The facts and procedural background of Boon v. Rivera (2000) 80 Cal. App. 4th 1322, 96 Cal. Rptr. 2d 276 , are described in § 178.112[4][a]. In addition to ruling that the action against the defendant was not barred by the firefighter's rule, the court also held that, under the facts of that particular case, Civ. Code § 1714.9(a) established a duty by those present at the scene of the emergency to refrain from misstating material facts concerning the nature of the emergency to those public safety officials called to the scene. Therefore, the wife of the man who shot the plaintiff had a duty under that statute not to misrepresent affirmatively the nature of the hazard faced by the plaintiff (80 Cal. App. 4th 1322, 1330-1333) .

§ 178.115 Opposing Contention That Firefighter's Rule Bars Recovery for Injury--Statutory Exception to Rule Under Civ. Code § 1714.9--Conduct Causing Injury Violates Statute

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT _____ [OWNER or POSSESSOR] IS LIABLE UNDER SECTION 1714.9 OF THE CIVIL CODE FOR THE HARM TO PLAINTIFF _____ [PEACE OFFICER or FIREFIGHTER or EMERGENCY MEDICAL PERSONNEL EMPLOYED BY A PUBLIC ENTITY] BECAUSE THE CONDUCT CAUSING PLAINTIFF'S INJURY VIOLATED A _____[STATUTE or ORDINANCE or REGULATION] AND THAT CONDUCT WAS NOT ITSELF THE EVENT THAT PRECIPITATED EITHER THE RESPONSE OR THE PRESENCE OF THE _____ [PEACE OFFICER or FIREFIGHTER or EMERGENCY MEDICAL PERSONNEL].

Violation of Statute, Ordinance, or Regulation. A defendant is liable for willful and negligent conduct causing injury to a peace officer, a firefighter, or emergency medical personnel employed by a public entity if the conduct causing the injury violates a statute, ordinance, or regulation, and if that conduct was not itself the event that precipitated either the response or the presence of the peace officer, firefighter, or emergency medical personnel (Civ. Code § 1714.9(a)(2)).

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a party's contention that the firefighter's rule shields an owner or possessor of premises from liability for injuries incurred by a peace officer, a firefighter, or emergency medical personnel. The basis of opposition is that the willful or negligent conduct causing the injuries: (1) violated a statute, ordinance, or regulation; and (2) was not itself the event that precipitated either the response or the presence of the peace officer, firefighter, or emergency medical personnel.

These points and authorities may be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel is responding to the contention that the firefighter's rule bars recovery. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should state facts showing that plaintiff was a peace officer, a firefighter, or emergency medical personnel employed by a public entity, that defendant's conduct violated a statute, ordinance, or regulation, and that this conduct was not itself the event that precipitated either the response or the presence of the plaintiff.

Conduct Causing Injury Intended to Injure Plaintiff. A defendant is liable for willful and negligent conduct causing injury to a peace officer, a firefighter, or emergency medical personnel employed by a public entity, if the conduct causing the injury was intended to injure the peace officer, firefighter, or emergency medical personnel (Civ. Code § 1714.9(a)(3)).

E. Recreational Users

17-178 California Points & Authorities § 178.130

§ 178.130 Supporting Contention That Recreational User of Real Property Is Barred From Recovery for Injuries Sustained Thereon [Civ. Code § 846]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT OWNER IS NOT LIABLE FOR THE HARM TO PLAINTIFF RECREATIONAL USER, BECAUSE, EXCEPT AS PROVIDED IN SECTION 846 OF THE CIVIL CODE, THERE IS NO LIABILITY ON THE PART OF AN OWNER OF AN ESTATE OR ANY OTHER INTEREST IN REAL PROPERTY FOR INJURIES INCURRED THEREON BY A RECREATIONAL USER.

A. No Liability to Recreational User. Except as provided in Section 846 of the Civil Code, an owner of any estate or any other interest in real property owes no duty to keep the premises safe for use by others for any recreational purpose or warn of any hazardous condition, use, structure, or activity thereon (Civ. Code § 846).

B. Recreational Purpose. A "recreational purpose" as used in Section 846 of the Civil Code includes such activities as fishing, hunting, camping, water sports, hiking, spelunking, sport parachuting, riding, including animal riding, snowmobiling, and all other types of vehicular riding, rock collecting, sightseeing, picnicking, nature study, nature contacting, recreational gardening, gleaning, hang gliding, winter sports, and viewing or enjoying historical, archaeological, scenic, natural, or scientific sites (Civ. Code § 846).

[Optional] C. Statutory List Is Only Illustrative. By stating that a recreational purpose "includes such activities as" those listed therein, Section 846 of the Civil Code indicates that the list is merely illustrative of the activities which constitute a recreational purpose within the meaning of the statute. Under the usual, ordinary import of the plain meaning of the section, other recreational uses similar to those listed fall within the purview of the statute (Ornelas v. Randolph (1993) 4 Cal. 4th 1095, 1100-1101, 17 Cal. Rptr. 2d 594, 847 P.2d 560 ("recreational purpose" includes playing on farm equipment); Valladares v. Stone (1990) 218 Cal. App. 3d 362, 369, 267 Cal. Rptr. 57 ("recreational purpose" includes tree climbing)).

[Optional] D. Suitability of Property for Recreational Use Does Not Affect Applicability of Immunity. Whether the property is or is not suitable for recreational use is not an issue with respect to the application of Civil Code Section 846. The public policy balance achieved by the statute is clear: landowners are broadly encouraged to allow access to their property; recreational users who take advantage of this access waive the right to sue for ordinary negligence. The determination of whether the land is suitable for recreation is placed on the user, not on the courts (Ornelas v. Randolph (1993) 4 Cal. 4th 1095, 1106, 17 Cal. Rptr. 2d 594, 847 P.2d 560).

[Optional] E. Immunity Not Qualified by Public Trust Doctrine If No Affirmative Acts Impede Public's Use of Water. The immunity provisions of Civil Code Section 846 are qualified by the public trust doctrine only when the landowner has performed an affirmative act tending to obstruct or impede the public's free use of navigable waters (Charpentier v. Von Geldern (1987) 191 Cal. App. 3d 101, 108-110, 236 Cal. Rptr. 233).

[Optional] F. Immunity Extends to Negligent Conduct of Persons. The protection afforded to landowners under Civil Code Section 846 is not limited to dangers presented by the premises per se, but extends to the negligent conduct of persons, including dangers presented by negligent drivers (Shipman v. Boething Treeland Farms, Inc. (2000) 77 Cal. App. 4th 1424, 1427-1431, 92 Cal. Rptr. 2d 566 , overruled in part, Klein v. United States of America (2010) 50 Cal. 4th 68, 81, 112 Cal. Rptr. 3d 722, 235 P.3d 42).

[Optional] G. Employer/Landowner Protected From Liability for Injury-Causing Conduct of Employee. A plaintiff may not escape the immunity conferred on a landowner by Civil Code Section 846 by arguing that the landowner may nonetheless be liable as an employer if the injury is caused by the negligent conduct of an employee or the employer's negligent supervision of an employee (Shipman v. Boething Treeland Farms, Inc. (2000) 77 Cal. App. 4th 1424, 1431, 92 Cal. Rptr. 2d 566 , overruled in part, Klein v. United States of America (2010) 50 Cal. 4th 68, 81, 112 Cal. Rptr. 3d 722, 235 P.3d 42).

[Optional] H. Express Invitation by Landowner Does Not Extinguish Immunity of Other Estate Owners. An express invitation from the fee owner of property extinguishes the recreational use immunity of the fee owner, but does not extinguish the immunity of other owners of estates in the land (Jackson v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (2001) 94 Cal. App. 4th 1110, 1116-1119, 114 Cal. Rptr. 2d 831).

[Optional] I. Immunity Applies to Claims of Negligence Per Se. The immunity granted by Civil Code Section 846 is not limited toimmunity from claims based on simple negligence, but also applies to shield a defendant from liability for negligence per se--that is, negligence presumed to exist by virtue of the defendant's violation of a statute, ordinance, or regulation (Jackson v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (2001) 94 Cal. App. 4th 1110, 1121, 114 Cal. Rptr. 2d 831).

[Optional] J. Homeowner's Driveway Right-of-Way Over Public Trail Is Protected Property Interest. The property interests protected by Civil Code Section 846 are broad, and a homeowner's right of way to construct a driveway over an adjacent public trail fits within the definition of an "interest in real property" under the statute if an injury is sustained by a person using the trail at the point where it intersects the driveway (Miller v. Weitzen (2005) 133 Cal. App. 4th 732, 738-739, 35 Cal. Rptr. 3d 73).

[2] Comments

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a party's contention that an owner of an estate or any other interest in real property is not liable to a person injured thereon while using the land for a recreational purpose when liability cannot be predicated on the exceptions in Civ. Code § 846.

These points and authorities may be combined with a form of memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue of liability to a recreational user. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in §§ 178.131 -178.34 may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Liability to Recreational User

Civ. Code § 846 provides that an owner of an estate or of any interest in real property who gives permission to enter for a recreational purpose does not: (1) extend any assurances that the premises are safe for that purpose; (2) constitute that the person to whom permission has been given has the legal status of an invitee or licensee to whom a duty of care is owed; or (3) assume responsibility for or incur liability for any injury to person or property caused by any act of such person to whom permission has been granted.

The immunity provisions of Civ. Code § 846 do not limit the liability that would otherwise exist if: (1) the user was expressly invited rather than merely permitted to come on the premises; (2) permission to enter on the land for the recreational purpose was granted for a consideration other than that paid by the state, or consideration was received from others for the same purpose; or (3) the willful or malicious failure to warn or guard against a dangerous condition, use, or structure was willful or malicious. For contentions opposing the application of Civ. Code § 846 on the basis of these exceptions, see §§ 178.131 -178.134.

[b] Statutory List Is Only Illustrative

In Ornelas v. Randolph (1993) 4 Cal. 4th 1095, 17 Cal. Rptr. 2d 594, 847 P.2d 560 , the plaintiff, an eight-year-old boy, went onto the defendant's farm property, adjacent to the subdivision where the child lived, and was injured while there. A piece of pipe was dislodged by other children playing there, and it struck the plaintiff. It was not clear whether the plaintiff entered the property with the other children for the purpose of playing there or merely tagged along to observe. When the injury occurred, the plaintiff was sitting on the ground and was playing with a hand-held toy. The trial court granted the defendant's motion for summary judgment, but the court of appeal reversed. The Supreme Court, however, agreed with the trial court that the defendant was immune from liability under Civ. Code § 846. Regarding that section's list of examples of recreational purposes, the Court observed that the list does not effectively limit the meaning of "recreational purpose" in the statute, citing the Valladares case (4 Cal. 4th 1095, 1100-1101) . Regarding the plaintiff's subjective purpose, the Court stated that "whether plaintiff entered the property to play on the equipment, or merely accompanied the other children at play, is immaterial. In either case, his presence was occasioned by the recreational use of the property, and his injury was the product thereof. We discern no meaningful distinction, for purposes of [Civ. Code § 846], between the passive spectator and the active participant. Both take advantage of the recreational opportunities offered by the property; neither, therefore, maybe heard to complain when injury results therefrom" (4 Cal. 4th 1095, 1102) .

In Valladares v. Stone (1990) 218 Cal. App. 3d 362, 267 Cal. Rptr. 57 , a four-year-old child was injured after falling from a tree while playing on defendant's vacant lot and brought an action through his guardian ad litem alleging that the injury was the proximate result of the defendant's negligence in maintaining and supervising his property. Defendant successfully moved for summary judgment on the basis that the plaintiff's recovery is barred by Civ. Code § 846. Plaintiff appealed, arguing that the child's use of the defendant's property was not one of the recreational activities included within the purview of the statute.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment. The court stated that there is no ambiguity in Civ. Code § 846, and therefore, the plain meaning of the statute must prevail. By stating that a recreational purpose "includes such activities as" those listed therein, the section indicates that the list is merely illustrative of the activities which constitute a recreational purpose within the meaning of the statute. Under the usual, ordinary import of the plain meaning of the section, other recreational uses similar to those listed fall within the purview of the statute. The court stated that a recreational purpose is one intended to refresh the body or mind by diversion, amusement or place and concluded that climbing a tree for play is, as a matter of law, a recreational purpose within the meaning of the statue. Certainly, the court further concluded, tree climbing is a form of "nature contacting" contemplated by the statute (218 Cal. App. 3d 362, 369) .

[c] Suitability of Property for Recreational Use Does Not Affect Applicability of Immunity

The facts and procedural background of Ornelas v. Randolph (1993) 4 Cal. 4th 1095, 17 Cal. Rptr. 2d 594, 847 P.2d 560 , are discussed in § 178.130[3][b]. The Supreme Court reviewed a line of cases from the court of appeal, beginning with Paige v. North Oaks Partners [Paige v. North Oaks Partners (1982) 134 Cal. App. 3d 860] , in which a so-called suitability exception was developed. Those cases held that the legislature did not intend to grant immunity under Civ. Code § 846 to owners of land that was not suitable for recreational purposes. The Supreme Court rejected this construction of the statute and concluded that "the plain language of the statute admits of no exceptions, either for property 'unsuitable' for recreational use or otherwise" (4 Cal. 4th 1095, 1105 ; emphasis in original). The immunity extends to any owner of any interest in any land that is used for a recreational purpose, without exception. "The determination as to whether the land is 'suitable' for recreation is placed on the user, not the courts" (4 Cal. 4th 1095, 1106) .

[d] Immunity Not Qualified by Public Trust Doctrine If No Affirmative Acts Impede Public's Use of Water

In Charpentier v. Von Geldern (1987) 191 Cal. App. 3d 101, 236 Cal. Rptr. 233 , after entering defendant's land to reach a river, plaintiff was injured while diving. Plaintiff brought an action against defendant, alleging she had willfully and maliciously failed to guard or warn against the dangerous condition of the river. Defendant asserted the immunity of Civ. Code § 846 as an affirmative defense and moved for summary judgment. The motion was granted and the action dismissed by the trial court. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. Plaintiff argued that the public's right to the free and unimpeded use of navigable waterways, constitutionally protected by Cal. Const. art. X, § 4, qualified defendant's immunity under Civ. Code § 846. The court disagreed that the qualification was applicable, and in its decision explained and distinguished Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. v. Superior Court (1983) 145 Cal. App. 3d 253, 193 Cal. Rptr. 336 . It noted that Civ. Code § 846 does not protect a landowner when there has been no entry on or use of the land for a recreational purpose. The court explained that the Civ. Code § 846 immunity is qualified by the public trust doctrine only when the landowner has performed an affirmative act tending to obstruct or impede the public's free use of navigable waters (191 Cal. App. 3d 101, 108-109) . The court found that plaintiff had entered defendant's land, making the immunity applicable, and that defendant had made no affirmative act in the use of her property tending to obstruct or impede use of the river, making the qualification inapplicable (191 Cal. App. 3d 101, 109-110) . The court also noted that there is no legal obligation on the part of a landowner subject to the public trust doctrine to inspect or warn of natural hazards in navigable waters subject to recreational use abutting the property, or to make that water safe for recreational uses by trespassers or those on the water by means other than access over the abutting land (191 Cal. App. 3d 101, 111) . It concluded that the only duty owed plaintiff by defendant under Civ. Code § 846 was to refrain from willful or malicious failure to guard or warn against a dangerous condition, use, structure, or activity (191 Cal. App. 3d 101, 113) .

[e] Immunity Extends to Negligent Conduct of Persons

In Drummond v. Desmarais (2009) 176 Cal. App. 4th 439, 98 Cal. Rptr. 3d 183 , the plaintiff was a trespasser who drove his all-terrain vehicle onto private property owned by a tree-farming corporation to look at a pond. While driving on the corporation's property, the plaintiff's vehicle was struck by a vehicle driven by an employee of the corporation. The employee was leaving work because of an eye injury. Theplaintiff brought suit against the corporation and the employee for negligent operation of a motor vehicle and premises liability. The trial court granted motions for summary judgment brought by both defendants on the grounds that Civ. Code § 846 provided immunity because the plaintiff's injuries were suffered during recreational use of private property. The plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, agreeing that Civ. Code § 846 protected the defendants from liability. The court rejected the plaintiff's argument that the statute only protects private landowners from dangers presented by the premises per se. Instead, the court held that the protections afforded by Civ. Code § 846 are "extremely broad," protect the landowner from liability for conduct that constitutes ordinary negligence, and extend to dangers presented by the drivers of vehicles. Therefore, because the conditions for immunity under Civ. Code § 846 were otherwise present, immunity for the injuries was properly granted (77 Cal. App. 4th 1424, 1427-1430) . The court also held that Veh. Code § 17150, which generally makes the owner of a motor vehicle liable for injuries caused by the negligent operation of the vehicle by another, was inapplicable to the facts of the case (77 Cal. App. 4th 1424, 1430-1431) .

[f] Employer/Landowner Protected From Liability For Injury-Causing Conduct of Employee

The facts and procedural background of Shipman v. Boething Treeland Farms, Inc. (2000) 77 Cal. App. 4th 1424, 92 Cal. Rptr. 2d 566 , overruled in part, Klein v. United States of America (2010) 50 Cal. 4th 68, 81, 112 Cal. Rptr. 3d 722, 235 P.3d 42 , are discussed in § 178.130[3][e]. The court of appeal also rejected the plaintiff's argument that his claim of negligent supervision of the employee by the corporate defendant survived the immunity provisions of Civ. Code § 846. The court held that, even assuming the employer negligently permitted the employee to drive, the employer was still immune because the plaintiff was injured when engaging in a recreational activity expressly covered by Civ. Code § 846. The court concluded that holding an employer liable under general principles that govern the liability of employers for injuries caused by the conduct of their employees would thwart the purpose of Civ. Code § 846 if that statute otherwise provided immunity (77 Cal. App. 4th 1424, 1431) .

[g] Express Invitation by Landowner Does Not Extinguish Immunity of Other Estate Owners

In Jackson v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (2001) 94 Cal. App. 4th 1110, 114 Cal. Rptr. 2d 831 , the plaintiff was a minor who was visiting the home of a friend. He and the friend went out into the yard to fly a kite, at the suggestion of the friend's mother. The kite eventually blew onto the adjacent property, which was owned by the friend's grandmother, and became entangled in power lines belonging to the defendant, a utility company. The plaintiff was trying to retrieve the kite, using an aluminum pole, when the pole touched an electrical line. An action alleging negligence and negligence per se was filed on the plaintiff's behalf against the defendant. The trial court granted summary judgment for the defendant on the grounds that the action was barred by Civ. Code § 846, and the plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The plaintiff argued that summary judgment was improper because his friend's mother had expressly invited him to play on the two adjacent properties, extinguishing the recreational user immunity pursuant to the express invitation exception of Civ. Code § 846 (discussed in § 178.131). The defendant, by contrast, argued that only an express invitation from it could extinguish its immunity, which extends to the owner of easement rights in the land. Although noting that a factual issue remained as to whether the plaintiff received an express invitation to enter the adjacent property owned by his friend's grandmother, the court concluded that this issue was irrelevant to resolving the legal issue of whether the express invitation exception applies to the immunity of an easement holder (94 Cal. App. 4th 1110, 1116-1117) . The court agreed with the plaintiff that the "landowner" that may extend an express invitation onto the premises under the statute refers only to the owner of the fee--in this case, the plaintiff's friend's mother or grandmother--because an easement holder cannot "expressly invite" persons onto the premises (94 Cal. App. 4th 1110, 1118) . The court also held, however, that an express invitation from the fee owner, while extinguishing the recreational use immunity of the fee owner, does not extinguish the immunity of other owners of estates in the land. Therefore, the recreational use immunity of the defendant, which existed by virtue of its easement rights for purposes of maintaining the power lines, was not extinguished by an express invitation onto the land extended by the owner of the real property (94 Cal. App. 4th 1110, 1118-1119) .

[h] Immunity Applies to Claims of Negligence Per Se

The factual and procedural background of Jackson v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (2001) 94 Cal. App. 4th 1110, 114 Cal. Rptr. 2d 831 , is provided in § 178.130[3][g]. After concluding that the immunity conferred on the defendant by Civ. Code § 846 was not extinguished by the express invitation of the landowner, the court addressed the plaintiff's claim that this statutory immunity did not protect the defendant from negligence per se liability predicated on the defendant's alleged violation of provisions of the Public Utilities Code. Assuming that the plaintiff had not waived the claim by failing to properly argue it before the trial court, the court held that Pub. Util. Code § 2106, which the plaintiff relied on and which generally provides for the liability of a utility for all loss or damage caused by its wrongful acts, does not impose absolute liability on utilities regardless ofother contrary statutes or rules (94 Cal. App. 4th 1110, 1119-1120) . The court then held that the immunity granted by Civ. Code § 846 is not limited to immunity from claims based on simple negligence, but also applies to shield a defendant from liability for negligence per se--that is, negligence presumed to exist by virtue of the defendant's violation of a statute, ordinance, or regulation (94 Cal. App. 4th 1110, 1120-1121) .

[i] Homeowner's Driveway Right-of-Way Over Public Trail Is Protected Property Interest

In Miller v. Weitzen (2005) 133 Cal. App. 4th 732, 35 Cal. Rptr. 3d 73 , the horse that the plaintiff was riding fell as they were crossing a private driveway that intersected a public trail. The homeowners had recently resurfaced the driveway, and prior to the plaintiff's accident another horse had recently fallen in the same spot while crossing the driveway. The organization responsible for maintaining the public trail had placed signs on both sides of the driveway warning riders of the slippery conditions, although the plaintiff claimed not to have seen the signs. The plaintiff sued the homeowners who had constructed the driveway, as well as the organization responsible for maintaining the trail. At trial, the court determined that Civ. Code § 846 applied to both the organization and the homeowners, and the jury was instructed that the homeowners could be liable only if the jury found that the homeowners' failure to warn or prevent the plaintiff's injury was willful or malicious. The jury found the organization liable for 60 percent of the plaintiff's injury, found the plaintiff liable for the other 40 percent, and found the homeowners not liable. The plaintiff appealed the judgment as it applied to the homeowners.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court rejected the plaintiff's argument that the recreational use immunity statute did not apply to the homeowners because they did not own the public trail on which the accident occurred. The court noted that the property interests protected by Civ. Code § 846 are exceptionally broad, because the statute applies to protect any "owner of any estate or any other interest in real property, whether possessory or nonpossessory." As homeowners, these defendants held an encroachment permit that enabled them to construct a driveway to cross the trail to the road, as well as the right to enter and exit their property by way of that driveway. The court held that a homeowner's right of way to construct a driveway over an adjacent public trail clearly fit within the definition of any "interest in real property" under the statute, and therefore the statute was properly applied to those defendants (133 Cal. App. 4th 732, 738-739) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] No Liability to Recreational User

In Mattice v. United States of Am., Dep't of Interior (9th Cir. 1992) 969 F. 2d 818 , the Ninth Circuit upheld the federal district court's grant of summary judgment to defendant United States government, based on a landowner's immunity for negligence under the recreational use statute [Civ. Code § 846]. Immunity applied to an accident occurring on a paved public road within a national park, because the national park was the premises to which the statute applied and including the road as part of that premises serves the statute's purpose of encouraging the federal government to keep its park land open for recreational use (969 F.2d 818, 822) .

In Mansion v. United States (9th Cir. 1991) 945 F. 2d 1115 , the Ninth Circuit upheld the federal district court's grant of summary judgment to defendant United States government, based on a landowner's immunity for negligence under the recreational use statute [Civ. Code § 846]. Immunity applied even though the property in question, a park located entirely within the grounds of a military facility, was not open to the general public. The legislative goal of encouraging property owners to open their land to the public does not mean that immunity applies only to land owners who allow anyone and everyone free access to their property. Indeed, Civ. Code § 846 does not use the word "public" or any equivalent synonym (945 F.2d 1115, 1117-1118) .

In Bacon v. Southern Cal. Edison Co. (1997) 53 Cal. App. 4th 854, 62 Cal. Rptr. 2d 16 , the court of appeal affirmed the trial court's grant of summary judgment for defendant, based on the immunity provision of Civ. Code § 846. The trial court ruled that plaintiff failed to show an issue of fact as to whether defendant willfully and maliciously failed to maintain an electrical transmission tower or warn or guard against a dangerous condition of the tower where plaintiff, a thirteen year old boy was injured by the shock he received after climbing to the top of the tower. The court of appeal found that defendant had refuted plaintiff's allegation of willful or malicious conduct by presenting evidence that it placed barbed wire and a warning sign at the tower and that the sign and barriers were extant at the time plaintiff climbed the tower. Although plaintiff argued that the warning sign and barriers were in a state of disrepair, the court determined that the evidence showed, at most, that defendant's conduct was negligent and negligence was insufficient to overcome Civ. Code § 846 immunity (53 Cal. App. 4th 854, 859) .

In Collins v. Tippet (1984) 156 Cal. App. 3d 1017, 203 Cal. Rptr. 366 , the court of appeal upheld the trial court's judgment for defendant, based on the immunity of landowners for negligence to trespassers or licensees recreating on their property free of charge. The immunity applied eventhough defendant's beach property had become subject to a public easement for recreational use, and the injury was caused by concrete material falling from defendant's overlooking cliff, which was not subject to easement (156 Cal. App. 3d 1017, 1020) .

[b] Recreational Purpose

In Mattice v. United States of Am., Dep't of Interior (9th Cir. 1992) 969 F. 2d 818 , the Ninth Circuit upheld the federal district court's grant of summary judgment to defendant United States government, based on a landowner's immunity for negligence under the recreational use statute [Civ. Code § 846]. Plaintiff had gathered with friends at a picnic area in a national park and offered to drive a friend home after the party because he had been drinking. The friend took her on a test drive to be sure she could operate his car, and she was injured when she drove off a park road. Although plaintiff was not engaged in a recreational activity at the time of the accident, immunity applied because plaintiff had entered the premises for a recreational purpose (969 F.2d 818, 821) .

[c] Statutory List Is Only Illustrative

The factual and procedural background of Jackson v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (2001) 94 Cal. App. 4th 1110, 114 Cal. Rptr. 2d 831 , is provided in § 178.130[3][g]. In that case, the court concluded that the flying of a kite is indisputably a recreational activity under Civ. Code § 846. In addition, consistent with the statute's broad language, the steps that a kite flier takes to retrieve a wayward kite are included as well, because the risk that the wind will blow the kite in an unintended direction or to an undesired location are inherent in the nature of the activity (94 Cal. App. 4th 1110, 1115) .

[d] Suitability of Property for Recreational Use Does Not Affect Applicability of Immunity

In Ravell v. United States (9th Cir. 1994) 22 F.3d 960 , plaintiff attended an air show at a military base that was normally closed to the general public. During the air show, which was open to the general public and widely publicized, members of the public, including plaintiff, were allowed onto the flight line, where aircraft are parked and tied down to large metal hooks embedded in the concrete. Plaintiff was injured when she tripped over one of these hooks and fell. In plaintiff's action for negligence against the United States, the court of appeals affirmed the district court's grant of summary judgment to defendant. The court rejected plaintiff's argument that the federal government was not entitled to immunity under Civ. Code § 846 because the flight line was not suitable for recreational use, noting that the California Supreme Court in Ornelas v. Randolph (1993) 4 Cal. 4th 1095, 1108, 7 Cal. Rptr. 2d 594, 847 P.2d 560 (discussed in § 178.130[3][c]), has held that there is no suitability exception to the recreational use statute (22 F.3d 960, 962) .

[e] Immunity Extends to Negligent Conduct of Persons

In Manuel v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co. (2009) 173 Cal. App. 4th 927, 93 Cal. Rptr. 3d 9 , a 14-year-old girl was killed after she was electrocuted when she climbed an electric utility tower. Her parents brought suit against the electric company, but the trial court granted summary judgment for the defendant based on recreational-use immunity under Civ. Code § 846. The court of appeal affirmed, agreeing that the willful misconduct exception of Civ. Code § 846 did not abrogate the company's immunity. After reviewing the relevant case law, the court of appeal concluded that there are three essential elements that must be present to raise a negligent act to the level of willful misconduct: (1) actual or constructive knowledge of the peril, (2) actual or constructive knowledge that injury is a probable, rather than merely a possible, result of the danger, and (3) a conscious failure to act by the defendant to avoid the peril (173 Cal. App. 4th 927, 945) . The court concluded that the plaintiffs had failed to show that it was probable, rather than merely possible, that someone would climb the tower and get electrocuted, or that defendant consciously failed to act to avoid the peril. The court noted that the electric company had placed anti-climbing guards on the electric tower, which was located in a remote, isolated location, although there was evidence that at least one of the vertical anti-climbing guards was installed incorrectly and no horizontal guards had been installed. According to the court, however, this evidence demonstrated at most that the electric company had been negligent in placing the anti-climbing guards on the tower, and this conduct did not rise to the level of willful misconduct sufficient to abrogate the immunity for negligent conduct that the company was otherwise granted by Civ. Code § 846. Conceding that there may have been a factual dispute as to whether written warning signs had been present on the tower at the time of the injury, the court concluded that the jagged metal anti-climbing devices also served as a warning of the danger and, under such circumstances, no sign was necessary (173 Cal. App. 4th 927, 946-948) .

DEFENDANT OWNER IS LIABLE FOR THE HARM TO PLAINTIFF BECAUSE PLAINTIFF WAS A RECREATIONAL USER OF DEFENDANT'S PREMISES WHO WAS EXPRESSLY INVITED BY DEFENDANT TO COME ON THE PREMISES

A. Defendant Liable to Recreational User Expressly Invited Onto Premises. The immunity provisions of Section 846 of the Civil Code do not limit the liability on the part of an owner of an interest or estate in real property that might otherwise exist for injuries to a recreational user who was expressly invited by the landowner to come on the premises rather than merely permitted (Civ. Code § 846).

[Optional] B. Express Invitation Need Not Be Invitation to Engage in Recreational Activity. To fall under the express invitation exception to the immunity provisions of Civil Code Section 846, the injured person need not have been invited expressly for the purpose of engaging in the recreational activity (Calhoon v. Lewis (2000) 81 Cal. App. 4th 108, 114, 96 Cal. Rptr. 2d 394).

[2] Comments

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a party's contention that a recreational user is barred from recovery for injuries incurred on the premises if the recreational user was expressly invited by the landowner to come on the premises. If the recreational user was expressly invited, then liability for negligence on the part of the landowner is not precluded by Civ. Code § 846.

These points and authorities may be combined with a form of memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel is responding to the contention that a recreational user is barred from recovery for injuries. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by § 178.130.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Express Invitation Need Not Be Invitation to Engage in Recreational Activity

In Calhoon v. Lewis (2000) 81 Cal. App. 4th 108, 96 Cal. Rptr. 2d 394 , the plaintiff, at the invitation of a friend, arrived at his friend's parents' home to pick up his friend so that the two could drive downtown to visit the friend's girlfriend. The plaintiff, who began skateboarding in the driveway while he waited for his friend to get ready, fell and impaled himself on a pipe inside a planter located in the driveway. The plaintiff sued the owners of the home, alleging negligence and premises liability. The trial court granted summary judgment to the defendants on the grounds that Civ. Code § 846 provided immunity from liability. The plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the summary judgment on the basis of primary assumption of the risk, but held that the trial court erred in granting summary judgment based on Civ. Code § 846. The court of appeal concluded that the facts fell under the express invitation exception to immunity from liability under Civ. Code § 846. The court rejected the defendants' argument that the exception did not apply because the plaintiff was not invited onto the property expressly for the purpose of skateboarding. The court noted that the statutory language does not require that the invitation be for a recreational purpose, but merely distinguishes between a person who is expressly invited onto the property and one who is merely permitted to come onto the property (81 Cal. App. 4th 108, 114) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Defendant Liable to Recreational User Expressly Invited Onto Premises

The facts and procedural background of Johnson v. Unocal Corp. (1933) 21 Cal. App. 4th 310, 26 Cal. Rptr. 2d 148 , are discussed in § 178.132[3][a]. The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's award of summary judgment in defendant's favor, holding that defendant, who permitted plaintiff's employer to use its picnic grounds without fee for its annual picnic, was immune under Civ. Code § 846 from liability for plaintiff's injuries at the picnic because plaintiff was a recreational user of defendant's property. The court rejected plaintiff's argument that his employer's signing of the agreement required by defendant for use of the property made defendant liable to him under the exception for persons expressly invited by defendant to come on the premises. The court held that the execution of the agreement was not a direct, personal request from defendant to plaintiff to attend the picnic (21 Cal. App. 4th 310, 317).

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT OWNER IS LIABLE FOR THE HARM TO PLAINTIFF BECAUSE _____ [PLAINTIFF PAID DEFENDANT A CONSIDERATION FOR PERMISSION TO ENTER HIS/HER PREMISES FOR A RECREATIONAL PURPOSE or DEFENDANT RECEIVED CONSIDERATION FROM OTHERS FOR PERMISSION TO ENTER HIS/HER PREMISES FOR THE SAME RECREATIONAL PURPOSE AS PLAINTIFF]

[EITHER, if consideration was paid by user]

A. Permission to Enter Granted for Consideration. The immunity provisions of Section 846 of the Civil Code do not limit the liability on the part of an owner of an interest or estate in real property that might otherwise exist for injuries suffered in any case where permission to enter for a recreational purpose was granted for a consideration other than that paid by the state (Civ. Code § 846).

[OR, if consideration received by others]

A. Consideration Received From Others for Same Purpose. The immunity provisions of Section 846 of the Civil Code do not limit the liability on the part of an owner of an interest or estate in real property that might otherwise exist for injuries in any case where consideration has been received from others for permission to enter on the premises for the same purpose (Civ. Code § 846).

[AND]

B. Nature of Consideration. The consideration required by the exception to the immunity provisions of Section 846 of the Civil Code must be some immediate and reasonably direct advantage, usually in the form of an entrance fee; it cannot be merely a potential reimbursement, but must be a present actual benefit bestowed on the property owner (Johnson v. Unocal Corp. (1933) 21 Cal. App. 4th 310, 316-317, 26 Cal. Rptr. 2d 148).

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a party's contention that a recreational user is barred from recovery for injuries incurred on the premises if consideration was paid for permission to enter on the premises for a recreational purpose by the user or by others for the same purpose. If consideration was paid or received for permission to enter, liability for negligence on the part of the landowner is not precluded by Civ. Code § 846. If the consideration was paid by the user, then the first paragraph should be used. If the consideration was paid by others for the same purpose, then the second paragraph should be used. The third paragraph should be used in either case.

These points and authorities may be combined with a form of memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel is responding to the contention that a recreational user is barred from recovery for injuries. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities in § 178.130.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Nature of Consideration

In Johnson v. Unocal Corp. (1933) 21 Cal. App. 4th 310, 26 Cal. Rptr. 2d 148 , defendant granted plaintiff's employer permission to use defendant's picnic grounds for the employer's annual company picnic. Defendant required the employer to execute a form agreement setting forth various rules and regulations for use of the grounds, but charged no fee for use of the property. The agreement contained a hold harmless provision under which plaintiff's employer agreed to indemnify defendant against all claims in connection with the use of defendant's property, including any costs incurred by defendant in connection with those claims. Plaintiff was injured at the picnic and sued defendant. The trial court granted summary judgment in defendant's favor on the grounds of immunity from liability to recreational users under Civ. Code § 846, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, rejecting plaintiff's argument that defendant was not immune from liability because the hold harmless agreement was consideration paid by his employer for use of defendant's property (21 Cal. App. 4th 310, 312). The court refused to engraft onto Civ. Code § 846 the broad definition of "good consideration" found in Civ.

Code § 1605, holding that exceptions to the recreational use statute's immunity from liability must be construed narrowly to effect the legislature's intention to encourage landowners to permit recreational use of their property (21 Cal. App. 4th 310, 314-315). The court concluded that the consideration that defeats immunity may be slight, but must be more than the mere potential for reimbursement for defense costs offered by the hold harmless provision signed by plaintiff's employer. The consideration must be, at minimum, some present actual benefit; the exception to immunity for consideration does not apply unless the landowner gains some immediate and reasonably direct advantage, generally, but not necessarily, taking the form of an entrance fee (21 Cal. App. 4th 310, 316-317).

[a] Defendant Liable to Recreational User Expressly Invited Onto Premises

In Ravell v. United States (9th Cir. 1994) 22 F.3d 960 , the plaintiff was injured while attending an air show at a military base that was normally closed to the general public. The show had been widely publicized in newspapers, and the plaintiff attended as a member of the general public, although her son, who was stationed at the base, also asked her to attend. In the plaintiff's action for negligence against the United States, the court of appeals affirmed the district court's grant of summary judgment to the defendant. The court rejected the plaintiff's argument that the federal government was not entitled to immunity under Civ. Code § 846 because she was an express invitee. Relying on Johnson v. Unocal Corp. [Johnson v. Unocal Corp. (1993) 21 Cal. App. 4th 310, 317, 26 Cal. Rptr. 2d 148] , the court held that an invitation to the general public was not an express invitation to the plaintiff because it was not a direct, personal request from the federal government to the plaintiff. Also, the plaintiff presented no evidence that her son, who invited her to the show, was authorized to make express invitations on behalf of the federal government that went beyond the advertised invitation to the general public (22 F.3d 960, 963) .

[b] Nature of Consideration

In Mansion v. United States (9th Cir. 1991) 945 F.2d 1115 , the plaintiff was a retired Navy civilian employee who was injured at an annual picnic held on a military facility by an unofficial organization of former Navy civilian employees. The federal district court granted summary judgment to defendant United States government, holding that defendant was a landowner immune from liability under the recreational use statute [Civ. Code § 846]. On appeal, plaintiff claimed that statutory immunity did not apply because his attendance at the picnic conferred the benefit of improved labor relations on his former employer and this benefit was a consideration he had paid for entering the premises. The Ninth Circuit affirmed the district court, holding that this interpretation of what constitutes a valid consideration was too broad and adopting it would allow an exception to swallow the rule of the statute (945 F.2d 1115, 1118-1119) .

§ 178.133 Opposing Contention That Recreational User of Real Property Barred From Recovery for Injuries Sustained Thereon--Malicious or Willful Failure to Warn or Guard [Civ. Code § 846]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT OWNER IS LIABLE FOR THE HARM TO PLAINTIFF ALTHOUGH PLAINTIFF WAS A RECREATIONAL USER OF DEFENDANT'S PREMISES BECAUSE A RECREATIONAL USER OF REAL PROPERTY IS NOT BARRED FROM RECOVERY FOR INJURIES SUSTAINED THEREON WHEN THE OWNER WILLFULLY OR MALICIOUSLY FAILS TO WARN OF OR GUARD AGAINST A DANGEROUS _____ [CONDITION or USE or STRUCTURE or ACTIVITY].

A. Willful or Malicious Failure to Warn or Guard. The immunity provisions of Section 846 of the Civil Code do not limit the liability of an owner of an interest or estate in real property that might otherwise exist for injuries to recreational users incurred on the premises for willful or malicious failure to warn or guard against a dangerous condition, use, structure, or activity (Civ. Code § 846).

B. Willful Misconduct. Willful or wanton misconduct is intentional wrongful conduct, done either with knowledge that serious injury to another will probably result or with a wanton and reckless disregard of the possible results. Negligence becomes willful misconduct if there is actual or constructive knowledge of the peril to be apprehended, actual or constructive knowledge that injury is a probable rather than possible result of the danger, and conscious failure to act to avoid the peril (Nazar v. Rodeffer (1986) 184 Cal. App. 3d 546, 552, 229 Cal. Rptr. 209 ; Lostritto v. Southern Pac. Transp. Co. (1977) 73 Cal. App. 3d 737, 744, 140 Cal. Rptr. 905).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a party's contention that a recreational user is barred from recovery for injuries incurred on the premises when an injury was due to a willful or malicious failure to warn or guard against a dangerous condition, use, structure, or activity. The recreational user need not be a paying or invited guest in orderto take advantage of this exception to the immunity provisions of Civ. Code § 846.

These points and authorities may be combined with a form of memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to respond to the contention that Civ. Code § 846 bars recovery for injuries to a recreational user. They also may be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities in § 178.130.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Willful Misconduct

In Nazar v. Rodeffer (1986) 184 Cal. App. 3d 546, 229 Cal. Rptr. 209 , plaintiff was injured in a motorcycle accident on defendants' property, which was a vacant lot containing a concrete drainage ditch obscured by weeds and vegetation. Plaintiff had entered the property for the recreational purpose of riding motorcycles and was injured when he drove his motorcycle into the ditch. Plaintiff's complaint alleged negligence by defendants in failing to warn of the existence and location of the ditch. The trial court granted defendants' motion for summary judgment on the ground that Civ. Code § 846 immunized them from liability. Plaintiff appealed to the court of appeal, claiming that a triable issue of fact existed regarding whether defendants' failure to warn was willful misconduct making immunity under Civ. Code § 846 inapplicable.

The court of appeal reversed the judgment, holding that plaintiff's conclusory general statement that defendants acted willfully and maliciously was not sufficient to establish willful misconduct. The court held that willful misconduct has a well-established definition in California: namely, intentional wrongful conduct done either with a knowledge that serious injury to another will probably result or with a wanton and reckless disregard of the possible results. The three elements that must be present to raise a negligent act to the level of willful misconduct are actual or constructive knowledge of the peril to be apprehended, actual or constructive knowledge that injury is a probable rather than possible result of the danger, and conscious failure to act to avoid the peril (184 Cal. App. 3d 546, 552-553) .

In Lostritto v. Southern Pac. Transp. Co. (1977) 73 Cal. App. 3d 737, 140 Cal. Rptr. 905 , plaintiff, a 16-year-old boy, broke his neck when he dove into a stream from a trestle owned by defendant. The depth of the stream fluctuated with the tides of the ocean. The complaint alleged negligence and willful misconduct on the part of defendant in failing to warn of the danger in diving off the trestle into the stream or to take measures to prevent persons from diving off the trestle. The trestle was located near a popular swimming hole and there was easy access to the trestle from the beaches bordering the stream. There was evidence that defendant's employees and defendant's lawyer were told of the practice of diving off the trestle and that an accident in which a person was killed diving off the bridge had previously occurred. The jury returned a verdict for plaintiff on the willful misconduct issue. The trial court granted a motion for a new trial based on newly discovered evidence that plaintiff was warned by two young men that the water was not deep enough but denied defendant's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict on the issue of willful misconduct. The court also granted a judgment notwithstanding the verdict on the negligence count on the basis that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law.

Defendant appealed from the judgment and the denial of its motion for a judgment notwithstanding the verdict on the ground that there was no evidence to support the jury's finding of willful misconduct on the part of Southern Pacific. The court of appeal affirmed the granting of the new trial on the basis of newly discovered evidence and affirmed the denial of defendant's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict on the willful misconduct issue (73 Cal. App. 3d 737, 750) . As to the judgment notwithstanding the verdict on the negligence count, the court stated that it was unnecessary to discuss and dismissed the negligence count because a defendant is not liable for negligence under Civ. Code § 846 (73 Cal. App. 3d 737, 746) .

In doing so, the court stated that the willful misconduct is intentional wrongful conduct, done either with knowledge that serious injury to another will probably result, or with a wanton and reckless disregard of the possible results. The court held that based on the facts of the case the necessary elements of willful misconduct could be found (73 Cal. App. 3d 737, 744) .

[a] Willful or Malicious Failure to Warn or Guard

In Mattice v. United States of Am., Dep't of Interior (9th Cir. 1992) 969 F.2d 818 , plaintiff was injured when she drove a car through a wooden guardrail on a winding road in a national park. Signs on the road indicated curves ahead and advised a speed of 15 miles per hour. Plaintiff claimed that defendant's use of wooden, rather than metal, guardrails and its failure to provide additional reflectors and warning signs and a permanent center and shoulder line were willful misconduct that deprived defendant of statutory immunity for negligence under Civ. Code § 846. The Ninth Circuit disagreed, holding that the dangers of the road were obvious and involved no hidden peril and therefore that defendant had no reason to think drivers would not take geographic conditions into consideration when driving on this road. Failure to take additional precautions was at most negligence and not a conscious failure to act to avoid the danger of driving off the road (969 F.2d 818, 822-823)

In Termini v. United States (9th Cir. 1992) 963 F.2d 1264 , plaintiff entered a national forest to sightsee, drove along a dirt road that ended without warning in a steep cliff, and was seriously injured when his vehicle rolled over the cliff. The Ninth Circuit held that immunity from liability under Civ. Code § 846 did not apply due to defendant United States government's willful and malicious behavior. Applying the standard of New v. Consolidated Rock Prods. Co. (1985) 171 Cal. App. 3d 681, 689, 217 Cal. Rptr. 522 (discussed in § 178.133[4][b]), the court ruled that defendant had constructive knowledge that injury due to the construction of this road was probable, rather than merely possible, because any reasonable person would have recognized that accidents were probable on a road leading directly and without warning to the edge of a cliff (963 F.2d 1264, 1268) .

[b] Willful Misconduct

In New v. Consolidated Rock Prods. Co. (1985) 171 Cal. App. 3d 681, 217 Cal. Rptr. 522 , plaintiffs were injured when they rode their motorcycles over a cliff created by defendant on its property. Defendant appealed the judgment entered after a jury verdict in plaintiff's favor, contending that the jury was given an erroneous instruction as to defendant's duty of care under Civ. Code § 846 because the instruction allowed the jury to find liability regardless of defendant's actual state of mind. The court of appeal affirmed, holding that the instruction correctly stated that to prove willful misconduct it is sufficient to establish that a reasonable person under the same or similar circumstances would be aware of the dangerous character of the conduct (171 Cal. App. 3d 681, 688) . The court held that the well-established, well-defined meaning of willful misconduct in California law is intentional wrongful conduct, done either with a knowledge that serious injury to another will probably result, or with a wanton and reckless disregard of the probable results. To raise a negligent act to the level of willful misconduct, there must be actual or constructive knowledge of the peril, actual or constructive knowledge that injury is a probable result of the peril, and conscious failure to act to avoid the peril (171 Cal. App. 3d 681, 689-690) . The court held that constructive knowledge is measured by an objective standard, and the test is whether a reasonable person under the same or similar circumstances would be aware of the dangerous character of his or her conduct (171 Cal. App. 3d 681, 690) . The court also held that Civ. Code § 846 is not intended to limit liability to situations where a defendant acts with a subjectively culpable state of mind simply because it uses the phrase willful or malicious, but that an objective standard is used here, as it is throughout tort law (171 Cal. App. 3d 681, 691-692) .

§ 178.134 Opposing Contention That Civ. Code § 846 Bars User of Real Property From Recovery for Injuries Sustained Thereon--Use Not Recreational [Civ. Code § 846]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT OWNER IS LIABLE FOR THE HARM TO PLAINTIFF USER OF REAL PROPERTY BECAUSE A USER OF REAL PROPERTY IS NOT BARRED FROM RECOVERY FOR INJURIES SUSTAINED THEREON BY CIVIL CODE SECTION 846 WHEN THE USE OF THE PROPERTY WAS NOT RECREATIONAL IN NATURE WITHIN THE MEANING OF THE STATUTE.

A. Purpose Must Be Recreational. The immunity provisions of Civil Code Section 846 apply only if the use of the property at the time of the accident was recreational in nature within the meaning of the statute (Gerkin v. Santa Clara Valley Water Dist. (1979) 95 Cal. App. 3d 1022, 1026, 157 Cal. Rptr. 612).

[Optional] B. Purpose of Use at Time of Entry on Land Controlling. Whether or not Civil Code Section 846 applies depends on the purpose of the use of the land at the time of entry and not on the underlying purpose for the entire trip (Smith v. Scrap Disposal Corp. (1976) 96 Cal. App. 3d 525, 529, 158 Cal. Rptr. 134).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a party's contention that Civ. Code § 846 operates to preclude liability for injuries sustained when the use being made of the property was not recreational in nature within the meaning of the statute. Optional Paragraph B should be used when the underlying trip was recreational in nature but the use of the particular property during the course of the trip was not.

These points and authorities may be combined with a form of memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific context in which counsel is responding to the issue of the applicability of Civ. Code § 846. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, these and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities in § 178.130.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Purpose Must Be Recreational

In Gerkin v. Santa Clara Valley Water Dist. (1979) 95 Cal. App. 3d 1022, 157 Cal. Rptr. 612 , plaintiff was injured when she fell from a bridge that crossed a creek to which defendant owned easement rights. Plaintiff was walking across the bridge to get to a market to use the telephone and buy a candy bar. Summary judgment was granted in favor of defendants on the ground that plaintiff was engaged in conduct specified in Civ. Code § 846 in that she was hiking.

The court of appeal reversed the summary judgment and held that there existed a triable issue of fact as to whether plaintiff was hiking on the property because such a determination must be made through a consideration of the totality of facts and circumstances, including the path taken, the length and purpose of the journey, the topography of the property in question, and the prior use of the land (95 Cal. App. 3d 1022, 1027) . In doing so the court countered the contention that hiking was to be equated with walking by stating that a purely literal interpretation of Civ. Code § 846 would not prevail over the purpose of the legislation, which was to encourage landowners to keep their property open to the public for recreational activities by limiting their liability for injuries sustained in the course of those activities. The court went on to say that both the language and historical background of Civ. Code § 846 compel the conclusion that the legislature did not intend to immunize landowners from liability for all permissive or nonpermissive use of their properties, but only those uses that could justifiably be characterized as recreational in nature (95 Cal. App. 3d 1022, 1026) .

[b] Purpose of Use at Time of Entry on Land Controlling

In Smith v. Scrap Disposal Corp. (1979) 96 Cal. App. 3d 525, 158 Cal. Rptr. 134 , plaintiff was returning from fishing in the San Diego Bay off the National City Marine Terminal when plaintiff followed one of his companions who jumped out of the car and ran onto a portion of the terminal over which defendant held an easement for the storage and stockpiling of metals. While plaintiff was standing on the bulldozer, his friends pressed some of the buttons that started the bulldozer. Plaintiff fell off and the bulldozer fell on his stomach causing injuries. Plaintiff testified in his deposition that he entered the property to stop his companion from riding the bulldozer. Summary judgment was granted in favor of defendant and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that plaintiff did not enter defendant's property to fish and whether or not he entered for the purpose of vehicular riding or to stop his companion from riding the bulldozer was a triable question of fact (96 Cal. App. 3d 525, 527-528) . The court stated that the underlying purpose of the trip could not be used to shield defendant from liability if plaintiff entered defendant's property for a nonrecreational purpose (96 Cal. App. 3d 525, 529) .

[a] Purpose Must Be Recreational

In Gordon v. Havasu Palms, Inc. (2001) 93 Cal. App. 4th 244, 112 Cal. Rptr. 2d 816 , the passenger of a small, private aircraft that crashed while trying to land at a small dirt airstrip sued the pilot for negligence. The pilot filed a cross-complaint against the owner of the airstrip owner, alleging that the landing strip did not comply with relevant California regulations. The airstrip owner filed a successful motion for summary judgment. The airstrip owner asserted that it was immune under Civ. Code § 846, although the trial court granted summary judgment for the airstrip owner on the basis that its actions did not contribute to the crash and did notaddress the immunity claim. The court of appeal reversed the trial court's ruling, finding that there were triable issues of fact surrounding the cause of the crash. The court then addressed the claim that the airstrip owner could nonetheless be immune under Civ. Code § 846. The airstrip owner had asserted that the pilot was entering the property for several alleged recreational purposes, although the court of appeal concluded that the only purpose that could potentially trigger immunity under the statute was the plaintiff's stated intention to have lunch at a nearby restaurant. After reviewing the "recreational purposes" listed in the statute, the court concluded that eating lunch in a restaurant, while arguably recreational in nature, is not a recreational purpose under the statute, because this activity was dissimilar to the activities listed in the statute. The court noted that a contrary conclusion would immunize all restaurant owners from liability for injuries to customers, which could not have been intended by the legislature (93 Cal. App. 4th 244, 256-257) .

§ 180.01 Scope of Chapter

This chapter includes points and authorities relating to pretrial proceedings. Forms in Part II include the following:

- Subpart A has points and authorities supporting [§ 180.10] and opposing [§ 180.20] a motion to amend a pleading and a case management order.

- Subpart B has points and authorities supporting [§§ 180.30, 180.31] and opposing [§§ 180.40, 180.41] sanctions imposed with respect to the pretrial and settlement conferences.

- Subpart C has points and authorities supporting [§ 180.50] and opposing [§ 180.70] a motion for an order establishing the priority of a case or for an order granting a preference in setting the case for a case management conference or a trial. It also includes memoranda of points and authorities supporting [§§ 180.55-180.57] and opposing [§ 180.75] a motion to advance, reset, or specially set a case for a case management conference or trial date. Additional memoranda of points and authorities are included for use in connection with either motion, supporting [§§ 180.60-180.65] and opposing [§§ 180.80, 180.81] the contention that a case is entitled to priority.

CHAPTER 180 PRETRIAL PROCEEDINGS
PART I. INTRODUCTION

18-180 California Points & Authorities § 180.02

§ 180.02 Governing Law

[1] Trial Court Delay Reduction Act

Trial courts in all California counties are required to implement delay reduction programs [Gov. Code §§ 68605.5, 68620]. Gov. Code § 68616 restricts some time limits that can be imposed by local rules in cases assigned to delay reduction programs. Among other limitations, no status conference, or similar event, other than a challenge to the court's jurisdiction, may be required to be conducted sooner than 30 days after service of the first responsive pleadings, or no sooner than 30 days after expiration of any stipulated continuance made under Gov. Code § 68616(d) (allowing single stipulated continuance to be made within 30 days of service of the responsive pleadings) [Gov. Code § 68616(e) (this limitation inapplicable in "complex cases" as defined in rules of court); see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 3.502, 3.400 et seq. (defining "complex case")]. Nonetheless, case management conferences are significantly affected by the local court rules applicable to trial court delay reduction program cases [see, e.g., Orange Co. Super. Ct. Rules, Rule 450 (governing issue conference/case management conference)].

[2] Case Management Conference

Case management conferences are governed by Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 3.720-3.730, and by local court rules. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 1.5(b), provides that the word "must" as used in Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 2.1 et seq., is mandatory. Amendment of a case management conference order in furtherance of justice is authorized by Code Civ. Proc. § 576. The California Rules of Court on trial court management were adopted to advance the goals set forth in the California Standards of Judicial Administration.

These goals are as follows:

- Unlimited Civil Cases: 75 percent disposed of within 12 months; 85 percent disposed of within 18 months; 100 percent disposed of within 24 months.

- Limited Civil Cases: 90 percent disposed of within 12 months; 98 percent disposed of within 18 months; 100 percent disposed of within 24 months.

[Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.713; see Cal. Rules of Ct., Stds. Jud. Admin., Std. 2.2; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 10.900 requires each court to adopt a case management and calendaring system.

[3] Sanctions

The authority of trial courts to adopt local court rules and provide for penalties for failure to comply with them is covered in Code Civ. Proc. §§ 575.1 and 575.2 and Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 2.30 [see Annex British Cars, Inc. & Williams v. Parker-Rhodes (1988) 198 Cal. App. 3d 788, 792, 244 Cal. Rptr. 48 ; State of California ex rel. Public Works Bd. v. Bragg (1986) 183 Cal. App. 3d 1018, 1022-1030, 228 Cal. Rptr. 576] . In addition, Gov. Code § 68608(b) expressly confers power on judges to impose sanctions to enforce trial court delay reduction rules [see Tliche v. Van Quathem (1998) 66 Cal. App. 4th 1054, 1060-1061, 78 Cal. Rptr. 2d 458] .

Sanctions for frivolous or dilatory tactics in actions filed before January 1, 1995, are governed by Code Civ. Proc. § 128.5. Sanctions for papers presented to the court for improper purposes or that are not warranted under the law and facts are governed by Code Civ. Proc. § 128.7, which applies to actions filed on or after January 1, 1995. For forms of memoranda relating to Section 128.5 and 128.7 sanctions, see Ch. 60, Costs , Pt. II, and for further discussion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 510, Sanctions .

The power of the court to punish for contempt is provided for in Code Civ. Proc. § 1209 and Penal Code § 166.

[4] Motions for Precedence or Preference and Motions to Advance, Reset, or Specially Set

Motions to advance, reset, or specially set a case for case management conference or for trial are governed by Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 3.723, 3.1335 [see §§ 180.55 -180.57, 180.75].

Code Civ. Proc. § 36 specifies instances in which a case is entitled to preference on the motion of a party and provides the procedure for these motions [see §§ 180.50, 180.63 -180.65, 180.80, 180.81].

Numerous actions or proceedings are given precedence in trial setting by the specific statutes applicable to those particular actions or proceedings. Important examples include:

- Code Civ. Proc. § 35 (case involving voter registration or certification of candidates or ballot measures, and election contests).
- Code Civ. Proc. § 37 (action for damages resulting from commission of felony).
- Code Civ. Proc. § 460.5 (defamation action in which likelihood of continuous publication is shown).
- Code Civ. Proc. § 526a (taxpayer's action to enjoin public improvement project; see § 180.60).
- Code Civ. Proc. § 1062.3(a) (declaratory relief action; see § 180.61).
- Code Civ. Proc. § 1141.20 (trial de novo after judicial arbitration).
- Code Civ. Proc. § 1179a (proceeding in unlawful detainer, forcible entry, or forcible detainer; see § 180.62).
- Code Civ. Proc. § 1260.010 (eminent domain proceeding; see § 180.57).
- Gov. Code § 66499.37 (action to attack, review, set aside, void, or annul decision of advisory agency [defined in Gov. Code § 66415], appeal board [defined in Gov. Code § 66416], or legislative body under Subdivision Map Act).

- Gov. Code § 83121 (judicial review of action of Fair Political Practices Commission relating to pending election).

- Health & Safety Code § 42404 (action by State to recover penalties for air pollution).

- Pub. Res. Code § 21167.1 (actions or proceedings under Pub. Res. Code §§ 21167, 21168, and 21168.5 to enforce compliance with the California Environmental Quality Act).

- Rev. & Tax. Code § 5149 (action to recover, or for refund of, property taxes or assessments).

Code Civ. Proc. § 527, relating to pendente lite injunctive relief, provides that on the day on which the order to show cause is made returnable, the hearing shall take precedence over all other matters on the calendar of the day, except older matters of the same character, and matters to which special precedence may be given by law [Code Civ. Proc. § 527(e)]. This provision applies only to the time for hearing specified in an order to show cause issued on ex parte application. If the plaintiff proceeds by noticed motion for pendente lite injunctive relief, the motion is heard at a time pursuant to the statutes and rules governing motions [Mobil Oil Corp. v. Superior Court (1978) 79 Cal. App. 3d 486, 495, 145 Cal. Rptr. 17] . Code Civ. Proc. § 527(e) further provides that when the cause is at issue, it must be set for trial at the earliest possible date and shall take precedence over all other cases, except older matters of the same character, and matters to which special precedence may be given by law.

[1] Page Limits on Points and Authorities

One of the more significant drafting requirements to keep in mind are the page limits: supporting and opposing memoranda except in a summary judgment or summary adjudication motion, must not exceed 15 pages. A reply or closing memorandum may not exceed 10 pages. Exhibits, declarations, attachments, a table of contents, a table of authorities, and the proof of service are excluded from these page limits. Any party must obtain leave of court to file a longer memorandum [see Cal. Rules of Court, Rule 3.1113(d)]. These and other drafting requirements are discussed in further detail in Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[2] Using the Forms to Build a Draft Memorandum

The forms in this chapter are designed to be included in a memorandum supporting or opposing a particular motion, such as a motion to advance a case for trial based on a party's age. It may also be appropriate to modify the points and authorities in this chapter for use in a different procedural context, such as in a trial appellate brief or office memoranda.

For a detailed discussion on how to select and use the forms in the publication to build a draft memorandum and complete the draft, with detailed discussion of all drafting requirements and strategic or stylistic considerations, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs . For a skeletal form of memorandum for use in creating a properly formatted outline in which to compile relevant forms form this publication, see also Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

THIS MOTION TO AMEND THE [_____ (specify pleading, e.g., COMPLAINT) AND] CASE MANAGEMENT ORDER IN THIS CASE SHOULD BE GRANTED BECAUSE THE AMENDMENT IS IN FURTHERANCE OF JUSTICE.

A. Amendments in Furtherance of Justice. At any time before or after commencement of trial, the judge may, in the furtherance of justice, allow the amendment of any pleading or pretrial conference order on such terms as may be proper (see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 473(a), 576).

B. Amendment of Case Management Order as Subject to Same Standard of Judicial Discretion as Amendment of Pleading. Amendments in the furtherance of justice, as this phrase is used in Code of Civil Procedure Section 576, are controlled by the same standard of judicial discretion that applies to the amendment of pleadings in furtherance of justice under Section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure (see Gonzales v. Brennan (1965) 238 Cal. App. 2d 69, 75, 47 Cal. Rptr. 501).

[Optional] C. Amendment of Case Management Order to Reinstate Fictitiously Named Defendants as Parties. The amendment of a case management order to reinstate as parties to the action fictitiously named defendants dismissed by the order is authorized under Code of Civil Procedure Section 576 (see Gilmore v. Lick Fish & Poultry, Inc. (1968) 265 Cal. App. 2d 106, 110-111 ; Santa Catalina Island Co. v. Superior Court (1967) 248 Cal. App. 2d 729, 731, 56 Cal. Rptr. 876).

[Optional] D. Discretion of Court to Permit Amendments During Trial. The allowance or disallowance of amendments during trial rests largely in the discretion of the trial court, and the trial court has a wide discretion in such matters when the purpose of the amendment is to raise new issues after the pleadings have been settled and the trial commenced (Hansen v. Matich Corp. (1965) 234 Cal. App. 2d 129, 131-132, 44 Cal. Rptr. 149).

[Optional] E. Oral Amendment of Case Management Order During Trial. The trial court has discretion to allow an oral amendment to a case management order at any time during trial if the adverse party is not prejudiced by it (see Robinson v. Thornton (1969) 271 Cal. App. 2d 605, 615, 76 Cal. Rptr. 835).

[Optional] F. Amendment of Pleading to Conform to Proof. A pleading may be amended to conform to proof even though a case management order has been filed in the case (see Hansen v. Matich Corp. (1965) 234 Cal. App. 2d 129, 131-132, 44 Cal. Rptr. 149 ; Atkins v. Atkins (1960) 177 Cal. App. 2d 207, 211, 2 Cal. Rptr. 104 ; Lieberman v. Aetna Ins. Co. (1967) 249 Cal. App. 2d 515, 530, 57 Cal. Rptr. 453 ; Texaco, Inc. v. Robinson (1962) 209 Cal. App. 2d 450, 452, 25 Cal. Rptr. 923 ; Rocky Mountain Export Co. v. Colquitt (1960) 179 Cal. App. 2d 204, 206, 3 Cal. Rptr. 512).

[Optional] G. Combined Motion to Amend Pleading and Case Management Order. When a party moves to amend a pleading after a case management order has been filed, he or she should also move to amend the case management order so that the advantages of the case management conference in clearly defining the issues and eliminating unnecessary and time consuming allegations of fact might be preserved (see Posz v. Burchell (1962) 209 Cal. App. 2d 324, 335, 25 Cal. Rptr. 896).

[2] Comments

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a motion to amend a case management order and, if appropriate, a pleading [see Code Civ. Proc. § 576]. Section 576 refers to the "pretrial" conference order, but the case management order now results from a case management conference rather than a pretrial conference [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.728].

In addition to Paragraphs A and B, any combination of the optional Paragraphs C-G may be used if applicable to the facts of the case. For additional points and authorities relating to the amendment of pleadings which counsel may wish to incorporate in this memorandum when the motion seeks leave to amend both a pleading and the case management order, see Ch. 16, Amended and Supplemental Pleadings, § 16.30 et seq.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. The supporting affidavits or declarations [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009, 2015.5], to which reference may be made in the points and authorities, should set forth probative facts within the personal knowledge of the affiant or declarant showing that the granting of the motion would be in furtherance of justice.

[b] Initial Case Management Review

No later than 180 days after the filing of the initial complaint, the court must review every general civil case except the following [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.721]: complex cases, cases designated as "uninsured motorist" or included in a petition for coordination [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.712(b), (c)], cases involving exceptional circumstances, or uncomplicated cases [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.714(c), (d)], and short cause cases [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.735].

[c] Setting a Case Management Conference

In each general civil case, except for complex cases and cases specifically exempted, the court must set an initial case management conference to review the case [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.722(a)]. Notice of the date of the case management conference must be given to all parties no later than 45 days before the conference, unless otherwise ordered by the court. The court may provide by local rule for the time and manner of giving notice to the parties [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.722(b)]. At the initial conference, the court must review the case comprehensively and must, among other things, decide whether to assign the case to an alternative dispute resolution process and whether to set the case for trial. The initial case management conference should generally be the first case management event conducted by court order in each case, except for orders to show cause [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.722(a)]. At the conference, counsel for each party and each self-represented party must appear by telephone or personally, must be familiar with the case, and must be prepared to discuss and commit to the party's position on the issues [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.722(c)], unless exempted by local rule in limited civil cases [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.722(e)], or unless the court, based on its review of written submissions of the parties and other information, determines that appearances are not necessary [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.722(d)]. In the latter instance, the court may issue a case management order and notify the parties that no appearance is required [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.722(d)].

The court on its own motion may order, or a party or parties may request, that a case management conference be held at any time [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.723].

[d] Subjects to Be Considered at the Case Management Conference

At a case management conference, the parties must address, if applicable, and the court may take appropriate action with respect to the following pursuant to Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.727:

- Whether there are any related cases.

- Whether all parties named in the complaint or cross-complaint have been served, have appeared, or have been dismissed.

- Whether any additional parties may be added or the pleadings may be amended.

- Whether, if the case is a limited civil case, the economic litigation procedures under Code of Civil Procedure section 90 et seq. will apply to it or the party intends to bring a motion to exempt the case from these procedures.

- Whether any other matters (e.g., the bankruptcy of a party) may affect the court's jurisdiction or processing of the case.

- Whether the parties have stipulated to, or the case should be referred to, judicial arbitration or any other form of alternative dispute resolution.

- Whether an early settlement conference should be scheduled and, if so, on what date.

- Whether discovery has been completed and, if not, the date by which it will be completed.

- What discovery issues are anticipated.

- Whether the case should be bifurcated or a hearing set for a motion to bifurcate.

- Whether there are any cross-complaints that are not ready to be set for trial and, if so, whether they should be severed.

- Whether the case is entitled to any statutory preference and, if so, the statute granting the preference.

- Whether a jury trial is demanded, and if so, the identity of each party requesting a jury trial.

- If the trial date has not been previously set, the date by which the case will be ready for trial and the available trial dates.

- The estimated length of trial.

- The nature of the injuries.

- The amount of damages, including any special or punitive damages.

- Any additional relief sought.

- Whether there are any insurance coverage issues that may affect the resolution of the case.

- Any other matters that should be considered by the court.

In addition, in courts having a judicial arbitration program under Code Civ. Proc. § 1141.11, the court at the case management conference must determine if the case is suitable for judicial arbitration [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.727(6)].

Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.724 requires that no later than 30 calendar days before the date set for the case management conference the parties must meet and confer, in person or by telephone, to consider each of the issues to be discussed at the case management conference, and to consider:

- Resolution of discovery disputes and setting a discovery schedule.

- Identifying and, if possible, informally resolving any anticipated motions.

- Identifying the facts and issues in the case that are uncontested and may be the subject of stipulation.
- Identifying the facts and issues in the case that are in dispute.
- Determining whether the issues in the case can be narrowed by eliminating any claims or defenses by means of motion or otherwise.
- Possible settlement.
- Identifying the dates on which all parties and their attorneys are available or not available for trial, including the reasons for unavailability.
- Any issues relating to the discovery of electronically stored information.
- Other relevant matters.

[e] Case Management Statement

No later than 15 calendar days before the date set for the case management conference or review, each party must file a case management statement. Two or more parties may file a joint statement. If all parties agree to use an alternative dispute resolution (ADR) process, they must jointly complete and file an ADR stipulation form [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.725, 3.726; see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.221(a)(4) (ADR stipulation form to be included in ADR information package)].

[f] Case Management Order

The case management conference must be conducted in the manner provided by local rule. The court must enter a case management order setting a schedule for subsequent proceedings and otherwise providing for the management of the case. The order should include such provisions as may be appropriate pursuant to Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.728, including:

- Referral of the case to judicial arbitration or some other form of alternative dispute resolution.
- A date for completion of the arbitration process or other form of alternative dispute resolution process if the case has been referred to such a process.
- In the event that a trial date has not previously been set, a date certain for trial if the case is ready to be set for trial.
- Whether the trial will be a jury or a nonjury trial.
- The identity of each party demanding a jury trial.
- The estimated length of trial.
- Whether all parties necessary to the disposition of the case have been served or have appeared.
- The dismissal or severance of unserved or not-appearing defendants from the action.
- The names and addresses of the attorneys who will try the case.

- The date, time and place for a mandatory settlement conference [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1380].

- The date, time, and place for the final case management conference before trial if such a conference is required by the court or the judge assigned to the case.

- The date, time and place of any further case management conference or review.

- Any additional orders that may be appropriate.

The case management order controls the subsequent course of the action or proceeding unless it is modified by a subsequent order [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.730].

[g] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For forms of a notice of motion for an order amending a case management order, a form of supporting declaration, and a form of order granting the motion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 425, Pretrial Proceedings, § 425.121. For forms for use in amending a pleading, see Ch. 21, Amended and Supplemental Pleadings , in that publication.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Amendments in Furtherance of Justice

Code Civ. Proc. § 473(a), provides in part that the court may, in furtherance of justice, and on such terms as may be proper, allow a party to amend any pleading by adding or striking out the name of any party, or by correcting a mistake in the name of any party, or a mistake in any other respect. The court may likewise, in its discretion and after notice to the adverse party, allow on such terms as may be just an amendment to any pleading in other particulars.

[b] Amendment of Conference Order as Subject to Same Standard of Judicial Discretion as Amendment of Pleading

Gonzales v. Brennan (1965) 238 Cal. App. 2d 69, 47 Cal. Rptr. 501 , was an action for medical malpractice against a physician employed by a county hospital. The complaint did not allege that a claim had been filed with the physician as required by former Gov. Code §§ 801 and 803. The pretrial conference order recited that the issues were negligence, contributory negligence, proximate cause, and damages and made no mention of the claim. On the day of trial, defendant moved to amend the pretrial conference order to state that no claim had been filed and for leave to amend his answer to plead the failure to file the claim as an affirmative defense. The motion was granted. In a subsequent hearing plaintiff stipulated that no claim had been filed, and defendant's motion for summary judgment on this ground was granted. Plaintiff appealed, contending that the trial court abused its discretion in granting leave to amend the pretrial conference order because defendant had made no showing that the amendment was necessary to prevent manifest injustice, as required by former Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 216.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court held that leave to amend the answer was properly granted, that the amendment of pleadings, when leave is required, is a matter committed to the sound discretion of the trial court, and that, although plaintiff suffered detriment by the granting of the motion, he was not "prejudiced" by it within the meaning of that term (238 Cal. App. 2d 69, 75-76) . With respect to the amendment of the pretrial conference order, the court said the only case brought to its attention which attempted to define "manifest injustice" as used in former Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 216, was Feykert v. Hardy (1963) 213 Cal. App. 2d 67, 28 Cal. Rptr. 510 , which held that the principles governing judicial discretion in allowing amendments to pleadings apply with respect to amendments of pretrial orders (238 Cal. App. 2d 69, 74-75) . Any other interpretation, the court said, would lead to complete chaos. The court pointed out that

Code Civ. Proc. § 576, permitting amendments of pleadings and pretrial conference orders in the furtherance of justice, had been added by 1963 legislation and that former Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 216, still spoke of manifest injustice. If there were a difference between allowing modifications or amendments in the furtherance of justice, as provided in Code Civ. Proc. § 576 and which has always been the language of Code Civ. Proc. § 473, situations might arise where a court might allow a modification under Code Civ. Proc. § 576 which must be disallowed under former Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 216. Although defendant's motion to amend was made before Code Civ. Proc. § 576 went into effect, the section was designed to clarify the law and give statutory support to the rule of Feykert, not to change it. The court held that cases decided under Code Civ. Proc. § 473 were therefore on point (238 Cal. App. 2d 69, 75) .

[c] Amendment of Conference Order to Reinstate Fictitiously Named Defendants as Parties

Gilmore v. Lick Fish & Poultry, Inc. (1968) 265 Cal. App. 2d 106, 72 Cal. Rptr. 212 , was an action for damages for personal injuries allegedly sustained on defendant's business premises. The pretrial conference order dismissed the complaint as to the fictitiously named defendants. Plaintiff's subsequent motion for an order modifying the pretrial conference order to reinstate the fictitiously named defendants and for permission to amend the complaint to substitute Lick Fish and Poultry, Inc. for one of the fictitiously named defendants was granted. The newly named defendant filed a general demurrer to the complaint, which was sustained without leave to amend on the grounds that the fictitiously named defendants had been dismissed from the action by the pretrial conference order, that notice of the motion to amend the pretrial conference order was not served on the newly named defendant, and that the action was barred by the statute of limitations. Plaintiff appealed the judgment of dismissal in favor of the newly named defendant.

The court of appeal reversed. It held that amendment of the pretrial conference order was authorized by Code Civ. Proc. § 576. There was no requirement that the originally named parties stipulate to the amendment of the pretrial conference order as was done in Santa Catalina Island Co. v. Superior Court (1967) 248 Cal. App. 2d 729, 56 Cal. Rptr. 876 , discussed below, nor was there any requirement that the newly named party be given notice of the motion to amend the pretrial conference order and complaint. Finally, the action was not barred by the statute of limitations (265 Cal. App. 2d 106, 110-115) .

Santa Catalina Island Co. v. Superior Court (1967) 248 Cal. App. 2d 729, 56 Cal. Rptr. 876 , was a mandate proceeding to compel the trial court in the underlying case to quash service of summons for lack of jurisdiction. In the underlying case, the pretrial conference order had dismissed all fictitiously named defendants named in the complaint. Over six months later, the order was amended, by stipulation of plaintiff and the named defendants, so as to reinstate Doe I and Doe II. Santa Catalina Island Co. was then served with a summons and complaint as a doe defendant. The company made a special appearance to move to quash service for lack of jurisdiction, and, on denial of the motion, petitioned for writ of mandate. Petitioner contended that the order setting aside the dismissal of the fictitiously named defendants was void because it was not sought within six months following the dismissal, as assertedly required by Code Civ. Proc. § 473, authorizing relief from orders taken through mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect on application made within a reasonable time and no later than six months after the order was made.

The court of appeal rejected the contention and denied the peremptory writ. The court held that since dismissal was part of the pretrial conference procedure and not accomplished by plaintiff's independent written request, the case was controlled by Code Civ. Proc. § 576, not by Code Civ. Proc. § 473, and that, under Code Civ. Proc. § 576, the trial court was authorized to amend the original pretrial conference order with the order reinstating Does I and II (248 Cal. App. 2d 729, 730-731) .

[d] Discretion of Court to Permit Amendments During Trial

Hansen v. Matich Corp. (1965) 234 Cal. App. 2d 129, 44 Cal. Rptr. 149 , was an action for damages for personal injuries sustained in a single car accident allegedly caused by a defect in the roadway which defendant contractor was reconstructing under contract with the state. The complaint alleged an excavation or depression extending across the entire roadway of a width of about six feet and a depth of about six inches, at a point approximately 150 feet west of a named road, and that defendant negligently created the excavation. The pretrial conference order specified as an issue the alleged negligence of defendant in creating an excavation, in permitting the excavation to exist, and in failing to warn of it. During trial it came out that the scene of the accident was some distance from that alleged, and testimony as to the condition of the roadway varied from the allegations of the complaint. Plaintiff was granted permission to amend her complaint to conform to proof. The pretrial order was likewise amended to conform. Judgment was for plaintiff, and defendant appealed.

The court of appeal found no error in the trial court's having granted permission to amend and it affirmed the judgment. Citing Feykert v. Hardy (1963) 213 Cal. App. 2d 67, 75, 28 Cal. Rptr. 510 , the court said that the allowance or disallowance of amendments to pleadings during the course of a trial rests largely in the discretion of the trial court. The trial court's ruling will not be disturbed unless it clearly appears that such discretion has been abused, and the trial court has a wide discretion in such matters when the purpose of the amendment is to raise new issues after the pleadings have been settled and the trial has commenced (234 Cal. App. 2d 129, 131-132) .

[e] Oral Amendment of Conference Order During Trial

Robinson v. Thornton (1969) 271 Cal. App. 2d 605, 76 Cal. Rptr. 835 , was an action for damages for breach of a written repurchase agreement of plaintiff's interest in a natural gas lease and for recovery on a promissory note for the repurchase price which had been executed by defendant in plaintiff's favor. At the conclusion of the trial the judge called plaintiff's attention to the failure of the pretrial conference order to specifically mention the issue of nonpayment of the promissory note as alleged in plaintiff's fourth cause of action and gave plaintiff permission to amend the order to include the issue. Plaintiff won the judgment for the amount of the promissory note, and defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court held that trial courts have discretion to allow oral amendments to pretrial conference orders at any time during trial provided the adverse party is not prejudiced by them (271 Cal. App. 2d 605, 615) . The court concluded that there was no prejudice to defendant because the case had been fully tried on the basis that the issue had been properly raised. It pointed out that without objection plaintiff had testified to the execution of the note, the consideration given for it, and defendant's failure to pay, that defense counsel had cross examined plaintiff on these matters, and that defendant had testified that he executed the note and failed to pay it and explained the circumstances surrounding its execution and the purpose for which it was given (271 Cal. App. 2d 605, 615-616) .

[f] Amendment of Pleading to Conform to Proof

The facts and procedural background of Hansen v. Matich Corp. (1965) 234 Cal. App. 2d 129, 44 Cal. Rptr. 149 , are discussed in [d], above. In affirming the judgment for plaintiff, the court of appeal said that the trial court did not err in granting leave to amend to conform to proof, since all the evidence was before the jury, defendant was not taken by surprise, and no new cause of action was stated (234 Cal. App. 2d 129, 131) .

Atkins v. Atkins (1960) 177 Cal. App. 2d 207, 2 Cal. Rptr. 104 , was an action to set aside a deed and to quiet title to real property, or, in the alternative, to recover its value, and was so described in the pretrial conference order. After the trial and over defendant's objection, the court permitted amendment of the complaint to conform to proof. Plaintiffs added a cause of action alleging that the deed was executed to secure an indebtedness due defendant from plaintiffs in a specified sum. Defendant's own testimony at trial established that the deed was given as security. The trial court declared the deed, which was absolute in form, to be a mortgage and entered judgment for plaintiffs. Defendant appealed, contending that the amendment stated a new cause of action outside the issues framed by the pretrial conference order and that the trial court had erred in permitting the amendment after the pretrial conference order was issued.

The court of appeal rejected the contention and affirmed the judgment. The court pointed out that under the rules

[former Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 216], the pretrial conference order becomes part of the record when filed and usually controls the subsequent course of the case, even when inconsistent with the pleadings. However, the court did not believe that it was intended that the pretrial order should do away with the trial court's power to permit amendments to conform to proof unless the order were modified. Justice may sometimes require that the effect of a pretrial order be not so restrictive even when the order is not modified (177 Cal. App. 2d 207, 211) .

Lieberman v. Aetna Ins. Co. (1967) 249 Cal. App. 2d 515, 57 Cal. Rptr. 453 , was an action against an insurance company to recover the amount of a default judgment secured against defendant's insured in a personal injury action. Defendant cross complained to have the default judgment set aside and moved during trial to amend the pretrial conference order to include extrinsic mistake as an issue, and the motion was granted. Cross defendant appealed from the judgment for cross complainant, and the court of appeal affirmed. The court held that there was no error in granting the motion to amend the pretrial conference order. The court quoted Code Civ. Proc. § 576 and added that a pretrial conference order does not do away with the power of a trial court to permit amendments to conform to proof (249 Cal. App. 2d 515, 530) . Texaco, Inc. v. Robinson (1962) 209 Cal. App. 2d 450, 25 Cal. Rptr. 923 , was an action to recover an amount owed for merchandise sold to defendant's decedent after denial of a claim presented to the estate. The complaint alleged that the merchandise had been sold to decedent at a specified address. At trial it was shown that merchandise had been delivered to decedent both at the address specified in the complaint and at another address to which he'd moved, and the court granted plaintiff's motion to amend the complaint to add the omitted address. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appealed, contending that the trial court erred in permitting the amendment and that judgment should have been limited to the amount owing for merchandise delivered to decedent at the address originally specified, which had been carried over into the pretrial conference order. The court of appeal rejected the contention and affirmed the judgment. The court acknowledged that a pretrial conference order under the predecessor rule to former Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 216, superseded the pleadings when inconsistent with them. However, the court said it did not believe that it was intended that the pretrial order should do away with the power of the trial court to permit amendments to conform to proof and that justice may sometimes require that the effect of a pretrial order be not so restrictive even when the order is not modified (209 Cal. App. 2d 450, 452) .

In Rocky Mountain Export Co. v. Colquitt (1960) 179 Cal. App. 2d 204, 3 Cal. Rptr. 512 , the court of appeal affirmed judgment for defendant in an action to recover an unpaid balance due on a promissory note given in payment for a portable drilling rig. The trial court had granted defendant's motion to amend his answer to conform to proof by adding a defense setting up plaintiff's failure to comply with the law regarding repossession and sale of mortgaged chattels. Plaintiff contended on appeal that the trial court had no authority to allow the amendment and that under a then existing rule the issues determined by the pretrial conference order were final. The court of appeal rejected the contention. The court stated that it was not intended that the pretrial order should do away with the power of the trial court to permit amendments to conform to proof and that justice may sometimes require that the effect of a pretrial order be not so restrictive even when the order is not modified. The purpose of pretrial proceedings is to expedite and not to obstruct the administration of justice (179 Cal. App. 2d 204, 206) .

[g] Combined Motion to Amend Pleading and Conference Order

Posz v. Burchell (1962) 209 Cal. App. 2d 324, 25 Cal. Rptr. 896 , was an action for damages for breach of warranty and negligence under an oral agreement to sell boysenberry vines, three-fourths of which died. On the first day of trial, plaintiff moved for leave to amend the complaint but did not move to amend the pretrial conference order. As a condition to allowing the amendment, the trial court required that plaintiff stipulate that all matters contained in the amended complaint be deemed denied. Plaintiff did so and the motion was granted.

The court of appeal reversed the subsequent judgment for plaintiff on the ground that the wrong measure of damages had been applied. However, the court held that permitting amendment of the complaint was proper, notwithstanding the provisions of former Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 216, which provided in part that when filed the pretrial conference order became a part of the record in the case and, when inconsistent with the pleadings, controlled the subsequent course of the case. It has been established that the mere amendment of the pleadings in and of itself is to be considered an amendment of the pretrial conference order (209 Cal. App. 2d 324, 334-335) . However, the court suggested that, in connection with any future last-minute amendments of the pleadings, it would be advisable for counsel also to move for an amendment of the pretrial conference order so that the advantages of the pretrial conference in clearly defining the issues and in eliminating unnecessary and time-consuming allegations of fact might be preserved (209 Cal. App. 2d 324, 335) .

It should be noted that the court's reasoning would appear to apply to any motion to amend a pleading made after the pretrial conference order is filed and not merely to last-minute amendments of the pleadings.

DEFENDANT'S BELATED MOTION IN THIS CASE FOR AN ORDER AMENDING THE ANSWER AND CASE MANAGEMENT ORDER TO SET UP THE AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE OF NONCOMPLIANCE WITH THE REQUIREMENTS OF _____ [specify, e.g., SECTION 3242 OF THE CIVIL CODE] SHOULD BE DENIED BECAUSE COMPLIANCE WITH THIS STATUTE IS A MERE PROCEDURAL CONDITION TO THE MAINTENANCE OF THE ACTION AND DEFENDANT'S DELAY IN ASSERTING IT HAS PREJUDICED PLAINTIFF.

A. _____ [Set forth point and authority establishing that condition to maintenance of action is merely a procedural condition and not a substantive right, e.g.: Statutory Conditions to Maintenance of Action on Recorded Payment Bond as Procedural Only]. The Civil Code Section 3242 requirement that notice be given in order to enforce a claim on any payment bond given in connection with a private work is in the nature of a procedural condition to commencement of an action on substantive rights already in existence (see Permalab-Metalab Equipment Corp. v. Maryland Cas. Co. (1972) 25 Cal. App. 3d 465, 468, 102 Cal. Rptr. 26 (construing former Civ. Code § 1200.1).

B. Defense of Noncompliance With Procedural Condition to Commencement of Action as Waived If Not Timely Pleaded. Noncompliance with a procedural condition to the commencement of an action on substantive rights already in existence is an affirmative defense that may be, and is, waived if not timely pleaded (see Permalab-Metalab Equipment Corp. v. Maryland Cas. Co. (1972) 25 Cal. App. 3d 465, 468-470, 102 Cal. Rptr. 26).

C. Belated Motion to Amend as Properly Denied When Prejudicial. A motion to amend an answer and case management order to set up the affirmative defense of noncompliance with a procedural condition to the maintenance of the action is properly denied when the motion is untimely and prejudices the plaintiff's rights (see Permalab-Metalab Equipment Corp. v. Maryland Cas. Co. (1972) 25 Cal. App. 3d 465, 470-472, 102 Cal. Rptr. 26).

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a motion to amend an answer and case management order made on the ground the amendment is in furtherance of justice [see Code Civ. Proc. § 576 (referring to the "pretrial" conference order; under Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.728, an order now results from a case management conference rather than a pretrial conference)]. The ground of opposition is that permission to amend the answer would not be in furtherance of justice. The amendment's purpose is to set up the defense of noncompliance with a mere procedural condition to the commencement of the action on substantive rights already in existence. In addition, defendant's delay in seeking the amendment has prejudiced plaintiff's rights.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. The supporting declaration should recite the relevant facts from the court's records and file in the case (e.g., the dates the answer was filed, the case management order was made, and the motion to amend was filed) and should set forth probative facts within the declarant's personal knowledge establishing the prejudice to plaintiff. These facts may be referred to in counsel's argument in the points and authorities. An example of prejudice might consist of the following: (1) there has been an unreasonably long delay between the time the answer was filed and the motion to amend the answer and case management order was made; (2) if the amendment is allowed, defendant will be able to escape liability, which it would not be able to do were the amendment to be denied; and (3) between the time the answer was filed and the motion to amend was made, plaintiff lost the right to pursue his or her remedy against others because of the bar of the statute of limitations or because such other persons have become insolvent, and this right would not have been lost had the defense been timely pleaded. For other fact situations that have been held sufficient to support the trial court's denial of a belated motion to amend, see Hulsey v. Koehler (1990) 218 Cal. App. 3d 1150, 1159, 267 Cal. Rptr. 2d 523 (denial of belated motion to amend answer to assert Code Civ. Proc. § 426.30 as affirmative defense);

Mobil Oil Corp. v. Handley (1978) 76 Cal. App. 3d 956, 967, 143 Cal. Rptr. 321 (denial of belated motion in unlawful detainer proceeding to amend affirmative defenses in answer to allege waiver by plaintiff in accepting rent); Young v. Berry Equipment Rentals, Inc. (1976) 55 Cal. App. 3d 35, 38-40, 127 Cal. Rptr. 200 (denial of belated motion in action for damages for personal injuries to amend complaint to allege new theory of liability against negligent employee's employer after plaintiff was granted new trial on issue of damages only); and Rogers v. Ulrich (1975) 52 Cal. App. 3d 894, 899, 12 Cal. Rptr. 306 (denial of belated motion in action for damages for recording phone conversation without other party's knowledge to amend complaint immediately before trial and after close of plaintiff's case to allege violation of nonpleaded statute).

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities set out in § 180.10.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Statutory Conditions to Maintenance of Action on Recorded Payment Bond as Procedural Only

Permalab-Metalab Equipment Corp. v. Maryland Cas. Co. (1972) 25 Cal. App. 3d 465, 102 Cal. Rptr. 26 , was an action by a subcontractor against the contractor and its surety for money claimed due on the job against which the surety's bond had been written and recorded. Former Code Civ. Proc. § 1200.1(d) provided in part that if the bond was recorded, no action could be maintained on it unless either a mechanic's lien had been filed or written notice containing specified matter had been given to the surety before expiration of the time prescribed for filing a mechanic's lien. Plaintiff did neither of these, and its action was commenced after the time for filing the lien or giving the notice had expired. The complaint was silent as to the filing of the lien or the giving of notice. The surety's answer failed to plead as an affirmative defense plaintiff's failure to do either of the foregoing; rather, it admitted execution of the bond and pleaded that plaintiff had not performed in accordance with the terms of the contract. Some three years later, shortly before trial was to commence, the surety served and filed a notice of motion to amend its answer to set up as an affirmative defense plaintiff's failure to have complied with the foregoing conditions on the ground that facts material to the case were discovered after the original complaint had been filed. The motion was heard on the day trial was to commence. The surety conceded at the hearing that the contractor had gone out of business the year before. The trial court stated that plaintiff had lost certain ancillary remedies (pretrial attachment and garnishment) it could have pursued against the contractor had the defense been timely raised and that plaintiff was therefore prejudiced by the delay. It denied the motion. Judgment was for plaintiff, and the surety appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court said that the mechanic's lien or notice requirement of former Code Civ. Proc. §

1200.1(d) was in the nature of a procedural condition to commencement of an action on substantive rights already in existence (25 Cal. App. 3d 465, 468) .

The present statute, Civ. Code § 3242, is significantly different from former Section 1200.1, but still sets up a notice requirement in order to enforce a claim.

[b] Defense of Noncompliance With Procedural Condition to Commencement of Action as Waived If Not Timely Pleaded

The facts and procedural background of Permalab-Metalab Equipment Corp. v. Maryland Cas. Co. (1972) 25 Cal. App. 3d 465, 102 Cal. Rptr. 26 , are discussed in [a], above. In affirming the judgment for plaintiff, the court held that noncompliance with a procedural condition to commencement of an action on substantive rights already in existence is not a jurisdictional prerequisite to maintenance of the action but an affirmative defense that can be and is waived if not timely asserted (25 Cal. App. 3d 465, 468-470) .

[c] Belated Motion to Amend as Properly Denied When Prejudicial

The facts and procedural background of Permalab-Metalab Equipment Corp. v. Maryland Cas. Co. (1972) 25 Cal. App. 3d 465, 102 Cal. Rptr. 26 , are discussed in [a], above. In affirming the judgment for plaintiff, the court of appeal quoted the trial court's statements summarizing the prejudice (25 Cal. App. 3d 465, 471) . The court restated the established rule that trial courts will ordinarily exercise liberality in permitting amendments to pleadings, particularly amendments to answers, but added (1) whether an amendment will be allowed rests in the sound discretion of the trial court, and (2) trial courts are much more critical of proposed amendments to answers when offered after a long unexplained delay or on the eve of trial, when there is a lack of diligence, or when there is prejudice to the other party. The court held that guided by these rules the trial court's ruling on the motion to amend was not an abuse of discretion and was without error (25 Cal. App. 3d 465, 472) .

B. Sanctions with Respect to Pretrial, Trial Setting, and Settlement Conferences

18-180 California Points & Authorities § 180.30

§ 180.30 Supporting Contention That Sanctions May Be Imposed for Failure to Comply With State or Local Rules or Court Order Relating to Court Conferences or to Participate in Good Faith in Required Conferences [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 2.30]

[The following may be included in a memorandum or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE IMPOSITION OF SANCTIONS AGAINST _____ [identify person, e.g., PLAINTIFF'S COUNSEL] FOR HIS/HER FAILURE _____ [TO COMPLY WITH _____ (RULE _____ OF THE CALIFORNIA RULES OF COURT or identify local court rule) or COMPLY WITH THE ORDER OF THIS COURT MADE AND ENTERED ON _____ (date), ORDERING _____ (specify) or TO PARTICIPATE IN GOOD FAITH IN THE _____ (CASE MANAGEMENT or TRIAL SETTING or SETTLEMENT) CONFERENCE IN THIS CASE] IS EXPRESSLY AUTHORIZED BY SECTION 227 OF THE CALIFORNIA RULES OF COURT.

A. Constitutional Power of Judicial Council to Adopt Rules. The Judicial Council of California has been granted express power by the California Constitution to adopt rules for court administration, practice, and procedure, not inconsistent with statute, and perform other functions prescribed by statute (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 6).

[Optional] B. Legislative Confirmation of Power. The California Legislature has expressly confirmed the power of the Judicial Council of California to adopt rules governing pretrial conferences, and their time, manner, and nature, in civil cases at issue, or in one or more classes of civil cases, in superior courts (Code Civ. Proc. § 575).

C. Effect of Judicial Council's Rules. The rules of practice and procedure adopted by the Judicial Council of California pursuant to the power granted to it by the California Constitution, [and such rules as have been adopted by it pursuant to specific statutory mandate], to the extent such rules do not transcend legislative enactments, have the force of positive law (Paul D. v. Superior Court (1984) 158 Cal. App. 3d 838, 841, 205 Cal. Rptr. 77 ; Cantillon v. Superior Court (1957) 150 Cal. App. 2d 184, 187, 309 P.2d 890).

[EITHER, if case management conference involved, and sanctions are sought for violation of local court rule]

D. Duties of Persons With Respect to Case Management Conference. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.722(c) expressly imposes a duty upon counsel for each party and each self-represented party to appear by telephone or personally, to be familiar with the case, and to be prepared to discuss and commit to the party's position on the issues listed in Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.724 and 3.727, unless otherwise notified or excused by the court. This rule is not inconsistent with any statutory law and therefore has the force of law as they apply to the duties to _____ [specify, e.g., participate in good faith in the conference] (see Cantillon v. Superior Court (1957) 150 Cal. App. 2d 184, 187, 309 P.2d 890).

[OR, if settlement conference involved]

D. Duties of Persons With Respect to Settlement Conference. Trial counsel, parties, and persons with full authority to settle the case must personally attend the settlement conference, unless excused by the court for good cause. If any consent to settle is required for any reason, the party with that consensual authority must be personally present at the conference (Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1380(b)). [Each _____ (plaintiff or defendant) must, no later than five court days before the date set for the conference, submit to the court and serve on each party a mandatory settlement conference statement containing a good faith _____ (settlement demand and an itemization of economic and noneconomic damages or offer of settlement). The statement must set forth and discuss in detail all facts and law pertinent to the issues of liability and damages involved in the case as to that party and comply with any additional requirement imposed by local rule (Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1380(c)). (Local rule provides _____ [specify.])]

[CONTINUE]

E. Sanctions With Respect to Conferences. In addition to any other sanctions permitted by law, the court may order a person, after written notice and an opportunity to be heard, to pay reasonable monetary sanctions to the court or an aggrieved person, or both, for failure to comply with the California Rules of Court, Rule _____ (3.722 or 3.1380), unless good cause is shown (Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 2.30).

[Optional] F. Enforcement of Local Rules. Local rules promulgated pursuant to Code of Civil Procedure Section 575.1 may provide that if any counsel, a party represented by counsel, or a party if in pro se, fails to comply with any of the requirements thereof, the court on motion of a party or on its own motion may strike out all or any part of any pleading of that party, or, dismiss the action or proceeding or any part thereof, or enter a judgment by default against that party, or impose other penalties of a lesser nature as otherwise provided by law, and may order that party or his or her counsel to pay to the moving party the reasonable expenses in making the motion, including reasonable attorney fees (Code Civ. Proc. § 575.2(a); see Code Civ. Proc. § 575.1 (authority to enact local rules)).

[Optional] G. Enforcement of Trial Delay Reduction Rules. Judges shall have all the powers to impose sanctions authorized by law, including the power to dismiss actions or strike pleadings, if it appears that less severe sanctions would not be effective after taking into account the effect of previous sanctions or previous lack of compliance in the case. Judges are encouraged to impose sanctions to achieve the purposes of the Trial Court Delay Reduction Act (Gov. Code § 68608(b)).

H. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 2.30 as Not Constituting Impermissible Attempt by Judicial Council to Legislate. The rule of practice and procedure duly adopted by the Judicial Council of California and set forth as Rule 2.30 of the California Rules of Court is not an impermissible attempt by the Judicial Council to legislate in the area of substantive law (see Cantillon v. Superior Court (1957) 150 Cal. App. 2d 184, 187, 309 P.2d 890 , applying predecessor to Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 227, which is now Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 2.30).

[Optional] I. Violation of Rules of Practice Adopted by Judicial Council as Contempt of Court. An inexcusable failure of a person to comply with a rule of practice adopted by the Judicial Council is a contempt of court and punishable as such (see Cantillon v. Superior Court (1957) 150 Cal. App. 2d 184, 187-188, 309 P.2d 890).

[Add paragraphs as necessary to set forth provisions of any additional relevant local rule, policy, or court order not complied with and cite rule, policy, or order.]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a party's contention that, in the absence of a showing of good cause, sanctions may be imposed for the failure of a person to comply with the California Rules of Court, local court rule, or a court order, or to participate in good faith in any conference required by those rules or order [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 2.30].

Optional Paragraph B should be included if the sanctions were imposed or are sought to be imposed with respect to a pretrial conference.

One of the two alternatives of Paragraph D should be used depending on whether a case management or settlement conference is involved.

Optional Paragraph I should be included if the sanctions were imposed or are sought to be imposed for contempt of court.

The purpose of the points and authorities in this form is to establish the power of the Judicial Council to adopt the rule imposing sanctions and its legally binding effect.

These points and authorities may be used alone or combined with a memorandum relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue as to the propriety of sanctions against a person for failing without good cause to comply with the California Rules of Court, local court rule, or a court order, or failing to participate in good faith in any conference required by those rules or court order. For example, the points and authorities may be combined with a memorandum in support of a motion for the imposition of sanctions and an award of reasonable expenses and counsel fees pursuant to Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 2.30. The points and authorities may also be cited in a contempt proceeding arising out of the person's failure to comply with the California Rules of Court or local court rules or court order regarding the duties of parties and counsel with respect to the case management, trial setting, or settlement conference, or to participate in good faith in any such conference, or they may be combined with points and authorities in opposition to a petition for writ of certiorari to review the contempt adjudication. They may also be cited in an appellate brief on appeal from the judgment in the action in which the sanctions were imposed or in any other proceeding in which the issue may arise.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. The argument will depend on the specific procedural context in which the issue arises. For example, if the contention is made in support of a motion to impose sanctions, the probative facts not appearing in the court's records or file of the case which establish the ground or grounds for imposing sanctions should be set forth in an accompanying affidavit, or declaration under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009, 2015.5]. Counsel should request the court to take judicial notice of any additional facts supporting the imposition of sanctions that appear in the court's records [see Evid. Code §§ 452(d), 453; cf. Code Civ. Proc. § 430.70 (relating to demurrers)]. Counsel may refer to these facts in the memorandum and argue their effect as showing that the person failed without good cause to comply with an applicable rule or court order or to participate in good faith in the conference. With respect to the person's failure to participate in good faith at the conference, this fact would be apparent to the judge and would not normally be required to be established by facts set forth in an affidavit or declaration; the person's failure to appear at the conference would, of course, be obvious, and the burden would be on the person to establish good cause for his or her absence.

[b] Alternative Provisions

Counsel seeking an award of expenses and fees for a person's failure to participate in good faith in a case management or settlement conference should also consider the availability of sanctions under Code Civ. Proc. § 128.7 (papers presented to court for improper purpose or not warranted on law or facts if the action was filed on or after January 1, 1995) or Code Civ. Proc. § 128.5 (frivolous actions and delaying tactics if the action was filed before January 1, 1995). For forms of memoranda based on these statutes, see Ch. 60, Costs . Counsel should additionally consider Code Civ. Proc. §§ 177.5 (sanctions imposed notwithstanding any other provision of law for violation of lawful court order) and 1218 (punishment imposed for contempt of court).

[c] Conduct Warranting Sanctions and Procedure for Imposition

In addition to any other sanctions permitted by law, the court may order a person, after written notice and an opportunity to be heard, to pay reasonable monetary sanctions to the court or an aggrieved person, or both, for failure to comply with the rules in Title Two of the California Rules of Court, unless good cause is shown. "Person" includes a party, a party's attorney, witness, and an insurer or any other individual or entity whose consent is necessary for the disposition of the case. If a failure to comply with the rule is the responsibility of counsel and not of the party, any penalty must be imposed on counsel and must not adversely affect the party's cause of action or defense [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 2.30(b)].

If a party moves for sanctions, sanctions cannot be imposed under Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 2.30 except upon notice in the party's motion papers which must set forth the applicable rule that has been violated, describe the specific conduct that is alleged to have violated the rule, and identify the attorney, law firm, party, witness or other person against whom sanctions are sought [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 2.30(c)]. In addition to sanctions, the court may order the person who has violated a rule in Title Two to pay to the party aggrieved by the violation that party's reasonable expenses, including reasonable attorney fees and costs, incurred in connection with the sanctions motion [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 2.30(d)].

An unlawful interference with the proceedings of the court is also a contempt of court [Code Civ. Proc. § 1209(a)(8)]. Punishment that may be imposed for contempt of court is set forth in Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1218, 1219.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Effect of Judicial Council's Rules

Cantillon v. Superior Court (1957) 150 Cal. App. 2d 184, 309 P.2d 890 , was a proceeding in certiorari to review a superior court order holding a law firm in contempt of court for its conduct with respect to a pretrial conference in a civil case. The pretrial conference order, among other things, stated that (1) the law firm neither prepared for pretrial nor conferred with counsel for plaintiff or codefendant prior to pretrial as required; (2) the attorney sent by the law firm to the conference was not familiar with either the facts or law of the case and was without adequate knowledge or authority to proceed; (3) another attorney in the firm was the lawyer who was familiar with the matter; (4) counsel for plaintiff and counsel for codefendant advised the court that they had not been able to make arrangements with the law firm for pretrial conferences and that their phone calls had not been answered; and (5) the matter obviously was not ready for pretrial hearing. The court ruled that the law firm violated former Superior Court Rules, Rule 8.2 (relating to pretrial conferences) and former Superior Court Rules, Rule 8.9 (a predecessor to Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 2.30) and thereby committed an unlawful interference with the proceedings of the court and was in contempt of court. The order added that no good cause was shown by the law firm for the violations and directed the firm to pay a fine. The attorney who was stated to have been familiar with the case petitioned for a writ of certiorari, challenging the power of the trial court to make a contempt finding based on former Superior Court Rules, Rule 8.2.

The court of appeal annulled and vacated the contempt order on the ground that criminal contempts consisting of acts done in disrespect of the authority of a court are necessarily acts or omissions of an individual or individuals, as distinguished from acts or omissions of the firm or association of which the individuals are members, and that the court knew of no authority by which it could impose a fine on a firm or association for a personal contempt committed by one of its members. The court nevertheless upheld the power of the trial court to impose contempt sanctions pursuant to former Code Civ. Proc. §§ 128(3) and 1209(8) [now see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 128(a)(3) and 1209(a)(8)] and what today is Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 2.30. The court said that former Cal. Const, art. VI, § 1a [now see Cal. Const., art. VI, § 6] vests in the Judicial Council power to adopt rules of practice and procedure for the courts not inconsistent with laws. It is well settled that, under this constitutional grant of power, the rules of practice and procedure adopted by the Judicial Council, including rules adopted under specific statutory mandate, and which do not transcend legislative enactments, have the force of positive law (150 Cal. App. 2d 184, 187-188) .

In Paul D. v. Superior Court (1984) 158 Cal. App. 3d 838, 205 Cal. Rptr. 77 , the court of appeal held the Los Angeles County probation department's policy of refusing to consider a minor for informal supervision under Welf. & Inst. Code § 654 when the minor denied the charge was illegal. The court explained that the factors to be considered by the probation officer in determining eligibility for that supervision were specified in former Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 1307(e), that the rule did not transcend any legislative enactments, and that the rule had the force of law (158 Cal. App. 3d 838, 841) . Since admission of guilt was not a factor specified in the rule, the department abused its discretion in refusing to consider petitioner for section 654 supervision on grounds that he denied the charge against him of misdemeanor battery (158 Cal. App. 3d 838, 842) .

[b] Duties of Persons With Respect to Pretrial Conference

The facts and procedural background of Cantillon v. Superior Court (1957) 150 Cal. App. 2d 184, 309 P.2d 890 , are discussed in [a], above. The court said the duties of attorneys in respect to pretrial conferences are set forth in former Superior Court Rules, Rule 8.2. This rule required the attendance at the conference by counsel, if any, who will have a thorough knowledge of the case and be prepared to discuss it. The court said that, manifestly, there can be no pretrial conference without conferees, and no effective pretrial conference without participation predicated on preparation. The court held the rule was not inconsistent with any statutory law and therefore had the force of law as it applied to the duties of attorneys to prepare for, attend, and participate in a pretrial conference (150 Cal. App. 2d 184, 187) .

[c] Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 2.30 as Not Constituting Impermissible Attempt by Judicial Council to Legislate

The facts and procedural background of Cantillon v. Superior Court (1957) 150 Cal. App. 2d 184, 309 P.2d 890 , are discussed in [a], above. Petitioner contended that former Superior Court Rules, Rule 8.9 [now see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 2.30], by designating certain acts and omissions as contempts of court, constituted an attempt by the Judicial Council both to encroach unconstitutionally on the power of the Legislature to legislate in the field of substantive law and to entrench on a field of law preempted by the Legislature.

The court of appeal rejected both contentions. The court said that former Code Civ. Proc. § 1209, defined with some particularity various types of acts or omissions that constitute contempts of the authority of the court. However, former Code Civ. Proc. § 1209(8) [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 1209(a)(8)], by its terms, embraces any other acts not otherwise described which result in the unlawful interference with the process or proceedings of a court. The court explained that, manifestly, a specific enumeration of every act or omission which may unlawfully interfere with the proceedings of the court is impractical, if not impossible, and held that the clear purpose of former Code Civ. Proc. § 1209(8) was to include, within the definition of contempt, acts or omissions not previously specified but which in fact result in an unlawful interference with the proceedings of the court. The court explained that the rule delineated certain omissions by an attorney as constituting an unlawful interference with the proceedings of the court in a pretrial conference and did not attempt to define any new or distinct act of contempt (150 Cal. App. 2d 184, 188) . The court held that the rule was neither an encroachment on the legislative authority to enact substantive law or an attempt by the Judicial Council to entrench on a field of law preempted by the Legislature (150 Cal. App. 2d 184, 188-189) .

[d] Violation of Rules of Practice Adopted by Judicial Council as Contempt of Court

The facts and procedural background of Cantillon v. Superior Court (1957) 150 Cal. App. 2d 184, 309 P.2d 890 , are discussed in [a], above. The court said that it is a well-recognized principle that courts have inherent power to enforce the effective conduct of judicial proceedings in order to insure orderly administration of justice and that the Legislature has in former Code Civ. Proc. § 128(3) [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 128(a)(3)] codified this principle by granting power to every court to provide for the orderly conduct of proceedings before it (150 Cal. App. 2d 184, 187) . The court, citing former Code Civ. Proc. § 1209(8) [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 1209(a)(8)], said that an inexcusable failure to comply with the rules or orders made by a court pertaining to the orderly conduct of judicial proceedings before it constitutes an unlawful interference with the proceedings of the court, and by appropriate proceedings is punishable as a contempt of the authority of the court (150 Cal. App. 2d 184, 187-188) . The court held that a rule of procedure adopted by the Judicial Council within its constitutional or statutory grant of power for the conduct of a judicial proceeding before a court is a rule of the court within the purview of former Code Civ. Proc. § 128(3) and that an inexcusable failure of an attorney to prepare for, appear at, and participate in a pretrial conference is, by appropriate proceedings, subject to the punitive power of the court (150 Cal. App. 2d 184, 188) .

B. Sanctions with Respect to Pretrial, Trial Setting, and Settlement Conferences

§ 180.31 Supporting Contention That Discovery Sanctions May Be Imposed for Failure of Person to Comply With Case Management Order With Respect to Discovery

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DISCOVERY SANCTIONS AGAINST _____ [identify party, e.g., PLAINTIFF] FOR HIS/HER FAILURE TO HAVE COMPLIED WITH THE PROVISIONS OF THE CASE MANAGEMENT ORDER MADE AND FILED IN THIS CASE ORDERING HIM/HER TO _____ [specify], ALTHOUGH NOT EXPRESSLY AUTHORIZED BY STATUTE OR BY THE CALIFORNIA RULES OF COURT, MAY BE IMPOSED UNDER THE COURT'S INHERENT POWER.

A. Implied Powers to Effectuate Conferred Powers. When jurisdiction is conferred on a court or judicial officer by the California Constitution, the Code of Civil Procedure, or any other statute, all the means necessary to carry it into effect are also given; in the exercise of this jurisdiction, if the course of proceeding is not specifically pointed out by the Code of Civil Procedure or the statute, any suitable process or mode of proceeding may be adopted which may appear most conformable to the spirit of the Code of Civil Procedure (Code Civ. Proc. § 187).

B. Power of Court to Impose Sanctions for Violation of Case Management Order. The court has inherent power to implement and enforce effective conduct of judicial proceedings held pursuant to the pretrial rules promulgated by the Judicial Council and they have inherent power, as well as power under Section 187 of the Code of Civil Procedure to adopt any suitable method of practice, both in ordinary actions and special proceedings, if the procedure is not specified by statute or by rules adopted by the Judicial Council (Mellone v. Lewis (1965) 233 Cal. App. 2d 4, 12, 43 Cal. Rptr. 412).

C. Power to Impose Sanction for Failure to Obey Discovery Order. If a party fails to obey a discovery order, the court may make those orders that are just, including the imposition of an issue sanction, an evidence sanction, or a terminating sanction against that party. In lieu of or in addition to this sanction, the court may impose a monetary sanction against the disobedient party (see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2023.030, 2025.450, 2025.480, 2030.290, 2030.300, 2031.300, 2031.310, 2031.320, 2032.240, 2032.610-620, and 2032.640-650; Mellone v. Lewis (1965) 233 Cal. App. 2d 4, 13, 43 Cal. Rptr. 412 (decided under predecessor to Code Civ. Proc. § 2023).

D. Imposition of Discovery Sanctions Against Party Failing to Comply With Discovery Orders in Case Management Order. Although Section 2023 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.010-2023.040 operative July 1, 2005), defining misuse of the discovery process and listing available sanctions for such misuse, is not made specifically applicable to case management orders, it does provide a suitable method of practice harmonious with the purposes of implementing and enforcing the portions of a case management order relating to evidence and discovery (Mellone v. Lewis (1965) 233 Cal. App. 2d 4, 13, 43 Cal. Rptr. 412 (decided under predecessor to Code Civ. Proc. § 2023).

[2] Comments

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a party's contention that a court has inherent power to impose discovery sanctions for a party's failure to have complied with the discovery provisions of a case management order. These points and authorities may be used alone or combined with a memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue. For example, the points and authorities may be combined with a memorandum in support of a pretrial motion in limine for an order excluding the otherwise relevant testimony or evidence. They might also be cited in support of an objection at trial to the introduction of that testimony or evidence. The points and authorities may also be included in a trial or appellate brief or in any other proceeding in which the issue may arise.

Counsel should consider additional grounds for sanctions when using this form. At the time Mellone v. Lewis (1965) 233 Cal. App. 2d 4, 43 Cal. Rptr. 412 , was decided, former Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 217 did not provide for sanctions for noncompliance with a court order [see Mellone v. Lewis (1965) 233 Cal. App. 2d 4, 12, 43 Cal. Rptr. 412] . Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 2.30, which has replaced Rule 227, does allow the imposition of sanctions for violation of court orders. Thus, this form should be combined with the points and authorities set forth in § 180.30[1].

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. The argument will depend on the specific procedural context in which the issue arises. For example, if the contention is made in support of a motion in limine, counsel should identify the precise orders that were disobeyed and either state (or present in the form of an affidavit or declaration under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009, 2015.5]) the facts constituting the failure to obey, suggest the nature of the sanction to be imposed, and cite the specific statutory sanction the imposition of which would be most conformable to the spirit of the Code of Civil Procedure.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For general forms of notices of motion and supporting papers, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 372, Motions and Orders , (Matthew Bender). For a form of motion in limine and a form of order granting the motion, see Ch. 373, Motions in Limine in that publication.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Power of Court to Impose Sanctions for Violation of Pretrial Conference Order

Mellone v. Lewis (1965) 233 Cal. App. 2d 4, 43 Cal. Rptr. 412 , was an action by multiple plaintiffs against a food caterer of a wedding for damages allegedly resulting from food poisoning. At the pretrial conference, which lasted three days, detailed and comprehensive orders relative to parties, issues, and procedure were made. One part of the pretrial order was entitled "Evidence, Discovery and Law and Motion." Under this heading, a number of orders were set forth.

These orders detailed the procedure for submission by plaintiffs to defendant of itemized claims for their medical expenses and loss of earnings, required that the itemized claims be submitted at least 90 days before trial, set a time limit (at least 30 days before trial) within which defendant might conduct medical examinations and audits to verify the claims so presented, and required that deposition and interrogatory matters were to be completed 60 days before trial. The issues of liability and damages were bifurcated for trial. The liability issue was tried first, and the jury returned a verdict in favor of plaintiffs on this issue. The trial then proceeded before the same jury as to the issue of damages. At this trial, plaintiff's counsel, seeking to establish special damages, called as a witness a doctor and asked whether he had rendered a bill to one of the plaintiffs. Defendant objected to the question on the ground plaintiffs had failed to comply with the pretrial conference order requiring that such a bill be submitted to counsel for defendant at least 90 days before trial. Plaintiffs asserted they furnished the information seven days prior to trial. The objection was sustained. Plaintiffs' counsel in chambers made an offer of proof and moved to be relieved from the provisions of the pretrial order. The motion was denied. Plaintiffs' subsequent motion for reconsideration was also denied. Plaintiffs' third motion for permission to present evidence regarding the items of special damages as to which the court had excluded the evidence was also denied. The jury returned a verdict for plaintiffs awarding each a different but nominal sum. Plaintiffs appealed, contending the trial court lacked authority to exclude the evidence and that they should have been relieved from their noncompliance with the pretrial conference order.

The court of appeal rejected the contentions and affirmed the judgment. The court pointed out that former Cal. Rules of Ct, Rule 217 [now see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 2.30], provided for sanctions with respect to a pretrial conference, but that none of the rules promulgated by the Judicial Council with reference to pretrial proceedings expressly provided sanctions or procedures to be followed in the event of noncompliance by a party with a pretrial order. Nevertheless, citing Cantillon v. Superior Court (1957) 150 Cal. App. 2d 184, 187, 309 P.2d 890 (discussed in § 180.30[3][a]), and former Code Civ. Proc. § 128(3), (4) [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 128(a)(3), (4)] relating to the powers of courts, the court said that it has the inherent power to implement and enforce effective conduct of judicial proceedings held pursuant to the pretrial rules promulgated by the Judicial Council. Citing Tide Water Ass'n Oil Co. v. Superior Court (1955) 43 Cal. 2d 815, 825, 279 P.2d 35 , the court also stated that courts have inherent power, as well as power under Code Civ. Proc. § 187, to adopt any suitable method of practice, both in ordinary actions and special proceedings, if the procedure is not specified by statute or by rules adopted by the Judicial Council (233 Cal. App. 2d 4, 12) . It is not only proper but at times may be necessary for a court to follow provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure which are harmonious with the objects and purposes of the proceeding although those provisions are not specifically made applicable by the statute that creates the proceeding (233 Cal. App. 2d 4, 12-13) .

[b] Power to Impose Sanction for Failure to Obey Discovery Order

The facts and procedural background of Mellone v. Lewis (1965) 233 Cal. App. 2d 4, 43 Cal. Rptr. 412 , are discussed in [a], above. The court, which decided the case under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2034 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023(b) (Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030 operative July 1, 2005)), pointed out that it provided that if any party fails to obey a discovery order, the court may make those orders as are just in regard to the refusal, including an order refusing to allow the disobedient party to support or oppose designated claims or defenses, or prohibiting him or her from introducing in evidence designated documents, things, or items of testimony (233 Cal. App. 2d 4, 13) .

Counsel should note that although Mellone specifically mentioned only the issue and evidence sanctions, additional sanctions, in the form of monetary, terminating, or contempt, may also be available [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023(b)(1), (4), (5) (Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(a), (d), (e) operative July 1, 2005)].

[c] Imposition of Discovery Sanctions Against Party Failing to Comply With Discovery Orders in Pretrial Conference Order

The facts and procedural background of Mellone v. Lewis (1965) 233 Cal. App. 2d 4, 43 Cal. Rptr. 412 , are discussed in [a], above. In rejecting plaintiffs' contentions, the court of appeal, after pointing out that former Code Civ. Proc. §

2034 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023(b)(2) (Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(b) operative July 1, 2005)), provides for sanctions that may be imposed for disobedience of discovery orders, said that, although this section is not made specifically applicable to pretrial orders, it does provide a suitable method of practice harmonious with the purposes of implementing and enforcing the portions of the present pretrial order relating to evidence and discovery. The relevant portions of the pretrial order were made pursuant to consent of the parties, pertained to evidence and discovery matters, appeared under a subheading of the order entitled "Evidence, Discovery and Law and Motion," and were made pursuant to the express authorization of the rules then promulgated by the Judicial Council relating to pretrial proceedings. The court said that in view of the pretrial rules, code sections, and case law applicable to them, the trial court had authority to exclude evidence of claimed special damages that was not submitted in compliance with the order (233 Cal. App. 2d 4, 13) . The court further rejected plaintiffs' additional argument that exclusion of the evidence on the ground of plaintiffs' noncompliance with the pretrial order and the trial court's refusal to relieve plaintiffs from their noncompliance constituted an abuse of discretion (233 Cal. App. 2d 4, 13-16) .

§ 180.40 Opposing Contention That Sanctions May Be Imposed for Failure to Comply With State or Local Rules or Court Order Relating to Court Conferences or to Participate in Good Faith in Required Conferences [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 2.30]--Excessive Sanction for Failure to Attend Settlement Conference

[The following may be included in a memorandum or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE COURT _____ [SHOULD VACATE AND SET ASIDE THE ORDER or PROPERLY VACATED AND SET ASIDE THE ORDER or ERRED IN] _____ [specify ordered sanction other than monetary sanction, e.g., STRIKING THE DEFENDANT'S ANSWER AND ENTERING DEFENDANT'S DEFAULT] AS A SANCTION FOR FAILING TO APPEAR AT THE SETTLEMENT CONFERENCE BECAUSE THE SANCTION IS EXCESSIVE.

[EITHER]

A. Insufficient Notice. A sanction that deprives the defendant of its day in court without sufficient notice is excessive (Sigala v. Anaheim City School Dist. (1993) 15 Cal. App. 4th 661, 673, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 38).

[AND/OR]

B. Ultimate Sanction Inappropriate in First Instance. The ultimate sanction of _____ [specify sanction that terminates the case, e.g., striking the answer] is rarely, if ever appropriate in the first instance (Sigala v. Anaheim City School Dist. (1993) 15 Cal. App. 4th 661, 673-674, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 38).

[AND/OR]

C. Ultimate Sanction Is Inappropriate Because Failure to Attend Was Responsibility of Counsel Not Defendant. If a failure to comply with a rule in Title Two of the California Rules of Court is the responsibility of counsel and not of the party, any penalty must be imposed on counsel and must not adversely affect the party's cause of action or defense thereto (Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 2.30(b)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to plaintiff's contention that a sanction terminating the case may be or was properly ordered as a sanction for defendant having failed to appear at a settlement conference. The ground of opposition is that the sanction was excessive. These points and authorities may be used alone or combined with a memorandum relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue as to the propriety of the sanction imposed or sought to be imposed. For example, the points and authorities may be combined with a memorandum in support of a motion by defendant for reconsideration of an order granting plaintiff's motion for an order striking the answer and entering defendant's default, or in support of a motion under Code Civ. Proc. § 473(d), to set aside and vacate the default and default judgment on the ground the default and judgment are void. They may also be cited in an appellate brief, or in any other proceeding in which the issue may arise.

Counsel should insert argument showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, facts showing defendant did not have notice of the hearing or that the notice did not show that such a severe sanction might be ordered should be added to Paragraph A. If using Paragraph B, counsel should show that defendant had not refused to comply with earlier court orders and that no previous, lesser sanctions (for example, monetary) had been ordered. If using Paragraph C, counsel should show that the responsibility of the failure to attend the settlement conference rested solely with counsel.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities set out in § 180.30[1].

[b] Applicability of Form to Pretrial and Trial Setting Conferences

These points and authorities would appear to apply, by analogy, to the dismissal of an action as a sanction for the failure of plaintiff to appear at a case management or other pretrial conference because neither Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 2.30, authorizing sanctions, nor Sigala v. Anaheim City School Dist. (1993) 15 Cal. App. 4th 661, 673-674, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 38 , overturning an excessive sanction, is limited to settlement conferences.

[a] Insufficient Notice

Sigala v. Anaheim City School Dist. (1993) 15 Cal. App. 4th 661, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 38 , involved an action by a student against a school district for damages plaintiff sustained in a playground injury when she was grabbed by another student and fell from "monkey bars." After plaintiff was awarded $20,250 in arbitration, the defendants moved for trial de novo. At the first mandatory settlement conference, defense counsel and the defendants' representative (actually a representative of a statutorily-authorized joint power authority (JPA) made up of self-insuring public entities including the defendant, which had control over settlement of any suits against its members) indicated that the defendants' decision was to offer nothing. The judge indicated that the case had value and asked the representative to so inform the JPA. At the continued conference, the representative reaffirmed the JPA's no offer position.

At a subsequent mandatory settlement conference before a different judge, the JPA's representative again had no authority to settle. The judge continued the conference to the same afternoon, ordered that all 15 members of the JPA board be present, and announced that a sanctions hearing, to be held pursuant to former Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 222 and 227 (now see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 3.1380 and 2.30), Code Civ. Proc. § 128.5, and local rules, would immediately follow the continued settlement hearing. No member of the JPA board appeared, and the court announced a tentative ruling to strike the request for a trial de novo.

At the ensuing show cause hearing the JPA president, in a declaration, outlined the JPA's position, including the point that once the JPA board voted to defend the case, there was no one individual who could have authorized settlement and that the board could not have legally met at the settlement conference due to the open meeting laws requiring 72-hour notice of meetings. The court struck the request for trial de novo and entered judgment on the arbitration award because of defendants' failure to attend any of the conferences or to explain why they would not come. The defendants appealed.

The court of appeal first strongly condemned the failure to appear at the conferences, rejecting the defendant's arguments that the structure of the JPA made compliance impossible (15 Cal. App. 4th 661, 668-673) . The court then stated that Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule former 227 (now see Rule 2.30), former Gov. Code § 68609 (now see Gov. Code § 68608(b)), and local rules could provide a basis for imposing the ultimate sanction, such as striking the answer (15 Cal. App. 4th 661, 673) . However, the court went on to hold that the sanction imposed, striking the request for trial de novo, deprived the defendants of their day in court without sufficient notice. One reason for the holding was that the defendants had been informed that the hearing would involve the plaintiff's attorney's fees and that the sanctions hearing would be held pursuant to Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules former 222 and 227 (now see Rules 3.1380 and 2.30), Code Civ. Proc. § 128.5, and two specified Orange County Rules. Although Rule former 227 (now see Rule 2.30) clearly provides for monetary sanctions, the court noted that there was no indication that the dismissal sanction should be available unless there were earlier refusals to comply with court orders or prior sanctions imposed. Thus the court held that the defendants were entitled to another chance to have the JPA comply with the law and court orders (15 Cal. App. 4th 661, 673-674) . The court reversed the order striking the request for trial de novo and directed the trial court to set a hearing to impose monetary sanctions (15 Cal. App. 4th 661, 674) .

The concurring opinion discusses how public entity litigants can effectively work cooperatively with the courts in regard to settlement conferences (15 Cal. App. 4th 661, 674-676) .

THE COURT _____ [SHOULD VACATE AND SET ASIDE THE ORDER or PROPERLY VACATED AND SET ASIDE THE ORDER or ERRED IN] IMPOSING SANCTIONS FOR FAILURE TO HAVE APPEARED AT THE SETTLEMENT CONFERENCE BECAUSE THE ORDER WAS BEYOND THE COURT'S JURISDICTION IN THAT THE CONFERENCE WAS VOLUNTARY.

A. Sanction Through Contempt Power Is Inapplicable to Voluntary Settlement Conference. A voluntary settlement conference is not subject to Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1380 or Rule 2.30, nor is it a "process" or "proceeding" as referred to in Code of Civil Procedure Section 1209 in its explanation of the court's contempt authority, and thus, a court order imposing sanctions based on a voluntary settlement conference is in excess of that court's jurisdiction (*Raygoza v. [a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a party's contention that sanctions should be imposed against a party who did not participate in good faith in a settlement conference by sending a representative lacking sufficient settlement authority. The ground of opposition is that the conference was a voluntary settlement conference rather than one that is required by the California Rules of Court, local court rule, or statute, and that the imposition of sanctions is, therefore, beyond the jurisdiction of the court. These points and authorities may be used alone or combined with a memorandum relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue regarding the propriety of the sanction imposed or sought to be imposed. For example, the points and authorities may be combined with a memorandum in opposition to a motion by the plaintiff for an order striking the defendant's answer and entering the defendant's default. They may also be cited in an appellate brief, or in any other proceeding in which the issue may arise.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. The argument will depend on the specific procedural context in which the issue arises.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Sanction Through Contempt Power Is Inapplicable to Voluntary Settlement Conference

Raygoza v. Betteravia Farms (1987) 193 Cal. App. 3d 1592, 239 Cal. Rptr. 188 , was an action arising out of an automobile accident. The parties agreed to have a voluntary settlement conference before a retired superior court judge, whose fees would be split between the parties. Because at the conference the judge suggested a settlement figure that exceeded the settlement authority of the representative of defendant's insurance company, the voluntary settlement conference was continued. Shortly thereafter, plaintiffs' attorney notified defendant she would not attend any further voluntary settlement conferences because of the representative's lack of sufficient settlement authority, and filed a motion for sanctions seeking attorney's fees and costs. Defendant's offer to resolve the motion for sanctions and pay the judge's fees was accepted by plaintiffs, and the parties agreed to take the motion for sanctions off the court calendar. The matter was not removed, and when counsel for defendant heard the motion called, he requested the matter be taken off calendar. The court denied the request, continued the matter, and ordered defendant to show cause why additional sanctions should not be imposed. After the hearing, the trial court ordered defendant to pay to the county $500 for failing to participate in good faith at the voluntary settlement conference. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, finding that the trial court acted in excess of its jurisdiction (193 Cal. App. 3d 1592, 1595) . Initially the court said that if a voluntary settlement conference, not required by the rules or by court order, is held by the parties, the court has no authority to make an order of reimbursement or payment to the county pursuant to former Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 227 (now see Rule 2.30). The court then went on to explain that former Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 222 (now see Rule 3.1380) pertains only to mandatory or voluntary settlement conferences supervised by the court. It does not apply to a voluntary settlement conference before a private person arranged by the parties without request of or notice to the court, when it was not on the court calendar and when the parties were not requested to and did not file settlement conference statements, and was held without use of the court's facilities and at no cost to the county (193 Cal. App. 3d 1592, 1595-1596) . The court found that the power of the court to impose sanctions is not limitless, but extends only as allowed by its power to punish for contempt or pursuant to authorization by statute or rule of court. It analyzed terms "process" and "proceedings" as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 1209, which sets forth the court's contempt authority, and said they refer to something done or to be done in a court of justice or before a judicial officer. Thus, the court concluded that the order imposing sanction was not authorized because the voluntary settlement conference did not involve any court order or proceeding (193 Cal. App. 3d 1592, 1596) .

[b] Order of Payment Is Inapplicable to Voluntary Settlement Conference

The facts and procedural background of Raygoza v. Betteravia Farms (1987) 193 Cal. App. 3d 1592, 239 Cal. Rptr. 188 , are set forth in [a], above.

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a motion for an order that a case has precedence or is entitled to a preference in setting it for a case management conference or trial. The form should be combined with additional points and authorities showing the particular legal basis for precedence or preference. In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in §§ 180.57 and 180.60 -180.62, showing entitlement to precedence, and the points and authorities set out in §§ 180.63 -180.65, showing entitlement to preference, may be combined with this form to establish good cause. For additional statutory bases for priority, which may be used in an appropriate case to establish precedence, see § 180.02[4]. The matter of whether an action is entitled to precedence or preference is generally addressed at the initial case management conference. [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.722]. An additional case management conference may be held at any time; however, a party should be required to appear at an additional conference only if an appearance is necessary for the effective management of the case [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.723].

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, if the case is entitled to an absolute precedence by statute, counsel should argue facts showing that case comes within the statutory provision. If the case is entitled to a precedence or preference that is conditional or discretionary with the court, counsel should argue that the facts set out in the supporting declaration or affidavit show that the condition has been met or that the court should exercise its discretion by granting the motion.

[b] Cases Entitled to Priority

A case may be entitled to priority because (1) of the nature of the case [see, e.g., §§ 180.57, 180.60 -180.62], (2) of the age or physical condition of a party [see §§ 180.56, 180.63, 180.64], or (3) the interests of justice require it [see § 180.65]. A mere statement of the nature of the case will frequently reveal whether the case is entitled to legal precedence. If it is clear that the case is so entitled, a motion to establish it is normally unnecessary. However, if evidence outside the court's records is required to establish that the case has precedence or is entitled to a preference, counsel may wish to move by noticed motion for an order establishing it. In certain cases in which a preference or a precedence is sought, a motion is expressly required by statute [see, e.g., Code Civ. Proc. §§ 36 (see § 180.70), 1062.3(b) (see §§ 180.60 -180.65)].

The precedence or preference granted a case may be absolute in the sense that a statute provides that the case takes precedence over all other civil cases except older matters of the same character and matters or actions to which special precedence is given by law [see, e.g., Code Civ. Proc. §§ 527(e) (injunction actions), 1179a (proceedings in unlawful detainer, forcible entry, or forcible detainer to recover possession of real property; see § 180.62)]. Or, the precedence or preference may be conditional or discretionary with the court [see, e.g., Code Civ. Proc. §§ 36(e) (interests of justice served by granting preference; see § 180.65), 1062.3(b) (precedence of action seeking relief in addition to declaratory relief; see § 180.70)].

Facts necessary to enable the court to determine whether the precedence or preference is absolute or whether, in the case of a conditional precedence or preference, the condition has been met, or to enable the court to exercise its discretion in granting or denying the precedence or preference may not appear in the court's records or file in the case. If they don't, such facts should be set forth in an accompanying affidavit or declaration under penalty of perjury, to which counsel may refer in the memorandum of points and authorities.

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a motion to advance, reset, or specially set a case for case management conference or for trial. The memorandum should include points and authorities establishing that good cause exists for granting the motion under the circumstances of the particular case [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1335(b)]. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.723 does not expressly require good cause for granting a request for a case management conference. However, a party should be required to appear at an additional conference only if an appearance is necessary for the effective management of the case. In determining whether to hold an additional conference, the court will consider each case individually on its own merits [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.723]. Thus, it would be good practice to support the motion with good cause. In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in §§ 180.56, 180.57, 180.60 -180.65 may be combined with this form to establish good cause. For additional statutory bases for priority, which may be used in an appropriate case to establish good cause, see § 180.02[4].

With appropriate modifications, the form may also be used to oppose a motion to continue a trial [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 3.723, 3.1332; see also Ch. 48, Continuance of Proceedings].

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. In addition, the moving party must attach affidavits or declarations stating any facts relied on for a showing of good cause in support of a motion to advance, reset, or specially set a trial date [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1335(b)]. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.723 does not expressly require affidavits or declarations in support of a request for a case management conference. However, a party should be required to appear at an additional conference only if an appearance is necessary for the effective management of the case [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.723]. Therefore, it would be good practice to submit affidavits or declarations when requesting to advance, reset, or specially set the conference.

[b] Good Cause

A motion to advance, reset, or specially set a case for trial will be granted only on a showing of good cause [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1335(b)]. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.723 does not expressly require good cause for granting a request for a case management conference. However, a party should be required to appear at an additional conference only if an appearance is necessary for the effective management of the case [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.723]. Thus, it would be good practice to support the motion with good cause when requesting to advance, reset, or specially set the conference. Good cause usually consists of entitlement to precedence or preference. For example, a plaintiff may seek to have his or her case set specially for trial in order to avoid mandatory dismissal under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 583.310, 583.360, by attempting to show a preference in the interests of justice under Code Civ. Proc. § 36(e) [see Dick v. Superior Court (1986) 185 Cal. App. 3d 1159, 1164-1168, 230 Cal. Rptr. 297 (discussed in § 180.65[3][a])].

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a motion to advance, reset, or specially set a case for case management conference or for trial, on the ground that the advanced age and physical infirmity of the moving party may adversely affect that party's ability to present his or her case in the event of a delay [cf. Code Civ. Proc. § 36(a), (d); see also § 180.63]. With appropriate modifications, the form may also be used to oppose a motion for continuance of trial [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1332(a); see also Ch. 48, Continuance of Proceedings].

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. In addition, the moving party must attach affidavits or declarations stating any facts relied on for a showing of good cause in support of a motion to advance, reset, or specially set a trial date [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1335(b)]. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.723 does not expressly require affidavits or declarations in support of a request for a case management conference. However, a party should be required to appear at an additional conference only if an appearance is necessary for the effective management of the case [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.723]. Therefore, it would be good practice to submit affidavits or declarations when requesting to advance, reset, or specially set the conference.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Advancement Is Required by Age and Infirmity

In Moffitt v. Ford Motor Co. (1931) 115 Cal. App. 499, 1 P.2d 994 , plaintiff sued defendant for damages arising from personal injuries. Prior to trial, the trial court made a ruling that was favorable to plaintiff and defendant appealed. Plaintiff requested the court of appeal to either affirm the judgment of the trial court or advance the hearing of the appeal. The court denied the motion to affirm judgment, but decided that good cause existed to advance the case to the next regular calendar. The court reasoned that plaintiff was elderly and in poor health, and that, therefore, the appeal should be determined speedily so that if a trial was necessary, it could take place while plaintiff was still in a good enough physical and mental condition to present her case (115 Cal. App. 499, 500-501) .

THE MOTION OF _____ [specify moving party, e.g., PLAINTIFF] TO _____ [ADVANCE or RESET or SPECIALLY SET] THE [CASE MANAGEMENT CONFERENCE or TRIAL] DATE SHOULD BE GRANTED BECAUSE THE CASE IS ENTITLED TO STATUTORY PRIORITY UNDER SECTION 1260.010 OF THE CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE.

A. Judicial Power to Advance, Reset, or Specially Set Case Management Conference or Trial Date. [See § 180.55[1], Paragraph A.].

B. Precedence of Eminent Domain Proceedings. Eminent domain proceedings under Sections 1230.010 through 1273.050 of the Code of Civil Procedure take precedence over all other civil actions in the matter of setting the same for hearing or trial in order that such proceedings shall be quickly heard and determined (*Code Civ. [a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a motion to advance, reset, or specially set a case for case management trial, on the ground that the case is entitled to priority under Code Civ. Proc. § 1260.010. With appropriate modifications, the form may also be used to oppose a motion to continue a case management conference or trial [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1332(b); see also Ch. 48, Continuance of Proceedings].

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. In addition, the moving party must attach affidavits or declarations stating any facts relied on for a showing of good cause in support of a motion to advance, reset, or specially set a trial date [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1335(b)]. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.723 does not expressly require affidavits or declarations in support of a request for a case management conference. However, a party should be required to appear at an additional conference only if an appearance is necessary for the effective management of the case [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.723]. Therefore, it would be good practice to submit affidavits or declarations when requesting to advance, reset, or specially set the conference.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Advancement Is Proper in Eminent Domain Proceeding

Swartzman v. Superior Court (1964) 231 Cal. App. 2d 195, 41 Cal. Rptr. 721 , arose out of a proceeding in eminent domain brought by the state on October 3, 1963. On July 15, 1964, the state filed a motion to set the date of pretrial proceedings and trial prior to October 1, in an attempt to advance the proceeding to take advantage of the former rule that if an eminent domain case is tried within one year, the value of the property is its value on the date of summons [see former Code Civ. Proc. § 1249 (repealed and reenacted as Code Civ. Proc. § 1263.120, which assigns the date of commencement of the proceeding as the date of valuation)]. The trial court granted the motion and set pretrial hearings for August 19 and September 18 and the trial for September 30. Defendant petitioned for a writ of prohibition and other relief.

The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's grant of the advancement, holding that advancement is an appropriate means to accelerate eminent domain proceedings under former Code Civ. Proc. § 1264 (repealed and substantially reenacted as Code Civ. Proc. § 1260.010)]. The court pointed out that in another eminent domain case, County of San Mateo v. Bartole (1960) 184 Cal. App. 2d 422, 437, 7 Cal. Rptr. 569 , trial settings that allowed only 31 days in which to hold pretrial and begin the trial were held proper on appeal, whereas in the instant case defendants had 59 days after the setting to prepare for pretrial and 71 to prepare for trial. The court of appeal held that the special setting procedures of former Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 209(a) and 225 [see now Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 3.723, 3.1335], provided an appropriate means to fulfill statutory requirements that certain proceedings be given preference over other civil actions where, under the circumstances, the time available to defendant to prepare is adequate (231 Cal. App. 2d 195, 199) .

§ 180.60 Supporting Contention That Case Is Entitled to Priority--Action Is by Taxpayer to Enjoin Public Improvement Project [Code Civ. Proc. § 526a]

[The following may be combined with the points and authorities in § 180.50[1] or § 180.55[1].]

THIS IS AN ACTION BY A TAXPAYER TO ENJOIN A PUBLIC IMPROVEMENT PROJECT AND PURSUANT TO SECTION 526a OF THE CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE IS ENTITLED TO SPECIAL PRECEDENCE IN SETTING IT FOR TRIAL.

A. Precedence of Taxpayer's Action to Enjoin Public Improvement. An action to enjoin a public improvement project pursuant to Section 526a of the Code of Civil Procedure, relating to taxpayers' actions to restrain and prevent any illegal expenditure of, waste of, or injury to, the estate, funds, or other property of a county, town, city, or city and county of California, is entitled to special precedence over all civil matters on the calendar of the court except those matters to which equal precedence on the calendar is granted by law (Code Civ. Proc. § 526a).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that the action is entitled to precedence on the court's calendar and may be submitted in combination with the points and authorities set out in § 180.50[1] or § 180.55[1]. The form sets out the point that a taxpayer's action brought under Code Civ. Proc. § 526a to enjoin a public improvement project is entitled pursuant to that section to precedence in setting for a trial setting conference or trial.

These points and authorities may also be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities in other procedural contexts in which counsel wishes to make the contention that the case is entitled to a precedence, for example, in support of a petition for writ of mandate to compel the trial court to grant a precedence which it has improperly refused.

Counsel should insert facts showing that the case comes within the provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 526a.

[The following may be combined with the points and authorities in § 180.50[1] or § 180.55[1].]

THIS IS AN ACTION FOR DECLARATORY RELIEF IN WHICH NO RELIEF IN ADDITION TO A DECLARATION OF THE RIGHTS AND DUTIES OF THE PARTIES IS SOUGHT. IT IS, THEREFORE, ENTITLED BY LAW TO SPECIAL PRECEDENCE IN SETTING IT FOR TRIAL.

A. Precedence of Declaratory Relief Action. Except as provided in Section 1062.3(b) of the Code of Civil Procedure, relating to actions seeking relief in addition to a declaration of the rights and duties of the parties, an action for declaratory relief is required to be set for trial at the earliest possible date and takes special precedence over all other cases, except older matters of the same character and matters to which special precedence may be given by law (Code Civ. Proc. § 1062.3(a)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that the action is entitled to precedence on the court's calendar and may be submitted in combination with the points and authorities in § 180.50[1] or § 180.55[1]. The form sets out the point that an action for declaratory relief that seeks no relief in addition to a declaration of the rights and duties of the parties is entitled under Code Civ. Proc. § 1062.3(a) to precedence in setting for trial. This form may also be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities in other procedural contexts in which counsel wishes to make the contention that the case is entitled to a precedence, for example, in support of a petition for writ of mandate to compel the trial court to grant a precedence which it has improperly refused.

Counsel should insert facts showing that the case is one for declaratory relief under Code Civ. Proc. § 1060 and comes within the provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 1062.3(a).

[The following may be combined with the points and authorities in § 180.50[1] or § 180.55[1].]

THIS IS A PROCEEDING IN UNLAWFUL DETAINER TO RECOVER THE POSSESSION OF REAL PROPERTY. IT IS, THEREFORE, ENTITLED BY LAW TO PRECEDENCE IN SETTING IT FOR TRIAL.

A. Precedence of Unlawful Detainer Proceeding. A proceeding in unlawful detainer to recover possession of real property is entitled to precedence over all other civil actions, except actions to which special precedence is given by law, in the matter of setting the proceeding for hearing or trial, and in hearing the same, to the end that all such actions shall be quickly heard and determined (Code Civ. Proc. § 1179a; see Mobil Oil Corp. v. Superior Court (1978) 79 Cal. App. 3d 486, 494, 145 Cal. Rptr. 17 ; *Lori, Ltd., Inc. v. Superior Court (1946) 74 Cal. [a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that the case is entitled to precedence on the court's calendar and may be submitted in combination with the points and authorities in § 180.50[1] or § 180.55[1]. The form sets out the point that an unlawful detainer proceeding is entitled under Code Civ. Proc. § 1179a to precedence in setting for a trial and trial. These points and authorities may also be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities in other procedural contexts in which counsel wishes to make the contention that the case is entitled to a precedence, for example, in support of a petition for writ of mandate to compel the trial court to grant a precedence which it has improperly refused.

Counsel should insert argument showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the point of law stated. That is, counsel should argue facts showing that the case is one for unlawful detainer and comes within the provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 1179a.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Precedence of Unlawful Detainer Proceeding

Mobil Oil Corp. v. Superior Court (1978) 79 Cal. App. 3d 486, 145 Cal. Rptr. 17 , was a proceeding in mandate to compel the trial court to vacate its order staying a proceeding in unlawful detainer brought by the lessor against the lessee to recover possession of a gasoline service station after termination of the lease. The trial court, on motion of the lessee, had stayed the unlawful detainer proceeding pending determination of a prior action brought in the same court by the lessee against the lessor in which the lessee sought to establish his rights to continue operation of the service station on the leased premises and in which the complaint included causes of action for declaratory relief and for unfair trade practices. At the time of the hearing on the motion to stay, the lessee's action for unfair trade practices requested relief on behalf of all of the lessor's service station operators. After the petition for writ of mandate had been filed, the lessee filed a third amended complaint which, among other things, requested the court to enjoin the lessor from unlawfully terminating the franchise or from filing a proceeding in unlawful detainer for such purpose.

The court of appeal held that the trial court's order staying the unlawful detainer proceeding constituted an abuse of discretion in that there were no facts presented to the trial court that would justify the granting of a stay and ordered issuance of a peremptory writ of mandate (79 Cal. App. 3d 486, 495) . The court, citing Code Civ. Proc. § 1179a and Lori, Ltd., Inc. v. Superior Court (1946) 74 Cal. App. 2d 442, 443, 168 P.2d 982 (discussed below), pointed out that as part of the general statutory plan to provide for speedy disposition of unlawful detainer proceedings the case was entitled to unqualified preference in trial setting (79 Cal. App. 3d 486, 494) .

Neither the statement in Mobil Oil that an unlawful detainer proceeding is entitled to precedence, based as it is on statute, nor the holding that staying an unlawful detainer proceeding pending determination of another action is an abuse of discretion in the absence of a proper showing justifying the stay has been expressly repudiated by the Supreme Court or by other courts of appeal. Nevertheless, doubt has been cast on the case insofar as it held the showing there made was insufficient. In Asuncion v. Superior Court (1980) 108 Cal. App. 3d 141, 166 Cal. Rptr. 306 , the court of appeal said it was unclear why the Mobil Oil court reached the conclusion it did but that the court apparently relied on a combination of the following factors: (1) the need to preserve the summary nature of unlawful detainer; (2) the lessee's failure to seek a preliminary injunction in his action against the lessor; and (3) the lessee's lengthy and complex representative action, which imposed a heavy burden on the evicting franchiser by delaying its action.

Asuncion did not directly involve the issue as to the precedence of an unlawful detainer proceeding on the trial calendar. Rather, it involved the issue as to whether the municipal or superior court had subject matter jurisdiction of an unlawful detainer proceeding involving residential property. The proceeding had been brought by a corporation which had acquired title to the homeowners' property through a loan transaction after the homeowners had defaulted on a prior loan. The proceeding had been commenced in a municipal court and transferred to the superior court on the homeowners' motion on the ground that title to real property worth more than the jurisdictional maximum of the municipal court was in issue. Also, the homeowners had filed an action in the superior court against plaintiff corporation to quiet title to the same property and for other relief based on fraud, usury, and other causes. The superior court, on the corporation's motion, retransferred the unlawful detainer proceeding to the municipal court. The homeowners then sought a writ of mandate to compel the superior court to take jurisdiction. The court of appeal ordered issuance of a peremptory writ of mandate directing the superior court to take and retain jurisdiction over the matter so long as substantive issues of ownership remained to be litigated (108 Cal. App. 3d 141, 147) . The court said it was generally recognized that the summary unlawful detainer proceeding is not a suitable vehicle to try complicated ownership issues involving assertions of fraud and deceptive practices (108 Cal. App. 3d 141, 144) . However, the court held that the homeowners could not be evicted, consistent with due process guarantees, without being permitted to raise the affirmative defenses which, if proved, would maintain their possession and ownership. The court accordingly held that title to the property was inevitably in issue in the unlawful detainer proceeding, and the proceeding was not within the subject matter jurisdiction of the municipal court (108 Cal. App. 3d 141, 146) . The court said it would be premature for it to determine the effect of its decision on the homeowners' right to a stay of the unlawful detainer proceeding. Nevertheless, the court noted that Mobil Oil involved a commercial, rather than a residential, eviction, that insofar as the preliminary injunction question was concerned, the homeowners had not yet had the opportunity to present facts in the trial court warranting either an injunction or a stay, and that in Mobil Oil the stay had already been issued on a record the appellate court perceived as inadequate (108 Cal. App. 3d 141, 146-147 fn. 1).

The reasoning of Asuncion was followed in Mehr v. Superior Court (1983) 139 Cal. App. 3d 1044 , l89 Cal. Rptr. 138. This was a mandate proceeding by defendant homeowners in an unlawful detainer proceeding under Code Civ. Proc. § 1161a to compel the trial court to stay execution pending determination of their appeal from the judgment in favor of plaintiff. Plaintiff claimed ownership of the house by virtue of his purchase of it at a trustee's sale. After the complaint was filed, the homeowners initiated a separate action against plaintiff to set aside the trustee's deed on the ground of fraud, and asserted a similar claim by way of affirmative defense in the unlawful detainer proceeding. The unlawful detainer proceeding was transferred to superior court, where the homeowners' motion to consolidate was denied. Their motion for a continuance of the unlawful detainer proceeding so that they might seek a writ from a higher court was also denied. Judgment was entered for plaintiff in the unlawful detainer proceeding and plaintiff was awarded the sum of $950 per month up until the date of judgment. The trial court denied defendants' motion for a stay pending appeal. The court of appeal denied the petition for writ of mandate, but the Supreme Court granted a hearing, retransferred the case to the court of appeal with directions to issue an alternative writ of mandate, and ordered that the stay, issued by the Supreme Court pending determination of the petition for hearing and requiring defendants to continue paying plaintiff $950 per month, remain in effect pending final determination of the matter. The court of appeal examined the affirmative defenses raised in the unlawful detainer proceeding and concluded that the appeal from the judgment presented a substantial question as to the alleged fraudulent acquisition of title. It appeared from the record that the homeowners had shown a substantial question would be raised on the appeal, that they would suffer irreparable injury by an eviction from their home prior to the determination of the appeal, and that plaintiff would not be sorely prejudiced if protected by a monthly payment from defendants in an amount equal to the rental value of the premises. The court held that the trial court had abused its discretion in denying defendants' motion for a stay of execution pending appeal, and directed that a writ of mandate be issued to compel the trial court to set aside its order denying the motion and to grant the motion under such conditions as the trial court might deem proper (139 Cal. App. 3d 1044, 1050) .

Lori, Ltd., Inc. v. Superior Court (1946) 74 Cal. App. 2d 442, 168 P.2d 982 , was a proceeding in mandate to compel the trial court to grant precedence to an unlawful detainer proceeding. The trial court had signified its intention to continue the trial of the case beyond the date to which it was previously assigned abiding final judgment in a reformation action between the parties. The court of appeal quoted the provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 1179a, providing that proceedings brought to recover possession of real property are entitled to precedence, and directed issuance of the peremptory writ (74 Cal. App. 2d 442, 443) .

Cohen v. Superior Court (1967) 248 Cal. App. 2d 551, 56 Cal. Rptr. 813 , was a mandate proceeding brought by the plaintiff in an unlawful detainer proceeding to compel the trial court to give precedence to the case on the pretrial calendar in order to expedite setting it for trial. Plaintiff's motion to advance the case on the pretrial calendar had been denied by the trial court on defendants' representation that they had surrendered possession of the premises and that the only issue was damages. Plaintiff claimed the tenants' failure to remove their equipment from the premises deprived her of possession. The court of appeal granted a peremptory writ of mandate directing respondent court to vacate and set aside orders entered on petitioner's motions to advance and to comply with the provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 1179a in setting the action on the pretrial calendar and thereafter for trial (248 Cal. App. 2d 551, 554) . The court said the issue of possession could be resolved only by a determination of the disputed question of the title to the property that remained in the premises and, if it were found to belong to the tenants, the additional question of whether their failure to remove it constituted an unwarranted interference with the landlord's right to possession. The court held the case was entitled to precedence for trial of the continuing issue of whether plaintiff's right to possession was being violated, and to that end should receive precedence on the pretrial calendar (248 Cal. App. 2d 551, 554) .

In Kartheiser v. Superior Court (1959) 174 Cal. App. 2d 617, 345 P.2d 135 , the court of appeal issued a writ of mandate directing the trial court to vacate its order continuing an unlawful detainer proceeding arising out of the holding over of property after sale under a power of sale in a trust deed and notice to quit pending determination by the Supreme Court of an appeal from an adverse judgment in a declaratory relief action brought by the trustor to determine the validity of the trustee's sale. The court held that plaintiff's failure to invoke Code Civ. Proc. § 1166a (which at the time provided that plaintiff could obtain immediate possession of the premises by satisfying the court that defendant was insolvent and had no property sufficient to satisfy plaintiff's damages and on giving a sufficient undertaking) did not destroy or affect his right to priority under Code Civ. Proc. § 1179a (174 Cal. App. 2d 617, 621-622) .

§ 180.63 Supporting Contention That Case Is Entitled to Priority--Party Is Over 70 Years of Age or Not Expected to Survive Beyond Six Months [Code Civ. Proc. § 36(a), (d)]

[The following may be combined with the points and authorities in § 180.50[1] or § 180.55[1].]

THE CASE IS ENTITLED TO A PREFERENCE BECAUSE _____ [_____ (moving party, e.g., PLAINTIFF) HAS REACHED 70 YEARS OF AGE or _____ (identify party, e.g., DEFENDANT) IS NOT, AS A RESULT OF HIS/HER CONDITION, EXPECTED TO SURVIVE BEYOND SIX MONTHS AND THE INTERESTS OF JUSTICE WILL BE SERVED BY GRANTING THE PREFERENCE].

[EITHER, if moving party has reached 70 years of age]

A. Moving Party Reached 70 Years of Age. A civil action is entitled to preference on the motion of any party to that action who has reached the age of 70 years, if the court finds both (1) that the party has a substantial interest in the action as a whole and (2) that the health of the party is such that a preference is necessary to prevent prejudicing the party's interest in the litigation (Code Civ. Proc. § 36(a); Rice v. Superior Court (1982) 136 Cal. App. 3d 81, 84-89, 185 Cal. Rptr. 853 ; Vinokur v. Superior Court (1988) 198 Cal. App. 3d 500, 503, 243 Cal. Rptr. 683 ; Koch-Ash v. Superior Court (1986) 180 Cal. App. 3d 689, 694, 225 Cal. Rptr. 657).

B. "Shall" Is Mandatory. As used in Code Civ. Proc. § 36(a), "shall" is mandatory and not merely directory (Sprowl v. Superior Court (1990) 219 Cal. App. 3d 777, 780, 268 Cal. Rptr. 592 ; Swaithes v. Superior Court (1989) 212 Cal. App. 3d 1082, 1086, 261 Cal. Rptr. 41 ; Koch-Ash v. Superior Court (1986) 180 Cal. App. 3d 689, 694, 225 Cal. Rptr. 657 ; Rice v. Superior Court (1982) 136 Cal. App. 3d 81, 86-87, 185 Cal. Rptr. 853).

[OR, if moving party is not expected to survive beyond six months]

A. Party Not Expected to Survive Beyond Six Months. In its discretion, the court may grant a motion for preference served with the memorandum to set or the at-issue memorandum and accompanied by clear and convincing medical documentation which concludes that one of the parties suffers from an illness or condition raising substantial medical doubt of survival of that party beyond six months, and which satisfies the court that the interests of justice will be served by granting the preference (Code Civ. Proc. § 36(d); see Rice v. Superior Court (1982) 136 Cal. App. 3d 81, 93, 185 Cal. Rptr. 853).

[Optional] B. Motion Based on Ill Health of Adverse Party. A motion for trial preference under Code of Civil Procedure Section 36(d) may be based on the ill health of the adverse party (Heda v. Superior Court (1990) 225 Cal. App. 3d 525, 527-528, 275 Cal. Rptr. 136).

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that the case is entitled to a preference on the court's calendar and may be submitted in combination with the points and authorities in § 180.50[1] or § 180.55[1]. The form sets out the points that a case is entitled to, or may be granted, a preference on motion of a party showing that the moving party has reached 70 years of age, has a substantial interest in the action as a whole, and is in a state of health that makes a preference necessary to prevent prejudicing his or her interest in the litigation, or showing that a party suffers from an illness or condition raising substantial medical doubt of survival beyond six months and satisfying the court that the interests of justice will be served by granting a preference [see Code Civ. Proc. § 36(a), (d)].

The probative facts establishing those conclusions should be set forth in a supporting affidavit or declaration under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009, 2015.5]. In the case of a motion for preference under Code Civ. Proc. § 36(a) (party over 70 years of age), the affidavit or declaration may be signed by the attorney for the party seeking preference based on information and belief as to the medical diagnosis and prognosis of any party. That declaration is not admissible for any purpose other than a motion for preference under Code Civ. Proc. § 36(a) [Code Civ. Proc. § 36.5].

These points and authorities may also be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities in other procedural contexts in which counsel wishes to make the contention that the case is entitled to a preference, for example, in support of a petition for writ of mandate to compel the trial court to grant a preference which it has improperly refused.

Counsel should insert argument showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the point of law stated. Thus, counsel should argue that the facts set forth in the accompanying affidavit or declaration show that the required conditions have been met (moving party is 70 years of age or older, has a substantial interest in the action as a whole, and is in a state of health that requires the preference in order to prevent prejudicing his or her interest in the litigation, or a party is not expected to survive beyond six months and interests of justice will be served by granting preference, or, although party is not 70 or over or terminally ill or injured and case is not entitled to a statutory precedence, interests of justice will be served by granting it a preference).

[b] Setting for Trial

On the granting of a motion for preference, the clerk must set the case for trial not more than 120 days from that date and there may be no continuance beyond 120 days from the granting of the motion for preference except for physical disability of a party or a party's attorney, or on a showing of good cause stated in the record. No continuance may be for more than 15 days, nor may more than one continuance for physical disability be granted to any party [Code Civ. Proc. § 36(f); see Sprowl v. Superior Court (1990) 219 Cal. App. 3d 777, 780, 268 Cal. Rptr. 592 (as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 36, "shall" is mandatory)].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Moving Party Reached 70 Years of Age

Rice v. Superior Court (1982) 136 Cal. App. 3d 81, 185 Cal. Rptr. 853 , was a mandate proceeding by which petitioner, an 80-year-old woman, sought to compel the trial court in the underlying personal injury action, in which she was plaintiff, to allow her trial preference pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 36(a). The trial court had denied her motion for preference on the ground that she had obtained a preferential trial date in her prior, identical action, but had relinquished it when her counsel dismissed that action, filed the present action, and sought trial preference solely to circumvent the refusal of the master calendar judge in the prior action to grant a one-week continuance until petitioner's physical condition improved sufficiently for her to be present at trial. The court of appeal ordered issuance of a peremptory writ of mandate directing the trial court to grant immediately the motion for preference. The court quoted the provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 36(a) and concluded that the plaintiff satisfied both conditions of the statute entitling her to preference (136 Cal. App. 3d 81, 86) and held that the statute was mandatory (136 Cal. App. 3d 81, 86-87) . Note that Rice was decided prior to the 1990 amendments that added the third requirement, namely that the moving party's health be such as to require the preference in order to prevent prejudicing his or her interest in the litigation [see Code Civ. Proc. § 36(a)(2); Stats. 1990, ch. 428].

Vinokur v. Superior Court (1988) 198 Cal. App. 3d 500, 503, 243 Cal. Rptr. 683 , was a mandate proceeding in which the 75-year-old plaintiff sought to compel the superior court to grant her motion for trial preference made pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 36(a). The lower court had denied plaintiff's request and instead ordered the matter submitted to arbitration pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1141.11(a), which provided at that time that actions must be submitted to arbitration if the amount in controversy did not exceed $25,000. The lower court acknowledged a conflict between the provisions of the two statutes, but determined that Code Civ. Proc. § 1141.11(a) controlled over Code Civ. Proc. § 36(a), and denied the request for preferential setting on that basis. The court of appeal granted the writ, holding that Code Civ. Proc. § 36(a) is "mandatory and absolute in its application" (citing Rice v. Superior Court (1982) 136 Cal. App. 3d 81, 185 Cal. Rptr. 853 , discussed in [a], above) and is unquestionably the controlling authority over the arbitration statute, which was intended principally as a device for easing a growing burden on the courts (198 Cal. App. 3d 500, 503) .

In Koch-Ash v. Superior Court (1986) 180 Cal. App. 3d 689, 225 Cal. Rptr. 657 , numerous actions were filed and consolidated on behalf of several hundred plaintiffs; one action was severed to be tried as a test case, and petitioners' actions were severed to allow a preferential trial date pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 36(a). Defendants successfully moved to stay petitioners' trial on grounds, inter alia, that resolution of issues on appeal in the test action would by operation of collateral estoppel resolve issues common to petitioners' action, and that the trial court has inherent administrative power to regulate its trial calendar. The court of appeal issued a writ of mandate preventing the trial court from denying petitioners' preferential trial date, and held that Code Civ. Proc. § 36(a) is mandatory and absolute in its application and does not allow a trial court to exercise the inherent or statutory general administrative authority it would otherwise have (180 Cal. App. 3d 689, 694) .

In Sprowl v. Superior Court (1990) 219 Cal. App. 3d 777, 780, 268 Cal. Rptr. 592 , an action for personal injuries against an asbestos manufacturer, the trial court, after having granted plaintiff preference under Code Civ. Proc. § 36(a) and having set a trial date, repeatedly would vacate the date because of its extensive criminal case load and equally heavy backlog of asbestos personal injury cases, and set a new trial date. When the latest trial date was also vacated, almost a year and a half after the first trial date, plaintiff moved for reconsideration, objected to further continuance, and requested a trial date in accordance with Code Civ. Proc. § 36(f). The court denied the motion, and plaintiff petitioned for a write of mandate to compel the trial court to set an immediate date for trial. In granting the writ, the court said that the word "shall," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 36(a) and (f), is mandatory (219 Cal. App. 3d 777, 780) .

Swaithes v. Superior Court (1989) 212 Cal. App. 3d 1082, 261 Cal. Rptr. 41 , was a mandate proceeding arising out of a will contest in which the trial court had denied a motion for an order setting a trial date in accordance with Code Civ. Proc. § 36(a). The court held that the provisions of Code Civ. Proc. 36(a) applied to will contests by virtue of Code Civ. Proc. § 34 (now repealed, but formerly relating to the commencement and prosecution of, and the practice, procedure, and enforcement of judgments and decrees in, actions and proceedings in trial courts, except when special provision is made for particular courts, or when a general provision is not applicable by reason of jurisdictional limitations) and Prob. Code § 1000 (providing that except to the extent that the Probate Code provides applicable rules, the rules of practice applicable to civil actions apply to, and constitute the rules of practice in, proceedings under the Probate Code) (212 Cal. App. 3d 1082, 1084, 1086-1089) . In granting the writ directing the trial court to vacate its order denying the motion for preference and to grant the motion, the court of appeal said the clear intent of the Legislature is to safeguard litigants who qualify under Code Civ. Proc. § 36(a) against the acknowledged risk that death or incapacity might deprive them of the opportunity to have their case effectively tried and to obtain the appropriate recovery (212 Cal. App. 3d 1082, 1085) . The court said that (1) application of the statute does not violate the power of trial courts to regulate the order of their business; (2) mere inconvenience to the court or to other litigants is irrelevant; (3) failure to complete discovery or other pretrial matters does not affect the absolute substantive right to trial preference for those litigants who qualify for preference under Code Civ. Proc. § 36(a); (4) the trial court has no power to balance the differing interests of opposing litigants in applying the provision; and (5) the express legislative mandate for trial preference is a substantive public policy concern which supersedes such considerations (212 Cal. App. 3d 1082, 1085-1086) . The court concluded that, accordingly, Code Civ. Proc. § 36(a) is mandatory and absolute in its application in civil cases whenever the litigants are 70 (or more) years old (212 Cal. App. 3d 1082, 1086) .

Note that Swaithes was decided prior to the 1990 amendments that added the requirement that the moving party's health be such as to require the preference in order to prevent prejudicing his or her interest in the litigation [see Code Civ. Proc. § 36(a)(2); Stats. 1990, ch. 428].

Koch-Ash v. Superior Court (1986) 180 Cal. App. 3d 689, 225 Cal. Rptr. 657 , arose out of consolidated actions against various governmental entities for damages for injuries to residential properties resulting from landslides in which the actions of 12 plaintiffs over the age of 70 were severed from other actions and set for preferential trial date pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 36(a). The defendants' subsequent motion to stay the preferential trial on the ground that a related action was tried as a test case and appealed, and that the appeal would resolve numerous liability issues involved in the present actions was granted. In granting a writ of mandate directing the trial court to vacate the order staying the actions and to set them for trial, the court of appeal pointed out that Rice v. Superior Court (1982) 136 Cal. App. 3d 81, 86-87, 185 Cal. Rptr. 853 (discussed in [a], above), had held that Code Civ. Proc. § 36, is mandatory and absolute in its terms, and said that the trial court's authority and jurisdiction was limited by Code Civ. Proc. § 36(a) and (e) to setting trial for a date within 120 days of granting the preference motion (180 Cal. App. 3d 689, 694, 698) .

The facts and procedural background of Rice v. Superior Court (1982) 136 Cal. App. 3d 81, 185 Cal. Rptr. 853 , are discussed in [a], above. In granting a writ of mandate directing the trial court to immediately grant the motion for preference, the court of appeal held that the Legislature intended the provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 36(a) to be mandatory (136 Cal. App. 3d 81, 86-87) and that the statute does not impermissibly infringe on the administrative power of trial courts (136 Cal. App. 3d 81, 93) .

[c] Party Not Expected to Survive Beyond Six Months

The facts and procedural background of Rice v. Superior Court (1982) 136 Cal. App. 3d 81, 185 Cal. Rptr. 853 , are discussed in [a], above. Although holding that the granting of a preference under Code Civ. Proc. § 36(a) is mandatory, the court of appeal noted that the granting of a preference under former Code Civ. Proc. § 36(c) [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 36(d)] is discretionary. The court said it was true that Code Civ. Proc. § 36(a), like former Code Civ. Proc. § 36(c), is intended to protect the same substantive right of litigants to have a trial and the opportunity to recover the just measure of their injuries, yet former Code Civ. Proc. § 36(c) expressly grants discretion to the trial court. The court said that this disparate treatment was readily explained by recognizing that the age of a litigant is a fact easily established as a certainty while the degree of a party's physical disability and relationship to imminence of death is not, that courts should have discretion to review and reject sham medical reports that exaggerate the imminence of the death of a litigant to obtain trial preference, and that the statute confers that discretion (136 Cal. App. 3d 81, 93) .

It could be argued that the implication of the court's explanation is that if the medical report is not a sham and does not exaggerate the imminence of the litigant's death, and concludes, based on clear and convincing medical documentation, that the party suffers from an illness or condition raising a substantial medical doubt of survival of that party beyond six months, the motion for a preference should be granted, or, conversely stated, that the denial of the motion would be an abuse of discretion.

[d] Motion Based on Ill Health of Adverse Party

In Heda v. Superior Court (1990) 225 Cal. App. 3d 525, 275 Cal. Rptr. 136 , a medical malpractice action, plaintiff obtained an order directing defendant to answer plaintiff's interrogatories seeking information about doctors' diagnoses of defendant and to furnish health records to plaintiff. Plaintiff needed this information to support a motion for trial preference under Code Civ. Proc. § 36(d) based on defendant's ill health. Defendant petitioned the court of appeal for a writ of mandate seeking to compel the trial court to vacate the order. Although the court of appeal granted the writ on the ground the information sought was protected under the privacy provision of the state constitution [Cal. Const., art. I, § 1], the court rejected defendant's argument that Code Civ. Proc. § 36(d) only authorizes preference based on the moving party's ill health (225 Cal. App. 3d 525, 527) . The court quoted Code Civ. Proc. § 36(d), and stated that if the subdivision stood alone, defendant's interpretation would be doubtful at best. But when that subdivision is read in conjunction with Code Civ. Proc. § 36(a) (see [1], first Paragraph A, above), it shows that the Legislature knew how to restrict preference to a showing of the moving party's condition and that Code Civ. Proc. § 36(d) was not so restricted. The court concluded that plaintiff could move for preference based on the defendant's ill health (225 Cal. App. 3d 525, 528) .

§ 180.64 Supporting Contention That Case Is Entitled to Priority--Party Under 14 Years of Age in Wrongful Death or Personal Injury Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 36(b)]

[The following may be combined with the points and authorities in § 180.50[1] or § 180.55[1].]

THE CASE IS ENTITLED TO PREFERENCE BECAUSE IT IS AN ACTION TO RECOVER DAMAGES FOR _____ [WRONGFUL DEATH or PERSONAL INJURY] AND _____ [moving party, e.g., PLAINTIFF] IS UNDER 14 YEARS OF AGE.

A. Moving Party Under 14 Years of Age in Wrongful Death or Personal Injury Action. A civil action to recover damages for wrongful death or personal injury shall be entitled to preference upon the motion of any party to the action who is under the age of 14 years (Code Civ. Proc. § 36(b); see Peters v. Superior Court (1989) 212 Cal. App. 3d 218, 222-223, 260 Cal. Rptr. 426).

B. "Shall" Is Mandatory. "Shall," as used in Section 36(b) of the Code of Civil Procedure, is mandatory (Peters v. Superior Court (1989) 212 Cal. App. 3d 218, 224, 260 Cal. Rptr. 426).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that the case is entitled to preference on the court's calendar, and may be submitted in combination with the points and authorities in § 180.50[1] or § 180.55[1]. The ground for the contention is that the moving party is under 14 years of age and the suit is to recover damages for wrongful death or personal injury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 36(b)]. A civil case subject to Code Civ. Proc. § 36(a) (moving party is 70 years of age or older), however, is given preference over cases subject to Code Civ. Proc. § 36(b). The probative facts establishing those conclusions should be set forth in a supporting affidavit or declaration under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009, 2015.5]. These points and authorities may also be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities in other procedural contexts in which counsel wishes to contend that the case is entitled to preference, for example, in support of a petition for writ of mandate to compel the trial court to grant preference that it has improperly refused [see Peters v. Superior Court (1989) 212 Cal. App. 3d 218, 221, 227, 260 Cal. Rptr. 426] .

Counsel should insert argument showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the point of law stated. Thus, counsel should argue that the facts set forth in the accompanying affidavit or declaration show that the required conditions have been met (moving party is under 14 years of age and the suit is to recover damages for wrongful death or personal injury).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Moving Party Under 14 Years of Age in Wrongful Death or Personal Injury Action

Peters v. Superior Court (1989) 212 Cal. App. 3d 218, 260 Cal. Rptr. 426 , was a proceeding in mandate arising out of an action by a three-month-old child by his mother as guardian ad litem, and the child's parents, against a county and others for damages for medical malpractice. The child, who had been born at a county facility, suffered severe neurological birth injuries. The complaint was filed September 21, 1987. An at-issue memorandum was filed March 25, 1988, and, on February 17, 1989, plaintiffs moved for trial setting preference pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 36(b), (f). The motion was denied, and the child petitioned the court of appeal for a writ of mandate to compel the trial court to grant the motion. In granting the writ, the court of appeal quoted the provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 36(b) (212 Cal. App. 3d 218, 222-223) .

[b] "Shall" Is Mandatory

The procedural background of Peters v. Superior Court (1989) 212 Cal. App. 3d 218, 260 Cal. Rptr. 426 , is discussed in [a], above. In granting the writ, the court of appeal, after pointing out that there was no dispute that petitioner was under 14 years of age and had a substantial interest in the case as a whole [see § 180.60], held that "shall," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 36(b) is mandatory (212 Cal. App. 3d 218, 223-224) . The court further held that Code Civ. Proc. § 36(b) does not violate the separation of powers doctrine [see Cal. Const., art. III, § 3] (212 Cal. App. 3d 218, 224-225) or the equal protection guaranties of the federal and state constitutions [see U.S. Const., Amend. XIV; Cal. Const., art. I, § 7] (212 Cal. App. 3d 218, 225-226) , and that, because the real parties in interest (defendants) had not claimed in the trial court that they would have inadequate time to prepare for trial if the motion were granted, they lacked standing to raise the argument that Code Civ. Proc. § 36(b) and (f) violated due process [see U.S. Const., Amend. XIV; Cal. Const., art. I, § 7] because it deprived a defendant of adequate time to prepare for trial (212 Cal. App. 3d 218, 227) .

NOTE:

Code Civ. Proc. § 36(f) provides that on the granting of the motion for preference, the clerk shall set the case for trial not more than 120 days from that date and there shall be no continuance beyond 120 days from the granting of the motion for preference, except in the situations specified in the section. In 1989 the Legislature added Code Civ. Proc. § 36(g), which provides that, on the granting of a motion for preference pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 36(b), a party in an action based on a health provider's alleged professional negligence, as defined in Code Civ. Proc. § 364, shall receive a trial date not sooner than six months and not later than nine months from the date that the motion is granted (Stats. 1989, ch. 913).

§ 180.65 Supporting Contention That Case Is Entitled to Priority--Priority Is Required in Interests of Justice [Code Civ. Proc. § 36(e)]--To Avoid Mandatory Dismissal for Failure to Bring Action to Trial [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 583.310, 583.360]

[The following may be combined with the points and authorities in § 180.50[1] or § 180.55[1].]

THE CASE IS ENTITLED TO PREFERENCE BECAUSE THE INTERESTS OF JUSTICE WILL BE SERVED BY GRANTING SUCH PREFERENCE, IN THAT _____ [specify].

A. Interests of Justice Will Be Served. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the court may in its discretion grant a motion for preference served with the memorandum to set or the at-issue memorandum and accompanied by a showing of cause that satisfies the court that the interests of justice will be served by granting the preference (Code Civ. Proc. § 36(e)).

B. Cause for Granting Preference Is Shown When Preference Is Necessary to Avoid Mandatory Dismissal of Case and Other Factors Weigh in Favor of Trial on Merits. When a grant of preference is necessary to avoid mandatory dismissal of the case under Sections 583.310, 583.360 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and the party seeking the preference has shown reasonable diligence in prosecuting the action, while the opposing party has made no showing of prejudice, the possibility of mandatory dismissal is sufficient consideration to compel granting of relief under Code of Civil Procedure Section 36(e), and refusal to do so constitutes an abuse of discretion (Schmitt v. Superior Court (1989) 216 Cal. App. 3d 453, 456, 264 Cal. Rptr. 806 ; National Secretarial Service, Inc. v. Froehlich (1989) 210 Cal. App. 3d 510, 520-521, 258 Cal. Rptr. 506 ; Dick v. Superior Court (1986) 185 Cal. App. 3d 1159, 1164-1168, 230 Cal. Rptr. 297 (construing former Code Civ. Proc. § 36(d) [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 36(e)])).

[Optional] C. Motion to Specially Set After Trial Court Failed to Recalendar Case After Judicial Arbitration. When a motion to specially set is made after the trial court has failed to fulfill its duty under Code of Civil Procedure Section 1141.20 to calendar a trial de novo after judicial arbitration, the preference for disposition of an action on the merits incorporated in Code of Civil Procedure Section 583.130 is reinforced by Section 1141.20's mandate that plaintiffs not be penalized for undergoing arbitration (Howard v. Thrifty Drug & Discount Stores (1995) 10 Cal. 4th 424, 441-442, 41 Cal. Rptr. 2d 362, 895 P.2d 469).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that the case is entitled to preference on the court's calendar on the ground that, for cause shown, the interests of justice will be served by granting the preference [Code Civ. Proc. § 36(e)]. The particular cause shown is that a grant of preference is necessary to avoid mandatory dismissal for failure to bring the action to trial [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 583.310, 583.360], and the moving party has shown reasonable diligence in prosecuting the action, while the opposing party has made no showing of prejudice [see Dick v. Superior Court (1986) 185 Cal. App. 3d 1159, 1164-1168, 230 Cal. Rptr. 297] .

These points and authorities may be submitted in combination with the general points and authorities in § 180.50[1] or § 180.55[1], and, in an appropriate case, may also be combined with the more specific grounds for granting preference that are set out in §§ 180.54[1] and 180.55[1]. The probative facts establishing the foregoing conclusions should be set forth in a supporting affidavit or declaration under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009, 2015.5]. These points and authorities may also be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities in other procedural contexts in which counsel wishes to contend that the case is entitled to preference, for example, in support of a petition for writ of mandate to compel the trial court to grant preference that it has improperly refused.

If these points and authorities are combined with the general points and authorities in § 180.55[1], that is, in support of a motion to advance, reset, or specially set the case for trial, the court, in ruling on the motion, must consider the same factors that apply in ruling on a motion for discretionary dismissal for delay in prosecution [see Howard v. Thrifty Drug & Discount Stores (1995) 10 Cal. 4th 424, 440 n.6, 440-441, 41 Cal. Rptr. 2d 362, 895 P.2d 469 ; see also Code Civ. Proc. §§ 583.410-583.430; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1342 (governing motions for discretionary dismissal for delay in prosecution)].

Optional Paragraph C may be used when the motion to specially set is made in connection with setting a trial de novo after judicial arbitration under Code Civ. Proc. § 1141.10 et seq. Howard v. Thrifty Drug & Discount Stores (1995) 10 Cal. 4th 424, 41 Cal. Rptr. 2d 362, 895 P.2d 469 , provides an additional consideration that weighs in favor of granting the motion. However, the result in Howard was adverse to the party who would be using this form. It is essential that counsel, in adding argument and facts to this paragraph of the form, point to facts showing plaintiff's diligence in seeking to have the trial de novo set. Minimal diligence requires the plaintiff to point out the impending five-year deadline at the time of the trial de novo request or shortly thereafter [Howard v. Thrifty Drug & Discount Stores (1995) 10 Cal. 4th 424, 434-435, 41 Cal. Rptr. 2d 362, 895 P.2d 469] . Counsel should also argue the plaintiff's pre-arbitration diligence and the absence of any actual prejudice to the defendant, which are other factors the court may consider in determining whether or not to grant the motion [see Howard v. Thrifty Drug & Discount Stores (1995) 10 Cal. 4th 424, 442-443, 41 Cal. Rptr. 2d 362, 895 P.2d 469] .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Cause for Granting Preference Is Shown When Preference Is Necessary to Avoid Mandatory Dismissal of Case and Other Factors Weigh in Favor of Trial on Merits

Schmitt v. Superior Court (1989) 216 Cal. App. 3d 453, 264 Cal. Rptr. 806 , was a mandate proceeding arising out of the denial of a motion to restore a case to the active list and specially set it for trial on a date prior to the expiration of the five-year period set forth in Code Civ. Proc. § 583.310 for bringing an action to trial. Plaintiff's failure to bring the action to trial earlier was the result of a series of errors of commission and omission by the superior court. The court of appeal ordered issuance of a peremptory writ of mandate directing the trial court to vacate its order of denial and to grant the motion. After pointing out that granting or denying a motion under Code Civ. Proc. § 36 for trial preference lies in the sound discretion of the trial court, and the trial court does not have a mandatory duty to grant a motion for preferential trial setting solely to avoid the expiration of the five-year period, the court said that, nonetheless, the approach of the five-year limit is "a critical consideration" which here, in view of petitioner's reasonable diligence, the respondent's serious mishandling of the matter, and the absence of a showing of prejudice to the defendant of an accelerated trial date, compelled it to grant relief (216 Cal. App. 3d 453, 456) .

In National Secretarial Service, Inc. v. Froehlich (1989) 210 Cal. App. 3d 510, 258 Cal. Rptr. 506 , an action by a secretarial firm against an attorney personally and the attorney as a professional corporation to recover payment for secretarial services rendered, the appellate court said that the trial court may, in its discretion, grant a motion for special setting of a case for trial, citing Code Civ. Proc. § 36(e) (210 Cal. App. 3d 510, 521) . In affirming the judgment for plaintiff, the court held that the trial court did not abuse its discretion in granting plaintiff's motion to set the case specially for trial, which plaintiff made after the three-year discretionary dismissal period specified in Code Civ. Proc. § 583.420 had expired and about 10 weeks before the five-year period specified in Code Civ. Proc. § 583.310 would have expired, when there was no showing that the defendants were in any way prejudiced by the ruling and when practically all of the delay was caused either by the acts of the defendants themselves or clerical errors by the trial court over which the plaintiff had no control (210 Cal. App. 3d 510, 520-521, 521 n.11). The court further imposed sanctions against the defendants in the sum of $3,500, in addition to costs, payable to the plaintiff, for prosecuting a frivolous appeal, and, as required by former Bus. & Prof. Code § 6089(b) (now see Bus. & Prof. Code § 6086.7(a)(3)), stated it would forward a copy of its opinion to the State Bar.

Dick v. Superior Court (1986) 185 Cal. App. 3d 1159, 230 Cal. Rptr. 297 , was a mandate proceeding in which petitioners sought to compel the lower court to set their case specially for trial before the expiration of the five-year period for bringing an action to trial [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 583.310, 583.360]. During the last year before the period expired, a trial-setting conference was scheduled, but because of plaintiff's failure to notify all the parties, no trial was set. Plaintiff, who had already conducted discovery, filed a new at-issue memorandum and subsequently reached a tentative settlement agreement with some of the defendants. Forty-three days before the five-year period was to expire, plaintiff made a motion for trial preference, and the court, while finding that plaintiff had acted diligently in prosecuting the action up to that point, denied the motion, on the ground that it was filed too late and the court calendar was too congested. After a motion to reconsider was denied, plaintiff petitioned for mandate.

The court of appeal granted the writ, finding that the trial court had not applied the criteria set out in Salas v. Sears, Roebuck & Co. (1986) 42 Cal. 3d 342, 228 Cal. Rptr. 504, 721 P.2d 590 (discussed in § 180.81[3][a]) to determine whether a trial preference served the interests of justice under former Code Civ. Proc. § 36(d) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 36(e)) (185 Cal. App. 3d 1159, 1164-1165) . The court also found that plaintiff had diligently prosecuted the action up to the point of the motion for trial preference (185 Cal. App. 3d 1159, 1165-1166) . In addition, the party opposing the motion had made no showing of prejudice (185 Cal. App. 3d 1159, 1166-1167) . The court held that calendar congestion alone is no reason to deny a motion for trial preference (185 Cal. App. 3d 1159, 1167) . When plaintiff's motion is supported by a showing of diligence, the court went on to hold, and the party opposing the motion makes no showing of prejudice, the possibility of mandatory dismissal is sufficient consideration to compel granting of relief, and refusal to do so constitutes an abuse of discretion (185 Cal. App. 3d 1159, 1167-1168) .

[b] Motion to Specially Set After Trial Court Failed to Recalendar Case After Judicial Arbitration

The facts and procedural background of Howard v. Thrifty Drug & Discount Stores (1995) 10 Cal. 4th 424, 41 Cal. Rptr. 2d 362, 895 P.2d 469 , are discussed in § 180.81[3][a].

In affirming the trial court's denial of the plaintiff's motion to specially set to avoid the five-year mandatory dismissal deadline, the Court indicated that when a motion to specially set is made after the trial court has failed to fulfill its Code of Civil Procedure Section 1141.20 duty to calendar a trial de novo after judicial arbitration, the Code Civ. Proc. § 583.130 preference for disposition of an action on the merits is reinforced by Code Civ. Proc. § 1141.20's mandate that plaintiffs not be penalized for undergoing arbitration. The Court also held, however, that the trial court nonetheless retains discretion to deny a motion to specially set made by a plaintiff who has failed to promptly request a timely trial date in the post-arbitration period (10 Cal. 4th 424, 442-443) .

SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA, COUNTY OF _____

_____ [name], Plaintiff, vs. _____ [name], Defendant.	)))))))))	NO. _____ MEMORANDUM IN OPPOSITION TO MOTION FOR ORDER THAT CASE _____ IS ENTITLED TO PREFERENCE IN SETTING IT FOR _____ [A CASE MANAGEMENT CONFERENCE or TRIAL] Date: _____ Time: _____ Location: _____ [Judge: _____] Date Action Filed: _____ [Trial Date: _____]

THE MOTION FOR AN ORDER ESTABLISHING THAT THIS ACTION FOR DECLARATORY RELIEF HAS PRECEDENCE SHOULD BE DENIED BECAUSE THE COMPLAINT SEEKS RELIEF IN ADDITION TO A DECLARATION OF THE RIGHTS AND DUTIES OF THE PARTIES AND THERE IS NO SHOWING THAT A SPEEDY TRIAL IS REQUIRED.

A. Precedence of Declaratory Relief Action Seeking Additional Relief Is Conditional Only. The trial-setting precedence for a declaratory relief action that seeks relief in addition to a declaration of rights and duties is not absolute but conditional only on the making of the showing required by Section 1062.3(b) of the Code of Civil Procedure (Mobil Oil Corp. v. Superior Court (1978) 79 Cal. App. 3d 486, 494, 145 Cal. Rptr. 17).

B. Need for Speedy Trial Is Required to Be Shown. An action for declaratory relief in which the plaintiff seeks any relief in addition to a declaration of rights and duties takes precedence only on noticed motion and a showing that the action requires a speedy trial (Code Civ. Proc. § 1062.3(b)).

[2] Comments

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a motion to establish the precedence of a declaratory relief action under Code Civ. Proc. § 1062.3(a) in setting it on the calendar. The ground of opposition is that the case is not entitled to precedence because relief in addition to declaratory relief is sought and the moving party has failed to show that the case requires a speedy trial, as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 1062.3(b).

These points and authorities may also be combined with a memorandum in other procedural contexts in which counsel wishes to oppose the contention that the case is entitled to a precedence, for example, in opposition to a petition for writ of mandate that seeks to compel the trial court to grant a precedence which it has refused. They may also be combined with points and authorities in any other proceeding in which the special precedence of the case is an issue, for example, in a memorandum in support of a motion under Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1332(b), for a continuance or in opposition to a motion under Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1335 to advance, reset or specially set the case for trial on the ground it is entitled to a preference [see § 180.75].

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should include a discussion of the evidence, if any, in the affidavit or declaration submitted in support of the contention that the case is entitled to precedence and refer to any additional evidence in the counteraffidavit or counterdeclaration submitted in opposition showing that a speedy trial is not required.

[b] Action for Declaratory Relief Neither Necessary nor Proper

If the action for declaratory relief is neither necessary nor proper under the circumstances, the court may refuse to render a declaratory judgment. In that case, counsel may wish to attack the pleading in a summary manner. The courts should not temporize with the improper use of the declaratory procedure to gain a preferred position on the trial calendar, and undeserving cases should be disposed of in a summary manner as on demurrer or a motion for summary judgment [Travers v. Louden (1967) 254 Cal. App. 2d 926, 932, 62 Cal. Rptr. 654] . For memoranda of points and authorities supporting and opposing a demurrer or motion for summary judgment on this ground, see Ch. 182, Declaratory Relief .

[c] Related Points and Authorities

For memoranda of points and authorities generally supporting and opposing a motion to continue a case, see Ch. 48, Continuance of Proceedings .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Precedence of Declaratory Relief Action Seeking Additional Relief as Conditional Only

The facts and procedural background of Mobil Oil Corp. v. Superior Court (1978) 79 Cal. App. 3d 486, 145 Cal. Rptr.

17 , are discussed in § 180.62[3][a]. The lessee contended that his action against the lessor was also entitled to statutory precedence. The court of appeal said the fact that the lessor's unlawful detainer proceeding was entitled to unqualified preference in trial setting should, in determining the propriety of the trial court's stay order, be balanced against the statutory priorities of the causes of action alleged in the lessee's complaint against the lessor. Of the eight causes of action alleged in that complaint, a claim of trial priority was asserted only as to two, the cause of action for declaratory relief and the cause of action for unfair trade practices. With respect to the first of these, the court of appeal said that the trial setting preference for declaratory relief actions is not absolute. The Legislature chose to limit the preference in 1976 when it added subdivision (b) to former Code Civ. Proc. § 1062a [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 1062.3(b)], and this resulted in the present policy of this state to provide only a conditional priority to causes of action for declaratory relief when the cause of action is combined with other requests for relief (79 Cal. App. 3d 486, 494) . The court concluded that a stay of the lessor's proceeding in unlawful detainer on the ground that one of the causes of action alleged in the lessee's complaint was for declaratory relief would ignore the express conditions which the Legislature deemed necessary to include in former Code Civ. Proc. § 1062a(b) [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 1062.3(b)] and, in effect, would treat the cause of action for declaratory relief seeking relief in addition to a declaration of rights and duties as though it were given an absolute priority for trial, which it was not (79 Cal. App. 3d 486, 494-495) .

THE MOTION TO _____ [ADVANCE or RESET or SPECIALLY SET] THIS CASE FOR TRIAL SHOULD BE DENIED BECAUSE NO GOOD CAUSE FOR IT HAS BEEN SHOWN.

A. Conditions for Granting Motion to Advance, Reset, or Specially Set Trial Date. A motion to advance, reset, or specially set a case for trial may not be granted except on notice, on the filing of a declaration showing good cause, and on the appearance by the moving party at the hearing on the motion (Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1335).

[Optional] B. Advancement Is Not Matter of Right. There is no legal right to an advancement; the granting or denying of a motion for advancement rests in the sound discretion of the trial court (General Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1966) 245 Cal. App. 2d 366, 372, 53 Cal. Rptr. 777).

[Optional] C. Financial Condition Alone Does Not Constitute Good Cause for Advancement. The financial condition of a party and the fact that the party is depending on recovery in the case for money to pay obligations is no ground, in and of itself, for an advancement of a case on the calendar (see Moffitt v. Ford Motor Co. (1931) 115 Cal. App. 499, 500, 1 P.2d 994).

[Optional] D. Grant of Motion Will Leave Opposing Party With Inadequate Time to Prepare. A request to advance a case for trial may be denied when granting the request would leave the opposing party with an inadequate opportunity to prepare (see Swartzman v. Superior Court (1964) 231 Cal. App. 2d 195, 199, 41 Cal. Rptr. 721).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a motion to advance, reset, or specially set a case for trial. Paragraph A sets forth the conditions that must be satisfied before the court may grant the motion, foremost of which is a showing of good cause by the moving party. Optional Paragraph B may be used specifically in opposition to a motion to advance; it states the rule that an advancement is not a matter of right but rests within the court's discretion.

Additional points and authorities should be added to indicate the specific ground for opposition. In particular, additional points and authorities should be added, if possible, citing specific authority for the proposition that the moving party's showing does not constitute good cause for granting the motion. Optional Paragraphs C and D are examples. With appropriate modifications, this form may also be used to support a motion to continue a case management conference or a trial [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 3.723, 3.1332(b); see also Ch. 48, Continuance of Proceedings].

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. In addition, counsel may attach affidavits or declarations stating any facts relied on to oppose the motion.

These points and authorities may be used in an appropriate case to oppose a motion supported by the points and authorities set out in § 180.55.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Advancement Is Not Matter of Right

General Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1966) 245 Cal. App. 2d 366, 53 Cal. Rptr. 777 , arose out of a property damage dispute. Plaintiff insurance company filed an action for property damage due to fire loss on October 10, 1961. Defendant answered on October 28, 1961, and a memorandum to set was filed on November 10, 1961. Four continuances followed, and on March 19, 1964, plaintiff had the case taken off the calendar. Plaintiff's attorney prepared a new memorandum to set on April 8, 1966, but did not take steps to finalize it until July 27, 1966. A pretrial conference was scheduled for September 22. On September 12, plaintiff's attorney filed a notice of motion to be heard on September 22 to specially set the case for trial before October 10. The trial court denied the motion and plaintiff petitioned for a writ of mandate ordering the trial court to either set the cause of action for trial prior to October 10 or permit, at least, the swearing of one witness prior to that date.

The court of appeal denied the petition. On appeal, plaintiff contended that mandate is appropriate because the trial court had a duty to advance the trial or swear a witness. However, the court of appeal responded that such a writ is appropriate only if there is a clear legal right to be enforced or a clear legal duty to be performed. These rights and duties do not exist in the instant case. The granting or denying of a motion for advancement rests in the sound discretion of the trial court (245 Cal. App. 2d 366, 372) .

[b] Financial Condition Alone Does Not Constitute Good Cause for Advancement

The factual background of Moffitt v. Ford Motor Co. (1931) 115 Cal. App. 499, 1 P.2d 994 , is discussed in § 180.56[3][a]. In that case, respondent argued that her financial condition constituted good cause for granting her motion to advance, in that she was depending on recoveries in the case for money to pay her obligations. Although the court of appeal granted the motion to advance on other grounds, it suggested that financial condition, by itself, did not constitute good cause for advancement; this was a ground that could be argued by most litigants who have a judgment in their favor or have hopes of obtaining one (115 Cal. App. 499, 500) .

[c] Grant of Motion Will Leave Opposing Party With Inadequate Time to Prepare

The factual background of Swartzman v. Superior Court (1964) 231 Cal. App. 2d 195, 41 Cal. Rptr. 721 , is discussed in § 180.57[3][a]. In that case, the court of appeal upheld the trial court's advancement of an eminent domain proceeding. In evaluating the action of the trial court, the court of appeal emphasized that the opposing party had both notice of the final pretrial and trial dates more than two months in advance of trial and exact knowledge of the extent and nature of the property involved for a longer period. Thus, the court concluded, there was ample time to prepare (231 Cal. App. 2d 195, 199) .

[The following may be combined with the points and authorities in § 180.70 or § 180.75.]

THE CASE IS NOT ENTITLED TO A PREFERENCE BECAUSE _____ [specify moving party] DOES NOT HAVE A SUBSTANTIAL INTEREST IN THE CASE AS A WHOLE.

[EITHER, when moving party has reached age 70]

A. When Preference Based on Seniority Is Not Required. An action is not entitled to preference in trial setting on the ground that a party has reached 70 years of age, if the court finds that that party does not have a substantial interest in the action as a whole or that the health of that party is not such that a preference is necessary to prevent prejudicing his or her interest in the litigation (Code Civ. Proc. § 36(a)).

[OR, when moving party is under age 14 in action to recover damages for personal injury or wrongful death]

B. When Preference Based on Minority Is Not Required. An action is not entitled to preference in trial setting on the ground that it is an action to recover damages for _____ [wrongful death or personal injury] and a party is under 14 years of age, if the court finds that that party does not have a substantial interest in the action as a whole (Code Civ. Proc. § 36(b)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that the case is entitled to preference in setting for trial on the ground that the moving party is either 70 years of age or older, or is under 14 years of age in an action to recover damages for wrongful death or personal injury. The ground of opposition is that the moving party does not have a substantial interest in the case as a whole, or in the case of a person over the age of 70, that his or her health is not such that a preference is necessary to prevent prejudicing his or her interest in the litigation, and, consequently, the case is not entitled to preference under Code Civ. Proc. § 36(a), (b). This form may be submitted in combination with general points and authorities opposing a motion for a grant of a preference [see § 180.70]. It may also be submitted with the points and authorities in § 180.75, opposing a motion to advance, reset, or specially set a case for a trial setting conference or for trial.

These points and authorities may also be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities in other procedural contexts in which counsel wishes to oppose the contention that the case is entitled to a preference, for example, in opposition to a petition for writ of mandate that seeks to compel the trial court to grant a preference which it has refused.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the point of law stated. Thus, counsel should argue the facts showing that the moving party does not have a substantial interest in the case as a whole, or in the case of a person over the age of 70, that the party's health is not such that a preference is necessary to prevent prejudicing his or her interest in the litigation. The party's lack of a substantial interest in the case as a whole may appear from the pleadings themselves, or from probative facts set forth in the supporting affidavit or declaration. The fact that the health of a party who is over 70 years of age is such that the party does not require a preference is likely to be established by deficiencies in the medical professional's declaration or other declarations in support of the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. § 36.5 (affidavit in support of motion for preference under Code Civ. Proc. § 36(a) may be signed by moving party's attorney on information and belief as to party's medical diagnosis and prognosis)], or in some cases, from separate declarations opposing the motion.

§ 180.81 Opposing Contention That Case Is Entitled to Priority--Priority in Interests of Justice [Code Civ. Proc. § 36(e)]--Good Cause Is Not Established Solely by Fact That Priority Is Necessary to Avoid Mandatory Dismissal for Failure to Bring Action to Trial [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 583.310, 583.360]

[The following may be combined with the points and authorities in § 180.70 or § 180.75.]

A PLAINTIFF IS NOT AUTOMATICALLY ENTITLED TO PREFERENTIAL TRIAL SETTING IN ORDER TO AVOID THE FIVE-YEAR MANDATORY DISMISSAL DEADLINE. FURTHERMORE, THE COURT SHOULD DENY PLAINTIFF'S MOTION TO SPECIALLY SET THE ACTION FOR TRIAL BECAUSE PLAINTIFF HAS NOT OTHERWISE SHOWN JUSTIFICATION FOR HIS/HER/ITS DELAY IN PROSECUTION.

A. Cause Justifying Preference Is Not Established Solely by Fact That Preference Is Necessary to Avoid Mandatory Dismissal. A plaintiff is not automatically entitled to a preferential trial setting under Code of Civil Procedure Section 36(e) merely because a failure to specially set would lead to expiration of the five-year period within which the case must be brought to trial (Howard v. Thrifty Drug & Discount Stores (1995) 10 Cal. 4th 424, 440, 41 Cal. Rptr. 2d 362, 895 P.2d 469 ; Salas v. Sears Roebuck & Co. (1986) 42 Cal. 3d 342, 346, 349, 228 Cal. Rptr. 504, 721 P.2d 590 ; Nye v. 20th Century Ins. Co. (1990) 225 Cal. App. 3d 1041, 1045-1046, 275 Cal. Rptr. 319). In exercising it discretion under Code of Civil Procedure Section 36(e), a trial court must take the "total picture" into account, including the condition of the court calendar, dilatory conduct by plaintiff, prejudice to defendant of an accelerated trial date, and the likelihood of eventual mandatory dismissal if the early trial date is denied. Although the interests of justice weigh against disposing of litigation on procedural grounds, the general policy in favor of trial on the merits will necessarily prevail only if a plaintiff makes some showing of excusable delay (Salas v. Sears, Roebuck & Co. (1986) 42 Cal. 3d 342, 346-349, 228 Cal. Rptr. 504, 721 P.2d 590 ; San Bernardino City Unified School Dist. v. Superior Court (1987) 190 Cal. App. 3d 233, 238-240, 235 Cal. Rptr. 356).

B. Motion Raises Same Issues as Motion for Discretionary Dismissal for Delay in Prosecution. In assessing the "total picture," the factors to be taken into account are essentially the ones prescribed when a court is considering a motion for a discretionary dismissal for delay in prosecution under Code of Civil Procedure Sections 583.410 and 583.420 and Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1342(e) (Howard v. Thrifty Drug & Discount Stores (1995) 10 Cal. 4th 424, 441, 41 Cal. Rptr. 2d 362, 895 P.2d 469 ; Biondi, Flemming & Gonzales v. Braham (1990) 218 Cal. App. 3d 842, 847, 267 Cal. Rptr. 365).

C. Relevant Criteria. In ruling on a motion for discretionary dismissal for delay in prosecution, the court must consider all matters relevant to a proper determination of the motion, including the following (Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1342(e)):

1. The court's file in the case and the affidavits and declarations and supporting data submitted by the parties and, where applicable, the availability of the moving party and other essential parties for service of process.

2. The diligence in seeking to effect service of process.

3. The extent to which the parties engaged in any settlement negotiations or discussions.

4. The diligence of the parties in pursuing discovery or other pretrial proceedings, including any extraordinary relief sought by either party.

5. The nature and complexity of the case.

6. The law applicable to the case, including the pendency of other litigation under a common set of facts or determinative of the legal or factual issues in the case.

7. The nature of any extensions of time or other delay attributable to either party.

8. The condition of the court's calendar and the availability of an earlier trial date if the matter was ready for trial.

9. Whether the interests of justice are best served by dismissal or trial of the case.

10. Any other fact or circumstance relevant to a fair determination of the issue.

D. Guiding Policies. The court is also to be guided by the policies set forth in Code of Civil Procedure Section 583.130, which in part requires that the plaintiff proceed with reasonable diligence in the prosecution of the action (Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1342(e)).

[Optional] E. Motion to Specially Set After Trial Court Failed to Recalendar Case After Judicial Arbitration. When a motion to specially set is made after the trial court has failed to calendar a trial de novo after judicial arbitration pursuant to Code of Civil Procedure Section 1141.20, the preference for disposition of an action on the merits incorporated in Code of Civil Procedure Section 583.130 is reinforced by Section 1141.20's mandate that plaintiffs not be penalized for undergoing arbitration. Nonetheless, the trial court still retains discretion to deny a motion to specially set made by a plaintiff who has failed to promptly request a timely trial date in the post-arbitration period. A plaintiff who waits an unreasonably long time in acting to correct the court's failure to recalendar the case may be unable to claim "excusable delay" and therefore may be subject to dismissal (Howard v. Thrifty Drug & Discount Stores (1995) 10 Cal. 4th 424, 442, 41 Cal. Rptr. 2d 362, 895 P.2d 469). Although the trial court can use a plaintiff's motion to specially set the case for trial as an opportunity to correct its own failure to calendar or recalendar the case after arbitration, these considerations can be outweighed by the plaintiff's unreasonable delay before or after arbitration, as well as by prejudice to the defendant from an accelerated trial date (Howard v. Thrifty Drug & Discount Stores (1995) 10 Cal. 4th 424, 443, 41 Cal. Rptr. 2d 362, 895 P.2d 469).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that the case is entitled to preference in setting for trial on the ground that the interests of justice require the preference so that the case will not be subject to mandatory dismissal for delay in bring the action to trial or retrial [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 36(e), 583.310-583.360]. The ground of opposition is that the court is not required to grant such preference absent a showing by plaintiff of reasonable excuse for the delay [see Salas v. Sears, Roebuck & Co. (1986) 42 Cal. 3d 342, 346-347, 228 Cal. Rptr. 504, 721 P.2d 590] .

The form may be submitted in combination with general points and authorities opposing a motion for a grant of a preference [see § 180.70]. It may also be submitted with the points and authorities in § 180.75, opposing a motion to advance, reset, or specially set a case for a trial setting conference or for trial. Conversely, they may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities in support of a motion to set specially when the factors listed show that the moving party has exercised diligence throughout to bring the case to trial and a consideration of the other factors listed favor the granting of the motion. These points and authorities may also be combined with a memorandum in other procedural contexts in which counsel wishes to oppose the contention that the case is entitled to a preference, for example, in opposition to a petition for writ of mandate to compel the trial court to grant a preference that it has refused.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should argue that the facts set forth in the accompanying affidavit or declaration show that the party seeking preference to avoid mandatory dismissal of his or her case has not demonstrated reasonable excuse for his or her delay in bringing the action to trial, and that other factors, such as those set forth in Paragraphs A and C of the form, weigh against granting the preference.

[c] Related Points and Authorities

For memoranda relating generally to mandatory and discretionary dismissal for delay in prosecution, see Ch. 90, Dismissal .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

The sequence of events in Howard v. Thrifty Drug & Discount Stores (1995) 10 Cal. 4th 424, 41 Cal. Rptr. 2d 362, 895 P.2d 469 , was as follows:

- On September 21, 1991, a judicial arbitration award became final when the defendant failed to request trial de novo.

- On October 1, the court entered judgment for plaintiff pursuant to the award.

- On November 7, the defendant moved to vacate the judgment and to allow a request for trial de novo, based on defendant's attorney's statement of his own neglect (renewing a defective motion first made October 11 that was denied without prejudice).

- On November 27, the court granted the motion, subject to payment of sanctions to plaintiff.

- On December 4, the defendant requested trial de novo.

- On December 31, defendant paid the sanctions.

- On July 7, 1992, the court granted plaintiff an order shortening time so that plaintiff could schedule a motion to specially set the case for trial on July 10.

The court denied the motion to specially set, finding that the five years to bring the case to trial had already elapsed, requiring dismissal under Code Civ. Proc. § 583.310. Moreover, the court held that if, as plaintiff contended, 44 days remained within that period, plaintiff's lack of activity since the request for trial de novo made denial of the motion appropriate on discretionary grounds under Code Civ. Proc. § 583.410. The court of appeal affirmed the dismissal on discretionary grounds.

The Supreme Court affirmed based on the trial court's discretionary power under Code Civ. Proc. § 583.410, but first held that the court erred in dismissing the case on mandatory grounds under Code Civ. Proc. § 583.310.

In discussing Code Civ. Proc. § 1141.20 tolling of the mandatory period for bringing the case to trial when the trial court fails, after timely request, to calendar a trial de novo so that a plaintiff obtains his or her pre-arbitration place in the calendar, the Court stated that a plaintiff who benefits from that tolling may still be subject to discretionary dismissal if the plaintiff would have been subject to discretionary dismissal before arbitration (10 Cal. 4th 424, 435) .

In later addressing the discretionary dismissal, the Court first noted that a plaintiff is not automatically entitled to a preferential trial setting under Code Civ. Proc. § 36(e) merely because failure to specially set would lead to expiration of the five-year statute (10 Cal. 4th 424, 440) .

Salas v. Sears, Roebuck & Co. (1986) 42 Cal. 3d 342, 228 Cal. Rptr. 504, 721 P.2d 590 , was a personal injury action in which, less than one year before expiration of the mandatory five-year period for bringing the action to trial under former Code Civ. Proc. § 583 [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 583.310], plaintiffs failed to notify all parties of the trial-setting conference and the case was removed from the civil active list. For the next 10 months, plaintiffs did nothing to restore their case to the civil active list nor did they initiate any discovery. Forty days before the five-year period was to elapse, plaintiffs brought a motion under former Code Civ. Proc. § 36(d) (now Code Civ. Proc. § 36(e)), on the ground that the imminent expiration of the five-year limit required preferential trial setting in the interests of justice. The trial court denied the motion, because of plaintiffs' failure to offer any justification for their delay in prosecuting the action, and subsequently dismissed the case pursuant to former Code Civ. Proc. § 583. The court of appeal affirmed.

The Supreme Court also affirmed, holding that the denial of trial preference was proper. Disapproving prior case law in Campanella v. Takaoka (1984) 160 Cal. App. 3d 504, 206 Cal. Rptr. 745 , and Kotoff v. Efseaff (1985) 172 Cal. App. 3d 991, 218 Cal. Rptr. 499 , the Court rejected plaintiffs' contention that "cause" under former Code Civ. Proc. § 36(d) is established as a matter of law when preferential setting is necessary to avoid dismissal under the five-year bar (42 Cal. 3d 342, 346) . The Court stated that in exercising its discretion under former Code Civ. Proc. § 36(d) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 36(e)), a trial court must take the "total picture" into account, including the condition of the court calendar, dilatory conduct by plaintiff, prejudice to defendant of an accelerated trial date, and the likelihood of eventual mandatory dismissal if the early trial date is denied (42 Cal. 3d 342, 349) . The Court held that although the interests of justice weigh heavily against disposing of litigation on procedural grounds, the general policy in favor of trial on the merits will necessarily prevail only if a plaintiff makes some showing of excusable delay (42 Cal. 3d 342, 347) . Plaintiffs' failure to justify their delay, coupled with their failure to initiate discovery or restore the case to the civil active list after more than four years and 10 months after filing the complaint, was sufficient to find that the trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying the trial preference (42 Cal. 3d 342, 349-350) .

Nye v. 20th Century Ins. Co. (1990) 225 Cal. App. 3d 1041, 275 Cal. Rptr. 319 , was an action by an insured against her insurance company resulting from the insurer's refusal to replace the engine in plaintiff's car, which had been damaged in an automobile accident. The action was filed September 12, 1984, and an amended complaint was filed December 28, 1984. Defendant answered January 17, 1985. Two and a half years later plaintiff, on August 24, 1987, filed an at-issue memorandum. Defendant's motion for summary adjudication of issues filed on October 11, 1988, was granted November 9, 1988. On August 2, 1989, 41 days before the five-year period would have expired, plaintiff's attorney called the calendar clerk to learn the status of the case, learned that no status conference had been set, and that it was unlikely one could be set before expiration of the five-year period. Plaintiff moved for an order to specially set, and defendant countered with a motion to dismiss. Plaintiff's motion was denied, and defendant's motion was granted. The court of appeal affirmed. The appellate court said that, under Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 375(b) [now see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1335], a motion to specially set requires a showing of good cause, that the only showing made by the plaintiff was that the statutory period would run unless the case were specially set, and that this was not enough to compel a trial court to grant the motion (225 Cal. App. 3d 1041, 1045) . The court further pointed out that absence of prejudice to the defendant by the delay would neither compel the trial court to grant a motion to specially set nor prevent it from granting a motion to dismiss (225 Cal. App. 3d 1041, 1046) .

San Bernardino City Unified School Dist. v. Superior Court (1987) 190 Cal. App. 3d 233, 235 Cal. Rptr. 356 , was a mandate proceeding in which petitioners sought to compel the lower court to set their case specially for trial before the imminent expiration of the three-year period allowed under Code Civ. Proc. § 583.320(a)(3) (actions in which new trial granted). The trial court had denied their motion for preference, on the ground of petitioners' lack of diligence, coupled with an insufficient showing of excusable delay in prosecution of the action. The court of appeal refused to issue a writ of mandate, holding that the trial court properly exercised its discretion by taking into account (1) petitioners' diligence or lack thereof; (2) prejudice to real parties in interest of an accelerated trial date; (3) the condition of the court's calendar; and (4) the likelihood of eventual mandatory dismissal if the early trial date were denied (190 Cal. App. 3d 233, 238) . The court rejected petitioners' argument that their attempts to negotiate a settlement excused their lack of diligence, stating in dictum that delay in bringing a case to trial might be excusable when it results from a reasonable belief, induced by mutual bona fide settlement negotiations, that a trial could probably be avoided (190 Cal. App. 3d 233, 239) . The court found that petitioners' inexcusable delay, coupled with some prejudice to the opposing party, outweighed the other factors even though the result would be mandatory dismissal of the action (190 Cal. App. 3d 233, 240) .

[b] Motion Raises Same Issues as Motion for Discretionary Dismissal for Delay in Prosecution

The facts and procedural background of Howard v. Thrifty Drug & Discount Stores (1995) 10 Cal. 4th 424, 41 Cal. Rptr. 2d 362, 895 P.2d 469 , are discussed in [a], above. In affirming the dismissal, the Court noted that because the same standards apply to a motion to preferentially set under Code Civ. Proc. § 36(e) to avoid the five-year statute and a motion to dismiss on discretionary grounds under Code Civ. Proc. § 583.410, they can be considered as merely two sides of the same determination (10 Cal. 4th 424, 440 n.6). The Court held that the factors the trial court is to take into account in assessing the total picture in ruling on the motion are the ones prescribed when a court is considering a motion for discretionary dismissal under Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 373(e) (now see Rule 3.1342(e)) (10 Cal. 4th 424, 441) .

The Court then held that the trial court had not abused its discretion in denying the motion to specially set the case for trial and exercising its discretion to dismiss. The facts the Court looked to were as follows (10 Cal. 4th 424, 443) :

- A three-year, seven-month lapse between the filing of the complaint and the first at-issue memorandum, during which the only activity was two discovery requests.

- The lack of evidence of active settlement negotiations or delay by the defendant.

- Post-arbitration delay of six months after defendant's request for trial de novo to bring to the court's attention a lack of a trial date (at which time it was less than two months before expiration of the five-year mandatory dismissal deadline).

Biondi, Flemming & Gonzales v. Braham (1990) 218 Cal. App. 3d 842, 267 Cal. Rptr. 365 , was an action for breach of contract and fraud regarding a sale of real estate by one of the defendants, a joint venture, and for an injunction to prevent foreclosure, in which the joint venture filed both an answer and a cross complaint against plaintiff and others. Discovery was undertaken, an arbitration conference was held, and a substitution of attorney was filed substituting plaintiff in propria persona. On two occasions the cross complainant filed an at-issue memorandum, and each time the court clerk mailed plaintiff a notice of the trial setting conference, directing plaintiff to inform the other parties, and stating that if the complaint had been filed more than two years before the conference date and plaintiff did not appear at the conference, the court would dismiss the action for lack of prosecution. On the second occasion the notice was returned to the court clerk as undeliverable, and the clerk resent it to plaintiff's former counsel. Neither plaintiff nor plaintiff's former attorney notified the other parties of the conferences. Each time none of the parties appeared at the conference, and the at-issue memorandum was vacated. Fearing the five-year period would expire, the cross complainant filed a motion to specially set, which the trial court denied. The cross complaint was dismissed for failure to bring it to trial within five years, and the cross complainant appealed. In reversing the order of dismissal on the ground that under the facts of the case as shown by the record the cross complainant had acted diligently to bring the case to trial, the court of appeal made the statement set forth in Paragraph B of the form (218 Cal. App. 3d 842, 847) .

[c] Guiding Policies

Code Civ. Proc. § 583.130 provides that it is the policy of the state that a plaintiff shall proceed with reasonable diligence in the prosecution of the action but that all parties cooperate in bringing the action to trial or other disposition, and that, except as otherwise provided by statute or by rule of court adopted pursuant to statute, the policy favoring the right of parties to make stipulations in their own interests and the policy favoring trial or other disposition of an action on the merits are generally to be preferred over the policy that requires dismissal for failure to proceed with reasonable diligence in the prosecution of an action in construing the provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 583.110 et seq.

[d] Motion to Specially Set After Trial Court Failed to Recalendar Case After Judicial Arbitration

In affirming the discretionary dismissal, the Court indicated that when a motion to specially set is made after the trial court has failed to fulfill its Code Civ. Proc. § 1141.20 duty to calendar a trial de novo after judicial arbitration, the Code Civ. Proc. § 583.130 preference for disposition of an action on the merits is reinforced by Code Civ. Proc. § 1141.20's mandate that plaintiffs not be penalized for undergoing arbitration. The Court also held, however, that the trial court nonetheless retains discretion to deny a motion to specially set made by a plaintiff who has failed to promptly request a timely trial date in the post-arbitration period (10 Cal. 4th 424, 442-443) .

This chapter contains memoranda of points and authorities relating to principals and agents. The chapter includes the following forms:

- Points and authorities supporting [see §§ 182.30 -182.32] and opposing [see §§ 182.37 -182.39] general contentions that an actual agency has been created.

- Points and authorities supporting [see §§ 182.33, 182.34] and opposing [see §§ 182.40, 182.41] general contentions that an actual authority has been conferred.

- Points and authorities supporting [see §§ 182.35, 182.36] and opposing [see §§ 182.42, 182.43] general contentions that an agency was created or an authority conferred by a principal's ratification.

- Points and authorities supporting [see §§ 182.60 -182.63] and opposing [see §§ 182.64, 182.65] an agent's actions for damages against the principal.

- Points and authorities supporting [see §§ 182.80 -182.85] and opposing [see §§ 182.86 -182.87] the contention that a principal may recover damages in actions against an agent.

- Points and authorities supporting [see §§ 182.100 -182.103] and opposing [see §§ 182.105 -182.107] the contention that a third party may recover damages from an agent in actions for breach of contract, breach of warranty of authority, and for the agent's torts.

- Points and authorities supporting [see §§ 182.120, 182.121] and opposing [see §§ 182.130 -182.132] the contention that an ostensible agency or ostensible authority was created by conduct of a principal

- Points and authorities supporting [see §§ 182.123 -182.128] and opposing [see §§ 182.135 -182.138] the contention that a third party may recover damages from a principal for acts committed in the course of the agency or that a third party may enforce against a principal a contract entered by an agent.

PART I. INTRODUCTION

§ 182.03 Types of Agency

An agency is either actual or ostensible [Civ. Code § 2298]. An agency is actual when the agent is really employed by the principal [Civ. Code § 2299]. An agency is ostensible when the principal intentionally, or by want of ordinary care, causes a third party to believe another to be his or her agent who is not really employed by the principal [Civ. Code § 2300].

CHAPTER 182 PRINCIPAL AND AGENT
PART I. INTRODUCTION

18-182 California Points & Authorities § 182.04

§ 182.04 Ostensible Agency Based on Estoppel

The liability of a principal for the acts of an ostensible agent rests on the doctrine of estoppel, and its essential elements are representations by the principal, justifiable reliance thereon by the third party, and change of position or injury resulting from the reliance [Kelley v. R.F. Jones Co. (1969) 272 Cal. App. 2d 113, 120-121, 77 Cal. Rptr. 170] . The requirement of reliance by a third party makes the concept of ostensible agency relevant only insofar as a third party seeks to impose liability on a principal or agent in the conduct of an ostensible agency, which by definition can exist only when no actual agency exists [see Civ. Code § 2300]. Thus, contentions regarding an ostensible agency are contained in § 182.120 et seq., covering actions by third parties against a principal, rather than in § 182.30 et seq., covering general agency allegations, because an ostensible agency is not created by the actions of a principal and agent alone but depends on some act by the principal that leads a third party reasonably to believe that an agency or authority exists [see Civ. Code §§ 2300 (defining ostensible agency in terms of third party's belief), 2334 (limitation on principal's liability for acts under agent's ostensible authority); Kelley v. R.F. Jones Co. (1969) 272 Cal. App. 2d 113, 120-121, 77 Cal. Rptr. 170] .

CHAPTER 182 PRINCIPAL AND AGENT
PART I. INTRODUCTION

18-182 California Points & Authorities § 182.05

§ 182.05 Authority of Agent

[1] Actual

An agent has the authority that the principal actually or ostensibly confers on him or her [Civ. Code § 2315]. Actual authority is that which a principal intentionally confers on the agent, or intentionally or by want of ordinary care allows the agent to believe he or she possesses [Civ. Code § 2316]. The actual authority created when the principal intentionally or by want of ordinary care permits an agent to believe that he or she possesses a specific authority, also called implied actual authority, depends on the belief of the agent that he or she has an authority [Columbia Outfitting Co. v. Freeman (1950) 36 Cal. 2d 216, 219, 223 P.2d 21] . The agent's belief must also be engendered by the conduct of the principal [South Sacramento Drayage Co. v. Campbell Soup Co. (1963) 220 Cal. App. 2d 851, 856, 34 Cal. Rptr. 137] . It appears that the belief of the agent in his or her authority must also be reasonable, although apparently the precise issue has not been addressed by a California appellate court [see South Sacramento Drayage Co. v. Campbell Soup Co. (1963) 220 Cal. App. 2d 851, 856, 34 Cal. Rptr. 137] . For forms supporting and opposing the contention that an actual authority was conferred, see § 182.30 et seq.

[2] Ostensible

Ostensible authority is that which a principal, intentionally or by want of ordinary care, causes or allows a third party to believe the agent to possess [Civ. Code § 2317; see, e.g., C.A.R. Transp. v. Darden Rests., Inc. (9th Cir. 2000) 213 F.3d 474, 479-481 (finding truck drivers had ostensible authority to sign waivers of right to payment from shipper)]. As the conduct of the principal may create a belief in authority in both the agent and a third party, the same conduct by a principal may create both an actual and an ostensible authority [see Tomerlin v. Canadian Indem. Co. (1964) 61 Cal. 2d 638, 644-645, 39 Cal. Rptr. 731, 394 P.2d 571] .

A principal is bound by the acts of an agent under a merely ostensible authority only to those persons who have, in good faith and without want of ordinary care, incurred a liability or parted with value on the faith of that authority [Civ. Code § 2334; see Mejia v. Community Hosp. of San Bernardino (2002) 99 Cal. App. 4th 1448, 1456-1457, 122 Cal. Rptr. 2d 233 (injured patient argued there was sufficient evidence that negligent physician was ostensible agent of hospital to survive motion for nonsuit)]. For a third person to recover from a principal for the act of an agent under an ostensible agency, the third person must believe in the agent's authority, the belief must be reasonable, the belief must be generated by some act or neglect of the principal sought to be charged, and the third person must not be guilty of negligence in relying on the agent's apparent authority [Associated Creditors' Agency v. Davis (1975) 13 Cal. 3d 374, 399, 118 Cal. Rptr. 772, 530 P.2d 1084 ; see Saks v. Charity Mission Baptist Church (2001) 90 Cal. App. 4th 1116, 1137-1140, 110 Cal. Rptr. 2d 45 (in real estate investor's action for breach of contract and fraud, church held not liable on promissory notes signed by pastor, under doctrines of respondeat superior, ostensible authority, or equitable estoppel, when plaintiff acquiesced in scheme to wrongfully use church's name to obtain financial benefit for himself and his partners); see also § 182.129]. A person cannot become the agent of another merely by representing himself or herself as such [see Pagarigan v. Libby Care Ctr., Inc. (2002) 99 Cal. App. 4th 298, 301-302, 120 Cal. Rptr. 2d 892 (nursing home's attempt to enforce arbitration agreement signed by daughters of deceased resident was unsuccessful when resident did not sign arbitration agreement, was mentally incompetent when her daughters signed agreement, and had not signed power of attorney; fact that daughters may have represented themselves as having power to sign agreement for resident was irrelevant)]. For forms supporting and opposing the contention that an ostensible authority was conferred, see § 182.120 et seq.

CHAPTER 182 PRINCIPAL AND AGENT
PART I. INTRODUCTION

18-182 California Points & Authorities § 182.06

§ 182.06 Ratification

An agency may be created, and an authority may be conferred, by a precedent authorization or a subsequent ratification [Civ. Code § 2307]. A ratification can be made only in the manner that would have been necessary to confer an original authority for the act ratified, or when an oral authorization would suffice, by accepting or retaining the benefit of the act, with notice thereof [Civ. Code § 2310]. For forms to be used when a written authorization is required by Civ. Code § 2309, and discussion of the equal dignities rule codified by Civ. Code § 2309, see Ch. 216, Statute of Frauds .

When no issue as to the need for a written authorization exists, ratification is defined as the voluntary election by a person to adopt in some manner as his or her own act an act that was purportedly done on his or her behalf by another person. When an act is ratified, the act is treated, as to some or all persons, as if originally authorized. A purported agent's act may be adopted expressly or it may be adopted by implication based on conduct of the purported principal from which an intention to consent to or adopt the act may be fairly inferred, including conduct that is inconsistent with any reasonable intention on his or her part, other than the intent to approve and adopt it [Rakestraw v. Rodrigues (1972) 8 Cal. 3d 67, 73, 104 Cal. Rptr. 57, 500 P.2d 1401 ; see Fretland v. County of Humboldt (1999) 69 Cal. App. 4th 1478, 1489-1491, 82 Cal. Rptr. 2d 359 (in tort action against employer county, former employee failed to produce evidence that employer ratified conduct of fellow employee who assaulted plaintiff by promoting and condoning work environment in which such conduct was tolerated)]. A principal cannot split an agency transaction and accept the benefits without the burdens [Reusche v. California Pac. Title Ins. Co. (1965) 231 Cal. App. 2d 731, 737, 42 Cal. Rptr. 262] . Thus, the issues in a case involving an alleged ratification generally include whether or not the principal retained a benefit of a transaction with knowledge of the source of the benefit, and the extent of the transaction ratified by the retention of the benefit when the principal's knowledge is shown [see Navrides v. Zurich Ins. Co. (1971) 5 Cal. 3d 698, 703-704, 97 Cal. Rptr. 309, 488 P.2d 637 ; Reusche v. California Pac. Title Ins. Co. (1965) 231 Cal. App. 2d 731, 737, 42 Cal. Rptr. 262 ; see also Civ. Code § 2311 (ratification of part of indivisible transaction as ratification of whole)]. For forms for contentions supporting and opposing ratification generally, see § 182.30 et seq. For forms for contentions supporting and opposing a principal's liability for an agent's act based on the principal's ratification of the act, see § 182.120 et seq.

§ 182.07 Termination

[1] In General

An agency is terminated, as to every person having notice thereof, by any of the events specified in Civ. Code § 2355. For example, an agency is terminated by the agent's renunciation of the agency [Civ. Code § 2355(d)]. Unless the power of an agent is coupled with an interest in the subject of the agency, it is also terminated by any of the following [Civ. Code § 2356(a)]:

- Its revocation by the principal;
- The death of the principal; or
- The incapacity of the principal to contract.

[2] Contractual Provisions Limiting Termination

While the termination of an agency by the act or condition of the principal is limited somewhat by the provisions of Civ. Code § 2356(b)-(e), the power of a principal to revoke the agency is not limited by contractual provisions, such as an agreement that the agency shall continue for a definite time [see Stoll v. Stoll (1936) 5 Cal. 2d 687, 690, 56 P.2d 226 ; see Woolley v. Embassy Suites, Inc. (1991) 227 Cal. App. 3d 1520, 1530, 278 Cal. Rptr. 719] . However, courts have distinguished between a principal's power to terminate an agency and his or her right to do so without becoming liable to the agent for damages caused by wrongful termination of the agency. Thus, a contract may limit the right of the principal to terminate the agency, and a termination of the agency in violation of the agent's rights under a contract may be the basis of an agent's action for damages for breach of contract. But unless the agency is coupled with an interest, the agent cannot prevent the principal from terminating the agency [see Stoll v. Stoll (1936) 5 Cal. 2d 687, 690, 56 P.2d 226] . For forms supporting a contention that an agency was wrongfully terminated, see §§ 182.61 and 182.62.

[3] Power of Agent Coupled With Interest

Unless the power of an agent is coupled with an interest in the subject of the agency, the agency is terminated by its revocation by the principal, the death of the principal, or the incapacity of the principal to contract [see Civ. Code § 2356(a)]. For an agency agreement to be coupled with an interest, it must be (1) held for the benefit of the agent rather than the principal, (2) created to secure the performance of a duty to the agent or to protect a title in the agent, and (3) created at the same time that the duty or title is created or be created for consideration [Becket v. Welton Becket & Assocs. (1974) 39 Cal. App. 3d 815, 820, 114 Cal. Rptr. 531] . When the agent must exercise his or her power as agent to acquire the interest, the agency is not coupled with an interest [see Jay v. Dollarhide (1970) 3 Cal. App. 3d 1001, 1023, 84 Cal. Rptr. 538 ; see also California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 427, Principal and Agent (Matthew Bender)]. For forms supporting and opposing a contention that the power of an agency was coupled with an interest in the subject of the agency, see § 182.100 et seq.

CHAPTER 182 PRINCIPAL AND AGENT
PART I. INTRODUCTION

18-182 California Points & Authorities § 182.08

§ 182.08 Principal's Liability for Wrongful Acts of Agent

Unless required by or under the authority of law to employ that particular agent, a principal is responsible to third persons for the negligence of his or her agent in the transaction of the business of the agency, including wrongful acts committed by the agent in and as a part of the transaction of the business of the agency, and for the agent's willful omission to fulfill the obligations of the principal [Civ. Code § 2338] Civ. Code § 2338 codifies the common-law doctrine of respondeat superior and applies to both principal-agent relationships and employer-employee relationships [Spradlin v. Cox (1988) 201 Cal. App. 3d 799, 808-809, 247 Cal. Rptr. 347 ; Johnson v. Monson (1920) 183 Cal. 149, 151-152, 190 P. 635 ; Tighe v. Ad Chong (1941) 44 Cal. App. 2d 164, 168, 112 P.2d 20] . Thus, the cases analyzing the liability of a principal or an employer often use the terms "agency" or "employment" interchangeably, and for the purposes of respondeat superior liability there seems to be no distinction between them.

Even if a principal is not liable for the wrongs of his or her agent under Civ. Code § 2338, a third party may recover damages from a principal for the wrongful acts of an agent if the principal authorized or ratified the agent's acts [see Civ. Code § 2339; Maberto v. Wolfe (1930) 106 Cal. App 202, 206, 289 P. 218 ; see also Shultz Steel Co. v. Hartford Accident & Indem. Co. (1986) 187 Cal. App. 3d 513, 523, 231 Cal. Rptr. 715 (finding no ratification)]. In such a case, it is not necessary that the agent's acts were done while transacting the business of the agency [see Civ. Code § 2339]. For forms supporting and opposing the contention that a third person may recover damages from a principal for an agent's wrongful act, see § 182.120 et seq.

§ 182.09 Agent's Liability to Third Party

One who assumes to act as an agent thereby warrants to all who deal with him or her in that capacity that he or she has the authority that he or she assumes [Civ. Code § 2342]. An agent who breaches his or her warranty of authority is liable to the third party for damages caused by the breach under Civ. Code § 3318. An agent may also be liable as a principal to a third party when he or she is given credit personally in a transaction, when he or she enters into a written contract in the principal's name without a good-faith belief in his or her authority, and when the agent's acts are wrongful in their nature [see Civ. Code § 2343]. For forms of contentions supporting and opposing a a third person's recovery from an agent, see § 182.100 et seq.

CHAPTER 182 PRINCIPAL AND AGENT
PART I. INTRODUCTION

18-182 California Points & Authorities § 182.10

§ 182.10 Agent's Knowledge Imputed to Principal

Both a principal and his or her agent are deemed to have notice of whatever either has notice of and ought, in good faith and the exercise of ordinary care and diligence, to communicate to the other [see Civ. Code § 2332]. The principal is charged with, and is bound by, the knowledge of or notice to his or her agent when it is received while the agent is acting within the scope of his or her authority and is in reference to a matter over which the authority extends [Trane Co. v. Gilbert (1968) 267 Cal. App. 2d 720, 727, 73 Cal. Rptr. 279] . This general rule, however, does not apply when the principal is required to have actual knowledge. For example, the 90-day limitations period specified in Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.6 for filing a petition for review of local agency decisions applies only if the required notice is sent to the party, and sending that notice to an agent of the party (the party's attorney) has been held not to trigger the 90-day period [Herman v. Los Angeles County Metro. Transp. Auth. (1999) 71 Cal. App. 4th 819, 828-830, 84 Cal. Rptr. 2d 144 ; see § 182.133[4]].

PART I. INTRODUCTION

§ 182.11 Use of This Chapter

This chapter is divided into parts based on the party who is most likely to be seeking the relief to which a contention relates. However, contentions regarding certain issues may be appropriate for use by a party other than the party for whom a particular form was designed. For example, a guardian of an incompetent principal may wish to contend that an agency was coupled with an interest and therefore not terminable, in which case the contentions in § 182.60 may be used on behalf of the principal. In such situations, counsel should adapt the contentions for use in the particular context in which counsel desires to present the contentions. The contentions in the various forms may also be combined when appropriate. For example, a third party seeking to hold a principal liable for the acts of an agent may wish to present other issues, such as creation of the agency, whether or not an authority was conferred, and whether or not the principal ratified the agent's acts if no agency was created by a prior grant of authority. In this example, counsel may wish to combine the contentions supported by the points and authorities in §§ 182.30, 182.33, 182.35, and 182.123 to cover all of the issues raised.

A. Actions Involving General Agency Questions

18-182 California Points & Authorities § 182.30

§ 182.30 Supporting Contention That Actual Agency [Civ. Code § 2299] Created--Express Agreement of Parties

[1] FORM

AN ACTUAL AGENCY WAS CREATED BETWEEN _____ [PLAINTIFF or DEFENDANT], THE ALLEGED PRINCIPAL, AND _____ [DEFENDANT or PLAINTIFF], THE ALLEGED AGENT, BECAUSE AN AGENCY MAY BE CREATED BY EXPRESS AGREEMENT OF THE PARTIES.

A. Actual Agency. An agency is either actual or ostensible, and an agency is actual when the agent is really employed by the principal (Civ. Code §§ 2298, 2299).

B. Creation of Agency by Express Agreement. An agency may be created by an express agreement of the parties (see Zalk v. General Exploration Co. (1980) 105 Cal. App. 3d 786, 793-794, 164 Cal. Rptr. 647 ; Brand v. Mantor (1935) 6 Cal. App. 2d 126, 130, 44 P.2d 390).

[Optional] C. No Consideration Necessary for Binding Authority. A consideration is not necessary to make an authority, whether precedent or subsequent, binding on the principal (Civ. Code § 2308).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that an agency was created by an express agreement between the principal and agent. This argument may be used in any action in which a party contends an agency was created by an express agreement between the principal and the agent.

The points and authorities in § 182.31 may be combined with these points and authorities when counsel wishes to contend alternatively that an agreement was created by conduct of parties. The points and authorities in § 182.32 may be combined with these points and authorities when an agreement provides that the principal has the right to control the actions of the agent, although an agency is not expressly created by the agreement and the principal has not exercised the control granted by the agreement. The points and authorities in §§ 182.33 and 182.34 may be combined with these points and authorities as appropriate when the actual authority of the agent is disputed, as will often be the case when the very existence of an agency is disputed. The points and authorities in §§ 182.35 and 182.36 may be combined with these points and authorities as appropriate when counsel wishes to contend alternatively that an agency was created by the principal's ratification.

An agency is either actual or ostensible, and this form does not deal with ostensible agency, which arises when a principal intentionally or by want of ordinary care causes or allows a third party to believe another to be his or her agent who is not really employed by the principal [Civ. Code §§ 2298, 2300]. This form is for use only when the issue is whether or not there was an actual agency, and not when the belief of a third person is at issue.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that an agency was created by an express agreement between the principal and the agent. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in §§ 182.37 -182.39 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Creation of Agency by Express Agreement

Zalk v. General Exploration Co. (1980) 105 Cal. App. 3d 786, 164 Cal. Rptr. 647 , was an action to recover finder's fees allegedly due plaintiff under an agreement with defendant. Plaintiff was an experienced inspector of mining properties and agreed to work full time for defendant, locating properties for acquisition by defendant. Plaintiff put defendant in contact with the owners of five companies that were for sale, and defendant purchased the companies but refused to pay a commission to plaintiff. Plaintiff argued that his agreement with defendant constituted an agency, entitling him to compensation, and the trial court agreed and entered judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that the agreement obligated plaintiff to bring to defendant's attention every prospect of the sort defendant was seeking, creating a principal-agent relationship between plaintiff and defendant (105 Cal. App. 3d 786, 793-794) . The court held that by creating in plaintiff the duties of an agent, the agreement created an agency relationship, obligating defendant to compensate plaintiff for the services rendered by plaintiff (105 Cal. App. 3d 786, 793-794) .

Brand v. Mantor (1935) 6 Cal. App. 2d 126, 44 P.2d 390 , was an action to recover secret profits retained by defendant in the course of an agency to buy real estate for plaintiffs. Plaintiffs met defendant at the home of a mutual friend, and defendant represented that he could make money for them by investing a cash inheritance in real estate.

Plaintiffs agreed to do so, and defendant sold them property he had already contracted to buy, at a profit to defendant. Defendant argued that no agency was created, and therefore he had no duty to plaintiffs. The trial court entered judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that the trial court's finding of agency was supported by sufficient evidence (6 Cal. App. 2d 126, 130) . The court quoted from a treatise on agency to the effect that an agent may be appointed by written instrument or by word of mouth (6 Cal. App. 2d 126, 130) . The court noted that an agency may also be implied from the conduct of the parties and did not clearly base its holding on either the alleged agreement or the subsequent conduct of the parties (6 Cal. App. 2d 126, 130-131) .

[a] Creation of Agency by Express Agreement

Nichols v. Arthur Murray, Inc. (1967) 248 Cal. App. 2d 610, 56 Cal. Rptr. 728 , is discussed in § 182.32[3][a]. The plaintiff brought an action against defendant, as undisclosed principal of the contracting party, for the amount of money paid for dance lessons that were never provided. The contracting party was a franchisee of defendant, and the franchise agreement allegedly provided sufficient control over the franchisee to create an agency relationship. The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's judgment for plaintiff, holding that the agreement showed an intention on the part of defendant and the franchisee to create an agency (248 Cal. App. 2d 610, 612-613) .

C. Agency Based on Conduct Manifesting Acceptance of Relationship. No particular words are necessary, nor need there be consideration, for an agency relationship to be found; all that is required is conduct by each party manifesting acceptance of a relationship whereby one of them is to perform work for the other under the latter's direction (Malloy v. Fong (1951) 37 Cal. 2d 356, 231 P.2d 241).

[Optional] D. No Consideration Necessary for Binding Authority. [See § 182.30[1], Paragraph C.]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that an actual agency was created by the conduct of the alleged principal and agent [see Civ. Code § 2299]. This argument may be used whenever there was no express agency agreement, but a party allegedly acted as though an agency had been formed with another, thereby creating an implied-in-fact agency contract. For example, a third party who seeks to hold a principal liable for the acts of an alleged agent would use this argument to establish that an agency was created between defendant and the person responsible for plaintiff's injury. In addition, a principal who alleges that his or her agent breached the fiduciary duty owed toward the principal may use this contention to establish the creation of an agency, which is required before an agent's fiduciary duty arises.

The points and authorities in this form may be combined with the points and authorities in § 182.30 when counsel wishes to make the alternative argument that an actual agency was created by the conduct of the parties if not by express agreement. The points and authorities in § 182.32 may be combined with these points and authorities when the agreement provides that the principal has the right to control the actions of the agent, although an agency is not expressly created by the agreement and the principal has not exercised the control granted by the agreement. The points and authorities in §§ 182.33 and 182.34 may be combined with these points and authorities as appropriate when the actual authority of the agent is disputed, as it often will be when the existence of an agency is disputed. The points and authorities in §§ 182.35 and 182.36 may be combined with these points and authorities as appropriate when counsel wishes to contend alternatively that an agency was created by the principal's ratification.

An agency is either actual or ostensible, and this form does not deal with ostensible agency, which arises when a principal intentionally or by want of ordinary care causes or allows a third party to believe another to be his or her agent who is not really employed by the principal [Civ. Code §§ 2298, 2300]. This form is for use only when the issue is whether or not there was an actual agency, and not when the belief of a third person is at issue.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that an actual agency was created by the conduct of the principal and agent. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of allegation for use in a complaint alleging that an agency relationship exists, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 427, Principal and Agent (Matthew Bender).

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in §§ 182.37 -182.39 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Agency Contract May Be Implied From Conduct of Parties

In Pollack v. Lytle (1981) 120 Cal. App. 3d 931, 175 Cal. Rptr. 81 , plaintiff, an attorney, sought damages and declaratory relief against another attorney for breach of fiduciary duty, fraud, breach of contract, and legal malpractice.

Plaintiff alleged that defendant had breached these duties while acting as plaintiff's agent in prosecuting a malpractice action. Plaintiff also contended that he had engaged defendant to prepare and try the malpractice action, based on defendant's false representation that defendant was experienced in malpractice actions, and that he promised to keep plaintiff informed of the conduct of the action but failed to do so despite repeated requests by plaintiff. The trial court sustained defendant's demurrer to the complaint, and plaintiff appealed from the order of dismissal.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that plaintiff had alleged sufficient facts to establish that defendant acted as plaintiff's agent in the prosecution of the malpractice matter (120 Cal. App. 3d 931, 940) . The court noted that it is well settled that a contract of agency may be implied from the conduct of the parties. The court relied on the allegations that plaintiff engaged defendant to conduct trial preparation and try the action, that defendant promised to keep plaintiff informed of the conduct of the action, that plaintiff relied on defendant's representations and recommendations in advising his client, and that plaintiff repeatedly requested written reports, to conclude that the complaint raised a clear inference of agency (120 Cal. App. 3d 931, 940) .

CAUTION:

Although the general agency principles articulated by the court of appeal in Pollack v. Lytle (1981) 120 Cal. App. 3d 931, 175 Cal. Rptr. 81 , are probably still valid, the Supreme Court in Beck v. Wecht (2002) 28 Cal. 4th 289, 297-298, 121 Cal. Rptr. 2d 384, 48 P.3d 417 , overruled Pollack to the extent that it held that one attorney may sue another attorney for breach of fiduciary duty for actions taken by the latter during joint representation of a client that reduce or eliminate the fees that the former would have received from the underlying representation.

[b] Agency Based on Conduct Manifesting Acceptance of Relationship

Malloy v. Fong (1951) 37 Cal. 2d 356, 231 P.2d 241 , was an action for personal injuries brought against the driver of the automobile in which plaintiff was riding and against parties for whom the driver allegedly acted as agent. Plaintiff, a student at vacation Bible school, alleged that he was injured as a result of the negligence of the agents of defendant church, which ran the school. Plaintiff's teacher and a divinity student who taught the class during the teacher's illness were allegedly the agents of the church in that the teacher was appointed and could be terminated by the church, and the teacher had appointed the student as his temporary replacement. The jury entered verdicts for plaintiff against all parties except the driver of the car that struck plaintiff, but the trial court granted a judgment notwithstanding the verdict to the church organization and a new trial to the pastor. Plaintiff appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed the judgment notwithstanding the verdict, holding that the evidence supported the jury's determination that defendant church organization was the principal of both the pastor and the divinity student and responsible for their negligence (37 Cal. 2d 356, 372-373) . The Court held that no particular words are necessary and that consideration is not necessary for an agency to be created. The Court held that conduct by each party manifesting acceptance of a relationship whereby one of them is to perform work for the other under the latter's direction is all that is required to create an agency (37 Cal. 2d 356, 372) . The Court found that the student was the agent of the pastor under this test, because the student performed duties that the pastor was responsible for while the latter was ill, and that the duties were subject to the supervision and control of the pastor (37 Cal. 2d 356, 373-374) . The Court also held that, as the student was the authorized subagent of the pastor, under Civ. Code § 2351 the student also represented the church to the same extent as the pastor, the original agent (37 Cal. 2d 356, 372) .

Thayer v. Pacific Elec. Ry. Co. (1961) 55 Cal. 2d 430, 11 Cal. Rptr. 560, 360 P.2d 56 , was an action for damages to freight of which defendant was the terminal carrier. The trial court returned a judgment for plaintiff, holding that the action of defendant's agent in noting plaintiff's claim of damage on the bill of lading was sufficient written notice to defendant to comply with defendant's notice requirement for claims. The court of appeal affirmed, holding as an alternative ground for the result that substantial evidence supported the trial court's finding that defendant's agent in making the notation on the bill had acted as plaintiff's agent, and that such conduct was sufficient to create a limited agency so that plaintiff would be held to have made the claim personally (55 Cal. 2d 430, 438) .

Frank Pisano & Assocs. v. Taggart (1972) 29 Cal. App. 3d 1, 105 Cal. Rptr. 414 , was an action against a husband and wife to enforce a mechanics' lien for engineering services on property owned by the wife of the party who authorized the work. The court of appeal reversed the portion of the trial court's judgment that denied the enforcement of the lien, holding that the husband and wife had acted as though the husband had the authority to act on behalf of the wife, and that the existence of an actual agency could be implied from the conduct of the parties (29 Cal. App. 3d 1, 15) .

In Housewright v. Pacific Far E. Line, Inc. (1964) 229 Cal. App. 2d 259, 40 Cal. Rptr. 208 , plaintiff brought an action against the person who allegedly acted as plaintiff's employer's principal in conducting a test of machinery in which plaintiff was injured. The court of appeal reversed the trial court's entry of a directed verdict in favor of defendant, rejecting the trial court's conclusion that the employer was an independent contractor as a matter of law and holding instead that the jury should have been allowed to decide on the true relationship among the defendants. The question of whether an agency relationship had been created was held to be one of fact, to be determined by the relations of the parties as they existed in fact under their agreement or activities (229 Cal. App. 2d 259, 265) .

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief. The following should be combined with the points and authorities in §§ 182.30 and 182.31 as appropriate, and when appropriate the points and authorities in §§ 182.33 -182.36 may be combined with the contention supported by the following points and authorities.]

AN ACTUAL AGENCY EXISTS BETWEEN _____ [PLAINTIFF or DEFENDANT], THE ALLEGED PRINCIPAL, AND _____ [DEFENDANT or PLAINTIFF], THE ALLEGED AGENT, BECAUSE AN AGENCY EXISTS WHEN THE PRINCIPAL HAS THE RIGHT TO CONTROL THE ACTIONS OF THE AGENT, NOTWITHSTANDING THE PRINCIPAL'S FAILURE TO EXERCISE THAT CONTROL OVER THE AGENT.

A. Right to Control Acts of Another Shows That Agency Exists. If, in practical effect, one of the parties has the right to exercise complete control over the other party's actions, an agency relationship exists, with the former as principal and the latter as agent (Nichols v. Arthur Murray, Inc. (1967) 248 Cal. App. 2d 610, 613, 56 Cal. Rptr. 728).

B. Agency Does Not Depend on Principal's Exercise of Control. It is not essential that the principal's right of control be exercised or that there be actual supervision of the agent's work, because the existence of the right of control and supervision establishes an agency relationship (Malloy v. Fong (1951) 37 Cal. 2d 356, 370, 231 P.2d 241 ; Stevens v. Roman Catholic Bishop of Fresno (1975) 49 Cal. App. 3d 877, 884, 123 Cal. Rptr. 171).

[2] Comments

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that an actual agency existed between the alleged principal and agent, either because of an express agreement or because of the conduct of the principal and agent, even though the principal did not exercise his or her right to control the activities of the agent. This argument may be used whenever a party contends that an agency did not exist because the alleged principal did not actually exercise his or her right to control the alleged agent.

These points and authorities should be used in conjunction with those in § 182.30 when the agency was created by an express agreement, or in conjunction with those in § 182.31 when the agency was created by the conduct of the parties. The points and authorities in §§ 182.33 and 182.34 may be combined with these points and authorities as appropriate when the actual authority of the agent is disputed, as it often will be when the existence of an agency is disputed. The points and authorities in §§ 182.35 and 182.36 may be combined with these points and authorities as appropriate when counsel wishes to contend alternatively that an agency was created by the principal's ratification.

An agency is either actual or ostensible, and this form does not deal with ostensible agency, which arises when a principal intentionally or by want of ordinary care causes or allows a third party to believe another to be his or her agent who is not really employed by the principal [Civ. Code §§ 2298, 2300]. This form is for use only when the issue is whether or not there was an actual agency, and not when the belief of a third person is at issue.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that an agency relationship exists. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in §§ 182.37 -182.39 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Right to Control Acts of Another Shows That Agency Exists

Nichols v. Arthur Murray, Inc. (1967) 248 Cal. App. 2d 610, 56 Cal. Rptr. 728 , was an action to recover prepaid fees for dancing lessons that were never furnished. Plaintiff had contracted for lessons with a dance school that operated under a franchise agreement with defendant. Plaintiff argued that under the franchise agreement, defendant had the right to exercise complete control over the school's activities and that defendant should therefore be held liable as the undisclosed principal of the school for breach of the contract for lessons. The trial court entered judgment against defendant as the undisclosed principal of the franchisee school, and defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that the evidence supported the trial court's implied finding that defendant had sufficient control over the franchisee to have created an agency relationship between them (248 Cal. App. 2d 610, 614) . The court held that the determination of whether or not an agency exists depends on the right of the alleged principal to control the other party's operation of the business. The court noted that if, in practical effect, one of the parties has the right to exercise complete control over the operation by the other, an agency relationship exists (248 Cal. App. 2d 610, 613) . The right to control in this case was found in the franchise agreement, which provided numerous strict restrictions on the activities of the franchisee (248 Cal. App. 2d 610, 617) .

[b] Agency Does Not Depend on Principal's Exercise of Control

The facts and procedural background of Malloy v. Fong (1951) 37 Cal. 2d 356, 231 P.2d 241 , are discussed in § 182.31[3][b]. The Supreme Court ruled that it is not essential that the principal's right of control be exercised or that there be actual supervision of the work of the agent for an agency to be found (37 Cal. 2d 356, 370) . The Court held that the power of a church to control the activities of a pastor and to discharge him at will established that the pastor was an agent of the church (37 Cal. 2d 356, 370-371) . The church had argued that the pastor was an independent contractor, but the Court held that the jury could have properly rejected that argument. Even if the right to supervise was not exercised, the existence of the right was held sufficient to establish the agency relationship (37 Cal. 2d 356, 370) .

Stevens v. Roman Catholic Bishop of Fresno (1975) 49 Cal. App. 3d 877, 123 Cal. Rptr. 171 , was a wrongful death action brought by the heirs of two decedents who were killed in an automobile collision between their car and one driven by a priest. The complaint named as defendants the priest and the bishop, a corporation. The bishop was sued on the theory that the priest was acting as its agent at the time of the accident, and both parties introduced expert testimony on the effect of Canon Law on the relationship between the priest, his home diocese in France, and the bishop. The jury returned verdicts against both defendants, and the bishop appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that substantial evidence supported the jury's determination that the priest was the agent of the bishop (49 Cal. App. 3d 877, 884) . The court relied on the rule that it is the right of the principal to control the agent, and not the exercise of that right, that establishes the existence of an agency relationship (49 Cal. App. 3d 877, 884) . While the expert testimony was in conflict, evidence that the priest was under the control of the bishop for at least some purposes was held sufficient to support the jury's finding of agency (49 Cal. App. 3d 877, 887) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Right to Control Acts of Another Shows That Agency Exists

Souza v. Corti (1943) 22 Cal. 2d 454, 139 P.2d 645 , was an action by a passenger against a car owner's son for damages suffered in an automobile accident. The accident occurred while a friend of the son was driving the car to a night club at the son's request. The son went to the club in a different car. The judgment of the trial court holding that the son was not liable for the acts of his friend was reversed by the court of appeal on the ground that the friend was acting on behalf and under the direction of the son and therefore was acting as the son's agent in driving the car (22 Cal. 2d 454, 461) .

In Johnson v. Peterson (1974) 38 Cal. App. 3d 619, 113 Cal. Rptr. 445 , plaintiff brought against the parents of a minor child an action for damages for injuries sustained in a collision with an automobile driven by their 16-year-old daughter, who was driving her younger sister to the store to buy shoes at the suggestion of their mother. Plaintiff alleged that the daughter was acting as her parents' agent. The court of appeal reversed the part of the judgment limiting damages to the amount provided by Veh. Code § 17709 and held that the daughter who was driving was acting as the agent for her parents. Therefore, the court concluded, the parents could be held vicariously liable for the acts of the daughter (38 Cal. App. 3d 619, 623) . The court based its conclusion on the control that parents have over their minor children and the fact that the daughter was buying clothes for another minor child, a task ordinarily performed by parents (38 Cal. App. 3d 619, 623) .

§ 182.33 Supporting Contention That Agent Had Actual Authority [Civ. Code § 2316]--Conduct of Principal Led Agent Reasonably to Believe in Authority

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief. When appropriate, the points and authorities in §§ 182.30 -182.32 and §§ 182.34 and 182.36 may be combined with the contentions supported by these points and authorities.]

_____ [DEFENDANT or PLAINTIFF] AGENT HAD ACTUAL AUTHORITY TO _____ [specify acts performed, e.g., NEGOTIATE CONTRACTS], BECAUSE ACTUAL AUTHORITY IS CREATED WHEN THE CONDUCT OF THE PRINCIPAL LEADS THE AGENT REASONABLY TO BELIEVE THAT THE PRINCIPAL CONSENTS TO THE AGENT'S EXECUTION OF AN ACT.

A. Actual Authority Defined. Actual authority is such as a principal intentionally confers on the agent, or intentionally or by want of ordinary care allows the agent to believe himself or herself to possess (Civ. Code § 2316).

B. When Agent's Actual Authority Arises. Actual authority arises as a consequence of conduct of the principal that causes an agent reasonably to believe that the principal consents to the agent's execution of an act on behalf of the principal (Tomerlin v. Canadian Indem. Co. (1964) 61 Cal. 2d 638, 643, 39 Cal. Rptr. 731, 394 P.2d 571).

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that an agent had actual authority to perform certain acts based on the conduct of the principal. This argument may be used whenever the authority of an agent is at issue between the parties. For example, a third party might use this argument in an action against a principal for the authorized acts of an agent, or an agent might use the argument in an action for indemnification from the principal for liabilities incurred while acting in the scope of his or her authority.

The points and authorities in this form may be combined with the points and authorities in § 182.30 when counsel wishes to contend alternatively that an actual agency was created by the conduct of the parties if not by express agreement. The points and authorities in this form may be combined with the points and authorities in § 182.30 when counsel wishes to contend that the agency was created by express agreement. The points and authorities in this form may be combined with the points and authorities in § 182.31 when counsel wishes to contend alternatively that an agreement was created by conduct of parties. The points and authorities in this form may be combined with the points and authorities in § 182.32 when the agreement provides that the principal has the right to control the actions of the agent, although an agency is not expressly created by the agreement and the principal has not exercised the control granted by the agreement. The points and authorities in § 182.34 may be combined with the points and authorities in this form when an issue exists regarding the implied authority of the agent. The points and authorities in §§ 182.35 and 182.36 may be combined with these points and authorities as appropriate when counsel wishes to contend alternatively that an authority was conferred by the principal's ratification.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that a principal's conduct created an agent's actual authority to perform certain acts. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For an allegation for use in a complaint alleging that a principal's conduct conferred actual authority, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 427, Principal and Agent (Matthew Bender).

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in §§ 182.40 and 182.41 may be used to oppose the contention supported by the points and authorities in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] When Agent's Actual Authority Arises

Tomerlin v. Canadian Indem. Co. (1964) 61 Cal. 2d 638, 39 Cal. Rptr. 731, 394 P.2d 571 , was an action seeking a judicial declaration that defendant was estopped from denying coverage under an insurance policy issued to plaintiff. Plaintiff alleged that the representations of an attorney retained by defendant to defend plaintiff in an action for assault and negligence filed by a third party had caused plaintiff to believe that defendant would not rely on an agreement under which defendant reserved its right to deny coverage for plaintiff's assault under a policy exclusion. Only after a large judgment was entered in the third-party action did the attorney tell plaintiff that defendant would deny coverage because of the policy exclusion. Plaintiff argued that the attorney's representations that defendant would not rely on the reservation of rights agreement were within the authority of the attorney as the agent of defendant, and that defendant should be bound thereby. The trial court agreed and entered judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appealed.

The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that defendant's counsel had actual authority to bind defendant insurer with regard to the policy coverage (61 Cal. 2d 638, 643) . The Court stated that actual authority arises from conduct of the principal that causes the agent reasonably to believe that the principal consents to the agent's execution of an act on behalf of the principal. The Court noted that the principal's consent need not be express (61 Cal. 2d 638, 643-644) .

The Court held that, given the lack of any limitations on the authority of defendant's counsel, even after defendant was notified that its counsel had concerned himself with the scope of the policy's coverage and the effectiveness of the reservation of rights, defendant's counsel could reasonably have believed that he had authority to represent defendant in its dealings with plaintiff (61 Cal. 2d 638, 644) . This belief was held sufficient to establish the actual authority of its counsel to act for defendant in regard to the policy coverage (61 Cal. 2d 638, 646) .

[a] When Agent's Actual Authority Arises

In Jacoves v. United Merch. Corp. (1992) 9 Cal. App. 4th 88, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 468 , parents sued a psychiatric hospital for wrongful death and negligent infliction of emotional distress alleging that the hospital, through its agents and employees, had negligently treated and released their suicidal son. Shortly after the son was released into the custody of his parents, he killed himself. The hospital sought, and the trial court granted, summary judgment on the plaintiffs' second amended complaint. The court of appeal reversed on the ground that trial issues of fact existed, including whether the son's treating doctor acted as the hospital's actual agent in the course and scope of his duties as director of the hospital's adolescent psychiatric unit. The court noted that Civ. Code §§ 2295 and 2299 provide that actual agency is established when an agent is employed by the principal. In this case, the hospital had not presented any facts that conclusively established that the son's treating doctor was not employed by the hospital. The hospital did not establish that the doctor held his position as director of the adolescent unit on a voluntary basis, did not define the duties of that position, and did not explain why the doctor's releases from liability were obtained through the hospital. The facts that the doctor billed for his service separately from the hospital, maintained staff privileges at other hospitals, and had no office at hospital were not dispositive of the physician-hospital agency issue (9 Cal. App. 4th 88, 103-104) .

In Ripani v. Liberty Loan Corp. (1979) 95 Cal. App. 3d 603, 157 Cal. Rptr. 272 , plaintiff sought to recover monies due under a lease of office space negotiated by defendant's agent on behalf of defendant. Defendant argued that the agent was not authorized to bind it to the lease, but the trial court found that defendant was bound by the lease and the court of appeal affirmed. The court held that an agent's actual authority is such as a principal intentionally confers on an agent, or intentionally or by want of ordinary care allows the agent to believe he or she possesses and may be implied by the facts of a particular case (95 Cal. App.3d 603, 611) . The court relied on the agent's position as branch manager of defendant's office, and the agent's superior's actions concerning the proposed lease, to conclude that the agent had actual authority to execute the lease (95 Cal. App. 3d 603, 611-612) .

18-182 California Points & Authorities § 182.34

§ 182.34 Supporting Contention That Agent Acted Within Scope of Authority--Agent's Acts Were Within Implied Authority [Civ. Code § 2319]

[These points and authorities may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief. When appropriate, the points and authorities in §§ 182.30 -182.33, 182.35, and 182.36 may be combined with the contentions supported by these points and authorities.]

_____ [DEFENDANT or PLAINTIFF] AGENT ACTED WITHIN THE SCOPE OF HIS/HER IMPLIED AUTHORITY IN _____ [specify acts performed, e.g., NEGOTIATING ANCILLARY CONTRACTS] BECAUSE AN AGENT IS AUTHORIZED TO TAKE ACTION THAT WILL ACHIEVE THE PURPOSE OF THE AGENCY AND THAT IS REASONABLE [IN THE FACE OF UNEXPECTED CONDITIONS].

A. Agent's Implied Authority. An agent has authority to do everything necessary or proper and usual, in the ordinary course of business, for effecting the purpose of the agency, and implied authority to use any means that are incidental to and reasonably proper in the performance of an assigned task (Civ. Code § 2319(1); Leno v. Young Men's Christian Ass'n (1971) 17 Cal. App. 3d 651, 658, 95 Cal. Rptr. 96).

[Optional] B. Agent's Authority to Act in Unexpected Situations. An agent does not lose the authority to act whenever he or she encounters unexpected conditions but may proceed in a manner that appears to be reasonably appropriate, as long as it is subordinate to or pertinent to an act that the agent is employed to perform, it is within the ultimate objective of the principal, and it is an act that an agent would not be unlikely to perform (Garber v. Prudential Ins. Co. (1962) 203 Cal. App. 2d 693, 702-703, 22 Cal. Rptr. 123).

[2] Comments

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a particular action of an agent was within the scope of his or her implied authority. This argument may be used whenever an agent allegedly acted within his or her implied authority. For example, an issue of an agent's implied authority might arise in an action by a third party against a principal for damages resulting from an act of an agent when the agent's act or omission was outside the scope of the agent's express authority but was necessary under the circumstances to effect the purpose of the agency. The optional paragraph may be used when the agent went beyond his or her express authority in attempting to carry out the purpose of his or her agency in the face of unexpected conditions, and the actions taken by the agent were reasonable, taken in good faith, and with the sole purpose of achieving the interests of the principal [see Garber v. Prudential Ins. Co. (1962) 203 Cal. App. 2d 693, 702-703, 22 Cal. Rptr. 123] .

The points and authorities in this form may be combined with the points and authorities in § 182.30 when counsel wishes to contend that the agency was created by express agreement. The points and authorities in this form may be combined with the points and authorities in § 182.31 when counsel wishes to contend alternatively that an agreement was created by conduct of parties. The points and authorities in this form may be combined with the points and authorities in § 182.32 when the agreement provides that the principal has the right to control the actions of the agent, although an agency is not expressly created by the agreement and the principal has not exercised the control granted by the agreement. The points and authorities in this form may be combined with the points and authorities in § 182.33 when the actual authority of the agent is disputed. The points and authorities in §§ 182.35 and 182.36 may be combined with these points and authorities as appropriate when counsel wishes to contend alternatively that an authority was conferred by the principal's ratification.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that a particular action was within an agent's implied authority. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Agent's Implied Authority

Leno v. Young Men's Christian Ass'n (1971) 17 Cal. App. 3d 651, 95 Cal. Rptr. 96 , was a wrongful death action brought by the parents of the deceased, who drowned during the ocean checkout of a scuba diving course offered under the auspices of defendant. The course consisted of sessions at defendant's pool, followed by an ocean checkout. At the ocean checkout, the course instructor took along an assistant instructor for each student, including decedent, to check out the student's equipment and to accompany the student in the water. The decedent had trouble with his equipment, became entangled in kelp, and drowned, allegedly because of the negligence of the instructors and their principal, defendant. Plaintiff argued that defendant was liable for the acts of the instructor and the assistant because the instructor, as agent of defendant, acted within his authority to teach the course in retaining an assistant and conducting the ocean checkout of the students. The trial court granted defendant's motion for a nonsuit on the ground that there was no evidence that the instructor was acting as defendant's agent at the ocean checkout, and plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that there was sufficient evidence to submit the issue of defendant's liability to the jury (17 Cal. App. 3d 651, 657) . The court held that an agent has implied authority to use any means that are incidental to and reasonably proper in the performance of an assigned task, including the appointment of a subagent (17 Cal. App. 3d 651, 658) . The court held that defendant's clear links with the course, including the use of its facilities and its receipt of the fee for the course, could reasonably have led the students to assume that the instructor was the agent of defendant (17 Cal. App. 3d 651, 658) . Given the prima facie case that an agency existed, the court held that the question of whether or not the specific acts of the parties involved in decedent's death were within the scope of the authority of the agents should have been decided by a jury rather than on a motion for nonsuit (17 Cal. App. 3d 651, 659) .

[b] Agent's Authority to Act in Unexpected Situations

Garber v. Prudential Ins. Co. (1962) 203 Cal. App. 2d 693, 22 Cal. Rptr. 123 , was a wrongful death action brought by the heirs of the decedent alleging that defendant was responsible as principal for the negligence of its agents that caused decedent's death. The decedent, a photographer who had in the past taken photographs for defendant's company magazine, was approached by an employee of defendant with a proposal to photograph two company employees while scuba diving. The decedent was willing but had never scuba dived, so the employees undertook to train him, and the company rented a watertight camera case for use in the project. Decedent encountered some difficulty because of a weight belt that was apparently too heavy, and drowned before he could reach the shore. The jury entered a verdict for plaintiff, and defendant appealed, arguing that its agents exceeded their authority in trying to train decedent in scuba diving.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that substantial evidence supported the findings of the jury that defendant's employees acted within their authority as agents of defendant (203 Cal. App. 2d 693, 703) . The court held that an agent has implied authority to use any means incidental to and reasonably proper in the performance of an assigned task. The court also stated that an agent otherwise not bound by specific instructions may exercise discretion regarding the time, place, and manner of performing his or her duties (203 Cal. App. 2d 693, 701-702) . The court noted that the employee in charge of the magazine had no specific limits on her authority, and was found to have acted reasonably, in good faith, and with the sole purpose of advancing the interests of her employer in achieving the result that was the purpose of her employment. The court emphasized that, as long as an agent is engaged strictly in an endeavor to bring about a result for which his or her services were engaged, an agent has the authority to act reasonably and in good faith when faced with unusual and unexpected situations. The court held that in such a case, whether or not the agent exceeded his or her authority because of actions taken in response to unusual and unexpected circumstances is a question for the jury (203 Cal. App. 2d 693, 703) .

§ 182.35 Supporting Contention That Actual Agency [Civ. Code § 2299] or Actual Authority [Civ. Code § 2316] Created by Principal's Ratification [Civ. Code § 2307] of Agent's Acts--Principal Accepted Benefits of Act

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief. When appropriate, the points and authorities in §§ 182.30 -182.34 and 182.36 may be combined with the contentions supported by these points and authorities.]

_____ [AN AGENCY WAS CREATED BETWEEN _____ (DEFENDANT or PLAINTIFF), THE ALLEGED AGENT, AND _____ (PLAINTIFF or DEFENDANT), THE ALLEGED PRINCIPAL, and/or AUTHORITY WAS CONFERRED ON _____ (DEFENDANT or PLAINTIFF), THE ALLEGED AGENT, BY _____ (PLAINTIFF or DEFENDANT), THE ALLEGED PRINCIPAL], BECAUSE A PRINCIPAL'S RATIFICATION, BY VOLUNTARILY ADOPTING THE ACT OF ANOTHER WHO IS PURPORTEDLY ACTING AS AN AGENT, AUTHORIZES THE PURPORTED AGENT'S ACT AS IF IT WERE ORIGINALLY AUTHORIZED BY THE PRINCIPAL.

A. Agency Created or Authority Conferred by Precedent Authorization or Subsequent Ratification. An agency may be created, and an authority may be conferred, by a precedent authorization or a subsequent ratification (Civ. Code § 2307).

B. Requisites for Ratification. A ratification can be made only in the manner that would have been necessary to confer an original authority for the act ratified, or when an oral authorization would suffice, by accepting or retaining the benefit of the act, with notice thereof (Civ. Code § 2310).

C. Ratification by Voluntary Adoption of Act. Ratification is the voluntary election by a person to adopt in some manner as his or her own an act that was purportedly done on his or her behalf by another person as an agent; the ratified act is treated as if originally authorized by the principal (Rakestraw v. Rodrigues (1972) 8 Cal. 3d 67, 73, 104

Cal. Rptr. 57, 500 P.2d 1401).

[Optional] D. Ratification by Implication Based on Principal's Conduct. A purported agent's act may be adopted by implication based on conduct of the purported principal from which an intention to consent to or adopt the act may be fairly inferred, including conduct that is inconsistent with any reasonable intention on the principal's part, other than that the principal intended approving and adopting it (Rakestraw v. Rodrigues (1972) 8 Cal. 3d 67, 73, 104 Cal. Rptr. 57, 500 P.2d 1401 ; Streetscenes LLC v. ITC Entm't Group, Inc. (2002) 103 Cal. App. 4th 233, 242-243, 126 Cal. Rptr. 2d 754).

[Optional] E. Principal's Acceptance of Benefits Ratifies Entire Transaction. Ratification is the subsequent adoption by one claiming the benefits of an act that, without authority, another has voluntarily done while ostensibly acting as the agent of the person who affirms the act and who had the power to confer authority (Civ. Code § 2311; Reusche v. California Pac. Title Ins. Co. (1965) 231 Cal. App. 2d 731, 737, 42 Cal. Rptr. 262).

[Optional] F. Principal May Ratify Without Full Knowledge of Facts. Although the law ordinarily requires that a principal be apprised of all the facts surrounding a transaction before the principal will be held to have ratified an agent's unauthorized acts, when ignorance of the facts arises from the principal's own failure to investigate and the circumstances are such as to put a reasonable person on inquiry, the principal may be held to have ratified despite lack of full knowledge (Reusche v. California Pac. Title Ins. Co. (1965) 231 Cal. App. 2d 731, 737, 42 Cal. Rptr. 262).

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that an agency was created and/or that authority was conferred because defendant principal ratified the purported agent's act or acts. This argument may be used whenever a party claims that an agency was created or an authority was conferred by a principal's ratification of an act by one who purported to act as the agent of the principal. For example, the argument supported by this form may be used in an action by a third party to recover tort damages from a principal for the act of an agent. As another example, this argument may be used by an agent as a defense to a principal's action to recover damages sustained as a result of the agent's allegedly unauthorized act.

Optional Paragraph D may be used when the principal did not expressly ratify the purported agent's act, but acted in a manner that implied that he or she ratified the act. Optional Paragraph E may be used when the principal has ratified the purported agent's act by accepting the benefits. Optional Paragraph F is for use when counsel anticipates an opposing contention that defendant principal did not know of the character of the agent's act and therefore should not be held to have ratified the act.

These points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities in § 182.30 when counsel wishes to make the alternative argument that an actual agency was created by express agreement, or with the points and authorities in § 182.31 when counsel wishes to contend alternatively that an agency was created by conduct of parties. They may be combined with the points and authorities in § 182.32 when an alleged agreement provides that the principal has the right to control the actions of the agent, although an agency is not expressly created by the agreement and the principal has not exercised the control granted by the agreement. These points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities in §§ 182.33 and 182.34 when counsel wishes to contend that an agent has actual authority to perform certain acts. They may be combined with the points and authorities in § 182.36 when counsel wishes to contend that an agency was created or an authority was conferred because a principal ratified part of an indivisible transaction.

In addition, these points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that an agency was created or an authority conferred by a principal's ratification of a purported agent's act. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Specifically, counsel should discuss facts showing that the principal voluntarily adopted the act of the purported agent. Counsel should also discuss facts appropriate to the optional paragraphs used, if any. Counsel may discuss facts showing that the principal acted in a manner that implied his or her adoption of the act of the purported agent, or facts showing that the principal retained the benefits of the agent's act with knowledge of the material facts of the unauthorized transaction [see Bate v. Marsteller (1959) 175 Cal. App. 2d 573, 582-583, 346 P.2d 903] .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Ratification by Voluntary Adoption of Act

Rakestraw v. Rodrigues (1972) 8 Cal. 3d 67, 104 Cal. Rptr. 57, 500 P.2d 1401 , was an action to enforce a promissory note in the name of cross complainant principal. The principal cross complained against the agent who forged the principal's signature on the note and against the party who falsely procured an acknowledgment of the principal's signature. After the note was executed, the principal discovered the forgery and demanded a role in the business that was financed by the loan proceeds. Only when the note became delinquent three years later did the principal complain of the forgery, seeking reimbursement from the agent and the other party. The trial court entered judgment for cross plaintiff principal, and cross defendant appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed, holding that cross plaintiff had ratified the forgery (8 Cal. 3d 67, 72) . The Court defined ratification as the voluntary election by a person to adopt in some manner as his or her own an act that was purportedly done on his or her behalf by another person, the effect of which, as to some or all persons, is to treat the act as if originally authorized by him or her (8 Cal. 3d 67, 73) . The Court held that cross plaintiff principal's election not to rescind the transaction when she could have done so, and knew of the nature of the forgery, constituted a ratification of the transaction (8 Cal. 3d 67, 75) .

[b] Ratification by Implication Based on Principal's Conduct

The facts and procedural background of Rakestraw v. Rodrigues (1972) 8 Cal. 3d 67, 104 Cal. Rptr. 57, 500 P.2d 1401 , are discussed in § 182.35[3][a]. The Supreme Court noted that a ratification may occur expressly or by implication. The Court defined a ratification by implication as conduct of the purported principal from which an intention to consent to or adopt the act may be fairly inferred, including conduct that is inconsistent with any reasonable intention on his or her part, other than his or her intention to approve and adopt the act (8 Cal. 3d 67, 73) .

In Streetscenes LLC v. ITC Entm't Group, Inc. (2002) 103 Cal. App. 4th 233, 126 Cal. Rptr. 2d 754 , a movie production company hired an executive to look for projects, with the company having the right of "first refusal" to any projects that he found. The producer worked in the movie production offices like an executive producer of the company. The producer found investors for a movie and promised big profits, but then fraudulently converted over $1 million from the investors. The investors brought an action for fraud against the company, which disavowed the producer's actions and claimed he was an independent producer. The jury found that he was an agent, and awarded damages in money invested and lost in addition to lost profits and punitive damages. On appeal, agency and lost profits were disputed, while the producer's fraud was not disputed. With respect to agency, the court of appeal held that the evidence was sufficient to establish that the movie production company ratified or authorized the movie producer's wrongful conduct. The court noted that the company's failure to repudiate the producer's acts was itself evidence of ratification. Further, its explanation that the producer had a "special relationship" that allowed him to be an executive producer of the company but allowed him space to do his own deals could also be found to be evidence of ratification. A jury could determine that the relationship was created in order to give the company deniability for the producer's acts; i.e., allowing him to practice low-level fraud while allowing the company to claim high-level ignorance (103 Cal. App. 4th 233, 242-243) .

[c] Principal's Acceptance of Benefits Ratifies Entire Transaction

The facts and procedural background of Reusche v. California Pac. Title Ins. Co. (1965) 231 Cal. App. 2d 731, 42 Cal. Rptr. 262 , are discussed in § 182.125[3][a]. Plaintiff principal received a check for part of the proceeds of a loan obtained by her agent, who forged plaintiff's signature, and plaintiff retained the money even after she learned of the forgery. The court held that a principal's retention of the benefits of an agent's unauthorized transaction may constitute a ratification of the agent's act (231 Cal. App. 2d 731, 737-738) .

[d] Principal May Ratify Without Full Knowledge of Facts

The facts and procedural background of Reusche v. California Pac. Title Ins. Co. (1965) 231 Cal. App. 2d 731, 42 Cal. Rptr. 262 , are discussed in § 182.125[3][a]. Plaintiff principal argued that because she did not know the true source of the wrongfully obtained funds when she accepted them she could not have ratified the agent's forgery. The court held that although the law ordinarily requires that a principal be apprised of all the facts surrounding a transaction before the principal will be held to have ratified an agent's unauthorized acts, when ignorance of the facts arises from the principal's own failure to investigate and the circumstances are such as to put a reasonable person on inquiry, the principal may be held to have ratified despite lack of full knowledge (231 Cal. App. 2d 731, 737) . The court held that plaintiff's inaction after she learned of the forgery, and her retention of the funds that she knew were the result of the forgery, constituted a ratification of the loan transaction (231 Cal. App. 2d 731, 738) .

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

_____ [PLAINTIFF or DEFENDANT], THE ALLEGED PRINCIPAL, RATIFIED THE ENTIRE TRANSACTION CONCLUDED BY _____ [DEFENDANT or PLAINTIFF], THE ALLEGED AGENT, BECAUSE A PRINCIPAL WHO RATIFIES PART OF A TRANSACTION IS DEEMED TO HAVE RATIFIED THE ENTIRE TRANSACTION.

A. Ratification of Part of Transaction Ratifies Whole. A principal is not allowed to ratify the unauthorized acts of an agent to the extent that they are beneficial, and disavow them to the extent that they are damaging and thus, if a principal ratifies part of a transaction, he or she is deemed to ratify the whole of it (Civ. Code § 2311; Navrides v. Zurich Ins. Co. (1971) 5 Cal. 3d 698, 704, 97 Cal. Rptr. 309, 488 P.2d 637 ; Price v. McConnell (1960) 184 Cal. App. 2d 660, 666, 7 Cal. Rptr. 695).

[Optional] B. Closely Related Transactions Treated as One. Separate transactions may be so closely related that a principal may not retain the benefits of one and deny that it ratified another (Vanciel v. Kumle (1945) 26 Cal. 2d 732, 735, 160 P.2d 802).

[Optional] C. Lawsuit to Enforce Agent's Unauthorized Act May Constitute Ratification. A principal may ratify the unauthorized act of an agent by bringing suit to enforce part of the agent's unauthorized transaction (Navrides v. Zurich Ins. Co. (1971) 5 Cal. 3d 698, 704, 97 Cal. Rptr. 309, 488 P.2d 637 ; Price v. McConnell (1960) 184 Cal. App. 2d 660, 666, 7 Cal. Rptr. 695).

[2] Comments

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that defendant principal is liable for the act of his or her agent, although not authorized by a prior grant of authority, because defendant principal ratified the entire transaction by ratifying part of it. These points and authorities should be combined with the appropriate points and authorities in § 182.35. They may be used when the principal has ratified part of a transaction and the partial ratification is claimed to constitute a ratification of the entire transaction. For example, they may be used in an action to recover tort damages from a principal for the act of an agent, when the principal has accepted a benefit of the agent's act but refuses to accept the responsibility for the damages caused by the act. Optional Paragraph B is for use when the transactions by the agent are so closely related that ratification of one should constitute ratification of all of the transactions. Optional Paragraph C is for use when the act of the principal that constitutes the ratification is a lawsuit based on part of the agent's unauthorized transaction.

These points and authorities should be combined with the points and authorities in § 182.35, and when appropriate, the points and authorities in §§ 182.30 -182.34 may be combined with the contention supported by these points and authorities. These points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities in § 182.30 when counsel wishes to make the alternative argument that an actual agency was created by express agreement or with the points and authorities in § 182.31 when counsel wishes to contend alternatively that an agency was created by conduct of parties. These points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities in § 182.32 when an alleged agreement provides that the principal has the right to control the actions of the agent, although an agency is not expressly created by the agreement and the principal has not exercised the control granted by the agreement. These points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities in §§ 182.33 and 182.34 when counsel wishes to contend that an agent has actual authority to perform certain acts.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss facts showing that defendant principal ratified part of the transaction, and that another part of the transaction has not been expressly ratified. If there is an issue concerning the connection between the parts of the transaction, counsel should discuss facts showing that the apparently unrelated transactions are in fact a single transaction.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Ratification of Part of Transaction Ratifies Whole

Navrides v. Zurich Ins. Co. (1971) 5 Cal. 3d 698, 704, 97 Cal. Rptr. 309, 488 P.2d 637 , was an action by plaintiff principal to recover the benefits of a settlement agreement negotiated by her agent attorney with defendant. Plaintiff principal had retained an attorney to represent her in an action against an insured of defendant. The attorney negotiated a settlement of the action, but plaintiff rejected the offer. The attorney falsely represented to defendant that plaintiff principal accepted the offer, and the attorney accepted a draft from defendant. The attorney forged plaintiff principal's indorsement on the draft and absconded with the funds. Plaintiff then brought this action to recover the amount of defendant's settlement offer. The trial court entered judgment for plaintiff principal, and defendant appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed. The Court held that the action to recover the amount of the settlement offer necessarily constituted a ratification of the agreement negotiated by the attorney (5 Cal. 3d 698, 704) . The Court relied on Civ. Code § 2311 to hold that a principal who ratifies part of a transaction is deemed to ratify the whole of it (5 Cal. 3d 698, 704) . The Court held that plaintiff principal, by ratifying the agreement, also ratified the attorney's act of receiving the settlement draft and could not proceed against defendant to recover the amount of the draft that defendant had already delivered to plaintiff's agent (5 Cal. 3d 698, 704-705) .

Price v. McConnell (1960) 184 Cal. App. 2d 660, 7 Cal. Rptr. 695 , involved a cross complaint seeking specific performance of an oral contract for the sale of purebred cattle, which provided for the delivery of their registration papers and records. Plaintiff had brought the action seeking recovery of the purchase price of the cattle that the complaint alleged had been delivered to defendant. Defendant then filed the cross complaint alleging that plaintiff's agent agreed to sell the cattle to defendant and represented that for an additional $25 the agent agreed to deliver the registration papers and records. The trial court entered judgment for defendant on the cross complaint, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that when plaintiff filed suit on the express oral contract of the agent, he ratified the agent's unauthorized acts of including the records and registration papers as part of the contract of sale (184 Cal. App. 2d 660, 665) . The court held that a principal may ratify an agent's unauthorized act by bringing suit thereon (184 Cal. App. 2d 660, 665-666) . Plaintiff's ratification of part of the transaction was held to constitute a ratification of the entire transaction (184 Cal. App. 2d 660, 666) .

[b] Closely Related Transactions Treated as One

In Vanciel v. Kumle (1945) 26 Cal. 2d 732, 160 P.2d 802 , plaintiffs brought an action to recover royalty payments due under a mining lease. Plaintiffs had assigned all royalties due them under the lease to defendant principal, a bank, to secure a loan made by defendant principal. The lease provided for payments of advance royalty payments by the lessees, with the amounts paid to be credited against future royalties when accrued. After the lessee defendants were given notice of the assignment, they made some payments of advance royalties provided for under the lease to plaintiff. An agent of defendant principal consented to the first payment of advance royalties to plaintiff and did not object to the next 13 payments. The agent received a statement from plaintiffs detailing the 12 payments that had then been made, and the agent prevailed on the lessee defendants to increase their monthly payments to defendant principal, which the lessee defendants did. In the current action, defendant principal filed a pleading seeking recovery of the payments paid to plaintiffs, which plaintiffs opposed on the ground that defendant principal had ratified the agent's conduct in not seeking recovery of the advance royalty payments. The trial court entered judgment for defendant principal in the amount of those payments, and plaintiffs appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed, holding that by agreeing to the increased payments after it knew of the payments to plaintiff, defendant principal ratified both transactions (26 Cal. 2d 732, 735) . The Court held that a principal may not retain the benefits of one transaction and deny that it ratified another when the transactions are closely related (26 Cal. 2d 732, 735) . The Court reasoned that defendants would not have increased their payments had the previous payments to plaintiffs been objectionable, and that the separate agreements were so closely related that the ratification of the increased payments constituted a ratification of the payments to plaintiff as well (26 Cal. 2d 732, 735) .

[c] Lawsuit to Enforce Agent's Unauthorized Act May Constitute Ratification

The facts and procedural background of Navrides v. Zurich Ins. Co. (1971) 5 Cal. 3d 698, 97 Cal. Rptr. 309, 488 P.2d 637 , are discussed in § 182.36[3][a]. The Supreme Court held that a principal who brings a lawsuit to enforce part of an agent's unauthorized transaction thereby ratifies the entire transaction. Thus, the Court held that by bringing suit to enforce the settlement agreement negotiated by her attorney, plaintiff ratified the entire transaction (5 Cal. 3d 698, 704) .

The facts and procedural background of Price v. McConnell (1960) 184 Cal. App. 2d 660, 7 Cal. Rptr. 695 , are discussed in § 182.36[3][a]. The court held that an action to enforce an agent's unauthorized act is a ratification of that act, and that the ratification of part of the transaction is a ratification of the whole. Thus, the court held that by bringing suit to enforce the oral contract entered into by the agent, plaintiff principal ratified the entire contract, including the promise to deliver the records and registration papers of the cattle (184 Cal. App. 2d 660, 666) .

Friddle v. Epstein (1993) 16 Cal. App. 4th 1649, 21 Cal. Rptr. 2d 85 , involved a sale of property to defendants under an agreement that referred to another document regarding an agreement to pay a broker's commission to plaintiff. The defendants refused to pay the commission, and the trial court found for defendant on this point, on the ground that because the separate agreement was not signed by defendants it did not satisfy the statute of frauds. The court of appeal reversed this determination, holding that the defendants' ratification of the purchase agreement also constituted a ratification of the commission agreement under the rule of Civ. Code § 2311 that ratification of part of an agreement is a ratification of the whole (16 Cal. App. 4th 1649, 1656) . The court restated the rule that a party may not split the agency transaction into separate parts, and take the benefits without the burdens (16 Cal. App. 4th 1649, 1656) .

In Warshauer v. Bauer Constr. Co. (1960) 179 Cal. App. 2d 44, 3 Cal. Rptr. 570 , plaintiff sued to recover a down payment on a house paid to the agent of defendant principal. Plaintiff agreed to purchase a house from defendant principal and was permitted by defendant's agent to move into the house before plaintiff's loan was approved on the condition that rent was paid. The agent also demanded a check for the down payment agreed on between plaintiff and defendant principal, and plaintiff gave the agent a check in the amount of the down payment plus two months' rent that the agent absconded with. The court of appeal reversed a judgment for defendant principal, holding that a principal's ratification of part of a transaction constitutes a ratification of the entire transaction (179 Cal. App. 2d 44, 51-52) . Defendant's lawsuit for the amount of the rent was held to be a ratification of the entire transaction with the agent, although defendant never received the down payment or the rent, on the ground that defendant's ratification of part of the agreement necessarily ratified the entire transaction and entitled plaintiff to the return of the down payment (179 Cal. App. 2d 44, 51-52) .

18-182 California Points & Authorities § 182.37

§ 182.37 Opposing Contention That Actual Agency [Civ. Code § 2299] Created--Principal and Agent Did Not Agree to Create Agency

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief. When appropriate, the points and authorities in §§ 182.38 -182.43 may be combined with the contentions supported by the following points and authorities.]

AN ACTUAL AGENCY WAS NOT CREATED BETWEEN _____ [PLAINTIFF or DEFENDANT], THE ALLEGED PRINCIPAL, AND _____ [DEFENDANT or PLAINTIFF], THE ALLEGED AGENT, BECAUSE BOTH PRINCIPAL AND AGENT MUST AGREE TO THE CREATION OF THE AGENCY BY WORDS OR CONDUCT.

A. Actual Agency. [See § 182.30[1], Paragraph A.]

B. Burden of Proof of Agency. The burden of proving agency is on the party asserting its existence (K. King and G. Shuler Corp. v. King (1968) 259 Cal. App. 2d 383, 393, 66 Cal. Rptr. 330).

C. No Presumption of Agency. The law indulges in no presumption that an agency exists but instead presumes that a person is acting for himself or herself and not as an agent for another (K. King and G. Shuler Corp. v. King (1968) 259 Cal. App. 2d 383, 393, 66 Cal. Rptr. 330).

D. Both Agent and Principal Must Agree to Create Actual Agency. Formation of an agency relationship is a bilateral matter, with words or conduct by both principal and agent necessary to create the relationship (Hanks v. Carter & Higgins of Cal., Inc. (1967) 250 Cal. App. 2d 156, 163, 58 Cal. Rptr. 190).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a party's contention that an actual agency was created either by agreement or by the conduct of the alleged principal and agent. This contention may be used when it is alleged that no actual agency existed between the alleged principal and alleged agent because they did not both agree, either expressly or by their conduct, to create the relationship. For example, the argument supported by this memorandum might be raised by a defendant who allegedly acted as principal in his or her dealings with an alleged agent, when the alleged agent's act or omission caused plaintiff's injuries that form the basis for the action. As another example, this argument might be raised as a defense in an action for compensation by an alleged agent against the alleged principal.

The points and authorities in § 182.38 may be combined with these points and authorities when counsel wishes to contend alternatively that no agency was created because the alleged principal did not have the right to control the alleged agent. The points and authorities in § 182.39 may be combined with these points and authorities when counsel wishes to contend alternatively that any agency that was created was terminated by mutual abandonment. The points and authorities in §§ 182.40 and 182.41 may be combined with these points and authorities when counsel also wishes to contend that an agent did not have actual authority to perform certain acts. The points and authorities in §§ 182.42 and 182.43 may be combined with these points and authorities when counsel wishes to contend alternatively that an agency was not created, or actual authority was not conferred, because there was no ratification by the principal.

An agency is either actual or ostensible, and this form does not deal with ostensible agency, which arises when a principal intentionally or by want of ordinary care causes or allows a third party to believe another to be his or her agent who is not really employed by the principal [Civ. Code §§ 2298, 2300]. This form is for use only when the issue is whether or not there was an actual agency, and not when the belief of a third person is at issue. For forms of points and authorities for use in opposing the contention that an ostensible authority was created because a third party was led to believe an agency was created by the conduct of the principal, see § 182.121.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that no actual agency was created because both parties failed to assent, expressly or through their conduct, to the alleged agency agreement. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities in §§ 182.30 -182.32.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Burden of Proof of Agency

K. King and G. Shuler Corp. v. King (1968) 259 Cal. App. 2d 383, 66 Cal. Rptr. 330 , was an action for accounting and fraud against defendant, who was allegedly the agent of plaintiff. Plaintiff was a corporation formed to acquire and operate a business, and was in debt to the previous owner of the business. Defendant married one of the principal shareholders of plaintiff, and eventually agreed with the owners of plaintiff's stock to purchase the business. The owners allowed defendant to operate the business under this agreement, and the business lost money until the obligations to the former owner were in default. The former owner enforced his lien on defendant's stock, reacquiring control, and then brought this action. Plaintiff argued that defendant was acting as an agent of plaintiff in operating the business and therefore should be held liable for losses resulting from defendant's lack of care. The trial court held that no agency existed, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that substantial evidence supported the trial court's finding that plaintiff had not proved that defendant was its agent (259 Cal. App. 2d 383, 394) . The court based its finding on the principle that the law indulges in no presumption that an agency exists, but instead presumes that a person is acting for himself or herself and not as agent for another. The burden of proof of agency was therefore held to be on plaintiff, who contended that the agency existed (259 Cal. App. 2d 383, 393) . Under the circumstances, plaintiff was held not to have met its burden of proving the agency relationship necessary to impose on defendant the fiduciary duties that defendant allegedly breached (259 Cal. App. 2d 383, 396) .

[b] No Presumption of Agency

K. King and G. Shuler Corp. v. King (1968) 259 Cal. App. 2d 383, 66 Cal. Rptr. 330 , is discussed in § 182.37[3][a].

[c] Both Agent and Principal Must Agree to Create Actual Agency

In Hanks v. Carter & Higgins of Cal., Inc. (1967) 250 Cal. App. 2d 156, 58 Cal. Rptr. 190 , defendants in an action for indemnity based on an indemnity agreement cross complained against the company that had written the bonds. Cross complainants alleged that cross defendant was cross complainants' agent, and was negligent in not revoking cross complainants' indemnity agreements when instructed to do so. When defendants-cross complainants first sought bonds through cross defendant, they were required to execute indemnity agreements in favor of plaintiffs, in whose name the bonds were written. Cross complainants later sent revocations of the indemnity agreements to cross defendant, although the agreements provided for another specific method of revocation. The trial court found that cross defendant was the agent of defendants-cross complainants and was negligent in its conduct of the agency, and cross defendant appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that the formation of an agency is a bilateral matter, with words or conduct of both parties necessary to create the relationship. The court held that no evidence had been introduced to show that cross defendants had agreed to represent defendants in their relationship with the bonding company, and therefore no actual agency existed between defendants and cross defendants (250 Cal. App. 2d 156, 164) . The court refused to hold that the silence of cross defendants at the time the indemnity agreement was delivered constituted an offer of agency, because such a holding would mean that an agent becomes the agent of an opposing contracting party unless that intention is expressly disavowed (250 Cal. App. 2d 156, 164) .

An agency is either actual or ostensible [Civ. Code § 2298] Hanks did not deal with the issue of ostensible agency, because there were no allegations of representations, express or implied, by the principal to a third party who dealt with the agent [see Civ. Code § 2300]. Therefore, the points in this form may be used only when counsel wishes to establish that an actual agency agreement was or was not reached between the principal and the agent.

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Both Principal and Agent Must Agree to Create Actual Agency

In Universal Bank v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp. (1997) 62 Cal. App. 4th 1062, 73 Cal. Rptr. 2d 196 , a bank sued a title insurance company for breach of title company instructions, fraud, and negligence based on alleged misconduct during the escrow process of the title insurance company's issuing agent. The trial court found that the issuing agent was only an agent for the purpose of issuing the title insurance policy and there was no evidence the title insurance company allowed the issuing agent to be an agent in any escrow capacity. The trial court granted summary judgment in favor of the title insurance company. The bank appealed and the court of appeal affirmed. The court found that the underwriting agreement between the title insurance company and the issuing agent revealed the parties' intent as to the nature of the agency relationship. The unambiguous terms of the agreement specifically excluded sub-escrow activities from the scope of the agency. Further, neither the title insurer's advertising brochures nor its internal documents established that the issuing agent was acting as the insurer's sub-escrow agent as to the insured lender's real estate closing (62 Cal. App. 4th 1062, 1066-1068) .

Violette v. Shoup (1993) 16 Cal. App. 4th 611, 20 Cal. Rptr. 2d 358 , involved a plaintiff who had asked defendant, a life insurance salesman, for a referral to a financial planner. Defendant mentioned the name of an acquaintance, and introduced plaintiff to the acquaintance. Defendant had not made any representations about the planner or her competency. Plaintiff named defendant in the action to recover damages suffered when plaintiff's investment was lost, arguing that the planner's payment of a commission to defendant created an agency relationship. The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's grant of summary judgment in defendant's favor, holding that there was no evidence that defendant had acted as an agent (of either the planner or plaintiff) in making the referral, but was instead doing so as a mere personal favor. Quoting from Edwards v. Freeman (1949) 34 Cal. 2d 589, 591-592, 212 P.2d 883 , the court held that a person does not become another's agent simply by offering help or making a suggestion. In such a situation, the person is not subject to any legal duty of service, and has not assented to any right of control (16 Cal. App. 4th 611, 620) .

[2] Comments

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a party's contention that an agency was created either by agreement or by the conduct of the alleged principal and agent. The contention may be used when the alleged principal did not have the right to control the activities of the alleged agent, and therefore no agency existed. For example, the argument supported by the memorandum might be raised by a defendant who allegedly acted as principal in his or her dealings with an alleged agent, when the alleged agent's act or omission caused plaintiff's injuries that form the basis for the action.

These points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities in § 182.37 when counsel wishes to contend alternatively that the principal and agent did not agree to create an actual agency. The points and authorities in § 182.39 may be combined with the points and authorities when counsel wishes to contend alternatively that any agency that was created was terminated by mutual abandonment. The points and authorities in §§ 182.40 and 182.41 may be combined with these points and authorities when counsel also wishes to contend that an agent did not have actual authority to perform certain acts. The points and authorities in §§ 182.42 and 182.43 may be combined with these points and authorities when counsel wishes to contend alternatively that an agency was not created, or actual authority was not conferred, because there was no ratification by the principal.

An agency is either actual or ostensible. This form does not deal with ostensible agency, which arises when a principal intentionally or by want of ordinary care causes or allows a third party to believe another to be his or her agent who is not really employed by the principal [see Civ. Code §§ 2298, 2300]. The form is for use when the issue is whether or not an agency was created because of an agreement between or conduct by the alleged principal and alleged agent, and not when the belief of a third person is at issue. For points and authorities for use in opposing the contention that an ostensible authority was created because a third party was led to believe an agency was created by the conduct of the principal, see § 182.121.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that an agency was not created because the alleged principal lacked the right to control the activities of the alleged agent. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities in §§ 182.30 -182.32.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Right to Control Prerequisite to Finding of Actual Agency

DeSuza v. Andersack (1976) 63 Cal. App. 3d 694, 133 Cal. Rptr. 920 , was an action for personal injuries suffered by plaintiff when the motorcycle she was driving was struck by a car in which defendant was a passenger. Defendant and her husband were eating at a cafe operated by friends before leaving their vacation home for their residence in Los Angeles when defendant remembered she had left some apricots in the vacation house. One of the owners of the cafe offered to drive defendant to the house to pick up the apricots and a sweater that had been left there by the cafe owner. While driving an automobile registered to her daughter, the cafe owner collided with plaintiff's motorcycle. Plaintiff's action alleged that the cafe owner was acting as defendant's agent, and that defendant was therefore vicariously responsible for the negligence of the alleged agent. Summary judgment was granted for defendant, and plaintiff appealed, arguing that the facts supported a finding that the driver had been acting as defendant's agent and that defendant was therefore vicariously liable for plaintiff's damage.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that the evidence did not establish any type of relationship from which an agency could be inferred (63 Cal. App. 3d 694, 700) . The court emphasized that the right of the alleged principal to control the behavior of the alleged agent is an essential element that must be factually present in order to establish an agency (63 Cal. App. 3d 694, 699) . The court characterized the errand as one in which both defendant and the cafe owner had an interest, and neither asserted the right to control the actions of the other (63 Cal. App. 3d 694, 699-700) . The evidence was held susceptible of only one inference, i.e., the absence of agency, and therefore no triable issue of fact existed (63 Cal. App. 3d 694, 700) . While the court did not specify that it was dealing with actual agency, the court's examination of the lack of any agreement between the alleged principal and agent, without any examination of plaintiff's belief in the existence of agency at the time of the accident, makes clear that the court was discussing the existence of actual, rather than ostensible, agency [see Civ. Code §§ 2298, 2299, 2300].

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Right to Control Prerequisite to Finding of Actual Agency

In Kaplan v. Coldwell Banker Residential Affiliates, Inc. (1997) 59 Cal. App. 4th 741, 69 Cal. Rptr. 2d 640 ; plaintiff, a superior court judge, sued his real estate broker, a Coldwell Banker franchisee, for fraud and named Coldwell Banker as a defendant on a respondeat superior theory. The franchisee independently owned and operated his real estate franchise, and the franchise agreement required the franchisee to hold himself out to the public as an independent contractor. The evidence was undisputed that Coldwell did not control the day-to-day operation of its franchisee's real estate office. The trial court granted Coldwell Banker's motion for summary judgment. The court of appeal affirmed this ruling, holding that plaintiff produced no evidence showing that Coldwell Banker controlled or had the right to control the day-to-day operations of the office. Therefore it was not liable for franchisee's acts or omissions as a real estate broker on a true agency respondeat superior theory. However, because it determined that there was a triable issue of fact present with respect to ostensible agency, it ultimately reversed. As to the right to control issue the court stated that even though Coldwell Banker received a royalty based on the franchisee's gross receipts no true agency relationship was established where the undisputed evidence showed that the franchisee had independently owned and operated the franchise, hired and fired employees, set office wages and commissions, determined business hours, and had business cards and letterhead printed with a standard disclaimer that his office was independently owned and operated (59 Cal. App. 4th 741, 746) .

Flores v. Brown (1952) 39 Cal. 2d 622, 248 P.2d 922 , was an action against the driver of a truck and the owner of the trailer pulled by the truck for damages resulting from a collision between the truck and plaintiffs' vehicle. The action sought damages from the owner of the trailer on the ground that the truck's driver was acting as the trailer owner's agent. The jury found for plaintiffs in four of the consolidated actions and for defendants in one, but the trial court ordered a new trial in all actions, and all parties appealed. The court of appeal reversed the judgments against the owner of the trailer on the ground that no evidence existed that the truck owner was subject to the control of the trailer owner and therefore no agency relationship existed between them (39 Cal. 2d 622, 628) .

In Edwards v. Freeman (1949) 34 Cal. 2d 589, 212 P.2d 883 , plaintiff sought damages from the driver of an automobile that struck plaintiff's son's car while plaintiff was a passenger. Plaintiff had asked her son to take her to town the next time he went, and the collision occurred on the trip. Defendant contended that plaintiff was a principal and her son an agent, permitting her son's contributory negligence to be imputed to her and barring her recovery (this case arose before Li v. Yellow Cab Co. (1975) 13 Cal. 3d 804, 828-829, 119 Cal. Rptr. 858, 532 P.2d 1226 , which held that contributory negligence is not a complete bar to recovery and adopted a system of pure comparative negligence). The Supreme Court reversed a judgment for defendant entered after the trial court instructed the jury on defendant's theory. The Court held that the evidence did not support an inference of agency given plaintiff's lack of control over her son's conduct (34 Cal. 2d 589, 592) .

[2] Comments

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that an actual agency exists. This contention may be raised when the parties to an agency have terminated their agreement by mutual abandonment. For example, this contention may be raised by an agent as a defense to a principal's action for the alleged agent's breach of fiduciary duties. In addition, these points and authorities may be used by a principal as a defense to an agent's action for compensation, or in any other action in which the existence of an agency relationship is at issue. The optional paragraph may be used when contending that the agency was abandoned impliedly by the parties' conduct rather than expressly.

These points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities in § 182.37 when counsel wishes to contend alternatively that the principal and agent did not agree to create an actual agency. These points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities in § 182.38 when counsel wishes to contend alternatively that no actual agency was created because the alleged principal had no right to control the alleged agent. The points and authorities in §§ 182.40 and 182.41 may be combined with these points and authorities when counsel also wishes to contend that an agent did not have actual authority to perform certain acts. The points and authorities in §§ 182.42 and 182.43 may be combined with these points and authorities when counsel wishes to contend alternatively that an agency was not created, or actual authority was not conferred, because there was no ratification by the principal.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss the facts showing that the agency was abandoned by both parties, including, when appropriate, facts showing that the agency was impliedly abandoned because the parties acted as though the agency relationship no longer existed.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the points and authorities in §§ 182.30 -182.32.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Mutual Abandonment Terminates Actual Agency Relationship

Preszler v. Dudley (1957) 153 Cal. App. 2d 120, 314 P.2d 138 , was an action for damages alleging that defendants had purchased stock as plaintiff's agents and had not delivered the stock to plaintiff. One of the defendants desired to withdraw from a corporation in which he owned stock, and the other defendants approached defendant about buying into the company. An agreement for the purchase of the stock was arranged in which defendants would advance the bulk of the money if plaintiff would work for the company and repay the money advanced. Plaintiff worked for the company for a few months, but then quit despite defendants' warning that employment was necessary for plaintiff's continued participation. Defendants then paid the balance due on the stock and took the stock in their own names. Plaintiff argued that defendants were acting on plaintiff's behalf in buying the stock, but the trial court found for defendants and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that the trial court's finding that the agency was abandoned by mutual consent of the parties was supported by substantial evidence (153 Cal. App. 2d 120, 124) . While mutual abandonment is not one of the methods of termination enumerated in Civ. Code §§ 2355 and 2356, the court pointed out that an agency usually depends on the assent of both parties (153 Cal. App. 2d 120, 123) . The court held that even when an agency may not be terminated by the act of one party, both parties may agree to rescind or cancel the contract between them (153 Cal.

App. 2d 120, 123-124) . The court also held that mutual abandonment of an agency terminates the relationship between the parties (153 Cal. App. 2d 120, 124) . Finally, the court held that in this case substantial evidence supported the conclusion of the trial court that plaintiff's act of leaving the corporation and the lack of any attempt to reimburse defendants for the money they expended constituted an intent to abandon the agency, and that defendants consented thereto (153 Cal. App. 2d 120, 124) .

NOTE:

Although the court in Prezler did not expressly refer to the agency as an actual agency, Civ. Code § 2298 provides that an agency is either actual or ostensible. An ostensible agency arises when the principal intentionally, or by want of ordinary care, causes a third person to believe that another person is the principal's agent [see Civ. Code § 2300]. The issue of a third party's belief in the agency did not arise with regard to the agency that was mutually abandoned in Prezler. For forms of points and authorities for use in opposing the contention that an ostensible authority was created because a third party was led to believe an agency was created by the conduct of the principal, see §§ 182.130 and 182.131.

[b] Abandonment May Be Implied by Conduct

The facts and procedural background of Preszler v. Dudley (1957) 153 Cal. App. 2d 120, 314 P.2d 138 , are discussed in § 182.39[3][a]. The court held that an abandonment is a matter of intent, to be ascertained from the facts and circumstances surrounding the alleged abandonment, and that an abandonment may be implied from the acts of the parties (153 Cal. App. 2d 120, 124) .

_____ [DEFENDANT or PLAINTIFF] AGENT DID NOT HAVE ACTUAL AUTHORITY TO _____ [specify acts performed, e.g., NEGOTIATE CONTRACTS], BECAUSE TO HAVE ACTUAL AUTHORITY BASED ON THE INTENTIONAL OR NEGLIGENT CONDUCT OF A PRINCIPAL, AN AGENT MUST ACTUALLY BELIEVE THAT THE AUTHORITY EXISTS.

A. Actual Authority Defined. [See § 182.32[1], Paragraph A.]

B. Belief of Agent Is Essential to Finding of Actual Authority. An agent has actual authority because the principal has intentionally, or by want of ordinary care, allowed the agent to believe he or she has that authority, only if the agent actually believes that he or she has the authority (Civ. Code § 2316; Columbia Outfitting Co. v. Freeman (1950) 36 Cal. 2d 216, 218-219, 223 P.2d 21).

[2] Comments

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a party's contention that an agent had actual authority to perform certain acts. This argument may be used whenever the contention that an actual authority existed because the principal intentionally or by want of ordinary care allowed the agent to believe that he or she had authority is opposed on the ground that the agent did not actually believe that he or she possessed the alleged authority [see Civ. Code § 2316

]. For example, the argument supported by this memorandum may be raised by a defendant principal who has been sued by a third party damaged by an agent's unauthorized act, when the evidence suggests that the agent knew that he or she did not have the authority to do the act that damaged the third party.

These points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities in § 182.37 when counsel wishes to contend alternatively that the principal and agent did not agree to create an actual agency. These points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities in § 182.38 when counsel wishes to contend alternatively that no actual agency was created because the alleged principal had no right to control the alleged agent. These points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities in § 182.39 when counsel wishes to contend alternatively that if an agency was created and an authority was conferred, the agency was terminated by mutual abandonment. The points and authorities in § 182.41 may be combined with these points and authorities when counsel wishes to contend alternatively that no actual authority was conferred on the agent, or that a specific authority was not conferred on the agent, because the agent's belief in his or her authority was not based on conduct of the principal. The points and authorities in §§ 182.42 and 182.43 may be combined with these points and authorities when counsel wishes to contend alternatively that an agency was not created, or actual authority was not conferred, because there was no ratification by the principal.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that an agent did not have actual authority to perform certain acts because the agent did not believe that he or she had the claimed authority. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss the facts showing that the agent did not believe that he or she actually had the authority claimed by the opposing party. For example, if the position occupied by the agent is one in which most decisions must be cleared with a higher official, counsel should discuss facts showing that the agent failed to inform the higher official of the act at issue or that the agent attempted to keep the higher official from learning of the act at issue.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities in § 182.33.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Belief of Agent Is Essential to Finding of Actual Authority

In Columbia Outfitting Co. v. Freeman (1950) 36 Cal. 2d 216, 223 P.2d 21 , plaintiff brought an action to compel defendant to return accounts that had been recalled, and defendant cross complained to enforce his right to compensation for recalled accounts. Defendant had collected on delinquent accounts under an oral contract with plaintiff that paid defendant one half of all collections and allowed plaintiff to recall any account at any time without compensation to defendant. When plaintiff hired a new credit manager, defendant drafted a written contract for collections providing that defendant would be paid the same commission on all accounts, whether recalled by plaintiff or collected. The credit manager signed the contract on behalf of plaintiff without notifying anyone and kept the contract in his desk. Defendant argued that the credit manager did not have express authority to bind defendant to the contract and that the manager could not have believed that he had such authority given the office procedures that required him to obtain approval before authorizing the recall of accounts and other actions regarding collection of delinquent accounts. The trial court entered judgment for plaintiff on the cross complaint on the ground that the credit manager was not authorized to make the contract with defendant, and defendant appealed.

The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that the credit manager did not have authority to bind plaintiff to the written contract with defendant (36 Cal. 2d 216, 219) . The Court explained that the actual authority provided for by Civ. Code § 2316 is divided into express authority that a principal intentionally confers on the agent, and implied authority that a principal intentionally, or by want of ordinary care, allows the agent to believe he or she possesses (36 Cal. 2d 216, 218) . The Court noted that there was no evidence that plaintiff expressly or intentionally conferred on the credit manager the authority to agree to the contract with defendant (36 Cal. 2d 216, 218-219) . The Court also held that implied authority depends on the belief of the agent that such authority exists. The Court examined the evidence concerning the credit manager's conduct in executing the contract with defendant and concluded that the credit manager's failure to inform others in plaintiff company of the contract and his prior clearance of other credit arrangements with his superiors constituted substantial evidence that he did not believe that he had the actual authority to bind plaintiff to the contract at issue (36 Cal. 2d 216, 219) .

_____ [DEFENDANT or PLAINTIFF] AGENT DID NOT HAVE ACTUAL AUTHORITY TO _____ [specify acts performed, e.g., NEGOTIATE LONG-TERM CONTRACTS], BECAUSE FOR AN AGENT TO HAVE ACTUAL AUTHORITY, THE AGENT'S BELIEF IN HIS/HER AUTHORITY MUST BE BASED ON THE PRINCIPAL'S INTENTIONAL OR NEGLIGENT CONDUCT.

A. Actual Authority Defined. [See § 182.32[1], Paragraph A.]

B. Agent's Belief Must Be Based on Conduct of Principal. The fact of an agent's belief in actual authority is not enough to establish his or her actual authority; it must be shown that the belief was engendered by conduct of the principal (South Sacramento Drayage Co. v. Campbell Soup Co. (1963) 220 Cal. App. 2d 851, 856, 34 Cal. Rptr. 137).

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a party's contention that an agent had actual authority to perform certain acts. This argument may be used whenever the contention that an actual authority existed because the principal intentionally or by want of ordinary care allowed the agent to believe that he or she had authority is opposed on the ground that the agent's belief was not based on the principal's conduct. For example, the argument supported by this memorandum may be raised by a principal who has been sued by a third party for the act of an agent, when the principal did not expressly authorize the act and the agent's belief that the authority existed was not derived from conduct of the principal.

These points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities in § 182.37 when counsel wishes to contend alternatively that the principal and agent did not agree to create an actual agency. These points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities in § 182.38 when counsel wishes to contend alternatively that no actual agency was created because the alleged principal had no right to control the alleged agent. These points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities in § 182.39 when counsel wishes to contend alternatively that if an agency was created and an authority was conferred, the agency was terminated by mutual abandonment. These points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities in § 182.40 when counsel wishes to contend alternatively that no actual authority was conferred on the agent, or that a specific authority was not conferred on the agent, because the agent did not believe that he or she was authorized by the principal. The points and authorities in §§ 182.42 and 182.43 may be combined with these points and authorities when counsel wishes to contend alternatively that an agency was not created, or actual authority was not conferred, because the principal did not ratify the agent's acts.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss the facts showing that the agent did not base his or her belief in the disputed authority on the conduct of the principal. Counsel should also discuss facts showing that the principal did not engage in conduct that could provide the basis of a reasonable belief in authority by an agent.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities in § 182.33.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Agent's Belief Must Be Based on Conduct of Principal

South Sacramento Drayage Co. v. Campbell Soup Co. (1963) 220 Cal. App. 2d 851, 34 Cal. Rptr. 137 , was an action to enforce an oral contract entered into by plaintiff and the traffic manager at defendant's Sacramento plant that granted plaintiff an exclusive right to transport defendant's goods to specified locations for 15 years. Plaintiff had dealt with the agent of defendant who executed the contract in the past, and previous contracts that had granted exclusive rights for a specified term had been approved by the agent's superiors. Plaintiff negotiated the 15-year contract with the agent alone, who had not sent the contract to his superiors for approval. When defendant assigned trucking jobs in violation of the contract, plaintiff brought this action. Defendant argued that the agent did not have the authority to execute the contract on defendant's behalf. The trial court granted defendant's motion for nonsuit, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that when authority has not expressly been conferred, actual authority can exist only if the agent believes that he or she is authorized, and the belief is engendered by conduct of the principal (220 Cal. App. 2d 851, 856) . The court held that there was no evidence that defendant expressly authorized its agent to execute a 15-year hauling contract nor was there evidence that defendant intentionally or carelessly created in the agent the belief that such authority existed (220 Cal. App. 2d 851, 856) . The court noted that the agent had previously contracted for hauling only on day-by-day or load-by-load basis, and the only term contracts for hauling had been executed by officials in New Jersey. Even assuming that the agent believed that he had the authority to enter into such a contract, the court held that the belief had to be engendered either by the principal's expressed intention or because the principal so carelessly conducted its affairs as to reasonably create such a belief in the mind of the agent (220 Cal. App. 2d 851, 856) . No conduct that could reasonably create that belief was shown (220 Cal. App. 2d 851, 856) .

The court in South Sacramento Drayage did not specifically address the question whether or not the agent's belief in his or her authority must be reasonable, given the conduct of the principal. However, it appears from the court's use of the term "reasonably" that the belief of an agent in his or her authority must be reasonable to support a finding of actual authority [see South Sacramento Drayage Co. v. Campbell Soup Co. (1963) 220 Cal. App. 2d 851, 856, 34 Cal. Rptr. 137] .

[2] Comments

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a contention that an agency was created and/or that authority was conferred because defendant principal subsequently ratified the purported agent's act or acts. The ground of opposition set forth in this form is that a principal's purported ratification of an agent's unauthorized act is ineffective because it prejudices the rights of a third party without the third party's consent. This argument may be used, for example, in an action on a contract, especially an insurance contract, when defendant principal attempts to ratify an agent's unauthorized repudiation of a contract before becoming liable under the terms of the contract but after the liability became apparent.

These points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities in § 182.37 when counsel wishes to contend alternatively that the principal and agent did not agree to create an actual agency. These points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities in § 182.38 when counsel wishes to contend alternatively that no actual agency was created because the alleged principal had no right to control the alleged agent. These points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities in § 182.39 when counsel wishes to contend alternatively that if an agency was created and an authority was conferred, the agency was terminated by mutual abandonment. The points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities in §§ 182.40 and 182.41 when counsel wishes to contend that actual authority was not conferred on the agent. The points and authorities in § 182.43 may be combined with these points and authorities when counsel wishes to contend that purported ratification was not effective because it was not made with full knowledge of the material facts of the transaction.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that defendant principal may not ratify an unauthorized act to the prejudice of a third person without the consent of plaintiff. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss facts showing that the act sought to be ratified was unauthorized, that the act if ratified would prejudice plaintiff, and that plaintiff did not consent to the ratification.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities in §§ 182.35 and 182.36, as appropriate.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Ratification Cannot Prejudice Third Parties Without Their Consent

In Hooker v. American Indem. Co. (1936) 12 Cal. App. 2d 116, 54 P.2d 1128 , plaintiffs were the heirs of a decedent who had recovered a judgment in a wrongful death action against an insured of defendant. Defendant principal refused to satisfy the judgment, alleging that the truck that killed the decedent was not covered by insurance because defendant's agent had terminated the insurance without authority to do so. Defendant principal argued that it ratified the agent's termination and therefore was not liable on the policy. The trial court entered judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant principal appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that defendant principal could not ratify the unauthorized act of its agent in cancelling the insurance policy without the consent of plaintiffs, the beneficiaries of the insurance policy (12 Cal. App. 2d 116, 123) . Relying on Civ. Code § 2313, which provides that no unauthorized act may be made valid retroactively, to the prejudice of third persons, without their consent, the court held that once plaintiffs' cause of action accrued, defendant principal could not thereafter deprive them of the cause of action by ratifying the alleged policy cancellation (12 Cal. App. 2d 116, 123) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Ratification Cannot Prejudice Third Parties Without Their Consent

Dominguez v. Superior Court (1983) 139 Cal. App. 3d 692, 189 Cal. Rptr. 5 , arose from an action challenging the takeover of plaintiff bank under Fin. Code § 3101. A major shareholder, who was the sole member of the board of directors of plaintiff, filed the action on behalf of plaintiff within 10 days of the taking as required by Fin. Code § 3101, but the filing was not ratified by a vote of a complete board as required by Corp. Code §§ 300 and 307(a)(8) until after the 10 days had elapsed. The trial court found that the ratification was sufficient to make the action timely filed and granted plaintiff's motion for summary judgment. The court of appeal, however, issued a writ of mandate ordering the trial court to grant a summary judgment to defendant, because under Civ. Code § 2313 the board could not deprive defendant of the right to obtain a dismissal of the action by ratifying the director's ineffective filing (139 Cal. App. 3d 692, 695) .

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a contention that an agency was created and/or that authority was conferred because defendant principal subsequently ratified the purported agent's act or acts. The ground of opposition set forth is that defendant principal did not have knowledge of all the material facts involved in the unauthorized transaction. For example, this argument may be used as a defense by the principal in an action to enforce a contract entered into by the agent on behalf of defendant principal. As another example, this argument may be used as a defense by the principal in an action seeking to hold defendant principal liable for an agent's wrongful act.

These points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities in § 182.37 when counsel wishes to contend alternatively that the principal and agent did not agree to create an actual agency. These points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities in § 182.38 when counsel wishes to contend alternatively that no actual agency was created because the alleged principal had no right to control the alleged agent. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss facts showing that when defendant principal allegedly ratified the agent's unauthorized act, he or she did not have knowledge of some fact involving the unauthorized transaction, and that the fact was material to defendant principal's decision whether or not to ratify the unauthorized act.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities in §§ 182.35 and 182.36.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Principal Must Have Knowledge of All Material Facts to Ratify Unauthorized Transaction

Bate v. Marsteller (1959) 175 Cal. App. 2d 573, 346 P.2d 903 , was an action by plaintiffs, owners of an apartment building, to recover damages for fraud from defendants, a real estate broker and its agents. Plaintiffs had listed the building for sale with defendants, and a sale that defendants represented to plaintiffs as being made to a third party for $37,000 in fact conveyed a seven-eighths interest to the agents and only one-eighth to the third party. When plaintiffs learned that the title to the property was in the name of one of the agents, they requested an extension of the lease to the apartment that they had been allowed as a part of the sale agreement, but defendants refused. Plaintiffs brought this action when they learned of defendants' true role in the transaction, and defendants argued that plaintiffs-principals ratified the self-dealing transaction by seeking the extension with knowledge that the property was in the agent's name. The trial court entered judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that there was no evidence that the request for a lease extension was made with a full knowledge of the material facts of the transaction (175 Cal. App. 2d 573, 582-583) . The court held that ratification is a matter of assent, and for a principal to be bound by a ratification he or she must act with knowledge of all the material facts involved in the unauthorized transaction, particularly with knowledge of the acts of the person who assumed to act as the agent (175 Cal. App. 2d 573, 582) . The court held that plaintiffs' knowledge that the title to the building had been put in the name of the agent was not knowledge of all of the agents' activities in the sale, and therefore no ratification of the sale could properly have been found by the trial court (175 Cal. App. 2d 573, 582-583) .

[The following may be combined with the contentions supported by the points and authorities set forth in §§ 182.30 -182.32 and 182.35 -182.36 as appropriate and may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

_____ [DEFENDANT or PLAINTIFF] PRINCIPAL MAY NOT TERMINATE THE AGENCY WITH _____ [PLAINTIFF or DEFENDANT] AGENT BECAUSE THE POWER OF AN AGENT THAT IS COUPLED WITH AN INTEREST IN THE SUBJECT OF THE AGENCY IS NOT TERMINATED BY THE DEATH OR INCAPACITY OF, OR REVOCATION BY, THE PRINCIPAL [AND AN AGENCY GRANTED AS SECURITY FOR LOANS MADE BY AN AGENT IS AN AGENCY COUPLED WITH AN INTEREST].

A. Agency Coupled With Interest Is Not Terminable by Principal. The power of an agent that is coupled with an interest in the subject of the agency is not terminated by the death or incapacity of, or revocation by, the principal (Civ. Code § 2356(a); Lane Mortgage Co. v. Crenshaw (1928) 93 Cal. App 411, 427, 269 P. 672).

[Optional] B. Agency Created as Security for Loans to Principal Is Coupled With Interest. A person who is given the management of a business as security for loans made is granted an agency coupled with an interest, which is not terminable by the principal (MacDonald v. Rosenfeld (1948) 83 Cal. App. 2d 221, 236, 188 P.2d 519).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that the principal may not terminate the power of an agent that is coupled with an interest in the subject of the agency [see Civ. Code § 2356(a)]. This contention may be used, for example, in a declaratory relief action by the agent to establish the irrevocability of the agency, or in an action by the agent contesting an attempted revocation of the agency. The optional paragraph should be used when the principal created an agency to manage a business as security for loans made by the agent to the owners of the business. Such an agency is coupled with an interest [see MacDonald v. Rosenfeld (1948) 83 Cal. App. 2d 221, 236, 188 P.2d 519] .

If the existence of the agency is disputed, these points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities in §§ 182.30 -182.32, as appropriate. If the agency or authority is alleged to have arisen because of the principal's ratification, these points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities in §§ 182.35 -182.36, as appropriate.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the principal may not terminate an agency because it is coupled with an interest. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in §§ 182.64 and 182.65 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Agency Coupled With Interest Is Not Terminable by Principal

Lane Mortgage Co. v. Crenshaw (1928) 93 Cal. App. 411, 269 P. 672 , was an action for injunctive and declaratory relief to prevent defendant from interfering with plaintiff's rights under a lease providing that plaintiff would be the sole and exclusive agent for the management of the building to which the leasehold interest applied. The lease had been executed by the lessee of the property on which the building was erected in consideration of the efforts of plaintiff in procuring the ground lease, plaintiff's financing of the construction of the building, and $10. The lease provided that plaintiff should have the second floor of the building for 20 years in addition to its agency for management of the building. The original lessee assigned its ownership interest in the building and its leasehold interest in the land to defendant after the building was completed, and defendant then began to disregard plaintiff's rights under the lease. Plaintiff argued that the agency to manage the building was coupled with its interest under the lease, and therefore could not be terminated. The trial court denied relief, concluding that the lease merely granted plaintiff an agency that was revocable at will of the lessor, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that the agency was coupled with the 20-year leasehold interest (93 Cal. App. 411, 428) . The court held that a power is coupled with an interest when it forms part of a contract and is a security for money or for the performance of a valuable act (93 Cal. App. 411, 428) . The court noted that the lease plaintiff helped procure for the original ground lessee could have been breached by the lessee in a number of ways, and such a breach would have adversely affected plaintiff's interest in its lease of the second floor of the building (93 Cal. App. 411, 426) . The court also noted that to protect against just such an occurrence, as a part of the lease transaction between the original lessee and plaintiff, plaintiff was granted the exclusive agency to manage the building, giving plaintiff the ability to protect against violations of the ground lease, as well as the ability to collect rents in the building and apply them to the extinguishment of the obligations under the ground lease (93 Cal. App. 411, 426-427) . The court held that the agreement was therefore an agency coupled with an interest and irrevocable by defendant principal (93 Cal. App. 411, 428) .

NOTE:

In discussing termination, Civ. Code § 2356(a) speaks of the power of an agent coupled with an interest in the subject of the agency. Courts that interpret whether or not agencies are covered by the limitations on termination of powers of agents coupled with an interest often use the term "power" rather than "agency." There appears to be no substantive difference, however, between the terms power and agency used in discussions of agencies coupled with interests [see Jay v. Dollarhide (1970) 3 Cal. App. 3d 1001, 1023, 84 Cal. Rptr. 538 (using both terms in discussing tests for agencies coupled with interests)].

[b] Agency Created as Security for Loans to Principal Is Coupled With Interest

MacDonald v. Rosenfeld (1948) 83 Cal. App. 2d 221, 188 P.2d 519 , was an action for an accounting by plaintiffs, the owners of a trucking business, against the managing trustee of the business. The action also sought an injunction preventing defendant from exercising any control over the business. When the business was in need of operating capital, defendant had advanced money and was appointed managing trustee of the business as consideration for the advancement of further funds. The agreement provided that defendant would be entitled to a specified percentage of the profits of the company until such time as defendant recouped his investment, at which time the percentage would decrease, until all payments agreed on were made to defendant. Defendant disputed the complaint's allegations of the amounts paid and due and argued that he should be allowed to retain control until he had been completely reimbursed because his position with the business constituted an agency coupled with an interest. The trial court found that defendant was entitled to continue as manager until the contractual obligations of plaintiff were satisfied, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that the evidence supported the conclusion of the trial court that defendant was granted an agency coupled with an interest in that he was given the management of the business as security for the loans he had made (83 Cal. App. 2d 221, 236) .

§ 182.61 Supporting Contention That Agent May Recover Damages [Civ. Code § 3300] for Principal's Breach of Agency Contract--Principal Wrongfully Terminated Agency

[The following may be combined with the contentions supported by the points and authorities set forth in §§ 182.30 -182.32 and 182.35 -182.36 as appropriate and may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF AGENT MAY RECOVER DAMAGES FROM DEFENDANT PRINCIPAL FOR DEFENDANT PRINCIPAL'S REVOCATION OF THE AGENCY IN BREACH OF THE PARTIES' CONTRACT BECAUSE A PRINCIPAL MAY AGREE BY CONTRACT TO CURTAIL THE RIGHT TO REVOKE AN AGENCY AND WILL BE HELD LIABLE FOR THE DIRECT AND PROXIMATE DAMAGES IF THAT CONTRACT IS BREACHED.

A. Damages Recoverable When Agency Wrongfully Terminated. When a contract curtailing the principal's right to revoke an agency is supported by a valuable consideration and the power to revoke is exercised contrary to the right, the principal is liable for the direct and proximate damages caused by revoking the authority of the agent in breach of the parties' contract (Stoll v. Stoll (1936) 5 Cal. 2d 687, 690, 56 P.2d 226).

[Optional] B. Agent With Notice of Wrongful Discharge Need Not Tender Service or Stay Ready to Perform. When an agent has notice of his or her wrongful discharge, it is not necessary for the agent to tender service or stay ready to perform; all that is necessary is that the agent was ready and willing to continue in the employment at the time of the discharge (Alderson v. Houston (1908) 154 Cal. 1, 10-11, 96 P. 884).

[2] Comments

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that an agent may recover damages from a principal who has revoked an agency despite a provision in the agency contract limiting the principal's right to revoke the agency. This argument may be used whenever a principal has exercised his or her power to revoke an agency despite a contract limiting the right to do so. This argument would most likely arise in a breach of contract action by an agent for the principal's wrongful termination.

If the existence of the agency is disputed, these points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities in §§ 182.30 -182.32, as appropriate. If the agency is alleged to have arisen because of the principal's ratification, these points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities in §§ 182.35 -182.36, as appropriate.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that an agent may recover damages for breach of contract from a principal who has revoked an agency despite a provision in the agency contract limiting the principal's right to revoke. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss any contractual provisions that curtail the right of the principal to revoke the agency, such as a provision that the agency will last for a specified period of time. Counsel should also discuss facts showing that the principal exercised his or her power to revoke the agency contrary to the contract, for example by revoking the agency before the time specified in the contract.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Damages Recoverable When Agency Wrongfully Terminated

Stoll v. Stoll (1936) 5 Cal. 2d 687, 56 P.2d 226 , was an action for breach of an agency contract. Plaintiff had entered into a contract with his father to manage the latter's business in exchange for a salary that was to continue until the father's estate was finally distributed. When the father was adjudged incompetent, the agency terminated, and this action followed. Plaintiff argued that the contract was not terminated, and that he was entitled to the payments called for in the contract on a showing that the contract was made for consideration and that he was willing to perform. The trial court granted defendant's demurrer without leave to amend, and plaintiff appealed the judgment of dismissal.

The Supreme Court reversed, holding that the contract was not terminated merely because the agency was terminated (5 Cal. 2d 687, 690) . The Court stated that while the agency may be terminated as long as it was not coupled with an interest, the principal may still agree not to revoke the agency for a definite time, or for a reasonable time that is ascertainable (5 Cal. 2d 687, 690) . The Court held that when a contract curtailing the principal's right to revoke an agency is supported by a valuable consideration and the power to revoke is exercised contrary to the contractual limits on the right, the principal is liable for the direct and proximate damages caused by revoking the authority of the agent (5 Cal. 2d 687, 690) . The Court also held that the fact that the agency terminated by operation of law rather than by revocation of the principal did not affect the result as long as the contract was one that would survive the death or incapacity of the principal, which was held to be the case here (5 Cal. 2d 687, 692) .

[b] Agent With Notice of Wrongful Discharge Need Not Tender Service or Stay Ready to Perform

Alderson v. Houston (1908) 154 Cal. 1, 96 P. 884 , was an action for breach of a contract that gave plaintiffs an exclusive right to sell specific lots of real property for 18 months. The contract provided that plaintiffs would be entitled to a commission only if all the lots were sold in the 18 months, and plaintiffs demanded an extension after defendant had been unable to provide clear title to some of the lots. Defendant offered to attach checks in the amount of the outstanding liens to the deeds, although the lienholders apparently had to consent to any attempt to clear the title. When defendant refused to grant the extension, plaintiffs brought this action. The trial court entered judgment for defendant on the ground that any hindrance of plaintiffs' sales was remedied by defendant's offer to clear the titles, and plaintiffs appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed, holding that defendant prevented plaintiffs from performing their contractual obligations by refusing to provide the title required by the contract (154 Cal. 1, 10) . The Court held that the acts of defendant constituted a wrongful discharge of plaintiffs as agents and entitled plaintiffs to treat the contract of employment as continuing, although broken by the principal, and to sue for damages on the breach (154 Cal. 1, 10) . The Court held that when an agent has notice of his or her wrongful discharge, it is not necessary that the agent tender service or stay in readiness to perform; all that is necessary is that the agent was ready and willing to continue in the employment at the time of the discharge (154 Cal. 1, 11) . Thus, in the case before it, the Court held that because defendant had breached a material part of the contract, plaintiffs were not obligated to accept defendant's belated offer to comply with the contract, and plaintiffs could still sue for the breach of contract after the time specified in the contract had elapsed (154 Cal. 1, 14) .

[a] Damages Recoverable When Agency Wrongfully Terminated

Long Beach Drug Co. v. United Drug Co. (1939) 13 Cal. 2d 158, 89 P.2d 698 , was an action brought to enjoin defendant from terminating the exclusive agency granted to plaintiff by a written agreement between the parties. The Supreme Court reversed the injunctive relief granted by the trial court and held that equitable relief was not available to the parties, but on rehearing noted that plaintiff could amend its complaint to recover damages for the wrongful termination of the agency on the ground that defendant did not have the right to terminate (13 Cal. 2d 158, 173-174) .

In Roth v. Moeller (1921) 185 Cal. 415, 197 P. 62 , plaintiff had been granted an agency to exchange real property for defendant, and by its terms the agency was not revocable for 10 days. Plaintiff sued after defendant revoked the agency the next day and refused to pay any commission. The Supreme Court held that a principal who curtails his or her right to revoke an authority may be liable for damages if he or she revokes the authority within the designated period in violation of the agent's rights under the contract (185 Cal. 415, 418-419) . However, the Court affirmed the trial court's granting of a nonsuit against plaintiff on the ground that the agreement not to terminate the agency was not supported by the consideration necessary to make such an agreement binding on the principal (185 Cal. 415, 419) .

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that an agent may recover damages from a principal who has breached an exclusive sales agency contract by making sales in violation of the contract. This contention may be used, for example, in an action by the agent for breach of contract when the agent alleges that the principal had breached the contract by violating a provision granting the exclusive right to perform some act. For example, a contract granting the agent an exclusive right to sell in a specified territory may be breached when the principal makes direct sales in the territory.

If the existence of the agency is disputed, these points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities in §§ 182.30 -182.32, as appropriate. If the agency is alleged to have arisen because of the principal's ratification, these points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities in §§ 182.35 -182.36, as appropriate.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the agent may recover damages for the principal's breach of an exclusive sales agency contract. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Agent May Recover Damages for Breach of Exclusive Agency Contract

Hacker Pipe & Supply Co. v. Chapman Valve Mfg. Co. (1936) 17 Cal. App. 2d 265, 61 P.2d 944 , was an action for breach of contract by which plaintiff was appointed the exclusive jobber for the products of defendant in the territory of southern California. Plaintiff alleged that defendant made direct sales in the territory, depriving plaintiff of the profits it would have made if it handled the sales as jobber. Defendant admitted the direct sales, but argued that plaintiff was limited to recovering the amount by which the sales made by defendant exceeded the price that plaintiff would have had to pay for the goods sold. The trial court instead computed the profit percentage plaintiff had made on its previous sales and applied this figure to the total amount of direct sales made by defendant, and defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that the breach of an exclusive sales agency contract entitles the agent to the profits that he or she would have made on sales in the amount of those made by the principal in violation of the contract (17 Cal. App. 2d 265, 267-268) . The court held that it was proper for the trial court to assume that plaintiff would have been able to conduct the business of the agency in the usual manner if defendant had not interfered (17 Cal. App. 2d 265, 268) . The court refused to accept the argument of defendant that plaintiff suffered no damage if defendant sold at prices that would not have resulted in a profit to plaintiff because such a result would allow a principal to breach an exclusive sales agency contract with impunity by selling in the agent's territory at the prices it charged the agent (17 Cal. App. 2d 265, 270) . The court held the finding of the trial court sufficient (that plaintiff could have made defendant's sales) to support the implication that the sales could have been made at a price that would have allowed plaintiff its normal profit margin, and the award of damages made by the trial court was held proper (17 Cal. App. 2d 265, 272) .

_____ [PLAINTIFF or DEFENDANT] AGENT IS ENTITLED TO INDEMNITY FROM DEFENDANT PRINCIPAL BECAUSE AN AGENT IS ENTITLED TO INDEMNIFICATION FROM THE PRINCIPAL FOR ANY DAMAGE INCURRED FROM THE PRINCIPAL'S BREACH OF A CONTRACT THAT WAS UNDERTAKEN FOR THE PRINCIPAL, WHILE THE AGENT WAS PURSUING THE INSTRUCTIONS OF THE PRINCIPAL AND ACTING WITHIN THE SCOPE OF THE AGENT'S AUTHORITY.

Agent's Right to Indemnification From Principal. An agent pursuing the instructions of his or her principal and acting within the scope of his or her authority who then becomes personally liable for the performance of the contract made for the principal can look to the principal for indemnity for the damage sustained (*Sunset-Sternau Food Co. v. CAUTION:

The legal principles set forth in this form are still valid. However, in Far W. Fin. Corp. v. D & S Co. (1988) 46 Cal. 3d 796, 251 Cal. Rptr. 202, 760 P.2d 399 , the California Supreme Court held that all rights of indemnity except those created by express contractual provisions are subject to comparative principles. Thus, total or partial indemnity may be awarded depending on the facts and circumstances of the case. Further, the indemnitee's indemnity rights are terminated under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 877(b) and 877.6(c) by a good-faith settlement between the indemnitor and the plaintiff in the underlying action. All pre-1988 cases finding a right of total indemnity must be considered in light of the principles set forth in Far West. For more detailed discussion, see Ch. 115, Indemnity and Contribution .

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that an agent is entitled to indemnification from the principal. The contention may be made by an agent who has been held liable for breach of a contract that he or she entered on behalf of his or her principal while pursuing the instructions of the principal and acting in the scope of his or her authority. The argument may be used in an action by an agent for implied contractual indemnity, or in an agent's cross complaint against his or her principal in the breach of contract action instituted by a third party. The argument may also arise in an action by the agent seeking declaratory relief that the principal must indemnify the agent for any damages awarded against the agent.

If the existence of the agency is disputed, these points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities in §§ 182.30 -182.32, as appropriate. If the extent of an agent's authority is disputed, these points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities in §§ 182.33 -182.34, as appropriate. If the agency or authority is alleged to have arisen because of the principal's ratification, these points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities in §§ 182.35 -182.36, as appropriate.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the agent is entitled to indemnification from the principal because the agent was held personally liable on a contract undertaken for the principal. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Agent's Right to Indemnification From Principal

Sunset-Sternau Food Co. v. Bonzi (1964) 60 Cal. 2d 834, 36 Cal. Rptr. 741, 389 P.2d 133 , was an action for indemnity by plaintiff agent against defendant principal. Plaintiff and defendant had entered into an oral agreement that plaintiff would procure a buyer for defendant's apricot kernels. The agreement provided that plaintiff would act in its own name, which was well known in the field. Plaintiff entered into a written contract to sell kernels to a third party at a price agreed to by defendant. Thereafter, but before the delivery date, the price of apricot kernels rose sharply, and defendant sold the kernels at the higher price and refused to deliver the kernels plaintiff had contracted to deliver. The third party sued plaintiff for breach and obtained a judgment that plaintiff satisfied after an unsuccessful appeal. Plaintiff then instituted the instant action, based on an implied promise of indemnity and reimbursement from defendant principal for plaintiff agent's liability incurred as a result of the performance of the agency agreement. The trial court granted judgment to plaintiff and defendant appealed.

The Supreme Court affirmed, holding at page 837 that an agent who becomes personally liable for the performance of a contract that he or she has undertaken for the principal may normally hold the principal liable for indemnity for damages sustained because of a breach of that contract [relying on Rimington v. General Accident Group of Ins. Cos. (1962) 205 Cal. App. 2d 394, 23 Cal. Rptr. 40 (discussed below)]. The Court did not go into detail in its analysis of this point, but instead concentrated on the main holding of the case, that a principal cannot rely on the equal dignities rule of Civ. Code § 2309 to prohibit the enforcement of an oral agreement between the principal and the agent (60 Cal. 2d 834, 842) . However, the Court did hold that the cause of action does not arise until the agent had actually paid the obligation to the third party (60 Cal. 2d 834, 843) .

Rimington v. General Accident Group of Ins. Cos. (1962) 205 Cal. App. 2d 394, 23 Cal. Rptr. 40 , was a cross complaint for declaratory relief by an agent of cross defendants. A third party had sued cross plaintiff and cross defendants, alleging that cross plaintiff had acted as agent for cross defendants and had agreed to insure the third party's corn crop, with the amount of the policy to be apportioned among cross defendants. The crop was destroyed, and the third party's complaint sought a determination of the rights and liabilities of the parties. Cross plaintiff alleged that he was entitled to indemnification from cross defendants, as principals, for any personal liability that might be imposed on him. Cross defendants' motion to strike the cross complaint was granted, and their demurrer to the cross complaint was sustained without leave to amend. Cross plaintiff appealed from the orders.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that the cross complaint stated a cause of action (205 Cal. App. 2d 394, 397) . The court held that an agent pursuing the instructions of his or her principal and acting within the scope of his or her authority who then becomes personally liable for the performance of the contract made for the principal can look to the principal for indemnity for the damage sustained (205 Cal. App. 2d 394, 397) . The court held that the cross complaint alleged the existence of an actual controversy supporting an action for declaratory relief. The court held that the issue of possible indemnification was a justiciable controversy, concerning the legal relations and rights arising out of the transaction of the main action (205 Cal. App. 2d 394, 397) .

In Fidelity Mortgage Trustee Service, Inc. v. Ridgegate East Homeowners Assn. (1994) 27 Cal. App. 4th 503 , a homeowners' association and its property management company hired a foreclosure trustee to foreclose on a lien for unpaid homeowners' fees against a condominium unit. The unit owner brought an action against all three entities for various alleged wrongs committed in the course of the foreclosure. The management company prevailed on summary judgment, and the association and trustee won a complete defense jury verdict at trial. The foreclosure trustee then brought an indemnity action against the association and management company for reimbursement of its costs and attorney's fees incurred in defending the underlying action (27 Cal. App. 4th 503, 506-507) .

The trial court summarily adjudicated that there was no right to indemnity for attorney's fees under Code Civ. Proc. § 1021.6 because the prospective indemnitee (forclosure trustee) had not tendered the defense of the underlying action to the alleged indemnitors (association and management company) [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1021.6(b)]. In reversing, the court of appeal found the potential right to indemnity in agency law principles rather than in the statute. It assumed for purposes of the appeal that the trustee was the agent of both indemnitors (see 27 Cal. App. 4th 503, 508 n.6). It cited the general agency rule that an agent is entitled to indemnification by its principal for losses incurred by the agent in the execution of the agency [see Restatement (Second) of Agency, § 438]. For example, an agent that becomes personally liable for the performance of a contract entered into for its principal is entitled to indemnification by the principal for damages sustained because of the breach of that agreement (27 Cal. App. 4th 503, 509 , citing Sunset-Sternau Food Co. v. Bonzi (1964) 60 Cal. 2d 834, 837, 36 Cal. Rptr. 741, 389 P.2d 133 , and Rimington v. General Accident Group of Ins. Cos. (1962) 205 Cal. App. 2d 394, 397, 23 Cal. Rptr. 40 , discussed above).

The court also cited the agency rule that a principal has a duty to its agent, who is not barred by the illegality of his or her conduct, to indemnify the agent for expenses of defending actions by third persons brought because of the agent's authorized conduct [see Restatement (Second) of Agency, § 439(d)]. It held that the scope of indemnity recoverable extended to attorney's fees incurred, and that the agent's failure to notify the principal and tender the defense to the principal meant only that the agent was required to prove that he had made a reasonable defense (27 Cal. App. 4th 503, 510-511) .

_____ [DEFENDANT or PLAINTIFF] PRINCIPAL MAY TERMINATE THE AGENCY WITH _____ [PLAINTIFF or DEFENDANT] AGENT BECAUSE THE POWER OF AN AGENT IS NOT COUPLED WITH AN INTEREST IN THE SUBJECT OF THE AGENCY.

A. Agency Coupled With Interest Is Not Terminable by Principal. [See § 182.60[1], Paragraph A.]

B. Requirements for Power Coupled With Interest. For a power to be coupled with an interest so as to be irrevocable there must be a specific, present, and coexisting interest in the subject of the power or agency, independent of the power conferred (O'Connell v. Superior Court (1935) 2 Cal. 2d 418, 422, 41 P.2d 334 ; Jay v. Dollarhide (1970) 3 Cal. App. 3d 1001, 1023, 84 Cal. Rptr. 538).

C. Agency Not Coupled With Interest When Interest Is Gained by Exercise of Agency. D. Compensation of Agent Is Not Interest. Monetary compensation does not create a power coupled with an interest that would make the agency irrevocable (Woolley v. Embassy Suites, Inc. (1991) 227 Cal. App. 3d 1520, 1532, 278 Cal. Rptr. 719).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a contention that a principal may not terminate an agency because the power of an agent is coupled with an interest in the subject of the agency. This argument may be used whenever it is argued that the principal may terminate the agency because an interest that can be gained only by the exercise of the power conferred on the agent is not coupled with an interest. For example, this argument might be raised by the principal in defending an agent's declaratory relief action seeking a declaration that a purported termination by the principal is ineffective. It might also be raised in an action by the principal to quiet title in the subject property as against the agent and/or his or her vendees.

If the existence of the agency is disputed, these points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities in §§ 182.37 -182.39, as appropriate.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the principal may terminate the agency because an interest that can be gained only by the exercise of the power conferred on the agent is not coupled with an interest. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss the facts showing that the interest is one that can only be gained by the exercise of the power granted the agent. For example, when an attorney is the agent who claims that his or her agency is coupled with an interest in the proceeds of a lawsuit that he or she has been retained to prosecute, counsel should point out that the proceeds can only be obtained through the agent's exercise of the power conferred by the client-principal.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities in § 182.60.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Requirements for Power Coupled With Interest

O'Connell v. Superior Court (1935) 2 Cal. 2d 418, 41 P.2d 334 , was an application for a writ of mandate compelling the respondent court to grant a motion for substitution of attorneys in a pending action by petitioner. Before the complaint in the action was filed, petitioner and counsel executed a written agreement for the employment of counsel, in which petitioner agreed to pay the attorney one half of all that was collected or recovered by suit or compromise. After a suit was filed, petitioner moved for a substitution of attorneys, but counsel refused to join in a stipulation of substitution and opposed the motion on the ground that the agreement had created an irrevocable agency coupled with an interest. The trial court denied the motion for substitution and this writ proceeding followed.

The Supreme Court granted the writ, holding that the agency was not coupled with an interest and therefore was terminable by the petitioner principal (2 Cal. 2d 418, 424) . The Court held that an agent's power is coupled with an interest only when there is a specific, present, and coexisting interest in the subject of the power or agency (2 Cal. 2d 418, 424) . The Court held that the agreement at issue did not grant an interest in the proceeds independently of the exercise of the power, because the attorney was not entitled to any proceeds until he had discharged his responsibilities (

Jay v. Dollarhide (1970) 3 Cal. App. 3d 1001, 84 Cal. Rptr. 538 , was an action to quiet title to a parcel of land and to recover damages for trespass to the land. Plaintiff was the administrator of the estate of a person who had conveyed land to the United States under an act of Congress that permitted the owner of land within a forest reservation to convey the land to the United States in exchange for other land. The land that was to be received in exchange, known as in lieu land, was not conveyed to the decedent, and the United States later conveyed the property back to the heirs of the decedent, represented by plaintiff as administrator. Defendants claimed the right to the land through powers of attorney executed by the decedent in favor of an agent who was authorized to convey any in lieu land selected and to select the in lieu land to be obtained. Defendants eventually obtained the powers of attorney, filled in with the description of the original land, and argued that the powers of attorney created an irrevocable agency coupled with an interest in the land. The trial court quieted title to the land in plaintiff's name, and defendants appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that the powers of attorney executed by the decedent did not survive his death because the power conferred through the powers of attorney was not coupled with an interest in the original parcel of land (3 Cal. App. 3d 1001, 1023) . The court held that an agency is coupled with an interest only if the agent has an interest or estate in the subject matter of the agency independently of the power conferred (3 Cal. App. 3d 1001, 1023) . The powers of attorney provided that any interest in the land to which they related could only be gained by exercise of the power conferred by the powers of attorney. Thus, the agency was not coupled with an interest and the power was therefore terminated by the death of the principal, even if the power purported to be irrevocable (3 Cal. App. 3d 1001, 1023) .

NOTE:

In discussing termination, Civ. Code § 2356(a) speaks of the power of an agent coupled with an interest in the subject of the agency. Courts that interpret whether or not agencies are covered by the limitations on termination of powers of agents coupled with an interest often use the term power rather than agency. There appears to be no substantive difference, however, between the terms "power" and "agency" as used in discussions of agencies coupled with interests [see Jay v. Dollarhide (1970) 3 Cal. App. 3d 1001, 1023, 84 Cal. Rptr. 538 (using both terms in discussing tests for agencies coupled with interests)].

[b] Agency Not Coupled With Interest When Interest Is Gained by Exercise of Agency

The facts and procedural background of Jay v. Dollarhide (1970) 3 Cal. App. 3d 1001, 84 Cal. Rptr. 538 , are discussed in § 182.64[3][a]. The court held that if an interest to which an agency relates can only be gained by the exercise of the power conferred on the agent, the agent's power is not coupled with an interest (3 Cal. App. 3d 1001, 1023) .

[c] Compensation of Agent Is Not Interest

Woolley v. Embassy Suites, Inc. (1991) 227 Cal. App. 3d 1520, 278 Cal. Rptr. 719 , involved a dispute between the owners of certain hotels (principals) and the corporation (agent) that had entered into a contract with the owners to manage the hotels. The principals terminated the management contract on the ground that the agent had breached the agreement by making expenditures in excess of budget allocations. The management contract provided for binding arbitration to resolve disputes between the parties. Principals brought suit against agent in California seeking damages, rescission, declaratory relief and accounting. Agent responded by filing actions in Texas seeking declaratory and injunctive relief, and demanding arbitration under the contract. A Texas court found the dispute arbitrable. The California court then issued a preliminary injunction enjoining principals from terminating the agency until arbitration was completed.

The court of appeal reversed the award of injunctive relief. It noted the general rule that, except in the case of an agency coupled with an interest, a principal has the power to revoke an agent's authority at any time before the agent has completed performance [Civ. Code § 2356(a)(1)] (227 Cal. App. 3d 1520, 1529) . Although the agent cannot prevent the termination of the agency, the agent's remedy for wrongful termination is damages, as in any other breach of contract action (see § 182.61). Thus, the arbitration clause was ineffective to compel principals to retain agent (227 Cal. App. 3d 1520, 1530-1531) .

The court also rejected agent's argument that the management contract created an agency coupled with an interest. The court noted that for an agency to be coupled with an interest, the agent must have a specific, present, and coexisting beneficial interest in the subject matter of the agency. The agency must be created for the benefit of the agent in order to protect some title or right in the subject of the agency or secure some performance due to the agent. Here, the sole interest of agent in the management contract was a management fee of 5 percent of gross revenue from the hotels. The court held that monetary compensation, in whatever form it may take, does not create a power coupled with an interest that would make the agency irrevocable. As the agent had no present property interest in the hotels, the agency was not irrevocable (227 Cal. App. 3d 1520, 1532-1533) .

[The following may be combined with the contentions supported by the points and authorities set forth in §§ 182.37 -182.39 as appropriate and may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

_____ [DEFENDANT or PLAINTIFF] PRINCIPAL MAY TERMINATE THE AGENCY WITH _____ [PLAINTIFF or DEFENDANT] AGENT BECAUSE THE POWER OF AN AGENT IS NOT COUPLED WITH AN INTEREST IN THE SUBJECT OF THE AGENCY, AND THUS IS TERMINATED BY THE DEATH OR INCAPACITY OF, OR REVOCATION BY, THE PRINCIPAL, WHEN THE AGENCY CREATED TO SECURE THE PERFORMANCE OF A DUTY TO THE AGENT OR TO PROTECT A TITLE IN THE AGENT WAS NOT CREATED AT THE SAME TIME THAT THE DUTY OR TITLE WAS CREATED.

A. Agency Coupled With Interest Is Not Terminable by Principal. [See § 182.60[1], Paragraph A.]

B. Requirements for Power Coupled With Interest. [See § 182.64[1], Paragraph B.]

C. Agency Must Be Created at Same Time as Interest to Be Coupled With Interest. To be coupled with an interest, an agency must be created to secure the performance of a duty to the agent or to protect a title in the agent and must be created at the same time that the duty or title is created (Becket v. Welton Becket & Assocs. (1974) 39 Cal. App. 3d 815, 820, 114 Cal. Rptr. 531).

[2] Comments

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a principal may not terminate an agency because the power of an agent is coupled with an interest in the subject of the agency. This argument may be used whenever it is argued that the principal may terminate an agency because it is not coupled with an interest, since the agency was not created at the same time as the interest in the agent or the duty owed to the agent. This argument may be used by a principal, for example, in defending an agent's action for declaratory relief that a purported termination by the principal is ineffective. This argument may also be used in any action seeking to invalidate an agent's action taken after the agency was terminated by the principal [see Jay v. Dollarhide (1970) 3 Cal. App. 3d 1001, 1023, 84 Cal. Rptr. 538 (action to quiet title in real property allegedly conveyed by agent)].

If the existence of the agency is disputed, these points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities in §§ 182.37 -182.39, as appropriate.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the principal may terminate the agency because it is not coupled with an interest in the subject of the agency since the interest was not created at the same time as the agency was created. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss facts showing that the interest was not created at the same time as the agency was created. For example, when an agent has acquired an interest in the subject of the agency after the creation of the agency, counsel should discuss the facts showing the creation of the agency, the agent's acquisition of the interest, and the lapse of time between the creation of the agency and the agent's acquisition of the interest.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities in § 182.60.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Agency Must Be Created at Same Time as Interest to Be Coupled With Interest

Becket v. Welton Becket & Assocs. (1974) 39 Cal. App. 3d 815, 114 Cal. Rptr. 531 , was an action for injunctive relief, damages for breach of contract, and for other relief against the architectural firm at which plaintiff had been employed as an architect for many years. At the death of plaintiff's father, who had been the owner of all defendant's stock, plaintiff was appointed co-executor of the estate and became a member of the board of directors of defendant in his father's place. When plaintiff brought an action against other members of the board, alleging breach of fiduciary duties, corporate waste, and improper usurpation of corporate control, one of the members of the board threatened plaintiff with termination from his employment unless the action was dropped. Plaintiff argued that his employment was coupled with his interest in the firm that he had acquired from his father and could not be terminated by defendant principal. Defendant's demurrer was sustained without leave to amend, and plaintiff appealed the judgment of dismissal.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that plaintiff's employment was not an agency coupled with an interest in defendant (39 Cal. App. 3d 815, 820-821) . The court held that for an agency to be coupled with an interest, the agency must be created to secure the performance of a duty to the agent or to protect a title in the agent, and must be created at the same time that the duty or title is created (39 Cal. App. 3d 815, 820) . The court held that, as plaintiff had been employed by defendant before he had an ownership interest in the company, the employment of plaintiff was not an agency coupled with an interest (39 Cal. App. 3d 815, 820-821) .

The court also stated in dictum that an agency may be coupled with an interest even though it was not created at the same time as the interest, if it is created for consideration (39 Cal. App. 3d 815, 820) . However, consideration was not an issue in this case, and the court did not elaborate on when an agency created for consideration satisfies the requirements for creating an agency coupled with an interest.

§ 182.80 Supporting Contention That Principal May Set Aside Agent's Transaction--Agent Concluded Transaction With Self Without Principal's Knowledge

[The following may be combined with the contentions supported by the points and authorities set forth in §§ 182.30 -182.32 and 182.35 -182.36 as appropriate and may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities or in a trial or appellate brief.]

_____ [PLAINTIFF or DEFENDANT] PRINCIPAL MAY SET ASIDE THE TRANSACTION ENTERED INTO BY _____ [DEFENDANT or PLAINTIFF] AGENT WITH HIMSELF/HERSELF BECAUSE A PRINCIPAL MAY SET ASIDE AN AGENT'S SELF-DEALING TRANSACTION THAT WAS CONCLUDED WITHOUT THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE PRINCIPAL, DESPITE THE ABSENCE OF ANY FRAUD OR UNFAIRNESS IN THE TRANSACTION.

A. Agent's Duty Toward Principal. When an agent concludes a transaction with himself or herself, the burden is on the agent to show affirmatively that he or she acted in the highest good faith and without concealment (Batson v. Strehlow (1968) 68 Cal. 2d 662, 675, 68 Cal. Rptr. 589, 441 P.2d 101).

B. Principal May Set Aside Agent's Transaction With Self. When an agent concludes a transaction with himself or herself without the knowledge of the principal, such a transaction may always be set aside at the option of the principal, despite the absence of any fraud or unfairness in the transaction (Sands v. Eagle Oil & Refining Co. (1948) 83 Cal. App. 2d 312, 320, 188 P.2d 782 ; Petray v. First Nat'l Bank (1928) 92 Cal. App 86, 90, 267 P. 711).

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a principal may set aside a transaction that the agent entered into on his or her own behalf without the principal's knowledge of the agent's personal interest, despite the absence of any fraud or unfairness in the transaction. For example, the argument supported by these points and authorities may be used in a principal's action for declaratory relief seeking a declaration that he or she is not bound by a contract because of the agent's personal interest. This argument may also be used as a defense by the principal in an agent's action against the principal to enforce the transaction.

If the existence of the agency is disputed, these points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities in §§ 182.30 -182.32, as appropriate. If the agency is alleged to have arisen because of the principal's ratification, these points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities in §§ 182.35 and 182.36, as appropriate.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that an agent's transaction on his or her own behalf may be set aside by a principal who had no knowledge of the agent's personal interest. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in §§ 182.86 and 182.87 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Agent's Duty Toward Principal

Batson v. Strehlow (1968) 68 Cal. 2d 662, 68 Cal. Rptr. 589, 441 P.2d 101 , was an action by the executrix of a principal to recover a commission paid to a real estate broker for the sale of a principal's property. Defendant had received a listing published by a bank acting as guardian of the estate of the incompetent principal soliciting bids for a parcel of property. A corporation in which defendant and his wife owned all the stock responded by letter signed by defendant as president of the corporation, offering to purchase the property through defendant as broker, and when the offer turned out to be the highest bid, the bank prepared a document in the form of an offer by the corporation to purchase the property, subject to confirmation by the superior court. The offer was returned signed by defendant as president, and the escrow instructions prepared by the bank provided for a commission to be paid to defendant out of the sale proceeds. This action was brought after the sale to the corporation was confirmed, when plaintiff learned that defendant had purchased the property for himself. A judgment was entered in plaintiff's favor, and defendant appealed.

The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that defendant had violated his fiduciary duties as a real estate agent by failing to disclose fully all of the material facts of the transaction (68 Cal. 2d 662, 676) . The Court recognized that once a principal questions the acts done by the agent in the course of the agency, the burden is on the agent to prove that he or she acted with the utmost good faith toward the principal and that prior to the transaction he or she made a full disclosure of all the facts relating to the acts under attack (68 Cal. 2d 662, 675) . Thus, the Court held that an agent to sell property who buys the property has the burden to show affirmatively that he or she acted in good faith and without concealment. The Court noted that this rule applies not only to a direct purchase by the agent, but to indirect or collusive sales as well (68 Cal. 2d 662, 675) . The Court concluded that defendant had not met his burden of proof because the extent of his interest in the corporation was never disclosed nor was the fact disclosed that the corporation

[b] Principal May Set Aside Agent's Transaction With Self

Sands v. Eagle Oil & Refining Co. (1948) 83 Cal. App. 2d 312, 188 P.2d 782 , was an action to recover rent due to plaintiff under a written lease of a gas station. Defendant cross complained for damages and rescission of the lease against the agent who negotiated the lease, arguing that the agent secretly acted on behalf of plaintiff although the agent was also defendant's agent. The rent was to be paid in care of the agent at his home address. When the estimate of the parties as to the amount of gas that would be sold proved to be overly optimistic, the station was closed but the rent continued to be paid until 14 months after the execution of the lease, when defendant stopped paying rent. When defendant contacted plaintiff to obtain a release from the lease, defendant learned that plaintiff did not own the property, and never had, but that the agent owned it himself. The trial court ruled that plaintiff take nothing and pay damages to defendant, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that a real estate transaction concluded by an agent on his or her own behalf without the knowledge of the principal is always set aside at the option of the principal (83 Cal. App. 2d 312, 320) . The court held that lack of actual fraud, undue advantage for the agent, or injury to the principal, is immaterial; the rule is intended to prevent temptation and the possibility of wrong (83 Cal. App. 2d 312, 320) . Only ratification by the principal after full knowledge of all the facts can defeat the right to avoid the transaction (83 Cal. App. 2d 312, 320) .

Petray v. First Nat'l Bank (1928) 92 Cal. App 86, 267 P. 711 , was an action to recover the amount of a bank account that an employee of defendant had taken in his capacity as plaintiff's agent. The agent was authorized to loan the amount in the account on receipt of good security, but the agent loaned the money to himself and gave plaintiff an unsecured note. The trial court entered judgment in favor of defendant, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that plaintiff ratified the transaction (92 Cal. App 86, 90-91) . The court noted that a transaction by which an agent undertakes to deal with himself or herself in the matter of the agency without the knowledge of the principal is not void but is voidable (92 Cal. App 86, 90) .

§ 182.81 Supporting Contention That Principal May Recover Secret Profits From Agent--Agent's Secret Profits Obtained From Agency Belong to Principal

[The following may be combined with the contentions supported by the points and authorities set forth in §§ 182.30 -182.36 as appropriate and may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF PRINCIPAL MAY RECOVER SECRET PROFITS MADE BY DEFENDANT AGENT FROM THE SUBJECT OF THE AGENCY, BECAUSE ALL BENEFITS AND ADVANTAGES ACQUIRED BY AN AGENT AS AN OUTGROWTH OF THE AGENCY, EXCLUSIVE OF THE AGENT'S AGREED COMPENSATION, ARE DEEMED TO HAVE BEEN ACQUIRED FOR THE BENEFIT OF THE PRINCIPAL AND ARE RECOVERABLE BY THE PRINCIPAL.

A. Agent May Not Make Secret Profit. An agent may not make any secret profit out of the subject of the agency (Savage v. Mayer (1949) 33 Cal. 2d 548, 551, 203 P.2d 9).

B. Principal May Recover Agent's Secret Profit. All benefits and advantages acquired by the agent as an outgrowth of the agency, exclusive of the agent's agreed compensation, are deemed to have been acquired for the benefit of the principal, and the principal may recover such benefits in an appropriate action (Savage v. Mayer (1949) 33 Cal. 2d 548, 551, 203 P.2d 9).

[2] Comments

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that the principal may recover from his or her agent all secret profits acquired by the agent as an outgrowth of the agency. It appears that such an argument may be raised by the principal in either an action for money had and received or in an action for fraud [see Crogan v. Metz (1956) 47 Cal. 2d 398, 404, 303 P.2d 1029 (money had and received); Bate v. Marsteller (1965) 232 Cal. App. 2d 605,

616-617, 43 Cal. Rptr. 149 (fraud)]. Counsel should note that in an action for money had and received, any damages that would be recoverable in a tort action are waived by the pleading of a common count for money had and received [Crogan v. Metz (1956) 47 Cal. 2d 398, 404, 303 P.2d 1029] . A principal may also recover secret profits made by an agent in an action for an accounting [see Kritzer v. Lancaster (1950) 96 Cal. App. 2d 1, 7, 214 P.2d 407] .

If the existence of the agency is disputed, these points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities in §§ 182.30 -182.32, as appropriate. If the extent of an agent's authority is disputed, these points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities in §§ 182.33 and 182.34, as appropriate. If the agency or authority is alleged to have arisen because of the principal's ratification, these points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities in §§ 182.35 and 182.36, as appropriate.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that a principal may recover from the agent all secret profits acquired by the agent from the subject of the agency. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Related Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Agent May Not Make Secret Profit

In Savage v. Mayer (1949) 33 Cal. 2d 548, 203 P.2d 9 , plaintiff principal sued to recover profits made by defendant agent in purchases of stock made on plaintiff's behalf. Defendant agent offered to purchase stock for plaintiff principal and for himself, in conjunction with another's purchases, and thereby acquire control of the company. Plaintiff agreed, and defendant eventually bought 9,000 shares at what defendant represented as a price of $20 per share. In fact, defendant had purchased the stock from the other prospective partner at $17 per share, and kept the difference. Plaintiff sued for the return of defendant's secret profits. The trial court found that defendant had been plaintiff's agent and that defendant had fraudulently misrepresented the nature of the transaction to plaintiff, and awarded judgment in the amount of defendant's profit. Defendant appealed, contending that the damages should have been limited by Civ. Code § 3343, which limits the damages recoverable for fraud to the difference between the actual value of that which the defrauded party parted with and the actual value of what was received. Defendant argued that as no evidence of the value of the stock was introduced, no damages should have been awarded.

The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment, holding that Civ. Code § 3343 does not limit the recovery of an agent's secret profits because the principal's recovery does not depend on any deceit of the agent (33 Cal. 2d 548, 551) . The Court held that an agent is not permitted to make any secret profit out of the subject of the agency; all benefits and advantages acquired by the agent as an outgrowth of the agency, except for the agent's agreed compensation, are deemed to have been acquired for the benefit of the principal (33 Cal. 2d 548, 551) . The Court based its holding on the implied promise by one in the capacity of agent to pay monies received to the principal on demand and noted that the principal's right to recover is based on the duties incident to the agency relationship, not the deceit of the agent (33 Cal. 2d 548, 551) . The Court held that Civ. Code § 3343, defining the damages recoverable by one defrauded in the purchase, sale, or exchange of property, was not applicable in an action to recover secret profits because no fraud is necessary for a case of action to exist in favor of the principal (33 Cal. 2d 548, 551) .

[b] Principal May Recover Agent's Secret Profit

The facts and procedural background of Savage v. Mayer (1949) 33 Cal. 2d 548, 203 P.2d 9 , are discussed in § 182.81[3][a]. The Court held that a principal is entitled to recover all benefits and advantages acquired by the agent as an outgrowth of the agency, exclusive of the agent's agreed compensation (33 Cal. 2d 548, 551) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Principal May Recover Agent's Secret Profit

Crogan v. Metz (1956) 47 Cal. 2d 398, 303 P.2d 1029 , arose from a three-way exchange of property arranged by defendant real estate agent in which plaintiff paid $115,000 for a property that its owner had asked $100,000 for, but that defendant represented was firmly listed at $115,000 so defendant would be able to receive a commission on the exchange. When plaintiff principal discovered these facts, she sued for the return of the $15,000 profit, and the trial court granted the relief. The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that an agent's secret profits may be recovered by a common count for money had and received maintained by the principal, but that such an action waives any tort damages that plaintiff might have been entitled to recover (47 Cal. 2d 398, 404) .

Store of Happiness v. Carmona & Allen (1957) 152 Cal. App. 2d 266, 312 P.2d 1104 , was an action in assumpsit seeking the return of secret profits retained by defendant agent during the course of its agency relationship with plaintiff principal. Defendant had been retained to procure television advertising time for plaintiff, and it did so, but did not pass on to plaintiff a frequency discount that the television station gave defendant. The court of appeal affirmed a judgment for plaintiff, holding that a principal is entitled to recover any secret profit made by the agent in the course of the agency, even though the agent quotes a flat price for a service and the principal agrees to pay that price. The court based its conclusion on the basic duty of loyalty owed by an agent to his or her principal (152 Cal. App. 2d 266, 272) .

[The following may be combined with the contentions supported by the points and authorities set forth in §§ 182.30 -182.36 as appropriate and may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF PRINCIPAL IS ENTITLED TO AN ACCOUNTING FROM DEFENDANT AGENT BECAUSE AN AGENT MUST ACCOUNT TO THE PRINCIPAL WHEN THE AGENT HAS ACTED IN A FIDUCIARY CAPACITY AND HAS BECOME LIABLE TO THE PRINCIPAL FOR AMOUNTS THAT CANNOT BE DETERMINED WITHOUT AN ACCOUNTING, [AND AN AGENT HAS THE BURDEN IN AN ACCOUNTING ACTION OF PROVING THAT MONEY OR PROPERTY RECEIVED FOR THE PRINCIPAL WAS PAID TO THE PRINCIPAL OR DISPOSED OF IN ACCORDANCE WITH THE AGENT'S AUTHORITY].

A. Agent Must Account to Principal. An agent must account to the principal when the agent has acted in a fiduciary capacity and has become liable to the principal for amounts that cannot be determined without an accounting, (San Pedro Lumber Co. v. Reynolds (1896) 111 Cal. 588, 595, 44 P. 309).

[Optional] B. Agent's Burden In Accounting Action. An agent has the burden in an accounting action of proving that he or she paid to the principal or otherwise properly disposed of the money or other thing that he or she is proved to have received for the principal (*Kennard v. [2] Comments

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that an agent must account to the principal when the agent has acted in a fiduciary capacity and has become liable to the principal for amounts that cannot be determined without an accounting. When appropriate, optional Paragraph B of this contention may be used to support the contention that the agent has the burden of proving that he or she paid to the principal or otherwise properly disposed of money or other things that the agent received for the principal. This contentions may be used, for example, in an accounting action by a principal against his or her agent when the agent admits responsibility for some, but not all, of the funds claimed due.

If the existence of the agency is disputed, these points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities in §§ 182.30 -182.32, as appropriate. If the extent of an agent's authority is disputed, these points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities in §§ 182.33 and 182.34, as appropriate. If the agency or authority is alleged to have arisen because of the principal's ratification, these points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities in §§ 182.35 and 182.36, as appropriate.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that an agent must account to his or her principal. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss facts showing that an unspecified amount of the money or other things came into the hands of the agent in the course of the agency, and that the agent has failed to account for the money or things.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Agent Must Account to Principal

San Pedro Lumber Co. v. Reynolds (1896) 111 Cal. 588, 44 P. 309 , was an action to foreclose a lien on stock pledged as security by defendant agent in an amount to be determined after an accounting against defendant. Plaintiff principal alleged that defendant agent had received considerable sums of money for the use and benefit of plaintiff that defendant did not account for or pay over to plaintiff, and that the amount of the funds not accounted for were unknown but believed to be $65,000. The trial court entered judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appealed, claiming that its demurrer to the complaint should have been sustained.

The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment, holding that an agent who has acted in a fiduciary capacity and who has become liable to the principal in amounts that cannot be determined without an accounting must account to the principal (111 Cal. 588, 595) . The Court held that the complaint was sufficient in that it alleged that defendant acted in a fiduciary capacity as plaintiff's agent, and that by defendant's misconduct he caused losses and became liable to plaintiff in an amount that could not be determined without an accounting (111 Cal. 588, 595) . The court also held that the fiduciary nature of the agency relationship brought the accounting action within the equitable jurisdiction of the court (111 Cal. 588, 596) .

[b] Agent's Burden in Accounting Action

Kennard v. Glick (1960) 183 Cal. App. 2d 246, 7 Cal. Rptr. 88 , was an action by the owners of a bird store seeking an accounting from defendant, who had acted as their agent in managing the business. Defendant admitted depositing $452 in checks made out to the store in his own account, and argued that no proof of any other amount could be sustained. An accountant retained by the parties concluded that in the period in which defendant was in charge of the business, the amount available for deposit exceeded the amount actually deposited by defendant by over $4,500, although the books were "a mess" and the exact figure was incapable of exact determination. Judgment was entered in plaintiffs' favor in that amount, and defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, rejecting defendant's contention that the burden was on plaintiffs to establish the amount that defendant misappropriated (183 Cal. App. 2d 246, 250) . Relying on the Restatement 2nd of Agency, §§ 382 and 399, the court held that an agent not only has the duty to state the amount due to the principal, but also to keep an accurate record of the persons involved, of the dates and amounts of things received, and of payments made. The court further held that if the principal proves or the agent admits that the agent has come into possession of money or any other thing for the principal, the agent has the burden of proving that he or she has paid it to the principal or disposed of it in accordance with his or her authority (183 Cal. App. 2d 246, 251) . The court held that defendant did not sustain this burden, and that substantial evidence supported the judgment (183 Cal. App. 2d 246, 254) .

[a] Agent Must Account to Principal

In Whann v. Doell (1923) 192 Cal. 680, 221 P. 899 , plaintiff sought an accounting from defendant, plaintiff's partner in an enterprise, and the trial court entered a judgment for plaintiff distributing to her one half of the partnership's profits. The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that the complaint was sufficient to compel an accounting in that it alleged the existence of a relationship that requires an accounting and that some balance was due plaintiff (192 Cal. 680, 684) .

In Mendoza v. Continental Sales Co. (2006) 140 Cal. App. 4th 1395 , an agricultural producer engaged a commission merchant that, in turn, hired selling agents on re-consignment. Those agents converted some of the proceeds that belonged to the producer, and the producer sued those agents for conversion on a theory of subagency and breach of an agent's (the commission merchant's) fiduciary duty. The court concluded that the ruling in Fischer v. Machado (1996) 50 Cal. App. 4th 1069 , below, should be extended to subagents that are engaged by a commission merchant pursuant to authority in the commission merchant's contract with a producer. Thus, the subagents could be liable, to the same extent as the commission merchant, for conversion of sale proceeds (140 Cal. App. 4th 1395, 1404-1405).

In Fischer v. Machado (1996) 50 Cal. App. 4th 1069, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 213 , plaintiff farmers signed an agreement that defendants would act as sales agent for plaintiff's small fruit packing company. The agent sold plaintiffs' fruit and placed the proceeds into an account that was used for its company expenses. The agent then filed for bankruptcy and the farmers were never paid. The farmers filed an action based on alter ego and conversion. The trial court found for plaintiffs and the agents appealed. Defendants contended that they could not have converted the funds because plaintiffs were not entitled to exercise dominion and control over any specific funds. The court of appeals held that because defendants did not dispute their agency or the fact that they received the proceeds from plaintiffs' consigned farm products and commingled the funds with their general corporate account, there was sufficient evidence to support the trial court's finding of conversion, which was predicated on fundamental principles of conversion and agency (50 Cal. App. 4th 1069, 1073-1074) . The court held further that federal and state law governing commodities and agricultural products did not preclude the common law action for conversion (50 Cal. App. 4th 1069, 1074-1075) .

Kritzer v. Lancaster (1950) 96 Cal. App. 2d 1, 214 P.2d 407 , was an action alleging that defendant stockbroker had agreed to invest plaintiff's funds in a safe manner, but in fact had invested them in speculative ventures and had made secret profits therefrom while representing to plaintiff that losses had resulted from the investments. Plaintiff appealed a judgment of dismissal entered after defendant's demurrer was sustained, and the court of appeal reversed. The court held that plaintiff's complaint essentially alleged the existence of a confidential agency relationship, in which defendant would invest in sound securities, and a loss the amount of which could be determined only by an accounting. The court held that these allegations were sufficient to support a cause of action for an accounting (96 Cal. App. 2d 1, 7) .

§ 182.83 Supporting Contention That Principal May Recover Tort Damages [Civ. Code § 3333] for Agent's Breach of Fiduciary Duty--Agent Did Not Use Reasonable Care in Carrying Out Agency

[The following may be combined with the contentions supported by the points and authorities set forth in §§ 182.30 -182.32, 182.35, and 182.36 as appropriate and may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF PRINCIPAL MAY RECOVER TORT DAMAGES FROM DEFENDANT AGENT FOR BREACH OF FIDUCIARY DUTY BECAUSE AN AGENT WHO DOES NOT EXERCISE REASONABLE CARE, SKILL, AND DILIGENCE IS LIABLE FOR ANY LOSSES SUSTAINED BY THE PRINCIPAL AS THE RESULT OF THE AGENT'S NEGLIGENCE OR BREACH OF DUTY.

A. Agent's Fiduciary Duty Toward Principal. An agent must use reasonable care, skill, and diligence in the performance of the object of the agency (Pollack v. Lytle (1981) 120 Cal. App. 3d 931, 940, 175 Cal. Rptr. 81).

B. Agent Is Liable for Breach of Fiduciary Duty. A principal may recover damages for an agent's breach of the fiduciary duty to use reasonable care, skill, and diligence that will compensate the principal for all the detriment proximately caused thereby (Civ. Code § 3333; Pollack v. Lytle (1981) 120 Cal. App. 3d 931, 941, 175 Cal. Rptr. 81 ; Timmsen v. Forest E. Olson, Inc. (1970) 6 Cal. App. 3d 860, 871, 86 Cal. Rptr. 359).

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a principal may recover damages from an agent for breach of fiduciary duty when the agent has failed to use reasonable care, skill, and diligence in the performance of the object of the agency. This argument may be used, for example, in an action by the principal after the agent's act or omission has caused the principal damage and may also be used in a cross complaint to an agent's action for compensation from the principal. If the existence of the agency is disputed, these points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities in §§ 182.30 -182.32, as appropriate. If the agency is alleged to have arisen because of the principal's ratification, these points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities in §§ 182.35 and 182.36, as appropriate.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that a principal may recover damages for an agent's breach of fiduciary duty in failing to use reasonable care, skill, and diligence in performing the object of the agency. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Agent's Fiduciary Duty Toward Principal

The facts and procedural background of Pollack v. Lytle (1981) 120 Cal. App. 3d 931, 175 Cal. Rptr. 81 , are discussed in § 182.31[3][a]. The court held that an agent is a fiduciary with the same obligations of faithful service as a trustee, including the duty to use reasonable care, skill, and diligence in the performance of the object of the agency (120 Cal. App. 3d 931, 940) . The court held that plaintiff's complaint alleged a breach of this duty by alleging that defendant, who claimed to have experience in the area of medical malpractice actions, negligently performed his duties to plaintiff's damage (120 Cal. App. 3d 931, 940) .

Pollack was decided under former Civ. Code § 2322(3), which provided that an agent's authority did not include the authority to do an act that a trustee would be forbidden to do by any of the laws governing trustee obligations, including the law requiring a trustee to use at least ordinary care and diligence in the execution of his or her trust [see former Civ. Code § 2322(3); see also former Civ. Code § 2259]. Legislation amending former Civ. Code § 2322(3) has altered the statutory application of trust law to agents [see Stats. 1986 ch. 820, § 9; Stats. 1988 ch. 113, § 5]. Under Civ. Code § 2322(c), the successor of former Civ. Code § 2322(3), an agent's authority does not include the authority to violate a duty to which a trustee is subject under Prob. Code §§ 16002 (duty of loyalty), 16004 (duty to avoid conflict of interest), 16005 (duty not to undertake adverse trust), or 16009 (duty to keep trust property separate and identified) [see Civ. Code § 2322(c)]. Not listed in Civ. Code § 2322(c) is Prob. Code § 16040, which governs a trustee's general standard of care and diligence; consequently, it would appear that there is no longer direct statutory authority for the proposition that an agent must use the ordinary care and diligence required of a trustee. Nevertheless, the amendment of Civ. Code § 2322 would not appear to invalidate the rule in Pollack that an agent must use reasonable care, skill, and diligence in the performance of the object of an agency.

CAUTION:

Although the general agency principles articulated by the court of appeal in Pollack v. Lytle (1981) 120 Cal. App. 3d 931, 175 Cal. Rptr. 81 , are probably still valid, the Supreme Court in Beck v. Wecht (2002) 28 Cal. 4th 289, 297-298, 121 Cal. Rptr. 2d 384, 48 P.3d 417 , overruled Pollack to the extent that it had held that one attorney may sue another attorney for breach of fiduciary duty for actions taken by the latter during joint representation of a client that reduce or eliminate the fees that the former would have received from the underlying representation.

[b] Agent Is Liable for Breach of Fiduciary Duty

The facts and procedural background of Pollack v. Lytle (1981) 120 Cal. App. 3d 931, 175 Cal. Rptr. 81 , are discussed in § 182.31[3][a]. The court held that an agent is a fiduciary with the same obligations of faithful service as a trustee, including the duty to use reasonable care, skill, and diligence in the performance of the object of the agency (120 Cal. App. 3d 931, 940) . The court also held that the breach of a fiduciary duty is tortious, entitling the principal to recover the damages defined in Civ. Code § 3333 (120 Cal. App. 3d 931, 941) .

Former Civ. Code § 2322(3) (applying duties of trustee to agents), under which Pollack was decided, was amended in 1986 and 1988 [see Stats. 1986 ch. 820, Stats. § 9; 1988 ch. 113, § 5]. These amendments apparently would not invalidate the general rule that an agent has a duty to use reasonable care, skill, and diligence in the performance of the object of the agency [see § 182.83[3][a]].

CAUTION:

Although the general agency principles articulated by the court of appeal in Pollack v. Lytle (1981) 120 Cal. App. 3d 931, 175 Cal. Rptr. 81 , are probably still valid, the Supreme Court in Beck v. Wecht (2002) 28 Cal. 4th 289, 297-298, 121 Cal. Rptr. 2d 384, 48 P.3d 417 , overruled Pollack to the extent that it had held that one attorney may sue another attorney for breach of fiduciary duty for actions taken by the latter during joint representation of a client that reduce or eliminate the fees that the former would have received from the underlying representation.

In Timmsen v. Forest E. Olson, Inc. (1970) 6 Cal. App. 3d 860, 86 Cal. Rptr. 359 , plaintiff principals sued a real estate agent for damages suffered as a result of defendant's alleged negligence in setting up a sale of plaintiffs' house. Plaintiff principals were a married couple in their sixties and inexperienced in real estate matters, who went to defendant agent's office to see about selling their home. An employee of defendant prepared a listing agreement that committed plaintiffs "to subordination," of which neither the employee nor plaintiffs knew the meaning. A party offered to buy the house on terms very favorable to the buyer and detrimental to plaintiffs' interests. Defendant's employees pressed plaintiffs to accept the offer, brushing aside their concerns about the subordination clause with representations that they had bound themselves to the provision by their listing, and convinced plaintiffs to submit a counteroffer that merely increased the selling price. The buyer accepted the counteroffer, but plaintiffs refused to sign the escrow instructions on the advice of an attorney they had consulted. The buyer obtained a judgment decreeing that the buyer was entitled to specific performance of the sale agreement, but settled for a cash payment. Plaintiffs then brought the instant action to recover from the agents the payment made to the buyer, attorneys' fees in the specific performance action, and damages for anxieties, nervousness, embarrassment, and mental strain. Plaintiffs appealed from the judgment of nonsuit entered in favor of defendants.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that plaintiffs' opening statement and the inferences deducible therefrom would have been sufficient to support a judgment in plaintiffs' favor, so a nonsuit was improper (6 Cal. App. 3d 860, 872) . The court held that an agent who violates his or her duty to use reasonable care, skill, and diligence is liable for any damages that the principal may sustain as the result of the agent's negligence or breach of duty (6 Cal. App. 3d 860, 871) . The court held that plaintiffs may recover the damages that are the natural and proximate result of the negligence, and that the measure of damages is the loss or injury actually sustained by the principal as the result of the negligence (6 Cal. App. 3d 860, 871) . The court pointed out that an agent may be liable to his or her principal for assuming a position adverse to the principal, failing to disclose material facts to the principal, or for negligence in carrying out the agency, and that, depending on the findings of fact reached by the trial court, a judgment for plaintiffs on one of those theories was possible (6 Cal. App. 3d 860, 871-872) .

[a] Agent Is Liable for Breach of Fiduciary Duty

In Michelson v. Hamada (1994) 29 Cal. App. 4th 1566, 36 Cal. Rptr. 2d 343 , plaintiff, an orthopedic surgeon, contracted with defendant's professional corporation (another orthopedic surgeon) for billing and collection services, in addition to office space. Defendant was to receive all fees payable to plaintiff, keep full and accurate records and books of accounts showing plaintiff's billings and collections, deduct fees required to be made to defendant under the agreement, and remit the balance to plaintiff. After a number of years, plaintiff learned that he had not received the income due him and that he had been overcharged in other matters. He sued defendant for breach of contract, breach of fiduciary duty, and fraud (29 Cal. App. 4th 1566, 1574-1579) .

The court of appeal upheld the trial court's denial of defendant's motion for nonsuit, and the jury's verdict with respect to the cause of action for breach of fiduciary duty. The court found that the relationship between the parties constituted an agency, in which defendant represented plaintiff in his relationship with third persons, his patients. As such, defendant owed a fiduciary duty to plaintiff, the breach of which supported both an award of compensatory damages under Civ. Code § 3333 and punitive damages (29 Cal. App. 4th 1566, 1579-1582) .

In Cecka v. Beckman & Co. (1972) 28 Cal. App. 3d 5, 104 Cal. Rptr. 374 , plaintiff sued to recover losses sustained as a result of the negligence of defendant agent in a commodities transaction. The negligence allegedly consisted of the agent's failure to discover that a commodities transaction was larger than plaintiff's authorization, resulting in a loss to plaintiff when plaintiff did not advance additional money demanded by defendant and defendant sold the commodities contract at a loss. The court held that the negligence of an agent in following the instructions of the principal may lead to a cause of action in favor of the principal against the agent (28 Cal. App. 3d 5, 13) . The court held that the judgment was sustainable on the ground that defendant was negligent in not knowing of the changes in weight and price of the commodities contract and that the negligence was the cause of plaintiff's loss (28 Cal. App. 3d 5, 13-14) .

B. Agent Liable for Failure to Disclose Material Facts to Principal. An agent must make the fullest disclosure of all material facts that might affect his or her principal's decision making and a principal may recover tort damages in the amount that will compensate for all the detriment proximately caused by the agent's breach of fiduciary duty (*Civ. [a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a principal may recover tort damages for an agent's breach of his or her fiduciary duty toward the principal by failing to disclose a material fact concerning a transaction that might have affected the principal's decision making. This argument may be used, for example, in an action for damages by the principal after the agent's failure to disclose has resulted in damages to the principal. This argument may also be used in a cross complaint to the agent's action for compensation from the principal. If the existence of the agency is disputed, these points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities in §§ 182.30 -182.32, as appropriate. If the agency is alleged to have arisen because of the principal's ratification, these points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities in §§ 182.35 and 182.36, as appropriate.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that a principal may recover tort damages because an agent failed to disclose a material fact or facts that might have affected the principal's decision making in a transaction in which the agent was involved. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss facts showing that material facts were not disclosed by the agent and the potential relevance of those facts to the decision made by the principal. Counsel should also discuss facts showing the lack of total disclosure if some, but not all, facts were disclosed to the principal.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Agent Liable for Failure to Disclose Material Facts to Principal

The facts and procedural background of Batson v. Strehlow (1968) 68 Cal. 2d 662, 68 Cal. Rptr. 589, 441 P.2d 101 , are discussed in § 182.80[3][a]. The court held that defendant agent violated his fiduciary duty to plaintiff by not fully disclosing the extent of his interest in the corporation that purchased plaintiff's property and the fact that the corporation was not furnishing any part of the consideration for the property. The court held that plaintiff was entitled to recover the amount of the commission paid to defendant, which was the only relief sought by plaintiff (68 Cal. App. 2d 657) .

The facts and procedural background of Pollack v. Lytle (1981) 120 Cal. App. 3d 931, 175 Cal. Rptr. 81 , are discussed in § 182.31[3][a]. The court held that an agent has a duty to make the fullest disclosure of all material facts that might affect the principal's decision making. The court held that a principal who proves that his or her agent breaches the duty of disclosure may recover damages under Civ. Code § 3333 in the amount that will compensate for all the detriment proximately caused thereby (120 Cal. App. 3d 931, 941) .

CAUTION:

Although the general agency principles articulated by the court of appeal in Pollack v. Lytle (1981) 120 Cal. App. 3d 931, 175 Cal. Rptr. 81 , are probably still valid, the Supreme Court in Beck v. Wecht (2002) 28 Cal. 4th 289, 297-298, 121 Cal. Rptr. 2d 384, 48 P.3d 417 , overruled Pollack to the extent that it had held that one attorney may sue another attorney for breach of fiduciary duty for actions taken by the latter during joint representation of a client that reduce or eliminate the fees that the former would have received from the underlying representation.

[b] Agent's Burden of Proof

The facts and procedural background of Timmsen v. Forest E. Olson, Inc. (1970) 6 Cal. App. 3d 860, 86 Cal. Rptr. 359 , are discussed in § 182.83[3][b]. The court of appeal, quoting from Bate v. Marsteller (1959) 175 Cal. App. 2d 573, 581, 346 P.2d 903 , held that when the acts of the agent have been questioned by the principal and the fiduciary relationship has been established, the burden is on the agent to prove that he or she acted with the utmost good faith toward the principal and that he or she made a full disclosure of all facts relating to the transaction under attack prior to the transaction (6 Cal. App. 3d 860, 871) . The court held that the facts presented by plaintiffs' opening statement were sufficient standing alone to support a judgment in their favor and therefore precluded a nonsuit against plaintiffs (6 Cal. App. 3d 860, 872) .

[c] Disclosure Duty Applies to Gratuitous Agents

In St. James Armenian Church of L.A. v. Kurkjian (1975) 47 Cal. App. 3d 547, 121 Cal. Rptr. 214 , plaintiff principal sued to recover the amount of secret commissions made on two property sales by a friend of defendant agent. Plaintiff had owned property that it wished to sell, and defendant was chairman of a committee to advise plaintiff concerning the sale and the acquisition of new property. A friend of defendant, a licensed broker, assisted defendant in negotiations with the ultimate purchaser of the property and its broker. The friend obtained a commission on the two transactions. Defendant did not inform plaintiff of either commission agreement, misrepresenting that his friend had acted without compensation. When plaintiff learned of the commissions, it instituted the instant action to recover from defendant the commissions paid. The trial court granted judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that substantial evidence supported the conclusion of the trial court that defendant had breached the fiduciary duty of disclosure (47 Cal. App. 3d 547, 551) . The court held that the rule requiring disclosure of all material facts applies to gratuitous agents as well as compensated agents (47 Cal. App. 3d 547, 552) . The court also rejected defendant's contention that he could not be held liable because he did not receive any profit. The court held that when a fiduciary causes secret profits to flow to a third party in breach of the duty of disclosure, the fiduciary may be held liable for those profits even though he or she did not personally receive any part of them (47 Cal. App. 3d 547, 553) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Agent Must Disclose Material Facts to Principal

In Rookard v. Mexicoach (9th Cir. 1982) 680 F.2d 1257 , plaintiffs were injured in a bus accident in Mexico and sought to hold defendant, the California travel agent that sold them their tickets, liable for their injuries on the ground that defendant had not warned them of the dangers of bus travel in Mexico. The trial court granted summary judgment for defendant, but the court of appeal reversed. Applying California law, the appellate panel held that an agent has the duty to disclose to his or her principal all material facts concerning the transaction in question that might affect the principal's decision (680 F.2d 1257, 1262) . The court held that a triable issue of fact existed as to whether or not defendant had acted as plaintiffs' agent, and that if an agency was found, defendant would have had the duty to warn plaintiffs of any dangers known to defendant and could be liable for damages caused by the breach of that duty (680 F.2d 1257, 1261-1262) .

§ 182.85 Supporting Contention That Principal Is Entitled to Indemnity From Agent--Principal Held Liable for Agent's Tort Solely Because of Agency Relationship [Civ. Code § 2338] Is Entitled to Indemnity

[The following may be combined with the contentions supported by the points and authorities set forth in §§ 182.30 -182.32, 182.35, and 182.36, and 182.40 -182.43 as appropriate and may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities or in a trial or appellate brief.]

_____ [PLAINTIFF or DEFENDANT] PRINCIPAL IS ENTITLED TO INDEMNITY FROM DEFENDANT AGENT BECAUSE A PRINCIPAL WHO IS HELD LIABLE FOR THE TORTS OF AN AGENT SOLELY BECAUSE OF THE AGENCY RELATIONSHIP IS ENTITLED TO INDEMNITY FROM THE CULPABLE AGENT.

A. Principal and Agent Liable for Tort of Agent. A principal whose agent has committed a tort in the transaction of the business of the agency is jointly and severally liable to an injured party (Cahill Bros., Inc. v. Clementina Co. (1962) 208 Cal. App. 2d 367, 388, 25 Cal. Rptr. 301 ; see Civ. Code § 2338).

B. Principal's Right to Indemnity From Agent. If the liability of the principal is based not on any fault on the part of the principal but solely on the fault of the agent and the existence of the agency relationship, the principal is entitled to indemnity from the agent at fault (Herrero v. Atkinson (1964) 227 Cal. App. 2d 69, 77, 38 Cal. Rptr. 490 ; see Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. v. Haslam (1994) 29 Cal. App. 4th 1347, 1353-1356, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 135).

[2] Comments

CAUTION:

The legal principles set forth in this form are still valid. However, in Far W. Fin. Corp. v. D & S Co. (1988) 46 Cal. 3d 796, 251 Cal. Rptr. 202, 760 P.2d 399 , the California Supreme Court held that all rights of indemnity except those created by express contractual provisions are subject to comparative principles. Thus, total or partial indemnity may be awarded depending on the facts and circumstances of the case. Further, the indemnitee's indemnity rights are terminated under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 877(b) and 877.6(c) by a good-faith settlement between the indemnitor and the plaintiff in the underlying action. All pre-1988 cases finding a right of total indemnity must be considered in light of the principles set forth in Far West. For more detailed discussion, see Ch. 115, Indemnity and Contribution .

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a principal is entitled to indemnity from an agent whose tort has subjected the principal to tort liability solely because of his or her status as principal. The argument may be used, for example, in an independent action for indemnity instituted after the principal has been held liable to a third party for a tort of his or her agent. They might also be used in a cross complaint against the agent in an action by a third party seeking damages from both the principal and the agent for the agent's acts or omissions.

If the existence of the agency is disputed, these points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities in §§ 182.30 -182.32, as appropriate. If the agency is alleged to have arisen because of the principal's ratification, these points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities in §§ 182.35 and 182.36, as appropriate. If counsel anticipates that the principal's authorization or ratification of the agent's acts will be disputed, these points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities in §§ 182.40 -182.43, as appropriate.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that a principal is entitled to indemnity from an agent whose tort has subjected the principal to tort liability solely because of his or her status as principal. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss facts showing that the principal was held liable for the tort of the agent solely because of the agency relationship and not because the acts or omissions of the agent were authorized or ratified by the principal.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Principal and Agent Liable for Tort of Agent

Cahill Bros., Inc. v. Clementina Co. (1962) 208 Cal. App. 2d 367, 25 Cal. Rptr. 301 , was an action for indemnity by plaintiff principal against defendant agent. Plaintiff and defendant entered into an oral contract providing that defendant would demolish a building owned by the son of the head of plaintiff corporation. As was usual, employees of plaintiff were temporarily employed by defendant under the supervision and direction of defendant's managing officer. Pursuant to that direction, employees were ordered to erect barricades around the site to protect pedestrians. Despite the existence of the barricades, a pedestrian was injured when he fell into an excavation at the site, and he recovered tort damages from both companies, who satisfied the judgment at the rate of 50 percent each. A judgment was entered for plaintiff in this indemnity action, and defendant appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. The court held that a principal whose agent has committed a tort in the transaction of the business of the agency is jointly and severally liable to an injured party (208 Cal. App. 2d 367, 388) .

[b] Principal's Right to Indemnity From Agent

In Herrero v. Atkinson (1964) 227 Cal. App. 2d 69, 38 Cal. Rptr. 490 , a defendant in a wrongful death action cross complained against codefendants who were alleged to have directly caused the death of the decedent. The decedent was injured in an automobile accident and died when a blood transfusion was allegedly performed in a negligent manner. The cross complaint, filed by a doctor who alleged that the negligent doctors were his agents, sought indemnity on the ground that any liability would be based solely on the agency relationship and not on any wrongdoing on cross complainant's part. The trial court sustained a demurrer to the cross complaint without leave to amend, and the cross complainant appealed from the resulting dismissal.

The court of appeal reversed the dismissal of the cross complaint, holding that it stated a cause of action for indemnification (227 Cal. App. 2d 69, 77) . The court held that a principal is entitled to indemnity from a negligent agent when the principal is liable solely because of the relationship of principal and agent (227 Cal. App. 2d 69, 77) .

Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. v. Haslam (1994) 29 Cal. App. 4th 1347, 1353-1356, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 135 , involved an action for indemnity by an insurance company against one of its agents. A dispute between the insurer and an insured under a fire insurance policy arose from the agent's errors in filling out both the original application for insurance, which contained the wrong address of the insured property, and in filling out a notice of cancellation on discovering the first error, which notice did not have the date of cancellation properly entered. The insurer settled the underlying action with its insured for the $250,000 policy limits and an additional amount of $800,000 in consideration of the insurer's potential liability for bad faith practices (29 Cal. App. 4th 1347, 1350-1353) .

On trial of the indemnity action, the jury allocated 100 percent of the insurer's loss to the agent and entered a judgment of indemnity for the total amount of $1,050,000. On appeal, the agent sought to overturn only that part of the judgment that represented the $800,000 paid on account of possible exposure for bad faith claims practices. However, the judgment was affirmed in its entirety. The court rejected the argument that an agent should not be liable, as a matter of law, for damages that represent the insurer's bad faith. It upheld the jury instruction that allowed the insurer to recover all damages in indemnity for which the agent was the legal cause. The agent's liability arose not from the insurer's bad faith, but from his own negligence (29 Cal. App. 4th 1347, 1354) .

Principal's Ratification With Knowledge of Agent's Self-Dealing. A transaction by which an agent deals with himself or herself without the consent of the principal in a matter in which he or she is employed as an agent may be ratified by the principal with full knowledge of all the facts and may not be set aside by the principal thereafter (Petray v. First Nat'l Bank (1928) 92 Cal. App 86, 90, 267 P. 711 ; see Sands v. Eagle Oil & Refining Co. (1948) 83 Cal. App. 2d 312, 321, 188 P.2d 782).

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a principal may set aside a transaction that an agent entered into on his or her own behalf. They oppose the contention on the ground that the principal later ratified the transaction with knowledge of the true role of the agent. This argument may be used, for example, as a defense by an agent to an equitable action by the principal to set aside the transaction in which the agent allegedly dealt on his or her own behalf without the knowledge of the principal at the time of the transaction. These points and authorities may also be used in an action by the agent to enforce the transaction when the principal argues that the transaction is unenforceable because of the agent's self-dealing. In addition, this argument may be used by an agent as a defense in a declaratory relief action alleging that a principal is not bound by a contract entered into by a self-dealing agent.

If the existence of the agency is disputed, these points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities in §§ 182.37 -182.39 opposing the existence of an agency, as appropriate. Such an argument negates the existence of a self-dealing relationship, because if no agency exists, the alleged agent violates no duty to the alleged principal. If ratification by the principal is disputed, these points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities in §§ 182.35 and 182.36, as appropriate.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that a principal may not set aside an agent's self-dealing transaction because the principal ratified the transaction with knowledge of the agent's role. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss the facts showing that the principal ratified the transaction, and that the ratification was made with full knowledge of the facts of the transaction, especially those relating to the agent's role in the transaction.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities in § 182.80.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Principal's Ratification With Knowledge of Agent's Self-Dealing

The facts and procedural background of Petray v. First Nat'l Bank (1928) 92 Cal. App 86, 267 P. 711 , are discussed in § 182.80[3][b]. The court held that an agent's self-dealing transaction is merely voidable and may be ratified by the principal on full knowledge of the facts (92 Cal. App 86, 90) . The court held that the acts of plaintiff in taking the note from defendant, demanding payment from the agent, and then waiting to demand payment from defendant, constituted an implied ratification of the loan (92 Cal. App 86, 90-91) . The court held further that plaintiff was not entitled to repudiate the loan transaction once she had ratified it (92 Cal. App 86, 90-91) .

The facts and procedural background of Sands v. Eagle Oil & Refining Co. (1948) 83 Cal. App. 2d 312, 188 P.2d 782 , are discussed in § 182.80[3][b]. The court held that an agent's self-dealing transaction made without the knowledge of the principal could be set aside at the option of the principal unless the principal ratifies the transaction with full knowledge of all facts (83 Cal. App. 2d 312, 320) . The court found no ratification, however. The court held that under the circumstances, the transaction was void without a formal rescission, because defendant principal had not consented to the transaction (83 Cal. App. 2d 312, 321) .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Agent May Act on Own Behalf With Disclosure to Principal

Estate of Baldwin (1973) 34 Cal. App. 3d 596, 110 Cal. Rptr. 189 , was an action to recover a commission paid to an agent who agreed to purchase a parcel of property from the estate. The co-executrices of the estate, facing an imminent deadline for the payment of a federal estate tax installment, notified several prospective purchasers of a private sale. The broker involved attended the sale and agreed to purchase the property subject to court confirmation of the sale, and the attorney for the co-executrices prepared a petition for confirmation agreeing to pay a commission to the broker's firm. At the court hearing, another prospective buyer appeared, as did the broker and the co-executrices. The fact that the broker sought to buy the property and receive a commission was brought to the attention of the court, but the sale was allowed to proceed, with the broker being outbid. The sale was confirmed, and the trial court awarded a commission to the broker in one half the amount originally sought, and to the broker of the ultimate purchaser based on one half of the commission that would have been awarded at the same percentage as the first broker, adjusted for the higher price at which the property was purchased. The trial court expressly found that the original sale had been brought about by the original broker, who had fully disclosed the nature of his participation and was therefore entitled to a commission as originating broker. The other parties involved appealed the order.

The court of appeal affirmed the orders, holding that the broker had not acted improperly in bidding for the property himself (34 Cal. App. 3d 596, 606) . The court held that while an agent owes a duty of acting in the highest good faith toward the principal, the agent may nonetheless acquire property from the principal, provided that he or she makes a full disclosure of all material facts concerning the transaction that might affect the principal's decision (34 Cal. App. 3d 596, 606) . The court also relied on public policy considerations to allow agents to act in a dual capacity as long as full disclosure is made (34 Cal. App. 3d 596, 606) . Because the finding that full disclosure was made was supported by documentary evidence, the court upheld the order of the trial court awarding the commission (34 Cal. App. 3d 596, 606) .

In Helbing v. Helbing (1948) 89 Cal. App. 2d 224, 200 P.2d 560 , plaintiff brought an action to set aside transfers of property she made to her son and daughter-in-law on the ground that her son had been her agent in the management of her property and had acquired the property through undue influence. Plaintiff owned and had managed several parcels of property, and had made defendant her agent in the management of some of the properties to the exclusion of plaintiff's other children. After plaintiff had sold two parcels to defendant, she sued to set aside the transfers, but the trial court found that the transactions were fair and made after a full disclosure to plaintiff. Plaintiff appealed from the judgment in favor of defendant.

The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's judgment, holding that substantial evidence supported the trial court's finding that defendant agent had acted in perfect good faith and concealed no material facts from his mother (89 Cal. App. 2d 224, 230) . The court held that an agent is not precluded from acquiring property from his or her principal (89 Cal. App. 2d 224, 227) . The court held that an agent may acquire property from a principal as long as the agent establishes that he or she acted in perfect good faith, revealed all material facts, and paid an adequate consideration (89 Cal. App. 2d 224, 227) . The court examined the transactions involved and held that the trial court's conclusion that the transactions were fair was justified by the evidence (89 Cal. App. 2d 224, 230-231) .

[The following may be combined with the contentions supported by the points and authorities set forth in §§ 182.40 -182.43 as appropriate and may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF MAY RECOVER DAMAGES FROM DEFENDANT AGENT FOR BREACH OF DEFENDANT AGENT'S WARRANTY OF AUTHORITY BECAUSE AN AGENT WHOSE ACTIONS REPRESENT THAT AN AUTHORITY EXISTS IS LIABLE FOR THE BREACH OF THE WARRANTY OF AUTHORITY IF THE AUTHORITY DOES NOT IN FACT EXIST.

A. Agent's Warranty of Authority. One who assumes to act as an agent thereby warrants, as to all who deal with him or her in that capacity, that he or she has the authority assumed (Civ. Code § 2342).

B. Breach of Warranty May Arise From Agent's Conduct. A third party may recover damages for an agent's breach of the implied warranty of authority when the agent represents by his or her actions that an authority exists but the authority does not in fact exist (Cheda v. Grandi (1950) 97 Cal. App. 2d 513, 518-519, 218 P.2d 97).

[Optional] C. Measure of Damages for Breach of Warranty of Authority. The detriment caused by the breach of a warranty of an agent's authority is deemed to be the amount that could have been recovered and collected from the principal if the warranty had been complied with, and the reasonable expenses of legal proceedings taken in good faith to enforce the act of the agent against his or her principal (Civ. Code § 3318).

[Optional] D. Interest on Judgment Proper If Proper Against Principal. If the third party would have been entitled to a definite and fixed recovery from the principal had the agent had the authority warranted, entitling the third party to interest from the time the right of recovery became vested, judgment may be entered against the agent for interest from that time (Kohlberg v. Havens (1919) 41 Cal. App 222, 226, 182 P. 467 ; see Civ. Code §§ 3318, 3287).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a third party may recover damages from an agent for breach of the agent's warranty of authority because the agent's actions represented that an authority existed when in fact the authority did not exist. This argument may be used, for example, in an action against the agent after an action against the principal resulted in a finding that the principal is not bound to the third party because the agent lacked authority. As another example, this contention may be raised in a third party's action against both the agent and the principal, when the third party alternatively argues that if the agent was not authorized, he or she breached a warranty of authority. Optional Paragraph C may be used when the issue of the measure of damages appropriate under Civ. Code § 3318 is disputed or when counsel anticipates such a dispute. Optional Paragraph D may be used when the obligation that the principal would have had to fulfill had the agent been authorized would have been subject to an award of interest under Civ. Code § 3287, and the complaint seeks interest on the amount sought from the unauthorized agent.

The contention supported by these points and authorities may be used whenever a third person suffered damages because of reliance on the authority of an agent who in fact lacked authority. In such a case, the measure of damages is set out in Civ. Code § 3318. This contention should be contrasted with the contention supported by the points and authorities in § 182.102; in § 182.102, rather than seeking damages for an agent's breach of a warranty, the third person seeks to hold the agent liable as a principal on a written agreement. This form and § 182.102 may be combined when counsel wishes to contend alternatively that the agent did not believe he or she had the authority to bind the principal to a written contract.

If the extent of an agent's authority is disputed, these points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities in §§ 182.40 and 182.41, as appropriate. If the agency or authority is alleged to have arisen because of the principal's ratification, these points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities in §§ 182.42 and 182.43, as appropriate.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that a third party may recover damages from an agent for breach of the agent's warranty of authority because an agent's actions represented that an authority existed when in fact the authority did not exist. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in §§ 182.105 and 182.106 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Breach of Warranty May Arise From Agent's Conduct

In Cheda v. Grandi (1950) 97 Cal. App. 2d 513, 218 P.2d 97 , plaintiff sought a declaration that a lease naming plaintiff as lessee was valid. In the alternative, plaintiff prayed for a money judgment from defendant, as agent of the lessor, for breach of a warranty of authority. Plaintiff had rented a garage for years on a month to month basis and sought to improve the building if he could obtain a lease. The owner of the garage, defendant agent's brother, had suffered mental deterioration from a stroke some time before plaintiff sought the lease and was declared incompetent after the lease was signed by plaintiff. After the stroke, defendant assumed to act as agent for his brother concerning the garage, and plaintiff approached him regarding his proposal for a lease. Plaintiff and defendant agreed to a lease, but neither defendant nor his brother signed the lease. However, defendant acted as though a lease existed and allowed plaintiff an adjustment in the lease terms. After the death of the brother, defendant sold the garage to a party who believed the lease was unenforceable because it was not signed by the owners, and the rent was increased immediately. The trial court held that the lease was invalid but awarded damages to plaintiff for defendant's breach of warranty of authority, and defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that a breach of the warranty of authority under Civ. Code § 2342 was established (97 Cal. App. 2d 513, 519) . The court held that an agent who represents by his or her actions that an authority exists may be held liable for a breach of the implied warranty of authority under Civ. Code § 2342 if the authority does not in fact exist (97 Cal. App. 2d 513, 519) . The court held that defendant held himself out as more than merely an agent with authority to negotiate terms, as evidenced by the language of the letter in which defendant set out a proposed lease that he had apparently decided would be appropriate (97 Cal. App. 2d 513, 518) . The court also noted that the subsequent actions of defendant in adjusting the terms of the lease supported the conclusion that defendant held himself out to be an agent with power to execute the lease on behalf of his brother (97 Cal. App. 2d 513, 518-519) .

[b] Interest on Judgment Proper If Proper Against Principal

Kohlberg v. Havens (1919) 41 Cal. App 222, 182 P. 467 , was an action to recover damages from defendant agent for breach of defendant's warranty of authority. Plaintiff entered into a contract with defendant on behalf of the company of which defendant was president. The contract provided that plaintiff would obtain a certain lessee for the company's property, in return for which plaintiff would receive $2,500. When plaintiff produced the lessee, the company denied the authority of defendant agent to execute the contract, and in an action by plaintiff to enforce the contract the company obtained a nonsuit on the ground that the agent was unauthorized. Rejecting the defense that plaintiff had not performed his obligations under the contract, the trial court entered judgment for plaintiff in the amount of $2,500 plus interest from the date that plaintiff obtained the lessee. Defendant appealed, arguing that the contract had not been completed as a matter of law and that plaintiff was not entitled to interest.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that substantial evidence supported the trial court's finding that plaintiff had performed according to the contract and that defendant had breached the warranty of authority created by his conduct in assuming to act for the company (41 Cal. App 222, 225-226) . The court, citing Civ. Code §§ 3287 and 3318, held that if a third party would have been entitled to a definite and fixed recovery from the principal had the agent possessed the authority warranted, entitling the third party to interest from the time the right of recovery became vested, judgment may be entered against the agent from that time (41 Cal. App 222, 226) . The court concluded that the award of interest against defendant agent was justified because plaintiff would have been entitled to interest from the principal (41 Cal. App 222, 226) .

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a third party may recover damages for breach of contract from an agent as a principal. This argument may be used whenever a third party extended credit to an agent personally, with the agent's consent, and the third party seeks to recover damages for breach of contract from the agent. For example, such a contention may arise in an action to enforce a contractual or quasi-contractual obligation against the agent when the agent's representative capacity was not disclosed to the third party, and the third party dealt with the agent as an individual.

These points and authorities need not be combined with other forms, such as §§ 182.30-182.32 contending that an actual agency exists, because the third person's recovery depends only on the extension of credit to the agent personally and the agent's consent thereto. Thus, the agent cannot avoid liability by, for example, denying the fact of agency.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that a third party may recover damages from an agent as a principal for a breach of an obligation entered into when credit is given to the agent personally, with his or her consent, in a transaction. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[a] Agent Liable as Principal When Personal Credit Given Agent

Duncan v. Dormer (1928) 94 Cal. App 218, 270 P. 1003 , was an action to recover the value of labor performed and materials furnished by plaintiff. Plaintiff had agreed with defendant, who was the agent of a trust but did not disclose the fact of the agency to plaintiff, to provide materials and labor for the operation of a mine. The action was instituted when defendant did not pay all the money due under the agreement and the action was brought against the trust as well as against the agent individually. The trial court held that plaintiff had been paid in full for his services, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that uncontradicted testimony by defendant showed that a balance was still owing plaintiff (94 Cal. App 218, 221) . The court further held that under Civ. Code § 2343, an agent who obtains personal credit is personally liable for such obligations (94 Cal. App 218, 221) . The court concluded that defendant was personally liable to plaintiff because defendant obtained personal credit for the purchase of materials and the performance of labor, without disclosing the existence of the trust or his agency therefor (94 Cal. App 218, 221) .

PLAINTIFF MAY RECOVER DAMAGES FOR BREACH OF CONTRACT FROM DEFENDANT AGENT BECAUSE AN AGENT WHO ENTERS INTO A WRITTEN CONTRACT IN THE NAME OF THE PRINCIPAL WITHOUT BELIEVING IN GOOD FAITH THAT AUTHORITY TO DO SO EXISTS IS LIABLE AS A PRINCIPAL.

Agent Liable as Principal When Agent Acts Without Belief in Authority. One who assumes to act as an agent is responsible to third persons as a principal for his or her acts in the course of the agency when the agent enters into a written contract in the name of the principal without believing, in good faith, that authority to do so exists (Civ. Code § 2343(2); Borton v. Barnes (1920) 48 Cal. App 589, 594, 192 P. 307).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that a third party may recover damages for breach of contract from an agent as a principal. The contention is based on the rule that an agent who entered into a written contract in the name of the agent's principal, without believing in good faith that he or she had the authority to do so, is liable as a principal [Civ. Code § 2343(2)]. This argument may be used whenever a third party seeks recovery from an agent for the agent's unauthorized written contract in the name of the principal when the agent did not have a good faith belief in his or her authority. For example, this argument may be used by a third party in an action against the agent for damages for breach of contract, as an alternate cause of action when combined with an action against the principal in whose name the contract was executed. As another example, this argument may also be used in a separate action after the agent's lack of authority to bind the principal has been determined.

These points and authorities are for use when a third person seeks to recover from defendant agent as a party to the contract entered into in the principal's name, that is, to hold the agent liable as a principal [see Civ. Code § 2343(2)]. This contention should be contrasted with that supported by the points and authorities in § 182.100; in § 182.100, rather than seeking to hold the agent liable as a principal on a written agreement, the third person seeks damages for the agent's breach of warranty. This form may be combined with § 182.100 when counsel wishes to contend alternatively that the agent breached a warranty of authority.

If the existence of the agency is disputed, these points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities in §§ 182.37 -182.39, as appropriate. If the extent of an agent's authority is disputed, these points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities in §§ 182.40 and 182.41, as appropriate. If the agency or authority is alleged to have arisen because of the principal's ratification, these points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities in §§ 182.42 and 182.43, as appropriate.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that a third party may recover damages for breach of contract from an agent who entered into a written contract in the name of his or her principal without a good faith belief in the authority to do so. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss facts showing that the agent entered into a written contract in his or her principal's name and that the agent did not have a good faith belief that he or she had authority to enter into the contract.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Agent Liable as Principal When Agent Acts Without Belief in Authority

Borton v. Barnes (1920) 48 Cal. App 589, 192 P. 307 , was an action by plaintiff third party to recover the reasonable value of services allegedly rendered under a written contract entered into by defendant agent in the name of defendant's principal. The contract provided that plaintiff would be entitled to a real estate commission if he procured a purchaser willing and able to buy a parcel of land owned by the principal. When a prospective purchaser made an offer to purchase the property, defendant told plaintiff that the agreement was fulfilled and that he would present the facts to the company at its board meeting. Defendant did not have the authority to enter into such a contract, and the company disavowed the agreement and refused to pay any commission to plaintiff. The trial court found that defendant had entered into the contract without believing in good faith, at any time, that he had the authority from the corporation to make the agreement, and entered judgment in plaintiff's favor in the full amount of the specified commission. Defendant appealed from the judgment.

The court of appeal affirmed, rejecting defendant's contention that he could be held personally liable on the contract only if the contract contained words to charge him personally (48 Cal. App 589, 591) . The court held that under Civ. Code § 2343, a third party may recover from an agent as a principal if the agent enters into a written contract in the name of the principal knowing that he or she had no authority to do so (48 Cal. App 589, 594) . The court held that the plaintiff in such an action may recover the reasonable value of the services rendered under the contract in the same manner as he or she could have done had defendant agent been the real principal in the transaction (48 Cal. App 589, 594) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Agent Liable as Principal When Agent Acts Without Belief in Authority

In Nichols Grain & Milling Co. v. Jersey Farm Dairy Co. (1933) 134 Cal. App 126, 24 P.2d 925 , plaintiff sued to recover on a written guarantee of hay sales executed by an agent of one of the defendants. The trial court found that the agent was not authorized to execute the agreement and did not believe in good faith that he was so authorized. The trial court entered judgment against the agent but in favor of all other defendants, and the court of appeal affirmed. The court held that under Civ. Code § 2343 a third party may recover damages for breach of a written contract from an agent who did not believe in good faith that he or she had the authority to contract for the principal. The court held that the third party may recover from the agent to the same extent that he or she could recover had the agent been the real principal in the transaction (134 Cal. App 126, 130) .

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that a third party may recover tort damages from an agent as a principal for his or her wrongful acts committed in the course of the agency. This argument may be used, for example, when the third party damaged by the agent's wrongful act sues both the agent and the principal for the tort damages suffered because the third party does not know whether the principal can be held liable for the tort of the agent. The optional paragraph should be used when the third party anticipates the argument that the agent is not liable for his or her wrongful act because the principal is liable, because the principal has already been held not liable for the agent's act, or because the principal is not, or cannot be, sued for the wrongful acts of his or her agent.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that a third party may recover tort damages from an agent as a principal for the agent's acts that are wrongful in their nature. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in § 182.107 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Agent Liable as Principal When Acts Wrongful in Nature

In Bayuk v. Edson (1965) 236 Cal. App. 2d 309, 46 Cal. Rptr. 49 , plaintiff third party sued both a principal and his agent for tort damages allegedly caused by defendants' negligence in the planning and design of a house. Plaintiff had planned to build a house and sought the services of an architect who would work for less than the standard fee for architects. Defendant principal referred plaintiff to defendant agent, who defendant principal said was employed as an architect. Defendant agent planned the house and supervised the construction, with some participation in the planning by defendant principal. The trial court entered judgment in plaintiff's favor against both defendants, and defendants appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment, holding that substantial evidence supported the finding of the trial court that defendant agent had been negligent in his design and supervision of the building of the house (236 Cal. App. 2d 309, 320) . The court held that under Civ. Code § 2343(3), an agent is liable to third persons for his or her wrongful acts (236 Cal. App. 2d 309, 319-320) .

NOTE:

In Otanez v. Blue Skies Mobile Home Park (1991) 1 Cal. App. 4th 1521, 3 Cal. Rptr. 2d 210 , the plaintiff-tenant tried to hold the property managers liable for the landlord's wrongful termination of utility service under Civ. Code § 789.3. Presumably, the managers had been responsible for the actual termination of the service. In finding only the landlord liable, the court construed the phrase "wrongful in nature" in Civ. Code § 2343(3) as not encompassing conduct made wrongful only by statute (1 Cal. App. 4th 1521, 1526) .

[b] Agent Liable Regardless of Principal's Liability

James v. Marinship Corp. (1944) 25 Cal. 2d 721, 155 P.2d 329 , was an action for injunctive relief restraining defendants, a corporation and a local of an international union, from discharging or causing the discharge of plaintiff and other black employees. Defendant agent, the local, argued that injunctive relief against it was inappropriate because it was following the rules set forth by its principal, the international union that was outside the court's jurisdiction.

Defendant agent argued that it could not be held liable for wrongful acts when the principal was not held liable. The trial court issued a preliminary injunction preventing any discharge, and defendants appealed.

The Supreme Court affirmed. The Court held that an agent is liable for his or her acts, regardless of whether the principal is liable or amenable to judicial action (25 Cal. 2d 721, 742-743) . The Court reasoned that the fact that such conduct might have been committed in accordance with the regulations of an association beyond the jurisdiction of the court cannot deprive the court of power to prevent the continuance of wrongful acts by those agents within the jurisdiction (25 Cal. 2d 721, 742) .

The facts and procedural background of Bayuk v. Edson (1965) 236 Cal. App. 2d 309, 46 Cal. Rptr. 49 , are discussed in § 182.103[3][a]. The court held in Bayuk that the fact that the principal may also be liable to the third person for the agent's torts does not exonerate the agent (236 Cal. App. 2d 309, 320) .

The principal is partially disclosed if the other party has notice that the agent is or may be acting for a principal, but the other party has no notice of the principal's identity (G.W. [a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that a third party may recover damages for breach of contract from an agent as principal. This argument may be used whenever an agent gave notice of the existence of the agency but did not sufficiently disclose the identity of the principal.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that a third party may recover from the agent as a principal.

have notice of the identity of the principal.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Person Purporting to Contract With Third Party for Partially Disclosed Principal as Party to Contract

In G.W. Anderson Constr. Co. v. Mars Sales (1985) 164 Cal. App. 3d 326, 210 Cal. Rptr. 409 , plaintiff building construction company brought an action for breach of contract against defendants, a corporation and its two owners, who were husband and wife. The trial court held, inter alia, that the owners, as distinguished from the corporation, were not liable in that the contract was with the corporation.

The court of appeal reversed the judgment in part, holding that the finding that the husband owner was not liable as a party was contrary to clear and undisputed evidence (164 Cal. App. 3d 326, 333, 339) . The court noted that, unless otherwise agreed, a person purporting to make a contract with another for a partially disclosed principal is a party to the contract, and that a principal is only partially disclosed if the other party has notice that the agent is or may be acting for a principal, but has no notice of the principal's identity (164 Cal. App. 3d 326, 331) . The agent can protect himself or herself from personal liability by clearly disclosing the fact of agency and the identity of the principal, but failing that, the other party is entitled to rely on the liability of the person with whom he or she dealt. The duty is on the agent to disclose, not on the other party to investigate (164 Cal. App. 3d 326, 332) . The undisputed evidence showed that the husband owner acted as agent for the corporation in the transaction, but referred to the principal only by its trade name and did not otherwise disclose its true name or corporate status. The court held that use of a trade name is not sufficient disclosure of the identity of the principal to protect the agent from personal liability when, as in this case, the other party did not otherwise know the identity of the principal (164 Cal. App. 3d 326, 332-333) .

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a contention that a third party may recover damages from an agent for an alleged breach of a warranty of authority. The ground of opposition set forth is that defendant agent had the authority to perform the act that allegedly breached the warranty of authority. This argument may be used, for example, by an agent in defending a third party's action against both the agent and the principal, when the plaintiff alternatively argues that if the agent was not authorized, he or she breached a warranty of authority.

If the extent of an agent's authority is disputed, these points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities in §§ 182.33 and 182.34, as appropriate. If the authority is alleged to have arisen because of the principal's ratification, these points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities in §§ 182.35 and 182.36, as appropriate.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Breach of Warranty of Authority Requires Agent's Unauthorized Act

Tri-Delta Eng'g, Inc. v. Insurance Co. of N. Am. (1978) 80 Cal. App. 3d 752, 146 Cal. Rptr. 14 , was an action for breach of contract, negligent misrepresentation, fraud, and breach of duty of good faith and fair dealing brought against defendant principal, defendant agent who was authorized to write insurance on behalf of defendant principal, and an individual employee of the agent. The employee contacted plaintiff to determine if plaintiff was interested in insurance for its machine shop, and plaintiff requested a quote. The employee phoned defendant principal seeking a quote for "all risk" insurance, but there was a conflict in the evidence of whether or not defendant informed the employee that the all risk policy did not cover theft. The employee showed plaintiff a worksheet listing the aspects of coverage, including theft, and a policy was issued that excluded theft. After plaintiff's shop was burglarized and the employee filed a claim that was rejected by defendant, the employee read the policy and discovered that coverage for theft was excluded. Plaintiff filed the instant action, and the jury returned a verdict holding defendant principal liable for compensatory and punitive damages, and also holding defendant agent and its employee liable for compensatory damages. Defendant agent and its employee appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that the jury verdict could not be reconciled with the evidence in accordance with any theory of law (80 Cal. App. 3d 752, 759) . The court held that a breach of a warranty of authority requires that the agent acted without authority or in excess of his or her authority (80 Cal. App. 3d 752, 760) . The court held that implicit in the verdict against defendant was a finding that the policy covered the theft from plaintiff, and that therefore the employee must have had actual or ostensible authority to bind defendant for theft coverage under the contract. The court held that under the circumstances, the employee could not have breached a warranty of authority (80 Cal. App. 3d 752, 760) .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Breach of Warranty of Authority Requires Third Party's Ignorance of Agent's Lack of Authority

Yoakum v. Tarver (1967) 256 Cal. App. 2d 202, 64 Cal. Rptr. 7 , was an action by a third party to recover a commission that plaintiff would have earned had defendant agent been authorized to sell a motel owned by the principal. Defendant and another were the sole investors in the corporation, the motel was the only asset, and the other investor had filed an action to dissolve the corporation before the events that led to the instant lawsuit. Defendant agent signed a listing agreement after emphasizing that any agreement depended on the other investor's concurrence, and eventually opened an escrow at the urging of plaintiff. When the other investor refused to go through with the sale, plaintiff instituted this action. The trial court entered judgment for defendant on the ground that defendant had not warranted that he had authority to sell the motel without the concurrence of the other investor, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that defendant had disclosed to plaintiff the limitations on his authority at their first meeting and had never warranted that he had authority to act for the corporation (256 Cal. App. 2d 202, 205) . Relying on out-of-state precedent, the court concluded that a third party cannot recover from an agent based on a breach of a warranty of authority when the third party is fully cognizant of the facts concerning the agent's authority, as when the agent indicates that he or she is not sure of his or her authority or specifically discloses the limitations thereon (256 Cal. App. 2d 202, 206-207) . The court agreed with the trial court that the evidence provided no basis for recovery for breach of a warranty of authority because plaintiff knew of the limitation on defendant agent's authority (256 Cal. App. 2d 202, 206) .

§ 182.107 Opposing Contention That Third Party May Recover Tort Damages [Civ. Code § 3333] From Agent as Principal [Civ. Code § 2343]--Agent Not Liable for Failure to Perform Duty Owed Solely to Principal

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF MAY NOT RECOVER TORT DAMAGES FROM DEFENDANT AGENT BECAUSE AN AGENT IS NOT LIABLE TO A THIRD PARTY AS A PRINCIPAL FOR FAILURE TO PERFORM A DUTY THAT THE AGENT OWES SOLELY TO THE PRINCIPAL.

Agent Not Liable to Third Party for Failure to Perform Duty Owed Solely to Principal. An agent is not liable to a third party as a principal for the failure to perform a duty owed solely to his or her principal (Mears v. Crocker First Nat'l Bank (1950) 97 Cal. App. 2d 482, 491, 218 P.2d 91).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a contention that a third party may recover tort damages from an agent as a principal for his or her wrongful acts committed in the course of the agency. The ground of opposition set forth is that the agent is not liable to a third party for the agent's failure to perform his or her duties owed solely to the principal. The argument supported by this memorandum may be used, for example, as a defense in an action by a third party seeking to hold the agent liable for tort damages on the theory that the agent's acts were wrongful in their nature. The defense in this example would be based on the argument that the third party's damages were caused by defendant agent's failure to perform a duty owed solely to the principal, such as a duty of a transfer agent not to delay the conversion of stock from one type to another [see Mears v. Crocker First Nat'l Bank (1950) 97 Cal. App. 2d 482, 485-490, 218 P.2d 91] .

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that a third party may not recover tort damages from an agent as a principal. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss facts showing that defendant agent's only wrongful acts consisted of a failure to perform a duty owed solely to the principal. Counsel should emphasize the nature of the duty, and establish clearly that it was owed only to the principal and not to the third party plaintiff.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities in § 182.103.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Agent Not Liable to Third Party for Failure to Perform Duty Owed Solely to Principal

Mears v. Crocker First Nat'l Bank (1950) 97 Cal. App. 2d 482, 218 P.2d 91 , was an action in conversion instituted by the owner of stock in a Phillipine company against the company's agent in San Francisco. The company had two types of stock outstanding: one of Phillipine registry; and the other, block shares, equal to 20 shares of the Phillipine registry stock. Only the block shares could be listed on the San Francisco stock exchange. By rule of the exchange, the company was required to have a transfer office or agency in San Francisco, and defendant was their agent for the purpose of converting the Phillipine stock for block shares. Plaintiff sought to convert 20,000 shares to block shares, but defendant agent delayed the transfer while awaiting instructions from the company's parent office as to any claims on the stock that might have been made during World War II. Judgment was entered for plaintiff, and defendant appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that defendant, as transfer agent, owed a duty not to delay a transfer of stock only to its principal and not to a third party such as plaintiff (97 Cal. App. 2d 482, 485-490) . The fact that the duty was owed to the principal alone, plus the fact that the breach alleged of defendant was one of nonfeasance, persuaded the court that under the common law an agent would not have been held liable for nonfeasance regarding a duty to the principal alone (97 Cal. App. 2d 482, 491) . The court concluded that Civ. Code § 2343(3) merely restated the common law rule that an agent may be liable to a third party for misfeasance, and did not alter the common law rule that an agent is not liable to third parties for failure to perform his or her duties to the principal (97 Cal. App. 2d 482, 491) .

§ 182.120 Supporting Contention That Ostensible Agency [Civ. Code § 2300] Created--Principal's Conduct Caused Third Party to Believe Agency Existed

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities or in a trial or appellate brief.]

AN OSTENSIBLE AGENCY WAS CREATED BETWEEN DEFENDANT, THE ALLEGED PRINCIPAL, AND [DEFENDANT], THE ALLEGED AGENT, BECAUSE AN OSTENSIBLE AGENCY IS CREATED WHEN A THIRD PARTY DEALING WITH THE ALLEGED AGENT HAS A REASONABLE BELIEF IN THE AGENT'S AUTHORITY, THE BELIEF IS GENERATED BY SOME ACT OR NEGLECT OF THE PRINCIPAL SOUGHT TO BE CHARGED, AND THE THIRD PARTY IS NOT GUILTY OF NEGLECT, [AND ONCE ALL OF THE NECESSARY ELEMENTS OF OSTENSIBLE AGENCY ARE ESTABLISHED, THERE IS NO ADDITIONAL DUTY IMPOSED ON THE THIRD PARTY TO INVESTIGATE THE EXISTENCE AND SCOPE OF THE ALLEGED AGENT'S AUTHORITY].

A. Ostensible Agency Created. An ostensible agency is created when a third party dealing with the alleged agent has a reasonable belief in the agent's authority, the belief is generated by some act or neglect by the principal sought to be charged, and the person relying on the agent's apparent authority is not guilty of neglect (Civ. Code §§ 2300, 2334; Mejia v. Community Hosp. of San Bernardino (2002) 99 Cal. App. 4th 1448, 1456-1457, 122 Cal. Rptr. 2d 233 ; Hartong v. Partake, Inc. (1968) 266 Cal. App. 2d 942, 960, 72 Cal. Rptr. 722).

[Optional] B. Third Party Has No Duty to Inquire. Once all the necessary elements of ostensible agency are established, there is no additional duty imposed on the third party to investigate the existence and scope of the alleged agent's authority (Beck v. Arthur Murray, Inc. (1966) 245 Cal. App. 2d 976, 981, 54 Cal. Rptr. 328).

[2] Comments

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that an ostensible agency was created between defendant principal and his or her apparent agent because a third party dealing with the alleged agent has a reasonable belief in the agent's authority, the belief is generated by some act or neglect by the principal sought to be charged, and the third party relying on the agent's apparent authority is not guilty of neglect. An agency is either actual or ostensible. It is ostensible when the principal intentionally, or by want of ordinary care, causes a third person to believe another, who is not really employed by the principal, to be his or her agent [Civ. Code §§ 2298, 2300].

A contention that an ostensible agency was created by the conduct of the principal may be used in any action between a third party who dealt with an apparent agent and a principal who denies that an actual agency existed. The optional paragraph may be used when counsel anticipates an opposing contention, such as that contained in § 182.130, to the effect that plaintiff was under a duty of inquiry as to the existence of the agency relationship, or when such an opposing contention has already been made.

These points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities in §§ 182.30 -182.36 as appropriate, and when appropriate the points and authorities in §§ 182.121 and 182.123 -182.128 may be combined with the contentions supported by these points and authorities.

The contention supported by this form is for use to support the existence of an ostensible agency relationship, and not for use when supporting the agent's alleged ostensible authority to perform a certain act. If alleging that an agent had ostensible authority to perform a particular act, counsel should use the contention in § 182.121. When counsel also alleges the existence of an actual agency, these points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities in §§ 182.30 -182.32, as appropriate [see Tomerlin v. Canadian Indem. Co. (1964) 61 Cal. 2d 638, 644, 39 Cal. Rptr. 731, 394 P.2d 571 (evidence may support findings of actual and ostensible agency)]. If alleging that an agent had actual authority to perform certain acts, counsel may combine the points and authorities in §§ 182.33 and 182.34, as appropriate, with these points and authorities. When alleging that the agency or authority arose because of the principal's ratification of the agent's acts, the points and authorities in §§ 182.35 and 182.36, as appropriate, should be combined with these points and authorities. The points and authorities in §§ 182.123 -182.128 may be combined with these points and authorities whenever a third party seeks recovery against the principal based on the agent's alleged ostensible authority.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that an ostensible agency was created. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in §§ 182.130 -182.132 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities. When a third party contends that an ostensible agency has been created, as in this form, defendant principal need not argue in opposition that an agency was not created, but only that the agent's acts were not ostensibly authorized. Thus, the opposing forms, §§ 182.130-182.132, oppose the contention that an agent had ostensible authority and not the contention that an ostensible agency was created.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Ostensible Agency Created

In Mejia v. Community Hosp. of San Bernardino (2002) 99 Cal. App. 4th 1448, 122 Cal. Rptr. 2d 233 , an injured patient brought a medical malpractice action against a radiologist, a hospital, and others, alleging negligence on the part of the radiologist. The hospital successfully moved for a nonsuit immediately after the close of plaintiff's case. On appeal, plaintiff argued that the hospital--which was not the radiologist's employer--was not entitled to a nonsuit because there was a triable issue as to whether the negligent radiologist was the ostensible agent of respondent. The court of appeal agreed and reversed, concluding that a nonsuit on the issue of ostensible agency was improper because plaintiff sought treatment at the hospital and there was no evidence that she should have known that the negligent physician was not an agent of the hospital. The court first reviewed the elements of ostensible agency set forth in Civ. Code § 2300, 2317, and 2334. It noted that in the context of hospitals, the requirements in essence are (1) conduct by the hospital that would cause a reasonable person to believe there was an agency relationship, and (2) reliance on that apparent agency relationship by the plaintiff (99 Cal. App. 4th 1448, 1456-1457) . The court stated that when applying the nonsuit standard in the hospital context, it would be difficult for a hospital to obtain a nonsuit based on the lack of ostensible agency. Effectively, all a patient needs to show is that he or she sought treatment at the hospital. Unless the evidence conclusively indicates that the patient should have known that the treating physician was not the hospital's agent, the issue of ostensible agency must be left to the trier of fact. The court found that none of the facts raised by the hospital to show that plaintiff failed to prove ostensible agency, such as the fact that plaintiff was initially unaware of the radiologist's involvement in her care, were relevant (99 Cal. App. 4th 1448, 1458-1460) . It concluded that absence evidence that plaintiff should have known that the radiologist was not an agent of the hospital, plaintiff alleged sufficient evidence to get to the jury merely by claiming that she sought treatment at the hospital (99 Cal. App. 4th 1448, 1460) .

Hartong v. Partake, Inc. (1968) 266 Cal. App. 2d 942, 72 Cal. Rptr. 722 , was an action for fraud against defendant principal, based on the misrepresentations of the individual defendants, purported agents of defendant principal. The individual defendants, defendant principal's area director for four California counties and his associate, entered into a partnership for the manufacture and sale of goods under the name of Western (later Pacific) Way. The individual defendants advertised for distributors of their products, representing that distributors would make a specified minimum net income, and plaintiffs answered the advertisements and became distributors. The individual defendants dealt with plaintiffs in the individual defendants' office, which was nominally that of defendant principal, and represented that their partnership was a subsidiary of defendant principal and would be backed by defendant principal's national organization. After defendant principal severed the individual defendants' relationship, plaintiffs discovered the lack of any connection between defendant principal and the partnership. Plaintiffs then brought this action, arguing that the individual defendants were the ostensible agents of defendant principal, and that the latter was therefore liable for the fraudulent misrepresentations made by the individual defendants. The trial court entered judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant principal appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that substantial evidence supported the finding of the trial court that defendant's conduct had created an ostensible agency (266 Cal. App. 2d 942, 961) . The court, citing Civ. Code §§ 2300 and 2334, held that ostensible agency rests on the doctrine of estoppel, and that the essential elements of ostensible agency are representations by the principal, justifiable reliance thereon by a third party, and change of position or injury resulting from such reliance (266 Cal. App. 2d 942, 960) . The court held that before a third party may recover against the principal for the acts of the ostensible agent, the third person dealing with the agent must do so with a reasonable belief in the agent's authority, and the belief must be generated by some act or neglect by the principal sought to be charged. The court also stated that the person relying on the agent's apparent authority must not be guilty of neglect (266 Cal.

App. 2d 942, 960) . Examining the record, the court of appeal held that the existence of an ostensible agency was supported by defendant principal's recognition that the individual defendants were using defendant principal's name and materials to sell unauthorized franchise packages to plaintiffs and the failure to take action to stop the unauthorized sales or to recover defendant principal's materials in the hands of the individual defendants (266 Cal. App. 2d 942, 961) .

[b] Third Party Has No Duty to Inquire

Beck v. Arthur Murray, Inc. (1966) 245 Cal. App. 2d 976, 54 Cal. Rptr. 328 , was an action to hold defendant liable as principal for the actual damages caused by the violation of the Dance Act [see Civ. Code § 1812.50 et seq.] committed by its licensee, alleged to be defendant's ostensible agent. Defendant was a corporation that licensed dance studios around the country to use its name and methods under licensing agreements that obligated the licensee to use certain methods and to pay a percentage of gross profits to defendant. The license agreement required the licensee to post a notice stating that the licensee is responsible for all obligations respecting the business of the studio, but plaintiff did not see any such disclaimer. Plaintiff purchased a dance course from the licensee, who absconded shortly thereafter. Plaintiff was granted judgment against defendant, who appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that the finding that the licensee was the ostensible agent of defendant was supported by substantial evidence, specifically the prominent use of defendant's name and reputation as an inducement toward the public and the failure of the licensee to mention any disclaimer (245 Cal. App. 2d 976, 979) . The court also rejected defendant's contention that plaintiff was under a duty to investigate the authority of the licensee to act for defendant, holding that once a third party reasonably relies on the acts or neglect of a principal, and the elements of an ostensible agency are established, there is no duty on the third party to investigate further (245 Cal. App. 2d 976, 981) .

[a] Ostensible Agency Created

In Ermoian v. Desert Hospital (2007) 152 Cal. App. 4th 475, 61 Cal. Rptr. 3d 754 , plaintiff was a child who had been born with severe brain abnormalities that would cause her to be severely mentally retarded for her entire life. Through her mother as guardian ad litem, plaintiff brought a wrongful life suit against the hospital and affiliated perinatal clinic, a nurse employed by the hospital, and two physicians who provided care as independent contractors of the clinic. Plaintiff argued that the physicians and nurse breached a duty of care by negligently failing to advise plaintiff's mother of the possibility of plaintiff being born with severe birth defects, as suggested by a series of ultrasounds, in time for plaintiff's mother to elect to abort the pregnancy. Plaintiff eventually settled with the physicians and went to a bench trial against the nurse and hospital, at which trial plaintiff attempted to hold the hospital vicariously liable for the negligence of the settling physicians. The trial court entered judgment for the defendants. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment, although held that no substantial evidence supported the trial court's finding that the physicians were not ostensible agents of the hospital. The court noted that the hospital held out the clinic and clinic personnel to be part of the hospital and concluded that it was objectively reasonable for plaintiff's mother to believe that the physicians were employees of the hospital. The clinic was located across the street from the hospital and used the same name, labeled itself an outpatient clinic, and was staffed by many hospital employees. Plaintiff's mother was initially referred to the clinic and to these specific physicians after visiting the hospital emergency room. She was aware that the clinic was staffed with hospital employees, and all of her contacts with these physicians were at the hospital-run clinic. During all of the interactions between the hospital or clinic and plaintiff's mother, there were no indications to suggest to plaintiff's mother that the physicians were not employees of the hospital (152 Cal. App. 4th 475, 506-510) . Although the physicians were ostensible agents of the hospital as a matter of law, the court went on to hold that substantial evidence existed in the record to support the trial court's findings that neither the physicians nor other hospital staff were negligent (152 Cal. App. 4th 475, 510-516) .

In Preis v. American Indem. Co. (1990) 220 Cal. App. 3d 752, 269 Cal. Rptr. 617 , the issue was whether an insurer was bound by the acts of an insurance agent (Schlom) who allegedly had no actual authority to issue certificates of insurance. The insurer's general agent had provided Schlom with the insurer's certificate forms. The court of appeal held that this act gave rise to a question of fact concerning whether the insurer and the agent knew or should have known that Schlom was holding himself out to the public as having certain powers to act on their behalf (220 Cal. App. 3d 752, 762) .

The facts and procedural background of Tomerlin v. Canadian Indem. Co. (1964) 61 Cal. 2d 638, 39 Cal. Rptr. 731, 394 P.2d 571 , are discussed in § 182.33[3][a]. The Supreme Court held that an ostensible agency under Civ. Code § 2300 arises as a result of conduct of the principal that causes the third party reasonably to believe that the agent possesses authority to act on the principal's behalf (61 Cal. 2d 638, 643) . The Court held that the conduct of an insurer that remained silent despite its knowledge that the attorney it had retained for its client had made representations regarding the scope of the insurer's coverage was sufficient to establish an ostensible agency with the attorney acting as the insurer's agent for coverage matters (61 Cal. 2d 638, 645) .

§ 182.121 Supporting Contention That Agent Acted Within Ostensible Authority [Civ. Code § 2317]--Ostensible Authority Exists When Third Party Reasonably Relies on Principal's Conduct

[The following points and authorities may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities or in a trial or appellate brief. The following may be combined with the points and authorities in §§ 182.30 -182.36 and 182.120, as appropriate, and when appropriate the points and authorities in §§ 182.123 -182.128 may be combined with the contentions supported by the following points and authorities.]

_____ [DEFENDANT or PLAINTIFF] AGENT HAD OSTENSIBLE AUTHORITY TO _____ [specify acts performed, e.g., NEGOTIATE CONTRACTS] AS AGENT FOR _____ [DEFENDANT or PLAINTIFF] PRINCIPAL BECAUSE OSTENSIBLE AUTHORITY EXISTS WHEN A PRINCIPAL'S CONDUCT CAUSES A THIRD PARTY REASONABLY TO BELIEVE THE AGENT IS AUTHORIZED TO ACT FOR THE PRINCIPAL AND THE THIRD PARTY INCURS LIABILITY OR PARTS WITH VALUE IN GOOD FAITH AND WITHOUT WANT OF ORDINARY CARE ON THE FAITH THEREOF, [AND A PRINCIPAL NEED NOT BE IN DIRECT CONTACT WITH THE THIRD PARTY FOR THE THIRD PARTY REASONABLY TO CONCLUDE THAT AN AUTHORITY EXISTS].

A. Agent's Ostensible Authority Based on Third Party's Reasonable Belief. Ostensible authority arises as a result of conduct of the principal that causes the third party reasonably to believe that the agent possesses the authority to act on the principal's behalf and to incur a liability or part with value in good faith, and without want of ordinary care, on the faith thereof (Civ. Code §§ 2317, 2334; Tomerlin v. Canadian Indem. Co. (1964) 61 Cal. 2d 638, 643, 39 Cal. Rptr. 731, 394 P.2d 571).

[Optional] B. Principal Need Not Have Direct Contact With Third Person. Although ostensible authority can be created only by the acts or declarations of the principal, the principal need not have been in direct contact with the third party; the manifestation of the principal may be to the community at large and may consist of appointing the agent to a particular position (Meyer v. Ford Motor Co. (1969) 275 Cal. App. 2d 90, 102, 79 Cal. Rptr. 816).

[Optional] C. Third Party's Reliance on Representations to Public May Suffice. In order to show ostensible agency a plaintiff must prove that he or she justifiably relied on a representation made by the principal. However, as long as plaintiff relied on the representation, it may have been made to plaintiff personally or to the public in general (Kaplan v. Coldwell Banker Residential Affiliates, Inc. (1997) 59 Cal. App. 4th 741, 747, 69 Cal. Rptr. 2d 640).

[2] Comments

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that an agent had ostensible authority to perform certain acts on behalf of defendant principal and that the principal therefore should be bound by the agent's acts done within that ostensible authority. This argument may be used in any action in which the authority of an agent must be established in order to bind a principal for the authorized acts of his or her agent. For example, the argument may be used in a tort action seeking to hold the principal liable for damages caused by the agent's wrongful act. This argument may also be used in a third party's action to recover damages from a principal for breach of a contract entered into by an agent on behalf of the principal. The optional paragraph may be used when plaintiff third party anticipates a contention that no ostensible authority was conferred because plaintiff had no direct contact with defendant principal.

The contention supported by these points and authorities is for use when supporting the agent's alleged ostensible authority to perform a certain act. If alleging that an ostensible agency was created, counsel should use the contention in § 182.120. When the existence of an actual agency is also alleged, these points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities in §§ 182.30 -182.32, as appropriate [see Tomerlin v. Canadian Indem. Co. (1964) 61 Cal. 2d 638, 644, 39 Cal. Rptr. 731, 394 P.2d 571 (evidence may support findings of actual and ostensible agency)]. If alternatively alleging that an agent had actual authority to perform certain acts, counsel may combine the points and authorities in §§ 182.33 and 182.34, as appropriate, with these points and authorities. When alternatively alleging that the agency or authority arose because of the principal's ratification of the agent's acts, the points and authorities in §§ 182.35 and 182.36, as appropriate, should be combined with these points and authorities. The points and authorities in §§ 182.123 -182.128 may be combined with these points and authorities whenever a third party seeks recovery against the principal based on the agent's alleged ostensible authority.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that an agent acted within an ostensible authority created by a third party's reliance on the principal's conduct. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in §§ 182.130 -182.132 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For an allegation for use in a complaint alleging that an ostensible agency or authority existed in a given case, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 427, Principal and Agent (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Agent's Ostensible Authority Based on Third Party's Reasonable Belief

The facts and procedural background of Tomerlin v. Canadian Indem. Co. (1964) 61 Cal. 2d 638, 39 Cal. Rptr. 731, 394 P.2d 571 , are discussed in § 182.33[3][a]. The Supreme Court held that ostensible authority arises as a result of conduct of the principal that reasonably causes a third party to believe that the agent possesses authority to act on the principal's behalf, citing Civ. Code § 2317 (61 Cal. 2d 638, 643) . The Court stated that if a principal by his or her acts has led others to believe that he or she has conferred authority on an agent, the principal cannot be heard to assert as against third parties who have relied thereon in good faith that he or she did not intend to confer that power (61 Cal. 2d 638, 644) . The Court held that defendant insurer had conferred ostensible authority on the attorney it retained to represent plaintiff by its silence in the face of its actual knowledge of the attorney's participation in coverage problems (61 Cal. 2d 638, 644-645) .

[b] Principal Need Not Have Direct Contact With Third Person

Meyer v. Ford Motor Co. (1969) 275 Cal. App. 2d 90, 79 Cal. Rptr. 816 , was an action by a former Ford dealer for damages for fraud and breach of an agreement to assist plaintiff in selling the assets of his dealership. Plaintiff's sales performance had been below defendant's criteria for some time when defendant's district sales manager, in charge of defendant's sales in northern California, told plaintiff that the manager would recommend to defendant's regional sales manager that the agreement be terminated. Plaintiff then met with three subordinates of the district manager, who told plaintiff that defendant would assist in the sale of the franchise, and that the price could be worked out with the buyer, an important concession to plaintiff who sought to recover the investment he had made in the dealership. The subordinates later told plaintiff that plaintiff could not exceed a specified price that would not allow a return of the investment, and the dealership agreement would be terminated unless a sale at that price was made. Plaintiff sued after the dealership was terminated, and the jury found that the subordinates were ostensibly authorized to represent that plaintiff would not be financially hurt by the sale, and that defendant's agents made the representation without the intent to perform its obligations. Defendant appealed the judgment in favor of plaintiff.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that the subordinates had the ostensible authority to make representations as to the price at which the dealership could be sold (275 Cal. App. 2d 90, 103) . The court recognized that ostensible authority is based on representations of the principal rather than of the agent, but held that it is unnecessary that the principal have direct contact with the third party; the manifestation of the principal may be to the community at large and may consist of appointing the agent to a particular position (275 Cal. App. 2d 90, 102) . The court held that an agent put in charge of a business as the apparent manager appears to have authority to do all things essential to the conduct of business at that place, and third persons acting in good faith, without notice of or reason to suspect any limitations on the authority, are entitled to rely on the appearance of authority, and that when a third party reasonably relies on that appearance, an ostensible authority in the agent exists (275 Cal. App. 2d 90, 102) . The court held that the promise to allow plaintiff and the prospective buyer to determine the price at which the dealership would be sold was within the scope of the ostensible authority of the subordinates, given their authority to assist in the sale of the dealership. The court held that defendant could not now claim that it could not have anticipated that its agents would not represent that plaintiff would be able to recoup his losses by selling at a price high enough to recoup the losses (275 Cal. App. 2d 90, 103) .

[c] Third Party's Reliance on Representations to Public May Suffice

In Kaplan v. Coldwell Banker Residential Affiliates, Inc. (1997) 59 Cal. App. 4th 741, 69 Cal. Rptr. 2d 640 ; plaintiff, a superior court judge, sued his real estate broker, a Coldwell Banker franchisee, for fraud. Coldwell Banker was named as a defendant on a respondeat superior theory. Plaintiff alleged that he placed great faith and trust in defendants because the franchisee was part of the Coldwell Banker organization, which had an established reputation for honesty, integrity and expertise. Although the franchisee independently owned and operated his real estate office and the franchisee's advertising included disclaimer language to that effect, plaintiff testified that he "went for the Coldwell Banker sign," did not notice the disclaimer and trusted defendant because they were a large reputable company. The trial court granted Coldwell Banker's motion for summary judgment. The court of appeal reversed, holding that plaintiff had presented a triable issue of fact with respect to ostensible agency. Citing Preis v. American Indem. Co. (1990) 220 Cal. App. 3d 752, 761, 269 Cal. Rptr. 617 , the court stated that the essential elements of an ostensible agency theory were representations made by the principal, justifiable reliance by a third party, and a change in position from such reliance resulting in injury. Here, the court found that while Coldwell Banker had made no specific representations to plaintiff, it had made representations to the public in general, upon which plaintiff relied. It said that it understood why plaintiff and members of the general public might have believed that Coldwell Banker stood behind its franchisee's realty company; the venerable name, the advertising campaign, and the logo were all designed to bring customers into Coldwell Banker franchises. This evidence raised a triable issue of fact on an ostensible agency theory, sufficient to withstand summary judgment (59 Cal. App. 4th 741, 748).

[4] Additional Authorities

C.A.R. Transp. v. Darden Rests., Inc. (9th Cir. 2000) 213 F.3d 474 arose from a dispute over payment of freight charges incurred when Trans-Pac Foods arranged to send three truckloads of shrimp to Darden Restaurants. Trans-Pac arranged for transportation through broker GAP, which contracted with broker C.A.R., which in turn arranged to have three motor carriers transport the shrimp. The carriers' drivers each signed a "waiver of claim by subcontractor," waiving any claim the carriers had against Trans-Pac and Darden for payment of the shipping charges. The shipments were transported and delivered in good order. Trans-Pac paid GAP for the shipping charges and C.A.R. billed GAP for the freight charges. GAP, however, never paid and later filed a Chapter 11 bankruptcy proceeding (213 F.3d 474, 476-477) . C.A.R. filed suit against Trans-Pac and Darden, claiming they must pay it for the freight charges generated by the three shipments. It eventually alleged that it had an assignment of rights from the carriers. Trans-Pac and Darden moved for summary judgment. The district court held that the waivers signed by the carriers' drivers could lawfully allocate liability for freight charges under the Interstate Commerce Act and that the drivers had ostensible authority to sign the waivers on behalf of their principals (213 F.3d 474, 477) . The court of appeal affirmed. It stated that California law controlled the issue of whether the drivers had ostensible authority to sign the waivers and cited Civ. Code § 2317. It held that Trans-Pac and Darden came forward with sufficient evidence of ostensible authority to entitle them to a directed verdict if the evidence went uncontroverted at trial, and that C.A.R.'s evidence did not set forth specific facts showing there was a genuine issue for trial (213 F.3d 474, 479-481) .

The facts and procedural background of Jacoves v. United Merch. Corp. (1992) 9 Cal. App. 4th 88, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 468 , are discussed in § 182.33[4][a]. Reversing a summary judgment for defendant hospital, the Court of Appeal held that triable issues of fact existed, including whether the parents reasonably believed that their son's doctor acted as the hospital's agent in his treatment and supervision of their son at the hospital.

The court cited Civ. Code §§ 2300, 2317 as providing that ostensible agency is created when a principal intentionally, or by want of ordinary care, causes a third party to believe that another is an agent. In this case, the court noted that the hospital designated the son's doctor as director of its adolescent psychiatric unit and obtained releases for him on its admissions forms. The court concluded that these facts created, and the hospital failed to negate, a reasonable inference that the hospital intentionally or unintentionally caused the parents to rely on its implied representations that the doctor was the hospital's ostensible agent. It was also reasonable to infer that the parents based their decision to admit their son to the hospital at least in part on the doctor's position with the hospital (9 Cal. App. 4th 88, 103-104) .

Myers v. Stephens (1965) 233 Cal. App. 2d 104, 43 Cal. Rptr. 420 , was an action for conversion by plaintiff, who claimed that defendant principal sold plaintiff a house through defendant's agent, and then sold it to another party. The agent talked to defendant principal on the phone during the negotiations, and defendant principal rejected plaintiff's first offer because it would not take effect soon enough. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment of the trial court awarding damages to plaintiff, holding that the trial court's finding that the agent had ostensible authority under Civ. Code § 2317 was supported by plaintiff's reasonable belief, based on the agent's phone conversation, that the agent was authorized to accept an offer addressing defendant principal's concern regarding the time of the transaction. The court held that if a principal by his or her acts has led others to believe that he or she has conferred an authority on an agent, the principal will not be heard to assert, as against third persons who have relied thereon in good faith, that he or she did not intend to confer that power (233 Cal. App. 2d 104, 114-115) .

[b] Principal Need Not Have Direct Contact With Third Person

In Leavens v. Pinkham & McKevitt (1912) 164 Cal. 242, 128 P. 399 , plaintiffs sued to recover the price of fruit that defendant refused to pay because defendant's agent was unauthorized to purchase fruit. Defendant had for many years operated packing houses at which it received citrus fruits for packing and shipping to market, and employed a general manager at one such house who had in the past purchased fruit from plaintiffs as well as taken fruit on consignment. The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment for plaintiff, holding that the conduct of defendant in putting the manager in charge of the business at the packing house apparently gave the manager authority to buy fruit for his principal, and that plaintiffs acted in good faith and without negligence in relying on that apparent authority. The Court held that an ostensible authority therefore was conferred on the manager to purchase fruit (164 Cal. 242, 248-249) .

§ 182.122 Supporting Contention That Notice to or Knowledge of Agent Imputed to Principal [Civ. Code § 2332]--Principal Chargeable With Facts Known to Agent Within Scope of Agency

[The following may be combined with the contentions supported by the points and authorities set forth in §§ 182.30 -182.36, 182.120, and 182.121, as appropriate, and may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT PRINCIPAL IS CHARGEABLE WITH, AND BOUND BY, THE KNOWLEDGE OF OR NOTICE TO THE [DEFENDANT] AGENT BECAUSE A PRINCIPAL IS CHARGEABLE WITH, AND BOUND BY, THE KNOWLEDGE OF OR NOTICE TO AN AGENT THAT IS RECEIVED WHILE THE AGENT IS ACTING WITHIN THE SCOPE OF HIS/HER AUTHORITY AND THAT IS IN REFERENCE TO A MATTER OVER WHICH THE AUTHORITY EXTENDS.

A. Notice to Either Principal or Agent Imputed to Both. As against a principal, both principal and agent are deemed to have notice of whatever either has notice of, and ought in good faith and the exercise of ordinary care and diligence to communicate to the other (Civ. Code § 2332).

B. Principal Chargeable With and Bound by Knowledge of or Notice to Agent. A principal is chargeable with, and is bound by the knowledge of, or notice to, his or her agent received while the agent is acting within the scope of his or her authority and in reference to a matter over which the authority extends (Trane Co. v. Gilbert (1968) 267 Cal. App. 2d 720, 727, 73 Cal. Rptr. 279 ; Columbia Pictures Corp. v. DeToth (1948) 87 Cal. App. 2d 620, 630, 197 P.2d 580).

[Optional] C. Knowledge or Notice Imputed Although No Actual Communication. The fact that an agent may or may not have reported information to the principal is immaterial when the agent was acting in the course of his or her employment and the information was acquired by the agent in the transaction of the principal's business (Trane Co. v. Gilbert (1968) 267 Cal. App. 2d 720, 727, 73 Cal. Rptr. 279).

[Optional] D. Knowledge of Authorized Subagent Imputed to Principal. The doctrine of imputed knowledge applies in the relationship of principal and subagent when the latter's employment is authorized or ratified by the principal (Northern Natural Gas Co. v. Superior Court (1976) 64 Cal. App. 3d 983, 993, 134 Cal. Rptr. 850 ; Trane Co. v. Gilbert (1968) 267 Cal. App. 2d 720, 727, 73 Cal. Rptr. 279).

[Optional] E. Principal Charged With Agent's Knowledge Acquired Before Agency. A principal is charged with knowledge acquired by the agent before the commencement of the agency relationship, if that knowledge can reasonably be said to be present in the mind of the agent while acting for the principal (O'Riordan v. Federal Kemper Life Assurance Co. (2005) 36 Cal. 4th 281, 288-289, 30 Cal. Rptr. 3d 507, 114 P.3d 753).

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that defendant principal is chargeable with, and is bound by, the knowledge of or notice to his or her agent received while the agent was acting within the scope of his or her authority and in reference to a matter over which the authority extends. This argument may be used whenever a third party must establish that a principal had knowledge or notice of some fact that allegedly was communicated to an agent. Optional Paragraph C may be used when counsel anticipates the argument that the agent did not communicate the knowledge or notice to the principal. Optional Paragraph D may be used when the knowledge or notice of a subagent is to be charged to the principal. Optional Paragraph E may be used when the agent's knowledge that is sought to be charged to the principal was acquired by the agent before the agency was created but was used by the agent while acting for the principal.

If the existence of the agency is disputed, these points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities in §§ 182.30 -182.32 and 182.120, as appropriate. If the extent of an agent's authority is disputed, these points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities in §§ 182.33, 182.34, and 182.121, as appropriate. If the agency or authority is alleged to have arisen because of the principal's ratification, these points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities in §§ 182.35 and 182.36, as appropriate.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that defendant principal is chargeable with, and is bound by, notice to or knowledge of his or her agent. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss facts showing that defendant principal's agent received the knowledge or notice while acting within the scope of his or her authority, and that the knowledge or notice was in reference to a matter over which the authority extended. When appropriate, counsel should also include facts relevant to optional paragraphs used by counsel.

For a form of allegation that knowledge of, or notice to, an agent should be imputed to defendant principal, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 427, Principal and Agent (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Principal Chargeable With and Bound by Knowledge of or Notice to Agent

Trane Co. v. Gilbert (1968) 267 Cal. App. 2d 720, 73 Cal. Rptr. 279 , was an action to recover from defendant principal, the developer of a building, the price of a motor installed in the building by plaintiff. Defendant principal admitted that the motor had not been paid for, but alleged that the motor was a replacement for one installed three years previously that had burned out in violation of a warranty. The trial court entered judgment for plaintiff on the ground that an agent of defendant principal had received a copy of an express warranty that was limited by its terms to one year and that precluded any inconsistent warranty. Defendant principal appealed the judgment.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that under Civ. Code § 2332a principal is chargeable with, and bound by, the knowledge of or notice to an agent received while the agent is acting within the scope of his or her authority and in reference to a matter over which the authority extends (267 Cal. App. 2d 720, 727) . The court held that the agent to whom the warranty material was given was the proper person for such knowledge, being the engineer in charge of the system the motor was for use in, and defendant principal was therefore held charged with knowledge of the warranty's one-year limit (267 Cal. App. 2d 720, 727-728) .

Columbia Pictures Corp. v. DeToth (1948) 87 Cal. App. 2d 620, 197 P.2d 580 , was an action seeking declaratory relief as to defendant principal's obligations under an oral contract of employment between plaintiff and defendant principal. Defendant principal's agent had negotiated a contract with plaintiff for defendant principal's employment by plaintiff, and defendant principal orally agreed to sign the contract. The agent knew the terms and conditions in the contract prepared by plaintiff, but defendant principal refused to sign it because of the length of the term specified in the contract that he claimed to have been unaware of. The trial court rejected defendant principal's contention that he did not know the terms of the contract, and entered judgment in plaintiff's favor declaring that defendant principal was bound by the terms of the contract. Defendant principal appealed the judgment.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that the agent's knowledge of the content of the contract was imputed to defendant principal (87 Cal. App. 2d 620, 630) . The court stated the proper rule to be that a principal is chargeable with and is bound by the knowledge of, or notice to, an agent received while the agent is acting within the scope of his or her authority and that is in reference to a matter over which the authority extends (87 Cal. App. 2d 620, 630) . The court concluded that the agent knew and had in mind the terms of the standard form of director's contract used by plaintiff, and defendant principal was chargeable with knowledge of the terms and provisions of the contract (87 Cal. App. 2d 620, 631) .

[b] Knowledge or Notice Imputed Although No Actual Communication

The facts and procedural background of Trane Co. v. Gilbert (1968) 267 Cal. App. 2d 720, 73 Cal. Rptr. 279 , are discussed in § 182.122[3][a]. The court of appeal court dismissed the contention that the agent had not informed plaintiff that the warranty was limited to one year, holding that the fact that the agent may or may not have reported the information was immaterial, for he was acting in the course of his employment and the principal was charged with knowledge of information acquired in the transaction of the principal's business (267 Cal. App. 2d 720, 727) .

[c] Knowledge of Authorized Subagent Imputed to Principal

In Northern Natural Gas Co. v. Superior Court (1976) 64 Cal. App. 3d 983, 134 Cal. Rptr. 850 , plaintiff brought an action alleging that defendant principal had defrauded plaintiff through its agents, who allegedly represented that defendant principal and its subsidiary had entered into a joint venture to market a product. The chairman of the board of the subsidiary was also the president of defendant principal, a corporation that otherwise had no connections with the state of California. Defendant principal moved to quash service of process on the ground of lack of jurisdiction. Plaintiff argued that defendant principal had knowledge of the misrepresentations because of the knowledge of the subsidiary's chairman and that jurisdiction should be found because of defendant principal's participation in the fraud. The motion was denied, and defendant principal petitioned for a writ of mandate.

The court of appeal refused to issue the writ as to defendant principal, holding that the chairman of the board was chargeable with knowledge of the representations, acts, and conduct of the employees of that company (64 Cal. App. 3d 983, 992) . The court also held that inasmuch as the chairman of the board of the subsidiary was also the president of defendant principal, defendant principal was chargeable with the same knowledge (64 Cal. App. 3d 983, 993) . The court held that the doctrine of imputed knowledge applies in the relationship of principal and subagent when the subagent's employment by the agent is authorized or ratified. The court also held that the trial court had a right to conclude that defendant principal, as stockholder of the subsidiary, elected its president as president of the subsidiary so that the president would be fully aware of the subsidiary's actions (64 Cal. App. 3d 983, 993) .

The facts and procedural background of Trane Co. v. Gilbert (1968) 267 Cal. App. 2d 720, 73 Cal. Rptr. 279 , are discussed in § 182.122[3][a]. The court relied on Civ. Code § 2351, providing that a lawfully appointed subagent represents the principal in like manner with the original agent, to conclude that the engineer in charge of planning the air-conditioning system was the agent of plaintiff because the engineer's employment by plaintiff's agent was authorized by plaintiff, and that the knowledge of the authorized subagent was imputable to, and was the equivalent of, notice to the principal (267 Cal. App. 2d 720, 727) .

[d] Principal Charged With Agent's Knowledge Acquired Before Agency

In O'Riordan v. Federal Kemper Life Assurance Co. (2005) 36 Cal. 4th 281, 30 Cal. Rptr. 3d 507, 114 P.3d 753 , the insurance company had issued a nonsmoker-rated life insurance policy and subsequently denied the beneficiary's claim on the ground that the insured had concealed her usage of cigarettes during the 36-month period before the policy was issued. In fact the insured had revealed her cigarette usage to her insurance broker. The broker was not an agent of the company when he obtained the policy on her behalf, but he applied to become an agent, and the company accepted him as an agent, in connection with the application for and issuance of the policy. The Supreme Court held that the broker's knowledge of the insured's cigarette usage was imputed to the company because of the broker's status as the company's agent and because his knowledge of the insured's smoking could reasonably be said to have been present in his mind while he was acting as the company's agent. The Court cited Columbia Pictures Corp. v. DeToth (1948) 87 Cal. App. 2d 620, 197 P.2d 580 , discussed in § 182.122[3][a], for the rule that the principal is charged with knowledge acquired by the agent before the commencement of the agency relationship, if that knowledge can reasonably be said to be present in the mind of the agent while acting for the principal (36 Cal. 4th 281, 288-289) .

§ 182.123 Supporting Contention That Third Party May Recover Tort Damages [Civ. Code § 3333] From Principal for Acts of Agent--Agent Committed Wrongful Act

[The following may be combined with the contentions supported by the points and authorities set forth in §§ 182.30 -182.36, 182.120, and 182.121, as appropriate and may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF MAY RECOVER TORT DAMAGES FROM DEFENDANT PRINCIPAL FOR THE WRONGFUL ACTS OF THE [DEFENDANT] AGENT BECAUSE A PRINCIPAL IS LIABLE FOR TORT DAMAGES FOR A WRONGFUL ACT COMMITTED BY AN AGENT _____ [IN TRANSACTING THE PRINCIPAL'S BUSINESS REGARDLESS OF WHETHER OR NOT THE ACT WAS AUTHORIZED OR RATIFIED BY THE PRINCIPAL and/or WHEN THE ACT WAS AUTHORIZED OR RATIFIED BY THE PRINCIPAL].

[EITHER]

A. Principal Liable for Wrongful Acts of Agent in Transacting Business. Unless required by or under the authority of law to employ that particular agent, a principal is responsible to third persons for the negligence of the agent in transacting the business of the agency, including wrongful acts committed by the agent in and as a part of the transaction of such business, regardless of whether or not the wrong is authorized or ratified by the principal, and for the agent's willful omission to fulfill the obligations of the principal (Civ. Code § 2338; Hudson v. Nixon (1962) 57 Cal. 2d 482, 484, 20 Cal. Rptr. 620, 370 P.2d 324).

[AND/OR]

B. Principal Liable for Agent's Authorized or Ratified Wrongful Acts. A principal is responsible for no wrongs committed by his or her agent other than those set out in *Section 2338 of the Civil Code*unless the principal has authorized or ratified the acts, even though they are committed while the agent is engaged in the principal's service (Civ. Code § 2339; see Maberto v. Wolfe (1930) 106 Cal. App 202, 206, 289 P. 218 ; Benson v. Southern Pac. Co. (1918) 177 Cal. 777, 779-780, 171 P. 948).

[Optional] C. Determining Whether or Not Act Committed During Course of Agency. The determination of whether or not an act was committed during the course of an agency turns on whether or not (1) the act performed was either required or incident to the duties of the agent, or (2) the misconduct could be reasonably foreseen by the principal in any event (see Clark Equip. Co. v. Wheat (1979) 92 Cal. App. 3d 503, 520, 154 Cal. Rptr. 874).

[Optional] D. Wrongful Act May Be Within Scope of Agency Although in Excess of Authority. The fact that an agent acts in excess of his or her authority or contrary to instructions is not inconsistent with an inference that he or she was acting within the scope of his or her employment (Clark Equip. Co. v. Wheat (1979) 92 Cal. App. 3d 503, 520, 154 Cal. Rptr. 874).

[Optional] E. Exemplary Damages When Principal Has Knowledge of Agent's Unfitness. A principal may be liable for exemplary damages based on the acts of an agent if the principal had advance knowledge of the unfitness of the agent and employed him or her with a conscious disregard of the rights or safety of others (Civ. Code § 3294(b); see Egan v. Mutual of Omaha Ins. Co. (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 809, 822, 157 Cal. Rptr. 482, 598 P.2d 452).

[Optional] F. Exemplary Damages When Principal Authorizes Wrongful Act. A third party may recover exemplary damages from an employer for a wrongful act by an employee done in the usual performance of his or her duties and expressly authorized by the employer (Civ. Code § 3294(b); Schanafelt v. Seaboard Fin. Co. (1951) 108 Cal. App. 2d 420, 423-424, 239 P.2d 42).

[Optional] G. Exemplary Damages When Principal Personally Guilty of Oppression. A third party may recover exemplary damages from a principal based on the acts of an agent if the principal was personally guilty of oppression (Civ. Code § 3294(b)).

[Optional] H. Exemplary Damages When Principal Personally Guilty of Malice. Exemplary damages may be awarded against a principal who is personally guilty of malice (Civ. Code § 3294(b); see Nolin v. National Convenience Stores, Inc. (1979) 95 Cal. App. 3d 279, 289, 157 Cal. Rptr. 32).

[Optional] I. Corporate Liability Depends on Act by Officer, Director, or Managing Agent. For an award of exemplary damages to be imposed on a corporate employer, the advance knowledge and conscious disregard, authorization, ratification, or act of oppression, fraud, or malice must be on the part of an officer, director, or managing agent of the corporation (Civ. Code § 3294(b); White v. Ultramar, Inc. (1999) 21 Cal. 4th 563, 573, 88 Cal. Rptr. 2d 19, 981 P.2d 944).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that a third party may recover from a principal the tort damages caused by the wrongful act or omission of the principal's agent. For example, such a contention may be used in an action for damages brought against the agent and the principal, or against the principal alone. The argument supported by Paragraph A of this form is for use when the act of the agent was committed during his or her transaction of the business of the agency. This argument does not depend on a showing that the act was within the agent's authority, but only a showing of the fact of agency [see Hudson v. Nixon (1962) 57 Cal. 2d 482, 484, 20 Cal. Rptr. 620, 370 P.2d 324 ; Clark Equip. Co. v. Wheat (1979) 92 Cal. App. 3d 503, 520, 154 Cal. Rptr. 874] . The argument supported by Paragraph B of the form memorandum is for use when the agent's act was not committed in and as a part of the transaction of the business of the agency but was authorized or ratified by the principal, and thus the third party may recover damages from the principal [Civ. Code §§ 2338, 2339; see Maberto v. Wolfe (1930) 106 Cal. App 202, 206, 289 P. 218 ; Benson v. Southern Pac. Co. (1918) 177 Cal. 777, 779-780, 171 P. 948] . Both Paragraphs A and B may be used when the third party argues that the respective liabilities of Civ. Code §§ 2338 and 2339 apply in the alternative, or because the agent's act was both committed in the transaction of the business and ratified or authorized by the principal. Optional Paragraph C may be used when counsel anticipates an opposing contention that the agent's act was not within the scope of the agency. Optional Paragraph D may be used when counsel anticipates an opposing contention that the agent's act was not not authorized by defendant principal. Optional Paragraphs E-I may be used, as appropriate, when the third party seeks exemplary damages from defendant principal based on the agent's acts.

If the existence of the agency is disputed, the above points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities in §§ 182.30 -182.32 and 182.120, as appropriate. If the extent of an agent's authority is disputed, these points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities in §§ 182.33, 182.34, and 182.121, as appropriate. If the agency or authority is alleged to have arisen because of the principal's ratification, the above points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities in §§ 182.35 and 182.36, as appropriate.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that a third party may recover tort damages from a principal for the wrongful act or omission of the principal's agent. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in the above form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, if Paragraph A is used, counsel should discuss facts showing that the agent was conducting the business of the agency when he or she committed the wrongful act causing damage to plaintiff third party. If Paragraph B is used, counsel should discuss facts showing that defendant principal ratified or authorized the agent's wrongful act, as appropriate. If appropriate, counsel should also insert facts showing that the wrongful act was a reasonably foreseeable risk of the business of the agency [see Rodgers v. Kemper Constr. Co. (1975) 50 Cal. App. 3d 608, 618-619, 124 Cal. Rptr. 143] . If counsel includes optional Paragraphs E-I, counsel should include facts showing that exemplary damages are proper.

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in §§ 182.135 and 182.136 may be used to oppose the contention supported by the above points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Principal Liable for Wrongful Acts of Agent in Transacting Business

Hudson v. Nixon (1962) 57 Cal. 2d 482, 20 Cal. Rptr. 620, 370 P.2d 324 , was an action to recover damages under the Hawkins Act [former Health & Safety Code §§ 35700-35741], alleging that defendants had refused to rent an apartment to plaintiffs because of their race. Plaintiffs obtained a judgment in the trial court, and defendants appealed, arguing that defendant principal could not be held liable for the acts of defendant agent in discriminating against plaintiffs.

The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment, holding that the Act provided for compensatory, rather than penal, damages, and that a principal is liable for compensatory damages for the wrong committed by an agent in transacting the principal's business regardless of whether or not the wrong is authorized or ratified by the principal (57 Cal. 2d 482, 484) .

[b] Principal Liable for Agent's Authorized or Ratified Wrongful Acts

In Maberto v. Wolfe (1930) 106 Cal. App 202, 289 P. 218 , plaintiff was injured when she was struck by an automobile driven by defendant agent and owned by defendant principal. Defendant agent was driving the car at the request of defendant principal to transport the car to San Francisco, where the accident took place. The jury held defendant principal liable for plaintiff's damages, and defendant principal appealed from the judgment.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that defendant principal was liable independently of the doctrine of respondeat superior (106 Cal. App. 202, 206) . The court held that defendant principal was liable under the principle qui facit per alium facit per se (who acts through another acts himself) (106 Cal. App. 202, 206) . Quoting from a South Carolina case, the court noted the distinction between respondeat superior liability, when a servant acts in the scope of his or her employment but without direction of the principal and the principal is held liable on public policy grounds for injury resulting from the agent's act, and qui facit liability, when the servant causes injury in doing the very thing the master directs the servant to do, and the master is held responsible for his or her own act (106 Cal. App. 202, 206) . The court held that the qui facit doctrine was the basis for the liability of defendant principal (106 Cal. App. 202, 206) .

Benson v. Southern Pac. Co. (1918) 177 Cal. 777, 171 P. 948 , was an action to recover damages for the death of plaintiff's child caused by a train of defendant company. The complaint named as defendants the company and the engineer of the train, and alleged that defendants were negligent in operating the train at an excessive speed in a crowded thoroughfare. At trial plaintiff introduced evidence that the train was operated on a schedule, at a rate of speed predetermined by defendant company. The jury returned a verdict in favor of plaintiff against defendant company, but was silent as to defendant engineer, and the trial court entered judgment accordingly. Defendant appealed from the judgment and the denial of its motion for a new trial.

The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment, holding that the failure to find against the engineer did not prejudice defendant company because the verdict could stand without a finding that defendant engineer was negligent (177 Cal. 777, 780) . The Court distinguished between liability based on respondeat superior, when an employer is held liable for the acts of an employee without any fault of the employer, and the joint liability that results when the employer directs the employee to maintain a negligent speed (177 Cal. 777, 779) . The Court held that when the employee acts at the direction of the principal, the negligence of the employer is not based on respondeat superior but on the negligent participation of the employer, and the failure to find a verdict against the employee did not prejudice the verdict against defendant company (177 Cal. 777, 780) .

The Court noted that Bradley v. Rosenthal (1908) 154 Cal. 420, 424-425, 97 P. 875 , which had held that a verdict purporting to exonerate an agent but hold a principal liable could not be reconciled, was based on the explicit finding that the principal in that case did not direct or participate in the acts of the agent that damaged the plaintiff. The Court in Bradley had pointed out the distinction between negligent acts of the servant done at the direction of the principal and negligent acts done on the agent's own initiative (177 Cal. 777, 780) . The Benson Court's reliance on Bradley apparently shows that the Court did not distinguish the liability between principal and agent on the one hand from the liability between employer and employee on the other.

[c] Determining Whether or Not Act Committed During Course of Agency

In Clark Equip. Co. v. Wheat (1979) 92 Cal. App. 3d 503, 154 Cal. Rptr. 874 , defendant cross complained against plaintiff principal in an action to enforce an installment sales contract for a forklift purchased by defendant. The cross complaint alleged that plaintiff had committed fraud through its agents' misrepresentations as to the capabilities of the defective lift and as to defendant's obligations of payment on the defective lift. The lift sold to defendant was incapable of meeting defendant's needs, and after repairs were unsuccessful a salesman of plaintiff principal persuaded defendant to purchase a more expensive lift and represented that payments on the defective lift need not be made if the new lift were bought. The trial court entered judgment for defendant on the cross complaint, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that plaintiff was properly held liable under the doctrine of respondeat superior for the misrepresentations of its agents (92 Cal. App. 3d 503, 522) . The court held that the determination of whether an employee committed a tort during the course of his or her employment turns on whether or not (1) the act performed was either required or incident to his or her duties, or (2) the employee's misconduct could be reasonably foreseen in any event (92 Cal. App. 3d 503, 520) . The court concluded that the misrepresentations were made in the course and scope of the agents' employment because they were incidental to their respective duties and could reasonably be foreseen by plaintiff (92 Cal. App. 3d 503, 521-522) . The court distinguished between foreseeability as a test for negligence and foreseeability in the context before it. The court noted that in the context of respondeat superior liability, foreseeable means merely that in the context of the particular enterprise an employee's conduct is not so unusual or startling that it would seem unfair to include the loss resulting from it among the other costs of the employer's business (92 Cal. App. 3d 503, 522) . In discussing the doctrine of respondeat superior, the court drew on precedent dealing with both principal-agent and employer-employee situations, without making any clear distinction between them. The court held that plaintiff was liable for the wrongful acts of its employees and its agents, but it appears that the court used the term "employment" to include the scope of an agency (92 Cal. App. 3d 503, 519-520) . The court examined the rationale of the doctrine of respondeat superior and held that the purpose of the doctrine was to allocate the risk of loss from the tort of an employee or agent to the enterprise he or she acts for as a required cost of doing business [quoting from Hinman v. Westinghouse Elec. Co. (1970) 2 Cal. 3d 956, 959-960, 88 Cal. Rptr. 188, 471 P.2d 988] (92 Cal. App. 3d 503, 520) .

[d] Wrongful Act May Be Within Scope of Agency Although in Excess of Authority

The facts and procedural background of Clark Equip. Co. v. Wheat (1979) 92 Cal. App. 3d 503, 154 Cal. Rptr. 874 , are discussed in § 182.123[3][c]. The court held that the fact that an agent or employee acts in excess of his or her authority or contrary to instructions is not inconsistent with an inference that he or she was acting within the scope of his or her employment (92 Cal. App. 3d 503, 520) .

[e] Exemplary Damages When Principal Has Knowledge of Agent's Unfitness

Egan v. Mutual of Omaha Ins. Co. (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 809, 157 Cal. Rptr. 482, 598 P.2d 452 , was an action against defendant and its agents who handled plaintiff's claim, seeking compensatory and exemplary damages for the bad faith breach of a health and disability insurance policy. The trial court directed verdict for plaintiff on the ground that the failure to have plaintiff examined by a doctor of defendant's choice or to consult with plaintiff's treating physicians before denying plaintiff's claims for benefits under the policy constituted a breach of the duty of good faith and fair dealing. The jury awarded plaintiff compensatory and exemplary damages, and defendant appealed.

The Supreme Court affirmed the award of exemplary damages against defendant as principal, holding that California follows the rule of Restatement 2d of Torts § 909 regarding assessment of punitive damages against a principal. The Court noted that § 909 permits an award of exemplary damages if, but only if, (1) the principal authorized the doing and the manner of the act, (2) the agent was unfit and the principal was reckless in employing him or her, (3) the agent was employed in a managerial capacity and was acting in the scope of employment, or (4) the principal or a managerial agent of the principal ratified or approved the act (24 Cal. 3d 809, 822) . The ground that the agent was unfit and the principal reckless in employing the agent has apparently been carried over into Civ. Code § 3294(b), which was amended after Egan and now provides that an employer may be held liable for exemplary damages based on the act of an employee if the employer had advance knowledge of the unfitness of the employee and employed him or her with a conscious disregard of the rights or safety of others [Civ. Code § 3294(b)].

[f] Exemplary Damages When Principal Authorizes Wrongful Act

Schanafelt v. Seaboard Fin. Co. (1951) 108 Cal. App. 2d 420, 239 P.2d 42 , was an action to recover compensatory and exemplary damages for a false imprisonment perpetrated by an employee of defendant. An agent of defendant principal had refused to let plaintiff leave her house for over two hours, until a truck arrived to repossess plaintiff's furniture. The agent talked to defendant principal on the telephone before he told plaintiff to remain indoors, and the agent testified that his actions were authorized by defendant principal. This action followed, and the jury awarded plaintiff compensatory and exemplary damages against defendant. Defendant appealed from the judgment.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that the evidence was sufficient to support a finding that the agent acted within his authorization from defendant principal (108 Cal. App. 2d 420, 423) . In concluding that the award of exemplary damages was proper, the court relied on the evidence that the employee was authorized to take the steps necessary to repossess the furniture, that all the employee did was in the usual performance of his duties, and that defendant had authorized the acts in the phone conversation with the employee (108 Cal. App. 2d 420, 423-424) .

[g] Exemplary Damages When Principal Personally Guilty of Malice

Nolin v. National Convenience Stores, Inc. (1979) 95 Cal. App. 3d 279, 157 Cal. Rptr. 32 , was an action for personal injuries brought by plaintiff after she was injured in a slip and fall at one of defendant's stores. Plaintiff presented evidence that defendant's employees were aware of the dangerous conditions around the store's self-service gas pumps, where the accident occurred, but that their attempts to warn patrons of those dangers were thwarted by defendant's district representative on the ground that the warnings would be bad for defendant's "image." The jury awarded plaintiff compensatory and punitive damages, and defendant appealed from the judgment.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment, holding that the trial court properly allowed plaintiff's exemplary damages claim to go to the jury (95 Cal. App. 3d 279, 289) . The court held that when a principal or employer is personally guilty of malice, plaintiff may be awarded exemplary damages aginst the principal or employer (95 Cal. App. 3d 279, 289) . The court rejected defendant's contention that it could not be held responsible for misconduct by minor employees, noting that the store where plaintiff was injured was supervised by an employee of defendant who was given the power and the responsibility for conveying company policy to the subordinate employees (95 Cal. App. 3d 279, 289) . The court held that the entire record, including the evidence that the supervisor did not allow the employees of the store to warn patrons of the known danger, disclosed the existence of defendant's conscious disregard for safety that constituted the ingredient of malice necessary for the imposition of exemplary damages (95 Cal. App. 3d 279, 289) .

Nolin was decided before the 1980 amendment to Civ. Code § 3294, which specified the conditions for an award of exemplary damages against an employer for the act of an employee. However, because Civ. Code § 3294(b) provides that an employer may be held liable in exemplary damages if personally guilty of oppression, fraud, or malice, or if an officer, director, or managing agent of a corporate employer is guilty of such an act, Nolin appears to be valid authority for the point cited when the requirements of Civ. Code § 3294(b) are met.

[h] Corporate Liability Depends on Act by Officer, Director, or Managing Agent

In White v. Ultramar, Inc. (1999) 21 Cal. 4th 563, 88 Cal. Rptr. 2d 19, 981 P.2d 944 , an employee brought an action against his former employer, the operator of a convenience store, for wrongful termination in retaliation for testifying at the unemployment compensation hearing of defendant's former employee. The jury awarded plaintiff both compensatory and punitive damages. The court of appeal upheld the punitive damages award against the employer on the ground that the supervisory employee who was primarily responsible for plaintiff's retaliatory discharge was a managing agent under Civ. Code § 3294(b), because she was the supervisor who ultimately fired him. The California Supreme Court granted the employer's petition for review, limiting its review to the punitive damages question and the construction of "managing agent" under Civ. Code § 3294(b). The Court disagreed with the court of appeal's conclusion that the mere ability to hire and fire employees renders a supervisory employee a managing agent under § 3294(b). Instead, it examined the legislative history of that section and concluded that the Legislature intended the term "managing agent" to include only those corporate employees who exercise substantial independent authority and judgment in their corporate decisionmaking so that their decisions ultimately determine corporate policy (21 Cal. 4th 563, 573-577) . Thus, supervisors who have broad discretionary powers and exercise substantial discretionary authority in the corporation could be managing agents. Conversely, supervisors who have no discretionary authority over decisions that ultimately determine corporate policy would not be considered managing agents even though they may have the ability to hire or fire other employees. In order to demonstrate that an employee is a true managing agent under Civ. Code § 3294(b), a plaintiff seeking punitive damages must show that the employee exercised substantial discretionary authority over significant aspects of a corporation's business (21 Cal. 4th 563, 577) . The scope of a corporate employee's discretion and authority under that test is therefore a question of fact for decision on a case-by-case basis. The Supreme Court, however, affirmed the court of appeal's judgment in plaintiff's favor after concluding that defendant's zone manager and the employee who fired plaintiff was a "managing agent" under the supreme court's construction of that term (21 Cal. 4th 563, 577-578) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Principal Liable for Wrongful Acts of Agent in Transacting Business

In Fields v. Sanders (1947) 29 Cal. 2d 834, 180 P.2d 684 , plaintiff alleged that he had been assaulted by defendant agent, who was a truck driver working for defendant principal, and sought tort damages from both defendants. The trial court entered judgment for plaintiff as prayed for, and the Supreme Court affirmed, holding that defendant principal was properly held liable for the damages resulting from the assault (29 Cal. 2d 834, 840-841) . The Court held that the trial court properly found the assault to have arisen from defendant agent's conduct of his employer's business, and that under Civ. Code § 2338 the employer as principal was liable for the damages suffered by plaintiff (29 Cal. 2d 834, 838-839, 843) .

[b] Determining Whether or Not Act Committed During Course of Agency

In Harris v. Trojan Fireworks Co. (1984) 155 Cal. App. 3d 830, 202 Cal. Rptr. 440 , defendant closed its plant at noon on Christmas Eve. One of its employees drank beer in defendant's parking lot after the plant closed and then drove a car and caused an accident. The court of appeal rejected the injured plaintiff's contention that the employee was acting within the scope of his employment when he was drinking in the parking lot, on the grounds that the employee's conduct was of no benefit to defendant and that defendant played no part in the employee's misconduct (155 Cal. App. 3d 830, 835-837) .

[c] Exemplary Damages When Principal Authorizes Wrongful Act

In O'Hara v. Western Seven Trees Corp. (1977) 75 Cal. App. 3d 798, 142 Cal. Rptr. 487 , plaintiff sued defendant principal, the owner of the apartment building in which she was raped, for compensatory and exemplary damages for the misrepresentations as to the safety of the building made by defendant agent. The court of appeal reversed a dismissal entered after the trial court sustained defendant principal's demurrer without leave to amend. The court held that the complaint sufficiently alleged that defendant principal authorized the misrepresentations and that a corporation is liable when it authorizes the wrongful act for which exemplary damages may be awarded (75 Cal. App. 3d 798, 806) .

NOTE:

O'Hara v. Western Seven Trees Corp. was decided before the 1980 amendment of Civ. Code § 3294, which expressly provided that the authorization of an employer can support an award of exemplary damages against the employer for the act of the employee. However, since the holding of O'Hara is essentially the same as the basis of liability for exemplary damages in Civ. Code § 3294(b), the court's reasoning apparently remains valid.

Hale v. Farmers Ins. Exch. (1974) 42 Cal. App. 3d 681, 117 Cal. Rptr. 146 , overruled on other grounds, Egan v. Mutual of Omaha Ins. Co. (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 809, 822 n.5, 157 Cal. Rptr. 482, 598 P.2d 452 , is discussed in § 182.124[3][c]. The court held that the existence of a "usual procedure" followed by agents may support a jury determination that defendant principal authorized the usual procedures, because such procedures had to be known by those who dictated company policies (42 Cal. App. 3d 681, 691) . Counsel should also note that Hale was decided before Civ. Code § 3294 was amended in 1980 to provide that the authorization of an employer can support an award of exemplary damages against the employer for the act of the employee. However, because the holding in Hale is essentially the same as the basis of liability for exemplary damages in Civ. Code § 3294(b), the court's reasoning apparently remains valid.

§ 182.124 Supporting Contention That Third Party May Recover Tort Damages [Civ. Code § 3333] From Principal for Acts of Agent--Principal Ratified Wrongful Act of Agent

[The following may be combined with the contentions supported by the points and authorities set forth in §§ 182.35 and 182.36 as appropriate and may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF MAY RECOVER TORT DAMAGES FROM DEFENDANT PRINCIPAL FOR THE WRONGFUL ACT OF THE [DEFENDANT] AGENT BECAUSE A PRINCIPAL IS LIABLE FOR THE WRONGFUL ACT OF AN AGENT WHEN THE PRINCIPAL HAS RATIFIED THE AGENT'S WRONGFUL ACT.

A. Principal Liable for Agent's Authorized or Ratified Wrongful Acts. [See § 182.123[1], Paragraph B.]

B. Third Party May Recover Damages for Agent's Wrongful Act Ratified by Principal. A third party may recover compensatory damages in tort from a principal for the wrongful act of an agent if the principal ratifies the agent's act (see Spahn v. Guild Indus. Corp. (1979) 94 Cal. App. 3d 143, 156, 156 Cal. Rptr. 375 ; Coats v. Construction & Gen. Laborers Local No. 185 (1971) 15 Cal. App. 3d 908, 914, 93 Cal. Rptr. 639).

[Optional] C. Failure to Discharge Agent May Constitute Ratification. Failure of principal to discharge an employee or agent guilty of oppressive acts towards patrons of the employer is in itself sufficient evidence to show ratification (Coats v. Construction & Gen. Laborers Local No. 185 (1971) 15 Cal. App. 3d 908, 914, 93 Cal. Rptr. 639 ; McChristian v. Popkin (1946) 75 Cal. App. 2d 249, 256, 171 P.2d 85).

[Optional] D. Exemplary Damages When Principal Ratifies Wrongful Act. Exemplary damages may be awarded against a principal because of an act by an agent if the employer or a manager of the employer ratified the agent's wrongful act (Civ. Code § 3294(b); Chodos v. Insurance Co. of N. Am. (1981) 126 Cal. App. 3d 86, 102, 178 Cal. Rptr. 831 ; Hale v. Farmers Ins. Exch. (1974) 42 Cal. App. 3d 681, 691-692, 117 Cal. Rptr. 146 , overruled on other grounds, Egan v. Mutual of Omaha Ins. Co. (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 809, 822 n.5, 157 Cal. Rptr. 482, 598 P.2d 452).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that a third party may recover compensatory damages in tort and, in an appropriate case, exemplary damages from a principal for a wrongful act of an agent because the principal ratified the agent's act. Such a contention may be raised in an action for damages against the principal alone or against the principal and the agent. This argument may also be modified for use by an agent as a defense to a principal's action for implied equitable indemnification. For a related contention that would be appropriate in the context of an agent's defense of a principal's implied equitable indemnity action, see § 182.87.

When the ratification by the principal is disputed, these points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities in §§ 182.35 and 182.36, as appropriate.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that a third party may recover tort damages from a principal for an agent's wrongful act. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Third Party May Recover Damages for Agent's Wrongful Act Ratified by Principal

Spahn v. Guild Indus. Corp. (1979) 94 Cal. App. 3d 143, 156 Cal. Rptr. 375 , was an action to recover compensatory and punitive damages from defendant principal for the fraud of defendant principal's agents. Defendant principal was a franchisor that solicited franchisees for the sale of its baby furniture products through its agent. The agent made numerous false representations to the potential franchisees, including plaintiffs, and was aided in those representations by materials furnished by defendant principal. Defendant principal's officers communicated with plaintiffs regarding the use of the sales techniques required by the agent, and defendant principal's officers also knew of the agent's representations to plaintiffs but nevertheless sold its furniture to plaintiffs. The trial court entered judgment in favor of plaintiffs and against defendant principal for the fraudulent representations of its agent, awarding both compensatory and punitive damages, and defendant principal appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that defendant principal was properly held liable for the fraud of its agent on various grounds, including its ratification of the acts of its agent (94 Cal. App. 3d 143, 157) . The court noted that a third party may recover compensatory and punitive damages from a principal for an agent's acts when the principal subsequently ratifies the agent's actions (94 Cal. App. 3d 143, 156) . The court found that defendant principal ratified the actions of its agent because defendant had knowledge of the agent's representations and defendant accepted the benefits of the representations by selling its goods to the franchisees (94 Cal. App. 3d 143, 157) .

In Coats v. Construction & Gen. Laborers Local No. 185 (1971) 15 Cal. App. 3d 908, 93 Cal. Rptr. 639 , plaintiff, a member of defendant principal, sued for tort damages for an assault committed by two assistant business representatives of defendant principal. After the assault, plaintiff reported the incident to defendant principal's officers, and although the president wanted to fire the assistants, defendant principal continued to employ them. The trial court entered judgment against defendant principal for compensatory and punitive damages, and defendant principal appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that substantial evidence supported the finding that defendant principal ratified the acts of the assistants who assaulted plaintiff (15 Cal. App. 3d 908, 913) . The court relied on the evidence that defendant principal did not repudiate the actions of the assistants when it was informed of them, in spite of the desire of the president of defendant principal to do so by discharging them (15 Cal. App. 3d 908, 913) . The court recognized that an employer is responsible for the willful and malicious acts of an employee ratified by the employer, and held that defendant principal was properly held liable for the assault of the assistants on plaintiff (15 Cal. App. 3d 908, 914) .

[b] Failure to Discharge Agent May Constitute Ratification

The facts and procedural background of Coats v. Construction & Gen. Laborers Local No. 185 (1971) 15 Cal. App. 3d 908, 93 Cal. Rptr. 639 , are discussed in § 182.124[3][a]. In finding that defendant principal ratified the assistants' conduct, the court placed particular reliance on defendant principal's failure to discharge the assistants who assaulted plaintiff after defendant received knowledge of the assault (15 Cal. App. 3d 908, 913-914) .

McChristian v. Popkin (1946) 75 Cal. App. 2d 249, 171 P.2d 85 , was an action for assault and battery brought against the owners of a theater, arising from a beating allegedly inflicted on plaintiff by a special officer employed at the theater, who ejected plaintiff from the theater. After the incident, plaintiff talked with the manager of the theater and related his version of the events, but defendants kept the officer in their employ thereafter. The jury awarded plaintiff damages against all defendants, and defendants appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that defendants' retention of the officer in the employ of the theater was sufficient evidence to support a finding that defendants ratified the officer's actions (15 Cal. App. 3d 908) . The court noted that failure to discharge an agent guilty of oppressive acts toward patrons of the employer is in itself evidence tending to show ratification, with the weight of the evidence dependent on the circumstances attending the retention (15 Cal. App. 3d 908) . The court held that under the circumstances before it, defendants' actions were sufficient to allow a jury to find ratification (15 Cal. App. 3d 908) .

[c] Exemplary Damages When Principal Ratifies Wrongful Act

Chodos v. Insurance Co. of N. Am. (1981) 126 Cal. App. 3d 86, 178 Cal. Rptr. 831 , was an action to recover compensatory and punitive damages from defendant principal for the fraud and breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing committed by the agents of defendant principal. The agents refused to pay plaintiff the full amount due plaintiff under the insurance policy, a decision that was reaffirmed by the agent's superiors despite evidence that the position denying payment was untenable under the policy. Defendant principal continued to refuse to pay plaintiff, deciding instead to defend plaintiff's action at trial. The trial court awarded compensatory and punitive damages to plaintiff, and defendant principal appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment, holding that the award of exemplary damages against defendant principal for the acts of its agents was proper (126 Cal. App. 3d 86, 102-103) . The court found sufficient evidence to support the award of exemplary damages in the intentional concealment and/or misrepresentation by the agents (126 Cal. App. 3d 86, 101) . As to the imposition of those damages against defendant principal, the court noted the 1981 amendment to Civ. Code § 3294, providing the test for awarding exemplary damages against employers, and stated that the amendment was based on the rule previously applied in cases such as Merlo v. Standard Life & Accident Ins. Co. (1976) 59 Cal. App. 3d 5, 18, 130 Cal. Rptr. 416 , which permitted an award of exemplary damages when the employer or a manager of the employer ratified or approved the agent's act (126 Cal. App. 3d 86, 102) . The court found sufficient evidence to support defendant principal's ratification of the agents' fraudulent acts in defendant principal's decision not to pay plaintiff after defendant principal knew of the circumstances of the case (126 Cal. App. 3d 86, 102-103) .

Hale v. Farmers Ins. Exch. (1974) 42 Cal. App. 3d 681, 117 Cal. Rptr. 146 , overruled on other grounds, Egan v. Mutual of Omaha Ins. Co. (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 809, 822 n.5, 157 Cal. Rptr. 482, 598 P.2d 452 , was an action seeking compensatory and punitive damages from defendant principal for bad faith refusal to pay medical benefits due plaintiff under his automobile insurance policy. Plaintiff filed a proof of claim form on the day of a collision, embarked on a course of treatment for back injuries with one doctor, and was later referred to an orthopedist. When defendant learned of the referral, it refused to make further medical payments, although its agent was informed that plaintiff had undergone back surgery. The refusal to pay the benefits was based on the usual procedures of defendant principal in handling claims. The jury awarded plaintiff compensatory and punitive damages from defendant principal, but the trial court granted defendant's motions for judgment notwithstanding the verdict and a new trial on the ground that the award of exemplary damages was not supported by the evidence, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed the judgment notwithstanding the verdict as to defendant, holding that there was evidence from which the jury could have found that defendant had ratified the actions of its agent (42 Cal. App. 3d 681, 692) . The court held that the jury could have inferred that plaintiff's file was reviewed pursuant to defendant's usual practices and that the refusal to pay thereafter constituted an adoption of the agent's decision not to pay the claim (42 Cal. App. 3d 681, 692) . The court held that the ratification was sufficient to justify imposing exemplary damages on defendant under the guidelines of Restatement 2d of Torts, § 909, which the court held was the law in California (42 Cal. App. 3d 681, 691) .

NOTE:

Civ. Code § 3294(b) now expressly provides that an employer may be held liable for exemplary damages when the employer ratified the wrongful conduct for which the damages were awarded, in a manner similar to that applied by the court in Hale v. Farmers Insurance Exchange. Thus, it appears that the reasoning of the court in Hale as to ratification remains valid.

[a] Exemplary Damages When Principal Ratifies Wrongful Act

Siva v. General Tire & Rubber Co. (1983) 146 Cal. App. 3d 152, 194 Cal. Rptr. 51 , was an action for compensatory and exemplary damages brought by an employee of defendant alleging that he was injured when he attempted to repair a defective tire that had been recapped by defendant. Plaintiff's action was based on the contention that the procedures used in recapping the tire had been done with a conscious disregard of the safety of others, and that the procedures had been ratified by defendant. The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's judgment awarding exemplary damages to plaintiff against defendant, holding that the conduct of the employees who had recapped the tire in violation of the tire's safety rating had been ratified by defendant in that an implicit agreement not to abide by the written ratings was evidenced by the conduct of defendant's managers (146 Cal. App. 3d 152, 159) .

Coats v. Construction & Gen. Laborers Local No. 185 (1971) 15 Cal. App. 3d 908, 93 Cal. Rptr. 639 , is discussed in § 182.124[3][a].

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF MAY RECOVER DAMAGES FROM DEFENDANT PRINCIPAL FOR A FRAUD PERPETRATED BY [DEFENDANT], THE AGENT OF DEFENDANT PRINCIPAL, BECAUSE A PRINCIPAL IS LIABLE TO A THIRD PERSON FOR FRAUD WHEN THE PRINCIPAL PUTS AN AGENT IN A POSITION THAT ENABLES THE AGENT TO COMMIT A FRAUD ON THIRD PERSONS WHILE THE AGENT APPARENTLY ACTS WITHIN THE AGENT'S AUTHORITY.

A. Liability of Principal for Fraud of Agent. A principal who puts an agent in a position that enables the agent, while apparently acting within the agent's authority, to commit fraud on third persons is liable to those third persons for the fraud (Rutherford v. Rideout Bank (1938) 11 Cal. 2d 479, 483-484, 80 P.2d 978 ; Streetscenes LLC v. ITC Entm't Group, Inc. (2002) 103 Cal. App. 4th 233, 242-243, 126 Cal. Rptr. 2d 754 ; *Reusche v. California Pac. [Optional] B. Principal's Liability Not Based on Fault. The principal may be held liable for a fraud perpetrated by his or her agent although the principal is entirely innocent, has received no benefit from the transaction, and although the agent acts solely for the agent's own purposes (Rutherford v. Rideout Bank (1938) 11 Cal. 2d 479, 483-484, 80 P.2d 978 ; Reusche v. California Pac. Title Ins Co. (1965) 231 Cal. App. 2d 731, 736, 42 Cal. Rptr. 262).

[Optional] C. Exemplary Damages When Principal Personally Guilty of Fraud. A principal may be liable for exem plary damages based on the acts of an agent if the principal was personally guilty of fraud (Civ. Code § 3294(b)).

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that a third party may recover damages from defendant principal for a fraud perpetrated by an agent of defendant principal in the course of the agency. The argument may be used whether the damages are sought under Civ. Code §§ 1709 (deceit generally), 3333 (tort damages generally), 3343 (fraud in sale, purchase, or exchange of property), or Com. Code § 2721 (fraud in sale of goods). For example, these points and authorities may be used in an action for fraud brought against the principal. As another example, these points and authorities may be used by a third party in support of a cross complaint in an action brought by the principal to enforce a contract entered into by the agent and the third party when the third party alleges that the fraud of the agent induced the third party to enter into the contract.

[b] Related Agency Issues

If the existence of the agency is disputed, these points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities in §§ 182.30 -182.32 and 182.120, as appropriate. If the extent of an agent's authority is disputed, these points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities in §§ 182.33, 182.34, and 182.121, as appropriate. If the agency or authority is alleged to have arisen because of the principal's ratification, these points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities in §§ 182.35 and 182.36, as appropriate.

[c] Procedural Issues

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that a third party may recover damages for fraud from a principal for the fraud of an agent. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Liability of Principal for Fraud of Agent

In Rutherford v. Rideout Bank (1938) 11 Cal. 2d 479, 80 P.2d 978 , plaintiff sued to recover as damages under Civ. Code § 3343 the difference between the sales price of properties and their market value from defendant principal. Plaintiff was the owner of two parcels of property that were security for separate debts that were overdue and unpaid at the time the acts complained of occurred. Plaintiff had relied on the advice of defendant agent in the transaction of her business and financial affairs, so when the agent told her that the mortgages would be foreclosed and that she should sell the properties to avoid any loss she agreed to do so. The agent represented that a proposed sale that he presented to plaintiff was fair in its consideration, when in fact it was well below market value for the properties and the purchaser had agreed to pay the agent to obtain the deed to the properties for a price below market value. The trial court entered judgment for plaintiff in that amount, and defendant principal appealed.

The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that defendant principal was liable for the fraud of its agent because the principal gave the agent potential power that he could and did use in a coercive manner to accomplish a wrongful act under the color of the office he occupied (11 Cal. 2d 479, 484) . In reaching its conclusion, the Court adopted the reasoning of Restatement of Agency § 261, which provides that a principal who puts an agent in a position that enables the agent, while apparently acting within his or her authority, to commit a fraud on third persons is liable to those third persons for the fraud (11 Cal. 2d 479, 484) . The Court found convincing the illustrations to the restatement, which point out that the liability is based on the fact that the agent's position facilitates the consummation of the fraud. The Court held that a principal may be liable for the fraud of an agent when from the point of view of the third person the transaction seems regular on its face and the agent appears to be acting in the ordinary course of the business confided to him or her (11 Cal. 2d 479, 484) .

The facts and procedural background of Streetscenes LLC v. ITC Entm't Group, Inc. (2002) 103 Cal. App. 4th 233, 126 Cal. Rptr. 2d 754 , are discussed in § 182.35[3][b]. Investors in a movie project who were defrauded by a producer brought an action for fraud against the production company, which disavowed the producer's actions and claimed he was an independent producer. The court held that the evidence was sufficient to establish that the production company ratified or authorized the producer's wrongful conduct (103 Cal. App. 4th 233, 242-243) .

Reusche v. California Pac. Title Ins Co. (1965) 231 Cal. App. 2d 731, 42 Cal. Rptr. 262 , was an action by plaintiff principal to determine the validity of a promissory note and deed of trust forged by her agent, and a cross complaint by the trustee of the deed of trust contending that plaintiff principal was bound by the acts of the agent. Plaintiff had employed an agent for some time to assist her in the management and acquisition of several parcels of property, and the agent had helped plaintiff acquire an apartment building. Without plaintiff's knowledge, the agent had sought a loan in plaintiff's name, to be secured by a second mortgage on the apartment house, representing that he was authorized to act for plaintiff in the transaction. The loan was approved and the agent forged plaintiff principal's endorsement on the check and the other instruments. When plaintiff was contacted by the bank that loaned the money, plaintiff said that the transaction was regular as far as she was concerned. This action was instituted thereafter, and a judgment was entered in favor of defendants on their cross complaint seeking to enforce the note. The trial court granted plaintiff's motion for a new trial, and defendants appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that the new trial order was improper because the judgment could have been sustained on various grounds, including that the agent had ostensible authority to act on plaintiff's behalf (231 Cal. App. 2d 731) . The court held that a principal who puts an agent in a position that enables the agent, while apparently acting within his or her authority, to commit a fraud on third persons is subject to liability to the third persons for the fraud (231 Cal. App. 2d 731) . The court noted that a basis of the rule is the fact that from the point of view of the third person, the transaction seems regular on its face and the agent appears to be acting in the ordinary course of the business confided to him or her, as was true in the case before the court (23 Cal. App. 2d 731, 736-737) .

[b] Principal's Liability Not Based on Fault

The facts and procedural background of Rutherford v. Rideout Bank (1938) 11 Cal. 2d 479, 80 P.2d 978 , are discussed in § 182.125[3][a]. The Court noted that the rationale of the rule holding a principal liable for the fraud of an agent applies although the principal is entirely innocent, although he or she has received no benefit from the transaction, and although the agent acts solely for his or her own purposes (11 Cal. 2d 479, 484) .

The facts and procedural background of Reusche v. California Pac. Title Ins Co. (1965) 231 Cal. App. 2d 731, 42 Cal. Rptr. 262 , are discussed in § 182.125[3][a]. Relying on Rutherford v. Rideout Bank (1938) 11 Cal. 2d 479, 484, 80 P.2d 978 , the court in Reusche noted that the rationale of the rule that a principal is liable for the fraud of an agent applies although the principal is entirely innocent, although he or she has received no benefit from the transaction, and although the agent acts solely for his or her own purposes (11 Cal. 2d 479) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Liability of Principal for Fraud of Agent

The facts and procedural background of Spahn v. Guild Indus. Corp. (1979) 94 Cal. App. 3d 143, 156 Cal. Rptr. 375 , are discussed in § 182.124[3][a]. The court held that a principal may be held liable for the fraud of an agent when the agent's position facilitates the fraud (94 Cal. App. 3d 143, 155-156) . The court held, as an alternative basis for its decision, that when a principal actually or ostensibly authorizes representations about a matter related to the agent's duties, and the agent has knowledge of their falsity, this knowledge may be imputed to the principal, even if the agent is acting adversely to the principal (94 Cal. App. 3d 143, 155) .

A. Agent's Implied Authority. [See § 182.34[1], Paragraph A.]

B. Third Party May Enforce Arbitration Provision Against Principal. [2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a third party may enforce an arbitration provision of a group medical contract against the principal because the principal's agent had implied authority to bind his or her principal to an arbitration provision in a group medical contract that the agent was authorized to negotiate. This argument may be used whenever an agent with authority to negotiate a group medical contract allegedly exceeded his or her authority by agreeing to a clause requiring the principal to submit a malpractice claim to binding arbitration. For example, such an argument might be raised when the insurer with whom the contract was negotiated seeks to enforce the arbitration clause and a member of the group argues that the agent was not authorized to agree to an arbitration clause. The argument might also arise in an action by a principal, a member of the group, against the agent, alleging that the agent exceeded his or her authority to the damage of the principal. For a general form for a contention that an agent had implied authority to perform certain acts, see § 182.34.

If the existence of the agency is disputed, these points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities in §§ 182.30 -182.32 and 182.120, as appropriate. If the extent of an agent's authority is disputed, these points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities in §§ 182.33, 182.34, and 182.121, as appropriate. If the agency or authority is alleged to have arisen because of the principal's ratification, these points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities in §§ 182.35 and 182.36, as appropriate.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss the facts showing the agent's authority to negotiate the group medical contract and the absence of any specific limitation on the authority regarding the arbitration clause.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Third Party May Enforce Arbitration Provision Against Principal

Madden v. Kaiser Found. Hosps. (1976) 17 Cal. 3d 699, 131 Cal. Rptr. 882, 552 P.2d 1178 , was an action for malpractice by an employee covered by a group medical plan administered and provided by defendant insurer. Plaintiff suffered complications after a hysterectomy performed at defendant's hospital. Defendant moved to stay the proceedings and compel arbitration under a provision of the group medical care contract negotiated by the Board of Administration of the State Employees Retirement System under former Gov. Code § 22751 et seq. Plaintiff opposed the motion on the ground that she had no notice that the contract had been amended to require arbitration, and that the Board had no authority to bind her to the arbitration provision. The trial court denied defendant's motion to compel arbitration, and defendant appealed.

The California Supreme Court reversed, holding that arbitration is a proper and usual means of resolving malpractice disputes, and thus that an agent empowered to negotiate a group medical contract has the implied authority under Civ. Code § 2319 to agree to the inclusion of an arbitration provision. The Court noted that Civ. Code § 2319 authorizes a general agent to do everything necessary or proper and usual for effecting the purpose of the agency (17 Cal. 3d 699, 706) . The Court examined the judiciary's changing attitudes toward arbitration over the past century and concluded that arbitration is now accepted as a means of resolving otherwise justiciable controversies, and therefore is proper and usual within the meaning of Civ. Code § 2319 (17 Cal. 3d 699, 708-709) .

§ 182.127 Supporting Contention That Third Party May Enforce Contract Entered Into by Agent for Principal--Disclosed Principal Liable on Contract in Name of Agent When Intent to Bind Principal Inferable From Face of Instrument

[The following may be combined with the contentions supported by the points and authorities set forth in §§ 182.30 -182.36, and 182.120 and 182.121, as appropriate, and may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF MAY ENFORCE THE CONTRACT ENTERED INTO BY THE [DEFENDANT] AGENT ON BEHALF OF DEFENDANT PRINCIPAL BECAUSE A CONTRACT IN THE NAME OF AN AGENT BINDS A DISCLOSED PRINCIPAL WHEN THE INTENT TO DO SO IS INFERABLE FROM THE FACE OF THE INSTRUMENT.

A. Agent's Accrued Rights and Liabilities Accrue to Principal. An agent represents his or her principal for all purposes within the scope of the actual or ostensible authority, and all the rights and liabilities that would accrue to the agent from transactions within that limit, if they had been entered into on the agent's own account, accrue to the principal (Civ. Code § 2330).

B. Contract in Agent's Name Binding on Disclosed Principal. A disclosed principal is bound by a contract made solely in the name of an agent if the intent to bind the principal is clearly inferable from the face of the instrument (Civ. Code § 2337; Sunset Milling & Grain Co. v. Anderson (1952) 39 Cal. 2d 773, 778, 249 P.2d 24 ; Frank Pisano & Assocs. v. Taggart (1972) 29 Cal. App. 3d 1, 17, 105 Cal. Rptr. 414).

[Optional] C. Contract With Agent Is Not Election to Exonerate Disclosed Principal. When no intent to give an agent exclusive credit is shown, a contract made in the name of the agent, knowing him or her to be an agent and with knowledge of the principal's identity, is in legal effect the contract of the principal when made within the scope of the agent's authority (Geary S., P. & O. R. Co. v. Rolph (1922) 189 Cal. 59, 66, 207 P. 539).

[Optional] D. Unsatisfied Judgment Against Agent Does Not Discharge Disclosed Principal. Recovery of judgment against the agent of a disclosed or partially disclosed principal for failure of performance of a contract to which the agent is a party does not thereby discharge the principal; only the satisfaction of a judgment against the agent terminates the liability of the principal (Clifton Cattle Co. v. Thompson (1974) 43 Cal. App. 3d 11, 16, 117 Cal. Rptr. 500 ; Zingheim v. Marshall (1967) 249 Cal. App. 2d 736, 747-748, 57 Cal. Rptr. 809).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that a third party may enforce a contract entered into by an agent on behalf of defendant principal. They support this contention on the ground that the face of the instrument supports the inference that the agent intended to bind defendant principal and that the agent disclosed the existence of the principal to the third party. Such a contention may be used, for example, by a third party in support of an action seeking specific performance of a contract or damages for breach of contract from defendant principal. This contention may also be used by a third party seeking to raise the contract with the principal as a defense in an action by the principal. Optional Paragraph C is for use when counsel anticipates an opposing contention that plaintiff third party has elected to proceed against the agent only by allowing the agent to contract in his or her name. Optional Paragraph D is for use when plaintiff third party has obtained a judgment against the agent on the contract and anticipates an opposing contention that the judgment constitutes an election to proceed against the agent only.

If the existence of the agency is disputed, these points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities in §§ 182.30 -182.32, 182.120, as appropriate. If the extent of an agent's authority is disputed, these points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities in §§ 182.30 -182.32, 182.120, as appropriate. If the extent of an agent's authority is disputed, these points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities in §§ 182.33, 182.34, 182.121, as appropriate. If the agency or authority is alleged to have arisen because of the principal's ratification of the agent's act, these points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities in §§ 182.35 and 182.36, as appropriate.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that a third party may enforce a contract entered into by an agent on behalf of defendant principal because the face of the instrument supports the inference that the agent intended to bind the disclosed principal to the contract. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Contract in Agent's Name Binding on Disclosed Principal

Sunset Milling & Grain Co. v. Anderson (1952) 39 Cal. 2d 773, 778, 249 P.2d 24 , was an action to enforce a series of promissory notes executed by defendant and not paid. In his defense, defendant introduced a written agreement signed by an agent of plaintiff that represented that defendant would not be responsible for the collection of feed bills that another person would execute in favor of plaintiff, nor for the promissory notes that plaintiff would require defendant to execute, because plaintiff would credit defendant's account in the amount of the promissory notes executed. The trial court entered a nonsuit in favor of defendant, and plaintiff appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed the judgment on the ground that the instrument was ambiguous in that it was not clearly linked to the notes that were the basis of the action, requiring a trial to resolve the disputed factual issue (39 Cal. 2d 773, 780) . However, the Court held that the instrument was binding on plaintiff, because a disclosed principal may be held liable on a contract made solely in the name of the agent (39 Cal. 2d 773, 778) . Relying as well on Civ. Code § 2337, providing that an instrument within the authority of the agent with which the agent intends to bind the principal is binding if the intent is plainly inferable from the instrument itself, the Court held that the instrument bound plaintiff to the promises in the instrument (39 Cal. 2d 773, 778) . Thus the Court held that, on retrial, plaintiff could not deny the agent's authority to bind it to the agreement (39 Cal. 2d 773, 781) .

Frank Pisano & Assocs. v. Taggart (1972) 29 Cal. App. 3d 1, 105 Cal. Rptr. 414 , was an action to foreclose a mechanic's lien for engineering services performed by plaintiffs incident to the subdivision of property. Defendant had owned the property but later deeded it to his future wife, after which he acted as the owner of the property and represented that she held the property in trust for him. Plaintiffs' agreement was with defendant, although his wife was present during their discussions. The trial court found that the lien was invalid because, among other reasons, the wife did not receive a prelien notice, and entered judgment accordingly. Plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that the lien on the property had been created by defendant as agent for his wife, the owner of the property, and therefore was valid (29 Cal. App. 3d 1, 17) . The court rejected defendant's contention that defendant's wife was entitled to a prelien notice, holding that as it was plainly inferable that defendant intended to bind his wife to the agreement, defendant as agent for his wife had contracted directly with plaintiffs on behalf of his wife, and therefore the wife was not entitled to a prelien notice (29 Cal. App. 3d 1, 17) .

[b] Contract With Agent Is Not Election to Exonerate Disclosed Principal

The facts and procedural background of Geary S., P. & O. R. Co. v. Rolph (1922) 189 Cal. 59, 207 P. 539 , are discussed in § 182.128[3][a]. The Supreme Court noted that when no intent to give the agent exclusive credit is shown, a contract made in the name of the agent, with knowledge of the agency and the identity of the principal, is in legal effect the contract of the principal when made within the scope of the agent's authority. Thus, the Court held for the purposes of retrial of the action that the knowledge of plaintiff that defendant was acting as agent for defendant principal would not preclude the liability of defendant principal as long as the circumstances of the case do not show that an exclusive credit was given to the agent (189 Cal. 59, 66) .

[c] Unsatisfied Judgment Against Agent Does Not Discharge Disclosed Principal

In Clifton Cattle Co. v. Thompson (1974) 43 Cal. App. 3d 11, 117 Cal. Rptr. 500 , plaintiff sued to recover the contract price of cattle sold by plaintiff and received by defendant principal. Defendant principal had previously purchased cattle from plaintiff through an agent, and plaintiff had verified defendant principal's credit at that time. Thereafter, the agent purchased more cattle on consignment and plaintiff delivered the cattle to defendant principal, but plaintiff was not paid. Plaintiff brought an action against the agent and obtained a default judgment against him, and defendant principal argued that the judgment against the agent constituted an election by plaintiff to recover against the agent only. The trial court entered judgment in favor of plaintiff, and defendant principal appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, rejecting the contention of defendant principal that plaintiff had elected to hold only the agent by obtaining a judgment against the agent (43 Cal. App. 3d 11, 16) . The court held that an election would be found only if the judgment against the agent was satisfied (43 Cal. App. 3d 11, 16) . The court distinguished the case before it, in which plaintiff knew the identity of defendant principal and the fact of the agency relationship, from the case of an undisclosed principal. The court held that when the principal is undisclosed, a judgment against the agent with knowledge of the agency will constitute a binding election to proceed against the agent alone, while in the case of a disclosed agency the third person has a contract with the principal unless he or she chooses the sole responsibility of the agent at the time the contract is made (43 Cal. App. 3d 11, 17) .

In Zingheim v. Marshall (1967) 249 Cal. App. 2d 736, 57 Cal. Rptr. 809 , plaintiff brought an action for breach of contract against defendant principal based on the failure to pay amounts due under a contract to purchase a radio station. Plaintiff had contracted to sell a Mexican radio station to defendant agent, acting for defendant principal, with the purchase price dependent in part on advertising revenues of the station. At all times in the transaction the status of defendant principal was known to all the parties. Plaintiff brought an action against defendant agent alleging that the contract was breached because the payments made on the contract were insufficient because of increased advertising revenues, but the trial court found for defendant agent on that point. When defendant principal stopped paying on the contract, plaintiff sued both defendants on the contract and recovered a judgment against both. Defendant appealed, arguing that plaintiff had elected to pursue only defendant agent by filing the first action against defendant agent alone.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that plaintiff had not elected not to look to defendant principal (249 Cal. App. 2d 736, 747) . The court held that recovery of judgment against the agent of a disclosed or partially disclosed principal for failure of performance of a contract to which the agent is a party does not thereby discharge the principal (249 Cal. App. 2d 736, 748) . The court noted that the agent is ordinarily a surety for the principal, and that if the agent is separately liable, only the satisfaction of a judgment against the agent terminates the liability of the principal (249 Cal. App. 2d 736, 748) .

PLAINTIFF MAY ENFORCE THE CONTRACT ENTERED INTO BY THE [DEFENDANT] AGENT ON BEHALF OF DEFENDANT PRINCIPAL BECAUSE AN UNDISCLOSED PRINCIPAL IS LIABLE FOR THE ACTS OF AN AGENT PERFORMED OR COMMITTED WITHIN THE SCOPE OF THE AGENT'S AUTHORITY.

Undisclosed Principal Liable for Contracts Executed by Authorized Agent. An undisclosed principal is liable for the acts of his or her agent performed or committed within the scope of the agent's authority, including ordinary contracts and obligations of his or her agent with third persons although made in the name of the agent and not purporting to be other than his or her own personal obligation or contract (*Shamlian v. [a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that a third party may enforce against an undisclosed principal a contract entered into by an agent in his or her own name with a third party when the agent acted within his or her authority. Such a contention may be used, for example, in an action by a third party to enforce a contract, such as an action for specific performance, an action for damages for breach of contract, or an action for declaratory relief regarding the rights and obligations of the parties.

If the existence of the agency is disputed, these points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities in §§ 182.30 -182.32, as appropriate. If the extent of an agent's authority is disputed, these points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities in §§ 182.33 and 182.34, as appropriate. If an agency or the agent's authority is alleged to have arisen because of the principal's ratification of the agent's act, these points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities in §§ 182.35 and 182.36, as appropriate.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that a third party may enforce against an undisclosed principal a contract entered into by an agent in his or her own name with a third party when the agent acted within the scope of his or her authority. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the point of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss facts showing that the agent entered into the contract in his or her own name without disclosing the agency or the identity of the principal, and that the agent acted within the scope of his or her authority in entering into the contract.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Undisclosed Principal Liable for Contracts Executed by Authorized Agent

In Shamlian v. Wells (1925) 197 Cal. 716, 242 P. 483 , plaintiff sued to recover the value of the use and possession of land wrongfully possessed by the agent of defendant principal. Plaintiff owned a parcel of vineyard land that he had entered into an agreement to sell to another, who assigned his rights under the contract of sale to defendant principal without the plaintiff's knowledge. The agreement to sell was terminated in early 1921, and plaintiff demanded possession, but defendant agent stayed in possession through the growing season, harvested the crops, and appropriated the crops for the benefit of defendant principal. The trial court found that defendant principal's right to possession of the crops grown on the parcel terminated with the sale agreement and awarded plaintiff the value of the use and possession of the land. Defendant principal appealed from the judgment, arguing that he should not be bound, because he was not a party to the contract.

The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that defendant principal was liable to plaintiff as the undisclosed principal of the party who was wrongfully in possession of plaintiff's land (197 Cal. 716, 721-722) . The Court held that under Civ. Code § 2330, which provides that the liabilities that would accrue to an agent acting on his or her own behalf accrue to the principal from transactions within the agent's authority, an undisclosed principal is liable for the authorized acts of his or her agent. The Court held that defendant principal was liable for the wrongful act of his agent in taking the crops from the land that the agent wrongfully possessed. The Court held that the agent would have been so liable had the acts been done in his own behalf, and the principal who retained the fruits of the agent's wrong could not escape liability therefor (197 Cal. 716, 721) .

Geary S., P. & O. R. Co. v. Rolph (1922) 189 Cal. 59, 207 P. 539 , was an action by plaintiff to recover the amount due on an assessment for the unpaid portion of the subscription price of plaintiff's stock. The complaint alleged that the stock was registered in the name of defendant agent as trustee, but that defendant principal was the true owner of the stock, and that defendant agent had no interest in or title to the stock. The trial court found that plaintiff's books at all times listed defendant agent as the owner of the stock, and made no other finding on the issue of the ownership of the stock by defendant principal, despite the uncontradicted evidence that defendant agent endorsed all dividend checks to defendant principal. The trial court entered judgment for defendant principal, and plaintiff appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed, holding that defendant principal was liable for defendant agent's act in assuming the obligation to pay the balance remaining unpaid on the subscription price, because defendant agent assumed the obligation in carrying out the agency to hold the stock for the benefit of defendant principal (189 Cal. 59, 64) . The Court held that a principal is responsible to third persons for the ordinary contracts and obligations of his or her agent made with third persons in the course of the business of the agency and within the scope of the agent's power as such, although made in the name of the agent and not purporting to be other than his or her own personal obligation or contract (189 Cal. 59, 64) .

Agent Has No Authority to Perpetrate Fraud on Principal. An agent can never have authority, either actual or ostensible, to do an act which is, and is known or suspected by the person with whom he or she deals with to be, a fraud upon the principal (Civ. Code § 2306; Saks v. Charity Mission Baptist Church (2001) 90 Cal. App. 4th 1116, 1137-1140, 110 Cal. Rptr. 2d 45).

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that an agent had ostensible authority to perform specified acts on behalf of the principal, and that the principal should therefore be bound to a third party by the agent's acts done within that ostensible authority, when the acts in question would constitute a fraud on the principal and the person seeking to hold the principal liable was aware or suspected that the act would constitute such a fraud [see Civ. Code § 2306]. For example, use of these points and authorities would be appropriate when seeking to relieve a principal of liability to a third party when there has been collusion between the principal's agent and the third party to engage in acts detrimental to the principal.

When appropriate, counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Counsel should combine these points and authorities with points and authorities supporting the contention that the acts in question did in fact constitute a fraud upon the principal. For points and authorities relating to fraud in general, see Ch. 105, Fraud and Deceit . For pleadings relating to actions for fraud, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 269, Fraud and Deceit (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

In Saks v. Charity Mission Baptist Church (2001) 90 Cal. App. 4th 1116, 110 Cal. Rptr. 2d 45 , an investor brought an action for breach of contract and fraud against a church, attempting to hold the church liable for promissory notes signed by its pastor. The pastor had been involved with a developer in various real estate schemes, and in the case at issue, signed two promissory notes made payable to plaintiff after he advanced money to purchase property in the church's name. The church contended in its defense that it was being used by the other parties as a conduit to obtain a loan or grant from a city agency, and that as soon as the anticipated loan was received, the parties planned to use the city's funds to repay plaintiff and immediately transfer the property to a partnership owned by the developer, the investor, and the pastor. The jury found that the church was liable on the promissory notes and the trial court entered judgment for plaintiff.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that the jury verdicts in favor of plaintiff were unsupported by the evidence. With respect to the fraud cause of action, the only misrepresentations attributable to the church were the pastor's statements to the effect that the notes would be paid off within 30 days. The court examined whether, due to the position of authority bestowed on the pastor by the church, the church should be held liable for the pastor's actions in encouraging the plaintiff to go through with the real estate transaction and assuring the plaintiff that the money was available and would be repaid within the time specified on the notes. The court noted that in an appropriate case, the doctrines of respondeat superior, ostensible authority, or equitable estoppel can provide a ground for imposition of liability on a fraud theory. However, the court concluded that pursuant to Civ. Code § 2306, an agent can never have authority to do an act which is, and is known to the person dealt with, to be a fraud on the principal. In this case, the developer told the plaintiff investor that the sole point of putting the property in the name of the church was to obtain funds from the public treasury, and that as soon as the funds were secured, title would be transferred to a private partnership. Although the plaintiff may have been unaware of the lawfulness or unlawfulness of the proposal to obtain money through a false front, he was not ignorant of the ultimate goal of the parties' arrangement: to benefit the individuals through use of the church's name. By his own admission, he acquiesced in a scheme to wrongfully use the name of an eleemosynary corporation to obtain financial benefit for himself and his partners. The mere fact that the plot was unsuccessful did not justify transferring the financial burden of the scheme to a charitable corporation which stood to gain nothing from it (90 Cal. App. 4th 1116, 1137-1140) .

§ 182.130 Opposing Contention That Agent Acted Within Ostensible Authority [Civ. Code § 2317]--Third Party's Reliance on Principal's Conduct Was Negligent

[The following may be combined with the contentions supported by the points and authorities set forth in §§ 182.37 -182.43 and 182.131, as appropriate, and may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

_____ [DEFENDANT or PLAINTIFF] AGENT DID NOT HAVE OSTENSIBLE AUTHORITY TO _____ [specify acts performed, e.g., NEGOTIATE CONTRACTS] AS AGENT FOR _____ [DEFENDANT or PLAINTIFF] PRINCIPAL, BECAUSE AN OSTENSIBLE AUTHORITY IS NOT CREATED IN AN AGENT WHEN A THIRD PARTY NEGLIGENTLY RELIES ON THE ACTS OR NEGLECT OF A PRINCIPAL.

A. Principal's Liability for Acts of Ostensible Agent. A principal is bound by the acts of an agent under a merely ostensible authority to those persons only who have in good faith, and without want of ordinary care, incurred a liability or parted with value, on the faith thereof (Civ. Code § 2334).

B. Third Person's Duty of Inquiry Regarding Authority of Agent. When the conduct of the principal warrants further inquiry or when the third party is dealing with an assumed agent and the elements of ostensible authority are not established, the third party is bound at his or her peril to ascertain not only the fact of the agency but the nature and extent of the authority, if the principal is to be held liable (Ernst v. Searle (1933) 218 Cal. 233, 240, 22 P.2d 715 ; United States Credit Bureau, Inc. v. Cheney (1965) 235 Cal. App. 2d 357, 361, 45 Cal. Rptr. 525).

C. Third Person's Negligent Reliance Precludes Recovery Based on Ostensible Authority. For a third party to recover against the principal based on the act of an ostensible agent, the third person must not be guilty of negligence in relying on the agent's apparent authority (Civ. Code § 2334; People v. Surety Ins. Co. (1982) 136 Cal. App. 3d 556, 562, 186 Cal. Rptr. 385).

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a contention that an agent had ostensible authority to perform certain acts on behalf of defendant principal and that the principal should therefore be bound to a third party by the agent's acts done within that ostensible authority. The ground of opposition set forth is that the third party was negligent in relying on the acts of principal alleged to have been the basis for the creation of an ostensible authority in the agent. These points and authorities may also be used to oppose the contention that an ostensible agency was created, because the fact of the agency need not be opposed as long as the specific authority allegedly conferred is successfully opposed. The argument supported by this memorandum may be raised by a defendant principal who allegedly acted as though his or her alleged agent had a greater degree of authority than was actually the case, when plaintiff third party should have been able to ascertain in the exercise of ordinary care the true extent of the agent's authority. These points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities in § 182.131 when counsel wishes to contend alternatively that ostensible authority was not created, because the third party did not actually rely on any act of the principal.

When counsel also opposes the contention that an actual agency exists, these points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities in §§ 182.37 -182.39, as appropriate [see Tomerlin v. Canadian Indem. Co. (1964) 61 Cal. 2d 638, 644, 39 Cal. Rptr. 731, 394 P.2d 571 (evidence may support findings of actual and ostensible agency)]. If alternatively opposing the contention that an agent had actual authority to perform certain acts, counsel may combine the points and authorities in §§ 182.40 and 182.41, as appropriate, with these points and authorities. When alternatively opposing the contention that an agency or authority arose because of the principal's ratification of the agent's acts, the points and authorities in §§ 182.42 and 182.43, as appropriate, may be combined with these points and authorities. The points and authorities in §§ 182.135 -182.138 may be combined with these points and authorities when counsel wishes to oppose a third party's recovery against the principal based on the agent's alleged ostensible authority.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that an agent did not have ostensible authority to act on behalf of defendant principal. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss facts showing that plaintiff's reliance on the apparent authority of the agent allegedly conferred by the conduct of defendant was negligent, and the facts that were known to plaintiff that should have put him or her under a duty to inquire into the true extent of the agent's authority.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities in §§ 182.120 and 182.121.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Third Person's Duty of Inquiry Regarding Authority of Agent

Ernst v. Searle (1933) 218 Cal. 233, 22 P.2d 715 , was an action to quiet title on a parcel of property that defendant Searle, plaintiff principals' agent, had purported to sell to defendant third party. The agent had suggested to plaintiff principals that they might want to exchange a parcel of property for another parcel, and plaintiff principals executed a written agreement to authorize the agent to negotiate the exchange. The agent interested defendant third party in the purchase of the property and executed an agreement of sale with defendant. The agent then obtained a deed from plaintiff principals by representing that defendant third party was the owner of property that would be exchanged and that the deed was necessary to effect the exchange. The agent obtained the purchase price from the escrow company, cashed the check, and absconded. When plaintiff principals discovered these facts, they sued to quiet title on the San Francisco property on the ground that the deed to the property was not validly delivered. Defendant third party argued that the agent was ostensibly authorized to sell the property because he was entrusted with the deed and that therefore plaintiffs were bound by the sale. The trial court entered judgment for plaintiff principals, and defendant appealed.

The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that the agent did not have ostensible authority to deliver the deed (218 Cal. 233, 236) . The Court noted that under Civ. Code § 2334, ostensible authority is based on the doctrine of estoppel and requires a representation by the principal, justifiable reliance thereon by the third party, and change of position or injury resulting from the reliance. The Court also noted that the only representation made by plaintiff principals was their entrustment of the deed to their agent (218 Cal. 233, 237) . The Court held that the entrustment did not amount to a representation of any specific authority in the agent, save that an agency existed, and that it remained for the third party to inquire into the extent of the authority (218 Cal. 233, 237) . The Court held that, as a reasonable inquiry would have disclosed the limited authority granted to the agent, no ostensible authority to deliver the deed existed (218 Cal. 233, 237-238) . On rehearing, the Court expanded its discussion to note that persons dealing with an assumed agent are bound at their peril, if they would hold the principal, to ascertain not only the fact of the agency but the nature and the extent of the authority (218 Cal. 233, 240) .

United States Credit Bureau, Inc. v. Cheney (1965) 235 Cal. App. 2d 357, 45 Cal. Rptr. 525 , was an action to recover the amount due under a contract to provide electricity to a ranch. Defendant principal's father had applied for electrical power to be supplied to a ranch owned by defendant principal, signing the application in defendant principal's name as his partner, without the knowledge or authorization of defendant principal. Eight months later the father applied for power for a ranch he leased individually and signed the application in both his name and defendant principal's. Defendant principal did not have any ownership interest in the second ranch and did not authorize his father to use his name in the application for the supply of power to it. When the power bills were not paid, plaintiffs brought this action as assignee of the power company against defendant principal, arguing that his father had ostensible authority to contract on behalf of defendant principal because of the prior application on defendant principal's behalf. The trial court found that defendant principal's father never had authority to bind defendant principal to the contract to supply power and entered judgment in favor of defendant principal, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that the evidence supported the trial court's finding that plaintiff had acted at its peril in not inquiring into the nature and extent of the father's authority to act for defendant principal (235 Cal. App. 2d 357, 361) . The court noted that ostensible authority is established when a third party dealing with an agent reasonably or justifiably held a belief engendered by the conduct of the principal that the agent had the assumed authority (235 Cal. App. 2d 357, 360) . However, the court held that when the conduct of the principal warrants further inquiry, the third party is bound at his or her peril to ascertain the nature and extent of the authority if the principal is to be held liable (235 Cal. App. 2d 357, 361) . The court held that plaintiff should have inquired into defendant principal's father's authority regarding the second parcel, given the different manner in which the application was signed (235 Cal. App. 2d 357, 361) . The court refused to hold that plaintiff third party held a reasonable and justifiable belief in the father's authority to bind defendant principal as a matter of law. The court noted that while a prior act of an agent that was approved by the principal may establish ostensible authority, it does not conclusively establish it as a matter of law (235 Cal. App. 2d 357, 361) .

[b] Third Person's Negligent Reliance Precludes Recovery Based on Ostensible Authority

People v. Surety Ins. Co. (1982) 136 Cal. App. 3d 556, 186 Cal. Rptr. 385 , arose from defendant principal's motion to vacate the order of the court forfeiting an appeal bond that had been posted with plaintiff third party. Defendant principal had executed a written power of attorney authorizing an agent to write bail bonds and appeal bonds on its behalf. In 1977, a revocation of the power of attorney was filed in the office of the Los Angeles County Clerk, acting for plaintiff third party. The revocation was notarized, with the notary's seal showing an expiration date of 1981. In 1979, an appeal bond was posted for the release of a prisoner, with defendant principal listed as the surety, executed by the agent whose power of attorney had been revoked, and notarized by a seal showing a 1977 expiration date. When the prisoner failed to appear, the trial court ordered the bond forfeited and denied defendant's motion to vacate the forfeiture and exonerate the bond, and defendant appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that defendant could not be held liable for the act of the former agent based on the agent's ostensible authority (136 Cal. App. 3d 556, 562) . The court held that before recovery may be had against a principal for the act of an ostensible agent, the third person must not be guilty of negligence in relying on the agent's apparent authority (136 Cal. App. 3d 556, 562) . The court held that plaintiff third party in accepting the bond had been guilty of negligence because it had on file the revocation of the agent's authority, and if the face of the bond had been examined it would have been clear that something was amiss because the notary's commission had expired two years before the bond was executed (136 Cal. App. 3d 556, 562) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Third Person's Duty of Inquiry Regarding Authority of Agent

The facts and procedural background of South Sacramento Drayage Co. v. Campbell Soup Co. (1963) 220 Cal. App. 2d 851, 34 Cal. Rptr. 137 , are discussed in § 182.41[3][a]. Plaintiff third party contended that the local employee of defendant principal had the ostensible authority to enter into a contract with plaintiff for a 15-year period because the local employee had entered into other contracts with plaintiff. However, the court rejected this contention, noting that the only contracts entered into by the employee were for day-by-day or load-by-load contracts, and that the only other term contracts had been subject to the approval of company officials in New Jersey (220 Cal. App. 2d 851, 857) . The court held that plaintiff was under an obligation to inquire into the extent of the employee's authority if the principal was to be held liable for the acts of the agent under an ostensible authority, and plaintiff's failure to do so precluded a finding that ostensible authority existed (220 Cal. App. 2d 851, 857-858) .

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a contention that an agent had ostensible authority to perform certain acts on behalf of defendant principal and that the principal should therefore be bound by the agent's acts

done within that ostensible authority. The ground of opposition set forth is that the third party did not actually rely on the acts of defendant principal. The argument supported by this memorandum may be used by a defendant principal who allegedly acted in a manner that established an ostensible authority in his or her agent. These points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities in § 182.130 when counsel wishes to contend alternatively that ostensible authority was not created, because the third party was negligent in relying on the acts of the principal.

When counsel also opposes the contention that an actual agency exists, these points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities in §§ 182.37 -182.39, as appropriate [see Tomerlin v. Canadian Indem. Co. (1964) 61 Cal. 2d 638, 644, 39 Cal. Rptr. 731, 394 P.2d 571 (evidence may support findings of actual and ostensible agency)]. If alternatively opposing the contention that an agent had actual authority to perform certain acts, counsel may combine the points and authorities in §§ 182.40 and 182.41, as appropriate, with these points and authorities. When alternatively opposing the contention that an agency or authority arose because of the principal's ratification of the agent's acts, counsel may combine the points and authorities in §§ 182.42 and 182.43, as appropriate, with these points and authorities. The points and authorities in §§ 182.135 -182.138 may be combined with these points and authorities when counsel wishes to oppose a third party's recovery against the principal based on the agent's alleged ostensible authority.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that an agent did not have ostensible authority to act on behalf of defendant principal. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities in §§ 182.120 and 182.121.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Reliance of Third Party Necessary for Ostensible Authority to Exist

Chartered Bank of London v. Chrysler Corp. (1981) 115 Cal. App. 3d 755, 171 Cal. Rptr. 748 , was an action for conversion in which plaintiff third party alleged that defendant principal wrongfully took possession of a boat that was subject to a security interest in favor of plaintiff. The security was allegedly created by a conditional sales agreement executed by a company that shared space with an agent of defendant principal who had possession of the boat. Neither the buyer of the boat nor the company ever had possession of the boat, and no payment was made to defendant or its agent. Plaintiff alleged that the company that shared space with defendant principal's agent had the ostensible authority to sell the boat to the buyer, but the buyer did not testify. The trial court found that no ostensible authority existed, and entered judgment for defendant. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that plaintiff never had a security interest in the boat, because the debtor, the buyer of the boat, never obtained an ownership interest in the boat (115 Cal. App. 3d 755, 760) . The court rejected plaintiff's argument that the company that shared space with defendant principal's agent was defendant's ostensible agent, noting that ostensible authority depends on the third party's reliance on the principal's acts. The court held that plaintiff's failure to produce any evidence that the buyer relied on defendant's conduct precluded a finding of ostensible authority (115 Cal. App. 3d 755, 764) .

[The following may be combined with the contentions supported by the points and authorities set forth in §§ 182.37 -182.43, and 182.130 and 182.131, as appropriate, and may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

_____ [DEFENDANT or PLAINTIFF] AGENT DID NOT HAVE OSTENSIBLE AUTHORITY TO CREATE AN OVERDRAFT AS AGENT FOR _____ [DEFENDANT or PLAINTIFF] PRINCIPAL, BECAUSE THE AUTHORITY TO COLLECT MONEY AND DRAW AND ENDORSE CHECKS DOES NOT CONFER AN OSTENSIBLE AUTHORITY TO CREATE AN OVERDRAFT.

Collecting Agent Not Ostensibly Authorized to Create Overdraft. When a principal authorizes an agent to collect money and draw and endorse checks, such authorization does not confer ostensible authority on the agent to create an overdraft (Torrance Nat'l Bank v. Enesco Fed. Credit Union (1955) 134 Cal. App. 2d 316, 320, 327, 285 P.2d 737).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a contention that an agent had ostensible authority to create an overdraft in the principal's account. The ground of opposition set forth is that the ageny's authorization to collect money and draw and endorse checks on behalf of defendant principal did not create an ostensible authority to create an overdraft in defendant principal's account. This argument may be used, for example, as a defense by defendant principal in an action brought by a bank to recover the amount of the overdraft created by the agent.

These points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities in §§ 182.130 and 182.131 when counsel wishes to contend alternatively that an agent did not have ostensible authority for the reasons set forth in those forms. When counsel also opposes the contention that an actual agency exists, these points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities in §§ 182.37 -182.39, as appropriate [see Tomerlin v. Canadian Indem. Co. (1964) 61 Cal. 2d 638, 644, 39 Cal. Rptr. 731, 394 P.2d 571 (evidence may support findings of actual and ostensible agency)]. If alternatively opposing the contention that an agent had actual authority to perform certain acts, counsel may combine the points and authorities in §§ 182.40 and 182.41, as appropriate, with these points and authorities. When alternatively opposing the contention that an agency or authority arose because of the principal's ratification of the agent's acts, counsel may combine the points and authorities in §§ 182.42 and 182.43, as appropriate, with these points and authorities. The points and authorities in §§ 182.135 -182.138 may be combined with these points and authorities when counsel wishes to oppose a third party's recovery against the principal based on the agent's alleged ostensible authority.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that an agent did not have ostensible authority to create an overdraft in the principal's account. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Collecting Agent Not Ostensibly Authorized to Create Overdraft

Torrance Nat'l Bank v. Enesco Fed. Credit Union (1955) 134 Cal. App. 2d 316, 285 P.2d 737 , was an action by plaintiff third party, a bank, to recover the amount of an overdraft created when the treasurer of defendant principal drew a check on defendant's account for more than the amount in the account. The treasurer had the express authority as agent to sign all checks and drafts of defendant principal and used this authority to conduct a check-cashing service for the employees of defendant despite defendant's direction that its funds not be used for cashing paychecks. In running the service, the agent had arranged with plaintiff that the check drawn by the agent would not be cashed but held in a teller's drawer until the checks that were cashed by the agent could be deposited to maintain defendant's balance. The agent was robbed of the $30,000 on the occasion at issue here, so plaintiff bank sued defendant to recover the amount of the overdraft created when the check was charged to defendant's account. Defendant cross complained for the amount that was in the account that was applied to the agent's check on the ground that the check was not drawn in an authorized manner and therefore should not have been cashed by plaintiff. The trial court entered judgment for plaintiff, and defendant principal appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that the agent's authorization to sign checks and drafts did not empower him to create an overdraft in defendant's account (134 Cal. App. 2d 316, 320) . Citing Civ. Code § 2317, the court recognized that an ostensible authority is such as a principal, intentionally or by want of ordinary care, causes or allows a third party to believe the agent to possess (134 Cal. App. 2d 316, 321-322) . The court noted that the authorization given plaintiff here contained no language authorizing the agent to borrow for the account of defendant and that there was no agreement by defendant to repay to plaintiff any overdraft created by the agent (134 Cal. App. 2d 316, 321) . The court also held that there was no evidence in the record tending to prove any act or omission on the part of defendant principal on which plaintiff could reasonably have based its belief that the agent had authority to overdraw defendant principal's account (134 Cal. App. 2d 316, 325) . As the check was unauthorized under either an actual or ostensible authority, the court held that defendant principal should not be held responsible for the whole or any part of the check (134 Cal. App. 2d 316, 327, 328) .

§ 182.133 Opposing Contention That Knowledge of or Notice to Agent Imputed to Principal [Civ. Code § 2332]--Principal Not Chargeable With Knowledge or Notice of Agent Regarding Matters Not Within Agent's Authority

[The following may be combined with the contentions supported by the points and authorities set forth in §§ 182.37 -182.43, and 182.130 and 182.131, as appropriate, and may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT PRINCIPAL IS NOT CHARGEABLE WITH OR BOUND BY THE KNOWLEDGE OF OR NOTICE TO THE [DEFENDANT] AGENT, BECAUSE THE PRINCIPAL IS NOT CHARGEABLE WITH NOR BOUND BY THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE AGENT REGARDING MATTERS THAT ARE NOT WITHIN THE SCOPE OF THE AGENT'S AUTHORITY.

A. Notice to Either Principal or Agent Imputed to Both. [See § 182.122[1], Paragraph A.]

B. Knowledge or Notice Imputed Only Regarding Matters Within Scope of Agency. The knowledge of an agent is considered and imputed as the knowledge of the principal only when the agent acquires it in the course of the agency; the principal is not chargeable with or bound by knowledge of or notice to an agent regarding matters not within the scope of the agent's authority (Redman v. Walters (1979) 88 Cal. App. 3d 448, 454, 152 Cal. Rptr. 42 ; J.A. Eck Co. v. Coachella Valley Onion Growers' Ass'n (1929) 102 Cal. App 1, 9, 282 P. 408).

[2] Comments

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a contention that notice to or knowledge of an agent may be imputed to the principal. The ground of opposition set forth is that a principal is not chargeable with or bound by the knowledge of or notice to his or her agent regarding matters that are not within the scope of the agent's authority. Such a contention may be used when a third party seeks to impute to defendant principal some knowledge that is outside the scope of the agent's authority and that the agent would therefore have no duty or reason to communicate to defendant principal. For example, this contention may be used as a defense by a principal when a third party alleges that a principal had knowledge of the terms of a contract that an agent entered into without authority from the principal and that because of this knowledge, the principal should be bound by the contract [see J.A. Eck Co. v. Coachella Valley Onion Growers' Ass'n (1929) 102 Cal. App 1, 9, 282 P. 408] .

If also opposing the existence of an actual agency, counsel may combine these points and authorities with the points and authorities in §§ 182.37 -182.39, as appropriate. If opposing the existence of an agent's actual or ostensible authority to perform certain acts, counsel may combine these points and authorities with the points and authorities in §§ 182.40 and 182.41, and 130 and 131, as appropriate. If opposing the contention that an agency or authority allegedly arose because of the principal's ratification of the agent's acts, counsel may combine these points and authorities with the points and authorities in §§ 182.42 and 182.43, as appropriate.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that knowledge of or notice to an agent may not be imputed to the principal. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss facts showing that the agent was not acting within the scope of his or her authority when the knowledge was acquired or the notice given.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities in § 182.122.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Knowledge or Notice Imputed Only Regarding Matters Within Scope of Agency

Redman v. Walters (1979) 88 Cal. App. 3d 448, 152 Cal. Rptr. 42 , was an action for legal malpractice instituted after plaintiff's lawsuit was dismissed for failure to proceed to trial. Defendant had been a member of the firm that had represented plaintiff, but had never personally participated in plaintiff's lawsuit and had left the partnership well before plaintiff's action had been dismissed. However, no substitution of attorneys was ever filed, and plaintiff never consented to a change of attorneys. Defendant contended that plaintiff, as principal, should be charged with the knowledge of the remaining members of the firm that defendant had left the partnership. The trial court granted defendant's motion for summary judgment, and plaintiff appealed from the order dismissing the action regarding defendant.

The court of appeal reversed, rejecting the reasoning of the trial court that the remaining partners, as plaintiff's agents, had knowledge that defendant had left the partnership and that plaintiff as principal would possess imputed knowledge of that fact (88 Cal. App. 3d 448, 452) . The court held that the knowledge of the agent is imputed to the principal only if the agent acquires the knowledge in the course of the agency (88 Cal. App. 3d 448, 454) . The court held that the decision of the partnership to dissolve and continue plaintiff's representation by two of its members was not within the authority conferred by plaintiff (88 Cal. App. 3d 448, 454) . The court therefore concluded that a triable issue of fact existed concerning whether or not defendant was part of the partnership that plaintiff had retained (88 Cal. App. 3d 448, 455) .

J.A. Eck Co. v. Coachella Valley Onion Growers' Ass'n (1929) 102 Cal. App 1, 282 P. 408 , was an action to recover damages for defendant's breach of a contract executed by defendant's agent. Plaintiff third party had before it the agent's written authorization to contract on behalf of defendant, and the contracts executed by the agent were in excess of the written authority granted in that the price to be paid defendant was less than that authorized. Plaintiff argued that the agent's knowledge of the terms of the contract should be imputed to defendant, and that defendant should therefore be held to have ratified the contract by failing to repudiate it within a reasonable time. The trial court found the contract unenforceable, and entered judgment for defendant that plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that the terms of the unauthorized contract could not be imputed to defendant, because the knowledge of the agent is not imputed to the principal regarding matters not within the scope of the agent's authority (102 Cal. App. 1, 9) . The court reasoned that to impute to a principal knowledge of the terms of an unauthorized contract and to infer a ratification from the failure to repudiate the contract would give an agent the power to bind the principal to any course of conduct outside the authority actually conferred (102 Cal. App. 1, 9) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Knowledge or Notice Imputed Only Regarding Matters Within Scope of Agency

In Herman v. Los Angeles County Metro. Transp. Auth. (1999) 71 Cal. App. 4th 819, 84 Cal. Rptr. 2d 144 , a county agency mailed a letter to a public employee's attorney indicating that the employee was being terminated. The letter contained a required warning that the employee had to file any petition seeking judicial review of his firing within 90 days of the date of mailing of the termination letter [Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.6]. The employee filed his administrative mandamus petition a few days beyond the 90-day limitations period. The employer demurred to the petition, arguing it was barred by the limitations period in Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.6 because service on the lawyer satisfied the statute's service requirement. The employee contended that the statute requires the termination notice to be sent to the party, and that sending it to the party's lawyer could not be a substitute for service on the party. The trial court sustained the demurrer with leave to amend. When the employee could not amend his petition to demonstrate compliance with the statute, the trial court granted the employer's dismissal motion on the same ground and denied the petition.

The court of appeal reversed. It concluded that the 90-day limitations period applies only if the required notice is served on the party, and that service on the party's lawyer does not trigger the 90-day period. The court reviewed the general agency principle that an attorney is the client's agent, and that the agent's knowledge is imputed to the principal, but determined that it does not apply when the principal must have actual knowledge. The court concluded that the express language of Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.6, the overall statutory context, its legislative history, and the lack of burden, compelled the conclusion that service on the party's lawyer did not trigger the limitations period (71 Cal. App. 4th 819, 828-830) .

Rptr. 42*).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a contention that a principal is chargeable with and bound by knowledge of or notice to an agent. The ground of opposition set forth is that the third party did not deal with the principal or his or her agent and therefore cannot take advantage of the rule imputing an agent's knowledge to the principal. Such an argument may be used in any action in which an opposing party argues that the principal should be held to possess imputed knowledge of some fact. For example, it may be used as a defense by a principal if a third party seeks to hold the principal liable based on the principal's alleged imputed knowledge of an agent's actions.

If also opposing the existence of an actual agency, counsel may combine these points and authorities with the points and authorities in §§ 182.37 -182.39, as appropriate. If opposing the existence of an agent's actual or ostensible authority to perform certain acts, counsel may combine these points and authorities with the points and authorities in §§ 182.40 and 182.41, and 182.130 and 182.131, as appropriate. If opposing the contention that an agency or authority allegedly arose because of the principal's ratification of the agent's acts, counsel may combine these points and authorities with the points and authorities in §§ 182.42 and 182.43, as appropriate.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that knowledge or notice of an agent is not charged to the principal when the party claiming that the principal is bound by the agent's knowledge has had no dealings with the principal through an agent or otherwise. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss facts showing that the third party contending that the agent's knowledge should be imputed to the principal did not deal with the principal through an agent or otherwise.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities in § 182.122.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Knowledge or Notice Imputed Only When Third Party Deals With Principal Through Agent

Hale v. Depaoli (1948) 33 Cal. 2d 228, 201 P.2d 1 , was an action to recover personal injury damages that resulted when plaintiff leaned against a porch railing that gave way, causing plaintiff to fall and injure herself. There were two causes of action, one for negligence in the construction of the railing, and the second for fraudulent concealment of a known defect. Defendant, as a partner in the firm that constructed the house, had sold it and then repurchased it and leased it to plaintiff's parents. The complaint alleged as the second cause of action that as lessor, defendant had a duty to warn plaintiff of known dangers, and that defendant should be held to have imputed knowledge of the unsafe construction techniques used in building the railing because of his status as principal to the agents who built the railing. The trial court granted a nonsuit, and plaintiff appealed.

The Supreme Court affirmed the nonsuit against defendant as to the second cause of action, holding that the knowledge of the agent builders could not be imputed to defendant as lessor, because defendant as builder had no dealings with plaintiff (33 Cal. 2d 228, 232-233) . The Court held that imputation of knowledge is based on the necessities of general commercial relationships and that when a principal acts through an agent, a third person dealing with the agent is entitled to rely on the agent's knowledge and notice and it binds the principal (33 Cal. 2d 228, 232) . However, the Court also held that while the principal may be bound by the knowledge of an agent when a third person has dealt with the principal or another agent, the principal cannot be so bound when the third person has had no dealings with the principal through an agent or otherwise (33 Cal. 2d 228, 232) . The Court held that defendant, in his capacity as builder, had no transactions or dealings with plaintiff, and that therefore defendant's knowledge as builder of the defect could not be the basis of plaintiff's action against defendant as lessor (33 Cal. 2d 228, 232-233) .

In Lucas v. Pollock (1992) 7 Cal. App. 4th 668, 8 Cal. Rptr. 2d 918 , migratory farmworkers and their survivors attempted to hold a landowner liable for conditions on his property that allegedly had led to a fire in buildings in which the workers were living while working on a nearby property. The landowner denied any knowledge of the presence of the farmworkers on his property. The plaintiffs argued that the owner's real estate agent knew of their presence and that this knowledge should be imputed to the owner.

The trial court and the court of appeal both rejected the argument. The rule of imputed knowledge from agent to principal is based on the necessities of general commercial relationships. If a principal acts through an agent, a third person who deals with the agent is entitled to rely on the agent's knowledge and notice, and that knowledge and notice binds the principal. The rule has never been applied to protect one who has had no dealings with the principal, through an agent or otherwise. As the farmworkers had had no dealings with the owner, there was no basis for imputing anything known by the real estate agent to the owner (7 Cal. App. 4th 668, 674-675) .

The facts and procedural background of Redman v. Walters (1979) 88 Cal. App. 3d 448, 152 Cal. Rptr. 42 , are discussed in § 182.133[3][a]. The court held that the rule charging the principal with the knowledge of or notice to an agent does not apply to protect one who has not dealt with the principal either directly or through an agent [quoting Hale v. Depaoli (1948) 33 Cal. 2d 228, 232, 201 P.2d 1] . The court held that defendant could not claim that plaintiff was charged with the other agents' knowledge that the partnership that had included defendant had been dissolved, because defendant was not a third person who had dealt with plaintiff principal (88 Cal. App. 3d 448, 454) .

[EITHER]

A. Third Party May Not Recover From Principal When Agent's Act Not Within Scope of Employment. To recover tort damages from a principal for the acts of an agent when the principal has not authorized or ratified the agent's acts, it is necessary for plaintiff to establish that the act was done in the transaction of the business of the agency (*Civ. [a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a contention that a third party may recover from a principal the tort damages caused by the wrongful act or omission of the principal's agent. The grounds of opposition set forth are that the agent was not acting in the scope of his or her employment at the time of the wrongful act, and that the principal did not ratify or authorize the agent's act. Paragraph A may be used when opposing the third party's contention that the agent's act was committed in the transaction of the business of the agency. Paragraph B may be used when opposing the third party's contention that the agent's act was authorized or ratified by defendant principal. Either of these grounds alone is sufficient to bar a third party's recovery, and when appropriate, counsel may wish to use both Paragraphs A and B as alternative reasons for denying recovery. Such a contention may be used, for example, as a defense in an action by a third party to recover tort damages from defendant principal for the act or omission of an agent.

When a third party contends that defendant principal is liable for the wrongful act of an agent solely because of defendant principal's authorization or ratification of the agent's wrongful act, defendant principal may oppose that contention by combining Paragraph B of this form with the points and authorities in §§ 182.40 -182.43, and 182.130 and 182.131, as appropriate, in the factual situation of the particular case. If also opposing the existence of an actual agency, counsel may combine these points and authorities with the points and authorities in §§ 182.37 -182.39, as appropriate. If the third party seeks recovery of exemplary damages from defendant principal based on defendant principal's alleged ratification of the agent's wrongful act, these points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities opposing the recovery of exemplary damages in § 182.136, as appropriate.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that a third party may not recover from a principal the tort damages caused by the wrongful act or omission of the principal's agent. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Third Party May Not Recover From Principal When Agent's Act Not Within Scope of Employment

Lane v. Bing (1927) 202 Cal. 577, 262 P. 317 , was an action brought by a pedestrian injured by an automobile accident between two cars to recover tort damages from the drivers of the cars and the owners of the cars. The action against one of the owners alleged that the driver, the stepdaughter of the owner, was employed as an accountant and had been taking lessons in accounting at her home. On the night of the accident, the instructor had come to her home, but the stepdaughter canceled the lesson and in driving the instructor to the train station had the accident that caused plaintiff's injuries. Plaintiff third party alleged that the stepdaughter was the agent of the defendant owner, and that defendant owner was therefore liable for the tort damages caused by the stepdaughter. The trial court entered a nonsuit in favor of the owner on the ground that it had not been established that the stepdaughter had acted within the scope of her agency or employment, and plaintiff appealed.

The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that the evidence showed that the stepdaughter's action in driving the accountant to the train station was voluntary and unrelated to her employment (202 Cal. 577, 580) . The Court noted that a plaintiff seeking recovery from a principal for the tort of an agent based on the agent's act while transacting the business of the agency rather than on the principal's authorization or ratification of the wrongful act must establish the two distinct facts of the status of master and servant, and that the act was done within the scope of the servant's employment [quoting from Kish v. California State Auto. Ass'n (1922) 190 Cal. 246, 251, 212 P. 27] . The Court held that the stepdaughter's act in giving the accountant a ride was not connected with her employment, and that the owner of the car could not be held liable (202 Cal. 577, 580) .

[b] Third Party May Not Recover From Principal When Agent's Act Not Authorized or Ratified

The facts and procedural background of Benson v. Southern Pac. Co. (1918) 177 Cal. 777, 171 P. 948 , are discussed in § 182.123[3][a]. The Court distinguished liability under the doctrine of respondeat superior, which arises when the agent acts within the general scope of authority in transacting the principal's business, and the liability when the principal authorizes or ratifies the agent's act. The Court held that when the act that caused injury to plaintiff third party was authorized or ratified by defendant principal, the principal is liable for his or her own act of authorization or ratification (177 Cal. 777, 779-780) .

The facts and procedural background of Maberto v. Wolfe (1930) 106 Cal. App. 202, 289 P. 218 , are discussed in § 182.123[3][b]. The court held that a principal may be held liable for the acts of an agent that were not within the general course and scope of the agent's authority to transact business if the principal ratified or authorized the act (106 Cal. App. 202, 206) . The court found that the agent's act that injured plaintiff was authorized by defendant principal, and therefore plaintiff third party was entitled to recover damages from defendant principal (106 Cal. App. 202, 210) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Third Party May Not Recover From Principal When Agent's Act Not Within Scope of Employment

In Saks v. Charity Mission Baptist Church (2001) 90 Cal. App. 4th 1116, 110 Cal. Rptr. 2d 45 , the plaintiff was a doctor who had engaged in a series of business transactions with a developer and a church pastor. In the course of those transactions, the plaintiff had loaned $810,000 to purchase property in the church's name, with the understanding that the pastor or the church would repay the amount. Use of the church's name to purchase the property was necessary to obtain a public loan or grant, the proceeds from which would be used to repay the plaintiff. The plaintiff knew when he made the payments that use of the church's name was only necessary to obtain the public funds, and that after the funds were obtained, title to the property would be transferred to a partnership owned by the plaintiff, the developer, and possibly the pastor. Eventually, the public funding did not materialize, the transactions fell apart, and the plaintiff did not recover the money he had paid. The plaintiff sued, seeking in part to hold the church liable for the notes signed by the pastor on theories of breach of contract and fraud. After a jury verdict for the plaintiff, the court of appeal reversed. On the fraud cause of action, the court concluded that a principal may not be held vicariously liable if an agent is using the principal to obtain a benefit for the agent and other parties in a transaction in which the principal will ultimately not benefit. The plaintiff knew that the pastor was using the church's name only to secure public funding for the project, after which title for the purchased property would be transferred to the private partnership. With this knowledge, and in the absence of evidence that the church regularly engaged in real estate development transactions, the plaintiff had to know that the pastor's actions did not arise from the normal duties of the pastor on behalf of the church and could not be deemed to be foreseeable by the church (90 Cal. App. 4th 1116, 1138-1139) .

In Asplund v. Selected Invs. in Fin. Equities, Inc. (2000) 86 Cal. App. 4th 26, 103 Cal. Rptr. 2d 34 , the plaintiffs were investors who brought suit against the defendant, a mutual fund broker-dealer, based on allegations that they were defrauded when they purchased promissory notes from a registered representative of the broker-dealer. However, the written agency agreement between the representative and the defendant provided that the registered representative was an independent contractor whose relationship to the defendant was solely that of an agent for selling shares in the defendant's mutual fund. The promissory notes sold by the representative to the plaintiffs were unrelated to the defendant or to the representative's agency for the defendant. The trial court granted summary judgment for the defendant, and the court of appeal affirmed. The court concluded that the registered representative was an independent contractor, not an employee of the defendant, and had no actual or apparent authority from the defendant to sell the promissory notes at issue. In fact, the written agency agreement explicitly limited the scope of the representative's authority to act on behalf of the defendant. Therefore, because the representative's actions were not within the scope of the representative's agency relationship with the defendant, the defendant could not be held vicariously liable for the alleged fraud (86 Cal. App. 4th 26, 45-49) .

[b] Third Party May Not Recover From Principal When Agent's Act Not Authorized or Ratified

In Shultz Steel Co. v. Hartford Accident & Indem. Co. (1986) 187 Cal. App. 3d 513, 231 Cal. Rptr. 715 , an insured under a liability insurance policy was sued by a third party for personal injury damages and then brought an action against his own broker, who was an agent of the insurer, and the insurer, seeking damages for indemnity and negligence, on the ground that the agent provided inadequate advice regarding coverage limits. The insurer defendant successfully brought a motion for summary judgment on the ground that, inter alia, it did not ratify the agent's advice, and plaintiff appealed. The court of appeal affirmed, noting that while the insurer was aware of the policy, it had no way of knowing whether the insured had collateral or excess coverage with another insurer, and no knowledge that the coverage under its policy was in fact inadequate. The court held, inter alia, that no triable issue existed with regard to ratification (187 Cal. App. 3d 513, 523) .

[These points and authorities may be combined with the contentions supported by the points and authorities set forth in §§ 182.42 and 182.43, as appropriate, and may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF MAY NOT RECOVER EXEMPLARY DAMAGES FROM DEFENDANT PRINCIPAL FOR THE WRONGFUL ACT OF THE [DEFENDANT] AGENT BASED ON DEFENDANT PRINCIPAL'S ALLEGED RATIFICATION OF THE AGENT'S ACT, BECAUSE RETENTION OF AN AGENT OR EMPLOYEE WITH SPECIAL SKILL AND EXPERIENCE DOES NOT CONSTITUTE A RATIFICATION FOR PURPOSES OF IMPOSING EXEMPLARY DAMAGES.

Retention of Agent With Special Skills Does Not Constitute Ratification. When the actions of a principal or employer are merely negative, consisting of keeping skilled, experienced, and responsible agents or employees, it cannot be said, for the purposes of awarding exemplary damages, that the former ratified the conduct of the agents or employees and shared in their malicious motives (Sullivan v. Matt (1955) 130 Cal. App. 2d 134, 144, 278 P.2d 499).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a contention that a third party may recover exemplary damages from defendant principal or employer based on defendant's ratification of an agent or employee's wrongful act. The ground of opposition set forth is that defendant principal's retention of the agent or employee, standing alone, does not constitute a ratification for the purpose of imposing exemplary damages on the principal when the employee or agent is skilled and experienced at his or her position. Such a contention would be appropriate as a defense by the principal, for example, when a third party seeking exemplary damages from the principal for an agent's wrongful act contends that defendant principal ratified the wrongful act by not discharging the agent after learning of the wrongful conduct. These points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities in §§ 182.42 and 182.43 opposing ratification generally, when appropriate.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the point of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss facts showing the special skill and/or experience possessed by the agent or employee, and the absence of any other facts tending to show the principal's ratification of the wrongful act.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities in Optional Paragraph C of § 182.124.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Retention of Agent With Special Skills Does Not Constitute Ratifaction

Sullivan v. Matt (1955) 130 Cal. App. 2d 134, 144, 278 P.2d 499 , was an action for damages for personal injuries alleging that plaintiff was assaulted by defendant employees in the course of their employment. Plaintiff also sought exemplary damages from defendant company, the employer of defendant employees, on the ground that defendant company had ratified their wrongful conduct by retaining them after learning of the assault. The trial court entered judgment on a jury verdict awarding compensatory and exemplary damages to plaintiff against all defendants, and defendant company appealed.

The court of appeal reversed the award of exemplary damages against defendant company, holding that the evidence that the employees were retained by defendant company did not constitute a ratification of their tortious acts (130 Cal. App. 2d 134, 144) . The court held that the special skill and experience of the employees were necessary to defendant company, and that under the circumstances it would be unfair to require it to discharge them in order to disaffirm their conduct (130 Cal. App. 2d 134, 144) . The court held that when the actions of an employer are merely negative, consisting of keeping skilled, experienced, and responsible employees, it cannot be said that the employer ratified the conduct of the employees and shared in their malicious motives (130 Cal. App. 2d 134, 144) .

While the holding in Sullivan refers to employers, it appears to be equally applicable to principals, given the tendency of courts to apply the same tests to employer-employee situations and principal-agent situations [see, e.g., Egan v. Mutual of Omaha Ins. Co. (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 809, 822-823, 157 Cal. Rptr. 482, 598 P.2d 452] .

PLAINTIFF MAY NOT ENFORCE THE CONTRACT ENTERED INTO BY THE [DEFENDANT] AGENT ON BEHALF OF DEFENDANT PRINCIPAL, BECAUSE WHEN A THIRD PARTY GIVES EXCLUSIVE CREDIT TO THE AGENT, THE UNDISCLOSED PRINCIPAL IS EXONERATED BY PAYMENT OR OTHER SATISFACTION MADE BY THE PRINCIPAL TO THE AGENT IN GOOD FAITH, BEFORE RECEIVING NOTICE OF THE CREDITOR'S ELECTION TO HOLD THE PRINCIPAL RESPONSIBLE.

Undisclosed Principal Exonerated When Exclusive Credit Granted to Agent. If exclusive credit is given to an agent by the person dealing with him or her, the undisclosed principal is exonerated by payment or other satisfaction made to the agent in good faith, before the principal receives notice of the creditor's election to hold the principal liable (Civ. Code § 2335; Rigney v. De La Salle Inst. (1935) 10 Cal. App. 2d 492, 498, 52 P.2d 579).

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a contention that an undisclosed principal is liable on a contract entered into by an agent in his or her own name with a third party. The ground of opposition set forth is that when a third party gives exclusive credit to an agent, an undisclosed principal is exonerated by payment or other satisfaction made in good faith to the agent before the principal receives notice of the creditor's election to hold the principal responsible [see Civ. Code § 2335]. Such an argument might be raised, for example, by an undisclosed principal when a third person has sued the principal for breach of a contract made in the name of an agent after the principal has paid the agent for undertaking the contractual obligation.

If also opposing the existence of an actual agency, counsel may combine these points and authorities with the points and authorities in §§ 182.37 -182.39, as appropriate. If opposing the existence of an agent's actual authority to perform certain acts, counsel may combine these points and authorities with the points and authorities in §§ 182.40 and 182.41, as appropriate. If opposing the contention that an agency or authority allegedly arose because of the principal's ratification of the agent's acts, counsel may combine these points and authorities with the points and authorities in §§ 182.42 and 182.43, as appropriate.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that an undisclosed principal is not liable on a contract entered into by an agent in his or her own name with a third party. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the point of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss facts showing that plaintiff gave credit exclusively to the agent, and that defendant principal paid or otherwise satisfied the agent in good faith before receiving notice of plaintiff's election to hold defendant principal liable on the agent's obligation.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities in § 182.128.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Undisclosed Principal Exonerated When Exclusive Credit Granted to Agent

Rigney v. De La Salle Inst. (1935) 10 Cal. App. 2d 492, 52 P.2d 579 , was an action to recover the value of labor and materials supplied in the construction of a building for defendant principal. Defendant principal had agreed with a contractor that the latter would act as general manager of construction and as agent in all matters concerning the proposed work. The contractor agent secured bids from the materialmen, and all contracts for labor and materials were made in the agent's name. As progress payments became due, the agent persuaded plaintiffs, the materialmen, to sign waivers of liens. Defendant principal accepted the waivers from the agent in exchange for the payments due and evidenced by the waivers. The agent did not pay all the money to plaintiffs, who brought the action against defendant principal after they discovered the agency relationship. The trial court awarded judgment to plaintiffs, and defendant appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that defendant principal was exonerated under Civ. Code § 2335 by its good-faith payment to its agent (10 Cal. App. 2d 492, 498) . The court relied for its holding on testimony of plaintiffs that they had extended credit to the agent based on their knowledge of his past performance as a contractor. The court also found persuasive the evidence that plaintiffs had executed waivers of liens (10 Cal. App. 2d 492, 498) . The lien rights of plaintiffs would have allowed them to proceed against defendant principal, the court held, and by waiving those claims and delivering the waivers to the agent, they accepted the exclusive credit of the agent for the payment of their indebtedness (10 Cal. App. 2d 492, 498) . The court recognized that without the executed waivers, defendant principal would not have paid the agent the amounts due as evidenced by the waivers and held that the payments brought the case within the provisions of Civ. Code § 2335 (10 Cal. App. 2d 492, 498) .

Undisclosed Principal Not Liable Unless Actual Agency Exists. An actual agency relationship is required for a third party to recover from an undisclosed principal based on the acts of an alleged agent (Associated Creditors' Agency v. Davis (1975) 13 Cal. 3d 374, 385, 118 Cal. Rptr. 772, 530 P.2d 1084).

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a contention that a third party may enforce against an alleged undisclosed principal a contract entered into with a third party by an alleged agent in his or her own name. The ground of opposition set forth is that an undisclosed principal is not liable under a contract between a third party and an alleged agent unless an actual agency existed between the alleged agent and the alleged undisclosed principal. This contention may also be raised as a defense by an alleged undisclosed principal, for example, in any action on the contract, such as an action seeking damages for breach of contract or an action for declaratory relief based on the contract.

When opposing the existence of an actual agency, counsel may combine these points and authorities with the points and authorities in §§ 182.37 -182.39, as appropriate. If opposing the existence of an agent's actual or ostensible authority to perform certain acts, counsel may combine these points and authorities with the points and authorities in §§ 182.40 and 182.41, and 182.130 and 182.131, as appropriate. If opposing the contention that an actual agency or actual authority allegedly arose because of the principal's ratification of the agent's acts, counsel may combine these points and authorities with the points and authorities in §§ 182.42 and 182.43, as appropriate.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that a third party may not enforce against an alleged undisclosed principal a contract entered into with a third party by an alleged agent in his or her own name. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities in § 182.124.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Undisclosed Principal Not Liable Unless Actual Agency Exists

Associated Creditors' Agency v. Davis (1975) 13 Cal. 3d 374, 385, 118 Cal. Rptr. 772, 530 P.2d 1084 , was an action brought by the assignee of several creditors who provided goods to a premises licensed in the name of defendants but operated by a concessionaire, who had no actual authority to obligate defendants on contracts for supplies. Defendants obtained a liquor license for a bar and restaurant. Defendants granted the exclusive rights to run the bar and restaurant to a concessionaire who ordered all the supplies and provisions for the business in his own name, including those that were unpaid and that plaintiff sought to recover in this action. Plaintiff brought the action after the concessionaire declared bankruptcy, and sought to recover from defendants on the ground, among others, that defendants were the undisclosed principal of the concessionaire. Plaintiff argued that defendants were required by the terms of the liquor license to run the bar themselves, and that the concessionaire could therefore only be an agent. The trial court entered judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appealed.

The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that plaintiff could not recover under the theory that defendants were acting as undisclosed principal with the concessionaire as agent (13 Cal. 3d 374, 385) . The Court held that a third party cannot recover from an allegedly undisclosed principal based on the acts of an alleged agent unless an actual agency relationship existed (13 Cal. 3d 374, 385) . The Court concluded that there was no actual agency between the concessionaire and defendant, and that therefore plaintiff could not recover from defendant as an undisclosed principal (13 Cal. 3d 374, 385) .

CHAPTER 183 PRIVACY: STATE CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHTS
PART I. INTRODUCTION

18-183 California Points & Authorities § 183.01

§ 183.01 Scope of Chapter

This chapter contains memoranda of points and authorities relating to the state constitutional provision guaranteeing the right of privacy. It includes a form supporting the contention that the plaintiff has established the essential elements of a state constitutional cause of action for invasion of privacy [see § 183.20], a form supporting the contention that a statute requiring a pregnant minor to secure parental consent prior to obtaining an abortion violates a minor's constitutional right of privacy [see § 183.21], a form supporting the contention that the plaintiff has established the essential elements of a state constitutional cause of action for invasion of privacy based on a criminal defense attorney's unauthorized reading and dissemination of the victim's confidential mental health records [see § 183.22], a form supporting the contention that the plaintiff has stated a constitutional cause of action for invasion of privacy based on a private employer's suspicionless demand that the employee take a drug test [see § 183.23], a form opposing the contention that the defendant invaded the plaintiff's right of privacy in violation of the California Constitution under the balancing test standard [see § 183.24], and a form opposing the contention that the defendant invaded the plaintiff's right of privacy in violation of the California Constitution on the grounds that the plaintiff waived the right to privacy [see § 183.25].

This chapter also includes forms supporting and opposing the contention that the defendant failed to show a compelling interest to justify an invasion of privacy since that standard still may apply to some obvious governmental invasions or the invasion of a vital privacy interest [see §§ 183.26, 183.27]. Forms also are included to contend that the compelling-interest standard is inapplicable [see § 183.28], that a corporation has no state constitutional privacy right [see § 183.29], that proper police activities do not violate state constitutional privacy rights [see § 183.30], that judicial oversight over the release of confidential records precludes the imposition of liability [see § 183.31], that the absolute judicial privilege of Civ. Code § 47(b) provides a defense to the privacy action [see § 183.32], and that the Tort Claims Act provides immunity from liability for a governmental defendant [see § 183.33].

CHAPTER 183 PRIVACY: STATE CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHTS
PART I. INTRODUCTION

18-183 California Points & Authorities § 183.02

§ 183.02 Governing Law

The right of privacy is guaranteed by Cal. Const. art. I, § 1. In 1972, California voters amended Cal. Const. art. I, § 1, to include a right of privacy among the "inalienable rights" of the people. The California Supreme Court has noted that analysis and arguments contained in the official ballot pamphlet are indicia of the voters' intent in enacting the provision [Hill v. National Collegiate Athletic Assn. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1, 16 ; see also White v. Davis (1975) 13 Cal. 3d 757, 775 n.11, 120 Cal. Rptr. 94, 533 P.2d 222 (applying ballot argument in favor of amendment)]. The plaintiff must allege the following essential elements in an actionable cause of action for invasion of the state constitutional right of privacy [Hill v. National Collegiate Athletic Assn. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1, 32-37, 39-40] :

- A legally protected privacy interest;
- A reasonable expectation of privacy; and
- A serious invasion of the privacy interest.

The state constitutional right may be enforced against both private and government entities [Hill v. National Collegiate Athletic Assn. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1, 38-39 (regarding NCAA drug-testing program for student athletes, but finding no violation); see also Wilkinson v. Times Mirror Corp. (1989) 215 Cal. App. 3d 1034, 1040, 264 Cal. Rptr. 194 (regarding private employer's preemployment drug-testing program, but finding no violation)].

Until the California Supreme Court's decision in Hill [Hill v. National Collegiate Athletic Assn. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1] , courts generally used a "compelling interest" standard to determine whether an invasion of privacy violated the California Constitution [see, e.g., Long Beach City Employees Ass'n v. City of Long Beach (1986) 41 Cal. 3d 937, 948 (dictum in case involving only government abuses); White v. Davis (1975) 13 Cal. 3d 757, 775, 120 Cal. Rptr. 94, 533 P.2d 222] . However, in Hill, the Court limited the use of the "compelling interest" standard to cases implicating either "obvious government action impacting freedom of expression and association" or an "obvious invasion of an interest fundamental to personal autonomy" [Hill v. National Collegiate Athletic Assn. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1, 34] . Otherwise, the standard for determining an unconstitutional invasion of privacy is a less stringent balancing test that compares a specifically identified privacy interest with competing and countervailing nonprivacy interests [Hill v. National Collegiate Athletic Assn. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1, 37-38 (applying this test to NCAA drug testing program for student athletes and finding no violation)]. Consequently, the scope of the state constitutional right of privacy will vary from case to case depending on the circumstances, which the Court concludes will avoid "the continuing uncertainty and confusion inherent in the rigid application of a 'competing interest' test" [Hill v. National Collegiate Athletic Assn. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1, 56-57] .

The scope of the state constitutional right to privacy has been made clearer by the cases decided since Hill. In a 4 to 4 post-Hill decision, the California Supreme Court has ruled that a statute requiring a pregnant minor to secure parental consent or judicial authorization prior to obtaining an abortion violates the minor's constitutional right of privacy [American Acad. of Pediatrics v. Lungren (1997) 16 Cal. 4th 307, 359, 66 Cal. Rptr. 2d 210, 940 P.2d 797] . In that case, the Court conducted the Hill analysis and determined that: (1) the statute, which restricted a pregnant individual's ability to decide on her own whether to continue or to terminate her pregnancy unquestionably implicated a constitutionally protected privacy interest of a pregnant minor [American Acad. of Pediatrics v. Lungren (1997) 16 Cal. 4th 307, 331-332, 337, 66 Cal. Rptr. 2d 210, 940 P.2d 797] ; (2) because the parental consent requirement impinged on a fundamental autonomy privacy interest of pregnant minors protected by the state constitutional privacy clause, and because the statute applied to all such minors, the pregnant minors affected by the statute had a reasonable expectation of privacy [American Acad. of Pediatrics v. Lungren (1997) 16 Cal. 4th 307, 338, 66 Cal. Rptr. 2d 210, 940 P.2d 797] ; (3) the statute constituted a significant intrusion on a minor's protected privacy interest [American Acad. of Pediatrics v. Lungren (1997) 16 Cal. 4th 307, 338-339, 66 Cal. Rptr. 2d 210, 940 P.2d 797] ; (4) because the statute significantly intruded on a fundamental, autonomy privacy interest of a minor, proper respect for a minor's state constitutional right of privacy required a showing that the intrusion was necessary to further a compelling state interest [American Acad. of Pediatrics v. Lungren (1997) 16 Cal. 4th 307, 340, 66 Cal. Rptr. 2d 210, 940 P.2d 797] ; and (5) that although the state's asserted interests in protecting the health of minors and in preserving and fostering the parent-child relationship were compelling interests, the parental consent requirement at issue was not necessary to further either of these interests [American Acad. of Pediatrics v. Lungren (1997) 16 Cal. 4th 307, 348-354, 66 Cal. Rptr. 2d 210, 940 P.2d 797] .

Other circumstances have also justified an action for invasion of the constitutional right to privacy. In Susan S. v. Israels (1997) 55 Cal. App. 4th 1290, 67 Cal. Rptr. 2d 42 , a court of appeal held that a crime victim has a cause of action for invasion of her constitutional right to privacy against a criminal defense attorney who, without authorization, reads and disseminates the victim's confidential mental health records, and in Kraslawsky v. Upper Deck Co. (1997) 56 Cal. App. 4th 179, 65 Cal. Rptr. 2d 297 , an employee who claimed that she was required to comply with her employer's demand that she submit to a urinalysis drug/alcohol test, without reasonable cause to believe she was intoxicated, stated a cause of action for a violation of her constitutional right of privacy.

§ 183.20 Supporting Contention That Plaintiff Has State Constitutional Cause of Action for Invasion of Privacy--Balancing Test

[1] FORM Supporting Contention That Plaintiff Has State Constitutional Cause of Action for Invasion of Privacy--Balancing Test

[The following may be included in a memorandum or points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT'S INVASION OF PLAINTIFF'S PRIVACY VIOLATED THE CALIFORNIA CONSTITUTION, ARTICLE I, SECTION 1, BECAUSE THE DEFENDANT'S CONDUCT IMPACTS ON A LEGALLY PROTECTED PRIVACY INTEREST OF _____ [specify], THE PLAINTIFF HAS A REASONABLE EXPECTATION OF PRIVACY, AND THE DEFENDANT'S INVASION IS SERIOUS. THE DEFENDANT HAS FAILED TO SHOW A COMPETING OR COUNTERVAILING INTEREST TO JUSTIFY THE INTRUSION.

A. Defendant's Conduct Impacts a Legally Protected Privacy Interest. An essential element of a state constitutional cause of action for invasion of privacy (Cal. Const. art. I, § 1) is that the defendant's conduct impacts a specific, legally protected interest, such as informational privacy or autonomy privacy [Hill v. National Collegiate Athletic Assn. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1, 35] .

B. Plaintiff Has Reasonable Expectation of Privacy. An essential element of a state constitutional cause of action for invasion of privacy (Cal. Const. art. I, § 1) is that the plaintiff has a reasonable expectation of privacy [Hill v. National Collegiate Athletic Assn. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1, 36-37] .

C. Serious Invasion of Privacy Interest. An actionable invasion of privacy under Cal. Const. art. I, § 1, must be sufficiently serious in its nature, scope, and actual or potential impact to constitute an egregious breach of the social norms underlying the privacy right [Hill v. National Collegiate Athletic Assn. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1, 37] .

D. Balancing Test. When the defendant fails to show that a competing or countervailing privacy or nonprivacy interest outweighs the specifically identified privacy interest of the plaintiff, then there is a violation of the state constitutional right of privacy [Hill v. National Collegiate Athletic Assn. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1, 40] .

[Optional] E. Rebuttal of Competing or Countervailing Interest. When there are feasible and effective alternatives to defendant's conduct which have a lesser impact on privacy interests, defendant's conduct is actionable as a violation of plaintiff's right to privacy [Hill v. National Collegiate Athletic Assn. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1, 40] .

[Optional] F. Constitutional Right of Privacy Applies to Private Entities. Cal. Const. art. I, § 1, creates a right of action against private as well as government entities [Hill v. National Collegiate Athletic Assn. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1, 38-39] .

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that the plaintiff has established the essential elements for a state constitutional cause of action for invasion of privacy, and that the defendant has failed to show that competing interests outweigh the the plaintiff's privacy interest [see Hill v. National Collegiate Athletic Assn. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1] . If the plaintiff wishes to argue that the defendant must justify the invasion of privacy by asserting a compelling interest, counsel should use the points and authorities in § 183.26, bearing in mind that the California Supreme Court has curtailed the circumstances in which this standard may apply.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raised the substantive issue of violation of the constitutional privacy right. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

If appropriate, the points and authorities in § 183.24 may be used to oppose these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Defendant's Conduct Impacts a Legally Protected Privacy Interest

In Hill v. National Collegiate Athletic Assn. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1 the California Supreme Court articulated a new legal standard for assessing state constitutional claims for invasion of privacy. The case arose from an action by student athletes against the NCAA contending that its drug testing program violated their right to privacy under the California Constitution (Cal. Const. art. I, § 1). After a trial, the superior court found that the drug-testing program violated the plaintiffs' right of privacy and permanently enjoined its enforcement against the plaintiffs. The appellate court upheld the injunction, and the defendant appealed to the California Supreme Court. The Court applied a "balancing test" standard to determine that the NCAA drug testing program did not violate plaintiffs' state constitutional right of privacy, and drastically curtailed the circumstances when the "compelling interest" standard applies (7 Cal. 4th 1, 57-58) .

The Court looked to the meaning of the word "privacy" in order to develop a "suitable legal standard" for interpreting the state constitutional right of privacy (7 Cal. 4th 1, 20-27) . From its examination of the common law, the Court found invaluable guidance in the notion that specific, identifiable privacy interests are granted legal protection after a process by which such interests are weighed and compared against other values (7 Cal. 4th 1, 27) . The "murky" federal constitutional analysis of the right of privacy taught the Court that the appropriate legal standard is best viewed flexibly and in context (7 Cal. 4th 1, 31) .

Whether the defendant's conduct impacts on a legally protected privacy interest is one of the three essential elements that a plaintiff must establish in a state constitutional action for invasion of privacy (7 Cal. 4th 1, 35) . Whether the plaintiff has a legally protected interest is a question of law, and the Court described two classes of privacy interests: informational privacy and autonomy privacy (7 Cal. 4th 1, 35) .

In this case, the defendant's drug testing program required the student athletes to provide urine samples under direct visual observation and to disclose medical information that could have caused embarrassment to individual athletes. The Court concluded that the student athletes' had asserted a protected privacy interest in not being observed during urination, and in the confidentiality of medical treatment and information (7 Cal. 4th 1, 41-43, 52-53) .

[b] Plaintiff Has Reasonable Expectation of Privacy

The facts and procedural background of Hill v. National Collegiate Athletic Assn. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1 , are discussed in § 183.20[3][a]. The plaintiff established a prima facie violation. Plaintiff's reasonable expectation of privacy is one of three essential elements that a plaintiff must establish in a state constitutional action for invasion of privacy (7 Cal. 4th 1, 35) . This element is a mixed question of fact and law because the reasonableness of a privacy interest depends on the circumstances, and on widely accepted community norms (7 Cal. 4th 1, 35-36) . The Court found it obvious that individuals have a reasonable expectation of privacy with respect to human excretory functions like urination. The athletes' particular expectation, however, was diminished by the athletic setting, advance notice, and the opportunity to withhold consent to test even though doing so would result in disqualification from competition (7 Cal. 4th 1, 41-43) .

[c] Serious Invasion of Privacy Interest

The facts and procedural background of Hill v. National Collegiate Athletic Assn. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1 , are discussed in § 183.20[3][a]. The plaintiff established a prima facie violation. Whether the defendant's intrusion is a serious invasion of privacy is one of the three essential elements that a plaintiff must establish in a state constitutional action for invasion of privacy (7 Cal. 4th 1, 37) . This element is a mixed question of fact and law because an actionable invasion of privacy must be sufficiently serious to constitute an egregious breach of the social norms underlying the privacy right (7 Cal. 4th 1, 39-40) . Consistent with prior California and federal case law [see, e.g., Skinner v. Railway Labor Executives' Ass'n (1989) 489 U.S. 602, 616-617, 109 S. Ct. 1402, 103 L. Ed. 2d 639 ; Wilkinson v. Times Mirror Corp. (1989) 215 Cal. App. 3d 1034, 1048, 264 Cal. Rptr 194] , the California Supreme Court held that the collection and testing of urine intrudes on reasonable expectations of privacy, although the Court held that college athletes had a diminished expectation and found the defendant's intrusion justified upon further inquiry (7 Cal. 4th 1, 39-40) .

[d] Balancing Test

The facts and procedural background of Hill v. National Collegiate Athletic Assn. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1 , are discussed in § 183.20[3][a]. The California Supreme Court applied a "balancing test" standard to determine that the NCAA drug testing program did not violate plaintiffs' state constitutional right of privacy. The Court determined that the lower courts had applied the wrong standard to evaluate the constitutionality of the NCAA's drug testing program when they used the "compelling interest" standard. First, the language of the ballot argument did not require the use of this standard. Second, that standard posed additional difficulties when applied to private entities.

The Court then synthesized a new "balancing test" standard to be applied to state constitutional claims for invasion of privacy, and limited the application of the "compelling interest" standard to cases that involve aspects of the state constitutional right of privacy that implicate an "obvious governmental action impacting freedom of expression and association," or an "obvious invasion of an interest fundamental to personal autonomy" (7 Cal. 4th 1, 34) .

The balancing test standard compares the specifically identified privacy interests of the plaintiff with legitimate, competing and countervailing, nonprivacy interests asserted by the defendant. The Court accepted that the following two competing interests justified NCAA's drug-testing program: (1) safeguarding the integrity of intercollegiate athletic competition; and (2) protecting the health and safety of student athletes.

The first interest was persuasive, "whatever the provable incidence of drug use," to combat the perception that the use of certain drugs may enhance athletic performance, and because of the practical realities of intercollegiate sports. The second interest exists for the benefit of all persons involved in sporting events, as well as the sport itself (7 Cal. 4th 1, 45, 46) .

The Court made it clear that the balancing test standard will apply in determining what requirements are imposed on private employers, and that the result will depend on the public interest, the employer's special interests and the employees' reasonable expectations of privacy in a particular employment setting (7 Cal. 4th 1, 37-38, 40) . The Court offered no analysis on the continuing vitality of employment-related cases decided before Hill, and noted that one court had erroneously applied the compelling interest standard [see Luck v. Southern Pac. Transp. Co. (1990) 218 Cal. App. 3d 1, 267 Cal. Rptr. 618 (drug testing based on safety considerations unconstitutional when applied to nonsafety employee; court of appeal erroneously applied compelling-interest test); see also Semore v. Pool (1990) 217 Cal. App. 3d 1087, 266 Cal. Rptr. 280 (pupillary eye test is intrusive); Wilkinson v. Times Mirror Corp. (1989) 215 Cal. App. 3d 1034, 264 Cal. Rptr. 194 (drug testing of job applicants is constitutional)] (7 Cal. 4th 1, 55-56 n.20).

[e] Rebuttal of Competing or Countervailing Interest

The facts and procedural background of Hill v. National Collegiate Athletic Assn. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1 , are discussed in § 183.20[3][a]. The California Supreme Court applied a "balancing test" standard to determine that the NCAA drug testing program did not violate plaintiffs' state constitutional right of privacy. The plaintiff may rebut the assertion of a competing interest by showing that there are feasible and effective alternatives to the defendant's conduct that would have a lesser impact on privacy interests (7 Cal. 4th 1, 38) . There is no constitutional infringement of privacy if the invasion is justified by a competing interest. In this case, the Court found that uncontradicted evidence in the record demonstrated as a matter of law the constitutional validity of the NCAA's program. The plaintiffs failed to demonstrate with substantial evidence the presence of fully viable alternatives to monitoring. Instead of remanding the case on this issue, the Court left the consideration of less intrusive alternatives to the judgment and discretion of the NCAA, and then to future litigation, if any (7 Cal. 4th 1, 57-58) .

[f] Constitutional Right of Privacy Applies to Private Entities

The facts and procedural background of Hill v. National Collegiate Athletic Assn. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1 , are discussed in § 183.20[3][a]. The defendant, an athletic association comprised of colleges and universities, argued that the right of privacy only applied to governmental entities, and in the alternative that the right was inapplicable to private entities that were not businesses. The Court rejected both contentions. The Court noted that appellate court decisions have consistently reached the conclusion that the state constitutional right of privacy may be enforced against private parties (unlike the federal right) [see, e.g., Wilkinson v. Times Mirror Corp. (1989) 215 Cal. App. 3d 1034, 264 Cal. Rptr. 194 (applicant drug-testing program of private employer held to constitutional standard; no violation)]. The ballot arguments contain persuasive evidence of drafter and voter intent to recognize a right of action for invasion of privacy against private as well as governmental entities. References to business in the ballot measure were not limiting, but indicative of an intent to extend the right to the private sector generally (7 Cal. 4th 1, 38-39) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Defendant's Conduct Impacts a Legally Protected Privacy Interest

In Jeffrey H. v. Imai, Tadlock & Keeney (2000) 85 Cal. App. 4th 345, 101 Cal. Rptr. 2d 916 , the plaintiff was injured in an automobile accident and brought suit against the other driver and his employer. In preparation for defense of that suit, which was eventually referred to arbitration, the attorneys for the defendants, while obtaining copies of the plaintiff's medical records, also obtained copies of records with the plaintiff's HIV test results. Although the law firm was notified that those records had been improperly disclosed, were confidential, and should be returned to the plaintiff, the law firm attempted to use several of the records at the arbitration proceeding. In subsequent litigation, the plaintiff brought an action against the law firm and personnel at the firm, alleging invasion of the constitutional right to privacy. The trial court dismissed the suit after sustaining the defendants' demurrer, but the court of appeal reversed. The court of appeal concluded that the plaintiff had stated a legally protected privacy interest. The zones of privacy created by the California Constitution had long been held to encompass a person's medical history, and therefore the disclosure of HIV status was entitled to protection (85 Cal. App. 4th 345, 353-354) .

The factual and procedural background of Pettus v. Cole (1996) 49 Cal. App. 4th 402, 57 Cal. Rptr. 2d 46 , is discussed in § 183.25[3][a]. In initially determining that the disclosure by the defendant psychiatrists of their reports about plaintiff to his employer violated his constitutional right of privacy under Cal. Const. art. I, § 1, the court of appeal noted that in Hill v. National Collegiate Athletic Assn. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1 , the elements of a claim for invasion of the state constitutional right of privacy were identified as: (1) a legally protected privacy interest, (2) a reasonable expectation of privacy in the circumstances, and (3) conduct by defendant constituting a serious invasion of privacy. With regard to whether plaintiff had established a legally protected privacy interest, the court stated that a review of defendants' written reports demonstrated the private nature of the information transmitted to plaintiff's employer. The court concluded that this was the type of "sensitive personal information" the California voters had in mind when they adopted the constitutional privacy guarantee (49 Cal. App. 4th 402, 441) . The court reversed the judgment for defendants, but as a result of evidence that plaintiff may have waived his constitutional claim, remanded the matter for further proceedings in the trial court.

[b] Plaintiff Has Reasonable Expectation of Privacy

The factual and procedural background of Jeffrey H. v. Imai, Tadlock & Keeney (2000) 85 Cal. App. 4th 345, 101 Cal. Rptr. 2d 916 is discussed in § 183.20[4][a]. After concluding that the plaintiff had a legally protected privacy interest in the results of his HIV test, the court of appeal found that the plaintiff also had a reasonable expectation that those test results would remain private. Although the plaintiff may have put his physical condition in issue by bringing the underlying personal injury suit, there was no evidence that the plaintiff's HIV status related in any way to the physical or emotional injuries for which the underlying suit was brought (85 Cal. App. 4th 345, 354) . Moreover, statutes protecting the confidentiality of HIV test results also served to confirm the plaintiff's reasonable expectations of privacy, and letters exchanged between the parties during preparation for the underlying suit may have provided the plaintiff with further assurance that his privacy interests would be protected (85 Cal. App. 4th 345, 354) .

The factual and procedural background of Pettus v. Cole (1996) 49 Cal. App. 4th 402, 57 Cal. Rptr. 2d 46 , is discussed in § 183.25[3][a]. With regard to whether plaintiff had established a reasonable expectation of privacy, the court stated that it is reasonable for employees to expect that details of their personal lives and thoughts will be shielded from scrutiny by their employers, and that there is no reason why an employer should be allowed access to detailed family or medical histories of its employees except with an individual employee's freely given consent (49 Cal. App. 4th 402, 442) . The court reversed the judgment for defendants, but as a result of evidence that plaintiff may have waived his constitutional claim, remanded the matter for further proceedings in the trial court.

[c] Serious Invasion of Privacy Interest

The factual and procedural background of Jeffrey H. v. Imai, Tadlock & Keeney (2000) 85 Cal. App. 4th 345, 101 Cal. Rptr. 2d 916 , is discussed in § 183.20[4][a]. After concluding that the plaintiff had a legally protected privacy interest and reasonable expectation of privacy in the results of his HIV test, the court of appeal found that the defendants' conduct under the circumstances constituted a serious invasion of that privacy interest. Informational privacy is a core value protected by Article I, Section 1, of the California Constitution. Moreover, the unauthorized disclosure of HIV test results undermines the public interest in encouraging patients to submit to HIV testing and to make disclosures of positive status during medical treatment. Finally, the pleadings suggested that the disclosure in this case was made in a manner that tended to compromise the plaintiff's right of access to the courts, and such access should not include the risk of disclosures of embarrassing personal information having no connection with the dispute at issue (85 Cal. App. 4th 345, 355) .

The factual and procedural background of Pettus v. Cole (1996) 49 Cal. App. 4th 402, 57 Cal. Rptr. 2d 46 , is discussed in § 183.25[3][a]. With regard to whether plaintiff had established that defendants' conduct was a serious invasion of privacy, the court stated that plaintiff established that the revelation of some of the information, particularly regarding his drinking habits and his views about racism, was highly embarrassing to him (49 Cal. App. 4th 402, 443) . Furthermore, the court felt that employees should be allowed to maintain a wall of privacy from their employers around highly personal information about their other roles in life (49 Cal. App. 4th 402, 445) . The court reversed the judgment for defendants, but as a result of evidence that plaintiff may have waived his constitutional claim, remanded the matter for further proceedings in the trial court.

In Sheehan v. San Francisco 49ers, Ltd. (2009) 45 Cal. 4th 992, 89 Cal. Rptr. 3d 594, 201 P.3d 472 , plaintiffs were season ticket holders of the San Francisco 49ers professional football team for the 2005 season. In conformity with new National Football League policy, the team in 2005 instituted a full-body pat down inspection of all patrons as a condition of entering the stadium to attend a game. Plaintiffs sued the team for violation of their privacy rights under the California Constitution, seeking injunctive and declaratory relief. With knowledge that this intrusion would be a condition for attending future games, however, plaintiffs renewed their season tickets for the 2006 season. The trial court sustained defendant's demurrer without leave to amend on the grounds that plaintiffs had consented to the searches by renewing their season tickets with knowledge that the searches would occur. The court of appeal affirmed, but the California Supreme Court reversed. Assuming that plaintiffs had alleged a serious invasion of their privacy rights, the Court noted that the case could not be decided on demurrer as defendant had not yet offered any explanation or reasoned justification for the searches. Thus, further factual development was required before the alleged invasion of plaintiffs' privacy interests could be balanced against the defendant's unstated interests (45 Cal. 4th 992, 1000-1003). The Court also stressed that defendant, on remand, would not be required to show that every measure implemented was absolutely necessary, merely that the measures implemented were reasonable under the circumstances, as private entities that present large public entertainment events necessarily retain primary responsibility for determining what security measures are appropriate to ensure the safety of patrons (45 Cal. 4th 992, 1002-1003).

The factual and procedural background of Pettus v. Cole (1996) 49 Cal. App. 4th 402, 57 Cal. Rptr. 2d 46 , is discussed in § 183.25[3][a]. The court of appeal initially determined that the disclosure by the defendant psychiatrists of their reports about plaintiff to his employer violated his constitutional right of privacy under Cal. Const. art I, § 1. With regard to whether justifications offered by defendants outweighed plaintiff's privacy interests, the court stated that although an employer may need to know certain medical information about its employees, that need is limited to the existence of a functional limitation and to the industrial versus nonindustrial nature of an injury. The court held that employers do not have a cognizable interest in dictating a course of medical treatment for employees who suffer nonindustrial injuries (49 Cal. App. 4th 402, 446) . The court reversed the judgment for defendants, but as a result of evidence that plaintiff may have waived his constitutional claim, remanded the matter for further proceedings in the trial court.

[e] Rebuttal of Competing or Countervailing Interest

The factual and procedural background of Pettus v. Cole (1996) 49 Cal. App. 4th 402, 57 Cal. Rptr. 2d 46 , is discussed in § 183.25[3][a]. The court of appeal initially determined that the disclosure by the defendant psychiatrists of their reports about plaintiff to his employer violated his constitutional right of privacy under Cal. Const. art I, § 1. With regard to defendants' claims of countervailing interests, the court recognized that plaintiff's potential for violence towards a fellow employee raised both an interest in the employer to maintain a safe working environment and a duty to defendants to warn a potential victim if plaintiff presented a serious danger of violence. However, the court held that if plaintiff had posed a danger of violence, defendants would have been free to disclose that fact to the possible victim, but only that fact. Similarly, the employer's interest in a safe workplace would have been satisfied by defendants simply honoring their duties under existing law. There were thus less intrusive alternatives to full disclosure that would have equally well served the defendants' and the employer's interests (49 Cal. App. 4th 402, 447) . The court reversed the judgment for defendants, but as a result of evidence that plaintiff may have waived his constitutional claim, remanded the matter for further proceedings in the trial court.

§ 183.21 Supporting Contention That Statute Requiring Pregnant Minor to Secure Parental Consent Prior to Obtaining Abortion Violates Minor's Constitutional Right of Privacy

[1] FORM Supporting Contention That Statute Requiring Pregnant Minor to Secure Parental Consent Prior to Obtaining Abortion Violates Minor's Constitutional Right of Privacy

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief].

THE STATUTE REQUIRING A PREGNANT MINOR TO SECURE PARENTAL CONSENT PRIOR TO OBTAINING AN ABORTION VIOLATES THE MINOR'S CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHT OF PRIVACY.

A. Minors Possess Right of Privacy Under California Constitution. There can be no question but that minors, as well as adults, possess a constitutional right of privacy under the California Constitution (American Acad. of Pediatrics v. Lungren (1997) 16 Cal. 4th 307, 334, 66 Cal. Rptr. 2d 210, 940 P.2d 797).

B. Statute Implicates Protected Privacy Interest. A statute that restricts a pregnant individual's ability to decide on her own whether to continue or to terminate her pregnancy unquestionably implicates a constitutionally protected privacy interest of a pregnant minor. The right to choose whether to continue or to terminate a pregnancy implicates a woman's fundamental autonomy privacy interest in the preservation of her personal health, her interest in retaining personal control over the integrity of her own body, and her interest in deciding for herself whether to parent a child (American Acad. of Pediatrics v. Lungren (1997) 16 Cal. 4th 307, 331-332, 337, 66 Cal. Rptr. 2d 210, 940 P.2d 797).

C. Pregnant Minors Have Reasonable Expectation of Privacy. Because the parental consent requirement impinges on a fundamental autonomy privacy interest of pregnant minors protected by the state constitutional privacy clause, and because the statute applies to all such minors, the pregnant minors affected by the statute have a reasonable expectation of privacy (American Acad. of Pediatrics v. Lungren (1997) 16 Cal. 4th 307, 338, 66 Cal. Rptr. 2d 210, 940 P.2d 797).

of Pediatrics v. Lungren (1997) 16 Cal. 4th 307, 338-339, 66 Cal. Rptr. 2d 210, 940 P.2d 797).

E. Statute Evaluated Under Compelling Interest Standard. When a statute significantly intrudes on a fundamental, autonomy privacy interest of a minor, proper respect for a minor's state constitutional right of privacy requires a showing that the intrusion is necessary to further a compelling i.e. an extremely important and vital state interest (American Acad. of Pediatrics v. Lungren (1997) 16 Cal. 4th 307, 340, 66 Cal. Rptr. 2d 210, 940 P.2d 797).

F. Effect of Facial Challenge on Balancing Test. When a statute broadly and directly impinges on the fundamental constitutional privacy rights of a substantial portion of those persons to whom the statute applies, the statute can be upheld only if those defending the statute can establish that, considering the statute's general and normal application, the compelling justifications for the statute outweigh the statute's impingement on constitutional privacy rights and cannot be achieved by less intrusive means (American Acad. of Pediatrics v. Lungren (1997) 16 Cal. 4th 307, 343, 66 Cal. Rptr. 2d 210, 940 P.2d 797).

G. Inadequate Justification for Intrusion. Although a state's interests in protecting the health of minors and in preserving and fostering the parent-child relationship are compelling interests, the parental consent requirement was not necessary to further either of these interests (American Acad. of Pediatrics v. Lungren (1997) 16 Cal. 4th 307, 348-354, 66 Cal. Rptr. 2d 210, 940 P.2d 797).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a statute requiring a pregnant minor to secure parental consent prior to obtaining an abortion violates the minor's constitutional right of privacy.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should provide facts showing a pregnant minor's inability to obtain an abortion without parental consent and argue that imposition of this requirement is a violation of the minor's constitutional right to privacy.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Minors Possess Right of Privacy Under California Constitution

American Acad. of Pediatrics v. Lungren (1997) 16 Cal. 4th 307, 334, 66 Cal. Rptr. 2d 210, 940 P.2d 797 , was a facial constitutional challenge to a statutory provision that required a pregnant minor to secure parental consent or judicial authorization before she could obtain an abortion. The trial court, after a lengthy court trial concluded that the statute was unconstitutional, and the court of appeal unanimously agreed with that ruling and affirmed the judgment. The Supreme Court in a 4-3 decision concluded that both the trial court and the court of appeal correctly determined that the statute violated the right of privacy guaranteed by Cal. Const. art. I, § 1.

In the course of the ruling the Supreme Court stated in no uncertain terms that the constitutional right to privacy applied to minors as well as adults and cited the following in support: minors as well as adults are "persons" under the Constitution who are entitled to the protection provided by constitutional rights; Cal. Const. art. I, § 1 specifically declares that all people are by nature free and independent and have inalienable rights, including the right to privacy; the ballot argument accompanying the measure that added the privacy clause in Cal. Const. art. I, § 1 expressly confirms that the constitutional right of privacy afforded by this provision was intended to apply to every Californian, including every man, woman, and child in the state. Therefore, according to the California Supreme Court, there is no question that minors, as well as adults, possess a constitutional right of privacy under the California Constitution (16 Cal. 4th 307, 334) .

[b] Statute Implicates Protected Privacy Interest

The facts and procedural background of American Acad. of Pediatrics v. Lungren (1997) 16 Cal. 4th 307, 66 Cal. Rptr. 2d 210, 940 P.2d 797 , are discussed in § 183.21[3][a]. The Court examined the challenged statute under the standards and principles set forth in the court's prior decision in Hill v. National Collegiate Athletic Assn. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1 . Thus, the Court first determined that the statute which restricted a pregnant individual's ability to decide on her own whether to continue or to terminate her pregnancy, implicated a constitutionally protected privacy interest of the pregnant minor. Specifically, it found that the right to choose whether to continue or to terminate a pregnancy implicated a woman's fundamental autonomy privacy interest in the preservation of her personal health, her interest in retaining personal control over the integrity of her own body, and her interest in deciding for herself whether to parent a child. In the course of this ruling the Court dismissed defendants contention that because the statute applied only to pregnant minors, it did not intrude on a protected privacy interest. The Court first found that there could be no question but that minors, as well as adults, possess a constitutional right of privacy under the California Constitution, and then concluded that because the decision whether to continue or terminate her pregnancy has such a substantial effect on a pregnant minor's control over her personal bodily integrity; has such serious long-term consequences in determining life choices, is so central to the preservation of her ability to define and adhere to her ultimate values regarding the meaning of human existence and life, and is a decision that cannot be postponed until adulthood, a minor who is pregnant has a protected privacy interest under the California Constitution in making the decision whether to continue or to terminate her own pregnancy (16 Cal. 4th 307, 331-336, 337) .

[c] Pregnant Minors Have Reasonable Expectation of Privacy

The facts and procedural background of American Acad. of Pediatrics v. Lungren (1997) 16 Cal. 4th 307, 66 Cal. Rptr. 2d 210, 940 P.2d 797 , are discussed in § 183.21[3][a]. The Court examined the challenged statute under the standards and principles set forth in the court's prior decision in Hill v. National Collegiate Athletic Assn. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1 . The Court began its determination as to whether pregnant minors had a reasonable expectation of privacy by stating that this element contemplates an inquiry into whether there is something in the particular circumstances in which an alleged intrusion of privacy arises that demonstrates the plaintiff has no reasonable expectation of privacy in that context, so that the alleged intrusion would not violate the state Constitution even if there were no justification for the allegedly intrusive conduct (16 Cal. 4th 307, 338). Next it completed such an inquiry into the context surrounding a parental consent requirement for pregnant minors seeking an abortion. The Court found that the challenged statutory requirements applied to all pregnant minors and, unlike the drug testing program in Hill, were not confined to a specific setting or limited context. Because the requirement impinged on a fundamental autonomy privacy interest of pregnant minors protected by the state constitutional privacy clause, and because the statute applied to all such minors, there was, according to the Court, absolutely nothing in the circumstances of this case that would support a conclusion that the pregnant minors affected by this legislation did not have a reasonable expectation of privacy for purposes of the second element of the Hill test. Furthermore, the court found that neither the existence of other statutory provisions requiring parental consent for medical care nor the existence of numerous abortion/parental consent statutes in other states eliminated a minor's reasonable expectation of privacy in this context (16 Cal. 4th 307, 338-339) .

[d] Statute Constitutes Serious Invasion of Privacy Interest

The facts and procedural background of American Acad. of Pediatrics v. Lungren (1997) 16 Cal. 4th 307, 66 Cal. Rptr. 2d 210, 940 P.2d 797 , are discussed in § 183.21[3][a]. The Court examined the challenged statute under the standards and principles set forth in the court's prior decision in Hill v. National Collegiate Athletic Assn. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1 . As to the third element under Hill, the Court held that a statute requiring parental consent before a minor is able to obtain an abortion constituted a significant intrusion on a minor's protected privacy interest (16 Cal. 4th 307, 338-339) . As explained in the lead opinion in Loder v. City of Glendale (1997) 14 Cal. 4th 846, 895, n.22, 59 Cal. Rptr. 2d 696, 927 P.2d 1200 , this third element is intended to screen out intrusions on privacy that are de minimis or insignificant. According to the Court in this case, the effect of a statute requiring parental consent before a minor is able to obtain an abortion could not by any stretch of the imagination, properly be characterized as de minimis or insignificant. (16 Cal. 4th 307, 338-339) . The Court cited the following consequences as significant intrusions: that the statute would deny a pregnant minor control over her own destiny, would increase the health risks posed by an abortion, and could result in a minor terminating the pregnancy herself, seeking a "back-alley" abortion or bearing an unwanted child.

[e] Statute Evaluated Under Compelling Interest Standard

The facts and procedural background of American Acad. of Pediatrics v. Lungren (1997) 16 Cal. 4th 307, 66 Cal. Rptr. 2d 210, 940 P.2d 797 , are discussed in § 183.21[3][a]. The Court examined the challenged statute under the standards and principles set forth in the court's prior decision in Hill v. National Collegiate Athletic Assn. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1 . In Hill the Supreme Court declined to hold that every assertion of a privacy interest under Cal. Const. art. I, section 1 must be overcome by a compelling interest test, however, where a case involved an obvious invasion of an interest fundamental to personal autonomy, it determined that a compelling interest must be present to overcome the vital privacy interest. Applying this rule to the facts of the present case the Court determined that the parental consent statute unquestionably impinged on an interest fundamental to personal autonomy, indeed an interest that was clearly among the most intimate and fundamental of all constitutional rights. Therefore, statutory provisions that intrude or impinge on such a fundamental autonomy privacy interest properly must be evaluated under the compelling interest standard--that is, the defendant must demonstrate a compelling state interest which justifies the intrusion which cannot be served by alternative means less intrusive on fundamental rights. The court dismissed defendants argument that although the compelling interest may constitute the appropriate test for analyzing a statutory provision that impinges on a pregnant adults' constitutional right of choice, a less rigorous standard should apply to a statute such as this that affects the right of choice of a pregnant minor. It countered that when a statute significantly intrudes on a fundamental autonomy privacy interest of a minor, proper respect for a minor's state constitutional right of privacy requires a showing that the intrusion is necessary to further a compelling (an extremely important and vital) state interest (16 Cal. 4th 307, 341) .

[f] Effect of Facial Challenge on Balancing Test

The facts and procedural background of American Acad. of Pediatrics v. Lungren (1997) 16 Cal. 4th 307, 66 Cal. Rptr. 2d 210, 940 P.2d 797 , are discussed in § 183.21[3][a]. The defendants contended that because the case involved a facial challenge to the statute, their burden of justification could be satisfied simply by demonstrating that the provisions of the statute constitutionally could be applied in even a single circumstance covered by the statute. Thus, defendants maintained that the facial challenge to the statute must be rejected if they were able to establish, for example, that the statutory requirement for parental consent or judicial authorization was justified as applied to the relatively small subclass of pregnant minors who lacked the mental capacity to give informed consent to an abortion, even thought the statute was not limited to this class of minors, and even if the statute was invalid as to all other pregnant minors. The Court disagreed with this restrictive approach and determined instead that when a statute broadly and directly impinged on the fundamental constitutional privacy rights of a substantial portion of those persons to whom the statute applies, the statute can be upheld only if those defending the statute can establish that, considering the statute's general and normal application, the compelling justifications for the statute outweigh the statute's impingement on constitutional privacy rights and cannot be achieved by less intrusive means (16 Cal. 4th 307, 348) .

[g] Inadequate Justification for Intrusion

The facts and procedural background of American Acad. of Pediatrics v. Lungren (1997) 16 Cal. 4th 307, 66 Cal. Rptr. 2d 210, 940 P.2d 797 , are discussed in § 183.21[3][a]. The Court determined that when a statute broadly and directly impinges on the fundamental constitutional privacy rights of a substantial portion of those persons to whom the statute applies, the statute can be upheld only if those defending the statute can establish that, considering the statute's general and normal application, the compelling justifications for the statute outweigh the statute's impingement on constitutional privacy rights and cannot be achieved by less intrusive means (16 Cal. 4th 307, 348) . The Court applied this rule and held that defendants failed to demonstrate adequate justification for the statute's intrusion on a minor's right of privacy under the California Constitution. In defending the challenged statutory provision defendants relied on two interests assertedly furthered by the state: protecting the physical, emotion and psychological health of minors and the preservation and promotion of the parent-child relationship. Although the Court agreed that a state's interests in protecting the health of minors and in preserving and fostering the parent-child relationship were compelling interests for purposes of constitutional analysis. it held that the parental consent requirement was not necessary to further either of these interests (16 Cal. 4th 307, 348-354) .

The Court reasoned that defendants' contention that the restrictions imposed by the statute on a minor's constitutionally protected right of privacy were necessary to protect the physical and emotional health of a pregnant minor was undermined by the fact that California law authorized a minor, without parental consent, to obtain medical care and make other important decisions in analogous contexts that posed at least equal or greater risks to the health of a minor and her child as those posed by the decision to terminate a pregnancy. Moreover, the existence in California of numerous other "limited medical emancipation" statutes that authorized minors, without parental consent, to obtain medical care in a variety of settings relating to sexual activity further undermined defendants' claim that the statute in this case was necessary to further defendants' asserted interests. The Court's conclusion was also supported by the overwhelming, uncontroverted evidence that was introduced at trial. This evidence showed that rather than protecting the state's interests, the legislation would in fact injure the health of the minors and the parent-child relationship. Lastly, the Court ruled that the statute could not be justified by the state's interest in ensuring that the determination whether a pregnant minor is sufficiently competent and mature to consent to an abortion was made in a fair and unbiased manner because nothing in the record justified an assumption that licensed health care providers could not be trusted to make an unbiased determination as to whether a minor was capable of giving informed consent to an abortion (16 Cal. 4th 307, 357) .

NOTE:

The decision in American Academy, a case involving an enormous number of attorneys and amicus curiae, reflects a sharply divided California Supreme Court. There were five separate opinions issued in the case. The lead opinion was written by Chief Justice George, with Justices Werdegar and Chin concurring. A concurring opinion was written by Justice Kennard, and three separate dissenting opinions were authored by Justices Mosk, Baxter, and Brown.

[1] FORM Supporting Contention That Plaintiff Has State Constitutional Cause of Action for Invasion of Privacy--Criminal Defense Attorney's Unauthorized Reading and Dissemination of Victim's Confidential Mental Health Records

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief].

DEFENDANT'S CONDUCT, READING AND DISSEMINATING A CRIME VICTIM'S CONFIDENTIAL MENTAL HEALTH RECORDS WITHOUT AUTHORIZATION, SUPPORTS A CAUSE OF ACTION FOR INVASION OF PLAINTIFF'S CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHT TO PRIVACY.

A. Elements of State Constitutional Right to Privacy Action. [See § 183.20, Paragraphs A-D].

B. Invasion Based on Criminal Defense Attorney's Reading and Dissemination of Crime Victim's Mental Health Records. A crime victim has a cause of action for invasion of her constitutional right to privacy against a criminal defense attorney who, without authorization, reads and disseminates the victim's confidential mental health records (Susan S. v. Israels (1997) 55 Cal. App. 4th 1290, 1293, 67 Cal. Rptr. 2d 42).

C. Action Not Barred by Litigation Privilege. The litigation privilege does not shield a criminal defense attorney from liability for reading and disseminating a crime victim's private mental health records for the purpose of gathering evidence to be used in the course of a criminal proceeding (Susan S. v. Israels (1997) 55 Cal. App. 4th 1290, 1301, 67 Cal. Rptr. 2d 42).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that plaintiff crime victim has a state constitutional cause of action for invasion of privacy based on a criminal defense attorney's unauthorized reading and dissemination of his or her confidential mental health records.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should provide facts showing that defendant read and disseminated plaintiff's confidential mental health records without authorization and argue that this conduct constituted a violation of plaintiff's constitutional right to privacy.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Invasion Based on Criminal Defense Attorney's Reading and Dissemination of Crime Victim's Mental Health Records

In Susan S. v. Israels (1997) 55 Cal. App. 4th 1290, 67 Cal. Rptr. 2d 42 , a criminal defense attorney represented a client charged with the sexual battery of plaintiff. In the course of that representation the attorney served a subpoena duces tecum for the plaintiff's mental health records on a mental health treatment facility. The facility mistakenly sent plaintiff's records directly to the attorney instead of the trial court and the attorney, knowing the private and confidential nature of the documents, read them, transmitted them to the defense psychiatrist and used them in cross-examining plaintiff. Plaintiff sued the attorney and his client for invasion of privacy, Cal. Const. art. I section 1. The trial court sustained defendants' demurrer to the complaint with leave to amend. Plaintiff elected not to amend her complaint and her action was dismissed. Plaintiff appealed the judgment of dismissal.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that a criminal defense attorney's reading and dissemination of a crime victim's confidential mental health records violated the victim's constitutional right of privacy (55 Cal. App. 4th 1290, 1294) . The court began by stating the factors necessary for a plaintiff to allege a state constitutional invasion of privacy, as outlined in Hill v. National Collegiate Athletic Assn. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1, 39-40 : a legally protected privacy interest, a reasonable expectation of privacy in the circumstances, and conduct by the defendant constituting a serious invasion of privacy.

The court first stated that it was undisputed that plaintiff had a legally protected privacy interest in her mental health records. It then found that plaintiff had a reasonable expectation of privacy in the circumstances and reasoned that plaintiff did not lose her right to privacy in her mental health records because she charged defendant with sexual battery, rather, defendant's entitlement to inspect plaintiff's records required a showing of good cause for their discovery and a balancing of defendant's Sixth Amendment right of cross examination against plaintiff's right to privacy in her medical records, none of which happened in this case. In addition, the court reasoned that the subpoena duces tecum procedure itself implicitly recognized an expectation of privacy on the part of the person whose records are subpoenaed. The court dismissed defendants' arguments that plaintiff could not have a reasonable expectation of privacy in her mental health records because those records would have been inevitably discovered during the course of litigation and that the very existence of disclosure procedures for these records foreclosed any reasonable expectation of privacy.

Lastly, the court determined that a stranger's unauthorized reading and dissemination of plaintiff's mental health records was a serious invasion of her privacy. In doing so it dismissed both of defendants' arguments: that the criminal defense attorney's mere reading of plaintiff's medical records could not support her claim of serious invasion, and that there was no serious invasion because when a hearing eventually was held in the underlying criminal proceeding the trial court permitted the defense psychiatrist to testify based on what he read in plaintiff's records. The court concluded that plaintiff's complaint adequately alleged the serious invasion element. The complaint alleged that the criminal defense attorney read and disseminated her mental health records knowing the information contained in them could be highly sensitive and embarrassing to her, that she in fact was intimidated, embarrassed and humiliated, suffered severe emotional distress and that her mental condition was exacerbated as a result (55 Cal. App. 4th 1290, 1299) .

[b] Action Not Barred by Litigation Privilege

The facts and procedural background of Susan S. v. Israels (1997) 55 Cal. App. 4th 1290, 67 Cal. Rptr. 2d 42 , are discussed in § 183.22[3][a]. The defendants argued on appeal that they were immune from liability under the litigation privilege. The court rejected this argument, and found that the litigation privilege did not shield a criminal defense attorney from liability for reading and disseminating a crime victim's private mental health records for the purpose of gathering evidence to be used in the course of a criminal proceeding (55 Cal. App. 4th 1290, 1301) . The court stated that plaintiff's cause of action did not depend on the publication or broadcast of her mental health records but rested on the criminal defense attorney's conduct in reading those records.

NOTE:

In Susan S., the defendants and their amici curiae expressed fear that upholding plaintiff's cause of action for invasion of privacy would interfere with a criminal defendant's right to confront and cross-examine the witnesses against him or her and chill counsel's zealous advocacy on the defendant's behalf. They argued that by upholding plaintiff's cause of action under the facts of this case, the court was subjecting criminal defense counsel to liability every time they opened their mail. One amicus curiae took the argument one step further and argued that the criminal defense attorney in this case had to read through all of plaintiff's medical records before he could determine that they were actually medical records. The court of appeal found these fears groundless and these arguments without merit. The court explained that the plaintiff in this case did not claim, nor did it hold, that the defense attorney invaded her privacy by opening an envelope addressed to him. Rather, the invasion of privacy took place when the attorney read the entire record contained in that envelope and then transmitted it to the defense psychiatrist [Susan S. v. Israels (1997) 55 Cal. App. 4th 1290, 1301-1302, 67 Cal. Rptr. 2d 42] . Despite the court's dismissal of defendants' fears in this regard, in light of the holding in this case, criminal defense attorneys would be wise to practice caution before subpoenaing, reading and disseminating a crime victim's confidential mental health records.

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Action Not Barred by Litigation Privilege

In Mansell v. Otto (2003) 108 Cal. App. 4th 265, 133 Cal. Rptr. 2d 276 , the plaintiff was a crime victim who brought an action for invasion of privacy under the California Constitution against the attorneys for the criminal defendant, based on their unauthorized reading of her confidential mental health records in preparation of their case. The trial court sustained the defendants' demurrer because of the judicial privilege of Civ. Code § 47(b). However, based on the holding of Susan S., the court of appeal held that the judicial privilege did not apply to the reading of the plaintiff's confidential records without her consent, because the act of reading the records was noncommunicative conduct (108 Cal. App. 4th 265, 271-272) . The court of appeal also held that the plaintiff could not state a cause of action under the circumstances because the defendants had obtained the records pursuant to a court order and because the records had been released to the defendants by the prosecutor after having been released to the court under seal (108 Cal. App. 4th 265, 276-277) .

§ 183.23 Supporting Contention That Plaintiff Has Stated Constitutional Cause of Action for Invasion of Privacy--Reasonable Cause Drug Testing by Private Employer

[1] FORM Supporting Contention That Plaintiff Has Stated Constitutional Cause of Action for Invasion of Privacy--Reasonable Cause Drug Testing by Private Employer

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief].

AN EMPLOYER'S DEMAND THAT AN EMPLOYEE SUBMIT TO A URINALYSIS DRUG/ALCOHOL TEST MAY VIOLATE THE EMPLOYEE'S STATE CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHT TO PRIVACY IF THE DEFENDANT DID NOT HAVE REASONABLE CAUSE TO BELIEVE THE EMPLOYEE WAS INTOXICATED.

A. Elements of State Constitutional Right to Privacy Action. [See § 183.20, Paragraphs A-D].

B. Existence of Reasonable Cause Is Relevant to Determining Constitutionality of Employer's Drug Test Demand. In suspicion based drug test cases the issue of reasonable cause is relevant to determining the constitutionality of the employer's drug test demand (Kraslawsky v. Upper Deck Co. (1997) 56 Cal. App. 4th 179, 188, 65 Cal. Rptr. 2d 297).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a plaintiff who alleges that his or her employer has demanded a drug test without reasonable cause has stated a constitutional cause of action for invasion of privacy.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should provide facts showing that the employer had no suspicion that plaintiff was intoxicated when it demanded a drug test and argue that the lack of reasonable cause for the demand subjected plaintiff to a random drug test, thereby violating his or her right to privacy.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Existence of Reasonable Cause Is Relevant to Determining Constitutionality of Employer's Drug Test Demand

In Kraslawsky v. Upper Deck Co. (1997) 56 Cal. App. 4th 179, 65 Cal. Rptr. 2d 297 , plaintiff, who was terminated after refusing to take a drug/alcohol test under defendant's reasonable cause drug testing program, sued her employer for violating her constitutional right to privacy under Cal. Const. art. I, § 1. Plaintiff did not challenge the constitutionality of her employer's suspicion-based testing program. Instead she contended that her employer's demand that she submit to a drug test violated her state constitutional right to privacy because the employer did not have reasonable cause to believe she was intoxicated. The defendant countered that (1) the existence of reasonable cause was not relevant to the constitutional privacy analysis and (2) plaintiff did not proffer sufficient evidence to create a triable issue of fact on the reasonable cause issue. The trial court granted summary judgment in favor of defendant and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that summary judgment was improper because the existence of reasonable cause was relevant and plaintiff submitted evidence creating a triable issue of fact as to whether defendant had reasonable cause to believe she was under the influence of intoxicants (56 Cal. App. 4th 179, 188) . The thrust of defendants argument was that the existence of reasonable cause was not relevant here because its reasonable cause policy was constitutional; if an employer maintains a constitutionally valid suspicion-based testing policy, the fact that the suspicion did not actually exist does not matter. The court disagreed. It stated that under Loder v. City of Glendale (1997) 14 Cal. 4th 846, 889-898, 59 Cal. Rptr. 2d 696, 927 P.2d 1200 , the constitutionality of a drug test under the California Constitution is evaluated by balancing the employee's reasonable expectation of privacy against the employer's legitimate interests in imposing the test. Stated the court, in the absence of reasonable cause for a particular urinalysis request, the outcome of this balancing test may be different. If a drug test is not triggered by a reasonable belief that the employee is intoxicated, the employee may have a stronger reason to expect to maintain his or her privacy and the employer may have less need to demand the test.

In applying these principles to this case, the court found that plaintiff, an executive secretary whose job duties were neither safety nor security sensitive, had a substantial expectation that she would not be required to take a random drug test. Further, there were no circumstances particular to defendants' working environment or plaintiff's job position that would have reduced her expectations of privacy in the context of a random drug test. By comparison, the court found that, absent reasonable cause, defendant's legitimate need to require the drug test was substantially reduced. Defendant's stated reasons for conducting employee drug tests were expressly premised on a reasonable cause program; it admitted it did not use, nor favor, random testing. Additionally, according to the court, there were other less intrusive ways defendant could have satisfied its objective of ensuring a drug-free workplace, rather than imposing random drug tests on existing employees. In concluding that the issue of reasonable cause was relevant to determining the constitutionality of defendant's drug test demand, the court reasoned that a contrary ruling would essentially give an employer with a constitutionally valid drug testing policy a free license to conduct random testing, regardless of the circumstances. This result would be inconsistent with the privacy rights protected by the California Constitution. In closing, the court noted that in determining the constitutionality of a particular drug test demand (as opposed to a facial challenge), federal courts regularly conduct a factual analysis as to the extent to which the employer had reasonable cause to require the test (56 Cal. App. 4th 179, 188) .

NOTE:

In Kraslawsky, the defendant did not attempt to argue, nor did the court rule, that a random drug test would be consistent with the state Constitution's privacy provision. Instead, defendant maintained that the existence of reasonable cause was not relevant here because its reasonable cause policy was constitutional. In a footnote the court added that while a majority of the Supreme Court has yet to expressly reach the issue of random drug testing under the California Constitution, in the Fourth Amendment context courts generally hold a drug test of an existing employee without any individualized suspicion is unreasonable, unless the employee is in a safety or security sensitive position. Thus, it is uncertain how helpful this holding will be in random versus reasonable cause drug testing cases.

Also, Kraslawsky did not involve a facial challenge to the constitutionality of a particular drug test, but instead involved a constitutional challenge to the manner in which a drug testing program was applied. Therefore, the court did not rule on the constitutionality of the reasonable cause drug test used in this case. This case stands for the proposition that even if an employer's reasonable cause drug testing policy is constitutionally valid, an employer's demand that an employee submit to a drug/alcohol test without good cause or reason and at random may violate the employee's constitutional right to privacy [see Kraslawsky v. Upper Deck Co. (1997) 56 Cal. App. 4th 179, 189, 65 Cal. Rptr. 2d 297 ; see also Loder v. City of Glendale (1997) 14 Cal. 4th 846, 889-898, 59 Cal. Rptr. 2d 696, 927 P.2d 1200 (facial challenge to city employee drug testing program that tested job applicants and existing employees conditionally approved for promotion)].

§ 183.24 Opposing Contention That Plaintiff Has State Constitutional Cause of Action for Invasion of Privacy--Balancing Test

[1] FORM Opposing Contention That Plaintiff Has State Constitutional Cause of Action for Invasion of Privacy--Balancing Test

[The following may be included in a memorandum or points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT DID NOT INVADE PLAINTIFF'S PRIVACY IN VIOLATION OF CALIFORNIA CONSTITUTION, ARTICLE I, SECTION 1, BECAUSE _____ [specify any or all of the following, THE DEFENDANT'S CONDUCT DOES NOT IMPACT ON A LEGALLY PROTECTED PRIVACY INTEREST and/or THE PLAINTIFF HAS NO REASONABLE EXPECTATION OF PRIVACY and/or THE DEFENDANT'S INVASION IS NOT SERIOUS and/or THE DEFENDANT HAS SHOWN A COMPETING OR COUNTERVAILING PRIVACY OR NON PRIVACY INTEREST THAT JUSTIFIES THE INTRUSION].

[EITHER]

A. Defendant's Conduct Does Not Impact a Legally Protected Privacy Interest. An essential element of a state constitutional cause of action for invasion of privacy (Cal. Const. art. I, § 1) is that the defendant's conduct impacts a specific, legally protected interest, such as informational privacy or autonomy privacy [Hill v. National Collegiate Athletic Assn. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1, 35-36] .

[AND/OR]

B. Plaintiff Has No Reasonable or a Diminished Expectation of Privacy. An essential element of a state constitutional cause of action for invasion of privacy (Cal. Const. art. I, § 1) is that the plaintiff has a reasonable expectation of privacy. Particular circumstances may diminish the plaintiff's expection of privacy [Hill v. National Collegiate Athletic Assn. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1, 36-37] .

[AND/OR]

C. No Serious Invasion of Privacy Interest. An actionable invasion of privacy under Section 1, Article I, of the California Constitution, must be sufficiently serious in its nature, scope, and actual or potential impact to constitute an egregious breach of the social norms underlying the privacy right [Hill v. National Collegiate Athletic Assn. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1, 37] .

[AND/OR]

D. Balancing Test. When the defendant has shown that legitimate, competing or countervailing, privacy or nonprivacy interests outweigh the specifically identified privacy interest of the plaintiff, then there is no violation of the privacy right [Hill v. National Collegiate Athletic Assn. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1, 37-38] .

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that the plaintiff has a state constitutional cause of action for invasion of privacy, or to argue that the defendant has shown that competing interests outweigh the plaintiff's privacy interest [see Hill v. National Collegiate Athletic Assn. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1] . If the defendant must justify the invasion of privacy by asserting a compelling interest, counsel should use the points and authorities in § 183.27, bearing in mind that the California Supreme Court has curtailed the circumstances when this standard may apply.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raised the substantive issue of violation of the constitutional privacy right. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Plaintiff Has No Reasonable or a Diminished Expectation of Privacy

In Heller v. Norcal Mut. Ins. Co. (1994) 8 Cal. 4th 30, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 200, 876 P.2d 999 , plaintiff had instituted a medical malpractice action against her former physician. The physician's insurer defended that action, and discussed plaintiff's medical condition with an associate of the physician, who at the time was still treating plaintiff. Plaintiff sued the insurer and the associate, alleging that the disclosure violated her state constitutional right to privacy. Applying the analysis set forth in Hill v. National Collegiate Athletic Assn. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1, 37-40 , the Court held that the facts as pled in the complaint did not, as a matter of law, support a conclusion that any expectation of privacy regarding plaintiff's medical condition would be reasonable under the circumstances of the case (8 Cal. 4th 30, 43) . The Court relied on the fact that plaintiff had put her medical condition at issue by filing the malpractice action; the information would have been discovered in the course of the action (8 Cal. 4th 30, 43-44) .

In Barbee v. Household Auto. Fin. Corp. (2003) 113 Cal. App. 4th 525, 6 Cal. Rptr. 3d 406 , the plaintiff brought an action against his former employer for violation of the constitutional right to privacy after he was terminated for refusing to end an intimate relationship with a subordinate. The trial court granted summary judgment for the employer, and the court of appeal affirmed. The court of appeal assumed, without deciding, that the fired employee may have a legally protected privacy interest in pursuing an intimate sexual relationship. However, the court concluded that the employee did not have a reasonable expectation of privacy under the circumstances. Existing court decisions had already recognized the right of employers to restrict intimate relationships between employees if those relationships created potential conflicts of interest. In addition, the plaintiff's former employer had given advance notice to the plaintiff that the employer believed the relationship presented a potential conflict of interest. Without a reasonable expectation of privacy under the circumstances, the plaintiff could not establish a necessary element of his invasion of privacy claim (113 Cal. App. 4th 525, 532-533) .

In People v. Martinez (2001) 88 Cal. App. 4th 465, 105 Cal. Rptr. 2d 841 , a state prisoner serving a sentence for failing to register as a sex offender was declared a sexually violent predator under Welf. & Inst. Code § 6600 and committed for two years. The prisoner appealed the order of commitment in part on the grounds that the prosecutor's use of the prisoner's records of psychiatric treatment and evaluation violated his right to privacy under the California Constitution. The court of appeal sustained the order of commitment. Although the court recognized the settled principle that the privacy of a person's medical history and psychological records is constitutionally protected (88 Cal. App. 4th 465, 474-475) , the court concluded that the prisoner's expectation of privacy in his records and history was substantially diminished, if not completely eliminated. Not only did the Sexually Violent Predators Act expressly provide for the disclosure of all relevant records, but the prisoner was informed that any information given during the evaluations made prior to the commitment proceeding would be included in written reports and testimony, and the prisoner nonetheless signed consent forms for the evaluations (88 Cal. App. 4th 465, 476-477) .

In Smith v. Fresno Irrigation Dist. (1999) 72 Cal. App. 4th 147, 84 Cal. Rptr. 2d 775 , plaintiff, who was terminated from his employment after failing a random drug test, brought suit against his former employer, alleging in part that the drug testing violated his privacy rights under the California Constitution and constituted an unreasonable search and seizure under the Fourth Amendment of the Federal Constitution. The trial court found for plaintiff, but the court of appeal reversed. In reaching its decision, the court of appeal noted that the employer had given all employees six months' notice before it implemented the drug testing policy. The court concluded that, while advance notice does not automatically defeat an employee's argument that drug testing is unconstitutional, the advance warning diminished the employee's expectation of privacy (72 Cal. App. 4th 147, 162) .

[b] No Serious Invasion of Privacy Interest

In Heller v. Norcal Mut. Ins. Co. (1994) 8 Cal. 4th 30, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 200, 876 P.2d 999 , discussed in § 183.24[4][a], the Court held that the inevitable disclosure of the plaintiff's medical condition in her pending medical malpractice action made the prior disclosure of that information insufficiently serious, as a matter of law, to support a finding of a violation of the state constitutional right to privacy (8 Cal. 4th 30, 44) .

In People v. Martinez (2001) 88 Cal. App. 4th 465, 105 Cal. Rptr. 2d 841 , discussed in § 183.24[3][b], the court of appeal held that although the unauthorized disclosure and review of a person's medical records and psychological evaluations may be a serious invasion of privacy, in the context of a commitment proceeding under the Sexually Violent Predators Act, the defendant's mental state is the primary focus, and a prosecutor's examination of relevant psychological records that have already been disclosed, examined, relied on, and extensively summarized by nontreating doctors does not represent an egregious invasion of privacy (88 Cal. App. 4th 465, 478) .

[c] Balancing Test

In In re Carmen M. (2006) 141 Cal. App. 4th 478, 46 Cal. Rptr. 3d 117 , a juvenile court ordered a dependent minor to submit to drug testing if the staff of the minor's group home believe the minor is under the influence of drugs. The minor filed a petition for writ of mandate opposing the order. The court of appeal upheld the juvenile court order. The court noted that the minor had a documented history of drug abuse and had been responding well to a treatment program that had included drug testing. The court also noted that the drug testing order in that case was narrowly tailored to require testing only if the staff suspected that the minor was under the influence. Applying a balancing test, the court of appeal concluded that the juvenile court's legitimate interest in monitoring the dependent minor's recovery justified the limited intrusion on the minor's privacy rights (141 Cal. App. 4th 478, 494) .

In Ortiz v. Los Angeles Police Relief Assn. (2002) 98 Cal. App. 4th 1288, 1312-1313 , the plaintiff was employed by an association that administered police officer employee benefits and, in the course of her employment, she had access to confidential police officer personnel records. When she made known her intention to marry an incarcerated felon, her employer, concerned about protecting against the improper disclosure of police officer information to a convicted criminal, asked the plaintiff to reconsider her marriage plans or resign her employment with the association. She refused to do either and was fired. She sued the association for invasion of the state constitutional right to privacy. The trial court granted summary judgment for the employer, and the court of appeal affirmed. Recognizing the employee's fundamental privacy right to marry without interference from her employer, the court nonetheless balanced that right with the association's legitimate interests. The court concluded that the association's policy, which required the employee to choose between her employment with the association and her marriage to the incarcerated felon, was a rational means of pursuing its interest in protecting against the possible dissemination of confidential information to a convicted criminal (98 Cal. App. 4th 1288, 1312-1313) .

In People v. Martinez (2001) 88 Cal. App. 4th 465, 105 Cal. Rptr. 2d 841 , discussed in § 184.24[3][b], the court of appeal held that any minimal invasion of privacy that may have occurred through the prosecutor's use of defendant's psychological records in a commitment proceeding brought under the Sexually Violent Predators Act was justified by the compelling state interest in protecting the public from sexually violent predators, who are likely to continue such conduct even after serving their criminal sentences. To decide whether to file a petition for commitment, the prosecutor must have access to and be able to review any psychological evaluations made of the alleged predator (88 Cal. App. 4th 465, 479-480) .

In Smith v. Fresno Irrigation Dist. (1999) 72 Cal. App. 4th 147, 84 Cal. Rptr. 2d 775 , discussed in § 183.24[3][b], the court of appeal, recognizing that the determination of whether a particular drug test is constitutional required employing a balancing test, held that the random drug testing of the plaintiff was constitutional. The court balanced the employer's legitimate safety concerns in minimizing the risk of injury to co-employees with the plaintiff's privacy interests, and held that the employer's safety interests outweighed the employee's privacy interests, especially in light of the diminished expectation of privacy the employees had after being given six-months' advance notice of the drug testing program (72 Cal. App. 4th 147, 162-163) . The court noted that the job duties and working environment of employees in the plaintiff's particular construction and maintenance position placed co-workers at risk, agreed that these conditions justified the safety-sensitive classification that the employer had bestowed on the position, and concluded that the employer's concerns for the safety of co-workers were sufficient to justify the random drug testing (72 Cal. App. 4th 147, 163-167) .

In Gilbert v. National Enquirer, Inc. (1996) 43 Cal. App. 4th 1135, 51 Cal. Rptr. 2d 91 , plaintiff, a well-known actress, sought a preliminary injunction against her ex-husband and a newspaper to prevent them from disclosing allegedly defamatory statements regarding her sexual relationships and substance abuse. The paper had already published an interview with the husband which became the basis of a defamation action by plaintiff. Plaintiff then sought the injunction to prevent future revelations. The trial court issued the injunction, stating that plaintiff's right of privacy outweighed the ex-husband's right of free speech. The court of appeal disagreed, holding that the preliminary injunction was an unconstitutional prior restraint on the ex-husband's and the newspaper's First Amendment rights. The court stated that prior restraints are disfavored and presumptively invalid, and are not permitted to stop the publication of a defamatory statement (43 Cal. App. 4th 1135, 1144) . The court recognized that not all prior restraints are invalid, with exceptions for extraordinary circumstances. However, the court found that the injunction was too broad in applying to information obtained at any time in the course of the ex-husband's relationship to plaintiff. Furthermore, the court reasoned that heightened public interest in the personal activities of a well-known actor is a factor to be weighed in balancing the competing interests (43 Cal. App. 4th 1135, 1145-1146) . Concluding that plaintiff's right to privacy did not outweigh the ex-husband's right to express his uncensored opinion about her use of drugs and alcohol and her sexual relationships, so that the preliminary injunction was an invalid prior restraint, the court reversed the order issuing the preliminary injunction.

[1] FORM Opposing Contention That Plaintiff Has State Constitutional Cause of Action for Invasion of Privacy--Right to Privacy Waived

[The following may be included in a memorandum or points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF IS NOT ENTITLED TO RECOVER FOR VIOLATION OF PRIVACY UNDER CALIFORNIA CONSTITUTION, ARTICLE I, SECTION 1, BECAUSE PLAINTIFF WAIVED ANY CONSTITUTIONAL CLAIM TO PRIVACY BY _____ [specify acts or conduct constituting waiver].

Right to Privacy Waived by Voluntary Disclosure. Plaintiff's right to recover in a state constitutional action for invasion of privacy (Cal. Const. art. I, § 1) is waived by plaintiff's voluntary disclosure of the information subsequently disclosed by defendant (Pettus v. Cole (1996) 49 Cal. App. 4th 402, 448, 57 Cal. Rptr. 2d 46).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a defendant's contention in a state constitutional action for invasion of privacy that plaintiff waived the right to a recovery by voluntarily disclosing the information.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of waiver of a state constitutional action for invasion of privacy, for example in a motion for summary judgment. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Right to Privacy Waived by Voluntary Disclosure

In Pettus v. Cole (1996) 49 Cal. App. 4th 402, 57 Cal. Rptr. 2d 46 , plaintiff, brought an action against two psychiatrists for invasion of his constitutional right of privacy [Cal. Const. art. I, § 1], for providing plaintiff's employer with a detailed report of their psychiatric examinations of plaintiff without written authorization for such disclosure. Subsequent to defendants' report, plaintiff's employer demanded that he enroll in an inpatient alcohol rehabilitation program. Plaintiff refused, and was discharged. At the close of plaintiff's case-in-chief the trial court granted defendants' motion for judgment, concluding that the disclosure was allowed under the Confidentiality of Medical Information Act [Civ. Code § 56 et seq.].

The court of appeal first considered the disclosure in light of the Confidentiality of Medical Information Act, and concluded that plaintiff's rights had been violated. The court then addressed the question of whether this conduct also constituted a violation of his state constitutional right of privacy under the standards of Hill v. National Collegiate Athletic Assn. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1 , and concluded that it did. However, the evidence indicated that in conversations with his employer prior to his meetings with defendants, plaintiff had voluntarily disclosed at least some of the sensitive personal and medical information which was subsequently wrongfully transmitted by defendants to plaintiff's employer. The court reasoned that if plaintiff had already disclosed the damaging information which he claimed defendants revealed, then he might not be able to claim any legally protected privacy interest with respect to that information, or to prove the reasonableness of his expectation that defendants would maintain the confidentiality of information already known by his employer (49 Cal. App. 4th 402, 448) . Thus, although the court reversed the judgment for defendants, it remanded the matter for further proceedings in the trial court as a result of the evidence that plaintiff may have waived his constitutional claim.

[a] Right to Privacy Waived by Voluntary Disclosure

In Garrett v. Young (2003) 109 Cal. App. 4th 1393, 1 Cal. Rptr. 3d 134 , the plaintiff brought an action against a doctor for violation of the Confidentiality of Medical Information Act, Civ. Code § 56 et seq., and for invasion of privacy. The action was based on the doctor's providing the plaintiff's supervisor at work with general information about the plaintiff's medical condition, which consisted of an itch and rash apparently brought on by work stress, and mentioning that the plaintiff was not ready to return to work. The trial court granted directed verdicts for the defendant on both causes of action, and the court of appeal affirmed. The court of appeal held that the information was the type of general information permitted to be disclosed under the Confidentiality of Medical Information Act (109 Cal. App. 4th 1393, 1406-1409) . The court also held that as to her invasion of privacy claim, the plaintiff had no reasonable expectation of privacy in the information conveyed by the doctor to her supervisor. The plaintiff had herself told her supervisor about the rash and itching, asked him for advice about where to go for medical treatment, and had also mentioned the possibility of diagnostic testing. She had also repeatedly complained to other workers about what she perceived as intolerable work conditions, which included unfair demands, harassment, and persecution, such that she could not support a claim of invasion of privacy based on the doctor's mere mention of the fact that she suffered from work-related stress (109 Cal. App. 4th 1393, 1412) .

§ 183.26 Supporting Contention That Defendant Invaded Plaintiff's Right to Privacy in Violation of California Constitution--Failure to Show Compelling Interest

[1] FORM Supporting Contention That Defendant Invaded Plaintiff's Right to Privacy in Violation of California Constitution--Failure to Show Compelling Interest

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT'S INVASION OF PLAINTIFF'S PRIVACY VIOLATED THE CALIFORNIA CONSTITUTION, ARTICLE I, SECTION 1, BECAUSE THE DEFENDANT HAS FAILED TO SHOW A COMPELLING INTEREST SUFFICIENT TO JUSTIFY AN _____ [either OBVIOUS GOVERNMENT ACTION IMPACTING FREEDOM OF EXPRESSION AND ASSOCIATION and/or OBVIOUS INVASION OF AN INTEREST FUNDAMENTAL TO PERSONAL AUTONOMY].

Compelling Interest Required to Justify Some Aspects of Right to Privacy Under California Constitution. The use of the "compelling interest" standard is required to justify aspects of the right of privacy under Cal. Const. art. I, § 1, that implicate obvious government action impacting freedom of expression or an obvious invasion of an interest fundamental to personal autonomy [Hill v. National Collegiate Athletic Assn. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1 ; see White v. Davis (1975) 13 Cal. 3d 757, 775, 120 Cal. Rptr. 94, 533 P.2d 222] .

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that defendant has invaded plaintiff's privacy in violation of Cal. Const. art. I, § 1, because defendant has failed to show a compelling interest sufficient to justify the invasion. In Hill v. NCAA, the Court limited the use of the "compelling interest" standard to cases implicating either "obvious government action impacting freedom of expression and association" or an "obvious invasion of an interest fundamental to personal autonomy" [Hill v. National Collegiate Athletic Assn. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1] . Otherwise, the standard for determining an unconstitutional invasion of privacy is a less stringent balancing test that compares a specifically identified privacy interest with competing and countervailing nonprivacy interests [Hill v. National Collegiate Athletic Assn. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1 (applying this test to NCAA drug-testing program for student athletes and finding no violation); see § 183.20].

The plaintiff should use the applicable portions of the points and authorities in § 183.20 with these points and authorities to support the contention that the essential elements for a constitutional cause of action for invasion of privacy have been met. These elements also apply under the compelling interest standard. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Compelling Interest Standard Is Limited

In Hill v. National Collegiate Athletic Assn. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1 [see § 183.20[3]], the California Supreme Court rejected the blanket use of the compelling-interest standard, and limited its use to aspects of the right of privacy under Cal. Const. art. I, § 1, that implicate obvious government action, impacting freedom of expression or an obvious invasion of an interest fundamental to personal autonomy. Hill culminates a trend that makes it clear that "not every act which has some impact on personal privacy invokes the protections of the state's Constitution and requires such justification" [Wilkinson v. Times Mirror Corp. (1989) 215 Cal. App. 3d 1034, 1046-1048, 264 Cal. Rptr. 194] .

Some appellate decisions have applied a less rigorous standard with regard to a minor's right to privacy in sexual matters, holding that these matters are governed by the "significant state interest" test, rather than the compelling-interest standard, on the basis of the state's greater latitude to regulate the conduct of children [People v. Stockton Pregnancy Control Med. Clinic, Inc. (1988) 203 Cal. App. 3d 225, 241, 249 Cal. Rptr. 762 ; Planned Parenthood Affiliates v. Van de Kamp (1986) 181 Cal. App. 3d 245, 277-281, 226 Cal. Rptr. 361 (both cases regarding criminal child-abuse reporting statutes)]. Another case has held, however, that the compelling-interest test does apply in those matters, noting that a compelling interest may justify enacting a statute to afford minors special protections even though the same statute, if applied to adults, would be unconstitutional [American Acad. of Pediatrics v. Van de Kamp (1989) 214 Cal. App. 3d 831, 844-845, 263 Cal. Rptr. 46 (upholding preliminary injunction against enforcement of Civ. Code § 34.5, which prohibits therapeutic abortions on unemancipated minors absent parental consent or court order)]. After Hill, the vitality of both lines of decisions is in doubt since the California Supreme Court made it clear that the Hill standard will apply to future claims for invasion of the state constitutional right to privacy. The Court offered no analysis on the continuing vitality of cases decided before Hill.

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in § 183.27 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Compelling Interest Required to Justify Some Aspects of Right to Privacy Under California Constitution

Hill v. National Collegiate Athletic Assn. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1 , is discussed in § 183.20[3][d]. The California Supreme Court rejected the blanket use of the compelling interest standard. The Court analyzed its decision in White v. Davis [White v. Davis (1975) 13 Cal. 3d 757], as only applying to some aspects of the right of privacy under Cal. Const. art. I, § 1, such as those that implicate obvious government action impacting freedom of expression. The Court also suggested that the compelling interest standard is applicable in cases that involve an obvious invasion of an interest fundamental to personal autonomy, such as freedom to from involuntary fertilization or the freedom to pursue consensual familial relationships. If the privacy right is less central, then the "balancing test" standard applies [see § 183.20], and this test is less stringent than the compelling interest standard (7 Cal. 4th 1, 34-35) .

White v. Davis (1975) 13 Cal. 3d 757, 120 Cal. Rptr. 94, 533 P.2d 222 , was an action by a taxpayer to enjoin the expenditure of public funds as violative of state and federal constitutional guarantees of freedom of privacy, speech, assembly, and due process of law. The funds were spent in connection with police covert intelligence gathering operations that included posing as students, recording university classroom discussions, and compiling dossiers on students and professors. The operations were conducted even though no illegal activity was reported. Defendant's demurrer was sustained, and plaintiff appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed, holding that the police activities constituted a violation of the provision of Cal. Const. art. I, § 1, guaranteeing the right of privacy (13 Cal. 3d 757, 776, 777) . The Court identified the types of conduct at which the constitutional provision was directed: (1) "government snooping" and secret gathering of personal information; (2) overbroad collection and retention of unnecessary personal information by government and business interests; (3) improper use of information properly obtained for a specific purpose; and (4) lack of a reasonable check on the accuracy of existing records. The constitutional provision does not prohibit all incursion into individual privacy, the Court held, but rather requires that any infringement be justified by a compelling interest (13 Cal. 3d 757, 775) . The Court also ruled that the police activities violated the freedoms of speech and assembly guaranteed by the state and federal constitutions (13 Cal. 3d 757, 772-773) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Compelling Interest Required to Justify Some Aspects of Right to Privacy Under California Constitution

In Roman Catholic Bishop v. Superior Court (1996) 42 Cal. App. 4th 1556, 50 Cal. Rptr. 2d 399 , a minor plaintiff claimed she was sexually abused by her parish priest, and brought an action against the church for negligent hiring. The trial court denied the church's motion for summary judgment, concluding that a triable issue existed whether the church breached its duty of care to discover the priest's unfitness as an employee. The court of appeal disagreed, noting that there was nothing in the record to indicate that the priest had a criminal history or had been previously implicated in sexual abuse of a minor. Plaintiff contended that the church was negligent in failing to ask the priest if he had problems with his vows of celibacy. However, the court held that the duty plaintiff sought to impose on the church as an employer would violate the employee's privacy rights explicitly guaranteed under the California Constitution. Stating that the right to privacy encompasses privacy in one's sexual matters and is not limited to the marital relationship, the court also held that there was no compelling state interest to require the employer to investigate the sexual practices of its employee. Furthermore, the court noted that the employer who queries employees on sexual behavior is subject to claims for invasion of privacy and sexual harassment (42 Cal. App. 4th 1556, 1567) .

[1] FORM Opposing Contention That Defendant Invaded Plaintiff's Right to Privacy in Violation of California Constitution--Compelling Interest Shown

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT DID NOT INVADE PLAINTIFF'S PRIVACY IN VIOLATION OF CALIFORNIA CONSTITUTION, ARTICLE I, SECTION 1, BECAUSE DEFENDANT HAS SHOWN A COMPELLING INTEREST SUFFICIENT TO JUSTIFY AN INTRUSION INTO PLAINTIFF'S PRIVACY.

A. Compelling Interest Sufficient. A compelling interest may justify an intrusion into a person's privacy [Hill v. National Collegiate Athletic Assn. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1, 33-34] .

[Optional] B. Interest in Truth in Legal Proceeding. The state's interest in ascertaining the truth in connection with a legal proceeding may be a sufficiently compelling interest to justify an intrusion into a person's privacy (Morales v. Superior Court (1979) 99 Cal. App. 3d 283, 290, 160 Cal. Rptr. 194 ; Fults v. Superior Court (1979) 88 Cal. App. 3d 899, 152 Cal. Rptr. 210).

[2] Comments

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that defendant has invaded plaintiff's privacy in violation of Cal. Const. art. I, § 1, because defendant has shown a compelling interest sufficient to justify an intrusion into plaintiff's privacy. Counsel should note, however, that intrusions into an individual's privacy need not always be justified by a compelling state interest, but may be subject to a less rigorous test, according to the circumstances [see § 183.26[2][a]]. The defendant should use the points and authorities in § 183.24 with these points and authorities to oppose the contention that the plaintiff has established the essential elements for an actionable constitutional cause of action for invasion of privacy. These elements also apply under the compelling interest standard.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of compelling interest. For example, this form may be used to oppose plaintiff's motion for a protective order to prevent the disclosure of information sought during civil discovery proceedings [see Britt v. Superior Court (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 844, 143 Cal. Rptr. 695, 574 P.2d 766 ; for forms relating to civil discovery, see Ch. 80, Discovery: Scope, Regulation, and Timing , through Ch. 89A, Discovery: Review of Discovery Orders]. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Compelling Interest Sufficient

Hill v. National Collegiate Athletic Assn. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1 , is discussed in § 183.20[3][d]. The California Supreme Court rejected the blanket use of the compelling interest standard. The Court analyzed its decision in White v. Davis (1975) 13 Cal. 3d 757 [see § 183.26[3][a]], as only applying to some aspects of the right of privacy under Cal. Const. art. I, § 1, such as those that implicate obvious government action impacting freedom of expression. The Court also suggested that the compelling-interest standard is applicable in cases that involve an obvious invasion of an interest fundamental to personal autonomy, such as freedom to from involuntary fertilization or the freedom to pursue consensual familial relationships. If the privacy right is less central, then the "balancing test" standard applies [see § 183.20], which is less stringent than the compelling-interest test (7 Cal. 4th 1, 33-34) .

[b] Interest in Truth in Legal Proceeding

Morales v. Superior Court (1979) 99 Cal. App. 3d 283, 160 Cal. Rptr. 194 , arose out of a wrongful death action by a father and his three minor children for the death of the wife and mother. Defendant, real party in interest, propounded interrogatories requesting information about plaintiff father's extramarital sexual activities during his marriage to the decedent. Plaintiff father objected to the questions on the grounds of relevancy and the right to privacy. The interrogatories were limited by judicial order to a time period of two years before decedent's death. Plaintiff father sought a writ of mandate to compel the trial court to vacate its order.

The court of appeal denied the writ in part, holding that there was a compelling interest justifying the infringement on plaintiff father's right of privacy (99 Cal. App. 3d 283, 291-292) . The right of privacy, the court ruled, is not absolute, but may be intruded on when a compelling interest exists. The compelling interest here was the state's interest in facilitating the ascertainment of truth in connection with a legal proceeding (99 Cal. App. 3d 283, 290) . However, the interrogatories were overbroad. Accordingly, the writ was granted in part by modifying the order to protect from disclosure the names of any other persons involved in the father's extramarital activities (99 Cal. App. 3d 283, 291-292) .

Fults v. Superior Court (1979) 88 Cal. App. 3d 899, 152 Cal. Rptr. 210 , concerned a paternity action filed by the district attorney on behalf of plaintiff against defendant, real party in interest. Defendant propounded interrogatories, two of which asked plaintiff about her sexual activities. Plaintiff objected to the questions on the grounds of relevancy and invasion of privacy. The court limited the scope of the interrogatories to a time period of one year before and after the likely date of conception. Plaintiff sought a writ of mandate.

The court of appeal ruled that there was a compelling interest justifying the intrusion into plaintiff's right of privacy, that is, the historically important state interest in facilitating the ascertainment of truth in connection with legal proceedings (88 Cal. App. 3d 899, 904) . However, the interrogatories here were overbroad in asking about plaintiff's sexual life during times totally removed from the possible period of conception (88 Cal. App. 3d 899, 904-905) . Accordingly, a peremptory writ was issued directing the court to vacate its order with respect to the time period unrelated to the possible period of conception (88 Cal. App. 3d 899, 905) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Interest in Truth in Legal Proceeding

County of Alameda v. Superior Court (1987) 194 Cal. App. 3d 254, 239 Cal. Rptr. 400 , was a personal injury action in which plaintiff sought to discover the identity of a person who allegedly raped her while she was under the control of defendant county's mental health facility. Defendant refused disclosure on the ground that the alleged rapist was another patient whose identity was protected under the psychotherapist-patient privilege and the constitutional right of privacy. When the trial court ordered disclosure, defendant sought a writ of mandate to challenge that order. In refusing the writ, the court of appeal held that the particular facts justified limited disclosure of the patient's identity to plaintiff, who otherwise could not pursue her case. The court reasoned in part that the right of privacy is not absolute, and that state's interest in ascertaining the truth in connection with legal proceedings is substantial enough to compel disclosure of a wide variety of confidential material, including psychotherapist-patient communications (194 Cal. App. 3d 254, 260-261) .

DEFENDANT DID NOT VIOLATE PLAINTIFF'S RIGHT TO PRIVACY UNDER SECTION 1, ARTICLE I OF THE CALIFORNIA CONSTITUTION BECAUSE THE DEFENDANT DOES NOT HAVE TO JUSTIFY THE INVASION OF PRIVACY WITH A COMPELLING INTEREST.

A. Compelling Interest Not Applicable to All Aspects of Right to Privacy Under California Constitution. The use of the "compelling interest" standard is not required to justify all aspects of the right of privacy under Section 1, Article I, of the California Constitution. The standard only applies to privacy interests that implicate obvious government action impacting freedom of expression or an obvious invasion of an interest fundamental to personal autonomy (Hill v. National Collegiate Athletic Assn. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1, 33-34).

[Optional] B. Compelling Interest Standard Not Applicable to Member of Press. The compelling interest standard is not applicable when defendant is a member of the press publishing newsworthy information (Diaz v. Oakland Tribune, Inc. (1983) 139 Cal. App. 3d 118, 127, 188 Cal. Rptr. 762).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that defendant invaded plaintiff's right to privacy because defendant is not required to meet the compelling interest standard in order to justify the intrusion into plaintiff's privacy.

A competing interest may justify an intrusion into an individual's privacy under the less rigorous "balancing test" standard. The use of the compelling interest standard is limited [see § 183.26]. The defendant should use the applicable portions of the points and authorities in § 183.24 with these points and authorities to oppose the contention that the plaintiff has established the essential elements for an actionable constitutional cause of action for invasion of privacy, or to argue that the invasion is justified under the "balancing test" standard.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of application of the compelling interest standard. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Compelling Interest Standard Not Applicable to All Aspects of Right to Privacy Under California Constitution

Hill v. National Collegiate Athletic Assn. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1 , is discussed in § 183.20[3][d]. The California Supreme Court rejected the blanket use of the compelling interest standard. The Court analyzed its decision in White v. Davis (1975) 13 Cal. 3d 757 [see § 183.26[3][a]], as only applying to some aspects of the right of privacy under Cal. Const. art. I, § 1, such as those that implicate obvious government action impacting freedom of expression. The Court also suggested that the compelling interest standard is applicable in cases that involve an obvious invasion of an interest fundamental to personal autonomy, such as freedom from involuntary fertilization or the freedom to pursue consensual familial relationships. If the privacy right is less central, then the "balancing test" standard applies (see § 183.20), which is less stringent than the compelling interest test (7 Cal. 4th 1, 33-34) .

[b] Compelling Interest Standard Not Applicable to Member of Press

Diaz v. Oakland Tribune, Inc. (1983) 139 Cal. App. 3d 118, 188 Cal. Rptr. 762 , involved an action for invasion of privacy based on a newspaper columnist's disclosure that plaintiff, a student body president of a local community college, was a transsexual. A jury awarded judgment to plaintiff, and defendants appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, finding prejudicial error in two of the jury instructions. One of the instructions stated, in language taken from White v. Davis (1975) 13 Cal. 3d 757, 120 Cal. Rptr. 94, 533 P.2d 222 [see § 183.26[3][a]], that the right of privacy "should be abridged only when there is a compelling public need." The court distinguished White on the grounds that it involved governmental interference with the right of privacy. The present defendant, the court ruled, had the right to publish newsworthy information as part of the constitutional guarantees of free speech and press. Therefore, the court held, defendant did not have to meet the "compelling public need" standard (139 Cal. App. 3d 118, 127) .

DEFENDANT DID NOT VIOLATE PLAINTIFF'S RIGHT TO PRIVACY UNDER SECTION 1, ARTICLE I OF THE CALIFORNIA CONSTITUTION BECAUSE THE PLAINTIFF IS A CORPORATION AND THE RIGHT TO PRIVACY SET OUT IN THIS PROVISION APPLIES ONLY TO NATURAL PERSONS.

Corporations Not Protected by California Constitutional Privacy Provisions. The right to privacy set out in Section 1, Article I, of the California Constitution applies only to natural persons and does not apply to corporations (Roberts v. Gulf Oil Corp (1983) 147 Cal. App. 3d 770, 791, 794, 195 Cal. Rptr. 421).

[2] Comments

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a party's privacy rights set out in Cal. Const. art. I, § 1, have been or are threatened to be violated. The ground for opposition is that a corporation may not rely on the privacy rights set out in Cal. Const. art. I, § 1 [Roberts v. Gulf Oil Corp (1983) 147 Cal. App. 3d 770, 791, 794] .

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of the nonapplicability of Cal. Const. art. I, § 1, to corporations. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

state constitution is a corporation rather than a natural person.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities in §§ 183.20 and 183.26.

[b] Corporation's General Right to Privacy

Although a corporation does not have a right to privacy under Cal. Const. art. I, § 1, or a constitutional right to privacy in the fundamental sense, it may have a general right to privacy under some combination of the Fourth, Fifth, and Fourteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution. Two critical factors in determining whether a corporation's general constitutional privacy rights apply are (1) the strength of the nexus between the artificial entity and human beings, and (2) the context in which the controversy arises [Roberts v. Gulf Oil Corp (1983) 147 Cal. App. 3d 770, 797 (minimal requirements for tax assessor to overcome taxpaying corporation's right to privacy regarding relevant information); see § 183.29[3][a]]. However, the Roberts court found defendant corporation's general constitutional privacy rights not applicable under the facts of the case [Roberts v. Gulf Oil Corp (1983) 147 Cal. App. 3d 770, 798-801] .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Corporations Not Protected by California Constitutional Privacy Provisions

In Roberts v. Gulf Oil Corp (1983) 147 Cal. App. 3d 770 , plaintiff county tax assessor secured a subpoena duces tecum compelling defendant corporation to appear in court and answer questions and procure records pertaining to certain properties. The trial court ordered defendant to produce some of the documents requested. Defendant appealed with respect to certain documents among those ordered to be disclosed, citing its purported right to privacy under Cal. Const. art. I, § 1.

The court of appeal affirmed the order of disclosure. The court held that Cal. Const. art. I, § 1, simply does not apply to corporations (147 Cal. App. 3d 770, 790-791) . In supporting its conclusion, the court noted as significant that the secretary of state's argument in favor of the ballot proposition by which Cal. Const. art. I, § 1, was enacted spoke in terms relevant to natural persons, and that section itself refers to "people" rather than "persons" (147 Cal. App. 3d 770, 791-793) . The court went on to hold that although a corporation does not have a right to privacy under Cal. Const. art. I, § 1, it may have a general right to privacy under some combination of the Fourth, Fifth, and Fourteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution (147 Cal. App. 3d 770, 795-797) . The court held, however, that a corporation's privacy rights are not fundamental so as to require application of a compelling interest test (147 Cal. App. 3d 770, 794) . Under the more liberal test applied by the court, the court concluded that plaintiff assessor was entitled to disclosure of the information sought (147 Cal. App. 3d 770, 799-800) .

App. 3d 666, 673, 202 Cal. Rptr. 296*).

[Optional] B. Justified Entrance Into House to Make Arrest. Entrance into a private house by a police officer to arrest persons living in the house when the police officer has probable cause for the arrest and reason to believe that the persons to be arrested are attempting to evade him or her does not constitute an invasion of privacy of the persons living in the house (Mann v. Mack (1984) 155 Cal. App. 3d 666, 674, 202 Cal. Rptr. 296).

[Optional] C. No Duty to Protect Criminal Suspect's Identity. A law-enforcement agency does not owe a constitutional duty to a criminal suspect to protect that person's identity, and the release of information in public records relating to a criminal investigation is not an intrusion on the suspect's constitutional right to privacy (Alarcon v. Murphy (1988) 201 Cal. App. 3d 1, 6-7, 248 Cal. Rptr. 26).

[2] Comments

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a party's privacy rights under Cal. Const. art. I, § 1, have been violated. The ground for opposition in this form is that a routine police investigation in response to a complaint does not violate the constitutional privacy rights of the alleged perpetrator being investigated [Mann v. Mack (1984) 155 Cal. App. 3d 666, 673, 202 Cal. Rptr. 296] . Optional Paragraph B may be used to support the point that a police officer's justified entry into a private house to arrest persons living there does not violate the persons' privacy rights under Cal. Const. art. I, § 1 [Mann v. Mack (1984) 155 Cal. App. 3d 666, 674, 202 Cal. Rptr. 296] . Optional Paragraph C may be used to support the contention that a police agency's failure to bar disclosure of information in a public record regarding a suspect's identity is not a violation of the suspect's right to privacy (see Alarcon v. Murphy (1988) 201 Cal. App. 3d 1, 6-7, 248 Cal. Rptr. 26).

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of the permissibility under Cal. Const. art. I, § 1, of routine police investigations and other proper police conduct. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should include a discussion showing that police were conducting a routine investigation in response to a complaint. If optional Paragraph B is used, counsel should include discussion showing that police officers were justified in entering the house of the person arrested.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities in §§ 183.20 and 183.26.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Routine Police Investigation Does Not Violate State Privacy Right

Mann v. Mack (1984) 155 Cal. App. 3d 666, 202 Cal. Rptr. 296 , was an action against a police officer and his municipal employer for invasion of privacy. In that case, defendant officer was dispatched with a partner to investigate a complaint from one of plaintiffs' neighbors regarding excessive noise being made by an amateur rock band that was rehearsing in plaintiffs' garage. The officers asserted that the noise complained of was extremely loud, that other neighbors besides the complaining neighbor considered the noise to be excessively loud, and that the police had on numerous previous occasions stopped at plaintiffs' house in response to complaints by neighbors regarding noise made by the band. The officers initiated contact with the members of the band and placed one of them under arrest. Plaintiffs subsequently initiated the present action. The trial court found for defendants and plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal upheld the trial court's finding. The court stated that it was clear that plaintiffs had not presented enough evidence to sustain their allegations that the police action in investigating plaintiffs' neighbors' complaints of excessive noise violated plaintiffs' privacy rights under Cal. Const. art. I, § 1 (155 Cal. App. 3d 666, 673) . The court held that routine investigation of a neighborhood disturbance does not constitute an invasion of privacy rights of the perpetrator of the disturbance (155 Cal. App. 3d 666, 673-674) .

[b] Justified Entrance Into House to Make Arrest

The facts and procedural background for Mann v. Mack (1984) 155 Cal. App. 3d 666, 202 Cal. Rptr. 296 , are discussed in § 183.30[3][a]. The plaintiffs charged that defendant police officer's conduct in entering plaintiffs' house to place one of plaintiffs under arrest constituted a violation of plaintiffs' privacy rights under Cal. Const. art. I, § 1. The court of appeal upheld the trial court's finding that defendant officer had not violated any of plaintiffs' rights. The court noted that defendant and his partner, who were responding to a complaint from a neighbor regarding excessive noise made by a band playing in plaintiffs' garage, had told the plaintiff ultimately placed under arrest to bring the band members out of the house to talk to the officers, that all of the band members except plaintiffs had appeared, and that defendant had walked through the open door of plaintiffs' house to make the arrest when plaintiff himself did not appear with the rest of the band (155 Cal. App. 3d 666, 672) . The court stated that a police officer may enter a house to make an arrest without a warrant when he or she has probable cause for the arrest and when the arrest is necessary to forestall an imminent escape of a suspect. In the situation before it, the court held that defendant officer had probable cause for the arrest because he himself had heard that the noise was so loud as to constitute a violation of local ordinance. The court further held that plaintiff's failure to appear with the rest of the band was sufficient to convince defendant that plaintiff was attempting to evade him, and therefore justified his walking through the open door of the house to make the arrest. Thus, the court concluded that defendant's conduct had not violated any of plaintiffs' constitutional rights (155 Cal. App. 3d 666, 674-675) .

[c] No Duty to Protect Criminal Suspect's Identity

In Alarcon v. Murphy (1988) 201 Cal. App. 3d 1, 248 Cal. Rptr. 26 , local police authorities, acting on information given by an eyewitness, obtained an arrest warrant for plaintiff, and a search warrant for his house and vehicle, in connection with the investigation of a murder. After consulting with the local prosecuting authority, a police officer released plaintiff's name to the news media, which publicized it. Ultimately, another person confessed to the crime. Plaintiff brought an action against the local municipality and various law-enforcement officers connected with the investigation. The trial court granted defendants' motion for summary judgment, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that the municipality owed plaintiff no constitutional duty to protect his identity (201 Cal. App. 3d 1, 7) . It rejected plaintiff's contention that the municipality had a constitutional duty not to identify him to the media as a murder suspect until it had probable cause to arrest him for that offense (201 Cal. App. 3d 1, 4-5) . The constitutional protection of privacy does not prohibit all incursion into individual privacy, but provides that any intervention of that nature must be justified by a compelling interest. It is therefore necessary to determine whether plaintiff's personal and objectively reasonable expectation of privacy had been infringed by an unreasonable government intrusion (201 Cal. App. 3d 1, 5) . Generally, the facts and circumstances surrounding an arrest must be made public, pursuant to Gov. Code § 6254(f)(1). An affidavit supporting the issuance of arrest and search warrants is public record, by virtue of being part of a court file (201 Cal. App. 3d 1, 6) . Inasmuch as the disclosure of plaintiff's name was not a revelation of confidential information, but part of a public record, plaintiff had no objectively reasonable expectation that the information would not be disclosed by police (201 Cal. App. 3d 1, 6-7) . The court rejected plaintiff's contention that the contents of the affidavit should not have been released until the affidavit itself was available to the public, several days after the disclosure to the media. The lack of actual public access to the affidavit until the searching officers filed the warrant return does not make the affidavit any less of a public document. The issue is not when the public had access to the record, but rather whether a public right of access existed. Inasmuch as the municipality owed no constitutional duty to plaintiff, the trial court properly granted summary judgment. There was no intrusion on plaintiff's constitutional right to privacy; therefore, the municipality need not have justified its act by demonstrating a compelling interest to support its disclosure (201 Cal. App. 3d 1, 7) .

§ 183.31 Opposing Contention That Defendant Invaded Plaintiff's Right to Privacy in Violation of California Constitution--Judicial Oversight Over Release of Confidential Records Precludes Liability

[1] FORM Opposing Contention That Defendant Invaded Plaintiff's Right to Privacy in Violation of California Constitution--Judicial Oversight Over Release of Confidential Records Precludes Liability

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief].

DEFENDANT DID NOT VIOLATE PLAINTIFF'S RIGHT TO PRIVACY UNDER SECTION 1, ARTICLE I, OF THE CALIFORNIA CONSTITUTION BY READING PLAINTIFF'S CONFIDENTIAL MEDICAL RECORDS, BECAUSE THE RECORDS WERE RELEASED TO DEFENDANT PURSUANT TO A COURT ORDER.

Judicial Oversight Over Release of Confidential Records Precludes Liability. A plaintiff does not state a cause of action for invasion of privacy in violation of the California Constitution if the underlying conduct consists of the defendant's reading of the plaintiff's confidential medical records and if those records were released pursuant to a court order, sent to the court under seal, and then released by the court to the defendant (Mansell v. Otto (2003) 108 Cal. App. 4th 265, 273-277, 133 Cal. Rptr. 2d 276).

[2] Comments

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that the plaintiff has a cause of action for invasion of privacy under Section 1 of Article I of the California Constitution based on a defendant's conduct in reading the plaintiff's confidential medical records. The grounds for the opposition are that the records were released pursuant to a court order, sent to the court under seal, and only then released to the defendant.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue that liability is precluded due to court oversight over the release of the plaintiff's records. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in § 183.20 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Judicial Oversight Over Release of Confidential Records Precludes Liability

In Mansell v. Otto (2003) 108 Cal. App. 4th 265, 133 Cal. Rptr. 2d 276 , the plaintiff was a victim of a criminal assault and battery. In preparing to defend their client, the attorneys for the criminal defendant sought from a hospital all of the plaintiff's medical and psychological records dating back to 1976. When the hospital indicated it could only release the records pursuant to a court order, the attorneys sought and obtained a court order for release of the records. Upon receipt of the court order, the hospital sent the requested records under seal to the court. The court then released the records to the prosecution, who in turn made copies for the defense attorneys. The attorneys read the records and disseminated them to other members of the defense team. The prosecution subsequently moved successfully to have the records returned to the court. Based on the unauthorized reading of her mental health records, the plaintiff then brought an action against the criminal defendant and his attorneys for invasion of privacy based on a violation of Section 1, Article I, of the California Constitution. The trial court sustained the defendants' demurrer, on the grounds that the defendants' conduct was privileged under the litigation privilege of Civ. Code § 47(b), and the plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, but not on the grounds relied on by the trial court. The court first held that the litigation privilege did not apply to the defendants' conduct, because the privilege only protects communicative conduct and the act of reading the records was noncommunicative in nature (108 Cal. App. 4th 265, 271-272) . However, the court concluded that an actionable claim for invasion of privacy could not be premised on the mere reading of confidential or privileged material. After reviewing prior cases dealing with invasion of privacy based on such noncommunicative conduct, the court noted that in the cases finding potential liability, the offending party did not make an attempt to obtain prior judicial review or approval prior to reading or disseminating the records (108 Cal. App. 4th 265, 272-276) . By contrast, in this case, the defendants sought and received a court order for release of the records. The records were delivered by the hospital, not to defendants, but to the court under seal, and only provided to the defendants after being released by the court to the prosecutors, who provided copies to the defendants. Moreover, under current law, it was the prosecutors' duty to protect the plaintiff's right to privacy in her confidential records, and the prosecutors failed to do so. Under those circumstances, the defendants could not be liable to the plaintiff for an invasion of privacy (108 Cal. App. 4th 265, 276-279) .

[1] FORM Opposing Contention That Plaintiff Has Stated Constitutional Cause of Action for Invasion of Privacy--Absolute Judicial Privilege Provides Complete Defense

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE ABSOLUTE JUDICIAL PRIVILEGE OF CIVIL CODE SECTION 47(b) PROVIDES DEFENDANT WITH A COMPLETE DEFENSE TO PLAINTIFF'S CAUSE OF ACTION FOR INVASION OF THE RIGHT TO PRIVACY PROVIDED BY THE CALIFORNIA CONSTITUTION.

Judicial Privilege Applicable to Constitutional Privacy Cause of Action. The absolute judicial privilege of Civ. Code § 47(b) applies to invasion of privacy actions based on the guarantee of privacy in the California Constitution (Jacob B. v. County of Shasta (2007) 40 Cal. 4th 948, 961, 56 Cal. Rptr. 3d 477, 154 P.3d 1003 ; see Cal. Const. art. I, § 1).

[2] Comments

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a plaintiff's claim for invasion of the privacy rights provided by Section 1 of Article I of the California Constitution. The grounds for the opposition are that the defendant's conduct was absolutely privileged under the judicial privilege of Civ. Code § 47(b).

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the point of law stated. Thus, counsel should describe the underlying communications that plaintiff alleged violated the constitutional right to privacy and describe how those communications are protected by the judicial privilege of Civ. Code § 47(b).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Judicial Privilege Applicable to Constitutional Privacy Cause of Action

In Jacob B. v. County of Shasta (2007) 40 Cal. 4th 948, 56 Cal. Rptr. 3d 477, 154 P.3d 1003 , plaintiff, in 1993 when he was 15 years old, had been accused by his brother and sister-in-law of molesting plaintiff's then-five-year-old nephew. The sheriff's office investigated and while it was believed that a molestation did occur, the case was not prosecuted because of the victim's young age and inability to communicate adequately. The victim's mother did, however, apply for and receive counseling compensation on behalf of her son from the county victim witness program on the basis of their conclusion that a crime had in fact occurred. The victim witness program also made an entry into the statewide victims-of-crime database (VOX) under which the victim and plaintiff, as the perpetrator of the molestation, were both identified. Plaintiff's brother and sister-in-law were eventually divorced, and their marriage dissolution decree prohibited contact between their son and plaintiff. Plaintiff's brother remarried, and he and his new wife, who had three sons from a previous marriage, became dissatisfied with the dissolution decree prohibiting contact with plaintiff, resulting in an ongoing dispute in a family law proceeding between plaintiff's brother's new wife and her ex-husband. In 2003, the victim's mother, now remarried herself, went to the county victim witness program office distraught over the possibility that the no-contact dissolution order might be lifted in the pending family law proceeding. She asked the office staff to help her by writing to the court, which they did. Obtaining information from the VOX database, staff members in the office prepared a letter stating that the victim's mother had come to the office in 1993 on behalf of her son, established a claim that plaintiff had molested her son, and received counseling funds. This letter was taken to the family law proceeding, and a copy was eventually provided to plaintiff. Plaintiff sued the county and the office staff member who signed the letter, asserting invasion of the constitutional right to privacy and other causes of action. A trial followed and defendants moved for nonsuit on the basis of the absolute judicial privilege of Civ. Code § 47(b). The trial court dismissed all causes of action except the invasion of privacy action, and the jury eventually rendered a verdict for plaintiff. Defendants appealed, and the court of appeal held that the litigation privilege protected the letter against all causes of action, including the one based on the constitutional right to privacy. Plaintiff appealed.

The California Supreme Court affirmed the court of appeal decision. The Court first held that the letter was a communication otherwise protected by the judicial privilege (40 Cal. 4th 948, 957-959) . Noting that the judicial privilege had previously been applied to privacy actions, the Court then held that the judicial privilege remains an absolute privilege even as to invasion of privacy actions based on the guarantee of privacy in the California Constitution. The Court noted that the constitutional right of privacy is subject to a balancing of interests and has never been absolute. The Court also found nothing in the ballot materials or history of the 1972 initiative adding the constitutional right of privacy to suggest that the right was intended to prevail over the preexisting statutory litigation privilege. Although earlier court of appeal decisions in Jeffrey H. v. Imai, Tadlock & Keeney (2000) 85 Cal. App. 4th 345, 101 Cal. Rptr. 2d 916 , and Cutter v. Brownbridge (1986) 183 Cal. App. 3d 836, 228 Cal. Rptr. 545 , had applied a balancing test to determine whether the judicial privilege prevailed over a constitutional privacy claim, the Court specifically disapproved of this case-by-case balancing approach (40 Cal. 4th 948, 961-962) .

§ 183.33 Opposing Contention That Plaintiff Has Stated Constitutional Cause of Action for Invasion of Privacy--Tort Claims Act Provides Statutory Immunity for Governmental Defendant

[1] FORM Opposing Contention That Plaintiff Has Stated Constitutional Cause of Action for Invasion of Privacy--Tort Claims Act Provides Statutory Immunity for Governmental Defendant

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE CALIFORNIA TORT CLAIMS ACT PROVIDES DEFENDANT WITH A COMPLETE DEFENSE TO PLAINTIFF'S CAUSE OF ACTION FOR INVASION OF THE RIGHT TO PRIVACY PROVIDED BY THE CALIFORNIA CONSTITUTION.

A. Government Tort Immunities Applicable to Privacy Action Based on California Constitution. Notwithstanding that the constitutional right to privacy was designed to protect against some forms of governmental intrusion, this right to privacy does not limit the scope of statutory immunities that existed under the California Tort Claims Act when the right to privacy was added in 1972 (Richardson-Tunnell v. Schools Ins. Program for Employees (SIPE) (2007) 157 Cal. App. 4th 1056, 1066, 69 Cal. Rptr. 3d 176).

[Optional] B. Prosecutorial Immunity Applies to Constitutional Invasion of Privacy Action. Government Code Section 821.6, which immunizes a governmental employee for injury caused by instituting or prosecuting any judicial or administrative proceeding within the scope of his or her employment, regardless of malice or lack of probable cause, extends to investigatory activities and may be used to defeat a claim for damages for violation of the constitutional right to privacy (Richardson-Tunnell v. Schools Ins. Program for Employees (SIPE) (2007) 157 Cal. App. 4th 1056, 1062, 1066, 69 Cal. Rptr. 3d 176).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted by a governmental defendant in opposition to a plaintiff's claim for invasion of the privacy rights provided by Section 1 of Article I of the California Constitution. The grounds for the opposition are that the California Tort Claims Act provides a specific immunity from liability for defendant's conduct.

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Immunities

[a] Government Tort Immunities Applicable to Privacy Action Based on California Constitution

In Richardson-Tunnell v. Schools Ins. Program for Employees (SIPE) (2007) 157 Cal. App. 4th 1056, 69 Cal. Rptr. 3d 176 , plaintiff was a teacher who suffered an injury at work while employed by a public school district. Plaintiff was married while on disability leave, and her school district and its public entity insurer hired a private investigator to videotape her surreptitiously at her wedding and on her honeymoon, apparently to determine if they had a claim for workers' compensation fraud. Plaintiff sued the school district and the insurer, among others, for invasion of privacy and negligence, including claims for damages under both the constitutional right to privacy provided by the California Constitution and the statutory protection provided by Civ. Code § 1708.8, the anti-paparazzi statute. The trial court granted judgment on the pleadings in favor of the public entity defendants after concluding that the claims against these entities were barred by governmental immunity provided for prosecutorial investigations under Gov. Code § 821.6. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court first held that the conduct alleged by plaintiff was covered by the immunity of Gov. Code § 821.6, a provision of the California Tort Claims Act which generally immunizes a governmental employee, and thus a public entity, for injury caused by instituting or prosecuting any judicial or administrative proceeding within the scope of his or her employment, regardless of malice or lack of probable cause, and such immunity extends to investigatory activities (157 Cal. App. 4th 1056, 1062-1063) . The court concluded that this immunity provided a defense to the statutory cause of action otherwise created by Civ. Code § 1708.8 (157 Cal. App. 4th 1056, 1063-1065) . The court then held that this statutory immunity also provided a complete defense to plaintiff's cause of action seeking damages under the California Constitution for invasion of privacy. Assuming without deciding that plaintiff could seek damages for violation of the constitutional right to privacy, the court noted that the California Supreme Court in Jacob B. v. County of Shasta (2007) 40 Cal. 4th 948, 56 Cal. Rptr. 3d 477, 154 P.3d 1003 , discussed in § 183.32[3][a], had concluded that the constitutional right to privacy, as adopted by the electorate in 1972, contains within it limitations based on statutes existing at the time. While the Supreme Court's holding in that case applied specifically to the litigation privilege of Civ. Code § 47(b), the court of appeal concluded that the same logic applied to immunities provided by the existing California Tort Claims Act. As such, the prosecutorial immunity provided to public entity defendants under Gov. Code § 821.6 provided a complete defense to plaintiff's damages claim brought under the California Constitution (157 Cal. App. 4th 1056, 1066) .

[b] Prosecutorial Immunity Applies to Constitutional Invasion of Privacy Action

Richardson-Tunnell v. Schools Ins. Program for Employees (SIPE) (2007) 157 Cal. App. 4th 1056, 69 Cal. Rptr. 3d 176 , is described in [a], above.

PART I. INTRODUCTION

18-184 California Points & Authorities § 184.01

§ 184.01 Scope of Chapter

This chapter contains points and authorities relating to invasion of privacy under the four torts traditionally included under the rubric of common law invasion of privacy. These four torts are (1) public disclosure of private facts, (2) publicity that places a person in a false light in the public eye, (3) intrusion on a person's seclusion or solitude or into private affairs, and (4) appropriation of a person's name or likeness for the defendant's advantage [see Lugosi v. Universal Pictures (1979) 25 Cal. 3d 813, 819, 160 Cal. Rptr. 323, 603 P.2d 425 (main point abrogated by subsequent enactment of Civ. Code § 3344.1); see Prosser, Privacy, 48 Cal. L. Rev. 383 (1960)]. This part includes points and authorities supporting the contention that defendant invaded plaintiff's right to privacy by public disclosure of private facts [see § 184.20], by publicity placing plaintiff in a false light in the public eye [see § 184.21], by appropriation of plaintiff's name or likeness under the common law [see § 184.22], by appropriation of plaintiff's name, voice, signature, photograph, or likeness under Civ. Code § 3344 [see § 184.23], by appropriation of a deceased personality's name, voice, signature, photograph, or likeness under Civ. Code § 3344.1 [see § 184.24], by physical intrusion on plaintiff's solitude or private affairs under the common law [see § 184.25], and by intrusion to capture an image, sound recording, or other physical impression of the plaintiff under Civ. Code § 1708.8 [see § 184.25A].

In addition, this part sets forth points and authorities opposing the contention that defendant invaded plaintiff's right to privacy for general use in resisting any of the four common law torts [see §§ 184.26 -184.31], for use in resisting the statutory appropriation torts under Civ. Code § 3344, 3344.1 [see §§ 184.32 -184.38], and for use in resisting the physical intrusion tort [see § 184.39]. It also includes forms supporting the affirmative defense that plaintiff lacks standing to sue [see §§ 184.40, 184.41], and opposing that defense [see §§ 184.42, 184.43].

PART I. INTRODUCTION

§ 184.02 Governing Law

The right of privacy under the four traditional torts is generally governed by case law. However, invasion by appropriation of a person's name or likeness is governed in part by Civ. Code § 3344, which authorizes a cause of action for the unauthorized commercial use of a person's name, voice, signature, photograph, or likeness. Civ. Code § 3344.1 governs the use of a deceased personality's name, voice, signature, photograph, or likeness. The first case in California to recognize the right of privacy was Melvin v. Reid (1931) 112 Cal. App 285, 297 P. 91 . The California Supreme Court followed suit in Gill v. Curtis Publishing Co. (1952) 38 Cal. 2d 273, 239 P.2d 630 .

§ 184.20 Supporting Contention That Defendant Invaded Plaintiff's Right to Privacy--By Public Disclosure of Private Facts

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT SHOULD BE HELD LIABLE FOR INVASION OF PRIVACY BECAUSE DEFENDANT PUBLICLY DISCLOSED PRIVATE FACTS ABOUT PLAINTIFF THAT WOULD BE OFFENSIVE TO A REASONABLE PERSON.

A. Right of Privacy. The right of privacy encompasses the tort of public disclosure of private facts (see Lugosi v. Universal Pictures (1979) 25 Cal. 3d 813, 819, 160 Cal. Rptr. 323, 603 P.2d 425 (main point now abrogated by Civ. Code § 3344.1).

B. Elements of Public Disclosure Tort. The tort of public disclosure of private facts consists of (1) a public disclosure (2) of private facts (3) that would be offensive and objectionable to a reasonable person (see Forsher v. Bugliosi (1980) 26 Cal. 3d 792, 808-809, 163 Cal. Rptr. 628, 608 P.2d 716).

C. Public Disclosure Defined. Public disclosure means a communication to the public in general or to a large number of people as distinguished from one individual or a few (Kinsey v. Macur (1980) 107 Cal. App. 3d 265, 270, 165 Cal. Rptr. 608).

D. Private Facts Defined. The facts disclosed must concern information that is private and not already in the public domain (Diaz v. Oakland Tribune, Inc. (1983) 139 Cal. App. 3d 118, 131, 188 Cal. Rptr. 762).

[Optional] E. Revelations About Decedent Family Member Invaded Privacy Rights of Survivors. The relatives of a decedent may state a cause of action for public disclosure of private facts based on revelations about a decedent family member when that conduct invades the privacy of those surviving relatives (Catsouras v. Department of California Highway Patrol (2010) 181 Cal. App. 4th 856, 870-874, 104 Cal. Rptr. 3d 352).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that defendant should be held liable for invasion of privacy because defendant publicly disclosed private facts about plaintiff.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue covered. For example, this form may be used in opposition to a motion for summary judgment when defendant asserts that plaintiff has failed to allege or prove a cause of action for invasion of privacy. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Elements of Cause of Action

The public disclosure of private facts tort is generally deemed to consist of public disclosure of private facts that are offensive and objectionable to a reasonable person [Forsher v. Bugliosi (1980) 26 Cal. 3d 792, 808-809, 163 Cal. Rptr. 628, 608 P.2d 716] . However, a fourth element of lack of legitimate public concern is sometimes considered part of the cause of action In such a case, legitimate public concern appears to be equivalent to newsworthiness [Diaz v. Oakland Tribune, Inc. (1983) 139 Cal. App. 3d 118, 126, 188 Cal. Rptr. 762 ; see § 184.29].

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of complaint for damages and injunctive relief for public disclosure of private facts and forms of affirmative defenses, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 429, Privacy (Matthew Bender).

[d] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in §§ 184.26 -184.31 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Right of Privacy

Lugosi v. Universal Pictures (1979) 25 Cal. 3d 813, 160 Cal. Rptr. 323, 603 P.2d 425 , was an action brought by the widow and surviving son of actor Bela Lugosi for appropriation by defendant of the actor's likeness. The appropriation arose out of several licensing agreements made by defendant for the use of the character Count Dracula, as portrayed by Lugosi in the movie "Dracula." Plaintiffs sought to recover the profits made by defendant from the licensing agreements. The trial court ruled that Lugosi had a property or proprietary right in his name and likeness that descended to his heirs on his death. Defendant appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed, holding that the right to exploit name and likeness is personal to the artist and must be exercised, if at all, by him or her during his or her lifetime (25 Cal. 3d 813, 824) . The Court found that the essence of the action was appropriation of Lugosi's "right of value" in his name and/or likeness, which was a right protectable within the law of privacy (25 Cal. 3d 813, 819) . The Court stated that the right of privacy comprises four separate torts, which are: (1) public disclosure of private facts; (2) publicity which places a person in a false light in the public eye; (3) intrusion on a person's seclusion or solitude or into private affairs; and (4) appropriation of a person's name or likeness for the defendant's advantage (25 Cal. 3d 813, 819) .

NOTE:

Although the Court's characterization of the four torts comprising the right of privacy remains valid, the actual holding of the case appears to have been abrogated by the enactment of former Civ. Code § 990 in 1984 [now see Civ. Code § 3344.1] concerning the use of a deceased personality's name, voice, signature, photograph, or likeness without consent [see §§ 184.40, 184.42].

[b] Elements of Public Disclosure Tort

Forsher v. Bugliosi (1980) 26 Cal. 3d 792, 163 Cal. Rptr. 628, 608 P.2d 716 , was an action for invasion of privacy and libel and slander against the authors and publishers of the book "Helter Skelter," about the Manson Family, which referred to plaintiff in connection with an unsolved murder. Defendants' demurrer was sustained and a judgment of dismissal entered. Plaintiff appealed.

Although the Supreme Court affirmed, holding that the complaint failed to state a cause of action for invasion of privacy (26 Cal. 3d 792, 807, 813) , it listed the three required elements for the public disclosure tort, which are: (1) a public disclosure (2) of facts that are private and (3) which is offensive and objectionable to a reasonable person of ordinary sensibilities (26 Cal. 3d 792, 808-809) . Plaintiff's cause of action was deficient, the Court found, because it concerned information that was constitutionally protected as newsworthy (26 Cal. 3d 792, 812-813) .

[c] Public Disclosure Defined

Kinsey v. Macur (1980) 107 Cal. App. 3d 265, 165 Cal. Rptr. 608 , was an action for invasion of privacy under both the public disclosure and the false light torts. The case concerned letters sent by defendant to plaintiff and his family, neighbors, and associates shortly after plaintiff ended his relationship with defendant. The letters questioned plaintiff's character and falsely accused him of murder and rape. Judgment was entered for plaintiff and defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding, among other things, that there was a sufficient disclosure to the public in the distribution of the letters to "perhaps twenty [people] at most" in several states who were unconnected either professionally or socially except for their acquaintance with plaintiff (107 Cal. App. 3d 265, 272) . The court stated that, except in the physical intrusion tort, all of the torts for invasion of privacy must be accompanied by publicity in the sense of a communication to the public in general or to a large number of persons (107 Cal. App. 3d 265, 270) .

[d] Private Facts Defined

The facts and procedural background of Diaz v. Oakland Tribune, Inc. (1983) 139 Cal. App. 3d 118, 188 Cal. Rptr. 762 , are discussed in § 124.29. The court of appeal reversed a judgment for plaintiff, finding error in the jury instructions (139 Cal. App. 3d 118, 127-128) . However, the court went on to decide defendants' remaining contentions, which included the argument that plaintiff's original gender was a matter of public record. The court held that, generally speaking, material that is already in the public domain is not private, and its publication is protected (139 Cal. App. 3d 118, 131) . But the court found that plaintiff's sexual identity was not part of any public record and was in fact a private matter (139 Cal. App. 3d 118, 132) .

[e] Revelations About Decedent Family Member Invaded Privacy Rights of Survivors

In Catsouras v. Department of California Highway Patrol (2010) 181 Cal. App. 4th 856, 104 Cal. Rptr. 3d 352 , plaintiffs were the parents and siblings of an 18-year-old girl who died when she was decapitated in an automobile accident. Officers of the California Highway Patrol investigated the accident, took control of the accident scene and decedent's remains, and took photographs of both. After the photographs were transmitted to the CHP computer system, two officers e-mailed 9 of the photographs of the decedent to their friends and family members allegedly as a Halloween prank because of the gruesome nature of the photographs. This initial dissemination by the officers, which served no official investigative or public interest purpose but was done from sheer morbidity or gossip, started a chain reaction that resulted in thousands of Internet sites picking up the images and some of the plaintiffs receiving personal e-mails from strangers taunting them with the gruesome photographs. Plaintiffs sued the Highway Patrol and the two officers for various causes of action, including invasion of privacy based on public disclosure of private facts, negligence, and intentional infliction of emotional distress. The trial court sustained the officers' demurrer to all causes of action. Plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal reversed in part. The court of appeal held that plaintiffs had stated a cause of action for invasion of privacy based on the public disclosure of private facts. The court noted that under existing case law, as the right of privacy is a personal right, in cases in which the disclosure involves the details of the life of a person who is deceased, the right of privacy protected by the cause of action for public disclosure of private facts generally dies along with that person. However, the court concluded that the relatives of a decedent may be able to state a cause of action for revelations about a decedent family member when that conduct invades the privacy of those surviving relatives. In the case before it, the court held that the parents and siblings of the decedent had stated a cause of action against the CHP officers who e-mailed the photographs of the decedent taken at the accident scene to the officers' friends and family members as a Halloween prank. The court noted that dissemination of the pictures served no investigative or public interest purpose, but rather was done through sheer morbidity and sensationalism. Under these facts, the court concluded that plaintiffs, who had their own privacy rights in the death images of their family member, had stated a cause of action for invasion of privacy (181 Cal. App. 4th 856, 870-874) .

[a] Private Facts Defined

In M. G. v. Time Warner, Inc. (2001) 89 Cal. App. 4th 623, 107 Cal. Rptr. 2d 504 , former players and coaches on a Little League baseball team brought suit alleging invasion of privacy and other causes of action against media defendants for their use of a team photograph in their magazine and television stories concerning adult coaches who sexually molest youths playing team sports. Although this particular photograph was chosen because the team's manager had pleaded guilty to molesting five children he had coached, some team members and coaches shown in the photograph were not involved in the molestation, but had subsequently been subject to ridicule because the publication of the photograph identified them as members of the team. The defendants brought a special motion to strike pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16. The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's denial of the motion to strike on the grounds that the plaintiffs had established a probability of success on the merits of the privacy claims. Although the defendants argued that the photograph showing the plaintiffs was not a private fact and met the test of newsworthiness, the court of appeal held that a trier of fact could find to the contrary. The identities of the plaintiff as coaches or players on the molesting manager's team had not been revealed in coverage of the molestation case until the publication of the photograph, which served to publicly link the plaintiffs with child molestation as either victims, perpetrators, or collaborators. Therefore, although the information provided by the photograph was not secret, the photograph was intended for private use, and the plaintiffs' membership on the team was a private fact that had not previously been made widely public (89 Cal. App. 4th 623, 632-633) . Moreover, because state law, public policy, and journalistic ethics protect the identities of minors and the victims of sex crimes, a trier of fact could find that the photograph was not newsworthy (89 Cal. App. 4th 623, 635-636) .

In Times Mirror Co. v. Superior Court (1988) 198 Cal. App. 3d 1420, 244 Cal. Rptr. 556 , a witness to a murder brought an invasion-of-privacy action against a newspaper for publishing her name in the early stages of the criminal investigation, after efforts had been made by her and on her behalf to protect her identity. The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's denial of the defendant's motion for summary judgment, holding that a factual question remained regarding whether the plaintiff's identity was a private fact. Although names may appear in public records and are normally public information, the media may not print names in connection with sensitive information with impunity. Even when particular facts about an individual can be printed, the person's identity may be treated separately and not be subject to publication (198 Cal. App. 3d 1420, 1428) .

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT SHOULD BE HELD LIABLE FOR INVASION OF PRIVACY BECAUSE DEFENDANT CREATED PUBLICITY THAT PLACED PLAINTIFF IN A FALSE LIGHT IN THE PUBLIC EYE.

A. Right of Privacy. The right of privacy encompasses the tort involving publicity that places a person in a false light in the public eye (see Lugosi v. Universal Pictures (1979) 25 Cal. 3d 813, 819, 160 Cal. Rptr. 323, 603 P.2d 425 (main point now abrogated by Civ. Code § 3344.1).

B. Elements of False Light Publicity Tort. The tort of false light publicity, similar to an action for libel, consists of (1) publicity (2) which places a person in a false light in the public eye, (3) would be objectionable to a reasonable person, (4) was done with malice, and (5) when required, for which plaintiff has complied with the requirement of Section 48a of the Civil Code of a demand for retraction (see Briscoe v. Reader's Digest Ass'n, Inc. (1971) 4 Cal. 3d 529, 543, 93 Cal. Rptr. 866, 483 P.2d 34 (malice; Civ. Code § 48a applicable); Gill v. Curtis Publishing Co. (1952) 38 Cal. 2d 273, 280, 239 P.2d 630 (offensiveness); Werner v. Times-Mirror Co. (1961) 193 Cal. App. 2d 111, 120-123, 14 Cal. Rptr. 208 (publicity; Civ. Code § 48a applicable)).

C. Publicity Defined. Publicity means a communication to the public in general or to a large number of people, rather than merely to a few individuals (Kinsey v. Macur (1980) 107 Cal. App. 3d 265, 270, 165 Cal. Rptr. 608).

D. False Light Defined. False light means a false but not necessarily defamatory position in the public's view (Werner v. Times-Mirror Co. (1961) 193 Cal. App. 2d 111, 119, 14 Cal. Rptr. 208).

E. Malice Defined. Malice means proof that defendant published the material with knowledge of its falsity or with reckless disregard for its truth (see Cantrell v. Forest City Publ'g Co. (1974) 419 U.S. 245, 251-252, 95 S. Ct. 465, 42

L. Ed. 2d 419 ; Time v. Hill (1967) 385 U.S. 374, 386, 87 S. Ct. 534, 17 L. Ed. 2d 456).

[Optional] F. Demand for Retraction Requirements. In actions concerning publications in a newspaper or by a radio broadcast, in order to recover more than special damages, plaintiff must make a written demand for a retraction within 20 days after knowledge of the offensive publication or broadcast. If a correction is demanded within that period and is not published or broadcast in substantially as conspicuous a manner in said newspaper or on said broadcasting station as were the offending statements, in a regular issue thereof published or broadcast within three weeks after service of the demand, plaintiff, if he or she pleads and proves such notice, demand, and failure to correct, and if his or her cause of action is maintained, may recover general and special damages and, on proof that defendant made the broadcast with actual malice, exemplary damages (Civ. Code § 48a(1), (2); see Briscoe v. Reader's Digest Ass'n, Inc. (1971) 4 Cal. 3d 529, 543, 93 Cal. Rptr. 866, 483 P.2d 34).

[Optional] G. Special Damages Allegation Required When False Light Publication Also Defamatory But Not Libel on Its Face. The requirement under Section 45a of the Civil Code that special damages be pleaded and proven in actions involving defamatory language not libelous on its face applies to a false-light action based on a publication that is defamatory within the meaning of that statute (Fellows v. National Enquirer, Inc. (1986) 42 Cal. 3d 234, 247-251, 228 Cal. Rptr. 215, 721 P.2d 97).

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that defendant should be held liable for invasion of privacy because defendant created publicity that placed plaintiff in a false light in the public eye. Optional Paragraph F should be used if the action involves publication in a newspaper or radio broadcast to show the that plaintiff has satisfied the requirements of the retraction statute [see Civ. Code § 48a]. Optional Paragraph G should be used if the action involves a publication that is also defamatory.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue covered. For example, this form may be used in opposition to a motion for summary judgment when defendant asserts that plaintiff has failed to allege or prove a cause of action for invasion of privacy. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should include a discussion showing that the elements of the false light publicity tort were met: that the disclosure was to the public, that the facts disclosed placed plaintiff in a false light, that the disclosure was offensive and objectionable to a reasonable person of ordinary sensibilities, and that defendant acted with malice. In addition counsel should show that the demand for retraction requirements are not applicable or if they do apply, either that plaintiff made a timely demand and that defendant failed to retract or that, if plaintiff failed to make the demand or if defendant did retract, plaintiff suffered special damages. If defendant failed to retract in response to plaintiff's timely request and exemplary damages are sought, counsel should also show actual malice on defendant's part in making the publication or broadcast [see Civ. Code § 48a(2), (4)(d)]. If the publication was also defamatory, counsel should also show either that the publication was libelous on its face (and that therefore special damages need not be alleged), or that plaintiff in fact alleged special damage as a proximate result of the publication [Civ. Code § 45a].

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For further discussion and forms relating to the elements of malice, compliance with the demand for retraction requirements, and special damage requirements, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 340, Libel and Slander (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Points and Authorities

For other points and authorities relating to the elements of malice, compliance with the demand for retraction requirements, and special damage requirements, see Ch. 142, Libel and Slander (Defamation).

[d] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in §§ 184.26 -184.31 may be used to oppose the contentions supported by these points and authorities. In addition, memoranda of points and authorities in Ch. 142, Libel and Slander (Defamation), relating to the elements of malice, compliance with the demand for retraction requirements, and special damage requirements, may, with modifications, be used to oppose this form. Regarding the malice requirement, however, the distinction drawn in actions for defamation between private individual plaintiffs (need not prove malice) and public official or public figure plaintiffs (must prove malice) has not been held applicable to actions for invasion of privacy, in which all plaintiffs must prove malice [see Cantrell v. Forest City Publ'g Co. (1974) 419 U.S. 245, 250-251, 95 S. Ct. 465, 42 L. Ed. 2d 419 (invasion of privacy action); Gertz v. Welch (1974) 418 U.S. 323, 332, 347-349, 94 S. Ct. 2997, 41 L. Ed. 2d 789 (defamation action)].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Right of Privacy

The facts and procedural background of Lugosi v. Universal Pictures (1979) 25 Cal. 3d 813, 160 Cal. Rptr. 323, 603 P.2d 425 , are discussed in § 184.20[3][a]. The Court stated that the right of privacy comprises four separate torts, which are: (1) public disclosure of private facts; (2) publicity which places a person in a false light in the public eye; (3) intrusion on a person's seclusion or solitude or into private affairs; and (4) appropriation of a person's name or likeness for the defendant's advantage (25 Cal. 3d 813, 819) .

NOTE:

Although the Court's characterization of the four torts compromising the right of privacy remains valid, the actual holding of the case appears to have been abrogated by the enactment in 1984 of former Civ. Code § 990 [now see Civ. Code § 3344.1] concerning the use of a deceased personality's name, voice, signature, photograph, or likeness without consent [see §§ 184.40, 184.42].

[b] Elements of False Light Publicity Tort

Briscoe v. Reader's Digest Ass'n, Inc. (1971) 4 Cal. 3d 529, 93 Cal. Rptr. 866, 483 P.2d 34 , was an action for invasion of privacy under both the public disclosure and the false light publicity torts. The case arose out of defendant's publication of an article in its magazine that identified plaintiff as a hijacker and did not indicate that the crime occurred 11 years earlier. Defendant's demurrer was sustained, and plaintiff appealed from the judgment entered.

The Supreme Court reversed, finding that plaintiff had stated a valid cause of action for the public disclosure tort, and could amend to state a cause of action for the false light tort (4 Cal. 3d 529, 543-544) . The Court found that a false light publicity cause of action is in substance equivalent to a libel claim and must meet the same requirements as a libel claim, including proof of malice and fulfillment of the demand for retraction requirements of Civ. Code § 48a. Because plaintiff had failed to comply with the requirements of Civ. Code § 48a, the Court ruled, he could amend his complaint to state a valid cause of action for false light publicity only if he alleged special damages (4 Cal. 3d 529, 543) . The case was remanded with directions to overrule the general demurrer and to rule on the special demurrer (4 Cal. 3d 529, 544) .

NOTE:

In Gates v. Discovery Communications, Inc. (2004), 34 Cal. 4th 679, 692-696, 21 Cal. Rptr. 3d 663, 101 P.3d 552 , relying on United States Supreme Court precedent, the California Supreme Court overruled Briscoe to the extent that Briscoe allowed an invasion of privacy action to be predicated on a media defendant's publication of true information obtained from official public records of a criminal proceeding. The Court in Gates also concluded that the passage of time did not lessen the constitutional protection afforded to the media's right to publish these facts [Gates v. Discovery Communications, Inc. (2004), 34 Cal. 4th 679, 693-696, 21 Cal. Rptr. 3d 663, 101 P.3d 552 ; see § 184.27].

Gill v. Curtis Publishing Co. (1952) 38 Cal. 2d 273, 239 P.2d 630 , was an action by a husband and wife against a magazine for invasion of privacy. The case concerned defendants' use of a photograph of plaintiffs with their arms around one another, taken in a public place, but without plaintiffs' knowledge or consent. Defendants used the photograph in an article about different kinds of love as an illustration of love at first sight, which it characterized as a bad risk based solely on sexual attraction and as the "wrong" kind of love. Defendants' motion for judgment on the pleadings was granted, and plaintiffs appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed, holding that the complaint stated a cause of action (38 Cal. 2d 273, 281-282) . The Court stated that liability for invasion of privacy is imposed only if defendant's conduct is offensive to persons of ordinary sensibilities (38 Cal. 2d 273, 280) . It is not unreasonable, the Court found, to believe that defendants' depiction of plaintiffs was seriously humiliating and disturbing to plaintiffs' sensibilities (38 Cal. 2d 273, 280) .

Werner v. Times-Mirror Co. (1961) 193 Cal. App. 2d 111, 14 Cal. Rptr. 208 , was an action for invasion of privacy based on false and misleading statements about prior events in plaintiff's life that defendant published in a newspaper article announcing plaintiff's engagement to be married. Defendant's demurrer was sustained and a judgment of dismissal was entered. Plaintiff appealed.

On appeal, the court affirmed, holding that no cause of action was stated for invasion of privacy (193 Cal. App. 2d 111, 123) . In discussing the false light publicity tort, the court stated that it involves a publication that puts plaintiff in a false but not necessarily defamatory position in the public eye (193 Cal. App. 2d 111, 119) . The court noted that this tort requires publicity, like that required in the public disclosure tort (193 Cal. App. 2d 111, 120) . Plaintiff could not recover under the false light tort, the court ruled, because he had failed to comply with the demand for retraction requirements of Civ. Code § 48a (193 Cal. App. 2d 111, 123) . The court also found that plaintiff had failed to prove a cause of action under the public disclosure tort (193 Cal. App. 2d 111, 118) .

[c] Publicity Defined

The facts and procedural background of Kinsey v. Macur (1980) 107 Cal. App. 3d 265, 165 Cal. Rptr. 608 , are discussed in § 184.20[3][c]. The court ruled that except in the physical intrusion tort, all of the torts for invasion of privacy must be accompanied by publicity in the sense of a communication to the public in general or to a large number of persons (107 Cal. App. 3d 265, 270) .

[d] False Light Defined

The facts and procedural background of Werner v. Times-Mirror Co. (1961) 193 Cal. App. 2d 111, 14 Cal. Rptr. 208 , are discussed in § 184.21[3][b]. In that case, the court explained the nature of the false light in the false light publicity tort as a disclosure putting plaintiff in a false but not necessarily defamatory position in the public eye (193 Cal. App. 2d 111, 119) .

[e] Malice Defined

Cantrell v. Forest City Publ'g Co. (1974) 419 U.S. 245, 95 S. Ct. 465, 42 L. Ed. 2d 419 , was an invasion of privacy action by a widow and her children for a newspaper article that placed them in a false light in the public eye through its conceded inaccuracies and untruths. The story focused on the impact of the husband's death in a bridge collapse, falsely portraying the widow's reaction and the family's financial condition. The claims for punitive damages were struck, and the jury ultimately returned a verdict for plaintiffs. The court of appeal reversed, finding that the trial court's ruling that plaintiffs failed to prove the malice necessary for punitive damages--that is, hatred or ill will--was a finding that plaintiffs had failed to prove malice necessary for liability--that is, knowledge of falsity or reckless disregard for the truth.

The Supreme Court, on certiorari, reversed. The Court held that the malice necessary for liability in a false light invasion of privacy action is proof that defendants published the material with knowledge of its falsity or with reckless disregard for the truth, and that plaintiffs had proven this element (419 U.S. 245, 251-253) . The trial court's finding of no malice for punitive damages was limited to a determination that plaintiffs had failed to prove defendants' hatred or ill will toward plaintiffs (419 U.S. 245, 251-252) . The Court also found that the publisher was vicariously liable with the writer, and the judgment was reversed with directions to the court of appeal to enter a judgment affirming the trial court's judgment (419 U.S. 245, 254) .

Time v. Hill (1967) 385 U.S. 374, 87 S. Ct. 534, 17 L. Ed. 2d 456 , was an action under a New York statute for a false light type of invasion of privacy. The case concerned an article in Life magazine that falsely reported that a new Broadway play portrayed plaintiff's family's experience in being held hostage by three escaped convicts. Judgment was awarded to plaintiff and several appeals followed. The judgment was ultimately affirmed by the court of appeal.

The Supreme Court reversed, holding that constitutional freedoms of speech and press precluded the application of the statute to redress false reports of matters of public interest in the absence of proof that defendant published the article with knowledge of its falsity or in reckless disregard of the truth (385 U.S. 374, 387-388) . Because the jury instructions did not predicate liability on this standard, the judgment was set aside and the case remanded (385 U.S. 374, 394, 398) .

[f] Demand for Retraction Requirements

The facts and procedural background of Briscoe v. Reader's Digest Ass'n, Inc. (1971) 4 Cal. 3d 529, 93 Cal. Rptr. 866, 483 P.2d 34 , are discussed in § 184.21[3][b]. In reversing the judgment entered after defendant's demurrer was sustained, the Supreme Court found that plaintiff had stated a valid cause of action for a public disclosure tort and could amend to state a cause of action for the false light tort (4 Cal. 3d 529, 543-544) . The Court found that a false light publicity cause of action is in substance equivalent to a libel claim and must meet the same requirements as a libel claim, including proof of malice and fulfillment of the demand for retraction requirements of Civ. Code § 48a. Because plaintiff had failed to comply with the requirements of Civ. Code § 48a, he could amend his complaint to state a valid cause of action for false light publicity only if he alleged special damages (4 Cal. 3d 529, 543) . The case was remanded with directions to overrule the general demurrer and to rule on the special demurrer (4 Cal. 3d 529, 544) .

The facts and procedural background of Kinsey v. Macur (1980) 107 Cal. App. 3d 265, 165 Cal. Rptr. 608 are discussed in § 184.20[3][c]. The court of appeal held that plaintiff was not required to comply with the demand for retraction requirements of Civ. Code § 48a when he based his action on both the public disclosure and false light publicity torts (107 Cal. App. 3d 265, 275-276) . The court found that subjecting the plaintiff to the retraction requirements would only have exacerbated the invasion of his privacy, given the nature of the disclosures and the manner of their distribution (107 Cal. App. 3d 265, 276) .

[g] Special Damages Allegation Required When False Light Publication Also Defamatory But Not Libel on Its Face

In Fellows v. National Enquirer, Inc. (1986) 42 Cal. 3d 234, 228 Cal. Rptr. 215, 721 P.2d 97 , plaintiff, a film producer, brought an action against a newspaper for libel and false light invasion of privacy. Both causes of action involved the publication of an article stating that plaintiff was dating an actress, which plaintiff alleged was defamatory based on facts extrinsic to the article, specifically that plaintiff was married, and therefore the article would be understood by those who knew of his marital status to mean that plaintiff was engaged in improper or immoral conduct. In the course of a series of amended complaints and demurrers based on the insufficiency of the special damages allegations for both the libel and false light counts, plaintiff conceded that no special damages had been suffered. In his final complaint, plaintiff did not reassert his cause of action for libel, but continued to allege false light invasion of privacy, maintaining that special damages were not a prerequisite to such an action. The trial court sustained a demurrer to the complaint and entered an order of dismissal. On appeal, the court of appeal reversed the dismissal order.

On review, the Supreme Court of California reversed the court of appeal. The Court observed that under Civ. Code § 45a, language that is defamatory only by reference to extrinsic facts is not actionable unless the plaintiff can prove special damages. The issue before the Court was whether the special damages rule of Civ. Code § 45a applies when a defamatory publication gives rise to an action for false light invasion of privacy rather than libel. The Court concluded that when a false light action is based on a publication that is defamatory within the meaning of Civ. Code § 45a, pleading and proof of special damages are required (42 Cal. 3d 234, 236) . In reaching its conclusion, the Court considered prior decisions holding that because a false light cause of action is in substance equivalent to a libel claim, it should be subject to the same restrictions and requirements of a libel claim (42 Cal. 3d 234, 242-244) . The Court observed that Civ. Code § 45a manifests a legislative determination that liability imposed for a publication that affords no warning of its defamatory nature, and has not caused actual pecuniary injury, would place too great a burden on the editorial process and would hamper the free dissemination of the news. The fact that plaintiff had deleted injury to reputation from the prayer and was seeking to recover only for injury to his or her sensibilities does not alter the legislative judgment that such injuries alone are inadequate to outweigh the burden on a free press (42 Cal. 3d 234, 250) .

PART II. FORMS

18-184 California Points & Authorities § 184.22

§ 184.22 Supporting Contention That Defendant Invaded Plaintiff's Right to Privacy--By Appropriation of Name or Likeness--Under Common Law

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT SHOULD BE HELD LIABLE FOR INVASION OF PRIVACY BECAUSE DEFENDANT APPROPRIATED PLAINTIFF'S NAME OR LIKENESS, WITHOUT PLAINTIFF'S CONSENT, FOR DEFENDANT'S ADVANTAGE.

A. Right of Privacy. The right of privacy encompasses the tort of unauthorized appropriation of a person's name or likeness for defendant's advantage (see Lugosi v. Universal Pictures (1979) 25 Cal. 3d 813, 819, 160 Cal. Rptr. 323, 603 P.2d 425 (main point now abrogated by Civ. Code § 3344.1).

B. Elements of Appropriation Tort. At common law, the tort of appropriation of name or likeness consists of (1) the defendant's use of the plaintiff's identity; (2) the appropriation of plaintiff's name or likeness to defendant's advantage, commercially or otherwise; (3) lack of consent; and (4) resulting injury (Eastwood v. Superior Court (1983) 149 Cal. App. 3d 409, 417, 198 Cal. Rptr. 342 ; Williams v. Weisser (1969) 273 Cal. App. 2d 726, 742, 78 Cal. Rptr. 542).

[Optional] C. Endorsement Not Required. The plaintiff is not required to show that his or her name or likeness was used to endorse defendant's product or service in order to state a cause of action for invasion of privacy by appropriation (Eastwood v. Superior Court (1983) 149 Cal. App. 3d 409, 418-421, 198 Cal. Rptr. 342).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that defendant should be held liable for invasion of privacy under common law because defendant appropriated plaintiff's name or likeness, without plaintiff's consent, for defendant's advantage. Optional Paragraph C should be used when plaintiff's name or likeness has not been used to endorse a product or service of defendant but has nevertheless been appropriated to defendant's advantage. Counsel may wish to combine these points and authorities with points and authorities supporting the liability of defendant for appropriation under Civ. Code § 3344 [see § 184.23].

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue covered. For example, this form may be used in opposition to a motion for summary judgment when defendant asserts that plaintiff has failed to allege or prove a cause of action for invasion of privacy. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in §§ 184.26 -184.31 may be used to oppose the contentions supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Right of Privacy

Lugosi v. Universal Pictures (1979) 25 Cal. 3d 813, 160 Cal. Rptr. 323, 603 P.2d 425 , is discussed in § 184.20[3][a].

NOTE:

Although the Court's characterization of the four torts compromising the right of privacy remains valid, the actual holding of the case appears to have been abrogated by the enactment in 1984 of former Civ. Code § 990 [now see Civ. Code § 3344.1] concerning the use of a deceased personality's name, voice, signature, photograph, or likeness without consent [see §§ 184.40, 184.42].

[b] Elements of Appropriation Tort

Eastwood v. Superior Court (1983) 149 Cal. App. 3d 409, 198 Cal. Rptr. 342 , was an action for invasion of privacy by appropriation under the common law and under Civ. Code § 3344 (appropriation for purposes of advertising or soliciting purchases), and invasion by false light publicity. The case concerned the use by defendant, real party in interest, National Enquirer, of the name and photograph of plaintiff, actor Clint Eastwood. Plaintiff's name and photograph were used on the cover and in an article in defendant's magazine, and in related television advertisements for the magazine. The publication falsely reported plaintiff's love affairs with two other celebrities. Defendant's demurrer to the appropriation cause of action was sustained, and plaintiff sought a writ of mandate.

The court of appeal reversed, finding that plaintiff had stated a cause of action for appropriation of name or likeness under the common law and under Civ. Code § 3344. The court rejected defendant's contention that the appropriation tort requires a showing that defendant used plaintiff's name or likeness for an endorsement (149 Cal. App. 3d 409, 418-421) . The court held that California law does not impose any requirement that the unauthorized use or publication of a person's name or picture be suggestive of an endorsement or association with the injured person (149 Cal. App. 3d 409, 418) . The court held that the real party in interest had commercially exploited plaintiff's personality, relying on the real party in interest's use of plaintiff's personality and fame on the cover of the publication and in related telecast advertisements, which gained the real party in interest a commercial advantage to the extent that it attracted readers' attention. The court also relied on defendant's use of plaintiff's personality in the context of an alleged news account, entitled in a manner to generate maximum curiosity and the necessary motivation to purchase the newspaper, and on defendant's use of plaintiff's personality in the context of an allegedly false news account that was presented as true, which provided the real party in interest with a ready-made "scoop," a commercial advantage over its competitors that it would otherwise not have (149 Cal. App. 3d 409, 420) .

Williams v. Weisser (1969) 273 Cal. App. 2d 726, 78 Cal. Rptr. 542 , was an action by a college professor for copyright infringement and invasion of privacy by defendant selling class notes of plaintiff's lectures, using plaintiff's name, but without plaintiff's consent. Judgment was entered for plaintiff and defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that defendant's conduct amounted to an unauthorized appropriation of plaintiff's name and personality for defendant's pecuniary gain (273 Cal. App. 2d 726, 742) . For this and other reasons the judgment was affirmed (273 Cal. App. 2d 726, 744) .

[c] Endorsement Not Required

Eastwood v. Superior Court (1983) 149 Cal. App. 3d 409, 198 Cal. Rptr. 342 , is discussed in § 184.22[3][b].

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Elements of Appropriation Tort

In Wood v. Thomason (9th Cir. 1994) 22 F.3d 1455 , a singer-songwriter sued the producer of a television series, alleging that the use of his name as the name of a character in the series constituted appropriation. The court of appeal held that, without some evidence that the defendant drew attention to the fact that the character's name was the same as plaintiff's or that the character in some way resembled plaintiff, the mere use of the name was not a commercial purpose (22 F.3d 1455, 1461) . In addition, the court also held that there was no triable issue of fact on the issue of consent, given evidence that the plaintiff had written to the defendant concerning the use of his name, stating that he was flattered, and that plaintiff had not objected until the defendant declined to use music written by the plaintiff as the series' theme music (22 F.3d 1455, 1461) .

In Fairfield v. American Photocopy Equip. Co. (1955) 138 Cal. App. 2d 82, 291 P.2d 194 , an action for invasion of privacy by appropriation of name or likeness when defendant circulated an advertisement among the legal profession falsely stating that plaintiff was a satisfied user of defendant's product, a judgment of nonsuit for defendant was reversed by the court of appeal. The court found that the unauthorized use of a person's name or the exploitation of someone's personality constitutes an actionable invasion of privacy (138 Cal. App. 2d 82, 86) . Defendant's advertisement amounted to an unauthorized and unwarranted appropriation of plaintiff's personality as a lawyer for pecuniary gain or profit (138 Cal. App. 2d 82, 87) .

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT SHOULD BE HELD LIABLE FOR INVASION OF PRIVACY BECAUSE DEFENDANT KNOWINGLY APPROPRIATED PLAINTIFF'S _____ [NAME or VOICE or SIGNATURE or PHOTOGRAPH or LIKENESS], WITHOUT PLAINTIFF'S PRIOR CONSENT, _____ [ON OR IN PRODUCTS, MERCHANDISE, OR GOODS or FOR THE PURPOSE OF _____ (ADVERTISING and/or SELLING and/or SOLICITING PURCHASES OF) _____ (PRODUCTS and/or MERCHANDISE and/or GOODS and/or SERVICES)].

A. Unauthorized Use of Name, Voice, Signature, Photograph, or Likeness. Any person who knowingly uses another's name, voice, signature, photograph, or likeness, in any manner, on or in products, merchandise, or goods, or for purposes of either advertising, selling, or soliciting purchases of products, merchandise, goods, or services, without such person's prior consent, [or in the case of a minor, the prior consent of his parent or legal guardian], shall be liable for any damages sustained by the person or persons injured as a result of the unauthorized use, as well as the greater of $750 or the actual damages suffered as a result of the unauthorized use, and any profits resulting from the unauthorized use not accounted for in computing actual damages (Civ. Code § 3344(a)).

[Optional] B. Endorsement Not Required. [See § 184.22, Paragraph C.]

[Optional] C. Photograph Defined. As used in Civ. Code § 3344, photograph means any photograph or photographic reproduction, still or moving, or any videotape or live television transmission, of any person, such that the person is readily identifiable (Civ. Code § 3344(b)).

[Optional] D. Readily Identifiable Defined. A person is deemed "readily identifiable" from a photograph when one who views the photograph with the naked eye can reasonably determine that the person depicted in the photograph is the same person as the one complaining of its unauthorized use (Civ. Code § 3344(b)(1)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that defendant should be held liable for invasion of privacy under Civ. Code § 3344 because defendant knowingly appropriated plaintiff's name, voice, signature, photograph, or likeness, without plaintiff's prior consent, on or in products, merchandise, or goods, or for purposes of advertising, selling, or soliciting purchases of products, merchandise, goods, or services. Counsel may wish to combine these points and authorities with points and authorities supporting the liability of defendant for appropriation under the common law [see § 184.22].

These points and authorities may also be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue covered. For example, this form may be used in opposition to a motion for summary judgment when defendant asserts that plaintiff has failed to allege or prove a cause of action for invasion of privacy. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should include a discussion showing that defendant knowingly used plaintiff's name, voice, signature, photograph, or likeness, that the use was on or in products, merchandise, or goods, or for advertising, selling, or soliciting purchases of products or services, and that defendant's use was without plaintiff's prior consent. In addition, if defendant's use involved plaintiff's photograph, counsel should establish that the photograph meets the definition of photograph in Civ. Code § 3344(b), and that plaintiff is readily identifiable in the photograph.

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in §§ 184.26 -184.37 may be used to oppose the contentions supported by these points and authorities.

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT SHOULD BE HELD LIABLE FOR INVASION OF PRIVACY BECAUSE DEFENDANT KNOWINGLY APPROPRIATED THE _____ [NAME or VOICE or SIGNATURE or PHOTOGRAPH or LIKENESS] OF _____ [name], A DECEASED PERSONALITY, _____ [ON OR IN PRODUCTS, MERCHANDISE, OR GOODS or FOR THE PURPOSE OF _____ (ADVERTISING and/or SELLING and/or SOLICITING PURCHASES OF) _____ (PRODUCTS and/or MERCHANDISE and/or GOODS and/or SERVICES)], WITHOUT THE CONSENT OF PLAINTIFF WHO RECEIVED THESE RIGHTS BY _____ [TRANSFER or DESCENT] FROM _____ [name of deceased personality] PURSUANT TO SECTION 3344.1 OF THE CIVIL CODE.

A. Unauthorized Use of Name, Voice, Signature, Photograph, or Likeness of Deceased Personality. Any person who uses a deceased personality's name, voice, signature, photograph, or likeness, in any manner, on or in products, merchandise, or goods, or for purposes of either advertising, selling, or soliciting purchases of products, merchandise, goods, or services, without prior consent from the person or persons specified in Section 3344.1(c) of the Civil Code, shall be liable for any damages sustained by the person or persons injured as a result of the unauthorized use, as well as the greater of $750 or the actual damages suffered as a result of the unauthorized use, and any profits resulting from the unauthorized use not accounted for in computing actual damages (Civ. Code § 3344.1(a)).

[Optional] B. "Deceased Personality" Defined. The term "deceased personality" as used in Section 3344.1 of the Civil Code means any natural person whose name, voice, signature, photograph, or likeness has commercial value at the time of his or her death, or because of his or her death, whether or not during the lifetime of that natural person the person used his or her name, voice, signature, photograph, or likeness on or in products, merchandise, or goods, or for purposes of advertising or selling, or solicitation of purchase of, products, merchandise, goods, or service. A deceased personality includes, without limitation, any such natural person who has died within 70 years prior to January 1, 1985 (Civ. Code § 3344.1(h)).

[Optional] C. "Photograph" Defined. As used in Civ. Code § 3344.1, "photograph" means any photograph or photographic reproduction, still or moving, or any video recording or live television transmission, of any person, such that the deceased personality is readily identifiable (Civ. Code § 3344.1(i)).

[Optional] D. Readily Identifiable Defined. A deceased personality is deemed "readily identifiable" from a photograph when one who views the photograph with the naked eye can reasonably determine who the person depicted in the photograph is (Civ. Code § 3344.1(i)).

Code § 3344.1*. Counsel may wish to combine these points and authorities with points and authorities supporting the liability of defendant for appropriation under the common law [see § 184.22]. The requirements of standing established in Civ. Code § 3344.1 are discussed in §§ 184.40 and 184.42.

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT SHOULD BE HELD LIABLE FOR INVASION OF PRIVACY BECAUSE DEFENDANT PHYSICALLY INTRUDED ON PLAINTIFF'S _____ [SOLITUDE OR SECLUSION or PRIVATE AFFAIRS].

A. Elements of Physical Intrusion Tort. The tort of intrusion encompasses unconsented-to physical intrusion into the home, hospital room or other place the privacy of which is legally recognized, as well as unwarranted sensory intrusions such as eavesdropping, wiretapping, and visual or photographic spying. The action has two elements: (1) intrusion into a private place, conversation or matter; (2) in a manner highly offensive to a reasonable person (Shulman v. Group W Prods., Inc. (1998) 18 Cal. 4th 200, 231, 74 Cal. Rptr. 2d 843, 955 P.2d 469).

B. Right of Privacy. In order to prove actionable intrusion a plaintiff must show the defendant penetrated some zone of physical or sensory privacy surrounding, or obtained unwanted access to data about, the plaintiff. The tort is proven only if the plaintiff had an objectively reasonable expectation of seclusion or solitude in the place, conversation or data source (Shulman v. Group W Prods., Inc. (1998) 18 Cal. 4th 200, 231, 74 Cal. Rptr. 2d 843, 955 P.2d 469 ; see Hernandez v. Hillsides, Inc. (2009) 47 Cal. 4th 272, 288-294, 97 Cal. Rptr. 3d 274, 211 P.3d 1063).

C. Expectation of Privacy Need Not Be Expectation of Complete or Absolute Privacy. An expectation of privacy need not be an expectation of complete or absolute privacy in order to be an objectively reasonable expectation of privacy for purposes of the tort of intrusion. The reasonableness of a person's expectation of visual or aural privacy depends not only on who might have been able to observe the relevant interaction, but also on the identity of the alleged intruder and the means of intrusion (Sanders v. American Broad. Cos. (1999) 20 Cal. 4th 907, 915, 923, 85 Cal. Rptr. 2d 909, 978 P.2d 67).

D. Intruder's Motives Relevant to Offensiveness Determination. All the circumstances of an intrusion, including the motives or justification of the intruder, are pertinent to the offensiveness element. Motivation or justification becomes particularly important when the intrusion is by a member of the print or broadcast press in the pursuit of news material (Shulman v. Group W Prods., Inc. (1998) 18 Cal. 4th 200, 236, 74 Cal. Rptr. 2d 843, 955 P.2d 469).

E. No Broad Privilege for Intrusive Newsgathering. In contrast to the broad privilege the press enjoys for publishing truthful, newsworthy information in its possession, the press has no recognized constitutional privilege to violate generally applicable laws such as California's intrusion tort, in pursuit of material (Shulman v. Group W Prods., Inc. (1998) 18 Cal. 4th 200, 242, 74 Cal. Rptr. 2d 843, 955 P.2d 469).

F. Publication Not Required. Publication is not a required element of the physical intrusion tort (Dietemann v. Time, Inc. (9th Cir. 1971) 449 F.2d 245, 247) .

[Optional] G. Unreasonably Intrusive Investigation. An unreasonably intrusive investigation may constitute the tort of physical intrusion (Noble v. Sears, Roebuck & Co. (1973) 33 Cal. App. 3d 654, 659-660, 109 Cal. Rptr. 269).

[Optional] H. Deceptive Investigation May Support Action for Intrusion. An action for intrusion may lie against a party if that party obtains access to personal information about the plaintiff from the plaintiff's friends or relatives by utilizing improper and unanticipated means and the information could not otherwise have been obtained without resort to such means (Taus v. Loftus (2007) 40 Cal. 4th 683, 731, 54 Cal. Rptr. 3d 775, 151 P.3d 1185).

[2] Comments

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that defendant should be held liable for invasion of privacy because defendant physically intruded on plaintiff's solitude or into plaintiff's private affairs.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue covered. For example, this form may be used in opposition to a motion for summary judgment when defendant asserts that plaintiff has failed to allege or prove a cause of action for invasion of privacy. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should include a discussion showing that the elements of the physical intrusion tort were met: that the defendant intruded, that the intrusion was offensive and objectionable to a reasonable person of ordinary sensibilities, and that defendant's intrusion was into a place or thing that was private.

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in §§ 184.26 -184.31 and § 184.39 may be used to oppose the contentions supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Elements of Physical Intrusion Tort

In Shulman v. Group W Prods., Inc. (1998) 18 Cal. 4th 200, 74 Cal. Rptr. 2d 843, 955 P.2d 469 , plaintiffs, a mother and her son were injured when their car went off the highway overturning and trapping them inside. A medical transport and rescue helicopter crew came to plaintiffs' assistance, accompanied on this occasion by a video camera operator employed by a television producer. The cameraman filmed plaintiffs' extrication from the car, the flight nurse and medic's efforts to give them medical care during the extrication, and their transport to the hospital in the helicopter. The flight nurse wore a small microphone that picked up her conversations with other rescue workers and with one of the plaintiffs. This videotape and sound track were edited into a segment that was broadcast months later on a documentary show, On Scene: Emergency Response. Plaintiffs, who neither consented to the filming and recording nor to the broadcast, alleged that the television producers intruded into a realm of personal privacy and gave unwarranted publicity to private events of their lives. The trial court granted summary judgment for the producers on the ground that the events depicted in the broadcast were newsworthy and the producers' activities were therefore protected under the First Amendment to the United States Constitution. The court of appeal reversed, finding legal error on the trial court's part as to both plaintiff's intrusion claims. The California Supreme Court, in a plurality opinion, concluded that the court of appeal correctly found triable issues existed as to whether defendants invaded plaintiffs' privacy by accompanying plaintiffs in the helicopter. However, contrary to the court of appeals it also held that triable issues existed as to whether defendants tortiously intruded by listening to the plaintiff mother's confidential conversations with the flight nurse at the rescue scene without her consent. Moreover, it held defendants had no constitutional privilege to intrude on plaintiff's seclusion and private communications (18 Cal. 4th 200, 214) .

The Court began its analysis by stating that the tort of intrusion encompassed unconsented-to physical intrusion into the home, hospital room or other place the privacy of which is legally recognized, as well as unwarranted sensory intrusions such as eavesdropping, wiretapping, and visual or photographic spying. It then articulated the two elements of the tort: intrusion into a private place, conversation or matter; in a manner highly offensive to a reasonable person (18 Cal. 4th 200, 231) .

The facts and procedural background of Shulman v. Group W Prods., Inc. (1998) 18 Cal. 4th 200, 74 Cal. Rptr. 2d 843, 955 P.2d 469 , are discussed in § 184.25[3][a]. In that case, the California Supreme Court, in a plurality opinion, stated that in order to prove actionable intrusion a plaintiff must show the defendant penetrated some zone of physical or sensory privacy surrounding, or obtained unwanted access to data about, the plaintiff. The tort is proven only if the plaintiff had an objectively reasonable expectation of seclusion or solitude in the place, conversation or data source.

In determining whether plaintiffs' privacy had been intruded under the facts of this case, the Court distinguished between the privacy due plaintiffs at the scene of the accident versus the interior of the rescue helicopter. It determined that the cameraman's mere presence at the accident scene and filming of the events there could not be deemed either a physical or sensory intrusion on plaintiff's seclusion because plaintiffs had no right of ownership, possession, or actual control of the property where the rescue took place. In addition, plaintiffs had no reasonable expectation that members of the media would be excluded or prevented from photographing the scene. However, two aspects of defendants' conduct did raise triable issues of intrusion on seclusion (18 Cal. 4th 200, 232) . First, a triable issue existed as to whether the plaintiffs had an objectively reasonable expectation of privacy in the interior of the rescue helicopter, which served as an ambulance. According to the Court, while the attendance of reporters and photographers at the scene of an accident was to be expected, it was aware of no law or custom permitting the press to ride in ambulances or enter hospital rooms during treatment without the patients consent. Second, the plaintiff mother was entitled to a degree of privacy in her conversations with the flight nurse and other medical rescuers at the accident scene, and in the nurse's conversations conveying medical information regarding the mother to the hospital base. According to the Court, while the cameraman may not have intruded into that zone of privacy merely by being present at a place where he could hear such conversations with unaided ears, by placing a microphone on the nurse's person, amplifying and recording what she said and heard, defendants may have listened in on conversations the parties could reasonably have expected to be private.

The Court acknowledged that a patient's conversation with a provider of medical care in the course of treatment, carried a well-established expectation of privacy. Moreover, that California's Invasion of Privacy Act (Pen. Code § 632(a)), prohibited the recording of any confidential communication without the consent of the parties. Whether the circumstances of plaintiff mother's extrication and helicopter rescue would reasonably have indicated to defendants, that plaintiff would desire and expect her communications to the flight nurse or other rescuers to be heard by them alone, and therefore not to be electronically transmitted and recorded, was also a triable issue of fact in the case (18 Cal. 4th 200, 235) .

In Hernandez v. Hillsides, Inc. (2009) 47 Cal. 4th 272, 288-294, 97 Cal. Rptr. 3d 274, 211 P.3d 1063 , the director at a facility for neglected and abused children placed a hidden camera and motion sensor in an office shared by two female employees in order to capture video evidence of which employee had been using one of the computers in that office late at night to view Internet pornography, conduct that violated employer policy and posed potential risk for the children housed at the facility. Although the two female employees were not told of the camera, the evidence indicated that the director activated the camera and sensor only three times over a three-week period and only after the women had left work for the day. Although it was possible that someone during the day could sneak into a nearby locked storage room where the monitor was located and activate the camera, there was no evidence that the camera was ever activated when the female employees were at work, nor that they were ever videotaped. When the camera was discovered by the women, the director was very forthright about why it was placed in their office and immediately showed the brief videotape that had been recorded during the nights it had been activated. The women nonetheless sued the employer for invasion of privacy. The trial court granted summary judgment for the employer, plaintiffs appealed, and the court of appeal reversed. Defendants appealed.

The California Supreme Court affirmed the trial court's grant of summary judgment, but held initially that the women had shown an intrusion into their shared office space, a place in which they had a reasonable expectation of privacy (47 Cal. 4th 272, 294) . The Court noted that the employer provided an enclosed office for the plaintiffs to share, with a door that could be shut and locked and window blinds that could be drawn, to allow the occupants to obtain some measure of privacy to focus on their work and escape visual and aural interruptions from other sources. The Court recognized that this protective setting generates legitimate expectations that not all activities performed behind closed doors would be work related, but might extend to grooming or hygiene activities or personal conversations. Moreover, employees who retreat into a shared office such as that would not reasonably expect to be the subject of televised spying and secret filming by the employer. The Court also noted that other court opinions had recognized the intrusive effect of hidden cameras and video recorders and the Legislature had enacted statutes in an attempt to prevent such covert monitoring and recording in certain settings (47 Cal. 4th 272, 291-293) . While the Court recognized that the intent of the director in placing the camera in the office, and the steps taken to prevent monitoring and recording of plaintiffs, was relevant to the offensiveness of the intrusion, this evidence did not bear on whether plaintiffs had stated an otherwise-actionable intrusion in the first instance. In addition to the relative seclusion of the semi-private office provided to plaintiffs, the Court also pointed to the fact that nothing in the employer's policies hinted to plaintiffs that they could be monitored by camera while working at their computers, only that the company computers could be monitored electronically for use of e-mail, messages, electronic files, and web site data (47 Cal. 4th 272, 293-294) . While plaintiffs had stated a viable intrusion, however, the Court also found that, under the facts of the case, the intrusion would not be considered utterly unjustified and highly offensive to a reasonable person, thus defeating plaintiffs' cause of action (47 Cal. 4th 272, 295-299).

[c] Expectation of Privacy Need Not Be Expectation of Complete or Absolute Privacy

In Sanders v. American Broad. Cos. (1999) 20 Cal. 4th 907, 85 Cal. Rptr. 2d 909, 978 P.2d 67 , plaintiff, who was employed as a telepsychic, brought an action against a television network and its reporter for violations of Pen. Code § 632, which prohibits eavesdropping on or recording of confidential communications, and tortious invasion of privacy by intrusion. The action arose after the reporter, investigating a story on the telepsychic industry for network television, covertly videotaped and recorded her conversations with plaintiff while working undercover as a telepsychic for the plaintiff's employer. The conversations took place in front of the parties' cubicles in a large workplace filled with about 100 cubicles, created with five-foot-high partitions. While the conversations could have been overheard by coworkers, and in fact one conversation included other coworkers, the work area was generally off-access to members of the general public. Trial on the actions was bifurcated, and the jury first returned a special verdict on the action brought under Pen. Code § 632, finding that the alleged intrusion was conducted "in circumstances in which the parties to the communication may reasonably have expected that the communications may have been overheard." Based on this finding, the trial court ordered judgment entered for the defendants on the action brought under Pen. Code § 632. Trial went forward on the cause of action for intrusion, and the jury eventually found for plaintiff, awarding compensatory and punitive damages. The court of appeal reversed the judgment for plaintiff on the intrusion cause of action and ordered judgment entered for defendants. The court of appeal reasoned that the jury finding on the action brought under Pen. Code § 632, that the conversations took place under circumstances in which the parties might reasonably have expected that they would be overheard, precluded recovery on the cause of action for intrusion, since recovery for the tort required an objectively reasonable expectation of confidentiality. The plaintiff appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed the court of appeal. After reiterating the elements of the intrusion tort as articulated by their opinion in Shulman v. Group W Prods., Inc. (1998) 18 Cal. 4th 200, 74 Cal. Rptr. 2d 843, 955 P.2d 469 [see § 184.25[3]][a], [b]], the Court held that an expectation of privacy need not be an expectation of complete or absolute privacy in order to be an objectively reasonable expectation of privacy for purposes of the tort of intrusion. Citing numerous decisions from many jurisdictions supporting the notion that an expectation of privacy may be protected even though a limited expectation, the Court concluded that the reasonableness of a person's expectation of visual or aural privacy depends not only on who might have been able to observe the relevant interaction, but also on the identity of the alleged intruder and the means of intrusion (20 Cal. 4th 907, 915-918, 923) . In the case before it, the Court held that the fact that a workplace interaction could have been heard or witnessed by other workers on the premises, but not by the general public, would not necessarily preclude a finding that a participant had an objectively reasonable expectation that the conversation or interaction would not be secretly videotaped by an undercover television reporter for broadcast on a television program, at least when the workplace did not provide unfettered access to the general public and the intruder was posing as a coworker (20 Cal. 4th 907, 911, 922-923) . Thus, the court of appeal erred in concluding that the finding on the action brought under Pen. Code § 632 necessarily barred recovery on the tort cause of action for intrusion (20 Cal. 4th 907, 924-925) .

However, the Court went on to distinguish the facts in the case at issue from interactions between a business proprietor and a customer, which might be characterized as public conversations between strangers and which might justify only lesser expectations of privacy (20 Cal. 4th 907, 922) . Moreover, the Court noted that while a limited expectation of privacy might be found under the circumstances, the particular invasion must still be found to be highly offensive to the reasonable person in order to sustain the intrusion cause of action, and the Court specifically noted that it was offering no opinion on that element of the tort in the case before it (20 Cal. 4th 907, 911) . In addition, the Court recognized that the standard might be different when the alleged intruder is a government entity investigating criminal activity, since constitutional rather than common-law privacy concerns would frame the analysis (20 Cal. 4th 907, 919 n.3, 920) .

[d] Intruder's Motives Relevant to Offensiveness Determination

The facts and procedural background of Shulman v. Group W Prods., Inc. (1998) 18 Cal. 4th 200, 74 Cal. Rptr. 2d 843, 955 P.2d 469 , are discussed in § 184.25[3][a]. The California Supreme Court stated that determining the offensiveness of an intrusion requires consideration of all the circumstances of the intrusion, including its degree and setting as well as the motives or justification of the intruder (18 Cal. 4th 200, 237) . Thus, in deciding whether a reporter's alleged intrusion into private matters is offensive and hence actionable as an invasion of privacy, courts must consider the extent to which the intrusion was, under the circumstances, justified by the legitimate motive of gathering the news. However, the mere fact that the intruder was in pursuit of a story does not generally justify an otherwise offensive intrusion; offensiveness depends as well on the particular method of investigation used.

A majority of the Supreme Court held that summary judgment for the defense was improper as to the plaintiffs' cause of action for intrusion (18 Cal. 4th 200, 242-243) . It found that on the summary judgment record, a jury could have found defendants' recording of plaintiff mother's communications to the flight nurse and other rescuers, and filming in the air ambulance, to be highly offensive to a reasonable person. With regard to the depth of the intrusion, the Court determined that a reasonable jury could also have found highly offensive the placement of a microphone on a medical rescuer in order to intercept what would otherwise be private conversations with an injured patient. For much the same reason, a jury could have reasonably regarded entering and riding in an ambulance with two seriously injured patients to be an egregious intrusion into a place of expected seclusion. Nor could the Court say as a matter of law that defendants' motive, to gather usable material for a potentially newsworthy story, necessarily privileged their intrusive conduct as a matter of common law tort law liability (18 Cal. 4th 200, 238) .

[e] No Broad Privilege for Intrusive Newsgathering

The facts and procedural background of Shulman v. Group W Prods., Inc. (1998) 18 Cal. 4th 200, 74 Cal. Rptr. 2d 843, 955 P.2d 469 , are discussed in § 184.25[3][a]. the California Supreme Court, in a plurality opinion, held that in contrast to the broad privilege the press enjoys for publishing truthful, newsworthy information in its possession [see § 184.29], the press had no recognized constitutional privilege to violate generally applicable laws (such as California's intrusion tort and Pen. Code § 632, prohibiting the recording of confidential communications without the consent of all parties) in pursuit of material (18 Cal. 4th 200, 242) .

According to the Court, the reason that the constitutional protection accorded newsgathering, if any, is far narrower than the protection surrounding the publication of truthful material was simple. The intrusion tort, unlike that for publication of private facts, did not subject the press to liability for the contents of its publications. Newsworthiness, is a complete bar to liability for publication of private facts and is evaluated with a high degree of deference to editorial judgment. The same deference is not due, however, when the issue is not the media's right to publish or broadcast what they choose, but their right to intrude into the secluded areas or conversations in pursuit of publishable material. At most, said the Court, the Constitution might preclude tort liability that would place an impermissible burden on newsgatherers by depriving them of their indispensable tools; this was not the situation in this case. Defendants urged the court for a rule more protective of press investigative activity. Specifically, they requested the following holding: "when intrusion claims are brought in the context of newsgathering conduct, that conduct be deemed protected so long as (1) the information being gathered is about a matter of legitimate concern to the public and (2) the underlying conduct was lawful." The Court ruled that neither tort law nor constitutional precedent and policy supported such a broad privilege (18 Cal. 4th 200, 240) .

[f] Publication Not Required

In Dietemann v. Time, Inc. (9th Cir. 1971) 449 F.2d 245 , plaintiff brought an action for invasion of privacy based on photographs of plaintiff and recordings of his conversation made in plaintiff's home/office by defendant's employees. Defendant's employees had gained entry by subterfuge and clandestinely photographed him and recorded his conversations without his consent. Defendant was helping the district attorney investigate plaintiff for practicing medicine without a license, for which he was ultimately arrested. Defendant later published an article mentioning plaintiff and including photographs of him. Judgment was awarded to plaintiff and defendant appealed.

On appeal, the court affirmed, concluding that California would recognize a cause of action for invasion of privacy based on plaintiff's claim and would allow recovery to plaintiff (449 F.2d 245, 248) . The court also stated that publication was not a necessary element of the tort of invasion by physical intrusion (449 F.2d 245, 247, 249-250) .

[g] Unreasonably Intrusive Investigation

Noble v. Sears, Roebuck & Co. (1973) 33 Cal. App. 3d 654, 109 Cal. Rptr. 269 , was an action alleging, among other theories, an invasion of privacy. The invasion centered on the conduct of defendants' private investigator who gained admittance to plaintiff's hospital room and, by deception, secured information relating to a then pending personal injury action between the parties. Defendants' demurrers were sustained and an order of dismissal entered. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed as to the invasion of privacy cause of action, holding that an unreasonably intrusive investigation may violate a person's right to privacy (33 Cal. App. 3d 654, 660, 663) . The court ruled that, assuming plaintiff could prove that she had an exclusive right of occupancy in her hospital room, defendant's conduct would constitute an unreasonably intrusive investigation (33 Cal. App. 3d 654, 660) . The judgment was reversed as to one other cause of action and affirmed as to another (33 Cal. App. 3d 654, 664) .

[h] Deceptive Investigation May Support Action for Intrusion

In Taus v. Loftus (2007) 40 Cal. 4th 683, 54 Cal. Rptr. 3d 775, 151 P.3d 1185 , plaintiff was an adult who, as a child, had been the subject of a scholarly case study dealing with the recovery of repressed memories of sexual abuse. The original study and publication referred to her only as Jane Doe, and while plaintiff consented to the subsequent use and dissemination of the published study, her identity remained protected. However, researchers intent on criticizing the results from the original study were eventually able to ascertain her true identity and they used this knowledge to investigate plaintiff's subsequent life. In the course of this investigation, one researcher interviewed plaintiff's former foster mother, who provided the researcher with personal information about plaintiff's private life, including that plaintiff had begun engaging in "self-destructive" conduct after the events of the original study. Although the circumstances surrounding this interview were hotly disputed, plaintiff alleged that the researcher deceived her foster mother into believing that the researcher was working with the psychiatrist who plaintiff had worked with and trusted from the original study, and the foster mother would not have shared plaintiff's personal information had she known the truth. Plaintiff sued the researchers for multiple privacy and related torts, including a cause of action for intrusion based on the deception used to gain personal information about plaintiff from her former foster mother. Defendants filed a motion to strike under the anti-SLAPP statute, Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16, which the trial court largely denied. Defendants appealed, and the court of appeal granted the motion to strike all but four causes of action. Defendants again appealed.

The California Supreme Court granted the motion to strike three of the four remaining causes of action, but refused to strike the cause of action for intrusion based on the alleged deception used to gain information from plaintiff's foster mother. As to that cause of action, the Court held that while a person generally has no right to sue a relative or close friend for voluntarily disclosing personal information about the person to another, an action for intrusion may lie against another party if that party obtains access to personal information about the plaintiff from the plaintiff's friends or relatives by utilizing improper and unanticipated means and the information could not otherwise have been obtained without resort to such means (40 Cal. 4th 683, 731) . The Court recognized that not all misrepresentations by a reporter, investigator, or scholar to obtain information would be sufficient to support an action for intrusion. However, the Court stressed that intentionally misrepresenting that one is a professional associate of a psychiatrist who has a close relationship with a person in order to obtain private information about that person is a particularly serious type of misrepresentation, especially in light of the confidentiality generally provided for information shared between persons and mental health professionals. The Court concluded that under the facts of the case, a jury could properly find that the scholar engaged in conduct that was highly offensive in order to gain access to information that plaintiff could reasonably believe would not be revealed in the manner in which it was (40 Cal. 4th 683, 735-740) .

[a] Elements of Physical Intrusion Tort

In Miller v. National Broad. Co. (1986) 187 Cal. App. 3d 1463, 232 Cal. Rptr. 668 , plaintiff brought an action for intrusion against a television broadcasting company and its employees. The action arose when defendant's film crew, while filming a documentary on emergency rescue paramedics, entered plaintiff's home with the paramedics who were responding to a call to administer aid to plaintiff's husband, who had suffered a heart attack. The court of appeal upheld plaintiff's action, finding that defendant's unauthorized entry into the privacy of plaintiff's home could constitute an intrusion (187 Cal. App. 3d 1463, 1483) . The court also held that it was a jury issue whether the acts of defendant were sufficiently "highly offensive" to support recovery for the tort of intrusion (187 Cal. App. 3d 1463, 1483-1484) .

In Emerson v. J. F. Shea Co. (1978) 76 Cal. App. 3d 579, 143 Cal. Rptr. 170 , defendant developer had attempted to learn plaintiff's occupation from a credit bureau after receiving a letter from plaintiff protesting a proposed development. Plaintiff brought suit against the developer and others for invasion of privacy and noncompliance with the Federal Fair Credit Reporting Act (15 U.S.C.S. § 1681 et seq.). Defendant's motion for partial summary judgment was granted and a stipulated judgment for plaintiff for $100 was entered. Plaintiff appealed.

In affirming, the court of appeal recognized that an unreasonably intrusive investigation is a tort for which damages are recoverable, and stated that the test is what is objectionable or offensive to a reasonable person. The court found, however, that because plaintiff indicated that he would have divulged the information defendant sought if asked directly for it, plaintiff in effect had admitted that defendant's acts were not objectionable or offensive (76 Cal. App. 3d 579, 592). The court also dismissed plaintiff's other arguments on the invasion of privacy issue (76 Cal. App. 3d 579, 591-595).

Vescovo v. New Way Enters., Ltd. (1976) 60 Cal. App. 3d 582, 130 Cal. Rptr. 86 , involved multiple causes of action for, among others, invasion of privacy by a wife, husband, and their minor child. Defendant published a lewd classified advertisement about plaintiff wife, resulting in many "unsavory characters" entering on the family's residential property and causing disturbances. The trial court sustained defendant's demurrer to all the causes of action on behalf of the child on the ground that no relational right of privacy exists. Plaintiffs appealed the judgment following the dismissal of these actions.

The court of appeal reversed the dismissals. As to the child's cause of action for invasion of privacy, the court held that plaintiffs adequately stated a cause of action for invasion of privacy involving intrusion of plaintiff child's physical solitude or seclusion. The child was not seeking to recover based on the derogatory information implied about the mother in the advertisement, but was seeking to recover for the physical intrusion on her own solitude in her own home (60 Cal. App. 3d 582, 587-588) .

[b] Expectation of Privacy Need Not Be Expectation of Complete or Absolute Privacy

In Sanchez-Scott v. Alza Pharms. (2001) 86 Cal. App. 4th 365, 103 Cal. Rptr. 2d 410 , the plaintiff, a breast cancer patient, submitted to a breast examination by her oncologist, and the examination was attended by another man. Although the plaintiff knew that this other man was observing the examination, which required the plaintiff to remove her blouse and bra, the plaintiff was not informed that the man was a drug salesman and not medical personnel. The court of appeal reversed a judgment sustaining a demurrer, holding that a jury could find, under the circumstances, that the plaintiff had a reasonable expectation that the examination would not be witnessed by non-medical personnel (86 Cal. App. 4th 365, 373-376) . The court also held that, considering the totality of the circumstances, the allegations described conduct that would be highly offensive to a reasonable person (86 Cal. App. 4th 365, 376-378) .

18-184 California Points & Authorities § 184.25A

§ 184.25A Supporting Contention That Defendant Invaded Plaintiff's Right to Privacy--By Trespass, Use of Visual or Auditory Enhancement Equipment, or Assault, With Intent to Capture Image, Sound Recording, or Other Physical Impression of Plaintiff [Civ. Code § 1708.8]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT IS LIABLE FOR INVASION OF PRIVACY UNDER CIVIL CODE SECTION 1708.8 BECAUSE DEFENDANT _____ [KNOWINGLY ENTERED WITHOUT CONSENT ONTO THE LAND OF ANOTHER PERSON or USED _____ (A VISUAL or AN AUDITORY) ENHANCEMENT DEVICE or COMMITTED AN ASSAULT] IN AN ATTEMPT TO CAPTURE A _____ [VISUAL IMAGE or SOUND RECORDING or other type of physical impression] OF PLAINTIFF ENGAGING IN A PERSONAL OR FAMILIAL ACTIVITY.

[EITHER]

A. Liability for Invasion of Privacy Through Trespass. A person is liable for physical invasion of privacy if that person knowingly enters onto the land of another person without permission, or otherwise commits a trespass, in order to physically invade the privacy of the plaintiff with the intent to capture any type of visual image, sound recording, or other physical impression of the plaintiff engaging in a personal or familial activity, and if the physical invasion occurs in a manner that is offensive to a reasonable person (Civ. Code § 1708.8(a)).

[OR]

A. Liability for Constructive Invasion of Privacy. A person is liable for constructive invasion of privacy if that person attempts to capture, in a manner that is offensive to a reasonable person, any type of visual image, sound recording, or other physical impression of the plaintiff engaging in a personal or familial activity under circumstances in which the plaintiff had a reasonable expectation of privacy, through the use of a visual or auditory enhancing device, regardless of whether there is a physical trespass, if this image, sound recording, or other physical impression could not have been achieved without a trespass unless the visual or auditory enhancing device was used (Civ. Code § 1708.8(b)).

[OR]

A. Liability for Invasion of Privacy Through Assault. A person is liable for invasion of privacy if that person commits an assault with the intent to capture any type of visual image, sound recording, or other physical impression of the plaintiff (Civ. Code § 1708.8(c)).

[AND]

B. Damages Recoverable. A person who commits a violation of Civil Code Section 1708.8 is liable for up to three times the amount of any general and special damages that are proximately caused by the violation. The person may also be liable for punitive damages, subject to proof according to Civil Code Section 3294. If the plaintiff proves that the invasion of privacy was committed for a commercial purpose, the defendant is also subject to disgorgement to the plaintiff of any proceeds or other consideration obtained as a result of the violation (Civ. Code § 1708.8(d)).

C. Equitable Relief Available. The court may grant equitable relief in an action brought under Civil Code Section 1708.8, including, but not limited to, an injunction or restraining order prohibiting further violations (Civ. Code § 1708.8(h)).

[Optional] D. Liability of Instigator. A person who directs, solicits, actually induces, or actually causes another person, regardless of whether there is an employer-employee relationship, to violate Civil Code Section 1708.8(a), (b), or (c), is liable for any general, special, and consequential damages resulting from each violation. In addition, the person who directs, solicits, instigates, induces, or otherwise causes a violation may be liable for punitive damages to the extent that an employer would be subject to punitive damages pursuant to Civil Code Section 3294(b) (Civ. Code § 1708.8(e)).

[Optional] E. First Transaction After Capture May Constitute Violation. The transmission, publication, broadcast, sale, offer for sale, or other use of any visual image, sound recording, or other physical impression that was taken or captured in violation of Civil Code Section 1708.8(a), (b), or (c) may constitute a violation of the statute if the person, in the first transaction following the taking or capture of the image, recording, or physical impression, publicly transmitted, published, broadcast, sold or offered for sale, the image, recording, or physical impression with actual knowledge that it was taken or captured in violation of Civil Code Section 1708.8(a), (b), or (c), and provide compensation, consideration, or remuneration, monetary or otherwise, for the rights to the unlawfully obtained image, recording, or physical impression (Civ. Code § 1708.8(f)(1)). For these purposes, "actual knowledge" means actual awareness, understanding, and recognition, obtained prior to the time at which the person purchased or acquired the image, recording, or physical impression, that the image, recording, or physical impression was taken or captured in violation of Civil Code Section 1708.8(a), (b), or (c) (Civ. Code § 1708.8(f)(2)).

[Optional] F. Failure to Capture Image, Recording, or Impression Is Not Defense. It is not a defense to an action brought under Civil Code Section 1708.8 that no image, recording, or other physical impression of the plaintiff was actually captured or sold (Civ. Code § 1708.8(j)).

[Optional] G. "Commercial Purpose" Defined. As used in Civil Code Section 1708.8, "for a commercial purpose" means any act done with the expectation of a sale, financial gain, or other consideration, although a visual image, sound recording, or other physical impression was not, or was not intended to have been, captured for a commercial purpose unless it is intended to be, or was in fact, sold, published, or transmitted (Civ. Code § 1708.8(k)).

[Optional] H. "Personal and Familial Activity" Defined. As used in Civil Code Section 1708.8, "personal and familial activity" includes, but is not limited to, intimate details of the plaintiff's personal life, interactions with the plaintiff's family or significant others, or other aspects of the plaintiff's private affairs or concerns. "Personal and familial activity" includes the activities of victims of crime in circumstances in which either subsection (a) or subsection (b) of Civil Code Section 1708.8, or both, would apply, although it does not include illegal or otherwise criminal activity as described in Civil Code Section 1708.8(f) (Civ. Code § 1708.8(l)).

[2] Comments

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that the defendant is liable for invasion of privacy under Civ. Code § 1708.8. That statute provides a cause of action for a physical or constructive invasion of privacy in any of the following circumstances:

- The defendant trespasses onto another person's property to obtain a visual image, sound recording, or other physical impression of the plaintiff engaging in personal or familial activity, if the invasion would be offensive to a reasonable person;

- The defendant does not trespass, but uses video or auditory enhancement equipment in an attempt to capture an image, recording, or other physical impression that could only be acquired through trespass if the enhancement equipment were not used; or

- The defendant commits an assault in an attempt to acquire an image, recording, or other physical impression of the plaintiff.

The statute also provides a cause of action against a defendant who directs, solicits, induces, or otherwise causes another person to violate the statute.

If necessary, these points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities dealing with the common law cause of action for intrusion [see § 184.25].

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issues covered. For example, this form may be used in opposition to a motion for summary judgment if the defendant asserts that the plaintiff has failed to allege or prove a cause of action for invasion of privacy brought under Civ. Code § 1708.8. These points and authorities may be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

§ 184.26 Opposing Contention That Defendant Invaded Plaintiff's Right to Privacy--No Disclosure to Public

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT SHOULD NOT BE HELD LIABLE FOR INVASION OF PRIVACY BECAUSE THE DISCLOSURE THAT IS THE BASIS OF PLAINTIFF'S CLAIM WAS NOT A COMMUNICATION TO THE PUBLIC IN GENERAL OR TO A LARGE NUMBER OF PERSONS.

A. Disclosure to Public Required. Except in cases of physical intrusion, the tort of invasion of privacy must be accompanied by a public disclosure in the sense of a communication to the public in general or to a large number of persons as distinguished from one individual or a few (Porten v. University of S.F. (1976) 64 Cal. App. 3d 825, 828, 134 Cal. Rptr. 839 ; Mason v. Western Union Tel. Co. (1975) 52 Cal. App. 3d 429, 440, 125 Cal. Rptr. 53).

[Optional] B. Creditor Informing Employer Not Sufficient Public Disclosure. A creditor or collection agent disclosing to a debtor's employer the existence of a debt owed by the debtor in order to collect it is not considered a disclosure to the public in general (Timperley v. Chase Collection Serv. (1969) 272 Cal. App. 2d 697, 699-700, 77 Cal. Rptr. 782).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that defendant should be held liable for invasion of privacy because the disclosure that is the basis of the invasion was not a public disclosure. The form may be used in opposing liability for any of the torts for invasion of privacy except the tort of physical intrusion on privacy, and may be combined with other forms of points and authorities opposing the contention that defendant should be held liable for invasion of privacy [see §§ 184.27 -184.37].

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context

in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that there has been no invasion of privacy because there was no disclosure to the public. For example, this form may be used in support of a demurrer or a motion for summary judgment when counsel wishes to assert that plaintiff failed to state a valid cause of action because plaintiff failed to allege disclosure to the public. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should include a discussion showing that the disclosure in question was not made to the public or to a large number of people.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contentions supported by the points and authorities set out in §§ 184.20 -184.23.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Disclosure to Public Required

Porten v. University of S.F. (1976) 64 Cal. App. 3d 825, 134 Cal. Rptr. 839 , was an action for invasion of privacy based on defendant's disclosure, without plaintiff's consent, to the State Scholarship and Loan Commission of the grades plaintiff had received at the college he attended before transferring to defendant college. Defendant's demurrer was sustained and a judgment of dismissal was entered. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal held that plaintiff had failed to state a cause of action for the public disclosure of private facts tort because the communication was not to the public in general or to a large number of people (64 Cal. App. 3d 825, 828-829) . The court ruled that public disclosure was a required element for invasion of privacy except under the physical intrusion tort (64 Cal. App. 3d 825, 828) . However, the court found that plaintiff had stated a cause of action for invasion of privacy under the state constitutional provision guaranteeing a right of privacy (Cal. Const. art. I, § 1), and reversed the judgment (64 Cal. App. 3d 825, 832-833) .

Mason v. Western Union Telegraph Co. (1975) 52 Cal. App. 3d 429, 125 Cal. Rptr. 53 , concerned two related actions, tried together, against plaintiffs' former husband and a telegraph company alleging, among other things, invasion of privacy. The cases involved a series of derogatory "X-rated" telegrams concerning plaintiffs (the former wife, her attorney, and her friends) sent by defendant husband to several persons. Defendant telegraph company's demurrers were sustained to each cause of action and those actions were dismissed. Plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal held that plaintiffs had failed to state a cause of action for invasion of privacy. One of the two reasons given for the court's holding was that there was no communication by the telegraph company to the public in general. The court affirmed the remainder of the judgments (52 Cal. App. 3d 429, 440) .

[b] Creditor Informing Employer Not Sufficient Public Disclosure

Timperley v. Chase Collection Serv. (1969) 272 Cal. App. 2d 697, 77 Cal. Rptr. 782 , was an action for invasion of privacy based on defendant collection service writing a letter to plaintiff's employer informing it of a debt that defendant was trying to collect from plaintiff. As a result, plaintiff was forced to resign from his job. Defendants' demurrer was sustained and a judgment of dismissal was entered. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that a creditor or collection agency has a limited right to reveal to a few others, such as the debtor's employer, the existence of an obligation in order to collect it (272 Cal. App. 2d 697, 699) . One of the reasons for the rule, the court stated, was that except for the physical intrusion tort, an invasion of privacy must be accompanied by a disclosure to the public in general or to a large number of persons (272 Cal. App. 2d 697, 700) . There are a few exceptions to the creditor's rule, the court noted, such as the inclusion of defamatory or coercive matter, unnecessary frequency or volume of correspondence, or malice, but plaintiff had failed to allege facts sufficient to prove one of those exceptions (272 Cal. App. 2d 697, 700-701) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Disclosure to Public Required

In Schwartz v. Thiele (1966) 242 Cal. App. 2d 799, 51 Cal. Rptr. 767 , an action for invasion for privacy resulting from defendant's submission of a letter to the office of mental health in the county superior court stating that plaintiff was mentally ill, the court of appeal affirmed a judgment of dismissal after defendant's demurrer was sustained without leave to amend. Among other points discussed, the court stated that an invasion of privacy, except for physical intrusion, must be accompanied by publicity in the sense of communication to the public in general. The content of the communication at issue was not published in this manner (242 Cal. App. 2d 799,805-806).

§ 184.27 Opposing Contention That Defendant Invaded Plaintiff's Right to Privacy--First Amendment Concerns [U.S. Const. amends. I, XIV] Regarding Publication of Publicly Gathered Information Outweigh Any Right to Privacy With Respect to Facts in Public Domain

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT SHOULD NOT BE HELD LIABLE FOR INVASION OF PRIVACY BECAUSE THE PUBLICATION IN QUESTION CONCERNS FACTS IN THE PUBLIC DOMAIN, AND A BALANCING OF FIRST AMENDMENT GUARANTEES OF FREEDOM OF EXPRESSION IN THE PUBLIC INTEREST AGAINST THE RIGHT TO PRIVACY WEIGHS IN FAVOR OF PUBLICATION OF THOSE FACTS.

A. No Right of Privacy in Public Information. There is no right of privacy in material that is already in the public domain (Gill v. Hearst Publ'g Co. (1953) 40 Cal. 2d 224, 230, 253 P.2d 441).

[Optional] B. Voluntarily Assumed Pose in Public Place. The right to privacy is not invaded by a photograph of a pose that is voluntarily assumed in a public place (Gill v. Hearst Publ'g Co. (1953) 40 Cal. 2d 224, 230, 253 P.2d 441).

[Optional] C. No Liability for Publication of Truthful Information Released to Public in Court Records. There is no liability for the publication of truthful information that was obtained from official court records that were available to the public (Cox Broad. Corp. v. Cohn (1975) 420 U.S. 469, 491, 95 S. Ct. 1029, 43 L. Ed. 2d 328 ; Gates v. Discovery Communications, Inc. (2004) 34 Cal. 4th 679, 692-696, 21 Cal. Rptr. 3d 663, 101 P.3d 552).

[Optional] D. No Liability For Newspaper's Publication of Lawfully Obtained Truthful Information Absent State Interest of Highest Order. When a newspaper publishes truthful information that it has lawfully obtained, punishment may be imposed, if at all, only when narrowly tailored to a state interest of the highest order (Florida Star v. B.J.F. (1989) 491 U.S. 524, 532-534, 541, 109 S. Ct. 2603, 105 L. Ed. 2d 443).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that defendant should be held liable for invasion of privacy because the facts disclosed or intruded on were in the public domain, and a balance of First Amendment interests regarding free expression in the public interest against the right to privacy weighs in favor of publication of those facts [see, e.g., Florida Star v. B.J.F. (1989) 491 U.S. 524, 530-541, 109 S. Ct. 2603, 105 L. Ed. 2d 443] . The form may be used for any of the torts for invasion of privacy.

Optional Paragraph B is for use if the information in dispute is a published photograph that was taken in a public place. Optional Paragraph C is for use if the information was released to the public in official court records. Optional Paragraph D is for use if truthful information was published by a newspaper that obtained the information lawfully, and first-amendment concerns of free expression outweigh any state interest in punishing that particular disclosure. Paragraph D would most likely arise in the context of a First Amendment challenge to a statute prohibiting publication of particular information [see, e.g., Florida Star v. B.J.F. (1989) 491 U.S. 524, 533-536, 109 S. Ct. 2603, 105 L. Ed. 2d 443 (challenging application of statute precluding publication of name of victim of sexual offense)].

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that no invasion of privacy has been alleged or proven because the facts that are the basis of the claim were not private to begin with. For example, this form may be used in opposition to plaintiff's motion for summary judgment, when counsel wishes to assert that material issues of fact exist regarding liability for invasion of privacy because the balance of interests of first-amendment guarantees of free expression against the plaintiff's right to privacy need to be determined according to the particular facts of the case [see, e.g., Cox Broad. Corp. v. Cohn (1975) 420 U.S. 469, 497, 95 S. Ct. 1029, 43 L. Ed. 2d 328 (reversing summary judgment for plaintiff on issue of liability)]. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should include a discussion showing that the facts in question were already known to the public, and if appropriate, that they occurred in public or were a matter of public record.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contentions supported by the points and authorities set out in §§ 184.20 -184.24.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Right of Privacy in Public Information

Gill v. Hearst Publ'g Co. (1953) 40 Cal. 2d 224, 253 P.2d 441 , was a case related to Gill v. Curtis Publishing Co. (1952) 38 Cal. 2d 273, 239 P.2d 630 [see § 184.21[3][b]], involving the same publication of a photograph of plaintiffs in an affectionate pose at their place of business that was open to the public, but against different defendants. In Gill v. Curtis Publishing Co., the Court had held that a cause of action was stated based on use of the photograph in connection with an article on love. The plaintiffs in Gill alleged that their privacy was invaded by the publication of the photograph with defendants' consent, but did not expressly allege that defendants consented to publication of the article, and defendants' demurrer was sustained without leave to amend. Judgment was entered accordingly, and plaintiffs appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed, holding that plaintiffs should have been allowed to amend their complaint. The Court held, however, that the mere publication of the photograph standing alone did not constitute an actionable invasion of privacy (40 Cal. 2d 224, 228) . The Court stated that there can be no privacy in that which is already public (40 Cal. 2d 224, 230) . More specifically, the Court stated that it could find no case in which the publication of a mere photograph taken in a pose voluntarily assumed in a public place and portraying nothing to shock the ordinary sense of decency or propriety was held to be an actionable invasion of privacy. The Court noted that to do so would preclude publication of photographs of parades and street scenes, and also stressed that there was no contention that the photograph was used for advertising or trade purposes (40 Cal. 2d 224, 231) .

[b] Voluntarily Assumed Pose in Public Place

Gill v. Hearst Publ'g Co. (1953) 40 Cal. 2d 224, 253 P.2d 441 , is discussed in § 184.27[3][a].

[c] No Liability for Publication of Truthful Information Released to Public in Court Records

Cox Broad. Corp. v. Cohn (1975) 420 U.S. 469, 95 S. Ct. 1029, 43 L. Ed. 2d 328 , was an action for invasion of privacy brought by the parent of a murdered rape victim against the owner of a television station that broadcast the victim's name. A Georgia statute prohibited publication or broadcast of the name or identity of a rape victim, and provided that violation was punishable as a misdemeanor. In the course of the criminal court proceedings, a reporter asked for and received from the court clerk copies of the indictments, which contained the victim's name. No one attempted to withhold that information from the reporter, who subsequently broadcast a news report on television that revealed the victim's name. The victim's father brought an action in state court for damages against the broadcasting company and others, relying on the criminal statute, and claiming that his right to privacy had been invaded by the broadcast of his deceased daughter's name. The defendants admitted having aired the broadcasts, but claimed that they were privileged under state law and U.S. Const. amends. I and XIV. The trial court construed the criminal statute as extending a civil cause of action for invasion of privacy, and granted summary judgment for plaintiff with regard to liability, leaving the issue of damages for jury determination. The defendants appealed, and the state supreme court initially held that the trial court had erred in construing the state statute to extend a civil cause of action for invasion of privacy. It therefore did not consider the issue of the statute's constitutionality at that point. It further held that the complaint stated a cause of action for the invasion of the right of privacy, or for the tort of public disclosure, a common-law tort existing in that jurisdiction "without the help of the statute that the trial judge in this case relied on." The state supreme court noted that although the privacy invaded was not that of the deceased victim the father stated a claim for invasion of his own privacy by reason of the publication of his daughter's name. It held that liability did not follow as a matter of law, and that summary judgment was improper, in that whether the public disclosure of the name actually invaded the plaintiff's "zone of privacy," and if so, to what extent, were issues for determination by the trier of fact. That court also held that U.S. Const. amends. I and XIV did not, as a matter of law, require judgment for defendants. On motion for rehearing, that court did determine the constitutionality of the state criminal statute, and sustained it as a "legitimate limitation on the right of freedom of expression contained in the First Amendment." The court could discern "no public interest or general concern about the identity of the victim of such a crime as will make the right to disclose the identity of the victim rise to the level of First Amendment protection." The defendants invoked the appellate jurisdiction of the United States Supreme Court, and alternatively sought review through a petition for certiorari.

The United States Supreme Court reversed, holding that, at the very least, U.S. Const. amends. I and XIV will not allow exposing the press to liability for truthfully publishing information released to the public in official court records (420 U.S. 469, 496) . The Supreme Court noted that defendants clearly raised the issue of the constitutionality of the state criminal statute in their motion for rehearing in the state supreme court, and that that court made a determination of constitutional validity of the statute, invoking the United States Supreme Court's appellate jurisdiction (420 U.S. 469, 476) . The Court initially noted that powerful state-interest arguments had been raised in favor of the state criminal statute protecting the disclosure of the name of rape victims, based on important concerns regarding the right to privacy (420 U.S. 469, 487-490) . It further noted that "in this sphere of collision between claims of privacy and those of the free press, the interests on both sides are plainly rooted in the traditions and significant concerns of our society." Rather than address the broader question of whether truthful publications may ever be subjected to civil or criminal liability consistent with U.S. Const. amends. I and XIV (or, in other words, whether the state may ever define and protect an area of privacy free from unwanted publicity in the press), the Court noted that it was appropriate to focus on the narrower interface between press and privacy that the instant case presents: namely, whether the state may impose sanctions on the accurate publication of the name of a rape victim obtained from public records, that is, specifically from judicial records that are maintained in connection with a public prosecution and that are open to public inspection (420 U.S. 469, 491) . The Court noted that the special protected nature of accurate reports of judicial proceedings has repeatedly been recognized, and that the developing law surrounding the tort of invasion of privacy recognizes a privilege in the press to report the events of judicial proceedings (420 U.S. 469, 492) . The prevailing law of invasion of privacy generally recognizes that the interests in privacy fade when the information involved already appears on the public record. The Court found that this conclusion is compelling when viewed in terms of U.S. Const. amends. I and XIV, and in light of the public interest in a vigorous press. The state cause of action for invasion of privacy through public disclosure of the name of a rape victim imposes sanctions on pure expression--the content of a publication--and not conduct or a combination of speech and nonspeech elements that might otherwise be open to regulation or prohibition. The publication of truthful information available on the public record contains none of the indicia of those limited categories of expression, such as "fighting" words, that "are no essential part of any exposition of ideas, and are of such slight social value as a step to truth that any benefit that may be derived from them is clearly outweighed by the social interest in order and morality." By placing the information in the public domain on official court records, the state must be presumed to have concluded that the public interest was being served. Public records by their very nature are of interest to those concerned with the administration of government, and a public benefit is performed by the reporting of the true contents of the records by the media. The Court noted that the freedom of the press to publish that information is of critical importance to a government in which the citizenry is the final judge of the proper conduct of public business (420 U.S. 469, 495) . In preserving that form of government, U.S. Const. amends. I and XIV command nothing less than that the states may not impose sanctions on the publication of truthful information contained in official court records open to public inspection (420 U.S. 469, 495) . The Court expressed reluctance to embark on a course that would make public records generally available to the media but forbid their publication if offensive to the sensibilities of the supposedly reasonable man. The Court noted that such a rule would make it very difficult for the media to inform citizens about the public business and yet stay within the law. The rule would invite timidity and self-censorship and very likely lead to the suppression of many items that would otherwise be published and that should be made available to the public. At the very least, the Constitution will not allow exposing the press to liability for truthfully publishing information released to the public in official court records. If there are privacy interests to be protected in judicial proceedings, the states must respond by means that avoid public documentation or other exposure of private in formation. Their political institutions must weigh the interests in privacy with the interests of the public to know and of the press to publish. Once true information is disclosed in public court documents open to public inspection, the press cannot be sanctioned for publishing it. In this instance as in others, reliance must rest on the judgment of those who decide what to publish or broadcast. The Court noted that the plaintiff did not contend that the name was obtained in an improper fashion, or that it was not on an official court document open to public inspection. Under the given circumstances, the protection of freedom of the press provided by the First and Fourth Amendments bars the state from making the defendants' broadcast the basis of civil liability (420 U.S. 469, 496) .

In Gates v. Discovery Communications, Inc. (2004) 34 Cal. 4th 679, 21 Cal. Rptr. 3d 663, 101 P.3d 552 , the plaintiff had served a three-year prison sentence after pleading guilty to being an accessory after the fact to a murder for hire that was committed in 1988. The defendants were television production and transmission companies that aired an account of the crime in 2001. The plaintiff, who alleged that since his release from prison he had led an obscure, productive, and lawful life, sued the defendants for defamation and invasion of privacy because of the television program. In support of the invasion of privacy claim, the plaintiff alleged that he was damaged by the revelation that he had pleaded guilty to being an accessory after the fact and by the airing of his photograph. Finding that the gist of the report was accurate, the trial court sustained the defendants' demurrer to the defamation cause of action, but overruled the demurrer as to the invasion of privacy action and also denied the defendants' motion to strike under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16. The defendants appealed the denial of the motion to strike, and the court of appeal reversed. Relying on the United States Supreme Court's decision in Cox Broadcasting Corp. v. Cohn, the court of appeal held that as a matter of law, the plaintiff could not prevail on the privacy action, because the defendants' disclosures were of truthful information contained in the public official records of a judicial proceeding and were thus protected under the First Amendment.

The California Supreme Court affirmed the court of appeal's decision, agreeing that liability for invasion of privacy was precluded under the United States Supreme Court's analysis in Cox and its progeny, including Florida Star v. B.J.F. [see § 184.27[3][d]] (34 Cal. 4th 679, 696) . The California Supreme Court had overruled its pre-Cox decisions in Briscoe v. Reader's Digest Ass'n, Inc. (1971) 4 Cal. 3d 529, 93 Cal. Rptr. 866, 483 P.2d 34 , to the extent that Briscoe held that a plaintiff had a cause of action for invasion of privacy based on the reckless, offensive, injurious publication of true, but not newsworthy, information concerning the criminal past of a rehabilitated convict. The Court recognized that this holding from Briscoe had effectively been overruled by the United States Supreme Court's subsequent opinions, at least with respect to information that a publisher obtains from public official records of judicial proceedings (34 Cal. 4th 679, 692) . The Court also rejected the argument that the passage of time could render actionable the publication of truthful facts obtained from public official court records, noting that nothing in Cox or any of the subsequent Supreme Court opinions suggested that the First Amendment protection afforded to the press under these circumstances would diminish through the passage of time (34 Cal. 4th 679, 693) .

[d] No Liability for Newspaper's Publication of Lawfully Obtained Truthful Information Absent State Interest of Highest Order

Florida Star v. B.J.F. (1989) 491 U.S. 524, 109 S. Ct. 2603, 105 L. Ed. 2d 443 , was an action for invasion of privacy brought by a rape victim against a newspaper that published her name. Following the rape incident, the local law enforcement agency prepared a police report, which included the victim's name, and left a copy of the report in the press room of that agency, where members of the press had access to documents of that nature. A reporter-trainee for a community newspaper copied the report, and a reporter used that information, including the victim's name, in an article in the newspaper. In printing the victim's full name, the newspaper violated its internal policy of not publishing the names of sexual-offense victims. As a result of the publication, the victim and her family received threatening telephone calls, forcing her to seek protection and undergo mental health counseling. The plaintiff based her cause of action on a state criminal statute that made the publication of the name or other identifying information concerning a victim of any sexual offense a misdemeanor. The defendant put forth evidence indicating that the newspaper had learned the plaintiff's name from the incident report released by the law-enforcement agency, and that the newspaper's violation of its internal rule against publishing the names of sexual offense victims was inadvertent. Defendant twice moved for a directed verdict. The trial court denied the motions, finding the criminal statute constitutional because it reflected a proper balance between U.S. Const. amend. I and privacy rights, as it applied only to a narrow set of "rather sensitive ... criminal offenses." At the close of the newspaper's defense, the trial court granted plaintiff's motion for a directed verdict on the issue of negligence, finding the newspaper negligent per se based on its violation of the criminal statute. This ruling left the jury to consider only the questions of causation and damage. The trial court instructed the jury that it could award punitive damages if it found that the newspaper had "acted with reckless indifference to the rights of others." The jury awarded compensatory and punitive damages. (The complaint had also named the law-enforcement agency as a defendant; plaintiff and the agency entered into a pretrial settlement, and the award of compensatory damages was offset by the settlement.) The appellate court affirmed, and the state supreme court denied discretionary review. The defendant appealed to the United States Supreme Court.

The United States Supreme Court reversed, holding that when a newspaper publishes truthful information that it has lawfully obtained, punishment may lawfully be imposed, if at all, only when narrowly tailored to a state interest of the highest order, and that no such interest is satisfactorily served by imposing liability under the criminal statute in question under the facts of the case (491 U.S. 524, 541) . The Supreme Court noted that the tension between the right that U.S. Const. amend. I accords to a free press on the one hand, and the protections that various statutes and common-law doctrines accord to personal privacy against the publication of truthful information on the other hand, is a subject it has addressed several times in recent years. It noted that its decisions have not exhaustively considered this conflict in cases involving government attempts to sanction the accurate dissemination of information as invasive of privacy. On the contrary, although its decisions have without exception upheld the press's right to publish, it has emphasized each time that it was resolving the conflict only as it arose in a discrete factual context (491 U.S. 524, 530)

. Defendant contended that the instant case is indistinguishable from Cox Broad. Corp. v. Cohn (1975) 420 U.S. 469, 95 S. Ct. 1029, 43 L. Ed. 2d 328 [see § 184.27[3][d]]. Alternatively, defendant contended that the First Amendment compels the principle that the press may never be punished, civilly or criminally, for publishing the truth. Plaintiff urged that the opinion in Cox be overruled and replaced with a categorical rule that publication of the name of a rape victim never enjoys constitutional protection. The Court noted that, despite the strong resemblance of this case to Cox, that case cannot fairly be read as controlling under these facts. The name of the rape victim in that case was obtained from courthouse records that were open to public inspection, and Cox emphasized the importance of the role of the press in exposing trials to public scrutiny, a factor absent in this case (491 U.S. 524, 531-532) . The Court also rejected the plaintiff's invitation to prohibit categorically the publication of rape victims' names (491 U.S. 524, 532-533) . The Court stressed the necessity of relying on limited principles that sweep no more broadly than the appropriate context of this case, because of the sensitivity and significance of the interests presented in clashes between the First Amendment and privacy rights (491 U.S. 524, 533) . The Court noted that this case is appropriately analyzed with reference to the limited First Amendment principle articulated in Smith v. Daily Mail Publ'g Co. (1979) 443 U.S. 97, 103, 99 S. Ct. 2667, 61 L. Ed. 2d 399 : "If a newspaper lawfully obtains truthful information about a matter of public significance then state officials may not constitutionally punish publication of the information, absent a need to further a state interest of the highest order." The Court then articulated the considerations underlying the holding in Daily Mail: (1) because the Daily Mail formulation only protects the publication of information that a newspaper has "lawfully obtained," the government retains ample means of safeguarding significant interests on which publication may impinge, including protecting a rape victim's anonymity; (2) punishing the press for its dissemination of information that is already publicly available is relatively unlikely to advance the interests in the service of which the state seeks to act (491 U.S. 524, 533-535) ; and (3) "timidity and self-censorship" may result from allowing the media to be punished for publishing certain truthful information (491 U.S. 524, 535) . The Court noted that a contrary rule would force on the media the onerous obligation of sifting through government press releases, reports, and pronouncements to prune out material arguably unlawful for publication. Applied to this case, the Daily Mail rule clearly requires reversal. The Court noted that the news article in question was undisputedly accurate. Moreover, the defendant obtained plaintiff's name lawfully. The Court rejected plaintiff's contention that, by virtue of a state law providing that the public is not entitled to inspect police reports revealing a rape victim's name, a newspaper may not lawfully receive that information when furnished by the government. The statute did not prohibit receipt of the information, and the news article concerned "a matter of public significance" within the meaning of Daily Mail (491 U.S. 524, 536-537) .

The Court then analyzed the facts of the case to determine whether imposing liability pursuant to the criminal statute serves a need to further a state interest of the highest order. The plaintiff contended that a rule punishing publication furthers three closely related interests: the privacy of victims of sexual offense; the physical safety of those victims; and the goal of encouraging rape victims to report the offense (491 U.S. 524, 537) . The Court concluded that imposing liability for publication under the circumstances of the case is too precipitous a means of advancing those interests for purposes of establishing a "need" within the meaning of Daily Mail, for the following reasons: (1) the defendant obtained the identifying information by reason of its placement in the public domain by the government; (2) the trial court applied a broadly sweeping negligence per se standard based on the underlying criminal statute, which required no finding under the particular facts that the disclosure was one that a reasonable person would find highly offensive; and (3) the facial underinclusiveness of the criminal statute raises serious doubts about whether the state is serving sufficiently significant state interests, that is, the statute prohibits conduct only by mass communication, and therefore does not punish the same conduct by any other class of persons (491 U.S. 524, 537-540) . With respect to the third concern stated above, the Court found that the state's selective ban on publication by the mass media does not satisfactorily accomplish its stated purpose, because it requires more careful and inclusive precautions against alternative forms of dissemination (491 U.S. 524, 540-541) .

The Court noted that its holding in this case is limited. It emphasized that it did not hold that truthful publication is automatically constitutionally protected, or that there is no zone of personal privacy within which the state may protect the individual from intrusion by the press, or even that a state may never punish publication of the name of a victim of a sexual offense. It concluded that when a newspaper publishes truthful information that it has lawfully obtained, punishment may lawfully be imposed, if at all, only when narrowly tailored to a state interest of the highest order, and that no such interest is satisfactorily served by imposing liability under the state criminal statute in question to the defendant under the facts of the instant case (491 U.S. 524, 541) .

[a] No Right of Privacy in Public Information

In Moreno v. Hanford Sentinel, Inc. (2009) 172 Cal. App. 4th 1125, 91 Cal. Rptr. 3d 858 , plaintiff wrote an article criticizing her hometown and its inhabitants and published it on her page of the highly-popular Internet site MySpace.com, making the article accessible to anyone with a computer connected to the Internet. Following plaintiff's initial publication, the principal of the high school in plaintiff's hometown provided a copy of the article to the local newspaper, which ran it without plaintiff's authorization as a "Letter to the Editor," complete with plaintiff's full name. In reaction to the letter, community members subjected plaintiff's family to death threats and other actions that forced plaintiff's family to close the family business and move. Plaintiff sued the newspaper and other parties for invasion of privacy based on the public disclosure of private facts. The trial court sustained defendants' demurrer to this cause of action and the court of appeal affirmed. The court of appeal held that the unauthorized republication in a newspaper of plaintiff's article was not an actionable public disclosure of private facts. As plaintiff herself made the information available to any person with a computer, the court concluded that no reasonable person would have maintained an expectation of privacy regarding the published material, regardless of the fact that plaintiff removed the article from the Internet site after only six days. The fact that the newspaper "letter" included plaintiff's full name, while the Internet article had only plaintiff's first name, was irrelevant, as plaintiff full name and identity was readily available from other information provided by plaintiff on her MySpace.com page (172 Cal. App. 4th 1125, 1130-1131) .

In Gionfriddo v. Major League Baseball (2001) 94 Cal. App. 4th 400, 114 Cal. Rptr. 2d 307 , former professional baseball players brought suit against the defendants, asserting causes of action for statutory and common law appropriation based on the defendants' unauthorized use of the players' names, images, likenesses, and career statistics in game programs, Web sites, and documentaries. The court of appeal affirmed summary judgment for the defendants. Addressing the common law action, the court held that this use of the names, images, likenesses, and career statistics of the former players served a public interest. Professional baseball has millions of fans, and these fans have an abiding interest in the history of the game. Therefore, the uses at issue commanded a substantial public interest and were a form of expression to be afforded substantial constitutional protection (94 Cal. App. 4th 400, 410-411) . Moreover, the court rejected the plaintiffs' claim that these uses were commercial in nature and should be afforded reduced constitutional protection. Instead, the court concluded that this use of historical information was not a commercial use that could support an action for appropriation, even though this use may have provided some promotional benefit to the game of baseball, because the challenged use did not constitute an advertisement nor did it otherwise propose a commercial transaction. Given the significant public interest in the sport, the plaintiffs' negligible economic interests were far outweighed by the public interest in the free dissemination of the information (94 Cal. App. 4th 400, 411-415) .

[b] No Liability for Publication of Truthful Information Released to Public in Court Records

In Green v. Uccelli (1989) 207 Cal. App. 3d 1112, 255 Cal. Rptr. 315 , plaintiff filed an action for invasion of privacy against the attorney who represented his wife in an underlying dissolution action. He vaguely alleged that the attorney had disclosed private facts about the dissolution case in violation of the dissolution court's order sealing the court file. The court of appeal affirmed dismissal of the complaint, holding that the vague allegations did not satisfy the elements of the tort: (1) public disclosure (2) of a private fact (3) that would be offensive and objectionable to the reasonable person and (4) that is not of legitimate public concern. The court noted that the plaintiff, himself an attorney, should have realized that when he filed his dissolution action, he was entering a public forum that would result in public disclosure of private facts, particularly because he had filed in the public record 50 pages of material relating to the dissolution (207 Cal. App. 3d 1112, 1118-1120) .

18-184 California Points & Authorities § 184.28

§ 184.28 Opposing Contention That Defendant Invaded Plaintiff's Right to Privacy--Disclosure or Intrusion Not Offensive to Reasonable Person

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT SHOULD NOT BE HELD LIABLE FOR INVASION OF PRIVACY BECAUSE THE _____ [DISCLOSURE or INTRUSION] THAT IS THE BASIS OF PLAINTIFF'S COMPLAINT WAS NOT OFFENSIVE OR OBJECTIONABLE TO A REASONABLE PERSON OF ORDINARY SENSIBILITIES.

[EITHER]

A. Disclosure Must Be Offensive. In order to be an invasion of privacy, the disclosure in question must be offensive and objectionable to a reasonable person of ordinary sensibilities (Forsher v. Bugliosi (1980) 26 Cal. 3d 792, 808-809, 163 Cal. Rptr. 628, 608 P.2d 716 ; Gill v. Hearst Publ'g Co. (1953) 40 Cal. 2d 224, 229, 253 P.2d 441).

[OR]

A. Intrusion Must be Offensive. In order to state an actionable intrusion, the intrusion must be highly offensive to a reasonable person and sufficiently serious and unwarranted as to constitute an egregious breach of the social norms (Hernandez v. Hillsides, Inc. (2009) 47 Cal. 4th 272, 295, 97 Cal. Rptr. 3d 274, 211 P.3d 1063).

[CONTINUE]

[Optional] B. No Reasonable Expectation of Privacy. Where there is no reasonable expectation of privacy, conduct is not sufficiently offensive to support an action for invasion of privacy (Sacramento County Deputy Sheriffs' Assn. v.

County of Sacramento (1996) 51 Cal. App. 4th 1468, 1487).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that defendant should be held liable for invasion of privacy because the disclosure or intrusion in question was not offensive and objectionable to a reasonable person of ordinary sensibilities. The form may be used in opposing liability for any of the torts for invasion of privacy.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the disclosure in question was not offensive. For example, this form may be used in support of a demurrer or a motion for summary judgment when counsel wishes to assert that plaintiff failed to state a valid cause of action because plaintiff failed to allege a disclosure or intrusion that is offensive and objectionable to a reasonable person. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should include a discussion showing that the disclosure or intrusion in question was not offensive and objectionable to a reasonable person of ordinary sensibilities.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contentions supported by the points and authorities set out in §§ 184.20 -184.24.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Disclosure Must Be Offensive

The facts and procedural background of Forsher v. Bugliosi (1980) 26 Cal. 3d 792, 163 Cal. Rptr. 628, 608 P.2d 716 , are discussed in § 184.20[3][b]. The Supreme Court set forth the elements of the public disclosure of private facts tort, including the requirement that the disclosure be offensive and objectionable to a reasonable person of ordinary sensibilities (26 Cal. 3d 792, 808-809). In holding that no cause of action was stated, the Court found that in the circumstances of the case the disclosure of plaintiff's name was not offensive because the clear import of the disclosure was to absolve plaintiff of any responsibility for an unsolved murder (26 Cal. 3d 792, 812-813).

The facts and procedural background of Gill v. Hearst Publ'g Co. (1953) 40 Cal. 2d 224, 253 P.2d 441 , are discussed in § 184.27[3][a]. The plaintiffs alleged that their privacy was invaded by publication of a photograph showing them in an affectionate pose at their place of business. On appeal by plaintiffs from the judgment entered after defendants' demurrer was sustained without leave to amend, the Supreme Court reversed, holding that plaintiffs should have been allowed to amend their complaint. The Court held, however, that the mere publication of the photograph standing alone did not constitute an actionable invasion of privacy (40 Cal. 2d 224, 228) . The right of privacy is determined by the norm of the ordinary person; that is, the alleged objectionable publication must appear offensive in light of ordinary sensibilities (40 Cal. 2d 224, 229) .

[b] Intrusion Must be Offensive

The factual and procedural background of Hernandez v. Hillsides, Inc. (2009) 47 Cal. 4th 272, 97 Cal. Rptr. 3d 274, 211 P.3d 1063 , is provided in § 184.25[3][b]. In affirming summary judgment in favor of the employer on plaintiffs' claims for intrusion, the California Supreme Court held that while the plaintiffs had shown an intrusion into their shared office space, a place in which they had a reasonable expectation of privacy (47 Cal. 4th 272, 294) , they could not demonstrate under the circumstances that the intrusion would be considered utterly unjustified and highly offensive to a reasonable person. The Court noted that the undisputed evidence demonstrated that the camera equipment was installed in order to confirm a strong suspicion, triggered by the facility's computer network tracking measures, that an employee within the facility, specifically a program director or other staff person with keys and access to the administration building, was engaging in unauthorized and inappropriate after-hours computer use that could conceivably subject the facility to legal liability or, should some of the facility children be exposed, cause harm to the children in their vulnerable states. Moreover, the facility director repeatedly assured that the equipment was installed only to acquire evidence of who was using the computer in such unauthorized fashion, an assurance that was corroborated by his subsequent actions in limiting use of the camera (47 Cal. 4th 272, 298-299) . The Court also noted that the office setting had been selected only after an attempt to monitor the computer lab had been fruitless, and the camera's rage of vision within the office was narrow, limited only to the desk and computer workstation that had been used to access the pornography (47 Cal. 4th 272, 296) .

[c] No Reasonable Expectation of Privacy

In Sacramento County Deputy Sheriffs' Assn. v. County of Sacramento (1996) 51 Cal. App. 4th 1468, 1487 , county jail employees brought an action for invasion of privacy based on the placement of a video camera in the release office of the county jail. The County Sheriff's Department had experienced incidents of money missing from the release office area, and had placed the video surveillance camera as part of a criminal investigation. After discovering the camera, plaintiffs filed suit alleging physical intrusion into plaintiffs' seclusion. The trial court granted summary judgment for defendants on the ground that plaintiffs had no reasonable expectation of privacy under the circumstances.

The court of appeal affirmed, noting that under the Restatement (Second) of Torts, one is subject to liability for invasion of privacy only if the intrusion would be highly offensive to a reasonable person. The court stated that in determining the existence of offensiveness, courts consider the degree of intrusion, the context, conduct and circumstances surrounding the intrusion as well as the intruder's motives and objectives, the setting into which he or she intrudes, and the expectations of those whose privacy is invaded. The court concluded that no offensive conduct had occurred because the intrusion took place in a nonprivate office in the booking area of a county jail, where plaintiffs had a diminished expectation of privacy (51 Cal. App. 4th 1468, 1487) .

[a] Disclosure Must Be Offensive

In Aisenson v. American Broad. Co. (1990) 220 Cal. App. 3d 146, 269 Cal. Rptr. 379 , a superior court judge brought an action against a television station that broadcast the results of an opinion poll it conducted among members of the criminal-law bar, concerning performance ratings of criminal-law judges; the complaint alleged defamation based on the plaintiff's receiving the worst overall rating of all the judges evaluated, and intrusion into plaintiff's privacy, based on a videotape that was shown during the program, depicting plaintiff outside his house. The court of appeal affirmed summary judgment for the defendant, holding that the right to be secure from intrusion is not absolute: one who intentionally intrudes, physically or otherwise, on the solitude or seclusion of another is subject to liability to the other for invasion of privacy, if the intrusion would be highly offensive to a reasonable person. There was no evidence in the case before the court that the defendant's conduct, in scrutinizing a public official, was sufficiently offensive to support that cause of action (220 Cal. App. 3d 146, 162-163) .

In Warfield v. Peninsula Golf & Country Club (1989) 214 Cal. App. 3d 646, 262 Cal. Rptr. 890 , the trial court dismissed a complaint brought by a woman against a private social club, alleging several causes of action that arose from termination of her membership from the club after the dissolution of her marriage and that were based on a bylaw of the club that a family membership may only be issued to an adult male. In her cause of action for false light, the plaintiff alleged that an "account" published in the club's membership newsletter had the effect of casting her in a false light in the public eye. The court of appeal reversed with respect to the causes of action alleging civil rights violations, but affirmed dismissal of the cause of action for false light, holding that the anonymously worded statement contained in the newsletter could not have been reasonably construed as "offensive and objectionable" (214 Cal. App. 3d 646, 660) .

[b] No Reasonable Expectation of Privacy

In Wilkins v. National Broad. Co. (1999) 71 Cal. App. 4th 1066, 84 Cal. Rptr. 2d 329 , plaintiffs were two representatives of a company that leased and programmed 800- and 900-type telephone lines, and then sold them to investors. Defendants were two television producers who were investigating the practice of charging for services on so-called "toll-free" 800-type lines. Defendants had arranged to meet with plaintiffs to hear a sales presentation of their company's services, without informing plaintiffs of their true identities or that the meeting would be filmed by hidden cameras for later use on a network newsmagazine. The meeting was held in the middle of a crowded public restaurant within close proximity to other tables, while waiters were present at their table and with two other unidentified associates of the defendants in attendance, plaintiffs did not conduct themselves as though they were dispensing private information, and plaintiffs freely admitted that they provided the same sales information to hundreds of other potential investors. The court of appeal held that under those circumstances, there was no intrusion into a private place, conversation, or matter, the actions were not highly offensive to a reasonable person, and the plaintiffs had no objectively reasonable expectation of seclusion or solitude in the public restaurant (71 Cal. App. 4th 1066, 1078-1079) .

PART II. FORMS

18-184 California Points & Authorities § 184.29

§ 184.29 Opposing Contention That Defendant Invaded Plaintiff's Right to Privacy--Constitutional Protection for Newsworthy Matters

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT SHOULD NOT BE HELD LIABLE FOR INVASION OF PRIVACY BECAUSE THE DISCLOSURE BY DEFENDANT THAT IS THE BASIS OF PLAINTIFF'S ACTION IS CONSTITUTIONALLY PROTECTED NEWSWORTHY MATTER.

A. Constitutional Protection for Newsworthy Matters. A truthful publication is constitutionally protected if it is newsworthy and does not reveal facts so offensive as to shock the community's notions of decency (see Briscoe v. Reader's Digest Ass'n, Inc. (1971) 4 Cal. 3d 529, 541, 93 Cal. Rptr. 866, 483 P.2d 34 , overruled on other grounds, Gates v. Discovery Communications, Inc. (2004) 34 Cal. 4th 679, 696-697 & n.9, 21 Cal. Rptr. 3d 663, 101 P.3d 552).

B. Criteria for Newsworthiness. Among the factors to consider in determining whether a publication is newsworthy are the following: (1) the social value of the facts published; (2) the depth of the publication's intrusion into an individual's private affairs; (3) the extent to which the individual voluntarily acceded to a position of public notoriety; (4) the exact nature of the state's interest in preventing disclosure; (5) whether the information is a matter of public record; and (6) the lapse of time between the event and the publication (Forsher v. Bugliosi (1980) 26 Cal. 3d 792, 810, 812, 163 Cal. Rptr. 628, 608 P.2d 716 ; Kapellas v. Kofman (1969) 1 Cal. 3d 20, 36, 81 Cal. Rptr. 360, 459 P.2d 912).

C. Proof of Newsworthiness. The burden of proving that a publication is not newsworthy is on the plaintiff (Diaz v. Oakland Tribune, Inc. (1983) 139 Cal. App. 3d 118, 130, 188 Cal. Rptr. 762).

D. Proof of Offensiveness. The plaintiff is required to prove that the publication was made with reckless disregard for its offensiveness (see Briscoe v. Reader's Digest Ass'n, Inc. (1971) 4 Cal. 3d 529, 542-543, 93 Cal. Rptr. 866, 483

P.2d 34 , overruled in part, Gates v. Discovery Communications, Inc. (2004) 34 Cal. 4th 679, 696-697 & n.9, 21 Cal. Rptr. 3d 663, 101 P.3d 552).

[Optional] E. Reports of Crimes. In general, reports of recent crimes and the names of suspects and offenders, and reports of the facts but not the names concerning past crimes, are considered newsworthy matters (see Briscoe v. Reader's Digest Ass'n, Inc. (1971) 4 Cal. 3d 529, 537, 93 Cal. Rptr. 866, 483 P.2d 34 , overruled on other grounds, Gates v. Discovery Communications, Inc. (2004) 34 Cal. 4th 679, 696-697 & n.9, 21 Cal. Rptr. 3d 663, 101 P.3d 552 ; Kapellas v. Kofman (1969) 1 Cal. 3d 20, 38-39, 81 Cal. Rptr. 360, 459 P.2d 912).

[Optional] F. Nexus Requirement for Disclosures Concerning Involuntary Public Figures. Where the facts disclosed about a limited involuntary public figure bear a logical relationship to the newsworthy subject of a news broadcast and are not intrusive in great disproportion to their relevance, the broadcast is newsworthy (Shulman v. Group W Prods., Inc. (1998) 18 Cal. 4th 200, 228, 74 Cal. Rptr. 2d 843, 955 P.2d 469).

[2] Comments

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that defendant should be held liable for invasion of privacy on the ground that the disclosure in question is constitutionally protected because it concerns newsworthy matter. The form may be used in opposing liability for any of the torts for invasion of privacy.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of newsworthiness. For example, this form may be used in support of a demurrer or a motion for summary judgment when counsel wishes to assert that the disclosure that is the basis of plaintiff's action is constitutionally protected newsworthy matter, and thus plaintiff has failed to state a valid cause of action or the action has no merit. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should include a discussion showing that the disclosure in question concerns newsworthy matter and is not offensive to the community's notions of decency, and that it meets some or all of the listed criteria for newsworthiness. If optional Paragraph E is used, the discussion should establish that the disclosure concerns a report of a recent crime, or facts but not names concerning a past crime. If optional paragraph F is used, counsel should first establish that the disclosure concerns a limited involuntary public figure (for example, an automobile accident victim) and then argue that: (1) the facts disclosed about that involuntary public figure bear a logical relationship to a newsworthy subject of a news broadcast (for example, automobile accidents and rescues); and (2) the facts disclosed are not intrusive in great disproportion to their relevance [see Shulman v. Group W Prods., Inc. (1998) 18 Cal. 4th 200, 228, 74 Cal. Rptr. 2d 843, 955 P.2d 469] .

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contentions supported by the points and authorities set out in §§ 184.20 -184.24.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Constitutional Protection for Newsworthy Matters

The facts and procedural background of Briscoe v. Reader's Digest Ass'n, Inc. (1971) 4 Cal. 3d 529, 93 Cal. Rptr. 866, 483 P.2d 34 , are discussed in § 184.21[3][b]. The Supreme Court reversed a judgment entered after defendant's general demurrer was sustained, and stated that plaintiff had stated a cause of action for the public disclosure tort, and could amend its complaint to state a cause of action for false light publicity. In examining the conflict between freedom of the press and the right of privacy, the Court stated that a truthful publication is constitutionally protected if (1) it is newsworthy and (2) it does not reveal facts so offensive as to shock the community's notions of decency (4 Cal. 3d 529, 541) .

[b] Criteria for Newsworthiness

The facts and procedural background of Forsher v. Bugliosi (1980) 26 Cal. 3d 792, 163 Cal. Rptr. 628, 608 P.2d 716 , are discussed in § 184.20[3][b]. The Supreme Court affirmed a judgment of dismissal entered after defendants' general demurrer was sustained to plaintiff's actions for invasion of privacy, libel, and slander. Defendants had referred to plaintiff in a book in connection with an unsolved murder. In discussing plaintiff's action for public disclosure of private facts, the Court listed the factors that should be considered in determining whether or not a publication is constitutionally protected as newsworthy, including the social value of the facts published, the depth of the publication's intrusion into an individual's private affairs, the extent to which the individual voluntarily acceded to a position of public notoriety, the exact nature of the state's interest in preventing disclosure, whether the information is a matter of public record, and the lapse of time between the event and the publication (26 Cal. 3d 792, 812) . Applying these factors to the case before it, the Court held that plaintiff had failed to allege a cause of action for invasion of privacy (26 Cal. 3d 792, 812) .

Kapellas v. Kofman (1969) 1 Cal. 3d 20, 81 Cal. Rptr. 360, 459 P.2d 912 , was an action for libel by a candidate for public office and for libel and invasion of privacy on behalf of her minor children against defendant newspaper. Defendant had run an editorial disclosing the criminal activities of plaintiff's children, and questioning her qualifications for public office. Defendant's demurrers to all the actions were sustained and the case was dismissed. Plaintiff appealed.

The Supreme Court affirmed the demurrer to the childrens' cause of action for invasion of privacy, but reversed as to the libel actions. As to the action for invasion of privacy, the Court stated that in determining whether a particular incident is newsworthy, the courts consider a variety of factors, including the social value of the facts published, the depth of the article's intrusion into ostensibly private affairs, and the extent to which the party voluntarily acceded to a position of public notoriety. If the information reported has previously become part of the public domain or the intrusion into an individual's private life is only slight, publication will be privileged even though its social utility may be minimal. On the other hand, when the legitimate public interest in the published information is substantial, a much greater intrusion into an individual's private life will be sanctioned, especially if the individual willingly entered into the public sphere (1 Cal. 3d 20, 36) . The Court held that the statements about the children were privileged as newsworthy information because of the great importance of disclosure of relevant information about candidates for public office and because the information was a matter of public record (1 Cal. 3d 20, 38-39) . The Court stated that the editorial purported to disclose only incidents that had initially been recorded on the police blotter, so they were already matters of public record (1 Cal. 3d 20, 38) .

[c] Proof of Newsworthiness

The facts and procedural background of Diaz v. Oakland Tribune, Inc. (1983) 139 Cal. App. 3d 118, 188 Cal. Rptr. 762 , are discussed in § 184.29. The court reversed because of errors in the jury instructions, one of which was an instruction that defendants had the burden of proving that the publication in dispute was newsworthy in order to prevail (139 Cal. App. 3d 118, 127) . The court held instead that plaintiff has the burden of proving that the publication is not newsworthy. Once plaintiff has made a prima facie case of non-newsworthiness, defendants may meet it with a showing that the information was newsworthy (139 Cal. App. 3d 118, 130) .

[d] Proof of Offensiveness

The facts and procedural background of Briscoe v. Reader's Digest Ass'n, Inc. (1971) 4 Cal. 3d 529, 93 Cal. Rptr. 866, 483 P.2d 34 , are discussed in § 184.21[3][b]. In reversing the judgment of dismissal and ordering that defendant's general demurrer be overruled, the Supreme Court stated that, in order to protect First Amendment freedoms, plaintiff would be required to prove that the publisher invaded plaintiff's privacy with reckless disregard for the fact that reasonable men would find the invasion highly offensive (4 Cal. 3d 529, 542-543) . Plaintiff had complied with this initial requirement in this case by alleging malice and willfulness in his complaint (4 Cal. 3d 529, 543 n.19).

[e] Reports of Crimes

The facts and procedural background of Briscoe v. Reader's Digest Ass'n, Inc. (1971) 4 Cal. 3d 529, 93 Cal. Rptr. 866, 483 P.2d 34 , are discussed in § 184.21[3][b]. The Supreme Court reversed a judgment entered after defendant's general demurrer was sustained, and held that plaintiff had stated a cause of action for the public disclosure tort, and could amend its complaint to state a cause of action for false light publicity. In discussing the causes of action for invasion of privacy, the Court stated that truthful reports of recent crimes and the names of suspects or offenders are deemed newsworthy. Additionally, reports of the facts of past crimes are newsworthy but the identification of the actor in long past crimes usually does not serve a sufficient public interest to be considered newsworthy (4 Cal. 3d 529, 537) .

NOTE:

Regardless of whether the identity of a former criminal is still newsworthy, there are constitutional concerns that now preclude the imposition of liability for the publication of truthful information found in public court records [see Cox Broad. Corp. v. Cohn (1975) 420 U.S. 469, 491-496, 95 S. Ct. 1029, 43 L. Ed. 2d 328 ; Gates v. Discovery Communications, Inc. (2004), 34 Cal. 4th 679, 692-696, 21 Cal. Rptr. 3d 663, 101 P.3d 552] . These constitutional issues are discussed in § 184.27.

Kapellas v. Kofman (1969) 1 Cal. 3d 20, 81 Cal. Rptr. 360, 459 P.2d 912 , is discussed in § 184.29[3][b].

[f] Nexus Requirement for Disclosures Concerning Involuntary Public Figures

In Shulman v. Group W Prods., Inc. (1998) 18 Cal. 4th 200, 74 Cal. Rptr. 2d 843, 955 P.2d 469 , plaintiffs, a mother and her son were injured when their car went off the highway overturning and trapping them inside. A medical transport and rescue helicopter crew came to plaintiffs' assistance, accompanied on this occasion by a video camera operator employed by a television producer. The cameraman filmed plaintiffs' extrication from the car, the flight nurse and medic's efforts to give them medical care during the extrication, and their transport to the hospital in the helicopter. The flight nurse wore a small microphone that picked up her conversations with other rescue workers and with one of the plaintiffs. This videotape and sound track were edited into a segment that was broadcast months later on a documentary show, On Scene: Emergency Response. Plaintiffs, who neither consented to the filming and recording nor to the broadcast, alleged that the television producers intruded into a realm of personal privacy and gave unwarranted publicity to private events of their lives. The trial court granted summary judgment for the producers on the ground that the events depicted in the broadcast were newsworthy and the producers' activities were therefore protected under the First Amendment to the United States Constitution. The court of appeal reversed, finding triable issues of fact existed as to one plaintiff's claim for publication of private facts. Agreeing with some, but not all, of the court of appeal's analysis, a majority of the California Supreme Court concluded summary judgment was proper as to plaintiffs' cause of action for publication of private facts. The Court held that the material broadcast was newsworthy as a matter of law and, therefore, could not be the basis of tort liability under a private facts claim (18 Cal. 4th 200, 213) .

The Court began its analysis by stating the elements of the public disclosure tort: public disclosure, of a private fact, which would be offensive and objectionable to the reasonable person and which is not of legitimate public concern. It then stated that the element critical to this case was the presence or absence of legitimate public interest (newsworthiness) in the facts disclosed. The Court reviewed the decisional law regarding newsworthiness and initially concluded that lack of newsworthiness was an element of the private facts tort, making it a complete bar to common law liability. It further concluded that the analysis of newsworthiness inevitably involved accommodating conflicting interests in personal privacy and in press freedom as guaranteed by the First Amendment, and that in the circumstances of this case, where the facts disclosed about a limited, involuntary public figure, bear a logical relationship to the newsworthy subject of the broadcast and are not intrusive in great disproportion to their relevance, the broadcast was of legitimate public concern, barring liability under the private facts tort (18 Cal. 4th 200, 215) .

In looking at the facts of this case, the Court first determined that the subject matter of the broadcast as a whole was of legitimate public concern in that automobile accidents as well as the rescue and medical treatment of accident victims were of great interest to much of the public. It then applied the analysis stated above and determined that (1) the plaintiff mother's appearance and words as she was extricated from the overturned car, placed in the helicopter and transported to the hospital were also of legitimate public concern, and that (2) the broadcast did not constitute a morbid and sensational prying into private lives for its own sake and was not so lurid and sensational in emotional tone, or so intensely personal in content as to make its intrusiveness disproportionate to its relevance (18 Cal. 4th 200, 229) . The Court found specifically that the broadcast video depicting the plaintiff mother's injured physical state and audio showing her disorientation and despair were substantially relevant to the segment's newsworthy subject matter because one of the dramatic and interesting aspects of the story as a whole was its focus on the flight nurse. Her work was portrayed as demanding and important and as involving a measure of personal risk. The broadcast made apparent that this type of emergency care required not only medical knowledge, concentration and courage, but an ability to talk and listen to severely traumatized patients. One of the challenges the nurse faced in assisting the plaintiff mother was the confusion, pain and fear that she understandably felt in the aftermath of the accident.

NOTE:

The Shulman opinion expressed the views of a majority of the court's members. Five justices concluded that summary judgment was proper on plaintiffs cause of action for publication of private facts because the facts disclosed were newsworthy, and thus protected by the First Amendment. In articulating the proper analysis to be applied in cases such as this, this Court as so many before it, wrestled with the conflicting interests of personal privacy and press freedom. In the end, the Court reasoned that the approach it had fashioned accorded with its own prior decisions, in that it balanced the public's right to know against the plaintiff's privacy interest by drawing a protective line at the point the material revealed ceases to have any substantial connection to the subject matter of the newsworthy report. The analysis also incorporated considerable deference to reporters and editors, avoiding the likelihood of unconstitutional interference with the freedom of the press to report truthfully on matters of legitimate public interest. As to this matter, the Court states in footnote 8 that although it believed its conclusions in this case accorded with the dictates of the federal Constitution, it could not be sure without clearer guidance from the United States Supreme Court. The Court acknowledges that unless it abandoned the private facts tort completely, it appeared to be at a theoretical risk of creating unconstitutional liability, since the high court has thus far declined to decide whether truthful publications may ever be subject to civil or criminal liability consistently with the First and Fourteenth Amendments, or to put it another way, whether the State may ever define and protect an area of privacy free from unwanted publicity in the press. In light of this footnote, it appears likely that at some point the United States Supreme Court will step in to provide guidance to the States on this Constitutional matter.

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Criteria for Newsworthiness

The factual and procedural background of Taus v. Loftus (2007) 40 Cal. 4th 683, 54 Cal. Rptr. 3d 775, 151 P.3d 1185 , is provided in § 184.25[3][h]. In that case, defendant scholar, while speaking at a conference dealing with repressed sexual abuse memories, had made comments about plaintiff, who had been the subject of a published and widely debated case study but whose identity was not widely known. In those comments, the scholar had said merely that the case study subject had engaged in unspecified "destructive behavior" in her teen years and was currently serving in the Navy. The Supreme Court held that these comments, which were not of an intensely personal or intimate nature, were newsworthy within the debate about the reliability of repressed memory recovery. The Court noted that other commentators responding to the published case study had earlier remarked that it would be of interest from an academic standpoint to learn the effects of the events described in the case study on the subject's later development (40 Cal. 4th 683, 719) .

In Morrow v. Los Angeles Unified School Dist. (2007) 149 Cal. App. 4th 1424, 57 Cal. Rptr. 3d 885 , a high school principal brought actions for defamation and invasion of privacy against his former school district, a local superintendent, and the district superintendent after a newspaper reported that plaintiff was being replaced six months before his planned retirement due to the perceived need for "stronger leadership" at the plaintiff's school in light of several recent outbursts of violence among the students. The report also indicated that the district superintendent stated that the principal's retirement plans "did not fit with the district's needs" and the principal's handling of the violence had "accelerated" the decision to replace plaintiff. The trial court granted a motion to strike the causes of action under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16, the anti-SLAPP statute, and the court of appeal affirmed. The court of appeal held that the invasion of privacy action could not succeed because the statements made by the district superintendent to the newspaper reporter concerning the district's decision to replace plaintiff as part of the response to the school violence were relevant to that newsworthy subject, even if the disclosure included minimal and not particularly intrusive information about the principal's retirement plans (149 Cal. App. 4th 1424, 1440) .

[b] Nexus Requirement for Disclosures Concerning Involuntary Public Figures

In Wilkins v. National Broad. Co. (1999) 71 Cal. App. 4th 1066, 84 Cal. Rptr. 2d 329 , plaintiffs were two representatives of a company that leased and programmed 800- and 900-type telephone lines, and then sold them to investors. Defendants were two television producers who were investigating the practice of charging for services on so-called "toll-free" 800-type lines. Defendants had arranged to meet with plaintiffs in the middle of a crowded public restaurant to hear a sales presentation of their company's services, without informing plaintiffs of their true identities or that the meeting would be filmed by hidden cameras for later use on a network newsmagazine. The court of appeal rejected plaintiffs' arguments that the use of their names, likenesses, and voices, and the fact that they worked for their particular company, could support an action for public disclosure of private facts. The court held that the growing practice of charging for so-called "toll-free" 800-type lines, often without the knowledge of the person billed for the services, was a subject matter of legitimate public interest and the use of the filmed footage made the report more concrete to the viewers. Thus, the broadcast material was newsworthy and was not so lurid or sensational or intensely personal in content as to make its intrusiveness disproportionate to its relevance (71 Cal. App. 4th 1066, 1084-1087) .

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT SHOULD NOT BE HELD LIABLE FOR INVASION OF PRIVACY BECAUSE PLAINTIFF WAIVED HIS/HER RIGHT TO PRIVACY TO THE ISSUES IN QUESTION BY BEING A PUBLIC FIGURE.

A. Waiver of Right. A person who is a public figure waives a part of his or her right to privacy to the extent that the public has a legitimate interest in his or her activities (Johnson v. Harcourt, Brace, Jovanovich, Inc. (1974) 43 Cal. App. 3d 880, 892, 118 Cal. Rptr. 370).

B. Public Figure. A person may become a public figure either by achieving such pervasive fame or notoriety that he or she becomes a public personage for all purposes and in all contexts, or by voluntarily injecting himself or herself or by being drawn into a particular public controversy, in which case he or she becomes a public figure for the limited issues relating to the controversy (see Kinsey v. Macur (1980) 107 Cal. App. 3d 265, 273, 165 Cal. Rptr. 608).

[Optional] C. Public Officials and Candidates. Public officials and candidates for public offices are considered public figures (Kapellas v. Kofman (1969) 1 Cal. 3d 20, 36, 81 Cal. Rptr. 360, 459 P.2d 912).

[Optional] D. Relative of Public Figure. A person closely related to a public figure also waives his or her right of privacy to some extent (*Kapellas v. [a] Use of Form invasion of privacy because plaintiff waived his or her right to privacy by becoming a public figure. The form may be used in opposing liability for any of the torts for invasion of privacy.

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that defendant should be held liable for

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of waiver by a public figure. For example, this form may be used in support of a demurrer or a motion for summary judgment when counsel wishes to assert that plaintiff failed to state a valid cause of action or the action has no merit because plaintiff waived his or her right to privacy by becoming a public figure. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should include a discussion showing that the plaintiff is a public figure, either for all purposes or for a limited purpose related to the publication in question. If the optional Paragraph C is used, the discussion should establish that plaintiff is a public official or a candidate for public office. If optional Paragraph D is used, counsel should discuss the manner in which plaintiff is related to a public figure.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities set out in §§ 184.20 -184.24.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Waiver of Right

In Johnson v. Harcourt, Brace, Jovanovich, Inc. (1974) 43 Cal. App. 3d 880, 118 Cal. Rptr. 370 , the plaintiff brought suit for invasion of privacy against defendant, who reprinted a magazine article in a textbook, reciting how one of the plaintiffs returned a sack of money he found lying on the street. Defendant's demurrer was sustained and plaintiffs appealed from the ensuing judgment.

The court of appeal affirmed (43 Cal. App. 3d 880, 897) . The court held that a person may, by his or her own activities or by the force of circumstances, become a public personage and thereby relinquish a part of his or her right of privacy to the extent that the public has a legitimate interest in his or her activities (43 Cal. App. 3d 880, 892) . Plaintiff had become such a public person and, therefore, had failed to state a cause of action for invasion of privacy (43 Cal. App. 3d 880, 891-892) .

[b] Public Figure

The facts and procedural background of Kinsey v. Macur (1980) 107 Cal. App. 3d 265, 165 Cal. Rptr. 608 , are discussed in § 184.20[3][c]. One of defendant's contentions was that she was not liable for invasion of privacy because plaintiff was a public figure by virtue of his service in the Peace Corps and his trial and acquittal for the murder of his first wife. On appeal, the court relied on the definition of public figure set forth in Gertz v. Welch (1974) 418 U.S.

323, 345, 94 S. Ct. 2997, 41 L. Ed. 2d 789 , regarding the two classes of public figure: those who achieve special prominence and are deemed public figures for all purposes, and those who thrust themselves into a particular controversy and become public figures for purposes of that incident (107 Cal. App. 3d 265, 273) . Under the facts in this case, the court decided that plaintiff was not a public figure (107 Cal. App. 3d 265, 273-274) .

[c] Public Officials and Candidates

The facts and procedural background of Kapellas v. Kofman (1969) 1 Cal. 3d 20, 81 Cal. Rptr. 360, 459 P.2d 912 , are discussed in § 184.29[3][b]. One count was a claim for invasion of privacy on behalf of the children of a candidate for public office. The trial court sustained a demurrer to the complaint, and plaintiff appealed. In affirming the judgment of dismissal as to the invasion of privacy count on the ground that the information disclosed was newsworthy, the Court stated that because of their public responsibilities, government officials and candidates for such offices are considered the paradigm case of public figures, and that a thorough scrutiny will be permitted of any facet of their lives that may relate to their fitness for office (1 Cal. 3d 20, 36-37) . Because the children were closely related to a candidate for public office, and the information disclosed about the children was from a police blotter, which is a matter of public record, the Court held that the statements were absolutely privileged as being newsworthy so that no cause of action for invasion of privacy was stated (1 Cal. 3d 20, 39) .

The facts and procedural background of Kapellas v. Kofman (1969) 1 Cal. 3d 20, 81 Cal. Rptr. 360, 459 P.2d 912 , are discussed in § 184.29[3][b]. In discussing the action for invasion of privacy, the Supreme Court held that the children of a candidate for public office, as people closely related to a public figure, lost their right of privacy in reports of their criminal conduct because the information was relevant to the candidate's fitness for office (1 Cal. 3d 20, 37-38) .

The facts and procedural background of Johnson v. Harcourt, Brace, Jovanovich, Inc. (1974) 43 Cal. App. 3d 880, 118 Cal. Rptr. 370 , are discussed in § 184.30[3][a]. The court ruled that a necessary corollary to the rule that public figures lose their right of privacy is that people closely related to public figures also lose their right of privacy to some extent (43 Cal. App. 3d 880, 892) . Thus, the family of a man who found and returned almost a quarter of a million dollars could not state a cause of action for invasion of privacy (43 Cal. App. 3d 880, 882-883, 891-892) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Waiver of Right

The facts and procedural background of Briscoe v. Reader's Digest Ass'n, Inc. (1971) 4 Cal. 3d 529, 93 Cal. Rptr. 866, 483 P.2d 34 , are discussed in § 184.21[3][b]. The Supreme Court held that the identification of plaintiff as a former hijacker stated a valid cause of action for invasion of privacy (4 Cal. 3d 529, 543) . The Court found that individuals involved in matters of public interest may become so fixed in the public's memory that they lose their right of privacy in that incident for all time, but that other persons may revert to an ordinary way of life after the incident and thereby regain their right to privacy (4 Cal. 3d 529, 538-540) . In this case, plaintiff had become a rehabilitated member of society, and thus was no longer a public figure (4 Cal. 3d 529, 541-542) .

§ 184.31 Opposing Contention That Defendant Invaded Plaintiff's Right to Privacy--Statutory Duty to Disclose Information

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT SHOULD NOT BE HELD LIABLE FOR INVASION OF PRIVACY BECAUSE DEFENDANT HAD A STATUTORY DUTY TO DISCLOSE THE INFORMATION IN QUESTION.

Duty to Disclose. There is no invasion of privacy when defendant is required by law to disclose the information (see Mason v. Western Union Tel. Co. (1975) 52 Cal. App. 3d 429, 440, 125 Cal. Rptr. 53 ; Lehman v. City & County of San Francisco (1978) 80 Cal. App. 3d 309, 312-313, 314, 145 Cal. Rptr. 493).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that defendant should be held liable for invasion of privacy because defendant had a statutory duty to disclose the information in question. The form may be used in opposing liability for any of the torts for invasion of privacy.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of duty to disclose. For example, this form may be used in support of a demurrer or a motion for summary judgment when counsel wishes to assert that plaintiff failed to state a valid cause of action or the action has no merit because defendant had a statutory duty to disclose the information in question. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should include a discussion showing that defendant was required by law to make the disclosure which forms the basis for plaintiff's complaint.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contentions supported by the points and authorities set out in §§ 184.20 -184.24.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of affirmative defense based on the statutory duty to disclose information, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 429, Privacy (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Duty to Disclose

The facts and procedural background of Mason v. Western Union Tel. Co. (1975) 52 Cal. App. 3d 429, 125 Cal. Rptr. 53 , are discussed in § 184.26[3][a]. The court of appeal held that plaintiffs had failed to state a cause of action for invasion of privacy against defendant telegraph company for its delivery of several telegrams sent by another defendant. One of the two reasons given for the court's holding was that the transmission was required by law (52 Cal. App. 3d 429, 440) .

Lehman v. City & County of San Francisco (1978) 80 Cal. App. 3d 309, 145 Cal. Rptr. 493 , was an action for violation of the right of privacy, freedom of association, and due process. The case concerned the disclosure by the jury commissioner of plaintiff's identity as a prospective juror to the litigants in a civil case. Defendant's demurrer was sustained, and plaintiff appealed from the judgment of dismissal subsequently entered.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment. The court held that the statutorily required disclosure of the identity of prospective jurors [see Gov. Code §§ 6250-6253] did not violate any state or federal constitutional right of privacy (80 Cal. App. 3d 309, 312-313) .

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT SHOULD NOT BE HELD LIABLE FOR INVASION OF PRIVACY UNDER SECTION _____ [3344 or 3344.1 OF THE CIVIL CODE] FOR USING _____ [name of deceased personality or PLAINTIFF'S] PHOTOGRAPH BECAUSE _____ [name of deceased personality or PLAINTIFF] IS NOT READILY IDENTIFIABLE IN THE PHOTOGRAPH.

A. _____ [Deceased Personality or Plaintiff] Must Be Readily Identifiable. There is no liability for the unauthorized use of a _____ [deceased personality's or person's] photograph for advertising or solicitation purposes unless the _____ [deceased personality or person complaining of the misappropriation] is readily identifiable in the photograph (see Civ. Code § 3344(a), (b) or 3344.1(i)).

B. Readily Identifiable Defined. A person is deemed "readily identifiable" from a photograph when one who views the photograph with the naked eye can reasonably determine that the person depicted in the photograph is _____ [deceased personality or the same person who is complaining of its unauthorized use] (Civ. Code § 3344(b)(1) or 3344.1(i)).

[Optional] C. Photograph Defined. As used in Section _____ [3344 or 3344.1 of the Civil Code], a photograph means any photograph or photographic reproduction, still or moving, or any video recording or live television transmission, of any person, such that the _____ [deceased personality or person] is readily identifiable [Civ. Code § 3344(b) or 3344.1(i)].

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that defendant should be held liable for invasion of privacy based on unauthorized use of a photograph because the deceased personality or plaintiff is not readily identifiable in the photograph [see Civ. Code §§ 3344(b), 3344.1(i)]. For further discussion on who has standing under Civ. Code § 3344.1 to bring action for the unauthorized use of a deceased personality's name, voice, signature, photograph, or likeness, see §§ 184.40 and 184.42.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of lack of identifiability. For example, this form may be used in support of a motion for summary judgment when counsel wishes to assert that an action for damages pursuant to Civ. Code § 3344 has no merit because plaintiff is not readily identifiable in the photograph and thus there is no triable issue of material fact. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities set out in § 184.24.

[b] Argument

§ 184.33 Opposing Contention That Defendant Invaded Plaintiff's Right to Privacy by Unauthorized Use of Plaintiff's Photograph--Plaintiff Member of Definable Group [Civ. Code § 3344(b)]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT SHOULD NOT BE HELD LIABLE FOR INVASION OF PRIVACY UNDER SECTION 3344 OF THE CIVIL CODE FOR UNAUTHORIZED USE OF PLAINTIFF'S PHOTOGRAPH BECAUSE PLAINTIFF IS REPRESENTED IN THE PHOTOGRAPH AS A MEMBER OF A DEFINABLE GROUP RATHER THAN AS AN INDIVIDUAL.

A. No Right for Member of Definable Group. If a photograph includes more than one person that is readily identifiable, then the person or persons complaining of the unauthorized use must be represented as individuals rather than solely as members of a definable group represented in the photograph (Civ. Code § 3344(b)(2)).

B. Readily Identifiable Defined. [See § 184.32, Paragraph B.]

C. Definable Group Defined. A definable group includes, but is not limited to, a crowd at any sporting event, a crowd in any street or public building, an audience at any theatrical or stage production, a glee club, or a baseball team (Civ. Code § 3344(b)(2)).

[Optional] D. Member of Definable Group. A person or persons are considered to be represented as members of a definable group if they are represented in the photograph solely as a result of being present when the photograph was taken and have not been singled out as individuals in any manner (Civ. Code § 3344(b)(3)).

[Optional] E. Photograph Defined. [See § 184.32, Paragraph C.]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that defendant should be held liable for invasion of privacy by misappropriation under Civ. Code § 3344 because plaintiff is represented in a photograph merely as a member of a definable group, rather than as an individual, as required.

They may also be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of membership in a definable group. For example, this form may be used in support of a motion for summary judgment when counsel wishes to assert that an action for damages pursuant to Civ. Code § 3344 has no merit because plaintiff is pictured in a photograph merely as a member of a definable group instead of as a readily identifiable individual, and thus there is no triable issue of material fact. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities set out in § 184.24.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should include a discussion showing that plaintiff is depicted in the photograph only as a member of a definable group, and that the definable group in the picture meets the examples set forth in Civ. Code § 3344(b)(2) or is analogous to those examples. If optional Paragraph D is used, counsel should establish that plaintiff is depicted in the photograph solely as a result of being present when it was taken rather than being singled out as an individual. If optional Paragraph E is used, counsel should show that the photographic reproduction in question comes within the definition of a photograph.

[1] FORM

Incidental Use of Employee's Photograph or Likeness. When a photograph or likeness of an employee of the person using the photograph or likeness appearing in an advertisement or other publication prepared by or on behalf of the user is only incidental, and not essential, to the purpose of the publication in which it appears, a rebuttable presumption arises affecting the burden of producing evidence that the failure to obtain the employee's consent was not a knowing use of the photograph or likeness (Civ. Code § 3344(c)).

[2] Comments

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that defendant, plaintiff's employer, should be held liable for invasion of privacy under Civ. Code § 3344 for unauthorized use of plaintiff's photograph or likeness because plaintiff has failed to overcome the rebuttable presumption that the incidental use of his or her photograph or likeness is not a knowing use [Civ. Code § 3344(c)].

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of incidental use of an employee's photograph or likeness. For example, this form may be used to support a motion for a directed verdict for defendant [see Frisk v. Merrihew (1974)

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT SHOULD NOT BE HELD LIABLE FOR INVASION OF PRIVACY UNDER SECTION _____ [3344 or 3344.1] OF THE CIVIL CODE FOR UNAUTHORIZED USE OF _____ [name of deceased personality or PLAINTIFF'S] _____ [NAME and/or VOICE and/or SIGNATURE and/or PHOTOGRAPH and/or LIKENESS] BECAUSE DEFENDANT'S USE OF _____ [IT or THEM] WAS IN CONNECTION WITH A _____ [NEWS BROADCAST or PUBLIC AFFAIRS BROADCAST or SPORTS BROADCAST or POLITICAL CAMPAIGN], AND THUS DOES NOT CONSTITUTE A USE FOR WHICH CONSENT IS REQUIRED.

A. Exempted Uses. The use of a _____ [deceased personality's or person's] name, voice, signature, photograph, or likeness in connection with any news, public affairs, or sports broadcast or account, or any political campaign, does not constitute a use for which consent is required (Civ. Code § 3344(d) or 3344.1(j)).

[Optional] B. Limitation on News Exemption Under *Civ. [Optional] C. Exempted Uses Pursuant to Civ. Code § 3344.1(a)(2). The provisions of Section 3344.1 of the Civil Code governing the use of a deceased personality's name, voice, signature, photograph, or likeness do not apply to a use in a play, book, magazine, newspaper, musical composition, audiovisual work, radio or television program, single and original work of art, work of political or newsworthy value, or an advertisement or commercial announcement for any of these works, if the work in which the use occurs is fictional or nonfictional entertainment or a dramatic, literary, or musical work (Civ. Code § 3344.1(a)(2)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that defendant should be held liable for invasion of privacy for unauthorized use of a deceased personality's or plaintiff's name, voice, signature, photograph, or likeness because defendant's use of it or them was exempt from the requirement of consent. Uses exempt from the consent requirement include use in connection with any news, public affairs, or sports broadcast or account, or any political campaign [see Civ. Code §§ 3344(d), 3344.1(j)]. For further discussion on who has standing under Civ. Code § 3344.1 to bring action for the unauthorized use of a deceased personality's name, voice, signature, photograph, or likeness, see §§ 184.40, 184.42.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that Civ. Code §§ 3344(d) or 3344.1(j) allowed the use of the name, voice, signature, photograph, or likeness in question without plaintiff's consent. For example, they may be combined with points supporting a motion for summary judgment by defendant based on the ground that the action has no merit because consent was not required for the use in question. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities set out in § 184.24.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should include a discussion showing that defendant's use of the deceased personality's or plaintiff's name, voice, signature, photograph, or likeness was in connection with a news, public affairs, or sports broadcast or account, or a political campaign.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Limitation on News Exemption Under Civ. Code § 3344

The facts and procedural background of Eastwood v. Superior Court (1983) 149 Cal. App. 3d 409, 198 Cal. Rptr. 342 , are discussed in § 184.22[3][b]. The court of appeal reversed judgment for defendant, finding that plaintiff had stated a cause of action for appropriation of name or likeness under the common law and under Civ. Code § 3344. In discussing the statutory action, the court held that the exception of Civ. Code § 3344(d) for news accounts does not provide an exemption for a publication made with actual malice--that is, with knowledge of its falsity or with reckless disregard for its truth (149 Cal. App. 3d 409, 425) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Exempted Uses

In Gionfriddo v. Major League Baseball (2001) 94 Cal. App. 4th 400, 114 Cal. Rptr. 2d 307 , former professional baseball players brought suit against the defendants, asserting causes of action for statutory and common law appropriation based on the defendants' unauthorized use of the players' names, images, likenesses, and career statistics in game programs, Web sites, and documentaries. The court of appeal affirmed summary judgment for the defendants. Addressing the statutory action, the court held that the use of the likenesses and information about the former players fell within the exemption for uses in connection with "any news, public affairs, or sports broadcast or account" (94 Cal. App. 4th 400, 415) .

In Dora v. Frontline Video, Inc. (1993) 15 Cal. App. 4th 536, 18 Cal. Rptr. 2d 790 , a former surfer brought an action against a documentary filmmaker, alleging common-law and statutory appropriation of name or likeness. The basis of the complaint was that the defendant, without the plaintiff's permission or knowledge, released a surfing documentary that included footage of the plaintiff taken in the 1950's, when he was well-known to surfing enthusiasts. The court of appeal affirmed summary judgment for the defendant, holding that the surfing documentary constituted "public affairs" within the meaning of Civ. Code § 3344(d) (15 Cal. App. 4th 536, 544-546) .

[b] Limitation on News Exemption Under Civ. Code § 3344

In Maheu v. CBS, Inc. (1988) 201 Cal. App. 3d 662, 247 Cal. Rptr. 304 , a former aide of the celebrated recluse Howard Hughes sued several defendants alleging a cause of action under Civ. Code § 3344 for the appropriation of the plaintiff's name, likeness, and personality. The trial court sustained demurrers, without leave to amend, to these causes of action, and the plaintiff appealed. The court of appeal affirmed. The court noted the exemption under Civ. Code § 3344(d) for such use in a news account (201 Cal. App. 3d 662, 676) . It cited Eastwood v. Superior Court (1983) 149 Cal. App. 3d 409, 198 Cal. Rptr. 342 , for the proposition that this exemption does not apply to the publication of false matter with actual malice--that is, with knowledge or reckless disregard of its falsity. The court concluded, however, that the exemption under Civ. Code § 3344(d) did apply in this case, absent any allegations that the matter was false and was published with actual malice (201 Cal. App. 3d 662, 677) .

PART II. FORMS

18-184 California Points & Authorities § 184.36

§ 184.36 Opposing Contention That Defendant Invaded Plaintiff's Right to Privacy by Unauthorized Use of Deceased Personality's or Plaintiff's Name, Voice, Signature, Photograph, or Likeness--Use in Commercial Medium Not Directly Connected With Commercial Sponsorship or Paid Advertising [Civ. Code §§ 3344(e), 3344.1(k)]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT SHOULD NOT BE HELD LIABLE FOR INVASION OF PRIVACY UNDER SECTION _____ [3344 or 3344.1] OF THE CIVIL CODE FOR UNAUTHORIZED USE OF _____ [name of deceased personality or PLAINTIFF]'S _____ [NAME and/or VOICE and/or SIGNATURE and/or PHOTOGRAPH and/or LIKENESS] BECAUSE DEFENDANT'S USE OF _____ [IT or THEM] WAS NOT SO DIRECTLY CONNECTED WITH THE COMMERCIAL SPONSORSHIP OR PAID ADVERTISING OF THE MATERIAL CONTAINING _____ [IT or THEM] SO AS TO CONSTITUTE A USE FOR WHICH CONSENT IS REQUIRED.

A. Use in Commercial Medium Not Directly Connected With Commercial Sponsorship or Paid Advertising. The use of a _____ [deceased personality's or person's] name, voice, signature, photograph, or likeness in a commercial medium does not constitute a use for which consent is required solely because the material in question is commercially sponsored or contains paid advertising. Rather it is a question of fact whether or not the use of the name, voice, signature, photograph, or likeness was so directly connected with the commercial sponsorship or with the paid advertising as to constitute a use for which consent is required (Civ. Code § 3344(e) or 3344.1(k); see Johnson v. Harcourt, Brace, Jovanovich, Inc. (1974) 43 Cal. App. 3d 880, 895, 118 Cal. Rptr. 370 (alleged violation of Civ. Code § 3344).

B. Uses for Which Consent Is Required. The uses of a name, voice, signature, photograph, or likeness for which consent is required are uses on or in products, merchandise, or goods, or for purposes of either advertising, selling, or soliciting purchases of products, merchandise, goods, or services (see Civ. Code § 3344(a) or 3344.1(a)).

[Optional] C. Publisher's Decisions on Content and Placement of Advertisements Protected by *First Amendment. The constitutional right guaranteeing freedom of the press protects publishers from liability for decisions as to the content and placement of advertisements (Stewart v. Rolling Stone LLC (2010) 181 Cal. App. 4th 664, 690-691, 105 Cal. Rptr. 3d 98).

[2] Comments

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that defendant should be held liable for invasion of privacy under Civ. Code § 3344 or 3344.1 for unauthorized use of a deceased personality's or plaintiff's name, voice, signature, photograph, or likeness because defendant's use of it or them was not so directly connected with the commercial sponsorship or paid advertising of the commercial medium in which it or they appeared so as to constitute a use for which consent is required [see Civ. Code §§ 3344(e), 3344.1(k)]. For further discussion on who has standing under Civ. Code § 3344.1 to bring action for the unauthorized use of a deceased personality's name, voice, signature, photograph, or likeness, see §§ 184.40 and 184.42.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of lack of direct connection with a commercial purpose. For example, if there is no evidence of sufficient substantiality to show that defendant's use was so directly connected with the commercial sponsorship or paid advertising of the medium in question so as to require consent, these points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities supporting a motion for directed verdict by defendant at the conclusion of evidence [see Frisk v. Merrihew (1974) 42 Cal. App. 3d 319, 325, 116 Cal. Rptr. 781] . These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities set out in § 184.24.

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Use in Commercial Medium Not Directly Connected With Commercial Sponsorship or Paid Advertising

The facts and procedural background of Johnson v. Harcourt, Brace, Jovanovich, Inc. (1974) 43 Cal. App. 3d 880, 118 Cal. Rptr. 370 , are discussed in § 184.30[3][a]. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment of dismissal for defendant entered after the trial court sustained defendant's demurrer. The court held that the reprint in a textbook of a magazine article about plaintiff finding and returning almost a quarter of a million dollars was not so directly connected with the sale of the textbook as to constitute a commercial use prohibited by Civ. Code § 3344(a). The article was not a primary reason for the textbook; nor was it a substantial factor in the students' purchase of the textbook (43 Cal. App. 3d 880, 895) .

[b] Publisher's Decisions on Content and Placement of Advertisements Protected by First Amendment

In Stewart v. Rolling Stone LLC (2010) 181 Cal. App. 4th 664, 105 Cal. Rptr. 3d 98 , plaintiffs were musical groups whose names had been included in a magazine feature spotlighting independent rock bands that was published inside of a double-gatefold page layout the outside pages of which contained a multi-page cigarette advertisement. Plaintiffs sued the magazine for commercial misappropriation under both Civ. Code § 3344 and the common law, arguing that the design of the feature used the names of the rock bands to sell the cigarettes in the advertisement and as such constituted commercial misappropriation of their names to sell a product. Defendant publisher filed a motion to strike the causes of action under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16, the anti-SLAPP statute, but the trial court denied the motion after concluding that a trier of fact could conclude that the feature had been transformed by its layout into a 9-page cigarette advertisement. Defendant appealed.

The Court of Appeal reversed the order denying the motion to strike. The Court of Appeal ordered that the causes of action be struck under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16 on the grounds that the magazine feature at issue was noncommercial speech entitled to full First Amendment protection. The court disagreed with plaintiffs' argument that the integrated gatefold layout effectively constituted a unified advertisement for cigarettes. Noting that the design of the advertisement pages differed significantly from that of the pages with the magazine's feature on independent artists, the court concluded that the feature on independent artists was noncommercial speech despite the location of the advertisement on the outside pages of the gatefold. As noncommercial speech, plaintiffs were required to present evidence of actual malice on the part of defendant to overcome defendant's freedom of speech defense, a burden they failed to meet (181 Cal. App. 4th 664, 683-689) . The court also held that the constitutional right guaranteeing freedom of the press also barred plaintiffs from pursuing their causes of action, as that right traditionally protected publishers from liability for decisions as to the content and placement of advertisements. The court noted that while the gatefold layout may intensify a reader's exposure to an advertisement because the format requires the reader to lift the advertisement page rather than just skip over it mindlessly, the court could find no principled distinction between a page of editorial content that is preceded and followed by full-page advertisements and content that is covered under gate-folded advertisements (181 Cal. App. 4th 664, 690-691) .

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that defendant should be held liable for

invasion of privacy for unauthorized use of a deceased personality's or plaintiff's name, voice, signature, photograph, or likeness on the ground that defendant, an owner or employee of an advertising medium, published or disseminated the material in question without knowledge that it involved the unauthorized use [see Civ. Code §§ 3344(f), 3344.1(l)]. For further discussion on who has standing under Civ. Code § 3344.1 to bring action for the unauthorized use of a deceased personality's name, voice, signature, photograph, or likeness, see §§ 184.40, 184.42.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of defendant's lack of knowledge. For example, if there is no evidence of sufficient substantiality to show that defendant had knowledge of the unauthorized use, these points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities supporting a motion for directed verdict by defendant at the conclusion of evidence [*see Frisk v. In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities set out in § 184.24.

[b] Argument

§ 184.37A

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE PROSECUTORIAL IMMUNITY OF GOVERNMENT CODE SECTION 821.6 PROVIDES DEFENDANT WITH A COMPLETE DEFENSE TO PLAINTIFF'S CAUSE OF ACTION FOR INVASION OF PRIVACY BROUGHT UNDER CIVIL CODE SECTION 1708.8.

Prosecutorial Immunity Provides Complete Defense to Statutory Intrusion Claim. Civ. Code § 1708.8 cannot be used to impose liability on a public entity, or employee acting within the scope of his or her employment with a public entity, when a public employee is immune from liability for injury caused by instituting or prosecuting any judicial or administrative proceeding within the scope of his or her employment pursuant to Gov. Code § 821.6 (Richardson-Tunnell v. Schools Ins. Program for Employees (SIPE) (2007) 157 Cal. App. 4th 1056, 1064-1065, 69 Cal. Rptr. 3d 176).

[2] Comments

These points and authorities may be submitted by a governmental defendant in opposition to a plaintiff's claim for invasion of the privacy rights provided by Civ. Code § 1708.8. The grounds for the opposition are that the California Tort Claims Act provides a specific immunity from liability for prosecutorial conduct.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the defense of governmental immunity. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Immunities

[a] Prosecutorial Immunity Provides Complete Defense to Statutory Intrusion Claim

In Richardson-Tunnell v. Schools Ins. Program for Employees (SIPE) (2007) 157 Cal. App. 4th 1056, 69 Cal. Rptr. 3d 176 , plaintiff was a teacher who suffered an injury at work while employed by a public school district. Plaintiff was married while on disability leave, and her school district and its public entity insurer hired a private investigator to videotape her surreptitiously at her wedding and on her honeymoon, apparently to determine if they had a claim for workers' compensation fraud. Plaintiff sued the school district and the insurer, among others, for invasion of privacy and negligence, including claims for damages under both the constitutional right to privacy provided by the California Constitution and the statutory protection provided by Civ. Code § 1708.8, the anti-paparazzi statute. The trial court granted judgment on the pleadings in favor of the public entity defendants after concluding that the claims against these entities were barred by governmental immunity provided for prosecutorial investigations under Gov. Code § 821.6. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court first held that the conduct alleged by plaintiff was covered by the immunity of Gov. Code § 821.6, a provision of the California Tort Claims Act which generally immunizes a governmental employee, and thus a public entity, for injury caused by instituting or prosecuting any judicial or administrative proceeding within the scope of his or her employment, regardless of malice or lack of probable cause, and such immunity extends to investigatory activities (157 Cal. App. 4th 1056, 1062-1063) . The court then concluded that this specific immunity provided a defense to the more general statutory cause of action for intrusion created by Civ. Code § 1708.8. The court noted that an immunity contained within the Tort Claims Act will override liability based on a statute outside the Tort Claims Act in the absence of an expression of legislative intent to the contrary. The court found no such expression of legislative intent in the language or legislative history of Civ. Code § 1708.8. The court rejected plaintiff's argument that Civ. Code § 1708.8(g) contained a statement of legislative intent to create liability for governmental investigations that are not supported by "articulable suspicion." The court concluded that Civ. Code § 1708.8(g) was merely an exemption provision for certain governmental activities and could not be used to impose liability on a public entity when immunity was otherwise provided under Gov. Code § 821.6 (157 Cal. App. 4th 1056, 1063-1065) . The court went on to hold that this statutory immunity also provided a complete defense to plaintiff's cause of action seeking damages for invasion of privacy under the California Constitution (157 Cal. App. 4th 1056, 1066) .

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT IS NOT LIABLE FOR INVASION OF PRIVACY BASED ON THE UNAUTHORIZED USE OF _____ [name of deceased personality or PLAINTIFF]'S LIKENESS BECAUSE THE CELEBRITY-DEPICTING WORK CONTAINS SIGNIFICANT CREATIVE AND TRANSFORMATIVE ELEMENTS SUCH THAT THE WORK IS PRIMARILY THE DEFENDANT'S OWN EXPRESSION AND NOT MERELY A LIKENESS OF THE CELEBRITY AND IS THEREFORE CONSTITUTIONALLY PROTECTED UNDER THE FIRST AMENDMENT.

Freedom of Expression Protects Use of Celebrity Likeness. The freedom of expression protected by the First Amendment is a defense against a suit brought against an artist who has profited from creating a celebrity likeness, if the likeness contains significant creative and transformative elements such that the work is primarily the artist's own expression and not merely a likeness of the celebrity (Comedy III Prods., Inc. v. Gary Saderup, Inc. (2001) 25 Cal. 4th 387, 405-407, 106 Cal. Rptr. 2d 126, 21 P.3d 797 ; see also Winter v. DC Comics (2003) 30 Cal. 4th 881, 890, 134 Cal. Rptr. 2d 634, 69 P.3d 473).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that the defendant is liable for invasion of privacy for unauthorized use of the likeness of the plaintiff or of a deceased personality. The basis for the opposition is that the freedom of expression guaranteed by the First Amendment protects against a suit brought against an artist who has profited from creating a celebrity likeness, but only if the likeness is sufficiently creative and transformative so that the value of the work stems primarily from the artist's creativity. The defense will not generally be available if the depiction is so literal that the value of the work stems primarily from the fame of the celebrity depicted.

Although the California Supreme Court's opinion in Comedy III Productions, Inc. v. Gary Saderup, Inc., which forms the basis for this form, arose in the context of an action brought under former Civ. Code § 990, the predecessor to current Civ. Code § 3344.1, the Court's analysis would seem applicable regardless of whether the action for unauthorized appropriation of a likeness is brought under the statutory provisions of Civ. Code §§ 3344 or 3344.1 or under the common law.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the point of law stated. Thus, counsel should include facts showing that the likeness is not a literal likeness of the celebrity depicted, but is sufficiently transformative so that the work derives its value from the creative efforts of the artist.

For discussion relating to privacy claims, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 429, Privacy (Matthew Bender).

[d] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contentions supported by the points and authorities set out in see §§ 184.22, 184.23, or 184.24.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Freedom of Expression Protects Use of Celebrity Likeness

In Winter v. DC Comics (2003) 30 Cal. 4th 881, 134 Cal. Rptr. 2d 634, 69 P.3d 473 , the plaintiffs were well-known musicians Johnny and Edgar Winter, who brought suit against a comic book publisher and other defendants for the unflattering depiction of fictional half-human, half-worm characters named "Johnny and Edgar Autumn" in a comic book series set in the old West. The trial court granted summary judgment for the defendants, the court of appeal affirmed, and the California Supreme Court granted review and eventually remanded for reconsideration in light of their opinion in Comedy III Productions v. Gary Saderup, Inc. The court of appeal subsequently held that triable issues of fact existed on the plaintiffs' claim for misappropriation of likenesses under Civ. Code § 3344, and the Supreme Court granted review again.

The Supreme Court reversed the court of appeal. Applying the test articulated in Comedy III Productions, the Court held that the fictionalized depiction of the plaintiffs in the comic book series was entitled to First Amendment protection, despite the fact that the plaintiffs obviously served as the template for the two characters in the story. The Court concluded that because the depictions were distorted for purposes of lampoon, parody, or caricature, sufficient transformative elements were present to warrant constitutional protection (30 Cal. 4th 881, 890) . The Court noted that for purposes of this test, it did not matter whether the work actually qualified as a parody rather than some other form of literary work, so long as the requisite transformative elements were present. In rejecting the plaintiffs' claim that the defendants could be liable because they used the plaintiffs' reputations to increase sales of the comic books, the Court also held that the marketing for the comic book was irrelevant to the application of the test (30 Cal. 4th 881, 891) .

In Comedy III Prods., Inc. v. Gary Saderup, Inc. (2001) 25 Cal. 4th 387, 106 Cal. Rptr. 2d 126, 21 P.3d 797 , the plaintiff was the registered owner of all rights to the former comedy act known as the Three Stooges, all of whose members were deceased. The defendant was an artist who used his own charcoal drawing of the Three Stooges to create and sell lithographic prints and silk-screened images on T-shirts, without the authorization from the plaintiff to do so.

The plaintiff brought suit against the defendant for damages and injunctive relief under former Civ. Code § 990, the statutory predecessor to Civ. Code § 3344.1. The case was submitted to the trial court on stipulated facts, without a jury, and the court found for the plaintiff and entered judgment against the defendant for the amount of the profits on the sales from the lithographs and T-shirts, as well as for attorney's fees and costs. The court also issued a permanent injunction. The defendant appealed, arguing that his conduct did not violate the terms of the statute and that in any event his conduct was protected by the constitutional guaranty of freedom of speech. The court of appeal struck the injunction for being overly broad, but otherwise affirmed. The defendant again appealed.

A unanimous Supreme Court affirmed the awards of damages, fees, and costs. As a preliminary matter, the Court held that under the plain meaning of former Civ. Code § 990(a) [now see Civ. Code § 3344.1(a)], the defendant's use of the likenesses of the Three Stooges on the lithographs and T-shirts were uses "on or in products, merchandise, or goods," and thus fell within the scope of the statute (25 Cal. 4th 387, 395) . The Court then addressed the defendant's claim that enforcement of the judgment would violate his First Amendment freedom of speech and expression. The Court first noted the difficulty in balancing the right of publicity embodied in the statutory provisions with First Amendment concerns regarding preserving "an uninhibited marketplace of ideas" and fostering a "fundamental respect for individual development and self-realization" through the right to self-expression (25 Cal. 4th 387, 396-400) .

After reviewing other judicial attempts to balance the right of publicity with First Amendment concerns, the Court concluded that if artistic expression takes the form of a literal depiction or imitation of a celebrity for commercial gain, directly infringing on the right of publicity without adding significant self-expression by the artist, the interest in protecting the fruits of the work of the celebrity outweighs the right of self-expression of the imitating artist. Conversely, however, if an artist's work contains significant transformative elements--that is, elements that so transform the celebrity's likeness that it has become primarily the defendant's own expression rather than the celebrity's likeness--the work is especially worthy of First Amendment protection and is less likely to interfere with the economic interest protected by the right of publicity (25 Cal. 4th 387, 405-406) . The Court also noted that, in deciding whether a work is sufficiently transformative to justify First Amendment protection, a work that derives its marketability and economic value primarily from the fame of the celebrity depicted, rather than from the creativity, skill, and reputation of the artist who renders the likeness, is less likely to warrant First Amendment protection (25 Cal. 4th 387, 407) .

Applying these principles to the depiction of the Three Stooges at issue in the case before it, the Supreme Court first made clear that the trial court and court of appeal both erred in suggesting that only original works of art, and not reproductions, were entitled to First Amendment protection. However, after examining the defendant's depiction of the Three Stooges, the Court concluded that the likenesses, while undeniably the work of a skilled artist, were so literal as to contain no significant transformative or creative contribution, and the marketability and economic value of the work derived primarily from the fame of the comedians depicted. Therefore, the Court rejected the First Amendment defense in this particular case (25 Cal. 4th 387, 408-411) .

[a] Freedom of Expression Protects Use of Celebrity Likeness

In Kirby v. Sega of America, Inc. (2006) 144 Cal. App. 4th 47, 50 Cal. Rptr. 3d 607 , the court of appeal held that the First Amendment protected a video game maker from a suit for commercial appropriation of likeness brought by a singer with a distinctive stage persona. While the court agreed with plaintiff that there existed a triable issue of fact as to whether the use of a computer-generated character similar to plaintiff's stage persona in a video game constituted a commercial appropriation, the court concluded that there were sufficient transformative elements in the character such that the character was not a mere likeness or literal depiction of plaintiff. The computer-generated character had an extremely tall, slender physique not shared by plaintiff, the character's typical hairstyle and primary costume were different from plaintiff's, the game in which the character appeared was set in the 25th century, unlike plaintiff's "act," and the character's dance moves were noticeably different from those of the plaintiff (144 Cal. App. 4th 47, 59) .

Because the requisite transformative elements were present, the defendant's use of plaintiff's likeness was entitled to First Amendment protection regardless of whether the work possessed any elements of caricature, lampoon, parody, social commentary, or other specific form of expression (144 Cal. App. 4th 47, 60) .

PART II. FORMS

18-184 California Points & Authorities § 184.39

§ 184.39 Opposing Contention That Defendant Invaded Plaintiff's Right to Privacy--Investigation Not Unreasonable

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT SHOULD NOT BE HELD LIABLE FOR INVASION OF PRIVACY BECAUSE DEFENDANT'S INVESTIGATION REGARDING PLAINTIFF WAS NOT UNREASONABLE.

Investigation Not Unreasonable. An official investigation that is not conducted in an unreasonable manner does not constitute an invasion of privacy by physical intrusion (see Solis v. Southern Cal. Rapid Transit Dist. (1980) 105 Cal. App. 3d 382, 392, 164 Cal. Rptr. 343).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that defendant should be held liable for invasion of privacy by physical intrusion because defendant's investigation concerning plaintiff was not done in an unreasonable manner.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of a reasonable investigation, such as in support of a demurrer to plaintiff's complaint. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities set out in § 184.24.

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Investigation Not Unreasonable

Solis v. Southern Cal. Rapid Transit Dist. (1980) 105 Cal. App. 3d 382, 164 Cal. Rptr. 343 , was an action for invasion of privacy and personal injuries arising out of a bus-pedestrian accident. The invasion of privacy allegedly occurred when, immediately after the accident in which plaintiff was hit by defendant's bus in an intersection, two of defendant's investigators went to the hospital and interviewed plaintiff while she was still being treated in the emergency room. A judgment of nonsuit was granted on the invasion of privacy action, and a jury verdict was awarded to defendant on the personal injuries action. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment of nonsuit on the invasion of privacy action, finding that there was nothing unreasonable in the conduct of defendant's investigators. The court noted that the investigators received permission from the doctor and nurse on duty to talk to plaintiff, they did not engage in any deception, they wore uniforms and identified themselves, and their questioning of plaintiff was extremely brief (105 Cal. App. 3d 382, 392) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Investigation Not Unreasonable

In Comeaux v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Co. (9th Cir. 1990) 915 F.2d 1264 , a federal court of appeals affirmed summary judgment in favor of the defendant in an action arising from the defendant's failure to hire the plaintiff based on an unauthorized investigation of the plaintiff's credit history. The court held that, although California recognizes the tort of "unreasonably intrusive" investigation as an invasion of privacy, under the circumstances the defendant, as well as the credit-reporting agency, used methods that were not unreasonably intrusive, even given the fact that the defendant deceived the credit agency with regard to its purpose for the request (915 F.2d 1264, 1275) .

In Kemp v. County of Orange (1989) 211 Cal. App. 3d 1422, 260 Cal. Rptr. 131 , a county employee who filed a workers' compensation claim filed an invasion-of-privacy action against the county, the workers' compensation adjuster, and others, alleging that the private investigator hired by the workers' compensation insurance adjuster violated his right to privacy by failing to disclose the investigator's report to him. The court of appeal affirmed dismissal of the action, holding that the plaintiff could not state a cause of action for public disclosure of private facts under the circumstances; that the investigator had no duty under 15 U.S.C.S. § 1681 (Fair Credit Reporting Act, regarding duties of credit agencies) to disclose the report; and that plaintiff could not have based a cause of action on an unreasonably intrusive investigation, because the investigator's conduct in obtaining information from a credit-reporting agency, interviewing business associates, and writing a report, was reasonable (211 Cal. App. 3d 1422, 1427-1428) .

§ 184.40 Supporting Contention That Plaintiff Lacks Standing--No Invasion of Plaintiff's Own Privacy or Statutory Requirements for Transfer or Descent of Deceased Personality's Rights Not Satisfied [Civ. Code § 3344.1]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF LACKS STANDING TO SUE FOR INVASION OF PRIVACY BECAUSE PLAINTIFF HAS FAILED TO ALLEGE ANY INVASION OF HIS/HER OWN PRIVACY [AND PLAINTIFF'S CAUSE OF ACTION DOES NOT SATISFY THE REQUIREMENTS OF SECTION 3344.1 OF THE CIVIL CODE FOR AN ACTION FOR APPROPRIATION OF THE NAME, VOICE, SIGNATURE, PHOTOGRAPH, OR LIKENESS OF A DECEASED PERSONALITY].

A. Right of Privacy as Generally Personal Right. The right of privacy is generally a purely personal right. It usually cannot be asserted by anyone other than the person whose privacy is invaded (see Hendrickson v. California Newspapers, Inc. (1975) 48 Cal. App. 3d 59, 62, 121 Cal. Rptr. 429).

[Optional] B. Relative Has No Right. There is no relational right of privacy. When plaintiff's only connection to the asserted invasion of privacy is that he or she is a relative of the victim of the invasion and was for this reason unwillingly brought into the limelight, no recovery is allowed (Coverstone v. Davies (1952) 38 Cal. 2d 315, 323-324, 239 P.2d 876 ; Hendrickson v. California Newspapers, Inc. (1975) 48 Cal. App. 3d 59, 62-63, 121 Cal. Rptr. 429).

[Optional] C. Deceased Personality's Rights Transferable or Descendible Only According to Statutory Requirements. The successor in interest of a deceased personality's right to exclusive use of his or her name, voice, signature, photograph, or likeness for advertising or soliciting purposes, or the successor's licensee, may only recover for an unauthorized use if the successor or licensee has previously filed a statutory claim of rights and if the unauthorized use has occurred within 70 years of the decedent's death (see Civ. Code § 3344.1(b)-(h); see also Lugosi v. Universal Pictures (1979) 25 Cal. 3d 813, 820-822, 160 Cal. Rptr. 323, 603 P.2d 425 (right of privacy not descendible prior to 1984 enactment of former Civ. Code § 990 (now see Civ. Code § 3344(d))).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that plaintiff lacks standing to sue for invasion of privacy when plaintiff has failed to allege an invasion of his or her own privacy. Optional Paragraph B may be used to contend that plaintiff lacks standing to sue for invasion of privacy because he or she has been brought into the public light merely because he or she is a relative of the victim of the alleged invasion. Optional Paragraph C may be used to contend that an alleged heir, devisee, or transferee of the rights to the use of a deceased personality's name, voice, signature, photograph, or likeness has not satisfied the minimum statutory requirements for obtaining these rights [see Civ. Code § 3344.1(b)-(h)].

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of lack of standing, such as in support of a demurrer to plaintiff's complaint. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 184.42 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of affirmative defense based on lack of standing, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 429, Privacy (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Right of Privacy as Generally Personal Right

Hendrickson v. California Newspapers, Inc. (1975) 48 Cal. App. 3d 59, 121 Cal. Rptr. 429 , was an action by a decedent's family members against a newspaper for publishing an obituary that revealed the prior criminal conviction of decedent. Defendant's demurrer was sustained and a judgment of dismissal entered. Plaintiffs appealed.

On appeal, the court of appeal affirmed. Citing Coverstone v. Davies (1952) 38 Cal. 2d 315, 239 P.2d 876 [see § 184.40[3][b]], among other cases, the court held that it is well settled that the right of privacy is a purely personal right; it cannot be asserted by anyone other than the person whose privacy has been invaded, that is, plaintiff must plead and prove that his or her own privacy has been invaded (48 Cal. App. 3d 59, 62) .

[b] Relative Has No Right

Coverstone v. Davies (1952) 38 Cal. 2d 315, 239 P.2d 876 , involved an action for invasion of privacy by the parents of one of two teenagers arrested for unlawful assembly during a hot rod race. The teenagers were subsequently acquitted. The parents sued the police, sheriff, and city manager, claiming that the publicity surrounding the arrest caused the parents' friends to shun them and the father's legal practice to close. Nonsuits were granted to defendants, and plaintiffs appealed.

On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, holding that the right of privacy did not encompass the facts asserted by plaintiffs (38 Cal. 2d 315, 322) . The Court refused to extend liability for invasion of privacy to the situation in which plaintiffs' only connection to the asserted invasion of privacy is that they were related to the victim of the invasion and were therefore brought unwillingly into the limelight (38 Cal. 2d 315, 323-324) .

The facts and procedural background of Hendrickson v. California Newspapers, Inc. (1975) 48 Cal. App. 3d 59, 121 Cal. Rptr. 429 , are discussed under 184.40[3][a]. The court of appeal rejected plaintiffs' contention that defendant's newspaper story directly invaded their privacy by mentioning them as survivors of the decedent, whose past criminal record was reported in the story. The court stated that the reference was purely relational and, as such, is not a basis for a cause of action for invasion of privacy (48 Cal. App. 3d 59, 62-63) . The court further held that the decedent's criminal record was not a family secret with respect to which plaintiffs had a right to privacy since it concerned the decedent's and not plaintiffs' own prior activities. Finally, courts have uniformly denied a cause of action for relatives for the invasion of privacy of another family member (48 Cal. App. 3d 59, 63) .

[c] Deceased Personality's Rights Transferable or Descendible Only According to Statutory Requirements

Unlike the other rights included under the rubric "right to privacy," survival of a personality's rights to exclusive use of his or her name, voice, signature, photograph, or likeness after the personality has died is now explicitly provided for by statute [see Civ. Code § 3344.1(a)]. The rights covered by Civ. Code § 3344.1 may be transferred to other persons by the personality holding them, or they may pass according to a statutorily established scheme to the deceased personality's surviving spouse, surviving or nonsurviving children and grandchildren, and, in some cases, surviving parents [see Civ. Code § 3344.1(b)-(d)]. However, this statutory transferability or descendibility of covered rights is subject to certain conditions. Thus, a successor in interest to such rights or a licensee thereof may not recover damages for a use prohibited by Civ. Code § 3344.1 that occurs before the successor in interest or licensee registers a claim of the rights with the Secretary of State pursuant to Civ. Code § 3344.1(f)(2) [Civ. Code § 3344.1(f)(1)]. Morevover, no action shall be brought under Civ. Code § 3344.1 by reason of any use of a deceased personality's covered attributes occurring after the expiration of 70 years from the death of the deceased personality [see Civ. Code § 3344.1(g); see Civ. Code § 3344.1(h) ("deceased personality" defined)].

The facts and procedural background of Lugosi v. Universal Pictures (1979) 25 Cal. 3d 813, 160 Cal. Rptr. 323, 603 P.2d 425 , are discussed in § 184.20[3][a]. In a case decided before the 1984 enactment of former Civ. Code § 990 [now see Civ. Code § 3344(d)], the widow and surviving son of the deceased brought an action for appropriation by defendant of the deceased's likeness. The Supreme Court restated the general rule that a person's right to privacy may not be asserted by a person other than the one whose own privacy has been invaded and held that the right to exploit name and likeness must be exercised, if at all, by the artist during his or her lifetime (25 Cal. 3d 813, 824) .

NOTE:

Because Civ. Code § 3344.1 creates an exception to the general rule, it appears that the general rule as set out in Lugosi still applies to bar an action by a person other than the personality in all cases in which Civ. Code § 3344.1 does not apply.

18-184 California Points & Authorities § 184.41

§ 184.41 Supporting Contention That Plaintiff Lacks Standing--Business Entity Has No Right of Privacy

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF LACKS STANDING TO SUE FOR INVASION OF PRIVACY BECAUSE PLAINTIFF IS A BUSINESS ENTITY AND A BUSINESS ENTITY HAS NO RIGHT OF PRIVACY.

Business Entity Has No Right of Privacy. A business entity does not have a right of privacy and thus cannot sue for an alleged invasion of such a right (Ion Equip. Corp v. Nelson (1980) 110 Cal. App. 3d 868, 878, 168 Cal. Rptr. 361).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that plaintiff lacks standing to sue for invasion of privacy when plaintiff is a business entity, which apparently does not have a right of privacy. However, at least one court of appeal has held that a partnership may sue for an invasion of privacy [H & M Assocs. v. City of El Centro (1980) 109 Cal. App. 3d 399, 409-411, 167 Cal. Rptr. 392 ; see § 184.43[3][a]]. It appears that Ion Equipment Corp. v. Nelson may be distinguished from H & M Associates v. City of El Centro on the ground of whether or not economic damages have been alleged [see § 184.41[3][a]].

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of lack of standing, such as in support of a demurrer to plaintiff's complaint. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should show that plaintiff is a business entity that is suing for a right of privacy, and also that plaintiff has not alleged any economic damages [see discussion in § 184.41[3][a]].

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 184.43 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Business Entity Has No Right of Privacy

Ion Equip. Corp v. Nelson (1980) 110 Cal. App. 3d 868, 168 Cal. Rptr. 361 (1st District) , was an action by a corporation against a former employee for invasion of privacy allegedly caused by the former employee's secret recording of a telephone conversation with another employee of plaintiff. Defendant's demurrer to the privacy cause of action was sustained, a motion for judgment on the pleadings was granted, and a judgment of dismissal was entered. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal held that the trial court properly sustained the demurrer because a corporation does not have a common law right to privacy and therefore cannot bring an action for invasion of privacy. A corporation is a fictitious person and has no "feelings" that can be injured in the sense of the tort of invasion of privacy (110 Cal. App. 3d 868, 878) . That part of the judgment was amended and affirmed.

NOTE:

Another court of appeal has held that a business entity in the form of a partnership could sue for invasion of privacy because it did not seek damages for hurt feelings, but instead for economic loss that resulted from defendant's disclosure of information [H & M Assocs. v. City of El Centro (1980) 109 Cal. App. 3d 399, 409-411, 167 Cal. Rptr. 392 (4th District) ; see § 184.43[3][a]]. It appears that Ion Equipment Corp. may be distinguished from H & M Associates on the ground of whether or not economic damages have been alleged, but until this issue is clearly resolved by the Supreme Court, counsel should use Ion Equipment Corp. with caution.

§ 184.42 Opposing Contention That Plaintiff Lacks Standing--Invasion of Plaintiff's Own Privacy or Statutory Requirements for Transfer or Descent of Deceased Personality's Rights Are Satisfied [Civ. Code § 3344.1]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF HAS STANDING TO SUE FOR INVASION OF PRIVACY BECAUSE _____ [PLAINTIFF HAS ALLEGED AN INVASION OF HIS/HER OWN PRIVACY OR THE RIGHTS TO USE A DECEASED PERSONALITY'S NAME, VOICE, SIGNATURE, PHOTOGRAPH, OR LIKENESS ARE DESCENDIBLE AND TRANSFERABLE, AND THE STATUTORY REQUIREMENTS FOR SUCH USE HAVE BEEN MET].

[EITHER]

Relative Has Standing When Own Right Invaded. If a person's own privacy is invaded along with a relative's privacy, that person may maintain a cause of action for the intrusion on his or her own privacy (Vescovo v. New Way Enters., Ltd. (1976) 60 Cal. App. 3d 582, 588, 130 Cal. Rptr. 86).

[OR]

Right to Use of Deceased Personality's Name, Voice, Signature, Photograph, or Likeness Is Descendible and Transferable. A deceased personality's right to exclusive use of his or her name, voice, signature, photograph, or likeness may descend to designated heirs of the personality or may be transferred by contract, trust, or testamentary documents by the holder of such rights, before or after the death of the deceased personality; persons to whom such rights have descended or been transferred may bring an action to recover damages for unauthorized use of the rights if the statutory requirements for fixing the rights have been satisfied (see Civ. Code § 3344.1(b)-(h)).

[2] Comments

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that plaintiff lacks standing to sue because the privacy rights of a person other than the defendant have been invaded. They set out as alternative contentions the points that plaintiff has standing to sue for invasion of privacy when his or her own privacy has been invaded in addition to a relative's privacy, and that the rights of a deceased personality may pass to specified heirs or be transferred or devised pursuant to Civ. Code § 3344.1.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise or respond to the substantive issue of plaintiff's standing, such as in opposing a demurrer to plaintiff's complaint. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, if counsel is using the first alternative contention, counsel should include a discussion showing that plaintiff's own privacy was invaded. If counsel is using the second alternative contention, counsel should include a discussion showing that plaintiff is a transferee, devisee, or proper heir of the deceased person, and that he or she has satisfied the statutory requirements under Civ. Code § 3344.1 for fixing these rights [see § 184.42[3][b]].

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities set out in § 184.40.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of affirmative defense based on lack of standing, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 429, Privacy (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Relative Has Standing When Own Right Invaded

Vescovo v. New Way Enters., Ltd. (1976) 60 Cal. App. 3d 582, 130 Cal. Rptr. 86 , is discussed in § 184.25[3][a].

[b] Right to Use of Deceased Personality's Name, Voice, Signature, Photograph, or Likeness Is Descendible and Transferable

Any person who uses a deceased personality's name, voice, signature, photograph, or likeness, in any manner, on or in products, merchandise, or goods, or for purposes of advertising, selling, or soliciting purchases of products, merchandise, goods, or services without prior consent from the successors in interest or their licensees of the relevant rights of the deceased person shall be liable for damages, disgorgement of profits, and other specified penalties and fees [see Civ. Code § 3344.1(a)(1)]. The rights recognized under Civ. Code § 3344.1 are property rights, freely transferable, in whole or in part, by contract or by means of trust or testamentary documents [see Civ. Code § 3344.1(b)]. These rights are deemed to have existed at the time of death of any deceased personality who died prior to January 1, 1985, and except as noted in Civ. Code § 3344.1(o), described below, vest in the persons entitled to these property rights under the testamentary instrument of the deceased personality effective as of the date of death [Civ. Code § 3344.1(b)]. In the absence of an express transfer in a testamentary instrument of the deceased personality's rights, a provision in the testamentary instrument that provides for the disposition of the residue of the deceased personality's assets is effective to transfer the rights recognized under Civ. Code § 3344.1 in accordance with the terms of that provision. The rights established by this section are also freely transferable or descendible by contract, trust, or other testamentary instrument by any subsequent owner of the deceased personality's rights [Civ. Code § 3344.1(b)]. Civ. Code § 3344.1 does not affect any contract entered into by a deceased personality during his or her lifetime by which the deceased assigned the rights, in whole or in part, to use his or her name, voice, signature, photograph or likeness [Civ. Code § 3344.1(b)].

The consent required by Civ. Code § 3344.1 shall be exercisable by the person or person to whom such right of consent (or portion thereof) has been transferred in accordance with Civ. Code § 3344.1(b), or if no such transfer has occurred, then by the person or persons to whom such right of consent (or portion thereof) has passed in accordance with Civ. Code § 3344.1(d) [Civ. Code § 3344.1(c)]. Subject to Civ. Code § 3344.1(b) and (c), after the death of any person, the rights under Civ. Code § 3344.1 shall belong to the following person or persons and be exercised on behalf of and for the benefit of all of those persons, by those persons who, in aggregate, are entitled to more than a one-half interest in such rights [Civ. Code § 3344.1(d)(1)-(3)]:

- The entire interest in those rights belong to the surviving spouse of the deceased personality unless there are any surviving children or grandchildren of the deceased personality, in which case one half of the entire interest in those rights belong to the surviving spouse;

- The entire interest in those rights belong to the surviving children of any dead child of the deceased personality unless the deceased personality has a surviving spouse, in which case the ownership of a one-half interest in rights is divided among the surviving children and grandchildren; and

- If there is no surviving spouse, and no surviving grandchildren, then the entire interest in those rights belong to the surviving parent or parents of the deceased personality.

The rights of the deceased personality's children and grandchildren are in all cases divided among them and exercisable in the manner provided in Prob. Code § 240 according to the number of the decedent's children represented. The share of the children of a dead child of a deceased personality can be exercised only by the action of a majority of them [Civ. Code § 3344.1(d)(4)].

If an action was taken prior to May 1, 2007, to exercise rights recognized under Civ. Code § 3344.1 relating to a deceased personality who died prior to January 1, 1985, by a person who acquired the rights through the statutory provisions of Civ. Code § 3344.1(d), described above, other than a person who was disinherited by the deceased personality in a testamentary instrument, and the exercise of those rights was not challenged successfully in a court action by a person who acquired the rights through a testamentary transfer, that exercise of rights by the person who acquired the rights through the statutory provisions is unaffected by the testamentary transfer. In such a case, the rights that would otherwise vest in one or more persons through a testamentary transfer vest solely in the person or persons described in Civ. Code § 3344.1(d), other than a person disinherited by the deceased personality in a testamentary instrument, for all future purposes [Civ. Code § 3344.1(o)].

For a discussion of some of the conditions limiting the rights of successors in interest to hold and enforce a deceased personality's name and likeness rights, see § 184.40[3][c].

§ 184.43 Opposing Contention That Plaintiff Lacks Standing--Business Entity Suffering Economic Damages Has Action for Invasion of Privacy

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF HAS STANDING TO SUE FOR INVASION OF PRIVACY BECAUSE A BUSINESS ENTITY SUFFERING ECONOMIC DAMAGES MAY BRING AN ACTION FOR INVASION OF PRIVACY.

Business Entity Suffering Economic Damages May Bring Action for Invasion of Privacy. A business entity that has suffered economic damages may sue for an invasion of privacy (see H & M Assocs. v. City of El Centro (1980) 109 Cal. App. 3d 399, 409-411, 167 Cal. Rptr. 392).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that plaintiff lacks standing to sue for invasion of privacy when plaintiff is a business entity that has suffered economic damages as a result of an invasion of privacy. However, there appears to be some conflict in the cases as to whether a business entity may sue for invasion of privacy [see Ion Equip. Corp v. Nelson (1980) 110 Cal. App. 3d 868, 878, 168 Cal. Rptr. 361 ; see also § 184.43[3][a]].

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of plaintiff's standing, for example, in opposition to a demurrer to plaintiff's complaint. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities set out in § 184.41.

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Business Entity Suffering Economic Damages May Bring Action for Invasion of Privacy

H & M Assocs. v. City of El Centro (1980) 109 Cal. App. 3d 399, 167 Cal. Rptr. 392 (4th District) , was an action for invasion of privacy by defendants' action of terminating water service to an apartment complex owned by plaintiff, a partnership, divulging this information to plaintiff's mortgagees and the news media, and stating that the service would not be reinstated. As a result, plaintiff lost its tenants and the mortgages were ultimately foreclosed. Defendants' demurrer was sustained and a judgment of dismissal entered. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, finding that a partnership may state a cause of action for invasion of privacy (109 Cal. App. 3d 399, 409-410) . The court noted that plaintiff was not seeking damages for "hurt feelings," but rather was seeking damages for economic loss, that is, the real property that was foreclosed (109 Cal. App. 3d 399, 410) .

NOTE:

Another court of appeal has held that a business entity in the form of a corporation that did not suffer an economic loss may not sue for common law invasion of privacy. In that case, the court noted that a corporation has no "feelings" that can be injured in the sense of the tort of invasion of privacy [Ion Equip. Corp v. Nelson (1980) 110 Cal. App. 3d 868, 878, 168 Cal. Rptr. 361 (1st District) ; see § 184.41[3][a]].

18-184 California Points & Authorities § 184.44

§ 184.44 Opposing Contention That Plaintiff May Seek Multiple Awards of Statutory Damages for Single Cause of Action Under Civ. Code § 3344

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

IN THE ABSENCE OF PROOF OF A GREATER AMOUNT OF ACTUAL DAMAGES, PLAINTIFF'S RECOVERY OF STATUTORY DAMAGES UNDER CIVIL CODE SECTION 3344 IS LIMITED TO A SINGLE PAYMENT OF $750 BECAUSE DEFENDANT'S ACTS OF APPROPRIATION GAVE RISE TO ONLY A SINGLE CAUSE OF ACTION.

Recovery of Statutory Damages Limited to Single Award of $750. If defendant has committed multiple related acts of appropriation, but these acts are taken with a common purpose or as part of a common plan and give rise to only a single cause of action, then plaintiff's compensatory damages are limited to a single payment of $750 unless plaintiff can prove actual damages of a greater amount (Miller v. Collectors Universe, Inc. (2008) 159 Cal. App. 4th 988, 1008, 72 Cal. Rptr. 3d 194).

[2] Comments

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a plaintiff may be awarded $750 under Civ. Code § 3344 for each separate act of appropriation by the defendant of plaintiff's name, voice, signature, photograph, or likeness. The basis for the opposition is that the defendant's acts were taken with a common purpose or as part of a common plan and give rise to only a single cause of action, thus justifying only a single award of statutory damages.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which the issue of defendant's liability for statutory damages arises, or combined with other forms in this chapter, as appropriate. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Recovery of Statutory Damages Limited to Single Award of $750

In Miller v. Collectors Universe, Inc. (2008) 159 Cal. App. 4th 988, 72 Cal. Rptr. 3d 194 , defendant was in the business of authenticating celebrity autographs and appropriated the name of plaintiff, a former employee, on 14,060 separate certificates of authenticity issued in the months immediately after plaintiff's employment with the company ended. All of the certificates were printed at the same time and were identical except for their serial numbers, although they were issued to customers separately over the course of several months. Plaintiff's name was listed on the certificates as a member of defendant's panel of authentication experts, although he did not consent to the use of his name on the certificates. Plaintiff brought suit against defendant for appropriation under Civ. Code § 3344. The trial court initially agreed with plaintiff that he could seek statutory damages of $750 for each certificate and, satisfied with the right to seek $750 for each offending certificate, plaintiff chose not to attempt to prove any actual damages. The jury found for plaintiff. The trial court, realizing the amount of statutory damages would be over $10,000,000 if it's initial ruling was upheld, tentatively decided to declare a mistrial on the amount of statutory damages. The parties stipulated to an immediate judgment of $0 in order to facilitate an appeal.

The court of appeal held that, in the absence of proof of actual damages, plaintiff could recover only a single payment of $750 under the statutory damages provision, rather than $750 for each certificate. The court concluded that plaintiff's injury, which was the worry and uncertainty regarding his reputation and his potential liability for improperly authenticated items, occurred when defendant knowingly issued the first certificate without plaintiff's consent. While the number of certificates issued might be relevant to plaintiff's actual damages, if any, and to punitive damages, the court held that plaintiff had only one cause of action for the certificates and was limited to a single payment of $750 as statutory damages (159 Cal. App. 4th 988, 1008) . The court reversed, instructing the trial court to allow plaintiff to elect either to accept an award of $14,060 in disgorged profits together with $750 in statutory penalty, or to retry the entire complaint, including any causes of action or damage claims plaintiff abandoned when the trial court initially ruled in his favor on the issue of statutory damages (159 Cal. App. 4th 988, 1008-1009).

18-184 California Points & Authorities § 184.45

§ 184.45 Supporting Contention That Single-Publication Rule Applies to Cause of Action for Appropriation of Likeness

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE SINGLE-PUBLICATION RULE, AS CODIFIED IN CIVIL CODE SECTION 3425.3, APPLIES TO A CAUSE OF ACTION FOR THE UNAUTHORIZED COMMERCIAL USE OF LIKENESS.

Single-Publication Rule Applicable to Appropriation Cause of Action. The single-publication rule developed in the context of defamation actions and as codified in Civ. Code § 3425.3 applies to a cause of action for unauthorized commercial use of likeness (Christoff v. Nestle USA, Inc..(2009) 47 Cal. 4th 468, 476, 97 Cal. Rptr. 3d 798, 213 P.3d 132).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted by a defendant charged with the unauthorized commercial appropriation of likeness to argue that the cause of action is governed by the single-publication rule. This point is most likely to be relevant when asserting that the cause of action accrued earlier than contended by plaintiff and is barred by the statute of limitations. The single-publication rule is asserted most frequently in defamation actions, and points and authorities discussing the rule in that context are contained in Ch. 142, Libel and Slander (Defamation).

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Single-Publication Rule Applicable to Appropriation Cause of Action

In Christoff v. Nestle USA, Inc. (2009) 47 Cal. 4th 468, 97 Cal. Rptr. 3d 798, 213 P.3d 132 , plaintiff was a professional model who in 1986 was paid $250 to pose for a photograph that might be used in Canada on a label for bricks of coffee. Under his contract, in the event the photograph was actually used, plaintiff was to receive $2,000 plus an agency commission. Although plaintiff was never paid under his contract, the photograph was used on the label in Canada. In addition, beginning in 1997 the photograph was used in the United States and internationally without any authorization from plaintiff on labels for instant coffee and related advertisements. Plaintiff, however, did not learn of this unauthorized use until 2002 when he first saw his image on the instant coffee label. Plaintiff filed suit in 2003 against the U.S. corporation, alleging causes of action for unauthorized commercial use of his likeness in violation of Civ. Code § 3344, common-law appropriation of likeness, quantum meruit, and unjust enrichment. The trial court denied defendant's motion for summary judgment based on the statute of limitations after ruling that the single-publication rule did not apply to actions that were not based on defamation. Under that rule, as codified in Civ. Code § 3425.3, a person has only one cause of action for damages founded upon "any single publication or exhibition or utterance, such as any one issue of a newspaper or book or magazine or any one presentation to an audience or any one broadcast over radio or television or any one exhibition of a motion picture." Thereafter, the court also instructed the jury that the delayed-discovery rule could be applied to determine the timeliness of plaintiff's action if he proved that prior to discovery of the use of his picture, he did not previously suspect or have reason to suspect that his image was being so used. The jury found in favor of plaintiff and awarded over $15,000,000 in damages. Defendant appealed, and the court of appeal reversed and remanded, concluding that the single-publication rule applied to causes of action for appropriation and that whether the discovery rule delayed accrual of plaintiff's cause of action depended on whether defendant hindered plaintiff's discovery of the unauthorized use of his photograph. Another appeal followed.

The California Supreme Court reversed the decision of the court of appeal in part. The Supreme Court agreed that the single-publication rule, although developed in the context of defamation actions, applies as codified in Civ. Code § 3425.3 to a cause of action for unauthorized commercial use of one's likeness, as by its own language the statute expressly applied to any action "for libel or slander or invasion of privacy or any other tort founded on any single publication" (47 Cal. 4th 468, 476) . However, because a cause of action governed by the single-publication rule accrues from the date of the first general distribution of the publication to the public, thus triggering the statute of limitations with respect to that publication, a court must first identify what constitutes a single integrated publication (47 Cal. 4th 468, 477) . The Court concluded that it could not determine these issues for the case before it under the current factual record, as the trial court's ruling that the single-publication rule did not apply prevented the parties from adequately developing the factual record on the nature and extent of the defendant's publications using plaintiff's likeness (47 Cal. 4th 468, 482) . In addition, consistent with the application of the single-publication rule in actions for libel, the Court held that the delayed-discovery rule does not apply to publications widely disseminated to the general public, such as those in books, magazines, and newspapers (47 Cal. 4th 468, 482-483) .

CHAPTER 185 PRIVACY: COLLECTION, DISSEMINATION, AND INSPECTION OF INFORMATION
PART I. INTRODUCTION

§ 185.01 Scope of Chapter

This chapter contains forms for use in actions by private individuals against federal agencies for violations of the Privacy Act of 1974 (5 U.S.C.S. § 552a) or against state and local agencies for violations of the Information Practices Act of 1977 (Civ. Code §§ 1798-1798.78), one form for use by an agency official in defending actions for violation of the Privacy Act, and one form for use by a private entity in defending a claim brought under the Information Practices Act. This part does not contain forms for use by agencies in actions for violations of the Privacy Act of 1974 or the Information Practices Act of 1977. Included in this chapter are a general form for use in actions against state and local agencies supporting the contention that federal case law is persuasive authority in interpreting the Information Practices Act of 1977 [see § 185.20] and a general form for use in actions against all agencies setting out the definitions of the Privacy Act of 1974 and Information Practices Act of 1977 relating to the coverage of those acts [see § 185.21]. The supporting forms in this chapter include forms supporting the contention that a government agency improperly refused a person who is the subject of information contained in the agency's records access to such records [see §§ 185.22, 185.23], forms supporting the contention that the agency improperly disclosed information concerning an individual from its records [see §§ 185.24 -185.28], forms supporting the contention that an agency's maintenance of its records violated requirements of the Privacy Act of 1974 or Information Practices Act of 1977 [see §§ 185.31, 185.32], and a form supporting the contention that an individual is entitled to either amendment of inaccurate information concerning him or her, or inclusion in the record of a statement of disagreement with the information [see § 185.33]. Also included are forms supporting the contention that a federal agency employee or officer may not be held liable in his or her individual capacity for violation of the Privacy Act of 1974 [see § 185.34], supporting the contention that an action cannot be brought under the Information Practices Act against a private medical facility that provides Medi-Cal services [see § 185.35], and supporting the contention that customer records containing personal information were improperly disposed of in violation of Civ. Code § 1798.81 [see § 185.36].

§ 185.02 Governing Statutes

The rights of an individual on whom a federal agency maintains recorded information are set out in Privacy Act of 1974 (hereinafter Privacy Act) (5 U.S.C.S. § 552a). An analogous state statutory scheme covering state and local agencies is set out in the Information Practices Act of 1977 (hereinafter, Information Practices Act) (Civ. Code §§ 1798-1798.78).

CHAPTER 185 PRIVACY: COLLECTION, DISSEMINATION, AND INSPECTION OF INFORMATION
PART I. INTRODUCTION

18-185 California Points & Authorities § 185.03

§ 185.03 Use of Chapter

The forms in this chapter may be adapted for use in federal actions involving federal agencies or, when state law provides a cause of action or defense, use in state actions involving state or local agencies. Each substantive form sets out federal and state statutory law in alternative format. The substantive case law in this chapter, however, consists entirely of federal case law interpreting federal statutes. § 185.20 sets out the points that federal case law is persuasive authority in interpreting state statutes when the state statutes are modeled on and comparable to federal statutes being interpreted by the federal cases and that the Information Practices Act of 1977 (Civ. Code §§ 1798-1798.78) is modeled on the Privacy Act of 1974 (5 U.S.C.S. § 552a). This form is designed for use in adapting the forms in this chapter to state law actions. Thus, in a federal action, counsel should simply use those paragraphs in each form used which set out pertinent federal statutory law together with those paragraphs which set out pertinent federal case law interpreting the federal statutes cited. In a state action, counsel should use those paragraphs setting out pertinent state statutory provisions, together with paragraphs setting out federal case law which interprets comparable federal provisions and with the points and authorities in § 185.20. The paragraphs setting out federal case law should contain additional language comparing the state and federal statutory provisions.

§ 185.21 sets out general definitions contained in the Privacy Act of 1974 and Information Practices Act of 1977 which are pertinent to all of the remaining forms in the part. Thus, all of the supporting forms following § 185.21 should be used in combination with § 185.21. The remaining substantive forms may be divided into forms setting out basic points and authorities regarding violations of the Privacy Act of 1974 or Information Practices Act of 1977 and forms setting out particular points regarding these basic points and authorities. The forms setting out basic points and authorities regarding violations of the Privacy Act of 1974 or Information Practices Act of 1977 may be used together with only § 185.21, and with § 185.20 if the action is against a state or local agency, or they may be used in combination with one or more of the specific forms. Specific forms should always be used in combination with a form setting out basic points and authorities as well as § 185.22 and with § 185.20 if the action is against a state or local agency.

[1] FORM Supporting Contention That Federal Case Law Construing Privacy Act of 1974 [5 U.S.C.S. § 552a] Is Persuasive in State Action Under Information Practices Act of 1977 [Civ. Code §§ 1798-1798.78]

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

FEDERAL CASE LAW INTERPRETING THE PRIVACY ACT OF 1974 IS PERSUASIVE IN A STATE ACTION AS TO INTERPRETATION OF COMPARABLE PROVISIONS OF CALIFORNIA'S INFORMATION PRACTICES ACT OF 1977.

Federal Case Law Is Persuasive in Interpreting Comparable State Provisions. Federal case law interpreting federal statutory provisions is unusually persuasive in a state action involving state statutory provisions whose language is identical, or practically identical, or comparable to the federal provisions read by the federal cases (Scripps Mem'l Hosp. v. California Employment Comm'n (1944) 24 Cal. 2d 669, 677, 151 P.2d 109 ; see American Civil Liberties Union Found. v. Deukmejian (1982) 32 Cal. 3d 440, 447, 186 Cal. Rptr. 235, 651 P.2d 822).

[Add points and authorities supporting the particular contention being made. See §§ 185.21 -185.34].

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that federal case law may be relied on as persuasive authority in a state action based on state statutory provisions when the state statutory provisions are identical or nearly identical to the federal provisions relied on by the federal cases cited. The state statutory provisions governing state and local records containing information concerning particular persons are set out in the Information Practices Act (Civ. Code §§ 1798-1798.78), which is largely identical to the Privacy Act. Civil remedies against a state or local agency for violation of the Information Practices Act are set out in Civ. Code §§ 1798.45-1798.49. Specific substantive statutory provisions of the Information Practices Act are discussed in §§ 185.21 -185.31.

This form may be used together with one or more of the points and authorities in this chapter when counsel wishes to support a contention under California's Information Practices Act, which is set out in (Civ. Code §§ 1798-1798.78), by relying on federal case law which interprets identical provisions of the Federal Privacy Act set out in 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a. In using federal cases to interpret state statutory provisions, counsel should cite the state provisions to be interpreted together with the comparable federal provisions and the case interpreting the federal provisions.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. The argument should note that the Information Practices Act was modeled after the Privacy Act [see Note, California's Privacy Act: Controlling Government's Use of Information?, 32 Stan. L. Rev. 1001 (1980)]. Counsel should also show that the particular provisions of the Information Practices Act to be applied in the case are identical or similar to the Privacy Act provisions applied by the federal cases on which counsel is relying [see Wildlife Alive v. Chickering (1976) 18 Cal. 3d 190, 202, 132 Cal. Rptr. 377, 553 P.2d 537 (federal and state statutory law must be parallel)].

[b] State Remedies Provisions More Comprehensive Than Federal

Unlike the damages provisions for violations of the Privacy Act set out in 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(g)(4), the analogous provisions of the Information Practices Act do not require that plaintiff show willful and intentional conduct by defendant agency. Furthermore, the Information Practices Act explicitly provides that recoverable damages may include compensation for mental suffering [see Civ. Code § 1798.48 (damages for information practice violations)].

Injunctive relief is apparently available for all violations of the Information Practices Act, and is not limited to refusal to disclose or amend, as is the case under the Privacy Act [see Civ. Code § 1798.47 (injunctive relief under Information Practices Act); see also 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(g) (remedies under Privacy Act)].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Federal Case Law Is Persuasive in Interpreting Identical State Provisions

Scripps Mem'l Hosp. v. California Employment Comm'n (1944) 24 Cal. 2d 669, 677, 151 P.2d 109 , was an action to recover unemployment insurance contributions paid under protest. Plaintiff hospital claimed exemption from the obligation to make such contributions as a charitable institution pursuant to former Stats. 1935, ch 352 § 7(g) (now see Stats. 1953, ch. 308, § 634; "employment" for Unemployment Insurance Code not including employment with charitable institution). The trial court ruled in favor of plaintiff and defendant appealed.

The Supreme Court upheld the trial court's ruling. In interpreting the applicable state statute, the Court noted that the language of the statute was practically identical with comparable statutes in the federal act governing unemployment, which had been adopted from the same proposed unified unemployment system that had been the basis of the state act, and was precisely similar to language in other federal statutes that had been in effect for many years. The Court stated that for this reason the interpretation put on that language by federal and other courts was unusually persuasive in the case before it (24 Cal. 2d 669, 677) . The Court then cited a United States Supreme Court case and several cases from other states interpreting statutory language that was identical or similar to the California provisions in question as support for its own interpretation of the California statutory provisions (24 Cal. 2d 669, 677-678) .

In American Civil Liberties Union Found. v. Deukmejian (1982) 32 Cal. 3d 440, 186 Cal. Rptr. 235, 651 P.2d 822 , plaintiff civil liberties organization brought an action against defendant state agency under California's Public Records Act (Gov. Code §§ 6250-6265) after defendant refused to disclose certain information to plaintiff. Defendant agency argued that the information sought by plaintiff was exempt from the public disclosure requirement of the Public Records Act under the exemption for law enforcement intelligence set out in Gov. Code § 6254(f). The trial court held that the information should be disclosed and defendant appealed.

The Supreme Court affirmed in part and reversed in part. In analyzing the applicability of the disclosure exemption cited by defendants, the court noted that California's Public Records Act was modeled on the federal Freedom of Information Act (5 U.S.C.S. § 552), and stated that the judicial construction and legislative history of the federal act served to illuminate the interpretation of its California counterpart. The Court then proceeded to cite federal cases that had interpreted an exemption set out the Freedom of Information Act that was analogous to the Public Records Act exemption at issue in the case, in a manner that supported the interpretation of the exemption urged by defendants. The Court noted, however, that Congress had replied to these cases by enacting an amendment to the Freedom of Information Act that limited the scope of the exemption (32 Cal. 3d 440, 448-449) . The Court stated that since the California law was based on the original federal Act, the Court may use the amendments to guide construction of the California law (32 Cal. 3d 440, 449) . On the basis of this analysis, the Court rejected defendants' contention that the exemption was applicable to the information sought by plaintiff. The Court stated that accepting defendants' argument would in essence resurrect the federal judicial doctrine that Congress had repudiated, and that was never part of California law (32 Cal. 3d 440, 449) .

§ 185.21 Supporting Contention That Government Agency Violated Privacy Act of 1974 [5 U.S.C.S. § 552a] or Information Practices Act of 1977 [Civ. Code §§ 1798-1798.78]--Coverage of Act

[1] FORM Supporting Contention That Government Agency Violated Privacy Act of 1974 [5 U.S.C.S. § 552a] or Information Practices Act of 1977 [Civ. Code §§ 1798-1798.78]--Coverage of Act

THE PLAINTIFF, THE DEFENDANT AGENCY, AND THE INFORMATION AND RECORDS IN ISSUE ARE COVERED BY _____ [THE PRIVACY ACT OF 1974 (5 U.S.C.S. § 552a) or THE INFORMATION PRACTICES ACT OF 1977 (CIV. CODE §§ 1798-1798.78)]

[EITHER, if action is against federal agency]

A. Agencies Covered by Privacy Act of 1974. The term "agency" for purposes of the Privacy Act of 1974 (5 U.S.C.S. § 552a) means each authority of the government of the United States, whether or not it is subject to review by another agency, including any executive department, military department, government corporation, government controlled corporation, or other establishment in the executive branch of the government (including the Executive Office of the President), or any independent regulatory agency (see 5 U.S.C.S. §§ 551(1), 552(f), 552a(a)(1)).

B. Records Covered by Privacy Act of 1974. The term "record," for purposes of the Privacy Act of 1974 (5 U.S.C.S. § 552a), means any item, collection, or grouping of information about an individual that is maintained by an agency, including, but not limited to, the individual's education, financial transactions, medical history, and criminal or employment history and that contains the individual's name or the identifying number, symbol, or other identifying particular assigned to the individual, such as a finger or voice print, or photograph. The term "system of records," for purposes of the Privacy Act of 1974 (5 U.S.C.S. § 552a) means a group of any records under the control of any agency from which information is retrieved by the name of the individual or by some identifying particular assigned to the individual (5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(a)(4), (5)).

C. Individuals Covered by Privacy Act of 1974. An "individual" for purposes of the Privacy Act of 1974 (5 U.S.C.S. § 552a) is a citizen of the United States or an alien lawfully admitted for permanent residence (5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(a)(2)).

[OR, if action is against state or local agency]

A. Agencies Covered by Information Practices Act of 1977. The term "agency" for purposes of the Information Practices Act of 1977 means every state office, officer, department, division, bureau, board, commission, or other state agency, with specified exceptions (Civ. Code § 1798.3(b)).

B. Records Covered by Information Practices Act of 1977. The term "record" for purposes of the Information Practices Act of 1977 means any file or grouping of information about an individual that is maintained by an agency by reference to an identifying particular such as the individual's name, photograph, finger or voice print, or a number or symbol assigned to the individual. The term "system of records" for purposes of the Information Practices Act of 1977 means one or more records, which pertain to one or more individuals, which is maintained by any agency, from which information is retrieved by the name of an individual or by some identifying number, symbol or other identifying particular assigned to the individual (Civ. Code § 1798.3(g), (h)).

C. Individuals Covered by Information Practices Act of 1977. The term "individual" for purposes of the Information Practices Act of 1977 means a natural person (Civ. Code § 1798.3(d)).

[CONTINUE]

[Optional] D. Business as Well as Personal Information Covered. The Privacy Act of 1974 (5 U.S.C.S. § 552a) applies to all information about an individual and does not distinguish between personal information about the individual and information about the individual's business affairs (Florida Med. Ass'n v. Department of Health, Educ. & Welfare (M.D. Fla. 1979) 479 F. Supp. 1291, 1310 , vacated and remanded on other grounds, Florida Med. Ass'n v. Dept. of Health, Educ. & Welfare (5th Cir. 1979) 601 F.2d 199). The Information Practice Act's definition of "individual" is comparable on this point to the Privacy Act's definition of "individual," on which Florida Medical Association is based (compare Civ. Code § 1798.3(d) with 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(a)(2)).

[Optional] E. Videotape Recording May Be a Record. A videotape recording maintained by a government agency constitutes a record under 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(a)(4) if it contains a means of identifying an individual by picture or voice (see Albright v. United States (D.C. Cir. 1980) 631 F.2d 915, 920) . The Information Practice Act's definition of "record" includes any file or grouping of information about an individual that is maintained by an agency by reference to an identifying particular such as, among others, the individual's photograph or voice print (Civ. Code § 1798.3(g)).

[Add additional points and authorities showing a particular violation or violations of the Privacy Act or Information Practices Act. See §§ 185.22 -185.33.]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that plaintiff, defendant agency, and the information being maintained by defendant agency are covered by the Privacy Act (5 U.S.C.S. § 552a), if the action is a federal action against a federal agency, or by the Information Practices Act (Civ. Code §§ 1798-1798.78), if the action is a state action against a state or local agency. This form sets out the definitions, for purposes of the two acts, of the terms "agency" [see 5 U.S.C.S. §§ 551(1), 552(f) and 552a(a)(1) (Privacy Act); Civ. Code § 1798.3(b) (Information Practices Act)], "record" and "system of records" [see 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(a)(4) (Privacy Act); Civ. Code § 1798.3(g), (h) (Information Practices Act)], and "individual [see 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(a)(2) (Privacy Act); Civ. Code § 1798.3(d) (Information Practices Act)]. Counsel should use the first alternative Paragraphs A through C in an action against federal agencies and use the second alternative Paragraphs A through C in an action against a state or local agency. This form also sets out in optional paragraphs the points that the Privacy Act covers business as well as personal information, and that the definition of the term "record" may include a video tape recording. If these paragraphs are used in a state action, they should include the optional language comparing or setting out the pertinent state and federal provisions.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that plaintiff, defendant, and the information in question are covered by the Privacy Act or Information Practices Act. This form should be combined with additional points and authorities showing a particular violation by defendant of the Privacy Act or the Information Practices Act [see §§ 185.22 -185.32]. If the form is used in connection with a state action, introductory points and authorities showing that federal case law is persuasive authority in interpreting state statutory provisions that are parallel to federal statutory provisions should be included [see § 185.20].

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in § 185.34 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a discussion and forms of pleading to be used in actions concerning government records, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 429, Privacy (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Agencies Covered by Privacy Act of 1974

The term "agency" for purposes of 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a does not include the Congress, the courts of the United States, the governments of the territories or possessions of the United States, agencies composed of representatives of the parties or of representatives of organizations of the parties to the disputes determined by them, courts martial and military commissions, military authority exercised in the field in time of war or in occupied territory, or specific function set out in 5 U.S.C.S. § 551(1)(H) [see 5 U.S.C.S. §§ 551(1) (defining agency), 552(b), 552a(a)(1) (incorporating definition of agency into 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a)].

[b] Records Covered by Privacy Act of 1974

The various individual requirements of the Privacy Act (5 U.S.C.S. § 552a) all refer to government "records" or information contained in government "records," as that term is defined in 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(a)(4) [see 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a]. Information that is not contained in records is not covered by the Privacy Act [see Federal Deposit Ins. Corp. v.

Dye (5th Cir. 1981) 642 F.2d 833, 836 (disparaging remarks by agency officer are not records)]. In addition, most of the provisions of the Privacy Act are limited in their coverage to records contained in "systems of records," as that phrase is defined in 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(a)(5). Information that is not retrievable by the name or other identifying feature of the individual subject of the information is not considered to be maintained in a system of records as defined by the Privacy Act [see 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(a)(5)]. For example, 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a does not apply to a file relating to an agency's regional activities when the information is not keyed to the name or identifier of any particular agency employee or to a correspondence file that is maintained only chronologically [Savarese v. United States Dep't of Health (N.D. Ga. 1979) 479 F. Supp. 304, 307 , aff'd, (5th Cir. 1980) 620 F.2d 298 ; see 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(a)(5)].

NOTE:

In actions brought against California agencies, the Information Practices Act of 1977, Civ. Code § 1798 et seq., applies only to institutional records that are preserved in the ordinary course of business by a single, central custodian. For example, in the university context, registration forms and transcripts would be examples of such records, while student exams not stored or maintained by the university in a central location would not [Moghadam v. Regents of University of California (2008) 169 Cal. App. 4th 466, 480-483, 86 Cal. Rptr. 3d 739 (noting also that exams did not contain personal information that identified or described individual author)].

[c] Individuals Covered by Privacy Act of 1974

The individual provisions of the Privacy Act (5 U.S.C.S. § 552a) generally speak in terms of the rights of "individuals," as defined in 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(a)(2). Entities that are not individuals within the statutory definition are not covered by the Privacy Act [St. Michael's Convalescent Hospital v. State of Cal. (9th Cir. 1981) 643 F.2d 1369, 1373] . Several types of persons or entities have been held not to be covered by the Privacy Act because they did not fall into the definition of "individual." Thus, for instance, foreign nationals and nonresident aliens are excluded from coverage of the Privacy Act (5 U.S.C.S. § 552a), since 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(a)(2) defines "individual" to mean only a citizen of the United States or an alien lawfully admitted for permanent residence. This exclusion does not violate the Equal Protection clause of the United States Constitution [Raven v. Panama Canal Co. (5th Cir. 1978) 583 F.2d 169, 171 ; see Mathews v. Diaz (1976) 426 U.S. 67, 78-79, 96 S. Ct. 1883, 48 L. Ed. 2d 478 (acts of Congress permitted to discriminate between aliens and citizens)].

Corporations, sole proprietorships, and labor unions are not individuals within the definition of "individual" covered by the Privacy Act (5 U.S.C.S. § 552a), as set out in 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(a)(2), and therefore have no standing to initiate an action under that act [St. Michael's Convalescent Hosp. v. State of California (9th Cir. 1981) 643 F.2d 1369, 1373 (sole proprietorships); Parks v. United States Internal Revenue Serv. (10th Cir. 1980) 618 F.2d 677, 684 (unions); Cell Assocs. v. National Insts. of Health (9th Cir. 1978) 579 F.2d 1155, 1157 (corporations)].

A corporation also lacks standing to litigate any claims that its employees might have under the Privacy Act [Dresser Indus., Inc. (9th Cir. 1979) 596 F.2d 1231, 1238] . An association, however, generally has standing to bring a suit on behalf of its members if (1) its members would otherwise have standing to sue in their own right, (2) the interests it seeks to protect are germane to the organization's purpose, and (3) neither the claim asserted nor the relief requested requires the participation of individual members in the lawsuit [Hunt v. Washington State Apple Advertising Comm'n (1977) 432 U.S. 333, 343, 97 S. Ct. 2434, 53 L. Ed. 2d 383 ; but see Warth v. Seldin (1975) 422 U.S. 490, 515516, 95 S. Ct. 2197, 45 L. Ed. 2d 343 (representative action may be limited to injunction cases)]. A union, for example, might be permitted to initiate a representative action under the Privacy Act on behalf of its members when those conditions are met [Parks v. United States Internal Revenue Serv. (10th Cir. 1980) 618 F.2d 677, 684-685 (dicta)].

[d] Individuals Covered by Information Practices Act of 1977

The definition of the term "individual" for purposes of Information Practices Act (Civ. Code §§ 1798-1798.78) is not limited to United States residents, as is the definition of this term for purposes of the federal Privacy Act, which is set out in 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(a)(2) [see Civ. Code § 1798.3(d) (defining "individual")]. Thus, it appears that the federal case law excluding persons who are not legally resident aliens that is discussed in § 185.21[3][c], is not applicable to the Information Practices Act. However, the definition of "individual" in the Information Practices Act is limited to natural persons [Civ. Code § 1798.3(d)]. Thus, it appears that the fictional entities that are excluded from the Privacy Act by federal case law, discussed in § 185.21[3][c], are excluded from the Information Practices Act by explicit statutory authority.

[e] Business as Well as Personal Information Covered

The facts and procedural background of Florida Med. Ass'n v. Department of Health, Educ. & Welfare (M.D. Fla. 1979) 479 F. Supp. 1291 , vacated and remanded on other grounds, Florida Med. Ass'n v. Department of Health, Educ. & Welfare (5th Cir. 1979) 601 F.2d 199 , are discussed in § 185.25[3][a]. The information in question consisted of a recital of annual amounts of Medicare reimbursements to physicians that defendant agency proposed to disclose in a manner that individually identified the physicians receiving such reimbursements. In response to plaintiff physicians' request for an injunction against disclosure of this information, defendant agency argued that under the guidelines for implementing the Privacy Act promulgated by the Office of Management and Budget (OMB) pursuant to Pub. L. No. 93-579, 88 Stat. 1896, 1909-10 [40 Fed. Reg. 28948, 28951] and the corresponding regulation promulgated by defendant agency [45 C.F.R. § 5b1(e)], plaintiffs were excluded from the coverage of the Privacy Act (479 F. Supp. 1291, 1307) . Both of these regulations interpret the restricted definition of the term "individual" covered by the act set out in 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(a)(2) to mean that fictional persons such as sole proprietorships, partnerships, or corporations are not covered by the act. The OMB guidelines state that an individual bringing an action regarding information relating to his or her business affairs rather than his or her personal life is acting in an entrepreneurial rather than a personal role and is therefore not covered by the Privacy Act [see 40 Fed. Reg. 28948, 28951] .

The court held that this administratively defined distinction is not justified by either the terms of the Privacy Act or by the act's legislative history (479 F. Supp. 1291, 1310) . In its discussion, the court noted that one district court had upheld the distinction [see Shermco Indus., Inc. v. Secretary of United States Air Force (N.D. Tex. 1978) 452 F. Supp. 306, 314-315 , rev'd on other grounds, Shermco Indus., Inc. v. Secretary of United States Air Force (5th Cir. 1980) 613 F.2d 1314)], while another district court had declined to apply it [see Zeller v. United States (E.D. N.Y. 1979) 467 F. Supp. 487, 499] . The court further noted that the distinction had been extensively criticized in the literature, and cited a commentary that predicted that the distinction would be rejected by the courts. After its review of the cases and the literature the court accepted the holding of the Zeller court that the scope of information under the privacy act is defined not by the contents of the information, but by the retrieval system used in the agency's records. Thus, the court held, citing Zeller, that the Privacy Act extends to all information within an agency's system of records that pertains to an individual and can be retrieved by the individual's name or by some identifier assigned to him or her, without regard to whether the information pertains to the individual's business activities (479 F. Supp. 1291, 1310) . As shown by the Privacy Act's legislative history, fictional business entities were excluded from coverage. The Act was intended to protect the ability of the Congress and the Executive branch to gather and use information in implementing the Commerce Clause through economic regulation (479 F. Supp. 1291, 1311) .

In Shermco, whose holding regarding access to business information was rejected by the court in this case, the court held that the individual plaintiff did not have standing to initiate an action for access to certain government reports. Since he was seeking information in connection with a protest of a bid award involving the corporation of which he was president and major shareholder, he acted in an entrepreneurial capacity. Shermco also held, in a ruling not contradicted by other case law, that the corporation itself did not have standing to initiate the action since a corporation is not an individual for purposes of the Privacy Act (452 F. Supp. 306, 315) .

Unlike Shermco, this case did not involve an action by officers or major shareholders of a corporation suing with respect to information concerning the corporation's affairs when the corporation itself would not have had standing to sue. Rather, this case involved persons suing with respect to information identifying them personally (479 F. Supp. 1291, 1311) . It is possible that the holding in Shermco, even if it is good law, is distinguishable on this point.

[f] Videotape Recording May Be a Record

The facts and procedural background of Albright v. United States (D.C. Cir. 1980) 631 F.2d 915 , are discussed in § 185.32[3][b]. The alleged record was a videotape recording of a meeting in which plaintiffs had participated. The court of appeal held that the videotape was a record for purposes of the Privacy Act, as defined in 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(a)(4). The court stated that as long as the tape contains a means of identifying an individual by picture or voice, then it falls within the Privacy Act's definition of the term "record" (631 F.2d 915, 920) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Records Covered by Privacy Act of 1974

In White v. United States Civil Serv. Comm'n (D.C. Cir. 1979) 589 F.2d 713 , plaintiff initiated an action under 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(g)(1)(C) (action for failure to amend records; see § 185.33) to compel defendant agency to remove from its records five evaluations of plaintiff by plaintiff's former colleagues and supervisors, which defendant had solicited and received in connection with plaintiff's application for a position as an administrative law judge. The court of appeal reversed the lower court's holding that records pertaining to plaintiff's application were not records within the meaning of 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(g)(4). The court noted that it is indisputable that plaintiff's application records comprised information about an individual that is maintained by an agency, including his or her employment history, and therefore fell precisely into the definition of the term "record" set out in 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(g)(4) (589 F.2d 713, 715) .

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief. It should be combined with the general points and authorities in § 185.21. If the action is under state law, it should also be combined with the points and authorities on use of federal authority in a state action in § 185.20.]

THE COURT SHOULD ORDER DEFENDANT AGENCY TO PROVIDE PLAINTIFF WITH ACCESS TO THE AGENCY'S RECORDS CONTAINING PERSONAL INFORMATION ABOUT PLAINTIFF AS REQUESTED BY PLAINTIFF BECAUSE ACCESS IS REQUIRED BY THE _____ [PRIVACY ACT OF 1974 or INFORMATION PRACTICES ACT].

[EITHER, if action is against federal agency]

A. Right to Access to Personal Information in Federal Records. Every federal agency that maintains a system of records must on request by any individual to gain access to his or her records or to any information pertaining to him or her that is contained in the system, permit him or her and on his or her request, a person of his or her own choosing to accompany him or her, to review the record and have a copy made of all or any portion thereof in a form comprehensible to him or her, except that the agency may require the individual to furnish a written statement authorizing discussion of that individual's record in the accompanying person's presence (5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(d)(1)).

B. Injunctive Relief. In any suit brought against a federal agency for refusal of a request for access to personal information contained in the agency's records, the court may enjoin the federal agency from withholding the records and order the production to the complainant of any federal agency records improperly withheld from him or her (5 U.S.C.S.

§ 552a(g)(3)(A); see 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(g)(1)(B)).

C. De Novo Hearing by Court. In any suit brought against a federal agency for refusal of a request for access to personal information contained in the agency's records, the court shall determine the matter de novo (5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(g)(3)(A); see 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(g)(1)(B)).

D. Defendant Has Burden of Proof. In any suit brought against a federal agency for refusal of a request for access to personal information contained in the agency's records the burden is on the federal agency to sustain its action (5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(g)(3)(A); see 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(g)(1)(B)).

[Optional] E. Exemption From Freedom of Information Act Is Not Exemption From Privacy Act of 1974. The fact that information is exempt from the public disclosure requirement of the Freedom of Information Act (5 U.S.C.S. § 552) does not exempt that information from the duty to provide access under the Privacy Act of 1974 to the individual who is the subject of the information (5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(t)(1); see Nemetz v. Department of Treasury (N.D. Ill. 1978) 446 F. Supp. 102, 104-105) .

[OR, if action is against state or local agency]

A. Right to Access to Personal Information in State or Local Records. Each state or local agency must permit any individual and, if the individual so requests, another person of the individual's choosing, to inspect all the personal information in the record and to have an exact copy made of all or a portion of the records. Inspection must be permitted within 30 days of the agency's receipt of the request for active records, and within 60 days of the agency's receipt of the request for records that are geographically dispersed or that are inactive and in central storage. Copies must be provided within 15 days of inspection (see Civ. Code §§ 1798.34 (inspection), 1798.35 (inspection and copying)).

B. Injunctive Relief. In any suit brought for failure to comply with an individual's lawful request for access to personal information, the court may enjoin the agency from withholding the records and order the production of any improperly withheld agency records to the complainant (Civ. Code § 1798.46(a); see Civ. Code §§ 1798.45 (civil action for violation of Information Practices Act (Civ. Code §§ 1798-1798.78), Civ. Code § 1798.47 (injunctive relief against Information Practices Act violations generally)).

C. De Novo Hearing by Court. In a suit to enjoin a state or local agency from withholding personal information, the court shall determine the matter de novo, and may examine the contents of any agency records in camera to determine whether the records or any portion thereof may be withheld as being exempt from the individual's right of access (Civ. Code § 1798.46(a)).

D. Defendant Has Burden of Proof. In a suit to enjoin a state or local agency from withholding personal information, the agency has the burden of sustaining its action (Civ. Code § 1798.46(a)).

[Optional] E. Exemption From Public Records Act Is Not Exemption From Information Practices Act of 1977. The Information Practices Act of 1977 (Civ. Code §§ 1798-1798.78) supersedes any exemption in the Public Records Act (Gov. Code §§ 6250-6265) that authorizes a state or local agency to withhold information that is otherwise accessible under the Information Practices Act of 1977 (see Civ. Code § 1798.70; Nemetz v. Department of Treasury (N.D. Ill. 1978) 446 F. Supp. 102, 104-105 (interpreting former 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(q) (now see 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(t)(1)), which is comparable to Civ. Code § 1798.70).

[Add additional points and authorities, if appropriate, supporting the contention that the defendant agency improperly refused the plaintiff access to the records in question. See, e.g., § 185.23.]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a government agency refused an individual access to information about himself or herself contained in the agency's files in violation of 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(d)(1) or Civ. Code §§ 1798.30-1798.34. Counsel should use the first alternative Paragraphs A through D, and if appropriate, Paragraph E, in an action against federal agencies and use the second alternative Paragraphs A through D, and if appropriate, Paragraph E, in an action against a state or local agency. The legal points stated in the form may be raised in several procedural contexts in a civil action under 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(g)(1)(B), (3)(A) or Civ. Code §§ 1798.45-1798.48 against the agency to require disclosure.

These points and authorities should be used in combination with introductory points and authorities showing that plaintiff, defendant, and the information in question are covered by the Privacy Act or Information Practices Act [see § 185.21]. If the action is a state action under the Information Practices Act, and counsel is using a paragraph of the form that includes federal case law, this form should be used in combination with introductory points and authorities showing that federal case law interpreting the Privacy Act is persuasive authority in interpreting parallel provisions of the Information Practices Act [see § 185.20]. Counsel should compare the analogous provisions of the Information Practices and the federal Privacy Act and note any differences in language when using the federal case law in this form as authority for an interpretation of the Information Practices Act.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of a government agency's improper refusal to provide an individual with access to information concerning him or her from the agency's records. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

When appropriate, this form may also be used in conjunction with a form of points and authorities supporting the substantive contention that the agency's refusal to provide access to information in question is not justified by the confidential source exemptions to the access requirement of 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(d)(1), as set out in 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(k)(2), (5) or the confidential source exemptions to the corresponding access requirements of Civ. Code §§ 1798.30-1798.34 as set out in Civ. Code § 1798.38 [see § 185.23]. Counsel may also wish to add facts and argument, showing that the information in question is not covered by any of the other exemptions from the statutory access requirement of the Privacy Act or Information Practices Act [see § 185.22[3][a]].

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should show that the information in question pertains to plaintiff, that defendant improperly refused plaintiff access to the information, and that none of the statutory exemptions to the statutory information access requirement apply [see 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(d) (access requirement), (j), (k) (exemptions); Civ. Code §§ 1798.30-1798.34 (access requirements)].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Right to Access to Personal Information in Federal Records

The head of any federal agency may promulgate rules, in accordance with general statutory requirements, to exempt from the personal access requirement set out in 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(d)(1) any of a number of specified types of systems of records [see 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(j), (k) (exemptions)]. For a discussion of the types of records that may be exempted under 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(j), (k), see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 429, Privacy (Matthew Bender).

Points and authorities relating to the confidential source exemptions for law enforcement and employment evaluation information provided for in 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(k)(2), (5) are set out in § 185.23.

[b] Exemption From Freedom of Information Act Is Not Exemption From Privacy Act of 1974

The facts and procedural background of Nemetz v. Department of Treasury (N.D. Ill. 1978) 446 F. Supp. 102 , are discussed in § 185.23[3][b]. The defendants' arguments against disclosure included the contention that the identities of the individual sources of the information are protected by the "privacy" exemptions to the Freedom of Information Act (5 U.S.C.S. § 552) set out in former version of 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(b)(6) (amended in 1984) and 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(b)(7)(C). The court stated, however, that former 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(q) [now see 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(t)(1)] specifically provides that no agency shall rely on any exemption from the Freedom of Information Act to withhold from an individual any record that is otherwise accessible to such individual under the Privacy Act. The court stated that in light of this statutory directive, defendants must meet the requirements of the Privacy Act exemption for confidential sources in order to justify withholding information identifying sources (446 F. Supp. 102, 104-105) .

[c] Exemption From Public Records Act Is Not Exemption From Information Practices Act of 1977

Nemetz v. Department of Treasury (N.D. Ill. 1978) 446 F. Supp. 102 , is discussed in § 185.22[3][b].

NOTE:

Although the language of Civ. Code § 1798.70, which states that the access requirement of the Information Practices Act supersedes any exemption from the disclosure requirement of the Public Records Act, is cast in somewhat different language than former 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(q) (now see 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(t)(1)), on which Nemetz relied in making a comparable holding for the Privacy Act and the Freedom of Information Act, the effect of the two provisions is comparable and it appears that Nemetz may be used as persuasive authority to buttress Civ. Code § 1798.70 regarding exemptions from the Public Records Act in a state action. However, Civ. Code § 1798.70 only subordinates exemptions from the Public Records Act to the Information Practices Act, and does not appear to affect any affirmative prohibitions on disclosure in the Public Records Act [Civ. Code § 1798.70; Civ. Code § 1798.75 (Public Records Act supersedes Information Practices Act except as provided in Civ. Code § 1798.70)]. The Freedom of Information Act does not affirmatively prohibit any disclosures [see 5 U.S.C.S. § 552].

A. Promise of Confidentiality to Source Required. The confidential source exemption to the disclosure requirement of 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(d) for investigatory material regarding law enforcement or employment determinations applies only if the information sought would reveal the identity of a source who furnished information to the government under a promise that the identity of the source would be kept confidential. The promise must have been express if the promise was given after the effective date of the Privacy Act (December 1, 1974), but may have been an implied promise if given before that date (see 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(k)(2), (5); but see 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(j)(2) (certain law enforcement

A. Promise to Confidential Source Required. The confidential source exemption to the disclosure requirement of Civ. Federal Bureau of Investigation (D.C. Cir. 1981) 670 F.2d 1164, 1173 ; Nemetz v. Department of Treasury (N.D. Ill. 1978) 446 F. Code § 1798.46(a)).

[2] Comments

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that defendant agency cannot rely on the confidential source exemptions set out in 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(k)(2), (5) or Civ. Code § 1798.38 to deny plaintiff access to information under 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(d) or Civ. Code §§ 1798.30-1798.34. 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(k) provides that investigatory material compiled for law enforcement purposes, or compiled solely for the purpose of making determinations regarding federal employment, military service, federal contracts, or access to classified information, which would reveal the identity of a source who had been promised confidentiality may be exempted from the access requirement of 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(d) by rules promulgated by the head of any agency [see 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(k)(2), (5); but see 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(j)(2) (certain law enforcement information exempt regardless of effect on confidential source)]. Civ. Code § 1798.38 provides that when information compiled for the purpose of making determinations regarding employment, receipt of state contracts, licensing purposes, or status as adoptive parents was received by the agency with the promise or understanding that the source be kept confidential, information tending to reveal the identity of the source may be withheld despite the access requirement of Civ. Code § 1798.30-1798.34.

Counsel should use the first alternative Paragraph A in an action against a federal agency and the second alternative Paragraph A in an action against a state or local agency. Paragraphs B and C may be used in either a federal or a state action. However, if any paragraph setting federal case law is used in a state action, counsel should use the optional language comparing pertinent federal and state provisions. Paragraph B is for use when defendant seeks to claim the confidentiality exemption by inferring a promise of confidentiality from the mere circumstance that the information was solicited by and given to a governmental agency. Paragraph C is for use, together with the appropriate version of Paragraph D, to obtain in camera inspection of the record so that the parts of the record that can be segregated and will not reveal the identity of the confidential source may be revealed.

These points and authorities should be used in combination with introductory points and authorities showing that plaintiff, defendant, and the information in question are covered by the Privacy Act or Information Practices Act [see § 185.21]. If the action is a state action under the Information Practices Act, and counsel is using a paragraph of the form that includes federal case law, this form should be used in combination with introductory points and authorities showing that federal case law interpreting the Privacy Act is persuasive authority in interpreting parallel provisions of the Information Practices Act [see § 185.20]. Counsel should compare the analogous provisions of the Information Practices and the federal Privacy Act and note any differences in language when using the federal case law set out as authority for an interpretation of the Information Practices Act.

This form may be used in a variety of procedural contexts, when defendant agency has contended that it need not grant plaintiff access to records on the ground that the disclosure would reveal a confidential source.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the confidentiality exemptions set out in 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(k)(2), (5) or in Civ. Code § 1798.38 do not apply to block plaintiff's access to the information in question. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Evidence Must Show Promise to Each Source

In Londrigan v. Federal Bureau of Investigation (D.C. Cir. 1981) 670 F.2d 1164 , plaintiff initiated an action under the Privacy Act (5 U.S.C.S. § 552a) to obtain the names of persons who provided defendant agency with information about plaintiff when he was under investigation for a position as a Peace Corps volunteer. The information was actually provided to defendant agency in 1961, considerably before the effective date of the Privacy Act. The defendant agency moved for summary judgment, supported by an affidavit by one of the supervisors of defendant agency's Freedom of Information Act branch. The affidavit averred that persons interviewed by defendant agency assumed quite logically that the information they gave was only for official use by the agency and that their identities would not be exposed, and that in conducting the background investigation on plaintiff, certain specified groups of informants were considered to be implied confidential sources. The affiant himself had not participated in the investigation of plaintiff and had not attempted to contact any of the agents of the agency who had done so. The district court granted summary judgment.

The court of appeal reversed. The court noted that the affidavit could be reduced in essence to the proposition that any background investigation prior to the effective date of the Privacy Act must be regarded as having been conducted under an implied promise of confidentiality (670 F.2d 1164, 1168) . The court held that confidentiality is not to be inferred simply from the circumstance that the information was solicited by a government agency, but that an adequate basis for implication of a promise of confidentiality must be shown (670 F.2d 1164, 1173) . In so holding, the court cited with approval the holding of Nemetz v. Department of Treasury (N.D. Ill. 1978) 446 F. Supp. 102, 105 that there must be a finding of a promise of confidentiality as to each source sought to be withheld, and that evidence, based on personal experience, must be presented showing that such promises were expressly or implicitly given (670 F.2d 1164, 1170) . The court also cited passages from the House debate on the bill that was enacted as the Privacy Act in support of its position (670 F.2d 1164, 1172-1173) .

The court remanded the case for further investigation of the facts and circumstance of defendant agency's acquisition of the information. To facilitate the investigation, the court suggested the following steps: (1) a careful review of each document in the records in question to determine the nature of the source and whether any statement indicated an expectation of confidentiality, (2) possibly contacting at least some of the agents who conducted the investigation, and (3) possibly considering the policy of defendant agency at the time of the investigation, but with great care to avoid confusion of internal agency rules and actual practices pursued during the investigation. The court also said that other indicia may be found and weighed by the district court, but hastened to point out that the mere fact that the agency which conducted the investigation was the Federal Bureau of Investigation and that the information was of a personal nature does not dictate the result (670 F.2d 1164, 1173-1174) .

Nemetz v. Department of Treasury (N.D. Ill. 1978) 446 F. Supp. 102 , involved an action for access to background information obtained by a federal agency pursuant to plaintiff's application for employment. Defendants had withheld certain material, claiming that it was exempt from disclosure under 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(k)(5) [see § 185.23[2][a]]. Defendants moved for summary judgment, and the district court denied the motion. The court noted that the only evidence presented by defendants that promises of confidentiality had been given to the sources of the information consisted of an affidavit by an officer of the agency averring generally that the information in question was obtained pursuant to an implied promise of confidentiality, and an answer to an interrogatory stating that prior to the effective date of the Privacy Act, it was the policy of the agency to assure individuals who were interviewed concerning applicants for employment that their responses would be confidential. The court held that such general averments of promises of confidentiality are insufficient to support an award of summary judgment (446 F. Supp. 102, 105) . The court stated that any exemptions to the access requirement of the Privacy Act must be narrowly construed and the requirements strictly met. The court held that this standard requires finding a promise of confidentiality as to each source to be withheld, from evidence based on personal knowledge that an express or implied promise was given to each source. The court stated that general allegations concerning policy are insufficient (446 F. Supp. 102, 105) . The court also noted that under the facts before it, it appeared that the agency had disclosed some documents that revealed the identity of their sources, without evidence that such sources had waived their confidentiality or other explanation why some sources had been revealed while others were withheld. The court concluded from this that the agency's averred general policy of offering confidentiality might not have been uniformly followed, and stated that the agency's disparate treatment of sources when only a general policy of confidentiality was asserted further indicated the need for evidence of individual promises (446 F. Supp. 102, 105 n.3). The court concluded that it would give defendants an opportunity to file supplemental affidavits stating the facts in support of their claim before deciding whether to release the information (446 F. Supp. 102, 105) .

NOTE:

Although the Londrigan court of appeal cites the district court's holding in Nemetz with approval, the actual suggestions made by the Londrigan court as to what kind of evidence might be used to determine whether an implied promise was given appear to be much more lenient than the requirement of the Nemetz court that evidence based on personal knowledge be presented for every alleged promise. It is therefore not clear just how concrete the showing of a promise of confidentiality must be. The length of time since the information was collected might be a factor in imposing a more lenient requirement of showing with respect to implied promises [see Diamond v. Federal Bureau of Investigation (S.D.N.Y. 1981) 532 F. Supp. 216, 233 , aff'd, 707 F.2d 75 (distinguishing Nemetz)]. It is not clear whether the standard for showing an express promise of confidentiality, such as is required if the promise was made after December 31, 1974, the effective date of the Privacy Act, is stricter than the standard for showing an implied promise, such as would be sufficient if the promise was made before December 31, 1974. The Londrigan opinion, which sets out a more lenient standard for showing that a promise was made than that set out in Nemetz, generally only discusses implied promises, while the Nemetz court, although dealing with information obtained before 1974, phrased its stricter rule to apply to express as well as implied promises.

[b] Exemption Limited to Information Disclosing Source

The facts and procedural background of Nemetz v. Department of Treasury (N.D. Ill. 1978) 446 F. Supp. 102, 105 , are discussed in § 185.23[3][a]. The defendants sought summary judgment against plaintiff in his action for disclosure of information, on the ground that the information had been obtained on a promise of confidentiality. In denying the motion, the court noted that defendant was withholding whole documents under claim of the confidential source exemption, without attempting to identify information within them that would reveal the identity of a confidential source.

The court stated that it is clear from the face of the statute that only information that would identify the source of confidential information may be exempted under 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(k)(5). Thus, the court held that defendants had an obligation to produce all portions of the requested documents that reasonably can be segregated and were not covered by the exemption portions of the documents requested that were not covered by the exemption (446 F. Supp. 102, 105) . The court stated that if affidavits showed or proved Say showed that other requirements of 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(k)(5) were satisfied, it would order in camera inspection of the documents in question to determine whether the agency should have provided portions of the documents pertaining to plaintiff that do not reveal identities of the sources (446 F. Supp. 102, 105-106) .

NOTE:

If the action is against a state or local agency, counsel should cite provisions of Civ. Code § 1798.38 (confidential source exemption) that explicitly state that information that may be withheld under that section is limited to information that would reveal the identity of a confidential source, along with Nemetz. Civ. Code § 1798.38 states in particular that whatever method the agency used to provide access to information from records without revealing information disclosing identity of a confidential source, the agency must insure that full disclosure is made to the subject of any personal information that could reasonably in any way reflect or convey anything detrimental, disparaging, or threatening to an individual's reputation, rights, benefits, privileges, or qualifications [see Civ. Code § 1798.38].

[1] FORM Supporting Contention That Defendant Agency Improperly Disclosed Information Concerning Plaintiff [5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(b); Civ. Code § 1798.24]--General Form

PLAINTIFF IS ENTITLED TO DAMAGES FOR DEFENDANT'S DISCLOSURE OF INFORMATION FROM DEFENDANT'S RECORDS CONCERNING PLAINTIFF WITHOUT PLAINTIFF'S CONSENT BECAUSE SUCH DISCLOSURE VIOLATED THE _____ [PRIVACY ACT OF 1974 or INFORMATION PRACTICES ACT OF 1977].

[EITHER, if action is against federal agency]

A. Jurisdiction. Whenever any federal agency fails to comply with any provision of the Privacy Act of 1974 (5 U.S.C.S. § 552a), or any rule promulgated thereunder, in such a way as to have an adverse effect on an individual, the individual may bring a civil action against the agency, and the district courts of the United States shall have jurisdiction in the matters under the provisions of 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(g) (5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(g)(1)(D)).

B. Disclosure Without Consent Prohibited. No agency may disclose any record that is contained in a system of records by any means of communication to any person or to another agency, except pursuant to a written request by or with the prior written consent of the individual, unless specified exemptions to this prohibition of disclosure apply (5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(b)).

C. Damages for Willful Improper Disclosure. In any suit brought pursuant to 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(g)(1)(D) for failure to comply with the disclosure restrictions of 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(b), if the court determines that the agency acted in a manner that was intentional or willful, the United States shall be liable in an amount equal to the sum of (a) the actual damages sustained by the individual as a result of the failure to comply, but in no case less than $1,000; and (b) reasonable costs and attorney's fees (see 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(g)(4)).

D. Willfulness Requirement Does Not Include Malice. The requirement set out in 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(g)(4) that the agency must have acted in a manner that was intentional or willful in order to be liable for violation of the Privacy Act (5 U.S.C.S. § 552a) is only somewhat greater than a requirement of gross negligence and does not appear to entail premeditated malice (South v. Federal Bureau of Investigation (N.D. Ill. 1981) 508 F. Supp. 1104, 1107-1108 ; see Parks v. United States Internal Revenue Serv. (10th Cir. 1980) 618 F.2d 677, 683) .

[OR, if action is against state or local agency]

A. Civil Action. An individual may bring a civil action against an agency whenever the agency fails to comply with any provision of the Information Practices Act of 1977 (Civ. Code §§ 1798-1798.78) or any rule promulgated thereunder, in such a way as to have an adverse effect on the individual (Civ. Code § 1798.45(c)).

B. Disclosure Without Consent Prohibited. No agency may disclose personal information in a manner that would link the information disclosed to the individual to whom it pertains unless the disclosure of the information is covered by specified exemptions (Civ. Code § 1798.24).

C. Damages for Improper Disclosure. In any suit brought under the provisions of Section 1798.45(c) of the Civil Code, which establishes the right to a civil action for a violation of the Information Practices Act of 1977 causing an adverse effect, the agency shall be liable to the individual in an amount equal to the sum of actual damages sustained by the individual, including damages for mental suffering and the costs of the action together with reasonable attorney's fees as determined by the court (Civ. Code § 1798.48).

[Optional] D. Injunctive Relief. Any agency that fails to comply with any provision of the Information Practices Act of 1977 (Civ. Code §§ 1798-1798.78) may be enjoined by any court of competent jurisdiction. The court may make such order or judgment as may be necessary to prevent the use or employment by an agency of any practices that violate the Information Practices Act. Actions for injunction may be brought by a private individual acting on his or her own behalf (see Civ. Code § 1798.47).

[CONTINUE]

[Optional] E. Invasion of Privacy Causing Psychological Harm Constitutes Adverse Effect. In an action based on 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(g)(1)(D), the jurisdictional requirement that the defendant's conduct have an adverse effect on the plaintiff is satisfied if the defendant's action constituted an invasion of the plaintiff's privacy, which has mental distress or embarrassment as a natural consequence (Parks v. United States Internal Revenue Serv. (10th Cir. 1980) 618 F.2d 677, 682-683) . Civ. Code § 1798.45(c), which establishes a civil action for violations of the Information Practices Act of 1977 (Civ. Code §§ 1798-1798.78) is comparable to 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(g)(1)(d).

[Add additional points and authorities, if appropriate, supporting the contention that particular exemptions to the disclosure prohibition of the Privacy Act or Information Practices Act do not apply to the case. See, e.g., §§ 185.25 -185.27.]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that defendant agency disclosed information concerning plaintiff from its records in violation of the prohibition of disclosure set out in 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(b) or Civ. Code § 1798.24. This form sets out the points that plaintiff may be entitled to damages from a federal agency for a willful and intentional violation of 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(b) [see 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(g)(4)] and that plaintiff may be entitled to damages or injunctive relief against a state or local agency for violation of Civ. Code § 1798.24, regardless of whether or not the violation involved willfulness or intent [see Civ. Code §§ 1798.47 (injunctive relief), 1798.48 (damages)]. Counsel should use the first alternative paragraphs A through D in an action against federal agencies and use the second alternative paragraphs A through D in an action against a state or local agency. If optional Paragraph E is used in a state action, it should include the optional language comparing the pertinent state and federal provisions. This form may be used in a variety of procedural contexts.

These points and authorities should be used in combination with introductory points and authorities showing that plaintiff, defendant, and the information in question are covered by the Privacy Act or Information Practices Act [see § 185.21]. If the action is a state action under the Information Practices Act, and counsel is using a paragraph of the form that includes federal case law, this form should be used in combination with introductory points and authorities showing that federal case law interpreting the Privacy Act is persuasive authority in interpreting parallel provisions of the Information Practices Act [see § 185.20]. Counsel should compare the analogous provisions of the Information Practices and the federal Privacy Acts and note any differences in language when using the federal case law in this form as authority for an interpretation of the Information Practices Act.

This form may be used alone or together with points and authorities supporting the contention that the disclosure in question is not covered by one or more of the following statutory provisions that set out exemptions from the disclosure requirement of 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(b) or Civ. Code § 1798.24: (1) 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(b)(2) (disclosure required by the Freedom of Information Act (5 U.S.C.S. § 552) or Civ. Code § 1798.24(g) (disclosure required by Public Records Act (Gov. Code §§ 6250-6265) [see § 185.25]; (2) 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(b)(3) (routine use disclosure) or Civ. Code § 1798.24(e) (inter-agency disclosure) [see § 185.26]; (3) 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(b)(1) or Civ. Code § 1798.24(d) (internal agency communication required in performance of normal duties) [see § 185.27]; or (4) 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(b)(11) (disclosure required by court order) [see § 185.28]. Counsel may also wish to add points and authorities supporting the contention that the disclosure in question is not covered by other exemptions from the prohibition of disclosure set out in 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(b) or Civ. Code § 1798.24 in addition to those enumerated above. For a full discussion of the exemptions to the disclosure prohibition set out in 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(b) and Civ. Code § 1798.24, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 429, Privacy (Matthew Bender).

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. If the action is against a federal agency, counsel should include facts showing that defendant's conduct was intentional and willful [see 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(g)(1)(D), (4) (requirements for damages); Albright v. United States (D.C. Cir. 1980) 631 F.2d 915, 921] . In both federal and state actions counsel should include facts showing that plaintiff suffered an adverse effect as a result of the disclosure [see 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(g)(1)(D), (4) (Privacy Act requirements for damages); Civ. Code § 1798.48 (Information Practices Act requirements for damages)].

[b] Privacy Act Subordinate to Freedom of Information Act

Information that is required to be disclosed under the Freedom of Information Act (5 U.S.C.S. § 552; public disclosure of public records) is explicitly exempt from the prohibition of disclosure set out in 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(b) of the Privacy Act [5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(b)(2)]. Since virtually all of the types of information covered by the Privacy Act are also covered by the very broad disclosure requirements of the Freedom of Information Act, the effect of 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(b)(2) appears to be that information is protected from disclosure under 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(b) only if (1) the conditions of the Privacy Act (5 U.S.C.S. § 552a) in general are met and (2) the information is also exempt under the Freedom of Information Act [see 5 U.S.C.S. § 552(b) (exemptions to Freedom of Information Act); (Florida Med. Ass'n v. Department of Health, Educ. & Welfare (M.D. Fla. 1979) 479 F. Supp. 1291, 1305-1306)] . Counsel should, therefore, be prepared to argue not only the applicability of the Privacy Act (5 U.S.C.S. § 552a) in general, but also to show the applicability of at least one of the exemptions to the Freedom of Information Act set out in 5 U.S.C.S. § 552(b), if defendant agency asserts that the disclosure in question was required by the Freedom of Information Act.

Counsel should consider in particular whether or not the exemption to the disclosure requirements of the Freedom of Information Act set out in 5 U.S.C.S. § 552(b)(6) for medical, personnel, or similar files, disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of privacy [see § 185.25], is applicable to the information involved in the case, since requirements for that exemption appear to be similar to the basic requirements for recovering damages for violation of the prohibition of disclosure under 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(b) [see 5 U.S.C.S. § 552(b)(6) (exemption to Freedom of Information Act); 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(g)(1)(D) (action for improper disclosure); Pacific Molasses Co. v. National Labor Relations Bd. Reg'l Office (5th Cir. 1978) 577 F.2d 1172, 1179 ; Florida Med. Ass'n v. Department of Health, Educ. & Welfare (M.D. Fla. 1979) 479 F. Supp. 1291, 1303-1304 (applying 5 U.S.C.S. § 552(b)(6))].

[c] Information Practices Act Subordinate to Public Records Act

Information that is required to be disclosed under the Public Records Act (Gov. Code §§ 6250-6265) (public disclosure of state and local public records) is explicitly exempt from the prohibition of disclosure set out in Civ. Code § 1798.24 of the Privacy Act [Civ. Code § 1798.24(g)]. The Public Records Act is modeled on the federal Freedom of Information Act (5 U.S.C.S. § 552) [American Civil Liberties Union Found. v. Deukmejian (1982) 32 Cal. 3d 440, 447, 186 Cal. Rptr. 235, 651 P.2d 822] . The relationship between the Information Practices Act and the Public Records Act appears to be similar to the relationship between the Privacy Act and the Freedom of Information Act. Thus, the rule of Pacific Molasses Co. v. National Labor Relations Bd. Reg'l Office (5th Cir. 1978) 577 F.2d 1172, 1179 ; Florida Med. Ass'n v. Department of Health, Educ. & Welfare (M.D. Fla. 1979) 479 F. Supp. 1291, 1303-1304 , which is discussed in § 185.24[2][b] appears to be persuasive authority for the point that information must be both covered by the Information Practices Act and exempt from the disclosure requirement of the Public Records Act in order to be subject to the disclosure prohibition of Civ. Code § 1798.24. Counsel should, therefore, be prepared to argue not only the applicability of the Information Practices Act (Civ. Code §§ 1798-1798.76) in general, but also to show the applicability of at least one of the exemptions to the Public Records Act set out in Gov. Code § 6254, if defendant agency asserts that the disclosure in question was required by the Public Records Act.

Counsel should consider in particular whether or not the exemption to the disclosure requirements of the Public Records Act set out in Gov. Code § 6254(c) for medical, personnel, or similar files, disclosure of which would constitute an unwarranted invasion of privacy [see § 185.25], is applicable to the information involved in the case, since requirements for that exemption appear to be similar to the basic requirements for obtaining relief for violation of the prohibition of disclosure under Civ. Code § 1798.24 [see Gov. Code § 6254(c) (exemption to Public Records Act); Civ. Code §§ 1798.45-1798.48 (remedies for improper disclosure); Pacific Molasses Co. v. National Labor Relations Bd. Reg'l Office (5th Cir. 1978) 577 F.2d 1172, 1179 ; Florida Med. Ass'n v. Department of Health, Educ. & Welfare (M.D. Fla. 1979) 479 F. Supp. 1291, 1303-1304 (applying 5 U.S.C.S. § 552(b)(6), which is similar to Gov. Code § 6254(c))].

[d] Dissemination of Information Already Publicly Known Not Improper Disclosure

Dissemination of information to particular persons or to the public is not a disclosure under the Privacy Act (5 U.S.C.S. § 552a) when the information was already known to the receivers of the information [Federal Deposit Ins. Corp. v. Dye (5th Cir. 1981) 642 F.2d 833, 836] . Since the disclosure prohibition set out in Civ. Code § 1798.24 is comparable to the disclosure prohibition set out in 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(b), Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. v. Dye also appears to be persuasive authority in interpreting whether or not disclosure is prohibited under the Information Practices Act (Civ. Code §§ 1798-1798.78) [see § 185.20].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Willfulness Requirement Does Not Include Malice

In South v. Federal Bureau of Investigation (N.D. Ill. 1981) 508 F. Supp. 1104 , defendant agency released certain records to a third party pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act (5 U.S.C.S. § 552). In releasing these records, defendant failed to excise plaintiff's name from a document that identified plaintiff as a potential security informant. Plaintiff alleged that when a newspaper article subsequently published the contents of the document, he was subject to public contempt and ridicule and to loss of dignity and self-respect. Defendant conceded that the disclosure of plaintiff's name was improper, but moved for dismissal for lack of subject matter jurisdiction. Defendant argued that its actions were not willful and intentional as required for recovery of damages by 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(g)(4), and that the requirement of willfulness and intent set out in that subsection were jurisdictional. Plaintiff moved for partial summary judgment, arguing that defendant's actions were willful and intentional as those terms were defined for purposes of 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(g)(4). The district denied defendant's motion to dismiss without holding whether the willfulness and intent requirement of 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(g)(4) was jurisdictional, holding instead that plaintiff had adequately pleaded a colorable claim under that requirement whether it was jurisdictional or merely an additional element required to recover damages (508 F. Supp. 1104, 1106) .

In determining the meaning of willful and intentional behavior for purposes of 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(g)(4), the court reviewed case law construing the term "willful" in other contexts and concluded that the words "intentional or willful" are used as terms of art and are given broader scope by courts than the common definition would imply (508 F. Supp. 1104, 1107) . Citing a Congressional statement from the Congressional Record--Senate S. 21817 (Dec. 17, 1974), the court determined the legislative intent that, on a continuum between negligence and the very high standard of willful, arbitrary, or capricious conduct, the willfulness and intent standard is only somewhat greater than a gross negligence standard (508 F. Supp. 1104, 1107) . The court also reviewed cases holding variously that the standard did not appear to require premeditated malice, that it required a knowing release of documents, or that it required an intentional failure to comply with the terms of the Privacy Act (508 F. Supp. 1104,1107-1108) . The court concluded that the "only somewhat greater than gross negligence" standard was appropriate to the case before it and dismissed plaintiff's motion for partial summary judgment, stating that there were material issues of fact as to whether or not plaintiff had met that standard (508 F. Supp. 1104, 1108) .

In Parks v. United States Internal Revenue Serv. (10th Cir. 1980) 618 F.2d 677 , defendant agency had used personnel files of its employees to identify employees who had not pledged to purchase savings bonds. Employees thus identified were pinpointed for a telephone campaign designed to encourage them to pledge to make such purchases. Plaintiffs filed an action against defendant agency, seeking damages under 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(g)(4). The district court dismissed the case for reasons unrelated to the claim for damages.

The court of appeals reversed the dismissal. The defendant argued that plaintiffs' allegations were inadequate because they failed to allege the element of willfulness and intent necessary for monetary relief under 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(g)(4). In response, the court noted that plaintiffs had alleged that the lists of employees who had not pledged to purchase savings bonds were published by defendant agency, and that the employees' supervisor knew of the lists and condoned their use for soliciting bond sales. The court held that these allegations served to fill in the gaps on the question of willfulness and intentional misconduct in that they showed that plaintiffs were not relying on negligent acts. The court further stated that it did not appear that premeditated malice was required to satisfy the requirement. The court concluded that, assuming that the failure to specifically allege intentional or willful misconduct did not preclude plaintiffs from proving it, the trial court should allow plaintiffs to amend their complaint to include such an allegation (618 F.2d 677, 683) . Finally, the court cited as noteworthy a statement from an analysis of House and Senate compromise amendments to the Privacy Act (5 U.S.C.S. § 552a) at 120 Cong. Rec. 40405, 40406 (1974) stating that the willfulness and intent standard is viewed as only somewhat greater than gross negligence (618 F.2d 677, 683) .

[b] Damages for Improper Disclosure

Civ. Code § 1798.48 (damages for violation of Information Practices Act (Civ. Code §§ 1798-1798.78) differs from 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(g)(4) (damages for Privacy Act (5 U.S.C.S. § 552a) violation) in that the state statute does not require willfulness or intent by the agency as a condition of recovery and in that the state statute provides explicitly for damages for mental suffering [see Civ. Code § 1798.48].

[c] Invasion of Privacy Causing Psychological Harm Constitutes Adverse Effect

The facts and procedural background of Parks v. United States Internal Revenue Serv. (10th Cir. 1980) 618 F.2d 677 , are discussed in § 185.24[3][a]. The trial court had held that plaintiffs had failed to allege sufficiently that they had suffered an adverse effect or injury in fact from the disclosures in question. Reversing, the court of appeal noted that plaintiffs had alleged psychological harm from the illegal disclosure. The court stated that it appears from the Privacy Act that Congress was borrowing from the common law tort of invasion of privacy. The court noted that this tort was a wrong that results in injury to plaintiff's feelings and is actionable even though plaintiff suffered no pecuniary or physical harm. Thus, the court held that it is the invasion of the right to privacy that is the essence of the action, and mental distress or embarrassment would be a natural consequence of such an invasion (618 F.2d 677, 683) .

NOTE:

General psychological damages that are sufficient to satisfy the jurisdictional requirement of adverse effect may not be sufficient to satisfy the more stringent requirement for recovery of damages, particularly in an action against a federal agency. In Fitzpatrick v. Internal Revenue Service (11th Cir. 1982) 665 F.2d 327, 331 , the court held that the Privacy Act's damage provisions set out in 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(g)(4)(A) permit recovery only for proven pecuniary losses and not for generalized mental injuries, loss of reputation, embarrassment, or other nonquantifiable injuries, although the court noted in dicta that a Privacy Act plaintiff might recover actual pecuniary losses resulting from a mental injury caused by unlawful disclosure. However, in a more recent opinion, the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals has disagreed with that conclusion and held that Congress intended the term "actual damages" to include both pecuniary and nonpecuniary damages, thus permitting recovery of damages for mental suffering and similar injuries [Cooper v. F.A.A., 596 F.3d 538, 549 (9th Cir. 2010)] . The United States Supreme Court has recognized a split in authority among the circuits on the issue but has not resolved the conflict [see Doe v. Chao, 540 U.S. 614, 627 n.12, 124 S. Ct. 1204, 157 L. Ed. 2d 1122 (2004)] .

The issue is largely moot when a cause of action is brought under the California Information Practices Act, as Civ. Code § 1798.48 (damages for violation of Information Practices Act (Civ. Code §§ 1798-1798.78) explicitly provides for recovery for mental suffering. However, the limitation of damages under Civ. Code § 1798.48 to actual damages may nevertheless make the standard for recovering damages under that section more stringent than the standard for standing to bring a civil action in the first instance [see Civ. Code §§ 1798.45 (civil action), 1798.48 (damages)].

It should be combined with the general points and authorities in § 185.21 and with points and authorities supporting the basic contention that disclosure of information is prohibited by law as in § 185.24. CODE § 6254(c)].

A. Disclosure of Information Prohibited When Not Required. Disclosure of information prohibited by 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(b) but for the supervention of the Freedom of Information Act (5 U.S.C.S. § 552) is improper when the information is exempt from the Freedom of Information Act as a clearly unwarranted invasion of privacy under 5 U.S.C.S. § 552(b)(6) (Florida Med. Ass'n v. Department of Health, Educ. & Welfare (M.D. Fla. 1979) 479 F. Supp. 1291, 1305-1306) . Provisions of the Privacy Act of 1974 and Freedom of Information Act interpreted by Florida Medical Association are comparable to pertinent provisions of the Information Practices Act of 1977 (Civ. Code § 1798 et seq.) and Public Records Act (Gov. Code § 6250 et seq.) (compare 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(b) with Civ. Code § 1798.24; compare 5 U.S.C.S. § 552(b)(6) with Gov. Code § 6254(c)).

[EITHER, if action is against federal agency]

B. Clearly Unwarranted Invasion of Privacy Is Exempt From Freedom of Information Act. Personnel and medical files and similar files, the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of privacy, are exempt from the disclosure requirement set out in the Freedom of Information Act (5 U.S.C.S. §§ 552, 552(b)(6); United States Dep't of State v. Ray (1991) 502 U.S. 164, 173, 112 S. Ct. 541, 116 L. Ed. 2d 526).

[OR, if action is against state or local agency]

B. Clearly Unwarranted Invasion of Privacy Is Exempt From Public Records Act. The Public Records Act (Gov. Code § 6250 et seq.) may not be construed to require disclosure of personnel, medical or similar files, the disclosure of which would constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy (Gov. Code § 6254(c)).

C. Federal Case Law Illuminates Interpretation of Public Records Act Exemptions. The Public Records Act (Gov. Code § 6250 et seq.) was modeled on the Freedom of Information Act (5 U.S.C.S. § 552), and the judicial construction and legislative history of the Freedom of Information Act serve to illuminate the interpretation of its California counterpart (American Civil Liberties Union Found. v. Deukmejian (1982) 32 Cal. 3d 440, 447, 186 Cal. Rptr. 235, 651 P.2d 822).

[CONTINUE]

D. Exemption Covers Personal Information. Because the element shared by personnel and medical files, which are explicitly covered by the exemption set out in 5 U.S.C.S. § 552(b)(6), is the personal quality of the information, the test for determining whether or not the information is covered by the exemption as a "similar file" to personnel or medical files turns on whether or not the information is of a sufficiently personal nature, and also includes consideration of whether or not disclosure would cause the person whom the information concerns some special embarrassment (Pacific Molasses Co. v. National Labor Relations Bd. Reg'l Office (5th Cir. 1978) 577 F.2d 1172, 1179 ; Florida Med. Ass'n v. Department of Health, Educ. & Welfare (M.D. Fla. 1979) 479 F. Supp. 1291, 1303-1304) . The provisions interpreted by Pacific Molasses Co. and Florida Medical Association are comparable to pertinent provisions of the Public Records Act (Gov. Code § 6250 et seq.) (compare 5 U.S.C.S. § 552(b)(6) with Gov. Code § 6254(c)).

[Optional] E. Scope of Exemption May Include Financial Information. Personal or personalized financial information may qualify under the "similar files" rubric of 5 U.S.C.S. § 552(b)(6), at least insofar as it contains embarrassing disclosures or involves sufficiently intimate details (Florida Med. Ass'n v. Department of Health, Educ. & Welfare (M.D. Fla. 1979) 479 F. Supp. 1291, 1304) . The provisions interpreted by Florida Medical Association are comparable to pertinent provisions of the Public Records Act (Gov. Code § 6250 et seq.) (compare 5 U.S.C.S. § 552(b)(6) with Gov. Code § 6254(c)).

F. Balancing Test to Determine Clearly Unwarranted Invasion of Privacy. After determining that the information in question is included within the scope of the 5 U.S.C.S. § 552(b)(6) exemption to the Freedom of Information Act, the court must balance the individual's right to privacy against the objective of the Freedom of Information Act to contribute to public understanding of the operations or activities of government to determine if disclosure of the information would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of privacy (Department of Def. v. Federal Labor Relations Auth. (1994) 510 U.S. 487, 494-496, 114 S. Ct. 1006, 127 L. Ed. 2d 325 ; Dep't of the Air Force v. Rose (1976) 425 U.S. 352, 370, 380-381, 96 S. Ct. 1592, 48 L. Ed. 2d 11) (compare 5 U.S.C.S. § 552(b)(6) with Gov. Code §

[If action is against federal agency, ADD]

G. De Novo Determination by Court. The courts are vested with the responsibility to ultimately determine de novo any dispute concerning the proper invocation of the exemption set out in 5 U.S.C.S. § 552(b)(6) (5 U.S.C.S. § 552(a)(4)(B); Dep't of the Air Force v. Rose (1976) 425 U.S. 352, 379-380, 96 S. Ct. 1592, 48 L. Ed. 2d 11).

[CONTINUE]

[Optional] H. Subject of Information May Intervene in Freedom of Information Act Action. An individual may intervene in an action to compel disclosure under the Freedom of Information Act (5 U.S.C.S. § 552) in order to assert applicability of one or more exemptions to that Act and his or her own rights under the Privacy Act (5 U.S.C.S. § 552a) if the conditions for intervention are met (Providence Journal Co. v. Federal Bureau of Investigation (D.R.I. 1978) 460 F. Supp. 762, 765-766 , rev'd on other grounds, (1st Cir. 1979) 602 F.2d 1010 . The provisions interpreted by Providence Journal Co. are comparable to pertinent state law provisions (compare 5 U.S.C.S. § 552(b)(6) with Gov. Code § 6254(c) (privacy exemptions from disclosure laws); compare Fed. R. Civ. P., Rule 24(a), with Code Civ. Proc. § 387 (intervention)).

[2] Comments

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that defendant agency's disclosure was not exempt from the prohibition of disclosure imposed by the Privacy Act (5 U.S.C.S. § 552a) or Civ. Code § 1798.24 as a disclosure required by the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) (5 U.S.C.S. § 552) or the Public Records Act (Gov. Code § 6250 et seq.), on the ground that the disclosure was of personnel, medical, or similar files and constituted an unwarranted invasion of privacy and was therefore specifically exempt from disclosure requirements of the FOIA under 5 U.S.C.S. § 552(b)(6) or of the Public Records Act under Gov. Code § 6254(c). Counsel should use the first alternative Paragraph B and Paragraph G in an action against federal agencies. Counsel should use the second alternative Paragraph B in an action against a state or local agency. Paragraph G should not be used in an action against state or local agencies [see § 185.25[3][g]]. If the remaining paragraphs are used in a state action, they should include the optional language comparing the pertinent state and federal provisions.

These points and authorities should be used in combination with introductory points and authorities showing that plaintiff, defendant, and the information in question are covered by the Privacy Act or Information Practices Act [see § 185.21]. If the action is a state action under the Information Practices Act and if counsel is using a paragraph of the form that includes federal case law, this form should be used in combination with introductory points and authorities showing that federal case law interpreting the Privacy Act is persuasive authority in interpreting parallel provisions of the Information Practices Act [see § 185.20]. Counsel should compare the analogous provisions of the Information Practices Act and the federal Privacy Act and note any differences in language when using the federal case law set out as authority for an interpretation of the Information Practices Act.

This form should also be used in combination with a form of points and authorities setting out the contention that defendant agency's disclosure or proposed disclosure violates the prohibition of disclosure set out in 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(b) or Civ. Code § 1798.24 [see § 185.24] when defendant agency has argued that release of the information in question is required by the public disclosure provisions of the Freedom of Information Act or Public Records Act [see § 185.24[2][c]].

Counsel may also wish to add points and authorities supporting the contention that the disclosure in question is covered by one or more of the other exemptions to the FOIA's disclosure requirement, which are set out in 5 U.S.C.S. § 552(b), or one or more of the other exemptions to the Public Records Act, which are set out in Gov. Code §§ 6254, 6255 when the exemptions are applicable to the case. For a full discussion of the exemptions to the Freedom of Information Act, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 429, Privacy (Matthew Bender).

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should include facts and arguments showing that the records in question constitute personnel or medical files, or are of such a personal nature as to be similar to personnel or medical files, and that the harm to plaintiff from disclosure of the files would outweigh the benefit to the public from disclosure. In discussing the balancing of interests, counsel should be sure to discuss the public interest in disclosure in terms of the core purpose of the FOIA: contributing significantly to public understanding of the operations or activities of the government [United States DOD v. FLRA (1994) 510 U.S. 487, 114 S. Ct. 1006, 127 L. Ed. 2d 325, 334] . The purpose of the FOIA is not fostered by disclosure of information about private citizens that is accumulated in various governmental files but that reveals little or nothing about an agency's own conduct [Department of Def. v. Federal Labor Relations Auth. (1994) 510 U.S. 487, 114 S. Ct. 1006, 127 L. Ed. 2d 325, 335 ; Dep't of the Air Force v. Rose (1976) 425 U.S. 352, 360-361, 96 S. Ct. 1592, 48 L. Ed. 2d 11] . Thus, the Supreme Court held in one case that the public interest in disclosure of federal employees' names and addresses to unions who represented those employees' bargaining unit was negligible, in that the disclosure would not reveal information about the employer-agency itself [United States DOD v. FLRA (1994) 510 U.S. 487, 114 S. Ct. 1006, 127 L. Ed. 2d 325, 336 ; see § 185.25[3][f]].

[b] Exemption for Disclosure of Investigatory Records

Investigatory records compiled for law enforcement purposes are exempt from the disclosure requirement set out in 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(b) when production of records would clearly constitute an unwarranted invasion of privacy, in language identical to that used in the exemption set out in 5 U.S.C.S. § 552(b)(6) for personnel, medical, and similar files [see 5 U.S.C.S. §§ 552(b)(7)(C), 552a(b)(2)]. Thus, if the action is against a federal agency, counsel may adapt this form to a case involving law enforcement information covered by 5 U.S.C.S. § 552(b)(7) by adding argument that the case law cited in these points and authorities, with respect to information covered by 5 U.S.C.S. § 552(b)(6), may also be applied to law enforcement files covered by 5 U.S.C.S. § 552(b)(7)(C).

The exemption from the Public Records Act's disclosure requirement for investigative and law enforcement information, as set out in Gov. Code § 6254(f), differs from the language of 5 U.S.C.S. § 552(b)(7) and does not refer to disclosures that would constitute an invasion of privacy. Thus, it appears that these points and authorities could not be adapted for use in a case against a state or local agency that involves investigatory or law enforcement information.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Disclosure of Information Prohibited When Not Required

Florida Med. Ass'n v. Department of Health, Educ. & Welfare (M.D. Fla. 1979) 479 F. Supp. 1291 , involved an action by individual physicians and organizations representing them against defendant Department of Health, Education, and Welfare (hereinafter defendant agency) for an injunction against publication by defendant agency of a list of physicians receiving reimbursements for services provided under the federal Medicare program. The plaintiffs argued that disclosure of the information was prohibited under a number of federal laws, including the Privacy Act (5 U.S.C.S. § 552a). The district court held that none of the laws applied to the case except the Privacy Act.

The court stated preliminarily that the Freedom of Information Act (5 U.S.C.S. § 552) precluded prohibition of disclosure of the information, despite the absence of a request for the information by a particular individual, unless the disclosure fell into the scope of one of the FOIA's exceptions (479 F. Supp. 1291, 1301) . The court noted in particular that the Privacy Act defers to the Freedom of Information Act, since the prohibition of disclosure set out in the Privacy Act itself exempts information whose disclosure is required by the FOIA [see 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(b)(2)] (479 F. Supp. 1291, 1306) . However, after reviewing the legislative history on the point, the court held that if release of the information would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy so that the information would be exempt from the disclosure requirement of the FOIA under 5 U.S.C.S. § 552(b)(6), then disclosure of the information is forbidden by the Privacy Act (479 F. Supp. 1291, 1306) .

[b] Clearly Unwarranted Invasion of Privacy Is Exempt From Freedom of Information Act

In United States Dep't of State v. Ray (1991) 502 U.S. 164, 112 S. Ct. 541, 116 L. Ed. 2d 526 , an attorney representing undocumented Haitian nationals seeking political asylum in the United States sought disclosure under the FOIA of government documents containing information about other Haitians who had been returned to Haiti involuntarily. In 1981, a large number of Haitians attempted to flee Haiti and emigrate to Florida without the permission of either government. The United States government deported almost all of them, over their protests that they would be persecuted if returned to Haiti. The United States Department of State obtained assurance from the Haitian government that the interdicted Haitians would not be subject to persecution for illegal departure. In order to monitor compliance with that assurance, State Department personnel subsequently conducted confidential interviews with a "representative sample" of unsuccessful emigrants. According to the government, all but one or two of the emigrants reported that they had not been harassed or prosecuted since their return. Plaintiffs were a Florida lawyer and his clients, several undocumented Haitian nationals seeking political asylum in the United States. In immigration proceedings, they attempted to prove that Haitians who immigrate illegally face a well-founded fear of persecution if they return, and therefore are refugees entitled to asylum in the United States. In order to test the accuracy of the government's assertion that undocumented Haitian nationals have not been persecuted on their return to Haiti, plaintiffs filed a series of FOIA requests seeking copies of the interview reports. In response, the State Department produced 25 documents, which described a number of interviews with specific returnees and summarized the information obtained during successive periods. In 17 of the documents, the information related to individual interviews, but the names and other identifying information had been redacted. Plaintiffs filed an action against the State Department, seeking to obtain disclosure of the redacted material. The government argued that production of the requested material was subject to the exemption under 5 U.S.C.S. § 552(b)(6), which provides that FOIA disclosure requirements do not apply to "personnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy." The federal district court ordered the State Department to produce the redacted information, after finding that any invasion of privacy from the mere act of disclosure of names and addresses would be de minimis and little more than speculation, and was clearly outweighed by the public interest in the safe relocation of returned Haitians. The court of appeals affirmed, although it disagreed with the district court's "de minimis" characterization of the privacy interests in two respects, noting that: (1) plaintiffs wanted the information in order to contact the interviewees directly and question them about their treatment; and (2) the returnees had been promised confidentiality. The United States Supreme Court granted certiorari.

The Supreme Court reversed (502 U.S. 164, 179) . The Court noted that the only issue before it was whether the redaction was lawful (502 U.S. 164, 169) . The Court stated that the FOIA was enacted to facilitate public access to government documents. The statute was designed to pierce the veil of administrative secrecy and to open agency action to the light of public scrutiny; and the strong presumption in favor of disclosure places the burden on the agency to justify the withholding of any requested documents. That burden remains with the agency when it seeks to justify the redaction of identifying information in a particular document, as well as when it seeks to withhold an entire document (502 U.S. 164, 173) . The Court noted that the redaction procedure is expressly authorized by FOIA (5 U.S.C.S. § 552(a)(2), (b)), and consequently that the question in the instant case is whether the government has discharged its burden of demonstrating that the disclosed information adequately served the statutory purpose, and that the release of the redacted material would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of privacy (502 U.S. 164, 173-174) .

The text of the exemption under 5 U.S.C.S. § 552(b)(6) requires the Court to balance the individual's right of privacy against the basic policy of opening agency action to the light of public scrutiny. The Court stated that if the interview summaries were released without the names redacted, highly personal information regarding marital and employment status, children, living conditions, and attempts to enter the United States, would be linked publicly with particular, named individuals. It also stated that although disclosure of that personal information constitutes only a de minimis invasion of privacy when the identities of the interviewees are unknown, the invasion of privacy becomes significant when the personal information is linked to particular interviewees (502 U.S. 164, 175-176) . Moreover, disclosure of the unredacted interview summaries would publicly identify the interviewees as people who cooperated with a State Department investigation of the Haitian government's compliance with its promise to the United States government not to prosecute the returnees, which could subject the interviewees to "embarrassment in their social and community relationships." The Court also considered significant the United States government's promise of confidentiality to the interviewees, and the plaintiffs' stated intention to contact them (502 U.S. 164, 176) . The Court then balanced the importance of the public interest in disclosure against the privacy interests. It noted that the unredacted portions of the documents that had already been released to plaintiffs show the government's performance of its duty to monitor Haitian compliance with the promise not to prosecute the returnees; and reveal the number of interviewed returnees, dates and contents of the interviews, and details about the status of the interviewees. The asserted public interest on which plaintiffs rely, the Court stated, stems not from the disclosure of he redacted information itself, but rather from the hope that thy might use the information to obtain additional knowledge outside the government files. The government argued that this "derivative use" of requested documents is entirely beyond the purpose of the statute, urging the Court to adopt a categorical rule entirely excluding that type of use from the process of the balancing of interests. The Court declined to adopt "such a rigid rule," because there was nothing in the record to suggest that further interviews would produce any additional relevant evidence. The Court stated that mere speculation about hypothetical public benefits cannot outweigh a demonstrably significant invasion of privacy; accordingly, it declined to address the "derivative use" question (502 U.S. 164, 177-178) . The Court was "unmoved" by plaintiffs' asserted interest in ascertaining the veracity of the interview reports, stating that there is not a "scintilla of evidence, either in the documents themselves, or elsewhere in the record, that tends to impugn the integrity of the reports" (502 U.S. 164, 178-179) . The Court further stated that it generally accords government records and official conduct a presumption of legitimacy; if a totally unsupported suggestion that the interest in finding out whether government agents have been truthful justified disclosure of private materials, government agencies would have no defense against requests for production of private information. In conclusion, the Court expressed its satisfaction that the proposed invasion of the serious privacy interest of the Haitian returnees was clearly unwarranted, and reversed the judgment of the court of appeals (502 U.S. 164, 179) .

[c] Federal Case Law Illuminates Interpretation of Public Records Act Exemptions

In American Civil Liberties Union Found. v. Deukmejian (1982) 32 Cal. 3d 440, 186 Cal. Rptr. 235, 651 P.2d 822 , plaintiff brought suit after defendant refused plaintiff's request under the Public Records Act (Gov. Code § 6250 et seq.) to inspect certain informational materials being maintained by defendant. After in camera inspection, the trial court ordered disclosure, with the exception of certain personal identifiers and other data that might reveal confidential sources. Defendant appealed this order.

The Supreme Court reversed. In framing its holding, the Court stated that the Public Records Act was modeled on the 1967 federal Freedom of Information Act (5 U.S.C.S. § 552) and that the judicial construction and legislative history of the federal act served to illuminate its California counterpart (32 Cal. 3d 440, 447) .

[d] Exemption Covers Personal Information

In Pacific Molasses Co. v. National Labor Relations Bd. Reg'l Office (5th Cir. 1978) 577 F.2d 1172 , plaintiff employer sought to obtain copies of its employees' individual union authorization cards from defendant agency under the Freedom of Information Act (5 U.S.C.S. § 552) after the employees had rejected a union election bid. The employer brought an action in the district court after defendant agency refused to release the cards. The district court ordered that the cards be released and defendant agency appealed.

The court of appeals reversed the district court's holding with respect to release of the cards, holding that the cards were exempted from the public disclosure requirements of the Freedom of Information Act under 5 U.S.C.S. § 552(b)(6) as files similar to personnel or medical files, the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of privacy (577 F.2d 1172, 1183) . The court stated that since the files of defendant agency that were affected by this request could not be construed to be medical or personnel files, which are explicitly exempt from compelled disclosure under the FOIA pursuant to 5 U.S.C.S. § 552(b)(6), the court had to determine initially whether the files were "similar files" to medical or personnel files, which are also covered by 5 U.S.C.S. § 552(b)(6) (577 F.2d 1172, 1178-1179) . Noting that the legislative history of 5 U.S.C.S. § 552(b)(6) indicated that "medical" and "personnel" files were used as examples of the type of information that Congress felt was deserving of protection, the court reasoned that because the element shared by personnel and medical files is the personal quality of the information contained in them, the test for determining whether or not the information is a "similar file" for purposes of 5 U.S.C.S. § 552(b)(6) must turn on whether the information is of a sufficiently personal nature (577 F.2d 1172, 1179) . The court additionally relied on Dep't of the Air Force v. Rose (1976) 425 U.S. 352, 376, 96 S. Ct. 1592, 48 L. Ed. 2d 11 [see § 185.25[3][f]], in which the Supreme Court held that disclosure of disciplinary records of Air Force Academy cadets implicates similar privacy values as disclosure of personnel files in that it could result in embarrassment and disgrace as well as practical disadvantages for the individuals involved (577 F.2d 1172, 1179-1180) . The court summarized extensively various appellate court cases dealing with the question of what constitutes a "similar file" and stated that these cases had also placed primary emphasis on the personal nature of the information. The court concluded that the determining factor in deciding whether information contained in government files is protected from disclosure hinges on the personal nature of the information (577 F.2d 1172, 1181) . Applying this conclusion to the case before it, the court stated that the personal preference of employees with regard to whether or not they desire union representation is sufficiently personal in nature to fall within the definition of "similar files" (577 F.2d 1172, 1181) .

The facts and procedural background of Florida Med. Ass'n v. Department of Health, Educ. & Welfare (M.D. Fla. 1979) 479 F. Supp. 1291 , are discussed in § 185.25[3][a]. The information in question involved lists of physicians receiving reimbursements for services provided under Medicare, which plaintiffs were seeking under the Privacy Act of 1974 (5 U.S.C.S. § 552a) to prevent defendant agency from publishing. In determining whether the information to be published by defendant agency fell within the definition of "similar files," the court stated that the common denominator and pivotal characteristic of all information in which the term applies prima facie is the personal quality and nature of that information. Hence, the court stated, information identifiable as applying to some particular individual, and disclosure of which would cause some special embarrassment to that individual is presumptively included within the term "similar files" (479 F. Supp. 1291, 1304) . The court noted additionally that information that would otherwise be disclosible readily after redaction, deleting any personally identifying details that could cause embarrassment, is precisely what 5 U.S.C.S. § 552(b)(6) was intended, at least presumptively, to cover (479 F. Supp. 1291, 1304) .

The court also noted that legislative history of the Freedom of Information Act shows that that act was intended by Congress to include within its scope information within various federal entities, including defendant HEW Department, but that in addition to this, the term "similar files" should be given a broad interpretative scope in order to protect the persons for whom it was designed and to trigger the second, more crucial, step in the court's analysis of the application of 5 U.S.C.S. § 552(b)(6) [see § 185.25[3][f]]. The court stated that courts must look past mere appearance and mere labels, to the actual character of the material in question (479 F. Supp. 1291, 1303) .

Applying these guidelines to the facts before it, the court held that the list of physicians receiving reimbursements was information within the term "similar files" of 5 U.S.C.S. § 552(b)(6). The court noted particularly that defendant agency's unwillingness to disclose the information without personally identifying details emphasized the presumptive inclusion of the information within the term "similar files" (479 F. Supp. 1291, 1304) .

[e] Scope of Exemption May Include Financial Information

The facts and procedural background of Florida Med. Ass'n v. Department of Health, Educ. & Welfare (M.D. Fla. 1979) 479 F. Supp. 1291 , are discussed in § 185.25[3][a]. In that case, the information in question involved annual reimbursements to physicians for services rendered under Medicare, which defendant agency proposed to publish in a manner individually identifying physicians receiving the reimbursements. In discussing the criteria for determining whether the information in a particular case comes, as a prima facie matter, within the scope of the invasion of privacy exemption to the Freedom of Information Act set out in 5 U.S.C.S. § 552(b)(6), the court noted prior case authority stating that personal or personalized financial information may well qualify for the exemption set out in 5 U.S.C.S. § 552(b)(6) under the "similar files" rubric of that exemption, at least insofar as it contains embarrassing disclosures or involves sufficiently intimate details. The court held that the lists of annual reimbursements came within the scope of the exemption (479 F. Supp. 1291, 1304) .

[f] Balancing Test to Determine Clearly Unwarranted Invasion of Privacy

In United States DOD v. FLRA (1994) 510 U.S. 487, 114 S. Ct. 1006, 127 L. Ed. 2d 325 , the Federal Labor Relations Authority (FLRA) ordered various federal agencies to comply with two unions' requests for the names and home addresses of employees within the unions' respective bargaining units, pursuant to the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (5 U.S.C.S. § 7101 et seq.). The FLRA rejected the agencies' argument that disclosure was prohibited by the Privacy Act (5 U.S.C.S. § 552a), and a divided panel of the court of appeals agreed. The court of appeals recognized that Department of Justice v. Reporters Comm. for Freedom of Press (1989) 489 U.S. 749, 109 S. Ct. 1468, 103 L. Ed. 2d 774 , had been interpreted by other courts as limiting the balancing of interests to the public interest in opening agency action to public scrutiny. However, the court was persuaded that the unions' reliance on the Labor Statute for their right to the information justified consideration of the public interests embodied in that statute, and that when so balanced the disclosure would not be a "clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy" for the purposes of 5 U.S.C.S. § 552(b)(6). The Supreme Court granted certiorari, and reversed the court of appeals.

The Court held that 5 U.S.C.S. § 7114(b)(4), relied on by the court of appeals, requires disclosure of information only to the extent that disclosure is not prohibited by law. Because the Privacy Act (5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(b)(2)) prohibits disclosure of records unless disclosure would be required under the FOIA, the proper analysis involves the applicability of the exemption set forth in 5 U.S.C.S. § 552(b)(6) (510 U.S. 487, 495) . In this determination, the Court relied on Department of Justice v. Reporters Comm. for Freedom of Press (1989) 489 U.S. 749, 109 S. Ct. 1468, 103 L. Ed. 2d 774 , for three basic principles concerning the FOIA. First, in evaluating whether a request for information lies within the scope of an FOIA exemption that bars disclosure if it would amount to an invasion of privacy that is to some degree "unwarranted," a court must balance the public interest in disclosure against the interest Congress intended the exemption to protect (510 U.S. 487, 495) . Second, the only relevant public interest in disclosure to be weighed in this balance is the extent to which disclosure would serve the core purpose of the FOIA, which is contributing significantly to public understanding of the operations or activities of the government; that interest is not served by disclosure of information about private citizens that is accumulated in various governmental files but that reveals little or nothing about an agency's own conduct (510 U.S. 487, 495-496) . Third, whether an invasion of privacy is "warranted" cannot turn on the purpose for which the request for information is made (510 U.S. 487, 496) .

Applying these rules to the facts before it, the Court held that the public interest in disclosure was negligible at best, because disclosure would not appreciably further the citizens' right to be informed about what their government is up to. The employees' privacy interest in nondisclosure of their home addresses, which the Court found it unnecessary to quantify exactly, given the minimal interest that it must be weighed against, was held to be substantial enough to outweigh the unions' interest in disclosure (510 U.S. 487, 498-501) .

In Dep't of the Air Force v. Rose (1976) 425 U.S. 352, 96 S. Ct. 1592, 48 L. Ed. 2d 11 , plaintiffs, who were editors of a law review journal researching disciplinary procedures at the military service academies, had been denied access by defendant agency to case summaries of honor and ethics hearings with personal references or other identifying information deleted, which were maintained in the United States Air Force Academy's files. Plaintiffs brought suit in district court to gain access to the records under the Freedom of Information Act (5 U.S.C.S. § 552). The district court granted summary judgment for defendants, holding that the information in question was exempt from the Freedom of Information Act under 5 U.S.C.S. § 552(b)(2) as a matter related solely to the internal personnel rules and practices of an agency. The plaintiffs appealed. The court of appeals reversed the district court's ruling and held that (1) the exemption set out in 5 U.S.C.S. § 552(b)(2) was not applicable, (2) the exemption for unwarranted invasion of privacy set out in 5 U.S.C.S. § 552(b)(6) might be applicable, and (3) on remand defendant agency should produce the requested records for in camera inspection and cooperate with the district court in redacting the records in order to delete personal references and all other identifying information. The Supreme Court granted defendants petition for a writ of certiorari.

The Supreme Court affirmed the holding of the court of appeals. The Court held that the requested records were not personnel files, but were "similar files" for purposes of 5 U.S.C.S. § 552(b)(6) (425 U.S. 352, 376) . The court stated that the Congress had not intended for 5 U.S.C.S. § 552(b)(6) to mandate a blanket exemption for disclosure of personnel and similar files, but had sought through the requirement of an unwarranted invasion of privacy to construct an exemption that would require a balancing of the individual's right of privacy against the purpose of the FOIA to open agency action to the light of public scrutiny (425 U.S. 352, 372) . The Court held that Congress had charged the courts with applying this balancing procedure in the case of pure medical and personnel files as well as "similar files" covered by 5 U.S.C.S. § 552(b)(6) (425 U.S. 352, 372-373) . The Court also stated that the legislative history of 5 U.S.C.S. § 552(b)(6) clearly shows that it was not intended to protect mere possibilities of threats to privacy interests (425 U.S. 352, 380).

With regard to the information in the case before it, the Court concluded that plaintiffs' request for access to summaries with personal references or other identifying information deleted respected the confidentiality interests embodied in 5 U.S.C.S. § 552(b)(6) (425 U.S. 352, 380) . The Court noted, however, that what constitutes identifying information must be weighed not only from the viewpoint of the public, but also from the vantage of persons who would come to have access to the information through the disclosures and who would have been familiar as fellow cadets or Academy staff with other aspects of the affected individuals' careers. Thus, the Court upheld the qualification that if deletion of personal references or other identifying information is not sufficient to safeguard privacy, then the information should not be disclosed (425 U.S. 352, 380-381) . The Court also stated, however, that in making its determination, the district court could discount the probability that disclosure of all or parts of the requested information will lead to an unwarranted invasion of privacy in light of the Academy's tradition of keeping identities confidential within the Academy (425 U.S. 352, 381) .

The Court concluded by noting that while redaction cannot eliminate all of the risks of identifiability, the exemptions under the Freedom of Information Act were meant to be practical concepts, and 5 U.S.C.S. § 552(b)(6) does not protect against every incidental invasion of privacy, but only against clearly unwarranted invasions of privacy (425 U.S. 352, 381-382) .

Gov. Code § 6254(c), which sets out the invasion of privacy exemption to the disclosure requirement of the Public Records Act (Gov. Code § 6250 et seq.), generally tracks the language of 5 U.S.C.S. § 552(b)(6) but differs from the federal statute in that it exempts disclosure that would constitute an unwarranted invasion of privacy without using the term "clearly" [compare Gov. Code § 6254(c) with 5 U.S.C.S. § 552(b)(6)]. It appears, therefore, that the language in Department of Air Force cited above that emphasizes the use of the term "clearly" in 5 U.S.C.S. § 552(b)(6) is not persuasive authority in interpreting the Public Records Act. However, since the remaining language of Gov. Code §

6254(c) is nearly identical to the language of 5 U.S.C.S. § 552(b)(6), the basic points may be persuasive authority in interpreting the Public Records Act.

NOTE:

However, in a case involving a request to a city under the Public Records Act, Gov. Code § 6250 et seq., for deposition transcripts from concluded lawsuits against the city, the court of appeal held that disclosure of the depositions was required by the Public Records Act and denied the city's petition for writ of mandate. The court of appeal rejected an argument by the city that the Civil Discovery Act, Code Civ. Proc. § 2016 et seq., exempts depositions from the definition of public records in the Public Records Act. The court then considered whether the public interest served by not making the record public outweighed the public interest served by disclosure of the record. The claim that discovery would undermine the adversarial system was not convincing. As for the public interest served by disclosure, the requested depositions all related to claims of excessive force in the use of police dogs by the city, thus addressing an issue of the policy adopted to establish how and when police dogs are used. The court concluded that disclosure would have the beneficial purpose of either effecting a change in an improper policy, or showing the public that the city's policies are not in violation of the law [City of Los Angeles v. Superior Court (1996) 41 Cal. App. 4th 1083, 1087, 1090-1091, 49 Cal. Rptr. 2d 35] . In a subsequent case, the court of appeal similarly held that the California Public Records Act required disclosure of the names of peace officers who fired shots at a citizen [New York Times Co. v. Superior Court (1997) 52 Cal. App. 4th 97, 103-104, 60 Cal. Rptr. 2d 410] .

[g] De Novo Determination by Court

The facts and procedural background of Dep't of the Air Force v. Rose (1976) 425 U.S. 352, 96 S. Ct. 1592, 48 L. Ed. 2d 11 , are discussed in § 185.25[3][f]. The defendant agency argued that a statement by the court of appeal, recognizing that some harm might result to the subjects of the information, already demonstrated the ineffectiveness of excising names and other identifying information from the materials in question as a means of preserving the confidentiality of persons named in the records, and therefore obviated the need for in camera inspection. The Supreme Court replied that Congress had vested the courts with the responsibility ultimately to determine de novo any dispute concerning whether or not the exemption to the Freedom of Information Act set out in 5 U.S.C.S. § 552(b)(6) was properly invoked in order to constrain agencies from withholding nonexempt matters. The Court noted that no court had seen the records and stated that the function of examination must be discharged in the first instance by the district court on remand (425 U.S. 352, 379-380) .

NOTE:

Gov. Code §§ 6258 and 6259, which set out remedies for violations of the Public Records Act (Gov. Code § 6250 et seq.), do not explicitly provide for de novo determination by the courts as does 5 U.S.C.S. § 552(a)(4)(B), which sets out remedies for violations of the Freedom of Information Act. Thus, it appears that Department of Air Force v. Rose is not persuasive authority in interpreting the Public Records Act.

[h] Subject of Information May Intervene in Freedom of Information Act Action

In Providence Journal Co. v. Federal Bureau of Investigation (D.R.I. 1978) 460 F. Supp. 762 , plaintiff, a newspaper, brought an action against defendant agency to obtain disclosure of logs and memoranda derived from certain illegal wiretaps conducted by defendant agency. Defendant agency argued that disclosure of these materials was subject to 5 U.S.C.S. § 552(b)(7), which exempts from the FOIA information collected for law enforcement purposes, disclosure of which would constitute a clear invasion of privacy. The intervenor in the case, on whose premises the wiretaps had been conducted, moved to intervene under Fed. R. Civ. P., Rule 24(a) (intervention) in order to protect his privacy interest in the materials. The intervenor asserted applicability of the exemption to the Freedom of Information Act for medical, personnel, or similar files, disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of privacy set out in 5

U.S.C.S. § 553(b)(6).

The district court held that the intervenor was entitled to intervene in the case, but ruled against him on the merits. The district court stated that the intervenor undoubtedly presented a colorable claim of interest in preserving the privacy of the materials in question as required by Fed. R. Civ. P., Rule 24(a), and noted that the right of intervention in FOIA actions was well established (460 F. Supp. 762, 765) . Plaintiff argued that the intervention under Fed. R. Civ. P., Rule 24(a) was nevertheless precluded because defendant adequately represented the intervenor's interests. Against this argument, the court stated that Fed. R. Civ. P., Rule 24(a) requires no showing of actual inadequacy of representation (460 F. Supp. 762, 766) . In this case, the court stated after having been subjected to three years of electronic surveillance by defendant agency and having been successfully prosecuted by the government for various federal offenses, the intervenor need not now rely on any supposed community of interest between himself and the government in keeping the fruits of its electronic surveillance confidential (460 F. Supp. 762, 766) . The court stated further that the intervenor had a particular, unique interest with regard to the materials in question that was different from the more general interest of government in protecting privacy and fulfilling its obligations under the Freedom of Information Act. The court noted that no one can better assert an interest in personal privacy than the person whose privacy is at stake, and stated that the personal nature of the privacy interest makes intervention especially appropriate and denial of intervention with the resulting dependence on the government especially odious. The court also noted that the reasons, such as having a unified and coherent expression of the public interest, that might lead the court to rely exclusively on the government's advocacy of public interest are not involved in this case (460 F. Supp. 762, 766) . Under these circumstances, the court stated, there was no need for the intervenor to show that his claim under 5 U.S.C.S. § 552(b)(6) was sufficiently different from the government's claim under 5 U.S.C.S. § 552(b) (7) in order to establish inadequacy of representation (460 F. Supp. 762, 766) .

In answer to plaintiff's argument that even if the intervenor had standing under Fed. R. Civ. P., Rule 24(a), he could not intervene because the court could not grant him relief, the court stated that a finding that one of the exemptions to the FOIA was applicable would entitle the intervenor to relief under the Privacy Act (5 U.S.C.S. § 552a) (460 F. Supp. 762, 766-768) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Balancing Test to Determine Clearly Unwarranted Invasion of Privacy

The facts and procedural background of Florida Med. Ass'n v. Department of Health, Educ. & Welfare (M.D. Fla. 1979) 479 F. Supp. 1291 , are discussed in § 185.25[3][a]. After determining that the information in question was covered by the FOIA, the court balanced the competing public and private interests, that is, the public interest in knowing the amount of public funds spent in reimbursing Medicare providers, as contrasted to the privacy interests of individuals receiving Medicare reimbursements (479 F. Supp. 1291, 1304) . The court concluded that since public interest in disclosure of the amounts of Medicare reimbursements would not be furthered by individually identifying the recipients, defendant agency's proposed disclosure was subject to the exemption under 5 U.S.C.S. § 552(b)(6) as a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy, at least insofar as the disclosure would include personal identification (479 F. Supp. 1291, 1306-1307) .

CODE § 1798 et seq.*)].

[EITHER, if action is against federal agency]

A. Use of Information Must Be Compatible With Purpose for Which Information Was Collected. The Privacy Act (5 U.S.C.S. § 552a) defines routine use of a record for which information may be disclosed, despite the disclosure prohibition of 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(b), as the use of such a record for a purpose that is compatible with the purpose for which it is collected (5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(a)(7); see 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(b)(3) (routine use exemption)).

B. Use of Information Must Have Been Published by Agency. In order to qualify as a routine use of information that is exempt from the prohibition of disclosure set out in 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(b), the agency's use of the information must have been published in the Federal Register in the agency's statutorily required notice of the records that it maintains, and additionally must have been published in the Federal Register 30 days before the annual notice if it is a new use (Parks v. United States Internal Revenue Serv. (10th Cir. 1980) 618 F.2d 677, 681-682 ; see 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(e)(4)(D), (11)).

[Optional] C. Published Use for Litigation Purposes Does Not Create Blanket Exemption. A routine use published by an agency authorizing disclosure during the course of litigation does not automatically exempt all information in the system of records from the prohibition of disclosure set out in 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(b) whenever litigation occurs, but applies only to the disclosure of an individual's otherwise protected file during the course of litigation with that specific individual (Stiles v. Atlanta Gas Light Co. (N.D. Ga. 1978) 453 F. Supp. 798, 799-800) .

[OR, if action is against state or local agency]

A. Use of Information Must Be Compatible With Purpose for Which Information Was Collected. To exempt a disclosure to a person or another agency when the disclosure is necessary for the transferee agency to perform its legal duties from the prohibition of disclosure set out in Civ. Code § 1798.24, the use for which the information is disclosed must be compatible with a purpose for which the information was collected (Civ. Code § 1798.24(e)).

[Optional] B. Compatible Use With Regard to Law Enforcement or Regulatory Agency. With respect to information transferred from a law enforcement or regulatory agency, or information transferred to another law enforcement or regulatory agency, a use is compatible if the use of the information requested is needed in an investigation of unlawful activity under the jurisdiction of the requesting agency or for licensing, certification, or regulatory purposes by that agency (Civ. Code § 1798.24(e)).

C. Use of Information Must Have Been Published by Agency or Accounted For. To exempt a disclosure to a person or another agency when the disclosure is necessary for the transferee agency to perform its legal duties from the prohibition of disclosure set out in Civ. Code § 1798.24, the use for which the information is disclosed must be one that was previously published by the disclosing agency with the Office of Information Practices or accounted for in accordance with Civ. Code § 1798.25 (Civ. Code § 1798.24(e); see Civ. Code §§ 1798.9, 1798.10 (notice of use of information); see also Civ. Code § 1798.25 (accounting of each disclosure)); Parks v. United States Internal Revenue Serv. (10th Cir. 1980) 618 F.2d 677, 681-682 (interpreting 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(e)(4)(D), (11), whose provisions are similar to notice requirements of Civ. Code §§ 1798.9, 1798.10).

[2] Comments

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that the routine use exemption to the disclosure prohibition of 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(b), as set out in 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(b)(3), or the necessary disclosure exemption to the disclosure prohibition of Civ. Code § 1798.24, as set out in Civ. Code § 1798.24(e) does not apply to plaintiff's case. Counsel should use the first alternative Paragraphs A through C in an action against federal agencies and use the second alternative Paragraphs A through C in an action against a state or local agency.

These points and authorities should be used in combination with introductory points and authorities showing that plaintiff, defendant, and the information in question are covered by the Privacy Act or Information Practices Act [see § 185.21], and with introductory points and authorities setting out the basic point that disclosure of information concerning plaintiff from an agency's records is prohibited by 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(b) or Civ. Code § 1798.24 [see § 185.24].

If the action is a state action under the Information Practices Act, and counsel is using a paragraph of the form that includes federal case law, this form should be used in combination with introductory points and authorities showing that federal case law interpreting the Privacy Act is persuasive authority in interpreting parallel provisions of the Information Practices Act [see § 185.20]. Counsel should compare the analogous provisions of the Information Practices and the federal Privacy Acts and note any differences in language when using the federal case law in this form as authority for an interpretation of the Information Practices Act.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Such argument should show that the agency's disclosure was beyond the scope of any of the routine uses or anticipated disclosures for the information in question published by the agency pursuant to 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(e)(4), (11) or Civ. Code §§ 1798.9, 1798.10. Counsel may also wish to add argument supporting the contention that the published routine use or anticipated disclosure did not justify the disclosure because it was arbitrary or capricious when the facts warrant such a contention [see Parks v. United States Internal Revenue Serv. (10th Cir. 1980) 618 F.2d 677, 682 (dicta); see also § 185.26[3][a]].

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of a government agency's improper disclosure of information concerning plaintiff. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Routine Use Must Be Noticed in Federal Register

The facts and procedural background of Parks v. United States Internal Revenue Serv. (10th Cir. 1980) 618 F.2d 677 , are discussed in § 185.24[3][a]. The defendant agency argued that its disclosure to its own officers and employees of personnel information to pinpoint agency employees who had not pledged to buy savings bonds constituted a routine use of the information, which is exempt from the prohibition of disclosure set out in 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(b) under 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(b)(3). The court of appeal noted that the former version of 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(e) (amended in 1984) established notice and comment rulemaking procedures for determining what constitutes a routine use of information from agency record systems that required the agency to: (1) publish annually in the Federal Register a notice of the records and systems of records maintained by the agency including routine use of the information in the records, categories of users, and purpose of such use; (2) publish any new use or intended use of the information in the Federal Register 30 days before the annual notice; and (3) provide members of the public an opportunity to comment in writing on the proposed new uses (618 F.2d 677, 681-682) . The court stated that with these provisions, Congress had intended that each agency describe in advance of disclosure the uses of information that the agency considers routine. The court stated further that the courts may consider whether the agency acted arbitrarily and capriciously in designating certain uses as routine, but that it is the agency and not the courts that must make the determination at first (618 F.2d 677, 682) . Noting that defendant agency's published uses did not include the use at issue, the court concluded that plaintiffs had stated a cause of action based on disclosure of the information (618 F.2d 677, 682) .

[b] Published Use for Litigation Purposes Does Not Create Blanket Exemption

The facts and procedural background of Stiles v. Atlanta Gas Light Co. (N.D. Ga. 1978) 453 F. Supp. 798 , are discussed in § 185.28[3][a]. During litigation between plaintiffs and their employer, defendant employer had issued a subpoena to a third-party federal agency for production of certain records relating to plaintiffs. The agency resisted the subpoena on the grounds that producing the records would be a violation of the Privacy Act. In response, defendant argued that one of the routine uses for the requested materials that the agency had published included disclosures in the course of litigation or settlement negotiations, and that the materials requested in the present litigation were encompassed within this routine use. The court of appeal held that the agency's routine use exception did not mean that any time any case was in litigation, all files within that covered system of records would automatically lose their protection under the Privacy Act. Rather, the court held that the exception applies only to the disclosure of an individual's otherwise protected file during the course of litigation with that specific individual (453 F. Supp. 798, 799) .

[c] Use of Information Must Be Compatible With Purpose for Which Information Was Collected

In addition to requiring that the purpose for a disclosure be compatible with a purpose for which the information was originally collected and that the disclosure have been noticed pursuant to Civ. Code §§ 1798.9, 1798.10 (notice required to be filed with Office of Information Practices), or accounted for in accordance with Civ. Code § 1798.25 (accounting of each disclosure), the exemption set out in Civ. Code § 1798.24(e) also restricts the disclosures it permits to disclosures to a person or another agency and requires that the disclosure or transfer be necessary for the transferee agency to perform its legal duties [see Civ. Code § 1798.24(e)]. No such restrictions or additional requirements are included in the exemption set out in 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(b)(3). Thus, in applying federal case law to Civ. Code § 1798.24(e), counsel should consider that the exemption in that statute appears to be more restrictive than the exemption in 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(b)(3).

Internal Disclosure for Blacklisting Prohibited. The prohibition on disclosure of information set out in 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(b) also applies to internal agency disclosures to officials or employees who do not need the information in the regular performance of their work, particularly when the information is being used to pressure employees who do not comply with the organizational norms and standards for some reason, such as not participating in savings bond drives or charity campaigns (Parks v. United States Internal Revenue Serv. (10th Cir. 1980) 618 F.2d 677, 681 ; see S. Rep. No. 93-1183, 93d Cong., 2d Sess.). [a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that internal agency disclosures of information concerning plaintiff agency employee from the agency's files are not exempt from the prohibition of disclosure of such information set out in 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(b) or Civ. Code § 1798.24 because the purpose of the disclosure was to enable the persons receiving it to improperly pinpoint plaintiff in order to pressure him or her to conform to certain agency norms, and this purpose was not a normal part of the duties of the persons receiving the disclosure. If the point in this form is used in a state action, it should include the optional language comparing the pertinent state and federal provisions. The form may be used together with points and authorities supporting the contention that defendant agency had disclosed information concerning plaintiff from its files [see § 185.24] when defendant agency has contended that the disclosure in question was exempt under 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(b)(1) as a disclosure to officers and employees or volunteers, or Civ. Code § 1798.24(d) as a disclosure to officers, employees, attorneys, agents, or volunteers of the disclosing agency that is necessary for the persons receiving the disclosure to perform their normal duties.

These points and authorities should be used in combination with introductory points and authorities showing that plaintiff, defendant, and the information in question are covered by the Privacy Act or Information Practices Act [see § 185.21]. If the action is a state action under the Information Practices Act, and counsel is using a paragraph of the form that includes federal case law, the form should be used in combination with introductory points and authorities showing that federal case law interpreting the Privacy Act is persuasive authority in interpreting parallel provisions of the Information Practices Act [see § 185.20]. Counsel should compare the analogous provisions of the Information Practices Act and the federal Privacy Act and should note any differences in language when using the federal case law in this form as authority for an interpretation of the Information Practices Act.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. The argument should show that the information was disclosed to officers, employees, attorneys, agents, or volunteers of defendant agency, as appropriate, to enable the recipients of the disclosure to pressure plaintiff into participating in activities sponsored by defendant, and that such pressuring was not properly a part of the recipients' duties.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of the character of the internal disclosure as being beyond the scope of the duties of the agency employees receiving it. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Internal Disclosure for Blacklisting Prohibited

The facts and procedural background of Parks v. United States Internal Revenue Serv. (10th Cir. 1980) 618 F.2d 677 , are discussed in § 185.24[3][a]. This case involved disclosure to officers and employees of defendant agency itself of information from plaintiffs' personnel files showing that plaintiffs had not pledged to buy savings bonds. The court of appeals addressed the question of whether plaintiffs had stated a proper substantive claim under the Privacy Act (5 U.S.C.S. § 552a). The court noted that plaintiffs had alleged that the information disclosed by defendant agency was not needed by the officers and employees who received the disclosures in the regular performance of their duty. In a footnote, the court cited a senate report stating that one of the purposes of the Privacy Act is to halt the internal blacklisting that frequently occurs in federal agencies and on federal installations of persons who do not comply with the organizational norms and standards for some reason, such as not participating in savings bond drives or charity campaigns (618 F.2d 677, 681 n.1). The court stated that while it cannot be disputed that Congress has expressly held out nonparticipation in savings bond programs as an example of information not needed in the performance of federal employees' regular duties, the court was not saying that this prevented defendants from arguing to the contrary that disclosure of savings bond information was necessary to the performance of the duties of those employees receiving the disclosure. The court noted that in so arguing, defendants relied on an executive order establishing an interdepartmental committee consisting of the heads of all federal executive-branch agencies and charged with formulating a plan of organization and sales promotion of savings bonds. The court held, however, that the order was at odds with the stated purpose of the Privacy Act and did not justify the use of information from the personnel files of agency employees in order to achieve its aims. Thus, the court concluded that the order would not be a ground for dismissal of the plaintiff's complaint (618 F.2d 677, 681) .

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief. It should be combined with the general points and authorities in § 185.21 and with points and authorities supporting the basic contention that disclosure of information is prohibited by law, as set out in § 185.24.]

THE MERE ISSUANCE OF A SUBPOENA IN DISCOVERY PROCEEDINGS DOES NOT RENDER A DISCLOSURE OF INFORMATION CONCERNING THE PLAINTIFF EXEMPT FROM THE 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(b) PROHIBITION OF DISCLOSURE AS AN ALLOWABLE DISCLOSURE MADE PURSUANT TO COURT ORDER UNDER 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(b)(11).

Subpoena Issued Without Court Order Does Not Exempt Disclosure From Disclosure Prohibition. Mere issuance in discovery proceedings of a subpoena, which is always subject to the power of the court to quash or limit, is not sufficient to exempt the information sought from the disclosure prohibition of the Privacy Act (5 U.S.C.S. § 552a) as a court-ordered disclosure allowed under 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(b)(11), unless the court for compelling reasons issues an order for production (Stiles v. Atlanta Gas Light Co. (N.D. Ga. 1978) 453 F. Supp. 798, 800) .

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that the issuance of a subpoena during discovery proceedings, without a court order compelling compliance, does not bring a disclosure within the exemption to the Privacy Act's prohibition of disclosure for disclosures made pursuant to court order, as set out in 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(b)(11). These points and authorities may be used, in combination with introductory points and authorities showing that plaintiff, defendant, and the information in question are covered by the Privacy Act [see § 185.21] and with points and authorities supporting the contention that defendant agency improperly disclosed information concerning plaintiff from its files under 5 U.S.C.S. § 552(b) [see § 185.24], when defendant agency has contended that issuance of a subpoena caused the information in question to be exempt from the disclosure prohibition of 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(b) as a disclosure pursuant to a court order, under 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(b)(11).

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] No State Action for Disclosure Pursuant to Subpoena

Civ. Code § 1798.24(k) of the Information Practices Act (Civ. Code §§ 1798-1798.78) (apparent California equivalent of federal Privacy Act) provides that disclosure of information to any person pursuant to subpoena, court order, or other compulsory legal process is permitted if specified conditions are met. It therefore appears that these points and authorities cannot be used in a state action under the Information Practices Act.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Subpoena Without Court Order Does Not Render Disclosure Exempt From Disclosure Prohibition

Stiles v. Atlanta Gas Light Co. (N.D. Ga. 1978) 453 F. Supp. 798 , involved an action under the Veterans' Reemployment Rights Act (38 U.S.C.S. § 2021 et seq.). Defendant issued a subpoena directing an officer of the Labor-Management Services Administration, a federal agency (hereinafter, the agency), to produce at a noticed deposition all documents relating to complaints or requests filed with the agency by individuals who had sought assistance from the agency pertaining to their rights under Veterans' Reemployment Rights Act, within a specified period. The agency moved to quash the subpoena, arguing that production of the requested documents was prohibited by 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(b) and that it had received no prior written consents from any persons whose records might be covered by the subpoena. Defendant argued that even if 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a did cover the requested materials, its subpoena was an order of a court of competent jurisdiction that exempted the information from the disclosure prohibition of 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(b), as a disclosure pursuant to court order, under 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(b)(11).

The district court held that 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(b)(11) provides for those cases in which, for compelling reasons, the court specifically directs that a record be disclosed and that mere issuance in discovery proceedings of a subpoena, which is always subject to the power of the court to quash or limit, does not meet this standard. Thus, the court concluded that 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a would prevent disclosure in the case before it unless the court specifically ordered the materials disclosed. The court finally held that under the facts of the case there were no compelling reasons for ordering disclosure (453 F. Supp. 798, 800) .

[1] FORM Opposing Contention That Government Agency Improperly Refused Amendment or Expungement of Record under Privacy Act of 1974--Records Not Retrievable Under Requester's Name or Other Personal Identifier [5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(a)(5), (d)(2)]

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE COURT SHOULD NOT ORDER DEFENDANT AGENCY TO AMEND OR EXPUNGE THE RECORDS REQUESTED BY PLAINTIFF BECAUSE THE RECORDS ARE NOT RETRIEVABLE UNDER PLAINTIFF'S NAME OR OTHER PERSONAL IDENTIFIER, A REQUIREMENT UNDER THE PRIVACY ACT OF 1974.

Records Must Be Retrievable Under Requestor's Name or Identifier. Under the Privacy Act of 1974, records that are not retrievable under the requester's name or other personal identifier are not accessible to that requester, and Privacy Act remedies of amendment and expungement are inapplicable to a report that is not accessible under the Act (5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(a)(5), (d)(2); Baker v. Department of Navy (9th Cir. 1987) 814 F.2d 1381, 1383-1385) .

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a government agency improperly refused to allow an individual to amend or expunge a record concerning the requester contained in the agency's files, when the record was not retrievable under the requester's name or other personal identifier [see 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(a)(5) (record must be retrievable by name or identifier), (d)(2) (access permitted from agency maintaining "system of records"); see also Baker v. Department of Navy (9th Cir. 1987) 814 F.2d 1381, 1383-1385] .

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Therefore, counsel should discuss evidence showing that the information requested could not be retrieved through use of the requester's name or other personal identifier.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Records Must Be Retrievable Under Requestor's Name or Identifier

In Baker v. Department of Navy (9th Cir. 1987) 814 F.2d 1381 , a civilian employee filed a civil suit against the Department of the Navy, alleging that the Navy violated the Privacy Act of 1974. While employed by the Navy as a supervisory psychologist, plaintiff supervised a certain researcher, who filed an administrative grievance against her based on her treatment of him. An investigator filed a report in the employee grievance file under the name of the researcher, without cross-referencing it to plaintiff's name or file. Plaintiff claimed that the report was used as the basis for several adverse personnel actions, including demotion, a letter of reprimand, and a "marginal" performance rating. Subsequently, the Navy restored her to her supervisory position, expunged the letter of reprimand, and raised her performance rating to "outstanding." However, fearing further adverse effects of the report, plaintiff submitted a request to receive a copy of the report under the Freedom of Information Act (5 U.S.C.S. § 552) and the Privacy Act (5 U.S.C.S. § 552(a)). She eventually gained access to an edited version of the report under the Freedom of Information Act, then submitted a request to expunge the report from the employee's file under the Privacy Act. The commanding officer denied her request on the ground that the record was not retrievable under her name, and therefore was not a record covered by the Privacy Act. The district court granted defendant's motion for summary judgment on the ground that the report does not qualify as a record within a "system of records" under the Privacy Act, and that the Privacy Act remedies of amendment and expungement are inapplicable to a report that is not accessible under the Act. Plaintiff appealed.

The United States Court of Appeal affirmed, holding that an individual's ability to obtain access to a record under the Freedom of Information Act, or because of personal knowledge of its existence in a certain file, will not provide that individual with access to the record or to any remedies under the Privacy Act (814 F.2d 1381, 1385) . Pursuant to 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(d)(2), an individual is permitted to request amendment of a record pertaining to that individual from an agency that maintains a "system of records." 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(a)(5) defines a "system of records" as "a group of any records under the control of any agency from which information is retrieved by the name of the individual or by some identifying number, symbol, or other identifying particular assigned to the individual." The legislative history of the Privacy Act indicates that Congress was primarily concerned with the potential misuse of personally identifiable information stored in computers. Consequently, the definition of "system of records" makes coverage under the Act dependent on the method of retrieval of a record, rather than its substantive content. Although that narrow reach of accessibility has been criticized for undermining the congressional purpose of access to records an agency maintains on individuals, Congress has not responded to those criticisms. Accordingly, plaintiff is unable to sustain her claim of a right to amend or expunge the report on the ground that it is accessible under the Privacy Act. Moreover, an amendment to a record that is inaccessible under the Privacy Act cannot be made even if the record is otherwise accessible, such as in this particular case, under the Freedom of Information Act. The subsections that grant access to records (5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(d)(1)), permit requests for amendment (5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(d)(2)), and require that records used in making determinations about individuals are maintained in a reasonably accurate and complete manner (5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(e)(5)), all apply to an agency that "maintains a system of records" (814 F.2d 1381, 1384) . The statutory language therefore suggests that the scope of accessibilty and the scope of amendment are coextensive (814 F.2d 1381, 1384-1385) . Although plaintiff raised a legitimate concern that agencies can easily circumvent the Privacy Act by neglecting to index a file under a particular name, she failed to set forth any evidence to support an allegation of evasive tactics by the Navy that would substantiate the theory and preclude summary judgment (814 F.2d 1381, 1385) .

§ 185.30 Opposing Contention That Government Agency Violated Privacy Act of 1974 [5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(b)(1)] or Information Practices Act of 1977 [Civ. Code § 1798.24(d)]--Disclosure of Social Security Numbers to Department of Motor Vehicles Authorized [42 U.S.C.S. § 405(c)(2)(C)(i)]

[1] FORM Opposing Contention That Government Agency Violated Privacy Act of 1974 [5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(b)(1)] or Information Practices Act of 1977 [Civ. Code § 1798.24(d)]--Disclosure of Social Security Numbers to Department of Motor Vehicles Authorized [42 U.S.C.S. § 405(c)(2)(C)(i)]

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE DEPARTMENT OF MOTOR VEHICLE POLICY REQUIRING APPLICANTS FOR NEW OR RENEWAL LICENSES TO OBTAIN AND DISCLOSE SOCIAL SECURITY NUMBERS DOES NOT VIOLATE APPLICANT'S RIGHT TO PRIVACY UNDER THE FEDERAL PRIVACY ACT OF 1974 OR THE STATE INFORMATION PRACTICES ACT OF 1977.

A. Privacy Act of 1974. It is unlawful for any federal, tate or local government agency to deny any individual any right, benefit, or privilege provided by law because of such individual's refusal to disclose his or her social security number (5 U.S.C.S. § 552a).

B. Exception to Privacy Act for Disclosure of Social Security. Any state may, in the administration of any tax, general public assistance, drivers' license or motor vehicle registration law within its jurisdiction, use the Social Security numbers issued by the Commissioner of Social Security for the purpose of establishing the identification of individuals affected by such law, and may require any individual who is or who appears to be so affected to furnish to the state agency having administrative responsibility for the law involved, the Social Security numbers issued to him or her (42 U.S.C.S. § 405(c)(2)(C)(i)).

C. Exception to Privacy Act Authorizes Disclosure of Applicants Social Security Numbers to Department of Motor Vehicles on Drivers' License Applications. Under 42 U.S.C.S. § 405(c)(2)(C)(i), the Department of Motor Vehicles may properly require applicants for new and renewal drivers' licenses to obtain and disclose their Social Security numbers to the Department (Nowlin v. Department of Motor Vehicles (1997) 53 Cal. App. 4th 1529, 1536, 62

Cal. Rptr. 2d 409).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that the Department of Motor Vehicles violated the Privacy Act of 1974 [5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(b)(1)] or Information Practices Act of 1977 [Civ. Code § 1798.24(d)] by requiring applicants for new or renewal drivers' licenses to disclose their Social Security numbers to the Department [42 U.S.C.S. § 405(c)(2)(C)(i)].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should provide facts showing that the Department of Motor Vehicles required applicants for new or renewal drivers' licenses to disclose their Social Security numbers to the Department and argue that the exception to the Privacy Act of 1974, 42 U.S.C.S. § 405(c)(2)(C)(i), authorizes the disclosure.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Exception to Privacy Act Authorizes Disclosure of Applicants Social Security Numbers to Department of Motor Vehicles on Drivers' License Applications.

In Nowlin v. Department of Motor Vehicles (1997) 53 Cal. App. 4th 1529, 62 Cal. Rptr. 2d 409 plaintiff by administrative writ of mandate, requested the trial court to enjoin the Department of Motor Vehicles (DMV) from (1) refusing to accept plaintiffs; applications for noncommercial drivers' licenses, identification cards, or name changes, and (2) refusing to issue a drivers' license to plaintiffs. Plaintiffs alleged that they did not possess and have never possessed Social Security numbers (SSNs). The trial court held that the DMV was prohibited from requiring SSNs to be disclosed by applicants for new and renewal drivers' licenses and disclosing that information to other state agencies.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that although the Privacy Act of 1974 (5 U.S.C.S. § 552a) ordinarily precludes the collection of SSNs, under 42 U.S.C.S. § 405(c)(2)(C)(i), the Department of Motor Vehicles may properly require applicants for new and renewal drivers' licenses to obtain and disclose their SSNs to the DMV. This exception or alteration to the Privacy Act permits states to require persons to provide SSNs for tax, general public assistance, drivers' licenses and motor vehicle registration [see Lauderbach v. Zolin (1995) 35 Cal. App. 4th 578, 585 (DMV is not only authorized, but obligated, to require applicants for original and renewal drivers' licenses, ID cards and vehicle registrations to supply their SSNs for identification purposes)]. The court further found that since the DMV required applicants to disclose SSNs on their applications, by inference, the DMV was entitled to require those who do not have SSNs to obtain them (53 Cal. App. 4th 1529, 1536) .

A. Jurisdiction. An individual may bring a civil action against a federal agency in the federal district court whenever the agency fails to properly maintain records concerning the individual, which may be used as the basis of a determination concerning the individual, in such a way as to assure fairness to the individual in making the determination and consequently an adverse determination is made; or the agency fails to comply with any other provision of the Privacy Act (5 U.S.C.S. § 552a) or any rule promulgated thereunder, in such a way as to have an adverse effect on an individual (see 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(g)(1)(C), (D)).

[EITHER]

B. Agency's Duty to Properly Maintain Records. Each agency that maintains a system of records shall maintain all records that are used by the agency in making any determination about any individual with such accuracy, relevance, timeliness, and completeness as is reasonably necessary to assure fairness to the individual in the determination (5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(e)(5)).

[AND/OR]

C. Agency's Duty to Assure Accuracy of Dissemination. Before disseminating any record about an individual to any person other than an agency, each agency that maintains a system of records shall make reasonable efforts to assure that such records are accurate, complete, timely, and relevant for agency purposes, unless the dissemination is required by the Freedom of Information Act (5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(e)(6); see 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(b)(2)).

[EITHER]

B. Agency's Duty to Properly Maintain Records. Each agency shall maintain all records, to the maximum extent possible, with accuracy, relevance, timeliness, and completeness when the records are used to make any determination about the individual (see Civ. Code § 1798.18).

[AND/OR]

C. Agency's Duty to Assure Accuracy of Dissemination. When an agency transfers a record outside of state government, it shall correct, update, withhold, or delete any portion of the record that it knows or has reason to believe is inaccurate or untimely (Civ. Code § 1798.18).

[AND/OR]

D. Only Relevant Information May Be Maintained. Each agency shall maintain in its records only personal information that is relevant and necessary to accomplish a purpose of the agency required or authorized by the California Constitution or statute, or mandated by the federal government (Civ. Code § 1798.14).

Code § 1798.48*).

[CONTINUE, whether federal or state action]

[Optional] H. Information Must Be Relevant to Published Use. Information maintained by an agency is not relevant and necessary to accomplish a legitimate agency purpose unless the fact that the agency is maintaining the records containing the information, the individuals about whom such records are maintained, and the routine uses to which the records are put are properly published in the Federal Register (Chapman v. National Aeronautics & Space Admin. (5th Cir. 1982) 682 F.2d 526, 530) . The provisions of the Privacy Act interpreted by Chapman are comparable to analogous provisions of the Information Practices Act (compare 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(e)(4)(C), (D), and (I), with former Civ. Code § 1798.10(b), (c) (now see Civ. Code § 1798.10).

[Optional] I. Maintenance of Information in Private Notes Is Improper. A supervisor's private notes reflecting negative evaluations of a federal employee's performance may not be used as a basis of an adverse determination concerning the employee unless the notes have been timely included in the employee's records (Chapman v. National Aeronautics & Space Admin. (5th Cir. 1982) 682 F.2d 526, 529) . The provisions of the Privacy Act interpreted by Chapman are comparable to analogous provisions of the Information Practices Act (compare 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(e)(5) with Civ. Code § 1798.18).

[Counsel may add the points and authorities showing that plaintiff is entitled to amendment, alteration, or deletion of the improperly maintained information, as set out in § 185.33. If the action is against a federal agency, counsel may add the points and authorities showing improper maintenance of information describing plaintiff's exercise of First Amendment rights, as set out in § 185.32].

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that plaintiff is entitled to damages because defendant agency has failed to comply with the requirements for maintaining records set out in 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(e).

Counsel should use the first alternative Paragraphs A through G in an action against a federal agency and use the second alternative Paragraphs A through E in an action against a state or local agency. If optional Paragraphs H and I, setting out federal court interpretations of statutory requirements regarding maintenance of records, are used in a state action, they should include the optional language comparing the pertinent state and federal provisions. This form may be used in a variety of procedural contexts.

These points and authorities should be used in combination with introductory points and authorities showing that plaintiff, defendant, and the information in question are covered by the Privacy Act or Information Practices Act [see § 185.21]. If the action is a state action under the Information Practices Act, and counsel is using a paragraph of the form that includes federal case law, this form should be used in combination with introductory points and authorities showing that federal case law interpreting the Privacy Act is persuasive authority in interpreting parallel provisions of the Information Practices Act [see § 185.20]. Counsel should compare the analogous provisions of the Information Practices and the federal Privacy Act and note any differences in language when using the federal case law in this form as authority for an interpretation of the Information Practices Act.

If the action is against a federal agency, this form may also be used together with points and authorities supporting the contention that the agency improperly maintained information in its records describing plaintiff's exercise of First Amendment rights [see § 185.32]. If, in addition to seeking damages for violation of 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(e) or Civ. Code §§ 1798.14, 1798.15, 1798.18, counsel is seeking amendment, alteration, or deletion of the improperly maintained records pursuant to 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(d)(2), (3) or Civ. Code §§ 1798.35-1798.37, this form may be used in combination with points and authorities supporting the contention that plaintiff is entitled to such amendment, alteration, or deletion [see § 185.33].

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. The argument should show that in maintaining the records defendant committed one of the violations of 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(e) or Civ. Code §§ 1798.14, 1798.15, 1798.18, set out in the alternatives for Paragraph B. If the action is against a federal agency, the argument should show that defendant's conduct was willful and intentional [see 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(g)(4) (requirements for damages); see also Edison v. Department of Army (11th Cir. 1982) 672 F.2d 840, 843 (defendant's maintenance must be unreasonable)]. If defendant violated 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(e)(5) or Civ. Code § 1798.18 (records used in making determination), plaintiff should insert argument showing that an adverse determination against plaintiff actually resulted proximally from defendant's improper maintenance of the records [see 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(g)(1)(C); Civ. Code § 1798.45(b) (requirements for civil action); Edison v. Department of the Army (11th Cir. 1982) 672 F.2d 840, 845 (adverse determination must be proximate result of violation)]. Whether or not defendant violated 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(e)(5), counsel should insert argument showing some adverse effect as a result of defendant's conduct [see 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(g)(1)(D); Civ. Code § 1798.45(c) (requirements for civil action)].

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of defendant's improper maintenance of its records. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Damages for Improper Maintenance

Civ. Code § 1798.48 (damages for Information Practices Act violations) differs from 5 U.S.C.S. § 552(g)(4) (damages for Privacy Act violations) on several points. Unlike 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(g)(4), Civ. Code § 1798.48 does not set a minimum amount of damages to which a successful plaintiff is entitled. However, Civ. Code § 1798.48 explicitly provides for damages for mental suffering, while federal case law interpreting 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(g)(4) is in disagreement over whether nonpecuniary damages such as damages for mental suffering may be recovered under the Privacy Act, although the Ninth Circuit is of the opinion that such damages may be recovered [compare Cooper v.

F.A.A., 596 F.3d 538, 549 (9th Cir. 2010) with [Fitzpatrick v. Internal Revenue Service (6th Cir. 1982) 665 F.2d 327, 331]. Finally, Civ. Code § 1798.48 contains no requirement that the agency acted in an intentional and willful manner, as does 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(g)(4).

[b] Information Must Be Relevant to Published Use

In Chapman v. National Aeronautics & Space Admin. (5th Cir. 1982) 682 F.2d 526 , defendant federal agency terminated plaintiff from employment, relying on certain private notes made by plaintiff's supervisor, which reflected a negative evaluation of plaintiff's job performance. The notes were subsequently entered into plaintiff's administrative record, but their existence was not disclosed to plaintiff at the time when they were made. Periodic performance evaluations that were a normal part of plaintiff's record did not reflect the criticisms contained in the notes. Plaintiff filed an action against defendant agency, charging that defendant's use of the private notes violated the Privacy Act (5 U.S.C.S. § 552a). The district court denied relief on the Privacy Act claims, and plaintiff appealed.

The appellate court affirmed in part, but reversed with respect to the Privacy Act claim, and remanded the case for further consideration. The court stated that under 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(e)(4)(C), (D), and (I) (required publication of nature of and uses of records by agency) the fact that private notes about individual members of the agency would be maintained and used to contradict periodic public evaluations would have to be regularly published in the Federal Register. Without such publication, the court held, use of the notes was barred by 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(e)(1), that provides that only information relevant and necessary to a published agency purpose may be maintained (682 F.2d 526, 530) .

[c] Maintenance of Information in Private Notes Is Improper

The facts and procedural background of Chapman v. National Aeronautics & Space Admin. (5th Cir. 1982) 682 F.2d 526 , are discussed in § 185.31[3][b]. The information in question consisted of private notes on plaintiff's job performance made by plaintiff's supervisor, which were used by defendant agency in terminating plaintiff's employment with defendant. Existence of the notes was not disclosed to plaintiff at the time when they were made, and the notes were not included in plaintiff's administrative record until some 22 months later, shortly before plaintiff was notified of termination proceedings against him.

In reversing the district court's denial of relief under the Privacy Act, the court of appeal stated that when notes taken privately by an agency supervisor bear negatively on the employee's employment status or situation, they must be used in a manner consistent with the letter and spirit of the Privacy Act (682 F.2d 526, 528-529) . The court stated that the Privacy Act enables an individual to prevent records obtained by an agency for a particular purpose from being used for any other purpose, and that in order to give this right meaning, the Act grants the individual access to pertinent information in the agency's system of records (682 F.2d 526, 528) . Since the notes were not included in plaintiff's record until 22 months after they were made, the court stated that it could not accept the district court's conclusion that plaintiff had had an opportunity to refute or correct the evidence on which the agency relied in ordering plaintiff's removal. The court noted that if plaintiff had been apprised at the time when the notes were made that his work performance was considered unsatisfactory and that notes containing specific details to support that evaluation were being compiled, he would have had an opportunity to produce a refutation or to provoke a review and resolution of the impending difficulty when the memories of all parties were still fresher and more acute. The court held that absent actual notice or some reference to the existence of contents of the notes in plaintiff's file, it could not be said that the records were fairly or properly maintained. Under 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(e)(5), the court held, use of the personal notes lacked, at the very minimum, the timeliness of incorporation into the agency's records necessary in order to insure fairness (682 F.2d 526, 529) . The court concluded that private notes made by supervisors must remain private, serving only to refresh the memory of the maker, unless they are incorporated into the records at the time of he next evaluation or report on the employee's work status or performance.

18-185 California Points & Authorities § 185.32

§ 185.32 Improper Maintenance of Records--Collection and Maintenance of Information Describing Exercise of First Amendment Rights [5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(e)(7)]

[1] FORM Improper Maintenance of Records--Collection and Maintenance of Information Describing Exercise of First Amendment Rights [5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(e)(7)]

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief. It should be combined with the general points and authorities in § 185.21. It should also be combined with points and authorities supporting the contention that the plaintiff is entitled to damages for the defendant's improper maintenance of records (see § 185.31), points and authorities supporting the contention that the plaintiff is entitled to have the information in question amended or deleted (see § 185.33), or both.]

THE DEFENDANT AGENCY IS MAINTAINING INFORMATION IN ITS RECORDS DESCRIBING PLAINTIFF'S ACTIVITIES IN THE EXERCISE OF HIS/HER RIGHTS GUARANTEED BY THE FIRST AMENDMENT, IN VIOLATION OF 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(e)(7).

A. Maintenance of Information on First Amendment Activities Prohibited. An agency that maintains a system of records shall maintain no record describing how any individual exercises rights guaranteed by the First Amendment unless expressly authorized by statute or by the individual about whom the record is maintained or unless pertinent to and within the scope of an authorized law enforcement activity (see 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(e)(7)).

[Optional] B. Detrimental Effect on Plaintiff. Allegation of a system of independently unlawful intrusions, accumulation and dissemination of inaccurate information, damage to reputation and business are sufficient to establish that defendant's conduct had a detrimental effect on the plaintiff, so that a civil action regarding violation of 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(e)(7) may be maintained (Jabara v. Kelley (E.D. Mich. 1979) 476 F. Supp. 561, 568, 580 , rev'd on other grounds, Jabara v. Webster (6th Cir. 1982) 691 F.2d 272, 280) .

[Optional] C. Record Need Not Be Retrievable by Subject's Name. 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(e)(7) prohibits maintenance of records describing an individual's exercise of First Amendment rights even if the record is not part of a system of records from which the record is retrievable by the name or other identifying characteristic of the individual involved ( Albright v. United States (D.C. Cir. 1980) 631 F.2d 915, 918-919) .

[Optional] D. Public Employee's Grievance. Expression of disagreement with and complaining about an employer's policy decisions fall within the First Amendment rights of public employees (Albright v. United States (D.C. Cir. 1980) 631 F.2d 915, 920-921) .

[2] Comments

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that defendant agency is violating 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(e)(7) by maintaining records that describe how plaintiff exercises his or her First Amendment rights. This form should be used in combination with introductory points and authorities showing that plaintiff, defendant, and the information in question are covered by the Privacy Act [see § 185.21] and in combination with points and authorities supporting the contention that defendant improperly maintained records concerning plaintiff [see 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(e)(1), (5), (6), (g)(1)(C); § 185.31]. This form may also be used in combination with a form of points authorities supporting the contention that plaintiff is entitled to an amendment, or deletion of the records in question [see 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(d)(3), (4), (g)(1)(A), (2); § 185.33].

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the point that defendant is improperly maintaining records on plaintiff's First Amendment activities. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] No State Action

California's Information Practices Act (Civ. Code §§ 1798-1798.78) does not contain any provision comparable to 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(e)(7). Thus, these points and authorities cannot be adapted for use in a state action.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Detrimental Effect on Plaintiff

Jabara v. Kelley (E.D. Mich. 1979) 476 F. Supp. 561 rev'd on other grounds, Jabara v. Webster (6th Cir. 1982) 691 F.2d 272, 280 , was an action challenging various practices of federal law enforcement agencies in conducting an investigation of plaintiff, including the monitoring of and maintenance of records on the contents of various political speeches given by plaintiff. The plaintiff alleged violations of constitutional rights and of 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(e)(7). The plaintiff alleged that defendants' conduct had resulted in his fearing to express his own political views, injury to plaintiff's reputation and law practice, deterrence of others from associating with plaintiff, and accumulation of false and misleading reports concerning plaintiff that were disseminated among federal agencies and foreign governments.

The court held that these allegations, including the allegations regarding the falsity of the information contained in defendants' files, stated sufficient harm to permit plaintiff to maintain an action under 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(g)(1) (civil action for violation of Privacy Act which had adverse effect on plaintiff). In reaching its holding, the court cited with approval an excerpt from the Senate Report accompanying an earlier version of the Privacy Act. The report, discussing the standard for standing to sue that was the predecessor of the current detrimental effect requirement set out in 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(g)(1)(D), stated that the standard was intended to afford the widest possible standing consistent with the constitutional requirement of "case or controversy." The report also indicated that the provisions concerning standing were designed to compensate for certain deficiencies in standing and ripeness found by the courts in earlier cases [see, e.g., Laird v. Tatum (1972) 408 U.S. 1, 92 S. Ct. 2318, 33 L. Ed. 2d 154 (restricted scope of standing for actions directly under First Amendment)] (476 F. Supp. 561, 580) .

The court also held that plaintiff's allegations were sufficient to establish standing to sue directly for violation of First Amendment rights (476 F. Supp. 561, 568) .

[b] Record Need Not Be Retrievable by Subject's Name

In Albright v. United States (D.C. Cir. 1980) 631 F.2d 915 , plaintiffs, who were employees of defendant agency, participated in a meeting with one of the agency officers to discuss a personnel policy that had resulted in plaintiffs being denied promotion. The meeting, which had included a heated exchange between plaintiffs and the officer, was recorded on videotape without the knowledge of plaintiffs or the officer. The agency stored the videotape in a sealed envelope. Plaintiffs brought an action for declaratory, monetary, and injunctive relief, alleging violation of the Constitution and of the 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(e)(7) prohibition of maintaining records about an individual's exercise of First Amendment rights. The district court ruled that plaintiffs had failed to state a cause of action with respect to the alleged privacy act violations and the plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal reversed the district court's ruling and remanded the case. The court noted the district court's finding that the videotape was never intended by defendant agency to be incorporated into a system of records where it would be indexed according to the names or other identifying characteristics of any of plaintiffs [see 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(a)(5) (defining "system of records" as system from which records can be retrieved by subject's name or identifying characteristic)]. The court held that the prohibition of maintenance of records describing First Amendment activities set out in 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(e)(7) was not limited to records that were or were intended to be incorporated into systems of records in which the records are retrievable by the names or identifying characteristics of the individuals whose activities were described in the records (631 F.2d 915, 918) . In support of its holding, the court noted that the Privacy Act defines the term "maintain" to include "collect, use or disseminate" [see 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(a)(3)]. In view of this definition, the court stated that 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(e)(7) includes a prohibition of collection of information on First Amendment activities in addition to a prohibition of maintenance, use, or dissemination of such information, and that this prohibition of mere collection of information is independent of the maintenance, use, or dissemination of the information thereafter. Thus, the court concluded that the prohibition set out in 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(e)(7) is not limited to collection of information describing First Amendment activities when the information was intended to be incorporated into a system of records after collection (631 F.2d 915, 918) . The court further stated that its reading of 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(e)(7) is consistent with what the court perceived to be the intent of Congress, in light of the special and sensitive treatment accorded First Amendment rights under the interpretive case law, the special concern shown in the legislative history of the Privacy Act of 1974 over the unwarranted collection of information as a separate harm in itself, and the danger that government inquiry into an individual's First Amendment activities may invade the penumbra that is accorded privacy protection by the Constitution (631 F.2d 915, 918-919) .

The court distinguished the case before it from an unreported case, Denson v. Alexander (N.D. Ala. 1977), which had held that the Privacy Act provisions entitling an individual to access to and amendment of records does not apply to records not maintained within a system of records when they were retrievable by the individual's name or identifying characteristic, on the ground that the Privacy Act provisions dealt with in Denson covered information properly in the possession of the agency, and not with a prohibition of collection of certain information (631 F.2d 915, 920) .

[c] Public Employee's Grievance

The facts and procedural background of Albright v. United States (D.C. Cir. 1980) 631 F.2d 915 , are discussed in § 185.32[3][b]. The court of appeal held that an expression of disagreement with and complaining about an employer's policy decisions fall within the First Amendment rights of public employees (631 F.2d 915, 920-921) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Record Need Not Be Retrievable by Subject's Name

In Clarkson v. Internal Revenue Serv. (11th Cir. 1982) 678 F.2d 1368 , plaintiff brought suit against defendant agency alleging that defendant agency had maintained files on certain activities of plaintiff protesting against defendant agency in violation of 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(e)(7) (prohibition of maintenance of information on First Amendment activities), and other subsections of 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(e). Defendant agency asserted that the files in question were not incorporated in a system of records, as defined in 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(a)(5), from which information could be retrieved by plaintiff's name or some other indicator by which plaintiff could be identified. The court of appeal held that the prohibition on federal agency maintenance of records describing First Amendment activities set out in 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(e)(7) was not limited to records contained within systems of records (678 F.2d 1368, 1376-1377) .

§ 185.33 Amendment of Record at Subject's Request or Inclusion of Subject's Statement of Disagreement With Record [5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(d)(2)-(4) or Civ. Code §§ 1798.35-1798.37]

[1] FORM Amendment of Record at Subject's Request or Inclusion of Subject's Statement of Disagreement With Record [5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(d)(2)-(4) or Civ. Code §§ 1798.35-1798.37]

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief. It should be combined with the general points and authorities in § 185.21. If the action is under state law, it should also be combined with the points and authorities on use of federal authority in a state action in § 185.20.]

THE COURT SHOULD ORDER DEFENDANT TO AMEND ITS RECORDS CONCERNING PLAINTIFF AS PLAINTIFF HAS REQUESTED [OR TO INCLUDE PLAINTIFF'S STATEMENT OF DISAGREEMENT WITH THE RECORDS WITHIN THE RECORDS IN QUESTION] BECAUSE PLAINTIFF IS ENTITLED TO SUCH AMENDMENT [OR INCLUSION OF A STATEMENT] UNDER THE _____ [PRIVACY ACT OF 1974] or [INFORMATION PRACTICES ACT OF 1977].

[EITHER, if action is against federal agency]

A. Request for Amendment of Record. Each agency that maintains a system of records must permit an individual to request amendment of a record pertaining to him or her, provide procedures for determining whether or not to make the requested amendment, including provisions for administrative review of a decision not to make the requested amendment, and, in case of a decision not to amend, in any dissemination of the record, clearly indicate the disputed portion of the records and include a concise statement of disagreement by the affected individual if the individual files such a statement (see 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(d)(2)-(4)).

B. Jurisdiction. Whenever any agency makes a determination not to amend a record in accordance with the request of the individual to whom the record pertains or fails to make a review of the request as required by 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(d)(3), the individual may bring a civil action against the agency in the federal district court (5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(g)(1)(A)).

C. Amendment by Order of Court. In any civil action brought against an agency for refusal to amend an individual's record at the individual's request, the court may order the agency to amend the individual's record in accordance with the individual's request or in such other way as the court may direct (5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(g)(2)(A)).

D. De Novo Determination by Court. In any civil action against an agency for refusal to amend a record at the individual's request, the court shall determine the matter de novo (5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(g)(2)(A)).

[OR, if action is against state or local agency]

A. Request for Amendment of Record. Each agency must permit an individual to request in writing an amendment of a record and shall within 30 days of receipt of such request make each correction in accordance with the individual's request, of any portion of a record that the individual believes is not accurate, relevant, timely, or complete, and inform the individual of the corrections made; or inform the individual of its reason for refusing to amend the record, and provide the individual with an opportunity to request review of the refusal. If, after review, the agency makes a final determination not to make the requested amendment, the agency shall permit the individual to file with the record a statement of disagreement and shall on any subsequent disclosure clearly note the disputed portion of the record, and make available to any receiving party both the individual's statement of disagreement and its own statement of its reasons for refusing to make the amendment (see Civ. Code §§ 1798.35-1798.37).

B. Relief by Writ of Mandate for Abuse of Discretion. A writ of mandate issued pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1085, 1086 is proper to control abuse of discretion by an administrative agency (Manjares v. Newton (1966) 64 Cal. 2d 365, 370, 49 Cal. Rptr. 805, 411 P.2d 901 ; see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1085, 1086).

C. Injunction Against Agency. Any agency that fails to comply with any provision of the Information Practices Act of 1977 (Civ. Code §§ 1798-1798.78) may be enjoined by any court of competent jurisdiction. The court may make such judgment or order as is necessary to prevent the use of or employment by an agency of any practices that violate the Information Practices Act of 1977. Actions for injunction may be brought by any individual acting in his or her own behalf (Civ. Code § 1798.47).

[CONTINUE]

E. Amendment Is Proper Remedy for Improperly Maintained Records. Although an agency is not required to amend its records merely because an individual requests it, an agency may be compelled to amend records used as a basis of a determination concerning the affected individual, including information that is not maintained with such accuracy, relevance, timeliness, and completeness as is reasonably necessary to assure fairness to the individual in making the determination (see Savarese v. United States Dep't of Health, Educ. & Welfare (N.D. Ga. 1979) 479 F. Supp. 304, 306-307 , aff'd, (5th Cir. 1980) 620 F.2d 298). The provisions of the Privacy Act interpreted by Savarese are comparable to analogous provisions of the Information Practices Act (compare 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(d)(2), (3) (amendment), (e)(5) (improper maintenance) with Civ. Code §§ 1798.18 (improper maintenance), 1798.35-1798.37 (amendment).

[Add additional points and authorities, if appropriate, showing that defendant improperly maintained the records in question. See § 185.31.]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that defendant agency should be ordered, pursuant to 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(g)(1)(A), (2), Civ. Code § 1798.47, or Code Civ. Proc. § 1085 to amend its records concerning plaintiff in accordance with plaintiff's request for amendment pursuant to 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(d)(2) or Civ. Code § 1798.35, or to include within the records plaintiff's statement of disagreement with the information, as required by 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(d)(3), (4) or Civ. Code §§ 1798.36, 1798.37. Counsel should use the first alternative Paragraphs A through D in an action against federal agencies and use the second alternative Paragraphs A through C in an action against a state or local agency. If optional Paragraph E is used in a state action, it should include the optional language comparing the pertinent state and federal provisions.

These points and authorities should be used in combination with introductory points and authorities showing that plaintiff, defendant, and the information in question are covered by the Privacy Act or Information Practices Act [see § 185.21]. If the action is a state action under the Information Practices Act, and counsel is using a paragraph of the form that includes federal case law, this form should be used in combination with introductory points and authorities showing that federal case law interpreting the Privacy Act is persuasive authority in interpreting parallel provisions of the Information Practices Act [see § 185.20]. Counsel should compare the analogous provisions of the Information Practices and the federal Privacy Acts and note any differences in language when using the federal case law in this form as authority for an interpretation of the Information Practices Act [see § 185.33[3][a]].

This form may be used in connection with points and authorities supporting the contention that defendant agency has not properly maintained information in its records concerning plaintiff in accordance with 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(e)(1), (5), (6) or Civ. Code §§ 1798.14, 1798.15, 1798.18 [see § 185.31]. If the action is against a federal agency and the facts of the case warrant it, this form may also be used in connection with points and authorities supporting the contention that defendant agency is maintaining information describing activities in which plaintiff was exercising First Amendment rights, in violation of 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(e)(7) [see § 185.32].

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. The argument should show that defendant has refused plaintiff's request to amend the record and has given no reason for such refusal or has given reasons that do not justify defendant's refusal. The argument should also show that the information is not accurate, relevant, timely, or complete and that there is no justifiable reason for defendant's refusal to amend or delete the information. If the action is for a writ of mandate under Code Civ. Proc. § 1086 against a state agency, the argument should show that defendant's refusal constituted an abuse of discretion. For statutory provisions setting out specific requirements for proper maintenance of certain types of information, see 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(e)(1), (2), (5), (6), (7) and Civ. Code §§ 1798.14, 1798.15, 1798.18. If defendant has refused to include plaintiff's statement of disagreement in the record, counsel should also include argument showing that if the court does not order amendment or deletion, it should order inclusion of plaintiff's statement of disagreement.

[b] Use of Information in Official Determination Is Guiding Standard

The present accuracy of information in records of which an amendment has been requested must be considered in terms of the manner in which the information is being used by the agency to make decisions affecting the individual. Thus, a press release that was accurate and relevant to the agency's activities when made, need not be altered at a later date if it is not being used by the agency as the basis of any decision [Zeller v. United States (E.D. N.Y. 1979) 467 F. Supp. 487, 502-503] .

[c] Record Must Be Retrievable by Requester's Name or Indentifier

Pursuant to 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(a)(5), (d)(2), records that are not retrievable under the requester's name or other personal identifier are not accessible to that requester, and Privacy Act remedies of amendment and expungement are inapplicable to a report that is not accessible under the Act [see 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(a)(5) (record must be retrievable by name or identifier), (d)(2) (access permitted from agency maintaining "system of records"; see also Civ. Code § 1798.34 (records must be maintained by reference to identifying particular assigned to individual)]. In Baker v. Department of Navy (9th Cir. 1987) 814 F.2d 1381 , the federal court of appeals held that an amendment to a record that is inaccessible under the Privacy Act cannot be made even if the record is otherwise accessible (for example, under the Freedom of Information Act (5 U.S.C.S. § 552). The federal statutes that grant access to records (5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(d)(1)), permit requests for amendment (5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(d)(2)), and require that records used in making determinations about individuals are maintained in a reasonably accurate and complete manner (5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(e)(5)), all apply to an agency that "maintains a system of records." The statutory language therefore suggests that the scope of accessibility and the scope of amendment are coextensive [Baker v. Department of Navy (9th Cir. 1987) 814 F.2d 1381, 1383-1385] .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Relief by Writ of Mandate for Abuse of Discretion

In Manjares v. Newton (1966) 64 Cal. 2d 365, 49 Cal. Rptr. 805, 411 P.2d 901 , plaintiff parents sued defendant school district after defendant discontinued school bus transportation for their children. The trial court treated the complaint as one sounding in mandate, and granted a peremptory writ of mandate commanding defendant to provide the school bus transportation. Defendant appealed and the Supreme Court upheld the trial court's decision.

The court noted defendants' argument that under applicable law, defendants had discretion to determine whether transportation should be provided and that there was therefore neither a right by plaintiffs to such transportation nor a duty on defendants' part to provide it, as is required by Code Civ. Proc. § 1085 for issuance of a writ of mandate. The court stated that defendant was, in effect, claiming that whenever an administrative body has been granted discretionary powers, the manner in which it exercises that discretion is beyond judicial review and concluded that this argument is clearly untenable. The court stated that the principle that mandate will lie whenever an administrative board has abused its discretion is a rule so well established as to be beyond question (64 Cal. 2d 365, 370) . On the facts of the case, the court upheld the trial court's conclusion that the reasons given by defendant for its action did not reasonably justify the action. The court held that defendant's action was unjustified in view of the fact it caused eight children to be denied the opportunity to attend school (64 Cal. 2d 365, 373-374) .

NOTE:

Unlike the Privacy Act (5 U.S.C.S. § 552a), the Information Practices Act (Civ. Code §§ 1798-1798.78) does not specifically provide for a civil action for refusal to amend a record pursuant to request, nor does it provide specifically for amendment by court order. Moreover, since Civ. Code §§ 1798.35-1798.37 (right to request amendment) only require an agency to receive and respond to a request for an amendment, and to review a refusal to grant the request, but do not actually specify circumstances under which an agency would be required to grant such a request, it is not clear whether the general provisions of Civ. Code §§ 1798.45(c) (civil action for violations of Information Practices Act) and 1798.47 (injunction in case of failure to comply with Information Practices Act) [see § 185.33[3][b]] are sufficient by themselves to authorize a court to grant a request for amendment when the agency has refused to grant the request [see Civ. Code §§ 1798.45(c), 1798.47]. It might be argued, however, that the discretion granted an agency to determine whether or not to grant a request would be subject to mandamus review just as was the discretion of the defendant board in Manjares.

[b] Injunction Against Agency

It is not clear whether the general injunction provisions of Civ. Code § 1789.47 are by themselves sufficient to authorize a court to order amendment of records when the agency has refused to make such amendment [see § 185.33[3][a]]. It appears, however, that the court could order an amendment of records as requested by plaintiff on the authority of Civ. Code § 1798.47 when the information in question violates Civ. Code §§ 1798.14, 1798.15, 1798.18 (requirements regarding maintenance of information) or another provision of the Information Practices Act [see Savarese v. United States Dep't of Health, Educ. & Welfare (N.D. Ga. 1979) 479 F. Supp. 304, 306 , aff'd, (5th Cir. 1980) 620 F.2d 298 (order of amendment is appropriate remedy for improper maintenance of records under federal law)]. For a discussion of the Information Practice Act's requirements regarding maintenance of information, see § 185.31. It also appears that the courts are empowered to provide injunctive relief under Civ. Code § 1789.47 if the agency has violated any of the requirements regarding consideration and review of the request for amendment and inclusion of materials in the record in case of refusal, which are set out in Civ. Code §§ 1798.35, 1798.36 (right to amendment or inclusion of statements of disagreement).

[c] Amendment Is Proper Remedy for Improper Maintenance of Records

Savarese v. United States Dep't of Health, Educ. & Welfare (N.D. Ga. 1979) 479 F. Supp. 304 , aff'd, (5th Cir. 1980) 620 F.2d 298 , was an action brought by a former federal employee, charging that certain information used as a basis for terminating his federal employment was defective under the Privacy Act. In the action, plaintiff sought to have the district court order defendant agency to amend the allegedly defective portions of the agency's records on plaintiff. The district court granted summary judgment for defendant as to plaintiff's cause of action for maintenance of defective information and failure to amend, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed the district court's order granting summary judgment. The court stated that under 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(d)(2) (subject's right to request amendment of records) the agency is not required to either remove information from or to place information into its records simply because the subject of the information requests such action. The court noted, however, that the agency is bound by the requirement set out in 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(e)(5) to maintain records relied on in making a determination about an individual with such accuracy, relevance, timeliness, and completeness as is reasonably necessary to assure fairness to the individual in the determination (479 F. Supp. 304, 306) . The court cited prior authority stating that under 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(e)(5), once the agency had done what is reasonable in assuring the accuracy of the records, no more is required (479 F. Supp. 304, 306) . Under the facts before it, however, the court held that there was a factual dispute, not only as to whether the information concerning plaintiff in defendant's files was true, but also as to whether the agency's determination was reasonably made so as to assure fairness to plaintiff (479 F. Supp. 304, 306-307) . The court noted that factual issues concerning reasonableness are not easily disposed of in summary judgment (479 F. Supp. 304, 307) .

NOTE:

Although the Privacy Act differs significantly from the Information Practices Act in that the latter act does not contain any provisions comparable to 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(g)(1)(A), (2)(A), which provide for a civil action and court order for amendment when a federal agency has refused to make the amendment itself, Savarese did not rely on 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(g)(1)(A), (2)(A) in making its holding. Rather, the Savarese court relied on 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(d)(2) (amendment), and 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(e)(5) (improper maintenance), which are comparable to Civ. Code §§ 1798.18 (improper maintenance), 1798.35, 1798.36 (amendment). Thus, it appears Savarese may be persuasive authority in interpreting these Information Practice Act provisions.

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief. If the action is under state law, the following should also be combined with the points and authorities on use of federal authority in a state action in § 185.20.]

PLAINTIFF HAS NOT STATED A CAUSE OF ACTION AGAINST DEFENDANT _____ [name of individual] UNDER THE _____ [PRIVACY ACT OF 1974 or INFORMATION PRACTICES ACT] BECAUSE THAT ACT DOES NOT PROVIDE FOR AN ACTION AGAINST INDIVIDUALS.

No Action Against Individuals. The Privacy Act (5 U.S.C.S. § 552a) provides for civil remedies only against federal agencies and not against individuals (Bruce v. United States (8th Cir. 1980) 621 F.2d 914, 916 n.2). The remedies provisions of the Privacy Act of 1974 are comparable to the remedies provisions of the Information Practices of 1977 as they apply to the defendant (compare 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(g) with Civ. Code §§ 1798.45-1798.53).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that an individual officer or employee of a federal agency may be held liable for violation of the Privacy Act or that an agency employee may not be held liable for violation of the Information Practices Act. If the action is a state action, the optional language comparing pertinent federal and state provisions should be used. This may be used in a demurrer or in any other procedural context in which plaintiff contends that the individual defendant may be held liable for an alleged violation of the Privacy Act or Information Practices Act.

If the action is a state action under the Information Practices Act, and counsel is using a paragraph of the form that includes federal case law, this form should be used in combination with introductory points and authorities showing that federal case law interpreting the Privacy Act is persuasive authority in interpreting parallel provisions of the Information Practices Act [see § 185.20]. Counsel should compare the analogous provisions of the Information Practices and the federal Privacy Act and note any differences in language when using the federal case law in this form as authority for an interpretation of the Information Practices Act. Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Individual Officer May Be Named in Injunction Action

One district court has declined to dismiss the individual head of defendant agency as a defendant being sued in his official capacity as custodian of the records in question and head of the agency from an action for disclosure and amendment of records under the Privacy Act [Nemetz v. Department of Treasury (N.D. Ill. 1978) 446 F. Supp. 102, 106] . The court in Nemetz stated that the agency head had been named as a defendant because he is the individual responsible for the policy and decisions of defendant agency, and the final authority for administrating the Privacy Act within the department. The court concluded that it saw no reason for dismissing individual defendant from the action, and stated that it would follow earlier cases that have sustained cases against heads of agencies under the Privacy Act [Nemetz v. Department of Treasury (N.D. Ill. 1978) 446 F. Supp. 102, 106] . Although the court in Nemetz did not specifically refer to this point, actions for disclosure and actions for amendment of records under the Privacy Act are both ordinarily actions for injunctive relief [see 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(g)(1)(A), (B)(2), (3)]. 5 U.S.C.S. § 702, which provides generally for judicial review of any agency action adversely affecting an individual within the meaning of those terms in a relevant statute, requires that any mandatory or injunctive decree specify the federal officers personally responsible for compliance, and their successors in office, by name and title.

[c] Limited Use in State Action

The Information Practices Act (Civ. Code §§ 1798-1798.78) includes the term "officers" within its definition of the term "agency" [see Civ. Code § 1798.3(b)]. Since the civil remedies provisions of the Information Practices Act all speak in terms of actions against "agencies," it appears that these provisions also authorize actions against officers of agencies [see Civ. Code §§ 1798.45-1798.53 (remedies)]. Moreover, California law expressly provides that a private person, other than an agency employee acting solely in his or her official capacity, who unlawfully discloses information concerning an individual from state or local records is subject to a civil action [see Civ. Code § 1798.53]. Thus, this form of points and authorities would appear to be effective under California law only if defendant is an employee rather than an officer of the agency and, in case of an action for improper disclosure, if defendant was acting solely in his or her official capacity in making or participating in the disclosure.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Action Against Individuals

In Bruce v. United States (8th Cir. 1980) 621 F.2d 914 , plaintiff brought an action against the United States, defendant federal agency, and the individual defendant, an officer of defendant agency, for the allegedly illegal release of plaintiff's military personnel and medical records to the state court in which plaintiff had been tried and convicted of murder. The district court dismissed the action for lack of subject matter jurisdiction and failure to state a cause of action.

The court of appeal affirmed the dismissal. With respect to the individual defendant, the court emphasized that the Privacy Act provides for civil remedies only against agencies, not against individuals. Accordingly, the court stated that the individual defendant was not a proper defendant in a civil action for damages under the Act (621 F.2d 914, 916 n.2).

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] No Action Against Individuals

In Gonzalez v. Leonard (D. Conn. 1980) 497 F. Supp. 1058 , plaintiffs filed a complaint stating various causes of action, including violation of the Privacy Act of 1974 (5 U.S.C.S. § 552a) against several state and federal officials for damages allegedly caused by a telex message disseminated to various law enforcement agencies falsely accusing plaintiffs of plotting to commit murder. With respect to the Privacy Act allegations, the district court stated that 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(g)(1) provided for civil action against federal agencies by individuals aggrieved by a violation of the Privacy Act, and that the definition of the term "agency" set out in 5 U.S.C.S. § 552a(e) did not include individual officers or employees of the agency (497 F. Supp. 1058, 1075) . The court concluded that although the federal agency, by which the individual defendants charged in the complaint with violations of the Privacy Act were employed, might be a proper party defendant in a case arising out of that agency's improper handling of records, the individual plaintiffs may not be sued under that statute (497 F. Supp. 1058, 1076) .

§ 185.35 Supporting Contention That Private Medical Provider of Medi-Cal Services Is Not Government Agency Subject to Information Practices Act

[1] FORM Supporting Contention That Private Medical Provider of Medi-Cal Services Is Not Government Agency Subject to Information Practices Act

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE INFORMATION PRACTICES ACT IS INAPPLICABLE TO MEDICAL INFORMATION MAINTAINED BY A PRIVATE MEDICAL FACILITY, WHICH IS NOT A GOVERNMENT AGENCY FOR PURPOSES OF THE ACT EVEN IF THE FACILITY PARTICIPATES IN THE STATE MEDI-CAL PROGRAM.

Private Medical Facility Not Government Agency. The Information Practices Act is inapplicable to medical information maintained by a private medical facility, which is not a government agency for purposes of the Act even if the facility participates in the state Medi-Cal program (Jennifer M. v. Redwood Women's Health Ctr. (2001) 88 Cal. App. 4th 81, 92, 105 Cal. Rptr. 2d 544).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a private medical facility may be liable under the Information Practices Act merely because the facility participates in the state-run Medi-Cal program. The grounds for the opposition are that the Information Practices Act only applies to government agencies and participation in the Medi-Cal program does not transform a private medical provider into a state agency.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of the lack of a cause of action against a private medical provider under the Information Practices Act. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the point of law stated. Thus, counsel should include facts showing that the defendant is a private medical provider and not a government agency.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Private Medical Facility Not Government Agency

The plaintiff in Jennifer M. v. Redwood Women's Health Ctr. (2001) 88 Cal. App. 4th 81, 105 Cal. Rptr. 2d 544 , who was not married, but suspected that she had become pregnant by her boyfriend, took a pregnancy test at a private medical clinic. Several days later, a rumor became public that the plaintiff was pregnant, prompting the plaintiff to complain to the clinic that her confidential medical information had been disclosed. The office manager at the clinic investigated the allegations, but came up with no information showing that any employee had revealed the information. The plaintiff then filed suit against the clinic, alleging public disclosure of private facts and a statutory action for breach of the Information Practices Act. The clinic moved for summary judgment or summary adjudication. The trial court granted summary adjudication on the statutory action under the Information Practices Act on the grounds that the clinic was not an "agency" under the terms of the Act and therefore not covered by its provisions. The plaintiff stipulated to dismissal with prejudice on the action for public disclosure of private facts and then appealed the trial court's decision on the statutory cause of action.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court rejected the plaintiff's argument that a private clinic could be subject to the provisions of the Information Practices Act merely on the basis of the clinic's contracts with the California Department of Health Services to provide medical services pursuant to the Medi-Cal program and its actual provision of Medi-Cal services to the plaintiff. The court concluded that the Information Practices Act was not intended to cover private entities such as the defendant. The court noted that, on its face, the Act is aimed at barring or limiting the dissemination of confidential personal information, and preventing the misuse of such information, by government agencies. However, the defendant, as a privately owned medical clinic, was clearly not a government agency or entity as defined by Civ. Code § 1798.3(b). Although the plaintiff cited ten separate provisions of the Act that she argued could be used to support application of the Act to the defendant, all of the provisions dealt with information maintained by "agencies" and were thus inapplicable to an action against a private clinic (88 Cal. App. 4th 81, 88-90) . The plaintiff also argued that Civ. Code § 1798.19 supported the conclusion that the Act applied to every contractor and any employee of any contractor that maintains personal records as part of a contract to accomplish agency functions. The court rejected this contention, however, concluding that Civ. Code § 1798.19 deals only with the obligations of a government agency that contracts with a private agency for maintenance of the records of the government agency (88 Cal. App. 4th 81, 90-91) . The court also rejected the plaintiff's argument that application of the Act could be predicated on a state regulation requiring Medi-Cal providers to maintain medical records of Medi-Cal patients and make such records available to Medi-Cal representatives for inspection (88 Cal. App. 4th 81, 91) .

§ 185.36 Improper Disposal of Customer Records [Civ. Code § 1798.81]--General Form

[1] FORM Improper Disposal of Customer Records [Civ. Code § 1798.81]--General Form

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF IS ENTITLED TO DAMAGES BECAUSE DEFENDANT HAS FAILED TO PROPERLY DISPOSE OF ITS RECORDS THAT CONTAINED PERSONAL INFORMATION ABOUT PLAINTIFF, IN VIOLATION OF CIVIL CODE SECTION 1798.81.

A. Duty of Business to Dispose of Customer Records. A business must take all reasonable steps to dispose or arrange for the disposal of a customer's records within its custody or control that contain personal information that is no longer to be retained by the business by (1) shredding, (2) erasing, or (3) otherwise modifying the personal information in those records to make it unreadable or undecipherable through any means (Civ. Code § 1798.81).

B. Businesses Covered by Civil Code § 1798.81. The term "business" means a sole proprietorship, partnership, corporation, association, or other group, however organized and whether or not organized to operate at a profit, including a financial institution organized, chartered, or holding a license or authorization certificate. The term includes an entity that destroys records (Civ. Code § 1798.80(a)).

C. Records Covered by Civil Code § 1798.81. The term "records" means any material, regardless of the physical form, on which information is recorded or preserved by any means, including in written or spoken words, graphically depicted, printed, or electromagnetically transmitted. The term records does not include publicly available directories containing information an individual has voluntarily consented to have publicly disseminated or listed, such as name, address, or telephone number (Civ. Code § 1798.80(b)).

D. Customers Covered by Civil Code § 1798.81. "Customer" means an individual who provides personal information to a business for the purpose of purchasing or leasing a product or obtaining a service from the business (Civ. Code § 1798.80(c)).

E. Personal Information Covered by Civil Code § 1798.81. "Personal information" means any information that identifies, relates to, describes, or is capable of being associated with, a particular individual, including, but not limited to, his or her name, signature, social security number, physical characteristics or description, address, telephone number, passport number, driver's license or state identification card number, insurance policy number, education, employment, employment history, or bank account number, credit card number, debit card number, or any other financial information, medical information, or health insurance information. Information that is lawfully made available to the general public from federal, state, or local government records is not protected under these provisions (Civ. Code § 1798.80(e)).

F. Civil Action to Recover Damages. Any customer injured by a violation of Civil Code § 1798.81 may institute a civil action to recover damages (Civ. Code § 1798.84(b)).

[Optional] G. Injunctive Relief. Any business that fails to comply with the provisions set out in Civ. Code § 1798.81 may be enjoined (Civ. Code § 1798.84(e)).

PLAINTIFF IS ENTITLED TO DAMAGES BECAUSE DEFENDANT, _____ [AN AGENCY OWNING OR LICENSING or A PERSON OR BUSINESS CONDUCTING BUSINESS IN CALIFORNIA THAT OWNS OR LICENSES] COMPUTERIZED DATA THAT INCLUDES PERSONAL INFORMATION, FAILED TO NOTIFY PLAINTIFF, A RESIDENT OF CALIFORNIA, OF A BREACH OF THE SECURITY OF THE DEFENDANT'S SYSTEM FOLLOWING DISCOVERY OR NOTIFICATION OF A BREACH IN THE SECURITY OF THE DATA IN WHICH PLAINTIFF'S UNENCRYPTED PERSONAL INFORMATION WAS, OR IS REASONABLY BELIEVED TO HAVE BEEN, ACQUIRED BY AN UNAUTHORIZED PERSON, IN VIOLATION OF CIVIL CODE SECTION _____ [1798.29 or 1798.82].

[EITHER]

A. Duty to Disclose. Any agency that owns or licenses computerized data that includes personal information must disclose any breach of the security of the system following discovery or notification of the breach in the security of the data to any resident of California whose unencrypted personal information was, or is reasonably believed to have been, acquired by an unauthorized person. The disclosure must be made in the most expedient time possible and without unreasonable delay, consistent with the legitimate needs of law enforcement (Civ. Code § 1798.29(a)). Any agency that maintains computerized data that includes personal information that the person or business does not own must notify the owner or licensee of the information of any breach of the security of the data immediately following discovery, if the personal information was, or is reasonably believed to have been, acquired by an unauthorized person (Civ. Code § 1798.29(b)).

[OR]

A. Duty to Disclose. Any person or business that conducts business in California, and that owns or licenses computerized data that includes personal information, must disclose any breach of the security of the system following discovery or notification of the breach in the security of the data to any resident of California whose unencrypted personal information was, or is reasonably believed to have been, acquired by an unauthorized person. The disclosure must be made in the most expedient time possible and without unreasonable delay, consistent with the legitimate needs of law enforcement (Civ. Code § 1798.82(a)). Any person or business that maintains computerized data that includes personal information that the person or business does not own must notify the owner or licensee of the information of any breach of the security of the data immediately following discovery, if the personal information was, or is reasonably believed to have been, acquired by an unauthorized person (Civ. Code § 1798.82(b)).

[EITHER]

B. Breach of Security System. "Breach of the security of the system" means unauthorized acquisition of computerized data that compromises the security, confidentiality, or integrity of personal information maintained by the agency. Good faith acquisition of personal information by an employee or agent of the agency for the purposes of the agency is not a breach of the security of the system, if that the personal information is not used or subject to further unauthorized disclosure (Civ. Code § 1798.29(d)).

[OR]

B. Breach of Security System. "Breach of the security of the system" means unauthorized acquisition of computerized data that compromises the security, confidentiality, or integrity of personal information maintained by the person or business. Good faith acquisition of personal information by an employee or agent of the person or business for the purposes of the person or business is not a breach of the security of the system, if that the personal information is not used or subject to further unauthorized disclosure (Civ. Code § 1798.82(d)).

C. Personal Information. "Personal information" means an individual's first name or first initial and last name in combination with any one or more of the following data elements, if either the name or the data elements are not encrypted: social security number; driver's license number or California Identification Card number; account number, credit card, or debit card number, in combination with any required security code, access code, or password that would permit access to an individual's financial account; medical information; or health insurance information (Civ. Code §§ 1798.29(e) (agencies), 1798.82(e) (persons or businesses)).

D. Notice Required. Notice may be provided by one of the following methods: (1) written notice; (2) electronic notice, if the notice provided is consistent with the provisions regarding electronic records and signatures set forth in Section 7001 of Title 15 of the United States Code; or (3) substitute notice, if the cost of providing notice would exceed two hundred fifty thousand dollars ($250,000) or the affected class of subject persons to be notified exceeds 500,000, or defendant does not have sufficient contact information (Civ. Code §§ 1798.29(g) (agencies), 1798.82(g) (persons or businesses)).

E. Civil Action to Recover Damages. Anyone injured by a violation of Civil Code Section 1798.29 or Civil Code Section 1798.82 may institute a civil action to recover damages (Civ. Code § 1798.84(b)).

[Optional] F. Injunctive Relief. Any business that fails to comply with Civil Code Section 1798.80 et seq. may be enjoined (Civ. Code § 1798.84(e)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that the plaintiff is entitled to damages because the defendant has failed to comply with the notice requirements set out in Civ. Code §§ 1798.29, 1798.82.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue that the defendant's violation of Civ. Code § 1798.29 or Civ. Code § 1798.82 entitles the plaintiff to damages. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should include facts showing that the defendant did not notify the plaintiff as required.

[b] Notification Delayed by Law Enforcement

The notification required by Civ. Code § 1789.29 or Civ. Code § 1798.82 may be delayed if a law enforcement agency determines that the notification will impede a criminal investigation. The notification required must be made after the law enforcement agency determines that it will not compromise the investigation [Civ. Code §§ 1798.29(c), 1798.82(c)].

[c] Specific Notice Requirements

Notice may be provided by any of the following methods [Civ. Code §§ 1798.29(g), 1798.82(g)]:

- Written notice.

- Electronic notice, if the notice provided is consistent with the provisions regarding electronic records and signatures set forth in 15 U.S.C.S. § 7001.

- Substitute notice, if the agency, person, or business demonstrates that the cost of providing notice would exceed two hundred fifty thousand dollars ($250,000), or that the affected class of subject persons to be notified exceeds 500,000, or the agency, person, or business does not have sufficient contact information. Substitute notice must consist of all of the following:

  - E-mail notice if the agency, person, or business has an e-mail address for the subject persons;

  - Conspicuous posting of the notice on the Web site page of the agency, person, or business, if the agency, person, or business maintains one; and

  - Notification to major statewide media.

However, an agency, person, or business that maintains its own notification procedures as part of an information security policy for the treatment of personal information, and is otherwise consistent with the timing requirements of this part, is deemed to be in compliance with the notification requirements described above if agency, person, or business notifies subject persons in accordance with its policies in the event of a breach of security of the system [Civ. Code §§ 1798.29(h), 1798.82(h)].

PART I. INTRODUCTION

§ 186.01 Scope of Chapter

This chapter contains memoranda of points and authorities for use in will contest proceedings. The chapter contains points and authorities supporting challenges to the will made by objection to the petition for probate filed under Prob. Code §§ 1043, 8004(b), and 8250(a) [see § 186.20], or by petition to revoke probate filed under Prob. Code § 8270 [see § 186.21]. It covers challenges based on improper execution of the will [see §§ 186.22, 186.23], inapplicability of the doctrines of integration [see § 186.24] or incorporation by reference [see § 186.25], the testator's lack of testamentary intent [see § 186.26] or capacity [see § 186.27], fraud [see § 186.28] or undue influence [see § 186.29] in the procurement of the will, unfulfilled conditions [see § 186.30], and revocation of the will [see §§ 186.31 -186.35]. Contentions concerning the timeliness of the contest [see § 186.36] and the contestant's standing to contest the will [see § 186.37] are also included.

The chapter also contains a basic memorandum for use in demurring or objecting to a will contest filed under Prob. Code § 8251 or 8271 [see § 186.50], as well as individual contentions addressing the substantive [see §§ 186.51 -186.61] and procedural [see §§ 186.62, 186.63] aspects of the contest. Included are contentions that the will was properly executed [see §§ 186.51, 186.52], that the doctrines of integration [see § 186.53] and incorporation by reference [see § 186.54] are applicable, that the testator possessed testamentary intent [see § 186.55] and capacity [see § 186.56], that the will was not procured by fraud [see § 186.57] or undue influence [see § 186.58], that the will is not subject to an unfulfilled condition [see § 186.59], and that the will was not revoked [see §§ 186.60, 186.61], as well as objections based on the untimeliness of the contest [see § 186.62] and the contestant's lack of standing [see § 186.63]. Part II also includes a memorandum asserting the validity of a will made for a conservatee by a conservator in accordance with a court order [see § 186.64].

§ 186.02 Governing Law

The hearing of all matters under the Probate Code is governed by Prob. Code § 1000 et seq., except when the statute that provides for the hearing of the matter prescribes a different procedure [Prob. Code § 1040]. Prob. Code § 1043 governs the right of interested persons [see Prob. Code § 48 ("interested person" defined); see also § 186.37] to object, orally or in writing, to matters being heard under the Probate Code. The procedure for will contests is set forth in Prob. Code § 8250 et seq. [Prob. Code § 8004(b)], and the procedure for revocation of probate is set forth in Prob. Code § 8270 et seq.

The capacity to make a will [see Prob. Code § 88 ("will" includes codicil and any testamentary instrument that merely appoints executor or revokes or revises another will)] and the extent of a testator's power to dispose of property by will are governed by Prob. Code § 6100 et seq. The execution of wills is governed by Prob. Code § 6110 et seq., and the revocation of wills is governed by Prob. Code § 6120 et seq. The administration of estates is governed generally by Prob. Code § 7000 et seq.

The current versions of Prob. Code §§ 21310-21315 govern the enforcement of no contest clauses in wills and other instruments that are filed on or after January 1, 2010, whenever executed, provided that the instrument became irrevocable on or after January 1, 2001 [Prob. Code § 21315]. Common law governs no contest clauses in all other instruments [Prob. Code § 21315; see § 186.05]. Because the revisions effective in 2010 made significant changes in prior law, older cases dealing with no contest clauses should be reviewed carefully to make sure that they remain valid under the law applicable to the no contest clause in question before being relied upon by counsel.

PART I. INTRODUCTION

18-186 California Points & Authorities § 186.03

§ 186.03 Nature of Will Contests

Although the term "will contest" is used in the Probate Code to refer to a legal objection to the admission of a will to probate (i.e., a challenge before probate) [see Prob. Code §§ 8004(b), 8250(a)], the term as commonly used also encompasses attempts to revoke the probate of a will (i.e., a challenge after probate) [see, e.g., Goodman v. Zimmerman (1994) 25 Cal. App. 4th 1667, 1670, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 419 ; see also Prob. Code § 8270]. To successfully contest a will either before or after probate--that is, to obtain a court order rejecting the will in whole or in part [see Prob. Code § 8254]--a contestant must prove (1) lack of testamentary intent or capacity, (2) undue influence, fraud, duress, or mistake, or (3) revocation [see Prob. Code §§ 8252(a), 8272(a)]. A contestant may also challenge a will for lack of due execution [see Prob. Code § 6110 et seq.], and the burden is on the proponent to establish proper execution [see Prob. Code § 8252(a)].

Will contests are proceedings in rem [Estate of Sanderson (1960) 183 Cal. App. 2d 740, 742, 6 Cal. Rptr. 893] . They are special proceedings created by statute [Estate of Baker (1915) 170 Cal. 578, 585, 150 P. 989 ; Estate of Getty (1978) 85 Cal. App. 3d 755, 761, 149 Cal. Rptr. 656] . Like other proceedings concerning the administration of decedents' estates, will contests are heard in the superior court [Prob. Code § 7050]. The court in proceedings under the Probate Code is a court of general jurisdiction, and the court, or a judge of the court, has the same power and authority with respect to the proceedings as otherwise provided by law for a superior court, or a judge of the superior court [Prob. Code § 800; see Code Civ. Proc. § 128 (statutory powers of court)].

There is no right to a jury trial in a will contest proceeding [Prob. Code § 825]. The rules of pleading and practice that govern civil cases generally apply to will contests [Estate of Burton (1883) 63 Cal. 36, 37] . For example, the rules set forth in the Code of Civil Procedure governing voluntary and mandatory dismissal of actions [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 581, 583.110] apply to will contests [Estate of Daniels (1953) 120 Cal. App. 2d 284, 287, 260 P.2d 991 ; Estate of Morrison (1932) 125 Cal. App. 504, 507, 14 P.2d 102] .

In a will contest, the issues are limited to those concerning whether the purported will is the testator's duly executed, valid will [Estate of Smith (1998) 61 Cal. App. 4th 259, 265, 71 Cal. Rptr. 2d 424] . The court does not generally interpret the testamentary provisions or attempt to resolve inconsistencies in the disposition of property [Estate of Smith (1998) 61 Cal. App. 4th 259, 265, 71 Cal. Rptr. 2d 424] . The court construes the provisions of a will only if necessary to determine the status of the will as a testamentary instrument, which depends on the testator's intent [Estate of Smith (1998) 61 Cal. App. 4th 259, 265, 71 Cal. Rptr. 2d 424] . Before an instrument may be probated as a will it must appear from its terms, viewed in light of the surrounding circumstances, that the testator executed it with testamentary intent, i.e., the testator must have intended, by the instrument, to make a revocable disposition of his or her property to take effect on the testator's death [Estate of Smith (1998) 61 Cal. App. 4th 259, 265, 71 Cal. Rptr. 2d 424] . Regardless of the language used in the instrument, extrinsic evidence may be introduced to show that the testator did not intend the instrument to be effective as a will [Estate of Smith (1998) 61 Cal. App. 4th 259, 265-266, 71 Cal. Rptr. 2d 424] . For example, an instrument that clearly appears to be testamentary may be shown by extrinsic evidence to have been executed in jest, as a threat to induce action by an interested party, under the misapprehension that the instrument was a mortgage, to induce the legatee to engage in illicit relations with the testator, or to relieve the testator from annoyance by a would-be legatee [Estate of Smith (1998) 61 Cal. App. 4th 259, 266, 71 Cal. Rptr. 2d 424] .

CHAPTER 186 PROBATE OF WILLS
PART I. INTRODUCTION

18-186 California Points & Authorities § 186.04

§ 186.04 Contest of Will

[1] Before Probate

[a] Filing and Service of Objection

An interested person who wishes to prevent the admission of a will to probate must file an objection to probate with the court clerk [Prob. Code § 8250(a)]. A summons must then be issued and a copy of the objection directed to each heir of the decedent, so far as known to or reasonably ascertainable, and each devisee, executor, and alternative executor named in the will, regardless of whether the devise or appointment is purportedly revoked in a subsequent instrument [Prob. Code § 8250(a); see Prob. Code § 8110]. The summons must direct the persons summoned to file with the court a written pleading in response to the contest within 30 days [Prob. Code § 8250(a)].

[b] Responsive Pleadings

The person who petitioned for probate and any other interested person may jointly or separately answer or demur to the objection within 30 days after service of the summons [Prob. Code §§ 8250(a), 8251(a); see § 186.04[1][a]]. Demurrer may be made on any of the grounds of demurrer available in a civil action. If the demurrer is sustained, the court may allow the contestant a reasonable time, not exceeding 15 days, within which to amend the objection. If the demurrer is overruled, the petitioner and other interested persons may answer the objection within 15 days after the ruling [Prob. Code § 8251(b)].

If a person fails to timely respond to the summons, the case is still at issue and may proceed on the petition and other documents filed by the time of the hearing without the necessity of further pleadings being filed [Prob. Code § 8251(c)(1)]. The person who failed to file a timely response may not participate further in the contest, but his or her interest in the estate is not otherwise affected and he or she is bound by the decision in the proceeding [Prob. Code § 8251(c)(2) (rule does not preclude further participation in contest by petitioner)].

A person named as executor in the will is under no duty to defend a will contest until the court appoints the person personal representative [Prob. Code § 8250(b)].

[c] Trial of Contest and Entry of Judgment

At the trial of the will contest, the court will determine any contested issue of fact that affects the validity of the will [Prob. Code § 8252(b)]. The court may make appropriate orders, including orders sustaining or denying objections, and must render judgment either admitting the will to probate or rejecting it, in whole or in part, and appointing a personal representative [Prob. Code § 8254].

The proponents of the will have the burden of proving that the will was duly executed [Prob. Code § 8252(a)]. "Duly executed" means executed according to Prob. Code §§ 6110-6113 by a person having testamentary capacity [see Estate of Gecht (1959) 165 Cal. App. 2d 431, 442, 331 P.2d 1019] . The contestants of the will have the burden of proving each allegation raised by the contest, such as lack of testamentary intent or capacity, undue influence, fraud, duress, mistake, or revocation [Prob. Code § 8252(a); Estate of Smith (1998) 61 Cal. App. 4th 259, 269, 71 Cal. Rptr. 2d 424] . Each subscribing witness must be produced and examined, if available. If no subscribing witness is available [see Evid. Code § 240 ("unavailability" defined)], the court may admit the evidence of other witnesses to prove the due execution of the will [Prob. Code § 8253]. If only one subscribing witness is available, his or her evidence alone may be sufficient to prove due execution and the unavailable witness is not necessary [Estate of Burdette (2000) 81 Cal. App. 4th 938, 945, 97 Cal. Rptr. 2d 263] .

[2] After Probate

[a] Time for Filing and Persons Permitted to File Petition for Revocation

Within 120 days after a will is admitted to probate, any interested person, other than a party to a will contest (i.e., a challenge before probate) and anyone who had actual notice of the will contest in time to have joined in it, may petition the court to revoke the probate of the will [Prob. Code § 8270(a)]. A person who was a minor or who was incompetent and had no guardian or conservator at the time the will was admitted to probate may petition the court to revoke the probate of the will at any time before entry of an order for final distribution [Prob. Code § 8270(b)].

[b] Contents of Petition

A petition to revoke the probate of a will must include objections setting forth written grounds of opposition [Prob. Code § 8270(a)]. The grounds for revocation of probate are the same as the grounds for denial of probate [see §§ 186.03, 186.04]. Thus, a petition to revoke the probate of a will is essentially the same as an objection to the admission of a will to probate. The only material difference between the two pleadings is that the petition for revocation must allege the date the will was admitted to probate [Estate of Horn (1990) 219 Cal. App. 3d 67, 73, 268 Cal. Rptr. 41] .

[c] Revocation Proceedings

Proceedings to revoke probate of a will are essentially the same as will contest proceedings [see Prob. Code § 8271(b)]. On the filing of the petition, a summons must be issued to the personal representative and to the heirs and devisees of the deceased, so far as known to the petitioner. The summons must be served with a copy of the petition and contain a direction that the persons summoned file with the court a written pleading in response to the petition within 30 days [Prob. Code § 8271(a)]. Failure to timely respond to the summons has the same effect as failure to timely respond to a summons issued in a will contest [Prob. Code § 8271(a), (c); see Prob. Code § 8251(c); see also § 186.04[1][b]].

[d] Effect of Revocation

If it appears on satisfactory proof that the will should be denied probate, the court must revoke probate of the will [Prob. Code § 8272(a)]. Revocation of probate terminates the powers of the personal representative. The personal representative is not liable for any otherwise proper act done in good faith before the revocation, nor is any transaction entered into with a third person dealing in good faith and for value void by reason of the revocation [Prob. Code §

8272(b)].

CHAPTER 186 PROBATE OF WILLS
PART I. INTRODUCTION

18-186 California Points & Authorities § 186.05

§ 186.05 Effect of No Contest Clause in Will or Other Instrument

[1] Significance in Will Contest

Attorneys contemplating bringing a will contest, or defending a contest, must consider the potential effect of any no contest clause in the will or any other estate planning instrument executed by the testator. The majority of wills and trusts contain some type of no contest clause. Under legislation operative January 1, 2010 [see § 186.05[3], [4]], the availability of declaratory relief to determine the effect of such a clause has been eliminated, thereby making a will contest in the face of such a clause potentially more risky than under former law. Now more than ever, attorneys need to evaluate the potential effect of a no contest clause before deciding whether to proceed with any proceeding that might be characterized as a will contest.

Typically, the no contest clause is not asserted as an affirmative defense in the contest itself, because the clause usually does not address the merits of the underlying claim (for example, in a contest based on capacity, a no contest clause in the will has no bearing on whether or not the testator had capacity to make a will). Rather, it is invoked at the time of distribution, which theoretically occurs after the contest has been concluded. If the contestant was unsuccessful, then the fiduciary seeks approval for a distribution in conformity with the application of the no contest clause. (If the contest is successful, of course, the document containing the no contest clause would not control the distribution in any case.)

[2] Nature and Validity

A no contest clause in a will or other dispositive instrument creates a condition on the gifts and dispositions provided for in the instrument [Burch v. George (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 246, 254, 27 Cal. Rptr. 2d 165, 866 P.2d 92 ; Estate of Lindstrom (1987) 191 Cal. App. 3d 375, 381, 236 Cal. Rptr. 376] . In essence, a no contest clause in a will conditions the rights of the devisees named in the will to take the devises provided for in the will on their acquiescence in its terms. To the extent that a particular devisee acquiesces in those terms, the devisee is entitled to take the devise; to the extent that the devisee does not acquiesce, the devisee cannot take [see Burch v. George (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 246, 254, 27 Cal. Rptr. 2d 165, 866 P.2d 92] .

The purpose of a no contest clause is to discourage will contests by imposing a penalty of forfeiture against any beneficiary who challenges the will [Estate of Gonzalez (2002) 102 Cal. App. 4th, 1296, 1302, 126 Cal. Rptr. 2d 332] .

A no contest clause also is known as an "in terrorem" clause.

No contest clauses are valid and enforceable in California [Burch v. George (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 246, 254, 27 Cal. Rptr. 2d 165, 866 P.2d 92] to the extent permitted under the governing law, as discussed below.

[3] Applicable Law

The rules governing no contest clauses were significantly revised effective January 1, 2010 [Prob. Code § 21315; see Prob. Code §§ 21310-21315]. The revised statute governs the enforcement of no contest clauses in "protected instruments" [see [c], below] that are filed on or after January 1, 2010, whenever executed, provided that the protected instrument became irrevocable on or after January 1, 2001 [Prob. Code § 21315].

Common law continues to govern no contest clauses in all other instruments [Prob. Code § 21315].

[4] Enforcement of No Contest Clause Under Probate Code

[a] Definitions of "No Contest Clause" and "Protected Instrument"

Under the Probate Code revision effective January 1, 2010, a no contest clause is a provision in a valid instrument which, if enforced, would penalize a beneficiary for filing a pleading in any court [Prob. Code § 21310(c)]. A pleading is a petition, complaint, cross-complaint, objection, answer, response, or claim [Prob. Code § 21310(d)].

The Probate Code allows the enforcement of a no contest clause only with respect to a "protected instrument" [see Prob. Code §§ 21310, 21311]. "Protected instrument" means the following [Prob. Code § 21310(e)]:

- The instrument containing the no contest clause; or

- An instrument that is in existence on the date the instrument containing the no contest clause is executed and is expressly identified in the no contest clause, either individually or as part of an identifiable class of instruments, as being governed by the no contest clause.

Since a no contest clause cannot apply to future instruments [see Prob. Code § 21310(e)(2)], each codicil to an existing will must contain its own no contest clause if one is desired. A statement in amendments that the testator confirms and ratifies the original will is inadequate to incorporate the no contest clause into the amendment [see Prob. Code § 21310(e), see also Perrin v. Lee (2008) 164 Cal. App. 4th 1239, 79 Cal. Rptr. 3d 885] .

It is also important to determine whether or not a testamentary trust created under a will that contains a no contest clause is subject to a no contest provision. Any no contest clause applicable to the trust should be separately contained in the trust terms as recited in the order for distribution entered in the probate proceeding [Meyer v. Meyer (2008) 162 Cal. App. 4th 983, 76 Cal. Rptr. 3d 546 (no contest clause had not been incorporated by reference into the testamentary trust because the decrees of distribution specifying the terms of the testamentary trust did not include the will's no contest clause as one of those terms)].

[b] Circumstances in Which No Contest Clause Is Enforceable

Under the revised rules effective January 1, 2010, a no contest clause is only enforceable in three specific circumstances [Prob. Code § 21311(a)]:

- A direct contest brought without probable cause.

- A challenge to the transfer of property (provided the no contest clause provides).

- The filing of a creditor's claim (provided the no contest clause provides).

There is no opt-out provision in this statute. The provisions of Prob. Code §§ 21310-21315 apply notwithstanding any contrary provisions in an instrument [Prob. Code § 21314].

[c] Direct Contest

A no contest clause is enforceable in a direct contest that is brought without probable cause [Prob. Code § 21311(a)(1)]. A direct contest is one that alleges the invalidity of a protected instrument or one or more of its terms based on any of the following [Prob. Code § 21310(b)]:

- Forgery.
- Lack of due execution.
- Lack of capacity.
- Menace, duress, fraud, or undue influence.
- Revocation of a will pursuant to Prob. Code § 6120, revocation of a trust pursuant to Prob. Code § 15401, or revocation of an instrument other than a will or trust pursuant to the procedure for revocation that is provided by statute or by the instrument.
- Disqualification of a beneficiary under Prob. Code §§ 6112, 21350.

Probable cause exists if, at the time of filing a contest, the facts known to the contestant would cause a reasonable person to believe that there is a reasonable opportunity for further investigation or discovery [Prob. Code § 21311(b)].

[d] Challenge to Transfer of Property

A no contest clause is enforceable against a pleading challenging the transfer of property on the grounds that it was not the transferor's property at the time of the transfer (a "forced election"), as long as the no contest clause expressly so provides [Prob. Code § 21311(a)(2)]. In this type of contest, probable cause is irrelevant, and the forced election may be applicable to anyone [see Prob. Code § 21311(a)(2)].

[e] Creditor's Claim

A no contest clause is enforceable against the filing of a creditor's claim or prosecution of an action based on it, as long as the no contest clause expressly provides for such an application of the clause [Prob. Code § 21311(a)(3)]. In this type of contest, probable cause is also irrelevant [see Prob. Code § 21311(a)(3)].

[f] Declaratory Relief Unavailable

Under former law, declaratory relief was available to determine whether a proposed challenge to an instrument violated a no contest clause [see former Prob. Code § 21320]. Such relief is no longer available under the revised statutes effective January 1, 2010 [see Prob. Code §§ 21310-21315].

The absence of declaratory relief injects a greater element of risk into commencing a possible contest in the face of a no contest clause. The attorney now must make his or own independent determination of whether or not such a proceeding will be deemed a "contest" under the revised statutes, and both attorney and client will have to live with the results in the event that the attorney's determination is ultimately incorrect and the client does not prevail on the underlying substantive issues in the contest.

[5] Enforcement of No Contest Clauses Under Common Law

Contests involving wills and other instruments that became irrevocable prior to January 1, 2001, are governed by common law rather than the current Probate Code provisions [Prob. Code § 21315; see 186.05[3]]. Since a will does not become irrevocable until the testator's death, most proceedings going forward will be governed by the law effective as of January 1, 2010.

Under common law, whether there has been a "contest" within the meaning of the language of a no contest clause is to be determined according to the circumstances of each case and the language used [Estate of Strader (2003) 107 Cal. App. 4th 996, 1003, 132 Cal. Rptr. 2d 649 ; Nairne v. Jessop-Humblet (2002) 101 Cal. App. 4th 1124, 1128, 124 Cal. Rptr. 2d 726] . Factors relevant to determining whether a claim involving the characterization, inclusion, or distribution of a certain item of property in a testamentary instrument is a contest include [Nairne v. Jessop-Humblet (2002) 101 Cal. App. 4th 1124, 1129, 124 Cal. Rptr. 2d 726] :

- The particular language of the no contest clause.
- Whether the instrument specifies the property and its distribution.
- Whether the instrument specifically characterizes the property, e.g., as separate versus community property.
- Whether the challenge, if successful, would thwart the testator's intent.

For more detailed discussion of the construction and interpretation of no contest clauses under common law, including the issues of indirect attack in collateral proceedings, the enforcement of oral contracts in conflict with the will, and actions seeking judicial interpretations of wills or other instruments, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 444, Probate: Will Contests, § 444.14[3].

[6] Strict Construction

The strict statutory rules regarding no contest clauses reflect the general doctrine that no contest clauses are disfavored by the public policy against forfeiture [McIndoe v. Olivos (2005) 132 Cal. App. 4th 483, 487, 33 Cal. Rptr. 3d 689 ; Estate of Richter (1993) 12 Cal. App. 4th 1361, 1367, 16 Cal. Rptr. 2d 108 ; Scharlin v. Superior Court (1992) 9 Cal. App. 4th 162, 168-169, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 448] . Accordingly, under both the Probate Code and common law, no contest clauses must be strictly construed and cannot be extended beyond what the testator clearly intended by the wording of the will [see Prob. Code 21312; see also Meyer v. Meyer (2008) 162 Cal. App. 4th 983, 998, 76 Cal. Rptr. 3d 546 ; Zwirn v. Schweizer (2005) 134 Cal. App. 4th 1153, 1159, 36 Cal. Rptr. 3d 527 ; Nairne v. Jessop-Humblet (2002) 101 Cal. App. 4th 1124, 1128, 124 Cal. Rptr. 2d 726] . Under the common law, a beneficiary will be found to have violated a no contest clause only if the beneficiary's action clearly falls within the terms of the clause, and the penalty will be imposed only if it is found that the beneficiary's act clearly was intended by the testator to require the imposition of the penalty [Estate of Rossi (2006) 138 Cal. App. 4th 1325, 1338, 42 Cal. Rptr. 3d 244 ; McIndoe v. Olivos (2005) 132 Cal. App. 4th 483, 487, 489, 33 Cal. Rptr. 3d 689 ; Estate of Richter (1993) 12 Cal. App. 4th 1361, 1367, 16 Cal. Rptr. 2d 108] .

However, when it is determined a beneficiary's act does fall within the scope of the clause, it will be enforced even in circumstances in which the result arguably is harsh. Thus, for example, a testator could permissively provide that three of his five children would all lose their testamentary gifts under a trust if any one of them contested it [Tunstall v. Wells (2006) 144 Cal. App. 4th, 554, 557-558, 50 Cal. Rptr. 3d 468] . The court concluded that the no contest clause did not violate public policy, and reasoned that the decedent's intentions to impose conditions on the gifts of the three children were within his rights as a testator [Tunstall v. Wells (2006) 144 Cal. App. 4th, 554, 557-558, 50 Cal. Rptr. 3d 468] . Similarly, a no contest clause in a testamentary trust was upheld although it forced the settlor's former wife and their children to choose between enforcing their rights under an existing martial dissolution judgment by filing creditor's claims, or relinquishing those rights and taking the gifts provided for them in the settlor's trust [Colburn v. Northern Trust Co. (2007) 151 Cal. App. 4th 439, 447, 59 Cal. Rptr. 3d 828] . Also upheld was a clause in a trust instrument that applied to any attempt to "impair" the trust, which was held applicable to the trust beneficiary's adjustment petition under the California Uniform Principal and Income Act to reallocate principal and income, when the reallocation would have resulted in more income to the beneficiary than was allowed by the trust and the invasion of trust principal reserved to other beneficiaries [McKenzie v. Vanderpoel (2007) 151 Cal. App. 4th 1442, 1454, 61 Cal. Rptr. 3d 129] .

Extrinsic evidence on the testator's intended meaning of the no contest clause is admissible if it is relevant to show a meaning to which the language is reasonably susceptible [Estate of Kaila (2001) 94 Cal. App. 4th 1122, 1132, 114 Cal. Rptr. 2d 865] . However, consideration of extrinsic evidence does not necessarily require a determination of an action on the merits that would preclude relief [Estate of Kaila (2001) 94 Cal. App. 4th 1122, 1136, 114 Cal. Rptr. 2d 865] .

§ 186.06 Requirements Governing Points and Authorities

Generally, any party filing a demurrer or notice of motion, must serve and file an accompanying memorandum. The absence of a memorandum may be construed by the court as an admission that the motion or special demurrer is not meritorious and cause for its denial and, in the case of a demurrer, as a waiver of all grounds not supported [Cal. Rules of Court, Rule 3.113(a)].

Generally, a memorandum may not exceed 15 pages in length, or in the case of a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication, 20 page in length. A reply or closing memorandum may not exceed 10 pages in length [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.113(d)]. Any party who wants to file a longer memorandum must obtain leave of court [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.113(e)]. For further discussion of the basic requirements for memoranda, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs, § 1.05.

CONTESTANT _____ [name] IS _____ [specify status as an "interested person," e.g., AN HEIR OF DECEDENT'S ESTATE], AND AS AN INTERESTED PERSON MAY OBJECT TO THE ADMISSION OF THE WILL OF _____ [name of decedent] TO PROBATE.

A. Interested Person May Object to Will. An interested person may appear and make an objection in writing at or before a hearing (Prob. Code § 1043(a); see Prob. Code § 48 (defining "interested person")).

B. Procedure for Objection. When a will is contested, the contestant must file an objection to the probate of the will and the clerk must issue a summons and a copy of the objection directed to each heir of the decedent, so far as known to or reasonably ascertainable by the contestant, and each devisee, executor, and alternative executor named in the will, regardless of whether the devise or appointment is purportedly revoked in a subsequent instrument (Prob. Code § 8250(a); see Prob. Code §§ 8004(b), 8110).

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be used to support an objection to the admission of a will to probate [Prob. Code §§ 8004(b), 8250(a)]. The form is a general one that describes the contestant's standing to object to the will and sets forth the procedures for the objection.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, if counsel is arguing that the contestant has standing to challenge probate because the contestant is an heir, counsel should discuss facts showing that the contestant is a surviving spouse or other person who is entitled to take the decedent's property by intestate succession [see Prob. Code §§ 44 ("heir" defined), 48 ("interested person" defined)].

This form may be combined with other forms discussing the substantive grounds for objecting to the probate of a will. For example, counsel may combine this form with a form raising the issues of improper execution of a will [see § 186.22] or undue influence [see § 186.29]. This form also may be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

Before initiating a proceeding that may constitute a "will contest" [see Prob. Code § 21310(c); see also § 186.05[4][a]], the attorney should review the instrument in question, and other relevant instruments prepared by the testator, to see if they contain any no contest clauses and, if they do, should carefully review the law governing enforcement and effect of such clauses [Prob. Code §§ 21310-21315] before initiating a contest. For discussion, see § 186.05.

[b] Procedural Requirements for Objections

A petition, objection, response, report, or account filed under the Probate Code must be in writing. The writing must be signed by all of the petitioners, objectors, or respondents, or by all of the persons making the report or account. It must be verified, and then filed with the court clerk [Prob. Code §§ 1020, 1021(a)]. An objection to admission of a will to probate must be verified by the objector or, if there are two or more parties joining in the objection, by any of them [Prob. Code § 1021(b)(3)]. If the objector is absent from the county, or for some other reason is unable to sign or verify the objection, his or her attorney may sign or verify the objection, unless the objector is a fiduciary appointed in the proceeding [Prob. Code § 1023].

[c] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the form in § 186.50 may be used to oppose the contention supported by this form.

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be used to support a petition to revoke probate of a will [Prob. Code § 8270]. It is a general form for use in showing that a petitioner has standing to challenge probate, and that the petition to revoke probate is timely filed.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss facts showing that the petitioner is an "interested person," such as an heir or devisee of the decedent [see Prob. Code § 48 ("interested person" defined)], as well as facts showing that the petition was filed within 120 days after the will was admitted to probate [Prob. Code § 8270(a)]. If the petitioner was incompetent or a minor when the will was admitted to probate, counsel should discuss facts showing that the decedent's estate has not yet been distributed [Prob. Code § 8270(b)].

This form may be combined with other forms discussing the substantive grounds for revoking the probate of a will. Thus, counsel may combine this form with a form raising the issues of lack of testamentary intent or capacity, undue influence, fraud, duress, mistake, or revocation [see §§ 186.22 -186.37]. This form also may be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

For a memorandum in support of an objection to a will that has not yet been admitted to probate, see § 186.20.

[b] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 186.50 may be used to oppose the contention supported by this form.

18-186 California Points & Authorities § 186.22

§ 186.22 Supporting Contest of Will--Grounds for Contest--Will Was Improperly Executed [Prob. Code §§ 6110, 8252(a)]

[1] FORM

[The following should be combined with a general memorandum supporting a will contest or a petition to revoke probate of a will (see §§ 186.20 and 186.21), or may be used in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE _____ [WILL or CODICIL] OF DECEDENT _____ [name] IS INVALID BECAUSE IT WAS NOT EXECUTED IN SUBSTANTIAL COMPLIANCE WITH THE STATUTORY REQUIREMENTS FOR THE EXECUTION OF FORMAL WILLS.

A. Writing Required. A will must be in writing (Prob. Code § 6110(a)).

B. Signature Required. A will must be signed (1) by the testator, (2) by some other person signing in the testator's name and presence and by the testator's direction, or (3) by a conservator under a court order to make a will under Prob. Code § 2580 (Prob. Code § 6110(b)).

C. Witnesses Required. A will must be witnessed by being signed by at least two persons generally competent to be witnesses, each of whom (1) being present at the same time, witnessed either the signing of the will or the testator's acknowledgment of the signature or the will and (2) understands that the instrument they sign is the testator's will (Prob. Code §§ 6110(c), 6112(a)). The subscription of a will by two witnesses must occur before the testator's death (Prob. Code § 6110(c)(1), Estate of Saueressig (2006) 38 Cal. 4th 1045, 1057, 44 Cal. Rptr. 3d 672, 136 P.3d 201).

D. Statutory Requirements Must Be Strictly Followed. Statutory requirements must be strictly followed in the execution of a will, and the testator's intention is not to be considered in determining whether the statutory requirements have been met (Estate of Howell (1958) 50 Cal. 2d 211, 215, 324 P.2d 578 ; Estate of Moore (1949) 92 Cal. App. 2d 120, 122, 206 P.2d 413).

E. Presumption of Due Execution Inapplicable When Contrary Evidence Clear. A presumption that a will has been duly executed arises on proof of the signatures of the testator and the witnesses; however, the court is not required to find according to the presumption when contrary evidence is clear (Estate of Fletcher (1958) 50 Cal. 2d 317, 319, 325 P.2d 103).

[Optional] F. Signature by Mark Requires Formalities. If a testator signs a will by a mark placed near his or her written name, but the person who wrote the testator's name on the will is not present at the signing and does not sign his or her own name as a witness to the mark and no other competent witness signs the will as a witness to the mark, the formalities for signature by a mark are notsatisfied (Estate of Mangeri (1976) 55 Cal. App. 3d 76, 81-83, 127 Cal. Rptr. 438 ; see Civ. Code § 14; Code Civ. Proc. § 17).

[2] Comments

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a challenge to a will that is allegedly improperly executed [see Prob. Code §§ 6110 (execution of wills), 6112 (witnessing of wills)]. Optional Paragraph F is for use when the will was signed by a mark, and the execution and witnessing formalities for signatures by mark were not satisfied. Essentially, a mark by a person who cannot write is a proper "signature," as long as the person's name is written near the mark by a signing witness [see Civ. Code § 14; Code Civ. Proc. § 17; see also Prob. Code § 1000 (rules applicable in civil practice apply if Probate Code does not provide applicable rules); but see Estate of McCabe (1990) 224 Cal. App. 3d 330, 333-334, 274 Cal. Rptr. 43 (substantial compliance with Civ. Code § 14 and Code Civ. Proc. § 17 is enough)].

This memorandum may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of improper execution of a will. Thus, they may be combined with the points and authorities pertaining to an objection to the admission of a will to probate [see § 186.20] or a petition to revoke probate of a will [see § 186.21].

Before initiating a proceeding that may constitute a "will contest" [see Prob. Code § 21310(c); see also § 186.05[4][a]], the attorney should review the instrument in question, and other relevant instruments prepared by the testator, to see if they contain any no contest clauses and, if they do, should carefully review the law governing enforcement and effect of such clauses [Prob. Code §§ 21310-21315] before initiating a contest. For discussion, see § 186.05.

[b] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the form in § 186.51 may be used to oppose the contentions supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Witnesses Required

In Estate of Saueressig (2006) 38 Cal. 4th 1045, 44 Cal. Rptr. 3d 672, 136 P.3d. 201 , the decedent requested a notary to notarize his will. After the decedent's death, the will was submitted for probate and the trial court denied the petition for probate on the grounds that the will did not qualify as holographic because its material terms were typed, nor did it qualify as a formal will because, having been signed by only one witness, it failed to meet the two-signature requirement of Prob. Code § 6110. Relying on Estate of Eugene (2002) 104 Cal. App. 4th 907, 128 Cal. Rptr. 2d 622 , the executor appealed, and the Court of Appeal reversed, on the grounds that there was a second qualifying witness--the notary's husband--who, according to the husband's declaration, heard the decedent ask the notary to notarize the will, saw the decedent sign the document, and saw the will notarized.

The California Supreme Court affirmed the trial court decision that the will did not qualify as holographic because its material terms were typed, nor did it qualify as a formal will because, having been signed by only one witness, it failed to meet the two-signature requirement of Prob. Code § 6110. The Court held that the subscription of a will by two witnesses must occur prior to the testator's death, and a will that has not been subscribed by two witnesses at the time of the testator's death neither complies nor substantially complies with Prob. Code § 6110 (38 Cal. 4th 1045, 1051) . The Court further reasoned that permitting witnesses to sign a will after the death of a testator would erode the efficacy of the witnessing requirement as a safeguard against fraud or mistake (38 Cal. 4th 1045, 1052)] .

NOTE:

In 2008, the California Legislature codified the California Supreme Court's holding in Estate of Saueressig (2006) 38 Cal. 4th 1045, 44 Cal. Rptr. 3d 672, 136 P.3d. 201 in Prob. Code § 6110(c), which requires that a will be witnessed by being signed during the testator's lifetime, but further provides that a will that was not executed in compliance with that requirement must be treated as if it was executed in compliance if the proponent of the will establishes by clear and convincing evidence that, at the time the testator signed the will, the testator intended the will to constitute the testator's will.

[b] Statutory Requirements Must Be Strictly Followed

Estate of Howell (1958) 50 Cal. 2d 211, 324 P.2d 578 , involved a petition for revocation of probate. The document submitted to probate consisted of three written pages. The first page contained the heading "Last Will and Testament," followed by two testamentary provisions, a provision appointing an executor, an attestation clause signed by three witnesses, and the testator's signature. The second and third pages were both labeled at the top as "Last Will and Testament--Frances R. Howell," and numbered "Page Two" and "Page Three" respectively. Page two contained nine testamentary provisions followed by the testator's signature, and page three contained one testamentary provision followed by an empty space of more than seven inches and, at the bottom of the page, the testator's signature. The three pages were not attached together, and there was no evidence that they constituted a single document at the time they were signed by the testator.

The California Supreme Court held that the will was not properly executed and could not be probated. The Court observed that the witness signatures did not appear at the end of the document, and that it was doubtful that the testator's signature seven inches below the last testamentary provision constituted a signature "at the end" of the document as required by former Prob. Code § 50 (repealed effective January 1, 1985 by Stats. 1983, ch. 842, § 18). The Court expressly stated that proffered evidence that the testator intended the three pages to constitute a both single document and his will was not relevant to determining whether the statutory requirements had been satisfied (50 Cal. 2d 211, 215) .

In Estate of Moore (1949) 92 Cal. App. 2d 120, 206 P.2d 413 , a niece with whom the decedent had lived found in the decedent's bible a document purporting to be the decedent's will. The document was offered for probate, and another niece contested it on the grounds that it was not properly executed. The document was entirely typewritten, with the decedent's name typewritten at the end. It was signed by three witnesses, and when the witnesses signed, the decedent personally wrote his name at the top of the document and stated that the document was his will. There was no evidence that the decedent typed the document, or even that he knew how to type. Nor was there any evidence concerning who typed the document or when it was typed. The trial court denied probate of the document, finding that the decedent's typed name at the end did not qualify as a valid signature under former Prob. Code § 50 (repealed effective January 1, 1985, by Stats. 1983, ch. 842, § 18) (the niece who propounded the document for probate did not contend that the signature at the top of the document was satisfactory under former Prob. Code § 50). The proponent niece appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that former Prob. Code § 50 required subscription by handwritten signature or, at the very least, that a typewritten signature be typed by the testator or at the testator's direction and in his or her presence (92 Cal. App. 2d 120, 123) . In reaching its decision, the court of appeal considered both Code Civ. Proc. § 17 and the definition of "subscribe" set forth in Webster's Dictionary. The court noted that the common meaning of "subscribe" does not include the typing of a name, and that Code Civ. Proc. § 17 provides for subscription by mark as the exclusive alternative to handwritten subscription. It disregarded the testator's statements and intention as irrelevant to the statutory signature requirements (92 Cal. App. 2d 120, 122) .

[c] Presumption of Due Execution Inapplicable When Contrary Evidence Clear

In Estate of Fletcher (1958) 50 Cal. 2d 317, 325 P.2d 103 , a typewritten document bearing the signatures of two witnesses and a signature purported to be that of the decedent was submitted for probate. Contestants alleged that at the time of the execution of the document, the decedent was not of sound and disposing mind, that the will was not signed by the decedent or executed with the required statutory formalities, and that the decedent was unduly influenced by the proponent of the will. At trial, the proponents offered proof of due execution. The signatures of the two witnesses were not disputed. One of the witnesses had died. The other testified that the recitals in the attestation clause were untrue and that the purported will was not executed with the formalities required by law. According to the witness, the decedent was in a coma at the time the will was executed. The will was signed by the proponent of the will by placing a pen in the decedent's hand and directing the decedent's signature by holding her hand in his. The decedent did not know what was happening, and did not in any manner declare the document to be her will. The trial court denied probate of the will, declaring that although the witness's signatures raised a presumption of due execution, the court was not required to find in accordance with the presumption when contrary evidence was presented. The proponents of the will appealed.

The court of appeal found that there was substantial evidence to show a lack of due execution of the will. It noted that the trial court has discretion to determine the order of proof, and that the trial court may require the proponent of a will to prove due execution before it proceeds with a will contest. The court of appeal stated that the clear and uncontradicted testimony of the remaining witness to the will conflicted with the presumption of due execution, leaving a question of fact that was properly determined by the trial court (50 Cal. 2d 317, 320) .

[d] Signature by Mark Requires Formalities

In Estate of Mangeri (1976) 55 Cal. App. 3d 76, 127 Cal. Rptr. 438 , an attorney prepared a will for a hospitalized testator. The testator, who was too weak to write his name, signed the will with an "X" placed immediately above his name as typed at the end of the will by the attorney. Two witnesses signed the will, but no witness wrote the testator's name on the will or signed the will as a witness to the mark. The trial court granted a summary judgment motion by the executor, and dismissed the petition for admission of the will to probate, finding that the will was not executed in conformity with the statutory requirements for signatures by mark. The testator's stepdaughter and sister appealed, claiming that there had been substantial compliance with the requirements.

The court of appeal held that there was no substantial compliance with the requirements set forth in Civ. Code § 14 and Code Civ. Proc. § 17 for signatures by mark. These statutes provide that when a person signs or subscribes a document by a mark, his or her name must be written near the mark by a person who writes his or her own name as a witness. Citing Estate of Dombrowski (1912) 163 Cal. 290, 125 P. 233 , and Estate of Gooch (1962) 211 Cal. App. 2d 1, 26 Cal. Rptr. 835 , among other cases, the court stated that none of the approved cases had found the procedure followed in the case to substantially comply with the statutory requirements for a signature by mark (55 Cal. App. 3d 76, 79-81) .

The facts and procedural background of Estate of McCabe (1990) 224 Cal. App. 3d 330, 274 Cal. Rptr. 43 , are discussed in § 186.51[3][b]. In McCabe, the court held that a will was entitled to probate even though the witness failed to write the decedent's name near his mark, as provided in Civ. Code § 14 and Code Civ. Proc. § 17. Because the decedent's mark was directly above his typewritten name on the line designated for signature, it was clear what name the mark was intended to represent, and because the mark was witnessed by someone other than the attesting witness, the opportunity for fraud was minimal. Thus, strict compliance with the statutory requirements in order to remove the opportunity for fraud was unnecessary (224 Cal. App. 3d 330, 334) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Witnesses Required

In Crook v. Contreras (2002) 95 Cal. App. 4th 1194, 116 Cal. Rptr. 2d 319 , the decedent executed two documents purporting to exercise a power of appointment over assets in a trust. Two witnesses saw the execution of the documents, but only one witness signed the documents before the decedent's death. Two years after the first document was executed, a year and a half after the second document was executed, and one month after the decedent's death, the other witness signed an attestation that was attached to the petition to admit the two documents to probate as codicils. The court held that the subscription of a will by two witnesses must occur before the testator's death, and that a will that has not been subscribed by two witnesses at the time of the testator's death neither complies nor substantially complies with the requirements of Prob. Code § 6110(c). The court considered the decisions of courts in other jurisdictions, which provided substantial support for its conclusion. It also noted that to hold otherwise would invite fraud and subvert the intent of will authentication requirements by allowing the validity of a will to depend on the whim of a witness who could wait until after the testator's death to decide whether to subscribe his or her signature to the will (95 Cal. App. 4th 1194, 1205) .

In Estate of Eugene (2002) 104 Cal. App. 4th 907 , the court held that Prob. Code § 6110 does not require either witness to sign in the presence of the other or of the testator, or at any particular time. Thus, the court concluded that an attorney who prepared reciprocal wills and witnessed both testators' execution of their wills, but inadvertently failed to sign one will, was properly permitted to sign after the testator's death. The court disagreed with the conclusion of Crook v. Contreras, above, that the subscription of a will by the witnesses must always occur before the testator's death in order to substantially comply with Prob. Code § 6110 (104 Cal. App. 4th 907, 912-914) . However, Estate of Eugene is no longer good law on this point in light of Estate of Saueressig (2006) 38 Cal. 4th 1045 , discussed in*§ 186.22[3][a], above*, in which the California Supreme Court expressly repudiated this position.

18-186 California Points & Authorities § 186.23

§ 186.23 Supporting Contest of Will--Grounds for Contest--Holographic Will Was Improperly Executed--General Form [Prob. Code § 6111]

[1] FORM

[The following should be combined with a general memorandum of points and authorities supporting a will contest or a petition to revoke probate of a will (see §§ 186.20 and 186.21), or may be used in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE PURPORTED HOLOGRAPHIC _____ [WILL or CODICIL] IS INVALID BECAUSE IT WAS NOT EXECUTED IN SUBSTANTIAL COMPLIANCE WITH THE STATUTORY REQUIREMENTS FOR THE EXECUTION OF HOLOGRAPHIC WILLS.

A. Holographic Will Must Be in Testator's Handwriting. A document is not a valid holographic will unless the signature and the material provisions are in the handwriting of the testator (Prob. Code § 6111(a); see Estate of Sola (1990) 225 Cal. App. 3d 241, 247, 275 Cal. Rptr. 98).

B. Holographic Will Must Contain Words Describing Property to Be Disposed of and Showing Intention to Dispose of That Property. Although no particular words are required to create a will, a holographic will must contain words describing, or at least referring to, the property to be disposed of and showing an intention to dispose of the property (Estate of Wong (1995) 40 Cal. App. 4th 1198, 1205, 47 Cal. Rptr. 2d 707).

C. Proponent of Document Alleged to Constitute Holographic Will Has Burden of Showing That Document Describes Property to Be Disposed of and Shows Intent to Dispose of That Property. The proponent of an alleged holographic will has the burden of showing that the document describes the property to be disposed of and shows an intent to dispose of that property (Estate of Wong (1995) 40 Cal. App. 4th 1198, 1205, 47 Cal. Rptr. 2d 707).

[Optional] D. Intention to Dispose of Property Must Be Shown by Words, Not by Symbol Without Fixed Meaning. The intention of the author of a document offered as a holographic will to dispose of property identified in the document must be shown by words, and not by a symbol without fixed meaning (Estate of Wong (1995) 40 Cal.

App. 4th 1198, 1205, 47 Cal. Rptr. 2d 707).

[Optional] E. Holographic Will Must Evidence Present Intention to Dispose of Testator's Property, Not Intent to Make Will in Future. A writing signed by the testator will not qualify as a holographic will unless it evidences present testamentary intent; a writing that only states the writer's intention to make a will in the future is not a holographic will [Estate of Southworth (1996) 51 Cal. App. 4th 564, 572, 59 Cal. Rptr. 2d 272] .

[Optional] F. Undated Holographic Will Invalid to Extent It Creates Inconsistency. If a holographic will does not contain a statement as to the date of its execution, and if the omission results in doubt as to whether its provisions or the inconsistent provisions of another will are controlling, the holographic will is invalid to the extent of the inconsistency unless the time of its execution is established to be after the date of execution of the other will (Prob. Code § 6111(b)(1)).

[Optional] G. Undated Holographic Will Invalid If Testator's Capacity at Issue. If a holographic will does not contain a statement as to the date of its execution, and if it is established that the testator lacked testamentary capacity at any time during which the will might have been executed, the will is invalid unless it is established that it was executed at a time when the testator had testamentary capacity (Prob. Code § 6111(b)(2)).

[Optional] H. Trend Towards Liberality Does Not Contravene Statutory Requirements. The trend towards liberally interpreting the statutes governing the execution of wills does not permit the court to ignore clear and explicit statutory requirements such as the requirement that a holographic will be signed in the handwriting of the testator (Estate of Wunderle (1947) 30 Cal. 2d 274, 279, 181 P.2d 874 ; Estate of Twohig (1986) 178 Cal. App. 3d 555, 559, 223 Cal. Rptr. 352).

[Optional] I. Failed Formal Will Not Valid Holographic Will. A formal will denied probate because of the false declarations made by each of its purported witnesses may not be given effect by treating it as if the testator had intended it to be a holographic instrument (Estate of Brown (1985) 171 Cal. App. 3d 1064, 1066-1069, 218 Cal. Rptr. 108).

[Optional] J. Extrinsic Evidence Admissible. Extrinsic evidence is admissible to determine whether a document constitutes a holographic will (Prob. Code § 6111.5.

[Optional] K. Holographic Will Revoked by Operation of Law. When a testator executes a holographic will before marriage naming as a beneficiary a person whom he or she later marries and divorces, Probate Code Section 6122 applies to revoke the holographic will by operation of law (Estate of Reeves (1991) 233 Cal. App. 3d 651, 654-655, 284 Cal. Rptr. 650).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a challenge to a purported holographic will. The form is a general one that may be used when a holographic will has not been properly executed in accordance with statutory requirements [see Prob. Code § 6111].

Optional Paragraph D may be used if the purported will contains symbols (such as arrows) other than words, that purportedly indicate the testamentary intent of the author of the document [see, e.g., Estate of Wong (1995) 40 Cal. App. 4th 1198, 1205, 47 Cal. Rptr. 2d 707] . Optional Paragraph E may be used if there is an issue regarding whether a document evidences a present testamentary intent or merely an intention to make a will in the future. Optional Paragraphs F and G may be used when the holographic document is not dated and there is another, competing will or an issue concerning testamentary capacity, respectively. Optional Paragraph H is for use when the proponent of the will argues that there has been substantial compliance with the statutory requirements for the execution of holographic wills. Optional Paragraph I may be used when the proponent of an invalid formal, witnessed will attempts to submit the document as a holographic will. Optional Paragraph J is for use if there is extrinsic evidence relevant to whether a document is a holographic will. Optional Paragraph K is for use when the testator executes a holographic will naming as beneficiary a person whom the testator later marries but subsequently divorces.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel may discuss facts showing that the testator's handwritten portions of a will, standing alone, are not material will provisions [see, e.g., Estate of Sola (1990) 225 Cal. App. 3d 241, 247, 275 Cal. Rptr. 98 ; Estate of Phifer (1984) 152 Cal. App. 3d 813, 816-818, 200 Cal. Rptr. 319] .

This memorandum may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that a proffered document is not a valid holographic will. Thus, it may be combined with the points and authorities pertaining to an objection to the admission of a will to probate [see § 186.20] or a petition to revoke probate of a will [see § 186.21].

[b] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 186.52 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Holographic Will Must Be in Testator's Handwriting

Estate of Sola (1990) 225 Cal. App. 3d 241, 275 Cal. Rptr. 98 involved two purported wills--a formal, witnessed will and a document consisting of a partial copy of the formal will, on which the testator scratched out various provisions and made various handwritten notations. Specifically, the testator scratched out boilerplate clauses concerning the revocation of prior wills and the payment of debts and funeral expenses, as well as the names of three beneficiaries and language dealing with distribution in the event that one of the named beneficiaries predeceased testator. The testator also scratched out part of a no-contest clause, and omitted a clause appointing an executor and an attorney for the executor. In addition, the testator omitted an attestation clause, witness signatures, and the testator's signature. Among the many interlineations was a handwritten note stating "SIGNED IT ON PAGE 2 DESTROYED PAGE 2 IT'S OUT I Fred Sola where I pencil OUT IS OUT Fred Sola THIS IS ME TALKING 6/11/87 USE THIS WILL." The document also contained a handwritten interlineation appointing the testator's brother to "to take care of this will." At the bottom of the last page, testator had written "signed Fred Sola." The trial court held that this document was not a valid holographic will, denied probate of the document, and admitted the formal will. Testator's brother appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that the handwritten portions of the document, standing alone, lacked both testamentary intent and testamentary substance, and had meaning only in relationship to the printed portion of the document. The court declined to make the policy favoring validity of wills the sole basis for its determination, noting that the determination of whether a document constitutes a holographic will is governed by statute. Even under the liberal construction trend and the substantial compliance rule, the handwritten provisions could not be deemed to be "material" provisions [see Prob. Code § 6111(a)]. The words used by testator, along with arrows pointing to printed portions of the document, evidenced his intent that the typewritten and handwritten portions of the document be read as a whole. The court also rejected the alternative argument that the handwritten provisions constituted a valid holographic codicil. Unlike the situation in Estate of Neilson (1980) 105 Cal. App. 3d 796, 165 Cal. Rptr. 319 , the handwritten provisions did not merely identify the provisions of the former will to be revoked or incorporated by reference. Rather, they could not be understood without reference to the typewritten words. Testator's intent was obviously to blend the handwritten and typewritten words into a new will (225 Cal. App. 3d 241, 248) .

[b] Holographic Will Must Contain Words Describing Property to Be Disposed of and Showing Intention to Dispose of That Property

In Estate of Wong (1995) 40 Cal. App. 4th 1198, 47 Cal. Rptr. 2d 707 , a 44-year-old businessman with a history of good health suddenly became ill and died. Some time after his death, a sealed envelope was found in his office. The envelope contained a note on which there were nine handwritten words, one the word "all," three constituting the businessman's name, two the name of his girl friend, and the remaining three the words "my best half." An arrow, a date, and the businessman's initials were at the bottom of the note. The series of words contained no recognizable subject, verb, or object. The court held that the note did not qualify as a holographic will because it did not contain operative words legally sufficient to create a devise of property. Although no particular words are required to create a will, every will must contain words describing, or at least referring to, the property to be disposed of, and showing the intention of the alleged testator to dispose of that property. Since the handwritten note did not describe or refer to any property, and since it did not contain words showing the alleged testator's intention to dispose of any property on his death, it did not qualify as a holographic will. The arrow could not supply the required meaning, as an arrow is a symbol without a fixed meaning and cannot be used in place of a word evidencing an intention to "give," "bequeath," or "will" (40 Cal. App. 4th 1198, 1208-1209) .

[c] Proponent of Document Alleged to Constitute Holographic Will Has Burden of Showing That Document Describes Property to Be Disposed of and Shows Intent to Dispose of That Property

In Estate of Wong (1995) 40 Cal. App. 4th 1198, 1205, 47 Cal. Rptr. 2d 707 , the contestants argued that a document offered as a holographic will did not qualify as a will because it did not describe or refer to any property and did not show the intention of the alleged testator to dispose of property by will. The proponent of the alleged will argued that the contestants had the burden of proving lack of testamentary intent, inasmuch as Prob. Code § 8252 provides in pertinent part that, at the trial of a will contest, the proponents of the will have the burden of proof of due execution and the "contestants of the will have the burden of proof of lack of testamentary intent or capacity." The court rejected this argument, holding that Prob. Code § 8252 applies only to documents that are clearly wills. The contestants of a document that appears to be a will and that exhibits testamentary intent must prove that testamentary intent was lacking. However, when the question is whether a document exhibits the required testamentary intent, this rule has no application, and the proponent has the burden of proving the required intent (40 Cal. App. 4th 1198, 1205) .

[d] Intention to Dispose of Property Must Be Shown by Words, Not by Symbol Without Fixed Meaning

In Estate of Wong (1995) 40 Cal. App. 4th 1198, 47 Cal. Rptr. 2d 707 , a note containing nine handwritten words was offered as a holographic will. Although the words contained no recognizable subject, verb, or object, the proponent of the alleged will argued that an arrow appearing at the bottom of the note symbolized the alleged testator's intent to transfer property by the note. The trial court accepted this argument and admitted the note to probate as a will. The court of appeal reversed, holding that the intention of the author of a document offered as a holographic will to dispose of property identified in the document must be shown by words, not by a symbol without fixed meaning. An arrow is, at best, an indefinite symbol and cannot be interpreted as the equivalent of the verbs "give," "bequeath," or "will," or even as meaning that the testator wanted the alleged devisee to have certain property upon his death. The arrow does not have one meaning which allows it to be used in place of a word, and it may not be used to supply any meaning to the words around it (40 Cal. App. 4th 1198, 1208) .

[e] Holographic Will Must Evidence Present Intention to Dispose of Testator's Property, Not Intent to Make Will in Future

In Estate of Southworth (1996) 51 Cal. App. 4th 564, 59 Cal. Rptr. 2d 272 , the decedent filled out a printed "donor card" prepared by an animal shelter. The card provided the donor with three options: (1) naming the animal shelter as beneficiary of a life insurance policy, (2) changing the donor's will to leave securities or cash to the shelter, or (3) not taking "immediate action" but stating his or her future intentions. The decedent circled option (3) and in the blank space provided after it wrote "My entire estate is to be left to North Shore Animal League." The trial court ruled that the card qualified as a valid holographic will because the signature and the material provisions were in the decedent's handwriting (see Prob. Code § 6111(a)). The court of appeal disagreed, concluding that when the decedent selected option (3), she evidenced an intent not to take "immediate action," but to take some action in the future, and that her handwritten words evidenced an intent to make a will in the future. Since there was no present intent to make a will, the requirement of testamentary intent was not satisfied and the card did not qualify as a will (51 Cal. App. 4th 564, 572) .

[f] Trend Towards Liberality Does Not Contravene Statutory Requirements

In Estate of Wunderle (1947) 30 Cal. 2d 274, 181 P.2d 874 , decedent duly executed a formal will in 1939 leaving his estate to his sister, BR, and FW, and appointing AW as executor. In 1943, the decedent signed another will, giving everything to his sister and appointing MD as executor, although the will was not properly executed and attested. A few days later, the decedent wrote a letter to his sister, enclosing a copy of the 1943 will. The letter referred to the will as "my testament," noted that the will did not mention AW, and hoped that AW would not find out about the will. The letter also stated that "a letter is ready" for AW, and instructed the sister to hand the described letter to AW when the decedent died. Shortly after the decedent's death, MD filed a petition for the probate, as a holographic will, of an undated written memorandum stating that the 1939 will was null and void, and that decedent's sister would be his sole heir under the "new will ... made on April 22, 1943." There was no evidence that the decedent included the memorandum with the letter or the will he sent to his sister in 1943, or that the memorandum was the letter that was "ready" for AW. Nor was there any evidence concerning the decedent's testamentary intentions. Three days after the memorandum was submitted, AW petitioned for admission of the 1939 will. The trial court admitted the 1939 will to probate, and denied probate of the memorandum, finding that the memorandum was void because it was not dated and not executed with testamentary intent. Decedent's sister appealed.

The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that the trend toward liberality in interpreting holographic will requirements did not excuse the requirement that a holographic will must be dated and signed by the testator [see former Prob. Code § 53]. The Court declared that the date of a holographic will cannot be supplied by a date not in the testator's handwriting, and no recourse may be had to a date appearing in the body of the holograph if it is obvious that the date was not intended to serve as the date of execution of the holograph (30 Cal. 2d 274, 280) . According to the Court, the "April 22, 1943" date on the face of the memorandum was intended only to refer to and identify the 1943 will. No other document could be used to supply the missing date, since there was nothing to indicate the decedent's intent that the memorandum be read together with any other document. Furthermore, the date of the ineffective 1943 will could not be used to supply the date of the memorandum because the 1943 will was not dated in the decedent's hand (30 Cal. 2d 274, 283-284) .

In Estate of Twohig (1986) 178 Cal. App. 3d 555, 223 Cal. Rptr. 352 , the decedent's natural children petitioned for the admission to probate of a formal will and an unsigned codicil. The decedent had four children with his first wife, who died in 1958. In 1968, he married a woman who had two children from a prior marriage. In 1973, the decedent executed a formal will leaving his entire estate to the second wife. In the event she failed to survive him, he left the estate in equal shares to his four children and two stepchildren. The decedent's second wife died in 1982. In 1983, while the decedent was ill and living with his natural son, the son found the decedent's formal will in an envelope. Folded inside the will was a handwritten document entitled "Codicil to This Will Dated August 15, 1973." The codicil canceled and voided the fourth paragraph of the formal will, and substituted a fourth paragraph giving the decedent's entire estate in equal shares to his four natural children. It also appointed one of the children as executor of the estate. The codicil was undisputedly in the decedent's handwriting, but was unsigned. After the decedent died in 1984, the trial court admitted both documents to probate. The decedent's stepchildren appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that although there is a trend toward liberality in construing holographic will statutes, this trend does not permit courts to ignore clear and explicit statutory requirements. The court noted that in a case such as this one in which there is no extrinsic evidence and no conflict in the evidence, the court is not bound by a construction of a document based solely on the terms of the written instrument, but must determine the validity of the instrument entirely by reference to the applicable statutes and principles of law (178 Cal. App. 3d 555, 559) . The statutory requirements for both holographic and formal wills and codicils require such instruments to be signed by (or, in the case of formal wills, at the direction of) the testator. Therefore, a will or codicil cannot be held to be in substantial compliance with the statutory requirements when it is unsigned (178 Cal. App. 3d 555, 560) .

[g] Failed Formal Will Not Valid Holographic Will

In Estate of Brown (1985) 171 Cal. App. 3d 1064, 218 Cal. Rptr. 108 , decedent's daughter lived with and cared for the decedent in the family home until early 1979. In February, 1979, the daughter decided to move out, thereby offending the decedent. About the same time, the decedent's sister visited the decedent from Louisiana. While the sister was visiting, the decedent composed both a formal will that left everything to the sister and a letter expressing the decedent's anger with her daughter and explaining why the decedent did not leave the daughter anything in her will. The will was not witnessed. The decedent's sister returned to Louisiana with the will and the letter, where she had three Louisiana residents falsely assert that they had been witnesses to the execution of the will. After the decedent's sister left, the decedent and her daughter made up, and the daughter continued to care for the decedent as before. The decedent died in December, 1979. The decedent's daughter was granted letters of administration. Four years later, just before the distribution of the decedent's estate, the decedent's sister offered the will for probate. The trial court admitted the will to probate as a holographic will.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that the will was invalid per se. The court declared that notwithstanding the substantial compliance doctrine, it was one thing to salvage a will that was clearly intended to be a holographic will, and quite another thing to convert a failed formal will into a valid holographic will (171 Cal. App. 3d 1064, 1068) . The court explained that from the face of the will (i.e., the will was not witnessed), it was clear that the testator had anticipated further formalities before the will would become effective. According to the court, the sister was obviously aware of this fact, since she caused the will to be falsely attested. The court distinguished Estate of Black (1982) 30 Cal. 3d 880, 181 Cal. Rptr. 222, 641 P.2d 754 , in which rejection of a will would have had the unfortunate effect of passing an estate through the laws of intestacy to the daughter of a decedent's predeceased husband, who was a stranger to the decedent. In Brown, by contrast, rejection of the will would pass the estate to the daughter who cared for the decedent throughout the decedent's lifetime, instead of to the sister who lived in another state and merely chanced to visit during a period when the decedent was upset with her daughter (171 Cal. App. 3d 1064, 1069) .

[h] Extrinsic Evidence Admissible

In Estate of Brenner (1999) 76 Cal. App. 4th 1298, 91 Cal. Rptr. 2d 149 , the testator asked his personal injury lawyer to prepare a new will to replace his existing formal will. The lawyer declined to prepare a new will, but made interlineations on a copy of the formal will, on which the testator had made handwritten changes. When the testator again asked the lawyer to prepare a new will, the lawyer declined and suggested that the testator prepare a holographic will. The testator then sent the lawyer a document that the testator said was his holographic will, and stated that he intended to revoke his formal will, giving several reasons for this action. The document consisted of a three page photocopy of a handwritten list of dispositions on which there were handwritten ink additions, including "my will of November 6, 1990 is void;" the signature "Morris Brenner;" and the statements "This is my new will," "my trustee and executor, lawyer James Osborne," and "Will of Nov. 6, 1990 is void. M.B." The holograph also contained an original ink notation "witness," and a signature. The lawyer subsequently prepared a draft of a new formal will and suggested that the testator take it to an estate planning specialist, which the testator did not do. Rather, the testator attempted to execute the will, did so erroneously, and thus invalidated it. At trial, both the original handwritten matter and the photocopy on which the testator had annotated were presented. A forensic expert testified that the photocopied and ink material in the holographic will, except for the notation "witness" and the witness' signature, was the testator's handwriting. The trial court held that the instrument did not qualify as a valid holographic will because the photocopy did not contain the testator's original handwriting.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that Prob. Code § 6111 is properly construed to allow photocopies of the testator's handwritten dispositions, properly authenticated, as well as original ink writings. In this case, substantial and uncontroverted extrinsic evidence confirmed that the testator's intent was to replace the formal will with the holographic will (76 Cal. App. 4th 1298, 1303) .

[i] Holographic Will Revoked by Operation of Law

In Estate of Reeves (1991) 233 Cal. App. 3d 651, 284 Cal. Rptr. 650 , the court held that when a testator executes a holographic will before marriage naming as a beneficiary a person whom he or she later marries and divorces, Prob. Code § 6122, the "revocation by divorce" statute, applies to revoke the holographic will be operation of law. Under Prob. Code § 6122(b), a holographic will may be revived only by the testator's remarriage to the former spouse. Evidence of statements the testator made to his former spouse that she should take the entire estate and evidence of the testator's continuing belief that his holographic will was still valid were irrelevant (233 Cal. App. 3d 651, 654-655, 659) .

A. Supporting Will Contests

18-186 California Points & Authorities § 186.24

§ 186.24 Supporting Contest of Will--Grounds for Contest--Holographic Will Was Improperly Executed--Doctrine of Integration Inapplicable

[1] FORM

[The following should be combined with a general memorandum of points and authorities supporting a will contest or a petition to revoke probate of a will (see §§ 186.20 and 186.21), or may be used in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE DOCTRINE OF INTEGRATION IS INAPPLICABLE TO THE _____ [describe documents sought to be integrated, e.g., SIGNED FORMAL WILL AND THE UNSIGNED HANDWRITTEN CODICIL], AND THUS MAY NOT BE USED TO BRING THE DOCUMENTS WITHIN THE STATUTORY REQUIREMENTS FOR HOLOGRAPHIC WILLS BECAUSE _____ [specify, e.g., THE FORMAL WILL DID NOT BEAR ANY HOLOGRAPHIC NOTATIONS INDICATING THE TESTATOR INTENDED HIS SIGNATURE ON THE WILL AS AN EXECUTION OF THE CODICIL].

A. Testator Must Intend Two or More Separate Writings to Be Will. Integration occurs when there is no reference to a distinctly extraneous document, but it is clear that two or more separate writings are intended by the testator to be his or her will (Estate of Wunderle (1947) 30 Cal. 2d 274, 281, 181 P.2d 874 ; Estate of Twohig (1986) 178 Cal. App. 3d 555, 560, 223 Cal. Rptr. 352).

[Optional] B. Integrated Documents Must Be Holographic. The doctrine of integration can only apply if all the writings to be integrated are holographic (Estate of Twohig (1986) 178 Cal. App. 3d 555, 561, 223 Cal. Rptr. 352).

[Optional] C. Invalid Codicil May Not Be Integrated. The doctrine of integration may not be utilized to alter the distributive portion of a valid will by way of an invalid codicil (Estate of Twohig (1986) 178 Cal. App. 3d 555, 561, 223 Cal. Rptr. 352).

[Optional] D. Unrelated Document May Not Supply Testamentary Intent for Invalid Holographic Will. The omission of a testamentary intent from an otherwise valid holographic will cannot be supplied by a separate document or letter when there is nothing to indicate that the second document is to be read or construed with or as part of the holographic will (Estate of Wunderle (1947) 30 Cal. 2d 274, 282, 181 P.2d 874).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a challenge to a purported holographic will when the party seeking probate attempts to use the integration doctrine to bring the document within the statute governing the execution of holographic wills [see Prob. Code § 6111; Estate of Wunderle (1947) 30 Cal. 2d 274, 181 P.2d 874 ; Estate of Twohig (1986) 178 Cal. App. 3d 555, 223 Cal. Rptr. 352] . The issue of integration frequently arises in conjunction with the issue of incorporation by reference, discussed in § 186.25.

Optional Paragraph B may be used when not all of the documents sought by the opposing party to be integrated are holographic documents. Optional Paragraph C may be used when integration of an invalid testamentary document is urged for the purpose of altering the distributive portions of a valid testamentary document. Optional Paragraph D may be used when one of the objections to the proposed integration is the lack of evidence that the testator intended to integrate the documents in question.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, to demonstrate that integration is improper because of the rule limiting the application of the doctrine to holographic documents [see Estate of Twohig (1986) 178 Cal. App. 3d 555, 561, 223 Cal. Rptr. 352] , counsel should discuss facts showing that one or more of the subject documents was not executed in the handwriting of the testator [see Prob. Code § 6111(a)].

This memorandum may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that proffered documents should not be integrated to form a valid holographic will. Thus, it may be combined with the points and authorities pertaining to an objection to the admission of a will to probate [see § 186.20] or a petition to revoke probate of a will [see § 186.21]. In addition, these points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities asserting that the purported holographic will was not executed in conformity with statutory requirements [see § 186.23].

[b] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 186.53 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Testator Must Intend Two or More Separate Writings to Be Will

The facts and procedural background of Estate of Wunderle (1947) 30 Cal. 2d 274, 181 P.2d 874 , are discussed in § 186.23[3][f]. In Wunderle, the California Supreme Court considered whether a requisite date or testamentary intent missing from a holographic memorandum purporting to revoke a valid 1939 will and referring to an invalid 1943 will could be derived from construing the memorandum together with the 1943 will and a handwritten letter referring to the will as "my testament" (30 Cal. 2d 274, 281-282, 284) . The Court observed that integration occurs when there is no reference to a distinctly extraneous document, but it is clear that two or more separate writings are intended by the testator to be his or her will. Thus, for example, documents may be connected by sequence of thought, folded together, or physically form one document (30 Cal. 2d 274, 281) . The Court noted that if there are not such indices (or extrinsic evidence) that a testator intended documents to be construed together, courts have refused to allow the lack of a date or testamentary intent in one document to be supplied by another totally disconnected instrument. The Court held that there was nothing in the memorandum or the letter to indicate that the decedent intended them, as read together, to be his will (30 Cal. 2d 274, 283) .

The facts and procedural background of Estate of Twohig (1986) 178 Cal. App. 3d 555, 223 Cal. Rptr. 352 , are discussed in § 186.23[3][f]. In Twohig, the court of appeal held that an unsigned holographic codicil could not be admitted to probate with a valid formal will (178 Cal. App. 3d 555, 560-562) . The court rejected the respondents' argument that the codicil was integrated into a signed and dated will because the codicil was found folded inside the will. According to the court, integration occurs when there is no reference to a distinctly extraneous document, but it is clear that two or more documents are intended by the testator to constitute his or her will (178 Cal. App. 3d 555, 560-561) . The court distinguished Estate of McCarty (1962) 211 Cal. App. 2d 23, 27 Cal. Rptr. 94 , which involved signed, holographic notations on a formal will that incorporated a holographic codicil executed on the same date as the notations. The court explained that in the case before it, there were no holographic markings on the formal will to indicate the decedent's intent to adopt his signature on the will as execution of an existing holographic codicil. To the contrary, the codicil and the formal will were clearly prepared at different times (178 Cal. App. 3d 555, 561) .

[b] Integrated Documents Must Be Holographic

The facts and procedural background of Estate of Twohig (1986) 178 Cal. App. 3d 555, 223 Cal. Rptr. 352 , are discussed in § 186.23[3][f]. In Twohig, the court of appeal held that an undated, unsigned, handwritten codicil could not be integrated into a formal will (178 Cal. App. 3d 555, 560-562) . In making that determination, the court considered, among other things, case law holding that for several writings to be deemed integrated, all of them must be holographs. The court noted that while the codicil was holographic, there were no holographic markings on the formal will indicating the testator's intent to integrate the codicil (178 Cal. App. 3d 555, 561) .

[c] Invalid Codicil May Not Be Integrated

The facts and procedural background of Estate of Twohig (1986) 178 Cal. App. 3d 555, 223 Cal. Rptr. 352 , are discussed in § 186.23[3][f]. According to Twohig, the doctrine of integration may allow two or more handwritten documents that refer to one another to be admitted to probate when it is clear that the testator intended them to be his will. However, an invalid codicil may not be integrated into a valid will to alter the distributive portion of the will (178 Cal. App. 3d 555, 561) . The codicil before the court was invalid because it was not signed (178 Cal. App. 3d 555, 560-562)

[d] Unrelated Document May Not Supply Testamentary Intent for Invalid Holographic Will

The facts and procedural background of Estate of Wunderle (1947) 30 Cal. 2d 274, 181 P.2d 874 , are discussed in § 186.23[3][f]. In Wunderle, the California Supreme Court held that an undated handwritten memorandum could not be integrated with an invalid 1943 will and a handwritten letter referring to the will as "my testament" to supply requisite testamentary intent and a date (30 Cal. 2d 274, 282-284) . The Court applied the rule that the omission of a testamentary intent or a date from an otherwise valid holographic will is not supplied by reference to a separate document or letter, when there is nothing to indicate that the second document is to be read or construed as part of a holographic will (30 Cal. 2d 274, 282) . The Court concluded that the memorandum could not be construed with the other documents to supply intent or a date, because there was nothing to indicate that the testator intended the documents to be so construed (30 Cal. 2d 274, 283-284) .

A. Supporting Will Contests

18-186 California Points & Authorities § 186.25

§ 186.25 Supporting Contest of Will--Grounds for Contest--Doctrine of Incorporation by Reference Inapplicable

[1] FORM

[The following should be combined with a general memorandum of points and authorities supporting a will contest or a petition to revoke probate of a will (see §§ 186.20 and 186.21), or may be used in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE DOCTRINE OF INCORPORATION BY REFERENCE IS INAPPLICABLE TO THE _____ [describe documents sought to be incorporated, e.g., WILL AND THE CODICIL] BECAUSE _____ [specify, e.g., THE WILL DID NOT REFER TO THE CODICIL AND THE UNSIGNED CODICIL, WHICH REFERRED TO THE WILL, WAS NOT ITSELF A COMPLETE TESTAMENTARY INSTRUMENT].

A. When Incorporation by Reference Occurs. Incorporation by reference occurs when one writing that is a complete testamentary document in itself refers to another document in a manner clearly designed to incorporate it (Estate of Wunderle (1947) 30 Cal. 2d 274, 281, 181 P.2d 874).

[Optional] B. Incorporated Document Must Be Clearly Identified and in Existence. It is essential to a valid incorporation by reference that the incorporated document is clearly identified and in existence at the time the will refers to it (Estate of Wunderle (1947) 30 Cal. 2d 274, 281-282, 181 P.2d 874).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a challenge to a purported testamentary instrument when the party seeking probate attempts to use the doctrine of incorporation by reference to bring the document within the statutes governing the execution of wills, or for adding material provisions to a will [Estate of Wunderle (1947) 30 Cal. 2d 274, 181 P.2d 874 ; Estate of Twohig (1986) 178 Cal. App. 3d 555, 223 Cal. Rptr. 352] . Optional Paragraph B may be used when the doctrine is applied to an incorporated document the is not clearly identified and in existence at the time the will refers to it.

The issue of incorporation by reference frequently arises in conjunction with the issue of integration, discussed in § 186.24.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, to support an argument that one document may not incorporate another because the incorporating document is not a complete testamentary instrument, counsel may discuss facts showing that the terms of the incorporating document are not testamentary [see Estate of McCarty (1962) 211 Cal. App. 2d 23, 27, 27 Cal. Rptr. 94] .

This memorandum may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the doctrine of incorporation by reference does not apply to a purported testamentary instrument. Thus, it may be combined with the points and authorities pertaining to an objection to the admission of a will to probate [see § 186.20] or a petition to revoke probate of a will [see § 186.21]. This memorandum may also be combined with points and authorities challenging a purported will on the grounds that the will was not executed in conformity with statutory requirements [see §§ 186.22, 186.23].

[b] Doctrine Applicable to Both Formal and Holographic Wills

Unlike the doctrine of integration, which only applies when all of the instruments involved are holographs [Estate of Twohig (1986) 178 Cal. App. 3d 555, 561, 223 Cal. Rptr. 352 ; see § 186.24], the doctrine of incorporation by reference may be applied to either holographic or formal testamentary instruments [Estate of Smith (1948) 31 Cal. 2d 563, 567, 191 P.2d 413] .

[c] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 186.54 may be used to oppose the contentions supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] When Incorporation by Reference Occurs

The facts and procedural background of Estate of Wunderle (1947) 30 Cal. 2d 274, 181 P.2d 874 , are discussed in § 186.23[3][f]. In Wunderle, the California Supreme Court held that a handwritten memorandum was not a holographic will because it was not dated as required by statute (30 Cal. 2d 274, 284) . The appellant pointed out that the memorandum referred to a formal, but invalid, will "made on April 22, 1943." She argued that reference to that date supplied the necessary date to the memorandum, or, in the alternative, if the date was used only to refer to the will, either the date of the 1943 will or the date of a letter accompanying the will supplied the necessary date (30 Cal. 2d 274, 278) . The Court disagreed, explaining that incorporation by reference occurs when one of two writings is a complete testamentary instrument, and refers to another in a manner clearly designed to incorporate it (30 Cal. 2d 274, 281) . The Court declared that the testator did not intend the "April 22, 1943" date in the memorandum to be the date of that instrument; rather, it was used only to refer to and identify the 1943 will (30 Cal. 2d 274, 283) . The Court added that there was nothing in the memorandum or letter to indicate that it was the decedent's purpose to incorporate one of those documents into the other (30 Cal. 2d 274, 283-284) . Furthermore, none of the documents--the 1943 will, the letter, or the memorandum--was a valid testamentary instrument (30 Cal. 2d 274, 284) .

[b] Incorporated Document Must Be Clearly Identified and in Existence

The facts and procedural background of Estate of Wunderle (1947) 30 Cal. 2d 274, 181 P.2d 874 , are discussed in § 186.23[3][f]. Essentially, Wunderle held, among other things, that an undated handwritten memorandum could not be incorporated into an invalid will and a signed and dated letter accompanying the will to form a valid testamentary instrument (30 Cal. 2d 274, 283-284) . According to the Court, the requisites of a valid incorporation by reference are that the incorporated document is clearly identified and in existence at the time the will refers to it (30 Cal. 2d 274, 281-282) . Although the memorandum and the letter referred to the will, the letter did not clearly identify the memorandum, and the memorandum did not refer to the letter at all (30 Cal. 2d 274, 284) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] When Incorporation by Reference Occurs

The facts and procedural background of Estate of Twohig (1986) 178 Cal. App. 3d 555, 223 Cal. Rptr. 352 , are discussed in § 186.23[3][f]. In Twohig, the court of appeal refused to incorporate an unsigned holographic codicil into a valid formal, even though the codicil contained a heading stating "This Will dated August 15, 1973." According to the court, the codicil was not, in itself, a complete testamentary instrument because it lacked a signature (178 Cal. App. 3d 555, 561) .

[b] Incorporated Document Must Be Clearly Identified and in Existence

The facts and procedural background of Estate of Twohig (1986) 179 Cal. App. 3d 555, 223 Cal. Rptr. 352 , are discussed in § 186.23[3][f]. In refusing to incorporate a subsequent unsigned holigraphic codicil into a valid will, the Twohig court declared that wills cannot, by definition, incorporate future codicils (178 Cal. App. 3d 555, 560) .

CHAPTER 186 PROBATE OF WILLS
PART II. FORMS
A. Supporting Will Contests

18-186 California Points & Authorities § 186.26

§ 186.26 Supporting Contest of Will--Grounds for Contest--Testator Lacked Testamentary Intent

[1] FORM

[The following should be combined with a general memorandum of points and authorities supporting a will contest or a petition to revoke probate of a will (see §§ 186.20 and 186.21), or may be used in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE PURPORTED _____ [WILL or CODICIL] IS INVALID BECAUSE IT WAS NOT EXECUTED WITH TESTAMENTARY INTENT, IN THAT _____ [specify, e.g., IT WAS MERELY AN INSTRUMENT EXPLAINING HOW THE DECEDENT WISHED TO CHANGE HER FORMAL WILL].

A. Testamentary Intent Required. Before an instrument may be probated as a will or codicil it must appear from its terms, viewed in the light of the surrounding circumstances, that it was executed with testamentary intent (Estate of Smith (1998) 61 Cal. App. 4th 259, 265, 71 Cal. Rptr. 2d 424).

B. Testator Must Intend Specific Paper Offered to Be Will. When it is claimed that the intention of a deceased was that a paper should stand for a last will and testament, it must be plainly and satisfactorily apparent that the deceased intended the very paper to be his or her will (Estate of Blain (1956) 140 Cal. App. 2d 917, 922, 295 P.2d 898 ; Estate of Beebee (1953) 118 Cal. App. 2d 851, 858, 258 P.2d 1101).

C. Testator Must Intend Revocable Disposition Effective on Death. The testator must have intended, by the particular instrument offered for probate, to make a revocable disposition of his or her property to take effect on his or her death (Estate of Smith (1998) 61 Cal. App. 4th 259, 265, 71 Cal. Rptr. 2d 424).

D. Burden of Proof on Proponents. The burden is on the proponents of an alleged will to prove that the decedent intended the writing to be his or her will (Estate of Wong (1995) 40 Cal. App. 4th 1198, 1205, 47 Cal. Rptr. 2d 707 ; Estate of Beebee (1953) 118 Cal. App. 2d 851, 861, 258 P.2d 1101).

E. Policy Favoring Testacy Inapplicable When Testamentary Intent at Issue. The principle that the law favors testacy over intestacy is usually only operative when the existence of testamentary intent has already been ascertained and the subject matter of the doubt is one of construction; when there is a doubt concerning the existence of the animus testandi, the rule in favor of testacy is inapplicable (Estate of Blain (1956) 140 Cal. App. 2d 917, 922-923, 295 P.2d 898).

F. Oral Declarations of Testator Admissible to Show Intent. Extrinsic evidence, including oral declarations of the testator before and after the execution of the instrument in question, is admissible, if offered for the purpose of ascertaining the intent with which the instrument was executed, and not for the purpose of proving the meaning the testator attributed to specific provisions of an admitted will (Estate of Tillman (1955) 136 Cal. App. 2d 313, 316, 288 P.2d 892).

[Optional] G. Evidence of Revocation of Former Will Must Be Clear. When there is a previously made and unrevoked will of the testator, a later holographic instrument claimed to be a will must be so phrased that there can be no doubt from its language that the intention of the testator was to make further testamentary provisions (Estate of Tillman (1955) 136 Cal. App. 2d 313, 316, 288 P.2d 892).

[Optional] H. Will Conditioned on Additional Formalities Does Not Take Effect on Death. If a testator does not intend the instrument in question to take effect as his or her will, but intends it to take effect only when additional formalities are completed, it will not be given effect (Estate of Brown (1985) 171 Cal. App. 3d 1064, 1066-1069, 218 Cal. Rptr. 108).

[Optional] I. Instruction for Will to Be Executed in Future Is Not a Will Absent Testamentary Intent. Instructions for a will to be drawn and executed in the future will not amount to a will, although they would be a valid will as far as execution is concerned if the testator had so intended (Estate of Beebee (1953) 118 Cal. App. 2d 851, 860, 258 P.2d 1101).

[2] Comments

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a challenge to a purported testamentary instrument that was executed without testamentary intent [see Estate of Smith (1998) 61 Cal. App. 4th 259, 265, 71 Cal. Rptr. 2d 424] . Optional Paragraph G may be used when there is a previously made will that has not been formally revoked. Optional Paragraph H deals with documents that look like wills but are not because the decedent did not intend them to be effective as wills at the time he or she executed them. Optional Paragraph I deals with documents that were part of the testator's preparations to make a will rather than actual will documents.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss facts showing that the required testamentary intent was lacking at the time the alleged will was written. For example, the discussion may include all of the relevant circumstances surrounding the writing of the alleged will or codicil, facts pertaining to the text of the document in which the allegedly testamentary language appears, the statements of the decedent concerning his or her testamentary plans, and the existence of other, more formal testamentary documents; should be discussed as evidence [see Estate of Smith (1998) 61 Cal. App. 4th 259, 265, 71 Cal. Rptr. 2d 424] . Regardless of the language used in the purported will, extrinsic evidence may be introduced to show that the testator did not intend the instrument to be effective as a will [Estate of Smith (1998) 61 Cal. App. 4th 259, 265-266, 71 Cal. Rptr. 2d 424] . For example, an instrument that clearly appears to be testamentary may be shown by extrinsic evidence to have been executed in jest, as a threat to induce action by an interested party, under the misapprehension that the instrument was a mortgage, to induce the legatee to engage in illicit relations with the testator, or to relieve the testator from annoyance by a would-be legatee [Estate of Smith (1998) 61 Cal. App. 4th 259, 266, 71 Cal. Rptr. 2d 424] .

This memorandum may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the purported testamentary instrument was not executed with testamentary intent. Thus, it may be combined with the points and authorities pertaining to an objection to the admission of a will to probate [see § 186.20] or a petition to revoke probate of a will [see § 186.21]. This memorandum may also be combined with points and authorities challenging a purported will on the grounds that the will was not executed in conformity with statutory requirements [see §§ 186.22, 186.23].

[b] Testamentary Intent Issues and Formal Wills

Most of the cases in which the sole or main issue is testamentary intent involve holographic documents. Except in cases in which lack of testamentary intent is asserted in connection with lack of capacity and undue influence or fraud [see §§ 186.27 -186.29], it is rarely asserted that a properly executed formal will was not intended by the testator to serve as his or her will.

[c] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 186.55 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Testamentary Intent Required

Estate of Smith (1998) 61 Cal. App. 4th 259, 71 Cal. Rptr. 2d 424 , involved a will contest between the testator's surviving husband and the testator's daughter and granddaughter. The trial court denied the husband's petition to admit to probate the testator's statutory will that left the testator's estate to the husband, and instead admitted a previously executed holographic will that left the testator's estate to her daughter and granddaughter. The trial court found that the testator signed the statutory will by mistake and that the testator did not intend it to have testamentary effect because the testator did not intend to disinherit her daughter and granddaughter. The court of appeal reversed, finding that none of the extrinsic evidence considered by the trial court, i.e., the terms of both wills, the instructions accompanying the statutory will, and the testimony of witnesses, tended to show that the testator did not intend the statutory will to be effective as a testamentary instrument (61 Cal. App. 4th 259, 266) . The court noted that extrinsic evidence is only relevant and admissible if offered for the purpose of ascertaining the intent with which the instrument was executed, and not for the purpose of proving the meaning the testator attributed to specific provisions of the instrument. Thus, the trial court's factual findings regarding the testator's intention to leave her estate to her daughter and granddaughter did not support its decision to deny the statutory will admission to probate (61 Cal. App. 4th 259, 266) . The trial court erroneously focused on the testator's intended disposition of her estate, instead of on her intent to execute a testamentary instrument (61 Cal. App. 4th 259, 266) .

The court of appeal also noted that a mistake by the testator does not preclude admission of a will to probate unless the mistake vitiates the execution of the will or the formation of testamentary intent (61 Cal. App. 4th 259, 270) . In this context, "testamentary intent" does not refer to the testator's intentions regarding particular dispositions of property, but means the testator's general intent to make a revocable disposition of his or her property, effective on the testator's death (61 Cal. App. 4th 259, 270) .

Estate of Tillman (1955) 136 Cal. App. 2d 313, 288 P.2d 892 , involved a petition to probate a letter written by the decedent to his nephew, Spencer, inviting Spencer to "come on out hear [sic] I will pay your money back to you[,]" and stating that "what I have is for you and your family." Spencer testified that the decedent told him to take care of the letter because the letter was "willing you all of my property for you and your family." Spencer went to stay with the decedent, during which time the decedent made various statements as to the testamentary character of the letter and his wish to leave his estate to Spencer. Spencer's aunt, who accompanied him on the visit, testified that the decedent made similar statements to her. In addition, two friends of the decedent testified that the decedent told them Spencer was his favorite nephew, that he was going to write him, and that he wanted to will him "all my things." However, the decedent's executor, his great niece, testified that prior to the date of the letter, the decedent took her to his safe deposit box, showed her his previously-executed formal will, introduced her to his attorney, and expressed his wish that the terms of the will be carried out on his death. The attorney testified that when he visited the decedent two weeks before the decedent's death, the decedent mentioned the formal will and his wish that it be carried out. He did not mention the letter he had written to Spencer. The trial court denied probate of the letter, declaring that it was not a valid holographic will because it was not signed or sent with testamentary intent.

The court of appeal affirmed, stating that when an instrument is offered for probate it must be plainly and satisfactorily apparent that the testator intended, by that particular instrument, to make a will; that is, to make a revocable disposition of his or her property to take effect on his or her death (136 Cal. App. 2d 313, 315-316) . The court noted that conflicting inferences could be drawn from the evidence offered concerning the decedent's intent in writing the letter, and that this was not a case in which the court had passed on uncontradicted evidence favorable to the proponent or made wrong deductions of law from it (136 Cal. App. 2d 313, 322) .

[b] Testator Must Intend Specific Paper Offered to Be Will

Estate of Blain (1956) 140 Cal. App. 2d 917, 295 P.2d 898 , concerned a dispute between the decedent's granddaughter and the beneficiaries named in the will admitted to probate. The granddaughter, decedent's sole heir at law, claimed against the will as a pretermitted heir. The will consisted of seven separate sheets, each written, dated, and signed entirely in the decedent's hand. The sheets were found in the decedent's safe deposit box, folded together and enclosed in a sealed envelope on which the decedent had written "Last Will F.B." Three of the sheets were dated June 1, 1949, and four were dated April 9, 1952. The granddaughter was not mentioned in any of the seven sheets. The case turned on the issue of whether a slip of paper on which was written, in the decedent's hand, "to Sonia Lambert Frank Blain" (the name of the granddaughter) was a holographic codicil or otherwise incorporated into the will. This slip of paper was found wrapped around a ring that was enclosed in a small ring box also found in the decedent's safe deposit box. The paper was fatally defective as a holographic will or codicil, since it was neither dated nor signed by the testator. It was concededly admissible only if it could be integrated with the seven-page will. The trial court denied probate of the slip of paper, stating that the slip of paper was not testamentary in character, contained no testamentary disposition, exhibited no testamentary intent, and contained no description of any property. The beneficiaries named in the will appealed the order.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that there was substantial evidence to support the trial court's findings. The court noted that a holographic instrument must be complete in itself, and cannot incorporate physical objects, such as a ring attached to the instrument, as part of its dispositive provisions. The court also noted that evidence had been introduced at trial to the effect that the ring already belonged to the granddaughter as part of an inheritance from her grandmother. In view of this evidence, the words on the slip of paper could reasonably be interpreted to mean "this belongs to Sonia; deliver it to her" (140 Cal. App. 2d 917, 922) . Furthermore, unlike the seven sheets of paper constituting the will, which were found in close physical proximity, were physically attached by being folded together, evidenced a sequence of thought and continuity of purpose, and were all together in a sealed envelope labeled as the decedent's will, the slip of paper was physically excluded from everything outside the ring box, was not attached in any way to the envelope containing the will, did not refer in any manner to the will, and was not referred to in any part of the will (140 Cal. App. 2d 917, 924) . The testimony of a friend of the decedent that the decedent showed her the ring and said he was going to leave it to his granddaughter was not dispositive on the issue of intent. It did not show an intent to make the slip of paper a testamentary instrument; rather, it merely showed the decedent's intention to make a will at some future time (140 Cal. App. 2d 917, 923) .

In Estate of Beebee (1953) 118 Cal. App. 2d 851, 258 P.2d 1101 , the admission to probate of a valid will and codicil was challenged by one of the decedent's two grandsons, who offered for probate a letter written by the decedent after the execution of the will and the codicil. The decedent executed the will in 1944 and then deposited it with a bank. In 1947, she executed a holographic codicil which she sent to the bank, asking that it be attached to the will. Three months before her death in 1950 the decedent wrote to the bank, saying that she wanted help revoking her will and leaving her entire estate to her son. After her death, a bank employee found in the decedent's home a letter that was similar to the one sent to the bank. The date of this document had been partially scratched out, and there was a dispute over whether this was an attempt by the decedent to change the date so as to be later than the date of the letter actually sent to the bank. The trial court accepted the proponents' argument that the document was a testamentary instrument executed by the decedent on the advice of an attorney given in response to the other letter. The document was admitted to probate as the decedent's will, and the probate of the earlier will and codicil was revoked. The order was appealed by the decedent's grandsons.

The court of appeal reversed, stating that the very form of the document argued against the idea advanced by the proponents. A physical examination of the document revealed that it was plainly a draft copy of the letter sent to the bank, not the specific paper intended by the decedent to serve as her will (118 Cal. App. 2d 851, 858) . The court noted that a friend of the decedent testified at trial that the decedent had said she would be afraid to make a will without an attorney's advice, and that the decedent always wrote drafts of important papers and then made appropriate changes in the final version. Furthermore, the idea that an attorney would advise the decedent to write such a letter in lieu of making formal changes to her will was not credible. Even if it was assumed that the letter was validly dated after the date of the first letter, there was no evidence that it was intended as a will (118 Cal. App. 2d 851, 858-861) .

[c] Testator Must Intend Revocable Disposition Effective on Death

Estate of Smith (1998) 61 Cal. App. 4th 259, 71 Cal. Rptr. 2d 424 , is discussed under § 186.26[3][a].

[d] Burden of Proof

In Estate of Wong (1995) 40 Cal. App. 4th 1198, 47 Cal. Rptr. 2d 707 , the contestants argued that a document offered as a holographic will could not qualify as a will because it did not describe or refer to any property and did not show the intention of the alleged testator to dispose of property by will. The proponent of the alleged will argued that the contestants had the burden of proving lack of testamentary intent, inasmuch as Prob. Code § 8252 provides in pertinent part that, at the trial of a will contest, the proponents of the will have the burden of proof of due execution and the "contestants of the will have the burden of proof of lack of testamentary intent or capacity." The court rejected this argument, holding that Prob. Code § 8252 applies only to documents that are clearly wills. The contestants of a document that appears to be a will and that exhibits testamentary intent must prove that testamentary intent was lacking. However, when the question is whether a document exhibits the required testamentary intent, this rule has no application, and the proponent of the alleged will has the burden of proving it shows the required intent (40 Cal. App. 4th 1198, 1205) .

The facts and procedural background of Estate of Beebee (1953) 118 Cal. App. 2d 851, 258 P.2d 1101 , are discussed under § 186.26[3][b]. In Beebee, the court of appeal held that the proponents of an alleged holographic will had the burden of proving that the document, a letter written by the decedent to the bank that maintained custody of her earlier will, was intended by the decedent to be a new will (118 Cal. App. 2d 851, 861) . In finding that the proponents failed to meet their burden, the court noted that it was evident from the language of the letter that its purpose was to explain to the bank how the decedent wished to change her will, and that decedent expected something more to be done before the testamentary plan outlined in the letter would become a will (118 Cal. App. 2d 851, 860-861) .

[e] Policy Favoring Testacy Inapplicable When Testamentary Intent at Issue

The facts and procedural background of Estate of Blain (1956) 140 Cal. App. 2d 917, 295 P.2d 898), are discussed under § 186.26[3][b]. In Blain, the court of appeal held that the principle of law favoring testacy over intestacy usually only applies when the existence of testamentary intent has already been ascertained and the subject matter of the doubt is one of construction. When there is a doubt concerning the existence of the animus testandi, the rule is inapplicable. Since the testamentary character of the instrument in question, a slip of paper on which the decedent had written "to Sonia Lambert Frank Blain," was the main issue in the case, the court found that the principle favoring testacy was not applicable (140 Cal. App. 2d 917, 922-923) .

[f] Oral Declarations of Testator Admissible to Show Intent

The facts and procedural background of Estate of Tillman (1955) 136 Cal. App. 2d 313, 288 P.2d 892 , are discussed under § 186.26[3][a]. In Tillman, the court of appeal held that the oral declarations of the decedent made before and after the date of a letter offered as a holographic will were admissible for the purpose of ascertaining the intent with which the letter was written. The trial court properly admitted statements made by the decedent to the effect that he intended to give his property to the nephew to whom the letter was written, that the nephew should keep the letter because it was a will, and other similar statements (136 Cal. App. 2d 313, 315-316) . However, those declarations, as well as other circumstantial evidence of the decedent's intent in writing the letter, were such that opposing inferences could be drawn from them. In finding that the letter was not a will, the court noted that this was not a case in which the court had passed on uncontradicted evidence favorable to the proponent or made wrong deductions of law from it (136 Cal. App. 2d 313, 322) .

[g] Evidence of Revocation of Former Will

The facts and procedural background of Estate of Tillman (1955) 136 Cal. App. 2d 313, 288 P.2d 892 , are discussed under § 186.26[3][a]. In Tillman, the court of appeal held that since the decedent had executed and not explicitly revoked an earlier will, a purported holographic will could be admitted to probate only if it was so phrased that there could be no doubt from its language that the intention of the testator was to make further testamentary provisions (136 Cal. App. 2d 313, 316) . The court found that the phrasing of the purported holograph did not establish beyond a doubt the decedent's intent to make further testamentary provisions by it. Rather, the phrasing of the purported holograph, like the rest of the evidence concerning the decedent's intent, was subject to conflicting inferences. Therefore, the trial court properly rejected the purported holograph (136 Cal. App. 2d 313, 322) .

[h] Will Conditioned on Additional Formalities Does Not Take Effect on Death

The facts and procedural background of Estate of Brown (1985) 171 Cal. App. 3d 1064, 218 Cal. Rptr. 108 , are discussed in § 186.23[3][g]. In Brown, the appellate court held that a formal will that the testator left unattested by witnesses was ineffective as a holographic will, notwithstanding its satisfaction of the technical requirements of a holographic will. The court stated that testamentary intent was lacking, since it was obvious that the testator had anticipated further formalities (i.e., attestation by witnesses) before the will would become effective (171 Cal. App. 3d 1064, 1068-1069) .

[i] Instruction for Will to Be Executed in Future Is Not a Will Absent Testamentary Intent

The facts and procedural background of Estate of Beebee (1953) 118 Cal. App. 2d 851, 258 P.2d 1101 , are discussed under § 186.26[3][b]. In Beebee, the court of appeal held that a draft copy of a letter written by the decedent to her bank, outlining desired changes to her will, was not admissible to probate as a valid will. The court found that the letter was plainly in the nature of an instrument explaining to the bank how the decedent wished to change her will. In rejecting the letter as a testamentary instrument, the court stated that instructions for a will to be drawn and executed in the future will not amount to a will, even if the instructions satisfy the technical requirements for execution of a will and would be admissible to probate if the testator had so intended (118 Cal. App. 2d 851, 860) .

A. Supporting Will Contests

18-186 California Points & Authorities § 186.27

§ 186.27 Supporting Contest of Will--Grounds for Contest-- Testator Lacked Testamentary Capacity [Prob. Code § 6100.5]

[1] FORM

[The following should be combined with a general form of memorandum of points and authorities supporting a will contest (see § 186.20) or a petition to revoke probate of a will (see § 186.21) or may be used in a trial or appellate brief.]

[EITHER]

THE [PURPORTED] _____ [WILL or CODICIL] IS INVALID BECAUSE THE TESTATOR LACKED TESTAMENTARY CAPACITY, IN THAT, AT THE TIME OF MAKING THE WILL, HE/SHE DID NOT HAVE SUFFICIENT MENTAL CAPACITY TO BE ABLE TO [choose one of following: UNDERSTAND THE NATURE OF THE TESTAMENTARY ACT or UNDERSTAND AND RECOLLECT THE NATURE AND SITUATION OF HIS/HER PROPERTY or REMEMBER AND UNDERSTAND HIS/HER RELATIONS TO LIVING DESCENDANTS, SPOUSE, AND PARENTS, AND THOSE WHOSE INTERESTS ARE AFFECTED BY THE WILL].

[OR]

THE [PURPORTED] _____ [WILL or CODICIL] IS INVALID BECAUSE THE TESTATOR LACKED TESTAMENTARY CAPACITY, IN THAT, AT THE TIME OF MAKING THE WILL, HE/SHE SUFFERED FROM A MENTAL DISORDER WITH SYMPTOMS INCLUDING DELUSIONS OR HALLUCINATIONS, WHICH DELUSIONS OR HALLUCINATIONS RESULTED IN HIS/HER DEVISING PROPERTY IN A WAY WHICH, EXCEPT FOR THE EXISTENCE OF THE DELUSIONS OR HALLUCINATIONS, THE INDIVIDUAL WOULD NOT HAVE DONE.

[EITHER]

A. Testamentary Capacity. An individual is not mentally competent to make a will if at the time of making the will the individual does not have sufficient mental capacity to be able to understand the nature of the testamentary act, understand and recollect the nature and situation of the individual's property, or remember and understand the individual's relations to living descendants, spouse, and parents, and those whose interests are affected by the will (Prob. Code § 6100.5(a)(1)).

[OR]

A. Testamentary Capacity. An individual is not mentally competent to make a will if at the time of making the will the individual suffers from a mental disorder with symptoms including delusions or hallucinations, which delusions or hallucinations result in the individual's devising property in a way which, except for the existence of the delusions or hallucinations, the individual would not have done (Prob. Code § 6100.5(a)(2)).

[CONTINUE]

[Optional] B. Proof of Testamentary Incompetence by Prior or Subsequent Conduct. Lack of testamentary competence on a given day may be proved by evidence of incompetence before or after the day in question (Estate of Clegg (1978) 87 Cal. App. 3d 594, 600, 151 Cal. Rptr. 158 ; Estate of Morgan (1964) 225 Cal. App. 2d 156, 168, 37 Cal. Rptr. 160 ; Estate of Wolf (1959) 174 Cal. App. 2d 144, 148, 344 P.2d 37).

[Optional] C. Inference of Continuing Incompetency. Once it is shown that testamentary incompetence exists and that it is caused by a mental disorder of a general and continuous nature, the inference is reasonable that the incompetence continues to exist (Estate of Clegg (1978) 87 Cal. App. 3d 594, 600, 151 Cal. Rptr. 158).

[Optional] D. Personal Characteristics of Testator. Evidence of a testator's appearance, conduct, habits, and conversation, both before and after the execution of a will, are admissible on the issue of testamentary capacity, as long as they have a reasonable tendency to indicate the testator's mental condition at the time the will was executed (Estate of Wolf (1959) 174 Cal. App. 2d 144, 149, 344 P.2d 37).

[Optional] E. Physician's Testimony. Testamentary incapacity may be established by the testimony of a physician based on personal observation of the testator (Estate of Wolf (1959) 174 Cal. App. 2d 144, 150, 344 P.2d 37).

[Optional] F. Refusal by Attorney to Make Will for Decedent. The fact that an attorney refused to prepare a will for the testator is entitled to serious consideration as proof of the testator's incompetence (Estate of Morgan (1964) 225 Cal. App. 2d 156, 169, 37 Cal. Rptr. 160).

[Optional] G. Change From Previous Testament. An unexplained, or poorly explained, change from a previous will, executed while the testator has recognized mental capacity, is an evidentiary fact that bears on the subject of unsoundness of mind, when considered with other evidence (Estate of Morgan (1964) 225 Cal. App. 2d 156, 170, 37 Cal. Rptr. 160).

[Optional] H. Proof of Hallucination or Delusion. Lack of testamentary capacity may be shown by evidence that establishes that the will was the creation or product of some hallucination or delusion suffered by the testator, that this hallucination or delusion bore directly on and influenced the creation and terms of the will, and that by reason of this hallucination or delusion the testator devised or bequeathed his or her property in a way which, except for the existence of the hallucination or delusion, the testator would not have done (Goodman v. Zimmerman (1994) 25 Cal. App. 4th 1667).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a challenge to a purported will or codicil when the basis of the challenge is that the testator lacked testamentary capacity at the time the instrument was executed [see Prob. Code §§ 6100(a), 6100.5(a)(1), (2)].

Additional arguments should be inserted in this form to show the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. If, for example, an attorney declined to prepare a will for the testator because the attorney believed that the testator did not have testamentary capacity, and if this incident occurred at or about the time the will in question was executed, that fact should be discussed.

[b] Lack of Testamentary Capacity

Paragraph A of this form is drawn from Prob. Code § 6100.5(a), which states the circumstances under which a testator is deemed not to have testamentary capacity [see Prob. Code § 6100.5(a)]. Two alternative forms of Paragraph A are included. The first alternative is drawn from Prob. Code § 6100.5(a)(1), and the second alternative is drawn from Prob. Code § 6100.5(a)(2). The allegations and supporting statements that best fit the facts of the case should be chosen. In some cases, reliance on more than one ground for lack of capacity may be appropriate.

[c] Attorney's Duty With Respect to Ascertaining Decedent's Testamentary Capacity

An attorney preparing a will for a testator does not owe a duty to the beneficiary of the will or to the beneficiary under a prior will to ascertain and document the client's testamentary capacity. When the testator's testamentary capacity is the basis for a will challenge, the testator's true intent is the central question, and that intent cannot be ascertained from the will or other challenged estate plan document. The attorney who is persuaded of the client's testamentary capacity by the attorney's own observations and experience, and who drafts the will accordingly, fulfills the attorney's duty of loyalty to the testator. In doing so, the attorney should not be required to consider the effect of the new will on beneficiaries under a former will or beneficiaries of the new will. The beneficiaries do not have a cause of action against the attorney for malpractice. Their remedy is to contest the probate and challenge the will on the ground that the testator lacked testamentary capacity at the time of executing the will [Moore v. Anderson Zeigler Disharoon Gallagher & Gray (2003) 109 Cal. App. 4th 1287, 1298-1307, 135 Cal. Rptr. 2d 888] .

Following the principles set forth in Moore, a subsequent decision held that although an attorney who is retained to provide testamentary legal services to a testator may also have a duty to act with due care for the interests of an intended third-party beneficiary, the attorney's primary duty is owed to the testator-client, and the attorney's paramount obligation is to serve and carry out the testator's intentions. When there is a question about whether the third party was in fact the testator's intended beneficiary, and the third party claims that the attorney failed to adequately ascertain the testator's intent or capacity, the attorney is not liable to the third party. In such a case, the attorney's sole duty is to the testator, and the attorney does not owe a duty to the testator's beneficiaries to evaluate and ascertain the testator's capacity to make a new will. An attorney who is persuaded of the testator's intent to dispose of his or her property in a certain manner, and who drafts the will accordingly, fulfills his or her duty of loyalty to the client and is not required to urge the testator to consider an alternative plan to forestall a claim by someone thereby excluded from the will or included in the will but deprived of a specific asset that is devised to someone else. Any other conclusion would place the attorney in an untenable position of divided loyalty. As noted by the court in Moore, an intended beneficiary's remedy in such a case is to contest the will on the ground that the testator lacked testamentary capacity or intent [Boranian v. Clark

[d] Evidence of Deficit in Mental Functions

Prob. Code § 6100.5(a) states the statutory grounds under which a testator will be deemed to lack testamentary capacity. However, this section should be read in light of Prob. Code §§ 810 and 811, which also affect the ability of a court to find that a testator lacks the capacity to make a will.

Prob. Code § 810 states that a person who has a mental or physical disorder may still be capable of contracting, conveying, marrying, making medical decisions, executing wills or trusts, and performing other actions [Prob. Code § 810(b)]. It also states that a judicial determination that a person is totally without understanding, or is of unsound mind, or suffers from one or more mental deficits so substantial that, under the circumstances, the person should be deemed to lack the legal capacity to perform a specific act, should be based on evidence of a deficit in one or more of the person's mental functions rather than on a diagnosis of a person's mental or physical disorder [Prob. Code § 810(c)].

Prob. Code § 811 states that a determination that a person is of unsound mind or lacks the capacity to make a decision or do a certain act, including but not limited to the incapacity to execute a will, must be supported by evidence of a deficit in at least one of certain specified mental functions and that there must be evidence of a correlation between the deficit and the decision or act in question [Prob. Code § 811(a)]. Prob. Code § 811 also states that the mere diagnosis of a mental or physical disorder will not be sufficient in and of itself to support a determination that a person is of unsound mind or lacks the capacity to do a certain act [Prob. Code § 811(d)].

Prob. Code § 811 does not alter the statutory grounds under which a testator will be deemed to lack testamentary capacity as stated in Prob. Code § 6100.5. Rather, it prescribes a minimum level of evidence that must be presented to support a determination that a testator lacked testamentary capacity, and the character of findings that must be made in support of that determination [see Prob. Code § 811(e); see also Prob. Code § 810(a) (for purposes of determination of capacity, there exists rebuttable presumption affecting burden of proof that all persons have capacity to make decisions and be responsible for their acts or decisions)]. Whether the minimum level of evidence has been reached is an evidentiary question. Failure to meet the evidentiary standard may be raised by the proponent of a will in an effort to defeat a challenger's argument that the will is invalid by reason of lack of capacity. For a more detailed discussion of Prob. Code § 811, see § 186.56[2].

[e] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 186.56 may be used to oppose the contentions supported by the points and authorities in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Proof of Testamentary Incompetence by Prior or Subsequent Conduct

In Estate of Clegg (1978) 87 Cal. App. 3d 594, 151 Cal. Rptr. 158 , an executor, the administrator of a senior citizen's home, offered for probate a purported will executed by the testator immediately before she moved from the home to a convalescent hospital. Two physicians had examined the testator before she executed the will and described her physical and mental health as failing markedly. They found her to be suffering from reduced mental capacity and senile dementia, and as a result she was moved from the home to the hospital. The home administrator asked the testator if she wanted an attorney to take care of the legalities. She agreed, and the administrator then called his personal attorney, who was also the home's attorney. The attorney suggested a conservatorship (since the hospital required that patients be admitted by a responsible person), and the testator requested that the administrator and his secretary be appointed as her conservators. The attorney asked the testator if she had a will. She said no, although she had in fact executed a formal will 20 years earlier. The attorney explained the concept of escheat to her, although she told him she had living relatives, and asked her to identify the beneficiaries of her property. The testator responded that the people at the home "had been real nice to her," and the attorney asked her if she wanted to leave her property to the home. The testator replied affirmatively, and the attorney then suggested naming the administrator as the executor of the will. The attorney's secretary typed a will naming the home as the testator's sole beneficiary, and the testator signed it and a document nominating a conservator, with the attorney and the secretary as witnesses. The home was the sole beneficiary of the purported will.

When the testator was admitted to the hospital the next day, Dr. Wardrip examined her and noted that she was suffering from severe congestive failure and cerebrovascular insufficiency, and was forgetful and unable to take care of herself. The nurse's notes also contained several references to the testator's "confusion" and "lack of orientation." A friend of the testator wrote to the testator's brother, stating that the testator's mind had begun to fail, that she was unable to look after herself, and that she hardly knew what was going on.

The testator's brother and sister were not notified of the conservatorship or the petition for probate, although the evidence showed that the administrator knew that the testator had a brother and sister living. The brother and sister contested the will on the grounds that the testator lacked testamentary capacity and was under home's undue influence when she executed the will. The trial court agreed, and issued an order revoking probate of the will.

The court of appeal affirmed, finding that although testamentary incapacity was not shown as of the date the will was executed, the evidence established the testator's lack of testamentary capacity prior to and after her execution of the will (87 Cal. App. 3d 594, 601) . In support of its order, the court stated the rule that testamentary incompetency on a given day may be proved by evidence of incompetency at other times (87 Cal. App. 3d 594, 600) .

In Estate of Morgan (1964) 225 Cal. App. 2d 156, 37 Cal. Rptr. 160 , petitioner offered for probate a will executed one month before the decedent's death, which named petitioner as executor and as a primary and "preferred" beneficiary. During the last five years of her life, the decedent executed five wills and one codicil, not including the will in question. A missionary society was the residual beneficiary under each of the five wills, and other aspects of the testamentary plan were also similar under each of the wills. The will in question gave petitioner a $50,000 bequest that was specifically given preference over all other bequests. The missionary society was completely removed from the will, and a different charity and petitioner were made the residual beneficiaries. Petitioner was also named as executor of the will.

The decedent was a patient in a sanitarium when she died. Her attending physician testified that during the last few years of her life, the decedent was senile, confused, and of unsound mind. She also suffered from arteriosclerosis throughout her body, including her brain. Several sanitarium attendants, nurses, and decedent's acquaintances testified that decedent was senile during the last months of her life, that she suffered from hallucinations, and that she was generally confused and had very, very short periods of lucidity.

The decedent's attorney testified that he had prepared two previous wills and a codicil for the decedent. About a month before the execution of the will in question, petitioner told the attorney that decedent wished to change her will because, among other reasons, she didn't want to leave anything to the People's Republic of China. The attorney advised petitioner to have a nurse contact him, because he would not change it at the request of a beneficiary. When another of the decedent's friends called him with the same request two days later, threatening to find another attorney if he did not comply, the attorney agreed to visit the decedent. The attorney explained to the decedent that her current will gave nothing to the People's Republic of China and did not obligate the missionary society to use her gift in the People's Republic of China. At first, the decedent seemed to understand the will, but later stated that she wished to leave the residue to her sister, who had been dead for 10 years. As the decedent's understanding of the situation deteriorated, the attorney decided that she was incompetent to make a will at that time. He did not see the decedent again. The decedent then requested another attorney, met with him and his partner, and gave the attorney instructions for her new will. The next day, the decedent executed the will, and there was conflicting testimony concerning the decedent's level of awareness and understanding during the execution of the will.

The decedent's heirs and the missionary society contested the will, alleging that the decedent lacked testamentary capacity and was acting under the undue influence of petitioner at the time the will was executed. The trial court denied probate of the will, and petitioner appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, stating that there was sufficient evidence before the trial court to support a finding that the decedent was mentally incompetent to make a will at the time the will in question was executed. Several witnesses described her as deteriorating mentally and physically. The court stated that while hallucinations are not destructive of testamentary capacity unless they operate directly on the testamentary act, they are evidence of mental state and, in this case, supported the contestants' claims that the decedent suffered from a permanent and progressing mental disorder. Evidence of the decedent's hallucinations and of her testamentary incapacity before and after the execution of the will supported the finding that she lacked testamentary incapacity when the will was executed. The court also noted that decedent's insistence on a preference clause for a $50,000 gift to petitioner, when she had an estate of $600,000, indicated that she did not understand the nature of her estate (225 Cal. App. 2d 156, 168-170) .

Estate of Wolf (1959) 174 Cal. App. 2d 144, 344 P.2d 37 , involved a purported holographic will offered for probate by the sole beneficiary named under it, a neighbor of the decedent who had cared for the decedent during the last months of her life. The decedent's heirs, the children of her predeceased brother, and some relatives of her predeceased husband opposed probate on the grounds of testamentary incapacity, lack of due execution, and undue influence. The decedent's personal physician testified that during the last five years of the decedent's life, the decedent suffered from arteriosclerosis, hypertension, and chronic myocarditis; that she was mentally incompetent; that she lost her memory several years before her death and was unaware from one moment to the next what was happening; and that she told him she had no money, her neighbors were stealing from her, and the medicines supplied by her druggist were poisonous. The doctor also testified that he examined the decedent the day before the purported holographic will was executed, and three other times during the same month, and that on those occasions the decedent did not know the natural objects of her bounty or the nature and extent of her property and lacked sufficient mental competency to dispose of her property in accordance with any rational plan. About four months before the decedent's death, the proponent of the will was appointed as her legal guardian over the objections of the contestants and other relatives of the decedent. The proponent/guardian moved the decedent into her home. She testified that while the decedent was under her care, she gave the proponent the purported holographic will. During the course of the guardianship proceedings, the trial judge went to the decedent's home and interviewed her. The decedent told the judge she had no will, although the purported holographic will had been executed two weeks earlier. The proponent heard this exchange, but did not mention the holograph. The trial court denied probate of the purported holographic will on the ground that the decedent lacked testamentary capacity and was unduly influenced at the time it was executed. The proponent appealed the order.

The court of appeal affirmed, finding that the evidence was more than adequate to sustain a finding of testamentary incapacity. The court noted testamentary incapacity on the specific day a purported will was executed may be inferred once it has been established that incompetency existed prior to that day and was caused by a mental disorder of a general and continuing nature (174 Cal. App. 2d 144, 148) . The court also noted that while the fact of a judicial determination of incompetency less than one month before the date of the purported will did not establish testamentary incapacity, it was evidence to be considered on the point, especially since there was no evidence that the decedent's mental state changed during that month (174 Cal. App. 2d 144, 149) .

[b] Inference of Continuing Incompetency

The facts and procedural background of Estate of Clegg (1978) 87 Cal. App. 3d 594, 151 Cal. Rptr. 158 , are discussed under § 186.27[3][a]. In Clegg, the court of appeal held that it was reasonable to infer that the testator lacked testamentary capacity at the time her will was executed from the fact that testamentary incapacity existed prior to that time and was caused by a mental disorder of a general and continuous nature. The court found that the inference that testamentary incompetence continues to exist once it is shown to exist was particularly strong in this case. It was supported by the statements of the testator's doctor, including testimony that the doctor doubted that the testator knew and understood the nature of the document she signed as her will or the nature and extent of her property, or remembered her living relatives (87 Cal. App. 3d 594, 600-601) . The inference was also supported by the letter written by the testator's friend, and by the nurse's notes from the day after the will was executed (87 Cal. App. 3d 594, 601) .

[c] Personal Characteristics of Testator

The facts and procedural background of Estate of Wolf (1959) 174 Cal. App. 2d 144, 344 P.2d 37 , are discussed under § 186.27[3][a]. In Wolf, the court of appeal held that evidence of the decedent's appearance, conduct, habits, and conversation, both before and after the execution of the will, was admissible on the issue of testamentary capacity since it had a reasonable tendency to indicate her mental condition at the time the will was executed (174 Cal. App. 2d 144, 149) . The court found that the decedent lacked testamentary capacity at the time her will was executed, based partly on the testimony of her personal physician that she lost her memory several years before her death, was unaware from one moment to the next what was happening, and had said that her neighbors were stealing from her and the medicines supplied by her druggist were poisonous (174 Cal. App. 2d 144, 146-147, 150) .

[d] Physician's Testimony

The facts and procedural background of Estate of Wolf (1959) 174 Cal. App. 2d 144, 344 P.2d 37 , are discussed under § 186.27[3][a]. In Wolf, the appellate court specifically found that the testimony of the decedent's personal physician, who was intimately familiar with the decedent's mental capacity and testified directly on that issue, could be used to establish the decedent's testamentary incapacity (174 Cal. App. 2d 144, 150) .

[e] Refusal by Attorney to Make Will for Decedent

The facts and procedural background of Estate of Morgan (1964) 225 Cal. App. 2d 156, 37 Cal. Rptr. 160 , are discussed under § 186.27[3][a]. In Morgan, the court of appeal held that the fact that an attorney declined to make a will for the testator was entitled to "serious consideration" as proof of the testator's incompetency. The testimony of the attorney who did make the will was entitled to much weight but was not conclusive, especially since he was a relative stranger to the decedent (225 Cal. App. 2d 156, 169) .

[f] Change From Previous Testament

The facts and procedural background of Estate of Morgan (1964) 225 Cal. App. 2d 156, 37 Cal. Rptr. 160 , are discussed under § 186.27[3][a]. In Morgan, the court of appeal held that the absence of testimony concerning a conversation between the decedent and her attorney in which the decedent gave instructions for the new will triggered application of the rule that an unexplained or poorly explained change from a previous will made when the testator had recognized mental capacity constitutes evidence as to soundness of mind, when considered with other evidence (225 Cal. App. 2d 156, 170) . The court found that the decedent lacked testamentary capacity when the will was executed, based partly on the will's unexplained elimination of a sizable charitable gift that had been included in five previous wills, and other unexplained changes from the consistent testamentary plan of the five previous wills (225 Cal. App. 2d 156, 164-165) .

[g] Proof of Hallucination or Delusion

In Goodman v. Zimmerman (1994) 23 Cal. App. 4th 1667, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 419 , a son filed a petition for revocation of probate, alleging that his father lacked testamentary capacity because he suffered from a mental disorder within the meaning of Prob. Code § 6100.5(a)(2). The court of appeal held that substantial evidence supported the trial court's finding that the son had not met his burden of proving that the testator was delusional at the time of executing the will and that the alleged delusion caused the testator to devise his property in a way that he would not otherwise have done. There was evidence in support of the reasons given by the testator for the testamentary disposition to which the son objected, and evidence that the testator had reasons why he wanted his son to receive a disproportionately small share of the estate (23 Cal. App. 4th 1662) .

18-186 California Points & Authorities § 186.28

§ 186.28 Supporting Contest of Will--Grounds for Contest-- Will Procured by Fraud [Prob. Code § 6104]

[1] FORM

[The following should be combined with a general memorandum of points and authorities supporting a will contest or a petition to revoke probate of a will (see §§ 186.20 and 186.21), or may be used in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE [PURPORTED] _____ [WILL or CODICIL] IS INVALID BECAUSE IT WAS PROCURED BY FRAUD IN THAT _____ [specify facts showing that bequests were the direct result of fraud, e.g. THE RESPONDENT DECEIVED THE TESTATOR BY INDUCING HER TO MARRY HIM WHEN HE WAS LEGALLY MARRIED TO ANOTHER WOMAN AT THE TIME, AND THROUGH THIS DECEPTION THE TESTATOR EXECUTED A WILL NAMING THE RESPONDENT AS HER HUSBAND AND LEAVING HER ESTATE TO RESPONDENT].

A. Will Ineffective to Extent It Is Procured by Fraud. The execution or revocation of a will or a part of a will is ineffective to the extent the execution or revocation was procured by fraud (Prob. Code § 6104; Estate of Carson (1920) 184 Cal. 437, 442-443, 194 P. 5 ; David v. Hermann (2005) 129 Cal. App. 4th 672, 685-686, 28 Cal. Rptr. 3d 622).

[Optional] B. Only Portions of Will Affected by Fraud Need Be Revoked. If a will was procured by fraud, the court may separate the portions affected by the fraud from those unaffected, and revoke only the affected portions (Estate of Carson (1920) 184 Cal. 437, 441, 194 P. 5).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a challenge to a purported testamentary instrument based on fraud in the procurement of the instrument [see Prob. Code § 6104]. The issue of fraud in the procurement of a will frequently arises in conjunction with the issue of undue influence, discussed in § 186.29 [but see Estate of Carson (1920) 184

Cal. 437, 440, 194 P. 5 (although husband deceived testator by inducing her to marry him when he was already married, there was no evidence that he subjugated testator's mind so that she was not acting freely on facts as she believed them to be)]. The theories of undue influence and fraud often rest on a similar factual basis, because contestants relying on a theory of undue influence may claim that the beneficiary of the will employed misrepresentations to pressure the testator into making the will. However, they are distinct grounds for a will contest [David v. Hermann (2005) 129 Cal. App. 4th 672, 685, 28 Cal. Rptr. 3d 622] .

Optional Paragraph B may be used when the contestant seeks to invalidate certain portions of the will, or to invalidate the will as to certain beneficiaries, rather than to invalidate the will in its entirety.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel may discuss facts showing that a bequest was procured as a direct result of false representations or deceit [see Estate of Carson (1920) 184 Cal. 437, 439-442, 194 P. 5 ; David v. Hermann (2005) 129 Cal. App. 4th 672, 686, 28 Cal. Rptr. 3d 622] .

This memorandum may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the purported will was procured by fraud. Thus, it may be combined with the points and authorities pertaining to an objection to the admission of a will to probate [see § 186.20] or a petition to revoke probate of a will [see § 186.21]. This memorandum may also be combined with points and authorities challenging a purported will on the grounds that the will was not executed in conformity with statutory requirements [see §§ 186.22, 186.23].

[b] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 186.57 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Will Ineffective to Extent It Is Procured by Fraud

In Estate of Carson (1920) 184 Cal. 437, 194 P. 5 , the testator left the bulk of her estate to Carson, a man she believed to be her husband. After the will was probated, certain of the testator's heirs petitioned to revoke probate on the grounds that the will was procured by undue influence and fraud, in that Carson was legally married to another woman or several other women at the time of his marriage to the testator. The evidence showed that the testator married Carson about a year before her death. She did so under the mistaken belief, induced by Carson, that he was free to marry. In fact, he was married to at least one other woman at the time. About a month after the marriage, the testator made the will in question. The trial court denied the petition for revocation of probate, and the contestants appealed the decision to the California Supreme Court.

The California Supreme Court reversed, holding that the will's provisions appointing Carson as executor and naming him as residuary beneficiary were invalid due to fraud. The Court first noted that neither the contestants' petition nor the evidence offered made out a case of undue influence. The facts concerning Carson's fraudulent acts and the testator's reliance on them did not establish any subjugation of the mind or the will of the testator to that of Carson, or that the testator was not acting freely on the facts as she believed them to be when she made the will (184 Cal. 437, 440) .

As to the fraud cause of action, the Court stated that the testator was clearly deceived concerning Carson's freedom to marry her, and that her bequests to Carson were clearly "the direct fruit" of this deceit (184 Cal. 437, 443) . This was not a case in which the testator knew of or had reason to suspect the fraud, but chose to enter into the marriage anyway, or a case in which the parties had lived happily together for many years. Although no direct evidence was offered to show that the bequests were the result of the fraud, it was reasonable to draw that conclusion from the evidence that the will was made within a month after the marriage, described Carson as "my husband," and left him the bulk of the estate. It was not necessary to introduce evidence of the testator's views concerning the sanctity of marriage, her harmonious or other relations with Carson, or the strength of her affection for him (184 Cal. 437, 444) .

The Court found that the trial court erroneously excluded evidence consisting of statements made by the testator to others that showed she believed her marriage to be legal. Whenever the intention, feeling, belief, or other mental state of a person at a particular time is material to an issue under trial, evidence of the person's declarations at the time, indicative of his or her then mental state, are admissible in evidence.

The Court also found that other, similar statements made by the testator in Carson's presence, which were excluded on the theory that they were not competent against the other beneficiaries and should therefore not be admitted at all, should have been admitted. This evidence was not offered as admissions, but as evidence of the testator's belief, and its admissibility as to the other beneficiaries was irrelevant since the other beneficiaries were not interested parties. The Court was "at a loss to understand" the trial court's exclusion of statements made by Carson to the testator about his previous matrimonial experiences, and held that these statements, as well as other evidence concerning his previous marriages, were entitled to be heard and considered as evidence of the fraud (184 Cal. 437, 446) . Finally, evidence that the testator transferred her bank account into the joint names of herself and Carson shortly after their marriage should have been admitted.

Although the trial court's rejection of this evidence was "not particularly prejudicial," where one of the vital questions in the case was whether the bequest to Carson was induced by and based on the testator's belief that he was her lawful husband, "any evidence throwing light upon the relations of the parties, or upon her feelings toward him would have some bearing," and "very considerable latitude of examination should be permitted" (184 Cal. 437, 447) .

In David v. Hermann (2005) 129 Cal. App. 4th 672, 28 Cal. Rptr. 3d 622 , the court noted that the elements of fraud in the procurement of a testamentary instrument are the same as those required to invalidate a contract. An intent to deceive the testator or to induce the testator to execute the will is a necessary element. Because proof of intent to deceive necessarily is largely or entirely circumstantial, a contestant is not confined to the bare facts, but is entitled to the benefit of all inferences that can legitimately be drawn from the established facts. Proof that the testator was induced by misrepresentations into making dispositions that the testator would not have made absent those misrepresentations constitutes fraud (129 Cal. App. 4th 672, 686) .

[b] Only Portions of Will Affected by Fraud Need Be Revoked

The facts and procedural background of Estate of Carson (1920) 184 Cal. 437, 194 P. 5 , are discussed under § 186.28[3][a]. In Carson, the California Supreme Court held that the fact that certain portions of the testator's will were procured by fraud would not invalidate the provisions and bequests of the will not affected by the fraud. The whole will would be invalidated only if it were not possible to separate the portions affected by the fraud from those unaffected. Separating the portions of the will favoring the man who had fraudulently entered into a marriage with the testator from the other provisions of the will did not present such a problem (184 Cal. 437, 441) .

18-186 California Points & Authorities § 186.29

§ 186.29 Supporting Contest of Will--Grounds for Contest--Will Procured by Undue Influence [Prob. Code § 6104]

[1] FORM

[The following should be combined with a general memorandum of points and authorities supporting a will contest or a petition to revoke probate of a will (see §§ 186.20 and 186.21), or may be used in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE [PURPORTED] _____ [WILL or CODICIL] IS INVALID BECAUSE IT WAS PROCURED BY UNDUE INFLUENCE IN THAT _____ [specify conduct that subjugates the will of the testator to the will of another and causes the testator to dispose of his or her property differently than he or she would otherwise have done, e.g., (1) THE WILL WAS UNNATURAL AND CONTRARY TO THE TESTATOR'S PREVIOUSLY EXPRESSED INTENT TO LEAVE HIS/HER ESTATE TO HIS/HER SISTER; (2) THE TESTATOR'S MENTAL AND PHYSICAL CONDITION WERE SO DETERIORATED BY HIS/HER ILLNESS THAT RESPONDENT WAS ABLE TO SUBVERT HIS/HER WILL; (3) THE TESTATOR WAS DEPENDANT ON THE RESPONDENT'S CARE; AND (4) THE RESPONDENT WAS PRESENT DURING THE PREPARATION AND EXECUTION OF THE TESTATOR'S WILL].

A. Will Ineffective to Extent It Is Procured by Undue Influence. The execution or revocation of a will or a part of a will is ineffective to the extent the execution or revocation was procured by undue influence, and the courts have long held that a testamentary document may be set aside if it was procured by undue influence (Prob. Code § 6104).

B. "Undue Influence" Defined. Undue Influence is pressure brought to bear directly on the testamentary act, sufficient to overcome the testator's free will and amounting to coercion that destroys the testator's free agency (Rice v. Clark (2002) 28 Cal. 4th 89, 96, 120 Cal. Rptr. 2d 522, 47 P.3d 300 ; Estate of Baker (1982) 131 Cal. App. 3d 471, 480, 182 Cal. Rptr. 550).

C. Indicia of Undue Influence. The recognized indicia of undue influence are: (1) the provisions of the will are unnatural; (2) the dispositions are at variance with the express intentions of the testator; (3) the relations between the decedent and the chief beneficiary afforded the latter an opportunity to control the testamentary act; (4) the mental and physical condition of the decedent permitted a subversion of his or her will; and (5) the chief beneficiary was active in procuring the execution of the will (Estate of Calway (1961) 196 Cal. App. 2d 268, 274, 16 Cal. Rptr. 462).

D. Circumstantial Evidence May Establish Active Participation in Procurement of Will. Active participation in the preparation or procurement of execution of a purported will may be established by circumstantial evidence (Estate of Baker (1982) 131 Cal. App. 3d 471, 481, 182 Cal. Rptr. 550).

[Optional] E. Confidential or Fiduciary Relationship Creates Presumption of Undue Influence. A presumption of undue influence arises when there is: (1) a confidential or fiduciary relationship between the testator and the person alleged to have exerted the undue influence; (2) active participation by that person in preparation or execution of the will; and (3) an undue benefit to the person or another person under the will thus procured (Estate of Baker (1982) 131 Cal. App. 3d 471, 480, 182 Cal. Rptr. 550 ; Estate of Clegg (1978) 87 Cal. App. 3d 594, 602, 151 Cal. Rptr. 158).

[Optional] F. Benefit by Attorney Who Assists in Preparing Will Creates Presumption of Undue Influence. When an attorney, by advice or action, takes part in the preparation or execution of a will, and the will benefits the attorney, there is a presumption of undue influence that shifts the burden to the attorney to prove that the will was not procured by his or her undue influence (Estate of Auen (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 300, 311, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 557 ; Estate of Clegg (1978) 87 Cal. App. 3d 594, 603, 151 Cal. Rptr. 158).

[Optional] G. Actual Presence of Party Who Exercised Influence Is Unnecessary. The person exercising undue influence need not be present in person at the time of the execution of the testamentary document if the influence is present to constrain the party from exercising his or her free will; nonpresence at the execution does not alone, as a matter of law, overcome the inference of undue influence in procuring the will that may be drawn from other evidence (Estate of Baker (1982) 131 Cal. App. 3d 471, 481, 483, 182 Cal. Rptr. 550).

[Optional] H. Claim of Undue Influence May Be Supported in Whole or in Part by True Statements. Untrue statements are not essential to a claim of undue influence, which may be supported in whole or in part by proof of true statements [Hagen v. Hickenbottom (1995) 41 Cal. App. 4th 168, 180-183, 48 Cal. Rptr. 2d 197] .

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a challenge to a testamentary instrument based on undue influence in the procurement of the instrument [see Prob. Code § 6104]. The issue of undue influence frequently arises in conjunction with the issues of testamentary incapacity and fraud, discussed in §§ 186.27 and 186.28, respectively [but see Estate of Carson (1920) 184 Cal. 437, 440, 194 P. 5 (although husband deceived testator by inducing her to marry him when he was already married, there was no evidence that he subjugated testator's mind so that she was not acting freely on facts as she believed them to be)]. The theories of undue influence and fraud often rest on a similar factual basis, because contestants relying on a theory of undue influence may claim that the beneficiary of the will employed misrepresentations to pressure the testator into making the will. However, they are distinct grounds for a will contest [David v. Hermann (2005) 129 Cal. App. 4th 672, 685, 28 Cal. Rptr. 3d 622] .

Optional Paragraphs E and F may be used when the facts of the case entitle the contestant to assert a presumption of undue influence and thereby shift the burden to the proponent to show that undue influence did not exist [see Rice v. Clark (2002) 28 Cal. 4th 89, 96-97, 120 Cal. Rptr. 2d 522, 47 P.3d 300 (noting earlier appellate cases recognizing presumption)].

Optional Paragraph E concerns the general presumption. Optional paragraph F deals with application of the presumption to the testator's attorney. In this regard, attorneys need to be aware that Prob. Code § 21350 provides an additional and independent statutory basis for contesting a will that makes a gift to the drafting attorney. Prob. Code § 21350 invalidates any donative transfers to the person who drafted the will or trust, or specified relatives and business associates of that person [Prob. Code § 21350(a)]. This general statutory rule of invalidity, however, does not apply if the transferor is related to or cohabiting with the transferee or the person who drafted the instrument [Prob. Code § 21351(a)]. Other significant exceptions as well [see Prob. Code § 21351(b)-(i)]. When Prob. Code § 21350 applies, it may be easier for the party seeking to invalidate a gift to rely on that section than to try to prove traditional fraud, duress, menace, or undue influence. For additional discussion and a form, see § 186.29A. If Prob. Code § 21350 is inapplicable--for example, because the attorney who drafted the will was related to the testator [see Prob. Code § 21351(a)]--traditional fraud, duress, menace, or undue influence may be the only way to attack the will.

Optional Paragraph G may be used when the person exercising the undue influence was not actually present at the time the will or codicil was executed.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, if the contestant is entitled to a presumption of undue influence, counsel should set out specific facts and arguments showing that the party alleged to have unduly influenced the testator had a confidential relationship with the testator, participated in the preparation or execution of the will, and is unduly benefitted by the will [see Estate of Clegg (1978) 87 Cal. App. 3d 594, 602, 151 Cal. Rptr. 158] .

This memorandum may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the purported will was procured by undue influence. Thus, this form may be combined with the points and authorities pertaining to an objection to the admission of a will to probate [see § 186.20] or a petition to revoke probate of a will [see § 186.21]. This memorandum may also be combined with points and authorities challenging a purported will on the grounds that the will was not executed in conformity with statutory requirements [see §§ 186.22, 186.23].

[b] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 186.58 may be used to oppose the contention supported by the points and authorities in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] "Undue Influence" Defined

Rice v. Clark (2002) 28 Cal. 4th 89, 120 Cal. Rptr. 2d 522, 47 P.3d 300 , discussed in detail in § 186.58B[3][b], involved an action under Prob. Code § 21350(a)(4), which includes in the category of presumptively disqualified persons any fiduciary who transcribes the testamentary instrument or causes it to be transcribed. In introductory discussion relating to the general nature of undue influence, the California Supreme Court stated that undue influence is "pressure brought to bear directly on the testamentary act, sufficient to overcome the testator's free will, amounting in effect to coercion destroying the testator's free agency" (28 Cal. 4th 89, 96) .

In Estate of Baker (1982) 131 Cal. App. 3d 471, 182 Cal. Rptr. 550 , a testator's two heirs at law, a brother and an adoptive cousin, contested the testator's will leaving the bulk of her $73,000 estate to a psychic she had known since 1938. In 1975, the psychic told the testator that she had "visitations" from the testator's deceased mother and brother. The psychic claimed that the mother and brother wanted the testator to, among other things, go out more, spend more money, have more fun, get rid of "false friends," rent an apartment and give up her house, and that if the testator did not heed their advice and requests her mother and brother would be earthbound and unable to move to a "higher plane." The testator believed the psychic, and complied with her advice in almost every aspect of her life during the next two years.

Between 1975 and 1978, the testator gave the psychic over $60,000 in checks, free trips, and other benefits, and paid for stocks and a condominium in which the psychic was given a joint interest. In 1976, the testator executed the will in question, which was prepared by an attorney recommended by the psychic. The final message relayed by the psychic from the spirit world was that the testator's mother and brother wanted the testator to take a trip to Peru, and that if she did not do so they would not be able to move to a higher plane or continue to communicate with her. The psychic knew that the testator had suffered heart attacks previously and could have another heart attack on the trip. In spite of her physician's advice to the contrary, the testator and the psychic flew to South America and visited Peru and other countries in early 1978. The testator suffered a heart attack while on the trip, and died approximately a month later. The testator's heirs contested the will on the grounds of testamentary incapacity, undue influence, and fraud. The trial court agreed and denied probate of the provisions challenged by the contestants. The psychic and her grandson appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, stating that undue influence consists of conduct that subjugates the will of the testator to the will of another and causes the testator to make a disposition of his or her property contrary to and different from that which he or she would have done if permitted to follow his or her own inclination or judgment (131 Cal. App. 3d 471, 480) . The court found that the evidence established that the psychic had exercised such influence over the testator by claiming to be a representative of the testator's deceased relatives. The court also stated that the judicial policy that a will must be construed according to the intention of the testator and so as to avoid intestacy is a rule of construction and, as such, had no bearing on the issue of whether certain parts of the will were procured by undue influence and fraud. The will's disinheritance clause was held not to apply to cause the estate to escheat. A disinheritance clause does not become effective unless the testator has made a valid disposition of his or her property, and even a fully effective disinheritance clause only prevents the heirs from taking under the will itself. Therefore, the testator's heirs were entitled to receive that portion of the estate that would have gone to the psychic and her grandson under the laws of intestacy (131 Cal. App. 3d 471, 484) .

[b] Indicia of Undue Influence

In Estate of Calway (1961) 196 Cal. App. 2d 268, 16 Cal. Rptr. 462 , a testator's sister and sole heir at law contested a will leaving everything to the testator's live-in housekeeper of seven months. The will was made less than two weeks before the testator's death, late in the evening on the day the testator was admitted to the hospital for a strangulated hernia. About three hours after the testator was admitted, the attorney who prepared the will asked the attending physician if the testator was competent to make a will. The doctor said he was, and the attorney's secretary came to the hospital and wrote down the will as the attorney dictated it. She testified that the testator could only make "affirmative noises" when the will was read to him, that she couldn't understand what he was saying and relied on the attorney and the housekeeper for interpretation, that she did not hear the testator discuss his property, and that the housekeeper was present during the discussion and execution of the will and held the testator and the document while he signed it. The secretary's husband, who was the other witness to the will, testified that the testator looked weak and sick, and that he did not hear the testator discuss his property or relatives or indicate that the document was his will. By contrast, the attorney and the housekeeper testified that the testator was as mentally alert as he had been before he entered the hospital, that he was of sound mind, discussed his property and relatives, and expressed an intent to take care of the housekeeper, and specifically requested that a disinheritance clause be included in the will. However, two nurses who cared for the testator on the evening the will was executed testified that he was irrational, did not know or understand what was going on, and was physically restrained and given a "quieting drug" because he was fighting and trying to get out of bed. The hospital records corroborated this testimony, and indicated that the testator remained in a condition of near shock until about 1:00 a.m. The testator's physician testified that the testator was suffering from arteriosclerosis, which affected his brain, and that hallucinations and other outward manifestations of this illness had been apparent for some time before he testator was hospitalized. There was also evidence that the testator's memory deteriorated rapidly during the last year or two of his life, that he had considerable difficulty carrying on a coherent conversation, and that he could read and write only with difficulty. Several witnesses gave testimony in conflict with this evidence, to the effect that the testator was of sound mind during the months immediately preceding his death. Two witnesses stated that on two occasions the housekeeper had made unsolicited statements that the testator was "perfectly competent." Based on the evidence described above, the trial court denied probate of the will on the grounds that the testator lacked testamentary capacity and was under the undue influence of the housekeeper when the will was executed. The housekeeper appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, noting that its province was not to decide whether the testator was competent when he executed the will but merely to decide whether there was substantial evidence to support the trial court's decision. The court found that the evidence was sufficient to support a finding that the testator was unable to make a will on the date in question because of extreme mental and physical weakness (196 Cal. App. 2d 268, 273-274) . As to the undue influence issue, the court stated that the recognized indicia of undue influence in California are: (1) the provisions of the will are unnatural; (2) the dispositions are at variance with the express intentions of the testator; (3) the relations between the decedent and the chief beneficiary afforded the latter an opportunity to control the testamentary act; (4) the mental and physical condition of the decedent permitted a subversion of his will; and (5) the chief beneficiary was active in procuring the execution of the will (196 Cal. App. 2d 268, 274) . The court found ample evidence establishing all the indicia. The will in question was both unnatural and at variance with "the express intentions of the testator during the 80 or so years of his life before he met the appellant." There was no question that the testator's mental and physical condition were such as to permit a subversion of his will. The housekeeper's opportunity to control the testamentary act were established by a variety of circumstances, including the testator's dependency on the housekeeper, the housekeeper's attempts to keep an old friend from seeing the testator, and the housekeeper's failure to notify two friends of the testator's last illness although both of them had specifically asked her to do so. The attorney's secretary testified that the housekeeper was present during the preparation and execution of the will, and that she sat by the bed and held the testator's hand and interpreted his instructions about the will (196 Cal. App. 2d 268, 275-276) .

[c] Circumstantial Evidence May Establish Active Participation in Procurement of Will

The facts and procedural background of Estate of Baker (1982) 131 Cal. App. 3d 471, 182 Cal. Rptr. 550 , are discussed under § 186.29[3][a]. In Baker, the court of appeal held that the will proponent's active participation in procuring the will could be established by circumstantial evidence. The circumstantial evidence used to establish the will proponent's active participation included the proponent's representations that she was in communication with the testator's dead relatives, the testator's belief in these claims and compliance with the proponent's instructions, and the proponent's successful efforts to alienate the testator from her friends, relatives, and business associates (131 Cal. App. 3d 471, 481-482) .

[d] Confidential or Fiduciary Relationship Creates Presumption of Undue Influence

The facts and procedural background of Estate of Baker (1982) 131 Cal. App. 3d 471, 182 Cal. Rptr. 550 , are discussed under § 186.29[3][a]. In Baker, the court of appeal enumerated the elements that must concur to create a presumption of undue influence in the procurement of a will: (1) a confidential or fiduciary relationship between the testator and the person alleged to have exerted the undue influence; (2) active participation by that person in preparation or execution of the will; and (3) an undue benefit to such person or another person under the will thus procured (131 Cal. App. 3d 471, 480) . The court found that each element was present in the case before it. The will proponent testified that the testator had trust and confidence in her, which established a confidential or fiduciary relationship. The proponent clearly profited unduly from the will, since it gave her the bulk of the estate. Activity on the part of the proponent in procuring the will was established by circumstantial evidence that the psychic had power or ability to control the testamentary act (131 Cal. App. 3d 471, 481-482) .

The facts and procedural background of Estate of Clegg (1978) 87 Cal. App. 3d 594, 151 Cal. Rptr. 158 , are discussed in § 186.27[3][a]. In Clegg, the court of appeal upheld the trial court's finding that the will had been procured by undue influence, since all the elements required to raise a presumption of undue influence were present. The administrator and secretary of the nursing home that was the primary beneficiary under the will had a confidential relationship with the testator since they had been nominated as her conservators prior to the execution of the will. There was circumstantial evidence that they had actively participated in the execution of the will, in that the administrator called his personal attorney and the attorney for the home to prepare the will, and the attorney explained escheat and suggested that the testator leave her property to the home in spite of the fact that she had living relatives. The administrator, the secretary, and the attorney unduly benefitted from the will, since they were all affiliated with and representatives of the church that sponsored the home. All three were members of the church. The administrator also served on the home's board of directors, the attorney was raised in the church and "paid them back" by performing legal services for the church (87 Cal. App. 3d 594, 602) .

[e] Benefit by Attorney Who Assists in Preparing Will Creates Presumption of Undue Influence

In Estate of Auen (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 300, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 557 , the attorney had represented the client over a period of years, during the course of which she prepared and the client executed a will that named various charitable organizations as residuary devisees. Six months before the client's death, the first attorney asked a second attorney to prepare a new will for the client leaving the bulk of the client's estate to the first attorney. The second attorney, who was a friend of the first attorney and inexperienced in will drafting, spoke to the client briefly on the telephone, but received most of the information as to the form and contents of the new will from the first attorney, and the document was actually typed by the first attorney's secretary. After the client's death, the new will was offered for probate. In the ensuing contest, the court ruled that there was a presumption that the will was the product of undue influence, since the facts showed (1) there was an attorney-client relationship between the first attorney and the testator at the time the will was prepared and executed, (2) the first attorney actively participated in the preparation of the new will, and (3) the first attorney benefitted by the new will (30 Cal. App. 4th 300, 311) . It was not necessary to prove that the benefit to the first attorney was "undue," as any benefit other than compensation for legal services performed would be "undue" (30 Cal. App. 4th 300, 310) .

The facts and procedural background of Estate of Clegg (1978) 87 Cal. App. 3d 594, 151 Cal. Rptr. 158 , are discussed in § 186.27[3][a]. In Clegg, the court of appeal held that a presumption of undue influence arises when an attorney, by advice or action, takes part in the preparation or execution of a will, and the will benefits the attorney. To rebut the presumption, the attorney must show that he or she took no unfair advantage of the testator and reminded the testator of the natural objects of his or her bounty. The attorney in Clegg was held to benefit from the will since he was closely affiliated with the nursing home that was the sole beneficiary under the will (87 Cal. App. 3d 594, 603) .

NOTE:

Attorneys should be aware that Prob. Code § 21350 provides an additional and independent basis for contesting a will that makes a gift to the drafting attorney. Prob. Code § 21350 invalidates any donative transfers to the person who drafted the will or trust, or specified relatives and business associates of that person [Prob. Code § 21350(a)], subject to important exceptions [see Prob. Code § 21351]. For detailed discussion and a form, see § 186.29A.

[f] Actual Presence of Party Who Exercised Influence Is Unnecessary

The facts and procedural background of Estate of Baker (1982) 131 Cal. App. 3d 471, 182 Cal. Rptr. 550 , are discussed under § 186.29[3][a]. In Baker, the court of appeal held that the fact that the will proponent and primary beneficiary was not actually present at the execution of the will did not, as a matter of law, overcome the inference of undue influence raised by the other facts of the case. The jury had substantial evidence before it from which to conclude that the presumption was applicable and was not overcome, including evidence that the testator had complied with the proponent's instructions and advice in almost every aspect of her life during the last two years of her life, had given the proponent over $60,000 in checks, free trips, and other benefits, and had hired an attorney recommended by the proponent to prepare the will (131 Cal. App. 3d 471, 483) .

[g] Claim of Undue Influence May Be Supported in Whole or in Part by True Statements

In Hagen v. Hickenbottom (1995) 41 Cal. App. 4th 168, 48 Cal. Rptr. 2d 197 , two grandchildren sought to set aside a revocable trust instrument executed by their deceased grandmother on the ground that one of the grandmother's cousins had unduly influenced her decision to leave almost none of her property to the grandchildren. The grandchildren were the sole descendants of the grandmother, who was over 90 years of age at the time she executed the trust. The cousin argued that the only facts alleged to constitute undue influence consisted of true statements made by the cousin to the grandmother about the grandchildren. In those statements, the cousin reminded the grandmother that one of the grandchildren was an adopted child and informed the grandmother that the other grandchild had become involved with drugs, had sought treatment in a rehabilitation center, had impregnated his girl friend, and then had paid for the girl friend to have an abortion. The grandchildren conceded that all of these statements were true. The cousin moved the court for summary judgment, arguing that truth was a complete defense to a claim of undue influence and that the First Amendment guarantee of free speech protected her from any liability for making admittedly true statements. The trial court granted the motion, but the Court of Appeal reversed, concluding that although undue influence often consists of untrue statements made to the testator for the purpose of overpowering the testator's free agency, untrue statements are not essential to undue influence. In fact, a claim of undue influence may be supported in whole or in part by proof of completely true statements. The court stated that it is essential to distinguish undue influence from fraud or misrepresentation. Falsity is an essential element of a claim for fraud or misrepresentation, but not of a claim for undue influence. Thus truth is not an absolute defense to a claim of undue influence, as it is to a claim for fraud or misrepresentation, although the truth of statements may tend to negate the inference that they had the effect of unduly influencing the testator (or, in this case, the settlor) (41 Cal. App. 4th 168, 180-183) .

A. Supporting Will Contests

18-186 California Points & Authorities § 186.29A

§ 186.29A Supporting Contest of Will--Grounds for Contest--Gift Is Invalid Under Statute Prohibiting Gifts to Persons Having Specified Relationships to Testator [Prob. Code §§ 21350, 21351]

[1] FORM

THE TESTAMENTARY GIFT TO _____ [name of beneficiary] IS INVALID BECAUSE _____ [name of beneficiary] IS _____ [specify one of following: (RELATED BY BLOOD OR MARRIAGE TO or A DOMESTIC PARTNER OF or A COHABITANT WITH or AN EMPLOYEE OF) THE PERSON WHO DRAFTED THE WILL or A _____ (PARTNER or SHAREHOLDER or EMPLOYEE) OF A LAW _____ (PARTNERSHIP or CORPORATION) IN WHICH THE PERSON WHO DRAFTED THE WILL HAS AN OWNERSHIP INTEREST or (RELATED BY BLOOD OR MARRIAGE TO or A DOMESTIC PARTNER OF or A COHABITANT WITH or AN EMPLOYEE OF) A PERSON WHO HAS A FIDUCIARY RELATIONSHIP WITH THE TRANSFEROR AND TRANSCRIBED THE WILL OR CAUSED IT TO BE TRANSCRIBED or (RELATED BY BLOOD OR MARRIAGE TO or A DOMESTIC PARTNER OF or A COHABITANT WITH or AN EMPLOYEE OF) A CARE CUSTODIAN OF THE TESTATOR, WHO IS A DEPENDANT ADULT] AND THE GIFT DOES NOT FALL WITHIN ANY OF THE APPLICABLE EXCEPTIONS TO THE STATUTORY PROVISIONS INVALIDATING TESTAMENTARY GIFTS TO SUCH PERSONS.

A. Testamentary Gifts to Specified Persons Are Presumptively Invalid. No provision or provisions of any instrument, including a will, are valid to make any donative transfer to specified categories of persons unless specific statutory exceptions apply. The specified classes of persons include anyone who is _____[specify class or classes of person relevant to the particular case, e.g.: (related by blood or marriage to or a domestic partner of or a cohabitant with or an employee of) the person who drafted the will or a _____ (partner or shareholder or employee) of a law _____ (partnership or corporation) in which the person who drafted the will has an ownership interest or (related by blood or marriage to or a domestic partner of or a cohabitant with or an employee of) a person who has a fiduciary relationship with the transferor and transcribed the will or caused it to be transcribed or (related by blood or marriage to or a domestic partner of or a cohabitant with or an employee of) a care custodian of a dependant adult testator] (Prob. Code § 21350(a); see Prob. Code § 45 ("instrument" includes will)).

[Optional] B. "Relation by Blood or Marriage" Defined. For purposes of the statutory provisions invalidating gifts to specified persons, the term "related by blood or marriage" includes (1) the person's spouse or predeceased spouse; (2) relatives within the third degree of the person and of the person's spouse; and (3) the spouse of any relative within the third degree of the person and of the person's spouse (Prob. Code § 21350(b)).

C. Statutory Exceptions Inapplicable. The statutory rule invalidating gifts to the classes of persons specified in Probate Code § 21350 may be overcome only if the gift is subject to one or more of the statutory exceptions provided in Probate Code § 21351, and none of those exceptions is applicable in this case (Prob. Code § 21350(a); see Prob. Code § 21351).

[Optional; add if transfer in question was made to person who actually drafted the instrument:] D. Transfer to Person Who Drafted Instrument Is Conclusively Presumed Invalid. A transfer that was made in an instrument executed after July 1, 1993, by a person who was a California resident at the time the instrument was executed, to a person who drafted the instrument and who does not qualify under the any of the statutory exceptions specified in Probate Code § 21351 is conclusively presumed to be invalid, and the transferee cannot rebut the presumption by showing that the transfer was not the product of fraud, menace, duress, or undue influence (Prob. Code §§ 21350(a)(1), 21351(d),(e); Rice v. Clark (2002) 28 Cal. 4th 89, 98, 120 Cal. Rptr. 2d 522, 47 P.3d 300).

[Optional; add if beneficiary was a care custodian:] E. Meaning of "Care Custodian." For purposes of the provisions invalidating gifts to specified persons, "care custodian" includes an administrator or employee of any public or private facility or agency specified in Welfare and Institutions Code § 15610.7, including _____ [specify relevant type of facility or agency, e.g., adult day care centers or clinics or community care facilities or any persons providing health services or social services to elders or dependent adults or other person or entity specified in Welf. & Inst. Code § 15610.17]. The statutory definition of "care custodian" does not contain a professional or occupational limitation and does not provide any exception for a preexisting personal friendship (Prob. Code § 21350(c); Welf. & Inst. Code § 15610.17; Bernard v. Foley (2006) 39 Cal. 4th 794, 803, 47 Cal. Rptr. 3d 248).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be used in support of a will contest seeking to invalidate a testamentary gift to a particular donee on the ground that the person is a member of one of the classes of persons listed in Prob. Code § 21350 [see [3][a], below]. Gifts made to such persons are invalid unless one of the exceptions specified in Prob. Code § 21351 applies [Prob. Code § 21350(a)].

In general, the classes of persons enumerated in Prob. Code § 21350 encompass many of the same types of persons who are often involved in traditional undue influence claims. However, because the statute creates a presumption of invalidity for gifts to the classes of specified persons, no affirmative showing of actual undue influence is required under these statutes--all that must be shown is that the donee is a member of a class specified in the statute, and that no exception applies. The donee then has the burden to show that the gift is made free of undue influence [see 3[b], below].

Counsel should combine this form with facts showing that (1) the person to whom the gift was made is a member of the class of persons to which Prob. Code § 21350 applies; and (2) none of the exceptions in Prob. Code § 21351 are available to validate the gift.

Paragraph A states the basic rule of Prob. Code § 21350. Counsel should complete this provision to specify the specific category or categories of disqualified persons under Prob. Code § 21350(a) that are applicable under the facts of the case--e.g., the drafter, a relative or business associate of drafter, a care custodian, and so on [see [3][a], below].

Optional Paragraph B may be included if the gift is invalidated because the donee is related by blood or marriage, within the meaning of Prob. Code § 21350(b), to a person having the requisite relationship with the testator.

Paragraph C specifies that none of the statutory exceptions to Prob. Code § 21351 applies. Counsel should add argument demonstrating that the facts of the case do not support application of any of these exceptions. For discussion and a list of these exceptions, see [3][c], below; see also § 186.58A.

Optional Paragraph D may be used if the donee is the person who actually drafted the instrument.

Optional Paragraph E may be used if the party seeking to invalidate the gift is claiming that the donee is a caregiver who qualifies as a "care custodian" under the statute [see Prob. Code § 21350(a)(6), (c)].

[b] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 186.58A or 186.58B may be used to oppose the contentions supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authority

[a] Testamentary Gifts to Specified Persons Are Presumptively Invalid

Prob. Code § 21350 invalidates gifts to the following classes of persons:

(1) The person who drafted the instrument.

(2) A person who is related by blood or marriage to, is a domestic partner of, is a cohabitant with, or is an employee of, the person who drafted the instrument.

(3) Any partner or shareholder of any law partnership or law corporation in which the person described in (1) has an ownership interest, and any employee of that law partnership or law corporation.

(4) Any person who has a fiduciary relationship with the transferor, including, but not limited to, a conservator or trustee, who transcribes the instrument or causes it to be transcribed.

(5) A person who is related by blood or marriage to, is a domestic partner of, is a cohabitant with, or is an employee of a person who is described in (4).

(6) A care custodian of a dependent adult who is the transferor [but see Estate of Pryor (2009) 177 Cal. App. 4th 1466, 1468, 1476, 99 Cal. Rptr. 3d 895 (care custodian who subsequently married the decedent could invoke spousal exception under Prob. Code § 21351(a))].

(7) A person who is related by blood or marriage to, is a domestic partner of, is a cohabitant with, or is an employee of, a person who is described in (6).

[b] "Relation by Blood or Marriage" Defined.

Prob. Code § 21350(b) provides that a "person who is related by blood or marriage" to a person means all of the following:

(1) The person's spouse or predeceased spouse.

(2) Relatives within the third degree of the person and of the person's spouse.

(3) The spouse of any person described in (2).

[c] Statutory Exceptions Inapplicable

Prob. Code § 21350(a) states that except as provided in Prob. Code § 21351, no provision or provisions of any instrument will be valid to make any donative transfer to the classes of persons specified in that section. Prob. Code § 21351 provides that Prob. Code § 21350 does not apply (and the gift therefore is valid) if any of the following conditions are met:

- The transferor is related by blood or marriage to, is a cohabitant with, or is the registered domestic partner of, the transferee or the person who drafted the instrument, and the instrument became irrevocable on or after July 1, 1993 [Prob. Code § 21351(a)]. Note that this exception applies to a spouse who was a care custodian to the transferee prior to marriage [Estate of Pryor (2009) 177 Cal. App. 4th 1466, 1468, 1476, 99 Cal. Rptr. 3d 895 (decedent's spouse could invoke spousal exception under Prob. Code § 21351(a) despite her prior status as a care custodian before her marriage to decedent)].

- The instrument is reviewed by an independent attorney who (1) counsels the client (transferor) about the nature and consequences of the intended transfer, (2) attempts to determine if the intended consequence is the result of fraud, menace, duress, or undue influence, and (3) signs and delivers to the transferor an original certificate in substantially the form provided by statute, with a copy delivered to the drafter [Prob. Code § 21351(b)].

- After full disclosure of the relationships of the persons involved, the instrument is approved by court order under Prob. Code § 2580 et seq. [Prob. Code § 21351(c)].

- The court determines, on clear and convincing evidence, not based solely on the testimony of any person described Prob. Code § 21350(a), that the transfer was not the product of fraud, menace, duress, or undue influence. If the court finds that the transfer was the product of fraud, menace, duress, or undue influence, the disqualified person will bear all costs of the proceeding, including reasonable attorney's fees [Prob. Code § 21351(d)]. This exception applies only if either (1) the transfer is to someone other than the person who actually drafted the instrument; or (2) the instrument was executed on or before July 1, 1993, by a person who was a California resident at the time the instrument was executed; or (3) the instrument was executed by a California resident who was not a resident at the time the instrument was executed. (Note that the effect of this provision is to establish a rebuttable presumption of invalidity except as to a person who actually drafted an instrument that was executed after July 1, 1993, by a California resident then residing in the state--as to the latter, the presumption is conclusive rather than rebuttable [see Prob. Code § 213151(d), (e) and Rice v. Clark (2002) 28 Cal. 4th 89, 98, 120 Cal. Rptr. 2d 522, 47 P.3d 300 , discussed in more detail in [3][d], below].)

- The transferee is a federal, state, or local public entity, a tax-exempt entity [see IRC § 501(c)(3),(19)], or a trust holding an interest for such an entity, but only to the extent of the interest of the entity or the trustee of this trust, provided the instrument became irrevocable on or after July 1, 1993 [Prob. Code § 21351(f)].

- The transfer does not exceed $3,000, and the gross value of the estate's California property exceeds $100,000 [Prob. Code § 21351(h); see Prob. Code § 13100].

- The transfer is made by an instrument executed by a nonresident of California who was not a resident at the time the instrument was executed, and that was not signed within California [Prob. Code § 21351(i); see also Estate of Clementi (2008) 166 Cal. App. 4th 375, 383, 82 Cal. Rptr. 3d 685 (Prob. Code, § 21351(i) exempted testator's will from the prohibition in Prob. Code, § 21350 against donative transfers to the drafter of the will, since testator was nonresident of California when he signed will, even though the testator was a resident of California at the time of his death)].

[d] Transfer to Person Who Drafted Instrument Is Conclusively Presumed Invalid

Prob. Code § 21351(d) provides that the general rule of invalidity specified in Prob. Code § 21350 does not apply if the court determines, upon clear and convincing evidence that the transfer was not the product of fraud, menace, duress, or undue influence. However, under Prob. Code § 21351(e) , this latter exception applies only to the following instruments:

- Any instrument other than one making a transfer to the person who drafted the instrument [Prob. Code § 21351(e)(1); see Prob. Code § 21350(a)(1)].

- Any instrument executed on or before July 1, 1993, by a person who was a California resident at the time the instrument was executed [Prob. Code § 21351(e)(2)].

- Any instrument executed by a California resident who was not a resident at the time the instrument was executed [Prob. Code § 21351(e)(3)].

Rice v. Clark (2002) 28 Cal. 4th 89, 120 Cal. Rptr. 2d 522, 47 P.3d 300 , involved an action under Prob. Code § 21350(a)(4), which includes in the category of presumptively disqualified persons any fiduciary who transcribes the testamentary instrument or causes it to be transcribed. In its analysis of the statutory scheme established by Prob. Code §§ 21350 and 21351, the California Supreme Court addressed the nature of the presumption of disqualification established by Prob. Code § 21350, and explained that Prob. Code § 21351(e)(1) makes the presumption conclusive as to a drafter-transferee. Thus, for example, if an attorney drafted a client's will so as to benefit himself or herself, assuming no other exception in Prob. Code § 21351 applied, the attorney would be conclusively disqualified; whereas if the attorney drafted the will so as to benefit his or her relative or law partner, the presumption would be rebuttable, but only by clear and convincing evidence other than the drafter's testimony that the client freely chose that disposition. (28 Cal. 4th 89, 98) .

[e] Meaning of Care Custodian

Welf. & Inst. Code § 15610.17 specifies that "care custodian" means an administrator or an employee of any of the following public or private facilities or agencies, or persons providing care or services for elders or dependent adults, including members of the support staff and maintenance staff:

- Twenty-four-hour health facilities [see Health & Saf. Code §§ 1250, 1250.2, 1250.3].

- Clinics.

- Home health agencies.

- Agencies providing publicly funded in-home supportive services, nutrition services, or other home and community-based support services.

- Adult day health care centers and adult day care.

- Secondary schools that serve 18- to 22-year-old dependent adults and postsecondary educational institutions that serve dependent adults or elders.

- Independent living centers.

- Camps.

- Alzheimer's Disease day care resource centers.

- Community care facilities [see Health & Saf. Code § 1502] and residential care facilities for the elderly [see Health & Saf. Code § 1569.2].

- Respite care facilities.

- Foster homes.

- Vocational rehabilitation facilities and work activity centers.

- Designated area agencies on aging.

- Regional centers for persons with developmental disabilities.

- State Department of Social Services and State Department of Health Services licensing divisions.

- County welfare departments.

- Offices of patients' rights advocates and clients' rights advocates, including attorneys.

- The office of the long-term care ombudsman.

- Offices of public conservators, public guardians, and court investigators.

- Any protection or advocacy agency or entity that is designated by the Governor to fulfill the requirements and assurances of the federal Developmental Disabilities Assistance and Bill of Rights Act of 2000 [see 42 U.S.C. § 15001 et seq.] or the Protection and Advocacy for the Mentally Ill Individuals Act of 1986 [see 42 U.S.C. § 10801 et seq.], for the protection and advocacy of the rights of persons with mental illness.

- Humane societies and animal control agencies.

- Fire departments.

- Offices of environmental health and building code enforcement.

- Any other protective, public, sectarian, mental health, or private assistance or advocacy agency or person providing health services or social services to elders or dependent adults.

In Bernard v. Foley (2006) 39 Cal. 4th 794, 47 Cal. Rptr. 3d 248 , relatives of the decedent appealed the trial court's denial of a petition which asserted that an amendment to a living trust, executed shortly before the decedent's death, was invalid on grounds of undue influence, specifically, that the amendment named the trustee and other caregivers as residuary beneficiaries. The trustee and other caregivers were not health care professionals and had a preexisting personal friendship with the decedent. The California Supreme Court upheld the appellate court's reversal of the trial court's decision, holding that the term "care custodian" includes any person providing care of health services to a dependant adult, does not contemplate a professional or occupational limitation on the definition, and does not provide for a preexisting personal friendship exception (39 Cal. 4th 794, 803) . As such, the presumptive disqualification of care custodian to the donees was applicable.

[a] Meaning of Care Custodian

In Estate of Pryor (2009) 177 Cal. App. 4th 1466, 1468, 1476, 99 Cal. Rptr. 3d 895 , a California appellate court held that there was no support in the language of Prob. Code § 21351(a), or its legislative history, to make the spousal exemption to the presumption of invalidity of a donative transfer unavailable to a spouse who, prior to marriage, was the decedent's care custodian. The court also rejected the petitioner's assertion that the decedent's marriage to his care custodian was the product of undue influence and fraud. The court acknowledged the risks of undue influence on an elder or dependant adult, but concluded that even though there is a possibility that unscrupulous care custodians may persuade a dependent adult to enter into marriage to avoid the presumption of Prob. Code § 21350, such a narrow construction of Prob. Code § 21351 would lead to absurd or ridiculous consequences [Estate of Pryor (2009) 177 Cal. App. 4th 1466, 1475, 99 Cal. Rptr. 3d 895] .

In Estate of Shinkle (2002) 97 Cal. App. 4th 990, 119 Cal. Rptr. 2d 42 , a former long-term care ombudsman at a skilled nursing facility appealed from a judgment after the trial court held that a trust instrument from which he had benefited was void under Prob. Code § 21350. Under that section, any instrument that makes a donative transfer to a "care custodian of a dependent adult" is invalid. The former ombudsman claimed the trust was valid because he was no longer the settlor's ombudsman when the trust was signed. The appellate court held that a long-term care ombudsman for a skilled nursing facility remains a care custodian even after his or her formal ombudsman relationship with a resident has ended, due either to a change in the ombudsman's facility assignment or the fact that the resident has left the facility when the ombudsman, as a result of his or her fiduciary relationship with the resident, develops a personal relationship with the resident and thereby acquires personal and financial information regarding the resident (97 Cal. App. 4th 990, 1005-1006) .

Note that Conservatorship of McDowell (2004) 125 Cal. App. 4th 659, 23 Cal. Rptr. 3d 10 , and Conservatorship of Davidson (2003) 113 Cal. App.4th 1035, 6 Cal. Rptr. 3d 702 and Estate of Shinkle (2002) 97 Cal. App. 4th 990, 119 Cal. Rptr. 2d 42 discussed above, were disapproved in Bernard v. Foley (2006) 39 Cal. 4th 794, 816, 47 Cal. Rptr. 3d 248, 139 P.3d 1196 , discussed in [3][d], above, to the extent they interpreted Prob. Code § 21350 as allowing for a preexisting personal friendship exception that section's presumptive disqualification of care custodian donees.

THE [PURPORTED] _____ [WILL or CODICIL] IS INVALID BECAUSE IT'S VALIDITY IS CONDITIONAL ON _____ [specify condition(s) appearing on the face of the instrument], AND THIS/THESE CONDITION[S] HAS/HAVE NOT BEEN FULFILLED.

Validity of Will May Depend on Condition in Its Terms. A will, the validity of which is made conditional on its own terms, will be admitted to probate, rejected, or denied effect after admission to probate in conformity with the condition (Prob. Code § 6105).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of a challenge to a will or codicil based on an allegation that the will or codicil is subject to unfulfilled conditions appearing on the instrument's face [Prob. Code § 6105].

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, the specific language in the will or codicil that makes the instrument's validity conditional should be set forth, as well as facts showing that the stated condition has not been fulfilled.

This form may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the will or codicil is subject to unfulfilled conditions appearing on its face. Thus, it may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to an objection to the admission of a will to probate [ see § 186.20] or a petition to revoke probate of a will [see § 186.21]. This form also may be combined with points and authorities challenging a purported will on the grounds that the will was not executed in conformity with statutory requirements [see §§ 186.22, 186.23].

[b] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the form in § 186.59 may be used to oppose the contention supported by this form.

[1] FORM

[The following should be combined with a general memorandum supporting a will contest or a petition to revoke probate of a will (see §§ 186.20 and 186.21), or may be used in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE [PURPORTED] _____ [WILL or CODICIL] IS INVALID BECAUSE IT WAS REVOKED BY _____ [specify subsequent testamentary instrument revoking will or codicil, e.g., A SUBSEQUENT NOTATION ON THE FACE OF THE _____ (WILL or CODICIL), WRITTEN AND SIGNED BY THE DECEDENT IN HER OWN HANDWRITING, DECLARING THAT THE _____ (WILL or CODICIL) WAS REVOKED AND "NULL AND VOID"].

A. Will May Be Revoked by Subsequent Will. A will or any part thereof is revoked by a subsequent will that revokes the prior will or part expressly or by inconsistency (Prob. Code § 6120(a)). As a general rule, the presence of a revoking clause in a later will is accepted as conclusive proof of the decedent's intention to nullify the provisions of an earlier will (Estate of Anderson (1997) 56 Cal. App. 4th 235, 242, 65 Cal. Rptr. 2d 307).

[Optional] B. Will May Be Revoked by Holographic Clause. A will may be revoked by a self-contained holographic revocation clause written on the face of the will (Estate of Smith (1948) 31 Cal. 2d 563, 567-568, 191 P.2d 413).

[Optional] C. Revocation of Second Will May Not Affect Revocation of First Will. If a second will that, had it remained effective at death, would have revoked the first will in whole or in part, is thereafter revoked by acts under Probate Code Section 6120 (revocation by subsequent will or act) or 6121 (revocation of will executed in duplicate), the first will is revoked in whole or in part if it is not evident from the circumstances of the revocation of the second will or from the testator's contemporary or subsequent declarations that the testator intended the first will to take effect as executed (Prob. Code § 6123(a)).

[Optional] D. Lost or Destroyed Second Will May Still Revoke First Will. A clause in a will expressly revoking a prior will must be given effect notwithstanding the second will's inadmissibility to probate when the sole reason the subsequent will cannot be probated is because it cannot be shown to have been in existence on the date of the testator's death (Estate of Lopes (1984) 152 Cal. App. 3d 302, 308-309, 199 Cal. Rptr. 425).

[Optional] E. Third Will May Not Affect Revocation of First Will. If a second will which, had it remained effective at death would have revoked the first will in whole or in part, is thereafter revoked by a third will, the first will is revoked in whole or in part, except to the extent it appears from the terms of the third will that the testator intended the first will to take effect (Prob. Code § 6123(b)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a challenge to a will that was allegedly revoked by a subsequent will [see Prob. Code §§ 6120, 6123]. Optional Paragraph B may be used when the revoking instrument is a holographic revocation appearing on the face of the will. Optional Paragraphs C through E may be used when there is more than one will under consideration, and the effect of the revocation, loss, or destruction of one of the wills on another of them is at issue.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, if the revocation argument is based on inconsistencies between the two wills, the specific provisions of the prior will that are to be revoked, the specific provisions of the subsequent will that accomplish the revocation, and any extrinsic facts required to establish that the subsequent provisions are inconsistent with the prior ones should be set forth.

This memorandum may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the will or codicil was revoked by a subsequent will. Thus, they may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to an objection to the admission of a will to probate [see § 186.20] or a petition to revoke probate of a will [see § 186.21]. This memorandum may also be combined with points and authorities challenging a purported will on the grounds that the will was not executed in conformity with statutory requirements [see §§ 186.22, 186.23].

[b] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 186.60 may be used to oppose the contention supported by the points and authorities in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Will May Be Revoked by Subsequent Will

In Estate of Anderson (1997) 56 Cal. App. 4th 235, 65 Cal. Rptr. 2d 307 , a decedent executed a will in 1993 that expressly revoked all prior wills, but that inadvertently failed to exercise a power of appointment she had previously exercised in a 1982 will. After she died in 1995, one of the decedent's step-grandchildren filed a will contest. Applying the doctrine of dependent relative revocation, the trial court admitted to probate the 1993 will and the article of the 1982 will that exercised the power of appointment, finding that the 1993 will was not effective to revoke that article (56 Cal. App. 4th 235, 237-242) .

The court of appeal began by addressing the issue of whether a general revocation clause in a will can encompass a power of appointment exercised in a prior will, and held that it could. It noted that, as a general rule, the presence of a revoking clause in a later writing is accepted as conclusive proof of an intention on the part of a decedent to nullify the provisions of an earlier instrument. In construing a general revocation clause, an exercise of a power of appointment in an earlier will is treated in the same manner as any other provision of that will. Thus, although the testator had to mention specifically the power of appointment in order to exercise it in the first will, she did not have to make a specific reference to that power in order to revoke it in the second will. The revocation clause in the second will, which revoked all prior wills, was sufficient to revoke the article of the first will that provided for the power, unless the doctrine of dependent relative revocation was applicable (56 Cal. App. 4th 235, 242) .

Under that doctrine, an earlier will, which is revoked only to give effect to a later one on the assumption that the later one will become effective, remains in effect to the extent that the later will proves ineffective (56 Cal. App. 4th 235, 242-243) . The doctrine is designed to carry out the testator's probable intention when there is no reason to assume that the testator intended to revoke the earlier will if the later will should become inoperative (56 Cal. App. 4th 235, 243) . The court of appeal went on to hold that the trial court properly applied the doctrine of dependent relative revocation, because the 1993 will purported to revoke the testator's prior exercise of the power of appointment, which resulted in substantial gifts to the testator's step-grandchildren contrary to her express intention to exercise the power solely for the benefit of her natural daughter (56 Cal. App. 4th 235, 245) . In determining whether a will has been revoked, a court may consider extrinsic evidence of the testator's intent (56 Cal. App. 4th 235, 247) . Extrinsic evidence was properly considered in determining whether the testator intended in the subsequent will to revoke the article of the earlier will that contained the power of appointment, because the two wills were facially inconsistent (56 Cal. App. 4th 235, 248-249) . Sufficient evidence was presented to support the court's determination that the revocation of the first will was conditioned on the exercise of the power of appointment--the attorney who supervised the drafting of the 1993 will stated that the failure to refer to the exercise of the power of appointment explicitly in that will was a drafting error (56 Cal. App. 4th 235, 249-251) .

[b] Will May Be Revoked by Holographic Clause

In Estate of Smith (1948) 31 Cal. 2d 563, 191 P.2d 413 , a decedent executed a duly attested formal will in 1942, leaving her entire estate to a college. The decedent deposited the executed will with her attorney and retained an unexecuted carbon copy. She died in 1946 without having recalled the executed document from her attorney or making a new will. After her death, the unexecuted copy of the will was found among her effects. Across the face of each page of the document, the decedent had written, entirely in her own handwriting, "I Katherine Allen Smith do hereby revoke this will it is now null and void. Katherine Allen Smith July 10th 1945." A nephew of the decedent's former husband testified that about six months before the decedent died, he suggested to her that she reimburse members of his family who had helped her out financially over the years, to which she replied to the effect that she was leaving her estate to the college. After the date of the revocatory writing, the decedent told the nephew's mother that her will and other papers were in the custody of her attorney and that she would like the nephew and his mother to have her home. She also told the nephew's mother that she had made a will giving all her property to the college. About a month after the date of the revocatory writing, the decedent's attorney reminded her in a phone conversation that her papers were in his possession, and she replied "Yes, I know that." On the basis of this evidence, the trial court denied probate of the revocatory writing, admitted the will to probate, and issued letters of administration to the college treasurer. The decedent's aunt and uncle appealed.

The court of appeal reversed and granted the petition of the decedent's uncle for letters of administration. The court found that the revocatory instrument satisfied the statutory requirements for a holographic revocation. The mere writing of the revocation clause across the face of the typewritten will did not destroy the authenticity of the revocation clause. The revocation clause was a self-contained instrument and the typewritten portion had nothing to do with it. The court rejected the argument of the will proponents that the reference in the holograph to "this will" destroyed its validity as a self-contained holographic instrument. A holographic instrument may refer to and incorporate another testamentary instrument executed with different statutory formalities or an informal or unattested document, so long as the reference is unmistakable or with the aid of extrinsic proof can be made so. The words "this will" were but a substitute for a more specific reference, and there was no doubt as to the instrument referred to (31 Cal. 2d 563, 567-568) . The court also found that the evidence received concerning the decedent's statements and conversations with her attorney could not overcome the valid express revocation. The declarations of a testator are not admissible to show that an express revocation clause was not intended to revoke a prior will (31 Cal. 2d 563, 568) . In addition, the rule disfavoring constructions that lead to total or partial intestacy was not applicable since there was no ambiguity or uncertainty in the language of the revocation (31 Cal. 2d 563, 569) .

[c] Lost or Destroyed Second Will May Still Revoke First Will

In Estate of Lopes (1984) 152 Cal. App. 3d 302, 199 Cal. Rptr. 425 , the decedent's only child contested the admission to probate of the decedent's 1977 will on the ground that the will had been expressly revoked by a 1979 will executed by the decedent. The 1977 will was offered for probate by another relative who was the primary beneficiary under that will and who claimed that the revocation clause in the 1979 will could not be given effect because the 1979 will was not admissible to probate. The only issue at trial was whether the inadmissibility of the 1979 will to probate made the will inadmissible in evidence for the purpose of revoking the 1977 will. The facts were not in dispute. The 1979 will was drafted by an attorney who was deceased at the time of the decedent's death. It was stipulated that the original of the 1979 will had never been found, that there was no evidence tending to prove that it was ever in possession of anyone other than the attorney, and that the sole reason it could not be given testamentary effect was that it could not be shown to have been in existence on the date of the decedent's death and was therefore inadmissible as a lost or destroyed will. Based on these facts the trial court held that the 1977 will had been validly revoked by the 1979 will, and that the estate must pass by intestacy to the decedent's son. The proponent of the will appealed, arguing that the trial court had erred in taking cognizance of the revocation clause in the 1979 will.

The court of appeal affirmed. It stated that the proponent of the will erred in reading the statute governing the admission to probate of lost or destroyed wills as a general rule of evidence. In Estate of Thompson (1921) 185 Cal. 763, 198 P. 795 , the authority urged in support of the proponent's position, only three of the judges opined that a will that cannot be given effect as a whole under the lost and destroyed wills statute cannot be given effect as a revoking instrument. The necessary concurring vote was cast by a judge who rejected this reasoning and relied on the doctrine of dependent relative revocation to deny effect to the revocation clause of the second will. The cases cited in Thompson also failed to support the general proposition that admission to probate is a condition precedent for introduction of evidence of the contents of a will (152 Cal. App. 3d 302, 307) . The court of appeal also noted that the revocation clause would be admissible and entitled to be given effect if the 1979 will could be proved to have been revoked, or if it could be proved not to have been revoked (152 Cal. App. 3d 302, 309) .

Counsel should note that Lopes was decided under former Prob. Code §§ 350 and 74, and that the current statutes governing lost and destroyed wills and revocation of wills (see Prob. Code §§ 6120 and 8223) are not identical to these former provisions.

§ 186.32 Supporting Contest of Will--Grounds for Contest--Will Revoked by Destruction, Mutilation, or Cancellation [Prob. Code § 6120(b)]

[1] FORM

[The following should be combined with general points and authorities supporting a will contest or a petition to revoke probate of a will (see §§ 186.20 and 186.21), or may be used in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE [PURPORTED] _____ [WILL or CODICIL] IS INVALID BECAUSE IT WAS _____ [DESTROYED or MUTILATED or CANCELED] BY THE _____ [TESTATOR or specify some other person who destroyed the will in the testator's presence and at the testator's direction] WITH THE INTENTION OF REVOKING THE _____ [WILL or CODICIL].

A. Will May Be Revoked by Destruction. A will or any part thereof is revoked by being burned, torn, canceled, obliterated, or destroyed, with the intent and for the purpose of revoking it, by either the testator or another person in the testator's presence and by the testator's direction (Prob. Code § 6120(b)).

[Optional] B. Will in Testator's Possession That Is Lost at Time of His or Her Death Is Presumed Destroyed. If the testator's will was last in the testator's possession, the testator was competent until death, and neither the will nor a duplicate original of the will can be found after the testator's death, it is presumed that the testator destroyed the will with intent to revoke it; this presumption is a presumption affecting the burden of producing evidence (Prob. Code § 6124; Estate of Obernolte (1979) 91 Cal. App. 3d 124, 128-129, 153 Cal. Rptr. 798).

[Optional] C. Unsigned Photocopy of Will Is Insufficient to Overcome Presumption of Revocation. The term "duplicate original," as used in Prob. Code § 6124, does not include a photocopy of the will that has not been personally signed by the testator and the witnesses. Therefore, the presumption of revocation applies when this is the only copy of the will that can be produced. The fact that the testator preserved a photocopy of the will is not of sufficient significance to permit a court to infer that the testator would not have preserved the photocopy if he or she intended to revoke the will. (Lauermann v. Superior Court (2005) 127 Cal. App. 4th 1327, 1333, 26 Cal. Rptr. 3d 258).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a challenge to a will that was allegedly revoked by destruction, mutilation, or cancellation [Prob. Code § 6120(b)]. Optional Paragraph B may be used when facts are present which give rise to a presumption that the will was destroyed by the testator with intention to revoke it. Revocation of a subsequent will by destruction, mutilation, or cancellation may raise an issue of the validity of an earlier will that was revoked by the subsequent will. For a discussion of this issue, see § 186.31.

Optional Paragraph C can be used if the only copy of the will that can be located is a photocopy of the purported will that has not been personally signed by the testator and attending witnesses.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss facts showing that the testator or someone in the testator's presence and at the direction of the testator destroyed the will or codicil with the intent of revoking it.

This memorandum may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the will or codicil was revoked by destruction, mutilation, or cancellation. Thus, it may be combined with the points and authorities pertaining to an objection to the admission of a will to probate [see § 186.20] or a petition to revoke probate of a will [see § 186.21]. This memorandum may also be combined with points and authorities challenging a purported will on the grounds that the will was not executed in conformity with statutory requirements [see §§ 186.22, 186.23].

[b] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the contention set out in § 186.61 may be used to oppose the contention supported by the points and authorities in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Will in Testator's Possession That Is Lost at Time of His or Her Death Is Presumed Destroyed

The facts and procedural background of Estate of Obernolte (1979) 91 Cal. App. 3d 124, 153 Cal. Rptr. 798 , are discussed in § 186.61[3][c]. In Obernolte, the court of appeal held that the rebuttable presumption of revocation was applicable when the testator had the will in her possession prior to her death, she was competent until that time, and neither the will nor a duplicate original of the will could be found after her death (91 Cal. App. 3d 124, 128) . However, the presumption was rebutted by the evidence that the decedent expressed concern about the security of her will and that she did not tell her attorney or the attorney's secretary that she had destroyed it or planned to destroy it, or that she wanted to make a new will, when she visited them shortly before her death (91 Cal. App. 3d 124, 130) .

[b] Unsigned Photocopy of Will Is Insufficient to Overcome Presumption of Revocation

The issue before the court in Lauermann v. Superior Court (2005) 127 Cal. App. 4th 1327, 26 Cal. Rptr. 3d 258 was whether the term "duplicate original" as used in Prob. Code § 6124 includes a photocopy of the testator's will that has not been signed by the testator or the witnesses. The court concluded that it does not and that the presumption of revocation set forth in Prob. Code § 6124 applies when the original of the will cannot be found after the testator's death and the unsigned photocopy is the only copy of the will that can be produced (127 Cal. App. 4th 1327, 1333) . In reaching this conclusion, the court noted that a testator might make several photocopies of his or her will to send to relatives or other beneficiaries, or to retain for the purpose of drafting possible changes, and that it would be unreasonable to expect a testator to track down and destroy all of these copies before giving effect to his or her intended revocation of the will. It also noted that the simplicity of creating photocopies of the will stands in stark contrast to the considerable formalities required for the execution of a will. Given the importance placed on the creation and execution of an original will, it cannot be concluded that a reasonable testator would believe that a photocopy of his or her will would be legally effective in place of the original will and to realize that all copies would need to be destroyed before a revocation of the will could be effective (127 Cal. App. 4th 1327, 1332) . The preservation of a photocopy is not of sufficient significance to permit a court to infer that a testator would not have preserved the photocopy if he or she intended to revoke the will (127 Cal. App. 4th 1327, 1333) .

§ 186.33 Supporting Contest of Will--Grounds for Contest--Will Revoked by Destruction, Mutilation or Cancellation of Duplicate [Prob. Code § 6121]

[1] FORM

[The following should be combined with general points and authorities supporting a will contest or a petition to revoke probate of a will (see §§ 186.20 and 186.21), or may be used in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE [PURPORTED] _____ [WILL or CODICIL] IS INVALID BECAUSE A COPY OF THE _____ [WILL or CODICIL] WAS _____ [DESTROYED or MUTILATED or CANCELED] BY THE _____ [TESTATOR or specify some other person who destroyed the will in the testator's presence and at the testator's direction] WITH THE INTENTION OF REVOKING THE _____ [WILL or CODICIL].

Will May Be Revoked by Destruction of Duplicate. A will executed in duplicate or any part thereof is revoked by being burned, torn, canceled, obliterated, or destroyed, with the intent and for the purpose of revoking it, by either the testator or by another person in the testator's presence and by the testator's direction (Prob. Code § 6121).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a challenge to a will that was allegedly revoked by destruction, mutilation, or cancellation of a duplicate copy of the will [Prob. Code § 6121]. Revocation of a subsequent will by destruction, mutilation, or cancellation of a duplicate copy may raise an issue of the validity of an earlier will that was revoked by the subsequent will. For a discussion of this issue, see § 186.31.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. In particular, facts showing the testator's revocatory intent in destroying or mutilating the duplicate should be set forth. It may be more difficult to prove such intent in a case involving a duplicate will or codicil than in one involving an original document [see § 186.32]. People frequently treat duplicate documents more carelessly than original ones, and this tendency may be magnified by the fact that various and inexpensive methods of copying documents are now widely available. Clear statements of intent appearing on the face of the alleged cancellation, or facts showing that the testator could not obtain the original copy of the document, are especially relevant to a showing of intent.

This memorandum may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the will or codicil was revoked by destruction, mutilation, or cancellation of a duplicate copy of the will. Thus, it may be combined with the points and authorities pertaining to an objection to the admission of a will to probate [see § 186.20] or a petition to revoke probate of a will [see § 186.21]. This memorandum may also be combined with points and authorities challenging a purported will on the grounds that the will was not executed in conformity with statutory requirements [see §§ 186.22, 186.23].

[b] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 186.61 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

§ 186.34 Supporting Contest of Will--Grounds for Contest--Will Revoked by Annulment or Dissolution of Marriage [Prob. Code § 6122]

[1] FORM

[The following should be combined with general points and authorities supporting a will contest or a petition to revoke probate of a will (see §§ 186.20 and 186.21), or may be used in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE [PROVISIONS IN THE] _____ [WILL or CODICIL] _____ [DEVISING PROPERTY TO THE TESTATOR'S FORMER SPOUSE and/or CONFERRING A _____ (GENERAL or SPECIAL) POWER OF APPOINTMENT IN THE TESTATOR'S FORMER SPOUSE and/or NOMINATING THE TESTATOR'S FORMER SPOUSE AS _____ (EXECUTOR or TRUSTEE or CONSERVATOR or GUARDIAN)] WAS/WERE REVOKED BY THE _____ [ANNULMENT or DISSOLUTION] OF THE TESTATOR'S MARRIAGE.

A. Annulment or Dissolution Revokes Will Provisions Relating to Former Spouse. Unless the will expressly provides otherwise, if after executing a will the testator's marriage is dissolved or annulled, the dissolution or annulment revokes: (1) any disposition or appointment of property made by the will to the former spouse; (2) any provision of the will conferring a general or special power of appointment on the former spouse; and (3) any provision of the will nominating the former spouse as executor, trustee, conservator, or guardian (Prob. Code § 6122(a); Estate of Coleman (2005) 129 Cal. App. 4th 380, 389, 28 Cal. Rptr. 3d 282 ; Estate of Reeves (1991) 233 Cal. App. 3d 651, 655, 284 Cal. Rptr. 650).

B. What Constitutes Dissolution or Annulment. Dissolution or annulment means any dissolution or annulment that would exclude the spouse as a surviving spouse within the meaning of Probate Code Section 78 (Prob. Code § 6122(d)).

C. Property Passes as if Former Spouse Failed to Survive Testator. In case of revocation by dissolution or annulment, property prevented from passing to a former spouse because of the revocation passes as if the former spouse failed to survive the testator (Prob. Code § 6122(c)(1)).

[Optional] D. Provisions Conferring Power or Office on Former Spouse Interpreted as if Spouse Failed to Survive Testator. In case of revocation by dissolution or annulment, provisions of the will conferring some power or office on the former spouse will be interpreted as if the former spouse failed to survive the testator (Prob. Code § 6122(c)(2)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a challenge to a purported testamentary instrument that was allegedly revoked in whole or in part by annulment or dissolution of the testator's marriage [see Prob. Code § 6122(a)]. Unlike some of the other grounds for contesting a will, revocation by annulment or dissolution of marriage is frequently stated as the sole ground for a will contest. Optional paragraph D may be used when the will contains provisions giving the spouse powers of appointment or nominating him or her as executor, trustee, conservator, or guardian.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss facts showing that the will passes property to the testator's spouse or confers some power or office on the spouse, and that the testator's marriage has been dissolved or annulled.

This memorandum may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that to the extent that the will relates to the testator's spouse, it was revoked by dissolution or annulment of the testator's marriage. Thus, it may be combined with the points and authorities pertaining to an objection to the admission of a will to probate [see § 186.20] or a petition to revoke probate of a will [see § 186.21].

[b] Nonapplicability to Pre-1985 Dissolutions and Annulments

The provisions of Prob. Code § 6122 relied on in this form do not apply to any case in which the final judgment of dissolution or annulment of marriage occurred before January 1, 1985. Those cases are governed by the law in effect prior to January 1, 1985 [Prob. Code § 6122(f)].

[c] Change of Circumstances That Revoke Will

Except as provided in Prob. Code § 6122.1 regarding revocation of a will by termination of a domestic partnership (see § 186.35), no change of circumstances other than annulment or dissolution of marriage revokes a will (Prob. Code § 6122(e)).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Annulment or Dissolution Revokes Will Provisions Relating to Former Spouse

In Estate of Coleman (2005) 129 Cal. App. 4th 380, 28 Cal. Rptr. 3d 282 , the decedent and his wife created a trust. The trust provided that on the death of the first spouse, the surviving spouse would become the sole trustee and the trust would be divided into a survivor's trust, consisting principally of the surviving spouse's interest in the community estate and his or her separate estate, and a residual trust, consisting of the balance of the trust estate. The surviving spouse was given the power to amend, revoke, or terminate the survivor's trust, but the residual trust could not be amended, revoked, or terminated. The trust also provided that the surviving spouse would receive the income from both trusts, and any requested principal, for his or her lifetime; on the death of the surviving spouse, the residual trust was to be distributed in equal shares to their daughters. The decedent's will gave all of his property to the trust. After execution of the will and the trust, the decedent and his wife dissolved their marriage and divided the property held by the trust under a court order approving their marital settlement agreement. At the time of the marital settlement agreement, the trust property consisted of five parcels of real estate. Under the agreement, two parcels were transferred to the wife as her sole and separate property, and three parcels were transferred to the husband as his sole and separate property.

The decedent's daughters opposed probate of the decedent's will on the ground that it had been revoked by Prob. Code § 6122. The trial court denied the petition to admit the will to probate, finding that the will had the effect of making a disposition of the decedent's property to his ex-wife in contravention of Prob. Code § 6122. The court's order effectively transferred the properties from the trust to the separate property estate of each spouse, revoked the trust, and caused the devise to the trust to lapse under Prob. Code § 6300 (129 Cal. App. 4th 380, 386-387) .

The court of appeal reversed the trial court's order. It held that the decedent and his ex-wife revoked the trust by conveying their interests in the trust property to each other individually, leaving no property in the trust. This revocation caused the decedent's devise to the trust to lapse under Prob. Code § 6300. However, a devise will not lapse under that section if the will provides otherwise. In this case, the decedent's will provided that in the event of a lapse of the devise to the trust, his estate was to be given to the trustee of the trust to be administered and distributed under the terms of the trust document, which was incorporated in the will. This provision had the effect of establishing a testamentary trust, the terms of which were identical to the revoked living trust. The trust terms, having been incorporated in the will, were subject to the restrictions set forth in Prob. Code § 6122. That section revokes only those provisions of the will that provide for a disposition of the property to the former spouse or that confer a special power or appointment on the former spouse. It provides a statutory method for distribution of the property: property prevented from passing to a former spouse because of the revocation passes as if the former spouse failed to survive the testator, and other provisions of the will conferring a power or office on the former spouse are to be interpreted as if the former spouse failed to survive the testator. In this case, the provisions of the trust appointing the ex-wife as trustee, granting her a power of appointment, or transferring any property or income from property to her were revoked by Prob. Code § 6122, because the terms of the trust incorporated in the will were required to be administered and distributed as if she had predeceased the decedent. The court directed the property to be distributed under the provision in the trust, incorporated in the will, requiring the property to be divided equally among the decedent's three daughters (129 Cal. App. 4th 380, 388-389) .

In Estate of Reeves (1991) 233 Cal. App. 3d 651, 284 Cal. Rptr. 650 , the testator's second former wife petitioned for probate of the testator's holographic will. The testator's first former wife, as guardian ad litem for her two minor children by the testator, filed a contest based on the fact that the testator was divorced from the second wife at the time of his death. The testator began living with the will proponent in March 1983. A month later, he executed a holographic will leaving his entire estate to her. The proponent kept the will in her possession until the testator's death. She and the testator married in 1984, and subsequently divorced. The judgment of dissolution included a notice stating that the dissolution might automatically change any disposition made by will to a former spouse. After their divorce, the testator and the will proponent continued to live together, sometimes at his residence and sometimes at hers. In addition to keeping separate residences, they kept separate bank accounts. They experienced several periods of breakup and reconciliations. The proponent never showed the holographic will to the testator after she filed it away. She testified that she and the testator discussed having formal wills written, but never did so. The testator died in 1990. The proponent's petition for probate of the holographic will was denied by the trial court pursuant to Prob. Code § 6122, and the proponent appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's order. The appellate court rejected the will proponent's argument that § 6122 applies only to a will drawn in favor of a person who was the testator's spouse at the time the will was drawn. The court noted that the language of the statute was clear and did not support such an interpretation, and that the statute was not, as asserted by the proponent, materially different from Unif. Prob. Code § 2-508, on which Prob. Code § 6122 was modeled (233 Cal. App. 3d 651, 656) . The court rejected authority from other jurisdictions that would restrict the applicability of the statute in the manner urged by the proponent. The court noted that there was a division of authority on the issue, and that California courts ordinarily adopt the construction given a uniform code section by other jurisdictions. It found, however, that the majority of courts which have addressed the question interpret the statute to revoke dispositions to former spouses regardless of whether the decedent was married to the former spouse when the will was executed, and that this was in its opinion the proper view (233 Cal. App. 3d 651) . The clear purpose of the statute is to provide an automatic revocation of provisions in a will in favor of a spouse after a marriage is dissolved. The legislature obviously recognized that due to the change in the family structure new moral duties and obligations may have evolved subsequent to the execution of the will, and that due to the turmoil of a dissolution an automatic revocation is in the best interest of the testator. The purpose of protecting the testator who neglects to change his or her will following a divorce or annulment is no less compelling where the decedent executes the will in question before the marriage (233 Cal. App. 3d 651, 658) . The court noted that the testator was given an opportunity to execute a will in favor of the proponent by the notice contained in the dissolution judgment, but chose not to do so (233 Cal. App. 3d 651, 659) .

[b] What Constitutes Dissolution or Annulment

The phrase "dissolution or annulment" as it is used in Prob. Code § 6122 means any dissolution or annulment which would exclude the spouse as a surviving spouse within the meaning of Prob. Code § 78 [Prob. Code § 6122(d)]. Under Prob. Code § 78, "surviving spouse" does not include any of the following:

- A person whose marriage to the decedent has been dissolved or annulled, unless, by virtue of a subsequent marriage, the person is married to the decedent at the time of death.

- A person who obtains or consents to a final decree or judgment of dissolution of marriage from the decedent or a final decree or judgment of annulment of their marriage, which decree or judgment is not recognized as valid in California, unless they subsequently participate in a marriage ceremony purporting to marry each to the other or subsequently live together as husband and wife.

- A person who, following a decree or judgment of dissolution or annulment of marriage obtained by the decedent, participates in a marriage ceremony with a third person.

- A person who was a party to a valid proceeding concluded by an order purporting to terminate all marital property rights.

A decree of legal separation which does not terminate the status of husband and wife is not a dissolution for purposes of Prob. Code § 6122 [Prob. Code § 6122(d)].

[c] Annulment or Dissolution Revokes Will Provisions Relating to Children of Former Spouse

Although Prob. Code § 6122 does not address the effect of dissolution on bequests to children of the former spouse, the courts have held that, unless a contrary intention is indicated in the will, it is generally presumed that a testator intends to exclude the children of an ex-spouse from taking under the will [Estate of Jones (2004) 122 Cal. App. 4th 326, 332, 18 Cal. Rptr. 3d 637 (residuary bequest to adult step-daughter was revoked by her mother's dissolution from testator); Estate of Hermon (1995) 39 Cal. App. 4th 1525, 1531-1532, 46 Cal. Rptr. 2d 577 (court called on legislature to adopt provision similar to that set forth in Uniform Probate Code, which provides that dissolution revokes not only testamentary bequests to former spouse but also bequests to former spouse's relatives)]. Evidence showing that the testator continued to have a relationship with the child of a former spouse following dissolution may show an intent by the testator to continue to have the child take under the will [Estate of Jones (2004) 122 Cal. App. 4th 326, 332] .

18-186 California Points & Authorities § 186.35

§ 186.35 Supporting Contest of Will--Grounds for Contest--Will Revoked by Termination of Domestic Partnership [Prob. Code § 6122.1]

[1] FORM

[The following should be combined with general points and authorities supporting a will contest or a petition to revoke probate of a will (see §§ 186.20 and 186.21), or may be used in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE [PROVISIONS IN THE] _____ [WILL or CODICIL] _____ [DEVISING PROPERTY TO THE TESTATOR'S FORMER DOMESTIC PARTNER and/or CONFERRING A _____ (GENERAL or SPECIAL) POWER OF APPOINTMENT IN THE TESTATOR'S FORMER DOMESTIC PARTNER and/or NOMINATING THE TESTATOR'S FORMER DOMESTIC PARTNER AS _____ (EXECUTOR or TRUSTEE or CONSERVATOR or GUARDIAN)] WAS/WERE REVOKED BY THE TERMINATION OF THE TESTATOR'S DOMESTIC PARTNERSHIP.

A. Termination of Domestic Partnership Revokes Will Provisions Relating to Former Domestic Partner. Unless the will expressly provides otherwise, if after executing a will, the testator's domestic partnership is terminated, the termination revokes: (1) any disposition or appointment of property made by the will to the former domestic partner; (2) any provision of the will conferring a general or special power of appointment on the former domestic partner; and (3) any provision of the will nominating the former domestic partner as executor, trustee, conservator, or guardian (Prob. Code § 6122.1(a)).

[Use if domestic partnership was terminated on or after Jan. 1, 2005, by filing a notice of termination in accordance with Fam. Code § 299(a) :]

B. Domestic Partnership May Be Terminated By Filing Notice In Manner Required By Law. A domestic partnership may be terminated without filing a proceeding for dissolution of domestic partnership by the filing of a Notice of Termination of Domestic Partnership with the Secretary of State if all of the following conditions exist at the time of the filing:

(1) The Notice of Termination of Domestic Partnership is signed by both domestic partners.

(2) There are no children of the relationship of the parties born before or after registration of the domestic partnership or adopted by the parties after registration of the domestic partnership, and neither of the domestic partners, to their knowledge, is pregnant.

(3) The domestic partnership is not more than five years in duration.

(4) Neither party has any interest in real property wherever situated, with the exception of the lease of a residence occupied by either party that (a) does not include an option to purchase, and (b) terminates within one year from the date of filing of the Notice of Termination of Domestic Partnership.

(5) There are no unpaid obligations in excess of the amount described in Family Code Section 2400(a)(6), as adjusted by Family Code Section 2400(b), incurred by either or both of the parties after registration of the domestic partnership, excluding the amount of any unpaid obligation with respect to an automobile.

(6) The total fair market value of community property assets, excluding all encumbrances and automobiles, including any deferred compensation or retirement plan, is less than the amount described in Family Code Section 2400(a)(7), as adjusted by Family Code Section 2400(b), and neither party has separate property assets, excluding all encumbrances and automobiles, in excess of that amount.

(7) The parties have executed an agreement setting forth the division of assets and the assumption of liabilities of the community property, and have executed any documents, title certificates, bills of sale, or other evidence of transfer necessary to effectuate the agreement.

(8) The parties waive any rights to support by the other domestic partner.

(9) The parties have read and understand a brochure prepared by the Secretary of State describing the requirements, nature, and effect of terminating a domestic partnership.

(10) Both parties desire that the domestic partnership be terminated.

The domestic partnership is terminated effective six months after the date of filing of the Notice of Termination of Domestic Partnership with the Secretary of State. [Fam. Code § 299(a), (b)].

[OR, if domestic partnership was terminated by a judicial proceeding, in accordance with Fam. Code § 299(d) :]

B. Domestic Partnership May Be Terminated By Court Proceeding. The dissolution of a domestic partnership, nullity of a domestic partnership, or legal separation of partners in a domestic partnership follows the same procedures, and the partners have the same rights, protections, and benefits, and are subject to the same responsibilities, obligations, and duties, as apply to the dissolution of marriage, nullity of marriage, and legal separation of spouses in a marriage, respectively, [except that proceedings for dissolution, nullity, or legal separation of a domestic partnership registered in California may be filed in the superior courts of this state even if neither domestic partner is a resident of, or maintains a domicile in, the state at the time the proceedings are filed] [Fam. Code § 299(d)].

[CONTINUE]

C. Property Passes as if Former Domestic Partner Failed to Survive Testator. In case of revocation by termination of domestic partnership, property prevented from passing to a former domestic partner because of the termination passes as if the former domestic partner failed to survive the testator (Prob. Code § 6122.1(c)(1)).

[Optional] D. Provisions Conferring Power or Office on Former Domestic Partner Interpreted as if Domestic Partner Failed to Survive Testator. In case of revocation by termination of domestic partnership, provisions of the will conferring some power or office on the former domestic partner will be interpreted as if the former domestic partner failed to survive the testator (Prob. Code § 6122.1(c)(2)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a challenge to a purported testamentary instrument that was allegedly revoked in whole or in part by termination of the testator's domestic partnership [see Prob. Code § 6122.1(a)]. Unlike some of the other grounds for contesting a will, revocation by termination of domestic partnership is likely to be stated as the sole ground for a will contest.

The two alternative versions of Paragraph B specify the valid statutory methods for termination of a domestic partnership, as set out in Fam. Code § 299. If the domestic partnership was terminated by filing a Notice of Termination with the Secretary of State, the first version, which states the statutory prerequisites for termination of a domestic partnership in this manner, should be used [see Fam. Code § 299(a)]. If the domestic partnership was not (or could not be) terminated by filing a Notice of Termination, it could be terminated only by a dissolution, annulment, or legal separation proceeding, in the same manner as a marriage [Fam. Code § 299(d)]. If the domestic partnership was terminated in the latter manner, the second alternative version of Paragraph B should be used. Both versions of Paragraph B assume that the termination occurred on or after January 1, 2005. If it occurred prior to that date, the requirements for termination are different and Paragraph B should be modified accordingly. The pre-2005 termination process, which is generally less formal, is set out in § 186.35[3][a].

Optional paragraph D may be used when the will contains provisions giving the domestic partner powers of appointment or nominating him or her as executor, trustee, conservator, or guardian.

Counsel should insert argument showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss facts showing that the will passes property to the testator's domestic partner or confers some power or office on the domestic partner, and that the testator's domestic partnership has been terminated in accordance with the statutory requirements of Fam. Code § 299.

This memorandum may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that to the extent that the will relates to the testator's domestic partner, it was revoked by termination of the testator's domestic partnership. Thus, it may be combined with the points and authorities pertaining to an objection to the admission of a will to probate [see § 186.20] or a petition to revoke probate of a will [see § 186.21].

[b] Nonapplicability to Wills executed before January 1, 2002

The provisions of Prob. Code § 6122.1 relied on in this form do not apply to any will executed before January 1, 2002 [Prob. Code § 6122.1(d)].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] What Constitutes Termination

Effective January 1, 2005, registered domestic partners have the same rights, protections, and benefits, and are subject to the same responsibilities, obligations, and duties under law, whether they derive from statutes, administrative regulations, court rules, government policies, common law, or any other provisions or sources of law, as are granted to and imposed on spouses [Fam. Code § 297.5(a); see Koebke v. Bernardo Heights County Club (2005) 36 Cal. 4th 824, 837, 845, 31 Cal. Rptr. 3d 565, 115 P.3d 1212 (legislature has made clear its intention in domestic partnership law to substantially equalize status of registered domestic partners and spouses, finding that in light of domestic partnership law, Unruh Act requires businesses to treat registered domestic partners same as spouses); Civ. Code § 51(b) (prohibiting discrimination on basis of marital status or sexual orientation); see also Knight v. Superior Court (2005) 128 Cal. App. 4th 14, 22-31, 26 Cal. Rptr. 3d 687 (domestic partner legislation is not improper legislative amendment of ballot initiative defining marriage as between a man and a woman); Bouley v. Long Beach Memorial Medical Center (2005) 127 Cal. App. 4th 601, 25 Cal. Rptr. 3d 813 (domestic partner has right under Code Civ. Proc. § 377.60 to bring wrongful death action for death of his or her partner); Armijo v. Miles (2005) 127 Cal. App. 4th 1405, 1422-1424, 26 Cal. Rptr. 3d 623 (giving domestic partner right to bring wrongful death action for death of his or her partner does not violate Fam. Code § 308.5, which specifies that only marriage between a man and a woman is valid or recognized in California)]. A surviving registered domestic partner, following the other partner's death, has the same rights, protections, and benefits, and is subject to the same responsibilities, obligations, and duties under law, as are granted to and imposed on a widow or widower [Fam. Code § 297.5(c)]. To couples who meet the requirements of establishing a domestic partnership under the Domestic Partner Act and who have registered under that law, the legislature has granted legal recognition comparable to marriage, both procedurally and in terms of the substantive rights and obligations granted to and imposed on the partners, which are supported by policy considerations similar to those favoring marriage. These rights and responsibilities are not shared by couples who cohabit or who have not registered as domestic partners [Koebke v. Bernardo Heights Country Club (2005) 36 Cal. 4th 824, 837, 845, 31 Cal. Rptr. 3d 565, 115 P.3d 1212] .

However, the legislation granting these rights is not intended to repeal or adversely affect any other ways in which relationships between adults may be recognized or given effect in California, or the legal consequences of those relationships, including, among other things civil marriage, enforcement of palimony agreements, enforcement of powers of attorney, appointment of conservators or guardians, and petitions for second parent or limited consent adoption [Stats. 2003, Ch. 421, § 2].

As of January 1, 2005, a domestic partnership may be terminated by filing a Notice of Termination of Domestic Partnership with the Secretary of State, provided all of the conditions specified in the first alternative Paragraph B of this form exist at the time of the filing [Fam. Code § 299(a)]. A registered domestic partnership is terminated six months after the date the Notice of Termination is filed [Fam. Code § 299(b)].

After January 1, 2005, a domestic partnership that does not meet the conditions for filing a valid Notice of Termination may only be terminated by an action for dissolution of the domestic partnership, nullity of the domestic partnership, or legal separation of the partners [Fam. Code § 299(c), (d)].

Prior to January 1, 2005, a domestic partnership was terminated when any of the following occurred [Fam Code § 299(a); see Fam. Code § 299.3(a) (notice regarding rights and responsibilities of domestic partners); Stats. 2003, ch. 421 § 14]:

- One partner gave or sent notice by certified mail to the other partner a written notice that he or she was terminating the partnership.

- One of the domestic partners died.

- One of the domestic partners married.

- The domestic partners no longer had a common residence.

On termination of a domestic partnership prior to January 1, 2005, at least one former partner was required to mail a completed Notice of Termination of Domestic Partnership to the Secretary of State by certified mail. If the domestic partnership was terminated because of the death or marriage of a domestic partner, the termination date of the domestic partnership was the date indicated on the Notice of Termination of Domestic Partnership form. Otherwise, the date on which the Notice of Termination of Domestic Partnership was received by the Secretary of State is deemed the actual termination date of the domestic partnership [Fam. Code § 299(b)].

[The following should be combined with a general memorandum of points and authorities supporting a petition to revoke probate of a will (see § 186.21), or may be used in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE PETITION TO REVOKE PROBATE WAS TIMELY FILED BECAUSE _____ [specify, e.g., IT WAS FILED WITHIN 120 DAYS AFTER THE WILL WAS ADMITTED TO PROBATE].

A. Time Limit for Petition to Revoke. A person may petition to revoke a will within 120 days after the will has been admitted to probate (Prob. Code § 8270(a)).

[Optional] B. Revocation by Minor or Incompetent Person. [See § 186.21, Paragraph B.]

[Optional] C. Probate Order Procured by Extrinsic Fraud May Be Set Aside After Time Limit for Petition to Revoke. An order admitting a will to probate may be set aside after the 120-day period allowed for a petition to revoke (see Prob. Code § 8270) if there was extrinsic fraud in the procurement of the probate order (Estate of Sanders (1985) 40 Cal. 3d 607, 613-614, 221 Cal. Rptr. 432, 710 P.2d 232 (construing former Prob. Code § 380); see Prob. Code §§ 8007, 8226(a)).

[Optional] D. Doubts Concerning Timeliness Should Be Resolved in Favor of Allowing Contest. Doubts concerning the timeliness of a petition to revoke, based on confusion as to the actual date the will was admitted to probate, should be resolved in favor of allowing the contest (Wolfson v. Superior Court (1976) 60 Cal. App. 3d 153, 160, 131 Cal. Rptr. 265).

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a petition to revoke probate of a will when the party seeking probate asserts that the petition was not timely filed [see Prob. Code § 8270(a)]. Optional Paragraph B should be used if the contest is brought by a minor or incompetent who had no guardian or conservator at the time the will was admitted to probate [see Prob. Code § 8270(b)]. Optional Paragraph C may be used if an order admitting a will to probate was the result of extrinsic fraud. Optional Paragraph D may be used if there is an issue concerning the actual date the will was admitted to probate.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, if counsel wishes to argue that an order admitting a will to probate was procured by fraud, counsel should discuss facts showing that extrinsic and collateral fraud prevented the petitioner from presenting his or her case to the court at the hearing on the petition to administer the estate [see Estate of Sanders (1985) 40 Cal. 3d 607, 614, 221 Cal. Rptr. 432, 710 P.2d 232] .

This memorandum should be combined with the procedural points and authorities pertaining specifically to a petition to revoke probate of a will [see § 186.21]. This memorandum may also be combined with points and authorities setting forth one or more substantive grounds for challenging a purported will [see §§ 186.22 -186.34].

[b] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 186.62 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Probate Order Procured by Extrinsic Fraud May Be Set Aside After Time Limit for Petition to Revoke

In Estate of Sanders (1985) 40 Cal. 3d 607, 221 Cal. Rptr. 432, 710 P.2d 232 , decedent, a conservatee, had a holographic will leaving her entire estate to her son, Gary, who was also decedent's conservator. After Gary subsequently died, his sons were entitled to receive decedent's estate by right of representation. Respondent, decedent's nephew, was appointed decedent's conservator and subsequently had decedent execute another will, leaving respondent an interest in real property that was the bulk of her estate and making him trustee of a testamentary trust for decedent's grandsons (Gary's sons). Respondent told petitioner (Gary's widow) that decedent had executed a new will, but stated that this was done only to put the old one in "proper legal form." After decedent died, respondent did not respond to petitioner's specific inquiries about decedent's estate, but repeatedly assured her that he would take care of everything. Decedent's will was admitted to probate and the 120-day period for contesting it expired [see Prob. Code § 8270(a)]. Thereafter, petitioner began receiving financial statements from a bank regarding the estate. Noticing that the statements did not list decedent's real property, petitioner attempted, unsuccessfully, to contact respondent. After receiving a notice of hearing on a petition for distribution, petitioner finally reached respondent, whereby respondent evaded her questions, assured her that there were "no problems" and that there was no need for her to attend the hearing, and eventually admitted that he had arranged for decedent to leave the property to him. Petitioner appeared at the hearing on the final distribution to orally contest the petition, arguing that respondent's misrepresentations and concealment constituted extrinsic fraud. The court rejected the contest, and entered a decree of final distribution awarding respondent an interest in the real property. Petitioner then moved to set aside the order, again claiming extrinsic fraud. The trial court denied the motion.

The California Supreme Court reversed, noting that although petitions to revoke must be brought within 120 days after the will is admitted to probate [see Prob. Code § 8270(a)], it is well settled that on proof of extrinsic and collateral fraud a plaintiff can secure equitable relief from a judgment admitting a will to probate. The Court stated that extrinsic fraud is "a broad concept that tends to encompass almost any set of extrinsic circumstances which deprive a party of a fair adversary hearing" [quoting In re Marriage of Modnick (1983) 33 Cal. 3d 897, 905, 191 Cal. Rptr. 629, 663 P.2d 187 ; see also United States v. Throckmorton (1878) 98 U.S. 61, 65-66, 25 L. Ed. 93 (defining extrinsic fraud)]. It noted that the clearest examples of extrinsic fraud are in cases in which the aggrieved party is kept in ignorance of the proceeding or is in some other way induced not to appear (40 Cal. 3d 607, 614) . The Court added that relief from judgment is particularly likely when fraud is a violation of a special or fiduciary relationship (40 Cal. 3d 607, 615) . According to petitioner's uncontroverted affidavit, she and her sons relied on respondent to protect the their interests from the time respondent became decedent's conservator. The Court stated that petitioner's reliance was reasonable in light of the family relationship and respondent's repeated assurances that he was looking out for their interests. Furthermore, respondent also had a fiduciary duty to petitioner and her sons because he was executor of the estate. The Court found that respondent violated his confidential and fiduciary relationship through "a consistent course of concealment and misrepresentation." These actions, plus respondent's advice that petitioner need not become involved in the probate proceedings, clearly established extrinsic fraud (40 Cal. 3d 607, 616-619) .

[b] Doubts Concerning Timeliness Should Be Resolved in Favor of Allowing Contest

In Wolfson v. Superior Court (1976) 60 Cal. App. 3d 153, 131 Cal. Rptr. 265 , on January 13, 1975, a court held a hearing on a petition for probate and issued a minute order on a printed form that was apparently prepared by one of the parties. The form contained five boxes, opposite five possible actions to be taken by the court. Handwritten check marks appeared in the three boxes labeled "petition granted," "will and codicils admitted," and "no bond." The form also set forth the title of the case, the nature of the proceedings, the names of the court personnel and of the petitioner and her attorneys, and the statement "order to be prepared by _____ attorney." The written order was filed on January 23, 1975, on another printed form. This form noted that the hearing was held on January 13, but did not indicate that any decision was announced or made on that date or on any other date except January 23. The letters testamentary, executed by the clerk on January 24, 1975, contained no indication of when the court admitted the will. Apparently, no minute entry was made to reflect the execution of the January 23 order. A petition to revoke the will was filed on May 14, 1975. The executor of the will demurred to the petition, on the ground that the petition was brought more than four months after the will was admitted to probate [see former Prob. Code § 380]. The trial court overruled the executor's demurrer, and the executor sought a writ of prohibition to restrain the trial court from hearing the contestant's petition.

The court of appeal denied the writ, relying on the rule that "when there exists a clear conflict between the permanent minutes of the court and a formal order issued by it relative to the date of an order denying a motion for a new trial, that conflict is to be resolved in favor of granting the right of appeal" [quoting Hollister Convalescent Hospital, Inc. v. Rico (975) 15 Cal. 3d 660, 665, 125 Cal. Rptr. 757, 542 P.2d 1349] . The court stated that this language was applicable to petitions to revoke, since the time limit for such a petition and the time limit for filing an appeal are both jurisdictional matters (60 Cal. App. 3d 153, 160) . The court acknowledged that trial courts sometimes make minute entries which operate only as notice of an intended decision, but stated that it could not construe the January 13 minutes, which complied with statutory requirements for admitting a will to probate by minute order [see former Prob. Code §§ 332, 1221], as other than a record of a judicial decision that had been made on that day. However, the contestants were told by an order signed by the judge and filed by the court that the date of the order was January 23 (60 Cal. App. 3d 153, 159) . The use of the present tense, and the absence of any disclosure that the decision had actually been made and recorded in the January 13 minutes, necessarily implied that the crucial date was January 23 (60 Cal. App. 3d 153, 159-160) .

§ 186.37 Supporting Contest of Will--Procedural Requirements--Contestant Has Standing to Contest Will [Prob. Code §§ 1043, 8004(b), 8250(a), 8270(a)]

[1] FORM

[The following should be combined with a general form of memorandum of points and authorities supporting a will contest or a petition to revoke probate of a will (see §§ 186.20 and 186.21), or may be used in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE CONTESTANT HAS STANDING TO CONTEST THE WILL AS AN INTERESTED PERSON BECAUSE HE/SHE IS _____ [specify, e.g., AN HEIR AT LAW OF THE DECEDENT].

A. Interested Person May Object to Will. [See § 186.20, Paragraph A.]

B. "Interested Person" Defined. An interested person is one who has an interest that may be impaired or defeated by the probate of the will, or benefitted by setting it aside (Estate of Plaut (1945) 27 Cal. 2d 424, 425-426, 164 P.2d 765 ; Estate of Lind (1989) 209 Cal. App. 3d 1424, 1430-1431, 257 Cal. Rptr. 853 ; see Prob. Code § 48 (defining "interested person")).

[Optional] C. Heir at Law May Be "Interested Person." An heir at law of the decedent may contest a will if invalidating the will would provide the heir with an interest in the estate (Estate of Powers (1979) 91 Cal. App. 3d 715, 719-720, 154 Cal. Rptr. 366 ; see Prob. Code § 48(a)).

[Optional] D. Beneficiary Under Prior Will May Be "Interested Person." A beneficiary under an earlier will that would be entitled to probate if the contested will is declared invalid is an interested party and may contest the later will without first obtaining probate of the earlier will (Estate of Lane (1970) 7 Cal. App. 3d 402, 405-406, 86 Cal. Rptr. 620).

[Optional] E. Beneficiary Under Destroyed Will May Be "Interested Person." The term "interested person" includes one interested under a prior will that has been fraudulently destroyed Estate of Arbuckle (1950) 98 Cal. App. 2d 562, 566, 220 P.2d 950).

[Optional] F. Beneficiary Under Later Will May Be "Interested Person." A beneficiary under a later will may be an interested party for the purposes of contest if the requisite impairment of, or benefit to, his or her interest has been established (Estate of Powers (1979) 91 Cal. App. 3d 715, 722-726, 154 Cal. Rptr. 366).

[Optional G. Executor May Contest Subsequent Will. An executor may contest a subsequent will, even if the executor does not have a beneficial interest in the estate (Jay v. Superior Court (1970) 10 Cal. App. 3d 754, 758, 89 Cal. Rptr. 466)].

[Optional] H. Interested Person's Personal Representative May Contest Will. A representative of the estate of a decedent who had grounds to contest a will may initiate a contest (Prob. Code § 48(a)(3); Estate of Field (1951) 38 Cal. 2d 151, 155, 238 P.2d 578).

[Optional] I. Heir's Judgment Lien Creditor May Contest Will. A judgment lien creditor of an heir at law may bring a will contest (Estate of Harootenian (1951) 38 Cal. 2d 242, 249, 238 P.2d 992 ; see Prob. Code § 48(a)(1)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be used when the party seeking probate alleges that a person lacks standing to challenge a purported testamentary instrument [see Prob. Code §§ 48, 1043(a)]. Any or all of Optional Paragraphs C through I may be used, depending on who the contestant is.

This memorandum may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which the issue of standing arises. Thus, it may be combined with the points and authorities pertaining to an objection to the admission of a will to probate [see § 186.20] or a petition to revoke probate of a will [see § 186.21]. This memorandum also may be combined with points and authorities setting forth one or more substantive grounds for challenging a purported will [see §§ 186.22 -186.34].

[b] "Interested Person" Defined

An "interested person" includes any of the following [Prob. Code § 48(a)]:

- An heir, devisee, child, spouse, creditor, beneficiary, and any other person having a property right in or claim against a trust estate or the estate of a decedent which may be affected by the proceeding.
- Any person having priority for appointment as personal representative.
- A fiduciary representing an interested person.

The meaning of "interested person" as it relates to particular persons may vary from time to time, and provides that the meaning of the term will be determined according to the particular purposes of, and matter involved in, any proceeding [Prob. Code § 48(b)].

[c] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 186.63 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] "Interested Person" Defined

In Estate of Plaut (1945) 27 Cal. 2d 424, 164 P.2d 765 , decedent's granddaughter contested decedent's will on the ground that a codicil leaving $15,000 to the decedent's nurse was obtained through undue influence. The nurse demurred on the ground that the granddaughter was not an interested person, and was therefore not entitled to contest the will. The nurse argued that a trust established by the will violated the rule against perpetuities because the trust income was to go to the decedent's daughter and sole heir during her life, then to her children after her death, and then the trust corpus was to go to the children in increments when they reached specified ages. The trial court dismissed the granddaughter's contest for lack of standing, and she appealed.

The California Supreme Court reversed, holding that a person who has an interest that may be impaired or defeated by the probate of the will, or benefitted by setting the will aside, is an interested person for the purpose of standing to contest a will (27 Cal. 2d 424, 425-426) . The Court explained that courts are ordinarily not to construe the will as a prerequisite to a will contest. It noted that if it were to do so in the instant case it would be determining the validity of the trust at the request of a person not interested in the trust (the nurse), without having heard all the persons interested in it (27 Cal. 2d 424, 427) . The Court found it unnecessary to pass on the validity of the trust to determine whether the granddaughter had a sufficient interest to contest the will. The situation was analogous to one in which a beneficiary under an earlier will contests a later one without first obtaining probate of the former. Several decisions had upheld the beneficiary's right to contest the second will in such a case on a prima facie showing of interest. The Court noted that a will contest is not an end in itself, but merely the first in a series of proceedings by which the contestant seeks to have his or her claim to all or part of the estate adjudicated. If the Court allowed the nurse to raise the issue of the validity of the trust, it would in effect prevent the granddaughter from initiating the first of these proceedings unless she established at the onset the very right she sought to establish in the final proceeding. Although courts should not be forced to adjudicate the rights of persons whose interests have not even the appearance of validity or substance, they should not deny a hearing to a person who has at least established a prima facie interest in an estate (27 Cal. 2d 424, 427-428) . To establish standing, a will contestant is not required to prove that his or her interest will in fact be impaired by probate of the will, but only that it may be (27 Cal. 2d 424, 429) .

In Estate of Lind (1989) 209 Cal. App. 3d 1424, 257 Cal. Rptr. 853 , decedent's foster brother contested decedent's will on the ground that it had been obtained by the undue influence of decedent's attorney, who together with two of decedent's friends were the only beneficiaries named in the will. Decedent's parents took in the contestant shortly after his birth. The contestant lived with the parents until he joined the military at age 22. His relationship with the family continued throughout the parents' lifetimes, and the parents always referred to the contestant as their son. Around the time the contestant joined the military, the parents made an unsuccessful effort to formally adopt him. The nature of the legal barrier preventing the adoption was not known. The contestant stated that he had discovered only when he was about 60 that the adoption had never been completed. He produced two letters written by one of his foster siblings to another, in which the writer stated that the adoption had been completed. He also produced a sworn affidavit executed by the decedent five years before her death, in which she stated that her parents had made out some adoption papers around the time the foster brother was drafted, but that she didn't know "whether that was anything other than an affidavit or a court adoption." The attorney and the other proponents sought dismissal of the contest on the ground that the contestant lacked standing to contest the will. The trial court sustained the proponents' demurrer without leave to amend.

The court of appeal reversed, noting that the contestant had the burden of proving his standing to contest the will (209 Cal. App. 3d 1424, 1435) . The court held that the allegation that the decedent's parents would have adopted him but for a legal barrier was an allegation of ultimate fact and therefore sufficient to establish a prima facie case of standing (209 Cal. App. 3d 1424, 1434) . In addition, the court found that the doctrine of liberal construction of pleadings should be employed to aid the foster brother. Liberal allowances for pleading are especially appropriate when upholding a weak pleading will avoid a possible gross miscarriage of justice. According to the court, allowing an attorney without challenge to write himself into an elderly client's will as a major beneficiary and executor would be a possible gross miscarriage of justice (209 Cal. App. 3d 1424, 1435) . The court noted that the term "legal barrier" is not a term of art and carries no meaning beyond the plain meaning of the words. It stated that the term should therefore be interpreted broadly in the spirit of the policy that calls for a liberal interpretation of adoption laws in the best interests of the adopted person. Thus, the foster brother should be given an opportunity to present evidence to support his claim of standing. The court also noted that if the foster brother were able to demonstrate by clear and convincing evidence that the decedent's parents would have adopted him at the time when they prepared the adoption papers, the statutory prohibition against adult adoptions in effect at that time would constitute a sufficient legal barrier to the adoption (209 Cal. App. 3d 1424, 1436) .

[b] Heir at Law May Be "Interested Person"

In Estate of Powers (1979) 91 Cal. App. 3d 715, 154 Cal. Rptr. 366 , the court noted that an heir-at-law of the decedent is an "interested person" for purposes of a will contest. However, an allegation that one is an heir is not enough to establish that one will be benefited if the will is set aside, unless it is also alleged in the pleadings or clear from the record that a successful attack on the purported will would result in intestacy (91 Cal. App. 3d 715, 719-722) .

[c] Beneficiary Under Prior Will May Be "Interested Person"

In Estate of Lane (1970) 7 Cal. App. 3d 402, 86 Cal. Rptr. 620 , contestants, who were not related to the decedent nor to her predeceased husband, sought to establish standing to contest the will offered for probate by showing that they were the sole beneficiaries of a prior will executed by the decedent. The appellate court affirmed the trial court's order dismissing the will contest based on the contestants' admission that they could not produce the original will, but only a copy, and that they had no evidence that this will was in existence at the time of the decedent's death or that it had been lost or fraudulently destroyed during the decedent's lifetime. The court noted that because the contestants were not related to the decedent or to her precedeased husband, their standing as "interested persons" must rest on the prior will under which they were the sole beneficiaries. It also noted that a trial court may require proof of a contestant's interest or standing before proceeding with the trial of the contest. To establish status as "interested persons," with standing to contest the will offered for probate, the contestants were required to make a prima facie showing that they could prove the earlier will was lost or fraudulently destroyed. Because they could not produce the original will, could not prove the will was in existence at the time of the decedent's death, and could not establish that it was lost or fraudulently destroyed during the decedent's lifetime, the prior will could not be admitted to probate, was wholly inoperative, and cannot become the vehicle by which the contestants achieve standing to contest the later will (7 Cal. App. 3d 402, 405-407) .

[d] Beneficiary Under Destroyed Will May Be "Interested Person"

In Estate of Arbuckle (1950) 98 Cal. App. 2d 562, 220 P.2d 950 , decedent's son-in-law filed a petition to revoke probate of a will on the grounds of testamentary incapacity and undue influence. The son-in-law was a beneficiary under an allegedly destroyed earlier will. The proponent of the will admitted to probate was decedent's niece and the sole beneficiary and executor named in that will. After the son-in-law's opening statement and before the presentation of any evidence, the niece moved to dismiss the proceeding on the ground that the son-in-law was not an interested person. The opening statement showed that the son-in-law was prepared to prove that the decedent duly executed an earlier will, which was prepared by a Mr. Bell, in 1933. The son-in-law was the primary beneficiary under the will prepared by Mr.

Bell. Mr. Bell kept the will, and a codicil executed about a year later, in his office. In 1939, decedent executed the will that was admitted to probate. At that time she was under the care of the niece and the niece's parents. Soon after the execution of the 1939 will, they notified Mr. Bell that his services as the decedent's manager were no longer needed. Four or five years later, Mr. Bell destroyed the earlier will as part of a routine cleaning out of his files. The decedent was by this time in a sanitarium, and Mr. Bell assumed that his relationship with her had been terminated. After hearing the son-in-law's opening statement, the trial court granted the motion for dismissal of the contest. The son-in-law appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, stating that the son-in-law made a sufficient showing in his opening statement that he was an interested person entitled to contest the later will. On the issue of the son-in-law's standing, the appellate court held that the term "interested person" includes one interested under a prior will which has been fraudulently destroyed. In a petition to revoke, the main issue to be adjudicated is the validity of the will admitted to probate, not the absolute validity of an earlier will under which the son-in-law claims. Therefore, a prima facie showing of the son-in-law's interest is sufficient to establish standing (98 Cal. App. 2d 562, 566) . When the son-in-law alleges that the prior will is destroyed, he or she must also make a prima facie showing that the will can be established as a destroyed will. The court noted that no inference regarding the destruction of the earlier will by the testator with intent to revoke was raised by the son-in-law's opening argument, since the will was not last seen or known to exist in the possession of the decedent. It was undeniable, on the facts stated, that the decedent did not destroy or direct the destruction of the earlier will. Destruction of a will by someone other than the testator, not done in the testator's presence, and done without the testator's direction, does not revoke the will. A duly executed will continues to exist as a will, regardless of the destruction of the paper it is written on, so long as it is not revoked in the manner and by the means prescribed by statute (98 Cal. App. 2d 562, 567) . Regarding the niece's contention that the will was not "fraudulently destroyed," the appellate court found that Mr. Bell's action in destroying the will without the knowledge and consent of the decedent amounted to actual fraud even though Mr. Bell was acting in good faith (98 Cal. App. 2d 562, 568-569) .

[e] Beneficiary Under Later Will May Be "Interested Person"

In Estate of Powers (1979) 91 Cal. App. 3d 715, 154 Cal. Rptr. 366 , the court noted that a potential legatee or devisee under a valid will executed by the decedent before or after the will offered for probate has a sufficient interest in the probate to file a will contest. The court may require the contestant to demonstrate his or her interest in the estate before proceeding with the merits of the will contest. This demonstration should be made in a separate hearing on the issue or on a motion for summary judgment. The burden on the contestant in any hearing on the issue of standing is substantial (91 Cal. App. 3d 715, 722-725) .

[f] Executor May Contest Subsequent Will

In Jay v. Superior Court (1970) 10 Cal. App. 3d 754, 89 Cal. Rptr. 466 , an executor named in the decedent's will filed a contest challenging a codicil to the will that named a different executor, but made no other change in the will. The alleged grounds for the contest were that at the time the codicil was executed the decedent was not of sound mind and was under the undue influence of various individuals. The will contest was dismissed on the ground that the executor was not an "interested person" and thus lacked standing to contest the will. The appellate court began its review of the trial court proceedings by noting that the right of an interested person to contest a will is fundamentally based on the loss of property or property rights resulting from the recognition of an invalid instrument. A will contest is essentially an action for the recovery of property unlawfully taken or about to be taken from the ownership of the contestant. The court noted that it is well settled that an executor who is named in a will that has been offered for probate has the right to oppose or resist a contest to this will. An executor may also contest a subsequent will even if the executor does not have a beneficial interest in the estate. This right is not based on any pecuniary interest of the executor in the distribution of the estate, but is instead based on the theory that the executor represents those who would be entitled to the estate under the will in which he or she is named as executor and, in a representative capacity, has the right to see that the testator's wishes are not thwarted by admission to probate of a testamentary instrument that is not genuine. In this case, the contestant's only legal interest in the estate is serving as executor and receiving administration fees for such services; the contestant has not shown how the object and intent of the testator will be thwarted by the provisions of the codicil. Under court supervision, the testator's property must be distributed in accordance with the provisions of the will irrespective of who serves as executor. Therefore, the contestant is not an "interested person" for purposes of bringing a will contest (10 Cal. App. 3d 754, 757-759) .

[g] Interested Person's Personal Representative May Contest Will

In Estate of Field (1951) 38 Cal. 2d 151, 238 P.2d 578 , a husband predeceased his wife by six months and the executor of the wife's estate filed a petition to revoke the husband's will based on nonexecution, testamentary incapacity, and undue influence. The will gave the husband's entire estate to the wife during her life, and after her death gave the house to two friends and the residue to the Shriners Hospital. The court sustained, without leave to amend, a demurrer to the contest made by the executor and beneficiaries named under the will on the ground that the executor of the wife's estate had no standing to contest the will. The executor of the wife's estate appealed.

The California Supreme Court held that the wife was an interested person entitled to contest the probate of her husband's will, that her right of contest survived her death, and that her personal representative had standing to prosecute the contest. The Court stated that the right of contest survives under the statutes of California since it is a thing in action arising out of the violation of a right of property. The right does not depend on the commencement of the contest during the contestant's life. So long as the right survives as a right of property, the result may not be made to depend on whether the contest was commenced before the owner of the right died (246 Cal. 2d 151, 155) .

[h] Heir's Judgment Lien Creditor May Contest Will

Estate of Harootenian (1951) 38 Cal. 2d 242, 238 P.2d 992 , involved a petition to revoke by the separated spouse of one of the decedent's children. The spouse claimed an interest in the estate as a creditor of the decedent's son, her husband, against whom she had obtained a judgment for unpaid child support. The trial court sustained the demurrer of the decedent's children and dismissed the contest on certain procedural grounds. The spouse appealed.

The California Supreme Court reversed, stating that it was a settled point of law that an interested person is one who has an interest of a pecuniary nature which may be impaired or defeated by the probate of the will or benefitted by setting it aside. That interest is not necessarily confined to that of an heir who would take by succession if the will were set aside, nor is it necessary that the impairment or benefit be established as a certainty. The Court found that authorities generally agree that a general creditor of a disinherited heir has no sufficient interest to contest the will, and that there must have been created some right or interest in the creditor which will attach to the property on devolution to the heir if the will is declared invalid. Citing the "interested person" provisions of the Probate Code, as well as various treatises and out-of-state cases, the Court found that a judgment creditor who has perfected a lien at the time the property would devolve to the heir is an interested person who may contest the will. The Court noted that the decedent's estate included real property, and that a judgment lien may be established against real property by the filing and recording of an abstract of the judgment. Therefore, the spouse should be given an opportunity to amend her pleading to bring herself within the class of judgment lien creditors (38 Cal. 2d 242, 249-251) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Heir at Law May Be "Interested Person"

In Estate of Butzow (1937) 21 Cal. App. 2d 96, 68 P.2d 374 , a person claiming to be decedent's cousin and sole heir at law filed an after-probate will contest. Another person, who also claimed to be decedent's cousin and sole heir at law, obtained permission from the court to intervene in the contest. The executor and one of the beneficiaries under the will moved to strike the second contestant's pleading on the ground that it was sham and irrelevant, and demurred to both contestants' petitions on various grounds, including standing. The trial court granted the motions and sustained the demurrers. The second contestant appealed.

The court of appeal reversed the trial court's order as to the demurrers, and ordered the trial court to determine whether the contestants were interested persons for purposes of contesting a will. Any person who institutes or attempts to join a will contest must be an interested person under the probate law, and the court may require a contestant to establish this fact before proceeding with the trial of the contest. However, as a matter of pleading, it is only necessary that the contestant allege that he or she is an heir at law of the decedent (21 Cal. App. 2d 96, 99) .

[b] Beneficiary Under Prior Will May Be "Interested Person"

In Estate of Munfrey (1948) 61 Cal. App. 2d 565, 143 P.2d 414 , decedent's grandchildren filed a petition to revoke probate of decedent's will on the grounds of testamentary incapacity and undue influence. The grandchildren were not decedent's heirs at law since their father, decedent's son, was living. The petition to revoke alleged that the decedent had substantially provided for the contestants in an earlier will. It alleged that the exact date of the earlier will was not known, but that it was executed before the will that was admitted to probate and was in existence when decedent died. The contestants did not produce the earlier will or offer it for probate. The executor and certain beneficiaries under the will admitted to probate demurred to the contest. The trial court sustained their demurrers without leave to amend, and the grandchildren appealed.

The court of appeal reversed and directed the trial court to grant the contestants a reasonable time to amend their petition in order to cure certain uncertainties and other curable defects. The appellate court stated that there is no express provision in the Probate Code supporting the will proponents' argument that contestants may not rely on an earlier will under which they are beneficiaries to establish their interest to contest a later will without producing the earlier will and offering it for probate. Relying on Estate of Phillips (1927) 202 Cal. 490, 498, 261 P. 709 , the court held that the will relied on by the contestants to establish their interest need not be produced by them and offered for probate as a condition to their right to contest the validity of the later will. The court explained that this rule protects the rights of the beneficiaries under an earlier will in cases in which the will was secreted or wrongfully withheld from them. It is possible that contestants who are unable to produce the earlier will at the time their contest is filed may, with the benefit of the process of the court to summon all necessary witnesses and compel the production of the earlier will, prove their interest under the earlier will at trial. The court also pointed out that since a demurrer admits all of the allegations of the petition, the will proponents were prevented from denying the grandchildren's claims concerning the earlier will in their demurrer (61 Cal. App. 2d 565, 568) .

[c] Beneficiary Under Later Will May Be "Interested Person"

Estate of O'Brien (1966) 246 Cal. App. 2d 788, 55 Cal. Rptr. 343 , involved a petition to revoke filed by a person who was neither an heir at law nor a beneficiary under the will admitted to probate. The contestant alleged that she was the sole beneficiary under a valid holographic will executed by the decedent after the date of the will admitted to probate, that the earlier will was executed under undue influence and without the required formalities, and that the earlier will had been revoked by the decedent. The alleged holographic will stated, in relevant part, "in the event anything happens to me on my way out to Calif. it is my wish that Mrs. L. McGruder [the contestant] receive all my personal holding such as money in commercial account, ring, badge, auto, travelers cheques or anything else she may wish. I fully intend to change will on my arrival there." A beneficiary named in the will admitted to probate, the decedent's sister and sole heir at law, who was the executor of the will, and others, demurred to the contest on various grounds including the contestant's lack of standing to contest the will. The trial court sustained the demurrer with leave to amend. It also sustained a demurrer to the contestant's amended petition, without leave to amend, finding that the contestant was not an interested person and lacked standing to contest the will. The contestant appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that the contestant had established a prima facie showing of impairment of, or benefit to, her interest. Noting that the case was one of first impression in California, the court reviewed the cases permitting beneficiaries under earlier wills to maintain will contests, and stated that there was "generally speaking no essential distinction" between situations involving earlier wills and situations involving later wills. The court stated that there is "no reason why a beneficiary under a later will may not be considered an interested party for purposes of contest if the requisite impairment of, or benefit to, his interest has been established." The court added that it is "obvious that a beneficiary under a later will normally has a pecuniary interest in the devolution of the estate" (246 Cal. App. 2d 788, 793) . By analogy to the cases involving earlier wills, such a contestant should be entitled to contest the earlier will without first offering the later will for probate but merely by making a prima facie showing of his or her interest (246 Cal. App. 2d 788, 795) .

[d] Executor May Contest Subsequent Will

In Estate of Getty (1978) 85 Cal. App. 3d 755, 149 Cal. Rptr. 656 , a contingent trustee of a trust created under a will to hold the residue of the estate filed a petition contesting the final codicil of the will, which eliminated the trust as the recipient of the residue. The petition asserted that the testator lacked testamentary capacity when he executed the codicil or, in the alternative, that he executed the codicil under the undue influence of his close advisers. The appellate court affirmed the trial court's ruling that the contingent trustee under the will was not an "interested person" with standing to contest the validity of the codicil. The court noted that lack of a direct pecuniary interest does not absolutely foreclose an omitted trustee's right to contest the will. A testamentary trustee is the representative of the beneficiaries of the trust and the guardian of their interests and, when appropriate, the trustee may contest a subsequent testamentary instrument that impairs the beneficiaries' pecuniary interests in the estate property. Thus, a trustee's standing to contest a will does not depend strictly on a personal pecuniary interest in the bequeathed property under the prior instrument, but may be made determinate by impairment of the pecuniary rights of the beneficiaries by the probate of the subsequent testamentary document. However, in this case, the effect of the contested change on the beneficiary does not disclose any impairment of the beneficiary's interest as a result of the subsequent codicil. The sole effect of the codicil is to shift control of the assets from a trust under the will to the beneficiary's trustees, thereby enhancing the beneficiary's income by eliminating the sizeable trustee fees of the intermediate trust under the will, which, under earlier codicils, would become payable to the testamentary trustees. The right to control the trust property and to receive statutory fees for administration of the trust do not constitute a sufficient pecuniary interest to give standing to the omitted trustee to contest the codicil without reference to the effect of the subsequent codicil on the beneficiary (85 Cal. App. 3d 755, 758-761) .

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be used to support a demurrer to (1) an objection to a petition for probate of a will, or (2) a petition to revoke probate of a will, filed under Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10 and Prob. Code § 8251(b) or 8271(b). The form is a general one that describes the statutory grounds for demurring to a will contest.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel may wish to show that the facts alleged in a pleading initiating a contest are not sufficient to state a cause of action [see Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e); Estate of Marler (1957) 148 Cal. App. 2d 30, 36-37, 306 P.2d 105] .

This memorandum may be combined with points and authorities discussing the substantive grounds of the challenge to the will. For example, counsel may combine this form with points and authorities addressing the issues of improper execution of a will [see §§ 186.51, 186.52] or undue influence [see § 186.58]. This memorandum may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

For discussion of the effect of a no contest clause in the will, see § 186.05.

[b] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the forms in §§ 186.20 or 186.21 may be used to oppose the contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Will Contest Must State Cause of Action and Meet Pleading Requirements

Estate of Marler (1957) 148 Cal. App. 2d 30, 306 P.2d 105 , involved two objections to a petition for probate (before-probate will contests). One contestant's pleading alleged that: (1) the purported will was not genuine and not the free and voluntary act of the decedent; (2) it was obtained by fraud and undue influence; and (3) the decedent was not of sound mind when the will was executed. The pleading did not mention the relationship of the contestant to the decedent or of the contestant's interest in the estate. The will proponents generally denied the allegations of the contest and particularly alleged that the contestant was not a party in interest or an heir at law of the decedent, but merely the nephew of the deceased husband of the decedent, and sought dismissal of the contest. On the date of the hearing, another contestant filed an answer and joined with the first contestant in contesting probate of the will. The second contestant's pleading was apparently served on the proponents several days earlier. Her grounds for contesting the will were similar to those advanced by the first contestant. The will proponents moved for judgment on the pleadings and to strike the answer of the second contestant, and the first contestant moved to amend his pleadings. The trial court denied the first contestant's motion, entered a judgment against him, and struck the answer of the second contestant.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment on the pleadings as to the first contestant, but reversed the order striking the pleading of the second contestant. The court held that a will contest must contain a statement of facts constituting the contestant's cause of action in ordinary and concise language, and the statement of facts must answer all requirements of the general rules of pleading (148 Cal. App. 2d 30, 36-37) . The contestants claimed that: (1) the proponents waived the ground of lack of standing by not specifically demurring on that ground; (2) the proponents cured any defects in the first contestant's pleadings by answering the pleadings without demurring; (3) the court erred in granting judgment on the pleadings; and (4) the court abused its discretion by not allowing the first contestant to amend his pleading. The court disagreed, finding that: (1) the proponents' answer alleging the first contestant was not an interested party sufficiently raised the question of standing; (2) the burden of alleging sufficient facts as to standing was on the contestants; (3) the proponents' motion for judgment on the pleadings was properly granted since the first contestant's pleading lacked the essential allegation of standing; and (4) the first contestant was apprised of the fact that his interest in the contest was not sufficiently alleged, and took nine months to seek to amend his pleading. Furthermore, it did not appear that the pleading could be amended so as to establish his standing to contest the will. As to the second contestant's pleading, the court determined that the substance of the pleading showed it to be an independent will contest rather than an answer. The court found that the second contestant's pleading was defective in several particulars, including the allegation of legal conclusions rather than supporting facts, but that the provisions concerning undue influence and testamentary incapacity constituted a sufficient pleading. Under these circumstances, te trial court was not authorized to admit he will to probate before the determination of the issues presented (148 Cal. App. 2d 30, 37) .

[The following should be combined with a general memorandum opposing a will contest or a petition to revoke probate of a will (see § 186.50), or may be used in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE COURT SHOULD DISMISS THE _____ [OBJECTION TO THE PETITION FOR PROBATE or PETITION TO REVOKE PROBATE] OF THE _____ [WILL or CODICIL] OF _____ [name of decedent] BECAUSE THE _____ [WILL or CODICIL] WAS EXECUTED IN [SUBSTANTIAL] COMPLIANCE WITH THE STATUTORY REQUIREMENTS FOR THE EXECUTION OF FORMAL WILLS.

A. Writing Required. [See § 186.22, Paragraph A.]

B. Signature Required. [See § 186.22, Paragraph B.]

C. Witnesses Required. [See § 186.22, Paragraph C.]

D. Presumption of Due Execution. A presumption that a will has been duly executed arises on proof of the signatures of the testator and the witnesses Estate of Burdette (2000) 81 Cal. App. 4th 938, 946, 97 Cal. Rptr. 2d 263 .

E. Extrinsic Evidence Admissible to Show Proper Execution. Extrinsic evidence is admissible to determine whether a will is properly executed under Probate Code Section 6110 (Prob. Code § 6111.5).

[Optional] F. Signing by Mark Permissible. If the testator cannot write, the testator may sign the will by mark if the name of the testator is typewritten or handwritten near the mark by a witness and the name of the witness is added (Civ.Code § 14; Code Civ. Proc. § 17; Prob. Code § 1000; Estate of McCabe (1990) 224 Cal. App. 3d 330, 333-334, 274 Cal. Rptr. 43).

[Optional] G. Signature by Interested Witness Permissible. A will, or any provision of a will, is not invalid because the will is signed by an interested witness (Prob. Code § 6112(b)).

[Optional] H. Statutory Will Was Properly Executed. A statutory will is properly executed if the testator completes the appropriate blanks in the will form and signs the will, and each witness observes the testator's signing of the will and signs his or her name in the testator's presence (Prob. Code § 6221). [Optional: If a statutory will meets the requirements for execution of a formal will, i.e., it is properly signed and witnessed, it must be admitted to probate even if the testator did not personally complete all of the blanks inthe form (Estate of Perry (1996) 51 Cal. App. 4th 440, 444-446, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 797)].

[Optional] I. Testimony of One Subscribing Witness Is Sufficient to Show Due Execution of Will. Due execution of the will may be shown by the testimony of one of the subscribing witnesses; the proponent of a will need not produce both subscribing witnesses to prove due execution (Estate of Burdette (2000) 81 Cal. App. 4th 938, 945-946, 97 Cal. Rptr. 2d 263).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted to support a demurrer to (1) an objection to a petition for probate of a formal will or (2) a petition to revoke probate of a formal will, when the contestant alleges that the will was not properly executed [see Prob. Code §§ 6110, 6112]. Optional Paragraphs F and G may be used, respectively, when the will was signed by a mark or witnessed by an interested witness. Optional Paragraph H may be included when the will in question is a statutory will. Optional Paragraph I may be used if only one of the subscribing witnesses is available to testify regarding the execution of the will.

This memorandum may also be submitted to support a demurrer to an objection to a petition for probate of a statutory will [Prob. Code § 6200 et seq.], when the contestant alleges that the will was not executed in accordance with the statutory requirements.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, if substantial compliance with the statutory execution requirements is alleged [see Prob. Code § 6110], counsel should discuss facts showing both the execution procedure followed by the testator and the manner in which that procedure satisfies the policy considerations behind the requirement in question [see Estate of McCabe (1990) 224 Cal. App. 3d 330, 333-334, 274 Cal. Rptr. 43] .

This memorandum may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which the issue of due execution of the will arises. Thus, it may be combined with the points and authorities pertaining to a demurrer to an objection or petition contesting a will [see § 186.50].

[b] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the form in § 186.22 may be used to oppose the contention supported by the points and authorities in this form.

[a] Presumption of Due Execution
