorney fees incurred in what the association deemed to be an enforcement matter. The association demanded the owners pay for the removal of a tree from the common area. The owners filed suit against the association, asserting causes of action for breach of contract; declaratory relief; nuisance; breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing; violation of Civ. Code § 1378, concerning homeowners association architectural review procedures; violation of Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200, pertaining to unfair business practices; and breach of fiduciary duty. The association filed a § 425.16 motion to strike the complaint, on the ground that each cause of action was based on its activities arising out of the controversy pertaining to the owners' architectural plans, which constituted protected conduct in furtherance of the exercise of the constitutional right of petition or the constitutional right of free speech in connection with a public issue or an issue of public interest within the meaning of § 425.16(e)(4). The trial court granted the association's motion on the ground that each cause of action arose out of a dispute over the architectural guidelines and related to communications from the association pertaining to purported noncompliance with those guidelines, and that the dispute with the neighbor pertained to the same issues. The court held that the dispute, being one about architectural guidelines, was a public issue, and that the burden had shifted to the owners to present evidence establishing a probability that they would prevail on their claims, and that they had not met their burden (180 Cal. App. 4th 676, 679-681) .

The Court of Appeal reversed. The court held that § 425.16(e)(4) does not apply whenever the issue concerns the conduct of a homeowners association in discharging its architectural review obligations. The underlying litigation concerned a homeowners association, but it did not involve board elections, recall campaigns, or who should be the manager of the association; it pertained to the interaction between homeowners and a homeowners association with respect to the homeowners' desired improvements. The court found that there was no reason to believe that this was of interest to any homeowners other than the plaintiffs and the neighbor whose view may have been affected by the height of the casita. The association's actions that gave rise to the dispute, and upon which the causes of action were based, were not taken in furtherance of the right of free of speech or the right of petition. The fact that certain association demands were made in writing did not convert the association's acts in connection with CC&R's enforcement into acts in furtherance of the right of free speech (180 Cal. App. 4th 676, 681-688) .

[4] Additional Authorities

In Scalzo v. Baker (2010) 185 Cal. App. 4th 91 , a brother and sister filed a complaint against another brother, his adult son, his attorney, the law firm representing the defendant-brother, a certified public accountant working for defendant-brother "in connection with a different litigation," and the accounting firm where the accountant was employed, alleging causes of action relating to defendant-brother's successful and unsuccessful efforts to obtain plaintiffs' American Express credit card statements and his dissemination of the statements to additional persons, including his attorneys, accountants, family members and other unknown persons, causing damage to their credit and identity theft. As to defendant-brother, plaintiffs asserted causes of action for invasion of privacy, violation of the Gramm-Leach-Bliley Act (15 U.S.C. § 6821 et seq.), violation of the California Financial Information Privacy Act (Fin. Code, § 4050 et seq.), and injunctive relief. The cause of action for injunctive relief was asserted as to the attorney and accountant defendants as well. The attorney and accountant defendants filed a special motion to strike the cause of action for injunctive relief, arguing the complaint arose from their furtherance of constitutional rights, that plaintiff could not prevail on the claims and that defendants' conduct was absolutely privileged under Civ. Code § 47(b). This was based on the fact that defendant-brother had filed a complaint seeking an accounting relating to funds generated from commercial property held in all three siblings' names, as to which defendant-brother sought information, including the American Express records, related to finding out what happened to funds generated from the properties. The accountant and his firm were retained as experts to review and analyze books, records and financial statements from the properties. The trial court granted the attorney and accountant defendants' special motion to strike and awarded attorney's fees. The defendant-brother and his son filed a special motion to strike, arguing that the complaint arose out of protected activity, that plaintiffs could not demonstrate a probability of prevailing on their claims and that defendant-brother's communications were absolutely privileged, because he contacted American Express to obtain account records for an account he had with his brother and sister, which was partially used to pay for expenses on rent-producing properties the three siblings co-owned, and the jointly owned property and the accounting for the real property was at issue in the case he filed. The trial court granted the brother-defendant's and his son's special motion to strike and awarded attorney's fees. The Court of Appeal reversed as to the defendant-brother and his son. The court found that plaintiffs presented sufficient to meet the burden of showing the probability of prevailing on their claims, and the claim that the litigation privilege precluded success on the merits could not stand. The court found that the litigation privilege did not protect illegal conduct resulting in damages unrelated to the use of the fruits of that conduct in litigation, because plaintiffs demonstrated damages separate from the litigation, so that the alleged wrongful, potentially criminal activity, was not immunized. Neither defendant-brother's assertion that his purpose in obtaining the documents from American Express was to obtain information for the litigation between the parties or that the damages asserted rested on the use of the documents in that litigation provided a basis for the absolute bar he asserted, because he told both American Express and the court below that he needed to obtain the documents to prepare his taxes, which had no relation to judicial proceedings, and because plaintiffs asserted damages arising from the act itself, as well as damages unrelated to the use of the documents in litigation, namely identity theft and damage to credit caused by the use and dissemination of the documents outside of litigation. However, as to the claim for injunctive relief asserted against defendant-brother, his son, and the attorneys and accountants, plaintiffs made no claim or factual showing, that defendants obtained the documents in violation of the law or used the documents in any manner outside of the litigation context, so that they demonstrated that the litigation privilege applied (185 Cal. App. 4th 91, 97-102) .

In USA Waste of California, Inc. v. City of Irwindale (2010) 184 Cal. App. 4th 53, 108 Cal. Rptr. 3d 466, a corporation filed a cross-complaint against a city, alleging causes of action for declaratory relief, breach of contract, and equitable estoppel. The trial court denied the city's special motion to strike the cross-complaint pursuant to the anti-SLAPP statute, on the ground that the gravamen of the causes of action alleged in the cross-complaint was the city's action in imposing its new guidelines and not the issuance of a notice of violation, and that the city had not met its burden of showing that the cross-complaint was based on the city's exercise of protected activity under the anti-SLAPP statute. The Court of Appeal affirmed. Even if the issuance of the notice of violation was protected speech within the meaning of the anti-SLAPP statute, the city's contention that the causes of action in the cross-complaint were based on protected speech failed because those causes of action were not based on the city's issuance of the notice of violation. The cross-complaint concerned a private matter between the corporation and the city that was not a public issue or of public interest. The cross-complaint did not concern the application of backfilling standards and the city's land use guidelines to landfill operations in the city generally, but, instead, concerned whether the city could use the guidelines to alter the backfilling standards for a particular landfill operation (184 Cal. App. 4th 53, 62-66).

The facts and procedural background of All One God Faith, Inc. v. Organic and Sustainable Industry Standards, Inc. (2010) 183 Cal. App. 4th 1186, 107 Cal. Rptr. 3d 861 , are set forth I § 160.40A[3][a], above . The Court of Appeal found that, while the act of formulating a proposed industry "organic" standard may have constituted protected activity, the certification of products plaintiff sought to enjoin was not, and that the certification activities did not constitute conduct in furtherance of the formulation of the standard (183 Cal. App. 4th 1186, 1200-1205). Further, the certification was commercial speech because it sought to promote its members' general business interest. The mere fact that a large number of people could be affected by advertising did not, standing alone, satisfy the public interest requirement. Certifying members to use its seal stating that the product was organic was not activity directed to public discussion of organic standards in general, but was only speech about the contents and quality of the product, which was not intertwined with speech about, or contributing to the debate on, the merits of a particular definition of "organic" (183 Cal. App. 4th 1186, 1205-1211).

In D.C. v. R.R. (2010) 182 Cal. App. 4th 1190, 106 Cal. Rptr. 3d 399 , D.C., a student who attended a private educational institution and his parents filed an action against several other students and their parents, alleging violation of the hate crimes law (Civ. Code § 51.7(a)), defamation, and intentional infliction of emotional distress, based on threatening comments posted on the student's website by other students and their effect on plaintiffs. The trial court denied the anti-SLAPP motion of one student and his parents on the ground that the case did not involve a public issue. The Court of Appeal affirmed, concluding that defendants did not demonstrate that the posted comments were protected speech and, assuming the posting was a "joke" and thus constitutionally protected, it was not a statement made in connection with a "public issue" as that term is used in the anti-SLAPP statute (182 Cal. App. 4th 1190, 1210-1231) . The student had posted the following message: "Hey [plaintiff], I want to rip out your fucking heart and feed it to you. I heard your song while driving my kid to school and from that moment on I've ... wanted to kill you. If I ever see you I'm ... going to pound your head in with an ice pick. Fuck you, you dick-riding penis lover. I hope you burn in hell." The court found that the message was an unequivocal serious expression of intent to inflict bodily harm conveyed no less than three times. The content of the message and its transmission showed deliberation on the part of the author. Under the true threat analysis, because the threat conveyed a serious expression of an intent to inflict bodily harm at all or in any manner, it was not constitutionally protected. That students other than the author found the posts as a whole to be funny or amusing did not suggest how plaintiffs should have viewed the post in particular. A reasonable person would foresee that the post would be interpreted by student-plaintiff and his parents as a serious expression of an intent to inflict bodily harm. With regard to actual intent, on its face, the post did not support a finding of jocular intent. The tone was serious, not humorous. The message described violent conduct the author "wants" to commit, expressed the author's feelings of anger and hatred, and indicated the author will physically attack the recipient if he ever sees him. The content of the message showed it was written with deliberation. Thus, an intent to harm was evident. It was irrelevant, for First Amendment purposes, that defendant may not have intended to carry out his threat. Even assuming he believed that his message was humorous, he may still have intended it as a threat, and the actions taken by his parents in response to his message contradicted the assertion that he intended to play a mere joke as they terminated his access to the Internet, grounded him, prohibited his use of cell phones except for emergencies, took away his driving privileges, and had him evaluated by a psychiatrist to ensure his conduct was never repeated and the root cause, if any, was dealt with immediately. Thus, defendants failed to make a sufficient showing of protected speech under the subjective standard of the true threat analysis. Finally, the court concluded that the complaint did not involve a public issue, even though Web sites accessible to the public are "public forums" for purposes of the anti-SLAPP statute. Liability was premised on a Web site message from one teenager to another, which did not mention a public issue, but which combined a threat of bodily harm with derogatory language. Further, the public was not fascinated with the student-plaintiff, nor was there widespread public interest in his personal life, as there is no evidence that he was a nationally known singer or actor even under his pseudonym, even though he had a record album with a planned release date, had broadcast a song worldwide via satellite radio, had played the leading role in a feature film presented at an internationally acclaimed film festival, and had toured under the auspices of a nationally recognized radio network. However, there was no evidence that, as a student and under his real name, that he was known to the public or was in the public eye, and his use of a Web site in pursuing an entertainment career did not, ipso facto, put him in the public eye. Assuming the message was a joke, it did not implicate a public issue. Nor was the posted message analogous to a magazine article discussing a celebrity or to a television interview or radio show about a celebrity. Thus, the message did not concern a person in the public eye, conduct that could directly affect large numbers of people beyond the participants, or a topic of widespread public interest.

In Robles v. Chalilpoyil (2010) 181 Cal. App. 4th 566, 104 Cal. Rptr. 3d 628 , plaintiffs filed an action against their former attorneys and defendant, an expert witness, alleging negligence and conspiracy to commit fraud, arising from a wrongful death action by plaintiffs in which the former attorneys represented them and defendant served as an expert witness. Defendant moved to strike the complaint under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16 on the ground that the negligence cause of action was based on false testimony made in the context of a legal proceeding and therefore protected communication, and the conspiracy cause of action was based on a request soliciting the expert's agreement to allow his work product to be provided to the underlying defendants in the event of a settlement, which fell comfortably within the express terms of § 425.16(e)(2) as well as within the litigation privilege in Civ. Code § 47(b). However, the trial court denied the motion, ruling that plaintiffs' complaint did not fall within the protection of either the litigation privilege or the anti-SLAPP statute. (181 Cal. App. 4th 566, 570-572). The Court of Appeal affirmed. In the first cause of action, defendant was accused of negligence by falsely testifying in his deposition and by failing to continue to act as an independent expert and/or disrupting the prosecution of the underlying case by entering into a business relationship, agreement, and/or proposal with defendants to design, develop and/or market a device or devices to improve the safety of the wheelchair in which plaintiffs' decedent was killed, while defendants were still obligated to act as the plaintiffs' expert in the underlying case. The court found that the conduct described in the negligence allegation and the cause of action for conspiracy to commit fraud did not fall into any of the four categories of section 425.16(e), and that § 425.16 does not shield statements made on behalf of a client who alleges negligence in the defendant's representation of the client or breach of the duty of loyalty. To the extent the conspiracy cause of action could have been said to have arisen from the right of free speech or petition, that right clearly was not being exercised in the litigation on plaintiff's behalf. Further, all communications protected by the litigation privilege were not within the ambit of § 425.16 (181 Cal. App. 4th 566, 574-583).

In PrediWave Corp. v. Simpson Thacher & Bartlett LLP (2009) 179 Cal. App. 4th 1204, 102 Cal. Rptr. 3d 245 , plaintiff corporation sued defendant law firm and attorneys who had previously represented both the corporation and its former president and CEO, stating four causes of action: Breach of fiduciary duty, constructive fraud, legal malpractice, and violation of Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 et seq. by defendant law firm, based on lawsuits brought against the corporation that resulted in judgment against it. Defendants successfully brought a special motion to strike under the anti-SLAPP statute based upon protected speech and petitioning activity in the underlying lawsuits (179 Cal. App. 4th 1204, 1209-1217) . The Court of Appeal reversed. The California Supreme Court had stated that a cause of action "arising from" defendant's litigation activity could appropriately be the subject of a § 425.16 motion to strike (see Church of Scientology v. Wollersheim (1996) 42 Cal. App. 4th 628, 648, 49 Cal. Rptr. 2d 620 , disapproved on other grounds in Equilon Enterprises v. Consumer Cause, Inc. (2002) 29 Cal. 4th 53, 68 n.5, 124 Cal. Rptr. 2d 507, 52 P.3d 685). Further, "any act" includes qualifying acts committed by attorneys in representing clients in litigation (see, e.g., Chavez v. Mendoza (2001) 94 Cal. App. 4th 1083, 1086, 114 Cal. Rptr. 2d 825 ; Dowling v. Zimmerman (2001) 85 Cal. App. 4th 1400, 1418-1420, 103 Cal. Rptr. 2d 174] . However, it did not necessarily follow that § 425.16 applied when a client sued a former attorney for acts ostensibly done in furtherance of the client's rights. In this case, the principal thrust of plaintiff's causes of action was that defendants simultaneously represented both the corporation and its former CEO in matters in which they had an irreconcilable conflict of interest, which allegedly adversely affected defendants' choice of legal strategy and resulted in defendants' repeated failures to take action to safeguard the corporation against the former CEO's misconduct. Defendants' continuation of joint representation, their legal strategy and implementing noncommunicative conduct, and their alleged failures to act were not statements or writings within the meaning of § 425.16(e), and there was no showing that any of defendants' allegedly wrongful conduct, not consisting of statements or writings, occurred in connection with a public issue or an issue of public interest [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(e)(4)]. Thus, defendants did not satisfy their threshold burden of demonstrating that the principal thrust of any of the complaint's causes of action was activity protected by the anti-SLAPP statute (179 Cal. App. 4th 1204, 1217-1229) .

Delois v. Barrett Block Partners (2009) 177 Cal. App. 4th 940, 99 Cal. Rptr. 3d 609 was a landlord-tenant dispute in which plaintiff was a longtime tenant in a work/live space located in a building owned by defendant. After about 10 years, the parties attempted to negotiate a new lease for the property and were unsuccessful. As a result, defendant served plaintiff with a three-day notice to quit but never filed an unlawful detainer action. Subsequently, the parties agreed on and executed a tenancy termination agreement, but plaintiff did not vacate the premises on the agreed-upon date or completely remove his belongings. As a result, defendants assessed plaintiff $15,000 and did not return his security deposit. Plaintiff's complaint in the instant action for declaratory relief, misrepresentation, breach of contract and other causes of action followed. In response, defendant filed an Anti-SLAPP motion, alleging the complaint arose out of its protected activity in entering into a settlement agreement to avoid litigation. The trial court granted the motion as to some causes of action, and both parties appealed. The court of appeals reversed the trial court's granting of the motion, finding that none of the causes of action arose from protected activity. The case law has established that when litigation is contemplated but never commenced, and the parties enter into an agreement to avoid litigation, a subsequent suit for breach of that agreement is not subject to the Anti-SLAPP statute. The court noted the limited application of the Anti-SLAPP statute to landlord tenant disputes in cases such as Clark v. Mazgani (2009) 170 Cal. App. 4th 1281, 89 Cal. Rptr. 3d 24 and Marlin v. Aimco Venezia, LLC (2007) 154 Cal. App. 4th 154, 64 Cal. Rptr. 3d 488 , both discussed below. The complaint in this action merely challenged defendant's conduct in allegedly breaching the tenancy termination agreement and in failing to return the deposit. Such activity is not protected under the Anti-SLAPP statute (177 Cal. App. 4th 940, 954) .

In Clark v. Mazgani (2009) 170 Cal. App. 4th 1281, 89 Cal. Rptr. 3d 24 , defendant landlord had evicted plaintiff from her apartment, ostensibly so that defendant's daughter could move in. The Los Angeles Rent Stabilization Ordinance (RSO) permits eviction of a tenant from a rent-controlled apartment if the landlord intends to have an immediate family member occupy the unit. Subsequently, plaintiff filed an action against defendant for violation of the RSO, fraud and unfair business practices, alleging that defendant's daughter never moved in and that defendant never intended for her to move in. Defendant responded to the complaint by filing an Anti-SLAPP motion, contending the complaint arose out of communications made in the course of the eviction action. The trial court agreed, and granted the motion. Plaintiff appealed. The court of appeals reversed. The critical focus point of a SLAPP analysis is on the defendant's activity giving rise to the alleged liability. Although prosecution of an unlawful detainer action is protected activity, the complaint in this instance was premised on defendant's removal of the apartment and fraudulent eviction, as defendant's daughter never moved into the unit. Under prior cases such as Marlin v. Aimco Venezia, LLC (2007) 154 Cal. App. 4th 154, 64 Cal. Rptr. 3d 488 (see below), terminating a tenancy or removing a property from the rental market are not protected activities (170 Cal. App. 4th 1281, 1286-1287) .

Platypus Wear, Inc. v. Goldberg (2008) 166 Cal. App. 4th 772, 83 Cal. Rptr. 3d 95 was a lawsuit in which plaintiff alleged defendant had illegitimately acted as its chief financial officer and member of its board of directors. More than two years after the filing of the complaint, defendant filed an ex parte application requesting that the court permit him to file a late Anti-SLAPP motion. The trial court granted defendant's request to file the Anti-SLAPP motion, but denied the motion. Both parties appealed: plaintiff argued the court abused its discretion in allowing defendant to file a late Anti-SLAPP motion, and defendant appealed the denial of his Anti-SLAPP motion. The court of appeals held the trial court had abused its discretion in allowing defendant to file the motion. By the time defendant filed his ex parte application, trial was only three months away and the parties had conducted significant discovery. One of the purposes of the Anti-SLAPP statute is to permit resolution of claims before the parties incur the expense of discovery. Although defendant argued his attempt to file an Anti-SLAPP motion served the purpose of promoting judicial economy by narrowing the issues, he could have accomplished the same goal with a motion for summary judgment. In short, defendant failed to point to anything in the case's procedural history that would justify such a late filing of an Anti-SLAPP motion (166 Cal. App. 4th 772, 787) .

Marlin v. Aimco Venezia, LLC (2007) 154 Cal. App. 4th 154 was a declaratory relief action filed by apartment complex tenants against their landlord. The landlords served an Ellis Act notice to vacate on the tenants stating they planned to remove the tenants' unit from the rental market. The tenants filed a declaratory relief action seeking a declaration of their rights under the Ellis Act. Defendant landlords filed an Anti-SLAPP motion, alleging the complaint arose from their filing and serving the Ellis Act notices. The trial court granted the motion and dismissed the action. The court of appeals reversed, holding that the declaratory relief action arose from terminating plaintiffs' tenancy and removing the unit from the rental market, which was not protected activity. Although the filing and service of the Ellis Act notice may have been protected activity, it was not the basis of plaintiffs' cause of action (154 Cal. App. 4th 154, 160-161).

In City of Riverside v. Stansbury (2007) 155 Cal. App. 4th 1582, 66 Cal. Rptr. 3d 862 , defendant Stansbury submitted a proposed ballot initiative to amend the city's charter with respect to eminent domain. The city responded by filing a lawsuit against defendant, seeking a declaration that the initiative was not a proper subject for a local initiative. Defendant filed an Anti-SLAPP motion, arguing that its conduct was protected under the First Amendment. The trial court granted the motion. The court of appeals reversed, noting that although the appeal was technically moot, it would rule on the issue as it was likely to recur. The court held that in filing the declaratory relief action, the city was simply asking for the court's guidance as to the constitutionality of the proposed initiative. In filing the lawsuit, the city did nothing to limit defendants' First Amendment rights (155 Cal. App. 4th 1582, 1590-1591) .

In Olaes v. Nationwide Mutual Ins. Co. (2006) 135 Cal. App. 4th 1501, 38 Cal. Rptr. 3d 467 , plaintiff was a former employee of defendant Nationwide who was terminated following allegations of sexual harassment by fellow employees. Plaintiff Oales sued Nationwide for defamation, and Nationwide filed an Anti-SLAPP motion, claiming its sexual harassment investigation was an "official proceeding authorized by law" within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(e)(1). The court disagreed, holding the Legislature intended to protect speech in a government, rather than a private, forum (135 Cal. App. 4th 1501, 1507) . The investigation was not a quasi-governmental proceeding, but rather was "designed and instituted by a private company" (135 Cal. App. 4th 1501, 1508) . Finally, Nationwide's conduct did not concern a matter of public interest within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(e)(4) because a private company's investigation regarding a small number of people did not rise to a public interest within the meaning of the statute (135 Cal. App. 4th 1501, 1511) .

In Foundation of Taxpayer & Consumer Rights v. Garamendi (2005) 132 Cal. App. 4th 1375, 34 Cal. Rptr. 3d 368 , plaintiff Foundation filed a complaint against the State of California and Insurance Commissioner Garamendi to invalidate Senate Bill 841, alleging the bill was an unconstitutional amendment of Proposition 103. Although the complaint did not name Mercury Insurance as a defendant, it did reference Mercury in the allegations of the complaint. Mercury Insurance sought leave to intervene in the action and, at the same time, filed an application for an order shortening notice time to bring an Anti-SLAPP motion. The trial judge denied Mercury's motion for leave to intervene, and Mercury filed a petition for writ of mandate. The court of appeals granted the petition for writ of mandate. In the meantime, Mercury filed a notice of motion for leave to intervene and a combined motion to strike and Anti-SLAPP motion in the trial court. Plaintiffs ultimately stipulated to Mercury's intervention in the lawsuit. The trial court granted Mercury's motion to strike but denied its Anti-SLAPP motion, finding it frivolous. The trial court concluded that Mercury lacked standing to bring an Anti-SLAPP motion because Mercury was not named as a defendant and therefore the complaint did not allege any cause of action against Mercury, as required by the Anti-SLAPP statute. Because Mercury was not named as a defendant in the complaint, it could not satisfy its burden of showing an action was brought against it (132 Cal. App. 4th 1375, 1392).

In Zhao v. Wong (1996) 48 Cal. App. 4th 1114, 55 Cal. Rptr. 2d 909 , the plaintiff sued for slander, alleging that defendant made statements to a reporter and to his father accusing the plaintiff of murder and forging a will. The reporter had interviewed defendant about the death and a will contest between plaintiff and defendant's father in which judgment in plaintiff's favor was pending appeal. The trial court granted defendant's motion to strike the complaint under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16 and entered a judgment of dismissal. The plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. The court's narrow interpretation of Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(e), that concluded the Legislature intended the statute to be governed by the restricted scope of the statement of legislative purpose in Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(a) (48 Cal. App. 4th 1114, 1128-1129) has been disapproved in Briggs v. Eden Council for Hope and Opportunity (1999) 19 Cal. 4th 1106, 1123 n.10, 81 Cal. Rptr. 2d 471, 969 P.2d 564 . However, the Zhao court also made the point that Wilcox v. Superior Court (1994) 27 Cal. App. 4th 809, 820, 33 Cal. Rptr. 2d 446 , established the principle that the moving party bears the initial burden of showing that the plaintiff's cause of action arises from an act of the defendant in furtherance of the defendant's right of petition or free speech under the United States or California Constitution in connection with a public issue (48 Cal. App. 4th 1114, 1130-1131). The court then reviewed the [then] three-part definition of subdivision (e) [prior to its amendment by 1997 Stats., ch. 271, § 1], and found that phrase (1) of subdivision (e) could not apply because communications at issue were not made before a legislative, executive, or judicial proceeding, or any other official proceeding. and that phrase (3) could not apply because the statements were not made in a place open to the public or a public forum, a private newspaper not being a public forum (48 Cal. App. 4th 1114, 1131). With regard to phrase (2), the court noted that it could not be seriously contended that every comment on a lawsuit involves a public issue and that although lawsuits may sometimes relate to a public issue, the mere fact that a lawsuit was pending has no significance in determining the existence of a public issue. Also, the question whether statements concern a matter of public interest cannot be determined on the basis of media coverage, notoriety, or potential newsworthiness (48 Cal. App. 4th 1114, 1131) . The existence of a public issue depends rather on whether the statements possessed the sort of relevance to self-government that places them in a specially protected category of First Amendment values. Though the unusual and intriguing circumstances surrounding the decedent's death and the discovery of a purported holographic will may have been newsworthy, they did not involve a public issue in the sense interpreted by the court (48 Cal. App. 4th 1114, 1132) . The court noted that under the broad interpretation of Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16 advocated in Averill v. Superior Court (1996) 42 Cal. App. 4th 1170, 50 Cal. Rptr. 2d 62 , the plaintiff's cause of action based on the press interview involving allegations of slander per se with tenuous and speculative links with the petition clause might perhaps be thought to come within the statute (48 Cal. App. 4th 1114, 1132-1133) . The Zhao court, however, read the statute as providing an extraordinary remedy for a narrowly defined category of litigation, and required the moving party to show facts from which the court could reasonably conclude that the statements at issue were made in the exercise of the right to participate freely in the public process without the threat of litigation (48 Cal. App. 4th 1114, 1133) . For a discussion of Averill v. Superior Court (1996) 42 Cal. App. 4th 1170, 50 Cal. Rptr. 2d 62 , see § 161.38[3][b]. Other than in regard to the issue of burden of proof, counsel should use Zhao with caution, given the disapproval of its narrow reading of Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(a) in Briggs v. Eden Council for Hope and Opportunity (1999) 19 Cal. 4th 1106, 1123 n.10, 81 Cal. Rptr. 2d 471, 969 P.2d 564 .

59 of 62 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 161 MOTIONS TO STRIKE: ANTI-SLAPP
PART II. FORMS
PART B. Opposing Special Motion to Strike

16-161 California Points & Authorities § 161.61

§ 161.61 Opposing Special Motion to Strike Action Against Constitutionally Privileged Conduct (SLAPP Suit) [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(b)]--Action Brought Solely in the Public Interest [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(b)]

[1] FORM

[This form should be used in combination with the general form of memorandum opposing a special motion to strike (see § 161.60)].

THE SPECIAL MOTION TO STRIKE SHOULD NOT BE GRANTED BECAUSE THE PLAINTIFF BROUGHT THE ACTION SOLELY _____ [IN THE PUBLIC INTEREST or ON BEHALF OF THE GENERAL PUBLIC] AND PLAINTIFF MEETS THE STATUTORY EXCEPTION REQUIREMENTS OF CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE § 425.17(b).

A. Plaintiff Brought the Action Solely in the Public Interest or on Behalf of the General Public. Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(b) does not apply to any action brought solely in the public interest or on behalf of the general public as long as the following conditions are met (Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(b)):

1. Plaintiff does not seek any relief greater than or different from _____ [the general public or the class of which plaintiff is a member] (Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(b)(1)).

2. The action, if successful, would enforce an important right affecting the public interest, and would confer a significant benefit, whether pecuniary or nonpecuniary, on _____ [the general public or a large class of persons] (Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(b)(2)).

3. Private enforcement is necessary and places a disproportionate financial burden on the plaintiff in relation to the plaintiff's stake in the matter (Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(b)(3)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in opposition to a defendant's special motion to strike under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16 when the plaintiff's action was brought solely in the public interest or on behalf of the general public [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(b)]. In 2003, the Legislature determined that there had been a "disturbing" abuse of California's Anti-SLAPP motion procedure [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(a)]. The Legislature enacted Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17 to provide statutory exceptions to an Anti-SLAPP motion.

To meet this exception, plaintiff must show that all three of the conditions set forth in Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(b) are met. Counsel should set forth argument in the form showing how the listed conditions are met.

[b] Circumstances Under Which Statutory Exceptions Are Inapplicable

There are circumstances when the foregoing statutory prohibition against bringing a special motion to strike does not apply. An Anti-SLAPP motion is permitted as an exception to the foregoing prohibition as follows [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(d)]:

- The Anti-SLAPP motion can be employed against claims arising from gathering, receiving or processing information for communication to the publisher, editor, reporter or other person connected or employed upon a newspaper, magazine or other periodical publication, press association or wire service, or a person engaged in the dissemination of ideas or expression in any book or academic journal [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(d)(1)].

- The Anti-SLAPP motion can be employed against claims against any person or entity based upon the creation, dissemination, exhibition, advertisement or other promotion of any dramatic, literary, musical, political or artistic work [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(d)(2)].

- The Anti-SLAPP motion can be employed against claims against any non-profit organization that receives more than 50% of its annual revenue from federal, state, or local government grants, awards, programs, or reimbursements for services rendered [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(d)(3)].

[c] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, this form may be used to oppose the memorandum set out in § 161.30 or 161.34.

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 161 MOTIONS TO STRIKE: ANTI-SLAPP
PART II. FORMS
PART B. Opposing Special Motion to Strike

16-161 California Points & Authorities § 161.62

§ 161.62 Opposing Special Motion to Strike Action Against Constitutionally Privileged Conduct (SLAPP Suit) [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(b)]--Action Brought Against a Person Primarily Engaged in the Business of Selling Goods or Services [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(c)]

[1] FORM

[This form should be used in combination with the general form of memorandum opposing a special motion to strike (see § 161.60)].

THE SPECIAL MOTION TO STRIKE SHOULD NOT BE GRANTED BECAUSE THE PLAINTIFF BROUGHT THE ACTION AGAINST A PERSON PRIMARILY ENGAGED IN THE BUSINESS OF SELLING _____ [GOODS or SERVICES] AND PLAINTIFF MEETS THE STATUTORY EXCEPTION REQUIREMENTS OF CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE § 425.17(c).

A. Plaintiff Brought the Action Against a Person Primarily Engaged in the Business of Selling Goods or Services. Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(b) does not apply to any action brought against a person primarily engaged in the business of selling goods or services if both of the following conditions are met (Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(c)):

[EITHER]

1. The statement or conduct consists of representations of fact about that person's _____ [business operations or goods or services] that is made for the purpose of _____ [obtaining approval for or promoting or securing sales or leases of or commercial transactions in] the person's _____ [goods or services] (Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(c)(1)).

[OR]

1. The statement or conduct was made in the course of delivering the person's _____ [goods or services] (Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(c)(1)).

[EITHER]

2. The intended audience is _____ [an actual or potential buyer or customer or a person likely to repeat the statement to, or otherwise influence, an actual or potential buyer or customer] (Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(c)(2)).

[OR]

2. The statement or conduct arose out of or within the context of a regulatory approval _____ [process or proceeding or investigation] not withstanding that the conduct or statement concerns an important public issue (Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(c)(2)).

B. Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17 is Constitutional and Not An Invalid Attempt to Regulation Speech Concerning Important Public Issues. Code of Civil Procedure Section 425.17(c) does not purport to regulate, restrict, condition or penalize a defendant's ability as a speaker freely to engage in commercial speech; it merely regulates or restricts the defendant's ability as a litigant to seek dismissal of certain lawsuits at a particular stage of the litigation (Brenton v. Metabolife International, Inc. (2004) 116 Cal. App. 4th 679, 689-690, 10 Cal. Rptr. 3d 702 ; Physicians Committee for Responsible Medicine v. Tyson Foods, Inc. (2004) 119 Cal. App. 4th 120, 130, 13 Cal. Rptr. 3d 926).

[Optional] C. Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17 Applies Retroactively. Code of Civil Procedure Section 425.17 is properly characterized as a procedural statute applicable to pending actions, and the new statutory scheme may be applied to pending actions without triggering retroactivity concerns (Brenton v. Metabolife International, Inc. (2004) 116 Cal. App. 4th 679, 689-690, 10 Cal. Rptr. 3d 702).

[Optional] D. The Action Arises Out of Commercial Speech and Conduct and Is Therefore Exempt From Anti-SLAPP Scrutiny. Where defendants, as large financial management and services entities, are "primarily engaged in the business of selling ... goods or services, including, but not limited to ... securities, or financial instruments," and the challenged "statement or conduct was made in the course of delivering the person's goods or services" they are exempt from an Anti-SLAPP motion (Brill Media Co. v. TCW Group, Inc. (2005) 132 Cal. App. 4th 324, 341-342, 33 Cal. Rptr. 3d 371 overruled on other grounds in Simpson Strong Tie, Inc. v. Gore (2010) 49 Cal. 4th 12, 109 Cal. Rptr. 3d 329, 230 P.3d 1117 (burden of proof on plaintiff).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in opposition to a defendant's special motion to strike under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16 when the plaintiff's action was brought against a person primarily engaged in the business of selling goods or services [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(c)]. In 2003, the Legislature determined that there had been a "disturbing" abuse of California's Anti-SLAPP motion procedure [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(a)]. Consumer groups argued that large corporations were invoking the Anti-SLAPP statute to delay and discourage litigation against them. The Legislature enacted Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17 to provide statutory exceptions to an Anti-SLAPP motion.

To meet this exception, plaintiff must show both of the conditions set forth in Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(c) are met. Counsel should set forth argument in the form showing how the listed conditions are met.

[b] Exception Does Not Apply in Public Utilities Commission Proceedings

The exception to an Anti-SLAPP motion for actions brought against a person primarily engaged in the business of selling goods or services does not apply where the statement or conduct at issue was made by a telephone corporation in the course of a proceeding before the California Public Utilities Commission and is the subject of a lawsuit brought by a competitor [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(c)(2)].

[c] Circumstances Under Which Statutory Exceptions Are Inapplicable

There are circumstances when the foregoing statutory prohibition against bringing a special motion to strike does not apply. An Anti-SLAPP motion is permitted as an exception to the foregoing prohibition as follows [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(d)]:

- The Anti-SLAPP motion can be employed against claims arising from gathering, receiving or processing information for communication to the publisher, editor, reporter or other person connected or employed upon a newspaper, magazine or other periodical publication, press association or wire service, or a person engaged in the dissemination of ideas or expression in any book or academic journal [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(d)(1)].

- The Anti-SLAPP motion can be employed against claims against any person or entity based upon the creation, dissemination, exhibition, advertisement or other promotion of any dramatic, literary, musical, political or artistic work [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(d)(2)].

- The Anti-SLAPP motion can be employed against claims against any non-profit organization that receives more than 50% of its annual revenue from federal, state, or local government grants, awards, programs, or reimbursements for services rendered [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(d)(3)].

[d] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, this form may be used to oppose the memorandum set out in § 161.30 or 161.34.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17 is Constitutional and Not An Invalid Attempt to Regulation Speech Concerning Important Public Issues

In Brenton v. Metabolife International, Inc. (2004) 116 Cal. App. 4th 679, 10 Cal. Rptr. 3d 702 , a consumer alleged that she developed a mental illness as a result of consuming a defective dietary supplement produced by the manufacturer. She also alleged false advertising and misbranding of the product. The manufacturer moved to strike the complaint under the Anti-SLAPP statute, contending that the complaint targeted its constitutionally protected commercial speech. The trial court denied the manufacturer's motion under the Anti-SLAPP statute, Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16, to strike plaintiff consumer's complaint alleging causes of action for product liability, negligence, breach of express and implied warranty, and fraud. On appeal, the defendant asserted Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17, enacted during the appeal, did not apply retroactively and that the statute was unconstitutional.

The appellate court held that Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17 is constitutional because the statute does not purport to regulate, restrict, condition or penalize a defendant's ability as a speaker freely to engage in commercial speech; it merely regulates or restricts the defendant's ability as a litigant to seek dismissal of certain lawsuits at a particular stage of the litigation (116 Cal. App. 4th 679, 692) . The defendant was unable to support the contention that a defendant has a First Amendment right to specialized procedural remedies against a private lawsuit seeking to impose liability for unprotected commercial speech, and the court could not find any case law holding there is a constitutional imperative that a legislature must make procedural screening devices available to preempt those private lawsuits (116 Cal. App. 4th 679, 692) .

In Physicians Committee for Responsible Medicine v. Tyson Foods, Inc. (2004) 119 Cal. App. 4th 120, 13 Cal. Rptr. 3d 926 , the plaintiff, a nonprofit organization, alleged that defendant poultry producer made false and deceptive representations about chicken products that it sold to consumers in California. The complaint alleged that the poultry producer engaged in two advertising campaigns that disseminated false and deceptive statements about its products. The second campaign involved a representation that the products were a "natural" food. The poultry producer brought a motion to strike pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16. The poultry producer attacked the complaint as alleging causes of action arising from the exercise of its right of free speech in connection with a public issue. The trial court granted the motion with respect to the causes of action involving the second campaign.

On appeal, the court held that the enactment of Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17 during the pendency of the appeal operated as a repeal of the statutory authorization for the trial court's order and mandated reversal. The court stated that the suit against the poultry producer for deceptive advertising practices came squarely within Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(c). Additionally, the court stated that Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(c) did not restrict or regulate speech by redefining the availability of a procedure for early adjudication of claims. Citing Brenton, above, the court upheld the constitutionality of the statute and further added that the legislative decision to provide a procedure for early adjudication of claims affecting First Amendment freedoms is analogous to a legislative decision restricted lobbying activities of organizations qualifying for tax exempt status. A legislature's decision not to subsidize the exercise of a fundamental right does not infringe the right, and thus is not subject to strict scrutiny (119 Cal. App. 4th 120, 130) .

[b] Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17 Applies Retroactively

In Brenton v. Metabolife International, Inc. (2004) 116 Cal. App. 4th 679, 10 Cal. Rptr. 3d 702 , a consumer alleged that she developed a mental illness as a result of consuming a defective dietary supplement produced by the manufacturer. She also alleged false advertising and misbranding of the product. The manufacturer moved to strike the complaint under the Anti-SLAPP statute, contending that the complaint targeted its constitutionally protected commercial speech. The trial court denied the manufacturer's motion under the Anti-SLAPP statute, Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16, to strike plaintiff consumer's complaint alleging causes of action for product liability, negligence, breach of express and implied warranty, and fraud.

The court affirmed the denial of the motion, holding that because protected speech was not the gravamen or principal thrust of claims seeking recovery for personal injuries to a consumer caused by a defective product, such claims did not arise from protected activity within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(e) (116 Cal. App. 4th 679, 687) .

The court also addressed the issue of retroactive application of Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17, enacted by the Legislature during the appeal. The appellate court held that Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(c) removed remove the plaintiff's unfair practices claim (as well as her individual claims) from the types of claims against which an Anti-SLAPP motion can be filed. The manufacturer agreed that application of Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(c) would be fatal to the motion to strike but asserted that the statute could not be applied retroactively and that the statute was unconstitutional. The court found that the presumption against retrospective construction does not apply to statutes relating merely to remedies and modes of procedure. Procedural changes "operate on existing causes of action and defenses, and it is a misnomer to designate them as having retrospective effect." In other words, procedural statutes may become operative only when and if the procedure or remedy is invoked, and if the trial postdates the enactment, the statute operates in the future regardless of the time of occurrence of the events giving rise to the cause of action. In such cases the statutory changes are said to apply not because they constitute an exception to the general rule of statutory construction, but because they are not in fact retrospective. There is then no problem as to whether the Legislature intended the changes to operate retroactively (116 Cal. App. 4th 679, 689) . Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17 is properly characterized as a procedural statute applicable to pending actions.

Where the Legislature has conferred a remedy and withdraws it by amendment or repeal of the remedial statute, the new statutory scheme may be applied to pending actions without triggering retroactivity concerns (116 Cal. App. 4th 679, 690) .

[c] The Action Arises Out of Commercial Speech and Conduct and Is Therefore Exempt From Anti-SLAPP Scrutiny

Plaintiffs in Brill Media Co. v. TCW Group, Inc. (2005) 132 Cal. App. 4th 324, 33 Cal. Rptr. 3d 371 were 74 related entities consisting of radio stations and newspapers. In 1997, two of the plaintiffs issued $108 million worth of bonds, which the plaintiffs guaranteed with notes. One set of defendants was the owner of the bonds and the second set of defendants included companies related to the bondholders. Plaintiffs' amended complaint alleged that defendants had incentives to cause the default of and liquidate the Brill Media entities and, based on these allegations, they brought ten causes of action against defendants, including breach of contract, breach of confidentiality agreements, breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, interference with trust indenture contract, intentional interference with contract, intentional interference with economic relations, negligence interference with contract and economic relations, and violations of Virginia statutes (132 Cal. App. 4th 324, 337-338) .

Defendants filed a special motion to strike and in support of that motion filed a judicial notice request regarding bankruptcy pleadings. After plaintiffs defaulted on the bonds, defendants filed an involuntary bankruptcy petition seeking to dissolve the Brill Media entities. Defendants' assertion was that their conduct, the filing of the bankruptcy petition, was protected by the right of petition. The court granted defendants' special motion to strike on that basis (132 Cal. App. 4th 324, 340) .

On appeal, plaintiffs contended that their suit was not subject to a special motion to strike due to the exception enumerated by Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(c). The court of appeals agreed. The court first addressed the burden of proof on a Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17 determination and what documents a trial court may rely on in such a determination. The court noted that in determining whether a defendant sustains his initial burden of proof under the first prong of the Anti-SLAPP test, the court relies on both the pleadings and declarations. The issue of whether Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17 applies, the court stated, is a first prong determination and therefore the defendant has the burden of proving that a Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17 exception does not apply to any given case. In this particular instance, defendant did not submit any declarations, but rather relied solely on the pleadings in support of its special motion to strike. This finding of the burden being placed on the defendant was overturned and assigned to the plaintiff in Simpson Strong Tie, Inc. v. Gore (2010) 49 Cal. 4th 12, 109 Cal. Rptr. 3d 329, 230 P.3d 1117 . See section 161.36.

The court then explained why the exception articulated in Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(c) applied to this action. First, defendants, as large financial management and services entities, are "primarily engaged in the business of selling ... goods or services, including, but not limited to ... securities, or financial instruments" within the meaning of the statute. Second, the challenged "statement or conduct was made in the course of delivering the person's goods or services" in that it was part of an effort to secure control of the Brill Media entities and this was the type of business transaction ordinarily engaged in by defendants. Finally, the statements at issue were made to potential buyers of the radio stations or "actual or potential buyer[s] or customer[s]" within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 425.17(c). The fact that the potential buyers were potential buyers of plaintiff and not defendants did not matter for the purposes of the statute. Because the statements and conduct complained of arose out of commercial speech and conduct, they were exempt from Anti-SLAPP scrutiny (132 Cal. App. 4th 324, 341-342) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 161 MOTIONS TO STRIKE: ANTI-SLAPP
PART II. FORMS
PART B. Opposing Special Motion to Strike

16-161 California Points & Authorities § 161.63

§ 161.63 Opposing Special Motion to Strike Against Constitutionally Privileged Conduct (SLAPP Suit) [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(b)]--Action Is a SLAPPback [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.18]

[1] FORM

[This form should be used in combination with the general form of memorandum opposing a special motion to strike (see § 161.60)].

THE SPECIAL MOTION TO STRIKE IS SUBJECT TO THE PROVISIONS OF CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE SECTION 425.18 BECAUSE PLAINTIFF'S ACTION IS A SLAPPBACK AND IS THEREFORE IS CONSISTENT WITH THE LEGISLATURE'S INTENT TO PROTECT THE VALID EXERCISE OF THE CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHTS OF FREE SPEECH AND PETITION

A. Plaintiff's Complaint Qualifies as a SLAPPback. The provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 425.18 apply to this motion because the complaint forming the basis for the special motion to strike is a cause of action for _____ [malicious prosecution or abuse of process] and it arises from the _____ [filing or maintenance] of a prior cause of action that was dismissed pursuant to a special motion to strike under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16 (Soukup v. Law Offices of Herbert Hafif (2006) 39 Cal. 4th 260, 281, 46 Cal. Rptr. 3d 638).

B. Defendant May Not Recover Attorney's Fees. A prevailing defendant may not recover attorney's fees under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(c) when the cause of action forming the basis for the special motion to strike is a SLAPPback (Code Civ. Proc. § 425.18(c); Hutton v. Hafif (2007) 150 Cal. App. 4th 527, 545, 59 Cal. Rptr. 3d 109).

C. Discovery Is Not Stayed Upon the Filing of a Special Motion to Strike a SLAPPback. Defendant's filing of this special motion to strike does not operate to stay discovery because this action is a SLAPPback (Code Civ. Proc. § 425.18(c)).

[Optional] D. The Special Motion to Strike Must Be Denied Because It Was Not Timely Filed. A special motion to strike a SLAPPback must be filed _____ [within 120 days of the service of the complaint or within six months of the service of the complaint at the court's discretion] unless there are extraordinary circumstances due to no fault of the defendant (Code Civ. Proc. § 425.18(d)).

[Optional] E. Plaintiff Is Entitled to Attorney's Fees. Defendant's special motion to strike is _____ [frivolous or solely intended to cause unnecessary delay] and therefore plaintiff is entitled to costs and reasonable attorney's fees pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 128.5 (Code Civ. Proc. § 425.18(f)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in opposition to a defendant's special motion to strike under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16 when the plaintiff's action qualifies as a "SLAPPback," defined as any cause of action for malicious prosecution or abuse of process arising from the filing or maintenance of a prior cause of action that has been dismissed pursuant to a special motion to strike under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16 [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.18]. In 2005, the Legislature found that a SLAPPback is distinguishable in character and origin from the ordinary malicious prosecution action and therefore should be treated differently with regard to SLAPP litigation [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.18].

[b] Special Provisions Applicable to SLAPPbacks

The following is a list of differences between an ordinary special motion to strike under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16 and a special motion to strike a SLAPPback [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.18]:

- A prevailing defendant may not recover his or her attorney's fees and costs [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.18(c)].

- The motion must be filed either 1) within 120 days of the service of the complaint, 2) at the court's discretion, within six months of the service of the complaint, or at the court's discretion, or 3) at the court's discretion, at any later time in extraordinary cases due to no fault of the defendant and upon written findings of the court stating the extraordinary case and circumstances [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.18(d)(1)].

- Discovery is not stayed upon the filing of a special motion to strike to which Code Civ. Proc. § 425.18 applies [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.18(c)].

- An order granting or denying a special motion to strike to which Code Civ. Proc. § 425.18 applies is not appealable; instead, it is reviewable by peremptory writ within 20 days after service of a written notice of entry of the order [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.18(c), (g)].

- A party opposing a special motion to strike a SLAPPback may file an ex parte application for a continuance to obtain necessary discovery and the court shall grant a reasonable continuance if it appears that facts essential to justify opposition may exist but cannot then be presented [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.18(e)].

[c] Section Does Not Apply to SLAPPback Filed by Public Entity

The special provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 425.18 do not apply to SLAPPbacks filed by public entities [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.18(i)].

[d] Exception For Prior Cause of Action Which Was Illegal

A special motion to strike may not be filed against a SLAPPback by a party whose filing or maintenance of the prior cause of action from which the SLAPPback arises was illegal as a matter of law [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.18(h)].

[e] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, this form may be used to oppose the memorandum; see §§ 161.30, 161.34.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Plaintiff's Complaint Qualifies as a SLAPPback

In Soukup v. Law Offices of Herbert Hafif (2006) 39 Cal. 4th 260, 46 Cal. Rptr. 3d 638 , plaintiff was employed by defendant Law Offices of Herbert Hafif and participated in the firm's pension plan. In October 1992, the firm informed her and other employees that the plan was being terminated. Plaintiff and the firm's sole shareholder got into a dispute regarding the transfer of stock that comprised part of the pension assets. Six weeks after the dispute, plaintiff quit her job and she subsequently filed a federal court action for recovery of pension benefits. The action was eventually settled. In the meantime, defendant law firm was involved in various other litigation brought both by former employees and former clients (39 Cal. 4th 260, 270-271) .

As a result of plaintiff's federal suit against defendant, defendant filed a malicious prosecution claim ("the underlying action") against plaintiff and other former employees. In response, plaintiff filed a special motion to strike under the Anti-SLAPP statute, arguing that the malicious prosecution action was in retaliation for plaintiff's federal lawsuit. The trial court granted plaintiff's Anti-SLAPP motion, and the court of appeal affirmed in an unpublished opinion (39 Cal. 4th 260, 269) .

Plaintiff then filed her own malicious prosecution and abuse of process action against defendant law firm and other defendants, and in response, defendants filed an Anti-SLAPP motion claiming the underlying action arose from the valid exercise of their constitutionally protected right of petition. The trial court denied this motion. The court of appeal initially affirmed, then reversed its ruling based on the holding in Jarrow Formulas, Inc. v. LaMarche (2003) 31 Cal. 4th 728, 3 Cal. Rptr. 3d 636 (holding malicious prosecution claims are not exempt from Anti-SLAPP scrutiny). Plaintiff appealed, and the Supreme Court granted her petition for review (39 Cal. 4th 260, 269) .

The Supreme Court began by noting that plaintiff's action was a SLAPPback, which is an " ... action, typically for malicious prosecution," filed by the target of a SLAPP suit against the SLAPP filer after the dismissal of the SLAPP suit as a result of the target's appropriate use of the SLAPP statute" (39 Cal. 4th 260, 279-280 (quoting Assem. Com. On Judiciary, Rep. on Assem. Bill No. 1158)). The purpose of such an action is to seek compensation for damages beyond the attorney fees and costs awarded under the Anti-SLAPP statute. While plaintiff's action was pending, the Legislature enacted the so-called "SLAPPback statute," found at Code Civ. Proc. § 425.18. This statute sets forth different procedures for SLAPPbacks as opposed to typical SLAPPs. The Supreme Court held that as a procedure statute, the SLAPPback law applied retroactively to cases pending before its effective date. The SLAPPback statute treats SLAPPbacks differently from ordinary malicious prosecution actions in that it changes the procedures in order to "stack the procedural deck in favor of the SLAPPback plaintiff confronted with a special motion to strike" (39 Cal. 4th 260, 282) . The statute also exempts SLAPPbacks from Anti-SLAPP scrutiny in cases in which the filing or maintenance of the prior, underlying action was illegal as a matter of law (Code Civ. Proc. § 425.18(h)). In this case, plaintiff contended that defendant's underlying action violated state and federal labor laws. The court, after noting that a SLAPPback plaintiff has the burden of establishing that the underlying action was illegal as a matter of law, either because the defendant concedes the conduct was illegal or the illegality is conclusively established by the evidence, held that plaintiff's case did not fall within the SLAPPback exemption of Code Civ. Proc. § 425.18(h). Plaintiff failed to show that defendant's malicious prosecution action was illegal as a matter of law because the statutes plaintiff relied on required plaintiff to be an employee and a beneficiary of the pension plan at the time of the filing of defendant's lawsuit

(39 Cal. 4th 260, 288-290) .

The court then moved on to the second prong of the Anti-SLAPP test: whether plaintiff showed a probability of prevailing on her malicious prosecution claim. Plaintiff was able to demonstrate a probability of showing that the prior action was commenced by the defendant, pursued to a legal termination favorable to plaintiff, brought without probable cause, and initiated with malice. Therefore, the Supreme Court reversed the court of appeal and defendant's Anti-SLAPP motion was denied (39 Cal. 4th 260, 297) .

[b] Defendant May Not Recover Attorney's Fees

Hutton v. Hafif (2007) 150 Cal. App. 4th 527, 59 Cal. Rptr. 3d 109 originally arose out of defendant's and his law firm's representation of plaintiff in a discrimination suit in the early 1990's. Following the discrimination suit, plaintiff sued defendants for malpractice. The court ultimately dismissed the malpractice suit. Defendants then sued plaintiff for malicious prosecution, and the court dismissed that lawsuit under the Anti-SLAPP statute. Plaintiff then sued defendants for malicious prosecution as a result of the second lawsuit. In response, defendants filed an Anti-SLAPP motion, arguing they had had probable cause to file the second lawsuit. The trial court denied the motion, ruling that defendants had not had such probable cause. The court of appeals reversed, and remanded the case to the trial court, directing the trial court to grant the motion and award defendants their attorney's fees. Subsequently, the legislature enacted Code Civ. Proc. § 425.18, the SLAPPback statute, prompting plaintiff to request reconsideration of the order granting defendants' special motion to strike. The trial court denied plaintiff's motion, and she appealed.

On appeal, the court affirmed in part and reversed in part, holding that the action was indeed a SLAPPback subject to the rules of Code Civ. Proc. § 425.18. The parties all acknowledged that the SLAPPback statute applied retroactively to cases filed prior to its enactment. The court noted that the mandatory attorney's fee provision of Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(c) is inapplicable to SLAPPback actions: a prevailing plaintiff is only entitled to fees if the court finds the special motion to strike is frivolous or solely intended to cause unnecessary delay. A prevailing defendant is not entitled to attorney's fees. Therefore, the court reversed the attorney's fee award (150 Cal. App. 4th 527, 540) .

Additionally, plaintiff argued that the provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 425.18(h) applied because the filing or maintenance of defendants' prior action was illegal as a matter of law. The court stated that plaintiff had the burden of showing that the underlying malicious prosecution suit was illegal as a matter of law, either because defendant concedes the illegally or the illegality is "conclusively established by the evidence" (150 Cal. App. 4th 527, 542) . The plaintiff must also "identify with particularity the statute or statutes" violated and demonstrate the manner in which defendant violated the statute or statutes (150 Cal. App. 4th 527, 542) . In this case, plaintiff claimed defendants' prior action was illegal because it violated B&P Code § 6094(a), which prohibits lawsuits based on communications with the State Bar. The court disagreed with plaintiff, holding that the prior action did not arise solely out of plaintiff's complaints to the State Bar. Rather, the lawsuit also arose out of other public statements not within the scope of B&P Code § 6094(a). The court held that because a material part of the prior action was not illegal, Code Civ. Proc. § 425.18(h) did not apply (150 Cal. App. 4th 527, 545) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
Chapters 162 through 164 RESERVED

16-162 California Points & Authorities Chapters 162 through 164

RESERVED

Chapters 162RESERVED

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE

16-165 California Points & Authorities 165.syn

§ 165.syn Synopsis to Chapter 165: NEGLIGENCE

§ 165.01 Scope of Chapter

§ 165.02 Governing Law

§ 165.03 How to Use the Forms in This Chapter

[1] Page Limits on Supporting and Opposing Memoranda

[2] Using the Forms to Build a Draft Memorandum

§ 165.04 Related Discussion and Forms

[1] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[2] Related Points and Authorities

§§ 165.05-165.09 [Reserved]

§ 165.10 Complaint Sufficiently Pleads Actionable Negligence

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Elements of Actionable Negligence Are Present

[b] Plaintiff Sustained "Injury"

[c] Complaint Sufficiently Pleads Necessary Allegations

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Elements of Actionable Negligence Are Present

[b] Complaint Sufficiently Pleads Necessary Allegations

§§ 165.11-165.19 [Reserved]

§ 165.20 Complaint Does Not Sufficiently Plead Actionable Negligence

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Elements of Actionable Negligence Are Not Present

[b] Plaintiff Has Not Sustained "Injury"

[c] Absence of Element Is Fatal to Recovery

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Elements of Actionable Negligence Are Not Present

§§ 165.21-165.29 [Reserved]

§ 165.30 Defendant Owed Duty to Plaintiff

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Existence and Breach of Duty

[b] Defendant Owed Duty to Plaintiff or to Class

[c] Duty Is Question of Law

[d] Policy Factors Considered in Scope of Duty Determination

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Defendant Owed Duty to Plaintiff or to Class

[b] Policy Factors Considered in Scope of Duty Determination

§ 165.31 Defendant's Conduct Fell Below Applicable Standard of Care

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Defendant's Conduct Fell Below Common Law Standard of Care

[b] Defendant's Conduct Did Not Comport With Custom and Practice

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Defendant's Conduct Fell Below Common Law Standard of Care

§ 165.32 Defendant Breached Duty Owed to Plaintiff

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Existence and Breach of Duty

[b] Determination of Breach

§§ 165.33-165.39 [Reserved]

§ 165.40 Defendant Not Liable for Nonfeasance Because No Duty Existed

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Liability for Failure to Act Unless Duty Exists

[b] Nonfeasance Versus Misfeasance

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] No Liability for Failure to Act Unless Duty Exists

§§ 165.41-165.49 [Reserved]

§ 165.50 Defendant's Conduct Created Foreseeable Risk of Harm

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Risk Was Foreseeable

[b] Foreseeability as Question of Law

[c] Foreseeability as Question of Fact

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Risk Was Foreseeable

§§ 165.51-165.59 [Reserved]

§ 165.60 Defendant's Conduct Did Not Create Foreseeable Risk of Harm

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Risk Was Not Reasonably Foreseeable

[b] Public Policy Limits Liability

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Risk Was Not Reasonably Foreseeable

[b] Public Policy Limits Liability

§§ 165.61-165.69 [Reserved]

§ 165.70 Presumptive Negligence Established Under Evidence Code § 669

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Presumption of Negligence Established

[b] Violation Was Proximate Cause of Plaintiff's Injury

[c] Harm to Plaintiff Was Type of Harm Statute Was Designed to Prevent

[d] Plaintiff Was Member of Protected Class

[e] Effect of Statutes That Do Not Provide for Civil Liability

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Presumption of Negligence Established

[b] Harm to Plaintiff Was Type of Harm Statute Was Designed to Prevent

[c] Plaintiff Was Member of Protected Class

[d] Effect of Statutes That Do Not Provide for Civil Liability

§§ 165.71-165.79 [Reserved]

§ 165.80 Presumption of Negligence Not Established Under Evidence Code § 669

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Presumption of Negligence Not Established

[b] Insufficient Evidence of Violation

[c] Violation Was Not Proximate Cause of Injury

[d] Harm to Plaintiff Was Not Type of Harm Statute Was Designed to Prevent

[e] Plaintiff Was Not Member of Protected Class

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Insufficient Evidence of Violation

[b] Harm to Plaintiff Was Not Type of Harm Statute Was Designed to Prevent

[c] Plaintiff Was Not Member of Protected Class

§ 165.81 Defendant Rebutted Presumption of Negligence Under Evidence Code § 669

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Defendant Acted Reasonably Under Circumstances

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Defendant Acted Reasonably Under Circumstances

§ 165.82 Defendant's Compliance With Statute Met Standard of Care

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Statutory Compliance Met Standard of Care

§§ 165.83-165.89 [Reserved]

§ 165.90 Public Policy Precludes Imposition of Duty

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Public Policy Considerations Warrant Nonliability for Negligence

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Public Policy Considerations Warrant Nonliability for Negligence

§ 165.91 Social Utility of Defendant's Conduct Militates Against Imposing Duty

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Social Utility of Defendant's Conduct

§§ 165.92-165.99 [Reserved]

§ 165.100 Defendant Breached Duty Arising From Contract

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Duty Created by Contract

[b] Liability to Persons Not In Privity

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Duty Created by Contract

[b] Liability to Persons Not in Privity

§§ 165.101-165.109 [Reserved]

§ 165.110 Public Policy Precludes Imposition of Contractual Duty on Defendant Not in Privity

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Public Policy Precludes Imposition of Duty

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Public Policy Precludes Imposition of Duty

§ 165.111 Defendant Did Not Breach Limited Contractual Duty to Party Not in Privity

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Duty Limited by Terms of Contract

§§ 165.112-165.119 [Reserved]

§ 165.120 Defendant Owed and Breached Duty to Child

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Greater Degree of Caution Necessary With Children

[b] Degree of Caution Increases With Immaturity of Child

[c] Known Characteristics of Child Are Factor in Breach Determination

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Greater Degree of Caution Necessary With Children

§ 165.121 Duty Owed by Child--Adult Standard of Care Applies

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Child Engaged in Adult Activity Held to Adult Standard of Care

[b] Child Driving Car Held to Adult Standard

[c] Effect of Statutory Violation

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Child Engaged in Adult Activity Held to Adult Standard of Care

§§ 165.122-165.129 [Reserved]

§ 165.130 Defendant Owed Plaintiff Duty to Control or Warn of Third Party's Dangerous Conduct Based on Existence of Special Relationship

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Special Relationship Imposed Duty to Control or Warn

[b] Relationship of Dependence Created Special Relationship

[c] Single Relationship Sufficient to Create Special Relationship

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Special Relationship Imposed Duty to Control or Warn

[b] Relationship of Dependence Created Special Relationship

§ 165.131 Defendant's Duty to Control or Warn of Third Party's Dangerous Conduct Extended to Foreseeable Victims

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Duty Extends to Foreseeable Victims

§§ 165.132-165.139 [Reserved]

§ 165.140 Defendant Owed and Breached Duty to Rescuer

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Defendant Liable for Injuries Sustained by Necessary Rescuer

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Defendant Liable for Injuries Sustained by Necessary Rescuer

§§ 165.141-165.149 [Reserved]

§ 165.150 Defendant Owed and Breached Voluntarily Assumed Duty

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Liability Based on Voluntary Assumption of Duty

[b] Services Necessary for Protection of Third Person

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Liability Based on Voluntary Assumption of Duty

§§ 165.151-165.159 [Reserved]

§ 165.160 Defendant Owed and Breached Duty to Plaintiff Despite Sudden Onset of Mental Illness

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Sudden Mental Illness No Defense to Negligence

§§ 165.161-165.169 [Reserved]

§ 165.170 Defendant Owed and Breached Duty to Reveal Risk of HIV Infection

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Negligent Transmission of HIV

§§ 165.171-165.179 [Reserved]

§ 165.180 Duty Owed by Employer at Multi-Employer Worksite

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Duty of Employer at Multi-Employer Sites to Report Hazards

§§ 165.181-165.189 [Reserved]

§ 165.190 Duty Owed by Child--Adult Standard of Care Does Not Apply

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Children Not Engaged in Adult Activities Held to Standard of Care Applicable to Children

§§ 165.191-165.199 [Reserved]

§ 165.200 Auditor Owes No Duty of Care to Persons Other Than Client

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Auditor's Duty Limited to Client

§§ 165.201-165.219 [Reserved]

§ 165.220 Gas Company's Limited Duty of Care to Gas Customer

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Limited Duty Based on Inherently Hazardous Substance

§§ 165.221-165.229 [Reserved]

§ 165.230 Defendant Owed Plaintiff No Duty to Control or Warn of Third Party's Dangerous Conduct Because No Special Relationship Existed

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Duty to Control or Warn Absent Special Relationship

[b] No Ability to Control Third Party

[c] No Actual Custodial Ability

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] No Duty to Control or Warn Absent Special Relationship

§ 165.231 Defendant Owed Plaintiff No Duty to Control or Warn of Third Party's Dangerous Conduct Because Defendant Had No Knowledge of Specific Risk to Foreseeable Victim

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Knowledge of Specific Risk to Foreseeable Victim

[b] Actual Knowledge of Risk Required

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] No Knowledge of Specific Risk to Foreseeable Victim

§ 165.232 Defendant Owed Plaintiff No Duty to Control or Warn of Third Party's Dangerous Conduct Because Risk Could Not Be Guarded Against by Warning Plaintiff

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Risk Could Not Be Guarded Against by Warning Potential Victim

§§ 165.233-165.239 [Reserved]

§ 165.240 Rescuer Not Liable for Act That Did Not Increase Risk of Harm to Plaintiff or Induce Plaintiff's Reliance

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Liability Unless Rescuer's Act Increased Risk of Harm or Induced Reliance

§ 165.241 Defendant Did Not Breach Duty to Plaintiff Because Voluntarily Assumed Duty Expired

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Duty of "Good Samaritan" Is Limited In Duration

§ 165.242 No Duty to Act Absent Special Relationship

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Liability for Failure to Act Unless Special Relationship Exists

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] No Liability for Failure to Act Unless Special Relationship Exists

§§ 165.243-165.249 [Reserved]

§ 165.250 Defendant Placed in Imminent Peril Did Not Breach Duty to Plaintiff

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Standard of Care in Situation of Imminent Peril

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Standard of Care in Situation of Imminent Peril

§§ 165.251-165.259 [Reserved]

§ 165.260 Sufficient Causal Connection Exists Between Defendant's Actions and Plaintiff's Injuries

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Sufficient Causal Connection Between Defendant's Actions and Plaintiff's Damages

[b] Absolute Certainty Not Required

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Sufficient Causal Connection Between Defendant's Actions and Plaintiff's Damages

[b] Absolute Certainty Not Required

§ 165.261 Defendant's Conduct Was Cause in Fact of Plaintiff's Injuries

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] "But For" Test Met

[b] Proximate Cause Includes Cause in Fact

§ 165.262 Defendant's Conduct Was Substantial Factor in Causing Plaintiff's Injuries

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Conduct Was Substantial Factor

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Conduct Was Substantial Factor

§ 165.263 Defendant's Conduct Was Proximate Cause of Plaintiff's Injuries

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Proximate Cause Encompasses Legal Cause and Cause in Fact

[b] Proximate Cause Is Policy Determination

[c] Policy Considerations in Proximate Cause Determination

[d] No Intervening Cause

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] No Intervening Cause

§§ 165.264-165.269 [Reserved]

§ 165.270 Insufficient Causal Connection Between Defendant's Actions and Plaintiff's Injuries

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Insufficient Causal Connection Between Defendant's Actions and Plaintiff's Injuries

§ 165.271 Defendant's Conduct Was Not Cause in Fact of Plaintiff's Injuries

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Defendant's Conduct Not Cause in Fact of Harm

[b] "But for" Test Applicable to Actual Rather Than Proximate Cause

§ 165.272 Defendant's Conduct Was Not Proximate Cause of Plaintiff's Injuries

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Conduct Too Remote in Chain of Causation

[b] Intervening Cause

[c] Prior Proximate Cause Determinations Lack Precedential Value

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Conduct Too Remote in Chain of Causation

[b] Prior Proximate Cause Determinations Lack Precedential Value

§ 165.273 Public Policy Militates Against Finding That Defendant's Conduct Was Proximate Cause

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Proximate Cause Finding Contravenes Public Policy

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Policy Considerations in Proximate Cause Determination

§§ 165.274-165.279 [Reserved]

§ 165.280 Defendant's Concurrent Negligent Act Was Proximate Cause of Plaintiff's Injuries

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] One of Two Concurrent Acts May Be Proximate Cause of Injury

[b] Defendant's Conduct Alone Was Sufficient to Cause Injury

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] One of Two Concurrent Acts May Be Proximate Cause of Injury

[b] Defendant's Conduct Alone Was Sufficient to Cause Injury

§ 165.281 Defendant Liable Despite Failure to Anticipate Concurrent Act

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Failure to Anticipate Concurrent Act No Defense

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Failure to Anticipate Concurrent Act No Defense

§ 165.282 Defendant Liable Despite Nonsimultaneous Nature of Act

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Simultaneous Negligent Acts Not Required

§ 165.283 Defendant Liable Despite Innocent Nature of Concurring Cause

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Concurring "Act of God" No Defense

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Concurring "Act of God" No Defense

§ 165.284 Plaintiff Does Not Have Burden of Apportioning Damages Between Concurring Causes

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Plaintiff Not Required to Prove Apportionment

§§ 165.285-165.299 [Reserved]

§ 165.300 Defendant Is Liable Because Intervening Act or Harm to Plaintiff Was Foreseeable

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Foreseeability of Act or Injury Sufficient to Show Proximate Cause

[b] Risk of Harm Was Foreseeable

[c] Precise Harm Need Not Be Foreseen

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Foreseeability of Act or Injury Sufficient to Show Proximate Cause

[b] Precise Harm Need Not Be Foreseen

§ 165.301 Intervening Act of Third Person Was Foreseeable

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Intervening Act of Third Person Was Foreseeable

[b] Foreseeability Is Question for Trier of Fact

[c] Intervening Act Not Highly Extraordinary Response to Situation

[d] Intervening Act May Be Innocent, Negligent, Intentionally Tortious, or Criminal

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Intervening Act of Third Person Was Foreseeable

[b] Intervening Act Not Highly Extraordinary Response to Situation

[c] Intervening Act May Be Innocent, Negligent, Intentionally Tortious, or Criminal

§ 165.302 Intervening Force of Nature Was Foreseeable

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Foreseeable Intervening Forces of Nature

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Foreseeable Intervening Forces of Nature

§ 165.303 Defendant Is Liable Despite Intervening Criminal Act

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Defendant's Conduct Created Opportunity for Intervening Criminal Act

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Defendant's Conduct Created Opportunity for Intervening Criminal Act

§ 165.304 Defendant Is Liable Despite Third Party's Failure to Prevent Harm

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Risk of Injury Was Reasonably Foreseeable

[b] Failure to Prevent Harm Is Not Superseding Cause

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Failure to Prevent Harm Is Not Superseding Cause

§§ 165.305-165.319 [Reserved]

§ 165.320 Defendant Is Not Liable Because Intervening Act Broke Chain of Causation

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Intervening Act Broke Chain of Causation

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Intervening Act Broke Chain of Causation

§ 165.321 Intervening Act of Third Person Was Not Foreseeable

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Intervening Act of Third Person Was Not Foreseeable

[b] Two-Fold Test of Foreseeability

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Intervening Act of Third Person Was Not Foreseeable

§ 165.322 Defendant Is Not Liable Because Superseding Criminal Act Was Cause of Plaintiff's Injuries

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Unforeseeable Criminal Acts Are Superseding Causes

§ 165.323 Defendant Is Not Liable Because Plaintiff's Injuries Were Result of Unanticipated and Unusual Natural Event

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Plaintiff's Injuries Caused by "Act of God"

§§ 165.324-165.329 [Reserved]

§ 165.330 Defendant Has Burden to Prove Defendant's Conduct Was Not Proximate Cause of Plaintiff's Injury

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Concurrent Negligence but Single Unidentified Cause

[b] Defendant's Statutory Violation Deprived Plaintiff of Means of Establishing Causation

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Concurrent Negligence But Single Unidentified Cause

[b] Defendant's Statutory Violation Deprived Plaintiff of Means of Establishing Causation

§§ 165.331-165.339 [Reserved]

§ 165.340 Conditions for Application of Res Ipsa Loquitur Presumption Have Been Met

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Accident Was Probable Result of Negligence

[b] Conditions for Application of Doctrine Have Been Met

[c] Existence of Conditions Is Question of Fact Unless Facts Are Undisputed

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Accident Was Probable Result of Negligence

[b] Conditions for Application of Doctrine Have Been Met

§ 165.341 Res Ipsa Loquitur Presumption Applies Because Accident Was Kind Not Ordinarily Occurring in

Absence of Negligence

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Determination of Whether Accident Is Kind Not Occurring in Absence of Negligence

§ 165.342 Res Ipsa Loquitur Presumption Applies Because Defendant Had Exclusive Control of Instrumentality Causing Accident

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Defendant Had Exclusive Control of Instrumentality Causing Accident

[b] Joint and Exclusive Control of Instrumentality by Multiple Defendants

[c] Doctrine Applies Despite Relinquishment of Control by Defendant

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Defendant Had Exclusive Control of Instrumentality Causing Accident

[b] Doctrine Applies Despite Relinquishment of Control by Defendant

§ 165.343 Res Ipsa Loquitur Presumption Applies Because Plaintiff's Actions Did Not Contribute to Accident

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Plaintiff's Actions Did Not Contribute to Accident

§ 165.344 Due to Application of Res Ipsa Loquitur Presumption, Defendant Has Burden of Producing Evidence

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Application of Doctrine Shifts Burden of Producing Evidence to Defendant

§§ 165.345-165.359 [Reserved]

§ 165.360 Conditions for Application of Res Ipsa Loquitur Presumption Have Not Been Met

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Accident Was Not Probable Result of Negligence

[b] Accident Was Not Caused by Defendant

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Accident Was Not Probable Result of Negligence

[b] Accident Was Not Caused by Defendant

§ 165.361 Res Ipsa Loquitur Presumption Does Not Apply Because Defendant Did Not Have Exclusive Control of Instrumentality Causing Accident

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Exclusive Control of Instrumentality by Defendant

[b] Instrumentality Mishandled or Condition Changed After Leaving Defendant's Possession

§ 165.362 Res Ipsa Loquitur Presumption Does Not Apply Because Plaintiff's Actions Contributed to Accident

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Plaintiff's Actions Contributed to Accident

§§ 165.363-165.369 [Reserved]

§ 165.370 Defendant Has Produced Sufficient Evidence to Rebut Res Ipsa Loquitur Presumption Under Evidence Code Section 646(b)

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Evidence Proved That Defendant Was Not Negligent or That Defendant's Negligence Was Not Proximate Cause of Occurrence

§ 165.371 Defendant's Rebuttal Nullifies Res Ipsa Loquitur Presumption

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Presumption Nullified and Burden of Producing Evidence Shifted Back to Plaintiff

§§ 165.372-165.379 [Reserved]

§ 165.380 Comparative Negligence Applies to Assess Liability in Proportion to Negligence

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Liability Assessed in Proportion to Negligence

[b] Proof That Plaintiff's Negligence Was Proximate Cause of Harm Warrants Application of Comparative Negligence

§§ 165.381-165.399 [Reserved]

§ 165.400 Primary Assumption of Risk Bars Recovery if Defendant Owed No Duty of Care to Plaintiff

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Primary Assumption of Risk Bars Recovery

[b] No Relationship With Plaintiff Creating Duty to Avoid Increasing Risks Inherent in Plaintiff's Activity

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Primary Assumption of Risk Bars Recovery

[b] No Relationship With Plaintiff Creating Duty to Avoid Increasing Risks Inherent in Plaintiff's Activity

§ 165.401 Primary Assumption of Risk Bars Recovery by Plaintiff Injured by Coparticipant in Active Sport

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Defendant's Duty Is Merely to Avoid Intentional or Reckless Conduct

[b] Defendant's Conduct Within Range of Ordinary Activity of Sport

[c] Rule Applies to Student-Teacher Relationship

[d] Local Ordinance Does Not Impose Duty on Defendant That Abrogates Rule

[e] State Statute Does Not Impose Duty That Abrogates Rule

[f] Primary Assumption of Risk Protects Defendant Engaged in Different Activity Than Plaintiff

[g] Intentional Conduct Within Ordinary Range of Activity Not Actionable

[h] Primary Assumption of Risk Applies to Non-Contact Sports

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Defendant's Conduct Within Range of Ordinary Activity of Sport

[b] Rule Applies to Student-Teacher Relationship

[c] State Statute Does Not Impose Duty That Abrogates Rule

§ 165.402 Plaintiff Expressly Assumed Risk

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Consensual Assumption of Risk Not Subsumed in Doctrine of Comparative Negligence

[b] Express Assumption of Risk

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Express Assumption of Risk

§§ 165.403-165.409 [Reserved]

§ 165.410 Veterinarian Barred From Recovering for Animal Bite

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Liability to Veterinarians and Veterinary Assistants

[b] No Liability to Kennel Workers

§ 165.411 Tow Truck Driver Barred From Recovering for Injuries Due to Risk Necessitating Presence

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Motorist Owes No Duty to Tow Truck Driver to Keep Vehicle in Good Mechanical Condition

[b] Firefighter's Rule Applies to Private as Well as Public Safety Employees

§§ 165.412-165.419 [Reserved]

§ 165.420 Primary Assumption of Risk Does Not Bar Recovery if Imposition of Duty Would Not Fundamentally Alter Nature of Sporting Activity

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Duty of Care Would Not Fundamentally Alter Nature of Activity

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Duty of Care Would Not Fundamentally Alter Nature of Activity

§ 165.421 Plaintiff's Express Assumption of Risk Does Not Extend to Defendant's Gross Negligence

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Clause Excusing Defendant From Liability for Negligence Inapplicable to Gross Negligence Claim

§§ 165.422-165.429 [Reserved]

§ 165.430 Firefighter's Rule Bars Recovery for Injuries Due to Risk Necessitating Presence

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Liability for Injury Due to Risk Necessitating Presence

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] No Liability for Injury Due to Risk Necessitating Presence

§ 165.431 Firefighter's Rule Bars Recovery for Injuries Due to Hazards Encountered by Chance While on Duty

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Hazard Encountered by Chance Not Independent Act of Misconduct

§ 165.432 Firefighter's Rule Bars Recovery For Negligence of Public Safety Personnel Employed by Different Public Safety Agency

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Firefighter's Rule Applicable to Negligence of Public Safety Personnel Employed by Different Public Agency While Responding to Same Public Hazard

[b] Statutory Exception to Firefighter's Rule Under Civ. Code § 1714.9(a)(1) Does Not Apply to Negligence of Public Safety Personnel Employed by Different Public Agency

[c] Common Law Exception to Firefighter's Rule for Independent Acts of Misconduct Does Not Apply to Negligence of Public Safety Personnel Employed by Different Public Entity

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Statutory Exception to Firefighter's Rule Under Civ. Code § 1714.9(a)(1) Does Not Apply to Negligence of Public Safety Personnel Employed by Different Public Agency

§§ 165.433-165.449 [Reserved]

§ 165.450 Firefighter's Rule Does Not Bar Recovery for Injuries Caused by Independent Acts of Misconduct

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Plaintiff May Recover for Injuries Caused by Independent Acts of Misconduct

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Plaintiff May Recover for Injuries Caused by Independent Acts of Misconduct

§ 165.451 Firefighter's Rule Does Not Bar Recovery Because Conduct Causing Injury Occurred After Firefighter's Presence Was Known to Defendant and Firefighter Had Undertaken Duties

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Conduct Causing Injury Occurred After Plaintiff Had Undertaken Duties

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Conduct Causing Injury Occurred After Plaintiff's Presence Was Known to Defendant

§ 165.452 Firefighter's Rule Does Not Bar Recovery Because Conduct Causing Injury Violated Statute

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

§ 165.453 Firefighter's Rule Does Not Bar Recovery Because Conduct Causing Injury Was Intended to Injure Plaintiff

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

§ 165.454 Firefighter's Rule Does Not Bar Recovery Because Conduct Causing Injury Was Arson

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

§ 165.455 Firefighter's Rule Does Not Bar Recovery by Private Safety Employee for Injuries Caused by Negligent Third Party

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Private Safety Employee May Recover for Injuries Caused by Negligent Third Party

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Private Safety Employee May Recover for Injuries Caused by Negligent Third Party

§§ 165.456-165.479 [Reserved]

§ 165.480 Under Civ. Code § 1431.2(a), Defendant Only Liable for Proportionate Share of Plaintiff's Noneconomic Damages Because Third Party Was Partially at Fault

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Defendant Severally Liable for Plaintiff's Noneconomic Damages

[b] Defendant Liable Only for Proportionate Share of Plaintiff's Noneconomic Damages

§ 165.481 Federal Communications Decency Act Immunizes Internet Site Operator From Liability When Third Party Sexually Assaults Minor After Communicating With and Meeting Victim Through Defendant's Site [47 U.S.C.S. § 230]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Communications Decency Act Immunizes Web Site Operators From Liability

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART I. INTRODUCTION

16-165 California Points & Authorities § 165.01

§ 165.01 Scope of Chapter

This chapter contains forms of points and authorities relating to a cause of action for negligence.

Part II, Subpart A, relating to elements of a cause of action for negligence generally, includes points and authorities regarding all the essential elements of negligence (§ 165.10 et seq.)

Part II, Subpart B, relating to duty, includes the following types of forms:

- Points and authorities regarding general rules of duty (§ 165.30 et seq.)
- Points and authorities regarding foreseeability (§ 165.50 et seq.)
- Points and authorities regarding breach of statutory duty (§ 165.70 et seq.)
- Points and authorities regarding public policy with respect to duty (§ 165.90 et seq.)
- Points and authorities regarding duty arising from contract (§ 165.100 et seq.)
- Points and authorities regarding duties owed to and by particular persons or entities (§ 165.120 et seq.)

Part II, Subpart C, relating to causation, includes the following types of forms:

- Points and authorities regarding general rules of causation (§ 165.260 et seq.)
- Points and authorities regarding concurrent causes (§ 165.280 et seq.)
- Points and authorities regarding intervening and superseding acts (§ 165.300 et seq.)

- Points and authorities regarding unidentified causation (§ 165.330 et seq.)

Part II, Subpart D, relating to proof by application of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, includes the following types of forms:

- Points and authorities regarding applicability of the doctrine (§ 165.340 et seq.)
- Points and authorities regarding inapplicability of the doctrine (§ 165.360 et seq.)
- Points and authorities regarding rebuttal of the presumption (§ 165.370 et seq.)

Part II, Subpart E, relating to defenses, includes the following types of forms:

- Points and authorities regarding comparative negligence (§ 165.380 et seq.)
- Points and authorities regarding assumption of the risk (§ 165.400 et seq.)
- Points and authorities regarding the firefighter's rule (§ 165.430 et seq.)
- Points and authorities regarding third party liability and apportionment of damages (§ 165.480)

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
TortsNegligenceActionsGeneral OverviewTortsNegligenceCausationProximate CauseIntervening CausationTortsNegligenceDefensesAssumption of RiskElements & NatureGeneral OverviewTortsNegligenceDutyForeseeability of InjuryTortsNegligenceProofElementsTortsNegligenceStandards of CareAppropriate StandardGeneral Overview

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART I. INTRODUCTION

16-165 California Points & Authorities § 165.02

§ 165.02 Governing Law

Negligence is governed generally by Civ. Code § 1714. The presumption of negligence based on violation of statute is governed by Evid. Code § 669. Comparative negligence is governed by Li v. Yellow Cab Co. (1975) 13 Cal. 3d 804, 119 Cal. Rptr. 858, 532 P.2d 1226 . Assumption of the risk is governed by Knight v. Jewett (1992) 3 Cal. 4th 296, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 2, 834 P.2d 696 .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
TortsNegligenceActionsGeneral OverviewTortsNegligenceDefensesComparative NegligenceGeneral OverviewTortsNegligenceDutyForeseeability of InjuryTortsNegligenceProofElementsTortsNegligenceProofViolations of LawStatutesTortsNegligenceStandards of CareAppropriate StandardGeneral Overview

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART I. INTRODUCTION

16-165 California Points & Authorities § 165.03

§ 165.03 How to Use the Forms in This Chapter

[1] Page Limits on Supporting and Opposing Memoranda

One of the more significant drafting requirements to keep in mind is page limits: supporting and opposing memoranda must not exceed 15 pages, or 20 pages in a summary judgment or summary adjudication proceeding. A reply or closing memorandum may not exceed 10 pages. Exhibits, declarations, attachments, a table of contents, a table of authorities, and the proof of service are excluded from these page limits. Any party must obtain leave of court to file a longer memorandum [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1113(d), (e)]. These and other drafting requirements are discussed in further detail in Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[2] Using the Forms to Build a Draft Memorandum

The forms included in this chapter are designed to be combined with other points and authorities to form a complete memorandum. For a detailed discussion on how to select and use the forms in the publication to build a draft memorandum and complete the draft, with detailed discussion of all drafting requirements and strategic or stylistic considerations, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs . For a skeletal form of memorandum for use in creating a properly formatted outline in which to compile relevant forms from this publication, see also Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePleading & PracticeMotion PracticeOpposing MemorandaCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeMotion PracticeSupporting MemorandaCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeMotion PracticeTime LimitationsCivil ProcedureSummary JudgmentSupporting MaterialsMemoranda of LawTortsNegligenceActionsGeneral Overview

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART I. INTRODUCTION

16-165 California Points & Authorities § 165.04

§ 165.04 Related Discussion and Forms

[1] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed legal background discussion, research guides, procedural checklists, and forms relating to negligence, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender). For general allegations for use in pleading resulting detriment or damage, see Ch. 177, Damages, § 177.40 et seq. For general allegations for use in pleading resulting emotional damages, Ch. 362, Mental Suffering and Emotional Distress.

Other related chapters in the publication regarding negligence in specific contexts include:

- Ch. 16, Airplanes and Airports.
- Ch. 19, Alcoholic Beverages: Civil Liability.
- Ch. 23, Animals: Civil Liability.
- Ch. 56, Architects, Part II.
- Ch. 76, Attorney Professional Liability.
- Ch. 82, Automobiles: Causes of Action.
- Ch. 181, Death and Survival Actions.
- Ch. 214, Drugs and Pharmacists.
- Ch. 244, Elevators and Escalators.
- Ch. 246, Emergency Vehicles.

- Ch. 248, Employer's Liability for Employee's Torts.
- Ch. 256, Explosives.
- Ch. 266, Fences.
- Ch. 267, Fires.
- Ch. 273, Games, Sports, and Athletics.
- Ch. 274, Garages and Gas Stations.
- Ch. 277, Gas and Electricity.
- Ch. 295, Hospitals.
- Ch. 297, Hotels and Motels.
- Ch. 300, Indemnity and Contribution.
- Ch. 304, Insane and Other Incompetent Persons, § 304.110 et seq.
- Ch. 334, Landlord and Tenant: Claims for Damages.
- Ch. 359, Marriage.
- Ch. 364, Minors: Tort Actions.
- Ch. 394, Parent and Child, Part I.
- Ch. 415, Physicians: Medical Malpractice.
- Ch. 421, Premises Liability.
- Ch. 427, Principal and Agent.
- Ch. 460, Products Liability.
- Ch. 464, Public Entities and Officers: Tort Claims.
- Ch. 465, Public Entities and Officers: Civil Claims Arising From Criminal Actions.
- Ch. 512, Schools, Part I.
- Ch. 522, Ships and Shipping.
- Ch. 525, Slip and Fall.
- Ch. 577, Workers' Compensation.

[2] Related Points and Authorities

- For negligence actions involving alcoholic beverages, see Ch. 15A, Alcoholic Beverages: Civil Liability for Furnishing .

- For negligence in the context of attorney malpractice, see Ch. 24A, Attorneys at Law: Malpractice ,.

- For negligence actions involving carriers, see Ch. 33, Carriers .

- For grounds for demurrers to complaints based on insufficiency of the element of damages, see Ch. 64, Damages: Tort .

- For a cause of action for wrongful death, see Ch. 66, Death and Survival Actions .

- For demurrers generally, see Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

- For actions excluded from the Workers' Compensation Act, see Ch. 239, Worker's Compensation Exclusive Remedy Doctrine .

- For negligence actions involving spouses, see Ch. 114, Husband and Wife .

- For indemnity and contribution, see Ch. 115, Indemnity and Contribution .

- For negligence actions involving insane or incompetent persons, see Ch. 117, Insane and Incompetent Persons: Actions Involving Mental Patients .

- For negligence actions involving insurance policies, see Ch. 120, Insurance .

- For negligence actions involving landlord and tenant disputes, see Ch. 141, Landlord and Tenant .

- For the defense of limitations of actions, see Ch. 143, Limitation of Actions .

- For negligent infliction of mental distress, see 153, Mental Suffering and Emotional Distress.

- For medical malpractice actions, see Ch. 175, Physicians and Surgeons: Medical Malpractice .

- For premises liability, see Ch. 178, Premises Liability .

- For vicarious liability of employers for the torts of employees based on the doctrine of respondeat superior, see Ch. 182, Principal and Agent .

- For products liability actions, see Ch. 190, Products Liability .

- For actions against public entities and employees, see Ch. 196, Public Entities .

- For negligence actions involving schools, see Ch. 210, Schools: Actions by Students .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:

TortsDamagesGeneral OverviewTortsNegligenceActionsGeneral OverviewTortsPremises Liability & PropertyGeneral Premises LiabilityGeneral OverviewTortsPublic Entity LiabilityGeneral OverviewTortsTransportation TortsGeneral Overview

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART I. INTRODUCTION

16-165 California Points & Authorities §§ 165.05-165.09

[Reserved]

§§ 165.05[Reserved]

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
A. Elements of Action for Negligence

16-165 California Points & Authorities § 165.10

§ 165.10 Complaint Sufficiently Pleads Actionable Negligence

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief].

THE ESSENTIAL ELEMENTS OF ACTIONABLE NEGLIGENCE ARE PRESENT IN THIS ACTION BECAUSE DEFENDANT OWED A LEGAL DUTY OF CARE TO _____ [PLAINTIFF or THE CLASS IN WHICH PLAINTIFF WAS A MEMBER], DEFENDANT COMMITTED AN _____ [ACT or OMISSION] CONSTITUTING A BREACH OF THAT DUTY, DEFENDANT'S BREACH WAS A PROXIMATE OR LEGAL CAUSE OF THE RESULTING INJURY TO PLAINTIFF, AND PLAINTIFF SUFFERED DAMAGES FROM IT.

A. Elements of Actionable Negligence Are Present. The essential elements of actionable negligence include (1) a defendant's legal duty to use due care, (2) a breach of that duty, (3) the breach as the proximate or legal cause of a resulting injury, and (4) actual loss or damage resulting from that injury (United States Liab. Ins. Co. v. Haidinger-Hayes, Inc. (1970) 1 Cal. 3d 586, 594, 83 Cal. Rptr. 418, 463 P.2d 770 ; Koepke v. Loo (1993) 18 Cal. App. 4th 1444, 1448-1449, 23 Cal. Rptr. 2d 34).

B. Plaintiff Sustained "Injury." The injury required as an element of actionable negligence means an act causing harm in the sense of detrimental physical changes to the body. A detrimental physical change is an actionable injury whether or not it causes emotional distress (Duarte v. Zachariah (1994) 22 Cal. App. 4th 1652, 1661-1664, 28 Cal. Rptr. 2d 88).

C. Complaint Sufficiently Pleads Necessary Allegations. For a complaint in negligence to succeed, there must be a duty requiring a certain standard of conduct, a failure to conform to that standard, a close causal connection between the conduct and the resulting injury, and actual damages (Bojorquez v. House of Toys, Inc. (1976) 62 Cal. App. 3d 930, 933, 133 Cal. Rptr. 483).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be used to support the contention that all essential elements of actionable negligence are present in the plaintiff's case. This argument may arise in opposing a demurrer or in opposing a motion for summary judgment [see, e.g., Beauchene v. Synanon Found., Inc. (1979) 88 Cal. App. 3d 342, 344, 151 Cal. Rptr. 796 (demurrer); Bojorquez v. House of Toys, Inc. (1976) 62 Cal. App. 3d 930, 932, 133 Cal. Rptr. 483 (summary judgment)]. This form should be combined with any of the forms in § 165.30 et seq., § 165.50 § 165.100 § 165.120 et seq., § 165.260 et seq., and § 165.340 et seq., that are applicable to the particular case.

Counsel should assert the existence of the following five separate elements essential to a tort cause of action, including an action based on negligence:

- Duty on the part of the defendant to use due care [see Civ. Code §§ 1714(a), 3333]. The design, distribution, or marketing of firearms and ammunition is not exempt from the duty to use ordinary care and the skill that is required [Civ. Code § 1714(a)].

- Breach of that duty [see Civ. Code § 3333].

- Detriment to the plaintiff (the plaintiff's loss or harm suffered in person or property) [see Civ. Code §§ 3281, 3282, 3333].

- The plaintiff's detriment as a proximate result of the defendant's breach of duty [see Civ. Code §§ 3282, 3333].

- Damages (the measure of the detriment in terms of money) [see Civ. Code §§ 3281, 3282, 3333].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel may refer to the complaint and enumerate each necessary element. Counsel should discuss facts showing that the essential elements of actionable negligence are present.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For related legal background, research and procedural guides, and forms of complaint for negligence, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For additional points and authorities to combine with this form, see § 165.30 et seq., § 165.260 et seq., and § 165.340 et seq.

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities in § 165.20, § 165.40, § 165.60, § 165.80 et seq., § 165.90 et seq., § 165.110 et seq., § 165.190 et seq., § 165.270 et seq., § 165.320, § 165.360 et seq., § 165.370 et seq., and § 165.380 et seq., may be used in an appropriate case to oppose the points and authorities in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Elements of Actionable Negligence Are Present

In United States Liab. Ins. Co. v. Haidinger-Hayes, Inc. (1970) 1 Cal. 3d 586, 83 Cal. Rptr. 418, 463 P.2d 770 , an out-of-state liability insurer brought an action against Haidinger-Hayes, Inc., a corporation licensed as a California insurance agent, and V.M. Haidinger, the president and principal executive officer for the corporation. The plaintiff had previously entered into a general agency contract with the corporation under which the corporation had authority to solicit and underwrite proposals for insurance, to determine the premium rate, and to issue contracts of insurance. The negotiations for the policy in question were the responsibility of V.M. Haidinger. The plaintiff alleged, among other things, that the defendants had negligently computed the premium rate for an insured. The trial court found against both the defendants on the issue of negligence, assessing damages at the difference between the premiums received by the plaintiff and the amounts spent in the settlement of claims. The court reserved jurisdiction to amend the judgment to add the sum that the plaintiff became obligated to pay because of the defendants' open unsettled claims. The defendants appealed the judgment.

The Supreme Court reversed the judgment as to the individual defendant, V.M. Haidinger, and affirmed the judgment as to the corporate defendant, Haidinger-Hayes, Inc. The Court stated that actionable negligence involves a legal duty to use due care, a breach of such legal duty, and the breach as the proximate or legal cause of the resulting injury (1 Cal. 3d 586, 594) . It found that the corporation was in a fiduciary relationship with the plaintiff, that it negligently induced the plaintiff to assume coverage, and that it should be held liable for the losses suffered by the plaintiff. The Court further held that the individual defendant was not personally liable to the plaintiff, a third party, by reason of the negligent performance of his corporate duties (1 Cal. 3d 586, 594-595) . In addition, the Court found that the trial court properly measured the amount of damages and did not err in reserving jurisdiction to amend its judgment to include further damages (1 Cal. 3d 586, 598-599) .

In Koepke v. Loo (1993) 18 Cal. App. 4th 1444, 23 Cal. Rptr. 2d 34 , the defendant was the employer and former lover of Logan, a man who later become romantically involved with the plaintiff. After the plaintiff terminated her relationship with Logan, he told the defendant that he intended to kill the plaintiff and later assaulted the plaintiff by holding a gun to her head. The defendant then convinced Logan to obtain treatment for his drinking and psychiatric problems, agreed to keep his gun, and locked the gun in a desk drawer. The defendant later called the plaintiff and told her that she no longer needed to worry because the defendant had Logan's gun. However, the defendant later returned the gun to Logan, because Logan appeared stable, but did not tell the plaintiff that Logan had the gun. Two days later, Logan shot and seriously wounded the plaintiff and then killed himself. The plaintiff brought a negligence action against the defendant, who moved for and was awarded summary judgment on the grounds that she had no legal duty of care toward the plaintiff. The plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeals affirmed. In determining that the defendant was not liable to the plaintiff for negligence because the defendant had no legal duty of care toward the plaintiff, the court held that the elements of a cause of action for negligence are (1) the existence of a duty toward another to take action to protect against risk; (2) failure to conform to a required standard of conduct in light of the duty imposed; (3) a reasonably close connection between the conduct and the resulting injury, commonly called "proximate cause"; and (4) actual loss or damage resulting from that injury (18 Cal. App. 4th 1444, 1448-1449) .

[b] Plaintiff Sustained "Injury"

In Duarte v. Zachariah (1994) 22 Cal. App. 4th 1652, 28 Cal. Rptr. 2d 88 , a husband and wife brought a medical malpractice action against the wife's physician. The wife had had a mastectomy to remove a breast cancer, and the defendant recommended chemotherapy to destroy any tumor cells remaining in the wife's body. The defendant's nurse miscalculated the dosage of one of the chemotherapy drugs administered to the wife, and the defendant checked the calculation, but failed to discover that it called for five times the appropriate amount. The wife consulted another physician, who determined that the overdose had damaged the wife's bone marrow, making it less capable of replacing blood platelets. Because of this condition, the wife was unable to resume chemotherapy. She subsequently developed cancer in her lung. At trial, the court granted the defendant's motion for nonsuit after both sides had rested, but before the case was submitted to the jury, finding that the plaintiffs had not shown that the defendant's negligence had caused the recurrence of the cancer because they had not proved that the cancer would not have recurred if the wife had been able to resume chemotherapy. The plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that there was a triable issue of fact that should have been submitted to the jury--namely, whether the defendant's negligence was the cause of the impairment of the wife's bone marrow. The court noted that the injury required as an element of actionable negligence means an act causing harm in the sense of detrimental physical changes to the body. An invasion of the legally protected interest in bodily security that causes no detrimental change is not sufficient because it causes no harm and therefore no actual damage (22 Cal. App. 4th 1652, 1661-1662) . The court held that the impairment of the wife's bone marrow was a detrimental change in the physical condition of the wife's body because it was an appreciable functional impairment of her immune system. It was therefore an actionable injury for which damages are recoverable (22 Cal. App. 4th 1652, 1663-1664) . The court also rejected the defendant's argument that the nonsuit was proper because the plaintiffs presented no evidence that the bone marrow injury, as distinguished from the cancer recurrence, had caused them emotional distress. The court held that a physical injury may be actionable whether or not it gives rise to emotional distress. Furthermore, it was reasonable to infer that a person who has experienced a recurrence of cancer that cannot be treated because of a bone marrow impairment would suffer emotional distress because of the impairment (22 Cal. App. 4th 1652, 1664) .

[c] Complaint Sufficiently Pleads Necessary Allegations

Bojorquez v. House of Toys, Inc. (1976) 62 Cal. App. 3d 930, 133 Cal. Rptr. 483 , was an action to recover for injuries suffered by a child when a slingshot purchased by another child was used to fire a projectile that hit her in the eye. The plaintiff brought the action against the retailer and wholesaler of the slingshot. The trial court granted summary judgment for the retailer and wholesaler, dismissing the complaint, and the plaintiff appealed the judgment.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment, stating that for a complaint in negligence to succeed, there must be a duty requiring a certain standard of conduct, a failure to conform to that standard, a close causal connection between the conduct and the resulting injury, and actual damages (62 Cal. App. 3d 930, 933) . The court stated that it could not hold the retailer and distributor negligent for selling toy slingshots to the class of persons for whom they were intended--the young--because it could not ban the sale of toy slingshots by judicial fiat. It noted that this limitation is within the purview of the legislature rather than the judiciary. The court also held that the slingshot was not defective on the ground that it lacked a warning that it was dangerous. The court noted that a seller need not add a warning if the danger, or potentiality of danger, is generally known and recognized, and that the potential danger of a slingshot was generally known "[e]ver since David slew Goliath" (62 Cal. App. 3d 930, 933-934) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Elements of Actionable Negligence Are Present

Robertson v. Wentz (1986) 187 Cal. App. 3d 1281, 232 Cal. Rptr. 634 , was a wrongful death action by the husband of a woman who had been shot and killed by the defendant's minor son in the course of a bookstore robbery. The plaintiff sought to impose liability on the defendant on both common law and statutory grounds [see Civ. Code §§ 1714.1, 1714.3]. In reversing the judgment of dismissal with respect to one of the statutory grounds of liability [see Civ. Code § 1714.1], but otherwise affirming it, the court of appeal held that the essential elements of a cause of action for negligence are: (1) the defendant's legal duty of care to the plaintiff; (2) the defendant's breach of duty by negligent act or omission; (3) injury to the plaintiff as the result of the breach; and (4) compensable damages (187 Cal. App. 3d 1281, 1287) .

In Laabs v. Southern California Edison Co. (2009) 175 Cal. App. 4th 1260, 97 Cal. Rptr. 3d 241 , plaintiff sued a power company for injuries she sustained when the car in which she was a passenger was struck by another vehicle in an intersection, crossed two lanes of traffic, jumped the curb, and slid some distance before it struck defendant's light pole. Plaintiff argued that the placement of the pole only 18 inches from the curb created a dangerous condition, that defendant was responsible for placement and maintenance of the poles on its property, and that defendant could be held liable for negligently installing the pole too close to the curb. The trial court granted summary judgment for the power company, concluding that the power company owed no duty to plaintiff. The court of appeal reversed, however, concluding that on the current record, it could not be determined as a matter of law that the defendant owed no duty of care. Recognizing that a utility company can be held liable for the negligent placement of utility poles along a roadway, the court applied the Rowland v. Christian factors to evaluate whether a duty of care could be imposed under the circumstances. The court concluded that there were triable issues as to the foreseeability of the general character of the events that caused plaintiff's injury (175 Cal. App. 4th 1260, 1273) . As to the closeness of the connection between defendant's conduct and plaintiff's injury, the court concluded that there was an unresolved issue of fact as to whether the defendant power company exercised sufficient control over the placement of the light pole hit by plaintiff's vehicle to impose a duty on the power company to place the pole in such a way as to minimize the risk of injury caused by collisions (175 Cal. App. 4th 1260, 1277) . Briefly addressing the other Rowland factors, the court concluded that defendant failed to establish that requiring it to position the pole farther from the street would impose any meaningful additional burden; that the high degree of certainty of injury should a vehicle collide with a pole was undisputed; that the policy of preventing future harm would be furthered by placing poles farther from the roadway edge; that there would be no negative consequence to the community of imposing a duty on defendant; and that some moral blame may be attached in placing streetlights attached to concrete poles close to the street when, as in the present case, they could be placed up to 12 feet from the roadway (175 Cal. App. 4th 1260, 1277-1278) .

The facts and procedural background of Valdez v. J.D. Diffenbaugh Co. (1975) 51 Cal. App. 3d 494, 124 Cal. Rptr. 467 , are discussed in § 165.30[3][b]. In Valdez, the plaintiff, an employee of a pipe manufacturer, brought an action for personal injuries against the general contractor who built the plant in which the plaintiff was injured and against two suppliers of equipment involved in the plaintiff's injury. After the jury returned a verdict against all three firms, the trial court granted the suppliers' motions for a new trial. In affirming the judgment and orders, the court stated that actionable negligence consists of three elements: (1) a defendant's legal duty to use due care; (2) a breach of that duty; and (3) the breach as the proximate or legal cause of the plaintiff's resulting injury (51 Cal. App. 3d 494, 504) .

[b] Complaint Sufficiently Pleads Necessary Allegations

In Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. v. Security Pac. Nat'l Bank (1978) 85 Cal. App. 3d 797, 149 Cal. Rptr. 883 , the plaintiff, an insurance company, brought an action for damages against an American bank that accepted a forged check for deposit. The check was drawn from a Puerto Rican bank account of the plaintiff's insured. The plaintiff alleged that the defendant was negligent and had breached certain warranties in the California Uniform Commercial Code. Although the court of appeal affirmed the dismissal of the plaintiff's complaint, having concluded that the plaintiff was suing the wrong party, it stated that a complaint for negligent injury to person or property must allege: (1) the defendant's legal duty of care toward the plaintiff; (2) the defendant's breach of duty or the negligent act or omission; (3) injury to the plaintiff as a result of the breach (proximate or legal cause); and (4) damage to the plaintiff (85 Cal. App. 3d 797, 811-812) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
A. Elements of Action for Negligence

16-165 California Points & Authorities §§ 165.11-165.19

[Reserved]

§§ 165.11[Reserved]

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
A. Elements of Action for Negligence

16-165 California Points & Authorities § 165.20

§ 165.20 Complaint Does Not Sufficiently Plead Actionable Negligence

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief].

THE ESSENTIAL ELEMENTS OF ACTIONABLE NEGLIGENCE ARE NOT PRESENT IN THIS ACTION BECAUSE _____ [DEFENDANT DID NOT OWE A LEGAL DUTY OF CARE TO _____ (PLAINTIFF or THE CLASS IN WHICH PLAINTIFF WAS A MEMBER) and/or DEFENDANT DID NOT COMMIT AN _____ (ACT or OMISSION) CONSTITUTING A BREACH OF THAT DUTY and/or DEFENDANT'S BREACH WAS NOT A PROXIMATE OR LEGAL CAUSE OF THE RESULTING INJURY TO PLAINTIFF and/or PLAINTIFF DID NOT SUFFER DAMAGES FROM DEFENDANT'S ALLEGEDLY NEGLIGENT CONDUCT].

A. Elements of Actionable Negligence Are Not Present. The essential elements of actionable negligence include: (1) a defendant's legal duty to use due care, (2) a breach of that duty, (3) the breach as the proximate or legal cause of the resulting injury, and (4) actual loss or damage resulting from that injury (United States Liab. Ins. Co. v. Haidinger-Hayes, Inc. (1970) 1 Cal. 3d 586, 594, 83 Cal. Rptr. 418, 463 P.2d 770 ; Koepke v. Loo (1993) 18 Cal. App. 4th 1444, 1448-1449, 23 Cal. Rptr. 2d 34).

B. Plaintiff Has Not Sustained "Injury." The injury required as an element of actionable negligence means an act causing harm in the sense of detrimental physical changes to the body. An invasion of the legally protected interest in bodily security that causes no detrimental change is not sufficient because it causes no harm and therefore no actual damage (Duarte v. Zachariah (1994) 22 Cal. App. 4th 1652, 1661-1663, 28 Cal. Rptr. 2d 88).

C. Complaint Does Not Sufficiently Plead Necessary Allegations. [See § 165.10, Paragraph C.]

D. Absence of Element Is Fatal to Recovery. The complaint must disclose not only the essential elements of negligence, but also the evidence to support them, and the absence of proof of any of those elements is fatal to a recovery (Means v. Southern Cal. Ry. Co. (1904) 144 Cal. 473, 478, 77 P. 1001 ; see Hutchison v. Southern Cal. First Nat'l Bank (1972) 27 Cal. App. 3d 572, 579-580, 103 Cal. Rptr. 816).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that the essential elements of actionable negligence are not present in a case. This issue may arise on a demurrer or motion for summary judgment [see, e.g., Hutchison v. Southern Cal. First Nat'l Bank (1972) 27 Cal. App. 3d 572, 578-579, 103 Cal. Rptr. 816 (demurrer)]. It should be combined with any of the forms in § 165.40, § 165.60, § 165.80 et seq., § 165.90 et seq., § 165.110 et seq., § 165.190 et seq., § 165.270 et seq., § 165.320, § 165.360 et seq., § 165.370 et seq., and § 165.380 et seq., that are applicable to the particular case.

With respect to duty and proximate causation, see the forms in §§ 165.30 et seq. and 165.260 et seq. For the need to plead the essential allegations, see Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel may argue that one or more specific elements are not present in the opposing party's case and show how the facts of the case demonstrate this deficiency.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For related legal background, research and procedural guides, and forms of answer to a complaint and notice of motion for summary adjudication with respect to negligence actions, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender). For legal background, research and procedural guides, and forms related to demurrers, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 206, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings, and Motions for Nonsuit and Judgment . For legal background, research and procedural guides, and forms related to summary judgment, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 537, Summary Judgment .

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For additional points and authorities to combine with this form, see § 165.40, § 165.60, § 165.80 et seq., § 165.90 et seq., § 165.110 et seq., § 165.190 et seq., § 165.270 et seq., § 165.320, § 165.360 et seq., § 165.370 et seq., and § 165.380 et seq. For points and authorities supporting and opposing demurrers, see Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities in § 165.10, § 165.30 et seq., § 165.260 et seq., and § 165.340 et seq., may be used in an appropriate case to oppose the points and authorities in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Elements of Actionable Negligence Are Not Present

The factual and procedural background of United States Liab. Ins. Co. v. Haidinger-Hayes, Inc. (1970) 1 Cal. 3d 586, 83 Cal. Rptr. 418, 463 P.2d 770 , is discussed in § 165.10[3][a]. In reversing the judgment as to an individual defendant, but affirming the judgment as to a corporate defendant, in a negligence action, the Supreme Court stated that actionable negligence involves a legal duty to use due care, a breach of such legal duty, and the breach as the proximate or legal cause of the resulting injury (1 Cal. 3d 586, 594) .

The factual and procedural background of Koepke v. Loo (1993) 18 Cal. App. 4th 1444, 23 Cal. Rptr. 2d 34 , is discussed in § 165.10[3][a]. In determining that the defendant was not liable to the plaintiff for negligence because the defendant had no legal duty of care toward the plaintiff, the court held that the elements of a cause of action for negligence are: (1) the existence of a duty toward another to take action to protect against risk; (2) failure to conform to a required standard of conduct in light of the duty imposed; (3) a reasonably close connection between the conduct and the resulting injury, commonly called "proximate cause"; and (4) actual loss or damage resulting from that injury (18 Cal. App. 4th 1444, 1448-1449) .

[b] Plaintiff Has Not Sustained "Injury"

Duarte v. Zachariah (1994) 22 Cal. App. 4th 1652, 28 Cal. Rptr. 2d 88 , is discussed in § 165.10[3][b].

[c] Absence of Element Is Fatal to Recovery

In Means v. Southern Cal. Ry. Co. (1904) 144 Cal. 473, 77 P. 1001 , the plaintiff went to the defendant's train depot to pick up a package delivered to the passenger building of the depot, but saw a man with whom he wished to talk near the freight house of the depot. Thinking that he would wait inside the freight house for this man, the plaintiff sat inside with his friends. While he was there, a tank containing sulphuric acid exploded in the defendant's train depot. At the close of the plaintiff's case, the court granted the defendant's motion for a nonsuit. The court denied the plaintiff's motion for a new trial, and the plaintiff appealed the order denying the motion.

The Supreme Court affirmed the lower court's order, stating that actionable negligence consisted of three elements: a duty or obligation that the defendant is under to protect the plaintiff from injury; a failure to discharge that duty; and injury resulting from the failure. The Court added that not only must the complaint disclose these essentials, but the evidence must support them, and the absence of proof on any of them is fatal to a recovery (144 Cal. 473, 478) . Although the Court found that the facts stated in the complaint met the essential requirements for stating a cause of action, the evidence adduced at trial did not accord with the allegations of the complaint. The evidence, the Court said, showed an entire absence of any duty resting on the defendant towards the plaintiff with reference to the plaintiff's safety on the premises where the accident occurred. Therefore, one of the essential requirements was absent (144 Cal. 473, 478) , and the Court held that the order denying the motion for new trial was proper (144 Cal. 473, 479-483) .

In Hutchison v. Southern Cal. First Nat'l Bank (1972) 27 Cal. App. 3d 572, 103 Cal. Rptr. 816 , the plaintiffs, as pledgors of shares of corporate stock, brought an action for damages based on the defendant's allegedly negligent failure as pledgee to consent to certain transactions involving the shares. The trial court sustained the defendant's demurrer to the plaintiffs' second amended complaint without leave to amend and dismissed the action. The plaintiffs appealed the judgment.

The court of appeal affirmed, stating that basic to the statement of a cause of action for damages premised on wrongful or negligent conduct is a showing that the charged conduct caused the claimed damages (27 Cal. App. 3d 572, 578) . It noted that the plaintiffs failed to adequately allege the elements of causation and damages in any of their various causes of action, in that they failed to show that there was a chain of causation between the defendant's refusal to consent to a certain business transaction and their claimed damages (27 Cal. App. 3d 572, 579) . The court added that the inadequate allegation of causation between the defendant's conduct and the plaintiffs' claimed damages was a fatal omission supporting the order sustaining the general demurrer (27 Cal. App. 3d 572, 579-580) . After discussing other reasons for sustaining the general demurrer without leave to amend, the court stated that the order sustaining the general demurrer without leave to amend was not error (27 Cal. App. 3d 572, 585) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Elements of Actionable Negligence Are Not Present

Beauchene v. Synanon Found., Inc. (1979) 88 Cal. App. 3d 342, 151 Cal. Rptr. 796 , was an action for personal injuries against the defendant, a private rehabilitation program. A resident of the program who had "escaped" from the program had shot several people, including the plaintiff. In affirming the lower court's judgment of dismissal after it sustained the defendant's demurrer, the court of appeal noted that actionable negligence involves five elements: (1) the defendant's legal duty to use due care; (2) the defendant's breach of that duty; (3) the breach as the actual ("but for") cause of the plaintiff's injury; (4) the breach as the proximate or legal cause of the plaintiff's injury; and (5) damages to the plaintiff (88 Cal. App. 3d 342, 346) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
A. Elements of Action for Negligence

16-165 California Points & Authorities §§ 165.21-165.29

[Reserved]

§§ 165.21[Reserved]

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
B. Duty
1. General Rules

16-165 California Points & Authorities § 165.30

§ 165.30 Defendant Owed Duty to Plaintiff

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief].

DEFENDANT OWED A DUTY OF DUE CARE TO _____ [PLAINTIFF or THE CLASS OF PERSONS IN WHICH PLAINTIFF IS A MEMBER].

A. Existence and Breach of Duty. A finding of negligence is based on two elements: (1) the existence of a duty to use care; and (2) a breach of that duty by the creation of an unreasonable risk of harm (Raymond v. Paradise Unified Sch. Dist. (1963) 218 Cal. App. 2d 1, 6, 31 Cal. Rptr. 847).

B. Defendant Owed Duty to Plaintiff or to Class. An indispensable prerequisite to the imposition of liability based on negligence is the existence of a duty of due care owed by the defendant to the person injured or to a class of persons of which the plaintiff is a member (see Richards v. Stanley (1954) 43 Cal. 2d 60, 63, 271 P.2d 23 ; Valdez v. J.D. Diffenbaugh Co. (1975) 51 Cal. App. 3d 494, 505, 124 Cal. Rptr. 467).

C. Duty Is Question of Law. Duty is a question of law, decided by the court, not the jury (Ballard v. Uribe (1986) 41 Cal. 3d 564, 572 n.6, 224 Cal. Rptr. 664, 715 P.2d 624).

D. Policy Factors Considered in Scope of Duty Determination. The major policy factors that must be balanced in determining the scope of a particular defendant's duty of due care include: (1) the foreseeability of harm to the plaintiff; (2) the degree of certainty that the plaintiff suffered injury; (3) the closeness of connection between the defendant's act and the plaintiff's injury; (4) the moral blame attached to the defendant's conduct; (5) the policy of preventing future harm; (6) the extent of the defendant's burden and the consequences to the community of imposing a duty to exercise care with resulting liability for breach; and (7) the availability of insurance for the risk involved (see Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 Cal. 2d 108, 112-113, 70 Cal. Rptr. 97, 443 P.2d 561 ; Valdez v. J.D. Diffenbaugh Co. (1975) 51

Cal. App. 3d 494, 506, 124 Cal. Rptr. 467).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that the defendant owed a duty of due care to the plaintiff in an action for negligence. This form should be combined with any of the forms in § 165.50, § 165.70, § 165.100, and § 165.120 et seq., that are applicable to the particular case.

This issue may arise in opposing a demurrer or motion for summary judgment [see, e.g., J'Aire Corp. v. Gregory (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 799, 803, 157 Cal. Rptr. 407, 598 P.2d 60 (demurrer); Harris v. De La Chapelle (1976) 55 Cal. App. 3d 644, 646, 127 Cal. Rptr. 695 , disapproved on other grounds, Sprecher v. Adamson Cos. (1981) 30 Cal. 3d 358, 178 Cal. Rptr. 783, 636 P.2d 1121 (summary judgment)].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel may argue that a duty was owed to this particular plaintiff, discuss how the risk to the plaintiff was foreseeable to the defendant, point out that various public policy reasons dictate that a duty be imposed, and argue that the defendant's act or omission was in breach of this duty.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For related legal background, research and procedural guides, and forms of complaint for negligence, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender). For legal background, research and procedural guides, and forms related to demurrers, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 206, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings (Matthew Bender). For legal background, research and procedural guides, and forms related to summary judgment, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 537, Summary Judgment (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For additional points and authorities to combine with this form, see § 165.50, § 165.70, § 165.100, and § 165.120 et seq. For points and authorities supporting and opposing demurrers, see Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities in § 165.40, § 165.60, § 165.80, § 165.90, § 165.110, and § 165.190 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose the points and authorities in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Existence and Breach of Duty

Raymond v. Paradise Unified Sch. Dist. (1963) 218 Cal. App. 2d 1, 31 Cal. Rptr. 847 , was an action brought by an elementary school student who was struck by a school bus in the area of a school bus stop. The jury found that: the bus driver was not negligent; the school district was not negligent in maintaining a place dangerous to children, but was negligent in failing to supervise the area; and the student was not contributorily negligent. The district appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment, stating that a finding of negligence turns on two elements: the existence of a duty to use care and a breach of that duty by the creation of an unreasonable risk of harm (218 Cal. App. 2d 1, 6) . The court noted that the school district is under no legal duty to supply transportation to its pupils. However, once it does so, it has a concomitant obligation to provide a reasonably safe system (218 Cal. App. 2d 1, 9) . In addition, the school district had knowledge of the presence of small children in the area that it had designated as a bus stop, and the amount of care due to children increases with their immaturity (218 Cal. App. 2d 1, 10) . The risks emanating from the conduct of the defendant's activity were greater at this particular location than at other locations. Additionally, the location was within the complete control of the defendant. Thus, the court held that as a matter of law, the defendant had a duty to provide adequate supervisory measures to protect children using the bus loading zone (218 Cal. App. 2d 1, 10-11) .

[b] Defendant Owed Duty to Plaintiff or to Class

In Richards v. Stanley (1954) 43 Cal. 2d 60, 271 P.2d 23 , the plaintiff's motorcycle collided with an automobile. At the time of the collision, Mr. and Mrs. Stanley owned the car, but Rawlings, who had stolen the automobile, was driving. The complaint alleged that Mrs. Stanley had negligently left the car unattended, unlocked, and with the key in the ignition in violation of a municipal ordinance. The ordinance, however, expressly stated that it was not admissible as evidence in any civil action for theft of a motor vehicle and was not to have any other bearing in any civil action. The court overruled the Stanleys' general demurrer, and they answered, denying the complaint's allegations and alleging that the plaintiff had been contributorily negligent. At the start of the trial, the plaintiff offered the municipal ordinance as evidence. When the trial court excluded it, he sought to amend his complaint to state a cause of action for general negligence. The court then sustained the Stanleys' objection to the introduction of any evidence against them, on the ground that the complaint failed to state a cause of action, and granted their motion for nonsuit. The plaintiff appealed the judgment.

The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment, noting that a plaintiff may not recover damages based on the violation of a criminal statute or ordinance, unless he or she is one of the class of persons for whose benefit the statute or ordinance was enacted (43 Cal. 2d 60, 62) . Because the board of supervisors made clear that the ordinance was not enacted for the benefit of persons who might be injured by the operation of stolen automobiles, the Court found that the evidence was properly excluded as irrelevant (43 Cal. 2d 60, 62-63) . Nevertheless, the plaintiff contended that even if the ordinance were disregarded, his complaint would still state a cause of action for negligence. The Court, however, found that in the absence of a statute prohibiting the leaving of a key in a vehicle, the owner of an automobile had no duty to persons who may be injured by its use by a third person, absent facts putting the owner on notice that the third person is incompetent to handle the automobile. The Court stated that an indispensable factor to liability founded on negligence is the existence of a duty of care by the alleged wrongdoer to the person injured or to a class of which he or she is a member (43 Cal. 2d 60, 63) . The Court also rejected the contention that the defendant owed a duty to the plaintiff because both theft and negligent driving were foreseeable consequences of having left the key in the car (43 Cal. 2d 60, 65) .

In Valdez v. J.D. Diffenbaugh Co. (1975) 51 Cal. App. 3d 494, 124 Cal. Rptr. 467 , the plaintiff, the employee of a pipe manufacturer, brought an action for personal injuries against the general contractor who built the plant in which the plaintiff was injured and two suppliers of equipment involved in the plaintiff's injury. The action was based on negligence and products liability. The plaintiff's employer's workers' compensation carrier intervened in the action to recover benefits it had paid to the injured plaintiff. Negligence was an issue as to the contractor, but not as to the two suppliers of the equipment. After the jury returned a verdict against all three defendants, the trial court granted the two suppliers' motions for a new trial. The contractor appealed from the judgment, and the workers' compensation carrier and the injured plaintiff appealed from the order granting the suppliers' motion for a new trial. The suppliers cross appealed from the judgment as originally entered.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment and orders. The contractor contended that it owed no legal duty of due care to the plaintiff and that even if a duty did exist, no act committed by it or any of its employees resulted in the plaintiff's injury. The court concluded, however, that the contractor's arguments were without merit (51 Cal. App. 3d 494, 504) . It stated that an indispensable prerequisite to the imposition of liability based on negligence is the existence of a duty of due care owed by the defendant to the person injured or to a class of persons of which the plaintiff is a member. Duty is, however, a rather ephemeral concept, which may be imposed by statute or the terms of contract, or may arise from the character of particular activities or from the nature of human society itself. Its ascertainment and definition in any specific factual context is an imprecise task at best. The essential question is whether or not the plaintiff's interests are entitled to legal protection against the defendant's conduct (51 Cal. App. 3d 494, 504-505) . The court examined various policy considerations in light of certain tasks improperly performed by the contractor's employees and concluded that the contractor owed a duty to the plaintiff (51 Cal. App. 3d 494, 506-508) . The court further found that the defendant's negligent acts were the proximate cause of the injury to the plaintiff (51 Cal. App. 3d 494, 508-512) .

[c] Duty Is Question of Law

In Ballard v. Uribe (1986) 41 Cal. 3d 564, 224 Cal. Rptr. 664, 715 P.2d 624 , the plaintiff, an employee of a general contractor constructing a freeway interchange, was injured while using a defective aerial "moonlight." The lift had been left at the construction site in the general contractor's fenced equipment yard by the defendant, a subcontractor, until its stabilizing cable, which was frayed and broken, could be repaired. The lift rested on a truck bed and consisted of a basket mounted on an extension or boom ladder. The basket had three sides but was open at the back to permit entry and exit. The stabilizing cable was connected to the ladder to keep the basket level as the ladder was raised or lowered. The general contractor's manager testified that the defendant had given permission for the general contractor to borrow or rent the lift if it was first repaired. The defendant acknowledged that his usual practice was to remove the keys to both the truck engine and lift engine before leaving the lift at a job site. Evidence showed that removal of keys, locking of control boxes, and posting of warning tags to prevent unauthorized use was customary in the construction industry. The defendant took none of these precautions. Before the lift was fully repaired, the plaintiff and another of the general contractor's employees, unaware of the defect, used the lift. The basket flipped, ejecting the plaintiff, who fell approximately 35 feet to the ground. The issues of liability and damages were separately tried. The defendant appealed judgment for the plaintiff, seeking to overturn the finding of liability on the basis of instructional error. The plaintiff cross appealed on the damages issue.

In affirming the judgment, the Supreme Court held that the defendant had not been prejudiced by the instructional error, but stated that the defendant correctly suggested that the trial court should have resolved the duty issue itself (41 Cal. 3d 564, 572) . The Court noted that the question of duty is decided by the court, not the jury (41 Cal. 3d 564, 572 n.6).

[d] Policy Factors Considered in Scope of Duty Determination

In Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 Cal. 2d 108, 70 Cal. Rptr. 97, 443 P.2d 561 , the plaintiff brought an action for damages for personal injuries caused by a defective bathroom faucet, which was located in an apartment occupied by the defendant. After summary judgment was granted for the defendant, the plaintiff appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed the judgment, and examined the principle of duty in an action involving negligence. Noting that California cases have stated that all persons are required to use ordinary care to prevent others from being injured as a result of their conduct, the Court stated that there are exceptions to this general principle. These exceptions are supported by public policy (69 Cal. 2d 108, 112) . The major policy considerations are: (1) the foreseeability of harm to the plaintiff; (2) the degree of certainty that the plaintiff suffered injury; (3) the closeness of the connection between the defendant's conduct and the injury suffered; (3) the moral blame attached to the defendant's conduct; (4) the policy of preventing future harm; (5) the extent of the burden to the defendant and consequences to the community of imposing a duty to exercise care with resulting liability for breach; and (6) the availability, cost, and prevalence of insurance for the risk involved (69 Cal. 2d 108, 112-113) . A departure from this fundamental rule of liability has been accomplished by classifying the plaintiff as a trespasser, licensee, or invitee, and then by adopting special rules as to the duty owed by the occupier or possessor to each of these classifications (69 Cal. 2d 108, 113) . The Court, however, rejected these common law classifications, and approached the issue of duty of the occupier or possessor on the basis of ordinary principles of negligence (69 Cal. 2d 108, 114-118) . The Court further discussed the principles of premises liability and held that the summary judgment for the defendant was not supported by the record (69 Cal. 2d 108, 118-120) .

The factual and procedural background of Valdez v. J.D. Diffenbaugh Co. (1975) 51 Cal. App. 3d 494, 124 Cal. Rptr. 467 , is discussed in § 165.30[3][b]. In affirming a judgment against one defendant in an action involving negligence, the court of appeal examined various policy considerations to determine whether or not the defendant owed the plaintiff a duty of due care. The court listed six policy factors that must be balanced to determine the scope of a particular defendant's duty of due care: (1) the foreseeability of harm to the plaintiff; (2) the degree of certainty that the plaintiff suffered injury; (3) the closeness of connection between the defendant's act and the plaintiff's injury; (4) the moral blame attached to the defendant's conduct; (5) the policy of preventing future harm; and (6) the extent of the defendant's burden and the consequences to the community of imposing a duty and liability (51 Cal. App. 3d 494, 506) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Defendant Owed Duty to Plaintiff or to Class

In Juarez v. Boy Scouts of Am., Inc. (2000) 81 Cal. App. 4th 377, 97 Cal. Rptr. 2d 12 , an adult male sued the Boy Scouts of Am., Inc. (BSA) for damages arising from alleged sexual molestation by a scoutmaster that occurred when he was between 12 and 13 years old. The sexual acts were allegedly committed during officially sanctioned scouting events, but the plaintiff did not tell anyone until three years later. The scoutmaster was consequently prosecuted and sentenced to prison. The complaint alleged various forms of negligence. The defendants filed motions for summary judgment. In opposition, the plaintiff presented evidence that although BSA had a praiseworthy Youth Protection Program at the relevant time, it failed to take reasonable steps to assure that the information was likely to be communicated to the scouts, parents, or adult leaders of the plaintiff's troop. For example, the plaintiff was unaware that BSA rules prohibited the scoutmaster's taking the troop on overnight camping trips by himself and sleeping in the scouts' tent. The trial court granted summary judgment for the defendants and imposed evidentiary sanctions against the plaintiff, after determining that BSA had no prior information that would have put it on notice of the scoutmaster's propensity to molest children. The court of appeal affirmed in every respect except for summary judgment as to the cause of action based on the theory that BSA failed to take reasonable measures to protect the plaintiff from the molestation. Among other things, the court held that BSA owed a duty of care to have taken reasonable protective measures to protect the plaintiff from the risk of sexual abuse by adult volunteers involved in scouting programs, such as warning, training, or educating the plaintiff concerning how to avoid that risk. Of the factors set forth in Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 Cal. 2d 108, 113, 70 Cal. Rptr. 97, 443 P.2d 561 (discussed in § 165.30[3][d]), only the lack of moral blame was determined in favor of BSA. The rest of the factors weighed unequivocally in favor of the plaintiff and the existence of a duty (81 Cal. App. 4th 377, 409-410) .

[b] Policy Factors Considered in Scope of Duty Determination

The facts and procedural background of Ballard v. Uribe (1986) 41 Cal. 3d 564, 224 Cal. Rptr. 664, 715 P.2d 624 , are discussed under § 165.30[3][c]. In affirming the judgment, the Supreme Court stated the general rule in California that all persons have a duty to use ordinary care to prevent others being injured as the result of their conduct. It noted that a number of considerations have been taken into account by courts in various contexts to determine whether a departure from the general rule is appropriate (41 Cal. 3d 564, 572 n.6). Quoting Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 Cal. 2d 108, 113, 70 Cal. Rptr. 97, 443 P.2d 561 (discussed in § 165.30[3][d]), the Court stated that the major considerations are: (1) the foreseeability of harm to the plaintiff; (2) the degree of certainty that the plaintiff suffered injury; (3) the closeness of the connection between the defendant's conduct and the injury suffered; (4) the moral blame attached to the defendant's conduct; (5) the policy of preventing future harm; (6) the extent of the burden to the defendant and consequences to the community of imposing a duty to exercise care with resulting liability for breach; (7) and the availability, cost, and prevalence of insurance for the risk involved (41 Cal. 3d 564, 572-573 n.6).

In Catsouras v. Department of California Highway Patrol (2010) 181 Cal. App. 4th 856, 104 Cal. Rptr. 3d 352 , plaintiffs were the parents and siblings of an 18-year-old girl who died when she was decapitated in an automobile accident. Officers of the California Highway Patrol investigated the accident, took control of the accident scene and decedent's remains, and took photographs of both. After the photographs were transmitted to the CHP computer system, two officers e-mailed 9 gruesome photos of the decedent's remains to their friends and family members, allegedly as a Halloween prank. This initial dissemination by the officers, which served no official investigative or public interest purpose but was done from sheer morbidity or gossip, started a chain reaction that resulted in thousands of Internet sites picking up the images and some of the plaintiffs receiving personal e-mails from strangers taunting them with the gruesome photographs. Plaintiffs sued the Highway Patrol and the two officers for various causes of action, including invasion of privacy, negligence, and intentional infliction of emotional distress. The trial court sustained the officers' demurrer on all causes of action, but the court of appeal reversed. Although the court of appeal held that no special relationship was established between the CHP and the family members merely because of the CHP's conduct in taking control of the accident scene (181 Cal. App. 4th 856, 877-881) , the court went on to hold that a duty of care sufficient to support a negligence action could be established under the facts through application of the general factors articulated in Rowland v. Christian. Applying those factors to the facts of the case, the court concluded that it was foreseeable that gruesome photographs allegedly disseminated for shock value on Halloween would be forwarded to thousands of Internet users; that police officers upon whom the public relies to protect and serve could be assigned moral blame for violating the public policy protecting the emotional sensibilities of surviving family members; that imposing liability on defendants would not impose an intolerable burden on the CHP and its officers to control their future conduct; that the officers' conduct in initially transmitting the photographs to friends and family was sufficiently closely connected to the harm caused to the surviving family members to warrant the imposition of liability; and that imposition of liability on the CHP would help to ensure that the dissemination of such photos for no official reason would not occur in the future (181 Cal. App. 4th 856, 881-886) .

In Laabs v. Southern California Edison Co. (2009) 175 Cal. App. 4th 1260, 97 Cal. Rptr. 3d 241 , plaintiff sued a power company for injuries she sustained when the car in which she was a passenger was struck by another vehicle in an intersection, crossed two lanes of traffic, jumped the curb, and slid some distance before it struck defendant's light pole. Plaintiff argued that the placement of the pole only 18 inches from the curb created a dangerous condition, that defendant was responsible for placement and maintenance of the poles on its property, and that defendant could be held liable for negligently installing the pole too close to the curb. The trial court granted summary judgment for the power company, concluding that the power company owed no duty to plaintiff. The court of appeal reversed, however, concluding that on the current record, it could not be determined as a matter of law that the defendant owed no duty of care. Recognizing that a utility company can be held liable for the negligent placement of utility poles along a roadway, the court applied the Rowland v. Christian factors to evaluate whether a duty of care could be imposed under the circumstances. The court concluded that there were triable issues as to the foreseeability of the general character of the events that caused plaintiff's injury (175 Cal. App. 4th 1260, 1273) . As to the closeness of the connection between defendant's conduct and plaintiff's injury, the court concluded that there was an unresolved issue of fact as to whether the defendant power company exercised sufficient control over the placement of the light pole hit by plaintiff's vehicle to impose a duty on the power company to place the pole in such a way as to minimize the risk of injury caused by collisions (175 Cal. App. 4th 1260, 1277). Briefly addressing the other Rowland factors, the court concluded that defendant failed to establish that requiring it to position the pole farther from the street would impose any meaningful additional burden; that the high degree of certainty of injury should a vehicle collide with a pole was undisputed; that the policy of preventing future harm would be furthered by placing poles farther from the roadway edge; that there would be no negative consequence to the community of imposing a duty on defendant; and that some moral blame may be attached in placing streetlights attached to concrete poles close to the street when, as in the present case, they could be placed up to 12 feet from the roadway (175 Cal. App. 4th 1260, 1277-1278) .

The facts and procedural background of Juarez v. Boy Scouts of Am., Inc. (2000) 81 Cal. App. 4th 377, 97 Cal. Rptr. 2d 12 , are discussed in § 165.30[3][c]. With respect to the defendant's legal duty, the court cited Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 Cal. 2d 108, 113, 70 Cal. Rptr. 97, 443 P.2d 561 (discussed in § 165.30[3][d]), noting that in determining whether a particular the defendant owed a tort duty to a given the plaintiff, the pertinent factors are: (1) the foreseeability of harm to the injured party; (2) the degree of certainty that the injured party suffered harm; (3) the closeness of the connection between the defendant's conduct and the injury suffered; (4) the moral blame attached to the defendant's conduct; (5) the policy of preventing future harm; (6) the extent of the burden to the defendant; and (7) the consequences to the community of imposing a duty to exercise care with resulting potential liability (81 Cal. App. 4th 377, 401) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
B. Duty
1. General Rules

16-165 California Points & Authorities § 165.31

§ 165.31 Defendant's Conduct Fell Below Applicable Standard of Care

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief].

DEFENDANT'S CONDUCT WITH RESPECT TO _____ [describe] FELL BELOW THE STANDARD OF CARE APPLICABLE TO _____ [describe].

A. Defendant's Conduct Fell Below Statutory Standard of Care. Everyone is responsible, not only for the result of his or her willful acts, but also for an injury occasioned to another by a want of ordinary care or skill in the management of his or her property or person, except so far as the latter has, willfully or by want of ordinary care, brought the injury on himself or herself (Civ. Code § 1714(a)).

B. Defendant's Conduct Fell Below Common Law Standard of Care. All persons are required to use ordinary care to prevent others from being injured as the result of their conduct, and ordinary care is that degree of care that people of ordinarily prudent behavior can be reasonably expected to exercise under the circumstances of a given case (Schwartz v. Helms Bakery Ltd. (1967) 67 Cal. 2d 232, 60 Cal. Rptr. 510, 430 P.2d 68).

[Optional] C. Defendant's Conduct Did Not Comport With Custom and Practice. The standard of care required in a particular circumstance may be based on a statute or the custom and practice in the relevant community; although the custom in the community does not necessarily establish how a reasonable person must act, it is evidence to be considered in determining the proper standard of care (Bullis v. Security Pac. Nat'l Bank (1978) 21 Cal. 3d 801, 809, 148 Cal. Rptr. 22, 582 P.2d 109).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that the defendant's conduct did not comport with the applicable standard of care [see Civ. Code § 1714(a); Schwartz v. Helms Bakery Ltd. (1967) 67 Cal. 2d 232, 60 Cal. Rptr. 510, 430 P.2d 68] . Optional Paragraph C may be submitted to assert that the defendant did not meet the standard of care based on the applicable custom and usage in the community. This form should be combined with any of the forms in § 165.10 and § 165.32 that are applicable to the particular case.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel may describe the defendant's conduct and compare it to the standard of care applicable to the circumstances of the case.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For related legal background, research and procedural guides, and forms of complaint for negligence, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For additional points and authorities to combine with this form, see § 165.10 and § 165.32. For points and authorities supporting and opposing demurrers, see Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities in § 165.20 and § 165.40 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose the points and authorities in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Defendant's Conduct Fell Below Common Law Standard of Care

In Schwartz v. Helms Bakery Ltd. (1967) 67 Cal. 2d 232, 243-244, 60 Cal. Rptr. 510, 430 P.2d 68 , the plaintiff, a four-year-old child, was struck by an automobile as he crossed the street to buy a doughnut from Taylor, the driver of a retail truck owned by Helms Bakery. Taylor had previously told the child that he would meet him up the street after the child had gone home to get some money. The trial court granted a motion for nonsuit, and the plaintiff appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed, holding that by undertaking to direct the child to an assigned rendezvous with the truck, the defendants, Taylor and Helms Bakery, assumed a duty to exercise due care for the child's safety (67 Cal. 2d 232, 238) . The Court noted that firmly rooted in the common law lies the concept that although one individual need do nothing to rescue another from peril not of that individual's own making, nevertheless, if that individual undertakes to do an act, he or she must do it with care. The Court stated that if a person enters on an affirmative course of conduct affecting the interests of another, he or she is regarded as assuming a duty to act and will be liable for negligent acts or omissions. In addition, the Court found that if the conduct of the actor has brought him or her into a human relationship with another, of such character that sound social policy requires some affirmative action or some precaution on his or her part to avoid harm, the duty to act or take precaution is imposed by law (67 Cal. 2d 232, 238) . If a person is under the special protection of another, the latter is bound to exercise reasonable care to prevent harm to him or her, and this duty may include protection from the dangerous conduct of third persons (67 Cal. 2d 232, 238-239) . With regard to the issue of the standard of care, the Court stated that when dealing with a young child, a person must exercise greater caution than when dealing with an adult. Quoting its earlier opinion in Hilyar v. Union Ice Co. (1955) 45 Cal. 2d 30, 36, 286 P.2d 21 , the Court noted that the presence of a child is in itself a warning requiring the exercise of care for the child's safety (67 Cal. 2d 232, 240) . In this case, Taylor was obliged to exercise greater caution regarding the child than he would have with respect to an adult. In discharging this duty of due care, he should have taken into consideration not merely the normal characteristics of four-year-old children, but his actual knowledge of he plaintiff's heedlessness of the hazards of traffic. The Court explained that Taylor acquired that knowledge before their first encounter when he saw the child dart across the street. The Court held that the lower court erroneously granted the motion for nonsuit. It should have left to the jury the question whether or not, in view of the reasonably foreseeable behavior of the child, the defendants exposed him to an unreasonable risk of harm (67 Cal. 2d 232, 243-244) . In addition, by undertaking to direct the child to an assigned rendezvous with the truck, the defendants assumed a duty to exercise due care for his safety (67 Cal. 2d 232, 235-242) .

[b] Defendant's Conduct Did Not Comport With Custom and Practice

In Bullis v. Security Pac. Nat'l Bank (1978) 21 Cal. 3d 801, 148 Cal. Rptr. 22, 582 P.2d 109 , a coexecutor of an estate brought an action against a bank for improper withdrawal of funds by the other coexecutor. The bank failed to require the signatures of both coexecutors for withdrawal from an estate account. The coexecutor who withdrew the funds improperly invested it in a mining venture that later failed. At trial, the bank was found liable on three separate grounds for the loss, including the breach of its common law duty to use reasonable care in its conduct with its depositors. The bank appealed the judgment.

The Supreme Court affirmed, noting that the trial court's determination that the bank did not act in accordance with the applicable standard of care included implicit findings on the questions of causality, foreseeability, and reasonableness (21 Cal. 3d 801, 808) . The Court stated that the standard of care required in a particular circumstance may be based on a statute, such as Evid. Code § 669, or the custom and practice in the relevant community. Although the custom in the community does not necessarily establish how reasonable persons must act, it is evidence to be considered in determining the proper standard of care. The Court noted that evidence of the custom and practice in the banking industry showed that two signatures were generally required to withdraw funds. The bank's operations manual also required two signatures for withdrawal (21 Cal. 3d 801, 809) . This procedure was deviated from only if the bank's legal department had been consulted, but the legal department was not consulted in this case. In addition, the Court stated that former Prob. Code § 570 (now see Prob. Code § 9630) provided that one coexecutor may act only if the other coexecutor was absent from the state or legally disqualified from acting, and those circumstances did not exist in this case (21 Cal. 3d 801, 810) . Therefore, based on evidence of the banking industry's custom and the bank's own adopted procedures and practice, there was substantial evidence to support the trial court's finding that the bank's conduct fell below the standard of care owed to the estate (21 Cal. 3d 801, 811) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Defendant's Conduct Fell Below Common Law Standard of Care

Robertson v. Wentz (1986) 187 Cal. App. 3d 1281, 232 Cal. Rptr. 634 , was a wrongful death action brought by the husband of a woman who had been shot and killed by the defendant's minor son in the course of a bookstore robbery. The defendant was allegedly liable on both common law and statutory grounds [see Civ. Code §§ 1714.1, 1714.3]. In reversing the judgment of dismissal with respect to one of the statutory grounds of liability [see Civ. Code § 1714.1], but otherwise affirming it, the court of appeal, quoting from J'Aire Corp. v. Gregory (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 799, 803, 806, 157 Cal. Rptr. 407, 598 P.2d 60 , stated that whether a duty is owed is a short expression of the essential question whether the plaintiff's interests are entitled to legal protection against the defendant's conduct. Although the question of whether one owes a duty to another must be decided on a case-by-case basis, every case is governed by the rule of general application that all persons are required to use ordinary care to prevent others from being injured as the result of their conduct (187 Cal. App. 3d 1281, 1287) .

The factual and procedural background of Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 Cal. 2d 108, 70 Cal. Rptr. 97, 443 P.2d 561 , is discussed in § 165.30[3][d]. In reversing a summary judgment granted for the defendant, the Supreme Court stated that Civ. Code § 1714 provides that everyone is responsible, not only for the result of his or her willful acts, but also for an injury occasioned to another by a want of ordinary care or skill in the management of his or her property, except so far as the latter has, willfully or by want of ordinary care, brought the injury on himself or herself (69 Cal. 2d 108, 111-112) . This statute stated a civil law and not a common law principle. In addition, the Court noted that California cases have occasionally stated a similar view--that is, all persons are required to use ordinary care to prevent others from being injured as a result of their conduct (69 Cal. 2d 108, 112) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
B. Duty
1. General Rules

16-165 California Points & Authorities § 165.32

§ 165.32 Defendant Breached Duty Owed to Plaintiff

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief].

DEFENDANT BREACHED HIS/HER/ITS DUTY OWED TO PLAINTIFF, IN THAT _____ [describe].

A. Existence and Breach of Duty. A finding of negligence is based on two elements: the existence of a duty to use care and a breach of that duty by the creation of an unreasonable risk of harm (Raymond v. Paradise Unified Sch. Dist. (1963) 218 Cal. App. 2d 1, 6, 31 Cal. Rptr. 847).

B. Determination of Breach. In determining whether or not the defendant breached a duty of care to the plaintiff, the trier of fact must balance the magnitude of the harm likely to result from the defendant's conduct against the social value of the interest that the defendant is seeking to advance and the ease with which the defendant could have taken precautions to avoid the risk of harm (Musgrove v. Ambrose Props. (1978) 87 Cal. App. 3d 44, 53, 150 Cal. Rptr. 722).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that the defendant breached a duty owed to the plaintiff. It should be combined with any of the forms in § 165.10 and §§ 165.30 -165.31 that are applicable to the particular case.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel may discuss the magnitude of the harm likely to result from the defendant's conduct, as weighed against the social value of the interest that the defendant sought to advance, and argue that the harm outweighed the value of the defendant's interest.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For related legal background, research and procedural guides, and forms of complaint for negligence, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For additional points and authorities to combine with this form, see § 165.10 and §§ 165.30 -165.31. For points and authorities supporting and opposing demurrers, see Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities in § 165.40 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose the points and authorities in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Existence and Breach of Duty

The factual and procedural background of Raymond v. Paradise Unified Sch. Dist. (1963) 218 Cal. App. 2d 1, 31 Cal. Rptr. 847 , is discussed § 165.30[3][a]. In an action for personal injuries suffered by an elementary school student who was struck by a school bus in the area of a school bus stop, the court of appeal stated that a finding of negligence turns on two elements: the existence of a duty to use care and a breach of that duty by the creation of an unreasonable risk of harm (218 Cal. App. 2d 1, 6) . The court noted that the school district is under no legal duty to supply transportation to its pupils. However, once it does so, it has a concomitant obligation to provide a reasonably safe system (218 Cal. App. 2d 1, 9) . In addition, the school district had knowledge of the presence of small children in the area that it had designated as a bus stop. The amount of care due to children increases with their immaturity (218 Cal. App. 2d 1, 10) . The risks emanating from the conduct of the defendant's activity were greater at this particular location than at other locations. Additionally, the location was within the complete control of the defendant. Therefore, the court held that as a matter of law, the defendant had a duty to provide adequate supervisory measures to protect children using the bus loading zone (218 Cal. App. 2d 1, 10-11) .

[b] Determination of Breach

In Musgrove v. Ambrose Props. (1978) 87 Cal. App. 3d 44, 150 Cal. Rptr. 722 , the plaintiff was struck by a bicycle operated by a 14-year-old boy, on the premises of a shopping center owned by Ambrose Props.. The plaintiff was injured in the course and scope of her employment. A workers' compensation insurer, Unigard Insurance Group, intervened in the action seeking judgment against the boy and Ambrose Props. because Unigard had paid the plaintiff disability indemnity and medical benefits. The trial was bifurcated pursuant to stipulation, and the issue of liability was tried first. At the conclusion of the liability phase of the trial, the jury made certain special findings. Following trial on the issue of damages, the jury returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiff. The trial court granted judgment notwithstanding the verdict in favor of the defendant Ambrose Props. and also granted Ambrose Props.' motion for new trial on the grounds of insufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict and that the verdict was against law [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 629, 657(6)]. The plaintiff and Unigard appealed from the judgment and from the order granting a new trial. Ambrose Props. cross appealed from the judgment entered on the verdict, but its cross appeal was dismissed for failure to file a brief in support [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.220 (formerly Rule 17(a))].

The court of appeal reversed the judgment notwithstanding the verdict and the order granting a new trial. It stated that an owner of land held open to the public for business purposes is under a duty to take affirmative action to control the wrongful acts of a third person that threaten the safety of visitors to the premises if the owner has reasonable cause to anticipate such acts and the probability of injury resulting from them (87 Cal. App. 3d 44, 51) . The court noted that the determination of duty is basically a question of law and that foreseeability of the risk is of primary importance in establishing the element of duty. After examining the facts of the case, the court found that Ambrose Props. owed a duty to the plaintiff (87 Cal. App. 3d 44, 52) . The court noted that the elements of actionable negligence also include a breach of this duty and the breach as a proximate cause of the resulting injury. In determining whether or not the defendant breached a duty of care owed to the plaintiff, the magnitude of the harm likely to result from the defendant's conduct must be balanced against the social value of the interest that he or she is seeking to advance and the ease with which he or she may take precautions to avoid the risk of harm to the plaintiff. In this case, Ambrose Props. could have taken precautions to avoid or minimize the risk of a bicyclist striking a pedestrian, such as posting signs prohibiting bicycle riding on sidewalks or employing a guard to control bicycle riding in those areas. The court added that the jury could reasonably find that the risk of harm to a pedestrian struck by a bicycle outweighed both the social value of permitting bicyclists unrestricted access to all areas of the shopping center, and the burden imposed on Ambrose Props. in taking steps to prevent bicycle riding on sidewalks and passageways. Furthermore, evidence that Ambrose Props. did nothing to control bicycle riding in these areas supported the jury's implied finding that Ambrose Props. breached its duty of care to the plaintiff. There was also evidence that supported a finding that Ambrose Props.' failure to take any measures to control bicycle riding was the proximate cause of the plaintiff's injuries. The court held that if it were to give the evidence tending to support negligence all the value to which it is legally entitled, that evidence would support a verdict in favor of the plaintiff. Therefore, the trial court erroneously granted judgment for the defendant notwithstanding the verdict (87 Cal. App. 3d 44, 53) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
B. Duty
1. General Rules

16-165 California Points & Authorities §§ 165.33-165.39

[Reserved]

§§ 165.33[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
B. Duty
1. General Rules

16-165 California Points & Authorities § 165.40

§ 165.40 Defendant Not Liable for Nonfeasance Because No Duty Existed

[1] FORM

DEFENDANT IS NOT LIABLE TO PLAINTIFF FOR FAILING TO ACT BECAUSE DEFENDANT DID NOT HAVE A DUTY TO ACT UNDER THE CIRCUMSTANCES.

A. No Liability for Failure to Act Unless Duty Exists. Before any common law liability for failure to act may exist, there must have been a duty to act under the circumstances (Bartlett v. State of Cal. (1956) 145 Cal. App. 2d 50, 56-57, 301 P.2d 985).

B. Nonfeasance Versus Misfeasance. Misfeasance, or negligent action, exists if the defendant is responsible for making the plaintiff's position worse--that is, if the defendant has created a risk of harm to the plaintiff. Conversely, nonfeasance, or negligent inaction, exists if the defendant has failed to aid the plaintiff through beneficial intervention (Weirum v. RKO Gen., Inc. (1975) 15 Cal. 3d 40, 48-49, 123 Cal. Rptr. 468, 539 P.2d 36).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that the defendant did not owe a duty to take affirmative action to assist the plaintiff and to assert the difference between nonfeasance and misfeasance. It should be combined with the form in § 165.20, if applicable to the particular case.

This argument may arise in several procedural contexts. For example, the defendant might raise this argument in support of a motion for nonsuit, a demurrer, or a motion for summary judgment [see, e.g., Mikialian v. City of Los Angeles (1978) 79 Cal. App. 3d 150, 157, 144 Cal. Rptr. 794 (nonsuit); Winkelman v. City of Sunnyvale (1976) 59 Cal. App. 3d 509, 510-511, 130 Cal. Rptr. 690 (demurrer); Soldano v. O'Daniels (1983) 141 Cal. App. 3d 443, 446, 190 Cal. Rptr. 310 (summary judgment)].

In light of the decision in Soldano v. O'Daniels (1983) 141 Cal. App. 3d 443, 190 Cal. Rptr. 310 , counsel should consider combining this form with § 165.60 to argue that the risk of harm to the plaintiff was not foreseeable or that other public policy reasons preclude the imposition of duty. In Soldano, the court of appeal found a duty on the part of the defendant, a business establishment, through its bartender to allow a "good Samaritan" to use its telephone to aid the plaintiff's decedent, who was subsequently shot outside the premises. The court stated that it could not find a special relationship between either the defendant and the plaintiff's decedent or between the defendant and the "good Samaritan." Nevertheless, after examining the defendant's allegedly negligent refusal in light of the public policy considerations set forth in Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 Cal. 2d 108, 113, 70 Cal. Rptr. 97, 443 P.2d 561 , the court imposed a duty on the defendant [see Soldano v. O'Daniels (1983) 141 Cal. App. 3d 443, 449-451, 190 Cal. Rptr. 310] .

However, the Soldano court stated that its decision did not impose a duty to require one to go to the aid of another. The defendant's bartender was not the "good Samaritan" intent on aiding the plaintiff's decedent. The third party who wanted to use the telephone was the "good Samaritan." The court explained that its decision was both "a slight departure" from the "morally questionable" rule of nonliability for inaction absent a special relationship as set forth in Restatement (Second) of Torts § 314, and a "logical extension" of Restatement (Second) of Torts § 327, which imposes liability for negligent interference with a third person, if the defendant knows that the third person is attempting to render necessary aid [see Soldano v. O'Daniels (1983) 141 Cal. App. 3d 443, 453-455, 190 Cal. Rptr. 310] . Thus, it is unclear whether the court in Soldano was characterizing the bartender's conduct as "nonfeasance" or "misfeasance." If the court considered the conduct to be nonfeasance, then the decision appears to abrogate the rule set forth in this form that there is no liability for nonfeasance in the absence of a special relationship. If, on the other hand, the court considered the conduct to be misfeasance in negligently preventing the "good Samaritan" from aiding another, then the decision is not really a departure from prior case law, because under prior law a special relationship was not necessary for the imposition of a duty in a case involving misfeasance [see Weirum v. RKO Gen., Inc. (1975) 15 Cal. 3d 40, 48-49, 123 Cal. Rptr. 468, 539 P.2d 36] .

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel may argue that there was no duty on the part of the defendant to take affirmative action under the circumstances [see Bartlett v. State of Cal. (1956) 145 Cal. App. 2d 50, 56-57, 301 P.2d 985] . Counsel should set forth the factual situation of his or her action, showing how the defendant's failure to take affirmative action was nonfeasance as opposed to misfeasance [see Weirum v. RKO Gen., Inc. (1975) 15 Cal. 3d 40, 48-49, 123 Cal. Rptr. 468, 539 P.2d 36] .

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For related legal background, research and procedural guides, and forms of answer to a complaint and notice of motion for summary adjudication with respect to negligence actions, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For additional points and authorities to combine with this form, see § 165.20. For points and authorities supporting and opposing demurrers, see Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities in § 165.30 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose the points and authorities in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Liability for Failure to Act Unless Duty Exists

In Bartlett v. State of Cal. (1956) 145 Cal. App. 2d 50, 301 P.2d 985 , the plaintiffs brought an action against the state, a highway patrol commissioner, and a highway patrol captain for personal injuries allegedly suffered as a result of the highway patrol officers' failure to replace a missing stop sign at an intersection. The trial court granted the defendants' demurrer without leave to amend, and subsequently dismissed the action. The plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, finding that the complaint failed to meet the pleading requirements of former Gov. Code § 1953 (now see Gov. Code § 840), which governs liability of public officers for damage or injury resulting from the defective or dangerous condition of public property. The court held that the plaintiffs failed to show that the defendants had the requisite authority and funds to restore the stop sign (145 Cal. App. 2d 50, 55) . Notwithstanding the requirements of former Gov. Code § 1953, the plaintiffs contended that their complaint stated a right to relief against the defendants as individuals for a breach of a general duty to exercise due care for the safety of others (145 Cal. App. 2d 50, 56) . The court noted, however, that the authorities cited by the plaintiffs in support of their contention did not deal with inaction of the defendants and that the plaintiffs' case involved an alleged negligent omission in the defendants' failure to replace a stop sign (145 Cal. App. 2d 50, 56) . Quoting Restatement (Second) of Torts § 314, the court stated that before any common law liability for failure to act may exist, there must have been a duty to act under the circumstances (145 Cal. App. 2d 50, 56-57) . To prevail in their claim against the defendants regardless of former Gov. Code § 1953, the plaintiffs had to assert a duty that was not dependent on the official status of the defendants as police officers. The plaintiffs failed in that respect, because they did not allege that the defendants undertook to maintain the stop signs or were negligent in their attempts to replace a stop sign (145 Cal. App. 2d 50, 57) .

[b] Nonfeasance Versus Misfeasance

The factual and procedural background of Weirum v. RKO Gen., Inc. (1975) 15 Cal. 3d 40, 123 Cal. Rptr. 468, 539 P.2d 36 , is discussed in § 165.50[4][a]. The Supreme Court affirmed judgment for the plaintiff in an action against a radio station. The plaintiff's decedent was killed in an automobile collision caused by teenagers racing to reach a peripatetic disc jockey giving away cash prizes. The defendant contended that it owed no duty to the plaintiff's decedent in the absence of a special relationship. The Court stated that this rule had no application if the plaintiff's complaint is grounded on an affirmative act of the defendant that created an undue risk of harm (15 Cal. 3d 40, 48) . The rule stated in Restatement (Second) of Torts § 315 is merely a refinement of the general principle embodied in Restatement (Second) of Torts § 314: one is not obligated to act as a "good Samaritan." This doctrine is rooted in the common law distinction between action and inaction, or misfeasance and nonfeasance. Misfeasance exists if the defendant is responsible for making the plaintiff's position worse--that is, if the defendant has created a risk. Conversely, nonfeasance exists if the defendant has failed to aid the plaintiff through beneficial intervention. The Court stated that as Restatement (Second) of Torts § 315 indicates, liability for nonfeasance is largely limited to those circumstances in which some special relationship can be established (15 Cal. 3d 40, 48-49) . On the other hand, if the act complained of is one of misfeasance, the question of duty is governed by the standards of ordinary care, such as foreseeability and other policy considerations. In this case, the Court found that the defendant was guilty of misfeasance. Liability was not predicated on the defendant's failure to intervene, but on its creation of an unreasonable risk of harm. Therefore, the Court concluded that the defendant's reliance on cases that involved the failure to prevent harm was misplaced (15 Cal. 3d 40, 49) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] No Liability for Failure to Act Unless Duty Exists

In Williams v. Southern California Gas Co. (2009) 176 Cal. App. 4th 591, 98 Cal. Rptr. 3d 258 , a family renting an apartment sued the gas company for failing to take action to prevent plaintiffs from being exposed to an excessive amount of carbon monoxide emitted from a defective gas wall furnace. Plaintiffs alleged that the gas company owed a duty based on the fact that a company representative walked past the furnace on the way to inspecting a water heater in the apartment, and that walking past the heater, that representative should have noticed by the discoloration of the furnace that the furnace could have posed a danger to plaintiffs. However, the court of appeal held that the gas company owed no duty of care to act to protect the plaintiffs, even if the company representative had knowledge that the furnace posed a hazard. The court noted that the gas company had no responsibility for the wall furnace, which was an appliance the company neither installed nor inspected, nor did the company sell or lease it to the apartment owners. In addition, the court noted that the gas company never actually inspected the furnace to discover that it was defective. The mere fact that the company continued to supply gas to the apartment was not a basis for holding the company liable (176 Cal. App. 4th 591, 603-604) .

In Burns v. Neiman Marcus Group, Inc. (2009) 173 Cal. App. 4th 479, 93 Cal. Rptr. 3d 130 , plaintiff's employee used checks from plaintiff's personal checking account to pay the employee's substantial credit card bill at a large merchant. This conduct went on for years, without plaintiff's knowledge. The employee always presented the checks for payment in person at the customer service center at one of the stores. The employee sometimes forged plaintiff's signature on the check, sometimes presented a check without signature, and sometimes used a check signed by plaintiff but intended for payment of plaintiff's business account. Moreover, the merchant apparently knew that the employee was making substantial purchases well beyond her ability to pay, based on her known annual salary, and even provided the employee with a personal shopper whose job it was to encourage the employee to continue making such purchases. Plaintiff sued the store for negligence, arguing that the store had a duty, under the facts of the case, to inquire from him as to the employee's authority to use the third-party checks to pay off her personal debt prior to the store accepting the checks for such payment. The trial court held that the merchant did not owe plaintiff a duty of care, and the court of appeal affirmed. Applying the standard factors of Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 Cal. 2d 108, 70 Cal. Rptr. 97, 443 P.2d 561 , the court held that a retailer merchant's acceptance of a third party check to pay another person's credit card account, without first inquiring from the drawer of the check as to the authority to do so, is not sufficiently likely to result in the kind or harm the plaintiff experienced such that liability should appropriately be imposed on the merchant. The court concluded, without substantial analysis, that the foreseeability of harm to plaintiff, the degree of certainty that plaintiff would suffer harm, and the connection between defendant's conduct and plaintiff's injury, all weighed against imposing a duty on the merchant. However, regardless of the foreseeability of the possibility of injury caused by the merchant's failure to inquire as to the employee's authority, the court also concluded that the other Rowland factors militated against the imposition of a duty to inquire. Specifically, the court concluded that the policy of preventing future harm and the burden to the defendant and consequences to the community weighed against imposing a duty. The court noted practical problems with imposing a duty of inquiry on a retail merchant before accepting a person's payment for goods and services. Assuming the retail merchant would have to make an independent inquiry from the drawer of the check, there might be a problem locating the drawer and there might be an issue as to what steps would have to be taken in order to constitute a reasonable inquiry. According to the court, this would impose a significant and unwarranted burden on retail merchants, one which would outweigh any resulting benefit obtained from detecting isolated incidents of embezzlement. The court also noted that the factor of moral blame weighed in favor of holding the embezzling employee liable, not the merchant (173 Cal. App. 4th 479, 488-490) .

In Rodriguez v. Bank of the West (2008) 162 Cal. App. 4th 454, 75 Cal. Rptr. 3d 543 , plaintiff attorney sued two banks after the attorney's office manager had forged the attorney's signature, opened bank accounts in the attorney's name, deposited money that the attorney had received from clients, then stole the money from the accounts. The attorney argued that the banks owed him a duty of care that had been breached in that they failed to take steps to ascertain the office manager's authority to open the accounts in plaintiff's name, failed to require plaintiff's presence, signature, or consent when the accounts were opened, and allowed forged signatures to be used to cash checks drawn on the accounts. The attorney further argued that the banks owed him a duty of care because he was a putative customer of the bank because the accounts were opened in his name, albeit without his authorization. The court of appeal affirmed demurrers granted in favor of the banks. The court noted that a bank's duty of care arises from the bank's contract with its customer and a bank owes no duty to a noncustomer. Because plaintiff did not consent to the creation of the accounts, and in fact did not even know of the existence of the accounts until the office manager's wrongful acts were discovered, the court concluded that plaintiff was not a customer of the banks, even if the accounts were opened in his name (162 Cal. App. 4th 454, 460-461) . Because plaintiff was not a customer, and plaintiff alleged no facts to suggest that the office manager acted in a manner that should have aroused the banks' suspicions, the court held that the banks owed no duty to plaintiff. Recognizing identity theft as a pervasive problem, the court concluded that a decision to shift the burden from the actual victim to a third party duped by the thief is a decision for the Legislature, not the judiciary (162 Cal. App. 4th 454, 466) .

16 of 199 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
B. Duty
1. General Rules

16-165 California Points & Authorities §§ 165.41-165.49

[Reserved]

§§ 165.41[Reserved]

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
B. Duty
2. Foreseeability

16-165 California Points & Authorities § 165.50

§ 165.50 Defendant's Conduct Created Foreseeable Risk of Harm

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief].

DEFENDANT OWED A DUTY OF DUE CARE TO _____ [PLAINTIFF or THE CLASS OF PERSONS OF WHICH PLAINTIFF IS A MEMBER], AND DEFENDANT BREACHED THAT DUTY IN THAT HE/SHE/IT CREATED A FORESEEABLE AND UNREASONABLE RISK OF HARM.

A. Risk Was Foreseeable. In the absence of overriding policy considerations, foreseeability of the risk is of primary importance in establishing the element of duty, and the courts, on a case by case basis, must analyze all the circumstances to determine what the ordinary person under such circumstances should have reasonably foreseen (Dillon v. Legg (1968) 68 Cal. 2d 728, 739, 741, 69 Cal. Rptr. 72, 441 P.2d 912).

B. Foreseeability as Question of Law. Insofar as foreseeability is a consideration in determining whether the defendant owed a duty to the plaintiff, it is a question to be decided by the court and not the jury (Ballard v. Uribe (1986) 41 Cal. 3d 564, 572-573 n.6, 224 Cal. Rptr. 664, 715 P.2d 624).

C. Foreseeability as Question of Fact. Insofar as foreseeability is a consideration in determining whether the defendant was negligent--that is, breached his or her duty--and whether the breach, if any, was a proximate cause of the plaintiff's injury, it is a question of fact to be determined by the jury (Ballard v. Uribe (1986) 41 Cal. 3d 564, 572-573 n.6, 224 Cal. Rptr. 664, 715 P.2d 624).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that the defendant created a foreseeable risk of harm. It should be combined with any of the forms in §§ 165.30 et seq., 165.70 et seq., 165.100, and 165.120 et seq., that are applicable to the particular case.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel may describe the defendant's conduct and argue that it created a foreseeable risk of harm under the circumstances of the case.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For related legal background, research and procedural guides, and forms of complaint for negligence, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For additional points and authorities to combine with this form, see § 165.30 et seq., § 165.70 et seq., § 165.100, and § 165.120 et seq. For points and authorities supporting and opposing demurrers, see Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities in § 165.60 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose the points and authorities in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Risk Was Foreseeable

In Dillon v. Legg (1968) 68 Cal. 2d 728, 69 Cal. Rptr. 72, 441 P.2d 912 , the plaintiff and her daughter witnessed the death of the plaintiff's second child, who was hit by a car driven by the defendant. The plaintiff's first cause of action alleged that the defendant negligently operated his vehicle. Her second cause of action alleged that she personally witnessed the collision and, because of the defendant's negligence, she sustained great emotional disturbance and shock and injury to her nervous system. The plaintiff's third cause of action alleged that her daughter also suffered emotional trauma and physical injury from witnessing the accident. The defendant moved for judgment on the pleadings on the plaintiff's second and third causes of action. The court granted the motion as to the second cause, apparently finding that the plaintiff did not state a cause of action because she was not within the zone of danger. The trial court, however, denied the motion as to the third cause of action, finding that the plaintiff's daughter may have been within the zone of danger and feared for her own safety. The defendant later moved for summary judgment on the third cause of action, but the motion was denied. The plaintiff appealed the judgment dismissing her second cause of action.

The Supreme Court reversed the judgment, stating that duty in a negligence action is an expression of the sum total of those considerations of policy that lead the law to say that a particular plaintiff is entitled to protection (68 Cal. 2d 728, 734) . The Court rejected the notion that a court must deny recovery on a legitimate claim because other fraudulent claims may be encouraged (68 Cal. 2d 728, 735-739) . It noted that to limit the otherwise potentially infinite liability that would follow every negligent action, the law of torts holds the defendant responsible only for injuries that were reasonably foreseeable to the defendant at the time. The Court stated that in the absence of overriding policy considerations, foreseeability of the risk is of primary importance in establishing the element of duty. Citing Palsgraf

v. Long Island R.R. Co. (1928) 248 N.Y. 339, 344, 162 N.E. 99 , the Court added that the risk reasonably to be perceived defines the duty to be obeyed (68 Cal. 2d 728, 739) .

Because the chief element in determining whether or not the defendant owes a duty or an obligation to the plaintiff is the foreseeability of the risk, the Court stated that this factor will be of prime concern in every case. Although no immutable rule can establish the extent of that obligation for every circumstance in the future, the Court set forth guidelines to aid in the resolution of that issue (68 Cal. 2d 728, 740) . In determining whether or not the defendant should reasonably have foreseen the injury to the plaintiff, the court must take into account certain factors based on the facts of the case, including: (1) whether the plaintiff was located near the scene of the accident, as contrasted with one who was a distance away from it; (2) whether the shock resulted from a direct emotional impact on the plaintiff due to the sensory and contemporaneous observance of the accident, as contrasted with learning of the accident from others after its occurrence; and (3) whether the plaintiff and the victim were closely related, as contrasted with an absence of any relationship or the presence of only a distant relationship (68 Cal. 2d 728, 740-741) .

The evaluation of these factors will indicate the degree of foreseeability. In light of these factors, the court will determine whether the accident and harm were reasonably foreseeable. Reasonable foreseeability does not turn on whether or not the particular defendant as an individual would have, in actuality, foreseen the exact accident and loss. Instead, it contemplates that courts, on a case-to-case basis, analyzing all the circumstances, will decide what the ordinary person under such circumstances should reasonably have foreseen. The courts thus mark out the areas of liability, excluding the remote and unexpected. In this case, the Court held that the presence of the above-mentioned factors indicated that the plaintiff had alleged a sufficient prima facie case. The Court noted that a negligent driver who causes the death of a young child may reasonably expect that the mother will not be far distant and would, on witnessing the accident, suffer emotional trauma (68 Cal. 2d 728, 741) .

[b] Foreseeability as Question of Law

The facts and procedural background of Ballard v. Uribe (1986) 41 Cal. 3d 564, 224 Cal. Rptr. 664, 715 P.2d 624 , are discussed in § 165.30[3][c]. In affirming the judgment, the Supreme Court stated that some confusion has arisen over the respective roles played by the court and the jury in determining liability in cases involving injuries resulting from the unauthorized use of vehicles with keys left in them. The Court stated that the confusion may stem, at least in part, from the fact that the "foreseeability" concept plays a variety of roles in tort doctrine generally and that in some contexts foreseeability is a question of fact for the jury, whereas in other contexts it is part of the calculus to which a court looks in defining the boundaries of duty (41 Cal. 3d 564, 572 n.6).

After pointing out that the question of duty is decided by the court and not by the jury, the Court stated: (1) duty is not an immutable fact of nature, but only an expression of the sum total of those considerations of policy that lead the law to say that the particular the plaintiff is entitled to protection; (2) in California, the general rule is that all persons have a duty to use ordinary care to prevent others being injured as the result of their conduct; and (3) a number of considerations, including foreseeability of harm to the plaintiff, have been taken into account by courts in various contexts to determine whether a departure from the general rule is appropriate (41 Cal. 3d 564, 572-573 n.6). The foreseeability of a particular kind of harm plays a significant role in this calculus. However, the court's task in determining duty is not to decide whether a particular plaintiff's injury was reasonably foreseeable in light of a particular defendant's conduct, but rather to evaluate more generally whether the category of negligent conduct at issue is sufficiently likely to result in the kind of harm experienced that liability may appropriately be imposed on the negligent party (41 Cal. 3d 564, 573 n.6). That is, "foreseeability," insofar as it is an element in determining the duty issue, is for the trial court to decide and not the jury.

NOTE:

Notwithstanding the above, language to the contrary occurs in Bigbee v. Pacific Tel. & Tel. Co. (1983) 34 Cal. 3d 49, 56, 192 Cal. Rptr. 857, 665 P.2d 947 , and Weirum v. RKO Gen., Inc. (1975) 15 Cal. 3d

40, 46, 123 Cal. Rptr. 468, 539 P.2d 36 , neither of which involved vehicles with keys left in them. Both opinions state in effect that "foreseeability" as it is involved in the determination of duty is a question of fact for the jury to determine, unless the undisputed facts permit no room for a reasonable difference of opinion, in which case it is a question of law.

[c] Foreseeability as Question of Fact

The facts and procedural background of Ballard v. Uribe (1986) 41 Cal. 3d 564, 224 Cal. Rptr. 664, 715 P.2d 624 , are discussed in § 165.30[3][c]. Ballard is also discussed in § 165.50[3][b]. In affirming the judgment, the Supreme Court explained that the jury, by contrast, considers "foreseeability" in two more focused, fact-specific settings. First, the jury may consider the likelihood or foreseeability of injury in determining whether, in fact, a particular defendant's conduct was "negligent" in the first place. Second, foreseeability may be relevant to the jury's determination of whether the defendant's negligence was "a proximate or legal cause" of the plaintiff's injury (41 Cal. 3d 564, 573 n.6). That is, "foreseeability," insofar as it is an element in determining whether the defendant was negligent (breached his or her duty) or whether the breach was a proximate cause of the plaintiff's injuries, is for the jury to decide.

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Risk Was Foreseeable

The facts and procedural background of Juarez v. Boy Scouts of Am., Inc. (2000) 81 Cal. App. 4th 377, 97 Cal. Rptr. 2d 12 , are discussed in § 165.30[3][c]. The court of appeal affirmed the trial court in every respect except for summary judgment as to the cause of action based on theory that the defendant failed to take reasonable measures to protect the plaintiff from molestation. With respect to the foreseeability factor, the court held that the injury was reasonably foreseeable (81 Cal. App. 4th 377, 402-403) .

The facts and procedural background of Robertson v. Wentz (1986) 187 Cal. App. 3d 1281, 232 Cal. Rptr. 634 , are discussed in § 165.31[4][a]. The court of appeal stated that the primary consideration in establishing the element of duty is the foreseeability of the risk--that is, as a general principle, a defendant owes a duty of care to all persons who are foreseeably endangered by his or her conduct, with respect to all risks that make the conduct unreasonably dangerous (187 Cal. App. 3d 1281, 1288) . The court added that foreseeability is a question of fact unless decisional law has established that there could be no foreseeability of the risk under the same or similar fact situations (187 Cal. App. 3d 1281, 1288) .

In Weirum v. RKO Gen., Inc. (1975) 15 Cal. 3d 40, 123 Cal. Rptr. 468, 539 P.2d 36 , a rock radio station conducted a contest that rewarded the first contestant who located a peripatetic disc jockey. Two minors, driving in separate automobiles, attempted to follow the disc jockey's automobile. While pursuing the disc jockey at speeds approaching 80 miles per hour, one minor forced a car off the highway, killing its sole occupant. The decedent's surviving wife and child filed a suit for wrongful death against the two minors, the radio station, and the maker of the decedent's car. Prior to the commencement of trial, one minor settled for the limits of his insurance policy. At trial, the jury rendered a verdict against the radio station and the other minor, but found in favor of the maker of the decedent's car. The radio station appealed from the judgment and from an order denying its motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict.

In affirming the judgment, the Supreme Court noted that foreseeability of the risk is a primary consideration in establishing the element of duty (15 Cal. 3d 40, 46) . The Court concluded that in this case, the record amply supported the finding of foreseeability, stating that it was foreseeable that the defendant's youthful listeners, finding that the prize had eluded them in one location, would race to arrive first at the next site and, in their haste, would disregard the demands of highway safety (15 Cal. 3d 40, 46-47) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
B. Duty
2. Foreseeability

16-165 California Points & Authorities §§ 165.51-165.59

[Reserved]

§§ 165.51[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
B. Duty
2. Foreseeability

16-165 California Points & Authorities § 165.60

§ 165.60 Defendant's Conduct Did Not Create Foreseeable Risk of Harm

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief].

DEFENDANT DID NOT CREATE A FORESEEABLE RISK OF HARM TO PLAINTIFF.

A. Risk Was Not Reasonably Foreseeable. The scope of the duty owed to the plaintiff is measured by the foreseeability of the risk and whether or not the danger created is sufficiently large to embrace the specific harm; thus, if there is no foreseeable risk of harm to the plaintiff, the defendant owed the plaintiff no duty of care (Megeff v. Doland (1981) 123 Cal. App. 3d 251, 259-260, 176 Cal. Rptr. 467).

[Optional] B. Public Policy Limits Liability. Social policy considerations, such as the social utility of the defendant's conduct and the consequences to the community of imposing a duty on the defendant, may limit liability even for foreseeable injury (Parsons v. Crown Disposal Co. (1997) 15 Cal. 4th 456, 476, 63 Cal. Rptr. 2d 291, 936 P.2d 70).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that the defendant's conduct did not create a foreseeable risk of harm. Optional Paragraph B may be submitted to assert the existence of policy considerations overriding the foreseeability factor. This form should be combined with the form in § 165.20, if applicable to the particular case.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel may describe the defendant's conduct and argue that it did not create a foreseeable risk of harm under the circumstances of the case.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For related legal background, research and procedural guides, and forms of complaint for negligence, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For additional points and authorities to combine with this form, see § 165.20. For points and authorities supporting and opposing demurrers, see Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities in § 165.50 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose the points and authorities in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Risk Was Not Reasonably Foreseeable

In Megeff v. Doland (1981) 123 Cal. App. 3d 251, 176 Cal. Rptr. 467 , the plaintiffs were stabbed by Charles Stevens, the 87-year-old husband of Thea Stevens. The plaintiffs brought an action for negligence against both Thea Stevens and Charlotte Doland, the adult daughter of Charles Stevens. They contended that the defendants voluntarily assumed custody and control over Charles Stevens after his release from the psychiatric wing of a hospital, knowing of his propensity for violence, and that the defendants negligently failed to exercise sufficient control over his conduct to prevent harm to third persons. The trial court granted judgment on the pleadings for the wife and granted the daughter's motion for summary judgment. The plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed both the judgment on the pleadings and the summary judgment. Quoting Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 Cal. 2d 108, 112, 70 Cal. Rptr. 97, 443 P.2d 561 (discussed in § 165.30[3][d]), the court noted that whenever one person's failure to use ordinary care in his or her conduct would cause a danger of injury to the person or property of another, a duty arises to use ordinary care to avoid that danger. A departure from this principle involves the balancing of a number of policy factors, the most important of which is foreseeability. Ordinarily, one owes a duty to all persons who are foreseeably endangered by one's conduct, with respect to risks that make the conduct unreasonably dangerous (123 Cal. App. 3d 251, 256) . If the avoidance of foreseeable harm requires one to control the conduct of third persons, one must have knowledge of a specific risk to an identifiable and foreseeable victim (123 Cal. App. 3d 251, 257) . In this case, the court noted that there was nothing in the hospital reports to suggest a violent history or generalized violent behavior on the part of Charles Stevens (123 Cal. App. 3d 251, 258) . He had, however, become physically aggressive when the hospital staff refused to allow him to leave. The court decided that his wife's knowledge of his one incidence of aggressive behavior may have created a foreseeable risk that he might physically attack a person who confined him to a place other than his home. It did not, however, give her a basis for foreseeing that her husband would stab the plaintiffs, who were his landlords. Therefore, the court held that the judgment on the pleadings was properly granted (123 Cal. App. 3d 251, 260) . In addition, after examining the issues in the case, the court found that there were no triable issues of material fact as to duty and that summary judgment was properly granted (123 Cal. App. 3d 251, 260-261) .

[b] Public Policy Limits Liability

In Parsons v. Crown Disposal Co. (1997) 15 Cal. 4th 456, 476, 63 Cal. Rptr. 2d 291, 936 P.2d 70 , the plaintiff, who was riding on a horse trail, was thrown from his horse after it was startled by loud noises from a nearby garbage truck that was operating in its normal manner. The plaintiff sought recovery for his injuries from the garbage company. The defendant filed a motion for summary judgment, asserting that it owed the plaintiff no duty to guard against the injuries complained of, citing in support the policy considerations in Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 Cal. 2d 108, 112-113, 70 Cal. Rptr. 97, 443 P.2d 561 (discussed in § 165.60[3][a]). The trial court granted the defendant's motion, but the court of appeal reversed, concluding that the defendant owed and possibly breached a duty to use care not to frighten horses on the horse trail near where its truck had been operating.

The Supreme Court ruled that the court of appeal erred in reversing the trial court judgment in favor of the defendant. Specifically, it found that the foreseeability consideration in Rowland did not compel a conclusion that the defendant had a duty to guard against frightening the plaintiff's horse. The plaintiff had argued that because the defendant's employee knew that a bridle path abutted the garbage bin and that the collection procedure might frighten a horse, a jury reasonably might conclude that the plaintiff's injury was foreseeable. The court responded first by citing its decision in Ballard v. Uribe (1986) 41 Cal. 3d 564, 572-573 n.6, 224 Cal. Rptr. 664, 715 P.2d 624 (discussed in § 165.50[3][b]), which held that a court's task in determining duty is not to decide whether a particular plaintiff's injury was reasonably foreseeable in light of a particular defendant's conduct, but rather to evaluate more generally whether the category of negligent conduct at issue is sufficiently likely to result in the kind of harm experienced that liability may appropriately be imposed. The court stated that even assuming foreseeability was established, it would not treat the mere presence of such a finding standing alone as imposing a duty on the defendant. Policy considerations such as the social utility of the defendant's conduct and the consequences to the community of imposing a duty on the defendant to guard against frightening a horse overrode the foreseeability factor in this case (15 Cal. 4th 456, 476) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Risk Was Not Reasonably Foreseeable

In Victor v. Hedges (1999) 77 Cal. App. 4th 229, 91 Cal. Rptr. 2d 466 , the plaintiff was standing on a public sidewalk in front of an apartment building, talking to an acquaintance who was showing the plaintiff the compact disk player in his vehicle, which was parked on the sidewalk. An inattentive passing motorist lost control of his vehicle, which jumped the curb and struck the plaintiff. The plaintiff brought suit against her acquaintance and his employer, who owned the vehicle that was parked on the sidewalk, alleging both ordinary negligence and negligence per se. The plaintiff's claim for ordinary negligence was based on the fact that the acquaintance knew that the adjacent street was undergoing construction, causing traffic to be reduced to one lane and creating loose gravel and a bumpy road surface. According to the plaintiff, the acquaintance should have foreseen that these conditions created a likelihood that a passing motorist would lose control of his or her vehicle and drive onto the public sidewalk on which they were standing. Summary judgment was granted to the defendants, and the court of appeal affirmed. Addressing the plaintiff's claim for ordinary negligence, the court of appeal held that the facts alleged by the plaintiff did not raise a triable issue of fact as to whether the acquaintance's conduct was negligent towards the plaintiff. The court concluded that no reasonable person would conclude that the acquaintance's act of taking the plaintiff to the sidewalk subjected her to an unreasonable risk of harm. Although the plaintiff presented additional expert evidence that a traffic engineer could have shown that the overall conditions created a situation in which a vehicle on the road would drift toward the sidewalk, this expert knowledge could not be charged to the acquaintance, nor was there any evidence that the acquaintance was aware of any previous accidents at that site (77 Cal. App. 4th 229, 243-244) .

In N.N.V. v. American Ass'n of Blood Banks (1999) 75 Cal. App. 4th 1358, 89 Cal. Rptr. 2d 885 , the plaintiff was a minor who underwent surgery for a heart condition shortly after birth in 1984. The surgery resulted in the plaintiff's contracting AIDS through a blood transfusion. The plaintiff eventually brought suit against the professional medical association that voluntarily recommends standards for blood banks. The plaintiff argued that the association had been negligent in the months prior to the surgery, specifically for failing to recommend that blood banks (1) question donors about their sexual preferences and activities, (2) make available to recipients directed blood donations from family and friends, and (3) offer surrogate testing of the blood supply by screening for a hepatitis B antigen that was prevalent in the same populations that were at risk for AIDS. The defendant successfully moved for summary judgment, in part on the grounds that it owed no duty of care to the plaintiff. The court of appeal agreed. The court concluded that, in light of the knowledge and conflicting medical and scientific opinions available during the relevant period, it was not reasonably foreseeable then that any of those measures would have reduced the risk of AIDS contamination of the blood supply. The court noted that in 1983 and 1984, credible arguments had been made that (1) direct questioning of donors about their sexual history would likely be inaccurate and ineffective, (2) there was no evidence that directed donations would be any more effective in reducing the risk of AIDS transmission than the use of volunteer donors at blood banks, and (3) legitimate concerns had been raised that use of the hepatitis B antigen test could actually increase the risk of contaminated blood because the test did not screen out all infected blood and persons in high-risk categories would have an incentive to donate in order to have their blood tested (75 Cal. App. 4th 1358, 1377-1380) . In addition, policy concerns led the court to state more generally that, absent fraud or bad faith, a professional medical association should not face liability for making a choice among competing scientific and medical opinions if the medical and scientific community has reached no consensus on the proper approach to a medical situation (75 Cal. App. 4th 1358, 1392) .

In Ludwig v. City of San Diego (1998) 65 Cal. App. 4th 1105, 76 Cal. Rptr. 2d 809 , the plaintiff, a foreman for a civil construction firm, filed an action for negligence against the defendants, a city and a traffic inspector employed by the city, for injuries sustained when an excavated trench collapsed on the plaintiff. The injuries were sustained the day after the inspector had refused the plaintiff permission to lay pipe and slurry in an open trench past the daily time period allowed in the traffic control plan and permit approved by the city. The plaintiff alleged that the inspector was negligent in delaying the work on the trench, that the inspector's refusal to allow late work the day before was motivated by the plaintiff's refusal to hire the inspector's son as a flagman, and that the delay in adding pipe and slurry to the trench caused the trench to weaken and collapse. The trial court granted summary judgment for the defendants on the grounds that the inspector owed no legal duty of care in the absence of evidence that the inspector knew or reasonably should have known that allowing the trench walls to dry overnight would render them unstable. The plaintiff appealed, arguing that the trial court erred in not considering factors other than foreseeability when determining whether a duty of care existed. The court of appeal affirmed.

The court held that although reasonable foreseeability of injury is only one factor to consider, it is essential to a finding that a duty of care existed. A finding that injury was not reasonably foreseeable precludes a finding that a legal duty existed, regardless of whether the other factors may weigh in favor of imposing a duty. The court agreed with the trial court that there was no evidence that the inspector knew or should have known of the danger created by failing to pour the slurry into the trench the day before the accident (65 Cal. App. 4th 1105, 1111-1112) . The court also rejected the plaintiff's argument that the moral blame of refusing to allow the work to continue, allegedly for the plaintiff's failure to hire the inspector's son, should be considered in determining whether a duty existed. The proper inquiry was whether the inspector reasonably should have known that his actions were creating a dangerous situation, and the relevant moral blame was the moral blame in knowingly creating a dangerous situation, not the moral blame that might attach to the inspector's motivation or the alleged ill-will he harbored toward the plaintiff (65 Cal. App. 4th 1105, 1113-1114) .

In Wawanesa Mut. Ins. Co. v. Matlock (1997) 60 Cal. App. 4th 583, 70 Cal. Rptr. 2d 512 , a 17-year-old boy bought two packs of cigarettes from a gas station and gave one of the packs to his 15-year-old friend. The two smoked as they walked to a private storage facility where hundreds of telephone poles were stacked up high on the ground. They were joined by two younger boys, who walked with them on the poles. The 17-year-old teased the younger boys, who started to run. One of the younger boys ran into the 15-year-old, causing him to drop his cigarette down between the poles. This caused a fire and considerable property damage. The 15-year-old was insured by the plaintiff. The plaintiff paid damages to the pole company and two fire departments on behalf of its insured and filed suit against the defendants, the 17-year-old boy and his father, for contribution. Several theories of recovery were articulated, including negligence.

After a bench trial, the court awarded the plaintiff $44,500 against the defendants. The defendants appealed, arguing that there was no basis on which to hold them liable. The court of appeal agreed, holding that the connection between the 17-year-old's initial act of giving his 15-year-old friend a packet of cigarettes and the subsequent fire was too attenuated to show that the fire was reasonably within the scope of the risk created by the initial act (60 Cal. App. 4th 583, 588) . According to the court, someone who gives someone else a cigarette, even if that act is itself unlawful by virtue of the receiver's age, can hardly become an insurer of any property that the cigarette may by some happenstance ignite. There must be some reason to conclude that the act of giving the cigarette created a fire hazard, and in this case there was none (60 Cal. App. 4th 583, 588) .

In Software Design & Application, Ltd. v. Hoefer & Arnett, Inc. (1996) 49 Cal. App. 4th 472, 56 Cal. Rptr. 2d 756 , the plaintiffs, who had lost assets to a financial consultant through a scheme involving a series of fictitious brokerage and bank accounts, sought to recover their money through a negligence action against the brokerage firms and banks. The trial court sustained demurrers and dismissed the action on the ground that the defendants did not owe the plaintiffs any duty of care. The court of appeal affirmed, stating that the primary flaw in the plaintiffs' negligence theory was that they were strangers to the contractual relationships between the defendants and the financial consultant (49 Cal. App. 4th 472, 478) . The plaintiffs claimed that the frequency of deposits and withdrawals from the accounts indicated illegal activity, but the court found no extraordinary facts that would give rise to liability to a noncustomer for mishandling the accounts (49 Cal. App. 4th 472, 481) . The plaintiffs also complained that the banks did not follow their own internal policies in opening the accounts, but the court reasoned that violation of a self-imposed rule does not create actionable negligence unless the plaintiff suffers the type of harm sought to be prevented by the rule and is a member of the class of people for whose protection the rule was promulgated (49 Cal. App. 4th 472, 482) .

In Dutton v. City of Pacifica (1995) 35 Cal. App. 4th 1171, 41 Cal. Rptr. 2d 816 , the plaintiff sued a city and a police officer for injuries she received when the truck in which she was riding failed to negotiate a left turn. The plaintiff alleged that the police officer had ordered her to ride in the back of the truck after approaching her at a park and instructing her to leave because the park was closing and it was nearly the time when a curfew for minors began. The trial court granted summary judgment in favor of the defendants. The plaintiff appealed, contending that the officer owed her a duty of care because he took "affirmative action [that] contributed to, increased, or changed the risk [that] would have otherwise existed." The court of appeal upheld the summary judgment, reasoning that the possibility that the plaintiff would be injured in the truck was no more foreseeable than the possibility that she would be injured if the officer had allowed her to wait for another ride or to walk home alone. Noting that the accident did not occur until approximately one-half hour after the truck left the area, and that the plaintiff passed up two opportunities to get out of the truck, the court concluded that the connection between the officer's dispersal order and the plaintiff's injury was tenuous (35 Cal. App. 4th 1171, 1176) .

In Butcher v. Gay (1994) 29 Cal. App. 4th 388, 34 Cal. Rptr. 2d 771 , the court of appeal affirmed summary judgment for the defendant in an action brought by the plaintiff, a visitor at the defendant's home, who claimed that she had contracted Lyme disease from ticks carried by the defendant's dog. The court held that the defendant's duty to exercise reasonable care to prevent foreseeable harm from his dog required knowledge, either actual or constructive, of the particular harm. Because the evidence presented showed that the defendant did not know, and could not reasonably be expected to have known, that ticks carrying the disease were present in the area, the defendant had no duty to warn the plaintiff not to allow the dog to sit on her lap (29 Cal. App. 4th 388, 405-406) .

In Avis Rent a Car Sys., Inc. v. Superior Court (1993) 12 Cal. App. 4th 221, 15 Cal. Rptr. 2d 711 , the plaintiff sued the defendant, a car rental agency, after the plaintiff's car was hit broadside by a car that had been stolen from the defendant's airport lot. The collision occurred about a week after theft of the car, while the thief was driving it recklessly at high speed to get away from the police after shoplifting goods from a merchant. The plaintiff alleged that the defendant negligently left the stolen car unlocked in the low-security airport lot with the keys in the ignition switch and that theft of the car was foreseeable. The defendant moved for summary judgment. The trial court denied the motion, but the court of appeal issued an extraordinary writ directing the trial court to grant the motion. The court of appeal reviewed the relevant California cases and concluded that they "have confirmed that, however foreseeable car theft and an accident by the thief may be, leaving an ordinary automobile unattended on the street [or in a low-security lot] with a key in the ignition does not create a duty to protect other motorists from the negligent driving of a thief" (12 Cal. App. 4th 221, 233) .

In De Lima v. Magnesite Waterproofing & Refinishing (1987) 191 Cal. App. 3d 776, 236 Cal. Rptr. 519 , the plaintiff, who slipped and fell on stairs, brought a negligence action against the building owner, the original contractor who properly weatherproofed the stairs, and the second contractor who negligently resealed them. The trial court granted the original contractor's motion for nonsuit, and the court of appeal affirmed, holding that it was not reasonably foreseeable that persons using the stairs would slip because of a second contractor's failure to reseal them with the proper compound (191 Cal. App. 3d 776, 782) .

In Kane v. Hartford Accident & Indem. Co. (1979) 98 Cal. App. 3d 350, 159 Cal. Rptr. 446 , the plaintiff was raped on hospital grounds by the employee of an independent contractor that provided cleaning services for the hospital. In an action for personal injuries against the hospital, the employee, the insurance company that bonded the employee, and the independent contractor, the court of appeal affirmed a judgment of nonsuit in favor of the insurance company. The court noted that the harm suffered by the plaintiff was not foreseeable. Because the insurance company owed no duty to the plaintiff, there could be no cause of action (98 Cal. App. 3d 350, 362) .

[b] Public Policy Limits Liability

In Sakiyama v. AMF Bowling Ctrs., Inc. (2003) 110 Cal. App. 4th 398, 1 Cal. Rptr. 3d 762 , the plaintiffs were two teenagers who survived an auto accident after they had ingested the drug Ecstasy at a party, as well as the parents of two other teenagers who died in the same accident. The plaintiffs brought suit against the owner of a skating rink for allowing the rink to host an all-night "rave" party that the teenagers attended immediately prior to the accident. The plaintiffs argued that the defendant had a duty not to participate in the creation of a "rave," because the defendant should have known that the participants would ingest drugs at the party and that it was foreseeable that auto accidents could occur when the participants left the party. The court of appeal held that despite the foreseeability of potential injury to the partygoers, the defendant had no duty to prevent the teenagers from ingesting drugs at the party and then driving away (110 Cal. App. 4th 398, 407-409) . The court noted that the defendant did not supply the drugs used at the party, and in fact took numerous steps to prevent drug use. The defendant conducted two searches of party attendees before they entered the party, confiscated any drugs or drug paraphernalia found, and identified and ejected any drug dealers found. The court concluded that the injuries and deaths suffered by the teenagers were not closely connected to the defendant's conduct in renting out its facility, and that there was no moral blame attached to the defendant's conduct in renting out its facility for a party (110 Cal. App. 4th 398, 409-410) . The court questioned whether the policy of preventing future harm would be furthered by imposing a duty of care, especially in light of the defendant's conduct in trying to prevent drug use at the party. The court also rejected the argument that the defendant had a duty to take burdensome steps to make the party site a safe haven for the attendees, noting how impractical it would be to impose a duty on the defendant to remove all drugs from the party and monitor all intoxicated or fatigued attendees, who were free to leave the party at any time. The court also pointed out that any duty imposed would have to extend to any business that involves late-night activities and possible drug or alcohol use, which would have a drastic economic effect on those businesses and the surrounding communities (110 Cal. App. 4th 398, 410-412) .

In Adams v. City of Fremont (1998) 68 Cal. App. 4th 243, 80 Cal. Rptr. 2d 196 , a decedent's surviving spouse and stepdaughter filed suit for wrongful death and negligent infliction of emotional distress against a city and a police officer for the city. The plaintiffs alleged that the police, under the supervision of the officer, had been negligent in dealing with a tense, emergency situation precipitated when decedent, despondent and under the influence of alcohol, threatened to kill himself with a firearm he was brandishing. The court of appeal reversed the judgment for the plaintiffs, holding that police officers responding to a crisis involving a person threatening suicide with a loaded firearm have no duty actionable in tort to prevent the threatened suicide from being carried out. The court determined that no duty was owed under either the weighing of the Rowland factors or through application of the "special relationship" doctrine. Among the factors militating against imposition of a duty of care, the court stressed the paramount policy concerns for protecting the physical safety of police officers and other third parties that may be in the area, as well as the desire to avoid a rule that might inhibit police officers from being willing to render assistance to suicidal individuals in the first place (68 Cal. App. 4th 243, 271-273, 276) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
B. Duty
2. Foreseeability

16-165 California Points & Authorities §§ 165.61-165.69

[Reserved]

§§ 165.61[Reserved]

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
B. Duty
3. Breach of Statutory Duty

16-165 California Points & Authorities § 165.70

§ 165.70 Presumptive Negligence Established Under Evidence Code § 669

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief].

DEFENDANT OWED A DUTY TO PLAINTIFF AND BREACHED THAT DUTY BECAUSE (1) DEFENDANT VIOLATED A _____ [STATUTE or ORDINANCE or REGULATION] THAT SET FORTH THE STANDARD OF CONDUCT EXPECTED OF A REASONABLE PERSON UNDER THE CIRCUMSTANCES OF THIS CASE, (2) PLAINTIFF WAS A MEMBER OF THE CLASS FOR WHOSE BENEFIT THE _____ [STATUTE or ORDINANCE or REGULATION] WAS ENACTED, (3) THE ACCIDENT CAUSING THE INJURY WAS OF THE NATURE THAT THE _____ [STATUTE or ORDINANCE or REGULATION] WAS DESIGNED TO PREVENT, AND (4) THE VIOLATION WAS A PROXIMATE CAUSE OF PLAINTIFF'S INJURY.

A. Presumption of Negligence Established. If a legal duty to exercise due care exists, the failure of a person to exercise due care is presumed if (1) he or she violated a statute, ordinance, or regulation of a public entity; (2) the violation proximately caused death or injury to person or property; (3) the death or injury resulted from an occurrence of the nature that the statute, ordinance, or regulation was designed to prevent; and (4) the person suffering the death or the injury to his or her person or property was one of the class of persons for whose protection the statute, ordinance, or regulation was adopted (Evid. Code § 669(a)(1)-(4); Clemente v. State of California (1985) 40 Cal. 3d 202, 214-217, 219 Cal. Rptr. 445, 707 P.2d 818 ; Peterson v. City of Long Beach (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 238, 242 n.1, 155 Cal. Rptr. 360, 594 P.2d 477).

B. Violation Was Proximate Cause of Plaintiff's Injury. Although the proof of numerous statutory and regulatory safety violations establishes the defendant's negligence as a matter of law, this proof of negligence alone does not automatically establish liability. The plaintiff still bears the initial burden of showing that the defendant's negligence was a proximate cause of the injury. However, the breach of a statutory duty will often suffice to give rise to an inference from which a jury may find that a given injury was the actual and proximate result of the violation (Evid. Code § 669(a)(2); Haft v. Lone Palm Hotel (1970) 3 Cal. 3d 756, 765, 91 Cal. Rptr. 745, 478 P.2d 465).

C. Harm to Plaintiff Was Type of Harm Statute Was Designed to Prevent. Violation of a statute, ordinance, or regulation results in liability only if the harm that the violation causes resulted from an occurrence of the nature that the statute, ordinance, or regulation was designed to prevent (Evid. Code § 669(a)(3); see Nunneley v. Edgar Hotel (1950) 36 Cal. 2d 493, 497, 225 P.2d 497).

D. Plaintiff Was Member of Protected Class. The plaintiff may recover for the violation of a statute, ordinance, or regulation of a public entity only if the plaintiff is one of the class of persons for whose protection the statute, ordinance, or regulation was adopted (Evid. Code § 669(a)(4); Porter v. Montgomery Ward & Co., Inc. (1957) 48 Cal. 2d 846, 848-849, 313 P.2d 854 ; Newhall Land & Farming Co. v. Superior Court (1993) 19 Cal. App. 4th 334, 347-348, 23 Cal. Rptr. 2d 377).

[Optional] E. Effect of Statutes That Do Not Provide for Civil Liability. A duty of care and the attendant standard of conduct required of a reasonable person may be found in a legislative enactment that does not provide for civil liability (Derrick v. Ontario Cmty. Hosp. (1975) 47 Cal. App. 3d 145, 151, 120 Cal. Rptr. 566).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that the defendant breached a legal duty to exercise due care owed to the plaintiff based on the defendant's violation of a statute, ordinance, or regulation [see Evid. Code § 669(a)]. Optional Paragraph E may be submitted if the statute, ordinance, or regulation, does not provide for civil liability. This form should be combined with § 165.10 if applicable to the particular case.

This issue may arise in several procedural contexts, including on appeal, reviewing the propriety of a jury instruction regarding the statutory violation, or in opposing a demurrer to the plaintiff's complaint [see, e.g., Nunneley v. Edgar Hotel (1950) 36 Cal. 2d 493, 495-496, 225 P.2d 497 (jury instruction); Derrick v. Ontario Cmty. Hosp. (1975) 47 Cal. App. 3d 145, 147-148, 120 Cal. Rptr. 566 (demurrer)].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should discuss the violation of the statute by the defendant, the conduct that the statute was designed to prevent, the plaintiff's inclusion in a class the statute was designed to protect, and how the defendant's violation proximately caused injury to the plaintiff [see Evid. Code § 669(a); see also Peterson v. City of Long Beach (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 238, 242-247, 155 Cal. Rptr. 360, 594 P.2d 477] .

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For related legal background, research and procedural guides, and a form of complaint with respect to negligence based on violation of statute, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For additional points and authorities to combine with this form, see § 165.10. For points and authorities supporting and opposing demurrers, see Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities in § 165.80 et seq. may be used in an appropriate case to oppose the points and authorities in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Presumption of Negligence Established

In Clemente v. State of California (1985) 40 Cal. 3d 202, 219 Cal. Rptr. 445, 707 P.2d 818 , the plaintiff was severely injured by a motorcycle while crossing the street. A highway patrol officer on his way to freeway patrol was notified of the accident, stopped, called an ambulance and the local police department, instructed the main witness and the motorcyclist to await the arrival of the police, and left without obtaining the name or license number of either the witness or the motorcyclist. Those individuals left before the police arrived. The plaintiff brought suit against the officer and the state for negligence when the motorcyclist was never apprehended. The trial court sustained the defendants' demurrer to the complaint. The court of appeal reversed and remanded, holding that the plaintiff could state a cause of action. The plaintiff amended his complaint accordingly, and after trial a judgment in the plaintiff's favor was entered. The defendants appealed.

The Supreme Court affirmed. Although the court of appeal decision had been disapproved in Williams v. State of California (1983) 34 Cal. 3d 18, 28 n.9, 192 Cal. Rptr. 233, 664 P.2d 137 (discussed in § 165.242[3][a]), the Court found that under the doctrine of the law of the case, this court of appeal opinion remained the law of the case (40 Cal. 3d 202, 210-213) . Regarding the effect of the procedures for accident investigation in creating a presumption of negligence, the case focused on a manual that was prepared for and used in conjunction with courses given at the police academy and was followed by most, if not all, police departments. It contained guidelines for accident investigations and stated that a patrol officer should impartially record facts in order to have a complete unbiased record should civil litigation occur. Citing Peterson v. City of Long Beach (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 238, 155 Cal. Rptr. 360, 594 P.2d 477 , with approval, the Court noted that although the language of the manual left much to the discretion of the officer in determining what steps to take, it also identified the steps to be considered and the concerns that should motivate the officer in exercising that discretion. The Court stated that an officer who failed to exercise the discretion vested in him or her by ignoring some of the steps to be taken without considering them would be subject to disciplinary action, and the Court concluded that those regulations were not merely permissive (40 Cal. 3d 202, 214-216) .

In Peterson v. City of Long Beach (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 238, 155 Cal. Rptr. 360, 594 P.2d 477 , a city police officer shot and killed a man who was running from his own apartment. The police officer was responding to a radio call erroneously reporting a burglary in progress at the apartment. The plaintiffs, the decedent's parents, brought an action for wrongful death against the city and the police officer. The trial court, ruling that the police officer's use of deadly force was justifiable, held in favor of the defendants. The plaintiffs appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed the judgment, stating that the failure of a person to exercise due care is presumed if he or she violated the regulation of a public entity (24 Cal. 3d 238, 241-242) . It noted that Evid. Code § 669(a)(1)-(4) provides that the failure of a person to exercise due care is presumed if: (1) he or she violated a statute, ordinance, or regulation of a public entity; (2) the violation proximately caused death or injury to person or property; (3) the death or injury resulted from an occurrence of the nature that the statute, ordinance, or regulation was designed to prevent; and (4) the person suffering the death or the injury to his or her person or property was one of the class of persons for whose protection the statute, ordinance, or regulation was adopted (24 Cal. 3d 238, 242 n.1). In this case, the Court noted that the city's Police Department manual contained regulations that specified the guidelines for the use of firearms by police officers in apprehending suspects. It determined that these regulations were "regulations of a public entity" pursuant to Evid. Code § 669(a)(1) because the broad definition of a public entity includes every form of public authority. The Court stated that when the city manager and the police chief promulgated the regulations, they were acting as heads of a public entity (24 Cal. 3d 238, 243-244) . The Court further noted that the trial court found that when the police officer shot the plaintiffs' son, he failed to comply with the regulation (24 Cal. 3d 238, 246) . The Court held that the police officer's violation of the regulation raised a presumption of negligence and that once this presumption is raised, it may be rebutted by the defendants pursuant to Evid. Code § 669(b)(1). The trial court, however, failed to inquire whether or not the defendants could rebut this presumption because it disregarded Evid. Code § 669(a), which created this presumption. Therefore, the Court reversed the judgment for the defendants (24 Cal. 3d 238, 246-247) .

NOTE:

Because of the enactment of Evid. Code § 669.1 in 1987, a rule, policy, manual, or guideline of state or local government setting forth standards of conduct or guidelines for its employees in the conduct of their public employment is not considered a statute, ordinance, or regulation of the public entity within the meaning of Evid. Code § 669, unless the rule, manual, policy, or guideline has been formally adopted as a statute, as an ordinance of a local government entity in California empowered to adopt ordinances, or as a regulation either by an agency of the state pursuant to the Administrative Procedure Act (Gov. Code §§ 11340-11356) or by an agency of the federal government pursuant to the federal Administrative Procedure Act (5 U.S.C.S. §§ 500-596) [see Evid. Code § 669.1]. Evid. Code § 669.1, however, affects only the application of the presumption of negligence set forth in Evid. Code § 669. It does not affect what evidence is admissible in a civil action. Furthermore, Evid. Code § 669.1 applies only to those causes of action arising out of facts occurring after 1987, regardless of the date that the action is commenced or tried [see Evid. Code § 669.1].

[b] Violation Was Proximate Cause of Plaintiff's Injury

In Haft v. Lone Palm Hotel (1970) 3 Cal. 3d 756, 765, 91 Cal. Rptr. 745, 478 P.2d 465 , a father and son drowned in the defendants' motel pool. The plaintiffs, the mother of the deceased child and her daughter, brought an action for wrongful death, raising numerous contentions, including that the defendants violated several statutes and administrative regulations in the maintenance of the swimming pool. The trial court entered judgment for the defendants, and the plaintiffs appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed and remanded the case for a new trial. The Court noted that no direct evidence revealed the manner in which the drownings occurred. However, the evidence did establish, without conflict, that the defendants had furnished the lounging space, wading pool, and swimming pool, but had failed to provide any safety measures required by law for a pool available for the use of the public (3 Cal. 3d 756, 762-763) . Therefore, the record showed that the defendants violated former Health & Safety Code § 24101.4 (now Health & Safety Code § 116045) because they had knowledge that no lifeguard was present at the pool, but failed to post a sign advising guests of that fact. In addition, the Court found several violations of administrative regulations. There were no markings on the edge of the pool that stated the depths of the water or indicated the break in the slope between the deep and the shallow portions of the pool, there was no sign that warned that children were not to use the pool without an adult in attendance, and there were no posted telephone numbers of rescue services, no posted artificial respiration procedures, and no 12-foot safety poles (3 Cal. 3d 756, 763) .

The Court stated that in failing to satisfy all of these mandatory safety requirements, which were clearly designed to protect the class of persons of which the decedents were members, the defendants were unquestionably negligent as a matter of law (3 Cal. 3d 756, 763) . Although the proof of the numerous statutory and regulatory safety violations established the defendants' negligence as a matter of law, this proof of negligence alone did not automatically establish liability. The plaintiffs still bore the initial burden of showing that the defendants' negligence was a proximate cause of the deaths. The breach of a statutory duty will often suffice to give rise to an inference from which a jury may find that a given injury was the actual or proximate result of the violation. In this case, after the plaintiffs proved that the defendants failed to provide a lifeguard or to post a warning sign, the burden shifted to the defendants to show that the absence of a lifeguard did not cause the deaths. Because these respective burdens were unclear at the time of trial, the Court determined that justice would be best served by a remand of the cause for a new trial (3 Cal. 3d 756, 765) .

[c] Harm to Plaintiff Was Type of Harm Statute Was Designed to Prevent

In Nunneley v. Edgar Hotel (1950) 36 Cal. 2d 493, 225 P.2d 497 , the plaintiff sat on a hotel parapet that was three inches lower than that required by statute and fell down a vent shaft opening onto the hotel's roof. The plaintiff brought an action against the owner and the manager of the hotel, contending that the defendants were negligent in not providing signs to warn of the danger, that there was inadequate lighting, and that the parapet near the vent shaft violated former Health & Safety Code § 16827. The jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff. After denial of the defendants' motion for a new trial, they appealed.

The Supreme Court noted that the plaintiff could not recover damages for violation of a statute unless: she is a member of a class of persons for whose benefit the statute was enacted; the accident was of the nature that the statute was designed to prevent; and the violation was the proximate cause of her injury (36 Cal. 2d 493, 497) . The Court stated that the statute was enacted for the protection of any person lawfully on or about the premises and that the plaintiff came within that category. The Court found, however, that the statute on which the plaintiff relied was not enacted for the purpose of protecting her from the type of hazard she encountered. The Court stated that the manifest intention of the legislature in specifying a minimum height of 30 inches for the parapet of every vent shaft in the roof of an apartment house or hotel was to protect persons lawfully on the premises from walking or stumbling into the opening. The Court did not believe that the legislation was designed to guard a person from the danger of falling into a shaft by reason of sitting on the parapet (36 Cal. 2d 493, 498) . Furthermore, that the parapet was three inches lower than that required by the statute was not the proximate cause of the plaintiff's injury (36 Cal. 2d 493, 499) . The Court held, however, that the instructions regarding the statutory violation did not result in a miscarriage of justice. The evidence was sufficient to establish liability on the part of the manager and the owner of the hotel on the principles of general negligence. Accordingly, the Court affirmed the judgment (36 Cal. 2d 493, 501-502) .

[d] Plaintiff Was Member of Protected Class

In Porter v. Montgomery Ward & Co., Inc. (1957) 48 Cal. 2d 846, 313 P.2d 854 , the plaintiff fell on a stairway in the defendant's department store. It was established at trial that the stairway, which had no center hand rail, violated a safety order issued by the Division of Industrial Safety. The trial court admitted the safety order into evidence over the defendants' objection and also instructed the jury that if the defendants violated the safety order, they were presumptively negligent. The jury rendered a verdict for the plaintiffs, and the defendants appealed.

The Supreme Court affirmed. Even though the defendants contended that the safety order was not designed to protect the class of which the plaintiff was a member, the Court felt that the order was designed to protect members of the general public (48 Cal. 2d 846, 848-849) . Therefore, the trial court properly received the order into evidence and informed the jury that the violation by the defendant gave rise to a presumption of negligence that could be rebutted by evidence of justification or excuse (48 Cal. 2d 846, 849) .

In Newhall Land & Farming Co. v. Superior Court (1993) 19 Cal. App. 4th 334, 23 Cal. Rptr. 2d 377 , the plaintiff, an agricultural company, brought an action against prior owners of the plaintiff's real property for having discharged onto the property hazardous waste, which continued to pollute the soil and the groundwater that the plaintiff used in its farming operations. The trial court sustained the defendants' demurrer to the plaintiff's complaint without leave to amend, and the plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that the plaintiff had stated a cause of action for negligence by alleging negligence per se based on statutory violations pursuant to Evid. Code § 669 (19 Cal. App. 4th 334, 347) . The court found that the plaintiff, as a farming company, was one of the class of persons for whose protection Health & Safety Code § 5411 and Water Code § 13000 et seq. were adopted. These provisions prohibit the discharge of waste that impairs or alters the quality of water for a variety of uses, including agriculture (19 Cal. App. 4th 334, 348) .

[e] Effect of Statutes That Do Not Provide for Civil Liability

In Derrick v. Ontario Cmty. Hosp. (1975) 47 Cal. App. 3d 145, 120 Cal. Rptr. 566 , the plaintiff contracted a serious communicable disease from a child who had been released from a hospital. The plaintiff, through his guardian ad litem, brought the action against the hospital, the attending physician, the child, and the child's mother. He alleged that the defendants negligently failed to take proper precautions to stop the spread of the disease and negligently failed to comply with the requirements of former Health & Safety Code § 3125 (now see Health & Safety Code § 120250), which required reporting of communicable diseases to a health officer. The plaintiff further alleged that the defendants' failure to report the disease prevented the health officer from alerting the child, her mother, and the plaintiff of the presence and the contagiousness of the disease, and that this negligence proximately caused the plaintiff to contract the disease. The trial court sustained the hospital's demurrer to the plaintiff's complaint without leave to amend. The plaintiff appealed the resulting judgment of dismissal.

The court of appeal reversed, finding that the ambiguities and uncertainties presented by the complaint could be eliminated by further amendment (47 Cal. App. 3d 145, 149) . In addition, the court stated the issue as whether or not the allegations of the first amended complaint showed that the hospital owed any duty to the plaintiff and whether the breach of this duty proximately resulted in injury to the plaintiff (47 Cal. App. 3d 145, 150) . Quoting Vesely v. Sager (1971) 5 Cal. 3d 153, 164, 95 Cal. Rptr. 623, 486 P.2d 151 , the court stated that a duty of care, and the attendant standard of conduct required of a reasonable person, may be found in a legislative enactment that does not provide for civil liability. A presumption of negligence arises from the violation of a statute that was enacted to protect a class of which the plaintiff is a member against the type of harm that the plaintiff suffered as a result of the violation of the statute (47 Cal. App. 3d 145, 151) . The language of former Health & Safety Code § 3125 (now see Health & Safety Code § 120250), containing the reporting requirements for communicable diseases to health officers, applies to hospitals, and former Health & Safety Code §§ 3110 and 3125 (now see Health & Safety Code §§ 120175, 120250) were enacted to protect the public against the spread of contagious diseases. In addition, the court held that former Health & Safety Code § 3125 (now see Health & Safety Code § 120250) imposed a duty on the hospital to report known infectious, contagious, or communicable diseases to the health officer (47 Cal. App. 3d 145, 152) . Even though the plaintiff's case still presented proximate cause problems, the court concluded that the judgment dismissing the hospital as a defendant must be reversed (47 Cal. App. 3d 145, 151-152) .

NOTE:

The holding in Vesely v. Sager (1971) 5 Cal. 3d 153, 164-167, 95 Cal. Rptr. 623, 486 P.2d 151 , regarding liability for the furnishing of alcoholic beverages to an intoxicated person, has been abrogated by the 1978 enactment of Civ. Code § 1714(b). It appears, however, that the statement quoted by the court in the Derrick case has not been abrogated by the passage of Civ. Code § 1714(b) [see Civ. Code § 1714(b); see also Stoiber v. Honeychuck (1980) 101 Cal. App. 3d 903, 923, 162 Cal. Rptr. 194] .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Presumption of Negligence Established

NOTE:

The court of appeal held in a 2009 case that the amendments to the Child Abuse and Neglect Reporting Act, Pen. Code § 11164 et seq., made in 2000 did not abrogate the holding reached by the Supreme Court in Randi W. v. Muroc Joint Unified School Dist., thus reaffirming the principle that a school > district that fails to report suspected sexual abuse committed by an employee cannot be held liable for abuse committed by that employee while working for a subsequent employer [P.S. v. San Bernardino City Unified School Dist. (2009) 174 Cal. App. 4th 953, 964-965, 94 Cal. Rptr. 3d 788].

The factual and procedural background of Nunneley v. Edgar Hotel (1950) 36 Cal. 2d 493, 225 P.2d 497 , is discussed in § 165.70[3][c]. In affirming judgment for the plaintiff, the Supreme Court stated that the plaintiff could not recover damages for violation of a statute unless she was one of a class of persons for whose benefit the statute was enacted, the accident was of the nature that the statute was designed to prevent, and the violation was the proximate cause of her injury (36 Cal. 2d 493, 497) .

In California Serv. Station & Auto. Repair Ass'n v. American Home Assurance Co. (1998) 62 Cal. App. 4th 1166, 73 Cal. Rptr. 2d 182 , an industry association and two subsidiaries that represented gas stations, car washes, and garages brought an action against an insurance company that had agreed to provide dividend-paying liability and workers' compensation insurance coverage marketed by the plaintiffs to their members, alleging that the insurance company had failed to pay dividends when expected. In calculating that no dividends were due, the defendant used much higher loss development factors (LDFs) than the plaintiffs had expected based on representations made at the time of negotiations, although no formal disclosure of the LDFs to be used had been made during negotiations. 10 Cal. Code Reg. § 2505 requires insurers offering dividend-paying workers' compensation policies to provide purchasers with a dividend disclosure statement under most circumstances, although the defendant had not provided any statement to the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs alleged breach of contract, breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, and negligence. The jury found for the defendant on the breach of contract action, but found for the plaintiffs on the other causes of action. The trial court, which had instructed the jury on both ordinary negligence and the presumption of negligence arising under Evid. Code § 669, granted the defendant's post-trial motion for j.n.o.v. and a new trial on the negligence cause of action. The plaintiffs appealed the order for j.n.o.v. and new trial. In affirming an order for j.n.o.v. and new trial granted for the defendant, the court of appeal explained that a statutory presumption of negligence only arises under Evid. Code § 669 if there is an underlying cause of action for negligence. Assuming that a duty to exercise due care exists, the presumption of negligence may then be used to prove a breach of the applicable standard of due care. The court explained that it is the tort of negligence, and not the violation of the statute itself, that entitles a plaintiff to recover civil damages. Noting that the plaintiffs had not shown that they had a viable underlying negligence action, the court held that Evid. Code § 669 could not be used to create a negligence duty of care that did not otherwise exist (62 Cal. App. 4th 1166, 1177-1180) . However, the issue of whether Evid. Code § 669 can be used to create a legal duty of due care that does not otherwise exist, rather than merely create a presumption that an existing duty has been breached, has been the subject of disagreement among members of the Supreme Court, who have apparently not directly ruled on the issue (see 62 Cal. App. 4th 1166, 1180) .

[b] Harm to Plaintiff Was Type of Harm Statute Was Designed to Prevent

In Klein v. BIA Hotel Corp. (1996) 41 Cal. App. 4th 1133, 49 Cal. Rptr. 2d 60 , the plaintiffs sued the defendant, a residential hotel, for the wrongful death of their mother, who committed suicide by jumping off the roof of the defendant's building. The plaintiffs alleged that the defendant was presumed to be negligent under Evid. Code § 669, based on regulations governing the physical setting of a residential care facility for the elderly. The defendant moved for summary judgment, claiming that decedent had a right to take her own life and that the defendant had no duty to prevent her from doing so. The trial court granted the summary judgment, and the plaintiffs appealed. After reviewing the relevant regulations, the court of appeal held that the defendant was required to monitor the decedent's health and well-being, to inform certain persons of changes in her condition, and to determine whether the facility would be able to continue to care for her because of those changes. These obligations imposed on the defendant were designed to prevent the decedent's mental and physical problems from going unnoticed and untreated, so that harm to the decedent could be avoided. The court concluded that the regulations were designed to protect residents of residential care facilities for the elderly from the type of harm that the decedent experienced. Concluding that the defendant had not rebutted the allegations of the plaintiffs complaint, the court reversed the grant of summary judgment and remanded the cause for further proceedings (41 Cal. App. 4th 1133, 1140-1141) .

In Galvez v. Frields (2001) 88 Cal. App. 4th 1410, 107 Cal. Rptr. 2d 50 , the plaintiff, who was born with serious birth defects, brought a wrongful life suit against his mother's physician for failing to advise and make reasonable efforts to ensure that the plaintiff's mother underwent alpha-fetoprotein (AFP) testing during pregnancy to check for neural tube defects in the plaintiff before he was born. At trial, although the trial court allowed expert testimony on the standard of care, the court refused to instruct the jury on the negligence per se doctrine and the duties as to AFP testing imposed on physicians by 17 Cal. Code Reg. § 6527. After a split jury vote, judgment was entered in favor of the physician. The court of appeal reversed, holding that the trial court committed reversible error in refusing to instruct on negligence per se. The physician had argued at trial that 17 Cal. Code Reg. § 6527 was intended to protect only taxpayers who have to pay for the care of children born with neural tube defects, and on appeal the physician contended that the class of persons protected by the regulation was pregnant women. However, the court concluded that the regulation was designed to prevent the birth of children with neural tube defects, and that the plaintiff was a member of this protected class. Therefore, the regulation was applicable and the jury should have been given the opportunity to determine if the physician breached the standard of care created by the regulation (88 Cal. App. 4th 1410, 1421-1424) .

[c] Plaintiff Was Member of Protected Class

In City of Los Angeles v. Shpegel-Dimsey, Inc. (1988) 198 Cal. App. 3d 1009, 244 Cal. Rptr. 507 , a city sued the defendant, a plastics company, to recover damages for injury to utility poles, conductors, and fixtures caused by a fire originating on the defendant's premises. The defendant had openly stored scrap plastics on its property in violation of the city's fire code, had been cited numerous times for the violations, and had failed to correct them. If it had corrected them, the fire would have been confined to a small area and would not have spread to city property. In reversing judgment for the defendant, the court of appeal held that the city fire code provision regarding proper storage of plastics was intended at least in part to protect property owners such as the city from an increased risk of injury to their property. The evidence showed that plastic materials of the type stored by the defendant burn fiercely if not properly stored, thereby causing a fire of increasing magnitude to spread rapidly, and that the increased size and ferocity of the fire vastly enhanced the risk to adjacent property owners (198 Cal. App. 3d 1009, 1021) .

Cappa v. Oscar C. Holmes, Inc. (1972) 25 Cal. App. 3d 978, 102 Cal. Rptr. 207 , was a personal injury action against a city and a contractor by a 16-year-old boy who took a short cut through an area that was under construction and partially barricaded. There were no fences or railings along the edge of the area, and the plaintiff fell over the edge. An industrial safety order required the fencing of passageways "extending to the side of a floor where a [person] or material might fall." The court of appeal upheld a jury verdict for the plaintiff, rejecting the defendants' argument that the safety order was intended only for the protection of workers on the job, not for uninvited members of the public such as the plaintiff. Because the safety order in question did not expressly or impliedly limit its protection to construction workers, the court concluded that the order was designed to protect members of the public consensually on the premises (25 Cal. App. 3d 978, 982) . The court furthermore held that, under Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 Cal. 2d 108, 112, 70 Cal. Rptr. 97, 443 P.2d 561 (discussed in § 165.60[3][a]), once it found that the safety order applied to the general public, it could make no distinction among trespassers, licensees, or invitees (25 Cal. App. 3d 978, 982-983) .

[d] Effect of Statutes That Do Not Provide for Civil Liability

In Vesely v. Sager (1971) 5 Cal. 3d 153, 95 Cal. Rptr. 623, 486 P.2d 151 , the plaintiff was injured by an automobile driven by a person to whom the defendant had furnished alcoholic beverages in violation of Bus. & Prof. Code § 25602. In reversing a judgment of dismissal in favor of the defendant, the Supreme Court noted that a duty of care and the attendant standard of conduct required of a reasonable person may be found in a legislative enactment that does not provide for civil liability (5 Cal. 3d 153, 164) .

NOTE:

The abrogation of the specific holding of this case by the enactment of Civ. Code § 1714(b) does not appear to affect this general point of law [see Civ. Code § 1714(b); see also Stoiber v. Honeychuck (1980) 101 Cal. App. 3d 903, 923, 162 Cal. Rptr. 194] .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
B. Duty
3. Breach of Statutory Duty

16-165 California Points & Authorities §§ 165.71-165.79

[Reserved]

§§ 165.71[Reserved]

23 of 199 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
B. Duty
3. Breach of Statutory Duty

16-165 California Points & Authorities § 165.80

§ 165.80 Presumption of Negligence Not Established Under Evidence Code § 669

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief].

THE PRESUMPTION OF NEGLIGENCE SET FORTH IN SECTION 669 OF THE EVIDENCE CODE DOES NOT APPLY BECAUSE _____ [DEFENDANT DID NOT VIOLATE THE _____ (STATUTE or ORDINANCE or REGULATION) IN QUESTION and/or PLAINTIFF WAS NOT A MEMBER OF THE CLASS FOR WHOSE BENEFIT THE _____ (STATUTE or ORDINANCE or REGULATION) WAS ENACTED and/or THE ACCIDENT CAUSING THE INJURY WAS NOT OF THE NATURE THAT THE _____ (STATUTE or ORDINANCE or REGULATION) WAS DESIGNED TO PREVENT and/or THE VIOLATION OF THE _____ (STATUTE or ORDINANCE or REGULATION) WAS NOT A PROXIMATE CAUSE OF PLAINTIFF'S INJURY and/or THE PLAINTIFF HAS NOT PROVEN THAT DEFENDANT OWED PLAINTIFF A LEGAL DUTY TO EXERCISE DUE CARE].

A. Presumption of Negligence Not Established. Presumption of negligence under Evid. Code § 669 does not apply unless the plaintiff proves: (1) the violation of a statute, ordinance, or regulation of a public entity; (2) that the violation was a proximate cause of the injury; (3) injury resulting from an occurrence of the nature that the statute was designed to prevent; and (4) that the injured party was a member of the class for whose protection the statute was adopted (see Evid. Code § 669(a); Salinero v. Pon (1981) 124 Cal. App. 3d 120, 134, 177 Cal. Rptr. 204).

[EITHER]

B. Insufficient Evidence of Violation. If there is no showing that the defendant's conduct violated the statute in question, the court will conclude that the plaintiff has failed to establish a requisite element of negligence per se, that is, the statutory violation (see Salinero v. Pon (1981) 124 Cal. App. 3d 120, 134, 177 Cal. Rptr. 204).

[AND/OR]

C. Violation Was Not Proximate Cause of Injury. Proof of violation of a statute, ordinance, or regulation does not establish a presumption of negligence unless the violation proximately caused the death or injury to person or property (Evid. Code § 669(a)(2); Roth v. Parker (1997) 57 Cal. App. 4th. 542, 550, 67 Cal. Rptr. 2d 250 ; Beaupre v. Nave (1970) 13 Cal. App. 3d 402, 406, 91 Cal. Rptr. 473 ; see Blodgett v. B.H. Dyas Co. (1935) 4 Cal. 2d 511, 513, 50 P.2d 801).

[AND/OR]

D. Harm to Plaintiff Was Not Type of Harm Statute Was Designed to Prevent. Negligence is not presumed from a violation of a statute, ordinance, or regulation unless the death or injury resulted from an occurrence of the nature that the statute, ordinance, or regulation was designed to prevent (Evid. Code § 669(a)(3); Morris v. Horton (1994) 22 Cal. App. 4th 968, 972, 27 Cal. Rptr. 2d 585 ; see Nunneley v. Edgar Hotel (1950) 36 Cal. 2d 493, 497, 225 P.2d 497).

[AND/OR]

E. Plaintiff Was Not Member of Protected Class. A person may not recover damages based on the violation of a statute, ordinance, or regulation, unless he or she was one of the class of persons for whose protection the statute, ordinance, or regulation was adopted (Evid. Code § 669(a)(4); Richards v. Stanley (1954) 43 Cal. 2d 60, 62, 271 P.2d 23).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that the presumption of negligence under Evid. Code § 669(a) does not apply [see Evid. Code § 669(a)]. It may be used if the defendant contends that the plaintiff has failed to establish the elements set forth in Evid. Code § 669(a) or has failed to establish in the first instance that a legal duty to exercise due care was owed to the plaintiff. This form should be combined with § 165.20, if applicable to the case.

This argument may arise in several procedural contexts. For example, the defendant might raise this issue on an appeal from an adverse judgment, if the ground for the appeal is the impropriety of a jury instruction regarding the statutory violation, or in support of a motion for nonsuit or a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict [see, e.g., Nunneley v. Edgar Hotel (1950) 36 Cal. 2d 493, 495-496, 225 P.2d 497 (jury instruction); Morris v. Horton (1994) 22 Cal. App. 4th 968, 970, 27 Cal. Rptr. 2d 585 (judgment notwithstanding the verdict); Salinero v. Pon (1981) 124 Cal. App. 3d 120, 126, 177 Cal. Rptr. 204 (nonsuit)].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should discuss the facts of the case and argue that (1) the defendant did not violate the statute in question; (2) the harm produced was not of the type that the statute was designed to prevent; (3) the plaintiff was not a member of the class that the statute was designed to protect; or (4) the defendant's violation was not a proximate cause of injury to the plaintiff [see Salinero v. Pon (1981) 124 Cal. App. 3d 120, 134, 177 Cal. Rptr. 204] . Alternatively, counsel should discuss the facts and argue that the defendant did not owe a legal duty to the plaintiff to exercise due care under the circumstances [see California Serv. Station & Auto. Repair Ass'n v. American Home Assurance Co. (1998) 62 Cal. App. 4th 1166, 1176-1180, 73 Cal. Rptr. 2d 182] .

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For related legal background, research and procedural guides, and a form of complaint with respect to negligence based on violation of statute, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For additional points and authorities to combine with this form, see § 165.20.

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities in § 165.70 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose the points and authorities in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Presumption of Negligence Not Established

In Salinero v. Pon (1981) 124 Cal. App. 3d 120, 177 Cal. Rptr. 204 , an experienced window washer brought an action against the owners of an apartment building for personal injuries suffered when he fell from the building while washing windows. The defendants cross-complained against the architect who designed the building. The trial court granted summary judgment for the architect on the cross-complaint on the ground that the action was barred by the four-year statute of limitations of Code Civ. Proc. § 337.1, which limits the time for filing actions against architects and construction contractors for deficient construction or design. The court granted the owners' motion for a nonsuit on the plaintiff's complaint, and the plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. With regard to the motion for nonsuit that dismissed the action against the owners, it stated that the trial court was not in error when it excluded certain evidence of statutory violations, contained in Lab. Code §§ 7325-7327 and 7330, that required safety devices on multistory buildings to protect window washers. Although the plaintiff attempted to introduce these violations for the purpose of establishing the owners' breach of statutory duties of care, the court stated that the legislature expressly intended, as shown by Lab. Code § 6304.5, that the statutes offered by the plaintiff were inadmissible in evidence in a third-party action by an employee (124 Cal. App. 3d 120, 129-131) . In addition, the plaintiff sought to have certain provisions of the city building code introduced into evidence, contending that these building code provisions imposed a statutory duty of care, making the doctrine of negligence per se applicable (124 Cal. App. 3d 120, 131-134) . Although the court conceded that the lower court's exclusion of these provisions may have been erroneous, it noted that under Evid. Code § 669, the following must be shown for the presumption of negligence to apply: (1) the violation; (2) the violation as a proximate cause of the injury; (3) an injury resulting from an occurrence of the nature that the statute was designed to prevent; and (4) the injured party being a member of the class of persons for whose protection the statute was adopted (124 Cal. App. 3d 120, 134) . In this case, the relevant building code provisions were directed to the upkeep of existing safety devices and maintenance of the condition of the building. They did not impose design requirements and did not expand the scope of the landowners' common law duty to invitees. In addition, the provisions required the landowner to maintain a structure in "good workin order." That requirement was not violated by the failure of the owners in this case to install hooks or safety devices, because the focus of the ordinance was on maintenance, not improvement. Because the plaintiff made no showing of unsatisfactory maintenance, the court concluded that a requisite element of negligence per se--the statutory violation--was not established (124 Cal. App. 3d 120, 134) . After determining that the peculiar risk doctrine was not applicable to this case, the court affirmed the lower court's judgment of nonsuit (124 Cal. App. 3d 120, 135-139) .

NOTE:

Effective for injuries occurring on or after January 1, 2000, the legislature has amended Lab. Code § 6304.5 to remove the exception relied on in Salinero that prevented an injured worker from introducing evidence of Cal-OSHA statutes and regulations to create a presumption of negligence under Evid. Code § 669, although the exception still exists in actions against the state alleging that the state took or failed to take actions in its regulatory capacity [Elsner v. Uveges (2004) 34 Cal. 4th 915, 935-939, 22 Cal. Rptr. 3d 530, 102 P.3d 915] .

[b] Insufficient Evidence of Violation

The factual and procedural background of Salinero v. Pon (1981) 124 Cal. App. 3d 120, 177 Cal. Rptr. 204 , is discussed in § 165.80[3][a]. In affirming a judgment of nonsuit against the plaintiff, the court of appeal conceded that although the trial court may have erroneously excluded from evidence certain city building code provisions, the exclusion was not prejudicial (124 Cal. App. 3d 120, 133) . The provisions in question were directed at the upkeep of existing safety devices and maintenance of the condition of the building, but did not impose design requirements. Because the plaintiff failed to make a showing of unsatisfactory maintenance of the building, the court concluded that a requisite element of negligence per se--the statutory violation--had not been established (124 Cal. App. 3d 120, 134) .

[c] Violation Was Not Proximate Cause of Injury

In Blodgett v. B.H. Dyas Co. (1935) 4 Cal. 2d 511, 50 P.2d 801 , the plaintiff fell on a stairway while looking into the defendant's store window. A city ordinance required a hand rail on stairways more than seven feet in width. Because the defendant's stairway did not have a hand rail, the plaintiff contended that the defendant was guilty of negligence as a matter of law. Although the trial court admitted the ordinance into evidence over the defendant's objection, the trial court granted the defendant's motion for nonsuit. The plaintiff appealed.

The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment of nonsuit. The Court noted that the evidence showed that the lack of a hand rail was neither the proximate nor the actual cause of the plaintiff's fall. In addition, the Court stated that even if the defendant was negligent in violating the ordinance, that fact would not preclude the court from finding that the plaintiff was contributorily negligent as a matter of law. The Court held that the undisputed evidence showed that the plaintiff lacked due caution that precluded her right of recovery (4 Cal. 2d 511, 513) .

NOTE:

Under the present doctrine of comparative negligence, the plaintiff's contributory negligence would no longer completely bar her recovery [see Li v. Yellow Cab Co. (1975) 13 Cal. 3d 804, 828-829, 119 Cal. Rptr. 858, 532 P.2d 1226 (replacing bar of contributory negligence with rule of comparative negligence)].

In Roth v. Parker (1997) 57 Cal. App. 4th 542, 67 Cal. Rptr. 2d 250 , the plaintiff was a passenger in a car that failed to stop at a stop sign and was half-way through the intersection when it was broad-sided by a car traveling between 50 and 70 miles per hour. The plaintiff sued the owner and driver of the car in which she was a passenger for the injuries she sustained as a result of the accident. The defendants moved for judgment of nonsuit on the ground that the plaintiff had failed to provide evidence showing that the statutory violation regarding the failure to come to a complete stop at a stop sign was the cause in fact of the accident. The trial court granted the motion.

The appellate court affirmed. It determined that the trial court reasonably could have disbelieved the plaintiff's account of the accident (particularly given her admission that she had consumed five beers before the accident) and concluded that there was insufficient evidence to establish that the accident would not have occurred if the driver had come to a stop at the stop sign. Moreover, even if the trial court had believed the plaintiff's testimony, it still reasonably could have refused to draw any inferences in her favor because there was no testimony about what the driver was able to see, other cars on the road, the number of feet per second the other car was traveling, the distance it traveled, and its path of travel (57 Cal. App. 4th 542, 550) .

In Beaupre v. Nave (1970) 13 Cal. App. 3d 402, 91 Cal. Rptr. 473 , several unrelated plaintiffs sought damages from proprietors of a restaurant for allegedly causing the plaintiffs to contract infectious hepatitis. The defendants' son, a food handler and dishwasher at the restaurant, came down with the disease a short time before most of the plaintiffs became ill. The plaintiffs asserted, among other causes of action, that the defendants' restaurant violated many sanitation regulations and that these violations presumptively established the defendants' negligence. The trial judge entered judgment for the defendants, and the plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. Quoting Green v. Menveg Props., Inc. (1954) 126 Cal. App. 2d 1, 11, 271 P.2d 544 , the court noted that proof of violation of a law does not establish actionable negligence unless there exists a causal connection between the violation and the act that causes injury or, as some courts express it, unless there exists reasonable grounds for a belief that the violation was a proximate cause of the injury. Based on expert testimony concerning the period of incubation for the infections and the rarity of food-transmitted outbreaks, the court of appeal found that the trial court had properly held that the various sanitation violations were not the actual or proximate cause of the plaintiffs' infections (13 Cal. App. 3d 402, 405-406) .

[d] Harm to Plaintiff Was Not Type of Harm Statute Was Designed to Prevent

In Morris v. Horton (1994) 22 Cal. App. 4th 968, 27 Cal. Rptr. 2d 585 , the defendants hired the plaintiff to provide woodwork for buildings they were constructing on their estate. The plaintiff subcontracted the construction of a staircase for the defendants' main residence. Before the woodwork was completed, the defendants ordered the plaintiff off their property and refused to pay for the plaintiff's work. After the plaintiff filed suit to recover his costs, the defendants filed a cross-complaint claiming that the subcontractor was liable to them for reasonable costs of repair for negligently constructing the staircase. The defendants argued that the subcontractor was presumptively negligent because inspection of the staircase revealed building code violations. After a jury rejected this claim, the defendants filed motions for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, a new trial, and to vacate the judgment, all of which the trial court denied. The defendants appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that the defendants, as owners and occupiers of the building in which the staircase was installed, were within the class of persons for whose protection the local building code was adopted. However, the injury they suffered was not one the code was designed to prevent. The code requirements regarding height and width of stairs and handrails were designed to ensure the safety of persons using the staircase, not to prevent property owners from incurring costs associated with removal or repair of building code violations (22 Cal. App. 4th 968, 972) .

The factual and procedural background of Nunneley v. Edgar Hotel (1950) 36 Cal. 2d 493, 225 P.2d 497 , is discussed in § 165.70[3][c]. In Nunneley, the Supreme Court affirmed a judgment for the plaintiff awarding damages for injuries sustained when she fell down a vent shaft after sitting on a parapet that was three inches lower than that required by statute. The Court also held that the statute on which the plaintiff relied was not enacted for the purpose of protecting her from the type of hazard she encountered. The manifest intention of the legislature in specifying a minimum height of 30 inches for the parapet of every vent shaft in the roof of an apartment house or hotel was to protect persons lawfully on the premises from walking or stumbling into the opening. The Court did not believe that the legislation was designed to guard a person from the danger of falling into a shaft by reason of sitting on the parapet (36 Cal. 2d 493, 498) .

[e] Plaintiff Was Not Member of Protected Class

The factual and procedural background of Richards v. Stanley (1954) 43 Cal. 2d 60, 271 P.2d 23 , is discussed in § 165.30[3][b]. In Richards, the Supreme Court affirmed a judgment for the defendants in an action in which the plaintiff was struck by the defendants' car, which was driven by a person who had stolen it. The Court also ruled that a plaintiff may not recover damages based on the violation of a criminal statute or ordinance, unless he or she is one of the class of persons for whose benefit the statute or ordinance was enacted (43 Cal. 2d 60, 62) . In this case, the ordinance expressly stated that it was not enacted for the benefit of persons who might be injured by the operation of stolen automobiles. Therefore, the Court found that evidence of the ordinance was properly excluded as irrelevant (43 Cal. 2d 60, 62-63) . Quoting Routh v. Quinn (1942) 20 Cal. 2d 488, 491, 127 P.2d 1 , the Court stated that it is an elementary principle that an indispensable factor to liability founded on negligence is the existence of a duty of care by the alleged wrongdoer to the person injured, or to a class of which he or she is a member (43 Cal. 2d 60, 63) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Insufficient Evidence of Violation

In Smith v. AC and S, Inc. (1994) 31 Cal. App. 4th 77, 37 Cal. Rptr. 2d 457 , the plaintiff, who had worked as a pipe fitter for 30 years, sued an asbestos insulation contractor, a utility company, and others for negligence and negligence per se resulting in the plaintiff's exposure to asbestos. The utility company was found negligent per se for violation of California industry safety orders that set standards for the prevention of harmful exposure of employees to asbestos dust. The court of appeal reversed on the ground that the utility company was not an employer as defined by the statute. The court noted that it was undisputed that the dust was caused by insulation contractors rather than by the utility company. The plaintiff claimed that the utility company was bound by the safety orders because it took an active role in supervising the various aspects of construction, but the court held that general supervision of an independent contractor's work does not make an owner a statutory employer bound by safety regulations of the Labor Code (31 Cal. App. 4th 77, 91) .

[b] Harm to Plaintiff Was Not Type of Harm Statute Was Designed to Prevent

In Stafford v. United Farm Workers (1983) 33 Cal. 3d 319, 188 Cal. Rptr. 600, 656 P.2d 564 , the Supreme Court reversed a lower court judgment for the plaintiff after a jury trial in a personal injury action against a labor union. The plaintiff, a passing motorist, was injured when her automobile collided with a truck parked by a striking farm worker. A temporary restraining order (TRO) had been issued against the union prior to the accident, prohibiting the union from blocking access to the tomato fields and barring certain violent conduct. The Court held that the TRO was improperly admitted at trial because it was irrelevant and prejudicial. The Court stated that for a statute or ordinance--and by analogy, an injunction or TRO--to be relevant to a determination of a presumption of negligence under Evid. Code § 669, the harm must have been one the statute or order was designed to prevent. Holding that the order was not designed to prevent the type of harm that the plaintiff suffered in this case, the Court stated that even if a violation of the TRO were a contributing cause of the accident, the TRO was designed to prevent labor violence, not automobile collisions (33 Cal. 3d 319, 322-324) .

In Urhausen v. Longs Drug Stores California, Inc. (2007) 155 Cal. App. 4th 254, 65 Cal. Rptr. 3d 838 , plaintiff injured her wrist when she slipped and fell while walking toward a store entrance across an empty disabled access parking space on crutches. While plaintiff could have parked in the disability parking space, she chose not to do so because she was capable of scaling normal curbs while using her crutches. Plaintiff sued the store and shopping mall, arguing that the slope of the disabled parking space and adjacent aisle was greater than permitted by state building codes, and that this regulatory violation constituted negligence per se. The court of appeal disagreed. After reviewing the relevant administrative materials, the court concluded that the building code regulation placing the slope restriction on disability parking spaces and adjacent access lanes was intended to facilitate the transition of disabled persons, particularly those in wheelchairs, from their vehicle to the pavement. As such, it was not designed to prevent an injury to a pedestrian who falls while walking across an unoccupied parking space, even if the injured party happens to also have a disability. Because plaintiff's particular injury was not the type of injury the regulation was designed to prevent, plaintiff could not rely on the negligence per se doctrine to establish liability (155 Cal. App. 4th 254, 268-270) .

The factual and procedural background of Victor v. Hedges (1999) 77 Cal. App. 4th 229, 91 Cal. Rptr. 2d 466 , is discussed in § 165.60[4][a]. Addressing the claim of negligence per se based on a violation of Veh. Code § 22500(f), the court of appeal reviewed the statute and concluded that the particular provision was intended to prevent vehicular obstruction of pedestrian traffic and prevent injuries to pedestrians that might occur if a pedestrian (1) walks around the obstructing vehicle and is injured by another hazard, (2) walks into the obstructing vehicle, or (3) is struck when the vehicle illegally on the sidewalk is put in motion. Because the plaintiff's injury, which was caused when another vehicle struck the parked vehicle, did not come within any of those situations, the trial court correctly ruled that the defendant's violation of the statute could not support the plaintiff's action for negligence per se (77 Cal. App. 4th 229, 238) .

The factual and procedural background of Wawanesa Mut. Ins. Co. v. Matlock (1997) 60 Cal. App. 4th 583, 70 Cal. Rptr. 2d 512 , is discussed in § 165.60[4][a]. The court of appeal held that negligence per se did not apply because the statute at issue was not designed to protect against the kind of harm that occurred. Penal Code § 308, which makes it unlawful to give cigarettes to minors, had nothing to do with fire suppression but was intended to prevent early addiction to tobacco (60 Cal. App. 4th 583, 587) .

[c] Plaintiff Was Not Member of Protected Class

In Ramirez v. Nelson (2008) 44 Cal. 4th 908, 80 Cal. Rptr. 3d 728, 188 P.3d 659 , defendant homeowners hired a landscaping contractor to trim trees in their yard. While working in a tree, an employee of the contractor electrocuted himself, apparently when he brought his polesaw in contact with overhead power lines. Plaintiffs had exercised no control over the way the work was performed, and although plaintiffs had failed to warn the contractor or his employees about the overhead lines, they were clearly visible. The decedent's family brought a wrongful death action against the homeowners. The trial court sent the case to the jury solely on the basis of general negligence, refusing to instruct on negligence per se based on an alleged violation of Pen. Code § 385(b), which makes it a misdemeanor for any person or employee of any person to operate or place any equipment within six feet of a high voltage overhead conductor. The jury found for defendants. The court of appeal reversed, concluding that the trial court erred in refusing to instruct the jury on negligence per se. The California Supreme Court reversed the court of appeal. The Supreme Court concluded that Pen. Code § 385(b) was intended to protect the public at large from an injury caused if an equipment operator severs a power line while in violation of the statute and was not intended to protect against injury to the equipment operator himself. In addition, even assuming that the homeowners could be considered to be the employers of the decedent at the time of the accident, the Court concluded that the statute did not impose any specific duty of care on employers for the protection of their own employees. Thus, the Court held that Pen. Code § 385(b) could not be used under the negligence per se doctrine to impose liability on defendant homeowners and the trial court was correct in refusing to instruct the jury on that theory (44 Cal. 4th 908, 919) .

In Randi W. v. Muroc Joint Unified Sch. Dist. (1997) 14 Cal. 4th 1066, 60 Cal. Rptr. 2d 263, 929 P.2d 582 , a 13-year-old middle school student who had been sexually molested by a school vice principal sued the vice principal's former school district employers for failing to disclose to prospective employers facts that the defendants knew regarding prior charges or complaints of sexual misconduct and impropriety leveled against the vice principal. In one count, the plaintiff charged the defendants with negligence per se, based on the breach of their statutory duty under the Child Abuse Reporting Act (Penal Code § 11166(a)) to report to the authorities the various incidents of sexual misconduct involving the vice principal, of which they had knowledge. The court of appeal concluded that the complaint stated a cause of action for negligence per se. The Supreme Court held that it was unnecessary to decide whether the complaint's allegations were sufficient to allege that the defendants knew or suspected reportable child abuse, because the plaintiff was not a member of the class for whose protection the Reporting Act was enacted. The statutory duty to report protects children in the custodial care of the person charged with reporting the abuse. However, the plaintiff, who attended school in another school district, was never in the defendants' custodial care (14 Cal. 4th 1066, 1087) .

NOTE:

The court of appeal held in a 2009 case that the amendments to the Child Abuse and Neglect Reporting Act, Pen. Code § 11164 et seq., made in 2000 did not abrogate the holding reached by the Supreme Court in Randi W. v. Muroc Joint Unified School Dist., thus reaffirming the principle that a school district that fails to report suspected sexual abuse committed by an employee cannot be held liable for abuse committed by that employee while working for a subsequent employer [P.S. v. San Bernardino City Unified School Dist. (2009) 174 Cal. App. 4th 953, 964-965, 94 Cal. Rptr. 3d 788].

The factual and procedural background of Stafford v. United Farm Workers (1983) 33 Cal. 3d 319, 188 Cal. Rptr. 600, 656 P.2d 564 , is discussed in § 165.80[4][b]. In Stafford, the Supreme Court held that even if a violation of the TRO were a contributing cause of the accident that injured the plaintiff, the plaintiff was not a member of the class that the TRO was designed to protect. The Court held that the TRO was designed to protect only the class of tomato growers and those with whom they did business, not passing motorists such as the plaintiff (33 Cal. 3d 319, 324) .

In Spates v. Dameron Hosp. Ass'n (2003) 114 Cal. App. 4th 208, 7 Cal. Rptr. 3d 597 , a hospital had custody of a patient who died after being brought to the hospital by a nursing home. The hospital turned the decedent's remains over to the coroner for disposition after attempting unsuccessfully to contact the decedent's daughter, who had been to the hospital only once, nine months earlier, when the decedent had also been brought to the hospital by the nursing home. When the daughter found out about the decedent's death and cremation, she sued the hospital for negligent infliction of emotional distress for failing to locate her so that she could dispose of the decedent's remains properly. The court of appeal concluded, first, that the brief contact the daughter had with the hospital nine months earlier did not establish a relationship between the two sufficient to impose a duty on the hospital that ran to the plaintiff (114 Cal. App. 4th 208, 215) . Second, the court held that Health & Safety Code § 7104, which imposes a duty of interment on the coroner if no other accommodations for interment of a decedent have been made and the duty of interment has not devolved to another person who can be located with reasonable diligence within the state, does not impose a duty on the person having custody of the remains of a decedent that is enforceable in tort by persons who in fact have the right of interment of those remains. The court held that Health & Safety Code § 7104 creates a condition of last resort with respect to the expense of interment of an unclaimed decedent and was designed to protect the county treasury, not the family members of the decedent (114 Cal. App. 4th 208, 219) .

In Selger v. Steven Bros., Inc. (1990) 222 Cal. App. 3d 1585, 272 Cal. Rptr. 544 , the plaintiff slipped and fell on dog feces on the sidewalk abutting a shop owner's property and brought an action against the shop owner. At trial, the jury found against the defendant by special verdict, on the grounds that the defendant had violated city ordinances requiring abutting landowners to keep the city sidewalk clean and clear of waste or refuse, and that this violation constituted negligence per se (222 Cal. App. 3d 1585, 1588) . The defendant appealed, and the court of appeal reversed. The presumption of negligence does not arise under Evid. Code § 669(a)(4) unless the person suffering injury was one of the class of persons for whose protection the statute was adopted. An ordinance requiring the abutting landowner to maintain the sidewalk creates a duty of care to third persons only if the ordinance clearly and unambiguously so provides (222 Cal. App. 3d 1585, 1590) . The court reviewed the relevant ordinances and concluded that although the ordinances imposed a duty on the defendant to keep the sidewalk in a clean and wholesome condition, that duty was owed to the city, enforceable through criminal punishment, nuisance abatement, or the assessment procedures under the Streets and Highways Code (222 Cal. App. 3d 1585, 1591) . The court emphasized that the defendant did not affirmatively create the hazard on which the plaintiff slipped, distinguishing a number of cases imposing liability on shop owners who were the source of the hazard (222 Cal. App. 3d 1585, 1592) .

In Hosking v. San Pedro Marine, Inc. (1979) 98 Cal. App. 3d 98, 159 Cal. Rptr. 369 , the plaintiff, who was injured in an automobile collision with a truck, sued the company that owned the truck and the thief that stole the truck. The court of appeal affirmed judgment for the owner (the thief was not involved in the appeal). The court noted that the defendant's violation of Veh. Code § 22515 (requiring that unattended vehicles have their motors stopped and brakes set) did not proximately cause the plaintiff's injury and was not the kind of harm that the statute was designed to prevent. Moreover, the plaintiff was not in the class of persons for whose protection this law was enacted. The harm that the statute was designed to prevent is that resulting from runaway vehicles, rather than that resulting from thefts. The court found that the plaintiff was not the victim of a runaway vehicle, but of an irresponsible thief seeking to avoid capture by the authorities (98 Cal. App. 3d 98, 102) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
B. Duty
3. Breach of Statutory Duty

16-165 California Points & Authorities § 165.81

§ 165.81 Defendant Rebutted Presumption of Negligence Under Evidence Code § 669

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief].

DEFENDANT HAS REBUTTED THE PRESUMPTION OF NEGLIGENCE SET FORTH IN SECTION 669 OF THE EVIDENCE CODE IN THAT DEFENDANT HAS PRESENTED SUFFICIENT PROOF THAT DEFENDANT ACTED AS MIGHT BE REASONABLY EXPECTED OF A PERSON OF ORDINARY PRUDENCE ACTING UNDER SIMILAR CIRCUMSTANCES, WHO DESIRED TO COMPLY WITH THE LAW.

Defendant Acted Reasonably Under Circumstances. The presumption of a failure to exercise due care is rebutted by proof that the person violating the statute, ordinance, or regulation did what might reasonably be expected of a person of ordinary prudence acting under similar circumstances, who desired to comply with the law (Evid. Code § 669(b)(1); see Alarid v. Vanier (1958) 50 Cal. 2d 617, 624, 327 P.2d 897).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that the defendant has rebutted the presumption of negligence under Evid. Code § 669(a) [see Evid. Code § 669(b)].

This issue may arise in several procedural contexts. For example, the defendant may raise the issue on an appeal from an adverse judgment, if the issue on appeal is the propriety of a jury instruction regarding the statutory violation [see, e.g., Alarid v. Vanier (1958) 50 Cal. 2d 617, 620, 327 P.2d 897] , or in support of a motion for nonsuit [see, e.g., Salinero v. Pon (1981) 124 Cal. App. 3d 120, 126, 177 Cal. Rptr. 204] .

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should discuss how the defendant has sustained the burden of showing that he or she did what would reasonably be expected of a person with ordinary prudence under similar circumstances [see Alarid v. Vanier (1958) 50 Cal. 2d 617, 624, 327 P.2d 897] .

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For related legal background, research and procedural guides, and a form of complaint with respect to negligence based on violation of statute, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities in § 165.70 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose the points and authorities in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Defendant Acted Reasonably Under Circumstances

In Alarid v. Vanier (1958) 50 Cal. 2d 617, 327 P.2d 897 , the plaintiff's car was struck by that of the defendant. The defendant attempted to apply his brakes, but they did not work. A presumption of negligence arose at trial by reason of the defendant's operation of a vehicle without brakes, which was in violation of former Veh. Code §§ 670 and 679. After judgment was granted for the defendant, the plaintiff appealed, contending that the judgment was contrary to the evidence and that certain jury instructions were improper.

The Supreme Court affirmed, finding that the defendant produced sufficient evidence to rebut the presumption of negligence that arose when the defendant violated the statute. The Court stated that the correct test to apply is whether or not the person violating the statute has sustained the burden of showing that he or she did what might reasonably be expected of a person of ordinary prudence (50 Cal. 2d 617, 624) . It appeared to the Court that the evidence was sufficient to go to the jury on the question whether or not the defendant acted as an ordinary prudent person who wished to comply with the statutory requirements regarding brakes. The evidence showed that the defendant had the car checked frequently and had no reason to suspect that the brakes would not be operational (50 Cal. 2d 617, 624) . The evidence was uncontradicted and amply sufficient to show that prior to the accident, the defendant took reasonable precautions to see that his brakes were in good working condition. The Court concluded that under the circumstances there had been no miscarriage of justice (50 Cal. 2d 617, 625) .

NOTE:

Although this case was decided prior to the enactment of Evid. Code § 669 in 1967, subsequent cases continued to hold that the presumption of negligence that arises from the violation of a statute is rebuttable and may be overcome by evidence of justification [see Byrne v. City & County of San Francisco (1980) 113 Cal. App. 3d 731, 740, 170 Cal. Rptr. 302] .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Defendant Acted Reasonably Under Circumstances

In Byrne v. City & County of San Francisco (1980) 113 Cal. App. 3d 731, 170 Cal. Rptr. 302 , the court of appeal affirmed judgment for the defendants in an action in which the plaintiff was struck by the defendant's car. The plaintiff contended that a new trial should be granted in that the evidence established negligence per se because the defendants violated Veh. Code § 21950, setting forth the reciprocal duties of motorists and pedestrians when a pedestrian crosses the street within either a marked or unmarked crosswalk. The court noted that in determining if the party has overcome the presumption, the correct test is whether or not the violator of the statute has met the burden of showing that he or she did what might be expected of a person of ordinary prudence who desired to comply with the law, acting under similar circumstances). In this case, the court held that although the defendant violated the statute by striking the plaintiff in the crosswalk, that conduct was justified under the circumstances (113 Cal. App. 3d 731, 740-741) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
B. Duty
3. Breach of Statutory Duty

16-165 California Points & Authorities § 165.82

§ 165.82 Defendant's Compliance With Statute Met Standard of Care

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief].

DEFENDANT DID NOT BREACH HIS/HER/ITS DUTY TO PLAINTIFF BECAUSE DEFENDANT COMPLIED FULLY WITH THE PROVISIONS OF THE _____ [STATUTE or ORDINANCE or REGULATION] PRESCRIBING THE STANDARD OF CARE REQUIRED OF DEFENDANT.

Statutory Compliance Met Standard of Care. In the ordinary situation contemplated by a statute or administrative rule, the minimum standard prescribed by the legislation or regulation may be accepted as a sufficient standard of care, and the defendant's compliance with that standard may establish that no breach of duty occurred (Ramirez v. Plough, Inc. (1993) 6 Cal. 4th 539, 547-548, 25 Cal. Rptr. 2d 97, 863 P.2d 167).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that the defendant fully complied with the provisions of a statute, ordinance, or regulation that prescribed the standard of care owed by the defendant to the plaintiff [see Ramirez v. Plough, Inc. (1993) 6 Cal. 4th 539, 547-548, 25 Cal. Rptr. 2d 97, 863 P.2d 167] .

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should discuss the particular statute, ordinance, or regulation, and how the defendant's conduct fully complied with its provisions.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For related legal background, research and procedural guides, and a form of complaint with respect to negligence based on violation of statute, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities in § 165.70 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose the points and authorities in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Statutory Compliance Met Standard of Care

In Ramirez v. Plough, Inc. (1993) 6 Cal. 4th 539, 25 Cal. Rptr. 2d 97, 863 P.2d 167 , the plaintiff's mother, who was literate only in Spanish, gave him a children's aspirin manufactured by the defendant. The aspirin's label warned users in English not to administer it to children without consulting a doctor because of the possibility of contracting Reye's Syndrome. These warnings fully complied with both California and federal statutes and regulations governing the labeling of nonprescription drugs. The plaintiff subsequently developed Reye's Syndrome, which left him severely disabled. The plaintiff, by and through his mother as guardian ad litem, sued the defendant for negligence on the ground that the defendant failed to warn that its aspirin could cause Reye's Syndrome. The defendant moved for summary judgment on the ground that its English language label warnings were adequate. The trial court granted the defendant's motion, holding that the defendant had no duty to supply warnings in a foreign language. The plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, ruling that the adequacy of a product warning is normally a question of fact, and that the defendant's knowledge that persons literate only in Spanish were using its aspirin made the reasonableness of the defendant's failure to provide warning labels in Spanish a triable issue of fact. The defendant sought review by the California Supreme Court.

The Supreme Court reversed the judgment of the court of appeal and ordered it to affirm the trial court's summary judgment for the defendant. Before the Supreme Court, the defendant argued that state and federal statutes and regulations controlling the packaging and labeling of nonprescription drugs, which require warning labels only in English, have prescribed the standard of care that the defendant owes the plaintiffs and other users of its products. Having complied fully with these statutory and regulatory requirements, the defendant contended it had met its duty and was therefore not negligent. The Court acknowledged that statutory compliance as a defense to tort liability is uncommon and not generally favored. The Court nevertheless held that in the ordinary situation contemplated by the statute or regulation and in the absence of unusual circumstances, compliance with the minimum standard of care prescribed by the statute or regulation may be sufficient to establish that no breach of duty occurred (6 Cal. 4th 539, 547-548) . The Court pointed out that defining when warnings or other information must be in a language other than English is a task for which legislative and administrative bodies are particularly well suited, because of their ability to investigate, gather data, and consider the viewpoints of all affected parties. If the Court rejected the statutes and regulations at issue in this case as the proper standard of care, it would have to choose between two alternatives: (1) resolving the question of non-English warning labels on a case-by-case basis under the usual reasonable person standard of care; or (2) judicially declaring a particular standard of care. The Court noted that the first alternative would probably compel manufacturers such as the defendant to supply warning in multiple foreign languages because it is foreseeable that someone proficient only in a particular foreign language will eventually purchase a particular nonprescription drug. The burden on manufacturers wold be onerous and possibly counterproductive by resulting in product inserts so large that a user could not easily find the warning in the user's language. The Court noted that, unlike legislative and administrative bodies, it lacked the procedure and resources to choose the second alternative (6 Cal. 4th 539, 552-553) . The court therefore concluded that the prudent course was to adopt for tort purposes the existing legislative and administrative standard of care (6 Cal. 4th 539, 553) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
B. Duty
3. Breach of Statutory Duty

16-165 California Points & Authorities §§ 165.83-165.89

[Reserved]

§§ 165.83[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
B. Duty
4. Public Policy

16-165 California Points & Authorities § 165.90

§ 165.90 Public Policy Precludes Imposition of Duty

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief].

A DUTY SHOULD NOT BE IMPOSED ON DEFENDANT BECAUSE THE IMPOSITION OF A DUTY IN THIS CASE WOULD CONTRAVENE PUBLIC POLICY IN THAT _____ [describe].

A. Public Policy Considerations Warrant Nonliability for Negligence. Judicial recognition of a duty on the part of a defendant is initially dictated or precluded by considerations of public policy, and public policy considerations as exceptional factors might alone warrant nonliability for negligence (Peter W. v. San Francisco Unified Sch. Dist. (1976) 60 Cal. App. 3d 814, 822, 131 Cal. Rptr. 854 ; see Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 Cal. 2d 108, 112-113, 70 Cal. Rptr. 97, 443 P.2d 561).

B. Policy Factors Considered in Scope of Duty Determination. [See § 165.30, Paragraph D.]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that the imposition of a duty on the defendant would contravene public policy. It may be combined with the form in § 165.91, if applicable to the particular case.

This issue may arise in any of several procedural situations, including on demurrer or summary judgment [see, e.g., Peter W. v. San Francisco Unified Sch. Dist. (1976) 60 Cal. App. 3d 814, 817, 131 Cal. Rptr. 854 (demurrer); see also Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 Cal. 2d 108, 110, 70 Cal. Rptr. 97, 443 P.2d 561 (summary judgment)].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should discuss the negligent conduct allegedly involved in the action in light of various public policy considerations and should argue that these considerations preclude the imposition of a duty on the defendant in the action.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For related legal background, research and procedural guides, and forms of complaints and answers regarding a cause of action for negligence, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For additional points and authorities to combine with this form, see § 165.91. For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Public Policy Considerations Warrant Nonliability for Negligence

The factual and procedural background of Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 Cal. 2d 108, 70 Cal. Rptr. 97, 443 P.2d 561 , is discussed in § 165.30[3][d]. In reversing a summary judgment for the defendant in an action involving damages for personal injuries caused by a defective bathroom faucet, the Supreme Court noted that all persons are required to use ordinary care to prevent others from being injured as a result of their conduct. The Court stated, however, that there are exceptions to this general principle that are based on public policy considerations (69 Cal. 2d 108, 112) . The major policy considerations are: the foreseeability of harm to the plaintiff; the degree of certainty that the plaintiff suffered injury; the closeness of the connection between the defendant's conduct and the injury suffered; the moral blame attached to the defendant's conduct; the policy of preventing future harm; the extent of the burden to the defendant and consequences to the community of imposing a duty to exercise care with resulting liability for breach; and the availability, cost, and prevalence of insurance for the risk involved (69 Cal. 2d 108, 112-113) .

Peter W. v. San Francisco Unified Sch. Dist. (1976) 60 Cal. App. 3d 814, 131 Cal. Rptr. 854 , was an action by a high school graduate against a public school district and its administrative board for negligently failing to educate him properly and for negligently or intentionally misrepresenting his progress to his mother. The trial court granted the defendants' general demurrer with leave to amend and dismissed the action when the plaintiff failed to amend. The plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the dismissal, stating that for public policy reasons, the defendants did not owe a duty of care to the plaintiff (60 Cal. App. 3d 814, 821-822) . Citing Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 Cal. 2d 108, 112, 70 Cal. Rptr. 97, 443 P.2d 561 [see § 165.30[3][d]], the court noted that the Supreme Court has defined various public policy considerations as exceptional factors that might alone warrant nonliability for negligence. Liability flows from the fundamental principle that all persons are required to use ordinary care to prevent others from being injured as the result of their conduct, unless a departure from this rule is clearly supported by public policy (60 Cal. App. 3d 814, 822-823) . In this case, the court felt that educational institutions should not be held to an actionable duty of care because that would expose them to tort claims of disaffected students and parents in countless numbers. Considering the role imposed on the public schools by the law and the limitations imposed on them by publicly supported budgets, the court found no such duty on the part of the school to properly provide the plaintiff with adequate instruction (60 Cal. App. 3d 814, 825) . The court also held, on the basis of public policy considerations, that the plaintiff's complaint stated no cause of action for negligent misrepresentation (60 Cal. App. 3d 814, 827) . After examining the other counts presented by the plaintiff, the court affirmed the judgment (60 Cal. App. 3d 814, 827-828) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Public Policy Considerations Warrant Nonliability for Negligence

In Rice v. Center Point, Inc. (2007) 154 Cal. App. 4th 949, 65 Cal. Rptr. 3d 312 , plaintiffs were attacked and injured in a park by inmates who had escaped from a nearby residential substance abuse treatment facility. The inmates had been assigned to the facility by the Department of Corrections and they escaped at night through a window with a steak knife that they stole from the facility kitchen. The court of appeal held that the facility owed no legal duty to the neighborhood residents who were injured by the escaped inmates, even if the treatment facility was negligent in allowing the inmates to escape. Relying on earlier court of appeal decisions that had reached a similar conclusion, the court held that the imposition of a duty in such circumstances was outweighed by the public policy of encouraging the rehabilitation of criminal offenders, the lack or foreseeability of injury to any specifically identifiable individual, and the fact that the risk of injury was shared by all members of the general public (154 Cal. App. 4th 949, 958-959) .

In Munoz v. City of Union City (2004) 120 Cal. App. 4th 1077, 16 Cal. Rptr. 3d 521 , family members of a decedent brought a lawsuit against the police officer who shot and killed the decedent, as well as against the agency and city employing the officer. The officer was in charge of a police response to a call that brought several officers to the decedent's residence when she was high on methamphetamine and armed with two knives. She was contained in her residence, but appeared very agitated, and she was convinced that someone was trying to hurt her. The police feared for the safety of the decedent's daughter and father, who were also in the house, although the decedent had made no threats toward them. The police stationed outside the house tried to talk to the decedent and calm her, with little success. When the decedent, who until then had been standing by the open front door, made a slight move in the direction in which her daughter and father had gone, the officer shot and killed her. The jury found in favor of the plaintiffs, but the court of appeal reversed in part. The court held that the trial court erred in allowing the jury to impose liability based on the alleged negligence of the officer when making tactical decisions after arriving on the scene, but prior to the shooting. Under the court's earlier analysis in Adams v. City of Fremont (1998) 68 Cal. App. 4th 243, 80 Cal. Rptr. 2d 196 , discussed in § 165.60[4][b], public policy precluded holding the agency and city liable for the officer's alleged negligence in making tactical decisions during a crisis situation if those decisions proved to be ineffective in preventing harm. Therefore, liability could not be predicated on the officer's alleged negligence in deciding how to deploy the other officers at the scene, or otherwise in handling the attempt to defuse the situation (120 Cal. App. 4th 1077, 1097-1098) . However, under traditional legal principles, the officer could be liable, and his employers vicariously liable, for the officer's unreasonable use of deadly force. The court then concluded that substantial evidence supported the jury's finding that the use of deadly force was unreasonable under the circumstances (120 Cal. App. 4th 1077, 1099-1105) . The court also reversed a finding that the agency and city could be directly liable for their own negligence in failing to promulgate better police procedures or properly train or supervise their officers, because imposing direct liability on a public entity required a specific statutory authority, and no such authority existed for imposing liability under the theories advanced by the plaintiffs (120 Cal. App. 4th 1077, 1111-1114) .

The factual and procedural background of Adams v. City of Fremont (1998) 68 Cal. App. 4th 243, 80 Cal. Rptr. 2d 196 , is discussed in § 165.60[4][b]. In Adams, the court found that a duty of care could not be imposed under the circumstances through weighing of the Rowland factors, largely due to policy concerns for the safety of the police and third parties. The court also declined to impose a duty of care on the ground that a "special relationship" had been forged between the police and the decedent, creating a duty on the part of the police to exercise reasonable care to prevent decedent's suicide. In reaching this conclusion, the court noted that the same policy concerns that weigh against the imposition of a legal duty of care under a Rowland analysis may also weigh against imposition of a duty under the "special relationship" doctrine (68 Cal. App. 4th 243, 285) .

In White v. Southern Cal. Edison Co. (1994) 25 Cal. App. 4th 442, 30 Cal. Rptr. 2d 431 , the moped driven by the plaintiff collided with a van at an intersection after dark. The plaintiff claimed that the street lights at the intersection were not functioning adequately and did not sufficiently illuminate the intersection, which diminished the plaintiff's ability to see other vehicles in the intersection. The plaintiff filed suit against the defendant, which owned and maintained the street lights under a contract with the County of Los Angeles. The trial court granted summary judgment to the defendant, holding that the defendant had no duty to the plaintiff to maintain the street lights in an operable condition. The plaintiff appealed. The court of appeal affirmed, observing that no California court had yet decided the precise issue in this case, but several out-of-state courts had held that a utility company's duty to supply street lighting extended only to the public entity with which it had contracted and not to the general public. In agreeing with these courts, the court held that imposing liability would create a burden on the utility by increasing utility costs and disrupting existing rate schedules. This burden would far outweigh any benefit to the motoring public, because the use of headlights makes it unlikely that an inoperable street light would be a substantial factor in causing a collision and because insurance is available to cover the resulting damages (25 Cal. App. 4th 442, 450-451) .

The factual and procedural background of Koepke v. Loo (1993) 18 Cal. App. 4th 1444, 23 Cal. Rptr. 2d 34 , is discussed in § 165.10[3][a]. In Koepke, the court of appeal held that strong public policy favors the encouragement of voluntary acts of assistance by not imposing undefined and indefinite additional obligations as a consequence of volunteering (18 Cal. App. 4th 1444, 1457) . The court noted that this case essentially involved a domestic dispute and held that society particularly favors attempts to help in these types of disputes because they are commonplace and often lead to violence. Therefore, imposing a continuing duty to warn and protect would contravene that policy by dissuading friends and associates from any attempt at assisting the parties involved (18 Cal. App. 4th 1444, 1458) .

In Jordy v. County of Humboldt (1992) 11 Cal. App. 4th 735, 14 Cal. Rptr. 2d 553 , an adolescent sued for damages for injuries suffered while in the care of a foster family where he had been placed by a county social worker after being removed from the custody of his natural parents. He alleged that the county was liable because, having removed him from the custody of his natural parents, it owed a duty of care to him that it could not delegate to foster parents. The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's order of a new trial following a jury verdict for the plaintiff. The court held that a public agency may delegate the responsibility for children removed from their parents to foster parents and others without fear that it will be liable for injury proximately caused by occasional negligence in the day-to-day supervision of the children. The court stated that a contrary result would impose such a burden on the already difficult administration of juvenile law that any benefit to individual minors would be far outweighed by the damage to the greater number (11 Cal. App. 4th 735, 741-742) .

In Allen v. Toten (1985) 172 Cal. App. 3d 1079, 218 Cal. Rptr. 725 , the court of appeal refused to hold police officers or a public entity liable for negligent infliction of emotional distress to a family member who was brought to the scene of a police standoff to aid in the surrender of an armed and suicidal relative. The court stated that police officers, as a matter of public policy, have no duty to prevent the family member from witnessing what is obvious, potential, and inherent in all such crises. Instead, it is the duty of the family member to weigh the risks of emotional trauma against the benefit of saving the life of a loved one, and, after weighing these risks, the family member, unlike the police, may decline to go to the scene (172 Cal. App. 3d 342, 1091) .

The factual and procedural background of Beauchene v. Synanon Found., Inc. (1979) 88 Cal. App. 3d 342, 151 Cal. Rptr. 796 , is discussed in § 165.20[4][a]. In Beauchene, the court of appeal affirmed a demurrer to the plaintiff's complaint in an action in which a convicted criminal escaped from a rehabilitation facility operated by the defendant and harmed the plaintiff. The court listed various policy considerations that must be considered in determining whether or not the defendant owes a duty to the plaintiff. In this action, the court stated that it must balance the public interest in safety from violent assault against the public policy favoring innovative private criminal release and rehabilitation programs (88 Cal. App. 3d 342, 347) . In weighing these considerations, the court concluded that the defendant owed no legal duty to the plaintiff (88 Cal. App. 3d 342, 348) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
B. Duty
4. Public Policy

16-165 California Points & Authorities § 165.91

§ 165.91 Social Utility of Defendant's Conduct Militates Against Imposing Duty

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief].

DEFENDANT DOES NOT OWE PLAINTIFF A DUTY OF CARE BECAUSE THE OPERATION OF DEFENDANT'S _____ [describe machine or apparatus] IS SOCIALLY BENEFICIAL AND THAT _____ [describe machine or apparatus] WAS BEING PROPERLY USED IN THE MANNER FOR WHICH IT WAS DESIGNED.

Social Utility of Defendant's Conduct. The social utility of a socially beneficial machine or apparatus that is properly used in the manner for which it was designed, may preclude the imposition of a duty on the owner of the machine or apparatus (Parsons v. Crown Disposal Co. (1997) 15 Cal. 4th 456, 474, 63 Cal. Rptr. 2d 291, 936 P.2d 70).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a defendant does not owe a duty of care to the plaintiff because the operation of the defendant's machine or apparatus was socially beneficial [see Parsons v. Crown Disposal Co. (1997) 15 Cal. 4th 456, 474, 63 Cal. Rptr. 2d 291, 936 P.2d 70 (injury to a horseback rider when horse was frightened by garbage truck)]. It should be combined with the form in § 165.90, if applicable to the particular case.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel may argue that the defendant's machine or apparatus is socially beneficial, for specified reasons relating to the performance of vital public service and a matter of high social utility. Counsel may also argue that to impose restrictions suggested by the plaintiff would be unduly burdensome to the defendant in light of the social utility of the purpose of the machine or apparatus.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For related legal background, research and procedural guides, and forms of answers regarding a cause of action for negligence, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For additional points and authorities to combine with this form, see § 165.90. For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Social Utility of Defendant's Conduct

The factual and procedural background of Parsons v. Crown Disposal Co. (1997) 15 Cal. 4th 456, 476, 63 Cal. Rptr. 2d 291, 936 P.2d 70 , is discussed in § 165.60[3][b]. The Supreme Court ruled that the court of appeal erred in reversing the trial court judgment in favor of the defendant, a garbage company. Noise from the defendant's garbage truck, which was being operated in its usual manner, frightened a horse being ridden by the plaintiff on a nearby trail. Public policy reasons, the social utility of the defendant's conduct in particular, precluded the imposition of a duty on the defendant. The court's analysis began with early cases which stood for the proposition that, as a matter of policy, there is no liability for fright to a horse and consequent damages arising therefrom if all the plaintiff can point to is that a socially beneficial machine or apparatus was properly used in the manner for which it was designed. According to the Court, nothing involved in this social utility analysis has changed to direct a different result. If anything, given the declining relative importance of horses in contemporary society, the court held that the defendant's position had strengthened. The court found that the defendant's garbage collection activity was a vital public service and a matter of high social utility and that there was no basis for treating a garbage truck differently from the various machines and devices discussed in those early cases, nor was there any reason for increasing the burden on machine operators over what was considered reasonable in an earlier age, when horse riding was more than a mere recreational activity. The Court rejected the plaintiff's argument that the defendant might have guarded against his injuries by employing various preventative measures--for example, by changing the hours of collection, temporarily blocking off the area with warning cones or tape, posting warning signs, or providing riders with a schedule of collection times. It ruled that to impose such conditions on the employment of beneficial machines would impair the utility of the devices (15 Cal. 4th 456, 474) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
B. Duty
4. Public Policy

16-165 California Points & Authorities §§ 165.92-165.99

[Reserved]

§§ 165.92[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
B. Duty
5. Duty Arising From Contract

16-165 California Points & Authorities § 165.100

§ 165.100 Defendant Breached Duty Arising From Contract

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief].

DEFENDANT OWED A DUTY TO PLAINTIFF CREATED BY CONTRACT. THE BREACH OF THAT DUTY BY DEFENDANT CREATED A CAUSE OF ACTION BASED ON NEGLIGENCE, [WHICH MAY BE ASSERTED BY PLAINTIFF EVEN THOUGH PLAINTIFF WAS NOT IN PRIVITY OF CONTRACT WITH DEFENDANT].

A. Duty Created by Contract. A contract not only creates certain contractual rights and obligations between the contracting parties that may be enforced through an action on the contract, but may also create duties the breach of which creates a cause of action based on negligence (see Eads v. Marks (1952) 39 Cal. 2d 807, 810-811, 249 P.2d 257).

[Optional] B. Liability to Persons Not in Privity. The determination of whether or not the defendant is liable to a third person not in privity is a matter of policy and involves the balancing of various factors, including (1) the extent to which the transaction was intended to affect the plaintiff, (2) the foreseeability of harm to the plaintiff, (3) the degree of certainty that the plaintiff suffered injury, (4) the closeness of the connection between the defendant's conduct and the injury suffered, (5) the moral blame attached to the defendant's conduct, and (6) the policy of preventing future harm (Christensen v. Superior Court (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 868, 891, 2 Cal. Rptr. 2d 79, 820 P.2d 181 ; Biakanja v. Irving (1958) 49 Cal. 2d 647, 650, 320 P.2d 16).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that the defendant owed a duty to the plaintiff based on a contract and the breach of that duty gave rise to an action for negligence [see, e.g., Eads v. Marks

(1952) 39 Cal. 2d 807, 810-811, 249 P.2d 257] . Optional Paragraph B may be submitted if the plaintiff and the defendant were not in privity of contract.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should discuss the contract involved and show how the duty arises from this contract. If there was no privity of contract between the plaintiff and the defendant, counsel should show how the facts of the case, in light of public policy considerations, warrant the imposition of a duty on the defendant [see Eads v. Marks (1952) 39 Cal. 2d 807, 810-811, 249 P.2d 257 ; see also Biakanja v. Irving (1958) 49 Cal. 2d 647, 650-651, 320 P.2d 16] .

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For related legal background, research and procedural guides, and forms of complaint for negligence, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities in §§ 165.110 -165.111 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose the points and authorities in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Duty Created by Contract

In Eads v. Marks (1952) 39 Cal. 2d 807, 249 P.2d 257 , a two-year-old child was cut by a glass milk bottle that was left on his family's doorstep by an employee of the defendant, a creamery company. The child's father, a customer of the creamery company, had informed its employees not to leave glass containers on the back porch of the family's residence because his child might be injured. The defendant, however, left a milk container on the back porch, which fell and cut the child's face. The defendant demurred to the plaintiffs' complaint. The demurrer was sustained, and judgment was entered in favor of the defendant. The plaintiffs appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed, finding that there was a contract between the father and the defendant and that the child was a third-party beneficiary of this contract. The Court stated that the plaintiffs, the father and child, had a cause of action in tort as well as in contract. Even if there is a contractual relationship between the parties, a cause of action in tort may sometimes arise out of the negligent manner in which the contractual duty is performed or out of a failure to perform that duty (39 Cal. 2d 807, 810) . In this case, the duty of care arose by reason of the contract, and the plaintiffs had sued in tort for the breach of that duty. The Court noted that the contract is of significance only in creating the legal duty and that the negligence of the defendant should not be considered as a breach of contract, but as a tort governed by tort rules (39 Cal. 2d 807, 811) . Although the injury resulted from the independent intervening act of the child, the occurrence was readily foreseeable and should have been anticipated by the defendant (39 Cal. 2d 807, 812) . Because the other points raised by the defendant could have been obviated by amendment, the lower court abused its discretion in sustaining a demurrer without leave to amend (39 Cal. 2d 807, 812-813) .

[b] Liability to Persons Not In Privity

In Christensen v. Superior Court (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 868, 2 Cal. Rptr. 2d 79, 820 P.2d 181 , surviving spouses, relatives, and designated representatives of several decedents whose remains had been mishandled brought actions against a mortuary and crematory, seeking recovery of damages for emotional distress. The trial court ordered that only the plaintiffs entitled under Health & Safety Code § 7100 to control the disposition of the decedents' remains, or those who actually contracted for the disposition, had standing to sue. The other plaintiffs petitioned for writ of mandate. The court of appeal treated the ruling as one in the nature of a ruling on a demurrer and considered whether the allegations stated a cause of action for which each plaintiff could recover emotional distress damages. After issuance of an alternative writ, the court of appeal directed that a peremptory writ issue to compel the trial court to modify its order to recognize the standing of additional plaintiffs.

The Supreme Court modified the judgment of the court of appeal to direct the superior court to conform its order on standing to sue to reflect the views expressed in the Court's opinion. The specific issue was whether persons other than those who contract for the services of mortuaries and crematoria or who have a statutory right to direct the disposition of the body of a decedent may recover damages for emotional distress engendered by knowledge of the negligent or intentional mishandling of the decedent's remains, if they did not observe the misconduct or its consequences. The Court reiterated the principle that to recover for negligence, the potential plaintiff must be a person to whom the defendant owes a duty recognized by the law (54 Cal. 3d 868, 876) . The Court found that the defendants assumed a duty to the close relatives of the decedents for whose benefit they were to provide funeral and or related services, under which they created a special relationship obligating them to perform those services in the dignified and respectful manner the bereaved expect of mortuary and crematory operators (54 Cal. 3d 868, 890-891) .

Citing Biakanja v. Irving (1958) 49 Cal. 2d 647, 320 P.2d 16 , which held that a notary who negligently prepared a will had assumed and breached a duty to an intended beneficiary, the Court stated that tort recovery for breach of a duty arising out of a third-party contract is consistent with well-established California precedent. The Court quoted Biakanja, stating that the determination whether in a specific case the defendant is liable to a third person not in privity is a matter of policy involved the balance of various factors, including (1) the extent to which the transaction was intended to affect the plaintiff, (2) the foreseeability of harm to the plaintiff, (3) the degree of certainty that the plaintiff suffered injury, (4) the closeness of the connection between the defendant's conduct and the injury suffered, (5) the moral blame attached to the defendant's conduct, and (6) the policy of preventing future harm. The Court concluded that in this case, as in Biakanja, a benefit to the plaintiff was the purpose of the contract. The damage was foreseeable (54 Cal. 3d 868, 891) .

In Biakanja v. Irving (1958) 49 Cal. 2d 647, 320 P.2d 16 , the plaintiff brought an action for damages against a notary public for drawing an invalid will for the plaintiff's brother. The will, which devised and bequeathed all of the decedent's property to the plaintiff, was denied probate for lack of sufficient attestation. The court entered judgment for the plaintiff, and the defendant appealed.

The Supreme Court affirmed. The principal question was whether or not the defendant was under a duty to exercise due care to protect the plaintiff from injury and was liable for damages caused to the plaintiff by the defendant's negligence, even though they were not in privity of contract (49 Cal. 2d 647, 648) . The determination of whether or not the defendant is liable to a third person not in privity is a matter of policy involving the balance of various factors, including (1) the extent to which the transaction was intended to affect the plaintiff, (2) the foreseeability of harm to the plaintiff, (3) the degree of certainty that the plaintiff suffered injury, (4) the closeness of the connection between the defendant's conduct and the injury suffered, (5) the moral blame attached to the defendant's conduct, and (6) the policy of preventing future harm (49 Cal. 2d 647, 650) . In this case, the aim of the transaction was to provide for the passing of the decedent's estate to the plaintiff. The Court found that the defendant must have been aware from the terms of the will that if faulty solemnization caused the will to be invalid, the plaintiff would suffer the very loss that occurred (49 Cal. 2d 647, 650) . Because the decedent died without revoking his will, the plaintiff, but for the defendant's negligence, would have received all of his property. The fact that the plaintiff received only one-eighth of the property was directly caused by the defendant's conduct (49 Cal. 2d 647, 650-651) . In addition, the defendant's conduct was not only negligent, but consisted of the unauthorized practice of law. Therefore, the Court concluded that the plaintiff should be allowed recovery despite the absence of privity (49 Cal. 2d 647, 651) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Duty Created by Contract

In National Union Fire Ins. Co. of Pittsburgh, PA v. Cambridge Integrated Services Group, Inc. (2009) 171 Cal. App. 4th 35, 89 Cal. Rptr. 3d 473 , a self-insured bank hired a company to handle workers' compensation claims made by the bank's employees. Despite self-insured status, the bank also had an excess insurer policy that paid workers' compensation claims to the extent they exceeded $250,000. The claims administrator approved surgery for an employee. The employee was severely injured due to the surgery, resulting in a workers' compensation claim of over $1.5 million, for which the excess insurer was liable. The excess insurer sued the claims administration company on the grounds that the employee's claim and request for surgery was wrongly approved due to the negligence of the claims administrator. The trial court sustained the defendant's demurrer, but the court of appeal reversed. The court held that the claims administrator owed a duty of care to the excess insurer under the circumstances of the case, even though the excess insurer was not a party to the administrator's contract with the bank. In reaching this conclusion, the court noted that the contract for claims services was clearly intended to benefit the excess insurer to the same extent that it was to benefit the bank, at least when the claim was likely to reach $250,000 or more; it was clearly foreseeable that the mishandling of such a claim would affect the excess insurer; the administrator's allegedly negligent conduct in approving the claim and the surgery, which directly caused injury to the claimant, could be found by the trier of fact to be a cause of the insurer's loss; negligence in the execution of contractual duties is generally held to be morally blameworthy; and to the extent imposition of liability for breach of contract would prevent future harm, imposition of a tort duty of care that runs to plaintiff would further that purpose as well. The court also noted that imposition of a duty of care would not result in a new or additional duty that did not already exist for the claims administrator, as the administrator already owed a duty to the bank to process claims without negligence (171 Cal. App. 4th 35, 46-47) .

In Stonegate Homeowners Assn. v. Staben (2006) 144 Cal. App. 4th 740, 50 Cal. Rptr. 3d 709 , a homeowners' association brought an action against a general contractor and a subcontractor for damages sustained by the failure to properly waterproof retaining walls and provide adequate drainage on a large residential construction project. The general contractor settled and the action went to trial only against the subcontractor, who had been hired by the general contractor to perform the relevant work. The trial court refused to admit evidence as to whether the subcontractor's work met the standard of care in the industry, concluding that such evidence was irrelevant because the issue was whether the subcontractor performed the work as instructed by the general contractor under their oral contract. In the absence of evidence that the subcontractor was negligent, the trial court granted nonsuit for the subcontractor. The court of appeal reversed. The court noted that despite the lack of privity of contract, it is clearly established that a subcontractor on a construction project can be held liable in negligence to the party who hires the general contractor if the subcontractor's work is not performed in a good and workmanlike manner. The subcontractor had agreed to perform the waterproofing and drainage work, owed a duty to perform that work in a good and workmanlike manner, and the excluded evidence was relevant to establishing whether the subcontractor's work on the project fell below the applicable standard of care (144 Cal. App. 4th 740, 748-749) .

In North Am. Chem. Co. v. Superior Court (1997) 59 Cal. App. 4th 764, 69 Cal. Rptr. 2d 466 , the plaintiff sued the defendant for negligence, seeking to recover money it paid as damages in settlement of a customer's claim that arose from a contaminated product packaged and shipped for the plaintiff by the defendant. The defendant demurred to the negligence cause of action, contending that it was liable, if at all, only for breach of contract. The trial court sustained the defendant's demurrer without leave to amend, and the plaintiff sought a writ of mandate to compel the restoration of the negligence action. The court of appeal issued a peremptory writ directing the trial court to vacate its order sustaining the demurrer to the negligence cause of action and enter a new order sustaining the demurrer with leave to amend. It held that the plaintiff's packaging and shipping contract with the defendant imposed a duty on the defendant that required it to perform its contractual obligations reasonably and carefully. The plaintiff alleged sufficient facts to demonstrate that the defendant failed to do so (59 Cal. App. 4th 764, 776, 787) .

In Bloomberg v. Interinsurance Exch. (1984) 162 Cal. App. 3d 571, 207 Cal. Rptr. 853 , the plaintiff alleged that his son was killed when he was struck by a car driven by a drunk driver after the defendant, an automobile club, negligently failed to send a tow truck. On appeal from a judgment of dismissal entered on the sustaining of a demurrer without leave to amend, the threshold question was whether the defendant owed a duty of care to the plaintiff's son. The allegations of the complaint in relation to the defendant sounded in a negligent performance of contract theory. The defendant's demurrer did not deny the existence of a contractual duty, but instead argued that the defendant did not contribute to the accident. The court stated that although the plaintiff's ability to go forward on a contractual theory would depend on the wording of the contract (which was not before the court of appeal), the plaintiff should be given the opportunity to amend his complaint to state a cause of action, solely or alternatively, that describes a negligent undertaking (162 Cal. App. 3d 571, 576) . Therefore, the trial court erred in holding that the defendant could not, as a matter of law, be held liable for the death of the plaintiff's son (162 Cal. App. 3d 571, 577) .

[b] Liability to Persons Not in Privity

In Mintz v. Blue Cross of California (2009) 172 Cal. App. 4th 1594, 92 Cal. Rptr. 3d 422 , plaintiff was denied coverage for an experimental cancer treatment by the third-party administrator for plaintiff's health insurance plan. The administrator advised plaintiff of the right to internal review of that decision, but failed to notify of the right to request an independent external review as required by statute. In addition, the health plan itself stated that a member would be advised of the right to external review when the denial of services triggered such a right. Plaintiff sued the third-party administrator for intentional interference with contract, reckless infliction of emotional distress, and negligence. The trial court sustained defendant's demurrer on all causes of action, but the court of appeal reversed on the negligence cause of action, concluding that the administrator owed a duty of care to plan members despite lack of privity of contract with those members. Recognizing case authority for the proposition that an independent adjustor retained by an insurance company owes no duty of care to the insured with whom the adjustor has no contract to prevent economic harm caused by the handling of a claim, the court of appeal nonetheless held that a corporation under contract to a health plan to administer claims owes a duty to health plan members to exercise due care to protect those members from physical injury caused by negligence in denying benefits under the plan (172 Cal. App. 4th 1594, 1611) . Applying the Biakanja factors, the court concluded that the claims services were obviously intended to benefit plan members; it was foreseeable that members would be harmed if decisions on medical necessity were made imprudently; the moral blame for erroneous decisions to withhold medical treatment was apparent; and the policy of preventing future harm would be served by imposing negligence liability on the administrator. Given the record on appeal, the court was not as certain on application of the other two factors, the degree of certainty that plaintiff suffered injury and the closeness of the connection between the administrator's conduct and the injury suffered, but the court was not willing to find that no duty existed based on factual questions surrounding those factors, given that the other factors clearly supported finding a duty of care (172 Cal. App. 4th 1594, 1612-1613) .

31 of 199 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
B. Duty
5. Duty Arising From Contract

16-165 California Points & Authorities §§ 165.101-165.109

[Reserved]

§§ 165.101[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
B. Duty
5. Duty Arising From Contract

16-165 California Points & Authorities § 165.110

§ 165.110 Public Policy Precludes Imposition of Contractual Duty on Defendant Not in Privity

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief].

DEFENDANT DID NOT OWE A DUTY TO PLAINTIFF THAT WAS CREATED BY CONTRACT BECAUSE THE PARTIES WERE NOT IN PRIVITY OF CONTRACT AND PUBLIC POLICY REASONS PRECLUDE A DUTY FROM BEING IMPOSED.

Public Policy Precludes Imposition of Duty. The determination of whether or not the defendant will be held liable to a third person not in privity of contract is a matter of policy. It involves the balancing of various factors, including (1) the extent to which the transaction was intended to affect the plaintiff, (2) the foreseeability of harm to the plaintiff, (3) the degree of certainty that the plaintiff suffered injury, (4) the closeness of the connection between the defendant's conduct and the injury suffered, (5) the moral blame attached to the defendant's conduct, and (6) the policy of preventing future harm (Goodman v. Kennedy (1976) 18 Cal. 3d 335, 342-343, 134 Cal. Rptr. 375, 556 P.2d 737).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that the defendant did not owe a duty imposed by contract, based on public policy reasons [see Goodman v. Kennedy (1976) 18 Cal. 3d 335, 342-343, 134 Cal. Rptr. 375, 556 P.2d 737] .

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should discuss the public policy considerations that preclude the imposition of a duty in this case [see Goodman v.

Kennedy (1976) 18 Cal. 3d 335, 343-344, 134 Cal. Rptr. 375, 556 P.2d 737] .

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For related legal background, research and procedural guides, and forms of answers regarding a cause of action for negligence, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities in § 165.100 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose the points and authorities in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Public Policy Precludes Imposition of Duty

In Goodman v. Kennedy (1976) 18 Cal. 3d 335, 134 Cal. Rptr. 375, 556 P.2d 737 , the plaintiffs brought an action for damages against an attorney for losses they suffered when they purchased shares of stock from the attorney's clients. The plaintiffs alleged, among other things, that the defendant negligently advised his clients that the shares could be issued to them as stock dividends and sold to third persons without the subsequent decline in the stock's value that ensued when the Securities and Exchange Commission suspended the stock's previously granted exemption from registration requirements. The trial court granted the defendant's demurrer to the plaintiffs' third amended complaint and subsequently entered a dismissal of the action. The plaintiffs appealed.

The Supreme Court affirmed. The Court noted that whether or not the attorney had a duty with respect to the allegedly negligent advice he gave is a question of law that depends on a weighing of policy considerations for and against the imposition of liability under the circumstances (18 Cal. 3d 335, 342) . The Court stated that privity of contract was not necessary for the imposition of a duty. Quoting Biakanja v. Irving (1958) 49 Cal. 2d 647, 650, 320 P.2d 16 (discussed in § 165.100[3][b]), the Court said that the determination of whether or not the defendant is liable to a third person not in privity is a matter of policy involving the balance of various factors, including (1) the extent to which the transaction was intended to affect the plaintiff, (2) the foreseeability of harm to the plaintiff, (3) the degree of certainty that the plaintiff suffered injury, (4) the closeness of the connection between the defendant's conduct and the injury suffered, (5) the moral blame attached to the defendant's conduct, and (6) the policy of preventing future harm (18 Cal. 3d 335, 342-343) .

In this case, the Court noted that the defendant had no relationship to the plaintiffs that would give rise to his owing the plaintiffs any duty of care, nor was the advice given by the defendant for the purpose of enabling the defendant's clients to discharge any obligation to the plaintiffs (18 Cal. 3d 335, 343) . In addition, although the plaintiffs contended that harm to them was foreseeable, the Court disagreed, noting that the defendant's clients had no wish or obligation to confer a benefit on the plaintiffs in this transaction. Furthermore, to impose a duty on attorneys, not only with respect to the client, but also with respect to other parties in the transaction with whom the client deals at arm's length, would inject undesirable self-protective reservations into the attorney's counseling role. An attorney's need to be concerned with the possibility of negligence claims by anyone with whom his or her client might deal would prevent the attorney from devoting all the attorney's energies to the client's interests (18 Cal. 3d 335, 344) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Public Policy Precludes Imposition of Duty

White v. Southern Cal. Edison Co. (1994) 25 Cal. App. 4th 442, 445, 30 Cal. Rptr. 2d 431 , is discussed in § 165.90[4][a].

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
B. Duty
5. Duty Arising From Contract

16-165 California Points & Authorities § 165.111

§ 165.111 Defendant Did Not Breach Limited Contractual Duty to Party Not in Privity

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief].

ANY DUTY OWED TO PLAINTIFF IS STRICTLY LIMITED BY THE TERMS OF THE CONTRACT BETWEEN THE CONTRACTING PARTIES, AND DEFENDANT DID NOT BREACH THE DUTY OWED TO PLAINTIFF AS DELINEATED IN THAT CONTRACT.

Duty Limited by Terms of Contract. If a duty of due care is alleged to arise from a contract, a defendant's duty to a party not in privity to the contract is strictly limited by the terms of the contract (see Cacciaguidi v. Elliott (1974) 39 Cal. App. 3d 261, 264, 114 Cal. Rptr. 93).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that the defendant does not owe a duty to the plaintiff imposed by contract, on the ground that in the absence of privity of contract between the defendant and the plaintiff, the defendant's duty is limited by the terms of the contract [see Cacciaguidi v. Elliott (1974) 39 Cal. App. 3d 261, 264, 114 Cal. Rptr. 93] .

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should discuss the terms of the contract in light of the defendant's allegedly negligent conduct and argue that the defendant's duty should be limited by the contract terms [see Cacciaguidi v. Elliott (1974) 39 Cal. App. 3d 261, 264, 114 Cal. Rptr. 93] .

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For related legal background, research and procedural guides, and forms of answers to a cause of action for negligence, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities in § 165.100 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose the points and authorities in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Duty Limited by Terms of Contract

In Cacciaguidi v. Elliott (1974) 39 Cal. App. 3d 261, 114 Cal. Rptr. 93 , a woman who slipped and fell in a parking lot on a greasy substance brought an action for personal injuries against the janitorial service that had contracted with her employer to clean the parking lot. The defendant's motion for a nonsuit was granted. The plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal stated that actionable negligence involves the breach of a legal duty on the part of the defendants. Any duty owed to the plaintiff stems from the contract between her employer and the defendants. That contract, however, provided that the defendant would sweep the blacktop with an industrial sweeper. The court noted that the industrial sweeper was designed to pick up dirt and paper, not oil or grease. There was no evidence that the contract required any greasy substance to be picked up (39 Cal. App. 3d 261, 264) . In addition, the evidence was uncontradicted that the plaintiff's employer did not complain of the manner in which the contract was performed or about the practice of the defendants in avoiding grease spots. Therefore, the court found that the defendants' duty was simply to sweep the lot and that their duty was limited by the terms of the contract (39 Cal. App. 3d 261, 264-265) .

34 of 199 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
B. Duty
5. Duty Arising From Contract

16-165 California Points & Authorities §§ 165.112-165.119

[Reserved]

§§ 165.112[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
B. Duty
6. Duty Owed by or to Particular Persons or Entities

16-165 California Points & Authorities § 165.120

§ 165.120 Defendant Owed and Breached Duty to Child

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief].

DEFENDANT OWED A DUTY TO PLAINTIFF AND BREACHED THAT DUTY BECAUSE DEFENDANT IS UNDER A DUTY TO EXERCISE GREATER CAUTION WHEN DEALING WITH CHILDREN THAN WHEN DEALING WITH ADULTS, AND DEFENDANT DID NOT EXERCISE THIS GREATER CAUTION WHEN THE INJURY TO PLAINTIFF OCCURRED.

A. Greater Degree of Caution Necessary With Children. Persons dealing with young children are under a duty to exercise greater caution than when dealing with adults (Schwartz v. Helms Bakery Ltd. (1967) 67 Cal. 2d 232, 240, 60 Cal. Rptr. 510, 430 P.2d 68 ; Pamela L. v. Farmer (1980) 112 Cal. App. 3d 206, 210-211, 169 Cal. Rptr. 282).

B. Degree of Caution Increases With Immaturity of Child. The amount of care due to children increases with their immaturity (Raymond v. Paradise Unified Sch. Dist. (1963) 218 Cal. App. 2d 1, 11, 31 Cal. Rptr. 847 ; Satariano v. Sleight (1942) 54 Cal. App. 2d 278, 283, 129 P.2d 35).

C. Known Characteristics of Child Are Factor in Breach Determination. The known characteristics of children, including their childish propensities to intermeddle, must be taken into consideration in determining whether or not ordinary care for the safety of a child has been exercised under the particular circumstances (Crane v. Smith (1943) 23 Cal. 2d 288, 297, 144 P.2d 356).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that the defendant breached a duty owed to a child, in that the defendant did not exercise the appropriate greater degree of caution in the situation in question [see Schwartz v. Helms Bakery Ltd. (1967) 67 Cal. 2d 232, 240, 60 Cal. Rptr. 510, 430 P.2d 68] . It should be combined with the form in § 165.30 if applicable to the particular case.

This issue may arise in several procedural contexts, including opposing a demurrer and in opposing a motion for nonsuit [see, e.g., Pamela L. v. Farmer (1980) 112 Cal. App. 3d 206, 208, 169 Cal. Rptr. 282 (demurrer); Schwartz v. Helms Bakery Ltd. (1967) 67 Cal. 2d 232, 234-235, 60 Cal. Rptr. 510, 430 P.2d 68 (nonsuit)].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel may discuss the greater degree of caution that the defendant should have exercised in this situation and argue that the lack of exercise of this degree of caution proximately caused the injury to the plaintiff.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For related legal background, research and procedural guides, and forms of complaint for negligence, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For additional points and authorities to combine with this form, see § 165.30. For points and authorities supporting and opposing demurrers, see Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Greater Degree of Caution Necessary With Children

The factual and procedural background of Schwartz v. Helms Bakery Ltd. (1967) 67 Cal. 2d 232, 60 Cal. Rptr. 510, 430 P.2d 68 , is discussed in § 165.31[3][a]. In Schwartz, the Supreme Court reversed the judgment of nonsuit against the plaintiff in an action in which the plaintiff, a four-year-old child, was struck by an automobile as he crossed the street to buy a doughnut from the driver of a truck owned by a bakery. With regard to the issue of standard of care, the Court stated that when dealing with a young child, a defendant must exercise greater caution than when dealing with an adult. Quoting its earlier opinion in Hilyar v. Union Ice Co. (1955) 45 Cal. 2d 30, 36, 286 P.2d 21 , the Court noted that the presence of a child is in itself a warning requiring the exercise of care for their safety (67 Cal. 2d 232, 240) . In this case, the driver of the truck was obliged to exercise greater caution regarding the plaintiff than that required with respect to an adult. In discharging this duty of due care, the driver should have taken into consideration not merely the normal characteristics of four-year-old children, but his actual knowledge of the plaintiff's heedlessness of the hazards of traffic. The Court explained that the driver acquired that knowledge before their first encounter when he saw the plaintiff dart across the street. The Court held that the lower court erroneously granted the motion for nonsuit. It should have left to the jury the question whether or not, in view of the reasonably foreseeable behavior of the child, the defendants exposed him to an unreasonable risk of harm (67 Cal. 2d 232, 243-244) . In addition, the Court held that by undertaking to direct the child to an assigned rendezvous with the truck, the defendants assumed a duty to exercise due care for his safety (67 Cal. 2d 232, 235-242) .

In Pamela L. v. Farmer (1980) 112 Cal. App. 3d 206, 169 Cal. Rptr. 282 , three minor girls brought an action for negligence and assault and battery against the defendants, a husband and wife. The plaintiffs alleged that they were sexually molested by the husband at his home when the wife had invited them to use her swimming pool. The plaintiffs contended that the wife had knowledge of her husband's past record of molesting women and children and that she invited the children to swim in the pool when she knew that her husband would be alone with the plaintiffs. The trial court granted the wife's demurrer, and the plaintiffs appealed from the subsequent judgment of dismissal.

The court of appeal reversed, finding that the wife failed to prevent harm to the plaintiffs and, by her own acts, increased the risk of the occurrence of such harm (112 Cal. App. 3d 206, 210) . The court noted that the measure of precaution required by one having a child in his or her care, who stands in no relation to the child except that he or she has undertaken to care for the child, is care that a prudent person would exercise under like circumstances (112 Cal. App. 3d 206, 210-211) . In addition, the victims were entitled to more stringent precautions than necessary for an adult. The court examined relevant policy considerations and determined that (1) the foreseeability of harm was great, (2) the burden on the wife to avoid harm to the children was slight, (3) there was a fairly close connection between the wife's invitation and the ultimate harm, and (4) there was moral culpability for the wife's conduct that increased the risk of harm (112 Cal. App. 3d 206, 211) .

[b] Degree of Caution Increases With Immaturity of Child

The factual and procedural background of Raymond v. Paradise Unified Sch. Dist. (1963) 218 Cal. App. 2d 1, 31 Cal. Rptr. 847 , is discussed in § 165.30[3][a]. In Raymond, the court of appeal affirmed the judgment for a seven-year-old child against the defendant, a school district, on the ground that it negligently failed to supervise a school bus stop area. After examining several policy factors that might require the court to impose a duty on the defendant, the court stated that the defendant owed a duty to the plaintiff based on the foreseeability of harm to the plaintiff and other considerations (218 Cal. App. 2d 1, 6-10) . The court stated that a factor in determining whether or not a duty was owed to the plaintiff is the character of the pupils that used the bus terminal. Having designated the bus stop for primary school pupils, the defendant had knowledge of the presence of small children, who could not be expected to exercise the same judgment as high school students. The amount of care due to children increases with their immaturity (218 Cal. App. 2d 1, 10) . The court noted that the testimony of the bus driver showed that there was an increased hazard attributed to the heedless habits of the younger children. The numerical possibilities of accident at that particular location were multiplied not only by the frequency of its use, but also by the character of the persons involved in its use. In addition, the location was in the complete control of the defendant, which had the authority to enforce regulatory measures necessary for the protection of children on school property (218 Cal. App. 2d 1, 10-11) . Therefore, the court found as a matter of law that the defendant owed a duty to provide adequate supervisory measures to protect children using the bus loading zone (218 Cal. App. 2d 1, 11) .

In Satariano v. Sleight (1942) 54 Cal. App. 2d 278, 129 P.2d 35 , a 17-year-old boy brought an action against a school district and a driver after he was struck by a car while running across the street between crosswalks. The trial court granted a nonsuit in favor of the defendants, and the plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal reversed the judgment of nonsuit as to all the defendants. Even though the plaintiff had a duty to yield the right of way to the automobile, the court of appeal felt that it could not be said that he was contributorily negligent as a matter of law (54 Cal. App. 2d 278, 280-281) . [However, the present doctrine of comparative negligence, set forth in Li v. Yellow Cab Co. (1975) 13 Cal. 3d 804, 828-829, 119 Cal. Rptr. 858, 532 P.2d 1226 , supersedes the previous doctrine of contributory negligence, which provided a complete bar to recovery.] On the question of liability of the school district, the court stated that the evidence presented a question for the jury on whether or not the school district, which knew that students habitually walked and ran across a well-traveled street during school hours, should have taken action to protect the students from injury (54 Cal. App. 2d 278, 282-283) . The court also stated that the amount of care due to minors increases with their immaturity and consequent heedlessness to danger. Even though the student in this case was nearing 18 years of age, the court stated that this principle still applied. It said that it could not close its eyes to the fact that even students of 17 and 18 years of age, particularly in groups in which the herd instinct and competitive spirit tend naturally to relax vigilance, are not accustomed to exercising the same amount of care for their own safety as persons of more mature years (54 Cal. App. 2d 278, 283) .

[c] Known Characteristics of Child Are Factor in Breach Determination

In Crane v. Smith (1943) 23 Cal. 2d 288, 144 P.2d 356 , the plaintiff, a three-year-old girl, through her father as guardian ad litem, and her father in his individual capacity, brought an action against a market after she caught her finger in a coffee grinder on the premises. The trial court entered judgment for the plaintiffs, and the defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. It noted that the known characteristics of children, including their childish propensities to intermeddle, must be taken into consideration in determining whether or not ordinary care for the safety of a child has been exercised under particular circumstances (23 Cal. 2d 288, 297) . The court stated that because children have neither an adult's capacity to appreciate the risk involved in a potentially dangerous natural or artificial condition, nor the ability to avoid danger to the same degree as do adults, and because all persons dealing with them are chargeable with such knowledge, the possessor of land owed the invited children the duty to exercise a greater degree of care than that exercised for the safety of adults (23 Cal. 2d 288, 296) . The court noted that the coffee grinder was brightly painted, which would attract a child, and that it was placed on an aisle. Under these circumstances, there was substantial evidence justifying the trial court's finding that the failure of the defendant to place the coffee grinder in a place reasonably inaccessible to immature children, or to warn the child against meddling with the machine, constituted actionable negligence (23 Cal. 2d 288, 298) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Greater Degree of Caution Necessary With Children

In Huggans v. Southern Pac. Co. (1949) 92 Cal. App. 2d 599, 207 P.2d 864 , a 12-year-old boy who was struck by a train brought an action against the railroad and the train engineer. The court of appeal affirmed judgment for the plaintiff, noting that the plaintiff was obviously a child and that the quantum of care to be exercised toward children, from whom the natural heedlessness of youth is to be expected, is always greater than that required to be exercised toward adult persons (92 Cal. App. 2d 599, 611) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
B. Duty
6. Duty Owed by or to Particular Persons or Entities

16-165 California Points & Authorities § 165.121

§ 165.121 Duty Owed by Child--Adult Standard of Care Applies

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief].

DEFENDANT SHOULD BE HELD TO AN ADULT STANDARD OF CARE BECAUSE HE/SHE WAS ENGAGING IN AN ADULT ACTIVITY WHEN THE INJURY TO PLAINTIFF OCCURRED.

A. Child Engaged in Adult Activity Held to Adult Standard of Care. An exception to the general rule regarding a child's standard of care arises when a minor engages in an activity that is normally undertaken only by adults and for which adult qualifications are required. The age of the minor does not excuse him or her from liability for negligence, and the minor must meet the standard established for adults (Prichard v. Veterans Cab Co. (1965) 63 Cal. 2d 727, 731, 47 Cal. Rptr. 904, 408 P.2d 360 ; Neudeck v. Bransten (1965) 233 Cal. App. 2d 17, 21, 43 Cal. Rptr. 250).

[Optional] B. Child Driving Car Held to Adult Standard. The age of a minor who operates a motor vehicle does not excuse him or her from liability for driving it in a negligent manner, and the minor must meet the standard established primarily for adults (Prichard v. Veterans Cab Co. (1965) 63 Cal. 2d 727, 731, 47 Cal. Rptr. 904, 408 P.2d 360 (motorcycle); Neudeck v. Bransten (1965) 233 Cal. App. 2d 17, 21, 43 Cal. Rptr. 250 (automobile)).

[Optional] C. Effect of Statutory Violation. A child who violates a statute, ordinance, or regulation will be held to the same standard of conduct as an adult if the child is engaging in an activity that is normally undertaken by adults and for which adult qualifications are required when the injury to the plaintiff occurred (see Evid. Code § 669(b)(2); see also Neudeck v. Bransten (1965) 233 Cal. App. 2d 17, 19-21, 43 Cal. Rptr. 250).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a defendant who is a child should be held to an adult standard of care because he or she was engaged in an activity normally undertaken by adults [see Prichard v. Veterans Cab Co. (1965) 63 Cal. 2d 727, 731, 47 Cal. Rptr. 904, 408 P.2d 360] . Optional Paragraph B may be submitted if the defendant was driving a car. Optional Paragraph C may be submitted if the defendant has violated a statute ordinance, or regulation. This form should be combined with the form in § 165.30, if applicable to the particular case.

These issues may arise in several procedural contexts, including the challenging of the propriety of the trial court's refusal to give a requested jury instruction concerning the applicable standard of care for a defendant who is a minor [see Neudeck v. Bransten (1965) 233 Cal. App. 2d 17, 18, 43 Cal. Rptr. 250 (jury instruction regarding minor the defendant)].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel may show that the defendant's activity was an activity for which adult qualifications are required and that therefore the defendant should be held to an adult standard of care, as opposed to the lower standard of care to which minors are generally held [see Cummings v. County of Los Angeles (1961) 56 Cal. 2d 258, 263, 14 Cal. Rptr. 668, 363 P.2d 900 (standard of care for minors); Prichard v. Veterans Cab Co. (1965) 63 Cal. 2d 727, 731, 47 Cal. Rptr. 904 (standard of care for adult activity)].

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For related legal background, research and procedural guides, and forms of complaint for negligence, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For additional points and authorities to combine with this form, see § 165.30. For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities in § 165.190 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose the points and authorities in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Child Engaged in Adult Activity Held to Adult Standard of Care

In Prichard v. Veterans Cab Co. (1965) 63 Cal. 2d 727, 47 Cal. Rptr. 904, 408 P.2d 360 , a 17-year-old boy whose motorcycle collided with a taxicab brought an action through his guardian ad litem against the taxicab company. His mother also sought to recover medical expenses incurred in the treatment of her son's injuries. The trial court entered judgment in favor of the defendant, and the plaintiffs appealed.

The Supreme Court affirmed, stating that the plaintiff may have been contributorily negligent, and therefore the verdict for the defendant was reasonable. [However, the doctrine of comparative negligence, set forth in Li v. Yellow Cab Co. (1975) 13 Cal. 3d 804, 828-829, 119 Cal. Rptr. 858, 532 P.2d 1226 , supersedes the doctrine of contributory negligence, which provided a complete bar to recovery.] The Court noted that the plaintiff, while driving his motorcycle, observed that an oncoming taxicab was about to turn left into his path, and that the plaintiff admittedly could have applied his brakes in ample time to avoid a collision. It appeared, however, that the plaintiff decided not to apply his brakes, choosing rather to proceed onward at the same rate of speed, while paying no further attention to the taxicab (63 Cal. 2d 727, 731) . The Court also found that the lower court did not err in refusing an instruction that a child is not held to the same standard of conduct as an adult and is only required to exercise that degree of care that ordinarily is exercised by a child of like age, mental capacity, and experience. The Court stated that an exception to the general rule about a child's standard of care arises when a minor engages in an activity that is normally undertaken by adults and for which adult qualifications are required. The Court added that the age of a minor who operates a motor vehicle will not excuse him or her from liability for driving it in a negligent manner and that the minor will be required to meet the standard established primarily for adults (63 Cal. 2d 727, 731-732) . After examining other contentions regarding the propriety of jury instructions and the admission of evidence, the Court affirmed the judgment (63 Cal. 2d 727, 732-735) .

NOTE:

A plaintiff's contributory negligence no longer completely bars his or her recovery [see Li v. Yellow Cab Co. (1975) 13 Cal. 3d 804, 828-829, 119 Cal. Rptr. 858, 532 P.2d 1226 (replacing bar of contributory negligence with rule of comparative negligence); see also Hasson v. Ford Motor Co. (1977) 19 Cal. 3d 530, 551-552, 138 Cal. Rptr. 705, 564 P.2d 857 (minor plaintiff's contributory negligence does not bar recovery)].

In Neudeck v. Bransten (1965) 233 Cal. App. 2d 17, 43 Cal. Rptr. 250 , the plaintiff brought an action for personal injuries she suffered and for the wrongful death of her sister resulting from a collision with an automobile driven by the owner's minor son. The jury rendered a verdict in favor of the plaintiff. The defendants, the owner of the automobile and his minor son, appealed, contending that the trial court erroneously refused to instruct the jury on the special standard of care applicable to minor drivers.

The court of appeal affirmed, noting that children are generally held to that degree of care that might reasonably have been expected of a child of like age, capacity, and experience under the same or similar circumstances (233 Cal. App. 2d 17, 20) . The court stated, however, that when a minor engages in an activity such as driving, which is normally undertaken by adults and for which adult qualifications are required, an exception to the general rule arises, holding the minor to the ordinary standard of care (233 Cal. App. 2d 17, 21) . The court stated that it would be impractical to give legal sanction to the operation of automobiles by teenagers with less than ordinary care for the safety of others. Although minors are entitled to be judged by standards commensurate with age, experience, and wisdom when they are engaged in activities appropriate to their age, experience, and wisdom, it would be unfair to the public to permit a minor operating a motor vehicle to observe any other standards of care and conduct than those expected of all others. A person observing children at play with toys, throwing balls, operating tricycles or bicycles, or engaged in other childhood activities may anticipate conduct that does not reach an adult standard of care or prudence. One, however, cannot know whether or not the operator of an approaching automobile, airplane, or powerboat is a minor or adult and usually cannot protect oneself against youthful imprudence, even if warned. The court held that in the operation of an automobile, airplane, or powerboat, a minor is held to the same standard of care as an adult (233 Cal. App. 2d 17, 22) .

[b] Child Driving Car Held to Adult Standard

The factual and procedural background of Prichard v. Veterans Cab Co. (1965) 63 Cal. 2d 727, 47 Cal. Rptr. 904, 408 P.2d 360 , is discussed in § 165.121[3][a]. The Supreme Court held that the lower court did not err in refusing to give the plaintiffs' requested jury instruction that the plaintiff, a minor driving a motorcycle, is not held to the same standard of conduct as an adult and is only required to exercise that degree of care that ordinarily is exercised by children of like age, mental capacity, and experience. The Court stated that an exception to this general rule arises when the minor engages in an activity that is normally undertaken only by adults and for which adult qualifications are required. The Court added that the age of a minor will not excuse the minor from liability for driving a motor vehicle in a negligent manner and that the minor will be required to meet the standard established primarily for adults (63 Cal. 2d 727, 731) .

The factual and procedural background of Neudeck v. Bransten (1965) 233 Cal. App. 2d 17, 43 Cal. Rptr. 250 , is discussed in § 165.121[3][a]. The defendant, on appeal, contended that the trial court erroneously refused to instruct the jury on the special standard of care applicable to minor drivers. The court of appeal noted that children are generally held to that degree of care that might reasonably have been expected of a child of like age, capacity, and experience under the same or similar circumstances (233 Cal. App. 2d 17, 20) . The court stated, however, that when a minor engages in an activity such as driving, which is normally undertaken by adults and for which adult qualifications are required, an exception to the general rule arises, and the minor should be held to the ordinary standard of care (233 Cal. App. 2d 17, 21) .

[c] Effect of Statutory Violation

The factual and procedural background of Neudeck v. Bransten (1965) 233 Cal. App. 2d 17, 43 Cal. Rptr. 250 , is discussed in § 165.121[3][a]. The defendants contended that the trial court erred in refusing their proposed jury instruction that stated, in effect, that a child, although in violation of an ordinance or statute, is not held to the same standard of conduct as an adult and is only required to exercise that degree of care that ordinarily is exercised by a child of like age, mental capacity, and experience (233 Cal. App. 2d 17, 19) . The court noted, however, that the cases relied on by the defendants involved actions in which the defendant was not engaged in allegedly negligent operation of a motor vehicle (233 Cal. App. 2d 17, 20-21) . The court held that when a minor engages in an adult activity, such as driving, that is normally undertaken by adults and for which adult qualifications are required, an exception to the general rule arises, and the minor should be held to the ordinary standard of care (233 Cal. App. 2d 17, 21) . Therefore, the lower court's refusal of the requested instruction was proper (233 Cal. App. 2d 17, 21-23) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Child Engaged in Adult Activity Held to Adult Standard of Care

In Schauf v. Southern Cal. Edison Co. (1966) 243 Cal. App. 2d 450, 52 Cal. Rptr. 518 , the court of appeal affirmed a judgment in favor of the defendants in an action in which the vehicle driven by the plaintiff, a minor, collided with another vehicle. The plaintiff joined the county and an electric company as the defendants, contending that they maintained a hazardous condition at an intersection because a stop sign was obscured by a power pole. On appeal, the plaintiff maintained that the lower court erroneously imposed the duty of care of an adult and that to prove contributory negligence, the defendant should have been required to prove that the plaintiff failed to exercise the care required of a minor of his age, experience, and capacity. The court held, however, that in the operation of a motor vehicle, a minor is required to meet the same standard of care established for adults (243 Cal. App. 2d 450, 457) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
B. Duty
6. Duty Owed by or to Particular Persons or Entities

16-165 California Points & Authorities §§ 165.122-165.129

[Reserved]

§§ 165.122[Reserved]

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
B. Duty
6. Duty Owed by or to Particular Persons or Entities

16-165 California Points & Authorities § 165.130

§ 165.130 Defendant Owed Plaintiff Duty to Control or Warn of Third Party's Dangerous Conduct Based on Existence of Special Relationship

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT OWED A DUTY TO PLAINTIFF AND BREACHED THAT DUTY BECAUSE DEFENDANT SHOULD HAVE _____ [WARNED PLAINTIFF OF THE FORESEEABLY DANGEROUS CONDUCT OF _____ (specify third party) and/or CONTROLLED THE FORESEEABLY DANGEROUS CON _____ (specify third party)98 DUCT OF _____ (specify third party)] BECAUSE DEFENDANT STOOD IN A SPECIAL RELATIONSHIP TO _____ [PLAINTIFF and/or _____ (specify third party)].

A. Special Relationship Imposed Duty to Control or Warn. When the avoidance of foreseeable harm requires a defendant to control the conduct of another person, or to warn of that conduct, the common law imposes a duty if the defendant bears a special relationship to the dangerous person or to the foreseeable victim of that conduct (Tarasoff v. Regents of Univ. of Cal. (1976) 17 Cal. 3d 425, 435, 131 Cal. Rptr. 14, 551 P.2d 334 ; Draper Mortuary v. Superior Court (1982) 135 Cal. App. 3d 533, 537, 185 Cal. Rptr. 396 ; see Hedlund v. Superior Court (1983) 34 Cal. 3d 695, 700, 194 Cal. Rptr. 805, 669 P.2d 41).

B. Relationship of Dependence Created Special Relationship. A relationship of dependence may create a special relationship (Mann v. State of California (1977) 70 Cal. App. 3d 773, 780, 139 Cal. Rptr. 82 ; see Baldwin v. Zoradi (1981) 123 Cal. App. 3d 275, 283, 176 Cal. Rptr. 809).

[Optional] C. Single Relationship Sufficient to Create Special Relationship. A duty exists if the defendant has a special relationship to both the victim and the person whose conduct created the danger, but the duty is not logically restricted to such situations, and a single relationship may be enough to require the exercise of reasonable care to protect a victim (Tarasoff v. Regents of Univ. of Cal. (1976) 17 Cal. 3d 425, 435-437, 131 Cal. Rptr. 14, 551 P.2d 334 ; see Draper Mortuary v. Superior Court (1982) 135 Cal. App. 3d 533, 537, 185 Cal. Rptr. 396).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that the defendant owed a duty to the plaintiff to warn the plaintiff of the foreseeably dangerous conduct of a third party or that the defendant owed a duty to the plaintiff to control the foreseeably dangerous conduct of a third party [see Tarasoff v. Regents of Univ. of Cal. (1976) 17 Cal. 3d 425, 435-437, 131 Cal. Rptr. 14, 551 P.2d 334] . Optional Paragraph C may be submitted to assert that a single relationship was sufficient to create a special relationship. This form should be combined with the form in § 165.131, if applicable to the particular case.

This issue may arise in several procedural contexts, including opposing a demurrer, opposing a motion for summary judgment, or challenging the propriety of the trial court's granting of a motion for a directed verdict [see, e.g., Tarasoff v. Regents of Univ. of Cal. (1976) 17 Cal. 3d 425, 430, 131 Cal. Rptr. 14, 551 P.2d 334 (demurrer); Draper Mortuary v. Superior Court (1982) 135 Cal. App. 3d 533, 534, 185 Cal. Rptr. 396 (summary judgment); Mann v. State of California (1977) 70 Cal. App. 3d 773, 776, 139 Cal. Rptr. 82 (directed verdict)].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel may show that a special relationship existed between either the defendant and the plaintiff, or between the defendant and the person whose conduct created the danger to the plaintiff. Counsel should argue that because of the existence of this special relationship, the defendant had a duty to warn the plaintiff or to control the dangerous conduct of the third party. In addition, counsel should show how the dangerous conduct of the third party was foreseeable to the defendant [see Hedlund v. Superior Court (1983) 34 Cal. 3d 695, 705-706, 194 Cal. Rptr. 805, 669 P.2d 41 ; Tarasoff v. Regents of Univ. of Cal. (1976) 17 Cal. 3d 425, 434-436, 131 Cal. Rptr. 14, 551 P.2d 334] .

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For related legal background, research and procedural guides, and forms of complaint for negligence, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For additional points and authorities to combine with this form, see § 165.131. For points and authorities supporting and opposing demurrers, see Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities in § 165.230 et seq. may be used in an appropriate case to oppose the points and authorities in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Special Relationship Imposed Duty to Control or Warn

Hedlund v. Superior Court (1983) 34 Cal. 3d 695, 194 Cal. Rptr. 805, 669 P.2d 41 , was an action for professional malpractice against two psychotherapists by a woman and her minor child for injuries inflicted by a patient of the defendants. The mother's suit was based on the negligent failure of the defendants to diagnose, and warn the woman of, the threat of danger to her by the patient. The child's suit was based on mental distress from witnessing the patient's assault on the child's mother. The complaint alleged that in the course of his counseling and treatment, the patient told the defendants of his intent to commit serious injury on the mother and that the defendants did not take steps to notify the mother of the danger. Subsequently, the patient seriously injured the mother by shooting her with a shotgun. At the time of the shooting, her two-year-old son was sitting next to her, and she threw herself over the child to prevent him from getting hurt. The trial court overruled the defendants' demurrer to the complaint. The defendants petitioned for a writ of mandate to compel the trial court to vacate its order and sustain their demurrer on the ground that the action was barred by former Code Civ. Proc. § 340(3) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 335.1 (two-year statute of limitations, beginning in 2003), which established a one-year statute of limitations for actions for personal injury.

The Supreme Court held that the applicable statute of limitations is the three-year period set forth in Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 for actions for professional negligence (34 Cal. 3d 695, 705) . The Court first analyzed whether the failure to comply with the duty enunciated in Tarasoff v. Regents of Univ. of Cal. (1976) 17 Cal. 3d 425, 131 Cal. Rptr. 14, 551 P.2d 334 , to predict whether a patient poses a serious danger to others and then to exercise reasonable care to protect the foreseeable victims of the danger, constitutes ordinary or professional negligence. The defendants had argued that professional negligence involves only acts in the course of diagnosis or treatment and that a failure to warn is ordinary negligence. The Court concluded that the negligence involved was professional negligence because the warning aspect of the duty is inextricably interwoven with the diagnostic function. The Court said that the diagnosis and prediction of danger is an essential element of a cause of action for failure to warn and that it is not separate and severable from the duty to take steps to warn. The Court further stated that the decision to warn and the manner in which the warning is given may also involve professional judgment (34 Cal. 3d 695, 703) .

NOTE:

Hedlund was decided before the enactment of Civ. Code § 43.92, which limits the liability of a psychotherapist for failure to warn a third party of a patient's threats. It is not clear whether or not the holding concerning the statute of limitations that applies to such an action may now be limited by the provisions of Civ. Code § 43.92. For a form of points and authorities for use in a case involving the provisions of Civ. Code § 43.92, see Ch. 117, Insane and Incompetent Persons: Actions Involving Mental Patients .

In Tarasoff v. Regents of Univ. of Cal. (1976) 17 Cal. 3d 425, 131 Cal. Rptr. 14, 551 P.2d 334 , a murdered woman's parents brought an action for wrongful death against the murderer's therapists, the therapists' employer (the University of California), and the police officers involved. The plaintiffs contended that the defendants failed to warn the plaintiffs' daughter of the impending danger posed by their patient and failed to have the patient confined pursuant to the Lanterman-Petris-Short Act (Welf. & Inst. Code § 5000 et seq.). The trial court granted the defendants' demurrers to the plaintiffs' second amended complaint without leave to amend. The plaintiffs appealed judgment for the defendants.

The Supreme Court reversed with regard to the therapists and the University of California, and affirmed the judgment with regard to the police officers. The Court stated that the plaintiffs' second cause of action could be amended to allege that their daughter's death proximately resulted from the defendants' negligent failure to warn their daughter or others likely to apprise her of the danger (17 Cal. 3d 425, 433) . As a general principle, the Court noted that a person owes a duty of care to all persons who are foreseeably endangered by his or her conduct, with respect to risks that make the conduct unreasonably dangerous (17 Cal. 3d 425, 434-435) . Although the Court noted that one person owed no duty to control the conduct of another under common law, nor to warn those endangered by that conduct, it stated that the courts have carved out an exception to this rule when the defendant stands in some special relationship to either the person whose conduct needs to be controlled or the foreseeable victim of that conduct. The Court reiterated that when the avoidance of foreseeable harm requires a defendant to control the conduct of another person, or to warn of that conduct, the common law has traditionally imposed liability only if the defendant bears some special relationship to the dangerous person or to the potential victim. Applying this exception to the present case, the Court noted that a relationship of the therapists to either the murdered woman or their patient would suffice to establish a duty of care (17 Cal. 3d 425, 435) . However, this specific holding would now appear to be limited by the provisions of Civ. Code § 43.92, which limits the liability of psychotherapists for their failure to warn of a patient's threats. For a form of points and authorities for use in a case involving the provisions of Civ. Code § 43.92, see Ch. 117, Insane and Incompetent Persons: Actions Involving Mental Patients .

In Draper Mortuary v. Superior Court (1982) 135 Cal. App. 3d 533, 185 Cal. Rptr. 396 , the plaintiff brought an action for negligence and breach of an oral contract against a mortuary, alleging that the defendant failed to lock the door of the mortuary chapel in which the decedent's remains lay. A third party entered the chapel and sexually assaulted the decedent. The plaintiff, the husband of the decedent, also alleged that the defendant knew or should have known that the failure to provide a secure facility would have allowed the desecration in question because other persons had committed similar acts. The defendant's motion for summary judgment, including affidavits and declarations, established that prior to the date in question no remains in the mortuary had ever been sexually molested or abused. Based on this record, the trial court granted the defendant's motion for summary judgment on the cause of action based on breach of an oral contract, but denied the motion as to the negligence cause of action. The defendant petitioned for a writ of mandate directing the trial court to vacate its order denying its motion for summary judgment on the negligence cause of action.

The court of appeal granted an alternative writ, but refused to grant a peremptory writ (135 Cal. App. 3d 533, 534) . Although the defendant contended that it owed no duty to the plaintiff, the court disagreed. It stated that the defendant's reliance on cases that found no duty was misplaced because the cases were based on factual situations in which no special relationship existed and the defendant did not undertake to care for or take custody of the plaintiffs. Therefore, the courts in those cases did not impose a duty of care to control the conduct of third persons. However, the court noted that a special relationship between parties may give rise to a duty that would not otherwise be imposed. Although under the common law, one person owed no duty to control the conduct of another, nor to warn those endangered by that conduct, the courts have carved out an exception to this rule in cases in which the defendant stands in some special relationship to either the person whose conduct needs to be controlled or the foreseeable victim. Other courts have increased the number of instances in which affirmative duties are imposed by expanding the list of special relationships that justify a departure from the common law rule. The basis for analysis of whether or not there is a duty is the relationship of the parties. If the conduct of the one who is to be charged with the duty brings that person into a human relationship with another in which social policy requires that either affirmative action or precaution be taken by that person to avoid harm, then the law should impose a duty to act or to take the precaution (135 Cal. App. 3d 533, 537) . The court found that the facts of this case compelled the imposition of duty. Once a mortuary undertakes to accept the care, custody, and control of a decedent's remains, it owes a duty of care to the members of the decedent's bereaved family. Whether or not that duty has been breached by the omission of the defendant in failing to lock its chapel door is a question of fact for he jury that precludes the granting of a motion for summary judgment (135 Cal. App. 3d 533, 538) .

[b] Relationship of Dependence Created Special Relationship

In Baldwin v. Zoradi (1981) 123 Cal. App. 3d 275, 176 Cal. Rptr. 809 , the plaintiff brought an action against the trustees of a university, its governing body and administrative agency, certain dormitory advisors, and students for personal injuries suffered in an automobile accident. The plaintiff, a student, was a passenger in an automobile driven by intoxicated university students who were engaged in a speed driving contest when their automobile collided with other vehicles. The plaintiff contended that a special relationship existed between the students and the trustees pursuant to a license agreement that governed student conduct in the dormitories. Because the agreement prohibited the possession and consumption of alcoholic beverages in the dormitories, the plaintiff contended that the trustees and the dormitory advisors knowingly permitted the students to possess and consume alcoholic beverages in contravention of the license agreement. The trial court sustained a general demurrer with regard to the trustees, governing and administrative agency, and dormitory advisors. The plaintiff appealed from the ensuing judgment of dismissal.

Even though the court of appeal affirmed the judgment dismissing the plaintiff's cause of action, it discussed the nature of a special relationship. In confronting the difficult question of whether the relationship between the trustees, on the one hand, and the students and the plaintiff, on the other, created a special relationship imposing a duty of care to prevent injuries, the court noted that a relationship of dependence may create a special relationship (123 Cal. App. 3d 275, 283) . The court examined the license agreement and found that although it prohibited the consumption of alcohol, it did not create a dependent relationship that would impose a duty to control alcoholic intake by students. In addition, the court found that the facts of this case were different from other cases that imposed a duty, because there was no apparent imminent danger or potential for loss in this case (123 Cal. App. 3d 275, 285) . Furthermore, the students' conduct was not reasonably foreseeable, nor could the defendants be morally blamed for their omission (123 Cal. App. 3d 275, 286-287) . After examining the plaintiff's other causes of action, the court affirmed the judgment of dismissal (123 Cal. App. 3d 275, 287-295) .

In Mann v. State of California (1977) 70 Cal. App. 3d 773, 139 Cal. Rptr. 82 , the plaintiff alleged that a state traffic officer, after an investigation, had left several stranded motorists in a dangerous situation on the freeway where some were subsequently killed and others injured as a result of another motorist's negligence. The trial court granted a motion for directed verdict in favor of the state because it concluded as a matter of law that the sole cause of the accident was the conduct of the motorist who subsequently collided with the stranded cars. The plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, stating that a directed verdict was improper because the evidence did not foreclose a finding that the traffic officer's conduct may have been negligent. The court noted that anyone legally responsible for the victims' vulnerable position could have substantially contributed to the cause of the accident (70 Cal. App. 3d 773, 777) . The court noted that the officer, and through him, the state, could be liable for negligent omissions only if a special relationship existed between him and the plaintiff (70 Cal. App. 3d 773, 779-780) . The court also noted that the law appears to be heading toward a recognition of the duty to aid or protect in any relationship of dependence or of mutual dependence (70 Cal. App. 3d 773, 780) . The court stated that the plaintiff was dependent on the officer, who was the expert in traffic safety and who was charged with specific responsibility for safety on the stretch of freeway in question. Once he had apprised himself of the dangerous position of the stranded motorists, the officer had a duty to exercise ordinary care to protect them from traffic dangers. Although no special relationship may exist between members of the California Highway Patrol and the motoring public generally, or between the Patrol and stranded motorists generally, once a state traffic officer has chosen to investigate the plight of specific persons on a freeway and inform himself or herself of the foreseeable danger to them from passing traffic, a special relationship arises requiring the officer to protect the motorists by readily available means. Liability may attach if the officer's limited duty to protect these people under these special circumstances is not performed. Stated otherwise, the court found that the foreseeable risk of harm to those people may have been unreasonable, and if so, the state traffic officer, who had acquainted himself with their plight, had a duty to exercise ordinary are to protect them from this risk (70 Cal. App. 3d 773, 780) .

[c] Single Relationship Sufficient to Create Special Relationship

The factual and procedural background of Tarasoff v. Regents of Univ. of Cal. (1976) 17 Cal. 3d 425, 131 Cal. Rptr. 14, 551 P.2d 334 , is discussed in § 165.130[3][a]. The Court noted that California decisions recognize a duty to warn or to control a third person's behavior if the defendant stands in a special relationship with both the victim and the person whose conduct created the danger. The Court stated, however, that the duty should not logically be restricted to such situations and that a single relationship is sufficient to support the duty of reasonable care (17 Cal. 3d 425, 436) . The duty of care may arise from either (1) a special relationship between the actor and the third person that imposes a duty on the actor to control the third person's conduct, or (2) a special relationship between the actor and the victim that gives the victim a right of protection (17 Cal. 3d 425, 435) .

The factual and procedural background of Draper Mortuary v. Superior Court (1982) 135 Cal. App. 3d 533, 185 Cal. Rptr. 396 , is discussed in § 165.130[3][a]. In examining whether or not the defendants owed a duty to the plaintiff, the court of appeal stated that a duty of care may arise from either (1) a special relationship between the actor and the third person that imposes a duty on the actor to control the third person's conduct, or (2) a special relationship between the actor and the other person that gives the other person a right of protection (135 Cal. App. 3d 533, 537) . In this case, the court found that once a mortuary undertakes to accept the care, custody, and control of a decedent's remains, it owes a duty to the members of the decedent's bereaved family to protect those remains from harm by a third person (135 Cal. App. 3d 533, 538) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Special Relationship Imposed Duty to Control or Warn

In Peterson v. San Francisco Cmty. Coll. Dist. (1984) 36 Cal. 3d 799, 205 Cal. Rptr. 842, 685 P.2d 1193 , an action for damages arising out of a public entity's maintenance of a dangerous condition of property under Gov. Code § 835, a student in a community college was assaulted while ascending a stairway in the college's parking lot. The Supreme Court held that the community college district, a public entity, owed a duty to exercise due care to protect and warn its students against reasonably foreseeable assaults on the campus. The duty arose out of a special relationship, that of landowner and invitee, that existed between the college and the plaintiff because the plaintiff used the parking lot in exchange for payment of a fee (36 Cal. 3d 799, 805-809) . The Court found the condition of the property to be dangerous because thick and untrimmed foliage and trees surrounding the parking lot area permitted the assailant to perpetrate his crime. The Court also found the risk of assault to be foreseeable (36 Cal. 3d 799, 812-813) . Although the defendant was immune from liability for failure to provide adequate police protection, it was not immune from liability for failure to warn (36 Cal. 3d 799, 814-815) .

In Johnson v. State of California (1968) 69 Cal. 2d 782, 73 Cal. Rptr. 240, 447 P.2d 352 , the Supreme Court reversed a summary judgment for the defendant in an action in which the plaintiff contended that the defendant negligently failed to inform her of the homicidal tendencies of a delinquent child placed in her home. With regard to the issue of the defendant's duty to the plaintiff, the Court stated that as the party placing the youth with the plaintiff, the defendant's relationship to the plaintiff was such that its duty extended to warning of latent, dangerous qualities suggested by the youth's history or character (69 Cal. 2d 782, 785) . The Court recognized that other cases impose a duty on those who create a foreseeable peril, not readily discoverable, to warn endangered persons of such potential peril. The defendant owed a duty to inform the plaintiff of any facts that its agents knew or should have known that might endanger the plaintiff's family. Minimally, these facts included homicidal tendencies, a background of violence and cruelty, and the youth's criminal record (69 Cal. 2d 782, 786) .

In Walker v. City of Los Angeles (1993) 12 Cal. App. 4th 1385, 16 Cal. Rptr. 2d 113 , a murder suspect killed a witness who was lulled into a false sense of security by a city homicide detective. Citing the Carpenter case, the court of appeal concluded that the city owed the witness a duty of care (12 Cal. App. 4th 1385, 1401) .

In Carpenter v. City of Los Angeles (1991) 230 Cal. App. 3d 923, 281 Cal. Rptr. 500 , the plaintiff, a witness in a criminal prosecution, was shot by an unknown assailant, allegedly in retaliation for the plaintiff's testimony. The trial court granted the city's motion for summary judgment. The plaintiff appealed. The court of appeal reversed the judgment, concluding that assurances by city police officers that the plaintiff was in no danger from the criminal defendant against whom the plaintiff was testifying were sufficient to create a special relationship between the city and the plaintiff. The relationship imposed a duty to warn the plaintiff about the criminal defendant's threat to the plaintiff's life (230 Cal. App. 3d 923, 931) .

In Robertson v. Wentz (1986) 187 Cal. App. 3d 1281, 232 Cal. Rptr. 634 , the husband of a woman who had been shot and killed by a minor in the course of a robbery sued the minor's mother for wrongful death. The plaintiff sought to impose liability both for the mother's alleged negligence in controlling and supervising the son and on statutory grounds [Civ. Code §§ 1714.1, 1714.3]. The trial court entered summary judgment in favor of the defendant on all causes of action. In reversing the judgment with respect to one of the statutory grounds of liability [Civ. Code § 1714.1], the court of appeal stated that in the absence of statute, a parent ordinarily is not liable for the torts of his or her minor child. Although no common law vicarious liability is imposed on parents, a parent may become liable for an injury caused by the child if the parent's negligence made it possible for the child to cause the injury and probable that the child would do so (187 Cal. App. 3d 1281, 1288) . The court explained that California follows the rule of Restatement (Second) of Torts § 316, which finds a "special relationship" between parent and child, and accordingly places on the parent a duty to exercise reasonable care in controlling the minor child to prevent the child from intentionally harming others or from creating an unreasonable risk of bodily harm to them, if the parent (1) knows or has reason to know that he or she has the ability to control the child, and (2) knows or should know of the necessity and opportunity for exercising such control (187 Cal. App. 3d 1281, 1288-1289) . The parent incurs liability for the minor child's intentional acts of violence or damage to persons or property if, knowing of the child's vicious or destructive tendencies or acts, the parent fails to exercise reasonable measures to restrain or discipline the child, and thus encourages or acquiesces in the misconduct 187 Cal. App. 3d 1281, 1289) . The court concluded, however, that the ability to control the child, rather than the relationship as such, is the basis for a finding of liability on the part of the parent. The absence of this ability is fatal to a claim of legal responsibility. The ability to control is inferred from the relationship of parent to minor child, as it is from the relationship of custodian to charge. It may be disproved by the circumstances surrounding the particular situation. Knowledge of dangerous habits and ability to control the child are prerequisites to imposition of liability (187 Cal. App. 3d 1281, 1290) .

In Duffy v. City of Oceanside (1986) 179 Cal. App. 3d 666, 224 Cal. Rptr. 879 , the court of appeal reversed that part of a judgment that sustained a city's demurrer to a wrongful death action alleging that the city had negligently failed to warn the plaintiffs' decedent of the dangerous propensities of a fellow city employee whom she was dating and who later kidnaped and killed her. The fellow employee was on parole for a previous kidnap, rape, and sexual assault. The court explained that ordinarily a public employer is not liable for failing to warn an employee of the dangerous propensities of another employee, even one whom she is dating. In this case, however, the victim had previously complained to her employer that the parolee had sexually harassed her. At that point, an inference might be reasonably drawn that the parolee might repeat the earlier criminal conduct with the employee as a possible victim. It then became a question of fact as to whether the employer acted reasonably in failing to respond to the harassment report by alerting the employee in some manner to the parolee's past conduct. Whether the magnitude of that threat required the employer to warn the victim is a question of fact. Therefore, the demurrer to that cause of action should have been overruled (179 Cal. App. 3d 666, 674-675) .

In Myers v. Quesenberry (1983) 144 Cal. App. 3d 888, 193 Cal. Rptr. 733 , the court of appeal reversed the trial court's judgment dismissing the plaintiff's complaint, after the lower court had sustained the defendants' demurrer without leave to amend. The court of appeal held that liability may be imposed against two physicians for negligently failing to warn their patient of the foreseeable and dangerous consequences of engaging in certain conduct, which proximately caused injuries to the plaintiff. The defendants' patient suffered from an uncontrolled diabetic condition that caused her to lose control of her car and collide with the plaintiff, who was standing by the side of the road (144 Cal. App. 3d 888, 890-891) . The court held that a special relationship existed between physician and patient that supported an affirmative duty for the benefit of third persons. Therefore, a physician must warn a patient if the patient's condition or medication renders certain conduct, such as driving a car, dangerous to others (144 Cal. App. 3d 888, 892) .

[b] Relationship of Dependence Created Special Relationship

In Lawson v. Superior Court (2010) 180 Cal. App. 4th 1372, 1390, 103 Cal. Rptr. 3d 834 , a female inmate was serving a prison sentence with her infant daughter at a community-based facility pursuant to the Pregnant and Parenting

Women's Alternative Sentencing Program Act (PPWASPA), Pen. Code § 1174 et seq., which provides an alternative to state prison commitment to female prisoners with substance abuse problems who are pregnant or have young children at the time of sentencing. The inmate's daughter developed severe respiratory problems, later diagnosed as double pneumonia, but, according to the complaint, facility staff members repeatedly denied requests for treatment for eight to eleven days. A staff member eventually took the inmate's daughter for treatment, but the delay resulted in permanent injury. The inmate, on behalf of herself and her daughter, sued the State, certain state employees, the facility, and certain facility employees, including causes of action for negligence, infliction of emotional distress, and failure to furnish medical care to a prisoner under Gov. Code § 845.6. The trial court sustained defendants' demurrers to most of the causes of action, but the court of appeal granted a writ of mandate directing the trial court to vacate portions of its order sustaining the demurrers. The court held that the complaint adequately alleged a negligence cause of action brought on behalf of the daughter against the state employees working in the facility. The court noted that case law imposed an affirmative duty on a person to protect another from harm when a "special relationship" exists, typically found when the plaintiff is particularly vulnerable and dependent on the defendant, who correspondingly has some control over plaintiff's welfare. The court noted that a special relationship exists between a prisoner and his or her jailer, and thus because a child residing with his or her incarcerated mother under PPWASPA is similarly dependent on the personnel running the housing facility when medical care is needed by the child, a special relationship between the facility and the daughter existed sufficient to impose a duty to care on facility staff (180 Cal. App. 4th 1372, 1389-1390) .

In Giraldo v. Department of Corrections & Rehabilitation (2008) 168 Cal. App. 4th 231, 85 Cal. Rptr. 3d 371 , plaintiff, a self-described "male-to-female transgender person" with the appearance of a female, was an inmate of the California prison system and was incarcerated with male inmates. Despite her repeated complaints to her jailers that she was being beaten and raped on a regular basis, plaintiff alleged that her jailers did nothing to protect her from this continual abuse. Plaintiff sued the Department of Corrections, alleging in one cause of action negligence based on a special relationship between the jailers and herself. The trial court sustained a demurrer on this cause of action, but the court of appeal reversed. The court of appeal held that because a prisoner is dependent and vulnerable, there is a special relationship between a jailer and a prisoner such that the jailer owes a duty of care to the prisoner to take steps to protect the prisoner from foreseeable harm (168 Cal. App. 4th 231, 250-251) . Recognizing that the issue was apparently one of first impression in California, the court noted that recognition of such a duty was supported by numerous authorities, including various treatises and state and federal case law (168 Cal. App. 4th 231, 246-250) .

In Doe 1 v. City of Murrieta (2002) 102 Cal. App. 4th 899, 126 Cal. Rptr. 2d 213 , the plaintiffs were two minor females who were participants in a program sponsored by a city police department that was designed to encourage teenagers to consider careers in law enforcement. While on patrol with a police officer as part of that program, the plaintiffs engaged in consensual sexual activities with him. The plaintiffs then brought suit based on sexual abuse against the city and the police department, alleging causes of action based on vicarious liability, breach of contract, and negligent supervision. After the trial court granted demurrers and summary judgment in favor of the defendants on all causes of action, the court of appeal affirmed in part and reversed in part. As to the cause of action for negligent supervision, the court of appeal reversed the trial court. Analogizing the facts of the case to other sexual abuse cases in which a special relationship was found, cases involving students under the protection of a school district and boy scouts under the supervision of the Boy Scouts of Am., the court concluded that the city and the police department had a special relationship with the two plaintiffs and therefore a duty to protect the minors from sexual abuse committed by the police officer during the course of program activities (102 Cal. App. 4th 899, 917-918) . The court also concluded that a duty of care could be imposed under the circumstances through application of the traditional, policy-driven Rowland factors, especially because of indications that the plaintiffs, who were spending excessive time with the officer, were infatuated with him and thus the foreseeability that sexual activities might occur (102 Cal. App. 4th 899, 913-916) .

Ronald S. v. County of San Diego (1993) 16 Cal. App. 4th 887, 895, 20 Cal. Rptr. 2d 418 , was a negligence action brought against a county by a minor declared a dependent of that county by the courts. The county had placed the minor in an abusive foster home, approved his adoption by the abusive foster parents, and transferred funds belonging to the minor to the adoptive parents, who converted them to their own use. The court of appeal upheld the trial court's various rulings that the county had a duty of care toward the minor based on the special relationship that existed between the county and the minor. This special relationship existed because the minor was wholly dependent on the county to supervise his placement. It was foreseeable that the minor would be harmed if the county did not adequately investigate the qualifications of any proposed foster or adoptive parents (16 Cal. App. 4th 887, 895) .

In Pamela L. v. Farmer (1980) 112 Cal. App. 3d 206, 169 Cal. Rptr. 282 , the court of appeal reversed the lower court's dismissal of the plaintiffs' action against the defendant after the lower court sustained a demurrer to the plaintiffs' second amended complaint with regard to the defendant. The plaintiffs, three minor girls, brought the action for assault and battery and negligence against a man who allegedly sexually molested them and against the defendant, the man's wife, who had invited the plaintiffs to play in her swimming pool even though she knew of her husband's molestation of women and children in the past. In dictum, the court noted that if the case were analyzed in terms of a special relationship, the necessary special relationship could be inferred between the defendant and the plaintiffs. The court said that the law appears to be heading toward a recognition of the duty to aid or protect in any relation of dependence or of mutual dependence. In this case, the plaintiffs were dependent on the defendant because as children they were vulnerable to this sort of misconduct and unable to protect themselves against it. By inviting the children to her home, the defendant assumed the special relationship. She recognized that special duty and relationship when she assured the plaintiffs' parents that it would be safe for them to play at her house (112 Cal. App. 3d 206, 211-212) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
B. Duty
6. Duty Owed by or to Particular Persons or Entities

16-165 California Points & Authorities § 165.131

§ 165.131 Defendant's Duty to Control or Warn of Third Party's Dangerous Conduct Extended to Foreseeable Victims

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief].

DEFENDANT OWED A DUTY TO PLAINTIFF AND BREACHED THAT DUTY BECAUSE DEFENDANT SHOULD HAVE _____ [WARNED PLAINTIFF OF THE FORESEEABLY DANGEROUS CONDUCT OF _____ (specify third party) and/or CONTROLLED THE FORESEEABLY DANGEROUS CONDUCT OF _____ (specify third party)] BECAUSE DEFENDANT STOOD IN A SPECIAL RELATIONSHIP TO _____ (specify third party), THE PERSON WHOSE CONDUCT CREATED THE DANGER, AND PLAINTIFF WAS A FORESEEABLE VICTIM.

Duty Extends to Foreseeable Victims. The duty to warn a person of the dangerous conduct of another, which is imposed because of a special relationship between the defendant and the person whose conduct created the danger, extends to other foreseeable victims who are likely to be in close contact with the original victim, such as a young child who is likely to be near his or her parent (Hedlund v. Superior Court (1983) 34 Cal. 3d 695, 705-706, 194 Cal. Rptr. 805, 669 P.2d 41).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that the plaintiff was a foreseeable victim of the wrongdoer, with whom the defendant had a special relationship that imposed on the defendant a duty to control or warn [see Hedlund v. Superior Court (1983) 34 Cal. 3d 695, 705-706, 194 Cal. Rptr. 805, 669 P.2d 41] . It should be combined with the form in § 165.130, if applicable to the particular case.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel may discuss the various relationships among the involved parties and argue that the plaintiff was a foreseeable victim.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For related legal background, research and procedural guides, and forms of complaint for negligence, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For additional points and authorities to combine with this form, see § 165.130. For points and authorities supporting and opposing demurrers, see Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities in § 165.230 et seq. may be used in an appropriate case to oppose the points and authorities in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Duty Extends to Foreseeable Victims

The factual and procedural background of Hedlund v. Superior Court (1983) 34 Cal. 3d 695, 194 Cal. Rptr. 805, 669 P.2d 41 , is discussed in § 165.130[3][a]. In addition to holding that two therapists owed a duty to protect the plaintiff from danger from their patient, the Court held that this duty extended to the plaintiff's son. The Court stated that the therapists' duty extended to the son because there could be no reasonable difference of opinion that the risk of harm to him was foreseeable (34 Cal. 3d 695, 705) . The Court compared the situation to that in Dillon v. Legg (1968) 68 Cal. 2d 728, 69 Cal. Rptr. 72, 441 P.2d 912 (discussed in § 165.50[3][a]), which allowed recovery to a mother in an action in which the mother suffered mental distress from witnessing the death of her child and held that it is equally foreseeable that a small child of a person who is injured will not be far distant from his or her mother. The Court stated that it is not unreasonable to recognize the existence of a duty to persons in a close relationship with the person who is the object of a patient's threat. A therapists must consider the existence of those persons both in evaluating the seriousness of the danger posed by the patient and in determining the appropriate steps to be taken to protect the object of the patient's threat (34 Cal. 3d 695, 705-706) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
B. Duty
6. Duty Owed by or to Particular Persons or Entities

16-165 California Points & Authorities §§ 165.132-165.139

[Reserved]

§§ 165.132[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
B. Duty
6. Duty Owed by or to Particular Persons or Entities

16-165 California Points & Authorities § 165.140

§ 165.140 Defendant Owed and Breached Duty to Rescuer

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief].

DEFENDANT OWED A DUTY TO PLAINTIFF BECAUSE PLAINTIFF WAS INJURED IN THE COURSE OF UNDERTAKING A NECESSARY RESCUE AND MAY RECOVER FROM THE PERSON WHOSE NEGLIGENCE CREATED THE PERIL THAT NECESSITATED THAT RESCUE.

Defendant Liable for Injuries Sustained by Necessary Rescuer. Persons injured in the course of undertaking a necessary rescue may, absent rash or reckless conduct on their part, recover from the person whose negligence created the peril that necessitated the rescue (Solgaard v. Guy F. Atkinson Co. (1971) 6 Cal. 3d 361, 368, 99 Cal. Rptr. 29, 491 P.2d 821).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that the defendant owed a duty to the plaintiff because the plaintiff was a foreseeable rescuer [see Solgaard v. Guy F. Atkinson Co. (1971) 6 Cal. 3d 361, 368, 99 Cal. Rptr. 29, 491 P.2d 821] . It should be combined with the form in § 165.30 if applicable to the particular case.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel may show that the plaintiff was injured in effecting a necessary rescue, and that the defendant's negligence created the situation of peril, and argue that the defendant should be charged with having proximately caused not only the peril that necessitated the rescue, but also any injury suffered during the course of the rescue [see Solgaard v. Guy F. Atkinson Co. (1971) 6 Cal. 3d 361, 368, 99 Cal. Rptr. 29, 491 P.2d 821] .

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For related legal background, research and procedural guides, and forms of complaint for negligence, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For additional points and authorities to combine with this form, see § 165.30. For points and authorities supporting and opposing demurrers, see Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities in § 165.240 et seq. may be used in an appropriate case to oppose the points and authorities in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Defendant Liable for Injuries Sustained by Necessary Rescuer

In Solgaard v. Guy F. Atkinson Co. (1971) 6 Cal. 3d 361, 99 Cal. Rptr. 29, 491 P.2d 821 , the plaintiff was one of several doctors who had agreed to provide medical services to the defendant's employees at a construction project. When two of the defendant's employees became pinned in a trench, the defendant's representatives contacted the plaintiff, who slipped and hurt his back while climbing down to the injured men. The trial court entered judgment on a jury verdict for the plaintiff, and the defendant appealed.

The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment, holding that the plaintiff was a rescuer as a matter of law (6 Cal. 3d 361, 367) . The Court noted that persons injured in the course of undertaking a necessary rescue may, absent rash or reckless conduct on their part, recover from persons whose negligence created the peril that necessitated the rescue. The theory that underlies the rescue rule is that rescuers as a class are always foreseeable if the defendant's negligence endangers anyone. Therefore, if a defendant creates a situation of peril for one person (the victim), the defendant may properly be charged with having proximately caused not only that peril, but also the rescue and any injury suffered during its course (6 Cal. 3d 361, 368) . In this case, the evidence was uncontradicted that the employees were in peril of their lives, that immediate action was required to save or assist them, that the plaintiff undertook to rescue them, and that he was injured in the course of doing so. Therefore, the plaintiff was entitled to the benefits of the rescuer doctrine (6 Cal. 3d 361, 369) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Defendant Liable for Injuries Sustained by Necessary Rescuer

In Sears v. Morrison (1999) 76 Cal. App. 4th 577, 90 Cal. Rptr. 2d 528 , the plaintiff was injured while attempting to rescue a person who, while working on a "swamp cooler," tripped over an electrical cord, causing the machinery to fall on him. The plaintiff sued both the injured worker and his mother, who owned the property. The trial court granted summary judgment for the defendants on the grounds that the rescue doctrine did not apply if the party whose negligence created the peril is also the party being rescued. The court of appeal reversed the judgment as it applied to the injured worker, concluding that although the rescue doctrine has traditionally been applied to allow recovery to one who rescues a third party from a peril created by the defendant's negligence, the doctrine may also be applied if the rescued party was the defendant whose negligence created the peril. In so holding, the court concluded that most of the policy considerations that justify the doctrine in third-party cases apply equally if the party being rescued is the original negligent party (76 Cal. App. 4th 577, 581) . The court rejected a contrary conclusion reached by the court of appeal in Holland v. Crumb (1994) 26 Cal. App. 4th 1844, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 366 , noting that the court in Holland cited no authority and provided no reasoned analysis for its conclusion that the rescue doctrine applied only if the rescued victim was a third party (76 Cal. App. 4th 577, 588) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
B. Duty
6. Duty Owed by or to Particular Persons or Entities

16-165 California Points & Authorities §§ 165.141-165.149

[Reserved]

§§ 165.141[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
B. Duty
6. Duty Owed by or to Particular Persons or Entities

16-165 California Points & Authorities § 165.150

§ 165.150 Defendant Owed and Breached Voluntarily Assumed Duty

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief].

DEFENDANT OWED A DUTY TO PLAINTIFF BECAUSE DEFENDANT ENTERED ON AN AFFIRMATIVE COURSE OF CONDUCT THAT AFFECTED PLAINTIFF'S INTERESTS, VOLUNTARILY ASSUMING A DUTY TO ACT. DEFENDANT SHOULD THEREFORE BE LIABLE FOR HIS/HER/ITS NEGLIGENT _____ [ACTS or OMISSIONS].

A. Liability Based on Voluntary Assumption of Duty. If the defendant enters on an affirmative course of conduct affecting the interests of another, he or she is deemed to have assume a duty to act and will be liable for related negligent acts or omissions (Schwartz v. Helms Bakery Ltd. (1967) 67 Cal. 2d 232, 238, 60 Cal. Rptr. 510, 430 P.2d 68).

[Optional] B. Services Necessary for Protection of Third Person. A defendant who undertakes to render services to another person that the defendant should recognize as necessary for the protection of a third person or a third person's property has a duty to the third person to exercise reasonable care in the undertaking. The defendant is subject to liability to the third person for breach of this duty if (1) the defendant's failure to exercise reasonable care increases the risk of harm to the third person, (2) the defendant has undertaken to perform a duty owed by the other person to the third person, or (3) the third person suffers harm because either the third person or the person to whom the defendant rendered the services relied on the defendant's undertaking (FNS Mortgage Serv. Corp. v. Pacific Gen. Group, Inc. (1994) 24 Cal. App. 4th 1564, 1572, 29 Cal. Rptr. 2d 916).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that the defendant owed a duty to the plaintiff based on the defendant's voluntary assumption of a duty. This argument may arise in several procedural contexts, including opposing a motion for nonsuit and opposing a demurrer to the plaintiff's complaint [see, e.g., Schwartz v. Helms Bakery Ltd. (1967) 67 Cal. 2d 232, 235, 60 Cal. Rptr. 510, 430 P.2d 68 (nonsuit); Brockett v. Kitchen Boyd Motor Co. (1968) 264 Cal. App. 2d 69, 70, 70 Cal. Rptr. 136 (demurrer)]. Optional Paragraph B should be used if the defendant rendered services to another person that the defendant should have recognized as necessary for the protection of a third person or a third person's property [see FNS Mortgage Serv. Corp. v. Pacific Gen. Group, Inc. (1994) 24 Cal. App. 4th 1564, 1572, 29 Cal. Rptr. 2d 916] . This form should be combined with the form in § 165.30, if appropriate to the case.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should discuss the defendant's affirmative course of conduct, how that conduct affected the plaintiff's interests, and how public policy considerations required some affirmative action on the defendant's part to avoid harm to the plaintiff [see Schwartz v. Helms Bakery Ltd. (1967) 67 Cal. 2d 232, 238, 60 Cal. Rptr. 510, 430 P.2d 68] . If Optional Paragraph B is used, counsel should discuss the services the defendant undertook to provide, their necessity for the protection of the plaintiff or the plaintiff's property, and either (1) the increase in the risk of harm to the plaintiff caused by the defendant, (2) the duty owed by the other person to the plaintiff that the defendant has undertaken to perform, or (3) the reliance on the defendant's undertaking by either the plaintiff or the person to whom the defendant undertook to render the services [see FNS Mortgage Serv. Corp. v. Pacific Gen. Group, Inc. (1994) 24 Cal. App. 4th 1564, 1572, 29 Cal. Rptr. 2d 916] .

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For related legal background, research and procedural guides, and forms of complaint for negligence, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For additional points and authorities to combine with this form, see § 165.30. For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities in § 165.240 et seq. may be used in an appropriate case to oppose the points and authorities in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Liability Based on Voluntary Assumption of Duty

The factual and procedural background of Schwartz v. Helms Bakery Ltd. (1967) 67 Cal. 2d 232, 60 Cal. Rptr. 510, 430 P.2d 68 , is discussed in § 165.31[3][a]. The Court noted the common-law concept that although one individual need do nothing to rescue another from peril not of that individual's own making, if that person undertakes to do an act, he or she must do it with care. If the defendant enters on an affirmative course of conduct affecting the interests of another, he or she assumes a duty to act and is liable for resultant negligent acts or omissions. In addition, if the actor's conduct has brought him or her into a human relationship with another, of such character that sound social policy requires some affirmative action or some precaution on his or her part to avoid harm, the duty to act or take precaution is imposed by law (67 Cal. 2d 232, 238) .

[b] Services Necessary for Protection of Third Person

In FNS Mortgage Serv. Corp. v. Pacific Gen. Group, Inc. (1994) 24 Cal. App. 4th 1564, 1572, 29 Cal. Rptr. 2d 916 , the defendant was a nonprofit association that promoted uniformity in the plumbing trade through its uniform plumbing code (UPC) and its listing of plumbing products that met the standards of the UPC. Virtually all public entities have adopted the UPC. Unlisted pipe not bearing the UPC logo is unmarketable, because building inspectors will not sanction its use, plumbing wholesalers will not sell it, and plumbers will not buy it. The defendant tests samples of plumbing products before listing them and requires manufacturers to enter into an agreement to make the product according to the defendant's standards and to permit unannounced inspections by the defendant at the manufacturer's expense. In March 1985, the defendant discovered that a particular manufacturer's pipe did not meet its standards and ordered the manufacturer to destroy it or remove the UPC logo. In May 1985, the defendant required this manufacturer to cease using the UPC logo on its pipe for 30 days because the pipe failed the defendant's tests. In that same month, however, the defendant renewed its listing agreement with the manufacturer for the same pipe. The plaintiffs contracted for the construction of a multi-unit apartment complex. This contract and a subcontract for installation of the plumbing required all plumbing systems to meet UPC specifications. From May 1985 through July 1985, the subcontractor purchased from a distributor pipe made by this manufacturer that was listed with the defendant and bore the UPC logo. The plaintiffs filed suit against the contractor, the distributor, and the defendant after the pipe prematurely deteriorated and caused substantial damage to the apartment complex. The trial court granted summary judgment for the defendant, holding that the defendant had no duty to protect the plaintiffs from the risk of damage by defective pipe. The plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that under the Restatement (Second) of Torts (Second) § 324A, a defendant that undertakes to render services to another person, which the defendant should recognize as necessary for the protection of a third person or that third person's property, is subject to liability to that third person for failing to exercise reasonable care in the undertaking, if (1) the defendant's failure to exercise reasonable care increases the risk of harm to the third person, (2) the defendant has undertaken to perform a duty owed by the other person to the third person, or (3) the third person suffers harm because either the third person or the person to whom the defendant rendered the services relied on the defendant's undertaking. The court noted that (1) the defendant had undertaken to render the service of inspecting pipe manufacturers and not listing those who did not adhere to its standards, (2) the defendant should recognize that its services are necessary for the protection of consumers who acquire and install the pipe, (3) the defendant had undertaken to perform a duty owed by local building officials to consumers, and (4) the defendant's failure to exercise reasonable care in its activities increased the risk of harm to consumers from defective pipe because local building officials rely on the defendant's undertaking (24 Cal. App. 4th 1564, 1572) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Liability Based on Voluntary Assumption of Duty

In Coffee v. McDonnell-Douglas Corp. (1972) 8 Cal. 3d 551, 105 Cal. Rptr. 358, 503 P.2d 1366 , the California Supreme Court affirmed judgment for the plaintiff in an action for damages resulting from the defendant's failure to discover the plaintiff's disease in the course of a preemployment physical examination. The Court stated that an employer generally owes no duty to his or her prospective employees to ascertain whether or not they are physically fit for the job they seek, but the employer is liable if he or she assumes that duty and performs it negligently. The Court noted that one who voluntarily undertakes to perform an action must do so with due care (8 Cal. 3d 551, 557) .

In Jacoves v. United Merch. Corp. (1992) 9 Cal. App. 4th 88, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 468 , parents sued the psychiatric hospital in which their adult son was treated. The complaint alleged negligent infliction of emotional distress based on their son's suicide shortly after the hospital released him into their custody at the treating doctors' insistence, despite his continued exhibition of suicidal tendencies. The plaintiffs alleged that the hospital had assumed a duty of care to them when the hospital required them to contract with the hospital for their son's care and that the son's doctors, as agents of the hospital, had assumed a duty of care to them by involving them in their son's treatment through family therapy sessions. The court of appeal reversed summary judgment for the hospital, holding that a hospital or doctor may be liable to the parents of a psychiatric patient for negligent infliction of emotional distress caused by the breach of a duty assumed by the hospital or doctor. This assumed duty may arise if the parents are used as active instrumentalities in the patient's treatment (9 Cal. App. 4th 88, 109) .

In Coca-Cola Bottling Co. v. Superior Court (1991) 233 Cal. App. 3d 1273, 286 Cal. Rptr. 855 , the plaintiff brought an action against his former employer for negligent spoliation of evidence, based on the employer's alleged failure to preserve a truck that was involved in an accident that injured the plaintiff. The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's denial of the defendant's motion for summary judgment. The court rejected the defendant's argument that, as the owner of the truck, it had an unfettered right to dispose of the truck without notice to anyone else and with total immunity from any liability for that disposal. The court held that this argument ignored the defendant's status as a party litigant having a duty not to lose or destroy evidence relevant to the lawsuit and that evidence indicating that a mixed question of law and fact may exist regarding the defendant's voluntary assumption of a duty to preserve the truck (233 Cal. App. 3d 1273, 1294 n.9).

AIM Ins. Co. v. Culcasi (1991) 229 Cal. App. 3d 209, 215, 280 Cal. Rptr. 766 , was a declaratory relief action brought by a liability insurance carrier against its insured. The complaint sought a declaration that the plaintiff had no potential duty to indemnify the insured should he be found liable in an action by the insured's employee, based on the insured's failure to properly complete the employee's application for medical insurance. The trial court granted the plaintiff's motion for summary judgment, and the defendant appealed. The court of appeal affirmed, principally on the basis that the carrier was not obligated to indemnify or defend because the underlying complaint did not allege any property damage and the policy did not provide coverage for liability based on emotional distress under its bodily injury clause. The court noted that the defendant had a duty to exercise due care in the sending of the application once he volunteered to do so, whether or not the defendant had a contractual duty to send the employee's health plan application to the health insurance carrier (229 Cal. App. 3d 209, 216) .

In Bloomberg v. Interinsurance Exch. (1984) 162 Cal. App. 3d 571, 207 Cal. Rptr. 853 , the plaintiff alleged that his son was killed by a drunk driver while the son was waiting for a tow truck that the defendant negligently failed to send. The court of appeal held that, on the facts alleged in the complaint, it could not state that the defendant owed no duty of care to the son, because the defendant's undertaking to send the tow truck clearly affected the son's interest. The son relied on the defendant's undertaking and returned to the car to await help. Had he not expected the defendant to arrive, he might have made other arrangements for assistance. The court found further that the drunk driver's act, if proven, was foreseeable, and that if the plaintiffs could prove the defendant's negligence, the defendant would be held liable for its breach of duty (162 Cal. App. 3d 571, 575-576) .

In Bock v. County of Los Angeles (1983) 150 Cal. App. 3d 65, 197 Cal. Rptr. 470 , the wife of an accident victim sued the county and the county coroner for failing to notify her when her dead husband was identified. The court of appeal reversed the trial court's sustaining of the defendant's demurrer without leave to amend. The court held that although a county coroner ordinarily has no duty to notify a decedent's next of kin, failure to so notify could give rise to a cause of action for negligent infliction of emotional distress if, as in this case, the county voluntarily assumes a duty to assist in locating a victim and then fails to act in a careful and reasonably diligent manner in carrying out the assumed duty. In such cases, the conduct of the public entity or its employees, in a situation of dependency, creates a special relationship that justifies detrimental reliance on the public entity's statements or promises (150 Cal. App. 3d 65, 72) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
B. Duty
6. Duty Owed by or to Particular Persons or Entities

16-165 California Points & Authorities §§ 165.151-165.159

[Reserved]

§§ 165.151[Reserved]

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
B. Duty
6. Duty Owed by or to Particular Persons or Entities

16-165 California Points & Authorities § 165.160

§ 165.160 Defendant Owed and Breached Duty to Plaintiff Despite Sudden Onset of Mental Illness

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief].

AN EVIDENTIARY SHOWING THAT DEFENDANT SUFFERED A SUDDEN AND UNANTICIPATED MENTAL ILLNESS THAT RENDERED HIM/HER INCAPABLE OF ACTING IN A CAREFUL MANNER DOES NOT, AS A MATTER OF LAW, PRECLUDE LIABILITY FOR NEGLIGENCE.

Sudden Mental Illness No Defense to Negligence. Sudden mental illness may is not a defense to harmful conduct. In a negligence action, the harm caused by such an individual's behavior must be judged by the objective reasonable person standard (Bashi v. Wodarz (1996) 45 Cal. App. 4th 1314, 1323, 53 Cal. Rptr. 2d 635).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a plaintiff's contention in a negligence action that the defendant was liable for the injuries caused despite the defendant's having suffered a sudden and unanticipated mental illness that rendered the defendant incapable of acting in a careful manner [see Bashi v. Wodarz (1996) 45 Cal. App. 4th 1314, 1323, 53 Cal. Rptr. 2d 635] . It should be combined with any of the forms in § 165.30, if applicable to the particular case.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel may discuss evidence of the defendant's sudden and unanticipated mental illness at the time of the accident and argue that the illness did not relieve the defendant of liability [see Bashi v. Wodarz (1996) 45 Cal. App. 4th 1314, 1323, 53 Cal. Rptr.

2d 635] .

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For related legal background, research and procedural guides, and forms of complaint for negligence, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For additional points and authorities to combine with this form, see § 165.30. For points and authorities supporting and opposing demurrers, see Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Sudden Mental Illness No Defense to Negligence

In Bashi v. Wodarz (1996) 45 Cal. App. 4th 1314, 53 Cal. Rptr. 2d 635 , the plaintiffs were involved in a rear-end collision with the defendant's vehicle and sued for negligence. The defendant produced medical expert evidence indicating that the accident was unavoidable due to the sudden, unanticipated onset of her mental illness. The trial court granted a summary judgment motion by the defendant, on the ground that the sudden anticipated mental disorder precluded the defendant from being negligent as a matter of law.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that an evidentiary showing that the defendant suffered a sudden and unanticipated mental illness that rendered it impossible for her to control her vehicle does not, as a matter of law, preclude her liability for negligence. In arriving at this decision the court discussed the case of Cohen v. Petty (D.C. Cir. 1933) 65 F.2d 820 , which held that as between an innocent passenger and an innocent fainting driver, the passenger must suffer. The driver in Cohen had suffered a sudden illness rendering him unconscious. The defendant admitted that no prior California decision had decided whether the Cohen rule also applied if a defendant suffered a sudden and unanticipated mental, as opposed to physical illness, and urged the court to extend the Cohen rule to any sudden illness, without distinguishing between physical and mental illness. In declining to extend the application of Cohen, the court relied on (1) Civ. Code § 41, which provides that a person of unsound mind is civilly liable for wrongs caused by that person unless at the time of the act he or she was capable of knowing that it was wrongful, and (2) the Restatement (Second) of Torts, which provides that unless the actor is a child, his or her insanity or other mental deficiency does not relieve the actor from liability for conduct that does not conform to the standard of a reasonable person under similar circumstances. The court concluded that sudden mental illness is not a defense to harmful conduct and that the harm caused by the individual's behavior must be judged by the objective reasonable person standard in the context of a negligence action, as expressed in Civ. Code § 41 (45 Cal. App. 4th 1314, 1323) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
B. Duty
6. Duty Owed by or to Particular Persons or Entities

16-165 California Points & Authorities §§ 165.161-165.169

[Reserved]

§§ 165.161[Reserved]

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
B. Duty
6. Duty Owed by or to Particular Persons or Entities

16-165 California Points & Authorities § 165.170

§ 165.170 Defendant Owed and Breached Duty to Reveal Risk of HIV Infection

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a supporting memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT MAY BE LIABLE FOR NEGLIGENT TRANSMISSION OF HIV INFECTION TO PLAINTIFF BECAUSE DEFENDANT KNEW OR HAD REASON TO KNOW OF _____ [HIS or HER] INFECTION AND FAILED TO WARN OF THE RISK BEFORE ENGAGING IN UNPROTECTED SEXUAL ACTIVITY WITH PLAINTIFF.

Negligent Transmission of HIV. A plaintiff who contracts HIV from a sexual partner who purports to be in a monogamous relationship with plaintiff may state a cause of action for negligent transmission of HIV if the defendant, without revealing the risk of infection, engages in unprotected sexual activity with plaintiff when defendant had actual knowledge that he or she was infected with HIV, or, in the absence of actual knowledge, if defendant under the totality of the circumstances had reason to know that he or she was infected (see John B. v. Superior Court (2006) 38 Cal. 4th 1177, 1191, 45 Cal. Rptr. 3d 316, 137 P.3d 153).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a cause of action for negligent transmission of HIV when defendant knew or had reason to know that he or she was infected with HIV but had unprotected sexual activities with plaintiff without revealing the risk of HIV infection. While the extent of the duty is not yet defined when the sexual partners are not in a long-term relationship, the Supreme Court has recognized a cause of action when the defendant makes representations to plaintiff that defendant is not engaging in sexual activities with other partners and is disease-free, and convinces plaintiff to engage in sex without the use of condoms.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. Thus, counsel should include facts describing defendant's representations to plaintiff prior to the sexual activity at issue, including any representations about monogamy, being free of sexually transmitted disease, or any other conduct by defendant relied on by plaintiff when making a decision to engage in sex without the use of condoms. Counsel should also include any known facts about defendants other activities that should have put defendant on notice that he or she was actually or probably infected with HIV.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For related legal background, research and procedural guides, and forms of complaint for negligence, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Negligent Transmission of HIV

In John B. v. Superior Court (2006) 38 Cal. 4th 1177, 45 Cal. Rptr. 3d 316, 137 P.3d 153 , plaintiff was the wife of defendant. Prior to their marriage, defendant represented to plaintiff that he did not have any sexually-transmitted diseases and that he was in a monogamous relationship with her. In light if these representations and at defendant's insistence, plaintiff agreed to forego the use of condoms when they engaged in sexual relations. About three months after they were married, plaintiff became ill and learned that she was infected with HIV. Defendant was then tested and also determined to be infected. Although defendant insisted that his wife had infected him, about a year after the positive tests defendant admitted that he had engaged in unprotected sexual relations with other men before they were married. Plaintiff sued her husband for intentional and negligent infliction of emotional distress, fraud, and negligence, alleging that her husband's sexual encounters with other men had not ended when they were married and that he had infected her with HIV. During pretrial discovery, plaintiff sought through the use of interrogatories and other discovery devices to gain information about her husband's sexual and medical history, but defendant resisted, primarily on privacy grounds. The trial court overruled defendant's objections to the discovery. Defendant filed a petition for writ of mandate. The court of appeal granted the petition as to some of the discovery requests and denied relief as to others. Defendant appealed.

The California Supreme Court reversed the court of appeal in part and remanded for further proceedings. The Court noted that resolution of the discovery dispute required first determining the scope of plaintiff's available cause of action. The Court, focusing exclusively on the cause of action for negligence, held that a plaintiff who has contracted HIV from a sexual partner may state a cause of action for negligent transmission of HIV. Moreover, the Court also concluded that this cause of action does not require actual knowledge on the part of the defendant that he or she was infected at the time of transmission. It is sufficient that the defendant, under the totality of the circumstances, had reason to know that he or she was infected. A person would have "reason to know" of infection if there is sufficient information to cause a reasonably intelligent person to infer that he or she is infected with the virus or that infection is so highly probable that his or her conduct would be predicated on that assumption (38 Cal. 4th 1177, 1191) .

The Supreme Court cautioned, however, that its holding should be understood in the context of the facts of the present case. Plaintiff and defendant were engaged and eventually married, the husband represented himself as monogamous and disease-free, and insisted that the couple stop using condoms, and the wife stopped using condoms in reliance on those representations. The Supreme Court did not consider the scope of any duty that might be owed by a person when the relationship does not extend beyond the sexual encounter itself or does not contemplate sexual exclusivity, or when the defendant has not made representations of being disease-free or insisted on having sex without the use of condoms (38 Cal. 4th 1177, 1193) .

Addressing the discovery dispute, the Court noted that the right to privacy is not absolute and discovery may be ordered when a litigant has put his or her own medical condition at issue. Balancing the defendant's privacy rights with the need for the information at trial, the Court permitted discovery into the husband's sexual conduct and knowledge of his HIV status, but because of a negative HIV test the husband received right after their marriage, the Court limited discovery to the relevant time period between which the husband could have first been infected and the time when the couple stopped engaging in sexual relations (38 Cal. 4th 1177, 1199-1200) . The Court noted, however, that the relevant time period could be expanded should plaintiff provide evidence bringing into doubt the accuracy of the negative HIV test result relied on by the defendant (38 Cal. 4th 1177, 1201) .

48 of 199 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
B. Duty
6. Duty Owed by or to Particular Persons or Entities

16-165 California Points & Authorities §§ 165.171-165.179

[Reserved]

§§ 165.171[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
B. Duty
6. Duty Owed by or to Particular Persons or Entities

16-165 California Points & Authorities § 165.180

§ 165.180 Duty Owed by Employer at Multi-Employer Worksite

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

AN EMPLOYER AT A MULTI-EMPLOYER WORK SITE OWES A DUTY TO THE EMPLOYEES OF OTHER EMPLOYERS AT THE SITE TO REPORT NON-OBVIOUS HAZARDS ABOUT WHICH THE EMPLOYER LEARNS DUE TO EXPOSURE BY ITS OWN EMPLOYEES DURING THE COURSE OF THEIR WORK.

Duty of Employer at Multi-Employer Sites to Report Hazards. Taken in conjunction, Lab. Code § 6400(b) and 8 Cal. Code Regs. § 336.11 impose a duty of care on each employer engaged at a multi-employer work site, both construction and non-construction, to report all non-obvious hazards about which the employer learns because its own employees were exposed to the hazard during the course of their work, even if that employer did not create the hazard, and a breach of this duty is actionable in tort by any worker at the site who is subsequently injured by the hazard if it is not reported (Suarez v. Pacific Northstar Mechanical, Inc. (2009) 180 Cal. App. 4th 430, 445, 103 Cal. Rptr. 3d 168).

[2] Comments

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that an employer at a multi-employer work site may be liable to the employees of another employer at the site for failing to report a non-obvious hazard about which the employer became aware due to exposure by its own employees, when the plaintiff employees were injured by the same hazard.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the point of law stated. Thus, counsel should include facts showing that defendant employer learned of a non-obvious hazard when its own employees were exposed to the hazard, that the defendant employer failed to report the hazard to a party in control of the site or responsible for work-site safety, and plaintiff was subsequently injured by the same hazard.

These points and authorities may be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Duty of Employer at Multi-Employer Sites to Report Hazards

In Suarez v. Pacific Northstar Mechanical, Inc. (2009) 180 Cal. App. 4th 430, 103 Cal. Rptr. 3d 168 , plaintiffs were two employees of a general contractor hired to oversee a tenant improvement project. Plaintiffs were injured when one of them climbed to the top of a ladder, grabbed an I-bolt to steady himself, and received an electrical shock caused by an ungrounded light fixture hanging from the I-bolt, which caused him to fall off the ladder and land on the other plaintiff. Plaintiffs sued the premises owner, and subsequently added as a defendant a subcontractor on the work project after learning that, prior to plaintiffs' accident, an employee of that subcontractor had been shocked by the same ungrounded light fixture, had reported the hazard to his employer, but that employer failed to report the hazard or take any corrective action. The parties discovered that the ungrounded light fixture was a hazard created by the prior owners of the building, rather than by anyone working on the current improvement project. The trial court granted summary judgment for the subcontractor and plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. The court first held that under standard common-law tort principles, a person who was not responsible for creating a hazard is not liable for failing to take action to assist or protect another from that hazard unless a special relationship exists between the parties. Because an employer such as defendant was not in such a special relationship with the employees of another employer, liability could not be imposed under the common law (180 Cal. App. 4th 430, 437-438) . In addition, the language of the contract between the general contractor and the defendant did not support the imposition of liability for failing to correct or report the hazard (180 Cal. App. 4th 430, 439) . However, the court noted that under the Supreme Court's holding in Elsner v. Uveges (2004) 34 Cal. 4th 915, 22 Cal. Rptr. 3d 530, 102 P.3d 915 , Cal-OSHA statutes and regulations may be used to impose a duty of care on employers that, if breached, may be the basis of a tort suit brought by an injured employee (180 Cal. App. 4th 430, 440) . Consistent with that principle, the court of appeal held that two Cal-OSHA provisions, Lab. Code § 6400(b) and 8 Cal. Code Regs. § 336.11, impose a duty of care on each employer engaged at a multi-employer work site, both construction and non-construction, to report all non-obvious hazards about which the employer learns because its own employees were exposed to the hazard during the course of their work, even if that employer did not create the hazard. The duty to report is fulfilled under these provisions if the employer reports the hazard to the employer responsible for creating the hazard, to the employer responsible for safety and health conditions at the worksite, or to the employer actually responsible for correcting the hazard. The court also concluded that a breach of this duty is actionable in tort by any worker at the site who is subsequently injured by the hazard if it is not reported (180 Cal. App. 4th 430, 440-445) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
B. Duty
6. Duty Owed by or to Particular Persons or Entities

16-165 California Points & Authorities §§ 165.181-165.189

[Reserved]

§§ 165.181[Reserved]

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
B. Duty
6. Duty Owed by or to Particular Persons or Entities

16-165 California Points & Authorities § 165.190

§ 165.190 Duty Owed by Child--Adult Standard of Care Does Not Apply

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief].

DEFENDANT, WHO IS A MINOR, SHOULD NOT BE HELD TO THE SAME STANDARD OF CARE AS AN ADULT AND IS REQUIRED TO EXERCISE ONLY THAT DEGREE OF CARE THAT IS ORDINARILY IS EXERCISED BY CHILDREN OF LIKE AGE, MENTAL CAPACITY, AND EXPERIENCE.

Children Not Engaged in Adult Activities Held to Standard of Care Applicable to Children. Children are not held to the same standard of conduct as an adult, but are held to the degree of care ordinarily exercised by children of like age, mental capacity, and experience (Ellis v. D'Angelo (1953) 116 Cal. App. 2d 310, 314-315, 253 P.2d 675).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that the defendant, a minor, has not breached a duty to the plaintiff because the defendant should not be held to the same standard of care as an adult, and that the defendant should be required to exercise only that degree of care expected of children of like age, experience, and intelligence [see Ellis v. D'Angelo (1953) 116 Cal. App. 2d 310, 314-315, 253 P.2d 675] .

This contention may arise in several procedural contexts, including in support of a demurrer or in challenging the propriety of jury instructions regarding the applicable standard of care [see, e.g., Ellis v. D'Angelo (1953) 116 Cal. App. 2d 310, 312, 253 P.2d 675 (demurrer); Cummings v. County of Los Angeles (1961) 56 Cal. 2d 258, 261, 14 Cal. Rptr. 668, 363 P.2d 900 (jury instructions)].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should discuss the activity engaged in by the defendant and argue that the defendant, a child, should be required to be held only to the degree of care ordinarily exercised by children of like age, mental capacity, and experience, and not the standard of conduct applied to adults [see Olsen v. McGillicuddy (1971) 15 Cal. App. 3d 897, 903, 93 Cal. Rptr. 530] .

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For related legal background, research and procedural guides, and forms of answer in a cause of action for negligence, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For points and authorities supporting and opposing demurrers, see Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities in § 165.121 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose the points and authorities in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Children Not Engaged in Adult Activities Held to Standard of Care Applicable to Children

In Ellis v. D'Angelo (1953) 116 Cal. App. 2d 310, 253 P.2d 675 , the plaintiff alleged that the defendant, a four-year-old child, pushed the plaintiff violently to the floor. The plaintiff's complaint was based on negligence and on assault and battery. The trial court sustained a demurrer to the complaint and entered judgment for the defendant, and the plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed judgment for the defendant. The court noted that a child is required to exercise only that degree of care that the great mass of children of the same age ordinarily exercise, taking into account the experience, capacity, and understanding of the child (116 Cal. App. 2d 310, 314-315) . The court stated that although a four-year-old child lacks the capacity for negligent conduct, the child might be liable for battery (116 Cal. App. 2d 310, 316-320) . Therefore, the court directed the lower court to overrule the demurrer with regard to those counts of the complaint that alleged assault and battery (116 Cal. App. 2d 310, 320) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
B. Duty
6. Duty Owed by or to Particular Persons or Entities

16-165 California Points & Authorities §§ 165.191-165.199

[Reserved]

§§ 165.191[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
B. Duty
6. Duty Owed by or to Particular Persons or Entities

16-165 California Points & Authorities § 165.200

§ 165.200 Auditor Owes No Duty of Care to Persons Other Than Client

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief].

IN PERFORMING A FINANCIAL AUDIT OF _____ [name of company or other person that was subject of audit] AND RENDERING A WRITTEN REPORT, DEFENDANT DID NOT OWE ANY GENERAL DUTY OF CARE TO PLAINTIFF REGARDING THE CONDUCT OF THE AUDIT BECAUSE PLAINTIFF WAS NOT DEFENDANT'S CLIENT.

Auditor's Duty Limited to Client. An auditor's liability for general negligence in the conduct of an audit of the client's financial statements is confined to the client--that is, the person that contracted for and engaged the audit services. Other persons may not recover on a theory of negligence (Bily v. Arthur Young & Co. (1992) 3 Cal. 4th 370, 406, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 51, 834 P.2d 745).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that the defendant did not owe a general duty of care to the plaintiff, based on the defendant's audit on which the plaintiff relied, because the plaintiff was not the defendant's client [see Bily v. Arthur Young & Co. (1992) 3 Cal. 4th 370, 406, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 51, 834 P.2d 745] .

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel may discuss the circumstances under which the plaintiff learned of the audit in question and argue that the plaintiff was not the defendant's client.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For related legal background, research and procedural guides, and forms of answer in a cause of action for negligence, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Auditor's Duty Limited to Client

In Bily v. Arthur Young & Co. (1992) 3 Cal. 4th 370, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 51, 834 P.2d 745 , an investor in a computer manufacturing company sued an accounting firm for damages on theory that the accounting firm negligently performed an audit of the company and that, in reliance on the audit, the plaintiff made and retained his investment, which was lost when the company soon became bankrupt. The trial court entered judgment on a jury verdict in the plaintiff's favor, and the court of appeal affirmed.

The Supreme Court reversed. The Court reviewed the audit function in public accounting and cases concerning the extent of an auditor's duty of care in the performance of an audit (3 Cal. 4th 370, 379-392) . The Court also considered various provisions of the Restatement (Second) of Torts and federal securities laws (3 Cal. 4th 370, 392-396) . The Court analyzed the auditor's liability to third persons for audit opinions and held that an auditor's liability for general negligence in the conduct of an audit of its client's financial statements is confined to the client--that is, the person who contracts for or engages the audit services. Other persons may not recover on a pure negligence theory (3 Cal. 4th 370, 406) . The reference to a "pure" negligence theory is intended to distinguish this holding from a related holding in the same case, to the effect that nonclients may be able to recover on theory of negligent misrepresentation (3 Cal. 4th 370, 407) . For discussion of that point, in the context of a form of memorandum of points and authorities opposing a demurrer to a complaint, see Ch. 105, Fraud and Deceit .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
B. Duty
6. Duty Owed by or to Particular Persons or Entities

16-165 California Points & Authorities §§ 165.201-165.219

[Reserved]

§§ 165.201[Reserved]

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
B. Duty
6. Duty Owed by or to Particular Persons or Entities

16-165 California Points & Authorities § 165.220

§ 165.220 Gas Company's Limited Duty of Care to Gas Customer

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief].

DEFENDANT GAS COMPANY MAY NOT BE HELD LIABLE FOR DAMAGES TO PLAINTIFF BECAUSE DEFENDANT DID NOT BREACH ANY DUTY OF CARE TO PLAINTIFF.

Limited Duty Based on Inherently Hazardous Substance. Although natural gas is an inherently hazardous substance, a gas company owes no duty based on its supplying natural gas if the gas did not cause the injury, and there were no defective gas lines or valves that caused the gas to leak (Salazar v. Southern Cal. Gas Co. (1997) 54 Cal. App. 4th 1370, 1378, 63 Cal. Rptr. 2d 522).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that the defendant, a gas company, did not owe a duty of care to the plaintiff in an action for negligence [see Salazar v. Southern Cal. Gas Co. (1997) 54 Cal. App. 4th 1370, 1378, 63 Cal. Rptr. 2d 522] . This form may be used if the plaintiff contends that the defendant owed an expansive duty to, for example, warn of the potential fire danger of an unelevated water heater.

This argument may arise in any of several procedural situations. For example, it may be made in support of a demurrer, or a motion for summary judgment [see, e.g., Salazar v. Southern Cal. Gas Co. (1997) 54 Cal. App. 4th 1370, 63 Cal. Rptr. 2d 522 (summary judgment)].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel may argue that the natural gas supplied by the gas company did not cause the accident in issue and that there were no defective gas lines or valves that caused the gas to leak.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For related legal background, research and procedural guides, and forms of answer in a cause of action for negligence, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender). For legal background, research and procedural guides, and forms relating to gas companies, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 277, Gas and Electricity (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For points and authorities supporting and opposing demurrers, see Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Limited Duty Based on Inherently Hazardous Substance

In Salazar v. Southern Cal. Gas Co. (1997) 54 Cal. App. 4th 1370, 63 Cal. Rptr. 2d 522, the plaintiff was burned in a flash fire that occurred while he was working in his garage, spraying metal parts with a spray can of carburetor cleaner while an open, five-gallon can of gasoline was next to him. He was standing approximately four feet from a water heater when vapors from the carburetor cleaner or gasoline he was using were ignited by the pilot light on the water heater. The plaintiff rented the garage and a guest house from the owner, who had installed the water heater 10 years earlier. It was elevated only two to three inches off the floor of the garage. The applicable Municipal Code required that water heaters in residential garages be elevated at least 18 inches above the floor. There were two labels on the water heater, one placed there by the manufacturer and one by the defendant, the company that supplied natural gas for the water heater, warning not to store or use flammable liquids near the water heater. The plaintiff sued the defendant, a gas company, for negligence, and the trial court granted summary judgment in favor of the defendant. The plaintiff appealed.

The plaintiff had two arguments on appeal: (1) because the defendant supplied an inherently dangerous substance, gas, it owed the plaintiff a duty of care; and (2) because the defendant created a hidden danger by supplying gas to a hazardous appliance, it had a duty to warn of the danger or disconnect service. The court of appeal disagreed with both arguments and held that the trial court correctly declined to impose a duty on the defendant and correctly granted summary judgment on that basis. The court acknowledged that a gas company may have a duty to its customers under certain circumstances (see Ambriz v. Petrolane Ltd. (1957) 49 Cal. 2d 470, 319 P.2d 1), but ruled that in this case the gas did not cause the explosion and there were no defective gas lines or valves that caused the gas to leak. The defendant therefore did not breach any duty of care with respect to the product it supplied to the plaintiff (54 Cal. App. 4th 1370, 1378) . The court analyzed the following factors in determining that the gas company owed the plaintiff no duty in this case: (1) the foreseeability of harm to the plaintiff, (2) the degree of certainty that the plaintiff suffered injury, (3) the closeness of the connection between the defendant's conduct and the injury suffered, (4) the moral blame attached to the defendant's conduct, (5) the policy of preventing future harm, (6) the extent of the burden to the defendant and consequences to the community of imposing a duty to exercise care with resulting liability for breach, and (7) the availability, cost and prevalence of insurance for the risk involved. It then offered the following reasoning in support of its holding: (1) harm from a gas-fired water heater when flammable substances are stored or used nearby was foreseeable, but the harm was more likely if the heater was not elevated; (2) there was no certain connection between elevation of the heaters and a decrease in the incidence of fires caused by vapors from flammable liquids coming into contact with the heater; (3) any lack of safety in this case was not in the supplying of natural gas to the plaintiff's residence, over which the defendant had absolute control, but rather was in the positioning of the water heater and in the plaintiff's use of flammable liquids near the heater, over which the defendant had no control; (4) there was no close connection between the defendant's conduct and the plaintiff's injury and little moral blame attached because warning labels were inadequate to prevent the plaintiff's injuries; (5) because of the uncertainty as to whether elevating water heaters in garages would decrease the incidence of fires caused by vapors from flammable liquids coming to contact with the heaters, the policy of preventing future harm would not be best served by requiring the defendant to warn its customers of the potential dangers or disconnecting service to those who have them in their garages. The policy of preventing future harm would better be served by educating the public as to the hazards of storing or using flammable liquids in close proximity to gas-fired appliances or by modifying these appliances to minimize or reduce the risk of igniting flammable vapors, which policy the defendant already followed. Moreover, placing the proposed duties on the defendant would impose significant costs on society. If liability was imposed on the defendant, the cost of that liability would be borne by the defendant's customers (54 Cal. App. 4th 1370, 1385) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
B. Duty
6. Duty Owed by or to Particular Persons or Entities

16-165 California Points & Authorities §§ 165.221-165.229

[Reserved]

§§ 165.221[Reserved]

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
B. Duty
6. Duty Owed by or to Particular Persons or Entities

16-165 California Points & Authorities § 165.230

§ 165.230 Defendant Owed Plaintiff No Duty to Control or Warn of Third Party's Dangerous Conduct Because No Special Relationship Existed

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief].

DEFENDANT DID NOT OWE A DUTY TO PLAINTIFF _____ [TO CONTROL A THIRD PARTY'S CONDUCT and/or TO WARN PLAINTIFF OF A THIRD PARTY'S CONDUCT] BECAUSE _____ [NO SPECIAL RELATIONSHIP EXISTED BETWEEN _____ (PLAINTIFF AND DEFENDANT and/or DEFENDANT AND THE THIRD PARTY THAT ENGAGED IN THE FORESEEABLY DANGEROUS CONDUCT)].

A. No Duty to Control or Warn Absent Special Relationship. One normally owes no duty to control the conduct of another, nor to warn those endangered by such conduct, but the duty may arise if (1) a special relationship exists between the actor and the third person that imposes a duty on the actor to control the third person's conduct, or (2) a special relationship exists between the actor and the other that gives the other a right to protection (see Davidson v. City of Westminster (1982) 32 Cal. 3d 197, 201-203, 185 Cal. Rptr. 252, 649 P.2d 894 ; see also Todd v. Dow (1993) 19 Cal. App. 4th 253, 258, 23 Cal. Rptr. 2d 490).

[Optional] B. No Ability to Control Third Party. In determining whether there is a special relationship between the defendant and the person whose conduct needs to be controlled, the ability to control the third party is an essential element, and the absence of that ability is fatal to a claim of legal responsibility (Wise v. Superior Court (1990) 222 Cal. App. 3d 1008, 1013, 272 Cal. Rptr. 222 ; see also Todd v. Dow (1993) 19 Cal. App. 4th 253, 259, 23 Cal. Rptr. 2d 490).

[Optional] C. No Actual Custodial Ability. If the natural relationship between the parties creates no inference of an ability to control, the actual custodial ability must affirmatively appear (Wise v. Superior Court (1990) 222 Cal. App.

3d 1008, 1013-1014, 272 Cal. Rptr. 222).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that the defendant did not owe a duty to warn the plaintiff of the conduct of a third party or to control the conduct of a third party, because no special relationship existed between either the plaintiff and the defendant or between the defendant and the person who committed the dangerous conduct [see Davidson v. City of Westminster (1982) 32 Cal. 3d 197, 201-203, 185 Cal. Rptr. 252, 649 P.2d 894] . Optional Paragraph B may be submitted to assert that the defendant did not have the ability to control the third party. Optional Paragraph C may be submitted to assert that the defendant did not have any custodial ability over the third party. This form should be combined with any of the forms in §§ 165.231 -165.232 that are applicable to the particular case.

This argument may arise in several procedural contexts. For example, the defendant might raise this argument in support of a motion for judgment on the pleadings, a motion for summary judgment, or a demurrer [see, e.g., Megeff v. Doland (1981) 123 Cal. App. 3d 251, 255, 176 Cal. Rptr. 467 (judgment on pleadings, summary judgment); Davidson v. City of Westminster (1982) 32 Cal. 3d 197, 201, 185 Cal. Rptr. 252, 649 P.2d 894 (demurrer)].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel may discuss the defendant's relationship with the plaintiff or the third person in question and argue that it is not a special relationship for the purpose of imposing a duty [see Todd v. Dow (1993) 19 Cal. App. 4th 253, 258-259, 23 Cal. Rptr. 2d 490] .

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For related legal background, research and procedural guides, and forms of answer to a cause of action for negligence, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For additional points and authorities to combine with this form, see §§ 165.231 -165.232. For points and authorities asserting that a landlord has no duty to warn a prospective tenant of the presence of a vicious dog in the neighborhood, see Ch. 178, Premises Liability . For points and authorities supporting and opposing demurrers, see Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities in §§ 165.130 -165.131 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose the points and authorities in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Duty to Control or Warn Absent Special Relationship

In Davidson v. City of Westminster (1982) 32 Cal. 3d 197, 185 Cal. Rptr. 252, 649 P.2d 894 , a husband and wife brought an action for negligent and intentional infliction of emotional distress, and for negligent investigation, failure to protect, and failure to warn against a city and certain city police officers. The plaintiffs alleged that two police officers had a laundromat under surveillance for the purpose of apprehending a suspect who had stabbed other women at nearby laundromats. The police saw a man who closely resembled the attacker enter the premises where the wife was doing her laundry. The police identified the man as the likely perpetrator of the assaults, but they failed to warn the wife, who was eventually stabbed by the suspect. The plaintiffs alleged that a special relationship existed between the wife and the police officers, as well as between the assailant and the officers, and that this relationship imposed a duty of care on the officers toward the wife. The defendants demurred on the ground that no special relationship existed under the allegations of the complaint and that the action was barred under the immunity provision of Gov. Code § 845, which absolves a public entity or employee of liability for failure to provide adequate police protection. Without indicating the grounds for the ruling, the trial court sustained the demurrer. The plaintiffs appealed.

The Supreme Court affirmed, noting that considering the duty issue before addressing the immunity issue is important, because statutory immunity does not arise until it is determined that the defendant otherwise owes a duty of care to the plaintiff (32 Cal. 3d 197, 201-202) . The Court then turned to the issue of the special relationship. As a general rule, one owes no duty to control the conduct of another, nor to warn those endangered by that conduct. Such a duty may arise, however, if (1) a special relationship exists between the actor and the third person that imposes a duty on the actor to control the third person's conduct, or (2) a special relationship exists between the actor and the other that gives the other a right to protection. In determining the existence of a duty of care in a given case, pertinent factors include: (1) the foreseeability of harm to the plaintiff; (2) the degree of certainty that the plaintiff suffered injury; (3) the closeness of the connection between the defendant's conduct and the injury suffered; (4) the moral blame attached to the defendant's conduct; (5) the policy of preventing future harm; (6) the extent of the burden to the defendant and consequence to the community of imposing a duty to exercise care with resulting liability for breach; and (7) the availability, costs, and prevalence of insurance for the risk involved (32 Cal. 3d 197, 203) . In addition, if a public agency is involved, additional elements involve the extent of the agency's powers, the role imposed on it by law, and the limitations imposed on it by budget (32 Cal. 3d 197, 203) .

The Court stated that there was no special relationship between the police officers and the assailant because there was only a minimal connection between the officers and the assailant--a visual identification from a distance (32 Cal. 3d 197, 205) . With regard to the special relationship between the wife and the police officers, the factors allegedly giving rise to the special relationship included the decision to conduct the surveillance, the observation of the potential assailant in the laundromat where the wife was present, the recognition of the assailant as the likely perpetrator of previous assault, the dependence of the wife on the officers to secure her safety, and the officers' failure to intervene by warning or otherwise protecting her (32 Cal. 3d 197, 206) . Moreover, a finding of a special relationship does not require a promise or reliance on it to impose a duty of care. A special relationship may be predicated on a victim's dependence on the police for protection (32 Cal. 3d 197, 207) . However, the Court decided that a special relationship did not exist in this case. The officers did not create the peril to the wife, and she was unaware of their presence and did not rely on them for protection. The officers' conduct did not change the risk that would have existed in their absence. In addition, there is no reason to speculate that anyone--the wife or the assailant--would have acted differently if the officers had not placed the laundromat under surveillance. In addition, mere knowledge of the wife's danger did not impose a duty on the officers to warn her (32 Cal. 3d 197, 208) . Therefore, the Court concluded that the plaintiffs had not stated any cause of action for negligence. Even though the facts as alleged may establish that the wife, or indeed any other woman using the laundromat, was a reasonably foreseeable victim as was the plaintiff in Tarasoff v. Regents of Univ. of Cal. (1976) 17 Cal. 3d 425, 131 Cal. Rptr. 14, 551 P.2d 334 (discussed in § 165.130[3][a]; but decided prior to enactment of Civ. Code § 43.92, establishing limitations on psychotherapist's duty to predict, warn of, and protect third person from patient's violent behavior), the Court concluded that foreseeability alone did not suffice to establish a special relationship with the officers that imposed on them a duty to warn or protect (32 Cal. 3d 197, 209) .

In Todd v. Dow (1993) 19 Cal. App. 4th 253, 23 Cal. Rptr. 2d 490 , the plaintiff and his cousin engaged in mock hand-to-hand combat in the plaintiff's bedroom, each holding a rifle, and the cousin's rifle discharged. The cousin was 24 years old, married, and no longer living at his parents' home, but stored his rifle and some other firearms there. The plaintiff brought suit against his cousin and his cousin's parents, claiming that the parents had a special relationship with their son and had breached a duty of care by not controlling their son's use of a firearm. The trial court granted summary judgment to the defendants, and the plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that one owes no duty to control the conduct of another unless one stands in a special relationship either with the person whose conduct needs to be controlled or the person who is the foreseeable victim. Rejecting the plaintiff's argument that the parent/child relationship created a duty on the part of the defendants to control their son, the court found that the defendants had no ability to control him, which is fatal to a claim of legal responsibility (19 Cal. App. 4th 253, 259) . Citing Wise v. Superior Court (1990) 222 Cal. App. 3d 1008, 1012-1013, 272 Cal. Rptr. 222 [see § 165.230[3][b]], in which a wife had no duty to control the conduct of her husband, the court stated that the public policy of holding individuals responsible for their own tortious acts mandates against shifting the liability for those acts to third parties. The court pointed out that the facts in this case were even less persuasive than the facts in Wise, because the cousin had not threatened anyone, was not violent, and had intended no harm (19 Cal. App. 4th 253, 259-260) .

[b] No Ability to Control Third Party

In Wise v. Superior Court (1990) 222 Cal. App. 3d 1008, 272 Cal. Rptr. 222 , the defendant's husband mounted a sniper attack from the roof of his home, severely injuring a number of passing motorists, including the plaintiffs, before taking his own life. The defendant filed a general demurrer to the plaintiffs' complaint, which the trial court overruled. The defendant petitioned for a writ of mandate.

The court of appeal granted a peremptory writ of mandate directing the superior court to vacate its order overruling the defendant's demurrer and enter a new and different order sustaining the demurrer without leave to amend. In issuing the writ, the court of appeal stated that the substance of the plaintiffs' claim was that the defendant failed to control her husband. In general, the court noted, one owes no duty to control the conduct of a third person to prevent him or her from causing physical harm to another, absent a special relationship between the defendant and either the person whose conduct needs to be controlled or the foreseeable victim of that conduct. With regard to the first category, the court cited Restatement (Second) of Torts, §§ 316-319, for a list of the relationships included as special relationships. It observed that in all of those relationships, the ability to control the third party is essential. The absence of this ability is fatal to a claim of legal responsibility (222 Cal. App. 3d 1008, 1013) . The court concluded that the complaint, rather than alleging facts consistent with the defendant's assumption of responsibility for the assailant, was replete with facts making apparent the defendant's lack of control (222 Cal. App. 3d 1008, 1014) .

The factual and procedural background of Todd v. Dow (1993) 19 Cal. App. 4th 253, 23 Cal. Rptr. 2d 490 , is discussed in § 165.230[3][a]. The court found that parents had no ability and therefore no duty to control the behavior of their son, because he was a married adult no longer living in their home, the gun involved in the incident was not theirs, and the incident took place in their absence hundreds of miles away (19 Cal. App. 4th 253, 259-260) .

[c] No Actual Custodial Ability

The factual and procedural background of Wise v. Superior Court (1990) 222 Cal. App. 3d 1008, 272 Cal. Rptr. 222 , is discussed in § 165.230[3][b]. In holding that the plaintiffs were unable to state causes of action for negligence and negligent entrustment, based on the defendant's failure to prevent an attack against them, the court of appeal stated that if the natural relationship between the parties creates no inference of an ability to control, the actual custodial ability must affirmatively appear (222 Cal. App. 3d 1008, 1013-1014) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] No Duty to Control or Warn Absent Special Relationship

In Minch v. Department of California Highway Patrol (2006) 140 Cal. App. 4th 895, 44 Cal. Rptr. 3d 846 , plaintiff was a tow truck driver who was seriously injured when struck by a passing motorist after having extracted an accident vehicle from a roadside ditch. Plaintiff sued the Highway Patrol, arguing that officers failed to properly monitor or regulate traffic at the accident scene. The trial court entered summary judgment for the Highway Patrol after finding that the officers owed no duty of care to plaintiff, and the court of appeal affirmed. The court of appeal held that no duty was owed to plaintiff because the officers did not create or increase the risk of harm that led to plaintiff's injuries, nor did the circumstances establish a special relationship between the officers and the tow truck driver such that they had a duty to protect him. The evidence clearly established that plaintiff was injured after he had completed extraction of the accident vehicle from the roadside ditch and plaintiff was returning to his tow truck for his own business purposes to get a receipt book. The officers on the scene had not told plaintiff to remain after he finished extracting the vehicle form the ditch, nor did they instruct plaintiff on where to park his vehicle. They did nothing to cause plaintiff to walk on the traffic side of his vehicle when returning to his truck. The tow truck driver was not in a position of dependency on the officers at the time of the accident and the officers did not say anything to indicate that they would guarantee plaintiff's safety. Plaintiff knew when he went to retrieve his receipt book that one of the two officers on the scene had just departed and the other was behind the accident vehicle talking to the driver of the accident vehicle. Under these circumstances, the Highway Patrol owed no duty to protect plaintiff from injury (140 Cal. App. 4th 895, 906-907) .

In Titus v. Canyon Lake Prop. Owners Ass'n (2004) 118 Cal. App. 4th 906, 13 Cal. Rptr. 3d 807 , the plaintiff's father was killed when the car in which he was a passenger was driven into a tree by the intoxicated driver. The plaintiff sued the property owners association of the privately owned and operated community where the decedent and the intoxicated driver resided and where the accident occurred. The plaintiff argued that the property owners association, and the security service hired to protect the community, owed a duty to take affirmative steps to protect the decedent from the risks created by allowing the intoxicated driver to drive in the community. The trial court sustained a demurrer for the property owners association, as well as for the security service, and the court of appeal affirmed. Although the bylaws for the property owners association stated that one general objective of the association was to "preserve, protect, and police" the common facilities of the community, the court of appeal held that these general statements of purpose did not create a special relationship imposing a duty on the property owners' association to prevent the residents from driving while intoxicated. Even though there was evidence that the property owners association knew that the driver had used illegal drugs and alcohol in the past, there was no evidence that the association provided either the alcohol or the car on the night of the accident, nor did they cause the decedent to become a passenger in the car (118 Cal. App. 4th 906, 912-913) . The court also noted that there was no evidence that officers of the security company knew that the driver was driving while intoxicated on the night of the accident (118 Cal. App. 4th 906, 916) . Based on these and other considerations, the court of appeal held that the property owners association had no prior duty to eject the driver from the community, and the security service had no duty to detain or prevent the driver from driving while intoxicated on the night of the accident (118 Cal. App. 4th 906, 914-916) .

In Ochoa v. California State Univ. (1999) 72 Cal. App. 4th 1300, 85 Cal. Rptr. 2d 768 , the plaintiff was a university student who was punched by another player while participating in an intramural soccer game. Although the game was officiated, the referee closest to the plaintiff and his attacker was unable to prevent the punch, although the referee did separate the combatants immediately afterwards. The plaintiff brought suit against the university, alleging that the university negligently failed to supervise the game and instruct the participants. The defendant successfully moved for summary judgment, with the trial court determining that under Crow v. State of California (1990) 222 Cal. App. 3d 192, 271 Cal. Rptr. 349 , the defendant had no special relationship with the plaintiff that created a duty on the part of the defendant. The court of appeal affirmed, reiterating that colleges and universities no longer have a general duty of care to supervise student activities. Although language in the referee handbook supplied by the defendant authorized referees to take steps to control unruly behavior at games, the court rejected the plaintiff's contention that the defendant's acts of organizing and sponsoring the intramural activity created a special relationship that gave rise to a duty to protect students from the criminal acts of third parties (72 Cal. App. 4th 1300, 1305) . The court also agreed with the defendant that no duty should be created under general tort law or public policy (72 Cal. App. 4th 1300, 1306) .

The facts and procedural background of Koepke v. Loo (1993) 18 Cal. App. 4th 1444, 23 Cal. Rptr. 2d 34 , are discussed in § 165.10[3][a]. The court of appeal held that the defendant had no duty to continue to warn or protect the plaintiff because the defendant's previous warnings and advice to the plaintiff created no special relationship between the plaintiff and the defendant (18 Cal. App. 4th 1444, 1453) . The court held that nonprofessionals who voluntarily attempt to assist others with problems have not assumed any duty of continued assistance, because imposing such a duty would be contrary to public policy (18 Cal. App. 4th 1444, 1457) .

In Tanja H. v. Regents of Univ. of Cal. (1991) 228 Cal. App. 3d 434, 278 Cal. Rptr. 918 , the court applied a rationale similar to that used in Crow to hold that a trial court properly sustained the university's demurrer to the complaint filed by a student who was sexually assaulted by fellow students in the dormitory (228 Cal. App. 3d 434, 441) .

Crow v. State of California (1990) 222 Cal. App. 3d 192, 271 Cal. Rptr. 349 , involved an action by a student dormitory resident who was assaulted by another student at a dormitory party. In affirming the summary judgment for the defendants, the court of appeal considered whether the university was liable in negligence. It held that on the facts before it, the university/student relationship did not create a special relationship giving rise to a duty on the part of the university either to control the conduct of the assailant or to warn of that conduct. The court distinguished between young, immature school children in grammar and high schools on the one hand, where duty had been found, and adult students in colleges and universities on the other, where duty had not been found. The court noted factors weighing against a conclusion that a special relationship existed, such as cessation of control of general morals by college administrators, insistence by college students on expanded rights of privacy such as liberal or unlimited parietal visiting hours, students' attainment of the age of majority, and the impracticality of imposing a duty of care to safeguard its students from the risks of harm flowing from the use of alcoholic beverages (222 Cal. App. 3d 192, 208-209) .

In Brenneman v. State of California (1989) 208 Cal. App. 3d 812, 256 Cal. Rptr. 363 , the plaintiffs sued the state for negligent failure to control or to warn them of the dangerous proclivities of a convicted child molester who was released on parole. The trial court sustained the state's demurrer without leave to amend. The court of appeal held that the state did not have a duty, under general tort law, to supervise or control the parolee or to warn the victim or his parents of the danger that the parolee posed. The court concluded that the allegations that the victim was a paperboy residing in and serving the parolee's neighborhood were not substantially distinguishable from those in Thompson v. County of Alameda (1980) 27 Cal. 3d 741, 751, 167 Cal. Rptr. 70, 614 P.2d 728 . Thompson confined the special relationship exception to situations involving either a direct or continuing relationship between the state and the plaintiff (or the plaintiff's decedent) or a prior threat to a specific identifiable victim (208 Cal. App. 3d 812, 820) .

The case of Baldwin v. Zoradi (1981) 123 Cal. App. 3d 275, 176 Cal. Rptr. 809 , is discussed in § 165.130[3][b].

In J.A. Meyers & Co. v. Los Angeles County Probation Dep't (1978) 78 Cal. App. 3d 309, 144 Cal. Rptr. 186 , the court of appeal affirmed a judgment dismissing the plaintiff's complaint, which alleged negligence on the part of the Los Angeles County Probation Department and certain of its employees for failing to warn the plaintiffs that a probationer was a convicted embezzler, thus enabling the probationer to embezzle funds from the plaintiffs. The court concluded that there was no special relationship that existed and created a duty to warn (78 Cal. App. 3d 309, 314-315) . Although the court noted that the law appears to be heading toward a recognition of the duty to aid or protect in any relation of dependence or of mutual dependence, it found that no relationship of dependency existed in this case (78 Cal. App. 3d 309, 315) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
B. Duty
6. Duty Owed by or to Particular Persons or Entities

16-165 California Points & Authorities § 165.231

§ 165.231 Defendant Owed Plaintiff No Duty to Control or Warn of Third Party's Dangerous Conduct Because Defendant Had No Knowledge of Specific Risk to Foreseeable Victim

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief].

DEFENDANT DID NOT OWE A DUTY TO PLAINTIFF _____ [TO CONTROL A THIRD PARTY'S CONDUCT and/or TO WARN PLAINTIFF OF A THIRD PARTY'S CONDUCT] BECAUSE DEFENDANT DID NOT HAVE KNOWLEDGE OF A SPECIFIC RISK TO AN IDENTIFIABLE AND FORESEEABLE VICTIM.

No Knowledge of Specific Risk to Foreseeable Victim. The duty to control or warn of the conduct of a third person is not owed to the world at large. The element of foreseeability remains, and the custodian of the third person must have knowledge of a specific risk to an identifiable and foreseeable victim (Megeff v. Doland (1981) 123 Cal. App. 3d 251, 256-257, 176 Cal. Rptr. 467).

[Optional] B. Actual Knowledge of Risk Required. In determining whether the requisite foreseeability of harm was present, foreseeability must be measured by what the defendant actually knew, not by constructive knowledge or information that the defendant arguably should have known, but did not (Margaret W. v. Kelley R. (2006) 139 Cal. App. 4th 141, 156, 42 Cal. Rptr. 3d 519).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that the defendant did not owe a duty to warn the plaintiff of the conduct of a third party or to control the conduct of a third party because the defendant had no knowledge of a specific risk to the plaintiff as a foreseeable victim [see Megeff v. Doland (1981) 123 Cal. App. 3d 251,

256-257, 176 Cal. Rptr. 467] . This form should be combined with any of the forms in § 165.230 and § 165.232 that are applicable to the particular case.

This argument may arise in several procedural contexts. For example, the defendant might raise this argument in support of a motion for judgment on the pleadings, a motion for summary judgment, or a demurrer [see, e.g., Megeff v. Doland (1981) 123 Cal. App. 3d 251, 255, 176 Cal. Rptr. 467 (judgment on pleadings, summary judgment); Davidson v. City of Westminster (1982) 32 Cal. 3d 197, 201, 185 Cal. Rptr. 252, 649 P.2d 894 (demurrer)].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel may show that the defendant had no knowledge of a specific risk to the plaintiff as a foreseeable victim [see Megeff v. Doland (1981) 123 Cal. App. 3d 251, 256-257, 176 Cal. Rptr. 467] .

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For related legal background, research and procedural guides, and forms of answer to a cause of action for negligence, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For additional points and authorities to combine with this form, see the forms in § 165.230 and § 165.232. For points and authorities supporting and opposing demurrers, see Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities in §§ 165.130 -165.131 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose the points and authorities in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Knowledge of Specific Risk to Foreseeable Victim

The factual and procedural background of Megeff v. Doland (1981) 123 Cal. App. 3d 251, 176 Cal. Rptr. 467 , is discussed in § 165.60[3][a]. The court of appeal noted that one owes no duty to control the conduct of another person, but that the courts have created limited exceptions based on various special relationships between a defendant and either the person whose conduct needs to be controlled or the foreseeable victim of that conduct. However, the duty is not necessarily one owed to the world at large. The element of foreseeability remains. The custodian must have knowledge of a specific risk to an identifiable and foreseeable victim (123 Cal. App. 3d 251, 257) . In this case, there was nothing in the hospital reports to suggest a violent history or generalized violent behavior on the part of the third party (123 Cal. App. 3d 251, 258) , although the third party had become physically aggressive when the hospital staff refused to allow him to leave. The court decided that his wife's knowledge of his one incidence of aggressive behavior may have created a foreseeable risk that he might physically attack a person who confined him to a place other than his home. It did not, however, give her a basis for foreseeing that her husband would stab the plaintiffs, who were his landlords (123 Cal. App. 3d 251, 260) .

[b] Actual Knowledge of Risk Required

In Margaret W. v. Kelley R. (2006) 139 Cal. App. 4th 141, 42 Cal. Rptr. 3d 519 , the plaintiff, a teenaged girl who had been invited to spend the night at the home of a friend, was raped by a group of teenage boys after the plaintiff had voluntarily left her friend's house. Her friend's mother had made it clear in advance that she would be out for most of the evening, and the plaintiff had left the home before the mother returned. The mother returned prior to the rape, but took no steps to contact the plaintiff's parents to notify them that the plaintiff was no longer at her house. Instead, the mother's attention was focused on taking care of her own daughter, who had passed out after drinking too much alcohol, which had been provided by persons who had come to the house earlier in the evening while the mother was out. The plaintiff sued her friend's mother for negligence and negligent supervision. The trial court granted summary judgment for the mother. The plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The plaintiff argued on appeal that the defendant had a special relationship with her, arising out of her invitation to her home, and that in measuring the foreseeability of the attack that occurred, the plaintiff was not required to show that the defendant had actual knowledge of the specific risk of harm to the plaintiff, merely that a sexual assault was a reasonably foreseeable occurrence under the circumstances (139 Cal. App. 4th 141, 151, 156-157) . The court of appeal disagreed. The court recognized that a special relationship existed, but concluded that foreseeability of harm, which was also a requirement for imposing liability on the defendant, must be analyzed in terms of what the defendant actually knew at the time she was in a position to protect the plaintiff, not by constructive knowledge or information that the defendant arguably should have known, but did not. Reviewing the relevant facts, the court held that the defendant could not be liable for the harm that occurred to the plaintiff after she left the defendant's house that night. The defendant had no knowledge that the plaintiff was in any danger from a sexual assault, did not know the boys with whom the plaintiff had left, and did not even know that the plaintiff had left with those boys. The defendant knew that the plaintiff had left with other friends to go to a party and had probably been drinking. However, the plaintiff had made a phone call to her friend's house after the defendant had returned and at that time the plaintiff was in no apparent danger from the people she was with. This call suggested to the defendant that the plaintiff had the means to contact her parents herself, and the defendant told the plaintiff that she should go home rather than return to the defendant's house. Under those circumstances, there was nothing to indicate a threat to the plaintiff that required a response of any type from the defendant, even a minimally burdensome response such as a phone call to the plaintiff's parents (139 Cal. App. 4th 141, 158-161) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] No Knowledge of Specific Risk to Foreseeable Victim

In J.L. v. Children's Institute, Inc. (2009) 177 Cal. App. 4th 388, 99 Cal. Rptr. 3d 5 , a minor was sexually assaulted by the 14-year-old grandson of a licensed daycare provider to whom the victim's mother had been referred by a nonprofit home daycare referral organization. Through his guardian ad litem, the minor sued the referral organization for the sexual assault, but the trial court granted summary judgment for defendant. The court of appeal affirmed. The court held that the referral organization did not owe a duty to the victim to prevent the assault. The court noted that while there may have been a special relationship between the referral organization and the minor child, a special relationship by itself was not a sufficient basis for imposing liability. To impose such liability, it must have been reasonably foreseeable to the defendant that plaintiff was in danger of the harm suffered. In that particular case, however, there was no evidence that the assailant had a history of sexual misconduct, that the referral organization had any knowledge of any such prior history, or that any children had previously suffered any type of injury at that daycare home. In the absence of such evidence, defendant could not be held liable for unforeseeable criminal conduct committed by a third person (177 Cal. App. 4th 388, 396-398) .

In Greenberg v. Superior Court (2009) 172 Cal. App. 4th 1339, 92 Cal. Rptr. 3d 96 , plaintiffs were the survivors of a family of which two members were shot and killed by a neighbor who suffered from Asperger's syndrome. Plaintiffs sued the treating psychiatrist, alleging that the psychiatrist's negligent prescription of multiple drugs caused the patient to become violent and kill plaintiffs' family members. While the trial court held that triable issues of fact precluded summary judgment for the psychiatrist, the court of appeal disagreed. The court of appeal held that the psychiatrist owed no duty of care to the patient's neighbors. The court concluded that despite plaintiffs' causation argument based on alleged negligence in prescribing the drugs, plaintiffs neglected to show first that the psychiatrist owed them a duty of care, a requirement to establishing liability. The court noted that the patient, who had come to the psychiatrist with a preexisting mental disorder, had exhibited no violent tendencies or expressed any dangerous motives against the neighbors that would have put the psychiatrist on notice that the patient may have been a danger to his eventual victims. Absent such advance indicators of potential violence towards the neighbors, the psychiatrist owed no duty of care to protect them from danger (172 Cal. App. 4th 1339, 1348-1350) .

In Romero v. Superior Court (2001) 89 Cal. App. 4th 1068, 107 Cal. Rptr. 2d 801 , a 13-year-old girl was sexually assaulted by a 16-year-old boy in the home of the defendants, who were the parents of another boy. The girl's mother had agreed to leave the girl there with a group of teenagers after the defendants had indicated that they would be at home working in the garden while the teenagers were there, although the assault took place when the defendants left the house for about an hour. The court of appeal held that although a special relationship existed between the defendants and the girl, the defendants did not owe a duty of care to prevent the sexual assault, because in the absence of any actual knowledge on their part that the assailant had any propensities to commit a sexual assault, the assault on the girl was not reasonably foreseeable (89 Cal. App. 4th 1068, 1081) . The record showed that the defendants had known the assailant for about a year. He had been to the defendants' home about once or twice a month, had spent the night there about eight times, and had gone to church with them. They considered him to be a polite and likeable boy, and to the best of their knowledge, he had acted appropriately with girls. In fact, the only information the defendants had about any trouble that the assailant may have been in was information about potential curfew violations. Based on this record, the court held that defendants had no actual knowledge that the assailant was a risk to the girl (89 Cal. App. 4th 1068, 1087-1089) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
B. Duty
6. Duty Owed by or to Particular Persons or Entities

16-165 California Points & Authorities § 165.232

§ 165.232 Defendant Owed Plaintiff No Duty to Control or Warn of Third Party's Dangerous Conduct Because Risk Could Not Be Guarded Against by Warning Plaintiff

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief].

DEFENDANT DID NOT OWE A DUTY TO PLAINTIFF _____ [TO CONTROL A THIRD PARTY'S CONDUCT and/or TO WARN PLAINTIFF OF A THIRD PARTY'S CONDUCT] BECAUSE THE RISK TO PLAINTIFF WAS NOT ONE THAT COULD BE GUARDED AGAINST BY WARNING PLAINTIFF.

Risk Could Not Be Guarded Against by Warning Potential Victim. Although there may be evidence that a special relationship existed between the defendant and the dangerous person or the potential victim, and evidence from which the jury could reasonably conclude that the defendant had notice or knowledge of facts suggesting the potentially dangerous conduct, a duty will not be imposed if the risk is not one that could be guarded against by warning potential victims (see Harland v. State of California (1977) 75 Cal. App. 3d 475, 481-482, 142 Cal. Rptr. 201).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that the defendant did not owe a duty to warn the plaintiff of the conduct of a third party or to control the conduct of a third party because the risk could not have been guarded against by warning the plaintiff as a potential victim [see Harland v. State of California (1977) 75 Cal. App. 3d 475, 481-482, 142 Cal. Rptr. 201] . This form should be combined with any of the forms in §§ 165.230 -165.231 that are applicable to the particular case.

This argument may arise in several procedural contexts. For example, the defendant might raise this argument in support of a motion for judgment on the pleadings, a motion for summary judgment, or a demurrer [see, e.g., Megeff v.

Doland (1981) 123 Cal. App. 3d 251, 255, 176 Cal. Rptr. 467 (judgment on pleadings, summary judgment); Davidson v. City of Westminster (1982) 32 Cal. 3d 197, 201, 185 Cal. Rptr. 252, 649 P.2d 894 (demurrer)].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel may argue that the defendant could not have guarded against the risk to the plaintiff by warning the plaintiff [see Megeff v. Doland (1981) 123 Cal. App. 3d 251, 256-257, 176 Cal. Rptr. 467] .

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For related legal background, research and procedural guides, and forms of answer to a cause of action for negligence, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For additional points and authorities to combine with this form, see §§ 165.230 -165.231. For points and authorities supporting and opposing demurrers, see Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities in §§ 165.130 -165.131 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose the points and authorities in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Risk Could Not Be Guarded Against by Warning Potential Victim

In Harland v. State of California (1977) 75 Cal. App. 3d 475, 142 Cal. Rptr. 201 , the plaintiffs brought an action against the state for wrongful death and personal injuries suffered in an automobile collision on the Benicia-Martinez Bridge. The driver of the other vehicle was a resident of a state veterans' home who had a history of mental and physical disabilities and was regularly administered several prescription drugs that affected his central nervous system. The jury rendered a verdict for the plaintiffs on two independent theories: negligence in permitting the resident to drive a vehicle and maintaining the bridge in a dangerous condition.

The court of appeal affirmed on the ground that the bridge was maintained in a dangerous condition, but not on the theory that the state should have prevented the resident from driving a vehicle. The court stated that absent a special relationship, there is ordinarily no duty to control the conduct of a third person so as to prevent him or her from causing harm to another (75 Cal. App. 3d 475, 480) . The court agreed that there was evidence of a special relationship between the state home and the resident, because the resident was incapable of sustaining himself outside the home due to his mental and physical disabilities. He was also regularly administered prescription drugs by employees of the home that affected his ability to drive and had a history of blackouts (75 Cal. App. 3d 475, 481) . The court also noted that there was evidence from which the jury could reasonably conclude that employees of the home had notice or knowledge of facts suggesting that the resident's driving presented a risk of harm to himself and others. The court stated, however, that the risk presented by the resident was not one that could be guarded against by warning potential victims. In addition, even though a physician at the home had warned the resident that he should not drive when he was under the influence of medication, the resident did not have a guardian and had not surrendered the responsibility for his own conduct. There was no statute or regulation purporting to authorize the commandant of the home to order a resident of the home not to drive a car. Therefore, the court concluded that the judgment could not be sustained on the theory that the state should have prevented the resident from driving (75 Cal. App. 3d 475, 482) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
B. Duty
6. Duty Owed by or to Particular Persons or Entities

16-165 California Points & Authorities §§ 165.233-165.239

[Reserved]

§§ 165.233[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
B. Duty
6. Duty Owed by or to Particular Persons or Entities

16-165 California Points & Authorities § 165.240

§ 165.240 Rescuer Not Liable for Act That Did Not Increase Risk of Harm to Plaintiff or Induce Plaintiff's Reliance

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief].

DEFENDANT SHOULD NOT BE FOUND LIABLE TO PLAINTIFF FOR FAILING TO ACT BECAUSE DEFENDANT'S CONDUCT DID NOT INCREASE THE RISK OF HARM TO PLAINTIFF OR INDUCE PLAINTIFF's RELIANCE.

No Liability Unless Rescuer's Act Increased Risk of Harm or Induced Reliance. Liability may not be imposed on a party who has voluntarily undertaken to aid or protect another unless (1) the injured party suffered the injury because he or she relied on the acts of the rescuer, or (2) the acts of the rescuer increased the risk of harm to the injured party (Westbrooks v. State of California (1985) 173 Cal. App. 3d 1203, 1208-1209, 219 Cal. Rptr. 674).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that the defendant did not owe the plaintiff a duty to take affirmative action to assist the plaintiff and that the defendant's conduct did not increase the risk to the plaintiff or induce the plaintiff's reliance [see Westbrooks v. State of California (1985) 173 Cal. App. 3d 1203, 1208-1209, 219 Cal. Rptr. 674] . It should be combined with any of the forms in §§ 165.241 -165.242 that are applicable to the particular case.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel may describe the circumstances of the defendant's conduct with respect to the plaintiff and show that the defendant's conduct did not increase the risk to the plaintiff or induce the plaintiff's reliance.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For related legal background, research and procedural guides, and forms of answer to a cause of action for negligence, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For additional points and authorities to combine with this form, see §§ 165.241 -165.242. For points and authorities supporting and opposing demurrers, see Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities in § 165.150 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose the points and authorities in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Liability Unless Rescuer's Act Increased Risk of Harm or Induced Reliance

In Westbrooks v. State of California (1985) 173 Cal. App. 3d 1203, 219 Cal. Rptr. 674 , the heirs of a deceased motorist brought suit against three defendants, including the County of Ventura and one of its deputies, for the wrongful death of the motorist. The death occurred when the motorist drove into a void created when a bad storm washed out a bridge. Prior to the accident, the motorist evaded a roadblock set up by the deputy to divert traffic from the road leading to the bridge. The plaintiffs alleged that the deputy negligently failed to stop the motorist and warn him of the dangerous condition. The jury found that the county was negligent in the operation of the roadblock and found the county 15 percent liable (173 Cal. App. 3d 1203, 1206-1208) .

The court of appeal reversed this portion of the judgment and remanded with directions to enter judgment for the county and the deputy. Because the county was in no way responsible for the dangerous condition that caused the death of the motorist, the plaintiff's theory against the deputy and the county was based on the duty created when the officer undertook to aid or protect the motorist. The trial court had instructed the jury in this regard (using BAJI No. 4.45) that although a person is normally not under a duty to protect other persons, one who assumes such a duty may be liable for failing to exercise ordinary care in the performance of the duty. The court of appeal held that these instructions were improper (173 Cal. App. 3d 1203, 1208) . It held that liability may not be imposed on a party who has voluntarily undertaken to aid or protect another unless (1) the injured party suffered the injury because he or she relied on the acts of the rescuer, or (2) the acts of the rescuer increased the risk of harm to the injured party (173 Cal. App. 3d 1203, 1208) . It then found as a matter of law that the acts of the deputy did not increase the risk of harm to the plaintiff's decedent and that the decedent in no way relied on the county's attempt to divert traffic away from the danger (173 Cal. App. 3d 1203, 1209) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
B. Duty
6. Duty Owed by or to Particular Persons or Entities

16-165 California Points & Authorities § 165.241

§ 165.241 Defendant Did Not Breach Duty to Plaintiff Because Voluntarily Assumed Duty Expired

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief].

DEFENDANT DID NOT BREACH A DUTY TO PLAINTIFF BECAUSE DEFENDANT'S PERFORMANCE OF A VOLUNTARY DUTY WITHOUT ANY EXPRESS OR IMPLIED PROMISE OF FUTURE ASSISTANCE HAD ENDED AND DEFENDANT WAS NOT REQUIRED TO RENDER AID INDEFINITELY.

Duty of "Good Samaritan" Is Limited In Duration. The duty of a "good Samaritan" is of limited duration. A person who has performed a voluntary duty without an express or implied promise of future assistance is not required to render aid indefinitely (Koepke v. Loo (1993) 18 Cal. App. 4th 1444, 1457, 23 Cal. Rptr. 2d 34 ; Weissich v. County of Marin (1990) 224 Cal. App. 3d 1069, 1077-1079, 274 Cal. Rptr. 342).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that the defendant owed no duty to the plaintiff because the defendant's role as a rescuer had expired [see Koepke v. Loo (1993) 18 Cal. App. 4th 1444, 1457, 23 Cal. Rptr. 2d 34] . It should be combined with any of the forms in § 165.240 and § 165.242 that are applicable to the particular case.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel may argue that circumstances were such that the defendant's role as rescuer had expired during the time in question.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For related legal background, research and procedural guides, and forms of answer to a cause of action for negligence, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For additional points and authorities to combine with this form, see § 165.240 and § 165.242. For points and authorities supporting and opposing demurrers, see Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities in § 165.150 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose the points and authorities in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Duty of "Good Samaritan" Is Limited In Duration

The factual and procedural background of Koepke v. Loo (1993) 18 Cal. App. 4th 1444, 23 Cal. Rptr. 2d 34 , is discussed in § 165.10[3][a]. In Koepke, the court of appeal rejected the plaintiff's argument that because the defendant had undertaken to warn her of an impending assault and then advised her that the assailant was no longer a danger, the defendant was obliged to warn her when the situation changed. The court held that voluntarily assisting an unrelated person in danger does not impose any continuing obligation to keep assisting that person. By volunteering information about the assailant, the defendant was not undertaking to provide future warnings. Imposing this burden on unrelated persons would be contrary to public policy because it would discourage voluntary acts of assistance (18 Cal. App. 4th 1444, 1457-1458) .

In Weissich v. County of Marin (1990) 224 Cal. App. 3d 1069, 274 Cal. Rptr. 342 , a former district attorney was killed by a man he had successfully prosecuted 30 years earlier. His heirs brought a wrongful death suit against the county and the state, alleging that the killer had threatened the life of the decedent and others at sentencing in the criminal action, that the defendants voluntarily assumed a duty to warn the decedent by promising to alert him to any threatening behavior on the part of the assailant to the extent that information was known, and that law enforcement officials breached that duty by failing to warn the decedent of continuing criminal behavior of the killer eight years after the defendants' alleged voluntary promise to warn. The defendants demurred on the grounds that the complaint did not allege facts giving rise to an existence of a duty and that any failure to warn was not the proximate cause of the decedent's death. The trial court sustained the demurrers without leave to amend and dismissed the action against the defendants. The plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court cited the general principle that one has no duty either to control the conduct of another or to warn those endangered by that conduct. Therefore, public entities and employees have no affirmative duty to warn of a release of an inmate with a violent history who has made nonspecific threats of harm directed at nonspecific victims (224 Cal. App. 3d 1069, 1076) . However, the court also noted the exception to this general rule: that a duty can exist if the defendant stands in some special relationship either to the dangerous person whose conduct needs to be controlled or to the reasonable victim of that person's conduct (224 Cal. App. 3d 1069, 1077-1078) . A duty may also result from the voluntary act of a "good Samaritan." That is, liability may be imposed on a person who has no general duty to act, but who has voluntarily assumed a protective duty toward an individual and who undertakes action on his or her behalf, inducing reliance. The court concluded that the allegation that the decedent would be alerted to any threatening behavior on the part of the assailant, to the extent that information was known, was sufficient to establish that the defendants had assumed some protective duty toward the decedent (224 Cal. App. 3d 1069, 1077) .

However, the court also held that absent some express or implied promise that the duty assumed would continue indefinitely, the duty of a "good Samaritan" is of limited duration. A person who has performed a voluntary duty is not required to render aid indefinitely (224 Cal. App. 3d 1069, 1077) . The court held that whatever the outer limits of the defendants' duty may have been, the trial court did not err in concluding that under the facts alleged in the complaint, liability could not be imposed because any duty had long since expired (224 Cal. App. 3d 1069, 1080) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
B. Duty
6. Duty Owed by or to Particular Persons or Entities

16-165 California Points & Authorities § 165.242

§ 165.242 No Duty to Act Absent Special Relationship

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief].

DEFENDANT IS NOT LIABLE TO PLAINTIFF FOR FAILING TO ACT BECAUSE DEFENDANT DID NOT HAVE A SPECIAL RELATIONSHIP WITH PLAINTIFF IMPOSING ON DEFENDANT A DUTY TO ACT UNDER THE CIRCUMSTANCES.

No Liability for Failure to Act Unless Special Relationship Exists. A person who has not created a peril is ordinarily not liable in tort merely for failure to take affirmative action to assist or protect another, if there is no special relationship between them that gives rise to a duty to act (Williams v. State of California (1983) 34 Cal. 3d 18, 192 Cal. Rptr. 233, 664 P.2d 137 ; Winkelman v. City of Sunnyvale (1976) 59 Cal. App. 3d 509, 512, 130 Cal. Rptr. 690).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that no special relationship existed between the plaintiff and the defendant giving rise to a duty on the defendant's part to act [see Williams v. State of California (1983) 34 Cal. 3d 18, 192 Cal. Rptr. 233, 664 P.2d 137] . It should be combined with any of the forms in §§ 165.240 -165.241 that are applicable to the particular case.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel may argue that the defendant's failure to act is not a basis for imposing a duty on him or her in the absence of a special relationship [see Williams v. State of California (1983) 34 Cal. 3d 18, 23, 192 Cal. Rptr. 233, 664 P.2d 137 ; see also

Mikialian v. City of Los Angeles (1978) 79 Cal. App. 3d 150, 159, 144 Cal. Rptr. 794] .

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For related legal background, research and procedural guides, and forms of answer to a cause of action for negligence, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For additional points and authorities to combine with this form, see §§ 165.240 -165.241. For points and authorities supporting and opposing demurrers, see Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities in § 165.150 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose the points and authorities in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Liability for Failure to Act Unless Special Relationship Exists

In Williams v. State of California (1983) 34 Cal. 3d 18, 192 Cal. Rptr. 233, 664 P.2d 137 , the plaintiff brought an action against the state of California and several highway patrol officers based on the highway patrol officers' alleged negligence in failing to make a proper investigation of the cause and source of the plaintiff's injury. The complaint alleged that this failure caused the plaintiff to lose her opportunity to obtain compensation from the persons who caused her injuries. The plaintiff was injured when a piece of a heated brake drum flew from a passing truck into her car's windshield and struck her in the face. The lower court granted the defendants' motion for judgment on the pleadings, finding that the patrol officers were immune under certain immunity statutes. The plaintiff appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed, finding that the plaintiff should be given leave to amend her complaint. The Court stated that the issue of statutory immunity does not arise until it is determined that the defendant otherwise owes a duty of care to the defendant (34 Cal. 3d 18, 22) . As a rule, one has no duty to come to the aid of another. A person who has not created a peril is not liable in tort merely for failure to take affirmative action unless there is some relationship between them that gives rise to a duty to act (34 Cal. 3d 18, 23) . Moreover, a volunteer who otherwise has no duty to help, but who undertakes to aid another--the "good Samaritan"--is under a duty to exercise due care and is liable if (1) his or her failure to exercise care increases the risk of harm, or (2) harm is suffered because of the other's reliance on the undertaking (34 Cal. 3d 18, 23) . The Court held that stopping to aid a motorist does not, in itself, create a special relationship that would give rise to such a duty (34 Cal. 3d 18, 21, 23) . In this case, the officers did not create the peril in which the plaintiff found herself. They took no affirmative action that contributed to, increased, or changed the risk that would have otherwise existed. Moreover, there are no allegations supporting a finding of special relationship--namely, detrimental reliance by the plaintiff on the officers' conduct or statements made by them that induced a false sense of security and thereby worsened her position (34 Cal. 3d 18, 27-28) .

NOTE:

In a subsequent action against the state and a highway patrol officer for damages stemming from the officer's negligent failure to ascertain the identity of a vehicle driver, the court of appeal reversed and remanded the trial court's sustaining of the defendants' demurrer, holding that the plaintiff could state a cause of action under the facts. Subsequently, the Supreme Court disapproved the law on which the appellate decision was based. In affirming the judgment in this case, the Supreme Court held that the decision in Williams does not preclude liability if the officer's conduct prevents other assistance, and therefore it does not constitute a change in law warranting rejection of the law of the case that the officer could have breached a duty of care [Clemente v. State of California (1985) 40 Cal. 3d 202, 213, 219 Cal. Rptr. 445, 707 P.2d 818] .

Winkelman v. City of Sunnyvale (1976) 59 Cal. App. 3d 509, 130 Cal. Rptr. 690 , James Carl brought an action to recover for damages suffered in connection with an automobile accident against Karen Winkelman. Winkelman cross-complained against the City of Sunnyvale. Winkelman alleged that she was traveling on the Central Expressway when she was struck from behind by a pickup truck. Her car was propelled into the opposite stream of traffic and she collided head-on with Carl. The driver of the pickup truck left the scene of the accident, but later visited the department of public safety and reported that he possibly had been involved in an automobile accident on the Central Expressway. The officer present radioed an investigating officer at the scene, who had not interviewed Winkelman and therefore stated that no pickup truck was involved in the accident. The officer at headquarters allowed the driver to leave without securing any identifying information. Winkelman alleged that the City of Sunnyvale was negligent in permitting the driver of the pickup truck to leave without securing identification and that she sustained damages in the frustration of a valid cause of action for her own injuries and of a defense against Carl's suit. The trial court sustained the city's demurrer without leave to amend. Winkelman appealed the subsequent dismissal of her cross-complaint.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court noted that police officers are not under a duty to investigate automobile accidents properly and carefully, because police officers have the right, not the duty, to investigate accidents (59 Cal. App. 3d 509, 511) . Winkelman argued that a duty to exercise due care arose when the officers voluntarily undertook to investigate the accident. The court stated, however, that whatever detriment Winkelman suffered by reason of the involvement of the driver of the pickup truck had already occurred when that individual drove away from the scene. The court noted that Winkelman's cross-complaint did not allege that the claimed negligence of the officers inflicted an injury on her. It alleged that the officers failed to protect her from the effect of events that had already occurred. The court stated that a person who has not created a peril is ordinarily not liable in tort for the failure to take affirmative action to assist or protect another unless there is some relationship between them that gives rise to a duty to act (59 Cal. App. 3d 509, 511-512) . Inasmuch as the court found no effective allegation of a special relationship in Winkelman's cross-complaint, it found that the dismissal of the action was proper (59 Cal. App. 3d 509, 512) .

NOTE:

However, a subsequent court of appeal decision casts some doubt on the rule that liability for "nonfeasance" may not be imposed in the absence of a special relationship [see Soldano v. O'Daniels (1983) 141 Cal. App. 3d 443, 449-453, 190 Cal. Rptr. 310 , discussed in § 165.40]2]]a]].

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] No Liability for Failure to Act Unless Special Relationship Exists

In Hernandez v. KWPH Enters. (2004) 116 Cal. App. 4th 170, 10 Cal. Rptr. 3d 137 , the plaintiffs were the husband and other family members of a woman who fled an ambulance upon its arrival at a hospital, made her way onto a nearby highway, and was struck by a car and killed. The ambulance was driven by emergency medical technicians (EMTs), who were called to the scene by police officers because the woman's behavior was extremely erratic and the officers suspected that she required psychiatric assistance. The officers declined to exercise their statutory authority to have the woman detained as mentally disordered, and they explained that her transportation to the hospital would be strictly voluntary and that the woman and her husband were free to leave at any time. Both the woman and her husband agreed to the transportation, but the woman fled the ambulance when it arrived at the hospital and was subsequently killed on the highway. The plaintiffs sued the employers of the EMTs, alleging that they had a special relationship with the woman that imposed a legal duty on them to prevent her from fleeing the ambulance in order to protect her from her own erratic behavior. The court of appeal disagreed and affirmed summary judgment for the defendants. The court noted that the basis of the plaintiffs' claim was an alleged failure to act, but concluded that the mere fact that the EMTs agreed to transport the woman and her husband voluntarily to the hospital did not create a special relationship sufficient to impose an affirmative duty to act on the EMTs. Therefore, the EMTs (and thus their employers) could not be liable for failing to protect the woman from her own suicidal, reckless, or irrational conduct (116 Cal. App. 4th 170, 177-180) .

In Seo v. All-Makes Overhead Doors (2002) 97 Cal. App. 4th 1193, 119 Cal. Rptr. 2d 160 , the plaintiff, a subtenant in a commercial office building, reached between the vertical bars on the electronic fence surrounding the parking lot of the building to trigger a toggle switch to close the sliding gate behind him. Because his arm was placed between the bars of both the fence and the gate, it was crushed when the gate immediately began to close. The plaintiff sued a gate repair company that had regularly been called on to make requested repairs to the gate. This repair company had neither manufactured nor installed the gate, had not installed the toggle switch, did not have a regular contract to service the gate for the property owner, and had not agreed either to warn the property owner of any design defects in the gate or to install safety features that might have prevented the plaintiff's accident. However, the plaintiff argued that the defendant, because of the regularity of its repairs, had acted as an agent of the property owner in maintaining the gate and was negligent in failing to warn of or correct defects in the design that contributed to the plaintiff's injury. The trial court granted summary judgment for the defendant, and the court of appeal affirmed. The court noted that a special relationship sufficient to support tort liability for nonfeasance may arise out of a contract in which a repair company agrees for a fee to keep a piece of equipment in repair, perform all work necessary for the safety and maintenance of the equipment, and make periodic inspections of the equipment, or if the repair company has otherwise voluntarily assumed the owner's duty to inspect and maintain the safety of the equipment or undertaken a systematic inspection of the equipment and fails to do so properly. However, the facts did not support any such findings in this case, because the defendant had only repaired the gate when called on to make specific repairs (97 Cal. App. 4th 1193, 1204-1206) . The court also held that in the absence of a special relationship derived from a contract or voluntary undertaking, a repair company hired to repair equipment that it did not manufacture does not owe a duty of care to third parties to warn the equipment owner of design defects in the equipment being repaired, at least if the defect is unrelated to the repairs being made. In this particular case, the repairs made by the defendant were unrelated to the alleged design defects that contributed to the plaintiff's injury (97 Cal. App. 4th 1193, 1205-1206) .

In Olson v. Children's Home Soc'y (1988) 204 Cal. App. 3d 1362, 252 Cal. Rptr. 11 , the plaintiff had surrendered a son to the defendant for adoption in 1967. In 1983, the plaintiff gave birth to another son who died from a genetically transmitted disease. She asked the defendant about the health of the child whom she had surrendered years earlier and was informed that that child also had the disease, about which the defendant learned in 1971. The plaintiff sued under various theories, all based on the failure of the agency to inform the plaintiff of the adopted child's genetic disease. The trial court sustained the defendant's demurrer, and the court of appeal affirmed. The court held that the defendant had no duty to act with regard to the information because there was no special relationship between the parties. Cases finding a duty based on a special relationship involve a nexus between the impending peril and the specific duties undertaken by the defendants in the special relationships. Special relationship situations generally involve some kind of dependency or reliance. A permanent condition of dependency or reliance with respect to the health of the plaintiff's children could not be postulated. All duty arising from the relationship between the parties terminated with the adoption proceedings (204 Cal. App. 3d 1362, 1365-1367) .

In Stangle v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. (1988) 198 Cal. App. 3d 971, 244 Cal. Rptr. 103 , the owner of a sapphire ring sued the insurance company on whose premises the ring was stolen. A friend of the plaintiff, who had custody of the ring for the purpose of selling it, had entrusted it to a purported prospective buyer for the purpose of having it photographed. Both the prospective buyer and the ring disappeared. The defendant's receptionist refused to allow the custodian the use of the company telephone to alert the building security director. By the time the custodian reported the theft to building security personnel in the lobby, the thief had escaped. In affirming a judgment for the defendant, the court of appeal stated that whether a duty exists is primarily a question of law. As a general rule, absent a special relationship giving rise to a duty to act, a person is under no duty to take affirmative action to assist or protect another, no matter how great the danger in which the other is placed, or how easily he or she could be rescued (198 Cal. App. 3d 971, 974) . The court acknowledged the existence of a narrow exception to this "harsh" rule if physical violence is threatened, but held that the exception did not apply to the case before it (198 Cal. App. 3d 971, 974) . The court held that no special relationship existed between the custodian of the ring and the defendant that would impose on the defendant an affirmative duty to aid the custodian in summoning help (198 Cal. App. 3d 971, 974-975) . The court further held that the defendant's conduct in refusing the use of the telephone was not the proximate cause of the loss (198 Cal. App. 3d 971, 975) .

In Baker v. City of Los Angeles (1986) 188 Cal. App. 3d 902, 233 Cal. Rptr. 760 , police responded to a domestic violence call and confiscated a gun from the plaintiff's intoxicated husband. After serving a jail sentence for assaulting a police officer, the husband retrieved his gun from the police station, where no one ascertained that the terms of his probation prohibited him from possessing a dangerous weapon. Several months later the husband shot the plaintiff, who sued the city, alleging its employees had negligently returned the gun (188 Cal. App. 3d 902, 905) . A jury found for the plaintiff, and the trial court denied the defendant's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict. The court of appeal reversed, holding that the officer who returned the gun had no special relationship with the plaintiff and therefore had no duty to protect her (188 Cal. App. 3d 902, 908) . The court also found that the officer who first confiscated the husband's gun may have assumed such a duty voluntarily, but only for the limited purpose of protecting the plaintiff from the threat of the moment (188 Cal. App. 3d 902, 907) . Because the officer made no express or implied promise to render additional aid, any duty to the plaintiff ended when the officer left the gun at the police station (188 Cal. App. 3d 902, 907-908) .

In Reid v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. (1985) 173 Cal. App. 3d 557, 218 Cal. Rptr. 913 , the permissive user of an insured's automobile brought an action against the insurer, alleging breach of covenant of good faith and fair dealing based on the insurer's failure to preserve the evidence of the automobile or to conduct investigations concerning any potential claims by the plaintiff against third parties. The trial court granted the defendant's motion for summary judgment. The court of appeal affirmed, holding that no special relationship existed between the plaintiff and the defendant that imposed a duty on the defendant to take the affirmative action desired by the plaintiff. Because the defendant did not voluntarily assume responsibility to preserve or protect the plaintiff's claims against third parties and the plaintiff did not detrimentally rely on the defendant to do so, the court held that no duty to do so existed (173 Cal. App. 3d 557, 573-578) .

In Rubio v. Swiridoff (1985) 165 Cal. App. 3d 400, 211 Cal. Rptr. 338 , the defendant and his girlfriend quarreled, after which the defendant left the scene of the argument in his automobile at high speed. The girlfriend followed him in her automobile, overtook him, and consequently collided with another automobile, fatally injuring its passenger. The trial court dismissed the action against the defendant following an order granting summary judgment in his favor. The court of appeal considered whether the defendant committed nonfeasance, based on a duty arising form a special relationship between him and either the person causing the harm or the injured person. In affirming the judgment, the court concluded that neither special relationship existed and that no duty was created requiring the defendant to control the actions of the driver who caused the injuries (165 Cal. App. 3d 400, 404-405) .

In Harris v. Smith (1984) 157 Cal. App. 3d 100, 203 Cal. Rptr. 541 , the court of appeal affirmed the trial court's judgment of dismissal on a motion for nonsuit in a case alleging attorney malpractice in a prior negligence action against the California Highway Patrol. The court stated that the underlying negligence action must be meritorious for the attorney to have committed malpractice. However, the plaintiff in the underlying action failed to establish a cause of action. There was no showing of an affirmative act that placed the plaintiff in peril or increased the risk of harm, there was no omission or failure to act after a promise was made, and there was no special relationship in which the plaintiff relied to her detriment on official conduct in a situation of dependency (157 Cal. App. 3d 100, 105) .

In Stout v. City of Porterville (1983) 148 Cal. App. 3d 937, 196 Cal. Rptr. 301 , the plaintiff sued a city and a city police officer for failing to take the plaintiff into custody after he was stopped and found intoxicated. Shortly after being stopped, the plaintiff was injured. The plaintiff alleged that the officer, once having stopped the plaintiff and seeing his intoxicated condition, owed a duty to him based on a special relationship between the plaintiff and the officer and on a mandatory duty under a former version of Pen. Code § 647(f) to take an intoxicated person into custody. The trial court sustained the defendants' demurrer to the complaint. The court of appeal affirmed. The court stated that the defendants did not owe a duty to the plaintiff because the former version of Pen. Code § 647(ff) is not mandatory and because no special relationship existed (148 Cal. App. 3d 937, 942-948) . Normally, a police officer has no additional duty to a specific individual, but has a duty to the public at large. However, a special duty may exist if the officer acts affirmatively to place the person in peril or increase the risk of harm or if the officer's conduct results in detrimental reliance on him or her for protection because of a situation of dependency between the parties (148 Cal. App. 3d 937, 942-943) . Because the officer did not take affirmative action that contributed to, increased, or changed the risk that would have otherwise existed, and because there was no indication that he voluntarily assumed responsibility to protect the plaintiff or that his conduct or statements created detrimental reliance inducing a false sense of security or protection, the officer owed no duty to the plaintiff (148 Cal. App. 3d 937, 945) .

64 of 199 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
B. Duty
6. Duty Owed by or to Particular Persons or Entities

16-165 California Points & Authorities §§ 165.243-165.249

[Reserved]

§§ 165.243[Reserved]

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
B. Duty
6. Duty Owed by or to Particular Persons or Entities

16-165 California Points & Authorities § 165.250

§ 165.250 Defendant Placed in Imminent Peril Did Not Breach Duty to Plaintiff

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief].

DEFENDANT DID NOT BREACH HIS/HER DUTY TO PLAINTIFF BECAUSE DEFENDANT, WITHOUT NEGLIGENCE ON DEFENDANT'S PART, WAS PLACED IN A SITUATION OF IMMINENT PERIL. THEREFORE, DEFENDANT IS NOT EXPECTED OR REQUIRED TO USE THE SAME JUDGMENT AND PRUDENCE THAT IS REQUIRED IN THE EXERCISE OF ORDINARY CARE IN CALMER AND MORE DELIBERATE MOMENTS.

Standard of Care in Situation of Imminent Peril. A person who, without negligence on his or her part, is suddenly and unexpectedly confronted with peril, arising from either the actual presence or the appearance of imminent danger to himself or herself or others, is not expected nor required to use the same judgment and prudence that is required of him or her in the exercise of ordinary care in calmer and more deliberate moments (Leo v. Dunham (1953) 41 Cal. 2d 712, 714, 264 P.2d 1 ; Schultz v. Mathias (1970) 3 Cal. App. 3d 904, 912, 83 Cal. Rptr. 888).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that because the defendant was placed in a situation of imminent peril, the defendant is not held to the same degree of care applicable in calmer or more deliberate moments [see Schultz v. Mathias (1970) 3 Cal. App. 3d 904, 912, 83 Cal. Rptr. 888] .

This argument may arise in several procedural contexts. For example, the defendant may raise this argument in support of a motion for new trial or on appeal from an adverse judgment, if one of the grounds for appeal is the propriety of jury instructions concerning the doctrine of imminent peril [see, e.g., Schultz v. Mathias (1970) 3 Cal. App. 3d 904, 83 Cal.

Rptr. 888 (motion for new trial); Leo v. Dunham (1953) 41 Cal. 2d 712, 264 P.2d 1 (jury instructions)].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel may discuss the situation of imminent peril in which the defendant was placed and argue that the defendant should not be held to the same standard of conduct as one who has had full opportunity to reflect [see, e.g., Schultz v. Mathias (1970) 3 Cal. App. 3d 904, 912-913, 83 Cal. Rptr. 888] .

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For related legal background, research and procedural guides, and forms of answer to a cause of action for negligence, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For points and authorities supporting and opposing demurrers, see Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings . For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Standard of Care in Situation of Imminent Peril

In Leo v. Dunham (1953) 41 Cal. 2d 712, 264 P.2d 1 , the plaintiff was struck by the defendant's tank truck. The defendant alleged that he saw the plaintiff attempting to walk across the highway, but continued to approach at about 35 miles per hour. When he was 60 to 80 feet away from the plaintiff, the defendant stated that he concluded that a collision was imminent and applied his brakes, "hollered," and swerved to his right. The plaintiff allegedly did not look around until the truck suddenly appeared in front of him. There was evidence that the plaintiff walked into the side of the truck. The jury rendered a verdict for the defendant, and the plaintiff appealed, contending that the instructions to the jury based on the doctrine of imminent peril were prejudicially erroneous.

The Supreme Court affirmed judgment for the defendant. The Court stated that a person who, without negligence on his or her part, is suddenly and unexpectedly confronted with peril, arising from either the actual presence or the appearance of imminent danger to himself or to others, is not expected nor required to use the same judgment and prudence required in the exercise of ordinary care in calmer and more deliberate moments. Regarding the jury instruction given, the Court stated that an instruction should be given only when it is applicable to the issues raised by the pleadings or pertinent to some issue or theory developed by the evidence (41 Cal. 2d 712, 714) . In this case, the evidence justified the inference of negligence on the defendant's part, but it also supported the jury's implied finding that the defendant was not negligent until the time he concluded that the plaintiff was not going to look around again. Both parties saw each other when they were 300 feet apart. The defendant had the right of way, and the plaintiff was crossing the road at a point that was neither within a marked crosswalk nor within an unmarked crosswalk at an intersection. Therefore, it could not be said as a matter of law that the defendant was negligent in failing to anticipate, until the truck was some 60 to 80 feet away, that the plaintiff would not yield the right of way (41 Cal. 2d 712, 715) . At that instant, the defendant reasonably may be said to have been confronted unexpectedly with a sudden and imminent peril. A deliberately calculated and cool choice was no longer possible. Therefore, the record showed adequate basis for the instruction on imminent peril (41 Cal. 2d 712, 716) .

In Schultz v. Mathias (1970) 3 Cal. App. 3d 904, 83 Cal. Rptr. 888 , the plaintiffs' son was killed in a automobile collision between a car in which he was a passenger and a car driven by the defendant. The defendant, after noticing the decedent's car approaching in the wrong lane, swerved to the left and applied his brakes. Just before the collision, the decedent's car veered to the right. Following a verdict and judgment for the defendant, the plaintiffs moved for a new trial on several grounds, including insufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict and newly discovered evidence [see Code Civ. Proc. § 657(4), (6)]. When the motion was granted on both grounds, the defendant appealed the order.

The court of appeal reversed the order granting a new trial, finding that neither ground was sufficient (3 Cal. App. 3d 904, 909-914) . In addition, the court found that the doctrine of imminent peril was applicable as a matter of law and that there was no substantial evidence that the defendant's attempt to avoid the collision by veering to his left instead of the right constituted negligence (3 Cal. App. 3d 904, 914) . The Court held that a person who, without negligence on his or her part, is suddenly and unexpectedly confronted with peril, arising from either the actual presence, or the appearance, of imminent danger to himself or herself or to others, is not expected nor required to use the same judgment and prudence that is required of him or her in the exercise of ordinary care in calmer and more deliberate moments. The basis of the rule, the court noted, is that the actor is left no time for thought or is reasonably so disturbed or excited that he or she cannot weigh alternative courses of action and must make a speedy decision, based very largely on impulse or guess. Under these conditions, the actor cannot be held to the same conduct as one who has had full opportunity to reflect, even though it later appears that he or she made the wrong decision, one that no reasonable person could possibly have made after due deliberation (3 Cal. App. 3d 904, 912) . The test is whether or not the actor took one of the courses of action that a reasonable person in that emergency might have taken. That course is not negligent even though it led to an injury that might have been prevented by adopting an alternative course of action (3 Cal. App. 3d 904, 912-913) . In this case, the defendant, through no fault of his own, was confronted with an emergency and had no time for a deliberate and considered choice of alternatives. Although the plaintiffs suggested that the defendant was negligent in failing to anticipate that the decedent's car would attempt to get back into the correct lane, the defendant could just as reasonably have anticipated that the decedent's car would continue in its course or even would have veered further to the defendant's right. Reflection after the fact might indicate that the defendant's choice of alternatives was a mistake. Whether or not the disaster could have been avoided if the defendant had veered to his right, however, is open to question. The evidence of the defendant's conduct therefore did not establish negligence (3 Cal. App. 3d 904, 913) .

NOTE:

Schultz v. Mathias (1970) 3 Cal. App. 3d 904, 83 Cal. Rptr. 888 , was criticized on other grounds in Scala v. Jerry Witt & Sons, Inc. (1970) 3 Cal. 3d 359, 364 n.1, 90 Cal. Rptr. 592, 475 P.2d 864 . In Scala, the Supreme Court held that a lower court's specification of reasons for granting a new trial under Code Civ. Proc. § 657 should not be stated in terms of ultimate fact [see Scala v. Jerry Witt & Sons, Inc. (1970) 3 Cal. 3d 359, 370, 90 Cal. Rptr. 592, 475 P.2d 864] .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Standard of Care in Situation of Imminent Peril

In Damele v. Mack Trucks, Inc. (1990) 219 Cal. App. 3d 29, 267 Cal. Rptr. 197 , a worker brought a personal injury action against his employer and a truck company, alleging that he was crushed between a truck and trailer after trying to reconnect the trailer to prevent it from rolling off a ramp or into an area where other trucks were waiting to deliver their loads. The trial court instructed the jury on the duty of one in imminent peril. The jury found that the truck company was 49 percent at fault, the employer was 49 percent at fault, and the worker was two percent at fault. The truck company appealed, contending that the trial court erred by giving the imminent peril instruction because the worker's conduct caused or contributed to creating the perilous situation as a matter of law. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment, stating that the doctrine of imminent peril applies not only if a person perceives danger to himself or herself, but also if he or she perceives an imminent danger to others. In addition, the mere appearance of an imminent peril to others, not an actual imminent peril, is all that is required to invoke the doctrine. Moreover, even if the worker's conduct created the perilous situation as a matter of law, reading the instruction would have been harmless error because although the instruction permitted the jury to apply the imminent peril doctrine, it did not require that it do so. If the facts were as clear as the truck company claimed, then it follows that the jury would have found the doctrine inapplicable (219 Cal. App. 3d 29, 36-37) .

In McShane v. Cleaver (1966) 247 Cal. App. 2d 260, 55 Cal. Rptr. 427 , the court of appeal affirmed judgment for the defendants in an action involving an automobile accident. On appeal, the plaintiffs contended that the evidence did not support the giving of an instruction on imminent peril. The court noted that the doctrine applies when a nonnegligent person is confronted with a situation of imminent danger to himself or herself or others, in which case he or she is not required to exercise the same degree of care otherwise required (247 Cal. App. 2d 260, 268) . In this case, the jury may have found that the defendant was confronted with a dangerous situation and that her action in attempting to pull her car to the right instead of applying the brakes may have been a standard of care that was reasonable under the situation. Therefore, because the question was one of fact, it was properly left to the jury (247 Cal. App. 2d 260, 269) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
B. Duty
6. Duty Owed by or to Particular Persons or Entities

16-165 California Points & Authorities §§ 165.251-165.259

[Reserved]

§§ 165.251[Reserved]

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
C. Causation
1. General Rules

16-165 California Points & Authorities § 165.260

§ 165.260 Sufficient Causal Connection Exists Between Defendant's Actions and Plaintiff's Injuries

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief].

DEFENDANT'S CONDUCT CAUSED PLAINTIFF'S INJURY.

A. Sufficient Causal Connection Between Defendant's Actions and Plaintiff's Damages. Basic to the statement of a cause of action for damages premised on wrongful or negligent conduct is a showing that the charged conduct caused the claimed damages (Hutchison v. Southern Cal. First Nat'l Bank (1980) 27 Cal. App. 3d 572, 578-579, 103 Cal. Rptr. 816).

[Optional] B. Absolute Certainty Not Required. The plaintiff is not required to establish the fact of causation with absolute certainty. Evidence is sufficient if reasonable persons could conclude from it that it is more probable than not that the defendant's conduct was a cause of the plaintiff's injury (Valdez v. J.D. Diffenbaugh Co. (1975) 51 Cal. App. 3d 494, 509, 124 Cal. Rptr. 467).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that sufficient causal connection exists between the defendant's actions and the plaintiff's injuries to establish proximate cause. Optional Paragraph B may be submitted to assert that the plaintiff need not establish absolute certainty of a causal connection. This argument may arise in opposing a demurrer or motion for summary judgment in an action for damages for negligence [see, e.g., Whitcombe v. County of Yolo (1977) 73 Cal. App. 3d 698, 702, 141 Cal. Rptr. 189 (demurrer); see also Brown v. Critchfield (1980) 100 Cal. App. 3d 858, 861, 161 Cal. Rptr. 342 (summary judgment)]. This form should be combined with any of the forms in §§ 165.261 -165.263 that are applicable to the particular case.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel may discuss the facts of the case showing a substantial connection between the defendant's conduct and the plaintiff's injuries or damages.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For related legal background, research and procedural guides, and forms of answer to a cause of action for negligence, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For additional points and authorities to combine with this form, see §§ 165.261 -165.263. For points and authorities supporting and opposing demurrers, see Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities in §§ 165.270 -165.273 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose the points and authorities in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Sufficient Causal Connection Between Defendant's Actions and Plaintiff's Damages

The factual and procedural background of Hutchison v. Southern Cal. First Nat'l Bank (1980) 27 Cal. App. 3d 572, 103 Cal. Rptr. 816 , is discussed in § 165.20[3][c]. The plaintiffs, pledgors of shares of corporate stock, brought an action for damages against the defendant, the pledgee, based on the pledgee's allegedly negligent failure to consent to certain transactions involving the shares. Although the court of appeal affirmed the judgment of dismissal after sustaining a demurrer to the plaintiff's complaint, it stated that basic to the statement of a cause of action for damages premised on wrongful or negligent conduct is a showing that the charged conduct caused the claimed damages (27 Cal. App. 3d 572, 578) . It noted, however, that the plaintiffs failed to adequately allege the elements of causation and damages in any of its various causes of action, in that they failed to show a chain of causation between the defendant's refusal to consent to a certain business transaction and their claimed damages (27 Cal. App. 3d 572, 579) . The court added that the lack of adequate allegations of causation between the defendant's conduct and the plaintiffs' claimed damages is a fatal omission supporting the order sustaining the general demurrer (27 Cal. App. 3d 572, 579-580) . After discussing other reasons for sustaining the general demurrer without leave to amend, the court stated that the order sustaining the general demurrer without leave to amend was not error (27 Cal. App. 3d 572, 585) .

[b] Absolute Certainty Not Required

The factual and procedural background of Valdez v. J.D. Diffenbaugh Co. (1975) 51 Cal. App. 3d 494, 124 Cal. Rptr. 467 , is discussed in § 165.30[3][b]. In Valdez, an employee of a pipe manufacturer brought an action for damages for personal injuries against the general contractor who built the plant in which the plaintiff was injured and two suppliers and installers of equipment involved in the plaintiff's injury. Negligence was an issue regarding the general contractor only

In affirming a judgment for the plaintiff against all three defendants and an order granting the suppliers' motion for a new trial, the court of appeal examined various policy considerations. It found that the contractor owed a duty to the plaintiff and that its conduct was in breach of this duty (51 Cal. App. 3d 494, 506-508) . In addition, the court found that the concurrence of several negligent acts caused the plaintiff's injury and that "but for" the occurrence of each of these acts, the plaintiff would not have been injured (51 Cal. App. 3d 494, 508) . For the plaintiff to establish causation, the defendant's act must, in some way, have contributed to the injury--that is, "but for" the defendant's negligence, the injury would not have occurred. Therefore, the plaintiff had to demonstrate only that but for a single negligent act by the defendant, he would have escaped injury. In addition, to hold the defendant liable, the defendant's negligent act must be the proximate or legal cause of the injury (51 Cal. App. 3d 494, 509) .

In this case, the defendant attached fail-safe delatching devices to oven entry doors at the plant at which the plaintiff was injured. The fail-safe devices were designed to prevent certain carts from crashing into the oven doors. If the oven doors did not close completely, the fail-safe devices would not work. The defendant was aware of this (51 Cal. App. 3d 494, 509) . Because of problems experienced with the original door, the defendant reworked and rehung the door that was involved in the plaintiff's injury. The court noted that the defendant's workers negligently hung the oven door. On the day of the accident, the door failed to completely close, the fail-safe device did not engage, and the cart crashed into the oven door (51 Cal. App. 3d 494, 509-510) . Thus, but for the failure of the oven door to close tightly, the fail-safe device would have halted the cart, and the plaintiff would have avoided the injury. Therefore, it appeared reasonably probable from the evidence presented at trial, and the inferences drawn from it, that the defendant's negligence in hanging the door was a proximate cause of the plaintiff's injury (51 Cal. App. 3d 494, 510) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Sufficient Causal Connection Between Defendant's Actions and Plaintiff's Damages

The factual and procedural background of City of Los Angeles v. Shpegel-Dimsey, Inc. (1988) 198 Cal. App. 3d 1009, 244 Cal. Rptr. 507 , is discussed in § 165.70[4][c]. In reversing the judgment for the defendant, the court of appeal stated that to recover under the theory of negligence per se, the injury suffered must have been proximately caused by the hazardous condition or the violation of statute (198 Cal. App. 3d 1009, 1021) .

In Brown v. Critchfield (1980) 100 Cal. App. 3d 858, 161 Cal. Rptr. 342 , a property owner brought an action against an attorney and a real estate broker, alleging negligence and fraud in connection with the sale of land. The court of appeal reversed judgment for the defendants after granting their motion for summary judgment, finding that the plaintiff had stated a cause of action. The court held that in an action for damages resulting from fraud or negligence, a causal connection between the tortfeasor's actions and the victim's damages must be pleaded and ultimately proved (100 Cal. App. 3d 858, 866) .

[b] Absolute Certainty Not Required

In Lineaweaver v. Plant Insulation Co. (1995) 31 Cal. App. 4th 1409, 37 Cal. Rptr. 2d 902 , the plaintiff, a laborer and journeyman boilermaker/welder, brought an action against the defendant, an asbestos supplier, to recover for personal injuries sustained from repeated exposure to asbestos insulation products. The trial court granted a defense motion for nonsuit, concluding that the plaintiff failed to present sufficient evidence of exposure to the defendant's product. The court of appeal reversed, stating that although there was no direct evidence that the plaintiff was exposed to the defendant's product, the circumstantial evidence was sufficient to support a reasonable inference of exposure. As for biological causation, expert testimony indicated that exposure to the defendant's products was "a very substantial factor" in causing the plaintiff's asbestosis. Although there were other possible sources of the plaintiff's asbestosis, the defendant's products were prominent and prevalent at the plaintiff's work site (31 Cal. App. 4th 1409, 1420) .

In Ahrentzen v. Westburg (1968) 263 Cal. App. 2d 749, 69 Cal. Rptr. 916 , the plaintiff brought an action for damages for personal injuries suffered in an automobile collision. The court of appeal affirmed judgment for the plaintiff. The defendant contended that other evidence should have been believed at trial and that the accident did not happen as the plaintiff related it. The court stated, however, that the jury apparently believed the plaintiff and did not believe the defendant and his witnesses. The court stated that the plaintiff is not required to establish the fact of causation with absolute certainty. It is sufficient if there is evidence from which reasonable persons could conclude that it is more probable than not that the defendant's conduct was a cause (263 Cal. App. 2d 749, 751) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
C. Causation
1. General Rules

16-165 California Points & Authorities § 165.261

§ 165.261 Defendant's Conduct Was Cause in Fact of Plaintiff's Injuries

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief].

DEFENDANT IS LIABLE FOR HIS/HER/ITS NEGLIGENCE BECAUSE DEFENDANT'S CONDUCT WAS THE CAUSE IN FACT OF PLAINTIFF'S INJURY.

A. "But For" Test Met. To hold the defendant liable, the plaintiff must show that the defendant's negligence contributed in some way to the plaintiff's injury, so that "but for" the defendant's negligence, the injury would not have been sustained (Akins v. County of Sonoma (1967) 67 Cal. 2d 185, 198-199, 60 Cal. Rptr. 499, 430 P.2d 57 ; Valdez v. J.D. Diffenbaugh Co. (1975) 51 Cal. App. 3d 494, 508, 124 Cal. Rptr. 467).

B. Proximate Cause Includes Cause in Fact. Proximate cause includes the concept of legal cause as well as cause in fact (Banville v. Schmidt (1974) 37 Cal. App. 3d 92, 107, 112 Cal. Rptr. 126).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that the defendant's acts or omissions proximately caused injury to the plaintiff. This form should be combined with any of the forms in § 165.260 and §§ 165.262 -165.263 that are applicable to the particular case.

This argument may arise in opposing a demurrer or motion for summary judgment in an action for damages for negligence [see, e.g., Whitcombe v. County of Yolo (1977) 73 Cal. App. 3d 698, 702, 141 Cal. Rptr. 189 (demurrer); see also Brown v. Critchfield (1980) 100 Cal. App. 3d 858, 861, 161 Cal. Rptr. 342 (summary judgment)].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel may argue that the defendant's acts or omissions were the cause in fact of the plaintiff's injury and the legal cause of the plaintiff's injury as well.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For related legal background, research and procedural guides, and forms of answer to a cause of action for negligence, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For additional points and authorities to combine with this form, see § 165.260 and §§ 165.262 -165.263. For points and authorities supporting and opposing demurrers, see Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities in §§ 165.270 -165.273 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose the points and authorities in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] "But For" Test Met

In Akins v. County of Sonoma (1967) 67 Cal. 2d 185, 60 Cal. Rptr. 499, 430 P.2d 57 , a two-year-old boy brought an action through his guardian ad litem against the defendants for personal injuries suffered when he fell from his seat in the bleachers at a county fairground. The plaintiff, who was sitting on the top row of the bleachers while watching a roller derby exhibition with his parents, fell through an open space between the rear of his seat and a back rail onto a concrete floor ten to 15 feet below. The trial court entered judgment for the defendants. The plaintiff appealed, contending that various errors occurred at trial, particularly in the jury instructions, requiring reversal.

The Supreme Court affirmed. After examining the issues of res ipsa loquitur and violations of safety orders by the defendant, the Court addressed the issue of proximate cause (67 Cal. 2d 185, 192-197) . The Court noted that the negligence of the plaintiff's parents was relevant to the issue of actual causation (67 Cal. 2d 185, 198) . To hold the defendants liable, the plaintiff must show that the negligence of the defendants contributed in some way to the plaintiff's injury, so that "but for" the defendants' negligence, the injury would not have been sustained (67 Cal. 2d 185, 198-199) . If because of lack of supervision by his parents, the plaintiff would have fallen from the bleachers even if the defendants had provided safe seating arrangements and had adequately supervised the seating at the fairgrounds, then the defendants' negligence would not be the cause in fact of the plaintiff's injuries (67 Cal. 2d 185, 199) . Furthermore, the issue of the negligence of the plaintiff's parents was relevant to the issue of proximate cause. This issue, the Court explained, is concerned with whether or not, assuming that a defendant was negligent and that his or her negligence was an actual cause of the plaintiff's injury, the defendant should be held responsible for the plaintiff's injury when the injury was brought about by a later cause of independent origin (67 Cal. 2d 185, 199) . This presented a question for the jury: was negligence of the plaintiff's parents foreseeable to the defendants? If not, did it nevertheless result in a type of injury that was foreseeable to the defendants (67 Cal. 2d 185, 199-200) ? The Court further stated if either of these questions is answered in the affirmative, then the defendants are not relieved from liability towards the plaintiff. If, however, the intervening cause posed by the parents' conduct was not foreseeable, and the results that it caused were not foreseeable, then the intervening cause is a supervening cause, and the defendants are relieved of liability for the plaintiff's injuries (67 Cal. 2d 185, 199) . Based on the Court's conclusion that the negligence of the plaintiff's parents was properly injected into the case, it concluded that the lower court's jury instructions were proper (67 Cal. 2d 185, 200-201) .

The factual and procedural background of Valdez v. J.D. Diffenbaugh Co. (1975) 51 Cal. App. 3d 494, 124 Cal. Rptr. 467 , is discussed in § 165.30[3][b]. In this case, an employee of a pipe manufacturer brought an action for damages for personal injuries against the general contractor who built the plant in which the plaintiff was injured and two suppliers and installers of equipment involved in the plaintiff's injury. Negligence was an issue regarding the general contractor only.

In affirming judgment for the plaintiff against all three defendants and an order granting the suppliers' motion for a new trial, the court of appeal examined various policy considerations and found that the contractor owed a duty to the plaintiff and that its conduct was in breach of this duty (51 Cal. App. 3d 494, 506-508) . In addition, the court found that the concurrence of several negligent acts caused the plaintiff's injury and that "but for" the occurrence of each of these acts, the plaintiff would not have been injured (51 Cal. App. 3d 494, 508) . To establish causation, the plaintiff must establish that the defendant's act, in some way, contributed to the injury. That is, "but for" the defendant's negligence, the injury would not have occurred. Thus, the plaintiff had to demonstrate only that but for a single negligent act by the defendant, the plaintiff would have escaped injury. In addition, the defendant's negligent act must be the proximate or legal cause of the injury in order for the defendant to be held liable (51 Cal. App. 3d 494, 509) .

In this case, the defendant attached fail-safe delatching devices to oven entry doors at the plant at which the plaintiff was injured. The fail-safe devices were designed to prevent certain carts from crashing into the oven doors. If the oven doors did not close completely, the fail-safe devices would not work, and the defendant was aware of this (51 Cal. App. 3d 494, 509) . Because of problems experienced with the original door, the defendant reworked and rehung the door that was involved in the plaintiff's injury. The court noted that the defendant's workers negligently hung the oven door and that on the day of the accident, the door failed to completely close. The fail-safe device did not engage, and the cart crashed into the oven door (51 Cal. App. 3d 494, 509-510) . Thus, but for the failure of the oven door to close tightly, the fail-safe device would have halted the cart, and the plaintiff would have avoided the injury. Hence, the court found that it appeared reasonably probable from the evidence presented at trial, and the inferences drawn from it, that the defendant's negligence in hanging the door was a proximate cause of the plaintiff's injury (51 Cal. App. 3d 494, 510) .

[b] Proximate Cause Includes Cause in Fact

In Banville v. Schmidt (1974) 37 Cal. App. 3d 92, 112 Cal. Rptr. 126 , the plaintiffs brought an action against several defendants for rescission of a real estate sale and for damages for negligence, fraud, and misrepresentation. The plaintiffs contended, in part, that one defendant, First American Title Company, negligently failed to discover the recordation of a deed that conveyed certain property back to another defendant. After a nonjury trial, the plaintiffs appealed from that portion of the judgment entered in favor of First American Title Company and against the plaintiffs. The trial court found that First American was negligent in its failure to ascertain the status of the title of the property in question, but that its negligence was not the proximate cause of the damage sustained by the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs, however, contended that First American's negligence, as a matter of law, was a proximate cause of the damage sustained by them. In addition, another defendant, Tom Kiernan Realtors, Inc., appealed from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff and from an order sustaining, without leave to amend, First American's demurrer to Kiernan's cross complaint against First American.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment in favor of the plaintiff against Kiernan Company and reversed the judgment in favor of First American Company and against the plaintiffs. After first finding that First American owed a duty to the plaintiff, the court turned to the issue of proximate cause (37 Cal. App. 3d 92, 102-106) . The court noted that when the facts are clear and undisputed, it is a question of law for the court to determine the legal consequences of those facts (37 Cal. App. 3d 92, 106) . The issue of proximate cause includes the concept of legal cause in addition to cause in fact. The actor's negligent conduct is a legal cause of harm to another if (1) his or her conduct is a substantial factor in bringing about the harm, and (2) there is no rule of law relieving the actor from liability because of the manner in which his or her negligence has resulted in the harm (37 Cal. App. 3d 92, 107) . In this case, the court found that First American's failure to discover and report the duly recorded deed was a cause in fact of the damage sustained by the plaintiff. A resort to reason, the court said, compelled the inference that "but for" the negligence of First American, the escrow would never have closed in a manner causing the plaintiffs to lose that for which they had bargained (37 Cal. App. 3d 92, 107) . In addition, the court explained that proximate cause, to be actionable, need not be the sole factor contributing to the damages sustained. Although this case involved joint tortfeasors, the court also held that no act of any other defendant could be considered a superseding cause that would absolve First American of liability (37 Cal. App. 3d 92, 107-108) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
C. Causation
1. General Rules

16-165 California Points & Authorities § 165.262

§ 165.262 Defendant's Conduct Was Substantial Factor in Causing Plaintiff's Injuries

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief].

DEFENDANT IS LIABLE FOR HIS/HER/ITS NEGLIGENCE BECAUSE DEFENDANT'S CONDUCT WAS A SUBSTANTIAL FACTOR IN CAUSING PLAINTIFF'S INJURY.

Conduct Was Substantial Factor. If the act or omission was a substantial factor in bringing about the result, it is regarded as a legal cause of the injury (Willis v. Gordon (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 629, 635, 143 Cal. Rptr. 723, 574 P.2d 794 ; Hardison v. Bushnell (1993) 18 Cal. App. 4th 22, 26, 22 Cal. Rptr. 2d 106).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that the defendant's conduct was a substantial factor in bringing about the plaintiff's injuries [see Willis v. Gordon (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 629, 635, 143 Cal. Rptr. 723, 574 P.2d 794] . This form should be combined with any of the forms in §§ 165.260 -165.261 and § 165.263 that are applicable to the particular case.

This argument may arise in opposing a demurrer or motion for summary judgment in an action for damages for negligence [see, e.g., Whitcombe v. County of Yolo (1977) 73 Cal. App. 3d 698, 702, 141 Cal. Rptr. 189 (demurrer); see also Brown v. Critchfield (1980) 100 Cal. App. 3d 858, 861, 161 Cal. Rptr. 342 (summary judgment)].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel may discuss the facts leading to the plaintiff's injury and argue that the defendant's conduct was a substantial factor in their cause.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For related legal background, research and procedural guides, and forms of answer to a cause of action for negligence, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For additional points and authorities to combine with this form, see §§ 165.260 -165.261 and § 165.263. For points and authorities supporting and opposing demurrers, see Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities in §§ 165.270 -165.273 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose the points and authorities in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Conduct Was Substantial Factor

In Willis v. Gordon (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 629, 143 Cal. Rptr. 723, 574 P.2d 794 , the plaintiffs brought an action for wrongful death and personal injuries suffered in an automobile collision. The defendants were parked on the side of a highway, intending to fix a flat tire, when Mrs. Willis swerved left to avoid hitting the parked car, crossed over the center line, and collided with a third car driven by Mrs. Galarza. Mrs. Willis was killed, and Mrs. Galarza suffered serious injuries from the ensuing collision. Mr. Galarza joined in the action against the defendants. At the close of the plaintiffs' opening statement, the court entered a judgment of nonsuit. The plaintiffs appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed. The Court held that the judgment of nonsuit was erroneous because it could not be said that the opening statements permitted no construction other than that the plaintiffs failed to sustain a prima facie case of actionable negligence. The Court noted that the opening statements set forth facts showing certain statutory violations and the common law duty to exercise reasonable care from which the jury could reasonably have found the defendants negligent (20 Cal. 3d 629, 634) . Although the defendants contended that the decedent's inattention and failure to handle her vehicle properly was the sole and proximate cause of the accident, whether or not the defendants' conduct in parking on the curve had such an effect in producing the accident that reasonable persons would regard it as a cause of the collision is a question of fact (20 Cal. 3d 629, 634-635) . There is no requirement that the defendants' negligent action be the sole cause of the accident. It is sufficient if it was a proximate cause or substantial factor in producing the collision. If the jury determines that the defendants' negligence was a substantial factor in producing the accident, but that the immediate cause of the harm was the decedent's excessive reaction, the defendant would not be relieved of liability if the risk of harm that resulted in the plaintiffs' injury and death was foreseeable to the defendants. It was, however, for the jury to decide whether or not the decedent's swerving was foreseeable, and therefore, one of the hazards that would make the defendants' parking negligent. Therefore, the Court concluded that the lower court erroneously granted the motion for nonsuit (20 Cal. 3d 629, 635) .

In Hardison v. Bushnell (1993) 18 Cal. App. 4th 22, 22 Cal. Rptr. 2d 106 , the truck in which the plaintiff was riding struck a semitractor driven by the defendant. The truck, which was traveling north at an unsafe speed, hit the semitractor after the defendant, who was traveling south, turned left across the northbound lane. The plaintiff, who was not wearing a seat belt, shattered his wrist when he was thrown forward into the truck's dashboard. The plaintiff brought a personal injury action against the defendant and the defendant's employer. The jury found that the defendant was negligent, but that the defendant's conduct was not the proximate cause of the plaintiff's injuries. The plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed and remanded, holding that the jury's verdict was not supported by substantial evidence. The court held that the defendant's negligence was a proximate cause of the collision and of the plaintiff's injuries, because the jury could not reasonably have found that an independent intervening act that the defendant could not have foreseen absolved the defendant of being a legal cause of the plaintiff's injuries (18 Cal. App. 4th 22, 26) . The court held that the defendant's negligence was the actual cause or cause-in-fact of the plaintiff's injuries, because the defendant's turning his semitractor into the path of the truck was a substantial factor in causing those injuries (18 Cal. App. 4th 22, 26) . The court also held that an independent intervening act breaks the chain of causation and absolves a defendant only if the act is unforeseeable and the type of injury it caused is unforeseeable (18 Cal. App. 4th 22, 27) . In this case, the only possible intervening acts were the plaintiff's failure to wear a seat belt and the truck's excessive rate of speed. The court held that the plaintiff's failure to wear a seat belt was foreseeable by the defendant, as was a speeding approaching vehicle. The defendant was negligent because his turn created the risk of collision with oncoming traffic, and the speed of those oncoming vehicles only enhanced the hazard created by the defendant's negligence (18 Cal. App. 4th 22, 28) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Conduct Was Substantial Factor

In Greathouse v. Amcord, Inc. (1995) 35 Cal. App. 4th 831, 41 Cal. Rptr. 2d 561 , the plaintiffs, the survivors of a construction worker who died from asbestos-related disease, filed a wrongful death action against various defendants, including a company that marketed plastic gun cement. Plastic gun cement was designed for use in plaster guns and contained about 2 percent asbestos by volume. Evidence indicated that the decedent used a plaster gun regularly in his work. The case was submitted to a jury, which awarded damages to the plaintiffs. The defendant appealed, contending that the verdict on the issue of causation was not supported by substantial evidence. The court of appeal affirmed, noting that the substantial factor test of causation applies generally for tort liability and that in the specific context of asbestos litigation, a plaintiff must demonstrate exposure to a product and biological processes from the exposure that result in disease. The court stated that the record disclosed an abundance of evidence from which the jury could infer that the decedent commonly purchased the defendant's product and that he was exposed to the product to such an extent that it was a substantial factor in bringing about his illness (35 Cal. App. 4th 831, 837) .

The facts and procedural background of City of Los Angeles v. Shpegel-Dimsey, Inc. (1988) 198 Cal. App. 3d 1009, 244 Cal. Rptr. 507 , are discussed in § 165.70[4][c]. In reversing judgment for the defendant, the court of appeal stated that proximate causation exists if the condition or the violation of statute is a substantial factor in causing the injury--that is, if there is reason to believe that the absence of the condition or compliance with the statute would have prevented or lessened the likelihood of injury (198 Cal. App. 3d 1009, 1021) .

In Greenfield v. Insurance, Inc. (1971) 19 Cal. App. 3d 803, 97 Cal. Rptr. 164 , the plaintiff asked the defendant, an insurance broker, to obtain business interruption insurance for him that covered mechanical breakdown. The defendant informed the plaintiff that it had obtained the desired coverage, but the policy, which neither party read before filing it, did not cover mechanical breakdown. After the plaintiff suffered losses from mechanical breakdown, he obtained coverage from another company. The court of appeal held that the defendant's negligence proximately caused the plaintiff's losses because it was a substantial factor in causing them. If the defendant had not misrepresented the extent of the insurance coverage it claimed to have obtained for the plaintiff, it was reasonable to infer that the plaintiff would have obtained coverage elsewhere (19 Cal. App. 3d 803, 810-811) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
C. Causation
1. General Rules

16-165 California Points & Authorities § 165.263

§ 165.263 Defendant's Conduct Was Proximate Cause of Plaintiff's Injuries

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief].

DEFENDANT IS LIABLE FOR HIS/HER/ITS NEGLIGENCE BECAUSE DEFENDANT'S CONDUCT WAS THE PROXIMATE CAUSE OF PLAINTIFF'S INJURY.

A. Proximate Cause Encompasses Legal Cause and Cause in Fact. Proximate cause includes the concept of legal cause in addition to cause in fact (Banville v. Schmidt (1974) 37 Cal. App. 3d 92, 107, 112 Cal. Rptr. 126).

B. Proximate Cause Is Policy Determination. The defendant's negligent act must be the proximate or legal cause of the plaintiff's injury to hold the defendant liable. Proximate cause is not a question of causation, but is simply a policy determination of whether or not the defendant should be held responsible for his or her acts (Valdez v. J.D. Diffenbaugh Co. (1975) 51 Cal. App. 3d 494, 509, 124 Cal. Rptr. 467).

C. Policy Considerations in Proximate Cause Determination. The questions of duty and proximate cause are sometimes the same. Principal policy considerations in determining whether or not duty or proximate cause exists include: (1) the foreseeability of harm to the plaintiff; (2) the degree of certainty that the plaintiff suffered injury; (3) the closeness of connection between the defendant's conduct and the injury suffered; (4) the moral blame attached to the defendant's conduct; (5) the policy of preventing future harm; (6) the extent of the burden to the defendant and consequences to the community of imposing a duty to exercise care with resulting liability for breach; and (7) the availability, costs, and prevalence of insurance for the risk involved (Tara v. California State Auto. Ass'n (1979) 93 Cal. App. 3d 227, 231, 155 Cal. Rptr. 497)

D. No Intervening Cause. Proximate cause is a cause that, in a natural and continuous sequence, unbroken by any efficient intervening cause, produced the injury or damage complained of and without which such injury or damage would not have occurred (Whitcombe v. County of Yolo (1977) 73 Cal. App. 3d 698, 708, 141 Cal. Rptr. 189).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that the defendant's acts or omissions proximately caused injury to the plaintiff [see Banville v. Schmidt (1974) 37 Cal. App. 3d 92, 107, 112 Cal. Rptr. 126] . This form should be combined with any of the forms in §§ 165.260 -165.262 that are applicable to the particular case.

This argument may arise in opposing a demurrer or motion for summary judgment in an action for damages for negligence [see, e.g., Whitcombe v. County of Yolo (1977) 73 Cal. App. 3d 698, 702, 141 Cal. Rptr. 189 (demurrer); see also Brown v. Critchfield (1980) 100 Cal. App. 3d 858, 861, 161 Cal. Rptr. 342 (summary judgment)].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel may argue that the defendant's acts or omissions were the cause in fact of the plaintiff's injury, in addition to the legal cause of the plaintiff's injury. Counsel may also argue that no intervening cause broke the chain of causation.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For related legal background, research and procedural guides, and forms of answer to a cause of action for negligence, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For additional points and authorities to combine with this form, see §§ 165.260 -165.262. For points and authorities supporting and opposing demurrers, see Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities in §§ 165.270 -165.273 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose the points and authorities in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Proximate Cause Encompasses Legal Cause and Cause in Fact

The factual and procedural background of Banville v. Schmidt (1974) 37 Cal. App. 3d 92, 112 Cal. Rptr. 126 , is discussed in § 165.261[3][b]. In Banville, the court of appeal affirmed judgment in favor of the plaintiff against Kiernan Company and reversed the judgment in favor of First American Company and against the plaintiffs. After first finding that First American owed a duty to the plaintiff, the court turned to the issue of proximate cause (37 Cal. App. 3d 92, 102-106) . The court noted that if the facts are clear and undisputed, it is a question of law for the court to determine the legal consequences of those facts (37 Cal. App. 3d 92, 106) . The issue of proximate cause includes the concept of legal cause in addition to cause in fact. The actor's negligent conduct is a legal cause of harm to another if (1) his or her conduct is a substantial factor in bringing about the harm, and (2) there is no rule of law relieving the actor from liability because of the manner in which his or her negligence has resulted in the harm (37 Cal. App. 3d 92, 107) . The court found that First American's failure to discover and report the duly recorded deed was a cause in fact of the damage sustained by the plaintiffs. A resort to reason, the court said, compelled the inference that "but for" the negligence of First American, the escrow would never have closed in a manner causing the plaintiffs to lose that for which they had bargained (37 Cal. App. 3d 92, 107) . In addition, proximate cause, to be actionable, need not be the sole factor contributing to the damages sustained. Although this case involved joint tortfeasors, the court also held that no act of any other defendant could be considered a superseding cause that would absolve First American of liability (37 Cal. App. 3d 92, 107-108) .

[b] Proximate Cause Is Policy Determination

The factual and procedural background of Valdez v. J.D. Diffenbaugh Co. (1975) 51 Cal. App. 3d 494, 124 Cal. Rptr. 467 , is discussed in § 165.30[3][b]. In finding that it was reasonably probable that the defendant's negligence in hanging an oven door was the proximate cause of the plaintiff's injury, the court stated that the defendant's negligent act must be the proximate or legal cause of the plaintiff's injury for the defendant to be held liable (51 Cal. App. 3d 494, 509) . In a philosophical sense, the court noted, cause and effect find their beginning and end in the boundless and unascertainable. Consequently, the courts do not attempt to approach cause and effect in any absolute degree, but only in such a manner as is practicable. Thus, terms such as "proximate," "legal," and "natural" have come into use as establishing the boundaries beyond which the courts will not traverse in the attempt to trace the connection between a given cause and a given effect. For example, a plaintiff alleges, as an effect, some injury that has been done to his or her person or property. He or she shows that prior to the injury a wrongful act of another person occurred and that but for the occurrence of this wrongful act, the injury complained of would not have been sustained. The courts then state that the wrong was a cause of the injury. To make such a standard (that if the cause had not existed, the effect would not have occurred) the basis of legal responsibility, however, would soon prove very unsatisfactory. A reduction ad absurdum may result by noting that if the injured person had never been born, the injury would not have occurred. The courts then ask the question of whether the wrongful act was the proximate cause (51 Cal. App. 3d 494, 508-509) . Thus, the courts have concluded that proximate cause is not a question of causation. It is simply a policy determination of whether or not the defendant should be held responsible for his or her acts (51 Cal. App. 3d 494, 509) .

[c] Policy Considerations in Proximate Cause Determination

In Tara v. California State Auto. Ass'n (1979) 93 Cal. App. 3d 227, 155 Cal. Rptr. 497 , the plaintiff, whose mother was injured in an automobile accident with an uninsured motorist, brought an action against her mother's insurance company for the value of housekeeping services that she furnished to her mother while her mother was recuperating from the accident. The plaintiff's mother had previously settled her claims against her insurer on the uninsured motorist coverage of her insurance policy. The trial court affirmed an arbitration award in favor of the defendant. The plaintiff appealed, contending that she was entitled to recover for the care of her mother because she was an "insured" under Ins. Code § 11580.2.

The court of appeal affirmed. Under the clause in question, a person may recover damages from an insurer only if that person is legally entitled to recover those damages in tort directly from the owner or operator of the uninsured vehicle. The court explained that the question of duty and proximate cause are sometimes the same. Quoting Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 Cal. 2d 108, 113, 70 Cal. Rptr. 97, 443 P.2d 561 (discussed in § 165.30[3][d]), the court added that principal policy considerations in deciding whether or not a duty exists include (1) the foreseeability of harm to the plaintiff, (2) the degree of certainty that the plaintiff suffered injury, (3) the closeness of the connection between the defendant's conduct and the injury suffered, (4) the moral blame attached to the defendant's conduct, (5) the policy of preventing future harm, (6) the extent of the burden to the defendant and consequences to the community of imposing a duty to exercise care with resulting liability for breach, and (7) the availability, cost, and prevalence of insurance for the risk involved. In this case, the court found that the uninsured motorist owed no duty to the plaintiff and that the motorist's actions were not the proximate cause of any injury to the plaintiff. Although the court admitted that the plaintiff's assistance to her recuperating mother was admirable, the performance of these services was too remote from the actions of the uninsured motorist to give rise to a cause of action by the plaintiff against the uninsured motorist for the value of her services (93 Cal. App. 3d 227, 231) .

[d] No Intervening Cause

In Whitcombe v. County of Yolo (1977) 73 Cal. App. 3d 698, 141 Cal. Rptr. 189 , an employer and his employee brought an action against the county, the county probation department, and two probation officers for personal injuries suffered when they were assaulted by a probationer. The probationer had previously been arrested and charged with theft of certain property owned by the employer, but the county released the probationer after several days. On his release, the probationer returned and attacked the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs' complaint alleged ten causes of action based primarily on the negligent and wrongful conduct of the defendants with regard to their duties concerning probation and the breach of a special relationship between the defendants and the plaintiffs. The trial court sustained the defendants' demurrer to the complaint, based on the plaintiffs' failure to state a cause of action, and subsequently entered a judgment of dismissal. The plaintiffs appealed.

Although the court of appeal affirmed the judgment, it discussed the concept of proximate cause. It stated that proximate cause is legal cause, as distinguished from the lay person's notion of actual cause, and is always a question of law (73 Cal. App. 3d 698, 707) . Proximate cause, the court explained, is the cause that, in a natural and continuous sequence, unbroken by any efficient intervening cause, produced the injury or damage complained of and without which the result would not have occurred. The court was not convinced by the plaintiffs' argument that the defendants' alleged inaction in keeping and presenting reports about the probationer precluded the court from revoking the probationer's probation and thus proximately caused the plaintiffs' injuries (73 Cal. App. 3d 698, 708) . The court noted that even if the court had reviewed the probationer's record, it remained under no obligation to revoke probation. If the court had not revoked probation, the proximate cause of the plaintiffs' injuries would be the court's considered decision, which would be immunized from liability by Gov. Code § 845.8(a). Therefore, the court held that the injury was not proximately caused by the defendants' failure to discharge a duty (73 Cal. App. 3d 698, 708-709) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] No Intervening Cause

In Hall v. Macco Corp. (1961) 198 Cal. App. 2d 415, 18 Cal. Rptr. 273 , the plaintiff brought an action for damages for personal injuries resulting from a fire and explosion. The court of appeal affirmed. The court stated that although an act or omission is removed from the injury and damage by intermediate causes or effects, that act or omission is a proximate cause of the injury or damage if, in a natural and continuous sequence, unbroken by any superseding cause, that act or omission produces that injury or damage and if without that act or omission, the injury would not have happened (198 Cal. App. 2d 415, 423-424) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
C. Causation
1. General Rules

16-165 California Points & Authorities §§ 165.264-165.269

[Reserved]

§§ 165.264[Reserved]

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
C. Causation
1. General Rules

16-165 California Points & Authorities § 165.270

§ 165.270 Insufficient Causal Connection Between Defendant's Actions and Plaintiff's Injuries

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT IS NOT LIABLE FOR NEGLIGENCE BECAUSE THERE IS NO CAUSAL CONNECTION BETWEEN DEFENDANT'S CONDUCT AND PLAINTIFF'S INJURY.

Insufficient Causal Connection Between Defendant's Actions and Plaintiff's Injuries. To state a cause of action for damages premised on wrongful or negligent conduct, the plaintiff must show that the charged conduct caused the claimed damages (Hutchison v. Southern Cal. First Nat'l Bank (1972) 27 Cal. App. 3d 572, 578-579, 103 Cal. Rptr. 816 ; see Petersen v. Lewis (1935) 2 Cal. 2d 569, 572-573, 42 P.2d 311).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that the defendant's acts or omissions were not the cause of the plaintiff's injuries [see Hutchison v. Southern Cal. First Nat'l Bank (1972) 27 Cal. App. 3d 572, 578-579, 103 Cal. Rptr. 816] . This form should be combined with any of the forms in §§ 165.271 -165.273 that are applicable to the particular case.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the contention--for example, in support of a defendant's demurrer or motion for summary judgment in an action for damages for negligence [see, e.g., Whitcombe v. County of Yolo (1977) 73 Cal. App. 3d 698, 702, 141 Cal. Rptr. 189 (demurrer); see also Brown v. Critchfield (1980) 100 Cal. App. 3d 858, 861, 161 Cal. Rptr. 342 (summary judgment)].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel may argue facts showing that there is insufficient causal connection between the defendant's actions and the plaintiff's injuries to establish a cause of action for negligence.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For related legal background, research and procedural guides, and forms of answer to a cause of action for negligence, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For additional points and authorities to combine with this form, see §§ 165.271 -165.273. For points and authorities supporting and opposing demurrers, see Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities in §§ 165.260 -165.263 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose the points and authorities in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Insufficient Causal Connection Between Defendant's Actions and Plaintiff's Injuries

In Petersen v. Lewis (1935) 2 Cal. 2d 569, 42 P.2d 311 , the plaintiff brought an action for personal injuries suffered in an automobile collision. The defendant was driving an automobile with a two-wheel trailer attached and attempted to turn left at an intersection. The plaintiff, a passenger in the automobile following defendant's vehicle, was struck by an oncoming car that had swerved to avoid defendant's left-turning vehicle. The oncoming vehicle was traveling in excess of the speed limit at the time of the collision. The defendant was also in violation of certain statutory provisions in failing to give the proper left turning signal and in passing to the left of the center of the intersection. The lower court granted the defendant's motion for a directed verdict. The plaintiff appealed the judgment.

The Supreme Court affirmed, stating that notwithstanding the negligence per se of the defendant, it was unconvinced that the negligence was the proximate cause of the injury. The court noted that this conclusion could only be reached through surmise and speculation. The Court noted that the burden of proving that negligence was the cause of injury was on the plaintiff. By proving the negligence of the defendant without in some way fastening that negligence to the injury, a cause is not made out (2 Cal. 2d 569, 572) . The Court added that assuming that driver of the oncoming vehicle, who was not here to answer for himself, was negligent, and that his negligence may have been the proximate cause of the collision between the automobiles and the resulting injury to the plaintiff, a careful analysis of the evidence and a thorough study of the details of the accident failed to show such a proximate or necessary connection between the negligence of the defendant and the happening of the accident as to render defendant liable for the plaintiff's injuries (2 Cal. 2d 569, 572-573) .

The factual and procedural background of Hutchison v. Southern Cal. First Nat'l Bank (1972) 27 Cal. App. 3d 572, 578-579, 103 Cal. Rptr. 816 , is discussed in § 165.260[3][a].

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
C. Causation
1. General Rules

16-165 California Points & Authorities § 165.271

§ 165.271 Defendant's Conduct Was Not Cause in Fact of Plaintiff's Injuries

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief].

DEFENDANT IS NOT LIABLE FOR NEGLIGENCE BECAUSE DEFENDANT'S CONDUCT WAS NOT THE CAUSE IN FACT OF PLAINTIFF'S INJURY.

A. Defendant's Conduct Not Cause in Fact of Harm. If an accident would have happened even if the defendant had not been negligent, then the defendant's alleged negligence is not a cause in fact of the plaintiff's harm and cannot be the legal or responsible cause (Arthur v. Santa Monica Dairy Co. (1960) 183 Cal. App. 2d 483, 487, 6 Cal. Rptr. 808).

B. "But for" Test Applicable to Actual Rather Than Proximate Cause. The "but for" test defines actual cause, rather than proximate cause. Whether a cause may be the proximate, effective, or legal cause demands further characterization (Godwin v. La Turco (1969) 272 Cal. App. 2d 475, 479, 77 Cal. Rptr. 305).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that the defendant's acts or omissions were not the cause in fact of the plaintiff's injuries [see Arthur v. Santa Monica Dairy Co. (1960) 183 Cal. App. 2d 483, 487, 6 Cal. Rptr. 808] . This form should be combined with any of the forms in § 165.270 and §§ 165.272 -165.273 that are applicable to the particular case.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the contention, for example, in support of a defendant's demurrer or motion for summary judgment in an action for damages for negligence [see, e.g., Whitcombe v. County of Yolo (1977) 73 Cal.

App. 3d 698, 702, 141 Cal. Rptr. 189 (demurrer); see also Brown v. Critchfield (1980) 100 Cal. App. 3d 858, 861, 161 Cal. Rptr. 342 (summary judgment)].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel may discuss facts showing that the accident that caused the plaintiff's injury would have occurred even in the absence of the defendant's allegedly negligent act, so that the defendant's conduct was not the actual cause of the plaintiff's injury.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For related legal background, research and procedural guides, and forms of answer to a cause of action for negligence, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For additional points and authorities to combine with this form, see § 165.270 and §§ 165.272 -165.273. For points and authorities supporting and opposing demurrers, see Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities in §§ 165.260 -165.263 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose the points and authorities in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Defendant's Conduct Not Cause in Fact of Harm

In Arthur v. Santa Monica Dairy Co. (1960) 183 Cal. App. 2d 483, 6 Cal. Rptr. 808 , the plaintiff brought an action against the defendants for personal injuries suffered while he was riding as a guest in an automobile that collided with the rear of the defendants' parked truck. The driver of the car in which the plaintiff was a passenger was trying to locate a lit cigarette on the floor of the car, when he collided with the defendants' double-parked truck. The trial court found for the defendants. The plaintiff appealed, contending that the lower court's finding that the accident was not proximately caused by the conduct of the defendants was unsupported by the evidence.

The court of appeal affirmed. It stated that when the facts are undisputed and only one conclusion may be drawn therefrom, it is apparent that the issue of proximate cause is essentially one of fact (183 Cal. App. 2d 483, 486-487) . The plaintiff contended that had the defendants' truck not been double-parked, the collision would not have occurred, thus the truck was the proximate cause of the accident. The court noted, however, that the driver would have run into anything at that location, legally or illegally parked. If the accident would have occurred whether or not the defendant was negligent, then his or her negligence was not a cause in fact and, of course, cannot be the legal or responsible cause. The record disclosed, and the trial court implicitly found, that the driver of the car was looking for the lit cigarette for ten seconds prior to the collision. Had he been looking where he was driving, he would have had a clear unrestricted view of the truck already parked in plain sight. Thus, he could have avoided the accident by either changing to the empty lane and passing the truck, or by slowing down and bringing his car to a halt safely behind the truck (183 Cal. App. 2d 483, 487) . It was clear from the conduct of the driver that had the defendants' milk truck been proceeding lawfully, that is, had it been traveling slowly, stopped in a long line of traffic, or stopped to avoid conflict with other traffic, the accident would still have occurred (183 Cal. App. 2d 483, 487-488) . Therefore, the court held that the defendants' negligence in double-parking the truck did not constitute the cause in fact of the accident (183 Cal. App. 2d 483, 488) .

[b] "But for" Test Applicable to Actual Rather Than Proximate Cause

In Godwin v. La Turco (1969) 272 Cal. App. 2d 475, 77 Cal. Rptr. 305 , the plaintiff brought an action for personal injuries suffered in an automobile collision with a truck. The plaintiff was following the defendant La Turco, who was turning left at an intersection. A truck, traveling in excess of the speed limit, approached the defendant La Turco from the opposite direction and, in an effort to avoid a collision with the defendant, the truck driver slammed on his brakes. The truck driver missed the defendant's left turning car, but a brake defect caused him to swerve across the center line and collide with the plaintiff. The jury rendered a verdict against the defendant La Turco and the co-owner of her car. The defendants appealed, contending that the trial judge failed to give proper instructions on the issue of proximate cause.

The court of appeal reversed the judgment against both the defendants. The court noted that the trial judge disliked "ritualistic" jury instructions and thus refused to give a requested BAJI instruction regarding proximate cause, instead giving an instruction that deleted the only reference to proximate causation. In essence the trial judge determined as a matter of law that the left turn of the defendant La Turco was a proximate cause of the collision (272 Cal. App. 2d 475, 478) . The court of appeal concluded that this was erroneous. It explained that in a philosophical sense, any given event has a long sequential history. A person might reason that the accident would not have occurred if A had not been at the point of collision at 1:30 p.m.; A would not have been there if he or she had arisen five minutes later that morning; or if he or she had not run the stop sign five miles back; and so forth. One could validly say that but for any of these events, the collision would not have occurred. The "but for" test, familiar to every law school graduate, defines actual cause, but not proximate cause. Whether a cause may be the proximate, effective, or legal cause demands further characterization. When some cause is found to be proximate, it still must consist of some negligent act or omission to sustain an award of damages. The court added that the jurors need a definition of the ultimate factual conclusions which, if found, either gives the plaintiff a right to recover or the defendant a right of exoneration (272 Cal. App. 2d 475, 479) . The court noted that some jurists have found it helpful to give the requested BAJI instruction with some explanatory paragraphs that state, in essence, that the jury must first find that the defendant's conduct was an actual cause of the collision, then further examine the defendant's conduct to determine if it was a proximate cause (272 Cal. App. 2d 475, 479-480) . The court held that the trial judge's "shorthand" instruction did not cover this subject accurately or completely, and that his refusal to give the requested BAJI instruction was prejudicial error (272 Cal. App. 2d 475, 480) .

NOTE:

The Supreme Court has held that it is error to use former BAJI No. 3.75, the official jury instruction that attempted to employ the "but for" test of actual causation [Mitchell v. Gonzales (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 1041, 1048, 1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 913, 819 P.2d 872] . The instruction, in essence, provided that a proximate cause of harm is a cause that, in natural and continuous sequence, produces the harm and without which the harm would not have occurred. The Court concluded that use of the term "proximate cause" may mislead jurors, causing them, if they can glean the instruction's meaning despite the grammatical flaws, to focus improperly on the cause that is spatially or temporally closest to the harm [Mitchell v. Gonzales (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 1041, 1052, 1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 913, 819 P.2d 872] . The Court held that courts should use the "substantial factor" instruction set forth in BAJI No. 3.76 [Mitchell v. Gonzales (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 1041, 1052-1054, 1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 913, 819 P.2d 872] .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
C. Causation
1. General Rules

16-165 California Points & Authorities § 165.272

§ 165.272 Defendant's Conduct Was Not Proximate Cause of Plaintiff's Injuries

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief].

DEFENDANT IS NOT LIABLE FOR NEGLIGENCE BECAUSE DEFENDANT'S CONDUCT WAS NOT THE PROXIMATE CAUSE OF PLAINTIFF'S INJURY.

A. Conduct Too Remote in Chain of Causation. Even though one has been guilty of negligence, he or she may not be liable if such negligence is remote in the chain of causation and did not contribute proximately to the injury (Johnson v. Union Furniture Co. (1939) 31 Cal. App. 2d 234, 237, 87 P.2d 917 ; see Tara v. California State Auto. Ass'n (1979) 93 Cal. App. 3d 227, 231, 155 Cal. Rptr. 497).

[Optional] B. Intervening Cause. Proximate cause is a cause that, in a natural and continuous sequence, unbroken by any efficient intervening cause, produced the injury or damage complained of and without which such result would not have occurred (Whitcombe v. County of Yolo (1977) 73 Cal. App. 3d 698, 708, 141 Cal. Rptr. 189).

[Optional] C. Prior Proximate Cause Determinations Lack Precedential Value. Each proximate cause decision turns on its own facts and has little value as precedent (Beck v. San Francisco Unified Sch. Dist. (1964) 225 Cal. App. 2d 503, 508, 37 Cal. Rptr. 471).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that the defendant's acts or omissions were not a proximate cause of injury to the plaintiff. Optional Paragraph B may be submitted to assert that an intervening cause broke the chain of causation [see Johnson v. Union Furniture Co. (1939) 31 Cal. App. 2d 234, 237,

87 P.2d 917] . Optional Paragraph C may be submitted to assert that a prior proximate cause determination is irrelevant to the instant case. This form should be combined with any of the forms in §§ 165.270 -165.271 and § 165.273 that are applicable to the particular case.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the contention, for example, in support of a defendant's demurrer or motion for summary judgment in an action for damages for negligence [see, e.g., Whitcombe v. County of Yolo (1977) 73 Cal. App. 3d 698, 702, 141 Cal. Rptr. 189 (demurrer); see also Brown v. Critchfield (1980) 100 Cal. App. 3d 858, 861, 161 Cal. Rptr. 342 (summary judgment)].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel may discuss facts showing that the accident that caused the plaintiff's injury would have occurred even in the absence of the defendant's allegedly negligent act, so that the defendant's conduct was not the actual cause of the plaintiff's injury. In addition, counsel should discuss any policy considerations relevant to the case for the purpose of arguing that the defendant's conduct, even if considered an actual cause of the plaintiff's injury, should not be regarded as the legal or proximate cause of the injury.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For related legal background, research and procedural guides, and forms of answer to a cause of action for negligence, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For additional points and authorities to combine with this form, see §§ 165.270 -165.271 and § 165.273. For points and authorities supporting and opposing demurrers, see Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities in §§ 165.260 -165.263 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose the points and authorities in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Conduct Too Remote in Chain of Causation

The factual and procedural background of Tara v. California State Auto. Ass'n (1979) 93 Cal. App. 3d 227, 155 Cal. Rptr. 497 , is discussed in § 165.263[3][c].

In Johnson v. Union Furniture Co. (1939) 31 Cal. App. 2d 234, 87 P.2d 917 , the wife of the decedent brought an action for damages based on the wrongful death of her husband. The plaintiff contended that the defendant promised to return before nightfall with a bed that the defendant had wrongfully removed from the plaintiff's house. The defendant did not appear as promised, and the decedent was compelled to sleep on the floor. Because he was exposed to drafts, he contracted pneumonia and died two days later. The trial court granted the defendant's demurrer to the plaintiff's seventh amended complaint without leave to amend. The plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court stated that to maintain an action for damages based on the wrongful act or neglect of another, a plaintiff must allege and prove that the wrongful act of the defendant was a direct and proximate cause of the injury. Showing merely that an injury would not have occurred in the absence of the negligent act is insufficient. The plaintiff must show that the act was the efficient cause of the injury, that is, the act from which the injury followed in a continuous sequence unbroken by any efficient intervening cause. Thus, even though one has been guilty of negligence, he or she may still not be liable if the negligence is remote in the chain of causation and did not contribute proximately to the injury. In this connection, "proximate" means direct or immediate, as opposed to remote (31 Cal. App. 2d 234, 237) . Two independent conditions must be satisfied. First, the cause must be one "but for" which the result would not have occurred. Second, the cause must be active enough in the result to be regarded as efficient in responsibility (31 Cal. App. 2d 234, 237-238) . The injury must be the natural and probable consequence of the wrongful act. In addition, that consequence must reasonably have been foreseeable by a person of ordinary intelligence in the light of attending circumstances, unless the act is one of wanton wrong (31 Cal. App. 2d 234, 238) . Furthermore, an intervening cause that has an independent origin, or that is not reasonably foreseeable as a natural and probable result of the initial cause, breaks the connection between the initial cause and the effect, and becomes a proximate cause of the injury rendering the initial cause remote (31 Cal. App. 2d 234, 238-239) .

The court found that there were no pleaded facts that showed that the defendant could reasonably have foreseen that a failure to deliver the bed would result in the decedent's sleeping on the floor. Even though the plaintiff alleged that the undelivered bed was the only one they possessed, it would not necessarily follow that they would not be able to obtain suitable living quarters elsewhere. Even assuming that the defendant might reasonably have anticipated that if the bed were not delivered the decedent would sleep on the floor, the defendant could not have foreseen that the room in which decedent would sleep would be cold and drafty, and that as the probable result of sleeping on the floor, the decedent would contract acute pneumonia. The court stated that in this case the unusual happened; and that the law holds a wrongdoer responsible in damages only for the natural and probable results of his or her wrongful acts, and for the injurious effects that he or she might have reasonably foreseen (31 Cal. App. 2d 234, 239) . In addition, the plaintiff did not show that the defendant's wrongful act was a proximate cause of the death of the decedent. On the contrary, the proximate cause of decedent's death was apparently a disease that he contracted by sleeping in cold, drafty quarters and a weakened physical condition resulting from 11 years of sickness. Thus, the trial court properly determined that the complaint failed to state a cause of action (31 Cal. App. 2d 234, 239-240) .

[b] Intervening Cause

The factual and procedural background of Whitcombe v. County of Yolo (1977) 73 Cal. App. 3d 698, 708, 141 Cal. Rptr. 189 , is discussed § 165.263[3][d].

[c] Prior Proximate Cause Determinations Lack Precedential Value

In Beck v. San Francisco Unified Sch. Dist. (1964) 225 Cal. App. 2d 503, 37 Cal. Rptr. 471 , a minor, through his father as guardian ad litem, brought an action against the defendant school district for personal injuries suffered when he was struck by two other students on school grounds. The plaintiff alleged that the school district was liable for injuries resulting from the negligence of its officers or employees. After the jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff, the court denied the defendant school district's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict. The court granted the defendant's motion for a new trial on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(6)]. The defendant appealed from the order denying its motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict; the plaintiff cross appealed from the order granting the new trial.

The court of appeal affirmed the order granting a new trial and the order denying the motion for judgment n.o.v. (225 Cal. App. 2d 503, 509) . It noted that a school district has a duty to supervise the conduct of children on school grounds at all times and to enforce reasonable rules and regulations. The failure to do so may constitute actionable negligence.

The court added that the plaintiff need not prove that the very injury that occurred must have been foreseeable by the school authorities in order to constitute actionable negligence. Negligence is established if a reasonably prudent person would foresee that injury of the same general type would be likely to happen in the absence of the safeguards. The court added, however, that there must be a proximate causal connection between the inadequacy of the supervision and the accident (225 Cal. App. 2d 503, 507) . The defendant school district argued that its motion for judgment n.o.v. should have been granted because the proximate cause of the accident was not the claimed lack of supervision, but an intervening wrong that supervision would not have prevented. The court stated that the better approach was to treat the causal relationship between the lack of supervision and the injury as a fact determination for the jury. Each of the proximate cause decisions turns on its own facts and has little value as precedent (225 Cal. App. 2d 503, 508) . Although a school district is not liable for injuries arising from the unlawful or willful misconduct of its students, the willful act of a student may not in itself be a sufficient intervening cause to relieve the district of its own liability. There is no fixed standard of supervision. Whether or not the intervening cause was sufficient to relieve the district of liability was a question of fact properly left to the jury, as was the question of proximate cause. Thus, the court concluded that the motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict was properly denied (225 Cal. App. 2d 503, 508-509) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Conduct Too Remote in Chain of Causation

In Ochoa v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1998) 61 Cal. App. 4th 1480, 72 Cal. Rptr. 2d 232 , the plaintiff sued a gas company alleging that the defendant's negligent failure to discover a methane gas leak in her home caused or exacerbated her respiratory injuries. The defendant moved for summary judgment, arguing that there were no triable issues of fact regarding whether a gas leak existed inside her house, or whether the alleged gas leak had caused or exacerbated the plaintiff's illnesses. In support of its motion the defendant proffered unequivocal testimony of two qualified experts that, even assuming there was a leak of methane gas into her home, the exposure could not have caused the plaintiff's respiratory distress. The plaintiff, in opposition to the defendant's motion, submitted the declaration of her allergist "that the leak of some unspecified gas probably aggravated the plaintiff's respiratory problems because he did not know of any more medically probable cause." The trial court granted the defendant's motion. The court of appeal affirmed, on the ground that the allergist's declaration was insufficient to create a triable issue of fact as to probable cause. Specifically, the court stated that the allergist had no expertise in the relevant subject matter, that his declaration was equivocal and speculative, and insufficient to rebut the unequivocal testimony of two qualified experts (61 Cal. App. 4th 1480, 1485) .

In Jordan v. City of Santa Barbara (1996) 46 Cal. App. 4th 1245, 54 Cal. Rptr. 2d 340 , landowners filed an action against various public agencies alleging that the defendants' activities increased the salinity of the plaintiffs' groundwater, causing crop losses and reduced land value. The trial court granted judgment to the defendants. On appeal, the plaintiffs contended that the trial court unfairly imposed on them the burden of allocating damages among the defendants. The court of appeal affirmed. To establish a causal connection between an act and damages, the plaintiff must show a substantial cause-and-effect relationship excluding the probability that other forces alone produced the injury. When a defendant is only one of a number of contributors to the acts alleged to have caused damages, it does not become a joint tortfeasor simply because its consequences united with the consequences of several other torts committed by other persons or entities. For example, when one pollutes a stream, that person is responsible only for the actual damages resulting from his or her own acts, but not for damages caused by other persons who pollute the stream independently of those acts (46 Cal. App. 4th 1245, 1273) .

In Skinner v. Vacaville Unified Sch. Dist. (1995) 37 Cal. App. 4th 31, 43 Cal. Rptr. 2d 384 , a former student brought an action against a school district for injuries suffered in an attack by another student. The incident occurred during a volleyball game in a high school physical education class. The plaintiff sought to prove that the school's principal and vice-principal were negligent in failing to warn the physical education teacher of the other student's proclivity toward fighting. The jury found the school district negligent; the district appealed. The court of appeal reversed, ruling that the record did not support the jury's finding on causation (37 Cal. App. 4th 31, 43) . The court noted that California has adopted the substantial factor test of the Restatement Second of Torts, and that the plaintiff has the burden of proving causation by a preponderance of the evidence (37 Cal. App. 4th 31, 41) . The court reasoned that while it was possible that knowledge of the previous record of the attacking student would have somewhat intensified the vigilance of the physical education teacher, it is quite another thing to conclude that the absence of this information was a substantial factor in bringing about the injury (37 Cal. App. 4th 31, 42-43) .

In Williams v. Wraxall (1995) 33 Cal. App. 4th 120, 39 Cal. Rptr. 2d 658 , the plaintiff sued a forensic serologist for failure accurately to disclose the results of his serological analysis of evidence in his murder trial. The defendant had been engaged by an attorney for the plaintiff's co-the defendant in the criminal trial, and obtained test results that differed from those of the prosecution's serologist. However, according to the plaintiff's' attorney, the defendant indicated that he had not obtained enough crime scene evidence to obtain any results. The defendant was not called as a witness during the plaintiff's murder trial, which according to the plaintiff, compromised the trial and resulted in his conviction. The plaintiff's conviction was reversed. He was retried, and again convicted of murder. Meanwhile, the plaintiff was awarded damages in his action against the defendant. The court of appeal reversed, based on lack of evidence of causation (33 Cal. App. 4th 120, 130) . The court noted that the plaintiff's original conviction was reversed on appeal. The court reasoned that the plaintiff's burden of proof of causation required him to establish a reasonable probability of his acquittal in his first trial, had the defendant's test results and expert testimony been made available (33 Cal. App. 4th 120, 133) . While the defendant's test results may have assisted the plaintiff's defense in some measure by rebutting the conclusions of the prosecution's expert, they did not exonerate the plaintiff. Furthermore, the plaintiff's guilt was established by circumstantial evidence and the testimony of numerous other witnesses (33 Cal. App. 4th 120, 134) .

In Talbott v. Csakany (1988) 199 Cal. App. 3d 700, 245 Cal. Rptr. 136 , a decedent's estate brought an action for negligent entrustment against persons who had made a wedding gift of a car to a habitual drunk driver whose later intoxicated driving killed the decedent. The defendants' demurrer to the first amended complaint was sustained without leave to amend. The plaintiff acknowledged that it could not further amend its complaint, and that the driver was at the relevant time an adult holding a valid driver's license. Further, the plaintiff was aware of no facts suggesting that the donors had a relationship with the driver giving them any ability to direct or control his actions, or that the driver would have lacked access to a vehicle except for the gift. The court affirming. The court held that liability for negligent entrustment does not depend on any special relationship between the donor and the donee or the victim, whether the donee is an adult or minor, or whether the vehicle was conveyed or loaned. It depends rather on a balancing of all the factors considered in general negligence actions, most importantly foreseeability of harm (199 Cal. App. 3d 700, 705-706) . Even when there is no evidence of control of the donee by the donor, liability is appropriate when the facts show sufficient causation, because the foreseeability of injury by a known habitual drunk driver is strong and the policy of preventing drunk driving is compelling (199 Cal. App. 3d 700, 706) . The court acknowledged that the issue of causation is generally a question of fact for the jury. However, at a minimum, the pleading allegations must be such that, if true, a reasonable trier of fact could conclude the donor's act was a substantial factor in bringing about the injury. In the absence of allegations that the donee would not have had ready access to a vehicle so as to injure the plaintiff without a gift from the donor, the causation allegation was too tenuous to support a cause of action (199 Cal. App 3d 700, 706) . Moreover, the pleaded facts did not support an inference that the act of giving the car was peculiarly the means that afforded the adult, licensed driver the means to injure the plaintiff. Accordingly, the causal connection was too remote to state a cause of action (199 Cal. App. 3d 700, 707) .

In Redfoot v. J.T. Jenkins Co. (1955) 138 Cal. App. 2d 108, 291 P.2d 134 , the court of appeal affirmed judgment for the defendant truck repair business in an action for damages suffered when an electrical short circuit caused the plaintiff's truck to catch fire while it was in the defendant's garage to have a leaky radiator repaired. The court stated that one is bound to anticipate and provide against what usually happens and what is likely to happen, but not to guard against what is unusual and unlikely to happen, or what is only remotely and slightly probable (138 Cal. App. 2d 108, 119) . To warrant a finding that negligence or an act not amounting to wanton wrong is the proximate cause of an injury, the injury must be not only the natural and probable consequence of the act, but also foreseen in light of attendant circumstances. If the wrong and resulting damages are not known by common experience to be usually and naturally in sequence, and the damage does not in the ordinary course of events follow from the wrong, then the wrong and the damage are not sufficiently conjoined to support an action (138 Cal. App. 2d 108, 119-120) .

[b] Prior Proximate Cause Determinations Lack Precedential Value

The factual and procedural background of Raymond v. Paradise Unified Sch. Dist. (1963) 218 Cal. App. 2d 1, 31 Cal. Rptr. 847 , is discussed in § 165.30[3][a]. The court of appeal affirmed judgment for the plaintiff after a lower court found that the defendant school district was negligent in failing to provide supervision of a school bus stop. The plaintiff, a minor, was injured while waiting for a school bus. The court noted that each of the proximate cause decisions turns on its own facts and has little value as precedent (218 Cal. App. 2d 1, 7-8) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
C. Causation
1. General Rules

16-165 California Points & Authorities § 165.273

§ 165.273 Public Policy Militates Against Finding That Defendant's Conduct Was Proximate Cause

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief].

DEFENDANT IS NOT LIABLE FOR NEGLIGENCE BECAUSE DEFENDANT'S CONDUCT WAS NOT THE PROXIMATE CAUSE OF PLAINTIFF'S INJURY, BASED ON THE PUBLIC POLICY THAT _____ [describe].

A. Proximate Cause Finding Contravenes Public Policy. In examining the questions of duty and proximate cause, the court must balance various public policy considerations; if holding the defendant civilly liable will be in contravention of public policy, the court may decline to find liability on the part of the defendant (see Beauchene v. Synanon Found., Inc. (1979) 88 Cal. App. 3d 342, 347-348, 151 Cal. Rptr. 796).

B. Policy Considerations in Proximate Cause Determination. [See § 165.263, Paragraph C.]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that the defendant is not liable for negligence because his or her conduct was not the proximate cause of the plaintiff's injury or damage, based on public policy considerations [see Tara v. California State Auto. Ass'n (1979) 93 Cal. App. 3d 227, 231, 155 Cal. Rptr. 497] . It should be combined with any of the forms in §§ 165.270 -165.272 that are applicable to the particular case.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel may argue that one or more of the policy considerations set forth in Tara v. California State Auto. Ass'n (1979) 93 Cal. App. 3d 227, 231, 155 Cal. Rptr. 497 militates against the imposition of liability based on the facts of the case [see § 165.273[3][b]].

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For related legal background, research and procedural guides, and forms of answer to a complain for negligence, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For additional points and authorities to combine with this form, see §§ 165.270 -165.272. For points and authorities supporting and opposing demurrers, see Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities in §§ 165.260 -165.263 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose the points and authorities in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Proximate Cause Finding Contravenes Public Policy

The factual and procedural background of Beauchene v. Synanon Found., Inc. (1979) 88 Cal. App. 3d 342, 151 Cal. Rptr. 796 , is discussed in § 165.20[4][a]. In affirming a demurrer to the complaint in an action in which a convicted criminal escaped from a Synanon rehabilitation home and harmed the plaintiff, the court of appeal listed various policy considerations that must be considered in determining whether or not the defendant owes a duty to the plaintiff. The court noted that the questions of duty and proximate cause are sometimes the same. Quoting Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 Cal. 2d 108, 113, 70 Cal. Rptr. 97, 443 P.2d 561 (discussed in § 165.30[3][d]), the court stated that principal policy considerations in deciding whether a duty exists, and by inference whether proximate cause exists, include (1) the foreseeability of harm to the plaintiff, (2) the degree of certainty that the plaintiff suffered injury, (3) the closeness of the connection between the defendant's conduct and the injury suffered, (4) the moral blame attached to the defendant's conduct, (5) the policy of preventing future harm, (6) the extent of the burden to the defendant and consequences to the community of imposing a duty to exercise care with resulting liability for breach, and (7) the availability, cost, and prevalence of insurance for the risk involved. In this action, the court stated that it must balance the public interest in safety from violent assault against the public policy favoring innovative private criminal release and rehabilitation programs (88 Cal. App. 3d 342, 347) . The court noted that public release and rehabilitation programs are immune from liability under Gov. Code § 845.8; and that the Legislature intended to immunize public programs in order to encourage innovations in the interests of criminal justice. The court stated that to hold the defendant civilly liable would deter the development of innovative criminal offender release and rehabilitation programs, which would be in contravention of public policy (88 Cal. App. 3d 342, 348) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Policy Considerations in Proximate Cause Determination

In Mosley v. Arden Farms Co. (1945) 26 Cal. 2d 213, 157 P.2d 372 , the Supreme Court affirmed a judgment for the plaintiff in an action in which the plaintiff was injured when his tractor ran into some of the defendant's milk crates. In a concurring opinion, Justice Traynor explained that the question of legal responsibility in terms of proximate cause is ordinarily concerned, not with the fact of causation, but with the various considerations of policy that limit an actor's responsibility for the consequences of his or her conduct (26 Cal. 2d 213, 220-221) . He added that what is meant by the word "proximate" is that, because of convenience and of public policy, the law arbitrarily declines to trace a series of events beyond a certain point (26 Cal. 2d 213, 221) .

In Smith v. Superior Court (1992) 10 Cal. App. 4th 1033, 13 Cal. Rptr. 2d 133 , the plaintiff sued her lawyers for malpractice in representing her in connection with the dissolution of her marriage. She alleged that she suffered various economic injuries and emotional distress. The trial court denied the lawyers' motion to strike the allegations regarding emotional distress. On the lawyers' petition for an extraordinary writ, the court of appeal directed the trial court to vacate its order and grant the motion to strike. The court's rationale was that "the conclusory allegations of the amended complaint reflect no basis for concluding [that] it was reasonably foreseeable [by the lawyers that] their handling of the dissolution would result in emotional injury to [the] plaintiff, separate and apart from that which every family law litigant suffers" (10 Cal. App. 4th 1033, 1039) . The court concluded that mere negligence will not support a recovery for mental suffering if the defendant's tortious conduct has resulted in only economic injury to the plaintiff. In support of this conclusion, the court cited cases to the effect that for policy reasons, emotional distress is not recognized as a proximate result of merely negligent conduct causing no other harm but economic injury (10 Cal. App. 4th 1033, 1040) .

In Evan F. v. Hughson United Methodist Church (1992) 8 Cal. App. 4th 828, 10 Cal. Rptr. 2d 748 , a minister sexually molested an adolescent boy in the congregation, who subsequently (and, according to expert testimony, consequently) molested his younger sister. The sister sued the church and its governing organization, which had appointed the minister to the church, for damages on theory of negligent hiring of the minister. At the time it appointed the minister, the organization had knowledge of facts indicating that the minister had previously exhibited sexual interest in young adolescent boys. The trial court granted summary judgment to the church and the organization on the ground of lack of proximate cause, based on considerations of policy. The court of appeal affirmed, stating that to conclude otherwise would impose liability on the person "who hired the person who molested the person who molested ... [the plaintiff]. This convoluted syntax alone argues against imposing liability in this situation" (8 Cal. App. 4th 828, 837) .

In Cardenas v. Eggleston Youth Ctr. (1987) 193 Cal. App. 3d 331, 238 Cal. Rptr. 251 , the plaintiff brought a negligence action against a private rehabilitation center after he was attacked by one of the center's inmates. The plaintiff alleged that the center failed to take adequate precautions to protect the public from the inmate. The defendant's demurrer was sustained without leave to amend. The trial court entered a judgment of dismissal; the plaintiff appealed. Finding this case analogous to Beauchene v. Synanon Found. (1979) 88 Cal. App. 3d 342, 344, 151 Cal. Rptr. 796 [see § 165.273[3][a]], the court of appeal affirmed. The court held that the defendant owed no duty to the plaintiff, noting that to permit the plaintiff recourse against the defendant would have a devastating effect on private rehabilitation programs (193 Cal. App. 3d 331, 335) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
C. Causation
1. General Rules

16-165 California Points & Authorities §§ 165.274-165.279

[Reserved]

§§ 165.274[Reserved]

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
C. Causation
2. Concurrent Causes

16-165 California Points & Authorities § 165.280

§ 165.280 Defendant's Concurrent Negligent Act Was Proximate Cause of Plaintiff's Injuries

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief].

DEFENDANT IS LIABLE FOR HIS/HER/ITS NEGLIGENCE, EVEN THOUGH THERE WERE OTHER CONCURRENT CAUSES OF PLAINTIFF'S INJURY, BECAUSE TWO OR MORE CONCURRENT CAUSES MAY BE THE PROXIMATE CAUSE OF A SINGLE INJURY IF DEFENDANT'S ORIGINAL NEGLIGENCE CONTINUES AND EXISTS UP TO THE TIME OF PLAINTIFF'S INJURY.

A. One of Two Concurrent Acts May Be Proximate Cause of Injury. If the defendant's original negligence continues and exists up to the time of the injury, the concurrent negligent act of a third person causing the injury will not be regarded as an independent act of negligence, but the two concurring acts of negligence will be held to be the proximate cause of the injury (Fennessey v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1942) 20 Cal. 2d 141, 145, 124 P.2d 51).

[Optional] B. Defendant's Conduct Alone Was Sufficient to Cause Injury. If several causes concur to cause an event, and either one of them operating alone would have been sufficient to cause the result, neither cause can be absolved from responsibility on the ground that the identical harm would have occurred without it. The proper rule is that the defendant's conduct is a cause of the event if it is a material element and a substantial factor in bringing about the injury (Thomsen v. Rexall Drug & Chem. Co. (1965) 235 Cal. App. 2d 775, 783, 45 Cal. Rptr. 642).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that a defendant's acts or omissions are a concurrent cause of the plaintiff's injury. That is, the defendant's acts, together with the acts of a third party, concur to proximately cause plaintiff's injuries [see Fennessey v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1942) 20 Cal. 2d 141, 145, 124 P.2d

51] . Optional Paragraph B may be submitted to assert that the defendant's act by itself was sufficient to cause the injury.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the contention, for example, in opposition to a defendant's demurrer or motion for summary judgment in an action for damages for negligence [see, e.g., Sindell v. Abbott Labs. (1980) 26 Cal. 3d 588, 595-597, 163 Cal. Rptr. 132, 607 P.2d 924 (demurrer); see also Orser v. George (1967) 252 Cal. App. 2d 660, 663, 60 Cal. Rptr. 708 (summary judgment)]. It should be combined with any of the forms in §§ 165.281 -165.284 that are applicable to the particular case.

This argument may arise in several situations--for example, the plaintiff wishes to hold two or more concurrently negligent parties liable for the injury, the plaintiff wishes to hold one party liable if there were other innocent concurring causes of the injury, or the plaintiff wishes to sue only one of several negligent actors.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel may argue that the defendant's acts concurred with the acts of a third party or with an innocent cause, such as a force of nature, to cause the plaintiff's injuries.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For related legal background, research and procedural guides, and forms of complaint for negligence, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender). For discussion and forms relating to contribution and equitable indemnity among joint and joint and several tortfeasors, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 300, Indemnity and Contribution (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For additional points and authorities to combine with this form, see §§ 165.281 -165.284. For points and authorities supporting and opposing demurrers, see Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings . For points and authorities relating to contribution and indemnity actions among joint tortfeasors, see Ch. 115, Indemnity and Contribution .

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] One of Two Concurrent Acts May Be Proximate Cause of Injury

In Fennessey v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1942) 20 Cal. 2d 141, 124 P.2d 51 , the plaintiff brought an action against the defendants Pacific Gas and Electric Company (PG&E) and Thomas Foley, one of its employees, for personal injuries suffered when the plaintiff's automobile collided with a jitney bus driven by another defendant, George Manecis. The defendant PG&E employee Foley parked a company truck on the side of the street between the safety zone and the curb so that he could service street lighting fixtures. The defendant jitney driver Manecis, while attempting to pass the company truck, struck the plaintiff who was standing in or very near the crosswalk. The trial court entered judgment for the plaintiff. The defendants PG&E and its employee, Foley, appealed, contending in part that the act of the jitney bus driver broke the chain of causation between any negligence in parking the truck and the plaintiff's injuries. The defendant Manecis defaulted, and judgment was entered against him.

The Supreme Court affirmed. The Court stated that when the original negligence continues and exists up to the time of the injury, the concurrent negligent act of a third person causing the injury is not considered an independent act of negligence, but the two concurring acts of negligence are the proximate cause of the injury (20 Cal. 2d 141, 145) . Whether the parking of the defendants' repair truck had anything to do with the swerve or turn of the jitney bus or whether the jitney driver could have averted the accident, notwithstanding that he violated the ordinance prohibiting driving to the left of a safety zone, was purely a question of fact to be determined by the jury. If the jury believed the evidence in support of the plaintiff's theory that parking the company's car was a proximate cause of the injury, the Court would not interfere (20 Cal. 2d 141, 144-145) .

[b] Defendant's Conduct Alone Was Sufficient to Cause Injury

In Thomsen v. Rexall Drug & Chem. Co. (1965) 235 Cal. App. 2d 775, 45 Cal. Rptr. 642 , the plaintiff brought an action for damages based on negligence and breach of warranty for personal injuries allegedly suffered as a result of taking an erroneously filled prescription. The plaintiff brought the action against the defendants Rexall Drug and Chemical Company and the pharmacist that supplied the prescription. The plaintiff's condition, known as vasculitis, which is an inflammation of the small blood vessels, may have been caused by the ingestion of the prescription, from preexisting illnesses, or by the effects of prolonged cortisone therapy. The trial court denied the defendants' motions for a nonsuit, judgment notwithstanding the verdict, and new trial. The defendants appealed the judgment in favor of the plaintiff.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment. The defendants contended that the plaintiff failed to establish a cause in fact, that is, one "but for" whose action or omission the injury would not have been sustained. The court stated that the rule was inappropriate in this case (235 Cal. App. 2d 775, 782-783) . The court explained that the "but for" rule serves to explain many cases but fails when several causes concur to bring about an event, and either one of them operating alone would have been sufficient to cause the result. The court noted that this appeared to be the case, because apparently the plaintiff's vasculitis could have been caused by the cortisone or the ingestion of the erroneous prescription. In such situations, neither cause can be absolved from responsibility on the ground that the identical harm would have occurred without it. Moreover, the proper rule in such situations is that the defendants' conduct is a cause of the event if it is a material element and a substantial factor in bringing it about. Whether or not it was a substantial factor is for the jury to determine, unless the issue is so clear that reasonable persons cannot differ. In the instant case, it was clear that the medical experts differed regarding the nature and cause of the plaintiff's condition (235 Cal. App. 2d 775, 783) . Since there was evidence that supported the jury's verdict, the court affirmed the trial court's order denying the defendants' motion for judgment n.o.v., and the entering judgment for the plaintiff (235 Cal. App. 2d 775, 783-789) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] One of Two Concurrent Acts May Be Proximate Cause of Injury

In Harris v. City of Compton (1985) 172 Cal. App. 3d 1, 217 Cal. Rptr. 884 , the plaintiff, who had been injured in a multiple vehicle collision, sued the vehicle drivers and a city that employed one of the drivers, on a respondeat superior theory. The trial court found against the city and the driver of its vehicle. The city appealed, contending that the third driver caused the accident. The court of appeal affirmed, holding that when the negligence of two or more persons contributes to the plaintiff's harm, the conduct of each is regarded as the legal cause. Substantial evidence supported the jury's finding that both drivers were the proximate cause of the plaintiff's injuries (172 Cal. App. 3d 1, 10) .

In Bigbee v. Superior Court (1979) 93 Cal. App. 3d 451, 155 Cal. Rptr. 545 , the plaintiff was in a telephone booth when he was struck by an intoxicated driver. The plaintiff brought an action for personal injuries against the intoxicated driver for negligent driving; against a club for serving alcoholic beverages to the defendant; and against Pacific Telephone and Telegraph, and Western Electric Company, Inc. for negligent and defective design, location, and maintenance of a phone booth. In issuing a peremptory writ of mandate requiring the lower court to vacate its order sustaining the general demurrers of the defendants Pacific Telephone and Western Electric without leave to amend, the court stated that it is well settled that proximate causation is not always arrested by the intervention of an independent force. If the original negligence continues to the time of the injury and contributes substantially to it in conjunction with the intervening act, each may be a proximate concurring cause for which full liability may be imposed (93 Cal. App. 3d 451, 455) .

[b] Defendant's Conduct Alone Was Sufficient to Cause Injury

In Vecchione v. Carlin (1980) 111 Cal. App. 3d 351, 168 Cal. Rptr. 571 , the plaintiffs brought an action against a pediatrician and a hospital for the alleged wrongful death of their infant daughter. The central factual issue at trial was whether the infant died from intracranial bleeding as a result of an overdose of the drug heparin, or as the result of intrauterine problems during pregnancy. The court of appeal affirmed judgment for the defendants, stating that substantial evidence supported the verdict and that the jury instruction regarding causation was proper. The plaintiffs requested a BAJI instruction 3.78 that stated that when two causes combine to bring about an injury and either one of them operating alone would have been sufficient to cause the injury, either cause is considered to be a proximate cause of the injury if it is a material element and a substantial factor in bringing it about, even though the result would have occurred without it (111 Cal. App. 3d 351, 358) . The court noted, however, that this instruction is appropriate only when several causes concur to bring about an event and either one of them operating alone would have been sufficient to cause the result. In those situations, one cannot escape responsibility for his or her negligence on the ground that identical harm would have occurred without it. The proper rule for such situations is that the defendant's conduct is a cause of the event because it is a material element and a substantial factor in bringing it about. The court found that this was not a case of two causes, either of which alone would have been sufficient to bring about the same result. The jury was asked to decide which one caused the death, thus making the instruction improper (111 Cal. App. 3d 351, 359) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
C. Causation
2. Concurrent Causes

16-165 California Points & Authorities § 165.281

§ 165.281 Defendant Liable Despite Failure to Anticipate Concurrent Act

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief].

DEFENDANT IS LIABLE FOR HIS/HER/ITS NEGLIGENCE, EVEN THOUGH DEFENDANT FAILED TO ANTICIPATE THE CONCURRENT ACT OF _____ [describe].

Failure to Anticipate Concurrent Act No Defense. A defendant's inability reasonably to anticipate the occurrence of another concurrent proximate cause does not shield the defendant from liability if the defendant's own negligence was one of the causes of the injury (Taylor v. Oakland Scavenger Co. (1941) 17 Cal. 2d 594, 602, 110 P.2d 1044).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that the defendant is liable for negligence despite the defendant's failure to anticipate a concurrent event [see Taylor v. Oakland Scavenger Co. (1941) 17 Cal. 2d 594, 602, 110 P.2d 1044] . It should be combined with any of the forms in § 165.180 and §§ 165.282 -165.284 that are applicable to the particular case.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel may discuss the concurrent event raised by the defendant, and argue that it does not militate against the defendant's liability for negligence.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For related legal background, research and procedural guides, and forms of complaint for negligence, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For additional points and authorities to combine with this form, see § 165.180 and §§ 165.282 -165.284. For points and authorities supporting and opposing demurrers, see Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Failure to Anticipate Concurrent Act No Defense

In Taylor v. Oakland Scavenger Co. (1941) 17 Cal. 2d 594, 110 P.2d 1044 , a 15-year-old girl brought an action against a school district, a municipal sanitation company, the owner of a garbage truck, and the driver of the truck for personal injuries suffered when a garbage truck ran over her foot. The plaintiff was running to a volleyball field during a high school physical education class when a garbage truck came around a blind corner at a rate of approximately 25 miles per hour. Unable to stop herself, the plaintiff ran into the side of the truck, was knocked to the pavement, and was run over by the truck. The plaintiff contended that the truck was negligently driven and that the school district was negligent in failing to take adequate precautionary measures to prevent such accidents. The jury rendered a verdict for the plaintiff against all the defendants. The trial court denied a motion for new trial on the condition that the plaintiff accept a reduction of damages. The plaintiff accepted the reduction and judgment was entered accordingly. All the defendants appealed.

The Supreme Court affirmed, finding that there was substantial evidence to support the finding by the jury that the truck driver was negligent (17 Cal. 2d 594, 599) . The court also stated that there was sufficient evidence to justify the finding that the defendant school district was negligent (17 Cal. 2d 594, 600) . The school district maintained that any breach of duty on the part of its employees was not a proximate cause of the injury to the plaintiff because the negligence of the truck driver was an efficient intervening or superseding cause. Conversely, the driver of the truck, the owner of the truck, and the sanitation company contended that any breach of duty on the part of the truck driver was not a proximate cause of the plaintiff's injury because the negligence of the school authorities operated as a superseding cause. The Court stated that if any injury is produced by the concurrent effect of two separate wrongful acts, each is a proximate cause of the injury, and neither can operate as an efficient intervening or superseding cause with regard to the other. The fact that neither party could reasonably anticipate the occurrence of the other concurrent cause will not shield him or her from liability so long as his or her own negligence was one of the causes of the injury. The court noted that the arguments of the defendants themselves made clear that more than one conclusion may reasonably be drawn from conflicting evidence in this case. The jury determination that the negligence of each defendant contributed concurrently to the plaintiffs' injury could not therefore be disturbed on appeal (17 Cal. 2d 594, 602) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Failure to Anticipate Concurrent Act No Defense

The factual and procedural background of Bigbee v. Superior Court (1979) 93 Cal. App. 3d 451, 155 Cal. Rptr. 545 , is discussed in § 165.280[3][a]. The court issued a peremptory writ of mandate requiring the lower court to vacate its order sustaining the general demurrers of Pacific Telephone and Western Electric without leave to amend. The court stated that when an actor's conduct is a substantial factor in bringing about harm to another, the fact that the actor neither foresaw nor should have foreseen the extent of the harm or the manner in which it occurred does not prevent him or her from becoming liable. Citing Taylor v. Oakland Scavenger Co. (1941) 17 Cal. 2d 594, 602, 110 P.2d 1044 , the court noted that the precise act need not necessarily be foreseeable (93 Cal. App. 3d 451, 455) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
C. Causation
2. Concurrent Causes

16-165 California Points & Authorities § 165.282

§ 165.282 Defendant Liable Despite Nonsimultaneous Nature of Act

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief].

DEFENDANT IS LIABLE FOR HIS/HER/ITS NEGLIGENCE, BECAUSE CONCURRENT NEGLIGENCE THAT MAY IMPOSE LIABILITY ON MORE THAN ONE INDIVIDUAL NEED NOT NECESSARILY OCCUR SIMULTANEOUSLY.

Simultaneous Negligent Acts Not Required. Concurrent negligence that may impose liability on multiple individuals acting separately need not necessarily occur simultaneously if the acts of negligence are so related as to directly contribute to the accident that results in the injuries to the plaintiff. The concurrent acts of negligence need only contribute to a substantial degree as a proximate cause of the injuries (Cummings v. Kendall (1939) 34 Cal. App. 2d 379, 382, 93 P.2d 633).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted when concurrent but unsimultaneous negligence occurred, in support of a contention that the concurrent negligence may nevertheless impose liability on the individuals who acted separately to cause the plaintiff's injuries (see Cummings v. Kendall (1939) 34 Cal. App. 2d 379, 382, 93 P.2d 633). It should be combined with any of the forms in §§ 165.280 -165.281 and §§ 165.283 -165.284 and that are applicable to the particular case.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel may discuss facts showing that separate individuals did not act simultaneous, and argue that the acts of negligence each contributed to a substantial degree as a proximate cause of the plaintiff's injuries. For example, if supported by the facts, counsel may argue that one individual's conduct was so continuous in its character that it conjoined with another's negligent act.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For related legal background, research and procedural guides, and forms of complaint for negligence, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For additional points and authorities to combine with this form, see §§ 165.280 -165.281 and §§ 165.283 -165.284. For points and authorities supporting and opposing demurrers, see Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Simultaneous Negligent Acts Not Required

Cummings v. Kendall (1939) 34 Cal. App. 2d 379, 93 P.2d 633 , involved the collision of three automobiles. The plaintiff and the defendants were in two different cars traveling in the same direction. The third car, driven by Norman Gobet, was approaching from the opposite direction and swerved into the wrong lane of the road, thus colliding head-on with the plaintiff's car. The driver of the defendants' car did not see the car driven by Gobet or the collision, but heard the impact of the collision. The defendant driver, failing to apply his brakes until it was too late, collided with the plaintiff's car as it lay on its side or stood on its wheels on the middle of the highway. The plaintiff sued Gobet jointly with the defendants, but apparently failed to serve him with process. Consequently, Gobet did not answer or appear at trial and no judgment was rendered against him. The judgment was rendered solely against the defendants, who appealed. The plaintiff moved to dismiss the case without a hearing on the merits, on the ground that the appeal was taken merely for delay and that the issues were unsubstantial.

The court of appeal disagreed, stating that the appeal presented a legal problem too serious to justify a dismissal without a hearing on its merits. It noted that the defendants contended that there was no evidence supporting the findings or judgment that their alleged negligence contributed to the plaintiff's injuries (34 Cal. App. 2d 379, 380) . The court posed the vital questions: whether or not the plaintiff's injuries were sustained as a proximate result of the concurrent negligence of Gobet and the defendant driver, whether or not they were joint tortfeasors, and whether or not the concurrent negligence of the defendants contributed in any manner as a proximate cause of the plaintiff's injuries (34 Cal. App. 2d 379, 381) . With regard to concurrent negligence in successive collisions, to hold the defendant liable for negligence, his or her act or omission need not be the sole cause or injury suffered. When injury results from two separate and distinct acts by different persons, operating simultaneously and concurrently, both are the proximate cause, and recovery may be had against either or both. Although the negligence of two persons must be simultaneous in order to be concurrent, a primary act of negligence may be so continuous in its character that it conjoins with an act of negligence of another committed at a much later date, and an act not negligent at the time committed may become negligent because of the acts of another. The court added that concurrent negligence that may impose liability on two individuals acting separately need not necessarily occur simultaneously if the acts are so related as to directly contribute to the accident that results in the plaintiff's injuries. The court noted, however, that the concurrent acts of negligence must contribute to a substantial degree as a proximate cause of the injuries (34 Cal. App. 2d 379, 382) . The court stated that the mere proof of concurrent negligence may not be sufficient to hold them liable unless there is substantial evidence that the defendant's negligence contributed in some degree to the injuries sustained by the plaintiff. Thus, the Court denied the motion to dismiss the appeal, gave the plaintiff 20 days in which to file a brief of the merits, and gave the defendant ten days to reply (34 Cal. App. 2d 379, 383) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
C. Causation
2. Concurrent Causes

16-165 California Points & Authorities § 165.283

§ 165.283 Defendant Liable Despite Innocent Nature of Concurring Cause

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief].

DEFENDANT IS LIABLE FOR HIS/HER/ITS NEGLIGENCE, EVEN THOUGH THERE WAS A CONCURRENT CAUSE THAT WAS INNOCENT IN NATURE.

Concurring "Act of God" No Defense. A tortfeasor may not escape liability for his or her negligent acts because another act, either an "innocent" occurrence, such as an "act of God," or other negligent conduct, may also have been a cause of the injury (American Motorcycle Ass'n v. Superior Court (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 578, 586, 146 Cal. Rptr. 182, 578 P.2d 899).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that the defendant is liable for negligence despite the occurrence of a concurring cause innocent in nature [see American Motorcycle Ass'n v. Superior Court (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 578, 586, 146 Cal. Rptr. 182, 578 P.2d 899] . It should be combined with any of the forms in §§ 165.280 -165.282 and § 165.284 that are applicable to the particular case.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel may argue that the concurring cause was in the nature of an "act of God," and therefore that the defendant is liable despite its occurrence.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For related legal background, research and procedural guides, and forms of complaint for negligence, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For additional points and authorities to combine with this form, see §§ 165.280 -165.282 and § 165.284. For points and authorities supporting and opposing demurrers, see Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Concurring "Act of God" No Defense

In American Motorcycle Ass'n v. Superior Court (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 578, 146 Cal. Rptr. 182, 578 P.2d 899 , a teenage boy brought an action to recover damages for personal injuries suffered in a cross-country motorcycle race. The plaintiff sued the American Motorcycle Association (AMA) and the Viking Motorcycle Club (Viking), the organizations that sponsored and collected the entry fees for the race. The defendant AMA sought leave to file a cross-complaint against the plaintiff's parents for negligent supervision, for indemnity from the plaintiff's parents if AMA was found liable, and for declaratory relief. The trial court denied AMA's motion to file a cross-complaint; AMA petitioned the court of appeal for a writ of mandate to compel the trial court to grant its motion. The court of appeal granted a peremptory writ of mandate. In view of the importance of the questions in the case, the Supreme Court ordered a hearing in the case on its own motion.

The Supreme Court issued a writ of mandate directing the trial court to vacate its order denying AMA's leave to file its proposed cross-complaint for partial indemnity against the plaintiff's parents. The Court discussed the modification of the common law equitable indemnity doctrine to permit a right of partial indemnity that would allow liability among multiple tortfeasors to be apportioned on a comparative negligence basis (20 Cal. 3d 578, 587-598) . In so doing, the Court reviewed the rights of injured persons under current law. It stated that a negligent tortfeasor is generally liable for all damage for which his or her negligence is a proximate cause. Stated another way, in order to recover damages sustained as a result of an indivisible injury, a plaintiff is not required to prove that a tortfeasor's conduct was the sole proximate cause of his injury, but only that the negligence was a proximate cause. This result follows from the declaration of Civ. Code § 1714 that everyone is responsible for an injury occasioned to another by want of ordinary care or skill. In addition, a tortfeasor may not escape this responsibility simply because another act--either an "innocent" occurrence such as an "act of God" or other negligence conduct--may have been a cause of the injury (20 Cal. 3d 578, 586) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Concurring "Act of God" No Defense

In Stone v. Foster (1980) 106 Cal. App. 3d 334, 164 Cal. Rptr. 901 , the plaintiff brought an action against a plastic surgeon for medical malpractice and fraud. The defendant operated on the plaintiff to remove an abdominal scar, but the plaintiff suffered further scarring after the operation because it appeared that silicone, injected years earlier, may have possibly migrated from her breasts to cause abdominal blistering. The court of appeal reversed judgment for the plaintiff, holding that the cause of action for fraud was not supported by the evidence, and that the plaintiff's counsel was guilty of prejudicial misconduct. With regard to the plaintiff's cause of action for medical malpractice, the court rejected the defendant's contention that the lower court erroneously instructed the jury on concurrent causes. The court stated that it is well settled under California law that a negligent tortfeasor is liable for all of the damage proximately caused by his or her negligence. He or she may not escape liability merely because another cause, whether innocent or not, contributes to the injury (106 Cal. App. 3d 334, 348) .

Dufour v. Henry J. Kaiser Co. (1963) 215 Cal. App. 2d 26, 29 Cal. Rptr. 871 , involved two consolidated actions for property damage based on the defendant's removal of vegetation and topsoil from his land. A subsequent rainstorm caused sediment to wash down into the plaintiffs' trout pool, killing substantial numbers of fish. The court of appeal reversed judgment for the defendant on the basis of certain prejudicial jury instructions given at trial (215 Cal. App. 2d 26, 28-29) . In examining these instructions, the court stated that if the defendant's negligence combined with an "act of God" to cause injury, liability will result (215 Cal. App. 2d 26, 29) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
C. Causation
2. Concurrent Causes

16-165 California Points & Authorities § 165.284

§ 165.284 Plaintiff Does Not Have Burden of Apportioning Damages Between Concurring Causes

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF DOES NOT HAVE THE BURDEN TO APPORTION DAMAGES BETWEEN CONCURRING CAUSES.

Plaintiff Not Required to Prove Apportionment. A plaintiff does not have the burden of apportioning damages between concurring causes of the plaintiff's injuries. The plaintiff need only demonstrate that the negligence of a defendant was a substantial factor in causing injury (Espinosa v. Little Co. of Mary Hosp. (1995) 31 Cal. App. 4th 1304, 1321, 37 Cal. Rptr. 2d 541).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that the plaintiff is not required to apportion damages between concurring causes [see Espinosa v. Little Co. of Mary Hospital (1995) 31 Cal. App. 4th 1304, 1321, 37 Cal. Rptr. 2d 541] . It should be combined with any of the forms in §§ 165.280 -165.283 that are applicable to the particular case.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel may discuss the existence of concurring causes, and argue that the plaintiff need not apportion damages among the parties responsible.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For related legal background, research and procedural guides, and forms of complaint for negligence, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For additional points and authorities to combine with this form, see §§ 165.280 -165.283. For points and authorities supporting and opposing demurrers, see Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Plaintiff Not Required to Prove Apportionment

In Espinosa v. Little Co. of Mary Hosp. (1995) 31 Cal. App. 4th 1304, 37 Cal. Rptr. 2d 541 , the guardian ad litem of a child who allegedly sustained brain damage through certain prenatal care and testing brought an action for medical malpractice. One of the plaintiff's expert witnesses testified that the child should have been delivered sooner than he was, and that the failure to deliver earlier was below the standard of care and therefore negligent. Another of the plaintiff's expert witnesses testified that the plaintiff had structural damage to his brain, and that this damage was caused by three factors: the mother's use of Lithium, negligence in monitoring the pregnancy, and negligence in the delivery. The defendants were not responsible for the mother's use of Lithium; the plaintiff's expert was not able to quantify the extent to which the plaintiff's condition was caused by this factor. The expert testified that the two factors for which the defendants were responsible were substantial factors in causing the injury. Stating that the plaintiff had not met the burden of proof of causation because of the failure to show that the defendants' actions were more than a 50 percent factor in causing the damage, the trial court granted a defense motion for nonsuit.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that it is not the plaintiff's burden to apportion damages among multiple causes (31 Cal. App. 4th 1304, 1321) . Noting that the concurrence of a nontortious cause for an injury does not absolve a defendant from liability for the tortious cause, the court held that a plaintiff need demonstrate only that the negligence of a defendant is a substantial factor in causing a claimed injury (31 Cal. App. 4th 1304, 1321) . The court stated that when the trial court required the plaintiff to show that the defendants' conduct was more than a 50 percent factor in causing the plaintiff's damage, it confused the issue of damage apportionment, which was not the plaintiffs' burden, with the requirement that the plaintiff had satisfied, to provide evidence that the defendants' negligence was a cause of the plaintiff's damage (31 Cal. App. 4th 1304, 1322) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
C. Causation
2. Concurrent Causes

16-165 California Points & Authorities §§ 165.285-165.299

[Reserved]

§§ 165.285[Reserved]

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
C. Causation
3. Intervening and Superseding Acts

16-165 California Points & Authorities § 165.300

§ 165.300 Defendant Is Liable Because Intervening Act or Harm to Plaintiff Was Foreseeable

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT IS LIABLE FOR HIS/HER/ITS NEGLIGENCE BECAUSE THE INTERVENING ACT WAS FORESEEABLE BY DEFENDANT, OR IF NOT FORESEEABLE, NEVERTHELESS CREATED AN INJURY OF THE TYPE THAT WAS FORESEEABLE.

A. Foreseeability of Act or Injury Sufficient to Show Proximate Cause. If an injury was brought about by a later cause of independent origin, the question of proximate cause revolves around a determination of whether the later cause of independent origin, or intervening cause, was foreseeable by the defendant or, if not foreseeable, whether it caused an injury of a type that was foreseeable. If either of these questions is answered in the affirmative, the defendant is not relieved from liability towards the plaintiff (Hoyem v. Manhattan Beach City Sch. Dist. (1978) 22 Cal. 3d 508, 521, 150 Cal. Rptr. 1, 585 P.2d 851 ; Hardison v. Bushnell (1993) 18 Cal. App. 4th 22, 27, 22 Cal. Rptr. 2d 106).

B. Risk of Harm Was Foreseeable. Even if the intervening negligent conduct is not foreseeable, the defendant is not relieved of liability if the risk of harm suffered was foreseeable (Pappert v. San Diego Gas & Elec. Co. (1982) 137 Cal. App. 3d 205, 211, 186 Cal. Rptr. 847).

C. Precise Harm Need Not Be Foreseen. In determining whether an intervening act negates the defendant's liability, the question is not whether the defendant did foresee, or by the exercise of due care should have foreseen, the identical consequence that happened. Rather, he question is whether the likelihood of the occurrence of the injury or damage was reasonably foreseeable (Pappert v. San Diego Gas & Elec. Co. (1982) 137 Cal. App. 3d 205, 211, 186 Cal. Rptr. 847 ; Bilyeu v. Standard Freight Lines (1960) 182 Cal. App. 2d 536, 543, 6 Cal. Rptr. 65).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that the intervening conduct of a third party did not supersede the defendant's original negligence [see Hoyem v. Manhattan Beach City Sch. Dist. (1978) 22 Cal. 3d 508, 521, 150 Cal. Rptr. 1, 585 P.2d 851] . This form should be combined with any of the forms in §§ 165.301 -165.304 that are applicable to the particular case.

This form should be used when the originally negligent defendant's conduct is not sufficient in and of itself to produce the plaintiff's injury and the intervening conduct of the third party is the "immediate cause" of the injury [see Fish v. Los Angeles Dodgers Baseball Club (1976) 56 Cal. App. 3d 620, 636, 128 Cal. Rptr. 807] . In other cases, the first actor's conduct will itself cause the injury or death unless successful protective action is taken by a third party. When the third party fails to prevent the harm to the plaintiff, negligently or otherwise, that failure will generally not supersede the defendant's original negligence [see Fish v. Los Angeles Dodgers Baseball Club (1976) 56 Cal. App. 3d 620, 636, 128 Cal. Rptr. 807] .

This argument may arise, for example, in opposing a demurrer in an action for damages for negligence [see, e.g., Landeros v. Flood (1976) 17 Cal. 3d 399, 405, 131 Cal. Rptr. 69, 551 P.2d 389 ; see also O'Hara v. Western Seven Trees Corp. (1977) 75 Cal. App. 3d 798, 801, 142 Cal. Rptr. 487] .

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should argue that the acts of the third party were reasonably foreseeable by the defendant at the time the defendant committed the originally negligent act and/or that the harm suffered by the plaintiff was reasonably foreseeable by the defendant [see Hoyem v. Manhattan Beach City Sch. Dist. (1978) 22 Cal. 3d 508, 521, 150 Cal. Rptr. 1, 585 P.2d 851 ; Hardison v. Bushnell (1993) 18 Cal. App. 4th 22, 27, 22 Cal. Rptr. 2d 106] . If the acts of the third party may not have been foreseeable, counsel might argue that the injury suffered, although perhaps not the precise harm actually suffered, was foreseeable to the originally negligent defendant [see Pappert v. San Diego Gas & Elec. Co. (1982) 137 Cal. App. 3d 205, 210, 186 Cal. Rptr. 847 ; see also Bilyeu v. Standard Freight Lines (1960) 182 Cal. App. 2d 536, 543, 6 Cal. Rptr. 65] .

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For related legal background, research and procedural guides, and forms of complaint for negligence, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For additional points and authorities to combine with this form, see §§ 165.301 -165.304. For points and authorities supporting and opposing demurrers, see Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities in §§ 165.320 -165.323 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose the points and authorities in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Foreseeability of Act or Injury Sufficient to Show Proximate Cause

In Hoyem v. Manhattan Beach City Sch. Dist. (1978) 22 Cal. 3d 508, 150 Cal. Rptr. 1, 585 P.2d 851 , a mother and her ten-year-old son, Michael, brought an action against a school district to recover for personal injuries suffered as a result of the school authorities' allegedly negligent supervision of students on school premises. The plaintiff Michael was injured by a motorist when he left school grounds during school hours. The plaintiffs sought to recover damages for Michael's injuries and medical expenses, for the plaintiff mother's loss of her son's "comfort and society," and for her own injuries allegedly incurred when viewing him in the hospital. The trial court sustained the defendant's demurrer to all causes of action in the plaintiffs' complaint and subsequently dismissed the action. The plaintiffs appealed from the resulting judgment.

The Supreme Court concluded that the trial court erroneously dismissed the causes of action seeking to recover damages for Michael's injuries and medical expenses, but properly dismissed the causes of action based on the loss of Michael's "comfort and society" and the plaintiff mother's injuries suffered when viewing her son in the hospital. The Court found that the school district bears a duty to supervise students while on the school premises, and that it may be held liable for a student's injuries that are proximately caused by its failure to exercise reasonable care under the circumstances (22 Cal. 3d 508, 513-520) . In addition, the Court held that whether or not the defendant's negligence proximately caused the plaintiff's injury is a question of fact for the jury, and that the trial court could not properly hold as a matter of law that the defendant's alleged negligent supervision on campus did not proximately cause the plaintiff's off-campus injury (22 Cal. 3d 508, 520) . Quoting Akins v. County of Sonoma (1967) 67 Cal. 2d 185, 199, 60 Cal. Rptr. 499, 430 P.2d 57 , the Court explained that when an injury was brought about by a later cause of independent origin, the question of proximate cause depends on a determination of whether the later cause of independent origin, or intervening cause, was foreseeable by the defendant or, if not foreseeable, whether it caused injury of a type that was foreseeable. If either of these questions is answered in the affirmative, then the defendant is not relieved of liability towards the plaintiff. If, however, it is determined that the intervening cause was not foreseeable and that the results that it caused were not foreseeable, the intervening cause becomes a supervening cause and the defendant is relieved from liability for the plaintiff's injuries (22 Cal. 3d 508, 521) . The Court stated that it could not say that Michael's departure from school was unforeseeable as a matter of law (22 Cal. 3d 508, 520) . In addition, the Court held tat the fact that another student's misconduct was the immediate precipitating cause of the injury did not compel a conclusion that negligent supervision was not the proximate cause of the plaintiff's injuries. It added that it could not state that the risk of a student's injury at the hands of a negligent motorist was, as a matter of law, not a foreseeable risk created by the school district's failure to exercise due care in supervising its pupils (22 Cal. 3d 508, 521) .

In Hardison v. Bushnell (1993) 18 Cal. App. 4th 22, 22 Cal. Rptr. 2d 106 , the plaintiff was injured when the truck in which he was riding struck the semitractor driven by the defendant. The truck, which was traveling north at an unsafe speed, hit the semitractor after the defendant, who was traveling south, turned left across the northbound lane. The plaintiff, who was not wearing a seat belt, shattered his wrist when he was thrown forward into the truck's dashboard. The plaintiff brought a personal injury action against the defendant and the defendant's employer. The jury found that the defendant was negligent, but that the defendant's conduct was not the proximate cause of the plaintiff's injuries. The plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed and remanded, holding that the jury's verdict was not supported by substantial evidence. The court held that the defendant's negligence was a proximate cause of the collision and of the plaintiff's injuries, because the jury could not reasonably have found that an independent intervening act that the defendant could not have foreseen absolved the defendant of being a legal cause of the plaintiff's injuries (18 Cal. App. 4th 22, 26) . The court held that an independent intervening act breaks the chain of causation and absolves a defendant only if the act is unforeseeable and the type of injury it caused is unforeseeable (18 Cal. App. 4th 22, 27) . The court noted that in this case the only possible intervening acts were the plaintiff's failure to wear a seat belt and the truck's excessive rate of speed. The court held that the plaintiff's failure to wear a seat belt was foreseeable by the defendant, as was a speeding approaching vehicle. The defendant was negligent because his turn created the risk of collision with oncoming traffic.

The speed of those oncoming vehicles only enhanced the hazard created by the defendant's negligence (18 Cal. App. 4th 22, 28) .

[b] Risk of Harm Was Foreseeable

In Pappert v. San Diego Gas & Elec. Co. (1982) 137 Cal. App. 3d 205, 186 Cal. Rptr. 847 , the plaintiffs were a surviving wife and her three minor children who brought an action for wrongful death against a utility company. The plaintiff wife's husband was electrocuted while trimming a tree that fell against the defendant's power line. The jury's special verdict found that the defendant was negligent, but that its negligence was not a proximate cause of the death. The plaintiffs appealed, contending that the trial court erred by submitting the issue of superseding cause based on decedent's own actions to the jury, and by erroneously stating the test on this issue. The trial court's instructions emphasized only the foreseeability of decedent's intervening acts but failed to mention the principle of foreseeability of the injury received.

The court of appeal reversed. In examining the law concerning intervening causes and superseding causes, the court, quoting Vesely v. Sager (1971) 5 Cal. 3d 153, 163, 95 Cal. Rptr. 623, 486 P.2d 151 , stated that an actor may be liable if his or her negligence is a substantial factor in causing an injury. He or she is not relieved of liability because of the intervening act of a third person if the act was reasonably foreseeable at the time of the negligent conduct. Stated another way, the general test of whether an independent intervening act will break the chain of causation is the foreseeability of the independent intervening act. The court noted, however, that the foreseeability test is two-fold, relating to both the act and the nature of the harm suffered (137 Cal. App. 3d 205, 210) . In this case, the court found that the injury sustained was foreseeable and was a precise and direct result to be expected when a person trimming a tree is exposed to the charge from an uninsulated power line passing through the tree's foliage (137 Cal. App. 3d 205, 211) . In addition, the court found that decedent was within the class of persons exposed to danger when the power company deliberately permitted its uninsulated power line to remain close to the tree. Thus, the court held that there was no factual issue on superseding cause for jury consideration and the trial court erred in presenting this issue to the jury (137 Cal. App. 3d 205, 211) . The court also explained that when an injury is brought about by a later cause of independent origin, the question of proximate cause revolves around a determination of whether the later cause of independent origin, commonly referred to as an intervening cause, was foreseeable by the defendant or, if not foreseeable, whether it caused injury of a type that was foreseeable. If either of these questions is answered in the affirmative, then the defendant is not relieved of liability towards the plaintiff. If, however, it is determined that the intervening case was not foreseeable and that the results that it caused were not foreseeable, then the intervening cause becomes a supervening cause and the defendant is relieved of liability for the plaintiff's injuries (137 Cal. App. 3d 205, 210) . The court noted, however, that even if the intervening negligent conduct is not foreseeable, the defendant is not relieved of liability unless the risk of harm suffered also was unforeseeable (137 Cal. App. 3d 205, 210-211) . If properly instructed, the jurors could only have concluded, even while finding that the power company could not have reasonably foreseen the specific nature of decedent's negligent conduct, that the defendant's original negligence in installing an uninsulated, high voltage wire, or in failing to trim the tree away from the wire, exposed persons within decedent's class to a foreseeable risk of electrocution (137 Cal. App. 3d 205, 211) . Thus, the court found that the injury sustained by the decedent, death by electrocution, was a foreseeable result to be expected when a person trimming a tree on his or her residential property is exposed to the charge from an uninsulated 12,000 volt power line passing through the tree's foliage (137 Cal. App. 3d 205, 211) .

[c] Precise Harm Need Not Be Foreseen

The factual and procedural background of Pappert v. San Diego Gas & Elec. Co. (1982) 137 Cal. App. 3d 205, 186 Cal. Rptr. 847 , is discussed in § 165.300[3][b]. The court of appeal reversed judgment for the defendant power company in an action based on the wrongful death of the plaintiffs' decedent, who was electrocuted while trimming a tree that fell across an uninsulated power line. The court of appeal concluded that decedent's conduct did not constitute a superseding cause as a matter of law (137 Cal. App. 3d 205, 208) . The court noted that even if the intervening negligent conduct is not foreseeable, the defendant is not relieved of liability unless the risk of harm also suffered was unforeseeable (137 Cal. App. 3d 205, 211) . The court found that the jury instructions given by the trial court, ignoring the foreseeability of the risk of harm, were fatally defective, misleading the jury and creating the reasonable probability that a result more favorable to the plaintiffs would have been reached in the absence of the error. The court stated that if the jury had been properly instructed it could only have concluded, even while finding that the power company could not have reasonably foreseen the specific nature of decedent's negligent conduct, that the defendant's original negligence in installing an uninsulated, high voltage wire, or in failing to trim the tree away from the wire, exposed persons within decedent's class to a foreseeable risk of electrocution. Quoting Bilyeu v. Standard Freight Lines (1960) 182 Cal. App. 2d 536, 542-543, 6 Cal. Rptr. 65 , the court noted that the question is not whether the identical consequences of the negligent act were reasonably foreseeable, but whether the likelihood of the injury from that act was reasonably foreseeable. The test of reasonable foreseeability is directed to the likelihood of injury from the negligent act and not the identical circumstances tat occurred. Neither the particular injuries sustained, the manner by which they were inflicted, nor the circumstances under which they were received are factors included within the foreseeability test (137 Cal. App. 3d 205, 211) . In this case, the court found that the injuries sustained, death by electrocution, was a foreseeable result to be expected when a person trimming a tree on his residential property is exposed to the charge from an uninsulated 12,000 volt power line passing through the tree's foliage (137 Cal. App. 3d 205, 211) .

In Bilyeu v. Standard Freight Lines (1960) 182 Cal. App. 2d 536, 6 Cal. Rptr. 65 , a highway patrol officer brought an action for damages against the defendants, a freight company and a truck driver, for personal injuries sustained when the plaintiff pushed heavy rolls of steel off the highway. The rolls of steel had previously fallen from the defendant's truck after an accident, and the plaintiff was attempting to clear the highway of obstructions when he injured his neck. Without a jury, the trial court entered judgment for the plaintiff, and the defendants appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. With regard to the issue of proximate cause, the court stated that a highway patrol officer's participation and injury while removing an obstruction from a highway are foreseeable occurrences. The court concluded that the plaintiff's participation in removing the steel rolls from the highway was not an efficient intervening cause sufficient to break the legal chain of causation between the negligent conduct of the driver and the plaintiff's injuries. The manner of the plaintiff's participation in the removal, although pertinent to the determination of duty to exercise ordinary care for his own protection, is not determinative of the issue of proximate cause. The question is not whether the identical consequences of the negligent act were reasonably foreseeable, but whether the likelihood of injury from that act was reasonably foreseeable. The test of reasonable foreseeability is directed to the likelihood of injury from the negligent act rather than to the identical circumstances that occurred. Neither the particular injuries sustained, the manner by which they were inflicted, nor the circumstances under which they were received are factors included within the foreseeability test (182 Cal. App. 2d 536, 543) . Thus, whether the plaintiff was injured while removing the steel rolls through the use of mechanical equipment or his own strength, or whether he sustained injury while pushing a steel roll that knocked against and broke his leg or caused a strain on his back that broke his neck vertebrae, are not foreseeable factors pertinent to the proximate cause determination (182 Cal. App. 2d 536, 543-544) . The likelihood of injury from negligent conduct causing an obstruction in the highway, either while the obstruction remains in the highway or in the course of its removal, if not self-evident, is properly determined as a question of fact. When the effect of an intervening act as an efficient intervening cause is at issue, and when there is room for a reasonable difference of opinion as to whether the intervening act was foreseeable, the question should be left to the trier of fact (182 Cal. App. 2d 536, 544) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Foreseeability of Act or Injury Sufficient to Show Proximate Cause

The factual and procedural background of Akins v. County of Sonoma (1967) 67 Cal. 2d 185, 60 Cal. Rptr. 499, 430 P.2d 57 , is discussed in § 165.261[3][a]. In Akins, the Supreme Court affirmed judgment for the defendant's promotion company and the county of Sonoma against the plaintiff, a two-year-old boy. The plaintiff suffered personal injuries when he fell from his bleachers seat while watching a roller derby game with his parents at a county fairground. In examining whether or not the parents' conduct in failing to exercise proper care for the boy's safety constituted an intervening cause that would supersede the defendant's original negligence, the Court noted that this question depends on a determination of whether the later cause of independent origin, or intervening cause, was foreseeable by the defendant or, if not foreseeable, whether it caused injury of a type that was foreseeable. If either of these questions is answered in the affirmative, then the defendant is not relieved from liability towards the plaintiff. If, however, it is determined that the intervening cause was not foreseeable and that the results that it caused were not foreseeable, then the intervening cause becomes a supervening cause and the defendant is relieved from liability for the plaintiff's injuries (67 Cal. 2d 185, 199) . In this case, the Court felt that the issue of the parents' negligence was relevant to the issue of proximate cause, and was properly submitted to the jury (67 Cal. 2d 185, 199-200) .

The factual and procedural background of Pappert v. San Diego Gas & Elec. Co. (1982) 137 Cal. App. 3d 205, 186 Cal. Rptr. 847 , is discussed in § 165.300[3][b]. The court of appeal held that the trial court had prejudicially failed to inform the jury that decedent's conduct was not a superseding cause, and that the defendant could not escape liability for negligence unless both (1) the defendant could not reasonably have foreseen decedent's intervening act and (2) the defendant's negligence did not cause injury of a type that was reasonably foreseeable (137 Cal. App. 3d 205, 207-208) . The court found that the injury sustained by decedent, death by electrocution, was precisely the result to be expected when a person trimming a tree is exposed to the charge from an uninsulated power line (137 Cal. App. 3d 205, 211) .

[b] Precise Harm Need Not Be Foreseen

The factual and procedural background of City of Los Angeles v. Shpegel-Dimsey, Inc. (1988) 198 Cal. App. 3d 1009, 244 Cal. Rptr. 507 , is discussed in § 165.70[4][c]. In reversing the judgment for the defendant, the court of appeal stated that foreseeability is not measured by what is more probable than not, but rather includes whatever is likely enough in the setting of modern life that a reasonably thoughtful person would take into account in guiding practical conduct. Moreover, the foreseeability of the general character of the event or harm, rather than its precise nature or manner of occurrence, is required (198 Cal. App. 3d 1009, 1022) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
C. Causation
3. Intervening and Superseding Acts

16-165 California Points & Authorities § 165.301

§ 165.301 Intervening Act of Third Person Was Foreseeable

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT IS LIABLE FOR HIS/HER/ITS NEGLIGENCE BECAUSE THE INTERVENING ACT OF A THIRD PERSON WAS FORESEEABLE BY DEFENDANT.

A. Intervening Act of Third Person Was Foreseeable. An actor may be liable if his or her negligence is a substantial factor in causing an injury; he or she is not relieved of liability because of the intervening act of a third person if the act was reasonably foreseeable at the time of the negligent conduct (Landeros v. Flood (1976) 17 Cal. 3d 399, 411, 131 Cal. Rptr. 69, 551 P.2d 389 ; Pappert v. San Diego Gas & Elec. Co. (1982) 137 Cal. App. 3d 205, 210, 186 Cal. Rptr. 847).

B. Foreseeability Is Question for Trier of Fact. Whether or not the intervening act of a third person was foreseeable and therefore not a superseding cause generally frames a question for the trier of fact (Landeros v. Flood (1976) 17 Cal. 3d 399, 411, 131 Cal. Rptr. 69, 551 P.2d 389).

C. Intervening Act Not Highly Extraordinary Response to Situation. An intervening act of a third person performed in a negligent manner does not constitute a superseding cause if a reasonable person knowing that the situation existed when the act of the third person is performed, did not regard it as highly extraordinary that the third person so acted, or the act is not an extraordinary response to the situation created by the defendant's conduct and the intervening act is not performed with extraordinary negligence (see Stasulat v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1937) 8 Cal. 2d 631, 637, 67 P.2d 678).

D. Intervening Act May Be Innocent, Negligent, Intentionally Tortious, or Criminal. If the likelihood that a third person may act in a particular manner is the hazard or one of the hazards that makes the actor negligent, the act, whether innocent, negligent, intentionally tortious, or criminal does not prevent the actor's liability for harm caused (Landeros v. Flood (1976) 17 Cal. 3d 399, 411, 131 Cal. Rptr. 69, 551 P.2d 389).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that the intervening conduct of a third party was foreseeable [see Landeros v. Flood (1976) 17 Cal. 3d 399, 411, 131 Cal. Rptr. 69, 551 P.2d 389] . It should be combined with any of the forms in § 165.300 and §§ 165.302 -165.304 that are applicable to the particular case.

This argument may arise, for example, in opposing a demurrer in an action for damages for negligence [see, e.g., Landeros v. Flood (1976) 17 Cal. 3d 399, 405, 131 Cal. Rptr. 69, 551 P.2d 389 ; see also O'Hara v. Western Seven Trees Corp. (1977) 75 Cal. App. 3d 798, 801, 142 Cal. Rptr. 487] .

This form should be used when the originally negligent defendant's conduct is not sufficient in and of itself to produce the plaintiff's injury and the intervening conduct of the third party is the "immediate cause" of the injury [see Fish v. Los Angeles Dodgers Baseball Club (1976) 56 Cal. App. 3d 620, 636, 128 Cal. Rptr. 807] . In other cases, the first actor's conduct will itself cause the injury or death unless successful protective action is taken by a third party. When the third party fails to prevent the harm to the plaintiff, negligently or otherwise, that failure will generally not supersede the defendant's original negligence [see Fish v. Los Angeles Dodgers Baseball Club (1976) 56 Cal. App. 3d 620, 636, 128 Cal. Rptr. 807] .

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel may argue that the acts of the third party were foreseeable by the defendant at the time the defendant committed the originally negligent act [see Landeros v. Flood (1976) 17 Cal. 3d 399, 411, 131 Cal. Rptr. 69, 551 P.2d 389] .

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For related legal background, research and procedural guides, and forms of complaint for negligence, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For additional points and authorities to combine with this form, see § 165.300 and §§ 165.302 -165.304. For points and authorities supporting and opposing demurrers, see Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities in §§ 165.320 -165.323 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose the points and authorities in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Intervening Act of Third Person Was Foreseeable

In Landeros v. Flood (1976) 17 Cal. 3d 399, 131 Cal. Rptr. 69, 551 P.2d 389 , a minor brought an action through her guardian ad litem against a hospital and a physician for personal injuries suffered as a result of the defendant physician's alleged medical malpractice. The plaintiff, an 11-month-old infant, was taken to the defendants for medical care exhibiting injuries that appeared to have been inflicted by her mother or other persons. The plaintiff contended that the defendants negligently failed to diagnose her as a battered child, and that proper medical treatment would have included reporting her injuries to local law enforcement authorities or the juvenile probation department. In addition, she contended that the defendants failed to comply with various Penal Code sections that required the defendants to report her injuries to local law enforcement authorities. As a result of the defendants' failure to diagnose and report her injuries, the plaintiff contended that she was returned to the custody of her mother and her mother's boyfriend, and consequently suffered permanent physical injuries and mental distress. The trial court granted the defendants' general demurrer to the plaintiff's complaint and later entered a judgment dismissing the entire action. The plaintiff appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed, finding that the trial court could not, on the facts alleged, conclude as a matter of law that the defendants' standard of professional care did not include the diagnostic and treatment procedures outlined in the complaint (17 Cal. 3d 399, 410) . With respect to proximate cause, the Court stated that it was evident from the allegations of the complaint that the continued beating inflicted on the plaintiff by her mother and her mother's boyfriend after the plaintiff was released from the hospital constituted an intervening act that was the immediate cause in fact of the injuries for which she sought relief. The Court noted, however, that an intervening act does not amount to a superseding cause relieving the negligent defendant of liability if the act was reasonably foreseeable. An actor may be liable if his or her negligence is a substantial factor in causing an injury. He or she is not relieved of liability because of the intervening act of a third person if the act was reasonably foreseeable at the time of the negligent conduct. The Court also stated that intervening criminal acts, such as those committed by the plaintiff's mother and her boyfriend, do not prevent the original actor's liability. The Court noted that the question of foreseeability of an intervening act is generally a question for the trier of fact (17 Cal. 3d 399, 411) . In examining the facts, the Court could not categorically state that an ordinarily prudent physician who had correctly diagnosed the plaintiff as a victim of the battered child syndrome would not have foreseen the likelihood of further serious injuries to her if she were returned directly to the custody of her caretakers. Thus, the lower court could not properly rule that the defendants' negligence, as a matter of law, was not the proximate cause of the plaintiff's injuries (17 Cal. 3d 399, 412) .

The factual and procedural background of Pappert v. San Diego Gas & Elec. Co. (1982) 137 Cal. App. 3d 205, 186 Cal. Rptr. 847 , is discussed in § 165.300[3][b].

[b] Foreseeability Is Question for Trier of Fact

The factual and procedural background of Landeros v. Flood (1976) 17 Cal. 3d 399, 131 Cal. Rptr. 69, 551 P.2d 389 , is discussed in § 165.301[3][a]. In reversing judgment for the defendants, the Court noted that the continued beating inflicted on the plaintiff by her mother and her mother's boyfriend after the defendants returned the plaintiff to their custody constituted an intervening act that was the immediate cause in fact of the injuries for which the plaintiff sought to recover. The Court stated, however, that an intervening act does not amount to a superseding cause relieving the defendant of liability if the act was reasonably foreseeable. The Court added that with regard to the determination of duty, foreseeability is a question of fact for the jury. The same rule applies when the issue is whether the intervening act of a third person was foreseeable and therefore not a superseding cause. The Court stated that in such circumstances, the foreseeability of the risk generally frames a question for the trier of fact (17 Cal. 3d 399, 411) .

[c] Intervening Act Not Highly Extraordinary Response to Situation

In Stasulat v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1937) 8 Cal. 2d 631, 67 P.2d 678 , the surviving mother, brother, and two sisters of a lineman employed by the Pacific Telephone Company, brought an action against Pacific Gas and Electric Company to recover damages for his alleged wrongful death. The plaintiffs' decedent received an electric shock and fell from a telephone pole on which he was working. The plaintiffs alleged that the defendant negligently permitted its power lines to sag so that they contacted a guy wire fastened to the telephone pole, and that the decedent received the electric shock when he touched the guy wire. Witnesses stated that the power lines could not have been lifted to contact the telephone pole by wind or other natural causes, and that the position of the wires could only have occurred through the intervention of a human agency. In addition, witnesses testified that no inexperienced person could have changed the position of the wires because of his or her appreciation of the danger of so doing. The jury, however, found that the defendant was negligent in maintaining the power lines in a sagging condition and returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiffs. The defendant appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed. The Court found that the defendant was negligent in permitting the wires to sag and to remain in a position that did not give the clearance required by the rules of the Railroad Commission. It stated, however, that negligence was not the proximate cause of the decedent's injuries (8 Cal. 2d 631, 636) . The Court also stated that the rules for determining whether the independent force that acts on the situation created by the original negligence is an intervening cause that supersedes the original negligence as a proximate cause of the injury, lead to the conclusion that the defendant was not liable. This is so even though the defendant negligently allowed its wires to sag, if the realizable likelihood of the second negligent act was not one of the factors contributing to the negligent character of the first act (8 Cal. 2d 631, 637) . The Court explained that an intervening act of a third person acts as a superseding cause of the injuries if a reasonable person knowing the situation created by the first act would regard as highly extraordinary that the intervening act should have been performed, or the act, although not an extraordinary response to the situation created by the original negligence, is performed in an extraordinarily negligent manner (8 Cal. 2d 631, 637) . Although it is not necessary to preserve the chain of causation from the original negligence from which the precise nature of the second negligent act should reasonably have been anticipated, it is necessary that such negligence should have been anticipated as reasonably likely to follow as a natural and ordinary consequence of the situation created by the original negligent act (8 Cal. 2d 631, 637-638) . Although as a general rule the question of whether the original negligence is a proximate cause of the injury is a jury question, here, as a matter of law, the issue of proximate cause had not been proven. There was no evidence from which the jury could reasonably conclude that the lifting of the wires over the top of the pole with such a force that would break their insulation was an act that should reasonably have been foreseen and anticipated as a result of the sagged condition of the wires, or even that there was more than a remote and slight probability of the occurrence of any positive act that would bring the wires in contact with the telephone pole or its equipment or destroy its insulation. The Court added that this was especially true in light of the fact that only experienced linemen, who knew that such an act would increase the danger inherent in the sagged condition, could reasonably be expected to climb the telephone pole and interfere with the wires of the defendant company. Furthermore, the Court noted that there was no contention that there was any such interference by any employee of the defendant (8 Cal. 2d 631, 638) .

[d] Intervening Act May Be Innocent, Negligent, Intentionally Tortious, or Criminal

The factual and procedural background of Landeros v. Flood (1976) 17 Cal. 3d 399, 131 Cal. Rptr. 69, 551 P.2d 389 , is discussed in § 165.301[3][a]. The Supreme Court reversed a judgment for the defendants entered by the trial court after it had sustained the defendants' demurrer to the complaint. The Court noted that the continued beating inflicted on the plaintiff by her mother and her mother's boyfriend after the defendants returned the plaintiff to their custody constituted an intervening act that was the immediate cause in fact of the plaintiff's injuries. The plaintiff's mother and her boyfriend were subsequently convicted of the crime of child abuse. The Court stated that an intervening act does not amount to a superseding cause relieving the defendant of liability if it was reasonably foreseeable. In addition, if the likelihood that a third person may act in a particular manner is the hazard or one of the hazards that makes the actor negligent, the act, whether innocent, negligent, intentionally tortious, or criminal, does not prevent the actor from being liable for harm caused (17 Cal. 3d 399, 411) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Intervening Act of Third Person Was Foreseeable

In USAir, Inc. v. United States Dep't of Navy (9th Cir. 1994) 14 F.3d 1410 , the plaintiff was an airline passenger who was hit on the head when an airline attendant opened an overhead bin with one hand while looking away from the bin, and a briefcase fell out. The defendant's employee had stowed the briefcase in the bin in an admittedly unstable position. The plaintiff sued the airline for the attendant's negligence and accepted a settlement. The plaintiff then sued the defendant in federal district court. The court ruled that the attendant's act was so unforeseeable that it superseded any possible negligence by the defendant's employee. The plaintiff appealed to the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals, which reversed. The appellate court held that the defendant's employee should have foreseen that the briefcase might fall out. The likelihood that someone would open the overhead bin was not only foreseeable, but inevitable. The likelihood that the attendant or another passenger might do so negligently was a normal, foreseeable consequence of the employee's own negligence and therefore not a superseding cause of the plaintiff's injuries (14 F.3d 1410, 1413) .

In Anaya v. Superior Court (2000) 78 Cal. App. 4th 971, 93 Cal. Rptr. 2d 228 , the plaintiffs were the parents of a child who was killed following an automobile accident involving the defendants. The child, who was injured in the automobile accident, was killed when the helicopter that was transporting the child to the hospital crashed. The trial court sustained a demurrer for the defendants on the ground that the death was not foreseeable. The court of appeal reversed, noting the established rule that an actor is not relieved of liability for negligent conduct because of an intervening act of a third person if the intervening act was reasonably foreseeable at the time of the original negligent conduct (78 Cal. App. 4th 971, 973) . The court also noted the corollary rule that a tortfeasor responsible for the original injury is also liable for further injury or death occurring during the course of medical treatment to treat injuries caused by the original tortfeasor (78 Cal. App. 4th 971, 974) . The court then concluded that the tortfeasors allegedly liable for the original automobile accident that necessitated transportation of the victim to a hospital could be held liable for further injury or death suffered by the victim on the way to the hospital, because it was foreseeable that the injured victim of an automobile accident would require transportation to a medical facility for treatment. Allegations that the helicopter malfunctioned, was negligently maintained, or that the manufacturer was strictly liable for the malfunction did not establish a superseding cause that would relieve the original tortfeasors from liability (78 Cal. App. 4th 971, 976) .

In Bloomberg v. Interinsurance Exch. (1984) 162 Cal. App. 3d 571, 207 Cal. Rptr. 853 , the plaintiffs' son was struck and killed by a drunk driver while awaiting the tow truck he requested from the defendant, who had failed to send the truck. The court of appeal held that, on the facts alleged in the complaint, it could not say that the defendant owed no duty of care to the son (162 Cal. App. 3d 571, 575) . The court of appeal held further that it is not uncommon, and therefore it is foreseeable, for intoxicated or speeding drivers to lose control and crash into whatever may be standing alongside the roads they travel (162 Cal. App. 3d 571, 577) . The court noted that if an independent intervening act occurs that is highly unusual or extraordinary, not reasonably likely to happen and hence not foreseeable, it is considered a superseding cause and the defendant is not liable. However, if the risk of injury might have been reasonably foreseen, a defendant is liable (162 Cal. App. 3d 571, 576) .

[b] Intervening Act Not Highly Extraordinary Response to Situation

In Leno v. Young Men's Christian Ass'n (1971) 17 Cal. App. 3d 651, 95 Cal. Rptr. 96 , the plaintiffs brought an action for damages against the YMCA for the wrongful death of their son. The court of appeal reversed a judgment of nonsuit in favor of the defendants, finding that the plaintiffs had introduced sufficient evidence on the issue of the negligence of decedent's scuba diving instructor so as to require the case to be submitted to the jury (17 Cal. App. 3d 651, 659) . In addition, there was some question regarding the liability of the YMCA for the acts of the diving instructor because of certain intervening causes, such as the negligence of another instructor, the negligence of the ambulance crew, or the acts of the doctors that cared for the decedent. The court stated that regarding superseding causes, the fact that an intervening act of a third person is performed in a negligent manner does not make it a superseding cause if a reasonable person, knowing the situation exists when the act of the third person is performed, would not regard it as highly extraordinary that the third person so acted, or the act is a normal response to a situation created by the defendant's conduct, and the manner in which the intervening act is performed is not extraordinarily negligent (17 Cal. App. 3d 651, 659-660) .

[c] Intervening Act May Be Innocent, Negligent, Intentionally Tortious, or Criminal

The factual and procedural background of Richardson v. Ham (1955) 44 Cal. 2d 772, 285 P.2d 269 , is discussed in § 165.303[3][a]. In Richardson, persons who suffered injury and damages caused by a runaway bulldozer, brought consolidated actions for damages against the defendants, members of a construction contracting partnership. In affirming an order granting a new trial for the plaintiffs, the Supreme Court stated that it was well settled that if the realizable likelihood that a third person may act in a particular manner is the hazard or one of the hazards that makes the actor negligent, the act whether innocent, negligent, intentionally tortious, or criminal does not prevent the actor from being liable for harm caused thereby. The Court concluded that the possibility of the intentional, wrongful misconduct that occurred in this case was not so remote as not to constitute one of the hazards that would justify the conclusion that the defendants' failure to lock the bulldozer was negligent. Accordingly, the defendants' duty to protect the plaintiffs from injuries caused by the uncontrolled and unauthorized operation of their bulldozer included a duty to protect the plaintiffs from the intentional misconduct of the young men. Therefore, the misconduct did not constitute a superseding cause of the plaintiffs' harm (44 Cal. 2d 772, 777) .

In Carrera v. Maurice J. Sopp & Son (2009) 177 Cal. App. 4th 366, 99 Cal. Rptr. 3d 268 , a tow truck was stolen from the lot of a truck service center when the key was left in the ignition and the lot's gate left open. The thief, a parolee who was drunk at the time of the theft, drove the tow truck about a mile before jumping a curb and striking a group of pedestrians waiting for a bus. The driver eventually came to a halt when he ran the truck into a series of utility poles. He was sentenced to prison for murder. Suit was brought against the truck service center on behalf of persons who were injured or killed in the incident. Plaintiffs argued that the service center was negligently operated so as to allow a thief access to the tow truck and the company had a duty to take reasonable measures to prevent the theft. The trial court granted summary judgment for the defendant, but the court of appeal reversed. The court of appeal held that the plaintiffs had presented sufficient evidence to withstand summary judgment by showing that the defendant owed a duty of care under the circumstances. Noting the general rule that a person is not liable for harm caused by a thief who steals that person's vehicle, even if the keys had been left in the vehicle, the court of appeal held that the "special circumstances" exception to that rule applied. Under that exception, a duty can exist if special circumstances are shown, such as a sizable vehicle left unattended and available for use by persons who are unfamiliar with its operation. The court noted that the tow truck was a sizable, powerful vehicle designed to move other vehicles. To perform those tasks, it was equipped with specialized equipment that required special training and skills to operate. Based on these facts, the court concluded that safe operation of the truck was not a matter of common experience (177 Cal. App. 4th 366, 381) . The court also stressed that the service center was located in a high-crime area, the gate to the yard was left open, and the tow truck was left with the keys in the ignition. Even though other vehicles were parked around the tow truck, a surveillance video demonstrated how the thief was able to extricate the tow truck in about a minute. Moreover, no personnel of the service center were within sight when the thief got into the tow truck and started driving it (177 Cal. App. 4th 366, 383) . Finally, based on the close temporal connection between the theft and the harm caused to plaintiffs, the court could not say as a matter of law that defendant was not a legal cause of the harm (177 Cal. App. 4th 366, 384-385) .

The factual and procedural background of City of Los Angeles v. Shpegel-Dimsey, Inc. (1988) 198 Cal. App. 3d 1009, 244 Cal. Rptr. 507 , is discussed in § 165.70[4][c]. In reversing the judgment for the defendant, the court of appeal held that if the likelihood that a third person may act in a particular manner is the hazard or one of the hazards that makes the actor negligent, the act, whether innocent, negligent, intentionally tortious, or criminal, does not prevent the actor from being liable for harm caused (198 Cal. App. 3d 1009, 1022) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
C. Causation
3. Intervening and Superseding Acts

16-165 California Points & Authorities § 165.302

§ 165.302 Intervening Force of Nature Was Foreseeable

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT IS LIABLE FOR HIS/HER/ITS NEGLIGENCE BECAUSE THE INTERVENING FORCE OF NATURE WAS FORESEEABLE BY DEFENDANT.

Foreseeable Intervening Forces of Nature. A natural force, such as a rainstorm of unusual intensity, is not a superhuman cause or "act of God" superseding the defendant's original negligence if the natural force was not totally unforeseeable by the defendant (see Southern Pac. Co. v. City of Los Angeles (1936) 5 Cal. 2d 545, 549, 55 P.2d 847).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that an intervening force of nature that contributed to the cause of the plaintiff's injuries was foreseeable [see Southern Pac. Co. v. City of Los Angeles (1936) 5 Cal. 2d 545, 549, 55 P.2d 847] . It should be combined with any of the forms in §§ 165.300 -165.301 and §§ 165.303 -165.304 that are applicable to the particular case.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel may argue that the intervening event was a force of nature, and discuss facts supporting its foreseeability by the defendant.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For related legal background, research and procedural guides, and forms of complaint for negligence, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For additional points and authorities to combine with this form, see §§ 165.300 -165.301 and §§ 165.303 -165.304. For points and authorities supporting and opposing demurrers, see Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities in §§ 165.320 -165.323 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose the points and authorities in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Foreseeable Intervening Forces of Nature

In Southern Pac. Co. v. City of Los Angeles (1936) 5 Cal. 2d 545, 55 P.2d 847 , the plaintiffs brought an action for damages alleged to have been proximately caused by the negligence of the defendant city in the construction and maintenance of an aqueduct. Following a rainstorm of unusual force, the defendant's aqueduct gave way, damaging the plaintiffs' property. The trial court found that the defendant city was not negligent. It also concluded that the accident was caused by a cloudburst of unprecedented violence so that it constituted an unforeseeable superhuman cause or act of God. Judgment was entered against the plaintiffs, who appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed, finding that the defendant city was negligent in leaving an open aqueduct with considerable curvature and a slow grade in a position below a large steep cone of loose materials where heavy and at times torrential rains have been known to occur without any provision for spillways or other drainage methods (5 Cal. 2d 545, 548-549) . In addition, the Court stated that a rainstorm that is merely of unusual intensity is not a superhuman cause or "act of God," which would supersede the original negligence as the proximate cause of the injury. The Court stated that there was nothing in the nature of the rainstorm involved in this case that made it so totally unforeseeable as to act as a superseding cause. It was simply a heavy rain, commencing and continuing for several days, perhaps establishing a record for volume in inches in that region. The Court explained that it could not conclude, however, that the cause was wholly unforeseeable. Rainfall is foreseeable in most places; heavy rainfall was characteristic of that region. The Court further noted that there is no point at which an expectable heavy rain becomes an "act of God" by reason of its unusual volume. With respect to the issues both of negligence and proximate cause, the foreseeability of unusual rainfall was clearly established by the evidence, calling for some precautions by way of overhead or underground drainage to meet the requirement of reasonable care under the circumstances (5 Cal. 2d 545, 549) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Foreseeable Intervening Forces of Nature

In Diamond Springs Lime Co. v. American River Constr. (1971) 16 Cal. App. 3d 581, 94 Cal. Rptr. 200 , a limestone quarry and rock crushing operator brought an action against the builder and owner of the dam to recover for property damage suffered when the dam burst after a severe rainstorm. The court of appeal affirmed a judgment holding the defendant builder liable, but exonerating the defendant owner. The court noted that the defendant builder had argued that the flood was an unprecedented calamity, and that this unforeseeable event formed an independent superseding cause of the plaintiff's damage, eliminating the defendant's own negligence, if any, as a proximate cause. The court stated, however, that a defendant may be liable if his or her negligence is a substantial factor in causing the injury. The presence of independent causal forces does not relieve him or her of liability if the forces were foreseeable (16 Cal. App. 3d 581, 596) . In this case, the court felt that the question of foreseeability of harm was a question for the jury, and that there was substantial evidence to support the jury's inference that the downstream flooding was a reasonably foreseeable peril (16 Cal. App. 3d 581, 597-598) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
C. Causation
3. Intervening and Superseding Acts

16-165 California Points & Authorities § 165.303

§ 165.303 Defendant Is Liable Despite Intervening Criminal Act

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT IS LIABLE FOR HIS/HER/ITS NEGLIGENCE DESPITE THE INTERVENING CRIMINAL ACT BECAUSE DEFENDANT'S CONDUCT CREATED THE OPPORTUNITY FOR THE CRIMINAL ACT.

Defendant's Conduct Created Opportunity for Intervening Criminal Act. The criminal act of a third person is a superseding cause unless the first actor at the time of his or her negligent conduct realized or should have realized the likelihood that the conduct created an opportunity for the commission of the crime, and that the third person might avail himself or herself of that opportunity (O'Hara v. Western Seven Trees Corp. (1977) 75 Cal. App. 3d 798, 804, 142 Cal. Rptr. 487 ; see Richardson v. Ham (1955) 44 Cal. 2d 772, 777, 285 P.2d 269).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that the defendant is liable for negligence despite an intervening criminal act, because the defendant's conduct created the opportunity for the criminal act to occur [see O'Hara v. Western Seven Trees Corp. (1977) 75 Cal. App. 3d 798, 804, 142 Cal. Rptr. 487] . It should be combined with any of the forms in §§ 165.300 -165.302 and § 165.304 that are applicable to the particular case.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel may discuss the circumstances under which the criminal act occurred, and show that the defendant's conduct created a situation that allowed the criminal act to occur.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For related legal background, research and procedural guides, and forms of complaint for negligence, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For additional points and authorities to combine with this form, see §§ 165.300 -165.302 and § 165.304. For points and authorities supporting and opposing demurrers, see Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities in §§ 165.320 -165.323 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose the points and authorities in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Defendant's Conduct Created Opportunity for Intervening Criminal Act

In Richardson v. Ham (1955) 44 Cal. 2d 772, 285 P.2d 269 , persons who suffered injury and damages caused by a runaway bulldozer, brought consolidated actions for damages against members of a construction contracting partnership. The plaintiffs alleged that the defendants were negligent in leaving the bulldozer unattended and unlocked at a construction site. Several drunken young men drove the bulldozer and abandoned it. The bulldozer then rolled down a hill, hit a house, collided with a house-trailer, and smashed an automobile. The jury returned verdicts for the defendants. The trial court granted the plaintiffs' motion for a new trial on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence and misconduct of the jury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 657(2), (6)]. The defendants appealed.

The Supreme Court affirmed on the ground that there was insufficient evidence to support the verdict (44 Cal. 2d 772, 777) . The Court found that the extreme danger created by a bulldozer in uncontrolled motion and the foreseeable risk of intermeddling fully justified imposing a duty on the owner to exercise reasonable care to protect third parties from injuries arising from its operation by intermeddlers (44 Cal. 2d 772, 776) . The defendants contended that even if they were under a duty to protect the plaintiffs from injuries from operation of the bulldozer by ordinary intermeddlers, they were not under a duty to protect the plaintiffs from intermeddlers who deliberately undertook to operate the bulldozer, or in other words, that the intentional misconduct of the young men constituted a superseding cause of the plaintiffs' injuries. The Court noted, however, that if the realizable likelihood that a third person may act in a particular manner is the hazard or one of the hazards that makes the actor negligent, the act, whether innocent, negligent, intentionally tortious, or criminal, does not prevent the actor from being liable for harm caused. The Court concluded that the possibility of the intentional, wrongful misconduct that occurred in this case was not so remote as not to constitute one of the hazards that would justify the conclusion that the defendants' failure to lock the bulldozer was negligent. Accordingly, the defendants' duty to protect the plaintiffs from injuries caused by the uncontrolled and unauthorized operation of their bulldozer included a duty to protect the plaintiffs from the intentional misconduct of the young men. The misconduct did not therefore constitute a superseding cause of the plaintiffs' harm (44 Cal. 2d 772, 777) .

In O'Hara v. Western Seven Trees Corp. (1977) 75 Cal. App. 3d 798, 142 Cal. Rptr. 487 , the plaintiff was raped in her apartment and brought an action against the owners and operators of the complex. The plaintiff's first cause of action alleged that the defendants were negligent in failing to provide adequate security, for misrepresenting security measures on the premises, and for concealing information concerning a man who had raped several female tenants. The plaintiff's second cause of action was for deceit, alleging that the defendants knowingly misrepresented the safety and security of the complex with the intent to induce her to rent an apartment. The trial court sustained the defendants' demurrer; the plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed the judgment with directions to the lower court to overrule the general demurrer. With regard to the plaintiff's first cause of action, the court stated that generally a person is liable for injuries caused by his or her failure to exercise reasonable care under the circumstances. The court noted that the landlord-tenant relationship has given rise to liability when landlords fail to take reasonable steps to protect tenants from criminal activity (75 Cal. App. 3d 798, 802) . This liability does not make the landlord an insurer of the tenant's safety; the duty is merely to exercise reasonable care (75 Cal. App. 3d 798, 802-803) . The court further found that an analysis of the factors in Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 Cal. 2d 108, 113, 70 Cal. Rptr. 97, 443 P.2d 561 (discussed in § 165.30[3][d]), showed that there is potential liability in this case. The court found that the plaintiff alleged the most important factor, foreseeability. The defendants allegedly knew of the past assaults and of conditions making future attacks likely. By not acting affirmatively to protect the plaintiff, the defendants increased the likelihood that the plaintiff would become a victim. This failure to act, either by warning her or by providing adequate security, allegedly created a risk of injury to appellant (75 Cal. App. 3d 798, 804) . The court found further that the defendants' possible liability was suggested by Restatement (Second) of Torts § 302B, which states that an act or omission may be negligent if the actor realizes or should realize that it involves an unreasonable risk of harm to another through the conduct of a third person that is intended to cause harm, even though the conduct is criminal. The court explained that the defendants allegedly knew of conditions that made sexual assaults likely. The risk was unreasonable because the defendants could have decreased the risk with a simple disclosure of information. The court further noted that the criminal act of a third person is a superseding cause unless the actor at the time of his or her negligent conduct realized or should have realized the likelihood that the conduct created an opportunity for the commission of the crime, and that the third person might avail himself or herself of the opportunity. If the likelihood that the third person may act in a particular manner is the hazard or one of the hazards that makes the actor negligent, the act, whether innocent or criminal, does not prevent the actor from being liable for harm caused. The court concluded that the risk of the sexual assault by the plaintiff's attacker was the hazard that made the defendants' conduct negligent. Thus, it found that it was error to sustain the demurrer to the plaintiff's first cause of action (75 Cal. App. 3d 798, 804) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Defendant's Conduct Created Opportunity for Intervening Criminal Act

In Mukthar v. Latin Am. Sec. Serv. (2006) 139 Cal. App. 4th 284, 42 Cal. Rptr. 3d 563 , the court of appeal held that a trial court erred in granting summary judgment in favor of a security company that failed to provide an armed security guard at a convenience store one night as the company was under contract to do. A clerk at the store was hit in the face by a woman who was attempting to leave the store without paying for her goods, and the clerk sued the security company, arguing that the injury would not have occurred if the armed guard had been present. The court of appeal held that the issue of causation should have gone to the jury. The court noted undisputed evidence that the security guard was normally positioned about a foot from the door where the altercation occurred and concluded that it was more likely than not that the woman would not have struck the clerk if an armed guard had been standing right there. The court also noted that the harm that was inflicted on the clerk was precisely the type of harm that the security company had been employed to prevent (139 Cal. App. 4th 284, 291) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
C. Causation
3. Intervening and Superseding Acts

16-165 California Points & Authorities § 165.304

§ 165.304 Defendant Is Liable Despite Third Party's Failure to Prevent Harm

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT IS LIABLE FOR HIS/HER/ITS NEGLIGENCE BECAUSE A THIRD PARTY'S FAILURE TO PROTECT PLAINTIFF FROM HARM IS NOT A SUPERSEDING CAUSE THAT CUTS OFF DEFENDANT'S LIABILITY FOR NEGLIGENTLY CAUSING THE HARM.

A. Risk of Injury Was Reasonably Foreseeable. If the risk of injury is reasonably foreseeable, the defendant is liable. An independent intervening act is a superseding cause relieving the actor of liability for his or her negligence only if the intervening act is highly unusual or extraordinary and hence not reasonably foreseeable (Cline v. Watkins (1977) 66 Cal. App. 3d 174, 178, 135 Cal. Rptr. 838).

B. Failure to Prevent Harm Is Not Superseding Cause. A third person's failure to perform his or her duty to protect the plaintiff from harm, because he or she either makes no effort or through his or her negligence does not succeed, is not a superseding cause that cuts off the defendant's liability for negligently causing the harm (Stewart v. Cox (1961) 55 Cal. 2d 857, 864, 13 Cal. Rptr. 521, 362 P.2d 345).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that the intervening conduct of a third party in failing to prevent harm to the plaintiff did not supersede the defendant's original negligence [see Cline v. Watkins (1977) 66 Cal. App. 3d 174, 178, 135 Cal. Rptr. 838] . It should be combined with any of the forms in §§ 165.300 -165.303 that are applicable to the particular case.

This argument may arise, for example, in opposing a demurrer in an action for damages for negligence [see, e.g., Cline v. Watkins (1977) 66 Cal. App. 3d 174, 176, 135 Cal. Rptr. 838 (demurrer)].

This form should be used only if the originally negligent defendant's conduct will, in and of itself, cause the plaintiff's injury or death unless successful protective action is taken by the intervening third party [see Fish v. Los Angeles Dodgers Baseball Club (1976) 56 Cal. App. 3d 620, 636, 128 Cal. Rptr. 807 (discussed in § 165.304[4])]. If the originally negligent defendant's conduct is not sufficient in and of itself to produce the plaintiff's injury and the intervening conduct of the third party is the "immediate cause" of the injury, counsel should use the points and authorities in §§ 165.300 -165.303 [see Fish v. Los Angeles Dodgers Baseball Club (1976) 56 Cal. App. 3d 620, 636, 128 Cal. Rptr. 807] .

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel may first show that the plaintiff's injury was reasonably foreseeable by the defendant [see Cline v. Watkins (1977) 66 Cal. App. 3d 174, 178, 135 Cal. Rptr. 838] . Counsel may then argue that the third party's failure to prevent harm to the plaintiff was not a superseding cause that would prevent the originally negligent defendant from being held liable for the plaintiff's injuries [see Stewart v. Cox (1961) 55 Cal. 2d 857, 864, 13 Cal. Rptr. 521, 362 P.2d 345 ; see also Fish v. Los Angeles Dodgers Baseball Club (1976) 56 Cal. App. 3d 620, 636, 128 Cal. Rptr. 807] .

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For related legal background, research and procedural guides, and forms of complaint for negligence, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For additional points and authorities to combine with this form, see §§ 165.300 -165.303. For points and authorities supporting and opposing demurrers, see Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities in §§ 165.320 -165.323 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose the points and authorities in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Risk of Injury Was Reasonably Foreseeable

In Cline v. Watkins (1977) 66 Cal. App. 3d 174, 135 Cal. Rptr. 838 , the plaintiff brought a negligence action against her two attorneys, alleging that her second counsel negligently failed to cure the results of her first counsel's negligence. The trial court granted the first attorney's demurrer to the complaint and subsequently dismissed the action against him. The plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed the judgment with regard to the first attorney, finding that the issue must be decided on the basis of the reasonable foreseeability of the second lawyer's failure. Because foreseeability in this context is a question of fact, the issue should be determined by the trier of fact (66 Cal. App. 3d 174, 176-180) . The court explained that if the risk of injury is reasonably foreseeable, the defendant is generally liable. An independent intervening act is a superseding cause that relieves the actor of liability for his or her negligence only if the intervening act is highly unusual or extraordinary and hence not reasonably foreseeable. Reasonable foreseeability is a question for the trier of fact. The issue of the actor's responsibility for negligence is a question of law (66 Cal. App. 3d 174, 178) . Quoting the Restatement (Second) of Torts § 452(1), approved in Fish v. Los Angeles Dodgers Baseball Club (1976) 56 Cal. App. 3d 620, 635-636, 128 Cal. Rptr. 807 , the court stated that the failure of a third person to act to prevent harm to another threatened by the actor's negligent conduct is not a superseding cause of the harm. Quoting Restatement (Second) of Torts § 452(2), the court stated that the Restatement (Second) of Torts § 452(1) applies unless, because of the lapse of time or otherwise, the duty to prevent harm to another threatened by the actor's negligent conduct shifts from the actor to a third person. In that case, the failure of the third person to prevent the harm is a superseding cause. Although a third person negligently fails to discharge a duty to take affirmative action that would have prevented the harm, under Restatement (Second) of Torts § 452(1), the originally negligent actor generally remains liable if the third person's conduct is reasonably foreseeable. Restatement (Second) of Torts § 452(2) applies only in exceptional circumstances to relieve the original actor of the forseeable consequences of his or her acts. In these exceptional circumstances, the duty and hence entire responsibility shifts from the original actor to the third person. The court added that the responsibility may be shifted by agreement between the actor and the third person. In the absence of an agreement, the circumstances must be such that the court finds that all duty and responsibility for the prevention of the harm has passed to the third person (66 Cal. App. 3d 174, 179) .

In this case, the court of appeal noted that the trial court treated the first attorney as absolved from liability as a matter of law because of the second attorney's failure to prevent the harm ordinarily flowing from the first attorney's negligence from occurring. The court of appeal stated that it needed to determine whether or not Restatement (Second) of Torts § 452(2) applied in this case (66 Cal. App. 3d 174, 179) . In light of public policy, the court held that a negligent attorney should not be relieved of liability because he or she is replaced by another attorney. Thus, the issue of proximate causation of the damage flowing from the first attorney's negligence is one of foreseeability to be determined by the trier of fact and not on demurrer (66 Cal. App. 3d 174, 180) .

[b] Failure to Prevent Harm Is Not Superseding Cause

In Stewart v. Cox (1961) 55 Cal. 2d 857, 13 Cal. Rptr. 521, 362 P.2d 345 , the plaintiffs brought an action for damages to their real property resulting from the escape of water from a swimming pool constructed on their property. The plaintiffs settled prior to trial with the general contractor, Wahlstrom, and the plastering company. The action proceeded against the defendant Cox, the subcontractor who installed the pool's concrete. Cox unsuccessfully attempted to repair a crack in the swimming pool. However, when the pool was again filled with water the crack widened and other cracks appeared. Water leaked from the pool, damaging the plaintiffs' house and yard. The plaintiffs recovered against the defendant Cox, who appealed.

The Supreme Court affirmed. Cox contended that Wahlstrom's conduct after the crack in the pool was discovered constituted a superseding cause that prevented Cox from being liable. Cox also asserted that Wahlstrom had actual knowledge for a period of over two months that the pool had cracked and was leaking, resulting in a dangerous quantity of water going into the ground. He also asserted that Walhstrom undertook the repair of the pool without informing Cox of the defects, but negligently failed to make effective repairs or prevent refilling of the pool (55 Cal. 2d 857, 863) . The Court stated that an intervening act of a third person performed in a negligent manner does not constitute a superseding cause if a reasonable person, knowing the situation exists when the act of the third person is performed, would not regard it as highly extraordinary that the third person so acted, or if the act is a normal response to a situation created by the defendant's conduct and the manner in which the intervening act is performed is not extraordinarily negligent. TA third person's failure to perform his or her duty to protect the plaintiff from harm, because he or she either makes no effort or through his or her negligence does not succeed, is not a superseding cause. In this case, although the evidence may point to the negligence of Wahlstrom, the record did not establish that Wahlstrom actually knew that the condition was dangerous. The negligence of Wahlstrom consisted of his failure to perform his duty to the plaintiffs to protect them from the harm threatened by the negligence of Cox. Wahlstrom's conduct was not, as a matter of law, highly extraordinary. Thus, Wahlstrom's conduct did not constitute a superseding cause. The trial court's finding that the plaintiffs were damaged as a direct and proximate result of Cox's negligence must therefore be upheld (55 Cal. 2d 857, 864) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Failure to Prevent Harm Is Not Superseding Cause

In Springmeyer v. Ford Motor Co. (1998) 60 Cal. App. 4th 1541, 71 Cal. Rptr. 2d 190 , a mechanic was working on the engine of a Ford truck when a fan blade broke off and struck him in the shoulder, severing his right arm from his body. The fan involved in the accident was installed as part of the engine cooling system in Ford trucks from 1963 to 1977, including the truck the plaintiff was repairing when he was injured. Ford became aware of the problem with the fan blades and attempted to remedy the problem by changing the design. When those changes failed to eliminate the problem, Ford decided to recall the affected trucks. The truck involved in the accident was originally purchased by Avis Rent-A-Car, and was subject to the fan blade recall campaign. However, the truck was sold by Avis to the plaintiff's employer in 1979, without the fan blade replacement. The mechanic sued the manufacturer of the fan and the manufacturer of the truck for damages based on strict product liability for defective design. He also sued Avis for negligent failure to have the fan replaced in response to a manufacturer's recall of these fans. A jury found for the plaintiff and apportioned 20 percent of the fault to Avis.

Avis appealed, contending that even if it negligently failed to repair the truck, Ford's failure to follow up on the fan recall after 1982 was a superseding cause of the accident. Avis reasoned that because recalls continue indefinitely and Ford knew that the truck had not been repaired, it had a continuing duty to follow up on the recall for this truck; that it breached that duty by failing to mail further notices to the plaintiff's employer after 1982; and that this breach of duty was a superseding cause of the accident. The court of appeal rejected this argument. It was not apparent to the court that Ford was negligent in failing to furnish further follow up recall notices for the truck. To the contrary, the evidence indicated that Ford had made reasonable efforts to recall the fan. In addition to the original recall notice to Avis, it mailed two follow-up notices to the plaintiff's employer. Therefore, the court had no basis to conclude as a matter of law that Ford's failure to mail more notices was such an exceptional circumstances as to constitute a superseding cause of the accident (60 Cal. App. 4th 1541, 1567) .

In Fish v. Los Angeles Dodgers Baseball Club (1976) 56 Cal. App. 3d 620, 128 Cal. Rptr. 807 , the plaintiff's decedent was negligently diagnosed and treated by the defendant doctor at a baseball park first-aid station after decedent had been struck in the head by a baseball. After this treatment, decedent was taken to a hospital where he was also negligently treated. In reversing judgment as to the defendant doctor who was originally negligent with regard to the hospital that subsequently treated the decedent, the court of appeal noted that the fact that a third person does not perform his or her duty to protect the plaintiff from harm, because he or she either makes no effort or through his or her negligence does not succeed, does not constitute a superseding cause (56 Cal. App. 3d 620, 637-638) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
C. Causation
3. Intervening and Superseding Acts

16-165 California Points & Authorities §§ 165.305-165.319

[Reserved]

§§ 165.305[Reserved]

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
C. Causation
3. Intervening and Superseding Acts

16-165 California Points & Authorities § 165.320

§ 165.320 Defendant Is Not Liable Because Intervening Act Broke Chain of Causation

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT IS NOT LIABLE FOR HIS/HER/ITS NEGLIGENCE BECAUSE AN INTERVENING ACT BROKE THE CHAIN OF CAUSATION FROM THE DEFENDANT'S ORIGINAL ACT.

Intervening Act Broke Chain of Causation. An intervening cause that breaks the chain of causation from the original negligent act is itself regarded as the proximate cause of the injury, and relieves the original negligent actor of liability (Schrimscher v. Bryson (1976) 58 Cal. App. 3d 660, 664, 130 Cal. Rptr. 125).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that intervening acts of a third party relieve the defendant from liability [see Schrimscher v. Bryson (1976) 58 Cal. App. 3d 660, 664, 130 Cal. Rptr. 125] . It should be combined with any of the forms in §§ 165.321 -165.323 that are applicable to the particular case.

This form should be used by an originally negligent defendant to contend that the intervening third party's acts and the harm caused were unforeseeable, and that the defendant should therefore not be held liable for the harm caused by the third party's acts. This argument may arise in several procedural contexts. For example, the defendant may raise the points in this form in support of a demurrer to the complaint, or a motion for summary judgment or nonsuit [see, e.g., Kane v. Hartford Accident & Indem. Co. (1979) 98 Cal. App. 3d 350, 360, 159 Cal. Rptr. 446 (nonsuit); see also Schrimscher v. Bryson (1976) 58 Cal. App. 3d 660, 664, 130 Cal. Rptr. 125 (summary judgment)].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel may discuss facts surrounding the chain of causation, and show that the third party's acts broke the chain [see Schrimscher v. Bryson (1976) 58 Cal. App. 3d 660, 664, 130 Cal. Rptr. 125] .

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For related legal background, research and procedural guides, and forms of answer to a cause of action for negligence, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For additional points and authorities to combine with this form, see §§ 165.321 -165.323. For points and authorities supporting and opposing demurrers, see Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities in §§ 165.300 -165.304 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose the points and authorities in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Intervening Act Broke Chain of Causation

In Schrimscher v. Bryson (1976) 58 Cal. App. 3d 660, 130 Cal. Rptr. 125 , a highway patrol officer brought an action to recover for personal injuries suffered when he was struck by an automobile. The plaintiff had spotted the defendant's damaged car on the shoulder of the road and stopped to investigate the collision of that car with another vehicle. The defendant, who was intoxicated, was handcuffed and placed into the back seat of the highway patrol car. A car driven by an intoxicated third party, Shelton, suddenly veered off the freeway, striking the defendant's car. As a result of this impact, the defendant's car was knocked into the plaintiff, injuring him severely. The trial court granted the defendant's motion for summary judgment, concluding as a matter of law that because the defendant had been physically removed from the scene and handcuffed, his previous negligence could not be a proximate cause of the plaintiff's injuries. The plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. It noted that the direct and efficient cause of the plaintiff's injury was the action of Shelton in negligently driving his car into the defendant's vehicle (58 Cal. App. 3d 660, 663-664) . The court disagreed with the plaintiff's contention that the defendant's antecedent negligence caused the plaintiff to be in the situation that exposed him to the peril of Shelton's action, and that the defendant's negligence was thus also a cause of his injuries (58 Cal. App. 3d 660, 663-664) . The court stated that an intervening cause that breaks the chain of causation from the original negligent act is itself regarded as the proximate cause of the injury and relieves the original negligent actor of liability. Generally, the determination of whether the intervening act is foreseeable is a question of fact unless under the undisputed facts there is no room for a reasonable difference of opinion. The court concluded that under the undisputed facts here, there can be no reasonable difference of opinion as to the foreseeability of the intervening act. The action of Shelton could not reasonably have been anticipated by the defendant at the time of his original negligence; as a matter of law the chain of causation was broken. The court added that liability cannot be predicated on a prior or remote cause that merely furnishes the condition or occasion for an injury resulting from an intervening unrelated and efficient cause, even though the injury would not have resulted but for such condition or occasion (58 Cal. App. 3d 660, 664) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Intervening Act Broke Chain of Causation

In Custodio v. Bauer (1967) 251 Cal. App. 2d 303, 59 Cal. Rptr. 463 , the plaintiff brought an action to recover damages resulting from her pregnancy following a sterilization operation. The court of appeal reversed the judgment of dismissal entered on an order sustaining the defendant's demurrer without leave to amend. It stated, however, that the general test of whether an independent intervening act, which actively operates to produce an injury, breaks the chain of causation is whether the intervening act is foreseeable. In this action, the court found that sexual activity between the plaintiffs with the resulting pregnancy could not be considered unforeseeable (251 Cal. App. 2d 303, 316-317) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
C. Causation
3. Intervening and Superseding Acts

16-165 California Points & Authorities § 165.321

§ 165.321 Intervening Act of Third Person Was Not Foreseeable

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT IS NOT LIABLE FOR HIS/HER/ITS NEGLIGENCE BECAUSE THE INTERVENING ACT OF _____ [specify third party] WAS NOT FORESEEABLE.

A. Intervening Act of Third Person Was Not Foreseeable. The general test of whether an independent intervening act that operates to produce an injury breaks the chain of causation is whether the act is foreseeable. An act is not foreseeable and thus is a superseding cause of the injury if the independent intervening act is highly unusual or extraordinary and not reasonably likely to happen (Schrimscher v. Bryson (1976) 58 Cal. App. 3d 660, 664, 130 Cal. Rptr. 125).

B. Two-Fold Test of Foreseeability. If it is determined that the intervening cause of independent origin was not foreseeable and that the results that it caused were not foreseeable, then the intervening cause becomes a supervening cause and the defendant is relieved from liability for the plaintiff's injuries (Hoyem v. Manhattan Beach City Sch. Dist. (1978) 22 Cal. 3d 508, 521, 150 Cal. Rptr. 1, 585 P.2d 851 ; Pappert v. San Diego Gas & Elec. Co. (1982) 137 Cal. App. 3d 205, 210, 186 Cal. Rptr. 847).

C. Foreseeability Is Question for Trier of Fact. [See § 165.301, Paragraph B.]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that the intervening acts of a third party relieved the defendant from liability in that the intervening act was not reasonably foreseeable [see Schrimscher v.

Bryson (1976) 58 Cal. App. 3d 660, 664, 130 Cal. Rptr. 125] . It should be combined with any of the forms in § 165.320 and §§ 165.322 -165.323 that are applicable to the particular case.

This form should be used by an originally negligent defendant to contend that the intervening third party's acts and the harm caused thereby were unforeseeable, and that the defendant should therefore not be held liable for the harm caused by the third party's acts. This argument may arise in several procedural contexts. For example, the defendant may raise the points in this form in support of a demurrer to the complaint, or a motion for summary judgment or nonsuit [see, e.g., Kane v. Hartford Accident & Indem. Co. (1979) 98 Cal. App. 3d 350, 360, 159 Cal. Rptr. 446 (nonsuit); see also Schrimscher v. Bryson (1976) 58 Cal. App. 3d 660, 664, 130 Cal. Rptr. 125 (summary judgment)].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel may argue that the third party's acts were not foreseeable by the originally negligent defendant because the third party's acts were highly unusual or extraordinary [see Schrimscher v. Bryson (1976) 58 Cal. App. 3d 660, 664, 130 Cal. Rptr. 125] . In addition, counsel should show how the injuries suffered by the plaintiff were also unforeseeable by the defendant [see Pappert v. San Diego Gas & Elec. Co. (1982) 137 Cal. App. 3d 205, 210, 186 Cal. Rptr. 847] . Counsel should then argue that the originally negligent defendant should not therefore be held liable for the injuries caused by the third party's actions.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For related legal background, research and procedural guides, and forms of answer to a cause of action for negligence, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For additional points and authorities to combine with this form, see § 165.320 and §§ 165.322 -165.323. For points and authorities supporting and opposing demurrers, see Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities in §§ 165.300 -165.304 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose the points and authorities in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Intervening Act of Third Person Was Not Foreseeable

The factual and procedural background of Schrimscher v. Bryson (1976) 58 Cal. App. 3d 660, 130 Cal. Rptr. 125 , is discussed in § 165.320[3][a]. The court of appeal affirmed summary judgment in favor of the defendant, finding that the acts of the third party were not reasonably foreseeable by the defendant at the time of his initial negligence and that, as a matter of law, the chain of causation was broken. The court explained that the general test of whether an independent intervening act that operates to produce an injury breaks the chain of causation is whether the act is foreseeable. An act is not foreseeable and thus is a superseding cause of the injury if the independent intervening act is highly unusual or extraordinary and not reasonably likely to happen (58 Cal. App. 3d 660, 664) .

[b] Two-Fold Test of Foreseeability

The factual and procedural background of Hoyem v. Manhattan Beach City Sch. Dist. (1978) 22 Cal. 3d 508, 150 Cal. Rptr. 1, 585 P.2d 851 , is discussed in § 165.300[3][a]. Quoting Akins v. County of Sonoma (1967) 67 Cal. 2d 185, 199, 60 Cal. Rptr. 499, 430 P.2d 57 , the Court explained that when an injury was brought about by a later cause of independent origin, the question of proximate cause depends on a determination of whether the later cause of independent origin, or intervening cause, was foreseeable by the defendant or, if not foreseeable, whether it caused injury of a type that was foreseeable. If either of these questions is answered in the affirmative, then the defendant is not relieved of liability towards the plaintiff. If, however, it is determined that the intervening cause was not foreseeable and that the results that it caused were not foreseeable, the intervening cause becomes a supervening cause and the defendant is relieved from liability for the plaintiff's injuries (67 Cal. 2d 185) . The Court could not state that the sons departure from school was unforeseeable as a matter of law (67 Cal. 2d 185) . In addition, the fact that another student's misconduct was the immediate precipitating cause of the injury did not compel a conclusion that negligent supervision was not the proximate cause of the plaintiff's injuries. The Court could not state that the risk of a student's injury at the hands of a negligent motorist was not, as a matter of law, a foreseeable risk created by the school district's failure to exercise due care in supervising its pupils (67 Cal. 2d 185) .

The factual and procedural background of Pappert v. San Diego Gas & Elec. Co. (1982) 137 Cal. App. 3d 205, 186 Cal. Rptr. 847 , is discussed in § 165.300[3][b]. Although the court in Pappert concluded that the decedent's conduct did not constitute a superseding cause as a matter of law, it discussed the law concerning superseding causes. The court explained that the foreseeability test is two-fold, relating to both the act and the nature of the harm suffered. When an injury was brought about by a later cause of independent origin, the question of proximate cause depends on a determination of whether the later cause of independent origin, commonly referred to as an intervening cause, was foreseeable by the defendant or, if not foreseeable, whether it caused injury of a type that was foreseeable. If either of these questions is answered in the affirmative, then the defendant is not relieved of liability to the plaintiff. If, however, it is determined that the intervening cause was not foreseeable and that the results that it caused were not foreseeable, then the intervening cause becomes a supervening cause, and the defendant is relieved of liability for the plaintiff's injuries (137 Cal. App. 3d 205, 210) . The court noted that the instructions given to the jury by the lower court were fatally defective because they ignored the question of foreseeability of the risk of harm. Thus, the instructions created a reasonable probability that a more favorable result to the plaintiffs would have been reached in the absence of the error. The court found that the injury sustained, death by electrocution, was precisely and directly the result to be expected when a person trimming a tree on his residential property is exposed to the charge from an uninsulated 12,000 volt power line. Since the facts in the record indisputably showed that decedent was within the class of persons exposed to danger when the power company deliberately permitted its uninsulated power line o remain in the proximity of the tree, the court of appeal held that there was no factual issue on superseding cause for jury consideration, and the trial court erred in presenting this issue to the jury (137 Cal. App. 3d 205, 211) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Intervening Act of Third Person Was Not Foreseeable

In Martinez v. Vintage Petroleum, Inc. (1998) 68 Cal. App. 4th 695, 80 Cal. Rptr. 2d 449 , the employee of an independent contractor hired to work in an oil field, was injured by a fragment of a gas pipe that exploded when coworkers cut into the pipe with a torch. The plaintiff sued the operator of the oil field for negligence. At trial, the jury found that, although the defendant was negligent, the superseding negligence of the plaintiff's co-workers relieved the defendant of liability for the injury. The plaintiff appealed, arguing in part that because the harm that occurred was foreseeable, an instruction on superseding cause was not warranted. The court of appeal affirmed. The court reaffirmed the established rule that intervening negligence can relieve a party from liability for earlier negligent conduct, even when the type of injury is foreseeable, if the intervening negligence is highly extraordinary. The court held that the intervening action of the plaintiff's co-workers in using a torch to cut a gas pipe that may have contained pressurized gas was extraordinarily negligent and dangerous (68 Cal. App. 4th 695, 700-701).

In Bryant v. Glastetter (1995) 32 Cal. App. 4th 770, 38 Cal. Rptr. 2d 291 , the family of a tow truck driver brought a wrongful death action against the driver of a car that the tow truck driver was attempting to remove from a freeway when he was struck and killed by a third party. The defendant had been arrested for driving under the influence of alcohol; Highway Patrol Officers had called decedent to tow away the defendant's vehicle. The complaint alleged that the defendant had a duty to avoid driving under the influence of alcohol, and that she should have known that driving under the influence of alcohol could lead to her arrest and affect the safety of others at the scene of the traffic stop. The defendant filed a demurrer, arguing that her conduct was not a proximate cause of decedent's death. The trial court sustained the demurrer, stating that no actionable duty had been alleged; the court of appeal affirmed. The court reasoned that the harm suffered by decedent was not a harm of the kind normally to be expected as a consequence of negligent driving, such as a collision involving the defendant. Furthermore, the court stated that even without being intoxicated, the defendant might well have been positioned at the side of the road needing a tow truck (32 Cal. App. 4th 770, 779) . Thus, while granting that the defendant might have foreseen that her consumption of alcohol would result in her being stopped by the side of the road, the court declined to hold that the defendant should have foreseen that her consumption of alcohol would result in the harm actually suffered by decedent (32 Cal. App. 4th 770, 780) .

The factual and procedural background of Kane v. Hartford Accident & Indemn. Co. (1979) 98 Cal. App. 3d 350, 159 Cal. Rptr. 446 , is discussed in § 165.322[3][a]. In Kane, the court of appeal affirmed a judgment of nonsuit in favor of the insurer, finding that the intervening criminal act of the janitor was not foreseeable at the time it bonded him (98 Cal. App. 3d 350, 360) . The court of appeal noted that if the defendant insurer had investigated the background of the janitor, it would have found out that he had an extensive record of property-related crimes. An investigation would therefore only have put the insurer on notice that the janitor might foreseeably revert to his propensity for committing property-related crimes (98 Cal. App. 3d 350, 361) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
C. Causation
3. Intervening and Superseding Acts

16-165 California Points & Authorities § 165.322

§ 165.322 Defendant Is Not Liable Because Superseding Criminal Act Was Cause of Plaintiff's Injuries

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT IS NOT LIABLE FOR HIS/HER/ITS NEGLIGENCE BECAUSE A SUPERSEDING CRIMINAL ACT CAUSED PLAINTIFF'S INJURIES.

Unforeseeable Criminal Acts Are Superseding Causes. A criminal act will be deemed a superseding cause unless it involves a particular and foreseeable hazard inflicted on a member of a foreseeable class (Kane v. Hartford Accident & Indem. Co. (1979) 98 Cal. App. 3d 350, 360, 159 Cal. Rptr. 446).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that the defendant is not liable for his or her conduct with respect to the plaintiff because a criminal act was the superseding cause [see Kane v. Hartford Accident & Indem. Co. (1979) 98 Cal. App. 3d 350, 360, 159 Cal. Rptr. 446] . It should be combined with any of the forms in §§ 165.320 -165.321 and § 165.323 that are applicable to the particular case.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel may describe the criminal act that occurred subsequent to the defendant's conduct, and argue that the criminal conduct was unforeseeable, and was that the plaintiff was in an foreseeable class of victims.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For related legal background, research and procedural guides, and forms of answer to a cause of action for negligence, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For additional points and authorities to combine with this form, see §§ 165.320 -165.321 and § 165.323. For points and authorities supporting and opposing demurrers, see Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities in §§ 165.300 -165.304 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose the points and authorities in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Unforeseeable Criminal Acts Are Superseding Causes

In Kane v. Hartford Accident & Indem. Co. (1979) 98 Cal. App. 3d 350, 159 Cal. Rptr. 446 , the plaintiff was raped on hospital grounds by an employee (Williams) of Certified Janitorial and Window Cleaning Company (Certified), an independent contractor that provided cleaning services for the hospital. The action proceeded to trial against Hartford Accident and Indemnity Company (Hartford), which bonded the employees of the independent contractor. Hartford subjected all applicants for bonds to a background investigation of the matters and representations stated in the application. Hartford's procedure was not to hire persons with criminal histories. Certified relied on Hartford's checks to reveal evidence of questionable activities. Because of the costs of these checks, however, Hartford discontinued the checks without notice to Certified. Williams' application for bonding was granted by Hartford without any investigation. If Hartford had investigated, it would have found that Williams had an extensive criminal record of property-related crimes. The trial court granted the defendant Hartford's motion for nonsuit. The plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. In examining policy considerations in order to determine if the defendant owed a duty to the plaintiff, the court stated that foreseeability of the risk was of primary importance (98 Cal. App. 3d 350, 355) . In this case, Hartford had no reason to suspect that Williams represented a latent threat of physical harm to anyone. Even if it had investigated Williams's past, Hartford would have discovered that the foreseeable risk, if any, was for property-related crimes (98 Cal. App. 3d 350, 357) . With respect to the issue of proximate cause, the next issue is whether or not the original act of negligence is a proximate cause when the injury directly results from the intervening act of another, which act is not reasonably anticipated by the first party as likely to occur and result from his or her own act (98 Cal. App. 3d 350, 359) . A criminal act of another party is foremost among these intervening superseding forces that negate the original act of negligence. The common law rule that an intervening criminal act is, by its very nature, a superseding cause has lost its universal application and its dogmatic rigidity. A third person's commission of an intentional tort or crime is a superseding cause, even though the actor's initial negligent conduct created the situation that afforded that opportunity. This is so unless the actor at the time of his negligent conduct realized or should have realized that such a situation might likely be created, and that a third person might avail himself of the opportunity to commit a tort or crime. California decisions have established that a criminal act will be deemed a superseding cause unless it involves a particular and foreseeable hazard inflicted on a member of a foreseeable class (98 Cal. App. 3d 350, 360) .

In this case, the defendant Hartford contended that the hazard encountered by the plaintiff, the rape by an employee of Certified, was not foreseeable at the time it bonded Williams. The plaintiff contended that Williams's act was foreseeable and thus not a superseding cause (98 Cal. App. 3d 350, 360) . The court, however, agreed with the defendant. It stated that when the actor's conduct creates a situation that is utilized by another or provides a temptation to do so to which the third person yields, but the actor has no reason to expect that the third person would so act, the actor is not responsible for the harm thus inflicted merely because the situation that his or her negligence has created has afforded an opportunity or temptation for its infliction (98 Cal. App. 3d 350, 360-361) . The court found that Hartford did not have actual possession of information that would make the risk encountered reasonably foreseeable. In addition, even if the defendant had discovered Williams's past activities, it would be put on notice only that Williams might foreseeably revert to his propensity for committing property-related crimes. It would not have indicated that a violent criminal act directed against the person of an unforeseeable the plaintiff was either contemplated or impending (98 Cal. App. 3d 350, 361) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
C. Causation
3. Intervening and Superseding Acts

16-165 California Points & Authorities § 165.323

§ 165.323 Defendant Is Not Liable Because Plaintiff's Injuries Were Result of Unanticipated and Unusual Natural Event

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT IS NOT LIABLE FOR NEGLIGENCE BECAUSE THE SOLE CAUSE OF PLAINTIFF'S INJURY WAS A NATURAL EVENT THAT WAS SO UNUSUAL IN ITS PROPORTIONS THAT IT COULD NOT HAVE BEEN ANTICIPATED BY DEFENDANT.

Plaintiff's Injuries Caused by "Act of God." A defendant is not liable for an injury suffered by the plaintiff that was caused solely by an "act of God" if: (1) an unanticipated natural occurrence was the sole cause of a plaintiff's injury or damage; (2) the natural event was so unusual in its proportions that it could not be anticipated by a defendant; and (3) human agency did not participate in proximately causing the harm (Mancuso v. Southern Cal. Edison Co. (1991) 232 Cal. App. 3d 88, 103-104, 283 Cal. Rptr. 300).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that the defendant is not liable for injury caused by a foreseeable natural occurrence, based on the fact that there was nothing the defendant could have done to prevent or lessen the harm to the plaintiff [see Mancuso v. Southern Cal. Edison Co. (1991) 232 Cal. App. 3d 88, 104, 283 Cal. Rptr. 300] . This form should be combined with any of the forms in §§ 165.320 -165.322 that are applicable to the particular case.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel may explain why the natural event in question was unusual and not reasonably anticipated [see Mancuso v. Southern Cal. Edison Co. (1991) 232 Cal. App. 3d 88, 103, 283 Cal. Rptr. 300] .

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For related legal background, research and procedural guides, and forms of answer to a cause of action for negligence, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For additional points and authorities to combine with this form, see §§ 165.320 -165.322. For points and authorities supporting and opposing demurrers, see Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities in §§ 165.300 -165.304 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose the points and authorities in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Plaintiff's Injuries Caused by "Act of God"

In Mancuso v. Southern Cal. Edison Co. (1991) 232 Cal. App. 3d 88, 283 Cal. Rptr. 300 , an electricity user sued an electric utility company for negligence and strict products liability, among other theories. The plaintiff's business facilities were destroyed by a fire that resulted from an explosion caused by electricity generated by lightning that struck an adjacent power pole and traversed to the plaintiff's building along the defendant's wires. After denying the defendant the opportunity to present any evidence on the "act of God" defense, the trial court determined that the utility was liable to the plaintiff, as a matter of law, on a product liability theory. It granted the plaintiff's motion for summary adjudication of that issue. The plaintiff then dismissed the negligence cause of action. At trial, the jury awarded the plaintiff damages; the trial court entered judgment in the plaintiff's favor. The defendant appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. It also remanded the matter to the trial court with directions to reinstate the plaintiff's cause of action for negligence and to conduct further proceedings. Because electricity generated by lightning is not a "product," the court held that the defendant could not be liable under the doctrine of strict product liability. It may be liable for negligence, however, if a defect in its transmission facilities allowed nongenerated electricity to reach the plaintiff's facilities (232 Cal. App. 3d 88, 101-103) .

In view of its decision to reinstate the negligence cause of action and remand for further proceedings, the court considered the issue of whether the "act of God" defense could apply. The court observed that the expert testimonial evidence, if believed, would have supported a finding that the lightning stroke was so powerful that it would have caused the plaintiff's damages irrespective of the defendant's ability to anticipate an electrical storm or to install lightning arrester gear. In other words, the defendant was arguing that no act or omission of the defendant was the proximate cause of the plaintiff's damage (232 Cal. App. 3d 88, 103) . In the court's view, the case presented a classic example of the overlap that exists between an "act of God" defense and the issue of causation (232 Cal. App. 3d 88, 103) . The defense that an event was an "act of God" may be asserted in those limited cases in which an unanticipated natural occurrence is the sole cause of a plaintiff's injury or damage. The natural event must be so unusual in its proportions that it could not be anticipated by a defendant (232 Cal. App. 3d 88, 103-104) . It is not enough, however, that the event merely be unforeseeable. The exculpatory rule applies only if human agency does not participate in proximately causing the harm. If a defendant's negligence combines with an "act of God" to cause injury, liability will result (232 Cal. App. 3d 88, 104) . The court concluded that it was error for the trial court summarily to dismiss the defensive claim merely because electrical storms are foreseeable. The ruling deprived the defendant of the opportunity to dispute the issue of whether or not any act or omission on its part was a proximate cause of the plaintiff's damage (232 Cal. App. 3d 88, 105) . It should be noted that Mancuso, in stating that the defense that an event was an "act of God" exists, also acknowledged the viewpoint that the defenses of unavoidable accident and, implicitly, "act of God," have no place in modrn pleading and practice, because they are in reality nothing more than the denial by a defendant of culpable conduct proximately causing a plaintiff's injury or damage [see Mancuso v. Southern Cal. Edison Co. (1991) 232 Cal. App. 3d 88, 103 n.18, 283 Cal. Rptr. 300 (citing Butigan v. Yellow Cab Co. (1958) 49 Cal. 2d 652, 658-660, 320 P.2d 500)].

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
C. Causation
3. Intervening and Superseding Acts

16-165 California Points & Authorities §§ 165.324-165.329

[Reserved]

§§ 165.324[Reserved]

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
C. Causation
4. Unidentified Causation

16-165 California Points & Authorities § 165.330

§ 165.330 Defendant Has Burden to Prove Defendant's Conduct Was Not Proximate Cause of Plaintiff's Injury

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

BECAUSE PLAINTIFF HAS BROUGHT TWO OR MORE CONCURRENTLY NEGLIGENT DEFENDANTS BEFORE THE COURT, ALL OF WHOM WERE NEGLIGENT, BUT ONLY ONE OF WHOM COULD HAVE BEEN THE PROXIMATE CAUSE OF PLAINTIFF'S INJURY, AS A MATTER OF PUBLIC POLICY THE BURDEN OF PROOF SHOULD BE SHIFTED TO EACH DEFENDANT TO PROVE THAT DEFENDANT'S NEGLIGENCE WAS NOT THE PROXIMATE CAUSE OF THE INJURY. [MOREOVER, DEFENDANT'S FAILURE TO COMPLY WITH A _____ (STATUTE and/or ORDINANCE and/or ADMINISTRATIVE REGULATION) HAS DEPRIVED PLAINTIFF OF A MEANS OF ESTABLISHING THE CAUSE OF HIS/HER/ITS INJURY].

A. Concurrent Negligence but Single Unidentified Cause. If the injured plaintiff has brought two or more concurrently negligent defendants before the court, all of whom the plaintiff has proved were negligent, but only one of whom could have been the proximate cause of the plaintiff's injury, the burden of proof shifts, as a matter of public policy, to each defendant to prove that his or her negligence was not the proximate cause of the injury (see Summers v. Tice (1948) 33 Cal. 2d 80, 86, 199 P.2d 1 ; see also Sindell v. Abbott Labs. (1980) 26 Cal. 3d 588, 598-599, 163 Cal. Rptr. 132, 607 P.2d 924).

[Optional] B. Defendant's Statutory Violation Deprived Plaintiff of Means of Establishing Causation. If the defendant's failure to comply with a statute or safety regulation deprives the plaintiff of a means of establishing the cause of the injury, the burden of proof shifts to the defendant to negate causation (see Haft v. Lone Palm Hotel (1970) 3 Cal. 3d 756, 771-774, 91 Cal. Rptr. 745, 478 P.2d 465).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that the burden of proof should be shifted to each defendant to prove that he or she was not a proximate cause of the plaintiff's injury [see Summers v. Tice (1948) 33 Cal. 2d 80, 86, 199 P.2d 1] . This argument arises when the plaintiff has brought two or more concurrently negligent defendants before the court and only one of the defendants has actually caused the plaintiff's injuries. It may arise in several procedural contexts, including opposing a demurrer or on appeal from a judgment in an action for damages for negligence [see, e.g., Sindell v. Abbott Labs. (1980) 26 Cal. 3d 588, 598-599, 163 Cal. Rptr. 132, 607 P.2d 924 ; see also Summers v. Tice (1948) 33 Cal. 2d 80, 86, 199 P.2d 1 (appeal)].

Optional Paragraph B may be submitted to assert that the burden of proof should be shifted to each defendant because the defendant's violation of a statute, ordinance, or administrative regulation has deprived the plaintiff of a means of establishing the cause of his or her injury [see Haft v. Lone Palm Hotel (1970) 3 Cal. 3d 756, 771-774, 91 Cal. Rptr. 745, 478 P.2d 465 ; see also Evid. Code § 669(a)]. This argument may arise in several procedural contexts. For example, the plaintiff may invoke this argument when challenging the adequacy of jury instructions given at trial or when appealing from an adverse judgment in an action for damages for negligence [see, e.g., McGee v. Cessna Aircraft Co. (1983) 139 Cal. App. 3d 179, 182, 188 Cal. Rptr. 542 (jury instruction); see also Haft v. Lone Palm Hotel (1970) 3 Cal. 3d 756, 761, 91 Cal. Rptr. 745, 478 P.2d 465 (appeal); cf. Fagerquist v. Western Sun Aviation, Inc. (1987) 191 Cal. App. 3d 709, 723-726, 236 Cal. Rptr. 633 (facts did not support finding that the defendant's failure to comply prevented the plaintiff from proving causation)].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel may first argue that the defendants have been concurrently negligent, that is, that the defendants each owed and breached a duty to the plaintiff. Counsel should then argue that, as a matter of public policy, because the plaintiff cannot prove which of the defendants actually caused his or her injuries, the burden of proof should be shifted to the defendants to prove which of them were not responsible for the plaintiff's injury [see Summers v. Tice (1948) 33 Cal. 2d 80, 86, 199 P.2d 1] . If optional Paragraph B applies, counsel may also argue that the defendants have been presumptively negligent under the requirements set forth in Evid. Code § 669(a). To do this, counsel may desire to combine this form with the memorandum of points and authorities in § 165.70, which sets forth the law regarding duty created by statute, ordinance, or regulation pursuant to Evid. Code § 669(a). Counsel should then show that the defendant's violation of the statute, ordinance, or administrative regulation deprived the plaintiff of a means of establishing the cause of his or her injury and that the burden should therefore be shifted to the defendant to negate causation [see Haft v. Lone Palm Hotel (1970) 3 Cal. 3d 756, 771-774, 91 Cal. Rptr. 745, 478 P.2d 465] .

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For related legal background, research and procedural guides, and forms of complaint for negligence, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For points and authorities supporting and opposing demurrers, see Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings . For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Concurrent Negligence but Single Unidentified Cause

In Summers v. Tice (1948) 33 Cal. 2d 80, 199 P.2d 1 , the plaintiff brought an action against two the defendants for personal injuries suffered in a hunting accident. The defendants, with knowledge of the plaintiff's location, simultaneously fired their shotguns in the plaintiff's direction. The plaintiff was struck in the face and eye by bird shot. It appeared that the shots that caused the injury came from one gun only. Although only one defendant could have caused the injury, the trial court held that the negligence of both the defendants was the legal cause of the injury, or in other words, that both the defendants were responsible. Each the defendant appealed, contending that they were not joint tortfeasors, and thus not jointly and severally liable, because they were not acting in concert. In addition, they argued that there was insufficient evidence to show which the defendant was guilty of the negligence that caused the plaintiff's injuries.

The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that the lower court properly determined that the defendants were jointly liable and thus the negligence of both the defendants was the proximate cause of the injury (33 Cal. 2d 80, 84) . The Court noted that when two or more persons by their acts are possibly the sole cause of a harm, or when two or more acts of the same person are possibly the sole cause, and the plaintiff has introduced evidence that one of the two persons, or one of the same person's two acts is culpable, then the defendant has the burden of proving that the other person, or his or her other act was the sole cause of the harm (33 Cal. 2d 80, 85) . The Court stated that when it considered the relative position of the parties and the results that would flow if the plaintiff was required to attribute the injury to only one of the defendants, a requirement that the burden of proof on that subject be shifted to the defendants becomes manifest. The Court noted that both the defendants are wrongdoers and negligent toward the plaintiff. Because the defendants caused a situation in which the negligence of one of them injured the plaintiff, each of them should absolve himself if possible. The injured party has been placed by the defendants in the unfair position of determining which the defendant caused the harm. If one defendant can escape liability, the other the defendant may also escape liability, and then the plaintiff would be remediless. In addition, the defendants are ordinarily in a far better position to offer evidence to determine which one caused the injury (33 Cal. 2d 80, 86) . Furthermore, because of public policy reasons, each defendant is liable for the whole damage whether they are deemed to be acting in concert or independently (33 Cal. 2d 80, 87-88) .

NOTE:

The rule established in Summers v. Tice (1948) 33 Cal. 2d 80, 86, 199 P.2d 1 , applies whenever there are multiple tortfeasors, at least one of whom proximately caused the plaintiff's injury, regardless of whether all of the tortfeasors have been joined as the defendants. Thus, it may be proper to shift the burden of proof to a defendant to prove he or she was not negligent, even though the action has gone to trial with only one defendant, because the plaintiff has previously settled with the other joint tortfeasors [see Vahey v. Sacia (1981) 126 Cal. App. 3d 171, 177, 178 Cal. Rptr. 559] .

In Sindell v. Abbott Lab. (1980) 26 Cal. 3d 588, 163 Cal. Rptr. 132, 607 P.2d 924 , the plaintiff Judith Sindell brought an action against 11 drug companies and Does 1 through 100, on behalf of herself and other women similarly situated. The defendants were engaged in the business of manufacturing, promoting, and marketing diethylstilbestrol (DES), a drug that was administered to the plaintiff's mother for the purpose of preventing miscarriages. DES was later discovered to cause cancerous and precancerous growths in the daughters of the mothers who took it. As a result of DES ingested by her mother, the plaintiff developed a malignant bladder tumor. Although she could not identify the particular manufacturer that produced the DES taken by her mother, the plaintiff's complaint suggested three theories on which the defendants may be held liable for her injuries. One of theories presented, classically illustrated by Summers v. Tice (1948) 33 Cal. 2d 80, 85-86, 199 P.2d 1 , placed the burden of proof of causation on tortious the defendants in certain circumstances. The second theory was that the defendants acted "in concert" to cause her injury. The plaintiff's third theory was based on "industry-wide" liability, that is, that the industry-wide standard itself was the cause of the plaintiff's injury. The trial court dismissed the action after sustaining the defendants demurrers without leave to amend. The plaintiff appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed. Although it concluded that none of the plaintiff's suggested doctrines could be applied to hold the defendants liable, it proposed a fourth basis for permitting the action to be tried, based on an extension of the Summers doctrine (26 Cal. 3d 588, 598) . The Court stated that it was reasonable to measure the likelihood that any of the defendants supplied the product that allegedly injured the plaintiff by the percentage that the DES sold by each of them for the purpose of preventing miscarriage bears to the entire production of the drug sold by all for that purpose (26 Cal. 3d 588, 611-612) . The Court held that each defendant should be held liable for the proportion of the judgment represented by its share of that market unless it demonstrates that it could not have made the product that caused the plaintiff's injuries (26 Cal. 3d 588, 611-612) . In reaching this conclusion, the Court discussed Summers v. Tice (1948) 33 Cal. 2d 80, 199 P.2d 1 . The Summers doctrine, often referred to as the "alternative liability" theory, states that if a party cannot identify which of two or more the defendants caused an injury, then the burden of proof may shift to the defendants to show that they were not responsible for the harm caused (26 Cal. 3d 588, 598-599) . The Court concluded that the fact that the defendants did not have greater access to information that might establish the identity of the manufacturer did not per se prevent application of the Summers rule (26 Cal. 3d 588, 600-602) . The Court, however, found that the plaintiff could not prevail in her claim that the Summers rationale should govern, at least as the rationale had previously been applied. In Summers, all the parties who were or could have been responsible for the harm to the plaintiff were joined as the defendants. Here, by contrast, there were approximately 200 drug companies that made DES, any of which might have manufactured the injury-producing drug (26 Cal. 3d 588, 602) . Because the plaintiff only named five the defendants in her suit, the possibility that any of these five the defendants supplied DES to the plaintiff's mother was so remote that it would be unfair to require each defendant to exonerate itself (26 Cal. 3d 588, 603) . The Court, however, found forceful arguments in favor of holding that the plaintiff had a cause of action. The most persuasive of these arguments was that advanced in Summers, that is, between an innocent the plaintiff and negligent defendants, the defendants should bear the cost of the injury (26 Cal. 3d 588, 610-611) . In addition, if the plaintiff joins in her action the manufacturers of a substantial share of the DES that her mother might have taken, the injustice of shifting the burden of proof is significantly diminished. The manufacturers named by the plaintiff may in turn cross-complain against other nonjoined DES manufacturers that may have supplied the injury-causing product (26 Cal. 3d 588, 612) .

[b] Defendant's Statutory Violation Deprived Plaintiff of Means of Establishing Causation

The factual and procedural background of Haft v. Lone Palm Hotel (1970) 3 Cal. 3d 756, 91 Cal. Rptr. 745, 478 P.2d 465 , is discussed in § 165.70[3][b]. In that action, the Supreme Court noted that no direct evidence revealed the manner in which the drownings occurred. The Court found, however, that uncontroverted evidence established that while the defendants had furnished the lounging space, wading pool, and swimming pool, they failed to provide any safety measures required by law for pools available for the use of the public (3 Cal. 3d 756, 762-763) . Because the defendants had violated several statutes and administrative regulations regarding the maintenance of swimming pools, they were unquestionably negligent as a matter of law (3 Cal. 3d 756, 763) .

The Court found, however, that this proof of negligence alone did not automatically establish liability. The plaintiffs still bore the initial burden of showing that the defendants' negligence was a proximate cause of the deaths. The Court also stated that the breach of a statutory duty will often suffice to give rise to an inference from which a jury may find that a given injury was the actual or proximate result of the violation (3 Cal. 3d 756, 765) . The Court held that the plaintiffs, in proving the defendants' violation of the statutory lifeguard requirement, sustained their initial burden of proof on the issue of causation. The burden then shifted to the defendants to show that their violation was not a proximate cause of the deaths (3 Cal. 3d 756, 765) . The Court explained that under former Health & Safety Code § 24101.4 [now see Health & Safety Code § 116045], pool owners who fail either to provide lifeguard services or to post a sign warning of the absence of a lifeguard are, as a matter of statutory policy, responsible for the consequences attributable to a failure to provide lifeguard services (3 Cal. 3d 756, 766-769) . Because the defendants failed to provide these services, the burden shifted to them to prove that their violation was not a proximate cause of the deaths. In the absence of this proof, the defendants' causation is established as a matter of law (3 Cal. 3d 756, 769) . The Court added that the instant action presented a stronger case for shifting the burden of proof than did Summers v. Tice (1948)

33 Cal. 2d 80, 85-86, 199 P.2d 1 [see § 165.330[3][a]]. In this case, the defendants are more culpably responsible for the uncertainty of proof than in Summers. Although the difficulty in proof in Summers was attributable to the coincidence of the defendants' actions, each hunter was negligent, not because he shot simultaneously with the other defendant, but only because he shot in the direction of the plaintiff. The uncertainty of proof in that situation, while emanating from the defendants' conduct, was not a foreseeable consequence of the defendants' negligence. On the other hand, in this case the absence of definite evidence on causation was a direct and foreseeable result of the defendants' negligent failure to provide a lifeguard. Thus, the defendants may more appropriately be designated at fault for the factual deficiencies that were present (3 Cal. 3d 756, 773-774) . Because the respective burdens of proof were unclear at the time of trial, the Court determined that justice would be best served by a remand of the cause for a new trial (3 Cal. 3d 756, 765, 779) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Concurrent Negligence But Single Unidentified Cause

Vahey v. Sacia (1981) 126 Cal. App. 3d 171, 178 Cal. Rptr. 559 , involved an action for personal injuries brought by a passenger of one of five cars involved in an automobile collision. The plaintiff settled the case with three other the defendants. The case went to trial only against the nonsettling defendant. The jury returned a verdict in favor of the defendant. In reversing the judgment for the defendant, the court of appeal held that the lower court committed reversible error in refusing the plaintiff's requested jury instruction regarding a shift in the burden of proof. The court restated the doctrine of Summers v. Tice (1948) 33 Cal. 2d 80, 85-86, 199 P.2d 1 . The court stated that when two or more persons who, by their acts, are possibly the sole cause of a harm, and the plaintiff has introduced evidence that one of the two persons is culpable, then the defendant has the burden of proving that the other person was the sole cause of the harm (126 Cal. App. 3d 171, 174-175) .

[b] Defendant's Statutory Violation Deprived Plaintiff of Means of Establishing Causation

In McGee v. Cessna Aircraft Co. (1983) 139 Cal. App. 3d 179, 188 Cal. Rptr. 542 , the plaintiff brought a products liability action against an aircraft manufacturer (Cessna) to recover damages for burns suffered when her airplane caught fire after a crash. In reversing a lower court judgment for Cessna, the court of appeal found that the trial court erroneously failed to instruct the jury to shift the burden of proving proximate causation. The plaintiff contended that Cessna had been presumptively negligent under Evid. Code § 669(a) because Cessna violated federal air regulations regarding requirements for airplane firewalls and for the protection of airplane occupants in emergency landing conditions. The court stated that once the plaintiff proved that (1) the defendant violated the regulations, (2) the plaintiff's injury resulted from an occurrence that the regulations were designed to prevent, and (3) she was within the class of persons protected by the statute, the issue regarding proximate cause should have been shifted to the defendant to prove that its violations were not the proximate cause of the plaintiff's injury (139 Cal. App. 3d 179, 186-187) . The court noted that the burden on this issue was critical because the fire also destroyed the physical evidence (139 Cal. App. 3d 179, 187) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
C. Causation
4. Unidentified Causation

16-165 California Points & Authorities §§ 165.331-165.339

[Reserved]

§§ 165.331[Reserved]

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
D. Proof by Application of Res Ipsa Loquitur Presumption
1. Presumption Applicable

16-165 California Points & Authorities § 165.340

§ 165.340 Conditions for Application of Res Ipsa Loquitur Presumption Have Been Met

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE DOCTRINE OF RES IPSA LOQUITUR SHOULD BE APPLIED IN THIS CASE BECAUSE _____ [describe occurrence] (1) IS AN OCCURRENCE OF A KIND THAT ORDINARILY DOES NOT OCCUR IN THE ABSENCE OF SOMEONE'S NEGLIGENCE; (2) WAS CAUSED BY AN AGENCY OR INSTRUMENTALITY WITHIN THE EXCLUSIVE CONTROL OF DEFENDANT _____ [name]; AND (3) WAS NOT DUE TO ANY VOLUNTARY ACTION OR CONTRIBUTION ON THE PART OF PLAINTIFF.

A. Accident Was Probable Result of Negligence. The doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is applicable if the accident is of such a nature that it can be said, in light of past experience, that it probably was the result of negligence by someone and that the defendant is probably the one responsible (Newing v. Cheatham (1975) 15 Cal. 3d 351, 359, 124 Cal. Rptr. 193, 540 P.2d 33).

B. Conditions for Application of Doctrine Have Been Met. The three conditions for the application of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur are: (1) the accident must be of a kind that ordinarily does not occur in the absence of someone's negligence; (2) it must be caused by an agency or instrumentality within the exclusive control of the defendant; and (3) it must not have been due to any voluntary action or contribution on the part of the plaintiff (Newing v. Cheatham (1975) 15 Cal. 3d 351, 359, 124 Cal. Rptr. 193, 540 P.2d 33 ; Ybarra v. Spangard (1944) 25 Cal. 2d 486, 489, 154 P.2d 687).

C. Existence of Conditions Is Question of Fact Unless Facts Are Undisputed. The existence of one or more of the conditions for application of the res ipsa loquitur presumption is usually a question of fact for the jury; but when facts supporting all three conditions are undisputed, the inference of the defendant's negligence arises as a matter of law ( Newing v. Cheatham (1975) 15 Cal. 3d 351, 359, 364, 124 Cal. Rptr. 193, 540 P.2d 33).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur should be applied in this case [see Newing v. Cheatham (1975) 15 Cal. 3d 351, 359, 124 Cal. Rptr. 193, 540 P.2d 33] . This form should be combined with any of the forms in §§ 165.341 -165.344 that are applicable to the particular case.

This argument may arise, for example, in supporting the plaintiff's motion for summary judgment, directed verdict, judgment notwithstanding the verdict, or new trial [see, e.g., Kaiser Steel Corp. v. Westinghouse Elec. Corp. (1976) 55 Cal. App. 3d 737, 740, 127 Cal. Rptr. 838 (summary judgment); Newing v. Cheatham (1975) 15 Cal. 3d 351, 355, 124 Cal. Rptr. 193, 540 P.2d 33 (directed verdict); see also Roddiscraft, Inc. v. Skelton Logging Co. (1963) 212 Cal. App. 2d 784, 790, 28 Cal. Rptr. 277 (new trial)].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel may discuss facts showing that each of the three conditions for the application of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur exist [see Ybarra v. Spangard (1944) 25 Cal. 2d 486, 489, 154 P.2d 687] .

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For related legal background, research and procedural guides, and a form of complaint regarding the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For additional points and authorities to combine with this form, see §§ 165.341 -165.344. For points and authorities supporting and opposing demurrers, see Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities in §§ 165.360 -165.362 and §§ 165.370 -165.371 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose the points and authorities in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Accident Was Probable Result of Negligence

In Newing v. Cheatham (1975) 15 Cal. 3d 351, 124 Cal. Rptr. 193, 540 P.2d 33 , the surviving wife and children of a decedent brought an action for damages for wrongful death arising out of the crash of a private airplane. Three persons, the plaintiffs' decedent, Harold Cheatham, and a third party, departed in an airplane. When the plane failed to return, a search was commenced. A rescue party found the wreckage of the plane, in which all three occupants were dead. The plaintiffs alleged that the crash was caused by pilot Harold Cheatham's negligence, and brought the action against the administrator of the estate of the deceased pilot of the plane. The plaintiffs contended that the pilot had negligently permitted the plane to run out of fuel; that the pilot had been negligent as a matter of law because he had violated applicable federal air regulations; and that his negligence was established by the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur. The jury found in favor of the plaintiffs. The defendant appealed, contending that the trial court erroneously directed a verdict on the issue of liability.

The Supreme Court affirmed, stating that it is settled law in this state that the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is applicable when the accident is of such a nature that it can be said, in the light of past experience, that it probably was the result of negligence by someone and that the defendant is probably the one responsible (15 Cal. 3d 351, 359) . The Court then examined the conditions for the application of the doctrine and found that, as a matter of law, the conditions were satisfied (15 Cal. 3d 351, 359-364) . Consequently, the Court found that the lower court correctly concluded that res ipsa loquitur established Cheatham's negligence as a matter of law (15 Cal. 3d 351, 365) .

[b] Conditions for Application of Doctrine Have Been Met

The factual and procedural background of Newing v. Cheatham (1975) 15 Cal. 3d 351, 124 Cal. Rptr. 193, 540 P.2d 33 , is discussed in § 165.340[3][a]. The Supreme Court affirmed judgment for the plaintiffs in an action for damages based on the wrongful death of the plaintiffs' decedent arising out of the crash of a private airplane. In reviewing whether or not the trial court properly applied the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur in this case, the Court noted that according to the classic statement, the three conditions for application of the doctrine are: (1) the accident must be of a kind that ordinarily does not occur in the absence of someone's negligence; (2) it must be caused by an agency or instrumentality within the exclusive control of the defendant; and (3) it must not have been due to any voluntary action or contribution on the part of the plaintiff (15 Cal. 3d 351, 359) . The Court concluded that, as a matter of law, the conditions were satisfied and that the trial court properly applied the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur (15 Cal. 3d 351, 359-364) .

In Ybarra v. Spangard (1944) 25 Cal. 2d 486, 154 P.2d 687 , the plaintiff sustained an injury while unconscious on an operating table. He was confronted with the task of proving which of the many doctors and attendants who participated in the operation were responsible for his injury. The trial court entered judgments of nonsuit as to all the defendants; the plaintiff appealed. The plaintiff contended that the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur should be applied, and that the inference of negligence arising from it made the granting of the nonsuit improper. The defendants contended that assuming that the plaintiff's condition was the result of an injury, there was no showing that the act of any particular the defendant, nor any particular instrumentality, was the cause of the injury.

In view of the magnitude and unfairness of the plaintiff's burden, the Supreme Court found that under the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, the plaintiff could maintain his claim against all persons who had any connection with the operation, even though he could not select which particular person or which particular acts led to his injury (25 Cal. 2d 486, 491-492) . The Court thus placed the burden on the individual the defendants to demonstrate their noninvolvement (25 Cal. 2d 486, 494) . In reaching this conclusion, the Court noted that the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur has three conditions: (1) the accident must be of a kind that ordinarily does not occur in the absence of someone's negligence; (2) it must be caused by an agency or instrumentality within the exclusive control of the defendant; and (3) it must not have been due to any voluntary action or contribution on the part of the plaintiff (25 Cal. 2d 486, 489) . The Court concluded that the condition that the injury must not have been due to the plaintiff's voluntary action was fully satisfied under the evidence produced, as was the condition that the accident must be one that ordinarily does not occur unless someone was negligent (25 Cal. 2d 486, 491) . The defendants had argued that the plaintiff had not shown an injury caused by an instrumentality under the defendant's control, because the plaintiff had not shown (1) which of the several instrumentalities that he came in contact with while in the hospital caused his injury, and (2) that any one defendant or his servants had exclusive control over any particular instrumentality (25 Cal. 2d 486, 491) . However, the Court stated that it did not believe that either the number or relationship of the defendants alone determined whether the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur applied. Every the defendant in whose custody the plaintiff was placed for any period was bound to exercise ordinary care to see that no unnecessary harm came to the plaintiff. Each would be liable for failure in this regard (25 Cal. 2d 486, 491-492) . The control, at one time or another, of one or more of the various agencies or instrumentalities that might have harmed plaintiff, was in the hands of every the defendant or of his or her employees or temporary servants. The Court thought that this was sufficient to place the burden of the initial explanation on them. The plaintiff was rendered unconscious for the purpose of undergoing surgical treatment by the defendants. Thus, it was manifestly unreasonable for them to insist that he identify any one of them as the person who performed the alleged negligent act (25 Cal. 2d 486, 492) . In addition, the Court found that the plaintiff need not identify the specific instrumentality that injured him. It is enough, the Court noted, that the plaintiff can show an injury resulting from an external force applied while he lay unconscious in the hospital. This was as clear a case of identification of the instrumentality as the plaintiff may ever be able to make (25 Cal. 2d 486, 492-493) .

[c] Existence of Conditions Is Question of Fact Unless Facts Are Undisputed

The factual and procedural background of Newing v. Cheatham (1975) 15 Cal. 3d 351, 124 Cal. Rptr. 193, 540 P.2d 33 , is discussed in § 165.340[3][a]. In affirming judgment for the plaintiffs in an action in which the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur was applied by the trial court, the Supreme Court noted that there were three conditions for the application of the doctrine. The existence of one or more of these conditions is usually a question of fact for the jury. In a proper case, however, they may exist as a matter of law (15 Cal. 3d 351, 359) . In this case, the Court stated that the evidence presented in the trial court satisfied all three conditions for the applicability of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur as a matter of law. Inasmuch as the facts giving rise to the doctrine were undisputed, the inference of negligence arose as a matter of law. In other words, the conclusion is feasible that there was a balance of probabilities pointing to the deceased pilot's negligence (15 Cal. 3d 351, 364) . Because the defendant did not introduce sufficient evidence to sustain a finding that the deceased pilot was not negligent, the Supreme Court concluded that the trial court correctly found that res ipsa loquitur established the pilot's negligence as a matter of law (15 Cal. 3d 351, 364-365) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Accident Was Probable Result of Negligence

In Di Mare v. Cresci (1962) 58 Cal. 2d 292, 23 Cal. Rptr. 772, 373 P.2d 860 , a woman brought an action against the owner of the apartment building in which she was a tenant. She alleged personal injuries suffered when a wooden stairway collapsed as she descended from her apartment. In affirming judgment for the plaintiff, the court of appeal approved the trial court's jury instruction based on the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur (58 Cal. 2d 292, 298) . The court stated that the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is applicable when the accident is of such a nature that it can be said, in the light of past experience, that it probably was the result of negligence and that the defendant is probably the one responsible (58 Cal. 2d 292, 298-299) . The court noted that ordinarily steps that are part of a common stairway do not collapse when used by a tenant in a normal manner, unless the landlord who has had the duty to maintain and inspect them was negligent (58 Cal. 2d 292, 299) .

[b] Conditions for Application of Doctrine Have Been Met

In Sanchez v. Bay Gen. Hosp. (1981) 116 Cal. App. 3d 776, 172 Cal. Rptr. 342 , the four minor children of the decedent brought an action for damages for their mother's wrongful death resulting from the alleged negligence of the nursing staff of the defendant Bay General Hospital (Hospital). Evidence presented at trial showed that (1) the decedent's death occurred because of a lack of adherence to basic nursing principles, (2) the decedent was under the exclusive control of the defendant's nursing staff, and (3) the decedent was not contributorily negligent (116 Cal. App. 3d 776, 787-788) . The court of appeal affirmed judgment for the plaintiffs, finding that the lower court properly directed a verdict on the issue of liability. In deciding that the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur was applicable in this case, the court stated that there were three conditions for the application of the doctrine. Quoting Newing v. Cheatham (1975) 15 Cal. 3d 351, 359, 124 Cal. Rptr. 193, 540 P.2d 33 [see § 165.340[3][a]], the court stated that (1) the accident must be of a kind that ordinarily does not occur in the absence of someone's negligence; (2) it must be caused by an agency or instrumentality within the exclusive control of the defendant; and (3) it must not have been due to any voluntary action or contribution on the part of the plaintiff (116 Cal. App. 3d 776, 786) . The court concluded that the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur was applicable as a matter of law, and that the defendant Hospital did not carry its burden of producing sufficient evidence to rebut the presumption (116 Cal. App. 3d 776, 789-793) .

In Roddiscraft, Inc. v. Skelton Logging Co. (1963) 212 Cal. App. 2d 784, 28 Cal. Rptr. 277 , the plaintiff brought an action for damages caused by a forest fire. The trial court granted the plaintiffs' motion for a new trial following a verdict for the defendant, on the ground that it erroneously refused a jury instruction on the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur. The court of appeal noted that before the doctrine may be applied, the following requisite conditions must be met: (1) the accident must be of a kind that ordinarily does not occur in the absence of someone's negligence; (2) it must be caused by an agency or instrumentality within the exclusive control of the defendant; and (3) it must not have been due to any voluntary action or contribution on the part of the plaintiff (212 Cal. App. 2d 784, 793) . After a detailed discussion of each condition, the court found that each had been met and determined that the doctrine applied to the facts of the case (212 Cal. App. 2d 784, 795-802) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
D. Proof by Application of Res Ipsa Loquitur Presumption
1. Presumption Applicable

16-165 California Points & Authorities § 165.341

§ 165.341 Res Ipsa Loquitur Presumption Applies Because Accident Was Kind Not Ordinarily Occurring in Absence of Negligence

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE DOCTRINE OF RES IPSA LOQUITUR SHOULD BE APPLIED IN THIS CASE BECAUSE _____ [describe occurrence] WAS AN OCCURRENCE OF SUCH A NATURE THAT IT WOULD ORDINARILY NOT OCCUR IN THE ABSENCE OF NEGLIGENCE.

A. Conditions for Application of Doctrine Have Been Met. [See § 165.340, Paragraph B].

B. Determination of Whether Accident Is Kind Not Occurring in Absence of Negligence. In determining whether or not an accident is of the type that does not ordinarily occur in the absence of negligence, a court may consider common knowledge, the testimony of expert witnesses, and the circumstances relating to the particular accident at issue; negligence need not be concluded to be the only explanation of the accident but merely the most probable one (Newing v. Cheatham (1975) 15 Cal. 3d 351, 359-360, 124 Cal. Rptr. 193, 540 P.2d 33).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur should apply because the criteria for its application have been met, particularly with respect to the requirement that the accident is of a type that would not otherwise occur in the absence of negligence [see Newing v. Cheatham (1975) 15 Cal. 3d 351, 359-360, 124 Cal. Rptr. 193, 540 P.2d 33] . It should be combined with any of the forms in § 165.340 and §§ 165.342 -165.344 that are applicable to the particular case.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel may discuss the circumstances of the occurrence, and argue that it would not have occurred in the absence of negligence.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For related legal background, research and procedural guides, and a form of complaint regarding the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For additional points and authorities to combine with this form, see § 165.340 and §§ 165.342 -165.344. For points and authorities supporting and opposing demurrers, see Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities in §§ 165.360 -165.362 and §§ 165.370 -165.371 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose the points and authorities in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Determination of Whether Accident Is Kind Not Occurring in Absence of Negligence

The factual and procedural background of Newing v. Cheatham (1975) 15 Cal. 3d 351, 124 Cal. Rptr. 193, 540 P.2d 33 , is discussed in § 165.340[3][a]. In Newing, the plaintiffs alleged that the airplane crash was caused by the pilot's negligence, and brought the action against the administrator of his estate. Expert testimony presented by the plaintiffs at trial indicated that the plane had crashed because it had run out of fuel. In examining whether or not the trial court properly applied the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur in this case, the Court addressed the first condition, that is, that the accident must be of a kind that ordinarily does not occur in the absence of negligence. The Court noted that in determining whether this condition is satisfied, a court may consider common knowledge, the testimony of expert witnesses, and the circumstances relating to the particular accident at issue. A court need conclude not that negligence is the only explanation of the accident but rather that it is the most probable one (15 Cal. 3d 351, 359-360) . The Court stated that the first condition is satisfied if, under the facts of the case, common experience indicates that the accident would not have occurred unless there had been negligence on someone's part (15 Cal. 3d 351, 361) . In this case, it seemed reasonably clear in light of the circumstances surrounding the crash that the accident ordinarily would not have taken place in the absence of negligence. The evidence was uncontradicted that the airplane took off in clear weather with no restrictions on visibility. There was evidence neither that weather conditions contributed in any way to the crash of the plane, nor that the plane collided with another while in flight. Indeed, the Court noted that the condition of the plane after the crash eliminated the possibility of a collision. The plane apparently fell to the ground unaffected by external factors, only a few miles from the airport from where it had departed some hours earlier. The Court concluded that the evidence on these circumstances was not only uncontradicted but of such a nature that no issue of fact was raised as to the existence of the first condition for the application of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur. Thus, the Court concluded that the first condition was established as a matter of law (15 Cal. 3d 351, 361-362) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
D. Proof by Application of Res Ipsa Loquitur Presumption
1. Presumption Applicable

16-165 California Points & Authorities § 165.342

§ 165.342 Res Ipsa Loquitur Presumption Applies Because Defendant Had Exclusive Control of Instrumentality Causing Accident

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE DOCTRINE OF RES IPSA LOQUITUR SHOULD BE APPLIED IN THIS CASE BECAUSE DEFENDANT HAD EXCLUSIVE CONTROL OF _____ [describe], WHICH WAS THE INSTRUMENTALITY THAT CAUSED THE ACCIDENT.

A. Conditions for Application of Doctrine Have Been Met. [See § 165.340, Paragraph B].

B. Defendant Had Exclusive Control of Instrumentality Causing Accident. The second condition of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is that the agency or instrumentality causing the accident must have been within the exclusive control or management of the defendant. The purpose of this requirement is to link the defendant with the probability that the accident was negligently caused (Newing v. Cheatham (1975) 15 Cal. 3d 351, 362, 124 Cal. Rptr. 193, 540 P.2d 33).

[Optional] C. Joint and Exclusive Control of Instrumentality by Multiple Defendants. The exclusive control required by the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is not the exclusive control of any one defendant. When the control, at one time or another, of the agency that might have harmed the plaintiff was in the hands of several the defendants, the initial burden of explanation shifts to each defendant having that control (Ybarra v. Spangard (1944) 25 Cal. 2d 486, 490-493, 154 P.2d 687 ; Martinides v. Mayer (1989) 208 Cal. App. 3d 1185, 1195, 256 Cal. Rptr. 679).

[Optional] D. Doctrine Applies Despite Relinquishment of Control by Defendant. The fact that the accident occurs some time after the defendant relinquishes control of the instrumentality that causes the accident does not preclude application of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, provided that there is evidence that the instrumentality had not been improperly handled by the plaintiff or by some third person, or its condition had otherwise been changed after the control was relinquished by the defendant (Zentz v. Coca Cola Bottling Co. (1952) 39 Cal. 2d 436, 444, 247 P.2d 344).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur should apply because the criteria for its application have been met, particularly with respect to the requirement that the defendant have exclusive control of the instrumentality causing the accident [see Newing v. Cheatham (1975) 15 Cal. 3d 351, 362, 124 Cal. Rptr. 193, 540 P.2d 33] . Optional Paragraph C may be submitted to assert that the exclusive control need not have been isolated to any one defendant [see Ybarra v. Spangard (1944) 25 Cal. 2d 486, 490-493, 154 P.2d 687] . Optional Paragraph D may be submitted to assert that doctrine applies even though the defendant relinquished control over the instrumentality. This paragraph may be used if there is evidence that the instrumentality had not been improperly handled by the plaintiff or by some third person, or its condition had otherwise been changed, after the control was relinquished [see Zentz v. Coca Cola Bottling Co. (1952) 39 Cal. 2d 436, 444, 247 P.2d 344] . This form should be combined with any of the forms in §§ 165.340 -165.341 and §§ 165.343 -165.344 that are applicable to the particular case.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel may discuss facts showing that the defendant had exclusive control over the instrumentality in question. If Optional Paragraph C is appropriate, counsel may also argue that joint control over the instrumentality does not negate the doctrine. If Optional Paragraph D is appropriate, counsel may also argue that although the defendant relinquished control over the instrumentality, no third person improperly handled it after that point.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For related legal background, research and procedural guides, and a form of complaint regarding the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For additional points and authorities to combine with this form, see §§ 165.340 -165.341 and §§ 165.343 -165.344. For points and authorities supporting and opposing demurrers, see Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities in §§ 165.360 -165.362 and §§ 165.370 -165.371 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose the points and authorities in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Defendant Had Exclusive Control of Instrumentality Causing Accident

The factual and procedural background of Newing v. Cheatham (1975) 15 Cal. 3d 351, 124 Cal. Rptr. 193, 540 P.2d 33 , is discussed in § 165.340[3][a]. In Newing, the California Supreme Court examined whether or not the trial court properly applied the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur. The Court stated that the doctrine's second condition, as traditionally formulated, is that the agency or instrumentality causing the accident must have been within the exclusive control or management of the defendant. The purpose of this requirement is to link the defendant with the probability that the accident was negligently caused. The Court stated that the facts of this case satisfied this condition. The pilot of the plane was the owner of the aircraft; there was no dispute that he was at the controls when the plane took off on its final flight. The Court stated that because neither of his passengers was a licensed pilot, there was no reason to suppose that anyone other than the pilot operated the plane at any time before the crash. Moreover, the pilot's ultimate responsibility for the crash was established by applicable federal air regulations (15 Cal. 3d 351, 362) . Although the defendant contended that the plaintiffs had not negated the possibility that the crash was caused by something other than the manner in which the plane was operated, and that crashes commonly occur because of mechanical failures, the Court held that the record was devoid of evidence of mechanical failure (15 Cal. 3d 351, 362-363) . Furthermore, the Court noted that even if such evidence had been produced, it would be irrelevant to the issue of whether or not the airplane was within the exclusive control of the pilot. The Court concluded that with respect to the operation and maintenance of the aircraft, the control exercised by the owner-pilot was complete, and that there could be no doubt that this element of the doctrine existed as a matter of law (15 Cal. 3d 351, 363) .

[b] Joint and Exclusive Control of Instrumentality by Multiple Defendants

The factual and procedural background of Ybarra v. Spangard (1944) 25 Cal. 2d 486, 154 P.2d 687 , is discussed in § 165.340[3][b]. In Ybarra, the defendants took the position that, assuming the plaintiff's condition was in fact the result of an injury, there was no showing that the act of any particular the defendant, nor any particular instrumentality, was the cause of the injury. The Supreme Court reversed the judgment for the defendants. It held that when a plaintiff receives unusual injuries while unconscious and in the course of medical treatment, all those the defendants who had any control over the plaintiff's body or the instrumentalities that might have caused the injuries may properly be called on to meet the inference of negligence by giving an explanation of their conduct. The Court stated that application of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur was appropriate because the control, at one time or another, of one or more of the various agencies or instrumentalities that might have harmed the plaintiff was in the hands of every the defendant or his or her employees or temporary servants (25 Cal. 2d 486, 492-494) .

Martinides v. Mayer (1989) 208 Cal. App. 3d 1185, 1195, 256 Cal. Rptr. 679 , was an action to recover damages for personal injuries suffered by the plaintiff when she was hit by a car. The jury returned its verdict in favor of the plaintiff and against two the defendants, finding that each defendant negligently operated the vehicle at the time of the accident. The defendant appealed, asserting that the trial court erred by erroneously allowing the jury to apply the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, on the ground that it was physically and legally impossible under the facts presented for both the defendants to operate the vehicle simultaneously.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court held that in view of suit having been brought against both of the parties who had joint and exclusive right of control and access to the vehicle and the jury's implicit determination that each of the defendants failed to rebut the inference that he or she negligently caused the accident, for the purposes of civil liability each was deemed to be the negligent driver who legally caused the accident. The court quoted Ybarra v. Spangard (1944) 25 Cal. 2d 486, 490-493, 154 P.2d 687 (discussed in § 165.340[3][b]), which stated application of the res ipsa loquitur doctrine requires that the chief evidence of the true cause, whether culpable or innocent, is practically accessible to the defendants but inaccessible to the injured person. The court, citing Poulsen v. Charlton (1964) 224 Cal. App. 2d 262, 268, 36 Cal. Rptr. 347 , also noted that the exclusive control required by the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is not the exclusive control of any one defendant. All that it necessary is that the plaintiff eliminate the probability that the accident was caused by someone other than the defendants (208 Cal. App. 3d 1185, 1194-1195) .

[c] Doctrine Applies Despite Relinquishment of Control by Defendant

In Zentz v. Coca Cola Bottling Co. (1952) 39 Cal. 2d 436, 247 P.2d 344 , the plaintiff brought an action to recover damages for personal injuries suffered when she was injured by an exploding Coca Cola bottle that had been bottled and delivered by the defendant. The driver of the defendant's truck delivered several cases of Coca Cola to the plaintiff's restaurant and put the bottles in the cooler. No one else handled the bottles from the time they were loaded in the truck until they were placed in the cooler. An hour after the delivery, the plaintiff reached into the cooler. Before she touched any of the bottles, one exploded, cutting her arm severely. The jury rendered a verdict for the plaintiff. The defendant appealed, contending that the trial court improperly gave a jury instruction based on the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur.

The Supreme Court affirmed. Discussing the conditions for the application of the doctrine, the Court noted that the defendant must have management or control of the agency or instrumentality that caused the injury. The Court also noted that the requirement of control is not an absolute one (39 Cal. 2d 436, 443) . Although the doctrine will not ordinarily apply if it is equally probable that the negligence was that of someone other than the defendant, the plaintiff need not exclude all other persons who might possibly have been responsible for injury when the defendant's negligence appears to be the more probable explanation of the accident (39 Cal. 2d 436, 443-444) . In addition, the Court stated that the occurrence of accident some time after the defendant relinquished control of the instrumentality causing the accident does not preclude application of the doctrine, provided that there is evidence that the instrumentality had not been improperly handled by the plaintiff or by some third person, or its condition had otherwise been changed after control was relinquished by the defendant. The defendant, however, must have had sufficient control or connection with the accident to support the finding that he or she was more probably than not the person responsible for the plaintiff's injury (39 Cal. 2d 436, 444) .

The Court stated that it was reasonably clear that the accident probably would not have occurred without negligence by someone. The bottle may have been improperly handled, improperly inspected, filled with excessive gas, or improperly manufactured. The question of control presented more difficulty for the Court. It was undisputed that the defendant had control over the bottle and its contents for a substantial portion of the time during which the defect might have been created or discovered. The Court noted, however, that the defendant did not have control after the bottle was delivered to the restaurant (39 Cal. 2d 436, 447) . The plaintiff, however, introduced evidence sufficient to warrant an inference that the bottle was not mistreated subsequent to the time it was placed in the cooler. The plaintiff did not handle any of the bottles that were delivered by the defendant. The bottle simply exploded without being touched when the plaintiff reached into the cooler. Although the plaintiff's employees removed some of the bottles, the construction of the cooler was such that the bottles would ordinarily be lifted straight up without disturbing any of those remaining. The Court stated that the plaintiff need not eliminate every remote possibility of damage to the bottle after the defendant relinquished control. A court could reasonably infer that the bottle that exploded was not damaged by the plaintiff or by any third person after it was left by the defendant's driver (39 Cal. 2d 436, 447-448) . Because sound and properly prepared bottles of carbonated beverages will not explode when carefully handled, and because there was evidence that the bottle was kept in a safe place after delivery by the defendant, the Court concluded that the jury could have properly found that the bottle was in some manner defective when the defendant's employee placed it in the cooler (39 Cal. 2d 436, 448) . The Court then examined the possible causes of the explosion, and concluded that it more probably than not resulted from a cause or causes for which the defendant was responsible (39 Cal. 2d 436, 448-449) . The Court therefore held that the plaintiff was entitled to invoke the aid of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur (39 Cal. 2d 436, 449) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Defendant Had Exclusive Control of Instrumentality Causing Accident

Hinckley v. La Mesa R.V. Ctr., Inc. (1984) 158 Cal. App. 3d 630, 205 Cal. Rptr. 22 , was an action against the manufacturer of a mobile home for, among other things, negligence in repairing the mobile home's electrical system after an earlier fire had broken out as an apparent result of electrical failure. The court held that the exclusive control requirement for the application of the res ipsa loquitur doctrine is satisfied when the defendant had exclusive control at the time of the alleged negligent act, even though he or she did not have control at the time of the accident itself, if the plaintiff produces evidence sufficient to show that the instrumentality was not mishandled, or that its condition had not changed after leaving the defendant's possession (158 Cal. App. 3d 630, 640) . The court concluded that the plaintiff's evidence supported a conclusion that no change had taken place, or that any change that had been made was not a cause of the fire (158 Cal. App. 3d 630, 640-641) .

[b] Doctrine Applies Despite Relinquishment of Control by Defendant

In Bedford v. Re (1973) 9 Cal. 3d 593, 108 Cal. Rptr. 364, 510 P.2d 724 , the plaintiff, through her guardian ad litem, appealed from a judgment for the defendants in a personal injury action, contending that the trial court erroneously denied a res ipsa loquitur instruction. In deciding that the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur was applicable and in reversing the judgment, the Supreme Court, quoting Zentz v. Coca Cola Bottling Co. (1952) 39 Cal. 2d 436, 443-444, 247 P.2d 344 [see § 165.342[3][c]], noted that the requirement that the defendant control the instrumentality that caused the accident is not an absolute one. The plaintiff need not exclude all other persons who might have possibly been responsible when the defendant's negligence appears to be the more probable explanation of the accident. Thus, in cases in which the defendant has relinquished control of the instrumentality, the plaintiff may raise the inference that it was defective when it left the defendant's possession by demonstrating that it was not improperly handled or its condition otherwise changed after leaving the defendant's control (9 Cal. 3d 593, 597) . In this action, the Court noted that the plaintiff had presented evidence to show that the instrumentality had not been materially altered after leaving the defendant's control, and that negligence on the part of the defendant probably caused the plaintiff's injury (9 Cal. 3d 593, 598) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
D. Proof by Application of Res Ipsa Loquitur Presumption
1. Presumption Applicable

16-165 California Points & Authorities § 165.343

§ 165.343 Res Ipsa Loquitur Presumption Applies Because Plaintiff's Actions Did Not Contribute to Accident

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE DOCTRINE OF RES IPSA LOQUITUR SHOULD BE APPLIED IN THIS CASE BECAUSE PLAINTIFF DID NOT CONTRIBUTE TO THE ACCIDENT.

Plaintiff's Actions Did Not Contribute to Accident. The purpose of the requirement for application of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, that the accident must not have been caused by any voluntary action or contribution on the part of the plaintiff, is to establish that the defendant is the one probably responsible for the accident. The plaintiff need not show that he or she was entirely inactive at the time of the accident to satisfy this requirement, so long as the evidence eliminates the plaintiff's conduct as a factor contributing to the occurrence (Newing v. Cheatham (1975) 15 Cal. 3d 351, 363, 124 Cal. Rptr. 193, 540 P.2d 33).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur should apply because the criteria for its application have been met, particularly with respect to the requirement that the plaintiff's actions did not contribute to the accident [see Newing v. Cheatham (1975) 15 Cal. 3d 351, 363, 124 Cal. Rptr. 193, 540 P.2d 33] . It should be combined with any of the forms in §§ 165.340 -165.342 and § 165.344 that are applicable to the particular case.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel may discuss the criteria that the plaintiff's actions did not contribute to the accident, describe the plaintiff's conduct, and argue that criteria has been met.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For related legal background, research and procedural guides, and a form of complaint regarding the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For additional points and authorities to combine with this form, see §§ 165.340 -165.342 and § 165.344. For points and authorities supporting and opposing demurrers, see Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities in §§ 165.360 -165.362 and §§ 165.370 -165.371 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose the points and authorities in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Plaintiff's Actions Did Not Contribute to Accident

The factual and procedural background of Newing v. Cheatham (1975) 15 Cal. 3d 351, 124 Cal. Rptr. 193, 540 P.2d 33 , is also discussed in § 165.340[3][a]. In Newing, the California Supreme Court examined whether or not the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur was properly applied. The Court noted that the third of the traditional conditions for the application of the doctrine is that the accident must not have been caused by any voluntary action or contribution on the part of the plaintiff. The purpose of this requirement, the Court explained, is to establish that the defendant is the one probably responsible for the accident. The plaintiff need not show that he or she was entirely inactive at the time of the accident in order to satisfy this requirement, so long as the evidence is such as to eliminate his or her conduct as a factor contributing to the occurrence. The defendant contended on appeal that the trial court confused the existence of this third condition with the availability of defenses of assumption of risk and contributory negligence. The Supreme Court noted that these are separate questions, because the burden of proof with respect to the first rests on the plaintiff as part of his or her general obligation to establish the defendant's negligence, while the burden of proof as to the latter rests on the defendant. However, whether or not the trial court's remarks indicated that it confused the two questions, the uncontradicted evidence showed that the body of the plaintiffs' decedent was found by the rescue party in one of the rear seats of the four-seater aircraft. From that position, the Court could not easily imagine how the decedent could have interfered with the operation of the aircraft in any way. Moreover, Cheatham was the pilot in command of the aircraft, and presumably made all decisions concerning its operation and preparation for flight. The Court stated that there was no basis for supposing that the decedent exerted any influence with respect to the making of these decisions. Thus, the Court concluded that the evidence concerning the basic operation of the aircraft is such as to conclusively eliminate decedent's conduct as a potential cause of the accident (15 Cal. 3d 351, 363) . The evidence presented in the trial court, therefore, satisfied all three conditions for the applicability of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur as a matter of law. Because the facts giving rise to the doctrine were undisputed, an inference of negligence arose as a matter of law. This gave rise to a presumption affecting the burden of producing evidence pursuant to Evid. Code § 646. It then became the defendant's obligation to introduce sufficient evidence to sustain a finding either that the accident resulted from some cause other than the pilot's negligence or that the pilot exercised due care in all possible respects in which he might have been negligent (15 Cal. 3d 351, 364-365) . The Court concluded that the defendant introduced no such evidence. At most, he argued that the crash could have resulted from causes other than the negligence of his decedent, the pilot. Mere speculation of this sort is insufficient to discharge the defendant's burden of explanation. Consequently, the Supreme Court found that the trial court correctly concluded that res ipsa loquitur established the pilot's negligence as a matter of law (15 Cal. 3d 351, 365) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
D. Proof by Application of Res Ipsa Loquitur Presumption
1. Presumption Applicable

16-165 California Points & Authorities § 165.344

§ 165.344 Due to Application of Res Ipsa Loquitur Presumption, Defendant Has Burden of Producing Evidence

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

BECAUSE THE DOCTRINE OF RES IPSA LOQUITUR APPLIES IN THIS CASE, DEFENDANT HAS THE BURDEN OF PRODUCING EVIDENCE THAT _____ [describe occurrence] WAS NOT THE PROBABLE RESULT OF NEGLIGENCE AND THAT IT WAS NOT CAUSED BY DEFENDANT.

Application of Doctrine Shifts Burden of Producing Evidence to Defendant. The judicial doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is a presumption affecting the burden of producing evidence. If the doctrine applies to the facts of the case, then a presumption of negligence arises. It then becomes the defendant's obligation to introduce sufficient evidence to sustain a finding either that the accident resulted from some cause other than his or her negligence, or that the defendant exercised due care in all possible respects in which he or she may have been negligent (Newing v. Cheatham (1975) 15 Cal. 3d 351, 364-365, 124 Cal. Rptr. 193, 540 P.2d 33 ; see Evid. Code § 646(b), (c)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that inasmuch as the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur applies to the instant case, the burden of producing evidence has shifted to the defendant with respect to showing either that the accident resulted from some cause other than his or her negligence, or that the defendant exercised due care in all possible respects in which he or she may have been negligent [see Newing v. Cheatham (1975) 15 Cal. 3d 351, 364-365, 124 Cal. Rptr. 193, 540 P.2d 33] . It should be combined with any of the forms in §§ 165.340 -165.343 that are applicable to the particular case.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel may argue that the doctrine of res ipsa applies, and that the burden of production has shifted to the defendant with respect to the burden of producing evidence has shifted to the defendant with respect to showing either that the accident resulted from some cause other than his or her negligence, or that the defendant exercised due care in all possible respects in which he or she may have been negligent.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For related legal background, research and procedural guides, and a form of complaint regarding the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For additional points and authorities to combine with this form, see §§ 165.340 -165.343. For points and authorities supporting and opposing demurrers, see Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities in §§ 165.360 -165.362 and §§ 165.370 -165.371 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose the points and authorities in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Application of Doctrine Shifts Burden of Producing Evidence to Defendant

The factual and procedural background of Newing v. Cheatham (1975) 15 Cal. 3d 351, 124 Cal. Rptr. 193, 540 P.2d 33 , is discussed in § 165.340[3][a]. In Newing, the Supreme Court noted that the judicial doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is a presumption affecting the burden of producing evidence pursuant to Evid. Code § 646. After the evidence presented at trial satisfied the conditions for the applicability of the doctrine, a presumption of the defendant's negligence arose. It then became the defendant's obligation to introduce sufficient evidence to sustain a finding that the accident resulted from some cause other than the defendant's negligence, or that the defendant exercised due care in all possible respects in which he might have been negligent (15 Cal. 3d 351, 364) . The Court found that the defendant introduced no such evidence. He had at most argued that the airplane crash resulted from causes other than negligence of his decedent. The court concluded that "mere speculation" of this sort was insufficient to discharge his burden of explanation (15 Cal. 3d 351, 365) .

NOTE

Evid. Code § 646(b) provides that the judicial doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is a presumption affecting the burden of producing evidence. This is to be distinguished from a presumption that affects the burden of proof [see Evid. Code § 606]. A presumption that affects the burden of proof imposes on the party against whom it operates the burden of proving the nonexistence of the presumed fact (by a preponderance of the evidence or other appropriate burden of proof standard) [Evid. Code §§ 606, 607; see Frantz v. San Luis Med. Clinic (1978) 81 Cal. App. 3d 34, 42, 146 Cal. Rptr. 146] . On the other hand, a presumption that affects the burden of producing evidence imposes on the party against whom the presumption operates only the obligation to introduce evidence that will support a finding of the nonexistence of the presumed fact [see Evid. Code § 604]. This burden on the opponent of a presumption that affects the burden of producing evidence is far less than the burden of proof imposed on an opponent of a presumption that is classified as a presumption that affects the burden of proof [see Frantz v. San Luis Med. Clinic (1978) 81 Cal. App. 3d 34, 42, 146 Cal. Rptr. 146] .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
D. Proof by Application of Res Ipsa Loquitur Presumption
1. Presumption Applicable

16-165 California Points & Authorities §§ 165.345-165.359

[Reserved]

§§ 165.345[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
D. Proof by Application of Res Ipsa Loquitur Presumption
2. Presumption Not Applicable

16-165 California Points & Authorities § 165.360

§ 165.360 Conditions for Application of Res Ipsa Loquitur Presumption Have Not Been Met

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE DOCTRINE OF RES IPSA LOQUITUR SHOULD NOT BE APPLIED IN THIS CASE BECAUSE THE CONDITIONS FOR THE APPLICATION OF THE DOCTRINE HAVE NOT BEEN MET IN THAT _____ [IT CANNOT BE SAID, IN LIGHT OF PAST EXPERIENCE, THAT THE ACCIDENT WAS OF A NATURE THAT ORDINARILY OCCURS ONLY IF SOMEONE IS NEGLIGENT and/or IT WAS PROBABLE THAT THE ACCIDENT WAS CAUSED BY SOMEONE OTHER THAN DEFENDANT].

A. Accident Was Not Probable Result of Negligence. If the accident is of such a nature that it cannot be said, in light of past experience, that it probably was the result of negligence by someone, the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is not applicable to the action (see Folk v. Kilk (1975) 53 Cal. App. 3d 176, 184-187, 126 Cal. Rptr. 172).

[AND/OR]

B. Accident Was Not Caused by Defendant. The doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is applicable when it is more likely than not that the accident was caused by the defendant's negligence. When it is equally probable that the negligence was that of someone other than the defendant, the doctrine does not apply (Gotcher v. Metcalf (1970) 6 Cal. App. 3d 96, 102, 85 Cal. Rptr. 566).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur does not apply because the requisite conditions for the application of the doctrine have not been met, that is: that the accident was the probable result of negligence, and that the defendant probably caused the accident [see Folk v. Kilk (1975) 53 Cal. App. 3d 176, 184-187, 126 Cal. Rptr. 172] . It should be combined with any of the forms in §§ 165.361 -165.362 that are applicable to the particular case.

This issue may arise, for example, in opposing a plaintiff's motion for summary judgment, directed verdict, judgment notwithstanding the verdict, or new trial [see, e.g., Kaiser Steel Corp. v. Westinghouse Elec. Corp. (1976) 55 Cal. App. 3d 737, 740, 127 Cal. Rptr. 838 (summary judgment); Newing v. Cheatham (1975) 15 Cal. 3d 351, 355, 124 Cal. Rptr. 193, 540 P.2d 33 (directed verdict); see also Roddiscraft, Inc. v. Skelton Logging Co. (1963) 212 Cal. App. 2d 784, 790, 28 Cal. Rptr. 277 (new trial)].

In addition to contesting the existence of the conditions for the application of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, counsel may also introduce evidence overcoming his or her burden of producing evidence--that is, to show that the defendant was not negligent or that any negligence on the defendant's part was not a proximate cause of the plaintiff's injury [see Evid. Code § 646(c); see also Frantz v. San Luis Med. Clinic (1978) 81 Cal. App. 3d 34, 44, 146 Cal. Rptr. 146] .

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel may argue that these conditions for the application of the doctrine, i.e., that the accident was the probable result of negligence, and that the defendant probably caused the accident, do not exist in the action [see Ybarra v. Spangard (1944) 25 Cal. 2d 486, 489, 154 P.2d 687] .

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For related legal background, research and procedural guides, and a form of complaint regarding the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For additional points and authorities to combine with this form, see §§ 165.361 -165.362. For points and authorities supporting and opposing demurrers, see Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities in §§ 165.340 -165.344 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose the points and authorities in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Accident Was Not Probable Result of Negligence

In Folk v. Kilk (1975) 53 Cal. App. 3d 176, 126 Cal. Rptr. 172 , the plaintiff brought an action against several doctors and a hospital to recover damages for personal injuries suffered as a result of alleged medical malpractice. Five days after the plaintiff had a tonsillectomy performed on him by the defendant doctor Kilk, the plaintiff developed a brain abscess. There was evidence presented at trial that a bacteria from the plaintiff's throat could have produced the abscess by migrating to the brain. However, the plaintiff's brain abscess contained no bacteria because of the antibiotics that had been prescribed, and no bacteria could be identified as its cause. After refusing a conditional res ipsa loquitur instruction by the plaintiff, the trial court entered a judgment of nonsuit in favor of the defendant hospital. The jury returned a verdict in favor of the defendant doctors; the plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court noted that a conditional res ipsa loquitur instruction must be given when requested by the plaintiff whenever the evidence or facts otherwise established would support the presumption (53 Cal. App. 3d 176, 184-185) . An exception to this rule is that the instruction need not be given if a defendant establishes that he or she was free from negligence by evidence that cannot be rationally disbelieved. The court, quoting Ybarra v. Spangard (1944) 25 Cal. 2d 486, 489, 154 P.2d 687 (discussed in § 165.340[3][b]), stated that three elements are required for the application of the doctrine: (1) the accident must be of a kind that ordinarily does not occur in the absence of someone's negligence; (2) it must be caused by an agency or instrumentality within the exclusive control of the defendant; and (3) it must not have been due to any voluntary action or contribution on the part of the plaintiff (53 Cal. App. 3d 176, 184) . A simplified two-part rule was formulated in Zentz v. Coca Cola Bottling Co. (1952) 39 Cal. 2d 436, 446, 247 P.2d 344 (discussed in § 165.342[3][b]), in which the Court held that the doctrine was applicable when the accident was of such a nature that it can be said, in the light of past experience, that it probably was the result of negligence by someone and that the defendant is the person who is responsible (53 Cal. App. 3d 176, 184) . The court explained that in medical malpractice cases, the second two elements for the application of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur are usually inherent in the situation, because the patient is under the exclusive control of the doctors or the hospital, and in no condition to perform a voluntary action that might contribute to his or her injury. Thus, the court focused on the first element for application of the doctrine from Ybarra and the first clause of the rule of Zentz, concluding that the two-part test of Zentz didnot replace the three-part test of Ybarra, but that the Zentz test was promulgated to emphasize the greater probability of negligence as the fundamental basis of the doctrine (53 Cal. App. 3d 176, 184-185) .

The court examined expert testimony presented at trial and felt bound by that testimony, because whether or not a brain abscess formed after a tonsillectomy was probably caused by negligence is not a matter of common knowledge (53 Cal. App. 3d 176, 185) . The court noted that experts knew little about the causation of brain abscesses because of the difficulties presented in studying them. In addition, most abscesses did not originate in the throat, but in the sinus passages, middle ear, and lungs, and take a longer time to develop than in the plaintiff's case (53 Cal. App. 3d 176, 185-186) . The court concluded that the defendant's performance of the tonsillectomy without determining whether certain bacteria were present in the plaintiff's throat was not a violation of the prevailing standard of care. The court also found that the failure to take a throat culture in time to secure the results prior to surgery was not an act that would invoke the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur. Although some cases have held that a res ipsa loquitur instruction may be given whenever the evidence establishes the rarity of occurrence plus specific acts of negligence, the cited cases held only that the combination of the two factors may suffice to warrant the instruction. The giving of a res ipsa loquitur instruction would depend on whether the combination of rarity of occurrence and specific acts afforded reasonable grounds for believing that the accident was more probably caused by negligence than not (53 Cal. App. 3d 176, 186-187) . In this case, the combination of the rarity of the occurrence of the brain abscess plus the defendant's specific acts in failing to determine whether certain bacteria were present in the plaintiff's throat did not present a situation that led to a reasonable conclusion that it was more probable than not that negligence caused the untoward result (53 Cal. App. 3d 176, 187) .

[b] Accident Was Not Caused by Defendant

In Gotcher v. Metcalf (1970) 6 Cal. App. 3d 96, 85 Cal. Rptr. 566 , the plaintiffs' decedent was killed in a midair collision between two small airplanes. The plaintiffs brought an action for wrongful death against the pilot of the other plane. The pilot of the plaintiffs' decedent's plane, who may have been solely or equally negligent, was not before the court. The plaintiffs' decedent's plane lost part of its right wing in the collision, plunged into a lake, and was never recovered. The defendant's plane lost part of its tail, but landed safely at a nearby airport. The jury rendered a verdict for the defendant, and judgment was entered accordingly. The plaintiffs moved for a new trial. The court granted the motion on the ground of irregularity in the proceedings of the adverse party, because the defendant's counsel read certain proposed prejudicial jury instructions during trial without court approval or consultation [see Code Civ. Proc. § 657(1)]. The defendant appealed from the order granting a new trial. The plaintiffs cross-appealed from the judgment, contending that the court erroneously refused to instruct the jury on the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur.

The court of appeal affirmed judgment for the defendant, reversing the order granting a new trial, because it found that the alleged misconduct of counsel was not prejudicial (6 Cal. App. 3d 96, 99-101) . With regard to the trial court's failure to give a res ipsa loquitur instruction, the court first noted that there are three conditions for the application of the doctrine: (1) the accident must be of a kind that ordinarily does not occur in the absence of someone's negligence; (2) it must be caused by an agency or instrumentality within the exclusive control of the defendant; and (3) it must not have been due to any voluntary action or contribution on the part of the plaintiff. In addition, the court noted that the instruction is properly refused unless the evidence supports a preliminary determination by the court that in light of past experience: (1) the accident was of the type that ordinarily does not happen unless someone was negligent, and (2) it is more likely than not that the accident was caused by the defendant's negligence (6 Cal. App. 3d 96, 102) . The court stated that the evidence could not reasonably be said to establish that it was more probable than not that the defendant was negligent, and that his negligence caused or contributed to the accident. An eyewitness testified that he saw the plaintiffs' decedent's airplane circle in the direction of the defendant's plane. Even at the minimum speed necessary to maintain two planes in flight, it could not be said that the defendant could have avoided striking the plaintiffs' decedent's plane, assuming the defendant saw it. The court stated that if the eyewitness testimony was correct, it could not be said that it was more likely than not that the accident was caused by the defendant's negligence or that the defendant could have avoided the accident. On the other hand, the physical evidence established that only the tail assembly and the rear portion of the defendant's plane was damaged. This could indicate that decedent's plane was not in font of the defendant's plane and in plain sight. Thus, decedent's plane could possibly have struck the defendant's plane from the rear or from the side. This interpretation of the physical evidence was supported by the defendant's testimony and that of his passengers that, although looking ahead, down, and about them, they did not see decedent's airplane. Under this view of the evidence, the court could not reasonably state that it was more probable than not that the accident was caused by the defendant's negligence or that he could have avoided it (6 Cal. App. 3d 96, 103) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Accident Was Not Probable Result of Negligence

In Ford v. Miller Meat Co. (1994) 28 Cal. App. 4th 1196, 33 Cal. Rptr. 2d 899 , the court of appeal affirmed judgment for the defendant in a suit alleging the plaintiff was injured when she bit into a fragment of bone contained in ground beef purchased at the defendant's supermarket. At the nonjury trial, the court found that the fragment could not have been larger than one-eighth of an inch, and that no one could reasonably expect the defendant to remove such a small particle from ground beef. The court of appeal rejected the plaintiff's contention that the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur applied, noting that the trial court's determination regarding the bone fragment was the same as finding that its presence could not be attributed to lack of due care, actual or presumed (28 Cal. App. 4th 1196, 1203) .

In Zavala v. Board of Trs. (1993) 16 Cal. App. 4th 1755, 20 Cal. Rptr. 2d 768 , the court of appeal affirmed the trial court's granting of the defendants' motion for nonsuit in a medical malpractice action claiming negligent failure properly to diagnose and treat accumulation of fluid due to shunt failure. At trial, the plaintiff presented her mother's testimony regarding her medical treatment by the defendants, but did not present any expert testimony. The court held that the nonsuit was proper. Because the plaintiff's problem was not a matter of common knowledge, the defendants' negligence was not apparent to a layperson. Therefore, the plaintiff's evidence was insufficient to support a jury verdict in her favor on a res ipsa loquitur theory. The court noted that the plaintiff's evidence failed even to describe the precise nature of the plaintiff's injury. A jury could therefore not conclude that the injury was the type that ordinarily does not occur in the absence of negligence (16 Cal. App. 4th 1755, 1765-1766) .

[b] Accident Was Not Caused by Defendant

In Gicking v. Kimberlin (1985) 170 Cal. App. 3d 73, 215 Cal. Rptr. 834 , lessees in a shopping center brought an action against adjacent lessees for damages resulting from a real property fire of unknown origin. Evidence at trial indicated two possible causes for the fire: an unserviced walk-in cooler in the defendants' shop, or the shopping center owner's old-fashioned electrical system. The court held that the res ipsa loquitur doctrine was not available to the plaintiffs because one of two possible causes of the fire was not under the control of the defendants. The court stated the fundamental rule that the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur does not apply if it is equally probable that an accident was caused by some fault for which the defendant was not responsible (170 Cal. App. 3d 73, 77) . A plaintiff is entitled to a conditional res ipsa loquitur instruction, in which the jury determines whether or not the conditions for the doctrine have been established, only if the plaintiff has shown that the defendant's negligence was the more probable explanation of the accident. In this case, the plaintiffs failed to establish the probability that the defendants were responsible for the fire as a matter of law (170 Cal. App. 3d 73, 78) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
D. Proof by Application of Res Ipsa Loquitur Presumption
2. Presumption Not Applicable

16-165 California Points & Authorities § 165.361

§ 165.361 Res Ipsa Loquitur Presumption Does Not Apply Because Defendant Did Not Have Exclusive Control of Instrumentality Causing Accident

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE DOCTRINE OF RES IPSA LOQUITUR SHOULD NOT BE APPLIED IN THIS CASE BECAUSE THE CONDITIONS FOR THE APPLICATION OF THE DOCTRINE HAVE NOT BEEN MET IN THAT THE ACCIDENT WAS NOT CAUSED BY AN AGENCY OR INSTRUMENTALITY WITHIN THE EXCLUSIVE CONTROL OF DEFENDANT.

A. No Exclusive Control of Instrumentality by Defendant. To invoke the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, the plaintiff must produce evidence permitting the conclusion that it was more likely than not that the defendant was responsible for the accident. If it is not shown that the specific instrumentality causing the accident was under the exclusive control of the defendant, the doctrine will not be applied (see Cordova v. Ford (1966) 246 Cal. App. 2d 180, 186-187, 54 Cal. Rptr. 508).

[AND/OR]

B. Instrumentality Mishandled or Condition Changed After Leaving Defendant's Possession. The control element of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is satisfied if the defendant had control of the instrumentality at the time of the alleged negligent act, although not at the time of the accident, provided the plaintiff produces evidence sufficient to show that the instrumentality was not mishandled or that its condition had not been changed after it left the defendant's possession. If there is evidence that the condition of the instrumentality was changed after it left the defendant's possession, the second condition of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is not met (Putensen v. Clay Adams, Inc. (1970) 12 Cal. App. 3d 1062, 1075-1076, 91 Cal. Rptr. 319).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is inapplicable because the requisite conditions for the application of the doctrine have not been met with respect to the defendant's exclusive control over the instrumentality in question [see Cordova v. Ford (1966) 246 Cal. App. 2d 180, 186-187, 54 Cal. Rptr. 508] . Paragraph B may be submitted to assert that the criteria for application of the res ipsa loquitur doctrine have not been met with respect to interference with the instrumentality in question after leaving the defendant's possession [see Putensen v. Clay Adams, Inc. (1970) 12 Cal. App. 3d 1062, 1075-1076, 91 Cal. Rptr. 319] . This form should be combined with any of the forms in § 165.360 and § 165.362 that are applicable to the particular case.

The issue of the inapplicability of the doctrine may arise, for example, in opposing a plaintiff's motion for summary judgment, directed verdict, judgment notwithstanding the verdict, or new trial [see, e.g., Kaiser Steel Corp. v. Westinghouse Elec. Corp. (1976) 55 Cal. App. 3d 737, 740, 127 Cal. Rptr. 838 (summary judgment); Newing v. Cheatham (1975) 15 Cal. 3d 351, 355, 124 Cal. Rptr. 193, 540 P.2d 33 (directed verdict); see also Roddiscraft, Inc. v. Skelton Logging Co. (1963) 212 Cal. App. 2d 784, 790, 28 Cal. Rptr. 277 (new trial)].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel may argue that the condition with respect to the defendant's exclusive control for the application of the doctrine do not exist in the action [see Ybarra v. Spangard (1944) 25 Cal. 2d 486, 489, 154 P.2d 687] .

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For related legal background, research and procedural guides, and a form of complaint regarding the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For additional points and authorities to combine with this form, see § 165.360 and § 165.362. For points and authorities supporting and opposing demurrers, see Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities in §§ 165.340 -165.344 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose the points and authorities in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Exclusive Control of Instrumentality by Defendant

In Cordova v. Ford (1966) 246 Cal. App. 2d 180, 54 Cal. Rptr. 508 , the plaintiff brought an action for damages for personal injuries suffered as a result of a two-car collision at an unobstructed intersection. At trial, the court refused to instruct the jury on the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur. The jury returned a verdict for the defendants; the plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, noting that three conditions that must be satisfied in order for the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur to apply. The conditions are that: (1) the accident must be of a kind that ordinarily does not occur in the absence of someone's negligence; (2) it must be caused by an agency or instrumentality within the exclusive control of the defendant; and (3) it must not have been due to any voluntary action or contribution on the part of the plaintiff (246 Cal. App. 2d 180, 184) . The court stated that, as a general rule, the mere occurrence of a collision between two motor vehicles does not of itself present a situation for the application of the doctrine. In certain situations, however, the doctrine may apply, for example, when there has been a rear-end collision in which the rear car has collided with a stopped or stationary vehicle (246 Cal. App. 2d 180, 185) . The court noted that the first condition for the application of the doctrine was present, that is, a two-car collision ordinarily does not occur in the absence of someone's negligence. The second requirement, however, was not satisfied because there were two instrumentalities involved in the accident; the defendant was in control of only one of them (246 Cal. App. 2d 180, 186) . The court explained that to eliminate other responsible causes and thus hold the defendant negligent, the plaintiff must usually show that the specific instrumentality causing the accident was under the exclusive control of the defendant. In this case, the court said that the plaintiff attempted to distort the rationale of the doctrine by arguing that the defendant was in exclusive control of his own vehicle. Because the plaintiff was in exclusive control of her own vehicle, the court concluded that the requisite control in the defendant was not established (246 Cal. App. 2d 180, 186-187) .

[b] Instrumentality Mishandled or Condition Changed After Leaving Defendant's Possession

In Putensen v. Clay Adams, Inc. (1970) 12 Cal. App. 3d 1062, 91 Cal. Rptr. 319 , the plaintiff brought an action against a manufacturer, a hospital, and a physician for damages for personal injuries suffered as a result of alleged medical malpractice and allegedly defective tubing used in her heart operation. When the defendant doctor inserted the tubing into the plaintiff's blood vessel, he could not properly position it because a kink developed in the tubing. In order to remove the tubing from the plaintiff's aorta, he had to perform surgery on the plaintiff. The court granted a nonsuit in favor of the defendant manufacturer. The jury rendered a verdict in favor of the defendant hospital and the defendant doctor. The plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed as to the defendant manufacturer, and affirmed as to the defendants doctor and hospital. With regard to the manufacturer, the plaintiff contended that a nonsuit was improper because the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur applied, and that therefore the jury was permitted to infer negligence from the occurrence of the accident alone (12 Cal. App. 3d 1062, 1074) . The court found that in this case, the first and third conditions for the application of the doctrine were present, that is, the accident was not due to any voluntary contribution of the plaintiff and that it was more probable than not that the accident was the result of negligence (12 Cal. App. 3d 1062, 1074-1075) . The court noted that the second condition was not present, that is, it was not shown that the defendant manufacturer had exclusive management or control of the instrumentality that caused the accident. The court explained that the control element was satisfied if the defendant had control of the instrumentality at the time of the alleged negligent act, although not at the time of the alleged accident, provided that the plaintiff produced evidence that was sufficient to show that the instrumentality was not mishandled or that its condition had not been changed after it left the defendant's possession (12 Cal. App. 3d 1062, 1075) . The court found uncontradicted evidence that the condition of the tubing was changed after it left the manufacturer's possession. After leaving the defendant manufacturer's possession, the tubing was soaked in a detergent solution and stretched by the defendant doctor, then inserted over another tube. This process may well have weakened the tube's resilient qualities. The court concluded that the absence of this second condition precluded the application of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur (12 Cal. App. 3d 1062, 1075-1076) . The court found, however, that there was substantial evidence of negligence on the part of the defendant manufacturer that would support a verdict in the plaintiff's favor, and that therefore the lower court's granting of a nonsuit in favor of the manufacturer was erroneous (12 Cal. App. 3d 1062, 1076-1079) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
D. Proof by Application of Res Ipsa Loquitur Presumption
2. Presumption Not Applicable

16-165 California Points & Authorities § 165.362

§ 165.362 Res Ipsa Loquitur Presumption Does Not Apply Because Plaintiff's Actions Contributed to Accident

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE DOCTRINE OF RES IPSA LOQUITUR SHOULD NOT BE APPLIED IN THIS CASE BECAUSE THE CONDITIONS FOR THE APPLICATION OF THE DOCTRINE HAVE NOT BEEN MET IN THAT THE ACCIDENT WAS DUE TO VOLUNTARY ACTION OR CONTRIBUTION ON THE PART OF PLAINTIFF.

Plaintiff's Actions Contributed to Accident. Although the plaintiff may properly rely on the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur even though he or she was not inactive at the time of the accident and participated in the events leading up to it, the plaintiff must nevertheless exclude his or her conduct as a responsible cause of the accident before he or she may invoke the doctrine (Cordova v. Ford (1966) 246 Cal. App. 2d 180, 187, 54 Cal. Rptr. 508 ; see Vistica v. Presbyterian Hosp. (1967) 67 Cal. 2d 465, 470-471, 62 Cal. Rptr. 577, 432 P.2d 193).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is inapplicable because the requisite conditions for the application of the doctrine have not been met, in that the plaintiff contributed to the accident [see Cordova v. Ford (1966) 246 Cal. App. 2d 180, 187, 54 Cal. Rptr. 508] . It should be combined with any of the forms in §§ 165.360 and 165.361 that are applicable to the particular case.

The issue of the applicability of the doctrine may arise, for example, in opposing a plaintiff's motion for summary judgment, directed verdict, judgment notwithstanding the verdict, or new trial [see, e.g., Kaiser Steel Corp. v. Westinghouse Elec. Corp. (1976) 55 Cal. App. 3d 737, 740, 127 Cal. Rptr. 838 (summary judgment); Newing v. Cheatham (1975) 15 Cal. 3d 351, 355, 124 Cal. Rptr. 193, 540 P.2d 33 (directed verdict); see also Roddiscraft, Inc. v.

Skelton Logging Co. (1963) 212 Cal. App. 2d 784, 790, 28 Cal. Rptr. 277 (new trial)].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel may argue that the conditions for the application of the doctrine do not exist in the action because the plaintiff contributed to the cause of the accident [see Ybarra v. Spangard (1944) 25 Cal. 2d 486, 489, 154 P.2d 687] .

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For related legal background, research and procedural guides, and a form of complaint regarding the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For additional points and authorities to combine with this form, see §§ 165.360 and 165.361. For points and authorities supporting and opposing demurrers, see Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities in §§ 165.340 -165.344 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose the points and authorities in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Plaintiff's Actions Contributed to Accident

The factual and procedural background of Cordova v. Ford (1966) 246 Cal. App. 2d 180, 54 Cal. Rptr. 508 , is discussed in § 165.361[3][a]. The plaintiff sought to recover damages for personal injuries suffered as a result of a two-car collision at an unobstructed intersection. The court of appeal affirmed judgment for the defendants and found that the trial court properly refused to give a res ipsa loquitur instruction to the jury. The court noted that one of the three conditions for application of the doctrine was that the accident must not have been due to any voluntary action or contribution on the part of the plaintiff (246 Cal. App. 2d 180, 184) . In examining whether this condition was met, the court stated that it must consider whether or not the plaintiff's conduct under the evidence had been eliminated as a responsible cause of the accident. While a plaintiff may properly rely on the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur even though he or she was not inactive at the time of the accident and participated in the events leading up to it, before the plaintiff can do so, the evidence must exclude his or her conduct as the responsible cause (246 Cal. App. 2d 180, 187) . The court found that the plaintiff's own testimony showed that despite the early hour and the dark and cloudy condition of the weather, she was driving her car with the headlights off. Although she saw the defendant's car some distance before the intersection in which the accident occurred, she admitted that she never saw it again until immediately prior to the collision. The uncontradicted evidence showed that both she and the defendant were proceeding at approximately the same speed. The court noted that the plaintiff's testimony gave no inkling regarding why she did not see what was directly in front of her and why she did nothing to avoid the collision until it was too late. Because the plaintiff's own testimony did not exclude her own conduct as a responsible cause of the accident, the curt concluded that the third condition for the application of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur had not been met (246 Cal. App. 2d 180, 187-188) .

In Vistica v. Presbyterian Hosp. (1967) 67 Cal. 2d 465, 62 Cal. Rptr. 577, 432 P.2d 193 , the surviving spouse and children of the decedent brought an action for wrongful death. The plaintiffs' decedent was a woman confined to the psychiatric ward of the defendant hospital. The decedent's doctors were aware of her suicidal tendencies and her desire to escape from the hospital. She apparently had attempted to pile up furniture so that she could climb out of an upper window in the solarium. Her body was later found on the street outside a window of the psychiatric ward. The trial court instructed the jury that application of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur required the jury to find that the decedent's death was not due to any voluntary action or contribution of her part. After the jury returned a verdict for the defendant, the plaintiffs appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed the judgment, finding that it was prejudicially erroneous for the trial court to give the above-mentioned jury instruction. Quoting Zentz v. Coca Cola Bottling Co. (1952) 39 Cal. 2d 436, 444-445, 247 P.2d 344 (discussed in § 165.342[3][b]), the court noted that application of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur requires that the accident not be attributable to any voluntary action or contribution on the part of the plaintiff. A plaintiff may properly rely on the doctrine even though he or she has participated in the events leading up to the accident, if the evidence excludes his or her conduct as the responsible cause. The Court noted that the plaintiff need not be entirely static, and need not be completely inactive, but there must be evidence removing the inference of his or her responsibility (67 Cal. 2d 465, 470) . The Court stated that the lower court's instruction on the third condition of the doctrine was insufficient without an explanation that the plaintiffs' decedent's voluntary conduct had to be the responsible cause of her death. The jury might have misunderstood the requirement to mean that decedent's voluntary participation in her own attempted escape precluded an inference that it was more probable than not that the hospital breached its duty of care to protect her from her own actions, voluntary or involuntary (67 Cal. 2d 465, 470-471) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
D. Proof by Application of Res Ipsa Loquitur Presumption
2. Presumption Not Applicable

16-165 California Points & Authorities §§ 165.363-165.369

[Reserved]

§§ 165.363[Reserved]

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
D. Proof by Application of Res Ipsa Loquitur Presumption
3. Presumption Rebutted

16-165 California Points & Authorities § 165.370

§ 165.370 Defendant Has Produced Sufficient Evidence to Rebut Res Ipsa Loquitur Presumption Under Evidence Code Section 646(b)

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

BECAUSE DEFENDANT HAS PRODUCED SUFFICIENT EVIDENCE TO SUSTAIN A FINDING THAT _____ [DEFENDANT WAS NOT NEGLIGENT and/or ANY NEGLIGENCE ON DEFENDANT'S PART WAS NOT A PROXIMATE CAUSE OF PLAINTIFF'S INJURY], DEFENDANT HAS REBUTTED THE RES IPSA LOQUITUR PRESUMPTION AFFECTING THE BURDEN OF PRODUCING EVIDENCE AS SET FORTH IN SECTION 646 OF THE EVIDENCE CODE. PLAINTIFF MUST THEREFORE PROVE, BY A PREPONDERANCE OF THE EVIDENCE, THAT PLAINTIFF'S INJURY WAS PROXIMATELY CAUSED BY DEFENDANT'S NEGLIGENCE.

A. Presumption Affects Burden of Producing Evidence. The judicial doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is a presumption affecting the burden of producing evidence (Evid. Code § 646(b)).

B. Evidence Proved That Defendant Was Not Negligent or That Defendant's Negligence Was Not Proximate Cause of Occurrence. A presumption affecting the burden of producing evidence imposes on the party against whom the presumption operates only the obligation to introduce evidence sufficient to support a finding of the nonexistence of the presumed fact, that is, that the defendant was not negligent or that the defendant's negligence was not the proximate cause of the occurrence (Frantz v. San Luis Med. Clinic (1978) 81 Cal. App. 3d 34, 42-43, 146 Cal. Rptr. 146 ; see Evid. Code §§ 604, 646(c)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that the res ipsa loquitur presumption should not be applied in the action because the defendant has rebutted the presumption, that is, the defendant contends that he or she has introduced evidence sufficient to support a finding that he or she was not negligent or that his or her negligence was not a proximate cause of the plaintiff's injury [see Evid. Code § 646(c)]. It should be combined with the form in § 165.371 if applicable to the particular case.

This issue may arise, for example, if the defendant raises this argument when challenging the propriety of jury instructions given at trial, on appeal, or on a motion for a new trial [see Frantz v. San Luis Med. Clinic (1978) 81 Cal. App. 3d 34, 41-47, 146 Cal. Rptr. 146 ; see also Code Civ. Proc. § 657(7)].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel may discuss how the defendant presented evidence sufficient to sustain a finding that he or she was not negligent or that his or her negligence was not the proximate cause of injury to the plaintiff [see Frantz v. San Luis Med. Clinic (1978) 81 Cal. App. 3d 34, 44, 146 Cal. Rptr. 146 ; see also Evid. Code § 646(c)].

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For related legal background, research and procedural guides, and a form of complaint regarding the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For additional points and authorities to combine with this form, see § 165.371. For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities in §§ 165.340 -165.344 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose the points and authorities in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Evidence Proved That Defendant Was Not Negligent or That Defendant's Negligence Was Not Proximate Cause of Occurrence

In Frantz v. San Luis Med. Clinic (1978) 81 Cal. App. 3d 34, 146 Cal. Rptr. 146 , the plaintiff sued a medical partnership, a physician, and a hospital for personal injuries allegedly suffered as a result of medical malpractice. The plaintiff contended that she was injured as a result of a nurse's negligently administered injection. In addition, she alleged that the nurse negligently failed to report the error to her doctor in time to remedy the injury. The trial court gave the several jury instructions on res ipsa loquitur. The jury found in favor of the plaintiff as against all the defendants. The defendants appealed, contending in part that the jury instructions were prejudicially erroneous.

The court of appeal reversed with regard to all the defendants, instructing the lower court to enter judgment in favor of the defendant physician and the defendant medical partnership. First, the court found that there was insufficient evidence to sustain a verdict against the doctor and the medical clinic (81 Cal. App. 3d 34, 39-40) . With regard to the defendant hospital, the court noted that Evid. Code § 646(b) provided that the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is a presumption affecting the burden of producing evidence. It is therefore to be distinguished from a presumption affecting the burden of proof [see Evid. Code § 606]. The court explained that a presumption that affects the burden of proof imposes on the party against whom it operates the burden of proving, by a preponderance of evidence or other appropriate burden of proof standard, the nonexistence of the presumed fact. On the other hand, a presumption that affects the burden of producing evidence imposes on the party against whom it operates only the obligation to introduce evidence that will support a finding of the nonexistence of the presumed fact [see Evid. Code § 604]. This burden, the court noted, is obviously far less than that of burden of proof (81 Cal. App. 3d 34, 42) . The court stated that if the plaintiff establishes the basic facts of the res ipsa loquitur presumption and the defendant does not contest the existence of these basic facts, but contests the existence of the presumed fact--that the defendant's negligence was the proximate cause of the plaintiff's injury--the defendant's burden is only to introduce evidence sufficient to support a finding that he or she was not negligent or that any negligence on his or her part was not a proximate cause of the occurrence [see Evid. Code § 646(c)]. If the defendant introduces this evidence, contesting the presumed conclusion of negligence, the presumptive effect of the doctrine vanishes, and the greatest effect that the doctrine can have in the case is to support an inference that the accident resulted from the defendant's negligence (81 Cal. App. 3d 34, 43-44) . In this case, the court felt that the modified jury instruction, based on BAJI No. 2.60, misled the jury because it implied that the jury was compelled to draw the inference of negligence in the absence of the defendant hospital's proof by a preponderance of evidence that it was not negligent nor the proximate cause of the plaintiff's injury. The court concluded that this imposed a greater burden on the defendant hospital than that required by statute (81 Cal. App. 3d 34, 44-45) . In addition, the court noted that the trial court gave several BAJI instructions in incorrect order, some of which conflicted with the modified instruction given earlier (81 Cal. App. 3d 34 , 45-46). The court concluded that the erroneous instructions constituted reversible error (81 Cal. App. 3d 34, 46-47) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
D. Proof by Application of Res Ipsa Loquitur Presumption
3. Presumption Rebutted

16-165 California Points & Authorities § 165.371

§ 165.371 Defendant's Rebuttal Nullifies Res Ipsa Loquitur Presumption

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

BECAUSE DEFENDANT HAS REBUTTED THE RES IPSA LOQUITUR PRESUMPTION AFFECTING THE BURDEN OF PRODUCING EVIDENCE AS SET FORTH IN SECTION 646 OF THE EVIDENCE CODE, THE PRESUMPTION THAT PLAINTIFF'S INJURY WAS PROXIMATELY CAUSED BY DEFENDANT'S NEGLIGENCE IS NULLIFIED. PLAINTIFF MUST THEREFORE PROVE THIS ELEMENT BY A PREPONDERANCE OF THE EVIDENCE.

A. Defendant Entitled to Jury Instruction on Effect of Presumption. If the evidence, or facts otherwise established, would support a res ipsa loquitur presumption, and the defendant has introduced evidence that would support a finding that he or she was not negligent or that any negligence on his or her part was not a proximate cause of the occurrence, the court may, and on request shall, instruct the jury to the effect that: (1) if the facts that would give rise to a res ipsa loquitur presumption are found or otherwise established, the jury may draw the inference from such facts that a proximate cause of the occurrence was some negligent conduct on the part of the defendant; and (2) the jury shall not find that a proximate cause of the occurrence was some negligent conduct on the part of the defendant unless the jury believes, after weighing all the evidence in the case and drawing such inferences therefrom as the jury believes are warranted, that it is more probable than not that the occurrence was caused by some negligent conduct on the part of the defendant (Evid. Code § 646(c)).

B. Presumption Nullified and Burden of Producing Evidence Shifted Back to Plaintiff. When the defendant produces evidence sufficient to sustain a finding that the defendant was not negligent or that any negligence on his or her part was not a proximate cause of the plaintiff's injury, the res ipsa loquitur presumption disappears and the plaintiff has the burden of proving by a preponderance of evidence that his or her injury was proximately caused by the negligence of the defendant; thus, the greatest effect that the doctrine can have in the case is to support an inference that the accident resulted from the defendant's negligence (Frantz v. San Luis Med. Clinic (1978) 81 Cal. App. 3d 34, 44, 146 Cal. Rptr. 146 ; see Evid. Code § 646(c)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that inasmuch as the defendant has rebutted the res ipsa loquitur presumption, the presumption is nullified, and the defendant is entitled to a jury instruction on the burden of producing evidence [see Evid. Code § 646(c); Frantz v. San Luis Med. Clinic (1978) 81 Cal. App. 3d 34, 44, 146 Cal. Rptr. 146] . It should be combined with the form in § 165.370 if applicable to the particular case.

This issue may arise in several procedural contexts. For example, the defendant may raise this argument when challenging the propriety of jury instructions given at trial, on appeal, or on a motion for a new trial [see Frantz v. San Luis Med. Clinic (1978) 81 Cal. App. 3d 34, 41-47, 146 Cal. Rptr. 146 ; see also Code Civ. Proc. § 657(7)].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel may discuss that the defendant presented evidence sufficient to sustain a finding that he or she was not negligent or that his or her negligence was not the proximate cause of injury to the plaintiff. Counsel should then argue that the res ipsa loquitur presumption has disappeared and that the plaintiff has the burden of proving by a preponderance of evidence that his or her injury was proximately caused by the defendant's negligence [see Frantz v. San Luis Med. Clinic (1978) 81 Cal. App. 3d 34, 44, 146 Cal. Rptr. 146 ; see also Evid. Code § 646(c)].

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For related legal background, research and procedural guides, and a form of complaint regarding the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For additional points and authorities to combine with this form, see § 165.370. For points and authorities supporting and opposing demurrers, see Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities in §§ 165.340 -165.344 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose the points and authorities in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Presumption Nullified and Burden of Producing Evidence Shifted Back to Plaintiff

The factual and procedural background of Frantz v. San Luis Med. Clinic (1978) 81 Cal. App. 3d 34, 146 Cal. Rptr. 146 , is discussed in § 165.370[3][a]. In that action, the court of appeal reversed a judgment for the plaintiff on the basis of the trial court's erroneous jury instructions regarding the presumption of producing evidence arising from the application of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur. The court noted that if the plaintiff establishes the basic facts of the res ipsa loquitur presumption and the defendant does not contest the basic facts, but contests the existence of the presumed fact--that the defendant's negligence was a proximate cause of the plaintiff's injury--the defendant's burden is only to introduce evidence sufficient to support a finding that he or she was not negligent or that his or her negligence was not a proximate cause of the occurrence [Evid. Code § 646(c)]. If the defendant introduces this evidence, contesting the presumed conclusion of negligence, the doctrine vanishes, and the greatest effect that the doctrine can have in the case is to support an inference that the accident resulted from the defendant's negligence (81 Cal. App. 3d 34, 43-44) . The court noted that it is undisputed in light of Evid. Code § 646 that when the defendant produces evidence sufficient to sustain a finding that the defendant was not negligent or that any negligence on his or her part was not a proximate cause of the plaintiff's injury, the res ipsa loquitur presumption disappears. The plaintiff then has the burden of proving, by a preponderance of evidence, that the plaintiff's injury was proximately caused by the negligence of the defendant (81 Cal. App. 3d 34, 44) . In this case, the court concluded that the jury instructions given by the court on the res ipsa loquitur presumption were incorrect, contradictory, confusing. The court therefore reversed the judgment (81 Cal. App. 3d 34, 46-47) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
D. Proof by Application of Res Ipsa Loquitur Presumption
3. Presumption Rebutted

16-165 California Points & Authorities §§ 165.372-165.379

[Reserved]

§§ 165.372[Reserved]

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
E. Defenses
1. Comparative Negligence

16-165 California Points & Authorities § 165.380

§ 165.380 Comparative Negligence Applies to Assess Liability in Proportion to Negligence

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

BECAUSE DEFENDANT HAS SHOWN THAT PLAINTIFF'S CONDUCT WAS A PROXIMATE CAUSE OF THE PLAINTIFF'S INJURIES, THE COURT SHOULD APPLY PRINCIPLES OF COMPARATIVE NEGLIGENCE IN ASSESSING LIABILITY ACCORDING TO THE PROPORTION OF NEGLIGENCE ATTRIBUTABLE TO THE PARTIES.

A. Liability Assessed in Proportion to Negligence. In all actions for negligence resulting in injury to persons or property, the contributory negligence of the person injured in person or property does not bar recovery, but the damages awarded must be diminished in proportion to the amount of negligence attributable to the person recovering (Li v. Yellow Cab Co. (1975) 13 Cal. 3d 804, 828-829, 119 Cal. Rptr. 858, 532 P.2d 1226).

B. Proof That Plaintiff's Negligence Was Proximate Cause of Harm Warrants Application of Comparative Negligence. Once the defendant has established that the plaintiff's negligence was a proximate cause of a portion of the plaintiffs' harm, the principles of comparative negligence apply to apportion liability (see Potter v. Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. (1993) 6 Cal. 4th 965, 1011, 25 Cal. Rptr. 2d 550, 863 P.2d 795).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that the plaintiff's negligence was a proximate cause of a portion of the plaintiff's injuries, and that therefore the court should apply the principles of comparative negligence to apportion liability [see Potter v. Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. (1993) 6 Cal. 4th 965, 1011, 25 Cal. Rptr. 2d 550, 863 P.2d 795 ; Li v. Yellow Cab Co. (1975) 13 Cal. 3d 804, 828-829, 119 Cal. Rptr. 858, 532

P.2d 1226] .

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel may argue that the defendant has provided sufficient evidence to show that the plaintiff's negligence was a proximate cause of a portion of the plaintiff's injuries. Counsel should further argue that the court should then apply principles of comparative negligence to apportion liability between the defendant and the plaintiff, or among other parties as appropriate to the case.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For related legal background, research and procedural guides, and a form of affirmative defense of comparative negligence, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Liability Assessed in Proportion to Negligence

In Li v. Yellow Cab Co. (1975) 13 Cal. 3d 804, 119 Cal. Rptr. 858, 532 P.2d 1226 , the plaintiff brought an action against a taxicab company and the driver of a taxicab, to recover for personal injuries and property damage suffered when her automobile was struck by a cab. The trial court found that when the defendant driver entered the intersection, he was traveling at an unsafe speed and that the traffic light was yellow. Nevertheless, the court found that the plaintiff turned left across the defendant's lane while a vehicle approached from the opposite direction so closely as to constitute an immediate hazard. Finding that the plaintiff was contributorily negligent and that her negligence was a proximate cause of the collision, the court held that she was barred from recovery. Judgment for the defendants was entered accordingly.

The Supreme Court reversed, holding that the "all or nothing" rule of contributory negligence as a complete bar to the plaintiff's recovery is superseded by a system of "pure" comparative negligence, the fundamental purpose of which is to assign responsibility and liability for damage in direct proportion to the amount of negligence of each of the parties. Therefore, the Court stated that in all actions for negligence resulting in injury to persons or property, the contributory negligence of the person injured in person or property shall not bar recovery, but the damages awarded shall be diminished in proportion to the amount of negligence attributable to the person recovering. In addition, the Court stated that the doctrine of "last clear chance" is abolished; and the defense of assumption of the risk is also abolished to the extent that it is merely a variant of the principles of contributory negligence. Both of these concepts are to be subsumed under the general process of assessing liability in proportion to negligence (13 Cal. 3d 804, 828-829) .

NOTE:

The adoption of the principles of comparative negligence in Li v. Yellow Cab Co. (1975) 13 Cal. 3d 804, 119 Cal. Rptr. 858, 532 P.2d 1226 , did not have the effect of abolishing the term, "contributory negligence," nor did it abolish the concept of contributory negligence, meaning negligence on the part of the plaintiff contributing causally to the plaintiff's injury [Wittenbach v. Ryan (1976) 63 Cal. App. 3d 712, 718, 134 Cal. Rptr. 47 ; see Li v. Yellow Cab Co. (1975) 13 Cal. 3d 804, 829, 119 Cal. Rptr. 858, 532 P.2d 1226] . Thus, the term "contributory negligence" is still used, but a finding of contributory negligence will no longer completely bar the plaintiff's recovery. If the trier of fact finds that the plaintiff was also at fault for the accident, it must reduce the total amount of the plaintiff's damages by the proportion or percentage of negligence attributable to the plaintiff [Drust v. Drust (1980) 113 Cal. App. 3d 1, 6 n.1, 169 Cal. Rptr. 750 ; see Li v. Yellow Cab Co. (1975) 13 Cal. 3d 804, 829, 119 Cal. Rptr. 858, 532 P.2d 1226] .

[b] Proof That Plaintiff's Negligence Was Proximate Cause of Harm Warrants Application of Comparative Negligence

Potter v. Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. (1993) 6 Cal. 4th 965, 25 Cal. Rptr. 2d 550, 863 P.2d 795 , was a suit brought by landowners living near a landfill. The plaintiffs claimed that the defendants had dumped toxic waste materials at the landfill, which contaminated their domestic water wells and subjected them to prolonged exposure to carcinogens. The trial court found the defendant negligent and entered judgment in the plaintiffs' favor, including damages for the plaintiff's lifelong fear of developing cancer and resultant emotional distress. The defendant appealed, claiming that the court had erred by not considering the plaintiff's comparative negligence. The court of appeal affirmed, rejecting the defendant's argument that, under comparative fault principles, the plaintiffs' long histories of cigarette smoking should reduce or entirely preclude their recovery for fear of cancer because cigarette smoke contains more than 2,500 times the concentration of benzene, a carcinogen that was detected in the plaintiffs' contaminated well water. The court reasoned that comparative fault is applicable only if the plaintiffs' negligence is a proximate cause of the injury. The plaintiffs' smoking in this case was wholly unrelated to the circumstances that caused the contamination of the plaintiffs' water supply. For comparative fault principles to apply, the court concluded, the plaintiffs' conduct would have had to contribute, in some manner to this contamination (6 Cal. 4th 965, 1010-1011) . The defendants sought review by the California Supreme Court.

The Supreme Court affirmed, although it found the court of appeal's reasoning erroneous because damages are apportioned under comparative fault principles based on the various causes contributing to a plaintiff's harm, as opposed to contributing to a particular defendant's negligence. Thus, the fact that the plaintiff's smoking did not contribute to the contamination of their well water is irrelevant. However, the Supreme Court upheld the court of appeal's decision because the defendant had not introduced any evidence at trial establishing that any portion of the plaintiffs' fear of cancer was attributable to their own smoking. If the defendant had done so, comparative fault principles would have been applicable (6 Cal. 4th 965, 1011) .

110 of 199 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
E. Defenses
1. Comparative Negligence

16-165 California Points & Authorities §§ 165.381-165.399

[Reserved]

§§ 165.381[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
E. Defenses
2. Assumption of Risk

16-165 California Points & Authorities § 165.400

§ 165.400 Primary Assumption of Risk Bars Recovery if Defendant Owed No Duty of Care to Plaintiff

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PRIMARY ASSUMPTION OF RISK BARS PLAINTIFF'S RECOVERY FOR INJURIES RECEIVED IF PLAINTIFF CHOSE TO ENCOUNTER A KNOWN RISK, BECAUSE DEFENDANT OWED NO DUTY TO PLAINTIFF AND PLAINTIFF ASSUMED RISK OF INCURRING THE INJURIES RECEIVED.

A. Primary Assumption of Risk Bars Recovery. In cases involving "primary assumption of risk," in which by virtue of the nature of the activity and the parties' relationship to the activity, the defendant owes no legal duty to protect the plaintiff from the particular risk of harm that caused the injury, the doctrine of assumption of the risk operates as a complete bar to the plaintiff's recovery. If the defendant has no duty of care to the plaintiff to eliminate a risk or protect the plaintiff against it, the plaintiff's knowingly encountering that risk is primary assumption of risk that bars the plaintiff's recovery (Knight v. Jewett (1992) 3 Cal. 4th 296, 314-315, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 2, 834 P.2d 696 ; Cohen v. McIntyre (1993) 16 Cal. App. 4th 650, 655, 20 Cal. Rptr. 2d 143).

B. No Relationship With Plaintiff Creating Duty to Avoid Increasing Risks Inherent in Plaintiff's Activity. If no relationship exists between the plaintiff and the defendant, and instead the parties are independent actors separately pursuing their own activities, and there is no policy reason for imposing a duty, a defendant has no duty to avoid increasing the risks inherent in the plaintiff's activity (Parsons v. Crown Disposal Co. (1997) 15 Cal. 4th 456, 483, 63 Cal. Rptr. 2d 291, 936 P.2d 70).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that the defendant is not liable for negligence because the plaintiff is barred from recovery under the doctrine of primary assumption of risk. The basis of this contention is that the defendant owed no legal duty to eliminate the risk that the plaintiff knowingly chose to encounter or to protect the plaintiff from that risk [see Knight v. Jewett (1992) 3 Cal. 4th 296, 314-315, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 2, 834 P.2d 696] . It should be combined with any of the forms in §§ 165.401 -165.402 that are applicable to the particular case.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel may argue that the plaintiff engaged in an activity with an inherent known risk, and that the defendant owed the plaintiff no legal duty to protect the plaintiff from the particular risk of harm, or to avoid increasing the risk inherent in the activity.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For related legal background, research and procedural guides, and forms of the affirmative defense of assumption of the risk, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender). For discussion and forms related to primary and secondary assumption of risk as defenses to a premises liability action, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 421, Premises Liability (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For additional points and authorities to combine with this form, see §§ 165.401 -165.402. For points and authorities supporting and opposing demurrers, see Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities in §§ 165.410- 411 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose the points and authorities in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Primary Assumption of Risk Bars Recovery

In Knight v. Jewett (1992) 3 Cal. 4th 296, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 2, 834 P.2d 696 , the plaintiff was injured while playing touch football when the defendant stepped on her hand. The injury ultimately resulted in the amputation of her little finger. The plaintiff commenced an action seeking damages from the defendant on theories of negligence and assault and battery. After filing an answer, the defendant moved for summary judgment, and the trial court granted the motion. On appeal, the court of appeal affirmed the judgment.

The Supreme Court, in the lead opinion by Justice George and joined by Chief Justice Lucas and Justice Arabian, affirmed the judgment of the court of appeal upholding the summary judgment entered by the trial court. The Court recapped its reexamination of the common law doctrine of contributory negligence in Li v. Yellow Cab. Co. (1975) 13 Cal. 3d 804, 824, 119 Cal. Rptr. 858, 532 P.2d 1226 , discussed in § 165.380[3][a] (3 Cal. 4th 296, 304) . With respect to the effect of the adoption of comparative negligence on the assumption of risk doctrine, the Court referred to the statement in Li that in instances in which a plaintiff "unreasonably undertakes to encounter a specific known risk imposed by a defendant's negligence, the plaintiff's conduct, although he may encounter that risk in a prudent manner, is in reality a form of contributory negligence." (3 Cal. 4th 296, 305-307) . After a review of appellate decisions construing Li, the Court concluded that the decisions, regardless whether they reached the correct result on the facts at issue, had misinterpreted Li by suggesting that Li contemplated less favorable legal treatment for a plaintiff who reasonably encounters a known risk (and was therefore barred from recovery) than for a plaintiff who unreasonably encounters such a risk (whose damages would be apportioned under comparative fault principles) (3 Cal. 4th 296, 307) . The Court summarized its conclusions regarding the current state of the doctrine of assumption of risk in light of the adoption of comparative fault principles in Li, as follows: In cases involving "primary assumption of risk," in which by virtue of the nature of the activity and the parties' relationship to the activity, the defendant owes no legal duty to protect the plaintiff from the particular risk of harm that caused the injury, the doctrine continues to operate as a complete bar to the plaintiff's recovery. In cases nvolving "secondary assumption of risk," in which the defendant does owe a duty of care to the plaintiff, but the plaintiff proceeds to encounter a known risk imposed by the defendant's breach of duty, the doctrine is merged into the comparative fault scheme, and the trier of fact, in apportioning the loss resulting from the injury, may consider the relative responsibility of the parties (3 Cal. 4th 296, 314-315) .

In applying the defendant's duty approach to the facts before the Court, the lead opinion found that the overwhelming majority of the cases, both within and outside California, that have addressed the issue of coparticipant liability in a sport such as that involved in this case, have concluded that it is improper to hold a sports participant liable to a coparticipant for ordinary careless conduct committed during the sport. Further, the cases have concluded that liability properly may be imposed on a participant only when he or she intentionally injures another player or engages in reckless conduct that is totally outside the range of the ordinary activity involved in the sport (3 Cal. 4th 296, 318) . Thus, the court concluded that a participant in an active sport breaches a legal duty of care to other participants--that is, engages in conduct that properly may subject him or her to financial liability--only if the participant intentionally injures another player or engages in conduct that is so reckless as to be totally outside the range of ordinary activity involved in the sport (3 Cal. 4th 296, 320) . The Court noted that a defendant has no duty to eliminate or protect a plaintiff against risks inherent in the sport, but does have a duty of due care not to increase the risks to a coparticipant over and above those risks inherent in the sport (3 Cal. 4th 296, 315-316) . The Court concluded that the defendant did not have a legal duty of care to prevent the injury suffered by the plaintiff, and was therefore entitled to summary judgment (3 Cal. 4th 296, 321) .

Justice Mosk, in his concurring and dissenting opinion, concurred "generally" with the analysis set forth in Part II of the Court's lead opinion (in which the duty analysis was set forth), but stated that he would have gone further, and would have eliminated the implied assumption of risk doctrine entirely, and simply applied comparative fault principles to determine liability (3 Cal. 4th 296, 321-322) . He also concluded that the liability of sports participants should be limited to those cases in which their misconduct falls outside the range of ordinary activity involved in the sport. Thus, he concluded that "the kind of overexuberant conduct that is alleged here was not of that nature," and that the defendant was entitled to summary judgment.

Justice Kennard in her dissent criticized the opinion and maintained the view that Ordway v. Superior Court (1988) 198 Cal. App. 3d 98, 102-107, 243 Cal. Rptr. 536 , correctly analyzed the issue. Justice Kennard stated that the defense of implied assumption of risk survives Li's adoption of a system of comparative fault, and that the defense remains a complete bar to recovery in negligence cases in which the plaintiff has knowingly and voluntarily consented to encounter a specific risk (3 Cal. 4th 296, 331) .

Justices Panelli and Baxter, although concurring in the result reached by the "majority" opinion, dissented from the reasoning and would have applied the "consent-based" analysis of Justice Kennard's dissenting opinion (3 Cal. 4th 296, 322) .

Cohen v. McIntyre (1993) 16 Cal. App. 4th 650, 20 Cal. Rptr. 2d 143 , was an action for personal injuries brought by a plaintiff veterinarian who was treating a dog owned by the defendant. The defendant knew that the dog had bitten three people in the preceding two years. At the plaintiff's request, the defendant muzzled her dog after he snapped at the plaintiff, who was trying to put the dog on the examining table. The plaintiff removed the muzzle himself after completing the examination, and the dog then bit him several times. The plaintiff did not ask for, and the defendant did not volunteer, any information about the dog's propensity to bite. The plaintiff filed a complaint alleging that the defendant knew of the dog's vicious propensities but had negligently failed to warn the plaintiff. The trial court granted summary judgment to the defendant, holding that the plaintiff was barred from recovery because of his assumption of risk, and the court of appeals affirmed. The Supreme Court granted review and ultimately transferred the case back to the court of appeals for reconsideration in light of its decision in Knight v. Jewett (1992) 3 Cal. 4th 296, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 2, 834 P.2d 696 .

Following the lead opinion in Knight, the court of appeals focused on whether the defendant owed any legal duty to the plaintiff. The court noted that under the veterinarian's rule, an extension of the firefighter's rule, being bitten by a dog is an occupational hazard that veterinarians accept by entering this profession, just as fighting fires in which they may be injured is a danger that firefighters are employed to confront. In either case, the ordinary duty of care of the defendant, who created the risk either by starting the fire or by failing to warn of an animal's vicious propensities, is negated [see Nelson v. Hall (1985) 165 Cal. App. 3d 709, 211 Cal. Rptr. 668 ; Baker v. Superior Court (1982) 129 Cal. App. 3d 710, 181 Cal. Rptr. 311] . Because the defendant had no duty to warn the plaintiff, primary assumption of risk applies to bar the plaintiff's recovery unless the defendant's conduct was intentional or so reckless as to fall outside the range of behavior ordinarily expected. The court held that the defendant's silence was neither intentional nor reckless, noting that the defendant's behavior was understandable because the dog's snapping and the plaintiff's request that the dog be muzzled gave her no reason to believe she needed to tell the plaintiff about the dog's history. Having concluded that primary assumption of risk applied, the court affirmed the grant of summary judgment (16 Cal. App. 4th 650, 654-666) .

[b] No Relationship With Plaintiff Creating Duty to Avoid Increasing Risks Inherent in Plaintiff's Activity

In Parsons v. Crown Disposal Co. (1997) 15 Cal. 4th 456, 476, 63 Cal. Rptr. 2d 291, 936 P.2d 70), the plaintiff was thrown from the horse on which he was riding after the horse was frightened by loud noises from a nearby garbage truck that was operating in its normal manner. The plaintiff sought recovery for his injuries from the defendant garbage company but the trial court granted summary judgment for the defendant. The court of appeal reversed, concluding that under the Court's decision in Knight v. Jewett (1992) 3 Cal. 4th 296, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 2, 834 P.2d 696 [see § 165.400[3][a]], the defendant owed a duty to the plaintiff to avoid increasing the risk of harm over that inherent in the recreational activity of horseback riding, and that there was a triable issue of fact as to whether the defendant had breached that duty.

The Supreme Court held that the court of appeal erred in reversing the trial court judgment, concluding that the court of appeal improperly interpreted its decision in Knight. In Knight the Supreme Court held that a participant in an active sport owes only a limited duty of care to coparticipants, a duty to avoid intentional injury or conduct so reckless as to be totally outside the range of ordinary activity involved in the sport. In the course of its discussion in Knight the Court mentioned that the defendants generally have a duty to use due care not to increase the risks to a participant over and above those inherent in the sport, and cited as an example, the duty of a commercial sporting operator to maintain its premises or equipment so as not to expose its patrons to an increased risk of harm. The court of appeal read the above passage in Knight as imposing on the defendants, generally, a duty owed to all persons engaged in a sport or similar activity, not to increase the risks of harm over those inherent in the activity in which the plaintiff happens to be engaged and as a result concluded that the defendant garbage company owed a duty not to increase the risks to the plaintiff over those inherent in the sport of recreational horseback riding.

The Supreme Court ruled that the decision in Knight offered no support for the court of appeal's conclusion. While the Court acknowledged the above passage in Knight, it determined that the statement was made in the context of a discussion of the duty owed by parties who have some organized relationship with each other and to a sporting activity. The Court ruled that the statement is not support for a general duty not to increase the risk inherent in whatever sporting or recreational activity a plaintiff happens to be pursuing, regardless of the lack of relationship between the parties. On the contrary, the Court held that where, as here, no relationship exists between the plaintiff and the defendant, and instead the parties are independent actors separately pursuing their own activities, and there is no policy reason for imposing a duty, a defendant has no duty to avoid increasing the risks inherent in the plaintiff's activity (15 Cal. 4th 456, 482-483, 63 Cal. Rptr. 2d 291, 936 P.2d 70).

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Primary Assumption of Risk Bars Recovery

In Levinson v. Owens (2009) 176 Cal. App. 4th 1534, 98 Cal. Rptr. 3d 779 , the court of appeal held that the primary assumption of risk doctrine provided a complete defense to the owners of a cattle ranch who had invited friends to their ranch for a barbecue and one guest who asked to ride one of their horses was injured. The guest assured the owners that she had ridden before, but she lost control of the horse, which broke into a gallop and swerved suddenly, throwing her into a fence. The court of appeal noted that while the horse was trained for work on the cattle ranch, a fact that the guest should have realized under the circumstances, the owners had no reason to know that the horse would bolt without apparent reason, as he had been a gentle horse previously around guests and when being ridden. Moreover, the owners did not purport to be horseback riding instructors or coaches and had not organized a riding event. The court concluded that the owners were entitled to take the guest at her word when she assured them that she had experience as a rider, especially in light of the fact that the guest appeared confident and in control of the horse when she first mounted. Under those circumstances, the owners had no duty to provide the guest with instructions on how to ride or control the horse (176 Cal. App. 4th 1534, 1549-1551) . In addition, the court also concluded that one comment made to the guest while the stirrups were being adjusted telling her not to pull back on the reins could not reasonably be interpreted to mean, even by a rider with only minimal experience, that she should never pull back on the reins to control the horse, and thus did not constitute conduct that increased the risks inherent in horseback riding (176 Cal. App. 4th 1534, 1552) .

In Beninati v. Black Rock City, LLC (2009) 175 Cal. App. 4th 650, 96 Cal. Rptr. 3d 105 , the court of appeal held that the primary assumption of risk doctrine provided a complete defense to the possessors of land upon which a "Burning Man" festival was held when a participant tripped and fell, burning his hands, after voluntarily entering the aftermath of a large, man-shaped bonfire. An experienced participant in the festival, plaintiff walked into the remnants of the large fire in order to ceremoniously burn a photograph of a recently-deceased friend. The court held that plaintiff was aware of the risks inherent in walking into the remnants of the fire, which was still actively burning in spots, and that the risk of falling and being burned was inherent, obvious, and necessary to the event (175 Cal. App. 4th 650, 658-659) . The fact that plaintiff could not see beneath the flames and ash that covered the ground did not render the risk of tripping less obvious. The court also concluded that plaintiff had failed to provide any evidence that defendant had done anything to increase the risk of harm inherent in the activity (175 Cal. App. 4th 650, 660-661) .

In McGarry v. Sax (2008) 158 Cal. App. 4th 983 , 70 Cal. Rptr. 3d 519 , primary assumption of risk was a defense when plaintiff was injured by co-participants in a "product toss" at a skateboarding competition sponsored by a skateboard store. In this particular product toss, professional skateboarders who had been performing at the event in the store's parking lot threw a skateboard deck (a skateboard without wheels or other hardware) into a crowd of fans located in a designated area, who were to compete with each other to gain possession of the board. Plaintiff, who was a willing participant, initially caught the board, but eventually fell to the ground and was injured by other participants, some of whom fell on top of him. Concluding that primary assumption of risk was a complete defense to plaintiff's negligence suit against the store, the court of appeal noted that the product toss had aspects of a competitive sporting activity and the inherent risk of injury from participating was self-evident, despite plaintiff's claim that he personally did not appreciate the risk of injury (158 Cal. App. 4th 983, 1000) .

In Truong v. Nguyen (2007) 156 Cal. App. 4th 865, 67 Cal. Rptr. 3d 675 , a young girl was killed while riding as a passenger on a two-seater personal watercraft that was struck by another personal watercraft. The girl's watercraft was being driven by a friend at a modest rate of speed of 5 to 10 miles per hour at the time of the collision. In a suit brought by the girl's parents, the trial court entered summary judgment for the owner and operator of the other watercraft and the court of appeal affirmed. The court of appeal held that the primary assumption of risk doctrine applied to the activity of riding a personal watercraft, even if the rider is merely a passenger on the watercraft and the watercraft is being operated at a modest rate of speed. The court noted that a personal watercraft is open to the elements, with no hull or cabin, and is designed for high performance, speed, and quick turning maneuvers. In addition, unlike the benign activity of riding in a boat, riding a personal watercraft requires some physical exertion and balance by the passenger to hold onto the operator or grips or handles on the vessel to avoid being thrown off. Because plaintiffs did not allege that the conduct of the operator of the other watercraft was intentional, reckless, or otherwise outside the range of ordinary activity involved in the use of a personal watercraft, the primary assumption of risk doctrine was a complete defense (156 Cal. App. 4th 865, 887-891) .

In Rostai v. Neste Enters. (2006) 138 Cal. App. 4th 326 , the plaintiff suffered a heart attack due to overexertion during his first workout at a gym with a personal trainer. The plaintiff sued the trainer and the gym for negligence, arguing that the trainer failed to adequately assess the plaintiff's physical condition and his cardiac risk factors prior to putting him through the workout that triggered the heart attack. The plaintiff also argued that the primary assumption of risk doctrine did not apply to the activity because it was not a "sport." Nevertheless, the trial court granted summary judgment in favor of the trainer, and the court of appeal affirmed. The court of appeal held that fitness training under the guidance of a personal trainer is a physical activity involving an element of risk or danger to which the primary assumption of risk doctrine may be applied. The risks of injury inherent in fitness training may include injury to the obvious muscles, such as those in the legs and arms, but also to less obvious areas, such as the heart. The court concluded that the trainer did nothing more than push the plaintiff beyond his comfort level, which was inherent in the training regimen and consistent with the goals of the activity (138 Cal. App. 4th 326, 333-334).

In Saville v. Sierra College (2005) 133 Cal. App. 4th 857, 868-869, 36 Cal. Rptr. 3d 515 , the plaintiff was a student in a community college police officer training class who was injured while participating in training exercises demonstrating police officer arrest and control maneuvers. The trial court granted summary judgment for the community college on the basis of the primary assumption of risk doctrine, and the court of appeal affirmed. The court of appeal noted that the risk of injury was inherent in the physically-demanding maneuvers and that the instructors had no duty to eliminate all risk of injury to the students, because doing so would invariably chill vigorous participation in the learning exercises. The maneuvers, which were integral to the purpose of the class, could not be learned without incurring the risk of some injury. Although not a sport or employment activity, the classroom maneuvers were a type of activity to which the defense could apply, and the plaintiff was an adult who voluntarily participated in the class activities (133 Cal. App. 4th 857, 867-871) .

[b] No Relationship With Plaintiff Creating Duty to Avoid Increasing Risks Inherent in Plaintiff's Activity

In Calhoon v. Lewis (2000) 81 Cal. App. 4th 108, 96 Cal. Rptr. 2d 394 , the plaintiff, at the invitation of a friend, arrived at his friend's parents' home to pick up his friend so that the two could drive downtown to visit the friend's girlfriend. The plaintiff, who began skateboarding in the driveway while he waited for his friend to get ready to leave, fell and impaled himself on a pipe inside a planter located in the driveway. The plaintiff sued the owners of the home, alleging negligence and premises liability. The court of appeal affirmed summary judgment for the defendants on the basis of primary assumption of risk, rejecting the plaintiff's argument that the defendants increased the risk of his injury by concealing a pipe in the planter. First, the court concluded that the injury was caused because the plaintiff fell, which was an inherent risk of skateboarding, and that the pipe in the planter did not increase the plaintiff's risk of falling, even though it may have increased the severity of his injury when he did fall (81 Cal. App. 4th 108, 116) . Second, relying primarily on the Supreme Court's analysis in Parsons v. Crown Disposal Co., discussed in § 165.400[3][b], the court of appeal held that the defendants owed no duty to the plaintiff not to increase the risks to him while he was skateboarding. Unlike a commercial facility that might provide a course for skateboarding, the defendants did not hold out their driveway as an appropriate or safe place to skateboard and did not otherwise have any organized relationship with the plaintiff's skateboarding (81 Cal. App. 4th 108, 116-117) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 16 Chapters 160-169 MOTIONS TO STRIKE---to---PARTITION
CHAPTER 165 NEGLIGENCE
PART II. FORMS
E. Defenses
2. Assumption of Risk

16-165 California Points & Authorities § 165.401

§ 165.401 Primary Assumption of Risk Bars Recovery by Plaintiff Injured by Coparticipant in Active Sport

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PRIMARY ASSUMPTION OF RISK BARS PLAINTIFF'S RECOVERY FOR INJURIES RECEIVED DURING PLAINTIFF'S VOLUNTARY PARTICIPATION IN AN ACTIVE SPORT BECAUSE DEFENDANT'S ACTIONS WERE NOT INTENTIONAL OR RECKLESS CONDUCT TOTALLY OUTSIDE THE RANGE OF THE ORDINARY ACTIVITY INVOLVED IN THE SPORT AND DID NOT INCREASE THE RISK TO PLAINTIFF BEYOND THE RISK INHERENT IN THAT SPORT.

A. Defendant's Duty Is Merely to Avoid Intentional or Reckless Conduct. Under the doctrine of primary assumption of risk, the duty of participants in active sports toward their coparticipants is merely to avoid either intentionally injuring those coparticipants or engaging in conduct so reckless as to be totally outside the range of the ordinary activity involved in the sport (Ford v. Gouin (1992) 3 Cal. 4th 339, 342, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 30, 834 P.2d 724 ; Knight v. Jewett (1992) 3 Cal. 4th 296, 320, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 2, 834 P.2d 696).

B. Defendant's Conduct Within Range of Ordinary Activity of Sport. A plaintiff who voluntarily participates in an active sport is barred by primary assumption of risk from recovering for injuries resulting from a defendant's careless or negligent conduct that is within the range of ordinary activity of that sport and that does not increase the risk to the plaintiff over and above the risk inherent in the sport (Ford v. Gouin (1992) 3 Cal. 4th 339, 342, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 30, 834 P.2d 724 ; Knight v. Jewett (1992) 3 Cal. 4th 296, 320, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 2, 834 P.2d 696).

[Optional] C. Rule Applies to Student-Teacher Relationship. The primary assumption of risk doctrine applies to coaches, trainers, and instructors, and to support a cause of action in cases in which it is alleged that a sports instructor has required a student to perform beyond the student's capacity or without providing adequate instruction, a plaintiff must prove that the instructor intended to cause an injury to the student or acted recklessly in engaging in conduct that is totally outside the range of ordinary activity involved in teaching or coaching the sport (Kahn v. East Side Union High Sch. Dist. (2003) 31 Cal. 4th 990, 1011, 4 Cal. Rptr. 3d 103, 75 P.3d 30 ; see also Rodrigo v. Koryo Martial Arts (2002) 100 Cal. App. 4th 946, 956, 122 Cal. Rptr. 2d 832).

[Optional] D. Local Ordinance Does Not Impose Duty on Defendant That Abrogates Rule. A local ordinance placing a duty on skiers to ski in a safe and reasonable manner, does not alter the rule that a skier owes a duty to fellow skiers not to injure them intentionally or to act recklessly or abrogate the assumption of risk defense (Cheong v. Antablin (1997) 16 Cal. 4th 1063, 1069-1070, 68 Cal. Rptr. 2d 859, 946 P.2d 817).

[Optional] E. State Statute Does Not Impose Duty That Abrogates Rule. A statute that provides a general standard of care applicable to a particular activity does not abrogate the primary assumption of risk doctrine unless the language of the statute explicitly demonstrates a clear intent to do so (Whelihan v. Espinoza (2003) 110 Cal. App. 4th 1566, 1575, 2 Cal. Rptr. 3d 883).

[Optional] F. Primary Assumption of Risk May Protect Defendant Engaged in Different Activity Than Plaintiff. The primary assumption of risk doctrine protects a party who is pursuing a sport in an appropriate venue from liability for an injury to another party who is engaged in a different activity in the same venue (Mastro v. Petrick (2001) 93 Cal. App. 4th 83, 90, 112 Cal. Rptr. 2d 185).

[Optional] G. Intentional Conduct Within Ordinary Range of Activity Not Actionable. Intentional conduct that is within the ordinary range of activity inherent in the particular sport is not actionable as a tort (Avila v. Citrus Cmty. Coll. Dist. (2006) 38 Cal. 4th 148, 161-165, 41 Cal. Rptr. 3d 299, 131 P.3d 383).

[Optional] H. Primary Assumption of Risk Applies to Non-Contact Sports. The primary assumption of risk doctrine may be applied to non-contact sports such as golf (Shin v. Ahn (2007) 42 Cal. 4th 482, 486, 64 Cal. Rptr. 3d 803, 165 P.3d 581).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that a defendant is not liable for negligence because the plaintiff is barred from recovery under the primary assumption of risk doctrine [see Knight v. Jewett (1992) 3 Cal. 4th 296, 320, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 2, 834 P.2d 696] . The ground of the contention is that the defendant has breached no legal duty to protect the plaintiff from harm by virtue of the fact that the parties were coparticipants in an active sport and the defendant did not commit intentional or reckless misconduct or increase the risks inherent in the sport [see Ford v. Gouin (1992) 3 Cal. 4th 339, 342, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 30, 834 P.2d 724] . Optional Paragraph C may be submitted to if the injuries arose between teacher and student [see Rodrigo v. Koryo Martial Arts (2002) 100 Cal. App. 4th 946, 956, 122 Cal. Rptr. 2d 832] . Optional Paragraph D may be submitted if the plaintiff raises a local ordinance that conflicts with the case law with respect to primary assumption of the risk in sports participation [see Cheong v. Antablin (1997) 16 Cal. 4th 1063, 1069-1070, 68 Cal. Rptr. 2d 859, 946 P.2d 817] . Optional Paragraph E may be submitted if the plaintiff raises the argument that the primary assumption of risk doctrine does not apply because the defendant was engaged in a different sporting activity in the same venue [see Mastro v. Petrick (2001) 93 Cal. App. 4th 83, 89-91, 112 Cal. Rptr. 2d 185] .

This form should be combined with any of the forms in § 165.400 and § 165.402 that are applicable to the particular case.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel may refer to facts showing that (1) the parties were coparticipants, (2) in an active sport, whether competitive or noncompetitive, and (3) the defendant's conduct was neither intentional nor reckless and did not increase the risk to the plaintiff over and above the risk inherent in the sport.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For related legal background, research and procedural guides, and forms of the affirmative defense of assumption of the risk, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For additional points and authorities to combine with this form, see § 165.401 and § 165.402. For points and authorities supporting and opposing demurrers, see Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings . For points and authorities regarding Primary assumption of risk that may be used if the defendant is the owner or possessor of property, see Ch. 178, Premises Liability .

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Defendant's Duty Is Merely to Avoid Intentional or Reckless Conduct

Ford v. Gouin (1992) 3 Cal. 4th 339, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 30, 834 P.2d 724 , involved an action for negligence against the driver of a boat for injuries sustained while the plaintiff was waterskiing barefoot and backward. The plaintiff was injured when the back of his head struck a tree limb that extended over the channel from one of the riverbanks. The defendant filed a motion for summary judgment, asserting that even had he been negligent in driving the boat, the plaintiff nonetheless was totally barred from bringing the action by the reasonable implied assumption of risk doctrine. The trial court granted summary judgment in favor of the defendant. On appeal, the court of appeal affirmed the judgment and the plaintiff sought review by the Supreme Court.

The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment of the court of appeal. The Court cited the lead opinion in Knight v. Jewett (1992) 3 Cal. 4th 296, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 2, 834 P.2d 696 [see § 165.400[3][a]], the companion case to Ford, in which it explained that in light of adoption of comparative fault principles in Li v. Yellow Cab. Co. (1975) 13 Cal. 3d 804, 824, 119 Cal. Rptr. 858, 532 P.2d 1226 [see § 165.380[3][a]], the assumption of risk doctrine operates as a complete bar to a plaintiff's action only in instances in which, in view of the nature of the activity at issue and the parties' relationship to that activity, the defendant's conduct did not breach a legal duty of care owed to the plaintiff. Further, as Knight explains, in general the legal duty applicable to a coparticipant in an active sport is simply a duty to avoid either intentionally injuring another participant or engaging in conduct so reckless as to bring it totally outside the range of ordinary activity involved in the sport (3 Cal. 4th 339, 342) . The Court concluded that in light of such a limited duty owing to the plaintiff, summary judgment in favor of the defendant was properly entered because the plaintiff's evidence indicates that the defendant was, at most, careless in steering the boat (3 Cal. 4th 339, 345) .

The factual and procedural background of Knight v. Jewett (1992) 3 Cal. 4th 296, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 2, 834 P.2d 696 , is discussed in § 165.400[3][a].

[b] Defendant's Conduct Within Range of Ordinary Activity of Sport

The factual and procedural background of Ford v. Gouin (1992) 3 Cal. 4th 339, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 30, 834 P.2d 724 , is discussed in § 165.401[3][a]. The Supreme Court cited its opinion in Knight v. Jewett (1992) 3 Cal. 4th 296, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 2, 834 P.2d 696 [see § 165.400[3][a]], in which it stated that a coparticipant in an active sport ordinarily bears no liability for an injury resulting from conduct in the course of the sport that is merely careless or negligent (3 Cal. 4th 339, 342) . Because the defendant's conduct was, at most, careless, the Court held that summary judgment in the defendant's favor was proper (3 Cal. 4th 339, 345) .

The factual and procedural background of Knight v. Jewett (1992) 3 Cal. 4th 296, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 2, 834 P.2d 696 , is discussed in § 165.400[3][a]. In Knight, the parties' declarations supporting and opposing the defendant's motion for summary judgment disagreed regarding the facts of how the accident took place. The plaintiff contended that on the touch football play preceding the one in which she was injured, she told the defendant "not to play so rough or I was going to have to stop playing." The defendant recalled that the plaintiff asked him to be careful, but did not remember her saying that she would stop playing. On the very next play, the defendant recalled, he jumped up in an attempt to intercept a pass. In coming down he collided with the plaintiff, knocking her over. When he landed, he stepped backward onto her right hand, injuring her hand and little finger. In the plaintiff's version, another player had already caught the ball and the defendant ran into the plaintiff from behind, knocked her down, and stepped on her hand. Although the plaintiff maintained that the defendant's rough play as described in declarations by her and another player properly could have been characterized as "reckless," the conduct alleged was not even closely comparable to the kind of conduct--conduct so reckless as to be totally outside the range of the ordinary activity involved in the sport--that is prerequisite to the imposition of legal liability on a participant in such a sport (3 Cal. 4th 296, 320-321) .

In a footnote, the lead opinion in Knight stated that the limited duty of care applicable to coparticipants has been applied in situations involving a wide variety of active sports, ranging from baseball to ice hockey and skating. Because the touch football game at issue in the case clearly fell within the rationale of this rule, the Court stated that it had no occasion to decide whether a comparable limited duty of care appropriately should be applied to other less active sports, such as archery or golf. The Court noted that because of the special danger to others posed by the sport of hunting, past cases generally have found the ordinary duty of care to be applicable to hunting accidents [see Knight v. Jewett (1992) 3 Cal. 4th 296, 320 n.7, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 2, 834 P.2d 696] .

NOTE:

The question of the existence and scope of a defendant's duty of care, in relation to the plaintiff's assumption of risk, is a legal question that depends on the nature of the sport or activity in question and on the parties' general relationship to the activity. As such, the issue is to be decided by the court, not by the jury [Knight v. Jewett (1992) 3 Cal. 4th 296, 313, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 2, 834 P.2d 696].

Court of appeal decisions disagree on whether the court, rather than the jury, decides the question of whether the defendant increased the risks inherent in the activity. Court opinions assigning this responsibility to the court point out that this issue goes to establishing the proper duty of care, which is the province of the court [compare Huff v. Wilkins (2006) 138 Cal. App. 4th 732, 745, 41 Cal. Rptr. 3d 754 (court decides issue) with Vine v. Bear Valley Ski Co. (2004) 118 Cal. App. 4th 577, 592-593 & n.4, 13 Cal. Rptr. 3d 370 (jury decides issue)]. Conversely, courts concluding that the issue should go to the jury point out that the inquiry requires application of a general duty of care, the duty not to increase the risks inherent in the activity, to the facts of the particular case, and as such, the inquiry is one traditionally left for the trier of fact [Luna v. Vela (2008) 169 Cal. App. 4th 102, 112, 86 Cal. Rptr. 3d 588 (jury to determine whether homeowner increased risks inherent in volleyball when failing to mark net tie-down lines)]. In a 2007 opinion, the Supreme Court suggested that, in the context of primary assumption of risk, the question of whether a defendant has acted recklessly should be left to the jury, supporting the conclusion that the question of whether the defendant increased the risks inherent in an activity should also be left to the jury [Shin v. Ahn (2007) 42 Cal. 4th 482, 499-500, 64 Cal. Rptr. 3d 803, 165 P.3d 581 ; see Luna v. Vela (2008) 169 Cal. App. 4th 102, 113, 86 Cal. Rptr. 3d 588] .

[c] Rule Applies to Student-Teacher Relationship

In Kahn v. East Side Union High Sch. Dist. (2003) 31 Cal. 4th 990, 4 Cal. Rptr. 3d 103, 75 P.3d 30 , the plaintiff was a 14-year-old member of a high school swimming team who broke her neck when she hit the bottom of a shallow racing pool during a swim meet on school property. The plaintiff sued the school district and the swim coach, based in part on the failure of the coach to provide any instruction on how to make the dive properly. Although the coach disputed the factual claim, the plaintiff presented evidence that she had not received any instruction from her coach on how to perform the dive safely, even though the dive into the shallow pool was considered one of the riskiest maneuvers in the sport. She also presented evidence that the coach knew that she had a deep-seated fear of performing the dive, had previously promised her she would not have to make the dive, and had waited until the beginning of a competitive meet to inform her that she had the choice of either making the dive or not competing with the team. Feeling pressured to participate despite her fears, she began to practice making the dive without assistance from her coach. On the third practice dive, she broke her neck. The trial court granted summary judgment for the defendants on the basis of the primary assumption of risk doctrine. The plaintiff appealed, but the court of appeal affirmed, concluding that the dive was a fundamental part of competitive swimming and that the risk of injury when making the dive was inherent in the sport. The plaintiff appealed to the California Supreme Court, which reversed.

The California Supreme Court held that in applying the primary assumption of risk doctrine to a claim that a sports instructor has required a student to perform beyond the student's capacity or without providing adequate instruction, the same basic principles apply as in the context of an injury caused by one sports participant to another participant. Therefore, a sports instructor is not liable to a student for risks inherent in learning the sport, and an instructor generally does not increase the risk of harm inherent in learning a sport merely by pushing or urging a student to strive to perform beyond his or her previous level of competence. Instead, the duty imposed on a coach or instructor is a duty not to increase the risks inherent in learning a sport (31 Cal. 4th 990, 1006) . To overcome the primary assumption of risk doctrine, a plaintiff in an action against a coach or an instructor must allege and prove that the coach or instructor either intended to cause an injury to the student or acted recklessly in engaging in conduct that was totally outside the range of ordinary activity involved in teaching or coaching the sport (31 Cal. 4th 990, 1011) . Applying these principles to this particular case, the Supreme Court held that triable issues of fact, as to whether the swimming instructor was reckless in requiring the plaintiff to dive into a shallow racing pool without adequate instruction, precluded summary judgment. The facts presented by the plaintiff showed much more than an ordinary error in judgment by the coach regarding the plaintiff's readiness to perform the shallow-water dive. Instead, if plaintiff's evidence was credited, the coach provided no instruction to the plaintiff at all on how to perform the dangerous dive, but pressured her to perform the dive anyway, which could constitute reckless conduct totally outside the range of ordinary activity involved in teaching or coaching the sport (31 Cal. 4th 990, 1011-1013) .

In Rodrigo v. Koryo Martial Arts (2002) 100 Cal. App. 4th 946, 122 Cal. Rptr. 2d 832 , a student was attending a class in the martial art of tae kwon do. She was allegedly kicked by another student while waiting in line to perform a kick movement with the instructor. She brought suit against the martial arts studio, alleging that the instructor was providing insufficient supervision and control over the students. The defendant successfully moved for summary judgment on the grounds that under the primary assumption of risk doctrine, the defendant owed no duty of care to the plaintiff. The plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. After reviewing earlier court decisions discussing the primary assumption of risk doctrine as applied to the student-instructor relationship in the context of sporting activities, the court concluded that the duty owed by coaches, trainers, and instructors to those they instruct is a limited duty not to increase the risks inherent in learning the particular sport (100 Cal. App. 4th 946, 956) . The court concluded that tae kwon do carries the risk, and indeed almost the certainty, of being kicked or punched. Because the plaintiff presented no evidence that the instructor's actions in lining the students up to wait their turn to perform a kicking drill, nor the kicking drill itself, increased the risks inherent in learning tae kwon do, the instructor was entitled to assert the primary assumption of risk doctrine (100 Cal. App. 4th 946, 957) . Addressing the plaintiff's claim that she did not expect to be injured while standing in line, the court noted that a student's subjective expectation that he or she would not be injured during a sporting activity is irrelevant to application of the primary assumption of risk doctrine. Instead, the scope of an instructor's duty is determined by the nature of the sport and the parties' relationship to the sport and to each other (100 Cal. App. 4th 946, 957-960) . The court also rejected the plaintiff's argument that liability could be premised on the instructor's failure to assure compliance with his own admonition that the students were not to practice kicking while standing in line. The court noted that although a failure to supervise may have constituted a lack of due care, it did not increase the risks inherent in learning tae kwon do and consequently did not defeat the primary assumption of risk doctrine (100 Cal. App. 4th 946, 961) .

[d] Local Ordinance Does Not Impose Duty on Defendant That Abrogates Rule

In Cheong v. Antablin (1997) 16 Cal. 4th 1063, 68 Cal. Rptr. 2d 859, 946 P.2d 817 , two friends went skiing together. One collided with the other, inflicting injury. The plaintiff sued the defendant for general negligence. The trial court granted the defendant's motion for summary judgment, finding that (1) a collision was an inherent risk of downhill skiing, (2) under the principles of Knight v. Jewett (1992) 3 Cal. 4th 296, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 2, 834 P.2d 696 [see § 165.400[3][a]], this was a case of primary assumption of risk, which was an absolute bar to the plaintiff's recovery, and (3) under Ford v. Gouin (1992) 3 Cal. 4th 339, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 30, 834 P.2d 724 [see § 165.401[3][a]], a local ordinance placing a duty on skiers to ski in a safe and reasonable manner did not give the plaintiff a valid cause of action, and (4) the accident involved an active sport (skiing), and the defendant's conduct neither intentionally caused injury or was so reckless as to be totally outside the range of ordinary activity involved in the sport. The plaintiff appealed and the court of appeal affirmed. The California Supreme Court granted the plaintiff's petition to review the issue of the ordinance's effect.

The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment of the court of appeal, concluding that under the applicable common law principles, a skier owed no duty to fellow skiers not to injure them intentionally or to act recklessly, but a skier cannot sue another for simple negligence, and that the ordinance at issue in this case did not alter this rule. As there was no evidence that the defendant in this case intentionally injured the plaintiff or acted recklessly, the court held that the trial court correctly granted summary judgment in his favor (16 Cal. 4th 1063, 1066) . The Court first reiterated the general test as stated in Knight, that a participant in an active sport breaches a legal duty of care to other participants only if the participant intentionally injures another player or engages in conduct that is so reckless as to be totally outside the range of the ordinary activity involved in the sport. Then the Court addressed the question presented by the plaintiff's petition for review--namely, whether a local ordinance changed this general test. The relevant portion of the Skier Responsibility Code provided that skiers assumed the risks inherent in skiing including collision with other skiers and a skiers failure to ski within the skiers own ability, and that skiers had certain safety-related duties, a violation of which would constitute an infraction. The plaintiff argued that the ordinance imposed a higher duty of care on the defendant than Knight established. The Court disagreed. It recognized that Knight was a development of the common law of torts, and that the Legislature could, within constitutional limits choose to modify the common law by statute. Whether a local ordinance such as the instant one could modify Knight was, according to the Court, less clear. However, the Court did not decide this question here because it concluded that the ordinance did not modify the Knight standard even if it assumed it could. According to the Court, this ordinance evinced no clear intent to modify common law assumption of risk principles. It did state various skier duties, but in context these duties did not govern liability between skiers. The ordinance was adopted several years before the decision in Knight but preserved common law principles of assumption of risk. The Court dismissed the plaintiffs argument that the assumption of the risk provisions of the ordinance were intended to protect ski area operators and not skiers, from liability for injuries due to negligent skiing, saying that nothing in the language of the ordinance limits the scope of those provisions in this fashion. Accordingly, it concluded that the ordinance by itself, did not give the plaintiff a cause of action (16 Cal. 4th 1063, 1069-1070) .

