The appellate court reversed, holding that the action was not barred by Corp. Code § 25507(a), because plaintiff did not have actual notice of the facts constituting a violation until his consultation with his attorney (218 Cal. App. 3d 314, 326) . The court reasoned that under principles of fiduciary duty, the usual duty of diligence to discover facts did not exist, and the limitations period did not begin to run, until plaintiff actually discovered the facts constituting the cause of action (218 Cal. App. 3d 314, 325) . An insider-promoter such as the partnership's president had a fiduciary duty, based both in common and statutory law, to disclose all material facts to a subscriber such as plaintiff (218 Cal. App. 3d 314, 324-325) . As an alternative ground for its holding, the court reasoned that the language of Corp. Code § 25507(a), which requires "discovery of the facts," by its plain language requires actual knowledge, not just "inquiry notice" (218 Cal. App. 3d 314, 325) . The court found its conclusion buttressed by a comparison with Corp. Code § 25506.1, which establishes a statute of limitations for fraud liability against certain persons who "expertise" a prospectus. The latter statute by its terms starts to run after discovery "should have been made by the exercise of reasonable diligence" (218 Cal. App. 3d 314, 325-326) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Sale of Limited Partnership Interest Without Permit

An issuer also violates Corp. Code § 25110 if it obtained an order or permit but offers or sells the security in a manner that varies from, exceeds the scope of, or fails to conform with, either a material term or condition of qualification of the offering as set forth in the permit or qualification order or a material representation as to the manner of offering that is set forth in the application for qualification. Such a variation renders the offer or sale an unqualified offer or sale [Corp. Code § 25110].

[b] Limitation Period for Rescission

The facts and procedural background of Sherman v. Lloyd (1986) 181 Cal. App. 3d 693, 226 Cal. Rptr. 495 , are discussed in [3][a], above. Defendants contended that plaintiff was in possession of all material facts more than one year before the filing of the complaint and that the action was therefore barred by the applicable limitation period of Corp. Code § 25507(a). The appellate court agreed that a plaintiff's ignorance of his or her cause of action will not bar the running of the statute of limitation, but said that rule did not govern this situation. Plaintiff was in essence told by the general partner, a fiduciary, that no cause of action existed. Plaintiff was thus entitled to rely on the representations concerning the propriety of the investment structure. The cause of action did not accrue until plaintiff learned from counsel that the scheme did not qualify (181 Cal. App. 3d 693, 697-700) .

Code §§ 15674(a), 15675*).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contentions that (1) a limited partner in a partnership governed by the CRLPA has the right to withdraw, and/or (2) withdrawing limited partners are entitled to return of their contributions, and/or (3) the legal representative of a decedent limited partner, and in the case of a partnership governed by the CRLPA, an incompetent limited partner as well, is entitled to exercise all the rights and receive all the distributions the limited partner could have exercised or received.

The form is split up into two alternative divisions. The first division applies if the limited partnership in question is governed by the ULPA [Corp. Code § 15501 et seq.]. The second division applies if the limited partnership in question is governed by the CRLPA [Corp. Code § 15611 et seq.]. For discussion of the applicability of these statutes, see § 170.02[4], [5].

Paragraph A of the first division sets forth the provisions governing the return of a limited partner's contribution under the ULPA. In Paragraph A, the citation of Corp. Code § 15516(2) should be used when any alternative other than consent is used in item (3). Paragraph B sets forth the provisions applicable to the rights of the representative of a deceased limited partner of a limited partnership governed by the ULPA. The case cited therein and Corp. Code § 15515 are authority only for the entitlement to decedent's share of profit distributions. Paragraph A should be used in conjunction with Paragraph B if the representative of the deceased limited partner is seeking return of the contribution.

Paragraph A of the second division sets forth the right of a limited partner in a partnership governed by CRLPA (and, thus, the right of the legal representative of an incompetent or deceased limited partner) to withdraw. A copy of the partnership agreement should be attached if possible. Paragraph B (CRLPA) sets forth one basis for computation of the limited partner's distribution on withdrawal and may be used without Paragraph A (CRLPA) if the right to withdraw is not in issue. Paragraph C (CRLPA) sets forth the basis for computation of the limited partner's distribution on withdrawal when none is specified in the partnership agreement, and may be used without Paragraph A (CRLPA) if the right to withdraw is not in issue. Paragraph D sets forth the provisions applicable to a legal representative's rights in a limited partnership governed by the CRLPA. Although Corp. Code § 15675 does not specifically refer to the exercise by the legal representative of the limited partner's power to constitute his or her assignee a substituted limited partner, such a right would exist if the partnership agreement so provides or all of the general partners and a majority in interest of the limited partners consent [see Corp. Code § 15674(a)].

It should be noted that the withdrawing limited partner or the estate of the deceased limited partner will be liable to return any distribution necessary to meet liabilities to creditors who extended credit or whose claim arose before the distribution [see Corp. Code §§ 15517(4), 15521(2) (ULPA); Corp. Code § 15666(a) (CRLPA)]. Similarly, substitution of one's assignee as limited partner does not totally absolve the assignor limited partner or his or her estate for all liability with respect to the partnership [see Corp. Code § 15519(7) (ULPA); Corp. Code § 15674(c) (CRLPA)].

These points and authorities should be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise any of the substantive issues relating to the rights of the withdrawing limited partner or the legal representative of the deceased or incompetent limited partner. These points and authorities also may be used in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should specify the relevant date of death or withdrawal, previous demands made for distribution or recognition of the assignee as substituted partner, and if one is seeking a distribution from a limited partnership governed by the ULPA, the financial reports, attaching copies if possible, which establish that the partnership has sufficient funds to pay the distribution.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Return of Withdrawing Limited Partner's Contribution Under California Uniform Limited Partnership Act

Corp. Code § 15516(1) applies to partnerships still governed by the ULPA and provides that a limited partner may not receive from a general partner or out of partnership property any part of his or her contribution until:

- All liabilities of the partnership, except liabilities to general partners and to limited partners on account of their capital contributions, have been paid or there remains property of the partnership sufficient to pay them;

- The consent of all members is had, unless the contribution may be rightfully demanded under the provision of paragraph two; and

- The certificate is canceled or so amended as to set forth the withdrawal or reduction.

Subject to the above provisions, a limited partner may rightfully demand return of his or her contribution under any of the following circumstances [Corp. Code § 15516(2)]:

- On dissolution of the partnership;

- When the date specified in the certificate for its return has arrived; or

- After he or she has given six months notice in writing to all other members, if no time is specified in the certificate either for return of the contribution or for the dissolution of the partnership.

In the absence of any statement in the certificate to the contrary or the consent of all members, a limited partner, irrespective of the nature of his or her contribution, has only the right to demand and receive cash in return for his contribution [Corp. Code § 15516(3)].

A limited partner may have the partnership dissolved and its affairs wound up when either of the following events occurs [Corp. Code § 15516(4)]:

- He or she rightfully but unsuccessfully demands the return of his or her contribution; or

- The other liabilities of the partnership have not been paid, or the partnership property is insufficient for their payment as required and the limited partner would otherwise be entitled to return of his or her contribution.

[b] Rights of Personal Representative of Deceased Limited Partner Under California Uniform Limited Partnership Act

In Lissman v. McDonald (1953) 119 Cal. App. 2d 228, 258 P.2d 1057 , plaintiff was a widow and executrix whose decedent had owned a 20 percent interest as general partner and a five percent interest as limited partner in a limited partnership that was continued after his death by the other general partners. Plaintiff brought an action for declaration of her rights as executrix to share in the annual profits of the firm. The trial court ruled for plaintiff, finding that the partnership agreement required the partnership to pay and distribute to plaintiff as executrix each year on account of the decedent's limited partnership interest the full share of profits attributable to that interest, "provided that after payment of such profits, the partnership assets are in excess of all liabilities of the partnership business, except liabilities to limited partners on account of their contributions and to general partners." (The quoted portion of the finding is nearly identical to a portion of Corp. Code § 15515, describing a limited partner's entitlement to annual profit distributions). The defendants appealed. The appellate court affirmed, adopting the reasoning stated in the trial court's opinion (119 Cal. App. 2d 228, 229) .

[c] Right of Limited Partner to Withdraw Under California Revised Limited Partnership Act

Corp. Code § 15663 (CRLPA) provides that a limited partner may withdraw only at the time or on the happening of events specified in the partnership agreement.

[1] FORM Opposing Contention That General Partner Is Not Liable for Losses Incurred in Good-Faith Exercise of Business Judgment--Business Judgment Cannot Contravene Specific Terms of Partnership Agreement or Obstruct Ordinary Business of Partnership (ULPA) [Corp. Code § 15509(1)(a), (b)]

DEFENDANT IS LIABLE FOR THE LOSSES INCURRED BY PLAINTIFFS EVEN IF THOSE LOSSES RESULTED FROM THE GOOD-FAITH EXERCISE OF DEFENDANT'S BUSINESS JUDGMENT BECAUSE A GENERAL PARTNER'S BUSINESS JUDGMENT CANNOT BE EXERCISED _____ [IN DEROGATION OF SPECIFIC PROVISIONS OF THE PARTNERSHIP AGREEMENT and/or SO AS TO MAKE IT IMPOSSIBLE TO CARRY ON THE ORDINARY BUSINESS OF THE PARTNERSHIP].

General Partner Liable if Exercise of Business Judgment Contravenes Partnership Agreement or Bars Ordinary Partnership Business. A general partner of a limited partnership is liable to the limited partners for losses incurred in the good-faith exercise of his or her reasonable business judgment if the business decision at issue contravenes a specific provision of the partnership agreement or makes it impossible to carry on the ordinary business of the partnership (Corp. Code § 15509(1)(a), (b) or Corp. Code § 15643(a); Fisher v. Hampton (1975) 44 Cal. App. 3d 741, 746, 118 Cal. Rptr. 811).

[2] Comments

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a general partner in a limited partnership is not liable to the limited partners for losses or shortfalls in expected profits incurred in the good-faith exercise of business judgment. The ground for opposition is that the business decision at issue contravenes a specific provision of the partnership agreement or makes it impossible to carry on the ordinary business of the partnership [Corp. Code § 15509(1)(a), (b)]. The governing statute is Corp. Code § 15509 for ULPA limited partnerships; for CRLPA limited partnerships, counsel should substitute Corp. Code § 15643(a) as authority [see § 170.02[4], [5] for discussion of governing law].

These points and authorities should be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the provisions of the partnership agreement override the business judgment rule. This issue may arise on a motion for summary judgment or at trial. These points and authorities also may be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should specify the particular business decision involved and the particular provisions of the partnership agreement that prohibit the action taken, or how the business decision involved makes it impossible to carry on the partnership business.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] General Partner Liable if Exercise of Business Judgment Contravenes Partnership Agreement or Bars Ordinary Partnership Business

Corp. Code § 15509(1) (ULPA) provides that a general partner has all the rights and powers of and is subject to all the restrictions and liabilities of a partner in a partnership without limited partners, except that without the written consent or ratification of the specific act by all the limited partners, a general partner (or all the general partners) has no authority to take six specified types of action, including: (1) any act in contravention of the certificate, and (2) any act which would make it impossible to carry on the ordinary business of the partnership action [Corp. Code § 15509(1)(a)-(g)].

Unlike ULPA, CRLPA does not include specific restrictions on the powers of a general partner. Corp. Code § 15643(a) (CRLPA) simply provides that except as otherwise provided in the CRLPA, a general partner of a limited partnership has the rights and powers and is subject to the restrictions of a partner in a partnership without limited partners. However, the result is similar to that under the ULPA because, in a general partnership, the partnership may maintain an action against a partner for breach of the partnership agreement, violation of duty to the partnership, or causing harm to the partnership [Corp. Code § 16405(a); see also Corp. Code § 16103(a) (partnership agreement governs relations among partners and partnership)]. For additional discussion, see Ballantine & Sterling, California Corporation Laws, Ch. 25, Limited Partnerships , § 716.01[2] (Matthew Bender).

Fisher v. Hampton (1975) 44 Cal. App. 3d 741, 118 Cal. Rptr. 811 , involved a limited partnership governed by the ULPA and Corp. Code § 15509. Plaintiff limited partners sought damages for breach of the partnership agreement from the general partner. The partnership was formed to acquire a specific oil and gas lease, to drill test wells, and if successful, to further drill, develop, and produce the property, and the partnership agreement set forth this specific purpose, describing the property in question. Plaintiff limited partners' contribution to the partnership was the lease. Defendant general partner was to finance the test wells and manage production. The partnership agreement specified that the general partner's contribution was "such sums ... as may be required to drill and complete the one well ... or to abandon such well if the same shall not produce oil in paying quantities, provided that the general partner shall not be required to expend in excess of $35,000." A geologist's report estimated a million barrels of oil were recoverable, but later the general partner's own investigation and that of two other people determined that oil in paying quantities would not be found. On the basis of the later information, defendant decided not to drill a test well. Plaintiff limited partners sued for damages for breach of the limited partnership agreement. Judgment was for defendant on the theory that he had the authority as a matter of business judgment to decide not to expend $35,000 on test wells.

The appellate court affirmed because no damages were shown, but it did not agree with the statement of defendant's authority (44 Cal. App. 3d 741, 745) . The court said the partnership agreement expressly required the general partner to drill at least one well and to expend up to $35,000 for that purpose. To exempt the general partner from that requirement would be a violation of the plain terms of Corp. Code § 15509 and would render his promise under the partnership agreement wholly illusory. The court continued that refusal to drill the well was in violation of Corp. Code § 15509(1)(a) and (b), in that it was both in contravention of the partnership certificate and made it impossible to carry out the partnership business. Thus, the general partner's acts caused dissolution under former Corp. Code § 15031(2) and gave plaintiffs a cause of action under former Corp. Code § 15038(2)(a)(II) (thereafter former Corp. Code § 15038(b)(1)(B) (UPA)), which provided that when dissolution is caused in contravention of the certificate, each partner who has not caused wrongful dissolution has, as against each partner who has caused the wrongful dissolution, damages for breach of the agreement (44 Cal. App. 3d 741, 746) . Nevertheless, as the trial court's findings that no profits could be proven and no damages were suffered were supported by the evidence, the judgment was affirmed (44 Cal. App. 3d 741, 747-752) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] General Partner Liable if Exercise of Business Judgment Contravenes Partnership Agreement or Bars Ordinary Partnership Business

In Everest Investors 8 v. McNeil Partners (2003) 114 Cal. App. 4th 411, 8 Cal. Rptr. 3d 31 , a real estate partnership merged into a new entity, becoming a wholly owned subsidiary of the new entity. The interests of the limited partners were liquidated or cashed out. The general partner, however, retained an equity interest in the post-merger entity, which then sold the assets of the limited partnership to third parties for more than the assets were valued for purposes of the cash-out and merger. The limited partners brought an action against the general partner for breach of fiduciary duty, unfair competition, and constructive fraud, claiming that the merger transaction harmed the limited partners by undervaluing their partnership interest or by depriving them of the future earnings and growth generated by the assets of the limited partnership. The defendant moved for summary judgment on two grounds, one of which was that plaintiffs' claims were barred by application of the business judgment rule. The trial court granted summary judgment for defendants. The appellate court reversed. With respect to the application of the business judgment rule, the appellate court reviewed the basis of the rule, stating that it does not shield actions taken without reasonable inquiry, with improper motives, or as a result of a conflict of interest. It agreed with plaintiffs that triable issues of fact as to the existence of defendant's improper motives and a conflict of interest precluded summary judgment based on the business judgment rule. Furthermore, triable issues of fact existed regarding whether the merger transaction was preceded by a good faith and reasonable investigation into whether the merger transaction was in the best interests of the limited partners (114 Cal. App. 4th 411, 429-434) .

§ 170.171 Opposing Contention That Purchaser of Limited Partnership Interest Is Entitled to Rescission Because No Permit for Sale Was Obtained as Required by California Securities Law [Corp. Code § 25503]--Offering Was Exempt From Permit Requirement

[1] FORM Opposing Contention That Purchaser of Limited Partnership Interest Is Entitled to Rescission Because No Permit for Sale Was Obtained as Required by California Securities Law [Corp. Code § 25503]--Offering Was Exempt From Permit Requirement

PLAINTIFF IS NOT ENTITLED TO RESCIND THE PURCHASE OF HIS/HER LIMITED PARTNERSHIP INTEREST BECAUSE NO PERMIT WAS REQUIRED PRIOR TO THE SALE OF THE LIMITED PARTNERSHIP INTEREST.

Exempt Sale. The purchaser of a limited partnership interest has no right to rescind the purchase of the interest under Corporations Code Section 25503 when the offering was exempt from qualification under the California securities laws by virtue of the exemption contained in _____ [specify specific exemption relied upon, e.g., Corporations Code Section 25102(f)].

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that the purchaser of a limited partnership interest has a right to rescind the purchase for failure to comply with the securities permit requirement. The ground for opposition is that no permit was required because the purchase and sale were exempt pursuant to a specific exemption under the Corporate Securities Law.

This form should be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that no permit was required. Because the determination of the availability of a specific exemption is likely to rest on factual considerations, this issue would be most likely to arise at trial or on appeal, and thus may be used in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case; for example, facts demonstrating compliance with each of the specific exemption requirements set forth below.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Exempt Sale

Limited partnership interests generally are considered to be "securities" within the meaning of the California Corporate Securities Law, although they are not specifically defined as such [see Corp. Code § 25019; for discussion of limited partnership interests as securities, see California Legal Forms, Ch. 15A, Formation of Limited Partnerships, § 15A.13 (Matthew Bender)]. As securities, they must be approved ("qualified") for sale by the Commissioner of Corporations prior to offer or sale in California [see Corp. Code § 25110]. Corp. Code § 25503 provides that anyone who violates this requirement is liable any to person who acquired from the violator a security sold in violation of this requirement. There are, however, numerous exemptions from the statutory qualification requirement. Corp. Code § 25102(f) , commonly known as the "limited offering exemption," is the most commonly used exemption for limited partnership interests, and provides that any offer or sale of any security (other than an offer or sale to a pension or profit-sharing trust of the issuer) must meet each of the following requirements to be exempt from the permit provisions of Corp. Code § 25110:

- Sales of the security are not made to more than 35 persons, including persons not in California.

- All purchasers either have a preexisting personal or business relationship with the offeror or any of its partners, officers, directors, or controlling persons, or managers (as appointed or elected by the members) if the offeror is a limited liability company, or by reason of their business or financial experience or the business or financial experience of their professional advisors who are unaffiliated with and who are not compensated by the issuer or any affiliate or selling agent of the issuer, directly or indirectly, could be reasonably assumed to have the capacity to protect their own interests in connection with the transaction.

- Each purchaser represents that the purchaser is purchasing for the purchaser's own account (or a trust account if the purchaser is a trustee) and not with a view to or for sale in connection with any distribution of the security.

- The offer and sale of the security is not accomplished by the publication of any advertisement.

The number of purchasers referred to above is exclusive of any described in Corp. Code § 25102(i) (institutional investors), any officer, director, or affiliate of the issuer, or manager (as appointed or elected by the members) if the issuer is a limited liability company, and any other purchaser who the commissioner designates by rule. For these purposes, a husband and wife (together with any custodian or trustee acting for the account of their minor children) are counted as one person and a partnership, corporation, or other organization which was not specifically formed for the purpose of purchasing the security offered in reliance on this exemption is counted as one person [Corp. Code § 25102(f)(4)]. For detailed discussion of the limited offering exemption, see California Legal Forms, Ch. 6B, California Limited Offering Exemptions (Matthew Bender).

See Corp. Code § 15638 regarding issuance of certificates of interest of a partner or assignee, discussed in § 170.141.

§ 170.200 Supporting Contention That Act of Partner Binds Partnership [Corp. Code § 16301; former Corp. Code § 15009]--Partner as Agent, Presumption of Agency, and Burden of Proving Lack of Authority to Act

[1] FORM Supporting Contention That Act of Partner Binds Partnership [Corp. Code § 16301; former Corp. Code § 15009]--Partner as Agent, Presumption of Agency, and Burden of Proving Lack of Authority to Act

THE PARTNERSHIP WAS BOUND BY THE ACT OF ITS PARTNER _____ [name] IN _____ [specify act on behalf of partnership, e.g., ENTERING INTO AN AGREEMENT TO SELL THE SUBJECT PROPERTY] BECAUSE THE PARTNER WAS ACTING AS THE PARTNERSHIP'S AGENT IN THAT HE/SHE WAS ACTING WITHIN THE SCOPE OF HIS/HER AUTHORITY FOR APPARENTLY CARRYING ON IN THE USUAL WAY THE BUSINESS OF THE PARTNERSHIP, AND PLAINTIFF HAS NOT MET ITS BURDEN OF PROVING THAT THE PARTNER HAD NO AUTHORITY TO ACT.

A. Partner Is Agent of Partnership. Every partner is an agent of the partnership for the purpose of its business. The act of a partner, including the execution of an instrument in the partnership name, for apparently carrying on in the ordinary course the partnership business (or business of the kind carried on by the partnership) binds the partnership, unless the partner had no authority to act for the partnership in the particular matter, and the person with whom the partner was dealing knew or received notification that the partner lacked authority (Corp. Code § 16301(1); former Corp. Code § 15009(1); MacLeod v. Fox West Coast Theatres Corp. (1937) 10 Cal. 2d 383, 387-388, 74 P.2d 276).

B. Scope of Partnership Business and Presumption of Ostensible or Apparent Agency. The apparent scope of the partnership business depends primarily on the conduct of the partnership and its partners and what they cause third persons to believe about the authority of the partners. Ostensible agency or acts within the scope of the partnership business are presumed when the business done by the supposed agent, so far as open to the observation of third parties, is consistent with the existence of an agency, and when, as to the transaction in question, the third party was justified in believing that an agency existed (Blackmon v. Hale (1970) 1 Cal. 3d 548, 557, 83 Cal. Rptr. 194, 463 P.2d 418).

C. Burden of Proof. When the act of a partner is within his or her apparent authority under the Corporations Code, the burden is on the objecting partner to prove the acting partner's lack of authority (Barton v. Ludy (1938) 11 Cal. 2d 1, 3, 76 P.2d 654).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that a partnership is bound by the acts of one of its partners. The general rule is that a partner is an agent of the partnership with respect to any act done for apparently carrying on in the ordinary course of the partnership business (or business of the kind carried on by the partnership). The act binds the partnership unless the partner had no authority to act for the partnership in the particular matter, and the person with whom he or she was dealing knew or had received notification that the partner lacked authority [Corp. Code § 16301(1); former Corp. Code § 15009(1); see Paragraph A]. Whether an act is within the ordinary course of the partnership business depends on what third parties are led to believe. Acts are presumed to be within the usual business of the partnership as long as third parties with whom the partner is dealing justifiably believe that the acts are consistent with the business of the partnership [Blackmon v. Hale (1970) 1 Cal. 3d 548, 557, 83 Cal. Rptr. 194, 463 P.2d 418 ; see Paragraph B]. The burden is on the objecting party to prove that a partner had no authority to act [Barton v. Ludy (1938) 11 Cal. 2d 1, 3, 76 P.2d 654 ; see Paragraph C]. Thus, a partnership may be bound by a partner's action when a partnership and its partner represent to third parties that the partner has authority to act, and it appears to the third parties from the partnership's conduct that the action is within the partnership business.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that an action by a partner has bound the partnership. They also may be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should discuss facts that show that a third party relied on representations by the partnership and its partner that the partner had authority to act. Counsel should also discuss facts showing that the third party's belief that the partner's act was within the ordinary course of the partnership's business was justified by the conduct of the partnership and its partner.

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in §§ 170.210 -170.213 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Partner Is Agent of Partnership

In MacLeod v. Fox West Coast Theatres Corp. (1937) 10 Cal. 2d 383, 74 P.2d 276 , a visitor to defendant theater who attempted to attend an invitation-only "preshowing" of a film there but who was ejected before the show brought a tort action against the theater. He claimed that the film corporation and the theater had a joint venture for the preshowing. Citing the precursor to Corp. Code § 16301, the court stated that it was a correct statement of the law that with respect to transactions within the scope of partnership business, one of the partners therein is fully authorized to bind the partnership. It also found that either partner may revoke any executory contract. Thus, even if plaintiff had been invited to the show by one of the parties to the "joint venture," it was within the power of the other partner to revoke his right to attend. Since the record showed that a representative of the film company ejected him from the theater lobby without excessive force, plaintiff had no cause of action against either party to the "joint venture" (10 Cal. 2d 383, 387-388) .

[b] Scope of Partnership Business and Presumption of Ostensible or Apparent Agency

In Blackmon v. Hale (1970) 1 Cal. 3d 548, 83 Cal. Rptr. 194, 463 P.2d 418 , plaintiff engaged defendant's partner, an attorney, to represent him in a proposed purchase of a note and mortgage on real property. An agreement was made to deposit the funds necessary for the purchase in a trust account under the partnership name. Shortly thereafter, the partnership was dissolved. After securing defendant's authorization, the partner transferred funds from the partnership trust account to a new trust account in his own name. He then diverted the funds to his own use. Plaintiff's proposed purchase and sale was never carried out, and he demanded the return of his funds. He received only a small portion, and subsequently brought an action against defendant, among others, to recover the balance. The trial court rendered judgment against plaintiff, and he appealed.

The California Supreme Court reversed, holding that if the partner received plaintiff's funds while acting within the scope of his apparent authority or if the partnership received the funds in the course of its business, defendant was jointly and severally liable for plaintiff's losses. Citing former Corp. Code § 15009 [now see Corp. Code § 16301], the Court held that the apparent scope of the partnership business depends primarily on the conduct of the partnership and its partners and what they cause third persons to believe about the authority of the partners. It held that ostensible agency or acts within the scope of the partnership business are presumed when the business done by the supposed agent, so far as open to the observation of third parties, is consistent with the existence of an agency, and when, concerning the transaction in question, the third party was justified in believing that an agency existed (1 Cal. 3d 548, 557) . Defendant and his partner held themselves out to the public and plaintiff as partners. The partnership displayed a sign indicating a partnership. Plaintiff dealt with the partner in the partnership's offices. The partner instructed plaintiff to make his check payable to a trust fund bearing the partners' names. Thus, the Court held that in the absence of other evidence, these facts would justify a reasonable person in believing that he or she was dealing with a partnership (1 Cal. 3d 548, 558) .

[c] Burden of Proof

In Barton v. Ludy (1938) 11 Cal. 2d 1, 76 P.2d 654 , appellant was a co-lessee of real property that respondent had acquired by bequest. Appellant's co-lessee assigned his interest to respondent. Respondent then brought an action for partition against appellant as a tenant in common. The trial court found that appellant and the co-lessee had acquired the lease and farmed the land as partners, but that the partnership was secret and undisclosed as to respondent. It found that the lessees held the land as to respondent merely as cotenants, and awarded judgment to respondent. Appellant appealed, contending that he and his co-lessee entered into the lease as partners and that it was partnership property. Appellant also contended that the title transferred by the assignment to respondent was subject to the partnership's interest, and that respondent was not entitled to partition.

The Supreme Court affirmed, citing former Civ. Code § 2404(4) (now see Corp. Code § 16302). That section provided that when the title to real property is in the name of one or more of the partners, or in a third person in trust for the partnership, a conveyance executed by a partner in the partnership name, or in his or her own name, passes the equitable interest of the partnership, provided the act is one within the authority of the partner under the provisions of former Civ. Code § 2403(1) (now see Corp. Code § 16301). The Court held that former Civ. Code § 2403(1) required appellant to prove the co-lessee's lack of authority to make the assignment to respondent (11 Cal. 2d 1, 3) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Partner Is Agent of Partnership

In Refinite Sales Co. v. Fred R. Bright Co. (1953) 119 Cal. App. 2d 56, 258 P.2d 1116 , plaintiff entered into a written agreement with defendant partnership to sell and install a water conditioning unit on defendant partner's individually owned property. The agreement was signed for defendant's partner by the partnership's secretary. The trial court did not allow the agreement into evidence, and thus granted a nonsuit for defendant on her claim that there was no evidence to show that the obligation was a partnership obligation. Plaintiff appealed, arguing, among other things, that there was sufficient evidence that the agreement was executed on behalf of defendant partnership. The appellate court reversed. After holding that the partnership's secretary had authority to sign the agreement for defendant's partner, the court held that under former Corp. Code § 15009 [now see Corp. Code § 16301] every partner is an agent of the partnership for the purpose of its business, but an act of a partner that is not apparently for carrying on of the business of the partnership in the usual way does not bind the partnership unless authorized by the other partners (119 Cal. App. 2d 56, 62) . The court held that the issue of whether plaintiff was liable as a partner should have been submitted to a jury because there was evidence that the unit was paid for by partnership checks, and charged to a partnership account (119 Cal. App. 2d 56, 63-64) .

[1] FORM Supporting Contention That Act of Partner Binds Partnership [Corp. Code § 16301; former Corp. Code § 15009]--Authority to Make Contracts and Execute Negotiable Instruments

THE PARTNERSHIP IS BOUND BY THE ACT OF PARTNER _____ [name] IN _____ [specify, e.g., EXECUTING THE SUBJECT PROMISSORY NOTES] BECAUSE, AS AN AGENT OF THE PARTNERSHIP, HE/SHE HAD THE AUTHORITY TO ENTER INTO A WRITTEN AGREEMENT ON THE PARTNERSHIP'S BEHALF.

A. Authority to Enter Into Written Agreement. As an agent for a partnership in the transaction of its business, every general partner may bind his or her partners by an agreement in writing (Corp. Code § 16301(1); Krasky v. Wollpert (1901) 134 Cal. 338, 342, 66 P. 309 ; Jacobson v. Lamb (1928) 91 Cal. App. 405, 410-412, 267 P. 114).

[EITHER, if instrument executed in partnership name:]

B. Apparent Authority May Be Presumed if Documents Executed in Partnership Name. The execution of an instrument in the partnership name for apparently carrying on in the ordinary course the partnership business (or business of the kind carried on by the partnership) binds the partnership. Such an act is presumed when partners cause third parties to believe that the partners have authority to act, and the third parties are justified in their belief (Owens v. Palos Verdes Monaco (1983) 142 Cal. App. 3d 855, 865, 191 Cal. Rptr. 381 ; see Corp. Code § 16301(1) or former Corp. Code § 15009(1)).

[OR, if instrument executed in partner's own name:]

B. Partnership May Be Bound by Instrument Executed in Individual Partner's Name if Parties so Intended. The fact that an instrument is signed by a partner individually is only a circumstance to be considered in determining the intention of the parties. It does not relieve the partnership of liability if the signing partner had authority to bind the firm and the instrument was executed with that intent (Wurm v. Metz (1958) 162 Cal. App. 2d 262, 269, 327 P.2d 969).

[Optional] C. Execution of Promissory Note. A promissory note executed by a general partner in the ordinary course of business is binding on the other partners, even though they have no knowledge of the execution of the note (Wurm v. Metz (1958) 162 Cal. App. 2d 262, 269, 327 P.2d 969 ; Stauffer v. Ti Hang Lung & Co. (1938) 29 Cal. App. 2d 121, 124-125, 84 P.2d 209).

[2] Comments

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that a partnership is bound by a document executed by one of its partners because the partner was acting within the scope of his or her authority as a partner in executing the document.

The Corporations Code expressly provides that a partner may bind the partnership by executing an instrument in the partnership name [Corp. Code § 16301(1); former Corp. Code § 15009(1)]. This includes the authority to make contracts [see Krasky v. Wollpert (1901) 134 Cal. 338, 342, 66 P. 309 (prior law; every general partner, as agent for partnership in transaction of its business, could bind his or her partners by written agreement)]. Apparent authority may be presumed when documents are executed in the partnership name (see Blackmon v. Hale (1970) 1 Cal. 3d 548, 557, 83 Cal. Rptr. 194, 463 P.2d 418 ; see first alternative Paragraph B).

When a partner signs an agreement in his or her own name, it may be presumed that the obligation is his or hers alone [Bank of America v. Kumle (1945) 70 Cal. App. 2d 362, 368, 160 P.2d 875 (discussed in § 170.210[3])]. However, the fact that a partner signs an agreement in his or her own name is merely a circumstance to be considered in determining the intention of the parties. It does not relieve the partnership of liability if the partner had authority to bind the partnership and that was what the partner and the third parties with whom he or she was dealing intended [Wurm v. Metz (1958) 162 Cal. App. 2d 262, 269, 327 P.2d 969 ; see second alternative Paragraph B].

A specific rule has evolved for circumstances in which a partner enters into an agreement represented by negotiable instruments, such as promissory notes. It is generally held that promissory notes executed by a general partner in the ordinary course of business are binding on the other partners, even though they have no knowledge of the execution of the note [Stauffer v. Ti Hang Lung & Co. (1938) 29 Cal. App. 2d 121, 124-125, 84 P.2d 209 ; see Optional Paragraph C].

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that a partner bound the partnership when he or she executed a written agreement either in the partnership's name or in his or her own name. They also may be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss facts showing that an agreement was entered into by a partner, and that the partner was acting within the scope of his or her authority. In other words, the partner's act must have been within the ordinary course of the partnership business [see Corp. Code § 16301; former Corp. Code § 15009(1)].

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in §§ 170.211, 170.212 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Authority to Enter Into Written Agreement

Krasky v. Wollpert (1901) 134 Cal. 338, 66 P. 309 , involved a partnership between defendants. One of the defendants was the active partner who ran the business. He borrowed money to put into the partnership, and he informed the passive partner that he had done so. Thereafter, one of the notes executed by the active partner was presented to the passive partner. He made a partial payment, and promised to pay the balance. He also made payments on other notes executed by the active partner. The passive partner conceded that in at least one of these cases, payments were made for the partnership. Plaintiff brought an action against both partners on one of the promissory notes executed by the active partner. The trial court rendered judgment for plaintiff, finding that defendants were partners, and that the active partner, as a member of the partnership, made, executed, and delivered the subject note to plaintiff for good and valuable consideration. Defendants appealed.

The California Supreme Court affirmed, holding that the finding that the active partner made the promissory note as a member of the partnership is the equivalent of finding that the partnership made it (134 Cal. 338, 341) . The Court held that the active partner did not make the note as an individual only (134 Cal. 338, 341-342) . It held that every general partner is an agent for the partnership in the transaction of its business, and he or she may bind his or her copartners by an agreement in writing. Therefore, the findings by the trial court that the note was made by one member of the partnership as a member, and that the note was signed in the partnership name, should be sufficient to uphold the judgment (134 Cal. 338, 342) .

In Jacobson v. Lamb (1928) 91 Cal. App. 405, 267 P. 114 , defendant partners entered into an agreement whereby the managing partner was to purchase the passive partner's interest in the partnership for a sum payable in monthly installments. The agreement expressly provided that its execution would not result in dissolution of the partnership. It also provided that the managing partner would not incur any obligations other than those incident to the partnership business, and that he was to provide the passive partner with a monthly statement showing assets and liabilities, and all moneys received and disbursed in the conduct of the business. Thereafter, the managing partner executed six promissory notes in the partnership's name in plaintiff's favor. The passive partner had no knowledge of the execution of the notes. The managing partner subsequently disappeared, and the passive partner continued to run the business. He received the face value of the notes payable to the partnership, and deposited the money in the partnership account maintained in the regular course of business. Plaintiff brought an action to recover on the notes, and a jury rendered a verdict in her favor against each of the defendants individually, and as partners. Defendant passive partner appealed.

The appellate court affirmed. Citing former Civ. Code § 2429 (now see Corp. Code § 16301), the court held that every general partner is an agent for the general partnership in the transaction of its business and has authority to do whatever is necessary to carry on such business in the ordinary manner, and for this purpose may bind his or her copartners by an agreement in writing. Thus, the court held that the managing partner had implied authority to execute promissory notes on behalf of the partnership. As plaintiff gave valuable consideration for each of the notes and accepted them in good faith as the obligation of the partnership without any knowledge that the managing partner was acting beyond the scope of his authority, the jury was justified in returning a verdict for plaintiff (91 Cal. App. 405, 410-412) .

[b] Partnership May Be Bound by Instrument Executed in Individual Partner's Name if Parties so Intended

In Wurm v. Metz (1958) 162 Cal. App. 2d 262, 327 P.2d 969 , defendants were partners engaged in the business of raising, buying, producing, and selling poultry. During the course of the business, one of the defendant partners obtained several loans from plaintiff. Plaintiff was told that the funds were needed to purchase chickens and other supplies for current needs, for operational expenses, and to keep the plant going. The promissory notes that evidenced the loans were signed by the active partner individually. Plaintiff brought an action against the partnership and its individual members for the money loaned. The trial court rendered judgment for plaintiff, and the passive partners appealed, contending, among other things, that the money was loaned to defendant active partner individually.

The appellate court affirmed, holding that the fact that the promissory notes were signed by the active partner individually was a circumstance to be considered in determining the intention of the parties. This circumstance did not relieve the partnership of liability if the active partner had authority to bind the firm and the notes were executed with such intent and were so accepted and credit was extended based on them. The court held that in this case, the nature of the partnership business fairly and reasonably implied the borrowing of money to accommodate its necessities (162 Cal. App. 2d 262, 269) .

[c] Execution of Promissory Note

The facts and procedural background of Wurm v. Metz (1958) 162 Cal. App. 2d 262, 327 P.2d 969 , are discussed in § 170.201[3][b]. In Wurm, the appellate court held that promissory notes executed by a general partner in the ordinary course of business were binding on the other partners, even though they had no knowledge of the execution of the notes.

In Stauffer v. Ti Hang Lung & Co. (1938) 29 Cal. App. 2d 121, 84 P.2d 209 , defendant partnership owned a one-third interest in a corporation. One of the corporation's stockholders and a managing partner for defendant secured a loan from a bank on a note executed by the partner in defendant's name. The proceeds of the loan were then paid over to the corporation. Thereafter, the note was renewed three times with the corporation as maker and defendant as endorser. After the third renewal, the bank wrote to defendant advising it that the bank was holding the note. This was the first time that defendant was informed of the existence of the note. The bank subsequently assigned its interest in the note to plaintiff. Plaintiff brought an action for recovery, and the trial court rendered judgment in his favor. Defendant appealed, contending that the managing partner was without authority to make the endorsement because defendant's endorsement was made without consideration, making defendant an accommodation endorser.

The appellate court affirmed. The court held that because defendant owned a considerable portion of the capital stock of the corporation, and the corporation was engaged in selling defendant's merchandise, anything that would contribute to the financial stability and credit of the corporation would directly benefit defendant. It held, therefore, that there was sufficient evidence to support the trial court's finding that defendant was not an accommodation endorser (29 Cal. App. 2d 121, 124) . The court recognized the general rule that the power of partners to bind one another by commercial paper does not extend to endorsements or other contracts for the accommodation of a third person. However, promissory notes executed by a general partner in the ordinary course of business are binding on the other partners, even though they have no knowledge of the execution of the notes. The court held that the basis for this rule was former Civ. Code § 2403(1) (now see Corp. Code § 16301) (29 Cal. App. 2d 121, 124-125) .

[a] Authority to Enter Into Written Agreement

In First Nat'l. Bank of Dixon v. Spangler (1920) 49 Cal. App. 133, 192 P. 874 , defendant partner executed three promissory notes in plaintiff's favor. The trial court found that the notes represented the obligation of defendant's partnership even though they were only signed by him. Defendant appealed, and the appellate court affirmed. The court held that if a partner acts within the apparent scope of his or her authority, whether in good or bad faith, the partner's acts or declarations are binding on his or her copartners in favor of third persons if the third persons believe in and rely on the partner's statements, and on the strength of that confidence extend credit or advance money to the partner for the use and benefit of the partnership. The fact that the notes were signed by the partner individually rather than in the partnership name, although a circumstance to be considered in determining the intention of the parties, did not relieve the partnership of liability if the partner had authority to bind the firm and that was what was intended (49 Cal. App. 133, 135-136) .

[b] Execution of Promissory Note

The facts and procedural background of Jacobson v. Lamb (1928) 91 Cal. App. 405, 267 P. 114 , are discussed in [3][a], above. In Jacobson, the court held that as an agent for a partnership in the transaction of its business, every general partner may bind his or her copartners by an agreement in writing. The court noted that the execution of negotiable notes is not one of the acts that a partner is by law prohibited from performing on behalf of the general partnership (91 Cal. App. 405, 410-411) . The court held that if the promissory notes being sued on were executed by the partnership's managing partner in the ordinary course of business, the passive partner would be bound, even though he had no knowledge of the execution of the notes (91 Cal. App. 405, 409) . The managing partner told plaintiff that he needed the borrowed funds for the partnership business because it was expanding, and because the partnership had to advance freight charges before it could take delivery of merchandise (91 Cal. App. 405, 413) . The court held that there was substantial evidence from which the jury could determine that it was within the ordinary and usual course of the conduct of the partnership business to borrow money and execute promissory notes. Trial testimony indicated that the nature of the partnership business fairly and reasonably implied borrowing money to accommodate its necessities and convenience whenever the occasion occurred (91 Cal. App. 405, 415-416) .

[1] FORM Supporting Contention That Act of Partner Binds Partnership [Corp. Code § 16301; former Corp. Code § 15009]--Ratification of Acts Beyond Scope of Authority

THE PARTNERSHIP IS BOUND BY THE UNAUTHORIZED ACT OF ITS PARTNER _____ [name] BECAUSE, ALTHOUGH THE PARTNER(S) _____ [WAS or WERE] AWARE OF THE ACT, HE/SHE/THEY _____ [RATIFIED or ACQUIESCED IN] THE ACT BY _____ [specify, e.g., ACCEPTING AND ENJOYING THE BENEFITS OF THE TRANSACTION].

Ratification of Partner's Acts Beyond Scope of Authority. Notwithstanding a partner's lack of authority, his or her partners may be bound by his or her acts if the partners have knowledge of the acts and acquiesce in them, for example by accepting and retaining the benefits of the transaction (Cowan v. Tremble (1931) 111 Cal. App. 458, 464, 296 P. 91).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that a partnership is bound by the acts of one of its partners. Even if a partner's act is beyond his or her authority, a partnership is bound if it ratifies or acquiesces in the act by accepting and enjoying the benefits of it [Cowan v. Tremble (1931) 111 Cal. App. 458, 464, 296 P. 91] . However, if a partnership expressly repudiates a partner's act, the mere fact that the partnership enjoys the benefits of the act does not in itself bind the partnership unless it ultimately acquiesces to the transaction [see DeSantis v. Miller

Petroleum Co. (1938) 29 Cal. App. 2d 679, 683-684, 85 P.2d 489 (discussed in § 170.211[3])].

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that a partnership is bound by the act of one of its partners because it ratified or acquiesced in the act. They also may be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in §§ 170.211, 170.212 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Ratification of Partner's Acts Beyond Scope of Authority

In Cowan v. Tremble (1931) 111 Cal. App. 458, 296 P. 91 , plaintiff's agent and defendant active partner entered into an agreement whereby plaintiff was to purchase the partnership business. The agreement provided that the partnership was to be incorporated during escrow, and the partnership property thereafter transferred to plaintiff as stock. However, certain conditions requested by defendant's passive partner to be included in the agreement were not made a part of it, and he refused to sign the agreement. Plaintiff sued for breach of contract. At trial, the jury rendered a verdict for plaintiff, and defendants appealed.

The appellate court affirmed. The court held that when a person dealing with a partner has notice of restrictions on the partner's authority, the acts of a partner in contravention of those restrictions are not binding on the partnership or the other partners unless the other partners have waived the restrictions or limitation by their conduct (111 Cal. App. 458, 463) . The passive partner's consent was conditional, and thus the active partner had no authority to act until the conditions were met, and plaintiff's agent was apprised of the passive partner's objection to the contract. Nevertheless, the evidence indicated that the partners incorporated the partnership using plaintiff's deposit. The court held that this was a manifest recognition of the contract. Notwithstanding a partner's want of authority, his or her copartners may be bound by the partner's acts when, with knowledge of the facts, they acquiesce to them, as by accepting and retaining the benefits of the transaction (111 Cal. App. 458, 464) .

[a] Ratification of Partner's Acts Beyond Scope of Authority

In Bissell v. King (1928) 91 Cal. App. 420, 267 P. 356 , defendant partners entered into an agreement whereby the managing partner was to purchase the passive partner's interest in the partnership for a sum payable in monthly installments. The partnership was not to be dissolved until the last installment had been paid, and during the payment period, the managing partner executed several promissory notes in the partnership's name, including one in plaintiff's favor. The managing partner subsequently disappeared, and plaintiff sued to recover on the note. Judgment was entered against both defendants individually and as copartners, and the passive partner appealed, contending that the managing partner had no authority to execute the promissory notes. The appellate court affirmed, based on Jacobson v. Lamb (1928) 91 Cal. App. 405, 410-412, 267 P. 114 (discussed in § 170.201[3][a]) (91 Cal. App. 420, 425-426) . The court noted that even if the managing partner had no authority to bind the passive partner, the passive partner told plaintiff he would do what he could after seeing the note with full knowledge of the facts regarding the loan, and later stated that he would protect plaintiff in the note. The court held that this action was a ratification of the managing partner's act in signing the partnership name to plaintiff's note (91 Cal. App. 420, 427) . The court held that when an agent is authorized to do an act, and he or she transcends his or her authority, it is the duty of the principal to repudiate the act as soon as he or she is fully informed of what has been done in his or her name. If this is not done, the principal will be bound by the act by having ratified it by implication (91 Cal. App. 420, 428) .

§ 170.203 Supporting Contention That Act of Partner Binds Partnership [Corp. Code § 16301; former Corp. Code § 15009]--Failure to Inform Third Parties of Special Restrictions on Authority

[1] FORM Supporting Contention That Act of Partner Binds Partnership [Corp. Code § 16301; former Corp. Code § 15009]--Failure to Inform Third Parties of Special Restrictions on Authority

THE PARTNERSHIP WAS BOUND BY THE ACTS OF ITS PARTNER _____ [name] EVEN THOUGH HE/SHE HAD NO AUTHORITY TO ACT BECAUSE PLAINTIFF _____ [name] HAD NO KNOWLEDGE OF ANY SPECIAL LIMITATION ON THE PARTNER'S AUTHORITY TO ACT, AND THE PARTNERSHIP FAILED TO INFORM HIM/HER OF ANY SUCH RESTRICTIONS.

Third Parties Are Required to Be Informed of Special Restrictions on Partner's Authority. Sound public policy dictates that a partnership must inform those who deal with its members in the course of the partnership's business of any special restrictions on a particular partner's authority (Blackmon v. Hale (1970) 1 Cal. 3d 548, 558, 83 Cal. Rptr. 194, 463 P.2d 418 ; see Corp. Code § 16301(1)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that a partnership is bound by the acts of one of its partners. Corp. Code § 16301(1) provides that an act of a partner for apparently carrying on in the ordinary course the partnership business will not bind a partnership if a partner had no authority to act for the partnership in the particular matter and the third person with whom the partner was dealing knew or had notification that the partner had no authority to act. However, a third party cannot be charged with knowledge of private agreements between the parties restricting authority [Blackmon v. Hale (1970) 1 Cal. 3d 548, 557-558, 83 Cal. Rptr. 194, 463 P.2d 418] . Thus, if a third party deals with a partner with apparent authority to act, and the third party is not informed that the partner is specially prohibited from acting in his or her individual capacity in that particular circumstance, the third party will not be charged with knowledge of the prohibition and the partnership may be bound by the act.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that because a third party did not know and was not informed of restrictions on a partner's authority to act in a particular transaction, the partnership is bound by the partner's acts. They also may be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in § 170.211 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Third Parties Are Required to Be Informed of Special Restrictions on Partner's Authority

The facts and procedural background of Blackmon v. Hale (1970) 1 Cal. 3d 548, 83 Cal. Rptr. 194, 463 P.2d 418 , are discussed in § 170.200[3]. In Blackmon, the California Supreme Court held that every partner is an agent of the partnership for the purpose of its business, and the act of every partner for apparently carrying on in the usual way the business of the partnership binds the partnership. However, the Court noted that former Corp. Code § 15009 [see now Corp. Code § 16301] provides that the partnership will be relieved from liability for the wrongs of its partners acting individually when the third person with whom the partner is dealing has knowledge of the fact that he or she is dealing with the partner in his or her individual capacity and not on behalf of the partnership (1 Cal. 3d 548, 557) . Accordingly, the Court held that if defendant's partner was acting only in an individual capacity, the partnership was not liable. However, it also held that sound public policy dictates that a partnership must inform those who deal with its members in the course of the partnership's business of any special restrictions on a particular partner's authority. A person dealing with a partnership usually is in no position to know of special agreements between the partners and thus cannot be charged with knowledge of such agreements absent specific notice. The Court observed that there was no evidence that either defendant or his partner ever informed plaintiff that defendant's partner was not representing plaintiff as a member of the partnership. The Court held that this was one of the factors that would justify a reasonable person in believing that he or she was dealing with a partnership (1 Cal. 3d 548, 558) .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Partner's Act Apparently Outside Usual Course of Partnership Business

Corp. Code § 16301(2) [formerly Corp. Code § 15009 (pre-'97 Act)] provides that an act of a partner that is not apparently for carrying on in the ordinary course the partnership business, or business of the kind carried on by the partnership, binds the partnership only if the act was authorized by the other partners. When the act of a partner is not within the ordinary business of the partnership, the partnership is not bound unless the other partners have given their express authority to act [Corp. Code § 16301(2); former Corp. Code § 15009(2); Ellis v. Mihelis (1963) 60 Cal. 2d 206, 217-218, 32 Cal. Rptr. 415, 384 P.2d 7] .

In Ellis v. Mihelis (1963) 60 Cal. 2d 206, 32 Cal. Rptr. 415, 384 P.2d 7 , defendant brothers owned two ranches as partners. They decided to sell one of the ranches, and agreed that only one of them would handle sale negotiations and submit prospective deals to the other. Plaintiffs were interested in purchasing certain property, but the owner of that property was only interested in an exchange for a ranch. One of the plaintiffs deposited funds in escrow and instructed the owner of the property that plaintiffs wanted to purchase, as plaintiff's agent, to find a ranch to purchase with the funds. The owner of the property plaintiffs wanted to purchase then entered into an agreement with the active defendant partner to buy defendants' ranch, and the agreement and funds for a down payment were placed in escrow. However, at a subsequent meeting the defendant active partner stated that he had changed his mind. One of the reasons given was that his brother, the passive partner, did not want to sell. Thereafter, plaintiffs ratified the acts of the owner of the property that plaintiffs wanted to purchase, and tendered full performance under the agreement with the owner. Plaintiffs then brought an action against defendants for specific performance. The trial court rendered judgment for plaintiffs, finding that defendants were partners, that the ranch was an asset of the partnership, and that each orally authorized the other to sell the ranch for the partnership. Defendants appealed, contending that the agreement could not be binding on the passive partner because he did not sign the contract and he did not give the active partner any written authorization to enter into the agreement on the passive partner's behalf.

The California Supreme Court reversed, noting that although the statute of frauds provides that an agreement for the sale of real property must be signed by the party to be charged or by an agent who has authority in writing, the Court disagreed with plaintiff's contention that former Corp. Code § 15009 overcame that requirement in this case. The court held that former Corp. Code § 15009(1) and (2) distinguished between acts of a partner that bind the partnership because of his or her status as a partner without any express authority being required, and acts binding on the partnership only after express authorization by all partners. Under the express terms of former Corp. Code § 15009(1) [now see Corp. Code § 16301(1)], all acts of a partner that are apparently within the usual course of the particular business bind the partnership. The effect of this provision is that the status of a partner, without more, serves as complete authority with respect to such acts, obviating the necessity of any express authority, either oral or written, from the other members of the partnership. On the other hand, former Corp. Code § 15009(2) [now see Corp. Code § 16301(2)] provided that there must be express authority for the acts of a partner that do not appear to be in the usual course of the business. The Court held that former Corp. Code § 15009(2), unlike the broad provision in former Corp. Code § 15009(1), contained no language that would justify a conclusion that written authority is not necessary in situations when the statute of frauds would ordinarily be applicable (60 Cal. 2d 206, 217-218) . Because there was no evidence that defendants were in the business of buying and selling real estate or the sale of the ranch was in the usual course of the partnership business, the Court held that a contract to sell it would come within former Corp Code § 15009(2). Therefore, the statute of frauds was applicable, and the active partner could not bind the passive partner without authority in writing (60 Cal. 2d 206, 218) .

In Bank of America v. Kumle (1945) 70 Cal. App. 2d 362, 160 P.2d 875 , defendant leased some real property he owned to a mining partnership. Defendant then expressed an interest in joining the partnership to engage in mining some property in another state. It was proposed that defendant would contribute money, and the other partners would contribute their equipment, skill, and experience. During these discussions, defendant negotiated with plaintiff for a loan of the required money. Thereafter, a copy of the proposed articles of partnership was delivered to plaintiff by defendant. Plaintiff subsequently approved defendant's loan application. About a week later, the articles of partnership were executed by all parties. The loan was advanced in monthly installments, some of which were paid after the partnership came into existence. Later, the partnership encountered difficulties, and the work on the property was abandoned. Plaintiff brought an action on six promissory notes to recover the balance of the loan against the partnership, and against defendant and the other partners individually. The trial court entered judgment in favor of the partnership and its individual members except for defendant. Judgment was entered against defendant individually for the balance of the loan. Plaintiff appealed.

The appellate court affirmed, holding that the case was governed by the provisions of former Civ. Code § 2403(2) (now see Corp. Code § 16301(2)), which provided that an act of a partner that is not apparently for the carrying on of the business of the partnership in the usual way does not bind the partnership unless authorized by the other partners (70 Cal. App. 2d 362, 366) . The court held that the transaction in this case must be considered an "unusual act" as defined in that provision. The subject promissory notes were not executed in the partnership name but in defendant's individual name. Further, the notes were not executed for the purpose of the partnership business because at the time there was no partnership business (70 Cal. App. 2d 362, 366-367) .

§ 170.211 Opposing Contention That Act of Partner Binds Partnership--Notice of Limitation on Authority [Corp. Code §§ 16301, 16303; former Corp. Code §§ 15009(1), (4), 15010.7]

[1] FORM Opposing Contention That Act of Partner Binds Partnership--Notice of Limitation on Authority [Corp. Code §§ 16301, 16303; former Corp. Code §§ 15009(1), (4), 15010.7]

THE PARTNERSHIP IS NOT BOUND BY THE ACT OF ITS PARTNER _____ [name] BECAUSE HE/SHE HAD NO AUTHORITY TO ACT FOR THE PARTNERSHIP IN THIS PARTICULAR MATTER, AND THE PARTY WITH WHOM HE/SHE WAS DEALING KNEW OF THE LIMITATION ON _____ [name]'S AUTHORITY [BECAUSE THAT PARTY HAD CONSTRUCTIVE NOTICE OF THE LIMITATION FROM THE FILED STATEMENT OF PARTNERSHIP].

A. Partnership Not Bound When Third Party Has Notice of Limitation on Partner's Authority to Act. The act of a partner does not bind the partnership if the partner has in fact no authority to act for the partnership in a particular matter, and the person with whom he or she is dealing knows or receives notification that he or she has no such authority. (Corp. Code § 16301(1) or former Corp. Code § 15009(1), (4); see DeSantis v. Miller Petroleum Co. (1938) 29 Cal. App. 2d 679, 683, 85 P.2d 489).

[Optional] B. Constructive Notice of Restrictions on Authority of Partner to Convey Partnership Real Property. "Knowledge" of restrictions on a partner's authority to convey partnership real property includes constructive notice pursuant to the Corporations Code. A person not a partner is deemed to know of a limitation on the authority of a partner to transfer real property held in the name of the partnership if a certified copy of the filed statement containing the limitation on authority is of record in the office for recording transfers of that real property (Corp. Code § 16303(e) or former Corp. Code §§ 15009(1), 15010.7).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a contention that a partnership is bound by the acts of its partners. If a person with whom a partner was dealing knew that the partner had no authority to act, apparent or otherwise, or that the partner was expressly prohibited from acting in the particular circumstance, the partnership will not be bound by the partner's unauthorized act in such a circumstance.

Optional Paragraph B may be used when a partner transfers the partnership's real property despite an express prohibition against such a transfer in the filed statement of partnership. The third party with whom the partner was dealing will be charged with constructive notice of the restriction, and the partnership will not be bound by the conveyance [see Corp. Code § 16303(e); former Corp. Code §§ 15009(1), 15010.7].

Those points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that a partnership is not bound by the acts of a partner who had no authority to act when the third party with whom the partner transacted business knew of the partner's limited authority. The points and authorities also may be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss facts showing that a partner's act was beyond his or her authority, that the third party with whom the partner transacted business was aware of that fact, and the circumstances under which the third party acquired that knowledge.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Partnership Not Bound When Third Party Has Notice of Limitation on Partner's Authority to Act

Corp. Code § 16301(1) [see former Corp. Code § 15009(1), (4) (pre-'97 Act)] states the general rule that a partner is an agent of the partnership for the purpose of its business. An act of a partner apparently for carrying on in the ordinary course the partnership business (or business of the kind carried on by the partnership) binds the partnership. However, if the partner has in fact no authority to act for the partnership in the particular matter, and the person with whom he or she is dealing knows or receives notification of that fact, the partnership will not be bound.

In DeSantis v. Miller Petroleum Co. (1938) 29 Cal. App. 2d 679, 85 P.2d 489 , defendant companies were partners. A third-party company sold oil well tubing and casing to one of the defendants. Plaintiff guaranteed that the purchasing defendant would pay for the material, and when it failed to do so, plaintiff paid for it. Plaintiff then sued both defendants to recover the purchase price of the material. The trial court originally rendered judgment for plaintiff, but after a successful motion to reopen by the passive partner it was learned that before the sale the passive partner told a representative of the third-party company that it would not be responsible for material purchased by the active partner. The third-party company was expressly told that the active partner had no authority to purchase for the passive partner's account. The trial court rendered judgment for the passive partner, and plaintiff appealed.

The appellate court affirmed. Citing former Civ. Code § 2403(1) (now see Corp. Code § 16301(1)), the court held that a partner is not liable to third parties for contracts entered into with a partnership when the third party has notice that the partner endeavoring to bind the partnership does not have authority to do so (29 Cal. App. 2d 679, 683) . The court held that when a partner gives notice to a third person that he or she will not be bound by the acts of his or her copartner, that partner is not then bound by a contract entered into by the copartner, although the fruits of the contract have been enjoyed by the partnership of which he or she is a member, unless the objecting partner, after making his or her objection, finally acquiesces in the acts (29 Cal. App. 2d 679, 682-683) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Partnership Not Bound When Third Party Has Notice of Limitation on Partner's Authority to Act

In Federal Deposit Ins. Corp. v. Superior Court (1997) 54 Cal. App. 4th 337, 62 Cal. Rptr. 2d 713 , the trial court found that recorded, amended statements of partnership omitting the names of certain partners created a conclusive presumption under former Corp. Code § 15010.5 that they were not partners in 1984 and thus had no authority to bind the partnership or encumber its property. The trial court therefore held that there were no material issues of fact. The court applied the conclusive presumption against the FDIC, a bona fide purchaser for value of partnership property. The appellate court held that the trial court improperly applied the presumption. It stated that language in former Corp. Code § 15010.5 ("in favor of any bona fide purchaser for value of the partnership real property") would be rendered a nullity if the presumption were construed to apply in favor of any party seeking to rely on it. It concluded that the Legislature intended to limit the application of the conclusive presumption. Nothing in former Corp. Code § 15010.5 suggested that persons other than the partnership are conclusively bound by the content of a statement of partnership. Further, no language in the statute suggests that a good faith purchaser of partnership property can be denied a claim against the partnership if the purchaser relied on evidence other than the partnership's most recently recorded statement of partnership and dealt with a person not listed in that statement. In those circumstances, under the statutory language, the only consequence is that the purchaser must establish a claim against the partnership without the assistance of a conclusive presumption. Without application of the presumption, there were triable issues of fact as to whether the persons omitted from the recorded statement were actual or ostensible agents of the partnership and could bind the partnership. The appellate court held that the fact question precluded summary judgment (54 Cal. App. 4th 337, 345-348) .

[1] FORM Opposing Contention That Act of Partner Binds Partnership [Corp. Code § 16301; Corp. Code § 15009]--Burden of Proof and Presumption Against Binding Partnership to Contract Signed by Individual Partner

THE PARTNERSHIP IS NOT BOUND BY THE _____ [specify agreement, e.g., PROMISSORY NOTES] EXECUTED BY _____ [name], ONE OF ITS PARTNERS, IN HIS/HER OWN NAME BECAUSE SUCH [A] PAPER[S] _____ [IS o r ARE] PRESUMED TO BE THE OBLIGATION OF THE INDIVIDUAL PARTNER, AND PLAINTIFF _____ [name] HAS NOT MET HIS/HER BURDEN OF PROOF BY CLEAR AND CONVINCING EVIDENCE THAT THE PARTNER'S SIGNATURE WAS INTENDED AS THE SIGNATURE OF THE PARTNERSHIP.

Presumption That Contract Signed by Individual Partner Is Partner's Own Obligation. On its face, a contract is to be presumed to be the paper of the individual partner whose name is signed to it. The burden of proof is on the holder to show affirmatively that the signature was intended for the signature of the partnership (Bank of America v. Kumle (1945) 70 Cal. App. 2d 362, 368, 160 P.2d 875).

[2] Comments

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a contention that a partnership is bound by the acts of one of its partners. When a partner executes an agreement in his or her own name, it is presumed that the obligation thereby created is personal to the partner. The burden is on the party holding the agreement to prove by clear and convincing evidence that the partner signed the agreement for the partnership [Bank of America v. Kumle (1945) 70 Cal. App. 2d 362, 368, 160 P.2d 875] . For example, a partnership will not be bound by promissory notes executed by a partner individually until the presumption is overcome.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that a party holding an obligation executed by a partner in his or her own name has not proved by clear and convincing evidence that the parties intended to bind the partnership. They also may be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities in § 170.201.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Presumption That Contract Signed by Individual Partner Is Partner's Own Obligation

The facts and procedural background of Bank of America v. Kumle (1945) 70 Cal. App. 2d 362, 160 P.2d 875 , are discussed in § 170.210[3]. In Kumle, the appellate court held that an act of a partner that is not apparently for the carrying on of the business of the partnership in the usual way does not bind the partnership unless authorized by the other partners (70 Cal. App. 2d 362, 366) . The court held that on its face, a contract is to be presumed to be the paper of the individual partner whose name is signed to it, and the burden of proof is on the holder to show affirmatively that the signature was intended for the signature of the partnership. In other words, the presumption is that a written instrument deliberately executed expresses the intention of the parties. This presumption should prevail unless the evidence offered to show a contrary contention is clear and convincing (70 Cal. App. 2d 362, 368) . The court held that the trial court's opinion on conflicting questions of fact must be considered as final. The trial court found that the evidence introduced by plaintiff to overcome the presumption that notes signed by defendant were defendant's personal obligation was not clear and convincing (70 Cal. App. 2d 362, 369) .

[1] FORM Opposing Contention That Act of Partner Binds Partnership [Corp. Code § 16301; former Corp. Code § 15009]--Partner Has No Authority to Bind Partnership on Contract of Guaranty

THE PARTNERSHIP IS NOT BOUND BY THE CONTRACT OF GUARANTY EXECUTED BY _____ [name] BECAUSE _____ [name] LACKED AUTHORITY TO EXECUTE CONTRACTS OF GUARANTY ON BEHALF OF THE PARTNERSHIP AND THE PARTNERSHIP DID NOT RATIFY THE EXECUTION OF THE CONTRACT.

Authority of Partner to Execute Guaranty. A partner has no authority to execute contracts of guaranty on behalf of the partnership without authority specially given him or her for the purpose, or implied from the common course of the business of the firm, or from the previous course of dealing between the parties, unless the act of the partner is later ratified by the copartners (Tsakos Shipping & Trading, S.A. v. Juniper Garden Town Homes, Ltd. (1993) 12 Cal. App. 4th 74, 93, 15 Cal. Rptr. 2d 585).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a contention that a partnership is bound by a guaranty agreement entered into by one of its partners.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the partnership is not bound under a guaranty agreement. They also may be adopted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Authority of Partner to Execute Guaranty

In Tsakos Shipping & Trading, S.A. v. Juniper Garden Town Homes, Ltd. (1993) 12 Cal. App. 4th 74, 15 Cal. Rptr. 2d 585 , a general partner of defendant partnership had borrowed $35,000 from plaintiff and signed an indemnity provision purporting to bind the partnership to guarantee the loan. After the general partner failed to repay the loan, plaintiff lender filed a complaint in a New York court naming both the general partner and the partnership as defendants. Plaintiff served the complaint on the general partner by mail, and the general partner defended the action without the other partners having knowledge of the suit. The New York court entered judgment in plaintiff's favor against the general partner and partnership. After plaintiff entered notice of entry of the judgment in a California court, the partnership filed a motion to vacate the sister state judgment under Code Civ. Proc. § 1710.40 on the basis that it had never been served in the New York action. The trial court denied the motion, finding that the partnership had been represented in the New York action by the general partner's attorney.

The appellate court reversed. The court did not squarely hold whether or not the service on the partnership in the New York action was adequate, but noted that even assuming that service was inadequate, defective service alone would not be a sufficient basis to vacate the judgment. The partnership would be required to plead and prove that it had a meritorious case, that is, that a different result would likely follow if the New York judgment were set aside and a new trial held (12 Cal. App. 4th 74, 89-90) . Reviewing applicable authority, the court stated that courts have consistently concluded that a general partner has no authority to bind the partnership on a contract of guaranty. The normal partnership is organized to carry on a business for its members, and not to assist other persons by becoming surety for them, or answerable for their debts. A partner has no authority to execute contracts of guaranty on behalf of the partnership without authority specially given him for the purpose, or implied from the common course of the business of the firm, or from the previous course of dealing between the parties, unless the act of the partner is afterward ratified by the copartners. The court concluded that defendant met its burden of pleading and proving it had a meritorious defense to the New York action; plaintiff failed to show that the partnership had specifically given the general partner the authority to execute contracts of guaranty on behalf of the partnership, that such authority could be implied from prior dealings between plaintiff and defendant, or that defendant later ratified the general partner's action (12 Cal. App. 4th 74, 93-94) .

[1] FORM Supporting Contention That Partnership Is Liable for Wrongful Act or Omission of Partner--Willful Misconduct, Recklessness, Negligence, Fraud, and Misrepresentation [Corp. Code § 16305(a); former Corp. Code § 15013]

THE PARTNERSHIP IS LIABLE FOR THE _____ [specify, e.g., RECKLESSNESS or NEGLIGENCE or MISREPRESENTATION] OF ITS PARTNER _____ [name] BECAUSE THE _____ [specify, e.g., WRONGFUL ACT or OMISSION] WAS MADE WITHIN THE SCOPE OF THE PARTNER'S APPARENT AUTHORITY TO ACT.

A. Partnership Liable for Partner's Wrongful Act or Omission. A partnership is liable for loss or injury caused to a person or for a penalty incurred, as a result of a wrongful act or omission, or other actionable conduct, of a partner acting in the ordinary course of business of the partnership or with the authority of the partnership (Corp. Code § 16305(a) or former Corp. Code § 15013; Madsen v. Cawthorne (1938) 30 Cal. App. 2d 124, 125, 85 P.2d 909).

[Optional] B. Partnership Liable for Partner's Willful and Malicious or Negligent Acts. The principle on which liability rests is the same as that applicable to the relation of principal and agent, and master and servant. Every partner is the agent of the partnership. A principal is liable for the wrongful acts of his or her agent committed in the transaction of the principal's business. This liability includes willful and malicious acts as well as acts of simple negligence (Madsen v. Cawthorne (1938) 30 Cal. App. 2d 124, 126, 85 P.2d 909).

[Optional] C. Partnership Liable for Partner's Fraud or Misrepresentation. All partners are bound by the fraud of

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that a partnership is bound by the acts of one of its partners. A partnership is liable for the wrongful act or omission of one of its partners acting in the ordinary course of business of the partnership [Corp. Code § 16305(a); former Corp. Code § 15013; Madsen v. Cawthorne (1938) 30 Cal. App. 2d 124, 125, 85 P.2d 909] . Optional Paragraph B may be used to apply this rule to cases of willful or malicious acts or simple negligence [see Madsen v. Cawthorne (1938) 30 Cal. App. 2d 124, 126, 85 P.2d 909] . Optional Paragraph C may be used to apply the rule in cases of partner fraud and misrepresentation [Zemelman v. Boston Ins. Co. (1970) 4 Cal. App. 3d 15, 18, 84 Cal. Rptr. 206] . For example, the partnership may be liable for false insurance claims filed by one of its partners.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that a partnership is liable for the injuries or other damages caused by the wrongful act or omission of one of its partners. These points and authorities also may be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Partnership Liable for Partner's Wrongful Act or Omission

In Madsen v. Cawthorne (1938) 30 Cal. App. 2d 124, 85 P.2d 909 , defendant's partner was on partnership business when he was driving an automobile in a reckless manner while intoxicated. Plaintiff was a passenger in the automobile, and she received serious personal injuries when the automobile was involved in an accident. Plaintiff sued for her injuries, and at trial a jury rendered a verdict in her favor. Defendant appealed.

The appellate court affirmed, holding that a partnership is liable for injuries resulting from willful misconduct or intoxication of a copartner while he or she is engaged on the business of the partnership. The court noted that former Civ. Code § 2407 (now see Corp. Code § 16305(a)) provided in part that when, by any wrongful act or omission of any partner acting in the ordinary course of the business of the partnership, loss or injury is caused to any person, the partnership is liable for that act to the same extent as the partner so acting or omitting to act (30 Cal. App. 2d 124, 125) . The court held that it is true that one partner is not presumed to concur in another partner's willful torts or clearly illegal acts even though such acts are connected with, but not within the scope of, partnership affairs. However, it held that the true test seems to be not the illegality or the malicious and willful character of the wrong, but whether it was done within the scope of the wrongdoing partner's authority. Such a determination must necessarily rest on the facts of the particular case (30 Cal. App. 2d 124, 125-126) .

[b] Partnership Liable for Partner's Willful and Malicious or Negligent Acts

The facts and procedural background of Madsen v. Cawthorne (1938) 30 Cal. App. 2d 124, 85 P.2d 909 are discussed in [a], above. In Madsen, the appellate court held that a partnership is liable for injuries resulting from willful misconduct or intoxication of a copartner while he or she is engaged on the business of the partnership. The court held that the principle on which the liability rests is the same as that applicable to the relation of principal and agent, and master and servant. It held that every partner is the agent of the partnership, and a principal is liable for the wrongful acts of his or her agent committed in the transaction of the principal's business. This liability includes willful and malicious acts as well as acts of simple negligence (30 Cal. App. 2d 124, 126) .

[c] Fraud or Misrepresentation

In Zemelman v. Boston Ins. Co. (1970) 4 Cal. App. 3d 15, 84 Cal. Rptr. 206 , a partnership's premises were damaged by fire. Appellant partners brought an action against six insurance companies to recover the proceeds of fire insurance policies and interest on the proceeds. The respondents claimed in their answers that the policies were voided when one of the partners made false statements on behalf of the partnership in its claim for the proceeds. The trial court granted summary judgments to five of the insurance companies. Appellants appealed.

The appellate court affirmed, holding that all the partners will be bound by the fraud of one of the partners in contracts relating to the partnership made with innocent third parties. The court held that all of the partners are responsible for the injury occasioned by the fraud, whether they are cognizant of the fraud or not. The rule is the same as it is in respect to the responsibility of the principal for the fraud of his or her agent, while acting within the scope of his or her authority. A partner becomes liable for the fraud of his or her copartner because of the relation of agent each bears to the other in the partnership business. If it can be said that the partner's acts were done within the scope of his or her acts as copartner under former Corp. Code § 15009(1) [see now Corp. Code §§ 16301, 16305], then the partnership is bound to accept the legal consequences of those acts (4 Cal. App. 3d 15, 18) . The court held that the false filing of insurance claims were acts done with apparent authority (4 Cal. App. 3d 15, 18-19) .

[1] FORM Supporting Contention That Partnership Liable for Partner's Breach of Trust--Misapplication of Money or Property Belonging to Third Person [Corp. Code § 16305(b); former Corp. Code § 15014]

THE PARTNERSHIP IS LIABLE FOR THE BREACH OF TRUST BY ITS PARTNER _____ [name] BECAUSE THAT PARTNER MISAPPLIED THE _____ [MONEY or PROPERTY] BELONGING TO PLAINTIFF _____ [name] AND RECEIVED BY THAT PARTNER _____ [IN THE COURSE OF THE PARTNERSHIP'S BUSINESS or WHILE ACTING WITH AUTHORITY OF THE PARTNERSHIP].

Partnership Liable for Partner's Misapplication of Third Person's Money or Property. If, in the course of the partnership's business or while acting with authority of the partnership, a partner receives or causes the partnership to receive money or property of a person not a partner, and the money or property is misapplied by a partner, the partnership is liable for the loss (Corp. Code § 16305(b) or former Corp. Code § 15014; Blackmon v. Hale (1970) 1 Cal. 3d 548, 557, 83 Cal. Rptr. 194, 463 P.2d 418).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that a partnership is liable for a breach of trust by one of its partners. A partnership is liable for any loss occurring as a result of a partner's misapplication of money or property belonging to third parties if a partner receives or causes the partnership to receive the money or property in the course of the partnership's business or while acting with authority of the partnership [Corp. Code § 16305(b); former

Corp. Code § 15014; Blackmon v. Hale (1970) 1 Cal. 3d 548, 557, 83 Cal. Rptr. 194, 463 P.2d 418] . For example, the partnership may be liable for the actions of one of its partners in diverting funds to his or her own use that have been given to him by a third party within the usual course of the partnership business.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that a partnership is liable for a breach of trust by one of its partners. They also may be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss facts showing that either the partnership or one of its partners has been entrusted with a third party's money or property, and the partner has misapplied the money or property.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Partnership Liable for Partner's Misapplication of Third Person's Money or Property

The facts and procedural background of Blackmon v. Hale (1970) 1 Cal. 3d 548, 83 Cal. Rptr. 194, 463 P.2d 418 , are discussed in § 170.200[2]. In Blackmon, the California Supreme Court held that if defendant's partner received plaintiff's investment funds while acting within the scope of his apparent authority, or if the partnership received the funds in the course of its business, defendant was jointly and severally liable for plaintiff's losses caused by the partner's diversion of the funds to his own use. The Court based its holding in part on former Corp. Code § 15014 [see now Corp. Code § 16305(b)], which provided that a partnership is bound to make good the loss (1) when one partner acting within the scope of his or her apparent authority receives money or property of a third person and misapplies it, and (2) when the partnership in the course of its business receives money or property of a third person and the money or property received is misapplied by any partner while it is in the custody of the partnership (1 Cal. 3d 548, 557) .

A. Joint and Several Liability. All partners are liable jointly and severally for all obligations of the partnership, unless otherwise agreed by the claimant or provided by law (Corp. Proc. § 369.5; see Corp. Code § 16307).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that individual partners are jointly and severally liable for partnership obligations or other liabilities created by one of its partners [Corp. Code § 16306(a); former Corp. Code § 15015]. Special rules apply to the liability of partners in a registered limited liability partnership (LLP) [see Corp. Code § 16306(c)-(g); former Corp. Code § 15015(b)-(g)].

Partners who are named as individual defendants in an action are personally liable on a judgment rendered against them [Code Civ. Proc. § 369.5; Corp. Code § 16307(b)]. Thus, Optional Paragraph B may be used when counsel wishes to have judgment executed against a partner's personal property.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the partners are jointly and severally liable for the acts of one of the other partners. These points and authorities also may be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in §§ 170.240 -170.241 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a complaint for damages by an injured party against the partnership and partners individually and as members of the partnership, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 402, Partnerships: Actions Between General Partners or Partnership and Third Parties, § 402.42 (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Joint and Several Liability

The facts and procedural background of Blackmon v. Hale (1970) 1 Cal. 3d 548, 83 Cal. Rptr. 194, 463 P.2d 418 , are discussed in § 170.200[3]. In Blackmon, the California Supreme Court held that if defendant's partner received plaintiff's investment funds while acting within the scope of his apparent authority, or if the partnership received the funds in the course of its business, defendant was jointly and severally liable for plaintiff's losses caused by the partner's diversion of the funds to his own use. The Court based its holding in part on former Corp. Code § 15015(a) [now see Corp. Code § 15306], which provided that each partner is jointly and severally liable for the misapplication of funds belonging to a third party by another partner when the misapplication is chargeable to the partnership under former Corp. Code § 15014 [now see Corp. Code § 16305(b)] (1 Cal. 3d 548, 557) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Joint Liability

In Jans v. Nelson (2000) 83 Cal. App. 4th 848, 100 Cal. Rptr. 2d 106 , a partnership borrowed $750,000 from a bank.

The bank required each owner of the partnership to execute a general continuing guarantee in favor of the bank. After the partnership business ceased operations, the loan went into default and the bank sued all of the guarantors. The bank obtained judgments against some partners and entered into settlement agreements with others. Ultimately, one partner who had paid to the bank a portion of partnership debt for which all partners were co-guarantors brought an action for contribution against the other partners. The trial court concluded that each solvent guarantor was responsible in equity for an equal share of the total sum paid to the bank. The appellate court reversed. It first stated that the question presented -- what is the appropriate contributory share among partners who are sureties of a partnership debt -- had not been decided in any known published opinion (83 Cal. App. 4th 848, 851) . The court examined the "proportionate contribution" concept set forth in Civ. Code §§ 1432, 2848 (83 Cal. App. 4th 848, 855-856) . It concluded that in a circumstance in which all limited partners execute guaranties of a partnership debt and there is no other express agreement concerning rights of contribution, equity requires the proportionate obligation for contribution to be based upon the ownership interest of the various guarantors. Thus, plaintiff was entitled to recover contribution from other solvent partners but the amount of contribution was limited to the excess of his actual payments over his own fair share of the debt (83 Cal. App. 4th 848, 852, 858-859) .

DEFENDANT _____ [name of partner] IS LIABLE FOR _____ [specify obligation incurred, e.g., THE LOAN AGREEMENT ENTERED INTO BY _____ (name of partner), THE ACTIVE PARTNER, ON BEHALF OF THE PARTNERSHIP AND WHICH REMAINS UNPAID] BECAUSE DEFENDANT IS A DORMANT PARTNER WHO WAS A PARTNER, BUT REMAINED UNDISCLOSED, AT THE TIME OF THE TRANSACTION, AND PLAINTIFF _____ [name of creditor] IS ENTITLED TO RECOVER AGAINST ALL THE PARTNERS.

Partnership Debts Chargeable to Dormant Partners. In cases of secret partnership and dormant partners, a creditor is entitled to recover from all the partners when discovered, although the debt was not originally charged to all. Even though one partner holds himself or herself out as the sole owner, the ostensible partner is the agent of the dormant one, and the latter is bound by his or her representations (Schwaegler Co. v. Marchesotti (1948) 88 Cal. App. 2d 738, 743, 199 P.2d 331 ; Bissell v. King (1928) 91 Cal. App. 420, 423, 267 P. 356).

[2] Comments

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that a dormant or secret partner is liable for partnership obligations. Creditors may recover against all the partners whenever they are discovered for partnership obligations entered into by an individual partner even if the partner represents himself or herself to be the sole owner of the business, and the debt or obligation was not originally charged to all [Schwaegler Co. v. Marchesotti (1948) 88 Cal. App. 2d 738, 743, 199 P.2d 331 ; Bissell v. King (1928) 91 Cal. App. 420, 423, 267 P. 356] . Thus, a partner cannot protect himself or herself from partnership obligations by remaining undisclosed during partnership transactions.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that one of the parties was a dormant partner, and he or she is liable with the other partner or partners for an obligation incurred on behalf of the partnership while the dormant partner remained undisclosed. They also may be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss facts showing that although an obligation was incurred by an agreement procured by an individual partner or partners, there was a partner who remained undisclosed to the third party with whom the active partner or partners were dealing.

[2] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Partnership Debts Chargeable to Dormant Partners

In Schwaegler Co. v. Marchesotti (1948) 88 Cal. App. 2d 738, 199 P.2d 331 , defendant was the undisclosed principal in a farming partnership. Plaintiff acted as the partnership's broker for three carloads of partnership onions that were shipped to plaintiff for sale. As an accommodation to the partnership, plaintiff paid drafts attached to the bills of lading and drawn by the partnership in the partnership name. When plaintiff then attempted to sell the onions, they were rejected by the purchasers. The partnership only repaid one-half of the sum advanced by plaintiff on the aforementioned drafts, and plaintiff brought suit for money had and received. The trial court rendered judgment for plaintiff, and against defendant and his partner jointly. Defendant appealed.

The appellate court affirmed, holding that the drawing of the drafts by the partnership against plaintiff created an obligation against the undisclosed partner jointly with his partner. The court held that in cases of secret partnership and dormant partners, a creditor is entitled to recover from all the partners when discovered, though the debt was not originally charged to all, and even though one partner holds himself or herself out as the sole owner, the ostensible partner is the agent of the dormant one, and the latter is bound by his or her representations. As a rule, the dormant partner is liable to the partnership creditors to the same extent as if he or she were known to the creditor at the time the credit was obtained, under the doctrine that an undisclosed principal is liable for the acts of his or her agent (88 Cal. App. 2d 738, 743) .

The facts and procedural background of Bissell v. King (1928) 91 Cal. App. 420, 267 P. 356 , are discussed § 170.202[4]. In Bissel, the appellate court held that the managing partner had authority to borrow money and execute promissory notes, and the defendant passive partner was bound thereby (91 Cal. App. 420, 425-426) . Plaintiff had loaned money to the partnership after a discussion with defendant that the managing partner had purchased defendant's interest in the partnership. The court held that defendant was bound as the managing partner's partner irrespective of whether or not plaintiff thought, from the aforementioned discussion, that defendant owned an interest in the partnership. The court held that this is because a partner's liability is measured not by the impression a third party dealing with the partnership may have respecting his or her interest in the partnership, but is measured by whether or not he or she is a partner. Thus, in cases of secret partnership and dormant partners, a creditor is entitled to recover from all the partners when discovered, though the debt was not originally charged to all, and even though one partner holds himself or herself out as the sole owner, the ostensible partner is the agent of the dormant one, and the latter is bound by his or her representations (91 Cal. App. 420, 423) .

DEFENDANT _____ [name] IS LIABLE WITH THE OTHER _____ [PARTNERS IN THE DEFENDANT PARTNERSHIP or DEFENDANT[S]] TO PLAINTIFF _____ [name of creditor] _____ [specify obligation incurred, e.g., ON AN OPEN BOOK ACCOUNT FOR MERCHANDISE SOLD AND DELIVERED] BECAUSE DEFENDANT _____ [name] BECAME AN OSTENSIBLE PARTNER BY _____ [REPRESENTING or CONSENTING TO OTHERS REPRESENTING] THAT HE/SHE WAS A _____ [MEMBER OF THE PARTNERSHIP or PARTNER WITH THE OTHER DEFENDANT[S]] WHEN THAT OBLIGATION WAS INCURRED.

A. Ostensible Partner or Partnership by Estoppel. If a person, by words or conduct, purports to be a partner, or consents to being represented by another as a partner in a partnership or with one or more persons not partners, the purported partner is liable to the person to whom the representation was made if that person, relying on the representation, enters into a transaction with the actual or purported partnership. If the representation, either by the purported partner or by a person with the purported partner's consent, is made in a public manner, the purported partner is liable to a person who relies on the purported partnership, even if the purported partner is not aware of being held out as a partner to the claimant. If partnership liability results, the purported partner is liable with respect to that liability as if he or she were a partner. If no partnership liability results, the purported partner is liable with respect to that liability jointly and severally with any other persons consenting to the representation (Corp. Code § 16308(a) or former Corp.

Code § 15016(1); Dodd v. Tebbetts (1926) 198 Cal. 333, 339-340, 244 P. 1081).

B. Test of Ostensible Partnership. When it is contended that a defendant is an ostensible partner, the question is whether his or her acts and conduct were sufficient to lead the creditor to believe that he or she was a partner and that he or she assumed responsibility as such (J & J Builders Supply v. Caffin (1967) 248 Cal. App. 2d 292, 297, 56 Cal. Rptr. 365).

C. Standard by Which to Hold Party Liable as Ostensible Partner. Representations or acts to hold a party liable as a partner to third persons need not be actuated by an actual intent to deceive. It is sufficient if the representations or acts are such as to induce a reasonable and prudent person to believe that which the conduct would imply (Crabbe v. Mires (1952) 112 Cal. App. 2d 456, 459, 246 P.2d 991).

[2] Comments

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that a person is liable as an ostensible partner for a debt or other obligation incurred based on a representation that the person was a partner.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that a person, through his or her words or conduct, represents or consents to a representation being made, that he or she is a partner in an existing partnership or with other persons. These points and authorities also may be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss facts showing conduct, or oral or written representations establishing ostensible partnership.

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in § 170.241 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Ostensible Partner or Partnership by Estoppel

Corp. Code § 16308(a) [see former Corp. Code § 15016(1) (pre-'97 Act)] provides that if a person represents, or allows another to represent, that he or she is a member of a partnership, or that he and another person or persons are partners, the person making the representation or consenting to it may be liable for any obligations incurred as if he or she were a partner. If partnership liability results, the ostensible partner will be liable with respect to that liability as if he or she were a partner. If no partnership liability results, the purported partner is liable with respect to that liability jointly and severally with other persons who consent to his or her representations [Corp. Code § 16308(a); former Corp. Code § 15016(1)(b)].

In Dodd v. Tebbetts (1926) 198 Cal. 333, 244 P. 1081 , plaintiff gave some securities to the first defendant's partnership. On that date, the first defendant executed a promissory note to a bank in the partnership name, and deposited the securities with the bank as security for the notes. In order to procure the loan, the first defendant told the bank that the second defendant was a partner in the partnership. The second defendant signed a written statement representing herself to be a partner. Thereafter, defendants defaulted on the note, and plaintiff was forced to pay the note to get his securities back. Plaintiff then sued both defendants to recover the amount of the note. The trial court rendered judgment for plaintiff against defendants doing business as the partnership. The second defendant appealed.

The California Supreme Court affirmed, holding that the utmost that could be claimed was that the second defendant represented herself to the bank to be a partner in the partnership and that on the faith of that representation the bank gave credit to the partnership (198 Cal. 333, 339) . The Court observed that the statute then in effect, former Civ. Code § 2444, provided that anyone permitting himself or herself to be represented as a partner, general or special, is liable, as such to third persons to whom the representation is communicated, and who, on the faith of the representations, give credit to the partnership. The Court held that the rule of responsibility and liability declared in former Civ. Code § 2444 is founded on the equitable doctrine of estoppel (198 Cal. 333, 339-340) .

[b] Test of Ostensible Partnership

In J & J Builders Supply v. Caffin (1967) 248 Cal. App. 2d 292, 56 Cal. Rptr. 365 , defendants met with plaintiff corporation to inform it that the first defendant, with whom plaintiff had already been doing business, and the second defendant were going into business as partners. The first defendant introduced the second defendant as his new partner, and asked plaintiff to have his existing open account changed to the new partnership name. The second defendant said nothing during the meeting. The account was changed, and plaintiff began delivering materials to the partnership. When plaintiff's invoices were not paid, plaintiff's representative attempted to collect payment. However, the second defendant told plaintiff's representative that he was not personally liable because the association was actually a corporation. In fact, defendants had participated in forming a corporation with plaintiff's knowledge, but plaintiff believed that the corporation and the partnership were separate companies. Plaintiff then sued both defendants individually and as partners doing business as the partnership in order to recover the balance owed. The trial court rendered judgment in plaintiff's favor. Defendants appealed, contending that plaintiff had prior notice that their corporation was the principal because they filed on its behalf a certificate of doing business under a fictitious firm name.

The appellate court affirmed, holding that when it is contended that a defendant is an ostensible partner, the question is whether his or her acts and conduct were sufficient to lead the creditor to believe that he or she was a partner and that he or she assumed responsibility as such. The court held that the first defendant's declarations of partnership in the second defendant's presence under circumstances in which the second defendant must have known that a response negating the first defendant's representation should be made to avoid misleading plaintiff, were properly received as adoptive admissions of the second defendant (248 Cal. App. 2d 292, 297) . The court held that these facts, plus the extension of credit to the defendants in the fictitious name that the defendants led plaintiff to believe was the partnership name, were sufficient to sustain the liability of the second defendant as an ostensible partner of the first defendant (248 Cal. App. 2d 292, 298) .

[c] Standard by Which to Hold Party Liable as Ostensible Partner

In Crabbe v. Mires (1952) 112 Cal. App. 2d 456, 246 P.2d 991 , plaintiff sued to recover for equipment and dredging supplies sold, delivered to, and used by four defendants. One of the defendants made credit arrangements with plaintiff, telling plaintiff that a new company was to be formed, and that two of the other defendants had put up capital to enable the operation to be continued. Defendant did not state whether the organization was to be a corporation or a partnership. When plaintiff was not paid for the merchandise, he sued the defendants individually and doing business as a partnership. The trial court found that all of the defendants orally, in writing, and by their conduct represented themselves to various creditors and plaintiff to be partners in an existing partnership. It found that in reliance on the representations, plaintiff gave credit to the partnership. The court also found that the representations were made and consented to be made by all of the defendants in a public manner. Two of the defendants appealed.

The appellate court affirmed. The court stated that if a judgment is attacked as being unsupported by the evidence, the power of the appellate court begins and ends with a determination as to whether there is any substantial evidence, contradicted or uncontradicted, that will support the conclusions reached by the trial court. The court was satisfied that the record amply supported the judgment (112 Cal. App. 2d 456, 458) . The court held that representations or acts need not be actuated by the actual intent to deceive; it is sufficient if the course of conduct is such as to induce a reasonable and prudent person to believe that which the conduct would imply. It held that this was a question of fact to be determined by the trial court (112 Cal. App. 2d 456, 459) .

THE JUDGMENT CANNOT BE ENFORCED AGAINST THE INDIVIDUAL PROPERTY OF DEFENDANT _____ [name] BECAUSE A JUDGMENT WAS NEVER OBTAINED AGAINST HIM/HER IN THE SUBJECT ACTION [AND THE JUDGMENT AGAINST THE PARTNERSHIP MAY NOT BE ENFORCED AGAINST THE PARTNERS INDIVIDUAL ASSETS].

Partner's Individual Property Not Liable for Judgment Against Partnership. A judgment against a partnership is not by itself a judgment against a partner. A judgment against a partnership may not be satisfied from a partner's assets unless there is also a judgment against the partner (Corp. Code § 16307(c); *see Promotus Enter., Inc. v. [a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a contention that an individual partner's property is bound by a judgment based on the partnership's obligations. In an action against a partnership, a judgment against a partnership may not be satisfied from a partner's assets unless there is also a judgment against the partner [Corp. Code § 16307(c); see Promotus Enter., Inc. v. Jiminez (1971) 21 Cal. App. 3d 560, 564, 98 Cal. Rptr. 571] .

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that a partner's individual property is not bound by a judgment against the partnership because there is no judgment against the partner. These points and authorities also may be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities in § 170.222.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Partner's Individual Property Not Liable Without Judgment Against Partner

Corp. Code § 16307(c) provides that a judgment against a partnership is not by itself a judgment against a partner. A judgment against a partnership may not be satisfied from a partner's assets unless there is also a judgment against the partner.

Promotus Enter., Inc. v. Jiminez (1971) 21 Cal. App. 3d 560, 98 Cal. Rptr. 571 , decided prior to enactment of Corp. Code § 16307(c), the UPA'94 provision discussed above, involved a limited partnership formed for the purpose of promoting and leasing a juke-box type of device. Defendant was the partnership's sales representative, and had an interest in the profits. Plaintiff commenced an action in one county based on an obligation assumed by the partnership at its inception. The action named defendant and his partner as general partners as well as naming them as individuals. However, defendant was never served process, and did not appear in the action. A judgment was entered in the action against the partnership. Plaintiff brought a subsequent action in another county to enforce the judgment. The trial court found that the prior judgment was unenforceable to the extent that it attempted to bind defendant's individual property. Plaintiff appealed.

The appellate court affirmed, holding that although statutory authority permits a plaintiff who is entitled to recover to enter judgment against all of the partners even though only one, or less than all of them, has been served, execution on such a judgment is limited to the partnership property and the real and personal property of the partners summoned. The judgment is not enforceable against the person or sole property of a partner who was not summoned. A partner can be individually bound by the judgment, over and above his or her interest in the partnership property, only if he or she was served in the action or authorized an appearance in it on his or her behalf (21 Cal. App. 3d 560, 564) . Thus, the court held that the prior judgment was void against defendant as an individual, but valid to the extent of his interest in the partnership and his possession of partnership assets (21 Cal. App. 3d 560, 567) .

In Fazzi v. Peters (1968) 68 Cal. 2d 590, 68 Cal. Rptr. 170, 440 P.2d 242 , decided prior to enactment of Corp. Code § 16307(c), the UPA'94 provision discussed above, a partnership was named in a complaint as consisting of several Does whose true names were unknown at the time, but which would be inserted when ascertained. The individual partners were not named as defendant parties in the summons that were thereafter issued. One partner was served as a person being sued under the fictitious name of Doe. However, the complaint was never amended to reflect his true name. The other partner was also served, but not as a person sued under a fictitious name. The complaint also was never amended to reflect his true name. Neither the partners nor the partnership appeared in the action, and a default judgment was entered allowing plaintiffs to recover from the partners individually and doing business as the partnership, jointly and severally. One of the partners subsequently moved to have the judgment against him set aside on the ground that it was void because the court had no jurisdiction to enter an in personam judgment against him as an individual. The motion was denied. Defendant appealed.

The California Supreme Court reversed, holding that the self-evident proposition that a judgment in personam may not be entered against one not a party to the action was applicable to this case (68 Cal. 2d 590, 591) . The Court noted that the former version of Code Civ. Proc. § 388 provided that when a partnership was sued by its common name with summons being served on one or more of the partners, a judgment bound the joint property of all the partners and the individual property of the partners served. Nevertheless, the Court held that this section was never intended to abrogate the elementary common law principle that a judgment may not be entered either for or against one not a party to an action or proceeding (68 Cal. 2d 590, 592-594) . The legislative history of the former version of Code Civ. Proc. § 388 manifested a continuing legislative effort to permit efficient enforcement of claims against the joint property of partnerships while facilitating concurrent enforcement of claims against the individual property of partners joined as defendants (68 Cal. 2d 590, 595) . The Court noted that the original version of former Code Civ. Proc. § 388 did not contain the language regarding the individual property of the partners served; it was added because the statute might have been construed to mean that individual partner property could by no means be bound in an action under the section even if those partners were joined as defendants (68 Cal. 2d 590, 595-596) . The Court stated that it thereafter formulated the principle that the added language did not render individual partners "parties" to the suit unless they were so named, but if partners were joined with the partnership as defendants a judgment against them in their individual capacities was valid, based on their statutory joint liability (68 Cal. 2d 590, 596-597) .

§ 170.241 Opposing Contention That All Partners Are Liable for Partnership Debts and Obligations or Individual Partner's Wrongful Acts, Omissions, or Breaches of Trust--Failure to Plead Ostensible Partnership [Corp. Code § 16308; former Corp. Code § 15016]

[1] FORM Opposing Contention That All Partners Are Liable for Partnership Debts and Obligations or Individual Partner's Wrongful Acts, Omissions, or Breaches of Trust--Failure to Plead Ostensible Partnership [Corp. Code § 16308; former Corp. Code § 15016]

DEFENDANT _____ [name] CANNOT BE HELD LIABLE AS AN OSTENSIBLE PARTNER _____ [specify obligation incurred, e.g., ON THE OPEN BOOK ACCOUNT FOR MERCHANDISE SOLD AND DELIVERED TO DEFENDANT _____ (name)] BECAUSE THE COMPLAINT CONTAINS NO ALLEGATIONS OF PARTNERSHIP, OSTENSIBLE OR OTHERWISE.

Ostensible Partnership Must Be Pleaded. A plaintiff who relies on the doctrine of partnership by estoppel must plead facts establishing that estoppel (Moen v. Art's Cafe (1950) 95 Cal. App. 2d 577, 579, 213 P.2d 393).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a contention that a the party is an ostensible partner, and thus liable for debts or other obligations procured on behalf a purported partnership [see Corp. Code § 16308; former Corp. Code § 15016]. A judgment cannot stand against a party as an ostensible partner in an existing partnership or with other persons if the existence of a partnership, ostensible or otherwise, has not been pleaded [Moen v. Art's Cafe (1950) 95 Cal. App. 2d 577, 579, 213 P.2d 393] . Thus, in order to prevail on a claim that a person is estopped from claiming that he or she is not a partner, a plaintiff must include allegations of ostensible partnership in his or her complaint.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that a party may not be held liable as an ostensible partner. For example, the points and authorities may be used to support a demurrer to a complaint when the existence of a partnership has not been pleaded. It also may be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss facts showing that no cause of action has been stated because an ostensible partnership has not been pleaded. This normally be done by showing that the complaint is deficient on its face in this respect.

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities in § 170.224.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Ostensible Partnership Must Be Pleaded

In Moen v. Art's Cafe (1950) 95 Cal. App. 2d 577, 213 P.2d 393 , one defendant leased a restaurant to the other defendant for five years. The lease provided for a monthly rental represented by a fixed sum or a certain percentage of the gross receipts, whichever was greater, and that defendant lessee was the sole proprietor of the business and premises. The liquor license for the restaurant was taken out in the names of both defendants. The business was conducted solely by the defendant lessee. Plaintiff's assignors delivered liquor to the premises, and billed defendants whose names were on the license. Some of the liquor bills were paid by checks signed by defendant lessee. When the rest of the bills remained unpaid, plaintiff brought an action against defendants on an open book account for the balance due. The trial court rendered judgment against defendant lessee, but found that plaintiff was entitled to nothing as against defendant lessors. Plaintiff appealed.

The appellate court affirmed, holding that the rule of responsibility and liability declared in former Corp. Code § 15016 [now see Corp. Code § 16308] is founded on the doctrine of equitable estoppel. The court held that a plaintiff who relies on the doctrine of partnership by estoppel as declared in former Corp. Code § 15016 must plead the facts establishing that estoppel in order to be entitled to make proof of the same or to have the benefit of a finding predicated on the section. It held that the complaint in this case failed to state facts sufficient to establish liability under former Corp. Code § 15016 because there was no allegation of the existence of a partnership between the defendants, ostensible or otherwise. It was not alleged that defendant lessors represented themselves as members of a partnership, nor was it alleged that plaintiff's assignors extended credit to defendant lessors by reason of any words, acts, or conduct of defendants (95 Cal. App. 2d 577, 579-580) .

[a] Existence of Ostensible Partnership

In Armato v. Baden (1999) 71 Cal. App. 4th 885, 897-899, 84 Cal. Rptr. 2d 294 , a former patient of a medical group who was treated by a physician assistant employed by the group filed an action against independent contractor doctors who worked part time for the group. Plaintiff alleged that defendants' conduct created an ostensible partnership within the group so that the doctors were jointly liable for the negligent treatment plaintiff allegedly received from the physician assistant. The trial court granted summary judgment for defendants and the appellate court affirmed. The court held even if former Corp. Code § 15016 applied, it did not support imposition of liability since defendants did not represent themselves (or consent to another representing them) as "partners in an existing partnership" or as a partner "with one or more persons not actual partners." The mere listing of the independent contractor doctors' names on the door to the medical group's office and on appointment cards and prescription pads did not reasonably induce the belief that the doctors and group's physician assistant, or doctors and medical group, were copartners (71 Cal. App. 4th 885, 898-899) .

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a contention that an incoming partner is personally liable for the partnership's preexisting debts or obligations. A person admitted as a partner into an existing partnership is not personally liable for any partnership obligation incurred before the person's admission as a partner [Corp. Code § 16306(b)].

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that an incoming partner is not individually responsible for partnership debts or obligations incurred before he or she became a partner. They also may be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Incoming Partner Presumed Not Personally Liable for Preexisting Partnership Debts

Corp. Code § 16306(b) provides that a person admitted as a partner into an existing partnership is not personally liable for any partnership obligation incurred before the person's admission as a partner.

In Wine Packing Corp. of Cal. v. Voss (1940) 37 Cal. App. 2d 528, 100 P.2d 325 , decided before enactment of Corp. Code § 16306(b), the UPA'94 provision discussed above, a sole proprietor in the wine business bought wine from respondent on an open book account. Shortly thereafter, appellant and another person became the proprietor's partners in the business. All the merchandise on the subject account was sold and delivered to appellant before the partnership was formed. When the account was not paid, respondent sued appellant and several fictitious defendants doing business as a partnership to recover the amount due. Judgment was rendered against appellant as a surviving partner of the partnership. The trial court found that as a part of the transaction of acquiring the business as a partnership business, the partnership assumed liability for outstanding debts and obligations of the prior business. Appellant appealed.

The appellate court reversed, holding that it was clear that the partnership, and not appellant, was held by the trial court to have made the assumption of the business' original obligations (37 Cal. App. 2d 528, 532) . Thus, the court held that if appellant was to be held individually liable for the sole proprietor's indebtedness to respondent because of an assumption by the partnership, it had to be based on the bare fact that because appellant bought into a going business that owed money, liability was automatically fastened on him for the old indebtedness payable out of his own pocket and not recoverable out of partnership property as provided by former Civ. Code § 2411 (thereafter former Corp. Code § 15017) (37 Cal. App. 2d 528, 533) . The court declined to so hold, and instead held that the general rule states that a person becoming a member of an existing partnership, or forming a partnership with another in the latter's existing business, does not thereby become liable for the debts already incurred, nor does the new partnership become liable for them. An agreement, express or implied, is necessary to create such liability, not only between the creditors and the new partnership but also as between the partners. In other words, the presumption is against the assumption of such liability, and the burden to prove it is on the one who asserts it (37 Cal. App. 2d 528, 533-534) .

[1] FORM Supporting Contention That Act of Joint Venturer Binds Joint Venture [Corp. Code § 16301; former Corp. Code § 15009]--Joint Venturer as Agent Has Authority to Bind Other Joint Venturers by Contract

_____ [PLAINTIFF or DEFENDANT] JOINT VENTURER[S] _____ [WAS or WERE] BOUND BY THE ACT OF THEIR FELLOW JOINT VENTURER[S] IN _____ [specify, e.g., ENTERING INTO THE AGREEMENT WITH _____ (PLAINTIFF or DEFENDANT) _____ (name) TO SELL THE SUBJECT PROPERTY] BECAUSE THE ACTIVE JOINT VENTURER[S] _____ [WAS or WERE] ACTING AS THE JOINT VENTURE'S AGENT[S] FOR THE PURPOSE OF ITS BUSINESS.

A. Law of Partnerships as to Third Parties Applies to Joint Ventures. The relations of joint venturers as between themselves and as to third parties are generally the same as those of partners, and to the extent they are the same, the law of partnerships applies to both (Orlopp v. Willardson Co. (1965) 232 Cal. App. 2d 750, 754, 43 Cal. Rptr. 125).

B. Joint Venturers Are Agents in Transaction of Enterprise Business. Each member of a joint venture is the agent of the others for the purpose of its business (Corp. Code § 16301(1) or former Corp. Code § 15009(1); Bariffi v. Longridge Dev. Co. (1958) 156 Cal. App. 2d 583, 592, 320 P.2d 192 ; Eng'g Serv. Corp. v. Longridge Inv. Co. (1957) 153 Cal. App. 2d 404, 410, 314 P.2d 563).

[Optional] C. Authority to Bind Joint Venture in Contract. The rules governing liability of partners for partnership debts also apply to joint ventures. Each joint venturer, therefore, has authority to bind the others in making contracts reasonably necessary to carry out the enterprise (Medak v. Cox (1970) 12 Cal. App. 3d 70, 76 fn. 2, 90 Cal. Rptr. 452 ; Lindner v. Friednash (1958) 160 Cal. App. 2d 511, 517, 325 P.2d 612).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that a joint venturer is bound by the acts of one or more of his or her fellow joint venturers. Generally, the law of partnerships applies to joint ventures [Orlopp v. Willardson Co. (1965) 232 Cal. App. 2d 750, 754, 43 Cal. Rptr. 125] . Like partners, each member of a joint venture is the agent of the others for the purpose of the joint venture's business [Corp. Code § 16301(1); former Corp. Code § 15009(1); Bariffi v. Longridge Dev. Co. (1958) 156 Cal. App. 2d 583, 592, 320 P.2d 192] . For example, a joint venturer can bind his or her fellow venturers by contracts with third persons within the scope of the joint enterprise [Medak v. Cox (1970) 12 Cal. App. 3d 70, 76 fn. 2, 90 Cal. Rptr. 452] .

Because the general principles regarding the authority of joint venturers to act for the joint venture are essentially the same as those that govern partnerships, the forms in this chapter generally may be used to support or oppose similar contentions that arise in the context of a joint venture.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the act of a joint venturer binds the joint venture in the transaction of its business. These points and authorities also may be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in § 170.255 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Law of Partnerships as to Third Parties Applies to Joint Ventures

The facts and procedural background of Orlopp v. Willardson Co. (1965) 232 Cal. App. 2d 750, 43 Cal. Rptr. 125 , are discussed in § 170.50[4]. In Orlopp, the appellate court held that as appellant was in the position of an undisclosed or dormant partner in a joint venture between it and an egg and poultry company, it was fully as liable for a balance due on an open book account in the company's name as an ostensible partner. The court reached this result by first holding that the relations of joint venturers as between themselves and as to third parties are generally the same as those of partners, and to the extent they are the same, the law of partnerships applies to both (232 Cal. App. 2d 750, 754) .

[b] Joint Venturers Are Agents in Transaction of Enterprise Business

In Bariffi v. Longridge Dev. Co. (1958) 156 Cal. App. 2d 583, 320 P.2d 192 , a developer entered into an escrow to purchase a parcel of real property. Thereafter, he entered into a joint venture agreement with two other persons to obtain sufficient financing to comply with the escrow. Developer agreed with his associates to contribute some cash and to convey the property to an escrow company as trustee. The joint venture agreement provided that anyone else who participated and invested in the venture would be beneficiaries in the aforementioned trust. Thereafter, a joint bank account was opened in the names of the joint venturers, and funds received from various beneficiaries, including appellants, were deposited in it. The joint venturers subsequently caused three of the trust beneficiaries to organize an investment corporation for the purpose of selling the property in lots to the public. The corporation then entered into a written agreement to sell one of the lots to respondent. Respondent made a down payment, and later another payment, but received nothing in return. Respondent then sued for money had and received. The trial court rendered judgment for plaintiff, finding, among other things, that the persons named as beneficiaries in the trust, including appellants, were joint venturers in the transaction. Appellants appealed, contending, among other things, that the declaration of trust they executed was a true business trust and that they were not personally liable on any obligation incurred by the original joint venturers. They also argued that they did not authorize or establish any agency for the subdivision and sale of the property.

The appellate court affirmed. It held that these contentions were refuted in Eng'g Serv. Corp. v. Longridge Inv. Co. (1957) 153 Cal. App. 2d 404, 314 P.2d 563 (discussed below) (156 Cal. App. 2d 583, 590) . The court noted that Engineering held that the reservation of complete management in the developer and his associates as the beneficiaries' representatives, to the exclusion of the trustee, left them in the status of partners or joint venturers, and deprived them of the advantage of a true trust agreement (156 Cal. App. 2d 583, 591) . The court held that as the developer and his joint venturers were business managers appointed by the beneficiaries to control the trust, the beneficiaries were also joint venturers, and that each member of a joint venture is the agent of the others in transaction of its business (156 Cal. App. 2d 583, 592) .

The facts and procedural background of Eng'g Service Corp. v. Longridge Inv. Co. (1957) 153 Cal. App. 2d 404, 314 P.2d 563 , are the same as those in Bariffi v. Longridge Development Co. (1958) 156 Cal. App. 2d 583, 320 P.2d 192 , discussed above. Respondent brought an action to foreclose a mechanic's lien for work performed in making engineering studies and in creating a tentative subdivision map of property purchased by a developer in furtherance of a joint venture. Two of the appellants were the developer's associates. The third was a beneficiary under a trust created by appellants and the developer to hold title to the property. The trial court granted the foreclosure, and held all appellants personally liable for respondent's claim. Appellants appealed, contending that they were not liable as joint venturers, and should not be held personally liable for an obligation incurred in the developer's name or in the name of the corporation formed by appellants and the developer for the purpose of selling the property.

The appellate court affirmed, preliminarily holding that all of the appellants were joint venturers. The court held that none of the appellants were protected by the trust because the developer and appellants, as opposed to the trustee, had management and control of the property. It held that reservation of complete management to the developer and appellants as representatives of the beneficiaries, and to the exclusion of the trustee, left all the participants in the status of partners or joint venturers and deprived them of the advantage of a true trust arrangement (153 Cal. App. 2d 404, 409-410) . The court also noted that the developer engaged respondent on the day escrow closed, which was before the declaration of trust, and that therefore it could not be disputed that the developer was acting for the joint venture between himself and appellants in doing so. The court held that each member of the joint venture was the agent of the others in the transaction of its business (153 Cal. App. 2d 404, 411) .

[c] Authority to Bind Joint Venture in Contract

In Medak v. Cox (1970) 12 Cal. App. 3d 70, 90 Cal. Rptr. 452 , appellants were members of a partnership that was one of the associates in a joint venture created to construct single family houses on property owned by appellants. The other joint venture associate was a development corporation. Respondent contracted with the joint venture to render architectural services. The contract was signed on behalf of the joint venture by the president of the associate development corporation. When respondent was not paid for his services, he sued appellants and the corporation president for foreclosure of a mechanic's lien. The trial court entered judgment for respondent, finding that management and control of the joint venture was vested in appellants and the president equally, and it was the president's duty to do all the things necessary to construct homes on the property for the enterprise. Appellants appealed, contending that the contract was not binding on them.

The appellate court affirmed. Relying on former Corp. Code § 15009(1) [now see Corp. Code § 16301], the court held that the contract signed by the president was sufficient to bind the joint venture (12 Cal. App. 3d 70, 76-77) . The court noted that the rules governing liability of partners for partnership debts also apply to joint ventures, and the rule has been fairly well established that each joint venturer has authority to bind the others in making contracts reasonably necessary to carry out the enterprise (12 Cal. App. 3d 70, 76 fn. 2).

In Lindner v. Friednash (1958) 160 Cal. App. 2d 511, 325 P.2d 612 , plaintiff was a wine processor. Defendant and a wine broker entered into a written joint venture agreement for the purchase and sale of 50,000 gallons of wine. The agreement named the broker as purchaser, and provided that he would store the wine in his winery. It also provided, among other things, that defendant was to contribute a share of the purchase price, and use his credit to secure a loan from the bank to pay for the balance. The loan was to be secured by warehouse receipts for the wine. In fact, the wine was not stored in the broker's winery, and he procured a warehouse receipt in defendant's name from plaintiff for the wine. Thereafter, at the bank's request, the broker caused plaintiff to issue a new warehouse receipt naming defendant as pledgor and the bank as pledgee. The bank then loaned the balance of the purchase price to defendant, and defendant remitted the money, together with his own contribution, to the broker. Defendant subsequently repaid the loan, and the bank authorized delivery of the wine to defendant. The broker sold most of the wine to various persons. He retained the proceeds received from the sales, and neither plaintiff nor defendant received any part of them. Plaintiff instituted an action against defendant to recover the balance of the purchase price. Judgment was rendered in favor of defendant. Plaintiff appealed.

The appellate court reversed, holding that substantially the same rules with respect to principal and agent applicable to members of a partnership apply to members of a joint venture with respect to contracts with third persons within the scope of the joint enterprise, and a joint venturer may bind his or her associates by a contract that is in furtherance, or within the scope, of the joint enterprise (160 Cal. App. 2d 511, 517) . The court held that when one joint adventurer purchases personal property pursuant to the joint venture agreement, the property belongs to the joint venture and there is liability for the purchase price against both venturers, and delivery of the property to one joint venturer constitutes delivery to both (160 Cal. App. 2d 511, 517-518) . It further held that in light of the above principles, it appeared clear that defendant was liable for the wine purchased and delivered to him on behalf of the joint venture (160 Cal. App. 2d 511, 518) .

[a] Authority to Bind Joint Venture in Contract

In Block v. D.W. Nicholson Corp (1947) 77 Cal. App. 2d 739, 176 P.2d 739 , defendant joint venturers were hired to construct a War Department project. Defendants' representative, the manager of the joint venture, contacted plaintiff insurance broker to engage him to secure a performance bond and the additional financing required for the bond to be issued. If plaintiff was successful, he was to be defendants' insurance broker for the project. Plaintiff then induced a third party to advance financing for the project and to become a joint venturer with defendants. Consequently, he was then able to procure the performance bond. At the representative's direction, plaintiff submitted a bill for a commission on the advance, but the other defendant stated that it had no obligation to pay it. On plaintiff's action on an express and implied contract, the trial court made general findings that the allegations of the complaint were true, and those of the answers were untrue. The appellate court reversed and remanded on the ground that these findings failed to dispose of the issues litigated, and failed to show what issues were considered by the court (77 Cal. App. 2d 739, 743) . The court held that one of the issues that should have been considered was plaintiff's belief that as the advance was procured for the joint venture, both joint venturers may be held liable (77 Cal. App. 2d 739, 744) . Relying on former Civ. Code § 2403 (now see Corp. Code § 16301), the court held that the general rule is that as to third persons who deal with a joint venturer in good faith and without knowledge of any limitations on his or her authority, the law presumes him or her to have been given the power to bind his or her associates by such contracts as are reasonably necessary to carry on the business in which the joint venturers are engaged (77 Cal. App. 2d 739, 744-745) .

DEFENDANT JOINT VENTURER[S] _____ [WAS or WERE] NOT BOUND BY THE ACT OF [AN]OTHER FELLOW JOINT VENTURER[S] IN _____ [specify, e.g., PURCHASING THE SUBJECT CONSTRUCTION MATERIALS FROM PLAINTIFF _____ (name of alleged creditor)] BECAUSE THE ACTIVE JOINT VENTURER[S] HAD NO _____ [EXPRESS or IMPLIED o r OSTENSIBLE] AUTHORITY TO ACT IN THIS CIRCUMSTANCE INASMUCH AS _____ [specify, e.g., THE JOINT VENTURE AGREEMENT EXPRESSLY LIMITED THE POWERS OF THE INDIVIDUAL JOINT VENTURERS TO BIND THE JOINT VENTURE TO A CONTRACT], AND PLAINTIFF WAS NOT AWARE OF, [AND DID NOT RELY ON THE EXISTENCE OF], THE JOINT VENTURE.

A. Joint Venturer May Not Bind Associates by Acts Exceeding His or Her Authority. A member of a joint venture who is undisclosed to a third person at the time the third person enters into a contract with another member individually is not rendered liable to the third person for services rendered under the contract, or for damages for the breach of the contract, by the fact that the contract relates to the business of the joint venture, if the contracting member exceeded his or her authority and had no power to bind his or her associates by the contract (Hansen v. Burford (1931) 212 Cal. 100, 111, 297 P. 908).

[Optional] B. No Liability on Theory of Ostensible Agency When Third Party Did Not Rely on Representations of Agency. Although a person who has caused a third party to give credit or incur a liability on the strength of his or her representations, made or permitted, that he or she is in fact a joint venturer will not thereafter be allowed to deny those representations, the third party is not entitled to recover against the ostensible agent's associates if the third party placed no particular reliance on the association, or the associate's responsibility, in extending credit (Hansen v. Burford (1931) 212 Cal. 100, 111-112, 297 P. 908).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a contention that a joint venturer is bound by the acts of one or more of his or her fellow joint venturers. If a third party enters into a contract with a joint venturer individually, and he or she is unaware of the existence of the joint venture, the non-contracting joint venturer or venturers will not be bound, even if the contract relates to the joint venture, if the contracting joint venturer had no authority to contract in the matter [Hansen v. Burford (1931) 212 Cal. 100, 111, 297 P. 908] . For example, this rule seems to apply most often when the joint venture is so limited in scope that it would be inappropriate to imply broad authority to each joint venturer.

Optional Paragraph B may be used if it is contended that an active joint venturer's associates are liable on a theory of ostensible agency. This theory will not prevail if the third party with whom the active joint venturer was dealing did not rely on his or her representations in extending credit [Hansen v. Burford (1931) 212 Cal. 100, 111-112, 297 P. 908] . Thus, even if a person makes, or allows to be made, a representation to a third person with whom he or she is dealing that he or she is a member of a joint venture, and that his or her actions are in furtherance of the enterprise, the other joint venturers will not be bound if the third party does not rely on the relationship in entering into an agreement with the person.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that an individual joint venturer had no authority to bind his or her fellow joint venturers. These points and authorities also may be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities in § 170.250.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Joint Venturer May Not Bind Associates by Acts Exceeding His or Her Authority

In Hansen v. Burford (1931) 212 Cal. 100, 297 P. 908 , defendant sellers owned a tract of property. They approached defendant purchaser to sell him the property. As a result of negotiations, defendant sellers entered into agreements with defendant grantees, defendant purchaser's daughter and son-in-law, to sell them two lots on the property. Defendant purchaser negotiated the purchase agreements. They provided that defendant grantees had to secure a loan to build a house and chicken coop on the property. After the buildings were finished, the property was to be sold, and the profits were to be equally divided between defendant sellers and defendant grantees. The construction of the buildings was supervised by defendant purchaser, and he purchased lumber from respondents. The lumber was charged to his name. Defendant grantees were not able to obtain building loans to cover the entire cost of construction, and respondents' bill remained unpaid. Respondents brought an action in assumpsit to recover the price of the lumber. The trial court found that defendants were engaged in a joint venture, and that the lumber was sold and delivered to them as joint venturers. It rendered judgment against all defendants. Defendant sellers appealed.

The California Supreme Court reversed, holding that defendant purchasers were independent contractors as opposed to partners (212 Cal. 100, 104-105) . However, the Court noted with approval that the appellate court held that whether the enterprise was a partnership or not, there could be no doubt that it was some sort of joint venture and all defendants were participants in it (212 Cal. 100, 110) . Thus, when the rights of third parties are involved, the basis of inquiry is what did the third parties have the right to believe from the language of the contract and from the conduct of the parties to it as affecting them (212 Cal. 100, 110-111) . The Court held that one who is a member of a joint venture but who is not known to be such at the time by a third person who enters into a contract with another member individually is not rendered liable to the third person for services rendered under the contract, or for damages for the breach thereof, by the fact that the contract relates to the business of the joint venture, if the contracting member in making the contract exceeded his or her authority and had no power to bind his or her associates thereby. The Court held that it was clearly understood by all defendants that the material bills were to be paid from the mortgage loans pursuant to the purchase agreement, and that the agreements dispelled any idea that defendant sellers would be liable for them. Thus, it was clear that defendant purchaser had no actual authority to bind defendant sellers to the lumber bills (212 Cal. 100, 111) .

[b] No Liability on Theory of Ostensible Agency When Third Party Did Not Rely on Representations of Agency

The facts and procedural background of Hansen v. Burford (1931) 212 Cal. 100, 297 P. 908 , are discussed in [a], above. In Hansen, the California Supreme Court held that in the absence of estoppel or ratification, an undisclosed principal is not liable on the contracts of one assuming, without authority, to act for him or her (212 Cal. 100, 111) . Thus, the Court held that if there was any basis for the trial court to find that defendant sellers participated in ordering the lumber that was the subject of the suit, it must rest on some apparent authority of defendant purchaser to represent defendant sellers in doing so. The Court stated that it was clear from the evidence that in furnishing the lumber, respondents placed no particular reliance on defendant purchaser's claimed association with defendant sellers, or on defendant seller's responsibility. It held that although the rule is that one who has suffered a third party to give credit or incur a liability on the strength of his or her representations, made or permitted, that he or she is in fact a joint venturer will not thereafter be allowed to deny those representations, it was apparent that respondents did not give credit to defendant purchaser because of his statements concerning relation of defendant sellers to the enterprise. The Court held that the evidence was too tenuous to support any claim of estoppel, or any theory that respondents were entitled to recover against defendant sellers because of reliance on any ostensible agency (212 Cal. 100, 112) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Joint Venturer May Not Bind Associates by Acts Exceeding His or Her Authority

The facts and procedural background of Block v. D.W. Nicholson Corp. (1947) 77 Cal. App. 2d 739, 176 P.2d 739 , are discussed in § 170.250[4]. In Block, the appellate court held that findings of the trial court failed to dispose of the issues litigated, and failed to show what issues were considered by the court (77 Cal. App. 2d 739, 743) . The court held that one of the issues that should have been considered was plaintiff's belief that both joint venturers may be held liable because of the general rule that as to third persons who deal with a joint venturer in good faith and without knowledge of any limitations on his or her authority, the law presumes him or her to have been given the power to bind his or her associates by such contracts as are reasonably necessary to carry on the business in which the joint venturers are engaged (citing former Civ. Code § 2403; now see Corp. Code § 16301) (77 Cal. App. 2d 739, 744-745) . However, the court also noted that a member of a joint venture, who is unknown to be such at the time by a third person who enters into a contract with another member individually, is not rendered liable to the third person for services rendered under the contract, or for damages for breach of the contract, by the fact that the contract relates to the business of the joint venture if the contracting member in making the contract exceeded his or her authority and had no power to bind his or her associates thereby (77 Cal. App. 2d 739, 745) .

DEFENDANT JOINT VENTURERS ARE LIABLE FOR THE _____ [specify, e.g., RECKLESSNESS or NEGLIGENCE or MISREPRESENTATION] OF THEIR ASSOCIATE _____ [name] BECAUSE THE _____ [specify, e.g., WRONGFUL ACT or OMISSION] WAS MADE IN FURTHERANCE OF THE JOINT ENTERPRISE.

A. Joint Venture Liable for Joint Venturer's Wrongful Act or Omission. The relations of joint venturers, as between themselves and as to third parties, generally are the same as those of partners, and to the extent they are the same, the law of partnerships applies to both. Thus, when by any wrongful act or omission of a joint venturer acting in the ordinary course of the joint venture's business, or with the authority of his or her joint venturers, loss or injury is caused to a person who is not one of the joint venturers, or a penalty is incurred, the joint venture is liable for the loss or injury to the same extent as the joint venturer who acted or omitted to act (see Orlopp v. Willardson Co. (1965) 232 Cal. App. 2d 750, 754, 43 Cal. Rptr. 125 ; see also Corp. Code § 16305(a) or former Corp. Code § 15013).

[Optional] B. Liability of Joint Venture on Contracts. The parties to a joint venture are jointly and severally liable in an action brought by a third person to enforce an obligation of the joint venture (Morrison Drilling Co., Inc. v. Superior Court (1962) 208 Cal. App. 2d 740, 742, 25 Cal. Rptr. 682 ; see Corp. Code § 16306).

[Optional] C. Liability of Joint Venture for Negligence. The negligence of one joint venturer committed in performing an act in furtherance of the joint enterprise is imputable to the other joint venturers (Hupfeld v. Wadley

[Optional] D. Liability of Joint Venture for Fraud. When one joint venturer, acting within the scope of the joint venture, and in furtherance of its agreed purpose, is guilty of fraud in procuring benefits that are retained by the joint venturers, all are liable for the fraud in compensatory damages (Rickless v. Temple (1970) 4 Cal. App. 3d 869, 894, 84 Cal. Rptr. 828 ; Grant v. Weatherholt (1954) 123 Cal. App. 2d 34, 45, 266 P.2d 185).

[Optional] E. Liability of Joint Venture for Breach of Trust. The joint venture is liable for a loss if one joint venturer, in the course of the joint venture's business or while acting with authority of the joint venture, receives or causes the joint venture to receive money or property of a third person, and the money or property is misapplied by a joint venturer (see Corp. Code § 16305(b) or former Corp. Code § 15014; see also Orlopp v. Willardson Co. (1965) 232 Cal. App. 2d 750, 754, 43 Cal. Rptr. 125 (law of partnerships applies to both partnerships and joint ventures)).

[2] Comments

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that joint venturers are liable for wrongful acts or omissions of their associates. Generally, the law of partnerships applies to joint ventures [Orlopp v. Willardson Co. (1965) 232 Cal. App. 2d 750, 754, 43 Cal. Rptr. 125 ; see §§ 170.200 et seq.]. Therefore, joint venturers are obligated on contracts entered into by one of their associates on behalf of the enterprise [Morrison Drilling Co., Inc. v. Superior Court (1962) 208 Cal. App. 2d 740, 742, 25 Cal. Rptr. 682 ; Corp. Code § 16306(a); see Optional Paragraph B]. They are also obligated by the negligence of a joint venturer committed in performing an act in furtherance of the joint enterprise [Hupfeld v. Wadley (1948) 89 Cal. App. 2d 171, 175, 200 P.2d 564 ; Corp. Code § 16305(a); see Optional Paragraph C], and by a joint venturer's fraud or misrepresentation under the same circumstances [Rickless v. Temple (1970) 4 Cal. App. 3d 869, 894, 84 Cal. Rptr. 828 ; Corp. Code § 16305(a) ; see Optional Paragraph D]. A joint venture also is bound by a breach of trust by one of the joint venturers [see Corp. Code § 16305(b); former Corp. Code § 15014; Optional Paragraph E].

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that either all of the joint venturers are bound by a contract entered into by another joint venturer on behalf of the joint enterprise, or that the joint venturers are all liable for some wrongful act or omission committed by a joint venturer in furtherance of the enterprise. These points and authorities also may be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Joint Venture Liable for Joint Venturer's Wrongful Act or Omission

Orlopp v. Willardson Co. (1965) 232 Cal. App. 2d 750, 43 Cal. Rptr. 125 , is discussed in § 170.250.

[b] Liability of Joint Venture on Contracts

In Morrison Drilling Co., Inc. v. Superior Court (1962) 208 Cal. App. 2d 740, 25 Cal. Rptr. 682 , respondents and an oil corporation entered into a written joint venture agreement to drill an oil and gas well. Petitioner entered into an oral agreement with the corporation, acting as respondents' agent, to provide services and materials in drilling the well. When petitioner was not paid, he brought an action against respondents to recover the value of its services. However, petitioner failed to join the oil corporation as a defendant, and respondents demurred. The demurrer was granted, and petitioner filed an amended complaint naming the corporation as a party defendant. Petitioner was unable to serve the oil corporation in California, and its motion to serve the corporation as a foreign corporation doing business in the state was denied because there was no showing that it had conducted any business in California. Petitioner then filed a petition for a writ of certiorari to review the superior court's order to stay proceedings until petitioner brought the corporation into the action.

The appellate court granted a writ of mandamus as the more appropriate relief. The court held that the parties to a joint venture are jointly liable in an action brought by a third person to enforce an obligation of the joint venture (208 Cal. App. 2d 740, 742) . Then the court noted that although the general rule is that joint obligors are indispensable parties to an action brought to enforce a joint liability, former Code Civ. Proc. § 414 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 410.70) provides that when an action is against two or more defendants jointly or severally liable on a contract, and the summons is served on one or more, but not on all of them, the plaintiff may proceed against the defendants served in the same manner as if they were the only defendants (208 Cal. App. 2d 740, 743) .

[c] Liability of Joint Venture for Negligence

In Hupfeld v. Wadley (1948) 89 Cal. App. 2d 171, 200 P.2d 564 , appellant and his associate were joint venturers in the business of beekeeping. They employed respondent, who was from another city, to do some work for them, and the associate transported respondent to the city where the joint venture business was located. When the work was completed, respondent accepted a ride from the associate back to his own city. On the way, an accident occurred while the associate was driving, and respondent was seriously injured. Respondent sued appellant and his associate as partners, alleging negligence. The trial court found that the business of appellant and his associate constituted a joint venture. It concluded that respondent was a passenger for hire, and that the associate was driving as an agent for the joint venture. The court entered judgment against both appellant and the associate. Appellant appealed.

The appellate court affirmed, holding that the evidence was sufficient to support the finding that the associate was negligent in his driving (89 Cal. App. 2d 171, 174) . The court then held that the negligence of one joint venturer committed in performing an act in furtherance of the joint enterprise is imputable to the other joint venturers. It held that the negligence was imputed to appellant even though he was absent from the scene (89 Cal. App. 2d 171, 175) .

[d] Liability of Joint Venture for Fraud

The facts and procedural background of Rickless v. Temple (1970) 4 Cal. App. 3d 869, 84 Cal. Rptr. 828 , are discussed in § 170.50[3]. In Rickless, the appellate court held that although a joint venture ordinarily is created by contract or agreement between the parties, there need not be any formal written agreement defining the parties' respective rights and duties (4 Cal. App. 3d 869, 893) . There was substantial evidence to support the finding that defendant and his associate used money advanced by plaintiff to finance their joint venture. The court then held that when one joint venturer, acting within the scope of the joint venture, and in furtherance of its agreed purpose, is guilty of fraud in procuring benefits that are retained by the joint venturers, all are liable for the fraud in compensatory damages (4 Cal. App. 3d 869, 893-894) . Under the facts of this case, and the law applicable to it, defendant became liable to plaintiff when the joint venture accepted and used plaintiff's money obtained from her by the associate's fraud (4 Cal. App. 3d 869, 894) .

In Grant v. Weatherholt (1954) 123 Cal. App. 2d 34, 266 P.2d 185 , defendants were joint venturers in the purchase of property. The first defendant drew a check from a checking account in the name of himself and his wife to pay for the property. The second defendant and his wife executed a note for the amount secured by a trust deed in favor of first defendant's wife, and took title to the property. Defendants then organized a holding company and divided the stock between themselves and their wives. Defendants were the corporate officers. Thereafter, the second defendant approached plaintiff to secure money to develop the property, and represented to him that the property was free of encumbrances. Plaintiff agreed to advance money and do the work to make the improvements. The enterprise subsequently ran out of money, and the operation stopped. The note held by the first defendant's wife remained unpaid, and she gave notice of default. Consequently, plaintiff learned that the property was encumbered, and brought an action for fraud and breach of contract against the second defendant and his wife, the holding company, and the first defendant and his wife. At trial, a jury rendered a verdict in favor of plaintiff against the first defendant and his wife, the holding company, and the second defendant's wife individually and as administratrix of second defendant's estate. The court entered a judgment notwithstanding the verdict in favor of plaintiff against the holding company and the second defendant's wife as administratrix of the estate, but against plaintiff in favor of the second defendant's wife individually, and the first defendant and his wife. It also granted a new trial for the holding company on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence. Plaintiff appealed.

The appellate court reversed, holding that when one joint venturer, acting within the scope of the joint venture, and in furtherance of its agreed purpose, is guilty of fraud in procuring benefits that are retained by the joint venturers, all are liable for the fraud in compensatory damages (123 Cal. App. 2d 34, 45) . The court held that in enlisting the assistance of plaintiff, the second defendant was acting under the authority conferred by the joint venture agreement. The results of his negotiations and oral promises were known and consented to by the first defendant (123 Cal. App. 2d 34, 46) . Thus, the court held that the verdict against the first defendant was supported by substantial evidence, and that it was error to enter a judgment notwithstanding the verdict in his favor (123 Cal. App. 2d 34, 47) .

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that individual joint venturers are jointly and severally liable for the joint venture's obligations or other liabilities created by a wrong committed by one of the venturers. The law of partnerships generally applies to joint ventures [Orlopp v. Willardson Co. (1965) 232 Cal. App. 2d 750, 754, 43 Cal. Rptr. 125 (discussed in §§ 170.250, 170.260)]. Thus, Corp. Code § 16306 [see former Corp. Code § 15015 (pre-'97 Act)] is applicable to joint ventures [see McClung v. Saito (1970) 4 Cal. App. 3d 143, 150, 84 Cal. Rptr. 44] .

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the joint venturers are either jointly or jointly and severally liable for the acts of one of the other joint venturers. These points and authorities also may be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Joint and Several Liability

In Cahill Bros., Inc. v. Clementina Co. (1962) 208 Cal. App. 2d 367, 25 Cal. Rptr. 301 , plaintiff corporation entered into a contract with the owner of some buildings to demolish the buildings. Plaintiff orally contracted with defendant corporation, which was independently owned by plaintiff's general superintendent, to perform the work. Defendant erected a wooden barricade around the site to protect the public. The lumber was provided by plaintiff, and furnished pursuant to the superintendent's order as plaintiff's employee. Despite the barricade, a pedestrian was injured when he fell into an excavation on the site. He sued plaintiff and defendant for negligence, and was awarded a judgment. The judgment was satisfied by payment of one-half of the sum by both plaintiff and defendant. Thereafter, plaintiff sued defendant for indemnification. The trial court awarded judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appealed, contending that the relationship between itself and plaintiff was a joint venture.

The appellate court reversed, noting that there was an apparent inconsistency in the jury instructions about which party had the burden of proving the nature of the relationship (208 Cal. App. 2d 367, 384-385) . Plaintiff sought to soften the impact of the error in the instructions by contending that the existence of a joint venture would not, in any event, bar plaintiff's recovery because one joint venturer may recover from another for a breach of his or her duties to the joint venture. The court disagreed, stating that this case involved a situation in which possible joint venturers wronged a third party. The court noted the general rule that all members of a joint venture are jointly liable for injuries resulting from the negligent conduct of one of the members because the negligence of one joint venturer or his or her employee acting in connection with the joint venture is imputed to the other joint venturers (208 Cal. App. 2d 367, 387) . The court held that in the case of joint venturers each owes the same duty to the injured party because each member of a joint venture is the agent of the others in the venture's business transactions. As between themselves, the rights of joint venturers are governed by the same principles that apply to partnerships. The principle on which the liability of a partnership for injuries to a third person rests is the same as that applicable to principal and agent and master and servant. Thus, a principal whose agent has committed a tort in the transaction of the business of the agency is jointly and severally liable to the injured party (208 Cal. App. 2d 367, 388) .

In McClung v. Saito (1970) 4 Cal. App. 3d 143, 84 Cal. Rptr. 44 , defendants were interested in developing property for residential purposes. They entered into an agreement to acquire the stock of the company that owned the property. In order to obtain a construction loan, the property was then conveyed to a corporation owned by the contractor who was to develop the property. The loan was secured by a deed of trust on the property. Thereafter, the contractor's corporation, the contractor, and defendants entered into a joint venture agreement to construct and sell homes on the property. The enterprise subsequently became short of funds, and one of the defendants approached plaintiff to borrow money to complete the project. Plaintiff agreed to loan the money, and delivered a check to defendant and the contractor payable to the contractor's corporation. In return, plaintiff received the corporation's promissory note signed by the contractor as president and the defendant as secretary. This loan was secured by a second deed of trust. The financial condition of the venture worsened, and the holder of the first deed on the property declared a default. The property was sold at a trustee's sale, thereby extinguishing the security represented by plaintiff's second deed. Plaintiff sued defendants to recover the balance due on her loan. The trial court rendered judgment in favor of plaintiff, finding that defendants, the contractor, and the contractor's corporation associated themselves together as joint venturers; and that, although legal title to the property was vested for convenience in the contractor's corporation, the joint venture was the true beneficial owner. Defendants appealed.

The appellate court affirmed, holding that the trial court's findings were adequately supported by the record. The court held that because defendants were joint venturers, such an arrangement imposed on them the obligations of members of a partnership. Citing former Corp. Code § 15015 [now see Corp. Code § 16306], the court held that each of the defendants thus had become jointly liable to creditors for the obligations of the enterprise (4 Cal. App. 3d 143, 150) .

[a] Joint and Several Liability

The facts and procedural background of Hupfeld v. Wadley (1948) 89 Cal. App. 2d 171, 200 P.2d 564 , are discussed in § 170.260[3]. In Hupfeld, the appellate court held that the negligence of one joint venturer committed in performing an act in furtherance of the joint enterprise is imputable to the other joint venturers (89 Cal. App. 2d 171, 175) . Thus, the members of a joint venture may be held jointly liable for the injuries arising from the negligent conduct of one of the parties to it (89 Cal. App. 2d 171, 176) .

In Di Vita v. Martinelli (1932) 123 Cal. App. 392, 11 P.2d 423 , one of the defendants owned an automobile that was parked near a curb where plaintiff was standing. The other defendant was inside the automobile while it was parked. At defendant owner's direction, the other defendant started the automobile and stepped on the starter. The automobile struck and injured plaintiff. At trial in an action to recover damages for personal injuries, the trial court granted defendants' individual motions for nonsuit. In reversing the judgment, the appellate court held that if the second defendant was acting under the direction and supervision of the owner defendant, they both might have been held severally or jointly liable; and as the record showed some evidence that defendants were on a joint venture at the time of the accident, they could have been held jointly liable for the tort (89 Cal. App. 2d 171) . Thus, the court held that these issues should have been presented to the jury (89 Cal. App. 2d 171) .

[1] FORM Opposing Contention That Act of Joint Venturer Binds Non-Negligent Joint Venture--Injured Employee of Joint Venturer Covered by Workers' Compensation Act

DEFENDANT JOINT VENTURER[S] _____ [IS or ARE] NOT LIABLE FOR THE INJURY TO PLAINTIFF THAT OCCURRED ON THE PREMISES WHERE ONE OF THE JOINT VENTURERS, _____ [name of joint venturer/employer], WAS ENGAGED IN AN ACT IN FURTHERANCE OF THE JOINT ENTERPRISE, BECAUSE _____ [name of joint venturer/employer] PROVIDED COVERAGE TO PLAINTIFF UNDER THE WORKERS' COMPENSATION ACT.

Non-Negligent Joint Venture Is Not Liable For Injuries To Joint Venturer's Employee When Coverage Is Provided by Workers' Compensation Act. A non-negligent joint venture is not liable when a member of the joint venture negligently injures that member's own employee and the member of the joint venture has provided coverage to the injured employee under the Workers' Compensation Act (Orosco v. Sun-Diamond Corp. (1997) 51 Cal. App. 4th 1659, 1669-1670, 60 Cal. Rptr. 2d 179).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a non-negligent joint venture is liable to an employee of a joint venturer when that joint venturer provided coverage to the employee under the Workers' Compensation Act.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the joint venture was not liable to an injured employee of a joint venturer. They also may be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities set forth in § 170.261.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Non-Negligent Joint Venture Is Not Liable for Injuries to Joint Venturer's Employee When Coverage Is Provided by Workers' Compensation Act

In Orosco v. Sun-Diamond Corp*. (1997) 51 Cal. App. 4th 1659, 60 Cal. Rptr. 2d 179* , a worker lost his arm in an industrial accident at a raisin plant. His employer had workers' compensation insurance under which the injured employee filed a claim. The employee also sought to recover in tort from other corporations engaged in various business pursuits with and on behalf of the employer, on a theory of joint venture. The superior court granted summary judgment for the corporations, and the injured employee appealed.

The appellate court first held that the respondent corporations were not engaged in a joint venture with the employer for production of raisins at the employer's plant (51 Cal. App. 4th 1659, 1666) . It found that there was no evidence that any entity other than the employer had any control over the production of raisins, that any entity shared with the employer the profits from producing raisins, or that any entity other than the employer had an ownership interest in the raisin crop prior to its sale in the marketplace. The court therefore held that the evidence did not raise a triable issue of fact whether a joint venture composed of respondents and the employer engaged in the production of raisins at the employer's plant (51 Cal. App. 4th 1659, 1666) .

The court then held that even if the injured employee could establish that a joint venture ran the raisin plant by or through the employer, the joint venture would not be liable when a member of the joint venture negligently injures the member's employee and the member of the joint venture has provided coverage under the Workers' Compensation Act (51 Cal. App. 4th 1659, 1669-1670) . The court found that the same two factors of fairness and social policy that led the California Supreme Court to terminate the liability of non-negligent landowners to the employees of independent contractors, in Privette v. Superior Court (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 689, 700-702, 21 Cal. Rptr. 2d 72, 854 P.2d 721 , applied in this case. First, the workers' compensation exclusive remedy doctrine would operate to prevent the joint venture from seeking indemnity from its negligent member, and thus place an unfair burden on a fault-free party. Second, workers compensation coverage for the injured employee should provide uniform compensation for all injured employees regardless of the form of hiring business organization, i.e., employees of a joint venture should not be an exempt class. The court concluded that even if appellant could establish that a joint venture ran the raisin plant by or through the employer, the respondent corporations would not be liable in the absence of some negligence on the part of the joint venture or one of its members other than the employer (51 Cal. App. 4th 1659, 1669-1670) .

[1] FORM Supporting Contention That Act of General Partner Binds Limited Partnership Under CRLPA [Corp. Code § 15643(a)] and ULPA [Corp. Code § 15509(1)]--Authority of General Partner to Act on Behalf of Limited Partnership

UNDER THE _____ [CALIFORNIA REVISED or UNIFORM] LIMITED PARTNERSHIP ACT, _____ [PLAINTIFF or DEFENDANT] LIMITED PARTNERSHIP SHOULD BE BOUND BY THE ACT OF ITS GENERAL PARTNER _____ [name] BECAUSE HE/SHE HAS THE RIGHTS AND POWERS OF A PARTNER IN A PARTNERSHIP WITHOUT LIMITED PARTNERS.

[EITHER, under California Revised Limited Partnership Act]

Rights and Powers of General Partner in Limited Partnership Under CRLPA. Except as otherwise provided under the California Revised Limited Partnership Act or in the partnership agreement, a general partner of a limited partnership has the rights and powers and is subject to the restrictions of a partner in a partnership without limited partners (Corp. Code § 15643(a)).

[OR, under Uniform Limited Partnership Act]

Rights and Powers of General Partner in Limited Partnership Under ULPA. Subject to specified exceptions that require written consent or ratification by all the limited partners, a general partner has all the rights and powers and is subject to all the restrictions and liabilities of a partner in a partnership without limited partners (Corp. Code § 15509(1)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that a limited partnership is bound by the acts of its general partner. Whether counsel uses the first or second alternative depends on whether the subject limited partnership is governed by the CRLPA or the ULPA. See §§ 170.70 -170.74 for points and authorities discussing the formation of limited partnerships and the applicable statutes.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that an action by a general partner has bound the limited partnership. They also may be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, counsel should discuss facts that show that a third party relied on representations by the limited partnership and the general partner that the general partner had authority to act. Counsel should also discuss facts showing that the third party's belief that the general partner's act was within the usual course of the limited partnership's business was justified by the conduct of the general partner and the limited partnership.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Rights and Powers of General Partner in Limited Partnership

Generally, both the California Revised Limited Partnership Act (CRLPA) and the Uniform Limited Partnership Act (ULPA) provide that a general partner in a limited partnership has the same powers and authority, and restrictions thereon, as a partner in a partnership without limited partners [Corp. Code § 15643(a) (CRLPA); Corp. Code § 15509(1)(ULPA)]. Thus, the general partner may bind the limited partnership by the execution of contracts in the partnership name [Corp. Code § 16301 (UPA'94); former Corp. Code § 15009(1) (pre-'97 Act); see 170.200 -170.201]. The limited partnership also may be liable for the wrongful act or omission of the general partner if the act or omission occurred during the ordinary course of the partnership business [Corp. Code § 16305(a) (UPA'94); former Corp. Code § 15013 (pre-'97 Act); see § 170.220]. It also may be liable for the general partner's misapplication of money or property belonging to third parties either when the partner was acting within his or her partnership authority or when the money or property was received by the limited partnership in the course of its business, and was in the partnership's custody at the time of misapplication [Corp. Code § 16305(b) (UPA'94); former Corp. Code § 15014 (pre-'97 Act); see § 170.221].

[1] FORM Supporting Contention That Act of General Partner Binds Limited Partnership Under ULPA '08 [Corp. Code § 15904.02(a)]

UNDER THE UNIFORM LIMITED PARTNERSHIP ACT OF 2008, _____ [PLAINTIFF or DEFENDANT] LIMITED PARTNERSHIP IS BOUND BY THE ACT OF ITS GENERAL PARTNER _____ [name], BECAUSE AN ACT OF A GENERAL PARTNER FOR APPARENTLY CARRYING ON IN THE ORDINARY COURSE THE LIMITED PARTNERSHIP'S ACTIVITIES, OR ACTIVITIES OF THE KIND CARRIED ON BY THE LIMITED PARTNERSHIP, BINDS THE LIMITED PARTNERSHIP.

General Partner as Agent of Limited Partnership Under ULPA '08. An act of the general partner for apparently carrying on in the ordinary course the limited partnership's activities or activities of the kind carried on by the limited partnership binds the limited partnership, unless the general partner did not have authority to act for the limited partnership in the particular matter and the person with whom the general partner was dealing either knew, received a notification, or had notice pursuant to Corp. Code § 15901.03(d) that the general partner lacked authority (Corp. Code § 15904.02(a)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a limited partnership is bound by the acts of a general partner under the ULPA '08.

These points and authorities should be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that an action by a general partner has bound the limited partnership. They also may be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

For similar points and authorities drafted under the applicable provisions of the CRLPA [see Corp. Code § 15643 (repealed Jan. 1, 2010)], see § 170.265.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] General Partner as Agent of Limited Partnership Under ULPA '08

Corp. Code § 15904.02(a) provides that each general partner is an agent of the limited partnership for the purposes of its activities. An act of a general partner, including the signing of a record in the partnership's name, for apparently carrying on in the ordinary course the limited partnership's activities or activities of the kind carried on by the limited partnership binds the limited partnership. However, an exception exists if the general partner did not have authority to act for the limited partnership in the particular matter and the person with whom the general partner was dealing either knew, received a notification, or had notice pursuant to Corp. Code § 15901.03(d) that the general partner lacked authority.

An act of a general partner that is not apparently for carrying on in the ordinary course the limited partnership's activities, or activities of the kind carried on by the limited partnership, binds the limited partnership only if the act was actually authorized by all the other partners [Corp. Code § 15904.02(b)].

§ 170.270 Supporting Contention That Limited Partners Are Not Liable for Partnership Obligations Under CRLPA [Corp. Code § 15632]--No Control of Business

[1] FORM Supporting Contention That Limited Partners Are Not Liable for Partnership Obligations Under CRLPA [Corp. Code § 15632]--No Control of Business

DEFENDANT _____ [name] IS A LIMITED PARTNER, AND THEREFORE SHOULD NOT BE LIABLE FOR _____ [specify partnership obligation, e.g., THE CONTRACT BETWEEN THE LIMITED PARTNERSHIP AND PLAINTIFF] BECAUSE LIMITED PARTNERS ARE NOT LIABLE FOR THE OBLIGATIONS OF THE LIMITED PARTNERSHIP[, AND ALTHOUGH _____ (specify action alleged to be an exercise of control, e.g., HE/SHE CONSULTED WITH THE GENERAL PARTNER CONCERNING THE CONTRACT), THAT DID NOT CONSTITUTE AN EXERCISE OF CONTROL OVER THE PARTNERSHIP BUSINESS BECAUSE THAT ACTION IS SPECIFICALLY ENUMERATED BY CORPORATIONS CODE SECTION 15632(b)] AS NOT BEING INDICATIVE OF CONTROL].

A. No Liability for Partnership Obligations if No Control of Business. A limited partner is not liable for any obligation of a limited partnership unless named as a general partner in the certificate or, in addition to the exercise of the rights and powers of a limited partner, he or she participates in the control of the business (Corp. Code § 15632(a)).

B. Third Party Must Know of Partner's Participation. If a limited partner participates in the control of the business without being named a general partner, that limited partner may be held liable as a general partner only to persons who transact business with the limited partnership with actual knowledge of that partner's participation in control and with a reasonable belief, based on the limited partner's conduct, that that partner is a general partner (Corp. Code § 15632(a)).

[Optional] C. Certain Acts Do Not Constitute Control of Business. A limited partner does not participate in the control of the business solely by doing one or more of the following:

(1) Being any of the following:

(a) An independent contractor for, or an agent or employee of, or transacting business with, the limited partnership or a general partner of the limited partnership;

(b) An officer, director, or shareholder of a corporate general partner or a person or persons charged with the management of a limited liability company;

(c) A limited partner of a partnership that is a general partner of the limited partnership;

(d) A trustee, administrator, executor, custodian, or other fiduciary or beneficiary of an estate or trust that is a general partner; or

(e) A trustee, officer, advisor, shareholder, or beneficiary of a business trust that is a general partner;

(2) Consulting with and advising a general partner with respect to the business of the limited partnership;

(3) Acting as a surety for the limited partnership or for a general partner, guaranteeing one or more specific debts of the limited partnership, or providing collateral for the limited partnership or for a general partner, or borrowing money from the limited partnership or from a general partner, or lending money to the limited partnership or to a general partner;

(4) Approving or disapproving an amendment to the partnership agreement;

(5) Voting, proposing, or calling a meeting on one or more specified matters;

(6) Winding up the partnership pursuant to Corporations Code Section 15683;

(7) Executing and filing a certificate as required by Corporations Code Section 15625, or a certificate of dissolution as required by Corporations Code Section 15624(a)(3), or a certificate of cancellation of certificate of limited partnership as required by Corporations Code Section 15624(a)(4)];

(8) Serving on an audit committee or committee performing the functions of an audit committee;

(9) Serving on a committee of the limited partnership or of the limited partners for the purpose of approving actions of the general partner;

(10) Calling, requesting, attending, or participating at any meeting of the partners or of the limited partners;

(11) Taking any action required or permitted by law to bring, pursue, settle, or terminate a derivative action on behalf of the limited partnership;

(12) Serving on the board of directors or on a committee of, consulting with, or advising, being, or acting as an officer, director, stockholder, partner, agent, or employee of, or being or acting as a fiduciary for, any person in which the limited partnership has an interest; or

(13) Exercising any right or power permitted to limited partners by Corporations Code Section 15611 et seq. (Corp. Code § 15632(b); see Gruendl v. Oewel Partnership (1997) 55 Cal. App. 4th 654, 659, 64 Cal. Rptr. 2d 217).

[Optional] D. Other Acts May Not Constitute Control of Business. The enumeration in Corporations Code Section 15632(b) does not mean that any other conduct or the possession or exercise of any other power by a limited partner constitutes participation by the limited partner in the control of the business of the limited partnership (Corp. Code § 15632(c)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that a limited partner is not liable for the obligations of a CRLPA limited partnership [see Corp. Code § 15632(a)] (not to be construed to affect liability of limited partner for participation in tortious conduct)]. If the partnership is a ULPA limited partnership [see § 170.02[4], [5] for discussion], the points and authorities in § 170.271 should be used in place of those in this form.

Under the CRLPA, a limited partner is not liable for any obligation of a limited partnership unless he or she participates in the control of the business [Corp. Code § 15632(a)]. Paragraph B is provided because even if a limited partner does participate in control of the business, he or she will not be held liable to a third person who transacts business with the partnership unless the person knows of the participation, and reasonably believes, based on the limited partner's conduct, that the limited partner is a general partner [Corp. Code § 15632(a)].

The CRLPA does not explain what control of the business is, but it specifically enumerates what it is not [see Corp. Code § 15634(b)]. Thus, Optional Paragraph C may be useful when an act by a limited partner is alleged to be an exercise of control, and it is one that is specifically listed as not being so under the CRPLA (the list can be tailored as necessary to fit the specific allegations in the plaintiff's case). However, the enumeration in Corp. Code § 15632(b) does not necessarily mean that any other conduct by a limited partner constitutes participation in the control of the business [Corp. Code § 15632(c)]. Optional Paragraph D may be used when a limited partner's act is not enumerated by the CRPLA.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that a limited partner is not liable for the obligations of the limited partnership. These points and authorities also may be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss facts showing that a partner is a limited partner and has exercised no control over the partnership business.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Certain Acts Do Not Constitute Control of Business

In Gruendl v. Oewel Partnership (1997) 55 Cal. App. 4th 654, 64 Cal. Rptr. 2d 217 , after an award of damages that defendant entities failed to pay because of insufficient assets, plaintiff moved to amend the judgment to add as a defendant the individual who was the sole shareholder of the corporate general partner and the sole limited partner of the limited partnership. The superior court held that the individual was the alter ego of the named limited liability defendants and granted the motion. The appellant contended that the judgment should be reversed because the trial court failed to issue a statement of decision under Code Civ. Proc. § 632 and that substantial evidence did not support the trial court's finding that appellant was the alter ego of the named limited liability defendants. Citing Corp. Code § 15632(a), (b)(1), (3), the appellate court found that a limited partner may not be deemed to have participated in control merely because he exercised his duties as president of a corporate general partner, or acted as surety or lent money to the limited partnership (55 Cal. App. 4th 654, 659) . The court concluded that when a motion to amend the judgment seeks to impose alter ego liability for a judgment on one who was neither named nor served as a defendant in the action, the trial court is required to prepare a statement of decision after a timely request has been made under Code Civ. Proc. § 632 (55 Cal. App. 4th 654, 661-662) .

[1] FORM Supporting Contention That Limited Partners Are Not Liable for Partnership Obligations Under ULPA [Corp. Code §§ 15501, 15507]--No Control of Business

DEFENDANT _____ [name] IS A LIMITED PARTNER, AND THEREFORE IS NOT LIABLE FOR _____ [specify partnership obligation, e.g., THE CONTRACT BETWEEN THE LIMITED PARTNERSHIP AND PLAINTIFF] BECAUSE LIMITED PARTNERS ARE NOT LIABLE FOR THE OBLIGATIONS OF THE LIMITED PARTNERSHIP[, AND ALTHOUGH _____ (specify action alleged to be an exercise of control, e.g., HE/SHE NEGOTIATED THE CONTRACT AS THE AGENT OF THE CORPORATE GENERAL PARTNER,) THAT ACTION IS NOT DEEMED TO CONSTITUTE AN EXERCISE OF CONTROL OVER THE PARTNERSHIP BUSINESS].

A. No Liability as General Partner if No Control of Business. A limited partner is not bound by the obligations of the partnership. He or she will not become liable as a general partner unless, in addition to the exercise of his or her rights and powers as a limited partner, he or she takes part in the control of the business (Corp. Code §§ 15501, 15507(a); Grainger v. Antoyan (1957) 48 Cal. 2d 805, 807, 313 P.2d 848).

[Optional] B. Certain Acts Do Not Constitute Control of Business. A limited partner will not be deemed to take part in the control of the business by virtue of his or her possessing or exercising a power, specified in the certificate of limited partnership, to vote on matters affecting the basic structure of the partnership, including the following matters or others of a similar nature: (1) election or removal of general partners; (2) termination of the partnership; (3) amendment of the partnership agreement; or (4) sale of all or substantially all of the assets of the partnership (Corp. Code § 15507(b)).

[Optional] C. Other Acts May Not Constitute Control of Business. The statement of powers set forth in Corporations Code Section 15507(b) will not be construed as exclusive or as indicating that any other powers possessed or exercised by a limited partner will be sufficient to cause that limited partner to be deemed to take part in the control of the business within the meaning of Corporations Code Section 15507(a)(Corp. Code § 15507(c); see Western Camps, Inc. v. Riverway Ranch Enter. (1977) 70 Cal. App. 3d 714, 727-730, 138 Cal. Rptr. 918).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that a limited partner is not liable for the obligations of a ULPA limited partnership. Under the ULPA, a limited partner is not liable for any obligation of a limited partnership unless he or she participates in the control of the business [Corp. Code § 15507(a); Grainger v. Antoyan (1957) 48 Cal. 2d 805, 807, 313 P.2d 848] . If the partnership is a CRLPA limited partnership [see § 170.02[4], [5] for discussion], the points and authorities in § 170.270 should be used in place of those in this form.

The ULPA enumerates certain powers that are permitted without a limited partner being deemed to have taken part in the control of the business [see Corp. Code § 15507(b)]. Thus, Optional Paragraph B may be useful when an act by a limited partner is alleged to be an exercise of control, and it is one that is specifically provided as not being so under the ULPA. However, the enumeration in Corp. Code § 15507(b) does not necessarily mean that any other conduct by a limited partner will be deemed to constitute participation in the control of the business [Corp. Code § 15507(c); see Western Camps, Inc. v. Riverway Ranch Enter. (1977) 70 Cal. App. 3d 714, 727-730, 138 Cal. Rptr. 918] . Optional Paragraph C may be used when a limited partner's act is not enumerated by the ULPA.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that a limited partner is not liable for the obligations of the limited partnership. These points and authorities also may be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in § 170.281 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Liability as General Partner if No Control of Business

In Grainger v. Antoyan (1957) 48 Cal. 2d 805, 313 P.2d 848 , defendant was the sales manager in a limited partnership doing business as an automobile dealership. He had no authority in the management and control of the business, employing or discharging personnel, or setting prices. The owner of the dealership was the general partner, and his son was the limited partner. The owner and his son executed a chattel mortgage to defendant, stating that they would pay defendant a sum of money payable in monthly installments plus interest, or 10 percent of the profits of the partnership, whichever was greater. The parties also executed articles of limited partnership and an Amendment of Certificate of Limited Partnership naming defendant as second limited partner, and guaranteeing and reiterating the terms of the aforementioned mortgage. Shortly thereafter, the parties modified the initial agreement, and defendant agreed not to participate in the profits of the business until his loan was repaid by fixed monthly payments, and thereafter, he would remain a limited partner and receive a monthly percentage. The loan became delinquent, and defendant served the owner with a demand for payment and a notice of default. Subsequently, the partnership business became bankrupt. Plaintiff, as trustee for the limited partnership estate, filed an action against defendant for declaratory relief alleging that defendant was actually a general partner. The trial court rendered judgment for defendant. Plaintiff appealed.

The California Supreme Court affirmed. It held that the evidence clearly demonstrated that defendant had no control over prices, purchases, the extension of credit, wages, salaries, employment, and the dealership funds, and that he did not take part in the control of the business, and thus the trial court findings were fully sustained (48 Cal. 2d 805, 813) . In reaching this holding, the Court applied the rule in Corp. Code § 15507 (ULPA) that a limited partner is not liable as a general partner unless, in addition to the exercise of his or her rights and powers as a limited partner, he or she takes part in the control of the business (48 Cal. 2d 805, 807) .

[b] Other Acts May Not Constitute Control of Business

In Western Camps, Inc. v. Riverway Ranch Enter. (1977) 70 Cal. App. 3d 714, 138 Cal. Rptr. 918 , a corporation leased several acres of land, and concurrently executed an option agreement with the landowners to purchase real property. The lease was to operate only so long as the corporation continued to exercise its options. Thereafter, the corporation formed defendant limited partnership with the corporation as general partner, and assigned its rights in the lease and the agreement to the partnership. Defendant partnership subsequently subleased the property to plaintiff. One of plaintiff's officers met with one of defendant's limited partners for the purpose of obtaining a long term sublease. The limited partner agreed on the condition that plaintiff make improvements on the land at its own expense. In order to protect plaintiff in the event defendant failed to exercise its purchase options, the limited partner agreed to pay plaintiff a certain sum of money on termination of the sublease, and reimburse it for any improvements made. The parties drafted a sublease incorporating these provisions. The sublease also provided that defendant would give plaintiff written notice by a certain date of any intent to terminate it, and plaintiff would have the right to exercise defendant's purchase options should defendant choose not to do so. Thereafter, defendant exercised one option, but decided not to exercise any more. It so informed plaintiff, but plaintiff received no written notice expressly terminating the sublease. Plaintiff was unable to raise the money necessary to exercise the options. Plaintiff commenced an action against defendant and the limited partner for negligent misrepresentation, fraud, and breach of contract. Judgment was entered in favor of plaintiff and against both defendants. The trial court found that the limited partner exercised complete management and control over all negotiations for, and execution of, the sublease, and therefore, acted as a general partner. Defendants appealed.

The appellate court reversed in regard to the limited partner. Citing Corp. Code §§ 15501 and 15507 (ULPA), the court held that a limited partner is not bound by the obligations of the limited partnership unless he or she takes part in the control of the partnership business (70 Cal. App. 3d 714, 727) . The court stated that the question in this case was whether a limited partner becomes liable as a general partner if he or she takes part in the control of the partnership business while acting as an agent of a corporation that is also the general partner in the limited partnership (70 Cal. App. 3d 714, 728) . It held that the dominant consideration in determining the personal liability of a limited partner is reliance by the third party, not control by the limited partner. A limited partner is made liable as a general partner when he or she participates in the control of the business, in order to protect third parties from dealing with the partnership under the mistaken assumption that the limited partner is a general partner with general liabilities. However, there is no substantive difference between the creditor who does business with a corporation that is the general partner and a creditor who simply does business with a corporation, and in the absence of fraud or other inequitable conduct, the corporate entity should be respected (70 Cal. App. 3d 714, 729) . Thus, the court held that the corporate general partner in this case was solely liable for the obligations of the limited partnership, and the limited partner had no personal liabilities for such obligations (70 Cal. App. 3d 714, 730) .

DEFENDANT _____ [name] IS NOT LIABLE FOR THE OBLIGATIONS OF THE PURPORTED LIMITED PARTNERSHIP BECAUSE HE/SHE ERRONEOUSLY BELIEVED THAT HE/SHE WAS A LIMITED PARTNER THEREIN. WHEN HE/SHE FOUND OUT THAT A CERTIFICATE OF LIMITED PARTNERSHIP HAD NOT BEEN FILED, HE/SHE ASKED THE GENERAL PARTNER[S] TO DO SO. WHEN HE/SHE/THEY FAILED TO FILE THE CERTIFICATE, DEFENDANT PROMPTLY FILED ONE AND SENT A COPY TO EACH GENERAL PARTNER.

When Putative Limited Partner Is Not Liable. Except as provided in Corporations Code Section 15633(b), if a certificate of limited partnership has not been filed, a person who makes a contribution to the purported limited partnership and in good faith believes that he or she has become a limited partner is not liable for the obligations of the purported limited partnership, if, on ascertaining that the certificate has not been filed and after a failure of the general partner or partners to file the certificate within a reasonable time after the request, that person promptly files the certificate and sends a copy of the certificate so filed to each general partner at the general partner's last known address (Corp. Code § 15633(a)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that a person who erroneously believes he or she is a limited partner is not liable for the obligations of a purported CRLPA limited partnership. They may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that a putative limited partner should not be held liable for the partnership's obligations. These points and authorities also may be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

[c] Certificate of Limited Partnership

In order to form a limited partnership under the CRLPA, the parties must execute a partnership agreement and the general partners must execute, acknowledge, and file a certificate of limited partnership providing several designated items of information about the partnership [Corp. Code § 15621(a)]. For points and authorities relating to the specific requirements for the certificate, see § 170.72.

[d] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in § 170.282 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] When Putative Limited Partner Is Not Liable

Corp. Code § 15633(a) (CRLPA) provides that a person who believes he or she is a limited partner when the limited partnership has not been properly formed because no certificate of limited partnership has been filed pursuant to Corp. Code § 15621(a) will not be liable for the purported limited partnership's obligations, if he or she promptly files a certificate within a reasonable time after asking the general partner or partners to do so [Corp. Code § 15633(a)]. A limited partner executing and filing a certificate of limited partnership must also send a copy of the certificate to each general partner at the general partner's last known address [Corp. Code § 15633(a)]. Counsel should bear in mind, however, that the person may be liable for obligations incurred prior to the time that the certificate was filed if the third person who transacted business with the purported limited partnership reasonably believed that the person was a general partner [Corp. Code § 15633(b); see § 170.282].

Putative Limited Partner Is Not Liable if Erroneously Believed Limited Partnership Existed and Promptly Renounced Interest in Profits and Business. A person who has contributed to the capital of a business conducted by a person or partnership erroneously believing that he or she has become a limited partner in a limited partnership is not, by reason of his or her exercise of the rights of a limited partner, a general partner with the person or in the partnership carrying on the business, or bound by the obligations of that person or partnership provided that, on ascertaining the mistake, he or she promptly renounces his or her interest in the profits of the business or other compensation by way of income (*Corp. [a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that a person who erroneously believes he or she is a limited partner is not liable for the obligations of a purported ULPA limited partnership. Under the ULPA, a person who erroneously believes that he or she is a limited partner will not be liable for the purported limited partnership's obligations if he or she renounces his or her interest in the profits of the business when he or she ascertains his or her mistake [Corp. Code § 15511].

This form may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that a person contributed to a purported limited partnership in the good faith but erroneous belief that he or she was becoming a limited partner, and therefore should not be held liable for the partnership's obligations. They also may be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss facts that show that a person erroneously believed that he or she was a limited partner, and that when he or she found out that he or she was not, he or she promptly renounced his or her interest in the profits of the business.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Putative Limited Partner Is Not Liable if Erroneously Believed Limited Partnership Existed and Promptly Renounced Interest in Profits and Business

In J.C. Wattenbarger & Sons v. Sanders (1963) 216 Cal. App. 2d 495, 30 Cal. Rptr. 910 , appellant had an account for supplies and materials against a partnership comprised of respondent and several other persons. Appellant sued respondent and his partners individually and doing business as a partnership to recover on the account. The trial court found that respondent entered into a limited partnership in good faith, believing that he was to be a limited partner, and it rendered judgment for him. Appellant appealed, contending that it had the right to treat respondent as a general partner because respondent executed, filed, and published a fictitious name certificate with two of his partners, and did not declare in the certificate that he was a limited partner.

The appellate court affirmed, noting that respondent specifically renounced any claim to the partnership property in his answer. It held that although it believed that respondent was at all times a limited partner, if appellant's contention were correct, then respondent's renunciation pursuant to Corp. Code § 15511 would serve to justify a judgment in his favor because the trial court found that he believed that he was a limited partner and that he acted in good faith (216 Cal. App. 2d 495, 502) .

[1] FORM Supporting Contention That Limited Partner Is Not Liable for Partnership Obligations Under ULPA '08 [Corp. Code § 15903.03]

DEFENDANT _____ [name] IS A LIMITED PARTNER AND THEREFORE IS NOT LIABLE FOR _____ [specify partnership obligation, e.g., THE CONTRACT BETWEEN THE LIMITED PARTNERSHIP AND PLAINTIFF] BECAUSE LIMITED PARTNERS ARE NOT LIABLE FOR THE OBLIGATIONS OF THE LIMITED PARTNERSHIP. [ALTHOUGH _____ (specify action alleged to be participation in control of the business, e.g., DEFENDANT CONSULTED WITH THE GENERAL PARTNER CONCERNING THE CONTRACT), CORPORATIONS CODE SECTION 15903.03(b) SPECIFIES THAT SUCH AN ACTION DOES NOT CONSTITUTE PARTICIPATION IN THE CONTROL OF THE BUSINESS].

A. No Liability for Partnership Obligations If No Control of Business. A limited partner is not liable for any obligation of a limited partner unless he or she is named as a general partner in the certificate or, in addition to exercising the rights and powers of a limited partner, he or she participates in the control of the business (Corp. Code § 15903.03(a)).

B. Third Party Must Know of Partner's Participation. If a limited partner participates in the control of the business without being named as a general partner, that limited partner may be held liable as a general partner only to persons who transact business with the limited partnership with actual knowledge of that partner's participation in control and with a reasonable belief, based on the limited partner's conduct, that the partner is a general partner at the time of the transaction business (Corp. Code § 15903.03(a)).

[Optional] C. Certain Acts Do Not Constitute Control of Business. A limited partner does not participate in the control of the business solely by (Corp. Code § 15903.03(b)):

(1) Being any of the following:

(a) An independent contractor for, an agent or employee of, or transacting business with, the limited partnership or a general partner of the limited partnership.

(b) An officer, director, or shareholder of a corporate general partner of the limited partnership.

(c) A member, manager, or officer of a limited liability company that is a general partner of the limited partnership.

(d) A limited partner of a partnership that is a general partner of the limited partnership.

(e) A trustee, administrator, executor, custodian, or other fiduciary or beneficiary of an estate or trust that is a general partner.

(f) A trustee, officer, adviser, shareholder, or beneficiary of a business trust that is a general partner.

(2) Consulting with and advising a general partner with respect to the business of the limited partnership.

(3) Acting as surety for the limited partnership or for a general partner, guaranteeing one or more specific debts of the limited partnership, providing collateral for the limited partnership or general partner, borrowing money from the limited partnership or a general partner, or lending money to the limited partnership or a general partner.

(4) Approving or disapproving an amendment to the partnership agreement.

(5) Voting on, proposing, or calling a meeting of the partners.

(6) Winding up the partnership pursuant to Corporations Code Section 15908.03.

(7) Executing and filing a certificate pursuant to Corporations Code Section 15902.05, a certificate of withdrawal pursuant to Corporations Code Section 15902.04(a)(4), or a certificate of cancellation of the certificate of limited partnership pursuant to Corporations Code Section 15902.04(a)(6).

(8) Serving on an audit committee or committee performing the functions of an audit committee.

(9) Serving on a committee of the limited partnership or the limited partners for the purpose of approving actions of the general partner.

(10) Calling, requesting, attending, or participating at any meeting of the partners or the limited partners.

(11) Taking any action required or permitted by law to bring, pursue, settle, or terminate a derivative action on behalf of the limited partnership.

(12) Serving on the board of directors or a committee of, consulting with or advising, being or acting as an officer, director, stockholder, partner, member, manager, agent, or employee of, or being or acting as a fiduciary for, any person in which the limited partnership has an interest.

(13) Exercising any right or power permitted to limited partners under the Uniform Limited Partnership Act of 2008 and not specifically listed above.

[Optional] D. Other Acts May Not Constitute Control of Business. The enumeration in Corp. Code Section 15903.03(b) does not mean that any other conduct or the possession or exercise of any other power by a limited partner constitutes participation by the limited partner in the control of the business of the limited partnership (Corp. Code § 15903.03(c)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a limited partner is not liable for the obligations of the limited partnership under ULPA '08 [see Corp. Code § 15903.03(a) (statute not to be construed to affect liability of limited partner to third parties for participation in tortious conduct)]. Paragraph B is provided because even if a limited partner does participate in control of the business (without being named as a general partner), Corp. Code § 15903.03(a) provides that he or she will not be held liable to a third person who transacts business with the partnership unless the person has actual knowledge of the participation and reasonably believes, based on the limited partner's conduct, that the limited partner is a general partner at the time of the transaction. Optional Paragraph C may be used when an act by a limited partner is alleged to amount to participation in the control of the business, but ULPA '08 specifically provides that does not constitute such participation. Optional Paragraph D may be used when a limited partner's particular act is not listed in the ULPA '08.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that a limited partner is not liable for the obligations of the limited partnership. They also may be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

For points and authorities supporting a similar contention under the CRLPA [Corp. Code § 15632 (repealed Jan. 1, 2010)], see § 170.270.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss the facts showing that a partner is a limited partner and has exercised no control over the partnership business.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Liability for Partnership Obligations If No Control of Business

Corp. Code § 15903.03(a) provides that a limited partner is not liable for any obligation of a limited partnership unless he or she is named as a general partner in the certificate, or unless he or she or participates in the control of the business. Corp. Code § 15903.03(b) does not explain what control of the business is, but rather enumerates what actions do not constitute "participation in the control of the business." Corp. Code § 15903.03(c) states that the enumeration in Corp. Code § 15903.03(b) does not mean that any other conduct or the possession or exercise of any other power by a limited partner constitutes participation by the limited partner in the control of the business of the limited partnership.

[1] FORM Opposing Contention That Limited Partners Are Not Liable for Partnership Obligations Under ULPA [Corp. Code § 15505]--Limited Partner's Name Used in Name of Limited Partnership

ALTHOUGH DEFENDANT _____ [name] IS A LIMITED PARTNER, HE/SHE IS LIABLE FOR _____ [specify partnership obligation, e.g., THE CONTRACT BETWEEN THE LIMITED PARTNERSHIP AND PLAINTIFF] BECAUSE DEFENDANT ALLOWED HIS/HER NAME TO BE USED IN THE PARTNERSHIP NAME, AND PLAINTIFF DID NOT KNOW THAT DEFENDANT WAS NOT A GENERAL PARTNER WHEN PLAINTIFF EXTENDED CREDIT TO THE PARTNERSHIP.

Limited Partner Whose Name Is Part of Partnership Name Generally is Liable for Partnership Obligations. The surname of a limited partner must not appear in the partnership name, unless it is also the surname of a general partner, or prior to the time when the limited partner became a limited partner the business had been carried on under a name in which his or her surname appeared. A limited partner whose name appears in the partnership, except under the above circumstances, is liable as a general partner to partnership creditors who extend credit to the partnership without actual knowledge that he or she is not a general partner (Corp. Code § 15505(1), (2); Russell v. Warner (1950) 96 Cal. App. 2d 986, 988, 217 P.2d 43).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a contention that a limited partner is not liable for the obligations of a ULPA limited partnership. The ULPA provides that except under specified circumstances a limited partner will be liable for the partnership obligations if he or she permits his or her name to be used in the partnership name and creditors who extend credit to the limited partnership do not know that the limited partner is not a general partner [Corp. Code § 15505(1), (2); Russell v. Warner (1950) 96 Cal. App. 2d 986, 988, 217 P.2d 43] .

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that a limited partner is liable for the obligations of the limited partnership. They also may be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss facts showing that the limited partner has allowed his or her name to be used in the name of the limited partnership, and that creditors who extended credit to the partnership did not know that the limited partner was not a general partner.

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities in § 170.271.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Limited Partner Whose Name Is Part of Partnership Name Generally is Liable for Partnership Obligations

In Russell v. Warner (1950) 96 Cal. App. 2d 986, 217 P.2d 43 , defendant was a partner in a partnership that used part of his name in its own name. Defendant's partner made certain false representations to plaintiff concerning the business and assets of the partnership. Plaintiff relied on the misrepresentations and invested money in the partnership. Plaintiff brought an action for fraud against defendant and his partner, and the trial court rendered judgment for him. The court impliedly found that defendant and his partner were general partners. Defendant appealed.

The appellate court affirmed, holding that the evidence amply supported the trial court's finding that there was no substantial compliance with, among other provisions, former Civil Code § 2481 (now see Corp. Code § 15505 [ULPA]) because an abbreviation of defendant's surname appeared in the partnership name. The court noted that the statute provided that the surname of a limited partner must not appear in the partnership name, with exceptions not shown to exist in this case (96 Cal. App. 2d 986, 988) .

Liability for Acts Prior to Filing of Certificate of Limited Partnership. A person who makes a contribution to a purported limited partnership and in good faith believes that he or she has become a limited partner is liable to any third party who transacted business with the purported limited partnership before the certificate of partnership was filed and who reasonably believed that the person was a general partner at the time of the transaction (*Corp. [3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Liability for Acts Prior to Filing of Certificate of Limited Partnership

Under the California Revised Limited Partnership Act (CRLPA), a putative limited partner may be liable for obligations incurred prior to the time that a certificate of limited partnership was filed if the third person who transacted business with the partnership reasonably believed that the putative limited partner was a general partner at the time of the transaction [*Corp. [3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Partner Is Entitled to Settlement of All Partnership Accounts Upon Winding Up the Partnership Business

O'Flaherty v. Belgum (2004) 115 Cal. App. 4th 1044, 9 Cal. Rptr. 3d 286 involved the dissolution of a law partnership. After a dispute, one group of partners withdrew from the partnership and formed a new partnership (the "withdrawing partners"). The remaining partners filed an action for breach of contract, intentional violation of fiduciary duty, conversion, appointment of an impartial receiver, an accounting, and judicial dissolution of the original partnership. The withdrawing partners filed a cross-complaint for declaratory relief and appointment of a receiver, and the superior court appointed a receiver. The withdrawing partners thereafter filed a petition to compel arbitration pursuant to an arbitration clause in the partnership agreement. That clause provided that an arbitrator did not have the power to alter any terms of the agreement or grant any remedy which was either prohibited by the terms of the agreement or not available in a court of law. The trial court granted the petition for binding arbitration and dismissed the action, but retained jurisdiction to enforce the arbitration award and jurisdiction over the actions of the receiver. It later amended the order to provide that the matter was stayed pending arbitration. Another action was filed and assigned as a related action. After the liability phase of the arbitration began, the receiver notified the withdrawing partners' attorney that he was the only authorized representative of the original partnership and that he had not authorized anyone to represent the firm in the arbitration proceeding. Ultimately, the arbitrator found that because of the withdrawing partners' breaches of their contractual and fiduciary duties, they had forfeited all rights under the partnership agreement rendering "unnecessary" any calculations regarding the partnership's capital accounts. The arbitrator awarded the remaining partners various sums as damages against the withdrawing partners. The remaining partners filed a petition for confirmation of the award, and the withdrawing partners filed petitions to vacate. The receivership court terminated the receivership but refused to determine whether the partnership was properly represented in the arbitration. It approved the receiver's final account. The trial court entered judgment on the arbitration award in favor of the remaining partners, and the withdrawing partners appealed.

The appellate court reversed the judgment and ordered that the award be vacated, holding that because the arbitration clause in the partnership agreement expressly precluded the arbitrator from granting any remedy prohibited by the agreement or "not available in a court of law," the arbitrator exceeded his authority by declaring a forfeiture of the withdrawing partners' capital accounts. It held that the forfeiture was contrary to partnership law, the partnership agreement, and decisional law. The court first noted that under Corp. Code § 16807(b), a partner is entitled to a settlement of all partnership accounts upon winding up the partnership business. Among the various remedies in the UPA'94 with respect to a partner who wrongfully dissociates, there is no provision for forfeiture of a capital account (115 Cal. App. 4th 1044, 1056-1057) . The court next noted that the partnership agreement did not provide for forfeiture of a partner's capital account in the event the partner wrongfully withdrew from the firm or upon involuntary termination of a partner for cause. On the contrary, it provided for a return of capital, even to a wrongfully withdrawing partner (115 Cal. App. 4th 1044, 1057-1058) . The court further stated that California case law did not support forfeiture of a capital account of a partner whose wrong causes dissolution of a partnership (115 Cal. App. 4th 1044, 1058-1059 ; see also discussion in § 170.310[3]). By providing a remedy inconsistent with the provisions of the partnership agreement and specifically in contradiction to the partnership agreement provision that the arbitrator has no power to order a remedy prohibited by the agreement or not available in a court of law, the arbitrator in effect awarded a remedy expressly forbidden by the arbitration agreement (115 Cal. App. 4th 1044, 1061) .

For a complaint for partnership dissolution, accounting, and appointment of receiver by a partner, with related discussion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 406, Partnerships: Dissolution, § 406.60 (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Partner May Sue Other Partners for Legal or Equitable Relief, Including Dissolution and Accounting.

Corp. Code § 16405(b)(2) provides that a partner may maintain an action against the partnership or another partner for legal or equitable relief, with or without an accounting as to partnership business, to enforce the partner's rights under the law, including the partner's right to compel a dissolution and winding up of the partnership business.

Schnabel v. Lui (9th Cir. 2002) 302 F.3d 1023 , concerned a partnership formed to produce attractions for an amusement park in China. Several partners became disenchanted with the business arrangement and sued the other partners in federal court. Defendants' countersuit was filed in superior court and then removed to federal court, based on diversity jurisdiction, and the two suits were consolidated as the removed action was essentially a counterclaim to the claims originally brought in federal court. Defendants moved to dismiss for lack of subject matter jurisdiction and failure to join the partnership as an indispensable party. Any joinder of the partnership would destroy diversity jurisdiction. The trial court found that the partnership was not an indispensable party, because California law permits actions against general partners for claims arising from the partnership, and the partnership at issue had no separate name, assets, or contracts. Therefore, nonjoinder of the partnership would not prevent the court from according complete relief among the parties nor would it prejudice any party. The court found defendants liable to plaintiffs for breach of contract, fraud, and intentional interference. Defendants appealed, claiming that the district court abused its discretion in denying their motion to dismiss for failure to join the partnership as an indispensable party.

The court examined the standard for indispensable parties [Fed. Rule Civ. Proc. 19]. To find that a person who is not joined is "indispensable," the absent person must be deemed necessary as a "person to be joined if feasible." The Ninth Circuit stated that under California law [Corp. Code § 16405(b)], partners are permitted to maintain an action against the partnership or another partner for legal or equitable relief. Relief is available against another partner for an accounting, enforcement of rights under the partnership agreement, dissolution, and to enforce other rights of a partner arising under the code or for rights independent of the partnership agreement. Given the state law permitting plaintiff partners to sue defendant partners for breach of contract, dissolution, and accounting, the district court had rejected the argument that plaintiffs' claims stated injury only to the partnership. In addition, plaintiffs presented affirmative evidence that the partnership had no separate assets, and was not a party to any contracts in its own name. The district court therefore had held that complete relief could be afforded among existing parties without joinder of the partnership, and that the failure to join the partnership would not prejudice any party. The Ninth Circuit agreed that in light of the current California statute permitting suit against individual partners, and the finding that the partnership did not have its own assets, the district court's legal conclusion that the partnership need not be joined was correct (302 F.3d 1023, 1029-1031) .

_____ [Specify party, e.g., PLAINTIFF(S)] _____ [IS or ARE] ENTITLED TO REASONABLE COMPENSATION FOR SERVICES RENDERED IN WINDING UP THE BUSINESS OF THE PARTNERSHIP.

Partner's Right to Compensation. A partner is entitled to reasonable compensation for services rendered in winding up the partnership's business. The particular facts of the situation determine what is reasonable, and the burden is on the party claiming the compensation to establish his or her claim [Corp. Code § 16401(h) or former Corp. Code § 15018(f); Jacobson v. Wikholm (1946) 29 Cal. 2d 24, 29-32, 172 P.2d 878).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contentions that a partner is entitled to reasonable compensation for winding up the partnership's business. They may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of the proper compensation for completing the partnership's unfinished business. They also may be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should specify the unfinished business at issue, who completed the partnership business, and at what expense.

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities in § 170.140 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Partner's Right to Compensation

Corp. Code § 16401(h) provides that a partner is entitled to reasonable compensation for services rendered in winding up the partnership's business.

In Jacobson v. Wikholm (1946) 29 Cal. 2d 24, 172 P.2d 878 , the administratrix of the deceased partner sought an accounting from the surviving partner and claimed half the profits from the proceeds of a contract completed by defendant. The contract had been 20 percent completed at the date of death. Plaintiff contended defendant was not entitled to any compensation for his services in completing the contract. Judgment was for plaintiff, and defendant appealed. The California Supreme Court reversed. After noting the duty of a surviving partner to complete all executory contracts of the firm remaining in force after a partner's death, the Court said since the enactment of former Civ. Code § 2412(f) [now see Corp. Code § 16401(h) (UPA'94); see also former Corp. Code § 15018(f) (pre-'97 Act)], there is no distinction between services for merely winding up the partnership affairs and for those in performing executory contracts of the firm. Despite the fact that the relation is fiduciary, compensation is allowable (29 Cal. 2d 24, 29) . The amount of compensation is a question of the particular skill required and the amount of time devoted as well as of the portion of profits attributable to decedent's capital and the portion attributable to the survivor's skill and labor (29 Cal. 2d 24, 30-31) . The burden is on the party claiming the compensation to prove its worth (29 Cal. 2d 24, 32) .

[1] FORM Supporting Contention That Noncompetition Agreement Is Enforceable Against Withdrawn Partner [Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 16601, 16602]

DEFENDANT ENTERED INTO A NONCOMPETITION AGREEMENT _____ [UPON or IN ANTICIPATION OF] THE [DISSOLUTION OF THE PARTNERSHIP or DISSOCIATION FROM THE PARTNERSHIP or SALE OR OTHER DISPOSITION OF THE PARTNER'S INTEREST], AND DEFENDANT IS BOUND BY THAT AGREEMENT.

[EITHER]

A. Partners May Make Noncompetition Agreements Anticipating Dissolution of Their Partnership or Dissociation of a Partner. Any partner upon or in anticipation of a dissolution of the partnership, or dissociation of the partner from the partnership, may agree that he or she will not carry on a similar business within a specified geographic area where the partnership business has been transacted, as long as any other member of the partnership, or any person deriving title to the business or its goodwill from any such other member of the partnership, carries on a like business therein (Bus. & Prof. Code § 16602).

[OR]

A. Partners May Make Noncompetition Agreements Anticipating Sale of Their Interests in the Partnership. Any person who sells the goodwill of a business, or any owner of a business entity selling or otherwise disposing of all of his or her ownership interest in the business entity, or any owner of a business entity that sells (1) all or substantially all of its operating assets together with the goodwill of the business entity, (2) all or substantially all of the operating assets of a division or a subsidiary of the business entity, together with the goodwill of that division or subsidiary, or (3) all of the ownership interest of any subsidiary, may agree with the buyer to refrain from carrying on a similar business within a specified geographic area in which the business so sold, or that of the business entity, division or subsidiary, has been carried on, as long as the buyer or any person deriving title to the goodwill or ownership interest from the buyer, carries on a like business therein (Bus. & Prof. Code § 16601).

B. Professionals in Partnership May Make Enforceable Noncompetition Agreements. Business & Professions Code Section 16602 speaks in general terms, providing that "any partner" may agree not to compete with members of the partnership upon dissolution. This statutory language may be relied on in enforcing covenants not to compete among partners practicing in the professions (Howard v. Babcock (1993) 6 Cal. 4th 409, 416, 417, 25 Cal. Rptr. 2d 80, 863 P.2d 150 ; Swenson v. File (1970) 3 Cal. 3d 389, 393, 90 Cal. Rptr. 580, 475 P.2d 852 ; South Bay Radiology Medical Associates v. Asher (1990) 220 Cal. App. 3d 1074, 269 Cal. Rptr. 15).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of the contention that a noncompetition agreement is enforceable against a withdrawn partner. The governing statute is applicable to partners in any partnership [see Bus. & Prof. Code § 16602; Howard v. Babcock (1993) 6 Cal. 4th 409, 417, 25 Cal. Rptr. 2d 80, 863 P.2d 150] . This form includes provisions for use when the withdrawn partner is an accountant or a physician or an attorney, as well as a general provision for use when the withdrawn partner is some other professional.

Bus. & Prof. Code § 16602, which previously governed noncompetition agreements upon dissolution of the partnership, dissociation of the partner from the partnership, or sale or other disposition of the partner's interest in a partnership, was amended in 2002 to govern noncompetition agreements in the context of a dissolution or dissociation only [see Stats. 2002, ch. 179, § 2]. Bus. & Prof. Code § 16601, which previously governed noncompetition agreements only in the context of the sale of a corporation's goodwill or shares, was amended to govern sales by any owner of a "business entity," a term that now includes any partnership (including a limited partnership or limited liability partnership), limited liability company (including a series of a limited liability company formed under the laws of a jurisdiction that recognizes such a series), or corporation [see Stats. 2002, ch. 179, § 1; Stats. 2006, ch. 495, § 1].

This form may be combined with other forms pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of the enforceability of a noncompetition agreement between partners--for example, supporting or opposing a petition for writ of mandate or a petition for confirmation of an arbitration award. This form also may be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Attorneys in Partnership May Make Enforceable Noncompetition Agreements

In Howard v. Babcock (1993) 6 Cal. 4th 409, 25 Cal. Rptr. 2d 80, 863 P.2d 150 , the parties were partners in a law firm. Their partnership agreement contained a provision that if a withdrawn partner were to practice law in a specified geographical area for a specified period after withdrawal from the firm, that partner would forfeit all withdrawal benefits (amounting, mainly, to a payment equal to the post-withdrawal year's net profit interest) and would receive only the partner's capital interest. The plaintiffs withdrew and started a competing firm. The defendants refused to pay any withdrawal benefits, citing the noncompetition provision in the partnership agreement, and only tendered payment of the withdrawn partners' capital interests. In the ensuing action, the plaintiffs sought a declaration that the noncompetition provision was not enforceable, while the defendants asserted that the provision was authorized by Bus. & Prof. Code § 16602. The trial court ruled that the provision was valid and enforceable.

The court of appeal held that under the Rules of Professional Conduct, Bus. & Prof. Code § 16602 does not apply to attorneys, who therefore may not make noncompetition agreements.

The California Supreme Court concluded "that an agreement among law partners imposing a reasonable toll on departing partners who compete with the firm is enforceable" (6 Cal. 4th 409, 412) . Therefore, the court reversed and ordered remand to the trial court for a determination of whether the noncompetition agreement was reasonable. With respect to the applicability of Bus. & Prof. Code § 16602, the Court concluded that the section "speaks in general terms, providing that 'any partner' may agree not to compete with members of the partnership upon dissolution. Nothing in its language conveys an exception to its terms for lawyers, nor have the parties or amicus curiae directed us to any legislative history indicating that the statute was intended to apply to all partners except those who happened to be lawyers" (6 Cal. 4th 409, 417) . "Accordingly, finding no ambiguity in the terms of the statute, and finding no demonstrated legislative intent to create a silent exception for lawyers, ... we conclude that the statute applies to partners in law firms" (6 Cal. 4th 409, 418) . On the asserted conflict between the statute and the Rules of Professional conduct, the court agreed with the court in Haight, Brown & Bonesteel v. Superior Court (1991) 234 Cal. App. 3d 963, 285 Cal. Rptr. 845 , discussed below, that an agreement between law partners that a reasonable cost will be assessed for competition is consistent with Rule 1-500" (6 Cal. 4th 409, 419) , and stated that the Haight court's construction of the rule is consistent with Bus. & Prof. Code § 16602, permitting agreements between partners restricting competition (6 Cal. 4th 409, 420) .

In Haight, Brown & Bonesteel v. Superior Court (1991) 234 Cal. App. 3d 963, 285 Cal. Rptr. 845 , the real parties in interest were withdrawn partners who started a competing law firm. The partnership agreement contained a provision that if a withdrawn partner were to practice law in a specified geographical area for a specified period after withdrawal from the firm, that partner would forfeit all withdrawal benefits (but, under another provision, would receive the partner's capital interest). The provision stated the parties' intent specifically to take advantage of Bus. & Prof. Code § 16602. In the partnership's action for a declaration of the parties' rights and duties under the noncompetition provision, the trial court granted the withdrawn partners' motion for judgment on the pleadings, on the ground that the noncompetition provision was a forfeiture provision as a matter of law, and therefore it was unenforceable.

The appellate court granted the partnership's petition for a writ of mandate directing the trial court to vacate its order. The court cited Bus. & Prof. Code § 16602, and first rejected the argument that under the Rules of Professional Conduct, lawyers may not make noncompetition agreements. The court stated: "In our opinion, ... [Rule 1-500] simply provides that an attorney may not enter into an agreement to refrain altogether from the practice of law. The rule does not, however, prohibit a withdrawing partner from agreeing to compensate his former partners in the event he chooses to represent clients previously represented by the firm from which he has withdrawn" (234 Cal. App. 3d 963, 969) . The court then also rejected the argument that the provision in question was a forfeiture provision as a matter of law. Summarizing its opinion, the court stated: "We find no reason to treat attorneys any differently from professionals such as physicians or certified public accountants, for example, by holding that lawyers may not enter into noncompetition agreements in accordance with section 16602" (234 Cal. App. 3d 963, 971) .

[b] Physicians in Partnership May Make Enforceable Noncompetition Agreements

In South Bay Radiology Medical Associates v. Asher (1990) 220 Cal. App. 3d 1074, 269 Cal. Rptr. 15 , the respondent was a radiologist who withdrew from a medical partnership. The partnership agreement contained a provision binding each partner not to engage in the private practice of medicine in a specified geographical area for a specified period after withdrawal from the partnership, except with the consent of the partnership. A dispute over the value of the respondent's interest was settled by an arbitrator, who ruled against the respondent's contention that the noncompetition agreement was not enforceable under Bus. & Prof. Code § 16602 without the payment of compensation for goodwill. In the partnership's proceeding for confirmation of the arbitrator's award, the respondent opposed the petition on the same ground that the arbitrator had rejected. The trial court confirmed the award.

The appellate court affirmed. The court concluded that the covenant not to compete was proper under Bus. & Prof. Code § 16602. Contrary to the radiologist's argument, the court found nothing on the face of Bus. & Prof. Code § 16602 or its history which requires that a withdrawing partner be compensated for the partnership's goodwill (220 Cal. App. 3d 1074, 1080) . Thus, the court concluded that the remaining partners were free under Bus. & Prof. Code § 16602 both to impose a covenant not to compete on each other and to refrain from paying a withdrawing partner any amount for the partnership's goodwill (220 Cal. App. 3d 1074, 1084) .

[c] Accountants in Partnership May Make Enforceable Noncompetition Agreements

In Swenson v. File (1970) 3 Cal. 3d 389, 90 Cal. Rptr. 580, 475 P.2d 852 , the parties were former partners in an accounting firm in Los Angeles County. Their partnership agreement contained a covenant binding each partner not to compete with the partnership in a specified geographical area for a specified period after withdrawal from the firm. The defendant withdrew and opened an accounting practice in Los Angeles County but not in the same two cities where the firm's offices were located. In the partners' action based on alleged breach of the covenant not to compete, the trial court entered judgment for the defendant. The trial court held that the parties were subject to Bus. & Prof. Code § 16602 as it existed before a 1961 amendment. The applicable version authorized agreements to prevent competition in the same city or town, but not elsewhere, where the partnership business was transacted.

The California Supreme Court affirmed. On appeal the principal issue was which version of Bus. & Prof. Code § 16602 governed the parties' rights under the covenant not to compete. The court agreed with defendant's and the trial court's position that the former version of Bus. & Prof. Code § 16602 governed the rights of the parties under the revised partnership agreement since the agreement was executed prior to the amendment of that section (3 Cal. 3d 389, 392-393) .

AFTER WRONGFUL REPUDIATION OF THE PARTNERSHIP AGREEMENT BY DEFENDANT(S), _____ [specify party, e.g., PLAINTIFF(S)] _____ [IS or ARE] ENTITLED TO DISSOLUTION BY SALE OF THE PARTNERSHIP ASSETS AND DISTRIBUTION OF THE PROCEEDS.

After Wrongful Repudiation of the Partnership Agreement, the Aggrieved Partner May Elect to Have the Partnership Dissolved by Sale of the Partnership Assets. After wrongful repudiation of a partnership agreement, the aggrieved partner is not required to accept an award of damages, but may elect instead to have the partnership dissolved by sale of the partnership assets and distribution of the proceeds (Corp. Code §§ 16801(5), 16807; Navarro v. Perron (2004) 122 Cal. App. 4th 797, 799).

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that an aggrieved partner is not required to accept an award of damages, but may elect to have the partnership dissolved by sale of the partnership assets and distribution of the proceeds. They may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue of the appropriate defendant. They may be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Aggrieved Partner May Elect Dissolution Rather than Damages

In Navarro v. Perron (2004) 122 Cal. App. 4th 797, 10 Cal. Rptr. 3d 198 , plaintiff and defendants formed a partnership to purchase a duplex. Plaintiff owned 50 percent and defendants owned the other half. The partners purchased the premises and contributed equal amounts of cash. Because plaintiff had credit problems, defendants alone signed the note and took title to the property. Eventually, defendants repudiated the partnership, and plaintiff sued for breach of contract and specific performance. He requested that the court order defendants to execute a deed conveying to him an undivided 50 percent interest in the property. Defendants cross-complained for slander of title, abuse of process, trespass, and declaratory relief. They also filed an unlawful detainer action. Both parties brought actions for injunctions to prohibit harassment. All the actions were consolidated for trial. The trial court found an enforceable partnership agreement and ruled against the defendants on their cross-complaint and unlawful detainer action. In its tentative statement of decision, the trial court stated that it would not be just or reasonable to order defendants to execute a deed granting plaintiff 50 percent of the property for two reasons: (1) transfer might trigger the trust deed's due on sale clause; and (2) deterioration in the parties' relationship made common ownership impossible. The court found the value of the property to be $292,000, and gave defendants until May 1, 2002, to purchase plaintiff's share. If defendants did not exercise their right, then plaintiff would have the right to purchase their interest until June 30, 2002. If neither party exercised the right to purchase, the property would be put on the market for sale. Neither party exercised the option to purchase. Plaintiff asked the trial court to place the property on the market. Instead, the trial court issued another tentative statement of decision with a different remedy. The court awarded plaintiff damages in the amount of $38,750, leaving title to the property to defendants. Plaintiff objected to the damages as inadequate on the ground, among others, that the value of the property had increased since trial. The trial court issued another statement of decision increasing the amount of damages awarded. It stated that it had considered a judicial dissolution of the partnership, but that would require a sale of the property and a distribution of the net proceeds. The court decided to award damages instead because of defendants' desire to retain the property as their residence and because plaintiff considered the property as a relatively short term investment (122 Cal. App. 4th 797, 799-800) .

Plaintiff appealed, contending that the trial court erred in awarding an arbitrary amount of damages, and that it should have dissolved the partnership and ordered the property sold on the open market. In the alternative, plaintiff claimed he should have been given the right to purchase defendants' interest based on the court's evaluation. The appellate court held that the trial court could not force plaintiff to accept an award of damages rather than a dissolution of the partnership and a sale of the premises. Citing Corp. Code § 16801(5)(C) as applicable, the court found that when the trial court has determined that it is not reasonably practical to carry on the partnership, the court has no discretion to deny a partner's application to dissolve it. Plaintiff's request that the property be sold was the equivalent of an application to dissolve the partnership (122 Cal. App. 4th 797, 801-802) . Furthermore, the court could not dissolve the partnership by awarding defendants the property and plaintiff damages, as Corp. Code § 16402 provides that a partner has no right to receive a distribution in kind. A judgment awarding plaintiff damages and defendants possession of the property would be equivalent to granting defendants a right to distribution in kind. Citing Corp. Code § 16807(a), the court held that the property must be sold, the proceeds applied to discharge the partnership's obligations to creditors, and any surplus paid in cash to the partners in accordance with their rights to distributions (122 Cal. App. 4th 797, 802) . Finally, the court stated that merely because the non-breaching partner may sue for damages without seeking dissolution does not mean that the partner is required to do so. The party who is wronged has the election of remedies (122 Cal. App. 4th 797, 802) . The court therefore reversed the judgment with instructions to order the property sold, the proceeds applied to pay the obligations of the partnership, and any surplus distributed to the partners in cash (122 Cal. App. 4th 797, 803) .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Forfeiture Provision Eliminates Right to Settlement of Accounts

In B.K.K. Co. v. Schultz (1970) 7 Cal. App. 3d 786, 86 Cal. Rptr. 760 , the plaintiff leased a ranch to defendant and also sold him livestock and equipment for use on the ranch. After defendant abandoned the ranch, taking the livestock and equipment with him, plaintiff sued for breach of the lease and sales agreement. Defendant filed a cross-complaint seeking an accounting with respect to a business with plaintiff in which defendant allegedly held a one-third interest. The trial court entered judgment for the plaintiff on the complaint, and on the cross-complaint found that defendant did not hold any interest in the business and was not entitled to an accounting.

The appellate court reversed. With respect to the cross-complaint, the court stated that the parties had formed an agreement making them joint venturers or partners (7 Cal. App. 3d 786, 796) . Although the trial court had found that defendant did not contribute equally in the business, the most that could be derived from this finding was that defendant breached the agreement in some manner. The appellate court stated that a breach of the partnership agreement does not necessarily result in a forfeiture of the partner's interest or deprive him or her of the right to an accounting. Citing former Corp. Code § 15038, it stated that when a partner wrongfully withdraws, that partner is entitled to the value of his or her partnership interest, less any damages caused by that partner. Defendant had requested the trial court to make explicit findings as to the terms of the joint venture agreement, the performance of defendant under that agreement, the existence of any subsequent agreement among the parties, and the property owned by the business and the disposition of it. All those requests were refused. The appellate court stated that without such findings, it had no way of determining whether defendant was refused an accounting on some proper factual ground, or whether it was upon some erroneous interpretation of the law (7 Cal. App. 3d 786, 797) . The court therefore reversed the judgment and remanded the case to superior court to make new findings of fact and conclusions of law determining the nature and extent of the parties' interests in the business, and requiring an accounting with respect to that interest if appropriate (7 Cal. App. 3d 786, 797) .

The facts and procedural background of O'Flaherty v. Belgum (2004) 115 Cal. App. 4th 1044, 9 Cal. Rptr. 3d 286 are discussed in § 170.300[3]. In citing B.K.K. Co. v. Schultz (1970) 7 Cal. App. 3d 786, 86 Cal. Rptr. 760 , discussed above, it quoted the court's statement that "a breach of the partnership agreement does not necessarily result in a forfeiture of the partner's interest or deprive him of his right to an accounting." The appellate court said that the B.K.K. court's use of the phrase "does not necessarily" alluded to the fact that the partnership agreement itself might include a forfeiture provision and that the trial court might properly refuse an accounting on that basis (15 Cal. App. 4th 1044, 1058) .

PART I. INTRODUCTION

17-171 California Points & Authorities § 171.01

§ 171.01 Scope of Chapter

This chapter contains memoranda of points and authorities for use in proceedings under the Uniform Parentage Act (UPA) [Fam. Code § 7600 et seq.]. It contains forms of points and authorities supporting a demurrer to a complaint because of improper joinder [see § 171.20], and a motion to quash service of summons because of lack of personal jurisdiction [see § 171.21]. It also contains forms for use in an action by a presumed father to declare the nonexistence of the father-child relationship because the action was not brought within a reasonable time [see §§ 171.22, 171.23].

In addition, the chapter contains points and authorities for use in a UPA action to support [see § 171.24] and oppose [see § 171.37] a motion for a pendente lite order for support, medical and hospital expenses, and attorney's fees. It also contains forms supporting [see §§ 171.25, 171.26] and opposing [see §§ 171.38 -171.41] the contention that a paternity action is barred by the presumption of Fam. Code § 7540 that a child born to a married woman who was cohabiting with her husband is conclusively the child of the marriage, along with a form opposing the contention that a paternity judgment should be set aside on equitable grounds [see § 171.42]. Additionally, this chapter includes points and authorities supporting the contention that a paternity determination is barred by the presumption of Fam. Code § 7611(a), that the husband of a woman who bears a child during marriage or within 300 days after the termination of that marriage is the father of the child [see § 171.33]. Further, this chapter contains points and authorities supporting the contention that paternity of a child is conclusive as to a married person who consents to his spouse's artificial insemination or provides by contract for insemination of a third party surrogate mother with fertilized ovum from unrelated parties [see § 171.34]. Also included are points and authorities in support of the contention that the presumption of parentage arising from receiving a child into the home and holding out the child as one's own [Fam. Code § 7611(d)] is not necessarily rebutted by an admission of no biological connection to the child when the proceeding is not an "appropriate action" [see § 171.35].

It also includes a motion for an order requiring the mother, child, alleged father, and men other than the alleged father to submit to blood or other genetic tests [see § 171.27], to support a motion requiring the county to pay the expenses of blood or other genetic tests [see § 171.28], to support a motion for summary judgment because a defendant has been excluded as a possible father by these tests [see § 171.29], to support a motion for court-appointed counsel because the defendant is indigent [see § 171.30], and to support a demurrer to answer because the answer sets up the defense of laches or the statute of limitations [see § 171.31].

This chapter also contains a memorandum of points and authorities in support of motion to vacate and set aside a judgment entered into by stipulation without the defendant's knowing or intelligent waiver of the right to a hearing on the issues of paternity and ability to support [see § 171.32].

PART I. INTRODUCTION

17-171 California Points & Authorities § 171.02

§ 171.02 Governing Statutes

An action to establish paternity or to declare the nonexistence of a father-child relationship may be brought under the Uniform Parentage Act [Fam. Code § 7600 et seq.]. A paternity action may also be brought by the local child support agency under Fam. Code § 17400 et seq.

Fam. Code § 7540 establishes a presumption, conclusive toward some persons and rebuttable by others under Fam. Code § 7541, that a child is the issue of a marriage if the wife is cohabiting with her husband [see § 171.25]. Fam. Code § 7570 et seq. establishes a presumption of paternity by voluntary declaration.

Child support orders in paternity actions are authorized by Fam. Code § 7637, under the standards of the statewide uniform child support guideline, Fam. Code § 4055. Blood and other genetic tests are governed by the Uniform Act on Blood Tests to Determine Paternity [Fam. Code § 7550 et seq.].

CHAPTER 171 PATERNITY
PART I. INTRODUCTION

17-171 California Points & Authorities § 171.03

§ 171.03 Actions to Establish Paternity

[1] Elimination of Concept of Illegitimacy

In 1976, the Uniform Parentage Act [Fam. Code § 7600 et seq.] became effective in California to establish a procedure for the determination of the existence or nonexistence of the parent and child relationship. The UPA abandoned the prior concept of illegitimacy and replaced it with certain presumptions that a man is the father of a child [see Fam. Code § 7611]. In a paternity action, a presumption under Fam. Code § 7611 that a particular man is the child's father is a rebuttable presumption affecting the burden of proof and may be rebutted in an appropriate action only by clear and convincing evidence [Fam. Code § 7612(a)]. In other areas of the law in which rights flow from the parent-child relationship, the effect was to shift the legal focus off of the marital status of a child's parents. Under the UPA, and the other bodies of law that rely on it, the issue is not whether a child's parents were married, but whether it has been or can be established that a particular man is the presumed father of a particular child [see, e.g., Prob. Code § 6453 (right of child as intestate heir depends on presumptions of paternity)].

[2] When Parentage Issue May Arise

The issue of parentage may arise in a number of legal actions. These include:

- An action to declare the existence or nonexistence of the parent-child relationship under the Uniform Parentage Act [see Fam. Code § 7630].

- An action brought by a local child support agency to establish paternity and a child support obligation [see Fam. Code § 17400 et seq.].

- An action for child support under Fam. Code § 4000.

- A proceeding to determine heirship under Prob. Code §§ 6450-6455, 11700 [see Estate of Chambers (2009) 175 Cal. App. 4th 891, 895-897, 96 Cal. Rptr. 3d 651 (parent-child relationship must be shown by clear and convincing evidence, not preponderance of evidence; higher burden of proof is intended to discourage dubious paternity claims made after man's death for sole purpose of inheritance);

Estate of Burden (2007) 146 Cal. App. 4th 1021, 1029-1031, 53 Cal. Rptr. 3d 390 (Prob. Code § 6453(b)(2), which permits child born out of wedlock to establish father-child relationship for intestate succession purposes by providing clear and convincing evidence that father has openly held out child as his own, is satisfied by evidence of father's acknowledgments of child as his own during his lifetime)].

- A juvenile court proceeding under Welf. & Inst. Code § 300 et seq. [see Welf. & Inst. Code § 903.41(b)(2)].

- A habeas corpus proceeding seeking custody of a child [see In re Reyna (1976) 55 Cal. App. 3d 288, 295, 126 Cal. Rptr. 138] .

- An adoption proceeding [see Fam. Code §§ 7660 et seq., 8604].

- A guardianship proceeding [see Prob. Code §§ 1500, 1514].

- A Uniform Interstate Family Support Act proceeding [see Fam. Code § 4900 et seq.].

- A criminal prosecution for failure to support a child [Penal Code § 270].

- A proceeding for dissolution of marriage, legal separation or nullity of marriage [see In re Marriage of Groner (1972) 23 Cal. App. 3d 115, 116-117, 99 Cal. Rptr. 765 ; see also Fam. Code § 2330.1].

- A proceeding under the Domestic Violence Prevention Act [see Fam. Code § 6200 et seq.] that includes the issuance of orders regarding custody and visitation of minor children [see Fam. Code § 6323(a) (court may make ex parte orders regarding temporary custody and visitation of minor children when party establishes parent-child relationship); Gonzalez v. Munoz (2007) 156 Cal. App. 4th 413, 422-423, 67 Cal. Rptr. 3d 317 (when court has issued ex parte custody and visitation orders at request of one party, it must elicit evidence under Fam. Code § 6340(a) as to whether other party can demonstrate parent-child relationship with minor children and, if so, whether earlier custody and visitation orders should be modified to ensure mutual safety of children and party having custody)].

[3] Establishment of Relationship

The parent and child relationship may be established as follows [Fam. Code § 7610]:

- Between a child and the natural mother by proof of her having given birth to the child or under the Uniform Parentage Act.

- Between a child and the natural father under the Uniform Parentage Act.

- Between a child and an adoptive parent by proof of adoption [see Fam. Code § 8616].

[4] Standing to Bring Parentage Action and Presumptions of Paternity

A child, the child's natural mother, a man presumed to be the child's father under Fam. Code § 7611(a)-(c), an adoption agency to whom the child has been relinquished, or a prospective adoptive parent of the child may bring an action under the Uniform Parentage Act as follows:

- At any time for the purpose of declaring the existence of the father and child relationship presumed under Fam. Code § 7611(a)-(c) [Fam. Code § 7630(a)(1)].

- For the purpose of declaring the nonexistence of the father and child relationship presumed under Fam. Code § 7611(a)-(c) only if the action is brought within a reasonable time after obtaining knowledge of relevant facts [Fam. Code § 7630(a)(2)].

The child's mother has standing to claim that a man is the child's presumed father under Fam. Code § 7611(c) or (d), even if the man is not a party to the action [Gabriel P. v. Suedi D. (2006) 141 Cal. App. 4th 850, 862, 46 Cal. Rptr. 3d 437] . A man who is not the child's presumed father through marriage lacks standing to bring a paternity action to challenge the presumed father status of the birth mother's husband under Fam. Code § 7611(c) [Gabriel P. v. Suedi D. (2006) 141 Cal. App. 4th 850, 858, 46 Cal. Rptr. 3d 437] . However, a man is entitled to establish his paternity if the birth mother precluded him from becoming a presumed father and he acted as promptly as was reasonably possible to establish his paternity [In re J.L. (2008) 159 Cal. App. 4th 1010, 1023-1025, 72 Cal. Rptr. 3d 27 ; Gabriel P. v. Suedi D. (2006) 141 Cal. App. 4th 850, 859-860, 46 Cal. Rptr. 3d 437] .

Any interested party may bring an action at any time for the purpose of determining the existence or nonexistence of the father-child relationship presumed under Fam. Code § 7611(d) [Fam. Code § 7630(b); see Kevin Q. v. Lauren W. (2009) 175 Cal. App. 4th 1119, 1133, 95 Cal. Rptr. 3d 477 (there are no time limits or standing requirements for challenging or asserting Fam. Code § 7611(d) presumption); Said v. Jegan (2007) 146 Cal. App. 4th 1375, 1382-1385, 53 Cal. Rptr. 3d 661 (man's status as alleged father, because he was named as father on child's birth certificate, gave him standing to bring action to determine nonexistence of paternity); Librers v. Black (2005) 129 Cal. App. 4th 114, 124-127, 28 Cal. Rptr. 3d 188 (mother's live-in boyfriend had standing under Fam. Code § 7630 to bring paternity proceeding, based on presumption that he was child's natural father, which was established by his receipt of child into his home and his openly holding her out as his natural child)]. A broad class of men, including alleged fathers, can bring an action to establish paternity under this provision when the claim is based on the presumed father status that is obtained by receiving the child into his home and openly acknowledging paternity [Miller v. Miller (1998) 64 Cal. App. 4th 111, 116-117, 74 Cal. Rptr. 2d 797 (man who was child's biological father and who had received child into his home and held her out as his own had standing to pursue paternity claim under Fam. Code § 7611(d) even though child's mother was married to another man at time child was conceived and born); but see Lisa I. v. Superior Court (2005) 133 Cal. App. 4th 605, 34 Cal. Rptr. 3d 927 (man's claim that he is child's biological father is insufficient to give him statutory standing under Fam. Code § 7630 to establish his paternity when he does not qualify as a presumed father under any provision of Fam. Code § 7611)].

Any interested party may also bring an action at any time for the purpose of determining the existence or nonexistence of the mother--child relationship presumed under Fam. Code § 7611(d) [see Elisa B. v. Superior Court (2005) 37 Cal. 4th 108, 113, 33 Cal. Rptr. 3d 46, 117 P.3d 660 (district attorney brought action to establish that former lesbian partner of child's birth mother was child's presumed mother and thus obligated to pay support for child); Charisma R. v. Kristina S. (2009) 175 Cal. App. 4th 361, 367-377, 96 Cal. Rptr. 3d 26 ; Charisma R. v. Kristina S. (2006) 140 Cal. App. 4th 301, 307-308, 44 Cal. Rptr. 3d 332 (registered domestic partner of birth mother is entitled to bring petition to establish parental relationship with child born to birth mother by artificial insemination from anonymous donor)]. For example, a child is necessarily an interested party in a proceeding to determine who his or her biological mother is and may bring an action to adjudicate his or her parentage [Wynn v. Superior Court (2009) 176 Cal. App. 4th 346, 350, 353-355, 98 Cal. Rptr. 3d 86] . A woman who had an intimate relationship with the father of minor children, however, does not have standing to join the parents' action under the UPA to seek custody and visitation rights with respect to the children as a presumed or de facto mother, if the parental rights of the natural mother have not been terminated [Scott v. Superior Court (2009) 171 Cal. App. 4th 540, 544-547, 89 Cal. Rptr. 3d 843 (in same-sex domestic partner relationship, child may have two natural mothers; in heterosexual relationship, there can be only one mother)].

Although more than one individual may fulfill the statutory criteria that give rise to a presumption of paternity under Fam. Code § 7611, there can be only one presumed father [In re Jesusa V. (2004) 32 Cal. 4th 588, 603, 10 Cal. Rptr.

3d 205, 85 P.3d 2] . Competing presumptions of paternity must be reconciled under Fam. Code § 7612(b), which provides that when two or more presumptions arise under Fam. Code § 7610 or Fam. Code § 7611 that conflict with each other, or if the presumption under Fam. Code § 7611 conflicts with a claim under Fam. Code § 7610, the presumption which on the facts is founded on the weightier considerations of policy and logic controls. These presumptions are not affected by whether or not the man is the child's biological father. Thus, a man who is not the child's biological father may still be the child's presumed father [In re Nicholas H. (2002) 28 Cal. 4th 56, 58-59, 63-65, 120 Cal. Rptr. 2d 126, 43 P.3d 932 (familial relationship between nonbiological father and child, resulting from years of living together in ostensible parent-child relationship, is "considerably more palpable" than relationship based only on biology and should not be lightly dissolved)]; and a man who is the child's biological father may not necessarily defeat another man's claim to be the child's presumed father [In re A.A. (2003) 114 Cal. App. 4th 771, 788-789, 7 Cal. Rptr. 3d 755] . Courts are not bound to accord determinative weight to biology, but must weigh all relevant factors in determining which of two rebuttably presumed fathers will qualify as the child's presumed father [In re Jesusa V. (2004) 32 Cal. 4th 588, 607-608, 10 Cal. Rptr. 3d 205, 85 P.3d 2 (upholding award of presumed father status to child's stepfather under Fam. Code § 7611(d), rather than biological father under Fam. Code § 7611(a), finding that this award best comported with state's interest in preserving integrity of family and child's welfare); Librers v. Black (2005) 129 Cal. App. 4th 114, 123, 28 Cal. Rptr. 3d 188 (after Jesusa V. it is absolutely clear that biology is not determinative factor in resolving paternity disputes under Uniform Parentage Act)].

An action to determine the existence of the father and child relationship with respect to a child who has no presumed father under Fam. Code § 7611 or whose presumed father is deceased may be brought by the child or a personal representative of the child, the California Department of Child Support Services, the mother or the personal representative or a parent of the mother if the mother has died or is a minor, a man alleged or alleging himself to be the father, or the personal representative or a parent of the alleged father if the alleged father has died or is a minor [Fam. Code § 7630(c)]. The action must be consolidated with a proceeding under Fam. Code § 7662. The parental rights of the alleged natural father must be determined as set forth in Fam. Code § 7664 [Fam. Code § 7630(d)(2)].

If any prospective adoptive parent who has physical custody of the child, or any licensed California adoption agency that has legal custody of the child, has not been joined as a party to an action to determine the existence of a father-child relationship, or an action for custody by the alleged natural father, the court must join the prospective adoptive parent or licensed California adoption agency as a party on application or on its own motion, without the necessity of a motion for joinder. A joined party is not required to pay a fee in connection with this action [Fam. Code § 7630(e)(1)].

If a man brings an action to determine paternity and custody of a child who he has reason to believe is in the physical or legal custody of an adoption agency, or of one or more persons other than the child's mother who are prospective adoptive parents, then he must serve his entire pleading on and give notice of all proceedings to the adoption agency or the prospective adoptive parents, or both [Fam. Code § 7630(e)(2)].

A party to an assisted reproductive agreement may bring an action at any time to establish a parent-child relationship consistent with the intent expressed in that agreement [Fam. Code § 7630(f)]. For purposes of this provision, an "assisted reproduction agreement" means a written contract that includes a person who intends to be the legal parent of a child or children born through assisted reproduction and that defines the terms of the relationship between the parties to the contract [Fam. Code § 7606(b)].

A local child support agency may also bring an action under the Uniform Parentage Act in any appropriate case [Fam. Code § 7634(a)]. However, county paternity proceedings are now brought under special federally mandated provisions of the Family Code that require establishment of paternity and support orders, and for reimbursement by noncustodial parents of public assistance payments made for a child's benefit [see Fam. Code § 17400 et seq.; see also Fam. Code § 7558].

A UPA action may be brought before the birth of the child [Fam. Code § 7633]. An order or judgment may be entered in that action before the child's birth, but enforcement of that order or judgment is stayed until the child's birth [Fam. Code § 7633]. And an agreement between an alleged or presumed father and the mother or child does not bar a UPA action [Fam. Code § 7632].

§ 171.04 Orders Under UPA Action

A court in a Uniform Parentage Act proceeding may order pendente lite custody or visitation orders [Fam. Code § 7604; see Fam. Code § 3020 et seq. (custody orders under Family Code)]. Pendente lite child support may also be ordered, although there is no express statutory authority for such an order [see Thomas B. v. Superior Court (1985) 175 Cal. App. 3d 255, 258-259, 265, 220 Cal. Rptr. 577 ; § 171.24]. In such a case, the motion for temporary support cannot be made until the plaintiff has made aprima facie showing of paternity [County of Santa Clara v. Perry (1998) 18 Cal. 4th 435, 445, 75 Cal. Rptr. 2d 738, 956 P.2d 1191] . Attorney's fees and other costs may be ordered at any time [see Fam. Code § 7640].

In addition to the contents required by Code Civ. Proc. § 412.30, in a proceeding under the Uniform Parentage Act the summons must contain a temporary restraining order prohibiting all parties, without the prior written consent of the other party or a court order, from removing from the state any minor child for whom the proceeding seeks to establish a parent and child relationship [Fam. Code § 7700]. Under this provision, a parent may not remove the child from the state once the petition has been filed, without a court order or the written permission of the other party; but it does not provide that a child who is already residing in another state when the petition is filed must be returned to California [Sarah B. v. Floyd B. (2008) 159 Cal. App. 4th 938, 944, 71 Cal. Rptr. 3d 923].

The judgment may contain any other provision directed against the appropriate party to the proceeding, concerning the duty of support, the custody and guardianship of the child, visitation privileges with the child, the furnishing of bond or other security for the payment of the judgment, or any other matter in the best interest of the child. It may direct the father to pay the reasonable expenses of the mother's pregnancy and confinement [Fam. Code § 7637].

Generally, a supporting or opposing memorandum of points and authorities may not exceed 15 pages, or, in the case of a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication, 20 pages. A reply or closing memorandum may not exceed 10 pages [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1113(d)]. Any party desiring to file a longer memorandum must obtain leave of court [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1113(e)]. This is mentioned for guidance only, because it appears that, except for discovery proceedings, the general civil law and motion rules do not technically apply to causes arising under the Family Code [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 3.1100, 3.1103(a)(1)]. For further discussion of the page limitations under Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1113, and of other basic format requirements of memoranda of points and authorities, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs, § 1.05.

THERE IS A DEFECT OR MISJOINDER OF PARTIES IN THE PLAINTIFF'S ACTION TO ESTABLISH PATERNITY BECAUSE PLAINTIFF HAS FAILED TO JOIN THE CHILD, WHO, BEING OVER 12 YEARS OF AGE, IS AN INDISPENSABLE PARTY TO THE ACTION.

A. Objection by Demurrer. The party against whom a complaint has been filed may object by demurrer to the complaint on the ground that there is a defect or misjoinder of parties (Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(d)) if the ground for such objection to the complaint appears on the face of the complaint from any matter of which the court is required to or may take judicial notice (Code Civ. Proc. § 430.30(a)).

B. Child as Party to Action. The child may, if under the age of 12 years, and must, if 12 years of age or older, be made a party to the action to establish the existence of a father and child relationship (Fam. Code § 7635).

C. Depriving the Court of Jurisdiction. The failure to join a child in an action to establish the father and child relationship deprives the court of jurisdiction and a judgment made under such circumstances is void (Perez v. Department of Health (1977) 71 Cal. App. 3d 923, 927, 138 Cal. Rptr. 32).

[Optional] D. Codification of Case Law. Family Code Section 7635, requiring a child of 12 years of age or older to be made a party to an action to establish paternity, codified decisional law on this subject that predated the Uniform Parentage Act (see Perez v. Department of Health (1977) 71 Cal. App. 3d 923, 927, 138 Cal. Rptr. 32).

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a demurrer to a complaint for support and to establish paternity when the demurrer asserts that there is a defect or misjoinder of parties due to failure to join a child 12 years of age or older. If the child's age does not appear on the face of the complaint, and the moving party must request the court to take judicial notice of some document such as the child's birth certificate, authority relating to judicial notice should be added to this form [see, e.g., Evid. Code § 452(d), (h) and Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings]. It may be used in an action brought by a local child support agency against an alleged father, in an action brought by an alleged father declaring the nonexistence of a father-child relationship, or in an action brought by an alleged father to establish paternity and obtain custody or visitation rights [see Fam. Code § 7630; Fam. Code § 17400 et seq]. It would primarily be used in those instances in which the child was not subject to the jurisdiction of the court in which the action has been brought and therefore could not be made a party to the action. If the child is subject to the court's jurisdiction, this memorandum of points and authorities may be modified to support a motion for an order bringing the minor 12 years of age and over into the action as an indispensable party [see Code Civ. Proc § 389].

When appropriate, counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Depriving the Court of Jurisdiction

In Perez v. Department of Health (1977) 71 Cal. App. 3d 923, 138 Cal. Rptr. 32 , plaintiff had filed an action to establish paternity, naming the California Department of Health as respondent and alleging that: (1) he was the natural father of twins, whose mother had recently died; (2) he believed the twins were living with their maternal grandmother in Mexico; and (3) the Department of Health had refused his request to amend the birth certificates to show he was the father of the twins. Based on the verified complaint, exhibits consisting of the twins' certificates of birth (showing the mother had declined to state the father's name) and baptism (showing that the plaintiff was the twins' father), and the fact that the Department of Health had not opposed the action, the trial court entered a judgment declaring plaintiff to be the natural father. When the twins' grandmother had moved back to the United States, plaintiff had the local sheriff deliver the twins to his custody. The maternal grandmother and uncle then moved to have the judgment of paternity set aside on the grounds that necessary and proper parties had not been served and that the judgment was obtained by extrinsic fraud.

Affidavits in support of this motion disclosed: (1) the mother had lived with a man other than the plaintiff for 12 months before the birth of the twins; (2) she had told family members that this man, not plaintiff, was the father; and (3) after she died, custody of the twins was awarded to the grandmother in Mexico with whom the twins resided in Mexico and the United States until plaintiff had the twins seized. Plaintiff had made no search for the children before he commenced his action and did not dispute that he had known the maternal uncle for several years or that the twins had been living with their grandmother and uncle. The motion of the grandmother and uncle was denied, and they appealed. The court of appeal reversed and remanded with directions that the questions of paternity and custody be reheard. The court stated that former Civ. Code § 7008, the predecessor statute to what is now Fam. Code § 7635, made it clear that the twins were required to be made parties to the action to determine paternity, and that as such, they were indispensable parties to the action. The absence of such indispensable parties deprives the court of jurisdiction, and a judgment entered under such circumstances is void. The court indicated that under the facts of the case, not naming the grandmother and uncle as parties was strongly suggestive of fraud. The court noted that although former Civ. Code § 7008 was not in effect when the plaintiff's action was pending, the statute codified decisional law on the subject and, therefore, it was applied to the case by the court (71 Cal. App. 3d 923, 924-927) .

[a] Child as Party to Action

In Ruddock v. Ohls (1979) 91 Cal. App. 3d 271, 154 Cal. Rptr. 87 , the district attorney's office as guardian ad litem of the minor child brought an action against the defendant to establish the father-child relationship and to seek support. The defendant pleaded an Oregon divorce decree that had found that the defendant was not the father of the minor, who was born five months before the marriage of the parties, and moved to strike the complaint, asserting paternity had been adjudicated by the Oregon court. The defendant contended that even though the child had not been joined as a party to that divorce action, the minor child's mother had represented the child's interests, thus making the Oregon judgment binding on the child. Although the decree suggested that the issues of paternity and child support had been fully litigated, the record did not include a summary of the evidence before the Oregon court. The trial court granted defendant's motion striking the complaint. In reversing, the court of appeal held that in the absence of joinder, the prospective rights of a minor child to establish the parent-child relationship are not foreclosed under the doctrine of res judicata or collateral estoppel by a judgment between the mother and alleged father in a marital dissolution action. The court said that by merely pleading the Oregon decree, the alleged father did not establish that the child's interests had been protected by the mother, acting in a representative capacity, since the decree showed only that the mother had asserted her right to obtain child support based on an allegation of paternity, as distinguished from adjudicating the independent rights of the child (91 Cal. App. 3d 271, 274-276, 278-279) .

THE COURT SHOULD GRANT THE MOTION TO QUASH SERVICE OF SUMMONS BECAUSE IT HAS NO JURISDICTION OF A DEFENDANT IF HE IS A NONRESIDENT OF CALIFORNIA AND THE COMPLAINT DOES NOT ALLEGE THAT THE CHILD WAS CONCEIVED IN CALIFORNIA OR CONCEIVED BY AN ACT OF SEXUAL INTERCOURSE THAT TOOK PLACE IN CALIFORNIA, NOR DOES THE COMPLAINT ALLEGE THAT THE DEFENDANT CAUSED THE CHILD'S CONCEPTION WITH THE INTENT TO BECOME A LEGAL PARENT OF THE CHILD BY ASSISTED REPRODUCTION IN CALIFORNIA, AND NO OTHER BASIS FOR

JURISDICTION EXISTS.

A. Motion to Quash. On or before the last day of his time to plead, or within such time as the court may for good cause allow, a defendant may serve and file a notice of motion to quash service of summons on the ground that the court lacks jurisdiction over him (Code Civ. Proc. § 418.10(a)(1)).

B. Jurisdiction of California Courts. A California court may exercise jurisdiction on any basis not inconsistent with the California and United States Constitutions [Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10].

C. Jurisdiction Under Uniform Parentage Act. A person who has sexual intercourse in California thereby submits to the jurisdiction of the courts of California as to an action brought under the Uniform Parentage Act with respect to a child who may have been conceived by that act of intercourse; likewise, a person who causes conception with the intent to become a legal parent by assisted reproduction in California hereby submits to the jurisdiction of the courts of California as to an action brought under the Uniform Parentage Act with respect to a child conceived thereby [*Fam. [a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion to quash service of summons in an action for support and to establish paternity if the defendant is asserting that the court lacks jurisdiction over him. It may be used in an action brought by a child through a guardian ad litem against an alleged father, in an action brought by the mother against an alleged father, or in an action brought by a local child support agency against an alleged father when the mother and child are residents of California, the alleged father is a nonresident of California, and the child was conceived by an act of intercourse between the mother and alleged father which took place outside of California. It may also be used when the child was conceived by assisted production outside of California. "Assisted reproduction" means conception by any means other than sexual intercourse [Fam. Code § 7606(a)].

When appropriate, counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Personal Jurisdiction as Required in Paternity Action

In Hartford v. Superior Court (1956) 47 Cal. 2d 447, 304 P.2d 1 , plaintiff, by his guardian ad litem, brought an action under former Civ. Code § 231 (which governed paternity determinations before the Uniform Parentage Act was enacted in California) to secure a declaration that defendant was his father. Plaintiff was born in New York but resided in California with his grandmother. Defendant resided in New York, but had visited plaintiff in California several times while on business trips. Plaintiff alleged that in order to conceal the fact that plaintiff was his natural child, defendant had arranged for the names of plaintiff's grandmother and stepgrandfather to be entered as his parents on his birth certificate. Plaintiff sought a judicial determination that defendant was his father in order to avoid any legal difficulty in establishing his true identity when entering the armed forces and when applying for a passport. Defendant was served out of state by publication. The trial court denied defendant's motion for an order quashing service of summons and defendant filed a petition for writ of mandate to compel the trial court to quash the service.

The Supreme Court granted the writ, rejecting plaintiff's contention that the court could determine plaintiff's status as defendant's child without securing personal jurisdiction over the alleged parent. The Court noted plaintiff's concession that if the purpose of the action were to enforce a duty of support or some other personal obligation growing out of the parent-child relationship, personal jurisdiction over the defendant would be essential. The Court held that this requirement cannot be avoided by limiting the relief sought to a binding adjudication of the parties' status, since such an adjudication would prevent relitigation of the basic issue on which defendant's personal obligations to plaintiff must rest and to that extent would necessarily constitute a personal judgment against him (47 Cal. 2d 447, 454) . Moreover, stated the Court, the fact that it may appear highly unlikely that plaintiff will ever have occasion to assert any personal rights against defendant, based on the claimed relationship between them, cannot justify giving to any judgment that might be obtained an effect to which it would not otherwise be entitled (47 Cal. 2d 447, 455) .

[b] Jurisdiction Over Nonresident

In Judd v. Superior Court (1976) 60 Cal. App. 3d 38, 131 Cal. Rptr. 246 , a husband and wife who lived on the east coast entered into a written separation agreement that covered their rights and duties to each other and to their four minor children. A Mexican divorce decree approved and incorporated the terms and conditions of this agreement, and the wife then moved to California with the children of whom she had custody. The husband made child and spousal support payments as provided for in the separation agreement for approximately 12 years after the divorce, visited the children about three times during this period, and conducted business activities in California, including making several business trips, advertising, and maintaining clients in the state. At the end of this period, the wife brought a dissolution proceeding which sought spousal and child support. The husband was served outside of California under Code Civ. Proc. § 415.40. The trial court denied the husband's motion to quash service of summons on the ground of lack of personal jurisdiction. After the court of appeals denied his petition for a writ of mandate, the Supreme Court granted the petition and retransferred the matter to the court of appeal for hearing.

In issuing the writ, the court stated that to obtain personal jurisdiction over a nonresident by service outside of California, the trial court must have power to exercise such jurisdiction under Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10 on any basis not inconsistent with the state or federal Constitution. The court cited the Judicial Council's comment to Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10 which discusses various bases of judicial jurisdiction over individuals that have been recognized. These include presence; domicile; residence; nationality or citizenship; consent; appearance; doing business in the state; doing an act in the state; causing an effect in the state by an act done elsewhere; ownership, use or possession of a thing in California; and other relationships to the state that make the exercise of judicial jurisdiction reasonable. The court concluded that although California has power to exercise personal jurisdiction over a nonresident individual who does business in the state with respect to a cause of action arising out of the acts of doing business in California, the husband, even if he was doing business in the state, was not subject to the jurisdiction of the trial court for purposes of support on such ground because the cause of action was not one arising out of such business activity (60 Cal. App. 3d 38, 41-45) .

[a] Jurisdiction Over Nonresident

In Bartlett v. Superior Court (1978) 86 Cal. App. 3d 72, 150 Cal. Rptr. 25 , real party in interest, Santa Barbara County, commenced an action in superior court seeking reimbursement from petitioner for welfare funds used to support a minor child whose mother was a resident of the county. The mother alleged that the child was conceived while she was visiting petitioner in Florida. Petitioner denied he was the child's father. Petitioner had never been a California resident; he was a civilian employee of the U.S. Navy stationed in Florida. The county had the complaint and summons served on petitioner in Florida, and petitioner made a special appearance moving to quash the service. The trial court denied the motion and petitioner filed a petition for writ of mandate to review the trial court's order.

The court of appeal issued the writ rejecting the county's contention that California courts could exercise in personam jurisdiction over petitioner. The court held that the fact that petitioner had (1) allegedly caused a California resident to become pregnant, (2) visited the mother in California during courtship and pregnancy, (3) paid the mother's air fare back to California when she was allegedly pregnant with his child, and (4) paid a doctor bill incurred in California in connection with the pregnancy, was not a sufficient constitutional basis for compelling petitioner to defend the action in California (86 Cal. App. 3d 72, 76) . The court noted that the fact that California has substantial interests in protecting resident children and in facilitating child support actions on behalf of those children does not make California a fair forum in which to require petitioner, who derived no personal or commercial benefit from the child's presence in California and who lacked any other relevant contact with the state, either to defend a child support action or to suffer liability by default (86 Cal. App. 3d 72, 77 , quoting Kulko v. California Superior Court (1978) 436 U.S. 84, 100-101, 98 S. Ct. 1690, 56 L. Ed. 2d 132 (holding that nonresident father who permits child to move to California to live with mother has not purposefully availed himself of the privilege of conducting activities within the state so as to subject him to the jurisdiction of the California courts in a child support action).

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a demurrer to a complaint brought by a man presumed to be the father of a child under Fam. Code § 7611(a)-(c) to declare the nonexistence of the father and child relationship presumed under Fam. Code § 7611(a)-(c). The demurrer asserts that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action because the action was not brought within a reasonable time after the presumed father obtained knowledge of relevant facts of the case as required by Fam. Code § 7630(a)(2). The demurrer would be filed by the defendant who might be the child, and if he or she were a minor, the child would be represented by a guardian ad litem appointed by the court [see Fam. Code § 7635(a)]. The mother of the child might also be a defendant to the action [see Fam. Code § 7635(b)].

Where appropriate, counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[a] Bringing an Action

In Adoption of Aaron H. (2000) 84 Cal. App. 4th 786, 101 Cal. Rptr. 2d 45 , a man sought to establish his paternity of a child after receiving notice that the child's mother had consented to the child's adoption. The man failed to timely respond within 30 days after receiving notice of his right to bring an action to establish his paternity, although he did file a complaint to establish paternity shortly thereafter, and blood tests revealed he was the biological father. After a hearing, a trial court denied his request to vacate an order that terminated his parental rights, stating that (1) the man (Richard) was personally served with a Notice of Alleged Paternity that provided him adequate notice to satisfy his due process and equal protection rights, (2) Richard failed to bring a paternity action within 30 days of receiving notice, and failed to act diligently to pursue his parental rights during that same 30-day period, (3) Richard failed to show mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect under Code Civ. Proc. § 473, and (4) Richard failed to show a change of circumstances between the end of the 30-day period and the date when he signed his paternity action, that would establish that he had obtained new information that was not previously available to him. The trial court dismissed his complaint to establish paternity. The appellate court affirmed, holding that the trial court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to set aside the order terminating the biological father's parental rights, when he failed to act in a timely manner (84 Cal. App. 4th 786, 790-791) .

A MOTION FOR A SPECIAL TRIAL OF A SPECIAL DEFENSE THAT THE PLAINTIFF HAS FAILED TO BRING AN ACTION TO DECLARE THE NONEXISTENCE OF THE FATHER-CHILD RELATIONSHIP WITHIN A REASONABLE TIME AFTER OBTAINING KNOWLEDGE OF THE RELEVANT FACTS IN THE MATTER IS PROPERLY GRANTED IF THE ANSWER PLEADS THIS SPECIAL DEFENSE AND IT DOES NOT INVOLVE THE MERITS OF THE PLAINTIFF'S CAUSE OF ACTION BUT CONSTITUTES A BAR OR GROUND OF ABATEMENT TO THE PROSECUTION.

A. Trial of Separate Issues Joined. If the answer pleads or sets up any defense not involving the merits of the plaintiff's cause of action but constituting a bar or ground of abatement to the prosecution of that action, the court may, on the motion of either party, proceed to the trial of the special defense before the trial of any other issue in the case. If the decision of the court on the special defense is in favor of the defendant, judgment for the defendant must be entered and no trial of other issues in the action may be had unless the judgment is reversed on appeal or otherwise set aside or vacated (*Code Civ. [a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion for a special trial of a special defense in an action brought by a presumed father under Fam. Code § 7630(a)(2) to declare the nonexistence of the father-child relationship if the plaintiff did not bring the action within a reasonable time after obtaining knowledge of relevant facts in the paternity matter. The motion for the special trial would be made if the defense was pleaded in an answer rather than being made by way of demurrer.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Effect of Special Trial Statute

In Woodhouse v. Pacific Elec. Ry. Co. (1952) 112 Cal. App. 2d 22, 245 P.2d 701 , the plaintiff brought an action, shortly after he attained 21 years of age, for damages for personal injuries alleged to have been sustained as a result of the negligence of defendants when the plaintiff was 14 years of age. Among the defenses in their answer, defendants pleaded a release to them from plaintiff's father resulting from a court settlement when plaintiff was 15 years of age, and the denial by that court of a motion made by plaintiff when he was 15 years of age to have the court settlement set aside. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 597, a special trial was had of these special defenses and the court found in the plaintiff's favor. Defendants appealed, but the court found the order nonappealable. It stated that when the answer sets up special defenses not involving the merits of plaintiff's cause of action but constituting a bar to the prosecution of an action, and the decision of the court is in favor of the plaintiff, the action is in the same status it would have been had the special defenses not been pleaded, and a judgment is not issued until after the full trial on the remaining issues in the complaint, when a final judgment is entered. However, the court said, if on the trial of special defenses only, the decision is in favor of the defendant pleading those special defenses, the trial is at an end, a judgment is then entered for the defendant, and, on a motion for a new trial or upon appeal from the judgment, the decision on the special defenses and all rulings on the trial of them may be reviewed (112 Cal. App. 2d 22, 23-25) .

[b] Prevention of Needless Trial

In People v. Rath Packing Co. (1978) 85 Cal. App. 3d 308, 149 Cal. Rptr. 431 , defendant was sued by the district attorney for an injunction, civil penalties, and other relief to enjoin it from advertising and selling short-weighted packages of bacon in violation of state law. By answer, defendant denied the allegations, filed a counterclaim against the county and filed a cross complaint against the director of the county's department of weights and measures. At the time the case was called for trial, defendant, under Code Civ. Proc. § 597, moved for a special trial of the special defense that some of the causes of action alleged against it were barred by a prior federal district court judgment. The court granted defendant's motion for a special trial, found in defendant's favor on the special issue but refused to enter a judgment as to those causes of action found barred by the prior judgment, and proceeded to trial on the remaining issues.

Plaintiff appealed, contending that the trial court erred in refusing to enter judgment immediately on the special defenses. In ruling that the district attorney's appeal lacked substantial merit, the court of appeal emphasized that the provision of Code Civ. Proc. § 597 for the entry of a judgment and the suspension of further proceedings following the sustaining of a special defense was designed primarily to protect a defendant against a needless trial rather than to ensure the entry of an immediate judgment from which other parties can appeal. The court concluded that the plaintiff's right to seek review of the trial court's ruling on the res judicata issue raised by the special defense was fully preserved on the appeal from the judgment entered after the court's determination of the entire controversy before it (85 Cal. App. 3d. 308, 314-316, 318-320, 336-337) .

[a] Declaring Nonexistence of Father-Child Relationship

Robert J. v. Leslie M. (1997) 51 Cal. App. 4th 1642, 59 Cal. Rptr. 2d 905 , was an action to establish nonparentage that was brought after blood tests revealed that the plaintiff, who had admitted paternity in a prior court proceeding, was not the father of a child. A trial court denied relief to the plaintiff on the ground that the action was barred by res judicata. The court of appeal affirmed, holding that plaintiff lacked standing to bring the action because he was not a presumed father, and under Fam. Code § 7611, only a presumed father may seek a declaration of nonpaternity. The court also found that the action was barred by res judicata, and that in this case, as in any other child custody or paternity matter, the ends of justice are best served by protecting the best interests of the child. Here, reversal would only serve to deprive the child of needed financial support and sever his legal ties with the paternal grandparents, who were the primary caregivers. Additionally, it was not a denial of plaintiff's due process rights to apply res judicata, because plaintiff had stipulated to the entry of a judgment requiring him to pay support without any coercion and with full knowledge of his rights. The appellate court concluded that the judgment was final even if its factual underpinning was erroneous (51 Cal. App. 4th 1642, 1648) .

In Said v. Jegan (2007) 146 Cal. App. 4th 1375, 53 Cal. Rptr. 3d 661 , the court rejected the contention that Robert J. v. Leslie M. stands for the proposition that only a presumed father, and not an alleged father, can bring an action under Fam. Code § 7630 to determine nonpaternity. The statement in that case that Fam. Code § 7630 allows a broad class of men, including alleged fathers, to bring an action to establish paternity does not means that an alleged father lacks standing to bring an action to determine his nonpaternity, because Fam. Code § 7630(b) specifically provides that any interested person may bring an action at any time for the purpose of determining the existence or nonexistence of the father and child relationship presumed under Fam. Code § 7611(d). The appellate court in Said concluded that the trial court erred in finding that an alleged father lacked standing under Fam. Code § 7630(b) to file a petition to determine that he is not the father of a son, even though he was named as the father on the son's birth certificate. An alleged father who seeks to establish the nonexistence of paternity qualifies as an interested party under Fam. Code § 7630(b), so long as he alleges that there are facts, which if believed, show he might qualify as a presumed father under Fam. Code § 7611(d) (146 Cal. App. 4th 1375, 1382-1385) .

THE COURT IN AN ACTION TO ESTABLISH PATERNITY MAY MAKE A PENDENTE LITE ORDER FOR SUPPORT, MEDICAL AND HOSPITAL EXPENSES, AND ATTORNEY'S FEES.

A. Pendente Lite Child Support Order. In an action under the Uniform Parentage Act [Fam. Code § 7600 et seq.], the court may order temporary child support on a showing of probable paternity by a preponderance of the evidence [Thomas B. v. Superior Court (1985) 175 Cal. App. 3d 255, 258-259, 262, 220 Cal. Rptr. 577 ; see Gadbois v. Superior Court (1981) 126 Cal. App. 3d 653, 656-657, 179 Cal. Rptr. 19] .

B. Pendente Lite Attorney's Fees and Costs. In an action under the Uniform Parentage Act [Fam. Code § 7600 et seq.], the court may order reasonable fees of counsel, experts, and the child's guardian ad litem, and other costs of the action and pretrial proceedings, including blood tests, to be paid by the parties (except a governmental entity) in proportions and at times determined by the court (Fam. Code § 7640).

C. Pendente Lite Medical and Hospital Expenses for Birth of Child. In a proceeding to establish paternity, the court may order defendant to pay plaintiff's hospital and medical expenses before judgment of paternity is entered (Hodge v. Gould (1969) 274 Cal. App. 2d 806, 808, 79 Cal. Rptr. 245 ; Richter v. Superior Court (1963) 214 Cal. App. 2d 821, 823, 29 Cal. Rptr. 826).

D. Prima Facie Evidence of Costs of Pregnancy, Childbirth, and Genetic Tests. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, bills for pregnancy, childbirth, and genetic testing shall be admissible as evidence without third-party foundation testimony, and shall constitute prima facie evidence of costs incurred for those services (*Fam. [3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Pendente Lite Child Support Order

In Thomas B. v. Superior Court (1985) 175 Cal. App. 3d 255, 220 Cal. Rptr. 577 , the trial court ordered defendant, the alleged father, to produce financial records and tax returns after making a preliminary finding of paternity for the purpose of ordering pendente lite support and while the issue of paternity was still contested. The appellate court noted that under Carbone v. Superior Court (1941) 18 Cal. 2d 768, 117 P.2d 872 , the court could order temporary support, but reversed on the issue of production of financial records. The court held that the privilege not to be compelled to produce tax returns attached until such time as the defendant was adjudicated as the father, at which time the statutory exception to the privilege that requires production by a parent in a child support proceeding would attach [see Fam. Code § 3665]. Therefore, although temporary support could be awarded, the amount could not be set by recourse to privileged records. The issues of paternity and support would have to be bifurcated, and the amount of permanent support could not be determined until after a final adjudication of paternity (175 Cal. App. 3d 255, 262-266) . The court's holding, while supporting a right to pendente lite support, greatly restricts the right in any case in which the appropriate amount of support must be determined by resort to otherwise-privileged financial records.

NOTE:

Under the holding in Carbone, relied on by the court in Thomas B., the right to a pendente lite child support order before the final adjudication of paternity rests on a construction of former Civ. Code § 196a. However, paternity actions are now controlled by the Uniform Parentage Act [see Fam. Code § 7600 et seq.], not by Fam. Code § 3900, which sets forth the basic parental duty of child support of former Civ. Code § 196a. Under the UPA, there is no express provision for a pendente lite support order [see Fam. Code §§ 7636, 7637 (support order may be included in judgment or order of court that determines existence of parent-child relationship)]. Thus, it would seem that the continued validity of a right to a pendente lite support order based on a preliminary showing of paternity by a preponderance of the evidence is open to question under the UPA.

Nevertheless, in cases brought under the UPA, courts have continued to issue temporary support orders before final adjudication of the issue of paternity, although no court has expressly held that the UPA authorizes such an order. City and County of San Francisco v. Superior Court (1978) 86 Cal. App. 3d 87, 150 Cal. Rptr. 45 , was decided after enactment of the UPA, but does not discuss its possible effect on the right to temporary support. The court awarded temporary support on the authority of Carbone and former Civ. Code § 196a (86 Cal. App. 3d 87, 89-91) .

In Gadbois v. Superior Court (1981) 126 Cal. App. 3d 653, 179 Cal. Rptr. 19 , the issue was the propriety of a temporary visitation order. In this case, the father was the plaintiff, asserting his paternity of the child over the opposition of the mother and seeking visitation rights. The court held in favor of the father on the ground that since he could be compelled to pay support before final adjudication of paternity, he was also entitled to a hearing on the appropriateness of visitation (126 Cal. App. 3d 653, 656-657) .

[b] Pendente Lite Medical and Hospital Expenses for Birth of Child

In Hodge v. Gould (1969) 274 Cal. App. 2d 806, 79 Cal. Rptr. 245 , plaintiff filed a verified complaint in superior court alleging that defendant was the father of her unborn child. She obtained an order from the court directing defendant to appear and show cause why he should not be required to pay temporary support and maintenance for the unborn child, medical and hospital expenses incident to its birth, and attorney's fees and costs in the action. Defendant filed a verified answer in which he denied he was the father of the child and placed in issue plaintiff's need for the funds requested and his own financial ability to pay. After a hearing at which no evidence was introduced, the court ordered defendant to pay all the medical and hospital expenses incident to the child's birth, attorney's fees and support pending blood test results. Although the court of appeal reversed on grounds concerning the blood tests, it cited Carbone v. Superior Court (1941) 18 Cal. 2d 768, 117 P.2d 872 , to hold that in an action to establish the paternity of a child, the court may make pendente lite orders for support, medical and hospital expenses, and attorney's fees if probable paternity was established at a hearing by a preponderance of the evidence.

In Richter v. Superior Court (1963) 214 Cal. App. 2d 821, 29 Cal. Rptr. 826 , petitioner filed suit against defendant before the birth of her child to establish paternity and for support of the child. They appeared at a hearing on an order to show cause at which time defendant asked for a continuance of the matter to a date after the birth of the child. Indicating it was the policy of the court to grant such continuances in paternity matters until after the birth of the child, the trial court granted defendant's motion. Petitioner asked the court of appeal to issue a writ of mandate to compel the trial court to grant an immediate hearing on the order to show cause. In issuing the writ, the court affirmed the power of the trial court to order the payment of support, costs, and counsel fees pending the trial on the issue of paternity. It stated that in a proceeding to establish paternity, commenced before the birth of the child, the child is entitled to an award of hospital expenses incurred in connection with its birth on the theory that hospital and medical expenses are part of the child's right to support. In addition, the court said that maintenance of the mother is a necessary part of support of the child, and the court has the power to order support and costs from the date of the filing of the complaint (214 Cal. App. 2d 821, 823) .

[a] Pendente Lite Child Support Order

County of San Luis Osbispo v. Nathaniel J. (1996) 50 Cal. App. 4th 842, 57 Cal. Rptr. 2d 843 concerned a proceeding in which a county sought a finding of paternity, an order for ongoing child support, and AFDC reimbursement against a 15-year-old father. The defendant admitted paternity, but claimed that he was not required to pay support because he was a victim of statutory rape at the hands of the child's 34-year-old mother, with whom he willingly engaged in sexual relations. A trial court entered a judgment establishing paternity and reserved an order for child support pending the defendant's reaching the age of majority. The court of appeal affirmed, holding that the defendant's technical status as a "victim" of statutory rape did not override his parental duty of support. The appellate court reasoned that requiring child support did not violate the public policy which protects minors from sexual exploitation by an adult. The court found that the defendant was not an innocent victim of the woman's criminal acts because there had been consensual intercourse that had occurred approximately five times over a two week period. It was therefore appropriate to follow California law, which provides that every child has the right to support from both parents (50 Cal. App. 4th 842, 845) .

Jaycee B. v. Superior Court (1996) 42 Cal. App. 4th 718, 49 Cal. Rptr. 2d 694 , involved a proceeding related to a marital dissolution action. The wife sought temporary child support from her husband regarding a child who was the subject of a surrogacy contract. Although a trial court ruled that it lacked jurisdiction to order support because it had not yet been established that the infant was a "child of the marriage," the court of appeal disagreed. It issued a writ of mandate directing the family court to hold a hearing forthwith to determine an appropriate child support order, and held that the family court did have jurisdiction to enter a temporary child support order pending final determination of the husband's paternity, citing Carbone v. Superior Court (1941) 18 Cal. 2d 768, 117 P.2d 872 . The child had been conceived through artificial insemination, and the appellate court found that the undisputed fact of the husband signing the surrogacy agreement demonstrated, by a preponderance of the evidence, that he would most likely be found to be the child's father (42 Cal. App. 4th 718, 730) .

§ 171.25 Supporting Contention That Paternity Determination Is Barred by Conclusive Presumption That Mother's Husband Is Child's Father [Fam. Code § 7540]--Mother Was Married at Time of Conception and Husband Was Neither Impotent Nor Sterile

[1] FORM

ANY DETERMINATION OF PATERNITY WITH REGARD TO THE CHILD IS BARRED BECAUSE THE CHILD WAS BORN TO A MARRIED WOMAN AND CONCEIVED DURING THE PERIOD WHEN THE MOTHER WAS COHABITING WITH HER HUSBAND, WHO WAS NOT IMPOTENT OR STERILE.

A. Child Presumed Issue of Marriage if Wife Cohabits With Husband. Except as provided in Family Code Section 7541, the issue of a wife cohabiting with her husband, who is not impotent or sterile, is conclusively presumed to be a child of the marriage (Fam. Code § 7540; see Estate of Cornelious (1984) 35 Cal. 3d 461, 467, 198 Cal. Rptr. 543, 674 P.2d 245).

[Optional] D. Evidence of Nonintercourse Not Admissible. If a husband and wife are cohabiting, evidence of nonintercourse between the parties is not permitted (S.D.W. v. Holden (1969) 275 Cal. App. 2d 313, 315, 80 Cal. Rptr. 269).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a demurrer or motion for summary judgment if the mother was cohabiting with her husband at the time the child was conceived and the conclusive presumption of Fam. Code § 7540 applies. It may be used by any party who wants to rely on the presumption to establish that the husband and not some other man is conclusively the child's father. It may also be adapted for use to oppose a motion for blood or other genetic tests (see § 171.27) if the conclusive presumption makes the paternity of the person sought to be tested a legal impossibility, even if it is a factual possibility. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in §§ 171.38 -171.40 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[c] Constitutionality of Conclusive Presumption

The conclusive presumption of Fam. Code § 7540 has been subjected to numerous constitutional challenges based on the due process and equal protection clauses of the Fourteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution, which have been held to protect the essential right to rear one's own children [see Stanley v. Illinois (1972) 405 U.S. 645, 651, 92 S. Ct. 1208, 31 L. Ed. 2d 551 ; In re R. (1975) 13 Cal. 3d 636, 647-649, 119 Cal. Rptr. 475, 532 P.2d 123] .

The California Supreme Court has found that a balance of interests is required [see Michelle W. v. Ronald W. (1985) 39 Cal. 3d 354, 358-363, 216 Cal. Rptr. 748, 703 P.2d 88 ; In re R. (1975) 13 Cal. 3d 636, 647-651, 119 Cal. Rptr. 475, 532 P.2d 123] . The parameters of this balancing test are considered in §§ 171.26, 171.38.

[d] Rebutting Presumption

The presumption of Fam. Code § 7540 was once truly conclusive for all purposes, and as such, was a substantive rule of law rather than an evidentiary presumption [see Vincent B. v. Joan R. (1981) 126 Cal. App. 3d 619, 623, 179 Cal. Rptr. 9] . However, it is now subject to a limited statutory right of rebuttal. Under current law, if the court finds that the conclusions of all the experts, as disclosed by evidence based on blood tests [see Fam. Code § 7550 et seq.] are that the husband is not the father of the child, the question must be resolved "accordingly" [Fam. Code § 7541(a)], meaning that the presumption is not to be applied and the biological father rather than the husband must be adjudged the legal father.

A notice of motion for blood tests or, apparently, for other genetic tests [see § 171.27] may be brought by one of the following persons:

1. The husband, who is the otherwise conclusively presumed father of the child [Fam. Code § 7541(b)];

2. The mother, but only if another man has filed an affidavit with the court acknowledging paternity [Fam. Code § 7541(c)];

3. A man who qualifies as a presumed father under one of the other presumptions of Fam. Code § 7611, but only for the purpose of establishing his paternity [Fam. Code § 7541(b)]; or

4. The child, through a guardian ad litem [Fam. Code § 7541(b)].

Therefore, the presumption is no longer truly conclusive; but the right to rebuttal is limited. No evidence other than blood-test evidence may be presented, and only those listed above are granted standing by statute to move for blood tests. Note, however, that on and after January 1, 1998, statutes under the Uniform Act on Blood Tests to Determine Paternity (Fam. Code § 7550 et seq.) provide for "genetic" rather than simply "blood" testing. Although Fam. Code § 7541 still makes reference only to "blood tests" in rebutting the presumption of Fam. Code § 7540, it appears that evidence based on approved genetic testing other than simply blood testing would now be admissible, because Fam. Code § 7541(a) refers to blood tests performed "pursuant to [Fam. Code § 7550 et seq.]." This interpretation, nevertheless, remains subject to further statutory or judicial clarification.

The presumption of Fam. Code § 7540 remains conclusive with regard to a man who alleges that he, and not the husband, is the true biological father of a child born to a married woman, but who cannot meet any of the other presumptions of paternity. Such a man cannot move for blood or other genetic tests unless he can obtain the assistance of someone from the favored group, for example, the husband, the mother, or the guardian ad litem for the child. It also remains conclusive as to the mother if the putative father will not file an affidavit acknowledging paternity [see Michelle W. v. Ronald W. (1985) 39 Cal. 3d 354, 365, 216 Cal. Rptr. 748, 703 P.2d 88 (finding that rebuttal provisions do not violate equal protection on gender grounds because rights of mother and putative father are conditioned on each other)]. Rebuttal by blood or other genetic test evidence is also not available if conception was by artificial insemination [see Fam. Code § 7613], or if the wife, with the consent of her husband, conceived by means of a surgical procedure [Fam. Code § 7541(e)].

A motion for blood test or, apparently, other genetic test, evidence must be brought no later than two years from the child's date of birth [Fam. Code § 7541(b), (c)]. It must be supported by a declaration stating the factual basis for placing the issue of paternity before the court [Fam. Code § 7541(d)]. For a form opposing the contention that this limitation period applies to bar the motion, see § 171.41.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Child Presumed Issue of Marriage if Wife Cohabits With Husband

Estate of Cornelious (1984) 35 Cal. 3d 461, 198 Cal. Rptr. 543, 674 P.2d 245 , involved the petition of a woman to be named administratrix of the estate of a man she claimed was her natural father. The woman's mother had been living with her husband when the woman was born, and the trial court held that the conclusive presumption of what is now Fam. Code § 7540 precluded any proof that the decedent was her biological father. The California Supreme Court affirmed, holding that the woman's right to due process was not violated by the application of the conclusive presumption because the state's interests embodied in the presumption outweighed the woman's financial interests in the decedent's estate (35 Cal. 3d 461, 463-464, 467) . This balancing of state and private interests is developed further in §§ 171.26, 171.38.

[b] Presumption Attaches if Cohabitation at Time of Conception Is Established

In In re Elijah V. (2005) 127 Cal. App. 4th 576, 25 Cal. Rptr. 3d 774 , the court of appeal rejected the contention of the child's biological father that the husband of the child's mother could not qualify as the child's conclusively presumed father under Fam. Code § 7540 because he and the child's mother were not actually cohabitating at the time of the child's conception. The court noted that to qualify as a conclusively presumed father under that section, a man must be living with his wife at the time the child is conceived. Thus, the presumption has not been applied when the child was born too soon after a husband and wife began living together or too long after they were living together, and the presumption has not been applied when there has been no substantive cohabitation. The biological father contended that the husband and wife were not living together when the child was conceived because the husband was deployed by the Navy. Because they were not physically living in the same home, he asserted that the "laws of nature" barred the application of the conclusive presumption. However, the record showed that the husband and wife had sexual relations on the date the doctors believed the wife had conceived and they were cohabiting that day because they were living in the husband's military housing. In addition, the average period of gestation is between 270 and 282 days, and the child in this case was born 276 days after the husband and wife had sexual relations. Because the child was born within 276 days of his parents' last physical cohabitation, they were cohabiting within the meaning of Fam. Code § 7540, and the trial court properly found that the husband was the child's presumed father within the meaning of that section (127 Cal. App. 4th 576, 586-587) .

[c] Cohabiting Defined

In Steven W. v. Matthew S. (1995) 33 Cal. App. 4th 1108, 39 Cal. Rptr. 2d 535 , the mother of the child was married to Matthew at all pertinent times. However, she moved out of their apartment and moved in with Steven in 1986. She became pregnant in 1987 while she was still living with Steven, although conception was on account of a weekend tryst with husband Matthew. She continued to live with Steven, who occupied the paternal role in the birth and care of the child. Ultimately, the relationship with Steven ended and she resumed cohabitation with Matthew. Steven continued to share custody and support of the child.

Steven then instituted a paternity action. The trial court refused to apply the conclusive presumption of what is now Fam. Code § 7540 with regard to Matthew and adjudged Steven the father, ruling that he had the more prolonged, intensive, and continuing relationship with the child (33 Cal. App. 4th 1108, 1113) . For further discussion of this aspect of the case, see § 171.38[4][a].

On appeal, Matthew argued that the presumption precluded the trial court from adjudicating that Steven was Michael's father. However, the appellate court found that the presumption did not apply because Matthew could not establish the condition of cohabitation at the time of conception. The court stated that the settled meaning of "cohabitation" is "living together as husband and wife." Mere access or opportunity for sexual relations is insufficient. Cohabitation implies more than a stolen weekend or a sexual encounter; it is living together in a marital household, sharing day-to-day life. In this case, the evidence showed that Matthew and the mother were not cohabiting within the meaning of the presumption. The mother was living with Steven, not Matthew, at the time of conception (33 Cal. App. 4th 1108, 1114-1115) .

[d] Evidence of Nonintercourse Not Admissible

In S.D.W. v. Holden (1969) 275 Cal. App. 2d 313, 80 Cal. Rptr. 269 , the mother of a minor child lived with her husband in their residence during the time of the child's conception and for a time thereafter. In divorcing her husband she alleged that she and her husband separated after the child's birth and obtained provision for the child's support in the divorce decree. When the husband did not make the payments decreed, the mother brought this action against defendant. She and her ex-husband both testified over objection that matrimonial intercourse had ended about three months before the date of conception. A blood test was also admitted over objection which purported to show that the ex-husband was not the father. Testimony indicated the mother had had sexual relations with defendant and with no other man during period of conception, and defendant admitted the relationship, but testified that it began some months later. There was also testimony of admissions made by defendant that he was the child's father, but he denied these admissions. The jury found defendant to be the father of the child, and he appealed from the judgment entered after the verdict. In reversing the judgment, the court of appeal said that in California, cohabiting means living together ostensibly as man and wife. If the parties were so living together as husband and wife, evidence of nonintercourse is not permitted to be introduced because of the presumption of what is now Fam. Code § 7540 (275 Cal. App. 2d 313, 313-315) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Child Presumed Issue of Marriage if Wife Cohabits With Husband

In In re Elijah V. (2005) 127 Cal. App. 4th 576, 25 Cal. Rptr. 3d 774 , the court of appeal held that because the defendant failed to prove he was the child's presumed father under Fam. Code § 7611, the trial court erred in ordering the mother's husband to submit to genetic testing on the defendant's motion alleging that the husband was not the child's biological father. The only parties who may seek genetic testing under Fam. Code § 7541 are the husband, the child, or a man who is a presumed father under Fam. Code § 7611. Thus, when a man who is not a presumed father within the meaning of Fam. Code § 7611 seeks to establish his paternity, the trial court may not order genetic tests under Fam. Code § 7541 to defeat the conclusive presumption of Fam. Code § 7540 that the husband is the child's father (127 Cal. App. 4th 576, 585-586) .

[b] Evidence of Nonintercourse Not Admissible

In Vincent B. v. Joan R. (1981) 126 Cal. App. 3d 619, 179 Cal. Rptr. 9 , a putative father brought an action against a formerly married couple to establish a father and child relationship with the couple's child. The trial court held that the conclusive presumption of what has become Fam. Code § 7540 applied because the couple had been married and cohabiting at the time of the child's conception, and the court granted summary judgment against the plaintiff and dismissed the action. The court of appeal affirmed. It held that evidence of the couple's lack of sexual relations during their cohabitation is irrelevant and will not prevent application of the presumption, once cohabitation has been shown (126 Cal. App. 3d 619, 622-623) .

§ 171.26 Supporting Contention That Paternity Determination Is Barred by Conclusive Presumption That Mother's Husband Is Child's Father [Fam. Code § 7540]--Biological Father's Constitutional Rights Are Outweighed by State's Interest in Protecting Familial Relationships

[1] FORM

THIS ACTION IS BARRED BY THE CONCLUSIVE PRESUMPTION OF FAMILY CODE SECTION 7540, THAT A CHILD BORN TO A MARRIED WOMAN IS A CHILD OF THE MARRIAGE IF CONCEIVED WHILE THE MOTHER WAS COHABITING WITH HER HUSBAND WHO WAS NOT IMPOTENT OR STERILE, BECAUSE ON BALANCE, ANY CONSTITUTIONAL INTEREST OF THE ALLEGED FATHER AND CHILD TO A PARENT-CHILD RELATIONSHIP IS OUTWEIGHED BY THE STATE'S INTEREST IN PRESERVING FAMILIAL RELATIONSHIPS.

A. Protecting Family Unit and Promoting Familial Stability. The presumption of Family Code Section 7540 must be applied conclusively if the public interest in protecting the family unit and promoting familial stability outweighs the constitutional interest of the putative father (Michelle W. v. Ronald W. (1985) 39 Cal. 3d 354, 360, 216 Cal. Rptr. 748, 703 P.2d 88 ; Miller v. Miller (1998) 64 Cal. App. 4th 111, 118-120, 74 Cal. Rptr. 2d 797 ; Michael H. v. Gerald D. (1987) 191 Cal. App. 3d 995, 1008-1009, 236 Cal. Rptr. 810 , aff'd, 491 U.S. 110 (1989)) .

B. Preserving Existing Father-Child Relationship. The presumption of Family Code Section 7540 may be applied conclusively to preserve the relationship between the child and the husband-presumed father, even in the context of proceedings for dissolution of marriage (Michelle W. v. Ronald W. (1985) 39 Cal. 3d 354, 360-362, 216 Cal. Rptr. 748, 703 P.2d 88 ; In re Marriage of Freeman (1996) 45 Cal. App. 4th 1437, 1444, 53 Cal. Rptr. 2d 439 ; Susan H. v. Jack S. (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 1435, 1442).

[2] Comments

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that the presumption of Fam. Code § 7540, that a child born to a married woman who was cohabiting with her husband who was not impotent or sterile at the time of conception, is a child of the marriage [see § 171.25], should be applied conclusively. They are for use in opposition to the points and authorities set forth in § 171.38.

The points and authorities in § 171.38 assert the constitutional due process interest of a putative father in a parent-child relationship with his biological child, and the California Supreme Court's balancing of private and state interests to determine whether the presumption cannot be applied for constitutional reasons. These points and authorities then assert that any constitutionally protected interest is outweighed by the state's interest in protecting existing families and parent-child relationships.

This form may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which the application of the presumption is brought before the court. It may be used in a memorandum of points and authorities in connection with a pretrial motion, such as a demurrer, motion for summary judgment, or motion for summary adjudication of the issue of paternity. It may also be used in a trial or appellate brief.

Because the application of the presumption is controlled by a balancing test, proper presentation of the facts is crucial. Some or all of the following facts should be developed: (1) there is a significant and ongoing parental relationship between the mother's husband, who is conclusively the father under the presumption, and the child; (2) there is no significant or ongoing relationship between the alleged true biological father and the child; (3) there is an family unit that includes the child and the presumed father. Other facts showing detriment to the child if the presumption is not applied should be included.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Protecting Family Unit and Promoting Familial Stability

In Michelle W. v. Ronald W. (1985) 39 Cal. 3d 354, 216 Cal. Rptr. 748, 703 P.2d 88 , the mother was married to Ronald when the child Michelle was conceived and born. Ronald occupied the paternal role in the child's life for five years, until the parents separated. In the dissolution matter, Michelle was treated as a child of the marriage, and appropriate support and visitation orders were made with regard to Ronald. The issue of paternity was not raised. Ronald continued visitation with Michelle until the mother married Donald. Then she attempted to terminate visitation, asserting that Michelle was conceived as a result of an extramarital affair with Donald and that Donald was Michelle's actual biological father. Donald had played no role in Michelle's life until the mother's divorce from Ronald and remarriage. Donald and Michelle, through a guardian ad litem who was a family friend of Donald and the mother, then brought a paternity action to establish Donald's paternity.

The trial court, on the uncontroverted facts that Michelle was conceived while the mother was married to Ronald who was neither impotent nor sterile, applied the presumption of what is now Fam. Code § 7540 and established that Ronald was Michelle's father. Michelle's motion for blood tests was denied. Both Ronald and Michelle appealed, but the California Supreme Court affirmed.

The Court noted its holding of In re R. (1975) 13 Cal. 3d 636, 648, 119 Cal. Rptr. 475, 532 P.2d 123 , discussed in § 171.38[3][b], that whether the conclusive application of the presumption violates the putative father's due process rights depends on a balancing of the competing private and state interests. It characterized the state's interest as certain social policies upholding the integrity of the family and protecting the child's welfare. In the case before it, it found that the public interest in protecting the family unit and promoting familial stability outweighed Donald's interest. It distinguished Lisa R. as a case in which the putative father was attempting to establish a parental relationship with a child who otherwise would have no father (39 Cal. 3d 354, 360-363) .

It also rejected the child's claim, questioning whether the guardian ad litem and her counsel (who also represented Donald) were really asserting a claim that was in her best interests. It used the same balancing test with regard to Michelle, and concluded that her interest in establishing her actual biological paternity did not outweigh the state's interest in preserving and protecting the developed parent-child relationship (39 Cal. 3d 354, 363-364) .

In Miller v. Miller (1998) 64 Cal. App. 4th 111, 74 Cal. Rptr. 2d 797 , three children were born to Michael Miller and Lillian Miller during their marriage. Following the dissolution of their marriage, Lillian married Michael's brother Gary. Lillian told Gary that he was the biological father of her youngest child, Samantha. Thereafter, Gary filed a complaint to determine whether a parent and child relationship existed between Michael and Samantha, naming Michael as the defendant, and alleging that Gary was Samantha's natural father and seeking full legal and physical custody of Samantha. As an exhibit to the complaint, he attached "parentage/kinship" test results prepared by a laboratory in Seattle, Washington, which concluded that Gary is Samantha's biological father. The court held that the conclusive presumption of paternity established by Fam. Code § 7540 applied to Michael, and that Gary could not employ the exception to this section afforded by Fam. Code § 7541 to rebut this conclusive presumption. The blood test results he obtained could not override the conclusive presumption because the tests were not authorized by Fam. Code § 7541: they were neither ordered by the court nor performed by court appointed experts, as required by Fam. Code §§ 7551 and 7552 and, as a result, they have no legal significance. In addition, the tests were not performed within two years of Samantha's birth and were, thus, untimely. Finally, Gary did not have standing to request the blood tests under Fam. Code § 7541 because the court found he was not a presumed father under Fam. Code § 7611(d). Therefore, the conclusive presumption of paternity applied to Michael as a matter of law and whether or not Gary was in fact Samantha's biological father was immaterial (64 Cal. App. 4th 111, 118-119) .

Gary also argued that the presumption of paternity in favor of Michael deprived him of his substantive due process right to establish that he is Samantha's biological father. The court noted that a due process challenge to the conclusive presumption that the husband is the father of a child conceived during marriage was rejected in Michelle W. v. Ronald W. "based on strikingly similar facts." Because Michael had established an emotional and financial father-daughter relationship with Samantha, Gary's private interest in establishing a parent and child relationship based on alleged biological father status was overridden by the state interests in familial stability and the best interest of the child (64 Cal. App. 4th 111, 119-120) .

In Michael H. v. Gerald D. (1987) 191 Cal. App. 3d 995, 236 Cal. Rptr. 810 , the mother, at all times pertinent, was married to Gerald. She had an on-again, off-again extramarital affair with Michael, during which time she conceived and gave birth to a child. Blood tests showed a 98 percent probability that Michael was the father of the child. After living for awhile with Michael, the mother and the child ultimately returned to Gerald. Michael sought an adjudication of his paternity, over the opposition of Gerald and the mother, but the trial court applied the presumption of what is now Fam. Code § 7540 conclusively to affirm Gerald's paternity. Michael appealed, asserting the unconstitutionality of the conclusive presumption [see § 171.38], and the child's guardian ad litem also appealed, asserting the right to a relationship with both men.

The California court of appeal affirmed, essentially using the same analysis and reasoning as that applied in Michelle W. v. Ronald W., discussed above. In addition to the state's interests in that case, there was the additional fact that the mother, Gerald, and child continued to live together as a family unit, and the parents did not want the disruption that Michael's involvement in the life of the child might bring. The court stated that the state's interest in preserving the matrimonial family is so significant that it outweighs most other interests (191 Cal. App. 3d 995, 1008) .

The California Supreme Court denied review, but the United States Supreme Court granted certiorari [see Michael H. v. Gerald D. (1989) 491 U.S. 110, 109 S. Ct. 2333, 105 L. Ed. 2d 91] . In a decision without a majority opinion, the Court upheld the statute's constitutionality as applied to Michael and the child (491 U.S. 110, 113-136) . However, five justices refused to foreclose the possibility that a natural father might ever have a constitutionally protected interest in his relationship with a child whose mother was married to and cohabiting with another man at the time of the child's conception and birth (491 U.S. 110, 133-136, 156-163 ; opinions of Stevens, J., concurring in judgment; Brennan, J., joined by Blackmun, J. and Marshall, J., dissenting; and White, J., joined by Brennan, J., dissenting). One justice concurred in the judgment of constitutionality as applied to the facts of the case only because, under his view of California law, the alleged biological father could still pursue visitation rights under what is now Fam. Code § 3100 (491 U.S. 110, 133-134 ; opinion of Stevens, J., concurring in judgment).

The end result of Michael H. v. Gerald D. is that a majority of the United States Supreme Court could find the conclusive operation of the presumption neither constitutional for all purposes, nor unconstitutional for all purposes. Therefore, the approach of the California Supreme Court of balancing the competing private and state interests involved with regard to the facts of each case remains the required approach.

[b] Preserving Existing Father-Child Relationship

The facts and holding of Michelle W. v. Ronald W. (1985) 39 Cal. 3d 354, 216 Cal. Rptr. 748, 703 P.2d 88 , are discussed under § 171.26[3][a]. In upholding the conclusive operation of the presumption of what is now Fam. Code § 7540, the Supreme Court gave primary importance to the established and continuing emotional and financial father-child relationship between the husband-presumed father and the child (39 Cal. 3d 354, 362) .

In In re Marriage of Freeman (1996) 45 Cal. App. 4th 1437, 53 Cal. Rptr. 2d 439 , a husband filed a marital dissolution petition alleging that there were no children of the marriage. The wife responded by claiming that the marriage produced two children. The husband's position was based on the fact that he had had a vasectomy several years before the marriage. He hoped to avoid the conclusive presumption that he was the father of the children by establishing that he was sterile, although, following two reversal operations, he still produced some live sperm (about one-fourth the amount needed to be considered fertile). The parties later stipulated that another man fathered one of the children. As to the other, a trial court found by a preponderance of evidence that, because it was remotely possible that the husband could be the father, he was not "sterile" within the meaning of former Evid. Code § 621 (now see Fam. Code § 7540) at the time the child was conceived. Later, the parties stipulated to a judgment providing that blood tests could not be ordered (because of the sterility ruling) and that it was conclusively presumed that the husband was the child's father. A child support order was set, and the husband appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment. It reasoned that during the early years of a child's life, the support obligation is based solely on actual or presumed biological paternity. Thereafter, notwithstanding evidence of biological paternity, a husband's obligation to support a child may be demonstrated by the nature and extent of the social relationship that the husband has with the child. After a child has reached his or her third year of life, biology is no longer the predominant consideration. Thus, the subsequent conduct of a husband may estop him from avoiding parental responsibilities even after the marriage has been dissolved. The appellate court added that it was defining "sterility" in the strictest sense, limiting the "sterility exception" to the paternity presumption to cases in which, by a preponderance of evidence, a party can demonstrate that the presumed father could not produce live sperm at the time of conception. Here, the record was clear that the husband was capable of producing live sperm at the time the child was conceived, and therefore he was not sterile within the meaning of Fam. Code § 7540 (45 Cal. App. 4th 1437, 1444) .

Susan H. v. Jack S. (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 1435, 37 Cal. Rptr. 2d 120 , involved a variation on the same basic fact pattern as Michelle W. v. Ronald W. Susan was married to and cohabiting with John when the child, Michael, was conceived and born. Susan and John subsequently divorced in proceedings in which both alleged that Michael was a child of the marriage. Custody, visitation, and support orders issued with regard to John. A month later, Susan filed a paternity action against Jack, alleging that he was actually Michael's father. Jack defended on the ground that the conclusive presumption of Fam. Code § 7540 made John the father as a matter of law. Susan opposed application of the presumption on the ground that it violated Michael's right to know the identity of his biological father. John moved for blood tests in the dissolution matter, which established his nonpaternity. Nevertheless, he did not support Susan's efforts to establish Jack's paternity. The trial court applied the presumption, holding that the state's legitimate concern for the child's welfare in preserving Michael's existing relationship with John outweighed any interest of Michael in knowing the true identity of his father. It also noted that the state's interest in preserving stable familial relationships exists even during dissolution of marriage.

Susan appealed, but the court of appeal affirmed. While it did not totally reject the proposition that a child's right to know his or her true biological father is a legitimate interest worthy of protection, it gave it little weight on the facts before it. Blood tests conclusively established John's nonpaternity, and Susan presumably knew that Jack was the true father. Therefore, the true facts were sufficiently known without a formal adjudication of Jack's paternity (30 Cal. App. 4th 1435, 1440-1441) .

The weightier consideration was that Michael had an ongoing father-child relationship with John. In contrast, there was the absence of any relationship whatsoever between Michael and Jack, and Jack's lack of interest in creating one. The court stated that to afford Jack parental status, including a duty of support and visitation rights, would likely only cause confusion, uncertainty, and embarrassment to the child (30 Cal. App. 4th 1435, 1441) .

Susan argued that the interest of the state in preserving the integrity of the family and protecting the child's welfare was rendered irrelevant because her marriage to John had been dissolved. But the court rejected the argument, noting that the familial relationship between the presumed father and the child does not necessarily terminate on dissolution of marriage. Most significantly, conclusive application of the presumption promotes the state's interest in the child's welfare. It noted the state's interest in preserving and protecting familial relationships that give young children social and emotional strength and stability. This interest is served, notwithstanding termination of the mother's marital relationship with the presumed father (30 Cal. App. 4th 1435, 1441-1442) .

NOTE:

In Michelle W. v. Ronald W., the California Supreme Court specifically rejected the avoidance of the "stigma of illegitimacy" as a valid state interest in applying the presumption. For this proposition, it cited the enactment of the Uniform Parentage Act and its elimination of the status of illegitimate child and of distinctions in the rights of children based on the marital status of their parents [Michelle W. v. Ronald W. (1985) 39 Cal. 3d 354, 362 n.5, 216 Cal. Rptr. 748, 703 P.2d 88] .

However, in later cases, courts have attempted to recast the avoiding of "stigma" as a legitimate state interest. In Michael H. v. Gerald D., the California court of appeal stated that notwithstanding the adoption of the UPA, which rendered illegitimacy to be without any legal effect, conclusive application of the presumption protects the child from the social stigma of being branded a child of an adulterous relationship [Michael H. v. Gerald D. (1987) 191 Cal. App. 3d 995, 1010, 236 Cal. Rptr. 810] . This recast stigma interest was cited favorably in Susan H. v. Jack S. (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 1435, 1440 n.3, 37 Cal. Rptr. 2d 120 , but ignored in County of Orange v. Leslie B. (1993) 14 Cal. App. 4th 976, 980 n.4, 17 Cal. Rptr. 2d 797 , discussed in § 171.39[3]]a].

THE COURT SHOULD ISSUE AN ORDER REQUIRING _____ [name(s) of mother, child, and alleged father(s)] TO SUBMIT TO BLOOD OR OTHER GENETIC TESTS TO DETERMINE PARENTAL RELATIONSHIP BECAUSE PATERNITY IS A RELEVANT FACT IN THIS _____ [ACTION or PROCEEDING].

A. Order to Submit to Genetic Tests. In a civil action in which paternity is a relevant fact, the court on timely motion by any party to the action must order the mother, child, and alleged father to submit to genetic tests; and, for this purpose, "genetic tests" means any genetic test that is generally acknowledged as reliable by accreditation bodies designated by the United States Secretary of Health and Human Services (Fam. Code § 7551).

[Optional] B. Selection of Laboratory for Tests. The tests must be performed by a laboratory approved by any accreditation body that has been approved by the Secretary of the United States Department of Health and Human Services, and any party or person at whose suggestion the tests have been ordered may demand that other experts, qualified as examiners of blood types, perform independent tests under order of the court, the results of which may be offered in evidence (Fam. Code § 7552).

[Optional] C. Experts' Unanimous Conclusion of Nonpaternity. If the court finds that the conclusions of all the experts, as disclosed by the evidence based on the tests are that the alleged father is not the father of the child, the question of paternity must be resolved accordingly (Fam. Code § 7554(a)).

[Optional] D. Tests Showing Probability of Paternity or Experts' Disagreement. If the experts disagree in their findings or conclusions or if the tests show the probability of the alleged father's paternity, the question of paternity must be submitted on all evidence including evidence based on the tests, subject to the court's discretion to exclude evidence if its probative value is substantially outweighed by the probability that its admission will necessitate the undue consumption of time or create a substantial danger of undue prejudice, of confusing the issues, or of misleading the jury (Fam. Code § 7554(b); see also Evid. Code § 352).

[Optional] E. Tests Reliable to Exclude Possible Father. Blood grouping tests are scientifically reliable when used to exclude a male as a possible father and the adoption of the Uniform Act on Blood Tests to Determine Paternity (Fam. Code § 7550 et seq.) is a recognition of the scientific reliability of such tests (Jackson v. Jackson (1967) 67 Cal. 2d 245, 248, 60 Cal. Rptr. 649, 430 P.2d 289 ; see County of Sonoma v. Grant W. (1986) 187 Cal. App. 3d 1439, 1445-1446, 232 Cal. Rptr. 471).

[Optional] F. Scientific Basis of Blood Tests. The forensic value of the results of medically approved blood tests to conclusively establish nonpaternity derives from the scientific application of immutable laws of inheritance: unless the child and reputed father share a compatible blood group or type, the existence of a paternal relationship is virtually impossible (Dodd v. Henkel (1978) 84 Cal. App. 3d 604, 608, 148 Cal. Rptr. 780).

[Optional] G. Use of HLA Blood Test to Prove Paternity. The Human Leucocyte Antigen (HLA) blood test is admissible in a paternity proceeding to prove paternity, assuming that an adequate foundation is laid (Cramer v. Morrison (1979) 88 Cal. App. 3d 873, 879-883, 153 Cal. Rptr. 865 ; County of Fresno v. Superior Court (1979) 92 Cal. App. 3d 133, 136-137, 154 Cal. Rptr. 660 ; see County of Sonoma v. Grant W. (1986) 187 Cal. App. 3d 1439, 1445-1446, 1448, 232 Cal. Rptr. 471).

[Optional] H. Persons Included in Alleged Father Category. Section 7551 of the Family Code authorizes a court to order men other than the defendant alleged father to take blood or other genetic tests in paternity actions (see Huntingdon v. Crowley (1966) 64 Cal. 2d 647, 652, 51 Cal. Rptr. 254, 414 P.2d 382 (involving predecessor statute)).

[Optional] I. Party's Refusal to Submit to Genetic Tests as Admissible Evidence. Any party's refusal to submit to court-ordered genetic tests is admissible in evidence in any proceeding to determine paternity (Fam. Code § 7551).

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion for an order requiring the mother, child, and alleged father or the mother, child, alleged father, and men other than the alleged father, including a presumed father under Fam. Code § 7540 and Fam. Code § 7611(a), to submit to blood or other genetic tests in an action for support and to establish paternity brought by the child through a guardian ad litem, by the mother, or by the district attorney. On and after January 1, 1998, statutes under the Uniform Act on Blood Tests to Determine Paternity (Fam. Code § 7550 et seq.) were amended to provide for "genetic" rather than simply "blood" testing, although Fam. Code § 7541 still makes express reference only to "blood tests." Thus, approved genetic testing other than simply blood testing may now be ordered, and this form takes this interpretation into account. Also note that a local child support agency may issue an administrative order requiring a mother, child, and alleged father to submit to genetic testing if prescribed conditions are met, in cases in which support enforcement services are provided [Fam. Code § 7558].

For purposes of this form, paragraphs A through G would be used to support the standard motion brought by any party to such proceedings for an order requiring the mother, child, and alleged father to submit to such tests.

Paragraphs A and H, in addition to any applicable Paragraphs B through G, would be used if it was desired to have men other than the alleged father also required to take blood or other genetic tests. Such a situation may arise if the mother was living with her husband at the time of conception and, under the conclusive presumption of Fam. Code § 7540, the husband would be considered the father of the child.

Paragraph I should be used if a party has refused to submit to a genetic test under Fam. Code § 7551, and the opposing party seeks to have the refusal admitted into evidence.

Fam. Code § 7550 et seq. (Uniform Act on Blood Tests to Determine Paternity) is the statutory basis for blood or other genetic testing to determine paternity. Nothing in Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.010 et seq. (general discovery provisions for physical examination) affects tests under this Act [Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.010(a)].

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Tests Reliable to Exclude Possible Father

In Jackson v. Jackson (1967) 67 Cal. 2d 245, 60 Cal. Rptr. 649, 430 P.2d 289 , plaintiff husband and defendant wife were married in Nevada. They returned to California, but wife left husband four days after the ceremony. Plaintiff filed suit for annulment. Defendant's denial alleged that she was pregnant with plaintiff's child, and asked for attorney's fees, and support and maintenance for herself and the unborn child. Plaintiff was ordered to pay monthly support, prenatal care, hospital expenses, and counsel fees. After the child was born, plaintiff, defendant, and the child were ordered to submit to blood tests, which results indicated that plaintiff could not be the father of the child. Plaintiff's motion to terminate all prior orders for support and expenses on the basis of the blood tests was denied. In reversing the trial court and ruling that blood tests were admissible to avoid operation of the conclusive presumption of the predecessor statute to Fam. Code § 7540, the Supreme Court said that blood grouping tests are scientifically reliable when used to exclude a male as a possible father and that the adoption of the Uniform Act on Blood Tests to Determine Paternity [see Fam. Code § 7550 et seq.] is a recognition of the scientific reliability of such tests (67 Cal. 2d 245, 246-248) .

In County of Sonoma v. Grant W. (1986) 187 Cal. App. 3d 1439, 232 Cal. Rptr. 471 , defendant in a paternity action entered into a stipulation with plaintiff county to submit to human leukocyte antigen (HLA) blood tests to determine the probability of his paternity. Under the stipulation, the blood of defendant, the mother, and the child were to be drawn at a Santa Rosa laboratory and analyzed at Irwin Memorial Blood Bank in San Francisco. The parties also stipulated that the test results and written reports would be admissible as evidence in the paternity action. The blood samples were then drawn at the Santa Rosa laboratory, but contrary to the stipulation and without defendant's approval, plaintiff sent the samples to Roche Biomedical Laboratories (Roche) in North Carolina. Over defendant's objections, the trial court admitted the testimony of Roche's director of paternity testing regarding the procedures used in making the blood tests, that defendant could not be excluded as the child's father, and that the statistical probability that defendant was the father was between 99.06 and 99.95 percent. The court found beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant was the child's natural father. The father appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, relying on the analysis in Cramer v. Morrison (1979) 88 Cal. App. 3d 873, 877-878, 880-882, 153 Cal. Rptr. 865 (discussed under § 171.27[3][c]), to preliminarily note that the HLA test can prove nonpaternity much more conclusively than earlier tests, and statistically significant estimates of the probability of actual paternity can now be made (187 Cal. App. 3d 1439, 1442-1446) .

[b] Scientific Basis of Blood Tests

In Dodd v. Henkel (1978) 84 Cal. App. 3d 604, 148 Cal. Rptr. 780 , an action to establish paternity and for support of a child, plaintiff mother made an offer of proof that the medical expert appointed by the court to conduct blood tests would testify that defendant was among the 141/2 to 15 percent of the population that could be the father of the child. In sustaining defendant's objection, the trial court concluded that such evidence had no probative value. The jury returned a special verdict of nonpaternity, judgment was entered for defendant, and plaintiff appealed. In sustaining the lower court verdict, the court of appeal stated that the forensic value of the results of medically approved blood tests to establish conclusively nonpaternity derives from the scientific application of immutable laws of inheritance: unless the child and reputed father share a compatible blood type or group, the existence of a paternal relationship is virtually impossible. But the converse principle sanctioning the affirmative use of inconclusive blood-test evidence to prove paternity is without precedent and generally rejected on the grounds of the highly prejudicial nature of such evidence and its irrelevance in manifesting no more than a mere possibility of paternity through inclusion within a general blood-type classification (84 Cal. App. 3d 604, 606-608) .

[c] Use of HLA Blood Test to Prove Paternity

In Cramer v. Morrison (1979) 88 Cal. App. 3d 873, 153 Cal. Rptr. 865 , an action to establish paternity, the trial court granted defendant's motion in limine to exclude the results of a Human Leucocyte Antigen (HLA) blood test on the grounds that while available data indicated the test was reliable, under the California Uniform Act on Blood Tests to Determine Paternity, the evidence was inadmissible and there was a possibility that statistical evidence resulting from the test if introduced into evidence would have a prejudicial effect on the jury which would outweigh its probative value. If admitted into evidence, results of the HLA test would have indicated that there was a 98.3 percent probability that the defendant was the father of the child. The jury returned a verdict for defendant and the trial court entered a judgment decreeing that defendant was not the father of the child. The court of appeal reversed, pointing out that even the defendant agreed that the HLA was a valid scientific test. The court said that at the time the Uniform Act on Blood Tests was enacted in California, the Landsteiner blood test to prove nonpaternity was the standard blood test in use and was probably the blood test referred to in the statute. In addition, the court noted that the Legislature when enacting the Uniform Act retained the provision of the model act that provided that blood tests could serve as conclusive evidence of an alleged father's nonpaternity, but omitted the part that allowed admission of the results of blood tests to show the possibility of paternity. The court also noted the Legislature omitted similar sections when enacting the Uniform Parentage Act. The court interpreted these omissions from the two uniform acts to mean that the Legislature did not want the standard Landsteiner blood grouping tests to be used to prove parentage, but concluded that the Legislature did not mean that HLA tests could not be used to prove paternity. The court noted that in the case of Dodd v. Henkel (1978) 84 Cal. App. 3d 604, 608, 148 Cal. Rptr. 780 , the court's ruling that blood tests were not admissible in California to prove paternity, was based on the assumption that the blood tests referred to in the prohibition were the Landsteiner tests. The court then said that the use of HLA tests to prove paternity is not prohibited by California law, and that given an adequate foundation being laid for the admission of the tests, the HLA test was admissible in a paternity proceeding to prove paternity (88 Cal. App. 3d 873, 877-886) .

The facts and procedural background of County of Sonoma v. Grant W. (1986) 187 Cal. App. 3d 1439, 232 Cal. Rptr. 471 , are discussed in § 171.27[3][a]. The court of appeal held that the trial court could properly consider an HLA blood test in conjunction with evidence adduced at trial in the form of witness testimony in order to determine a meaningful probability-of-paternity percentage (187 Cal. App. 3d 1439, 1447-1448) . The court noted that Cramer v. Morrison (1979) 88 Cal. App. 3d 873, 883, 153 Cal. Rptr. 865 , held that California did not preclude the use of the HLA test to prove paternity as well as nonpaternity (187 Cal. App. 3d 1439, 1446) . The court also determined that the predecessor statute to what is now Fam. Code § 7551, enacted after Cramer, permits all blood tests, including inclusionary, exclusionary, and probability-of-paternity percentages, to be admitted on the issue of paternity subject to the restrictions of Evid. Code § 352, which provides that evidence may be excluded if its probative value is substantially outweighed by undue consumption of time, or substantial danger of undue prejudice, confusing the issues, or misleading the jury (187 Cal. App. 3d 1439, 1446-1447) .

County of Fresno v. Superior Court (1979) 92 Cal. App. 3d 133, 154 Cal. Rptr. 660 , was an action to establish paternity, in which the county moved under the predecessor statute to what is now Fam. Code § 7551 for an order that the mother, child, and defendant submit to a Human Leucocyte Antigen (HLA) test, after they had already taken Landsteiner extended factor blood tests, which indicated that the defendant could not be excluded as the child's father and that the probability that he was the father was 47 percent. The defendant opposed the motion on the grounds that the HLA test would be used to establish paternity. The trial court denied the motion, and the court of appeal on the county's request issued a writ of mandate directing the trial court to grant the motion and order the HLA tests. The court held that under Fam. Code § 7551, the trial court had no discretion to deny an HLA test on demand of any party at whose suggestion an original Landsteiner test had been ordered. The court held that the statute was mandatory, as far as the second test was concerned, and that the county did not have to show "good cause" for the more precise HLA test. The court ruled the very existence of another more sophisticated and exact test such as the HLA was sufficient good cause, in and of itself, to warrant use of the second test by the trial court in successfully completing its determination as to whether defendant was the child's father. The court also said, citing Cramer v. Morrison (1979) 88 Cal. App. 3d 873, 879-886, 153 Cal. Rptr. 865 , that the HLA test is admissible to prove paternity, assuming that an adequate foundation is laid (92 Cal. App. 3d 133, 135, 137-138) .

[d] Persons Included in Alleged-Father Category

In Huntingdon v. Crowley (1966) 64 Cal. 2d 647, 51 Cal. Rptr. 254, 414 P.2d 382 , plaintiff sued defendant to establish paternity of her child and for reasonable support. She alleged that she and defendant had engaged in numerous acts of sexual intercourse over a four-month period during which time she had intercourse with no other persons but defendant. Defendant admitted to having intercourse with plaintiff only during the first month of the four-month period. Conception was established to have occurred in the last three months. Testimony showed, as defendant had alleged, that plaintiff had had intercourse with two other named men during the probable period of conception. Although plaintiff, as early as the pretrial conference, had notice of defendant's evidence concerning her sexual relations with the other men, she waited until after the defense had rested its case before making a motion for blood tests. Although the court ordered the blood tests be taken, it refused to admit the results into evidence on the ground that there was an insufficient foundation of medical acceptance for the particular tests conducted. The jury found for defendant, judgment was entered accordingly, and plaintiff appealed.

The California Supreme Court reversed on other grounds. However, in interpreting the predecessor statute to Fam. Code § 7551 with the same wording, the Supreme Court said that taken in its context in the statute, the phrase "alleged father" appears to mean the man actually charged by the complainant with being the father of the child, rather than any other man. However, the Court said that the statute does not expressly exclude blood tests of men other than the alleged father and this evidence has been admitted in both California and other states (64 Cal. 2d 647, 652-656) .

NOTE:

The particular California case that the Court relied on for its statement that results of blood tests of men other than those of the alleged father had been admitted in California, Foster v. Gray (1962) 203 Cal. App. 2d 434, 436, 21 Cal. Rptr. 429 , does not in fact clearly state that a blood test had been ordered of any other man except the defendant in that action. Therefore, since the Supreme Court decided the case on issues other than the propriety of ordering blood tests of a man other than the alleged father, counsel should view the Court's language as dicta. A man other than an original party who is alleged to be the actual biological father of the child should always be made a party to the action [see Fam. Code § 7635(b)].

[a] Tests Showing Probability of Paternity or Expert's Disagreement

In City and County of San Francisco v. Givens (2000) 85 Cal. App. 4th 51, 101 Cal. Rptr. 2d 859 , plaintiff city and county government brought an action to have defendant, a putative father, declared to be the father of a particular child born in March of 1996. Defendant took a blood test. Fam. Code § 7555 provides that a rebuttable presumption exists that if the paternity index score, as calculated by experts comparing genetic markers, is 100 or greater, then the person tested is the father. Defendant's index score was 1290. The score amounted to a 99.92 percent likelihood of paternity. However, defendant testified that he did not have access to the mother at the time of conception. The mother testified that she and appellant had sex one weekend about nine months before the baby was born. The trial court entered an order finding there was no probability defendant was the father. In the course of affirming the judgment, the appellate court held that the paternity presumption raised by the blood test result was not conclusive and had to be considered with other evidence. The appellate court found that defendant's testimony by itself constituted substantial evidence; and that the trial court's finding that defendant did not have access to the mother at the time of conception was supported by defendant's clear and convincing testimony (85 Cal. App. 4th 862-863) .

[b] Persons Included in Alleged-Father Category

In In re William K. (2008) 161 Cal. App. 4th 1, 73 Cal. Rptr. 3d 737 , the court refused to set aside a voluntary declaration of paternity filed by one man on the motion of another man who was shown by genetic testing to be the child's biological father. The court found under Fam. Code § 7575(b)(1) that setting aside the declaration of paternity was not in the child's best interests. It also found that the biological father was not a presumed father because he had done nothing to assert his parental responsibilities or to secure custody of the child (161 Cal. App. 4th 1, 10-11) .

In In re J.L. (2008) 159 Cal. App. 4th 1010, 72 Cal. Rptr. 3d 27 , the court held that a man claiming to be the child's biological father had standing under Fam. Code § 7575(b)(3)(A) to seek a paternity test and to move to set aside the voluntary declaration of paternity filed by the mother's boyfriend. Because the paternity test confirmed that he was, in fact, the child's biological father, the court adjudged him to be the child's legal father and set aside the voluntary declaration of paternity. In addition, the court held that his federal constitutional right to due process allowed him to qualify for presumed father status, because he promptly attempted to assume his parental responsibilities. Misconduct by the mother's boyfriend, including threats and violence, estopped the boyfriend under Evid. Code § 623, from challenging the biological father's presumed father status (159 Cal. App. 4th 1010, 1019-1025) .

In Gabriel P. v. Suedi D. (2006) 141 Cal. App. 4th 850, 46 Cal. Rptr. 3d 437 , two men claimed to be the child's father. One claimed to be the child's father because he had executed a voluntary declaration of paternity and was also entitled to presumed father status under Fam. Code § 7611(c)(1) because he married the child's mother after the child was born and his name was on the child's birth certificate. The other man claimed to be the child's biological father and that the mother had prevented him from achieving presumed father status under Fam. Code § 7611(d) by concealing her pregnancy and the child's birth from him. The court held that because the results of genetic testing were relevant to resolve the issues presented by the first man's voluntary declaration of paternity, the trial court was authorized to order the tests on its own motion under Fam. Code § 7551 and to admit the results to resolve whether the voluntary declaration should be set aside under Fam. Code § 7575(b)(1) because the tests show that the declarant is not the child's father (141 Cal. App. 4th 850, 861-863) .

In City and County of San Francisco v. Cartagena (1995) 35 Cal. App. 4th 1061, 41 Cal. Rptr. 2d 797 , a man who had been judicially determined to be the father of a child sought to vacate the paternity judgment on the ground that the mother had committed extrinsic fraud by misrepresenting his paternal status. He requested that the court order blood testing of the mother and the child. A trial court granted this request, even though it had not yet ruled on his motion to set aside the judgment. The court of appeal reversed the trial court's order as premature. Although the blood tests could play a crucial role in accurately determining paternity, the father was not entitled to contest paternity until the prior judgment was vacated. The appellate court determined that the issue of vacating the prior order had to be resolved before the child and mother could be forced to undergo testing. If the trial court ultimately ruled that the judgment should be set aside, then the paternity of the child would be placed directly in issue and the blood test would become an appropriate subject of discovery. If, however, the trial court were to rule that the judgment should not be set aside, then the father would be barred from challenging the paternity determination, and the need for a blood test would become moot (35 Cal. App. 4th 1061, 1069) .

THE COURT IN A CIVIL ACTION IN WHICH PATERNITY IS A RELEVANT FACT AND IN WHICH IT HAS ORDERED THE MOTHER, CHILD, AND ALLEGED FATHER TO SUBMIT TO BLOOD OR OTHER GENETIC TESTS ON MOTION OF THE DEFENDANT IS REQUIRED TO ORDER THE COUNTY TO INITIALLY PAY THE COSTS OF SUCH BLOOD TESTS IF THE DEFENDANT IS INDIGENT.

A. Compensation of Experts for Blood or Other Genetic Tests. The court may order that the compensation of each expert witness appointed by the court in a paternity action to conduct blood or other genetic tests on the mother, child, and alleged father be paid by the parties in such proportions and at such times as it shall prescribe. In the alternative, it may order any party's proportion be paid by the county, and that, after payment by the parties, the county, or both, all, part, or none of such expenses be taxed as costs in the action (see Fam. Code § 7553).

B. County Required to Pay for Tests of Indigent Defendant. In a case of an indigent defendant receiving public assistance on whose behalf a paternity and support action have been brought, the compensation of the appointed expert for blood tests must be fixed by the court and ordered paid by the county subject to being later taxable to the parties as costs in the action in accordance with Section 7553 of the Family Code (Michael B. v. Superior Court (1978) 86 Cal. App. 3d 1006, 1010, 150 Cal. Rptr. 586).

Code § 7553* [see Fam. Code § 7558(d)].

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion for an order requiring the county to pay expenses of court-ordered blood or other genetic tests required to be taken by the mother, child, and alleged father in an action to establish paternity and for support that has been brought on behalf of the mother and child.

Optional Paragraph C may be used in a civil action or proceeding in which paternity is at issue, if (1) support enforcement services are being provided and (2) the local child support agency has issued an administrative order requiring the mother, child, and alleged father to submit to genetic testing [see Fam. Code § 7558]. Note that if the original test creates a rebuttable presumption of paternity under Fam. Code § 7555 and the result is contested, the support agency shall order an additional test only on request and advance payment of the contestant [Fam. Code § 7558(f)].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] County Required to Pay for Tests of Indigent Defendant

In Michael B. v. Superior Court (1978) 86 Cal. App. 3d 1006, 150 Cal. Rptr. 586 , the district attorney brought a paternity action on behalf of a mother and child receiving public assistance against defendant, a 16-year-old indigent minor, who was living with an aunt who was receiving public welfare assistance for his care. Defendant's motion to proceed in forma pauperis and for blood tests under what is now Fam. Code § 7551 was granted by the trial court, which ordered the district attorney to make arrangements for tests of the mother, the child, defendant, and another man, both of whom had sexual relations with the mother during the period of conception of the child. The court ordered that defendant share the costs of the tests of the mother and child with the other man after the district attorney had objected to the county having to pay the expenses of any of the tests. The trial court denied defendant's motion to modify this order and to have the county pay for the tests. Defendant then petitioned the court of appeal for a writ directing the trial court to issue an order directing that the county bear the cost of the blood tests without the necessity of him prepaying the costs on the grounds that the court's refusal to order the county to pay the costs violated due process and equal protection. In granting the writ, it directed the trial court to appoint an expert as required by statutes to conduct the blood tests, rather than have defendant's counsel make the arrangements. The court construed the Uniform Act on Blood Tests to Determine Paternity [see now Fam. Code § 7550 et seq.], to require, that in the case of an indigent defendant in which the child and the mother are receiving public assistance, the costs of the blood tests be fixed by the court and ordered paid by the county subject to being later taxable to the parties as costs in the action. It concluded that in such a case, the court cannot order prepayment of the expenses by the indigent. Otherwise, a defendant would be seriously deprived of possible defenses. Because the statutes in fact authorized prepayment by the county, the court found it unnecessary to discuss the defendant's contentions as to due process and equal protection (86 Cal. App. 3d 1006, 1008-1010) .

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion for summary judgment if the results of court-ordered blood or other genetic tests exclude the alleged father from the group of persons who might be the father of the minor child. The motion would be made in an action brought by the child through a guardian ad litem or by the mother against the alleged father.

[b] Related Uses

This memorandum with modifications might also be used by a mother or minor child in an action brought by the alleged father to establish the father-child relationship if the results of court-ordered blood or other genetic tests indicate the plaintiff is not included in the group of persons who might be the child's father.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Right to Counsel in Paternity Action

In Salas v. Cortez (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 22, 154 Cal. Rptr. 529, 593 P.2d 226 , a consolidation of two cases, each defendant had been personally served in an action to establish paternity and for support of a minor child and each defendant answered in propria persona denying all allegations. In the first case, the district attorney sent the defendant a seven-page set of interrogatories and moved to compel answers to the interrogatories when the defendant failed to answer them. The defendant, with the assistance of a county legal aid association, requested that the court appoint him legal counsel, denied that he was the child's father, and declared that he could not speak, read, or write English, and that he did not understand the numerous documents filed by the district attorney. In the second case, the defendant, also with the assistance of a county legal aid association, requested court-appointed counsel based on his indigency. He had also been served with interrogatories and requests for admissions. Both defendants' requests for court-appointed legal counsel were denied and each failed to appear at their respective trials. Each was found to be the father of the respective child and was ordered to pay support for the child. The California Supreme Court reversed both denials of court-appointed legal counsel and set aside the judgments of paternity. The Court said that both defendants were entitled to due process of law, and central to this constitutional right is the guarantee that absent a countervailing state interest of overriding significance, persons forced to settle their claims of right and duty through the judicial process must be given a meaningful opportunity to be heard. The touchstone of due process is fundamental fairness, and whether due process requires the appointment of counsel in a particular case depends on the interests involved and the nature of the proceedings. The Court said that the cases involved more than monetary judgments, and that a determination of paternity has grave implications for the alleged father, the child, the mother, and the state. Freedom from an incorrect imposition of a parent-child relationship on anyone is an equally compelling interest. In addition, failure to support a child may also be prosecuted criminally, and although an indigent is entitled to counsel in such a prosecution, paternity, which is the most significant element of the offense, may have already been determined in a civil proceeding in which the defendant was unrepresented by counsel. The Court said that all of the responsibilities of fatherhood were imposed by the state on the defendants who were unable to secure the assistance of counsel because they were indigent. Each made a diligent effort to obtain counsel and were ignorant of the intricacies of civil practice. Without the assistance of counsel, neither was in a position to respond adequately to the district attorney's discovery requests nor to initiate discovery himself. Without the assistance of counsel, neither was able to procure the assistance of experts to perform blood group tests which might conclusively have exonerated him. Each was found to be the father of a child on the basis of alleged facts that were deemed admitted because not contradicted, and testimony of the mother that was not subject to cross-examination. As a result, each was named the father of a child by involuntary default. A judgment rendered in this manner, the Court said, is not only unfair, it is unreliable. Unless the rights of indigent paternity defendants are protected, courts risk finding not the right man, but simply the poorest man to be the father of a child. If paternity is to be determined in an adversary proceeding at the behest of the state, the interests of all concerned demand that the defendant be able to defend fully and fairly, which he cannot do when his indigency prevents him from obtaining counsel. Therefore, the Court stated that in proceedings to determine paternity in which the state appears as a party or appears on behalf of a other or child, indigent defendants who can demonstrate their indigency are constitutionally entitled to appointed counsel. The Court made its ruling applicable to all cases not final as of the date of the opinion. In cases in which a judgment of paternity has become final, the fact that the defendant did not have counsel may not be advanced as a reason to attack that judgment (24 Cal. 3d 22, 24-31, 34) .

[a] Right to Counsel in Paternity Action

In County of Tulare v. Ybarra (1983) 143 Cal. App. 3d 580, 192 Cal. Rptr. 49 , the county filed an action against defendant on behalf of a minor child, alleging paternity and seeking to establish defendant's obligation to reimburse plaintiff for support payments made to the child. Defendant requested counsel, and the court appointed a public defender. When the public defender's subsequent motion to be relieved as counsel was granted, the court asked defendant if he knew of any attorneys who would represent him gratuitously. When no name was offered, the court stated that it knew of no attorneys that were willing to subsidize the county by representing defendant gratuitously, and dismissed the case without prejudice pending availability of counsel (143 Cal. App. 3d 580, 582) . On appeal, the court of appeal held that it had been improper to dismiss the action. It supported the trial court's holding that an indigent defendant in a paternity action is entitled to appointed counsel, but found no statutory or nonstatutory basis for the dismissal. The court noted the constitutional right to counsel in paternity actions, citing the special considerations at stake, and held that the trial court should have appointed private counsel to serve gratuitously (143 Cal. App. 3d 580, 584-586) .

A DEMURRER TO AN ANSWER WILL BE GRANTED IF THE ANSWER SETS UP LACHES OR THE STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS AS A DEFENSE TO AN ACTION BROUGHT WHILE THE CHILD IS STILL A MINOR.

A. Demurrer to Answer. A plaintiff may, within 10 days after the service of the answer, demur to the whole answer or to one or more of the several defenses set up in the answer (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 430.40(b), 430.50(b)).

B. Authority for Demurrer to Answer. A plaintiff may demur to an answer if it appears on the face of the answer or from any matter of which the court is required to or may take judicial notice that the answer fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a defense (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 430.20(a), 430.30(a)).

C. Laches Not Imputed to Child. Since in an action brought by a mother to establish paternity and to obtain support for a child, the child is the real party in interest and all benefits derived from the action belong to the child, laches cannot be imputed to the child during his or her minority (Perez v. Singh (1971) 21 Cal. App. 3d 870, 872, 97 Cal. Rptr. 920).

D. Statute of Limitations Tolled During Minority. Although the defense of the statute of limitations may be invoked in either a legal or equitable action, in an action to establish paternity and for support, the statute of limitations on the paternity aspect of the case is tolled during the minority of the child (Perez v. Singh (1971) 21 Cal. App. 3d 870, 872, 97 Cal. Rptr. 920).

E. Father's Duty of Support Not Affected by Statute of Limitations. The obligation of a father to support his child is a continuing duty against which the statute of limitations does not run during the time the child needs such support (*Perez v. Singh (1971) 21 Cal. This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a demurrer to an answer if the answer sets up laches or the statute of limitations as a defense to an action for support and to establish paternity while the child is a minor. The demurrer would be made by a plaintiff in an action brought by a child through a guardian ad litem, by the mother, or by a district attorney against an alleged father.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Laches Not Imputed to Child

In Perez v. Singh (1971) 21 Cal. App. 3d 870, 97 Cal. Rptr. 920 , plaintiff brought an action against defendant 14 years after her child was born to establish paternity and for support for the child. The defendant, an alleged father, moved for a change of venue to the county where he resided and demurred to the complaint on the ground it failed to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action based on laches and the statute of limitations. The lower court granted the change of venue, but did not rule on the demurrer. The action was transferred to defendant's county where the court sustained the demurrer without leave to amend and dismissed the action. The plaintiff appealed, raising the propriety of the court's ruling sustaining the general demurrer without leave to amend. In reversing the lower court, the court of appeal said that unlike the defense of the statute of limitations, which may be invoked in either a legal or equitable action, the defense of laches can be asserted only in equity. An action to establish paternity and to obtain support raises legal, not equitable issues, and laches may not be asserted as a bar to a legal action. Moreover, the court said, an action to establish the paternity of a child and to obtain support for a child is brought by the mother on behalf of the child. In such an action, the child is the real party in interest, and the statute of limitations on the paternity aspects of the case is tolled during the minority of the child. The court emphasized that the obligation of a father to support his child is a continuing duty against which the statute of limitations does not run during the time the child needs such support. The result would be no different if the complaint were considered to raise equitable issues. Since the action is brought on the child's behalf, and all benefits derived from it would belong to the child, the court said that laches could not be imputed to him or her during minority (21 Cal. App. 3d 870, 871-872) .

THE STIPULATED JUDGMENT IN THE ABOVE-ENTITLED PATERNITY ACTION SHOULD BE VACATED AND SET ASIDE BECAUSE THE JUDGMENT WAS ENTERED IN VIOLATION OF DEFENDANT'S DUE PROCESS RIGHTS.

A. Denial of Knowing and Intelligent Waiver of Right to Judicial Hearing Is Denial of Due Process. A judgment for paternity entered without the defendant's knowledge of the consequences of the judgment and without a knowing

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion to vacate and set aside an agreement for entry of judgment or a stipulated judgment of paternity and support if the judgment was entered between defendant and the district attorney or local child support agency without defendant's knowledge of the consequences of the agreement or without the knowing and intelligent waiver of the right to a hearing on the issues of paternity and ability to support.

Counsel should distinguish a stipulated judgment, which may result from the defendant's unequal bargaining position vis-a-vis the district attorney or local child support agency, from a default judgment. A default judgment results from a defendant's choice not to appear. If the defendant was given proper notice of the right to appointed counsel, due process does not require an on-the-record waiver of the right to appointed counsel before a default or default judgment is entered [County of Mendocino v. Ted S. (1990) 217 Cal. App. 3d 1202, 1206-1207, 266 Cal. Rptr. 452] . For points and authorities supporting a motion for appointed counsel, see § 171.30.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Denial of Knowing and Intelligent Waiver of Right to Judicial Hearing Is Denial of Due Process

In County of Los Angeles v. Soto (1984) 35 Cal. 3d 483, 198 Cal. Rptr. 779, 674 P.2d 750 , the California Supreme Court ruled that given the consequences of a judgment of paternity and support, an agreement to enter judgment entered without defendant's knowing and intelligent waiver of the right to a judicial hearing is constitutionally defective. Defendant had executed an Agreement for Entry of Judgment in conformity with (now former) Welf. & Inst. Code § 11476.1 before its amendment in 1980 conforming to the constitutional requirements of due process [now see Fam. Code § 17416]. In the agreement, defendant acknowledged paternity of the minor and stipulated to the amount of child support. Two years later, a contempt proceeding was brought against defendant for nonpayment of support, and he moved to vacate the judgment on the grounds that it was void for due process violations in that his consent was not voluntarily and knowingly obtained. Evidence at the hearing on defendant's motion revealed that the district attorney's office prosecuting the paternity and support action had not advised him of his right to a judicial proceeding in which the district attorney would have the burden of proving paternity and the amount of appropriate support. The trial court granted defendant's motion to set aside the judgment, concluding that the stipulated judgment was void for lack of a knowing, intelligent, and understanding waiver by defendant of his right to notice and opportunity to be heard on the issues of paternity and support. The Supreme Court held that a defendant must establish that he or she was unaware of the consequences of an agreement or of the fact that he or she waived rights by executing it, and that the agreement would not have been entered into had the defendant been aware of these facts (35 Cal. 3d 483, 485-490, 492) . As the record only established that defendant was not advised of his rights before executing theagreement, the Court reversed the trial court order and remanded the matter to the superior court to afford deendant a new hearing (35 Cl. 3d 483, 492).

County of Alameda v. Mosier (1984) 154 Cal. App. 3d 757, 201 Cal. Rptr. 550 , ruled that the Soto holding, discussed above, applied to a stipulated judgment between an unrepresented defendant and the district attorney. In that case the court remanded the case to the trial court for further proceedings consistent with the rule in Soto (154 Cal. App. 3d 757, 762) .

[b] Judgment in Violation of Due Process Is Voidable

The facts and procedural background of County of Los Angeles v. Soto (1984) 35 Cal. 3d 483, 198 Cal. Rptr. 779, 674 P.2d 750 , are discussed under § 171.32[3][a]. The California Supreme Court reversed the trial court's order insofar as it held the judgment of paternity was invalid. The burden of setting aside the judgment is on the defendant who must establish (1) that he or she was unaware of the consequences of the agreement or that execution of the agreement was a waiver of rights, and (2) that he or she would not have entered into the agreement had he or she been aware of these consequences. If the defendant establishes the involuntary nature of the agreement, the court must set aside the judgment. The judgment, however, is voidable, not void (35 Cal. 3d 483, 492, 492 n.4).

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Judgment in Violation of Due Process Is Voidable

Carlson v. Eassa (1997) 54 Cal. App. 4th 684, 62 Cal. Rptr. 2d 884 , concerned a trial courts' denial of a mother's motion to vacate a stipulated judgment for child support arrearages in an action originally brought under the Uniform Reciprocal Enforcement of Support Act [Fam. Code § 4800 et seq. (repealed, operative January 1, 1998, and superseded by Fam. Code § 4900 et seq.)]. Her motion was brought after a finding of paternity had previously been made. The stipulated judgment that plaintiff sought to vacate had been entered after the district attorney, who was prosecuting the URESA action, settled the mother's claim without her consent. The court of appeal reversed the trial court's order because the mother had not only failed to consent to the order, but her opposition to the settlement was known to the district attorney. His acts were therefore unauthorized, the underlying judgment was void, and the mother's motion should have been granted by the trial court (54 Cal. App. 4th 684, 696) .

§ 171.33 Supporting Contention That Paternity Determination Is Barred by Presumption That Mother's Husband Is Natural Father of Child Born During Marriage or Within 300 Days After Its Termination or Entry of Judgment of Separation [Fam. Code § 7611(a)]--Biological Father Who Lacks Presumed Father Status Has No Constitutionally Protected Interest That Defeats the Presumption or Standing Requirements to Rebut Presumption [Fam. Code § 7630]

PATERNITY OF THIS CHILD IS GOVERNED BY THE PRESUMPTION OF FAMILY CODE SECTION 7611(a), THAT THE HUSBAND OF A CHILD'S MOTHER IS THE CHILD'S FATHER IF THE CHILD WAS BORN _____ [specify applicable period DURING THE MARRIAGE OF THE MOTHER AND HER HUSBAND or WITHIN 300 DAYS OF THE TERMINATION OF THE MARRIAGE OF THE MOTHER AND HER HUSBAND or WITHIN 300 DAYS AFTER A JUDGMENT OF LEGAL SEPARATION IS ENTERED BY A COURT CONCERNING THE MARRIAGE OF THE MOTHER AND HER HUSBAND], AND PLAINTIFF, WHO LACKS THE STATUS OF A PRESUMED FATHER, HAS NO CONSTITUTIONALLY PROTECTED INTEREST THAT DEFEATS THIS PRESUMPTION OR THE STATUTORY REQUIREMENTS FOR STANDING TO REBUT THE PRESUMPTION. THEREFORE, PLAINTIFF'S PATERNITY ACTION SHOULD BE DISMISSED.

A. Presumption of Paternity. Family Code Section 7611(a) creates a presumption that a man is the natural father of a child if he and the child's natural mother are or have been married to each other and the child is born during the marriage, or within 300 days after the marriage is terminated by death, annulment, declaration of invalidity, or divorce, or after a judgment of separation is entered by the court (Family Code Section 7611(a)).

B. Rebuttal of Presumption. The presumption arising under Family Code Section 7611(a) is a rebuttable presumption affecting the burden of proof and may be rebutted only by clear and convincing evidence presented by a person having standing under Family Code Section 7630 (Dawn D. v. Superior Court (1998) 17 Cal. 4th 932, 937-938, 72 Cal. Rptr. 2d 871, 952 P.2d 1139 ; see Family Code Section 7630(a)).

C. Alleged Biological Father Who Is Not Presumed Father Lacks Constitutional Right to Challenge Presumption. An alleged biological father of a child who lacks the status of a "presumed father" under the Family Code has no constitutionally protected interest in establishing a parental relationship with the child sufficient to defeat the presumption of Family Code Section 7611(a) or the requirements of standing to challenge the presumption set forth in Family Code Section 7630(a), because a purported biological link with a child, coupled with a mere desire to establish such a parental relationship does not give rise to a fundamental liberty interest protected by the Due Process Clause (Dawn D. v. Superior Court (1998) 17 Cal. 4th 932, 941-942, 944, 72 Cal. Rptr. 2d 871, 952 P.2d 1139 ; Lisa I. v. Superior Court (2005) 133 Cal. App. 4th 605, 34 Cal. Rptr. 3d 927).

[2] Comments

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that an alleged biological father who is not a "presumed father" has no constitutionally protected interest that defeats the presumption of Fam. Code § 7611(a) or the requirements of standing to challenge the presumption under Fam. Code § 7630.

Fam. Code § 7611(a) creates a presumption that a man is a child's natural father if he and the child's natural mother are or have been married to each other and the child was born during the marriage, or within 300 days after its termination or after a judgment of separation is entered by the court. However, this presumption is rebuttable by clear and convincing evidence presented by a person having standing under Fam. Code § 7630 [Dawn D. v. Superior Court (1998) 17 Cal. 4th 932, 937-938, 72 Cal. Rptr. 2d 871, 952 P.2d 1139] . That section confers standing to declare the existence of a father and child relationship that is presumed under Fam. Code § 7611(a), (b), or (c) only on a child, the child's natural mother, a man presumed to be the child's father under Fam. Code § 7611(a), (b), or (c), an adoption agency to whom the child has been relinquished, or a prospective adoptive parent of the child [Fam. Code § 7630(a)].

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, for example, counsel should show why the alleged biological father who has brought the paternity action does not meet the statutory requirements for being a presumed father, or the requirements for standing to bring the action or rebut the applicable presumption of paternity [see Fam. Code §§ 7611, 7630].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Rebuttal of Presumption

In Dawn D. v. Superior Court (1998) 17 Cal. 4th 932, 72 Cal. Rptr. 2d 871, 952 P.2d 1139 , plaintiff brought an action to establish his paternity of a child that was conceived during a four month period in which the child's mother lived with him while she was separated from her husband. The mother had resumed living with her husband before the child was born, and plaintiff had never had any contact with the child. He filed his action before the child's birth, completed a parenting class, and attempted to negotiate an agreement with the mother and her husband for child support and visitation, but no agreement was reached. The mother moved for judgment on the pleadings, but a trial court denied her motion on the ground that plaintiff should be permitted to try to establish his paternity, and it granted his motion for blood testing. The mother petitioned the appellate court for a stay of the proceedings and for a writ of mandate to compel the trial court to vacate its order and enter a new order granting her motion. The court of appeal denied her petition and the Supreme Court granted review.

The Supreme Court reversed the judgment, ordering the appellate court to grant the relief the mother had requested. The Court's majority held that plaintiff had no constitutionally protected liberty interested that would defeat California's presumption under Fam. Code § 7611(a) that the mother's husband is the child's father, or that would overcome the requirements of Fam. Code § 7630(a)(1) for standing to challenge the presumption. Fam. Code § 7611(a) creates a presumption that a man is a child's natural father if he and the child's natural mother are or have been married to each other and the child was born during the marriage, or within 300 days after its termination or after a judgment of separation is entered by the court. However, this presumption is rebuttable by clear and convincing evidence presented by a person having standing under Fam. Code § 7630. That section confers standing to declare the existence of a father and child relationship that is presumed under Fam. Code § 7611(a), (b), or (c) only on a child, the child's natural mother, or a man presumed to be the child's father under Fam. Code § 7611(a), (b), or (c). Plaintiff, an alleged biological father, met none of the statutory requirements (17 Cal. 4th 932, 937-938) .

[b] Alleged Biological Father Who Is Not Presumed Father Lacks Constitutional Right to Challenge Presumption

The facts and procedural background of Dawn D. v. Superior Court (1998) 17 Cal. 4th 932, 72 Cal. Rptr. 2d 871, 952 P.2d 1139 , are discussed under § 171.33[3][a]. The Supreme Court rejected plaintiff's claim that he had a constitutional "liberty interest," protected as a matter of substantive due process, in having the opportunity to establish a parental relationship with the child. Although the trial court found that plaintiff had done everything he could to demonstrate a commitment to his parental responsibilities, and therefore had due process rights that must be balanced against the state's interests in enforcing the paternity presumption in favor of the husband, the Supreme Court concluded that the trial court had erred in its analysis.

The interest plaintiff sought to protect was his interest in establishing a relationship with his child who was born to a woman married to another man at the time of the child's conception and birth. The U.S. Supreme Court has previously considered and rejected due process protection for this interest, in Michael H. v. Gerald D. (1989) 491 U.S. 110, 124-127, 109 S. Ct. 2333, 105 L. Ed. 2d 91 . In rejecting the liberty interest claim of a man who was not only the biological father, but also had an actual personal relationship with the child, the plurality of the Michael H. Court necessarily rejected as well the position that a biological connection without any personal relationship gives rise to a protected liberty interest. Even dissenting Justices in Michael H. rejected the possibility that a biological father having no existing personal relationship with his child born to woman married to another man could have any liberty interest in establishing a relationship with the child. In this case, plaintiff never had any personal relationship with the child, only an alleged biological link with an attempt to negotiate an agreement for child support and visitation. Based on Michael H., a biological father's mere desire to establish a personal relationship with the child is not a fundamental liberty interest protected by the Due Process clause (17 Cal. 4th 932, 941-942) .

In Lisa I. v. Superior Court (2005) 133 Cal. App. 4th 605, 34 Cal. Rptr. 3d 927 , the court of appeal rejected the contention that a child's biological father, who has no relationship with the child and who has failed to make substantial efforts to establish a parent-child relationship with the child or to provide for the child's support, has a constitutional liberty interest in the opportunity to develop a relationship with the child. The court noted that this was precisely the test proposed by the dissent in Dawn D., which was specifically rejected by a majority of that court. Under Dawn D., biological fathers who have developed an existing relationship with a child have a protected liberty interest. The "opportunity" interest claimed by the biological father in this case is significantly limited, if it exists at all, to those situations in which the marital parents are dead or have relinquished an interest in the child by placing the child for adoption by third persons.

§ 171.34 Supporting Contention That Paternity of Child is Conclusive as to Married Person Who Consented to Spouse's Artificial Insemination or Contracted for Insemination of Third Party Surrogate Mother With Fertilized Ovum from Unrelated Parties [Fam. Code § 7613]

[1] FORM

THE PETITION IN THIS MATTER TO ESTABLISH PARENTAGE OF THE CHILD SHOULD BE GRANTED AS A MATTER OF LAW AGAINST RESPONDENT(S) BECAUSE

[EITHER]

RESPONDENT, WHILE MARRIED TO _____ (SPECIFY NAME OF BIRTH MOTHER) CONSENTED IN WRITING TO HER ARTIFICIAL INSEMINATION BY A LICENSED PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON WITH SPERM FROM A THIRD PARTY DONOR, IN ACCORDANCE WITH THE PROCEDURES SET FORTH IN SECTION 7613 OF THE FAMILY CODE.

[OR]

RESPONDENTS, WHILE MARRIED TO EACH OTHER, CONTRACTED WITH _____ (SPECIFY NAME OF SURROGATE MOTHER), FOR HER ARTIFICIAL INSEMINATION BY A LICENSED PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON WITH OVUM FERTILIZED IN VITRO THAT WAS DERIVED FROM OVUM AND SPERM FROM OTHER UNRELATED DONORS, SUCH THAT THE CHILD CONCEIVED THEREBY BEARS NO GENETIC RELATIONSHIP TO RESPONDENTS OR THE SURROGATE MOTHER.

[EITHER, if husband consented to wife's artificial insemination]

Husband Who Consents to Artificial Insemination of Wife Is Deemed Father of Child. A husband who consents in writing to the artificial insemination of his wife, pursuant to Section 7613 of the Family Code, with semen donated by another man is "treated in law" as if he were the natural father of a child thereby conceived, and the semen donor is treated in law as if he were not the natural father (Fam. Code § 7613).

[OR, if husband or wife (or both of them) contracted with third party surrogate mother for her insemination with fertilized ovum from unrelated parties]

Married Persons Who Contract for Artificial Insemination of Third Party Surrogate Mother With Fertilized Ovum from Other Unrelated Parties Are Deemed Parents of Child. A husband and wife who have contracted with a third party to serve as a gestational surrogate mother, by means of her artificial insemination with ovum fertilized in vitro and derived from unrelated donors of egg and sperm are deemed the lawful parents of a child conceived thereby, on the same basis as a husband who consents to his wife's artificial insemination under Section 7613 of the Family Code (In re Marriage of Buzzanca (1998) 61 Cal. App. 4th 1410, 1418, 1421, 72 Cal. Rptr. 2d 280).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that parentage of a child may be deemed conclusive as against either (1) a husband who consented to his wife's artificial insemination under Fam. Code § 7613, or (2) as against a married couple who contracted for the services of a gestational surrogate mother, that is, a woman artificially inseminated with fertilized ovum from still other, unrelated sperm and ovum donors. In the case of the husband, the first alternative allegation and authority should be used; and in the case of the married couple, the second alternative allegation and authority should be used.

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Married Persons Who Contract for Artificial Insemination of Third Party Surrogate Mother With Fertilized Ovum from Other Unrelated Parties Are Deemed Parents of Child

In In re Marriage of Buzzanca (1998) 61 Cal. App. 4th 1410, 72 Cal. Rptr. 2d 280 , a married couple entered into a written contract with a woman, by which it was agreed that she would serve as a (gestational) "surrogate mother" of a child to be conceived through artificial insemination of ovum fertilized in vitro, originating from sperm and ovum donated by still other, unrelated parties--such that there would be no genetic connection between the child and the surrogate mother or the married couple. Pursuant to this contract, the artificial insemination took place under the auspices of a licensed California physician. After the surrogate became pregnant, the couple experienced marital problems and the husband petitioned for dissolution, claiming there were no children of the marriage. In the wife's response, she asserted that they were expecting a child by means of a surrogate contract, and the child was born within a few days. Later, she filed a separate petition to establish her parentage of the child, which was consolidated with the dissolution case. A trial court ultimately ruled that the wife was not the lawful mother of the child and the husband, therefore, could not be the lawful father or owe support; in essence, the child had no legal parent. The wife petitioned for a writ of supersedeas to stay the judgment, as well as filing an appeal. The stay was granted pending appeal.

The court of appeal reversed the judgment, holding that the wife and husband were both the lawful parents of the child, and directed that the trial court enter a new judgment to that effect. The appellate court found that the trial court erred in assuming that legal motherhood could be established only by either giving birth or by contributing an egg--when well-settled law holds that fatherhood can be established by conduct apart from giving birth or being genetically related to a child. The appellate court said that, by parity of reasoning with the rule that makes a husband the lawful father of a child conceived through artificial insemination of his wife with his consent [Fam. Code § 7613], both spouses here should be deemed the parents. In each instance, a child is procreated because a medical procedure was initiated and consented to by the intended parents, with the only difference (from artificial insemination) here being that there is no reason to distinguish between husband and wife (61 Cal. App. 4th 1413, 1418) .

In this case, the wife is situated like a husband in an artificial insemination case whose consent triggers a medical procedure that results in a pregnancy and eventual birth of a child. The husband's argument here that maternity may only be established through proof of birth or proof of genetic contribution, was an unsound reading of the statutory bases for establishing parentage, because, under Fam. Code § 7610, maternity may be established either by proof of giving birth or "under this part [of the Family Code]." It noted that the California Supreme Court had previously concluded that certain other parentage statutes, which on their face applied only to men, were also dispositive of the question of maternity, by parity of reasoning [see Johnson v. Calvert, 5 Cal. 4th 84, 92, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 494, 851 P.2d 776] . Johnson, in dictum, had also foreseen the type of situation found in this case and postulated that in such a situation, "a rule recognizing the intending parents as the child's legal, natural parents should best promote certainty and stability" [Johnson v. Calvert, 5 Cal. 4th 84, 94-95, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 494, 851 P.2d 776] (61 Cal. App. 4th 1413, 1424). Finally, the appellate court concluded that the husband should be deemed the child's father even if the wife had promised to assume all responsibility for the child's care, and even if the written surrogacy contract had not yet been signed when conception and implantation took place. Those occurrences were nonetheless the direct result of actions taken pursuant to an oral agreement, which envisioned that the fertilization, implantation, and ensuing pregnancy would go forward. Thus, for all practical purposes, the husband caused the child's conception "every bit as much as if things had been done the old fashioned way" (61 Cal. App. 4th 1413, 1426).

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Husband Who Consents to Artificial Insemination of Wife Is Deemed Father of Child

In Steven S. v. Deborah D. (2005) 127 Cal. App. 4th 319, 25 Cal. Rptr. 3d 482 , the court of appeal held that Fam. Code § 7613(b) applies even if the sperm donor and the woman who conceives the child are known to each other and the woman acknowledges that the donor is the child's father. This statute does not make an exception for known sperm donors or for cases in which the parties have an intimate relationship (127 Cal. App. 4th 319, 324-326) .

In Dunkin v. Boskey (2000) 82 Cal. App. 4th 171, 98 Cal. Rptr. 2d 44 , the court of appeal held that a written agreement between unmarried parties to grant paternity rights to the male party with respect to a child conceived by artificial insemination is binding, and may be enforced by an action for unjust enrichment. Although the case did not fall within the framework of Fam. Code § 7613 because the parties were unmarried the plaintiff's status had the elements of those of a lawful father by virtue of his written consent to the artificial insemination of his nonmarital partner and his subsequent voluntary assumption of fatherhood duties. In addition, the UPA expresses a legislative preference for the extension of parent-child relationships equally to married and unmarried parties because it was enacted to eliminate the distinction between legitimate and illegitimate children. In this case, although the agreement at issue could not grant parental rights to the plaintiff, or contract or tort damages for his loss of a relationship with the child, he could sue for unjust enrichment of the child's mother. Therefore, the trial court erred in sustaining a demurrer to the plaintiff's complaint (82 Cal. App. 4th 171, 196-198) .

[b] Married Persons Who Contract for Artificial Insemination of Third Party Surrogate Mother With Fertilized Ovum from Other Unrelated Parties Are Deemed Parents of Child

In Robert B. v. Susan B. (2003) 109 Cal. App. 4th 1109 , the court of appeal held that a single woman who gave birth to a son after being implanted with a married couple's embryos, which had been created from the husband's sperm and an anonymous donor's eggs, was the child's mother under Fam. Code § 7610; and that the husband was the child's father under Fam. Code § 7630. The court of appeal further held that the husband's wife lacked standing as an "interested person" to bring an action to determine maternity under Fam. Code § 7650. The appellate court reasoned that the trial court's ruling "comported with this state's interest 'in establishing paternity for all children' [see Fam. Code § 7570], recognized the valid claims of gestational mothers, and adhered to the Supreme Court's determination that there can be only one natural mother under California law." Regarding the father's wife, the appellate court declined to extend In re Marriage of Buzzanca (1998) 61 Cal. App. 4th 1410, 72 Cal. Rptr. 2d 280 to a situation in which (1) a woman has no genetic or gestational relationship to the child, (2) a woman has no status comparable to that of a presumed father under Fam. Code § 7611(d) (reception of child into home), and (3) another woman asserts a legally recognized claim. Here, it was undisputed that the wife had no factual basis on which to claim presumed mother status (109 Cal. App. 4th 1109, 1116-1117) .

§ 171.35 Supporting Contention That Parentage Presumption Arising from Child's Reception Into Home [Fam. Code § 7611(d)] Is Not Necessarily Rebutted by Admission of No Biological Connection to Child if Court Proceeding Is Not "Appropriate Action" [Fam. Code § 7612(a)]

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DESPITE THE ADMISSION BY _____ [specify name of presumed father or mother] THAT HE/SHE IS NOT THE BIOLOGICAL PARENT OF THE CHILD, THIS FACT ALONE DOES NOT REBUT THE PRESUMPTION OF PATERNITY/MATERNITY ARISING FROM RECEPTION OF THE CHILD INTO HIS/HER HOME AND HOLDING OUT THE CHILD AS HIS/HER NATURAL CHILD, BECAUSE THE INSTANT PROCEEDING IS NOT AN "APPROPRIATE ACTION" IN WHICH TO FIND THE PRESUMPTION REBUTTED, BECAUSE _____ [set forth reason, e.g., NO ONE ELSE IS A CANDIDATE FOR FATHERHOOD AND THE CHILD WILL OTHERWISE BE LEFT FATHERLESS].

A. Man Who Receives Child Into Home and Holds Child Out as His Own Is Presumed the Child's Father. A man is presumed to be the natural father of a child if he receives the child into his home and openly holds out the child as his natural child (Fam. Code § 7611(d)).

B. Presumption Under Fam. Code § 7611 May Be Rebutted by Clear and Convincing Evidence in "Appropriate Action." Except as provided in Family Code Section 7540 et seq. and Family Code Section 7570 et seq. or in Family Code Section 20102, a presumption arising under Family Code Section 7611 is a rebuttable presumption affecting the burden of proof and may be rebutted in an appropriate action only by clear and convincing evidence (*Fam. C. Admission of No Biological Connection to Child Does Not Necessarily Rebut Presumption of Fam. Code § 7611(d) if Court Proceeding Is Not "Appropriate Action." Although the presumption of Family Code Section 7611(d) is rebuttable under Family Code Section 7612(a) by clear and convincing evidence that the presumed father is not the child's natural father, the presumed father's admission that he is not the biological father does not necessarily rebut the presumption when the proceeding is not an "appropriate action" (In re Nicholas H. (2002) 28 Cal. 4th 56, 59, 70, 120 Cal. Rptr. 2d 146, 46 P.3d 932).

This memorandum may be submitted in support of the contention that the status of a person as a presumed father, arising from a man's reception of a child into his home and holding out the child as his own [Fam. Code § 7611(d)], is not necessarily rebutted by his admission that he is not the biological father, when the court proceeding at issue is not an "appropriate action," as that term is used in Fam. Code § 7612(a) [In re Nicholas H. (2002) 28 Cal. 4th 56, 59, 70, 120 Cal. Rptr. 2d 146, 46 P.3d 932] . Optional Paragraph D may be used if a woman seeks to establish a presumption of motherhood from her reception of a child into her home and holding out the child as her own [Charisma R. v. Kristina S. (2009) 175 Cal. App. 4th 361, 367-381, 96 Cal. Rptr. 3d 26 ; Charisma R. v. Kristina S. (2006) 140 Cal. App. 4th 301, 307-308, 44 Cal. Rptr. 3d 332 ; In re Karen C. (2002) 101 Cal. App. 4th 932, 934, 938, 124 Cal. Rptr. 2d 677] .

In determining whether a man has received a child into his home and openly held out the child as his own under Fam. Code § 7611(d), courts have looked to such factors as whether the man actively helped the mother in prenatal care, whether he paid pregnancy and birth expenses commensurate with his ability to do so, whether he promptly took legal action to obtain custody of the child, whether he sought to have his name placed on the birth certificate, whether and how long he cared for the child, whether there is unequivocal evidence that he acknowledged the child, the number of people to whom he acknowledged the child, whether he provided for the child after the child no longer resided with him, whether he pursued completion of the required paperwork if the child needed public benefits, and whether his care was merely incidental [In re T.R. (2005) 132 Cal. App. 4th 1202, 1211, 34 Cal. Rptr. 3d 215] .

Counsel should submit argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Admission of No Biological Connection to Child Does Not Necessarily Rebut Presumption of Fam. Code § 7611(d) if Court Proceeding Is Not "Appropriate Action"

In In re Nicholas H. (2002) 28 Cal. 4th 56, 120 Cal. Rptr. 2d 146, 46 P.3d 932 , an unwed mother named her boyfriend as the father of her child on the child's birth certificate, even though she was already pregnant when she and the boyfriend first met, because the couple wanted the boyfriend to act as the father. The couple separated after several years. Following a domestic dispute that resulted in the mother's arrest, the boyfriend took the child home and later filed an action to establish a parental relationship, and obtained temporary custody of the child. A county social services agency brought a dependency action after removing the child from the boyfriend's home when he was arrested on misdemeanor charges unrelated to the child. In those proceedings, evidence established that he easily satisfied the presumed father requirements of Fam. Code § 7611(d), because (1) the child lived with him for long periods of time, (2) he provided the child with significant financial support, (3) consistently referred to the child as his son, and (4) there was undisputed evidence that the child had a strong emotional bond with the boyfriend as the only father he had ever known. The mother named another man as the child's biological father, but he could not be located or paternity established. The juvenile court found that the Fam. Code § 7611(d) presumption that the boyfriend was the child's father had not been rebutted, despite his admission that he was not the child's biological father. The court ordered that the child's care and custody be committed to the social services agency, with his placement continuing in the boyfriend's home. The mother appealed, and an appellate court reversed, finding that the boyfriend was the child's presumed father under Fam. Code § 7611(d), but that the presumption was rebutted under Fam. Code § 7612(a) by the boyfriend's admission that he was not the child's biological father. The social services agency then petitioned for review, and the California Supreme Court granted the petition.

The California Supreme Court reversed, holding that if a man is a presumed father under Fam. Code § 7611(d)--by receiving a child into his home and holding out the child as his natural child--and seeks parental rights but admits that he is not the biological father, the section 7611(d) presumption is not necessarily rebutted. Despite the rebuttal language of Fam. Code § 7612(a)--that a presumption under Fam. Code § 7611 "may be rebutted in an appropriate action only by clear and convincing evidence"--the standard was not met because this was not an "appropriate action." The appellate court had misread Fam. Code § 7612(a), which provides that "a presumption under [Fam. Code § 7611] is a rebuttable presumption affecting the burden of proof and may be rebutted in an appropriate action only by clear and convincing evidence." [Emphasis added.] In so doing, the appellate court may have conflated Fam. Code § 7612(a) with Fam. Code § 7612(c), which provides that "[t]he presumption under [Fam. Code § 7611] is rebutted by a judgment establishing paternity of the child by another man." [Emphasis added.] Here, however, there was no judgment establishing another man's paternity, because the purported biological father named by the child's mother had not come forward or even been located, and was only an "alleged" father.

The Court's conclusion, that a man does not lose his status as a presumed father by admitting he is not the biological father, was further supported by Fam. Code § 7612(b), which provides that "[i]f two or more presumptions arise under [Fam. Code § 7611] which conflict with each other, the presumption which on the facts is founded on the weightier considerations of policy and logic controls." If the Legislature had intended that a man who is not a biological father cannot be a presumed father under Fam. Code § 7611, then the Legislature would not have provided for weighing among competing claims for presumed father status, because there can only be one biological father. That the Legislature, without explicitly so stating would adopt a rule that blood test evidence (or an admission of nonpaternity) must defeat the claim of a person who is a presumed father under Fam. Code § 7611(d) is unlikely. The Legislature, in using the phrase an appropriate action, likely had in mind an action in which (1) a candidate vying for parental rights is seeking to rebut another candidate's Fam. Code § 7611(d) presumption, or (2) a court decides that parental rights and obligations should devolve upon an unwilling candidate; rather than an action like the present one, in which rebuttal of the Fam. Code § 7611(d) presumption will render the child fatherless, because no other candidate has come forward to claim parental rights (28 Cal. 4th 56, 70) .

[b] Holding of Nicholas H. Applies to Mothers as Well as Presumed Fathers

In Elisa B. v. Superior Court (2005) 37 Cal. 4th 108, 33 Cal. Rptr. 3d 46, 117 P.3d 660 , the California Supreme Court held that, under Fam. Code § 7611(d), a woman may be a presumed mother of a child of her lesbian partner if they agree to raise the child together, she receives the child into her home, and she holds the child out as her natural child. As the child's presumed mother, the woman has an obligation to support the child (37 Cal. 4th 108, 113) . The Court noted that although a child can have only one natural mother, this does not mean that a child cannot have two parents, both of whom are mothers (37 Cal. 4th 108, 117-118) . This result is now possible under the domestic partnership statutes, specifically Fam. Code § 297.5(d), which provides that the rights and obligations of registered domestic partners with respect to a child of either of them are the same as those of spouses. The Court had also recognized in an adoption case that a child can have two mothers (37 Cal. 4th 108, 119) . The Court specifically found that this was not an appropriate action in which to rebut the presumption of presumed motherhood with proof that the former partner was not the child's biological parent. The former partner had actively consented to, and participated in, the artificial insemination of the birth mother with the understanding that the resulting child would be raised by both of them as coparents, they did, in fact, act as coparents for a substantial time period, and there were no competing claims to her being the child's second parent. Because she had helped to cause the child to be born and had raised the child as her own, the former partner was not permitted to abandon the child merely because her relationship with the birth mother had dissolved (37 Cal. 4th 108, 122-125) .

In Charisma R. v. Kristina S. (2009) 175 Cal. App. 4th 361, 96 Cal. Rptr. 3d 26, the appellate court affirmed the trial court's order declaring that the plaintiff was a presumed parent under Fam. Code § 7611(d) of her former domestic partner's child, who was conceived by artificial insemination. It found that the record provided "overwhelming support" for the trial court's findings that the plaintiff actively participated in the child's conception and cared for the child following her birth (175 Cal. App. 4th 361, 370, 377). This was evidenced by the fact that the parties decided that they wanted to have children and that the defendant would try to become pregnant by artificial insemination; the plaintiff was present during the child's birth, gave the child a hyphenated last name including her name on the child's birth certificate, brought the child into the home she shared with the defendant, openly and publicly asserted her parentage in various forums and to numerous people, and shared the child's care with the defendant until she moved out with the child three months after the child's birth (175 Cal. App. 4th 361, 375) . The court rejected the contention that the plaintiff was required to receive the child in her home for a "significant period of time" (175 Cal. App. 4th 361, 370-374) . The "receiving" requirement of Section 7611(d) is a necessary formality, but not one that requires "receipt" for any particular duration (175 Cal. App. 4th 361, 372) . Instead, the plaintiff's receipt of the child in her home must be sufficiently unambiguous as to constitute a clear declaration regarding the nature of their relationship, but it need not continue for any specific duration. Although cohabitation for an extended period may strengthen a claim for presumed parent status, Section 7611(d) does not require that cohabitation or coparenting continue for any particular period of time (175 Cal. App. 4th 361, 374) . Finally, the defendant did not meet her burden under Fam. Code § 7612(a) of rebutting with clear and convincing evidence the presumption that the plaintiff was the child's parent (175 Cal. App. 4th 361, 378-381) . She also failed to meet her burden of showing that the order declaring the plaintiff to be the child's second parent was an unconstitutional infringement of her state and federal right to substantive due process (175 Cal. App. 4th 361, 389) .

In Charisma R. v. Kristina S. (2006) 140 Cal. App. 4th 301, 44 Cal. Rptr. 3d 332 , the court held that under Elisa B. and Nicholas H., a registered domestic partner of the birth mother is entitled to bring a petition under Fam. Code § 7611(d) to establish her parental relationship with a child born to the birth mother by artificial insemination from an anonymous donor. The appellate court remanded the case to the trial court to determine first, whether the petitioner is a presumed parent of the child under Fam. Code § 7611(d), and then, whether this is an appropriate action in which to rebut the presumption that the petitioner is the child's parent (140 Cal. App. 4th 301, 309) . Presumed parent status depends on affirmative findings that the petitioner received the child into her home and openly held the child out as her natural child. If the trial court finds that the petitioner is a presumed parent, then it should determine (1) whether the petitioner actively participated in causing the child to be conceived with the understanding that she would raise the child as her own with the birth mother, (2) whether she voluntarily accepted the rights and obligations of parenthood after the child was born, and (3) whether any one else claims to be the child's second parent (140 Cal. App. 4th 301, 309-310) . Evidence that the petitioner has no biological tie to the child does not rebut the presumption of the petitioner's parenthood (140 Cal. App. 4th 301, 310) . Lastly, the court rejected the birth mother's contention that Elisa B. was distinguishable because in that case the biological mother supported the district attorney's action to declare Elisa a presumed parent in order to obtain child support, while in this case the birth mother opposes presumed parent status for the petitioner. The court noted that Elisa B. did not suggest that the preferences of the biological mother control the determination of whether presumed parent status arises under Fam. Code § 7611(d). Such a rule would be contrary to the public policy in favor of a child having two parents rather than one, and might implicate the constitutional rights of the person seeking presumed parent status and of the child in the establishment of the parent-child relationship (140 Cal. App. 4th 301, 310) .

In In re Salvador M. (2003) 111 Cal. App. 4th 1353, 4 Cal. Rptr. 3d 705 , a woman sought presumed mother status with respect to her half-brother, whom she had cared for since birth and treated as if he were her own son. She continued to care for him in her own home after their mother died when he was three years old. At the juvenile court dispositional hearing, the court denied the woman presumed mother status, finding that she failed to establish that she had held the child out to the community as her child because she had told school officials she was the child's sister. The appellate court reversed and directed the trial court to enter an order granting the woman presumed mother status (111 Cal. App. 4th 1353, 1359) . It noted that though most case law has focused on the definition of the presumed father, the legal principles concerning presumed father status apply equally to a woman who is seeking presumed mother status. Thus, a woman may be deemed a child's presumed mother if she can prove by a preponderance of the evidence that one of the rebuttable presumptions of paternity set forth in Fam. Code § 7611 applies (111 Cal. App. 4th 1353, 1357) . In this case, the woman had proved that the presumption of Fam. Code § 7611(d) applied. In denying her presumed mother status, the trial court had ignored "the most compelling evidence" that she held the child out as her own son--the fact that the child, who was eight years old at the time of the hearing, believed she was his mother (111 Cal. App. 4th 1353, 1358) . The appellate court also concluded that this was clearly not an appropriate case in which to find that the presumption was rebutted under Fam. Code § 7612 because there was no competing maternal interest, and to sever the deeply rooted mother/child bond would contravene the state's interest in maintaining the family relationship (111 Cal. App. 4th 1353, 1359) .

In In re Karen C. (2002) 101 Cal. App. 4th 932, 124 Cal. Rptr. 2d 677 , a mother gave her child to another woman promptly after the child was born. This woman received the child into her home and raised the child as her own. In dependency proceedings, the child argued, among other things, that the woman had to be granted status as the child's legal mother based on public policy and logic, pursuant to Fam. Code § 7612(b). The child was declared a dependent of the juvenile court and placed in foster care. She appealed a court order denying her petition for an order determining the existence of a mother and child relationship between herself and the woman who raised her. The appellate court found that the child had standing to bring an action to determine the existence of a mother-child relationship between the woman who raised her (the "presumed mother") and the child. Under the facts of this case, the decision reached in In re Nicholas H. (2002) 28 Cal. 4th 56, 120 Cal. Rptr. 2d 146, 46 P.3d 932 , that the Fam. Code § 7611(d) presumption of paternity arising from a man's reception of a child into his home is overcome by clear and convincing evidence of nonpaternity only "in an appropriate action," discussed, above, under Admission of No Biological Connection to Child Does Not Necessarily Rebut Presumption of Fam. Code § 7611(d) if Court Proceeding Is Not "Appropriate Action," applies with equal force to a woman, as a presumed mother. A determination had to be made whether the case was "an appropriate action" to rule that the presumption of parentage had been rebutted by clear and convincing evidence. The order of the juvenile court denying the child's petition for an order decreeing the existence of a mother and child relationship was vacated, and the matter was remanded for further proceedings (101 Cal. App. 4th 932, 938-939) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Admission of No Biological Connection to Child Does Not Necessarily Rebut Presumption of Fam. Code § 7611(d) if Court Proceeding Is Not "Appropriate Action"

In In re J.O. (2009) 178 Cal. App. 4th 139, 100 Cal. Rptr. 3d 276 , a juvenile dependency case, the appellate court held that the Supreme Court's admonition in Nicholas H. and Elisa B. that courts should not make children fatherless by too easily finding cause to rebut the Fam. Code § 7611(d) presumption is equally applicable in the commonplace situation involved in this case, in which the mother and the children recognized the defendant as the children's father, his name was on their birth certificates, and the defendant acknowledged the children at birth and supported them for several years. Refusing to grant presumed father status to a man such as the defendant merely because he had failed to provide support for many years, when no other parental figure was available to fill the gap, serves to punish the children by depriving them of a second parent (178 Cal. App. 4th 139, 149) . There is no authority for the proposition that abandonment combined with failure to support is a basis for rebutting the Section 7611(d) presumption (178 Cal. App. 4th 139, 149) . Section 7611(d) requires nothing more than that the presumed father candidate receive the children into his home and openly hold them out as his natural children, which the defendant had done in this case (178 Cal. App.

In Kevin Q. v. Lauren W. (2009) 175 Cal. App. 4th 1119, 95 Cal. Rptr. 3d 477 , the trial court erred in finding that the plaintiff, who had filed a petition under Fam. Code § 7630 to establish a parental relationship, was the child's legal father under the rebuttable presumption of Fam. Code § 7611(d). The appellate court ordered the trial court to enter a new judgment declaring the child's biological father to be the child's legal father. The biological father had signed and filed a valid declaration of paternity that had the force of a judgment under Family Code Section 7573. This trumped the plaintiff's presumption under Section 7611(d) (175 Cal. App. 4th 1119, 1124, 1133, 1136-1141) . A court does not have the discretion to ignore or treat as a rebuttable presumption a voluntary declaration of paternity (175 Cal. App. 4th 1119, 1138) . It is not a mere presumption that may be weighed against competing Section 7611 presumptions under Fam. Code § 7612(b) (175 Cal. App. 4th 1119, 1141) .

In In re T.R. (2005) 132 Cal. App. 4th 1202, 34 Cal. Rptr. 3d 215 , a juvenile dependency case, the trial court denied a stepfather's request for presumed father status under Fam. Code § 7611(d). It found that although he had held the child out as his own daughter and had provided support for her, he was not a presumed father because of his history of molesting children, conduct which was fundamentally inconsistent with the role of a parent. The appellate court affirmed. It noted that unlike the typical presumed father applicant, the stepfather was not the child's biological father and his relationship with her did not begin at her birth or shortly thereafter, but only after she was three years old. Since then, there was substantial evidence that he openly acknowledged her as his daughter, provided financial support, and received her in his home. However, these positive factors cannot be viewed in a vacuum, but must be considered with the facts that the stepfather was a registered sex offender who was convicted of molesting young girls and that allegations he had sexually abused the child had been found to be true by clear and convincing evidence when the dependency petition was sustained. His conduct was antithetical to a parent's role and more than counterbalanced the factors favoring his presumed father status (132 Cal. App. 4th 1202, 1211) . The court noted that the premise behind the category of presumed father is that an individual who has demonstrated a commitment to the child and the child's welfare, regardless of whether he is the child's biological father, is entitled to the elevated status of presumed fatherhood. If an individual can qualify for presumed father status based on his good deeds consistent with parental responsibilities, it follows that he can be disqualified by repugnant conduct that is detrimental to the child (132 Cal. App. 4th 1202, 1211-1212) .

In Librers v. Black (2005) 129 Cal. App. 4th 114, 28 Cal. Rptr. 3d 188 , the trial court found that a mother's former live-in boyfriend lacked standing as a presumed father under Fam. Code § 7611 to bring a suit to establish his paternity under the Uniform Parentage Act. In making this determination, the trial court gave considerable weight to the fact that the boyfriend was not the child's biological father and the fact that the child had a loving, stable mother. The appellate court reversed, finding that a presumption of paternity under Fam. Code § 7611(d) is not rebutted by evidence that the presumed father is not the child's biological father, regardless of the mother's fitness, which is an issue that is only relevant in a dependency proceeding. Therefore, the boyfriend had standing under Fam. Code § 7630 to bring the paternity proceeding, based on the presumption that he was the child's natural father, which was established by his receipt of the child into his home and his openly holding her out as his natural child. The child had lived in the boyfriend's home from the time of her birth until her mother removed her at 22 months, and the boyfriend had signed a voluntary declaration of paternity so that he could provide her with medical and other benefits. He also supported her financially. Thus, he was entitled to a determination on the merits as to whether he was the child's presumed father (129 Cal. App. 4th 114, 124-127) .

In In re Raphael P. (2002) 97 Cal. App. 4th 716, 118 Cal. Rptr. 2d 610 , an appellate court discussed a man's contention that he was a child's presumed father under Fam. Code § 7611(d), because he received the child into his home and openly held the child out as his natural child. A juvenile court never determined whether these facts supported application of the Fam. Code § 7611(d) presumption, because that court accepted the argument that blood test evidence demonstrating that the man was not the father either precluded him from establishing the presumption or rebutted the presumption. The appellate court concluded that Fam. Code §§ 7551 and 7554 do not authorize courts to order genetic testing of a man who meets the statutory test for presumed fatherhood. Thus, if the claimant met the statutory test for presumed fatherhood, then the juvenile court should not have ordered genetic testing, or allowed evidence of biological paternity to rebut his presumed father status. In addition, Fam. Code § 7551 authorizes a court to order genetic testing when paternity "is a relevant fact." Here, it was questionable whether paternity could be considered a "relevant fact," when the man was claiming presumed father status and no other man was asserting paternity (97 Cal. App. 4th 716, 734-736) .

In In re Jerry P. (2002) 95 Cal. App. 4th 793, 116 Cal. Rptr. 2d 123 , an appellate court stated that lack of a biological relationship does not automatically defeat presumed father status, because, under Fam. Code § 7612(a), a Fam. Code § 7611 presumption "may be rebutted in an appropriate action only by clear and convincing evidence." [Emphasis added.] Thus, a trial court has discretion to decide whether proof that a presumed father is not a child's biological father is sufficient to rebut the presumption. However, the appellate court distinguished pure parentage actions and dependency actions in which parentage is at issue. In parentage actions, the primary purpose of Fam. Code § 7611 is to establish a child's paternity through a series of rebuttable presumptions, while in dependency proceedings, the purpose of Fam. Code § 7611 is to determine whether an alleged father has demonstrated a sufficient commitment to his parental responsibilities to be afforded rights not afforded to natural fathers, which are the rights to reunification services and custody. Therefore, in dependency proceedings, the term "presumed father" does not denote a presumption of fatherhood in the evidentiary sense and presumed father status is not rebutted by evidence someone else is the natural father. Rather, the term "presumed father" is a term of convenience used to identify a preferred class of fathers by reference to the familial bonds described in Fam. Code § 7611 (95 Cal. App. 4th 793, 803-805) .

[b] Holding of Nicholas H. Applies to Mothers as Well as Presumed Father

In K.M. v. E.G. (2005) 37 Cal. 4th 130, 33 Cal. Rptr. 3d 61, 117 P.3d 673 , the California Supreme Court held that when a woman provides ova to her lesbian partner so that the partner can bear a child who will be raised in their joint home, both women are considered to be the child's parents (37 Cal. 4th 130, 134) . The Court reversed the judgment of the appellate court which had affirmed the trial court's decision that the egg donor could not assert her right to parentage because she had signed a waiver, on the ovum donor form, of her right to legal parentage. The Court found that the waiver did not affect the determination of parentage (37 Cal. 4th 130, 144) . It noted that the egg donor's genetic relationship with the resulting child constitutes evidence of a mother and child relationship under the Uniform Parentage Act, and the circumstance that her partner gave birth to the child also constitutes evidence of a mother and child relationship. Thus, both women are mothers of the child under the Act (37 Cal. 4th 130, 142-143) . Family Code Section 7613(b), which creates an exception to the usual rules governing parentage that applies when a man donates semen to inseminate a woman who is not his wife, does not apply under the circumstances of this case in which a woman supplies ova to impregnate her lesbian partner in order to produce a child who would be raised in their joint home (37 Cal. 4th 130, 143) . Because the Court concluded that Fam. Code § 7313(b) did not apply and that the egg donor was the child's parent (along with the birth mother) based on her genetic relationship to the child, it was not necessary for the Court to consider whether she was the child's presumed mother under Fam. Code § 7611(d) (37 Cal. 4th 130, 144) .

In Kristine H. v. Lisa R. (2005) 37 Cal. 4th 156, 33 Cal. Rptr. 3d 81, 117 P.3d 690 , the California Supreme Court held that the lesbian mother of a child was estopped from challenging the validity of a stipulated judgment declaring that she and her lesbian partner were the child's parents. Because mother had invoked the jurisdiction of the court to determine the parentage of the child under the Uniform Parentage Act, had stipulated to the issuance of a judgment, and had enjoyed the benefits of that judgment for almost two years, it would be unfair to the partner and the child to permit the mother to challenge the validity of that judgment. It would also contravene the public policy that favors a child having two parents rather than one (37 Cal. 4th 156, 166) .

In Amy G. v. M.W. (2006) 142 Cal. App. 4th 1, 47 Cal. Rptr. 3d 297 , a mother brought an action for custody and visitation rights to her biological child, who had been raised by the biological father and his wife since the child was a month old. The trial court denied the father's motion to join his wife as a party, and also granted the biological mother's motion to quash the wife's separate action to be declared the child's presumed mother. The court held that the wife was not the child's presumed mother under either Fam. Code § 7611(a) by virtue of being married to the child's father, or under Fam. Code § 7611(d) because she received the child into her home and held him out as her own child. It rejected the contention that Fam. Code § 7611 should apply in maternity cases even when the child's birth mother is present and asserts legal parenthood. Because the child's natural father was known and present in the action, the child could have only one additional parent. Cases in which the courts have applied Fam. Code § 7611 to recognize a presumed mother have all involved circumstances in which there was no competing claim to be the child's mother or second parent. When both the child's biological father and biological mother have identified themselves and come forward to assert their legal parentage, it is not appropriate to invoke a gender-neutral reading of the paternity presumptions to provide the child with another mother.

In In re Cody B. (2007) 153 Cal. App. 4th 1004, 63 Cal. Rptr. 3d 652 , a mother's parental rights over her biological son were terminated in a dependency action. The child was adopted by the father of one of the mother's other children. He allowed the child to live part time with the mother. In a subsequent proceeding to remove the child from the father's custody, the mother filed a motion to be designated as the child's presumed mother under Fam. Code § 7611(d), because after her parental rights were terminated, the child continued to live with her and she held him out as her biological son. The juvenile court denied the mother's motion, relying on Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(i)(1), which provides that any order permanently terminating parental rights is conclusive and binding, and the court lacks jurisdiction to modify or revoke the order once it has become final. The appellate court upheld the juvenile court's order, rejecting the argument that Fam. Code § 7630(b) gives the juvenile court jurisdiction to reconsider the termination of parental rights, because it provides that any interested person may bring an action at any time for the purpose of determining the existence or nonexistence of the parent and child relationship presumed under Fam. Code § 7611(d). Proceedings under Fam. Code § 7630(b) may be brought at any time before parental rights have been terminated under Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26. If Fam. Code § 7630(b) were interpreted to allow a parent to seek presumed parent status after termination of parental rights, Welf. & Inst. Code § 366.26(i)(1) would be meaningless, and the goals of stability and finality within a reasonable time would be substantially undermined. The appellate court concluded that there is no statute that would allow the mother to be designated a presumed mother after the termination of her parental rights (153 Cal. App. 4th 1004, 1009-1011) .

In Scott v. Superior Court (2009) 171 Cal. App. 4th 540, 89 Cal. Rptr. 3d 843 , a woman who had had an intimate relationship with the father of three minor children sought to join the parents' action under the UPA to seek custody and visitation rights with respect to the children as a presumed or de facto mother. The trial court granted the woman's petition for joinder and ordered the parties to mediate the matter of custody and visitation. The appellate court granted the father's petition for a writ of mandate and directed the court to vacate its order and to issue a new order denying the woman's request for relief due to lack of standing (171 Cal. App. 4th 540, 542-544) . The appellate court held that the woman could not be a presumed or de facto mother when the parental rights of the natural mother had not been terminated (171 Cal. App. 4th 540, 544-547) . In a same-sex domestic partner relationship, a child may have two natural mothers; in a heterosexual relationship, there can be only one mother (171 Cal. App. 4th 540, 544-545) . Therefore, the woman could not be the children's presumed mother under Fam. Code §§ 7611 and 7650(a), and is not an interested party who can initiate a UPA proceeding concerning the children (171 Cal. App. 4th 540, 545) .

In Wynn v. Superior Court (2009) 176 Cal. App. 4th 346, 98 Cal. Rptr. 3d 86, a woman filed a petition seeking an order correcting her original birth certificate to state the actual names of her birth parents, in place of the fictitious names her mother used when the original certificate was prepared. The court denied her petition on the ground that it lacked legal authority to modify the original birth certificate, because a subsequent certificate was issued on her adoption, which listed her adoptive parents, and this subsequent certificate was her legally operative birth certificate (176 Cal. App. 4th 346, 349-350). The appellate court reversed the order, concluding that the plaintiff qualified as an interested person who could bring an action to adjudicate her parentage, and that the trial court had the authority to adjudicate the facts concerning a possible biological relationship between mother and daughter, even though the daughter had been adopted (176 Cal. App. 4th 346, 350, 354-355).

THE JUDGMENT OF PATERNITY IN THE ABOVE-ENTITLED PATERNITY ACTION SHOULD BE SET ASIDE AND VACATED BECAUSE GENETIC TESTING INDICATES THAT _____ [NAME] IS NOT THE BIOLOGICAL FATHER OF THE CHILD _____ [NAME].

A. Judgment of Paternity May Be Set Aside or Vacated If Genetic Testing Indicates That Established Father Is Not Biological Father. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, a judgment establishing paternity may be set aside or vacated on a motion by the previously established mother of a child, the previously established father of a child, the child, or the legal representative of any of these persons if genetic testing indicates that the previously established father of a child is not the biological father of the child [Fam. Code § 7646].

B. Underlying "Judgment" That May Be Set Aside Includes Order, Decree Establishing Paternity, Determination of Paternity, and Voluntary Paternity Declaration. The underlying "judgment" for purposes of this motion means a judgment, order, or decree entered in a California court that establishes paternity, including a determination of paternity made pursuant to a petition filed under Welfare and Institutions Code Section 300, 601, or 602, or a voluntary declaration of paternity [see Fam. Code 7645(b)].

THE COURT MUST ALSO VACATE THE ORDER FOR CHILD SUPPORT AND ARREARAGES ISSUED ON THE BASIS OF THIS ERRONEOUSLY ISSUED JUDGMENT OF PATERNITY.

C. Child Support Order Must Also Be Vacated. If the court grants a motion to set aside or vacate a paternity judgment under Family Code Sections 7645 through 7649.5, it must also vacate any order for child support and arrearages issued on the basis of that previous paternity judgment [Fam. Code § 7648.4].

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion to vacate and set aside a judgment of paternity judgment, order, or decree entered in a California court that establishes paternity, including a determination of paternity made pursuant to a petition filed under Welf. & Inst. Code § 300, 601, or 602, or a voluntary declaration of paternity [see Fam. Code § 7645(b)], on the ground that genetic testing has shown that the established father is not the biological father of the child [see Fam. Code § 7646; see generally, Fam. Code § 7645, et seq.].

This motion may be brought by the previously established mother of a child, the previously established father of a child, the child, or the legal representative of any of these persons [see Fam. Code § 7646(a); see also Fam. Code § 7645 (definitions of child, previously established father, previously established mother); Fam. Code § 7646(a)(1)-(3) (two-year limitations periods commencing from specified times); Fam. Code § 7647(a) (conditions for bringing motion; requirements and contents of motion)].

This motion procedure does not apply in the following circumstances [see generally, Fam. Code § 7645, et seq.]:

- If the underlying judgment is in any action for marital dissolution, legal separation, or nullity [see Fam. Code 7645(b)].

- If the conclusive presumption applies regarding a child of the marriage when the husband and wife are cohabiting [see Fam. Code §§ 7540, 7646(b)].

- If the child was conceived by artificial insemination or pursuant to a surrogacy agreement [see Fam. Code §§ 7613, 7648.9].

- If the underlying judgment was made or entered by a tribunal of another state, even if the enforcement of that judgment is sought in California [Fam. Code § 7648.3(a)].

- If the underlying judgment was made or entered in California, and genetic tests were conducted prior to the entry of the judgment that did not exclude the previously established father as the biological father [Fam. Code § 7648.3(b)].

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 171.43 may be used to oppose the motion supported in these points and authorities.

[3] Additional Authorities

[a] Judgment of Paternity May Be Set Aside or Vacated If Genetic Testing Indicates That Established Father Is Not Biological Father

In San Mateo County Dept. of Child Support Services v. Clark (2008) 168 Cal. App. 4th 834, 85 Cal. Rptr. 3d 763 , the Department brought an action against the defendant to establish his paternity and obligation to pay child support, based on the declaration of the child's mother that the defendant was the child's biological father. The defendant failed to answer, and the court entered a default judgment establishing his paternity and the child support arrears. The defendant later moved to set aside the judgment of paternity under Family Code Section 7646, serving the motion on the Department but not on the child's mother. The court found that the motion was timely, ordered genetic testing, directed "both parties" to report to the Department, and further ordered the child's mother to bring the child to submit genetic samples at the date and time specified by the Department. The court subsequently set aside the paternity judgment because the child's mother failed to comply with the court's order for genetic testing. The appellate court held that the trial court lacked authority to set aside the default judgment of paternity. The unavailability of genetic testing results, because of the mother's noncompliance with a testing order or for whatever reason, is not a condition that empowers the court to vacate a prior paternity judgment. The defendant, as the moving party, has the burden of proving that he was not the biological father by producing genetic tests from an approved laboratory that excluded his paternity. In addition, the court did not have personal jurisdiction over the mother or the child and thus the court's attempt to order them to submit to genetic testing had no effect. The defendant should have joined the mother as a party to the proceeding or served the mother with a deposition subpoena requiring her to produce a genetic sample. The Department could also have issued an administrative order under Family Code Section 7648.2, requiring the mother and child to submit to genetic testing.

[b] Child Support Order Must Also Be Vacated

In County of Los Angeles v. James (2007) 152 Cal. App. 4th 253, 60 Cal. Rptr. 3d 880 , a trial court determined that a man was the father of a child and determined that he was obligated to pay child support. Genetic testing later determined that the man was not the father. Based on the test results, the man moved to set aside the paternity judgment and to obtain reimbursement of the support payments made. The court set aside the paternity judgment, but determined that the man was not entitled to reimbursement under Family Code 7648.4. The appellate court upheld this decision. It noted that Family Code Section 7648.4 does not permit a child support reimbursement order in favor of an erroneously declared father. This provision enables a declared father to challenge a paternity decree, but also safeguards the child. Allowing a declared father to seek reimbursement from the mother might adversely affect the mother's ability to provide financially for the child. In enacting this provision, the legislature was aware of the harm that paternity fraud inflicts on a declared father, but sought to balance the competing interests of a declared father and a child, and concluded that a right of reimbursement should not be permitted (152 Cal. App. 4th 253, 258-259) .

A PENDENTE LITE ORDER FOR SUPPORT, MEDICAL AND HOSPITAL EXPENSES, AND ATTORNEY'S FEES IN AN ACTION TO ESTABLISH PATERNITY IS IMPROPER IF THERE IS NO INITIAL FINDING OF A PARENT-CHILD RELATIONSHIP BASED ON A PREPONDERANCE OF THE EVIDENCE GIVEN AT A HEARING.

A. Hearing Must Be Held. An application for a pendente lite order for support, medical and hospital expenses, and attorney's fees in an action to establish the paternity of a child requires a hearing where the defendant must be given the opportunity to be heard and present evidence (Hodge v. Gould (1969) 274 Cal. App. 2d 806, 808, 79 Cal. Rptr. 245).

B. Proof of Parentage Jurisdictional Prerequisite. Proof of parentage is a jurisdictional prerequisite for a pendente lite order for support of a child in a parentage action (Carbone v. Superior Court (1941) 18 Cal. 2d 768, 771, 117 P.2d 872).

C. Paternity Established by Preponderance of Evidence. The plaintiff in an action to establish the paternity of a child must establish the defendant to be the father of the child by a preponderance of the evidence before the court may make pendente lite orders for support, medical and hospital expenses, and attorney's fees (Hodge v. Gould (1969) 274 Cal. App. 2d 806, 808, 79 Cal. Rptr. 245).

[Optional] D. Order Implies Finding of Parentage. Although a pendente lite order for support of a child in a parentage action implies a finding of the existence of a parent-child relationship, the proceeding need not be so complete nor the evidence so extensive as on the trial of the issues of the case, and the order therefore does not determine those issues nor affect the final judgment (Carbone v. Superior Court (1941) 18 Cal. 2d 768, 772, 117 P.2d 872).

[Optional] E. Allegations in Complaint Insufficient. If defendant denies paternity by his verified answer in a paternity action, and no evidence, oral or documentary, is introduced by plaintiff at the hearing, the evidence on the issue of paternity cannot preponderate in plaintiff's favor and there is no legal basis on which the court may make a pendente lite order for support, medical and hospital expenses, or attorney's fees (Hodge v. Gould (1969) 274 Cal. App. 2d 806, 808, 79 Cal. Rptr. 245).

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a motion for a pendente lite order for support, medical and hospital expenses, and attorney's fees in an action brought under the Uniform Parentage Act [see Fam. Code § 7640]. For a form of a memorandum in support of such a motion and consideration of the availability of temporary support under the UPA, see § 171.24. It may be submitted in an action commenced before the birth of the child [see Fam. Code § 7633], or after the child has been born.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Points and Authorities

For forms of memoranda supporting and opposing motions for orders for attorney's fees, see Ch. 25, Attorney's Fees .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Hearing Must Be Held

The factual background of Hodge v. Gould (1969) 274 Cal. App. 2d 806, 79 Cal. Rptr. 245 , is discussed in §

171.24[3][b]. In discussing the authority of a court in granting an application for a pendente lite order for support, medical and hospital expenses, and attorney's fees, the court indicated that before such orders can be made, a hearing must be held, and the defendant must be given the opportunity to be heard and to present evidence. In addition, the plaintiff must establish the defendant to be the father of the child by a preponderance of the evidence. The court also stated that if a defendant denies paternity by a verified answer, and no evidence, oral or documentary, is introduced by the plaintiff at the hearing, the evidence on the issue of paternity cannot preponderate in plaintiff's favor and there is no legal basis on which a court can make a pendente lite order for support, medical and hospital expenses, and attorney's fees (274 Cal. App. 2d 806, 808) .

[b] Proof of Parentage Jurisdictional Prerequisite

The factual background of Carbone v. Superior Court (1941) 18 Cal. 2d 768, 117 P.2d 872 , is discussed in § 171.24[3][a]. In discussing the authority of a court to grant pendente lite orders for support, medical and hospital expenses, and attorney's fees, the court stated that proof of parentage is a jurisdictional prerequisite for an order to support a child just as the existence of the marriage is a jurisdictional prerequisite for the right of the court to order support, costs, and counsel fees pendente lite in an action for divorce. The court added that even though a defendant in an action for divorce denies the existence of the marriage, the court may nevertheless make the order if defendant is given an opportunity to be heard and the marriage is proved by a preponderance of the evidence. The application is determined on a record of its own and results in an appealable judgment independent of the final judgment in the action. Although such an order implies a finding of the existence of the relationship, the proceeding need not be so complete nor the evidence so extensive as on the trial of the issues of the case, and the order therefore does not determine those issues nor affect the final judgment. Nevertheless, there must be a hearing and the defendant must be given an opportunity to be heard and to present his evidence (18 Cal. 2d 768, 771-772) .

[c] Paternity Established by Preponderance of Evidence

Hodge v. Gould (1969) 274 Cal. App. 2d 806, 79 Cal. Rptr. 245 , is discussed under § 171.37[3][a].

Carbone v. Superior Court (1941) 18 Cal. 2d 768, 117 P.2d 872 , is discussed under § 171.37[3][b].

[e] Allegations in Complaint Insufficient

Hodge v. Gould (1969) 274 Cal. App. 2d 806, 79 Cal. Rptr. 245 , is discussed under § 171.37[3][a].

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Paternity Established by Preponderance of Evidence

In In re Spencer W. (1996) 48 Cal. App. 4th 1647, 56 Cal. Rptr. 2d 524 , the court of appeal affirmed a trial court's judgment, which determined that the defendant did not have a valid claim, and rejected the defendant's claim of presumed-father status. Fam. Code § 7611 requires that a defendant demonstrate, by a preponderance of the evidence, not only that he received the child into his home, but that he also had openly and publicly acknowledged paternity. Presumed-father status is demonstrated by a commitment toward developing a substantial familial relationship with the child. Under the totality of circumstances demonstrated here, defendant failed to demonstrate that such a relationship existed. The court found that defendant did not "receive" the child into his home; the mother merely permitted defendant to reside with her and the child. It was clear from the evidence that defendant's residence with the child did not indicate a commitment toward the child, but rather reflected actions based on personal convenience and self-interest. Further, the evidence showed that defendant did not satisfy the requirement of openly and publicly admitting paternity, in that defendant did not claim paternity beyond his family and friends, he did not take formal steps to place his name on the child's birth certificate, and did not assume any child support obligations. Thus, the appellate court affirmed the trial court's ruling that defendant had failed to establish that he was the child's presumed father (48 Cal. App. 4th 1647, 1654) .

§ 171.38 Opposing Contention That Paternity Determination Is Barred by Conclusive Presumption That Mother's Husband Is Child's Father [Fam. Code § 7540]--Application of Presumption Would Violate Constitutional Rights of Biological Father

[1] FORM

THE CONCLUSIVE PRESUMPTION OF FAMILY CODE SECTION 7540, THAT A CHILD BORN TO A MARRIED WOMAN IS A CHILD OF THE MARRIAGE IF CONCEIVED WHILE THE MOTHER WAS COHABITING WITH HER HUSBAND WHO WAS NOT IMPOTENT OR STERILE, SHOULD NOT BE APPLIED IN THIS CASE BECAUSE THE BIOLOGICAL FATHER OF A CHILD AND THE CHILD HAVE A CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHT TO A PARENT-CHILD RELATIONSHIP.

A. Constitutional Protection of Parent-Child Relationship. The right to rear one's own biological children is a cognizable and substantial right that is within the protection of the Due Process and Equal Protection Clauses of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, regardless of the marital status of the parents of the child (Stanley v. Illinois (1972) 405 U.S. 645, 651-652, 92 S. Ct. 1208, 31 L. Ed. 2d 551).

B. Balancing Respective Private and State Interests. Notwithstanding Family Code Section 7540, the question of whether a man who alleges that he (rather than the husband) is the father of a child born to a married woman may offer evidence of his paternity must be resolved by weighing the competing private and state interests (In re R. (1975) 13 Cal. 3d 636, 648, 119 Cal. Rptr. 475, 532 P.2d 123).

[Optional] C. Respective Relationships of Putative Father and Presumed Father With Child. A putative father has a significant interest in protecting his ongoing relationship with his child, which weighs against the application of the conclusive presumption of Family Code Section 7540; conversely, the interest of the state in conclusively applying the presumption may be insufficient if there is no ongoing relationship between the presumed father and the child (see Comino v. Kelley (1994) 25 Cal. App. 4th 678, 684, 30 Cal. Rptr. 2d 728 ; In re Melissa G. (1989) 213 Cal. App. 3d 1082, 1089, 261 Cal. Rptr. 894).

[Optional] D. Insufficient State Interest if No Intact Family. The interest of the state in applying the conclusive presumption of Family Code Section 7540 may be insufficient if there is neither a marital union nor a family unit to preserve (Comino v. Kelley (1994) 25 Cal. App. 4th 678, 684, 30 Cal. Rptr. 2d 728 ; see In re R. (1975) 13 Cal. 3d 636, 650, 119 Cal. Rptr. 475, 532 P.2d 123 ; In re Melissa G. (1989) 213 Cal. App. 3d 1082, 1088-1089, 261 Cal. Rptr. 894).

[2] Comments

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that the presumption of Fam. Code § 7540, that a child born to a married woman who was cohabiting with her husband who was not impotent or sterile at the time of conception is a child of the marriage [see § 171.25], should not be applied. They are for use by a putative father, that is, a man who alleges that he, and not the mother's husband, is the actual biological father of the child.

Paragraph A sets forth the basic constitutional principle that the parent-child relationship is a fundamental interest protected by the Fourteenth Amendment. Paragraph B sets forth the California Supreme Court's balancing test of state and individual interests to be applied in determining whether or not the presumption applies conclusively. Paragraphs C, and D then set forth fact situations supporting the nonapplication of the presumption.

This form may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which the application of the presumption is brought before the court. It may be used in a memorandum of points and authorities in connection with a pretrial motion, such as a demurrer, motion for summary judgment, or motion for summary adjudication of the issue of paternity. It may also be used in a trial or an appellate brief.

Because the application of the presumption is controlled by a balancing test, proper presentation and development of the facts is crucial. It should first be established that the man opposing the operation of the presumption is the actual biological father of the child [see Fam. Code § 7541; § 171.41]. Some or all of the following facts should then be developed: (1) there is a significant and ongoing parental relationship between that man and the child; (2) there is no significant or ongoing relationship between the presumed father (the mother's husband at the time of conception) and the child; (3) there is no existing family unit that includes the child and the presumed father. Other facts showing detriment to the child if the presumption is applied should be included.

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in this form may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities in § 171.26.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Constitutional Protection of Parent-Child Relationship

Stanley v. Illinois (1972) 405 U.S. 645, 92 S. Ct. 1208, 31 L. Ed. 2d 551 , is the landmark United States Supreme Court case that established constitutional protections for unmarried fathers. Stanley lived with the mother of his children off and on for 18 years, but they never married. When the mother died, the state made his children wards of the state and placed them with court-appointed guardians. Under Illinois law, the children of unwed fathers automatically became wards on the death of the mother. The law operated as a conclusive presumption that unwed fathers are unfit to rear their children.

The Supreme Court held that this operation of the statute as a conclusive presumption violated Stanley's rights under the Due Process and Equal Protection Clauses of the Fourteenth Amendment. It held that all parents are constitutionally entitled to a hearing on the issue of their fitness as parents before their children are removed from their custody, regardless of marital status (405 U.S. 645, 657-658) .

In reaching this conclusion, the Court stated that the private interest of a man in the children that he has sired and raised undeniably warrants deference, and, absent a powerful countervailing interest, protection. Nor has the law refused to recognize family relationships unlegitimized by a marriage ceremony. The Court labeled Stanley's interest in retaining custody of his children as "cognizable and substantial" (405 U.S. 645, 651-652) . Thus, Stanley v. Illinois established the constitutional principle that the father-child relationship is a fundamental interest under the Fourteenth Amendment that extends to all fathers regardless of marital status.

[b] Balancing Respective Private and State Interests

In re Lisa R. (1975) 13 Cal. 3d 636, 119 Cal. Rptr. 475, 532 P.2d 123 , was the California Supreme Court's first refusal to conclusively apply a statutory presumption of paternity regarding the child of a married woman. The case arose in Juvenile Court. According to the mother, Lisa was conceived during an extramarital relationship with Victor R. while she was separated from her husband. The husband subsequently died.

In 1969, Lisa was adjudged a dependent of the court due to neglect by the mother. Throughout the dependency proceedings, Victor was identified as Lisa's father although there was no finding of paternity. After the mother also died, Victor attempted to make an offer of proof that he was Lisa's father and sought parental rights. The juvenile court ruled that he lacked standing to appear in the proceeding. Under the then applicable law (former Evid. Code § 621), the child of a married woman who was born during marriage was presumed to be a child of the marriage (i.e., the husband was presumed to be the father). The presumption was rebuttable, but only by the mother, her husband, and the state in a criminal proceeding. Thus, it operated conclusively as to Victor.

The California Supreme Court reversed and granted Victor standing to assert his paternity. The Court based its holding on the constitutional principles of Stanley v. Illinois (discussed under § 171.38[3][a]). However, the Court did not hold the conclusive operation of the presumption to be unconstitutional under all circumstances. Rather, it held that the question of whether a man claiming to be the biological father of a child born to a married woman can rebut the presumption that the husband is the father must be resolved by weighing the competing private and state interests (13 Cal. 3d 636, 648) .

The private interest involved is the constitutional right of the father to a parental relationship with the child. The weight to be given that interest, however, depends on the actual facts. The countervailing interests of the state are the protection of the child, promoting marriage, and not impugning a family unit (13 Cal. 3d 636, 649-650) . But again, the weight to be given those interests depends on the facts [see § 171.38[4][a]].

On the facts and circumstances before it, the Court held that a presumption that precluded Victor's right to offer evidence that he was Lisa's father was unreasonable, arbitrary, and capricious, and a denial of due process (13 Cal. 3d 636, 651) .

[c] Respective Relationships of Putative Father and Presumed Father With Child

In Comino v. Kelley (1994) 25 Cal. App. 4th 678, 30 Cal. Rptr. 2d 728 , Stephanie Kelly and Jeffrey Moyer married only for mutual convenience, as a way of obtaining certain military benefits that were only available to married persons. While they shared an apartment, they did not have a sexual relationship. She dated other men, including Paul Comino. She conceived a child in April 1988, while still cohabiting with "husband" Jeffrey. She told Paul that he was the father, identified him as such on the birth certificate, and gave the child his surname. For two and one half years, Paul functioned as the child's father and bonded with the child. Then, in April 1991, Stephanie moved out of the family residence, told Paul that he might not be the father, and threatened to restrict his access to the child.

Paul then filed an action to establish his paternity. Jeffrey answered denying that he was the father, but Stephanie defended, asserting that the conclusive presumption of what is now Fam. Code § 7540 required that Jeffrey and not Paul be adjudged the father of the child as a matter of law. The trial court refused to apply the presumption conclusively and adjudged Paul to be the father of the child.

The court of appeal affirmed. It applied the balancing test under which competing state and private interests are weighed to determine whether the presumption should be applied in a given case [see § 171.38[3][b]]. On the facts before it, the court found that none of the policies underlying the presumption of Fam. Code § 7540 would be served by its application. It stated that to the extent that there is a recognizable societal concern for the child to have a father, that concern is served by avoiding the presumption. Applying the presumption would prevent the child from enjoying a parental relationship with the only man whom he had ever known as a father. Further, the state's interest in ensuring that the child had a source of child support was furthered by the rejecting the presumption and awarding to Paul the responsibility that he sought to assume (25 Cal. App. 4th 678, 684-685) .

In re Melissa G. (1989) 213 Cal. App. 3d 1082, 261 Cal. Rptr. 894 , was a juvenile court proceeding. Rita, while married to Fermin, gave birth to Melissa. Eight days later, Rita and Fermin separated, and Rita began living with Felix. Fermin was listed as Melissa's father on her birth certificate and was named as a child of the marriage in their dissolution proceeding. However, Rita told a social worker that Felix was really Melissa's father, a fact subsequently confirmed to a 99.1 percent probability by blood tests. Rita, Felix, and Melissa lived together in a family unit for four years, during which time Rita and Felix married and had another daughter.

Subsequently, Melissa was adjudged a dependent of the juvenile court due to neglect. In the juvenile court proceedings, Fermin contended that the conclusive presumption of Fam. Code § 7540 should apply, meaning that he should be considered as Melissa's father as a matter of law. The court concluded that it had to apply the presumption and could not consider the blood test results. It adjudged Fermin to be Melissa's father.

On appeal, counsel for Melissa, Felix, and the county social services department all asked the court to reverse the paternity adjudication, and the court of appeal agreed. It noted the balancing test of competing state and private interests from Lisa R., discussed under § 171.38[3][b] (213 Cal. App. 3d 1082, 1085-1086) . In balancing the interests, the court gave weight to the fact that Felix lived with Melissa for almost four years beginning shortly after her birth. In contrast, Fermin had no ongoing, or any relationship with Melissa. It also considered Melissa's relationship with her biological sister, which would be affected if Fermin were conclusively presumed to be her father (213 Cal. App. 3d 1082, 1089) .

[d] Insufficient State Interest if No Intact Family

The facts of Comino v. Kelley (1994) 25 Cal. App. 4th 678, 30 Cal. Rptr. 2d 728 , are set forth under § 171.38[3][c]. In rejecting the conclusive operation of the presumption of Fam. Code § 7540, the court of appeal gave weight to the fact that there was neither a marital union nor a family unit to preserve. The so-called marriage of the mother was one in name only, and the child never lived in a family unit with the mother and her husband. The only home he had ever known was with the mother and the putative father (25 Cal. App. 4th 678, 684) .

The facts and principal holding of In re R. (1975) 13 Cal. 3d 636, 119 Cal. Rptr. 475, 532 P.2d 123 , are presented under § 171.38[3][b]. In applying the balancing test, the California Supreme Court gave weight to the fact that both the mother and the presumed father were deceased. Therefore, the legitimate state interests of promoting marriage and not impugning a family unit could not be advanced by applying the presumption. There simply was no family unit to preserve (13 Cal. 3d 636, 650) .

The facts of In re Melissa G. (1989) 213 Cal. App. 3d 1082, 261 Cal. Rptr. 894 , are set forth under § 171.38[4][a]. In rejecting the conclusive operation of the presumption of Fam. Code § 7540, the court of appeal noted the United States Supreme Court plurality decision in which the constitutionality of the presumption was upheld [see Michael H. v. Gerald D. (1989) 491 U.S. 110, 109 S. Ct. 2333, 105 L. Ed. 2d 91 , discussed in § 171.26[2][a]]. However, it stated that the Supreme Court's affirmance in that case was limited to situations in which the mother and her husband wish to rear the wife's child jointly, and that a constitutionally protected interest might be implicated if no such union existed. It found that to be the situation in the case at hand. The marital relationship between the mother and the presumed father-husband ended only eight days after the child's birth. The mother and the putative father reared both the child and her biological sister until shortly before they were made dependents of the juvenile court. The categorical preference for an extant marital union that the plurality recognized as being expressed in the statutory presumption had no application to the facts of the case (213 Cal. App. 3d 1082, 1088-1089) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Respective Relationships of Putative Father and Presumed Father With Child

In Brian C. v. Ginger K. (2000) 77 Cal. App. 4th 1198, 92 Cal. Rptr. 2d 294 , the court of appeal held that a trial court erred in applying the "conclusive" presumption of Fam. Code § 7540 and in finding that a natural father lacked standing to bring an action to be declared the legal father of a married woman's child, when the child was not "born into" an extant marital union and the natural father had developed a substantial parent-child relationship immediately after the child's birth and for one and one-half years thereafter. Although the wife was living with her husband at the time the child was conceived by another man, the child was born after the couple had separated and the wife was living with the child's biological father. The biological father was named on the child's birth and baptismal records as her father and he cared for the child on a daily basis for a year, after which the child's mother resumed living with her husband and terminated the biological father's contact with the child.

In reversing a grant of summary judgment to the child's mother in a paternity action brought by the biological father, the appellate court reasoned that (1) the child had not been "born into" an extant marital union, (2) the biological father was apparently willing to accept the legal rights and responsibilities of fatherhood and the parties had functioned as a family during the child's first year, (3) given these facts, the state's interest in upholding the integrity of the marital family was relatively weak and any state interest in reconstituting a marital union was undercut by the father-child relationship that was established, and (4) there was a strong private interest in continuing an existing parent-child relationship, based on the substantial time period that elapsed between the child's birth and mother's return to her husband. Given these facts, the biological father's interest in the existing relationship could not be constitutionally cut off by application of the "conclusive" paternity presumption, and therefore, the trial court's grant of summary judgment to the child's mother based only on the facts of marital cohabitation at the time of conception and of her husband's fertility was in error (77 Cal. App. 4th 1198, 1216-1219) .

In Steven W. v. Matthew S (1995) 33 Cal. App. 4th 1108, 39 Cal. Rptr. 2d 535 , the contest was between Matthew, the mother's husband, and Steven, a subsequent cohabitant with whom she was romantically involved. The conclusive presumption of Fam. Code § 7540 did not apply because Matthew could not establish cohabitation at the time of conception.

Each man was a presumed father under what is now Fam. Code § 7611, Matthew under Fam. Code § 7611(a) and (d), by virtue of the marriage and receiving the child into his home, and Steven under Fam. Code § 7611(d). However, although Matthew proved to be the actual biological father, Steven actually functioned as the child's father. He was listed as the father on the birth certificate, the child was given his surname, he generally cared for the child while cohabiting with the mother and child, and continued to share custody of and provide support for the child after the relationship ended. On these facts, the trial court's held that Steven's presumption should prevail [see Fam. Code § 7612(b) (if two presumptions apply, one founded on weightier policy considerations and logic controls)]. It found that Steven had the more prolonged, intensive, and continuing relationship with the child (33 Cal. App. 4th 1108, 1113) . The court of appeal affirmed, noting that courts have repeatedly held that the extant father-child relationship is to be preserved at the cost of biological ties (33 Cal. App. 4th 1108, 1115-1117) .

§ 171.39 Opposing Contention That Paternity Determination Is Barred by Conclusive Presumption That Mother's Husband Is Child's Father [Fam. Code § 7540]--Presumption Need Not Be Applied if Its Underlying Policies Are Not Furthered

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE CONCLUSIVE PRESUMPTION OF FAMILY CODE SECTION 7540, THAT A CHILD BORN TO A MARRIED WOMAN IS A CHILD OF THE MARRIAGE IF CONCEIVED WHILE THE MOTHER WAS COHABITING WITH HER HUSBAND WHO WAS NOT IMPOTENT OR STERILE, SHOULD NOT BE APPLIED IN THIS CASE BECAUSE THE UNDERLYING POLICIES THAT SUPPORT THE PRESUMPTION WOULD NOT BE FURTHERED.

A. Balancing Respective Private and State Interests. [See § 171.38, Paragraph B.]

B. Underlying Policies Not Furthered. Although the presumption of Family Code Section 7540 is "conclusive," it need not be applied if its underlying policies are not furthered (County of Orange v. Leslie B. (1993) 14 Cal. App. 4th 976, 980, 17 Cal. Rptr. 2d 797 ; see Alicia R. v. Timothy M. (1994) 29 Cal. App. 4th 1232, 1237, 34 Cal. Rptr. 2d 868).

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that the presumption of Fam. Code § 7540, that a child born to a married woman who was cohabiting with her husband who was not impotent or sterile at the time of conception is a child of the marriage [see § 171.25], should be applied. Unlike the points and authorities in § 171.38, which are for use by a putative father who wants to establish his paternity of the child, these points and authorities are for use by a party who wants to avoid the presumption in order to establish the putative father's paternity over his opposition.

This form may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which the application of the presumption is brought before the court. It may be used in a memorandum of points and authorities in connection with a pretrial motion, such as a demurrer, motion for summary judgment, or motion for summary adjudication of the issue of paternity. It may also be used in a trial or an appellate brief. For further discussion, see § 171.38[2].

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in this form may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities in § 171.26.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Underlying Policies Not Furthered

County of Orange v. Leslie B. (1993) 14 Cal. App. 4th 976, 17 Cal. Rptr. 2d 797 , represents a significant departure from prior jurisprudence on the application of the conclusive presumption of Fam. Code § 7540, that a child born to a married woman who was cohabiting with her husband who was not impotent or sterile at the time of conception is a child of the marriage [see § 171.25]. The case was a district attorney support action under Welf. & Inst. Code § 11350.1 brought against Leslie, the biological father of the child, Jennifer. Jennifer was conceived while her mother Catherine was married to and cohabiting with Gregory, but they separated and divorced shortly thereafter. No father was named on Jennifer's birth certificate, and for twelve years, neither Leslie nor Gregory knew that Catherine had given birth to Jennifer.

Twelve years later, the county filed a support action against Leslie. Voluntary blood tests showed a 99.25 percent probability that Leslie was Jennifer's father. Nevertheless, Leslie defended by relying on the conclusive presumption of Fam. Code § 7540, which would have made Gregory Jennifer's father as a matter of law. The trial court refused to apply the presumption, and adjudicated Leslie to be the father.

The court of appeal affirmed. It noted that while the presumption is "conclusive," courts have refused to apply it if its underlying policies are not furthered [see cases discussed in § 171.38]. Traditionally, it was stated that the presumption was designed to preserve the integrity of the family unit, to protect children from the legal and social stigma of illegitimacy, and to promote individual rather than state responsibility for child support. However, the court concluded that none of these policies would be furthered by application of the presumption to the facts in this case (14 Cal. App. 4th 976, 980) .

The court noted the significant factual difference between the case before it and those cases in which courts had previously addressed the operation of the presumption. It noted that the possible due process violation arises if a putative father is told that he has no right to participate in his child's life because another man is the child's conclusively presumed father. If the child and presumed father are living together in a family unit, application of the presumption does not deny a putative father due process because the policies behind the presumption are significantly furthered [see § 171.26]. In contrast, Leslie sought avoidance of participation rather than involvement. The court held that the presumption could not be applied for that purpose (14 Cal. App. 4th 976, 980) .

The court then surveyed the previous cases on both sides of the issue. In discussing In re R. (1975) 13 Cal. 3d 636, 648, 119 Cal. Rptr. 475, 532 P.2d 123 (discussed in § 171.38[3][b]), the court noted the balancing test to determine whether applying the presumption violated the due process rights of a putative father who wished to rebut it. It stated that logic dictated that the same test should apply to determine whether not applying the presumption would violate the putative father's due process rights (14 Cal. App. 4th 976, 981) .

The appellate court concluded that the trial court had correctly applied the balancing test and correctly determined that applying the presumption would lead to a ridiculous result. If Leslie prevailed, Jennifer would be given a father whom she knows is not her biological father, to preserve the integrity of a family unit that never existed. It considered the "stigma" of illegitimacy to no longer be a relevant concern [see NOTE in § 171.26[3][b]]. Finally, the state's interest in establishing a source of child support was completely served by declaring Leslie to be the legal father. In conclusion, the court agreed with the trial judge, that applying the presumption would lead to an absurd result that defies reason and common sense. To apply the presumption is to rely on a fiction to establish a legal fact that is known to be untrue, in order to protect policies that, on the facts of the case, do not exist (14 Cal. App. 4th 976, 983) .

The facts of Alicia R. v. Timothy M. (1994) 29 Cal. App. 4th 1232, 34 Cal. Rptr. 2d 868 , are essentially the same as County of Orange v. Leslie B. The mother was married to and cohabiting with one man (although the marriage was void and subsequently annulled) when she conceived a child by another man. She filed a paternity action against the true biological father, who defended on the ground that the conclusive presumption of Fam. Code § 7540 made the "husband" the child's father as a matter of law. The trial court determined that it would be a "travesty" to apply the presumption.

The appellate court agreed, finding the logic of Leslie B. and Lisa R. to be equally applicable to the case. The court cited Leslie B. for the proposition that logic dictated that the same balancing test used to determine whether applying the presumption violated the due process rights of a putative father wishing to rebut it should apply to determine whether not applying the presumption might also violate his due process rights (29 Cal. App. 4th 1232, 1237) .

§ 171.40 Opposing Contention That Paternity Determination Is Barred by Conclusive Presumption That Mother's Husband Is Child's Father [Fam. Code § 7540]--Party Is Estopped From Relying on Presumption

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

_____ [Party relying on presumption] SHOULD BE ESTOPPED BY HIS/HER CONDUCT FROM RELYING ON THE CONCLUSIVE PRESUMPTION OF FAMILY CODE SECTION 7540 THAT A CHILD BORN TO A MARRIED WOMAN IS A CHILD OF THE MARRIAGE IF CONCEIVED WHILE THE MOTHER WAS COHABITING WITH HER HUSBAND WHO WAS NOT IMPOTENT OR STERILE.

Estoppel by Conduct. A party who represents to a child that the mother's husband is not the child's father may be estopped from relying on the presumption of Family Code Section 7540 (Guardianship of Ethan S. (1990) 221 Cal. App. 3d 1403, 1415-1417, 271 Cal. Rptr. 121).

[2] Comments

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that the presumption of Fam. Code § 7540, that a child born to a married woman who was cohabiting with her husband who was not impotent or sterile at the time of conception is a child of the marriage [see § 171.25] should not be applied. These points and authorities focus on the conduct of the party who wants to rely on the presumption, rather than on the constitutional rights of the party who is opposing the presumption (see § 171.38) or the underlying policies behind the presumption (see § 171.39).

This form may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which the application of the presumption is brought before the court. It may be used in a memorandum of points and authorities in connection with a pretrial motion, such as a demurrer, motion for summary judgment, or motion for summary adjudication of the issue of paternity. It may also be used in a trial or an appellate brief. For further discussion, § 171.38[2].

Because estoppel is based on conduct, proper presentation and development of the facts is crucial. It should first be established another man is, and the husband is not, the actual biological father of the child [see Fam. Code § 7541; § 171.41]. The crucial facts are that the party who is relying on the presumption represented to the child that the mother's husband was not the father of the child, and that the child relied on the representation by developing a true parent-child relationship with his or her actual biological father. Other facts showing detriment to the child if the presumption is applied should be included.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Estoppel by Conduct

In Craig L. v. Sandy S. (2004) 125 Cal. App. 4th 36, 22 Cal. Rptr. 3d 606 , the court held that when a mother and her husband have allegedly permitted the biological father to receive the child into his home and hold the child out as his child, the presumption of Fam. Code § 7540 is not "conclusive." Instead, the biological father may assert the rebuttable presumption of paternity provided by Fam. Code § 7611(d), the husband may assert the rebuttable presumption of paternity provided by Fam. Code § 7611(a), and the court must decide under Fam. Code § 7612 which presumption shall prevail (125 Cal. App. 4th 36, 45-53) .

Guardianship of Ethan S. (1990) 221 Cal. App. 3d 1403, 271 Cal. Rptr. 121 , involved consolidated proceedings through which both the mother's husband and the child's true biological father sought parental rights and custody of a child. The child, Ethan, was born in July of 1980 while the mother was married to and living with Lewis Headrick. However, Headrick was traveling, and the mother was having an extramarital affair with Wayne S. when Ethan was conceived. She was sure that Wayne, and not Headrick, was the child's actual biological father, although the fact apparently was never confirmed by blood tests. Nevertheless, with Headrick's consent, she gave Wayne's surname to Ethan, and Wayne consented to being designated as Ethan's father on the birth certificate. Ethan was told, and always believed, that Wayne was his father. He called him "dad" and called Headrick "Lewis."

The mother and Headrick separated in 1981 and divorced in 1983. The mother moved to Australia in 1984, without Ethan. She took no further role in the proceedings regarding his paternity and custody other than to provide an affidavit in support of Wayne (221 Cal. App. 3d 1403, 1407) .

Ethan lived with Headrick until 1985, during which time Headrick consistently represented to the county welfare department and others that Wayne, and not he, was Ethan's father. In March of 1985, Ethan went to live with Wayne with Headrick's permission. Despite the change in custody, Headrick succeeded in having himself appointed Ethan's guardian, although Ethan continued to live with Wayne. Headrick listed Wayne as Ethan's father in his guardianship filings, although Wayne apparently received no actual notice of the proceedings (221 Cal. App. 3d 1403, 1407-1408) .

Eventually, the two men had a falling out, and each began proceedings to obtain custody of Ethan. Wayne filed a paternity action, and Headrick sought a preliminary injunction in his guardianship matter compelling the return of Ethan to him. After numerous motions and hearings, the ultimate result was that the trial court in the consolidated matters adjudged Wayne to be the child's father, granted him custody, and terminated the guardianship.

Headrick appealed, contending that the court erred in not applying the presumption of Fam. Code § 7540 conclusively to affirm his paternity. Without grappling with the constitutional balancing test [see §§ 171.26, 171.38], the court of appeal upheld the judgment on equitable estoppel grounds.

The court set forth the basic equitable principle of estoppel, that a party who, by his or her own conduct or statements, intentionally and deliberately has led another to believe a particular thing to be true and to act on that belief, may not, in any litigation arising out of the conduct or statements, be permitted to contradict it. In this case, it was Ethan and not

Wayne who was deemed to have relied on Headrick's conduct and statements (221 Cal. App. 3d 1403, 1415-1416) .

The court extrapolated from cases in which a man who was not actually the biological father of a child was estopped by his conduct from later denying his paternity and avoiding parental duties [see In re Marriage of Johnson (1979) 88 Cal. App. 3d 848, 852, 152 Cal. Rptr. 121 ; In re Marriage of Valle (1975) 53 Cal. App. 3d 837, 841, 126 Cal. Rptr. 38] . In these cases, in order to establish an estoppel, the putative father must have represented to the child that he was the father, and the child must have relied on the representation by accepting and treating the putative father as his father (221 Cal. App. 3d 1403, 1416) .

In the case before it, Headrick had at all times represented to the child that he was not the father, and Ethan relied on the representation by accepting and treating Wayne as his father. He has built a life-long relationship with Wayne and never formed parental bonds with Headrick. On these facts, the court found that all elements of estoppel were present as a matter of law on the record (221 Cal. App. 3d 1403, 1416-1417) . It might be additionally noted that the traditional application of estoppel involves treating something as true that really isn't true because of the reliance element. In this case, estoppel involves treating as true something that actually is true (Wayne's paternity), but that is made untrue purely by a statutory presumption.

[a] Estoppel by Conduct

In In re Marriage of Pedregon (2003) 107 Cal. App. 4th 1284, 132 Cal. Rptr. 2d 861 , the court of appeal held that a stepfather was required to pay child support for his former wife's son under the doctrine of "parentage by estoppel," even though the stepfather was not the child's biological father. Although the stepfather rebutted the Fam. Code § 7611(d) paternity presumption by showing that he was not the child's biological father, the appellate court found that such rebuttal was not determinative; instead, the issue was whether he was obligated to pay child support under the doctrine of parentage by estoppel. This doctrine originated with Clevenger v. Clevenger (1961) 189 Cal. App. 2d 658, 11 Cal. Rptr. 707 , which predicated the doctrine on (1) a child's acceptance of a putative father's express or implied representation of being the child's natural father, and (2) a representation of such long continuance that it establishes a paternal relationship between a putative father and child, and frustrates the opportunity of discovering the child's natural father. Here, the stepfather held himself out to be the natural father for a lengthy period of time, and the child considered him to be his father. Furthermore, the stepfather had encouraged his former wife to disregard the biological father, and she had lost contact with him. There was substantial evidence to support a finding of parentage by estoppel, and the trial court abused its discretion by not ordering the husband to pay child support as the putative father (107 Cal. App. 4th 1284, 1288-1290) .

In County of San Diego v. Arzaga (2007) 152 Cal. App. 4th 1336, 62 Cal. Rptr. 3d 329 , a man appealed from a judgment in favor of the county finding him to be the legal father of a child under the doctrine of parentage by estoppel. The appellate court reversed the judgment, concluding that a finding of parentage by estoppel in this case was prevented by the trial court's finding that the man did not know that he was not the biological father and only stopped acting as such when the genetic test results that were received in the action showed that he was not the biological father. The appellate court agreed with the man's contention that the evidence did not establish the elements of parentage by estoppel as set out in Clevenger v. Clevenger (1961) 189 Cal. App. 2d 658, 11 Cal. Rptr. 707 and in subsequent cases that have followed it. The appellate court noted that he could not find any case applying paternity by estoppel to an alleged father when the facts established that the father acted without knowledge that he was not truly the child's biological parent. To the contrary, it noted that in each case that applied the doctrine it was apparent the father knew the true facts. It concluded that while the court is sensitive to the emotional detriment that can result to a child who has relied on the conduct of a person who has held himself out as the child's father, it would be unfair to apply this equitable doctrine to an individual whose conduct was based on his mistaken belief that he actually was the child's natural father (152 Cal. App. 4th 1336, 1343-1345) .

17-171 California Points & Authorities § 171.41

§ 171.41 Opposing Contention That Motion for Blood or Other Genetic Tests Is Time-Barred [Fam. Code § 7541(b), (c)]--Limitations on Right of Rebuttal Do Not Apply if Conclusive Presumption of Husband's Paternity Does Not Apply

[1] FORM

THE TIME LIMITATIONS OF FAMILY CODE SECTION 7541 SHOULD NOT BE APPLIED TO _____ [specify party, e.g., PETITIONER'S] MOTION FOR _____ [BLOOD or, specify other applicable genetic test] TESTS BECAUSE THE CONCLUSIVE PRESUMPTION OF FAMILY CODE SECTION 7540, THAT A CHILD BORN TO A MARRIED WOMAN IS A CHILD OF THE MARRIAGE IF CONCEIVED WHILE THE MOTHER WAS COHABITING WITH HER HUSBAND WHO WAS NOT IMPOTENT OR STERILE, DOES NOT APPLY TO THIS _____ [ACTION or PROCEEDING].

Two-Year Limitation on Right to Rebut Presumption Inapplicable. If, on balance, the court determines that the presumption of Family Code Section 7540 should not be applied conclusively, then blood or other genetic tests may be ordered beyond the two-years-from-birth limitation period of Family Code Section 7541(b) and (c) (see Alicia R. v. Timothy M. (1994) 29 Cal. App. 4th 1232, 1236-1238, 34 Cal. Rptr. 2d 868 ; In re Melissa G. (1989) 213 Cal. App. 3d 1082, 1084, 261 Cal. Rptr. 894 ; see also Fam. Code § 7551).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a motion for blood or other genetic tests may be granted beyond the limitations period of Fam. Code § 7541(b) and (c). They are for use if the presumption of Fam. Code § 7540, that a child born to a married woman who was cohabiting with her husband who was not impotent or sterile at the time of conception is a child of the marriage [see § 171.25], is inapplicable to the case.

These points and authorities may be used by any party wishing to avoid the operation of the presumption. They must be combined with points and authorities in support of the contention that the presumption should not be applied [see §§ 171.38 -171.41]. They should also be combined with authorities in support of a motion for blood or other genetic tests [see § 171.27]. See also § 171.25[2], regarding amendments operative January 1, 1998, to the Uniform Act on Blood Tests to Determine Paternity (Fam. Code § 7550 et seq.) that now provide for "genetic" rather than simply "blood" testing, although Fam. Code § 7541 still makes reference only to "blood tests" in rebutting the presumption of Fam. Code § 7540.

The presumption of Fam. Code § 7540 is subject to a limited statutory right of rebuttal, as discussed in § 171.25[2].

The premise of these points and authorities is that if there are constitutional, public policy, or estoppel grounds (see §§ 171.38 -171.40) for not applying the presumption of Fam. Code § 7540, then the limitations of Fam. Code § 7541 also do not apply. The cases cited directly support the nonapplication of the two-year limitations period. The also implicitly support the nonapplication of the limitations on standing, meaning that any party might bring the motion. They probably do not support an attack on the presumption based on other evidence unsupported by blood or other genetic test results.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Two-Year Limitation on Right to Rebut Presumption Inapplicable

The facts and principal holding of Alicia R. v. Timothy M. (1994) 29 Cal. App. 4th 1232, 34 Cal. Rptr. 2d 868 , are set forth in § 171.39[3][a]. In the case, the child was born on September 22, 1990. The husband voluntarily had blood tests conducted, apparently extrajudicially, in late 1992 or early 1993. The tests excluded him as the father. The mother filed her paternity action against Timothy M. on August 12, 1993. At the hearing on an order to show cause, the court first determined that it would not apply the presumption of the husband's paternity conclusively, and then ordered the parties to take part in DNA testing. The tests established Timothy's paternity.

He admitted that he was the child's biological father, but nevertheless appealed, arguing that because the action was filed and the blood tests conducted more than two years after the birth of the child, there was no right of rebuttal and the presumption had to be applied conclusively [see Fam. Code § 7541(b), (c)]. The court of appeal rejected the contention and affirmed the judgment of paternity. It did not address the question of the limitations of Fam. Code § 7541 separately. Rather, it rejected application of the presumption on the grounds that applying it would in no way further any of the underlying policies on which it rests [see § 171.39]. Having rejected the presumption, it gave no further consideration to the statutory limitations on the right of rebuttal, including the two-year limitation period (29 Cal. App. 4th 1232, 1236-1238) . The conclusion, therefore, must be that if the presumption falls, the limitations fall with it.

The facts and principal holding of In re Melissa G. (1989) 213 Cal. App. 3d 1082, 261 Cal. Rptr. 894 , are discussed in § 171.38[4][a]. In this case, the child was born in August of 1983, eight days before the mother separated from her husband. Neither the mother nor her husband requested blood tests to determine paternity within two years of the child's birth. In late 1987, the child came within the juvenile court's dependency jurisdiction, and the husband's paternity was challenged. The court then ordered blood tests, apparently on its own motion, which indicated that the mother's subsequent cohabitant and not the husband was the father (213 Cal. App. 3d 1082, 1084) . Nevertheless, the juvenile court concluded that it had to apply the presumption of Fam. Code § 7540 conclusively, and could not consider the blood tests results.

In reversing, the court took the same route as the court in Alicia R. v. Timothy M. It found that application of the presumption would violate the constitutional rights of the true biological father [see § 171.38]. Having so found, it gave no further consideration to the limitations of Fam. Code § 7541 (213 Cal. App. 3d 1082, 1085-1089) .

NOTE:

The same basic facts existed in County of Orange v. Leslie B. (1993) 14 Cal. App. 4th 976, 17 Cal. Rptr. 2d 797 . However, in that case, the child was born more than two years before the operative date of what is now Fam. Code § 7541, allowing for a limited right of rebuttal of the previously truly conclusive presumption of the husband's paternity [see Stats. 1980, ch. 1310, § 1; Stats. 1981, ch. 1180, § 1]. Therefore, compliance with the statutory rebuttal provisions would have been impossible. Once the district attorney filed a support enforcement proceeding in 1989, all parties voluntarily took blood tests. The court of appeal concluded that the presumption did not apply because it's underlying policies were not furthered [see § 171.39] (14 Cal. App. 4th 976, 980-983) . It saw no reason to reach any additional issues regarding the limitations of Fam. Code § 7541 (14 Cal. App. 4th 976, 980 n.3).

PART II. FORMS

17-171 California Points & Authorities § 171.42

§ 171.42 Opposing Contention That Paternity Judgment Should Be Set Aside on Equitable Grounds of Fraud or Mistake--Fraud or Mistake Must Be Extrinsic to Proceeding

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief].

THE JUDGMENT IN THIS PATERNITY MATTER SHOULD NOT BE VACATED AND SET ASIDE ON THE EQUITABLE GROUND OF _____ [FRAUD and/or MISTAKE], BECAUSE ONLY FRAUD OR MISTAKE THAT IS EXTRINSIC TO THE PROCEEDING MAY BE THE BASIS FOR SETTING ASIDE A JUDGMENT, AND HERE, THE _____ [moving party, e.g., RESPONDENT] HAD A FULL OPPORTUNITY TO PRESENT HIS/HER CASE TO THE COURT, IN THAT HE/SHE _____ [specify how moving party had opportunity to present case, e.g., APPEARED IN COURT AT THE HEARING ON PATERNITY ISSUES, PRESENTED WITNESSES, CROSS-EXAMINED WITNESSES, AND OTHERWISE FULLY PARTICIPATED IN THE PROCEEDINGS]. THEREFORE, ANY PURPORTED IRREGULARITY IN THE PROCEEDINGS OR EVIDENCE COULD NOT HAVE BEEN EXTRINSIC TO THOSE PROCEEDINGS AND A VALID BASIS FOR A SET ASIDE.

A. Alleged Fraud or Mistake Must Be Extrinsic to Proceeding for Equitable Set Aside of Judgment. After expiration of the time to obtain relief from a judgment pursuant to Section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure, a paternity judgment may be set aside and vacated on equitable grounds of fraud or mistake only if the fraud or mistake is extrinsic to the proceeding, such that the complaining party was effectively prevented from presenting a claim or defense (see In re Margarita D. (1999) 72 Cal. App. 4th 1288, 1294, 85 Cal. Rptr. 2d 713 ; City and County of San Francisco v. Cartagena (1995) 35 Cal. App. 4th 1061, 1067, 41 Cal. Rptr. 2d 797).

B. Intrinsic Fraud Goes to Merits of Proceeding and Is Insufficient Basis to Set Aside Judgment. Intrinsic fraud goes to the merits of a prior proceeding and is not a valid ground for setting aside a paternity judgment when the claimant had notice of the action, an opportunity to present his or her case, and to protect himself or herself from any mistake or fraud by the opposing party, but unreasonably neglected to do so (In re Margarita D. (1999) 72 Cal. App. 4th 1288, 1295, 85 Cal. Rptr. 2d 713 ; City and County of San Francisco v. Cartagena (1995) 35 Cal. App. 4th 1061, 1067-1068, 41 Cal. Rptr. 2d 797).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a paternity judgment may not be set aside on the equitable ground of fraud or mistake after the set aside time of Code Civ. Proc. § 473 has expired, unless the purported fraud or mistake are "extrinsic" to the proceeding, as opposed to being "intrinsic" and going to the merits of the proceeding.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should show that the conduct claimed to be fraudulent or the basis for mistake did not deprive the claimant of his or her "day in court," even assuming, for the sake of argument, that the allegations are true [see, e.g., In re Margarita D. (1999) 72 Cal. App. 4th 1288, 1295, 85 Cal. Rptr. 2d 713 (claimant's ground for setting aside judgment--that it was based on false facts supplied by child's mother--was not extrinsic fraud)].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Alleged Fraud or Mistake Must Be Extrinsic to Proceeding for Equitable Set Aside of Judgment

In In re Margarita D. (1999) 72 Cal. App. 4th 1288, 85 Cal. Rptr. 2d 713 , a defendant claiming to be the biological father of a child born out of wedlock moved to (1) set aside a juvenile court's paternity judgment against another man who had admitted paternity, (2) obtain an order for paternity testing, and (3) modify an order establishing a plan of adoption for the child by her maternal grandparents. At trial, defendant--who had earlier fathered a child by the same woman--testified that (1) he had lived and had sexual relations with the child's mother during the period of possible conception, (2) she denied being pregnant when he later saw her, (3) he learned of the pregnancy when he received a notice about paternity testing, but a social worker told him that another man was the father, and (4) he later saw photographs of the child and believed the child resembled him. A social worker testified that she did not recall her conversation with defendant, but her notes indicated that he said he was not the child's father and saw no need for paternity testing. The trial court noted that even if paternity testing proved that defendant was the father, he would "merely be a biological father who had not done anything to preserve his parental rights even though he had numerous reasons to suspect he was the father." It denied defendant's motions, and he appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment. It rejected the contention that, because the mother and the man who had claimed paternity had lied to the juvenile court, the paternity judgment should have been set aside as a product of fraud. A party can seek relief from a final judgment by appealing to a court's equitable power, and a court sitting in equity, can, under limited circumstances, set aside or modify a valid final judgment obtained by fraud, mistake, or accident [citing Olivera v. Grace (1942) 19 Cal. 2d 570, 575, 122 P.2d 564] . However, with respect to fraud, only extrinsic fraud can be the basis for vacating a final judgment [citing In re Marriage of Stevenot (1984) 154 Cal. App. 3d 1051, 1068, 202 Cal. Rptr. 116] . And put simply, extrinsic fraud "is one party's preventing the other from having his day in court" [citing City and County of San Francisco v. Cartagena (1995) 35 Cal. App. 4th 1061, 1067, 41 Cal. Rptr. 2d 797] . The allegation of presenting false facts did not constitute extrinsic fraud. Similarly, alleged lies by the mother and the man admitting paternity, and attempts at hiding the pregnancy did not prevent defendant from coming to court or from claiming paternity. Further, the social services agency was not at fault for the lateness of defendant's paternity claim, because substantial evidence supported the finding that defendant had not wanted to take a paternity test when contacted (72 Cal. App. 4th 1288, 1294-1296) .

In City and County of San Francisco v. Cartagena (1995) 35 Cal. App. 4th 1061, 41 Cal. Rptr. 2d 797 , a defendant who had been judicially determined to be the father of a child sought to vacate the paternity judgment on the ground that the child's mother had committed extrinsic fraud by misrepresenting his paternal status. He requested that the court order blood testing of the mother and the child. A trial court granted this request, even though it had not yet ruled on his motion to set aside the judgment. The plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed the trial court's order as being premature. Although blood tests could play a crucial role in accurately determining paternity, the defendant was not entitled to contest paternity until the prior judgment was vacated. In discussing defendant's collateral attack on the paternity judgment, the appellate court explained that, despite the bar to a subsequent action that may result from application of the doctrine of res judicata, a party may seek relief from a final judgment under a court's equitable power to set aside or modify a valid final judgment obtained by fraud, mistake, or accident. But, with respect to fraud, the type of fraud necessary to vacate a final judgment is extrinsic fraud, not fraud that is intrinsic to the trial of the case itself. Extrinsic fraud occurs when a party is deprived of the opportunity to present his or her claim or defense to the court; where the party was kept ignorant or, other than from his or her own negligence, fraudulently prevented from fully participating in the proceeding. Examples of extrinsic fraud are: concealment of the existence of a community property asset, failure to give notice of the action to the other party, and convincing the other party not to obtain counsel because the matter will not proceed (and then it does proceed) [citing In re Marriage of Stevenot (1984) 154 Cal. App. 3d 1051, 1068-1069, 202 Cal. Rptr. 116] . The essence of extrinsic fraud is one party's preventing the other from "having his day in court." In this case, because there was no judicial determination on whether defendant had proven the requisite evidentiary basis to vacate the judgment of paternity, that issue had to be resolved before the child and his mother could be forced to undergo blood testing. If the trial court ultimately ruled that the judgment should be set aside, then the paternity of the child would be placed directly in issue and the blood test would become an appropriate subject o discovery. If, however, the trial court were to rule that the judgment should not be set aside, then defendant would be barred from challenging the paternity determination, and blood test evidence would provide him no legal recourse (35 Cal. App. 4th 1061, 1067-1069) .

[b] Intrinsic Fraud Goes to Merits of Proceeding and Is Insufficient Basis to Set Aside Judgment

The facts and procedural background of In re Margarita D. (1999) 72 Cal. App. 4th 1288, 85 Cal. Rptr. 2d 713 are set forth under § 171.42[3][a]. In Margarita D., the court of appeal held that a juvenile court properly refused to (1) set aside a paternity judgment that found another man to be a dependent child's father, (2) order paternity testing, and (3) modify the child's permanent plan of adoption. The appellate court discussed the difference between extrinsic fraud--which may be a ground for equitable relief--and intrinsic fraud, which may not. Intrinsic fraud is part of the case itself and goes to the merits of the original proceeding. Intrinsic fraud is not a valid ground for setting aside a judgment, when a party has been given notice and an opportunity to present a case or to protect himself or herself from an adversary's mistake or fraud but has unreasonably neglected to do so. Therefore, in demonstrating extrinsic fraud, a party cannot simply assert that a judgment was premised on false facts, but must show that the facts could not reasonably have been discovered prior to entry of the judgment [citing City and County of San Francisco v. Cartagena (1995) 35 Cal. App. 4th 1061, 1068, 41 Cal. Rptr. 2d 797] .

The facts and procedural background of City and County of San Francisco v. Cartagena (1995) 35 Cal. App. 4th 1061, 41 Cal. Rptr. 2d 797 are set forth under § 171.42[3][a]. In Cartagena, the court of appeal reversed a trial court's order for blood tests as being premature, finding that vacating the prior paternity judgment was a prerequisite to ordering blood tests and there had been no judicial determination on whether the defendant had proven the grounds to vacate the judgment. In discussing the grounds for vacating a judgment on equitable grounds of fraud, the court stated that extrinsic, as opposed to intrinsic fraud must be shown. In describing the difference between these two, it explained that the essence of extrinsic fraud is one party's preventing the other from "having his day in court." By contrast, fraud is intrinsic and not a valid ground for a set aside when the party has been given notice of the action, had an opportunity to present his or her case, and to protect himself or herself from any mistake or fraud of the adversary but has unreasonably neglected to do so. Such a claim of fraud goes to the merits of the prior proceeding, which the moving party should have guarded against at the time. When the defrauded party has failed to take advantage of liberal discovery policies to fully investigate his or her claim, any fraud is intrinsic fraud. In demonstrating extrinsic fraud, it is insufficient for a party to come into court and simply assert that the judgment was premised on false facts. The party must show that such facts could not reasonably have been discovered prior to the entry of judgment (35 Cal. App. 4th 1061, 1067-1068) .

THE MOTION TO SET ASIDE AND VACATE THE JUDGMENT OF PATERNITY BASED ON GENETIC TESTING INDICATING THAT _____ [NAME] IS NOT THE BIOLOGICAL FATHER SHOULD BE DENIED BECAUSE DENIAL OF THE MOTION IS IN THE BEST INTEREST OF THE CHILD _____ [NAME].

A. Motion To Set Aside and Vacate Judgment of Paternity Based on Genetic Testing Should Be Denied If Denial of Motion Is in Best Interest of Child. If the court finds that the conclusions of all of the experts, based on the results of genetic tests performed pursuant to Fam. Code § 7550 et seq., indicate that the previously established father is not the biological father of the child, the court may, nevertheless, deny the motion if it determines that denial of the motion is in the best interest of the child, after consideration of factors specified in Family Code Section 7648 [Fam. Code § 7648].

[EITHER]

B. Factors Supporting Denial of Motion Include Age of Child. Factors supporting denial of a motion to set aside and vacate a judgment of paternity based on genetic testing under Family Code Section 7646 include the age of the child [Fam. Code § 7648(a)].

[AND/OR]

C. Factors Supporting Denial of Motion Include Length of Time Since Judgment. Factors supporting denial of a motion to set aside and vacate a judgment of paternity based on genetic testing under Family Code Section 7646 include the length of time since the entry of the judgment establishing paternity [Fam. Code § 7648(b)].

[AND/OR]

D. Factors Supporting Denial of Motion Include Nature of Relationship. Factors supporting denial of a motion to set aside and vacate a judgment of paternity based on genetic testing under Family Code Section 7646 include the nature, duration, and quality of any relationship between the previously established father and the child, including the duration and frequency of any time periods during which the child and the previously established father resided in the same household or enjoyed a parent-child relationship [Fam. Code § 7648(c)].

[AND/OR]

E. Factors Supporting Denial of Motion Include Request of Established Father. Factors supporting denial of a motion to set aside and vacate a judgment of paternity based on genetic testing under Family Code Section 7646 include the request of the previously established father that the parent-child relationship continue [Fam. Code § 7648(d)].

[AND/OR]

F. Factors Supporting Denial of Motion Include Biological Father's Acquiescence. Factors supporting denial of a motion to set aside and vacate a judgment of paternity based on genetic testing under Family Code Section 7646 include notice by the biological father of the child that he does not oppose preservation of the relationship between the previously established father and the child [Fam. Code § 7648(e)].

[AND/OR]

G. Factors Supporting Denial of Motion Include Benefit or Detriment to Child. Factors supporting denial of a motion to set aside and vacate a judgment of paternity based on genetic testing under Family Code Section 7646 include the benefit or detriment to the child in establishing the biological parentage of the child [Fam. Code § 7648(f)].

[AND/OR]

H. Factors Supporting Denial of Motion Include Established Father's Conduct That Impairs Ability To Identify

or Seek Support from Biological Father. Factors supporting denial of a motion to set aside and vacate a judgment of paternity based on genetic testing under Family Code Section 7646 include whether the conduct of the previously established father has impaired the ability to ascertain the identity of, or get support from, the biological father [Fam. Code § 7648(g)].

[AND/OR]

I. Factors Supporting Denial of Motion Include Additional Relevant Factors. In addition to enumerated factors in Family Code Section 7648, denial of a motion to set aside and vacate a judgment of paternity based on genetic testing under Family Code Section 7646 may be based on additional factors deemed by the court to be relevant to its determination of the best interest of the child [Fam. Code § 7648(h)].

[Optional] THE MOTION TO SET ASIDE AND VACATE THE JUDGMENT OF PATERNITY BASED ON GENETIC TESTING IS UNTIMELY BECAUSE IT WAS FILED MORE THAN TWO YEARS AFTER THE CHILD'S BIRTH.

J. Motion Is Untimely. Any motion to set aside and vacate a judgment of paternity based on genetic testing must be filed within two years of the date of the child's birth when paternity was established by a voluntary declaration of paternity [Fam. Code § 7646(a)(2)].

EVEN IF THE COURT GRANTS THE MOTION TO VACATE THE JUDGMENT OF PATERNITY, THE MOVING PARTY HAS NO RIGHT TO REIMBURSEMENT FOR ANY AMOUNT OF CHILD SUPPORT PAID BEFORE THE GRANTING OF THE MOTION.

K. No Reimbursement for Child Support Paid. If the court grants a motion to set aside or vacate a paternity judgment, the court must also vacate any order for child support and arrearages issued on the basis of that judgment, but the previously established father has no right of reimbursement for any amount of support paid before the motion is granted [Fam. Code § 7648.4].

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a motion to vacate and set aside a judgment of paternity made on the ground that genetic testing has shown that the established father is not the biological father of the child [see Fam. Code § 7646]. The opposition is based on the contention that denial of the motion is in the best interest of the child [Fam. Code § 7648]. The grounds for asserting that the denial of the motion is in the best interest of the child may be used individually or in combination, as appropriate under the facts. Consecutive paragraphs should be renumbered accordingly.

This memorandum of points and authorities may also be submitted in opposition to a motion to vacate and set aside a judgment of paternity on the ground that the motion is untimely [see Fam. Code § 7646(a)(2)]. It may also be used in opposition to a motion for reimbursement of amounts paid for the support of the child if the motion is granted [see Fam. Code § 7648.4].

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should elaborate on the ground or grounds for opposition with respect to how those factors impact the best interest of the child. If the motion is based on the wishes of the established or biological father, then the argument should assert the existence of that factor, for example, that the biological father has given notice that he does not oppose preservation of the relationship between the previously established father and the child, pursuant to Family Code Section 7648(e).

The points and authorities in this form may be submitted in opposition to the motion supported in the points and authorities set forth in § 171.26.

[3] Additional Authorities

[a] Motion Is Untimely

In County of Sacramento v. Llanes (2008) 168 Cal. App. 4th 1165, 87 Cal. Rptr. 3d 158 , the court held that the two-year period for bringing a motion to set aside a paternity judgment under Family Code Section 7646(a)(3) commenced on September 28, 2004, the date the statute was enacted. Thus, the defendant's motion, which was filed on December 29, 2006, was untimely. The defendant was not without a remedy, however, because while the case was pending on appeal the legislature amended Family Code Section 7646(a)(3) to provide that the two-year period in which to bring a motion to set aside or vacate a judgment of paternity commences on January 1, 2005. Family Code Section 7646(c) was also added and provides that a defendant may file a motion for reconsideration of a motion that was denied solely on the basis that it was untimely, as long as the motion for reconsideration is filed on or before December 31, 2009.

In County of Orange v. Superior Court (2007) 155 Cal. App. 4th 1253, 66 Cal. Rptr. 3d 689 , the Orange County Department of Child Support Services appealed from an order for genetic testing under Family Code Section 7575, which was issued preliminarily to the court's ruling on a motion to set aside a paternity judgment based on a voluntary declaration of paternity. The appellate court agreed with the County that the trial court could not set aside the paternity judgment because it was filed more than two years after the child's birth and was therefore untimely under Family Code Section 7646(a)(2). As a result, the trial court abused its discretion by ordering genetic testing for the purpose of deciding whether to set aside the judgment. It erred in concluding that the legislature intended that genetic testing should be ordered whenever an issue regarding the paternity judgment is raised. A court may not order genetic testing to determine whether to set aside a paternity judgment when the request to set aside the judgment is time-barred. A court does, however, have equitable power to order genetic testing after the expiration of the two-year period, but only if extrinsic fraud is shown (155 Cal. App. 4th 1253, 1260-1262) .

[b] No Reimbursement for Child Support Paid

In County of Los Angeles v. James (2007) 152 Cal. App. 4th 253, 60 Cal. Rptr. 3d 880 , a trial court determined that a man was the father of a child and determined that he was obligated to pay child support. Genetic testing later determined that the man was not the father. Based on the test results, the man moved to set aside the paternity judgment and to obtain reimbursement of the support payments made. The court set aside the paternity judgment, but determined that the man was not entitled to reimbursement under Family Code 7648.4. The appellate court upheld this decision. It noted that Family Code Section 7648.4 does not permit a child support reimbursement order in favor of an erroneously declared father. This provision enables a declared father to challenge a paternity decree, but also safeguards the child. Allowing a declared father to seek reimbursement from the mother might adversely affect the mother's ability to provide financially for the child. In enacting this provision, the legislature was aware of the harm that paternity fraud inflicts on a declared father, but sought to balance the competing interests of a declared father and a child, and concluded that a right of reimbursement should not be permitted (152 Cal. App. 4th 253, 258-259) .

[c] Factors Supporting Denial of Motion Include Additional Relevant Factors

In San Mateo County Dept. of Child Support Services v. Clark (2008) 168 Cal. App. 4th 834, 85 Cal. Rptr. 3d 763 , the Department brought an action against the defendant to establish his paternity and obligation to pay child support, based on the declaration of the child's mother that the defendant was the child's biological father. The defendant failed to answer, and the court entered a default judgment establishing his paternity and the child support arrears. The defendant later moved to set aside the judgment of paternity under Family Code Section 7646, serving the motion on the Department but not on the child's mother. The court found that the motion was timely, ordered genetic testing, directed "both parties" to report to the Department, and further ordered the child's mother to bring the child to submit genetic samples at the date and time specified by the Department. The court subsequently set aside the paternity judgment because the child's mother failed to comply with the court's order for genetic testing. The appellate court held that the trial court lacked authority to set aside the default judgment of paternity. The unavailability of genetic testing results, because of the mother's noncompliance with a testing order or for whatever reason, is not a condition that empowers the court to vacate a prior paternity judgment. The defendant, as the moving party, has the burden of proving that he was not the biological father by producing genetic tests from an approved laboratory that excluded his paternity. In addition, the court did not have personal jurisdiction over the mother or the child and thus the court's attempt to order them to submit to genetic testing had no effect. The defendant should have joined the mother as a party to the proceeding or served the mother with a deposition subpoena requiring her to produce a genetic sample. The Department could also have issued an administrative order under Family Code Section 7648.2, requiring the mother and child to submit to genetic testing.

This chapter contains points and authorities relating to medical malpractice actions. It contains memoranda for use in supporting [see §§ 175.20 -175.23] and opposing [see §§ 175.29 -175.32] the contention that a physician is liable for professional negligence, and supporting [see § 175.25] and opposing [see § 175.35] the contention that a physician is vicariously liable for the negligence of medical assistants.

Also included are memoranda for use in supporting [see §§ 175.37-175.42A] and opposing [see §§ 175.43 -175.49] the contention that an action is barred by the statute of limitations, supporting [see § 175.50] and opposing [see §§ 175.51, 175.52] the application of res ipsa loquitur to the action, and supporting the contention that a physician is not liable for breach of a medical services contract [see § 175.53].

In addition are memoranda used in supporting § 175.60 and opposing [see §§ 175.62, 175.63] the contention that money damages for future damages must be paid by periodic payments, supporting the contention that periodic payments of future damages must be based on the present value of the damages award at the time of judgment [see § 175.61], supporting the contention that a collateral source of benefits to a medical malpractice plaintiff cannot obtain reimbursement from a defendant [see § 175.64], opposing the contention that a plaintiff cannot prove recoverable damages if all the damages suffered were paid by a collateral source [see § 175.65], supporting the contention that noneconomic damages are limited [see § 175.66], supporting the contention that the statutory cap on noneconomic damages applies only to the present value of future damages when periodic payment is used [see § 175.67], opposing the contention that the damage cap on noneconomic damages applies, on the ground that the cap does not apply to a common law battery action [see § 175.68], and supporting [see § 175.69] and opposing [see § 175.70] the contention that an expert witness lacking experience in emergency care is not qualified to testify in an action based on alleged malpractice in rendering that type of care. It also contains points and authorities pertaining to punitive damages claims in medical malpractice actions [see §§ 175.55 -175.58].

PART I. INTRODUCTION

§ 175.02 Governing Statutes

The liability of a physician or other health care provider for negligence is governed generally by Civ. Code § 1714(a). The Medical Injury Compensation Reform Act (Stats. 1975, 2d Ex. Sess., chs. 1, 2) added or amended the following statutes that apply specifically to actions brought against licensed health care providers based on professional negligence: Bus. & Prof. Code § 6146 (limiting attorneys' contingency fees in such actions); Civ. Code §§ 3333.1-3333.2 (pertaining to damages); Code Civ. Proc. §§ 340.5 (establishing one-year/three-year limitations period), 364 (establishing requirement of 90 days' notice of intent to file action), 667.7 (requiring payment of future damages in installments), and 1295 (providing for arbitration of malpractice claims) [see Fein v. Permanente Medical Group (1985) 38 Cal. 3d 137, 155-178, 211 Cal. Rptr. 368, 695 P.2d 665 (upholding constitutionality of Civ. Code §§ 3333.1, 3333.2; periodic payments as mandatory under Code Civ. Proc. § 667.7, but reversal as not required when defendant failed to request special findings designating damages as either pre-award or future damages)].

Each of these statutes define the terms "health care provider" and "professional negligence" as follows:

"Health care provider" means any person licensed or certified pursuant to Bus. & Prof. Code § 500 et seq. (practitioners of healing arts, including veterinarians), or licensed pursuant to the Osteopathic Initiative Act [see Bus. & Prof. Code § 3600], or the Chiropractic Initiative Act [see Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 1000-1058] or licensed pursuant to Health & Safety Code § 1200 et seq. (health facilities, including hospitals). "Health care provider" includes the legal representative of a health care provider [Bus. & Prof. Code § 6146(c)(2); Civ. Code § 3333.1(c)(1); Code Civ. Proc. §§ 340.5(1), 667.7, 1295].

"Professional negligence" means a negligent act or omission to act by a health care provider in the rendering of professional services, which act or omission is the proximate cause of a personal injury or wrongful death, provided that the services are within the scope of services for which the provider is licensed and that they are not within any restriction imposed by the licensing agency or licensed hospital [Bus. & Prof. Code § 6146(c)(2); Civ. Code § 3333.1(c)(1); Code Civ. Proc. §§ 340.5(1), 667.7, 1295].

Certain immunities against liability for medical negligence are provided by Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 2395-2398, 2727.5, and 2861.5; Civ. Code §§ 43.9 and 1714.8; Gov. Code §§ 855.6, 855.8, and 856.6; Health & Safety Code §§ 1317, 7190.5 (repealed effective July 1, 2000), and 120450; Probate Code § 4740; and Veh. Code § 165.5.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1029.8 allows the recovery of treble damages, and costs and attorney's fees at the discretion of the court, when an unlicensed person causes injury or damage to another while providing goods or performing services for which specified licenses are required. For a form based on Code Civ. Proc. § 1029.8, see Ch. 177, Damages .

§ 175.20 Supporting Contention That Physician Is Liable for Professional Negligence--General Practitioner's Duty to Refer to Specialist

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT IS LIABLE FOR NEGLIGENCE IN FAILING TO REFER PLAINTIFF TO A SPECIALIST BECAUSE OTHER PRUDENT GENERAL PRACTITIONERS, UNDER SIMILAR CIRCUMSTANCES, WOULD HAVE DONE SO.

Duty to Consult With Specialist. A general practitioner who undertakes exclusive service in a specialized area of medicine is negligent if, under similar circumstances, a reasonably careful general practitioner would call in a specialist (Sinz v. Owens (1949) 33 Cal. 2d 749, 758, 205 P.2d 3).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that a physician is liable for negligence in rendering medical treatment, when defendant general practitioner failed to call in a specialist under circumstances that would cause a reasonably prudent general practitioner to do so.

These points and authorities may be combined, when appropriate, with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue of the defendant's negligence. The points and authorities set forth in this form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

circumstances, the defendant's failure to call in a specialist was not in accordance with the proper standard of care exercised by other general practitioners.

[c] Related Points and Authorities

For points and authorities relating to negligence actions generally, see Ch. 165, Negligence .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Duty to Consult With Specialist

In Sinz v. Owens (1949) 33 Cal. 2d 749, 205 P.2d 3 , a malpractice action based on negligent treatment of a leg fracture, defendant was a general practitioner who treated plaintiff's fracture without calling in an orthopedic specialist. A jury held for plaintiff, and defendant appealed from the judgment. A new trial was granted on the issue of damages alone, and plaintiff appealed from that order.

On appeal, defendant contested the propriety of a portion of the jury instruction regarding standard of care that stated that if a general practitioner undertakes service in a specialized area of medicine, and there are appropriate specialists in the locality, the general practitioner will be held to the standard of learning and skill possessed by such specialists. The court held that the instruction was erroneous, but not prejudicial, since plaintiff had not offered proof at trial of any standard beyond that owed by a general practitioner (33 Cal. 2d 749, 759) . However, the court suggested that a sounder instruction would state that if a reasonable general practitioner under similar circumstances would have called in a specialist, the defendant was negligent for failing to do so (33 Cal. 2d 749, 758) . In this case, expert testimony regarding the complicated nature of the fracture and the inadequacy of defendant's treatment supported a finding of breach of standard of care (33 Cal. 2d 749, 759) .

PART II. FORMS

17-175 California Points & Authorities § 175.21

§ 175.21 Supporting Contention That Physician Is Liable for Professional Negligence--Rebuttable Presumption of Negligence Based on Violation of Statute [Evid. Code § 669]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT'S VIOLATION OF A STATUTE GIVES RISE TO A REBUTTABLE PRESUMPTION, PURSUANT TO SECTION 669 OFTHE EVIDENCE CODE, OF A FAILURE TO EXERCISE DUE CARE IN CARING FOR PLAINTIFF.

A. Violation of Statute Creates Rebuttable Presumption of Failure to Exercise Due Care. The violation of a statute may give rise to a rebuttable presumption of a failure to exercise due care. This presumption, which defendant may rebut by a showing of due care, arises upon proof that: (1) defendant violated a public statute, ordinance, or regulation; (2) the violation was the proximate cause of death or injury to a person; (3) the type of occurrence that caused the death or injury was the type that the law was designed to protect against; and (4) the victim belonged to the class of persons for whose protection the law was adopted (see Evid. Code § 669).

B. Physician's Violation of Statute. Under Section 669 of the Evidence Code, a physician's violation of a statute gives rise to the presumption of a failure to exercise due care that may support a medical malpractice action (see Landeros v. Flood (1976) 17 Cal. 3d 399, 413-415, 131 Cal. Rptr. 69, 551 P.2d 389).

[Add further points and authorities relating to the specific statute violated in the case to support contention that defendant violated a statutory duty.]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that a physician is liable for negligence in rendering medical treatment. The form may be used when the defendant/physician has violated a statute, thus giving rise to the presumption of defendant's failure to exercise due care [see Evid. Code § 669].

These points and authorities may be combined, when appropriate, with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue of the defendant's negligence. The points and authorities set forth in this form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

For points and authorities relating to reporting requirements and immunity regarding child abuse, see Ch. 142, Libel and Slander (Defamation).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Violation of Statute

In Landeros v. Flood (1976) 17 Cal. 3d 399, 131 Cal. Rptr. 69, 551 P.2d 389 , a minor plaintiff brought a malpractice action against a physician based on both his negligence in improperly diagnosing her battered child syndrome and his failure to report the condition to authorities in accordance with former Penal Code § 11161.5 [now see Penal Code § 11164 et seq. (Child Abuse and Neglect Reporting Act)]. The trial court sustained defendant's general demurrer and dismissed the action.

On appeal by plaintiff from the judgment of dismissal, the Supreme Court reversed, holding that plaintiff's complaint adequately stated a cause of action for negligence and that plaintiff was entitled to prove her case by expert testimony at trial. The court held that the allegations of statutoryviolation set forth a valid alternative legal theory supporting the cause of action based on negligence. Such statutory basis of liability, noted the Court, need not be pleaded at all, as the trial court is required to take judicial notice of the acts of the legislature (17 Cal. 3d 399, 413) .

Citing the provisions of Evid. Code § 669, the Court ruled that if plaintiff could establish the statutory conditions for invoking the presumption of lack of due care, the burden would shift to defendant to rebut that presumption (17 Cal. 3d 399, 414) . However, under former Penal Code § 11161.5 [now see Penal Code § 11164 et seq. (Child Abuse and Neglect Reporting Act)], it would be necessary for plaintiff to prove that defendant knowingly failed to comply with the statute; that is, that he actually observed her injuries, diagnosed them as battered child syndrome, and yet still failed to report her condition to the authorities (17 Cal. 3d 399, 415) . This state of mind, noted the Court, could be established by circumstantial evidence and the inferences the trier of fact might draw from such evidence (17 Cal. 3d 399, 415 n.13). Note that under present Penal Code § 11166, a physician (or other health practitioner or other designated person) who, in the physician's professional capacity or within the scope of the physician's employment, has knowledge of or observes a child whom the physician knows or reasonably suspects has been the victim of child abuse, is required to make a report to the appropriate authorities according to specified procedures.

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Violation of Statute

The facts and procedural background of Daum v. SpineCare Med. Group, Inc. (1997) 52 Cal. App. 4th 1285, 61 Cal. Rptr. 2d 260 , are discussed in § 175.23[3][e]. The court of appeal held that the trial court erred in refusing plaintiff's request for a jury instruction on negligence per se since plaintiff had sufficiently established all four elements of the doctrine (52 Cal. App. 4th 1285, 1312) . It ruled first that plaintiff presented sufficient evidence that his injury resulted from the kind of occurrence the Protection of Human Subjects in Medical Experimentation Act, Health & Safety Code §§ 24170 et seq., was designed to prevent. That is, participation in a clinical trial without the subject's fully informed consent in writing, under circumstances permitting a free and deliberate choice. Second, the court found that plaintiff, as a patient in a clinical investigation, was within the class of persons for whose protection the laws were enacted. The court concluded that plaintiff's evidence of three different statutory and regulatory violations was substantial. And, lastly it found that plaintiff's evidence of causation was sufficient to raise a question for the jury regarding whether a prudent person in plaintiff's position would have declined the surgery (52 Cal. App. 4th 1285, 1312) .

In Lopez v. Southern Cal. Permanente Med. Group (1981) 115 Cal. App. 3d 673, 171 Cal. Rptr. 527 , plaintiffs injured in an auto accident caused by an epileptic driver sued the physician who had failed to report the driver's epilepsy pursuant to the reporting requirement of former Health & Safety Code § 410 (now see Health & Safety Code § 103900). The trial court granted the physician's motion for a nonsuit, and the court of appeal affirmed. Although it held that the presumption of negligence arising from violation of a statute had been adequately rebutted by defendants in this case, the court did not contest the general propriety of using Evid. Code § 669 to support an action for medical malpractice based on a physician's failure to comply with a statute (115 Cal. App. 3d 673, 678-680) .

§ 175.22 Supporting Contention That Physician Is Liable for Professional Negligence--Failure to Warn Patient of Subsequently Ascertained Risks of Treatment

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief].

DEFENDANT IS LIABLE FOR NEGLIGENCE FOR FAILING TO WARN PLAINTIFF OF DANGEROUS EFFECTS OF TREATMENT BECAUSE, SUBSEQUENT TO ADMINISTERING THE TREATMENT, DEFENDANT GAINED KNOWLEDGE OF THE DANGER.

Duty to Warn. The physician-patient relationship gives rise to a continuing duty to warn the patient of risks arising from treatment rendered pursuant to that relationship, and a physician's failure to warn of subsequently learned risks is a breach of that duty of care giving rise to an action for malpractice (Tresemer v. Barke (1978) 86 Cal. App. 3d 656, 672, 150 Cal. Rptr. 384).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a plaintiff's contention that a physician was negligent in failing to warn his or her patient of subsequently ascertained risks arising from treatment.

These points and authorities may be combined, when appropriate, with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue of the defendant's negligence. The pointsand authorities in this form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

physician's breach of the duty of care by failing to warn the patient of risks arising from treatment of which the physician subsequently became aware.

[c] Related Points and Authorities

For points and authorities relating to negligence actions generally, see Ch. 165, Negligence .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Duty to Warn

In Tresemer v. Barke (1978) 86 Cal. App. 3d 656, 150 Cal. Rptr. 384 , plaintiff brought a medical malpractice action against defendant for damages sustained from use of a Dalkon Shield intrauterine device inserted by defendant. Plaintiff's claim was based on defendant's alleged breach of duty of care arising from his failure to warn her of the danger of using the device when he learned of the risk subsequent to insertion. Summary judgment was granted for defendant, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, noting that on appeal from summary judgment, it need only determine whether there was a reasonable possibility that plaintiff could establish her case (86 Cal. App. 3d 656, 661) . In this case, plaintiff stated a cause of action for defendant's failure to warn plaintiff, arising by virtue of the confidential relationship between doctor and patient that gives rise to a duty to protect the patient from risks arising from the relationship. That duty called for reasonable care by the physician under the circumstances, which required the physician to take action to avoid the risk to the patient (86 Cal. App. 3d 656, 672) .

§ 175.23 Supporting Contention That Physician Is Liable for Professional Negligence--Failure to Disclose Material Risks of Treatment

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT IS LIABLE FOR NEGLIGENCE BECAUSE HE/SHE BREACHED THE DUTY TO DISCLOSE MATERIAL RISKS OF A MEDICAL PROCEDURE.

A. Physician's Duty of Disclosure. An integral part of the physician's obligation of care to a patient is the duty of reasonable disclosure of available choices with respect to a proposed therapy and of the dangers inherently and potentially involved in each (Cobbs v. Grant (1972) 8 Cal. 3d 229, 243, 104 Cal. Rptr. 505, 502 P.2d 1).

B. Scope of Minimal Disclosure. When a given procedure inherently involves a known risk of death or serious bodily harm, a doctor has a duty to disclose the potential of such a risk and to explain in lay terms the complications that might occur (Cobbs v. Grant (1972) 8 Cal. 3d 229, 244, 104 Cal. Rptr. 505, 502 P.2d 1).

C. Test of Materiality. A physician must disclose all material information pertaining to a proposed procedure, that is, all information that the physician knows or should know would be regarded as significant by a reasonable person in the patient's position when deciding to accept or reject a recommended procedure (Truman v. Thomas (1980) 27 Cal. 3d 285, 291, 165 Cal. Rptr. 308, 611 P.2d 902).

[Optional] D. Risks of Declining Treatment. The duty to disclose includes the duty to explain the material consequences of declining the proposed treatment (Truman v. Thomas (1980) 27 Cal. 3d 285, 292, 165 Cal. Rptr. 308, 611 P.2d 902).

[Optional] E. Statutory Duty to Obtain Informed Consent Before Performing Hysterectomy. Prior to the performance of a nonemergency hysterectomy, physicians and surgeons must provide specific information to the patient and obtain verbal and written consent for the procedure. The information required to be given includes a description of the surgery involved in the procedure and any available alternatives, advice that the procedure is considered irreversible and results in infertility, and a description of the benefits and advantages, as well as the discomforts and risks, involved (Health & Safety Code § 1690).

[Optional] F. Experts Alone Cannot Establish Standard of Care Governing Informed Consent. When a duty to disclose is imposed by statute or regulation, it is prejudicial error to require a jury to determine the standard of care governing that duty exclusively from expert testimony (Daum v. SpineCare Med. Group, Inc. (1997) 52 Cal. App. 4th 1285, 1294, 61 Cal. Rptr. 2d 260).

[Optional] G. Signed Consent Form Not Conclusive Evidence of Informed Consent. A signed consent form is not necessarily conclusive proof of informed consent to the procedures performed, and the adequacy of a written consent form is a factual issue for the jury (Quintanilla v. Dunkelman (2005) 133 Cal. App. 4th 95, 115-116, 34 Cal. Rptr. 3d 557).

[Optional] H. Physician May Have Duty to Disclose Risks Even When Different Physician Performs Treatment. A physician actively involved in managing a patient's care may have a duty to disclose the risks involved in undergoing treatment, even if that treatment is to be performed by a different physician (Wilson v. Merritt (2006) 142 Cal. App. 4th 1125, 1134-1137, 48 Cal. Rptr. 3d 630).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a plaintiff's contention that a physician was negligent in failing to disclose material information regarding a proposed procedure.

These points and authorities may be combined, when appropriate, with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue of the defendant's negligence. The points and authorities set forth in this form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

[c] Requirement of Expert Testimony

Whether the minimal disclosure of objectively material information has been given by a physician may be determined by a jury without expert testimony. Whether proper exercise of care would require disclosure beyond the minimal level, however, must be analyzed by expert witnesses [Jamison v. Lindsay (1980) 108 Cal. App. 3d 223, 232, 166 Cal. Rptr. 443] .

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For points and authorities supporting and opposing the contention that a physician is liable for battery for performing a procedure in the absence of a patient's informed consent, see Ch. 21, Assault and Battery .

For points and authorities relating to negligence actions generally, see Ch. 165, Negligence .

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities in §§ 175.31 and 175.32 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose the contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Physician's Duty of Disclosure

In Cobbs v. Grant (1972) 8 Cal. 3d 229, 104 Cal. Rptr. 505, 502 P.2d 1 , the leading case on the physician's duty to disclose material information regarding treatment, the Supreme Court established guidelines regarding the duty of disclosure and the type of liability that would result from a breach of the duty. The plaintiff brought a malpractice action based on allegations of the physician's negligence in performing surgery and the failure to obtain the plaintiff's informed consent to the operation. The jury held for plaintiff, but the Supreme Court reversed the verdict on the ground that there was no substantial evidence to support a finding of negligence.

Although the record did not indicate on which theory of negligence the jury relied, the Court addressed itself primarily to the issue of informed consent. An integral part of the physician's obligation of care toward a patient, held the Court, is the duty of reasonable disclosure of the available choices with respect to a proposed therapy and of the dangers inherently and potentially involved in each (8 Cal. 3d 229, 243) . The scope of required disclosure depends in part on the type of procedure contemplated; relatively minor risks inherent in a common procedure (such as taking blood samples) need not be disclosed, whereas known risks of death or serious bodily harm inherent in a complicated procedure must be explained in lay terms (8 Cal. 3d 229, 244-245) . In addition to this minimal disclosure, the physician must reveal such additional information as a skilled practitioner of good standing would provide under similar circumstances (8 Cal. 3d 229, 241) .

The Court established the circumstances under which a failure to disclosewould give rise to an action in battery as opposed to negligence. The Court held that the battery theory should be reserved for those circumstances when a physician performs a treatment different from that to which the patient has consented (8 Cal. 3d 229, 240) . The negligence theory should be pleaded when an undisclosed inherent complication with a low probability occurs during treatment to which the patient has consented (8 Cal. 3d 229, 240-241) .

[b] Scope of Minimal Disclosure

The facts and procedural background of Cobbs v. Grant (1972) 8 Cal. 3d 229, 104 Cal. Rptr. 505, 502 P.2d 1 , are discussed in § 175.23[3][a]. The Supreme Court defined the minimal scope of disclosure required of a physician as an explanation of the available choices with respect to a proposed therapy and the dangers inherently involved in each and, when a complicated procedure involving a risk of death or serious bodily harm is contemplated, a further explanation in lay terms of the complications that might occur (8 Cal. 3d 229, 243-244) .

[c] Test of Materiality

In Truman v. Thomas (1980) 27 Cal. 3d 285, 165 Cal. Rptr. 308, 611 P.2d 902 , the Supreme Court reversed a special verdict for defendant physician in a medical malpractice action based on negligence, finding that the physician had breached his duty of disclosure by not informing the patient of risks of declining a pap smear. The scope of the physician's duty to disclose, the Court held, is measured by the amount of knowledge a patient needs in order to make an informed choice. All information material to the patient's decision should be given. The Court defined material information as that which the physician knows or should know would be regarded as significant by a reasonable person in the patient's position when deciding to accept or reject the recommended medical procedure. To be material, the fact must also be one that is not commonly appreciated (27 Cal. 3d 285, 291) . Additionally, the Court ruled, a physician's knowledge of a patient's unique concerns or lack of familiarity with medical procedures may broaden the objective scope of materiality (27 Cal. 3d 285, 291) .

[d] Risks of Declining Treatment

The facts and procedural background of Truman v. Thomas (1980) 27 Cal. 3d 285, 165 Cal. Rptr. 308, 611 P.2d 902 , are discussed in § 175.23[3][c]. The California Supreme Court held that the duty to disclose material information regarding a proposed treatment includes a duty to inform the patient of the risks of declining treatment (27 Cal. 3d 285, 292-294) . The Court held that the duty applies whether the procedure involves treatment or a diagnostic test. A physician recommending a risk-free procedure need not disclose information beyond that necessary to conform to competent medical practice and to obtain the patient's consent. If the patient indicates that he or she is going to decline the risk-free procedure, however, the physician must then discuss the risks in so declining. If a procedure involves some risk, the Court stated, the physician must always discuss the potential consequences of declining the procedure (27 Cal. 3d 285, 292) .

[e] Experts Alone Cannot Establish Standard of Care Governing Informed Consent

In Daum v. SpineCare Med. Group, Inc. (1997) 52 Cal. App. 4th 1285, 1294, 61 Cal. Rptr. 2d 260 , plaintiff sued for medical malpractice arising out of an unsuccessful spinal fusion surgery. Plaintiff's theory of liability at trial was defendant's failure to obtain informed consent for the implantation of a fixation device in his back. Plaintiff did not dispute that he had agreed to the use of the device, but claimed that he was not informed the device was considered investigational or experimental by the FDA, nor was he told that his surgery was part of an FDA-approved clinical investigation of the device conducted by defendant. California statutes and federal regulations incorporated in the manufacturer's protocol for clinical trials of the device required that patients be informed of its investigational status, consent in writing to participate in the trial, and be given a copy of their consent form. Plaintiff did not sign a written consent form disclosing the investigational status of the device until shortly before surgery, when he was lying on a gurney. Soon thereafter he received an anesthetic that had a retroactive amnesia effect such that after surgery he had no memory of signing the form, nor was he given a copy. The surgeon believed he had orally informed plaintiff the device was investigational sometime before the day of surgery. Plaintiff denied this. At trial the parties' experts disagreed as to whether the disclosure to plaintiff was within the standard of care. The jury returned a special verdict finding that defendant had made a sufficient disclosure and a judgment for defendant was entered.

On appeal, plaintiffs argued that the trial court improperly instructed the jury that the standard of care must be determined solely from expert testimony. The court of appeal agreed, concluding that it was prejudicial error to require the jury to determine the standard of care governing informed consent exclusively from expert testimony, and therefore reversed the judgment (52 Cal. App. 4th 1285, 1294) . The court ruled that because disclosure of the device's investigational status was required by statute and regulation, it was error to require the jury to consider only testimony by medical experts in deciding whether plaintiff was given all the information relevant to his decision on the implantation of the device. It was also improper to limit the jury to expert testimony in deciding whether the timing and manner of the disclosure to plaintiff was sufficient to allow him to give fully informed consent. The court reasoned that this was not a matter beyond the understanding of lay people; on the contrary, the medical profession had to conform its methods of disclosure to the needs and understanding of patients. The court cited Arato v. Avedon (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 1172, 23 Cal. Rptr. 2d 131 , and Cobbs v. Grant (1972) 8 Cal. 3d 229, 104 Cal. Rptr. 505 as prior authority establishing the limited role of experts in establishing standards of disclosure, and found that the procedures followed in this case overstepped the limits imposed by both (52 Cal. App. 4th 1285, 1305) .

[f] Signed Consent Form Not Conclusive Evidence of Informed Consent

In Quintanilla v. Dunkelman (2005) 133 Cal. App. 4th 95, 34 Cal. Rptr. 3d 557 , the plaintiffs were a surgery patient and her husband who sued a referring physician, a treating physician, and a medical group for lack of informed consent, battery, intentional infliction of emotional distress, and loss of consortium. The jury returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiffs for negligence based on the lack of informed consent and loss of consortium. The defendants appealed on the grounds that the patient had signed a pre-surgery written consent form.

The court of appeal upheld the jury verdict based on lack of informed consent, rejecting the defendants' contention that the signed consent form was conclusive proof of informed consent. The court concluded that the adequacy of a written consent form in any particular case is a factual issue for the jury (133 Cal. App. 4th 95, 115) . In this particular case, the plaintiff was a Spanish-speaking patient who had signed a pre-surgery consent form written in Spanish. However, the patient provided testimony that she did not read Spanish, that she was rushed through the pre-surgery admissions procedures and told to "sign here" and "initial there" without being informed of what was written on the form, and that neither the examining physician nor the surgeon had adequately explained what procedures were actually going to be performed. Under those circumstances, the court upheld the jury's determination that the signed form did not establish informed consent (133 Cal. App. 4th 95, 115-118) .

[g] Physician May Have Duty to Disclose Risks Even When Different Physician Performs Treatment

In Wilson v. Merritt (2006) 142 Cal. App. 4th 1125, 48 Cal. Rptr. 3d 630 , plaintiff was a paraplegic who suffered a torn rotator cuff and a fractured shoulder while undergoing a manipulation under anesthesia procedure performed by a chiropractor at a pain and rehabilitation center. After suffering a stroke that caused problems with his shoulder, plaintiff had sought help at the rehabilitation center, where he was evaluated by and consulted with the medical doctor on staff, who was also the director of the clinical side of the center. This physician mentioned the possibility of undergoing the manipulation under anesthesia procedure, among other treatment options, but recommended physical therapy. During the course of his rehabilitation at the center, plaintiff's chiropractors again mentioned that plaintiff might benefit from the manipulation under anesthesia procedure. To get more information about the procedure, plaintiff consulted again with the physician, because plaintiff believed that the physician was in charge of plaintiff's overall treatment and plaintiff trusted him. Because the physician indicated to plaintiff that the only risks from the procedure were with possible infection from injections, plaintiff decided to undergo the procedure. Although the procedure was performed by a chiropractor at the clinic, the physician was present during the procedure to administer an injection and assist in holding plaintiff steady while the chiropractor performed the treatment. After being injured during the procedure, plaintiff brought suit against the physician and the chiropractor. Plaintiff argued that had he been informed of the risk of suffering the injuries he suffered, he would not have agreed to the treatment. After plaintiff presented his evidence, the trial court granted the physician's motion for nonsuit, determining that the physician owed no duty to get informed consent from plaintiff with respect to a procedure that the physician did not perform. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. The court noted that, under established case law, whether the unique circumstances of a particular case support a duty of disclosure by a physician is a question for the jury, and that under the appropriate circumstances, consulting physicians who do not perform the treatment and do not meet with the patient do not owe a duty to get the patient's informed consent (142 Cal. App. 4th 1125, 1134) . However, the court also recognized that doctors who have actively managed the patient's care may have a duty to inform the patient of the risks involved in a particular treatment, even if the doctor will not personally perform the treatment. In the instant case, the physician had had direct contact with plaintiff during the treatment period prior to the manipulation under anesthesia procedure. The physician was the medical director of the clinic and was apparently the first one to suggest the manipulation under anesthesia procedure as a possible course of treatment. He had recommended plaintiff's physical therapy at the clinic, and when plaintiff seriously considered the manipulation under anesthesia procedure, plaintiff returned to the physician to learn more about the procedure and seek the physician's advice. In addition, the physician was present during the procedure, and plaintiff was under the impression that the physician would be exercising some level of supervision. The court held that, under the circumstances of the case, a triable issue existed as to whether the physician had a duty to get plaintiff's informed consent (142 Cal. App. 4th 1125, 1134-1137) .

[a] Physician's Duty of Disclosure

In Hutchinson v. United States (9th Cir. 1988) 841 F.2d 966 , plaintiff was treated for asthma with prednisone, and then developed aseptic necrosis. Plaintiff sued the doctors under the Federal Tort Claims Act, alleging that the doctors failed to warn him of the risk of developing aseptic necrosis. The district court ruled against plaintiff. The Ninth Circuit reversed and remanded, holding that thedistrict court had erred in concluding under California law that the doctor's duty to warn depended on whether doctors in the community would have customarily provided warnings in the same situation. The appellate court held that the district court should have first determined whether or not the risk was material, and if so the plaintiff can prevail if he or she demonstrates that a reasonable person would not have undergone the treatment if a warning were given. Whether or not prednisone use was prevalent in the treatment of asthma was not directly relevant to whether or not a reasonable person in plaintiff's position would have consented to treatment with it after considering its risk. The district court was directed on remand to resolve the issues of what risk plaintiff faced and whether or not a reasonable person would have consented to the treatment (841 F.2d 966, 967) .

In Jamison v. Lindsay (1980) 108 Cal. App. 3d 223, 166 Cal. Rptr. 443 , plaintiff appealed from a verdict for defendants in a malpractice action based on negligence, arguing that defendants had been negligent in their failure to inform plaintiff of a divergence of medical opinion regarding the diagnosis of her condition. Relying on the information given, plaintiff had consented to surgery that later proved to be inadequate. The court of appeal rejected plaintiff's argument on the ground that she had not raised the issue at trial or requested an appropriate jury instruction. However, the court noted in dictum that consistent with a physician's broad duty of disclosure, a physician should inform the patient of all information relevant to a decision whether to seek additional treatment following surgery, and that had such an instruction been given, the jury might have considered whether the failure to disclose the divergence of opinion constituted negligence (108 Cal. App. 3d 223, 231) .

[b] Risks of Declining Treatment

In Moore v. Preventive Med. Med. Group, Inc. (1986) 178 Cal. App. 3d 728, 223 Cal. Rptr. 859 , plaintiff was examined by an internist who recommended that he see a specialist for diagnosis of a mole on his ear. Plaintiff did not see the internist again and did not go to a specialist. Five months later, plaintiff's dermatologist conducted tests that determined the mole was cancerous. Plaintiff sued the internist and his medical group for negligence in failing to adequately warn him of the potential dangers to him if he did not have the mole promptly diagnosed. Plaintiff settled with the internist prior to trial and at trial, the jury found for plaintiff. Defendant medical group appealed and the court of appeal affirmed. Although the internist had no reason to know that the patient would not follow his recommendation, the court of appeal held that he had a duty to disclose all material information that would enable the plaintiff to make an informed decision about whether or not to see the specialist. The court noted that the fact that the internist would not be doing the diagnosis himself underscored the importance of relaying this information to the patient at the time of his visit, when the internist knew that he would not have another opportunity to discuss with him the risks faced if the patient did not see a specialist (178 Cal. App. 3d 728, 738-739) .

§ 175.24 Supporting Contention That Physician Is Liable for Professional Negligence--Failure to Warn Contagious Patient to Take Steps to Protect Others

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT IS LIABLE FOR PROFESSIONAL NEGLIGENCE BECAUSE HE/SHE BREACHED THE DUTY TO WARN A CONTAGIOUS PATIENT OF THE RISK TO OTHERS AND TO ADVISE HOW TO PREVENT THE SPREAD OF THE DISEASE.

Duty to Warn of Risk to Others. A physician has a duty to warn a contagious patient to take steps to protect others (Reisner v. Regents of Univ. of Cal. (1995) 31 Cal. App. 4th 1195, 1203, 37 Cal. Rptr. 2d 518).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted by plaintiff in support of the contention that defendant may be held liable for breaching a duty to warn a patient with a contagious disease of the steps that he or she must take in order to protect others from contracting the disease.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that defendant owed a duty to warn a contagious patient to take steps to protect others, for example, in a summary judgment motion. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

physician did not warn the patient of the risk of infecting others, and that the plaintiff was infected with the disease from the physician's patient [see Reisner v. Regents of Univ. of Cal. (1995) 31 Cal. App. 4th 1195, 1201-1203, 37 Cal. Rptr. 2d 518] .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Duty to Warn of Risk to Others

In Reisner v. Regents of Univ. of Cal. (1995) 31 Cal. App. 4th 1195, 37 Cal. Rptr. 2d 518 , the plaintiff, a young man who became HIV positive after intimate relations with a young woman, brought a negligence action against the woman's physicians. The woman had received a blood transfusion when she was 12 years old with blood that had been contaminated with HIV antibodies, but despite his knowledge of the contamination, the woman's doctor did not tell her or her parents about the tainted blood. The defendants moved for judgment on the pleadings, claiming that they owed no duty to an unidentified third person, and the trial court granted the motion.

The court of appeal reversed, ruling that physicians have a duty to warn a contagious patient to take steps to protect others (31 Cal. App. 4th 1195, 1203) . The court first noted that prior case law has established that when a patient presents a serious danger to another, a doctor has a duty to warn the intended victim or others likely to apprise the victim of the danger (31 Cal. App. 4th 1195, 1199) . Second, the court pointed out that prior medical negligence cases have held that the fact that a plaintiff was a foreseeable but not a readily identifiable victim does not preclude the plaintiff from stating an action against doctors for failing to warn of the danger (31 Cal. App. 4th 1195, 1200) . Finally, the court reasoned that finding a duty would encourage the highest standard of care concerning communicable and infections diseases (31 Cal. App. 4th 1195, 1201) . The court concluded that a physician has a duty to warn a contagious patient of the risk to others and to advise the patient how to prevent the spread of the disease (31 Cal. App. 4th 1195, 1203) .

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT IS LIABLE UNDER THE DOCTRINE OF RESPONDEAT SUPERIOR FOR THE NEGLIGENCE OF MEDICAL ASSISTANTS OVER WHOM HE/SHE EXERCISED CONTROL AND DIRECTION.

A. Vicarious Liability of Physician. A physician is liable for the negligence of assistants that the physician, if exercising reasonablediligence, should have observed and prevented (see Ales v. Ryan (1936) 8 Cal. 2d 82, 105, 64 P.2d 409).

B. Delegation of Supervision to Others. The fact that the duty of preventing mistakes during a medical procedure is delegated to others does not relieve the physician of vicarious liability for their negligence (Ybarra v. Spangard (1944) 25 Cal. 2d 486, 492, 154 P.2d 687 (dictum)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that a physician is vicariously liable for the conduct of medical assistants whose negligence injured plaintiff.

These points and authorities may be combined, when appropriate, with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue of the defendant's vicarious liability for the acts of medical assistants. The points and authorities set forth in this form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

[c] Determination of Agency

The issue of vicarious liability of a physician arises most often in actions based on injuries caused by the negligence of hospital employees assisting a private physician during surgery. The physician may be held liable for such employee's negligence if plaintiff establishes a special employment relationship between the hospital personnel and defendant. This relationship flows from the borrowing employer's power to supervise the details of the employee's work, for example, a chief surgeon's duty and right to control the acts of assisting surgeons or nurses during an operation [see Ybarra v. Spangard (1944) 25 Cal. 2d 486, 492, 154 P.2d 687] . Such temporary agency is a question of fact for the jury [Truhitte v. French Hosp. (1982) 128 Cal. App. 3d 332, 348, 180 Cal. Rptr. 152] .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Vicarious Liability of Physician

Ales v. Ryan (1936) 8 Cal. 2d 82, 64 P.2d 409 , in which the Supreme Court dealt with the liability of a physician for negligence of medical assistants, involved a patient who died of peritoneal infection when a sponge was left in her abdomen following surgery. Testimony established that although sponge counts are usually the responsibility of the attending nurses, no one had made an accurate count and that this fact must have been apparent to defendant, the chief surgeon.

Reversing a judgment for defendant from which plaintiff, the decedent's administrator, appealed, the Court stated that a physician is liable for the negligence of others that he should have observed if exercising reasonable diligence. The status of the physician as surgeon in charge of the operation gave him the power and therefore the duty to order a sponge count and furthermore to see that it was performed. The Court held that this responsibility was not relieved by any hospital custom or rule requiring the nurses to count sponges removed after surgery. The surgeon was in absolute charge of and was directing the operation, and was therefore liable for the negligent act of the assistant in failing to remove the sponge and for the absence of an accurate sponge count (8 Cal. 2d 82, 105) .

[b] Delegation of Supervision to Others

In Ybarra v. Spangard (1944) 25 Cal. 2d 486, 154 P.2d 687 , the Supreme Court reversed a nonsuit for defendants in a malpractice action based on negligent performance of surgery. The ground for reversal was the trial court's erroneous rejection of the res ipsa loquitur doctrine; however, the issue of multiple defendants exercising control over the instrumentality of harm prompted the court to discuss the rule of vicarious liability of a surgeon for the negligence of assistants. In dicta, the Court noted that while assisting physicians and nurses may be employed by the hospital, they normally become the temporary agents of the surgeon in charge during the operation, and liability may be imposed on the physician for their negligent acts. The fact that the surgeon delegates certain aspects of supervision to others, stated the Court, does not absolve him from responsibility for their negligence in carrying out the task (25 Cal. 2d 486, 492) .

17-175 California Points & Authorities § 175.26

§ 175.26 Supporting Contention That Physician Is Liable for Professional Negligence--Causation Established by "Substantial Factor" Test

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum or points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT IS LIABLE FOR PLAINTIFF'S INJURIES BECAUSE PLAINTIFF HAS ESTABLISHED THAT DEFENDANT'S PROFESSIONAL NEGLIGENCE WAS A SUBSTANTIAL FACTOR IN CAUSING PLAINTIFF'S INJURIES IN THAT THERE IS A REASONABLE MEDICAL PROBABILITY THAT PLAINTIFF WOULD HAVE OBTAINED A BETTER RESULT IN THE ABSENCE OF DEFENDANT'S NEGLIGENCE[, EVEN THOUGH OTHER FACTORS MAY HAVE CONTRIBUTED TO THE INJURIES].

Existence of Multiple Causes of Damage Does Not Negate Liability If Negligence Was Substantial Factor in Causing Damage. Defendant's conduct can be the basis of liability if it was a substantial factor in bringing about plaintiff's damage, even though the damage was caused by interacting causes, some of which are not chargeable to defendants (Espinosa v. Little Co. of Mary Hosp. (1995) 31 Cal. App. 4th 1304, 1316-1322, 37 Cal. Rptr. 2d 541).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted by plaintiff in support of the contention that a defendant's negligent conduct was the cause of plaintiff's injury under the "substantial factor" test of causation, even though other causes may also exist that are not attributable to defendant.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that defendant's negligence was a cause of plaintiff's injury. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Existence of Multiple Causes of Damage Does Not Negate Liability If Negligence Was Substantial Factor in Causing Damage

In Espinosa v. Little Co. of Mary Hosp. (1995) 31 Cal. App. 4th 1304, 37 Cal. Rptr. 2d 541 , the guardian ad litem of a child who allegedly sustained brain damage through certain prenatal care and testing brought an action for medical malpractice. One of plaintiff's expert witnesses testified that the child should have been delivered sooner than he was, and that the failure to deliver earlier was below the standard of care, and was negligence. Another of plaintiff's expert witnesses testified that plaintiff had structural damage to his brain, and that this damage was caused by three factors: the mother's use of Lithium, negligence in monitoring the pregnancy, and negligence in the delivery. The defendants were not responsible for the mother's use of Lithium, and plaintiff's expert was not able to quantify the extent to which plaintiff's condition was caused by this factor. The expert testified that the two factors caused by the defendants were substantial factors in the outcome, and that they had a contributory role in the outcome. Apparently convinced that the expert had not sufficientlyestablished the element of causation between the defendants' acts and plaintiff's damage, the trial court granted a defense motion for nonsuit.

The court of appeal reversed, concluding that the plaintiff presented sufficient evidence on the issue of causation to permit the dispute to be resolved by the jury (31 Cal. App. 4th 1304, 1312) . The court initially noted that in a medical malpractice action the element of causation is satisfied when a plaintiff produces sufficient evidence to allow the jury to infer that, in the absence of defendants' negligence, there was a reasonable medical probability that the plaintiff would have obtained a better result (31 Cal. App. 4th 1304, 1314-1315) . With regard to the issue of multiple causes, and the effect of the mother's use of Lithium, the court stated that it was clear from the testimony that Lithium was responsible for only a portion of plaintiff's disabilities. The court concluded that the defendants' conduct was a substantial factor in bringing about the damage, and that the inability to pin down the exact extent to which defendants' conduct contributed to the outcome was immaterial (31 Cal. App. 4th 1304, 1317) . The court stated that the evidence did not justify the trial court's reasoning that it was possible that the damage had occurred prior to the actions by the defendants (31 Cal. App. 4th 1304, 1318) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Existence of Multiple Causes of Damage Does Not Negate Liability If Negligence Was Substantial Factor in Causing Damage

In Logacz v. Limansky (1999) 71 Cal. App. 4th 1149, 84 Cal. Rptr. 2d 257 , a wrongful death action was brought against a physician who had performed a hysterectomy on the decedent approximately two weeks before her death, alleging that the defendant was negligent when treating the decedent after the surgery by failing to properly diagnose and take steps to reduce the decedent's circulatory problems. At trial, the defendant argued that the cause of the decedent's death was her extreme obesity combined with a sedentary lifestyle. Although the plaintiffs agreed that those factors can contribute to the risk of circulatory problems, they requested that the trial court instruct the jury that there may be concurrent legal causes to an injury, but the trial court refused to give the submitted instruction based on BAJI No. 3.77 and the jury found that the defendant's negligence was not a legal cause of death. The court of appeal held that this refusal to instruct on concurrent causation was reversible error. The court recognized the established principle that there may be more than one legal cause of an injury, found that the defendant's negligence may have been an additional proximate cause of the decedent's death, and held that the failure to instruct on concurrent causation likely confused the jury, especially in light of the fact that the jury specifically found that the defendant had in fact been negligent (71 Cal. App. 4th 1149, 1157-1159, 1166) .

§ 175.27 Supporting Contention That Physician Is Liable for Professional Negligence--Physician Owes Duty of Care to Examinee Notwithstanding Lack of Physician-Patient Relationship

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum or points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT IS LIABLE FOR NEGLIGENCE OR MEDICAL MALPRACTICE FOR INJURIES INCURRED BY PLAINTIFF DURING AN EXAMINATION BY DEFENDANT, EVEN IN THE ABSENCE OF A PHYSICIAN-PATIENT RELATIONSHIP.

Physician Has Duty to Conduct Examination in Manner That Does Not Injure Examinee. Even in the absence of a physician-patient relationship, a physician is liable to an examinee for negligence or professional malpractice for injuries incurred during the examination itself (Mero v. Sadoff (1995) 31 Cal. App. 4th 1466, 1478, 37 Cal. Rptr. 2d 769).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted by plaintiff in support of the contention that a physician may be held liable to a person injured in the course of an examination due to the physician's negligence, even if the examinee was not a patient of the physician.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that defendant owed a duty of care to an examinee whether or not the examinee is a patient of the defendant. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss evidence that the physician examined the plaintiff and thatduring the course of this examination the defendant was negligent, and that the negligence resulted in injury to the plaintiff [see Mero v. Sadoff (1995) 31 Cal. App. 4th 1466, 37 Cal. Rptr. 2d 769] .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Physician Has Duty to Conduct Examination in Manner That Does Not Injure Examinee

In Mero v. Sadoff (1995) 31 Cal. App. 4th 1466, 37 Cal. Rptr. 2d 769 , plaintiff had injured her back while at work and had filed a claim for workers' compensation. In the workers' compensation action plaintiff's employer requested that she submit to a medical examination concerning her injury. Plaintiff subsequently sued the examining physician, alleging that she was injured in the course of this examination when the defendant physician negligently strapped her into an apparatus, which caused her body to be maneuvered into various damaging positions. The trial court granted summary judgment for the defendant on the ground that defendant did not owe a duty to plaintiff because there was no physician-patient relationship between plaintiff and defendant.

The court of appeal reversed the summary judgment, holding that even in the absence of a physician-patient relationship, a physician is liable to an examinee for negligence for injuries incurred during the examination (31 Cal. App. 4th 1466, 1478) . The court initially noted that prior case law had held that when a physician conducts an examination of an injured person solely for the purpose of rating the injury for an insurance carrier, there is no duty of professional skill in connection with the report because the physician could not reasonably expect that the examinee would rely on the report (31 Cal. App. 4th 1466, 1472) . However, the court determined that whether a physician owes a duty in such a situation to conduct the examination in a manner which does not injure the examinee requires consideration of the foreseeability of harm, the degree of certainty of injury, the closeness of the connection between the defendant's conduct ant the injury, the moral blame, the policy of preventing future harm, the consequences of imposing a duty, and the availability of insurance for the risk involved (31 Cal. App. 4th 1466, 1477) . The court concluded that all of these considerations supported the imposition of liability on a physician conducting an examination even in the absence of a physician-patient relationship (31 Cal. App. 4th 1466, 1478) .

§ 175.28 Supporting Contention That Physician May Be Liable for Professional Negligence-Psychiatrist Owes Duty of Care to Suicidal Patients Regardless of Whether They Are Inpatients or Outpatients

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

A PSYCHIATRIST OWES A DUTY OF CARE, CONSISTENT WITH STANDARDS IN THE PROFESSIONAL COMMUNITY, TO PROVIDE APPROPRIATE TREATMENT FOR POTENTIALLY SUICIDAL PATIENTS, WHETHER THE PATIENT IS HOSPITALIZED OR NOT.

A. Duty Owed to Suicidal Inpatients as Well as Outpatients. A psychotherapist or other mental health provider has a duty to use a reasonable degree of skill, knowledge and care in treating a patient, commensurate with that possessed and exercised by others practicing within that specialty in the professional community. This duty exists whether the patient is hospitalized at the time or not (Kockelman v. Segal (1998) 61 Cal. App. 4th 491, 505, 71 Cal. Rptr. 2d 552).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a mental health professional may be liable for professional negligence on the ground that he or she breached a duty owed to a suicidal outpatient.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. Thus, counsel should discuss the evidence that defendant treated a suicidal patient on an outpatient basis and should argue that defendant owed a duty of care to plaintiff to provide appropriate treatment, whether the patient was hospitalized or not.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Opposing Points and Authorities

For a memorandum of points and authorities opposing the contention that a physician is liable for professional negligence on the ground that the physician owed no duty of care to plaintiff, see § 175.29.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Duty Owed to Suicidal Inpatients as Well as Outpatients

In Kockelman v. Segal (1998) 61 Cal. App. 4th 491, 71 Cal. Rptr. 2d 552 plaintiff filed a wrongful death action alleging that her husband's death was caused by the professional negligence of a psychiatrist and medical clinic. Specifically, plaintiff claimed that defendants were negligent in treating her husband for chronic depression, and that this negligence was a proximate cause of her husband's suicide. The trial court granted summary judgment in favor of defendants, finding as a matter of law that there was no duty owed to the decedent because he was being treated as an outpatient rather than in a hospital setting. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, concluding that a psychotherapist or other mental health provider has a duty to use a reasonable degree of skill, knowledge and care in treating a patient, commensurate with that possessed and exercised by others practicing within that specialty in the professional community. This duty exists whether the patient is hospitalized at the time or not. The court noted that it did not purport to endorse a rule which imposed an absolute duty on a psychiatrist to prevent a patient's suicide. Rather, only that a psychiatrist's duty of care to a suicidal patient, was not negated by the patient's status as an outpatient. According to the court, whether this particular psychiatrist acted within the duty of care in the circumstances of this case involved factual determinations which had to be resolved by the opinions and specialized knowledge of experts in the field and were therefore beyond the scope of the summary judgment motion. The court merely found that the trial court erred in ruling that decedent's status as an outpatient decided the issue of duty as a matter of law (61 Cal. App. 4th 491, 503-505) .

§ 175.28A Supporting Contention That Physician Is Liable for Professional Negligence--Unnecessary Surgery May be Basis for Malpractice Action

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

UNNECESSARY SURGERY IS INHERENTLY INJURIOUS TO A PATIENT AND A PHYSICIAN MAY BE HELD LIABLE FOR PERFORMING A SURGERY THAT IS UNNECESSARY UNDER THE APPROPRIATE STANDARD OF CARE.

Liability for Unnecessary Surgery. Unnecessary surgery is inherently injurious to a patient and a physician may be held liable for performing a surgery that was unnecessary under the appropriate standard of care (see Tortorella v. Castro (2006) 140 Cal. App. 4th 1, 13, 43 Cal. Rptr. 3d 853).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a physician who performs surgery that a reasonable physician adhering to the appropriate standard of care would realize is unnecessary may be held liable for medical malpractice.

This form may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which the argument is made. It may also be used in an appellate brief.

[b] Argument

standard of care would have realized that the surgery was unnecessary, it is not necessary for the plaintiff to show that the surgery itself was performed improperly.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Liability for Unnecessary Surgery

In Tortorella v. Castro (2006) 140 Cal. App. 4th 1, 43 Cal. Rptr. 3d 853 , plaintiff underwent sinus surgery in an attempt to correct facial pain and pressure. After the surgery, however, plaintiff twice returned to the surgeon for additional treatment to relieve the effects of the surgery. Plaintiff sued the surgeon, and defendant moved for summary judgment. In support of the motion, the doctor presented the declaration of an expert stating that defendant's conduct did not fall below the relevant standard of care. Plaintiff opposed the motion and presented a declaration of her own expert describing how defendant had misdiagnosed plaintiff's condition and explaining that the surgery defendant performed had been unnecessary. The trial court granted the motion for summary judgment on the grounds that plaintiff's expert's declaration failed to address the issue of causation. Plaintiff subsequently submitted an amended expert declaration that specifically stated that the defendant's negligence caused plaintiff's harm and moved for a new trial. The trial court granted the motion for new trial, concluding that the equities of the case favored a resolution on the merits. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, but for reasons different than those provided by the trial court. The court first held that a motion for new trial was appropriate after the trial court had granted summary judgment and that the order granting the new trial should be upheld if it should have been granted for any reason (140 Cal. App. 4th 1, 8-10) . The court then concluded that the trial court had committed an error in law in grantingthe summary judgment in the first place, and this error was sufficient basis for granting the motion for a new trial. In opposing the motion for summary judgment, plaintiff had presented an expert witness declaration describing how, in acting too quickly, the defendant's conduct fell below the applicable standard of care and why the resulting surgery was unnecessary. Although this initial expert declaration was silent on the issue of causation, the court of appeal stated that it was self-evident that unnecessary surgery is inherently injurious and causes harm to the patient, including needless pain and suffering, even if the surgery itself is performed flawlessly. Noting the absence of California case law on point, the court supported its conclusion with a similar case from New Hampshire. The court then held that at the summary judgment stage, the plaintiff's opposing papers had created a triable issue of fact as to whether the physician's treatment fell below the standard of care by performing a surgery that was unnecessary. These papers were also sufficient to raise a triable issue as to whether the plaintiff suffered harm that was caused by the unnecessary surgery, regardless of whether the papers specifically address the issue of causation of harm (140 Cal. App. 4th 1, 13) .

§ 175.29 Opposing Contention That Physician Is Liable for Professional Negligence--No Duty of Care Toward Plaintiff

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT IS NOT LIABLE FOR PROFESSIONAL NEGLIGENCE IN THE ABSENCE OF A PHYSICIAN-PATIENT RELATIONSHIP GIVING RISE TO A DUTY OF CARE TOWARD PLAINTIFF.

A. Requirement of Physician-Patient Relationship. A physician is generally liable for medical negligence only when a duty of care is owed as the result of a physician-patient relationship arising from express or implied contract (Keene v. Wiggins (1977) 69 Cal. App. 3d 308, 313, 138 Cal. Rptr. 3 ; Rainer v. Grossman (1973) 31 Cal. App. 3d 539, 543, 107 Cal. Rptr. 469).

[Optional] B. Requirement of Special Factors for Imposing Nonprivity Duty of Care. The imposition of a duty of care on a physician in the absence of a professional relationship with the patient requires findings of intent on the part of the physician to treat the patient, reasonable expectation that the patient will rely on the physician's opinion, and social value in imposing liability (see Keene v. Wiggins (1977) 69 Cal. App. 3d 308, 314-315, 138 Cal. Rptr. 3 ; see also Rainer v. Grossman (1973) 31 Cal. App. 3d 539, 543-544, 107 Cal. Rptr. 469).

[Optional] C. No Duty Owed by Proctor to Assist or Protect Patient. No special relationship exists between a physician acting as a proctor and either the treating surgeons or a patient who suffers injuries due to their negligence that imposes a duty on the proctor to take affirmative action to assist or protect the patient (Clarke v. Hoek (1985) 174 Cal. App. 3d 208, 211-219, 219 Cal. Rptr. 845).

[Optional] D. Same Alleged Breach of Duty Cannot Give Rise to Distinct Causes of Action for Ordinary and Professional Negligence. The same alleged breach of duty cannot give rise to distinct causes of action for ordinary and professional negligence, as they comprise essentially one form of action (Flowers v. Torrance Mem'l Hosp. (1994) 8 Cal. 4th 992, 995, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 685, 884 P.2d 142).

[Optional] E. No Duty Owed by Psychotherapist to Parent of Adult Patient for Treatment Regarding Allegedly FalseRecovered Memories of Childhood Sexual Abuse. A psychotherapist owes no duty of care to the parent of an adult patient arising from the therapist's treatment of the patient regarding allegedly false recovered memories of childhood sexual abuse (Trear v. Sills (1999) 69 Cal. App. 4th 1341, 1343, 82 Cal. Rptr. 2d 281).

[Optional] F. Physician Owes No Duty to Obtain Consent of Husband of Patient Who Undergoes Artificial Insemination. In the absence of a patient-physician relationship and for reasons of public policy, a doctor who artificially inseminates a female patient does not owe a duty to the patient's husband to inform the husband and obtain the husband's consent before performing the insemination (Shin v. Kong (2000) 80 Cal. App. 4th 498, 504-512, 95 Cal. Rptr. 2d 304).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a plaintiff's contention that a physician is liable for negligence in rendering a medical opinion or treatment. The ground of opposition set forth is the absence of a physician-patient relationship from which the duty of care usually arises, and the further absence of special considerations that might otherwise uphold liability in the absence of such privity.

These points and authorities may be combined, when appropriate, with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue of the absence of defendant's duty of care. The points and authorities set forth in this form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Requirement of Physician-Patient Relationship

In Keene v. Wiggins (1977) 69 Cal. App. 3d 308, 138 Cal. Rptr. 3 , plaintiff was examined by defendant physician at the request of plaintiff's employer's workers' compensation insurer. A report was prepared by defendant for the insurance company in which surgery or further treatment for plaintiff's condition was deemed unnecessary. Plaintiff claimed that he relied on the report in deciding to forego further treatment. The trial court granted summary judgment for defendant, finding that there was no physician-patient relationship between defendant and plaintiff from which a duty of care toward plaintiff arose and hence no liability for negligence in making the report was incurred by defendant.

The court of appeal affirmed. A physician's duty of care, it held, generally arises as the result of a physician-patient relationship arising from an express or implied contract to provide medical services. In the case of a physician examining a person solely for the purpose of preparing a report for an insurance carrier, the doctor's duty of care runs only to the carrier and to the employer requesting the report (69 Cal. App. 3d 308, 313-314) . The court noted, however, that a duty of care may still arise under basic tort liability principles of foreseeability of harm and justifiable reliance on the physician's opinion (69 Cal. App. 3d 308, 312) . Had defendant offered or intended to treat the plaintiff, or had he reason to expect the plaintiff to rely on his opinion, a duty of care would have been owed to plaintiff. No special factors justifying such reliance were present in this case, the court stated, and thus defendant owed plaintiff no duty of professional skill in connection with the report and was not liable to plaintiff for any negligence in making the medical recommendation (69 Cal. App. 3d 308, 314-316) .

In Rainer v. Grossman (1973) 31 Cal. App. 3d 539, 107 Cal. Rptr. 469 , defendant was a professor of medicine who had been presented with information regarding plaintiff's condition by her treating physician during a lecture and, for teaching purposes, gave his opinion that surgery was advisable. Defendant never knew plaintiff's identity and never personally examined her. Subsequent to the lecture, plaintiff's physician recommended and performed the surgery that was in fact unnecessary. Defendant was joined in the malpractice action on the basis of his failure to personally examine plaintiff and to amass sufficient information prior to making the recommendation. On the basis of defendant's claim that he neither treated plaintiff for her condition nor was he called for consultation on her case, the trial court granted summary judgment in his favor.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment. It noted that the contractual physician-patient relationship that usually gives rise to the necessary element of a duty of care was absent in the present case, and thus no duty could be imposed on defendant on that basis (31 Cal. App. 3d 513) . In absence of such privity, stated the court, liability could be imposed as a matter of policy based on the consideration of factors, including the extent to which the transaction was intended to effect the plaintiff, the foreseeability of harm to plaintiff, and the policy of preventing future harm (31 Cal. App. 3d 539, 543-544) . In the present case, the court held that defendant was entitled to assume that the physicians he addressed would consider the fact that he had not personally examined their patients and would rely on their own ultimate opinions and knowledge in recommending treatment. Furthermore, stated the court, to impose liability under such circumstances would be counterproductive to proper medical care by inhibiting exchange of medical information and the improvement of medical knowledge. Policy considerations, therefore, militated against the imposition of liability (31 Cal. App. 3d 539, 544-545) .

[b] Requirement of Special Factors for Imposing Nonprivity Duty of Care

The facts and procedural background of Keene v. Wiggins (1977) 69 Cal. App. 3d 308, 138 Cal. Rptr. 3 , are discussed in § 175.29[3][a]. The court of appeal held against the imposition of liability in the absence of a physician-patient relationship when defendant had not intended to treat or otherwise benefit the plaintiff, and circumstances did not otherwise support a finding that plaintiff could reasonably rely on defendant's medical opinion (69 Cal. App. 3d 308, 315-316) .

The facts and procedural background of Rainer v. Grossman (1973) 31 Cal. App. 3d 539, 107 Cal. Rptr. 469 , are discussed in § 175.29[3][a]. The court of appeal affirmed the dismissal of a physician who was not in contractual privity with plaintiff and whose conduct as a professor giving an opinion on plaintiff's condition solely for teaching purposes did not, under considerations of policy and foreseeability principles, justify the imposition of nonprivity liability (31 Cal. App. 3d 539, 543-545) .

[c] No Duty Owed by Proctor to Assist or Protect Patient

Clarke v. Hoek (1985) 174 Cal. App. 3d 208, 219 Cal. Rptr. 845 , was an action brought by a surgery patient against a proctoring physician, seeking to recover damages for defendant's failure to intervene in operations in which a proctored physician negligently inflicted injuries on plaintiff. Plaintiff underwent two operations performed by the same two surgeons at two different hospitals. Defendant, an active medical staff member of both hospitals, observed and evaluated one of plaintiff's surgeons, who was an applicant for medical staff privileges at one of the hospitals. Prior to each operation, defendant discussed the operative plan with the proctored surgeon, but otherwise took no part in the care and treatment of plaintiff. At the time of the surgeries, defendant had never met plaintiff, nor entered into any contractual relationship with her. Defendant did not scrub in for the surgeries, but rather observed them from a position outside the sterile field. He did not request, receive, or expect any payment from any source for proctoring the operations. Plaintiff discovered defendant's identity and role solely because the proctored physician mentioned to plaintiff's husband that one of the operations would be proctored. The trial court granted defendant's motion for summary judgment. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that there is no special relationship between a patient and a proctoring physician that gives rise to any obligation or duty on the proctor to take affirmative action to assist or protect the patient (174 Cal. App. 3d 208, 217) . Proctors are responsible only to the medical staff credentials committee of the hospital charged with peer review. They are only required to observe the candidate for medical staff membership, and not expected to supervise the proctored physicians or to intervene in proctored surgeries (174 Cal. App. 3d 208, 212) . Defendant was not plaintiff's physician, and there was no physician-patient relationship between them (174 Cal. App. 3d 208, 216) . He neither created a situation that placed plaintiff at risk, nor affirmatively brought about any increased peril to her (174 Cal. App. 3d 208, 217) . There is no authority in California for holding that an individual proctor owes a duty of due care to a patient in a proctored surgery, much less an affirmative obligation to intervene in the operation to prevent malpractice on the part of the physicians performing the surgery (174 Cal. App. 3d 208, 219) . Moreover, strong public interest warrants supporting, encouraging, and protecting effective medical peer review programs and activities (174 Cal. App. 3d 208, 220) . The protection of staff inquiries with a measure of confidentiality encourages the quality of in-hospital medical practice. For example, Evid. Code § 1157 bars discovery in legal action of either the proceedings or therecords of organized committees of hospital medical staffs that evaluate and improve the quality of care rendered in the hospital (174 Cal. App. 3d 208, 221) .

[d] Same Alleged Breach of Duty Cannot Give Rise to Distinct Causes of Action for Ordinary and Professional Negligence

In Flowers v. Torrance Mem'l Hosp. (1994) 8 Cal. 4th 992, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 685, 884 P.2d 142 , the plaintiff filed suit against a hospital and an attending nurse for general negligence and premises liability, alleging that plaintiff fell asleep while laying on a gurney awaiting treatment for bladder pain and subsequently awoke and fell off the gurney, sustaining injury to her back and arm. The trial court granted summary judgment in favor of the defendants based on their expert's testimony that prevailing standards did not require emergency room personnel to raise gurney side rails for patients like plaintiff, whose condition did not appear to warrant this precaution. In a divided opinion, the court of appeal affirmed the ruling with respect to "professional" negligence, but found the evidence insufficient to negate "ordinary" negligence. Thus, the court of appeal reversed, holding that the pleadings were broad enough to encompass a theory of liability for ordinary as well as professional negligence because the manner of her injury did not involve a breach of duty to provide professional skill or care. The court of appeal concluded that summary judgment was not proper in light of defendants' failure to address this alternative theory of liability (8 Cal. 4th 992, 995-996) .

The Supreme Court reversed, holding that, with respect to questions of substantive law, "ordinary" and "professional" negligence comprise essentially one form of action (8 Cal. 4th 992, 995) . As stated by the Court, apart from statutory considerations, characterizing misfeasance as one type of negligence or the other generally only serves to define the standard of care applicable to the defendant's conduct (8 Cal. 4th 992, 997) . However, the Court stated that the bifurcation of plaintiff's pleadings in this matter was erroneous and that the Court was unable to determine whether this error had affected the court of appeal's determination of the requisite standard of care and its analysis of the materiality of disputed facts. Accordingly, the Court remanded the matter for further consideration of the trial court's action in light of the views expressed by the Court (8 Cal. 4th 992, 1001-1002) . Further, the Court declined to resolve the conflict between Murillo v. Good Samaritan Hosp. (1979) 99 Cal. App. 3d 50, 160 Cal. Rptr. 33 , and Gopaul v. Herrick Mem'l Hosp. (1974) 38 Cal. App. 3d 1002, 113 Cal. Rptr. 811 , on the question of whether a patient's fall from a hospital bed or gurney implicates "professional" or "ordinary" negligence in a statutory context. The Court disapproved either of the earlier court of appeal decisions to the extent it may be inconsistent with the Court's own analysis (8 Cal. 4th 992, 1002 n.6).

[e] No Duty Owed by Psychotherapist to Parent of Adult Patient for Treatment Regarding Allegedly False Recovered Memories of Childhood Sexual Abuse

In Trear v. Sills (1999) 69 Cal. App. 4th 1341, 82 Cal. Rptr. 2d 281 , plaintiff sued his adult daughter's psychotherapist for professional negligence, claiming that he was falsely accused of sexually abusing his daughter and that the therapist planted the idea in her mind in the course of treating her. Plaintiff's daughter, on the prompting of her therapist, had two years earlier filed a civil suit against her father for having raped and sexually abused her during her childhood, although she claimed she had no memory of this abuse until the therapist's treatment and diagnosis. Although the record contained no evidence that the daughter had ever recanted her allegations against her father, plaintiff's complaint against the therapist suggested that the memories were false and that had the therapist exercised reasonable care, she would have foreseen the harm to plaintiff resulting from the misdiagnosis. Defendant therapist demurred to the complaint, which was sustained without leave to amend. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that a psychotherapist owes no duty of care to the parent of an adult patient arising from the therapist's treatment of the patient regarding allegedly false recovered memories of childhood sexual abuse (69 Cal. App. 4th 1341, 1343) . Absent an assumption of duty, the duty of psychotherapists to exercise due care generally runs to the patients who hire them (69 Cal. App. 4th 1341, 1348, 1350) . Although the court recognized that harm to a parent falsely accused of sexual abuse would be foreseeable, it concluded that foreseeability alone was insufficient (69 Cal. App. 4th 1341, 1346-1348) . To impose a duty that runs to the parent would impose a divided loyalty on the therapist, who would be unable to explore properly the possibility that the patient's problems were related to repressed memories of childhood abuse for fear of liability to the alleged abuser (69 Cal. App. 4th 1341, 1350-1352) . The court of appeal concluded that its holding was consistent with the analytical framework for evaluating a psychotherapist's liability established by the Supreme Court's noted decision in Tarasoff v. Regents of Univ. of Cal. (1976) 17 Cal. 3d 425, 131 Cal. Rptr. 14, 551 P.2d 334 , which had balanced the traditional factors for determining whether a tort duty of care should be imposed under the particular circumstances (69 Cal. App. 4th 1341, 1355-1356) .

The court stressed that its holding was limited to treatment of adult patients, since treatment of a minor child raises additional concerns as to who actually hired the therapist and whether a duty might run on that basis to a parent of the patient (69 Cal. App. 4th 1341, 1344 n.4).

[f] No Duty Owed by Physician to Obtain Consent of Husband of Patient Who Undergoes Artificial Insemination

In Shin v. Kong (2000) 80 Cal. App. 4th 498, 95 Cal. Rptr. 2d 304 , the plaintiff was the former husband of a woman who, without the plaintiff's knowledge, had undergone artificial insemination during the marriage and given birth to a child whom the plaintiff had believed was his biological son. After discovering during divorce proceedings that his wife had conceived the child through artificial insemination, the plaintiff brought suit against the physician who performed the insemination and had used his own semen in doing so, arguing essentially that the physician had owed the plaintiff a duty to notify him and obtain his consent before performing the procedure. However, the plaintiff had never been the physician's patient, had not participated in the insemination procedure, and had no contact with the physician. The trial court granted judgment on the pleadings in favor of the physician, concluding that absent any relationship between the plaintiff and the physician that could serve as basis for a legal duty of care owed to the plaintiff, the plaintiff could plead no viable cause of action. The plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court first rejected the plaintiff's contention that a duty could be imposed under Fam. Code § 7613, which is part of the Uniform Parentage Act, because that statute deals with establishing the legal paternity of a child conceived through artificial insemination and does not address a physician's tort liability (80 Cal. App. 4th 498, 504-505) . The court also rejected the plaintiff's argument that a physician who performs artificial insemination on a married woman has a special relationship with the woman's husband that gives rise to a duty to refrain from performing the procedure without the husband's knowledge and consent. The court concluded instead that public policy concerns embodied in statutes such as Civ. Code § 43.5, the so-called "anti-heart balm" statute, cautioned against finding that a duty is owed to the husband (80 Cal. App. 4th 498, 506-509) . Finally, the court held that the plaintiff had no basis for recovering for interference with procreative rights, for infliction of emotional distress on either a direct or bystander theory, or for intentional infliction of emotional distress (80 Cal. App. 4th 498, 509-512) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Requirement of Physician-Patient Relationship

In Felton v. Schaeffer (1991) 229 Cal. App. 3d 229, 279 Cal. Rptr. 713 , the defendants had allegedly misdiagnosed plaintiff during a preemployment physical, which had been conducted at the request of the plaintiff's prospective employer. The alleged misdiagnosis purportedly resulted in a lost job opportunity for the plaintiff and associated damages. The trial court entered judgment for the plaintiff on plaintiff's action for medical malpractice and negligence, but the court of appeal reversed. The court of appeal found that a physician-patient relationship never existed between the plaintiff and defendants and that consequently, defendants owed plaintiff no duty to use due care in evaluating plaintiff's medical condition. The court noted that defendants evaluated plaintiff solely for purposes of a preemployment physical examination, the examination was conducted at the request of the employer, plaintiff did not seek medical treatment or advice from defendants, and plaintiff did not seek or decline to seek medical treatment in reliance on the evaluation. Under the facts of the case, the court concluded, plaintiff had no claim in ordinary negligence or medical malpractice based on the alleged misdiagnosis (229 Cal. App. 3d 229, 234-235) .

[b] Same Alleged Breach of Duty Cannot Give Rise to Distinct Causes of Action for Ordinary and Professional Negligence

In Bellamy v. Appellate Department (1996) 50 Cal. App. 4th 797 , the court of appeal applied the holding in Murillo v. Good Samaritan Hosp. (1979) 99 Cal. App. 3d 50, 160 Cal. Rptr. 33 , and ruled that the plaintiff's allegations of injuries, which occurred when she fell off a rolling X-ray table, were sufficient to state a claim for professional, as opposed to ordinary, negligence against the hospital (50 Cal. App. 4th 797, 809) .

§ 175.30 Opposing Contention That Physician Is Liable for Professional Negligence--Prudent Selection of Method of Diagnosis or Treatment

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief].

WHEN THERE ARE SEVERAL METHODS OF APPROVED DIAGNOSIS OR TREATMENT, AN IMPROPER SELECTION BY DEFENDANT WHILE EXERCISING DUE CARE DOES NOT GIVE RISE TO LIABILITY FOR NEGLIGENCE.

A. Exercise of Best Judgment. If a physician exercises his or her best judgment in selecting from various approved methods of diagnosis or treatment, it is not negligence to choose one such method that later turns out to be an improper selection (Barton v. Owen (1977) 71 Cal. App. 3d 484, 501-502, 139 Cal. Rptr. 494 ; see Fraijo v. Hartland Hosp. (1979) 99 Cal. App. 3d 331, 341-343, 341 fn. 8, 160 Cal. Rptr. 246).

B. Consideration of Entire Course of Conduct. To properly decide whether a physician's conduct constitutes a recognized and approved method of diagnosis or treatment, it is necessary to view the overall course of conduct followed in connection with the circumstances of the patient's condition (Barton v. Owen (1977) 71 Cal. App. 3d 484, 502, 139 Cal. Rptr. 494).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a plaintiff's contention that a physician has been negligent in selecting a method of diagnosis or treatment. The ground of opposition set forth is that a physician will not incur liability if he or she uses reasonable care in selecting from among various approved methods of diagnosis or treatment, even if the selection later turns out to be incorrect.

These points and authorities may be combined, when appropriate, with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue of the defendant's adherence to the proper standard of care. The points and authorities set forth in this form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Exercise of Best Judgment

In Barton v. Owen (1977) 71 Cal. App. 3d 484, 139 Cal. Rptr. 494 , plaintiff was treated by defendant for acute frontal sinusitis. In treating plaintiff, defendant failed to administer a culture and sensitivity test that would have identified the presence of a bacteria that eventually led to a brain abscess and the need for surgery. However, substantial expert testimony was presented to the effect that administration of the sensitivity test was not necessarily the only proper method by which to diagnose plaintiff's condition, and that, even had it been performed, it might not have led to prevention of the abscess. On this basis, the trial court refused to find defendant negligent, as a matter of law, and instructed the jury regarding the fact that a physician may choose between a number of approved methods of diagnosis or treatment without incurring liability for a wrong choice if proper care is exercised in making the selection [relying on BAJI No. 6.03].

The jury held in favor of defendant, and plaintiff appealed the judgment, citing use of the instruction as one of his grounds for appeal. Although it reversed the judgment on other grounds, the court of appeal upheld the verdict for defendant on the issue of the nonadministration of the sensitivity test and held that the giving of BAJI No. 6.03 was proper (71 Cal. App. 3d 484, 501) .

The court noted that medicine is not a field of absolutes, and that BAJI No. 6.03 properly embodied the notion that physicians may disagree in good faith upon what constitutes a proper method of diagnosis or treatment. A physician is required only to exercise reasonable care in deciding among approved methods and is not liable for the consequences of a wrong decision if such care is utilized (71 Cal. App. 3d 484, 501-502) . The court held that the expert testimony sufficiently established the existence of alternative approved methods of diagnosis regarding plaintiff's condition and supported the propriety of the jury instruction (71 Cal. App. 3d 484, 501) . The evidence also supported the jury's finding of fact that defendant had exercised due care in deciding not to administer the test (71 Cal. App. 3d 484, 499) .

In Fraijo v. Hartland Hosp. (1979) 99 Cal. App. 3d 331, 160 Cal. Rptr. 246 , the rule that a physician may select from among various approved methods of diagnosis without incurring liability for a wrong choice so long as reasonable care is exercised was applied to nurses. Plaintiff's decedent had entered the hospital for emergency treatment of her asthma condition. Following a physician's directive to administer Demerol to the patient as needed, defendant nurse exercised her medical judgment to administer the drug when she noticed that the patient's condition had worsened. The patient died as the result of an idiosyncratic reaction to the Demerol, and her surviving relatives brought the medical malpractice action against the hospital, the treating physicians, and the nurse who ordered administration of the drug. The trial court instructed the jury on the rule regarding selection from among various approved methods of diagnosis or treatment, as embodied by BAJI No. 6.03, modifying the instruction to apply to nurses as well as physicians. The jury held for defendant, and plaintiff appealed, arguing primarily that the instruction erroneously stated the standard of care governing nurses by extending their professionalism into the area of independent judgment.

The court of appeal rejected plaintiff's argument and affirmed the verdict. Noting that in certain situations, standard medical practice permits physicians to confer upon nurses the exercise of reasonable judgment, nurses in those situations must be accorded the protection of the rule regarding the use of best judgment in selecting the method of treatment or diagnosis. To hold otherwise, stated the court, would impose on nurses a standard of care exceeding that applicable to the medical profession (99 Cal. App. 3d 331, 342-343) .

[b] Consideration of Entire Course of Conduct

The facts and procedural background of Barton v. Owen (1977) 71 Cal. App. 3d 484, 139 Cal. Rptr. 494 , are discussed in § 175.30[3][a]. The court analyzed the jury instruction (BAJI No. 6.03) regarding the physician's freedom to exercise his or her best judgment in selecting from among various approved methods of diagnosis or treatment without incurring liability for a wrong decision. The court held that, in evaluating whether a method is approved, the trier of fact must take into consideration the entire course of the physician's conduct and the particular circumstances of a patient's condition. Individual steps of treatment are not to be compared with general standards of care, but, rather, analysis should focus on whether such steps constitute approved methods in conjunction with the overall plan of treatment (71 Cal. App. 3d 484, 502) . For example, the use of nose drops for a sinus infection might be deemed improper if considered as an individual decision, but the same prescription in connection with other aspects of treatment might constitute an approved method. In this case, the decision not to administer a sensitivity test, considered along with other aspects of the care rendered, did not constitute an unapproved method of diagnosis or treatment (71 Cal. App. 3d 484, 501) .

§ 175.31 Opposing Contention That Physician Is Liable for Professional Negligence--Failure to Disclose Material Risk of Treatment--Low Probability Complication or Idiosyncratic Reaction Not Material

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

LOW PROBABILITY COMPLICATIONS AND RARE, IDIOSYNCRATIC REACTIONS TO TREATMENT ARE NOT DEEMED MATERIAL RISKS AND DEFENDANT IS NOT LIABLE FOR FAILURE TO DISCLOSE SUCH RISKS.

Nonmaterial Risk. In determining whether or not information relating to a medical procedure is material so as to require disclosure by the physician, such factors as the seriousness and remoteness of the dangers involved in the procedure as well as the risks of a decision not to undergo the procedure must be considered. A rare, idiosyncratic reaction or a very low probability risk of treatment is not a material risk as a matter of law, and a physician is not liable for failure to inform the patient of such a risk (see McKinney v. Nash (1981) 120 Cal. App. 3d 428, 440-441, 442, 174 Cal. Rptr. 642).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a plaintiff's contention that a physician was negligent in failing to disclose material information regarding a proposed treatment, when the allegedly nondisclosed risk concerned a low probability complication or idiosyncratic reaction to treatment and was thus not material.

These points and authorities may be combined, when appropriate, with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue of the defendant's adherence to the proper standard of care. The points and authorities set forth in this form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

[c] Requirement of Expert Testimony

Whether the minimal disclosure of objectively material information has been given by a physician may be determined by a jury without expert testimony. Whether proper exercise of care would require disclosure beyond the minimal level, however, must be analyzed by expert witnesses [Jamison v. Lindsay (1980) 108 Cal. App. 3d 223, 232, 166 Cal. Rptr. 443] .

[f] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, this memorandum may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a physician is liable for negligent nondisclosure of material information supported by the points and authorities in § 175.23.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Nonmaterial Risk

In McKinney v. Nash (1981) 120 Cal. App. 3d 428, 174 Cal. Rptr. 642 , plaintiff had undergone surgery for a hernia repair during which he suffered nerve damage resulting in testicular atrophy and impotence. Under the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, plaintiff sued the surgeon and the anesthesiologist, alleging both negligence in performing the surgery and in failing to inform plaintiff of the risk of the complications suffered. The trial court directed a verdict for defendants, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed the verdict with respect to the surgeon, but affirmed it with respect to the anesthesiologist. Expert testimony at trial had established that neurological damage of the type suffered by plaintiff could be caused by contaminated spinal anesthesia such as that administered by defendant. However, expert testimony also established that the possibility of contamination was no longer considered a risk of treatment. The alternative possible anesthesia-related cause of plaintiff's damage was an extremely rare, idiosyncratic reaction to the anesthetic. The court held that neither the very low incident risk or the rare, idiosyncratic reactions constituted material risks requiring disclosure to the patient, and that the anesthesiologist was therefore not negligent as a matter of law for failing to inform plaintiff of such risks (120 Cal. App. 3d 428, 442) .

DEFENDANT IS NOT LIABLE FOR FAILING TO DISCLOSE INFORMATION WHICH HE/SHE REASONABLY BELIEVED WOULD BE SO DISTURBING THAT THE PLAINTIFF WOULD HAVE BEEN UNABLE TO OBJECTIVELY WEIGH THE RISKS OF DECLINING TREATMENT.

A. Seriously Disturbing Information. A physician need not disclose all information regarding a treatment when such information would be so disturbing as to prevent the patient from making an objective evaluation of the risk of declining the treatment (Cobbs v. Grant (1972) 8 Cal. 3d 229, 246, 104 Cal. Rptr. 505, 502 P.2d 1 (dictum)).

B. Objective Test of Effect on Patient. The physician must demonstrate that the nondisclosure was based on facts which would demonstrate to a reasonable person the preventive effect of the information on a patient's ability to evaluate risks (Cobbs v. Grant (1972) 8 Cal. 3d 229, 246, 104 Cal. Rptr. 505, 502 P.2d 1 (dictum)).

In an appropriate case, this memorandum may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a physician is liable for negligent nondisclosure of material information supported by the points and authorities in § 175.23.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Seriously Disturbing Information

The facts and procedural background of Cobbs v. Grant (1972) 8 Cal. 3d 229, 104 Cal. Rptr. 505, 502 P.2d 1 , are discussed in § 175.23[4][a]. The Supreme Court in dicta stated that a physician has the duty to disclose all information material to a patient's decision regarding treatment, except under certain circumstances. One such exceptional situation relieving the physician's duty of disclosure is when the information would so upset the patient that he or she would be unable to objectively weigh the risks of refusing to undergo the recommended treatment (8 Cal. 3d 229, 246) .

[b] Objective Test of Effect on Patient

The facts and procedural background of Cobbs v. Grant (1972) 8 Cal. 3d 229, 104 Cal. Rptr. 505, 502 P.2d 1 , are discussed in § 175.23[3][a]. In dicta, the Supreme Court noted that the physician is excused from disclosing all material information regarding the risks of a proposed treatment when it can be proved that such disclosure would seriously disturb the patient and render him or her unable to objectively weigh the risks of refusing treatment.

The Court noted in dicta that in order to rely on this defense, the physician must prove that the nondisclosure was based on facts that would demonstrate to a reasonable person that the patient would be so disturbed as to be unable to decide objectively whether or not to undergo treatment (8 Cal. 3d 229, 246) .

§ 175.33 Opposing Contention That Physician Is Liable for Professional Negligence--No Duty of Disclosure When Treatment or Testing Not Recommended

[1] FORM

DEFENDANT IS NOT LIABLE FOR FAILURE TO DISCLOSE MATERIAL FACTS NECESSARY FOR PLAINTIFF PROPERLY TO EVALUATE HIS/HER CONDITION AND SEEK APPROPRIATE CARE BECAUSE DEFENDANT RECOMMENDED [NO DIAGNOSTIC TESTING OR TREATMENT TO PLAINTIFF or PROCEDURES OTHER THAN THE PROCEDURE ABOUT WHICH PLAINTIFF ALLEGES HE/SHE WAS NOT WARNED].

A. No Duty to Disclose When No Diagnostic Testing or Treatment Recommended. The duty to inform a patient concerning the risks and benefits of treatment or nontreatment is only triggered when the physician actually recommends treatment or diagnostic tests. If a physician believes that a patient is progressing satisfactorily, and that the patient requires no treatment, there can be no liability under a theory that the physician failed to disclose material facts necessary for the patient properly to evaluate his or her condition and seek appropriate care (see Scalere v. Stenson (1989) 211 Cal. App. 3d 1446, 1449-1453, 260 Cal. Rptr. 152).

[Optional] B. No Duty to Disclose Regarding Nonrecommended Testing or Treatment. Although other testing or treatments were recommended, there is no special duty to disclose information about a nonrecommended procedure (Vandi v. Permanente Med. Group, Inc. (1992) 7 Cal. App. 4th 1064, 1069-1071, 9 Cal. Rptr. 2d 463).

[Optional] C. No Duty to Disclose Alternative Treatment That Is Illegal in California. A physician is not liable for failing todisclose the existence of a treatment that cannot legally be administered in the state of California (Schiff v. Prados (2001) 92 Cal. App. 4th 692, 694, 112 Cal. Rptr. 2d 171).

This form may be used in opposition to a plaintiff's contention that a physician was negligent in failing to disclose material information necessary for plaintiff properly to evaluate his or her condition and seek appropriate care, when the physician proposed no diagnostic testing or treatment. The optional paragraphs may be included if the plaintiff alleges that the defendant failed to disclose treatment alternatives that the defendant had no duty to disclose.

These points and authorities may be combined, when appropriate, with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue of the defendant's adherence to the proper standard of care. The points and authorities set forth in this form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, this memorandum may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a physician is liable for negligent nondisclosure of material information supported by the points and authorities in § 175.23.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Duty to Disclose When No Diagnostic Testing or Treatment Recommended

In Scalere v. Stenson (1989) 211 Cal. App. 3d 1446, 260 Cal. Rptr. 152 , plaintiff brought a medical malpractice action against a cardiologist who had performed an angiogram on the brachial artery of her right arm. After surgery, plaintiff complained of pain in her right arm. Defendant examined and tested the arm and concluded that it was progressing satisfactorily. He neither told plaintiff about nor recommended any further diagnostic tests or therapy. One year later, plaintiff underwent a saphenous vein bypass of her right brachial artery with resultant damage. At trial, plaintiff relied on the theory that defendant improperly failed to disclose material facts necessary for plaintiff to evaluate her condition and seek postoperative care. The jury found for defendant, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, concluding that inasmuch as defendant, following the surgery, recommended neither further therapy nor further diagnostic testing, no duty of disclosure arose (211 Cal. App. 3d 1446, 1449-1450) . The court noted, however, that negligent failure to advise a patient to pursue a potentially necessary course of treatment would be actionable under ordinary medical negligence standards (211 Cal. App. 3d 1446, 1453) .

[b] No Duty to Disclose Regarding Nonrecommended Testing or Treatment

In Vandi v. Permanente Med. Group, Inc. (1992) 7 Cal. App. 4th 1064, 9 Cal. Rptr. 2d 463 , plaintiff suffered a grand mal seizure on a Saturday and was taken to defendant hospital's emergency room. Defendant doctor took a medical history and performed a diagnostic examination. The doctor also contacted a neurological specialist who recommended antiseizure medication and a magnetic resonance imaging (MRI) scan and examination by a neurologist to be scheduled the following Monday. After experiencing additional difficulties on Sunday night, plaintiff was returned to the hospital on Monday and was given a computerized tomography (C.T.) scan, an MRI scan, and, eventually, two surgeries. Plaintiff's medical problems were ultimately discovered to be due to two brain abscesses, which resulted in partial paralysis.

Plaintiff's primary theory at trial was that defendants were negligent in failing to perform a C.T. scan on Saturday night. Plaintiff's expert testified that a C.T. scan would have been able to detect at least one of the brain abscesses, which if discovered and treated earlier, might have avoided or lessened the paralysis. Defendants' experts testified that brain abscesses are rarely the cause of first time grand mal seizures and that plaintiff's medical history indicated none of the symptoms associated with such abscesses. After the jury found defendants not negligent, judgment was entered in favor of defendants.

On appeal, plaintiff contended that defendants should be liable for failing to advise him of the availability of the C.T. scan, the possibility that it could detect brain abscesses, and the risks involved in waiting for an MRI scan. In affirming the trial court, the court held that there is no special duty to disclose information about a nonrecommended procedure. If a procedure is one that should have been recommended, the failure to recommend it would be negligence under the ordinary medical negligence standard (7 Cal. App. 4th 1064, 1069-1071) .

[c] No Duty to Disclose Alternative Treatment That Is Illegal in California

In Schiff v. Prados (2001) 92 Cal. App. 4th 692, 112 Cal. Rptr. 2d 171 , the plaintiffs, the parents of a minor child who died following treatment for a brain tumor, brought a wrongful death suit against a consulting physician who was the head of the treating medical center's brain tumor service and moderator of its neuro-oncology tumor board. At this medical center, the tumor board served as a consulting body for the treating oncologist, and in tandem they attempted to arrive at a consensus on the best course of treatment for the patient. In the case of the plaintiffs' daughter, the board recommended intensive chemotherapy and radiation as the only option to extend her life, hoping that perhaps by extending her life, a treatment option not currently available could be developed. Based on those recommendations, the plaintiffs' daughter underwent the treatment, although it left some residual tumor. Toward the end of this period, the plaintiffs began doing independent research on alternative treatment methods and learned of a controversial treatment being performed by a doctor in Texas involving substances called antineoplastons. When the plaintiffs met with the defendant to discuss this alternative, the defendant indicated that he was strongly opposed to the treatment and thought that antineoplastons were toxic and ineffective. Even though the plaintiffs knew that this treatment was not approved by the FDA, nor recommended by the AMA or the American Cancer Society, and that a federal injunction prevented the Texas physician from transporting antineoplastons across state lines, the plaintiffs' daughter was taken to Texas where she began this alternative treatment. After returning to California, she remained on this treatment for over a year, until she appeared to be cancer free. When she was taken off the treatment, she deteriorated rapidly, and the tumor reappeared. When she resumed treatment, her tumor regressed. Nevertheless, the plaintiffs' daughter died approximately seven months later, apparently as a result of the aggressive radiation and chemotherapy treatment she had undergone earlier. The plaintiffs then filed their wrongful death action against the defendant, alleging that the defendant did not obtain their informed consent for their daughter's treatment because of the failure to advise of the antineoplaston treatment alternative. The defendant successfully moved for summary judgment on the grounds that he had no duty to inform plaintiffs of that alternative because it had not been approved by the FDA at the time of their daughter's treatment. The plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court reviewed the Supreme Court's holding in Cobbs v. Grant (1972) 8 Cal. 3d 229, 104 Cal. Rptr. 505, 502 P.2d 1 [see § 175.23[4][a]], noting that a physician's duty to disclose only extended to the "available" choices with respect to proposed therapy. In addition, there was no duty of disclosure with respect to nonrecommended procedures (92 Cal. App. 4th 692, 701) . Under the relevant statutes, a cancer drug is not legally "available" in California unless: (1) the FDA has approved an application permitting the drug to be marketed; (2) a current, unrevoked investigational new drug application is on file with the FDA allowing the drug to be clinically tested in humans; or (3) specified alternative conditions, including filings with the Medical Board of California, are fulfilled. Because none of these requirements were met for antineoplastons at the time of the plaintiffs' daughter's treatment, it would have been illegal in California to administer those substances at that time. Therefore, that alternative treatment was not "available" during the relevant period, and the defendant had no duty to disclose the treatment to the plaintiffs. Furthermore, the court concluded that to hold that a physician may have a duty to disclose a treatment that is currently unavailable, but may become available in the future, would be equivalent to discarding the availability requirement altogether (92 Cal. App. 4th 692, 704-706) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] No Duty to Disclose When No Diagnostic Testing or Treatment Recommended

In Munro v. Regents of Univ. of Cal. (1989) 215 Cal. App. 3d 977, 263 Cal. Rptr. 878 , parents of a child born with the genetic Tay-Sachs disease brought an action for medical malpractice and negligent infliction of emotional distress against a physician and hospital who had provided genetic counseling to the parents before the child's birth. The parents alleged that the defendants had a duty to disclose material information toenable them to make an informed decision whether to take the Tay-Sachs test. The court of appeal affirmed summary judgment in favor of defendants, and held that there was no duty to disclose under the circumstances. The court noted that at the time of counseling, plaintiffs had provided defendants with no facts that should have alerted defendants to the possibility that one or more plaintiffs might be carriers of Tay-Sachs disease (215 Cal. App. 3d 977, 985-988) .

In Parris v. Sands (1993) 21 Cal. App. 4th 187, 25 Cal. Rptr. 2d 800 , the plaintiff brought a malpractice action against a physician, alleging that the failure to administer prophylactic antibiotics to plaintiff resulted in her contracting bacterial pneumonia. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment of the trial court that the physician had no duty to inform plaintiff of "schools of thought" regarding asplenic patients and prophylactic antibiotics (21 Cal. App. 4th 187, 189) . The court noted that although courts have rejected a general duty of disclosure concerning a treatment or procedure a physician does not recommend, plaintiffs may still proceed under ordinary medical negligence (i.e., negligent failure to advise a patient to pursue a necessary course of treatment) (21 Cal. App. 4th 187, 193) .

[The following may be included in a memorandum or points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT IS NOT LIABLE FOR AN ALLEGED FAILURE TO DISCLOSE AVAILABLE CHOICES, BECAUSE THE FAILURE TO DISCLOSE DID NOT CAUSE THE PLAINTIFF'S INJURY.

No Liability for Failure to Disclose if Reasonable Person Would Not Have Declined Procedure. To establish liability for a physician's failure to inform and disclose, causation must be established by an objective test, so that plaintiff must show that reasonable prudent persons would decline the procedure if they knew all significant perils (Spann v. Irwin Memorial Blood Centers (1995) 34 Cal. App. 4th 644, 657, 40 Cal. Rptr. 2d 360).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted by defendant in support of defendant's contention that he or she cannot be held liable for plaintiff's injury, because the alleged failure to inform plaintiff of all dangers inherent in a procedure did not cause the plaintiff's injury because the plaintiff would have proceeded with the procedure had full disclosure been made.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that defendant's alleged failure to inform plaintiff was not a cause of plaintiff's injury. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Liability for Failure to Disclose Where Reasonable Person Would Not Have Declined Procedure

In Spann v. Irwin Memorial Blood Centers (1995) 34 Cal. App. 4th 644, 40 Cal. Rptr. 2d 360 , a woman contracted the HIV virus from an infusion of blood plasma that was provided as treatment for a life-threatening blood disease. After the woman died from complications from AIDS, her husband sued for professional negligence and failure to obtain informed consent, arguing that defendant did not notify his wife of the risk of AIDS infection. Defendant moved for summary judgment, which was granted by the trial court. Plaintiff then moved for reconsideration and for a new trial. The trial court denied plaintiff's motions, and entered judgment in favor of defendant. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, concluding that the plaintiff did not raise a triable issue of fact with respect to the issue of causation (34 Cal. App. 4th 644, 660) . The court stated the rule that for a physician to be liable under the duty to disclose choices and dangers, the failure to disclose mustcause the injury, and a causal connection arises only if it is established that had revelation been made, consent to treatment would not have been given. Furthermore, the court stated that causation must be established by an objective test, so that the plaintiff must show that a reasonable prudent person would decline the procedure if that person knew the risks. The court also noted that plaintiff and his wife were aware of the risk of AIDS, and concluded that given that fact, and in light of the seriousness of the plaintiff's wife's condition, it believed that plaintiff failed to show that a reasonable person in his wife's position would have declined the treatment had full disclosure been made (34 Cal. App. 4th 644, 657) . The court also rejected plaintiff's argument that defendant should have made additional disclosures regarding the options and risks, holding that plaintiff did not establish that the failure to disclose alternative treatments breached the standard of care, that at the time of this treatment there was no donor reduction program in place so that defendant had no duty to disclose or maintain such a program, and that there was no evidence regarding the change in the odds of contracting AIDS by the use of more units of blood products than had been originally represented to plaintiff (34 Cal. App. 4th 644, 658-659) .

§ 175.35 Opposing Contention That Physician Is Liable for Professional Negligence--Vicarious Liability for Negligence of Medical Assistants--No Control or Direction Over Negligent Acts

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT IS NOT LIABLE FOR NEGLIGENT ACTS OF ASSISTANTS WHO WERE NOT HIS/HER EMPLOYEES BECAUSE THE NEGLIGENT ACTS WERE PERFORMED WHILE THE ASSISTANTS WERE NOT UNDER HIS/HER DIRECTION AND CONTROL.

Direct Supervision and Control. A physician is not liable for the independent negligence of assistants who are not his or her employees when the negligent conduct occurs and who are not under the physician's direct supervision or control (see Truhitte v. French Hosp. (1982) 128 Cal. App. 3d 332, 344-348, 180 Cal. Rptr. 152).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a contention by plaintiff that a physician is vicariously liable for the negligent conduct of medical assistants who are not the physician's employees. The ground of opposition is that the allegedly negligent conduct occurred while the assistants were not under the physician's direct supervision and control.

These points and authorities may be combined, when appropriate, with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue of the defendant's lack of control or supervision over the acts of the assisting hospital employees. The points and authorities set forth in this form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, this memorandum may be submitted in opposition to the contention, that a physician is liable for the negligence of medical assistants, supported by the points and authorities in § 175.25.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Direct Supervision and Control

In Truhitte v. French Hosp. (1982) 128 Cal. App. 3d 332, 180 Cal. Rptr. 152 , plaintiff brought an action against a hospital and a private physician for injuries suffered when a sponge was left in her abdomen after surgery. The trial court granted the hospital a judgment notwithstanding the verdict on the ground that the nurse whose negligence in making a preoperative sponge count resulted in the lost sponge was the temporary employee of the physician during surgery, rendering the surgeon rather than the hospital vicariously liable for her negligence. The physician appealed from the judgment notwithstanding the verdict, as well as from certain rulings by the trial court pertaining to other issues of liability.

The court of appeal reversed the judgment in favor of the hospital, holding that there was sufficient evidence for a jury to find that the nurse had been the agent of the hospital at the time the negligent conduct occurred and that the hospital was therefore vicariously liable to plaintiff.

Discussing the borrowed servant doctrine in the context of medical malpractice, the court stated that the modern approach to determining the status of a hospital employee assisting during surgery focused on whether the surgeon exercised actual control or direction over the particular function at issue. The court noted examples in which courts had absolved a surgeon of liability for negligence occurring during postoperative or preoperative procedures, in which nurses carry out duties conferred by the hospital rather than by the surgeon, and for the negligence of anesthesiologists (128 Cal. App. 3d 332, 347-348) .

The court briefly discussed the hospital's contention that the physician's nondelegable duty of removing sponges from the patient relieved the hospital of liability. The physician's nondelegable duty, held the court, was distinct from the hospital's independent negligence regarding the sponge-counting procedures. The court stated that the hospital could not escape liability for its independent negligence in failing to devise adequate preoperative sponge-counting procedures, or for the negligent carrying out of those procedures by the employee nurse (128 Cal. App. 3d 332, 349) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Direct Supervision and Control

In Armato v. Baden (1999) 71 Cal. App. 4th 885, 84 Cal. Rptr. 2d 294 , the plaintiff, who was injured through the negligent treatment of a physician assistant employed by a corporate medical group, brought suit against four doctors who were working part-time as independent contractors for the group. The plaintiff alleged that even though the defendants had never met or treated the plaintiff or supervised the physician assistant's treatment of her, the fact that they allowed their names to be used in connection with the group led the plaintiff to believe that the physician assistant was a medical doctor and she would not have allowed him to treat her if she had known that he was not. Summary judgments were entered in favor of the defendants, and the plaintiff appealed. The court of appeal upheld the summary judgments. The court held that non-treating, non-consulting physicians who are independent contractors of a corporate medical group cannot be held vicariously liable for injuries sustained by a patient of the corporation while being treated by a physician assistant, regardless of whether the names of the physicians may have been included on the door or appointment cards of the corporation. The court also rejected the plaintiff's theory that the defendants could be directly liable for failing to supervise the assistant, because the plaintiff was not a patient of the defendants nor were the defendants consulted specifically as to the treatment of the plaintiff (71 Cal. App. 4th 885, 894-897) . Finally, the court also concluded that, under the facts, there was no basis for finding that an ostensible partnership existed under which the defendants could be held liable as partners (71 Cal. App. 4th 885, 897-899) .

In Thomas v. Intermedics Orthopedics, Inc. (1996) 47 Cal. App. 4th 957, 55 Cal. Rptr. 2d 197 , a jury found both an orthopedic surgeon and a prosthetic supplier negligent after an operation to replace a broken component of a hip prosthesis. During the middle of the surgery it was discovered that the supplier did not have available the type of prosthetic device the surgeon believed he had ordered. Surgery proceeded using a substitute device, resulting in an unstable fit. The patient sued and received an award of damages from both the surgeon and the supplier. The supplier then appealed, contending that the trial court should have issued a "captain of the ship" instruction which would have authorized the jury to find the surgeon 100 percent liable for both his own and the supplier's negligence. However, the court of appeal stated that the "captain of the ship" doctrine has never been applied to persons other that medical personnel lending hands-on assistance during surgery (47 Cal. App. 4th 957, 966) . In this case, the supplier was not part of the medical team actively assisting the surgeon. Furthermore, the negligence did not occur during the surgery, but rather occurred in the process of ordering the prosthetic devices to be available during the surgery, or in not verifying the delivery (47 Cal. App. 4th 957, 969) . The court thus affirmed the judgment which assessed liability at 50 percent each for the surgeon and the supplier.

In Marvulli v. Elshire (1972) 27 Cal. App. 3d 180, 103 Cal. Rptr. 461 , plaintiff was injured as the result of an adverse reaction to an anesthetic and sued the operating physician under the doctrine of respondeat superior for the negligence of the anesthesiologist and attending nurse. The court of appeal affirmed a judgment for defendant physician, approvingthe trial court's refusal to instruct the jury that the physician could be held vicariously liable for the negligence of the anesthesiologist and nurse. The court found no evidence to support a finding that the physician had control over, or the right to control, the nurse's and anesthesiologist's failure to inform him of the patient's condition during surgery (27 Cal. App. 3d 180, 187) . The court noted that an opposite finding would have the unwanted result of forcing one specialist to supervise another specialty in which great expertise was required (27 Cal. App. 3d 180, 187) .

§ 175.36 Opposing Contention That Physician Is Liable for Professional Negligence--Action Does Not Arise Out of Breach of Duty Within Scope of Employment

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities or in a trial or appellate brief.]

NO CAUSE OF ACTION FOR MEDICAL MALPRACTICE AGAINST A PHYSICIAN ARISES UNLESS THERE HAS BEEN A BREACH OF THE DUTY OF CARE OWED TO THE PATIENT BY THE PHYSICIAN WITHIN THE SCOPE OF THE PATIENT-PHYSICIAN RELATIONSHIP.

A. Professional Negligence Defined. "Professional negligence," as this term applies to health care providers, is uniformly defined throughout the codes as a negligent act or omission to act in the rendering of professional services, which act or omission is the proximate cause of a personal injury or wrongful death, provided that such services are within the scope of the services for which the provider is licensed and which are not within any restriction imposed by the licensing agency or licensed hospital (see Bus. & Prof. Code § 6146(c)(3); Civ. Code §§ 3333.1(c)(2), 3333.2(c)(2); Code Civ. Proc. §§ 340.5(2), 364(f)(2), 667.7(e)(4)).

B. Requirement That Act or Omission to Constitute Professional Negligence Be Within Scope of Patient-Physician Relationship. In accordance with this definition of professional negligence, an action for the professional negligence of a physician must arise out of a breach of the duty of care owed to the patient by the physician within the scope of the patient-physician relationship (Atienza v. Taub (1987) 194 Cal. App. 3d 388, 392, 239 Cal. Rptr. 454).

C. Physician's Duty of Care. The duty of care owed by a physician to a patient arises in the context of the physician's effort to accomplish the purpose for which the physician is employed (Atienza v. Taub (1987) 194 Cal. App. 3d 388, 391, 239 Cal. Rptr. 454).

[Optional] D. Sexual Relations With Patient. A physician who induces a patient to enter sexual relations is liable for professional negligence medical malpractice only if the physician engaged in the sexual conduct on the pretext that it was a necessary part of the treatment for which the patient sought out the physician. Conversely, a patient who consults a physician for treatment for a physical disorder and is induced by the physician to have sexual relations, which are in no way represented as being in furtherance of the medical treatment, has no cause of action against the physician for professional negligence medical malpractice (Atienza v. Taub (1987) 194 Cal. App. 3d 388, 391-394, 239 Cal. Rptr. 454).

[2] Comments

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a physician is not liable for medical malpractice for any act or omission that was not within the scope of the patient-physician relationship.

This form may be combined, when appropriate, with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue. For example, they may be set forth in a memorandum of points and authorities in support of a general demurrer to a complaint by the patient against the physician or a motion for judgment on the pleadings when the complaint shows on its face that the act or omission was not within the scope of the patient-physician relationship or, if it does not so appear, in a memorandum of points and authorities in support of the physician's motion for summary judgment. The points and authorities in this form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Requirement That Act or Omission to Constitute Professional Negligence Be Within Scope of Patient-Physician Relationship

Atienza v. Taub (1987) 194 Cal. App. 3d 388, 239 Cal. Rptr. 454 , was an action by a former patient against a physician for damages for medical malpractice and intentional infliction of emotional distress arising out of sexual relations she allegedly was induced to engage in with the physician during the course of her treatment. Plaintiff alleged she went to defendant for treatment for phlebitis allegedly sustained as the result of an industrial injury, and that during the course of the treatment defendant seduced her into having sexual relations. She alleged that by initiating a sexual relationship with her while she was under his care defendant failed to adequately care for and treat her by abusing her psychologically while purportedly treating her physically. She also alleged in the emotional distress cause of action that defendant's conduct constituted a conscious and reckless disregard for the risk to her health and well-being entitling her to punitive damages. Defendant's demurrer to the complaint was sustained as to the professional negligence cause of action and overruled as to the emotional distress cause of action. Defendant secured the issuance of an alternative writ of mandate pursuant to which the trial court vacated its earlier order to the extent it overruled the demurrer and ordered the demurrer sustained without leave to amend. The trial court then dismissed the action.

The court of appeal affirmed. After quoting in pertinent part the provisions of Bus. & Prof. Code § 6146(c)(3) defining "professional negligence," the court said that in accordance with that definition, an action for professional negligence of a physician arises out of the breach of the duty of care owed to the patient by the physician within the scope of the patient-physician relationship (194 Cal. App. 3d 388, 392) .

[b] Physician's Duty of Care

The facts and procedural background of Atienza v. Taub (1987) 194 Cal. App. 3d 388, 239 Cal. Rptr. 454 , are discussed in § 175.36[3][a]. In affirming the judgment of dismissal, the court stated that the duty of care owed by a physician to a patient arises in the context of the physician's effort to accomplish the purpose for which the physician is employed (194 Cal. App. 3d 388, 391) .

[c] Sexual Relations With Patient

The facts and procedural background of Atienza v. Taub (1987) 194 Cal. App. 3d 388, 239 Cal. Rptr. 454 , are discussed in § 175.36[3][a]. In affirming the judgment of dismissal, the court said that whether a complaint alleging that a physician initiated a sexual relationship with his patient during the time he was treating her for a physical disorder states a cause of action for professional negligence medical malpractice turns on whether the sexual relationship was initiated by the physician under the guise of treatment of the patient. The relevant authorities agree that a physician who induces a patient to enter into sexual relations is liable for professional negligence only if the physician engaged in the sexual conduct on the pretext that it was a necessary part of the treatment for which the patient had sought out the physician (194 Cal. App. 3d 388, 391, 393) . The court pointed out that the patient did not so allege, but instead sought to combine the care given to her by the defendant for her phlebitis and the emotionally destructive effect of her romantic and sexual involvement with him under the rubric of "treatment" simply because the two things took place over the same period of time (194 Cal. App. 3d 388, 393) . The court observed that plaintiff did not allege that she was induced to have sexual relations with defendant in furtherance of her treatment and that, essentially, plaintiff complained that she had an unhappy affair with a man who happened to be her doctor (194 Cal. App. 3d 388, 393) . This, said the court, was plainly insufficient to make out a cause of action for professional negligence (194 Cal. App. 3d 388, 393-394) .

The court also rejected the cause of action for intentional infliction of emotional distress on the ground that it was in effect an action for seduction, an action that has been abolished with respect to persons over the age of legal consent by Civ. Code § 43.5(c) (194 Cal. App. 3d 388, 394) .

NOTE:

The same court later ruled that the pretext of treatment is an essential element of the cause of action, whether the action is against a psychiatrist or a doctor with a different specialty, but that the pretext need not be expressly stated by the defendant [see McNall v. Summers (1994) 25 Cal. App. 4th 1300, 1313-1314, 30 Cal. Rptr. 2d 914] . Thus, when a psychiatrist allegedly responded to a patient's expression of feelings of sadness and loneliness by engaging in the act of sexual intercourse with her, the patient stated a cause of action for malpractice because the surrounding circumstances indicated that a reasonable person in the patient's position could have interpreted the psychiatrist's actions as a component of the treatment process. The patient's expert witness testified that the psychiatrist had mishandled the so-called "transference phenomenon" by taking advantage of a vulnerable patient whose feelings for other people had been displaced onto him. The court pointed out that a patient who is being treated for psychological problems is at greater risk of becoming dependent on a doctor and is therefore more susceptible to emotional exploitation. However, Civ.Code § 43.93, enacted in 1987 (Stats. 1987, ch. 1474) and operative January 1, 1988, provides a cause of action against a psychotherapist (defined as including, among others, a physician specializing in the practice of psychiatry) for sexual contact (defined as including, among other things, sexual intercourse) with a patient or former patient even when the contact was not represented to be a part of the patient's treatment [see Civ. Code § 43.93(b)(1), (2)].

[a] Requirement That Act or Omission to Constitute Professional Negligence Be Within Scope of Patient-Physician Relationship

In Smith v. Pust (1993) 19 Cal. App. 4th 263, 23 Cal. Rptr. 2d 364 , the plaintiff brought a negligence claim against a therapist who had sexual relations with the plaintiff's wife, a patient of the therapist. The court of appeal affirmed summary judgment for defendant because there was no professional relationship between the parties. Nor was there a sufficient connection between the allegedly negligent conduct and any professional services for which the defendant may have been engaged in that defendant was engaged to help plaintiff's wife with her own individual problems, as distinct from the couple's relationship (19 Cal. App. 4th 263, 272) .

§ 175.37 Supporting Contention That Medical Malpractice Action Based on Professional Negligence Is Barred by Statute of Limitations [Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5]--One-Year Limit After Plaintiff Discovers or Should Have Discovered Injury

[1] FORM

PLAINTIFF'S ACTION BASED ON MEDICAL NEGLIGENCE IS BARRED BY THE LAPSE OF MORE THAN ONE YEAR BETWEEN THE DATE PLAINTIFF DISCOVERED, OR THROUGH REASONABLE DILIGENCE SHOULD HAVE DISCOVERED, THE INJURY AND THE DATE OF FILING THE COMPLAINT.

A. Statutory Limitations Period. Medical malpractice actions based on professional negligence must be commenced no later than three years after the date of injury or one year after plaintiff discovers, or through the use of reasonable diligence should have discovered, the injury, whichever occurs first (Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5).

B. Commencement of Limitations Period. The one-year statute of limitations period provided by Section 340.5 of the Code of Civil Procedure commences when plaintiff either actually discovers his or her injury or could have discovered the injury through the use of reasonable diligence (Sanchez v. South Hoover Hosp. (1976) 18 Cal. 3d 93, 97, 132 Cal. Rptr. 657, 553 P.2d 1129).

C. Constructive Knowledge of Injury. The one-year statute of limitations provided by Section 340.5 of the Code of Civil Procedure begins to run when the plaintiff has notice of circumstances sufficient to put a reasonable person on inquiry or has the opportunity to obtain knowledge from sources open to his or her investigation (see Christ v. Lipsitz (1979) 99 Cal. App. 3d 894, 898, 160 Cal. Rptr. 498).

D. Legal Significance of Injury. The one-year statute of limitations provided by Section 340.5 of the Code of Civil Procedure commences when plaintiff gains actual or constructive knowledge of the injury rather than its legal significance (Graham v. Hansen (1982) 128 Cal. App. 3d 965, 972, 180 Cal. Rptr. 604).

[Optional] E. Nondisclosure by Defendant. A physician's nondisclosure of information regarding the patient's injury tolls the statute of limitations period provided by Section 340.5 of the Code of Civil Procedure only until such time as the patient discovers or should have discovered the injury (Sanchez v. South Hoover Hosp. (1976) 18 Cal. 3d 93, 99-101, 132 Cal. Rptr. 657, 553 P.2d 1129).

[Optional] F. Limitations Period Not Tolled by Legal Advice That No Legal Remedy Exists. An attorney's advice that no cause of action exists on the facts stated, given to a plaintiff with actual or constructive knowledge of the facts underlying the malpractice claim, does not delay, suspend, or toll the one-year statute of limitations period provided by Section 340.5 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Gutierrez v. Mofid (1985) 39 Cal. 3d 892, 896-902, 218 Cal. Rptr. 313, 705 P.2d 886).

[Optional] G. Limitations Period Begins Running as to All Potential Defendants. If the plaintiff suspects medical negligence on the part of someone, the one-year limitations period of Code of Civil Procedure Section 340.5 begins running as to all potential defendants, and it is not necessary that the plaintiff suspect aparticular physician for the statute to begin running as to that physician (Knowles v. Superior Court (2004) 118 Cal. App. 4th 1290, 1298-1301, 13 Cal. Rptr. 3d 700).

[Optional] H. Limitations Period Applicable to Action Against Medical Student. Medical students and other medical professionals who are authorized to practice in California, but who are specifically exempt from license or certificate requirements, are considered health care providers subject to the MICRA statute of limitations (Chosak v. Alameda County Medical Center (2007) 153 Cal. App. 4th 549, 567, 63 Cal. Rptr. 3d 184).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that plaintiff's complaint for medical negligence is barred by the statute of limitations set forth by Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 based on the expiration of the one-year period from the date when plaintiff discovered, or with the use of reasonable diligence should have discovered, the injury and its negligent cause.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should include a discussion that demonstrates either that plaintiff had actual knowledge of the injury on a date prior to one year before filing the action or that a reasonable person would have been put on notice of the injury by such a date.

[c] Separate Trial of Statute of Limitations Defense

Any party, or the court itself, may move for a separate trial of the defense that an action is barred by the statute of limitations, if the defense is pleaded in the answer. If the issue is resolved in favor of the plaintiff, the remaining issues are then tried [Code Civ. Proc. § 597.5].

[d] Burden of Proving Discovery Date

It is not entirely clear which party bears the burden of proving at trial when a plaintiff in a medical malpractice suit discovered, or through the use of reasonable diligence should have discovered, the facts constituting the alleged malpractice for purposes of applying the one-year limitations period of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5. Traditionally, most courts applying discovery provisions have held that the plaintiff bears the burden of showing that the suit was brought within the requisite time after discovery occurred, and that has been the case when applying the one-year limitations period of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 [see, e.g., Christ v. Lipsitz (1979) 99 Cal. App. 3d 894, 898, 160 Cal. Rptr. 498] . However, the California Supreme Court has held that when applying Code Civ. Proc. § 340.6(a), a similar discovery provision, to an attorney malpractice action, the burden of proof falls on the defendant [Samuels v. Mix (1999) 22 Cal. 4th 1, 5, 91 Cal. Rptr. 2d 273, 989 P.2d 701] . The Supreme Court in that opinion held that although the burden of proving discovery usually falls on the plaintiff when applying other discovery rules, such as the common law discovery rule, the burden when applying Code Civ. Proc. § 340.6(a) falls instead on the defendant. The Court reached this conclusion primarily because this particular statutory discovery rule is technically an element of the affirmative statute of limitations defense, rather than an exception used by a plaintiff to argue for a delay in accrual of the applicable limitations period [Samuels v. Mix (1999) 22 Cal. 4th 1, 10, 91 Cal. Rptr. 2d 273, 989 P.2d 701 ; see Evid. Code § 500 (party generally has burden of proof as to each essential fact of claim or defense that party asserts)]. Although the Supreme Court in Samuels did not specifically address the medical malpractice statute of limitations, the pertinent language of the two statutes is virtually identical, suggesting that the Court would reach the same conclusion and impose the burden of proof on the defendant who asserts that the action was barred by the one-year limitations period.

The points and authorities in § 175.43 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose the contention that an action is barred by the statute of limitations supported by this memorandum.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Commencement of Limitations Period

In Sanchez v. South Hoover Hosp. (1976) 18 Cal. 3d 93, 132 Cal. Rptr. 657, 553 P.2d 1129 , plaintiff sued for injuries that occurred during childbirth, and defendants moved for summary judgment on the ground that plaintiff had failed to file the action within one year after her discovery of the injury as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5. The trial court granted summary judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appealed, contending that defendants had failed to disclose facts on which the complaint was based and that this nondisclosure tolled the statute of limitations (18 Cal. 3d 93, 96) .

The Supreme Court rejected plaintiff's argument and affirmed the judgment, holding that plaintiff had discovered her injury prior to one year before she filed the complaint. An action for medical malpractice based on professional negligence is barred after one year from the date a plaintiff either discovers an injury and its negligent cause or should discover the injury through the use of reasonable diligence (18 Cal. 3d 93, 97) .The Court noted that a plaintiff's duty of diligence may be lessened during the continuance of the physician-patient relationship, but in this case, over a year had elapsed since termination of that relationship and its deterrent effect on plaintiff's ability to discover her injury. Furthermore, the Court noted that plaintiff's own recognition of her symptoms and admissions that she did not accept defendant's assurances regarding her condition demonstrated her knowledge of the injury prior to the one-year period (18 Cal. 3d 93, 102) .

[b] Constructive Knowledge of Injury

In Christ v. Lipsitz (1979) 99 Cal. App. 3d 894, 160 Cal. Rptr. 498 , plaintiff sued for damages resulting from the negligent performance of a vasectomy that resulted in an unwanted childbirth. The complaint was filed over one year after plaintiff's discovery of the pregnancy. Defendants demurred on the ground that the complaint was barred by the one-year statute of limitations period, and the trial court sustained the demurrer without leave to amend.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment, holding that the one-year period commenced on plaintiff's discovery of the pregnancy (99 Cal. App. 3d 894, 898) . The court held that the statute begins to run when plaintiff has notice of circumstances sufficient to put a reasonable person on inquiry or has the opportunity to obtain knowledge from sources open to his or her investigation, regarding the injury. When the wife of a supposedly sterile man gets pregnant, noted the court, that man is put on inquiry that he may not be sterile and may then confirm his suspicion with tests to ascertain the cause of the condition (99 Cal. App. 3d 894, 898) .

[c] Legal Significance of Injury

In Graham v. Hansen (1982) 128 Cal. App. 3d 965, 180 Cal. Rptr. 604 , plaintiff filed a negligence action more than two years after performance of a gastric examination that allegedly caused her injuries. The trial court granted defendant's motion for summary judgment on the ground that plaintiff had failed to file her action within one year of her discovery of the injury, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment of dismissal, finding that plaintiff had sufficient facts to put her on inquiry more than one year prior to the time she filed her complaint. The court rejected plaintiff's contention that the statute proceeded to run only when she realized she had a viable cause of action against defendant, 24 months after the alleged malpractice. This contention, stated the court, ignores the well-settled principle that ignorance of a legal theory of recovery is irrelevant to the limitations period (128 Cal. App. 3d 965, 972) . The court noted that the occurrence of a serious injury during a physical examination is sufficient to place a reasonable person on inquiry that the physician might have been at fault, and that such a cognizable event, rather than knowledge of its legal significance, is what starts the running of the statute of limitations (128 Cal. App. 3d 965, 973-974) .

The facts and procedural background of Sanchez v. South Hoover Hosp. (1976) 18 Cal. 3d 93, 132 Cal. Rptr. 657, 553 P.2d 1129 , are discussed in § 175.37[3][a]. The plaintiff contended that the statute of limitations was tolled by defendants' nondisclosure of facts relating to her condition. The Court rejected her contention, holding that the tolling provision of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5, which suspends the limitations period for nondisclosure and certain other types of misconduct by defendants, did not apply to the one-year period following actual or constructive discovery of the injury by plaintiff (18 Cal. 3d 93, 96) . The Court supported its holding both by noting that the language of the statute specifically links the tolling provision to the three-year limitation period only, and by analogy to the principle of fraudulent concealment. The latter, stated the Court, held that a defendant's concealment of a cause of action against him or her tolls the applicable statute of limitations only until the plaintiff independently discovers, or with reasonable diligence should have discovered, the claim. This rule is applied even in those cases in which there was a fiduciary duty of disclosure imposed on defendant (18 Cal. 3d 93, 99) . Such principles, held the Court, apply equally to medical malpractice actions (18 Cal. 3d 93, 100) . The Court qualified its ruling by noting that in cases in which the defendant physician is the only possible source of information regarding an injury, then the statute will be tolled until disclosure. In this particular case, however, plaintiff had other sources through which to ascertain her cause of action (18 Cal. 3d 93, 100) .

[e] Limitations Period Not Tolled by Legal Advice That No Legal Remedy Exists

In Gutierrez v. Mofid (1985) 39 Cal. 3d 892, 218 Cal. Rptr. 313, 705 P.2d 886 , plaintiff underwent an operation after having given consent for exploratory surgery and possible removal of a tumor or her appendix. The surgeons, however, performed a complete hysterectomy, alleging afterward that they did so to avoid risking her life. Four months later, after receiving opinions from medical personnel that the surgery had been excessive, plaintiff consulted a medical malpractice attorney, who told her there was no provable malpractice. Plaintiff continued to discuss the injury with others, who advised her to bring suit. Almost two years after the operation, plaintiff consulted a second firm of attorneys, who brought the action immediately. Plaintiff alleged that the action was timely filed because the first attorney she consulted discouraged litigation, and she did not consult another attorney until after the period had expired. The trial court granted summary judgment in favor of defendants, who contended that a medical malpractice action must be commenced within one year after the patient discovers, or through the use of reasonable diligence should have discovered the injury, pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5. Plaintiff appealed.

The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that the one-year "discovery" limitations period for medical malpractice is not delayed, suspended, or tolled when a plaintiff with actual or constructive knowledge of the facts underlying the malpractice claim is told by an attorney that he or she has no legal remedy (39 Cal. 3d 892, 902) . The Court noted that "injury" within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 means both a person's physical condition and its negligent cause. Therefore, a patient who knows, or by reasonable diligence should have known, that he or she has been harmed through professional negligence has one year to bring suit (39 Cal. 3d 892, 896) . The evidence clearly showed that plaintiff both knew of her injury, and suspected malpractice,almost immediately after the operation. The Court rejected plaintiff's contention that her reliance on the attorney's advice satisfied her duty of diligent inquiry, and that the limitations period began to run only when the second attorney advised her that she had grounds to bring suit. The Court therefore disapproved the holding in Jones v. Queen of the Valley Hosp. (1979) 90 Cal. App. 3d 700, 153 Cal. Rptr. 662 , to the extent that it is inconsistent with that view (39 Cal. 3d 892, 897, 902) . The uniform California rule is that a limitations period dependent on discovery of the cause of action begins to run no later than the time the plaintiff learns, or should have learned, the facts essential to the claim. It is irrelevant that the plaintiff is ignorant of a legal remedy or the legal theories underlying a cause of action. Therefore, if one has suffered appreciable harm and knows or suspects that professional error is its cause, the fact that an attorney has not yet advised suit does not postpone commencement of the limitations period (39 Cal. 3d 892, 897-898) . For purposes of the statute of limitations, the risk that discouraging legal advice will lead to loss of a cause of action must fall on the plaintiff who obtains that advice, rather than on a wholly unnvolved defendant. In that situation, the right to be free of stale claims prevails over the right to prosecute them, and plaintiff's remedy is a suit for legal malpractice (39 Cal. 3d 892, 900) .

[f] Limitations Period Begins Running as to All Potential Defendants

In Knowles v. Superior Court (2004) 118 Cal. App. 4th 1290, 13 Cal. Rptr. 3d 700 , the plaintiffs were the wife and children of a man who died in the hospital four days after being treated for renal artery stenosis and three days after the surgical repair of an abdominal aortic aneurysm. The two procedures were performed by different physicians. The plaintiffs suspected medical negligence as the cause of death shortly after the death. Less than a year after the death, the plaintiffs brought a wrongful death action against the hospital and the physicians who performed the surgery to repair the aneurysm. While that case was pending, the plaintiffs consulted with another physician about the death, and this physician suggested that the physician who performed the procedure to treat the renal artery stenosis may have done something during that procedure to cause internal bleeding. Shortly thereafter, the plaintiffs filed a separate wrongful death action against the physician who treated the stenosis, and dismissed with prejudice the original action filed against the other defendants. The new defendant filed a motion for summary judgment as to the spouse and two of the children on the grounds that their action was brought more than a year after the plaintiffs suspected medical malpractice was the cause of death. This defendant also argued that the fourth plaintiff, a child of the decedent who was mentally disabled, could not prove damages because that child believed that his father was still alive. The trial court denied the summary judgment motion, and the defendant filed a petition for writ of mandate.

The court of appeal granted the writ as to the decedent's spouse and the two non-disabled children. The court noted that the plaintiffs' own admissions established that those plaintiffs each suspected that the death was caused by medical negligence shortly after the death. Therefore, the one-year statute of limitations began to run as to those plaintiffs at that time, which was more than a year before the action was filed against this defendant. The court rejected the plaintiffs' argument that the statute of limitations as to this defendant did not begin to run until the plaintiffs suspected that this particular defendant may have been negligent. The court noted that under the plain language of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5, it is the discovery of "the injury," rather than the discovery of a particular defendant's negligence, that triggers the limitations period. The plaintiffs suspected shortly after the death that it may have been caused by someone's medical negligence, they had one year from that point to bring suit, and it was up to the plaintiffs to investigate in a timely manner and bring a timely lawsuit (118 Cal. App. 4th 1290, 1298-1301) .

The court also noted that the proper procedure for adding defendants after the limitations period has expired is to include Doe defendants in a timely filed action, and then substitute the new defendants for the Doe defendants. Although the plaintiffs in this action had included Doe defendants in the initial, timely lawsuit, the trial court had dismissed the Doe defendants about six months before the second action was filed, for reasons not revealed in the court of appeal opinion (118 Cal. App. 4th 1290, 1301 & n.6). Therefore, the plaintiffs were apparently left without the ability to add the new defendant in place of a Doe defendant in the original action.

[g] Limitations Period Applicable to Action Against Medical Student

In Chosak v. Alameda County Medical Center (2007) 153 Cal. App. 4th 549, 63 Cal. Rptr. 3d 184 , plaintiff was injured while receiving a routine eye examination when her ankle was caught between the examination chair as it was being raised and the metal arm of a stationary examination device. The examination was being conducted by an optometry student who was serving an internship at the facility. Plaintiff sued the student and the facility, as well as medical professionals who subsequently treated, and allegedly misdiagnosed, the injury. The trial court sustained demurrers for all defendants on the basis of the one-year statute of limitations of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5. Plaintiff appealed the dismissal of her claims against the the optometry student who raised the eye examination chair, arguing that because the student was not licensed or certified to practice medicine, she was not a health care practitioner under the definition provided by MICRA. As such, plaintiff argued, the action against the student was timely under the two-year limitations period otherwise applicable.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court held that medical students and other medical professionals who are authorized to practice in California, but who are specifically exempt from license or certificate requirements, are considered health care providers subject to the MICRA statute of limitations (153 Cal. App. 4th 549, 567) . The court noted that while the statutory definition of health care provider could be interpreted to apply only to practitioners who have actual licenses or certificates, it was equally plausible to conclude that practitioners who are exempt from needing an actual license or certificate, but who are otherwise lawfully authorized to practice, are also included. The court concluded that medical students lawfully practicing should be included within the definition because (1) the legislative history suggested that Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 was intended to apply to all medical malpractice actions, (2) the concern with reducing the cost of malpractice insurance underlying MICRA would be frustrated by excluding medical students and others exempt from the licensing requirements, and (3) there was no apparent reason to exclude lawfully practicing, but exempt, persons from MICRA coverage, as they provide the same types of services as licensed physiciansand do so under their supervision (153 Cal. App. 4th 549, 566-567) .

[a] Commencement of Limitation Period

In Artal v. Allen (2003) 111 Cal. App. 4th 273, 3 Cal. Rptr. 3d 458 , the plaintiff brought an action for malpractice against the anesthesiologist who assisted in her pelvic surgery, alleging that the defendant's negligence during intubation caused the plaintiff to suffer a thyroid cartilage fracture. The plaintiff suffered persistent throat pain after her surgery, but 18 months of visiting numerous doctors and specialists failed to reveal the cause of her pain, although she admitted to having suspicions that the pain was caused by the intubation process. However, it was not until the plaintiff underwent exploratory surgery that she learned of the thyroid cartilage damage and that it was probably caused by the defendant's negligence. The plaintiff filed her malpractice action within one year after the date that she underwent the exploratory surgery, but the trial court granted summary judgment for the defendant on statute of limitations grounds, concluding that the plaintiff's admitted suspicions before that date that the intubation caused her pain was sufficient to trigger the running of the one-year statute of limitations period of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5. The court of appeal reversed, reaffirming that the limitations period begins to run when the plaintiff either discovers the injury or reasonably could have discovered the injury through the use of reasonable diligence (111 Cal. App. 4th 273, 278) . However, the court noted that the plaintiff must have discovered both the physical injury and its negligent cause to trigger the limitations period. Because the plaintiff exercised reasonable diligence in seeking the cause of her throat pain and did not have evidence of its negligent cause until the exploratory surgery, that surgery was the event that triggered the running of the one-year limitations period, and the plaintiff's action was timely filed (111 Cal. App. 4th 273, 279-281) .

In Kleefeld v. Superior Court (1994) 25 Cal. App. 4th 1680, 31 Cal. Rptr. 2d 12 , the plaintiff contacted a state disciplinary board and expressed his concern that his wife's death might have resulted from improper chiropractic care. The board investigated the matter and took disciplinary action against the treating chiropractor. In ruling that the plaintiff's subsequent malpractice action against the chiropractor was time-barred by the one-year limitations period in Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5, the court of appeal held that the statute of limitations was not tolled during the time the disciplinary board looked into the case (25 Cal. App. 4th 1680, 1685) .

In Dolan v. Borelli (1993) 13 Cal. App. 4th 816, 16 Cal. Rptr. 2d 714 , a surgery patient brought a medical malpractice action against the physician more than two years after experiencing post-surgery problems. The court of appeal affirmed dismissal on the ground that the action was time-barred under Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5. The court stated that the statute creates two separate statutes of limitations, both of which must be satisfied if plaintiff is to timely file a medical malpractice action: (1) plaintiff must file within one year after first discovering the injury and negligent cause of injury; and (2) plaintiff must file within three years after first experiencing harm from the injury (13 Cal. App. 4th 816, 824-825) .

Steingart v. White (1988) 198 Cal. App. 3d 406, 243 Cal. Rptr. 678 , was a medical malpractice action arising out of defendant physician's failure in 1982 to diagnose a lump in plaintiff's breast as cancerous. Plaintiff noticed no change in the lump until 1985, at which time another doctor performed a lumpectomy and advised her that she had "Stage II" breast cancer. She then underwent a radical mastectomy. In 1986, more than four years after defendant's examination of plaintiff but within one year of the diagnosis of breast cancer, plaintiff filed a complaint for medical malpractice. The trial court granted defendant's motion for summary judgment on the ground the action was barred by Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5, and plaintiff appealed. The court of appeal said that Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 presents two time bars within which a plaintiff claiming medical malpractice must file a complaint, one of which is within one year after the plaintiff discovers, or should have discovered the injury (198 Cal. App. 3d 406, 412) , and that in order for the one-year limitation period to be triggered, a plaintiff must be aware of both the injury and its negligent cause (198 Cal. App. 3d 406, 415) . The court of appeal reversed the judgment on the grounds that, under the facts presented, there remained at minimum a triable issue of fact as to whether plaintiff exercised reasonable diligence after the purported misdiagnosis, that reasonable minds could easily conclude that she did, and that because the complaint was filed within one year of the date plaintiff discovered her injury and was operated on, it must be deemed filed under the one-year prong of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 (198 Cal. App. 3d 406, 416) .

[b] Constructive Knowledge of Injury

In Rose v. Fife (1989) 207 Cal. App. 3d 760, 255 Cal. Rptr. 440 , plaintiff, who suffered injuries as a result of her use of a Copper 7 intrauterine birth control device (IUD), brought a malpractice action against the physician who prescribed the device. In March 1983, plaintiff had been hospitalized with a pelvic infection, at which time two doctors told her the infection was caused by the IUD. By that time, she had also heard in the news or read that IUDs caused infections. However, plaintiff claimed that she didn't know that her particular IUD, the Copper 7, caused her injuries until she read an article about the Copper 7 in 1985. Plaintiff filed her complaint in February 1986, more than one year after her hospitalization for the infection. The trial court granted the physician's motion for summary judgment on the ground that the action was barred by Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5, and the court of appeal affirmed. The court found that plaintiff, at the time of her hospitalization, had a general mistrust and suspicion about IUDs per se and about their use by women who had not had children. Thus, if at the time of her hospitalization, plaintiff did not truly suspect that her injury was caused by her physicians' wrongfully prescribing an IUD for her, she reasonably should have suspected wrongdoing. The court held as a matter of law that a reasonable person would have suspected wrongdoing by the physician and would have inquired, rather than waiting for the facts to come to her (207 Cal. App. 3d 760, 769-770) .

§ 175.38 Supporting Contention That Medical Malpractice Action Based on Professional Negligence Is Barred by Statute of Limitations [Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5]--Three-Year Limit After Date of Injury

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF'S ACTION BASED ON MEDICAL NEGLIGENCE IS BARRED BY THE LAPSE OF MORE THAN THREE YEARS BETWEEN THE DATE OF INJURY AND THE DATE OF FILING THE COMPLAINT.

A. Statutory Limitations Period. [See § 175.37, Paragraph A.]

B. Commencement of Limitations Period. The three-year statute of limitations period provided by Section 340.5 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides the outer limit that terminates all medical malpractice liability and commences to run when the patient is aware of the physical manifestation of his or her injury without regard to awareness of the negligent cause, except when tolled by any of three situations enumerated in the statute (Garabet v. Superior Court (2007) 151 Cal. App. 4th 1538, 1545, 1549-1551, 60 Cal. Rptr. 3d 800 ; Hills v. Aronsohn (1984) 152 Cal. App. 3d 753, 760-762, 199 Cal. Rptr. 816).

C. Both One and Three-Year Statute of Limitation Provisions Must Be Satisfied. Both the one-year and three-year statute of limitations periods provided by Section 340.5 of the Code of Civil Procedure must be satisfied to bring a medical malpractice action. Thus, if the action is brought within one year of reasonable discovery by the plaintiff, it is nonetheless barred if the three-year period is not also satisfied (Hills v. Aronsohn (1984) 152 Cal. App. 3d 753, 757-758, 199 Cal. Rptr. 816).

[Optional] D. Foreign Body Tolling Provision Not Applicable to Substance Intentionally Introduced for Therapeutic Purpose. The three-year statute of limitations period provided by Section 340.5 of the Code of Civil Procedure may be tolled by any of the exceptional circumstances enumerated in the statute, including the presence of foreign body in the person injured. However, the foreign body tolling provision was not intended to cover situations when a foreign substance was intentionally introduced into the patient's body. Moreover, this provision is expressly inapplicable in a situation when the foreign body was introduced for a therapeutic or diagnostic purpose or effect (Hills v. Aronsohn (1984) 152 Cal. App. 3d 753, 763-765, 199 Cal. Rptr. 816).

[Optional] E. Foreign Body Tolling Provision Only Applicable to Medically Inserted Objects. The foreign-body exception of Section 340.5 of the Code of Civil Procedure applies only to medically inserted objects that have no therapeutic or diagnostic purpose and that are left in the patient's body. It does not apply to fragments of objects left in a patient's body after operations for their removal (Wallace v. Hibner (1985) 171 Cal. App. 3d 1042, 1047, 217 Cal. Rptr. 748).

[Optional] F. Intentional Concealment Tolling Provision Not Applicable to Lack of Informed Consent or Mere Continuation of Prior Nondisclosure of Information. Intentional concealment requires more than either a lack of informed consent or a mere continuation of prior nondisclosure of information (Trantafello v. Medical Ctr. of Tarzana (1986) 182 Cal. App. 3d 315, 321, 227 Cal. Rptr. 84).

[Optional] G. Intentional Concealment Required to Be That of Health-Care Provider. In order to toll the three-year period because of intentional concealment, the intentional concealment must be by the health-care provider (Aronson v. Superior Court (1987) 191 Cal. App. 3d 294, 296 fn. 2, 236 Cal. Rptr. 347).

[Optional] H. Action Against Public Entity Must Meet Three-Year Time Limitation. A plaintiff suing a public entity or employee for medical malpractice must meet the three-year limitations period of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5, and failure to do so will provide a limitations defense for the defendant even if the plaintiff's action is otherwise timely under the Government Claims Act (Roberts v. County of Los Angeles (2009) 175 Cal. App. 4th 474, 481, 96 Cal. Rptr. 3d 60).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that plaintiff's complaint for medical negligence is barred by the statute of limitations set forth by Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 based on the expiration of the three-year period from the date of plaintiff's injury. The form includes an optional paragraph for use in support of a contention that the foreign-body exception enumerated by Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5, which tolls the three-year period, does not apply to a substance intentionally introduced for a therapeutic purpose (Paragraph D), an optional paragraph for use in support of a contention that the foreign-body exception does not apply when the foreign body is a fragment of objects left in a patient's body after operations for their removal (Paragraph E), and an optional paragraph for use in support of a contention that the intentional concealment exception of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 does not apply when the alleged concealment was merely a failure to obtain informed consent or a continuation of a prior nondisclosure of information (Paragraph F).

[b] Argument

[c] Separate Trial of Statute of Limitations Defense

Any party, or the court itself, may move for a separate trial of the defense that an action is barred by a statute of limitations if the defense is pleaded in the answer. If the issue is resolved in favor of the plaintiff, the remaining issues are then tried [Code Civ. Proc. § 597.5].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Commencement of Limitations Period

In Garabet v. Superior Court (2007) 151 Cal. App. 4th 1538, 60 Cal. Rptr. 3d 800 , plaintiff underwent LASIK eye surgery on the advice of an eye clinic after undergoing a thorough eye examination, at which time he was diagnosed with astigmatism. Almost immediately after the surgery, plaintiff began to experience a number of complications, although all of the symptoms plaintiff experienced had been described to plaintiff before the surgery as potential risks. Although plaintiff was assured that the symptoms were normal, plaintiff continued to see the surgeon for approximately two-and-a-half years in an attempt to have the complications corrected, but without success. Plaintiff ceased his treatment with the surgeon and resorted to corrective lenses. Approximately four years later, plaintiff was examined by a different eye doctor, who told plaintiff that his recurring vision problems were caused by the original surgery. This doctor told plaintiff that he should not have been considered a candidate for the LASIK procedure because of the shape of his cornea. Until that time, plaintiff had believed that his problems were caused by his astigmatism. Plaintiff sued the surgeon and the eye clinic for medical malpractice. Defendants argued on motion for summary judgment that the lawsuit was barred by the three-year limitations period of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5. The trial court denied defendants' motion and they filed a petition for writ of mandate.

The court of appeal granted the petition and ordered the trial court to grant summary judgment in favor of defendants. Because plaintiff's suit was filed seven-and-a-half years after his surgery and his injury manifested almost immediately thereafter, the court held that the action was barred by limitations. The court noted that under Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5, the maximum limitations period for a medical malpractice action is three years from the date of injury, unless tolled for fraud, intentional concealment, or the presence of nontherapeutic and nondiagnostic foreign bodies. For these purposes, the limitations period begins to run once there is a manifestation of injury in some significant way (151 Cal. App. 4th 1538, 1545) . The court noted that plaintiff in the present case was alleging only medical misfeasance, not a lack of informed consent, fraud, intentional concealment, or the presence of nontherapeutic and nondiagnostic foreign bodies. Because plaintiff experienced the damaging effects of the alleged malpractice almost immediately after the surgery, and in fact complained to defendants about the symptoms at that time and for several years after, plaintiff was required to bring his malpractice action within three years after first experiencing these problems (151 Cal. App. 4th 1538, 1549-1550) . Plaintiff argued that, under existing case law, because the symptoms he experienced had been described prior to surgery as possible side effects, the limitations period was not triggered by these symptoms. The court of appeal rejected this argument, however, noting that this rule applied only in cases alleging failure to obtain informed consent. The rule did not apply in other types of malpractice cases, such as plaintiff's claim that he was negligently diagnosed as a candidate for LASIK surgery (151 Cal. App. 4th 1538, 1551) .

In Hills v. Aronsohn (1984) 152 Cal. App. 3d 753, 199 Cal. Rptr. 816 , plaintiff filed a medical malpractice action for injuries resulting from defendant physician's alleged negligent injection of liquid silicone in plaintiff's breasts. Defendant, who had administered the injections almost eight years before the action was filed, was granted summary judgment on the ground that the action was time barred. Plaintiff appealed the summary judgment.

The court of appeal affirmed, concluding that the action had not, as a matter of law, been filed within three years after the date of injury, as required under Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 (152 Cal. App. 3d 753, 756-757, 760-763) . The court stated that the three-year limitations period of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 provides an outer limit that terminates all medical malpractice liability and held that it commences to run when the patient is aware of the physical manifestation of his or her injury without regard to awareness of the negligent cause (152 Cal. App. 3d 753, 760) . In so holding, the court construed the statutory time for commencement--that is, "date of injury"--to be not the date of the wrongful act, but the date that the injury or damaging effect of the wrongful act became apparent to the person injured (152 Cal. App. 3d 753, 762) . The court reasoned that, whereas the one-year limitation period of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 commences when the patient knows or should know of both the resulting injury and the negligent cause, the three-year period, as the outside limitation of the statute, commences when the patient discovers the resulting harm, regardless of when he or she becomes aware of the negligent cause (152 Cal. App. 3d 753, 759, 760-762) . The summary judgment was therefore proper in that plaintiff had admitted that she became aware of her injury four years before filing the action when she first experienced soreness and lumps in her breasts and sought consultation (152 Cal. App. 3d 753, 762-763) .

NOTE:

At least one court of appeal has disagreed with Hills, to the extent that Hills suggests that there is a correlation between manifestation of damage, triggering the three-year period, and the plaintiff's discovery of the damage. In that case, the court of appeal held that damage is manifested, and the three-year period triggered, when damage becomes evidenced in some significant fashion, "whether or not the patient/plaintiff actually becomes aware of the injury." The court determined that the three-year limitations period under Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 had run when the manifestations of plaintiff's injury from prior sexual abuse by a psychotherapist became apparent to hersubsequent treating physician at least four years before the filing of the complaint, even though the plaintiff herself apparently did not recognize or understand her injury until a later time, within three years of her filing of the complaint [Marriage & Family Ctr. v. Superior Court (1991) 228 Cal. App. 3d 1647, 1654-1655, 279 Cal. Rptr. 475] .

[b] Both One and Three-Year Statute of Limitation Provisions Must Be Satisfied

The facts and procedural background of Hills v. Aronsohn (1984) 152 Cal. App. 3d 753, 199 Cal. Rptr. 816 , are discussed in § 175.38[3][a]. The court of appeal began its discussion in that case by stressing the point that to be timely, a medical malpractice action must satisfy both the one-year and the three-year limitations periods under Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 (152 Cal. App. 3d 753, 758) . The court then determined that the present action was not, as a matter of law, barred by the one-year limitation period. The court reasoned that this period commences to run only when the plaintiff discovers or reasonably should have discovered both the injury and the negligent cause, and evidence in the present case disclosed a triable issue of fact as to whether the plaintiff had reasonably discovered the negligent cause, that is, defendant's manner of silicone injection, less than one year before she filed the action (152 Cal. App. 3d 753, 759-760) . However, because both limitations provisions must be satisfied, the court nonetheless affirmed the summary judgment, after holding that action failed, as a matter of law, to also satisfy the three-year limitation period (152 Cal. App. 3d 753, 762) .

[c] Foreign Body Tolling Provision Not Applicable to Substance Intentionally Introduced for Therapeutic Purpose

The facts and procedural background of Hills v. Aronsohn (1984) 152 Cal. App. 3d 753, 199 Cal. Rptr. 816 , are discussed in § 175.38[3][a]. Plaintiff argued that her action was not barred by the three-year limitation period provided by Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 because that period is expressly tolled by the presence of a foreign body in the person injured, and in her case the silicone injections qualified as such a "foreign body" (152 Cal. App. 3d 753, 763) . The court rejected this contention, noting that the foreign body tolling provision was not intended to cover situations when a substance was, as here, intentionally introduced into a body, but rather those situations involving negligent failure to remove a foreign body (152 Cal. App. 3d 753, 764-765) . The court also held that the exception expressly applied only to foreign bodies having no therapeutic or diagnostic purpose or effect, whereas here the silicone had been injected for a therapeutic purpose (152 Cal. App. 3d 753, 765) .

[d] Foreign Body Tolling Provision Only Applicable to Medically Inserted Objects

In Wallace v. Hibner (1985) 171 Cal. App. 3d 1042, 217 Cal. Rptr. 748 , plaintiff consulted defendant physician for treatment of a puncture wound caused by a sewing needle that was traumatically imbedded in her foot. Defendant inadvertently failed to remove the entire needle during the operation. Plaintiff discovered defendant's negligence thirteen years later, and filed a medical malpractice action against defendant. Defendant filed a motion for judgment on the pleadings on the ground that the action was barred by Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5. The trial court granted the motion. Plaintiff appealed, contending that the needle fragment was a foreign body within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5, and therefore the statute of limitations was tolled.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that the legislature intended the foreign body exception to apply only to medically inserted objects that have no therapeutic or diagnostic purpose and that are left in the patient's body (171 Cal. App. 3d 1042, 1047) . The court noted that by requiring the foreign body to be one that "has no therapeutic or diagnostic purpose or effect" in order to toll the statute, the legislature intended it to be an object that is surgically inserted or attached and allowed to remain (171 Cal. App. 3d 1042, 1050) .

[e] Intentional Concealment Tolling Provision Not Applicable to Lack of Informed Consent or Mere Continuation of Prior Nondisclosure of Information

In Trantafello v. Medical Ctr. of Tarzana (1986) 182 Cal. App. 3d 315, 227 Cal. Rptr. 84 , defendant physician performed a cervical diskectomy on plaintiff. In order to maintain the space between two vertebrae where the disk was removed, defendant implanted an acrylic substance. Nine months after the surgery, plaintiff experienced a swelling in his neck and a choking sensation, together with difficulty swallowing. Subsequently, a physician other than defendant performed surgery on plaintiff for bone fusion and removal of the implant. Nearly five years after the diskectomy, plaintiff filed a complaint for medical malpractice against defendant. The trial court granted defendant's motion for summary judgment on the ground the action was barred by the three-year limitations period of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5. Plaintiff appealed, contending that he raised a triable issue of fact as to whether the limitations period of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 was tolled by the "intentional concealment" provision, because defendant physician did not advise him, prior to surgery, that the surgery wouldinvolve an acrylic implant rather than a bone fusion, and because defendant did not tell plaintiff after surgery that the implant was used.

The court of appeal rejected plaintiff's contention, finding that plaintiff failed to show that defendant concealed the existence of a cause of action for either negligence or lack of informed consent (182 Cal. App. 3d 315, 322) . Plaintiff failed to show, for example, that defendant made any affirmative misrepresentations concerning the implant. The court held that intentional concealment required something more than either a lack of informed consent or a mere continuation of the prior nondisclosure that the implant was used. Furthermore, the concealment had to have occurred either at or subsequent to the time the surgery was undertaken (182 Cal. App. 3d 315, 321) .

[f] Intentional Concealment Required to Be That of Health-Care Provider

In Aronson v. Superior Court (1987) 191 Cal. App. 3d 294, 236 Cal. Rptr. 347 , a 14-year-old boy, born in 1971, sued a physician and a university for medical malpractice based on negligent prenatal and delivery care which caused the boy total paralysis and the inability to speak, through his aunt as guardian ad litem. The action was filed in 1985. Plaintiff alleged that his parents failed or refused to bring the action on his behalf. Defendants' demurrers to the complaint based on the bar of the statute of limitations were overruled, and defendants petitioned the court of appeal for a writ of mandate.

In granting the writ, but stating that the trial court could grant plaintiff leave to amend the complaint on a proper showing that the case was within a tolling exception, the court said that the statutory period is subject to tolling under Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 for (1) fraudulent collusion of a parent with a health care provider [see § 175.44], (2) intentional concealment of injury by the health care provider, or (3) presence of a foreign body in the person of the victim (191 Cal. App. 3d 294, 296) . With respect to intentional concealment, the court explained that, while the statute does not expressly say so, the intentional concealment must be by the health care provider (191 Cal. App. 3d 294, 296 n.2).

[g] Action Against Public Entity Must Meet Three-Year Time Limitation

In Roberts v. County of Los Angeles (2009) 175 Cal. App. 4th 474, 96 Cal. Rptr. 3d 60 , plaintiff suffered severe brain damage while receiving treatment at a county-owned hospital. The damage incapacitated her and necessitated that she remain hospitalized. Over three years later, plaintiff's parents were appointed conservators of the person of plaintiff. Less than three months after their appointment, they filed leave under the Government Claims Act to present a late claim for medical malpractice. This application was initially denied by the county, although the county later rescinded this denial. Thereafter, plaintiff, acting through her conservators, filed a lawsuit for medical malpractice against the county hospital. The lawsuit was filed more than four years after the incident that left plaintiff incapacitated, but within the six-month period for filing a lawsuit following acceptance of the late claim by the county, thus making the suit timely under the Government Claims Act. However, the trial court granted the county's motion for summary judgment on the grounds that the malpractice lawsuit was not filed within the three-year MICRA limitations period of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court held that the lawsuit was governed by both the time requirements of the Government Claims Act and the three-year MICRA time limitation of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5. The court noted that the time period for filing a government claim had been tolled pending appointment of a conservator, making the suit timely under the Claims Act (175 Cal. App. 4th 474, 479) . However, plaintiff's malpractice suit was not filed within the three-year MICRA limitations period. The court concluded that the two statutory limitations period were not mutually exclusive and could both be applied when the defendant is a public entity or employee. The court construed the three-year MICRA period as an outer limit by which time a malpractice lawsuit must be brought, even against a public entity or employee, and claimants are capable of meeting that limit while simultaneously meeting the time requirements of the Government Claims Act. Moreover, the court noted that applying both statutes furthers both MICRA's goal of restricting the flow of stale malpractice claims and the Claims Act goals of limiting lawsuits against government entities through tightly controlled notice provisions (175 Cal. App. 4th 474, 481) . Moreover, the court noted that failing to apply the three-year MICRA limitations period because time for bringing the action was tolled under the Government Claims Act would violate the established rule that prohibits tolling of the MICRA limitations period based on reasons not included in Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 itself (175 Cal. App. 4th 474, 484) .

[a] Commencement of Limitations Period

In Arredondo v. Regents of Univ. of Cal. (2005) 131 Cal. App. 4th 614, 31 Cal. Rptr. 3d 800 , the plaintiff was a minor who was injured during brain surgery. The plaintiff, through her representatives, conceded that her injury manifested no later than June 23, 1998, but notice of an intent to sue was not filed until June 28, 2001, more than three years after the injury first manifested. The plaintiff argued that her cause of action did not accrue until July 1, 1998, when her mother allegedly discovered the negligent cause of the plaintiff's injury. The trial court granted judgment for the defendant on the grounds that the notice of intent to sue was not timely filed, and the court of appeals agreed. The court of appeals held that both the plain language of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 and the legislature's intent defeated the plaintiff's argument. The statute clearly stated that the action must be commenced no later than three years after the date of injury, regardless of the date of discovery. Moreover, the specific intent of the legislature in enacting the statute was to place a three-year outside limit on when actions could be brought, triggered by the date of injury, not by discovery of the negligent cause of the injury (131 Cal. App. 4th 614, 618-619) .

In McNall v. Summers (1994) 25 Cal. App. 4th 1300, 30 Cal. Rptr. 2d 914 , the plaintiff sought damages for brain injuries that allegedly resulted from electroconvulsive therapy (ECT). The plaintiff experienced confusion and memory loss following the treatments but did not learn that she had suffered an embolic stroke and associated brain injuries until the stroke was diagnosed years later. The court of appeal held that the action was time-barred because the three-year limitations period set out in Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 commenced when the plaintiff experienced memory loss, even if she was not aware at that time of the actual organic injury that caused the memory loss or of the defendants' alleged negligence (25 Cal. App. 4th 1300, 1311) .

The facts and procedural background of Steingart v. White (1988) 198 Cal. App. 3d 406, 243 Cal. Rptr. 678 , are discussed in § 175.37[4][a]. Although the court of appeal reversed the summary judgment for defendant physician, the court, relying on Hills v. Aronsohn (1984) 152 Cal. App. 3d 753, 758, 199 Cal. Rptr. 816 [see § 175.37[3][a]], Larcher v. Wanless (1976) 18 Cal. 3d 646, 656 n.11, 135 Cal. Rptr. 75, 557 P.2d 507 , and Brown v. Bleiberg (1982) 32 Cal. 3d 426, 437 n.8, 186 Cal. Rptr. 228, 651 P.2d 815 , held that the event that activates the three-year limitations period is the moment the plaintiff discovers the harm caused by the alleged negligence; that is, the period is activated on the date of the damaging effect of the wrongful act rather than on the date of the act itself (198 Cal. App. 3d 406, 413) .

[b] Both One- and Three-Year Statute of Limitations Provisions Must Be Satisfied

The facts and procedural background of Steingart v. White (1988) 198 Cal. App. 3d 406, 243 Cal. Rptr. 678 , are discussed in § 175.37[4][a]. Although the court of appeal reversed the summary judgment for defendant physician, the court said that Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 presents two limitation periods, before the end of which a plaintiff claiming medicalmalpractice must file a complaint: (1) within one year after the plaintiff discovers, or should have discovered, the injury and (2) within three years after the injury, unless one of the enumerated exceptions applies (198 Cal. App. 3d 406, 412) .

[c] Foreign Body Tolling Provision Not Applicable to Substance Intentionally Introduced for Therapeutic Purposes

The facts and procedural background of Trantafello v. Medical Ctr. of Tarzana (1986) 182 Cal. App. 3d 315, 227 Cal. Rptr. 84 , are discussed in § 175.38[3][e]. The plaintiff argued that the limitations period of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 was tolled because the acrylic substance that defendant inserted between plaintiff's vertebrae constituted a "foreign body." The court of appeal affirmed on the ground that the "foreign body" provision of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 applies only when a foreign body, such as a surgical sponge, is inadvertently left in a patient (182 Cal. App. 3d 315, 319) . Therefore, even though plaintiff's expert testified in a deposition that the acrylic implant had no therapeutic effect on plaintiff and, in fact, resulted in injury to plaintiff, the expert's concession that the purpose of the implant was therapeutic in that it was intended by defendant to maintain the space between two of plaintiff's vertebrae precluded the application of the foreign body exception (182 Cal. App. 3d 315, 320) .

§ 175.39 Supporting Contention That Medical Malpractice Action Based on Professional Negligence Is Barred by Statute of Limitations [Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5]--Limitations Period Not Tolled if Notice of Intent Filed More Than 90 Days Before Expiration of One-Year Limitations Period [Code Civ. Proc. § 364(a), (d)]

[1] FORM

PLAINTIFF'S ACTION BASED ON MEDICAL MALPRACTICE IS BARRED BY THE STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS BECAUSE PLAINTIFF FAILED TO COMMENCE THE ACTION BEFORE THE END OF THE ONE-YEAR LIMITATIONS PERIOD, AND THAT PERIOD WAS NOT TOLLED PURSUANT TO SECTION 364(a) OF THE CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE BECAUSE PLAINTIFF SERVED NOTICE UNDER THAT SECTION MORE THAN 90 DAYS BEFORE THE EXPIRATION OF THE APPLICABLE STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS.

A. Filing Notice of Intent More Than 90 Days Before Expiration of Limitations Period Does Not Toll One-Year Limitations Period. If a plaintiff in a medical malpractice action files the notice of intent to sue required by Code of Civil Procedure Section 364(a) before the last 90 days of the one-year limitations period, the plaintiff is not entitled to benefit from the 90-day tolling provided under Code of Civil Procedure Section 364(d), and the action must be brought within the one-year limitations period under Code of Civil Procedure Section 340.5 (Woods v. Young (1991) 53 Cal. 3d 315, 319, 328, 279 Cal. Rptr. 613, 807 P.2d 455).

[Optional] B. Giving Second Notice of Intent Within Final 90 Days of Limitations Period Does Not Toll One-Year Limitations Period. If a 90-day notice of intent to sue is given prior to the final 90 days of the limitations period, the plaintiff cannot toll the statute of limitations by giving a second notice of intent to sue within the final 90 days of the limitations period (Bennett v. Shahhal (1999) 75 Cal. App. 4th 384, 390, 89 Cal. Rptr. 2d 272).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a defendant's contention that an action is barred by the statute of limitations. The argument is based on the ground that the one-year limitations period was not tolled under Code Civ. Proc. § 364(d) because plaintiff filed the notice of intent required by Code Civ. Proc. § 364(a) more than 90 days before the end of the one-year limitations period.

[b] Argument

[c] Separate Trial of Statute of Limitations Defense

Any party, or the court itself, may move for a separate trial of the defense that an action is barred by the statute of limitations if the defense is pleaded in the answer. If the issue is resolved in favor of the plaintiff, the remaining issues are then tried [Code Civ. Proc. § 597.5].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Filing Notice of Intent More Than 90 Days Before Expiration of Limitations Period Does Not Toll One-Year Limitations Period

In Woods v. Young (1991) 53 Cal. 3d 315, 279 Cal. Rptr. 613, 807 P.2d 455 , plaintiff alleged that she discovered her injury on June 6, 1983. On February 17, 1984, plaintiff's attorney notified defendants of plaintiff's intent to file a malpractice action against them. On August 16, 1984, one year and three weeks after plaintiff's discovery of the injury, plaintiff filed a complaint alleging medical malpractice based on negligent examination, diagnosis, and treatment. Each defendant answered the complaint, and alleged as an affirmative defense that the complaint was barred by the one-year statute of limitations. Defendants subsequently moved for summary judgment on the ground that the filing of the complaint occurred after the statute of limitations had expired. The trial court granted the motions, and denied plaintiff's motion for reconsideration. Plaintiff appealed, and the court of appeal reversed. The court of appeal held that the statute of limitations was tolled by the giving of the notice of intent to sue, regardless of when during the limitations period the notice was given. The court based its decision on Code Civ. Proc. § 356, providing that when the commencement of an action is stayed by statutory prohibition, the time of the statutory prohibition is not part of the time limited for commencement of the action. Although the court noted that the application of the provision to Code Civ. Proc. § 364 was questionable, it decided to follow the existing published decisions that had applied Code Civ. Proc. § 356 to Code Civ. Proc. § 364. Because plaintiff's complaint was filed within one year and 90 days of the date her cause of action accrued, the court of appeal reversed the judgment of the trial court.

The California Supreme Court affirmed (53 Cal. 3d 315, 331) . Rejecting statutory constructions offered in previous court of appeal cases applying Code Civ. Proc. § 356's tolling provisions to Code Civ. Proc. § 364, the Court held that the applicable statute of limitations (Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5) is tolled 90 days when the plaintiff gives the notice of intent to sue in the last 90 days of the limitations period, but that the running of the statutory period is not otherwise affected by service of the notice (53 Cal. 3d 315, 319, 328) . The Court conceded that its new rule would prevent tolling in this case, because the plaintiff gave notice more than 90 days before the end of the one-year limitations period. However, the Court determined that considerations of fairness and public policy would preclude application of the new rule to this case, and would require prospective application of the holding to complaints filed more than 90 days after the April 4, 1991, decision became final (53 Cal. 3d 315, 319, 331) . Plaintiff, who brought suit within one year and 90 days of the date her cause of action accrued, was therefore able to proceed under the former rule permitting a 90-day extension of the one-year limitations period when the notice was filed more than 90 days before the end of the limitations period (53 Cal. 3d 315, 330-331) .

NOTE:

The prospectivity directive of Woods has been construed by one court of appeal to apply only to the primary holding in Woods that the extension allowed by Code Civ. Proc. § 364(d) is available only when the notice of intention to sue is served during the final 90 days of the applicable limitation period. Under this construction, the prospectivity directive does not apply to Woods' secondary holding limiting the maximum filing time to the period of limitations plus 90 days [Barber v. Superior Court (1991) 234 Cal. App. 3d 1076, 1081-1082, 285 Cal. Rptr. 668 ; see § 175.40][3][a].

[b] Giving Second Notice of Intent Within Final 90 Days of Limitations Period Does Not Toll One-Year Limitations Period

In Bennett v. Shahhal (1999) 75 Cal. App. 4th 384, 89 Cal. Rptr. 2d 272 , the defendant, a physician, allegedly injured the plaintiff by improperinsertion of a shunt into the plaintiff's brain that drained fluid into his abdomen. Unknown to the plaintiff, his attorney had filed a notice of intent to sue the defendant under Code Civ. Proc. § 364(a) prior to the final 90 days of the limitations period. The plaintiff then informed his attorney that he would not pursue the lawsuit. However, after undergoing further medical treatment, the plaintiff changed his mind and hired a second attorney to pursue legal action against the defendant. The second attorney then filed another 90-day notice of intent to sue with the defendant, unaware that the first attorney had already done so. Based on the tolling provision of Code Civ. Proc. § 364(d), the plaintiff's suit was filed after expiration of the one-year limitations period. The defendant successfully moved for summary judgment on the ground that the second notice did not toll the statute of limitations and the action was thus time-barred. The plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court concluded that if a 90-day notice of intent to sue is given prior to the final 90 days of the limitations period, the plaintiff cannot toll the statute of limitations by giving a second notice of intent to sue within the final 90 days of the limitations period. In such a case, the original notice, although it does not extend the limitations period, fully achieves the legislative objective of providing time for the negotiated settlement of disputes (75 Cal. App. 4th 384, 390) . The fact that the plaintiff may have been unaware of the first attorney's actions was irrelevant, because an attorney's knowledge is imputed to the attorney's client (75 Cal. App. 4th 384, 391 n.3). The court further held that the second notice did not toll the limitations period even if the plaintiff may have experienced or discovered additional injuries after the first notice was given, because the plaintiff had only one cause of action against the defendant with one accrual date (75 Cal. App. 4th 384, 391-392) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Filing Notice of Intent More Than 90 Days Before Expiration of Limitations Period Does Not Toll One-Year Limitations Period

In Derderian v. Dietrick (1997) 56 Cal. App. 4th 892, 65 Cal. Rptr. 2d 800 , plaintiffs sued a physician for the wrongful death of their mother. Plaintiffs sent a letter designed to notify defendant of their intent to sue to a post office box address listed on a bill they had received for the physician's services. The address to which the letter had been sent was for a billing service, for whom defendant had been working as an independent contractor at the time he treated plaintiffs' mother. Defendant never received the letter until he received the summons and complaint. The trial court granted summary judgment in favor of defendant concluding that the statute of limitations for plaintiffs to bring their professional negligence claim (Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5) was not tolled since plaintiffs failed to provide defendant with actual notice of their claim as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 364(a), and therefore the statute of limitations for filing the action expired three months before the complaint was served and filed. The court of appeal affirmed, holding that plaintiffs efforts to comply with the notice requirements of Code Civ. Proc. § 364(a), were deficient (56 Cal. App. 4th 892, 899) . The court determined that plaintiffs had not taken adequate steps which would be likely to result in actual notice to the defendant. For example, the court said that there was no reasonable explanation as to why plaintiffs did not check for defendant's address in public records available from the Medical Board of California. The court noted that while it concluded that plaintiffs' efforts to comply with Code Civ. Proc. § 364(a) were deficient, it did not conclude that resorting to public records was essential to fulfill the requirement for prefiling notice. Current written communications from a physician to a patient bearing a letterhead showing an address, a patient's firsthand knowledge based on visits to the physician's office, current listings and advertisements in professional and telephone directories and available on-line legal and medical research providers were, according to the court, all generally reliable sources for determining where Code Civ. Proc. § 364(a) notice may be directed (56 Cal. App. 4th 892, 900) .

In Hanooka v. Pivko (1994) 22 Cal. App. 4th 1553, 28 Cal. Rptr. 2d 70 , the plaintiffs filed their medical malpractice action against three doctors on October 17, 1991, one year and twenty days after the death of their infant son. On July 31, 1991, the plaintiffs had prepared a notice of intention to sue pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 364(d) (extension of limitations period where notice of intent to sue served within last ninety days), but they served it on the hospital where the defendants had staff privileges, even though they knew the identities and locations of two of the defendants (22 Cal. App. 4th 1553, 1559) . The court affirmed summary judgment in favor of these two defendants, holding that plaintiffs did not comply with the provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 364(d) in that they did not provide actual notice to these two defendants. The court further held that a plaintiff cannot rely on a hospital to forward such notices of intention to sue to individual physicians when the plaintiff has knowledge of the identity and location of the physicians (22 Cal. App. 4th 1553, 1560) .

PLAINTIFF'S ACTION BASED ON MEDICAL MALPRACTICE IS BARRED BECAUSE, ALTHOUGH PLAINTIFF SERVED NOTICE PURSUANT TO CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE *SECTION 364(a) WI*THIN 90 DAYS OF THE EXPIRATION OF THE ONE-YEAR STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS, HE/SHE NEVERTHELESS FAILED TO COMMENCE THE ACTION BEFORE THE LIMITATIONS PERIOD (INCLUDING THE 90-DAY PERIOD THAT WAS TOLLED) EXPIRED.

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a defendant's contention that an action is barred by the statute of limitations. The ground is that the one-year limitations period under Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 was tolled 90 days under Code Civ. Proc. § 364(d), but that plaintiff failed nevertheless to timely commence the action.

[b] Argument

(3) the date the one-year limitations period elapsed, taking the 90-day tolling period into account, and (4) the date the complaint was filed. Counsel may combine the points and authorities in this form with those in § 175.37.

[c] Separate Trial of Statute of Limitations Defense

Any party, or the court itself, may move for a separate trial of the defense that an action is barred by the statute of limitations if the defense is pleaded in the answer. If the issue is resolved in favor of the plaintiff, the remaining issues are then tried [Code Civ. Proc. § 597.5].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Notice Tolls One-Year Period of Limitations for 90 Days Only

The facts and procedural background of Woods v. Young (1991) 53 Cal. 3d 315, 279 Cal. Rptr. 613, 807 P.2d 455 , are discussed in § 175.39[3][a]. The California Supreme Court held that when a plaintiff gives the 90-day notice of intent to sue required by Code Civ. Proc. § 364(a) in the last 90 days of the applicable statute of limitations, that statute is tolled for 90 days under Code Civ. Proc. § 364(d) (53 Cal. 3d 315, 319, 328) . The Court illustrated the application of the rule with the following example: a plaintiff who serves the notice of the intent to sue on the last day of the limitationsperiod has one day after the 90-day waiting period to file the complaint (53 Cal. 3d 315, 326 n.3). The Court noted that because the law does not divide time periods into increments of less than one day and because tolling takes effect immediately, the day of service of the notice is not part of the time for commencement of the action (53 Cal. 3d 315, 326 n.3). The Court expressly disapproved several conflicting appellate cases that had concluded, relying on Code Civ. Proc. § 356, that service of the notice would extend the period of limitations for a period ranging from 90 to 180 days (53 Cal. 3d 315, 323, 328 n.4).

NOTE:

Woods has been construed as not giving prospective application to this holding [see Barber v. Superior Court (1991) 234 Cal. App. 3d 1076, 1081-1082, 285 Cal. Rptr. 668] . For further discussion of the prospective application of Woods, see § 175.39[3][a].

In Barber v. Superior Court (1991) 234 Cal. App. 3d 1076, 285 Cal. Rptr. 668 , defendant's alleged medical malpractice occurred on August 22 or 23, 1989. Plaintiff served defendant with a notice of intention to sue on August 16, 1990. Plaintiff then filed the complaint on November 28, 1990, one year and 98 days after the alleged accrual of her cause of action. Defendant moved for summary judgment on the ground that the complaint was barred by the one-year limitation period of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 The trial court denied the motion, and defendant sought and obtained peremptory writ review under Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(l).

The court of appeal agreed that the complaint was not timely filed, and issued a writ of mandate directing the trial court to enter judgment in defendant's favor. In so ruling, the court rejected plaintiff's argument that, under the prospectivity provisions of Woods v. Young (1991) 53 Cal. 3d 315, 279 Cal. Rptr. 613, 807 P.2d 455 , her complaint was not time-barred [see Woods v. Young (1991) 53 Cal. 3d 315, 330-331, 279 Cal. Rptr. 613, 807 P.2d 455] . The court held that the prospectivity directive of Woods applies only to Woods' primary holding that the 90-day extension allowed by Code Civ. Proc. § 364(d) is available only when the notice of intention to sue is served during the final 90 days of the applicable limitation period. However, the court also held that the prospectivity directive does not apply to Woods' secondary holding limiting the maximum filing period to the period of limitations plus 90 days. Therefore, plaintiff's complaint was time-barred because it was filed eight days after the applicable limitation period plus 90 days as permitted under the rule of Woods (234 Cal. App. 3d 1076, 1081-1082) .

§ 175.41 Supporting Contention That Medical Malpractice Action Based on Professional Negligence Is Barred by Statute of Limitations [Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5]--Action for Injuries Sustained at Birth--MICRA Rather Than General Limitations Statute Applies

[1] FORM

PLAINTIFF'S COMPLAINT IS TIME-BARRED UNDER CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE SECTION 340.5, WHICH IS CONTROLLING IN MEDICAL MALPRACTICE ACTIONS FOR INJURIES SUSTAINED AT BIRTH.

A. Later, More Specific Statute Controls. When two different statutes of limitations appear to govern an action, the later, more specific statute is controlling over the earlier statute, even though the earlier statute would by its terms cover the present action (Young v. Haines (1986) 41 Cal. 3d 883, 894, 226 Cal. Rptr. 547, 718 P.2d 909).

B. Code of Civil Procedure Section 340.5 Rather Than Code of Civil Procedure Section 340.4 Controls. Although Code of Civil Procedure Section 340.4 governs actions for prenatal and birth injuries, Code of Civil Procedure Section 340.5 is a later-enacted statute that was passed by the legislature with the intent to cover all personal injury claims arising from medical malpractice, and to respond to a major health care crisis in California attributable to skyrocketing malpractice premium costs. As such, Code of Civil Procedure Section 340.5 is the later, more specific statute that is controlling over the earlier statute, Code of Civil Procedure Section 340.4 (Young v. Haines (1986) 41 Cal. 3d 883, 894, 226 Cal. Rptr. 547, 718 P.2d 909 (construing former Civ. Code § 29 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 340.4)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that plaintiff's complaint for medical negligence is barred by the statute of limitations set forth by Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5, even though thecomplaint would not be time-barred by former Civ. Code § 29 [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 340.4].

[b] Argument

[c] Separate Trial of Statute of Limitations Defense

Any party, or the court itself, may move for a separate trial of the defense that an action is barred by a statute of limitations if the defense is pleaded in the answer. If the issue is resolved in favor of the plaintiff, the remaining issues are then tried [Code Civ. Proc. § 597.5].

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For pleading and practice forms relating to the defense that an action is barred by the statute of limitations and to a motion for a separate trial of a statute of limitations defense, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 345, Limitation of Actions (Matthew Bender).

[e] Related Points and Authorities

For memoranda of points and authorities supporting the contention that an action is barred by the statute of limitations and supporting a motion for separate trial of the statute of limitations defense, see Ch. 143, Limitation of Actions .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Later, More Specific Statute Controls

In Young v. Haines (1986) 41 Cal. 3d 883, 226 Cal. Rptr. 547, 718 P.2d 909 , plaintiff sustained injuries during birth that were not discovered until shortly before her eighth birthday. Plaintiff filed a malpractice action against the health care providers, alleging negligence. The complaint was brought within the statutory time period of former Civ. Code § 29 [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 340.4], which governs actions for injuries incurred during birth and incorporates a "delayed discovery" rule that tolls the running of the statute until after discovery of the injury. Defendant demurred, however, on the grounds that the action was time-barred because it was not brought within the three-year statutory time period of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5, which governs medical malpractice actions and does not incorporate a "delayed discovery" rule. The trial court agreed, sustained the demurrer, and dismissed the complaint.

The California Supreme Court reversed and remanded, holding that the action was controlled by Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 but would not be time-barred if plaintiff were allowed to amend her complaint to allege facts that would invoke a separate tolling provision of that statute. With regard to which statute of limitations was applicable to the action, the Court explained that at first glance, former Civ. Code § 29 [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 340.4] appeared to apply to the action, because it governs all actions for prenatal and birth injuries. However, the Court also explained that Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 is a later-enacted statute that was passed by the legislature with the intent of covering all personal injury claims arising from medical malpractice, and to respond to a major health care crisis in California attributable to skyrocketing malpractice premium costs. Thus, the legislature sought to change the rules applicable to personal injury actions by malpractice victims, and to treat all malpractice victims differently from other personal injury victims. Because Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 is part of an interrelated legislative scheme enacted to deal specifically with all medical malpractice claims, it is the later, more specific statute that must be found controlling over an earlier statute, even though the earlier statute would by its terms cover the present situation. Thus, Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 and not former Civ. Code § 29 [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 340.4] was controlling. However, the Court noted that the action in this case might not be time-barred under Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 if plaintiff were to allege intentional concealment of the injury, which would toll the limitations period under the statute of limitations. Thus, the case was remanded to give plaintiff an opportunity to amend her complaint to allege concealment and avoid the time-bar of the statute (41 Cal. 3d 883, 891-894, 901-902) .

[b] Code of Civil Procedure Section 340.5 Rather Than Code of Civil Procedure Section 340.4 Controls

The facts and procedural background of Young v. Haines (1986) 41 Cal. 3d 883, 226 Cal. Rptr. 547, 718 P.2d 909 , are discussed in § 175.41[3][a].

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Code of Civil Procedure Section 340.5 Rather Than Code of Civil Procedure Section 340.4 Controls

Donabedian v. Manzer (1986) 187 Cal. App. 3d 1021, 232 Cal. Rptr. 325 , was a case with facts that were substantially similar to those in Young v. Haines (1986) 41 Cal. 3d 883, 226 Cal. Rptr. 547, 718 P.2d 909 [see § 175.41[3][a]]. The court of appeal followed the Young opinion and its holding that Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 is a later, more specific statute that is controlling over the earlier statute, Civ. Code § 29. As with Young, however, the court of appeal reversed and remanded to give plaintiff anopportunity to amend his complaint to allege facts that would invoke a tolling provision of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 (187 Cal. App. 3d 1021, 1026-1027, 1029) .

§ 175.42 Supporting Contention That Medical Malpractice Action Based on Professional Negligence Is Barred by Statute of Limitations--Action Against Public Physician--Six-Month Limit After Claim Rejected [Gov. Code § 945.6]

[1] FORM

EVEN THOUGH PLAINTIFF'S ACTION WAS TIMELY FILED UNDER SECTION 340.5 OF THE CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE, IT IS NEVERTHELESS BARRED UNDER SECTION 945.6 OF THE GOVERNMENT CODE, WHICH STANDS ON EQUAL FOOTING WITH THE FORMER IN MEDICAL MALPRACTICE ACTIONS AGAINST PUBLIC ENTITIES.

A. Section 945.6 of the Government Code Bars Action. In medical malpractice actions against public entities, both Section 945.6 of the Government Code and Section 340.5 of the Code of Civil Procedure are given effect, thus barring an action that is timely brought under the latter but not under the former. Both statutes are parts of two separate legislative schemes that stand on equal footing, neither more specific than the other, addressing specific areas of the law, medical negligence liability and government tort liability. Although Section 340.5 of the Code of Civil Procedure was enacted after Section 945.6 of the Government Code, its failure to address the conflict with Section 945.6 of the Government Code implied an intent that the statutory period of Section 945.6 of the Government Code also remain in full force and effect, thus barring an action not timely brought under its provisions (Anson v. County of Merced (1988) 202 Cal. App. 3d 1195, 1199, 1202, 249 Cal. Rptr. 457).

[Optional] B. Minor Plaintiff Must File Action Within Limitations Period of Gov. Code § 945.6. When the malpractice plaintiff is a minor and a timely claim has been filed with and rejected by the public entity, the six-month period for filing a medical malpractice action under Gov. Code § 945.6 applies even when a longer period for bringing the action against a non-public health care provider might be allowed under Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 (Martell v. Antelope Valley Hosp. Med. Ctr. (1998) 67 Cal. App. 4th 978, 981-983, 79 Cal. Rptr. 2d 329).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that plaintiff's complaint for medical negligence that is brought against a public entity is barred by the statute of limitations in Gov. Code § 945.6, even though the complaint would not be time-barred by Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5. Optional Paragraph B may be added when the malpractice plaintiff is a minor.

[b] Argument

[c] Separate Trial of Statute of Limitations Defense

Any party, or the court itself, may move for a separate trial of the defense that an action is barred by a statute of limitations if the defense is pleaded in the answer. If the issue is resolved in favor of the plaintiff, the remaining issues are then tried [Code Civ. Proc. § 597.5].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Section 945.6 of the Government Code Bars Action

In Anson v. County of Merced (1988) 202 Cal. App. 3d 1195, 249 Cal. Rptr. 457 , plaintiff served a claim for damages for medical negligence by county health care providers on the county's board of supervisors. The claim was rejected, and plaintiff served a notice of intention to file suit on defendants pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 364. Plaintiff filed a complaint within the one-year statute of limitations period of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 for medical malpractice actions, but after the expiration of the six-month statutory period of Gov. Code § 945.6 for filing an action against a public entity after a claim is rejected. Defendant demurred on statute of limitations grounds. Plaintiff unsuccessfully argued that the action was governed by Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 and not by Gov. Code § 945.6. The trial court disagreed, sustained the demurrer, and dismissed the action.

The court of appeal reversed, agreeing that Gov. Code § 945.6 applied but also holding that the action was not time-barred under that statute because the filing of the notice of intention under Code Civ. Proc. § 364 had been timely and had tolled the limitations period (202 Cal. App. 3d 1195, 1204-1205) . In reaching its conclusion that Gov. Code § 945.6 applied, the court explained that both that statute and Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 are given effect. The court discussed both statutes as being parts of two separate legislative schemes (MICRA (Medical Injury Compensation Reform Act), and the Tort Claims Act) that stand on equal footing, neither being more specific than the other. Both address specific areas of the law, government tort liability and medical negligence liability. The medical negligence statute, Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5, enacted after Gov. Code § 945.6, was a response to a growing crisis over malpractice insurance premiums, with the intent of limiting medical malpractice claims. Although Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 fails to address the conflict with Gov. Code § 945.6, an intent may be inferred that the statutory period of Gov. Code § 945.6 remain in full force and effect. Thus, long-standing principles of statutory construction and the legislative intent behind both statutes to limit actions required the conclusion that both statutes be given effect, resulting in the shorter Gov. Code § 945.6 period being applied as the controlling one (202 Cal. App. 3d 1195, 1199-1202) .

[b] Minor Plaintiff Must File Action Within Limitations Period of Gov. Code § 945.6

In Martell v. Antelope Valley Hospital Medical Center (1998) 67 Cal. App. 4th 978, 981-985, 79 Cal. Rptr. 2d 329 , the plaintiffs were a minor, injured at birth allegedly due to the negligence of a public entity hospital, and his parents. In August 1989, plaintiffs filed a timely claim against the hospital pursuant to the Tort Claims Act, which was rejected by the hospital in October 1989. Plaintiffs then filed a timely lawsuit in February 1990, which was eventually dismissed without prejudice in 1992, apparently because the minor's young age prevented the extent of his injuries from being fully known. Five years later, in 1997, plaintiffs filed a second lawsuit with a complaint almost identical to the first. The hospital moved for summary judgment on the grounds that the plaintiffs had failed to file the second lawsuit within six months of rejection of the initial claim, as required by Gov. Code § 945.6. The trial court granted the motion for summary judgment.

The court of appeal affirmed, agreeing that the plain language of Gov. Code § 945.6 required that "any suit brought against a public entity" must be brought no more than six months after rejection of the claim. Quoting language from earlier case law and the Law Revision Commission proposing the enactment of the Tort Claims Act limitations provisions, the court concluded that, in an action against a public entity, the provisions of the Tort Claims Act were intended to take precedence over the statutes of limitation that might apply to private defendants in a particular case. The court noted that prior court decisions, including Anson v. County of Merced (1988) 202 Cal. App. 3d 1195, 249 Cal. Rptr. 457 [see § 175.42[3][a]], had uniformly held that statutes outside the Tort Claims Act did not extend the period for filing suit against a public entity.

In reaching its decision, the court rejected the plaintiffs' argument that the longer limitations period provided for minors under Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 should be given precedence as a matter of public policy disfavoring the use of limitation periods to bar a claim brought by a minor. The court noted instead that the legislature could have provided an exception to the Tort Claims Act for minors bringing a malpractice suit against a public entity when it enacted Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5, but failed to do so. The court also found that the public policy disfavoring the use of limitations periods to bar actions by a minor did not apply to actions brought against public entities, noting, for example, that the tolling provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 352 applicable in actions brought by minors were specifically made inapplicable to actions brought against a public entity. Finally, the court rejected plaintiffs' argument that applying the six-month filing period was unfair given their decision to dismiss without prejudice their first action, as well as plaintiffs' argument that equitable tolling principles ought to apply.

§ 175.42A Supporting Contention That Action Based on Professional Negligence of Physician Is Barred by Statute of Limitations [Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5]--MICRA Governs Action by Minor for Failing to Report Suspected Child Abuse

[1] FORM

PLAINTIFF'S ACTION FOR A PHYSICIAN'S NEGLIGENT FAILURE TO REPORT SUSPECTED CHILD ABUSE IS BARRED BECAUSE IT WAS NOT BROUGHT WITHIN THREE YEARS AFTER THE INJURY OR PRIOR TO PLAINTIFF'S EIGHTH BIRTHDAY AS REQUIRED BY CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE SECTION 340.5.

MICRA Limitations Period Governs Action for Failure to Report Suspected Child Abuse. An action against a physician for the negligent failure to report suspected child abuse in violation of Penal Code Section 11166 et seq. is governed by the limitations period provided in Code of Civil Procedure Section 340.5, and as such must be brought within three years after the injury or, if the minor is under six years of age when injured, either within three years after the injury or prior to the minor's eighth birthday, whichever occurs later (David M. v. Beverly Hosp. (2005) 131 Cal. App. 4th 1272, 1277-1279, 32 Cal. Rptr. 3d 649).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted by a physician who is the defendant in a professional negligence action stemming from the physician's alleged failure to report suspected child abuse. The form supports the contention that the action is barred by the limitations period provided by Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which these points are raised, such as a motion for summary judgment. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the point of law stated. Thus, counsel should include facts showing the plaintiff's age and the date that the plaintiff was allegedly injured and tie this to the argument that the action was not timely because it was not filed within three years after that injury, or, if the plaintiff was under the age of six when injured, filed within three years after the injury or prior to the plaintiff's eighth birthday, whichever provides the longer period.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] MICRA Limitations Period Governs Action for Failure to Report Suspected Child Abuse

In David M. v. Beverly Hosp. (2005) 131 Cal. App. 4th 1272, 32 Cal. Rptr. 3d 649 , the plaintiff was a minor who brought a negligence suit against a physician and the hospital at which the physician practiced. The plaintiff alleged in his complaint that the physician had observed the plaintiff eleven years earlier when the plaintiff was four months old, and that the marks on the plaintiff's body should have caused the physician to have a reasonable suspicion that the plaintiff had been abused. After the plaintiff returned home, he was severely abused by his father and sustained permanent and serious medical problems. According to the plaintiff, the abuse would not have occurred if the physician had reported the suspected child abuse as required by statute. The defendants demurred on the grounds that the action was barred by the statute of limitations. They argued that any failure to report suspected child abuse arose out of the physician's professional duties and was governed by the MICRA limitations period of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5, under which the plaintiff was required to file any action either within three years after the injury or prior to the plaintiff's eighth birthday, whichever was later. The plaintiff opposed the demurrer, arguing that because the requirement to report suspected abuse was a duty imposed by statute, the applicable limitations period was the three-year period of Code Civ. Proc. § 338, which could be tolled under Code Civ. Proc. § 352 while the plaintiff was a minor. The trial court agreed with the defendants and sustained the demurrers. The plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that the applicable limitations period was that found in Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 and therefore the plaintiff's action had to be filed prior to his eighth birthday. The court concluded that the action was one for professional negligence, which is specifically defined and encompassed by the limitations period in Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5, because the physician's failure to report any suspected child abuse was a negligent omission that occurred in the course of providing professional medical services to the plaintiff. Because Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 was the applicable statute of limitations, the tolling provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 352 did not apply (131 Cal. App. 4th 1272, 1277-1278) . The court noted that this conclusion was consistent with a CaliforniaSupreme Court decision [Belton v. Bowers Ambulance Serv. (1999) 20 Cal. 4th 928, 86 Cal. Rptr. 2d 107, 978 P.2d 591] , which held that no tolling provision outside of MICRA can extend the three-year maximum time period established by Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 (131 Cal. App. 4th 1272, 1281) .

§ 175.43 Opposing Contention That Action Is Barred by Statute of Limitations--Plaintiff's Reliance on Defendant

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

AN ACTION IS NOT BARRED BY THE ONE-YEAR LIMITATIONS PERIOD WHEN PLAINTIFF WAS EXCUSED FROM INQUIRY BY RELIANCE ON DEFENDANT AND FAILED TO FILE SUIT DUE TO SUCH RELIANCE.

Continuance of Physician-Patient Relationship. A plaintiff's duty of diligence to discover the negligent cause of an injury is relaxed during the continuation of the physician-patient relationship (Stafford v. Shultz (1954) 42 Cal. 2d 767, 778, 270 P.2d 1 ; see Sanchez v. South Hoover Hosp. (1976) 18 Cal. 3d 93, 102, 132 Cal. Rptr. 657, 553 P.2d 1129).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a defendant's contention that an action is barred by the statute of limitations. The grounds of opposition are based on the rule that a plaintiff's duty to inquire is relaxed during the continuation of the physician-patient relationship.

In an appropriate case, this memorandum may be submitted in opposition to the contention that the action is barred by the statute of limitations supported by the points and authorities in § 175.37.

[b] Argument

between plaintiff and defendant, plaintiff's reliance on defendant's advice regarding the injury, and any concealment by defendant of facts pertaining to negligence that discouraged plaintiff from seeking additional medical opinions. Further, counsel should discuss facts that demonstrate the absence of other sources of information regarding the injury and plaintiff's lack of awareness of negligence during the continuance of the professional relationship.

[c] Separate Trial of Statute of Limitations Defense

Any party, or the court itself, may move for a separate trial of the defense that an action is barred by the statute of limitations, if the defense is pleaded in the answer. If the issue is resolved in favor of the plaintiff, the remaining issues are then tried [Code Civ. Proc. § 597.5].

[e] Related Points and Authorities

For memoranda of points and authorities opposing the contention that an action is barred by the statute of limitations, see Ch. 143, Limitation of Actions .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Continuance of Physician-Patient Relationship

In Stafford v. Shultz (1954) 42 Cal. 2d 767, 270 P.2d 1 , plaintiff brought a malpractice action based on negligent treatment of a leg wound which resulted in amputation. Plaintiff sued soon after he received reports from defendants indicating the negligent cause of the amputation, but the action was filed over one year from the occurrence of the negligence. Defendants demurred on the ground that the action was thus barred by the one-year statute of limitations period, and the trial court sustained the demurrer.

The Supreme Court reversed, holding that the rule that the limitations period commences when plaintiff either discovers or reasonably should have discovered the negligence is qualified by reliance on the defendant's fiduciary duty of disclosure. During continuation of the physician-patient relationship, the Court stated, plaintiff's duty to discover the cause of an injury is relaxed, and the failure to consult other physicians is excused by the reasonable reliance on a treating physician's judgment and care (42 Cal. 2d 767, 777-778) .

The defendants' concealment of facts relating to the negligent cause of the amputation during the course of their continued relationship withplaintiff thus excused him from inquiry, and the statute did not begin to run until plaintiff's discovery of the negligence through receipt of defendants' reports (42 Cal. 2d 767, 779) .

The facts and procedural background of Sanchez v. South Hoover Hosp. (1976) 18 Cal. 3d 93, 132 Cal. Rptr. 657, 553 P.2d 1129 , are discussed in § 175.37[3][a]. The Supreme Court held that the one-year statute of limitations period commences to run when a plaintiff either discovers the negligent cause of an injury or is put on notice of that cause, despite a defendant's nondisclosure regarding the negligence (18 Cal. 3d 93, 101) . In dicta, however, the Court acknowledged the rule that a plaintiff's duty of inquiry is reduced during the continuance of the physician-patient relationship with defendant (18 Cal. 3d 93, 102) . In this case, the rule did not relieve plaintiff of the statute of limitations bar because the professional relationship had ended prior to commencement of the limitations period, and plaintiff had conceded knowledge of the negligence during that relationship (18 Cal. 3d 93, 102) .

§ 175.43A Opposing Contention That Action Is Barred by Statute of Limitations--MICRA Limitations Period Inapplicable to Intentional Torts Not Based in Professional Negligence

[1] FORM

PLAINTIFF'S ACTION ALLEGING INTENTIONAL TORTS AGAINST DEFENDANT HEALTH CARE PROVIDER IS NOT GOVERNED BY THE MICRA LIMITATIONS PERIOD PROVIDED IN CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE SECTION 340.5.

Action Alleging Intentional Torts Not Governed by MICRA Limitations Period. If the cause of action does not arise out of professional negligence, a plaintiff's action alleging an intentional tort against a health care provider is not governed by the limitations period provided in Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 (Unruh-Haxton v. Regents of University of California (2008) 162 Cal. App. 4th 343, 353, 76 Cal. Rptr. 3d 146).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a plaintiff's cause of action alleging an intentional tort against a defendant health care provider is governed by the limitations period for professional negligence actions provided in Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the contention that Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 does not apply. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the point of law

stated. Thus, counsel should include facts detailing the nature of the conduct supporting the intentional tort causes of action and argue that because this conduct is qualitatively different from mere professional negligence, Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 is inapplicable.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Action Alleging Intentional Torts Not Governed by MICRA Limitations Period

In Unruh-Haxton v. Regents of University of California (2008) 162 Cal. App. 4th 343, 76 Cal. Rptr. 3d 146 , plaintiffs were seven married couples and one unmarried woman who brought suit against the Regents of the University of California and a medical center after doctors at an affiliated fertility clinic allegedly stole their human genetic materials that had been stored at the clinic. The female plaintiffs had all had their eggs harvested by clinic doctors in the late 1980s and alleged that their eggs and pre-embryos had been sold without authorization to other patients and for research purposes. This unauthorized use of genetic materials was the subject of almost a hundred newspaper articles from 1995 to 1999 published in Los Angeles and Orange County newspapers, although these particular plaintiffs did not learn that they may have been victimized by the clinic doctors until the early 2000s. Plaintiffs filed lawsuits within one year of gaining such knowledge, alleging causes of action for fraud, conversion, and intentional infliction of emotional distress. The trial court sustained defense demurrers, however, concluding that the actions were barred by the statute of limitations provided in Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 because plaintiffs had "constructive knowledge" of the wrongdoing in the mid-1990s, due to the widespread publicity generated by the media, and plaintiffs failed to bring suit within one year of such constructive discovery. Plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal reversed in part. The court noted that when a cause of action is asserted against a health care provider on a theory other than medical malpractice, the determination of whether MICRA applies depends on the particular cause of action and the particular MICRA provision at issue. The court then held that the statute of limitations provided in Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5, enacted as part of MICRA, did not apply to plaintiffs' causes of action alleging the intentional torts of fraud, conversion, and intentional infliction of emotional distress. The court, noting that the Legislature had specifically limited application of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 to occasions of "professional negligence," concluded that the intentional and malicious conduct alleged by plaintiffs was qualitatively different from mere negligence (162 Cal. App. 4th 343, 355-356) . The court went on the reject the trial court's conclusion that "constructive knowledge" of wrongdoing was sufficient to trigger running of a statute of limitations when a plaintiff lacks actual knowledge sufficient to generate suspicion of wrongdoing (162 Cal. App. 4th 343, 359-364) . Applying the relevant limitations periods, the court concluded that all claims against the Regents were brought within the appropriate time periods, although certain claims against the medical center were untimely (162 Cal. App. 4th 343, 356-357) .

17-175 California Points & Authorities § 175.44

§ 175.44 Opposing Contention That Medical Malpractice Action Based on Professional Negligence Is Barred by Statute of Limitations [Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5]--Action by Minor

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF'S ACTION BASED ON MEDICAL NEGLIGENCE IS NOT BARRED BECAUSE _____ [specify reasons, e.g., THE ACTION WAS COMMENCED WITHIN THREE YEARS OF THE WRONGFUL ACT, REGARDLESS OF WHEN PLAINTIFF DISCOVERED THE INJURY and/or PLAINTIFF'S GUARDIAN AND DEFENDANT'S INSURER COMMITTED FRAUD AND COLLUSION IN FAILING TO BRING AN ACTION ON PLAINTIFF'S BEHALF IN A TIMELY FASHION].

A. Statutory Limitation Period. A medical malpractice action by a minor based on professional negligence must be commenced within three years from the date of the alleged wrongful act[, except that an action by a minor under the full age of six years must be commenced within three years or prior to his or her eighth birthday, whichever provides a longer period] (Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5).

[Optional] B. Time Limitation Tolled for Fraud or Collusion. The statutory limitation period for minors to commence a medical malpractice action is tolled for any period during which a parent or guardian and defendant's insurer or health care provider have committed fraud or collusion in the failure to bring an action on behalf of the injured minor for professional negligence (Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5).

C. Commencement of Limitations Period. The three-year period prescribed in the minor statute of limitations set forth in Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 begins to run on the date of the alleged wrongful act, regardless of the date of injury or when the plaintiff may have discovered the injury (see Steketee v. Lintz, Williams & Rothberg (1985) 38 Cal. 3d 46, 54, 57, 210 Cal. Rptr. 781, 694 P.2d 1153).

[Optional] D. Determination of Plaintiff's Minority. Whether a plaintiff is a minor or an adult for the purposes of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 is determined by his or her age at the time of the alleged wrongful act (see Steketee v. Lintz, Williams & Rothberg (1985) 38 Cal. 3d 46, 53, 210 Cal. Rptr. 781, 694 P.2d 1153).

[Optional] E. Accrual on Date of Discovery. A minor's medical malpractice cause of action accrues when the minor's parent or guardian knew or should have known that a negligent wrongful act of medical care caused the child's injuries (Photias v. Doerfler (1996) 45 Cal. App. 4th 1014, 1021, 53 Cal. Rptr. 2d 202).

[Optional] F. Time for Filing Prior to Eighth Birthday Extended for Holiday. The limitation period set forth in Code of Civil Procedure Section 340.5 allowing a complaint to be filed prior to a child's eighth birthday is extended by Code of Civil Procedure Section 12a if the child's eighth birthday occurs on a day following a holiday (Tran v. Fountain Valley Cmty. Hosp. (1997) 51 Cal. App. 4th 1464, 1466, 60 Cal. Rptr. 2d 91).

G. Statute Tolled by Notice of Intent to Commence Action. Service of an intent to sue notice under Code of Civil Procedure § 364(a) during the last 90 days of the three-year limitation period applicable to minors tolls the statute of limitations for 90 days (Newman v. Burnett (1997) 62 Cal. Rptr. 2d 175).

[2] Comments

CAUTION:

Pending further clarification from the Supreme Court or the legislature, the points and authorities in this form should be usedwith caution. In Torres v. County of Los Angeles (1989) 209 Cal. App. 3d 325, 257 Cal. Rptr. 211 , the court of appeal held that Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 violates a minor's right to equal protection because it contains different accrual dates for minors' and adults' causes of action, without a rational basis for so doing (209 Cal. App. 3d 325, 334) . The court's finding of unconstitutionality arose in a case involving the application of the accrual date in Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 to determine when the 90-day (now six-month) period for tort claims commenced against a governmental health care provider [see Gov. Code § 911.2 (tort claim for injury must be brought within 6 months after accrual of cause of action); see also Gov. Code § 901 (for determining time limit prescribed by Gov. Code § 911.2, date of accrual is date on which cause of action would be deemed to have accrued with meaning of statute of limitations that would be applicable if there were no special government tort claims requirement)]. The plaintiff in the case was a minor who allegedly suffered harm before and during childbirth.

It is somewhat unclear whether the court of appeal's finding of unconstitutionality concerning the different accrual dates would prevent a court from applying the accrual dates in a case directly involving Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5, rather than a government tort claims case. The Supreme Court denied review in the court of appeal case, and has in the past generally declined to address the issue of whether Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 unconstitutionally favors adults over minors [see Young v. Haines (1986) 41 Cal. 3d 883, 897 n.10, 226 Cal. Rptr. 547, 718 P.2d 909 ; Steketee v. Lintz, Williams & Rothberg (1985) 38 Cal. 3d 46, 54 n.4, 210 Cal. Rptr. 781, 694 P.2d 1153] .

In a case involving a medical malpractice action against a blood bank and hospital on behalf of a minor alleging that the negligence by the hospital and blood bank resulted in his infection with the HIV virus as a result of a blood transfusion, the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals stated its belief that the California courts, after Torres, would hold that the "wrongful act" point of accrual under Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 is invalid and that an "injury" point of accrual must be applied with regard to minors [see Katz v. Children's Hosp. of Orange County (9th Cir. 1994) 28 F.3d 1520, 1529, 1533] . The court reasoned that, under an "injury" point of accrual, minors would receive at least as much protection as adults, thus solving the equal protection problems identified in Torres [Katz v. Children's Hosp. of Orange County (9th Cir. 1994) 28 F.3d 1520, 1529, 1533] .

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a contention that plaintiff's complaint for medical negligence is barred by the statute of limitations period of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 applicable to minors. The ground for opposition is that plaintiff may commence the action at any time within three years after the wrongful act, regardless of when plaintiff may have discovered the injury. The optional bracketed language in Paragraph A may be used if the action is being maintained by a minor under the age of six years, in which case the action must be commenced within three years of the wrongful act or prior to the minor's eighth birthday, whichever provides a longer period. Optional Paragraph B may be used to support the contention that the limitation period was tolled due to fraud or collusion between a parent or guardian and defendant's insurer or health care provider. Optional Paragraph D may be used in support of a contention that the plaintiff comes within the statute of limitations period of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 applicable to minors because, regardless of when the plaintiff attained the age of majority, he or she was a minor at the time of the alleged wrongful act.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the point of law stated. Thus, counsel should include a discussion that demonstrates that the alleged wrongful act occurred when plaintiff was a minor, and that the three-year period had not expired prior to commencement of the action, regardless of when plaintiff may have discovered the injury.

[c] Separate Trial of Statute of Limitations Defense

Any party, or the court itself, may move for a separate trial of the defense that an action is barred by the staute of limitations if the defense is pleaded in the answer. If the issue is resolved in favor of the plaintiff, the remaining issues are then tried [Code Civ. Proc. § 597.5].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Commencement of Limitations Period

In Steketee v. Lintz, Williams & Rothberg (1985) 38 Cal. 3d 46, 210 Cal. Rptr. 781, 694 P.2d 1153 , plaintiff retained defendant attorneys to represent him in a claim for damages for medical malpractice that occurred when plaintiff was approximately 16 years, 11 months of age, in September or October 1976. Defendants were retained in January 1978. One year later, in January 1979, defendants ceased representing plaintiff without filing an action on plaintiff's behalf. Plaintiff thereafter sought to recover from defendants for legal malpractice, on the ground that defendants allowed the statute of limitations to run on his medical malpractice claim before they ceased to represent him. The trial court granted summary judgment in defendants' favor, after concluding that the statute of limitations had not run on plaintiff's medical malpractice claim until after defendants had ceased to represent plaintiff.

The Supreme Court affirmed. The Court first held that plaintiff was subject to the limitation period of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 applicable to minors (38 Cal. 3d 46, 53) . The Court then held that this three-year period began to run on the date of the alleged "wrongful act," regardless of when plaintiff discovered the "injury" or negligent cause and damaging effect of the wrongful act (38 Cal. 3d 46, 54, 57) . The Court concluded that defendants did, in fact, cease to represent plaintiff before the expiration of three years from the date of the alleged wrongful act. The statute did not run on plaintiff's cause of action until September 1979, but the attorney-client relationship was terminated several months earlier in January 1979 (38 Cal. 3d 46, 57) .

[b] Determination of Plaintiff's Minority

The facts and procedural background of Steketee v. Lintz, Williams & Rothberg (1985) 38 Cal. 3d 46, 210 Cal. Rptr. 781, 694 P.2d 1153 , are discussed in § 175.44[3][a]. Plaintiff argued that the limitation period of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 applicable to adults began to run at the time that he became 18 years old. The Supreme Court rejected this argument, and held that a plaintiff was a "minor" within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 if he or she was a minor at the time of the alleged wrongful act (38 Cal. 3d 46, 53) .

[c] Accrual on Date of Discovery

In Photias v. Doerfler (1996) 45 Cal. App. 4th 1014, 53 Cal. Rptr. 2d 202 , plaintiff filed an action for failure to treat or remedy a medical problem identified at his birth, nineteen years earlier. Defendant moved for summary judgment on the ground that the action was barred by the statute of limitations under Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5. The trial court agreed with the defendant, and granted summary judgment.

The court of appeal reversed, finding that it was a denial of equal protection under the law to consider that plaintiff's cause of action accrued under Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 on the date of the wrongful act. The court reasoned that allowing adult causes of action to accrue on the date of injury or the date upon which the injury reasonably should have been discovered, but requiring minors' causes of action to accrue on the date of the wrongful act treats minors more harshly in some circumstances. Thus, by defining the actions of adults and minors to accrue differently, Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 violates the minors' right to the law's equal protection (45 Cal. App. 4th 1014, 1020-1021) . The court concluded that the trial court erred in ruling that plaintiff's cause of action accrued on the date of the wrongful act, and reversed the judgment for defendant.

[d] Time for Filing Prior to Eighth Birthday Extended for Holiday

In Tran v. Fountain Valley Cmty. Hosp. (1997) 51 Cal. App. 4th 1464, 60 Cal. Rptr. 2d 91 , plaintiff filed an action for medical malpractice on his eighth birthday, which occurred on a Monday. Defendants demurred on the ground that the complaint was not filed prior to the minor's eighth birthday. The trial court agreed, and dismissed the complaint.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that Code Civ. Proc. § 12a, which provides for an extension for the day of performance if the last day to act falls on a holiday, applies to the requirement of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5, allowing the filing of a complaint prior to plaintiff's eighth birthday. The court noted that cases declining to extend the time within which an action must be performed involved situations in which the last day on which to act was a specified number of days before a date certain. The court distinguished those cases on the ground that they deal with statutes requiring a calculation from a given date (51 Cal. App. 4th 1464, 1467) . The court concluded that there was no reason why plaintiff should not have the benefit of Code Civ. Proc. § 12a, and reversed the judgment dismissing the complaint.

[e] Statute Tolled by Notice of Intent to Commence Action

In Newman v. Burnett (1997) 62 Cal. Rptr. 2d 175 ; a doctor performed surgery on plaintiff who was 16 years old at the time of the operation. Plaintiff served his notice of intent to sue one day short of the third anniversary of his. Less than 90 days later, plaintiff filed his complaint against defendants. The trial court granted defendants motion for summary judgment on the ground that the complaint was not timely filed. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that since plaintiff's service of an intent to sue notice under Code of Civil Procedure § 364(a) during the last 90 days of the three-year limitation period applicable to minors tolled the statute of limitations for 90 days, the trial court erred in granting defendants summary judgment based on the statute of limitations (Cal. App. 4th 722, 728). Defendant argued that under Rewald v. San Pedro Peninsula Hosp. (1994) 27 Cal. App. 4th 480, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 411 , the 90 day tolling provision of Code of Civil Procedure § 364(d) was not applicable to the three year statute of limitations. The court determined that the holding in Rewald was inapplicable and instead found that by following the plain language of Code of Civil Procedure § 364(d) and tolling the three-year statute it reconciled two important legislative goals of MICRA: giving minor plaintiffs a full three years in which to file their claims and the legislative objective of allowing time for negotiations without the formal initiation of legal proceedings during the 90 day notice period (54 Cal. App. 4th 722, 728) .

NOTE:

The California Supreme Court has disapproved Rewald v. San Pedro Peninsula Hospital (1994) 27 Cal. App. 4th 480, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 411 [Russell v. Stanford Univ. Hosp. (1997) 15 Cal. 4th 783, 785, 791 n.2, 64 Cal. Rptr. 2d 97, 937 P.2d 640 ; see § 175.47].

§ 175.45 Opposing Contention That Action Is Barred by Statute of Limitations--One-Year Period of Limitation Tolled for 90 Days by Notice of Intent to Commence Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 364(a), (d)]

[1] FORM

PLAINTIFF'S ACTION BASED ON MEDICAL MALPRACTICE IS NOT BARRED BECAUSE PLAINTIFF SERVED NOTICE PURSUANT TO SECTION 364(a) OF THE CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE WITHIN 90 DAYS BEFORE THE EXPIRATION OF THE ONE-YEAR STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS, AND PLAINTIFF TIMELY COMMENCED HIS/HER ACTION AFTER THE NOTICE PERIOD EXPIRED.

A. One-Year Period of Limitation Is Tolled for 90 Days. When a plaintiff files the notice of intent to sue required by Code of Civil Procedure Section 364(a) in the last 90 days of the one-year limitations period, the one-year statute of limitations is tolled for 90 days (Woods v. Young (1991) 53 Cal. 3d 315, 319, 328, 279 Cal. Rptr. 613, 807 P.2d 455).

[Optional] B. Actual Notice of Intent to Sue Not Required When Timely Notice Served by Mail. A plaintiff giving notice to a particular defendant under Code Civ. Proc. § 364 tolls the statute of limitations for 90 days when he or she complies with statutory requirements governing the service of process by mail prior to expiration of the limitations period, and actual notice to the defendant within the limitations period is not required (Silver v. McNamee (1999) 69 Cal. App. 4th 269, 280, 285-286).

[Optional] C. Hospital-Based Negligence Claim is Action for Professional, Not Ordinary, Negligence. A tort claim based on failure to supervise or protect the safety of a patient in a hospital or other health care facility is an action for professional negligence within the meaning of Code of Civil Procedure Section 340.5(2), not an action for ordinary negligence; therefore, the tolling provision of Code of Civil Procedure Section 364 applies (Bellamy v. Appellate Dep't (1996) 50 Cal. App. 4th 797, 809, 57 Cal. Rptr. 2d 894).

[Optional] D. 90-Day Tolling Applies to Defendant Given Notice Who is Substituted in for Doe Defendant. If a defendant is actually known to the plaintiff and is served with a notice of intent to sue, the limitations period is extended by 90 days even if that defendant is not named in the original complaint but is instead subsequently substituted in for a Doe defendant. If the amendment naming that defendant is made before expiration of the limitations period as extended by the 90 days, the amendment is timely as to that defendant (Davis v. Marin (2000) 80 Cal. App. 4th 380, 386-387, 94 Cal. Rptr. 2d 896).

[Optional] E. Compliance With Service Statutes Not Mandatory. When serving a notice of intent to sue, compliance with Code of Civil Procedure Sections 1010 et seq. is not mandatory, and it is sufficient that a plaintiff who does not comply with these provisions show that the defendant received actual notice (Jones v. Catholic Healthcare West (2007) 147 Cal. App. 4th 300, 307-308, 54 Cal. Rptr. 3d 148 ; see Code Civ. Proc. § 364(c)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a defendant's contention that an action is barred by the statute of limitations. The ground for opposition is that the one-year limitations period was tolled for 90 days under Code Civ. Proc. § 364(d) because plaintiff filed the notice of intent required by Code Civ. Proc. § 364(a) within 90 days of the end of the one-year limitations period.

[b] Argument

[c] Separate Trial of Statute of Limitations Defense

Any party, or the court itself, may move for a separate trial of the defense that an action is barred by the statute of limitations if the defense is pleaded in the answer. If the issue is resolved in favor of the plaintiff, the remaining issues are then tried [Code Civ. Proc. § 597.5].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] One-Year Period of Limitation Is Tolled for 90 Days

The facts and procedural background of Woods v. Young (1991) 53 Cal. 3d 315, 279 Cal. Rptr. 613, 807 P.2d 455 , are discussed in § 175.39[3][a]. The California Supreme Court held that when a plaintiff gives the 90-day notice of intent to sue required by Code Civ. Proc. § 364(a) in the last 90 days of the applicable statute of limitations, that statute of limitations is tolled for 90 days under Code Civ. Proc. § 364(d) (53 Cal. 3d 315, 319, 328) . The Court illustrated the application of the rule with the following example: A plaintiff who serves the notice of the intent to sue on the last day of the limitations period has one day after the 90-day waiting period to file the complaint (53 Cal. 3d 315, 326 n.3). The Court noted that because the law does not divide time periods into increments of less than one day and because tolling takes effect immediately, the day of service of the notice is not part of the time for commencement of the action (53 Cal. 3d 315, 326 n.3). The Court expressly disapproved several conflicting appellate cases that had concluded, relying on Code Civ. Proc. § 356, that service of the notice would extend the period of limitations for a period ranging from 90 to 180 days (53 Cal. 3d 315, 323, 328 n.4).

The Supreme Court, citing public policy concerns, gave its opinion some prospective application (53 Cal. 3d 315, 330-331) .

NOTE:

One court of appeal has subsequently construed the prospectivity directive of Woods to apply only to the primary holding in Woods that the extension allowed by Code Civ. Proc. § 364(d) is available only when the notice of intention to sue is served during the final 90 days of the applicable limitation period. Under this construction, the prospectivity directive does not apply to Woods' secondary holding limiting the maximum filing time to the period of limitations plus 90 days [Barber v. Superior Court (1991) 234 Cal. App. 3d 1076, 1081-1082, 285 Cal. Rptr. 668 ; see § 175.39 [3][a]].

[b] Actual Notice of Intent to Sue Not Required When Timely Notice Served by Mail

In Silver v. McNamee (1999) 69 Cal. App. 4th 269 , plaintiff in a medicalmalpractice action against a physician attempted to serve notice of intent to sue three days prior to expiration of the one-year limitations period by mailing two notices to defendant's Ohio residential address, one by regular mail and one by certified mail. The notices were properly addressed and had sufficient postage. The notice sent by regular mail was not returned to plaintiff and the Post Office made three unsuccessful attempts to deliver the certified notice. Defendant asserted he did not receive actual notice of the intent to sue until two months later, when he allegedly first received the notice sent through regular mail. The malpractice lawsuit was filed two-and-a-half months after the notices were mailed. Defendant successfully moved for summary judgment on the grounds that the action was time-barred under Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. Noting first the established rule that giving a notice of intent to sue within the last 90 days of the one-year statute of limitations tolls the limitations period for 90 days, the court held that the notice of intent to sue was effective when the notices were placed in the mail in strict compliance with the statutes governing service by mail and that the risk of failure of the mail falls on the addressee (69 Cal. App. 4th 269, 280) . The court also rejected the conclusion of the trial court that, pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1013(a), the effective date of the notice was delayed by 10 days and hence was untimely. Code Civ. Proc. § 1013(a) provides in part that "any period of notice and any right or duty to do any act or make any response within any period or on a date certain after the service of the document, which time period or date is prescribed by statute or rule of court, shall be extended ... 10 days if the place of address is outside the State of California but within the United States ... ." The court of appeal held that interpreting this provision to delay the effective date of service and preclude application of the 90-day tolling period of Code Civ. Proc. § 364(d) contravened the very language of Code Civ. Proc. § 1013(a), which otherwise provided that service by mail is "complete" when the notice is deposited in the mail (69 Cal. App. 4th 269, 280) . The court also ruled that, under the circumstances, actual notice to the defendant within the limitations period was not required, distinguishing other court of appeal decisions that had required actual notice prior to expiration of the limitations period. In those prior decisions, the issue of lack of actual notice arose in the context of whether service on a defendant's purported principal constituted notice to the defendant, while in the case before the court, plaintiff had strictly complied with the statutes governing service and notice was sent directly to the individual defendant (69 Cal. App. 4th 269, 283-286) .

[c] Hospital-Based Negligence Claim Is Action for Professional, Not Ordinary, Negligence

In Bellamy v. Appellate Dep't (1996) 50 Cal. App. 4th 797, 57 Cal. Rptr. 2d 894 , plaintiff filed a complaint against a hospital for injuries she sustained when she fell off a rolling X-ray table onto her head. The action was described as one for personal injury and medical malpractice. The hospital demurred on the ground that the action was barred by the one-year statute of limitations for personal injury actions. Plaintiff opposed the demurrer, arguing that she was subject to the notice requirement for professional negligence actions against health care providers, that she served the required notice within 90 days of expiration of the limitations period, that her time for filing suit was thus extended 90 days after service of the notice, and that her complaint was timely filed under Code Civ. Proc. § 364(d). In rebuttal, the hospital contended that plaintiff's action was one based on ordinary negligence, not professional negligence, thus Code Civ. Proc. § 364(d) was inapplicable. The municipal court sustained the hospital's demurrer. Plaintiff appealed to the superior court from the subsequent judgment dismissing the action. The appellate department of the superior court affirmed the municipal court decision. Plaintiff then petitioned the court of appeal for a writ of mandate.

The court of appeal held that plaintiff's complaint sufficiently alleged facts amounting to professional negligence, bringing it within Code Civ. Proc. § 364 and other MICRA provisions (50 Cal. App. 4th 797, 809) . The court initially stated that the classification of similar hospital-based negligence was the subject of some conflict in the courts of appeal. One line of authority, based on Gopaul v. Herrick Mem'l Hosp. (1974) 38 Cal. App. 3d 1002, 113 Cal. Rptr. 811 , holds that the test for determining whether an action is based in professional negligence is whether the negligence occurred within the scope of the skill, prudence, and diligence commonly exercised by practitioners of the profession. The other line of cases is based on the definition of professional negligence found in Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5(2), and applied in Murillo v. Good Samaritan Hosp. (1979) 99 Cal. App. 3d 50, 160 Cal. Rptr. 33 . Under that definition, the test is not whether the situation calls for a high or a low level of skill, or whether a high or low level of skill was actually employed, but rather, whether the negligent act occurred in the rendering of services for which the health care provider is licensed.

The court then examined the allegations in plaintiff's complaint applying the Murillo test, and construed them to mean that prior to her injury, plaintiff was on the X-ray table for the rendering of some professional service. This was, according to the court, a sufficient allegation of facts amounting to professional negligence, bringing it within the tolling provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5(2). The court rejected the rationale advanced by the hospital, that if the need for restraint on an X-ray table or gurney was obvious to all, the failure to restrain was ordinary negligence. The court found that this standard was incompatible with the subsequently enacted statutory definition of professional negligence in Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5(2) (50 Cal. App. 4th 797, 808) .

[d] 90-Day Tolling Applies to Defendant Given Notice Who is Substituted in for Doe Defendant

In Davis v. Marin (2000) 80 Cal. App. 4th 380, 94 Cal. Rptr. 2d 896 , the plaintiff was burned on December 6, 1996, while undergoing treatment using a muscle stimulator machine administered by her chiropractor. She told the chiropractor about the burns the next day, and she decided to bring a lawsuit within two or three days after suffering the burns. The plaintiff's attorney sent the chiropractor a notice of intent to sue on December 1, 1997. On December 2, 1997, the plaintiff's attorney filed the lawsuit, identified as an action for products liability and medical malpractice. However, the complaint listed only Doe defendants in the medical malpractice action. On February 24, 1998, an amendment to the complaint was filed naming the chiropractor as a defendant. The chiropractor filed a motion for summary judgment alleging that the action against her was barred by the statute of limitations. The chiropractor argued that because the plaintiff knew the chiropractor's identity when the complaint was filed, the amendment to the complaint did not relate back to the original filing and the action against the chiropractor was thus barred by limitations. The chiropractor also argued that the 90-day tolling period was inapplicable because Code Civ. Proc. § 364, by its own terms, does not apply to any defendant whose name was unknown to the plaintiff and who was identified by a fictitious name. The trial court granted the chiropractor's motion for summary judgment.

The court of appeal reversed. The court agreed with the plaintiff that because a timely notice of intent to sue was given to the chiropractor, the plaintiff had until the first week of March 1998 to file a timely complaint against her. Because the amendment naming the chiropractor was filed in February 1998, the chiropractor was brought into the lawsuit in a timely fashion (80 Cal. App. 4th 380, 386) . The court rejected the chiropractor's argument that the 90-day tolling period was inapplicable because Code Civ. Proc. § 364 does not apply to any defendant whose name was unknown to the plaintiff and who was identified by a fictitious name, because the chiropractor's identity was known to the plaintiff, and timely notice of intent to sue was given (80 Cal. App. 4th 380, 386) . In addition, because the plaintiff had tolled the statute of limitations as to the chiropractor and the amendment adding the chiropractor as a named defendant was therefore filed prior to expiration of the applicable limitations period, the question of whether the amendment "related back" to the original complaint was irrelevant (80 Cal. App. 4th 380, 386-387) .

[e] Compliance With Service Statutes Not Mandatory

In Jones v. Catholic Healthcare West (2007) 147 Cal. App. 4th 300, 54 Cal. Rptr. 3d 148 , plaintiff was injured when she fell in her hospital room the day after undergoing hip replacement surgery. Some 11-and-a-half months later, her attorney sent a letter to the president of the hospital, describing the circumstances of the injury and asking the hospital to assume financial responsibility. Two weeks later, the attorney faxed to the president a tolling agreement extending the period for serving a notice of intent to sue for three additional months. The president signed this agreement, as well as two subsequent agreements faxed to the president, also extending the time for filing a notice of intent to sue. However, the president did not sign a fourth tolling agreement. On the last day on which to file a notice of intent to sue pursuant to the third tolling agreement, plaintiff's attorney faxed to the president a notice of intent to sue. Slightly less than 90 days later, plaintiff filed suit against the hospital. The trial court granted summary judgment for the defendants after finding that the notice of intent to sue did not toll the statute of limitations because it failed to comply with Code Civ. Proc. § 1010 et seq., which generally requires that effective service by fax requires a written agreement between the parties. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. The court noted that Code Civ. Proc. § 364(c) states that the notice of intent to sue "may" be served in the manner prescribed by Code Civ. Proc. § 1010 et seq., and that use of the word "may" suggests that compliance with those provisions for service is discretionary. Thus, the court concluded that when serving a notice of intent to sue, compliance with Code of Civil Procedure Sections 1010 et seq. is not mandatory. To buttress its conclusion, the court noted that other provisions of the same statute use the word "shall" to indicate when compliance is mandatory, and the statute specifically states that "no particular form of notice is required" (147 Cal. App. 4th 300, 307) . The court went on to state, however, that a plaintiff who does not comply with the provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 1010 et seq. must show that defendant received actual notice of the intent to sue to toll the limitations period for 90 days. The court concluded that the plaintiff had established through evidence of past course of conduct between the parties that plaintiff's attorney could reasonably rely on defendant receiving actual notice by faxing the notice to the hospital president. As such, the notice provided by plaintiff's attorney was effective to extend the limitations period and the suit was timely filed (147 Cal. App. 4th 300, 308-309) .

§ 175.46 Opposing Contention That Action Is Barred by Statute of Limitations [Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5]--Statutory Tolling Provisions Not Found in MICRA Apply to One-Year Period of Limitation

[1] FORM

PLAINTIFF'S MEDICAL MALPRACTICE ACTION IS NOT BARRED BY THE ONE-YEAR LIMITATIONS PERIOD OF CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE SECTION 340.5 BECAUSE THAT LIMITATIONS PERIOD WAS TOLLED BY_____ [specify tolling statute, e.g., CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE SECTION 352.1].

A. One-Year Limitations Period May Be Tolled by Non-MICRA Tolling Provisions. The one-year limitations period of Code of Civil Procedure Section 340.5 may be tolled by statutory tolling provisions that are found outside of MICRA (see Belton v. Bowers Ambulance Serv. (1999) 20 Cal. 4th 928, 930-935, 86 Cal. Rptr. 2d 107, 978 P.2d 591 ; Alcott Rehab. Hosp. v. Superior Court (2001) 93 Cal. App. 4th 94, 101, 112 Cal. Rptr. 2d 807).

[Optional] B. One-Year Period of Limitations Is Tolled by Incarceration. Pursuant to Code of Civil Procedure Section 352.1, the one-year limitations period of Code of Civil Procedure Section 340.5 may be tolled for up to two years while the plaintiff is incarcerated, if the cause of action for professional negligence accrued while the plaintiff was imprisoned on a criminal charge or in execution of a criminal sentence for a term less than life (Belton v. Bowers Ambulance Serv. (1999) 20 Cal. 4th 928, 930-935, 86 Cal. Rptr. 2d 107, 978 P.2d 591).

[Optional] C. One-Year Period of Limitations Is Tolled by Insanity. The tolling provision for insanity found in Code of Civil Procedure Section 352 applies to the one-year limitations period of Code of Civil Procedure Section 340.5 (Alcott Rehab. Hosp. v. Superior Court (2001) 93 Cal. App. 4th 94, 101, 112 Cal. Rptr. 2d 807).

[Optional] D. One-Year Period Tolled by Defendant's Absence From State. The tolling provision of Code of Civil Procedure Section 351 applicable when a defendant is out of the state applies to the one-year limitations period of Code of Civil Procedure Section 340.5 (Kaplan v. Mamelak (2008) 162 Cal. App. 4th 637, 643, 75 Cal. Rptr. 3d 861).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a defendant's contention that an action for medical malpractice is barred by the statute of limitations. The ground for opposition is that the one-year limitations period of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 was tolled under an applicable tolling provision found outside MICRA.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the point of law stated with the facts of the case. Thus, counsel should provide facts showing the applicability of a statutory tolling provision. Counsel should be aware that the three-year maximum limitations period of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 is unaffected by tolling provisions found in another statute.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] One-Year Limitations Period May Be Tolled by Non-MICRA Tolling Provisions

Belton v. Bowers Ambulance Serv. (1999) 20 Cal. 4th 928, 86 Cal. Rptr. 2d 107, 978 P.2d 591 , is discussed in § 175.46[3][b].

Alcott Rehab. Hosp. v. Superior Court (2001) 93 Cal. App. 4th 94, 112 Cal. Rptr. 2d 807 , is discussed in § 175.46[3][c].

[b] One-Year Period of Limitations Is Tolled by Incarceration

In Belton v. Bowers Ambulance Serv. (1999) 20 Cal. 4th 928, 86 Cal. Rptr. 2d 107, 978 P.2d 591 , the plaintiff, a federal prison inmate, brought an action for professional negligence against an ambulance service for injuries allegedly sustained when the plaintiff was transported from prison to a hospital. The action was filed one year and one week after the alleged injury. The defendant demurred to the action, arguing that it was barred by Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 since it was filed more than one-year after the plaintiff discovered the injury, which all parties agreed was the day the injury allegedly occurred. The trial court sustained the demurrer, but the court of appeal reversed.

The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment of the court of appeal reversing the trial court's ruling. The Court agreed with the court of appeal that Code Civ. Proc. § 352.1, which provides for up to a two-year extension for filing a suit that accrues while a plaintiff is incarcerated, applies to the one-year limitations period of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5. The Court recognized that under the plain language of the statute, the three-year limitations period of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 may only be tolled by resort to one of the three specified tolling provisions of that statute, but that there was no similar restriction on the tolling of the one-year limitations period. The Court noted that there was nothing in the language of either Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 or Code Civ. Proc. § 352.1, nor in the policy underlying MICRA, that prevented applying the tolling provision for incarceration to the one-year limitations period, so long the action was filed within the three-year maximum limitations period for professional negligence actions against a health care provider. In reaching its decision, the Court specifically disapproved the contrary holding of Hollingsworth v. Kofoed (1996) 45 Cal. App. 4th 423, 52 Cal. Rptr. 2d 808 , which had held that Code Civ. Proc. § 352.1 did not apply to either limitations period of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 (20 Cal. 4th 928, 930-935) .

[c] One-Year Period of Limitations Is Tolled by Insanity

In Alcott Rehab. Hosp. v. Superior Court (2001) 93 Cal. App. 4th 94, 112 Cal. Rptr. 2d 807 , the plaintiff was a mentally incompetent woman who brought suit, through a guardian ad litem, against a nursing facility for medical malpractice basedon allegations that the facility severely neglected the plaintiff while she was a patient, resulting in conditions that necessitated amputation of both the plaintiff's legs. The suit was filed almost 14 months after the plaintiff ordered copies of her medical records. The defendant filed a motion for summary adjudication, arguing that the one-year limitations began to run when the plaintiff ordered her medical records, which would have put a reasonable person on notice of potential wrongdoing by the facility. Therefore, according to the defendant, the plaintiff could not recover for any alleged wrongdoing that took place before the records were received. Although both parties agreed that the applicable limitations period was that found in Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5, the plaintiff argued that the one-year limitations period was tolled under Code Civ. Proc. § 352 because she was insane. The defendant argued that the one-year limitations period could not be tolled under Code Civ. Proc. § 352. The trial court agreed with the plaintiff and denied the defendant's motion for summary adjudication. The defendant petitioned for writ of mandate.

The court of appeal denied the petition. Noting that the defendant did not dispute whether the plaintiff was "insane" under Code Civ. Proc. § 352, the court of appeal reviewed the Supreme Court's decision in Belton v. Bowers Ambulance Serv. (1999) 20 Cal. 4th 928, 86 Cal. Rptr. 2d 107, 978 P.2d 591 [see § 175.46[3][b]]. Under the holding and rationale of Belton, the court of appeal held that the one-year limitations period of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 may be tolled by a general tolling statute and is tolled pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 352 if the plaintiff is insane (93 Cal. App. 4th 94, 101-104) . The court rejected a contrary holding provided by an earlier court of appeal decision that clearly seemed inconsistent with the Supreme Court's analysis in Belton (93 Cal. App. 4th 94, 104-105) .

[d] One-Year Period Tolled by Defendant's Absence From State

In Kaplan v. Mamelak (2008) 162 Cal. App. 4th 637, 75 Cal. Rptr. 3d 861 , plaintiff suffered a back injury and underwent surgery on his spine to repair a herniated disk. After recovery from surgery, plaintiff continued to have pain and an MRI revealed that the surgeon had operated on the wrong disk. On September 11, 2002, the surgeon discussed this at a meeting with the plaintiff, and a second surgery was scheduled for later in the month. The surgeon again operated on the wrong disk. A third surgery was performed by a different surgeon to correct the herniated disk. On September 17, 2003, plaintiff filed a notice of intent to sue the original surgeon for medical malpractice, and suit was filed less than 90 days later on December 15, 2003. Trial was bifurcated in order to adjudicate first defendant's claim that the lawsuit was untimely because the notice of intent to sue was not filed within one year of the date of the meeting at which defendant admitted he had operated on the wrong disk. During pretrial discovery, plaintiff sought to discover whether facts existed that would toll the one-year limitations period of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 351 due to defendant's absence from the state. However, the court ruled that Code Civ. Proc. § 351 did not apply to medical malpractice actions and denied plaintiff the discovery he sought. The jury returned a special verdict finding that plaintiff was on notice of wrongdoing on September 11, 2002, and the trial court entered judgment in favor of the surgeon. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. Citing the Supreme Court's holding in Belton v. Bowers Ambulance Service, discussed in [b], above, the court held that Code Civ. Proc. § 351 did apply to the one-year limitations period of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5. Recognizing that the Court in Belton had been applying a different tolling statute, the court of appeals noted that the Supreme Court's holding had been based on a careful reading of the statute of limitations language in the MICRA statute, rather than on the non-MICRA tolling provision being applied. Thus, the court of appeal concluded that the Supreme Court's rationale applied equally to application of the non-MICRA tolling provision of Code Civ. Proc. § 351 ( 162 Cal. App. 4th 637, 642-643) . Although defendant testified that he was outside California no more than three days during the relevant limitations period, the court of appeal held that the trial court erred in not allowing plaintiff to pursue pre-trial discovery that might have led to facts sufficient to toll the limitations period for a total of six days, which would have been sufficient to render the action timely (162 Cal. App. 4th 637, 644-645) .

[1] FORM

PLAINTIFF'S MEDICAL MALPRACTICE ACTION IS NOT BARRED BECAUSE PLAINTIFF SERVED NOTICE PURSUANT TO CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE *SECTION 364(a) WI*THIN 90 DAYS OF THE EXPIRATION OF THE THREE YEAR STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS, AND THAT NOTICE TOLLED THE LIMITATION PERIOD.

Three Year Period of Limitation Is Tolled for 90 Days. When a plaintiff files a notice of intent to sue required by to Code of Civil Procedure Section 364(a) in the last 90 days of a three-year limitations period, the three-year statute of limitations is tolled for 90 days (*Russell v. [2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a defendant's contention that an action for medical malpractice is barred by the statute of limitations. The ground for opposition is that the three-year limitations period was tolled for 90 days under Code Civ. Proc. § 364(d) because plaintiff filed a notice of intent required by Code Civ. Proc. § 364(a) within 90 days of the end of the three-year limitations period.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his orher case. For example, counsel should provide facts showing (1) the date the cause of action accrued, (2) the date the notice of intent was filed, (3) the date the complaint was filed, and (4) the date the three-year limitations period elapsed, taking the 90 day tolling period into account.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Three Year Period of Limitation Is Tolled for 90 Days.

In Russell v. Stanford Univ. Hosp. (1997) 15 Cal. 4th 783, 64 Cal. Rptr. 2d 97, 937 P.2d 640 , plaintiff received surgical treatment from defendants for a work-related injury to her wrist and thumb. Over two years later she allegedly discovered that defendants had acted negligently, causing disfigurement, and an inability to use her hand. Fifty-one days before the expiration of the three year statute of limitations for commencing medical malpractice actions plaintiff served defendants with notice of intention to commence an action. 90 days after service of the notice of intention, and more than three years after the date of injury she filed the complaint. Defendants moved for summary judgment on the ground that the action was untimely under Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5, because it was commenced more than three years after the date of injury. Plaintiff opposed the motion, arguing that the action was timely because the statute of limitations was tolled by her notice of intent to sue. The trial court granted the motion, bound by the appellate decision in Rewald v. San Pedro Peninsula Hosp. (1994) 27 Cal. App. 4th 480, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 411 , which held that the three-year limitations period is not tolled by service of the notice of intention to sue. Judgment was entered in favor of defendants and plaintiffappealed. Declining to follow Rewald, the court of appeal reversed. The Supreme Court granted review in order to resolve the conflict.

The Supreme Court affirmed the decision of the court of appeal, holding that the three-year statute of limitations, Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5, is "tolled" rather than "extended" for 90 days when the plaintiff gives notice of intent to sue in the last 90 days of the statutory period (15 Cal. 4th 783, 791) . Accordingly, the Court disapproved Rewald to the extent it was inconsistent with the holding in this case. In Woods v. Young (1991) 53 Cal. 3d 315, 279 Cal. Rptr. 613, 807 P.2d 455 [see § 175.45[3][a]], the Supreme Court had previously held that the one-year statute of limitations was "tolled" rather than "extended" for 90 days when a plaintiff gives notice of intent to sue in the last 90 days of the statutory period. The Russell court concluded that the same rule applies to the three year statute of limitations as applies to the one year statute both as a matter of statutory construction, and for the reasons expressed in Woods (15 Cal. 4th 783, 788) .

First, the Court explained the statutory conflict before it; Code Civ. Proc. § 364 extends--that is, as construed in Woods, tolls--the time for commencing a medical malpractice action for 90 days while Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 purports to limit plaintiffs in such actions only to the tolling provisions set forth in the statute. Next it applied the following rules of statutory construction to the conflicting MICRA provisions: (1) wherever possible, potentially conflicting provisions should be reconciled in order to carry out the overriding legislative purpose, and (2) if conflicting provisions of a statute cannot be harmonized, then, the provision that is positioned later in the statute normally controls the earlier provision. Guided by these principles, the Court concluded that Code Civ. Proc. § 364 applies equally to the one-year and three-year statutes of limitations for medical malpractice actions (15 Cal. 4th 783, 789) .

According to the Court, this construction of Code Civ. Proc. § 364(d) effectuates the legislative purpose of the provision, reducing the cost and increasing the efficiency of medical malpractice litigation by, encouraging negotiated resolution of disputes, and avoids the possibility that plaintiffs' attorneys will confront the professional dilemma addressed in Woods, i.e. a choice between preserving the plaintiff's cause of action by violating the 90-day notice period under Code Civ. Proc. § 364(d), thereby invoking potential disciplinary proceedings by the State Bar, and forfeiting the client's cause of action, without significant impact on the legislative goal of establishing a strict outside time limit for commencing negligence actions against health care providers. While the court acknowledged that one effect of this decision might conceivably be to extend the time for commencing a claim 90 days beyond the three year statute of limitations, it ruled that on balance the legislative interest in promoting negotiated resolution of medical malpractice disputes, must be deemed overriding [15 Cal. 4th 783, 790] .

§ 175.48 Opposing Contention That Medical Malpractice Action Based on Professional Negligence Is Barred by Statute of Limitations--One-Year Limit After Discovery of Nontherapeutic Foreign Body in Plaintiff's Body Regardless of When Injury Commenced

[1] FORM

PLAINTIFF'S ACTION BASED ON MEDICAL NEGLIGENCE IS NOT BARRED, BECAUSE DEFENDANT INTRODUCED A FOREIGN BODY INTO PLAINTIFF'S BODY THAT WAS THE NEGLIGENT CAUSE OF PLAINTIFF'S INJURY AND PLAINTIFF'S ACTION WAS BROUGHT WITHIN ONE YEAR OF PLAINTIFF'S DISCOVERY OF THE FOREIGN BODY.

A. Three-Year Limitation Period. A medical malpractice action based on professional negligence generally must be commenced within three years from the date of the alleged wrongful act. However, this period may be tolled by the presence of a foreign body in the person injured, provided that such body has no therapeutic or diagnostic purpose or effect (Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5).

B. One-Year Discovery Limitation Period Delayed Under Foreign Body Exception. The foreign body exception to Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 delays the start of the statute's one-year discovery limitation period until plaintiff discovers or through reasonable diligence would have discovered that the the foreign body was the negligent cause of his or her injuries (Ashworth v. Memorial Hosp. (1988) 206 Cal. App. 3d 1046, 1054, 254 Cal. Rptr. 104).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a contention that plaintiff's complaint for medical malpractice is barred by the statute of limitations period of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5. The ground for opposition is that when the negligent cause of the plaintiff's injuries is a foreign body introduced by defendant, the plaintiff may commence the action at any time within one year of discovery of the object, or within one year of the time when plaintiff reasonably should have discovered the object.

In an appropriate case, this memorandum may be submitted in opposition to the contention that the action is barred by the statute of limitations supported by the points and authorities in § 175.37.

[b] Argument

[c] Separate Trial of Statute of Limitations Defense

Any party, or the court itself, may move for a separate trial based on the defense that an action is barred by the statute of limitations, if the defense is pleaded in the answer. If the issue is resolved in favor of the plaintiff, the remaining issues are then tried [Code Civ. Proc. § 597.5].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] One-Year Discovery Limitation Period Delayed Under Foreign Body Exception

The plaintiffs in Ashworth v. Memorial Hosp. (1988) 206 Cal. App. 3d 1046, 254 Cal. Rptr. 104 , a patient and her husband, filed a lawsuit for medical malpractice and loss of consortium in November 1977, after kidney surgery by defendants had resulted in an infectious abscess and other serious complications. This lawsuit was dismissed, without prejudice, in late 1982 for failure to prosecute. In November 1983, another physician operated on plaintiff and discovered two sponges near her left kidney. After this physician removed the sponges, the patient no longer suffered from the abscess. The physician told the patient that there was a high degree of medical probability that the sponges were a major causal factor in her infection, and that failure by the defendants to remove the sponges constituted negligence. In November 1985, plaintiffs filed another lawsuit against defendants, alleging medical malpractice and loss of consortium, citing the negligent failure to remove the sponges as the act of malpractice that proximately caused the injuries. In March 1987, defendants filed a summary judgment motion. The trial court found there was a triable issue of whether the sponges had a therapeutic purpose and effect, but nevertheless issued a minute order granting summary judgment for defendants. The court held that the dismissal of the first case barred the second case, evidently on grounds of res judicata or collateral estoppel. Judgment was entered, and plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. On appeal, defendants conceded that the trial court erred when it apparently grounded summary judgment on res judicata/collateral estoppel grounds; the dismissal of the 1977 case was without prejudice, and therefore did not bar the 1984 case. However, the defendants argued an alternative ground for sustaining the summary judgment: that the plaintiffs' 1984 complaint was not timely filed under Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5. Defendants contended that the patient discovered her malpractice action no later than 1977, and that, consequently, the statute of limitations expired in 1978. Defendants asserted that the filing of the 1977 case constituted irrefutable evidence that the plaintiffs had discovered their malpractice cause of action against defendants by that time. The court of appeal rejected defendants' arguments. It noted that under Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5, the plaintiff generally must file within one year after he or she discovers the injury and the negligent cause of that injury, and plaintiff must file within three years after he or she first experiences harm from the injury. However, the three-year period is tolled with respect to "the presence of a foreign body, which has no therapeutic or diagnostic purpose or effect, in the person of the injured person" (206 Cal. App. 3d 1046, 1054) . The court held that this "foreign body exception"also delays the start of the one-year discovery limitation period of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 until plaintiff discovers or through reasonable diligence would have discovered the foreign body as the negligent cause of his or her injuries (206 Cal. App. 3d 1046, 1058) . The court concluded that the patient did not discover that the sponges were the proximate cause of her infectious abscess until her November 1983 operation, when her new doctor discovered them (206 Cal. App. 3d 1046, 1062-1063) . From that date, plaintiffs had one year to file a complaint (206 Cal. App. 3d 1046, 1063) . The court found it irrelevant that the plaintiffs were generally aware of the patient's injury in 1977 when they filed the first lawsuit; tolling under the "foreign body exception" continues until the patient discovers, or through reasonable diligence would have discovered, the foreign body itself and the role the foreign body played in the patient's suffering (206 Cal. App. 3d 1046, 1064) . The court concluded that summary judgment was inappropriate concerning the cause of action for injuries proximately caused by the sponges, since triable issues remained concerning whether the sponges were nontherapeutic in purpose and effect by the time they were removed, and whether, later than one year before she filed the second action, the patient discovered or should have discovered that the sponges existed in her body and were the negligent cause of her injury (206 Cal. App. 3d 1046, 1065) .

§ 175.49 Opposing Contention That Medical Malpractice Action Based on Professional Negligence Is Barred by Statute of Limitations [Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5]--Action for Failure to Obtain Informed Consent

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF'S ACTION BASED ON MEDICAL NEGLIGENCE IS NOT BARRED, BECAUSE THE ACTION FOR FAILURE TO OBTAIN INFORMED CONSENT WAS FILED WITHIN ONE YEAR OF THE MANIFESTATION OF AN UNDISCLOSED COMPLICATION.

A. Applicable Limitation Period. A medical malpractice action based on professional negligence generally must be commenced within three years from the date of injury or one year after the plaintiff discovers, or through the use of reasonable diligence should have discovered the injury, whichever time period expires first (Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5).

B. Cause of Action Accrues When Undisclosed Complication Occurs. An action for failure to obtain informed consent accrues on the occurrence of the undisclosed, not disclosed complication (Warren v. Schecter (1997) 57 Cal. App. 4th 1189, 1202, 67 Cal. Rptr. 2d 573).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that plaintiff's complaint for medical malpractice is barred by the statute of limitations period of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5. The ground for opposition is that the action for failure to obtain informed was filed within one year of the manifestation of an undisclosed complication and this action accrues on the occurrence of the undisclosed, not the disclosed complication.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should discuss the circumstances surrounding the initial disclosure by the physician, show facts demonstrating that plaintiff filed the action within one year of the first manifestation of undisclosed complications, and argue that the action was therefore not barred by the statute of limitations.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Cause of Action Accrues When Undisclosed Complication Occurs

In Warren v. Schecter (1997) 57 Cal. App. 4th 1189, 67 Cal. Rptr. 2d 573 , plaintiff, a woman with a stomach ulcer, consulted defendant surgeonabout the surgical removal of the portions of her stomach containing the ulcer. Although one of the well-known significant risks of gastric surgery is decreased calcium absorption, leading to early and severe metabolic bone disease, the surgeon did not discuss these risks with plaintiff prior to surgery. Defendant did advise plaintiff that she might experience bowel obstruction and also informed her of other risks, including "dumping syndrome," nausea and the slight risk of death from the administering of anesthesia. Based on the limited risks disclosed, plaintiff consented to the surgery. Following the surgery, plaintiff developed "dumping syndrome" and "alkaline reflux gastritis." Three years after the initial surgery, plaintiff returned to the surgeon who recommended a second surgery to relieve the pain and discomfort from the first surgery. While the second surgery enhanced the risk of bone disease, defendant again failed to advise plaintiff of this risk. Plaintiff experienced the first manifestation of bone disease nearly eight years after her first surgery and almost five years after the second surgery, when she fractured her back by turning over in bed. Plaintiff was taken to the emergency room where she first learned that severe metabolic bone disease was a common side effect of the surgeries she had undergone. Plaintiff then sued defendant for medical negligence arguing that defendant was liable under an informed consent theory for performing surgery without advising her of the risk of bone disease. The action was bifurcated and the first phase involved the statute of limitations defense. The jury returned a special verdict finding that plaintiff had filed her action in a timely fashion under Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5.

The court of appeal affirmed. On appeal, defendant contended that the action was time-barred because it was filed more than three years after plaintiff admitted she suffered serious medical complications as a result of the defendant's alleged negligence. Specifically, the surgeon argued that the cause of action accrued on the occurrence of the disclosed complications, such as dumping syndrome. The court dismissed this argument as meritless, because an action for failure to obtain informed consent lies where an undisclosed inherent complication occurs, not where a disclosed complication occurs. Since the complications which did occur more than three years before plaintiff filed suit, such as the dumping syndrome, were complications of which she had previously been warned, the appearance of those complications did not give rise to a cause of action for failure to obtain informed consent (57 Cal. App. 4th 1189, 1202) .

§ 175.50 Supporting Contention That Res Ipsa Loquitur Doctrine Is Applicable to Medical Malpractice Action--Evidence Supports Inference of Defendant's Negligence as Cause of Injury

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE DOCTRINE OF RES IPSA LOQUITUR MAY BE APPLIED IN A MEDICAL MALPRACTICE ACTION WHEN THE EVIDENCE SUPPORTS A FINDING THAT PLAINTIFF'S INJURY WAS MORE PROBABLY THAN NOT THE RESULT OF DEFENDANT'S NEGLIGENCE.

A. Res Ipsa Loquitur Doctrine. A presumption of negligence affecting the burden of producing evidence arises when plaintiff establishes (1) that the injury that occurred is the kind that does not ordinarily occur in the absence of negligence; (2) that the injury was caused by an agency or instrumentality in the exclusive control of defendant; and (3) that the injury was not due to any voluntary action or contribution on the part of plaintiff (Ybarra v. Spangard (1944) 25 Cal. 2d 486, 489, 154 P.2d 687 ; see also Cal. L. Rev. Comm. Comment to Evid. Code § 646).

B. Sufficiency of Evidence to Support Doctrine. The res ipsa loquitur doctrine is applicable in a medical malpractice case when the evidence supports a finding that the injury is the type that would not ordinarily occur in the absence of negligence and that defendant is probably the responsible person (Kerr v. Bock (1971) 5 Cal. 3d 321, 324, 95 Cal. Rptr. 788, 486 P.2d 684).

C. Inference Based on Common Knowledge. If the medical procedure at issue is commonplace and simple, a jury may properly rely on its common knowledge in determining whether the accident is the type that would ordinarily not occur in the absence of negligence (Bardessono v. Michels (1970) 3 Cal. 3d 780, 790, 91 Cal. Rptr. 760, 478 P.2d 480).

D. Evidence Viewed in Favor of Proponent. In determining whether plaintiff is entitled to application of the res ipsa loquitur doctrine, the evidence must be viewed in the light most favorable to plaintiff (Kerr v. Bock (1971) 5 Cal. 3d 321, 324, 95 Cal. Rptr. 788, 486 P.2d 684).

[Optional] E. Presumption May Be Applied to Surgeon for Violation of Nondelegable Duty. A surgeon cannot escape application of the res ipsa loquitur doctrine by arguing that a nurse assisting with surgery was responsible for violating a duty that is ultimately the surgeon's responsibility (Baumgardner v. Yusuf (2006) 144 Cal. App. 4th 1381, 1390-1395, 51 Cal. Rptr. 3d 277).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a plaintiff's contention that the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur should be applied to the case when the evidence supports an inference that the injury more probably than not resulted from defendant's negligence. This argument would arise in a medical malpractice action when plaintiff is unable to offer direct proof that defendant's negligence is the cause of the injuries.

These points and authorities may be combined, when appropriate, with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue of the res ipsa loquitur doctrine. If appropriate, counsel should also add points and authorities supporting the contention that a new trial should be granted for failure to give a res ipsa loquitur jury instruction. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in an appellate brief.

[b] Argument

[d] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities in § 175.51 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose the contention supported by this memorandum that the res ipsa loquitur doctrine is applicable.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Res Ipsa Loquitur Doctrine

In Ybarra v. Spangard (1944) 25 Cal. 2d 486, 154 P.2d 687 , a medical malpractice action brought for injuries suffered while the patient was unconscious during surgery, the Supreme Court allowed the plaintiff to invoke the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur in order to raise a rebuttable presumption of defendants' negligence upon his establishment of three conditions: (1) that the accident which occurred was of the kind that ordinarily does not occur in the absence of someone's negligence; (2) that it was caused by an agency or instrumentality within the exclusive control of the defendant; and (3) that it was not due to any voluntary action or contribution on the part of the plaintiff (25 Cal. 2d 486, 489) .

[b] Sufficiency of Evidence to Support Doctrine

In Kerr v. Bock (1971) 5 Cal. 3d 321, 95 Cal. Rptr. 788, 486 P.2d 684 , plaintiff's leg was broken when she lifted it following surgery in which defendant had removed a portion of the bone. Plaintiff requested a res ipsa loquitur instruction that was refused by the trial court, after which the jury held for defendant.

The Supreme Court reversed the verdict, finding that plaintiff had presented sufficient evidence to support an inference of negligence from defendant's failure to instruct her regarding postoperative use of her leg. The application of the res ipsa loquitur doctrine in medical malpractice cases, held the Court, is appropriate when plaintiff has presented sufficient evidence to support a jury's inference that the injury was probably the result of negligence and that defendant is probably the responsible person (5 Cal. 3d 321, 324) . In this case, the Court found that common sense alone would support a finding that defendant's failure to instruct plaintiff not to lift her leg horizontally until after the bone had healed constituted negligence (5 Cal. 3d 321, 324-325) .

[c] Inference Based on Common Knowledge

In Bardessono v. Michels (1970) 3 Cal. 3d 780, 91 Cal. Rptr. 760, 478 P.2d 480 , a malpractice action based on negligently administered injections, the trial court instructed the jury on the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, telling them that they could rely on both expert testimony and their own common knowledge about the injury to infer negligence by defendant. The jury held for plaintiff, and defendant moved for a new trial, partially on the ground that the res ipsa loquitur instruction was inappropriate.

The Supreme Court affirmed the verdict and approved the trial court's jury instruction. In a lengthy discussion of the res ipsa loquitur doctrine in the medical malpractice context, the Court noted the divergence regarding the requirementthat such an instruction be supported by expert testimony on the issue of negligence. In cases involving complex or uncommon procedures, held the Court, the trier of fact must rely on expert testimony as to whether the physician's negligence caused the injury. However, the jury may infer negligence from the fact of the accident alone based solely on its common knowledge when the medical procedure involved is commonplace or relatively simple. The Court noted numerous injection cases in which courts had held the procedure to be simple, commonplace, and comprehensible to a jury as a matter of common knowledge and personal experience (3 Cal. 3d 780, 790-791) . Evidence had been presented in this case that the injections given to plaintiff were a common treatment for his condition, and usually caused no untoward results. Hence, the procedure at issue could be considered a relatively simple matter from which a jury could infer negligence based on common knowledge, and the res ipsa instruction was therefore proper (3 Cal. 3d 780, 793) .

[d] Evidence Viewed in Favor of Proponent

The facts and procedural background of Kerr v. Bock (1971) 5 Cal. 3d 321, 95 Cal. Rptr. 788, 486 P.2d 684 , are discussed in § 175.50[3][b]. The Supreme Court upheld the use of the res ipsa loquitur doctrine, stating that in determining whether plaintiff was entitled to the benefit of the doctrine, the evidence must be viewed in the light most favorable to her (5 Cal. 3d 321, 323) .

[e] Presumption May Be Applied to Surgeon for Violation of Nondelegable Duty

In Baumgardner v. Yusuf (2006) 144 Cal. App. 4th 1381, 51 Cal. Rptr. 3d 277 , plaintiff suffered injuries caused by a sponge that was left in her leg during surgery. She sued the hospital and the operating surgeon. The hospital settled and the suit against the surgeon went to trial. The surgeon argued that he was not negligent because the hospital's protocol placed responsibility for counting and monitoring sponges during surgery on the hospital's nursing staff, and the surgeon checked with the nursing staff before finishing the surgery and was told that the sponges had all been removed.

In addition, the surgeon visually checked the patient's body and saw no remaining sponges. The trial court refused to instruct the jury on the res ipsa loquitur doctrine, the nondelegable duty of a surgeon, or the "captain of the ship" doctrine, and the jury returned a verdict for the surgeon. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. The court held that a surgeon cannot escape application of the res ipsa loquitur doctrine by arguing that a nurse assisting with surgery was responsible for violating a duty that is ultimately the responsibility of the surgeon. The court noted that under established law, a surgeon has a nondelegable duty to ensure that all sponges and other foreign objects are removed from a patient before a surgery is completed (144 Cal. App. 4th 1381, 1393-1395) . The court concluded that because the surgeon has ultimate responsibility to control the details of a surgery, application of the res ipsa loquitur doctrine is appropriate in a suit against the surgeon when a sponge or other foreign object is inadvertently left in a patient's body after surgery (144 Cal. App. 4th 1381, 1390-1392) . Although the hospital's own protocol may have placed responsibility for monitoring this part of the surgery on the hospital's nursing staff, the surgeon remained responsible for ensuring that no foreign objects were left in the patient, even if the surgeon checked with the nursing staff before completing the surgery (144 Cal. App. 4th 1381, 1399, 51 Cal. Rptr. 3d 277).

[a] Res Ipsa Loquitur Doctrine

In Blackwell v. Hurst (1996) 46 Cal. App. 4th 939, 54 Cal. Rptr. 2d 209 , a wrongful death action was brought against a dentist based on alleged negligence in not taking reasonable precautions to prevent the patient from aspirating an object dropped by the dentist into the patient's mouth. The dentist had dropped a temporary crown on the patient's tongue, and she aspirated the crown into her lung. The patient subsequently died of complications from the medical procedures to retrieve the crown. Plaintiff requested jury instructions on res ipsa loquitur. The trial court refused the requested instructions, and the jury returned a defense verdict. The court of appeal noted that evidence of rarity, coupled with some other evidence indicating negligence, may warrant a res ipsa loquitur instruction. Since plaintiff's expert had testified that aspiration of an object is a rarity, and that failure to take precautions is negligence, this case was appropriate for such an instruction. Furthermore, the court found that the use of the res ipsa loquitur doctrine is especially suited to a medical or dental malpractice setting in which the unwitting and often unconscious or semiconscious patient is at an evidentiary disadvantage because of an inability to demonstrate what occurred in the hospital or surgical room setting (46 Cal. App. 4th 939, 945) . The court thus reversed the judgment for the defendant because of the failure to provide the requested res ipsa loquitur instruction.

§ 175.51 Opposing Contention That Res Ipsa Loquitur Doctrine Is Applicable to Action--Plaintiff Failed to Produce Expert Testimony on Issue of Negligence as Probable Cause of Injury

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE DOCTRINE OF RES IPSA LOQUITUR MAY NOT BE APPLIED IN A MEDICAL MALPRACTICE ACTION BASED ON NEGLIGENCE WHENPLAINTIFF FAILS TO PRODUCE EXPERT TESTIMONY ON THE ISSUE OF DEFENDANT'S NEGLIGENCE AS THE PROBABLE CAUSE OF THE INJURY ALLEGED.

Requirement of Expert Testimony. In medical malpractice cases, when the circumstances are not a matter of common lay knowledge, the plaintiff must support application of the res ipsa loquitur doctrine with expert testimony demonstrating that the alleged injury does not ordinarily occur in the absence of negligence in rendering the medical services involved in the particular case (Contreras v. St. Luke's Hosp. (1978) 78 Cal. App. 3d 919, 930-931, 144 Cal. Rptr. 647).

[2] Comments

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a plaintiff's contention that the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur be applied to the case. The ground of opposition set forth is plaintiff's failure to produce the required expert testimony on the issue of whether the alleged injury is the type that does not normally occur in the absence of medical negligence.

This form of points and authorities may be combined, when appropriate, with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue of the inapplicability of the res ipsa loquitur doctrine. In addition, if appropriate, counsel should add pointsand authorities supporting the contention that a new trial should be granted for giving a res ipsa loquitur instruction not warranted by the evidence. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in an appellate brief.

In an appropriate case, this memorandum may be submitted in opposition to the contention that the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur should be applied to the case supported by the points and authorities in § 175.50.

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Requirement of Expert Testimony

In Contreras v. St. Luke's Hosp. (1978) 78 Cal. App. 3d 919, 144 Cal. Rptr. 647 , plaintiff brought a malpractice action based on allegedly negligent medical treatment resulting in a knee infection following surgery. At trial, plaintiff presented no expert testimony other than that of an intern who had not been present during the operation and who was not questioned regarding the possibility of negligence. The trial court granted defendants' motions for nonsuit, and plaintiff appealed.

Plaintiff contended that the evidence presented to the trial court was sufficient to support a judgment in his favor under the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur. The court of appeal rejected this contention and affirmed the judgment on the ground that plaintiff had presented no expert testimony regarding defendants' negligence. The use of the res ipsa loquitur doctrine in medical malpractice cases, held the court, requires that the likelihood of negligence be established by expert evidence when the matter is not within the common knowledge of laymen (78 Cal. App. 3d 919, 930) . Plaintiff had produced no expert testimony to the effect that a knee infection after his type of surgery did not ordinarily occur in the absence of negligence, and the medical issue involved was not within common knowledge. The court stated that in the absence of such testimony, it could not properly find for the existence of such a probability and thus could not apply the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur (78 Cal. App. 3d 919, 931) .

[a] Requirement of Expert Testimony

In Curtis v. Santa Clara Valley Med. Ctr. (2003) 110 Cal. App. 4th 796, 2 Cal. Rptr. 3d 73 , the plaintiff underwent spinal surgery requiring him to lie on his stomach for over six hours, with his head supported on a foam pillow that had cutouts for his eyes and nose. Following surgery, the plaintiff's shoulders, neck, and face became severely swollen, a complication often caused by a prolonged period in the prone position used in the surgery. Because of these complications, the plaintiff sustained blindness in one eye and significant visual impairment in the other eye. The plaintiff sued the medical center and the affiliated county for malpractice, intending to rely on the res ipsa loquitur doctrine to establish negligence without the use of expert medical testimony. The trial court granted nonsuit for the defendants, and the court of appeal affirmed. The court held that expert testimony was required to establish that the defendants were negligent during the spinal surgery. Although a lay person might think that negligence could be presumed, given the type of complication that developed from the spinal surgery, the court noted that the plaintiff's resulting blindness is a known, albeit rare, complication that may occur from such surgery, even in the absence of negligence. As such, negligence could not be presumed merely from the fact of blindness, and the plaintiff was required to offer expert testimony showing that the defendants breached the applicable standard of care during surgery. Because the plaintiff proffered no such evidence, nonsuit in favor of the defendants was appropriate (110 Cal. App. 4th 796, 802-803) .

In Elcome v. Chin (2003) 110 Cal. App. 4th 310, 1 Cal. Rptr. 3d 631 , the plaintiff, who had undergone pelvic surgery, awoke from the anesthesia and found herself suffering from pain in her right arm that she had not experienced before the surgery. She sued the surgeon, the assisting surgeon, and the hospital, arguing that under the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, they were liable for negligence even though she could not prove exactly what caused her post-surgery pain. The assisting surgeon and the hospital were granted summary judgment after each produced expert declarations supporting their arguments that they were not negligent inperforming their duties. The court of appeal affirmed. The court held that the plaintiff had failed to raise a triable issue of fact as to whether those defendants were negligent or had caused the injuries. The defendants' declarations shifted the burden to the plaintiff to provide either evidence of negligence and causation or evidence of the three elements of the res ipsa loquitur doctrine. The plaintiff made no attempt to provide evidence of negligence and causation and failed to provide sufficient evidence to proceed under a theory of res ipsa loquitur. The plaintiff offered no expert witness declarations on the cause of her injury, but merely her own lay testimony that she did not have the pain before surgery. She offered one expert declaration, although the expert did not offer an opinion on the cause of the plaintiff's pain, but merely provided an opinion that the pain about which the plaintiff complained would not normally follow pelvic surgery. The court noted that this declaration did not rule out other potential causes of the plaintiff's pain that could be unrelated to the surgery and that could be just as probable a cause as negligence. In the absence of any expert evidence on the cause of her pain, the plaintiff failed to carry her burden to prove both that the injury was of a kind that normally would not occur in the absence of negligence and that the injury was caused by an instrumentality in the exclusive control of the defendants. Therefore, summary judgment was proper (110 Cal. App. 4th 310, 318-321) .

[b] Argument

[a] Evidence Sufficient to Support Finding of Absence of Negligence or Proximate Cause

In Frantz v. San Luis Med. Clinic (1978) 81 Cal. App. 3d 34, 146 Cal. Rptr. 146 , a medical malpractice action based on a negligently administered injection, res ipsa loquitur instructions were given to the jury resulting in a verdict against defendants. The court of appeal reversed the verdict on the ground that the res ipsa loquitur instructions were erroneous and misleading. On plaintiff's request, a modified version of the instruction was given that erroneously imposed on defendants the burden of rebutting the inference of negligence by a preponderance of the evidence. As the court stated, the proper operation of the res ipsa loquitur doctrine is to create a presumption affecting the burden of producing evidence rather than the burden of proof (81 Cal. App. 3d 34, 42) . Under the proper burden, defendant need only produce evidence sufficient to sustain a finding that he or she was not negligent or that the negligence was not a proximate cause of the injury in order to rebut and remove the presumption of negligence (81 Cal. App. 3d 34, 43) .

In this case, the court found that defendants had produced expert testimony regarding other possible causes of plaintiff's injury, and that the evidence produced by plaintiff did not overwhelm such testimony. Thus, the erroneous instruction was held to have had the probable effect of misleading the jury and therefore constituted reversible error (81 Cal. App. 3d 34, 47) .

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT IS NOT LIABLE FOR BREACH OF CONTRACT IN A MEDICAL MALPRACTICE ACTION IN THE ABSENCE OF AN EXPRESS CONTRACT IN WHICH HE/SHE PROMISED A PARTICULAR RESULT AND ON WHICH THE PATIENT RELIED IN GIVING CONSENT TO TREATMENT.

Express Promise of Particular Result. To recover for breach of contract in a medical malpractice case, there must be proof of an express contract by which the physician clearly promises a particular result and the patient consents to treatment in reliance on that promise (McKinney v. Nash (1981) 120 Cal. App. 3d 428, 442, 174 Cal. Rptr. 642).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of defendant's contention that he or she is not liable for breach of contract in rendering medical treatment. The ground of support is based on the absence of an express contract by which the defendant promised a particular result and on which the plaintiff relied in consenting to treatment.

These points and authorities may be combined, when appropriate, with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue of the absence of the express contract. The points and authorities set forth in this form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

defendant promised a particular result of treatment and the lack of the patient's reliance on any such promise in consenting to treatment. For example, the absence of any comment by the physician other than a generalized reassurance that the treatment will have a good result counters a finding of the requisite specific promise [McKinney v. Nash (1981) 120 Cal. App. 3d 428, 442, 174 Cal. Rptr. 642] . Similarly, a physician's statement that a treatment usually has a certain result does not constitute an express promise as to that result [Depenbrok v. Kaiser Foundation Health Plan, Inc. (1978) 79 Cal. App. 3d 167, 171, 144 Cal. Rptr. 724] .

[c] Related Points and Authorities

For points and authorities relating to breach of contract actions generally, see Ch. 50, Contracts .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Express Promise of Particular Result

In McKinney v. Nash (1981) 120 Cal. App. 3d 428, 174 Cal. Rptr. 642 [also discussed in § 175.31[3][a]], plaintiff sought damages from two physicians for negligent performance of hernia surgery that resulted in impotence and testicular atrophy. One of the counts alleged in the action was the physicians' breach of contract in performing the surgery. The trial court ordered a directed verdict in favor of defendants, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed the judgment as to one defendant on the negligence count, but rejected plaintiff's claim of breach of contract. The court stated the rule that in a medical malpractice action, there can be no recovery based on breach of contract without proof of an express contract by which the physician clearly promises a particular result and the patient consents to treatment in reliance on that promise (120 Cal. App. 3d 428, 442) . In the present case, the surgeon had merely commented to plaintiff that the operation would be simple and without difficulty. Although such comments may have given rise to a negligence action for the physician's failure to inform of material risks, it did not support a breach of contract action. A generalized statement that the result of treatment will be good, held the court, does not constitute the requisite promise of a particular result (120 Cal. App. 3d 428, 442) .

[a] Express Promise of Particular Result

In Jamison v. Lindsay (1980) 108 Cal. App. 3d 223, 166 Cal. Rptr. 443 , plaintiff appealed from a verdict for defendants in a malpractice action based on negligence and breach of contract. The court of appeal affirmed the judgments on both theories, finding that the defendants' statements to plaintiff that her tumor was benign did not constitute an express promise as to that fact as required to support a breach of contract action. Furthermore, the court found, the statements had been made after treatment, refuting the requisite factor of reliance on the physician's promise in consenting to treatment (108 Cal. App. 3d 223, 234) .

§ 175.54 Supporting Contention That In Informed Consent Cases Plaintiff Is Entitled to Recover Damages for Undisclosed and Disclosed Complications

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

IN A MEDICAL MALPRACTICE ACTION BASED ON THE PHYSICIAN'S FAILURE TO DISCLOSE THE MATERIAL RISKS OF TREATMENT, PLAINTIFF IS ENTITLED TO RECOVER DAMAGES FOR THE UNDISCLOSED AS WELL AS DISCLOSED COMPLICATIONS.

A. Measure of Damages. For the breach of an obligation not arising from contract, the measure of damages is the amount which will compensate for all the detriment proximately caused thereby, whether it could have been anticipated or not (Civ. Code § 3333).

B. Damages for Disclosed as Well as Undisclosed Complications Recoverable. In a medical malpractice action based on the physician's failure to disclose the material risks of treatment, plaintiff is entitled to recover not only for the undisclosed complications but also for the disclosed complications (Warren v. Schecter (1997) 57 Cal. App. 4th 1189, 1204, 67 Cal. Rptr. 2d 573).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that in a medical malpractice action based on the physician's failure to disclose the material risks of treatment, plaintiff is entitled to recover not only for the undisclosed complications but also for the disclosed complications.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should discuss the physician's failure to disclose the material risk of treatment, show facts demonstrating the manifestation of disclosed and undisclosed complications, and argue that since both complications were the proximate result of defendant's negligence, both are recoverable in damages.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Damages for Disclosed as Well as Undisclosed Complications Recoverable

In Warren v. Schecter (1997) 57 Cal. App. 4th 1189, 67 Cal. Rptr. 2d 573 , a woman with a stomach ulcer consulted defendant surgeon about the surgical removal of the portions of her stomach containing the ulcer. Although one of the well-known significant risks of gastric surgery is decreased calcium absorption, leading to early and severe metabolic bone disease, the surgeon did not discuss these risks with plaintiff prior to surgery. Defendant did advise plaintiff that she might experience bowel obstruction and also informed her of other risks, including "dumping syndrome," nausea and the slight risk of death from the administering of anesthesia. Based on the limited risks disclosed, plaintiff consented to the surgery. Following the surgery, plaintiff developed "dumping syndrome" and "alkaline reflux gastritis." Three years after the initial surgery, plaintiff returned to the surgeon who recommended a second surgery to relieve the pain and discomfort from the first surgery. While the second surgery enhanced the risk of bone disease, defendant again failed to advise plaintiff of this risk. Plaintiff experienced the first manifestation of bone disease nearly eight years after her first surgery and almost five years after the second surgery, when she fractured her back by turning over in bed. Plaintiff was taken to the emergency room where she first learned that severe metabolic bone disease was a common side effect of the surgeries she had undergone. Plaintiff then sued defendant for medical negligence arguing that defendant was liable under an informed consent theory for performing surgery without advising her of the risk of bone disease. The action was bifurcated; the first phase involved the statute of limitations defense and the second concerned the issues of liability and damages. The jury found for plaintiff and apportioned the damages 65 percent to metabolic bone disease, and 35 percent to other complications. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, rejecting defendant's contention that the 35 percent of damages the jury attributed to post-surgery complications other than bone disease should be stricken from the judgment. The surgeon reasoned that because plaintiff was informed of, and consented to, the risk she would experience these complications, she should not collect damages for them. The court found this argument unpersuasive, citing statutory and case authority to the contrary. Civ. Code § 3333, for example, provides that for the breach of an obligation not arising from contract, the measure of damages is the amount which will compensate for all detriment proximately caused thereby, whether it could have been anticipated or not. Here, the evidence established that plaintiff would not have consented to either operation if the risk of bone disease had been disclosed. Accordingly, plaintiff was entitled to recover not only for the undisclosed complications but also for the disclosed complications, because she would not have consented to any surgery had the true risk been disclosed, and therefore would not have suffered those complications either (57 Cal. App. 4th 1189, 1203-1204) .

§ 175.55 Supporting Contention That Punitive Damages Claim Restricted in Action Against Health Care Provider for Professional Negligence [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.13]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PUNITIVE DAMAGES MAY NOT BE REQUESTED IN THE ORIGINAL COMPLAINT IN AN ACTION BASED ON A HEALTH CARE PROVIDER'S PROFESSIONAL NEGLIGENCE BUT, INSTEAD, MAY ONLY BE REQUESTED AFTER A COURT ORDER ALLOWS AN AMENDED COMPLAINT THAT INCLUDES A CLAIM FOR PUNITIVE DAMAGES.

A. Order Permitting Amended Pleading as Prerequisite to Punitive Damages Claim. In an action for damages arising out of the professional negligence of a health care provider, no claim for punitive damages may be included in a complaint or other pleading until the court enters an order allowing an amended pleading that includes a claim for punitive damages to be filed (Code Civ. Proc. § 425.13(a)).

B. Statutory Requirements Apply If Injury Caused by Conduct Directly Related to Rendition of Professional Services. Whenever an injured party seeks punitive damages for an injury that is directly related to the professional services provided by a health care provider acting in its capacity as such, then the action is one "arisingout of the professional negligence of a health care provider," and the party must comply with Code of Civil Procedure Section 425.13 (Central Pathology Serv. Med. Clinic, Inc. v. Superior Court (1992) 3 Cal. 4th 181, 191-192, 10 Cal. Rptr. 2d 208, 832 P.2d 924).

[Optional] C. Statutory Requirements Applicable to Action Based on Intentional Tort Theory. An action against a health care provider based on an intentional tort theory is subject to Code of Civil Procedure Section 425.13 if the nature and cause of the plaintiff's injury is directly related to the manner in which professional services were provided (Central Pathology Serv. Med. Clinic, Inc. v. Superior Court (1992) 3 Cal. 4th 181, 192, 10 Cal. Rptr. 2d 208, 832 P.2d 924).

[Optional] D. Standard of Proof for Amending Complaint to Include Punitive Damages Claim. A plaintiff may not amend the complaint to include a punitive damages claim unless he or she states a legally sufficient claim for punitive damages and provides evidence that reveals the actual existence of a triable claim (College Hosp., Inc. v. Superior Court (1994) 8 Cal. 4th 704, 719, 34 Cal. Rptr. 2d 898, 882 P.2d 894).

[Optional] E. Statutory Requirements Applicable to Actions for Sexual Battery Occurring in Course of Gynecological Exams. An allegation of sexual battery in the course of rendering gynecological services is directly related to the manner in which the gynecological services were rendered, thus Code of Civil Procedure Section 425.13 requires a motion for leave to amend supported by evidence before a claim for punitive damages may be pleaded (Cooper v. Superior Court (1994) 56 Cal. App. 4th 744, 751-752, 65 Cal. Rptr. 2d 674).

[Optional] F. Statutory Requirements Applicable to Wrongful Life Action Brought Against Sperm Bank and Screening Physicians. Plaintiffs asserting claims against a sperm bank and the physicians who performed genetic screening for the bank, based on allegations that improper screening resulted in the resulting child being born with birth defects, must comply with Code of Civil Procedure Section 425.13 prior to asserting a claim for punitive damages against those parties (Johnson v. Superior Court (2002) 101 Cal. App. 4th 869, 885-886, 124 Cal. Rptr. 2d 650).

[Optional] G. Statutory Requirements Applicable to Claims Made Against Medical Group Providing Utilization Review Services to Health Care Service Plan. Code Civil Procedure Section 425.13 applies to claims made against a medical group composed of licensed physicians who provide health facility outpatient services under contract with a health care service plan, even if the allegedly actionable conduct occurs while the medical group is reviewing the medical necessity of a request for health care services in its capacity as a provider of utilization review services (Palmer v. Superior Court (2002) 103 Cal. App. 4th 953, 966-967, 972, 127 Cal. Rptr. 2d 252).

[Optional] H. Statutory Requirements Applicable to Action Against Tissue Bank. The requirements of Code of Civil Procedure Section 425.13 are applicable to an action against a tissue bank based on the bank's provision of professional services (Cryolife, Inc. v. Superior Court (2003) 110 Cal. App. 4th 1145, 1159-1160, 2 Cal. Rptr. 3d 396).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a plaintiff must follow the requirements of Code Civ. Proc. § 425.13 for seeking punitive damages in an action against a health care provider for professional negligence.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the particular case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Statutory Requirements Apply If Injury Caused by Conduct Directly Related to Rendition of Professional Services

In Central Pathology Serv. Med. Clinic, Inc. v. Superior Court (1992) 3 Cal. 4th 181, 10 Cal. Rptr. 2d 208, 832 P.2d 924 , plaintiff patient sued a physician and a pathology clinic asserting a cause of action for medical negligence. Approximately two months before the scheduled trial date, plaintiff moved for leave to file an amended complaint seeking to add causes of action for fraud and intentional infliction of emotional distress. The new causes of action alleged that the physician performed a pap smear on plaintiff, which was sent to the pathology clinic for analysis. It was further alleged that despite the presence of abnormal cells, pathology clinic and physician failed to notify plaintiff that she was developing cancer; that the clinic, after being ordered to retest all persons tested in the past five years, intentionally failed to notify plaintiff that she should be retested; and that the physician denied using the clinic in an effort to cover up her ownmedical negligence. The cause of action for intentional infliction of emotional distress alleged that defendants acted in an outrageous manner with the intent to cause severe emotional distress. Plaintiff sought punitive damages under the new causes of action. The clinic opposed the motion to amend, asserting that the proffered amendment failed to meet the requirements of Code Civ. Proc. § 425.13(a), because the amendment was untimely and because plaintiff would be unable to show there was a substantial probability of prevailing on the claim for punitive damages. The physician likewise argued that the motion was untimely. In response, plaintiff contended that Code Civ. Proc. § 425.13(a) did not apply to the proposed amendments. The trial court granted plaintiff's motion to amend, concluding that the statute, though applicable to professional negligence causes of action, did not apply to actions for fraud and intentional infliction of emotional distress. Defendants petitioned for a writ of mandate, which was denied by the Court of Appeal. The Supreme Court granted review, issuing an alternative writ of mandate.

The Supreme Court discharged the writ of mandate, concluding that the court of appeal erred in summarily denying defendants' petition for a writ of mandate (3 Cal. 4th 181, 193) . The Court held that whenever an injured party seeks punitive damages for an injury that is directly related to the professional services provided by a health care provider acting in its capacity as such, then the action is one "arising out of the professional negligence of a health care provider," and the party must comply with Code Civ. Proc. § 425.13(a) (3 Cal. 4th 181, 191-192) . In this case, plaintiff's cause of action for fraud was directly related to the manner in which defendants provided professional services. The claim emanated from the manner in which defendants performed and communicated the results of medical tests, a matter that is an ordinary and usual part of medical professional services; therefore, Code Civ. Proc. § 425.13(a) governed the claim. Plaintiff's cause of action for intentional infliction of emotional distress was predicated on the same alleged acts as the fraud claim; therefore, it too was directly related to defendant's performance of professional services and was governed by Code Civ. Proc. § 425.13(a) (3 Cal. 4th 181, 192-193) .

NOTE:

The Central Pathology ruling was subsequently applied to an action alleging that a physician committed fraud by conspiring with an employer to deprive employees of workers' compensation benefits by providing substandard medical treatment and advice. In this later case, the court reasoned that the alleged fraud related directly to the manner in which the physician rendered professional services [Davis v. Superior Court (1994) 27 Cal. App. 4th 623, 629, 33 Cal. Rptr. 2d 6 ; see also § 175.55[3]]d]].

[b] Statutory Requirements Applicable to Action Based on Intentional Tort Theory

The facts and procedural background of Central Pathology Serv. Med. Clinic, Inc. v. Superior Court (1992) 3 Cal. 4th 181, 10 Cal. Rptr. 2d 208, 832 P.2d 924 , are discussed in § 175.55[3][a]. The California Supreme Court noted that identifying a cause of action as an "intentional tort" as opposed to "negligence" does not itself remove the claim from the requirements of Code Civ. Proc. § 425.13(a). The allegations that identify the nature and cause of plaintiff's injury must be examined to determine whether each is directly related to the manner in which professional services were provided. Furthermore, Code Civ. Proc. § 425.13(a) applies regardless of whether the complaint purports to state a single cause of action for an intentional tort or also states a cause of action for professional negligence (3 Cal. 4th 181, 192) .

[c] Standard of Proof for Amending Complaint to Include Punitive Damages Claim

In College Hosp., Inc. v. Superior Court (1994) 8 Cal. 4th 704, 719, 34 Cal. Rptr. 2d 898, 882 P.2d 894 , the California Supreme Court articulated the standard of proof for a plaintiff to amend a complaint to state a punitive damages claim under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.13(a). According to the Court, the plaintiff must state facts in the proposed amended complaint that are legally sufficient to support a punitive damages claim and must produce evidence in the form of supporting affidavits that reveals the actual existence of a triable claim. The Court further stated that substantiation of a proposed punitive damages claim occurs only when the factual recitals are made under penalty of perjury and set forth competent admissible evidence within the personal knowledge of the declarant. The Court noted that its approach was largely consistent with the "prima facie" approach formulated by the courts of appeal in Hung v. Wang (1992) 8 Cal. App. 4th 908, 931, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 113 , and other cases that have followed its analysis (8 Cal. 4th 704, 719-720 n.6).

[d] Statutory Requirements Applicable to Actions for Sexual Battery Occurring in Course of Gynecological Exams

In Cooper v. Superior Court (1994) 56 Cal. App. 4th 744, 65 Cal. Rptr. 2d 674 , plaintiff sued a doctor alleging that the doctor committed a sexual battery by touching and manipulating plaintiff's genitalia, in the course of rendering gynecological services. Plaintiff did not make a motion pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 425.13, instead she simply filed her punitive damage claim. The doctor moved to strike the punitive damage allegations for failure to comply with Code Civ. Proc. § 425.13. The trial court deniedthe motion, ruling that Code Civ. Proc. § 425.13 did not apply to the type of allegations advanced by plaintiff. The doctor then filed a writ petition.

The question on appeal was whether Code Civ. Proc. § 425.13 applied to plaintiff's allegation of sexual battery occurring in the course of a gynecological exam. The court of appeal first determined that under the rule articulated in Central Pathology Serv. Med. Clinic, Inc. v. Superior Court (1992) 3 Cal. 4th 181, 10 Cal. Rptr. 2d 208, 832 P.2d 924 [see § 175.55[3][a]], plaintiff's allegations were indisputably "directly related" to the rendition of health care, thus making the motion requirement of Code Civ. Proc. § 425.13 applicable. However the court's inquiry did not end there. The court next reconciled this holding with dictum appearing in Central Pathology. In discussing the scope of Code Civ. Proc. § 425.13 the Supreme Court in Central Pathology stated that identifying a cause of action as an intentional tort as opposed to negligence did not itself remove the claim from the requirements of Code Civ. Proc. § 425.13(a). It went on to say that the allegations that identify the nature and cause of plaintiff's injury must be examined to determine whether each was directly related to the manner in which professional services were provided. Then the Central Pathology Court offered the following example: a cause of action against a health care provider for sexual battery would not, in most instances, fall within the statute because the defendant's conduct would not be directly related to the manner in which professional services were rendered (3 Cal. 4th 181, 192) .

Based on this dictum plaintiffs have argued and some courts have agreed that no Code Civ. Proc. § 425.13 is ever needed when plaintiff pleads a claim of sexual battery. The court of appeal ruled that this was not the meaning of the passage in Central Pathology. The court agreed that "in most instances" a claim of sexual battery would not be related to the manner in which professional services were rendered, as most types of health care services did not involve genitalia. Thus, for example if a podiatrist, ophthalmologist or dentist touches or manipulates a patient's genitalia, there would usually be no arguable connection between the conduct and the rendition of legitimate health care. By contrast, a doctor rendering gynecological care, cannot render the full panoply of gynecological services without touching, probing or otherwise manipulating a woman's genitalia. Therefore, according to the court, when a gynecologist is accused of committing a sexual batter in the course of rendering gynecological services, that accusation is necessarily directly related to the manner in which the gynecological services were rendered (56 Cal. App. 4th 744, 751) . The court reasoned that a different construction of Code Civ. Proc. § 425.13 would de facto constitute a blanket exclusion of gynecological services from the protections of that statute, and would revert the field of gynecology back to the posture all branches of medicine were in before the Civil Liability Reform Act of 1987 was passed, plaintiffs would have carte blanche discretion to plead punitive damages against doctors rendering gynecological services whenever they wished, without prior judicial review, simply by characterizing the doctor's inevitable contact with the woman's genitalia as "sexual battery." The court found no indication of a legislative intent that gynecological medical services be singled out for exclusion from the protections of Code Civ. Proc. § 425.13. Concluding that when improprieties of the sort claimed by plaintiff allegedly occur in the course of gynecological services, Code Civ. Proc. § 425.13 requires a motion for leave to amend supported by evidence before a claim for punitive damages may be pleaded, the court issued a writ of mandate directing that the punitive damage claim be stricken, with the proviso that the order was without prejudice to a properly noticed and supported motion pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 425.13 (56 Cal. App. 4th 744, 747) .

[e] Statutory Requirements Applicable to Wrongful Life Action Brought Against Sperm Bank and Screening Physicians

In Johnson v. Superior Court (2002) 101 Cal. App. 4th 869, 124 Cal. Rptr. 2d 650 , the plaintiffs were a couple and their minor daughter who brought suit against a sperm bank and two physicians who performed genetic screening for the bank. The plaintiffs alleged that the physicians' failure to properly screen the sperm used in their artificial insemination caused their daughter to be born with a serious kidney disease, and that evidence of the donor's family medical history known to the physicians when the sperm donor was screened should have led the physicians to investigate whether the donor carried this genetic trait. They also alleged that if they had been provided with this information, they would have selected a different donor. The trial court ruled that the defendants were health care providers and that the plaintiffs must therefore comply with the procedural requirements of Code Civ. Proc. § 245.13 prior to asserting a claim for punitive damages. The plaintiffs filed a petition for writ of mandate, arguing that the sperm bank was not a health care provider for purposes of the statute and that neither the sperm bank nor the physicians were acting as health care providers at the time they performed the services described in the complaint.

The court of appeal denied the petition. The court reviewed the history and purposes of Code Civ. Proc. § 245.13 and noted that a health care provider includes "any clinic, health dispensary, or health facility" licensed pursuant to Division 2 of the Health and Safety Code. The court also concluded that because the same language is used in MICRA, the legislature intended that the definition of "health care provider" would be the same under both MICRA and Code Civ. Proc. § 245.13 (101 Cal. App. 4th 869, 877-879) . The court then reviewed existing case law holding that a blood bank was a "health dispensary" under MICRA because a blood bankdispenses a product and provides a service inextricably identified with human health. Analogizing that rationale to this case, the court concluded that a sperm bank also met the definition of a "health dispensary"--that is, because healthy sperm is vital to the birth of a healthy child, a sperm bank dispenses a product and provides a service that is inextricably identified with human health (101 Cal. App. 4th 869, 880-883) . The court also concluded that the physicians who performed genetic screening for the sperm bank were providing professional services while doing so, because the process requires the physician to apply all gathered information to the physician's medical knowledge of genetics and disease states and thereby determine whether a potential donor poses a risk to offspring. Therefore, despite the absence of an actual doctor-patient relationship between the screening physicians and the couple seeking artificial insemination, a screening physician is acting in the capacity of a health care provider when performing genetic screening. Therefore, the plaintiffs were required to comply with Code Civ. Proc. § 245.13 prior to adding a claim for punitive damages against the defendants (101 Cal. App. 4th 869, 883-886) .

[f] Statutory Requirements Applicable to Claims Made Against Medical Group Providing Utilization Review Services to Health Care Service Plan

In Palmer v. Superior Court (2002) 103 Cal. App. 4th 953, 127 Cal. Rptr. 2d 252 , the plaintiff suffered from a bacterial disease that caused him to lose both legs below the knees, necessitating the use of leg prosthetics to walk. Several years later, when his prosthetist determined that he needed new prosthetics, a request for newly-available, ultra-light prosthetics was submitted to the plaintiff's primary care provider, a medical group composed of licensed physicians who provided medical services to the members of a health care service plan, including the plaintiff. In addition to providing health care for plan members, the medical group also provided utilization review services for the health plan, including reviewing the medical necessity of requested services. Acting in this capacity, the medical group determined that the plaintiff's requested prosthetics were not a medical necessity, and the plaintiff pursued an appeal of this decision through the review procedures provided by the health care service plan. Subsequently, one of the group's physicians contacted the plaintiff and told him that he was being pressured by the plan and the medical group to deny the medical necessity of the new prosthetics because their cost would exceed the amount that the group received from the service plan for treating the plaintiff. This physician also told the plaintiff that if the plaintiff did not dismiss his appeal, the physician was under instructions to send a letter to the plaintiff's disability insurer questioning whether the plaintiff was actually disabled. The health care service plan upheld the denial of the plaintiff's requested prosthetics, but authorized revisions to his current prosthetics. After exhausting internal review procedures, the plaintiff filed suit against the health care plan, the medical group, and the individual physician that had contacted the plaintiff, although the claims against the individual physician were subsequently dismissed. The plaintiff's claims against the medical group, which included intentional and negligent infliction of emotional distress, were based generally on his claim that the medical group intentionally found that the prosthetics were not medically necessary although they actually were, and on the associated threat to send a letter to the plaintiff's disability insurer. The medical group filed a motion to strike allegations for punitive damages made against it on the grounds that the plaintiff had failed to obtain an order allowing an amended pleading under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.13(a). The trial court granted the motion, and the plaintiff filed a petition for writ of mandate.

The court of appeal denied the writ request. The court first determined that the medical group, which was a corporation composed of physician/shareholders that provided clinic or health facility outpatient services, was a health care provider under MICRA. Because no patient-physician relationship was necessary, under existing case law, to apply the statutory requirements of MICRA, the court concluded that it made no difference whether the medical group was acting on behalf of the health care service plan, rather than the plaintiff, when the group denied the medical necessity of the new prosthetics (103 Cal. App. 4th 953, 963-967) . Addressing the plaintiff's argument that the medical group's conduct did not arise out of professional negligence because it was performing purely administrative duties as a utilization review organization for the health care service plan at the time, the court noted that the medical group was required to exercise medical judgment and apply clinical standards when performing those duties. As such, the claims against the medical group were subject to Code Civ. Proc. § 425.13(a) (103 Cal. App. 4th 953, 972) . In addition, although the individual physician was no longer a party to the action, to the extent that the plaintiff was attempting to hold the medical group vicariously liable for that physician's actions, those claims would also be subject to the statutory requirements, because any claims made directly against the physician would have been subject to the statutory requirements (103 Cal. App. 4th 953, 972) .

[g] Statutory Requirements Applicable to Action Against Tissue Bank

In Cryolife, Inc. v. Superior Court (2003) 110 Cal. App. 4th 1145, 2 Cal. Rptr. 3d 396 , the plaintiff underwent knee surgery that required a tendon graft with tissue obtained from a human cadaver and supplied by the defendant, a tissue bank. The plaintiff's knee pain increased after the surgery, and the graft eventually had to be removed because it was infectedwith bacteria. Based on alleged misrepresentations about the safety and sterility of the defendant's tissue products, the plaintiff sued the defendant for negligence, strict product liability, fraud, and negligent misrepresentation, and sought compensatory and punitive damages. The defendant sought to strike the punitive damages claim, in part on the grounds that the plaintiff had failed to comply with the procedural requirements of Code Civ. Proc. § 425.13. The trial court denied the motion to strike, as well as demurrers filed by the defendant, and the defendant petitioned for a writ of mandate.

The court of appeal issued the writ. The court first held that the tissue bank could not be liable for strict products liability because, pursuant to Health & Safety Code § 1635.2, the collection, processing, and storage of human tissue for transplanting is deemed to be a service, rather than the provision of a product (110 Cal. App. 4th 1145, 1152-1157) . The court then held that the requirements of Code Civ. Proc. § 425.13 are applicable to an action against a tissue bank based on the bank's provision of professional services, because a tissue bank constitutes a "health dispensary" under that statute. A issue bank dispenses human tissue for transplantation, and the services of a tissue bank are inextricably identified with the health of humans. Because the plaintiff failed to comply with Code Civ. Proc. § 425.13, the trial court should have struck the claim for punitive damages (110 Cal. App. 4th 1145, 1159-1160) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Statutory Requirements Apply If Injury Caused by Conduct Directly Related to Rendition of Professional Services

In United W. Med. Ctrs. v. Superior Court (1996) 42 Cal. App. 4th 500, 49 Cal. Rptr. 2d 682 , plaintiff sued a hospital for negligence after she was allegedly sexually assaulted by two hospital employees while she was a patient recovering from a traumatic brain stem injury. The complaint sought punitive damages, and the hospital filed a motion to strike the punitive damage claim on the ground that plaintiff failed to comply with Code Civ. Proc. § 425.13. The trial court denied the motion on the basis that the allegations of the complaint did not pertain to "professional services." The court of appeal disagreed, stating that the professional duty of a hospital is primarily to provide a safe environment within which diagnosis, treatment, and recovery can be carried out. The plaintiff's only relationship with the hospital was as a patient. Because her claim arose out of the hospital's alleged failure to adequately protect her, she must abide by Code Civ. Proc. § 425.13 before pursuing a punitive damage claim (42 Cal. App. 4th 500, 504) .

In Williams v. Superior Court (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 318, 36 Cal. Rptr. 2d 112 , a non-employee phlebotomist who was allegedly injured while drawing blood from a patient of a hospital brought suit against the hospital. The plaintiff alleged that the hospital personnel knew that the patient posed a risk of danger to her but failed to warn her of this, and that this failure to warn constituted ordinary rather than professional negligence due to her status as a business invitee onto the premises. The trial court disagreed, however, granting the hospital's motion to strike a claim for punitive damages on the grounds that the claim was made in violation of Code Civ. Proc. § 425.13. The plaintiff sought a writ of mandate from the court of appeals (30 Cal. App. 4th 318, 321) . The court of appeal agreed with the trial court, holding that the test for determining whether professional negligence is at issue, and thus whether MICRA applies, is whether the negligence occurred while rendering services for which the health care provider is licensed (30 Cal. App. 4th 318, 324-325) .

[b] Standard of Proof for Amending Complaint to Include Punitive Damages Claim

In United W. Med. Ctrs. v. Superior Court (1996) 42 Cal. App. 4th 500, 49 Cal. Rptr. 2d 682 , the facts and procedural background of which are discussed in § 175.55[4][a], the court stated that a plaintiff must make an evidentiary showing of a "substantial probability" of prevailing on a punitive damage claim before such a claim may be included in the pleading.

§ 175.56 Supporting Contention That Amendment Adding Punitive Damages Claim in Action Against Health Care Provider for Professional Negligence Is Untimely [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.13]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF'S MOTION TO ALLOW THE FILING OF AN AMENDED PLEADING THAT INCLUDES A PUNITIVE DAMAGES CLAIM SHOULD BE DENIED BECAUSE THIS IS AN ACTION AGAINST A HEALTH CARE PROVIDER FOR PROFESSIONAL NEGLIGENCE AND PLAINTIFF'S MOTION WAS NOT FILED _____ [specify earlier of following dates: WITHIN TWO YEARS AFTER THE _____ (COMPLAINT or other initial pleading) WAS FILED or NOT LESS THAN NINE MONTHS BEFORE THE DATE THE MATTER WAS FIRST SET FOR TRIAL].

A. Time for Filing Amended Pleading. In an action for damages arising out of the professional negligence of a health care provider, the court may not grant a motion allowing the filing of an amended pleading that includes a claim for punitive damages if the motion for such an order is not filed (1) within two years after the complaint or initial pleading is filed or (2) not less than nine months before the date the matter is set for trial, whichever is earlier (Code Civ. Proc. § 425.13(a)).

[Optional] B. End of Nine-Month Statutory Period Is Actual Trial Date. For purposes of Code of Civil Procedure Section 425.13, setting forth the requirements for seeking punitive damages in certain actions against health care providers, the requirement that any motion to amend a complaint to add a punitive damages claim be made not less than nine months before "the date the matter is set for trial" means that the motion to amend must be made at least nine months before the actual date of trial (Brown v. Superior Court (1990) 224 Cal. App. 3d 989, 992-994, 274 Cal. Rptr. 442).

[Optional] C. Applicability of Restrictions in Fast-Track Cases. Code of Civil Procedure Section 425.13(a), setting forth the requirements for seeking punitive damages in certain actions against health care providers, is applicable in fast-track cases assigned to delay reduction programs under the Trial Court Delay Reduction Act (Brown v. Superior Court (1990) 224 Cal. App. 3d 989, 993).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a defendant's contention that a motion to amend a pleading to add a punitive damages claim is untimely. The argument is based on the ground that the plaintiff's motion to amend his or her complaint did not occur within the timeframes required by Code Civ. Proc. § 425.13(a).

The points and authorities in § 175.57 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose the contention that Code Civ. Proc. § 425.13 restricts the plaintiff's ability to seek punitive damages.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should specify the date the complaint or initial pleading was filed. If the trial date has been set, it should also be specified [see Code Civ. Proc. § 425.13(a)].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] End of Nine-Month Statutory Period Is Actual Trial Date

Brown v. Superior Court (1990) 224 Cal. App. 3d 989, 274 Cal. Rptr. 442 , was a professional negligence case that had been assigned to San Diego County's fast-track program. Approximately four months before the date set for trial, the plaintiff moved to amend the complaint to add a claim for punitive damages. Plaintiff argued that Code Civ. Proc. § 425.13, which prohibits an amendment to include punitive damages not less than nine months before "the date the matter is first set for trial," requires plaintiffs to add punitive damages claims at least nine months before the trial setting date, thus making statutory compliance impossible in fast-track cases, in which trial setting is expedited. The trial court issued an order permitting the amendment. The defendant petitioned for a writ of mandate directing the trial court to vacate the part of its order concerning the addition of the punitive damages claim.

The court of appeal granted the defendant's writ petition, holding that plaintiff's punitive damages motion was untimely under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.13(a). The court held that the phrase "the date the matter is first set for trial" refers to the actual trial date, not the date on which the trial date is set. Under the facts of the case, the plaintiff had ample reason to move to amend her complaint before the nine-month statutory deadline, but failed to amend her complaint in a timely manner; consequently, the trial court's granting of plaintiff's motion to amend was in error (224 Cal. App. 3d 989, 992-994) .

[b] Applicability of Restrictions in Fast-Track Cases

The facts and procedural background of Brown v. Superior Court (1990) 224 Cal. App. 3d 989, 274 Cal. Rptr. 442 , are discussed in § 175.56[3][a]. The court of appeal rejected the plaintiff's suggestion that Code Civ. Proc. § 425.13 did not apply in cases assigned to local fast-track programs under the Trial Court Delay Reduction Act (224 Cal. App. 3d 989, 993) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Applicability of Restrictions in Fast-Track Cases

In Freedman v. Superior Court (2008) 166 Cal. App. 4th 198, 82 Cal. Rptr. 3d 563 , plaintiff brought an action for malpractice against a surgeon who accidentally left a surgical towel inside plaintiff's body cavity, resulting in a second surgery that required removal of one of plaintiff's kidneys. After suit was filed, the court held a case management conference at which it set a date for trial to begin 11 months later, leaving plaintiff two months to add a claim for punitive damages. However, plaintiff conducted no discovery in the next few months and failed to add a punitive damages claim. After the date for adding the punitive damages claim passed, plaintiff changed attorneys and within weeks the new attorney began discovery. Approximately six months later, plaintiff filed a motion for leave to amend to add a punitive damages claim, and the trial court granted the motion. However, the court of appeals granted defendant's writ to vacate that order. The court recognized that in Goodstein v. Superior Court (1996) 42 Cal. App. 4th 1635, 50 Cal. Rptr. 2d 459 , discussed in § 175.59[3][a], the court of appeals had created a five-step exception to the nine-month-before-trial deadline for seeking leave to add a punitive damages claim applicable in "fast-track cases." However, even assuming that the Goodstein exception was applicable to this case, the court concluded that plaintiff failed to meet the first two requirements, that is, that plaintiff was unaware of facts or evidence necessary to make a proper motion under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.13 more than nine months prior to the first trial date, and that plaintiff had made a diligent, reasonable, and good-faith effort to discover such necessary facts or evidence more than nine months prior to the first assigned trial date. The court concluded instead that plaintiff knew most of the relevant facts within days of his surgery, and he failed to conduct any discovery in the two months between the time the trial date was set and the deadline for seeking to add a punitive damages claim. As such, plaintiff's claim was subject to the deadline imposed by Code Civ. Proc. § 425.13, a deadline which he failed to meet. The fact that the attorney's second attorney may have acted diligently after being hired as counsel did not alter this result (166 Cal. App. 4th 198, 206-207) .

[The following may be included in a memorandum or points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF'S FAILURE TO MOVE TO AMEND THE PLEADING TO MAKE A CLAIM FOR PUNITIVE DAMAGES PURSUANT TO CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE SECTION 425.13 SHOULD NOT PREVENT AN AWARD OF PUNITIVE DAMAGES BECAUSE _____ [specify, e.g., DEFENDANT WAIVED THE RIGHT TO THE STATUTORY PROTECTION BY FAILING TO TIMELY RAISE THE ISSUE].

A. Statutory Protection Waived If Not Timely Raised. The bar of a punitive damages award for a plaintiff's failure to comply with the requirements of Civ. Code § 425.13 is waived if the issue is not raised in a timely fashion (Vallbona v. Springer (1996) 43 Cal. App. 4th 1525, 1534, 51 Cal. Rptr. 2d 311).

[Optional] B. Claim Seeking Recovery for Purely Economic Injury Not Subject to MICRA Requirements. Code Civ. Proc. § 425.13 only applies when the claim seeks damages for personal injury or wrongful death, and "personal injury" covers only injury that impairs the well-being or mental or physical health of the plaintiff and does not cover purely economic injury (Vazquez de Mercado v. Superior Court (2007) 148 Cal. App. 4th 711, 715-716, 55 Cal. Rptr. 3d 889).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a plaintiff's contention in an action against a health care provider for professional negligence that punitive damages should be allowed even though plaintiff failed to comply with the requirements of Civ. Code § 425.13.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that defendant has waived the protection against punitive damages provided by Civ. Code § 425.13.

[b] Argument

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

If appropriate, the points and authorities in § 175.55 may be used to oppose these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Statutory Protection Waived If Not Timely Raised

In Vallbona v. Springer (1996) 43 Cal. App. 4th 1525, 51 Cal. Rptr. 2d 311 , plaintiffs filed a lawsuit for intentional and negligent misrepresentation based on defendants' claims regarding a low-level laser procedure to remove cellulite. Prior to trial defendants brought an in limine motion to preclude plaintiffs from requesting punitive damages. Defendants contended that plaintiffs were impermissibly attempting to recast a potential medical malpractice action into a fraud and tort case with the possibility of punitive damages, and asserted that plaintiffs' failure to comply with Civ. Code § 425.13 barred any recovery for punitive damages. The trial court denied the motion, the matter proceeded to trial, and the jury assessed punitive damages.

The court of appeal affirmed the denial of the in limine motion, holding that the defendant's waived the benefit of Civ. Code § 425.13. The court noted that the original complaint contained claims for punitive damages, without court permission as required by Civ. Code § 425.13. Defendants did not demur or move to strike the punitive damages allegations, but instead answered the complaint without challenging the punitive damage claim. Defendants' waited until the outset of trial before raising the issue of plaintiffs' noncompliance with Civ. Code § 425.13. The court concluded that by not raising the issue earlier, defendants waived any rights they might have had under the statute (43 Cal. App. 4th 1525, 1534) .

[b] Claim Seeking Recovery for Purely Economic Injury Not Subject to MICRA Requirements

In Vazquez de Mercado v. Superior Court (2007) 148 Cal. App. 4th 711, 55 Cal. Rptr. 3d 889 , plaintiffs had purchased a horse to use as a jumper for their daughter. Prior to making the purchase, they hired a veterinarian to examine the horse, who reported that, while it had slight arthritis in one leg, the horse met plaintiffs' requirements. After the purchase, however, they discovered the horse had a progressive degenerative condition that made it unsuitable to use as a jumper. Plaintiffs sued the veterinarian for fraud, negligent misrepresentation, and suppression of fact. Plaintiffs sought punitive damages, but did not seek an order before filing the complaint as would be required under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.13 in an action against a health care provider for professional negligence. The veterinarian demurred on the grounds that the action was barred by the one-year limitations period set out in Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5, applicable to actions against health care providers, and also filed a motion to strike the punitive damages claim for failure to comply with Code Civ. Proc. § 425.13. The trial court overruled the demurrer and denied the motion to strike. The veterinarian filed a petition for writ of mandate.

The court of appeal denied the petition. While recognizing that veterinarians are health care providers covered by MICRA, the court held that plaintiffs were not required to seek a court order before filing a claim for punitive damages in this particular case. The court noted that professional negligence, for purposes of establishing the applicability of MICRA, is a "negligent act or omission ... which ... is the proximate cause of a personal injury or wrongful death." For these purposes, "personal injury" is an injury that impairs the well-being or the mental or physical health of the victim. However, plaintiffs sought only damages for the purchase price of the horse and the costs of its care, which were economic damages not covered by the definition of personal injury. Thus, plaintiffs' complaint seeking punitive damages was not subject to the MICRA pre-filing order requirement (148 Cal. App. 4th 711, 715-716) . The court also held that the MICRA limitations period of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 was also inapplicable for the same reasons. Thus, the correct limitations period on the fraud and misrepresentation claims was the three-year period of Code Civ. Proc. § 338(d) (148 Cal. App. 4th 711, 716) .

PLAINTIFF'S MOTION TO ALLOW THE FILING OF AN AMENDED PLEADING TO INCLUDE A PUNITIVE DAMAGES CLAIM AGAINST DEFENDANT HEALTH CARE PROVIDER SHOULD BE GRANTEDBECAUSE THERE IS AN IMPLIED EXCEPTION TO THE NINE-MONTH LIMITATION OF CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE SECTION 425.13 WHEN PLAINTIFF HAS OBTAINED A PREFERENTIAL TRIAL DATE AND DEFENDANT HAS HAD A REASONABLE OPPORTUNITY TO CONDUCT DISCOVERY REGARDING THE PUNITIVE DAMAGES CLAIM.

Implied Exception to Protect Right to Preferential Trial Date. There is an implied exception to the nine-month limitation of Code of Civil Procedure Section 425.13 when it is necessary to protect a plaintiff's right to a preferential trial date, and the defendant received or had a reasonable opportunity to conduct discovery regarding the punitive damages claim (Looney v. Superior Court (1993) 16 Cal. App. 4th 521, 536, 20 Cal. Rptr. 2d 182).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a defendant's contention that a motion to amend a pleading to add a punitive damages claim is untimely. The opposition argument is based on an implied exception to protect a plaintiff's preferential date when applicable.

This form of points and authorities may be combined, when appropriate, with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue of the absence of the express contract. The points and authorities set forth in this form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Implied Exception to Protect Right to Preferential Trial Date

In Looney v. Superior Court (1993) 16 Cal. App. 4th 521, 20 Cal. Rptr. 2d 182 , plaintiffs brought suit against physicians and a medical center alleging malpractice and punitive damages. Defendants moved to strike the punitive damages claims asserting that plaintiffs failed to seek leave to assert such allegations as required by Code of Civ. Proc. § 425.13. The trial court originally denied the motion based on the then-current interpretation of Code of Civ. Proc. § 425.13. However, when the interpretation of the relevant code section changed, defendants' renewed motion to strike was granted. When plaintiffs sought leave to amend their complaint to add punitive damages claims, the motion was denied on the ground that it was untimely. Due to the health of plaintiffs, a preferential trial date had already been set pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 36. Consequently, the trial date was within nine months of the motion to amend the complaint.

In reversing the ruling of the trial court, the appellate court held that there is an implied exception to the nine-month limitation of Code of Civ. Proc. § 425.13 when it is necessary to protect a plaintiff's right to a preferential trial date, and the defendant received or had a reasonable opportunity to conduct discovery regarding the punitive damages claim (16 Cal. App. 4th 521, 536) .

[The following may be included in a memorandum or points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF'S MOTION TO ALLOW THE FILING OF AN AMENDED PLEADING TO INCLUDE A PUNITIVE DAMAGES CLAIM AGAINST DEFENDANT HEALTH CARE PROVIDER SHOULD BE GRANTED BECAUSE THE COURT HAS INHERENT POWER TO MAKE AN APPROPRIATE ORDER TO AVOID INJUSTICE AND UNFAIRNESS WHEN A PLAINTIFF IS PLACED IN A POSITION BY VIRTUE OF FAST TRACK TRIAL SETTING PRACTICES WHERE COMPLIANCE WITH CIVIL PROCEDURE CODE SECTION 425.13 IS NOT REASONABLE.

Court Should Avoid Injustice When Compliance Is Not Reasonable. A plaintiff may be relieved from the time limitation of Code of Civil Procedure Section 425.13 when compliance is not reasonably possible due to the quick trial setting practices of "fast track" courts (Goodstein v. Superior Court (1996) 42 Cal. App. 4th 1635, 1645, 50 Cal. Rptr. 2d 459).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a defendant's contention that a motion to amend a pleading to adda punitive damages claim is untimely. The opposition argument is based on the trial court's inherent power to make an appropriate order to avoid injustice or unfairness.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue that compliance with the statutory time limits was not reasonably possible, for example in a motion for summary judgment. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss how the local "fast track" trial setting practice rendered timely compliance unreasonable [see Goodstein v. Superior Court (1996) 42 Cal. App. 4th 1635, 1645, 50 Cal. Rptr. 2d 459] .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Court Should Avoid Injustice When Compliance Is Not Reasonable

In Goodstein v. Superior Court (1996) 42 Cal. App. 4th 1635, 50 Cal. Rptr. 2d 459 , due to successful demurrers requiring the filing of amended complaints, plaintiff's complaint for medical malpractice was not "at issue" until almost nine months after the initial filing. In the meantime, prior to the case being "at issue," a status conference was held, and a trial date was set for a date less than nine months from the time when the case would become "at issue." Plaintiff subsequently moved to amend the complaint to allege a claim for punitive damages. Although the motion did not satisfy the nine-month limitation period of Code Civ. Proc. § 425.13, the trial court granted the motion because plaintiff had never had a full nine months to bring the motion following the setting of the trial date.

The court of appeal held that when a plaintiff, by virtue of the quick trial setting practices of "fast track" courts, is placed in a position where compliance with the time limits of Code Civ. Proc. § 425.13 is not reasonable, then courts retain the inherent power and authority to make an appropriate order to avoid injustice or unfairness. The court then delineated the appropriate burden of proof to be eligible for such an order, stating that a plaintiff must show that: (1) plaintiff was unaware of the facts or evidence necessary to make a timely motion under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.13; (2) plaintiff made reasonable efforts to discover the necessary facts or evidence more than nine months prior to the first assigned trial date; (3) after assignment of the trial date, plaintiff made reasonable efforts to complete the necessary discovery; (4) plaintiff filed the Code Civ. Proc. § 425.13 motion as soon as reasonably practicable; and (5) defendant will suffer no surprise or prejudice by reason of any shortened time period (42 Cal. App. 4th 1635, 1645) . Stating that it could not tell from the record whether plaintiff could satisfy these criteria, the court ordered the trial court to vacate its order granting plaintiff's motion and to conduct further proceedings.

§ 175.60 Supporting Contention That Money Damages for Future Damages Must Be Paid by Periodic Payments [Code Civ. Proc. § 667.7]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities or in a trial or appellate brief.]

MONEY DAMAGES MUST BE PAID FOR FUTURE DAMAGES BY PERIODIC PAYMENTS RATHER THAN BY A LUMP-SUM PAYMENT BECAUSE THE ACTION IS AGAINST A PROVIDER OF HEALTH CARE SERVICES FOR INJURY OR DAMAGES, THE AWARD _____ [EQUALS or EXCEEDS] $50,000, AND _____ [specify party, e.g., DEFENDANT] REQUESTED PERIODIC PAYMENTS.

A. Payment of Future Damages by Periodic Payments. In any action for injury or damages against a provider of health care services, a superior court shall, at the request of either party, enter a judgment ordering that money damages or its equivalent for future damages of the judgment creditor be paid in whole or in part by periodic payments other than by a lump-sum payment if the award equals or exceeds $50,000 in future damages (Code Civ. Proc. § 667.7(a)).

B. Periodic Payment Provision Constitutional. The provision for payment of money damages for future damages by periodic payments, pursuant to Code of Civil Procedure Section 667.7, does not violate constitutional guarantees of due process, equal protection, and right to jury trial (American Bank & Trust Co. v. Community Hosp. (1984) 36 Cal. 3d 359, 368-377, 204 Cal. Rptr. 671, 683 P.2d 670).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that money damages for future damages must be paid by periodic payments in an action for injury or damages against a health care provider after one of the parties has requested payment by periodic payments [see Code Civ. Proc. § 667.7; American Bank & Trust Co. v. Community Hosp. (1984) 36 Cal. 3d 359, 368-377, 204 Cal. Rptr. 671, 683 P.2d 670] .

This form of points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue that money damages for future damages must be paid by periodic payments. For example, these points and authorities may be used in support of a request to enter a judgment providing for the periodic payment of future damages in excess of $50,000. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Therefore, counsel should discuss facts showing that the action was one for injury or damages against a health care provider, the award equaled or exceeded $50,000, and one of the parties duly requested periodic payments.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Periodic Payment Provision Constitutional

American Bank & Trust Co. v. Community Hosp. (1984) 36 Cal. 3d 359, 204 Cal. Rptr. 671, 683 P.2d 670 , was an action brought by a patient against a hospital to recover damages for burn injuries incurred while she was taking a shower in the hospital. The jury rendered a general verdict for plaintiff, and defendant moved for an order of periodic payment of future damages pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 667.7. The trial court denied defendant's motion on the ground that the provision unconstitutionally denied guarantees of equal protection, due process, and right to jury trial. The trial court entered a lump-sum judgment in favor of plaintiff in the amount of the verdict. Defendant appealed.

The Supreme Court dismissed the appeal from the order denying the motion for periodic payments, remanded the matter to the trial court for reduction of the judgment pursuant to a stipulation of the parties, and affirmed the judgment in all other respects (36 Cal. 3d 359, 378) . The Court first noted that Code Civ. Proc. § 667.7 was enacted as part of the Medical Injury Compensation Reform Act of 1975 (MICRA), a lengthy statute designed to remedy the rising cost of medical malpractice insurance premiums (36 Cal. 3d 359, 363) . Plaintiff contended that Code Civ. Proc. § 667.7 violates the due process rights of medical malpractice victims by diminishing the value of their malpractice actions without providing them an adequate quid pro quo (36 Cal. 3d 359, 368) . The Court held that it need not attempt to balance the relative benefits and detriments of the legislation, and that the appropriate test was whether the measure is rationally related to a legitimate state interest. The Legislature could legitimately determine that the public interest would be served by limiting a defendant's obligation to those future damages actually incurred, thereby preventing the plaintiff's heirs from inheriting the "windfall" lump-sum judgment intended to compensate the injured person for losses never sustained (36 Cal. 3d 359, 369) . Plaintiff alternatively argued that Code Civ. Proc. § 667.7 violates the due process rights of a malpractice victim's spouse by authorizing the termination of a portion of the future damage award on the death of plaintiff. The Court held, however, that the spouse has no vested right in a particular measure of damages, and therefore has no greater constitutional right than the victim to a damages award that continues beyond the victim's life (36 Cal. 3d 359, 369-370) . Plaintiff also contended that Code Civ. Proc. § 667.7 denies equal protection to persons injured by medical malpractice by withholding from them the benefits of lump-sum damages awards that are available to other injury victims (36 Cal. 3d 359, 370) . However, there as a rational and legitimate basis for the legislature's decision to attempt to reduce medical malpractice insurance costs, and Code Civ. Proc. § 667.7 is rationally related to that objective. Consequently, the legislature did not violate equal protection principles in limiting the application of Code Civ. Proc. § 667.7 to medical malpractice actions (36 Cal. 3d 359, 373) . Plaintiff contended that Code Civ. Proc. § 667.7 impinges on the jury's province to make special findings on subsidiary issues affecting the award of future damages. The statute does not clarify whether the jury or the court should specify the future damagesportion of the overall award (36 Cal. 3d 359, 375) . The Court concluded that when Code Civ. Proc. § 667.7 is interpreted to require the jury to specify the amount of future damages that is subject to periodic payments, the section does not conflict with the constitutional right to jury trial (36 Cal. 3d 359, 377) .

17-175 California Points & Authorities § 175.61

§ 175.61 Supporting Contention That Periodic Payment of Future Damages Must Be Based on Present Value of Award at Time of Judgment

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief].

WHEN FUTURE DAMAGES WILL BE PAID OVER TIME IN PERIODIC INSTALLMENTS, PLAINTIFF IS ENTITLED TO PAYMENTS TOTALING THE EQUIVALENT IN CURRENT DOLLARS OF THE AMOUNT PLAINTIFF WOULD HAVE RECEIVED IN AN IMMEDIATE LUMP-SUM AWARD AT THE TIME OF JUDGMENT, INCLUDING THE AMOUNT THE AWARD WOULD HAVE YIELDED IF PRUDENTLY INVESTED.

A. Periodic Payments are Based on Value of Future Damages Award at Time of Judgment. When future damages will be paid through a periodic payment schedule, the plaintiff is entitled to receive, over time, the equivalent in current dollars of the amount plaintiff would have received in an immediate lump-sum award at the time of judgment, including the amount the award would have yielded if prudently invested (Salgado v. County of Los Angeles (1998) 19 Cal. 4th 629, 646, 80 Cal. Rptr. 2d 46, 967 P.2d 585).

[Optional] B. Trial Court May Not Disregard Jury Valuation. When the jury specifically provides the present cash value of an award of future damages, the trial court may not fashion a periodic payment schedule based on a different present value than that found by the jury (Salgado v. County of Los Angeles (1998) 19 Cal. 4th 629, 649, 80 Cal. Rptr. 2d 46, 967 P.2d 585).

[2] Comments

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that money damages for future damages to be paid by periodic payments in an action for injury or damages against a health care provider must be based on the equivalent in current dollars of the amount plaintiff would have received in an immediate lump-sum award at the time of judgment, including the amount the award would have yielded if prudently invested [see Code Civ. Proc. § 667.7; Salgado v. County of Los Angeles (1998) 19 Cal. 4th 629, 646, 80 Cal. Rptr. 2d 46, 967 P.2d 585] . Optional paragraph B may be used to argue that the trial court does not have the authority to disregard a jury finding as to the present cash value of an award for future damages. Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Therefore, counsel should discuss the substance of the judgment regarding the award of future damages, the present value of the award at the time of judgment, and the value of the award if prudently invested over the life of the payment period, if known.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Periodic Payments are Based on Value of Future Damages Award at Time of Judgment

In Salgado v. County of Los Angeles (1998) 19 Cal. 4th 629, 80 Cal. Rptr. 2d 46, 967 P.2d 585 , plaintiff was injured at birth through the negligence of the delivering physicians, resulting in long-term disability to his right arm. Plaintiff brought a medical malpractice suit against the County of Los Angeles, the owner of the hospital at which he was born. Following a jury trial, plaintiff was awarded, for noneconomic injuries, $10,000 for past and $550,000 for future pain and suffering, reduced by the trial court to $250,000 pursuant to the statutory cap on noneconomic damages found in Civ. Code § 3333.2(b). As to the $240,000 allocated to future pain and suffering, the trial court, pursuant to defendant's request under Code Civ. Proc. § 667.7(a), ordered the sum to be paid on a periodic basis in equal installments over the course of plaintiff's life expectancy of 66.8 years, funded by a $61,785 annuity purchased by the defendant. The court of appeal affirmed the periodic payment award set by the trial court.

The Supreme Court reversed the periodic payment award for future noneconomic damages. The Court noted that the stated legislative purposein allowing for periodic payment of future damages in such cases was to provide courts with a means "to provide compensation sufficient to meet the needs of an injured plaintiff ... while eliminating the potential windfall from a lump-sum recovery which was intended to provide for the care of an injured plaintiff over an extended period who then dies shortly after the judgment is paid" (see Code Civ. Proc. § 667.7(f)). The court then reviewed the principles that it had earlier articulated in American Bank & Trust Co. v. Community Hosp. (1984) 36 Cal. 3d 359, 204 Cal. Rptr. 671, 683 P.2d 670 , including the constitutional validity of Code Civ. Proc. § 667.7 as a rational means to the legitimate objective of reducing malpractice insurance costs by permitting insurers to retain fewer liquid reserves and to increase investments. The Court then noted a court of appeal holding that, in order to fully compensate the plaintiff for future losses, the periodic payment schedule is based upon the gross amount of an award of future damages. The Supreme Court agreed that, if the award for future noneconomic damages is to be paid out periodically, the plaintiff is entitled to receive, over time, the equivalent of the immediate lump-sum award at the time of judgment, capped at $250,000 pursuant to Civ. Code § 3333.2(b) if otherwise exceeding that amount. Thus, the total of the periodic payments must include the amount that the award would have yielded if invested prudently at the time of judgment, ensuring that a plaintiff receiving periodic payments will receive the same economic value, in current dollars, as a plaintiff who receives an award of noneconomic damages in an immediate lump sum at the time of judgment, and that a defendant will pay the same amount in current dollars regardless of whether periodic payment is utilized or not. The Court noted that the statute was not intended to provide an unfair benefit to a defendant by reducing its obligation to less than the equivalent of a lump sum award received at the time of the judgment (19 Cal. 4th 629, 636-646) .

In reaching its decision, the Court also reviewed relevant case law and concluded that, since a jury award for future pain and suffering has generally been regarded as the jury's rough estimate of the amount of money paid at the time of judgment that would compensate the plaintiff for all future pain and suffering, the statutory cap of $250,000 for noneconomic damages was intended to apply to a lump sum paid at the time of the judgment, or to the present value of periodic future payments, but not to the gross sum of such future payments. Thus, the cap does not prevent a defendant from paying more than $250,000 over time when a periodic payment schedule is used (19 Cal. 4th 629, 636-646) .

Applying these legal principles to the facts of the case before it, the Court concluded that, since the jury instructions made no express reference to present value, the jury understood its award of $550,000 for future noneconomic damages to be the current value of the award, rather than the gross amount of these future damages. Thus, although the trial court correctly reduced the award to $240,000 pursuant to Civ. Code § 3333.2(b) ($250,000 minus the $10,000 award for past noneconomic damages), the trial court erred when, in selecting a payment period of 66.8 years, it reduced the stream of payments to an amount that would total only $61,785 if paid in an immediate lump sum at the time of judgment (19 Cal. 4th 629, 636-646) .

[b] Trial Court May Not Disregard Jury Valuation

The facts and procedural background of Salgado v. County of Los Angeles (1998) 19 Cal. 4th 629, 80 Cal. Rptr. 2d 46, 967 P.2d 585 , are discussed in § 175.61[3][a]. As part of its verdict, the jury also awarded $125,000 for future medical care, specifically finding pursuant to jury instructions that the present cash value of that award was $50,000. However, the trial court ordered periodic payment of the $125,000 award over the life expectancy of plaintiff to be funded by an annuity at the present cost of $32,179. The Supreme Court agreed with plaintiff that, given that the issue of present value was submitted to the jury after each party was afforded the opportunity to present expert testimony on valuation, the trial court erred in disregarding the jury's valuation and creating a periodic payment schedule based on a different valuation. However, the Court also reaffirmed its earlier holding from American Bank & Trust Co. v. Community Hosp. (1984) 36 Cal. 3d 359, 204 Cal. Rptr. 671, 683 P.2d 670 , that it is not a violation of the right to a jury trial for the trial court to submit only the issue of the gross amount of future economic damages to the jury, with the timing of periodic payments and their present value to be set by the court in its exercise of sound discretion (19 Cal. 4th 629, 649) .

§ 175.62 Opposing Contention That Money Damages for Future Damages Must Be Paid by Periodic Payments [Code Civ. Proc. § 667.7]--Lost Years Earnings as Properly Awarded in Lump Sum

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DAMAGES FOR FUTURE LOSS OF EARNINGS ATTRIBUTABLE TO THE PERIOD OF TIME DURING WHICH PLAINTIFF'S LIFE EXPECTANCY WAS DIMINISHED AS A RESULT OF DEFENDANT'S NEGLIGENCE MAY BE AWARDED IN A LUMP SUM, RATHER THAN BY PERIODIC PAYMENTS.

A. Lost Years Earnings Awardable in Lump Sum. A court is not required to order periodic payments under Code Civ. Proc. § 667.7 when the damages are for future loss of earnings attributable to the period during which plaintiff's life expectancy was diminished as result of defendant's negligence. The court may order such damages to be paid in a lump sum (Hurlbut v. Sonora Cmty. Hosp. (1989) 207 Cal. App. 3d 388, 405-406, 254 Cal. Rptr. 840).

[Optional] B. All Future Loss of Earnings Damages Payable in Lump Sum in Absence of Special Finding on Apportionment. When a jury awards damages to a medical malpractice plaintiff for future lost earnings, and the defendant has failed to secure a special finding on apportionment of future lost earnings between lost years payments and lifetime disability, the court may order the entire award for future loss of earnings paid in a lump sum (Hurlbut v. Sonora Cmty. Hosp. (1989) 207 Cal. App. 3d 388, 405-406, 254 Cal. Rptr. 840).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a contention that periodic payments for future loss of earnings under Code Civ. Proc. § 667.7 should be awarded for lost years earnings. The ground for opposition is that lost years earnings may be compensable in a lump sum, rather than by periodic payments.

[b] Argument

[c] Lost Years Earnings Distinguished From Other Future Earnings

"Lost years" earnings are those earnings which hypothetically would have been earned by the plaintiff during the years "lost" as a result of the defendant's negligence. For example, if a 12-year old plaintiff's expected work life, without injury, would be from ages 18 to 65 years, and the negligence of the defendant shortens the plaintiff's life expectancy to 30 years, the plaintiff's expected work life would be shortened to ages 18 to 30 years. The "future loss of earnings" damages for years 31 to 65 would be "lost years" damages compensable in a lump sum [see Hurlbut v. Sonora Cmty. Hosp. (1989) 207 Cal. App. 3d 388, 406, 254 Cal. Rptr. 840] . The remaining "future loss of earnings damages," those arising from the ages of 18 to 30 years, however, would be subject to periodic payments [see Hurlbut v. Sonora Cmty. Hosp. (1989) 207 Cal. App. 3d 388, 406, 254 Cal. Rptr. 840] .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Lost Years Earnings Awardable In Lump Sum

In Hurlbut v. Sonora Cmty. Hosp. (1989) 207 Cal. App. 3d 388, 254 Cal. Rptr. 840 , plaintiffs, a child and her parents, brought an action against defendant hospital for medical malpractice in failing to perform a timely caesarean section procedure. The hospital's failure resulted in the child being born with severe brain damage. The jury rendered a special verdict in favor of the plaintiffs in the amount of $350,000 for future loss of earnings. After the special verdict was returned, the trial court instructed the parties to submit a proposed judgment. Defendant requested that the $350,000 be distributed to plaintiff in periodic payments, rather than a lump sum. However, the court entered judgment in the lump sum of $350,000. Defendant's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict was denied in its entirety and defendant's motion for new trial was conditionally granted. The defendants appealed the trial court's orders on the motions, and plaintiff's cross appealed.

The court upheld the lump sum award of $350,000 for future lost earnings. It noted that ordinarily under Code Civ. Proc. § 667.7, when a medical malpractice action results in an award for future damages, the trial court must order periodic payments on request. The court stated, however, that a limited exception to the rule applies to damages for future loss of earnings (207 Cal. App. 3d 388, 405) . Following Fein v. Permanente Medical Group (1985) 38 Cal. 3d 137, 211 Cal. Rptr. 368, 695 P.2d 665 , the court indicated that in the absence of special findings regarding apportionment, a court could award damages in a lump sum for loss of earnings attributable to the period of time during which the plaintiff's life expectancy was diminished as a result of defendant's negligence (207 Cal. App. 3d 388, 406-407) .

[b] All Future Loss of Earnings Damages Payable in Lump Sum in Absence of Special Finding on Apportionment

The facts and procedural background of Hurlbut v. Sonora Cmty. Hosp. (1989) 207 Cal. App. 3d 388, 254 Cal. Rptr. 840 , are discussed in § 175.62[3][a]. The court of appeal noted that it is the defendant's burden to propose special findings apportioning damages for lost earnings between (1) disability during the plaintiff's lifetime and (2) lost years damages. The court stated that no evidence was presented, nor were special findings sought concerning apportionment of the $350,000 in future lost earnings. The trial court, therefore, had no way to apportion the award between lost years and lifetime disability in order to structure an appropriate judgment for periodic payments. In the absence of sufficient special findings proposed by the defendant, the court of appeal concluded that the trial court properly ordered the entire $350,000 award for future loss of earnings paid in a lump sum under the judgment (207 Cal. App. 3d 388, 407) .

§ 175.63 Opposing Contention That Money Damages for Future Damages Must Be Paid by Periodic Payments [Code Civ. Proc. § 667.7]--Periodic Payments May Not Be Ordered After Entry of Judgment for Lump Sum Amount

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT IS PRECLUDED FROM OBTAINING AN ORDER TO AWARD PERIODIC PAYMENTS FOR FUTURE DAMAGES, SINCE JUDGMENT HAS ALREADY BEEN ENTERED FOR A LUMP SUM AMOUNT.

Periodic Payments Not Available After Judgment for Lump Sum Amount Entered. A party's request for periodic payments for future damages under Section 667.7 of the Code of Civil Procedure must be made prior to the entry of any judgment in the action (Craven v. Crout (1985) 163 Cal. App. 3d 779, 784, 209 Cal. Rptr. 649).

[2] Comments

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a contention that periodic payments for future damages under Code Civ. Proc. § 667.7 should be awarded. The ground for opposition is that a lump sum judgment had already been entered, and thus the request is untimely filed and must be denied [Craven v. Crout (1985) 163 Cal. App. 3d 779, 784, 209 Cal. Rptr. 649] .

These points and authorities may be combined, when appropriate, with points and authorities relating to other grounds denying post-judgment relief [see, e.g., Ch. 131, Judgments , for points and authorities opposing a motion to vacate judgment]. The points and authorities in this form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Counsel should therefore discuss facts concerning the substance of the judgment with respect to a lump-sum damages award, and the time sequence in which the judgment and the request for payments were filed [see Craven v. Crout (1985) 163 Cal. App. 3d 779, 783-784, 209 Cal. Rptr. 649] .

[c] Related Points and Authorities

For additional points and authorities relating to post-judgment relief generally, see Ch. 155, Motions After Trial .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Periodic Payments Not Available After Judgment for Lump Sum Amount Entered

In Craven v. Crout (1985) 163 Cal. App. 3d 779, 209 Cal. Rptr. 649 , the jury rendered a special verdict for a medical malpractice plaintiff, and the trial court ordered entry of judgment in favor of plaintiff and against defendants in a certain lump-sum amount, after which notice of entry of judgment was filed. Almost two months later, defendant filed a request for an order that future damages be paid by periodic payments pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 667.7. After hearing, the trial court granted the request, ordering payment of a certain portion of the damages over a period of nine and a half years (163 Cal. App. 3d 779, 781) .

The court of appeal, in reversing the order, held that the trial court had no jurisdiction to render a new judgment ordering periodic payments after an initial lump-sum judgment had been entered, and concluded that a party's request for periodic payment of future damages must be made prior to entry of any judgment in the action (163 Cal. App. 3d 779, 784) . Moreover, the court held that in a jury trial, the trial court cannot formulate a periodic payment schedule pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 667.7 unless the jury has designated the portion of its verdict intended to compensate the plaintiff for future damages, and that amount equals or exceeds $50,000 (163 Cal. App. 3d 779, 784-785) . In sum, the trial court's order constituted a second, different judgment contravening Code Civ. Proc. § 473, which sets forth procedures for amending, correcting, and settingaside judgments, and thus was void and of no effect (163 Cal. App. 3d 779, 785) .

§ 175.64 Supporting Contention That Collateral Source of Benefits Cannot Recover Expenses From Medical Malpractice Defendant [Civ. Code § 3333.1(b)]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

_____ [Name of collateral source], AS A SOURCE OF COLLATERAL BENEFITS TO PLAINTIFF, CANNOT RECOVER ITS EXPENSES FROM _____ [name of defendant health care provider], BECAUSE THE ACTION IS FOR PERSONAL INJURY AGAINST A HEALTH CARE PROVIDER BASED ON PROFESSIONAL NEGLIGENCE.

A. Source of Collateral Benefits Cannot Recover Expenses. No source of collateral benefits introduced pursuant to Section 3333.1(a) of the Civil Code shall recover any amount against the plaintiff nor shall it be subrogated to the rights of the plaintiff against a defendant (Civ. Code § 3333.1(b)).

B. Bar to Recovery of Source of Collateral Benefits Constitutional. The provision precluding a collateral source of benefits to plaintiff from obtaining reimbursement from a defendant health care provider, pursuant to Section 3333.1(b) of the Civil Code, does not violate constitutional guarantees of due process and equal protection (Barme v. Wood (1984) 37 Cal. 3d 174, 180-182, 207 Cal. Rptr. 816, 689 P.2d 446).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that a collateral source of benefits to a medical malpractice plaintiff cannot obtain reimbursement from a defendant in an action for personal injury against a health care provider based on professional negligence [see Civ. Code § 3333.1(b); Barme v. Wood (1984) 37 Cal. 3d 174, 180-182, 207 Cal. Rptr. 816, 689 P.2d 446] .

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue that a collateral source of benefits to a medical malpractice plaintiff cannot obtain reimbursement from a defendant health care provider. For example, these points and authorities may be used by a defendant health care provider in support of a motion for summary judgment against a collateral source that filed a complaint in intervention to obtain reimbursement from defendant in an underlying medical malpractice action. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

[c] Related Points and Authorities

For points and authorities for use in actions and proceedings involving tort damages generally, see Ch. 64, Damages: Tort . For points and authorities for use in actions involving limitation on contingent fee contracts for a medical malpractice plaintiff's attorney under the Medical Injury Compensation Reform Act of 1975, see Ch. 25, Attorney's Fees .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Bar to Recovery of Source of Collateral Benefits Constitutional

Barme v. Wood (1984) 37 Cal. 3d 174, 207 Cal. Rptr. 816, 689 P.2d 446 , was an action brought against health care providers to recover damages for personal injuries sustained while plaintiff underwent surgery. Plaintiff, a police officer, suffered a heart attack while on duty, and subsequently sustained brain damage during open heart surgery. Plaintiff brought an action against the hospital as well as individual health care providers, alleging professional negligence. Plaintiff's employer, as a self-insured workers' compensation carrier, filed a complaint in intervention against defendants, seeking to recover the expenses incurred in providing benefits to plaintiff. The trial court granted defendants' motion for summary judgment with respect to the complaint in intervention on the ground that recovery was precluded by Civ. Code § 3333.1(b). Intervenor appealed.

The Supreme Court affirmed, upholding the constitutionality of Civ. Code § 3333.1(b) (37 Cal. 3d 174, 180-182) . The Court first noted that theMedical Injury Compensation Reform Act of 1975 (MICRA), of which Civ. Code § 3333.1(b) is part, was intended to address a medical malpractice "crisis" by reducing the cost of medical malpractice insurance (37 Cal. 3d 174, 178-179) . Intervenor contended that Civ. Code § 3333.1(b) arbitrarily eliminates an employer's right to seek reimbursement from a third party for workers' compensation benefits that the employer is legally obligated to provide. The Court held, however, that the legislature was within its province to determine, in light of the pertinent facts, that reducing the cost of medical malpractice insurance would serve the state. Civ. Code § 3333.1(b) is rationally related to that objective in that it reduces the potential liability of health care providers, and therefore does not violate due process. Intervenor alternatively contended that Civ. Code § 3333.1(b) denies equal protection by affording medical malpractice defendants benefits not afforded to other tort defendants, and imposing a burden only on those employers that provide benefits to victims of medical malpractice (37 Cal. 3d 174, 181-182) . However, the legislature did not violate equal protection principles because the provision was intended to alleviate a problem solely in the area of medical malpractice (37 Cal. 3d 174, 182) .

§ 175.65 Opposing Contention That Plaintiff in Medical Malpractice Action Cannot Prove Recoverable Damages if All Damages Suffered Were Paid by Collateral Source [Civ. Code § 3333.1]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

SUMMARY JUDGMENT FOR DEFENDANT IN A MEDICAL MALPRACTICE ACTION IS INAPPROPRIATE IF BASED SOLELY ON THE GROUNDS THAT THE EVIDENCE SHOWS THAT ALL OF THE DAMAGES CLAIMED BY THE PLAINTIFF WERE PAID BY A COLLATERAL SOURCE.

Jury Must Decide How to Apply Evidence of Collateral Source Payments. Evidence presented by a defendant under Civil Code Section 3333.1 that all of the plaintiff's claimed damages were paid by a collateral source does not constitute summary judgment proof that the plaintiff sustained no damages such that the plaintiff may not prosecute the action; instead, it is for the jury to decide how to apply the evidence of collateral payments in calculating damages (Hernandez v. California Hosp. Med. Ctr. (2000) 78 Cal. App. 4th 498, 506, 93 Cal. Rptr. 2d 97).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that summary judgment may be granted to a defendant in a medical malpractice action based merely on the grounds that the proof shows that all of the plaintiff's claimed damages were paid by a collateral source. The grounds for opposition are that it is the province of the finder of fact to determine how to apply a defendant's evidence of payment by a collateral source presented under Civ. Code § 3333.1.

[b] Argument

the plaintiff's counsel should discuss the facts showing that the plaintiff has suffered at least some damages for which recovery may be sought in a medical malpractice action and argue that the finder of fact is the appropriate body to determine how to apply evidence of collateral source payments.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Jury Must Decide How to Apply Evidence of Collateral Source Payments

In Hernandez v. California Hosp. Med. Ctr. (2000) 78 Cal. App. 4th 498, 93 Cal. Rptr. 2d 97 , the plaintiff brought a survival action against a hospital for medical malpractice. The plaintiff sought to recover for bedsores suffered by his deceased father that were allegedly caused by the negligent care the hospital provided while the plaintiff's father was hospitalized approximately a year before his death. The plaintiff's father's death was not related to the hospital's alleged negligence. The hospital moved for summary judgment on the ground that the plaintiff could not establish any recoverable damages, because all of the medical bills related to treatment for the bedsores had been paid by Medi-Cal or Medicare, and the only other claimed damages were burial expenses that were unrelated to the defendant's alleged negligence. The trial court granted the motion for summary judgment and the plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. The court noted first that the sole basis for granting the motion for summary judgment was the lack of proof of recoverable damages and that the motion did not challenge any issues of negligence or causation. Therefore, the only issue was whether the fact of payment by Medicare and Medi-Cal of the decedent's medical expensesprecluded the plaintiff as a matter of law from recovering damages for allegedly negligent treatment. After noting the general principles of the collateral source rule and the exception provided for medical malpractice defendants under Civ. Code § 3333.1, the court held that the statute did not preclude recovery of damages if payment has been made by a collateral source, but rather left to the jury to decide how to apply the defendant's evidence of collateral source payments in calculating damages. Therefore, the trial court erred in granting summary judgment (78 Cal. App. 4th 498, 504-506) . In addition, the court noted that the Medi-Cal program, unlike most collateral sources, was excepted from the application of Civ. Code § 3333.1(b) [see § 175.64] and had a statutory right to recover from third-party tortfeasors. Therefore, summary judgment was also granted in error to the extent that any of the damages had been paid by that program (78 Cal. App. 4th 498, 506) .

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

IN AN ACTION FOR INJURY AGAINST A HEALTH CARE PROVIDER BASED ON PROFESSIONAL NEGLIGENCE, THE AMOUNT OF DAMAGES FOR NONECONOMIC LOSSES MAY NOT EXCEED $250,000.

A. Availability of Noneconomic Damages. In any action for injury against a health care provider based on professional negligence, the injured plaintiff is entitled to recover noneconomic losses to compensate for pain, suffering, inconvenience, physical impairment, disfigurement, and other nonpecuniary damage; such damages, however, may not exceed $250,000 (Civ. Code § 3333.2(a), (b)).

[Optional] B. Action Based on Breach of Hospital's Duty to Use Reasonable Care in Reviewing Competence of Its Medical Staff. Section 3333.2 of the Civil Code, limiting recovery for noneconomic losses to $250,000 in any action for injury against a health care provider based on professional negligence, applies to an action for breach of a hospital's duty to exercise reasonable care in reviewing the competence of its medical staff (Bell v. Sharp Cabrillo Hosp. (1989) 212 Cal. App. 3d 1034, 1037, 1051, 260 Cal. Rptr. 886).

[Optional] C. Wrongful Death Actions. The limitation on noneconomic damages set forth in Section 3333.2 of the Civil Code applies in wrongful death actions based on medical malpractice (Yates v. Pollock (1987) 194 Cal. App. 3d 195, 199, 239 Cal. Rptr. 383).

[Optional] D. Limitation Applies Regardless of Number of Plaintiffs. The limitation on noneconomic damages set forth in Section 3333.2 of the Civil Code is a limitation on the maximum recovery in a single medical malpractice action; there fore, if there are multiple plaintiffs in one action, the aggregate amount recoverable by the plaintiffs is $250,000 (see Yates v. Pollock (1987) 194 Cal. App. 3d 195, 200, 239 Cal. Rptr. 383).

[Optional] E. Reduction of Award to Reflect Other Tortfeasor's Negligence. With respect to awards of noneconomic damages exceeding $250,000 in professional negligence actions involving multiple health care providers, reduction of the total award to $250,000, pursuant to Civ. Code § 3333.2, must precede several apportionment of noneconomic damages between multiple defendants pursuant to Proposition 51 (Gilman v. Beverly Cal. Corp. (1991) 231 Cal. App. 3d 121, 126-130, 283 Cal. Rptr. 17).

[Optional] F. Limitation Applies to Indemnity Actions. A health care provider may invoke Civil Code Section 3333.2(b)'s $250,000 limit on noneconomic damages in an action for partial equitable indemnity based on professional negligence (Western S.S. Lines, Inc. v. San Pedro Peninsula Hosp. (1994) 8 Cal. 4th 100, 111, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 263, 876 P.2d 1062).

[Optional] G. Limitation Applies to Action for Failure to Provide Stabilizing Treatment Under 42 U.S.C.S. § 1395dd. An action for failure to provide stabilizing medical treatment brought under the federal Emergency Medical Treatment and Active Labor Act, 42 U.S.C.S. § 1395dd, is an action for professional negligence subject to the $250,000 limit on noneconomic damages of Civ. Code § 3333.2 (Barris v. County of Los Angeles (1999) 20 Cal. 4th 101, 116-117, 83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 145, 972 P.2d 966).

[Optional] H. Limitation Applies to Damages Awarded Against Vicariously Liable Employer. If an entity, such as a medical partnership group, is vicariously liable for the professional malpractice of a physician employed by the entity, the cap on noneconomic damages applies to any damages awarded against the entity (Lathrop v. HealthCare Partners Med. Group (2004) 114 Cal. App. 4th 1412, 1424, 8 Cal. Rptr. 3d 668).

[Optional] I. Constitutionality of Limitation. The limitation on damages for noneconomic losses in Section 3333.2 of the Civil Code does not violate constitutional guarantees of due process and equal protection and does not unconstitutionally abridge the right to jury trial (Fein v. Permanente Med. Group (1985) 38 Cal. 3d 137, 157-164, 211 Cal. Rptr. 368, 695 P.2d 665 ; Yates v. Pollock (1987) 194 Cal. App. 3d 195, 200, 239 Cal. Rptr. 383).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be used in support of the contention that damages for noneconomic losses in an action against a health care provider based on professional negligence are limited to $250,000 [see Civ. Code § 3333.2].

[b] Argument

[c] Limitation Does Not Preclude Award of Punitive Damages

Although Civ. Code § 3333.2 limits an award of compensatory damages for professional negligence of a health care provider to $250,000, the section will not bar an award of punitive damages exceeding $250,000 in cases based on fraud, willful neglect, or malicious acts [see Baker v. Sadick (1984) 162 Cal. App. 3d 618, 626-627, 208 Cal. Rptr. 676 ; see also Civ. Code § 3294 (circumstances in which punitive damages may be recovered)].

[d] Calculation of Damages When Plaintiff Comparatively Negligent

When applying the damage limitations set forth in Civ. Code § 3333.2 to a particular case, the trier of fact must first find the entire amount of the plaintiff's noneconomic damages. The amount is then reduced by the percentage of the plaintiff's comparative fault, if any. If what remains exceeds $250,000, the award is further reduced to that amount [see Atkins v. Strayhorn (1990) 223 Cal. App. 3d 1380, 1391-1393, 273 Cal. Rptr. 231 ; McAdory v. Rogers (1989) 215 Cal. App. 3d 1273, 1276-1281, 264 Cal. Rptr. 71] .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Action Based on Breach of Hospital's Duty to Use Reasonable Care in Reviewing Competence of Its Medical Staff

In Bell v. Sharp Cabrillo Hosp. (1989) 212 Cal. App. 3d 1034, 260 Cal. Rptr. 886 , the mother of a minor whose death resulted from surgery performed at a hospital sued both the hospital and the physician who performed the surgery for negligence. The plaintiff charged that the hospital breached its duty to exercise reasonable care in reviewing the surgeon's competence when the surgeon applied for renewal of his staff privileges. The jury's special verdict found that the hospital's negligence in evaluating and reviewing the surgeon's staff privileges was a legal cause of the child's death, and it awarded $100,000 in economic damages and $500,000 in noneconomic damages to plaintiff. The trial court reduced plaintiff's recovery for noneconomic damages to $250,000 pursuant to Civ. Code § 3333.2. On appeal, plaintiff contended that the court erred in reducing the award of economic damages to $250,000.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment (212 Cal. App. 3d 1034, 1052) . It noted that "professional negligence" is defined within Civ. Code § 3333.2(c)(2) as a negligent act or omission to act by a health care provider in the rendering of professional services, which act or omission is the proximate cause of a personal injury or wrongful death, provided that such services are within the scope of services for which the provider is licensed and which are not within any restriction imposed by the licensing agency or licensed hospital (212 Cal. App. 3d 1034, 1049) . The court noted that because a hospital's effectiveness in selecting and periodically reviewing the competency of its medical staff is a necessary predicate to delivering quality health care, its inadequate fulfillment of that responsibility constitutes "professional negligence" involving conduct necessary to the rendering of professional services within the scope of the services a hospital is licensed to provide (212 Cal. App. 3d 1034, 1051) . The court noted that in light of the comprehensive legislative scheme regulating the quality ofhealth care provided by contemporary hospitals, the ability of a medical malpractice victim to recover all economic, pecuniary damages resulting from an injury, and other social and economic pressures on hospitals to remain competitive in the health-care marketplace, it (the court) was confident that its holding would not encourage hospitals to become less responsible in monitoring the competency of their medical staffs (212 Cal. App. 3d 1034, 1052) .

[b] Wrongful Death Actions

Yates v. Pollock (1987) 194 Cal. App. 3d 195, 239 Cal. Rptr. 383 , was a wrongful death action brought by a deceased patient's spouse and children against a surgeon who performed gallbladder surgery on the patient. During the surgery, the defendant ligated the patient's common bile duct; this resulted in the obstruction of the duct and the development of abscesses and infections that resulted in the patient's death. At trial, the jury awarded noneconomic damages to plaintiffs exceeding $1,000,000; defendant contended on appeal that this award was contrary to Civ. Code § 3333.2.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment against defendant, but reduced the noneconomic damages to $250,000. Plaintiffs maintained that Civ. Code § 3333.2 had no applicability to wrongful death actions because Civ. Code § 3333.2(a) refers only to actions for "injury" rather than "injury or wrongful death." The court noted that this argument ignores the fact that wrongful death claims are for "injuries" suffered by the heirs of medical malpractice victims. Plaintiffs also argued that inasmuch as survivors may not recover for "pain, suffering, inconvenience, physical impairment, disfigurement, and other nonpecuniary damage" under Civ. Code § 3333.2(a), the legislature must have intended to exclude wrongful death actions from the reach of the statute. The court disagreed, noting that Civ. Code § 3333.2(a) does not purport to set forth a comprehensive catalog of the types of losses to which the statute is applicable; it simply identifies certain of the more common types of noneconomic damages that arise in malpractice actions. The court added that the statute's reference to "nonpecuniary damage" is not fatal to its application in the wrongful death context. Although California law indicates that only "pecuniary" losses are compensable in wrongful death suits, damage awards in such cases, in fact, have never been restricted to those elements having an ascertainable economic value (194 Cal. App. 3d 195, 199-200) .

[c] Limitation Applies Regardless of Number of Plaintiffs

The facts and procedural background of Yates v. Pollock (1987) 194 Cal. App. 3d 195, 239 Cal. Rptr. 383 , are discussed in § 175.66[3][b]. The plaintiffs (the decedent's wife and five adult children) asserted that the $250,000 damages limitation in Civ. Code § 3333.2 should be applied to each plaintiff individually and not to all plaintiffs in the aggregate. The court of appeal disagreed. It stated that Civ. Code § 3333.2 makes it clear that while each injured plaintiff is entitled to seek noneconomic damages, the maximum recovery permitted in any single medical malpractice action is $250,000, regardless of the number of plaintiffs involved. The court surmised that the legislature, when drafting the statute, was aware that case precedent has consistently held that only one action can be brought for the wrongful death of a person, and that the cause of action for wrongful death has been consistently characterized as a joint one, a single one, and an indivisible one. The court concluded that the legislature's use of the word "action" in Civ. Code § 3333.2 represented its (the legislature's) conscious decision to limit the total recovery for noneconomic loss in wrongful death suits to $250,000 (194 Cal. App. 3d 195, 200-201) .

NOTE:

In Atkins v. Strayhorn (1990) 223 Cal. App. 3d 1380, 273 Cal. Rptr. 231 , the court of appeal clarified that Civ. Code § 3333.2 does not limit all noneconomic damages arising from a single act of professional negligence to $250,000, but instead limits the aggregate noneconomic damages to $250,000 for each separate and independent claim for personal injury based on a single act of professional negligence. In Atkins, a claim for loss of consortium was joined with a spouse's claim for physical injuries in an action for medical malpractice, and the court held that each spouse was entitled to recover up to $250,000 for his or her separate noneconomic losses. The court distinguished Yates, in which the appellate court placed an aggregate limit on recovery by wrongful death plaintiffs, noting that wrongful death is a joint, single and indivisible action, merely derivative of the deceased patient's claim for personal injuries, while loss of consortium is a separate and independent claim from a spouse's claim for personal injury [Atkins v. Strayhorn (1990) 223 Cal. App. 3d 1380, 1394-1396, 273 Cal. Rptr. 231] .

[d] Reduction of Award to Reflect Other Tortfeasor's Negligence

Gilman v. Beverly Cal. Corp. (1991) 231 Cal. App. 3d 121, 283 Cal. Rptr. 17 , was a wrongful death action involving tortious conduct by a nursing facility and a nonparty physician. The jury, finding for plaintiffs, awarded plaintiffs $400,000 in noneconomic damages against the facility. The trial court reduced the jury's award to $250,000, pursuant to Civ. Code § 3333.2, and then reduced the award by another 10 percent, pursuant to Proposition 51 [Civ. Code § 1431.2(a)], to reflect the fact that 10 percentof fault was attributed to the nonparty physician. On plaintiffs' cross appeal, plaintiffs contended that the court should have applied Proposition 51's proportionate fault reduction to the $400,000 award before reducing the noneconomic damages to the MICRA cap of $250,000.

The court of appeal affirmed the noneconomic damage award, upholding the trial court's method of calculation (231 Cal. App. 3d 121, 129) . It noted that the method of calculation requested by plaintiffs would defeat the stated purposes of Proposition 51 (Civ. Code § 1431.1 et seq.)--to limit the potential liability of an individual defendant for noneconomic damages to a proportion commensurate with that defendant's personal share of fault (231 Cal. App. 3d 121, 128) .

NOTE:

In a subsequent case, the court of appeal noted that the approach of the court in Gilman v. Beverly California Corp. was correct if the nonparty assigned a proportion of the fault was also a health care provider subject to MICRA. However, the court held that in adjusting damages to account for the comparative fault of nonparties who are not subject to MICRA, a noneconomic damages award must be reduced prior to applying the $250,000 cap [Francies v. Kapla (2005) 127 Cal. App. 4th 1381, 1387-1389, 26 Cal. Rptr. 3d 501] .

[e] Limitation Applies to Indemnity Actions

In Western S.S. Lines, Inc. v. San Pedro Peninsula Hosp. (1994) 8 Cal. 4th 100, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 263, 876 P.2d 1062 , a purser who worked for Western Steamship Lines (Western) became ill while at sea; when the ship reached port, she was taken unconscious to San Pedro Peninsula Hospital (Hospital). At the Hospital, she suffered cardiac arrest, and never regained consciousness. Her guardian brought suit against Western in Florida under federal maritime law, and Western settled for $6 million after a judgment of $7.75 million. Western sued Hospital for indemnification; based on a finding that Hospital's fault was 30 percent, the trial court entered judgment against Hospital in the amount of $1.8 million (30 percent of $6 million). Hospital appealed, arguing that Civ. Code § 3333.2(b) applied to limit the amount of its liability; the court of appeal affirmed on the ground that the payment was entirely economic in nature, making § 3333.2(b) inapplicable. The Supreme Court granted review and reversed the court of appeal, holding that the damage limitation in Civ. Code § 3333.2 applies to an action for equitable indemnity brought against a health care provider by a concurrent tortfeasor (8 Cal. 4th 100, 104) .

The Court discussed the policies underlying the doctrine of equitable indemnity and its general goal of equitable allocation of loss, and the qualifications to the right to indemnity that can be imposed on grounds of public policy (8 Cal. 4th 100, 108-110) . The Court also examined the public policy that is served by the Medical Injury Compensation Reform Act (MICRA), especially the goals of controlling or redistributing liability for damages, and reasoned that the legislative goals of containing malpractice insurance rates by limiting the size of unpredictable jury awards, would be undermined if health care providers were subject to unlimited liability in third-party indemnity actions (8 Cal. 4th 100, 112) .

The Court also found support for its conclusion by analyzing the nature of Civ. Code § 3333.2 in terms of a limitation on liability. By precluding recovery for noneconomic damages against health care providers in excess of $250,000, it also limits their joint liability irrespective of proportionate fault. Thus, concurrent tortfeasors have no right to indemnification beyond this amount (8 Cal. 4th 100, 116) . Because a health care provider cannot be liable for noneconomic damages in excess of $250,000, a concurrent tortfeasor that satisfies a judgment or settles with the injured party for a greater amount has not been "compelled to pay" on behalf of another who would have otherwise incurred the loss, and the provider is not unjustly enriched by the payment of damages for which it is not legally obligated (8 Cal. 4th 100, 116-117) .

[f] Limitation Applies to Action for Failure to Provide Stabilizing Treatment Under 42 U.S.C.S. § 1395dd

In Barris v. County of Los Angeles (1999) 20 Cal. 4th 101, 83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 145, 972 P.2d 966 , plaintiff had taken her 18-month-old daughter to the emergency room of a county hospital when her daughter was experiencing episodes of vomiting, diarrhea, lethargy, breathing difficulties, and high fever. Although the examining physician at the county hospital suspected sepsis, a life-threatening bacterial infection detectable through a blood culture and treatable with antibiotics, the doctor believed that permission from plaintiff's health plan was required before blood tests could be performed. Upon contacting the health plan, the examining physician was denied permission to perform the blood tests, which were instead to be performed at a health plan hospital following transfer of the child. Although the examining doctor at the county hospital was concerned that the blood tests should not be delayed and again contacted the health plan unsuccessfully for permission, tests were not performed by the county hospital. When the child suffered a seizure, the examining physician at the county hospital treated the symptoms but antibiotics were not administered. Approximately an hour after the seizure, the child was finally transferred by ambulance to a health plan hospital, where within 15 minutes she suffered cardiac arrest and died. The death certificate listed sepsis as the cause of the cardiac arrest. Plaintiff brought an action against the county hospital, plaintiff's health plan, and doctors at each, alleging professional negligenceand violations of the federal Emergency Medical Treatment and Active Labor Act, 42 U.S.C.S. § 1395dd (EMTALA). The claims under EMTALA alleged that the county had failed to provide an appropriate medical screening and that the county failed to stabilize the infant's emergency medical condition prior to transferring her to another hospital, both of which are grounds for recovery of civil damages under the statute [see 42 U.S.C.S. § 1395dd(a)-(c), (d)(2)(A)].

At trial, the county moved for nonsuit on the claims brought under EMTALA. The trial court granted nonsuit on the failure to screen claim only, and thereafter the jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff on the claims for professional negligence and for failure to stabilize under EMTALA. The jury award included $1.35 million in noneconomic damages, although the trial court reduced these damages to $250,000, ruling that the noneconomic damages cap of Civ. Code § 3333.2 applied to the EMTALA claim as well as the professional negligence claim. Plaintiff appealed the application of Civ. Code § 3333.2. The court of appeal affirmed, concluding that Civ. Code § 3333.2 applies broadly to any cause of action against a health care provider that is directly related to the professional services provided.

The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment, although on narrower grounds than the court of appeal. The Supreme Court noted that when a successful suit is brought under EMTALA, the statute specifically provides for recovery of "those damages available for personal injury under the law of the State in which the hospital is located" (see 42 U.S.C.S. § 1395dd(d)(2)(A). Based on this damage provision, the intent of Congress when passing the statute, and the opinions of courts in other jurisdictions that had faced the analogous question, the Court held that the cap on noneconomic damages of Civ. Code § 3333.2 applies to actions brought under EMTALA when the cap would apply if the claim were brought under state law. Since a plaintiff bringing a failure to stabilize claim under EMTALA must necessarily prove that "the hospital did not, within its available staff and facilities, provide a patient known to be suffering from an emergency medical condition with medical treatment necessary to assure, within reasonable medical probability, that no deterioration of the condition would likely occur," these claims are "based on professional negligence" and therefore subject to the provisions of Civ. Code § 3333.2. The Court cautioned, however, that its holding did not limit all awards of noneconomic damages for violations of EMTALA, but only for those violations that would constitute "professional negligence" under state law (20 Cal. 4th 101, 114, 116) .

[g] Limitation Applies to Damages Awarded Against Vicariously Liable Employer

In Lathrop v. HealthCare Partners Med. Group (2004) 114 Cal. App. 4th 1412, 8 Cal. Rptr. 3d 668 , the plaintiffs were a patient and her husband who sued several physicians and an unincorporated medical group that employed the physicians. The suit alleged medical malpractice in the physicians' negligent failure to timely diagnose and treat the patient for breast cancer. The physicians examined the patient for a lump in her breast, but no mammograms or biopsies were performed because the doctors concluded the lump was a benign cyst. At trial against the defendants, the jury awarded damages, including noneconomic damages, to the plaintiffs. The trial court rejected the claim of the unincorporated medical group that its liability for noneconomic damages was limited to $250,000 for each of the judgments entered in favor of the two plaintiffs. The medical group appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. The court held, first, that the group did not meet the statutory definition of a "health care provider" under MICRA. The group itself was not a licensed medical practitioner, because only individual persons may be so licensed, and because the group had abandoned any argument that it met the definition of a licensed facility, the court of appeal declined to address the issue of whether the group was a licensed facility. Therefore, application of the MICRA damages limitation could not be justified on the grounds that the medial group was itself a health care provider (114 Cal. App. 4th 1412, 1419-1421) . However, the court went on to note that under the legal theories and evidence advanced at trial, the liability imposed on the medical group was vicarious liability based on the negligence of the individual physicians employed by the group, rather than direct liability for conduct taken by the group itself. The court noted that under the doctrine of respondeat superior, regardless of whether the employee is also sued, the vicarious liability of the employer is wholly derived from the liability of the employee, and that any defenses available to the employee also inure to the benefit of the employer. The court saw no reason to deviate from this established principle in the application of the MICRA damages limitation, and therefore the court held that the trial court erred in refusing to reduce the noneconomic damage awards to $250,000, because any judgments against the physicians themselves would clearly be governed by this cap (114 Cal. App. 4th 1412, 1421-1424) .

[h] Constitutionality of Limitation

Fein v. Permanente Med. Group (1985) 38 Cal. 3d 137, 211 Cal. Rptr. 368, 695 P.2d 665 , involved a medical malpractice action brought against a hospital based on the hospital's alleged failure to diagnose the plaintiff's impending heart attack. The jury awarded plaintiff over $1,000,000 in damages, including $500,000 for "noneconomic damages," to compensate for pain, suffering, inconvenience, physical impairment and other intangible damages sustained by plaintiff from the time of the injury until his death. After the verdict was returned, defendant hospital requested the court to reduce the noneconomic damages award to $250,000 pursuantto Civ. Code § 3333.2. The trial court, which had rejected the plaintiff's constitutional challenge to Civ. Code § 3333.2 in a pretrial ruling, reduced the noneconomic damages to $250,000. On appeal from the judgment, plaintiff contended that Civ. Code § 3333.2: (1) violates due process because it limits the potential recovery of medical malpractice claimants without providing them an adequate quid pro quo; (2) violates the equal protection clause because it impermissibly discriminates between medical malpractice victims and other tort victims; and (3) violates the equal protection clause because it improperly discriminates within the class of medical malpractice victims, denying a complete recovery of damages only to those malpractice plaintiffs with noneconomic damages exceeding $250,000.

The Supreme Court affirmed the reduction by the trial court of the noneconomic damage award (38 Cal. 3d 137, 164) . It rejected plaintiff's due process claim, noting that a plaintiff has no vested property right in a particular measure of damages, and that the legislature possesses broad authority to modify the scope and nature of damages (38 Cal. 3d 137, 157) . Civ. Code § 3333.2, said the Court, is rationally related to the legitimate state interest of reducing the costs of malpractice defendants and their insurers (38 Cal. 3d 137, 158-159) . Rejecting plaintiffs' equal protection arguments, the Court noted that Civ. Code § 3333.2 bears a rational relationship to a legitimate legislative purpose, and therefore meets the traditional, "rational relationship" equal protection standard (38 Cal. 3d 137, 162-163) . The Court stated that there was no merit to plaintiff's claim that Civ. Code § 3333.2 violates equal protection principles because it obtains cost savings through a $250,000 limit on noneconomic damages, rather than, for example, through the complete elimination of all noneconomic damages; if the across-the-board limit were unconstitutional, noted the Court, then a complete elimination of noneconomic damages would also violate equal protection, since abolition would impose greater monetary losses on those plaintiffs who would have obtained larger damage awards than on those who would have recovered lesser amounts (38 Cal. 3d 137, 162) . Although the legislature could have realized its hoped-for cost savings by mandating a fixed-percentage reduction of all noneconomic damage awards, the Court stated that the legislature may have had several valid reasons for setting an absolute limit, all of which would provide a sufficient rationale for the $250,000 limit: (1) the legislature could reasonably have determined that an across-the-board limit would provide a more stable base on which to calculate insurance rates; (2) the legislature could reasonably have felt that the fixed $250,000 limit would promote settlements by eliminating the unknown possibility of phenomenal awards for pain and suffering; and (3) the legislature could have felt that it was fairer to malpractice plaintiffs in general to reduce only the very large noneconomic damage awards, rather than to diminish the more modest recoveries for pain and suffering and the like in the great bulk of cases (38 Cal. 3d 137, 162-163) . The Supreme Court concluded that Civ. Code § 3333.2 is constitutional, and that the trial court did not err in reducing the noneconomic damages award pursuant to its terms (38 Cal. 3d 137, 164) .

The facts and procedural background of Yates v. Pollock (1987) 194 Cal. App. 3d 195, 239 Cal. Rptr. 383 , are discussed in § 175.66[3][b]. The plaintiffs contended on appeal that Civ. Code § 3333.2 unconstitutionally abridges the right to jury trial guaranteed by Cal. Const. art. I, § 16. The court disagreed, finding this argument nothing but an indirect attack on the legislature's power to place a cap on damages. The court noted that while Civ. Code § 3333.2 will, in some cases, result in the recovery of a lower judgment than would have been obtained before the enactment of the statute, the legislature retains broad control over the measure as well as the timing of damages that a defendant is obligated to pay, and a plaintiff is entitled to receive, and that it may expand or limit recoverable damages so long as its action is rationally related to a legitimate government interest. The court noted that, while the general propriety of noneconomic damages is firmly imbedded in common law jurisprudence, no California case has ever suggested that the right to recover for such noneconomic injuries is constitutionally immune from legislative limitation or revision (194 Cal. App. 3d 195, 200) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Reduction of Award to Reflect Other Tortfeasor's Negligence

In Mayes v. Bryan (2006) 139 Cal. App. 4th 1075, 44 Cal. Rptr. 3d 14 , plaintiffs were the husband and children of a woman who died two months after surgery to have her stomach stapled. Plaintiffs sued several doctors and related entities for malpractice in failing to properly diagnose and treat a bowel obstruction that occurred the day after the surgery, which eventually caused the woman's death. The case went to trial and plaintiffs settled with all defendants except one doctor. The jury returned a verdict in favor of plaintiffs, awarded economic damages of $1,366,357 and noneconomic damages of $3,000,000, and allocated 20 percent of total fault to the nonsettling doctor. In calculating this doctor's share of liability, the trial court first reduced the economic damage award to $817,107 to offset for the amount of economic damages recovered in settlements with the other defendants. The court then reduced the noneconomic damage award to $250,000 pursuant to MICRA and allocated 20 percent of that amount to the nonsettling doctor, to arrive at a total liability of $867,107. Plaintiff appealed this allocation, arguing that it was unfair to reduce the noneconomic damage award to $250,000 before further reducing it to account for the jury's allocation of fault. The court of appeal rejected this argument, following the logic and analysis set out in Gilman v. Beverly Cal. Corp. (1991) 231 Cal. App. 3d 121, 283 Cal. Rptr. 17 , discussed in [3][d], above. The court noted that this was not a case in which the plaintiff's own comparative fault was an issue, and all of the settling defendants werephysicians also subject to the MICRA cap on noneconomic damages. Thus, it was proper for the trial court to cap noneconomic damages at $250,000 before allocating responsibility for that amount among the various tortfeasors. The court noted that it was up to plaintiffs to ensure that their settlements with more culpable defendants before trial resulted in recovery of an appropriate share of noneconomic damages to reflect the culpability of those defendants (139 Cal. App. 4th 1075, 1098-1103) .

§ 175.67 Supporting Contention That Statutory Cap on Noneconomic Damages in Medical Malpractice Actions [Civ. Code § 3333.2] Applies to Present Value of Periodic Payment of Future Damages [Code Civ. Proc. § 667.7]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief].

WHEN FUTURE NONECONOMIC DAMAGES WILL BE PAID OVER TIME IN PERIODIC INSTALLMENTS, THE $250,000 STATUTORY CAP ON THESE DAMAGES APPLIES ONLY TO THE PRESENT VALUE OF THE FUTURE DAMAGES AWARD AT THE TIME OF JUDGMENT.

Statutory Cap on Noneconomic Damages Award Applies to Present Value of Awards for Future Damages. If the award of noneconomic damages includes future noneconomic damages to be paid according to a periodic payment schedule, the statutory cap applies only to the present value of the award for future damages at the time of judgment (Salgado v. County of Los Angeles (1998) 19 Cal. 4th 629, 643, 80 Cal. Rptr. 2d 46, 967 P.2d 585).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that if an award of noneconomic damages in a medical malpractice case includes future noneconomic damages to be paid according to a periodic payment schedule under Code Civ. Proc. § 667.7, the statutory cap on noneconomic damages of Civ. Code § 3333.2 applies only to the present value of the award for future damages at the time of judgment.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Therefore, counsel should include discussion of the award for future noneconomic damages, the present value of the award at the time of judgment, and the periodic payment schedule.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Statutory Cap on Noneconomic Damages Award Applies to Present Value of Awards for Future Damages

The facts and procedural background of Salgado v. County of Los Angeles (1998) 19 Cal. 4th 629, 641-643, 80 Cal. Rptr. 2d 46, 967 P.2d 585 , are discussed in § 175.67[3][a]. In reaching its decision, the California Supreme Court reviewed relevant case law and concluded that, since a jury award for future pain and suffering has generally been regarded as the jury's rough estimate of the amount of money paid at the time of judgment that would compensate the plaintiff for all future pain and suffering, the statutory cap of $250,000 for noneconomic damages was intended to apply to a lump sum paid at the time of the judgment, or to the present value of periodic future payments, but not to the gross sum of such future payments. Thus, the cap does not prevent a defendant from paying more than $250,000 over time when a periodic payment schedule is used.

§ 175.68 Opposing Contention That Noneconomic Damages From Medical Malpractice Are Limited by Statute [Civ. Code § 3333.2]--Damages Limitation Does Not Apply to Common Law Battery Action

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE $250,000 LIMIT ON THE RECOVERY OF NONECONOMIC DAMAGES IN AN ACTION FOR MEDICAL MALPRACTICE DOES NOT APPLY TO A CAUSE OF ACTION FOR COMMON LAW BATTERY.

Damages Cap Inapplicable to Common Law Battery Claim. The $250,000 limit on noneconomic damages imposed by Civil Code Section 3333.2 in medical malpractice cases does not apply if a plaintiff recovers for a common law battery based on the physician's performing a surgery to which the plaintiff expressly did not consent (Perry v. Shaw (2001) 88 Cal. App. 4th 658, 661, 668-670, 106 Cal. Rptr. 2d 70).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that the plaintiff may not recover noneconomic damages in excess of $250,000. The basis for the opposition is that the $250,000 noneconomic damages cap of Civ. Code § 3333.2 does not apply to a cause of action for the common law intentional tort of battery, such as an action in which the plaintiff proves that the physician performed a type of surgery to which the plaintiff expressly did not consent.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the point of law stated. Thus, counsel should include facts showing that the action is not an action for negligence, but is instead an action for common law battery--for example, by showing that the plaintiff expressly refused to consent to the treatment or surgery performed by the physician.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Damages Cap Inapplicable to Common-Law Battery Claim

The plaintiff in Perry v. Shaw (2001) 88 Cal. App. 4th 658, 106 Cal. Rptr. 2d 70 , had lost a substantial amount of weight and subsequently agreed to have surgery to remove excess skin from her arms, back, thighs, and stomach. During two office visits prior to the surgery, the plaintiff's physician discussed the possibility of breast augmentation in addition to the skin removal procedure, but the plaintiff expressly told her physician that she was not interested. At the hospital on the day of surgery, the plaintiff twice refused to sign a form consenting to breast augmentation surgery, although she apparently "changed her mind" after she was medicated, taken to the operating room, and reassured by the doctor that he would not perform breast surgery. The plaintiff woke up after the surgery to find that in addition to the skin removal, the physician had made her breasts substantially larger by moving tissue flaps from the side of her chest into her breasts. The plaintiff brought suit against the physician and his employer, alleging both negligence and battery, although the case was tried entirely on the theory of battery. The jury found that the physician was both negligent and had committed a battery and awarded $59,000 for medical expenses and $1,030,000 for past and future noneconomic damages. The trial court refused to reduce the noneconomic damages award to $250,000 pursuant to Civ. Code § 3333.2, and the defendants appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court first noted that Civ. Code § 3333.2 applies only to actions based on professional negligence, defined as "a negligent act or omission to act by a health care provider in the rendering of professional services." The court then discussed Cobbs v. Grant (1972) 8 Cal. 3d 229, 104 Cal. Rptr. 505, 502 P.2d 1 , which established that common law battery is proven if a physician obtains consent from a patient to perform one type of treatment and subsequently performs a substantially different treatment for which consent was not obtained (88 Cal. App. 4th 658, 663-664) . The court then analyzed the legislative history and past applications of Civ. Code § 3333.2 and found nothing to suggest that the legislature intended to extend the noneconomic damages cap to the intentional tort of battery. At the time Civ. Code § 3333.2 was enacted, the legislature knew that case law had recognized a species of battery by a health care practitioner that was not negligence, and yet the legislature chose to use the word "negligence" in defining the scope of the statute (88 Cal. App. 4th 658, 668-669) . The court then rejected the physician's claim that the noneconomic damages award should be allocated between the negligence and battery causes of action. Although the jury had expressly found that the physician was both negligent and had committed a battery, the court noted that the case at trial had been prosecuted entirely on the theory that a battery had been committed, not that the surgery had been performed negligently, and that the noneconomic damages award was for the emotional distress caused by the unwanted breast enlargement, which was the basis for the battery claim (88 Cal. App. 4th 658, 669-670 & n.5).

§ 175.69 Supporting Contention That Expert Medical Witness Lacking Experience in Emergency Medical Care Is Not Qualified to Testify in Medical Malpractice Action--Action Is for Alleged Medical Malpractice Arising Out of Emergency Medical Coverage [Health & Safety Code § 1799.110(c)]

[1] FORM

THE EXPERT MEDICAL WITNESS _____ [WHO TESTIFIED or WHOSE TESTIMONY _____ (WAS or WILL BE) PROFFERED] BY _____ [specify party, e.g., PLAINTIFF] AT THE TRIAL OF THIS ACTION _____ [IS or WAS] NOT QUALIFIED TO TESTIFY BECAUSE THIS ACTION AROSE OUT OF [ALLEGED] MEDICAL MALPRACTICE IN PROVIDING EMERGENCY MEDICAL COVERAGE, AND THE WITNESS _____ [LACKS or LACKED] THE REQUIRED EXPERIENCE TO QUALIFY AS AN EXPERT IN SUCH A CASE.

A. Required Qualifications of Expert Medical Witness in Medical Malpractice Action Arising Out of Emergency Medical Care. In any action for damages involving a claim of negligence againsta physician and surgeon providing emergency medical coverage for a general acute care hospital emergency department, the court "shall" admit expert medical testimony only from physicians and surgeons who have had substantial professional experience within the last five years while assigned to provide emergency medical coverage in a general acute care hospital emergency department (Health & Safety Code § 1799.110(c); Zavala v. Board of Trs. (1993) 16 Cal. App. 4th 1755, 1762-1763, 20 Cal. Rptr. 2d 768 ; Sigala v. Goldfarb (1990) 222 Cal. App. 3d 1450, 1455-1456, 266 Cal. Rptr. 96).

B. Determination of Substantial Professional Experience. For the purposes of Health and Safety Code Section 1799.110(c), substantial professional experience "shall" be determined by the custom and practice in which emergency medical coverage is provided in general acute care hospital emergency departments in the same or similar localities where the alleged negligence occurred (Health & Safety Code § 1799.110(c)).

C. Meaning of "Shall" as Used in Code. The word "shall," as used in the Health and Safety Code, indicates mandatory compliance (Health & Safety Code § 16).

D. "Emergency Medical Coverage" Defined. Although the term "emergency medical coverage" is not defined in Health and Safety Code Section 1799.110(c), the term has been held to mean providing treatment to a patient in a general acute care hospital emergency department, regardless of whether the physician was actually providing "emergency medical services," as that term is defined in Health and Safety Code Section 1799.110(b), at the time of the alleged negligence (James v. St. Elizabeth Cmty. Hosp. (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 73, 79-80, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 372).

[Optional] E. Applicability of Statute. Health and Safety Code Section 1799.110(c) applies to any suit involving a claim of negligent treatment by a hospital emergency room physician, whether or not that physician is named as a defendant (Jutzi v. County of Los Angeles (1987) 196 Cal. App. 3d 637, 646-647, 649-651, 242 Cal. Rptr. 74).

[Optional] F. "On Call" Emergency Room Physician Does Not Provide "Emergency Medical Coverage." A specialist who is "on call" to the emergency room to consult and treat injuries within his or her specialty is not an emergency room physician providing "emergency medical coverage," and is thus not qualified to provide expert medical testimony under Health and Safety Code Section 1799.110(c) (Miranda v. National Emergency Servs., Inc. (1995) 35 Cal. App. 4th 894, 907, 41 Cal. Rptr. 2d 593).

[Optional] G. Experience "Within Last Five Years" Means Within Five Years Before Date of Malpractice. The requirement of Health & Safety Code Section 1799.110(c) that a testifying medical expert have substantial experience in emergency medical coverage within the "last five years" is measured from the date of the alleged malpractice, not from the date of trial (Petrou v. South Coast Emergency Group (2004) 119 Cal. App. 4th 1090, 1094, 15 Cal. Rptr. 3d 64).

[2] Comments

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that to qualify as a medical expert witness in a medical malpractice action arising out of emergency medical coverage, the witness must be experienced in the field of emergency medical coverage. Optional Paragraph E should be included if the negligent physician is not named as a defendant in the lawsuit.

These points and authorities may be combined, when appropriate, with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue of the expert medical witness's qualifications to testify. For example, counsel may wish to raise the issue in support of a motion for new trial when unqualified medical experts were allowed, over objection, to testify for the adverse party; in support of a motion in limine made before trial; or in support of an oral objection at trial to the witness's testifying. The points and authorities in this form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in § 175.70 may be used to oppose the contention supported by the points and authorities in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Required Qualifications of Expert Medical Witness in Medical Malpractice Action Arising Out of Emergency Medical Care

In Zavala v. Board of Trs. (1993) 16 Cal. App. 4th 1755, 20 Cal. Rptr. 2d 768 , plaintiff alleged that defendant physician failed to properly diagnose and treat her during her visit to an emergency room. As part of her case, plaintiff intended to introduce the testimony of an expert witness. However, the expert witness was not an emergency room physician, nor had he acted as such within the last five years. Consequently, the trial court granted defendant's motion in limine to exclude the testimony of plaintiff's expert on the grounds that he did not qualify pursuant to Health & Safety Code § 1799.110. Since plaintiff did not have expert testimony to support her claims, the trial court granted a nonsuit in favor of defendant.

In affirming the trial court's ruling, the appellate court noted that it was undisputed that defendant was responsible for providing emergency medical services and was acting in that capacity at the time she treated plaintiff. Further, Health & Safety Code § 1799.110 precludes expert testimony by a witness who has not had substantial experience as an emergency room physician in the last five years (16 Cal. App. 4th 1755, 1762-1763) .

In Sigala v. Goldfarb (1990) 222 Cal. App. 3d 1450, 266 Cal. Rptr. 96 , a medical malpractice action, the trial court granted a motion in limine by defendant doctor to preclude testimony by plaintiffs' designated expert witness. This witness was, according to plaintiffs, a nationally recognized expert in the field of trauma care. However, it was undisputed that the witness did not meet the experience requirements set forth in Health & Safety Code § 1799.110(c). The court of appeal affirmed, rejecting a contention by plaintiff that allowing the testimony would have provided the jury with the type of expert testimony that the statute seeks to ensure. The court noted that it was obligated to follow the plain and literal meaning of the statute, and that its construction of Health & Safety Code § 1799.110(c) would not result in absurdity or contravene the statute's purpose (222 Cal. App. 3d 1450, 1455-1456) .

[b] "Emergency Medical Coverage" Defined

In James v. St. Elizabeth Cmty. Hosp. (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 73, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 372 , the plaintiff brought a medical malpractice action against a hospital and physician based on allegedly negligent treatment provided by the physician. The action stemmed from treatment received when the plaintiff went to the hospital's emergency room to have rings cut off from her left ring finger. The plaintiff had injured the finger a day earlier, but the initial treatment provided by a local clinic had not prevented the finger from swelling to the point that the rings had to be removed to alleviate the pain. After other emergency room personnel removed the plaintiff's rings, which provided immediate relief to the plaintiff from the pain, the defendant physician requested and received the plaintiff's consent to examine the finger. The doctor had X-rays taken, which subsequently revealed a small break in the knuckle not previously detected. The physician and a nurse then reapplied the straight splint that had earlier been used by the clinic to immobilize the finger and told the plaintiff to leave the splint on until returning to her own doctor in three or four weeks. Four weeks later, the splint was removed and the plaintiff was unable to bend her fingers. Plaintiff underwent physical therapy for approximately a year and apparently still suffered residual effects at the time of trial. At trial, plaintiff was unable to provide an expert medical witness that met the qualification requirements of Health & Safety Code § 1799.110(c), but she argued that the section did not apply to her case because the defendant physician was not providing "emergency medical care" at the time of the allegedly-negligent treatment. In support of her proposition she cited Jutzi v. County of Los Angeles (1987) 242 Cal. Rptr. 74 [see § 175.69[3][c]], in which the court had noted that "emergency medical coverage" under the statute was apparently the same as "emergency medical services" as defined in Health & Safety Code § 1799.110(b), and as such the need for immediate treatment was essential for the statutory provision to apply. The trial judge disagreed, and granted a motion for nonsuit brought by the defendants.

The court of appeal upheld the trial court's ruling. The court of appeal concluded that the structure of the statute and language used indicated that the legislature must have intended that a different, broader meaning be given to "emergency medical coverage" than to "emergency medical services." Thus, given the common meaning of the words used, the statutory requirements for expert witnesses in these cases must apply whenever the physician treated the patient in a general acute care hospital emergency department, regardless of whether the treatment at issue met the statutory definition of "emergency medical services" (30 Cal. App. 4th 73, 79-80) . The court also noted that the purpose of the provisions at issue was improving accessibility to emergency medical treatment by reducing lawsuits based on the alleged negligence of emergency room physicians. The court concluded that the broader reading of when the provisions apply was consistent with the purpose of the statute, since all doctors working in the emergency room setting, whether actually providing emergency treatment or not, work without the benefit of the time, medical histories, and prior relationships that are generally characteristic of medical decisions outside of that setting (30 Cal. App. 4th 73, 81-82) . Finally, the court rejected as being too inefficient the interpretation of the statute suggested by the earlier court in the Jutzi decision. If the provisions at issue wereto apply only when "emergency medical services" were provided, there would be the need to determine early on in the proceedings whether the services were actually "emergency" in nature and whether the negligence in fact arose out of those particular services. These determinations would themselves often require expert medical testimony, merely to determine what type of expert medical testimony would be required in order to go forward with a trial on the merits of the case (30 Cal. App. 4th 73, 83) .

[c] Applicability of Statute

Jutzi v. County of Los Angeles (1987) 196 Cal. App. 3d 637, 242 Cal. Rptr. 74 , was an action against a county for alleged medical malpractice at its county hospital in rendering emergency medical services to plaintiff for a broken ankle. Plaintiff had first been taken to a private hospital where X-rays and a physical examination revealed the fracture in the ankle joint, and that the fracture was displaced (bones had come apart and the ankle was deformed). The emergency room physician determined that plaintiff had good circulation in her left foot and had suffered no other apparent injuries. He gave her a painkiller but, not considering himself qualified to give orthopedic care, did not attempt to treat the fracture. About four hours after she had arrived at the hospital, she was transferred to the county hospital. Although he was not an orthopedic specialist and such specialists were available, the county hospital's emergency room physician treated plaintiff when she arrived. However, he had on prior occasions treated between 50 and 60 broken ankles similar to plaintiff's. The physician brought the broken bones back into proper alignment and applied a full-leg cast. A subsequent X ray showed that the alignment was good. He gave her a prescription for painkillers and a sedative. She was issued crutches and released to go home, with an appointment to return to the hospital in 24 hours. She was also given an instruction sheet that explained how to care for the leg, warned of the danger signs of complications, and advised her to return to the hospital if complications occurred. The following day plaintiff's mother phoned the hospital and said she could not bring plaintiff in. She was told to bring plaintiff in when she could. On the fourth day after her injury, plaintiff slipped and fell in the kitchen of her home, as a result of which she suffered great pain. But she did not return to the hospital until the following day, by which time the circulation in her leg had become impaired and the damage to the tissues was irreversible. Gangrene developed and 15 days later her leg was amputated below the knee. Pursuant to Health & Safety Code § 1799.110(c) [see § 175.69[1], Paragraph A], the trial court precluded plaintiff's expert medical witnesses, who did not have recent experience working in a hospital emergency room, from testifying that the emergency room physician in treating plaintiff's injury fell below the required standard of care. Judgment was entered for the defendant, and plaintiff appealed, contending that Health & Safety Code § 1799.110(c) applies only to suits against physicians whereas the instant action was brought against the county. Plaintiff drew this conclusion from the initial phrase of Health & Safety Code § 1799.110(c), "In any action for damages involving a claim of negligence against a physician and surgeon providing emergency medical coverage ... " Plaintiff read this as limiting the scope of the section to (1) an "action ... against a physician" "involving a claim of negligence," rather than (2) an "action ... involving a claim of negligence against a physician" (196 Cal. App. 3d 637, 649) .

In affirming the judgment for defendant, the court of appeal first said that Health & Safety Code § 1799.110(c) applies to any suit involving a claim of negligent treatment by a hospital emergency room physician whether or not that physician is named as a defendant (196 Cal. App. 3d 637, 646-647) . The court rejected plaintiff's reading of Health & Safety Code § 1799.110(c), explaining that, while not a model of clarity, Health & Safety Code § 1799.110(c) appears to refer to actions for damages that involve a claim of negligence against a physician or, in other words, actions that arise from a claim that a physician was negligent in providing emergency medical care (196 Cal. App. 3d 637, 650) . The court said that this interpretation has the benefit of hinging application of the section on the relevant consideration of the nature of the claim involved, rather than on the fortuitous circumstance of which particular parties have been named in the suit and that it is difficult to assume that the legislature intended to condition the statutory furtherance of the public policy (encouraging the provision of emergency medical services by insulating the providers of such services from assertions of negligence made by expert witnesses who lack expertise in hospital emergency room care) on whether or not a plaintiff, for considerations such as amenability to service of process, likelihood of recovery on a judgment, or trial strategy, is willing or able to include a physician among the parties defendant in his medical malpractice suit (196 Cal. App. 3d 637, 650) . To support its conclusion, the court traced the legislative history of Health & Safety Code § 1799.110 (196 Cal. App. 3d 637, 650-651) and concluded that Health & Safety Code § 1799.110(c) applies to actions for damages involving negligence alleged to have been committed by a hospital emergency room physician providing emergency care, whether or not the physician has been named as a defendant (196 Cal. App. 3d 637, 651) .

[d] "On Call" Emergency Room Physician Does Not Provide "Emergency Medical Coverage"

In Miranda v. National Emergency Servs., Inc. (1995) 35 Cal. App. 4th 894, 41 Cal. Rptr. 2d 593 , plaintiff filed a medical malpractice action based on treatment he received during visits to a hospital emergency room. At trial, the court granted defendant's in limine motion to bar plaintiff's designated expert from testifying about relevant standard of care issues on the ground that the expert did not meet the qualifications for expert witnesses set by Health & Safety Code § 1799.110(c). The plaintiff's expertserved as a consultant to an emergency room. He was not an "emergency room physician" but was an orthopedic specialist called to the emergency room to take care of orthopedic problems. When the plaintiff said that he could not satisfy his burden of proof without the expert's testimony, the trial court granted defendant's motion for dismissal.

Although ultimately reversing the judgment for reasons expressed in an unpublished part of its opinion, the court of appeal agreed with the trial court that plaintiff's offer of proof was insufficient to support a conclusion that the proposed expert was qualified to provide expert medical testimony under Health & Safety Code § 1799.110(c) (35 Cal. App. 4th 894, 907) . The court first stated that "emergency medical coverage" means treatment provided in the emergency department of a general acute care hospital by a physician who is "on-duty" in the emergency department at the time (35 Cal. App. 4th 894, 900) . The court then reasoned that the language of Health & Safety Code § 1799.110(c) suggests that the intended focus of the phrase "emergency medical coverage" is those physicians who work as the on-duty professional staff of an emergency room rather than those specialist who provide services in an emergency room only on an "as needed, as called" basis (35 Cal. App. 4th 894, 902) . Thus, a proposed expert witness satisfies the statutory standard only if he or she is a physician who has had substantial professional experience within the five years preceding the trial as an emergency room physician (35 Cal. App. 4th 894, 905) . Since the plaintiff's proposed expert was not an emergency room physician, he was not qualified to provide expert testimony under the statute (35 Cal. App. 4th 894, 907) .

[e] Experience "Within Last Five Years" Means Within Five Years Before Date of Malpractice

In Petrou v. South Coast Emergency Group (2004) 119 Cal. App. 4th 1090, 15 Cal. Rptr. 3d 64 , the plaintiffs' medical malpractice action was dismissed because the court ruled that their medical expert failed to meet the requirements of Health & Safety Code § 1799.110(c) and therefore could not testify, precluding the plaintiffs from proving the applicable standard of care. The plaintiffs' designated expert witness was board certified as an emergency room physician from July 1977 through March 1998, but the court ruled that the physician did not have the requisite substantial experience in emergency medical coverage within the five years immediately prior to the start of trial in late 2002. After granting a motion in limine to exclude the physician's testimony, the trial court granted the defendants' motion to dismiss the case. The plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. The court noted that the statute was ambiguous as to whether the substantial professional experience must have been within five years before the date of the alleged malpractice or within five years before the date of trial. However, the court concluded that the legislature intended the five-year period to be measured from the date of the alleged malpractice. Because the relevant standard of care in a medical malpractice action is the standard existing at the time of the alleged malpractice, the court concluded that it was logical to assume that the statute required expert witnesses to have substantial professional experience at the time of the treatment in question. Noting that the plaintiffs' expert had three-and-a-half-years experience in the five-year period prior to the alleged malpractice, the court of appeal held that the trial court should not have excluded the expert's testimony (119 Cal. App. 4th 1090, 1094-1095)

[1] FORM

_____ [name of witness] SHOULD BE PERMITTED TO TESTIFY AS AN EXPERT WITNESS IN THIS ACTION BECAUSE THE CRITERIA FOR ADMISSION OF EXPERT MEDICAL TESTIMONY IN LAWSUITS AGAINST EMERGENCY PHYSICIANS, SET FORTH IN HEALTH AND SAFETY CODE SECTION 1799.110(c), DO NOT APPLY IN AN ACTION IN WHICH THERE IS NO ALLEGATION OF NEGLIGENT CARE IMPLICATING THE PERFORMANCE OF AN EMERGENCY PHYSICIAN. FURTHERMORE, _____ [name of witness] IS OTHERWISE QUALIFIED TO TESTIFY AS AN EXPERT WITNESS ON THE SUBJECT OF _____ [specify].

Applicability of Statute Limited to Cases Implicating Performance of Treating Physician. Health and Safety Code Section 1799.110(c), setting forth the criteria for admission of expert medical testimony in lawsuits against emergency physicians, does not apply when there is no allegation in the action of negligent care by an emergency physician (Baxter v. Alexian Bros. Hosp. (1989) 214 Cal. App. 3d 722, 726, 262 Cal. Rptr. 867).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that an expert witness need not meet the qualifications set forth in Health & Safety Code § 1799.110 (see § 175.69) when the action does not allege negligent care by an emergency physician [see Baxter v. Alexian Bros. Hosp. (1989) 214 Cal. App. 3d 722, 726, 262 Cal. Rptr. 867] .

These points and authorities may be combined, when appropriate, with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue of the expert medical witness's qualifications to testify. The points and authorities in this form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities in § 175.69.

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Applicability of Statute Limited to Cases Implicating Performance of Treating Physician

Baxter v. Alexian Bros. Hosp. (1989) 214 Cal. App. 3d 722, 262 Cal. Rptr. 867 , involved an action for negligence and emotional distress against a hospital that was based on the hospital's alleged failure to provide a backup surgical team and an anesthesiologist. The trial court, citing Health & Safety Code § 1799.110, refused to allow testimony by plaintiffs' expert witness on the ground that the witness did not have five years of experience as an emergency room physician. It granted a motion by defendant for nonsuit, based on lack of evidence of standard of care, and entered judgment for defendant. On appeal, plaintiffs challenged the court's construction of Health & Safety Code § 1799.110, arguing that Health & Safety Code § 1799.110 was inapplicable.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that Health & Safety Code § 1799.110 was inapplicable. Defendant cited Jutzi v. County of Los Angeles (1987) 196 Cal. App. 3d 637, 649-651, 242 Cal. Rptr. 74 (see § 175.69[3][c]] for the proposition that the relevant consideration in applying Health & Safety Code § 1799.110 is the nature of the claim, not the identity of the defendants. The Jutzi court found that Health & Safety Code § 1799.110 would apply in any suit involving a claim of negligent treatment by a hospital emergency room physician whether or not that physician is named as defendant. The Baxter court, however, distinguished Jutzi, noting that this case did not involve an allegation of negligence by the emergency room physician who treated plaintiff; instead, the case involved a claim that the defendant hospital failed to provide essential hospital services. Quoting from Jutzi, the court noted that the legislative purpose underlying Health & Safety Code § 1799.110 is the encouragement of provision of emergency medical care by preventing malpractice claims based on the assertion that an emergency room physician fell below the standard of care that would have been provided by a specialist in the particular field acting under nonemergency conditions. This purpose, the court stated, would not be furthered by restricting claims against a hospital that do not implicate the performance of the treating physician. The court concluded that the trial court erred in applying Health & Safety Code § 1799.110 because there was no allegation of negligent care by an emergency physician (214 Cal. App. 3d 722, 725-727) .

This chapter contains points and authorities supporting petitions for writ of mandate to review actions by the Medical Board of California against medical licensees or applicants for medical licensing. It does not contain memoranda for use in opposing petitions for writ of mandate filed by a medical licensee or applicant for licensing, forms concerning criminal or other charges for practicing medicine without a license, or forms concerning healing arts other than the medical profession. Included are a general form for use in supporting a petition for writ of mandate to review the administrative decision to discipline a medical licensee for alleged unprofessional conduct [see § 176.20] and a general memorandum for use in supporting a petition for writ of mandate to review an administrative decision to deny a medical license or to deny an applicant admission to the licensing examination [see § 176.21]. This chapter also includes specific forms for use, when appropriate, in conjunction with the general forms relating to rights and defenses of licensees or applicants for licensing accused of unprofessional conduct [see §§ 176.22 -176.29]. Finally, this chapter contains a form for use in supporting a petition for writ of mandate to compel the Medical Board to approve the medical school or osteopathic college from which the petitioner graduated [see § 176.32].

PART I. INTRODUCTION

§ 176.02 Governing Laws

The medical profession is regulated generally by Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 2000-2515, which are known and may be cited as the Medical Practice Act [see Bus. & Prof. Code § 2000]. Disciplinary procedure for physicians is governed by Bus. & Prof. Code § 2220 et seq. Bus. & Prof. Code § 2230(a) provides that disciplinary procedure is to be governed according to Gov. Code § 11500 et seq. (governing administrative trials, except as provided in that chapter). Disciplinary penalties that may be imposed on a physician are set forth in Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 2227-2229. Instances of unprofessional conduct for which discipline may be imposed are set forth in Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 2234-2306. Actions that a licensing agency may take in case a licensed practitioner of the healing arts becomes mentally ill are set forth in Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 820-828. Provisions for reinstatement or modification of disciplinary penalty are set forth in Bus. & Prof. Code § 2307. Provisions for reinstatement or modification of attenuation of a physician's right to practice because of mental illness are set out in Bus. & Prof. Code § 823.

Requirements for licensure as a physician are set forth in Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 2080-2099. Effective January 1, 2008, both the Division of Medical Quality and the Division of Licensing were abolished. As now used in California statutes, "Division of Medical Quality" and "Division of Licensing" refer to the California Medical Board [Bus. & Prof. Code § 2002] (hereafter referred to as simply the "Medical Board"). Bus. & Prof. Code § 2221 provides that the Division of Licensing may deny a physician's and surgeon's license to any applicant guilty of unprofessional conduct or of any cause that would subject a licensee to revocation or suspension of his or her license or may issue a probationary license to an applicant subject to terms and conditions, including specified conditions of probation. Bus. & Prof. Code § 2082 provides that any applicant for licensure as a physician must have graduated from a medical school approved by the Division of Licensing. Requirements for approval of medical schools are set forth in Bus. & Prof. Code § 2089. Bus. & Prof. Code § 2084 provides that the Division of Licensing may approve every school that substantially complies with the requirements of the Medical Practice Act [Bus. & Prof. Code § 2084; see Lopez v. Medical Board (1992) 6 Cal. App. 4th 693, 696-697, 8 Cal. Rptr. 2d 22 (under Bus. & Prof. Code § 2084, Department of Licensing may but is not required to approve substantially complying school)]. Graduates of medical schools approved under Section 2084 must be deemed to meet the medical training requirements of the Act [Bus. & Prof. Code § 2084; see Bus. & Prof. Code § 2089]. Nothing in Bus. & Prof. Code § 2080 et seq. prohibits the Division of Licensing from considering the quality of resident courses of instruction required for certification [Bus. & Prof. Code § 2084].

Penal Code §§ 1000-1000.75 establish a diversion program for persons charged with drug possession, and provide that on successful completion of a diversion program the arrest on which the diversion was based is deemed to have never occurred [Penal Code § 1000.5 et seq.]. However, regardless of the divertee's successful completion of diversion, the arrest on which the diversion was based may be disclosed by the Department of Justice in response to any peace officer application request made within five years of the arrest. The divertee is not relieved of the obligation to disclose the arrest in response to any direct question contained in any questionnaire or application for a position as a peace officer, as defined by Penal Code § 830, made within five years of the arrest [Penal Code § 1000.5 et seq.]. Successful completion of a drug diversion program does not prohibit any agency established under Bus. & Prof. Code § 500 et seq., including the Medical Board of California, from taking disciplinary action against a licensee or from denying a license for professional misconduct, even though evidence of that misconduct appears in a record pertaining to that arrest [see Bus. & Prof. Code § 492].

§ 176.03 Review on Mandamus

It is now well established that a petition for writ of mandate is the proper procedure for seeking judicial review of the decision by either the Medical Board to impose discipline or to refuse to grant a license or approve a school [see Dare v. Bd. of Medical Examiners (1943) 21 Cal. 2d 790, 795, 136 P.2d 304 ; Grant v. Board of Medical Examiners (1965) 232 Cal. App. 2d 820, 826, 43 Cal. Rptr. 270] . Gov. Code § 11523, which is expressly made applicable to disciplinary proceedings against licensees and to denial of a license for unprofessional conduct by Bus. & Prof. Code § 2230(a) (see § 176.02), provides that review of an adjudicatory decision by an administrative agency may be had by filing for petition for writ of mandate according to the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure [see Bus. & Prof. Code § 2230(a); Gov. Code § 11523].

The Code of Civil Procedure explicitly provides for review on mandamus of decisions of administrative agencies [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5]. The provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5 are further made explicitly applicable to court review of the decisions by the Medical Board to deny admission to the licensing examination, refuse to approve a school, or deny a license for unprofessional conduct by the Business and Professions Code [Bus. & Prof. Code § 2087].

Bus. & Prof. Code § 2337 makes a petition for an extraordinary writ the only method for obtaining appellate review of superior court decisions in administrative mandate proceedings reviewing physician discipline decisions by the Medical Board of California [Bus. & Prof. Code § 2337; Leone v. Medical Board of California (2000) 22 Cal. 4th 660, 663-664, 94 Cal. Rptr. 2d 61, 995 P.2d 191 (Bus. & Prof. Code § 2337 does not violate Cal. Const., art. VI, § 11)].

[2] Standards of Review

In a mandate proceeding to review the initial decision of the Medical Board to impose discipline on a person who already holds a license, the trial court is required to exercise its independent judgment on the evidence [see Yakov v. Board of Medical Examiners (1968) 68 Cal. 2d 67, 69, 71, 64 Cal. Rptr. 785, 435 P.2d 553] . However, once the decision to impose discipline has been made and upheld, the actual penalty imposed lies within the discretion of the Medical Board and will not be overturned by the court unless a manifest abuse of discretion is shown [see Windham v. Board of Medical Quality Assurance (1980) 104 Cal. App. 3d 461, 473, 163 Cal. Rptr. 566] . By contrast, the decision of the Medical Board not to grant a license to a person who has not yet received one in California is reviewable on mandamus only under the substantial evidence test [see Bus. & Prof. Code § 2087; Savelli v. Board of Medical Examiners (1964) 229 Cal. App. 2d 124, 131-132, 40 Cal. Rptr. 171 ; see also Bixby v. Pierno (1971) 4 Cal. 3d 130, 146, 93 Cal. Rptr. 234, 481 P.2d 242] .

PART I. INTRODUCTION

§ 176.04 Reorganization of Applicable Law

The statutory provisions governing the licensing and regulation of physicians have been amended numerous times and have been completely reorganized on two separate occasions. The original provisions governing the licensing and conduct of physicians were contained in the Medical Practice Act. These provisions were reorganized and transferred to Chapter 5 of the Business and Professions Code in 1937. Chapter 5 of the Business and Professions Code was reorganized and the sections contained in it were extensively renumbered in 1980. Although a number of new provisions were added with the 1980 reorganization, most of the provisions already contained in earlier organizations of the governing law have remained substantially unchanged throughout the various reorganizations. The Medical Practice Act was significantly amended again in 1993 by Stats. 1993, ch. 1267.

Many of the cases cited and discussed in this part were decided before the latest reorganization of the governing law, under statutory provisions that are nevertheless identical or substantially the same as the current provisions. Such provisions are cited as "former Bus. & Prof. Code § _____" or "former Medical Practice Act § _____ (now see Bus. & Prof. Code § _____)" when referred to in the forms.

[1] Page Limits on Points and Authorities

One of the more significant drafting requirements to keep in mind are page limits: supporting and opposing memoranda filed in discovery motion proceedings may not exceed 15 pages. A reply or closing memorandum may not exceed 10 pages. Exhibits, declarations, attachments, the table of contents, the table of authorities, and the proof of service are excluded from these page limits. Any party must obtain leave of court to file a longer memorandum [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1113(d)]. These and other drafting requirements are discussed in further detail in Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[2] Using the Forms to Build a Draft Memorandum

The forms in this part are for use by a licensee or applicant for licensing in mandate proceedings to review or compel certain actions of the Medical Board of California. Thus, the points and authorities contained in these forms are cited to support a contention that the action of the division that is the subject of the proceeding was erroneous and should be overturned by the court. Authorities that limit the scope of those authorities cited to support contentions of error are cited and discussed in the comments to the individual supporting forms.

Counsel should be aware that in general the cases upholding the actions and decisions of the Medical Board are far more numerous than those overturning such decisions. Some of the authorities cited in this part to support contentions of error ultimately uphold the decision of the respondent division, either on other grounds or because the court, after stating a rule that could support a contention of error, found that the rule was not applicable to the facts of the case before it. Thus, counsel should carefully compare the facts in such cases with those of his or her case to determine the applicability of the cited case.

The forms contained in this part are meant to be used as research tools and format outlines, and not as completed attorney work products that may be filed without modification or addition. Thus, before using any of these forms, counsel should insert facts and arguments showing how the points of law stated in the forms apply to the facts of the particular case.

A PETITION FOR WRIT OF MANDATE IS THE PROPER PROCEDURE FOR SEEKING JUDICIAL REVIEW OF THE ADMINISTRATIVE DECISION OF THE OF MEDICAL BOARD TO IMPOSE DISCIPLINE ON A PHYSICIAN FOR ALLEGED UNPROFESSIONAL CONDUCT.

A. Mandate Is Proper Procedure. Administrative mandamus is the proper remedy for judicial review of administrative action by the Medical Board to impose professional discipline (see Bus. & Prof. Code § 2230; Gov. Code § 11523; Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5; Dare v. Board of Medical Examiners (1943) 21 Cal. 2d 790, 795, 136 P.2d 304 ; Grant v. Board of Medical Examiners (1965) 232 Cal. App. 2d 820, 826, 43 Cal. Rptr. 270).

B. Independent Judgment Test Applicable. In a mandate proceeding to review the decision of the Medical Board, the trial court is authorized by law to exercise its independent judgment on the evidence and holds the ultimate power of decision as to whether a licensee should be disciplined (Yakov v. Board of Medical Examiners (1968) 68 Cal. 2d 67, 69, 71, 64 Cal. Rptr. 785, 435 P.2d 553 ; Dresser v. Board of Medical Quality Assurance (1982) 130 Cal. App. 3d 506, 510, 181 Cal. Rptr. 797 ; see Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5(c)).

C. Scope of Inquiry in Mandate Proceeding. The inquiry in a mandate proceeding to review a final administrative adjudicatory order or decision extends to the questions of whether the agency has proceeded without or in excess of jurisdiction, whether there was a fair trial, and whether there was any prejudicial abuse of discretion. Abuse of discretion is established if the agency did not proceed in the manner required by law, the order or decision is not supported by the findings, or the findings are not supported by the evidence (Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5(b)).

D. Right to Practice Medicine Is Protected Property Right. The right to practice medicine, once granted, is a property right of the highest order and is sufficiently precious to be surrounded with a panoply of legal protections (see Yakov v. Board of Medical Examiners (1968) 68 Cal. 2d 67, 75, 64 Cal. Rptr. 785, 435 P.2d 553 ; Barrett v. Board of Osteopathic Examiners (1935) 4 Cal. App. 2d 135, 139, 40 P.2d 923).

[Add points and authorities relating to specific reasons why decision to impose discipline was improper under the facts of the case (see, e.g., §§ 176.22 -176.30).]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a petition to the superior court for a writ of mandate to review a final order or decision of the Division of Medical Quality to impose discipline on a physician for unprofessional conduct.

To complete this memorandum, counsel should include additional paragraphs discussing specific points in which findings did not support the decision, or the evidence did not support the findings of the division, or in which the Medical Board failed to comply with petitioner's due process rights in conducting its disciplinary proceedings [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5 (defining scope of review on mandamus; see Paragraph B)]. See §§ 176.22 -176.30 for points and authorities supporting specific allegations of improper action by the division.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Unprofessional Conduct

Specific instances of unprofessional conduct for which the Medical Board may impose discipline on the holder of a medical certificate are set out in Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 2234-2291. It should be noted, however, that Bus. & Prof. Code

§ 2234 provides that the grounds for imposing discipline on a medical licensee are not limited to those defined explicitly by the Business and Professions Code. Action that may be taken by the agency that licensed a practitioner of the healing arts in case of incapacitating mental illness is set out in Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 820-828. Note also that the Board may discipline a physician who gives court testimony as an expert witness, on behalf of a plaintiff or defendant, as to the appropriate standard of medical care and whether the defendant has breached that standard [87 Cal. Ops. Atty. Gen. 48 (2004)] .

[c] Independent Review Is Not Trial De Novo

Although it is the duty of the trial court to exercise its independent judgment on the evidence in reviewing the decision of the Medical Board on mandamus, the scope of this mandamus review is not equivalent to that of an unqualified trial de novo. The accused is not entitled to withhold evidence or to make only a skeleton showing at the hearing and thereafter obtain an unlimited new trial on expanded issues in the reviewing court [Dare v. Board of Medical Examiners (1943) 21 Cal. 2d 790, 795, 136 P.2d 304 ; Shakin v. Board of Medical Examiners (1967) 254 Cal. App. 2d 102, 111, 62 Cal. Rptr. 274] . Thus, for an accused to be entitled to introduce additional evidence for the court's consideration in a mandamus proceeding, it must appear that the accused could not in the exercise of reasonable diligence have obtained and introduced such evidence at the hearing or that the evidence was improperly excluded at the hearing [Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5(e); see Dare v. Board of Medical Examiners (1943) 21 Cal. 2d 790, 799, 136 P.2d 304 ; Shakin v. Board of Medical Examiners (1967) 254 Cal. App. 2d 102, 110-111, 62 Cal. Rptr. 274] .

[d] Restricted Standard of Review for Penalty Imposed

The trial court's authorization to conduct an independent review of the evidence is limited to findings that would justify the division's imposing discipline in the first place. The appropriateness of the penalty imposed, once discipline of some sort has been found to be warranted, is vested in the sound discretion of the division and will be overturned only in cases of manifest abuse [Windham v. Board of Medical Quality Assurance (1980) 104 Cal. App. 3d 461, 473, 163 Cal. Rptr. 566 ; see Magit v. Board of Medical Examiners (1961) 57 Cal. 2d 74, 78, 17 Cal. Rptr. 488, 366 P.2d 816] .

See §§ 176.29 and 176.30 for points and authorities in support of a prayer for remand to the accusing division for redetermination of penalty when all or some of the findings of unprofessional conduct have been upheld by the court.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Mandate Is Proper Procedure

Bus. & Prof. Code § 2230 provides that except as provided in Bus. & Prof. Code § 2220 et seq., the conduct of disciplinary proceedings against the holder of a physician's and surgeon's certificate is governed by the provisions of Gov. Code §§ 11500-11528, which govern administrative trials. Gov. Code § 11523 provides that review of an administrative adjudicatory decision made pursuant to Gov. Code §§ 11500-11528 may be had by filing a petition for a writ of mandate in accordance with the Code of Civil Procedure, subject to statutes regulating the particular agency. Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5(a) provides explicitly for review of a final administrative order or decision made as the result of a proceeding in which a hearing is required to be given.

In Dare v. Board of Medical Examiners (1943) 21 Cal. 2d 790, 136 P.2d 304 , petitioner, a licensed drugless practitioner, was found guilty by respondent of using the prefix Dr. without specifying the type of certificate he held, in violation of former Bus. & Prof. Code § 2409 (now see Bus. & Prof. Code § 2278). Petitioner filed a petition for writ of mandate with the superior court. At the hearing before the superior court, petitioner refused to produce the record of the hearing before respondent or to stipulate to the introduction of evidence taken before respondent or rulings made by respondent. Petitioner maintained that he was entitled to a trial de novo before the superior court, that he was not bound by the record of the hearing before respondent, and that he had participated in the hearing before respondent on that theory. The trial court refused to grant the writ of mandate, and petitioner appealed.

The Supreme Court upheld the trial court. In framing the main issue that it had to decide in reviewing the case, the Court reviewed earlier cases that had held that certiorari was not the appropriate method of reviewing the action of an administrative entity such as the Board of Medical Examiners, since such an entity does not have the power to exercise judicial functions unless authorized to do so by the Constitution. The Court stated that since no other legal remedy was available, a physician aggrieved by a decision made by respondent that would deprive him of a constitutional right of either liberty or property had a right to have respondent's decision inquired into by a court of justice by means of a mandamus proceeding (21 Cal. 2d 790, 795) .

The Court then stated that although in such a proceeding the trial court may make an independent judgment on all of the competent evidence before it and is not confined to the record before respondent [see § 176.20[3][b]], the scope of review on mandamus is not equivalent to the unqualified or unlimited trial de novo to which a litigant is entitled in the superior court on appeal from a decision of a municipal or justice court, wherein the litigant may present a skeleton showing in the lower court and reserve the real showing on the merits for the trial in the superior court (21 Cal. 2d 790, 795) . The Court concluded that the trial court was not required to reiterate all of the competent evidence that had been presented before respondent, and that respondent should have introduced the record of the hearing before respondent if he wished to attack the sufficiency of that record (21 Cal. 2d, 790, 794, 799, 801) . The Court also ruled against petitioner on questions of law unrelated to the propriety of the mandamus proceeding (21 Cal. 2d 790, 801-802) .

In Grant v. Board of Medical Examiners (1965) 232 Cal. App. 2d 820, 43 Cal. Rptr. 270 , petitioner was licensed to practice medicine, inter alia, in California and Arkansas. After Arkansas revoked petitioner's license, proceedings were brought in California to discipline petitioner. At the hearing, evidence was presented that petitioner had permitted an unlicensed person to do clinical psychology tests for him and the unlicensed person continued to use petitioner's office, apartment, and telephone number after petitioner left Arkansas, and that while petitioner's Arkansas license had initially been revoked on charges stemming from petitioner's conduct, it had subsequently been restored to him. The hearing officer found that petitioner was guilty of unprofessional conduct as defined by former Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 2363 (now see Bus. & Prof. Code § 2305; revocation of suspension of license in another state or by agency of federal government is grounds for discipline in California), 2378 (repealed) and 2392 (now see Bus. & Prof. Code § 2264; aiding and abetting unlicensed person in practice of medicine is unprofessional conduct), but that disciplinary action against petitioner was not in the public interest. Based on these findings, the hearing officer proposed that the charges against petitioner be dismissed, and the board adopted the hearing officer's proposed decision. Petitioner filed a petition for a writ of mandate in the superior court, and that court upheld the decision of the board. Petitioner appealed the trial court's decision.

The court of appeal upheld the trial court's decision. The court stated that the passing of Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5 was a ratification by the Legislature of the judicially developed doctrine of administrative mandate, and that after the passing of this section it was no longer open to question that administrative mandamus is a proper remedy for judicial review of administrative action (232 Cal. App. 2d 820, 826) . The court also held that an action for declaratory judgment is not appropriate for the purpose of reviewing final orders and decisions of an administrative agency, but that such an action may be treated as a petition for a writ of mandate (232 Cal. App. 2d 820, 826) .

However, the court held that administrative mandamus did not acquire a separate and distinct legal personality from mandamus generally through the enactment of Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5 (232 Cal. App. 2d 820, 826) . Thus, the court stated that the requirement for mandamus generally that the party seeking relief be beneficially interested in the relief he or she seeks was still a requirement of administrative mandamus and that generally speaking, a party not aggrieved is not beneficially interested (232 Cal. App. 2d 820, 827) . The court further held that the board's adoption of the hearing officer's proposed decision to dismiss the charges against petitioner was analogous to an entry of a voluntary dismissal by the board and left petitioner as if no charges had been filed against him (232 Cal. App. 2d 820, 828) . Thus, the court concluded that petitioner was not aggrieved by the board's action and administrative mandamus was therefore not appropriate on the facts of the case (232 Cal. App. 2d 820, 827) .

[b] Independent Judgment Test Applicable

In Yakov v. Board of Medical Examiners (1968) 68 Cal. 2d 67, 64 Cal. Rptr. 785, 435 P.2d 553 , petitioner was convicted on nine counts of violating Bus. & Prof. Code § 4227 (furnishing dangerous drugs without a prescription). Following these convictions, disciplinary proceedings were initiated against petitioner by the Board of Medical Examiners. After a hearing on the disciplinary charges, the hearing officer filed a proposed decision finding inter alia that petitioner was guilty of conduct involving moral turpitude, and that petitioner's license should be revoked. The proposed decision was adopted by the board.

Petitioner filed a petition for a writ of mandate with the superior court, which concluded that the board's finding of moral turpitude was not sustained by the weight of the evidence. Stating that it was impossible to determine the extent to which the board's finding that petitioner had shown moral turpitude had contributed to its decision to revoke petitioner's license, the trial court annulled the board's order and remanded the case for redetermination of penalty. The board appealed.

The Supreme Court upheld the trial court's decision. In making its decision, the Court applied what it termed the settled rule of Moran v. Board of Medical Examiners (1948) 32 Cal. 2d 301, 308, 196 P.2d 20 , that in an action for administrative mandate the trial court is authorized by law to exercise its independent judgment on the evidence, and that the ultimate power of decision rests with the trial court (68 Cal. 2d 67, 71-72) . The Court also stated that the determination of whether an act involves moral turpitude is an ultimate conclusion to be drawn from undisputed facts and is therefore a question of law in the sense that it is to be decided by the appellate court (68 Cal. 2d 67, 74) .

In Dresser v. Board of Medical Quality Assurance (1982) 130 Cal. App. 3d 506, 181 Cal. Rptr. 797 , the board revoked the accused's license to practice psychology on the basis of its finding that the accused's conduct of engaging in sexual intercourse with two clients whom the accused was treating for sexual problems constituted gross negligence in violation of former Bus. & Prof. Code § 2960(i) (now see Bus. & Prof. Code § 2960(j); gross negligence is ground for professional discipline of psychologist). The accused filed a petition for writ of mandate, alleging a variety of errors in the board's decision. The superior court denied the petition.

The court of appeal affirmed the superior court's denial of the petition. In regard to the applicable standard of review, the court cited Yakov v. Board of Medical Examiners (1968) 68 Cal. 2d 67, 69, 64 Cal. Rptr. 785, 435 P.2d 553 , for the rule that in cases involving the board's decision to revoke a professional license, the independent judgment standard is the standard to be used by the superior court except as to the determination of the penalty imposed (130 Cal. App. 3d 506, 510) .

[c] Right to Practice Medicine Is Protected Property Right

The facts and procedural background of Yakov v. Board of Medical Examiners (1968) 68 Cal. 2d 67, 64 Cal. Rptr. 785, 435 P.2d 553 , are set forth in § 176.20[3][b]. In that case, the Supreme Court concluded its opinion by noting that the right to practice one's profession is sufficiently precious to surround it with a panoply of legal protection (68 Cal. 2d 67, 75) .

The facts and procedural background of Barrett v. Board of Osteopathic Examiners (1935) 4 Cal. App. 2d 135, 40 P.2d 923 , are set out in § 176.24[3][a]. In that case, the court was called upon to interpret former Section 14(7a) of the Medical Practice Act (now see Bus. & Prof. Code § 2264), which declared the aiding or abetting of an unlicensed person in the practice of any system or mode of treating the sick or afflicted to be unprofessional conduct. The court stated as a principle governing its interpretation of the statute that the right to practice medicine, once granted, becomes a property right and that the Legislature's right to prescribe grounds for which a license may be revoked does not extend so far as to authorize the prescribing of grounds that are capricious and bear no relation to the qualifications of the licensee or to the proper conduct of his or her professional duties (4 Cal. App. 2d 135, 139) . Under this principle, the court held itself compelled to interpret the statute so as to require guilty knowledge or willful intent on the part of the accused as a necessary element of a violation, even though this did not follow from the literal wording of the statute (4 Cal. App. 2d 135, 138-139) . The court stated that an interpretation of the statute that did not thus include guilty knowledge or willful intent as a necessary element would render the statute nugatory as an unwarranted assumption of legislative authority (4 Cal. App. 2d 135, 139) .

[Caption. See § 176.20.]

A PETITION FOR A WRIT OF MANDATE IS THE PROPER PROCEDURE FOR SEEKING JUDICIAL REVIEW OF THE ADMINISTRATIVE DECISION OF THE MEDICAL BOARD TO DENY A PHYSICIAN'S LICENSE OR TO REJECT AN APPLICATION FOR ADMISSION TO THE LICENSING EXAMINATION.

A. Mandate Is Proper Procedure. Mandate is appropriate for reviewing an administrative order by the Medical Board (Grant v. Board of Medical Examiners (1965) 232 Cal. App. 2d 820, 826, 43 Cal. Rptr. 270 ; Savelli v. Board of Medical Examiners (1964) 229 Cal. App. 2d 124, 142, 40 Cal. Rptr. 171 , cert. denied, 380 U.S. 934, 85 S. Ct. 940, 13 L. Ed. 2d 821 ; *see Code Civ. [a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a petition to the superior court for a writ of mandate for review of a final order or decision of Medical Board of Licensing rejecting an application for admission to the licensing examination or denying a physician's and surgeon's certificate for unprofessional conduct.

To complete the memorandum, counsel should include additional points and authorities supporting petitioner's contention that the findings did not support the decision, that the evidence did not support the findings of the Board, or that the Board failed to comply with petitioner's due process rights in conducting its disciplinary proceedings [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5(b) (defining scope of review on mandamus); see also §§ 176.22 -176.28 for points and authorities supporting specific allegations of improper action by the division].

[b] Restricted Standard of Review

The standard applied by the courts in reviewing a decision by Medical Board not to grant a license is apparently stricter than the standard applied by the courts in reviewing a decision of the Medical Board to discipline a licensee once a license has been granted. Bus. & Prof. Code § 2087, which provides for court review by administrative mandamus for an applicant who has been denied admission to the physician's licensing examination [see discussion of Bus. & Prof. Code § 2087 in § 176.20[3][a]], also provides that the court may not exercise independent judgment on the evidence in such an action. Thus, in actions brought Bus. & Prof. Code § 2087, the trial court must apply the substantial evidence test in the same manner as that test is applied by an appellate court [Savelli v. Board of Medical Examiners (1964) 229 Cal. App. 2d 124, 131-132, 40 Cal. Rptr. 171 , cert. denied, 380 U.S. 934] . Although the wording of Bus. & Prof. Code § 2087 is somewhat ambiguous, it appears that it also covers actions brought by an applicant who has not been denied admission to the examination, but has been denied a license for unprofessional conduct [see discussion of Bus. & Prof. Code § 2087 in § 176.21[3][a]]. In any event, the courts generally have applied the substantial evidence test in reviewing the initial determination of an agency as to whether a person is qualified to enter a profession or trade [see Bixby v. Pierno (1971) 4 Cal. 3d 130, 146, 93 Cal. Rptr. 234, 481 P.2d 242] .

In contrast, once a license has been granted, the trial court is required to independently reweigh the evidence in reviewing a decision of the Medical Board to discipline the licensee [Yakov v. Board of Medical Examiners (1968) 68 Cal. 2d 67, 69, 72, 64 Cal. Rptr. 785, 435 P.2d 553] . Counsel should be aware of this difference in standards of review in applying case law on discipline of physicians for unprofessional conduct to a case in which petitioner has been denied a license or denied admission to the examination for unprofessional conduct [see discussion § 176.21[2][c]].

[i] Existence of Moral Turpitude as Question of Law

The Supreme Court has held that whether an accused has shown moral turpitude in engaging in his or her alleged unprofessional conduct is a question of law to be answered from the facts on the record and not a question of fact. Thus, the court of appeal must independently determine the existence of moral turpitude from the record, despite the fact that it is bound by the restricted substantial evidence test in reviewing the fact findings of the trial court [see Yakov v. Board of Medical Examiners (1968) 68 Cal. 2d 67, 74-75, 64 Cal. Rptr. 785, 435 P.2d 553] . Although Yakov does not deal with the point explicitly, this rule is probably also applicable to the trial court's review on mandamus of a finding of moral turpitude by the Medical Board.

Although the Medical Practice Act no longer contains any provisions requiring a finding of moral turpitude to support a finding of unprofessional conduct, a finding of moral turpitude may still support a finding of unprofessional conduct by showing the accused's unfitness to practice medicine, thereby establishing a nexus between the accused's conduct and his or her qualifications to practice. Such a finding of nexus is a constitutional requirement and also a statutory requirement for imposing discipline under Bus. & Prof. Code § 2236 (crime substantially related to practice of medicine is unprofessional conduct) [see Windham v. Board of Medical Quality Assurance (1980) 104 Cal. App. 3d 461, 469-470, 163 Cal. Rptr. 566 ; Matanky v. Board of Medical Examiners (1978) 79 Cal. App. 3d 293, 305, 144 Cal. Rptr. 826 ; see also §§ 176.21[2][c], 176.22[2], for a discussion of the general constitutional requirement of a showing of unfitness to practice medicine to support a finding of unprofessional conduct].

A finding of moral turpitude may also be relevant in determining the appropriate penalty once unprofessional conduct has been found [see Matanky v. Board of Medical Examiners (1978) 79 Cal. App. 3d 293, 302, 144 Cal. Rptr. 826 ; see also Yakov v. Board of Medical Examiners (1968) 68 Cal. 2d 67, 69, 75, 64 Cal. Rptr. 785, 435 P.2d 553] .

[c] Unprofessional Conduct

The Medical Board may deny or restrict a license, or it may condition the granting of a license on the meeting of certain requirements, for unprofessional conduct or for any cause that would subject a person already holding a physician's and surgeon's certificate to discipline [see Bus. & Prof. Code § 2221]. Bus. & Prof. Code § 2087, which provides for court action in case the division has either denied a license or denied admission to the licensing examination, provides that if such denial is for unprofessional conduct, Bus. & Prof. Code § 2220 et seq. (defining unprofessional conduct and setting forth disciplinary procedure) applies to the case [Bus. & Prof. Code § 2087; see § 176.21[3][a]]. Bus. & Prof. Code § 2230 provides that except as provided in Bus. & Prof. Code § 2220 et seq., the conduct of proceedings to determine whether a person has been guilty of unprofessional conduct is governed by Gov. Code § 11500 et seq. (administrative trials). Instances of unprofessional conduct for which the division may deny an applicant's license include, but are not limited to, all of the instances defined by Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 2234-2306 [see Bus. & Prof. Code § 2234]. Actions which the Medical Board may take against a licensee in case of incapacitating mental illness are set out in Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 820-828 [see Bus. & Prof. Code § 825 (panel of Board is licensing agency authorized to take action under Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 820-828)]. See §§ 176.22 -176.28 for points and authorities discussing specific instances of unprofessional conduct as defined in the Business and Professions Code.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Mandate Is Proper Procedure

Bus. & Prof. Code § 2087 provides in pertinent part that a court action by an applicant for admission to the medical licensing examination who has been rejected by the Medical Board to compel the Board to admit the applicant to the examination, approve the school from which the applicant graduated, or seek any other appropriate relief, is governed by Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5 (providing for judicial review of final administrative order or decision by means of administrative mandate), except that the court may not exercise its independent judgment on the evidence. Although the first sentence of Bus. & Prof. Code § 2087 refers only to court action by an applicant who has been denied admission to the examination, the second sentence provides that the provisions of the Business and Professions Code applicable to discipline for unprofessional conduct apply to the court action authorized by the statute when an applicant has been denied admission to the examination or denied a certificate on the grounds of unprofessional conduct. Bus. & Prof. Code § 2087 also provides that an applicant may seek to compel admission to the examination, or any other appropriate relief through such court action. Thus, although the language of the statute is somewhat ambiguous on the point, Bus. & Prof. Code § 2087 probably applies to all applicants who have been denied a license for unprofessional conduct, whether or not the applicant was admitted to the examination.

Bus. & Prof. Code § 2230 also supports the proposition that administrative mandate is the proper procedure to be applied on review of a decision to deny a physician's license. That section provides that except as provided in Bus. & Prof. Code § 2220 et seq., conduct of disciplinary proceedings against physicians is governed by Gov. Code § 11500 et seq. (administrative trials) [Bus. & Prof. Code § 2230; see Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 2087, 2221 (provisions governing disciplinary procedure, including Bus. & Prof. Code § 2230, are applicable to license denial for unprofessional conduct)]. Gov. Code § 11523 provides that mandate is the proper procedure for judicial review of administrative decisions made after a hearing.

The facts and procedural background of Grant v. Board of Medical Examiners (1965) 232 Cal. App. 2d 820, 43 Cal. Rptr. 270 , are set out in § 176.20[3][a].

In Savelli v. Board of Medical Examiners (1964) 229 Cal. App. 2d 124, 40 Cal. Rptr. 171 , cert. denied 380 U.S. 934, 85 S. Ct. 940, 13 L. Ed. 2d 821 , petitioner had applied for admission to the examination required for certification as a physician and was rejected because the school from which he graduated had been disapproved by respondent. After a hearing held at petitioner's request, respondent affirmed its decision not to admit petitioner to the examination. Petitioner filed a petition for a writ of mandamus in the superior court pursuant to former Bus. & Prof. Code § 2174 [now see Bus. & Prof. Code § 2087 (discussed above)], and the superior court upheld respondent's decision. Petitioner appealed.

The court of appeal also upheld respondent's decision. In reaching its decision, however, the court stated that since petitioner's action proceeded under Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5 by virtue of the provisions of former Bus. & Prof. Code § 2174 [now see Bus. & Prof. Code § 2087], mandamus was appropriate for reviewing respondent's order (229 Cal. App. 2d 124, 142) .

The court also stated that while an action for declaratory relief is not appropriate for reviewing an administrative order, the complaint in such an action may be treated as a petition for writ of mandate (229 Cal. App. 2d 124, 142) . The court added in dictum that it did not believe that language in former Bus. & Prof. Code § 2174 [now see Bus. & Prof. Code § 2087], providing that an action under its terms could seek "any other appropriate relief," created a right to seek declaratory judgment in an applicant who had been denied admission to the licensing examination (229 Cal. App. 2d 124, 142) .

[The following may be combined when appropriate with a general memorandum in support of a petition for writ of mandate to review an administrative decision of the Medical Board to impose discipline on a physician for unprofessional conduct, such as the memorandum set out in § 176.20, or of to deny a physician's certificate or reject an application for admission to the licensing examination, such as the memorandum set forth in § 176.21.]

RESPONDENT'S FINDING THAT PETITIONER IS GUILTY OF UNPROFESSIONAL CONDUCT IS IMPROPER BECAUSE THERE WAS NO _____ [SHOWING or FINDING] THAT THE CONDUCT WITH WHICH PETITIONER WAS CHARGED WOULD RENDER HIM/HER UNFIT TO PRACTICE MEDICINE.

A. Respondent May Not Use Professional Discipline to Punish Petitioner. The purpose of seeking revocation of a physician's license or exclusion of a person from the medical profession is to protect the public, not to punish the physician. The Medical Board of California can achieve a legitimate punitive purpose only through criminal prosecution (see Yakov v. Board of Medical Examiners (1968) 68 Cal. 2d 67, 73, 64 Cal. Rptr. 785, 435 P.2d 553 ; see also Hallinan v. Committee of Bar Examiners (1966) 65 Cal. 2d 447, 462, 55 Cal. Rptr. 228, 421 P.2d 76).

B. Finding of Unfitness Required to Sustain Finding of Unprofessional Conduct. Private acts of a physician or applicant for a physician's certificate are his or her own business and may not be the basis of discipline or exclusion from the medical profession unless such acts affect the physician's professional achievement or place the patient community in jeopardy (Grannis v. Board of Medical Examiners (1971) 19 Cal. App. 3d 551, 561, 96 Cal. Rptr. 863 ; see also Hallinan v. Committee of Bar Examiners (1966) 65 Cal. 2d 447, 462, 55 Cal. Rptr. 228, 421 P.2d 76).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be combined with a general form of memorandum in support of a petition for writ of mandate to review the administrative decision of the Medical Board to impose discipline on a physician for unprofessional conduct § 176.20 or to deny a physician's certificate or reject an application for admission to the licensing examination § 176.21. The form sets forth the requirement that there be a showing of a nexus between the physician's alleged misconduct and the physician's fitness to practice medicine before discipline may be imposed for the alleged misconduct.

[b] Applicability to License Denial

The cases that set forth the requirement that a finding of unprofessional conduct be supported by a finding of unfitness to practice medicine before action may be taken against the accused all speak in terms of discipline imposed on a person who already holds a license, and do not discuss situations in which a person has been denied a physician's license for unprofessional conduct [see, e.g., Yakov v. Board of Medical Examiners (1968) 68 Cal. 2d 67, 64 Cal. Rptr. 785, 435 P.2d 553 ; Grannis v. Board of Medical Examiners (1971) 19 Cal. App. 3d 551, 96 Cal. Rptr. 863 ; see § 176.22[3][a], [b]]. However, the Supreme Court has held that an application for certification to practice law may not be denied for reasons that are not related to the applicant's fitness to practice law [Hallinan v. Committee of Bar Examiners (1966) 65 Cal. 2d 447, 460, 462, 55 Cal. Rptr. 228, 421 P.2d 76] . In Hallinan, the Court additionally held at page 462 that criminal prosecution and not exclusion from the bar is the appropriate means of punishing offenders who have violated the law. This holding by the Hallinan Court was later cited by the Supreme Court as part of its basis for holding that revocation of a physician's license may not be used to punish an offending licensee [see Yakov v. Board of Medical Examiners (1968) 68 Cal. 2d 67, 72, 64 Cal. Rptr. 785, 435 P.2d 553] . Thus, it appears that the requirement that an accused's unprofessional conduct be related to fitness to practice medicine applies to the decision to deny a physician's license as well as to the decision to discipline a person who already holds a license.

[c] Determining Unfitness to Practice Medicine

In Morrison v. State Board of Education (1969) 1 Cal. 3d 214, 229, 82 Cal. Rptr. 175, 461 P.2d 375 , which dealt with the revocation of a teaching credential for alleged immoral and unprofessional conduct, the Supreme Court held that in determining whether a teacher's conduct indicates unfitness to teach so as to warrant revocation of the credential, the Board of Education may consider the following factors:

- The likelihood that the conduct may have adversely affected students or fellow teachers.
- The proximity or remoteness in time of the conduct.
- The extenuating or aggravating circumstances, if any, surrounding the conduct.
- The likelihood of the recurrence of the questioned conduct.
- The praiseworthiness or blameworthiness of the motives resulting in the conduct.
- The extent to which disciplinary action may inflict an adverse impact on the constitutional rights of the teacher involved or those of other teachers.

The Court also stated that the board may consider the degree of adversity anticipated and the type of teaching certificate held by the accused. Morrison is the leading case for the requirement of relation to fitness to practice for professional discipline [see § 176.22[3][b]. Furthermore, the factors set out by the Court were taken from statute and prior case law governing the requirements for professional discipline in various regulated professions, including medicine [see citations in Morrison v. State Board of Education (1969) 1 Cal. 3d 214, 229, 82 Cal. Rptr. 175, 461 P.2d 375] . Thus, these factors may also be helpful to the courts in determining whether an act of alleged unprofessional conduct affects the accused's fitness to practice medicine.

[d] Limits of Nexus Requirement

The requirements for making a showing that a physician's alleged misconduct affects the physician's fitness to practice medicine so as to warrant the imposition of discipline or denial of license have been liberalized considerably by the courts of appeal. Fitness to practice medicine for purposes of the requirement does not mean merely competence or skill, but may encompass other factors as well [Matanky v. Board of Medical Examiners (1978) 79 Cal. App. 3d 293, 305, 144 Cal. Rptr. 826 ; Weissbuch v. Board of Medical Examiners (1974) 41 Cal. App. 3d 924, 929, 116 Cal. Rptr. 479] . Thus, it has been held that when a physician is accused of having been convicted of a law or regulation governing dangerous drugs or narcotics, no independent showing of nexus between the conviction and the accused's fitness to practice medicine need be made to warrant imposing discipline [see Weissbuch v. Board of Medical Examiners (1974) 41 Cal. App. 3d 924, 929, 116 Cal. Rptr. 479] . The court in Weissbuch stated that in view of the central role played by physicians in the state's drug regulating scheme, the Legislature had the constitutional authority to determine that conviction of a physician of a dangerous drug or narcotics violation in itself constitutes sufficient danger to the public to warrant imposing sanctions. Although the Weissbuch case dealt specifically with a violation of former Bus. & Prof. Code § 2844 (now see Bus. & Prof. Code § 2237; violation of any law governing dangerous drugs or controlled substances as unprofessional conduct), the language of the case is broad enough to cover any unprofessional conduct involving drug violations [see Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 2237-2239 (violation of drug laws and misuse of specified substances as unprofessional conduct)].

However, the Court of Appeal has held that a "logical connection" or nexus exists between two or more misdemeanor convictions involving the consumption of alcoholic beverages and a physician's fitness to practice medicine, so that imposing discipline on a physician's license pursuant to Bus. & Prof. Code § 2239(a) does not violate the due process and equal protection clauses of the state and federal constitutions. Further, because a rational connection exists between the convictions and fitness to practice medicine, the conclusive presumption of unprofessional conduct from those convictions in Bus. & Prof. Code § 2239(a) does not violate the licensee's right to due process of law [Griffiths v. Superior Court (2002) 96 Cal. App. 4th 757, 779, 117 Cal. Rptr. 2d 445] .

Similarly, the Supreme Court's rule that a finding of moral turpitude must be supported by evidence that the accused's fitness to practice medicine is affected does not mean that a physician can never be subject to discipline solely because of moral unfitness to practice medicine. Because the physician-patient relationship is based on the utmost confidence in the physician's honesty and integrity, conviction of a crime involving fraud or intentional dishonesty for personal gain shows unfitness to practice medicine [Windham v. Board of Medical Quality Assurance (1980) 104 Cal. App. 3d 461, 470, 163 Cal. Rptr. 566 ; see Yakov v. Board of Medical Examiners (1968) 68 Cal. 2d 67, 73, 64 Cal. Rptr. 785, 435 P.2d 553 (showing of unfitness is required for finding of moral turpitude; see § 176.23[3][b])].

A physician may be subject to discipline when his conduct or condition raises the possibility that his or her fitness to practice medicine may be impaired at some future time, even when no past or present impairment of competence is shown [Grannis v. Board of Medical Examiners (1971) 19 Cal. App. 3d 551, 563, 96 Cal. Rptr. 863 ; see § 176.22[3][b]].

[e] Finding Based on Another State's Consent Decree

The broad language of Bus. & Prof. Code § 2305 does not limit its application only to professional discipline imposed after a full hearing on the merits. The statue applies by its terms to any discipline imposed by another state on the holder of a license or certificate to practice medicine issued by that state, and thus includes acquiescence by signing a consent decree to disciplinary action without any admission of the charges brought by the foreign jurisdiction [Marek v. Board of Podiatric Medicine (1993) 16 Cal. App. 4th 1089, 1096, 20 Cal. Rptr. 2d 474 (discipline based on Nevada consent decree)].

Bus. & Prof. Code § 141, which permits a California licensing agency to consider disciplinary action based on the discipline of a licensee by another state, a federal agency or another country, was not impliedly repealed by Bus. & Prof. Code § 2305, and can be the basis of discipline when § 2305 does not apply, such as when out-of-state discipline would not be the basis for discipline in California, as required by § 2305 [Medical Board v. Superior Court (2001) 88 Cal. App. 4th 1001, 106 Cal. Rptr. 2d 381] .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Respondent May Not Use Professional Discipline to Punish Petitioner

The facts and procedural background of Yakov v. Board of Medical Examiners (1968) 68 Cal. 2d 67, 64 Cal. Rptr. 785, 435 P.2d 553 , are set forth in § 176.20[3][b]. In that case, the Supreme Court upheld the trial court's determination that the board's finding of moral turpitude was not supported by the weight of the evidence. The Court, citing Hallinan v. Committee of Bar Examiners (1966) 65 Cal. 2d 447, 462, 55 Cal. Rptr. 228, 421 P.2d 76 , stated that the purpose of seeking revocation of a physician's certificate is not to punish the physician but rather to protect the public, despite the fact that revocation of a certificate works an unavoidable punitive effect, and that a legitimate punitive purpose could be achieved by the board only through criminal prosecution (68 Cal. 2d 67, 73) .

The facts and procedural background of Hallinan v. Committee of Bar Examiners (1966) 65 Cal. 2d 447, 55 Cal. Rptr. 228, 421 P.2d 76 , are set out under § 176.22[3][b]. In that case, the Supreme Court overturned the respondent Committee of Bar Examiners' finding that petitioner did not show good moral character, as required for admission to the bar by former Bus. & Prof. Code § 6060(c) (now see Bus. & Prof. Code § 6060(b)), based primarily on petitioner's record of extensive acts of civil disobedience. The Supreme Court held that to the extent that acts of civil disobedience involve violations of the law it is altogether necessary and proper that the violators be punished, but that criminal prosecution, not exclusion from the bar, is the appropriate means of punishing such offenders (65 Cal. 2d 447, 462) .

[b] Finding of Unfitness Required to Sustain Finding of Unprofessional Conduct

In Grannis v. Board of Medical Examiners (1971) 19 Cal. App. 3d 551, 96 Cal. Rptr. 863 , petitioner had been convicted of two counts of driving while under the influence of alcohol. Subsequently, the board found petitioner guilty under former Bus. & Prof. Code § 2390 (now see Bus. & Prof. Code § 2239), inter alia, for becoming intoxicated to such an extent as to become dangerous to others. At the hearing, petitioner's psychiatrist testified to the effect that petitioner was an alcoholic, whose reaction to alcohol was such that after ingestion of only minute quantities of alcohol he lost the ability to judge any impairment in his thinking or motor function that resulted from his drinking. The board revoked petitioner's license, but suspended the revocation and placed petitioner on probation for five years, subject to specified conditions. Petitioner filed a petition for writ of mandate with the superior court, which sustained the decision of the board.

The court of appeal upheld the trial court's decision. The court acknowledged that the rule handed down by the Supreme Court in Morrison v. State Board of Education (1969) 1 Cal. 3d 214, 224, 82 Cal. Rptr. 175, 461 P.2d 375 , that the power of the state to regulate professions and the conditions of public employment must not arbitrarily impair the right of the individual to live his or her private life apart from the job as he or she deems fit was also applicable to state regulation of the practice of medicine (19 Cal. App. 3d 551, 561) . The court stated that the private conduct of a person who is also a physician is a proper concern to those who license him or her only to the extent that such conduct marks him or her as a physician, and that such private acts could be the basis of discipline only when the physician's professional achievement is affected or the patient community is placed in jeopardy (19 Cal. App. 3d 551, 561) . The court held that this limitation applied not only to statutes that authorized the imposition of discipline for general causes such as moral turpitude, unprofessional conduct, or immorality, but also to statutes that declare specific acts to constitute unprofessional conduct (19 Cal. App. 3d 551, 562) . The court further rejected the suggestion that a physician should be considered on the job 24 hours a day (19 Cal. App. 3d 551, 561) .

However, the court declined to hold that former Bus. & Prof. Code § 2390 was unconstitutional per se because it did not explicitly require a nexus between the proscribed conduct and the accused's fitness to practice medicine. Rather, the court cited Morrison in holding that the language in the statute referring to use of alcoholic beverages by a physician to the extent dangerous to himself, to any person, and to the public, was only an abstraction until given content by reference to fitness for the performance of the vocation of medicine (19 Cal. App. 3d 551, 561-562) . Thus, the court concluded that the applicable language of former Bus. & Prof. Code § 2930 could constitutionally be applied to petitioner if evidence showed that the conduct of which petitioner was accused showed unfitness to practice medicine (19 Cal. App. 3d 551, 562) .

The court concluded that such evidence of unfitness to practice was shown by the testimony of petitioner's psychiatrist as to petitioner's alcoholic condition. Since petitioner's condition raised the possibility that petitioner's ability to respond professionally might be impaired at some future time after consuming a minimal amount of alcohol, it showed unfitness to practice medicine despite the trial court's finding that consumption of alcohol had at no time in the past impaired petitioner's professional judgment (19 Cal. App. 3d 551, 563) .

In Hallinan v. Committee of Bar Examiners (1966) 65 Cal. 2d 447, 55 Cal. Rptr. 228, 421 P.2d 76 , respondent Committee of Bar Examiners refused to certify petitioner for admission to the bar, despite the fact the petitioner had been admitted to and had passed the bar examination, on the ground that petitioner had not satisfied the requirement of former Bus. & Prof. Code § 6060(c) (now see Bus. & Prof. Code § 6060(b)) that he be of good moral character. The committee's findings were based primarily on petitioner's record of civil disobedience in connection with the civil rights movement and other political protest movements, which included numerous arrests, two misdemeanor convictions in the United States, and one misdemeanor conviction in England. Respondent also cited a number of instances in which petitioner had been involved in fistfights and two minor failures by petitioner to disclose relevant information on his application for admission to the bar to support its findings.

The Supreme Court reversed respondent's decision and ordered respondent to admit petitioner to the bar. The Court cited Schware v. Board of Bar Examiners (1957) 353 U.S. 232, 239, 77 S. Ct. 752, 1 L. Ed. 2d 796 , for the rule that a state can require high standards of qualification, such as good moral character or proficiency in its law before it admits an applicant to the bar, but any qualification must have a rational connection with the applicant's fitness or capacity to practice law (65 Cal. 2d 447, 461-462) . The Court held that the purpose of investigation by the bar into an applicant's moral character should be limited to assurance that, if admitted, the applicant will not obstruct the administration of justice or otherwise act unscrupulously in his or her capacity as an officer of the court (65 Cal. 2d 447, 462) . The Court also stated that despite certain distinctions between admission proceedings and disciplinary proceedings, the test for admission and the test for discipline is the same (65 Cal. 2d 447, 451-452) . The Court stated that situations involving admission and those involving discipline both involved the same fundamental question of whether the accused is a fit and proper person to be permitted to practice law (65 Cal. 2d 447, 453) . Thus, the Court concluded that in considering the kinds of acts that would justify excluding a candidate for admission to the bar it may look to acts that have been relied on to sustain decisions to disbar or suspend persons previously admitted to practice (65 Cal. 2d 447, 453) .

After extensively reviewing the record concerning petitioner's past acts of civil disobedience, the Court concluded that petitioner's participation in such civil disobedience cannot be characterized as involving moral turpitude and that the crimes with which the petitioner had been charged or convicted in connection with his acts of civil disobedience, considered together with the surrounding circumstances, were not analogous to the type of criminal charges or other acts that have been held to justify denial of admission to the bar in previous cases (65 Cal. 2d 447, 462) .

The Court also extensively reviewed the record concerning numerous instances in which petitioner had been involved in fistfights, on occasions not involving activities of civil disobedience. The Court concluded that the nature of petitioner's acts in such cases, while sometimes inexcusable, did not bear a direct relationship to petitioner's fitness to practice law (65 Cal. 2d 447, 471) . In support of its conclusion, the Court noted that virtually all of the admission and disciplinary cases in which it had upheld decisions of the state bar adverse to an applicant or attorney have involved acts that bear on the accused's manifest dishonesty and thereby provide a reasonable basis for the conclusion that the applicant or attorney cannot be relied on to fulfill the moral obligations incumbent on members of the legal profession (65 Cal. 2d 447, 471) .

Finally, the Court concluded that two instances of failure by the petitioner to disclose relevant facts on his application must be regarded as de minimis in the circumstances in which they occurred, and were too attenuated as evidence to justify respondent's finding that petitioner lacks candor and truthfulness (65 Cal. 2d 447, 473) .

[The following may be combined when appropriate with a general memorandum in support of a petition for writ of mandate to review an administrative decision of the to impose discipline on a physician for unprofessional conduct, such as the memorandum set out in § 176.20, or of the Medical Board to deny a physician's certificate or to reject an application for admission to the licensing examination, such as the memorandum set out in § 176.21.]

RESPONDENT'S FINDING THAT PETITIONER IS GUILTY OF PROFESSIONAL MISCONDUCT IS IMPROPER BECAUSE PETITIONER ENGAGED IN THE ACTS OF WHICH HE/SHE WAS ACCUSED ONLY BECAUSE OF ENTRAPMENT.

A. Entrapment Is Defense to Accusation of Unprofessional Conduct. A person accused of unprofessional conduct in a medical disciplinary proceeding may raise the defense of entrapment, unless the person has been accused under a statute that provides that a criminal conviction itself is a sufficient basis for disciplinary action (Patty v. Board of Medical Examiners (1973) 9 Cal. 3d 356, 364-365, 107 Cal. Rptr. 473, 508 P.2d 1121 ; Lax v. Board of Medical Quality Assurance (1981) 116 Cal. App. 3d 669, 675, 172 Cal. Rptr. 258).

B. Origin of Intent. Entrapment occurs if the intent to commit the act of which a person is accused originated in the mind of the entrapping officer rather than in the mind of the accused (Patty v. Board of Medical Examiners (1973) 9 Cal. 3d 356, 368, 107 Cal. Rptr. 473, 508 P.2d 1121).

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be combined with a general memorandum in support of a petition for writ of mandate to review the administrative decision of the Medical Board to impose discipline on a physician for unprofessional conduct § 176.20, or deny a physician's certificate or to reject an application for admission to the licensing examination § 176.21. The form sets forth case law applicable to the defense of entrapment. It should be noted that there are limitations to entrapment as a defense to professional disciplinary proceedings [see § 176.23[2][b]].

[b] Limits to Entrapment Defense

[i] Prior Criminal Conviction

The accused may not impeach the judgment of a conviction at a disciplinary hearing by raising the entrapment defense if the statute under which he or she is accused provides that a conviction constitutes sufficient basis for administrative disciplinary action [Lax v. Board of Medical Quality Assurance (1981) 116 Cal. App. 3d 669, 675, 172 Cal. Rptr. 258] . In Lax, the court held that a physician accused under former Bus. & Prof. Code § 2384 (now see Bus. & Prof. Code § 2237), which declares conviction of a drug offense to be unprofessional conduct and provides that the record of conviction is conclusive evidence of unprofessional conduct, was not entitled to raise the defense of entrapment. Bus. & Prof. Code § 2239(a) likewise provides that the record of conviction of a felony or more than one misdemeanor involving the use, consumption, or self-administration of specified drugs or alcohol is conclusive evidence of unprofessional conduct. Thus, although there is no case directly on point, a person accused on the basis of the provisions of Bus. & Prof. Code § 2239 is probably also precluded from raising the defense of entrapment.

By contrast, Bus. & Prof. Code § 2236(a), which declares conviction of any crime substantially related to the qualifications, functions, and duties of a physician to be unprofessional conduct, provides that the record of conviction is conclusive evidence only of the fact that the conviction occurred. Bus. & Prof. Code § 2236(c) provides that the division may inquire into the circumstances surrounding the commission of the crime to fix the degree of discipline or to determine if the offense meets the substantial relatedness requirement. However, such an inquiry should not form the basis of impeaching a prior conviction [see Matanky v. Board of Medical Examiners (1978) 79 Cal. App. 3d 293, 302, 144 Cal. Rptr. 826] . In Matanky, proceedings were brought against the accused under former Bus. & Prof. Code § 2383, which declared any felony conviction to constitute unprofessional conduct and provided for inquiry into the circumstances of the committing of the crime to fix the degree of discipline and to determine if the crime involved moral turpitude. The court of appeal in Matanky stated that the offense of which the accused had been convicted did not necessarily show moral turpitude (79 Cal. App. 3d 293, 302) . However, the court concluded from the recitation of the circumstances of the offense in the indictment that the accused's conduct in committing the offense showed moral turpitude (79 Cal. App. 3d 293, 303-304) . The court held that the accused's own testimony as to the circumstances of the offense, which substantially contradicted the allegations made in the indictment, was an impermissible attempt to impeach the judgment of conviction, under the guise of offering mitigating evidence (79 Cal. App. 3d 293, 302) . The court reasoned that in finding the accused guilty in the criminal proceeding, the jury had found the facts alleged in the indictment to be true, and that the testimony reiterated a defense that the appeals court had already apparently rejected in holding that the judgment of conviction was supported by substantial evidence, so that by implication, the accused's testimony amounted to an attempt to impeach the jury and appeals court in the prior criminal proceedings [see Matanky v. Board of Medical Examiners (1978) 79 Cal. App. 3d 293, 302, 144 Cal. Rptr. 826] .

Under Bus. & Prof. Code § 2236 and Matanky, a person who is accused under Bus. & Prof. Code § 2236 cannot raise the entrapment defense to impeach the conviction on which the accusation is based. In light of the Matanky holding, it is not clear to what extent a person accused under Bus. & Prof. Code § 2236 would be able to present evidence of entrapment to shed light on the circumstances surrounding the committing of the offense, especially if the defense requires contradicting allegations in the indictment or if it has already been rejected in the prior criminal proceeding [see Matanky v. Board of Medical Examiners (1978) 79 Cal. App. 3d 293, 302, 144 Cal. Rptr. 826] .

The doctrine of collateral estoppel does not apply to professional disciplinary proceedings such as those before the Medical Board. Thus, regardless of the effect of the statute under which an accusation is brought on the availability of the entrapment defense, the fact that the accused has already tried unsuccessfully to raise the defense in a prior criminal proceeding should not by itself cause the defense to be barred by collateral estoppel [see Lax v. Board of Medical Quality Assurance (1981) 116 Cal. App. 3d 669, 675, 172 Cal. Rptr. 258] .

It should be noted that Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 2236, 2237, and 2239 are the only sections contained in the Medical Practice Act that require a criminal conviction for a finding of unprofessional conduct [see Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 2234-2306 (unprofessional conduct)]. Thus, for example, a person who has not been convicted of a drug violation in criminal proceedings nevertheless may be found to have committed a drug violation constituting unprofessional conduct under Bus. & Prof. Code § 2238, which declares violation of any law regulating dangerous drugs or controlled substances to be unprofessional conduct. Depending on the nature of the offense, a person may also be found guilty of unprofessional conduct under Bus. & Prof. Code § 2241 (providing or offering to provide dangerous drugs or controlled substances to addict except in specified circumstances is unprofessional conduct) or 2242 (prescribing, dispensing, or furnishing dangerous drugs without prior examination or medical indication is unprofessional conduct) without having been criminally convicted of a drug violation. Similarly, under Bus. & Prof. Code § 2239, criminal conviction of an offense or offenses involving dangerous drugs, controlled substances, or alcohol is specified as only one possible ground for a finding of unprofessional conduct. Under this section, a person may be found to have committed unprofessional conduct, even in the absence of a criminal conviction, for the use, self-prescription, or self-administration of the drugs specified above, and for the use of any such drugs or alcohol to an extent as to be dangerous to the user or any member of the public or to impair the user's ability to practice medicine safely [Bus. & Prof. Code § 2239].

Since there is no statutory provision or case law that limits the right of an accused to raise the entrapment defense unless the accusation is based on a prior criminal conviction that is declared by a section of the Business and Professions Code to constitute unprofessional conduct, either per se or under specified conditions, an accused who has been charged under any section of the Business and Professions Code except Bus. & Prof. Code § 2236 or 2237, or those provisions of Bus. & Prof. Code § 2239, that require a criminal conviction, may apparently raise the defense.

[ii] Preexisting Intent

Entrapment does not occur when the accused harbored a preexisting intent to commit the crime and committed the crime because of solicitation by a decoy [Patty v. Board of Medical Examiners (1973) 9 Cal. 3d 356, 368, 107 Cal. Rptr. 473, 508 P.2d 1121 ; see 176.23[3][b]; Kolnick v. Board of Medical Quality Assurance (1980) 101 Cal. App. 3d 80, 86, 161 Cal. Rptr. 289] . The accused's own conduct in response to solicitation by a decoy may be evidence of a preexisting intent to commit the crime [Kolnick v. Board of Medical Quality Assurance (1980) 101 Cal. App. 3d 80, 86, 161 Cal. Rptr. 289 (ready compliance with request of decoy together with actions, such as use of false name and date on prescription, designed to avoid detection by authorities)].

[c] Previously Successful Entrapment Defense Must Be Relitigated

Neither the double jeopardy provisions of the Fifth Amendment nor the doctrine of collateral estoppel apply to medical disciplinary proceedings [Lax v. Board of Medical Quality Assurance (1981) 116 Cal. App. 3d 669, 675, 172 Cal. Rptr. 258 (collateral estoppel does not apply); see Petrucci v. Board of Medical Examiners (1975) 45 Cal. App. 3d 83, 88, 117 Cal. Rptr. 735 (double jeopardy does not apply)]. When the statute under which the proceedings are brought does not require a criminal conviction, the fact that a person has been acquitted on criminal charges in a prior proceeding does not bar disciplinary proceedings against the person on similar charges [see Stuck v. Board of Medical Examiners (1949) 94 Cal. App. 2d 751, 757-758, 211 P.2d 389] . Thus, although there are no cases on point, it would appear that an accused who had previously been acquitted on criminal charges because of a successful entrapment defense and is subsequently charged with unprofessional conduct based on the same alleged events will have to relitigate his or her entrapment defense at the hearing before the division which brought the charges without the division's being bound by the fact that the defense had been accepted in the prior proceeding.

[d] Defense Must Address Specific Misconduct Proscribed

One court of appeal has held that entrapment to violation of former Bus. & Prof. Code § 2399.5 (prescribing dangerous drugs without prior examination or medical indication; now see Bus. & Prof. Code § 2242) did not occur when operatives solicited only the prescription of certain drugs; whereas, the failure to conduct a prior examination and not the prescription of the drugs itself constituted violation of the statute [Whitlow v. Board of Medical Examiners (1967) 248 Cal. App. 2d 478, 489-490] .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Entrapment Is Defense to Accusation of Unprofessional Conduct

Patty v. Board of Medical Examiners (1973) 9 Cal. 3d 356, 107 Cal. Rptr. 473, 508 P.2d 1121 , involved charges of unprofessional conduct against petitioner growing out of petitioner's having on several occasions prescribed dangerous drugs without prior medical investigation to operatives employed by the Board of Medical Examiners. The operatives had been sent to petitioner's office to request prescriptions for a variety of dangerous drugs after the board had received a complaint that petitioner had prescribed unusually large amounts of narcotics to an elderly patient. This complaint subsequently proved to be false. In administrative proceedings, the board rejected petitioner's defense of entrapment and suspended petitioner's license. The trial court, after independently reviewing the evidence, overturned the board's decision and restored petitioner's license, and the board appealed.

The Supreme Court upheld the trial court's determination. The Court held that an accused was entitled to raise the defense of entrapment in an administrative proceeding to revoke or suspend a license (9 Cal. 3d 356, 362) . After reviewing criminal cases explaining the defense of entrapment, the Court stated that sound policy and good morals are incompatible with entrapment of an innocent person into committing a crime in order to revoke his or her professional license as clearly as they are incompatible with entrapment in order to obtain a criminal conviction (9 Cal. 3d 356, 364) . The Court stated further that the defense of entrapment is particularly important in a case in which a single agency combines both investigative and adjudicatory powers, as does the Board of Medical Examiners, since rejection of the entrapment defense by an agency in effect authorizes its investigators to entrap and encourages a shift of resources from the detection of illegal acts to the promotion of such acts, and furthermore invites the appearance and danger of discrimination (9 Cal. 3d 356, 365) .

In Lax v. Board of Medical Quality Assurance (1981) 116 Cal. App. 3d 669, 172 Cal. Rptr. 258 , petitioner, after a hearing, was found guilty of unprofessional conduct in violation of Bus. & Prof. Code § 2237 (conviction of federal or state dangerous drug or controlled substance violation is unprofessional conduct), based on petitioner's prior criminal conviction of four felony counts of possessing and distributing cocaine. The trial court declined to issue a peremptory writ of mandate restoring petitioner's license, and petitioner appealed.

The court of appeal upheld the trial court's determination. Among other points, the court discussed petitioner's contention that he had improperly been prevented by the board from presenting evidence supporting his claim that he had been entrapped into committing the drug violations of which he was convicted. The court cited Patty v. Board of Medical Examiners (1973) 9 Cal. 3d 356, 362, 107 Cal. Rptr. 473, 508 P.2d 1121 in stating that entrapment is a defense to charges of unprofessional conduct under certain circumstances (116 Cal. App. 3d 669, 675) . However, the court noted that petitioner's claim of entrapment appeared to be an attempt to impeach the federal judgment of conviction on which the unprofessional conduct charge against him was based and that former Bus. & Prof. Code § 2384 (now see Bus. & Prof. Code § 2237), under which petitioner was accused, made the record of conviction of a narcotics offense

(now states the record of conviction of dangerous drug or controlled substance offense) conclusive evidence of unprofessional conduct. The court stated that the accused in a disciplinary hearing may not impeach a judgment of conviction against him or her when the statute on which the accusation is based provides that the conviction constitutes a sufficient basis for administrative disciplinary action (116 Cal. App. 3d 669, 675) .

[b] Origin of Intent

The facts and procedural background of Patty v. Board of Medical Examiners (1973) 9 Cal. 3d 356, 107 Cal. Rptr. 473, 508 P.2d 1121 , are discussed under § 176.23[3][a]. In Patty, the California Supreme Court applied the rule taken from criminal cases that the defense of entrapment is commonly formulated as dependent on whether the intent to commit the crime originated in the mind of the defendant or in the mind of the entrapping officer (9 Cal. 3d 356, 368) . Thus entrapment occurs if the accused is lured into committing the crime by persuasion or deceitful representation, but entrapment does not occur if the accused harbored a preexisting criminal intent and committed the crime because of solicitation by a decoy (9 Cal. 3d 356, 368) . The Court further stated that the showing in the record that petitioner had readily complied with the requests of the operatives for dangerous drug prescriptions was not sufficient in itself to support a holding that entrapment had not occurred as a matter of law. Rather, the Court adopted the criminal rule that it was for the trier of fact to determine what inference should be drawn from the accused's ready compliance with a solicitation to illegal conduct (9 Cal. 3d 356, 368) .

The Court concluded that the trial court could properly have inferred that petitioner had entertained no preexisting intent to engage in the sale of restricted drugs from the following: (1) prior to the solicitation by the board's operatives, petitioner's record had been unblemished; (2) the complaint that had triggered the investigation in the first place had proved false; (3) petitioner did not even know the vernacular names of the restricted drugs for which the board operative who first approached him requested prescriptions; and (4) instructions that the board investigator had given the operatives who solicited prescriptions from petitioner were almost a directive to entrap. The Court also noted that the record showed that petitioner was probably ill at the time that he was being investigated and was practicing against the advice of his own physician and commented that the employment of young women to obtain illegally prescribed drugs from elderly male physicians is not a new tactic to agents of the board (9 Cal. 3d 356, 369) .

Board of Osteopathic Examiners (1935) 4 Cal. App. 2d 135, 140, 40 P.2d 923*).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be combined when appropriate with a general memorandum in support of a petition for writ of mandate to review the administrative decision of the Medical Board to impose discipline on a physician § 176.20, to deny a physician's certificate, or to reject an application for admission to the licensing examination § 176.21. This form sets out the point that a physician whose employee has engaged in acts constituting the practice of medicine or other healing arts without a license cannot be disciplined for employing, aiding, or abetting an unlicensed person in the practice of medicine unless the physician had knowledge of the employee's conduct.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Guilty Knowledge and Willful Intent Required

In Barrett v. Board of Osteopathic Examiners (1935) 4 Cal. App. 2d 135, 40 P.2d 923 , petitioner, a licensed osteopath, was the manager of a health spa that legally employed physicians, surgeons, and other health personnel. Evidence showed that one of the masseurs employed by the spa had performed spinal adjustments on patients, provided patients with herbal medicines, and made a diagnosis on one patient's eye condition, in addition to performing the simple massages that he was hired to perform. Petitioner was thereupon charged with employing an unlicensed person to practice medicine and was found guilty by respondent. Petitioner filed a petition for writ of certiorari with the superior court, which found that respondent's order revoking petitioner's license was not supported by the evidence. Respondent appealed.

The court of appeal upheld the trial court's decision and incorporated relevant portions of the trial court's opinion as its own. The court noted that former Section 14(7a) of the Medical Practices Act (now see Bus. & Prof. Code § 2264) defined as unprofessional conduct the aiding or abetting of any unlicensed person to practice any system or mode of treating the sick or afflicted, and that the word aid imputes no knowledge of the unlawful act or purpose, while the word abet presupposes a guilty knowledge on the part of the person accused. Thus, the court acknowledged that a literal interpretation of the statute, which used the words "aiding" and "abetting" in the disjunctive, would permit finding a physician guilty of violating the statute even though he or she had no guilty knowledge of an employee's conduct (4 Cal. App. 2d 135, 138-139) . However, the court also noted that the right to practice medicine, once granted, becomes a property right and that the Legislature's right to prescribe grounds for which a license may be revoked does not extend so far as to authorize the prescribing of grounds that are capricious and bear no relation to the qualifications of the licensee or to the proper conduct of his or her professional duties (4 Cal. App. 2d 135, 139) . Thus, the court stated that an interpretation of the statute that would permit a person who has no guilty knowledge or willful intent to be found guilty of a violation would render the provision nugatory as an unwarranted and arbitrary assumption of legislative authority (4 Cal. App. 2d 135, 139) . Therefore, the court held that it must be assumed that the Legislature did not intend to make the mere aiding in the practice of medicine a violation unless the aid was wrongfully and knowingly extended, and that consequently a violation of the law by an employee without the knowledge or consent and against the express instruction and wishes of the employer furnishes no ground for the revocation of the employer's license (4 Cal. App. 2d 135, 139-140) .

The court concluded that respondent had overlooked the facts that the employee had not been hired to perform acts that he was not licensed or qualified to perform, and that knowledge of the employee's conduct was not brought home to petitioner in such manner as to impute to him knowledge of or acquiescence in such conduct by the employee (4 Cal. App. 2d 135, 140) .

Ownership or Control of Premises and Equipment Is Necessary Element of Offense. To sustain an accusation under Section 2264 of the Business and Professions Code that a licensee committed unprofessional conduct by permitting a person to use an office or equipment to practice one of the healing arts for which the person is not licensed, the Medical Board must prove that the accused owned or otherwise had control over the premises or equipment used by the unlicensed person (see Bley v. Board of Dental Examiners (1932) 120 Cal. App. 426, 431, 7 P.2d 1053).

These points and authorities may be combined when appropriate with a general memorandum in support of a petition for writ of mandate to review the administrative decision of the Medical Board to impose discipline on a physician § 176.20, or to deny a physician's certificate or to reject an application for admission to the licensing examination §

176.21. The form sets out the point that when a licensee is accused of aiding and abetting an unlicensed person in the practice of a healing art by permitting an unlicensed person to use an office or equipment, ownership or control by the accused of the premises and equipment is a necessary element of the offense and must be proven at the accused's hearing or trial.

Counsel should insert argument in the form to show how the facts of the particular case relate to the points of law stated, including discussion showing that petitioner lacked the requisite ownership and control over the premises or equipment.

See § 176.24 for points and authorities supporting the contention that a licensee accused of aiding or abetting an unlicensed person in practicing a healing art must be shown to have had guilty knowledge.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Ownership or Control of Premises and Equipment Is Necessary Element of Offense

In Bley v. Board of Dental Examiners (1932) 120 Cal. App. 426, 7 P.2d 1053 , petitioner was accused of permitting an unlicensed person to have the use of a certain dental office and of certain dental equipment in order to practice dentistry, on a specified date in a specified city, thereby aiding and abetting the unlicensed person in the practice of dentistry. Petitioner was found guilty by respondent Board of Dental Examiners of violating former Dental Act § 13 that declared the aiding or abetting of an unlicensed person to practice dentistry unlawfully to be unprofessional conduct. Petitioner filed a petition for a writ of prohibition, which was granted by the trial court. Respondent appealed.

The court of appeal upheld the trial court's decision to grant the writ of prohibition. Noting preliminarily that a writ of prohibition was appropriate under then existing law only when a subordinate tribunal had acted without jurisdiction, the court held that respondent had had no jurisdiction to hear the charge of unprofessional conduct, since the accusation had not stated facts sufficient to constitute unprofessional conduct (120 Cal. App. 426, 428) . The court held that the accusation against petitioner was fatally defective in that it did not include three essential allegations; (1) that petitioner owned or had any control of the dental office and equipment used by the unlicensed person, (2) that petitioner owned or had leased the building or premises in which the office was located, and (3) that petitioner knew or had any information that the person using the office and equipment was not licensed as a dentist (120 Cal. App. 426, 429) .

Addressing the necessity of ownership or control as an element of the misconduct charged, the court stated that in the case at bar respondent would certainly have had to prove that petitioner owned or had some right of control over the equipment that he was accused of permitting an unlicensed person to use, and noted that a fact that must be proved must be alleged (120 Cal. App. 426, 431) .

Addressing the sufficiency of the accusation, the court acknowledged that both the phrase "aided and abetted" and the term "permitted" as used in the accusation could be so read as to imply knowledge by petitioner. However, the court observed that petitioner was not merely being charged with having knowledge of another person's default and stated that nothing in the accusation could be construed to allege the equivalent of ownership, control, or the right of control by respondent over the dental equipment (120 Cal. App. 426, 430) .

The court rejected respondent's argument that the accusation was sufficient because it was phrased in the wording of the statute under which it was brought, pointing out that former Dental Act § 13 does not anywhere use the term permitted. The court stated in dictum, however, that if the term permitted had been omitted from the accusation and the accusation had merely followed the language of the statute, the use of the terms aid and abet might have rendered the accusation sufficient. However, the court concluded that since the accusation alleged specific acts, followed by the statement that petitioner thereby aided and abetted an unlicensed person in the practice of dentistry, the scope of the words aided and abetted was expressly limited to the acts alleged (120 Cal. App. 426, 429) .

The court stated in conclusion that, despite the liberal rules of pleading in a disciplinary case such as the one before it, the dictates of fair dealing between a state and its citizens require that when the facts are known and are the basis of a charge there should be a complete and plain statement made before the citizen is brought to trial, in view of the fact that the agencies of the state are well equipped for investigation and prosecution (120 Cal. App. 426, 430, 431) .

Although this case was decided under former Dental Act § 13, the language of Bus. & Prof. Code § 2264, which is found in Chapter 5 of the Business and Professions Code, regulating medicine, is parallel to that of former Dental Act § 13. Former Dental Act § 13 provided that aiding or abetting an unlicensed person in the practice of medicine is unprofessional conduct, while Bus. & Prof. Code § 2264 provides that the aiding or abetting of an unlicensed person in the practice of medicine or any other mode of treating the sick or afflicted is unprofessional conduct. Like former Dental Act § 13, Bus. & Prof. Code § 2264 does not use the term permit or permitted. Thus, the rule stated in the Bley case is almost certainly applicable to physicians as well as dentists.

[The following may be combined when appropriate with a general memorandum in support of a petition for writ of mandate to review an administrative decision to impose discipline on a physician for unprofessional conduct, such as the memorandum set out in § 176.20.]

PETITIONER'S ALLEGED CONDUCT DID NOT AMOUNT TO WILLFUL VIOLATION OF PROFESSIONAL CONFIDENCE BECAUSE THE INFORMATION DISCLOSED WAS HARMLESS, AND THE DISCLOSURE DID NOT SHOW AN ACTUAL AND CONSCIOUS INFRACTION OF DUTY.

Only Disclosures Implying Actual, Conscious Infraction of Duty Constitute Willful Violation of Professional Confidence. The prohibition against willful violation of professional confidence set out in Section 2263 of the Business and Professions Code was not intended to prohibit any and all disclosures regardless of harmlessness or to embrace facts not connected with the practice of the profession, but was intended to apply only to disclosures implying an actual and conscious infraction of duty, and a purpose or design to cause harm or wanton disregard of possible harm (see McPheeters v. Board of Medical Examiners (1930) 103 Cal. App. 297, 300-301, 284 P. 938 ; Bus. & Prof. Code § 2263).

These points and authorities may be combined with a general memorandum in support of a petition for writ of mandate to review the administrative decision to impose discipline for unprofessional conduct § 176.20. The form sets out the criteria for establishing willfulness on the part of the accused, which is an essential element of a violation of Bus. & Prof. Code § 2263, which prohibits willful, unauthorized violation of professional confidence [see Bus. & Prof. Code §

2263].

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the particular case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Only Disclosures Implying Actual, Conscious Infraction of Duty Constitute Willful Violation of Professional Confidence

In McPheeters v. Board of Medical Examiners (1930) 103 Cal. App. 297, 284 P. 938 , petitioner was accused of a willful betrayal of professional secrets in violation of former Medical Practices Act § 14(2) (now see Bus. & Prof. Code § 2263 (declaring willful violation of professional confidence to be unprofessional conduct)) after certain letters petitioner had written to a former office assistant and personal, intimate acquaintance came into respondent's hands. Some of these letters discussed certain of petitioner's patients, with whom the receiver of the letters was already familiar, mentioning that petitioner had performed certain ordinary operations on some of the patients and that one of the patients, who was contemplating marriage, had asked petitioner certain questions about sex relations generally, with which the patient was apparently unfamiliar. The accusations were not initiated by the patients who had been discussed in the letters, and it was stipulated that these patients would not make any objections to the disclosures if called to testify. Respondent ordered petitioner's license revoked. The superior court granted petitioner's petition for writ of mandate and annulled respondent's order. Respondent appealed.

The court of appeal upheld the trial court's decision. The court stated that the statute under which petitioner was accused was penal in character and was therefore required to be interpreted strictly in favor of the accused, and that a statute under which a physician could lose his or her license could be sustained only under the Legislature's police power to provide reasonable regulations that may necessarily affect the public health, safety, and morals, which power may be conferred only under provisions of law that are reasonable and declared with such certainty and definiteness that a physician may know exactly what they are (103 Cal. App. 297, 300) . The court stated that the Legislature's use of the word "willful" in the statute showed that the statutory restriction was not meant to apply to all disclosures of information by a physician, regardless of their harmless character, and that the statute was not meant to embrace facts not connected with the practice of the profession (103 Cal. App. 297, 300, 301) . The court cited several definitions of the term willful from case law.

These definitions stated that willfulness entails such things as some deliberate intent or purpose, a design to do injury, mere wantonness or lawlessness, or some wrongful motive with the direct effect of injuring another. Another definition required that the act involve an intentional failure, for which no reasonable excuse could be given, to do something or refrain from doing something that good faith in the performance of a duty requires (103 Cal. App. 297, 300-301) . In the context of the particular statute in question in the case before it, the court stated that in using the word willful, the Legislature undoubtedly intended to refer to an act that implied an actual and conscious infraction of duty (103 Cal. App. 297, 300) . The court concluded that under a reasonable construction of the statute the acts that petitioner was accused of did not fall within its ban (103 Cal. App. 297, 301) .

[The following may be combined when appropriate with a general memorandum in support of a petition for writ of mandate to review an administrative decision of the Medical Board to impose discipline on a physician for unprofessional conduct, such as the memorandum set out in § 176.20, or to either deny a physician's certificate or reject an application for admission to the licensing examination, such as the memorandum set out in § 176.21.]

RESPONDENT DID NOT ACQUIRE JURISDICTION OVER PETITIONER BECAUSE RESPONDENT'S ACCUSATION WAS PHRASED ONLY IN TERMS OF THE GENERAL ENABLING STATUTE UNDER WHICH THE ACCUSATION WAS BROUGHT AND DID NOT IDENTIFY THE SPECIFIC MISCONDUCT OF WHICH PETITIONER WAS ACCUSED.

A. Sufficiency of Accusation Is a Jurisdictional Requirement. An accusation must be sufficient in its statement of facts to allege actual unprofessional conduct by the accused, or it will not give the accusing agency jurisdiction or power to revoke the accused's certificate (Dyment v. Board of Medical Examiners (1922) 57 Cal. App. 260, 266, 207 P. 409 (opinion of Supreme Court on denying hearing); Bley v. Board of Dental Examiners (1932) 120 Cal. App. 426, 430, 7 P.2d 1053).

B. An Accusation Under a General Statute Must Specify the Misconduct of Which It Complains. A physician accused under a statute that is general in nature is entitled to a specific charge that identifies the particular act of which he or she is accused in addition to a charge phrased in the language of the statute (see Bernstein v. Board of Medical Examiners (1962) 204 Cal. App. 2d 378, 382, 22 Cal. Rptr. 419 ; see also Bus. & Prof. Code § 2236).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be combined with a general memorandum in support of a petition for writ of mandate to review the administrative decision of the Medical Board to impose discipline on a physician for unprofessional conduct § 176.20, or to either deny a physician's certificate or to reject an application for admission to the licensing examination § 176.21. The form states the point that a licensee accused under a statute that is general in nature is entitled to a specific charge reciting the misconduct complained of to complement the general charge of having violated the statute. It should be noted that when the accusation is brought under a statute that specifically describes the misconduct it prohibits, an accusation phrased in the language of the statute itself is sufficient [see § 176.27[2][d]].

[b] Objection to Sufficiency of Accusation Must Have Been Made Within 15 Days of Service

Within 15 days of service on him or her of the accusation, the person accused may file with the agency a notice of defense in which he or she may, inter alia, object to the form of the accusation on the ground that it is so indefinite or uncertain that the accused cannot identify the transaction or prepare his or her defense. Unless objection is taken within the 15-day limit, all objections to the form of the accusation are deemed waived [see Gov. Code § 11506(a)(3), (c)]. Thus, an accused who has not made a timely objection to the accusation on the ground of insufficiency before the administrative hearing as provided in Gov. Code § 11506 is precluded from raising the insufficiency of the accusation on petition for writ of mandate [see Shea v. Board of Medical Examiners (1978) 81 Cal. App. 3d 564, 576, 146 Cal. Rptr. 653 ; Collins v. Board of Medical Examiners (1972) 29 Cal. App. 3d 439, 444, 105 Cal. Rptr. 634 (both cases decided on alternate grounds that there was no timely objection and accusation was sufficiently definite in any case)].

[c] General Statutes

Although Bernstein v. Board of Medical Examiners (1962) 204 Cal. App. 2d 378, 382, 22 Cal. Rptr. 419 , which sets out the rule that accusations under general statutes must include a specific charge stating the conduct of which the accused is charged deals with former Bus. & Prof. Code § 2383 (now see Bus. & Prof. Code § 2236, conviction of crime substantially related to practice of medicine is unprofessional conduct), the language of the court is broad enough to apply to any statute that is as general in nature as Bus. & Prof. Code § 2236 [see § 176.27[3][b]].

Sections of the Business and Professions Code that define unprofessional conduct in general terms include: Bus. & Prof. Code § 2234 (general definition of unprofessional conduct); Bus. & Prof. Code § 2237 (conviction of violating any law regulating dangerous drugs or controlled substances is unprofessional conduct); Bus. & Prof. Code § 2238 (violation of any law regulating dangerous drugs or controlled substances, not requiring conviction); Bus. & Prof. Code § 2239(a) (more than one misdemeanor or any felony involving use, consumption, or self administration of any dangerous drug or controlled substance is unprofessional conduct); Bus. & Prof. Code § 2250 (willful failure to comply with the requirements of Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 14191-14194, relating to informed consent for sterilization procedures, is unprofessional conduct); Bus. & Prof. Code § 2252 (violation of any provision of Health & Safety Code § 1700 et seq., relating to treatment of cancer, or violation of any injunction or cease and desist order under these provisions is unprofessional conduct); Bus. & Prof. Code § 2255 (violation of Health & Safety Code §§ 1400-1404, relating to unlawful referral of patients to extended care facilities, is unprofessional conduct); and Bus. & Prof. Code § 2256 (intentional violation of Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 5326.2-5326.8, relating to rights of involuntarily confined inpatients, is unprofessional conduct). Arguably, an accusation brought under Bus. & Prof. Code § 822, which specifies action the Medical Board is authorized to take if a licensee becomes mentally ill to such an extent as to affect his or her ability to practice medicine safely, would also be required to include a more specific charge than one merely framed in the language of the statute.

[d] Specific Statutes

An accusation brought under a statute whose language is sufficiently explicit to advise the accused of the particular kind of unprofessional conduct that the accusing agency proposes to prove against him or her is sufficient if expressed in the language of the statute [Smulson v. Board of Dental Examiners (1941) 47 Cal. App. 2d 584, 589, 118 P.2d 483] . Smulson was decided before the enactment of Gov. Code § 11503, which provides that an accusation involving action against a license holder may not consist merely of charges phrased in the language of the statute under which the accusation is brought. However, Gov. Code § 11503 also provides that the accusation must be a written statement of charges setting forth in ordinary and concise language the acts or omissions with which the licensee is charged, to the end that the licensee will be able to prepare his or her defense. An accusation that informs the accused of the substance of the charge against him or her is sufficient to satisfy the requirements of the liberal rules of administrative pleading [see Shea v. Board of Medical Examiners (1978) 81 Cal. App. 3d 564, 576, 146 Cal. Rptr. 653] . Thus, it appears that when the language of a statute is sufficiently explicit to inform an accused of the conduct with which he is charged, as required by Smulson, it is also sufficiently explicit to satisfy the pleading requirements of Gov. Code § 11503.

An accusation charging the licensee with violating the statutory prohibition against procuring, aiding, or abetting, or attempting or agreeing to or offering to procure an illegal abortion under Bus. & Prof. Code § 2253 need not make all of the allegations that would be required in a criminal proceeding. The accusation is sufficient if it is phrased in the language of Bus. & Prof. Code § 2253 [see Suckow v. Alderson (1920) 182 Cal. 247, 250-251, 187 P. 965 ; Tapley v. Abbott (1931) 111 Cal. App. 397, 399 (both decided under former Medical Practices Act of 1913, pertinent substance of which is now contained in Bus. & Prof. Code § 2253)]. Similarly, the terms aid and abet as used in the statutory prohibition against employing, aiding, or abetting an unlicensed person in the practice of medicine or other modes of treating the sick or afflicted, set out in Bus. & Prof. Code § 2264, are sufficiently fixed in their meaning to render an accusation phrased in the language of Bus. & Prof. Code § 2264 sufficient [see Anderson v. Board of Medical Examiners (1931) 117 Cal. App. 113, 116, 3 P.2d 344 (decided under former Medical Practices Act of 1912, pertinent substance of which is now contained in Bus. & Prof. Code § 2264)].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Sufficiency of Accusation Is a Jurisdictional Requirement

The facts and jurisdictional background to Dyment v. Board of Medical Examiners (1922) 57 Cal. App. 260, 207 P. 409 (opinion of Supreme Court on denying hearing) are set out in § 176.28[3][a]. In its opinion refusing hearing the case, the Supreme Court stated that the accusation in a medical disciplinary proceeding must be sufficient in its statement of facts to show actual unprofessional conduct by the person charged, or it will not give the Board of Medical Examiners power or jurisdiction to revoke the accused's certificate (57 Cal. App. 260, 266) .

The facts and procedural background to Bley v. Board of Dental Examiners (1932) 120 Cal. App. 426, 7 P.2d 1053 , are set forth in § 176.25[3][a]. In support of its conclusion that implications in an accusation do not compensate for lack of alleged facts, the court of appeal in Bley cited the rule set out in Dyment v. Board of Medical Examiners (1922) 57 Cal. App. 260, 266, 207 P. 409 that an accusation in a disciplinary proceeding must allege facts sufficient to show actual unprofessional conduct in order to give the board power or jurisdiction to revoke an accused's license (120 Cal. App. 426, 430) .

[b] An Accusation Under a General Statute Must Specify the Misconduct Complained of

In Bernstein v. Board of Medical Examiners (1962) 204 Cal. App. 2d 378, 22 Cal. Rptr. 419 , petitioner, a licensed psychiatrist, was charged with statutory rape for having had sexual relations with a 16-year-old girl he had been treating for sexual promiscuity. Respondent initiated disciplinary proceedings under former Bus. & Prof. Code § 2383 (now see Bus. & Prof. Code § 2236, conviction of crime substantially related to practice of medicine is unprofessional conduct).

At his administrative hearing, petitioner was found guilty, and his license was ordered revoked. Petitioner filed a petition for writ of mandate with the superior court, and the superior court denied the writ. Petitioner appealed.

The court of appeal upheld the ruling of the superior court sustaining respondent's revocation of petitioner's license. The court stated that since an accused has the right to know the charges to which he or she must answer, and because the statute under the authority of which the disciplinary action was taken in this case, former Bus. & Prof. Code § 2383, is general in nature, the statute must be complemented by a specific charge in the accusation issued pursuant to the statute (204 Cal. App. 2d 378, 383) . However, the court noted that the accusation filed against petitioner included both a general accusation phrased in the language of former Bus. & Prof. Code § 2383 and a statement reciting the conviction for statutory rape that petitioner had sustained and gave a brief description of the charge pursuant to which petitioner was convicted (204 Cal. App. 2d 378, 382) . The court held that this accusation was sufficiently specific to enable petitioner to understand the nature of the charges against him (204 Cal. App. 2d 378, 382-383) . The court stated that the critical facts in the accusation were that at the time the accusation was served petitioner had been arrested, that petitioner had been tried by a jury and convicted of statutory rape of his minor patient, that the judgment had been affirmed on appeal, and that petitioner had been sentenced and the sentence had been executed (204 Cal. App. 2d 378, 382) . The court stated that the fact that the accusation mistakenly stated the age of the victim to be 15 rather than 16 did not render the accusation insufficient since both ages were well under the statutory age of 18, and the physician-patient relationship is not changed in the least by the disparity of reported ages (204 Cal. App. 2d 378, 382) .

RESPONDENT DID NOT ACQUIRE JURISDICTION OVER PETITIONER BECAUSE RESPONDENT'S ACCUSATION FAILED TO ALLEGE FACTS THAT CONSTITUTED ANY FRAUD OR MISREPRESENTATION ON PETITIONER'S PART IN PROCURING HIS/HER LICENSE.

B. Facts Constituting Fraud or Misrepresentation Must Be Alleged. An accusation that charges a licensee with having procured his or her license by means of fraud or misrepresentation under Section 2235 of the Business and Professions Code must allege the specific acts that constitute the alleged fraud or misrepresentation in order to secure the jurisdiction of the division that issued the accusation (Dyment v. Board of Medical Examiners (1922) 57 Cal. App. 260, 264-265, 207 P. 409).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be combined with a general memorandum in support of a petition for writ of mandate to review the administrative decision of the Medical Board to impose discipline on a physician for unprofessional conduct [see § 176.20], or to either deny a physician's certificate or reject an application for admission to the licensing examination [see § 176.21]. The form states the point that a licensee accused under Bus. & Prof. Code § 2235 of having secured his or her license by means of fraud or misrepresentation is entitled to a specific allegation of the acts constituting the fraud of which he or she is accused.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing how the points of law stated apply to the facts of the particular case. Thus, counsel should show that the accusation alleged fraud, but did not set out the acts of petitioner that allegedly constituted fraud with sufficient specificity to enable petitioner to understand the charges against him or her and to prepare a defense.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Facts Constituting Fraud or Misrepresentation Must Be Alleged

In Dyment v. Board of Medical Examiners (1922) 57 Cal. App. 260, 207 P. 409 , petitioner, who had received his physician's certificate based on reciprocity, was charged with having procured his certificate by means of fraud or misrepresentation. The accusation was phrased in the language of former Medical Practices Act § 14 (now see Bus. & Prof. Code § 2235), which authorized respondent to revoke any certificate that had been procured by means of fraud or misrepresentation. Petitioner responded with a letter stating that he demurred to the complaint because it failed to specify the sort of unprofessional conduct of which he was accused, but did not appear at his hearing. Respondent did not pass on petitioner's demurrer, but proceeded to try the charges against petitioner as on a default and ordered petitioner's license revoked. Petitioner applied to the superior court for a writ of review, which the superior court denied. Petitioner appealed.

The court of appeal overruled the decision of the superior court and ordered the case remanded to respondent to proceed according to the views expressed in its opinion.

The court stated that despite the well-established rule that pleadings and evidence before respondent need not be marked by the refinements and subtleties characteristic of criminal proceedings, a complaint before respondent board must give the accused such notice of the nature of the charge as will enable him or her to formulate a defense (57 Cal. App. 260, 265) . The court then stated that it is probably not possible to conceive of the many different practices by means of which a person might fraudulently procure a physician's certificate, and stated that a complaint against a person for having brought such an attempt to fruition ought to notify him or her of the specific acts which he or she is alleged to have committed in the attempt (57 Cal. App. 260, 265) . Thus, the court held that the accusation was not sufficient to state a violation of the statute under which it was brought (57 Cal. App. 260, 265) .

[The following may be combined when appropriate with a general memorandum in support of a petition for writ of mandate to review an administrative decision to impose discipline on a physician for unprofessional conduct, such as the memorandum sent out in § 176.20.]

IF SOME BUT NOT ALL OF THE FINDINGS OF THE MEDICAL BOARD CONCERNING PETITIONER'S ALLEGED UNPROFESSIONAL CONDUCT ARE PROPER, THE CASE SHOULD BE REMANDED TO THE BOARD FOR REDETERMINATION OF PENALTY BECAUSE IT IS NOT POSSIBLE TO DETERMINE TO WHAT EXTENT THE IMPROPER FINDINGS INFLUENCED THE BOARD'S PENALTY DETERMINATION.

Remand Proper When Respondent's Decision Partially Overturned. A case should be remanded to the Medical Board for redetermination of penalty when some of the counts of unprofessional conduct of which respondent had found petitioner guilty, or any other finding by respondent that might have been a factor in respondent's determination of the penalty, are found to be improper by the court and it is not possible to determine to what extent such improper action by respondent influenced respondent's determination of the penalty (O'Reilly v. Board of Medical Examiners (1967) 66 Cal. 2d 381, 389, 58 Cal. Rptr. 7, 426 P.2d 167 , cert. denied 390 U.S. 944, 88 S. Ct. 1019, 19 L. Ed. 2d 1132 ; *Cooper v. [2] Comments

These points and authorities may be combined with a general memorandum in support of a petition for writ of mandate to review the administrative decision to impose discipline on a physician for unprofessional conduct [see § 176.20].

This form may be used to support a contention that the case should be remanded to the Medical Board for redetermination of the penalty when the Board has imposed a single penalty for several counts of unprofessional conduct and some but not all of the counts have been overturned by the trial court, or if any finding by the Board on which the Board could have relied in determining its penalty is overturned by the court, although the Board's basic finding of unprofessional conduct is not being attacked.

Counsel may make an argument attacking the Board basic finding that the petitioner was guilty of unprofessional conduct and use this form to support an alternative argument that even if the basic finding of unprofessional conduct is upheld, the penalty should be reconsidered when some of the Board's findings have been overturned.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing how the points of law stated relate to the facts of the case.

[b] No Right to Remand If Separate Penalty Imposed for Each Count

Petitioner is not entitled to a remand of his or her case to the Medical Board for a reconsideration of the penalty, even if one or more of a group of counts of unprofessional conduct of which petitioner was found guilty is overturned by the trial court, if the Board assessed a separate penalty for each individual count [Grannis v. Board of Medical Examiners (1971) 19 Cal. App. 3d 551, 563, 96 Cal. Rptr. 863] .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Remand Proper When Respondent's Decision Partially Overturned

In O'Reilly v. Board of Medical Examiners (1967) 66 Cal. 2d 381, 58 Cal. Rptr. 7, 426 P.2d 167 , cert. denied 390 U.S. 944, 88 S. Ct. 1019 , petitioner was found guilty by respondent of two counts of employing or aiding and abetting unlicensed persons in the practice of medicine in violation of former Bus. & Prof. Code § 2392 (now see Bus. & Prof. Code § 2264). On the first count, petitioner was found guilty of aiding and abetting two graduates of foreign medical schools who were not licensed to practice in California, whom petitioner had allowed to assist him pursuant to a federally-sponsored exchange program. On the second count, petitioner was found guilty of employing a person who had graduated from a California medical school but was not licensed to practice, who had made a diagnosis of a patient's knee injury after consulting with petitioner. The penalty imposed by respondent included a 90-day suspension of petitioner's license. Petitioner filed a petition for writ of mandate, and the trial court upheld respondent's decision.

The Supreme Court upheld the trial court's holding, but ordered the case remanded to respondent for redetermination of the penalty. The Court held that the 90-day suspension of petitioner's license was excessive for the conduct of which petitioner had been found guilty under count one (66 Cal. 2d 381, 388) [see § 176.30[3][a]]. The Court further stated that since respondent had imposed a single penalty for both violations and there was no way of determining to what extent respondent had relied on the first violation in imposing the 90-day suspension, the case must be remanded for reconsideration of the penalty (66 Cal. 2d 381, 389) .

In Cooper v. Board of Medical Examiners (1950) 35 Cal. 2d 242, 217 P.2d 630 , petitioner, a certified drugless practitioner, was found guilty by respondent of using the prefix Dr. and of penetrating tissue incidental to giving a blood transfusion without a physician's and surgeon's certificate [see former Bus. & Prof. Code § 2500 (drugless practitioner's certificate authorizes holder to treat and diagnose without using drugs, medical preparation, or severing human tissue); former Bus. & Prof. Code § 2502 (abolishing classification of drugless practitioner but allowing holders of existing certificates to continue to practice)]. Respondent ordered petitioner's license as drugless practitioner revoked. Petitioner petitioned for a writ of mandate, and the trial court upheld respondent's decision. Petitioner appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed the finding that petitioner had committed unprofessional conduct in using the prefix Dr., holding that the statutes under which petitioner had been charged did not forbid the use of such a prefix to the holder of a valid certificate in the healing arts (35 Cal. 2d 242, 248) . However, the Court upheld the finding that petitioner had committed unprofessional conduct in penetrating human tissue incident to performing a blood transfusion (35 Cal. 2d 242, 249) .

The Court ordered the trial court to remand the case to respondent for reconsideration of the penalty, noting that respondent had made only a single order of license revocation based on both violations with which petitioner had been charged, that license revocation was in any case a severe penalty, and that it was impossible to determine whether respondent would have imposed so severe a penalty for the one violation alone of which petitioner had been validly found guilty (35 Cal. 2d 242, 252) .

The facts and procedural background of Yakov v. Board of Medical Examiners (1968) 68 Cal. 2d 67, 64 Cal. Rptr. 785, 435 P.2d 553 , are set out in § 176.20[3][b]. In that case, the trial court determined that respondent's finding that petitioner was guilty of unprofessional conduct was supported by the weight of the evidence, but that an additional finding by the board that petitioner had shown moral turpitude by his actions was not. Since it was impossible to determine to what extent the board's finding of moral turpitude had influenced its decision to revoke petitioner's license, the trial court ordered the case remanded to the board for redetermination of the penalty (68 Cal. 2d 67, 69) . The Supreme Court upheld the trial court's decision annulling the board's decision and ordered the case remanded (68 Cal. 2d 67, 74-75) .

[The following may be combined when appropriate with a general memorandum in support of a petition for writ of mandate to review an administrative decision to impose discipline on a physician for unprofessional conduct, such as the memorandum set out in § 176.20.]

EVEN IF THE FINDING BY THE MEDICAL BOARD THAT PETITIONER IS GUILTY OF UNPROFESSIONAL CONDUCT IS PROPER, THE CASE SHOULD NEVERTHELESS BE REMANDED TO THE BOARD FOR REDETERMINATION OF THE PENALTY BECAUSE THE BOARD ABUSED ITS DISCRETION BY IMPOSING A PENALTY THAT IS EXCESSIVE IN LIGHT OF THE OFFENSE.

A. Respondent Required to Give Priority to Rehabilitative Action. In exercising its disciplinary authority, the Medical Board is required whenever possible to take such action as is calculated to aid in the rehabilitation of the licensee. The Medical Board should give priority to measures such as further education or restrictions on practice that will remove any deficiency in competence that was the basis for imposing discipline (see Bus. & Prof. Code § 2229).

B. Remand Proper When Penalty Shows Abuse of Discretion. A case should be remanded to the Medical Board for redetermination of penalty when the Board showed manifest abuse of discretion in imposing a penalty that is excessive in light of the conduct of which the physician was found guilty (see O'Reilly v. Board of Medical Examiners (1967) 66 Cal. 2d 381, 388, 58 Cal. Rptr. 7, 426 P.2d 167 , cert. denied 390 U.S. 944, 88 S. Ct. 1019, 19 L. Ed. 2d 1132).

These points and authorities may be combined with a general memorandum in support of a petition for writ of mandate to review the administrative decision of the Medical Board to impose discipline on a physician for unprofessional conduct [see § 176.20]. This form may be used when the basic decision that petitioner has been guilty of unprofessional conduct so as to warrant some form of discipline is not being attacked, to support a contention that the case should be remanded to the Board for redetermination of the penalty because the penalty is so excessive in relation to the offense as to amount to an abuse of discretion.

Counsel may also make a direct attack on the finding that petitioner was guilty of unprofessional conduct and use this form to support an alternative argument that even if the finding of unprofessional conduct is upheld, the case should be remanded for reconsideration of the penalty because the penalty imposed was excessive.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing how the points of law stated relate to the facts of the case, including argument showing why the penalty imposed by respondent was so severe as to amount to an abuse of discretion.

[b] Standard of Review

The trial court's mandate to make an independent judgment on the evidence in reviewing a decision by the Medical Board to impose discipline is limited to a review of findings that would justify discipline in the first instance. The propriety of the penalty imposed once discipline has been found to be justified is vested in the discretion of the Board and may be overturned only in case of manifest abuse [Windham v. Board of Medical Quality Assurance (1980) 104 Cal. App. 3d 461, 472, 163 Cal. Rptr. 566 ; see Magit v. Board of Medical Examiners (1961) 57 Cal. 2d 74, 78, 17 Cal. Rptr. 488, 366 P.2d 816] .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Remand Proper When Penalty Shows Abuse of Discretion

The facts and procedural background of O'Reilly v. Board of Medical Examiners (1967) 66 Cal. 2d 381, 58 Cal. Rptr. 7, 426 P.2d 167 , cert. denied 390 U.S. 944, 88 S. Ct. 1019, 19 L. Ed. 2d 1132 , are discussed in § 176.29[3][a]. In that case, the Supreme Court rejected petitioner's argument that former Bus. & Prof. Code § 2396 (now see Bus. & Prof. Code § 2275), which forbids a physician to employ or aid and abet an unlicensed person in the practice of medicine, could not be applied to petitioner's employment of two foreign practitioners without California physician's certificates because that section was preempted under the supremacy clause of the United States Constitution by the federal exchange and visitor's program under which petitioner employed the two practitioners (66 Cal. 2d 381, 386) . The Court stated that it could not be assumed lightly that in establishing the exchange program Congress intended to deprive California patients of the protection of state regulation, and that Congress would have provided an effective alternative to protect patients of visiting physicians if it had intended to preempt the protective mechanisms of the state regulatory schemes (66 Cal. 2d 381, 387) . The Court noted, however, that although good faith is not a defense to the charges against petitioner, the uncertainty surrounding the question of federal preemption and petitioner's apparent good faith in allowing the foreign physicians to assist him precluded any sanctions against petitioner more severe than probation (66 Cal. 2d 381, 388) . Thus, the court implicitly accepted petitioner's contention that a 90-day suspension of petitioner's license was excessive for this particular violation.

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in opposition to a petition to the superior court for a writ of mandate to review a final order or decision of the Medical Board to impose discipline for unprofessional conduct. Counsel should include additional paragraphs discussing specific points in which findings support the decision, or the evidence supporting the findings of the Board.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Repeated Negligent Acts as Unprofessional Conduct

Repeated negligent acts are unprofessional conduct as a ground for imposing discipline on a medical licensee. To be repeated, there must be two or more negligent acts or omissions. Repeated negligent acts include an initial negligent act or omission followed by a separate and distinct departure from the applicable standard of care [Bus. & Prof. Code § 2234(c)].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] In General

In Zabetian v. Medical Board (2000) 80 Cal. App. 4th 462, 94 Cal. Rptr. 2d 917 , the Medical Board of California disciplined a physician for repeated negligent acts based on two acts of negligence involving the same patient, leaving the area without securing coverage for the patient who was in intensive care, and failing to correctly diagnose the patient as having peritonitis and failing to perform surgery. The Board placed the physician on probation for two years. The physician petitioned the superior court for a writ of mandate to set aside the Board's order, which the trial court denied.

Although the physician appealed from the trial court's judgment, which is prohibited by Bus. & Prof. Code § 2337, the Court of Appeal treated the appeal as an application for writ of mandate and denied the petition. The court held that it may treat an improper appeal as a petition for an extraordinary writ in unusual circumstances, including when review by writ is the statutorily prescribed mode of review, as in this case (80 Cal. App. 4th 462, 466) . The court then held that "repeated" negligent acts sufficient to constitute unprofessional conduct under Bus. & Prof. Code § 2234(c) requires two or more repeated acts, not more than two repeated acts (80 Cal. App. 4th 462, 466-468) .

A PETITION FOR A WRIT OF MANDATE IS THE PROPER PROCEDURE TO COMPEL RESPONDENT MEDICAL BOARD TO APPROVE THE PROFESSIONAL SCHOOL FROM WHICH PETITIONER GRADUATED.

A. Action for Mandate to Approve School Inures to Graduate. A person whose application for admission to the examination for certification as a physician and surgeon has been rejected because the professional school from which he or she graduated has not been approved by the Medical Board may petition for a writ of mandate to compel respondent to approve the school as of the date on which the applicant received a degree from the school (see Bus. & Prof. Code § 2087; *Code Civ. [a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a petition for writ of mandate to compel the Medical Board to approve an unapproved medical or osteopathic school as a resident course of professional instruction for a physician when petitioner is a graduate of the school and petitioner's application for admission to the licensing examination was rejected because the school has not been approved. The form sets out the law establishing a rejected applicant's right to bring an action to compel approval of the school from which he or she graduated and the Board's duty to approve all schools that meet the requirements for approval.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated, including arguments showing that the medical or osteopathic school from which petitioner graduated meets the statutory requirements for approval for a resident course of professional instruction for physicians.

[b] Graduation From Approved School as Requisite to Obtaining Certificate

Bus. & Prof. Code § 2082 provides that every applicant for certification as a physician must provide evidence of having graduated from an approved medical school [see Bus. & Prof. Code § 2082]. The Medical Board has responsibility for approving undergraduate and graduate medical education programs [Bus. & Prof. Code § 2004(f)].

[c] Requirements for Approval

The requirements for approval for a resident course of instruction of physicians are set out in Bus. & Prof. Code § 2089. The curriculum must extend over a period of at least four academic years, or 32 months of actual instruction, with a minimum of 4,000 course hours and a requirement of at least 80 percent actual attendance [Bus. & Prof. Code § 2089(a)]. The list of courses that must be included in the curriculum if the school is to be approved is set out in Bus. & Prof. Code § 2089(b) and qualified in Bus. & Prof. Code § 2089(c) (limiting applicability of requirement that applicant successfully complete medical curriculum that provides instruction in pain management and end-of-life care to person entering medical school on or after June 1, 2000). The Medical Board may consider the quality of these required courses in determining whether to approve a school [see Bus. & Prof. Code § 2084]. A showing that the quality of the courses is adequate means that the school is adequately staffed and equipped in addition to giving all of the required courses [Lay v. Board of Medical Examiners (1960) 179 Cal. App. 2d 356, 357, 3 Cal. Rptr. 727] .

[d] Standard of Review

Bus. & Prof. Code § 2087, which provides for court action governed by Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5 (administrative mandamus) to compel the Medical Board to approve an unapproved school, provides that the trial court may not exercise its independent judgment on the evidence in reviewing the administrative decision of the Medical Board [Bus. & Prof. Code § 2087; see Savelli v. Board of Medical Examiners (1964) 229 Cal. App. 2d 124, 131-132, 40 Cal. Rptr. 171] .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Action for Mandate to Approve School Inures to Graduate

Bus. & Prof. Code § 2087 provides, in pertinent part, that if any medical school is not approved by the Division of Licensing or any applicant for examination is rejected by it, then the school or the applicant may commence an action against the division to compel it to approve the school or to admit the applicant to the examination or for any other appropriate relief. The court must proceed under Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5, except that the court may not exercise an independent judgment on the evidence.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5 provides that when the writ of mandate is issued for the purpose of inquiring into the validity of any final administrative order or decision made as the result of a proceeding in which by law a hearing is required to be given, evidence must be taken and discretion in determination of the facts is vested in the inferior tribunal, corporation, board or officer the case must be heard by the court sitting without a jury [Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5(a); see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1085, 1086 (power and duty of the court to issue writ of mandate, generally)]. The inquiry extends to the questions of whether the respondent proceeded without, or in excess of jurisdiction; whether there was a fair trial; and whether there was any abuse of discretion. Abuse of discretion is established if the respondent has not proceeded in the manner required by law, the order or decision is not supported by the findings, or the findings are not supported by the evidence [Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5(b)].

In Mann v. Board of Medical Examiners (1947) 31 Cal. 2d 30, 187 P.2d 1 , petitioner, who was already licensed to practice medicine in Illinois and Massachusetts, had applied for a reciprocity certificate in California based on his Illinois license. Respondent declined to grant petitioner the certificate on the ground that it had not approved the medical school from which respondent graduated. Respondent affirmed its decision after a hearing held at respondent's request. Petitioner filed a petition for writ of mandate with the superior court, which ruled in petitioner's favor and ordered respondent to grant petitioner a reciprocity certificate. Respondent appealed.

The Supreme Court overturned the trial court's decision and remanded the case to the superior court for further proceedings in accordance with its holdings. The Court noted that evidence established that the medical school from which petitioner had graduated had been expressly disapproved by respondent. The Court rejected petitioner's argument that respondent's past conduct of occasionally accepting applications from individual graduates of petitioner's medical school, generally on showing of special circumstances, established a de facto approval of petitioner's school by respondent (31 Cal. 2d 30, 38-39) . The Court held that formal and deliberate action in disapproving a school could not be nullified by less formal or deliberate action, and that nullification of the action could only be established by a clear, convincing, and unequivocal showing (31 Cal. 2d 30, 39) . The Court also noted that respondent had discontinued its administrative practice of accepting applications from individual graduates of unapproved medical schools who had shown exceptional qualifications before petitioner made his application, and that in any case petitioner had not shown that he had exceptional qualifications so as to make respondent's denial of petitioner's application an abuse of discretion (31 Cal. 2d 30, 41) . Furthermore, the Court stated that respondent did not have the power to admit a graduate of an unapproved medical school by reciprocity, regardless of individual qualifications. The Court based this holding on former Bus. & Prof. Code § 2168.5 (now see Bus. & Prof. Code § 2082), which requires every applicant for a certificate to prove that he or she graduated from an approved medical school and former Bus. & Prof. Code § 2316.5 (now see Bus. & Prof. Code § 2142), which requires that graduation from an approved medical school have been a condition precedent to petitioner's receiving the out-of-state license on which an application for the reciprocity certificate is based. In applying the latter statute, the Court noted that petitioner's Illinois license, on which his application for a California reciprocity certificate was based, was not granted to petitioner on a showing that petitioner had graduated from an approved medical school (31 Cal. 2d 30, 41) .

The Court concluded by saying that petitioner should have brought his action under former Bus. & Prof. Code § 2174 (now see Bus. & Prof. Code § 2087), which provides for an action in superior court to compel respondent to approve a medical school that it has not approved, and ordered the action continued under former Section 2174 with permission for petitioner to amend his pleadings accordingly (31 Cal. 2d 30, 41-42) . The Court stated that if after a full hearing the trial court adjudged that petitioner's school should have been approved by respondent as of the date on which petitioner graduated from it, petitioner should have the opportunity to prove that he met the additional requirements for a reciprocity certificate (31 Cal. 2d 30, 42) .

In Lay v. Board of Osteopathic Examiners (1960) 179 Cal. App. 2d 356, 3 Cal. Rptr. 727 , petitioner had graduated from a college of osteopathy that was approved shortly after her graduation. The order of approval specifically stated that it was made as of the date on which the order was issued and thereafter. At the time that petitioner attended the school, the school's normal four-year program had been accelerated into a three-year program, as required by wartime regulations. The acceleration of the program did not, however, involve a reduction in the number of subjects required by the course of training. Respondent rejected petitioner's application to take the examination for certification as a physician and surgeon of osteopathy because petitioner had not graduated from a school that respondent had approved. Petitioner filed a petition for a writ of mandate with the superior court, which found for petitioner and ordered respondent to permit petitioner to take the licensing examination. Respondent appealed.

The court of appeal upheld the trial court's decision. The court applied the rule of Mann v. Board of Medical Examiners (1947) 31 Cal. 2d 30, 42, 187 P.2d 1 that a graduate of an unapproved medical school may bring an action in court to compel respondent to approve the school if he or she had been denied admission to the licensing examination because the school was unapproved. The court noted that although due to a change in former Bus. & Prof. Code § 2174 (now see Bus. & Prof. Code § 2087), which provided for court action to compel respondent to approve an unapproved school, the trial court was no longer permitted to independently reweigh the evidence in such an action, as it had been when Mann was decided; the provisions of the statute on which the Mann decision has rested remained substantively unchanged (179 Cal. App. 2d 356, 359) .

The court noted that it was made to appear to respondent at petitioner's hearing by admissions in the pleadings and stipulations that petitioner had taken all of the courses required for admission to the examination while attending her school and that the quality of these courses met the requirements for approval of the school, which meant that the school was adequately staffed and equipped in addition to giving all of the required courses (179 Cal. App. 2d 356, 357) . The court stated that since petitioner had completed all of the required courses, the fact that the time given for the courses had been shortened from four to three years due to wartime regulations was immaterial (179 Cal. App. 2d 356, 357-358) . The court concluded that under this evidentiary showing, petitioner's school had been entitled to approval under former Bus. & Prof. Code § 2173 (now see Bus. & Prof. Code § 2084; respondent as required to approve every school that meets with the requirements for approval) at the time when petitioner was matriculated at the school (179 Cal. App. 2d 356, 359) . The court stated that it followed from this that the trial court was correct in concluding that respondent had prejudicially abused its discretion in that respondent's finding that petitioner's school had not been approved when petitioner attended it, without more, did not support respondent's decision in view of the evidentiary showing made at the hearing (179 Cal. App. 2d 356, 359) . Thus, the court held that the trial court had the power to order respondent to admit petitioner to the examination (179 Cal. App. 2d 356, 359) .

[b] Discrimination Against Particular Schools Prohibited

In D'Amico v. Board of Medical Examiners (1974) 11 Cal. 3d 1, 112 Cal. Rptr. 786, 520 P.2d 10 , petitioners who were graduates of out-of-state colleges of osteopathy petitioned for writs of mandamus ordering respondents Board of Medical Examiners and Board of Osteopathic Examiners to license petitioners as physicians, either in the manner for licensing new physicians or in the manner for licensing physicians based on reciprocity. The Osteopathic Act of 1962 had barred either of the respondent boards from licensing graduates of osteopathic colleges as physicians, regardless of the graduates' individual qualifications.

The trial court initially interpreted the Osteopathic Act of 1962 as not prohibiting respondent Board of Medical Examiners from licensing graduates of colleges of osteopathy as new physicians and deferred consideration of the fact that respondent Board of Medical Examiners had no procedures for approving colleges of osteopathy or any other schools other than professional schools for a later proceeding. With respect to the issuing of reciprocity certificates, the trial court held that former Bus. & Prof. Code § 2310 (now see Bus. & Prof. Code § 2135), which provides that only persons holding an M.D. degree are eligible for a reciprocity certificate, did not deny equal protection of the law to graduates of osteopathic colleges. However, the court of appeal held that the Osteopathic Act of 1962 did prohibit the medical board from licensing graduates of colleges of osteopathy as new physicians, and that the reasonable result of the Act was to eliminate the licensing of new osteopaths as physicians in California. The court of appeal remanded the case to the trial court for determination of whether there are facts that would justify a classification that differentiates graduates of medical schools from graduates of osteopathic schools. On remand, respondents admitted in response to interrogatories and requests for admissions that in recent years osteopathy had developed into a full school of medicine whose practitioners in those jurisdictions that give full practicing powers to osteopathic physicians and surgeons generally integrate all accepted methods of treatment of disease, that the public can be protected by the proper screening of all applicants for licensing, and that the laws provided for screening. The trial court granted petitioners' motion for summary judgment and held that both the Osteopathic Act of 1962 and former Bus. & Prof. Code § 2310 violated equal protection. The Board of Medical Examiners appealed.

The Supreme Court affirmed the trial court. The Court stated that the effect of the Osteopathic Act of 1962 was to bar either of the respondent boards from licensing graduates of osteopathic colleges as either new physicians or on the basis of reciprocity, regardless of a graduate's individual qualifications (11 Cal. 3d 1, 19-20) . Applying the rational relation test, the Court held that this invidiously denied equal protection of the law to graduates of osteopathic colleges and that the Osteopathic Act of 1962 was therefore unconstitutional (11 Cal. 3d 1, 23) . The Court noted that admissions on discovery by respondent Board of Medical Examiners showed that osteopathy is a complete school of medicine whose practitioners successfully engage in the full range of activities commonly thought of as constituting medical science and that there exists the technical and administrative machinery to screen osteopathic applicants for licensing, just as there exists similar machinery to screen applicants who hold an M.D. degree, to insure that the public will be protected from incompetent and unqualified practitioners (11 Cal. 3d 1, 22-23) . The Court concluded that petitioners were entitled to be licensed as new physicians, or on the basis of reciprocity, according to the provisions of the Osteopathic and Medical Practice Acts that were applicable immediately prior to the enactment of the Osteopathic Act of 1962 (11 Cal. 3d 1, 24) .

§ 178.02 Governing Law

The liability of every person for harm to others occasioned by his or her want of ordinary care is set forth in Civ. Code § 1714(a). The liability of an owner or possessor of premises to persons on the premises is governed by the principles set forth in Rowland v. Christian [Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 Cal. 2d 108, 119, 70 Cal. Rptr. 97, 443 P.2d 561] . The liability of an owner of real property for injuries to recreational users is set forth in Civ. Code § 846. The liability of an owner or possessor of premises to persons outside the premises is governed by the principles set forth in Sprecher v. Adamson Cos. [Sprecher v. Adamson Cos. (1981) 30 Cal. 3d 358, 371-372, 178 Cal. Rptr. 783, 636 P.2d 1121] . The scope and extent of the firefighter's rule is generally set forth in Lipson v. Superior Court [Lipson v. Superior Court (1982) 31 Cal. 3d 362, 378-379, 182 Cal. Rptr. 629, 644 P.2d 822] .

CHAPTER 178 PREMISES LIABILITY
PART I. INTRODUCTION

17-178 California Points & Authorities § 178.03

§ 178.03 Liability to Persons on Premises

[1] Former Duties of Owner or Possessor

Prior to the Supreme Court decision of Rowland v. Christian [Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 Cal. 2d 108, 70 Cal. Rptr. 97, 443 P.2d 561] , the extent of the duty of an owner or a possessor of real property to persons on the premises depended on the status of the person on the premises as an invitee, licensee, or trespasser [see § 178.03[2]].

The duties toward an invitee were the highest in the hierarchy. These duties were to use reasonable care not to injure the invitee by any negligent activity, to make the premises reasonably safe by inspecting the premises to discover any dangerous condition and to remedy it or warn the invitee of any unknown dangerous condition, and to control the conduct of third persons on the premises [Chance v. Lawry's, Inc. (1962) 58 Cal. 2d 368, 373-374, 24 Cal. Rptr. 209, 374 P.2d 185 ; Wingard v. Safeway Stores, Inc. (1981) 123 Cal. App. 3d 37, 41, 176 Cal. Rptr. 320] .

Licensees and trespassers, on the other hand, were obliged to take the premises as they found them. Any liability for injuries caused by a dangerous condition was only based on willful or wanton conduct, or, in the case of licensees, if the dangerous condition amounted to a trap. In addition, the owner or possessor had a duty toward licensees to use reasonable care in active operations [Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 Cal. 2d 108, 114-115, 70 Cal. Rptr. 97, 443 P.2d 561] .

[2] Definitions of Invitee, Licensee, and Trespasser

An invitee is either a business visitor or a public invitee. A business visitor is a person who is invited or permitted to enter or remain on the premises of the owner or possessor for a purpose directly or indirectly connected with the business dealings between them. A public invitee is a person who is invited to enter or remain on the premises as a member of the public for a purpose for which the land is held open to the public [O'Keefe v. South End Rowing Club (1966) 64 Cal. 2d 729, 737-739, 51 Cal. Rptr. 534, 414 P.2d 830] .

A licensee is a person such as a social guest who is not an invitee but is privileged to enter and remain on the premises by virtue of the owner's or possessor's consent [Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 Cal. 2d 108, 113, 70 Cal. Rptr. 97, 443 P.2d 561] .

A trespasser is one who enters or remains on the premises without the express or implied consent of the owner or possessor [Hamakawa v. Crescent Wharf & Warehouse Co. (1935) 4 Cal. 2d 499, 501-503, 50 P.2d 803] .

[3] Negligence Standard Since Rowland

The Supreme Court in Rowland v. Christian [Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 Cal. 2d 108, 70 Cal. Rptr. 97, 443 P.2d 561] adopted a single negligence standard for determining the liability of an owner or possessor of premises towards persons on the premises. The Court held that the proper test to determine the liability of an owner or possessor of premises is whether or not he or she has acted as a reasonable person in the management of his or her property in light of the probability of injury to others. This test is in accordance with the fundamental principle codified in Civ. Code§ 1714(a) that every person is liable for injury to another by his or her want of ordinary care [Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 Cal. 2d 108, 118, 70 Cal. Rptr. 97, 443 P.2d 561] . Factors to be considered in applying this test are the foreseeability of harm to the plaintiff, the degree of certainty that the plaintiff suffered injury, the closeness of the connection between the defendant's conduct and the injury suffered, the moral blame attached to the defendant's conduct, the policy of preventing future harm, the extent of burden to the defendant and the consequences to the community in imposing a duty and liability for breach, and the availability, cost, and prevalence of insurance for the risk involved [Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 Cal. 2d l08, 112-113, 70 Cal. Rptr. 97, 443 P.2d 561] .

Although the California Supreme Court at one time held that a residential landlord could be held strictly liable for injuries caused by certain defects in the rented premises [see Becker v. IRM Corp. (1985) 38 Cal. 3d 454, 464, 213 Cal. Rptr. 213, 698 P.2d 116] , the Court subsequently overruled that holding, limiting recovery to cases in which it is proven that the landlord (or hotel proprietor) has breached the applicable standard of care [Peterson v. Superior Court (1995) 10 Cal. 4th 1185, 1210, 43 Cal. Rptr. 2d 836, 899 P.2d 905] .

[4] Relationship Between Former Duties and Negligence Standard

Since Rowland, the extent of the general duty of an owner or possessor of premises is no longer determined by the status of the plaintiff at the time of injury, rather it is controlled by the foreseeability of the risk created by the conduct of the owner or possessor in the management of his or her property [Beard v. Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Ry. Co. (1970) 4 Cal. App. 3d l29, 136, 84 Cal. Rptr. 449] . However, while the status of the plaintiff is not determinative, it has some bearing on the question of liability [Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 Cal. 2d l08, 119, 70 Cal. Rptr. 97, 443 P.2d 561] . In determining whether or not a duty is owed in a particular situation, the established duties toward invitees that existed prior to Rowland are especially pertinent. Because these legal duties were the highest imposed on an owner or possessor of land, the decision in Rowland did not jettison them but held that persons lacking invitee status were, under appropriate circumstances, entitled to the same protection [Jamison v. Mark C. Bloome Co. (1980) 112 Cal. App. 3d 570, 576, 169 Cal. Rptr. 399 ; Beauchamp v. Los Gatos Golf Course (1969) 273 Cal. App. 2d 20, 26, 77 Cal. Rptr. 914] .

Thus, the common law definitions of invitee, licensee, and trespasser, as well as prior case law defining the duties owed to invitees, are relevant to any determination of duty after Rowland. Accordingly, the specific duties discussed in this chapter are those duties that were imposed on owners or possessors toward invitees before Rowland. If the status of the person injured is other than an invitee, counsel should not only look to these duties but should consider the factors set forth in Rowland [see § 178.03[3]].

§ 178.04 Liability to Persons off Premises

The liability of an owner or possessor of premises to persons off the premises for conditions existing thereon no longer depends on the distinction between artificial and natural conditions but is also governed by the test of whether or not the owner or possessor of the premises, in the management of his or her property, has acted as a reasonable person in view of the probability of injury to others [Sprecher v. Adamson Cos. (1981) 30 Cal. 3d 358, 371-372, 178 Cal. Rptr. 783, 636 P.2d 1121 ; Alcaraz v. Vece (1997) 14 Cal. 4th 1149, 60 Cal. Rptr. 2d 448] .

PART I. INTRODUCTION

§ 178.05 Persons Liable

Liability to persons injured due to the condition of the premises extends to owners as well as to those persons in possession or occupation of the premises who have the right to control the property. In determining who is liable in a specific situation, the crucial factor is the element of control [Schwartz v. Helms Bakery Ltd. (1967) 67 Cal. 2d 232, 239, 60 Cal. Rptr. 510, 430 P.2d 68 ; Marshall v. United Airlines (1973) 35 Cal. App. 3d 84, 88, 110 Cal. Rptr. 416] . Tenants in common who delegate control and management of property to a separate legal entity, including condominium unit owners regarding common areas, will be liable to third parties for torts arising in common areas [see Davert v. Larson (1985) 163 Cal. App. 3d 407, 412, 209 Cal. Rptr. 445] . For further discussion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 421, Premises Liability (Matthew Bender).

PART II. FORMS
A. General Liability of Owner or Possessor

17-178 California Points & Authorities § 178.20

§ 178.20 Supporting Contention That Owner or Possessor of Premises Is Liable--General Form

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT IS LIABLE AS A[N] _____ [OWNER and/or POSSESSOR] OF THE PREMISES IN THAT DEFENDANT FAILED TO ACT AS A REASONABLE PERSON IN THE MANAGEMENT OF DEFENDANT'S PROPERTY IN VIEW OF THE PROBABILITY OF INJURY TO PLAINTIFF.

[EITHER, if person was on premises at time of incident]

A. Liability to Persons on Premises. The proper test for determining the liability of an owner or possessor of land in accordance with Section 1714(a) of the Civil Code is whether or not he or she has acted as a reasonable person in the management of his or her property in view of the probability of injury to others (Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 Cal. 2d 108, 119, 70 Cal. Rptr. 97, 443 P.2d 561).

[OR, if incident occurred off premises due to condition existing on premises]

A. Liability to Persons off Premises for Condition Existing on Premises. The proper test for determining the liability of an owner or possessor of land in accordance with Section 1714(a) of the Civil Code for conditions existing on the premises, whether artificial or natural, is whether or not he or she has acted as a reasonable person in the management of his or her property in view of the probability of injury to others (Sprecher v. Adamson Cos. (1981) 30 Cal. 3d 358, 371-372, 178 Cal. Rptr. 783, 636 P.2d 1121).

B. Factors Applied in Determining Owner's or Possessor's Liability. Factors to be considered in determining an owner's or possessor's liability are the foreseeability of harm to the plaintiff,the degree of certainty that the plaintiff suffered injury, the closeness of the connection between the defendant's conduct and the injury suffered, the moral blame attached to the defendant's conduct, the policy of preventing future harm, the extent of the burden to the defendant and the consequences to the community in imposing a duty and liability for breach, and the availability, cost, and prevalence of insurance for the risk involved (Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 Cal. 2d 108, 112-113, 119 , 70 Cal. Rptr. 97, 443 P.2d 561).

C. Status of Person on Premises Not Determinative of Owner's or Possessor's Liability. In view of the fundamental policy codified in Section 1714(a) of the Civil Code that everyone is liable for harm occasioned to another due to his or her lack of due care, the status of a person on the premises at the time of injury is not determinative of the owner's or possessor's liability (Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 Cal. 2d 108, 118-119, 70 Cal. Rptr. 97, 443 P.2d 561).

[Optional] D. Status of Person on Premises as Relevant to Determination of Owner's or Possessor's Liability. Although the status of a person on the premises at the time of injury is not controlling, it is relevant in determining the liability of an owner or possessor (Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 Cal. 2d 108, 119, 70 Cal. Rptr. 97, 443 P.2d 561).

[Optional] E. Status of Person on Premises as Affecting Foreseeability of Risk. The question of whether or not the owner or possessor owes a duty to the person on the premises depends on the foreseeability of the risk (Barker v. Wah Low (1971) 19 Cal. App. 3d 710, 719-722, 97 Cal. Rptr. 85). Thus, whether or not the owner or possessor of premises acted as a reasonable person in view of the probability of injury to the person on the premises depends in part on the circumstances under which that person was on the premises (Beauchamp v. Los Gatos Golf Course (1969) 273 Cal. App. 2d 20, 25, 77 Cal. Rptr. 914).

[Optional] F. Duties Owed to Invitees. In the exercise of ordinary care, the owner or possessor of premises owes to an invitee a duty to make the property reasonably safe for the intended use and a duty to warn of concealed dangers known to the possessor or which could have been discovered in the exercise of ordinary care (Chance v. Lawry's, Inc. (1962) 58 Cal. 2d 368, 373, 24 Cal. Rptr. 209, 374 P.2d 185 ; Beauchamp v. Los Gatos Golf Course (1969) 273 Cal. App. 2d 20, 27, 77 Cal. Rptr. 914).

[Optional] G. Duties to Invitee Consonant With Civil Code Section 1714(a). The duties existing in favor of an invitee are consonant with the principle of Civil Code Section 1714(a) that everyone is responsible for injury occasioned to another by his or her want of ordinary care (Beauchamp v. Los Gatos Golf Course (1969) 273 Cal. App. 2d 20, 25-27, 77 Cal. Rptr. 914). The decision in Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 Cal. 2d 108, 70 Cal. Rptr. 97, 443 P.2d 561 , did not abrogate these duties owed to invitees; rather it subsumed the duties under the more comprehensive duty of reasonable care and held that persons lacking invitee status are, under appropriate circumstances, entitled to the same protection (see Wingard v. Safeway Stores, Inc. (1981) 123 Cal. App. 3d 37, 41, 176 Cal. Rptr. 320 ; Jamison v. Mark C. Bloome Co. (1980) 112 Cal. App. 3d 570, 576, 169 Cal. Rptr. 399).

[Optional] H. Business Visitor. An invitee is a business visitor who comes on the premises of the owner or possessor for some purpose connected with the business conducted thereon (Oettinger v. Stewart (1944) 24 Cal. 2d 133, 136, 148 P.2d 19).

[Optional] I. Public Invitee. A public invitee is a person who is invited to enter or remain on the premises as a member of the public for a purpose for which the land is held open to the public (O'Keefe v. South End Rowing Club (1966) 64 Cal. 2d 729, 737-739, 51 Cal. Rptr. 534, 414 P.2d 830).

[Optional] J. Liability of Owner Not in Possession. As an owner of property, a lessor out of possession must exercise due care and must act reasonably toward the tenant as well as toward unknown third persons (Krongos v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1992) 7 Cal. App. 4th 387, 392, 9 Cal. Rptr. 2d 124).

[2] Comments

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of plaintiff's contention that an owner or possessor of premises is liable for failing in the management of his or her property to act as a reasonable person in view of the probability of injury to others.

If the incident causing injury occurred on the premises, the first Paragraph A should be used. If the incident occurred off the premises as a result of a condition on the premises, the second Paragraph A should be used. Optional Paragraphs D--G are used when plaintiff wants to demonstrate that his or her status at the time of injury, although not controlling, is relevant to the determination of the foreseeability of harm occasioned by defendant's conduct. If appropriate, plaintiff may use optional ParagraphH or I to indicate his or her status as a business visitor or public invitee when this status will help in demonstrating the foreseeability of harm occasioned by defendant's conduct. For further discussion of the relevance of a person's status at the time of injury, see § 178.03[4].

If the owner was not in possession of the premises at the time of the injury, Optional Paragraph J should be used to contend that the owner, notwithstanding the fact that another person was in possession, owed a duty of care toward the plaintiff.

These points and authorities may be combined with a form of memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which the issue of defendant's liability for the unreasonable management of his or her property arises. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

These points and authorities may be combined with other forms in this chapter, as appropriate.

[b] Argument

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in § 178.33 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities that the risk of harm was foreseeable due to plaintiff's status on the premises.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Liability to Persons on Premises

In Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 Cal. 2d 108, 70 Cal. Rptr. 97, 443 P.2d 561 , plaintiff, a social guest of defendant tenant, was injured by a broken faucet that the defendant was aware of and knew was about to be used by plaintiff. A summary judgment was granted in favor of defendant and against plaintiff.

Since a social guest was considered to be a licensee, the trial court applied the common law rules provided that plaintiff was obliged to take the premises as they were and the duties of the owner or possessor of the premises were limited to reasonable care in active operations, a duty to warn of a concealed condition that amounted to a trap, and a duty to refrain from willful and wanton conduct (69 Cal. 2d 108, 114-115) . The Supreme Court reversed the summary judgment and held that the proper test to be applied in the future to the liability of an owner or a possessor of premises was whether or not, in the management of his or her property, the possessor acted as a reasonable person in view of the probability of injury to others (69 Cal. 2d 108, 119) . The Court stated that the common law duties of an owner or possessor that were determined by the status of the person on the premises at the time of the injury were no longer justified in view of the fundamental policy codified in Civ. Code § 1714(a) that everyone is responsible for an injury occasioned to another by his or her failure to exercise ordinary care (69 Cal. 2d 108, 118-119) .

[b] Liability to Persons off Premises for Condition Existing on Premises

In Sprecher v. Adamson Cos. (1981) 30 Cal. 3d 358, 178 Cal. Rptr. 783, 636 P.2d 1121 , cross defendants were the owners of a piece of unimproved real property that contained part of an active landslide. Following a period of heavy rains, the slide moved and caused the residence of defendant and cross complainant to rotate and press against the home of plaintiff. Plaintiff brought suit to enjoin the encroachment, and defendant cross complained against the owners of the unimproved property for damages to his residence. The trial court granted summary judgment in favor of cross defendants and against defendant and cross complainant. The summary judgment was based on the common law rule that the liability of a possessor of premises to persons outside the premises for harm due to a condition on the premises rested on the distinction between artificial and natural conditions. If the harm was caused by an artificial condition, the liability was determined in accordance with the ordinary principles of negligence. If it was caused by a natural condition, the possessor had absolute immunity (30 Cal. 3d 358, 362) .

The Supreme Court reversed the summary judgment and held that the liability of an owner or possessor should be determined with reference to ordinary principles of negligence, not with reference to the origin of the condition that caused the harm (30 Cal. 3d 358, 371-372) .

[c] Factors Applied in Determining Owner's or Possessor's Liability

The facts and procedural background of Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 Cal. 2d 108, 70 Cal. Rptr. 97, 443 P.2d 561 , are discussed in § 178.20[3][a]. The Supreme Court stated that the determination of whether or not to impose liability in accordance with the negligencestandard enunciated in Civ. Code § 1714(a) involves the balancing of a number of factors, including the foreseeability of harm to plaintiff, the degree of certainty that plaintiff suffered injury, the closeness of the connection between defendant's conduct and the injury suffered, the moral blame attached to defendant's conduct, the policy of preventing future harm, the extent of the burden to defendant and the consequences to the community in imposing a duty and liability for breach, and the availability, cost, and prevalence of insurance for the risk involved (69 Cal. 2d 108, 112-113, 119) .

[d] Status of Person on Premises Not Determinative of Owner's or Possessor's Liability

The facts and procedural background of Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 Cal. 2d 108, 70 Cal. Rptr. 97, 443 P.2d 561 , are discussed in § 178.20[3][a]. The Supreme Court stated that although the plaintiff's status as a invitee, licensee, or trespasser may in the light of the facts giving rise to such status have some bearing on the question of liability, the status is not determinative (69 Cal. 2d 108, 119) .

[e] Status of Person on Premises as Relevant to Determination of Owner's or Possessor's Liability

Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 Cal. 2d 108, 70 Cal. Rptr. 97, 443 P.2d 561 , is discussed in § 178.20[3][d].

[f] Status of Person on Premises as Affecting Foreseeability of Risk

The facts and procedural background of Barker v. Wah Low (1971) 19 Cal. App. 3d 710, 97 Cal. Rptr. 85 , are discussed in § 178.60[4], Absence of Prior Accidents. The court reversed summary judgment for defendant and stated that because the issue of a duty of a possessor of premises to a person thereon involves the question of foreseeability, it was, in this instance, a mixed question of law and fact, and when reasonable minds can differ on the question of foreseeability, it could not be the subject of a summary judgment (19 Cal. App. 3d 710, 719-723) .

In Beauchamp v. Los Gatos Golf Course (1969) 273 Cal. App. 2d 20, 77 Cal. Rptr. 914 , plaintiff was injured while walking from her car in the parking lot of a golf course to the starting area. She passed over a concrete veranda in her golf shoes and slipped and fell. At the conclusion of plaintiff's case, a nonsuit was granted, apparently on the basis that there was no defect on the surface of the veranda and plaintiff's knowledge of the obvious risk of walking on cement with golf shoes. The nonsuit was granted a year before the decision in Rowland, discussed in § 178.20[3][a], and the court of appeal analyzed the effect of that decision on the case in point. The court reversed on the ground that the obvious nature of the risk did not, as a matter of law, abrogate the duty of care owed to the plaintiff. The court stated that the terms invitee, licensee, and trespasser have not been abandoned but are relevant to the question of liability. Whether or not the possessor acted as a reasonable person in view of the probability of injury to others depends, in part, on the circumstances under which the person injured comes on the premises (273 Cal. App. 2d 20, 25) .

[g] Duties Owed to Invitees

The facts and procedural background of Chance v. Lawry's, Inc. (1962) 58 Cal. 2d 368, 24 Cal. Rptr. 209, 374 P.2d 185 , are discussed in § 178.27[3][a]. The Supreme Court affirmed a jury verdict for plaintiff for damages incurred when plaintiff fell into an open planter box in the crowded foyer of defendant's restaurant. The Court stated that a proprietor who knows of, or by the exercise of reasonable care could discover, an artificial condition on the premises that he or she should foresee exposes his or her business visitors to an unreasonable risk, and who has no basis for believing that they will discover the condition or realize the risk involved, is under a duty to exercise ordinary care either to make the condition reasonably safe for their use or to give a warning adequate to enable them to avoid the harm (58 Cal. 2d 368, 373) .

Beauchamp v. Los Gatos Golf Course (1969) 273 Cal. App. 2d 20, 77 Cal. Rptr. 914 , is discussed in § 178.20[3][e]. The court reversed a nonsuit in an action in which a woman golfer slipped on a cement veranda and held that Rowland v. Christian [Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 Cal. 2d 108, 118, 70 Cal. Rptr. 97, 443 P.2d 561] mandated that the question of obvious danger is a question for the trier of fact. The court examined the duties owed to an invitee. It stated that in the exercise of reasonable care, the owner or possessor of property owes a duty to an invitee to make the property reasonably safe for the intended use by the intended user and warn of latent or concealed dangers. In addition, the duty to warn extends not only to conditions known to the possessor to be dangerous but also to conditions that could have been found to be dangerous by the exercise of ordinary care (273 Cal. App. 2d 20, 27) .

[h] Duties to Invitee Consonant With Civil Code Section 1714(a)

Beauchamp v. Los Gatos Golf Course (1969) 273 Cal. App. 2d 20, 77 Cal. Rptr. 914 , which is discussed in § 178.20[3][e], also discussed the effect of Rowland on the common law duties to an invitee. The court of appeal held that they were not jettisoned by that decision, but were generally consonant with the principle set forth in Civ. Code § 1714(a) that everyone is responsible for injury occasioned to another by his or her wantof ordinary care in the management of his or her property or person (273 Cal. App. 2d 20, 26) .

The facts and procedural background of Wingard v. Safeway Stores, Inc. (1981) 123 Cal. App. 3d 37, 176 Cal. Rptr. 320 , are discussed in § 178.63[4][a]. The court of appeal affirmed summary judgment for defendant on the ground that defendant could not reasonably foresee the criminal attack against plaintiff while plaintiff was employed as a security guard at defendant's warehouse. In reviewing duties owed to invitees prior to Rowland, the court stated that a proprietor owes a general duty to business invitees, including a workman brought on the premises to perform work there, to exercise care to avoid injury to them. This duty includes not only the duty to inspect the premises in order to uncover dangerous conditions, but also the duty to take affirmative action to control the wrongful acts of third persons that threaten invitees when the occupant has reasonable cause to anticipate the acts and the probability of injury resulting from them. The court stated that Rowland did not abolish this duty but subsumed it under a more comprehensive duty to all those coming on the owner's land to act as a reasonable person in the management of his or her property in view of the probability of danger to others that might relate to the status of the invitee (123 Cal. App. 3d 37, 41) .

The facts and procedural background of Jamison v. Mark C. Bloome Co. (1980) 112 Cal. App. 3d 570, 169 Cal. Rptr. 399 , are discussed in § 178.63[4][a]. The court of appeal affirmed the grant of nonsuit for defendant on the ground that defendant did not breach any duty toward plaintiffs by preventing vandals from spilling oil on defendant's premises that caused plaintiffs to slip on the sidewalk as they walked past defendant's premises. Before reaching its decision, the court summarized the holding in Rowland that an owner or possessor must act as a reasonable person in the management of his or her property in view of the probability of injury to others. The court stated that in eliminating limitations on the owner's or possessor's duty to act as a reasonable person based on noninvitee status, the Supreme Court in Rowland did not suggest any departure from existing rules defining the duty of care toward invitees. At most, it held that persons lacking that status were, under appropriate circumstances, entitled to the same protection (112 Cal. App. 3d 570, 575-576) .

[i] Business Visitor

In Oettinger v. Stewart (1944) 24 Cal. 2d 133, 148 P.2d 19 , plaintiff, an elderly woman, was leaving an apartment building after inquiring about the availability of an apartment. Plaintiff had just been to see defendants, the owners and operators of the apartment building, who used the apartment near the entrance of the building for their office and living quarters and designated this use with a sign marked "office" in the hallway near the apartment. In front of the building was a porch and three or four steps leading to the sidewalk. From the testimony at trial, it appeared that plaintiff was standing on a walkway between the last step and the adjoining public sidewalk, and was therefore on defendants' premises at the time of injury. One of the defendants followed plaintiff out to the porch, lost her balance, and fell down the steps and into plaintiff. Judgment was entered in favor of defendants on a jury verdict and plaintiff appealed, contending that a number of jury instructions were improper.

The Supreme Court reversed the judgment, stating that the instructions given the jury as to the duties of care owed licensees and trespassers should not have been given as plaintiff was an invitee (24 Cal. 2d 133, 136-137) . The Court pointed out that plaintiff had come on the premises as a prospective tenant, which was a purpose connected with the business conducted thereon, and thus she was a business visitor (24 Cal. 2d 133, 136) .

[j] Public Invitee

In O'Keefe v. South End Rowing Club (1966) 64 Cal. 2d 729, 51 Cal. Rptr. 534, 414 P.2d 830 , the Supreme Court adopted the definition of an invitee that was set forth in Restatement (Second) of Torts § 332, which defined an invitee as either a business visitor or a public invitee (64 Cal. 2d 729, 739) . The Court, citing prior case law, stated that prior to this time courts had more frequently invoked the business invitee definition set forth in Restatement (Second) of Torts § 332, which was based on the "economic benefit" theory (64 Cal. 2d 729, 735) . However, the Court pointed out that a second theory of "public invitation" had coexisted with the economic benefit theory. According to the "public invitation" theory, the basis of liability is not an economic benefit but an implied representation when an owner or possessor encourages others to enter the premises to further the possessor's own purpose that reasonable care has been taken to make the premises safe for their use (64 Cal. 2d 729, 736) .

The Court sustained a nonsuit in the action in which a 15-year-old boy was injured when he hit an obstacle in the water while diving off defendant's pier into San Francisco Bay. The Court held that plaintiff was not an invitee under the public invitation test since the premises were not held out to the public and there was no general invitation to use them (64 Cal. 2d 729, 740) .

[k] Liability of Owner Not in Possession

Krongos v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1992) 7 Cal. App. 4th 387, 9 Cal. Rptr. 2d 124 , involved a wrongful death action by the wife and children of the decedent against the lessor of a construction yard and a public utility company. The decedent was killed when a cable he was holding touchedan overhead high voltage line. Both defendants brought motions for summary judgment, which the trial court granted. The plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal reversed the summary judgment in favor of the landowner and affirmed the summary judgment in favor of the utility. With regard to the summary judgment in favor of the landowner, the court stated that although it was unlikely a jury would find that the landowner breached the duty of due care, such a duty nevertheless did exist. In Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 Cal. 2d 108, 70 Cal. Rptr. 97, 443 P.2d 561 , discussed in § 178.20[3][a], the Supreme Court repudiated the common classification system and substituted the basic approach of foreseeability of injury to others, holding that the proper test is whether in the management of his or her property he or she has acted as a reasonable person in view of the probability of injury to others. Although the defendant in Rowland was an occupier of land, the court of appeal cited Becker v. IRM Corp. [Becker v. IRM Corp. (1985) 38 Cal. 3d 454, 467, 213 Cal. Rptr. 213, 698 P.2d 116] and observed that the general duty of care established in that case has been extended to lessors who are not in possession of the leased premises. Hence, as an owner of property, a lessor out of possession must exercise due care and must act reasonably toward the tenant as well as toward unknown third persons (7 Cal. App. 4th 387, 392) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Liability to Persons off Premises for Condition Existing on Premises

Lompoc Unified Sch. Dist. v. Superior Court (1993) 20 Cal. App. 4th 1688, 26 Cal. Rptr. 2d 122 , is discussed in § 178.35[3][b]. The court rejected the argument that a property owner has a duty not to distract passing motorists, finding that a football game on defendant's property could not be a basis for liability to a motorist who alleged that the presence of the football game was a cause of the accident in which he was injured (20 Cal. App. 4th 1688, 1694-1695) .

[b] Factors Applied in Determining Owner's or Possessor's Liability

In Salinas v. Martin (2008) 166 Cal. App. 4th 404, 82 Cal. Rptr. 3d 735 , a homeowner who was having remodeling work done on his home was held to have a duty of care to protect a construction worker from attack by pit bulls owned by another worker on the premises. While the homeowner was not at home at the time of the attack, he had specifically given the owner of the dogs permission to let the dogs roam free in his backyard. The owner had also given permission to plaintiff to retrieve boards that he had stored in that yard. The court of appeal analyzed the Rowland v. Christian factors, specifically the foreseeability of harm and the burden of the duty to be imposed, and concluded that the homeowner owed a duty of care. The court noted that while defendant may not have had knowledge of prior attacks by these dogs, there was evidence that the homeowner knew that the dogs were guard dogs and that plaintiff had previously communicated his fear that the dogs looked dangerous and ferocious. These conditions were sufficient to charge defendant with awareness of the risk of harm to other workers, including plaintiff, and it was undisputed that defendant could easily have required that the dogs be kept in their owner's van as they had been in the past (166 Cal. App. 4th 404, 415-416) .

In Barnes v. Black (1999) 71 Cal. App. 4th 1473, 84 Cal. Rptr. 2d 634 , the defendant was the owner of an apartment complex that had a private sidewalk adjacent to a steeply sloped driveway that emptied into a busy street. The sidewalk was not surrounded by a fence or other safeguard, although it was known to be used by children in the complex to ride bikes and other wheeled toys. One such child lost control of his "big wheel" toy and rolled down the driveway and into the street, where he was struck and killed by a passing vehicle. At trial, summary adjudication was granted to the defendant based solely on the grounds that the danger that killed the child was the passing traffic in the public street, which was off-premises and not under the defendant's control. The court of appeal reversed, concluding that the defendant had failed to negate the existence of a duty of care under the particular circumstances. The court stressed that determining whether a duty of care existed required consideration of the factors articulated in Rowland and that the defendant had failed to offer any evidence to counter the imposition of a duty under those factors (71 Cal. App. 4th 1473, 1479-1480) .

[c] Business Visitor

In Austin v. Riverside Portland Cement Co. (1955) 44 Cal. 2d 225, 282 P.2d 69 , plaintiffs, two employees of an independent contractor, were injured while doing alteration and construction work at defendant's cement manufacturing plant. Plaintiffs were injured when one of them grabbed a hook attached to a boom on a crane that was charged with electricity from overhead electrical wires, electrocuting both of them. The electricity had not been shut off even though men were working in the vicinity of the overhead wires and the work was being done at night with insufficient lighting. The jury returned a verdict for plaintiffs against defendant owner and operator of the plant, but held for the owner of the electrical wires against plaintiffs. Defendant owner and operator appealed and the Supreme Court affirmed the judgment, citing, among other reasons, the sufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict of negligence. The Court pointed out that the care required of defendant must be measured by the hazard inherent in highly charged wires together with the duty owed to invitees or business visitors rather than licensees or trespassers because plaintiffs' status as invitees was clear (44 Cal. 2d 225, 232) .

§ 178.21 Supporting Contention That Owner or Possessor of Premises Is Liable--Premises With Respect to Which Owner or Possessor Owes Duty of Care Includes Means of Ingress and Egress That Person Is Led to Employ

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE PREMISES WITH RESPECT TO WHICH DEFENDANT OWES A DUTY OF DUE CARE TO PERSONS THEREON INCLUDES ANY MEANS OF INGRESS AND EGRESS THAT PLAINTIFF WAS LED TO EMPLOY.

Premises as Including Means of Ingress and Egress. The duty of an owner or possessor of premises to exercise reasonable care toward persons thereon extends to any reasonable means of ingress and egress either on or off the premises as that person is led to employ by allurement, inducement, or otherwise (Johnston v. De La Guerra Props., Inc. (1946) 28 Cal. 2d 394, 399, 170 P.2d 5).

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a party's contention that the duty of an owner or possessor of premises to exercise reasonable care towards persons on the premises extends to the area either on or off the premises that the person has been led to use as a means of ingress or egress.

For a discussion of the use of case law defining duties owed to invitees that predate the decision in Rowland v. Christian [Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 Cal. 2d l08, 70 Cal. Rptr. 97, 443 P.2d 561] , see § 178.03[4].

These points and authorities may be combined with a form of memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue of the property encompassed by the term "premises." They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should describe the area of ingress or egress where plaintiff was injured, the reason for plaintiff's presence in the area, and the conduct of defendant that led plaintiff to use the area (for example, an "entrance" or "exit" sign or light), and, if appropriate, the degree of control defendant maintained over the area.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Premises as Including Means of Ingress and Egress

In Johnston v. De La Guerra Props., Inc. (1946) 28 Cal. 2d 394, 170 P.2d 5 , plaintiff, a prospective patron of defendant restaurant, was injured while approaching the restaurant. She was walking in the dark from her car that was parked on the adjoining premises not owned or operated by either the defendant restaurant or the defendant owner of the property on which the restaurant stood. The adjoining premises were occupied by an oil company. It had been used as a parking lot by patrons of the restaurant and other businesses on the property who were allowed to park free of charge pursuant to arrangements between the owner of the property and the oil company. Although these arrangements had been terminated at the time of plaintiff's accident, it was common knowledge that many patrons continued to park on the adjacent property. A private walkway ran the length of the building on the restaurant property and adjoined the neighboring premises. Three doors opened onto the walkway and one of them led to a passageway used as a side entrance by customers of the restaurant. The adjoining property had previously sloped down to the private walkway. To level off its property, the oil company had constructed a concrete wall that abutted and ran the entire length of the walkway. The wall varied in height from approximately six inches above the walk at the easterly end to two feet at the westerly end. On a previous visit to the restaurant, plaintiff had parked in the adjoining lot near the easterly end of the wall, and had stepped from the wall down to the walkway. On the night of the accident, however, plaintiff parked closer to the westerly end of the wall. Not realizing the height of the wall above the walkway at that end of the wall, plaintiff stepped from the wall where it was approximately 18 inches above the walkway and fell and broke her hip. Plaintiff sued both the owner of the property on which the restaurant stood and the operator of the restaurant. A nonsuit was granted at the conclusion of the evidence and plaintiff appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed. The Court held that the duty of reasonable care was sufficiently extensive to protect an invitee or business visitor in his or her use of such a means of ingress or egress as that visitor is led to employ by inducement or allurement, express or implied (28 Cal. 2d 394, 399) . The Court stated that the evidence was sufficient to support a finding of negligence on the part of the owner of the premises in that the owner encouraged patrons of its tenants to park on the adjoining property and approach by way of the private walk, had knowledge of the condition that caused the accident, and should have foreseen that a patron attempting to discover the ramp leading to the private walkway at night might step at a dangerous place (28 Cal. 2d 394, 400) .

As to the operator of the restaurant, the portion of the premises on which the accident happened was not within the premises leased by him.However, the Court held that the tenant had exercised sufficient control over the common passageway to become liable for the dangerous condition as there was evidence that the operator had installed a light above the door opposite the concrete ramp leading to the side entrance of the restaurant with a sign bearing the name of the restaurant (28 Cal. 2d 394, 401) .

[a] Premises as Including Means of Ingress and Egress

In Schwartz v. Helms Bakery Ltd. (1967) 67 Cal. 2d 232, 60 Cal. Rptr. 510, 430 P.2d 68 , the Supreme Court reversed a nonsuit granted in favor of the owner of a street vendor bakery truck. Plaintiff, a four-year-old child, was hit by a car while running to buy a doughnut from the driver. The Court stated that the physical area encompassed by the term "premises" could be greater or less than the area to which the invitor possesses title or a lease and includes such means of ingress and egress as a customer may reasonably be expected to use (67 Cal. 2d 232, 239) .

In Ross v. Kirby (1967) 251 Cal. App. 2d 267, 59 Cal. Rptr. 601 , plaintiff was injured while approaching a restaurant owned by defendants when she tripped over a drainage berm in a private walkway running from an adjacent parking lot to the back door of the restaurant. The berm was constructed by the city and ran along the property line owned by defendants, half on the restaurant premises and half on the parking lot. Defendants appealed a judgment entered on a jury verdict. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment. The court held that defendants assumed and exercised control over that portion of the berm not located on the premises because of the berm's location near the back door and the implied invitation to the public (251 Cal. App. 2d 267, 271) .

In Ellis v. Trowen Frozen Prods., Inc. (1968) 264 Cal. App. 2d 499, 70 Cal. Rptr. 487 , the court of appeal reversed a nonsuit granted in favor of a street vendor. Plaintiff, a five-year-old child, was hit by a car while running to purchase ice cream. The court, in refusing to limit the term "premises" to the truck, relied on Schwartz v. Helms Bakery Ltd. [Schwartz v. Helms Bakery Ltd. (1967) 67 Cal. 2d 232, 60 Cal. Rptr. 510, 430 P.2d 68] and stated that an invitor has a duty to warn an invitee of a dangerous condition existing on a public street or sidewalk adjoining his or her business, which, because of the invitor's special benefit, convenience, or use of the public way, creates a danger (264 Cal. App. 2d 499, 503) .

§ 178.22 Supporting Contention That Owner or Possessor of Premises Is Liable--Duty of Care Extends to Adjacent Property Under Control of Owner or Possessor

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum or points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT _____ [OWNER or POSSESSOR] IS LIABLE FOR THE HARM TO PLAINTIFF BECAUSE DEFENDANT'S DUTY OF DUE CARE EXTENDS TO ADJACENT PROPERTY OVER WHICH DEFENDANT EXERCISES CONTROL.

Duty to Protect Users of Adjacent Property Controlled by Defendant. An owner or possessor of property who exercises control over adjacent property has a duty of care to users of that property to warn of or protect from a hazard on the adjacent property (Alcaraz v. Vece (1997) 14 Cal. 4th 1149, 1153, 60 Cal. Rptr. 2d 448).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a plaintiff's contention that the duty of an owner or possessor of premises towards persons on the premises extends to adjacent premises over which the defendant has exercised control.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that defendant owed a duty to plaintiff based on defendant's control of premises adjacent to premises owned or possessed by defendant. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Duty to Protect Users of Adjacent Property Controlled by Defendant

In Alcaraz v. Vece (1997) 14 Cal. 4th 1149, 60 Cal. Rptr. 2d 448 , plaintiff brought an action for injuries he received when he stepped into a utility meter box embedded in the lawn in front of defendants' building. Plaintiff alleged that defendants had actual notice that the cover to the utility box either was broken or missing. Defendants filed a motion for summary judgment, asserting that they owed no duty to plaintiff because they did not own either the meter box or the land upon which it was located. The box was located within a 10-foot strip of land owned by the city, extending from the curb to defendants' property line. In his opposition to the motion for summary judgment, plaintiff contended that defendants were responsible for his injuries because they maintained and controlled the property on which he was injured. The trial court granted defendants' motion for summary judgment. The court of appeal reversed, reasoning that the fact that defendants maintained the lawn completely surrounding the meter box gave rise to an issue of fact as to whether defendants' actual or apparent control over the premises created a duty to protect or warn plaintiff.

The Supreme Court affirmed the court of appeal, first stating that the circumstance that defendants did not own or exercise control over the meter box itself did not entitle them to judgment as a matter of law (14 Cal. 4th 1149, 1155) . The court then held that the circumstance that defendants did not own the land on which the meter box was located also did not entitle them to judgment as a matter of law, because the issue remained of whether defendants exercised control over the land (14 Cal. 4th 1149, 1157) . Based on evidence that defendants maintained the lawn that covered the area surrounding the meter box, and that after plaintiff's injury defendants constructed a fence that enclosed the entire lawn, the court concluded that a reasonable trier of fact could infer that defendants exercised control over the property (14 Cal. 4th 1149, 1162) . Since a triable issue of fact existed concerning whether defendants exercised control over the land adjacent to their property so as to give rise to a duty to protect or warn persons entering the land, summary judgment should not have been granted.

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Duty to Protect Users of Adjacent Property Controlled by Defendant

In Alpert v. Villa Romano Homeowners Assn. (2000) 81 Cal. App. 4th 1320 , the plaintiff tripped over an upturned, jagged piece of sidewalk that ran adjacent to the defendant's condominium. At the conclusion of the plaintiff's case-in-chief, the trial court granted the defendant's motion for nonsuit, concluding that the plaintiff had failed to prove what caused the defect in the sidewalk and that the city, rather than the adjacent property owner, owed the applicable duty of care to maintain sidewalks. The court of appeal reversed, finding that it was error to grant nonsuit if the evidence was viewed most favorably to the plaintiff. The court of appeal reviewed case law establishing that a property owner owes a duty of care to protect pedestrians from harm caused by a dangerous condition on an adjacent public sidewalk if the damage to the sidewalk was created by the property owner. The court also relied in part on the rule established in Alcarez v. Vece [see § 178.22[3][a]], that a landowner may be liable for an injury sustained on adjacent property if the landowner exercises sufficient control over the adjacent land. The plaintiff's evidence showed that the defendant had planted and maintained all of the trees and vegetation on both sides of the sidewalk, that the defendant had installed sprinklers on both sides of the sidewalk, that the damage to the sidewalk was caused by a tree on the lawn in front of the condominium, and that the defendant had prior knowledge of the sidewalk damage. Therefore, the plaintiff had presented evidence showing that the defendant owed pedestrians on the sidewalk a duty of care sufficient to withstand a motion for nonsuit (81 Cal. App. 4th 1320, 1334-1337) .

17-178 California Points & Authorities § 178.23

§ 178.23 Supporting Contention That Owner or Possessor of Premises Is Liable--Failure to Discover Dangerous Condition Brought About by Third Person or Ordinary Wear and Tear

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT _____ [OWNER or POSSESSOR] IS LIABLE FOR PLAINTIFF'S HARM CAUSED BY A DANGEROUS CONDITIONBROUGHT ABOUT BY _____ [A THIRD PERSON or ORDINARY WEAR AND TEAR] BECAUSE, ALTHOUGH DEFENDANT HAD NO ACTUAL OR CONSTRUCTIVE KNOWLEDGE OF THE CONDITION, HE OR SHE FAILED TO EXERCISE REASONABLE CARE TO DISCOVER THE CONDITION.

A. Ordinary Care to Discover Unknown Condition Required. An owner or possessor of premises is liable for harm due to a dangerous condition brought about by a third party or ordinary wear and tear if the condition, although unknown to the owner or possessor, could have been discovered in the exercise of reasonable care (Bridgman v. Safeway Stores, Inc. (1960) 53 Cal. 2d 443, 447, 2 Cal. Rptr. 146, 348 P.2d 696 ; see also Portillo v. Aiassa (1994) 27 Cal. App. 4th 1128, 1135-1136, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 755).

[Optional] B. Reasonable Inspections Required. An owner or possessor of premises must make reasonable inspections of portions of the premises open to the public. The absence of inspections within a period of time prior to an accident may warrant an inference that the condition could have been discovered in the exercise of ordinary care (Ortega v. Kmart Corp. (2001) 26 Cal. 4th 1200, 1210, 114 Cal. Rptr. 2d 470, 36 P.3d 11 ; Olsen v. Roos-Atkins (1962) 208 Cal. App. 2d 259, 263, 25 Cal. Rptr. 190 ; see also Portillo v. Aiassa (1994) 27 Cal. App. 4th 1128, 1135-1136, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 755).

[Optional] C. Commercial Landowner Cannot Abrogate Duty by Signing Lease. A commercial landowner cannot totally abrogate its landowner responsibilities merely by signing a lease. A lessor out of possession has a duty to exercise due care and act reasonably toward the tenant as well as unknown third persons (Lopez v. Superior Court (1996) 45 Cal. App. 4th 705, 715, 52 Cal. Rptr. 2d 821).

[Optional] D. Landlord With Unlawful Detainer Judgment Owes Duty to Inspect. A landlord that has instituted a successful unlawful detainer action has a duty to inspect the property that attaches upon entry of judgment in the unlawful detainer action, even if the tenant has not yet vacated the premises, and includes a duty to make subsequent inspections at reasonable intervals (Stone v. Center Trust Retail Prop., Inc. (2008) 163 Cal. App. 4th 608, 613, 77 Cal. Rptr. 3d 556).

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of plaintiff's contention that defendant owner or possessor is liable for failure to exercise ordinary care to discover a dangerous condition brought about either by ordinary wear and tear or by a third person. The situation that frequently arises is a customer in a store being injured by a condition brought about either by a person other than the possessor or his or her employee, or by ordinary wear and tear (for example, produce spilled on the floor by customers in a grocery store). In this case, the inquiry focuses on whether or not the condition could have been discovered in the exercise of reasonable care. Optional Paragraph B should be used if the absence or infrequency of inspections creates an inference that the condition could have been discovered in the exercise of ordinary care.

For a discussion of the use of case law defining duties owed to invitees that predate the decision in Rowland v. Christian [Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 Cal. 2d l08, 70 Cal. Rptr. 97, 443 P.2d 561] , see § 178.03[4].

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue of liability for a dangerous condition brought about by ordinary wear and tear or third parties. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

If appropriate, this form may be combined with the points and authorities in § 178.20 concerning the test of liability of an owner or possessor of premises.

[b] Argument

[d] Opposing Points and Authorities

If appropriate, the points and authorities in § 178.40 may be used to oppose these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Ordinary Care to Discover Unknown Condition Required

In Bridgman v. Safeway Stores, Inc. (1960) 53 Cal. 2d 443, 2 Cal. Rptr. 146, 348 P.2d 696 , plaintiff was injured when she was knocked down by a stack of pumpkins falling from a produce stand in defendant's market. She had just taken a pumpkin from the stand, weighed it, and replaced it. The jury returned a verdict for defendant and plaintiff appealed, contending that the court erred in giving certain jury instructions. The trial court had instructed the jury that the defendant would be liable for the mishandling of the pumpkins by a customer if there was actual knowledge of the poorly stacked pumpkins or if the condition existed for such a period of time so as to charge the defendant with notice. The Supreme Court stated that the instruction was incomplete in that it said nothing about the duty of the defendant to exercise ordinary care to discover the dangerous condition and make reasonable inspections of the premises (53 Cal. 2d 443, 447) . Notwithstanding this error, the Court held that as another instruction aptly covered the matters omitted, the erroneous instruction did not result in a miscarriage of justice and affirmed the judgment (53 Cal. 2d 443) .

In Portillo v. Aiassa (1994) 27 Cal. App. 4th 1128, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 755 , plaintiff was attacked by a dog owned by defendant's commercial tenant while he was making a delivery to the tenant's liquor store. Before renewing the tenant's lease nearly a year before the attack on plaintiff, defendant had not conducted an inspection of thepremises, but knew that the tenant was keeping the dog at the store. A sign in the store warned of a guard dog on the premises and a copy of a newspaper article about the dog's recent attack on a robber and its "rotten disposition" was posted near the door of the store. In plaintiff's action against defendant, the jury awarded damages to plaintiff. Defendant appealed, contending that a landlord owes a duty of care to third parties injured by a tenant's dog only if the landlord has actual knowledge that the dog is dangerous.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that actual knowledge is not required. To meet the duty of care to both tenants and the general public to provide and maintain safe premises, a landlord must inspect leased premises to ascertain their condition. Therefore, if a landlord would have discovered a dangerous condition on the premises by exercise of reasonable care, lack of actual knowledge is not a defense to liability (27 Cal. App. 4th 1128, 1134) . The court acknowledged that no court had considered a landlord's duty of care in circumstances similar to the case before it. However, applying the factors that generally determine whether an individual owes a duty, the court found that defendant owed a duty to exercise reasonable care in inspecting his commercial property and removing or restraining the tenant's dog, because it was reasonably foreseeable that a guard dog such as the tenant's would injure someone, injuries inflicted by these dogs are frequently serious, the failure to require the tenant to remove the dog was closely connected with plaintiff's injuries, there was moral blame attached to defendant's failure to inspect, requiring reasonable inspections does not impose a significant burden on landlords, the risk of harm to the public outweighs the benefit of having a particular tenant, and insurance is available to cover any liability landlords may have to third parties for injuries suffered on the premises (27 Cal. App. 4th 1128, 1135) . The court rejected defendant's argument that imposition of a duty was too burdensome, pointing out that defendant would have learned about the dog's dangerous propensities merely by asking about the dog's history and training, why the sign had been posted, whether the newspaper article was accurate, whether the dog could be insured, or whether anyone other than the tenant and his family could attest to the dog's behavior. The court also distinguished the case before it from earlier cases finding that a landlord had no duty to inspect rented premises for the purpose of discovering the existence of a tenant's dangerous dog and would not be liable to third parties injured by the dog unless the landlord had previous knowledge of the dog's vicious nature [see, e.g., Lundy v. California Realty (1985) 170 Cal. App. 3d 813, 821, 216 Cal. Rptr. 575 ; Uccello v. Laudenslayer (1975) 44 Cal. App. 3d 504, 514, 118 Cal. Rptr. 741] , because those cases involved family pets kept in single-family residences. The risk of injury from a guard dog in a store open to the public is far greater; moreover, although they may be necessary in some neighborhoods, guard dogs, unlike family pets, cannot be classified as "an important part of our way of life" (27 Cal. App. 4th 1128, 1137-1138) . Finally, the court rejected defendant's argument that imposition of a duty to inspect premises for dangerous animals would make a landlord strictly liable. The court noted that there are numerous scenarios in which a landlord exercising reasonable care to inspect would not necessarily discover the animal's presence (for example, the tenant's concealment of the animal) and therefore would not be held liable for injuries caused by the animal (27 Cal. App. 4th 1128, 1138) .

[b] Reasonable Inspections Required

In Ortega v. Kmart Corp. (2001) 26 Cal. 4th 1200, 114 Cal. Rptr. 2d 470, 36 P.3d 11 , the plaintiff was a customer in the defendant's store who slipped on a puddle of milk adjacent to a refrigerator. The plaintiff sued the defendant. At trial, although the plaintiff could not prove how the milk puddle originated or how long it had been on the floor, he did provide evidence that the defendant's employees probably did not inspect the aisle prior to the accident for 15 to 30 minutes at minimum, and possibly for as long as two hours. The plaintiff argued that because the evidence showed that the defendant had not inspected the premises for a reasonable period of time before the accident, it was proper to infer that the puddle was on the floor long enough for employees to have discovered and remedied it. The jury agreed and returned a verdict for the plaintiff. The defendant appealed, the court of appeal affirmed, and the defendant appealed again.

The Supreme Court affirmed. Relying in large part on its analysis in an earlier case [Bridgman v. Safeway Stores, Inc. (1960) 53 Cal. 2d 443, 2 Cal. Rptr. 146, 348 P.2d 696 ; see § 178.23[3][a]], the Court reaffirmed that if a plaintiff relies on the failure to correct a dangerous condition to prove a property owner's negligence, the plaintiff has the burden of proving that the owner had notice of the defect with sufficient time to correct it. However, the Court also reaffirmed that the plaintiff need not show actual knowledge of the dangerous condition if evidence suggests that the condition was present for a sufficient period of time to charge the owner with constructive knowledge of its existence (26 Cal. 4th 1200, 1206-1207) . Moreover, a plaintiff may rely on circumstantial evidence to establish constructive knowledge. Therefore, the Court held that if a plaintiff can show that a property owner did not make an inspection within a time period that was reasonable under the circumstances, the plaintiff could raise an inference that the defective condition existed long enough that failure to discover it was not reasonable (26 Cal. 4th 1200, 1210) . The Court also reaffirmed that it was for the jury to decide, under all of the circumstances of the particular case, whether the lack of inspection within the time period of the case was sufficient to infer that the defective condition existed long enough for a reasonable owner to have discovered and corrected the defect (26 Cal. 4th 1200, 1213) . In this particular case, the evidence of the defendant's failure to inspect the premises for at least 15 to 30 minutes, and possibly for as long as two hours prior to the accident, was indicative of the defendant's negligence and created a reasonable inference that the dangerous condition existed long enough for the defendant to discover it (26 Cal. 4th 1200, 1210-1211) .

In Olsen v. Roos-Atkins (1962) 208 Cal. App. 2d 259, 25 Cal. Rptr. 190 , plaintiff was a maintenance man employed by a maintenance service and assigned to defendant's store to work the night shift. He was injured when he slipped and fell in the store on a piece of a banana peel. There was evidence that the banana peel was dry and brown around the edges and that the spot on the floor beneath it was dried up and gluey. In addition, there was no regular janitorial service during the daytime hours although employees were told to keep the floors clean. The jury returned a verdict forplaintiff, but defendant was granted a judgment notwithstanding the verdict. The court, in reversing the judgment, held that there was sufficient evidence to support the finding of negligence on the part of defendant. The evidence was sufficient to support a finding that the banana peel had remained on the premises long enough for a person exercising ordinary care to discover it and, in addition, the absence of inspections of the stairway since plaintiff quit his work the evening before warranted an inference that the condition existed long enough to have been discovered in the exercise of reasonable care (208 Cal. App. 2d 259, 262-265) .

Portillo v. Aiassa (1994) 27 Cal. App. 4th 1128, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 755 , is discussed in § 178.23[3][a].

[c] Commercial Landowner Cannot Abrogate Duty by Signing Lease

In Lopez v. Superior Court (1996) 45 Cal. App. 4th 705, 52 Cal. Rptr. 2d 821 , a plaintiff who slipped and fell on a grape at a produce stand sued the owners of the stand as well as the owner and lessor of the property on theories of negligence and premises liability. Plaintiffs' complaint alleged among other things that defendants failed to repair, investigate, inspect or make the fruit stand safe, and that defendants negligently maintained the premises because the floors were slippery and littered with produce which defendants knew or should have known constituted a dangerous condition. Defendant landowner filed a motion for summary judgment contending that as a lessor out of possession, it was entitled to summary judgment because (1) there was no evidence that defendant had actual notice of the dangerous condition of the floor, (2) the condition was not created by any employee of defendant's, (3) there was no evidence of any prior slip and fall, (4) there was insufficient evidence to support a claim of constructive notice, and (5) there was no reasonable inspection that defendant could have performed which would have revealed the dangerous condition. The trial court granted the motion and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, finding defendant's showing insufficient to meet its burden because it did not show that at the time the lease was executed and renewed there was an inspection, nor were facts presented bearing upon the necessity for an inspection, or facts which showed that any inspection conducted was reasonable under the circumstances (45 Cal. App. 4th 705, 717) . The court explained its holding by outlining the duties of a commercial lessor/landowner. The court found that because there was no dispute that defendant was the owner of the leased premises, defendant had a duty to exercise due care to protect third persons such as plaintiff who came to the premises. The court added that a commercial landowner could not totally abrogate its landowner responsibilities by signing a lease. Rather, as the owner of property, a lessor out of possession must exercise due care and must act reasonably toward the tenant as well as to unknown third persons. Specifically, at the time the lease is executed and upon renewal a landlord has the right to reenter the property, has control of the property and must inspect the premises to make them reasonably safe from dangerous conditions (45 Cal. App. 4th 705, 715) .

[d] Landlord With Unlawful Detainer Judgment Owes Duty to Inspect

In Stone v. Center Trust Retail Properties, Inc. (2008) 163 Cal. App. 4th 608, 77 Cal. Rptr. 3d 556 , plaintiff was a restaurant customer who was injured when she slipped on water that had accumulated on the floor of a restaurant, allegedly because of a water leak. Although the restaurant was still in operation at the time of the accident, the restaurant was in default on its rent payments to the landlord and the landlord had filed a successful unlawful detainer action and been issued a writ of possession for the property. Plaintiff sued both the restaurant owner and the landlord, although the restaurant owner was eventually dismissed from the suit. The suit against the landlord went to trial and the jury found the landlord 19 percent at fault and awarded economic and noneconomic damages to plaintiff. The landlord appealed.

The court of appeal reversed and remanded for a new trial only on the issue of liability. The court recognized that the duty of a landlord to ameliorate dangerous conditions when a tenant is in possession of the property is generally limited to those conditions about which the landlord has actual knowledge, if accompanied by the right and ability to cure the condition. However, the court also noted that in situations in which a tenant in possession has defaulted on a lease, the tenant may lack the incentive to maintain the property in a safe condition. In recognition of this problem, the court held that a landlord that has instituted a successful unlawful detainer action has a duty to inspect the property, and this duty attaches upon entry of judgment in the unlawful detainer action, even if the tenant has not yet vacated the premises. This duty also includes a duty to make subsequent inspections at reasonable intervals (163 Cal. App. 4th 608, 613) . Because the parties at trial did not have proper court guidance on a landlord's duty to inspect under the circumstances, the court of appeal remanded for a new trial on the issue of liability, at which time the parties would be allowed to present evidence on the timing of the defendant's duty to inspect, the nature of any inspections due, and whether reasonable inspections would have revealed the water leak in time to prevent the injury to plaintiff (163 Cal. App. 4th 608, 614) .

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

KNOWLEDGE OF THE DANGEROUS CONDITION ON THE PREMISES SHOULD BE IMPUTED TO DEFENDANT _____ [OWNER or POSSESSOR] BECAUSE IT WAS BROUGHT ABOUT BY _____ [HIS/HER NEGLIGENCE or THE NEGLIGENCE OF HIS/HER EMPLOYEES].

Knowledge of Dangerous Condition Imputed to Owner or Possessor. If a dangerous or defective condition of premises that causes an injury is brought about by the negligence of the owner or possessor or his or her employee acting within the scope of the employment, knowledge of the dangerous or defective condition is imputed to the owner or possessor (Hatfield v. Levy Bros. (1941) 18 Cal. 2d 798, 806, 117 P.2d 841).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of plaintiff's contention that knowledge of a dangerous condition on defendant owner's or possessor's premises should be imputed to defendant because the condition was brought about by the negligence of defendant or of his or her employees.

These points and authorities may be combined with a form of memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue of the knowledge of the condition. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[a] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss the negligence of the owner or possessor or the employee that created the dangerous condition and, in the case of the negligence of the employee, counsel should describe how the employee was acting within the course and scope of employment.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Knowledge of Dangerous Condition Imputed to Owner or Possessor

Plaintiff in Hatfield v. Levy Bros. (1941) 18 Cal. 2d 798, 117 P.2d 841 , was a woman shopper who was injured in a fall on the waxed wooden floor in defendant's store. Plaintiff and her husband sued the owner of the store, the applicator of the wax, the cashier, and the president and manager of the store. The evidence disclosed that the floor had just been waxed by an employee of defendant who testified that the floor was slippery where the wax had been applied. There was also evidence that the coat plaintiff was wearing that day had wax on it. The jury returned a verdict in favor of plaintiffs and against all defendants. A motion for a new trial was made by all four defendants and denied except as to the cashier. Defendants appealed, contending among other things that there was insufficient evidence to establish that they had actual or constructive knowledge of the dangerous condition of the floor.

The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment. The Court stated that there was sufficient evidence of knowledge and pointed out that the employee who applied the wax knew that the floor was slippery and dangerous. In addition, the employee's negligence had brought about the condition. The Court stated that when the dangerous or defective condition of the property that causes the injury is created by the negligence of the owner of the property or his or her employee acting within the scope of the employment, the owner of the property cannot be permitted to assert that there was no notice or knowledge of the defective or dangerous condition since the knowledge is imputed to the owner under these circumstances (18 Cal. 2d 798, 806) .

§ 178.25 Supporting Contention That Owner or Possessor of Premises Is Liable--Harm Due to Obvious Danger--Attention Diverted From Danger

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE OBVIOUSNESS OF THE DANGER DOES NOT RELIEVE DEFENDANT _____ [OWNER or POSSESSOR] FROM LIABILITY BECAUSE PLAINTIFF'S ATTENTION WAS LIKELY TO BE, AND ACTUALLY WAS, DISTRACTED FROM IT.

A. Distraction of Attention. When the attention of a person approaching an obvious danger is likely to be distracted, the danger, although obvious, does not relieve the possessor from liability (Henderson v. McGill (1963) 222 Cal. App. 2d 256, 260, 34 Cal. Rptr. 897).

[Optional] B. Attention to Work. When a person must work in a position of possible danger, the amount of care that he or she is bound to exercise for his or her own safety may well be less byreason of the necessity of the worker's giving attention to his or her work than would otherwise be the case. Thus, an obvious or apparent risk of danger does not automatically absolve a defendant of liability for injury that the danger has caused. [In such cases, the jury is entitled to balance the plaintiff's necessity against the danger, even if it be assumed that it was an apparent one] (Osborn v. Mission Ready Mix (1990) 224 Cal. App. 3d 104, 118-119, 273 Cal. Rptr. 457).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted by plaintiff in support of his or her contention that although a danger existing on the premises was obvious, defendant is still liable for the injury resulting to plaintiff from the danger because plaintiff's attention was distracted from it.

Optional Paragraph B is provided for use in cases in which the plaintiff is a worker who was injured on the defendant's premises while engaged in a task for which he or she was hired.

For a discussion of the use of case law defining duties owed to invitees that predate the decision in Rowland v. Christian [Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 Cal. 2d 108 , 70 Cal. Rptr. 97, 443 P.2d 561] , see § 178.03[4].

These points and authorities may be combined with a form of memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel is contending that plaintiff's attention was distracted from an obvious danger. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in § 178.36 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Distraction of Attention

In Henderson v. McGill (1963) 222 Cal. App. 2d 256, 34 Cal. Rptr. 897 , plaintiff, a business invitee, was injured when he tripped over a faucet while leaving defendants' coffee shop in the rain. The faucet was located on a strip of concrete adjacent to the building and between the building and the parking lot. The strip of concrete was covered with an overhang and was used by persons entering and exiting the coffee shop. The faucet was in front of a large glass window and a table was located directly inside. There was also a waist-high water tank beyond the window that protruded out from the wall. The jury returned a verdict in favor of plaintiff and defendants appealed, contending that the faucet was obvious and, therefore, as a matter of law defendants were not liable.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court stated that a possessor is not relieved from liability when the danger, although obvious, was in a place where a person's attention was likely to be diverted from it (222 Cal. App. 2d 256, 260) . The court held that the faucet was not so obvious as a matter of law that it could be reasonably assumed that a person would necessarily see it. The factors militating against observation of the danger were the attention-distracting window with the table just inside, the water heater that a person would try to avoid, and the fact that because the covered strip would most likely be used in the event of rain, the attention of the user would probably be diverted from the pavement (222 Cal. App. 2d 256, 261) .

[b] Attention to Work

In Osborn v. Mission Ready Mix (1990) 224 Cal. App. 3d 104, 273 Cal. Rptr. 457 , a worker and his spouse brought an action for damages for personal injuries and loss of consortium after the worker was injured when he fell on a construction site owned and controlled by the defendant. After trial, during which the defendant took as a position that it had not been negligent because the allegedly dangerous condition of the property was open and obvious, the jury returned a special verdict stating that the defendant had not been negligent in the management of the premises and judgment in favor of the defendant was entered. Plaintiffs moved for new trial, which was denied and appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. An issue considered on appeal was whether an instruction given to the jury was erroneous and prejudicial. The instruction stated that "a business proprietor is not the insurer of the safety of the employees of a supplier and cannot be held liable for an injury resulting from a danger which was obvious or should have been observed in the exercise of ordinary care" (224 Cal. App. 3d 104, 117) . The instruction wasbased on a statement made in an earlier case [Elder v. Pacific Tel. & Tel. Co. (1977) 66 Cal. App. 3d 650, 651-662, 136 Cal. Rptr. 203] , which the court concluded was erroneous dicta (224 Cal. App. 3d 104, 118) . The court pointed out that a worker on the job, doing the job he or she was hired to do, is not required to exercise the same quantum of care that may be required of other invitees. A jury is entitled to balance the plaintiff's necessity against the danger, even if it be assumed that it was an apparent one. This is a factual issue. Thus, the court stated, under certain circumstances, an obvious or apparent risk of danger does not automatically absolve a defendant of liability for injury caused thereby (224 Cal. App. 3d 104, 118-119) , although the obvious nature of a danger may negate any duty to warn (224 Cal. App. 3d 104, 119) . Having concluded that the instruction was erroneous, the court also determined that the instruction was prejudicial because the record demonstrated that the jury was troubled by the instruction that there could be no liability (224 Cal. App. 3d 104, 124) .

§ 178.26 Supporting Contention That Owner or Possessor of Premises Is Liable--Harm Due to Obvious Danger--Person Not Required to Look Fixedly at Walkway

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF, WHILE MAKING USE OF THE WALKWAY ON WHICH HE/SHE WAS INJURED, DID NOT HAVE TO KEEP HIS/HER EYES FIXED ON THE GROUND IN FRONT OF HIM/HER OR BE ON THE CONSTANT LOOKOUT FOR DANGER.

Fixed Look at Walkway and Constant Lookout for Danger Not Required. A person exercising ordinary care and making normal use of a walkway has the right to assume it is in safe condition, and the exercise of ordinary care does not require that the person keep his or her eyes fixed on the ground in front of him or her or be on the constant lookout for danger (Peters v. City & County of San Francisco (1953) 41 Cal. 2d 419, 424, 260 P.2d 55).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of plaintiff's contention that although a danger existing on a walkway on, or adjoining to, defendant's premises was obvious, defendant is still liable because plaintiff was not required to look fixedly at the walkway or be on the constant lookout for danger.

For a discussion of the use of case law defining duties owed to invitees that predate the decision in Rowland v. Christian [Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 Cal. 2d l08, 70 Cal. Rptr. 97, 443 P.2d 561] , see § 178.03[4].

These points and authorities may be combined with a form of a memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel is contending that although the danger was obvious, plaintiff did not have to look fixedly at the walkway or be on the constant lookout for danger. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in § 178.36 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Fixed Look at Walkway and Constant Lookout for Danger Not Required

In Peters v. City & County of San Francisco (1953) 41 Cal. 2d 419, 260 P.2d 55 , plaintiff, an elderly lady, was injured in a fall while walking along a sidewalk abutting defendants' property. Plaintiff sued the property owners and the city of San Francisco. The sidewalk area on which the accident occurred was directly in front of the driveway on the abutting property. The driveway sloped downhill toward the garage and the slope extended out from the building to a point halfway across the sidewalk. Plaintiff was walking along the sidewalk, did not see the depression, and fell. The jury returned a verdict for plaintiff and against the city, but held for the owners of the property against plaintiff. Both plaintiff and the city appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed the judgment as to the owners of the property and affirmed as to the city. The Court held that a misleadinginstruction on the liability of abutting landowners for conditions on sidewalks had been given which, in light of the verdict against the city, was in all probability the reason for the incongruous decision (41 Cal. 2d 419, 424) . The abutting owners argued that even if the instruction was misleading, they were relieved of liability in that the evidence established that plaintiff was negligent in not seeing the depression. The Court responded that it was well settled that in the absence of knowledge to the contrary, a pedestrian making normal use of a public walkway has the right to assume that it is in reasonably safe condition, and that while a pedestrian must use ordinary care, he or she is not required to keep his or her eyes fixed on the ground or be on constant lookout for danger (41 Cal. 2d 419, 424) .

[a] Fixed Look at Walkway and Constant Lookout for Danger Not Required

In Milton v. Montgomery Ward & Co., Inc. (1973) 33 Cal. App. 3d 133, 108 Cal. Rptr. 726 , the jury returned a verdict in favor of plaintiff who slipped on some transparent grease or oil on the floor of defendant's auto service center. Defendant appealed and the court of appeal affirmed. One of defendant's contentions was that the trial court erred in instructing the jury that a person using a walkway is not required in the exercise of ordinary care to look fixedly at the walk in front of him or her or be on the constant lookout for danger, but has the right to assume it is in reasonably safe condition in the absence of knowledge to the contrary. The court held that the instruction was not improper because it was approved for sidewalk cases [see Peters v. City & County of San Francisco (1953) 41 Cal. 2d 419, 424-425, 260 P.2d 55] , and defendant should be held to a standard no lower than that applicable to a city for a public sidewalk (33 Cal. App. 3d 133, 142) .

PLAINTIFF WAS NOT REQUIRED TO MAKE A CRITICAL EXAMINATION OF THE PREMISES, BUT HAD THE RIGHT TO ASSUME THAT REASONABLE INSPECTIONS HAD BEEN MADE AND PROPER PRECAUTIONS HAD BEEN TAKEN BY DEFENDANT _____ [OWNER or POSSESSOR].

Critical Examination Not Required. A person on the premises is not obliged to make a critical examination of the surroundings he or she is about to enter, but has the right to assume that the owner or possessor of the premises has exercised due care in the matter of inspection and in taking proper precautions for the safety of persons entering the premises (Chance v. Lawry's, Inc. (1962) 58 Cal. 2d 368, 373-374, 24 Cal. Rptr. 209, 374 P.2d 185).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of plaintiff's contention that although the danger on defendant's premises was obvious, defendant is still liable because plaintiff was not required to make a critical examination of the surroundings and had the right to assume that defendant had inspected the premises and taken proper precautions for the safety of persons entering the premises.

For a discussion of the use of case law defining duties owed to invitees that predate the decision in Rowland v. Christian [Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 Cal. 2d l08, 70 Cal. Rptr. 97, 443 P.2d 561] , see § 178.03[4].

These points and authorities may be combined with a form of memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel is contending that defendant is liable because he or she failed to inspect his or her premises and to take proper precautions for the safety of persons entering the premises. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in § 178.36 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Critical Examination Not Required

In Chance v. Lawry's, Inc. (1962) 58 Cal. 2d 368, 24 Cal. Rptr. 209, 374 P.2d 185 , plaintiff was injured in a fall into an open planter box in the crowded foyer of defendant's restaurant. The foyer was in the process of being remodeled and the planter box was part of this undertaking. Plaintiff sued the owner and manager of the restaurant, as well as the contractor working on the premises. The jury returned a verdict in favor of plaintiff and all three defendants appealed.

The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment. Defendant restaurant argued on appeal that there was no duty to warn of the planter box because it was so obvious that it could reasonably have been anticipated that a patron would see and apprehend the danger and plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law. The Court held that the question of the obviousness of the danger was a jury question and that plaintiff could not be held to be contributorily negligent as a matter of law (58 Cal. 2d 368, 374) . The Court stated that a business invitee is not obliged to make a critical examination of the surroundings he or she is about to enter, but has the right to assume that those in charge have exercised due care in the matter of inspection, have taken proper precautions for the safety of the patrons, and will use reasonable care in guarding against injury (58 Cal. 2d 368, 373-374) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Critical Examination Not Required

In Celli v. Sports Car Club of Am., Inc. (1972) 29 Cal. App. 3d 511, 105 Cal. Rptr. 904 , three plaintiffs were injured at defendant's sports car racing event by a car that left the track and skidded into the infield of the track where plaintiffs were watching. All three held "pit passes" that allowed them to be in the infield area that was separated from the track by a row of cars parked at right angles to it. The persons holding pit passes watched the race from atop the automobiles or in front of them. The jury returned a verdict in favor of all three plaintiffs, and defendant appealed. The court of appeal affirmed. One of the contentions on appeal was that the trial court refused a proffered instruction on contributory negligence, in that the jury should have been permitted to determine whether or not, in the exercise of ordinary care, the danger should have been discovered. The court stated that defendant's contention overlooked the fact that the patron at a recreation facility is not obliged to make a critical examination of the area he or she is about to use, but has the right to assume that those in charge have exercised due care in the matter of inspections and have taken proper precautions (29 Cal. App. 3d 511, 523) .

17-178 California Points & Authorities § 178.28

§ 178.28 Supporting Contention That Owner or Possessor of Premises Is Liable--Harm Due to Obvious Danger--Practical Necessity to Encounter Obvious Danger

[1] FORM

DEFENDANT OWED A DUTY OF CARE TO PLAINTIFF BECAUSE IT WAS FORESEEABLE THAT EVEN AN OBVIOUS DANGER MAY CAUSE INJURY, IN THAT THE PRACTICAL NECESSITY OF ENCOUNTERING THE DANGER, WHEN WEIGHED AGAINST THE APPARENT RISK, WAS SUCH THAT UNDER THE CIRCUMSTANCES, A PERSON MIGHT CHOOSE TO ENCOUNTER THE DANGER.

A. Obvious Danger May Foreseeably Injure When There Is Practical Necessity to Encounter Danger. It is foreseeable that even an obvious danger may cause injury if the practical necessity of encountering the danger, when weighed against the apparent risk involved, is such that under the circumstances, a person might choose to encounter the danger (Reyes v. Kosha (1998) 65 Cal. App. 4th 451, 461, 76 Cal. Rptr. 2d 457 ; Osborn v. Mission Ready Mix (1990) 224 Cal. App. 3d 104, 118-119, 273 Cal. Rptr. 457).

B. Foreseeability Considered With Burden and Consequence of Duty to Remedy. The foreseeability of injury based on a choice to encounter an obvious danger because of practical necessity, when considered along with various other policy considerations such as the extent of the burden to the defendant and consequences to the community of imposing a duty to remedy such danger, may lead to a legal conclusion that the defendant owes a duty of care to all persons who are foreseeably endangered by his or her conduct, with respect to all risks that make the conduct unreasonably dangerous (Reyes v. Kosha (1998) 65 Cal. App. 4th 451, 461-462, 76 Cal. Rptr. 2d 457 ; Osborn v. Mission Ready Mix (1990) 224 Cal. App. 3d 104, 118-119, 273 Cal. Rptr. 457).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a plaintiff's contention that, despite the fact that the plaintiff encountered an obvious danger that caused his or her injuries, the defendant had a duty of careto safeguard the plaintiff against the risk because it was foreseeable that a person under the circumstance may choose to encounter the danger because of practical necessity.

For a discussion of the policy considerations applicable in determining whether a defendant owes a duty of care to an injured party, see § 178.03[3].

This form may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which the issue of an owner's or possessor's duty to a person who was injured by a dangerous condition on the premises is brought before the court. It may be used in a memorandum of points and authorities in connection with a pretrial motion, such as a demurrer or motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication, or in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in § 178.36 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Obvious Danger May Foreseeably Injure When There Is Practical Necessity to Encounter Danger

In Reyes v. Kosha (1998) 65 Cal. App. 4th 451, 76 Cal. Rptr. 2d 457 , plaintiffs were a migrant farm worker and the surviving widow and children of a deceased second farm worker, while defendant was the employing farmer who permitted his workers to live rent-free in an encampment on the farm in shacks constructed of discarded materials. Plaintiffs brought suit seeking damages for injuries sustained following a fire within the encampment. The plaintiffs alleged, inter alia, general negligence, premises liability, and negligence per se. The trial court granted summary judgment for defendant, finding that, as to the actions for negligence and premises liability, the farmer owed no common-law duty of care to warn about or make safe the conditions at the encampment, because the workers voluntarily chose to reside there and the dangers were obvious.

The court of appeal reversed the summary judgment, holding that defendant owed a common-law duty of care to provide reasonably safe housing for his employees under the circumstances. The court of appeal found that the risk of fire was highly foreseeable, given that the workers lived in highly flammable structures and used an open flame for lighting and heating. In addition to the foreseeability of the risk, the court applied the Rowland factors and found that each of the factors militated in favor of imposing a duty of care under the circumstances (65 Cal. App. 4th 451, 458-459) . The court distinguished prior cases in which the farmer either had no knowledge of an encampment or was only an adjoining landowner without sufficient control over the camp (65 Cal. App. 4th 451, 459-461) . Addressing the issue of the obviousness of the risk of fire, the court recognized the general rule a landowner owes no duty to remedy or warn of obvious dangers on the property, but also restated the exception that, if the practical necessity of encountering the danger, when weighed against the apparent risk, is such that a person under the circumstances might choose to encounter the danger, a duty may exist (65 Cal. App. 4th 451, 461) .

The facts and procedural background of Osborn v. Mission Ready Mix (1990) 224 Cal. App. 3d 104, 273 Cal. Rptr. 457 , are discussed in § 178.25[3][b]. The court of appeal, in holding that the trial court's instruction to the effect that a contractor or possessor of land cannot be liable for an injury caused by an obvious or observable danger was erroneous and prejudicial, stated that it is foreseeable that even an obvious danger may cause injury, if the practical necessity of encountering the danger, when weighed against the apparent risk involved, is such that under the circumstances, a person might choose to encounter the danger (224 Cal. App. 3d 104, 121) .

[b] Foreseeability Considered With Burden and Consequence of Duty to Remedy

The facts and procedural background of Reyes v. Kosha (1998) 65 Cal. App. 4th 451, 76 Cal. Rptr. 2d 457 , are discussed in § 178.28[3][a]. In concluding that a duty to provide reasonably safe housing could be imposed on the farmer under the circumstances, the court recognized the practical necessity to the workers of living rent-free in the encampment, and that when weighed against the apparent risk involved, it was reasonably foreseeable that the workers would choose to encounter the danger. This foreseeability, combined with the other policy considerations embodied in the Rowland factors, led to the legal conclusion that the farmerowed a duty in spite of the obviousness of the danger (65 Cal. App. 4th 451, 461-462) .

The facts and procedural background of Osborn v. Mission Ready Mix (1990) 224 Cal. App. 3d 104, 273 Cal. Rptr. 457 , are discussed in § 178.25[3][b]. The court of appeal held that the foreseeability of injury (based on a choice to encounter an obvious danger because of practical necessity), when considered along with various other policy considerations such as the extent of the burden to the defendant and consequence to the community of imposing a duty to remedy such danger, may lead to the legal conclusion that the defendant owes a duty of care to all persons who are foreseeably endangered by his or her conduct, with respect to all risks that make the conduct unreasonably dangerous (224 Cal. App. 3d 104, 121) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Obvious Danger May Foreseeably Injure if There Is Practical Necessity to Encounter Danger

In Martinez v. Chippewa Enters., Inc. (2004) 121 Cal. App. 4th 1179, 18 Cal. Rptr. 3d 152 , the plaintiff slipped and fell in water that had gathered on the sidewalk and driveway leading into a commercial building. the plaintiff sued the landowner, but the trial court granted summary judgment for the defendant on the grounds that the danger from the water was open and obvious. The court of appeal reversed. The court held that even though the parties agreed that the danger from the water was obvious, this only relieved the defendant of the duty to warn and did not necessarily relieve defendant of the duty to remedy the danger. The court noted, for example, that it appeared from pictures that the wet pavement may have provided a primary or even sole means of entering the building, and under the circumstances it may have been foreseeable that despite the hazard, people such as the plaintiff would still have attempted to cross the wet pavement out of necessity. Given this possibility for finding that a duty of care still existed, and unresolved issues such as the defendant's knowledge of the hazard and the source of the water, the trial court erred in granting summary judgment to the defendant (121 Cal. App. 4th 1179, 1184-1185) .

§ 178.29 Supporting Contention That Owner or Possessor of Premises Is Liable--Dangerous Condition on Abutting Public Sidewalk That Was Altered or Constructed for Benefit of Property and Independent Use

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT _____ [OWNER or POSSESSOR] IS LIABLE FOR THE INJURIES TO PLAINTIFF RESULTING FROM THE DANGEROUS CONDITION ON THE PUBLIC SIDEWALK ABUTTING DEFENDANT'S PROPERTY BECAUSE THE SIDEWALK WAS _____ [ALTERED or CONSTRUCTED] FOR THE PROPERTY'S BENEFIT AND SERVES A USE INDEPENDENT FROM THE ORDINARY USE OF A SIDEWALK.

A. Liability for Dangerous Condition of Abutting Sidewalk. An abutting owner or possessor may be held liable for the dangerous condition of portions of the public sidewalk that have been altered or constructed for the benefit of his or her property and that serve a use independent from the ordinary and accustomed use for which sidewalks are designed (Peters v. City & County of San Francisco (1953) 41 Cal. 2d 419, 423, 260 P.2d 55).

[Optional] B. Duty to Maintain Runs With Land. The duty to maintain portions of a sidewalk that have been altered for the benefit of the property runs with the land, and the owner or possessor cannot escape liability if the dangerous condition was created by his or her predecessors in title (Peters v. City & County of San Francisco (1953) 41 Cal. 2d 419, 423, 260 P.2d 55).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of plaintiff's contention that defendant owner or possessor is liable for an injury resulting from a dangerous condition on a sidewalk abutting defendant's property when the sidewalk was altered or constructed for the property's benefit and serves a use independent from the ordinary use for sidewalks.

These points and authorities may be combined with a form of memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue of liability for a dangerouscondition of an abutting sidewalk. Optional Paragraph B should be used when the alteration or construction was made at the request of a predecessor in title to the present possessor.

[b] Argument

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in § 178.37 may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Liability for Dangerous Condition of Abutting Sidewalk

The facts and procedural background of Peters v. City & County of San Francisco (1953) 41 Cal. 2d 419, 260 P.2d 55 , are discussed in § 178.26[3][a]. The Supreme Court reversed a judgment entered against plaintiff and in favor of the owners of property abutting a public sidewalk. Plaintiff was injured when she fell into a depression in the sidewalk that was an extension of the driveway constructed by the owners' predecessors in interest. The driveway sloped down from street level because the level of the garage was below the street. The slope of the driveway extended out to the middle of the sidewalk. The Court stated that an abutting landowner may be held liable for the dangerous condition of portions of the public sidewalk that have been altered or constructed for the benefit of his or her property and that serve a use independent from the ordinary and accustomed use for which sidewalks are designed. The Court held that the jury instructions given were erroneous in that they implied that only the property owner who created a dangerous condition was liable. The Court stated that the duty to maintain portions of a sidewalk that have been altered for the benefit of the property runs with the land, and a property owner cannot avoid liability on the ground that the condition was created by, or at the request of, his or her predecessors in title (41 Cal. 2d 419, 423) .

[b] Duty to Maintain Runs With Land

Peters v. City & County of San Francisco (1953) 41 Cal. 2d 419, 260 P.2d 55 , is discussed in § 178.29[3][a].

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Liability for Dangerous Condition of Abutting Sidewalk

In Sexton v. Brooks (1952) 39 Cal. 2d 153, 245 P.2d 496 , plaintiff was injured in a fall in front of a building located on property owned by defendant, of which a portion extending from the building line to the street had been dedicated for public use prior to defendant's ownership. The city had constructed a sidewalk along the street, but had left an unpaved 18-inch strip between the building line and the sidewalk. Plaintiff tripped on a portion of the strip that was not level with the sidewalk. The jury returned a verdict for plaintiff and the Supreme Court reversed the judgment on the basis of error in jury instructions, partly because there were no instructions dealing with the duty of an abutting landowner for a dangerous condition of a public sidewalk (39 Cal. 2d 153, 158) . In the absence of a statute, the Court stated that there is no duty on the part of a landowner to maintain in a safe condition a public street abutting the property. However, an abutting owner is liable for the condition of portions of the public sidewalk that he or she has altered or constructed for the benefit of the property and that serve a use independent from the ordinary and accustomed use for which sidewalks are designed (39 Cal. 2d 153, 157) .

§ 178.30 Supporting Contention That Owner or Possessor of Premises Is Liable--Injury Resulted From Plaintiff's Use of Premises Known to Be Dangerous--Plaintiff's Secondary Assumption of Risk Does Not Bar Recovery

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF'S CHOOSING TO ENCOUNTER THE RISK OF USING A PORTION OF THE PREMISES THAT PLAINTIFF KNEW TO BE DANGEROUS DOES NOT RELIEVE DEFENDANT _____ [OWNER or POSSESSOR] FROM LIABILITY BECAUSE DEFENDANT'S DUTY OF CARE TO PLAINTIFF TO ELIMINATE THE DANGER, AND BREACH OF THAT DUTY OF CARE, MAKES PLAIN TIFF'S ACTIONS SECONDARY ASSUMPTION OF RISK AT MOST, WHICH DOES NOT BAR RECOVERY.

Secondary Assumption of Risk of Dangerous Conditions Does Not Bar Recovery. A plaintiff who uses a portion of the defendant's property that both the plaintiff and the defendant know to be dangerous is not barred from recovery under the doctrine of primary assumption of risk because the defendant has a duty of care to the plaintiff to eliminate dangers on its property and has breached that duty by maintaining a portion of its property in a dangerous condition; under these circumstances, the plaintiff's conduct is, at most, secondary assumption of risk, and plantiff's damages would be apportioned on a comparative fault basis (Curties v. Hill Top Developers, Inc. (1993) 14 Cal. App. 4th 1651, 1655-1656, 18 Cal. Rptr. 2d 445).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a defendant owner or possessor is liable for an injury resulting from a dangerous condition on its premises, despite the plaintiff's knowing about the risk but choosing to encounter it by using that portion of the premises. Under the doctrine of secondary assumption of risk, a plaintiff who assumes a known risk is not barred from recovery if the defendant breached a duty of care owed to the plaintiff, such as the duty to eliminate dangerous conditions on the defendant's premises. Instead, the plaintiff's damages would be apportioned on a comparative fault basis [see Curties v. Hill Top Developers, Inc. (1993) 14 Cal. App. 4th 1651, 1655-1656, 18 Cal. Rptr. 2d 445] .

These points and authorities would be submitted along with appropriate points and authorities supporting the contention that the defendant was liable to the plaintiff because the defendant had a duty of care and breached that duty of care [see, e.g., §§ 178.20, 178.23]. Thus, they would support the contention that any fault by the plaintiff in assuming the risk would not result in the elimination of that liability but would instead be treated as comparative negligence.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of secondary assumption of risk. For example, this form may be used to oppose a defendant's motion for summary judgment [see Code. Civ. Proc. § 437c]. It may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Secondary Assumption of Risk of Dangerous Conditions Does Not Bar Recovery

Curties v. Hill Top Developers, Inc. (1993) 14 Cal. App. 4th 1651, 18 Cal. Rptr. 2d 445 , was an action brought by a resident of an apartment complex against the owner of the apartment complex for damages for personal injuries suffered when the resident slipped and fell on a sloping lawn between his apartment and the complex's garbage dumpster. Both the plaintiff and the defendant knew that other people had previously slipped and fallen on the lawn, but the defendant had not taken any steps to change the slope. After the trial court instructed the jury regarding reasonable implied assumption of risk, the jury determined that the plaintiff assumed the risk of injury, and the trial court entered judgment for the defendant.

Plaintiff appealed and the court of appeal reversed, holding that the jury had been improperly instructed. Following the lead opinion in Knight v. Jewett [Knight v. Jewett (1992) 3 Cal. 4th 296, 314-315, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 2, 834 P.2d 696 ; see § 178.36[2][b]], the court of appeal held that implied assumption of the risk would not apply to bar the plaintiff's recovery completely because the plaintiff's case fell into the secondary assumption of risk category. The court noted that the evidence showed and the jury found that the defendant had a duty of care to the plaintiff to eliminate dangerous conditions on its property and breached that duty by maintaining the sloping lawn despite reports of earlier accidents, and the plaintiff knowingly proceeded to encounter the risk created by the defendant (14 Cal. App. 4th 1651, 1656) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Secondary Assumption of Risk of Dangerous Conditions Does Not Bar Recovery

In Bush v. Parents Without Partners (1993) 17 Cal. App. 4th 322, 21 Cal. Rptr. 2d 178 , the court of appeal reversed summary judgment for defendants in an action for personal injuries brought by plaintiff againstthe sponsor of a dance and the owners of the premises at which the dance took place. Soap flakes had been applied to the dance floor to make it easier for dancers' feet to slide, and the plaintiff waited until the floor had been swept before attempting to dance. However, some of the flakes remained on the floor. The court applied the doctrine of secondary assumption of risk, analogizing this situation to the example used by the Supreme Court in Knight v. Jewett [Knight v. Jewett (1992) 3

Cal. 4th 296, 315-316, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 2, 834 P.2d 696] of a ski resort that has no duty to remove moguls from a ski run, because the moguls are an inherent part of the sport of skiing, but does have a duty to maintain its tow ropes in safe working condition. The court held that the defendants had no legal duty to protect the plaintiff against the inherent risks of social dancing, which may include falling, but they did have a duty to use due care not to increase the risk by making the floor too slippery (17 Cal. App. 4th 322, 329) .

17-178 California Points & Authorities § 178.31

§ 178.31 Supporting Contention That Former Owner or Possessor of Premises Is Liable--Concealment of or Failure to Disclose Dangerous Condition

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT IS LIABLE AS THE FORMER _____ [OWNER or POSSESSOR] OF THE PREMISES BECAUSE DEFENDANT, AS VENDOR, _____[CONCEALED or FAILED TO DISCLOSE] TO HIS/HER/ITS VENDEE A CONDITION INVOLVING UNREASONABLE RISK TO PERSONS ON THE PREMISES, THE VENDEE DID NOT KNOW OR HAVE REASON TO KNOW OF THE CONDITION OR THE RISK INVOLVED, AND DEFENDANT KNEW OR HAD REASON TO KNOW OF THE CONDITION, REALIZED OR SHOULD HAVE REALIZED THE RISK INVOLVED, AND HAD REASON TO BELIEVE THAT THE VENDEE WOULD NOT DISCOVER THE CONDITION OR REALIZE THE RISK.

A. Liability of Former Owner or Possessor for Dangerous Condition. A former owner or possessor of premises is liable for physical harm that was caused by a condition on the premises and that occurred after the former owner or possessor had relinquished ownership, possession, and control, if: (1) the former owner or possessor, as vendor of the premises, concealed or failed to disclose to the vendee a condition that involved unreasonable risk to persons on the premises; (2) the vendee did not know or have reason to know of the condition or risk involved; and (3) the former owner or possessor knew or had reason to know of the condition and realized or should have realized the risk involved, and had reason to believe that the vendee would not discover the condition or realize the risk (Lorenzen-Hughes v. MacElhenny, Levy & Co. (1994) 24 Cal. App. 4th 1684, 1688-1689, 30 Cal. Rptr. 2d 210).

B. Duration of Liability. If the vendor actively conceals the condition, liability continues until the vendee discovers and has reasonable opportunity to take effective precautions against it; otherwise, liability continues only until the vendee has had reasonable opportunity to discover the condition and take such precautions (Lorenzen-Hughes v. MacElhenny, Levy & Co. (1994) 24 Cal. App. 4th 1684, 1688-1689, 30 Cal. Rptr. 2d 210).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of plaintiff's contention that a former owner or possessor of premises is liable for injuries to plaintiff caused by a dangerous condition on the premises because defendant, as vendor of the premises, knew about the condition and the risk it entailed, knew that the vendee was unaware of the condition or the risk and unlikely to discover the condition or realize the risk, and concealed or failed to disclose the condition to the vendee.

These points and authorities may be combined with a form of memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which the issue of defendant's liability arises, or combined with other forms in this chapter, as appropriate. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

[c] Liability of Former Owner or Possessor and Summary Judgment

Ownership, possession, or control is a fundamental requirement for ascribing liability to a defendant for the defective or dangerous condition of property. Therefore, summary judgment is proper if defendant has unequivocally established the absence of ownership, possession, and control [Preston v. Goldman (1986), 42 Cal. 3d 108, 119, 227 Cal. Rptr. 817, 720 P.2d 476] . However, once the burden of proof has shifted to plaintiff [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(n)(2)], plaintiff may defeat the motion for summary judgment if plaintiff can prove that defendant either was the builder, contractor, or developer of the entire property [see § 178.32] or that defendant deliberately concealed, or failed to disclose, the dangerous condition [Lorenzen-Hughes v. MacElhenny, Levy & Co. (1994) 24 Cal. App. 4th 1684, 1687-1689, 30 Cal. Rptr. 2d 210] .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Liability of Former Owner or Possessor for Dangerous Condition

In Lorenzen-Hughes v. MacElhenny, Levy & Co. (1994) 24 Cal. App. 4th 1684, 30 Cal. Rptr. 2d 210 , plaintiff was injured at work when a cabinet fell from the wall. The cabinet had been installed years before by a contractor doing a minor remodeling project for defendant, the previous tenant, who had transferred its assets and lease to plaintiff's employer a few years after the remodeling was completed. Plaintiff brought suit against defendant, who moved for summary judgment on the grounds that it had relinquished possession and control of the premises years before the accident occurred. The trial court granted defendant's motion, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that a transferor of an interest in real property is not liable for latent defects in the property that the transferor did not know about and had no reason to believe existed (24 Cal. App. 4th 1684, 1685) . The court noted that nearly all states, including California, follow the rule of caveat emptor (buyer beware) and absolve predecessor owners of liability for negligent improvements made to the property once they have relinquished ownership and control of the property (24 Cal. App. 4th 1684, 1687) . The court acknowledged two exceptions to this general rule: first, the liability of a predecessor owner, such as a commercial developer, who was the contractor or builder of the entire property, and second, the provisions of Restatement (Second) of Torts, § 353, which subject a vendor to liability for injuries caused by a dangerous condition after the vendee takes possession if the vendor conceals or fails to disclose the condition, the vendee does not know or have reason to know of the condition or the risk it involves, and the vendor knows or has reason to know of the condition, realizes or should realize the risk involved, and has reason to believe the vendee will not discover the condition or realize the risk. In this case, the defendant merely had a cabinet installed and did not develop the entire property. By the plaintiff's own admission, no one could have known that the cabinet had not been properly attached to the wall until it fell. Therefore, neither exception applied to defendant and defendant could not be liable (24 Cal. App. 4th 1684, 1688-1689) .

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of plaintiff's contention that a former owner or possessor of premises is liable for injuries to plaintiff caused by a dangerous condition on the premises because defendant was the contractor, builder, or developer of the entire property.

These points and authorities may be combined with a form of memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which the issue of defendant's liability arises, or combined with other forms in this chapter, as appropriate. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

[c] Liability of Former Owner or Possessor and Summary Judgment

Ownership, possession, or control is a fundamental requirement for ascribing liability to a defendant for the defective or dangerous condition of property. Therefore, summary judgment is proper if defendant has unequivocally established the absence of ownership, possession, and control [*Preston v. Goldman (1986), 42 Cal. 3d 108, 119, 227 Cal. [2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a contention that defendant failed to act as a reasonable person in the management of his or her property in light of the probability of injury to others. This form is based on the ground that the harm to plaintiff was not foreseeable in light of plaintiff's status on the premises at the time of injury. For example, while it appears that there is a duty to warn a licensee of a known concealed danger that the possessor knows the licensee is about to encounter [Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 Cal. 2d 108, 119, 70 Cal. Rptr. 97, 443 P.2d 561] , the duty on the part of a landlord owed to an invitee, protecting the invitee from the criminal conduct of third personshas not been extended to a licensee [Totten v. More Oakland Residential Hous., Inc. (1976) 63 Cal. App. 3d 538, 544-546, 134 Cal. Rptr. 29 (discussed in § 178.33[4][a])].

For a discussion of the use of case law defining duties owed to persons on premises that predates the decision in Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 Cal. 2d 108, 70 Cal. Rptr. 97, 443 P.2d 561 , see § 178.03[4].

These points and authorities may be combined with a form of memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel is responding to the contention that the harm to plaintiff was foreseeable in light of plaintiff's status on the premises at the time of injury. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities in § 178.20 that the harm to plaintiff was foreseeable.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss facts relating to the status of plaintiff on the premises at the time of injury, including the circumstances surrounding plaintiff's entry on the premises or a certain portion thereof, and should show how the plaintiff's injury was not foreseeable in light of these facts.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Status as Licensee

The facts and procedural background of Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 Cal. 2d 108, 70 Cal. Rptr. 97, 443 P.2d 561 , are discussed in § 178.20[3][a]. The Supreme Court reversed a summary judgment in favor of a tenant who failed to warn a social guest of a broken faucet. Plaintiff was classified as a licensee, a person to whom a duty to warn of a known concealed danger had previously not been owed. In discussing the classifications of persons on the premises, the Court stated that a licensee is a person like a social guest who is not an invitee and who is privileged to enter or remain on the premises by virtue of the possessor's consent (69 Cal. 2d 108, 113) .

[b] Status as Trespasser

In Hamakawa v. Crescent Wharf & Warehouse Co. (1935) 4 Cal. 2d 499, 50 P.2d 803 , plaintiff was injured while walking on a balcony of a warehouse toward a ship that was docked at a municipal pier. Plaintiff had been invited by a crew member of the ship to come aboard to look at some fish. Defendant was a stevedoring company loading cargo from the balcony of the warehouse to the ship. Plaintiff was injured when an empty sling on the cable being used to load the ship hit a bale of paper on the balcony that in turn fell on plaintiff. The evidence at trial disclosed that defendant had permission from the corporation in control of the docks to load the material, that defendant had no knowledge of plaintiff's presence, that all visitors to the ship were required to obtain a permit from the office of the corporation, and that visitors who obtained a permit were conducted to the ship by way of a route that did not pass through the territory occupied by defendant. The jury returned a verdict for plaintiff, and defendant moved for a judgment notwithstanding the verdict. Defendant's motion was denied, and defendant appealed. The Supreme Court reversed the order denying defendant's motion.

The Court concluded that since plaintiff wandered into a portion of the premises where he had no right to be, he was a trespasser on the portion of the premises occupied by defendant (4 Cal. 2d 499, 503) . No consent was given by defendant to plaintiff to be where he was at the time of injury, and plaintiff was there for a private purpose having nothing to do with the business of defendant or the ship (4 Cal. 2d 499, 501) . Since plaintiff was a trespasser, the defendant owed plaintiff a duty to refrain from willful or wanton conduct and to conduct its activities with reasonable care after knowledge of plaintiff's presence or knowledge of facts from which defendant should have known of plaintiff's presence (4 Cal. 2d 499, 501-502) . Based on the facts in evidence, the Court stated that plaintiff was not entitled to recover for negligence (4 Cal. 2d 499, 503) .

In Bisetti v. United Refrigeration Corp. (1985) 174 Cal. App. 3d 643, 220 Cal. Rptr. 209 , plaintiff illegally entered land owned by defendant landlord and leased to defendant tenant by climbing through a hole in the fence surrounding the premises. While on the premises, plaintiff climbed onto a plywood platform covering a vat of caustic chemicals and was severely burned when the board broke and he fell into the vat. Plaintiff brought an action for damages against both defendants. The trial court granted summary judgment in favor of defendant landlord. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court relied on the standards of landlord liability for injuries on leased property articulated in Uccello v. Laudenslayer (1975) 44 Cal. App. 3d 504, 118 Cal. Rptr. 741 . When the landlord retains a recognizable degree of control over a dangerous condition on the premises, the landlord has the duty to use ordinary care to eliminate the condition and may be liable for injury caused by failure to act. The injured party's status as a trespasser does not in and of itself preclude liability, although that status is a proper consideration in determining liability. Plaintiff was unable to show either that existence of the vats on the property or the existence of the hole in the fence was adangerous condition or defendant landlord's knowledge of them. There was nothing to indicate that any person would have been endangered by the vats unless that individual came close enough to them so as to touch and come in contact with their contents (174 Cal. App. 3d 643, 647-651) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Status as Licensee

Totten v. More Oakland Residential Hous., Inc. (1976) 63 Cal. App. 3d 538, 134 Cal. Rptr. 29 , is discussed in § 178.65[3][a]. The court held that there was no duty on the part of the landlord to protect plaintiff, a social guest of a tenant who was a licensee, from the criminal conduct of third persons (63 Cal. App. 3d 538, 545-546) . In doing so, the court pointed out that plaintiff was not a public invitee since the premises was not open to the public and was not a business visitor because she was not entering the premises at the invitation of defendant for any purpose connected with business dealing (63 Cal. App. 3d 538, 543) .

§ 178.34 Opposing Contention That Owner or Possessor of Premises Is Liable--Duty of Care Does Not Extend to Means of Ingress and Egress Over Which Owner or Possessor Has No Control

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT _____ [OWNER'S or POSSESSOR'S] DUTY OF DUE CARE OVER THE PREMISES DOES NOT EXTEND TO THE MEANS OF INGRESS AND EGRESS OVER WHICH DEFENDANT HAS NO CONTROL.

No Control Over Means of Ingress or Egress. An owner's or a possessor's duty of care toward persons on the premises does not extend to the means of ingress and egress that the persons are led to employ if the owner or possessor has no control over the avenues of approach (Nevarez v. Thriftmart, Inc. (1970) 7 Cal. App. 3d 799, 804, 806, 87 Cal. Rptr. 50).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted by defendant owner or possessor in opposition to plaintiff's contention that defendant's duty to exercise reasonable care towards persons on the premises extends to an area either on or off the premises that plaintiff was led to utilize as a means of ingress or egress. This form is based on the ground that defendant had no control over such means of approach.

These points and authorities may be combined with a form of memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel is responding to the contention that defendant's duty of care extends to the means of ingress and egress. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss how and why the element of control over the means of ingress and egress was lacking. The element of control is more likely to be found lacking if the means of ingress and egress is not on the premises possessed by defendant [see, e.g., Nevarez v. Thriftmart, Inc. (1970) 7 Cal. App. 3d 799, 804, 806, 87 Cal. Rptr. 50 ; see also § 178.34[3][a]]. Indeed, it may be unlikely that a party can successfully contend that the party had no control over his or her own premises unless the party is a landlord out of possession and the area is not a common area [see, e.g., Johnston v. De La Guerra Props., Inc. (1946) 28 Cal. 2d 394, 399, 170 P.2d 5 ; see also § 178.21[3][a]].

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities in §§ 178.20 and 178.21.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Control Over Means of Ingress or Egress

In Nevarez v. Thriftmart, Inc. (1970) 7 Cal. App. 3d 799, 87 Cal. Rptr. 50 , the court of appeal reversed a judgment entered in favor of plaintiff following a jury trial and directed entry of a judgment notwithstanding the verdict in favor of defendant. Plaintiff, a three-year-old boy, had been hit by a car while running across the street in front of a shopping center to an opening day carnival being held by defendant in the center.

The court of appeal, in reversing the judgment, held that the duty on the part of defendant toward the child did not extend to neighboring streets over which it had no control (7 Cal. App. 3d 799, 805) . The court distinguished the cases that held that street vendors owed a duty to a patronto guard against dangerous conditions on public streets [see, e.g., Schwartz v. Helms Bakery Ltd. (1967) 67 Cal. 2d 232, 239-243, 60 Cal. Rptr. 510, 430 P.2d 68 ; Ellis v. Trowen Frozen Prods., Inc. (1968) 264 Cal. App. 2d 499, 503, 70 Cal. Rptr. 487 ; see also § 178.21[4][a]] (7 Cal. App. 3d 799, 805-806) . Unlike defendant, a street vendor invites people to do business with him or her on the public street and the patrons arrive along reasonably predictable routes. In addition, even though there is no control over traffic on a public street, there is control over the avenues of approach to the street vendor's business, in that a street vendor can control his or her movement and where he or she will stop and do business (7 Cal. App. 3d 799, 805) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] No Control Over Means of Ingress or Egress

In Gray v. America W. Airlines, Inc. (1989) 209 Cal. App. 3d 76, 256 Cal. Rptr. 877 , plaintiff was an airline passenger who was injured when she tripped over a box left by a fellow passenger in the concourse area adjacent to the airline ticket counter. She sued the airline and the port district for her personal injuries based on premises liability. The trial court granted defendant airline's motion for summary judgment and plaintiff appealed. The court of appeal held that the trial court correctly ruled as a matter of law that the airline owed no duty to the plaintiff to protect her against a risk obvious to both the plaintiff and the airline, as the showing of the extent of the airline's control over the concourse area did not justify the imposition of a duty based on foreseeability of this type of accident. The court stated that, because of the transient nature of the event, some percentage of passengers can be expected to handle their belongings negligently and because of the obvious burden that would be placed on an airline to prevent all such instances of future harm to its customers were such a duty imposed, no duty can be imposed on the businesses serving travelers to safeguard them from tripping on another's luggage in busy common areas like an airport concourse. The area, according to the court, was more analogous to a public street or sidewalk than to the premises of a private business (209 Cal. App. 3d 76, 84-85) .

In Donnell v. California W. Sch. of Law (1988) 200 Cal. App. 3d 715, 246 Cal. Rptr. 199 , plaintiff law student, after leaving the school's library at night and attempting to intercept an auto break-in, was criminally assaulted and stabbed on the city-owned sidewalk bordering the school. He sued the school for actual and punitive damages based on negligence, "conscious disregard of safety," and negligent infliction of emotional distress. His wife sued for damages for loss of consortium. Plaintiffs contended that the school had a duty to take reasonable steps to protect its invitees from foreseeable criminal assaults on sidewalks giving immediate access to its building (200 Cal. App. 3d 715, 720) . The trial court granted defendant's motion for summary judgment, and plaintiffs appealed. The court of appeal affirmed. The court said that a defendant cannot be held liable for the defective or dangerous condition of property which it does not own, possess, or control, and that summary judgment is proper if absence of ownership, possession, or control has been unequivocally established (200 Cal. App. 3d 715, 720) . The court further stated that the law of premises liability does not extend so far as to hold the school liable merely because its property adjoins dangerous property and it took no action to influence or affect the condition of the adjoining property (200 Cal. App. 3d 715, 720) . The court distinguished those cases imposing liability when the defendant's business activities affirmatively created a dangerous physical condition on the sidewalk, when the sidewalk was modified or built specifically to benefit the defendant's property, when the defendant assumed responsibility for or exercised any control over the sidewalk, and when the defendant's activity created the dangerous condition on adjoining property which was within the range of the defendant's reasonable supervision and control (200 Cal. App. 3d 715, 720-723) . The court concluded tht premises liability is based on ownership, possession, or control, that the mere possibility of influencing or affecting the condition of property owned or possessed by others does not constitute control of such property, and that the existing standard for premises liability, based on ownership, possession, or control, provides predictability and reasonably clear limits (200 Cal. App. 3d 715, 725-726) .

Steinmetz v. Stockton City Chamber of Commerce (1985) 169 Cal. App. 3d 1142, 214 Cal. Rptr. 405 , was a wrongful death action in which the decedent was murdered on returning to her car, which she had left in a parking area of an industrial park that was not part of the premises leased by defendant. Plaintiffs contended that defendants breached a duty owing to the decedent as a business invitee in failing to provide a safe place for her to park her car while she was on defendant's premises, and that the lack of safety precautions in the parking areas contributed to decedent's death. The trial court granted defendants' motion for summary judgment, and the court of appeal affirmed, holding that defendants did not owe any duty of care to an invitee to prevent an injury occurring on premises they neither owned, possessed, nor controlled (169 Cal. App. 3d 1142, 1147-1148) .

17-178 California Points & Authorities § 178.35

§ 178.35 Opposing Contention That Owner or Possessor of Premises Is Liable--Duty of Care Does Not Extend to Adjacent Property Not Under Control of Owner or Possessor

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT _____ [OWNER or POSSESSOR] IS NOT LIABLE FOR THE HARM TO PLAINTIFF BECAUSE DEFENDANT'S DUTY OF DUE CARE DOES NOT EXTEND TO ADJACENT PROPERTY OVER WHICH THE DEFENDANT EXERCISES NO CONTROL.

A. No Duty to Protect Users of Adjacent Property Not Controlled by Defendant. An owner or possessor of property has no duty of care to keep adjacent premises safe for users of that adjacent property, if the owner or possessor exercises no actual or apparent control of the adjacent property, and if the owner did not create the condition making the adjacent property unsafe (Swann v. Olivier (1994) 22 Cal. App. 4th 1324, 1329-1330, 28 Cal. Rptr. 2d 23 ; disapproved on other grounds, Alcaraz v. Vece (1997) 14 Cal. 4th 1149, 60 Cal. Rptr. 2d 448 ; see Lucas v. George T.R. Murai Farms, Inc. (1993) 15 Cal. App. 4th 1578, 1587-1590, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 436).

[Optional] B. No Duty to Protect Users of Adjacent Public Streets From Distractions. An owner or possessor of property has no duty of care to ensure that persons using adjacent public streets are not distracted by activities occurring on the property, either by not holding activities that would distract passing motorists or by erecting and maintaining a barrier to shield the activities from the view of passing motorists (Lompoc Unified Sch. Dist. v. Superior Court (1993) 20 Cal. App. 4th 1688, 1694, 1697, 26 Cal. Rptr. 2d 122).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted by defendant owner or possessor in opposition to plaintiff's contention that defendant's duty to exercise reasonable care towards persons on the premises extends to property adjoining defendant's premises. This form is based on the grounds that defendant exercised no control over the adjacent property, derived no special commercial benefit from the adjacent property, and did not create the conditions that made the adjacent property unsafe. Optional Paragraph B should be used if plaintiff contends that defendant had a duty to users of adjacent streets either to refrain from holding activities on defendant's premises that could distract passing motorists or to erect and maintain a distraction barrier to screen those activities from view.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of defendant's lack of duty to make adjoining premises safe. For example, this form may be used to support defendant's motion for summary judgment [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c]. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion and forms relating to the duty of care of the owner or possessor of premises, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 421, Premises Liability (Matthew Bender).

[d] Opposing Points and Authorities

If appropriate, the points and authorities in § 178.22 may be used to oppose these points and authorities. In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be used to oppose the contention supported by the points and authorities in §§ 178.20 and 178.60.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Duty to Protect Users of Adjacent Property Not Controlled by Defendant

In Swann v. Olivier (1994) 22 Cal. App. 4th 1324, 28 Cal. Rptr. 2d 23 , plaintiff attended a party held at a residential community that included a private beach. Plaintiff was injured in the ocean surf beyond the high tide line that marked the border of the community's private property. The community's rules and regulations included a provision cautioning residents and guests of the absence of lifeguards and the presence of ripcurrents. Plaintiff brought suit against the community's homeowners' association for failing to warn him of the hazards of the ocean surf. The trial court granted summary judgment in favor of defendant, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal upheld the trial court, holding that the owners of a private beach are not responsible for injuries taking place in the ocean because a premises owner is not liable for the defective or dangerous condition of property that the owner does not own, possess, or control (22 Cal. App. 4th 1324, 1326) . The court noted that the general rule of nonliability for adjacent premises one does not own or possess has only two exceptions--first, liability because one has both received a special commercial benefit from the adjacent property and has had direct or de facto control over it, and second, liability for dangers on the adjacent property that one has actually created (22 Cal. App. 4th 1324, 1329-1330) . Neither exception applied to plaintiff's situation, because defendants had not created the hazards of the ocean surf and any thought that anyone could control the ocean was out of the question and ludicrous (22 Cal. App. 4th 1324, 1333) . The fact that defendant may have known of the hazards of the ocean surf did not oblige it to warn plaintiff; defendants' situation was analogous to that of homeowners whose land borders a busy street and who have no duty to warn their guests of that fact (22 Cal. App. 4th 1324, 1333 n. 11).

NOTE:

Swann has been criticized by the Supreme Court's decision in Alcaraz v. Vece [Alcaraz v. Vece (1997) 14 Cal. 4th 1149, 60 Cal. Rptr. 2d 448] , in which the Court stated that if a visitor is injured on property controlled by a defendant, liability does not depend upon whether the defendant derived a commercial benefit from the property. The Court specifically disapproved of any language to the contrary in Swann.

Lucas v. George T.R. Murai Farms, Inc. (1993) 15 Cal. App. 4th 1578, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 436 , was an action for personal injuries and wrongful death brought by migrant workers and their decedents against several farm owners, one of which employed the workers. The workers were living in makeshift housing that they lighted with candles, despite knowing that this practice was dangerous. They were injured and killed when their makeshift housing, which was part of a migrant workers' camp located on property adjacent to the farms, caught fire. The trial court granted summary judgment in favor of defendants. Plaintiffs appealed to the court of appeal.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that defendants had no duty to make the premises where the fire occurred safe because they neither owned nor possessed this property and they had no actual or apparent control over this adjacent property (15 Cal. App. 4th 1578, 1587-1590) . One defendant did not even know about the existence of the camp (15 Cal. App. 4th 1578, 1588) . Although a security service hired by defendants regularly patrolled the camp as well as defendants' property, defendants had never requested it to patrol the camp (15 Cal. App. 4th 1578, 1588) . Allowing the workers to use water and toilet facilities and receive mail at their property was not enough to impose a duty on the defendants (15 Cal. App. 4th 1578, 1589) . The court distinguished the facts in this case from those in Southland Corp. v. Superior Court [Southland Corp. v. Superior Court (1988) 203 Cal. App. 3d 656, 660-661, 250 Cal. Rptr. 57 ; see § 178.60[3][d]], noting that plaintiffs were not business patrons and were injured not by the criminal acts of third parties, but by a danger of which plaintiffs were fully aware (15 Cal. App. 4th 1578, 1590) . The court instead applied language from Donnell v. California Western School of Law [Donnell v. California W. Sch. of Law (1988) 200 Cal. App. 3d 715, 720, 246 Cal. Rptr. 199] asserting that a landowner is not liable merely because its property exists next to adjoining dangerous property and the landowner took no action to influence or affect the condition of that adjacent property (15 Cal. App. 4th 1578, 1590) .

[b] No Duty to Protect Users of Adjacent Public Streets From Distractions

Lompoc Unified Sch. Dist. v. Superior Court (1993) 20 Cal. App. 4th 1688, 26 Cal. Rptr. 2d 122 , was an action brought by a bicyclist against a school district. Plaintiff, who was struck by a motor vehicle on the public road adjacent to the school district's property, claimed that the collision and his resulting injuries occurred because a football game in progress on that property and its attendant crowd of spectators had distracted the motorist who struck him. The trial court denied defendant's motion for summary judgment, and defendant sought a writ of mandate to set aside the trial court's judgment on the grounds that it owed no duty to plaintiff.

The court of appeal, although normally reluctant to use extraordinary writs to review the denial of summary judgment, granted the writ because the issue was one of first impression in California (20 Cal. App. 4th 1688, 1692) . The court held that an occupier of real property has a duty to maintain the premises so as not to injure the users of abutting streets, but that an occupier of property is not liable for the defective or dangerous condition of property that he or she does not own, possess, or control (20 Cal. App. 4th 1688, 1693) . Therefore, the court followed decisions in other states and concluded that occupiers of property have no legal duty either to refrain from holding activities on their premises that would distract passing motorists or to provide and maintain a distraction barrier to prevent passing motorists from seeing or hearing those activities (20 Cal. App. 4th 1688, 1694-1695). It is the duty of the motorists not to allow their attention to be so distracted as to interfere with the safe operation of their vehicles (20 Cal. App. 4th 1688, 1697-1698).

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] No Duty to Protect Users of Adjacent Property Not Controlled by Defendant

In Contreras v. Anderson (1997) 59 Cal. App. 4th 188, 69 Cal. Rptr. 2d 69 , plaintiff appealed from a summary judgment for defendant dismissing her premises liability complaint against defendants. Plaintiff alleged that defendants were liable for the injuries she suffered when she fell on a brick walkway contained in a city-owned planting strip in front of their property. On appeal, plaintiff contended that the evidence was sufficient to raise a triable issue of fact whether defendant's controlled the public planting strip and, thus, owed her a duty of care under Alcaraz v. Vece [Alcaraz v. Vece (1997) 14 Cal. 4th 1149, 60 Cal. Rptr. 2d 448, 929 P.2d 1239] . The Supreme Court held that a landowner who exercises control over an adjoining strip of land has a duty to protect or warn others entering the adjacent land of a known hazard there. This duty arises even if the person does not own or exercise control over the hazard and even if the person does not own the abutting the property on which the hazard is located. The court of appeal held as a matter of law that the defendants did not owe a duty to warn or prevent harm to plaintiff under the rule of Alcaraz (59 Cal. App. 4th 188, 201) . The court determined that the evidence showing that defendants regularly trimmed the tree and swept fallen leaves off the brick path, suggested nothing more than neighborly maintenance of the city-owned planting strip and that standing alone, this evidence could not support a finding of control over the property. According to the court what was missing was evidence that the defendant took affirmative action to preclude or limit the adjoining landowner's control or, or ability to control, its own property and a notorious and open public display of control over the property (59 Cal. App. 4th 188, 201) .

In Princess Hotels Int'l, Inc. v. Superior Court (1995) 33 Cal. App. 4th 645, 39 Cal. Rptr. 2d 457 , plaintiffs sued a hotel for negligence in failing to warn them of the dangers of swimming in the ocean adjacent to the hotel. Defendant moved for summary judgment on the question of whether a hotel has a duty to warn guests of the dangers of ocean swimming. The trial court denied the motion, premising a duty to warn on the fact that the hotel benefitted commercially from the adjacent beach. The court of appeal reversed, stating that the two exceptions to the rule that a defendant cannot be held liable for the condition of property it does not control are (1) when the landowners impose or create some external effect on the area where the plaintiff is injured, and (2) when the landowner receives a special commercial benefit from the area of the injury and had direct or de facto control of the area (33 Cal. App. 4th 645, 649) . The court stated that the argument that defendant owed a duty because it received commercial benefit ignored the rule that control as well as a commercial benefit were required for an exception to the rule of no liability, and concluded that defendant had no duty to warn because the ocean is not within the control of humankind (33 Cal. App. 4th 645, 652) .

NOTE:

Princess Hotels has been criticized by the Supreme Court in Alcaraz v. Vece [Alcaraz v. Vece (1997) 14 Cal. 4th 1149, 60 Cal. Rptr. 2d 448] , in which the Court stated that if a visitor is injured on property controlled by a defendant, liability does not depend upon whether the defendant derived a commercial benefit from the property. The Court specifically disapproved of any language to the contrary in Princess Hotels.

Southland Corp. v. Superior Court (1988) 203 Cal. App. 3d 656, 250 Cal. Rptr. 57 , is discussed in § 178.60[3][b].

Donnell v. California W. Sch. of Law (1988) 200 Cal. App. 3d 715, 246 Cal. Rptr. 199 , was an action for personal injuries brought by a law student against the law school he attended and its employees. As plaintiff was on the city-owned sidewalk alongside the law school building, he was attacked and injured by an unknown person who had been breaking into a car as plaintiff approached. The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's grant of summary judgment in favor of defendants, holding that defendant was not liable for any dangerous or defective condition on property that it did not own, possess, or control. Rejecting defendant's argument that defendant had the power to control the sidewalk by installing lights or exterior monitors as an attempt to expand the concept of control over property to include the mere ability to influence or affect property, the court ruled that expanding the concept of control to this extent would undermine the predictability and reasonably clear limits presently applicable to premises liability (200

Cal. App. 3d 715, 720, 725-726) . The court concluded that defendant could not be liable merely because its property existed next to a dangerous area and it took no action to influence or affect the condition of that area. The court distinguished cases in which defendant's activities affirmatively created a dangerous condition on adjacent premises, defendants received a special benefit from adjacent premises, or defendants actually had and exercised some right of control over adjacent premises (200 Cal. App. 3d 715, 720-725) .

17-178 California Points & Authorities § 178.36

§ 178.36 Opposing Contention That Owner or Possessor of Premises Is Liable--Harm Due to Obvious Danger

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT _____ [OWNER or POSSESSOR] IS NOT LIABLE FOR PLAINTIFF'S INJURIES BECAUSE THE INJURIES RESULTED FROM A DANGER ON THE PREMISES THAT _____ [WAS OBVIOUS or SHOULD HAVE BEEN OBSERVED BY PLAINTIFF IN THE EXERCISE OF REASONABLE CARE].

No Liability for Obvious Danger. There is no liability on the part of an owner or possessor of premises for injuries resulting from dangers that are obvious or should have been observed in the exercise of reasonable care (Holcombe v. Burns (1960) 183 Cal. App. 2d 811, 815, 7 Cal. Rptr. 366).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted by defendant owner or possessor in opposition to plaintiff's contention that defendant is liable for harm to plaintiff due to an obvious danger. The form is based on the ground that the danger was obvious or should have been observed in the exercise of reasonable care. The decision in Rowland v. Christian [Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 Cal. 2d 108, 70 Cal. Rptr. 97, 443 P.2d 561] mandates that the question of the obviousness of the danger is a question of fact and can no longer be said per se to derogate the duty of the possessor so as to make the question of liability solely one of law to be determined in a nonsuit [Beauchamp v. Los Gatos Golf Course (1969) 273 Cal. App. 2d 20, 33, 77 Cal. Rptr. 914 (discussed in § 178.36[4][a]); see also Osborn v. Mission Ready Mix (1990) 224 Cal. App. 3d 104, 119, 273 Cal. Rptr. 457 (discussed in § 178.28[3][a])].

This memorandum of points and authorities may be combined with a form of memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of the obviousness of the danger. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss the nature of the particular danger and why it was obvious and therefore avoidable in the exercise of ordinary care (for example, because a loose tile was not concealed in any way and was plainly visible to a person exercising ordinary care in watching where he or she was walking).

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contentions supported by the points and authorities in §§ 178.25 -178.27.

[d] Effect of Comparative Negligence

In Li v. Yellow Cab Co. [Li v. Yellow Cab Co. (1975) 13 Cal. 3d 804, 119 Cal. Rptr. 858, 532 P.2d 1226] , the Supreme Court replaced the all-or-nothing rule of contributory negligence with a rule of comparative negligence under which liability for damages is apportioned in accordance with the fault of the persons whose negligence caused the injuries. Under comparative negligence, a plaintiff's contributory negligence does not bar recovery, but damages awarded must be diminished in proportion to the amount of negligence attributable to plaintiff [Li v. Yellow Cab Co. (1975) 13 Cal. 3d 804, 828-829, 119 Cal. Rptr. 858, 532 P.2d 1226] . Assumption of risk, as a variant of contributory negligence, has been subsumed under the general process of assessing liability in proportion to fault. It exists when plaintiff unreasonably undertakes to encounter a specific known risk imposed by a defendant's negligence. Plaintiff's conduct, although he or she may encounter that risk in a prudent manner, is in reality a form of contributory negligence [Li v. Yellow Cab Co. (1975) 13 Cal. 3d 804, 824, 826, 119 Cal. Rptr. 858, 532 P.2d 1226] . Before Li, courts viewed the failure of a user of premises to exercise ordinary care to discover obvious dangers as contributory negligence, and the act of a user who encountered a risk although he or she knew of the risk and appreciated its magnitude as assumption of the risk [see Beauchamp v. Los Gatos Golf Course (1969) 273 Cal. App. 2d 20, 33-34, 77 Cal. Rptr. 914] . After Li, courts of appeal have disagreed regarding the proper application of assumption of risk principles in light of the adoption of comparative fault [compare Ordway v. Superior Court (1988) 198 Cal. App. 3d 98, 107, 243 Cal. Rptr. 3d 536 (doctrine of reasonable implied assumption of risk provides complete defense to action for personal injuries); with Segoviano v. Housing Auth. (1983) 143 Cal. App. 3d 162, 164 (reasonable implied assumption of risk is not a defense to liability nor does it reduce plaintiff's recovery under comparative fault principles)].

In Knight v. Jewett (1992) 3 Cal. 4th 296, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 2, 834 P.2d 696 , the Supreme Court undertook to resolve the question, but rendered a decision without a clear majority. The lead opinion in Knight held thatin cases in which defendant has breached no duty of care toward the plaintiff, the plaintiff is barred from recovery under "primary assumption of risk." In cases in which the defendant has breached a duty toward the plaintiff, the plaintiff's damages are apportioned by comparative fault principles under "secondary assumption of risk" [Knight v. Jewett (1992) 3 Cal. 4th 296, 314-315, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 2, 834 P.2d 696 (George, J.; Lucas, C.J., and Arabian, J. concurring in analysis; Mosk, J. concurring "generally" with lead's approach)]. Three justices who did not join in the lead opinion (Kennard, J., Baxter, J., and Panelli, J.) supported an implied consent approach based on the subjective knowledge of the plaintiff. Under this approach, a plaintiff would be barred from recovery if plaintiff is shown to have "truly appreciated and voluntarily consented to the risk" and made a "considered and deliberate choice" to encounter the risk. If the plaintiff was "merely careless and could not have truly appreciated and voluntarily consented to the risk," the plaintiff's damages would be reduced in proportion to the amount of negligence attributable to the plaintiff [see Knight v. Jewett (1992) 3 Cal. 4th 296, 332, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 2, 834 P.2d 696 (Kennard, J.,dissenting)]. At least one court of appeal has followed the lead opinion in Knight and applied secondary assumption of risk in a case involving the liability of the owner of an apartment complex for the injuries of a tenant who slipped and fell on a sloping lawn [Curties v. Hill Top Developers, Inc. (1993) 14 Cal. App. 4th 1651, 1655-1656, 18 Cal. Rptr. 2d 45 ; see § 178.30[3] [a]; see also Lucas v. Fresno Unified Sch. Dist. (1993) 14 Cal. App. 4th 866, 872-873, 18 Cal. Rptr. 2d 79] .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Liability for Obvious Danger

In Holcombe v. Burns (1960) 183 Cal. App. 2d 811, 7 Cal. Rptr. 366 , plaintiff, a resident of defendant's trailer park, was injured while checking on the mail for the residents of the trailer park while defendant was away. She opened the door to a tool room next to defendant's office in the park to see about the mail, and then backed out of the doorway at the same time she closed the door. In stepping back, she struck the wheel of a lawnmower leaning against the outside wall of the tool room. The evidence disclosed that the plaintiff, in walking to the tool room, walked past the wall on which the mower was leaning and noticed the handle of the mower as she opened the door. There was also testimony that it was common practice for tenants in the trailer park to use the owner's tools and replace them by leaning them against the wall. The jury returned a verdict in favor of plaintiff and a judgment notwithstanding the verdict was entered. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment. The court stated that there is no liability for injury to an invitee that results from a condition that is obvious or should have been observed in the exercise of ordinary care (183 Cal. App. 2d 811, 815) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] No Liability for Obvious Danger

The facts and procedural background of Beauchamp v. Los Gatos Golf Course (1969) 273 Cal. App. 2d 20, 77 Cal. Rptr. 914 , are discussed in § 178.20[3][f]. The court of appeal stated that there is no liability on the part of the possessor of premises for harm due to a condition that was obvious or should have been observed in the exercise of reasonable care (273 Cal. App. 2d 20, 27) . However, the court held that the decision in Rowland v. Christian [Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 Cal. 2d 108, 70 Cal. Rptr. 97, 443 P.2d 561] mandates that the obviousness of the danger can no longer per se derogate the duty of care so as to make the possessor's liability solely a matter of law to be determined in a nonsuit (273 Cal. App. 2d 20, 33) .

In Dixon v. St. Francis Hotel Corp. (1969) 271 Cal. App. 2d 739, 77 Cal. Rptr. 201 , the court of appeal affirmed the trial court's grant of a new trial based on the insufficiency of evidence to justify the verdict in favor of plaintiff, in that the danger causing harm to plaintiff was obvious and thus negated the foreseeability necessary to establish negligence (271 Cal. App. 2d 739, 743). Plaintiff tripped over a painting contractor's stacked equipment in a hotel lobby. There was evidence that the lobby was well lighted, that plaintiff saw the equipment, and that she walked around it, apparently tripping over the edge of the stack, all warranting a determination that the equipment was plainly visible to one exercising due care (271 Cal. App. 2d 739, 740-741) .

§ 178.37 Opposing Contention That Owner or Possessor of Premises Is Liable--No Special Use or Affirmative Act Contributing to Defective Condition of Abutting Public Sidewalk

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief].

DEFENDANT _____ [OWNER or POSSESSOR] IS NOT LIABLE FOR THE INJURIES TO PLAINTIFF RESULTING FROM THE DEFECTIVE CONDITION ON THE PUBLIC SIDEWALK ABUTTING DEFENDANT'S PROPERTY BECAUSE THERE IS NO SPECIAL USE OF THE SIDEWALK AND NO AFFIRMATIVE ACT BY DEFENDANT CONTRIBUTING TO THE DEFECTIVE CONDITION.

A. No Liability If No Special Use or Contributing Act. If a sidewalk is used only for normal sidewalk purposes and has no constructional defects created to fit the peculiar needs of the abutting property, no liability attaches to an abutting owner or possessor because of defects in the sidewalk in the absence of some affirmative act by the owner or possessor contributing to the defective condition (Jones v. Deeter (1984) 152 Cal. App. 3d 798, 803-804, 199 Cal. Rptr. 825 ; Winston v. Hansell (1958) 160 Cal. App. 2d 570, 576, 325 P.2d 569).

[Optional] B. Any Benefit Owner Derived From Construction or Alteration Is Not Exclusive. If any special benefit derived from an improvement to abutting public property is not exclusive in character, the benefit to the landowner is not sufficient to impose on the landowner a duty to maintain the improvement in a reasonably safe condition (see Seaber v. Hotel Del Coronado (1991) 1 Cal. App. 4th 481, 491, 2 Cal. Rptr. 2d 405).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted by defendant, an owner or possessor of land abutting a public sidewalk, in opposition to plaintiff's contention that defendant is liable for injuries resulting from a defect in the sidewalk. This form is based on the ground that defendant has no special use for the sidewalk and has not performed any affirmative act contributing to the sidewalk's defective condition.

These points and authorities may be combined with a form of memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel is responding to the contention that defendant owner or possessor is liable for the defective condition of a sidewalk. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss the fact that there is no special use being made of the sidewalk, and that no act on the part of defendant contributed to the defect.

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities in § 178.29.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Liability If No Special use or Contributing Act

In Jones v. Deeter (1984) 152 Cal. App. 3d 798, 199 Cal. Rptr. 825 , plaintiff fell on a sidewalk broken by tree roots, and sued the city and the abutting landowner. The abutting landowner owned the sidewalk although he had dedicated it to the city for public use. Defendant landowner obtained summary judgment in his favor and plaintiff appealed. The court of appeal affirmed, noting that the abutting landowner had a general duty under Sts. & Hy. Code § 5610 to repair defects in the sidewalk, even though he had dedicated the sidewalk to the city (152 Cal. App. 3d 798, 802-803) . However, the court stated that a breach of this duty gave rise to tort liability to persons injured by a dangerous condition on the sidewalk only if the condition was attributable to negligence on the part of the landowner (152 Cal. App. 3d 798, 803) . In this case there was no dispute that the defect was caused by trees planted and habitually maintained by the city (152 Cal. App. 3d 798, 804-806) . The court held that the landowner was therefore not liable, because the city had exclusively assumed the duty of maintaining the trees, and the defect could not be attributed to the landowner (152 Cal. App. 3d 798, 805-806) .

In Winston v. Hansell (1958) 160 Cal. App. 2d 570, 325 P.2d 569 , plaintiff fell on an allegedly cracked and broken portion of the sidewalk that was also used by the abutting owners as a driveway. Plaintiff sued both the owners and the city. The complaint alleged that defendant owners made a special use of the sidewalk as a driveway for automobiles, and that the sidewalk was maintained in a defective and dangerous condition. Ademurrer to the cause of action against the owners contained in plaintiff's second amended complaint was sustained without leave to amend and a judgment of dismissal was entered. Plaintiff appealed from the judgment.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment and stated that if a sidewalk is used only for normal sidewalk purposes and has no constructional defects created to fit the peculiar needs of the abutting property, no liability attaches for defects in the sidewalk unless the owner does some affirmative act contributing to the condition (160 Cal. App. 2d 570, 576) . The court stated that the use of a sidewalk as a driveway to abutting property is not a peculiar or unusual use of a sidewalk but, on the contrary, it is one of the ordinary and accustomed uses for which sidewalks are designed (160 Cal. App. 2d 570, 576-577) .

[b] Any Benefit Owner Derived From Construction or Alteration Is Not Exclusive

In Seaber v. Hotel Del Coronado (1991) 1 Cal. App. 4th 481, 2 Cal. Rptr. 2d 405 , decedent's surviving wife and children brought an action for wrongful death against the defendant hotel after the decedent was struck and killed by a car as he was crossing in a marked crosswalk adjacent to defendant's property. The hotel moved for summary judgment and the motion was granted. The plaintiffs appealed from the judgment.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment. The plaintiffs cited Sexton v. Brooks [Sexton v. Brooks (1952) 39 Cal. 2d 153, 157-158, 245 P.2d 496] and contended that a reasonable trier of fact could find a dangerous crosswalk was installed on the property abutting the hotel at the hotel's request to specifically benefit the hotel by its convenient location and that it served a use separate from the ordinary use because of its close proximity to the hotel. The court of appeal concluded, however, that Sexton did not control the case (1 Cal. App. 4th 481, 490) . The court granted that a trier of fact could reasonably find that a dangerous crosswalk was reinstalled by CalTrans on public property abutting the hotel at the hotel's request for its nonexclusive, special benefit in light of its convenient location, and that the hotel specially benefitted by the location of the crosswalk. However, the court noted that the crosswalk was available and presumably used by the general public at large, by anyone who wished to cross the highway. Consequently, any special benefit derived from the crosswalk by the hotel was not exclusive in character. The significance of the degree of exclusivity is that proportionately, the greater the exclusivity of use, the more an improvement benefits solely the adjoining property and the more reasonable it is to impose on the landowner a duty to maintain the improvement in a reasonably safe condition (1 Cal. App. 4th 481, 491) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] No Liability If No Special Use or Contributing Act

The facts and procedural background of Seaber v. Hotel Del Coronado (1991) 1 Cal. App. 4th 481, 2 Cal. Rptr. 2d 405 , are discussed in § 178.37[3][b]. The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's judgment granting defendant hotel owner summary judgment. The court observed that the crosswalk abutting the hotel in which the plaintiffs' decedent was struck and killed did not serve a use independent and apart from the ordinary use for which crosswalks are designed for public streets. It simply served its designed, common use. The court stated that the requirement of a special use is essential because it guarantees that before determining whether to shift the burden to the landowner of warning others of a hazard, the variable of whether the modification and resulting risk is latent and unsuspecting in character to the passerby is considered. Further, it evinces a reasonable policy determination to hold liable an adjoining landowner for an improvement, the use of which is foreign to the common use of the public street or sidewalk, that directly benefits the landowner's adjoining property. Accordingly, if the improvement or modification does not serve such a foreign use, it is unreasonable to impose on the landowner any duty to maintain it in a reasonably safe condition (1 Cal. App. 4th 481, 491) .

[b] Any Benefit Owner Derived From Construction or Alteration Is Not Exclusive

In Contreras v. Anderson (1997) 59 Cal. App. 4th 188, 69 Cal. Rptr. 2d 69 , plaintiff appealed from a summary judgment for defendant dismissing her premises liability complaint against defendants. Plaintiff alleged that defendants were liable for the injuries she suffered when she fell on a brick walkway contained in a city-owned planting strip in front of their property. On appeal, she contended that the evidence was sufficient to raise a triable issue of fact whether an alteration was made on the planting strip that specially benefitted defendants' property so as to give rise to a duty. The court of appeal's analysis began with the applicable rule: that an abutting owner was liable for the condition of portions of the public sidewalk which he or she has altered for the benefit of his or her property and which serve a use independent of and apart from the ordinary use for which sidewalks are designed. This duty usually arises in cases involving traps on sidewalks, including coal holes, meter boxes, and other similar devices located in the sidewalk which benefit the abutting owner and are located where the general public is likely to walk.

The court of appeal applied this rule to the facts of the case and found that the alleged hazard was not any kind of trap but was the condition of the brick walkway itself, namely, it was allegedly too slippery. More importantly stated the court, although it would be possible for a reasonabletrier of fact to conclude that the brick walkway conferred a benefit on defendants by providing access from the curb to their property, this benefit was not exclusive since the public had access to it as well. Furthermore, the brick path did not serve a use independent of and apart from the ordinary and accustomed use for which it was designed, namely, as a public walkway between the curb and the sidewalk. Thus, without evidence of an exclusive and uncommon use of the brick path by defendants, the court ruled that plaintiff had failed to raise any triable issue of fact whether defendants owed her a duty (59 Cal. App. 4th 188, 203) .

DEFENDANT OWNER IS NOT LIABLE FOR THE INJURIES TO PLAINTIFF, BECAUSE PLAINTIFF'S CONDUCT IN FURTHERANCE OF THE COMMISSION OF A FELONY SPECIFIED IN SECTION 847(a) OF THE CIVIL CODE WAS THE PROXIMATE CAUSE OF PLAINTIFF'S INJURY.

A. No Liability Toward Person Injured When Conduct in Furtherance of Felony Proximate Cause of Injury. An owner of property is not liable to any person for any injury or death that occurs on that property during the course of or after the commission of any of the felonies set forth in Section 847(b) of the Civil Code by the injured or deceased person when the conduct in furtherance of the felony proximately caused the injury or death (Civ. Code § 847(a), (d)).

[Optional] B. Statutory Limitation on Liability Not Restricted to Injuries Caused by Physical Conditions or Uses of Property. This statutory limitation on liability is not restricted merely to injuries related to the physical conditions, uses, structures, or activities of the property (*Calvillo-Silva v. [a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted by defendant, an owner of any estate in real property, in opposition to plaintiff's contention that defendant is liable for injuries or death occurring on the property. This form is based on the ground that defendant is not liable for injuries or death occurring on the property that are proximately caused by the injured or deceased person's conduct in furtherance of specified felonies [Civ. Code § 847(a)]. Optional Paragraph B may be used when the injury was unrelated to the physical conditions, uses, structures, or activities of the property. Optional Paragraph C may be used when the injury was allegedly caused by an intentional act, but the intentional act was not wrongful.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel is responding to the contention that defendant owner is liable for the injury or death occurring on his or her property. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the point of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss the facts showing that plaintiff was injured while on the property and that plaintiff's conduct in furtherance of the commission of the felony was the proximate cause of his or her injury or death [see Civ. Code § 847(c), (d)]. Additionally, counsel should refer to the criminal action in which plaintiff was convicted of the felony (or a lesser included crime arising from the charged felony) [see Civ. Code § 847(e)].

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities in § 178.20.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Liability Toward Person Injured When Conduct in Furtherance of Felony Proximate Cause of Injury

An owner, including but not limited to a public entity as defined in Gov. Code § 811.2, of any estate or any other interest in real property, whether possessory or nonpossessory, is not liable to any person for any injury or death that occurs on that property during the course of or after the commission of any of the felonies set forth in Civ. Code § 847(b) by the injured or deceased person [Civ. Code § 847(a)]. The limitation on liability conferred by Civ. Code § 847(a) arises at the moment the injured or deceased person commences the felony or attempted felony and extends to the moment the injured or deceased person is no longer on the property [Civ. Code § 847(c)]. The limitation also arises only on the charge of a felony listed in Civ. Code § 847(b) and the subsequent conviction for that felony or a lesser included felony or misdemeanor arising from a charge of a felony listed in Civ. Code § 847(b). During the pendency of any such criminal action, a civil action alleging this liability is abated and the statute of limitations on the civil cause of action is tolled [Civ. Code § 847(e)]. The limitation on liability provided by Civ. Code § 847(a) is in addition to any other available defense [Civ. Code § 847(g)].

The limitation on liability conferred by Civ. Code § 847(a) applies only when the injured or deceased person's conduct in furtherance of the commission of a felony listed in Civ. Code § 847(b) proximately or legally causes the injury or death [Civ. Code § 847(d)]. Additionally, Civ. Code § 847(a) does not limit the liability of an owner or an owner's agent that otherwise exists for willful, wanton, or criminal conduct, or for willful or malicious failure to guard or warn against a dangerous condition, use, structure, or activity [Civ. Code § 847(f)].

[b] Statutory Limitation on Liability Not Restricted to Injuries Caused by Physical Conditions or Uses of Property

In Calvillo-Silva v. Home Grocery (1998) 19 Cal. 4th 714, 725-727, 735, 80 Cal. Rptr. 2d 506, 968 P.2d 65 , plaintiff, who was shot by a grocery store employee during a robbery at the store, brought a personal injury action against the store, its owners, two employees, and the lessor of the property. While plaintiff insisted he was not one of the perpetrators of the robbery, he pleaded no contest to criminal charges of attempted grand theft as part of a plea bargain to try and avoid a prison sentence. In answering the complaint, defendants asserted several defenses, including contributory negligence, self-defense, and defense of property. The lessor of the property brought a summary judgment motion, arguing that he owed no duty to the plaintiff. Following a request by the trial court for briefing on the potential applicability of Civ. Code § 847, the court granted the summary judgment motion for the lessor. The remaining defendants then moved for summary judgment based on the limitation of liability found in Civ. Code § 847. The trial court granted summary judgment for the remaining defendants, finding no triable issue of fact as to the applicability of Civ. Code § 847. The court of appeal reversed. While the court of appeal rejected plaintiff's argument that Civ. Code § 847 only applied to injuries caused by dangerous conditions or uses of an owner's land, it determined that the statute only immunized negligent conduct and did not protect the intentional use of deadly or injurious force. Defendants appealed.

The Supreme Court affirmed the court of appeal's decision to reverse the summary judgments, although disagreeing with part of the court of appeal's analysis. Although the primary issue was the applicability of Civ. Code § 847(f), which contains an exception to the statutory immunity of Civ. Code § 847 when the injury is caused by "willful, wanton, or criminal" conduct [see § 178.38[3][a]], the Supreme Court as a preliminary matter addressed plaintiff's argument that Civ. Code § 847 only applied to conduct that is related to physical conditions or uses of an owner's property. The Court noted that, while no language in the statute explicitly stated that immunity is available for conduct unrelated to conditions or uses of property, Civ. Code § 847(a) declared that immunity is available "for any injury or death that occurs upon that property during the course of or after the commission of" any of the listed felonies. Further, Civ. Code § 847(f) specified two exceptions to the immunity for particular types of conduct, which, according to the Court, necessarily implied that conduct not falling within the two exceptions was immunized when the statutory elements are otherwise met. As the Court also noted, only one of the two exceptions listed in Civ. Code § 847(f) referred to a "dangerous condition, use, structure, or activity," while the other exception for "willful, wanton, or criminal conduct" did not appear to bear any relationship to the conditions or uses of the premises. Thus, the Court concluded that, if the statutory conditions are otherwise met, the immunity of Civ. Code § 847 is not restricted to conduct relating solely to physical conditions or uses of the land, a reading of the statute that conformed with the stated legislative purpose of protecting landowners and possessors from lawsuits brought by persons injured on the property during the commission of a crime.

[c] Intentional Conduct Must Be Wrongful to Meet Requirements of Exception From Limitation on Liability

The factual and procedural background of Calvillo-Silva v. Home Grocery (1998) 19 Cal. 4th 714, 728-732, 735-737, 80 Cal. Rptr. 2d 506, 968 P.2d 65 , is discussed in § 178.38[3][b]. The primary issue facing theCourt was whether Civ. Code § 847 limits liability only for negligence, or whether it also limits liability for injuries caused by the intentional use of deadly force when the person injured is later convicted of one of the statutorily enumerated felonies. Civ. Code § 847(f) contains an exception to the statutory immunity of Civ. Code § 847 if the injury is caused by "willful, wanton, or criminal" conduct [see § 178.38[3][a]]. Although the court of appeal equated "willful" conduct with any intentional conduct, the Supreme Court disagreed.

The Supreme Court noted that the concept of "willful" conduct appears in many common-law and statutory contexts, and that in the context of tort liability, the usual meaning is that "the actor has intentionally done an act of unreasonable character in disregard of a risk known to him or so obvious that he must be taken to have been aware of it, and so great as to make it highly probable that harm would follow." The Court extracted three general principles from cases addressing the issue of liability for willful or wanton behavior. First, willful and wanton misconduct is separate and distinct from negligence, involving different principles of liability and different defenses, and unlike negligence, willful conduct implies an intent that relates not merely to the doing of an act, but an intent that relates to misconduct. Second, willfulness is generally characterized by actual or constructive knowledge of peril, actual or constructive knowledge that injury is a probable, not just possible, result of the danger, and a conscious failure to act to avoid the peril. Third, acts intended or likely to cause serious injury are not categorically wrongful in character and do not inevitably result in liability, as for example when a person uses justifiable force in self-defense. The Court concluded that if the legislature had these "well established" principles in mind when enacting Civ. Code § 847, then the intentional actions not protected by the statute are intentional wrongful acts committed either with knowledge that serious injury to another will probably result, or with a wanton and reckless disregard of the possible results. The Court also concluded that although the Penal Code defines willful behavior as simply the purpose or willingness to commit an act, the legislature probably had tort principles in mind when drafting the tort liability statute.

Although the Supreme Court held that intentional conduct that is not wrongful may be subject to immunity under the statute, the Court upheld the court of appeal reversal of summary judgment in the face of conflicting evidence in the record as to whether the force used by the store employees against the plaintiff was justifiable under the circumstances.

These points and authorities may be submitted by the defendant, an owner, tenant, or lessee of real property, in opposition to the plaintiff's contention that the defendant is liable for injuries occurring on the property. This form is based on the ground that the defendant is not liable for injuries occurring to any person who has been expressly invited onto his or her property to glean agricultural or farm products for charitable purposes [Civ. Code § 846.2]. This immunity is not applicable if the owner, tenant, or lessee received any consideration for permitting the gleaning activity. Nor is it available to immunize the owner from injuries caused by his or her gross negligence or willful and wanton misconduct [Civ. Code § 846.2].

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel is responding to the contention that the defendant owner is liable for the injury occurring on his or her property. These points and authorities may also be adapted for used in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

§ 178.40 Opposing Contention That Owner or Possessor of Premises Is Liable--No Liability for Injury Caused by Dog When Owner or Possessor of Premises Does Not Own Dog and Has No Previous Knowledge of Dog's Dangerous Propensities or Vicious Nature

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT _____ [OWNER or POSSESSOR] IS NOT LIABLE FOR PLAINTIFF'S INJURIES BECAUSE DEFENDANT DOES NOT OWN THE DOG THAT CAUSED PLAINTIFF'S INJURIES, AND DEFENDANT HAD NO PREVIOUS KNOWLEDGE OF THE DOG'S DANGEROUS PROPENSITIES OR VICIOUS NATURE.

A. Nonowner of Dog Liable Only When Dog's Dangerous Propensities or Vicious Nature Are Known. To impose liability on one other than the owner of a dog for injury inflicted by the dog on a third party, defendant must have had previous knowledge of the dog's dangerous propensities or vicious nature (Lundy v. California Realty (1985) 170 Cal. App. 3d 813, 821, 216 Cal. Rptr. 575).

[Optional] B. Bank Whose Right to Property Is Contested Owes No Duty to Third Party Attacked by Possessor's Dogs Absent Knowledge of Danger and Ability to Prevent Attack. A bank that has purchased property at a foreclosure sale owes no duty to a third party attacked by dogs on the property if, at the time of the dog attack, the possessors of the property have refused to vacate the property, the possessors of the property were contesting the bank's unlawful detainer proceeding, and the bank lacked both actual knowledge of the dangerous nature of the dogs and the ability to control the dogs (Martinez v. Bank of Am. (2000) 82 Cal. App. 4th 883, 890-894, 98 Cal. Rptr. 2d 576).

[Optional] C. Propensities of Dog Breed Insufficient to Establish Actual Knowledge of Particular Dog's Vicious Propensities. Evidence that a particular breed of dog generally has certain characteristics, by itself, does not establish that a landlord had actual knowledge that a tenant's dog had any dangerous propensities (Chee v. Amanda Goldt Property Management (2006) 143 Cal. App. 4th 1360, 1371-1372, 50 Cal. Rptr. 3d 40).

[Optional] D. Property Owner Not Vicariously Liable Based on CC&Rs. In the absence of actual knowledge of the danger posed by a tenant's dog, a landlord cannot be held vicariously liable in tort for an injury caused by the dog merely because the covenants, conditions, and restrictions (CC&Rs) governing the residence purport to make the landowner responsible for the acts and omissions of the owner's delegates (Chee v. Amanda Goldt Property Management (2006) 143 Cal. App. 4th 1360, 1375-1376, 50 Cal. Rptr. 3d 40).

[2] Comments

CAUTION:

At least one decision has imposed liability on an owner or possessor of premises who was not the owner of a dog kept on the premises and who had no actual knowledge of the dog's dangerous propensities [see Portillo v. Aiassa (1994) 27 Cal. App. 4th 1128, 1133, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 755 ; see also § 178.23[3][a]]. The court distinguished between cases involving a family pet kept at a single-family residence, in which nonliability is the rule, and cases in which the dog is a guard dog kept by a tenant on commercial premises open to the public, the landlord is aware that the tenant keeps the dog on the premises, and the landlord has not inspected the premises to determine if the dog's presence and temperament creates a dangerous condition. In the latter situation, a landlord cannot claim lack of actual knowledge of the dog's dangerous or vicious propensities as a defense to liability [Portillo v. Aiassa (1994) 27 Cal. App. 4th 1128, 1136-1137, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 755] .

These points and authorities may be submitted by defendant owner or possessor in opposition to plaintiff's contention that defendant is liable for injury inflicted on plaintiff by a dog on the owner's or possessor's premises, if the owner or possessor did not own the dog and had no previous knowledge of its dangerous propensities or vicious nature. Optional Paragraph B may be added if the defendant is a bank that has purchased the property at a foreclosure sale and has not taken possession of the property at the time of the dog attack because the possessors of the property refused to vacate and the bank's action for unlawful detainer had not yet been adjudicated. Optional Paragraph C may be used if the plaintiff attempts to establish actual knowledge of a dog's vicious propensities by showing that the particular breed of dog generally has certain characteristics. Optional Paragraph D may be used if the plaintiff tries to impose vicarious liability on a property owner for injuries caused by the dog of a tenant based on terms of CC&Rs (Covenants, Conditions, and Restrictions).

This memorandum of points and authorities may be combined with a form of memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of the liability of the owner or possessor of the premises for plaintiff's injury. For example, these points and authorities may be used to support defendant's motion for summary judgment on the issue of liability [see Lundy v. California Realty (1985) 170 Cal. App. 3d 813, 816, 216 Cal. Rptr. 575] . They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

If appropriate, the points and authorities in this form may be used to oppose the points and authorities in § 178.23.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Nonowner of Dog Liable Only When Dog's Dangerous Propensities or Vicious Nature Are Known

In Lundy v. California Realty (1985) 170 Cal. App. 3d 813, 216 Cal. Rptr. 575 , plaintiff was injured when he jumped headlong over a fence to avoid a German shepherd dog who was attacking him. The attack occurred at the residence of the dog's owner, who was renting the residence from the owners of the property on which it was located. Plaintiff filed an action for damages for his personal injuries against the tenant and the property owners. In the count of his complaint seeking recovery from the tenant, plaintiff alleged that the tenant owned a large German shepherd dog that was possessed of vicious and dangerous propensities, and inclined to attack and bite people. Plaintiff alleged that the tenant kept the dog in an unfenced backyard without posting a sign to warn of the dog's presence. As a result, while on the property for the purpose of conducting a study preliminary to the installation of cable television lines, plaintiff was attacked and bitten by the dog, and suffered personal injuries and other damages. In the count of his complaint against the property owners, plaintiff alleged that they rented the property to the tenant with knowledge of the dog's alleged dangerous propensities, and with knowledge that the dog would be kept on the premises. Plaintiff alleged that the property owners negligently caused plaintiff's injuries by: (1) renting the property to defendant tenant with knowledge that the dog would be kept on the premises; (2) allowing defendant tenant, together with her dog, to remain on the premises; (3) failing to enclose the backyard; and (4) failing to post a sign or signs warning of the dog's presence. Defendant property owners moved for summary judgment, asserting they had neither knowledge nor notice of any dangerous propensities of the dog and therefore neither owed nor breached any duty to plaintiff. After considering the several declarations, partial depositions, and answers to interrogatories filed in support of and in opposition to the motion, the trial court granted the motion, and entered summary judgment in favor of defendant property owners. Plaintiff appealed from the judgment, contending that whether defendant property owners exercised reasonable care in the circumstances constituted a triable issue of fact.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment of the trial court. The court noted that the crucial question was whether defendant property owners had a legal duty to plaintiff to do any of the things plaintiff asserted they should have done. The court then held that the property owners had no duty to: (1) refuse to rent to the tenant; (2) evict the tenant; (3) post signs warning of the dog's presence, or require the tenant to do so; or (4) fence the backyard, or require the tenant to do so (170 Cal. App. 3d 813, 820) . Relying on Uccello v. Laudenslayer (1975) 44 Cal. App. 3d 504, 513-514, 118 Cal. Rptr. 741 , the court held that a duty of care could not be imposed on a landlord without proof that he or she knew of the dog and its dangerous propensities. The court noted that, under Civ. Code § 3342, an owner of a dog may be held liable for injuries inflicted by the dog on another person without any showing that the dog had any especially dangerous propensities or that the owner knew of the dangerous propensities. However, to impose liability on someone other than the owner, previous knowledge of the dog's vicious nature must appear (170 Cal. App. 3d 813, 821) . The court also found that the facts before the trial court showed that defendant property owners knew virtually nothing about the dog, apart from its existence and its name. Defendants' knowledge of the latter was evidenced by the rental agreement between tenant and property owners, which provided that no animal should be kept on or about the premises without prior written consent "except Shepard [sic] Dog Named Thunder." Additionally, the court found nothing in the facts indicating that the property owners knew either the dog's size or age. Thus, for all defendants knew, the dog might have been a playful pup. Furthermore, the court refused to grant plaintiff's request that it take judicial notice that all German shepherds are dangerous. Finally, the court disagreed with plaintiff's contention that defendant property owners could infer a dangerous propensity of the dog simply because they knew his name was Thunder. By way of example, the court noted that it was not uncommon for an owner of a St. Bernard or Great Dane to name the dog Tiny. In sum, the court found that the facts before the trial court fell far short of creating a triable issue of fact as to defendant property owners' knowledge of any dangerous propensities on the part of defendant tenant's dog (170 Cal. App. 3d 813, 822) .

NOTE:

The holding in Lundy was distinguished in Portillo v. Aiassa [Portillo v. Aiassa (1994) 27 Cal. App. 4th 1128, 1137-1138, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 755 ; see § 178.23 [3][a]]. In Portillo, the court found the lessor of commercial premises liable for injuries to a member of the public, caused by the commercial tenant's guard dog; the court found the risk of injury to members of the public sufficient to impose on the landlord a duty to inspect the premises to ensure that an animal known to be on the premises is not an unreasonable danger to the public.

[b] Bank Whose Right to Property Is Contested Owes No Duty to Third Party Attacked by Possessor's Dogs Absent Knowledge of Danger and Ability to Prevent Attack

In Martinez v. Bank of Am. (2000) 82 Cal. App. 4th 883, 98 Cal. Rptr. 2d 576 , the plaintiffs were the parents of a boy who died after being attacked by dogs on the property adjacent to their own. The dogs were owned by the possessors of the adjacent property. The property on which the attack occurred had recently been purchased by a bank at a foreclosure sale, although at the time of the attack the bank had not yet taken possession of the property because the possessors refused to vacate and were disputing the bank's action for wrongful detainer. The plaintiffs filed a tort action against the dog owners and the bank. The bank successfully moved for summary judgment on the grounds that it owed no duty to the plaintiffs because it could not be held liable for dangerous conditions on property to which it had not yet established a right to possession. The plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. Recognizing that no actual landlord-tenant relationship existed, but analogizing to existing dog-bite cases, the court concluded that to establish the bank's liability, the plaintiffs would have to show that the bank had actual knowledge of the dangerous dogs and had the ability to prevent foreseeable harm that the dogs might cause. Under the undisputed facts in the record before it, the court concluded that the bank lacked actual knowledge of the danger posed by the dogs. A bank real estate manager had submitted an uncontradicted declaration that she was unaware of any violent acts committed by the dogs or that they had bitten any person or might be inclined to attack children (82 Cal. App. 4th 883, 891-892) . Moreover, the bank also lacked the ability to prevent the attack, because the bank had no lease with the possessors to use in leveraging removal of the dogs by their owners and would not obtain the right to directly and promptly control the premises until a judgment was obtained in the unlawful detainer action (82 Cal. App. 4th 883, 892-893) . The court also concluded that the bank owed no duty of care after consideration of the factors enunciated by Rowland v. Christian, especially in light of the fact that the plaintiffs had submitted no evidence to support a finding that the attack was reasonably foreseeable by the bank (82 Cal. App. 4th 883, 894-897) .

[c] Propensities of Dog Breed Insufficient to Establish Actual Knowledge of Particular Dog's Vicious Propensities

In Chee v. Amanda Goldt Property Management (2006) 143 Cal. App. 4th 1360, 50 Cal. Rptr. 3d 40 , plaintiff was a 71-year-old woman who was injured after being knocked down by a dog owned by the tenant who was leasing a condominium that was adjacent to plaintiff's condominium. Plaintiff sued the tenant, who was dismissed after declaring bankruptcy, as well as the adjacent condominium owner, the property management company he hired, and the condominium homeowners association. Plaintiff asserted premises liability and related negligence claims based on allegations that defendants knew or should have known of the dog's dangerous propensities. The trial court granted summary judgment for the defendants based in part on the lack of evidence that defendants had any prior knowledge that the dog was dangerous. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court reaffirmed the established rule that a landlord does not owe a duty of care to protect a third party from a tenant's dog unless the landlord has both actual knowledge of the dog's dangerous propensities and the ability to control or prevent the harm. The undisputed facts showed that prior to plaintiff's injury, defendants had never seen the dog displaying any dangerous propensities and had never received any reports or complaints about the dog suggesting that the dog posed a danger. In addition, the dog's owner declared that the dog had never bitten or jumped on anyone prior to the incident with plaintiff (143 Cal. App. 4th 1360, 1369-1370) . Plaintiff had also presented the declaration of an expert addressing the characteristics of that breed of dog, a Jack Russell Terrier, in which the expert suggested that the particular type of dog was not recommended for apartments or condominiums because the dogs will try to escape, jump and leap, and otherwise be "dangerously playful." The court of appeal concluded, however, that evidence that a particular breed of dog generally has certain characteristics, by itself, does not establish that a landlord had actual knowledge that a tenant's dog had any dangerous propensities (143 Cal. App. 4th 1360, 1370-1371) .

[d] Property Owner Not Vicariously Liable Based on CC&Rs

The factual and procedural background of Chee v. Amanda Goldt Property Management (2006) 143 Cal. App. 4th 1360, 50 Cal. Rptr. 3d 40 , is described in [c], above. Plaintiff in that case also argued that the owner of the adjacent condominium could be held vicariously liable for the actions of the tenant's dog based on language in the condominium complex's covenants, conditions, and restrictions (CC&Rs), or that the CC&Rs imposed a nondelegable duty to protect plaintiff from the dog. Plaintiff relied on two provisions in the CC&Rs to support her argument. The first stated that while an owner may delegate his right to enjoy the common the common areas to tenants, the owner remained "fully responsible for all acts or omissions of his delegates." The second required all pet owners to assure that their pets are restrained at all times while in the common areas and that they cause no waste or other disturbance while in these areas. Plaintiff argued that these provisions in combination meant that a condominium owner could be heldvicariously liable in tort if their tenant fails to properly restrain a pet and the pet causes harm.

However, the court of appeal rejected this argument. In the absence of actual knowledge of the danger posed by a tenant's dog, the court held that these CC&R provisions did not create a basis for imposing vicarious liability on a neighboring owner. The court noted that vicarious liability is imposed by operation of law, without regard to fault, only in certain established situations. For example, an employer may be held vicariously liable for the torts of an employee acting in the course of his or her employment, or a principal may be vicariously liable for the torts of an agent. Under settled law, however, the negligence of a tenant cannot be imputed to a landlord. Plaintiff had offered no authority for the proposition that CC&Rs, which are private recorded restrictions on the use of property, could operate as a legal basis for expanding the duty of care owed by a property owner to protect others from harm caused by a dog owned and controlled by a tenant, and the court declined to accept this novel proposition (143 Cal. App. 4th 1360, 1375-1376) . The court noted that the doctrine of nondelegable duty was merely a species of vicarious liability, and that doctrine did not create a duty of care where no duty was otherwise owed. If the owner lacked actual knowledge of the danger posed by the tenant's dog, the owner owned no duty in the first instance (143 Cal. App. 4th 1360, 1375) . Finally, the court rejected plaintiff's argument that the CC&Rs created a contract of indemnity among the homeowners the breach of which could be enforced by another homeowner (143 Cal. App. 4th 1360, 1376-1377) .

[a] Nonowner of Dog Liable Only When Dog's Dangerous Propensities or Vicious Nature Are Known

In Yuzon v. Collins (2004) 116 Cal. App. 4th 149, 10 Cal. Rptr. 3d 18 , the plaintiff was a minor who was attacked by a pit bull dog belonging to residents of a house owned by the defendant. The tenants' lease authorized them to have a springer spaniel on the property, but the spaniel had died several years earlier. The defendant had not been informed of the spaniel's death, nor of the tenants' subsequent acquisition of two other dogs, a Dalmatian and the pit bull. Although the defendant may have had actual knowledge that there were dogs on the premises, the dogs were kept indoors and the defendant spoke with the tenants in person only a few times a year, apparently always outside the house. There were no prior incidents of the pit bull attacking anyone. The trial court granted summary judgment for the defendant, and the court of appeal affirmed. The court of appeal held that the defendant could not be liable because there was no evidence that the defendant had actual knowledge of the pit bull's alleged vicious propensities. The most that the plaintiff could show was that neighbors may have been scared once when the dog ran out of the house while they were walking by with their own dog on a leash, and that the tenants' dogs barked and yelped when people came to the front door. Even assuming that the defendant knew of this conduct, the court considered this to be normal behavior by a dog and insufficient evidence to put the defendant on notice of an actual problem. Evidence that the defendant had once asked the tenants to confine the dogs while an insurance inspector looked in the backyard did not support an inference that the defendant had actual knowledge of a pit bull that was vicious (116 Cal. App. 4th 149, 164-166) .

DEFENDANT _____ [OWNER or POSSESSOR] IS NOT LIABLE FOR PLAINTIFF'S INJURIES BECAUSE DEFENDANT HAD NO DUTY TO WARN PLAINTIFF ABOUT THE PRESENCE IN THE NEIGHBORHOOD OF THE DOG THAT CAUSED PLAINTIFF'S INJURIES.

No Duty to Warn Prospective Tenant About Dangerous Dog in Neighborhood. A landlord has no duty to warn a prospective tenant of the presence of a vicious dog in the neighborhood (Wylie v. Gresch (1987) 191 Cal. App. 3d 412, 414, 236 Cal. Rptr. 552).

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted by defendant landlord in opposition to plaintiff tenant's contention that defendant is liable for injury inflicted on plaintiff by a neighbor's dog.

These points and authorities may be combined with a form of memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel is responding to the contention that defendant landlord is liable for plaintiff's injury. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Duty to Warn Prospective Tenant About Dangerous Dog in Neighborhood

In Wylie v. Gresch (1987) 191 Cal. App. 3d 412, 236 Cal. Rptr. 552 , members of plaintiff family brought a negligence action against their landlords for damages resulting from an attack on one of the family's children by a dog owned by neighbors living next door to the rented premises. Plaintiffs alleged that the landlords had actual and constructive knowledge of the dog's vicious propensities, yet failed to warn the tenants about the dog or take other appropriate action. The trial court sustained the landlords' demurrer without leave to amend and dismissed the action. Plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. It noted that the principal question in the case focused on the "duty" element of negligence (191 Cal. App. 3d 412, 416) . The court could find no case imposing a duty on a landlord to protect against dangerous conditions off the premises over which the landlord has no control and that come onto the property in a location or manner over which the owner has no control (191 Cal. App. 3d 412, 419) . It concluded that the complaint alleged no facts that would give rise to liability under Civ. Code § 1714 or the cases construing it. The court also found that plaintiffs failed to establish that the landlords violated the common-law duty to warn (191 Cal. App. 3d 412, 420) . The court noted that there was no indication that defendants created a dangerous situation or that plaintiffs relied on defendants to warn them of any possible danger (191 Cal. App. 3d 412, 423) . Quoting from Restatement 2d of Torts § 358, com. b, the court stated that the lessor is under no duty to warn the lessee of a condition that the lessor reasonably believes that the lessee will discover, or of the extent of the risk involved in an obvious condition, unless the lessor would realize that the lessee is unlikely to appreciate it (191 Cal. App. 3d 412, 423) . Here, the court found that the landlords could reasonably have expected the tenants to discover the presence of the dog themselves. Also, the court noted that it would be unreasonable to require landlords to warn prospective tenants of every potential danger in the neighborhood (191 Cal. App. 3d 412, 424) .

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT _____ [OWNER or POSSESSOR] IS NOT LIABLE FOR PLAINTIFF'S INJURIES BECAUSE THE INJURIES RESULTED FROM A TRIVIAL DEFECT ON THE PREMISES.

No Liability for Trivial Defect. There is no liability on the part of an owner or possessor of premises for injuries resulting from a trivial defect on the premises (Ursing v. Big Boy Rests. (1987) 192 Cal. App. 3d 394, 397-399, 237 Cal. Rptr. 413).

[2] Comments

These points and authorities may be submitted by defendant owner or possessor in opposition to plaintiff's contention that defendant is liable for injuries resulting from a trivial defect on defendant's property. This form is based on the ground that the defect was so minor that liability should not be imposed on defendant.

These points and authorities may be combined with a form of memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel is responding to the contention that defendant owner or possessor is liable for a defect on his or her property. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

from a structural defect on defendant's property, counsel may wish to show that the defect was small in size.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Liability for Trivial Defect

In Ursing v. Big Boy Rests. (1987) 192 Cal. App. 3d 394, 237 Cal. Rptr. 413 , plaintiff brought an action against defendant restaurant for injuries she suffered on the restaurant premises. While leaving the restaurant, plaintiff tripped and fell on a walkway. One of the sections of this walkway had a raised edge, but the edge was no more than three-fourths of an inch higher than the adjoining section. As an affirmative defense, defendant argued that the trial court, as a matter of law, was empowered to dismiss the action if it found the height differential between the two sections of sidewalk amounted only to a trivial defect. The parties agreed to have the "trivial defect" defense determined before the trial by way of motion for summary judgment. The trial court found that the defense applied, and granted summary judgment to defendant. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. After reviewing pictures of the sidewalk, it found that reasonable minds could not differ and that the defect was in fact trivial (192 Cal. App. 3d 394, 397) . The court held that the trivial defect defense may be asserted by nongovernmental as well as governmental entities. It also found that it was proper for the trial court to determine that the defense applied as a matter of law. In summary, the court stated that persons who maintain walkways are not required to maintain them in an absolutely perfect condition. The duty of care imposed on a property owner, even one with actual notice, does not require the repair of minor defects (192 Cal. App. 3d 394, 398) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] No Liability for Trivial Defect

In Caloroso v. Hathaway (2004) 122 Cal. App. 4th 922, 19 Cal. Rptr. 3d 254 , the plaintiffs were a husband and wife who sued a homeowner after the wife tripped over a crack in a walkway in front of the defendant's home. The undisputed evidence showed that the crack created a rise in the cement that was less than half an inch at its highest point, and that the weather was dry and sunny at the time of the accident. The court of appeal affirmed summary judgment for the defendant, agreeing that the walkway crack was a trivial defect as a matter of law. The court held that the trial court did not abuse its discretion by disallowing the plaintiff's expert evidence on the dangerous nature of the crack, concluding that expert evidence was not required to evaluate the danger caused by the size and shape of the crack. The court noted that minor defects such as this crack in the walkway were inevitable and that the continued existence of such defects without warning or repair was not unreasonable. Therefore, the defendant could not be liable regardless of whether the defendant knew of the walkway crack (122 Cal. App. 4th 922, 927-929) .

§ 178.43 Opposing Contention That Owner or Possessor of Premises Is Liable--Commercial Landlord Is Not Strictly Liable for Injury to Commercial Invitees of Lessee

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT _____ [OWNER or POSSESSOR] IS NOT STRICTLY LIABLE FOR PLAINTIFF'S INJURIES BECAUSE THE DOCTRINE OF STRICT LIABILITY DOES NOT APPLY TO INJURIES SUFFERED BY COMMERCIAL INVITEES OF THE LESSEE.

Strict Liability Does Not Apply to Commercial Landlords. With respect to premises liability, the proper test to be applied is whether the landowner in the management of his or her property has acted as a reasonable person in view of the probability of injury to others. A commercial landlord who is holding his or her premises open to the public is not strictly liable for injuries suffered by commercial invitees (Ernest W. Hahn, Inc. v. Superior Court (1991) 1 Cal. App. 4th 1448, 1452, 3 Cal. Rptr. 2d 502).

[2] Comments

These points and authorities may be submitted by defendant owner or possessor in opposition to plaintiff's contention that a commercial landlord defendant should be held strictly liable for injuries suffered by a commercial invitee on the landlord's premises.

These points and authorities may be combined with a form of memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel is responding to the contention that defendant owner orpossessor is liable for a defect on his or her property. For example, this form may be used in support of a demurrer to a complaint. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Strict Liability Does Not Apply to Commercial Landlords

In Ernest W. Hahn, Inc. v. Superior Court (1991) 1 Cal. App. 4th 1448, 3 Cal. Rptr. 2d 502 , the plaintiffs brought an action against the owner of a commercial plaza for personal injuries sustained while they were seated at a table outside a farmer's market in the courtyard of a commercial plaza. The injuries occurred when a tree fell on them as they ate lunch purchased from the plaza. The plaintiffs filed a first amended complaint adding a cause of action for strict liability, to which defendant demurred. The trial court overruled the demurrer and the defendant sought a peremptory writ of mandamus to compel the court to vacate its order denying the demurrer.

The court of appeal granted the petition and issued a writ directing the trial court to vacate its order overruling the defendant's demurrer to the strict liability cause of action and to issue a new order sustaining the demurrer without leave to amend. The court stated that traditionally, the doctrine of strict liability has been applied to producing and marketing enterprises responsible for placing products in the stream of commerce. With respect to premises liability, however, the court stated that the proper test to be applied is whether the landowner in the management of his or her property has acted as a reasonable person in view of the probability of injury to others. Insofar as an invitee is concerned, the applicable general principle is that the possessor of the property is not an insurer of the invitee's safety, but must use reasonable care to keep the premises in a reasonably safe condition and warn of any latent or concealed peril (1 Cal. App. 4th 1448, 1450) . The court distinguished Becker v. IRM Corp. [Becker v. IRM Corp. (1985) 38 Cal. 3d 454, 464, 213 Cal. Rptr. 213, 698 P.2d 116] , which held a residential landlord strictly liable for injuries suffered by a latent defect in the leased premises, on the ground that the extension of strict liability to owners of residential housing was founded on the theory of an implied warranty of habitability and the need to provide safe, urban housing to the public. The defendant, however, was not in the business of leasing residential property to the public. Nor was it a producer or distributor of goods, placing its product in the stream of commerce. Instead, observed the court, the defendant was a commercial landlord holding its premises open to the public (1 Cal. App. 4th 1448, 1452) . The court held that Becker neither required nor portended a change in the law as significant as one that would eliminate the traditional requirement of fault for imposition of liability (1 Cal. App. 4th 1448, 1452) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Strict Liability Does Not Apply to Commercial Landlords

In Moore v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. (2003) 111 Cal. App. 4th 472, 3 Cal. Rptr. 3d 813 , the plaintiff slipped and fell on a french fry in a department store. The plaintiff sued the department store, which leased space to a fast food restaurant and did not prevent patrons from bringing bring food and drinks from the restaurant into the store. Because the store adopted a business model that allowed food to be brought into the store, increasing the risk of the type of injury that occurred, the trial court did not instruct the jury that it could not impose liability unless it found that the store had actual or constructive knowledge of the french fry in time to prevent the injury. The jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff, but the court of appeal reversed. The court of appeal held that the trial court erred in refusing to instruct the jury that actual or constructive knowledge of the french fry was required. By adopting the plaintiff's argument that liability could be imposed based on the defendant's choice of a business model even in the absence of the defendant's knowledge of the actual danger that harmed the plaintiff, the trial court was effectively making the store strictly liable for the injury to the plaintiff, which was not the law in California (111 Cal. App. 4th 472, 478-479) .

§ 178.44 Opposing Contention That Owner of Premises Is Liable--Commercial Landlord Is Not Liable for Injury to Tenant's Employee Caused by Tenant's Business Practices

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT LANDOWNER IS NOT LIABLE FOR THE HARM TO PLAINTIFF, WHO IS THE TENANT'S EMPLOYEE, FOR AN INJURY THAT OCCURRED DURING THE PLAINTIFF'S EMPLOYMENT ANDWAS CAUSED BY THE WORKING CONDITIONS CREATED BY THE TENANT'S BUSINESS.

Commercial Landowner Not Liable for Injury Caused to Tenant's Employee by Working Conditions of Tenant. A commercial landlord is not liable for an injury to a tenant's employee that was sustained during the course of employment and caused by the working conditions created by the tenant, at least absent any evidence that the landowner had a right to inspect for, discover, and correct hazards in the tenant's workplace (Laico v. Chevron U.S.A., Inc. (2004) 123 Cal. App. 4th 649, 670, 20 Cal. Rptr. 3d 307).

[2] Comments

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a commercial landlord, merely by virtue of ownership of the land, may be liable for an injury sustained during the course of employment by an employee of the business that leases the land, if that injury is caused by working conditions created by the tenant's business, rather than by any preexisting condition of the premises.

These points and authorities may be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel is responding to the contention that a landowner may be liable for an injury to a tenant's employee. For example, they may be used in support of a demurrer to a complaint or in a motion for summary judgment. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Commercial Landowner Not Liable for Injury Caused to Tenant's Employee by Working Conditions of Tenant

In Laico v. Chevron U.S.A., Inc. (2004) 123 Cal. App. 4th 649, 20 Cal. Rptr. 3d 307 , the plaintiff was employed by a facility that performed tests on the gasoline of the landowner, a large petroleum company. The plaintiff was diagnosed with a serious blood disorder, allegedly caused by exposure to benzene and other toxic chemicals associated with the gasoline supplied by the petroleum company while performing his testing work with the facility. The plaintiff performed his work without using protective respiratory gear, and the levels of benzene present were higher than the amounts allowed by Cal-OSHA. The plaintiff sued the petroleum company under a theory of products liability, arguing that the petroleum company was liable for supplying the gasoline tested without also providing notice to the plaintiff of the dangerous nature of the product. The plaintiff also argued that the petroleum company was liable as the landowner under a theory of premises liability for failing to discover and correct a dangerous condition on its property. The jury rejected the products liability theory, but found for the plaintiff on the premises liability theory. The trial court rejected various motions for judgment notwithstanding the verdict and for a new trial, and the defendant appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. The court held that the petroleum company could not be liable for failing to take steps to prevent the dangerous condition that caused the plaintiff's illness, a dangerous condition that did not exist independent of the tenant's business. The court pointed to the lack of evidence that the landowner had any control over the property at the time of the injury, had any knowledge of the dangerous testing methods used, had any right to inspect the premises or testing procedures, or had any ability to discover and remedy the hazard that caused the plaintiff's illness (123 Cal. App. 4th 649, 670) . A contrary result would, according to the court, be the equivalent of imposing strict liability on the defendant based solely on status as a landowner and its knowledge that the tenant's business posed special risks to the tenant's employees, which the court refused to do (123 Cal. App. 4th 649, 661) . The court also noted that a contrary result would appear to be at odds analytically with California Supreme Court precedent holding that employees of independent contractors who are injured while performing their work may not recover from the person who hires the independent contractor, at least if the hirer does not exercise actual control over the work activities. The court noted sufficient similarities between the situation of the non-negligent hirer of the independent contractor in those cases and the landowner in this particular case (123 Cal. App. 4th 649, 666-669) .

[1] FORM

DEFENDANT OWED NO DUTY TO NOTIFY INVITEES TO DEFENDANT'S SPORTS FACILITY OF THE PRESENCE AND AVAILABILITY OF AN AUTOMATIC EXTERNAL DEFIBRILLATOR FOR USE DURING AN EMERGENCY.

No Duty to Notify of Presence of Defibrillator. Sports facility operators do not owe a duty to sports participants to provide advance notice of the availability of an automatic external defibrillator at the facility for use should a medical emergency arise (Rotolo v. San Jose Sports & Entertainment, LLC (2007) 151 Cal. App. 4th 307, 323, 334-335, 59 Cal. Rptr. 3d 770).

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that the owner of a sports facility owes a duty to sports participants utilizing the facility to provide advance notice of the availability of an automatic external defibrillator at the facility.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which the issue of defendant's liability arises, or combined with other forms in this chapter, as appropriate. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the point of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Duty to Notify of Presence of Defibrillator

In Rotolo v. San Jose Sports & Entertainment, LLC (2007) 151 Cal. App. 4th 307, 59 Cal. Rptr. 3d 770 , plaintiffs were the parents of a 17-year-old boy who suffered sudden cardiac arrest and died while playing ice hockey. When the boy collapsed, two bystanders with medical training performed CPR, and two different persons, one apparently an employee of the sports facility, made immediate 9-1-1 calls. Nonetheless, the boy died. Plaintiffs sued the business entities responsible for operating the ice hockey facility, which was open to the general public, youth hockey clubs, and professional teams. Plaintiffs argued that the defendants had acquired and placed an automatic external defibrillator (AED) close enough to the rink for use, but failed to provide advance notice to anyone associated with the hockey teams of the defibrillator's availability. Because of this failure, neither the bystanders who performed CPR nor other bystanders were aware that a defibrillator was nearby, use of which may have saved the boy's life. Plaintiffs alleged that defendants owed a duty to provide advance notice to league officials and coaches, based on an alleged special relationship between defendants and the invitees on their premises. The trial court sustained defendants' demurrer and entered judgment in their favor. Plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court noted that under Health & Safety Code § 1797.196(b) and (f), building owners and operators are under no duty to acquire and install an AED, and those who do make a defibrillator available are generally provided with immunity for its use during emergencies, so long as certain statutory conditions are met. The court held that these statutory requirements, which are intended to encourage the voluntary provision of defibrillators, occupy the field of liability for use or provision of these medical devices, and the courts are not free to impose an additional duty to notify sports participants or other invitees of the existence or location of such a device. The court concluded that imposition of an additional duty of notice not found in the statute would actually discourage the voluntary provision of AEDs, defeating the purpose of the statutory provisions (151 Cal. App. 4th 307, 322-324, 338) . The court went on to note that while the common law placed a limited duty on proprietors to provide a reasonable response when an invitee is faced with a medical emergency, defendants met that duty by placing an immediate 9-1-1 call. The common law, the court concluded, had never been extended to impose an affirmative duty on a landlord to give advance notice to prospective invitees of the existence and location of a medical device (151 Cal. App. 4th 307, 327-332) . The court also noted that the defendants did nothing to cause the cardiac arrest or increase the risks inherent in the sport of ice hockey and rejected the proposition that a sports facility operator owed a duty to reduce the effects of an injury that was an inherent risk of the sport (151 Cal. App. 4th 307, 334-335) . The court rejected application of the negligent undertaking doctrine as well, finding it inapplicable under the facts of the case (151 Cal. App. 4th 307, 335-336) .

DEFENDANT IS NOT LIABLE FOR THE HARM TO PLAINTIFF BECAUSE DEFENDANT HAD RELINQUISHED ALL OWNERSHIP, POSSESSION, ANDCONTROL OF THE PREMISES BEFORE PLAINTIFF SUSTAINED THE INJURIES OF WHICH PLAINTIFF COMPLAINS.

Nonliability of Predecessor Owners or Possessors. A defendant who is the former owner of property cannot be held liable for injuries that are sustained due to a dangerous condition on the property but that occur after defendant has relinquished all ownership, possession, and control of that property (Preston v. Goldman (1986) 42 Cal. 3d 108, 110, 227 Cal. Rptr. 817, 720 P.2d 476 ; Lorenzen-Hughes v. MacElhenny, Levy & Co. (1994) 24 Cal. App. 4th 1684, 1687-1688, 30 Cal. Rptr. 2d 210).

[2] Comments

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to plaintiff's contention that a former owner or possessor of premises is liable for injuries to plaintiff caused by a dangerous condition on the premises. The basis of opposition is that ownership, possession, and control of premises is a fundamental requirement to ascribing premises liability.

These points and authorities may be combined with a form of memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which the issue of defendant's liability arises, or combined with other forms in this chapter, as appropriate. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

stated.

[b] Liability of Former Owner or Possessor and Summary Judgment

Ownership, possession, or control is a fundamental requirement for ascribing liability to a defendant for the defective or dangerous condition of property. Therefore, summary judgment is proper if defendant has unequivocally established the absence of ownership, possession, and control [Preston v. Goldman (1986), 42 Cal. 3d 108, 119, 227 Cal. Rptr. 817, 720 P.2d 476] . However, once the burden of proof has shifted to plaintiff [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(p)(2)], plaintiff may defeat the motion for summary judgment if plaintiff can establish either of the two exceptions to this rule: (1) defendant was the builder, contractor, or developer of the entire property; or (2) defendant deliberately concealed, or failed to disclose, the dangerous condition [Lorenzen-Hughes v. MacElhenny, Levy & Co. (1994) 24 Cal. App. 4th 1684, 1688-1689, 30 Cal. Rptr. 2d 210 ; see §§ 178.31, 178.32].

For forms and discussion regarding premises liability generally, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 421, Premises Liability (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Nonliability of Predecessor Owners or Possessors

In Preston v. Goldman (1986), 42 Cal. 3d 108, 227 Cal. Rptr. 817, 720 P.2d 476 , defendants built a pool in their backyard and later sold the property. The new owner entered into a lease-option with a family who took possession of the property, made alterations to the wall surrounding the pool, and were aware of the pool's depth and configuration. Plaintiff, a very young child who was visiting the family, fell into the pool and was severely injured. Plaintiff's father filed a complaint on his behalf against defendants, among other parties. A jury determined in a special verdict that defendants were not negligent, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that a vendor who negligently creates an unreasonably dangerous condition on his or her property is liable in the same manner as a nonvendor because the vendor's liability arises from his or her status as the creator of the condition rather than as the owner of the land. Defendant petitioned the Supreme Court for review.

The Supreme Court reversed the court of appeal. The Court noted the development of three separate approaches to premises liability of predecessor owners: (1) the doctrine of caveat emptor (buyer beware), under which liability terminates once ownership or control is transferred; (2) a more expansive view that permits liability if the vendor has failed to disclose hidden defects to the vendee or if the property's condition when transferred involves an unreasonable risk of harm to persons outside the premises; and (3) the view that the mere transfer of title is insufficient to shiftresponsibility for dangers created by a vendor's negligence (42 Cal. 3d 108, 114-115) . Nearly all other jurisdictions have adhered to the caveat emptor approach in cases involving private property (42 Cal. 3d 108, 116) , and the Court adopted this view (42 Cal. 3d 108, 118) . In an earlier decision involving injuries to persons outside the premises [Sprecher v. Adamson Cos. (1981) 30 Cal. 3d 358, 368-370, 178 Cal. Rptr. 783, 636 P.2d 1121] , the Court emphasized that the duty to protect persons coming onto premises is grounded in possession of the premises and the right to control and manage them. The Court reiterated that ownership and control is a fundamental requirement for ascribing premises liability (42 Cal. 3d 108, 118-119) . Applying the balance of factors analysis mandated by Rowland v. Christian [Rowland v. Christian (1968), 69 Cal. 2d 108, 112-113, 70 Cal. Rptr. 97, 443 P.2d 561], the Court concluded that the defendants should not be held liable. The Court cited the lack of a close connection between defendants' conduct and plaintiff's injuries, the burden on defendants and the consequences to the community of imposing liability on a former owner because persons the former owner has no control over use the improvements the former owner made years before, and the unavailability of insurance for this type of risk (42 Cal. 3d 108, 125-126) .

Lorenzen-Hughes v. MacElhenny, Levy & Co. (1994) 24 Cal. App. 4th 1684, 30 Cal. Rptr. 2d 210 , is discussed in § 178.31[3][a].

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Nonliability of Predecessor Owners or Possessors

In Lewis v. Chevron USA Inc. (2004) 119 Cal. App. 4th 690, 14 Cal. Rptr. 3d 636 , a copper pipe flowing with hot water burst while the plaintiff was working as a subcontractor on an electrical job. The plaintiff sued the corporation that had sold the building to the current owner approximately eight years earlier. The defendant successfully moved for summary judgment, and the court of appeal affirmed. Noting the earlier decisions in Preston v. Goldman and Lorenzen-Hughes v. MacElhenny, Levy & Co., the court of appeal recognized that the general rule that prior owners are not liable was settled. In this particular case, the prior owner had no ability to inspect the pipes or warn workers about the pipes. It could not obtain insurance for property it did not own or take precautions to prevent injuries after it had given up ownership and the ability to control the property (119 Cal. App. 4th 690, 697) . The court also rejected the argument that the rule of Preston did not apply because the defect to the pipes was latent. In the absence of evidence that the prior owner knew of the latent defect and deliberately concealed it, the prior owner could not be liable (119 Cal. App. 4th 690, 698) .

§ 178.46 Opposing Contention That Owner of Easement Rights May Be Liable For Injury Occurring on Property--Easement Rights Unrelated to Injury-Causing Danger

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT'S EASEMENT RIGHTS IN THE PROPERTY ON WHICH THE INJURY OCCURRED DO NOT CREATE A DUTY OF CARE TO PLAINTIFF TO GUARD AGAINST THE INJURY SUSTAINED, BECAUSE THE PARTICULAR EASEMENT RIGHTS ARE UNRELATED TO THE DANGER THAT CAUSED PLAINTIFF'S INJURY.

Easement Rights Must Be Related to Source of Injury. The right of control that accompanies an easement interest in property is narrower than the right of control that accompanies fee ownership of real property, and the corresponding duty to third parties in managing the property interest imposed on an easement holder is also narrower in scope and must be related to the reason that the easement is granted (Cody F. v. Falletti (2001) 92 Cal. App. 4th 1232, 1246, 112 Cal. Rptr. 2d 593).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that an owner of easement rights in property on which the plaintiff's injury occurred owed a duty of care to the plaintiff. The grounds of the opposition are that the defendant's particular easement rights were unrelated to the danger that caused the injury.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which these points are raised. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the point of law stated. Thus, counsel should include facts or documentation showing the scope of the easement and explain how those easement rights were unrelated to the danger that caused the plaintiff's injury.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Easement Rights Must Be Related to Source of Injury

In Cody F. v. Falletti (2001) 92 Cal. App. 4th 1232, 112 Cal. Rptr. 2d 593 , the plaintiffs brought an action against property owners and members of a subdivision association, alleging that dogs had escaped from the yard of one property owner in the subdivision and attacked one of the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs alleged that the defendants were negligent in failing to prevent the dog owner from violating association rules governing the presence of dogs on the property lots by allowing the dogs to escape and cause the injury. The plaintiffs argued that a duty to protect the plaintiffs could be imposed on members of the subdivision association based on the facts that the injury occurred on a subdivision road and that the association was granted a right-of-access easement over all subdivision roads. The defendants successfully demurred to the complaint, arguing that neither association membership nor individual interest in the easement over the private road where the attack occurred supported creation of a duty to the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. Recognizing the general proposition that an easement owner has the same duties and responsibilities to third persons who enter the premises as any other property owner, the court also noted that the right of control that accompanies an easement interest is narrower than the right of control that accompanies fee ownership of real property. Thus, the corresponding duty to third parties in managing the property interest imposed on an easement holder is also narrower in scope and must have a relationship to the degree of control conferred by the scope of the easement interest (92 Cal. App. 4th 1232, 1240-1243) . The court noted, for example, that premises liability may be imposed on an electric utility company based on an easement granted specifically to maintain and operate power lines, if the injury in question is caused by the presence of those electrical fixtures. However, in this particular case, the defendants were not liable for the dog attack that occurred on one of the subdivision's streets, because the easement, which conferred a right of access over those streets, had no relationship to the danger that caused the injury--namely, the danger of vicious dogs escaping from a yard and attacking pedestrians on the street (92 Cal. App. 4th 1232, 1242-1244) .

The court also noted that the association's right to control the presence of dogs in the subdivision did not include a duty to exercise those rights. In addition, individual association members, who were merely residents of the subdivision, had no authority to control the dogs or their owner, and each member had only a single vote on matters affecting association affairs. Thus, individual association members could not be liable merely on the grounds that the association failed to enforce association rules that could have eliminated the dogs' presence in the subdivision (92 Cal. App. 4th 1232, 1245-1246) .

B. Conduct of Third Persons

17-178 California Points & Authorities § 178.60

§ 178.60 Supporting Contention That Person Who Owns, Possesses, or Controls Premises Is Liable for Harm Caused by Foreseeable Wrongful Acts of Third Persons

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT IS LIABLE FOR THE HARM TO PLAINTIFF BECAUSE PLAINTIFF WAS INJURED BY THE WRONGFUL ACT OF A THIRD PARTY ON PREMISES THAT THE DEFENDANT OWNED, POSSESSED, OR CONTROLLED, AND THE PERSON WHO OWNS, POSSESSES, OR CONTROLS PREMISES OWES A DUTY TO INVITEES TO PROTECT THEM AGAINST THE CONDUCT OF THIRD PERSONS ON THE PREMISES WHEN THE CONDUCT THREATENS THE SAFETY OF INVITEES AND THE CONDUCT AND ACCOMPANYING HARM ARE FORESEEABLE.

A. Duty to Protect Against Wrongful Conduct of Third Persons. An owner or possessor of premises owes a duty to invitees to take affirmative actions to protect them against the wrongful conduct of third persons that threaten their safety when such conduct and accompanying harm are foreseeable (Frances T. v. Village Green Owners Ass'n (1986) 42 Cal. 3d 490, 499-503, 229 Cal. Rptr. 456, 723 P.2d 573 ; Taylor v. Centennial Bowl, Inc. (1966) 65 Cal. 2d 114, 121, 52 Cal. Rptr. 561, 416 P.2d 793).

B. Factors Considered in Determining Existence of Duty. The factors that must be weighed in considering whether one owes another a duty of care include the following: (1) the foreseeability of harm to the plaintiff; (2) the degree of certainty that the plaintiff suffered injury; (3) the closeness of the connection between the defendant's conduct and the injury suffered; (4) the moral blame attached to the defendant's conduct; (5) the policy of preventing future harm; (6) the extent of the burden to the defendant with resulting liability for breach; and (7) the availability, cost, and prevalence of insurance for the risk involved (Southland Corp. v. Superior Court (1988) 203 Cal. App. 3d 656, 664, 250 Cal. Rptr. 57).

[Optional] C. Duty of Business Proprietor. A business proprietor owes a clear duty of care to his or her customers or business invitees to protect them when they come on his or her land, even from the wrongful acts of third persons that the proprietor has reasonable cause to anticipate (Southland Corp. v. Superior Court (1988) 203 Cal. App. 3d 656, 664, 250 Cal. Rptr. 57).

[Optional] D. Injury on Adjacent Property Controlled by Defendant. The existence of a business proprietor's duty of care with respect to patrons injured by the criminal acts of third persons that occur on property adjacent to the business premises, which is neither owned nor controlled by the proprietor, depends on the proprietor's actual or apparent control of the adjacent property (Morris v. De La Torre (2005) 36 Cal. 4th 260, 274, 30 Cal. Rptr. 3d 173, 113 P.3d 1182 ; Southland Corp. v. Superior Court (1988) 203 Cal. App. 3d 656, 662, 250 Cal. Rptr. 57).

[Optional] E. Duty to Provide Security Guards Because of Occurrence of Prior Similar Incidents. The fact that the owner or possessor of the property is on notice that prior similar incidents of wrongful conduct had occurred makes the wrongful conduct highly foreseeable. The owner or possessor therefore has a duty to provide security guards on its premises to deter and protect against such wrongful conduct (see Ann M. v. Pacific Plaza Shopping Ctr. (1993) 6 Cal. 4th 666, 679-680, 25 Cal. Rptr. 2d 137, 863 P.2d 207).

[Optional] F. Duty to Protect Exists Despite Absence of Prior Similar Incidents. Even if no prior similar incidents of wrongful conduct have occurred, the owner or possessor of the property nonetheless has a duty to protect against foreseeable wrongful conduct by means less burdensome than providing security guards. If protection against wrongful conduct can be provided by simpler measures, prior similar incidents are not required to establish the foreseeability of the conduct and the duty to take these measures (Delgado v. Trax Bar & Grill (2005) 36 Cal. 4th 224, 243-244 & n.24, 30 Cal. Rptr. 3d 145, 113 P.3d 1159 ; Ann M. v. Pacific Plaza Shopping Ctr. (1993) 6 Cal. 4th 666, 678-679, 25 Cal. Rptr. 2d 137, 863 P.2d 207).

[Optional] G. Duty to Take Minimal Measures to Assist Against Presently-Occurring Criminal Conduct. To protect invitees from criminal conduct that is presently occurring or about to occur, store or restaurant employees may have a duty to take reasonable and minimally burdensome measures, such as issuing a warning orcalling 911 for assistance, if those measures can be undertaken without increasing the risk of harm to the employees or other persons (Morris v. De La Torre (2005) 36 Cal. 4th 260, 277-278, 30 Cal. Rptr. 3d 173, 113 P.3d 1182).

[Optional] H. Security Guard Owes Duty of Protection to Invitees. When a security service contracts with the owner or possessor of business premises to provide security, a special relationship is created between the security guard and the business's customers. This relationship, in and of itself, is sufficient to impose on the guard the obligation to act affirmatively to protect those customers while they are on the premises (Marois v. Royal Investigation & Patrol, Inc. (1984) 162 Cal. App. 3d 193, 199-200, 208 Cal. Rptr. 384).

[Optional]. I. Proof of Causation. In an action to recover for the failure to provide adequate security measures to prevent a criminal attack by a third party, proof that the failure was the actual cause of the injury requires only a showing by the plaintiff that the security measures proposed would more likely than not have prevented the attack, not a showing that they would have absolutely prevented the attack. (Sandoval v. Bank of Am. (2002) 94 Cal. App. 4th 1378, 1387, 115 Cal. Rptr. 2d 128).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a party's contention that the person who owned, possessed, or controlled premises had a duty to plaintiff, an invitee, to protect him or her from harm due to the foreseeable wrongful conduct of a third person or persons. Optional Paragraph C may be included if the defendant is a business proprietor. Optional Paragraph D may be included if the injury occurred not on defendant's property but on property adjacent to it and defendant, although he or she neither owned nor possessed the adjacent property, had control over it.

Optional Paragraph E may be included if the plaintiff's contention is that the defendant was negligent in failing to provide security guards on its premises to protect the plaintiff. Optional Paragraph F may be included in reply to argument by the defendant (for example, in a motion for summary judgment) that it had no duty to protect the plaintiff because of the absence of prior similar incidents [see, e.g., § 178.64].

Optional Paragraph G may be included if the plaintiff contends that the defendant or the defendant's employee failed to take reasonable and minimally burdensome measures to aid against third-party criminal conduct as it was occurring.

Optional Paragraph H may be used if the possessor of the premises hires a security service in at least partial fulfillment of its obligation to protect its customers. Although the paragraph is specific to the duty owed by the security service, it is also pertinent to an action against the possessor, because the special duty is owed to customers on the premises, and any action against the security service would most likely be combined with an action against the possessor. The owner or possessor may also be vicariously liable for a breach of the duty by the security guard.

Optional Paragraph I may be used to state the proper burden of proof by a plaintiff in an action to recover for the failure to provide adequate security measures to prevent a criminal attack by a third party.

These points and authorities may be combined with a form of memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue of failure of the owner or possessor to protect a person on the premises from third-party conduct. The argument supported by this memorandum may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in §§ 178.63 -178.70 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities, and this form may be combined with the points and authorities in § 178.20 concerning the test of liability of an owner or possessor of premises.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Duty to Protect Against Wrongful Conduct of Third Persons

In Frances T. v. Village Green Owners Ass'n (1986) 42 Cal. 3d 490, 229 Cal. Rptr. 456, 723 P.2d 573 , plaintiff was robbed and raped in her condominium by an assailant who entered her dwelling under the coverof darkness. Plaintiff brought a negligence action against the condominium association for negligently failing to provide adequate lighting in the common areas that it controlled and for wrongfully ordering her to remove the additional lighting she had provided on her own initiative. The trial court sustained defendant's demurrer to plaintiff's cause of action.

The Supreme Court reversed. The Court initially held that defendant condominium association was under the same duty to maintain the common areas as that of a landlord (42 Cal. 3d 490, 499-501) . The Court held that under this standard, the association was potentially liable for failure to take steps to protect plaintiff from the criminal acts of third parties. In her negligence cause of action, plaintiff alleged that defendant knew that the lighting around her unit was inadequate and also knew that a number of crimes had been committed in the area as a result of the poor lighting. The Court found that these allegations, if proven, would support a finding of negligence, and that the negligence was a legal cause of her injuries (42 Cal. 3d 490, 503) .

In Taylor v. Centennial Bowl, Inc. (1966) 65 Cal. 2d 114, 52 Cal. Rptr. 561, 416 P.2d 793 , plaintiff was drinking with two companions in the cocktail lounge of an all-night bowling center. She was seated within hearing distance of a man employed as a bouncer by the owner of the center. Two times during the course of the four-hour evening a patron approached the plaintiff and asked the plaintiff to go to bed with him. Plaintiff told the patron to go away on both occasions and reported to the bouncer that the patron was being offensive to her. When plaintiff was preparing to leave, the bouncer told her not to go outside to her car because the "goofball" was out in the parking lot. Plaintiff replied that she needed to get home and the bouncer told her to be careful. On entering the parking lot, the patron assaulted plaintiff with a knife and seriously injured her. At the trial, a directed verdict was granted in favor of defendant based on the theory that no duty on the part of defendant was violated in that the warning was sufficient in and of itself to discharge any duty to protect a patron from the wrongful conduct of a third party. The court also refused to allow the testimony of two police officers, one of whom was to testify that he had frequently been called to the bowling center to quell disturbances.

The Supreme Court reversed the judgment and stated that there was sufficient evidence to support a verdict in favor of plaintiff that the warning was inadequate to protect plaintiff (65 Cal. 2d 114, 124-125) .

[b] Factors Considered in Determining Existence of Duty

Southland Corp. v. Superior Court (1988) 203 Cal. App. 3d 656, 250 Cal. Rptr. 57 , was a mandate proceeding arising out of an action for damages against the owners of a convenience store by a customer who, after leaving the defendants' premises, was criminally assaulted as he was walking to his car parked on a vacant, unpaved lot adjacent to the store. Defendants neither owned nor leased the adjacent lot but knew its patrons utilized the lot for parking. Defendants' motion for summary judgment was denied, and they petitioned the court of appeal for a writ of mandate to compel the trial court to grant their motion.

In denying a peremptory writ and discharging the alternative writ on the ground that there were issues of fact to be tried with respect to whether the defendants had control over the adjacent lot and whether harm to plaintiff was foreseeable, the court of appeal said that it has long been recognized that a possessor of land who holds it open to the public for entry for business purposes is subject to liability to members of the public while they are on the land for such a purpose, for physical harm caused by the accidental, negligent, or intentionally harmful acts of third persons and by the failure of the possessor to exercise reasonable care either to (1) discover that such acts are being done or are likely to be done, or (2) give a warning adequate to enable the visitors to avoid the harm, or otherwise protect them against it. Liability will normally be imposed when the possessor has reasonable cause to anticipate the misconduct of third persons (203 Cal. App. 3d 656, 663) . The court explained that although a landowner is not an insurer of the safety of persons on his or her property, he or she does have a duty to take reasonable steps to protect invitees from foreseeable injury, even to the extent of controlling the conduct of third parties, and that a possessor of land may be liable for foreseeable injuries caused by the accidental, negligent, or intentionally harmful acts of third persons (203 Cal. App. 3d 656, 668) .

The court said that in considering whether one owes another a duty of care, several factors must be weighed, including: (1) the foreseeability of harm to the plaintiff; (2) the degree of certainty that the plaintiff suffered injury; (3) the closeness of the connection between the defendant's conduct and the injury suffered; (4) the moral blame attached to the defendant's conduct; (5) the policy of preventing future harm; (6) the extent of the burden to the defendant with resulting liability for breach; and (7) the availability, cost, and prevalence of insurance for the risk involved (203 Cal. App. 3d 656, 664) .

[c] Duty of Business Proprietor

The facts and the procedural background of Southland Corp. v. Superior Court (1988) 203 Cal. App. 3d 656, 250 Cal. Rptr. 57 , are discussed in § 178.60[3][b]. In denying a peremptory writ of mandate and discharging the alternative writ, the court of appeal said that a business proprietor owes a clear duty of care to his or her customers (his or her business invitees) to protect them when they come on his or her land, even from the wrongful acts of third persons which the proprietor has reasonable cause to anticipate (203 Cal. App. 3d 656, 664) .

[d] Injury on Adjacent Property Controlled by Defendant

In Morris v. De La Torre (2005) 36 Cal. 4th 260, 30 Cal. Rptr. 3d 173, 113 P.3d 1182 , the plaintiff and his friends were attacked late at night by two gang members in a parking lot in front of an all-night restaurant located in a strip mall. After arriving at the restaurant, the plaintiff and two of his friends had waited in the parking lot while two other friends went inside to purchase food. The plaintiff was a regular customer at the restaurant, although he did not purchase food on that particular night. While the plaintiff and his friends were waiting, two members of a local street gang arrived and started a fight with the plaintiff. After punching the plaintiff, one of the attackers went inside the restaurant and obtained a knife from the kitchen area behind the counter. Although his friends tried to aid him, the plaintiff was stabbed multiple times during the attack in the parking lot, and after he tried to flee down a neighboring street, his attackers followed him and stabbed him several more times. One of the plaintiff's friends eventually went into a nearby business where he was able to use a phone to call 911. The police arrived approximately four minutes after that call was made. At no time during the assault did anyone employed at the restaurant attempt to aid the plaintiff or his friends by calling for the police, even though the front of the restaurant had a large window, and everyone inside the restaurant witnessed the fight as it was developing. Furthermore, none of the employees made any attempt to stop the attacker from retrieving a knife from the kitchen. In addition, the restaurant had a phone right behind the counter that was below counter height, and arguably an employee could have called 911 without being spotted by the gang members. Nonetheless, the employees told police they were too frightened by the gang members to call for help, although evidence suggested that the real reason the police were not called was because many of the employees were in the country illegally. In addition, the restaurant owner later claimed that the phone behind the counter was not working on the date of the assault, although he was unable to provide proof of this claim, and the phone company had no records of a service request. The plaintiff sued the restaurant for failing to take any action to aid the plaintiff during the attack, but the trial court granted summary judgment for the defendant. The plaintiff appealed, and the court of appeal reversed. The court of appeal held that a special relationship existed between the restaurant and the plaintiff, which imposed a duty on the restaurant to take reasonable action to protect the plaintiff under the circumstances, and that a triable issue of fact existed as to whether the restaurant breached that duty. The restaurant appealed.

The California Supreme Court affirmed the court of appeal's decision, thereby reversing the trial court's grant of summary judgment. The Court agreed that the restaurant had a special relationship with the plaintiff that placed a duty on the restaurant's employees to take reasonable action under the circumstances to assist the plaintiff, including a duty to call 911 if they could do so without increasing the danger to themselves (36 Cal. 4th 260, 277-278) . In the course of its decision, the Court rejected the restaurant's argument that no special relationship existed between the restaurant and the plaintiff because plaintiff was not a customer at the time of the attack, but was merely waiting in front of the restaurant with friends in a parking lot that was not under the restaurant's exclusive control. The Court held that even though he was not a customer at the time, the plaintiff was still an invitee of the business because he arrived there with friends who did intend to purchase food. Moreover, the plaintiff, who had eaten at the restaurant before, was a potential future customer and was within the "class of persons a merchant normally desires to have observe and inspect [his or her] merchandise, whether or not [that person] was in a position to make a purchase on the particular evening" (36 Cal. 4th 260, 271-273) . Addressing the fact that the injuries occurred on adjacent property, the Court reaffirmed that a proprietor's duty based on a special relationship extends beyond the structure to adjacent areas within the proprietor's control. The Court found sufficient control in this particular case because customers and other invitees regularly used the parking lot while patronizing the restaurant, the restaurant was aware of this and posted on the window to advertise to those in the parking lot, the fight occurred in the area of the parking lot immediately in front of the restaurant, the restaurant's lease gave to it nonexclusive use of the parking lot, and the restaurant realized a significant commercial benefit from its customers' use of the lot. In addition, no other store was open in the strip mall at the time of the attack, effectively giving the restaurant sole use and control of the lot (36 Cal. 4th 260, 274) .

The facts and the procedural background of Southland Corp. v. Superior Court (1988) 203 Cal. App. 3d 656, 250 Cal. Rptr. 57 , are discussed in § 178.60[3][b]. In denying a peremptory writ of mandate and discharging the alternative writ, the court of appeal said that the existence of a business proprietor's duty of care with respect to patrons injured by the criminal acts of third persons that occur on property adjacent to the business premises that is neither owned nor possessed by the proprietor, depends on the proprietor's actual or apparent control of the adjacent property (203 Cal. App. 3d 656, 662) . The court explained that, although it is true that a landowner has a special duty to protect his or her invitees from the conduct of third persons, the imposition of liability on this ground, subject to a number of exceptions not relevant to the case before it, is limited to those cases where the plaintiff is injured on premises which are owned, possessed, or controlled by the defendant (203 Cal. App. 3d 656, 664) . The court said that, although the question of the extent of the use of the adjacent property by defendants and the consequent control over it which they apparently exercised was far from clear, the record reflected evidence, and legitimate inferences therefrom, that could support a jury's conclusionthat the defendants did exercise sufficient control over the lot so as to legally permit the imposition of a duty to those customers using the lot (203 Cal. App. 3d 656, 666) . The court said that when there is evidence that defendants received a commercial advantage from property they apparently had a leasehold right to use (which use by their customers they at least passively encouraged) and where their business was itself the attraction for both customers and loiterers, it is overly simplistic for the issue of control to be resolved solely by reference to a property boundary line and the fortuitous cirumstance that the attack on the plaintiff too place just 10 feet beyond it. The court said that it could not conclude that these circumstances establish that defendants did exercise control over the adjacent lot, but it found they were sufficient to raise an issue of fact that must be resolved by a jury (203 Cal. App. 3d 656, 667) .

[e] Duty to Provide Security Guards Because of Occurrence of Prior Similar Incidents

In Ann M. v. Pacific Plaza Shopping Ctr. (1993) 6 Cal. 4th 666, 25 Cal. Rptr. 2d 137, 863 P.2d 207 , plaintiff, an employee at a photo service store in the shopping mall owned by defendant, was raped and robbed in the store by an armed intruder. Violent crimes had previously occurred in the area where the mall was located, and transients had been loitering in the common areas of the mall. However, criminal activity at the mall itself prior to the rape of plaintiff was limited to bank robberies, purse snatchings, and assaults, and plaintiff presented no evidence that defendant had knowledge of these crimes. Defendant moved for summary judgment on the grounds that it owed no legal duty to plaintiff because the rape was unforeseeable. Plaintiff argued that the presence of transients made the attack foreseeable and that providing security patrols would have fulfilled defendant's duty to protect her. The trial court granted defendant's motion, and the court of appeal affirmed the trial court, but on the grounds that defendant's duty to take reasonable precautions did not extend to hiring security guards. Plaintiff appealed.

The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that "refinement" of the decision in Isaacs v. Huntington Memorial Hospital [Isaacs v. Huntington Mem'l Hosp. (1985) 38 Cal. 3d 112, 211 Cal. Rptr. 356, 695 P.2d 653] was necessary in light of the increase in violent crime in today's society and the public policy against making landowners the insurers of public safety. The Court revived the "prior similar incidents" rule rejected in Isaacs and replaced by Isaacs with the "totality of the circumstances" rule. The Court held that, in determining the scope of a landowner's duty, the foreseeability of the harm to be prevented must be balanced against the burdensomeness of the security measures provided by the landowner. Expensive measures require a high degree of foreseeability, which rarely, if ever, can be proven in the absence of prior similar incidents. Therefore, evidence of prior similar incidents is required to establish that third-party crime on a landowner's premises was so highly foreseeable that the landowner had a duty of care to provide security guards. Applying this rule, the Court concluded that the crimes that had previously occurred in the mall were not similar to the violent rape suffered by the plaintiff, and that evidence of the presence of transients in the mall and a high statistical crime rate in the surrounding area also did not qualify as evidence of prior similar incidents (6 Cal. 4th 666, 678-680) .

[f] Duty to Protect Existed Despite Absence of Prior Incidents

In Delgado v. Trax Bar & Grill (2005) 36 Cal. 4th 224, 30 Cal. Rptr. 3d 145, 113 P.3d 1159 , the plaintiff was attacked in the parking lot of a bar. The plaintiff had arrived at the bar with his wife and some friends. While drinking, the plaintiff had noticed another patron and his friends staring at the plaintiff, and he stared back. Eventually, the plaintiff's wife told the security guard stationed inside the bar about the situation, fearing that there could be a fight. Determining that it would be easier to ask the plaintiff to leave than to confront the other group of men, the security guard did so, and the plaintiff agreed to leave to avoid any trouble. The plaintiff, his wife, and his friends left the bar and went to their car in the parking lot, but they were followed by the other group of men. As they got to their car, 12 to 20 other men jumped out from behind cars and a dumpster and attacked the plaintiff. Another security guard, who was normally stationed in the parking lot, but was absent when the fight started, called 911 during the ensuing fight. The police arrived and arrested the man who instigated the attack on the plaintiff, and this man was later convicted on felony charges. The plaintiff sued the bar on a premises liability theory, and after trial, the jury found in the plaintiff's favor and awarded economic damages. The defendant moved for a new trial on the grounds that it owed no duty to protect the plaintiff because there was no evidence of prior similar criminal assaults on the premises or in the vicinity, and therefore the attack was unforeseeable as a matter of law. The trial court denied the motion, and the defendant appealed. The court of appeal reversed the judgment for the plaintiff, concluding that because the type of coordinated attack that occurred in this case was not foreseeable, the defendant had no duty to employ guards to protect the plaintiff. The plaintiff appealed.

The California Supreme Court reversed the court of appeal and remanded for further proceedings. The Court summarized the principles that had been established in its past decisions concerning the degree of foreseeability necessary to impose a duty of care on a business proprietor to take steps to protect patrons or invitees from third-party criminal conduct. The Court noted that the degree of foreseeability needed to impose a particular duty to prevent harm varies depending on the burden of imposing thepreventative measures suggested by the plaintiff in the particular case. A heightened degree of foreseeability is necessary to impose a duty on a defendant to take great or onerous preventative security measures, including but not limited to a duty to provide security guards. To establish this heightened degree of foreseeability, a plaintiff must provide evidence of prior similar criminal incidents or other indications of a reasonably foreseeable risk of violent criminal assaults in that location. By contrast, a lesser degree of foreseeability, one not requiring evidence of prior similar incidents on or near the premises, is all that is required if the plaintiff seeks to impose a duty to take preventative measures that are simple or create only a minimal burden on the defendant (36 Cal. 4th 224, 243-244 & n.24). In this particular case, the Court held that given the absence of prior similar incidents, the plaintiff failed to show the degree of heightened foreseeability that would be necessary to impose a duty on the defendant to take burdensome advance measures, such as employing additional security guards (36 Cal. 4th 224, 245) . However, the Court held that the record supported a finding that the defendant had a duty to take some less burdensome action to protect the plaintiff, given the actual advance warning provided by the plaintiff's wife that trouble was imminent. For example, the interior security guard at the bar might have been able to forestall trouble by trying to dissuade the attackers that had been inside the bar from leaving the bar after the plaintiff and his wife and friends left. Alternatively, the interior guard could have checked to see that the exterior guard was posted in the parking lot and alerted to the potential for a fight (36 Cal. 4th 224, 245-247) . Therefore, the court of appeal erred in finding that the defendant owed no duty to the plaintiff, and the Supreme Court remanded to that court to address whether sufficient evidence existed in the record to support the jury's finding that the defendant breached its duty of care and that any breach was the cause of the plaintiff's injury (36 Cal. 4th 224, 250) .

The facts and procedural background of Ann M. v. Pacific Plaza Shopping Ctr. (1993) 6 Cal. 4th 666, 25 Cal. Rptr. 2d 137, 863 P.2d 207 , are discussed in § 178.60[3][e]. Defendant argued, and the Court agreed, that, in the absence of prior incidents of violent crime, defendant had no duty to plaintiff, who was raped on defendant's premises, to provide security guards. The Court held that the scope of an owner's or possessor's duty is determined partly by balancing the foreseeability of harm against the burdensomeness of the security measures the owner or possessor is required to provide. When the burden is great, such as the expense of security guards, a high degree of foreseeability is required and cannot be established without proof of prior similar incidents. However, if harm can be prevented by simpler and less expensive measures, an owner or possessor has the duty to provide them even if the harm is less foreseeable, presumably because of the absence of prior similar incidents (6 Cal. 4th 666, 678-679) .

[g] Duty to Take Minimal Measures to Assist Against Presently-Occurring Criminal Conduct

The facts and procedural background of Morris v. De La Torre (2005) 36 Cal. 4th 260, 30 Cal. Rptr. 3d 173, 113 P.3d 1182 , are discussed in § 178.60[3][d]. The Supreme Court held that to protect invitees from criminal conduct that is presently occurring or about to occur, store or restaurant employees may have a duty to take reasonable and minimally burdensome measures to assist, if those measures can be undertaken without increasing the risk of harm to the employees or other persons. Such minimally burdensome measures could include issuing a warning or calling 911 for assistance. However, the Court stopped short of placing an absolute duty to call 911 under all circumstances, and held that in this particular case, there was a triable issue of fact as to whether the restaurant employees involved acted reasonably under the circumstances (36 Cal. 4th 260, 277-278) .

[h] Security Guard Owes Duty of Protection to Invitees

In Marois v. Royal Investigation & Patrol, Inc. (1984) 162 Cal. App. 3d 193, 208 Cal. Rptr. 384 , defendant, a private security service, contracted to provide security for a fast food restaurant. While plaintiff was in his car at the drive-up window, two men were vandalizing a photo service kiosk in the same parking lot. Plaintiff approached the scene and was later assaulted by one vandal who had not been persuaded by defendant guards' verbal attempts to prevent the attack. Plaintiff brought suit against the assailant, the restaurant, and defendants. After the restaurant settled out of court, the trial court granted defendants' motion for nonsuit. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. In its analysis the court discussed the concept of duty and the relationship between landowners and invitees. The court found the relationship between a business and its customers to be a special relationship, requiring the business to take affirmative action to control the wrongful acts of third persons that threaten invitees when it has reasonable cause to anticipate those acts and the probability of resultant injury. Just as a business may be liable for failure to take reasonable precautions to protect its customers, a security guard hired by the business should be liable to an injured customer when the guard fails to act as would a reasonable security guard under similar circumstances and that failure causes the customer's injury. By contracting with the business to provide security, the security service creates a special relationship between itself and the business's customers. This relationship, in and of itself, is sufficient to impose on the guard the obligation to act affirmatively to protect the customers while they are on the business premises (162 Cal. App. 3d 193, 199-200) .

NOTE:

Because of the procedural posture of this case, the court had no occasion to discuss the effect of the guard's liability on the liability of the business that hired the guard. Presumably, in a case in which the business is still a defendant, the business could be held vicariously liable for the negligence of the guard.

[i] Proof of Causation

In Sandoval v. Bank of Am. (2002) 94 Cal. App. 4th 1378, 115 Cal. Rptr. 2d 128 , the plaintiffs brought a wrongful death action against a bank after their decedent was shot and killed while attempting to resist an assailant in the bank's parking lot. The plaintiffs alleged that the bank, which had only one unarmed security guard in the interior of the bank, was negligent in failing to provide adequate security measures to prevent the attack. The plaintiffs' expert testified at trial that the attack would have been prevented had the bank stationed two armed security guards in the parking lot. During deliberations, in response to a written question from the jury, the trial court instructed the jury that a special verdict question that asked the jury to decide whether the criminal assault would have been prevented if the defendant had not been negligent meant that the jury must decide whether the attack would absolutely have been prevented if the defendant had not been negligent. The jury then went on to find that the defendant was negligent, but that the attack would not have been prevented even if the defendant had acted without negligence. Judgment was entered for the defendant, and the plaintiff appealed, arguing that the trial court's answer to the jury's question effectively established an erroneous "absolute" standard of causation.

The court of appeal reversed the judgment. After reviewing applicable case law, the court concluded that the applicable standard of causation in these cases was the "substantial factor" standard. Under this standard, a plaintiff in an action to recover for the failure to provide adequate security measures to prevent a criminal attack by a third party need only show that the defendant's negligence was a substantial factor in bringing about the injury. In other words, the plaintiff is required to show by a preponderance of the evidence that the proposed security measures would more likely than not have prevented the attack, not that they would have absolutely prevented the attack (94 Cal. App. 4th 1378, 1385-1387) . Therefore, the trial court's answer to the jury's question was error in that it suggested to the jury that the plaintiff was required to show that the attack definitely would not have occurred if the bank had not been negligent. Because the trial court's error was prejudicial to the plaintiff, the judgment for defendant was reversed (94 Cal. App. 4th 1378, 1388-1389) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Duty to Protect Against Wrongful Conduct of Third Persons

In Tan v. Arnel Management Co. (2009) 170 Cal. App. 4th 1087, 88 Cal. Rptr. 3d 754 , plaintiff was seriously injured when he was shot in the neck during an attempted car jacking in an ungated parking lot adjacent to the leasing office of a large apartment complex at which plaintiff was a tenant. The trial court granted judgment on the pleadings in favor of the apartment owners, but the court of appeal reversed. The court of appeal held that the owners had a duty of care to either move existing security gates so that they provided protection around the leasing office and its adjacent parking lot, which was used as an overflow lot for nightly parking by tenants, or otherwise install a very similar gate around that area, which according to the existing evidence would require a minor gate extension over a small area (170 Cal. App. 4th 1087, 1098-1100) . Because the court concluded that these security measures proposed by plaintiff would not be very burdensome, the court held that heightened foreseeability of the attempted car jacking that resulted in serious injury to plaintiff was not required. Therefore, evidence of three violent assaults in ungated parking areas on the apartment grounds in the two years prior to plaintiff's assault was sufficient to meet plaintiff's burden of showing a reasonably foreseeable risk of violent criminal assaults on the property, even though his attack involved a gun and the other violent assaults did not (170 Cal. App. 4th 1087, 1099-1101) .

In Barber v. Chang (2007) 151 Cal. App. 4th 1456, 60 Cal. Rptr. 3d 760 , plaintiff was the former tenant of an apartment fourplex who was shot by a current tenant with a shotgun. Plaintiff sued the owner of the apartment on the grounds that the owner knew that the tenant posed a risk to other persons, and specifically to plaintiff, but failed to take any steps to reduce the danger. Plaintiff introduced evidence that plaintiff's companion had visited the apartments about three weeks before the shooting, at which time the tenant had pointed a shotgun at her, threatened plaintiff with harm should he return, and also pointed the shotgun at plaintiff's companion's mother, who still lived at the apartments. His companion's mother sent a certified letter the next day to the owner describing the incident in detail and expressing her fear that she and others were in danger from this tenant. Upon receipt of the letter, the landlord advised the mother that he could do nothing unless she filed a police report or obtained a restraining order. Nothing further was done, however, and the shooting took place a few weeks later when plaintiff returned to the apartments on an errand. The trial court granted summary judgment for the apartment owner, but the court of appeal reversed. The court held that the apartment owner owed a duty of care to plaintiff to take reasonable measures to prevent the shooting. The letter provided sufficient advance knowledge that the tenant had a dangerous firearm and had been threatening specific persons with harm while brandishing that firearm. The threat of harm to plaintiff or another was sufficiently foreseeable to impose a duty of care under those circumstances. While the landlord based his defense almost entirely on the lack of a duty to provide a security guard for the complex, the court of appeal noted that the plaintiff was not arguing that the duty owed by the defendant extended to the duty to provide a security guard, merely that a duty was owed to take some preventive measures, even minimally burdensome measures such as calling the police (151 Cal. App. 4th 1456, 1466-1468). The court remanded to the trial court for a determination of what measures would have been reasonable for the landlord to take under the circumstances and for a determination of whether the landlord violated his duty of care and whether that violation caused plaintiff's harm (151 Cal. App. 4th 1456, 1468-1470) .

In Madhani v. Cooper (2003) 106 Cal. App. 4th 412, 130 Cal. Rptr. 2d 778 , the plaintiff was a tenant in an apartment building owned by the defendants. Another tenant threw the plaintiff down a set of stairs in the building. Prior to this incident, the plaintiff had reported to the building manager numerous other incidences of physical and verbal abuse by the assailant, but no steps had been taken to protect the plaintiff from the other tenant. The court of appeal held that the defendants owed a duty of care to protect the plaintiff from the assault. The court concluded that the threat of harm to the plaintiff was clearly foreseeable, given the repeated reports to the building manager of the other tenant's prior abuse. The court also briefly applied the other Rowland factors and concluded that they all supported finding a duty of care (106 Cal. App. 4th 412, 415-416) . The court then concluded that triable issues of fact existed as to whether the defendants breached the duty of care and whether any breach was a legal cause of the plaintiff's injuries (106 Cal. App. 4th 412, 417-418) .

In Cantwell v. Peppermill, Inc. (1994) 25 Cal. App. 4th 1797, 31 Cal. Rptr. 2d 246 , plaintiffs were a married couple who were dining at the restaurant, bar, and lounge (at which alcoholic beverages were served) operated by defendants. Another patron who had been furnished alcoholic beverages by defendants assaulted and stabbed the husband. Plaintiffs filed an action for personal injuries and loss of consortium, alleging premises liability because defendants had known for three years about assaults committed on the premises, but had failed to warn or otherwise protect its patrons. Thetrial court sustained defendants' demurrer based on Bus. & Prof. Code § 25602(b), which provides that a furnisher of alcoholic beverages to intoxicated persons is not civilly liable to any injured person for injuries resulting from the intoxication of the consumer of the alcoholic beverages. The trial court then granted judgment of dismissal, and plaintiffs appealed. The court of appeal reversed and remanded, holding that Bus. & Prof. Code § 25602 does not preclude all actions against innkeepers merely because they furnish alcohol. A proprietor has a duty of care to protect patrons from the reasonably foreseeable criminal or tortious conduct of third persons, whether or not these third persons purchased or consumed alcohol on the proprietor's premises (25 Cal. App. 4th 1797, 1801) . The court held that the purpose of Bus. & Prof. Code § 25602 was to immunize defendants from liability to plaintiffs injured by the intoxicated drivers to whom defendants had furnished alcoholic beverages, not to immunize innkeepers who encourage or permit their patrons to become so drunk and belligerent that they assault other patrons (25 Cal. App. 4th 1797, 1802-1803) .

In Cohen v. Southland Corp. (1984) 157 Cal. App. 3d 130, 203 Cal. Rptr. 572 , plaintiff was injured by a person robbing the all-night convenience store plaintiff was patronizing. A summary judgment was entered against him in his action against the store, and he appealed. The court of appeal held that the store had a duty to take reasonable measures to protect its patrons against robberies, because the store had previously been robbed, uncontroverted statistics showed that a robbery was forseeable and the harm was foreseeable (157 Cal. App. 3d 130, 137-141) . The court also held that the reasonableness of defendant's protective measures was an issue of fact (157 Cal. App. 3d 130, 137-143) . Therefore, the court reversed the summary judgment.

[b] Duty of Business Proprietor

Cantwell v. Peppermill, Inc. (1994) 25 Cal. App. 4th 1797, 31 Cal. Rptr. 2d 246 , is discussed in § 178.60[4][a].

[c] Duty to Provide Security Guards Because of Occurrence of Prior Similar Incidents

In Claxton v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (2003) 108 Cal. App. 4th 327, 133 Cal. Rptr. 2d 425 , the plaintiff was an African-American man who was assaulted by an Hispanic gang member in a racially-motivated attack at a gas station. The plaintiff sued the owners and operators of the station, arguing that the amount of prior criminal conduct on the premises imposed on them a duty to provide security guards or take other protective measures to protect patrons. The trial court granted the defendants' motion for nonsuit, but the court of appeal reversed. The court of appeal held that the plaintiff had provided substantial evidence of prior violent crime on the premises, even though his assault was racially motivated and the earlier criminal activity may not have been. The evidence showed that the station had been the site of many recent robberies and attacks and that violent gang activity was rampant on the premises and in the neighborhood. Despite the lack of evidence showing that the earlier crimes were specifically racially motivated, the court noted that all that is required is proof of prior similar incidents, not proof of prior identical incidents (108 Cal. App. 4th 327, 338-339) .

[d] Duty to Protect Exists Despite Absence of Prior Similar Incidents

In Ambriz v. Kelegian (2007) 146 Cal. App. 4th 1519, 53 Cal. Rptr. 3d 700 , plaintiff brought a malpractice case against her former attorneys for negligence in prosecuting plaintiff's premises liability lawsuit against her landlord. The premises liability lawsuit stemmed from plaintiff's rape in her apartment complex by a known transient who, plaintiff argued, gained entrance to the complex through outer gates that were not maintained in working order. The trial court in the malpractice action granted summary judgment for the attorneys after concluding that plaintiff could not show that she would have succeeded in the underlying premises liability action because she could not show causation. The court of appeal in the malpractice action reversed. The court held that plaintiff could have established in the underlying lawsuit that her landlord owed her a duty of care, specifically that the landlord owed a duty to maintain the outer doors and locks in working condition, and that the breach of that duty was a substantial factor in causing the rape. Tenants had complained to the security guard, who had in turn notified the landlord, that many of the outer doors were not closing or locking properly, or were being left open, and that unauthorized men were gaining access to the complex. Given this knowledge, the risk of harm should have been foreseeable to the landlord. The court concluded that requiring an apartment complex owner to maintain existing outside gates and locks in working condition imposed a minimal burden on the landlord, especially given that the landlord originally installed the locks and gates as security measures to limit access (146 Cal. App. 4th 1519, 1534-1535) .

In Vasquez v. Residential Invs., Inc. (2004) 118 Cal. App. 4th 269, 12 Cal. Rptr. 3d 846 , the plaintiffs brought a wrongful death action against the defendant, their landlord, based on the defendant's failure to replace a missing glass pane in the door to their apartment, which allowed the decedent's estranged boyfriend to enter the apartment and murder her. The trial court granted summary judgment for the defendant, but the court of appeal reversed. The court of appeal imposed a duty on the defendant to replace the glass pane in the front door of the apartment after determining that the burden to make the replacement was minimal and the risk of harm sufficiently foreseeable. The court noted that in determining whether to impose a duty of care in a particular case, a lesser degree of foreseeability is required if the harm can be prevented by simple means (118 Cal. App. 4th 269, 286) . The plaintiffs had previously complained to the defendant that the missing pane was a security risk, at least one aborted attempt by an intruder to enter the apartment had occurred, and there had been other reported assaults in other apartments in the apartment building (118 Cal. App. 4th 269, 286-287) . Although the court imposed a duty in this case, there remained triable issues as to whether the defendant's failure to replace the pane was a legal cause of the murder (118 Cal. App. 4th 269, 288-289) .

In Robison v. Six Flags Theme Parks, Inc. (1998) 64 Cal. App. 4th 1294, 75 Cal. Rptr. 2d 838 , plaintiffs were injured when an out-of-control automobile struck their picnic area, which was located in the middle of the parking area of defendant's amusement park. The trial court granted summary judgment for defendant, agreeingthat the absence of prior similar incidents foreclosed the imposition of a duty on defendant to prevent such accidents. The court of appeal reversed the summary judgment. The court of appeal held that the owners of the amusement park had a duty to take reasonable measures to protect patrons utilizing the picnic area from a runaway car, since the configuration of the lot was such that the danger was readily apparent even without prior similar incidents. The court noted that automobiles using one lane of the lot would be headingstraight toward the picnic table if they failed to stop as marked on the pavement and make a 90-degree turn at the perimeter of the picnic area, the posted speed limit was 25 miles an hour, there was no barrier or curb separating the lot from the picnic area, and automobiles only had to travel over 40 feet of grass once leaving the parking lot before striking the picnic table. In finding that a duty existed, the court stressed the lack of a barrier and the fact that the location of the picnic table invited patrons to place themselves in a fixed area in the direct line of traffic (64 Cal. App. 4th 1294, 1301-1303) .

In Musgrove v. Ambrose Props. (1978) 87 Cal. App. 3d 44, 150 Cal. Rptr. 722 , plaintiff was injured after being hit by a bicycle rider on a passageway of a shopping center. The passageway was located between the sidewalk that ran in front of the shops and the parking lot. Judgment was entered in favor of plaintiff and the insurance carrier against the owner of the shopping center. Judgments were also entered in favor of the bicycle rider and his mother. Judgments notwithstanding the verdict were entered on the grounds that it was against the law and there was insufficient evidence to support the verdict. The court's reasoning was that the owner of a shopping center owed no duty to pedestrians to control bicycle riding. The court of appeal reversed. Defendant knew that bicycles were ridden at the shopping center and that pedestrians were also present on the premises. In light of these facts, the court stated that it could not be said as a matter of law that the possibility of a bicyclist striking a pedestrian was so remote and unexpected that an ordinary man should not reasonably have foreseen it, and the fact that no similar accident had occurred did not render an accident between a pedestrian and a bicyclist unforeseeable (87 Cal. App. 3d 44, 52) .

[e] Security Guard Owes Duty of Protection to Invitees

In Mata v. Mata (2003) 105 Cal. App. 4th 1121, 130 Cal. Rptr. 2d 141 , the plaintiffs brought actions for negligence and wrongful death against the proprietor of a bar and the owner of the property. The lawsuit stemmed from an incident in which a former patron, who had previously been banned from the bar, was told to leave the bar, did so, but immediately fired gunshots into the bar from outside the front door. For general security at the bar, the proprietor had previously hired a security guard and taken other measures to protect patrons at the bar. However, at the time of the shooting, the regular security guard had taken a break and asked the proprietor's brother to assume his duties. The trial court granted summary judgment for the defendants on the grounds that the shootings were unforeseeable. The court of appeal affirmed the summary judgment for the property owner, who was not in possession of the property and had no knowledge of a dangerous condition, but reversed the summary judgment for the proprietor. The court noted that regardless of the foreseeability of the shooting, the proprietor assumed a duty to protect patrons by hiring a guard. Therefore, the proprietor could be liable if the proprietor was negligent in hiring, retaining, or training the guard, or if the guard acted unreasonably under the circumstances. The court then held that a triable issue of fact existed as to whether the guard or the proprietor acted unreasonably (105 Cal. App. 4th 1121, 1129) .

In Trujillo v. G.A. Enterprises, Inc. (1995) 36 Cal. App. 4th 1105, 43 Cal. Rptr. 2d 36 , plaintiff was injured in a fight inside a McDonald's restaurant, in the presence of a security guard who was hired by the restaurant to protect its patrons. Plaintiff sued the management company that supervised the property and the McDonald's franchise, claiming that the security guard left the scene, failed to fulfill his duty of preventing trouble, and that defendants failed to hire competent security despite their knowledge of crime problems. The trial court granted a summary judgment for the defense on the grounds that defendants owed no duty to prevent the third party criminal attack because it was unforeseeable, and that defendants had no notice of prior similar incidents occurring on the premises. The court of appeal reversed, holding that the restaurant had a duty to protect its patron, and there was a triable issue of fact as to whether the security guard acted reasonably under the circumstances (36 Cal. App. 4th 1105, 1108-1109) .

[f] Proof of Causation

In Raven H. v. Gamette (2007) 157 Cal. App. 4th 1017, 68 Cal. Rptr. 3d 897 , plaintiff was raped in her apartment by a non-tenant of the apartment complex, and the assailant was subsequently apprehended and convicted. While plaintiff did not know exactly how the assailant gained access to the apartment complex, he entered her apartment through a window in her dining area after he removed the window screen. Plaintiff admitted that she left the window open that night because it was hot and the apartment had no air conditioning. The trial court granted summary judgment for the apartment owner on the grounds of lack of causation, but the court of appeal reversed, finding triable issues of fact. The court noted that there was no evidence of forced entry into the complex, and the apartment manager admitted that tenants sometimes left the pedestrian gates propped open. In addition, at least one side wall was short enough for a person to climb. Despite uncertainty as to how the assailant gained access to the complex, however, plaintiff had also argued that the landlord's negligence in securing plaintiff's specific apartment was a substantial factor in causing the assault, and the court of appeal agreed that the evidence was sufficient to support such a finding. Plaintiff alleged that the landlord had failed to take the same measures to secure her apartment that had been taken to secure other first-story apartments in the complex. Specifically, the landlord failed to provide her with security bars on the windows or locks that would have allowed her to open her windows a safe amount while allowing ventilation. Plaintiff also alleged that the landlord failed to keep the vegetation at her windows trimmed and the lighting in front of the apartment turned on, and these failures allowed the assailant to enter the apartment under cover of darkness and shrouded in secrecy. Although plaintiff's own conduct may have contributed to the assailant gaining access to the apartment, the court of appeal held that this evidence would be sufficient to support a jury finding that the landlord's actions were also a substantial factor in causing plaintiff's injury (157 Cal. App. 4th 1017, 1027-1028) .

The background of Ambriz v. Kelegian (2007) 146 Cal. App. 4th 1519, 53 Cal. Rptr. 3d 700 , is discussed in § 178.60[4][d]. The court of appeal in that case also held that plaintiff, who was raped in her apartment complex by a known transient, had provided sufficient evidence in her premises liability action to show a triable issue of fact on causation. In that particular case, while there was no conclusive evidence as to how the rapist gained access to the complex, the evidence showed that a number of entry gatesto the complex were not closing properly or not locking, tenants had complained about it to the complex's security guard, and it had been reported to management. In addition, there were numerous prior reports of unauthorized male intruders gaining access to the complex, apparently through these gates, and the rapist himself had been reported on the grounds numerous times. Given that the rapist was known to be an unauthorized transient, and there was no evidence of a forced entry anywhere on the premises at the time of the rape, the court held that a reasonable person could conclude that it was more likely than not that the rapist used the malfunctioning gates to gain access to the complex (146 Cal. App. 4th 1519, 1536-1538) .

§ 178.61 Supporting Contention That Proprietor of Sports Facility Is Liable for Injury to Spectator Caused by Risk Inherent in Game When Risk Not Common Knowledge

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT PROPRIETOR IS LIABLE FOR THE HARM TO PLAINTIFF SPECTATOR BECAUSE A PROPRIETOR OF A SPORTS FACILITY IS LIABLE TO A SPECTATOR FOR HARM DUE TO RISKS OF INJURY INHERENT IN THE GAME THAT ARE NOT COMMON KNOWLEDGE.

Risk Not One of Common Knowledge. A proprietor of a sports facility is liable for injury to a spectator if the risk that resulted in the injury, although inherent in the game, is not one of common knowledge (Goade v. Benevolent & Protective Order of Elks (1963) 213 Cal. App. 2d 189, 194, 28 Cal. Rptr. 669 ; Thurman v. Ice Palace (1939) 36 Cal. App. 2d 364, 368, 97 P.2d 999).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a party's contention that a proprietor of a sports facility is liable for injury to a spectator. The contention may be used if the harm caused to plaintiff was due to a risk that was not one of common knowledge.

These points and authorities may be combined with a form of memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel is responding to the contention that a proprietor of a sports facility is not liable for injury to a spectator. It should be noted that cases that hold that a proprietor may be liable if the risk that resulted in the injury is not a matter of common knowledge have done so in the context of deciding whether the spectator is held to assume the risk as a matter of law. These cases have held that because the risk is not a matter of common knowledge the spectator cannot be held to have assumed the riskas a matter of law and that the question is one of fact [see, e.g., Goade v. Benevolent & Protective Order of Elks (1963) 213 Cal. App. 2d 189, 194, 28 Cal. Rptr. 669 ; Shurman v. Fresno Ice Rink (1949) 91 Cal. App. 2d 469, 476-477, 205 P.2d 77 (discussed in § 178.61[4][a]); Thurman v. Ice Palace (1939) 36 Cal. App. 2d 364, 368, 97 P.2d 999 (discussed in § 178.61[3][a])]. These cases were decided against the pre-comparative negligence backdrop when assumption of the risk as a variant of contributory negligence was a separate defense [see § 178.69[2]].

[b] Argument

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in § 178.69 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[d] Assumption of Risk

Cases holding that a proprietor of a sports facility may be liable if the risk resulting in the injury is not a matter of common knowledge have done so in the context of deciding whether the spectator assumed the risk as a matter of law. These cases have held that because the particular risk was not a matter of common knowledge, the spectator did not assume the risk as a matter of law and that therefore the question is one of fact [see, e.g., Goade v. Benevolent & Protective Order of Elks (1963) 213 Cal. App. 2d 189, 194, 28 Cal. Rptr. 669 ; Shurman v. Fresno Ice Rink (1949) 91 Cal. App. 2d 469, 476-477, 205 P.2d 77 (discussed in § 178.61[4][a]); Thurman v. Ice Palace (1939) 36 Cal. App. 2d 364, 366-368, 97 P.2d 999 (discussed in § 178.61[3][a])]. These cases were decided before contributory negligence was abolished in favor of the doctrine of comparative negligence and therefore while assumption of risk was still a separate defense as a variant of contributory negligence [see Li v. Yellow Cab (1975) 13 Cal. 3d 804, 824, 119 Cal. Rptr. 858, 532 P.2d 1226] .

However, common knowledge of risk may no longer be relevant in determining whether a plaintiff's recovery is barred by assumption of risk, according to the lead opinion of the California Supreme Court in Knight v. Jewett [Knight v. Jewett (1992) 3 Cal. 4th 296, 316, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 2, 834 P.2d 696] . Instead, resolution of the issue appears to turn on whether the defendant's conduct breached a legal duty of care to the plaintiff, not on the plaintiff's subjective knowledge or the reasonableness of the plaintiff's undertaking a known risk [see Knight v. Jewett (1992) 3 Cal. 4th 296, 314-317, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 2, 834 P.2d 696 ; but see dissenting opinions by Kennard, J., Baxter, J., and Panelli, J., advocating an approach based on plaintiff's subjective knowledge].

Although the Court has not yet ruled on the assumption of risk doctrine in the specific context of injury to a spectator at a sporting event, the Court in Knight did address the question of the proper analysis of implied assumption of risk in the context of participants in active sports. The lead opinion concluded that the determination of whether a plaintiff is barred from recovery, on the one hand, or subject to application of comparative fault principles, on the other hand, turns on whether the defendant had a legal duty to avoid certain conduct or to protect the plaintiff against a particular risk of harm [see Knight v. Jewett (1992) 3 Cal. 4th 296, 314-317, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 2, 834 P.2d 696 ; see also Ford v. Gouin (1992) 3 Cal. 4th 339, 342, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 30, 834 P.2d 724] . In determining the duty of a defendant in a particular factual situation, the nature of a defendant's duty in the sports context depends heavily on the nature of the sport itself, and the scope of the legal duty owed by a defendant frequently will also depend on the defendant's role in, or relationship to, the sport. The Court pointed out that cases have analyzed the duty of sports facility owners with regard to spectators not only by virtue of the nature of the sport itself, but also by reference to steps a sponsoring business entity reasonably should be obligated to take in order to minimize risks without altering the nature of a sport [ see Knight v. Jewett (1992) 3 Cal. 4th 296, 317-318, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 2, 834 P.2d 696] .

In a case relying on the assumption of risk analysis of Knight v. Jewett, the court of appeal held that a professional hockey club, the league, and the owners and operators of the hockey arena owed no duty to a spectator to protect her from being hit in the face by a flying puck during pregame warm-ups, which the court noted, and the spectator conceded, was an inherent risk of attending a hockey game [Nemarnik v. Los Angeles Kings Hockey Club (2002) 103 Cal. App. 4th 631, 643, 127 Cal. Rptr. 2d 10] . The court refused to impose a duty to eliminate the danger of flying pucks, concluding that to do so would force the defendants either to provide a floor-to-ceiling protective screen around the rink, which would reduce the quality of everyone's view, or to raise the cost of tickets to cover the increased liability costs, which would make ticket prices too costly for some potential spectators [Nemarnik v. Los Angeles Kings Hockey Club (2002) 103 Cal. App. 4th 631, 641, 127 Cal. Rptr. 2d 10] .

For further discussion of the assumption of risk doctrine as it applies to injuries to spectators at sporting events, see § 178.69. For forms and discussion relating to assumption of risk generally, see Ch. 165, Negligence .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Risk Not One of Common Knowledge

In Goade v. Benevolent & Protective Order of Elks (1963) 213 Cal. App. 2d 189, 28 Cal. Rptr. 669 , plaintiff attended sports car races being held by defendant at a fairgrounds. Plaintiff did not know that a grandstand was available and watched the races along with many other spectators from behind a "snow fence," which separated the spectators from the race course and was approximately 100 feet from the track itself. Plaintiff was injured when a sports car went out of control and crashed through the "snow fence" into the crowd behind it. The trial court granted judgment for nonsuit to defendant at the close of plaintiff's case, and plaintiff appealed to the court of appeal.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that the evidence presented did not establish that plaintiff had assumed the risk as a matter of law and therefore that the question should have gone to the jury. The court noted that cases involving spectators at baseball games have ruled that a spectator assumes the risk of being hit by a fly ball, a common and expected event and therefore a matter of common knowledge, but not the risk of being hit by a flying baseball bat thrown into the stands by a player, which is not. The court held that the risk of a car in a sports car race being driven off the track and through a fence into the spectators is so unexpected and infrequent that it could not be a matter of common knowledge (213 Cal. App. 2d 189, 194) .

In Thurman v. Ice Palace (1939) 36 Cal. App. 2d 364, 97 P.2d 999 , plaintiff, an 18-year-old girl was injured by a flying hockey puck while watching her first ice hockey game from an unscreened box seat. The seats surrounding the ice rink were unscreened except for the sections behind the goals at each end. The unscreened box seats were separated from the rink by a wooden wall. Plaintiff sued the players, the owner of the ice rink, and the manager of the student body of the school sharing the proceeds of the concessions. A directed verdict was granted in favor of defendants and plaintiff appealed. The court of appeal held that a spectator who voluntarily selects an unscreened seat at a hockey game cannot be held as a matter of law to assume the risk of being hit by a puck (36 Cal. App. 2d 364, 366) . In doing so, the court distinguished the case before it from those dealing with baseball games and the risks of harm from thrown or batted balls by stating that the average person of ordinary intelligence is not as familiar with the game of hockey and its attendant risks as the game of baseball, and it is not common knowledge that pucks are liable to be batted into the section occupied by spectators (36 Cal. App. 2d 364, 368) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Risk Not One of Common Knowledge

In Shurman v. Fresno Ice Rink (1949) 91 Cal. App. 2d 469, 205 P.2d 77 , plaintiff was injured while sitting in an unscreened seat and watching her first ice hockey game. Defendant appealed a judgment entered on a jury verdict and a grant of a new trial on the damage issue alone. Although the court of appeal reversed and held that the new trial should have been granted without limitation, the court stated that it could not be held as a matter of law that the general public had become so familiar with the sport of hockey and its attendant hazards so as to bring them within the common knowledge rule and under the doctrine of assumption of risk (91 Cal. App. 2d 469, 477) .

§ 178.62 Supporting Contention That Tenant in Common Is Liable for Negligence of Separate Legal Entity to Which Control and Management of Property Has Been Delegated

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT OWNER, AS A TENANT IN COMMON, IS LIABLE FOR THE INJURIES SUSTAINED BY PLAINTIFF IN THE COMMONLY HELD AREAS OF THE PROPERTY, ALTHOUGH ALL THE TENANTS IN COMMON DELEGATED THE CONTROL AND MANAGEMENT OF THE COMMON AREAS TO A SEPARATE LEGAL ENTITY.

Liability of Tenants in Common for Torts in Common Areas. A tenant in common of real property is liable for harm caused by the negligent failure to maintain common areas in a reasonably safe condition, notwithstanding that the tenant in common may have only a small interest in the property as a whole and that the control and management of the area had been delegated by the tenants in common to a separate legal entity (Davert v. Larson (1985) 163 Cal. App. 3d 407, 412, 209 Cal. Rptr. 445).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a party's contention that tenants in common who delegate the control andmanagement of common areas of the property to a separate legal entity are not immunized from liability for the negligent failure to maintain the common areas in a reasonably safe condition.

[b] Argument

and management of common areas of the property to a separate legal entity, the unsafe condition that proximately caused the injuries complained of, and the failure of the separate legal entity to maintain the common areas in a safe condition.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Liability of Tenants in Common for Torts in Common Areas

In Davert v. Larson (1985) 163 Cal. App. 3d 407, 209 Cal. Rptr. 445 , plaintiffs were injured when an automobile collided with livestock alleged to have escaped through a gap in the fence surrounding property owned by defendant and others that was adjacent to the highway. Defendant owned a 1/2500 interest in the property and argued that he owed no duty of care to plaintiffs as a landowner, because he took title subject to a recorded declaration delegating exclusive control over the property to a specified owners association. The trial court granted defendant's motion for summary judgment, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. Observing that California law does not require insurance to protect third parties in the case of common-area torts, the court stated that relieving individual owners in common of liability would eliminate any motivation on the part of any party to exercise due care in the management and control of commonly owned property, and could leave third parties with no remedy at law. The court held, therefore, that tenants in common of real property who delegate the control and management of the property to a separate legal entity should not be immunized from liability to third parties for tortious conduct (163 Cal. App. 3d 407, 412) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Liability of Tenants in Common for Torts in Common Areas

In Ruoff v. Harbor Creek Cmty. Ass'n (1992) 10 Cal. App. 4th 1624, 13 Cal. Rptr. 2d 755 , individual condominium owners obtained a summary judgment on a complaint against them for damages based on injuries suffered when plaintiff fell backward down stairs in a common area. The trial court concluded that as a matter of law the individual owners could not be held liable. This conclusion was apparently based on three findings. First, the managing association had a $1 million liability insurance policy. Second, the association could assess individual owners a pro-rata contribution in the event a judgment exceeded policy limits. Third, the individual owners had delegated control over the common areas to the managing association. The owners argued that they should be immune from liability under Civ. Code § 1365.7. The court of appeal rejected the owners' argument and reversed. The statute expressly immunizes only volunteer directors and officers of the managing association from cure tort liability when acting within the scope of their duties as directors and officers. It does not apply to individual owners as such, who are liable according to the common law rule [see Davert v. Larson (1985) 163 Cal. App. 3d 407, 412, 209 Cal. Rptr. 445 ; see also § 178.62[3][a]] (10 Cal. App. 4th 1624, 1628-1630) .

§ 178.63 Opposing Contention That Owner or Possessor of Premises Is Liable for Harm Caused by Wrongful Acts of Third Persons--No Duty if Acts Not Reasonably Foreseeable

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT _____ [OWNER or POSSESSOR] IS NOT LIABLE FOR THE HARM TO PLAINTIFF BECAUSE AN OWNER OR POSSESSOR OF PREMISES HAS NO DUTY TO PROTECT THOSE ON THE PREMISES FROM THE CONDUCT OF THIRD PERSONS ON THE PREMISES THAT IS NOT REASONABLY FORESEEABLE.

A. No Duty to Control or Prevent Conduct of Third Persons That Is Not Reasonably Foreseeable. The duty of an owner or possessor of premises to maintain those premises in a safe condition does not extend to protecting those on the premises from the conduct of third persons that is not reasonably foreseeable; to be legally foreseeable, an act must be likely, not simply imaginable or conceivable (Sturgeon v. Curnutt (1994) 29 Cal. App. 4th 301, 306, 308, 34 Cal. Rptr. 2d 498 ; Jefferson v. Quik Korner Mkt., Inc. (1994) 28 Cal. App. 4th 990, 996, 34 Cal. Rptr. 2d 171).

[Optional] B. Landlord Has No Duty to Prevent Consequences of Tenant's Negligence. While a landlord arguably may foresee thathis tenants might carelessly leave their small children unattended and exposed to dangers, a landlord has no duty of care to assure that his tenant's children do not fall out of ordinary second story windows (Pineda v. Ennabe (1998) 61 Cal. App. 4th 1403, 1409, 72 Cal. Rptr. 2d 206).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a party's contention that the owner or possessor of premises had a duty to protect those on the premises from, or control the conduct of, a third person. The basis of opposition is that the third person's conduct was not reasonably foreseeable.

These points and authorities may be combined, if appropriate, with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the liability of the owner or possessor. The points and authorities in this form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief. The issue of whether or not the conduct of the third party was foreseeable, thus imposing a duty on the owner or possessor to control that conduct, may be the subject of a summary judgment [see, e.g., Riley v. Marcus (1981) 125 Cal. App. 3d 103, 109, 177 Cal. Rptr. 827] . The question of duty is a matter of law [Jamison v. Mark C. Bloome Co. (1980) 112 Cal. App. 3d 570, 575, 169 Cal. Rptr. 399] . The question of foreseeability in the context of determining the existence and scope of duty is a question of law to be decided by the court and not a question of fact reserved for the jury [Ann M. v. Pacific Plaza Shopping Ctr. (1993) 6 Cal. 4th 666, 678, 25 Cal. Rptr. 2d 137, 863 P.2d 207 , disapproving Isaacs v. Huntington Mem'l Hosp. (1985) 38 Cal. 3d 112, 126, 127, 130, 211 Cal. Rptr. 356, 695 P.2d 653 ; see § 178.60[3][e]].

If appropriate, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the points and authorities in § 178.60.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Duty to Control or Prevent Conduct of Third Persons That Is Not Reasonably Foreseeable

In Sturgeon v. Curnutt (1994) 29 Cal. App. 4th 301, 34 Cal. Rptr. 2d 498 , defendants rented a house to their son; they knew he had a drinking problem and that he kept firearms in the house. While under the influence of alcohol, the son accidentally fired a gun and shot plaintiff, a visitor at the house. Plaintiff filed suit against defendants for negligence. Defendants moved for nonsuit on the basis that plaintiff's injury was unforeseeable. Plaintiff argued in response that a landlord is liable for injuries caused by a tenant who is an alcoholic and has firearms, because such a tenant is a dangerous condition similar to a tenant's keeping a dangerous dog on the premises. The trial court granted the motion for nonsuit, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, noting that a landlord has no duty to protect persons on the premises from injuries that are not reasonably foreseeable (29 Cal. App. 4th 301, 306) . The court held that plaintiff's injury was not reasonably foreseeable because, contrary to plaintiff's analogy to a vicious dog with a history of attacking and biting people, plaintiff's opening statement offered no evidence that defendants' son had ever harmed anyone due to either his drinking problem or his possession of firearms and no evidence that the son handled firearms unsafely while drunk (29 Cal. App. 4th 301, 307) . Although the combination of drinking and firearms raises the logical possibility of harm to visitors, the court found that nothing put defendants on notice that visitors to the premises were in danger, and therefore they had no duty of care to protect plaintiff from injury (29 Cal. App. 4th 301, 308) .

In Jefferson v. Quik Korner Mkt., Inc. (1994) 28 Cal. App. 4th 990, 34 Cal. Rptr. 2d 171 , defendant owned and operated a convenience store that had a sidewalk six feet wide in front, with a raised curb of more than six inches. At the end of each parking space perpendicular to that sidewalk was a concrete wheelstop that was three feet wide, six inches high, and eight inches deep. Plaintiff made a purchase at the convenience store and was standing outside on the sidewalk. As a vehicle was pulling into a parking space, the driver's foot slipped and hit the accelerator; the vehicle jumped both the curb and the concrete wheelstop, hitting and injuring plaintiff. Plaintiff's guardian ad litem brought suit on his behalf, alleging that defendant was negligent because defendant had failed to install metal posts at the ends of the parking spaces to prevent the vehicle from reaching the sidewalk. Defendant moved for summary judgment, presenting evidence that its parking lot design and construction met or exceeded all city codes and regulations and that there had been no previous incidents ofvehicles striking pedestrians at the store. The trial court granted defendant's motion for summary judgment, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that defendant was not required to take more extensive measures to protect customers because the accident was not sufficiently likely to happen and therefore was not reasonably foreseeable (28 Cal. App. 4th 990, 993) . The court noted that very little California case law deals with cars negligently coming onto the sidewalks of businesses, but that the majority of courts in other states that have considered this scenario have concluded that there is no liability because it is insufficiently likely as a matter of law (28 Cal. App. 4th 990, 993) . With one exception, none of the minority of cases holding that liability was a question of fact for the jury involved facts similar to those before the court; in those cases, either defendant provided customers no protection whatever from encroaching vehicles, or defendant had knowledge of prior similar incidents, or defendant's building design required customers to wait for service by standing near a parking lot or driveway (28 Cal. App. 4th 990, 994-995) . The court found the lone exception unpersuasive, although its facts were substantially similar, because the decision did not explain why the accident (the only one in 8 years at any of defendant's 20 stores) was foreseeable (28 Cal. App. 4th 990, 995) . The court concluded that imposing a duty on defendant to protect its customers from every imaginable incident would be an unreasonable burden, noting that an impregnable barrier would be necessary because a motorcycle can pass between metal posts and a large truck can break through a cement wall (28 Cal. App. 4th 990, 996) .

Pamela W. v. Millsom (1994) 25 Cal. App. 4th 950, 30 Cal. Rptr. 2d 690 , is discussed in § 178.64[3][b]. The court noted that the plaintiff's injuries were caused by a third party who stalked her and that the defendant had no prior knowledge of the likelihood of that conduct (25 Cal. App. 4th 950, 959-960) .

[b] Landlord Has No Duty to Prevent Consequences of Tenant's Negligence

In Pineda v. Ennabe (1998) 61 Cal. App. 4th 1403, 72 Cal. Rptr. 2d 206 ; a minor plaintiff sued her mother's landlord for the personal injuries she sustained when she fell out the second story window of her home, knocking out the screen as she fell. Plaintiff's mother had placed a bed directly under the window and plaintiff was bouncing on the bed without adult supervision shortly before the accident. The trial court granted summary judgment for the landlord stating: "In viewing the photographs of the window and considering the height of the window, the fact that the bed was placed under the window and the minor plaintiff was left unattended, that defendant had met all Building and Safety Code requirements, that there were no prior incidents of injury regarding the windows or screens in the building, it was not foreseeable that a person, especially a minor, would fall out and as such there was no duty on defendant to take protective measures for the window and it was not negligence as a matter of law."

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that the landlord has no duty of care to assure that his tenant's children do not fall out of ordinary second story windows (61 Cal. App. 4th 1403, 1409) . The court applied the factors stated in Rowland v. Christian [Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 Cal. 2d 108, 70 Cal. Rptr. 97, 443 P.2d 561] in determining that: (1) The harm to the plaintiff was not foreseeable. The predominant cause of plaintiff's accident was careless parental placement of a bed under the window, followed by parental negligence in leaving the five-and-a-half-year-old plaintiff unattended and unsupervised. According to the court, while a landlord arguably may foresee that his tenants might carelessly leave their small children unattended and exposed to dangers, he or she was not required to forestall the foreseeable consequences of others' negligence--only his or her own; (2) The degree of certainty that an injury would occur was small; (3) The connection between the landlord's conduct and any such injury was slight; (4) Little moral blame, if any, attached to the landlord's failure to place warning labels, latches, or bars on the window, since reasonable landlords could properly assume that parents would take precautions to supervise their children and prevent them from falling out windows; (5) The policy of preventing future harm would not likely be significantly advanced by imposing a duty here; for while a legally imposed duty to install bars might reduce the risk of falling out, it might create a new, serious risk of trapping occupants during a fire; (6) In light of the millions of apartment windows in the state, the consequences to the community of imposing a new duty of care to prevent children from falling out, would be far reaching. Moreover, such a duty logically would extend as well to other apartment hazards posed by lack of parental supervision; for example protecting unsupervised children from burning themselves on the stove or causing a fire (61 Cal. App. 4th 1403, 1408) .

According to the court, the purpose for requiring a duty as a precondition to negligence liability, was to avoid the extension of liability to every conceivably foreseeable accident, without regard to common sense or good policy. Common sense and good policy in this case militated against requiring landlords to provide a safety net to reduce risks caused by careless parents (61 Cal. App. 4th 1403, 1409) .

[a] No Duty to Control or Prevent Conduct of Third Persons That Is Not Reasonably Foreseeable

In Melton v. Boustred (2010) 183 Cal. App. 4th 521, 107 Cal. Rptr. 3d 481 , plaintiffs were three guests at a residential party who were assaulted at the party by unknown assailants. Plaintiffs sued the host for negligence and premises liability for failing to protect against the assaults. They argued that because defendant posted an open invitation for the party on his Internet page at social networking site MySpace.com, and indicated that the party would have alcohol and live music, defendant should have known that guests would face an unreasonable risk of bodily harm from others attending the party and taken steps to protect such guests. The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's sustaining of defendant's demurrer. The court held that defendant did not owe a duty of care to protect against a third-party criminal assault perpetrated by unknown assailants. The court concluded that defendant host did not take any action that increased the risk of harm to plaintiffs and was not in a special relationship with plaintiffs that would give rise to a duty to protect against third-party criminal conduct (183 Cal. App. 4th 521, 533-536) . The court also concluded that the criminal assault was not reasonably foreseeable merely by virtue of the public notice about the party posted on the Internet. The court noted the absence of knowledge by defendant of prior similar incidents of violent crime on the property and rejected plaintiffs' argument that "common sense" should have told defendant that his actions created a peril to his guests (183 Cal. App. 4th 521, 536-539) . Finally, the court concluded that the burden of providing security guards or limiting the guest list outweighed the relatively low foreseeability of this type of criminal assault by unknown assailants (183 Cal. App. 4th 521, 539-541) .

In Garcia v. Paramount Citrus Assn., Inc. (2008) 164 Cal. App. 4th 1448, 80 Cal. Rptr. 3d 512 , plaintiff farm worker was injured while riding in a van on a public road adjacent to orchards owned by defendant. Another driver who was using an intersecting private farm road on defendant's property without authorization failed to recognize the transition to the public road, drove from the farm road to the public road at an excessive rate of speed, and caused a collision with plaintiff's vehicle. The court of appeal held that the defendant owed no duty to post a warning sign at the spot that the private farm road intersected the public road, concluding that the accident-causing conduct of the third party was not reasonably foreseeable. The court noted that reasonable drivers using such a farm road bordered by rows of trees that could restrict visibility would normally drive cautiously due to the dangers of farm equipment or workers emerging from between the rows of trees. The court also noted that unless the owner's workers were using the farm road, access to the farm road was usually barred by a cable, there was no evidence that unauthorized drivers were using the farm road generally, let alone at unsafe speeds, and the owner's vegetation did not encroach on the right-of-way for the public road. According to the court, imposing a duty to place warning signs on defendant would essentially impose a duty to post warning signs on all such farm roads and require rural landowners to engage in constant monitoring to ensure the signs remained in place, thus placing a huge burden on rural landowners generally (164 Cal. App. 4th 1448, 1456-1460) .

In Ericson v. Federal Express Corp. (2008) 162 Cal. App. 4th 1291, 77 Cal. Rptr. 3d 1 , a truck driver who worked for an independent contractor was assaulted and robbed in the early morning hours next to the parking space assigned to him at the terminal facility at which he worked. The particular parking lot was located at the far rear of the large facility, was not lit, and was unfenced. The facility itself was surrounded on three sides by undeveloped, unfenced canyon areas. While one security guard was positioned at a guardhouse on the side of the facility over 400 feet from plaintiff's parking space, the view from the guardhouse to plaintiff's parking space was obstructed by parked trailers. Plaintiff sued the shipping service that hired his employer and controlled the terminal facility for premises liability, arguing that they owed him a duty to take simple steps to prevent the assault he sustained, such as allowing him to park near the buildings where regular employees of the shipping company parked. Defendant argued that the attack was not reasonably foreseeable, andthe court of appeal agreed. Defendant provided evidence of all calls made to the police over a five-year period relating to possible criminal activity at the facility, and the majority of the calls concerned false burglary alarms. Others concerned a personal dispute between employees, a misplaced vehicle, and an employee accused of theft. Beyond that, plaintiff attempted to build his case largely on the presence of transients on or near the unfenced property, although none of the evidence provided by plaintiff indicated that the transients had engaged in violent or threatening conduct or that plaintiff had felt threatened by their presence. The court concluded that a few prior sightings of nonthreatening transients on or near the property were insufficient to establish the reasonable foreseeability of plaintiff's assault, even if the security measures advocated by plaintiff would not have been unduly burdensome (162 Cal. App. 4th 1291, 1305-1307) .

In Roe v. McDonald's Corp. (2005) 129 Cal. App. 4th 1107, 29 Cal. Rptr. 3d 127 , the court of appeal held that the defendants were not liable to theplaintiff, a customer at a fast-food restaurant located in a shopping mall. While waiting in line at the restaurant, the plaintiff reported to a clerk employed at the restaurant, and to a mall security guard who was standing in line with her, that a man outside the restaurant had been eying her and making allegedly suggestive facial expressions. When the security guard and the clerk looked toward where the man had been, however, the man could not be seen in the area. Subsequently, the man sexually assaulted the plaintiff in the restaurant's rest room. The court of appeal concluded that in the absence of a more definite threat beyond the plaintiff's vague suspicions, the defendants could not have foreseen the sexual assault and were under no duty to take further steps to protect the plaintiff under the circumstances (129 Cal. App. 4th 1107, 1119) .

In Alvarez v. Jacmar Pac. Pizza Corp. (2002) 100 Cal. App. 4th 1190, 122 Cal. Rptr. 2d 890 , the court of appeal held that a restaurant had no duty to protect against a murder that took place on its premises, despite the fact that earlier in the evening the murderer had gotten into a fight on the premises with the patron that he eventually killed. In this case, the murderer and his companions had left the restaurant after making vague threats about returning, and the court held that it was unforeseeable that the earlier verbal and physical altercation would lead to the departed party returning with a gun to shoot the other patron. Under these facts, the court concluded that any duty owed to the decedent was fulfilled when the restaurant called the police, who subsequently arrived at the scene and left when it was determined that the fight was over. The court also concluded that three earlier violent incidents on the premises in the previous two and a half years did not constitute prior similar incidents, because those incidents were dissimilar in nature to the attack on the decedent (100 Cal. App. 4th 1190, 1210-1212) . The court also held that the requirements for establishing premises liability based on the foreseeability of third-party criminal conduct could not be avoided by recasting the claim as one based on another theory of negligence liability, such as an action for negligent failure to properly train employees (100 Cal. App. 4th 1190, 1212) .

Pamela W. v. Millsom (1994) 25 Cal. App. 4th 950, 30 Cal. Rptr. 2d 690 , is discussed in the main text in § 178.64[3][b]. The court noted that plaintiff's injuries were caused by a third party who stalked her, and that defendant had no prior knowledge of the likelihood of that conduct (25 Cal. App. 4th 950, 959-960) .

In Gray v. Kircher (1987) 193 Cal. App. 3d 1069, 236 Cal. Rptr. 891 , plaintiff had been shot at a hotel where he was a resident. Plaintiff brought an action against the hotel proprietor, alleging that the proprietor negligently failed to protect him against the attacker, who was also a resident of the hotel. The trial court granted defendant's motion for nonsuit and plaintiff appealed. The court of appeal affirmed, finding that the attack was unforeseeable as a matter of law. It noted that prior to the shooting, there had been nothing to put the hotel on notice that the attacker would be dangerous to other residents (193 Cal. App. 3d 1069, 1074-1075) . The court also found that the proprietor's conduct was without moral blame, and that it would be against public policy to impose a duty on the proprietor (193 Cal. App. 3d 1069, 1075) .

In Lopez v. McDonald's Corp. (1987) 193 Cal. App. 3d 495, 238 Cal. Rptr. 436 , survivors and surviving family members of victims of the 1984 massacre at a McDonald's restaurant in San Ysidro, California, appealed a summary judgment in favor of McDonald's corporation and one of its franchises. Plaintiffs challenged a trial court determination that as a matter of law McDonald's had no duty to provide protection against mass murderous assaults. Affirming the trial court judgment, the court of appeal concluded that such an event constituted a hazard outside the boundaries of a restaurant's general duty to protect its patrons from reasonable foreseeable criminal acts of third parties (193 Cal. App. 3d 495, 509-512) .

In Gregorian v. National Convenience Stores, Inc. (1985) 174 Cal. App. 3d 944, 220 Cal. Rptr. 302 , plaintiff was severely injured after being attacked and beaten by a gang of youths while shopping at defendants' convenience store. Plaintiff commenced an action against defendants for damages for personal injuries sustained in the attack. On defendants' motion for summary judgment, the trial court found there was no triable issue of fact because, as a matter of law, the court found defendants owed no duty of care to protect plaintiff from an unforeseeable criminal attack by a third party. The trial court then granted summary judgment for defendants and entered a judgment of dismissal against plaintiff. Plaintiff appealed from the judgment of dismissal.

The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's judgment, holding that, as a matter of law, plaintiff's action was without merit and defendants were therefore entitled to summary judgment (174 Cal. App. 3d 944, 951) . The court found it beyond dispute that defendants were under no duty to protect plaintiff from the sudden attack of a ruthless youth gang. The facts as alleged in the complaint, in combination with plaintiff's deposition testimony and the declaration of defendants' risk manager were insufficient to establish that defendants could reasonably foresee or anticipate the criminal conduct and the possibility of injury resulting from it. Not only were there no allegations of prior similar incidents occurring at the market, there were no facts that indicated the store was located in an area where gang activity and criminal assaults are common. Taken as a whole, there was nothing in the record to support the claim that defendants possessed knowledge of criminal activities any more precise than the knowledge of any citizen residing and working in the large metropolitan county in which the attack occurred (174 Cal. App. 3d 944, 949) . Furthermore, nothing in the record supported plaintiff's argument that defendants' market created an especial temptation and opportunity for the type of sudden, vicious, andintentional conduct that occurred. Distinguishing Cohen v. Southland Corp. [Cohen v. Southland Corp. (1984) 157 Cal. App. 3d 130, 203 Cal. Rptr. 572] from this case, the court found that while the proprietor of an all-night convenience store such as that in Cohen may, in this day and age, reasonably anticipate that his or her place of business will be the target of armed robbers, the same could not be said for a crime resulting from gang violence, especially when the premises had never been the focal point of gang activity. Plaintiff's injuries were the result of an extraordinarily malicious criminal act that, based on defendants' past experience and knowledge, could not have been anticipated (174 Cal. App. 3d 944, 950-951) .

§ 178.64 Opposing Contention That Owner or Possessor of Premises Is Liable for Harm Caused by Wrongful Acts of Third Persons--No Duty to Provide Security Guards or Increased Security Measures if Harm Was Not Foreseeable Because of Absence of Prior Similar Incidents

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT _____ [OWNER OR POSSESSOR] IS NOT LIABLE FOR THE HARM TO PLAINTIFF BECAUSE AN OWNER OR POSSESSOR OF PREMISES HAS NO DUTY TO A PERSON ON THE PREMISES TO PROVIDE _____ [SECURITY GUARDS or INCREASED SECURITY MEASURES] TO PROTECT AGAINST THE CRIMINAL CONDUCT OF THIRD PERSONS IN THE ABSENCE OF PRIOR SIMILAR INCIDENTS THAT WOULD HAVE MADE THAT CONDUCT HIGHLY FORESEEABLE.

[EITHER]

A. Prior Similar Incidents Needed to Impose Duty of Providing Security Guards. The duty of an owner or possessor of premises to protect persons on the premises from the criminal conduct of third persons does not include the hiring of security guards unless that conduct is highly foreseeable because of the occurrence of prior similar incidents (Ann M. v. Pacific Plaza Shopping Ctr. (1993) 6 Cal. 4th 666, 679-680, 25 Cal. Rptr. 2d 137, 863 P.2d 207).

[OR]

A. No Duty to Provide Increased Security Without Occurrence of Prior Similar Incidents. An owner or possessor of premises does not have a duty to provide increased security measures to protect persons on the premises from the criminal acts of third parties unless prior similar incidents have made those acts so highly foreseeable as to justify the burden of providing that increased security (Wiener v. Southcoast Childcare Ctrs., Inc. (2004) 32 Cal. 4th 1138, 1149-1151, 12 Cal. Rptr. 3d 615, 88 P.3d 517 ; Pamela W. v. Millsom (1994) 25 Cal. App. 4th 950, 958-959, 30 Cal. Rptr. 2d 690).

[CONTINUE]

[Optional] B. Underground Parking Garage Not Inherently Dangerous. Underground parking garages are not so inherently dangerous that a duty of care to provide security measures exists even in the absence of prior similar incidents or other indications of a reasonably foreseeable risk of violent criminal assaults in that particular garage (Drummond v. Desmarais (2009) 176 Cal. App. 4th 439, 450, 98 Cal. Rptr. 3d 183).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a party's contention that an owner or possessor of the premises had a duty to provide security guards or increased security measures to protect against the criminal conduct of third persons.

These points and authorities may be combined with a form of memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel is responding to the contention that there was a duty to provide security guards or increased security measures to protect against the criminal conduct of third persons. The question of whether or not a duty exists on the part of an owner or possessor of the premises, and what the scope of that duty is, may be the subject of a demurrer or summary judgment [see, e.g., Drummond v. Desmarais (2009) 176 Cal. App. 4th 439, 459, 98 Cal. Rptr. 3d 183 (summary judgment)].

[b] Argument

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

If appropriate, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities in § 178.60.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Prior Similar Incidents Needed to Impose Duty of Providing Security Guards

In Ann M. v. Pacific Plaza Shopping Ctr. (1993) 6 Cal. 4th 666, 25 Cal. Rptr. 2d 137, 863 P.2d 207 , plaintiff, an employee at a photo service store in the shopping mall owned by defendant, was raped and robbed in the store by an armed intruder. Violent crimes had previously occurred in the area where the mall was located, and transients had been loitering in the common areas of the mall. However, criminal activity at the mall itself prior to the rape of plaintiff was limited to bank robberies, purse snatchings, and assaults, and plaintiff presented no evidence that defendant had knowledge of these crimes. Defendant moved for summary judgment on the grounds that it owed no legal duty to plaintiff because the rape was unforeseeable. Plaintiff argued that the presence of transients made the attack foreseeable and that providing security patrols would have fulfilled defendant's duty to protect her. The trial court granted defendant's motion, and the court of appeal affirmed the trial court, but on the grounds that defendant's duty to take reasonable precautions did not extend to hiring security guards. Plaintiff appealed.

The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that "refinement" of the decision in Isaacs v. Huntington Memorial Hospital [Isaacs v. Huntington Mem'l Hosp. (1985) 38 Cal. 3d 112, 211 Cal. Rptr. 356, 695 P.2d 653] was necessary in light of the increase in violent crime in today's society and the public policy against making landowners the insurers of public safety. The Court revived the "prior similar incidents" rule rejected in Isaacs and replaced by Isaacs with the "totality of the circumstances" rule. The Court held that, in determining the scope of a landowner's duty, the foreseeability of the harm to be prevented must be balanced against the burdensomeness of the security measures provided by the landowner. Expensive measures require a high degree of foreseeability, which rarely, if ever, can be proven in the absence of prior similar incidents. Therefore, evidence of prior similar incidents is required to establish that third-party crime on a landowner's premises was so highly foreseeable that the landowner had a duty of care to provide security guards. Applying this rule, the Court concluded that the crimes that had previously occurred in the mall were not similar to the violent rape suffered by the plaintiff, and that evidence of the presence of transients in the mall and a high statistical crime rate in the surrounding area also did not qualify as evidence of prior similar incidents (6 Cal. 4th 666, 678-680) .

[b] No Duty to Provide Increased Security Without Occurrence of Prior Similar Incidents

In Wiener v. Southcoast Childcare Ctrs., Inc. (2004) 32 Cal. 4th 1138, 12 Cal. Rptr. 3d 615, 88 P.3d 517 , the plaintiffs were the parents of two young children who were killed when a man intentionally drove his automobile through a chain link fence surrounding the playground of a child care center and into a group of children. In addition to suing the man, who was convicted of murder for his conduct, the plaintiffs also sued the child care center and the premises owner. The plaintiffs alleged that these defendants were aware that the chain link fence provided inadequate protection for the children from the hazards of the adjacent road. Evidence indicated that there had been a few non-injury accidents in the roadway near the property in the past, and one freak incident in which a mail truck escaped from its driver, went through a fence on the property, and crashed into a tree; however, all of these accidents had occurred before the child care center opened on the property. Despite the lack of prior criminal conduct such as occurred when the children were killed, the plaintiffs argued that the defendants owed a duty to provide a sturdier barrier that would have prevented the man from driving his car into the playground. The defendants countered that the chain link fence that was provided met all code and safety requirements and was sufficient to stop traffic from entering the property in most cases, under reasonably foreseeable circumstances. The trial court granted summary judgment for the defendants on the grounds that the plaintiffs had failed to provide evidence of prior similar incidents of violent crime or other criminal acts sufficient to impose a duty on the defendants. The plaintiffs appealed. The court of appeal reversed, holding that because it was reasonably foreseeable that an errant car could careen through the fence and cause injury, the defendants owed a duty of care even though the actual injury-causing conduct was criminal in nature. The defendants appealed.

The California Supreme Court reversed the court of appeal and affirmed the trial court's grant of summary judgment in favor of the defendants. The Court reviewed the basic principles of Ann M. v. Pacific Plaza Shopping Center [Ann M. v. Pacific Plaza Shopping Ctr. (1993) 6 Cal. 4th 666, 25 Cal. Rptr. 2d 137, 863 P.2d 207 ; see § 178.64[3][a]], and Sharon P. v. Arman, Ltd. [Drummond v. Desmarais (2009) 176 Cal. App. 4th 439, 98 Cal. Rptr. 3d 183 ; see § 178.64[3][c]]. The Court then held that the foreseeability of the injury-causing conduct in this case must be analyzed under the Ann M. test for determining the foreseeability of third-party criminal conduct, and not under the less stringent test for foreseeability that would be used in a case of ordinary negligence involving a "curb-jumping" accident. Under the Ann M. standard, the Court concluded that the criminal assault that occurred was unforeseeable, given the absence of any prior acts of violence at the child care center, or at any other similar business in the area, and the complete impossibility of anticipating the driver's outrageous conduct (32 Cal. 4th 1138, 1149-1150) . In the absence of the requisite foreseeability, the defendants were under no duty to provide more security than that provided by the chain link fence (32 Cal. 4th 1138, 1151) .

In Pamela W. v. Millsom (1994) 25 Cal. App. 4th 950, 30 Cal. Rptr. 2d 690 , plaintiff was the tenant of one condominium unit of a four-unit, two-building project. Plaintiff was raped in her dwelling by an intruder who called her by name and told her he had been watching her. Plaintiff filed an action for negligence against the owners of her condominium unit and the condominium association. Neither plaintiff nor defendants was aware of any specific prior criminal acts in the vicinity of the condominium project except for one daytime burglary. Defendants moved for summary judgment on the ground that they had no duty to plaintiff to have protected her from the rape, because the rape was not reasonably foreseeable in the absence of any prior similar incidents. The trial court granted the motion, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, relying heavily on Ann M. v. Pacific Plaza Shopping Center [Ann M. v. Pacific Plaza Shopping Ctr. (1993) 6 Cal. 4th 666, 25 Cal. Rptr. 2d 137, 863 P.2d 207 ; see § 178.64[3][a]] to rule that defendants did not owe plaintiff a duty to make her condominium entry-proof to protect her from criminal conduct because, in the absence of any prior similar incidents, that conduct was not highly foreseeable (25 Cal. App. 4th 950, 958-959) . Although the plaintiff in Ann. M. claimed that defendant had a duty to provide security guards and plaintiff in this case claimed that defendants had a duty merely to improve or increase the physical security of the premises, the court noted that doing the latter would be just as onerous a burden to small landlords as providing security guards would be to the owner of a large shopping center (25 Cal. App. 4th 950, 957-958) . The court also found it unreasonable to expect defendants in this case to have prevented the rape because the rapist apparently had been stalking plaintiff, and thus would not have been deterred by anything short of armed guards (25 Cal. App. 4th 950, 959) .

[c] Underground Parking Garage Not Inherently Dangerous

In Sharon P. v. Arman, Ltd. (1999) 21 Cal. 4th 1181, 91 Cal. Rptr. 2d 35, 989 P.2d 121 , the plaintiff operated an accounting business in a Los Angeles office building and paid a monthly fee to park in an assigned space in the underground parking garage reserved for tenants of the building. One morning as she was preparing to leave her car in the parking garage, she was forced at gunpoint back into the car by an unknown assailant and sexually assaulted. She brought suit against the building owner and the company that managed the garage, alleging that the defendants' failure to provide adequate security for users of the garage resulted in her assault. After discovery was conducted, the defendants moved for summary judgment on the basis that neither owed a duty to make the garage more secure than it was because the attack on the plaintiff was not reasonably foreseeable. The evidence before the court showed that no assaults had occurred in the parking garage in the preceding ten years, which approximated the time period that the current owner owned the building. However, numerous armed robberies had occurred in the bank on the ground floor of the building in the two years prior to the attack on the plaintiff, with one physical injury. In addition, the plaintiff provided police statistics of criminal activity, including sexual assaults, in the surrounding 50-block area for the 15 months prior to the attack. The plaintiff also submitted evidence of the deteriorating physical condition of the garage, including evidence that the garage was not clean or well lit. Security cameras installed in the garage had not functioned for several months prior to the attack on the plaintiff. The defendants also submitted a declaration from a private security consultant stating that the lighting in the garage was sufficient to see from one side of the garage to the other in any direction and opining that requiring a security guard or a monitored security camera in that particular garage would be an unreasonable burden, given the size, condition, and history of the particular garage. Because of the absence of evidence that crimes had occurred within the garage itself, the trial court granted the defendants' motions for summary judgment based on the foreseeability analysis of Ann M. v. Pacific Plaza Shopping Center [Ann M. v. Pacific Plaza Shopping Ctr. (1993) 6 Cal. 4th 666, 25 Cal. Rptr. 2d 137, 863 P.2d 207 ; see § 178.64[3][a]].

A divided court of appeal reversed, with the majority concluding that Ann M. was not controlling because commercial parking structures are "inherently dangerous," facilitate the commission of crime, and increase its likelihood. Therefore, according to the court of appeal, criminal assaults on garage patrons were highly foreseeable as a matter of law, notwithstanding the absence of prior similar incidents of sexual assault in the particular garage at issue.

The Supreme Court reversed the court of appeal and remanded to the trial court with directions to enter judgment for the defendants, holding as a matter of law that the defendants were not required to secure the garage against violent criminal assaults in the absence of any prior similar incidents or other indications of a reasonably foreseeable risk of violent criminal assaults at that particular garage. Relying extensively on their earlier opinion in Ann M., the Court noted that no assaults had occurred in the parking garage in the preceding ten years, and although numerous bank robberies had occurred in the bank on the ground floor of the building, the Court concluded that these incidents were not sufficiently similar to the sexual assault suffered by the plaintiff to establish the requisite foreseeability. In addition, although the plaintiff provided police statistics of criminal activity, including sexual assaults, in the surrounding 50-block area for the 15 months prior to the attack, she provided no evidence showing the proximity of these crimes to the parking garage (21 Cal. 4th 1181, 1191, 1198) .

The Court also specifically rejected the argument that underground parking garages were so inherently dangerous that a duty of care to provide security measures exists even in the absence of prior similar incidents. In reaching this conclusion, the Court first noted the absence of evidence or authority from which they might confidently conclude that underground parking garages, regardless of individual physical characteristics and locations, are prone to violence and therefore inherently dangerous (21 Cal. 4th 1181, 1192) . The Court then specifically rejected the argument that an earlier court of appeal opinion [Gomez v. Ticor (1983) 145 Cal. App. 3d 622, 193 Cal. Rptr. 600] could support such a broad rule of liability. In that earlier case, the court of appeal had noted certain features of parking garages that seemed to make them especially attractive to criminals, but under the facts of that case, in which the plaintiff had been shot when he inadvertently interrupted a robbery that was in progress, liability was imposed because there were prior similar incidents of theft and vandalism in the underground garage (21 Cal. 4th 1181, 1193) . The Court also sought to avoid "virtually limitless" litigation over what other types of property could arguably be characterized as "inherently dangerous." Finally, the Court concluded that an "inherently dangerous" rule of law would impose an undue burden on garage owners even if, as in the case before it, there was no evidence that prior criminal assaults had occurred in the garage (21 Cal. 4th 1181, 1194-1195) .

In holding for the defendants, the Supreme Court concluded not only that the defendants had no duty to provide burdensome measures such as a security guard, but also that lesser measures such as monitored security cameras and walk-throughs by existing personnel might have been equally burdensome and were not legally required in light of the fact that the parking garage at issue had been free of crime for a substantial period of years (21 Cal. 4th 1181, 1199) . The Court also refused to impose a duty to provide improved lighting and maintenance, questioning the efficacy of "adequate lighting" as a crime prevention measure and noting that the plaintiff had failed to present any evidence that her attacker used a darkened area to facilitate his attack (21 Cal. 4th 1181, 1196-1197, 1197 n.5).

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] No Duty to Provide Increased Security Without Occurrences of Prior Similar Incidents

The factual and procedural background of Melton v. Boustred (2010) 183 Cal. App. 4th 521, 107 Cal. Rptr. 3d 481 , is described in § 178.63[4][a]. In rejecting the argument that the host of a residential party owed a duty to his guests to protect against a criminal assault committed by unknown assailants, the court of appeal concluded that the assault was not reasonably foreseeable and defendant had no knowledge of prior similar acts of violent crime on the property (183 Cal. App. 4th 521, 536-539) . The court then concluded that, in light of the low foreseeability of the attack, the security measures proposed by plaintiffs would have been unduly burdensome. To the extent plaintiffs were proposing that security guards should have been employed, the court concluded that the facts of the case did not support such an extreme measure, especially given the absence of prior similar incidents of violent crime at the residence (183 Cal. App. 4th 521, 539) . The court also rejected as unduly burdensome the plaintiffs' suggestion that the defendant had a duty to restrict the guest list. The court concluded that the plaintiffs' proposal for restricting the guest list was vague, might have been ineffective in preventing the harm, given that the assailants were never identified and thus could have been members of any controlled guest list, and was socially burdensome, given that a limited guest list would have effectively prevented defendant from the social and professional networking that he desired (183 Cal. App. 4th 521, 540) .

In Rinehart v. Boys & Girls Club of Chula Vista (2005) 133 Cal. App. 4th 419, 34 Cal. Rptr. 3d 677 , the plaintiff, a minor, was struck by a rock while playing in the yard of an after-school club. The rock was thrown by an unidentified person who was not a member of the club. The playground of the club was located at the base of a hill just below a park with baseball fields where other children played. A fence ran across the top of the hill, and persons who were not club members could walk across the top of the hill next to the fence, but no one had ever reported seeing anyone throw rocks from the area on the hill to the playground below. In the incident in which the plaintiff was struck, it was believed that a total of four rocks had been thrown. Although she did not see the rocks being thrown, one staff member at the club admitted to being present in the playground at the time providing general supervision. Nonetheless, the plaintiff sued the club for providing inadequate supervision. The court affirmed summary judgment for the club. On the issue of the foreseeability of the attack, the court analyzed the case under the "prior similar incidents" rule applicable to third-party criminal assault cases. Undisputed evidence showed that the club was only aware of a few prior rock-throwing incidents, all of which involved club members in the playground throwing stones at the basketball hoop or some other object and none of which involved injuries. In addition, no staff member had ever seen any non-member throw or roll anything down the hill toward the playground. As such, the court concluded that the incident that injured plaintiff was not reasonably foreseeable and that the club had no duty to provide additional supervision (133 Cal. App. 4th 419, 434-435) . The court also concluded that even if the attack were foreseeable, the plaintiff could not show that additional supervision would have prevented the attack of an unknown assailant, and the court considered evidence to the contrary presented by the plaintiff's witness as pure speculation (133 Cal. App. 4th 419, 435) .

In Lopez v. Baca (2002) 98 Cal. App. 4th 1008, 120 Cal. Rptr. 2d 281 , the plaintiff was a patron at a nightclub that engaged in the illegal practice of paying commissions to women hired to entice men in the club to buy drinks for them at inflated prices in exchange for their company. Whenthe plaintiff refused to buy a drink for one such woman, she cursed at him and returned to her male companion. This companion soon left the club, returned with a gun, and, without warning, shot the plaintiff in the head. Although the club employed a security guard on weekends to check patrons for weapons, the assault on the plaintiff occurred on a Tuesday evening when no guard was present. The plaintiff sued the owner of the club for negligence, arguing that the club unreasonably failed to provide security guards to protect patrons from attack. The defendant filed a motion for summary judgment on the grounds that in the absence of prior similar incidents, the assault was unforeseeable and no duty was owed. The plaintiff tried to present evidence in the form of police printouts showing extensive calls to that address in the five years prior to the attack on the plaintiff, but the trial court excluded this evidence because the printouts did not provide descriptive accounts of why police were called to the address, or whether police attention was needed inside or outside the nightclub, and therefore they were not proof of prior similar incidents. With this evidence excluded, the defendant was granted summary judgment, and the court of appeal affirmed. The court of appeal first concluded that the plaintiff had abandoned on appeal the argument that the nightclub had notice of prior similar incidents on the premises sufficient to impose a duty to provide adequate security measures to protect patrons (98 Cal. App. 4th 1008, 1015) . The court then rejected the plaintiff's claim that bars and nightclubs, including those violating statutes prohibiting the payment for solicitation of beverages, are inherently dangerous, because the plaintiff failed to support his assertion with any evidence or authority (98 Cal. App. 4th 1008, 1017) . The court also rejected the plaintiff's unsupported assertion that the nightclub's decision to provide a security guard on weekend nights placed them under a legal duty to provide a security guard on weeknights as well, at least in the absence of prior acts of violence on the premises that would warrant imposing such a duty (98 Cal. App. 4th 1008, 1017-1018 & n.8). Finally, the court held that plaintiff had not properly pleaded the argument that the nightclub's illegal conduct in paying women to solicit drinks from patrons was negligence per se, and that the argument would fail even if properly presented, because the violated statutes were morals statutes aimed at prohibiting the encouragement of alcohol purchases in exchange for a women's hospitality and were not intended to protect against the injury suffered by the plaintiff (98 Cal. App. 4th 1008, 1019-1020) .

In Hassoon v. Shamieh (2001) 89 Cal. App. 4th 1191, 107 Cal. Rptr. 2d 658 , the plaintiff was standing inside the defendant's grocery store when he was shot and wounded by someone sitting in a car parked on the street next to the store. The shots were apparently fired as part of an altercation outside of the store. During this altercation, a group of men were beating another man, until he was rescued by a store clerk, who dragged the man into the store while other armed store employees prevented the assailants from entering the store after the man. In rejecting the plaintiff's contention that the store owed a duty of care to him, the court of appeal placed primary emphasis on the complete absence of prior similar incidents at the store. In the absence of such incidents, the shooting could not be considered to be foreseeable. Because it was not a foreseeable occurrence, the store was under no duty of care running to plaintiff to take measures to protect plaintiff (89 Cal. App. 4th 1191, 1195) . The court went on the explain that no duty should be imposed under the circumstances because the person who fired the shot was not on the store's premises (89 Cal. App. 4th 1191, 1197) . Finally, the court concluded that it would be bad policy to hold the store liable merely because the store clerk made the decision to attempt a rescue of the man being beaten outside the store, even though that decision may have increased the danger to persons inside the store, such as the plaintiff (89 Cal. App. 4th 1191, 1199) .

DEFENDANT OWED NO DUTY TO _____ [REFUSE TO RENT TO or EVICT] A SUSPECTED GANG MEMBER BECAUSE THE THREAT OF VIOLENCE CAUSED BY THE TENANT WAS NOT _____ [EXTRAORDINARILY FORESEEABLE or HIGHLY FORESEEABLE].

A. No Duty Not to Rent to Suspected Gang Member Absent Extraordinary Foreseeability of Harm. Absent circumstances showing extraordinary foreseeability, a landlord owes no duty to existing tenants not to rent to suspected gang members, nor to screen the criminal records of suspected gang members before renting (Castaneda v. Olsher (2007) 41 Cal. 4th 1205, 1216-1217, 63 Cal. Rptr. 3d 99, 162 P.3d 610).

B. No Duty to Evict Suspected Gang Member Absent High Foreseeability of Harm. While a landlord may have a duty to evict a suspected gang member, such a duty may only be imposed when the potential for violence caused by that tenant is highly foreseeable (Castaneda v. Olsher (2007) 41 Cal. 4th 1205, 1221, 63 Cal. Rptr. 3d 99, 162 P.3d 610).

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a landlord may be held liable for choosing to rent to a suspected gang member, or having rented to a suspected gang member, for failing to evict that tenant.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which the issue of defendant's liability arises, or combined with other forms in this chapter, as appropriate. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the point of law stated. Thus, counsel should include facts showing that the landlord, or his or her agents, lacked the requisite knowledge to meetthe heightened standard of foreseeability required to hold the landlord liable for failing to prevent violence caused by a suspected gang member.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Duty Not to Rent to Suspected Gang Member Absent Extraordinary Foreseeability of Harm

In Castaneda v. Olsher (2007) 41 Cal. 4th 1205, 63 Cal. Rptr. 3d 99, 162 P.3d 610 , plaintiff was the tenant of a mobilehome park who was shot when gang-related violence broke out in front of the mobilehome lot across from his own lot. Plaintiff sued the owner of the park, arguing that the owner owed a duty not to rent to the tenant in the adjacent lot because he was a known gang member, or having rented to the tenant, owed a duty to evict him. The trial court granted defendant's motion for nonsuit based on plaintiff's failure to show that the shooting was highly foreseeable. The court of appeal reversed, holding that plaintiff had shown that the landlord knew he was renting to a gang member and that there had been sufficient gang-related conduct occurring on or near the premises to place a duty on the landlord to take additional security measures to protect residents from potential violence. Defendant appealed.

The California Supreme Court reversed the court of appeal and affirmed the grant of nonsuit. The Court held that absent circumstances showing extraordinary foreseeability, a landlord owes no duty to existing tenants not to rent to suspected gang members, nor to screen the criminal records of suspected gang members before renting. The Court concluded that recognition of such a duty would place landlords in a position in which they would tend to deny rentals to those who fit a perceived profile for gang membership, likely leading to potential liability for racial, ethnic, or other types of illegal discrimination (41 Cal. 4th 1205, 1216-1217) . While the Court did not provide a definitive standard for determining what evidence would support a showing of "extraordinary foreseeability," the Court concluded that the evidence in the instant case showed only that the landlord's agent had a suspicion that the potential renter was a gang member when the lot was rented to him, and this was insufficient to provide extraordinary foreseeability of harm (41 Cal. 4th 1205, 1218) .

[b] No Duty to Evict Suspected Gang Member Absent High Foreseeability of Harm

The factual and procedural background of Castaneda v. Olsher (2007) 41 Cal. 4th 1205, 63 Cal. Rptr. 3d 99, 162 P.3d 610 , is described in [a], above. The Supreme Court held in that case that having rented to a tenant who is suspected of being a gang member, a landlord may have a duty to evict, but only when the threat of violence is highly foreseeable. The Court stressed that a plaintiff would have to establish that it was highly foreseeable that the particular tenant sought to be evicted, or guests of that tenant, would commit violence against other tenants, as demonstrated by the behavior of that particular tenant as reported to or observed by the landlord or his or her agents. Plaintiff's evidence in the instant case failed to meet that burden. While two previous shootings had occurred on or adjacent to the mobilehome park, no evidence connected either shooting to the tenant who was a suspected gang member. The evidence showed merely that another park resident had complained to the manager that occupants of the mobilehome with the suspected gang member had harassed her and her children by causing a pit bull to growl at them, that someone living at that mobilehome or another one had broken windows in her car, and that men gathered at that mobilehome had whistled and hooted at another female occupant of the park. The Court concluded that this evidence, even when combined with the manager's belief that the resident in that mobilehome was a gang member, was insufficient to establish a high foreseeability of gun violence and impose a duty to evict on the landlord (41 Cal. 4th 1205, 1221) .

§ 178.65 Opposing Contention That Owner or Possessor of Premises Is Liable for Harm Caused by Wrongful Acts of Third Persons--No Duty If No Special Relationship

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT _____ [OWNER or POSSESSOR] IS NOT LIABLE FOR THE HARM TO PLAINTIFF BECAUSE AN OWNER OR POSSESSOR OF PREMISES OWES NO DUTY TO A PERSON ON THE PREMISES TO CONTROL THE CONDUCT OF THIRD PERSONS WHEN THERE IS NO SPECIAL RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN THE PERSON ON THE PREMISES AND THE OWNER OR POSSESSOR.

Special Relationship Needed. In the absence of a special relationship between the person injured on the premises and the owner or possessor of the premises, the owner or possessor has no duty to protect that person from the wrongful conduct of third persons (Totten v. More Oakland Residential Hous., Inc. (1976) 63 Cal. App. 3d 538, 541-543, 134 Cal. Rptr. 29).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a party's contention that an owner or a possessor of the premises had a duty to control the conduct of a third person on the premises.

These points and authorities may be combined with a form of memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel is responding to the contention that the owner or possessor had a duty to control the conduct of third persons. The question of whether or not the owner or possessor of premises has a duty may be the subject of a demurrer or a summary judgment [see, e.g., Totten v. More Oakland Residential Hous., Inc. (1976) 63 Cal. App. 3d 538, 547, 134 Cal. Rptr. 29 (demurrer)].

[b] Argument

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

If appropriate, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities in § 178.60.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Special Relationship Needed

In Totten v. More Oakland Residential Hous., Inc. (1976) 63 Cal. App. 3d 538, 134 Cal. Rptr. 29 , plaintiff was a guest of a tenant of the apartment complex owned by defendant. She was sitting in the laundry room waiting for her friend when two strangers ran into the laundry room and one opened fire on the other. Several of the shots hit plaintiff and she was injured. The complaint alleged that defendants owed a duty to plaintiff to protect her from the criminal conduct of third persons and the duty was breached by failing to provide a security guard or supervision of the premises. A demurrer to the second amended complaint was sustained without leave to amend and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed and held that the imposition of a duty in the instant case would be entirely unwarranted (63 Cal. App. 3d 538, 541) . The court stated that the basic principle involved was that in the absence of a special relationship, a private person has no duty to protect another from a criminal attack by a third person (63 Cal. App. 3d 538, 541) . A special relationship, the court pointed out, exists between a landowner and an invitee and the body of case law dealing with this relationship focuses on either a patron at a business establishment or a tenant or an employee (63 Cal. App. 3d 538, 542) . The court, in support of the proposition that a special relationship is needed to impose a duty, cited to Restatement (Second) of Torts § 344 that provides that a possessor of land who holds it open to the public for entry for his or her business purposes is subject to liability to members of the public while they are on the land for that purpose for physical harm caused by accidental, negligent, or intentionally harmful acts of third persons (63 Cal. App. 3d 538, 542) .

The court noted that plaintiff, a licensee, was not owed this duty under the traditional common-law rules. Although Rowland v. Christian [Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 Cal. 2d 108, 118, 70 Cal. Rptr. 97, 443 P.2d 561] held that the proper test to be applied to the liability of a possessor of premises is whether or not the possessor acted as a reasonable person in view of the probability of injury to others, the Supreme Court clearly indicated that the status of the person on the premises is still relevant to the question of liability (63 Cal. App. 3d 538, 544) . In addition, Rowland dealt with a defective condition on the premises that caused the injury and not the conduct of third persons (63 Cal. App. 3d 538, 544) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Special Relationship Needed

In Eric J. v. Betty M. (1999) 76 Cal. App. 4th 715, 90 Cal. Rptr. 2d 549 , a child was sexually molested by his mother's boyfriend while visiting the boyfriend's relatives. These relatives had failed to warn the mother that her boyfriend had in the past been convicted for child molestation. Suit was brought on behalf of the child against the relatives under general premises liability and negligence principles. After the trial court granted nonsuit to the defendants, the court of appeals held that under the circumstances of the case, the relatives could not be liable under either general premises liability or negligence principles. The relatives had no knowledge that the boyfriend was molesting the child, and even thoughsome of the molestations took place at their residences when the boyfriend was able to be alone with the child, the relatives did nothing to facilitate the molestations and made no representations as to the safety of the child if left alone with the boyfriend. The court concluded that the premises liability argument failed because there was no relationship between the harm suffered and any premises owned by the relatives. The boyfriend's prior convictions did not mean that for purposes of tort liability he should be treated as the functional equivalent of a dangerous animal, because he had been released from prison under a parole program that had as its premise the belief that rehabilitation was possible (76 Cal. App. 4th 715, 725-726) . The court also noted that the facts did not support any of the other traditional bases for imposing premises liability, such as the nature of the activity conducted on the property or any relationship of entrustment of the child (76 Cal. App. 4th 715, 727) . Finally, the court concluded that, in accordance with long-standing principles of tort law, the relatives could not be held liable under general negligence principles for their failure to warn the child's mother of the convictions, absent a special relationship that wold create a duty to take action (76 Cal. App. 4th 715, 727-729) .

The facts and procedural background of Ann M. v. Pacific Plaza Shopping Ctr. (1993) 6 Cal. 4th 666, 25 Cal. Rptr. 2d 137, 863 P.2d 207 , are discussed in § 178.64[3][a]. The plaintiff, an employee of a photo servicing store in a shopping mall owned by the defendant, was raped by an armed intruder in the store. The plaintiff filed an action against the defendant on the grounds that the defendant breached its duty to keep its premises in a reasonably safe condition by failing to provide security guards to patrol the mall's common areas. The defendant argued that its duty to its patrons and tenants did not extend to plaintiff. The Court held that this duty did indeed extend to employees of the defendant's tenants, pointing out that commercial tenants generally are not natural persons and therefore act through their employees (6 Cal. 4th 666, 675) .

DEFENDANT _____ [OWNER or POSSESSOR] IS NOT LIABLE FOR THE HARM TO PLAINTIFF, BECAUSE THE DUTY OF AN OWNER OR POSSESSOR OF PREMISES TO CONTROL THE CONDUCT OF THIRD PERSONS DOES NOT REQUIRE THE OWNER OR POSSESSOR TO COMPLY WITH A ROBBER'S DEMAND FOR MONEY.

A. No Duty to Comply With Robber's Demand for Money. An owner or possessor of premises has no duty to comply with a robber's demand for money even if that demand is coupled with a threat of harm to a third person (Vandermost v. Alpha Beta Co. (1985) 164 Cal. App. 3d 771, 779-780, 210 Cal. Rptr. 613).

B. Refusal to Obey Robber's Demand Without Active Resistance Is No Breach of Duty to Third Persons. A shopkeeper who refuses to obey a robber's unlawful demand for money but does not actively resist the robbery does not breach any duty to third persons on the premises (Kentucky Fried Chicken of Cal., Inc. v. Superior Court (1997) 14 Cal. 4th 814, 829, 59 Cal. Rptr. 2d 756).

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a party's contention that an owner or possessor of property is liable for injury suffered because of an asserted breach of a duty to control the conduct of a third person by complying with a robber's demand for money.

These points and authorities may be combined, if appropriate, with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to oppose the contention that the owner or possessor of premises was required to comply with a robber's demand for money. The points and authorities in this form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the point of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Duty to Comply With Robber's Demand for Money

In Vandermost v. Alpha Beta Co. (1985) 164 Cal. App. 3d 771, 779-780, 210 Cal. Rptr. 613 , plaintiff was dining at a restaurant owned by defendant when he heard a commotion coming from the area where the cash registerwas located. He left his seat and went to investigate. He heard a man say to the cashier "give me money or I am going to shoot someone," and saw the man fire a handgun into the ceiling. The cashier closed the cash register, thereby locking it, and fled into the kitchen. After unsuccessfully attempting to open the cash register, the man approached plaintiff and demanded money. Plaintiff replied that he had no money, and the man shot plaintiff in the upper arm. A jury granted a verdict for plaintiff, but the trial court granted defendant's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict and entered judgment for defendant. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court first distinguished two earlier cases [Taylor v. Centennial Bowl, Inc. (1966) 65 Cal. 2d 114, 52 Cal. Rptr. 561, 416 P.2d 793 ; Winn v. Holmes (1956) 143 Cal. App. 2d 501, 299 P.2d 994] as displaying closer connections between defendants' failures to act and plaintiffs' injuries, as involving situations in which the third party had much earlier focused attention on the plaintiff with the knowledge of the occupier of the premises or its employee (for example, a bouncer), and as imposing a less burdensome duty on defendant (164 Cal. App. 3d 771, 777-778) . The court noted that no California case had considered the duty to pay money to a robber, but discussed a case in which the Illinois Supreme Court opined that the imposition of such a duty would inure only to the benefit of robbers and might well encourage the use of hostages. Because of the weak evidence of foreseeability, the tenuous connection between defendant's conduct and plaintiff's injury, the lack of any moral blame attached to defendant's conduct, and the strong public policy against imposing a duty in this setting, the court of appeal refused to find that defendant breached any duty owed to plaintiff to pay money to a robber in order to protect a customer, and affirmed the trial court's judgment (164 Cal. App. 3d 771, 780) .

[b] Refusal to Obey Robber's Demand Without Active Resistance Is Not Breach of Duty to Third Persons

In Kentucky Fried Chicken of Cal., Inc. v. Superior Court (1997) 14 Cal. 4th 814, 59 Cal. Rptr. 2d 756 , plaintiff, a customer in a restaurant operated by defendant, was seized and held at gunpoint by a robber. Plaintiff complied with the robber's demands and surrendered her cash and wallet to him immediately. The robber then demanded that a store clerk open the cash register and give him all of the money. The clerk refused saying that she would have to go to the back of the restaurant for a key. The robber became extremely agitated, shoved his gun harder into plaintiff's back, and told the employee he would shoot plaintiff if the employee did not comply. Plaintiff screamed at the clerk to open the drawer and give the money to the robber, at which point the clerk complied and opened the cash register drawer. The robber seized the money and fled. Plaintiff sued defendant restaurant for negligence. Defendant claimed it had no duty to plaintiff to comply with the robber's unlawful demands. Defendant moved for summary judgment and the trial court denied the motion. The court of appeal ruled that under the circumstances defendant did owe a duty to plaintiff to comply with the armed robber's demand for money in order to avoid increasing the risk of harm to patrons. The court reasoned that there was a high degree of certainty that the plaintiff suffered injury, that the injury was closely connected with the defendant's conduct, and that the burden on defendant of avoiding the injury by complying with the robber's demand was slight. Defendant appealed, arguing that the decision of the court of appeal conflicted with that in Vandermost v. Alpha Beta Co. [Vandermost v. Alpha Beta Co. (1985) 164 Cal. App. 3d 771, 210 Cal. Rptr. 613] , in which the court of appeal concluded that no duty to comply with a robber's demands should be imposed because adverse consequences to the public would result.

The Supreme Court reversed, holding that a shopkeeper had no duty to comply with a robber's unlawful demand for the surrender of property, and that simple refusal to obey did not breach any duty to third persons present on the premises (14 Cal. 4th 814, 829) . The court dismissed plaintiff's argument that when a patron is held hostage by an armed robber, a shopkeeper should have a duty to comply with the robber's demands in order to prevent possible injury to the patron. Instead the Court embraced the reasoning in Vandermost, that there is never a duty to comply with the demands of a robber even when the robber is holding and threatening a hostage because there is no basis for assuming that complying with a robber's demands would guarantee the safety of the hostage. Furthermore, recognizing a duty to comply with an unlawful demand to surrender property would be inconsistent with the public policy reflected in both Cal. Const. art. I, § 1 and Civ. Code § 50, which recognize the right of persons to defend property with reasonable force. The public interest would not be served by recognition of a duty to comply with a robber's demands because it is possible for persons who commit armed robbery to become aware of and be encouraged by the existence of such a duty. The Court concluded by acknowledging the narrowness of its holding. Because it was not faced in this case with a situation in which defendant's employee had engaged in active resistance to the robbery, the Court did not decide if the right to defend property with reasonable force was qualified by a duty to avoid injury to third persons, or if a duty existed to avoid physical resistance that might provoke a robber into carrying out a threat to harm third persons (14 Cal. 4th 814, 829) .

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT _____ [OWNER or POSSESSOR] IS NOT LIABLE FOR REFUSING PLAINTIFF THE USE OF ITS TELEPHONE TO REPORT A THEFT OF PLAINTIFF'S PROPERTY ON DEFENDANT'S PREMISES BY A THIRD PERSON BECAUSE THERE WAS NO SPECIAL RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN PLAINTIFF AND DEFENDANT GIVING RISE TO A DUTY ON DEFENDANT'S PART TO TAKE AFFIRMATIVE ACTION TO ASSIST OR PROTECT PLAINTIFF.

A. No Duty in Absence of Special Relationship. As a rule, absent a special relationship giving rise to a duty to act, a person is under no duty to take affirmative action to assist or protect another, no matter how great the danger in which the other is placed, or how easily he or she could be rescued (Stangle v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. (1988) 198 Cal. App. 3d 971, 974, 244 Cal. Rptr. 103).

B. Special Relationship Is Not Created by Mere Fact That Theft Occurs on Defendant's Premises. No special relationship is created between the plaintiff and the possessor of the business premises in which plaintiff's property was stolen by a third person, because neither of them had any relationship to the possessor of the premises that would impose on him or her an affirmative duty to aid the plaintiff in summoning help. Hence, the refusal of the possessor of the premises to allow the plaintiff's agent to use the company's telephone to report the theft is not negligence on the possessor's part (Stangle v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. (1988) 198 Cal. App. 3d 971, 974, 244 Cal. Rptr. 103).

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a party's contention that, because the theft of plaintiff's property occurred on the defendant's premises, the defendant is liable for the loss for refusing to allow the plaintiff the use of its phone to report the theft.

The points and authorities may be combined, when appropriate, with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to oppose the contention that the owner or possessor of premises was required to aid plaintiff in summoning help. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Duty in Absence of Special Relationship

In Stangle v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. (1988) 198 Cal. App. 3d 971, 244 Cal. Rptr. 103 , plaintiff had purchased a sapphire ring in Honolulu to sell for profit. When his efforts to sell the ring in Seattle proved unsuccessful, he asked a former girlfriend to try to sell the ring in San Francisco and gave her custody of it. A purported prospective buyer responded to her newspaper ad. They agreed on a price. The prospective buyer told the custodian to take the ring the next day to the defendant insurance company's offices, which were on the 14th floor of a building, where the sale would take place because "the person he represented wanted the ring photographed and insured before he left the premises with it." The next day the custodian took the ring to the defendant's offices and was joined by the purported buyer. It was lunchtime and most of the employees were gone. The custodian and prospective buyer sat at an empty desk and, while the custodian wrote out a bill of sale, the prospective buyer asked for the ring to have it photographed. He left with the ring and was not seen again. Defendant's receptionist refused the custodian's request to use the phone to call for assistance. The custodian explained that her ring had just been stolen, but the receptionist told her the phone was for building use only. The custodian took the elevator to the lobby, reported the theft to security, and the police were called. However, it was too late to apprehend the thief. Neither defendant nor its employees were parties to the crime. The ring's owner sued the insurance company, claiming that defendant could have prevented the theft by making a telephone available to summon help. Judgment was for the defendant, and plaintiff appealed.

In affirming the judgment, the court of appeal said that whether a duty exists is primarily a question of law and that, as a general rule, absent a special relationship giving rise to a duty to act, a person is under no duty to take affirmative action to assist or protect another, no matter how great the danger in which the other is placed, or how easily he or she could be rescued (198 Cal. App. 3d 971, 974) .

The court acknowledged the existence of a narrow exception to this "harsh" rule when physical violence is threatened, but held that the exception did not apply to this particular case (198 Cal. App. 3d 971, 974) .

[b] Special Relationship Is Not Created Merely by Fact That Theft Occurs in Defendant's Premises

The facts and procedural background of Stangle v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. (1988) 198 Cal. App. 3d 971, 244 Cal. Rptr. 103 , are discussed in § 178.67[3][a]. In affirming the judgment for the defendant, the court held that no special relationship existed between the custodian of the ring and the defendant that would impose on the defendant an affirmative duty to aid the custodian in summoning help (198 Cal. App. 3d 971, 974-975) . The court explained that special relationships, which remove bystander status and invoke a duty to rescue or protect, are often based on economic considerations. Some examples would include a common carrier to its passengers, an innkeeper to his or her guest, possessors of land who hold it open to the public, or one who has a custodial relationship to another (198 Cal. App. 3d 971, 975) .

In addition to holding that there was no duty to rescue or protect, the court also held that defendant's conduct in refusing the use of the telephone was not the proximate cause of the loss. The court pointed out that the custodian's inability to gain immediate access to a telephone became inconsequential in light of the testimony of the building's director of security that he would not have detained anyone on the basis of a phone call, but would require that the incident be personally reported (198 Cal. App. 3d 971, 975) . The proximate cause of the loss, as set forth in the trial court's intended decision, was the negligent conduct of the custodian of the ring in the manner in which she handled the sale and the plaintiff's negligence in entrusting the ring to an inexperienced agent without security or insurance (198 Cal. App. 3d 971, 974) .

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a party's contention that an alleged breach of duty by an owner or a possessor of the premises was a cause of plaintiff's injuries by a third person.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that there is no causal connection between the conduct of a third party in causing injury and the conduct of an owner or a possessor of premises. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss evidence of the conduct of the third party and the alleged breach of duty of the owner or possessor of the premises, and should argue that there is no causal connection between the alleged breach and the third party's conduct causing injury [see Leslie G. v. Perry & Assocs. (1996) 43 Cal. App. 4th 472, 483, 50 Cal. Rptr. 2d 785] .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Causation Must Be by Substantial Evidence

In Saelzler v. Advanced Group 400 (2001) 25 Cal. 4th 763, 107 Cal. Rptr. 2d 617, 23 P.3d 1143 , the plaintiff was attempting to deliver a package to the resident of a large apartment complex during the daytime when three unknown men assaulted and attempted to rape her in the commons area of the complex. She suffered serious injuries, and the assailants were never identified or apprehended. Although the owners of the apartment complex provided nighttime security personnel and daytime inspections to ensure that security gates were operating properly, at least one gate had been propped open when the plaintiff arrived. The plaintiff filed suit against the property owners, alleging that although they knew that dangerous persons frequented the complex, which was in a high crime area, they failed to maintain the premises in a safe condition, failed to provide adequate security in the form of daytime security guards, and failed to warn others of the unsafe conditions. The trial court granted summary judgment for the defendants, finding that the plaintiff had failed to establish a reasonably probable causal connection between the defendants' failure to provide better security and the plaintiff's assault. The plaintiff appealed, the court of appeal reversed, and the defendants appealed.

The California Supreme Court reversed the court of appeal and agreed with the trial court. Assuming for the sake of analysis that the apartment owners may have breached a duty to provide reasonable security measures, the Court concluded that the plaintiff could not prove that this breach was an actual cause of her injuries. The plaintiff admitted that she could not prove the identity or background of the three men who assaulted her nor how they got on the apartment premises. Despite evidence that at least one gate was propped open at the time of the assault, there was no evidence that the assailants entered the premises through that gate. Moreover, the Court noted that there had been a substantial number of criminal incidents involving the tenants of the complex and that the plaintiff's attackers could have been residents as well. Absent any evidence that the unknown attackers were unauthorized intruders, rather than authorized residents, or that it was more probable than not the attack would not have occurred if there had been an increased security presence, the Court held that the plaintiff could not prove that any breach of duty on the part of the defendants actually caused the plaintiff's harm (25 Cal. 4th 763, 775-777) . According to the Court, the opinion testimony of the plaintiff's expert that the attack would not have occurred if the defendants had provided daytime security guards and made a better effort to maintain the security gates in proper working condition was speculation and did not raise a triable issue of fact on causation (25 Cal. 4th 763, 781) .

In Leslie G. v. Perry & Assocs. (1996) 43 Cal. App. 4th 472, 50 Cal. Rptr. 2d 785 , a tenant in a supposedly "secure" apartment building sued the building's owners after she was raped in the garage of the building. Plaintiff contended that the owners were negligent because they failed to repair a broken security gate, and that this negligence caused her rape. The rapist was not caught, and there was no direct evidence regarding how the rapist got into the garage. Plaintiff offered opinion evidence through a security expert that the rapist was attracted to and entered the garage because of the broken gate. The trial court granted a summary judgment motion by the owners on the ground that the incident was not foreseeable.

The court of appeal affirmed, although on grounds of causation rather than foreseeability. The court held that when a plaintiff seeks to prove an essential element by circumstantial evidence, the inferences which are consistent with plaintiff's theory from those circumstances must be more reasonable or probable than those inferences which are not consistent with the theory imposing liability. Since there was no direct evidence that the rapist entered or departed through the broken gate, or even that the broken gate was the only way he could have entered or departed, it was not sufficient for plaintiff to establish only that it was possible that he might have entered through the broken gate (43 Cal. App. 4th 472, 483) . Holding that a tenant's negligence action for injuries immediately caused by a third person must be supported by evidence that the injuries would not have occurred but for the landlord's negligence, the court affirmed the summary judgment for the owners (43 Cal. App. 4th 472, 488) .

In Rosenbaum v. Security Pac. Corp. (1996) 43 Cal. App. 4th 1084, 50 Cal. Rptr. 2d 917 , plaintiff brought a negligence action against her landlord after she was robbed and severely injured on the street in front of her apartment building. Plaintiff never used her garage because she did not believe it was safe as a result of inadequate lighting. Plaintiff contended that if she had been in her garage she would not have been attacked, so it was the dangerous condition of the apartment garage which caused her to park on the street and become vulnerable to the attack which injured her. After a jury verdict granting a substantial award to plaintiff, defendant moved for judgment notwithstanding the verdict and for a new trial. The trial court granted both motions, stating its opinion that there was no duty on the part of the landlord regarding off-premises security, and that there was no causal nexus between any failure to light the garage and plaintiff's injury. The court of appeal affirmed, stating that the theory that a plaintiff could establish a landowner's liability by establishing the existence of a dangerous condition and then letting the doctrines of foreseeability and proximate cause do the rest was rejected in an earlier case [Medina v. Hillshore Partners (1995) 40 Cal. App. 4th 477, 46 Cal. Rptr. 2d 871] . In that case, the court had concluded that there was an insufficient causal nexus between an unsafe condition and an independent act injuring the plaintiff. The court in this case found liability similarly attenuated because it could not be argued that the dangerous condition the landlord createdon the premises spilled over into the public streets and caused plaintiff's injury (43 Cal. App. 4th 1084, 1093) .

§ 178.69 Opposing Contention That Proprietor of Sports Facility Is Liable for Injury to Spectator--Harm Due to Obvious Risk Usually Incident to Game

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT PROPRIETOR IS NOT LIABLE FOR THE HARM TO PLAINTIFF SPECTATOR, BECAUSE A PROPRIETOR OF A SPORTS FACILITY IS NOT LIABLE TO A SPECTATOR FOR HARM FROM A RISK THAT IS OBVIOUS AND USUALLY INCIDENT TO AND INHERENT IN THE GAME.

A. No Liability for Obvious and Usually Inherent Risks of Game. The proprietor of a sports facility owes a duty of reasonable care to a spectator, but there is no liability for harm from risks that are obvious and should have been observed in the exercise of due care and that are usually incident to and inherent in the game (Brown v. San Francisco Ball Club (1950) 99 Cal. App. 2d 484, 486-487, 222 P.2d 19); see also Neinstein v. Los Angeles Dodgers, Inc. (1986) 185 Cal. App. 3d 176, 184, 229 Cal. Rptr. 612).

B. Primary Assumption of Risk Provides Defense for Injuries Caused by Risks Inherent in Attending Game. Sports teams, leagues, and owners and proprietors of sports arenas owe no duty to spectators to eliminate risks of injury that are inherent in attending that particular type of sporting event (see Nemarnik v. Los Angeles Kings Hockey Club (2002) 103 Cal. App. 4th 631, 643, 127 Cal. Rptr. 2d 10 (no duty to eliminate risk that spectator at hockey game might be hit by errant puck)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a party's contention that a proprietor of a sports facility is liable for harm to a spectator. The argument may be used when the harm to the spectator was due to a risk that was obvious and usually incident to and inherent in the game.

These points and authorities may be combined with a form of memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue of the liability of a proprietor of a sports stadium for harm from obvious and usually inherent risks of a game. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities in § 178.61.

[d] Assumption of Risk

Cases holding that a proprietor of a sports facility is not liable if the risk resulting in the injury is a matter of common knowledge have done so in the context of deciding whether the spectator assumed the risk as a matter of law. These cases have held that the obviousness of the danger negated the proprietor's liability to the spectator as a matter of law [see, e.g., Morton v. California Sports Car Club (1958) 163 Cal. App. 2d 685, 689, 329 P.2d 967 ; Brown v. San Francisco Ball Club (1950) 99 Cal. App. 2d 484, 486-487, 222 P.2d 19 , discussed in § 178.69[3][a]]. Most of these cases were decided before contributory negligence was abolished in favor of the doctrine of comparative negligence and therefore while assumption of risk was still a separate defense as a variant of contributory negligence [see Li v. Yellow Cab (1975) 13 Cal. 3d 804, 824, 119 Cal. Rptr. 858, 532 P.2d 1226] .

However, common knowledge of risk may no longer be relevant in determining whether a plaintiff's recovery is barred by assumption of risk, according to the lead opinion of the California Supreme Court in Knight v. Jewett [Knight v. Jewett (1992) 3 Cal. 4th 296, 316, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 2, 834 P.2d 696] . Instead, resolution of the issue appears to turn onwhether the defendant's conduct breached a legal duty of care to the plaintiff, not on the plaintiff's subjective knowledge or the reasonableness of the plaintiff's undertaking a known risk [see Knight v. Jewett (1992) 3 Cal. 4th 296, 314-317, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 2, 834 P.2d 696] .

Although the Supreme Court has not yet ruled on the assumption of risk doctrine in the specific context of injury to a spectator at a sporting event, the Court in Knight did address the question of the proper analysis of implied assumption of risk in the context of participants in active sports. The lead opinion concluded that the determination of whether a plaintiff is barred from recovery, on the one hand, or subject to application of comparative fault principles, on the other hand, turns on whether the defendant had a legal duty to avoid certain conduct or to protect the plaintiff against a particular risk of harm [see Knight v. Jewett (1992) 3 Cal. 4th 296, 314-317, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 2, 834 P.2d 696 ; see also Ford v. Gouin (1992) 3 Cal. 4th 339, 342, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 30, 834 P.2d 724] . In determining the duty of a defendant in a particular factual situation, the nature of a defendant's duty in the sports context depends heavily on the nature of the sport itself, and the scope of the legal duty owed by a defendant frequently will also depend on the defendant's role in, or relationship to, the sport. The Court pointed out that cases have analyzed the duty of sports facility owners with regard to spectators not only by virtue of the nature of the sport itself, but also by reference to steps a sponsoring business entity reasonably should be obligated to take in order to minimize risks without altering the nature of a sport [see Knight v. Jewett (1992) 3 Cal. 4th 296, 317-318, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 2, 834 P.2d 696] .

The court of appeal has applied the Knight v. Jewett primary assumption of risk analysis to an injury suffered by a spectator at a sporting event [Nemarnik v. Los Angeles Kings Hockey Club (2002) 103 Cal. App. 4th 631, 127 Cal. Rptr. 2d 10] , and Paragraph B of this form is based on that approach. That analysis seems to be in accord with the earlier cases that held generally that defendants had no duty to protect spectators from risks inherent in attending a sporting event, although under the modern primary assumption of risk doctrine, the spectator's subjective knowledge of and familiarity with the risk is not relevant, if the risk that caused the injury is inherent in the sport.

For forms and discussion relating to assumption of risk generally, see Ch. 165, Negligence .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Liability for Obvious and Usually Inherent Risks of Game

In Brown v. San Francisco Ball Club (1950) 99 Cal. App. 2d 484, 222 P.2d 19 , plaintiff, a middle-aged woman, was injured by what both parties assumed was a baseball that was being thrown from second base to first base and bounced off the first baseman's glove. She was sitting in an unscreened portion of the stadium although there was a screened portion that seated approximately 5,000 people and that was not filled to capacity. Tickets to the game were sold by section, the screened portion being sold separately. Plaintiff sued defendant owner and operator of the stadium and a directed verdict was granted in favor of defendant. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed and held that plaintiff had assumed the risk of her injury, that there was no negligence on the part of defendant, and that both questions were proper questions for the court to consider on a motion for a directed verdict (99 Cal. App. 2d 484, 492) . The court stated that the owner of property is not an insurer of the safety of an invitee but must use due care to keep the premises in reasonably safe condition and warn of latent perils. Notwithstanding this, the court observed that an owner is not liable for injury to an invitee, resulting from a danger that is obvious or should have been observed in the exercise of reasonable care (99 Cal. App. 2d 484, 486) . Applying these principles to baseball, the court stated that a patron participates in baseball as a spectator and in doing so subjects himself or herself to certain risks necessarily and usually incident to and inherent in the game that are obvious and should be observed in the exercise of reasonable care. Thus, the duty of a proprietor of a sports stadium is to exercise reasonable care and the proprietor is not required to insure, nor does he or she undertake to insure, patrons from injury from batted or thrown balls, and the exercise of reasonable care mandates that only a reasonable number of all seats be screened (99 Cal. App. 2d 484, 487) . Plaintiff attempted to take the case out of the assumption of the risk arena by contending that she was ignorant of the game of baseball and the risks. However, the court stated that she was a mature person in possession of her faculties and nothing about her required a lower standard of self-protection from obvious and inherent risks than the other spectators (99 Cal. App. 2d 484, 488-489) .

In Neinstein v. Los Angeles Dodgers, Inc. (1986) 185 Cal. App. 3d 176, 184, 229 Cal. Rptr. 612 , plaintiff attended a baseball game at defendant's stadium where she occupied a seat in an unscreened area on the first base side and was struck by a batted foul ball. Plaintiff sued defendant for personal injuries and the trial court granted summary judgment to defendant. Plaintiff appealed to the court of appeal.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that plaintiff had assumed the risk of her injuries by voluntarily choosing a seat that was clearly unprotected by screening and that was in an area where foul balls were likely to enter the stands. The court ruled that plaintiff was sufficiently warned of these risks by common knowledge of the nature of baseball, and that defendant had met its duty of reasonable care to spectators by providing a warning about foul balls on the back of each ticket and by making screened seats available (185 Cal. App. 3d 176, 184) .

[b] Primary Assumption of Risk Provides Defense for Injuries Caused by Risks Inherent in Attending Game

In Nemarnik v. Los Angeles Kings Hockey Club (2002) 103 Cal. App. 4th 631, 127 Cal. Rptr. 2d 10 , the plaintiff was sitting in the stands during pre-game warm-ups for a professional hockey game when she was hit in the face with an errant puck. She brought suit against the professional hockey club, the league, and the owners and operators of the hockey arena, arguing that the defendants were negligent in failing to prevent spectators from milling around the ice where they were not supposed to be, which obstructed her view and prevented her from seeing the puck in time to take evasive action. The trial court granted the defendants' motion for nonsuit at the beginning of trial, and the plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. Relying on the analysis of Knight v. Jewett [Knight v. Jewett (1992) 3 Cal. 4th 296, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 2, 834 P.2d 696 ; see § 178.69[2][b]], the court of appeal held that the defendants owed no duty to the plaintiff to eliminate the risk of her injury (103 Cal. App. 4th 631, 643) . The court noted, and the plaintiff conceded, that the risk of being hit with a flying puck was an inherent risk of attending a hockey game. Despite the plaintiff's argument that her injury was caused by the failure of the arena staff to prevent an unusually large number of spectators from congregating between her and the ice, which was in violation of arena policies and increased the risks inherent in attending the game, the court concluded that obstructions of view caused by the unpredictable movements of other fans are also an inherent and unavoidable part of attending a sporting event (103 Cal. App. 4th 631, 638) . Moreover, the court noted that the plaintiff failed to allege that she would have been able to avoid the puck had the crowd not congregated, and therefore the court considered the issue to be whether the defendants owed a duty to eliminate the risk of injuries caused by flying pucks, rather than whether they owed a duty to provide better crowd control (103 Cal. App. 4th 631, 640) . The court refused to impose a duty to eliminate the danger of flying pucks, concluding that to do so would force the defendants either to provide a floor-to-ceiling protective screen around the rink, which would reduce the quality of everyone's view, or to raise the cost of tickets to cover the increased liability costs, which would make ticket prices too costly for some potential spectators (103 Cal. App. 4th 631, 641) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] No Liability for Obvious and Usually Inherent Risks of Game

In Quinn v. Recreation Park Ass'n (1935) 3 Cal. 2d 725, 46 P.2d 144 , plaintiff, a 14-year-old girl, was injured by a foul ball while sitting in an unscreened seat waiting for a screened seat in the same section although screened seats were available in another section. The trial court granted a directed verdict in favor of the manager of the park, the owners of the two ball clubs, and the foul ball hitter. The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment and adopted the opinion of the court of appeal which stated that the management of a ballpark is not required to screen all seats in the exercise of ordinary care and that one who chooses to occupy unscreened seats assumes the risk of being struck by thrown or batted balls, a risk of common knowledge (3 Cal. 2d 725, 729-730) .

In Harrold v. Rolling J Ranch (1993), 19 Cal. App. 4th 578, 23 Cal. Rptr. 2d 671 , plaintiff was injured at a resort while horseback riding when she attempted to remove her coat, the horse spooked, and plaintiff was thrown to the ground. The riding stable knew, but did not tell plaintiff, that the horse had once before spooked and thrown a rider when the rider took off and waved a hat. The court of appeal affirmed summary judgment for defendants, holding that primary assumption of the risk as defined under Knight v. Jewett [Knight v. Jewett (1992) 3 Cal. 4th 296, 314-315, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 30, 834 P.2d 724 ; see § 178.30[3][a]] applied to bar plaintiff's recovery (19 Cal. App. 4th 578, 581) . Defendants had no duty to provide their customers with ideal horses that would never spook or throw a rider; imposing such a duty would impose strict liability on commercial providers of horse-riding facilities with the probable result of driving all such providers out of business. Although defendants did have a duty to warn their customers of the dangerous propensities of their horses, the one prior incident was not enough to establish a dangerous propensity (19 Cal. App. 4th 578, 588) .

In Morton v. California Sports Car Club (1958) 163 Cal. App. 2d 685, 329 P.2d 967 , plaintiff was injured while watching a car race sponsored by defendant when a wheel flew off a car rounding a turn. Plaintiff had chosen to watch the race from a vantage point near one of the turns on the course, rather than from the grandstand or from behind one of the hay bales scattered around the course. The court of appeal affirmed a directed verdict in favor of defendant, holding that plaintiff had assumed the risk of his injuries by choosing to watch the race from that particular location. The court ruled that it was common knowledge that accidents during sports car races kill and injure both drivers and spectators every year and that most of these accidents occur on the turns (163 Cal. App. 2d 685, 688) .

DEFENDANT _____ [OWNER or POSSESSOR] IS NOT LIABLE FOR THE HARM TO PLAINTIFF, BECAUSE ADDITIONAL OR DIFFERENT SECURITY MEASURES ON DEFENDANT'S PREMISES WOULD NOT HAVE PREVENTED THE CRIMINAL ACT BY A THIRD PARTY THAT INJURED PLAINTIFF AND THEREFORE ANY NEGLIGENCE ON THE PART OF DEFENDANT IN NOT PROVIDING ADDITIONAL OR DIFFERENT SECURITY MEASURES WAS NOT THE CAUSE OF THE HARM CAUSED PLAINTIFF BY THAT CRIMINAL ACT.

Failure to Provide Adequate Security Not Cause of Harm If Increased Security Would Not Have Prevented Criminal Act of Third Party. A defendant is not liable for the injuries of a plaintiff who is a victim of crime by a third party on the defendant's premises and claims that the defendant's security measures were inadequate if there is no proof that additional or different security measures would have prevented the crime, because the defendant's failure to provide these increased security precautions is not the cause of the plaintiff's injuries (Saelzler v. [a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a defendant owner or possessor is not liable for injuries resulting from the criminal acts of a third party occurring on the defendant's premises, despite the plaintiff's claim that the defendant's security measures were inadequate, if there is no proof that any additional or different security measures would have prevented the criminal acts against the plaintiff. In this situation, the defendant's failure to provide increased security is not the cause of the plaintiff's injuries.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of lack of cause. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should argue that any testimony, expert or otherwise, regarding security measures and operations did not establish that use of particular measures would have prevented the particular crime that caused the plaintiff's injuries.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Failure to Provide Adequate Security Not Cause of Harm If Increased Security Would Not Have Prevented Criminal Act of Third Party

Saelzler v. Advanced Group 400 (2001) 25 Cal. 4th 763, 107 Cal. Rptr. 2d 617, 23 P.3d 1143 , is discussed in § 178.68[3][a].

Nola M. v. University of S. Cal. (1993) 16 Cal. App. 4th 421, 435, 20 Cal. Rptr. 2d 97 , was an action for personal injuries brought against a university by a woman who was raped by an unknown assailant on the university campus. The attack occurred at night near a building surrounded by trees and shrubs. The plaintiff produced expert testimony at trial that criticized the university's security department for, among other deficiencies, having too few officers and using patrol cars rather than foot patrols. This expert also testified that the high foliage and inadequate lighting in the area where the rape occurred prevented security officers and others from determining whether anyone was loitering nearby. The jury granted a verdict for the plaintiff.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that the expert's testimony did not, and could not, prove that the rape would not have occurred if the university had taken the security precautions that he recommended. The court noted that reasonable protective measures cannot stop wanton violence and even significant increases in police personnel cannot prevent all crime or any particular crime. The court concluded that a defendant cannot be the cause of a physical assault it could not reasonably have prevented, and that characterizing a landowner's failure to deter a third person's wanton act of violence as the cause of the plaintiff's injuries would make the landowner the insurer of the absolute safety of everyone entering the landowner's premises (16 Cal. App. 4th 421, 435-437) .

17-178 California Points & Authorities § 178.90

§ 178.90 Supporting Contention That Owner or Possessor of Premises Liable for Negligence of Independent Contractor--Work Creates Peculiar Risk of Harm

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT _____ [OWNER or POSSESSOR] IS LIABLE FOR THE NEGLIGENCE OF DEFENDANT'S INDEPENDENT CONTRACTOR BECAUSE AN OWNER OR POSSESSOR OF PREMISES WHO EMPLOYS AN INDEPENDENT CONTRACTOR, WHOSE WORK ON THE PREMISES IS LIKELY TO CREATE A PECULIAR RISK OF HARM TO PERSONS THEREON UNLESS PRECAUTIONS ARE TAKEN, IS LIABLE FOR THE NEGLIGENCE OF THE CONTRACTOR IN FAILING TO TAKE SUCH PRECAUTIONS.

Peculiar Risk of Harm. An owner or a possessor of premises who employs an independent contractor to do work on the premises that the employer should recognize as likely to create during its progress a peculiar risk of harm to others unless special precautions are taken is subject to liability for physical harm caused to them by the failure of the contractor to exercise reasonable care to take such precautions (Aceves v. Regal Pale Brewing Co. (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 502, 509, 156 Cal. Rptr. 41, 595 P.2d 619).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a party's contention that an owner or possessor of premises and employer of the independent contractor is liable for the negligence of the independent contractor when there was a failure to take precautions against a peculiar risk.

These points and authorities may be combined with a form of memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue of the applicability of the peculiar risk doctrine. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss the fact that the risk of harm was peculiar to the work being done and arose out of its nature and character and that the possessor of the premises should have realized that the work was likely to create this risk of harm. In addition, counsel should discuss facts tending to show that the failure to take precautions proximately caused the injuries complained of.

[b] Employee of Independent Contractor Cannot Recover Under Peculiar Risk Doctrine

Beginning with the case of Woolen v. Aerojet General Corp. [Woolen v. Aerojet Gen. Corp. (1962) 57 Cal. 2d 407, 410-411, 20 Cal. Rptr. 12, 369 P.2d 708] , California followed the rule that an employee of an independent contractor, injured because of the negligence of the independent contractor, was entitled to recover from the hirer of the independent contractor pursuant to the peculiar risk doctrine [see Privette v. Superior Court (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 689, 696, 21 Cal. Rptr. 2d 72, 854 P.2d 721] . However, the Supreme Court has now reconsidered that line of cases and held that the compensability under the workers' compensation laws of an employee's injury in those circumstances supports a rule that the injured employee is not entitled to recover from the hirer under the peculiar risk doctrine [Privette v. Superior Court (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 689, 696-702, 21 Cal. Rptr. 2d 72, 854 P.2d 721] . Therefore, this form should not be used to support the contention that an employee of the independent contractor is entitled to recover from the hirer based on the peculiar risk doctrine. However, the hirer may still be liable to the injured employee under some other theory of liability, such as the hirer's own negligence [cf. Privette v. Superior Court (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 689, 702, 21 Cal. Rptr. 2d 72, 854 P.2d 721 (plaintiff-employee had abandoned cause of action based on hirer's negligence)]. For points and authorities supporting the contention that the hirer of an independent contractor is directly liable to an employee of the independent contractor for the hirer's own negligent acts and omissions, see Ch. 100A, Employer and Employee .

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in § 178.92 may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Peculiar Risk of Harm

In Aceves v. Regal Pale Brewing Co. (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 502, 156 Cal. Rptr. 41, 595 P.2d 619 , plaintiff was an employee of an independent contractor hired by defendants to demolish their building. Plaintiff was trying to dislodge a steel panel that blocked removal of a door and was injured when a bulldozer simultaneously pushing the door from the outside caused the door to give way and the panel to strike plaintiff. Plaintiff sued the owners of the building, and the worker's compensation carrier of the employer intervened in the action, seeking reimbursement for benefits paid to plaintiff. The jury returned a general verdict in favor of plaintiff and responded to special interrogatories dealing with the allocation of the negligence of plaintiff, the employer, and defendants. The court rendered judgment, adjusting the award with the jury's allocation of negligence in response to the special interrogatories. Plaintiff appealed the computation and allocation of the award. Defendants cross appealed on the basis that the evidence was insufficient to support the verdict against them under the peculiar risk doctrine.

The Supreme Court modified the judgment as to the computation and allocation of the award and affirmed the judgment as modified. In doing so, the Court stated that one who employs an independent contractor to do work that the employer should recognize as likely to create during its progress a peculiar risk of physical harm to others unless special precautions are taken, is subject to liability for physical harm caused to them by the failure of the contractor to take precautions (24 Cal. 3d 502, 509) . The Court went on to state that the evidence in the case was sufficient to support a finding that the demolition work involved a recognizable danger of risk of harm from falling structures unless special precautions were taken (24 Cal. 3d 502, 510) . Quoting from an earlier case [Griesel v. Dart Indus. (1979) 23 Cal. 3d 578, 586, 153 Cal. Rptr. 213, 591 P.2d 503] , the Court further explained the nature of a peculiar risk as one that is peculiar to the work being done, that arises out of its character or the place where it is to be done, and against which a reasonable person would recognize the necessity of taking precautions (24 Cal. 3d 502, 509) .

NOTE:

Although Aceves involved an action brought by an employee of the independent contractor, such an action is no longer available under California law; workers' compensation is the only remedy for the employee's injury in such a case [Privette v. Superior Court (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 689, 702, 21 Cal. Rptr. 2d 72, 854 P.2d 721] .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Peculiar Risk of Harm

In Griesel v. Dart Indus. (1979) 23 Cal. 3d 578, 153 Cal. Rptr. 213, 591 P.2d 503 , plaintiff, an employee of an independent contractor hired by defendants who were owners, developers, and general contractors of a residential development, was injured when a trench that he was working in collapsed. The judgment entered on a verdict for defendants was reversed on the basis that after substitution of an alternate juror the court should have instructed the jury to disregard previous deliberations and begin anew (23 Cal. 3d 578, 584-585) . However, the Supreme Court, in discussing the benefit of a retrial of plaintiff's contention of error in the jury instructions on the peculiar risk doctrine, stated that the instructions as given were erroneous and quoted Restatement (Second) of Torts § 416 as stating the applicable law that one who employs an independent contractor to do work that the employer should recognize as likely to create a peculiar risk of harm to others is subject to liability for a contractor's failure to take such precautions (23 Cal. 3d 578, 585) .

In Jimenez v. Pacific Western Construction Co. (1986) 185 Cal. App. 3d 102 , two employees of a company that was hired by defendant general contractor to install pipes were injured (one fatally) when a trench they were working on collapsed. The general contractor's president was aware that a permit was needed for the installation project and that there were applicable industry safety instructions that would need to be followed. The trial court concluded that the peculiar risk doctrine applied as a matter of law. The jury, finding that the pipe installation company was negligent, found defendant vicariously liable for the injuries under the peculiar risk doctrine. Defendant contended on appeal that the trial court erred when it ruled that the peculiar risk doctrine was applicable as a matter of law. The court of appeal affirmed, stating that because of the nature of the work performed by the injured workers' employer and defendant's recognition that special precautions would have to be taken, the peculiar risk doctrine applied as a matter of law (185 Cal. App. 3d 102, 110-111) .

In Mackey v. Campbell (1980) 101 Cal. App. 3d 774, 162 Cal. Rptr. 64 , the court of appeal affirmed a judgment entered on a jury verdict in favor of plaintiff employee of a subcontractor on a construction project and against the owners and the general contractors. Plaintiff was injured by a scaffold when it was being moved at the construction site. Defendants contended that the peculiar risk doctrine did not apply as a matter of law. In holding that it did apply the court stated that under the peculiar risk doctrine, liability is placed on those who directly or indirectly employ independent contractors to do work that the employer should recognize as likely to create during its progress some peculiar, unreasonable risk of harm to others unless special precautions are taken and the employer failsto provide these precautions or fails to see that the subcontractor provides precautions (101 Cal. App. 3d 774, 784) .

DEFENDANT _____ [OWNER or POSSESSOR] IS LIABLE FOR THE NEGLIGENCE OF DEFENDANT'S INDEPENDENT CONTRACTOR IN FAILING TO MAINTAIN THE PREMISES IN SAFE CONDITION BECAUSE THE DUTY OF AN OWNER OR POSSESSOR OF A PREMISES TO MAINTAIN THE PREMISES IN SAFE CONDITION IS NONDELEGABLE.

Nondelegable Duty to Maintain Premises in Safe Condition. The duty of the owner or possessor of premises to maintain them in a reasonably safe condition is nondelegable and if an independent contractor is employed to perform it, the possessor is liable for harm caused by the negligent failure of the contractor to do so (Brown v. George Pepperdine Found. (1943) 23 Cal. 2d 248, 260, 143 P.2d 929).

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a party's contention that an owner or a possessor of premises is liable for the negligence of an independent contractor in failing to maintain the premises in a safe condition.

These points and authorities may be combined with a form of memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue of the liability of the possessor for the failure of an independent contractor to maintain the premises in a safe condition. [b] Argument

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in § 178.92 may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Nondelegable Duty to Maintain Premises in Safe Condition

In Brown v. George Pepperdine Found. (1943) 23 Cal. 2d 256 , plaintiff, a five-year-old girl, was injured in a fall down an elevator shaft in an apartment building owned by one of the defendants. The other defendant was an elevator maintenance business that had a contract with the owner to inspect the elevator on a weekly basis. The plaintiff and her mother were tenants in the building and the mother testified that although she saw the elevator door being opened by her daughter she did not see how the accident happened. Judgment was rendered against plaintiff and in favor of both defendants on a jury verdict and plaintiff's motion for a new trial was granted on the ground of error in jury instructions. The owner of the building appealed.

The Supreme Court affirmed the granting of a new trial and cited the jury instruction given that stated that the negligence of the independent contractor could not be imputed to the owner as one example of an erroneous jury instruction. Quoting from the Restatement of Torts § 422, the Court stated that the general rule is that the duty a possessor of premises owes to others to maintain the premises in a safe condition is nondelegable. Thus, if an independent contractor is hired by the possessor to perform the maintenance, the possessor is liable for the failure of the contractor to put or maintain the buildings and structures in a reasonably safe condition (23 Cal. 2d 248, 260) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Nondelegable Duty to Maintain Premises in Safe Condition

In O'Gan v. King City Joint Union High Sch. Dist. (1970) 3 Cal. App. 3d 641, 83 Cal. Rptr. 795 , the court of appeal reversed a judgment in favorof the school district and against a student who was injured when a bathroom sink she was resting her hands on broke loose from the wall. The court agreed with plaintiff's contention on appeal that it was error not to instruct the jury on the liability of the school district for the negligent acts of an independent contractor. It stated that a possessor of land is answerable for the negligent failure of an independent contractor to construct or maintain structures in a reasonably safe condition (3 Cal. App. 3d 641, 646) .

In Lilienthal v. Hastings Clothing Co. (1955) 131 Cal. App. 2d 343, 280 P.2d 824 , a judgment against plaintiff who slipped on a waxed floor in defendant's store was reversed based, in part, on the erroneous instructions given as to the liability of defendant for the negligence of the independent contractor who waxed the floor. An instruction was given to the effect that the employer of an independent contractor is not liable for any act done by the contractor. The court, relying on prior case law, stated that the correct statement of the law in the case was that the storeowner does not discharge his or her duty to an invitee by delegating it to an independent contractor, but rather a possessor of land is answerable for the negligent failure of an independent contractor to put or maintain buildings and structures in reasonably safe condition (131 Cal. App. 2d 343, 347) .

Collateral Negligence. Liability of an owner or a possessor of premises for the negligence of an independent contractor or his or her employee does not extend to collateral negligence. Collateral negligence is negligence in the operative detail of the work that is unusual or foreign to the normal contemplated risks of doing the work (*Salinero v. Pon (1981) 124 Cal. [b] Argument

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities in §§ 178.90 and 178.91.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Collateral Negligence

In Salinero v. Pon (1981) 124 Cal. App. 3d 120, 177 Cal. Rptr. 204 , plaintiff was an employee of an independent contractor hired by defendants to clean the windows on defendants' apartment building. It was agreed between defendants and the independent contractor that the windows would be washed from the outside by means of a ladder extended over the roof of the building from which plaintiff would be suspended. Plaintiff was injured when a fellow worker, in attempting to move the weights anchoring his ladder, mistakenly moved the weights anchoring plaintiff's ladder, causing plaintiff to fall. A motion for nonsuit was granted and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed and held that the facts of the case took the case out of the peculiar risk doctrine because the harm to plaintiff was caused by the collateral negligence of his fellow employee (124 Cal. App.3d 120, 139) . The court stated that the "peculiar risks" of window washing do not include the danger associated with the negligence of a fellow employee in removing the window washer's means of attachment to the building in that a risk like this cannot be reasonably foreseen by the landowner and is outside the scope of those dangers associated with window washing and collateral to the risks that normally arise (124 Cal. App. 3d 120, 137) .

The court noted that collateral negligence has sometimes been described as negligence in the operative detail of the work, as distinguished from the general plan or method to be followed. However, the distinction is not essentially one between operative detail and general method. It is rather one of negligence which is unusual or abnormal, or foreign to the normal or contemplated risks of doing the work, as distinguished from negligence which creates only the normal or contemplated risk (124 Cal. App. 3d 120, 137-138) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Collateral Negligence

In Stark v. Weeks Real Estate (1979) 94 Cal. App. 3d 965, 156 Cal. Rptr. 701 , an employee of an independent contractor was constructing homes on defendant's property when he fell on the blade of a hand-held circular power saw that was equipped with a spring-activated guard preventing exposure of the blade when it was not actually cutting. However, in this case, the guard was propped open as were many of the other guards on saws on the site. The court of appeal affirmed the summary judgment in favor of defendant and stated that defendant could not be held liable under the peculiar risk doctrine as the doctrine could not be extended to the use or misuse of hand tools by the independent contractor or its employees (94 Cal. App. 3d 965, 972) .

In Smith v. Lucky Stores (1976) 61 Cal. App. 3d 826, 132 Cal. Rptr. 628 , the court of appeal affirmed a judgment in favor of defendant and against plaintiff who was injured while walking on the sidewalk in front of defendant's store. Defendant had hired an independent contractor to take down a sign on the store. After having taken down a six-foot letter in the sign, one of the contractor's employees leaned it against the contractor's truck but a gust of wind blew the sign over just as plaintiff was passing by. The court agreed with the trial court's conclusion that the negligence of the employee was collateral (61 Cal. App. 3d 826, 830) .

§ 178.93 Opposing Contention That Owner or Possessor of Premises Liable for Negligence of Independent Contractor--Employee of Independent Contractor Cannot Recover Under Peculiar Risk Doctrine

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF CANNOT RECOVER DAMAGES FROM DEFENDANT _____ [OWNER or POSSESSOR] UNDER THE PECULIAR RISK DOCTRINE FOR THE NEGLIGENCE OF THE INDEPENDENT CONTRACTOR, BECAUSE AS AN EMPLOYEE OF THE INDEPENDENT CONTRACTOR, PLAINTIFF CANNOT RECOVER DAMAGES BEYOND WORKERS' COMPENSATION BENEFITS.

Employee of Independent Contractor Cannot Recover Under Peculiar Risk Doctrine. The peculiar risk doctrine does not provide a basis for an employee of a negligent independent contractor to recover tort damages from the person who hired the contractor but did not cause the injuries (Privette v. Superior Court (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 689, 702, 21 Cal. Rptr. 2d 72, 854 P.2d 721).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a party's contention that an owner or possessor of premises is liable for damages caused by the negligence of the independent contractor, based on the peculiar risk doctrine. The basis of opposition is that the plaintiff is an employee of the independent contractor, making the peculiar risk doctrine inapplicable and limiting the employee to recovery of workers' compensation benefits [Privette v. Superior Court (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 689, 702, 21 Cal. Rptr. 2d 72, 854 P.2d 721] .

These points and authorities may be combined with a form of memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the applicability of the peculiar risk doctrine. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counselshould discuss facts showing that plaintiff was an employee of the independent contractor and that the negligence of the contractor was the cause of plaintiff's injuries.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Employee of Independent Contractor Cannot Recover Under Peculiar Risk Doctrine

In Privette v. Superior Court (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 689, 21 Cal. Rptr. 2d 72, 854 P.2d 721 , a homeowner hired a roofing contractor to install a new roof. During the work, an employee of the contractor was injured when he fell off a ladder while carrying a bucket of hot tar. The employee sought workers' compensation benefits for his injuries and also sued the homeowner, alleging negligence in the selection of the contractor and that the homeowner was liable under the peculiar risk doctrine. After the employee abandoned the negligent hiring cause of action, the homeowner moved for summary judgment on the peculiar risk cause of action; the trial court denied the motion, and the court of appeal denied relief. The Supreme Court granted the petition for review and issued an alternative writ to determine the applicability of the doctrine under the circumstances.

The Court reversed, ordering the court of appeal to grant the petition for a writ of mandate ordering the trial court to enter judgment for the homeowner (5 Cal. 4th 689, 702) . The Court traced the history of the peculiar risk doctrine generally, noting that the doctrine arose to ensure that a landowner could not avoid liability to innocent third parties, injured because of dangerous work conducted on the premises, merely by hiring someone else to do the dangerous work (5 Cal. 4th 689, 693-696) . The Court also noted the expansion of this peculiar risk doctrine to permit recovery by employees of the contractor, as well as by innocent third parties, which began with the case of Woolen v. Aerojet General Corp. [Woolen v. Aerojet Gen. Corp. (1962) 57 Cal. 2d 407, 410-411, 20 Cal. Rptr. 12, 369 P.2d 708] . However, the Court also noted the criticism of that expansion and stated that the cases permitting employees of the contractor to recover had not discussed the effect of workers' compensation laws on that liability. The Court was persuaded that the policies underlying the workers' compensation exclusive-remedy doctrine, which precludes tort recovery from an employer for injury suffered in the course of employment (and which also precludes any recovery of indemnity from the negligent contractor-employer), justify a rule that employees of the independent contractor cannot recover tort damages from the hirer under the peculiar risk doctrine (5 Cal. 4th 689, 696-702) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Employee of Independent Contractor Cannot Recover Under Peculiar Risk Doctrine

In Smith v. ACandS, Inc. (1994) 31 Cal. App. 4th 77, 37 Cal. Rptr. 2d 457 , plaintiff, who had worked as a pipe fitter for 30 years, sued various defendants, including a utility company that built power plants using asbestos insulation. The jury found the utility company vicariously liable under the peculiar risk doctrine, which allows a person who hires an independent contract to perform work that is inherently dangerous to be held liable when the contractor's negligent performance of the work causes injuries. The court of appeal reversed, noting that in Privette v. Superior Court [Privette v. Superior Court (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 689, 21 Cal. Rptr. 2d 72, 854 P.2d 721] , the boundaries of the doctrine of peculiar risk had recently been narrowed (31 Cal. App. 4th 77, 94) . Plaintiff argued that Privette does not prevent tort recovery against nonnegligent landowners by a hired contractor's employee who is injured by the negligence of another contractor working on the premises. However, the court of appeal held that a landowner that hires several independent contractors to work simultaneously on a project on its land is not vicariously liable under the doctrine of peculiar risk for the negligence of any of the hired contractors that injures any of the contractors' employees (31 Cal. App. 4th 77, 95) .

§ 178.94 Opposing Contention That Contractor or Subcontractor Is Liable for Negligence Harm Due to Obvious Danger Patent Defect Caused by Contractor but Discovered by Owner After Acceptance

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum or points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

[CONTRACTOR and/or SUBCONTRACTOR] ARE NOT LIABLE FOR INJURIES TO PLAINTIFF RESULTING FROM NEGLIGENT CONSTRUCTION BECAUSE THE DEFECT WAS PATENT AND [OWNER or POSSESSOR] DISCOVERED THE DANGEROUS CONDITION AFTER ACCEPTING THE STRUCTURE.

Patent Defects Caused by Contractor's Negligence. A contractor is not liable to third persons injured by dangerous conditions resulting from the contractor's negligent construction where the owner discovers the defect after accepting the structure and wherethe defect is patent rather than latent (Sanchez v. Swinerton & Walberg Co. (1996) 47 Cal. App. 4th 1461, 1471, 55 Cal. Rptr. 2d 415).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a plaintiff's contention that a contractor or subcontractor of premises is liable for injuries to plaintiff caused by a patent construction defect on the premises.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that a contractor or subcontractor of premises is not liable for injuries to plaintiff caused by a patent construction defect on the premises, because the owner or possessor discovered the condition after accepting the structure from the negligent contractor, for example in a motion for summary judgment. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Patent Defects Caused by Contractor's Negligence

In Sanchez v. Swinerton & Walberg Co. (1996) 47 Cal. App. 4th 1461, 55 Cal. Rptr. 2d 415 , plaintiff suffered injuries when he slipped and fell on pooled water at a Los Angeles Times Olympic Production Facility. The facility was constructed by a general contractor and a concrete subcontractor two years prior to the accident. Upon completion of the project the facility was accepted by the owner. For some time prior to plaintiff's accident, employees and agents of the owner had noticed that whenever it rained, water accumulated on the landing, which sloped toward the building entrance. The water formed ponds with depths of one-half inch. The water also tended to run toward the entrance. In an effort to divert the water, sandbags were placed along the landing. Nonetheless, water sometimes migrated into the entryway. None of the owner's employees or agents informed either defendant of this problem. Plaintiff sued the contractor and subcontractor and the trial court granted summary judgment in favor of defendants.

The court of appeals affirmed, holding that the contractor and subcontractor were not liable to third persons injured by a patently defective condition after the owner's acceptance of the structure (47 Cal. App. 4th 1461, 1471) . In arriving at its decision, the court traced the history of the law in the area of post-owner-acceptance third party liability, and concluded that it was the latency of the defect which was essential to the contractor's negligent-construction liability after the owner had accepted the structure. The defect asserted by plaintiff in this case was that defective construction of the landing allowed water to pool on the landing and to drain into the transportation office, thus creating a dangerous condition. According to the court, this dangerous condition: (1) would have been obvious and apparent to any reasonably observant person, as would the danger that the water might create slippery surfaces and cause one to slip and fall; (2) was patent as a matter of law, since it would be discovered by the inspection an owner would make in the exercise of ordinary care and prudence; and (3) was observed by the owner's agents, and the risk it entailed appreciated, on several occasions preceding plaintiff's accident. The court noted that even if the defect initially could have been considered latent, once it was discovered, it became patent. The fact that the owner failed to take precautions until after plaintiff was injured did not change the nature of the defect (47 Cal. App. 4th 1461, 1471) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Patent Defects Caused by Contractor's Negligence

In Drummond v. Desmarais (2009) 176 Cal. App. 4th 439, 98 Cal. Rptr. 3d 183, plaintiff, an employee of the Transportation Security Administration at Los Angeles International Airport, was injured when he tripped over mounting bolts that secured an explosive detection system machine. He sued the contractors who installed the machine for negligence. The trial court granted summary judgment for defendants and the court of appeal affirmed. The court held that, based on the "completed and accepted" doctrine as described in Sanchez v. Swinerton & Walberg Co. (1996) 47 Cal. App. 4th 1461, 55 Cal. Rptr. 2d 415 , discussed in [3][a], above, defendants could not be held liable under the facts of the case. The court noted that the evidence showed that prior to plaintiff's injury, the anchors had been installed on the machine and the machine had been put into service by plaintiff's employer in an area reserved for its employees.

Moreover, no evidence indicated that defendants performed work on the machine after the anchors had been installed, nor retained any control over the machine, although they may have had other work to perform on other areas of their project. The court concluded that under the doctrine described in Sanchez, liability for the safety of the contractors' work shifted to the owner upon examination and acceptance of the work and subsequent use of the machine. In the instant case, it was undisputed that the alleged defect, the hazard created by the protruding anchor bolts, were patently obvious and known to the plaintiff and his employer. As such, defendants could not be held liable for plaintiff's injury (176 Cal. App. 4th 439, 450).

D. Firefighter's Rule

17-178 California Points & Authorities § 178.110

§ 178.110 Supporting Contention That Firefighter's Rule Bars Recovery for Injury--No Duty of Care to Protect From Risk Necessitating Presence

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT _____ [OWNER or POSSESSOR] IS NOT LIABLE FOR THE HARM TO PLAINTIFF _____[POLICE OFFICER or FIREFIGHTER] BECAUSE AN OWNER OR POSSESSOR OF PREMISES IS NOT LIABLE TO A _____ [POLICE OFFICER or FIREFIGHTER] FOR INJURY RESULTING FROM NEGLIGENCE OR WILLFUL MISCONDUCT IF THE INJURY IS DUE TO THE SPECIFIC RISK THAT NECESSITATED HIS/HER PRESENCE ON THE PREMISES.

A. No Liability for Injury From Risk Necessitating Presence. The owner or possessor of premises is not liable for injury to a police officer or firefighter resulting from negligence or willful misconduct in creating the risk that necessitated his or her presence if the injury suffered is a result of that very risk (Walters v. Sloan (1977) 20 Cal. 3d 199, 202, 142 Cal. Rptr. 152, 571 P.2d 609 ; see also Baker v. Superior Court (1982) 129 Cal. App. 3d 710, 713, 181 Cal. Rptr. 311).

B. Rule Applies to Off-duty Sheriff Who Assumes Responsibility for Apprehending Criminal Suspect on Defendant's Premises. The firefighter's rule bars recovery of damages from property owners for personal injuries suffered by an off-duty deputy sheriff who assumes responsibility for apprehending a criminal suspect on defendant's premises; defendants owe no duty of care to protect a deputy sheriff from the very danger that he was employed to confront (Hodges v. Yarian (1997) 53 Cal. App. 4th 973, 981, 62 Cal. Rptr. 2d 130).

C. Rule Applies to Volunteer as Well as Paid Firefighters. Application of the firefighter's rule is not strictly limited to cases in which the particular risk was assumed for compensation (Hodges v. Yarian (1997) 53 Cal. App. 4th 973, 982, 62 Cal. Rptr. 2d 130).

D. Rule Applies to Public Versus Private Safety Employees. Public safety officers are employed by and at the expense of the class of individuals whose negligence creates the occasion for the performance of their services. Because of the relationship between the public, the law enforcement officer, and those who require the services of the officer, the individual's usual duty of care towards the officer is replaced by the individual's contribution to tax-supported compensation for the officer (Hodges v. Yarian (1997) 53 Cal. App. 4th 973, 984, 62 Cal. Rptr. 2d 130).

E. No Nexus Required Between Presence at Scene and Law Enforcement Employment. No nexus is required between a law enforcement officer's presence at the scene and his or her law enforcement employment. A public safety officer's original reason for being on the premises is irrelevant; the firefighter's rule is triggered because the officer reacted as a police officer to the disturbance and deliberately encountered the danger (Hodges v. Yarian (1997) 53 Cal. App. 4th 973, 984, 62 Cal. Rptr. 2d 130).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a party's contention that there is no liability on the part of an owner or a possessor of premises for injury to a police officer or fire fighter called to the scene.

These points and authorities may be combined with a form of memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue of the application of the firefighter's rule, sometimes still referred to as the fireman's" rule, precluding recovery for injuries. The issue may be properly raised in a motion for summary judgment [see, e.g., Baker v. Superior Court (1982) 129 Cal. App. 3d 710, 722, 181 Cal. Rptr. 311] . These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

If appropriate, the points and authorities in §§ 178.112 -178.117 may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Liability for Injury From Risk Necessitating Presence

Walters v. Sloan (1977) 20 Cal. 3d 199, 202, 142 Cal. Rptr. 152, 571 P.2d 609 , was an action brought by a police officer against defendants who left their home in the charge of their teenage daughter. Acting with their knowledge, she hosted a large party at which alcohol and drugs were available and disorder eventually developed. Plaintiff, who was on duty, was sent to defendants' residence where he was attacked while trying to arrest various guests for being drunk in public. The trial court entered a judgment of dismissal, and plaintiff appealed to the Supreme Court.

The Court affirmed, rejecting the argument that the firefighter's rule, which applies to police officers as well as firefighters, should be abolished (20 Cal. 3d 199, 202) . The Court noted that the rule, which precludes firefighters and police officers from "complain[ing] of negligence in the creation of the very occasion for [their] engagement," is based not only on fundamental tort principles denying recovery to anyone who knowingly and voluntarily confronts a hazard, but also on modern public policy (20 Cal. 3d 199, 204-205) . Because most fires are attributable to negligence, it would be too burdensome to impose liability for firefighters' injuries on everyone who carelessly caused or failed to prevent a fire. The Court also pointed out that firefighters and police officers are paid to face the hazards of their professions and are provided special benefits for being injured on duty that are in addition to the usual workers' compensation benefits (20 Cal. 3d 199, 205-206) .

In Baker v. Superior Court (1982) 129 Cal. App. 3d 710, 181 Cal. Rptr. 311 , plaintiffs were two paid-call members of a fire department who were injured while fighting a fire at defendant owners' ranch. As paid-call firefighters, plaintiffs were volunteers who could choose to respond to fires and if they responded, were paid $5 per fire. One of the plaintiffs was a full-time cook and the other a homemaker. The injuries occurred when plaintiffs jumped from a truck and the truck rolled over on them. Plaintiffs sued the owners and selected employees of the ranch alleging negligence, violations of statutes, ordinances, and regulations, and willful misconduct in setting the fire and failing to control it. Defendants petitioned for mandate after the trial court denied their motion for summary judgment, apparently on the ground that the firefighter's rule was inapplicable to volunteer firefighters.

The court of appeal issued a writ of mandate ordering the trial court to vacate its order denying the motion and enter an order granting the motion and dismissing the action. The court held that the firefighter's rule that precluded recovery for injuries suffered by firefighters in attempting to put out a fire was applicable to volunteer firefighters. In doing so, the court observed that the primary basis for the rule was the fundamental principle that one who has knowingly and voluntarily confronted a hazard cannot recover for injuries sustained thereby (129 Cal. App. 3d 710, 713-714) . The court held that the type of assumption of the risk underlying the firefighter's rule continued to be viable as a separate defense negating a defendant's duty of care after the advent of the concept of comparative negligence ushered in by the decision of Li v. Yellow Cab Co. [Li v. Yellow Cab Co. (1975) 13 Cal. 3d 804, 826, 119 Cal. Rptr. 858, 532 P.2d 1226] (129 Cal. App. 3d 710, 720-721) .

[b] Rule Applies to Off-duty Sheriff Who Assumes Responsibility for Apprehending Criminal Suspect on Defendant's Premises

In Hodges v. Yarian (1997) 53 Cal. App. 4th 973, 62 Cal. Rptr. 2d 130 , an off-duty deputy sheriff confronted and struggled with, then shot and killed, a suspected burglar who had broken into the garage of the apartment building where the deputy lived. Plaintiff subsequently sued the owners and managers of the apartment building for damages suffered in connection with the confrontation and shooting of the suspect, alleging negligent failure to address certain security and maintenance problems with the building. Defendants moved for summary judgment contending that plaintiff was barred from recovery by the firefighter's rule and the trial court agreed. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The case presented the court with a question of first impression in California: whether the firefighter's rule barred recovery of damages for personal injuries suffered by an off-duty deputy sheriff when he confronted and struggled with, then shot and killed, a suspected burglar who had broken into the garage of the apartment building where the deputy lived. The court looked to the California Supreme Court's decision in Neighbarger v. Irwin Industries [Neighbarger v. Irwin Indus., Inc. (1994) 8 Cal. 4th 532, 34 Cal. Rptr. 2d 630, 882 P.2d 347] for both the public policy behind the firefighter's rule as well as theproper methodology for determining whether the rule applied to bar plaintiff's recovery in the factual circumstances in this case. The Supreme Court in Neighbarger articulated two public policy bases for the firefighter's rule: precluding recovery for those who are injured by the very hazard they have been employed to confront, and precluding taxpayers from paying twice for injuries suffered by public safety employees, once in special public compensation systems and a second time in individual liability. Neighbarger also directed the court to examine whether the policy reasons offered for the firefighter's rule, applied in the novel factual circumstances of this case and to keep in mind the nature of the defendants activities and the relationship of the plaintiff and the defendants to that activity to decide whether, as a matter of public polity, the defendants should owe plaintiff a duty of care. Under this standard of review the court concluded as a matter of law that the firefighter's rule barred plaintiff's claims for damages against defendants (53 Cal. App. 4th 973, 980) . The court reasoned that plaintiff: (1) acted in response to suspected criminal activity in the garage; (2) acted as a peace officer, using his professional training to confront and subdue the intruder; (3) specifically and repeatedly asserted his authority as a peace officer while attempting to effectuate an arrest of the suspect; and (4) exercised his statutory authority to use force, in this case deadly force, to arrest the intruder. These activities were inherently part of the job of a deputy sheriff, and precisely the types of hazards that plaintiff had been trained and was employed to confront. Furthermore, plaintiff did not dispute that he received or was eligible for special public compensation for confronting the dangers posed by the defendant's negligence. Since defendant property owners, had already been taxed to provide these special benefits fr deputy sheriffs such as plaintiff, they were entitled to the benefit of the cost-spreading aspect of the public compensation system and should not have to pay again for injuries that were compensable in that system (53 Cal. App. 4th 973, 982) .

In so holding, the court dismissed plaintiff's argument that the application of the firefighter's rule to off duty peace officers punished and unfairly discriminated against them, denying them rights other tenants enjoy as against their landlords with respect to unsafe conditions on leased premises. The court felt that peace officers and ordinary tenants are not similarly situated when it comes to handling the type of risk plaintiff confronted. An ordinary tenant, for example, was neither trained nor under any duty to apprehend a criminal suspect. According to the court, those are the types of public functions the taxpayers expect, pay and equip California peace officers to perform. Therefore, when a peace officer assumes responsibility for performing such functions and is injured in the process, his or her recourse is in the public system of "special public benefits" established to compensate the officer for such injuries.

[c] Rule Applies to Volunteer as Well as Paid Firefighters

The facts and procedural background of Hodges v. Yarian (1997) 53 Cal. App. 4th 973, 62 Cal. Rptr. 2d 130 ; are discussed in § 178.110[3][b]. In affirming the ruling of the trial court, the court of appeal said that application of the firefighter's rule is not strictly limited to cases in which the particular risk was assumed for compensation (53 Cal. App. 4th 973, 982) . Relying on Neighbarger v. Irwin Industries, Inc. [Neighbarger v. Irwin Indus., Inc. (1994) 8 Cal. 4th 532, 34 Cal. Rptr. 2d 630, 882 P.2d 347] , the court ruled that although peace officers are entitled to special public compensation for undertaking the hazards peculiar to their line of work, it is not the fact or amount of compensation that determines the applicability of the firefighter's rule in these circumstances. Plaintiff performed a public service when he entered the garage out of concern for his fellow tenants and pointed to no material difference between the service he would have performed if on duty and the service he performed in this case (53 Cal. App. 4th 973, 983) .

[d] Rule Applies to Public Versus Private Safety Employees

The facts and procedural background of Hodges v. Yarian (1997) 53 Cal. App. 4th 973, 62 Cal. Rptr. 2d 130 , are discussed in § 178.110[3][b]. In affirming the ruling of the trial court, the court of appeal dismissed plaintiff's argument that he should be treated like a private safety employee and be allowed to proceed against defendants for the injuries he sustained. Plaintiff relied on Neighbarger v. Irwin Industries, Inc. [Neighbarger v. Irwin Indus., Inc. (1994) 8 Cal. 4th 532, 34 Cal. Rptr. 2d 630, 882 P.2d 347] , in which the Supreme Court held that the firefighter's rule did not bar recovery by private safety employees- who had special training in petroleum firefighting and whose duties as employees of oil refinery included fire suppression - for injuries suffered when they tried to put out a fire started by refinery employees. The court of appeal agreed with Neighbarger, that private employees did not stand in the same relationship to the defendant as public safety officers do with respect to members of the general public. Public safety officers are employed by and at the expense of the class of individuals whose negligence creates the occasion for the performance of their services. Because of the relationship between the public, the law enforcement officer, and those who require the services of the officer, the individual's usual duty of care towards the officer is replaced by the individual's contribution to tax-supported compensation for the officer (Hodges v. Yarian (1997) 53 Cal. App. 4th 973, 984, 62 Cal. Rptr. 2d 130).

[e] No Nexus Required Between Presence at Scene and Law Enforcement Employment

The facts and procedural background of Hodges v. Yarian (1997) 53 Cal. App. 4th 973, 62 Cal. Rptr. 2d 130 ; are discussed in § 178.110[3][b]. Inaffirming the ruling of the trial court, the court of appeal dismissed plaintiff's argument that there was no nexus between his presence at the scene and his law enforcement employment, and that there was a triable issue of fact whether he entered the garage as private citizen or as a police officer. The court ruled that no such nexus is required. A public safety officer's original reason for being on the premises is irrelevant; the firefighter's rule is triggered because the officer reacted as a police officer to the disturbance and deliberately encountered the danger (53 Cal. App. 4th 973, 984) .

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT IS NOT LIABLE UNDER THE FIREFIGHTER'S RULE FOR THE HARM SUFFERED BY PLAINTIFF _____[FIREFIGHTER or POLICE OFFICER] BECAUSE A HAZARD THAT A _____[FIREFIGHTER or POLICE OFFICER] RESPONDS TO IN HIS/HER PROFESSIONAL CAPACITY WHILE ON DUTY IS NOT AN INDEPENDENT ACT OF MISCONDUCT MERELY BECAUSE HE/SHE ENCOUNTERED THAT HAZARD BY CHANCE.

Hazard Encountered by Chance Not Independent Act of Misconduct. Firefighters or police officers who have not been called to the scene of a fire or other emergency, but who have been injured while responding to a hazard that they encounter by chance while on duty, are barred from recovery by the firefighter's rule, because their presence at a particular location for reasons unrelated to the hazard to which they responded does not make the hazard an independent act of misconduct (Kelhi v. Fitzpatrick (1994) 25 Cal. App. 4th 1149, 1158-1160, 31 Cal. Rptr. 2d 182 ; see Seibert Sec. Servs., Inc. v. Superior Court (1993) 18 Cal. App. 4th 394, 411, 22 Cal. Rptr. 2d 514).

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that the firefighter's rule, sometimes still called the fireman's" rule, bars a firefighter or police officer from recovering for injuries suffered due to a hazard that he or she encountered by chance while on duty, because this type of hazard is not an independent act of misconduct that would permit recovery.

These points and authorities may be combined with a form of memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue of the firefighter's rule precluding recovery for injuries suffered due to a hazard encountered by chance. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss the hazard that the firefighter or police officer encountered by chance while on duty, the firefighter's or police officer's response to that hazard in his or her professional capacity, and the relationship between that hazard and the cause of the injury complained of by the firefighter or police officer.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Hazard Encountered by Chance Not Independent Act of Misconduct

In Kelhi v. Fitzpatrick (1994) 25 Cal. App. 4th 1149, 31 Cal. Rptr. 2d 182 , plaintiff was a highway patrol officer in uniform who was driving to work on his official motorcycle when he saw tires break off a pickup truck on the highway ahead of him. Plaintiff responded by turning on his flashers, checking traffic behind him to ensure that no vehicles ran intothe tires, and asking the truck's driver to move onto the shoulder. After plaintiff moved around the truck to look for the tires, which were rolling down the highway, they veered, bounced off a retaining wall, and hit him. Plaintiff brought an action for personal injury against the driver and owner of the truck and several other defendants. The trial court granted defendants' motion for summary judgment, which was based on the firefighter's rule, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, rejecting plaintiff's argument that the firefighter's rule did not apply to bar his recovery because his presence at the accident scene was fortuitous and unrelated to the hazard that injured him. The court acknowledged that plaintiff's situation was unlike the classic scenario in which the risk that causes injury is the very reason a police officer or firefighter is summoned to the scene (25 Cal. App. 4th 1149, 1158) . The risk that caused plaintiff's injuries, the runaway tires, was not the conduct that brought him to that highway at that moment; however, the runaway tires were the risk that prompted his response as a police officer. His actions were the same as those he would have taken had he been summoned to the scene, and an officer called to the scene would have been barred from recovery by the firefighter's rule for a similar injury; therefore, the exception for unrelated or independent acts did not apply to allow his recovery for any negligence that caused the tires to come off the truck (25 Cal. App. 4th 1149, 1158-1160) .

The facts and procedural background of Seibert Sec. Servs., Inc. v. Superior Court (1993) 18 Cal. App. 4th 394, 22 Cal. Rptr. 2d 514 , are discussed in § 178.114[3][b]. One basis for the trial court's denial of the defendant's motion for summary judgment was that a triable issue of fact existed as to whether the negligence of defendant's employees was an independent act of misconduct. In issuing a writ of mandate ordering the trial court to vacate its order denying the motion and to enter a new order granting the motion, the court of appeal held that no independent act of misconduct occurred as a matter of law. Although the conduct of defendant's employees may have been independent of and unrelated to the conduct that originally brought plaintiff to the hospital, that conduct was the immediate cause of plaintiff's being asked to respond and assist in subduing the violent patient (18 Cal. App. 4th 394, 410-411) .

Recovery for Injury From Independent Act of Misconduct Not Barred. The firefighter's rule does not prohibit a firefighter or police officer from recovering damages from a possessor of premises for injuries caused by acts of misconduct independent from the act that created the emergency to which the firefighter or police officer responded (*Lipson v. [a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a party's contention that the firefighter's rule shields an owner or possessor of premises from liability for injuries incurred by a firefighter or police officer if the injuries are caused by acts independent of the risk creating the necessity of his or her presence.

These points and authorities may be combined with a form of memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel is responding to the contention that the firefighter's rule bars recovery. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Recovery for Injury From Independent Act of Misconduct Not Barred

In Lipson v. Superior Court (1982) 31 Cal. 3d 362, 378, 182 Cal. Rptr. 629, 644 P.2d 822 , plaintiff, a firefighter, was injured while in the process of containing a boilover at defendants' chemical plant that was caused by defendants' negligence. Plaintiff alleged that his injury was caused by the negligent or intentional misrepresentation of the nature of the hazard, in that defendants told him when he arrived at the plant that the boilover did not involve toxic chemicals when in fact it did. Plaintiff complained of injury suffered because of exposure to the toxic chemicals that would not have occurred if he had been informed of their nature. Plaintiff also alleged that his injury was caused by defendants' maintenance of an ultrahazardous activity on the premises.

Defendants moved for summary judgment based on the ground that plaintiff's action was barred by the firefighter's rule. The motion was denied and defendants sought and obtained from the court of appeal a peremptory writ of mandate compelling the trial court to grant the motion and dismiss the action. The Supreme Court granted plaintiff's request for a hearing and held that the trial court was correct in refusing to grant the summary judgment motion.

In holding that the firefighter's rule did not bar recovery for plaintiff's injuries, the Court reaffirmed the continued existence of the rule but stated that its narrow parameters do not prohibit a firefighter from recovering damages if the act that results in his or her injury is independent from the act that created the emergency to which the firefighter responded. Thus, a defendant is liable for failing to warn of a known, hidden danger on his or her premises or for misrepresenting the nature of the hazard, if such misconduct caused the injuries (31 Cal. 3d 362, 378) . The Court also stated that if the maintenance of an ultrahazardous activity on the premises produces an injury separate from the injuries caused by the risk creating the emergency a firefighter may seek recovery on the basis of strict liability (31 Cal. 3d 362, 376-379) .

In Donohue v. San Francisco Hous. Auth. (1993) 16 Cal. App. 4th 658, 20 Cal. Rptr. 2d 148 , plaintiff was a firefighter who came to defendant's apartment building to inspect for fire code violations, including a locked penthouse door opening onto the roof. The concrete stairs leading to the penthouse door did not have skid-resistant treads and had just been hosed down. Plaintiff was injured when he slipped on these steps and fell. The trial court granted summary judgment in favor of defendant on the ground that the firefighter's rule barred plaintiff's recovery. Plaintiff appealed to the court of appeal.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that the firefighter's rule did not apply in this case because plaintiff's injuries were caused, not by the hazard that required his presence on the premises, but by an entirely independent negligent act. Plaintiff was not on the premises to inspect the slipperiness of the steps. Therefore, even though plaintiff was injured in the regular course of his duties and the hazard of slippery steps was one he would normally encounter as part of his job, plaintiff was not barred from recovery for his injuries (16 Cal. App. 4th 658, 663) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Recovery for Injury From Independent Act of Misconduct Not Barred

In Boon v. Rivera (2000) 80 Cal. App. 4th 1322, 96 Cal. Rptr. 2d 276 , the plaintiff was a police officer who responded to an emergency call at the defendant's residence, where the defendant's husband had barricaded himself in the house. The defendant advised the plaintiff and other officers that her husband was not violent. However, she knew but did not disclose that there was an M-16 rifle and a gun safe in the house, that her husband had previously been diagnosed as a danger to himself and others, that her husband had threatened to kill her and their child, and that her husband had threatened to kill the first police officer who arrived at the residence. Based on the defendant's information that her husband was not violent, the plaintiff responded with non-lethal force and was shot by the defendant's husband. The plaintiff alleged that if he had known the truth aboutthe husband's violent nature, he would have responded differently. The trial court sustained the defendant's demurrer, finding that the action against the defendant was barred by the firefighter's rule and that the defendant owed no duty to the plaintiff. The court of appeal reversed, concluding that the facts were analogous to those in Lipson v. Superior Court, described in § 178.112[3][a]. The court concluded that the firefighter's rule was not a defense to the action brought against the defendant. Although a police officer may expect to encounter force when responding to an emergency call of a barricaded man, the risk that someone at the scene would deceive the officer as to the nature of the man's violent tendencies was not an inherent risk of the situation. Instead, the defendant's misrepresentation was an independent act of misconduct occurring after the plaintiff arrived on the scene (80 Cal. App. 4th 1322, 1328-1330) .

In Terhell v. American Commonwealth Assocs. (1985) 172 Cal. App. 3d 434, 218 Cal. Rptr. 256 , plaintiff firefighter fell through an unguarded opening in the roof of defendants' building while fighting a fire on the premises. In his complaint, plaintiff alleged that defendants negligently maintained the roof in a manner that created a concealed opening that was hazardous to anyone on the roof and that defendants knew of the opening and its hazard but failed to warn plaintiff of its existence. The court of appeal reversed the trial court's judgment of dismissal, holding that it did not appear on the face of plaintiff's complaint that his action was barred by the firefighter's rule (172 Cal. App. 3d 434, 437) . The court held that the unguarded hole in the roof was not the cause of plaintiff's presence at the scene, and that negligence that did not cause the fire is not subject to the rule. The court noted that the situation most frequently confronted by the courts has been the failure of a landowner or occupier to warn a firefighter of a known hidden danger on the premises. Virtually all jurisdictions that have considered this factual situation have allowed recovery if the failure to warn ultimately resulted in an injury to the firefighter (172 Cal. App. 3d 434, 440) .

In Kocan v. Garino (1980) 107 Cal. App. 3d 291, 165 Cal. Rptr. 712 , a police officer was injured while pursuing a suspect onto defendant's property when a dilapidated fence on the property gave way. Defendant's demurrer to the complaint was sustained without leave to amend on the basis that the firefighter's rule barred plaintiff's recovery. The court of appeal reversed the order dismissing the complaint and held that because defendant's negligence, if any, did not create the risk to which plaintiff responded, the test of liability rested on those considerations that generally govern the relationship between a possessor of property and persons injured thereon (107 Cal. App. 3d 291, 296) .

In Bartholomew v. Klingler Co. (1975) 53 Cal. App. 3d 975, 126 Cal. Rptr. 191 , the court of appeal reversed a judgment on the pleadings in favor of defendant and against plaintiff police officer that was granted on the ground that the firefighter's rule precluded recovery for injuries sustained in falling through a weak ceiling on defendant's premises while responding to a burglar alarm and searching for intruders (53 Cal. App. 3d 975, 981) . The court, in recognizing that a possessor of premises has a duty to maintain the premises in safe condition and warn of any known hidden defects, stated that the proper test of liability to be applied to defendant is that of reasonableness as enunciated in Rowland v. Christian [Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 Cal. 2d 108, 118-119, 70 Cal. Rptr. 97, 443 P.2d 561] and was a question of fact (53 Cal. App. 3d 975, 981) .

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that the firefighter's rule applies to private safety employees and precludes them from stating a cause of action against a third party, not the employer, for injuries caused by the third party's negligence in starting a fire.

These points and authorities may be combined with a form of memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel is responding to the contention that the firefighter's rule bars recovery. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss the status of the plaintiff as a private safety employee, rather than a publicly employed firefighter, the defendant's status as a third party and not plaintiff's employer, and the negligence of defendant in starting the fire that resulted in plaintiff's injuries.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Recovery by Private Safety Employee for Negligence of Third Party Not Barred

Neighbarger v. Irwin Indus., Inc. (1994) 8 Cal. 4th 532, 34 Cal. Rptr. 2d 630, 882 P.2d 347 , was an action for personal injuries brought by two safety employees of an oil company who were injured by liquid petroleum that ignited and burned when employees of defendant, a company that contracted to provide maintenance services to the oil company, negligently unplugged a valve on the oil company's premises. The trial court granted summary judgment to defendant on the basis of the firefighter's rule. The court of appeal upheld the order, ruling that private safety employees assume the risk of injury that may occur when they respond to emergencies on the job and therefore that defendant owed plaintiffs no duty of care. Plaintiffs appealed to the Supreme Court, which reversed.

The Court distinguished between publicly employed firefighters and private safety employees and held that the firefighter's rule does not preclude a private safety employee from stating a cause of action against a third party who is not his or her employer for injuries caused by that third party's negligence in starting a fire (8 Cal. 4th 532, 546-547) . The Court reasoned that by establishing fire departments and taxing themselves to pay for their services, the public in effect has purchased exoneration from the duty of care and does not have to pay twice, through taxation and individual liability, for those services (8 Cal. 4th 532, 542-543) . Because of this relationship between the public, the firefighter, and the individual members of the public who require the firefighter's services, the individual's duty of care towards the firefighter is replaced by the individual's contribution to tax-supported compensation for the firefighter (8 Cal. 4th 532, 546) . In contrast, a defendant whose negligence injures private safety employees employed by another does not have the same relationship with those private safety employees as a member of the public has with publicly employed firefighters, because the defendant has not paid in any way to be relieved of the duty of care owed toward the private employees (8 Cal. 4th 532, 543) . Another consideration supporting the distinction between publicly employed firefighters and private safety employees is that actions by publicly employed firefighters would involve costly litigation over subrogation that would ultimately be financed by the public and that would not benefit the firefighter, who receives retirement or workers' compensation benefits, whereas actions by private safety employees shift the loss from the innocent employees and their employer to the third party whose negligence caused the injuries (8 Cal. 4th 532, 543) .

The Court observed that the firefighter's rule is not actually a separate concept, but rather is an example of the application of the primary versus secondary assumption of risk doctrine set forth in Knight v. Jewett [Knight v. Jewett (1992) 3 Cal. 4th 296, 313, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 2, 834 P.2d 696] , which is a legal determination of whether, based on the nature of the activity involved and the relationship of the parties to that activity, defendant owed plaintiff a duty of care (8 Cal. 4th 532, 538-539) . The Court held that the proper basis for the rule is not, as had been held before Knight, a plaintiff's voluntary acceptance of a known risk of injury in the course of employment, but rather a public policy determination that a person who negligently starts a fire does not owe a duty of care to protect the responding firefighter from the very danger that requires the firefighter's presence (8 Cal. 4th 532, 537-538) .

NOTE:

In drawing this distinction between publicly employed firefighters and private safety employees, the Court rejected the reasoning of a court of appeal decision [Holland v. Crumb (1994) 26 Cal. App. 4th 1844, 1852, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 366] , which applied the firefighter's rule to preclude recovery by a privately-employed tow truck driver who was struck by traffic while preparing to tow a disabled vehicle. The Court observed that the court of appeal had based its decision on the theory that the driver had assumed the foreseeable risk of his hazardous employment; noting that private employees do not assume all the foreseeable risks of their employment, the Court held that application of the firefighter's rule requires a closer analysis focusing on the relationship of the parties and the defendant's duty of care (8 Cal. 4th 532, 545 n.4).

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Recovery by Private Safety Employee for Negligence of Third Party Not Barred

In Marquez v. Mainframe (1996) 42 Cal. App. 4th 881, 50 Cal. Rptr. 2d 34 , plaintiff, a private security guard, slipped and fell while patrolling a building operated and maintained by defendants. In plaintiff's action for personal injury, the trial court granted a summary judgment for defendants on the basis that the claim was barred by the firefighter's rule of the doctrine of assumption of the risk, as stated in Knight v. Jewett [Knight v. Jewett (1992) 3 Cal. 4th 296, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d. 2, 834 P.2d 696] . The court of appeal reversed, following the analysis of Neighbarger v. Irwin Industries, Inc. [Neighbarger v. Irwin Indus., Inc. (1994) 8 Cal. 4th 532, 34 Cal. Rptr. 2d. 630, 882 P.2d 347] . The court began with the general principle that an owner or occupier of property owes a duty of reasonable care to maintain the premises in a safe condition (42 Cal. App. 4th 881, 886) . With regard to the firefighter's rule, the court noted that the plaintiff was not a public employee; there was no special relationship between the parties suggesting that the normal duty of care was waived, particularly since plaintiff was not hired by defendants but by a private company; and the security guard received no special financial reward for engaging in hazardous work. The court concluded that application of the key Neighbarger factors showed that plaintiff, as a private security guard, should not be barred from recovery by the firefighter's rule (42 Cal. App. 4th 881, 886) .

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a party's contention that the firefighter's rule shields an owner or possessor of premises from liability for injuries incurred by a peace officer, a firefighter, or emergency medical personnel. The basis of opposition is that the willful or negligent conduct causing the injuries occurred after the owner orpossessor knew or should have known of the presence of the peace officer, firefighter, or emergency medical personnel, and after the peace officer, firefighter, or emergency medical personnel had undertaken his or her duties.

These points and authorities may be combined with a form of memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel is responding to the contention that the firefighter's rule bars recovery. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should state facts showing plaintiff's status as a peace officer, a firefighter, or emergency medical personnel employed by a public entity, the conduct causing the plaintiff's injury, and the occurrence of that conduct after defendant knew or should have known of plaintiff's presence and after plaintiff had undertaken his or her duties.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Conduct Causing Injury Occurred After Plaintiff's Presence Known

The facts and procedural background of Seibert Sec. Servs., Inc. v. Superior Court (1993) 18 Cal. App. 4th 394, 22 Cal. Rptr. 2d 514 , are discussed in § 178.114[3][b]. The court held that the behavior of defendant's employees during the struggle with the patient was not behavior coming within the exception created by Civ. Code § 1714.9(a)(1), because neither the refusal of one guard to participate in subduing the patient nor the allegedly ineffective assistance of another was the conduct that caused plaintiff's injury (18 Cal. App. 4th 394, 416) .

[b] Conduct Causing Injury Occurred After Plaintiff Had Undertaken Duties

In Seibert Sec. Servs., Inc. v. Superior Court (1993) 18 Cal. App. 4th 394, 22 Cal. Rptr. 2d 514 , plaintiff was a police officer who brought an arrested suspect to a hospital for examination of possible injuries. While he was at the hospital completing paperwork on the suspect, a mental patient became abusive and tried to grab a baton held by a hospital security guard employed by defendant security company. Plaintiff helped the guard subdue the patient, who was handcuffed and put in an isolation cell, and plaintiff returned to his paperwork. Sometime later, another hospital security guard also employed by defendant decided to remove the patient's handcuffs, and the patient then attacked this guard.

Plaintiff responded to the guard's call for help and was injured while subduing the patient. During the struggle, the guard who had been attacked dropped back and did not assist plaintiff but another of defendant's employees also attempted to subdue the patient. Plaintiff sued defendant security company for the negligence of its employee in removing the patient's handcuffs. Defendant moved for summary judgment on the basis of the firefighter's rule. The trial court denied the motion, and defendant petitioned for review.

The court of appeal issued a writ of mandate ordering the trial court to vacate its order denying defendant's motion for summary judgment and to enter a new order granting the motion. The court held that the firefighter's rule barred plaintiff's recovery, and that the statutory exception under Civ. Code § 1714.9(a)(1) did not apply despite defendant's employee's knowledge of plaintiff's presence when he removed the patient's handcuffs. The court ruled that this exception applies only to conduct occurring after peace officers, firefighters, or emergency medical personnel have undertaken their duties. In this case, plaintiff was not performing any duties as a police officer when the guard removed the patient's handcuffs. The court noted that ruling otherwise and permitting the exception to apply merely because a police officer was present would lead to absurd results (18 Cal. App. 4th 394, 408-409) . For example, a person standing on a city street may observe a patrolling police officer nearby. The person, feeling safe due to the officer's presence, allows a valuable camera to hang loosely from his or her arm, and a passing thief is thereby encouraged to grab it. If the officer responds and is injured in a struggle with the thief, the victim was no doubt negligent but should not be liable in tort to the officer (18 Cal. App. 4th 394, 409) . The court held that applying the statutory exception to conduct occurring before peace officers, firefighters, or emergency medical personnel had undertaken their duties would lead to inequitabledistinctions by allowing recovery to officers, such as plaintiff, who happened to be at the scene when a negligently caused incident occurred, but denying recovery to officers who responded to a radio call (18 Cal. App. 4th 394, 410) .
