Estate of Burdette (2000) 81 Cal. App. 4th 938, 97 Cal. Rptr. 2d 263 , states the general presumption that a will has been duly executed on proof of the signatures of the testator and the witnesses. This presumption can be used by the proponent of a will when the witnesses are dead, unavailable, unable to testify or recollect, or are adverse or corrupt. The court held that in this case the petitioner met the burden of establishing due execution by proving the decedent's signature and the signatures of the two witnesses on the will, and the circumstances under which they signed, through the testimony of one of the witnesses. It held that the testimony of the other witness, who no longer resided in California, was not necessary to prove due execution, but that the trial court could properly admit the sworn statement of this witness under Prob. Code § 8224 (81 Cal. App. 4th 938, 943-946) .

[b] Signature by Interested Witness Permissible

In Estate of McCabe (1990) 224 Cal. App. 3d 330, 274 Cal. Rptr. 43 , the decedent's widow contested the admission of the decedent's will to probate on the ground that the will, which was signed by a mark, was not executed with the required formalities for signatures by mark. The will was prepared by the decedent's attorney, and brought to the decedent in the hospital. The decedent signed the will by an "X" placed near his typewritten name on the will. The attorney witnessed the mark near the typewritten name, but did not write the testator's name again near the mark as required by Civ. Code § 14 and Code Civ. Proc. § 17. The will itself was also properly witnessed by two witnesses. The trial court granted the widow's motion for summary judgment and denied probate of the will. The proponents appealed, alleging substantial compliance with the signature by mark requirements.

The court of appeal reversed and held that there was substantial compliance with the statutory requirements for signature by mark. The court noted that the policy of requiring strict compliance with the statutoryexecution requirements is ordinarily applied in situations where it serves the purpose of protecting the testator from fraud. The competing policy favoring validity of wills takes into account the purpose of the statutory requirements and the extent to which that purpose is satisfied in a particular case. The purpose of the requirement that the witness to the mark write the testator's name near the mark is to show what name the mark is intended to represent. This purpose was satisfied here by the fact that the testator's typewritten name appeared immediately below the mark. The mark was clearly intended to represent the typewritten name, and no sound purpose or policy would be served by invalidating the will for the attorney's failure to write the testator's name near the mark at the time he witnessed the mark. The opportunity for fraud was minimal, since there were two separate witnesses to the execution procedure (224 Cal. App. 3d 330, 333-334) .

[c] Was Properly Executed Statutory Will

Any individual, who is of sound mind and over 18 years of age, may execute a California statutory will (Prob. Code § 6220). This type of will must meet the following requirements for execution: (1) the testator must complete the appropriate blanks in the will form (see Prob. Code § 6240) and sign the will; and (2) each witness must observe the testator signing the will and each witness must sign his or her name in the testator's presence (Prob. Code § 6221). Notwithstanding the requirements for execution of a will set forth in Prob. Code § 6110, a document executed on a California statutory will form is valid as a will if all of the following requirements are shown to be satisfied by clear and convincing evidence: (1) the form is signed by the testator; (2) the court is satisfied that the testator knew and approved of the contents of the will and intended it to have testamentary effect; and (3) the maker's testamentary intent, as reflected in the document, is clear (Prob. Code § 6226(c)).

In Estate of Perry (1996) 51 Cal. App. 4th 440, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 797 , the trial court granted summary judgment to contestants of a California statutory will on the ground that the requirements of Prob. Code § 6221(a) for execution of the will were not met because some of the blanks in the will form were not personally completed by the decedent or in his presence and at his direction. The court of appeal reversed the summary judgment, holding that a triable issue existed concerning whether the will was properly executed under Prob. Code § 6110, which the court held applies to a California statutory will. If the will meets the requirements of Prob. Code § 6110, i.e., it was properly signed and witnessed, probate cannot be denied on the basis that the testator did not personally complete all of the blanks in the form (51 Cal. App. 4th 440, 444-446) .

[d] Testimony of One Subscribing Witness Is Sufficient to Show Due Execution of Will

Estate of Burdette (2000) 81 Cal. App. 4th 938, 97 Cal. Rptr. 2d 263 , is discussed under § 186.51[3][a]. In that case, the court held that the testimony of the second witness, who no longer resided in California, was not necessary to prove due execution, but that the trial court could properly admit the sworn statement of this witness under Prob. Code § 8224 (81 Cal. App. 4th 938, 943-946) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Statutory Will Was Properly Executed

In Estate of Smith (1998) 61 Cal. App. 4th 259, 71 Cal. Rptr. 2d 424 , which involved a will contest concerning a properly witnessed statutory will with trust, the trial court erred in considering that it was bound by the requirements for reviewing the execution of statutory wills set forth in Prob. Code § 6226(c). These requirements substantially alter the usual scope of inquiry in a will contest, but do not apply to a property witnessed statutory will or to any statutory will with a trust (61 Cal. App. 4th 259, 266) . The court of appeal held that the trial court should not have applied the standards set out in Prob. Code § 6226(c) because this provision's requirement of findings by clear and convincing evidence applies only to a statutory will that fails to meet the witness requirements of Prob. Code § 6110 (61 Cal. App. 4th 259, 268 ; following Estate of Perry (1996) 51 Cal. App. 4th 440 , discussed under § 186.51[4][a]). A statutory will may qualify for probate under Prob. Code § 6110 even if it is defective under Prob. Code § 6221, because Prob. Code § 6113 provides that a written will is validly executed if its execution complies with Prob. Code § 6110 or Chapter 6 (Prob. Code § 6200 et seq (California statutory will)) (61 Cal. App. 4th 259, 269) . Thus, the trial court should have accepted the contestants' concession that their objection based on a failure to comply with Prob. Code § 6221 was unsupportable when they had claimed that the testator had failed to complete all of the appropriate blanks in the will by failing to specify a date or an executor; neither a date nor a designated executor is required for a will to be duly executed under Prob. Code § 6110 (61 Cal. App. 4th 259, 269) .

185 of 199 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 18 Chapters 180-189 PRETRIAL PROCEEDINGS---to---PROBATE OF WILLS
CHAPTER 186 PROBATE OF WILLS
PART II. FORMS
B. Opposing Will Contests

18-186 California Points & Authorities § 186.52

§ 186.52 Opposing Contest of Will--By Demurrer to Objection or Petition Contesting Will [Prob. Code §§ 8251, 8271(b)]--Holographic Will Was Properly Executed [Prob. Code § 6111]

[1] FORM

[The following should be combined with a general memorandum opposing a will contest or a petition to revoke probate of a will (see § 186.50), or may be used in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE COURT SHOULD DISMISS THE _____ [OBJECTION TO THE PETITION FOR PROBATE or PETITION TO REVOKE PROBATE] OF THE _____ [WILL or CODICIL] OF _____ [name of decedent] BECAUSE THE INSTRUMENT WAS A HOLOGRAPHIC DOCUMENT EXECUTED IN [SUBSTANTIAL] COMPLIANCE WITH THE STATUTORY REQUIREMENTS FOR THE EXECUTION OF HOLOGRAPHIC WILLS.

A. Will in Testator's Handwriting Is Valid. A will that does not comply with the execution requirements of Probate Code Section 6110 is valid as a holographic will, whether or not witnessed, if the signature and the material provisions are in the handwriting of the testator (Prob. Code § 6111(a)). Probate Code Section 6111 provides an exception to the formalities for a will specified in Probate Code Section 6110, and makes valid a holographic or handwritten will if the signature and the material provisions are in the testator's handwriting (Estate of Brenner (1999) 76 Cal. App. 4th 1298, 1301, 91 Cal. Rptr. 2d 149). Probate Code Section 6111 gives validity to an unwitnessed handwritten will because of the "recognized difficulty of forging an entire handwritten instrument" (Estate of Black (1982) 30 Cal. 3d 880, 888, 181 Cal. Rptr. 222, 641 P.2d 754).

B. Policy Favors Validity. Both the courts and the legislature have shown a tendency toward liberality in accepting a writing as a holographic will. Substantial compliance with the statutory requirements, not absolute precision, is all that is necessary (Estate of Black (1982) 30 Cal. 3d 880, 883-884, 181 Cal. Rptr. 222, 641 P.2d 754 ; Estate of Brenner (1999) 76 Cal. App. 4th 1298, 1301, 91 Cal. Rptr. 2d 149).

C. No Particular Words or Form Required. A holographic will requires no particular words of form, but need only show that the maker intended by the writing to dispose of property after his or her death Estate of Wong (1995) 40 Cal. App. 4th 1198, 1204-1205, 47 Cal. Rptr. 2d 707 ; Estate of MacLeod (1988) 206 Cal. App. 3d 1235, 1240-1241, 254 Cal. Rptr. 156 .

D. Extrinsic Evidence Admissible. Extrinsic evidence is admissible to determine whether a writing is a will, or to determine the meaning of a will or a portion of a will if the meaning is unclear (Prob. Code § 6111.5). The court may look at extrinsic evidence to confirm the testator's intent (Estate of Brenner (1999) 76 Cal. App. 4th 1298, 1302-1303, 91 Cal. Rptr. 2d 149).

[Optional] E. Statement of Testamentary Intent May Be in Testator's Handwriting or Printed Form. Any statement of testamentary intent contained in a holographic will may be set forth either in the testator's own handwriting or as part of a commercially printed form will (Prob. Code § 6111(c)); Estate of Black (1982) 30 Cal. 3d 880, 882, 885-886, 181 Cal. Rptr. 222, 641 P.2d 754).

[Optional] F. Validity Unaffected by Erasures, New Portions, and Deletions. Erasures, new portions, or deletions done entirely by the hand of the testator with testamentary intent do not affect the validity of a holographic will (Estate of Archer (1987) 193 Cal. App. 3d 238, 244, 239 Cal. Rptr. 137).

[Optional] G. Signature at End of Document Is Not Required. A holographic will need not be signed at the end (Estate of Black (1982) 30 Cal. 3d 880, 888, 181 Cal. Rptr. 222, 641 P.2d 754 ; Estate of Williams (2007) 155 Cal. App. 4th 197, 207 ; 66 Cal. Rptr. 3d 34 ; Estate of MacLeod (1988) 206 Cal. App. 3d 1235, 1242-1243, 254 Cal. Rptr. 156 ; Estate of Archer (1987) 193 Cal. App. 3d 238, 244, 239 Cal. Rptr. 137).

[Optional] H. Witnesses' Signatures Do Not Invalidate Holographic Wills. The presence of signatures of witnesses will not invalidate an otherwise effective holographic will, even though the testator believed the attestation essential and intended the execution to be in the attested form (Estate of Archer (1987) 193 Cal. App. 3d 238, 242-243, 239 Cal. Rptr. 137).

[Optional] I. Holographic Will Is Not Required to Be Dated. There is no requirement that a holographic will be dated (see Prob. Code § 6111(b)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a demurrer to (1) an objection to a petition for probate of a holographic will, or (2) a petition to revoke probate of a holographic will, when the contestant alleges that the will was not properly executed [see Prob. Code § 6111]. Optional Paragraph E may be used when the testator has written his or her holographic will on a commercial or other form that contains a printed statement of testamentary intent. Optional Paragraph F may be used when the testator has made erasures, additions, or deletions to the holograph. Optional Paragraph G may be used when the will is signed somewhere other than at the end, and Optional Paragraph H may be used when the will contains an attestation clause and witness signatures. Optional Paragraph I can be used if an issue arises with respect to a holographic will being undated.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, for example, counsel should discuss facts showing that the signature and the material provisions of the will are in the handwriting of the testator [Prob. Code § 6111(a)].

This memorandum may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which the issue of due execution of the will arises. Thus, it may be combined with the points and authorities pertaining to a demurrer to an objection or petition contesting a will [see § 186.50].

[b] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 186.23 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Will in Testator's Handwriting Is Valid

In Estate of Brenner (1999) 76 Cal. App. 4th 1298, 91 Cal. Rptr. 2d 149 , the court held that photocopies of a testator's handwritten property dispositions, included in a holographic will, satisfy the statutory requirement that the material provisions of the will must be in the testator's handwriting, as along as the photocopies are properly authenticated. In this case, the purported holographic will was a three-page photocopy of a handwritten list of property dispositions, on which the testator had handwritten various additions, including that note "my will of November 6, 1990 is void," his signature, and the statements "This is my new will," "my trustee and executor, lawyer James Osborne," and "Will of Nov. 6, 1990 is void," followed by the testator's initials. The testator delivered this will to his attorney, James Osborne, and in several conversations with Osborne referred to it as "his holographic will." The trial court found that the testator had handwritten the text of the 1995 instrument, but that it did not qualify as a valid holographic will because the photocopy did not contain the testator's original handwriting. The court of appeal concluded that Prob. Code § 6111 is properly construed to allow photocopies of the testator's handwritten dispositions, properly authenticated, as well as original ink writings, because photocopies of handwritten testamentary dispositions carry virtually the same assurance of authenticity as original ink. In both instances, the genuineness of the testamentary dispositions tends to be shown by the fact that the testator wrote them out (76 Cal. App. 4th 1298, 1299, 1302) .

Estate of Black (1982) 30 Cal. 3d 880, 181 Cal. Rptr. 222, 641 P.2d 754 , is discussed under § 186.52[3][e].

[b] Policy Favors Validity

In Estate of Black (1982) 30 Cal. 3d 880, 181 Cal. Rptr. 222, 641 P.2d 754 , the Supreme Court held that an overly technical application by the courts of the holographic will statute to handwritten testamentary dispositions, which generally are made by people who have no legal training, would seriously limit the effectiveness of the legislative decision to authorize holographic wills (30 Cal. 3d 880, 884) .

In Estate of Nielson (1980) 105 Cal. App. 3d 796, 165 Cal. Rptr. 319 , the decedent's uncle opposed the admission to probate of a formal will executed by the decedent, claiming that certain handwritten deletions and interlineations appearing on the face of the will revoked the will and were ineffective as a holographic will. The trial court admitted the will to probate over the uncle's objections, and he appealed.

The court of appeal reversed and remanded the case to the trial court to determine whether the handwritten changes on the face of the will were written by the testator. Employing the policy toward a construction favoring validity in determining whether a will has been properly executed, the court held that if the handwritten changes were determined to be in the testator's handwriting, they would constitute a valid holographic will. The typewritten words appearing on the face of the document (i.e., the provisions of the formal will) were not relevant to the substance of the holograph or essential to its validity. The handwriting reasonably compelled the conclusion that the testator intended to incorporate by reference those portions of the typewritten will not modified or revoked by the holograph, and to republish and give validity to those portions (105 Cal. App. 3d 796, 804-806) .

[c] No Particular Words or Form Required

In Estate of Wong (1995) 40 Cal. App. 4th 1198, 47 Cal. Rptr. 2d 707 , the court stated the general rule that no particular words are required to create a holographic will; however, every holographic will must contain words describing or at least referring to, the property to be disposed of, and showing the testator's intention to dispose of that property (40 Cal. App. 4th 1198, 1204-1205, 1208-1209) .

In Estate of MacLeod (1988) 206 Cal. App. 3d 1235, 254 Cal. Rptr. 156 , the testator's purported holographic will, which was written in several colors of ink and contained interlineations, corrections, and writing in the margins, was contested on the basis that it was not consistent with the testator's careful and meticulous habits and, therefore, indicated that she did not execute it with testamentary intent. The court of appeal noted that the document, on its face, was described as a will. The court also noted that it was a reasonable, non-eccentric, and complete instrument, which began with specific bequests and ended with a residuary clause. While the instrument may not have reflected the testator's usual care with important legal documents and may have been changed from time to time, even with the intent perhaps at some future time to formalize the will, this did not detract from the conclusion that the testator intended the instrument to be her will (206 Cal. App. 3d 1235, 1240-1241) .

[d] Extrinsic Evidence Admissible

In Estate of Brenner (1999) 76 Cal. App. 4th 1298, 91 Cal. Rptr. 2d 149 , the court held that Prob. Code § 6111.5, which provides that extrinsic evidence is admissible to determine whether a writing claimed to be a will is in fact a will, expands the court's inquiry beyond merely determining if the statutory formalities for a traditional will or a holographic will are satisfied. The court may look at extrinsic evidence to confirm the testator's intent and to determine whether there is any danger of fraud. In this case, the extrinsic evidence consisted of the testimony of the testator's attorney that the testator had delivered the purported holographic will to him and several times referred to this document as "his holographic will." It also consisted of the testimony of a forensic document expert that the photocopied and ink handwriting on the holographic will was the testator's. The court of appeal concluded that this evidence was sufficient to show that the document was the testator's holographic will (76 Cal. App. 4th 1298, 1302-1303) .

[e] Statement of Testamentary Intent May Be in Testator's Handwriting or Printed Form

In Estate of Black (1982) 30 Cal. 3d 880, 181 Cal. Rptr. 222, 641 P.2d 754 , the Supreme Court held that the testator's reference to a holographic instrument as her will and her statement that she hoped this writing would be given legal effect as a testamentary disposition of her property was sufficient evidence of the testator's intent to authenticate the document as her will (30 Cal. 3d 880, 888) . It held that an instrument handwritten on three pages of a partially preprinted stationer's form was a holographic will, because the printed language on the form incorporated in the will was not material to its substance or essential to its validity as a testamentary disposition (30 Cal. 3d 880, 882, 885-886) .

[f] Validity Unaffected by Erasures, New Portions, and Deletions

Estate of Archer (1987) 193 Cal. App. 3d 238, 239 Cal. Rptr. 137 , involved a formal will, a holographic codicil, and an undated, unsigned addition to the holographic codicil. The codicil was entirely handwritten by the testator, and was also attested by two witnesses. The addition appeared on the back of the paper on which the codicil was written. The testator's niece, who claimed to be his sole heir at law, opposed the admission to probate of the addition to the codicil. She claimed that it was not intended as a testamentary document, and that it did not comply with the execution requirements for holographic wills. The decedent's cousin demurred to the contest on the ground that it failed to state a cause of action. The cousin was the sole beneficiary of the residue of the estate by the terms of the addition. Under the formal will, the residue was to be divided among the testator's heirs at law and those of his wife. The trial court sustained the demurrer to the contest without leave to amend, dismissed the contest, and admitted the formal will and both sides of the codicil to probate. The niece appealed.

The court of appeal held that the trial court properly sustained the demurrer without leave to amend as to the allegation that the addition to the codicil was invalid. The court stated that additions or alterations to a valid holographic will or codicil made after the date it is signed, when made in the testator's handwriting and with testamentary intent, adopt the old date and signature. It is not necessary to resort to the doctrine of integration or the doctrine of incorporation by reference to make such additions or alterations a part of the holographic will. These doctrines are not applicable, since such additions or alterations are part of the holographic instrument rather than separate writings (193 Cal. App. 3d 238, 243-244) .

[g] Signature at End of Document Is Not Required

In Estate of Black (1982) 30 Cal. 3d 880, 181 Cal. Rptr. 222, 641 P.2d 754 , the Supreme Court held that the testator's signature need not be located at the end of the holographic will, but may appear in another part of the will, as long as the testator wrote his or her name there with the intention of authenticating or executing the instrument as his or her will. In this case, the fact that the testator wrote her name on each page of the holographic will was deemed a sufficient signature (30 Cal. 3d 880, 888) .

In Estate of Williams (2007) 155 Cal. App. 4th 197, 207 ; 66 Cal. Rptr. 3d 34 , the court held that evidence supported the finding that decedent's handwritten document, which had his name written in block letters at the top, and which stated the disposition of some of his assets and included some language of testamentary intent, was a valid holographic will. The court further held that the Probate Code did not require that the holographic will be signed at the bottom provided the testator wrote his name on the document with the intent of authenticating or executing the instrument as his will (155 Cal. App. 4th 197, 207) .

In Estate of Macleod (1988) 206 Cal. App. 3d 1235, 254 Cal. Rptr. 156 , the testator's purported holographic will was contested on the basis that the will was not signed. The court of appeal noted that while the will was "not the most presentable of documents, and while not dated or subscribed," it did contain a statement by the testator that it was her will and she did sign it, albeit at the beginning of the document, by setting forth at the top of the first page, "Being of sound mind I, Margaret Macleod Horwitz, declare the following to be my last will and testament" (206 Cal. App. 3d 1235, 1238-1239, 1243) .

In Estate of Archer (1987) 193 Cal. App. 3d 238, 239 Cal. Rptr. 137 , the court of appeal held that a holographic will that appears to be a complete testamentary document is valid although signed elsewhere than at the end. Thus, an addition to a codicil, handwritten by the testator on the back of the original codicil and with testamentary intent, adopted the signature on the front of the codicil as a matter of law (193 Cal. App. 3d 238, 244) .

[h] Witnesses' Signatures Do Not Invalidate Holographic Wills

In Estate of Archer (1987) 193 Cal. App. 3d 238, 239 Cal. Rptr. 137 , the court of appeal held that an otherwise valid holographic will was not invalidated by the fact that it contained an attestation clause and witness signatures. Prob. Code § 6111 provides that a writing otherwise meeting the requirements for a holographic will is a valid holographic will whether or not it is witnessed (193 Cal. App. 3d 238, 242-243) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 18 Chapters 180-189 PRETRIAL PROCEEDINGS---to---PROBATE OF WILLS
CHAPTER 186 PROBATE OF WILLS
PART II. FORMS
B. Opposing Will Contests

18-186 California Points & Authorities § 186.53

§ 186.53 Opposing Contest of Will--By Demurrer to Objection or Petition Contesting Will [Prob. Code §§ 8251, 8271(b)]--Holographic Will Was Properly Executed [Prob. Code § 6111]--Doctrine of Integration Applicable

[1] FORM

[The following should be combined with a general memorandum opposing a will contest or a petition to revoke probate of a will (see § 186.50), or may be used in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE COURT SHOULD DISMISS THE _____ [OBJECTION TO THE PETITION FOR PROBATE or PETITION TO REVOKE PROBATE] OF THE _____ [WILL or CODICIL] OF _____ [name of decedent] BECAUSE DECEDENT INTENDED THE _____ [describe documents sought to be integrated, e.g., HOLOGRAPHIC WILL AND THE DECEDENT'S LETTER OF _____ (date)] TO BE HIS/HER WILL, AS EVIDENCED BY _____ [specify, e.g., THE FACTS THAT DECEDENT CHARACTERIZED THE DOCUMENTS AS HIS/HER WILL AND THAT HE/SHE KEPT THEM FOLDED TOGETHER].

Integration of Multiple Documents as One Holographic Will. Under the doctrine of integration, two or more handwritten documents that do not refer to one another may be admitted to probate when it is clear that the testator intended them to be his or her will; such intent is evidenced when the several writings are connected by sequence of thought, folded together, or physically form one document (Estate of Dumas (1949) 34 Cal. 2d 406, 411, 210 P.2d 697).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a demurrer to (1) an objection to a petition for probate of a holographic will, or (2) a petition to revoke probate of a holographic will, when the will proponent claims that two or more handwritten documents should be integrated to form a properly executed holographic will [see Estate of Dumas (1949) 34 Cal. 2d 406, 411, 210 P.2d 697] . They may also be adapted for use in a case in which the completeness or validity of a holographic will is not in dispute and integration is urged merely to add material provisions contained in another document to the will. The issue of integration frequently arises in conjunction with the issue of incorporation by reference, discussed in § 186.54.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss facts showing that two or more handwritten documents that do not refer to one another are clearly intended to be a will [see Estate of Dumas (1949) 34 Cal. 2d 406, 411, 210 P.2d 697] .

This memorandum may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which the issue of due execution of the will arises. Thus, it may be combined with the points and authorities pertaining to a demurrer to an objection or petition contesting a will [see § 186.50].

[b] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 186.24 may be used to oppose the contention supported by the points and authorities in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Integration of Multiple Documents as One Holographic Will

Estate of Dumas (1949) 34 Cal. 2d 406, 210 P.2d 697 , involved three handwritten sheets of paper entirely in the decedent's handwriting that were offered for probate as an integrated holographic will. The decedent's niece, nephew, and brother-in-law opposed probate on the ground that the second and third sheets could were invalid holographic instruments. The second and third sheets were written nine years after the first. The second sheet contained no signature or date, and the third sheet contained a signature but no date. Both contained various testamentary gifts. The first sheet satisfied all the statutory requirements for a holographic will, but did not contain any testamentary gifts. In addition to recitals of soundness of mind, intent to make a will, and directions appointing executors, it contained the following statement: "The following bequests are to be given my friends herein named." The three sheets were in decedent's the possession until shortly before her death. Two of the beneficiaries visited her shortly before her death, and they asked her if she had a will. She nodded in response, and indicated a satchel in her closet. From the satchel she removed an envelope containing the three sheets, which were folded together, and indicated that they were her will. On her instructions, the sheets were delivered to a person who placed them in her safe deposit box. They remained there until her death. The trial court found that the three sheets formed an integrated holographic will, and admitted them to probate. The contestants appealed.

The California Supreme Court affirmed, holding that there were very pertinent indications that the three papers constituted the decedent's will and that she had properly adopted the date and signature of the first sheet for the rest, thereby re-executing and republishing the will (34 Cal. 2d 406, 411) . She declared the sheets to be her will, they were folded in proper and chronological sequence and placed in an envelope, and they remained in her possession until they were moved to a safe place shortly before her death and pursuant to her instructions. The decedent clearly indicated in the first sheet that a disposition of her property was to follow, and the other sheets carried out that intent. The continuity of the three sheets was manifest, as was the intent of the decedent that all the sheets were to be considered together as one continuous and complete document. That continuity was not destroyed by the time interval between the execution of the first and the second and third sheets (34 Cal. 2d 406, 413-414) . The Court also cited extensively from Estate of Finkler (1935) 3 Cal. 2d 584, 46 P.2d 149 , for the rule that a testator may make valid holographic additions or alterations in a holographic will without signing or dating the changes (34 Cal. 2d 406, 412-414) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 18 Chapters 180-189 PRETRIAL PROCEEDINGS---to---PROBATE OF WILLS
CHAPTER 186 PROBATE OF WILLS
PART II. FORMS
B. Opposing Will Contests

18-186 California Points & Authorities § 186.54

§ 186.54 Opposing Contest of Will--By Demurrer to Objection or Petition Contesting Will [Prob. Code §§ 8251, 8271(b)]--Holographic Will Was Properly Executed [Prob. Code § 6111]--Doctrine of Incorporation by Reference Applicable [Prob. Code § 6130]

[1] FORM

[The following should be combined with a general form of memorandum of points and authorities opposing a will contest or a petition to revoke probate of a will (see § 186.50), or may be used in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE COURT SHOULD DISMISS THE _____ [OBJECTION TO THE PETITION FOR PROBATE or PETITION TO REVOKE PROBATE] OF THE _____ [WILL or CODICIL] OF _____ [name of decedent] BECAUSE THE _____ [WILL or CODICIL] CLEARLY REFERRED TO _____ [specify document to be incorporated, e.g., DECEDENT'S LETTER OF _____ (date)] AS PART OF DECEDENT'S WILL, AND THEREBY MANIFESTED AN INTENT TO INCORPORATE _____ [specify document to be incorporated, e.g., THE LETTER] INTO THE WILL.

A. Will May Incorporate Existing Writing. A writing in existence when a will is executed may be incorporated by reference if the language of the will manifests this intent and describes the writing sufficiently to permit its identification (Prob. Code § 6130).

[Optional] B. Incorporation of Nonholographic Writing. A holographic will may properly incorporate by reference writings that are not holographic (Estate of Nielson (1980) 105 Cal. App. 3d 796, 803, 165 Cal. Rptr. 319).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a demurrer to (1) an objection to a petition for probate of a holographic will, or (2) a petition to revoke probate of a holographic will, when the will proponent claims that the will incorporates an existing writing [see Prob. Code § 6130]. It may be also be adapted for use in a case in which the completeness or validity of a holographic will is not in dispute and incorporation is urged merely to add material provisions contained in another document to the will. Optional Paragraph B may be used when the writing to be incorporated is not a holograph. The issue of incorporation by reference frequently arises in conjunction with the issue of integration, discussed in § 186.53.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss facts showing the existence of a separate document, and that the will manifests an intent to incorporate the document and describes the document sufficiently to permit its identification [see Prob. Code § 6130].

This memorandum may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which the issue of due execution of the will arises. Thus, it may be combined with the points and authorities pertaining to a demurrer to an objection or petition contesting a will [see § 186.50].

[b] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 186.25 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Incorporation of Nonholographic Writing

The facts and procedural background of Estate of Nielson (1980) 105 Cal. App. 3d 796, 165 Cal. Rptr. 319 , are discussed in § 186.52[3][b]. In Nielson, the court of appeal held that a holographic will written on the face of a previously-executed formal will could incorporate by reference those portions of the formal, typewritten will not modified or revoked by the holograph, if that was the intention of the testator. The execution of the holograph republished and validated those portions of the formal will not modified or revoked by the holograph (105 Cal. App. 3d 796, 804-806) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 18 Chapters 180-189 PRETRIAL PROCEEDINGS---to---PROBATE OF WILLS
CHAPTER 186 PROBATE OF WILLS
PART II. FORMS
B. Opposing Will Contests

18-186 California Points & Authorities § 186.55

§ 186.55 Opposing Contest of Will--By Demurrer to Objection or Petition Contesting Will [Prob. Code §§ 8251, 8271(b)]--Testator Had Testamentary Intent

[1] FORM

[The following should be combined with a general form of memorandum of points and authorities opposing a will contest or a petition to revoke probate of a will (see § 186.50), or may be used in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE COURT SHOULD DISMISS THE _____ [OBJECTION TO THE PETITION FOR PROBATE or PETITION TO REVOKE PROBATE] OF THE _____ [WILL or CODICIL] OF _____ [name of decedent] BECAUSE THE TERMS OF THE _____ [WILL or CODICIL], VIEWED IN LIGHT OF THE SURROUNDING CIRCUMSTANCES, SHOW THAT IT WAS EXECUTED WITH TESTAMENTARY INTENT.

A. Will Must Be Executed With Testamentary Intent. A will may not be admitted to probate unless it appears from its terms, viewed in light of the surrounding circumstances, that it was executed with testamentary intent (Estate of Smith (1998) 61 Cal. App. 4th 259, 265, 71 Cal. Rptr. 2d 424).

B. Test for Determining Testamentary Intent. The basic test of testamentary intent is whether the testator intended by the particular instrument offered for probate to create a revocable disposition of his or her property to take effect only on his or her death (Estate of Smith (1998) 61 Cal. App. 4th 259, 265, 71 Cal. Rptr. 2d 424).

[Optional] C. Declarations of Testator Admissible. Oral declarations, whether made at, before, or after the execution of the instrument, are admissible, if offered for the purpose of ascertaining the intent with which the instrument was executed, and not for the purpose of proving the meaning the testator attributed to specific provisions of an admitted will (Estate of Sargavak (1950) 35 Cal. 2d 93, 96-97, 216 P.2d 850] .

[Optional] D. Nontestamentary Provisions Do Not Affect Document's Testamentary Intent. If testamentary intent adequately appears, a document's testamentary character is not affected by the fact that it includes nontestamentary matters (Estate of Sargavak (1950) 35 Cal. 2d 93, 101, 216 P.2d 850).

[Optional] E. Interim Will May Be Admitted to Probate. An interim will is admissible to probate even though the decedent expected to make a later will (Estate of Crick (1964) 230 Cal. App. 2d 513, 517, 41 Cal. Rptr. 120).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a demurrer to (1) an objection to a petition for probate of a will, or (2) a petition to revoke probate of a will, when the contestant alleges that the will was not executed with testamentary intent [see Estate of Smith (1998) 61 Cal. App. 4th 259, 265, 71 Cal. Rptr. 2d 424] . Optional Paragraphs C may be used when the requisite testamentary intent is not clear from the face of the will and must be shown by other evidence. Optional Paragraph D may be used when the will is a letter or other document that discusses nontestamentary matters as well testamentary ones. Optional Paragraph E may be used when the will is an interim will.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss all of the relevant circumstances surrounding the writing of the alleged will or codicil, including the complete text of the document in which allegedly testamentary language appears, statements of the decedent concerning his or her testamentary plans, and the existence of other, more formal testamentary documents [see Estate of Smith (1998) 61 Cal. App. 4th 259, 265, 71 Cal. Rptr. 2d 424] .

This memorandum may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which the issue of due execution of the will arises. Thus, it may be combined with the points and authorities pertaining to a demurrer to an objection or petition contesting a will [see § 186.50].

[b] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 186.26 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Will Must Be Executed With Testamentary Intent

In Estate of Sargavak (1950) 35 Cal. 2d 93, 216 P.2d 850 , the decedent's attorney, J.O., offered for probate a purported holographic codicil to the decedent's formal will. The formal will left the decedent's entire estate to the contestants. The codicil left the estate to J.O. and S.M., the decedent's long-time friend and business advisor. However, S.M. was also the executor of the decedent's formal will, and he offered the will for probate. The contestants argued that the purported codicil was not executed with testamentary intent. The codicil contained, in relevant part, the following language: "She [the testator] leaves everything she has to her Boy S.M. and her lawyer J.O.--she gives them power of attorney to divide what is left of her belongings to them." The contestants produced evidence, including the testimony of S.M. as to declarations made by the decedent, that the allegedly dispositive provisions of the holographic writing were intended only as a statement that S.M. and J.O. were to dispose of the decedent's property according to the terms of her formal will. The contestants claimed that the decedent's purpose in writing the holograph was to assure the niece of her deceased husband and the niece's daughter that the decedent was not going to provide for them in her will and to authorize S.M. and J.O. to remove them from her home. The niece and her daughter had lived with the decedent on hostile terms, and had argued with the decedent on the day the holograph was written concerning the decedent's duty to provide for them in her will. The trial court admitted the holographic writing to probate, and the contestants appealed.

The California Supreme Court affirmed. The Court noted the rule that an instrument may not be admitted to probate unless it appears from its terms, viewed in light of the surrounding circumstances, that it was executed with testamentary intent (35 Cal. 2d 93, 95) . Thus, it rejected J.O.'s argument that when a will is clear and unambiguous on its face extrinsic evidence cannot be admitted to show that it was not a will. However, the uncontradicted extrinsic evidence as to lack of testamentary intent was not so persuasive and unequivocal that it compelled the conclusion that the decedent did not intend to make the testamentary disposition of her property that the holograph dictated. It only created a conflict with other evidence introduced at the trial, and that other evidence was sufficient to support the trial court's judgment. Nothing in the evidence before the trial court clearly negated the testamentary implication carried by the words used in the holograph (35 Cal. 2d 93, 101) .

Estate of Smith (1998) 61 Cal. App. 4th 259, 71 Cal. Rptr. 2d 424 , involved a will contest between the testator's surviving husband and the testator's daughter and granddaughter. The trial court denied the husband's petition to admit to probate the testator's statutory will that left the testator's estate to the husband, and instead admitted a previously executed holographic will that left the testator's estate to her daughter and granddaughter. The trial court found that the testator signed the statutory will by mistake and that the testator did not intend it to have testamentary effect because the testator did not intend to disinherit her daughter and granddaughter. The court of appeal reversed, finding that none of the extrinsic evidence considered by the trial court, i.e., the terms of both wills, the instructions accompanying the statutory will, and the testimony of witnesses, tended to show that the testator did not intend the statutory will to be effective as a testamentary instrument (61 Cal. App. 4th 259, 266) . The court noted that extrinsic evidence is only relevant and admissible if offered for the purpose of ascertaining the intent with which the instrument was executed, and not for the purpose of proving the meaning the testator attributed to specific provisions of the instrument. Thus, the trial court's factual findings regarding the testator's intention to leave her estate to her daughter and granddaughter did not support its decision to deny the statutory will admission to probate (61 Cal. App. 4th 259, 266) . The trial court erroneously focused on the testator's intended disposition of her estate, instead of on her intent to execute a testamentary instrument (61 Cal. App. 4th 259, 266) .

The court of appeal also noted that a mistake by the testator does not preclude admission of a will to probate unless the mistake vitiates the execution of the will or the formation of testamentary intent (61 Cal. App. 4th 259, 270) . In this context, "testamentary intent" does not refer to the testator's intentions regarding particular dispositions of property, but means the testator's general intent to make a revocable disposition of his or her property, effective on the testator's death (61 Cal. App. 4th 259, 270) .

Estate of MacLeod (1988) 206 Cal. App. 3d 1235, 254 Cal. Rptr. 156 , involved a purported holographic will that consisted of three undated handwritten pages found in the bedside table at the decedent's home after her death. The pages were written in several colors of ink and contained interlineations, corrections, and writing in the margin. At the top of the first page was the following sentence: "Being of sound mind I, Margaret MacLeod Horwitz, declare the following to be my last will and testament." The decedent's name was included in this sentence by use of a caret mark and superscription. The document went on to make various numbered bequests, and ended with a residuary bequest. No signature appeared at the end of the document. The trial court admitted the document as the decedent's last will. The decedent's stepson appealed, claiming that: (1) the purported will was not signed with the intent to authenticate it as a will; (2) it was executed without testamentary intent; and (3) it was not dated.

The court of appeal affirmed, noting that the contestant's argument that the decedent was a well-educated, formal, and punctilious woman who would not have intended the unsubscribed, scribbled, and interlineated document to be her will also supported the trial court's opposite conclusion that the decedent was not the type of person who would have chosen to die intestate. The court also noted that the document made a complete disposition of the decedent's property, and was organized like a will in that it began with a statement that it was a will and ended with a residuary clause. It was reasonable, noneccentric, and complete (206 Cal. App. 3d 1235, 1240-1241) . Although the document may have failed to reflect the decedent's usual care with important legal documents and may have been changed from time to time, maybe even with the intent to formalize it at some future time, this did not detract from the conclusion that the decedent intended it to serve as her will (206 Cal. App. 3d 1235, 1241) . The court pointed out that the holographic will statute in effect when the decedent died did not require holographic wills to be signed at the end or dated. It appeared from the face of the will, the organization of the document as a will, and the terms of the will that the decedent wrote her name on it with the intention of authenticating or executing it as her will (206 Cal. App. 3d 1235, 1243) .

[b] Test for Determining Testamentary Intent

The facts and procedural background of Estate of Sargavak (1950) 35 Cal. 2d 93, 216 P.2d 850 , are discussed under § 186.55[3][a]. In Sargavak, the California Supreme Court held that testamentary intent was demonstrated by the words "She [the testator] leaves everything she has to her Boy S.M. and her lawyer J.O.--she gives them power of attorney to divide what is left of her belongings to them." Applying the rule that the testator must have intended, by the particular instrument offered for probate, to make a revocable disposition of his or her property to take effect on his or her death, the Court found that these words were sufficient to show such intent (35 Cal. 2d 93, 101) .

[c] Declarations of Testator Admissible

The facts and procedural background of Estate of Sargavak (1950) 35 Cal. 2d 93, 216 P.2d 850 , are discussed under § 186.55[3][a]. In Sargavak, the California Supreme Court held that regardless of the language of the allegedly testamentary instrument, extrinsic evidence, including declarations made by the decedent before, at, or after the execution of the instrument, may be introduced to show that it was not intended by the testator to be effective as a will (35 Cal. 2d 93, 96-97) . Even an instrument that clearly appears testamentary may nevertheless be shown by extrinsic evidence to have been executed for some other purpose (35 Cal. 2d 93, 96) . Thus, evidence that the decedent intended the words "She [the testator] leaves everything she has to her Boy S.M. and her lawyer J.O." merely as a statement that S.M. and J.O. were to dispose of her property according to the terms of her formal will and to authorize S.M. and J.O. to remove certain other persons from her home was admissible (35 Cal. 2d 93, 96-97) .

[d] Nontestamentary Provisions Do Not Affect Document's Testamentary Intent

The facts and procedural background of Estate of Sargavak (1950) 35 Cal. 2d 93, 216 P.2d 850 , are discussed under § 186.55[3][a]. In Sargavak, the California Supreme Court held that a document clearly exhibiting testamentary intent was not invalidated as a testamentary document by the fact that it also covered nontestamentary matters (35 Cal. 2d 93, 101) . The Court found that testamentary purpose was clearly expressed by the terms of the instrument, and it was not negated by evidence that the decedent had an additional purpose in writing the instrument (35 Cal. 2d 93, 98) .

[e] Interim Will May Be Admitted to Probate

The facts and procedural background of Estate of Crick (1964) 230 Cal. App. 2d 513, 41 Cal. Rptr. 120 , are discussed in § 186.52[3][c]. In Crick, the court of appeal held that certain language in a holographic instrument indicating that the decedent intended to make a formal will at a later date did not destroy the instrument's character as a will (230 Cal. App. 2d 513, 520) . The court stated that it is immaterial to the validity of a will that the decedent intended, at the time the will was executed, to execute a superseding will at some future time (230 Cal. App. 2d 513, 517) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 18 Chapters 180-189 PRETRIAL PROCEEDINGS---to---PROBATE OF WILLS
CHAPTER 186 PROBATE OF WILLS
PART II. FORMS
B. Opposing Will Contests

18-186 California Points & Authorities § 186.56

§ 186.56 Opposing Contest of Will--By Demurrer to Objection or Petition Contesting Will [Prob. Code §§ 8251, 8271(b)]--Testator Had Testamentary Capacity [Prob. Code § 6100.5(a)]

[1] FORM

[The following should be combined with a general form of memorandum of points and authorities opposing a will contest or a petition to revoke probate of a will (see § 186.50), or may be used in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE COURT SHOULD DISMISS THE _____ [OBJECTION TO THE PETITION FOR PROBATE or PETITION TO REVOKE PROBATE] OF THE _____ [WILL or CODICIL] OF _____ [name of decedent] BECAUSE DECEDENT HAD TESTAMENTARY CAPACITY, IN THAT DECEDENT (1) UNDERSTOOD WHAT HE/SHE WAS DOING WHEN HE/SHE EXECUTED THE _____ [WILL or CODICIL], (2) UNDERSTOOD AND RECOLLECTED THE NATURE AND SITUATION OF HIS/HER PROPERTY, AND (3) UNDERSTOOD AND REMEMBERED HIS/HER RELATIONS TO THE PERSONS WHO WERE THE NATURAL OBJECTS OF HIS/HER BOUNTY AND WHOSE INTERESTS WERE TO BE AFFECTED BY THE _____ [WILL or CODICIL].

A. Who May Make Will. [see § 186.27, Paragraph A.]

B. Testamentary Capacity Defined. A testator is competent to make a will if he or she has sufficient mental capacity to understand the nature of the testamentary act, to understand and recollect the nature and situation of his or her property, and to remember and understand his or her relations to the persons who are the natural objects of his or her bounty and whose interests are affected by the provisions of the instrument (Estate of Fritschi (1963) 60 Cal. 2d 367, 372, 33 Cal. Rptr. 264, 384 P.2d 656 ; Estate of Mann (1986) 184 Cal. App. 3d 593, 602, 229 Cal. Rptr. 225 ; see Prob. Code § 6100.5(a)(1)).

C. Testamentary Capacity Determined at Time Will Executed. Testamentary capacity must be determined at the time of execution of the will (Estate of Fritschi (1963) 60 Cal. 2d 367, 372, 33 Cal. Rptr. 264, 384 P.2d 656).

D. Burden of Proof on Contestant. The testator is presumed sane and competent and the burden rests on the contestant to show that the testator lacked testamentary capacity at the time he or she executed the will (Estate of Fritschi (1963) 60 Cal. 2d 367, 372, 33 Cal. Rptr. 264, 384 P.2d 656 ; see Goodman v. Zimmerman (1994) 25 Cal. App. 4th 1667, 1678, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 419 ; see also Prob. Code § 810(a)).

[Optional] E. Old Age and Forgetfulness Not Dispositive. Old age or forgetfulness, eccentricities, or mental feebleness or confusion at various times of a party making a will are not enough in themselves to warrant a holding that the testator lacked testamentary capacity (Estate of Mann (1986) 184 Cal. App. 3d 593, 603, 229 Cal. Rptr. 225 ; see Prob. Code §§ 810(b), 6100(b)).

[Optional] F. Appointment of Conservator Not Dispositive. The mere fact that a conservator has been appointed for the testator during the testator's lifetime does not require a finding of testamentary capacity and does not shift the burden of proof from the contestants (Estate of Mann (1986) 184 Cal. App. 3d 593, 603-604, 229 Cal. Rptr. 225 ; see Prob. Code §§ 810(a), 6100(b)).

[Optional] G. Ability to Transact Business Not Required. Inability to transact ordinary business does not establish testamentary incapacity (Estate of Mann (1986) 184 Cal. App. 3d 593, 605, 229 Cal. Rptr. 225).

[Optional] H. Presumption That Will Made During Periods of Lucidity. If a testator had a mental disorder in which there were lucid periods, it is presumed that the testator's will was made during a period of lucidity (Estate of Mann (1986) 184 Cal. App. 3d 593, 604, 229 Cal. Rptr. 225).

[Optional] I. Mistaken Belief Is Not Delusion if Any Evidence Supports Belief. Even if one's beliefs are inaccurate, a mistaken belief does not justify overturning a will where there is any evidence supporting the belief (Goodman v. Zimmerman (1994) 25 Cal. App. 4th 1667, 1675-1676, 1678, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 419).

[Optional] J. Probate Code Section 6100.5 Closely Adheres to Common Law. The language and legislative history of Probate Code Section 6100.5 demonstrate that the statute was intended to closely adhere to the common law as it pertained to testamentary capacity. Thus, to the extent the language of Section 6100.5 presents any ambiguity with respect to delusions and the level of proof required, prestatutory case law may be of guidance (see Goodman v. Zimmerman (1994) 25 Cal. App. 4th 1667, 1676-1677, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 419).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a demurrer to (1) an objection to a petition for probate of a will, or (2) a petition to revoke probate of a will, when the contestant alleges that the testator lacked testamentary capacity at the time the will was executed [see Prob. Code § 6100.5(a)(1); Estate of Fritschi (1963) 60 Cal. 2d 367, 372, 33 Cal. Rptr. 264, 384 P.2d 656] .

Optional Paragraphs E and F deal with various specific facts and items of evidence that do not, in themselves, establish testamentary incapacity. Optional Paragraph G may be used when the contest cites the testator's inability to transact business as evidence of his or her incapacity. Optional Paragraph H may be used when the testator had a mental disorder characterized by periods of lucidity and nonlucidity. Optional Paragraph I may be used when the contestant is relying on a narrow delusion regarding a particular subject matter, but there is evidence that supports the testator's belief. Optional Paragraph J may be used when counsel wishes to rely on case law consistent with, but predating, Prob. Code § 6100.5.

The issue of testamentary incapacity frequently arises in conjunction with the issue of undue influence, discussed in § 186.58.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should discuss facts showing that the decedent understood the nature of the testamentary act, that the decedent understood the nature and situation of his or her property, and that the decedent remembered the persons who were the natural objects of the decedent's bounty and whose interests were to be affected by the decedent's will [see Prob. Code § 6100.5(a)(1); Estate of Fritschi (1963) 60 Cal. 2d 367, 372, 33 Cal. Rptr. 264, 384 P.2d 656 ; Estate of Mann (1986) 184 Cal. App. 3d 593, 602, 229 Cal. Rptr. 225] .

This memorandum may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which the issue of due execution of the will arises. Thus, it may be combined with the points and authorities pertaining to a demurrer to an objection or petition contesting a will [see § 186.50].

[b] Evidence of Deficit in Mental Functions Required for Finding of Incapacity

The diagnosis of a mental or physical disorder will not be sufficient in and of itself to support a determination that a person is of unsound mind or lacks the capacity to make a will [Prob. Code § 811(d); see also Prob. Code § 810(b) (legislative declaration)]. A determination that a person is of unsound mind or lacks the capacity to make a decision or do a certain act, including the incapacity to execute a will, must be supported by evidence of a deficit in at least one of the following mental functions [Prob. Code § 811(a)]:

(1) Alertness and attention, including, but not limited to:

(a) Level of arousal or consciousness.

(b) Orientation to time, place, person, and situation.

(c) Ability to attend and concentrate.

(2) Information processing, including, but not limited to:

(a) Short- and long-term memory, including immediate recall.

(b) Ability to understand or communicate with others, either verbally or otherwise.

(c) Recognition of familiar objects and familiar persons.

(d) Ability to understand and appreciate quantities.

(e) Ability to reason using abstract concepts.

(f) Ability to plan, organize, and carry out actions in one's own rational self-interest.

(g) Ability to reason logically.

(3) Thought processes. Deficits in these functions may be demonstrated by the presence of:

(a) Severely disorganized thinking.

(b) Hallucinations.

(c) Delusions.

(d) Uncontrollable, repetitive, or intrusive thoughts.

(4) Ability to modulate mood and affect. Deficits in this ability may be demonstrated by the presence of a pervasive and persistent or recurrent state of euphoria, anger, anxiety, fear, panic, depression, hopelessness or despair, helplessness, apathy or indifference, which is inappropriate in degree to the individual's circumstances.

A deficit in the mental functions listed above may be considered only if the deficit, by itself or in combination with one or more other mental function deficits, significantly impairs the person's ability to understand and appreciate the consequences of his or her actions with regard to the type of act or decision in question [Prob. Code § 811(b); see also Prob. Code § 811(a) (requiring evidence of correlation between deficit and act in question)]. In determining whether a person suffers from a deficit in mental function so substantial that the person lacks the capacity to do a certain act, the court may take into consideration the frequency, severity, and duration of periods of impairment [Prob. Code § 811(c)].

[c] Effect of Criteria for Determining Capacity

Prob. Code § 811 does not alter the statutory definition of the circumstances under which a person is deemed to lack the capacity to make a valid will as stated in Prob. Code § 6100.5(a) [see § 186.27[2][b]]. However, it does prescribe a minimum level of evidence that must be presented to support a determination that a testator lacked testamentary capacity, and the character of findings that must be made in support of that determination [see Prob. Code § 811(e)]. It follows from these requirements that if the evidence does not demonstrate the existence of a deficit in one of the specific mental functions specified above, or if there is an insufficient showing of a correlation between the deficit and the decedent's testamentary capacity, these facts may be raised by the party opposing a challenge to the will. Thus, for example, evidence that the testator was diagnosed to be suffering from a particular medical condition will be insufficient by itself to invalidate the will unless evidence of a deficit in one or more of the mental functions noted above is also presented.

[d] Attorney's Duty With Respect to Ascertaining Decedent's Testamentary Capacity

An attorney preparing a will for a testator does not owe a duty to the beneficiary of the will or to the beneficiary under a prior will to ascertain and document the client's testamentary capacity. When the testator's testamentary capacity is the basis for a will challenge, the testator's true intent is the central question, and that intent cannot be ascertained from the will or other challenged estate plan document. The attorney who is persuaded of the client's testamentary capacity by the attorney's own observations and experience, and who drafts the will accordingly, fulfills the attorney's duty of loyalty to the testator. In doing so, the attorney should not be required to consider the effect of the new will on beneficiaries under a former will or beneficiaries of the new will. These beneficiaries do not have a cause of action against the attorney for malpractice. Their remedy is to contest the probate and challenge the will on the ground that the testator lacked testamentary capacity at the time of executing the will [Moore v. Anderson Zeigler Disharoon Gallagher & Gray (2003) 109 Cal. App. 4th 1287, 1298-1307, 135 Cal. Rptr. 2d 888] .

Following the principles set forth in Moore, a subsequent decision held that although an attorney who is retained to provide testamentary legal services to a testator may also have a duty to act with due care for the interests of an intended third-party beneficiary, the attorney's primary duty is owed to the testator-client, and the attorney's paramount obligation is to serve and carry out the testator's intentions. When there is a question about whether the third party was in fact the testator's intended beneficiary, and the third party claims that the attorney failed to adequately ascertain the testator's intent or capacity, the attorney is not liable to the third party. In such a case, the attorney's sole duty is to the testator, and the attorney does not owe a duty to the testator's beneficiaries to evaluate and ascertain the testator's capacity to make a new will. An attorney who is persuaded of the testator's intent to dispose of his or her property in a certain manner, and who drafts the will accordingly, fulfills his or her duty of loyalty to the client and is not required to urge the testator to consider an alternative plan to forestall a claim by someone thereby excluded from the will or included in the will but deprived of a specific asset that is devised to someone else. Any other conclusion would place the attorney in an untenable position of divided loyalty. As noted by the court in Moore, an intended beneficiary's remedy in such a case is to contest the will on the ground that the testator lacked testamentary capacity or intent [Boranian v. Clark (2004) 123 Cal. App. 4th 1012, 1014, 20 Cal. Rptr. 3d 405] .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 186.27 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Testamentary Capacity Defined

In Estate of Fritschi (1963) 60 Cal. 2d 367, 33 Cal. Rptr. 264, 384 P.2d 656 , the decedent's ex-wife opposed probate of the decedent's will, on behalf of her children, on the grounds that (1) the decedent lacked testamentary capacity when the will was executed, and (2) the will was obtained by the undue influence of the decedent's girlfriend. The will was a formal, witnessed will, prepared by an attorney. It changed the terms of an earlier will by placing the proceeds of a life insurance policy in trust for the decedent's children, instead of giving the proceeds directly to the children, and by directing the payment of estate taxes entirely from the policy rather than by proration. This change benefitted the girlfriend, who was the residual legatee. The decedent executed the will while he was hospitalized with terminal cancer. Various medical and lay witnesses testified as to the decedent's "disturbed" attitude toward his children, the effect of the drugs he was given in the hospital on his competency, and his general soundness of mind during his hospitalization. Conflicting testimony was given concerning the girlfriend's presence at discussions concerning the will and at the execution of the will. The trial court found that the will had been executed without testamentary capacity and under undue influence, and denied probate. The girlfriend appealed.

The California Supreme Court reversed, holding that "without doubt," the record did not support a finding of testamentary incapacity (60 Cal. 2d 367, 368) . The determinants of testamentary capacity are whether the individual has sufficient mental capacity to be able to understand the nature of the testamentary act, to understand and recollect the nature and situation of his or her property, and to remember and understand his or her relations to the persons who have claims on his or her bounty and whose interests are affected by the provisions of the instrument (60 Cal. 2d 367, 372) . In reviewing the evidence that the testator had testamentary capacity when the will was executed, the Court called it "revealing" that the contestant asked none of the doctors whom they called as witnesses for an opinion of the decedent's competency (60 Cal. 2d 367, 371) .

In Estate of Mann (1986) 184 Cal. App. 3d 593, 229 Cal. Rptr. 225 , the decedent's nephew, the primary beneficiary and proponent of the decedent's will, had been the decedent's conservator for six years. The proponent had been close to the decedent all his life, and she had helped raise him. The decedent's physician stated in the conservatorship proceeding that at that time the decedent was "unable to rationally and intelligently handle her own affairs." He stated that the decedent sometimes appeared very senile, and sometimes more oriented. Several other witnesses testified that the decedent was mentally competent and able to carry on a coherent conversation during the two-year period when the conservatorship proceedings and the execution of the will took place. The will was drawn about nine months after the conservatorship proceedings by an attorney who was a friend of the proponent. The proponent was on the premises but not immediately present when the attorney discussed the will with the decedent. All three witnesses to the will, the proponent, the decedent's physician, and the decedent's housekeeper, testified that at the time of the execution the decedent was alert and knew she was signing a will. Another nephew opposed probate of the decedent's will on the grounds that (1) the proponent procured the will through undue influence, and (2) the decedent lacked testamentary capacity when the will was executed. The decedent's undisclosed gift of $10,000 to the proponent, shortly before the conservatorship proceedings, as well as the decedent's purchase after the conservatorship proceedings of a hot tub that was used mainly by the proponent and his friends were also issues at trial. The trial court found that the decedent was of unsound mind at the time she executed the will and that its execution was obtained through undue influence. The proponent appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. After considering the determinants of testamentary capacity and other matters [relying on Estate of Fritschi (1963) 60 Cal. 2d 367, 372, 33 Cal. Rptr. 264, 384 P.2d 656] , the court concluded that the record was "devoid of affirmative evidence of testamentary incapacity at the time decedent executed her will" (184 Cal. App. 3d 593, 602-603) .

[b] Testamentary Capacity Determined at Time Will Executed

The facts and procedural background of Estate of Fritschi (1963) 60 Cal. 2d 367, 33 Cal. Rptr. 264, 384 P.2d 656 , are discussed under § 186.56[3][a]. In Fritschi, the California Supreme Court held that there was insufficient evidence to overcome the presumption that the testator had testamentary capacity at the time the will was executed, which is the time when testamentary capacity must be determined (60 Cal. 2d 367, 372) .

[c] Burden of Proof on Contestant

The facts and procedural background of Estate of Fritschi (1963) 60 Cal. 2d 367, 33 Cal. Rptr. 264, 384 P.2d 656 , are discussed under § 186.56[3][a]. In Fritschi, the California Supreme Court stated the rule that a testator is presumed sane and competent and the burden rests on the contestant to overcome the presumption. The Court found that the contestant's evidence amounted "at most to speculation as to the possible effects of drugs" administered to the decedent during his last illness. The testimony of the contestant's witnesses merely set out the physical weaknesses of a man afflicted with a fatal illness, and described his minor irrational displays and certain personality quirks. This evidence, particularly in the light of the uncontradicted testimony of those present at the execution of the will that the decedent was of sound and disposing mind at that time, was not sufficient to overcome the presumption of sanity (60 Cal. 2d 367, 372) .

The facts and procedural background of Goodman v. Zimmerman (1994) 25 Cal. App. 4th 1667, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 419 , are discussed under § 186.56[3][h].

In Goodman, the court of appeal, affirming judgment against the contestant, stated that the contestant had the burden of proving the testator was delusional at the time of executing the will. The court proceeded to find that the trial court's finding that the testator was not delusional was supported by an abundance of competent evidence (25 Cal. App. 4th 1667, 1678) .

[d] Old Age and Forgetfulness Not Dispositive

The facts and procedural background of Estate of Mann (1986) 184 Cal. App. 3d 593, 229 Cal. Rptr. 225 , are discussed under § 186.56[3][a]. In Mann, the court of appeal held that a 94-year-old testator who was placed under a conservatorship less than a year before executing her will was competent to make a will. In reaching this conclusion, the court stated that old age and forgetfulness, eccentricities, or mental feebleness or confusion at various times are not, in themselves, enough to warrant a holding of testamentary incapacity (184 Cal. App. 3d 593, 603) .

[e] Appointment of Conservator Not Dispositive

The facts and procedural background of Estate of Mann (1986) 184 Cal. App. 3d 593, 229 Cal. Rptr. 225 , are discussed under § 186.56[3][a]. In Mann, the court of appeal held that the fact that the decedent had been placed under a conservatorship prior to the execution of her will did not establish testamentary incapacity. Even if the decedent had been placed under a guardianship or found to be incompetent in the conservatorship proceedings, that adjudication of incompetence would only establish incapacity at the time of the proceeding. The court noted that not only was there no evidence that the decedent had been incompetent nine months after the conservatorship proceeding but, in fact, there was evidence that her physical and mental condition improved during that period (184 Cal. App. 3d 593, 605) .

[f] Ability to Transact Business Not Required

The facts and procedural background of Estate of Mann (1986) 184 Cal. App. 3d 593, 229 Cal. Rptr. 225 , are discussed under § 186.56[3][a]. In Mann, the court of appeal held that the inability to transact ordinary business does not establish testamentary incapacity. Thus, the fact that the testator had been placed under a conservatorship due to her inability to manage her person and property, prior to the execution of her will, did not establish testamentary incapacity (184 Cal. App. 3d 593, 605) .

[g] Presumption That Will Made During Periods of Lucidity

The facts and procedural background of Estate of Mann (1986) 184 Cal. App. 3d 593, 229 Cal. Rptr. 225 , are discussed under § 186.56[3][a]. In Mann, the court of appeal held that when one has a mental disorder in which there are lucid periods, it is presumed that the will was made during a time of lucidity. The testimony of the testator's personal physician that the testator sometimes appeared very senile, and sometimes more oriented, along with the testimony of other acquaintances of the testator that she was mentally competent and able to carry on a coherent conversation during the period when the will was executed, was sufficient to raise this presumption. Since the record was "devoid of affirmative evidence of testamentary incapacity at the time decedent executed her will," the presumption was not overcome (184 Cal. App. 3d 593, 604) .

[h] Mistaken Belief Is Not Delusion if Any Evidence Supports Belief

In Goodman v. Zimmerman (1994) 25 Cal. App. 4th 1667, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 419 , a father first made a will in which his son and two daughters shared equally. Later he revoked the first will and made a new will in which the son received a sharply reduced share. After the father's death, the son filed a petition for revocation of probate of the later will, alleging, among other things, that at the time the later will was executed the father suffered from a mental disorder with a delusion that the son had not been loyal to him in personal and business matters. The trial court entered judgment against the son. The son appealed, limiting the appeal to the matter of testamentary capacity.

The court of appeal affirmed. The son contended that the trial court did not apply the correct statutory standard for lack of testamentary capacity under Prob. Code § 6100.5, and that even if it did apply the correct standard, substantial evidence did not support the judgment. The court of appeal held that, even though the trial court had used the outdated term "insane delusion" in the statement of decision, it had applied the correct standard. The references to "insane delusion" were to terminology used by courts before the statute was enacted (25 Cal. App. 4th 1667, 1675) . The court stated that the trial court did not err in citing prestatutory case law for the principle that even if one's beliefs are inaccurate, a mistaken belief does not justify overturning a will where there is any evidence supporting the belief. To the extent of any ambiguity in Section 6100.5 regarding delusions and the level of proof required, the statute basically tracks the law as applied in California before its enactment (25 Cal. App. 4th 1667, 1676) . Even though earlier cases use the term "insanity," a term not used in the statute, the test is the same, to determine whether a person suffers from delusions and hallucinations which result in the person dividing property in a way, except for the delusions and hallucinations, he or she would not have done (25 Cal. App. 4th 1667, 1677) . The court went on to hold that the judgment was supported by substantial evidence, and that the son had failed to prove that the alleged delusion caused the father to devise his property in a why which he otherwise would not have done (25 Cal. App. 4th 1667, 1678) .

[i] Probate Code Section 6100.5 Closely Adheres to Common Law

Goodman v. Zimmerman (1994) 25 Cal. App. 4th 1667, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 419 , is discussed under § 186.56[3][h].

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 18 Chapters 180-189 PRETRIAL PROCEEDINGS---to---PROBATE OF WILLS
CHAPTER 186 PROBATE OF WILLS
PART II. FORMS
B. Opposing Will Contests

18-186 California Points & Authorities § 186.57

§ 186.57 Opposing Contest of Will--By Demurrer to Objection or Petition Contesting Will [Prob. Code §§ 8251, 8271(b)]--Will Not Procured by Fraud

[1] FORM

[The following should be combined with a general memorandum of points and authorities opposing a will contest or a petition to revoke probate of a will (see § 186.50), or may be used in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE COURT SHOULD DISMISS THE _____ [OBJECTION TO THE PETITION FOR PROBATE or PETITION TO REVOKE PROBATE] OF THE _____ [WILL or CODICIL] OF _____ [name of decedent] BECAUSE _____ [specify person allegedly procuring will by fraud, e.g., DECEDENT'S SON] MADE NO FALSE REPRESENTATIONS _____ [WITH INTENT TO DECEIVE DECEDENT or WITH INTENT TO INDUCE DECEDENT TO EXECUTE THE _____ (WILL or CODICIL)].

A. Will Ineffective to Extent It Is Procured by Fraud. [see § 186.28, Paragraph A.]

B. Fraudulent Intent Necessary. A will may not be overturned on the ground that its execution was procured by fraud unless it is shown by the contestant that the person making the purportedly false representations either made them with intent to deceive the decedent or with intent to induce the decedent to execute the will (Estate of Benton (1901) 131 Cal. 472, 478, 63 P. 775).

[Optional] C. Only Portion Procured by Fraud Invalidated. Only the portions of a will or codicil affected by fraud should be revoked; as far as possible, the affected portions should be separated, and the rest of the document should continue as a valid testamentary instrument (Estate of Carson (1920) 184 Cal. 437, 441, 194 P. 5).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a demurrer to (1) an objection to a petition for probate of a will, or (2) a petition to revoke probate of a will, when the contestant alleges that the will was procured by fraud [see Prob. Code § 6104]. Optional Paragraph C may be used when only part of the will is affected by the charges of fraud.

The issue of fraud in the procurement of a will frequently arises in conjunction with the issue of undue influence, discussed in § 186.58.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel may discuss facts showing false representations intended either to deceive the decedent or to induce the decedent to execute a will [see Estate of Benton (1901) 131 Cal. 472, 478, 63 P. 775] .

This memorandum may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which the issue of due execution of the will arises. Thus, it may be combined with the points and authorities pertaining to a demurrer to an objection or petition contesting a will [see § 186.50].

[b] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 186.28 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Fraudulent Intent Necessary

In Estate of Benton (1901) 131 Cal. 472, 63 P. 775 , the decedent's widow objected to a will offered for probate by the decedent's son from a previous marriage, on the grounds that the decedent lacked testamentary capacity and the son obtained the will by fraud. Apparently, the son told the decedent that his wife was stealing from him and using his property for the benefit of others, and made other, similar accusations. The trial court found that the decedent was competent at the time the will was executed, but denied probate of the will based on fraud in its procurement. The son appealed.

The California Supreme Court reversed. Although mindful of the rule that a fraud that will vitiate a contract will vitiate a will, the Court found no fraud sufficient to vitiate the will. The trial court's finding that the decedent was "actuated and controlled solely by representations" made by his son fell short of showing a case of actual fraud within the statutory meaning of the term. It was not shown that the son made the representations to deceive the decedent or to induce him to make a will. In addition, there was no showing that the representations were known by the son to be false. It would not be fraudulent for the son to seek to control the decedent in making his will, so long as the purpose and effect of the son's actions was proper (131 Cal. 472, 478) . The Court found similar problems with other findings of the trial court, in that none of the findings indicated that all the required elements of fraud had been shown (131 Cal. 472, 479) .

[b] Only Portion Procured by Fraud Invalidated

The facts and procedural background of Estate of Carson (1920) 184 Cal. 437, 194 P. 5 , are discussed in § 186.28[3][c]. In Carson, the California Supreme Court held that the fact that certain portions of the testator's will were procured by fraud would not invalidate the provisions and bequests of the will not affected by the fraud. This would be the case only if it were not possible to separate the portions affected by the fraud from those unaffected. Separating the portions of the will favoring the man who had fraudulently entered into a marriage with the testator from the other provisions of the will did not present such a problem (184 Cal. 437, 441) .

191 of 199 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 18 Chapters 180-189 PRETRIAL PROCEEDINGS---to---PROBATE OF WILLS
CHAPTER 186 PROBATE OF WILLS
PART II. FORMS
B. Opposing Will Contests

18-186 California Points & Authorities § 186.58

§ 186.58 Opposing Contest of Will--By Demurrer to Objection or Petition Contesting Will [Prob. Code §§ 8251, 8271(b)]--Will Not Procured By Undue Influence

[1] FORM

[The following should be combined with a general form of memorandum of points and authorities opposing a will contest or a petition to revoke probate of a will (see § 186.50), or may be used in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE COURT SHOULD DISMISS THE _____ [OBJECTION TO THE PETITION FOR PROBATE or PETITION TO REVOKE PROBATE] OF THE _____ [WILL or CODICIL] OF _____ [name of decedent] BECAUSE _____ [specify facts showing that respondent did not use his or her influence to destroy decedent's free will and to substitute his or her own, nor did respondent bring his or her influence to bear on the testamentary act, e.g., ALTHOUGH RESPONDENT HAD GENERAL INFLUENCE OVER DECEDENT BY VIRTUE OF HIS/HER CLOSE RELATIONSHIP WITH DECEDENT, HE/SHE DID NOT URGE DECEDENT TO MAKE A WILL, NOR WAS HE/SHE PRESENT WHEN DECEDENT SIGNED HIS/HER WILL].

A. Will Ineffective to Extent It Is Procured by Undue Influence. [see § 186.29, Paragraph A.]

B. Influence Must Destroy Testator's Free Agency. In order for a will to be set aside on the ground of undue influence, the influence must be such as to destroy the testator's free agency and substitute for his or her own another's will (Rice v. Clark (2002) 28 Cal. 4th 89, 96, 120 Cal. Rptr. 2d 522, 47 P.3d 300).

[Optional] C. Mere Opportunity to Influence Testator's Mind Insufficient. Mere proof of opportunity to influence a testator's mind, even when coupled with an interest or motive to do so, will not sustain a finding of undue influence, in the absence of testimony showing that there was pressure operating directly on the testamentary act (Estate of Mann (1986) 184 Cal. App. 3d 593, 607, 229 Cal. Rptr. 225).

[Optional] D. Mere Kindness and Affection Toward Testator Insufficient. Influence gained by kindness and affection will not be regarded as undue if no imposition of fraud was practiced (Estate of Mann (1986) 184 Cal. App. 3d 593, 607, 229 Cal. Rptr. 225).

[Optional] E. Procurement of Attorney to Prepare Will Insufficient. The fact that the beneficiary procured an attorney to prepare the testator's will is insufficient to establish undue influence (Estate of Mann (1986) 184 Cal. App. 3d 593, 608, 229 Cal. Rptr. 225).

[Optional] F. Presence at Execution of Will Insufficient. The fact that a beneficiary was present at the execution of the will is insufficient to establish that the beneficiary exercised undue influence on the testator (Estate of Mann (1986) 184 Cal. App. 3d 593, 608, 229 Cal. Rptr. 225).

[Optional] G. Determination of Undue Profit Not Limited to Terms of Will. The determination of whether a beneficiary unduly profited by virtue of a will is not limited to the terms of the will itself; it entails a qualitative assessment of the relationship between the decedent and the beneficiary (Estate of Sarabia (1990) 221 Cal. App. 3d 599, 607-608, 270 Cal. Rptr. 560).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a demurrer to (1) an objection to a petition for probate of a will, or (2) a petition to revoke probate of a will, when the contestant alleges that the will was procured by undue influence [see Prob. Code § 6104]. Optional Paragraph C may be used when the contestant has shown only the proponent's opportunity and motive to unduly influence the testator, and not that any actual pressure was brought to bear on the testamentary act. Optional Paragraph D may be used when the alleged undue influence was merely the natural and permissible influence gained by the proponent through his or her kindness and affection toward the testator; it may be used with Optional Paragraph G when the benefit to the proponent under the will is not "undue" in view of the nature of the relationship between the testator and the proponent. Optional Paragraphs E and F deal with activities that may be a part of a campaign of undue influence but do not, by themselves, establish such influence.

The issue of undue influence in the procurement of a will requently arises in conjunction with the issues of testamentary incapacity and fraud, discussed in §§ 186.56 and 186.57.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel may discuss facts illustrating the closeness of the relationship between the decedent and the proponent accused of undue influence, and that a will favoring the proponent is a natural result of the proponent's kindness and affection rather than imposition or fraud [see Estate of Mann (1986) 184 Cal. App. 3d 593, 607, 229 Cal. Rptr. 225] .

This memorandum may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which the issue of due execution of the will arises. Thus, it may be combined with the points and authorities pertaining to a demurrer to an objection or petition contesting a will [see § 186.50].

[b] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 186.29 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Influence Must Destroy Testator's Free Agency

The facts and procedural background of Estate of Fritschi (1963) 60 Cal. 2d 367, 33 Cal. Rptr. 264, 384 P.2d 656 , are discussed in § 186.56[3][b]. In Fritschi, the California Supreme Court held that to destroy a will's validity, undue influence must destroy the testator's free agency and must substitute another's will for his or her own (60 Cal. 2d 367, 373) . The Court found insufficient evidence of undue influence, namely that the decedent's girlfriend was active in procuring the execution of the decedent's will, to invalidate the will. Mere general influence is not sufficient to show such procurement, nor is evidence that the alleged influencer had the opportunity and motivation to unduly influence the testator. A contestant must show that the influence was brought directly to bear on the testamentary act (60 Cal. 2d 367, 373-374) . The Court noted that the courts stringently protect the testamentary disposition against attacks of undue influence. The Court also noted that reviewing courts are often called on to strike down attempts of juries to invalidate wills on the ground of undue influence in order to indulge their own concepts of how testators should have disposed of their property (60 Cal. 2d 367, 373) .

[b] Mere Opportunity to Influence Testator's Mind Insufficient

The facts and procedural background of Estate of Mann (1986) 184 Cal. App. 3d 593, 229 Cal. Rptr. 225 are discussed in § 186.56[3][b]. In Mann, the court of appeal held that there was insufficient evidence to support the finding of undue influence. The mere fact that the will proponent had a close relationship with the testator and an opportunity to influence the testator was not sufficient to sustain a finding of undue influence, absent testimony showing that there was pressure operating directly on the testamentary act. This was so even though an interest or motive to unduly influence the testator was shown (184 Cal. App. 3d 593, 607) .

[c] Mere Kindness and Affection Toward Testator Insufficient

The facts and procedural background of Estate of Mann (1986) 184 Cal. App. 3d 593, 229 Cal. Rptr. 225 are discussed in § 186.56[3][b]. In Mann, the court of appeal held that influence gained by kindness and affection is not regarded as "undue" if no imposition or fraud is present. The court noted that the will was not unnatural, that the decedent and the alleged undue influencer had been close during their entire mutual lives, and that the alleged undue influencer took care of the decedent in her old age and she accepted and relied on him as her conservator. Under these circumstances, it was natural that the will would favor the alleged undue influencer (184 Cal. App. 3d 593, 607) .

[d] Procurement of Attorney to Prepare Will Insufficient

The facts and procedural background of Estate of Mann (1986) 184 Cal. App. 3d 593, 229 Cal. Rptr. 225 , are discussed in § 186.56[3][b]. In Mann, the court of appeal held that the mere fact that the alleged undue influencer procured the attorney who prepared the will in question was not sufficient "activity" in the procurement of the will to bring the presumption of undue influence into play. Likewise, evidence that the alleged undue influencer urged the testator to make a will was irrelevant, since there was no evidence he urged her to make any particular disposition (184 Cal. App. 3d 593, 608) .

[e] Presence at Execution of Will Insufficient

The facts and procedural background of Estate of Mann (1986) 184 Cal. App. 3d 593, 229 Cal. Rptr. 225 , are discussed in § 186.56[3][b]. In Mann, the court of appeal held that the fact that a beneficiary was present at the execution of the will was insufficient to establish that he exercised undue influence on the testator (184 Cal. App. 3d 593, 608) .

[f] Determination of Undue Profit Not Limited to Terms of Will

Estate of Sarabia (1990) 221 Cal. App. 3d 599, 270 Cal. Rptr. 560 , involved a will which left the decedent's entire estate to his manager/agent, with whom decedent had lived for the last seven years of his life. The estate was valued at approximately $500,000, most of which was the decedent's share of his deceased mother's estate. The will was offered for probate by the manager/agent and contested by the decedent's brother, who claimed that it was obtained through the manager/agent's undue influence. During their deliberations, the jury requested a definition of the word "undue." Over the contestant's objection, the court instructed the jury that "generally it is something that's unwarranted, excessive, inappropriate, unjustifiable, or improper." Shortly after receiving this instruction, the jury returned its special verdict finding that although the manager/agent was in a confidential relationship with the decedent and was active in procuring the will, he was not unduly benefitted by the will. The contestant appealed, alleging that the court erred in not instructing the jury that "undue benefit" has a purely quantitative meaning.

The court of appeal affirmed, noting that, as a general proposition, California law allows a testator to dispose of property as he or she sees fit without regard to whether the disposition is appropriate or fair. It then went on to state that undue influence is "a concept with a very definite meaning" (221 Cal. App. 3d 599, 604) . It refers to a situation in which extraordinary and abnormal pressure subverts independent free will and diverts it from its natural course in accordance with the dictates of another person (221 Cal. App. 3d 599, 605) . Reviewing a line of cases cited by the contestant as authority for his argument that "unduly benefitted" means merely that the beneficiary takes substantially more under the will he or she procured than he or she would otherwise have taken, the court found that none of the cases held "in the abstract that sole beneficiary status amounts to undue profit as a matter of law" (221 Cal. App. 3d 599, 606) . The quantitative standard proposed by the contestant for measuring undue profit was unworkable because: (1) it failed to provide criteria for determining whether a beneficiary would take "substantially more" under the will than otherwise; (2) it presumed that the contestant had some entitlement to the decedent's estate; and (3) it assumed that the amount of that entitlement was somehow self-evident. For the trier of fact to decide what influence is "undue" clearly entails a qualitative assessment of the relationship between the decedent and the beneficiary. To determine if the beneficiary's profit is "undue," the trier of fact must necessarily decide what profit would be "due." These determinations cannot be made in an evidentiary vacuum, but must be made from evidence concerning the respective relative standings of the beneficiary and the contestant to the decedent (221 Cal. App. 3d 599, 607) . The contestant's desire to limit the inquiry of the trier of the facts to the terms of the will would "transplant the law of intestate succession as the litmus for undue profit." The appellate court also pointed out that the contestant was only a collateral heir to the decedent and thus not a "natural object" of the decedent's testamentary disposition (221 Cal. App. 3d 599, 608) .

192 of 199 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 18 Chapters 180-189 PRETRIAL PROCEEDINGS---to---PROBATE OF WILLS
CHAPTER 186 PROBATE OF WILLS
PART II. FORMS
B. Opposing Will Contests

18-186 California Points & Authorities § 186.58A

§ 186.58A Opposing Contest of Will--By Demurrer to or Objection or Petition Contesting Will--Gift to "Disqualified Person" Not Invalidated Under Prob. Code § 21350 Because Statutory Exception in Prob. Code § 21351 Applies

[1] FORM

THE TRANSFER TO _____ [name of transferee] IS NOT INVALID UNDER PROB. CODE § 21350 BECAUSE _____ [select appropriate alternative below]

[EITHER]

_____ [name of transferor/testator] IS _____ [RELATED BY _____ (BLOOD or MARRIAGE) TO or A COHABITANT WITH or THE REGISTERED DOMESTIC PARTNER OF] THE _____ [TRANSFEREE or PERSON WHO DRAFTED THE WILL].

[OR]

THE WILL WAS REVIEWED BY AN INDEPENDENT ATTORNEY WHO (1) COUNSELED THE TESTATOR ABOUT THE NATURE AND CONSEQUENCES OF THE INTENDED TRANSFER, (2) ATTEMPTED TO DETERMINE IF THE INTENDED CONSEQUENCE IS THE RESULT OF FRAUD, MENACE, DURESS, OR UNDUE INFLUENCE, AND (3) SIGNED AND DELIVERED TO THE TESTATOR A CERTIFICATE OF INDEPENDENT REVIEW MEETING STATUTORY REQUIREMENTS.

[OR]

AFTER FULL DISCLOSURE OF THE RELATIONSHIPS OF THE PERSONS INVOLVED, THE INSTRUMENT WAS APPROVED PURSUANT TO AN ORDER OF COURT UNDER PROB. CODE § 2580.

[OR]

CLEAR AND CONVINCING EVIDENCE EXISTS THAT THE TRANSFER WAS NOT THE PRODUCT OF FRAUD, MENACE, DURESS, OR UNDUE INFLUENCE.

[OR]

THE TRANSFEREE, _____ [name], IS _____ [A _____ (FEDERAL or STATE or LOCAL) PUBLIC ENTITY or _____ (AN ENTITY or A TRUST HOLDING AN INTEREST FOR AN ENTITY) THAT QUALIFIES FOR AN EXEMPTION FROM TAXATION UNDER INTERNAL REVENUE CODE §_____ (501(c)(3) or 501(c)(19)].

[OR]

THE TRANSFER DOES NOT EXCEED THE SUM OF $3,000 AND THE VALUE OF _____ [name of transferor/testator]'S ESTATE EXCEEDS $100,000.

[OR]

_____ [name of transferor/testator] WAS A NONRESIDENT OF CALIFORNIA WHO WAS NOT A RESIDENT AT THE TIME THE WILL WAS EXECUTED, AND THE WILL WAS NOT SIGNED IN CALIFORNIA.

[CONTINUE]

A. Transfer Is Not Invalid Under Prob. Code § 21350 if Statutory Exceptions Apply. A donative transfer to a person who is a member of a class listed in Prob. Code § 21350 is not invalidated by that statute if any of the exceptions listed in Prob. Code § 21351 apply (Prob. Code § 21351).

[Select the appropriate alternative(s) from among the following optional provisions]

B. Exception Exists for Relatives, Cohabitants, and Domestic Partners. Probate Code § 21350 does not apply if the transferor is related by blood or marriage to, is a cohabitant with, or is the registered domestic partner, pursuant to Division 2.5 of the Family Code [Fam. Code § 297 et seq.], of the transferee or the person who drafted the instrument. For purposes of this section, "related by blood or marriage" includes persons within the fifth degree or heirs of the transferor (Prob. Code § 21351(a), (g)).

C. Exception Exists for Transfers Reviewed by Independent Counsel. Probate Code § 21350 does not apply if the instrument is reviewed by an independent attorney who (1) counsels the client (transferor) about the nature and consequences of the intended transfer, (2) attempts to determine if the intended consequence is the result of fraud, menace, duress, or undue influence, and (3) signs and delivers to the transferor an original certificate of independent review in substantially the form specified by law, with a copy delivered to the drafter (Prob. Code § 21351(b)).

D. Exception Exists for Court-Approved Acts by Conservator. Probate Code § 21350 does not apply if, after full disclosure of the relationships of the persons involved, the instrument is approved pursuant to an order under Article 10 of Chapter 6 of Part 4 of Division 4, which authorizes a conservator or other interested person to file a petition for a court order authorizing or requiring the conservator to take a proposed action for specified purposes relating to the conservatorship, including the making of a will for a conservatee (Prob. Code § 21351(c); see Prob. Code § 2580 et seq.).

E. Exception Exists When Court Determines That Transfer Was Not Product of Fraud, Menace, Duress, or Undue Influence. Probate Code § 21350 does not apply if the court determines, upon clear and convincing evidence (not based solely upon the testimony of any person described in Prob. Code § 21350(a)), that the transfer was not the product of fraud, menace, duress, or undue influence, provided that the instrument either (1) does not make a transfer to a person who drafted the instrument; (2) was executed on or before July 1, 1993, by a person who was a California resident at the time the instrument was executed; or (3) was executed by California resident who was not a resident at the time the instrument was executed (Prob. Code § 21351(d), (e); see Rice v. Clark (2002) 28 Cal. 4th 89, 98, 120 Cal. Rptr. 2d 522, 47 P.3d 300).

F. Exception Exists for Transfers to Public or Charitable Entities. Probate Code § 21350 does not apply if the transferee is a federal, state, or local public entity, an entity that qualifies for an exemption from taxation under Internal Revenue Code § 501(c)(3) or 501(c)(19), or a trust holding an interest for this entity, but only to the extent of the interest of the entity, or the trustee of this trust (Prob. Code § 21351(f)).

G. Exception Exists for Transfers Under $3,000. Probate Code § 21350 does not apply if the transfer does not exceed $3,000 and the total value of the estate exceeds $100,000 (Prob. Code § 21351(h); see Prob. Code § 13100).

H. Exception Exists for Transfers by Nonresidents. Probate Code § 21350 does not apply if transfer is made by an instrument executed by a nonresident of California who was not a resident at the time the instrument was executed, and that was not signed within California (Prob. Code § 21351(i)). [Add if appropriate: This exception exempts from Prob. Code § 21350 donative transfers in instruments executed outside the State of California when the transferor was a nonresident of California at the time the instrument was signed, whether or not the transferor later becomes a resident of California (Estate of Clementi (2008) 166 Cal. App. 4th 375, 383, 82 Cal. Rptr. 3d 685).]

[2] Comment

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of (1) a demurrer to an objection to a petition for probate of a will; (2) a petition to revoke probate of a will; or (3) any other situation in which the opposing party is seeking to invalidate a gift under Prob. Code § 21350. The grounds asserted are that one or more of the exceptions specified in Probate Code § 21351 apply. If one or more of the statutory exceptions apply, Prob. Code § 21350 is inapplicable to the transfer and the gift cannot be invalidated under that section [Prob. Code §§ 21350(a), 21351], although it still may be subject to attack under traditional grounds of fraud, duress, menace, or undue influence [see §§ 186.28 (fraud), 186.29 (undue influence)].

Paragraph A of the form states the basic rule. Paragraphs B through H deal with the specific statutory exceptions to the rule of Prob. Code § 21350, and should be included as appropriate to the specific grounds being asserted. The corresponding introductory language for each of the statutory exceptions appears at the beginning of the form.

Paragraph B should be used if the ground being asserted is that the transferor is related by blood or marriage to, is a cohabitant with, or is the registered domestic partner, of the transferee or the person who drafted the instrument [Prob. Code § 21351(a)]. For purposes of this exception "related by blood or marriage" includes persons within the fifth degree, or heirs of the transferor [Prob. Code § 21351(g)].

Paragraph C should be used if the ground being asserted is that the instrument has been reviewed by an independent attorney who has counseled the transferor about the nature and consequences of the intended transfer, attempted to determine if the intended consequence is the result of fraud, menace, duress, or undue influence, and executed a certificate of independent review meeting the statutory requirements [Prob. Code § 21351(b)].

Paragraph D should be used if the ground being asserted is that the instrument was approved pursuant to a court order under Prob. Code § 2580 et seq. (relating to petitions to authorize or require a conservator to perform specified actions) after full disclosure of the relationships of the persons involved [Prob. Code § 21351(c)].

Paragraph E should be used if the ground being asserted is that there is clear and convincing evidence that the transfer was not the product of fraud, menace, duress, or undue influence. When this ground is asserted, the defendant is required to present evidence sufficient to make such a showing, and the court's finding cannot be based solely on the testimony of any person who is a "disqualified person" in any of the categories listed in Prob. Code § 21350(a) [Prob. Code § 21351(d); see Rice v. Clark (2002) 28 Cal. 4th 89, 98, 120 Cal. Rptr. 2d 522, 47 P.3d 300] . Thus, the memorandum should state the nature of the evidence that will be presented to the court. Note that a party cannot rely on this exemption if the transferee is also the person who drafted the instrument and the instrument was executed after July 1, 1993, by a person who was a resident of California at the time the instrument was executed. In the latter case, the presumption of invalidity is conclusive rather than rebuttable, and the transferee does not have the option of presenting contrary evidence [Prob. Code § 21351(e); see Rice v. Clark (2002) 28 Cal. 4th 89, 98, 120 Cal. Rptr. 2d 522, 47 P.3d 300] .

Paragraph F should be used if the transferee is a governmental unit or a charitable entity [Prob. Code § 21351(f)].

Paragraph G should be used if the transfer does not exceed $3,000 and the total value of the estate exceeds $100,000 [Prob. Code § 21351(h); see Prob. Code § 13100].

Paragraph H should be used if the transfer is made by an instrument executed by a nonresident of California who was not a resident at the time the instrument was executed, and that was not signed within California [Prob. Code § 21351(i)].

[b] Opposing Memoranda

This form is designed to oppose the form in § 186.29A in an appropriate case.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Exception Exists When Court Determines That Transfer Was Not Product of Fraud, Menace, Duress, or Undue Influence

Rice v. Clark (2002) 28 Cal. 4th 89, 120 Cal. Rptr. 2d 522, 47 P.3d 300 , involved an action under Prob. Code § 21350(a)(4), which includes in the category of presumptively disqualified persons any fiduciary who transcribes the testamentary instrument or causes it to be transcribed. In its analysis of the statutory scheme established by Prob. Code §§ 21350 and 21351, the California Supreme Court addressed the nature of the presumption of disqualification established by Prob. Code § 21350. The Court noted that Prob. Code § 21350 applies to all donative transfers by instrument, not only to wills and other testamentary transfers, but it invalidates only gifts to drafters and to fiduciaries (and to persons close to them) who transcribe the instrument or cause it to be transcribed. The Court stated that unlike the common law, Prob. Code § 21350 does not require, as the predicate for a presumption of invalidity, that the transferee would receive an "undue" benefit. Rather, the transferee bears an elevated proof burden in rebutting the presumption: he or she must show the absence of undue influence, fraud or duress by clear and convincing evidence, and without reliance on the testimony of any presumptively disqualified person. The Court further noted that Prob. Code § 21351(e)(1) makes the presumption of disqualification conclusive as to a drafter-transferee. The Court stated, by way of example, that assuming no other exception in Prob. Code § 21351 applied, an attorney drafted a client's will so as to benefit himself or herself would be conclusively disqualified, but if the same attorney drafted the will so as to benefit the attorney's relative or law partner, the presumption would be rebuttable, but only by clear and convincing evidence--other than the drafter's testimony--that the client freely chose that disposition (28 Cal. 4th 89, 98) .

[b] Exception Exists for Transfers by Nonresidents

In Estate of Clementi (2008) 166 Cal. App. 4th 375, 383, 82 Cal. Rptr. 3d 685 , the testator executed his will while living in Philadelphia, but was a resident of California at the time of his death. The testator asked his accountant, who apparently was his only friend, to prepare a will, instead of having it prepared by an attorney. The accountant wrote out the will by hand and read it to the testator, who signed it in the presence of two witnesses. The will, among other provisions, gave $100,000 to the accountant outright, named him to administer the estate, and gave the residue of the estate to a charitable trust or foundation to be administered by the accountant. At the time of death the value of the estate was approximately $3 million. Relatives of the decedent filed a petition for revocation of the probate, damages for elder abuse and negligence, and for rescission, restitution, and an award of attorney fees. The probate court found that the will was valid, and the relatives appealed (166 Cal. App. 4th 374, 378-379) .

Prob. Code § 21351(i) exempts, from the general restrictions in Prob. Code § 21350 on transfers for the benefit of will drafters, transfers executed by a nonresident of California who was not a resident at the time the instrument was executed and that was not signed within California. Appellants argued that this exception does not apply if the decedent was a resident of California at the time of death. However, after analyzing the legislative history of the statute, the court concluded that the legislature intended to exempt from Prob. Code § 21350 all donative transfers in instruments executed outside California by persons who were not residents of California at the time of execution of the instrument. Accordingly, it held that Prob. Code § 21351(i) exempts donative transfers in instruments executed outside California when the transferor was a nonresident of California at the time the instrument was signed, whether or not the transferor later becomes a resident of California. Thus, even though the testator was a resident of California at the time of death, Prob. Code § 21350 was inapplicable to his will, since he signed it in Pennsylvania while a Pennsylvania resident (166 Cal. App. 4th 374, 383-384) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 18 Chapters 180-189 PRETRIAL PROCEEDINGS---to---PROBATE OF WILLS
CHAPTER 186 PROBATE OF WILLS
PART II. FORMS
B. Opposing Will Contests

18-186 California Points & Authorities § 186.58B

§ 186.58B Opposing Contest of Will--By Demurrer to or Objection or Petition Contesting Will--Gift Not Invalidated Under Prob. Code § 21350 Because Donee Did Not Transcribe Instrument or Cause It To Be Transcribed [Prob. Code § 21350(a)(4)]

[1] FORM

THE TRANSFER TO _____ [name of transferee] IS NOT INVALID UNDER PROB. CODE § 21350(a)(4) BECAUSE THE _____ [state relationship to transferor-testator, e.g., CONSERVATOR or TRUSTEE or specify other fiduciary relationship], _____ [name of fiduciary], DID NOT TRANSCRIBE THE WILL OR CAUSE IT TO BE TRANSCRIBED.

A. Fiduciary Must Direct Document to Be Written Out in Final Form. To cause a document to be transcribed within the meaning of Prob. Code § 21350(a)(4), which includes in the category of presumptively disqualified persons any fiduciary who transcribes the testamentary instrument or causes it to be transcribed, must necessarily involve directing the drafted document to be written out in its final form (Estate of Swetmann (2000) 85 Cal. App. 4th 807, 102 Cal. Rptr. 2d 457).

B. Providing Information, Assistance, and Encouragement Is Insufficient Basis for Disqualification. A person who merely provides information needed in the preparation of an instrument, and who encourages the donor to execute it, but does not direct or otherwise participate in the transcription of the instrument to final written form, is not a person who transcribes the instrument or causes it to be transcribed for purposes of Prob. Code § 21350(a)(4) (Rice v. Clark (2002) 28 Cal. 4th 89, 101-105, 120 Cal. Rptr. 2d 522, 47 P.3d 300).

C. Procuring Estate Planning Services Is Insufficient Basis for Disqualification. A fiduciary who procures estate planning services for the donor and pays for those services out of the donor's funds, but does not the drafted document to be written out in its final form, is not a person who transcribes the instrument or causes it to be transcribed for purposes of Prob. Code § 21350(a)(4) (Estate of Swetmann (2000) 85 Cal. App. 4th 807, 819-820), 102 Cal. Rptr. 2d 457).

[2] Comment

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of (1) a demurrer to an objection to a petition for probate of a will; (2) a petition to revoke probate of a will; or (3) any other situation in which the opposing party is seeking to invalidate a gift under Prob. Code § 21350(a)(4), which invalidates donative transfers to any person who has a fiduciary relationship with the transferor (including but not limited to a conservator or trustee), who transcribes the instrument or causes it to be transcribed. The grounds asserted are that in order for a transfer to be invalidated on this basis, the fiduciary's participation must necessarily involve directing the drafted document to be written out in its final form, and that more indirect involvement, such as procuring estate planning services or providing information and encouragement to the transferor, is an insufficient basis for invalidating the gift.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the point of law stated. Specifically, counsel should explain the nature and extent of the fiduciary's participation in the preparation ofthe will, and show that this participation was ancillary to the preparation and execution of the will and did not direct the will to be written out in its final form.

[b] Opposing Memoranda

This form is designed to oppose the form in § 186.29A in an appropriate case.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Fiduciary Must Direct Document to Be Written out in Final Form

In Estate of Swetmann (2000) 85 Cal. App. 4th 807, 102 Cal. Rptr. 2d 457 , a decedent left the residue of his estate to his conservator, who had procured for the decedent the estate planning company which produced the will, introduced the company representative to the decedent, and, in his capacity as conservator, paid for the services, but who had nothing to do with the contents of the will or its physical preparation. The trial court concluded that by virtue of those activities, the conservator "cause the will to be transcribed" within the meaning of Prob. Code § 21350(a)(4).

The appellate court reversed. The court first observed that the dictionary meaning of "transcribe" mean to make a written copy of the material. In this case, the conservator neither copied the will nor reduced it to writing; the transcription was done elsewhere by employees of the estate planning company. The focal point of the dispute was whether the conservator had "caused" the will to be transcribed. The court stated that the latter phrase obviously encompasses efforts to have someone else do the transcribing. In this case, the trial court found that the conservator had called the estate planning firm and met with its representative, that he had brought the representative to the transferor's house, and that he wrote a check from the transferor's funds for the will and trust documents. The court stated that it was not persuaded that these activities fell within the meaning the statutory phrase (85 Cal. App. 4th 807, 818) . Although the word "cause" does not reveal what activities the Legislature intended to be disqualifying, the Legislature has obviously drawn a distinction between drafting an instrument and transcribing it. Thus, "transcribing" must be construed to mean something separate from the acts of creating or composing the contents of the document. In the court's view, transcribing is the act that follows the composition of the document and reduces the creation to its final, written form, and a "person who causes the document to be transcribed" is one who directs the drafted document to be written out in its final form. The court concluded that, as a matter of law, the conservator's acts did not cause the will or trust to be transcribed (85 Cal. App. 4th 807, 819-820)

[b] Providing Information, Assistance, and Encouragement Is Insufficient Basis for Disqualification

In Rice v. Clark (2002) 28 Cal. 4th 89, 120 Cal. Rptr. 2d 522, 47 P.3d 300 , a fiduciary provided information needed in the preparation of a will and trust and encouraged the donor to execute it, but did not direct or otherwise participate in the transcription of the instrument to final written form. The trial court found that while a fiduciary relationship existed and that the fiduciary was helpful to the testator, "was the closest human being in her life," and had exercised considerable influence over her, he did not meet the other criteria of Prob. Code § 21350. To cause an instrument to be transcribed within the meaning of Prob. Code § 21350(a)(4), the trial court concluded, is to take an action "that leads directly, substantially, and uninterruptedly to the writing down or causing to be printed the words of another." While the fiduciary had taken part in "arranging for preparation" of the challenged instruments, he did not draft the instruments, transcribe them, or cause them to be transcribed because "he did none of the thinking or writing himself nor did he order or request any other person to do so" (28 Cal. 4th 89, 95-96) .

The Court of Appeal affirmed, rejecting the plaintiff's contention that the trial court's definition of "causes it to be transcribed" was too narrow. The appellate court conclude that although "[i]n the largest sense, anyone who encourages another to have a will or trust drafted can be said to be a cause of its ultimate transcription, the Legislature did not intend such a broad definition." The statute was never intended to apply to every circumstance in which a fiduciary may have improperly induced an elderly person to name him beneficiary of her estate," though in such cases a common law presumption of undue influence, not raised in this case, may arise (28 Cal. 4th 89, 96) . The Supreme Court granted the plaintiff's petition for review.

After discussing undue influence generally and the history of Prob. Code § 21350 et seq., the court noted that the lower courts construed the meaning of "transcribe" in accordance with Estate of Swetmann (2000) 85 Cal. App. 4th 807, 102 Cal. Rptr. 2d 457 , discussed in [3][a], above, as limited to direct involvement in the instrument's transcription, as by ordering another person to transcribe a document. After reviewing the legislative history and purpose of Prob. Code § 21350, the Supreme Court agreed with the Swetmann court's analysis. The court stated that while virtually anyone acquainted with a testator might in some circumstance use fraud, duress, or undue influence to obtain a testamentary gift, those who directly participate in the instrument's physical preparation, whether by drafting or transcribing it, are particularly well situated to insert gifts to themselves, their families, or business associates, and to secure the instrument's execution. Transcription--the process of reducing an instrument to final written form--obviously carries with it the opportunity to fraudulently alter the terms ofthe document to the transcriber's advantage. In the same manner, one who directs an instrument's transcription easily can cause the inclusion of provisions benefiting himself or herself, as can a person who drafts an instrument. "[O]nly as to this restricted class of persons directly involved in the donative instrument's physical preparation did the Legislature, in enacting [Prob. Code § 21350 et seq.], prohibit the receipt of gifts by a stricter standard than the preexisting law provided" (28 Cal. 4th 89, 103-104) .

The Court pointed out that in this case, the fiduciary did not direct or oversee, or otherwise participate directly in, transcription of the will or trust. Both instruments were transcribed by the secretary of the attorney who prepared the estate plan at the attorney's direction. The fiduciary facilitated preparation and execution of the instruments by giving the attorney's office a list of the testator's assets that were to be placed in the trust and by arranging appointments for the testator and driving her to them. The fiduciary urged the attorney's secretary to prepare the documents promptly, and encouraged the testator to execute the will and trust after she initially balked at doing so. The fiduciary also was present at meetings where the disposition of the estate was discussed, but he did not direct the attorney or anyone else to include any particular gifts or other provisions in the instruments. The Supreme Court concluded that the fiduciary materially assisted the testator to dictate the contents of her will and trust to an attorney and to execute the instruments drafted by the attorney, but did not himself directly participate in transcribing the instruments. For this reason he did not "cause" the instruments to be transcribed (28 Cal. 4th 89, 105) .

[c] Procuring Estate Planning Services Is Insufficient Basis for Disqualification

Estate of Swetmann (2000) 85 Cal. App. 4th 807, 102 Cal. Rptr. 2d 457 , is discussed in [3][a], above.

194 of 199 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 18 Chapters 180-189 PRETRIAL PROCEEDINGS---to---PROBATE OF WILLS
CHAPTER 186 PROBATE OF WILLS
PART II. FORMS
B. Opposing Will Contests

18-186 California Points & Authorities § 186.59

§ 186.59 Opposing Contest of Will--By Demurrer to Objection or Petition Contesting Will [Prob. Code §§ 8251, 8271(b)]--Will Not Subject to Unfulfilled Condition

[1] FORM

[The following should be combined with a general memorandum opposing a will contest or a petition to revoke probate of a will (see § 186.50), or may be used in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE COURT SHOULD DISMISS THE _____ [OBJECTION TO THE PETITION FOR PROBATE or PETITION TO REVOKE PROBATE] OF THE _____ [WILL or CODICIL] OF _____ [name of decedent] BECAUSE _____ [specify language in the will alleged to be an unfulfilled condition, e.g. THE LANGUAGE IN THE _____ (WILL or CODICIL) STATING THAT DECEDENT WISHED TO DISPOSE OF HIS/HER PROPERTY "IN CASE [HE/SHE] SHOULD HAVE A MISHAP AND DIE DUE TO SOME UNFORSEEN ACCIDENT" WAS ACTUALLY A STATEMENT OF DECEDENT'S MOTIVE FOR MAKING THE WILL RATHER THAN AN UNFULFILLED CONDITION].

A. Validity of Will May Depend on Condition in Its Terms. [see § 186.30, Paragraph A.]

B. Whether Will Is Conditional Depends on Testator's Intent. Whether an instrument is a conditional will depends on the language used by the decedent and his or her intention in using it; to establish a condition, the will must contain language that clearly indicates a purpose to limit its operation (Estate of Desmond (1963) 223 Cal. App. 2d 211, 213-214, 35 Cal. Rptr. 737).

[Optional] C. Expression of Inducement Distinguished From Condition. A will is not be regarded as conditional when it reasonably can be held that the testator was merely expressing his or her motive or inducement to make it (Estate of Desmond (1963) 223 Cal. App. 2d 211, 214, 35 Cal. Rptr. 737).

[Optional] D. Factors to Be Considered to Determine Whether Will Is Conditional. The circumstances that the court may take into consideration in determining whether the decedent regarded a contingency as relating to the motive that induced the making of the will, rather than as a condition, include: (1) the language of the document in context; (2) the circumstances surrounding the execution of the document and its delivery; (3) the testator's state of health; (4) the testator's plans for the future; (5) the preservation of the document, particularly after the contingency has failed; (6) instructions on delivery; (7) subsequent declarations of the testator; (8) lack of a subsequent will; (9) lack of alternative disposition of the property; and (10) the amount of the estate disposed of by the instrument (Estate of Desmond (1963) 223 Cal. App. 2d 211, 214, 35 Cal. Rptr. 737).

[Optional] E. Extrinsic Evidence Admissible to Determine Whether Will Conditional. Extrinsic evidence, including declarations of the testator, is admissible to show that his or her intention was to make an absolute and not a conditional will (Estate of Desmond (1963) 223 Cal. App. 2d 211, 214, 35 Cal. Rptr. 737).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of a demurrer to (1) an objection to a petition for probate of a will, or (2) a petition to revoke probate of a will, when the contestant alleges that the will is subject to unfulfilled conditions appearing on its face [see Prob. Code § 6105]. Optional Paragraph Cmay be used when the alleged conditional language is merely an expression of the inducement to make the will. Optional Paragraphs D and E may be used when the proponent seeks to introduce evidence of the surrounding circumstances or parol evidence, including declarations of the testator, to show that the testator's intent was not to make the will conditional.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus counsel should set forth the specific language in the will or codicil that indicates that the instrument's validity is not conditional; any language quoted by the contestant in abbreviated form that the contestant claims is a condition should be clarified and set forth in its proper context.

This memorandum may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which the issue of due execution of the will arises. Thus, it may be combined with the points and authorities pertaining to a demurrer to an objection or petition contesting a will [see § 186.50].

[b] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 186.30 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Whether Will Is Conditional Depends on Testator's Intent

In Estate of Desmond (1963) 223 Cal. App. 2d 211, 35 Cal. Rptr. 737 , two of decedent's children sought to revoke probate of decedent's will, which left most of decedent's property to the contestants' brother. The contestants claimed that the will was a conditional one. The decedent made it about eight years before her death, before she took a short cross-country trip. She gave the document to one of her daughters for safekeeping, and retrieved it from the daughter when she returned from the trip. Eight years later, just before leaving her residence for a convalescent hospital to recover from a heart attack, decedent placed the will in a safe in her bedroom. She placed it on its edge with the face of the envelope facing the door of the safe, in a striking, arresting position immediately observable to anyone opening the safe. The allegedly conditional language of the will read as follows: "The enclosed should convey my wishes of disposition to be made of any and all of my personal and tangible possessions in case I should have a mishap and not return due to some unforeseen accident" and "[m]y last will and testament before leaving on a short trip." The trial court heard testimony from various family members concerning statements made by the decedent in the years between the execution of the will and her death, to the effect that she had made or was going to make another will. No other will was ever found. The trial court ruled that the decedent did not intend the language as a condition precedent to the effectiveness of the will, but as an expression of inducement. It denied the petition to revoke probate, and one of the contestants appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, stating that whether an instrument is a conditional will depends on the language used by the testator and his or her intention in using it. To establish a condition, a will must contain language which clearly indicates a purpose to limit its operation (223 Cal. App. 2d 211, 213-214) . The court found that the by retaining the will for eight years after the trip that induced her to make it and by placing it in her safe before leaving for the convalescent home, decedent indicated that she considered the will to be effective notwithstanding the fact that it was written in contemplation of a long-ago trip (223 Cal. App. 2d 211, 215-216) .

[b] Expression of Inducement Distinguished From Condition

The facts and procedural background of Estate of Desmond (1963) 223 Cal. App. 2d 211, 35 Cal. Rptr. 737 , are discussed under § 186.59[3][a]. In Desmond, the court of appeal distinguished between an expression of the inducement to make a will and a condition to the validity of the will. The court held that a will may not be deemed conditional if it can reasonably be held that the testator in using the language in question was merely expressing his or her motive or inducement to make the will (223 Cal. App. 2d 211, 214) . After considering the evidence and several specified circumstances for determining whether a will is conditional [see § 186.59[3][c]] the court held that there was substantial evidence to sustain the trial court's finding that decedent's will was unconditional (223 Cal. App. 2d 211, 213-216) .

[c] Factors to Be Considered to Determine Whether Will Is Conditional

The facts and procedural background of Estate of Desmond (1963) 223 Cal. App. 2d 211, 35 Cal. Rptr. 737 , are discussed under § 186.59[3][a]. In Desmond, the court of appeal stated that the circumstances which the court may take into consideration in determining whether a contingency expressed in a will relates to the motive inducing the making of the will, rather than to a condition to the validity of the will, include: (1) the language of the document in context; (2) the circumstances surrounding the execution of the document and its delivery; (3) the testator's state of health; (4) his or her plans for the future; (5) the preservation of the document, particularly after the contingency has failed; (6) instructions on delivery; (7) subsequent declarations of the testator; (8) lack of a subsequent will; (9) lack of alternative disposition of the property; and (10) the amount of the estate disposed of by the instrument (223 Cal. App. 2d 211, 214) . After considering these circumstances in light of the evidence, the court held that there was substantial evidence to sustain the trial court's finding that decedent's will was unconditional (223 Cal. App. 2d 211, 213-216) .

[d] Extrinsic Evidence Admissible to Determine Whether Will Conditional

The facts and procedural background of Estate of Desmond (1963) 223 Cal. App. 2d 211, 35 Cal. Rptr. 737 , are discussed under § 186.59[3][a]. In Desmond, the court of appeal held that extrinsic evidence is admissible to show whether the testator intended to make an absolute or conditional will (223 Cal. App. 2d 211, 214) . Thus, the court held that extrinsic evidence relating to the circumstances surrounding the making and retention of decedent's will was sufficient to sustain the trial court's finding that the will was unconditional (223 Cal. App. 2d 211, 213-216) .

195 of 199 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 18 Chapters 180-189 PRETRIAL PROCEEDINGS---to---PROBATE OF WILLS
CHAPTER 186 PROBATE OF WILLS
PART II. FORMS
B. Opposing Will Contests

18-186 California Points & Authorities § 186.60

§ 186.60 Opposing Contest of Will--By Demurrer to Objection or Petition Contesting Will [Prob. Code §§ 8251, 8271(b)]--Will Not Revoked by Subsequent Will

[1] FORM

[The following should be combined with a general form of memorandum of points and authorities opposing a will contest or a petition to revoke probate of a will (see § 186.50), or may be used in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE COURT SHOULD DISMISS THE _____ [OBJECTION TO THE PETITION FOR PROBATE or PETITION TO REVOKE PROBATE] OF THE _____ [_____ (specify, e.g., FIRST) WILL or CODICIL] OF _____ [name of decedent] BECAUSE _____ [specify facts showing that the will or codicil was not revoked by a subsequent instrument, e.g., DECEDENT DID NOT INTEND TO REVOKE THE _____ (_____ [specify, e.g., FIRST] WILL or CODICIL) BY THE (_____ [specify, e.g., SECOND] WILL or CODICIL), AS MANIFESTED BY THE FACT THAT DECEDENT'S GENERAL TESTAMENTARY PLAN TO DIVIDE HIS/HER ESTATE BETWEEN HIS/HER SONS WAS SIMILARLY AND CLEARLY EXPRESSED IN BOTH INSTRUMENTS].

A. Will May Be Revoked by Subsequent Will. [See § 186.31, Paragraph A.]

[Optional] B. Court May Preserve Prior Will Provisions That Are Consistent With Subsequent Will. When there is doubt concerning the intent of the testator regarding the revocation of a prior will by a subsequent will, and the two wills are not wholly inconsistent, a court may preserve the provisions of the prior will that are not inconsistent with those of the subsequent will (Estate of Johnson (1979) 91 Cal. App. 3d 800, 807, 154 Cal. Rptr. 586 (construing former Prob. Code §§ 72 and 101).

[Optional] C. Prior Will Revoked to Give Effect to Subsequent Will Remains in Effect If Latter Will Ineffective. Under the doctrine of dependent relative revocation, an earlier will, revoked only to give effect to a later one on the supposition that the later one becomes effective, remains in effect to the extent that the latter proves ineffective (Estate of Anderson (1997) 56 Cal. App. 4th 235, 242-243, 65 Cal. Rptr. 2d 307).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a demurrer to (1) an objection to a petition for probate of a will, or (2) a petition to revoke probate of a will, when the contestant alleges that the will is revoked by a subsequent will [see Prob. Code § 6120(a)]. Optional Paragraph B may be used when the proponent's position is that only certain provisions of the prior will are inconsistent with the subsequent one and that the consistent provisions of the prior will should be permitted to stand. Optional Paragraph C may be used when the doctrine of dependent relative revocation is an issue in the case.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, in an appropriate case counsel may discuss facts showing that there are provisions in a prior will that should be preserved because they are consistent with provisions in a subsequent will [see Estate of Johnson (1979) 91 Cal. App. 3d 800, 807, 154 Cal. Rptr. 586] .

This memorandum may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which the issue of due execution of the will arises. Thus, it may be combined with the points and authorities pertaining to a demurrer to an objection or petition contesting a will [see § 186.50].

[b] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 186.31 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Court May Preserve Prior Will Provisions That Are Consistent With Subsequent Will

Estate of Johnson (1979) 91 Cal. App. 3d 800, 154 Cal. Rptr. 586 involved two wills. The children of the testator's predeceased daughter sought to invalidate the first will, under which they were disinherited, on the ground that it was inconsistent with the second will. Since the second will did not mention them, invalidating the first will would enable them to claim an intestate share of the estate as pretermitted heirs. The first will was a formal, witnessed will prepared by an attorney. It contained the usual preliminary recitals, directions for payment of expenses, and provisions concerning executors. It gave $10,000 to a charity, and divided the residue of the estate between the testator's two surviving children. The gift to one son was to go to the other son if the former did not survive the testator. The gift to the other son was to go to his children if he did not survive the testator. The second will, executed about three years after the first one, was a brief holographic instrument. It directed that the estate be divided equally between the two sons, and that if one of them predeceased the testator the other take the entire estate. Like the first will, it appointed the sons as co-executors of the estate. It omitted the bequest to the charity, and did not mention the grandchildren at all. No one questioned the validity of either instrument; the sole issue was whether the second will revoked the first. The trial court held that the second will was not wholly inconsistent with and therefore did not revoke the first will.

The court of appeal affirmed, stating that in cases in which the first and second will are not wholly inconsistent, the rule of construction is to preserve the contents of the prior will, wholly or in part, rather than declare a total revocation by inference (91 Cal. App. 3d 800, 807) . The court held the fact that a second will provides a complete disposition of the testator's property may be an important consideration in determining whether it revoked the first will, but is not necessarily controlling. There was no "implicit revocation" of the first will simply because the second will made a complete disposition of the estate (91 Cal. App. 3d 800, 806) . The omission of the charitable bequest and the direction that the survivor of the sons take the entire estate rather than the children of one of the sons taking his share constituted only minor inconsistencies between the two wills. The testator's general testamentary plan to divide her estate between her two sons was similarly and clearly expressed in both wills (91 Cal. App. 3d 800, 807) .

[b] Prior Will Revoked to Give Effect to Subsequent Will Remains in Effect If Latter Will Ineffective

In Estate of Anderson (1997) 56 Cal. App. 4th 235, 65 Cal. Rptr. 2d 307 , a decedent executed a will in 1993 that expressly revoked all prior wills, but that inadvertently failed to exercise a power of appointment she had previously exercised in a 1982 will. After she died in 1995, one of the decedent's step-grandchildren filed a will contest. Applying the doctrine of dependent relative revocation, the trial court admitted to probate the 1993 will and the article of the 1982 will that exercised the power of appointment, finding that the 1993 will was not effective to revoke that article (56 Cal. App. 4th 235, 237-242) .

The court of appeal began by addressing the issue of whether a general revocation clause in a will can encompass a power of appointment exercised in a prior will, and held that it could. It noted that, as a general rule, the presence of a revoking clause in a later writing is accepted as conclusive proof of an intention on the part of a decedent to nullify the provisions of an earlier instrument. In construing a general revocation clause, an exercise of a power of appointment in an earlier will is treated in the same manner as any other provision of that will. Thus, although the testator had to mention specifically the power of appointment in order to exercise it in the first will, she did not have to make a specific reference to that power in order to revoke it in the second will. The revocation clause in the second will, which revoked all prior wills, was sufficient to revoke the article of the first will that provided for the power, unless the doctrine of dependent relative revocation was applicable (56 Cal. App. 4th 235, 242) .

Under that doctrine, an earlier will, which is revoked only to give effect to a later one on the assumption that the later one will become effective, remains in effect to the extent that the later will proves ineffective (56 Cal. App. 4th 235, 242-243) . The doctrine is designed to carry out the testator's probable intention when there is no reason to assume that the testator intended to revoke the earlier will if the later will should become inoperative (56 Cal. App. 4th 235, 243) . The court of appeal went on to hold that the trial court properly applied the doctrine of dependent relative revocation, because the 1993 will purported to revoke the testator's prior exercise of the power of appointment, which resulted in substantial gifts to the testator's step-grandchildren contrary to her express intention to exercise the power solely for the benefit of her natural daughter (56 Cal. App. 4th 235, 245) . In determining whether a will has been revoked, a court may consider extrinsic evidence of the testator's intent (56 Cal. App. 4th 235, 247) . Extrinsic evidence was properly considered in determining whether the testator intended in the subsequent will to revoke the article of the earlier will that contained the power of appointment, because the two wills were facially inconsistent (56 Cal. App. 4th 235, 248-249) . Sufficient evidence was presented to support the court's determination that the revocation of the first will was conditioned on the exercise of the power of appointment--the attorney who supervised the drafting of the 1993 will stated that the failure to refer to the exercise of the power of appointment explicitly in that will was a drafting error (56 Cal. App. 4th 235, 249-251) .

In Estate of Cuneo (1963) 60 Cal. 2d 196, 32 Cal. Rptr. 409, 384 P.2d 1 , three testamentary documents were offered for probate: a 1951 holographic will, a 1954 formal will, and a 1956 codicil to the 1954 will. The general plan evidenced by each of these documents was that the bulk of the estate was to go to two of the testator's six children, Clara and Julia. Clara was to care for Julia, who was incompetent and lived in a mental hospital. The 1951 will made small bequests to each of the other four children, and the 1954 will provided that the bulk of the estate was to be set aside for Julia until her death or marriage and then divided equally among all the children and a grandchild mentioned in the earlier will. The 1956 codicil gave the entire estate to Julia and Clara and did not mention the other four children. In 1957, the attorney named as executor under the 1954 will surrendered that will to the testator at her request. She stated that "this is not what I want," and that she intended to burn it. The 1954 will was not found among her possessions after her death. When the 1956 codicil was found after her death, it contained penciled strike outs of the parts stating that the 1954 will was in the possession of the attorney and directing it be obtained from him. Several petitions and contests concerning the three documents were consolidated for trial. One of them involved a claim by the four children not named in the 1956 codicil that they were pretermitted heirs and entitled to claim against that instrument. The trial court ultimately found that the 1951 will had been revoked by the general revocation clause of the 1954 will; that the 1954 will was revoked by destruction; that the 1956 codicil was intended by the decedent to remain in effect as modified in 1957, and that it was legally sufficient to stand by itself. The 1956 codicil was thus admitted to probate, and various parties appealed.

The California Supreme Court reversed and ordered probate of the 1954 will and the 1956 codicil as republished by the 1957 strike outs. The Court noted that there were substantial differences between the 1954 will and the 1956 codicil, which could not, standing alone, show an intention on the part of the testator that the 1954 will was to continue in effect in the event the 1956 instrument could not, as a self-contained will, be given effect. The 1956 instrument in fact could not be given effect, since the pretermitted heirs would claim against that instrument if it alone was admitted to probate. The Court also stated that it was "significant" that the testator had said the 1954 will was not what she wanted and that she intended to burn it. However, the Court found good and substantial grounds for the application of the doctrine of dependent relative revocation to revive the 1954 will as modified by the 1956 codicil. When viewed as modified by that instrument, the 1954 will was not, of course, substantially different from the 1956 instrument. The Court found that when the testator republished the 1956 codicil in 1957, making it into her will, it was her intention that the 1954 will as modified in 1956 would be revived in the event that the 1957 will (previously the 1956 codicil) proved ineffective. When the 1954 will was admitted to probate as modified by the 1956 instrument as republished, the other four children were not pretermitted heirs (60 Cal. 2d 196, 200-202) . The Court rejected an argument by one of the contestants that the 1951 will, revoked by the 1954 will, was revived by the operation of the doctrine when the 1954 will was revoked and the testator made modifications to the 1956 codicil. The Court also rejected an argument by another contestant that the 1956 instrument was intended only as a codicil and was therefore revoked by reason of the destruction of the 1954 will. Merely because the 1956 instrument was intended as a codicil when first published did not compel its continuance as a codicil. A document, originally a codicil, that is a complete testamentary instrument is not dependent on the continued existence of its basic will to retain its testamentary character (60 Cal. 2d 196, 202) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 18 Chapters 180-189 PRETRIAL PROCEEDINGS---to---PROBATE OF WILLS
CHAPTER 186 PROBATE OF WILLS
PART II. FORMS
B. Opposing Will Contests

18-186 California Points & Authorities § 186.61

§ 186.61 Opposing Contest of Will--By Demurrer to Objection or Petition Contesting Will [Prob. Code §§ 8251, 8271(b)]--Will Not Revoked by Destruction, Mutilation, or Cancellation

[1] FORM

[The following should be combined with a general memorandum opposing a will contest or a petition to revoke probate of a will (see § 186.50), or may be used in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE COURT SHOULD DISMISS THE _____ [OBJECTION TO THE PETITION FOR PROBATE or PETITION TO REVOKE PROBATE] OF THE _____ [WILL or CODICIL] OF _____ [name of decedent] BECAUSE _____ [specify facts showing that the decedent did not destroy the will with the intent to revoke it, e.g., ALTHOUGH THE _____ (WILL or CODICIL) HAD BEEN TORN INTO SEVERAL PIECES, DECEDENT EXPRESSED NO INTENTION TO DESTROY IT, AND IN FACT HAD KEPT THE _____ (WILL or CODICIL) IN A PLACE ACCESSIBLE TO SEVERAL PERSONS WHO KNEW THAT IT EXISTED].

A. Will May Be Revoked by Destruction. [see § 186.32, Paragraph A.]

B. Contestant Must Prove Destruction by Decedent With Intent to Revoke. A contestant must prove the will was destroyed by the decedent and not by another, and that there was an accompanying intention to revoke it (Estate of Holmes (1948) 88 Cal. App. 2d 360, 363, 198 P.2d 708).

[Optional] C. Destruction by Third Person Without Decedent's Direction Does Not Revoke Will. Destruction of a will by someone other than the testator, not done in the testator's presence, and done without the testator' direction, does not revoke the will (Estate of Arbuckle (1950) 98 Cal. App. 2d 562, 567, 220 P.2d 950).

[Optional] D. Presumption of Revocation Effects Only Burden of Producing Evidence. The presumption of revocation that arises when (1) the will is in the testator's possession prior to her death, (2) the testator is competent until that time, and (3) the will cannot be found after the testator's death, affects the burden of producing evidence rather than the burden of proof (Estate of Obernolte (1979) 91 Cal. App. 3d 124, 128-129, 153 Cal. Rptr. 798 ; see Prob. Code § 6124).

[Optional] E. No Presumption of Revocation by Mutilation If Testator Did Not Have Continuous Possession. The presumption that a testator revoked his or her will by mutilation if the will was found (1) immediately on the death of the testator, among the testator's private papers or in the testator's depository, and (2) in a mutilated condition, is inapplicable if the will is not shown to have been continuously in the testator's possession (Estate of Holmes (1948) 88 Cal. App. 2d 360, 364, 198 P.2d 708).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a demurrer to (1) an objection to a petition for probate of a will, or (2) a petition to revoke probate of a will, when the contestant alleges that the will was revoked by destruction, mutilation, or cancellation [see Prob. Code § 6120(b)]. Optional Paragraph C may be used when the will was destroyed by a person other than the testator and not in the testator's presence or by the testator's direction. Optional Paragraphs D and E deal with the presumption of revocation that arises when the will was in the testator's possession and after his or her death either cannot be found or is found in a mutilated condition.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel may discuss facts showing either that the decedent did not destroy or mutilate his or her will with the intent to revoke it, or, if a third party destroyed the will, that he or she did not do so at the decedent's direction [see Prob. Code § 6120(b); Estate of Arbuckle (1950) 98 Cal. App. 2d 562, 567, 220 P.2d 950 ; Estate of Holmes (1948) 88 Cal. App. 2d 360, 363, 198 P.2d 708] .

This memorandum may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which the issue of due execution of the will arises. Thus, it may be combined with the points and authorities pertaining to a demurrer to an objection or petition contesting a will [see § 186.50].

[b] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 186.32 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Contestant Must Prove Destruction by Decedent With Intent to Revoke

In Estate of Holmes (1948) 88 Cal. App. 2d 360, 198 P.2d 708 , decedent wrote a holographic will about six months before she died. After she died, two of the decedent's children and the executor appointed by the will offered the will for probate. The will was not contested. It left the decedent's estate in equal parts to three of her children and left two other children $1 each. It was found after the decedent's death in a drawer in her room, inside an envelope bearing the name of one of the decedent's daughters and the daughter's husband. The envelope had apparently been opened and resealed. The will had been torn into several pieces. Shortly after the will was written, the decedent had told her daughter that she had made the will and where it could be found. She also said she was going to see her attorney to find out if the will was correctly written. She later visited the attorney and told him the same thing, but never came back to the office with the will. About a month before her death, the decedent visited her daughter and stayed with her for three days. She then returned to her home and stayed there until six days before her death, when she was taken to the hospital by the daughter. At that time, the daughter asked her if she had seen her attorney regarding the will, and she replied that she had not but that she had written the will and it was in her drawer. Several other people, including one of the disinherited daughters, lived in the decedent's home. Neither the bedroom nor the drawer where the will was found were ever locked. Based on this evidence, the trial court found that the will had been destroyed by the decedent with intent to revoke it, and that she had died intestate. The decedent's daughter appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that in order to establish a revocation of the will it was necessary that there be proof that the will was destroyed by the decedent and not by another, and that there was an accompanying intention to revoke it (88 Cal. App. 2d 360, 363) . The court noted that during the six days between the time the decedent left her house for the last time after telling her daughter that the will was in the drawer, and the time of her death, and for the several months before, the will was in a place accessible to several persons, some of whom knew that the will had been written. It did not seem probable that the decedent, having written the will and placed it in a sealed envelope, would, or did, open the envelope, tear the will, place all the pieces back in the envelope, and reseal it. There was nothing in the record to indicate that the decedent intended to destroy her will or knew that it had been torn (88 Cal. App. 2d 360, 364) , and the evidence did not support a reasonable inference that the will was destroyed or revoked by the decedent (88 Cal. App. 2d 360, 365) .

[b] Destruction by Third Person Without Decedent's Direction Does Not Revoke Will

The facts and procedural background of Estate of Arbuckle (1950) 98 Cal. App. 2d 562, 220 P.2d 950 , are discussed in § 186.37[3][d]. In Arbuckle, the court of appeal held that a will destroyed by the testator's manager, without the testator's knowledge and not by the testator's direction, was not revoked. Destruction of a will by someone other than the testator, not done in the testator's presence, and done without the testator's direction, does not revoke the will. A duly executed will continues to exist as a will, regardless of the destruction of the paper it is written on, so long as it is not revoked in the manner and by the means prescribed by statute (98 Cal. App. 2d 562, 567) .

[c] Presumption of Revocation Effects Only Burden of Producing Evidence

Estate of Obernolte (1979) 91 Cal. App. 3d 124, 153 Cal. Rptr. 798 , involved an attempt by the decedent's only child to revoke probate of the decedent's will. The will left the daughter one-sixth of the estate, and left the rest to five other relatives. The decedent executed the will in her attorney's office about two months before she died. She apparently took the original home with her and placed it in a locked chest in her bedroom, to which she and her sister had the only keys. The decedent was on poor terms with her family members, including the persons named in her will. Her contact with them was almost entirely by telephone. After making her will, she told at least two people that she was tearing it up and wouldn't leave anyone a thing. She was apparently unaware that her daughter would inherit her entire estate if she died without a will. However, during the same period she expressed concern about the security of the will in her apartment and considered moving the will to a cupboard. Eleven days before she died, the decedent visited her attorney and talked at length to both him and his secretary without ever mentioning that she had or planned to destroy her will, or wanted to write a new one. After the decedent's death, her daughter came immediately to the apartment and searched for the will. She claimed that she found the empty envelope inside the cedar chest, but never located the will. After the funeral, the decedent's attorney told her she had a duplicate of the will. The attorney stated that the daughter was "most unhappy and distressed" when she saw the duplicate. Aside from the daughter, the decedent's home was accessible to a handyman who lived with the decedent and maintained the apartment complex for her. The trial court found, among other things, that persons other than the decedent had access to the original copy of the will prior to her death, and that it was equally probable that if the will was destroyed, it was destroyed by someone other than the decedent. Accordingly, the trial court denied the petition to revoke probate. The decedent's daughter appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. It found that the rebuttable presumption of revocation was applicable, since the decedent had the will in her possession prior to her death, she was competent until that time, and the will could not be found after her death (91 Cal. App. 3d 124, 128) . However, the presumption was rebutted by the evidence that the decedent expressed concern about the security of her will and did not tell her attorney or the attorney's secretary that she had destroyed it (91 Cal. App. 3d 124, 130) . Since the presumption is one affecting the burden of producing evidence rather than the burden of proof, it can be rebutted by evidence showing that it is equally probable that the will was destroyed by a person other than the decedent or that it was not destroyed with evidence to revoke it (91 Cal. App. 3d 124, 129) .

[d] No Presumption of Revocation by Mutilation If Testator Did Not Have Continuous Possession

The facts and procedural background of Estate of Holmes (1948) 88 Cal. App. 2d 360, 198 P.2d 708 , are discussed under § 186.61[3][a]. In Holmes, the court of appeal held that the presumption of destruction with intent to revoke was not applicable to a will that could not be found after the testator's death when the will was not shown to have been continuously in the testator's possession prior to her death (88 Cal. App. 2d 360, 364) . Although the will was kept in the testator's bedroom prior to her death, the evidence showed that several other people, including one of the disinherited daughters, lived in the testator's home, and that neither the bedroom nor the drawer where the will was found were ever locked (88 Cal. App. 2d 360, 364-365) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 18 Chapters 180-189 PRETRIAL PROCEEDINGS---to---PROBATE OF WILLS
CHAPTER 186 PROBATE OF WILLS
PART II. FORMS
B. Opposing Will Contests

18-186 California Points & Authorities § 186.62

§ 186.62 Opposing Contest of Will--Procedural Requirements--Petition to Revoke Probate of Will Is Not Timely Filed [Prob. Code § 8270]

[1] FORM

[The following should be combined with a general form of memorandum of points and authorities opposing a petition to revoke probate of a will (see § 186.50), or may be used in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE COURT SHOULD DISMISS THE PETITION TO REVOKE PROBATE OF THE _____ [WILL or CODICIL] OF _____ [name of decedent] BECAUSE THE PETITION WAS NOT FILED WITHIN 120 DAYS AFTER THE _____ [WILL or CODICIL] WAS ADMITTED TO PROBATE.

A. Time Limit for Filing Petition to Revoke Probate. A petition to revoke probate of a will must be brought no later than 120 days after the will is admitted to probate, unless the contestant was a minor or was incompetent and had no guardian or conservator at the time the will was admitted (Prob. Code § 8270).

B. Admission of Will Is Conclusive if Uncontested. The admission of a will to probate is conclusive if: (1) no person contests the validity of a will or petitions to revoke probate of the will within 120 days after the will was admitted to probate; (2) there was no extrinsic fraud in the procurement of the court order admitting the will to probate; and (3) there was no erroneous determination of the decedent's death (Prob. Code §§ 8007, 8226(a)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a demurrer to a petition to revoke probate of a will when the petition is not timely filed [Prob. Code § 8270].

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Counsel should discuss facts showing that none of the contestants were minors or incompetents without guardians or conservators at the time the will was admitted [see Prob. Code § 8270(b)], and that there was no extrinsic fraud in the procurement of the order admitting the will [see Prob. Code § 8007].

This memorandum may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which the issue of due execution of the will arises. Thus, it may be combined with the points and authorities pertaining to a demurrer to an objection or petition contesting a will [see § 186.50].

[b] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 186.36 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

198 of 199 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 18 Chapters 180-189 PRETRIAL PROCEEDINGS---to---PROBATE OF WILLS
CHAPTER 186 PROBATE OF WILLS
PART II. FORMS
B. Opposing Will Contests

18-186 California Points & Authorities § 186.63

§ 186.63 Opposing Contest of Will--Procedural Requirements--Contestant Lacks Standing to Contest Will [Prob. Code §§ 1043, 8004(b), 8250(a), 8270(a)]

[1] FORM

[The following should be combined with a general memorandum of points and authorities opposing a will contest or a petition to revoke probate of a will (see § 186.50), or may be used in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE COURT SHOULD DISMISS THE _____ [OBJECTION TO THE PETITION FOR PROBATE or PETITION TO REVOKE PROBATE] OF THE _____ [WILL or CODICIL] OF _____ [name of decedent] BECAUSE _____ [specify facts showing that contestant lacks standing to contest the will because he/she is not an "interested person," e.g., PETITIONER IS AN OMITTED HEIR WHOSE INTERESTS ARE INDEPENDENT OF AND UNAFFECTED BY THE WILL, AND THEREFORE HE/SHE LACKS STANDING TO CONTEST THE _____ (WILL or CODICIL)].

A. Contestant Must Be Interested Person. Only an interested person may contest a will, either before or after probate (Prob. Code §§ 1043, 8004(b), 8250(a), 8270(a); Estate of Lane (1970) 7 Cal. App. 3d 402, 405, 86 Cal. Rptr. 620 ; see Prob. Code § 48 (defining "interested person")).

[Optional] B. Contestant Must Benefit From Contest. Because an "interested person" is a person who has such a pecuniary interest in the distribution of the testator's estate as would be impaired or defeated by the probate of the will or be benefited by setting it aside, a will contestant must show that his or her share of the distribution will be increased if the contest is successful (Estate of Weber (1991) 229 Cal. App. 3d 22, 25 n.4, 280 Cal. Rptr. 22).

[Optional] C. Heir Must Show That Revocation Will Result in Intestacy. An heir lacks standing to contest a will unless it is alleged in the pleadings, or clear from the record, that a successful attack on the will will result in intestacy (Estate of Powers (1979) 91 Cal. App. 3d 715, 720, 154 Cal. Rptr. 366).

[Optional] D. Omitted Heir Lacks Standing. An omitted heir lacks standing to contest a will because such an heir's rights are independent of the will and are therefore unaffected by it (Estate of Shimun (1977) 67 Cal. App. 3d 436, 440, 136 Cal. Rptr. 668).

[Optional] E. Party to Pre-Probate Contest Lacks Standing. A party lacks standing to bring a will contest after probate if he or she was a party to a prior contest of the will, or had actual notice of a contest in time to have joined the contest (Prob. Code § 8270(a)).

[Optional] F. Beneficiary Under Unproven Lost Will Lacks Standing. Beneficiaries under an alleged prior lost will lack standing to contest a later will if they are unable to prove the alleged lost will (Estate of Lane (1970) 7 Cal. App. 3d 402, 406-407, 86 Cal. Rptr. 620).

[Optional] G. Executor Lacks Standing to Contest Codicil Naming Different Executor. An executor named in a will lacks standing to contest a codicil naming a different executor (Jay v. Superior Court (1970) 10 Cal. App. 3d 754, 757-759, 89 Cal. Rptr. 466).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a demurrer to (1) an objection to a petition for probate of a will, or (2) a petition to revoke probate of a will, when the contestant lacks standing to contest the will because he or she is not an "interested person" [see Prob. Code §§ 48, 1043, 8004(b), 8250(a), 8270(a); see also discussion in § 186.37[2][b]]. Optional Paragraph C may be used when the contestant is an heir. If the contestant is an omitted heir, Optional Paragraph D may be used instead. Optional Paragraph E may be used when the contestant was a party to a prior contest, before or after probate, of the same will. Optional Paragraph F may be used when the contestant claims to be a beneficiary under an unproduced will that cannot be proven as a lost will.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, in an appropriate case counsel may discuss facts showing that the contestant is an omitted heir, and that thus the contestant's rights are unaffected by the will [see Estate of Shimun (1977) 67 Cal. App. 3d 436, 440, 136 Cal. Rptr. 668] .

This memorandum may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which the issue of due execution of the will arises. Thus, they may be combined with the points and authorities pertaining to a demurrer to an objection or petition contesting a will [see § 186.50].

[b] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 186.37 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Contestant Must Be Interested Person

In Estate of Lane (1970) 7 Cal. App. 3d 402, 86 Cal. Rptr. 620 , two persons who were unrelated to the decedent petitioned to revoke probate of decedent's will on the ground of testamentary incapacity. They sought to establish standing to contest the will by showing that they were the sole beneficiaries under an earlier will executed by the decedent while she was competent to make a will. The contestants' written answers to interrogatories indicated that they could not produce the earlier will, although they had a copy furnished by the attorney who prepared it, and that they had no evidence to establish that the earlier will was in existence at the time of the decedent's death or that it had been lost or destroyed fraudulently or through public calamity during her lifetime. The proponents submitted as evidence a declaration of a bank officer stating that the bank had custody of the earlier will for three years, from the year it was executed until the year before the later will was executed, and that it delivered the earlier will to the decedent at that time at her request. The declaration incorporated a receipt for the will signed by the decedent. Based on the interrogatories and the declaration, the trial court granted the summary judgment motion of the proponents and dismissed the contest. The contestants appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that only an interested person may contest a will before or after probate (7 Cal. App. 3d 402, 405) . In order to establish their status as interested persons with standing to contest the later will, the court explained, the contestants were required to make a prima facie showing that they could prove that the earlier will was lost or destroyed. Since the contestants admittedly could not produce the earlier will, could not prove it was in existence at the time of the decedent's death, and could not establish, and did not contend, that it had been lost or destroyed in her lifetime through fraud or public calamity, the will could not be admitted to probate, was wholly inoperative, and could not become the vehicle by which the contestants achieved standing to contest the later will (7 Cal. App. 3d 402, 406-407) .

[b] Contestant Must Benefit From Contest

In Estate of Weber (1991) 229 Cal. App. 3d 22, 280 Cal. Rptr. 22 , the decedent's will divided her assets equally between her son and daughter. The son filed a will contest after the daughter petitioned for probate of the will, and the court sustained without leave to amend the daughter's demurrer to the son's complaint and opposition to probate of the will. The appellate court noted that the order sustaining the demurrer was properly entered. As in any other proceeding, a petitioner in a probate proceeding must have standing and, in the context of a will contest, the petition must allege sufficient facts to demonstrate the petitioner is an "interested person." An "interested person" is a person who has such a pecuniary interest in the distribution of the testator's' estate as would be impaired or defeated by the probate of the will or be benefited by setting it aside. Thus, a will contestant must show that his or her share of the distribution will be increased if the contest is successful. In this case, because the decedent did not leave a surviving spouse, her estate would be divided equally between her children if the will were set aside, which is the same distribution that would be made under the will. Thus, the decedent's son cannot benefit by pursuing the will contest (229 Cal. App. 3d 22, 25 n.4).

[c] Heir Must Show That Revocation Will Result in Intestacy

In Estate of Powers (1979) 91 Cal. App. 3d 715, 154 Cal. Rptr. 366 , the decedent's widow sought probate of a concededly valid will executed by the decedent. A contestant claiming to be an heir of the decedent contested the will on the ground that the decedent had executed a later valid will, naming her as the primary beneficiary, which implicitly revoked the will offered by the widow. The facts concerning the later will were alleged on information and belief, and the contestant did not produce the later will or a copy of it. The trial court sustained a demurrer to the contestant's first amended contest and dismissed the contest on the ground that the contestant lacked standing to contest the will. The contestant appealed.

The court of appeal reversed and instructed the trial court to provide the contestant with an opportunity to present evidence to support her allegation that she was a person interested in the estate by virtue of her status as a legatee under the later will. As to the contestant's claim to be an heir of the decedent, the appellate court stated that an allegation that one is an heir is not enough to establish standing to contest a will unless it is also alleged, or clear from the record, that a successful attack on the purported will will result in intestacy (91 Cal. App. 3d 715, 720) . Since the contestant did not allege that the will offered for probate by the widow was invalid or that the estate would pass by intestacy, she did not make a prima facie case of entitlement to any part of the estate based on her heir status. If she successfully proved a valid later will, she would take under that will. If she could not establish that will, the will offered by the widow would be entitled to probate and the estate would pass under the terms of that will rather than under the law of intestacy.

Therefore, the trial court properly sustained the demurrer as to the contestant's standing as an heir (91 Cal. App. 3d 715, 721-722) . The appellate court found that the contestant did plead sufficient facts to establish standing as a beneficiary under the alleged later will. The will relied on by a contestant to establish his or her interest need not be produced and offered for probate as a condition to the contestant's right to contest an earlier will. Of course, the contestant would be required at trial to prove the terms and validity of the later will. However, at trial she would have the benefit of the process of the court to summon all necessary witnesses and compel the production of the earlier will (91 Cal. App. 3d 715, 724-725) .

[d] Omitted Heir Lacks Standing

In Estate of Shimun (1977) 67 Cal. App. 3d 436, 136 Cal. Rptr. 668 , the decedent's brother offered for probate a will duly executed by the decedent prior to his marriage. The will named the brother as executor of the estate, and did not mention the wife or children of the decedent. The decedent's widow contested the admission of the will to probate on the ground that it was revoked in its entirety by operation of law since the entire estate would go to her and the children as the pretermitted heirs of the decedent. She also sought appointment as administrator of the estate, citing the above-described revocation by law and the ill feelings of the decedent's brother toward her. The trial court denied probate of the will, declared that the decedent died intestate, and appointed the widow as administrator. The brother appealed.

The court of appeal reversed and found that the fact that the widow and the children were omitted (pretermitted) heirs and would take against the will did not accomplish a revocation of the will. When a will is partially revoked by a subsequent marriage, the balance of the will remains effective. Therefore, the brother was entitled to be appointed executor since he was named as executor in the will (67 Cal. App. 3d 436, 439-440) . A person named as executor in a will has the right to so act in the absence of statutory disqualification, and the brother's ill feelings toward the widow did not constitute statutory grounds for denying his appointment (67 Cal. App. 3d 436, 442) . The appellate court also found that the widow and children lacked standing to contest the will. As omitted heirs, they would take their share of the estate independently of the will. Therefore, their interests were not affected by the will. Their claims could properly be made during the proceeding for distribution, but could not operate to prevent the will from being probated (67 Cal. App. 3d 436, 440-441) .

[e] Beneficiary Under Unproven Lost Will Lacks Standing

The facts and procedural background of Estate of Lane (1970) 7 Cal. App. 3d 402, 86 Cal. Rptr. 620 , are discussed under § 186.63[3][a]. In Lane, the court of appeal held that beneficiaries under an alleged lost will that they could neither produce nor establish as a lost or destroyed will were not interested persons for the purpose of contesting a later will. Since the alleged lost will could not be admitted to probate, it could not become the vehicle by which the contestants achieved standing to contest the later will (7 Cal. App. 3d 402, 406-407) .

[f] Executor Lacks Standing to Contest Codicil Naming Different Executor

In Jay v. Superior Court (1970) 10 Cal. App. 3d 754, 89 Cal. Rptr. 466 , an executor named in the decedent's will filed a contest challenging a codicil to the will that named a different executor, but made no other change in the will. The grounds alleged for the contest were that at the time the codicil was executed the decedent was not of sound mind and was under the undue influence of various individuals. The contest was dismissed on the ground that the executor was not an "interested person" and thus lacked standing to contest the will.

The appellate court began its review of the trial court proceedings by noting that the right of an interested person to contest a will is fundamentally based on the loss of property or property rights resulting from the recognition of an invalid instrument. A will contest is essentially an action for the recovery of property unlawfully taken or about to be taken from the ownership of the contestant. The court noted that it is well settled that an executor who is named in a will that has been offered for probate has the right to oppose or resist a contest to this will. An executor also may contest a subsequent will even if the executor does not have a beneficial interest in the estate. This right is not based on any pecuniary interest of the executor in the distribution of the estate, but is instead based on the theory that the executor represents those who would be entitled to the estate under the will in which he or she is named as executor and, in a representative capacity, has the right to see that the testator's wishes are not thwarted by admission to probate of a testamentary instrument that is not genuine. In this case, the contestant's only legal interest in the estate was serving as executor and receiving administration fees for those services; the contestant did not show how the object and intent of the testator will be thwarted by the provisions of the codicil. Under court supervision, the testator's property must be distributed in accordance with the provisions of the will irrespective of who serves as executor. Therefore, the contestant is not an "interested person" for purposes of bringing a will contest (10 Cal. App. 3d 754, 757-759) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Executor Lacks Standing to Contest Codicil Naming Different Executor

In Estate of Getty (1978) 85 Cal. App. 3d 755, 149 Cal. Rptr. 656 , a contingent trustee of a trust created under a will to hold the residue of the estate filed a petition contesting the final codicil of the will, which eliminated the trust as the recipient of the residue. The petition asserted that the testator lacked testamentary capacity when he executed the codicil or, in the alternative, that he executed the codicil under the undue influence of his close advisers. The appellate court affirmed the trial court's ruling that the contingent trustee under the will was not an "interested person" with standing to contest the validity of the codicil. The court noted that lack of a direct pecuniary interest does not absolutely foreclose an omitted trustee's right to contest the will. A testamentary trustee is the representative of the beneficiaries of the trust and the guardian of their interests and, when appropriate, the trustee may contest a subsequent testamentary instrument that impairs the beneficiaries' pecuniary interests in the estate property. Thus, a trustee's standing to contest a will does not depend strictly on a personal pecuniary interest in the bequeathed property under the prior instrument, but may be made determinate by impairment of the pecuniary rights of the beneficiaries by the probate of the subsequent testamentary document. However, in this case, the effect of the contested change on the beneficiary did not disclose any impairment of the beneficiary's interest as a result of the subsequent codicil. The sole effect of the codicil was to shift control of the assets from a trust under the will to the beneficiary's trustees, thereby enhancing the beneficiary's income by eliminating the sizeable trustee fees of the intermediate trust under the will, which, under earlier codicils, would become payable to the testamentary trustees. The right to control the trust property and to receive statutory fees for administration of the trust did not constitute a sufficient pecuniary interest to give standing to the omitted trustee to contest the codicil without reference to the effect of the subsequent codicil on the beneficiary (85 Cal. App. 3d 755, 758-761) .

199 of 199 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 18 Chapters 180-189 PRETRIAL PROCEEDINGS---to---PROBATE OF WILLS
CHAPTER 186 PROBATE OF WILLS
PART II. FORMS
B. Opposing Will Contests

18-186 California Points & Authorities § 186.64

§ 186.64 Opposing Contest of Will--Will Made for Testator by Conservator of Estate Pursuant to Court Order [Prob. Code §§ 2580(b)(13), 6100.5(c)]

[1] FORM

[The following should be combined with a general form of memorandum of points and authorities opposing a will contest or a petition to revoke probate of a will (see § 186.50), or may be used in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE COURT SHOULD DISMISS THE _____ [OBJECTION TO THE PETITION FOR PROBATE or PETITION TO REVOKE PROBATE] OF THE _____ [WILL or CODICIL] OF _____ [name of testator] BECAUSE THE _____ [WILL or CODICIL] WAS MADE FOR HIM/HER BY HIS/HER CONSERVATOR, _____ [name of conservator], PURSUANT TO COURT ORDER AND IN _____ [name of conservator]'S CAPACITY AS DULY AUTHORIZED AND APPOINTED CONSERVATOR OF THE ESTATE.

A. Will May Be Made for Conservatee by Conservator of Estate. If a person has a conservator of the estate, that conservator may make a will for the conservatee if the court first authorizes the action (Prob. Code §§ 2580(b)(13), 6100(b), 6100.5(c); see Prob. Code § 2400(a) (as used in Prob. Code § 2580(b)(13), "conservator" means conservator or limited conservator of the estate).

B. Conservatee's Lack of Testamentary Capacity Does Not Impair Power of Duly Authorized Conservator of Estate to Make Will for Conservatee. The power of a conservator of the estate to make a will for his or her conservatee does not rest on the conservatee's capacity to make the will, but flows from independent statutory authority and the authorization of the court (Prob. Code §§ 2580(b)(13), 6100(b), 6100.5(c)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a demurrer to an objection to a petition for probate of a will, or a petition to revoke probate of a will, when the will was made by a conservator of the estate pursuant to court authorization and the contestant alleges that the testator lacked testamentary capacity at the time the will was made.

If it does not appear from the will or from other documents already on file in the estate proceeding that the will was made by the conservator of the estate pursuant to court authorization, a copy of the court order authorizing the conservator to make the will, together with an affidavit, declaration under penalty of perjury, or some other evidence showing that the will was made in this manner, should also be submitted to the court.

[b] Impact of Conservatorship on Testamentary Capacity

A person who is subject to a conservatorship is not necessarily incompetent to make a will [Prob. Code § 1871(c)]. A conservator of the person may be appointed for any person who is unable to provide properly for his or her personal needs for physical health, food, clothing, or shelter, and a conservator of the estate may be appointed for a person who is substantially unable to manage his or her own financial resources or resist fraud or undue influence [Prob. Code § 1802(a), (b)]. Neither of these grounds is inconsistent with competence to make a will [see Estate of Mann (1986) 184 Cal. App. 3d 593, 605, 229 Cal. Rptr. 225] . Although the appointment of a conservator may have some bearing on the conservatee's testamentary capacity, the appointment in itself furnishes only a weak inference of lack of capacity [Conservatorship of Bookasta (1989) 216 Cal. App. 3d 445, 450 n.5, 262 Cal. Rptr. 1] .

[c] Power of Conservator to Make Will for Conservatee

A conservatee who is of sound mind may make a valid will [Prob. Code § 1871(c); see Prob. Code § 6100(a)]. However, if a person has a conservator of the estate, that conservator may also make a will for the conservatee if the court first authorizes the action [Prob. Code §§ 2580(b)(13), 6100(b), 6100.5(c) (operative Jan. 1, 1996); see Prob. Code § 2400(a) (as used in Prob. Code § 2580(b)(13), "conservator" means conservator or limited conservator of estate)]. A conservator of the estate might seek to do this if the conservator believes that the conservatee is not mentally competent to make the will [see Prob. Code § 6100.5(a); see also § 186.27[2]], or if the conservatee is mentally competent to make the will but physically unable to do so.

The authority of a duly authorized conservator of the estate to make a will for the conservatee is not dependent on the conservatee's own capacity to make the will, but may be exercised in spite of the consevatee's lack of capacity [Prob. Code §§ 2580(b)(13), 6100(b), 6100.5(c) (operative Jan. 1, 1996)].

[d] Power of Conservatee to Amend, Revoke, or Make New Will

If a conservator of the estate has made a will for the conservatee, the conservatee may later revoke or amend the will, or make a new and inconsistent will, but only if the conservatee is then mentally competent to make a will [Prob. Code § 6100(b)]. The fact that the conservatorship might still be in existence would not prevent the conservatee from doing any of these things, providing the conservatee has the required mental competence [see Prob. Code § 6100(b)].

1 of 179 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 18 Chapters 180-189 PRETRIAL PROCEEDINGS---to---PROBATE OF WILLS
Chapters 187through 189 RESERVED

18-187 California Points & Authorities Chapters 187through 189

RESERVED

Chapters 187RESERVED

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY

19-190 California Points & Authorities 190.syn

§ 190.syn Synopsis to Chapter 190: PRODUCTS LIABILITY

§ 190.01 Scope of Chapter

§ 190.02 Governing Statutes

§ 190.03 How to Use Forms in This Chapter

[1] Page Limits on Points and Authorities

[2] Using the Forms to Build Draft Memorandum

§ 190.04 Related Pleadings and Practice Forms

§ 190.05 Related Points and Authorities

§ 190.06 Other Related Publications

§§ 190.07-190.19 [Reserved]

§ 190.20 Supporting Contention That Product Is Subject of Products Liability Action--Airport Approach Chart as Product

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Airport Approach Chart Is Product for Products Liability Purposes

§ 190.21 Supporting Contention That Product Is Subject of Products Liability Action--Real Estate Lot as Product

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Real Estate Lot as Product

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Real Estate Lot as Product

§ 190.22 Supporting Contention That Product Is Subject of Products Liability Action--Real Estate Development as Product

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Strict Liability of Mass Producer and Seller of Homes

[b] Strict Liability of Developer

[c] Strict Liability Applies Regardless of Whether Defective Product Is Located on Plaintiff's Property

§ 190.22A Supporting Contention That Product Is Subject of Products Liability Action--Raw Asbestos as Product

[1] FORM

[2] Comment

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Raw Asbestos Is Product That May Have Design Defect

§ 190.23 Supporting Contention That Product is Subject of Products Liability Action--Injury Caused by Defective Electricity Occurred After Electricity Entered Stream of Commerce

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Electricity Must Have Entered Stream of Commerce

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Commercial Electricity Supplier Strictly Liable for Electricity in Stream of Commerce

§ 190.23A Supporting Contention That Product Is Subject of Products Liability Action--Product Still On the Market

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Strict Liability Broadly Extends to Products That Are Placed on Market

[b] Strict Liability Is Not Limited to Cases Arising After Retail Sale

[c] Application of Strict Liability Is Not Restricted to Injuries Caused by Consumer Use

§ 190.24 Opposing Contention That Product Is Subject of Products Liability Action--Provider of Service Not Subject to Strict Liability--In General

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Person Who Sells Service Is Not Manufacturer of Product

[b] Person Who Sells Service Is Not Subject to Strict Liability

[c] Entity Not Subject To Strict Liability When Dominant Purpose of Transaction Is Provision of Service

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Person Who Sells Service Is Not Subject to Strict Liability

§ 190.25 Opposing Contention That Product Is Subject of Products Liability Action--Provider of Service Not Subject to Strict Liability--Supplying Blood Transfusion or Blood Product Is Service [Health & Safety Code § 1606]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Supplier of Blood Transfusion or Product Is Seller of Service Not Subject to Products Liability

[b] Hospital That Supplies Blood Transfusion Is Not Subject to Strict Liability

[c] Blood Bank That Supplies Blood Transfusion Is Not Subject to Strict Liability

[d] Manufacturer of Blood Product Is Not Subject to Strict Liability

§ 190.26 Opposing Contention That Product Is Subject of Products Liability Action--Provider of Service Not Subject to Strict Liability--Supplying Human Tissue Is Service [Health & Safety Code § 1635.2]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Supplier of Human Tissue Product Is Seller of Service Not Subject to Products Liability.

§ 190.27 Opposing Contention That Product Is Subject of Products Liability Action--Provider of Service Not Subject to Strict Liability--Travel Agency Arranging Package Tour Is Service

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Arranging Package Tour as Service

§ 190.28 Opposing Contention That Product Is Subject of Products Liability Action--Provider of Service Not Subject to Strict Liability--Architects and Civil Engineers Perform Service

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Architects and Civil Engineers Perform Service

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Architects and Civil Engineers Perform Service

§ 190.29 Opposing Contention That Product Is Subject of Products Liability Action--Provider of Service Not Subject to Strict Liability--Supplier of Electricity Not Subject to Strict Liability if Electricity Defect and Injury Occurred Before Electricity Had Entered Stream of Commerce

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Electricity Outside Stream of Commerce Not Subject to Strict Liability

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Electricity is Service, Not Product, Until Metered

[b] Strict Liability Inapplicable to Defects Along Transmission Lines

[c] Strict Liability Inapplicable to Facilities Used by Public Utility for Transmission of Electricity

[d] Electric Transmission Facilities Not Placed in Stream of Commerce

§ 190.30 Opposing Contention That Product Is Subject of Products Liability Action--Residence Was Not Mass-Produced

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Strict Liability May Not Be Imposed Regarding Residences That Are Not Mass-Produced

§ 190.31 Opposing Contention That Product Is Subject of Products Liability Action--Object or Instrumentality Not "Product" as Defined or Contemplated by Law--General Form

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Plaintiff Must Show Existence of "Product"

[b] Existence of "Product" Is Question of Law

[c] Item Not Contemplated by Law to Be "Product" Cannot Be Subject of Strict-Liability Action

§§ 190.32-190.49 [Reserved]

§ 190.50 Supporting Contention That Plaintiff Is Person Who May Bring Products Liability Action--No Privity Required

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Duty Runs to All Who Are Injured

[b] Plaintiff Not Required to Have Privity of Contract

[c] Bystander May Bring Strict Liability Action

[d] Driver and Passenger of Automobile May Bring Strict Liability Action Against Manufacturer of Another Automobile

§ 190.51 Supporting Contention That Plaintiff Is Person Who May Bring Products Liability Action--Heirs of Decedent Killed by Defective Product May Assert Strict Products Liability Theory in Wrongful Death Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 377]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[c] Related Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Heirs May Recover Under Strict Products Liability Theory

§ 190.52 Supporting Contention That Plaintiff Is Person Who May Bring Products Liability Action--Independent Cause Exception to Firefighter's Rule

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Firefighter's Rule Does Not Modify Broad Interpretation of Independent Cause Exception

[b] Firefighter's Rule Does Not Bar Claim Based on Allegation that Product's Malfunction Was Independent of Fire

§ 190.53 Opposing Contention That Plaintiff Is Person Who May Bring Products Liability Action--Commercial Purchaser Exception

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Commercial Purchaser May Not Bring Strict Liability Action

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Commercial Purchaser May Not Bring Strict Liability Action

§§ 190.54-190.69 [Reserved]

§ 190.70 Supporting Contention That Defendant Is Person Who Is Subject to Strict Liability--Manufacturer Who Places Article on Market

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Manufacturer Is Strictly Liable for Placing Defective Article on Market That Injures Person

§ 190.71 Supporting Contention That Defendant Is Person Who Is Subject to Strict Liability--Person Who Is Part of Overall Producing and Marketing Enterprise--In General

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Strict Liability Extends to All Who Are Part of Producing and Marketing Enterprise

[b] One Who Plays More Than Random and Accidental Role in Marketing Enterprise Is Subject to Strict Liability

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Strict Liability Extends to All Who Are Part of Producing and Marketing Enterprise

§ 190.72 Supporting Contention That Defendant Is Person Who Is Subject to Strict Liability--Person Who Is Part of Overall Producing and Marketing Enterprise--Retailer

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Retailer Is Part of Producing and Marketing Enterprise

§ 190.73 Supporting Contention That Defendant Is Person Who Is Subject to Strict Liability--Person Who Is Part of Overall Producing and Marketing Enterprise--Licensor of Chattel

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Licensor of Chattel Is Part of Overall Producing and Marketing Enterprise and Is Subject to Strict Liability

§ 190.73A Supporting Contention That Defendant Is Person Who Is Subject to Strict Liability--Defendant Is Bulk Supplier of Raw Asbestos Fiber Incorporated into Finished Product

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Bulk Supplier of Raw Asbestos Fiber Is Subject to Strict Products Liability

§ 190.74 Supporting Contention That Defendant Is Person Who Is Subject to Strict Liability--Defendant Is Manufacturer of Defective Component Part

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Manufacturer of Windows Can Be Strictly Liable for Harm to Other Property Resulting From Defects in Window

[b] Manufacturer of Defective Component Part Is Strictly Liable for Injuries Caused by Component Part

[c] Component Parts Manufacturer Defense Applies Only to Generic, "Off-the-Shelf" Components

§ 190.75 Supporting Contention That Defendant Is Person Who Is Subject to Strict Liability--Manufacturer of Complete Product Is Strictly Liable for Defect in Component Part Supplied by Another

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Manufacturer Strictly Liable Even if Defect Due to Component Part Supplied by Another

§ 190.75A Supporting Contention That Defendant Is Person Who Is Subject to Strict Liability--Defendant Is Manufacturer of Products Which, When Used For Their Intended Purpose, Resulted in Release of Toxins

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Manufacturer Strictly Liable For Product Designed For Only One Use, In Combination With Specified Equipment

§ 190.76 Supporting Contention That Defendant Is Person Who Is Subject to Strict Liability--Manufacturer Cannot Delegate Duty to Deliver Product to Purchaser Free From Dangerous Defects

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Manufacturer Is Strictly Liable Regardless of What Part of Manufacturing Process Was Delegated to Third Parties

[b] Manufacturer Cannot Delegate Duty to Deliver Product Free From Dangerous Defects

[c] Manufacturer Cannot Escape Liability Because of Dealer's Act or Failure to Act

§ 190.77 Supporting Contention That Defendant Is Person Who Is Subject to Strict Liability--Seller Who Alters Product

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Seller Who Alters Product Is Tantamount to Manufacturer

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Seller Who Alters Product Is Tantamount to Manufacturer

§ 190.78 Supporting Contention That Defendant Is Person Who Is Subject to Strict Liability--Exception to General Rule of Successor Nonliability Applies

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Successor to Manufacturer May Be Strictly Liable for Defective Product if Exception to General Rule of Successor Nonliability Applies

§ 190.79 Supporting Contention That Defendant Is Person Who Is Subject to Strict Liability Under Product Line Theory--Successor to Manufacturer

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

[c] Related Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Successor to Manufacturer Is Strictly Liable for Defective Product Manufactured by Original Manufacturer

[b] Alad Is Not Given Narrow Construction

[c] Successor May Be Strictly Liable Even Though It Has Discontinued the Defective Product

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Successor to Manufacturer Is Strictly Liable for Defective Product Manufactured by Original Manufacturer

[b] Alad Is Not Given Narrow Construction

§ 190.80 Supporting Contention That Defendant Is Person Who Is Subject to Strict Liability--Identity of Actual Manufacturer Unknown--Market Share Liability

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Causes of Action Under Market Share Theory

[c] Related Points and Authorities

[d] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Manufacturers of Substantial Share of Market Liable Under Market Share Theory

[b] Each Defendant's Liability Proportional to Its Share of Market

[c] Market Share Liability Applicable to Manufacturer of Product Used for Unintended Purpose but With Manufacturer's Knowledge and Acquiescence

§ 190.80A Supporting Contention That Defendant Is Person Who Is Subject to Products Liability--Immunity Statute Applied to Tobacco Only During Ten-Year Period

[1] Form

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Tobacco Companies' Conduct Outside Statutory Immunity Period Is Determined by General Tort Principles

§ 190.81 Supporting Contention That Defendant Is Person Who Is Subject to Products Liability--Cigarette Manufacturer Manipulated Addictive Properties of Cigarettes Via Additives

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Immunity Statute's Protection Does Not Extend to Allegations that Tobacco Companies Used Additives that Exposed Smokers to Dangers Beyond Those Commonly Associated With Cigarette Smoking

§ 190.81A Supporting Contention That Defendant Is Person Who Is Not Subject to Strict Liability--Concert of Action Not Applicable

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Allegations Regarding Defendants' Inadequate Testing and Warnings and Their Reliance on Each Others' Marketing Techniques Do Not Establish Concert of Action

[b] Concert of Action Is Limited to Conduct by Small Number of Individuals and Injury to Single Plaintiff, With Substantial Involvement By Defendant

[c] Application of Concert of Action to Common Industry Situations Would Expand Doctrine Beyond Its Intended Scope

§ 190.82 Opposing Contention That Defendant Is Person Who Is Subject to Strict Liability--Defendant Played Random and Accidental Role in Distribution of Product

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Strict Liability Does Not Apply to Person Who Plays Random and Accidental Role in Distribution of Product

[b] Auctioneer Plays Random and Accidental Role in Distribution of Product and Is Not Strictly Liable

§ 190.83 Opposing Contention That Defendant Is Person Who Is Subject to Strict Liability--Defendant Played No Role in Design, Manufacture, Distribution, or Marketing of Product

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Defendant Played No Role In Design, Manufacture, Distribution, Or Marketing of Product That Injured Plaintiff

[b] Defendant's Historic Role in Development of Product Did Not Provide Basis for Products Liability Claims Against It

[c] Defendant Who Was Not Part of Product's Chain of Distribution Cannot Be Held Strictly Liable

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Defendant Played No Role In Design, Manufacture, Distribution, or Marketing of Product That Injured Plaintiff.

§ 190.84 Opposing Contention That Defendant Is Person Who Is Subject to Strict Liability--Used Goods Dealer

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Used Goods Dealer Is Not Subject to Strict Liability

[b] Used Goods Dealer Is Not Required to Inspect or Repair Used Good

§ 190.85 Opposing Contention That Defendant Is Person Who Is Subject to Strict Liability--Defendant Is Manufacturer of Nondefective Component Part of Defective Product

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Manufacturer of Nondefective Component Part Is Not Strictly Liable for Defective Product

[b] Strict Liability for Defective Product Lies With Manufacturer of Finished Product and Not With Manufacturer of Nondefective Component Part

[c] Manufacturer of Noncomponent Part Has No Duty to Investigate Safety of Finished Product

[d] Fact that Manufacturer Produced Component Pursuant to Specifications Does Not Deprive It of Defense

§ 190.86 Opposing Contention That Defendant Is Person Who Is Subject to Strict Liability--Identity of Actual Manufacturer Unknown--Market Share Liability Not Applicable to Manufacturing Defect

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Market Share Liability Theory Does Not Apply to Manufacturing Defect

§ 190.87 Opposing Contention That Defendant Is Subject to Strict Liability--Identity of Actual Manufacturer Unknown--Injury Not Caused by Fungible Product

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Market Share Liability Does Not Apply When Injury Not Caused by Fungible Product

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Market Share Liability Does Not Apply When Injury Not Caused by Fungible Product

§ 190.88 Opposing Contention That Defendant Is Person Who Is Subject to Strict Liability--Identity of Actual Manufacturer Unknown--Defendants Not Subject to Joint and Several Liability

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Joint and Several Liability Inapplicable to Market Share Theory Actions

§ 190.89 Opposing Contention That Defendant Is Person Who Is Subject to Strict Liability Under Product Line Theory--Defendant Not Liable as Successor

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Successor to Manufacturer Is Not Liable for Defective Product Manufactured by Original Manufacturer Unless

Three-Prong Test of Ray v. Alad Is Satisfied

[b] First Prong of Ray v. Alad Test Not Satisfied if Plaintiff's Remedies Not Destroyed by Defendant-Successor's Acquisition

[c] Second Prong of Ray v. Alad Test Not Satisfied if Defendant-Successor Not Able to Assume Risk-Spreading Role of Original Manufacturer

[d] Third Prong of Ray v. Alad Test Not Satisfied if Unfair to Require Defendant-Successor to Assume Responsibility for Defective Product Based on Successor's Use of Original Manufacturer's Good Will While Continuing Business

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] First Prong of Ray v. Alad Test Not Satisfied if Plaintiff's Remedies Not Destroyed by Defendant Successor's Acquisition

§ 190.90 Opposing Contention That Defendant Is Person Who Is Subject to Strict Liability--Defendant Is Manufacturer of Prescription Drug That Is Unavoidably Unsafe

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Points and Authorities

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Strict Liability Inapplicable to Unavoidably Unsafe Prescription Drug Absent Faulty Warning or Packaging

[b] Unavoidably Unsafe Products Includes Prescription Drugs

[c] Defective Design Test Inapplicable to Prescription Drugs

§ 190.90A Opposing Contention That Defendant Is Person Who Is Subject to Strict Liability--Defendant Is Manufacturer of Implanted Medical Device That Was Properly Manufactured

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Manufacturer Cannot Be Held Strictly Liable for Properly Made Prescription Medical Product With Adequate

Warnings

§ 190.91 Opposing Contention That Defendant Is Person Who Is Subject to Strict Liability--Defendant Landlord Not Subject to Strict Liability

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Strict Liability Inapplicable to Landlords

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Strict Liability Inapplicable to Landlords

§ 190.92 Opposing Contention That Defendant Is Person Who Is Subject to Strict Liability--Defendant Was Merely Intermediate Seller Not In Business of Selling Product

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Intermediate Seller Not Subject to Strict Products Liability

[b] Seller of Used Goods Not Subject to Strict Liability Based on Minor Modifications of Product

§ 190.93 Opposing Contention That Defendant Is Person Who Is Subject to Strict Liability--Defendant Was Merely Occasional Seller

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Strict Liability Inapplicable to Occasional Sale of Product

§ 190.94 Opposing Contention That Defendant Is Person Who Is Subject to Strict Liability--Defendant Was Employer

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Strict Liability Inapplicable to Employers Except Under Narrow Factual Circumstances Set Forth in Labor Code § 3602

§ 190.95 Opposing Contention That Defendant Is Person Who Is Subject to Strict Liability--Defendant Was Finance Lessor

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Strict Liability Inapplicable to Finance Lessors

§§ 190.96-190.109 [Reserved]

§ 190.110 Supporting Contention That Product Is Defective in Design--Dual Alternative Test

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Dual Test for Design Defect

[b] Dual Test Applied in the Alternative

[c] Satisfying Consumer Expectations Test

§ 190.111 Supporting Contention That Product Is Defective in Design--Risk-Benefits Test--Relevant Factors

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Relevant Factors to Be Considered by Jury in Applying Risk-Benefits Test

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Relevant Factors to be Considered By Jury in Applying Risk-Benefits Test

§ 190.112 Supporting Contention That Product Is Defective in Design--Risk-Benefits Test--Shifting Burden of Proof--In General

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Shifting Burden of Proof Once Prima Facie Showing of Proximate Cause Is Made

[b] Burden of Proof Shifts, Not Simply Burden of Producing Evidence

[c] Plaintiff Need Only Show That Injury-Causing Design Existed When Product Left Defendant's Possession.

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Shifting Burden of Proof Once Prima Facie Showing of Proximate Cause Is Made

§ 190.113 Supporting Contention That Product Is Defective in Design--Risk-Benefits Test--Shifting of Burden of Proof--Violation of Safety Statute, Regulation, or Ordinance as Sufficient Prima Facie Showing

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Violation of Statute, Regulation, or Ordinance as Prima Facie Showing of Causation

[b] Facts Sufficient for Showing

§ 190.114 Supporting Contention That Product Is Defective in Design--Risk-Benefits Test--Defendant Cannot Complain of Failure to Instruct

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Failure to Instruct

§ 190.115 Supporting Contention That Product Is Defective in Design--Consumer Expectation Test--Expert Testimony Not Necessary if Matter of Common Experience

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Expert Testimony on Consumer Expectations Not Necessary When Matter Is of Common Experience

[b] Evidence of Use, Injury, and Features of Product Is Sufficient for Consumer Expectation Test When Matter Is of Common Experience

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Expert Testimony on Consumer Expectations Not Necessary When Matter Is of Common Experience

§ 190.116 Supporting Contention That Product Is Defective in Design--Consumer Expectation Test Can Apply Even if Matter Is Not of Common Experience

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Consumer Expectation Test Is Applicable Even if Matter Not of Common Experience

[b] Critical Question Involves Inquiry into Facts and Circumstances Of Product's Failure

[c] Consumer Expectation Test Is Not Foreclosed by Necessity of Expert Testimony to Explain Nature of Alleged Defect

[d] Fact That Expert Testimony Was Required to Establish Legal Causation Does Not Preclude Use of Consumer Expectations Test

[e] Consumer Expectations Test Applies to Strict Liability Actions Involving Asbestos-Containing Products

[f] Consumer Expectations Test Applies to Strict Liability Actions Involving Raw Materials

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Consumer Expectations Test Is Applicable Even if Matter Not of Common Experience

§ 190.117 Supporting Contention That Product Is Defective in Design--Test for Defective Design Focuses on Adequacy of Product and Not on Manufacturer's Conduct

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Focus Is on Adequacy of Product and Not on Manufacturer's Conduct

[b] Reasonableness of Manufacturer's Conduct Is Irrelevant

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Focus Is on Adequacy of Product and Not on Manufacturer's Conduct

§ 190.118 Supporting Contention That Product Is Defective in Design--Design Defect--Lack of Safety Device as Evidence of Defect

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Evidence That Plaintiff Used Product in Intended or Reasonably Foreseeable Manner and that Attempt to Avoid Injury Frustrated by Lack of Safety Device

[b] Case May Not Be Taken From Jury Because Only Evidence of Defect Is Lack of Safety Device

§ 190.119 Supporting Contention That Product Is Defective in Design--Product Itself Not Defective but Dangerous When Placed Adjacent to Machinery

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Design May Present Excessive Preventable Danger in Intended Use

[b] Less Safe Means of Using Product or Adjacent Machinery Should Be Taken Into Account by Designer of Product

§ 190.119A Supporting Contention That Finding of Strict Liability Is Supported--Defective Product Was Substantial Factor in Causing Injury

[1] Form

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Defendant Is Strictly Liable if Defendant's Asbestos Product Was Substantial Factor in Plaintiff's Risk of Developing Cancer

[b] Defendant Does Not Shift Burden of Product by Showing That Plaintiff Has No Personal Recall of Defendant's Product

§ 190.120 Opposing Contention That Product Is Defective in Design--Unavoidably Dangerous Product

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Strict Liability Inapplicable to Inherently Dangerous Product

[b] Prescription Drug Design Defect Claims Not Measured by Strict Liability Standards

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Strict Liability Inapplicable to Inherently Dangerous Product

§ 190.121 Opposing Contention That Product Is Defective--Inherently Unsafe Common Consumer Product

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Strict Liability Based on Design Defect or Failure to Warn Prohibited if Product Is Inherently Unsafe Common Consumer Product

§ 190.122 Opposing Contention That Finding of Strict Liability Is Supported--Alleged Defects Did Not Cause or Contribute to Injury

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Strict Liability Based on Design Defect if Defect Did Not Cause Injury

[b] Required Allegations Regarding Causation

[c] Plaintiff Bears Burden of Proving Causation

[d] Plaintiff Must Prove That Defective Product Was Substantial Factor in Causing His or Her Injuries

[e] Mere Possibility of Exposure Does Not Create Triable Issue of Fact on Causation

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] No Strict Liability Based on Design Defect if Defect Did Not Cause Injury

§ 190.123 Opposing Contention That Finding of Strict Liability Is Supported--Particular Product Used by Plaintiff Not Shown to Be Defective--Product Has Not Malfunctioned

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Plaintiff Must Show Product Has Malfunctioned

§ 190.123A Opposing Contention That Finding of Strict Liability Is Supported--Product Not Shown to Be Defective Merely Because Plaintiff Collided With It

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Properly Functioning, Plainly Visibly Product Is Not Defective

§ 190.124 Opposing Contention That Finding of Strict Liability Is Supported--Lack of Factual Support for Inference That Design Did Not Meet Minimum Safety Expectations of Ordinary Users Precludes Finding of Defect Without Balancing of Risks and Benefits

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Points and Authorities

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Circumstances of Product Failure Must Permit Inference That Consumer Expectations Were Not Met

[b] Expert Witnesses May Not Be Used When Product's Minimum Safety Is Within Lay Juror's Common Knowledge

§ 190.125 Opposing Contention That Product Is Defective in Design--Consumer Expectation Test Does Not Apply if Safety of Product Is Not Within Consumer's Everyday Experience

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Points and Authorities

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Consumer Expectation Test Does Not Apply if Safety of Product Is Not Within Everyday Experience of Consumer

§ 190.126 Opposing Contention that Product Is Defective--Benefits of Design Outweigh Inherent Risks

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Aesthetics Is Proper Consideration in Risk-Benefit Analysis

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

§§ 190.127-190.139 [Reserved]

§ 190.140 Supporting Contention That Product Is Defective in Manufacture--Definition of Manufacturing Defect

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Product Has Manufacturing Defect if It Comes off Assembly Line in Defective Condition

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Product Has Manufacturing Defect When It Comes off Assembly Line in Defective Condition

§ 190.141 Opposing Contention That Product Is Defective in Manufacture--Product Does Not Differ From Manufacturer's Intended Result and Does Not Differ Significantly From Identical Units From Same Product Line

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Product Not Defectively Manufactured

§§ 190.142-190.159 [Reserved]

§ 190.160 Supporting Contention That Defendant Is Strictly Liable for Failure to Warn of Known or Knowable Potential Dangers That Render Product Unsafe for Intended or Reasonably Foreseeable Use--In General

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Points and Authorities

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Manufacturer Is Strictly Liable for Failure to Warn

[b] Strict Liability Invoked for Warning Defects

[c] Liability for Failure to Warn Is Distinct From Consumer Expectations Test

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Manufacturer Is Strictly Liable for Failure to Warn

[b] Strict Liability Invoked for Warning Defects

§ 190.161 Supporting Contention That Defendant Is Strictly Liable for Failure to Warn--Failure to Supply Adequate Assembly and Use Instructions That Warn of Danger of Improper Assemblage or Use

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Product Is Defective if Assembly and Use Instructions Do Not Adequately Warn of Danger of Improper Assembly or Use

§ 190.162 Supporting Contention That Defendant Is Strictly Liable for Failure to Warn--Plaintiff Not Required to Prove That He or She Was Unaware of Defect or to Show Avoidance of Assumption of Risk

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Product's User Is Not Required to Prove Nonawareness of Defect or Avoidance of Assumption of Risk

§ 190.163 Supporting Contention That Defendant Is Strictly Liable for Failure to Warn--Defendant Is Manufacturer of Prescription Drug That Is Unavoidably Unsafe

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Manufacturer of Prescription Drug Strictly Liable for Failure to Warn

[b] FDA Regulation Does Not Preempt Strict Liability for Failure to Warn

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Manufacturer of Prescription Drug Strictly Liable for Failure to Warn

§ 190.164 Opposing Contention That Defendant Is Strictly Liable for Failure to Warn--No Showing of Defendant's

Knowledge of Potential Dangers

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Defendant's Knowledge of Danger Is Component of Failure-to-Warn Cause of Action

[b] State-of-the-Art Evidence Admissible

§ 190.165 Opposing Contention That Defendant Is Strictly Liable for Failure to Warn--No Duty to Warn of Unforeseeable Use of Product

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Product Must Be Used in Reasonably Foreseeable Manner

[b] No Duty to Warn of Use That Is Not Reasonably Foreseeable

§ 190.166 Opposing Contention That Defendant Is Strictly Liable for Failure to Warn--No Duty to Warn of Known and Recognized Danger

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Manufacturer or Retailer Has No Duty to Warn of Known and Recognized Danger

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Manufacturer or Retailer Has No Duty to Warn of Known and Recognized Danger

§ 190.167 Opposing Contention That Defendant Is Strictly Liable for Failure to Warn--No Duty to Warn Every Ultimate User of Product When Person Controlling Product's Use Has Received Warning

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Manufacturer Has No Duty to Warn Every Ultimate User of Product of Its Dangers When Person Controlling Product's Use Has Received Adequate Warning

[b] Airplane Manufacturer Has Duty to Warn Pilot but Not Passengers of Plane's Dangers

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Manufacturer Has No Duty to Warn Every Ultimate User of Product of Its Dangers When Person Controlling Product's Use Has Received Adequate Warning

§ 190.168 Opposing Contention That Defendant Is Strictly Liable for Failure to Warn--Bulk Manufacturer Has No Duty to Warn Ultimate Consumer of Product That Is Subsequently Repackaged by Distributor or Retailer

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Bulk Manufacturer Who Has Provided Adequate Warning in Bulk Sale of Product to Distributor Has No Duty to Warn Ultimate Consumer of Product's Dangers When Distributor Has Subsequently Repackaged, Relabeled, and Remarketed Product

§ 190.169 Opposing Contention That Defendant Is Strictly Liable for Failure to Warn--Manufacturer of Nondefective Component Part Has No Duty to Warn of Danger of Finished Product

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Duty to Warn Rests With Manufacturer of Finished Product and Not With Manufacturer of Nondefective Component Part

§ 190.170 Opposing Contention That Defendant Is Strictly Liable for Failure to Warn--Drug Manufacturer Has Duty to Warn Doctor but Not Patient

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Drug Manufacturer Has Duty to Warn Medical Profession but Not Patient

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Drug Manufacturer Has Duty to Warn Medical Profession but Not Patient

§ 190.171 Opposing Contention That Defendant Is Strictly Liable for Failure to Warn--Manufacturer Has No Duty to Warn When Plaintiff Is Injured by Another Manufacturer's Product

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Manufacturer Has No Duty to Warn of Risks of Its Product if Product of Another Has Proximately Caused Plaintiff's Injuries

[b] Manufacturer Has No Duty to Warn of Risks of Another's Product

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Manufacturer Has No Duty to Warn of Risks of Its Product When Product of Another Has Proximately Caused Plaintiff's Injuries

[b] Manufacturer Has No Duty to Warn of Risks of Another's Product

§ 190.172 Opposing Contention That Defendant Is Strictly Liable for Failure to Warn--Determining Existence of Defect Requires Weighing of Degrees of Danger

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Determination of Existence of Defect Requires Weighing of Degrees of Danger

[b] "Substantially Dangerous" Standard Appropriate to Determine Threshold Degree of Danger

§ 190.173 Opposing Contention That Defendant Is Strictly Liable for Failure to Warn--Manufacturer of Nonprescription Drug Has No Duty Beyond That Imposed by Statute and Regulation to Warn in Language Other Than English

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Nonprescription Drug Labeling Requirements Impose Proper Standard of Care

[b] Nonprescription Drug Manufacturers Have No Duty to Warn in Language Other Than English

§ 190.174 Opposing Contention That Defendant is Strictly Liable for Failure to Warn--Prescription Drug Manufacturer Is Not Liable for Failure to Give Warning Expressly Precluded by Food and Drug Administration (FDA)

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Points and Authorities

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Prescription Drug Manufacturer Has No Duty to Give Warning Expressly Precluded by FDA

§ 190.175 Opposing Contention That Defendant Is Strictly Liable for Failure to Warn--Utility Company Has No Duty to Warn Customers of Dangers of Storing Volatile Substances Near Gas-Fired Heater

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Utility Has No Duty to Warn of Risks Associated with Storing Volatile Substances Near Gas-Fired Heaters

§ 190.176 Opposing Contention that Defendant Is Strictly Liable for Failure to Warn--Lack of Warning or Allegedly Inadequate Warning Did Not Proximately Cause Injury

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Strict Liability Based on Failure to Warn if Failure to Warn or Inadequate Warning Did Not Proximately Cause Injury

[b] No Proximate Cause When Prescribing Physician Did Not Read Warning

§§ 190.177-190.189 [Reserved]

§ 190.190 Supporting Contention That Defendant Is Liable for Negligence in Products Liability Action [Civ. Code § 1714(a)]--Plaintiff Is Person or Member of Class of Persons to Whom Defendant Owed Duty of Ordinary Care

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[c] Related Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Persons to Whom Duty Owed

[b] Duty to Expected Users Unaware of Dangerous Propensities

[c] Duty to Foreseeable Nonusers

[d] Factors for Determining if Defendant Owed Duty to Plaintiff

[e] Developer Liable for Negligent Impairment of Lender's Security Interest

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Factors for Determining if Defendant Owed Duty to Plaintiff

§ 190.191 Supporting Contention That Manufacturer Breached Duty of Ordinary Care [Civ. Code § 1714(a)]--Failure to Manufacture Product Carefully

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[c] Related Points and Authorities

[d] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Duty to Manufacture Carefully

[b] Failure to Inspect or Test Product

[c] Failure to Conduct Tests Under Conditions Under Which Product Will Be Used

[d] Failure to Use Appropriate Tests to Reveal Defects

§ 190.192 Supporting Contention That Manufacturer Breached Duty of Ordinary Care [Civ. Code § 1714(a)]--Failure to Design Product Safely for Its Intended Use

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[c] Related Points and Authorities

[d] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Standard of Care in Designing Product

[b] Evidence of Lack of Due Care in Designing Product

§ 190.193 Supporting Contention That Manufacturer or Seller Breached Duty of Ordinary Care [Civ. Code § 1714(a)]--Failure to Provide Any Warnings of Dangers Inherent in Use of Product

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[c] Related Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Duty to Provide Appropriate Warning of Known Dangers That User Would Not Ordinarily Discover

[b] Exercise of Reasonable Care

[c] Knowledge of Dangerous Propensity of Product

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Duty to Provide Appropriate Warning of Known Dangers That User Would Not Ordinarily Discover

§ 190.194 Supporting Contention That Manufacturer or Seller Breached Duty of Ordinary Care [Civ. Code § 1714(a)]--Failure to Provide Adequate Warnings of Dangers Inherent in Use of Product

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[c] Related Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Duty to Provide Adequate Warning

[b] Failure to Warn of Particular Hazard

[c] Compliance With Regulations or Directives Insufficient

[d] Adequate Warning May Be Rendered Inadequate by Overpromotion

[e] Incomplete Warning

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Duty to Provide Adequate Warning

§ 190.195 Supporting Contention That Seller of Product Breached Duty of Ordinary Care [Civ. Code § 1714(a)]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[c] Related Points and Authorities

[d] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Failure of Seller to Use Reasonable Care

[b] Seller's Performance of Auxiliary Functions

[c] Seller's Duty When Product Is Used or Second-Hand

§ 190.196 Supporting Contention That Lessor or Bailor Breached Duty of Ordinary Care [Civ. Code § 1714(a)]--Failure to Inspect and Furnish Reasonably Safe Chattel [Civ. Code § 1955]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[c] Related Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Duty to Furnish Chattel Safe for Intended Use

[b] Duty to Inspect

§ 190.197 Supporting Contention That Endorser of Product Breached Duty of Ordinary Care [Civ. Code § 1714(a)]--Negligent Misrepresentation of Product

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[c] Related Points and Authorities

[d] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Duty of Endorser to Exercise Ordinary Care in Endorsing Product to Public

§ 190.198 Supporting Contention That Lender Breached Duty of Ordinary Care to Third Person [Civ. Code § 1714(a)]--Lender Acted Outside Scope of Regular Activities or Was Party to Misrepresentation [Civ. Code § 3434]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[c] Related Points and Authorities

[d] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Statutory Liability of Lender

§ 190.198A Supporting Contention That Name-Brand Drug Manufacturer Breached Duty of Care When Prescription Was Filled With Generic Drug--Negligent Misrepresentation

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Name-Brand Drug Manufacturer's Duty of Care in Disseminating Product Information Extends to Persons Injured by Generic Version When Physician Relied on Information in Prescribing Drug

§ 190.199 Supporting Contention That Seller of Services Breached Duty of Ordinary Care [Civ. Code § 1714(a)]--Seller of Services May Be Liable on Negligence Theory, Although Not Liable on Strict Products Theory

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[c] Related Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Liability of Seller of Services

§ 190.199A Supporting Contention That Defendant Breached Duty of Ordinary Care [Civ. Code § 1714(a)]--Designing, Distribution, and Marketing of Firearms and Ammunition

[1] Form

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Points and Authorities

§ 190.199B Opposing Contention That Defendant Is Liable for Negligence in Products Liability Action--Defendant Did Not Breach Duty of Ordinary Care

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Proof of Breach of Duty of Care Is Required Element of Negligence

§ 190.200 Opposing Contention That Manufacturer Breached Duty of Ordinary Care [Civ. Code § 1714(a)]--Defect Could Not Be Discovered by Reasonable Inspection

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[c] Related Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Defect Must Be Discoverable

§ 190.201 Opposing Contention That Manufacturer Breached Duty of Ordinary Care [Civ. Code § 1714(a)]--Product Was Misused by User and Misuse Was Not Reasonably Foreseeable at Time Product Was Manufactured

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Misuse Not Foreseeable at Time of Manufacture

[b] No Duty to Repair or Recall Product if Manufactured According to Purchaser's Specifications and Not Dangerous When Properly Used

§ 190.202 Opposing Contention That Manufacturer Breached Duty of Ordinary Care [Civ. Code § 1714(a)]--No Duty to Warn During Declared State of Emergency

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[c] Related Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Duty to Warn in Declared State of Emergency

§ 190.203 Opposing Contention That Manufacturer Breached Duty of Ordinary Care [Civ. Code § 1714(a)]--No Duty to Warn of Rare, Idiosyncratic, Hypersensitive, or Unusual Reactions

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Duty to Warn of Possibility of Rare, Idiosyncratic, or Unusual Reactions to Otherwise Safe and Useful Product.

§ 190.204 Opposing Contention That Seller of Product Breached Duty of Ordinary Care [Civ. Code § 1714(a)]--Seller Had No Duty to Test or Inspect Product

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[c] Related Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Defective Condition Could Not Be Discovered by Reasonable Inspection or Test

[b] No Duty to Inspect and Test When Nature of Product Precludes Inspection

[c] No Duty to Inspect Packaged Product

[d] No Duty to Inspect Vehicle Sold to Dealer

§ 190.204A Opposing Contention That Manufacturer or Seller Breached Duty of Ordinary Care--No Duty to Avoid Negligently Causing Emotional Distress to Product Owner Who Lends Defective Product to Family Member

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Duty to Avoid Negligently Causing Emotional Distress to Owners Who Lend Defective Products to Family Members

§ 190.205 Opposing Contention That Lender Breached Duty of Ordinary Care to Third Person [Civ. Code § 1714(a)]--Lender Did Not Act Outside Scope of Regular Activities and Was Not Party to Misrepresentation [Civ. Code § 3434]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[c] Related Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Lender Did Not Act Outside Scope of Lender's Activities and Not Party to Any Misrepresentations.

[b] Intent of Legislature to Define Lender's Duty of Due Care

§ 190.206 Opposing Contention That Researcher Breached Duty of Ordinary Care to Third Person [Civ. Code § 1714(a)]--Research Activity For Manufacturer Does Not Create Duty Supporting Negligent Undertaking Claim

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Research Activity For Manufacturer Does Not Create Duty For Negligent Undertaking Claim

§ 190.207 Opposing Contention That Product Certifier Breached Duty of Care [Civ. Code § 1714(a)]--U.L Did Not Undertake to Test For and Certify Against Medical Risks of Asbestos

[1] FORM

[1] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Defendant Did Not Undertake to Guarantee Plaintiff's Safety From Cancer-Causing Asbestos By Testing and Certifying Appliances As Safe.

§ 190.208 Opposing Contention That Publisher Has Duty to Investigate Advertised Product--Publisher Did Not Endorse Product

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Nonendorsing Publisher Has No Duty to Investigate Advertised Product

[b] Mere Advertising Is Constitutionally Protected Activity

§§ 190.209-190.219 [Reserved]

§ 190.220 Supporting Contention That Plaintiff Is Entitled to Purely Economic Damages--Economic Damages Available on Negligence Theory if J'Aire Factors Met

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Economic Damages Are Recoverable in Negligence Action

[b] Six-Part Balancing Test for Determining Recoverability of Economic Damages

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Economic Damages Are Recoverable in Negligence Action

§ 190.221 Supporting Contention That Plaintiff Is Entitled to Recover in Tort When Product Defect Causes Damage to "Other Property"--Economic Loss Rule Does Not Preclude Recovery for Damage to Another Part of Product

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Economic Loss Rule Allows Plaintiff to Recover in Strict Liability When Product Defect Causes Damage to Other Property

[b] Economic Loss Rule Does Not Necessarily Bar Recovery in Tort for Damage That Defective Product Causes to Other Portions of Larger Product

[c] Manufacturer of Defective Window May Be Strictly Liable for Damage Caused to Other Parts of Home

[d] Distinguishing Between "Other Property" and Defective Product Itself Requires Determination of Whether Defective Part Is Discrete Element

§ 190.222 Supporting Contention That Plaintiff Is Entitled to Recover in Tort--Economic Loss Rule Does Not Bar

Fraud or Intentional Misrepresentation Claims That Are Independent of Defendant's Breach of Contract

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Points and Authorities

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Economic Loss Rule Does Not Necessarily Bar Recovery in Tort for Fraud and Misrepresentation Independent of Breach of Contract

[b] Economic Loss Rule Does Not Apply to Any Affirmative Fraud Action Where Plaintiff Can Establish That Fraud Exposed Plaintiff to Liability

§ 190.223 Supporting Contention That Plaintiff Is Entitled to Punitive Damages [Civ. Code § 3294]--Punitive Damages Available in Strict Products Liability Action

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Effect of 1987 Amendment to Civ. Code § 1714

[c] Related Points and Authorities

[d] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Punitive Damages Available in Products Liability Action When Defendant Consciously Disregards Safety of Others

[b] Conscious Disregard of Probability of Injury to Consuming Public May Prove Conscious Disregard of Safety of Others

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Punitive Damages Available in Products Liability Action When Defendant Consciously Disregards Safety of Others

§ 190.223A Supporting Contention That Amount of Punitive Damages Awarded Is Excessive--Constitutional Guideposts

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Review of Punitive Damages Award Encompasses Three Constitutional "Guideposts"

[b] Factors Guiding Determination of Degree of Reprehensibility

[c] U.S. Supreme Court Cases Do Not Preclude California From Considering Defendant's Recidivism In Assessing Culpability

[d] Factors to Consider in Determining Whether Punitive Damages Award Is Excessive

[e] Punitive Damages Previously Awarded For Same Conduct Are Relevant

[f] Due Process Clause Prohibits State From Using Punitive Damages to Punish Defendant for Injury It Inflicted Upon Nonparties

§ 190.223B Supporting Contention That Defendant May Not Apportion Fault to Entity That Lacked Legal "Fault"--Civ. Code § 1431.2

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Tobacco Companies Protected Under Former Civ. Code § 1714.45 Were Not Tortfeasors to Which Comparative Fault Could Be Assigned

[b] Party Absolved of Liability by Primary Assumption of Risk Is Not Subject to Allocation of Fault

§ 190.223C Supporting Contention That Defendant Is Jointly and Severally Liable for Noneconomic Damages [Civ. Code § 1431.2]--Proposition 51 Does Not Apply Where Plaintiff's Injuries Are Caused Solely by Defective Product

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Proposition 51 Does Not Apply Where Plaintiff's Injuries Were Caused Solely by Defective Product

§ 190.224 Opposing Contention That Plaintiff Is Entitled to Purely Economic Damages--Economic Damages Not Available in Strict Liability Action

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Economic Damages Alone Are Not Available in Strict Products Liability Action

[b] J'Aire Decision Does Not Extend to Strict Liability Action

[c] Expenses of Repairing Defect Are Purely Economic Damages for Which Recovery Is Not Available Under Strict Liability Theory

[d] Plaintiff Is Not Entitled to Economic Damages if Alleged Construction Defect Has Not Caused Any Personal Injury or Property Damage

[e] When Defect and Damage Are One and Same, Defect May Not Be Considered to Have Caused Physical Injury

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Economic Damages Alone Are Not Available in Strict Products Liability Action

§ 190.225 Opposing Contention That Plaintiff Is Entitled to Purely Economic Damages--Purely Economic Damages Not Available in Negligence Action Absent Special Relationship Between Parties

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[c] Related Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Economic Damages Alone Are Not Available in Negligence Action Unless Parties Have Special Relationship

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Economic Damages Alone Are Not Available in Negligence Action Unless Parties Have Special Relationship

§ 190.226 Opposing Contention That Plaintiff Is Entitled to Punitive Damages [Civ. Code § 3294]--Punitive Damages Not Available in Strict Liability Action Based on Market-Share Liability Theory

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Punitive Damages Are Not Available in Market-Share Liability Case

[b] Punitive Damages Are Not Available Unless Plaintiff Identifies Actual Manufacturer and Proves Manufacturer Acted With Malice or Oppression

§ 190.227 Opposing Contention That Plaintiff is Entitled to Punitive Damages [Civ. Code § 3294]--Punitive Damages Not Available in Strict Products Liability Action When Plaintiff Suffers No Personal Injury

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Punitive Damages Are Not Available in Strict Products Liability Action Absent Proof That Plaintiff Suffered Personal Injuries

§ 190.228 Opposing Contention That Defendant Is Jointly and Severally Liable for Noneconomic Damages [Civ. Code § 1431.2]--Proposition 51 Requires Apportionment of Fault to Absent or Immune Tortfeasors

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Proposition 51 Contains No Exception for Damages Attributable to Fault of Persons Who Are Immune From Liability

§ 190.229 Opposing Contention That Defendant Is Jointly and Severally Liable for Noneconomic Damages [Civ. Code § 1431.2]--Proposition 51 Applies Where Plaintiff's Injuries Are Caused by Separate Products

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Proposition 51 Applies in Strict Liability Asbestos Case Where Multiple Products Caused Plaintiff's Injuries

§§ 190.230-190.239 [Reserved]

§ 190.240 Supporting Contention That Product Not Defective--Benefits of Its Design Outweigh Risks--Design Comported With State of the Art

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Evidence of Feasibility and Cost of Alternative Designs Is Relevant to Risk-Benefits Test

[b] Evidence of State of the Art Is Relevant to Feasibility and Cost of Alternative Designs

[c] Evidence of State of the Art Is Distinguishable From Evidence of Industry Custom and Usage, and Is Therefore Admissible

§ 190.241 Supporting Contention That Product Not Defective--Former Civ. Code § 1714.4(a) Bars Plaintiffs from Holding a Gun Manufacturer Liable on a Common Law Negligence Theory

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Former Civ. Code § 1714.4 Provides Protection From Liability for Gun Manufacturers on Common Law Negligence Claims

§ 190.242 Supporting Contention That Defendant Is Not Liable--Adequate Warning on Product

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Adequate Warning Is Sufficient Defense to Strict Products Liability Action

[b] Adequate Warning Is Warranty Disclaimer and Negates Negligence and Willful Misconduct

[c] Adequate Warning Is Given if Placed on Product or if Sent to Owners of Product

§ 190.243 Supporting Contention That Defendant Is Not Liable--Government Contractor Immunity

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Government Contractor Immunity Provides Protection From Liability for Design Defects

[b] Commercially Available Products Are Subject to Government Contractor Defense

[c] Government Contractor Defense Applies to Negligence Claims.

§ 190.244 Supporting Contention That Defendant Is Not Liable in Action Based on Negligence--Successor Manufacturer Not Liable for Product of Predecessor Absent Existence of Factors That Would Justify Liability

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

[c] Related Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Successor Corporation Not Liable for Negligence of Predecessor Under General Liability Theory Absent Existence of Factors That Would Justify Liability

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Successor to Manufacturing Corporation Not Liable in Absence of Exception to General Rule of Successor Nonliability

§ 190.245 Supporting Contention That Comparative Indemnity Applies--Defendant Is Entitled to Comparative Apportionment of Liability

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[c] Related Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Liability Is Apportioned in Conformity With Comparative Fault Findings

[b] Liability Is Apportioned Even When Liability of One Defendant Derives From Negligence While Liability of Other Derives From Strict Products Liability

[c] Liability Is Apportioned Between Strictly Liable Tortfeasors

[d] With Regard to Noneconomic Damages, Defendant's Percentage of Fault Must Be Compared to Fault of All Persons Who Contributed to Injury

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Liability Is Apportioned Between Strictly Liable Tortfeasors

[b] With Regard to Noneconomic Damages, Defendant's Percentage of Fault Must Be Compared to Fault of All Persons Who Contributed to Injury

§ 190.245A Supporting Contention That Sophisticated User Defense Applies--Defendant Had No Duty to Warn

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Points and Authorities

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussing of Authorities

[a] Manufacturer Not Liable If Sophisticated User Knew or Should Have Known of Risk

[b] Sophisticated User Defense Applies to Negligence and Strict Liability Causes of Action

[c] Relevant Time for Determining User Sophistication Is Time of Injury

[d] Sophisticated User Defense Applies to Failure-to-Warn Cause of Action on Negligence Per Se Theory

§ 190.246 Supporting Contention That Bulk Supplier and Sophisticated Buyer Defenses Apply

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Bulk Supplier of Raw Materials to Sophisticated Buyer Is Not Liable for Negligence

§ 190.247 Supporting Contention That Action for Personal Injuries Brought Under Market Share or Products Liability Theory Barred by Statute of Limitations [Code Civ. Proc. § 335.1; Note: Former Code Civ. Proc. § 340(3) provided for a one-year period]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Sindell Did Not Create New Tort With New Statute of Limitations

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Market Share Action For Personal Injuries Must Be Brought Within One Year After Accrual of Cause of Action Under Former Code Civ. Proc. § 340(3)

[b] Products Liability Action for Personal Injuries Must Be Brought Within Two Years After Accrual of Cause of Action Under Code Civ. Proc. § 335.1

[c] Statute Begins to Run When Plaintiff Has Information to Be Put on Inquiry of Wrongdoing

[d] Statute Begins to Run on Discovery of Facts, Not Their Legal Significance

[e] Discovery Rule Allows Accrual of Cause of Action if Plaintiff Has No Reason to Suspect Identity of Defendant

[f] Statute of Limitations Begins to Run Under Discovery Rule When Plaintiff Has Reason to Suspect Injury and Some Wrongful Cause, Unless Reasonable Investigation Would Not Have Revealed Cause of Action's Factual Basis

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Statute Begins to Run on Discovery of Facts, Not Their Legal Significance

§ 190.248 Supporting Contention That Action in Strict Liability for Defects in Real Property Development or Improvement Barred by Statute of Limitations [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 337.1, 337.15]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Limitation on Action for Latent Defects in Real Property Development or Improvement

[b] Limitation Period for Latent Defects Applies to Strict Liability Action

[c] Limitation Period for Patent Defects Applies to Strict Liability Action

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Limitation on Action for Latent Defects in Real Property Development or Improvement

§ 190.249 Supporting Contention That Products Liability Action Is Preempted by Federal Law

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Federal Preemption Requires Dismissal of State Products Liability Claim When Congress Intends to Supersede State Law

[b] State Products Liability Claim Is Preempted by Federal Railroad Legislation

[c] State Tort Claim Based on "No Air Bag" Design Defect Is Preempted

[d] FIFRA Preempts Rules Imposing Labeling Requirement That Diverge From Those In Federal Statute

[e] Federal Aviation Legislation Expressly Preempts State Law

[f] Savings Clause of FDA Modernization Act Does Not Entirely Exclude Conflict Preemption

[g] Warranty and Fraud Claims Are Not Saved From Preemption by Saving Clause of FDA Modernization Act

[h] MDA Preempts Fraud-on-FDA Claims

[i] Federal Safety Appliance Acts Preempts Certain State Law Claims Regarding Railroad Freight Cars

[j] Dormant Commerce Clause Preempts Laws That Impermissibly Burden Interstate Commerce

[k] MDA's Express Preemption Clause Bars Common Law Claims Regarding Safety or Effectiveness of Medical Device With Premarket Approval

[l] FMVSS 208 Preempts Claim Regarding Lap-Only Seatbelt

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Federal Preemption Requires Dismissal of State Products Liability Claim When Congress Intends to Supersede State Law

§ 190.250 Opposing Contention That Product Not Defective Because Defendant Followed Industry Custom or Usage in Producing Product and Thus Defendant Not Strictly Liable--Evidence of Industry Custom or Usage Is Irrelevant

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Evidence of Industry Custom or Usage Is Irrelevant

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Evidence of Industry Custom or Usage Is Irrelevant

§ 190.251 Opposing Contention That Product Not Defective Because Product's Design Complied With Owner Specifications--Compliance With Owner Specifications Is Irrelevant to Defect Issue and Risk-Benefits Test

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Evidence of Compliance With Owner Specifications Is Irrelevant

[b] Feasibility of Alternative Design Does Not Include Compliance With Owner Specifications

[c] Building Product in Accordance With Government Specifications Is Not a Defense

§ 190.252 Opposing Contention That Plaintiff Is Not Entitled to Recovery Because Plaintiff's Lack of Care Contributed to Injury--Error to Instruct Jury That Defendant Not Liable as Matter of Law for Injuries From Use of Broken Product After Plaintiff Became Aware of Damaged State

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Error to Instruct That Defendant Not Liable as Matter of Law for Injuries From Broken Product When Evidence Suggests That Product Was Initially Defective

§ 190.253 Opposing Contention That Plaintiff Is Not Entitled to Recovery Because Plaintiff's Lack of Care Contributed to Injury--Plaintiff's Comparative Negligence or Secondary Assumption of Risk Requires Reduction of Plaintiff's Recovery by Proportion of Fault but Does Not Bar Recovery

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Comparative Fault Applies to Strict Products Liability Cases

[b] Plaintiff's Recovery Is Reduced Only to Extent Plaintiff Contributed to Injury

[c] Assumption of Risk Requires Application of Comparative Fault Principles Rather Than Bar of Action if Defendant Owed Duty to Plaintiff

§ 190.254 Opposing Contention That Plaintiff Is Not Entitled to Recovery Because of Primary Assumption of Risk--Defendant Owes Duty to Participants Not to Increase Risk of Harm Over and Above That Inherent in Sport

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Defendant Owes Duty to Participants Not to Increase Risk of Harm Over and Above That Inherent in Sport

[b] Risk Is Inherent in Sport if Its Elimination Would Chill Vigorous Participation and Alter Fundamental Nature of Activity.

§ 190.255 Opposing Contention That Plaintiff Is Not Entitled to Recovery Because of Primary Assumption of Risk--Manufacturer Owes Duty to User of Its Product

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Manufacturer's Duty to Users of Product Under Strict Liability Makes Primary Assumption of Risk Inapplicable as Defense

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Manufacturer's Duty to Users of Product Under Strict Liability Makes Primary Assumption of Risk Inapplicable as Defense

§ 190.256 Opposing Contention That Plaintiff Is Not Entitled to Recovery Because Plaintiff's Lack of Care Contributed to Injury--Plaintiff's Conduct Compared to Defendant's Product and Not to Defendant's Conduct

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Plaintiff's Conduct Compared to Defendant's Product and Not to Defendant's Conduct

§ 190.257 Opposing Contention That Government Contractor Immunity Is Applicable--No Government Specification

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Government Contractor Immunity Requires Specification by Government

§ 190.258 Opposing Contention That Government Contractor Immunity Is Applicable--No Significant Conflict Between Government Contractual Requirements and State Law

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Government Contractor Immunity When Significant Conflict Between Contractual Requirement and Law Has Not Been Established

§ 190.258A Opposing Contention That Government Contractor Immunity Is Applicable--Finding That Defense Applies to Design Defect Claim Does Not Necessarily Immunize Defendant on Failure-to-Warn Claim

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Government Contractor Immunity for Failure-to-Warn Claims Unless Federal Contract Includes Warning Requirements That Significantly Conflict With State Law

§ 190.259 Opposing Contention That Federal Preemption is Applicable

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Federal Preemption Inapplicable Absent Congressional Intent to Supersede State Law

[b] No Federal Preemption When Defendant Has Failed to Show Conflicting Statutory Specifications

[c] FDA Regulation Does Not Preempt Strict Liability for Failure to Warn

[d] No Federal Preemption of Design Claims Involving "Substantially Equivalent" Medical Device

[e] No Federal Preemption of Express Warranty Claims Regarding Cigarettes

[f] No Federal Preemption of Certain Fraud Claims Regarding Cigarettes

[g] FIFRA Does Not Preempt State Rule Unless It Satisfies Two Conditions

[h] State Law Labeling Requirement That Is Equivalent to and Consistent With FIFRA's Misbranding Provisions Is Not Preempted

[i] State Law Requirement Need Not Be Phrased in Identical Language to Corresponding FIFRA Requirement

[j] Claims Based on Oral Representations Are Outside Scope of FIFRA Preemption

[k] Express Warranty Claims Not Preempted if Defendant Voluntarily Warranted Product's Fitness for Particular Purpose

[l] Savings Clause of Federal Railroad Safety Act Permits State Regulation of Matter Not Covered by Federal Regulations or Orders

[m] Savings Clause of Federal Railroad Safety Act Permits State Regulation of Matters Covered by Federal Regulations if Law Meets Three Criteria

[n] FDA Labeling Regulation Does Not Preempt Warning Claim Against Generic Drug Manufacturer

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] No Federal Preemption When Defendant Has Failed to Show Conflicting Statutory Specifications

§ 190.260 Opposing Contention That Action for Personal Injuries Under Products Liability Theory Is Barred by Statute of Limitations

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Statute Does Not Begin to Run if Plaintiff Has Insufficient Information to Be Put on Inquiry of Wrongdoing

[b] Discovery Rule Delays Accrual if Diligent Investigation Discloses Only One Kind of Wrongdoing and Injury Was Caused by Wholly Different Kind of Wrongdoing

[c] Statute of Limitations Begins to Run Under Discovery Rule When Plaintiff Has Reason to Suspect Injury and Some Wrongful Cause, Unless Reasonable Investigation Would Not Have Revealed Cause of Action's Factual Basis

[d] Suspicion Required to Trigger Statute of Limitations May Not Be Imputed to Plaintiff

[e] Plaintiff Has No Obligation to Seek Out News of Drug's Dangerous Side Effects Through Media

[f] Media Reports of Hazardous or Toxic Substances Do Not, by Themselves, Put Reasonable Person on Inquiry Notice

[g] No Special Presumption Based on Common Knowledge That Smoking Is Addictive or Harmful

[h] Appreciable Harm Rule Does Not Apply When There Is Earlier Economic Injury and Later Physical Injury

§ 190.261 Opposing Contention That Action in Strict Liability or Negligence for Injury to Real or Personal Property Is Barred by Statute of Limitations

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Discovery Rule Applies to Negligence and Strict Liability Claims for Damage Caused by Product Defect to Real or Personal Property

[b] Economic Loss Alone Does Not Amount to Type of "Damage" That Causes Products Liability Cause of Action to Accrue

§ 190.262 Opposing Contention That Sophisticated User Defense Applies--Sophisticated User Defense Is Inapplicable to Strict Liability Design Defect Claim Under Risk-Benefit Analysis

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Sophisticated User Defense Is Inapplicable to Design Defect Cause of Action

§§ 190.263-190.279 [Reserved]

§ 190.280 Supporting Contention That Evidence Is Admissible in Strict Liability Action--Proof of Defect--Evidence of Remedial or Precautionary Measures Taken After Accident

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Evidence Inadmissible When Remedial Measures Taken by Entity Not Strictly Liable

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Evidence of Remedial or Precautionary Measures Is Admissible to Prove Defect

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Evidence of Remedial or Precautionary Measures Is Admissible to Prove Defect

§ 190.281 Supporting Contention That Evidence Is Admissible in Strict Liability or Negligence Action--Proof of Defect, Knowledge, or Cause of Accident--Evidence of Other Accidents, Occurrences, or Failures

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Evidence Is Admissible to Prove Defective Condition, Knowledge, or Cause of Accident

[b] Evidence Is Admissible to Prove Defect

[c] Evidence Is Admissible to Show Defendant Had Notice of Dangerous Condition

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Evidence is Admissible to Prove Defect

§ 190.282 Supporting Contention That Evidence Is Admissible in Strict Liability Action--Proof of Duty to Warn--Evidence of Post-Accident Warning

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Evidence of Post-Accident Warning Is Admissible in Strict Products Liability Action to Prove Duty to Warn

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Evidence of Post-Accident Warning Is Admissible in Strict Products Liability Action to Prove Duty to Warn

§ 190.283 Supporting Contention That Evidence Is Admissible in Strict Liability Action--Proof of Duty to Warn--Evidence of FDA Action or Inaction

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Evidence of FDA Action or Inaction is Admissible in Failure-to-Warn Action to Show Risk.

[b] Evidence of FDA Action or Inaction May Be Considered in Design Defect Claim

§ 190.284 Supporting Contention That Evidence Is Admissible in Strict Liability or Negligence Action--Proof of Malice and Punitive Damages [Civ. Code § 3294]--Evidence of Failure to Change Known Defective Product or to Remove Product From Market

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Evidence of Failure to Change or Remove Product From Market Is Admissible on Issue of Malice and Punitive Damages

§ 190.285 Supporting Contention That Defect and Proximate Cause Resulting in Plaintiff's Injury May Be Proved by Circumstantial Evidence in Strict Liability or Negligence Action

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Plaintiff May Establish Defect by Circumstantial Evidence

[b] Plaintiff May Establish Proximate Cause by Circumstantial Evidence

[c] Plaintiff May Establish Proximate Cause by Showing Defect Was Substantial Factor for Injury

[d] Reasonable Inferences Are Available to Show Causation in Food Poisoning Cases

[e] Plaintiff Is Not Required to Exclude All Possibilities of Illness Other Than Defendant's Food

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Plaintiff May Establish Defect by Circumstantial Evidence

§ 190.286 Supporting Contention That Evidence Is Sufficient to Be Submitted to Jury on Strict Liability Theory--Proof of Defect by Fact of Accident When Accident Shortly After Sale, Plaintiff Did Not Bring About Accident, and Expert Testimony Suggests Defect

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Evidence Sufficient to Show That Accident Occurred Shortly After Sale, Plaintiff Did Nothing to Bring About Accident, and Expert Testimony Indicates Defect Was Responsible for Accident

§ 190.287 Supporting Contention That Plaintiff Is Entitled to Res Ipsa Loquitur Instruction--Both Negligence and Strict Liability Alleged

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Plaintiff Entitled to Res Ipsa Loquitur Instruction When Warranted, Even if Plaintiff Has Also Alleged Strict Liability

§ 190.288 Opposing Contention That Evidence Is Sufficient to Be Submitted to Jury on Strict Liability Theory--Inference of Defect by Fact of Accident May Not Be Drawn--Res Ipsa Loquitur Not Applicable

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[c] Related Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Plaintiff Must Affirmatively Establish Defect

[b] Jury May Not Infer Defect From Fact of Accident

[c] Res Ipsa Loquitur Is Not Applicable to Strict Liability Action

§ 190.289 Opposing Contention that Expert Opinion Is Admissible in Strict Liability or Negligence Action--Expert Opinion Must Be Based on Matter That Provides Reasonable Basis for Opinion [Evid. Code § 801]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Matter on Which Expert Relies Must Provide Reasonable Basis for Particular Opinion Offered.

§ 190.290 Opposing Contention That Defect and Proximate Cause May Be Proved Without Expert Testimony in Products Liability Action

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Expert Testimony Is Required to Establish Causation if Issue Is Complex

[b] Causation in Personal Injury Action Must Be Based on Expert Testimony

§ 190.291 Opposing Contention That Evidence Is Admissible in Strict Liability Action--Proof of Defect--Compliance With Industry Customs or Standards

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Evidence of Defendant's Compliance With Industry Custom or Standard Is Not Relevant to Issue of Defect

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART I. INTRODUCTION

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.01

§ 190.01 Scope of Chapter

Subpart A of Part II of this chapter contains forms of points and authorities relating to the strict liability theory of recovery in a products liability action, including forms supporting [see §§ 190.20 -190.23] and opposing [see §§ 190.24 -190.31] the contention that the source of injury was a product rather than a service; forms supporting [see §§ 190.50 -190.52] and opposing [see § 190.53] the contention that the plaintiff may bring an action in strict liability; forms supporting [see §§ 190.70 -190.81] and opposing [see §§ 190.82 -190.94] the contention that an action in strict liability may be brought against the defendant; forms supporting [see §§ 190.110 -190.119] and opposing [see §§ 190.120 -190.125] the contention that the product is defective in design; forms supporting [see § 190.140] the contention that the product is defective in manufacture; and forms supporting [see §§ 190.160 -190.163] and opposing [see §§ 190.164 -190.176] the contention that the defendant is strictly liable for failure to warn.

Subpart B of Part II of this chapter contains forms of points and authorities for use in products liability actions based on the theory of negligence, including a general form supporting the contention that a defendant owed and breached a duty of due care to plaintiff in a products liability action [see § 190.190], forms supporting [see § 190.191] and opposing [see § 190.200] the contention that a defendant breached a duty to manufacture a product carefully, and forms supporting [see § 190.192] and opposing [see § 190.201] the contention that a defendant breached the duty to design a product safe for its intended use. It also contains forms for use in supporting the contentions that defendant failed to provide warnings [see § 190.193] or to provide adequate warnings [see § 190.194] of the dangers inherent in the use of a product. It contains a form opposing the contention that a defendant breached the duty of care by failing to provide adequate warnings [see § 190.203]. Finally, the part contains forms for use in supporting and opposing the contentions that certain classes of defendants owed and breached a duty to use reasonable care, specifically a seller [see §§ 190.195, 190.204], a lessor or bailor [see § 190.196], a product certifier [see § 190.207], an endorser of a product [see §§ 190.197, 190.208], a lending financial institution [see §§ 190.198, 190.205], and a provider of services [see § 190.199].

Because a products liability action may be brought under theories of strict liability, negligence, and warranty, the points and authorities contained in Subpart A of Part II may be used in conjunction with those relating to negligence in Subpart B of Part II as well as those relating to breach of warranty in Ch. 206, Sales, § 206.60 et seq.

Subpart C of Part II of this chapter contains memoranda of points and authorities for use in a products liability action supporting [see § 190.220] and opposing [see § 190.224] the contention that plaintiff is entitled to economic damages, and supporting [see § 190.223] and opposing [see § 190.226] the contention that plaintiff is entitled to punitive damages.

The memoranda of points and authorities contained in the other Subparts of this chapter may be combined in appropriate cases with those contained in Subpart C. For example, if the plaintiff brings the action on a negligence theory, the points and authorities in § 190.220 might be appropriately combined with the memoranda in Subpart B relating to negligence. If the plaintiff brings the action on a strict liability theory, the points and authorities in §§ 190.223, 190.224, and 190.226 might be appropriately combined with the memoranda in Subpart A.

Subpart D of Part II of this chapter contains memoranda of points and authorities relating to various defenses used in a products liability action, including forms supporting [see §§ 190.240, 190.241] and opposing [see §§ 190.250, 190.251] the contention that the product is not defective; supporting the contention that the defendant is not liable for an inadequate warning [see § 190.242]; supporting the contention that the defendant is not liable because successor liability does not apply [see § 190.244]; supporting the contentions that comparative indemnity [see § 190.245] and total equitable indemnity [see § 190.246] apply; supporting [see §§ 190.245A, 190.246] and opposing [see § 190.262] the contention that the sophisticated user or bulk supplier defense applies; supporting the contention that a market share theory action is barred by the statute of limitations [see § 190.247]; supporting the contention that a strict liability action in real property is barred by the statute of limitations [see § 190.248]; and opposing the contention that plaintiff's conduct bars recovery [see §§ 190.252 -190.256]. It also contains memoranda of points and authorities supporting [see § 190.243] and opposing [see §§ 190.257, 190.258] the contention that the defendant is protected by the government contractor immunity. Also included are memoranda of points and authorities supporting [see § 190.249] and opposing [see § 190.259] the contention that the action is preempted by federal law; and opposing the contention that an action is barred by the statute of limitations [see §§ 190.260, 190.261].

Subpart E of Part II of this chapter contains memoranda of points and authorities for use in a products liability action supporting the contention that certain evidence is admissible [see §§ 190.280 -190.284]; supporting the contention that defect and causation may be proved by circumstantial evidence [see § 190.285]; supporting the contention that certain evidence inferring defect is sufficient to be submitted to the jury [see § 190.286]; supporting [see § 190.287] and opposing [see § 190.288] contentions regarding res ipsa loquitur; and opposing the contention that expert opinion is admissible [see § 190.289].

The memoranda of points and authorities contained in the other Subparts of this chapter may be appropriately combined with those contained in Subparts D and E.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
TortsProducts LiabilityGeneral OverviewTortsProducts LiabilityDesign DefectsTortsProducts LiabilityDuty to WarnTortsProducts LiabilityManufacturing DefectsTortsProducts LiabilityManufacturing DefectsTortsProducts LiabilityNegligenceTortsProducts LiabilityStrict Liability

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART I. INTRODUCTION

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.02

§ 190.02 Governing Statutes

The law governing a strict products liability action has been mostly developed through case law. Many landmark cases in this area have established the general rules governing this action. In Greenman v. Yuba Power Prods., Inc. (1963) 59 Cal. 2d 57, 27 Cal. Rptr. 697, 377 P.2d 897 , the Supreme Court first held that a manufacturer may be held liable under a theory of strict liability. The Court expanded on the theory in Cronin v. J.B.E. Olson Corp. (1972) 8 Cal. 3d 121, 104 Cal. Rptr. 433, 501 P.2d 1153 , in which the Court held that a plaintiff need not prove that a product was unreasonably dangerous, but instead need only prove that the product was defective. In the most significant case in this field of law, the Court outlined a dual test for design defect in Barker v. Lull Eng'g Co. (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 413, 143 Cal. Rptr. 225, 573 P.2d 443 .

Other landmark cases include the Supreme Court decision in Daly v. General Motors Corp. (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 725, 144 Cal. Rptr. 380, 575 P.2d 1162 , that the principles of comparative negligence apply to a strict liability action; the court of appeal decision in Grimshaw v. Ford Motor Co. (1981) 119 Cal. App. 3d 757, 174 Cal. Rptr. 348 , that punitive damages may be awarded in a strict products liability case; and the Supreme Court decision in Sindell v. Abbott Labs. (1980) 26 Cal. 3d 588, 163 Cal. Rptr. 132, 607 P.2d 924 , limited by Brown v. Superior Court (1988) 44 Cal. 3d 1049, 245 Cal. Rptr. 412, 751 P.2d 470 , which provides that under certain circumstances, all major manufacturers of a product may be held liable in a products liability action under the market share theory, which enables the plaintiff to file an action without needing to name the particular manufacturer that manufactured the product.

Nevertheless, a few statutes govern specific aspects of strict products liability. Former Civ. Code § 1714.4, repealed in 2002, set limitations on a design defect theory if the product is a firearm or ammunition. Civ. Code § 1714.45 limits liability when the product is inherently unsafe and is a common consumer product. Veh. Code § 3064(a) provides special rules to the obligation of a franchisee to a franchisor with regard to products liability concerning a new motor vehicle; and 15 U.S.C.S. § 3901 et seq. governs products liability for risk retention groups.

Civ. Code § 1714(a) establishes the general duty of ordinary care that one person owes to another. Civ. Code § 3434 governs the liability of a lender financing the design, manufacture, construction, repair, modification or improvement of real or personal property.

A products liability action is generally governed by case law. Among the many landmark cases in this area is Grimshaw v. Ford Motor Co. (1981) 119 Cal. App. 3d 757, 174 Cal. Rptr. 348 , in which a California court first held that punitive damages may be awarded in a strict products liability case. Also discussed is Romo v. Ford Motor Co. (2003) 113 Cal. App. 4th 738, 6 Cal. Rptr. 3d 793 , which reexamined the purpose and nature of punitive damages following remand from the U.S. Supreme Court.

A products liability action is generally governed by case law. The most significant of the landmark cases in this area is Daly v. General Motors Corp. (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 725, 144 Cal. Rptr. 380, 575 P.2d 1162 , in which the Supreme Court ruled that the principles of comparative negligence apply to a strict liability action.

A products liability action, as any other court action, is governed by the provisions of the Evidence Code.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
TortsDamagesPunitive DamagesGeneral OverviewTortsNegligenceDefensesComparative NegligenceIntentional & Reckless ConductTortsProducts LiabilityDesign DefectsTortsProducts LiabilityManufacturing DefectsTortsProducts LiabilityStrict Liability

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART I. INTRODUCTION

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.03

§ 190.03 How to Use Forms in This Chapter

[1] Page Limits on Points and Authorities

One of the more significant drafting requirements to keep in mind are page limits: supporting and opposing memoranda filed in discovery motion proceedings may not exceed 15 pages. A reply or closing memorandum may not exceed 10 pages. Exhibits, declarations, attachments, the table of contents, the table of authorities, and the proof of service are excluded from these page limits. Any party must obtain leave of court to file a longer memorandum [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1113]. These and other drafting requirements are discussed in further detail in Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[2] Using the Forms to Build Draft Memorandum

The forms in each part may be combined with each other, depending on the facts and issues involved. All the forms in this chapter may also be combined with other forms found in California Points and Authorities relating to the particular procedural context in which the issues have arisen. For example, they may be combined with forms in Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgments on the Pleadings , Ch. 90, Dismissal , Ch. 155, Motions After Trial , Ch. 160, Motions to Strike , or Ch. 221, Summary Judgments , if any of these procedures is involved. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief, or be used to research office memoranda and jury instructions in products liability actions. No matter what procedural context or paper is involved, counsel should add argument to the points and authorities being used, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

For a discussion of how to use the forms in this chapter to draft a memorandum or a trial or appellate brief, and for a sample of a complete memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePleading & PracticeMotion PracticeOpposing MemorandaCivil ProcedureAppealsBriefsTortsProducts LiabilityStrict Liability

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART I. INTRODUCTION

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.04

§ 190.04 Related Pleadings and Practice Forms

For discussion and forms for use in a products liability action, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 460, Products Liability (Matthew Bender).

For discussion and forms for use in actions involving negligence in general, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender). For a discussion and forms for use in products liability actions based on strict liability, negligence, and breach of warranty, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 460, Products Liability (Matthew Bender).

For discussion and forms for use regarding damages, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 177, Damages (Matthew Bender). For discussion and forms for use in a products liability action, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 460, Products Liability (Matthew Bender). For discussion and forms for use regarding indemnity and contribution, and subrogation, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice Ch. 300, Indemnity and Contribution , and Ch. 536, Subrogation (Matthew Bender).

For discussion and forms for use in a responsive pleading, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 26, Answers , and Ch. 206, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings (Matthew Bender). For discussion and forms for use in a dismissal motion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 212, Dismissal (Matthew Bender).

For discussion and forms for use regarding discovery, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Chs. 190, Discovery: Scope, Regulation, and Timing , through Ch. 200, Discovery: Review of Discovery Orders (Matthew Bender). For discussion and forms for use regarding jury instructions, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 326, Jury Instructions (Matthew Bender). For discussion and forms for use regarding witnesses, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 551, Trial (Matthew Bender).

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:

Civil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsMotions to DismissCivil ProceduresPretrial JudgmentsJudgment on the PleadingsTortsNegligenceActionsGeneral OverviewTortsProceduresMultiple DefendantsContributionParticular ActionsTortsProducts LiabilityGeneral OverviewTortsProducts LiabilityBreach of WarrantyTortsProducts LiabilityNegligenceTortsProducts LiabilityStrict Liability

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART I. INTRODUCTION

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.05

§ 190.05 Related Points and Authorities

For a discussion of how to use the forms in this chapter to draft a memorandum of points or authorities or a trial or appellate brief, and for a sample of a complete memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

For points and authorities relating to actions for negligence in general, including comparative negligence and other defenses, see Ch. 165, Negligence .

For points and authorities relating to actions based on breach of warranty, see Ch. 206, Sales .

For discussion and forms for use regarding damages, see Ch. 64, Damages: Tort , and Ch. 65, Damages: Contract . For discussion and forms for use in actions involving the effects of the Fair Responsibility Act of 1986 (Proposition 51) on damages, see Ch. 115, Indemnity and Contribution .

For discussion and forms for use regarding subrogation, see Ch. 220, Subrogation .

For discussion and forms for use in a responsive pleading, see Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings . For discussion and forms for use in a dismissal motion, see Ch. 90, Dismissal .

For discussion and forms for use regarding discovery, see Ch. 80, Discovery: Scope, Regulation, and Timing , through Ch. 89A, Discovery: Review of Discovery Orders .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePleading & PracticeMotion PracticeOpposing MemorandaCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeMotion PracticeSupporting MemorandaCivil ProcedurePretrial JudgmentsJudgment on the PleadingsCivil ProcedureAppealsBriefsTortsDamagesGeneral OverviewTortsNegligenceDefensesComparative NegligenceGeneral OverviewTortsProducts LiabilityBreach of Warranty

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART I. INTRODUCTION

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.06

§ 190.06 Other Related Publications

For further discussion and forms relating to products liability actions, see the following publications:

Cotchett & Cartwright, California Products Liability Actions (Matthew Bender).

Frumer & Friedman, Products Liability (Matthew Bender).

Woodside, Drug Products Liability (Matthew Bender).

Vargo, Products Liability Practice Guide (Matthew Bender).

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART I. INTRODUCTION

19-190 California Points & Authorities §§ 190.07-190.19

[Reserved]

§§ 190.07[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
1. What Is a Product?

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.20

§ 190.20 Supporting Contention That Product Is Subject of Products Liability Action--Airport Approach Chart as Product

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities supporting the contention that defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product (see, e.g., §§ 190.50, 190.70, 190.71, 190.76)].

THE AIRPORT APPROACH CHART PRODUCED BY DEFENDANT _____ [name] IS A PRODUCT THAT MAY BE THE SUBJECT OF A PRODUCTS LIABILITY ACTION.

Airport Approach Chart Is Product for Products Liability Purposes. An airport approach chart is a "product" that may be the subject of a products liability action. Although a chart is a sheet of paper, it is nevertheless a salable commodity with inherent lethal potential if, contrary to its own design standards, it fails to designate an essential item such as the highest land mass immediately surrounding a landing site (Fluor Corp. v. Jeppesen & Co. (1985) 170 Cal. App. 3d 468, 475-476, 216 Cal. Rptr. 68).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that an airport approach chart is a product that may be the subject of a products liability action. The points and authorities may also be adapted for use if the product in question bears similarities to such a chart.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with

points and authorities supporting a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication on the issue that defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should include facts stating that the chart did not designate some important or critical item, such as the highest land mass in the geographical area, and that because that item was not designated, the pilot of the plane unknowingly steered the plane into that item during bad weather [see, e.g., Fluor Corp. v. Jeppesen & Co. (1985) 170 Cal. App. 3d 468, 216 Cal. Rptr. 68] .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Airport Approach Chart Is Product for Products Liability Purposes

In Fluor Corp. v. Jeppesen & Co. (1985) 170 Cal. App. 3d 468, 216 Cal. Rptr. 68 , the pilot of an airplane, while attempting to land, crashed into a peak that was not shown on the airport approach chart. The owner of the jet brought an action in strict liability, negligence, and warranty against the producer and seller of the airport approach chart. In addition to arguing that the pilot and crew had been negligent, defendant argued that strict liability did not apply at all because the chart was not a product. The trial court refused to give the jury an instruction on products liability, and the jury rendered a verdict in favor of defendant. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that the chart was a product subject to the application of products liability theory, and that the jury should have been instructed on the theory. The court noted that, to further public policy, the defect or defectiveness concept has been expanded to embrace a great variety of injury-producing deficiencies, ranging from products that cause injury because they deviate from the manufacturer's intended result to products that, though perfectly manufactured, are unsafe because of the absence of a safety device, and including products that are dangerous because they lack adequate warnings or instructions (170 Cal. App. 3d 468, 474-476) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
1. What Is a Product?

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.21

§ 190.21 Supporting Contention That Product Is Subject of Products Liability Action--Real Estate Lot as Product

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities supporting the contention that defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product (see, e.g., §§ 190.22, 190.50, 190.70, 190.71, 190.76)].

DEFENDANT _____ [name], AS THE MANUFACTURER OF THE LOT, MAY BE HELD STRICTLY LIABLE FOR DAMAGES PROXIMATELY CAUSED BY DEFECTS IN THE MANUFACTURING PROCESS OF THE LOT.

A. Real Estate Lot as Product. A lot is a product for products liability purposes when the lot is manufactured by cutting, grading, filling, compacting, or other such activity for the purpose of sale to the public and the construction of a house thereon (see Avner v. Longridge Estates (1969) 272 Cal. App. 2d 607, 615, 77 Cal. Rptr. 633).

B. Strict Liability of Manufacturer of Lot. The manufacturer of a lot may be held strictly liable in tort for damages suffered by the owner as a proximate result of any defects in the manufacturing process (Avner v. Longridge Estates (1969) 272 Cal. App. 2d 607, 615, 77 Cal. Rptr. 633).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a real estate lot is a product that may be the subject of a products liability action. They may be combined with the points and authorities in § 190.22 when counsel wishes to contend that a real estate development is a product.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication on the issue that defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries. The points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should set forth facts showing how the lot was defectively manufactured in its cutting, grading, filling, compacting, or other such activity, and that the lot was manufactured for the purpose of sale to the public and the construction of a house thereon [see, e.g., Avner v. Longridge Estates (1969) 272 Cal. App. 2d 607, 77 Cal. Rptr. 633 (developer did not adequately provide for drainage when cutting, grading, filling, and compacting lot, causing water to accumulate and damage property)].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Real Estate Lot as Product

In Avner v. Longridge Estates (1969) 272 Cal. App. 2d 607, 77 Cal. Rptr. 633 , plaintiffs purchased a house and lot from its owner, who had developed the property on which the house and lot were located into a tract of residential lots. After a portion of the rear slope of the lot failed, plaintiffs brought an action in strict liability against the manufacturer and other defendants. The trial court sustained defendants' demurrers, and plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that a manufacturer of a lot may be held strictly liable for damages that result from any defect in the manufacturing process. The court reasoned that a manufacturer should be subject to strict liability if it manufactures a lot for the purpose of selling it to the public and constructing a house on it, knowing that if the work was defective, it would cause damage to any improvements made on the house. The court relied on Kriegler v. Eichler Homes, Inc. (1969) 269 Cal. App. 2d 224, 74 Cal. Rptr. 749 [see § 190.22[3][a]]. The court found the obligation of a manufacturer of a lot to a purchaser for defective subsurface conditions resulting from improper filling and grading that cause instability, as in this case, to be indistinguishable from the obligation of a builder to a purchaser for a defective radiant heating system installed in a cement floor slab, as was the case in Kriegler (272 Cal. App. 2d 607, 609-615) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Real Estate Lot as Product

In GEM Developers v. Hallcraft Homes of San Diego, Inc. (1989) 213 Cal. App. 3d 419, 261 Cal. Rptr. 626 , a condominium association brought an action in strict liability against the contractor of the condominium project, seeking damages arising from construction defects; the contractor sought comparative equitable indemnity in a cross complaint against the company that initially graded the lots. In reversing judgment for the cross defendant (and holding that joint tortfeasors subject to strict liability to a consumer may seek comparative equitable contribution from each other), the court of appeal also rejected the cross defendant's contention that it had not produced a "product." The court held that a developer that mass-grades land into finished lots for sale to the public for residential housing has produced a "product," and is strictly liable to the consumer for any defects in the design or manufacture of the lots (213 Cal. App. 3d 419, 431) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
1. What Is a Product?

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.22

§ 190.22 Supporting Contention That Product Is Subject of Products Liability Action--Real Estate Development as Product

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities supporting the contention that defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product (see, e.g., §§ 190.21, 190.50, 190.70, 190.71, 190.76).]

AS THE DEVELOPER OF THE _____ [APARTMENT COMPLEX or HOUSING PROJECT], DEFENDANT _____ [name] IS THE DEVELOPER OF A PRODUCT AND MAY BE HELD SUBJECT TO STRICT LIABILITY FOR DAMAGES PROXIMATELY CAUSED BY ITS DEFECTS.

[EITHER]

A. Strict Liability of Mass Producer and Seller of Homes. The mass producer and seller of homes, like the mass producer and seller of automobiles, is a seller whose risk-creating conduct in any stage of the production and distribution of goods is subject to the strict liability doctrine (Kriegler v. Eichler Homes, Inc. (1969) 269 Cal. App. 2d 224, 227, 74 Cal. Rptr. 749).

[OR]

A. Strict Liability of Developer. A developer who is engaged in the business of developing and selling residential units [such as an apartment complex] is a seller in the production and distribution of goods to whom the doctrine of strict liability applies (Del Mar Beach Club Owners Ass'n v. Imperial Contracting Co. (1981) 123 Cal. App. 3d 898, 911-913, 176 Cal. Rptr. 886 ; Kriegler v. Eichler Homes, Inc. (1969) 269 Cal. App. 2d 224, 227, 74 Cal. Rptr. 749).

[CONTINUE]

[Optional] B. Strict Liability Applies Regardless of Whether Defective Product Is Located on Plaintiff's Property. A developer who installs a defective product to _____ [service and/or protect] a residential development is strictly liable for damages to a plaintiff's unit in the development that were proximately caused by the product. The strict liability applies regardless of whether the defective product was installed on or off the plaintiff's property (Stuart v. Crestview Mut. Water Co. (1973) 34 Cal. App. 3d 802, 811, 110 Cal. Rptr. 543).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a real estate developer is the developer of a product that may be the subject of a products liability action. The first Alternative Paragraph A, which is specifically directed to a mass-produced home, should be used if the subject of the cause of action is a tract home [see, e.g., Kriegler v. Eichler Homes, Inc. (1969) 269 Cal. App. 2d 224, 227, 74 Cal. Rptr. 749] . The second Alternative Paragraph A, which is a more generalized description of the liability of a developer, should be used for a different type of development, such as an apartment complex. Optional Paragraph B should be used if plaintiff's property was damaged by some product installed by the developer on land other than plaintiff's real property. These contentions may be combined with the points and authorities in § 190.21 when counsel wishes to contend that a real estate lot is a product.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication on the issue that defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries. The points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should include facts showing that defendant was a mass producer and seller of homes, or was the builder or developer of an apartment complex or other large complex, and showing how that development was defective [see, e.g., Del Mar Beach Club Owners Ass'n v. Imperial Contracting Co. (1981) 123 Cal. App. 3d 898, 176 Cal. Rptr. 886 (developer of planned development project of residential units as strictly liable to plaintiff managerial association for damages to project from soil erosion); Kriegler v. Eichler Homes, Inc. (1969) 269 Cal. App. 2d 224, 74 Cal. Rptr. 749 (mass producer of homes as strictly liable for damages to plaintiff's home from failure of heating system)].

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in § 190.31 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Strict Liability of Mass Producer and Seller of Homes

In Kriegler v. Eichler Homes, Inc. (1969) 269 Cal. App. 2d 224, 74 Cal. Rptr. 749 , plaintiff's home suffered physical damage from the failure of its heating system. Plaintiff brought an action in strict liability against defendants, who were engaged in the mass production and sale of homes, one of which was the home purchased by plaintiff. Defendants cross complained against suppliers and contractors. The jury rendered a verdict for plaintiff on the complaint, and for cross defendants on the cross complaint. Defendants appealed both verdicts.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment, holding that defendants were subject to a strict liability cause of action, and that defendants failed to establish a cause of action on the cross complaint. In regard to the strict liability cause of action, the court specifically held that the doctrine of strict liability applies to any case of injury resulting from the risk-creating conduct of a seller in any stage of the production and distribution of goods. Because no meaningful distinctions exist between the mass production and sale of homes and the mass production and sale of automobiles, defendants were subject to strict liability (269 Cal. App. 2d 224, 226-229) .

[b] Strict Liability of Developer

The facts and procedural background of Kriegler v. Eichler Homes, Inc. (1969) 269 Cal. App. 2d 224, 74 Cal. Rptr. 749 , are discussed in § 190.22[3][a].

In Del Mar Beach Club Owners Ass'n v. Imperial Contracting Co. (1981) 123 Cal. App. 3d 898, 176 Cal. Rptr. 886 , plaintiff managerial association of a planned development project of residential units brought an action in strict liability against numerous defendants for damages to the real property of the project from soil erosion. Plaintiff alleged that the development had been defectively constructed and designed. Defendants demurred and moved for judgments on the pleadings, which were granted, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed the judgment as to the developer defendants, holding that such defendants were subject to a cause of action in strict liability. The court reasoned that an apartment complex was essentially no different from a mass-produced subdivision development, such as in Kriegler, and that its developers were engaged in the business of developing and selling residential units. Thus, the developers could be subject to a strict liability claim for damages resulting from the construction of a multi-unit residential project on the location of an unstable bluff (123 Cal. App. 3d 898, 909-913) .

[c] Strict Liability Applies Regardless of Whether Defective Product Is Located on Plaintiff's Property

In Stuart v. Crestview Mut. Water Co. (1973) 34 Cal. App. 3d 802, 110 Cal. Rptr. 543 , plaintiffs' property was burned by fire. A defective water distribution system had been installed by the developer of the subdivision in which the property was located; the system itself, however, was not installed on plaintiffs' property. Plaintiffs brought an action in strict liability and negligence against numerous defendants, including the developer. The trial court dismissed the action as to each defendant on various demurrers, motions for judgments on the pleadings, and summary judgment motions. Plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal reversed the dismissal against the developer on both strict liability and negligence grounds; the court also affirmed in part and reversed in part as to the other defendants on various grounds. Specifically with regard to the strict liability claim, the court reasoned that the developer's liability was indistinguishable in principle from Avner and Kriegler. The court also found that the fact that plaintiffs had not alleged that the defective water system was on plaintiffs' properties was immaterial, as the purpose of the system was to help protect the properties in the subdivision in case of fire, and legally it made no difference whether the pipes, hydrants, and other installations were located on or off the lots. Furthermore, the court emphasized that strict liability extends to "bystanders" such as plaintiffs (34 Cal. App. 3d 802, 809-811) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
1. What Is a Product?

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.22A

§ 190.22A Supporting Contention That Product Is Subject of Products Liability Action--Raw Asbestos as Product

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities supporting the contention that defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product.]

DEFENDANT _____ [name], AS A COMMERCIAL SUPPLIER OF RAW ASBESTOS, IS SUBJECT TO A CAUSE OF ACTION IN STRICT LIABILITY BECAUSE RAW ASBESTOS IS A PRODUCT THAT MAY HAVE A DESIGN DEFECT.

A. Raw Asbestos Is Product That May Have Design Defect. Raw asbestos is a product that may have a design defect (Garza v. Asbestos Corp. (2008) 161 Cal. App. 4th 651, 659, 74 Cal. Rptr. 3d 359 ; Arena v. Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corp. (1998) 63 Cal. App. 4th 1178, 1191, 74 Cal. Rptr. 2d 580 ; Jenkins v. T&N PLC (1996) 45 Cal. App. 4th 1224, 1231, 53 Cal. Rptr. 2d 642).

[2] Comment

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a commercial supplier of raw asbestos incorporated into a finished product is strictly liable for injuries caused by exposure to the asbestos [see, e.g., Garza v. Asbestos Corp. (2008) 161 Cal. App. 4th 651, 659, 74 Cal. Rptr. 3d 359 ; Arena v. Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corp. (1998) 63 Cal. App. 4th 1178, 1191, 74 Cal. Rptr. 2d 580].

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with

points and authorities supporting a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication on the issue that the defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries. These points and authorities may also be adopted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should include facts showing that defendant supplied raw asbestos to a producer of a finished product, that the plaintiff was exposed to asbestos supplied by the defendant, and that the plaintiff suffers from an asbestos-related injury.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Raw Asbestos Is Product That May Have Design Defect

Garza v. Asbestos Corp. (2008) 161 Cal. App. 4th 651, 74 Cal. Rptr. 3d 359 , is discussed in § 190.73A[3][a].

Arena v. Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corp. (1998) 63 Cal. App. 4th 1178, 74 Cal. Rptr. 2d 580 , is discussed in § 190.73A[3][a].

Jenkins v. T&N PLC (1996) 45 Cal. App. 4th 1224, 1231, 53 Cal. Rptr. 2d 642 , is discussed in § 190.73A[3][a].

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
1. What Is a Product?

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.23

§ 190.23 Supporting Contention That Product is Subject of Products Liability Action--Injury Caused by Defective Electricity Occurred After Electricity Entered Stream of Commerce

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities supporting the contention that defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product.]

DEFENDANT _____ [name], AS A COMMERCIAL SUPPLIER OF ELECTRICITY, IS SUBJECT TO A CAUSE OF ACTION IN STRICT LIABILITY BECAUSE AT THE TIME THE INJURY OCCURRED, THE ELECTRICITY HAD ENTERED THE STREAM OF COMMERCE

A. Commercial Electricity Supplier Strictly Liable for Electricity in Stream of Commerce. A commercial supplier of electricity is subject to strict liability in tort for personal injuries caused by defective electricity that is in the stream of commerce, and expected to be at marketable voltage (Pierce v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1985) 166 Cal. App. 3d 68, 83-84, 212 Cal. Rptr. 283).

[Optional] B. Commercial Electricity Supplier Strictly Liable for Delivering Electricity Made Dangerous by Defective Transformer. A commercial supplier of electricity is subject to strict liability in tort for personal injuries caused by delivery of electricity at dangerously high voltage because of a defective transformer (Pierce v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1985) 166 Cal. App. 3d 68, 83-84, 212 Cal. Rptr. 283).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a commercial supplier of electricity is strictly liable for injury caused by a defect in electricity after the electricity has been placed in the stream of commerce [

see, e.g., Pierce v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1985) 166 Cal. App. 3d 68, 212 Cal. Rptr. 283] .

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication on the issue that defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Therefore, counsel should set forth facts showing that the electricity had entered the stream of commerce at the time of the injury. For example, if appropriate, counsel should show that both the defect and injury occurred after the electricity was metered.

[b] Electricity Must Have Entered Stream of Commerce

Strict liability applies to electricity as a product only if the electricity is actually in the "stream of commerce." According to one court of appeal decision, the electricity must be expected to be at marketable voltage. In most cases, this means the electricity must be delivered to the consumer's premises, to the point at which it is metered. However, that court was reluctant to establish a definitive point at which the electricity enters the stream of commerce [see Pierce v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1985) 166 Cal. App. 3d 68, 84, 212 Cal. Rptr. 283] . Another court of appeal decision, however, clearly stated that electricity is a product once it has been metered for use by the consumer and not before that point [Fong v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1988) 199 Cal. App. 3d 30, 38, 245 Cal. Rptr. 436 (defect and injury occurred adjacent to consumer's structure but before metering, and electricity held to be service, not product; see § 190.29, under § 190.29[3][a]]. Hence, if both the defect and the injury occurred after metering, the authority is consistent that the electricity has entered the stream of commerce, and counsel can argue that point. However, if some other chronology of events occurred, counsel should argue under Pierce that the many variations in electrical systems require a determination regarding stream of commerce on a case-by-case basis, and should set forth the particular facts of the case in detail, showing support for the contention that the electricity had entered the stream of commerce.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Commercial Electricity Supplier Strictly Liable for Electricity in Stream of Commerce

In Pierce v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1985) 166 Cal. App. 3d 68, 212 Cal. Rptr. 283 , plaintiff suffered personal injuries when an electrical utility's transformer malfunctioned and sent high voltage into plaintiff's home. Plaintiff brought an action in strict liability and negligence against the utility company. The trial court granted defendant's motion for nonsuit on the products liability cause of action, and denied plaintiff's motion for directed verdict. The jury found by special verdict that defendant was not negligent on the remaining cause of action. The trial court denied plaintiff's motions for judgment notwithstanding the verdict and a new trial. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed the order granting nonsuit on the strict liability cause of action, but affirmed the judgment in all other respects. In reversing the order, the court discussed whether the furnishing of electricity is a product or a service. At the time, the issue was one of first impression in California. However, courts in other jurisdictions had concluded that electricity delivered to homes and businesses is a "product." Although the distribution may be a service, the electricity itself, in the contemplation of the ordinary user, is a consumable product (166 Cal. App. 3d 68, 81-82) . The court also noted policy justifications for imposing strict liability in tort, and set out the four main policy grounds for the doctrine: (1) to provide a "short cut" to liability when negligence may be present but is difficult to prove; (2) to provide an economic incentive for improved product safety; (3) to induce the reallocation of resources toward safer products; and (4) to spread the risk of loss among all who use the product. Proof of negligence in electricity cases requires a plaintiff to present to a jury evidence of the inner workings of an electrical power system of vast and complex proportions, and competent expert witnesses are concentrated within the industry itself. In addition, when a huge surge of injury-causing electricity is traceable to a defective component in the utility's system, imposition of strict liability creates an incentive for utilities to avoid accidents before they occur, by investing in safer products. Moreover, strict liability in tort spreads the costs of personal injuries among millions of consumers of electricity instead of imposing those costs on blameless victims chosen by chance (166 Cal. App. 3d 68, 83) . The court concluded that defendant, as a commercial supplier of electricity, is subject to strict liability in tort for personal injuries caused by delivery of electricity at dangerously high voltage because of a defective transformer. Accordingly, the trial court's entry of nonsuit was error (166 Cal. App. 3d 68, 83-84) . The court emphasized that the holding is limited to cases in which the electricity is actually in the "stream of commerce," and expected to be at marketable voltage. The court noted that in most cases, this will mean the electricity must be delivered to the consumer's premises, to the point at which it is metered, although the many variations in electrical systems prevented its drawing a "bright line" at a particular point. The court concurred with other jurisdictions that have refused to impose strict liability in cases in which a utility consumer accidentally touches an antenna to a powerline, or accidentally touches a downed powerline, because in those cases, contact with the powerline comes at a point when the electricity is not in the stream of commerce or is not in marketable form. Moreover, in those cases, the utility generally cannot prevent the accident by using reasonably available means (166 Cal. App. 3d 68, 84) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
1. What Is a Product?

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.23A

§ 190.23A Supporting Contention That Product Is Subject of Products Liability Action--Product Still On the Market

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum supporting the contention that defendant is liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product.]

DEFENDANT _____ [specify manufacturer] IS LIABLE FOR PLAINTIFF'S INJURIES CAUSED BY DEFENDANT'S PRODUCT AFTER IT LEFT DEFENDANT'S CONTROL AND WHILE IT WAS ON THE MARKET.

A. Strict Liability Broadly Extends to Products That Are Placed on Market. Strict liability broadly extends to products that have left the manufacturer's control and are placed on the market (Nelson v. Superior Court (2006) 144 Cal. App. 4th 689, 694-695, 50 Cal. Rptr. 3d 684).

B. Strict Liability Is Not Limited to Cases Arising After Retail Sale. The sale of a product is not necessary for the imposition of products liability (Nelson v. Superior Court (2006) 144 Cal. App. 4th 689, 695, 50 Cal. Rptr. 3d 684).

C. Application of Strict Liability Is Not Restricted to Injuries Caused by Consumer Use. The application of strict liability is not restricted to injuries caused by consumer use of the defective product (Nelson v. Superior Court (2006) 144 Cal. App. 4th 689, 698, 50 Cal. Rptr. 3d 684).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of the contention that strict liability extends to products that have left the control of the manufacturer and are placed on the market (see Nelson v. Superior Court (2006) 144 Cal. App. 4th 689, 695, 50 Cal. Rptr. 3d 684).

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication of the issue that defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form, and in any other relevant points and authorities combined with this form, to show the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should state facts showing that the product that caused plaintiff's injury had left the control of the manufacturer and was placed on the market.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Strict Liability Broadly Extends to Products That Are Placed on Market

In Nelson v. Superior Court (2006) 144 Cal. App. 4th 689, 50 Cal. Rptr. 3d 684 , the defendant refined MTBE-containing gasoline. The gasoline was supplied to gas stations located near plaintiff's groundwater wells. Gas stored at these stations leaked into the soil and contaminated plaintiff's water system with MTBE. Plaintiff brought a strict liability action alleging that MTBE was defective in design and manufacture, and that defendant failed to warn of its dangers. The trial court granted defendant's motion for judgment on the pleadings, holding that a bystander who is injured by a product not as a result of the use or possession of the product by a user or consumer may not recover under strict liability.

The appellate court issued a peremptory writ of mandate directing the trial court to vacate its order. It concluded that strict liability may apply to products that have left the control of the manufacturer and are still on the market. The court specifically rejected the contention that strict liability does not apply unless the plaintiff's injury was caused by an ultimate consumer's use of the product. Thus, plaintiff was not precluded from recovering for the MTBE contamination even though the injury had occurred while the product was still possessed and stored by participants in the stream of commerce, i.e., the gas stations. The court based its conclusion in part on the fact that bystanders to uses of a product while it is still on the market are in the same position vis-a-vis the manufacturer as bystanders to uses of the product by the ultimate consumer: both are powerless to protect themselves. Moreover, manufacturers are required to reasonably foresee misuse of a product by a user or third party in some circumstances. It was a natural extension for the court to require manufacturers to foresee normal uses of a product while it is still on the market (144 Cal. App. 4th 689, 693-696) .

[b] Strict Liability Is Not Limited to Cases Arising After Retail Sale

Nelson v. Superior Court (2006) 144 Cal. App. 4th 689, 50 Cal. Rptr. 3d 684 , is discussed in § 190.23A[3][a].

[c] Application of Strict Liability Is Not Restricted to Injuries Caused by Consumer Use

Nelson v. Superior Court (2006) 144 Cal. App. 4th 689, 50 Cal. Rptr. 3d 684 , is discussed in § 190.23A[3][a].

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
1. What Is a Product?

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.24

§ 190.24 Opposing Contention That Product Is Subject of Products Liability Action--Provider of Service Not Subject to Strict Liability--In General

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities opposing the contention that defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product (see, e.g., §§ 190.25 -190.29)].

DEFENDANT _____ [name] IS NOT SUBJECT TO STRICT LIABILITY BECAUSE DEFENDANT SOLD A SERVICE FOR THE GUIDANCE OF OTHERS IN _____ [ECONOMIC and/or FINANCIAL and/or PERSONAL] AFFAIRS, AND DID NOT PUT A PRODUCT ON THE MARKET.

[or]

DEFENDANT _____ [name] IS NOT SUBJECT TO STRICT LIABILITY BECAUSE THE DOMINANT PURPOSE OF ITS TRANSACTION WITH THE PLAINTIFF WAS TO PROVIDE A SERVICE.

A. Person Who Sells Service Is Not Manufacturer of Product. A person who sells a service for the guidance of others in their economic, financial, and personal affairs is not analogous to a manufacturer who places a product on the market and who is in the best position to spread the cost of injuries resulting from defective products (Stuart v. Crestview Mut. Water Co. (1973) 34 Cal. App. 3d 802, 811, 110 Cal. Rptr. 543 ; see Shepard v. Alexian Bros. Hosp. (1973) 33 Cal. App. 3d 606, 610-612, 109 Cal. Rptr. 132).

B. Person Who Sells Service Is Not Subject to Strict Liability. A person who sells a service for the guidance of others in their economic, financial, and personal affairs is burdened only with a duty of reasonable performance under the circumstances and cannot be made liable in the absence of negligence or intentional misconduct (Del Mar Beach Club Owners Ass'n v. Imperial Contracting Co. (1981) 123 Cal. App. 3d 898, 914, 176 Cal. Rptr. 886 ; Shepard v. Alexian Bros. Hosp. (1973) 33 Cal. App. 3d 606, 613-614, 109 Cal. Rptr. 132).

C. Entity Not Subject To Strict Liability When Dominant Purpose of Transaction Is Provision of Service. An entity is not subject to subject to strict liability when the dominant purpose of its transaction with the plaintiff is to provide a service, and it makes a product available to the plaintiff only as an incident to those services (Ontiveros v. 24 Hour Fitness USA, Inc. (2008) 169 Cal. App. 4th 424, 434, 86 Cal. Rptr. 3d 767).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a defendant is subject to a products liability action. The ground of opposition set forth is that defendant is a seller of services rather than a manufacturer of a product, and as such cannot be held liable under a strict liability theory.

If relevant, these points and authorities should be combined with the points and authorities contained in any of §§ 190.25 through 190.29. In addition, these points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a demurrer or motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication on the issue that defendant is not strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel could include facts demonstrating that defendant is a person who sold a service for the guidance of plaintiff in plaintiff's economic, financial, and personal affairs [see, e.g., Stuart v. Crestview Mut. Water Co. (1973) 34 Cal. App. 3d 802, 110 Cal. Rptr. 543 (engineers not subject to strict liability); Shepard v. Alexian Bros. Hosp. (1973) 33 Cal. App. 3d 606, 109 Cal. Rptr. 132 (giving of blood transfusion as service rather than as sale of product)].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Person Who Sells Service Is Not Manufacturer of Product

The facts and procedural background of Stuart v. Crestview Mut. Water Co. (1973) 34 Cal. App. 3d 802, 110 Cal. Rptr. 543 , are discussed in § 190.22[3][c]. Although the court of appeal reversed the dismissal of the strict liability cause of action against the developer who had installed the defective water distribution system, the court affirmed the dismissal of the strict liability cause of action against the system's engineers. The court held that the engineers were not subject to an action based on strict liability, because they had merely rendered a professional service, and were not analogous to manufacturers who place products on the market and who are in the best position to spread the cost of injuries resulting from defective products. The court, relying on prior decisions, reiterated the long standing rule that one who renders a professional service is not subject to an action based on strict liability (34 Cal. App. 3d 802, 810-812) .

In Shepard v. Alexian Bros. Hosp. (1973) 33 Cal. App. 3d 606, 109 Cal. Rptr. 132 , plaintiff suffered personal injuries after being given a blood transfusion that was contaminated with hepatitis. Plaintiff brought an action in strict liability and warranty against the hospital that had supplied the transfusion. Defendant's demurrer was sustained by the trial court, and the action was dismissed. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment of dismissal, holding that because Health & Safety Code § 1606 prescribes the giving of a blood transfusion as a service rather than as a sale of a product, and because the seller of a service is not subject to a strict liability or warranty action, defendant could not be liable under the theories that had been presented. In so ruling, the court refused to break a long standing rule of law and extend the theory of strict liability to the seller of a service. The court reasoned that none of the policy reasons for imposing strict liability to the supplier of a service apply, because a supplier of a service does not put a product on the market, has no control over whether the subject of the service is safe, and does not play an integral part in an overall production and marketing enterprise (33 Cal. App. 3d 606, 608-614) .

[b] Person Who Sells Service Is Not Subject to Strict Liability

The facts and procedural background of Del Mar Beach Club Owners Ass'n v. *Imperial Contracting Co. (1981) 123 Cal. App. 3d 898, 176 Cal. Rptr. 886 , are discussed in § 190.22[3][b]. Although the court of appeal reversed the judgment in favor of the developer of a residential development on the strict liability cause of action against the developer, the court nevertheless affirmed the judgment in favor of the engineers and the architect of the development on the strict liability cause of action against them. The court held that the engineers and the architect of the development had been sellers of services, and, relying on prior court of appeal decisions, as sellers of services were not subject to an action based on strict liability (123 Cal. App. 3d 898, 909-914) .

Shepard v. Alexian Bros. Hosp. (1973) 33 Cal. App. 3d 606, 109 Cal. Rptr. 132 , is discussed in § 190.24[3][a].

[c] Entity Not Subject To Strict Liability When Dominant Purpose of Transaction Is Provision of Service

In Ontiveros v. 24 Hour Fitness USA, Inc. (2008) 169 Cal. App. 4th 424, 86 Cal. Rptr. 3d 767 , the plaintiff was injured while exercising on a stairstep machine at defendant's fitness center. The trial court granted defendant's motion for summary judgment on her strict products liability claim on grounds that, inter alia, it provided "recreational services." The court of appeal affirmed, holding that the dominant purpose of plaintiff's membership agreement with the defendant was the provision of fitness services. The fact that she chose not to use the services did not alter the essential nature and purpose of the membership agreement. The agreement's terms, and not the plaintiff's subjective intentions, defined the dominant purpose of the transaction (169 Cal. App. 4th 424, 434) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Person Who Sells Service Is Not Subject to Strict Liability

In Ferrari v. Grand Canyon Dories (1995) 32 Cal. App. 4th 248, 38 Cal. Rptr. 2d 65 , the plaintiff brought an action in strict liability and negligence against a recreational raft transportation company seeking damages for injuries sustained during a commercial rafting trip sponsored and conducted by the company. The trial court granted summary judgment in favor of the defendant on the strict liability claim, holding that the rafting company supplied a service, not a product. The court of appeal affirmed. In a given transaction involving both products and services, liability depends on the defendant's role. In this case, the defendant was primarily providing a service: recreational raft transportation. Use of the raft was merely incidental to this service (32 Cal. App. 4th 248, 258-259) .

In San Diego Hospital Assn. v. Superior Court (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 8 , a physician who was injured by a laser while performing surgery at a hospital sued the hospital for damages, alleging negligence, misrepresentation, and strict liability. The trial court issued an order that overruled the hospital's demurrer on the strict liability cause of action, and the court of appeal issued a writ of mandate directing the trial court to vacate its order. In so doing, the court of appeal characterized hospitals as providers of medical services not subject to strict tort liability, no matter whom is injured. The court rejected plaintiff's argument that while a hospital provides services to patients, it provides products in the form of equipment to staff physicians. Whether a physician, hospital employee, bystander, or patient is injured, does not alter the nature of the hospital's function as a provider of professional services (30 Cal. App. 4th 8, 15-16) .

In Pierson v. Sharp Mem'l Hosp., Inc. (1989) 216 Cal. App. 3d 340, 264 Cal. Rptr. 673 , a person who was injured in a fall while visiting a patient in a hospital room sued the hospital for damages, alleging negligence and strict liability, based on latent defects in the hospital premises. The trial court granted the defendant's motion to strike the strict liability cause of action, and the court of appeal affirmed, holding that a hospital is primarily a provider of services, rather than a producer or marketer of products. A patient's room is an integral component of the professional services hospitals provide; therefore, the law imposes only a standard of negligence rather than strict liability with regard to plaintiff's injuries (216 Cal. App. 3d 340, 343-347) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
1. What Is a Product?

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.25

§ 190.25 Opposing Contention That Product Is Subject of Products Liability Action--Provider of Service Not Subject to Strict Liability--Supplying Blood Transfusion or Blood Product Is Service [Health & Safety Code § 1606]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and should be combined with a general form contending a service is not subject to strict liability (see, e.g., § 190.24). The following may also be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities opposing the contention that defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product.]

DEFENDANT _____ [name] IS NOT SUBJECT TO STRICT LIABILITY BECAUSE, IN _____ [SELLING and/or PROVIDING and/or SUPPLYING and/or MANUFACTURING] A BLOOD _____ [TRANSFUSION and/or PRODUCT], DEFENDANT PROVIDED A SERVICE FOR THE GUIDANCE OF OTHERS IN ECONOMIC, FINANCIAL, AND PERSONAL AFFAIRS.

A. Supplier of Blood Transfusion or Product Is Seller of Service Not Subject to Products Liability. The California legislature, by enacting Section 1606 of the Health and Safety Code, has expressed its intent and declared a clear legal policy that the transfusion of blood and blood product into the human body shall be construed for all purposes to be the rendition of a service and not a sale. Thus, the supplying or giving of a blood transfusion or blood product is regarded as a service, and as a matter of law the person rendering this service is not subject to an action based on strict liability for any damages resulting from that service (McDonald v. Sacramento Med. Found. Blood Bank (1976) 62 Cal. App. 3d 866, 869-871, 133 Cal. Rptr. 444 ; Shepard v. Alexian Bros. Hosp. (1973) 33 Cal. App. 3d 606, 609-610, 109 Cal. Rptr. 132).

[Optional] B. Hospital That Supplies Blood Transfusion Is Not Subject to Strict Liability. A hospital, in supplying a blood transfusion to a patient, is rendering a service for which it may not be held strictly liable for any resulting damages (see McDonald v. Sacramento Med. Found. Blood Bank (1976) 62 Cal. App. 3d 866, 869-871, 133 Cal. Rptr.

444 ; Shepard v. Alexian Bros. Hosp. (1973) 33 Cal. App. 3d 606, 609-610, 109 Cal. Rptr. 132).

[Optional] C. Blood Bank That Supplies Blood Transfusion Is Not Subject to Strict Liability. A blood bank, in supplying a blood transfusion to a medical patient, is rendering a service for which it may not be held strictly liable for any resulting damages (see Klaus v. Alameda-Contra Costa Medical Assn. Blood Bank, Inc. (1976) 62 Cal. App. 3d 417, 418-420).

[Optional] D. Manufacturer of Blood Product Is Not Subject to Strict Liability. A private manufacturer of pharmaceuticals that is engaged in the business of manufacturing and distributing a blood product, in placing the blood product on the market in order to profit therefrom, is rendering a service under the meaning of Section 1606 of the Health and Safety Code, and may not be held strictly liable for any resulting damages (Hyland Therapeutics v. Superior Court (1985) 175 Cal. App. 3d 509, 513-514, 220 Cal. Rptr. 590 ; Fogo v. Cutter Labs., Inc. (1977) 68 Cal. App. 3d 744, 752, 137 Cal. Rptr. 417).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a defendant supplier, distributor, or manufacturer of a blood transfusion or a blood product is subject to a products liability action. The ground of opposition set forth is that defendant is a seller of services rather than a manufacturer of a product, and as such cannot be held liable under a strict liability theory.

These points and authorities should be combined with the points and authorities in § 190.24, which set forth the more general applicable rules of law. These points and authorities may also be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a demurrer or motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication on the issue that defendant is not strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries. Finally, these points and authorities may be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should include facts showing that defendant supplied plaintiff with a blood transfusion or a blood product [see, e.g., Hyland Therapeutics v. Superior Court (1985) 175 Cal. App. 3d 509, 220 Cal. Rptr. 590 (no strict liability when plaintiff's decedent contracted AIDS from blood clotting products); McDonald v. Sacramento Med. Found. Blood Bank (1976) 62 Cal. App. 3d 866, 133 Cal. Rptr. 444 (no strict liability for giving blood transfusion contaminated with hepatitis)].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Supplier of Blood Transfusion or Product Is Seller of Service Not Subject to Products Liability

In McDonald v. Sacramento Med. Found. Blood Bank (1976) 62 Cal. App. 3d 866, 133 Cal. Rptr. 444 , plaintiff's decedent was given a blood transfusion that caused the decedent to fatally contract hepatitis. Plaintiff brought an action for wrongful death against the doctors, the hospital, and other defendants. The trial court sustained defendants' demurrer to plaintiff's strict liability and breach of warranty causes of action, and the jury entered a verdict for defendants on the negligence cause of action. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal upheld the sustaining of the demurrer. The court held that Health & Safety Code § 1606 dictates that a blood transfusion must be construed as the rendition of a service and not a sale, and should not be interpreted otherwise. In rendering a service, defendants were not subject to either a strict liability or breach of warranty cause of action. The court further held that the statute is constitutional (62 Cal. App. 3d 866, 869-873) .

Shepard v. Alexian Bros. Hosp. (1973) 33 Cal. App. 3d 606, 109 Cal. Rptr. 132 , is discussed in § 190.24[3][a].

[b] Hospital That Supplies Blood Transfusion Is Not Subject to Strict Liability

McDonald v. Sacramento Med. Found. Blood Bank (1976) 62 Cal. App. 3d 866, 133 Cal. Rptr. 444 , is discussed in § 190.25[3][a].

Shepard v. Alexian Bros. Hosp. (1973) 33 Cal. App. 3d 606, 109 Cal. Rptr. 132 , is discussed in § 190.24[3][a].

[c] Blood Bank That Supplies Blood Transfusion Is Not Subject to Strict Liability

In Klaus v. Alameda-Contra Costa Medical Assn. Blood Bank, Inc. (1976) 62 Cal. App. 3d 417 , plaintiff became infected with hepatitis after receiving a blood transfusion. Plaintiff brought an action in strict liability against the blood bank that supplied the transfusion. The trial court dismissed the action, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment of dismissal, holding that the statutory immunity afforded to hospitals extends to blood banks, and that as the blood bank, by statute, had rendered a service in supplying the transfusion, it could not be subject to strict liability (62 Cal. App. 3d 417, 418-420) .

[d] Manufacturer of Blood Product Is Not Subject to Strict Liability

In Hyland Therapeutics v. Superior Court (1985) 175 Cal. App. 3d 509 , plaintiff's decedent contracted acquired immune deficiency syndrome (AIDS), and subsequently died, after being treated with blood clotting products manufactured by defendants. In addition, before the decedent died, he communicated AIDS to plaintiff, his wife. Plaintiff brought an action in negligence and strict products liability against defendants for wrongful death and personal injuries. Defendants demurred, but the demurrers were overruled. Defendants then sought review by extraordinary writ.

The court of appeal granted a peremptory writ of mandate directing the trial court to sustain the demurrers as to the strict products liability theories without leave to amend. The court held that defendants, as manufacturers of a blood product, were deemed under Health & Safety Code § 1606 to have rendered a service in manufacturing the blood product, and may not be held strictly liable for any injuries that result from the rendering of that service (175 Cal. App. 3d 509, 513-514) .

In Fogo v. Cutter Labs., Inc. (1977) 68 Cal. App. 3d 744, 137 Cal. Rptr. 417 , plaintiffs' decedent died from viral hepatitis after having been injected with a blood product. Plaintiffs brought an action in strict liability, negligence, and warranty against the blood product's manufacturer. The trial court instructed the jury on negligence, but refused to instruct the jury on the strict liability and warranty theories. The jury rendered a verdict in favor of defendant, and plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that defendant manufacturer was statutorily precluded from liability other than on a negligence or intentional tort theory. The court extended the immunity already established by prior appellate case law to hospitals and blood banks that supplied blood transfusions. The court held that, even though in practical terms defendant had manufactured the blood product for profit, under the terms of Health & Safety Code § 1606 even the distribution of a blood product constitutes the rendition of a service, for which the distributor may not be held liable other than on a theory of negligence or intentional tort (68 Cal. App. 3d 744, 750-761) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
1. What Is a Product?

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.26

§ 190.26 Opposing Contention That Product Is Subject of Products Liability Action--Provider of Service Not Subject to Strict Liability--Supplying Human Tissue Is Service [Health & Safety Code § 1635.2]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and should be combined with a general form contending that a service is not subject to strict liability (see, e.g., § 190.24). The following may also be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities opposing the contention that defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product.]

DEFENDANT _____ [name] IS NOT SUBJECT TO STRICT LIABILITY BECAUSE, IN [SELLING and/or PROVIDING and/or SUPPLYING] _____, A HUMAN TISSUE PRODUCT, DEFENDANT PROVIDED A SERVICE, NOT A PRODUCT.

Supplier of Human Tissue Product Is Seller of Service Not Subject to Products Liability. Section 1635.2 of the Health and Safety Code clearly and unambiguously provides that tissue banks provide a service for all purposes, despite the omission of the specific phrase "for all purposes" from its language. By including language in the statute expressly excluding application of the Commercial Code to the collection, processing, storage, and distribution of tissue, the California legislature implicitly excluded tissue-related activities from the purview of strict liability. Other statutory provisions, such as the Uniform Anatomical Gift Act (Section 7155 of the Health and Safety Code) and Section 367f(c)(1) of the Penal Code, demonstrate the legislature's broad intent that the provision of human tissue not be considered a sale of goods or products (Cryolife, Inc. v. Superior Court (2003) 110 Cal. App. 4th 1145, 1153-1155, 2 Cal. Rptr. 3d 396).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a defendant supplier or distributor of a human tissue product is subject to a products liability action. The ground of opposition set forth is that defendant is a seller of services rather than a manufacturer of a product, and as such cannot be held liable under a strict liability theory.

These points and authorities should be combined with the points and authorities in § 190.24, which set forth the more general applicable rules of law. These points and authorities may also be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wises to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a demurrer or motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication on the issue that defendant is not strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries. Finally, these points and authorities may be adopted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should include facts showing that defendant supplied a human tissue product that was used on plaintiff.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Supplier of Human Tissue Product Is Seller of Service Not Subject to Products Liability.

In Cryolife, Inc. v. Superior Court (2003) 110 Cal. App. 4th 1145, 1153-1157, 2 Cal. Rptr. 3d 396 , the plaintiff underwent a surgical procedure which used an allograft consisting of a human cadaver patellar tendon. The allograft turned out to be infected with bacteria and was removed two months later. Plaintiff brought an action against the tissue bank alleging several causes of action, including strict liability. The trial court overruled the tissue bank's demurrer to the strict liability cause of action on the ground that Health & Safety Code § 1635.2 did not immunize it from strict products liability because the statute does not expressly state that tissue banks provide a service "for all purposes."

The court of appeal issued a peremptory writ of mandate issue directing the court to vacate its order, determining that Health & Safety Code § 1635.2 does provide statutory immunity for strict liability to tissue banks. The statute clearly and unambiguously provides that tissue banks provide a service for all purposes, despite the omission of the specific phrase "for all purposes" from its language. Moreover, by including language in the statute expressly excluding application of the Commercial Code to the collection, processing, storage, and distribution of tissue, the California legislature implicitly excluded tissue-related activities from the purview of strict liability. Other statutory provisions, such as the Uniform Anatomical Gift Act (Section 7155 of the Health and Safety Code) and Section 367f(c)(1) of the Penal Code, also demonstrate the legislature's broad intent that the provision of human tissue not be considered a sale of goods or products. Finally, the court could find no reason that the public policy rationale for exempting blood products from strict liability should not also apply to human tissue products.

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
1. What Is a Product?

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.27

§ 190.27 Opposing Contention That Product Is Subject of Products Liability Action--Provider of Service Not Subject to Strict Liability--Travel Agency Arranging Package Tour Is Service

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and should be combined with a general form contending a service is not subject to strict liability (see, e.g., § 190.24). The following may also be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities opposing the contention that defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product.]

DEFENDANT _____ [name] IS NOT SUBJECT TO STRICT LIABILITY BECAUSE, AS A TRAVEL AGENCY ARRANGING A PACKAGE TOUR, DEFENDANT PROVIDED A SERVICE FOR THE GUIDANCE OF OTHERS IN ECONOMIC, FINANCIAL, AND PERSONAL AFFAIRS.

Arranging Package Tour as Service. A travel agency that arranges a package tour by selecting and coordinating transportation, accommodations, and meals for prospective travelers is performing a service for the guidance of others in their economic, financial, or personal affairs, and may not be held strictly liable for any injuries resulting from the package tour (Pena v. Sita World Travel, Inc. (1978) 88 Cal. App. 3d 642, 644-645, 152 Cal. Rptr. 17).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that defendant travel agency may be held strictly liable for injuries that were inflicted on its client while its client was traveling on a package tour arranged by the travel agency. The ground of opposition set forth is that defendant is a seller of services rather than a manufacturer of a product, and as such cannot be held liable under a strict liability theory.

These points and authorities should be combined with the points and authorities in § 190.24, which set forth the more general applicable rule of law. These points and authorities may also be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a demurrer or motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication on the issue that defendant is not strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries. Finally, these points and authorities may be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should include facts stating that defendant merely arranged the transportation, meals, and accommodations for the tour on which plaintiff suffered injuries [see, e.g., Pena v. Sita World Travel, Inc. (1978) 88 Cal. App. 3d 642, 152 Cal. Rptr. 17 (defendant travel service not strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries from overturning of bus while plaintiff was on 10-day tour arranged by defendant)].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Arranging Package Tour as Service

In Pena v. Sita World Travel, Inc. (1978) 88 Cal. App. 3d 642, 152 Cal. Rptr. 17 , plaintiff went on a 10-day tour of Mexico that had been arranged by defendant travel service. While traveling, plaintiff's bus overturned and she was injured. Plaintiff brought an action against numerous defendants, which included a strict liability cause of action against the travel service. The trial court sustained demurrers to the action, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that the demurrers were properly sustained. Specifically as to the strict liability claim against the travel service, the court ruled that the travel service had merely performed a service rather than a sale, and that as such could not be subjected to strict liability (88 Cal. App. 3d 642, 644-645) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
1. What Is a Product?

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.28

§ 190.28 Opposing Contention That Product Is Subject of Products Liability Action--Provider of Service Not Subject to Strict Liability--Architects and Civil Engineers Perform Service

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and should be combined with a general form contending a service is not subject to strict liability (see, e.g., § 190.24). The following may also be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities opposing the contention that defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product.]

DEFENDANT _____ [name] IS NOT SUBJECT TO STRICT LIABILITY BECAUSE, AS _____ [AN ARCHITECT or A CIVIL ENGINEER], DEFENDANT PROVIDED A SERVICE FOR THE GUIDANCE OF OTHERS IN ECONOMIC, FINANCIAL, AND PERSONAL AFFAIRS.

Architects and Civil Engineers Perform Service. _____ [An architect or A civil engineer], acting in that capacity, renders a service for the guidance of others in their economic, financial, and personal affairs, and may not be held strictly liable for injuries that result from his or her having acted in that capacity (Huang v. Garner (1984) 157 Cal. App. 3d 404, 412 n.5, 203 Cal. Rptr. 800 ; Del Mar Beach Club Owners Ass'n v. Imperial Contracting Co. (1981) 123 Cal. App. 3d 898, 914, 176 Cal. Rptr. 886).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that defendant architect or engineer may be held strictly liable for damages caused by a defect in the project on which he or she had worked. The ground of opposition set forth is that defendant is a seller of services rather than of a product, and as such cannot be held liable under a strict liability theory.

These points and authorities should be combined with the points and authorities in § 190.24, which set forth the more general applicable rule of law. These points and authorities may also be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a demurrer or motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication on the issue that defendant is not strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries. Finally, these points and authorities may be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should include facts stating that defendant had only been hired by a developer or like person to draft architectural plans or act as engineer for the development or project [see, e.g., Huang v. Garner (1984) 157 Cal. App. 3d 404, 203 Cal. Rptr. 800 (designer and engineer of apartment complex not subject to strict liability); Del Mar Beach Club Owners Ass'n v. Imperial Contracting Co. (1981) 123 Cal. App. 3d 898, 176 Cal. Rptr. 886 (engineers and architect of project not subject to strict liability)].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Architects and Civil Engineers Perform Service

In Huang v. Garner (1984) 157 Cal. App. 3d 404, 203 Cal. Rptr. 800 , plaintiffs purchased an apartment complex from one of the defendants whose construction company, also a named defendant, had constructed the complex on the real property. The owner defendant had hired a designer and a civil engineer, also defendants in the case. Plaintiffs brought an action in strict liability, negligence, and warranty against the defendants, alleging design defect and violation of numerous building codes in the construction. After plaintiffs rested their case, the trial court granted a nonsuit on all theories as to the designer and civil engineer defendants. The trial court also granted a nonsuit and a partial nonsuit as to the owner defendant and his construction company on various grounds. The jury rendered a verdict for plaintiffs and against the owner and his construction company. The owner and his construction company filed an appeal; plaintiffs filed an appeal and cross appeal from the nonsuit judgments.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that the trial court erred in granting nonsuits on the negligence claims against defendants. However, the court upheld the nonsuits as to the strict liability claims against the designer and the engineer. The court reiterated the rule that one who sells a service is not subject to a strict liability claim; the court also reiterated the rule that economic damages are not available on a strict liability claim (157 Cal. App. 3d 404, 412 n.5).

CAUTION:

In Aas v. Superior Court (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 627, 645-646, 101 Cal. Rptr. 2d 718, 12 P.3d 1125 [see § 190.224[3][a]], the California Supreme Court determined that homeowners and a homeowners association could not recover in negligence from the developer, contractor, and subcontractors who built their dwellings for construction defects that have not caused property damage. The court expressly disapproved Huang to the extent it was inconsistent with the views set out in that opinion.

The facts and procedural background of Del Mar Beach Club Owners Ass'n v. Imperial Contracting Co. (1981) 123 Cal. App. 3d 898, 176 Cal. Rptr. 886 , are discussed in § 190.22[3][b]. In Del Mar, although the court of appeal reversed the judgment as to the developer defendants, the court nevertheless affirmed the judgment in favor of the engineers and the architect of the project, holding that those defendants were not subject to a cause of action in strict liability, because those defendants had merely sold their services (123 Cal. App. 3d 898, 914) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Architects and Civil Engineers Perform Service

The facts and procedural background of Stuart v. Crestview Mut. Water Co. (1973) 34 Cal. App. 3d 802, 110 Cal.

Rptr. 543 , are discussed in § 190.22[3][c]. In Stuart, although the court of appeal reversed that part of the judgment that had dismissed the negligence actions and the strict liability action against the developer, the court nevertheless affirmed the judgment of dismissal on the strict liability action against the engineers. The court held that the engineers had rendered a professional service, and in so doing could not be subject to an action in strict liability (34 Cal. App. 3d 802, 811) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
1. What Is a Product?

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.29

§ 190.29 Opposing Contention That Product Is Subject of Products Liability Action--Provider of Service Not Subject to Strict Liability--Supplier of Electricity Not Subject to Strict Liability if Electricity Defect and Injury Occurred Before Electricity Had Entered Stream of Commerce

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and should be combined with a general form contending a service is not subject to strict liability (see, e.g., § 190.24). The following may also be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities opposing the contention that defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product.]

DEFENDANT _____ [name], AS A COMMERCIAL SUPPLIER OF ELECTRICITY, IS NOT SUBJECT TO A CAUSE OF ACTION IN STRICT LIABILITY BECAUSE THE ELECTRICITY HAD NOT YET ENTERED THE STREAM OF COMMERCE AT THE TIME OF THE INJURY, AND WAS THEREFORE A SERVICE AND NOT A PRODUCT

A. Electricity is Service, Not Product, Until Metered. While still in the distribution system, electricity is a service, not a product, and does not become a product, for purposes of strict liability, until it passes through the customer's meter and into the stream of commerce (Fong v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1988) 199 Cal. App. 3d 30, 38, 245 Cal. Rptr. 436).

B. Strict Liability Inapplicable to Defects Along Transmission Lines. Strict liability in tort does not apply to defective electric transmission lines or defects anywhere along the distribution lines (Fong v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1988) 199 Cal. App. 3d 30, 36, 245 Cal. Rptr. 436).

C. Strict Liability Inapplicable to Facilities Used by Public Utility for Transmission of Electricity. The doctrine of strict liability for placing defective products on the market is not applicable to facilities used by a public utility for the transmission of electricity energy (United Pac. Ins. Co. v. Southern Cal. Edison Co. (1985) 163 Cal. App. 3d 700, 706-710, 209 Cal. Rptr. 819).

D. Electric Transmission Facilities Not Placed in Stream of Commerce. High voltage electric transmission facilities are not placed in the stream of commerce, but, on the contrary, are retained in the ownership and control of the electricity supplier and used solely by it to transmit electricity to other facilities for ultimate delivery to customers. The products liability doctrine does not require a transfer of ownership, but does require that a product be marketed, or in some manner placed in the stream of commerce, which does not occur at a high voltage electric transmission line (Fong v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1988) 199 Cal. App. 3d 30, 36, 245 Cal. Rptr. 436 ; United Pac. Ins. Co. v. Southern Cal. Edison Co. (1985) 163 Cal. App. 3d 700, 707-708, 209 Cal. Rptr. 819).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that defendant public electrical utility may be held strictly liable for damages caused from its facilities or from the transmission of electricity prior to the point at which it had entered the stream of commerce. The ground of opposition set forth is that defendant is a seller of services rather than of a product, and as such cannot be held liable under a strict liability theory.

These points and authorities should be combined with the points and authorities in § 190.24, which set forth the more general applicable rule of law. These points and authorities may also be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a demurrer or motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication on the issue that defendant is not strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries. Finally, these points and authorities may be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should state that defendant is a commercial provider of electricity. Counsel should include facts regarding the location of the electricity when the injury occurred. For example, if appropriate, counsel should allege that the injury was directly caused by utility lines strung between utility poles, and therefore the electricity had not yet entered the stream of commerce [see United Pac. Ins. Co. v. Southern Cal. Edison Co. (1985) 163 Cal. App. 3d 700, 209 Cal. Rptr. 819] .

In an appropriate case, this points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities in § 190.23.

[b] Electricity Outside Stream of Commerce Not Subject to Strict Liability

A commercial supplier of electricity is not subject to strict liability in tort for an injury caused by defective electricity unless the electricity is deemed a product rather than a service [Fong v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1988) 199 Cal. App. 3d 30, 38, 245 Cal. Rptr. 436] . It is a product only after it has been metered for use by the consumer [Fong v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1988) 199 Cal. App. 3d 30, 38, 245 Cal. Rptr. 436 ; but see Pierce v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1985) 166 Cal. App. 3d 68, 212 Cal. Rptr. 283 (no definite point at which electricity becomes product, although usually occurs at meter)]. For example, if the injury is directly caused by a condition in powerlines strung between utility poles, the doctrine of strict liability does not apply [see United Pac. Ins. Co. v. Southern Cal. Edison Co. (1985) 163 Cal. App. 3d 700, 705-710, 209 Cal. Rptr. 819] . Further, if the wires are located close to the consumer's structure, but the defect and damage occur prior to metering, the doctrine also does not apply [see Fong v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1988) 199 Cal. App. 3d 30, 245 Cal. Rptr. 436] .

However, if a defect in the transmission equipment causes a surge of defective electricity to flow through the consumer's meter, and injury occurs inside the premises, the defendant is subject to strict liability even though the defect originated before the electricity was metered [see Pierce v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1985) 166 Cal. App. 3d 68, 212 Cal. Rptr. 283 (surge caused by defective transformer, which caused injury inside consumer's home); see § 190.23[3][e]].

Moreover, the court in Pierce v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1985) 166 Cal. App. 3d 68, 212 Cal. Rptr. 283 [see § 190.23[3][a]], declined to set a definitive limitation on when electricity enters the stream of commerce. Although it acknowledged that in most cases the electricity must be delivered to the consumer's premises to the point at which it is metered, it does not state that metering must occur first. It also noted that the many variations in electrical systems prevented its drawing a "bright line" at a particular point. Consequently, under Pierce, an opponent of these points and authorities can continue to argue facts that fall between the powerline-and-kite example in United Pacific and the metered defective electricity in Pierce. Although the court in Fong v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1988) 199 Cal. App. 3d 30, 245 Cal. Rptr. 436 , which held that electricity must be metered, discussed Pierce in its opinion [see § 190.29[3][a]], and implied that its holding followed from Pierce, the court in Fong did not align its decision squarely with Pierce, and opponents could conceivably argue the holdings of those respective cases on the same set of facts.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Electricity is Service, Not Product, Until Metered

In Fong v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1988) 199 Cal. App. 3d 30, 245 Cal. Rptr. 436 , owners of a residential garage that was destroyed by an electrical fire brought an action against the utility company for strict liability in tort. The garage received its electricity from electrical lines that were installed, owned, and operated by defendant utility company. The lines attached in one corner of the building at a "weatherhead," a vertical steel conduit that supports and protects the wiring that enters the building. Plaintiffs alleged that three wires braided together, which formed a "triplex service," lost their insulation because of faulty installation, and as a result, the wires were allowed to contact each other, causing arcing of the electric current and heating of the wires. In turn, molten aluminum allegedly dropped onto the shingled roof of the garage, causing it to catch fire. From the point of connection with the defendant's wires, the consumer's wires entered the weatherhead service entrance and descended in the vertical conduit to an electric meter, belonging to the defendant, on the side of the garage. From the electric meter, the wires entered the garage and ran through a fuse box and a subpanel where the circuit breakers were located. The wires ended at plugs in the garage. Eyewitness testimony regarding whether the flames occurred inside or outside the garage was in conflict. Expert testimony conflicted regarding whether the fire was caused by a condition within the garage, or by defective insulation in the weatherhead. All evidence showed that the voltage of the lines was normal. The trial court delivered jury instructions on strict liability in tort due to defective electricity, and the jury returned a verdict for plaintiffs. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal reversed and remanded with directions to enter judgment in favor of defendant, holding that until it is metered, electricity is a service, not a product, and strict liability does not apply to defects at that stage (199 Cal. App. 3d 30, 38-39) . The court reiterated the general rule set forth in Greenman v. Yuba Power Prods., Inc. (1963) 59 Cal. 2d 57, 62, 27 Cal. Rptr. 697, 377 P.2d 897 , that a manufacturer is strictly liable in tort when an article it places on the market, knowing that it is to be used without inspection for defects, proves to have a defect that causes injury to a human being. Placing an article on the market under the Greenman test is the functional equivalent of putting a product "in the stream of commerce," as used in Restatement (Second) of Torts § 402A. Pursuant to Pierce v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1985) 166 Cal. App. 3d 68, 83-84, 212 Cal. Rptr. 283 [see § 190.23[3][a]], it is now firmly settled that electricity can be a product within the meaning of Greenman and § 420A (199 Cal. App. 3d 30, 35) . The court in Pierce held that the utility company, as a commercial supplier of electricity, is subject to strict liability in tort for personal injuries caused by delivery of electricity at dangerously high voltage due to a defective transformer. However, in this case there was no evidence of a defect in the electricity itself, because the voltage lines were shown to be normal. The court discussed plaintiffs' contention that the incoming powerlines were defective because they lacked adequate insulation. Plaintiff contended that Pierce compels the application of strict liability because the electricity was in a form not intended by the utility when it emerged from the power lines near the consumers' garage. The court disagreed, stating that ning in Pierce even hints that the court was interested in overturning what is settled law in California and in other jurisdictions: strict liability in tort does not apply to defective electric transmission lines or defects anywhere along the distribution lines. The court noted that United Pac. Ins. Co. v. Southern Cal. Edison Co. (1985) 163 Cal. App. 3d 700, 209 Cal. Rptr. 819 , was more in line with this case than Pierce was, in holding that the electricity in lines strung between utility poles was not placed in the stream of commerce (199 Cal. App. 3d 30, 36) . The court also noted that other jurisdictions consistently hold that the presence of defects in power lines owned and operated by a public utility does not subject the utility to strict liability in tort. One reason is that the lines carrying the electrical current are not packaging of the current, and therefore are not part of the product being sold. Instead, the lines are merely a delivery system that remains owned by and under the control of the electric company. Another view, taken in Pierce, is that until the electricity is actually delivered to the home or the factory, it has neither been sold nor placed in the stream of commerce (199 Cal. App. 3d 30, 37) . The court rejected plaintiff's contention that the electricity in this case was in the stream of commerce because of the proximity of the wires to the consumers' home. The court noted that electricity has been deemed to enter the stream of commerce when it leaves the transmission lines and passes through the consumer's meter. The court in Pierce limited application of strict liability to cases in which the electricity is actually in the stream of commerce, and expected to be at marketable voltage. In most cases, that court stated, it means that the electricity must be delivered to the consumer's premises, to the point at which it is metered, although the many variations in electrical systems prevented its drawing a "bright line" at a particular point. A foreign state court held that while it is still in the distribution system, electricity is a service, not a product; electricity becomes a product, for purposes of strict liability, once it passes through the consumer's meter and into the stream of commerce. Therefore, electricity does not become a product once it is delivered to plaintiffs' premises--that is, the moment the wires cross plaintiffs' property line. Instead, the test is whether the electricity has been metered. In this case, the fire occurred before the electricity reached the meter. Therefore, the electricity, if defective, was still in the distribution line and not in the stream of commerce. Consequently, the court found no evidence to warrant application against defendant of strict liability in tort. The electricity was not defective at that point in time when the fire allegedly occurred. The electricity had not left the utility's control at that point, and therefore there was no product in the stream of commerce (199 Cal. App. 3d 30, 38) .

NOTE:

There is a difference between the stream-of-commerce standard set forth in Fong and Pierce v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1985) 166 Cal. App. 3d 68, 83-84, 212 Cal. Rptr. 283 . Although Fong cited and quoted Pierce, its decision is more restrictive, in that Pierce refused to set a definitive point at which electricity enters the stream of commerce [see § 190.29[2][b]; see also 190.23[3][a]].

[b] Strict Liability Inapplicable to Defects Along Transmission Lines

Fong v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1988) 199 Cal. App. 3d 30, 245 Cal. Rptr. 436 , is discussed in § 190.29[3][a].

[c] Strict Liability Inapplicable to Facilities Used by Public Utility for Transmission of Electricity

In United Pac. Ins. Co. v. Southern Cal. Edison Co. (1985) 163 Cal. App. 3d 700, 209 Cal. Rptr. 819 , plaintiff's property was damaged in a fire that ignited when a kite became entangled in the conductors of a privately owned public utility that transmitted electricity. Plaintiff brought an action in strict products liability and negligence against the electrical utility. The trial court refused to instruct the jury on a strict liability theory, and submitted the case to the jury on a negligence theory only. The jury returned a verdict for defendant, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that strict liability does not apply to defective electric transmission lines used by a public utility (163 Cal. App. 3d 700, 706-710) . that at the time, the case was one of first impression in California. Pursuant to Greenman v. Yuba Power Prods., Inc. (1963) 59 Cal. 2d 57, 62, 27 Cal. Rptr. 697, 377 P.2d 897 , the manufacturer is strictly liable in tort when an article it places on the market, knowing that it is to be used without inspection for defects, proves to have a defect that causes injury to a human being (163 Cal. App. 3d 700, 706) . The court noted that other jurisdictions have determined the doctrine to be inapplicable to defective electric transmission lines, because the electricity is not in a marketable state, and the doctrine was not intended to apply in those cases, and until actually delivered, the electricity has not been placed in the "stream of commerce" (163 Cal. App. 3d 700, 706-707) . The court rejected plaintiff's contention that defendant placed the transmission system in the stream of commerce by using the system itself. The court held that placing a product in the stream of commerce necessarily involves transfer of property or some property right. In this case, defendant merely used its own facilities to transmit its own energy for sale at a subsequent point (163 Cal. App. 3d 700, 708) . The court refused to extend the products liability doctrine to apply to the facts of the case, noting that defendant is a privately-owned public utility, which cannot raise rates without government approval. Consequently, the concept of risk-sharing underlying the products-liability doctrine is inapplicable (163 Cal. App. 3d 700, 708-709) . The court also found that, with respect to a regulated public utility, there is less need than in the case of an unregulated manufacturer to motivate safety precautions by the economic sanction of strict liability. Moreover, the plaintiff's burden of proving negligence regarding equipment open to public view is not great (163 Cal. App. 3d 700, 709) . The court concluded that the factors that gave rise to the doctrine of strict liability for placing defective products on the market are not so strong as to justify a major extension of the doctrine to high voltage electric transmission lines owned and operated by privately-owned public utilities (163 Cal. App. 3d 700, 709-710) .

[d] Electric Transmission Facilities Not Placed in Stream of Commerce

Fong v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1988) 199 Cal. App. 3d 30, 245 Cal. Rptr. 436), is discussed in § 190.29[3][a].

United Pac. Ins. Co. v. Southern Cal. Edison Co. (1985) 163 Cal. App. 3d 700, 209 Cal. Rptr. 819), is discussed in § 190.29[3][c].

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
1. What Is a Product?

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.30

§ 190.30 Opposing Contention That Product Is Subject of Products Liability Action--Residence Was Not Mass-Produced

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities opposing the contention that defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product.]

DEFENDANT _____ [name], AS A CONTRACTOR ENGAGED ONLY IN _____ [THE OCCASIONAL CONSTRUCTION AND SALE OF RESIDENCES or THE ISOLATED CONSTRUCTION AND SALE OF PLAINTIFF'S RESIDENCE], DID NOT CONSTRUCT OR SELL PLAINTIFF'S RESIDENCE AS PART OF A MASS-PRODUCTION PLAN, AND THEREFORE CANNOT BE HELD STRICTLY LIABLE FOR DEFICIENCIES IN PLAINTIFF'S RESIDENCE.

Strict Liability May Not Be Imposed Regarding Residences That Are Not Mass-Produced. Strict liability may not be imposed regarding deficiencies in a residence that was not mass-produced, but that was rather constructed and sold by a contractor that was engaged only in the occasional or isolated construction and sale of a residence (Oliver v. Superior Court (1989) 211 Cal. App. 3d 86, 89, 259 Cal. Rptr. 160).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that strict liability may be imposed regarding deficiencies of a residence that was not mass-produced [see Oliver v. Superior Court (1989) 211 Cal. App. 3d 86, 259 Cal. Rptr. 160] .

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context

in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a motion for summary adjudication [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(f)] of a cause of action for strict liability regarding damage to plaintiff's residence [see Oliver v. Superior Court (1989) 211 Cal. App. 3d 86, 259 Cal. Rptr. 160] . In addition, the points and authorities may be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should include facts showing the number and location of residences that defendant constructed, to support the finding that defendant was not engaged in the mass-production of tract homes or any similar large-scale residential construction project.

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities in § 190.22.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Strict Liability May Not Be Imposed Regarding Residences That Are Not Mass-Produced

In Oliver v. Superior Court (1989) 211 Cal. App. 3d 86, 259 Cal. Rptr. 160 , the owners of a single-family residence brought an action against the builder of their home, alleging causes of action in negligence, breach of implied warranty, strict liability, negligent misrepresentation, and fraud. Defendant moved for summary adjudication of issues, seeking to eliminate the cause of action for strict liability. (Code Civ. Proc. § 437c has subsequently been amended. Although Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(f) no longer provides for a motion for "summary adjudication of issues," it does provide for summary adjudication of "one or more causes of action," which was, in effect, the procedure used in this case.) The trial court granted the motion on the ground that the strict liability could be imposed on a developer and seller of residential housing only if the residences were mass-produced. The plaintiffs filed a petition for writ of mandate.

The court of appeal denied the petition, holding that the imposition of strict liability regarding the development of residential housing was applicable only to mass-produced residences (211 Cal. App. 3d 86, 88) . The court noted that Kriegler v. Eichler Homes, Inc. (1969) 269 Cal. App. 2d 224, 74 Cal. Rptr. 749 [see § 190.22[3][a]], the seminal case that extended the doctrine of strict liability to real estate developers, analogized the mass-production of residential units to the production and sale of cars (211 Cal. App. 3d 86, 87-88) . Subsequently, the doctrine of strict liability in tort was held applicable to a developer of a housing tract consisting of an unspecified number of house lots, and to a developer of a multiunit complex. The court noted that in each instance in which the doctrine of strict liability was applied, the defendants were characterized as mass producers. The court rejected plaintiffs' contention that the "mass production" requirement should no longer apply to real estate, because it is no longer required regarding the manufacturers of products (211 Cal. App. 3d 86, 88) . The court noted that no case law supported imposition of strict liability on other than "mass-produced" homes. Whether a residence falls within the category of a mass-produced home is a question that must be determined on a case-by-case basis. In this case, defendant had built two homes, at two different times, in two different locations, evidencing occasional construction, not mass production. The court also determined that the policies underlying Kriegler do not compel the extension of the doctrine of strict liability to residences that are not mass-produced. A home purchase through an occasional construction and sale does not involve the buyer reliance attending sales based on an advertised model. Nor does it present a situation in which the builder may be protected from substantial financial loss by effectively spreading both the risk and actual costs of defective construction among a number of residences in a development. The court stated that, inasmuch as the rationale underlying the application of strict liability does not apply to the occasional or isolated construction and sale of a residence, it would not expand the concept beyond its current application, limited to mass-produced homes (211 Cal. App. 3d 86, 89) .

23 of 179 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
1. What Is a Product?

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.31

§ 190.31 Opposing Contention That Product Is Subject of Products Liability Action--Object or Instrumentality Not "Product" as Defined or Contemplated by Law--General Form

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities opposing the contention that defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product (see, e.g., §§ 190.25 -190.30).]

DEFENDANT _____ [name] IS NOT SUBJECT TO STRICT LIABILITY, BECAUSE _____ [specify object or instrumentality that is subject of strict liability cause of action] IS NOT A PRODUCT WITHIN THE MEANING OF THE STRICT-LIABILITY DOCTRINE, IN THAT IT WAS NEITHER DEFINED OR CONTEMPLATED AS A PRODUCT BY THE RESTATEMENT OF TORTS, THE LEGISLATURE, OR CASE LAW.

A. Plaintiff Must Show Existence of "Product." As a condition precedent to successfully maintaining a products liability action, plaintiff must show that the object or instrumentality claimed to be defective was in fact a "product" as defined or contemplated by the Restatement of Torts, legislation, or case law (Brooks v. Eugene Burger Mgmt. Corp. (1989) 215 Cal. App. 3d 1611, 1626, 264 Cal. Rptr. 756).

B. Existence of "Product" Is Question of Law. Whether or not an object or instrumentality claimed to be defective is a "product" is a question of law for the trial court (Brooks v. Eugene Burger Mgmt. Corp. (1989) 215 Cal. App. 3d 1611, 1626, 264 Cal. Rptr. 756).

C. Item Not Contemplated by Law to Be "Product" Cannot Be Subject of Strict-Liability Action. An object or instrumentality that is not a "product" within the meaning of the strict-liability doctrine, as defined or contemplated by the Restatement of Torts, legislation, or case law, cannot be the subject of a strict-liability claim (Brooks v. Eugene Burger Mgmt. Corp. (1989) 215 Cal. App. 3d 1611, 1626, 264 Cal. Rptr. 756).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a defendant is subject to a products liability action, on the ground that the object or instrumentality that is claimed to be defective is not a "product" within the meaning of the strict-liability doctrine [see Brooks v. Eugene Burger Mgmt. Corp. (1989) 215 Cal. App. 3d 1611, 1626, 264 Cal. Rptr. 756] .

These form may be used as a general form, either alone or in combination with other forms specifically setting forth the type of object or instrumentality in question, if that specific issue has already been determined [see, e.g., §§ 190.24 -190.29]. For example, if the plaintiff has brought a products liability action based on the allegation that electricity is a product, the relevant points in this form may be combined with the form in § 190.29. These points and authorities may also be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication of the issue that a particular item is not a product. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, and in any other relevant points and authorities combined with this form, to show the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, if there is no precedent regarding the particular item in question, counsel should state that no statute, case law, or other legal authority has determined the item to be a product, and should further show that the item is either similar to other items previously found not to be products, or dissimilar from items that have been determined to be products.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion and forms relating to products liability generally, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 460, Products Liability (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Plaintiff Must Show Existence of "Product"

In Brooks v. Eugene Burger Mgmt. Corp. (1989) 215 Cal. App. 3d 1611, 264 Cal. Rptr. 756 , a minor brought an action against the owner of an apartment complex, seeking damages arising from injuries incurred when he was hit by a vehicle while crossing the street adjacent to the complex. Plaintiff alleged causes of action in negligence, premises liability, and products liability. With regard to the products liability action, plaintiff asserted that the apartment complex was a "product" and was defectively designed and constructed in that it was not fenced, allowing the children in the complex to reach the road adjacent to it. Defendant successfully moved for summary judgment on the strict-liability cause of action, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that an apartment complex is not a "product." The court noted that the basis of strict liability is the furnishing of defective goods. Restatement Second of Torts § 402A states the following:

(1) One who sells any product in a defective condition unreasonably dangerous to the user or consumer or to [his or her] property is subject to liability for physical harm thereby caused to the ultimate user or consumer, or to his property, if (a) the seller is engaged in the business of selling such a product, and (b) it is expected to and does reach the user or consumer without substantial change in the condition in which it is sold.

(2) The rule stated in (1) applies although (a) the seller has exercised all possible care in the preparation and sale of [his or her] product, and (b) the user or consumer has not bought the product from or entered into any contractual relation with the seller.

The court further noted that case law has established that a manufacturer or seller of a defectively designed or manufactured product may be held liable for resulting damages to the user by reason of the defect in design or manufacture without proving a duty or breach of duty. However, a products liability claimant must meet a condition precedent to successfully maintain the action: he or she must show that the object or instrumentality claimed to be defective was in fact a "product" as defined or contemplated by the Restatement of Torts, legislation, or case law (215 Cal. App. 3d 1611, 1626) .

[b] Existence of "Product" Is Question of Law

Brooks v. Eugene Burger Mgmt. Corp. (1989) 215 Cal. App. 3d 1611, 264 Cal. Rptr. 756 , is discussed in 190.31[3][a]. The court held that whether or not a product was defectively designed or manufactured is a factual issue to be determined by the trier of fact. However, whether or not the particular object or instrumentality is a "product" is a question of law for the trial court (and subject to de novo review by the court of appeal) (215 Cal. App. 3d 1611, 1626) .

[c] Item Not Contemplated by Law to Be "Product" Cannot Be Subject of Strict-Liability Action

Brooks v. Eugene Burger Mgmt. Corp. (1989) 215 Cal. App. 3d 1611, 264 Cal. Rptr. 756 , is discussed in § 190.31[3][a]. The court stated that the types of products that have been alleged to be defective include business and industrial machinery and equipment, chemicals, clothing, asbestos, drugs, food, and beverages, among others. The court held that there was no authority to the effect that an apartment complex may be considered a product for the purposes of products liability. The court noted that plaintiff did not contend that any of the buildings constructed on the complex, or the playground equipment or grounds, were defectively designed or constructed, but rather contended that the entire complex as an entity was defective in that it was not fenced. However, defendant was under no duty to fence its apartment complex, nor is it customary in the industry or in that geographical area to do so (215 Cal. App. 3d 1611, 1626) . Further, the ordinary builder of a dwelling or other structure has not been held strictly liable, and cases finding liability against builders have concerned a defective part of the building itself, or defects causing damage to the structures. The court concluded that summary judgment was properly granted on that cause of action (215 Cal. App. 3d 1611, 1626-1627) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
1. What Is a Product?

19-190 California Points & Authorities §§ 190.32-190.49

[Reserved]

§§ 190.32[Reserved]

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
2. Who May Be Plaintiff?

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.50

§ 190.50 Supporting Contention That Plaintiff Is Person Who May Bring Products Liability Action--No Privity Required

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities supporting the contention that defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product (see, e.g., §§ 190.70, 190.71).]

PLAINTIFF IS NOT REQUIRED TO BE IN PRIVITY OF CONTRACT TO BRING THIS STRICT LIABILITY ACTION BECAUSE THE DUTY OF DEFENDANT MANUFACTURER, _____ [name], TO DELIVER A PRODUCT TO A USER FREE FROM DEFECTS EXTENDS TO ALL WHO ARE INJURED BY THE PRODUCT.

A. Duty Runs to All Who Are Injured. The manufacturer of a completed product has the nondelegable duty to have its product delivered to the ultimate user free from dangerous defects. This duty runs to all who are injured by a defective product, not just ultimate purchasers (Hasson v. Ford Motor Co. (1982) 32 Cal. 3d 388, 405-406, 185 Cal. Rptr. 654, 650 P.2d 1171).

B. Plaintiff Not Required to Have Privity of Contract. Recovery by a plaintiff under the doctrine of strict liability may not be restricted to a theory of privity of contract (Elmore v. American Motors Corp. (1969) 70 Cal. 2d 578, 586, 75 Cal. Rptr. 652, 451 P.2d 84).

[Optional] C. Bystander May Bring Strict Liability Action. Because no privity of contract is required, the doctrine of strict liability in tort is available in an action for personal injuries by a bystander against the manufacturer of a product (Elmore v. American Motors Corp. (1969) 70 Cal. 2d 578, 587, 75 Cal. Rptr. 652, 451 P.2d 84).

[Optional] D. Driver and Passenger of Automobile May Bring Strict Liability Action Against Manufacturer of Another Automobile. The public policy that protects the driver and passenger of a defective automobile also protects the bystander. Thus, when a driver or passenger of another automobile is injured because of defects in the manufacture of the first automobile and without any fault of his or her own, he or she may recover from the manufacturer of the defective automobile (Elmore v. American Motors Corp. (1969) 70 Cal. 2d 578, 586, 75 Cal. Rptr. 652, 451 P.2d 84).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a person other than the purchaser of a product may bring a products liability action against the product's manufacturer. If plaintiff is a bystander, counsel should add optional Paragraph C. If plaintiff is a driver or passenger of an automobile other than the vehicle that plaintiff claims is defective, counsel should use optional Paragraph D.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication on the issue that defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should include facts showing plaintiff's status as user, purchaser, bystander, or other, and state that plaintiff need not be in privity of contract with defendant [see, e.g., Hasson v. Ford Motor Co. (1982) 32 Cal. 3d 388, 405-406, 185 Cal. Rptr. 654, 650 P.2d 1171 (automobile manufacturer strictly liable to nonpurchaser plaintiff who was riding in car when its brakes failed)].

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in § 190.53 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Duty Runs to All Who Are Injured

In Hasson v. Ford Motor Co. (1982) 32 Cal. 3d 388, 185 Cal. Rptr. 654, 650 P.2d 1171 , plaintiff sustained personal injuries when the brakes on the automobile in which plaintiff was riding failed. Plaintiff brought an action in strict liability and negligence against the automobile's manufacturer. Initially, the jury awarded a verdict for plaintiff; however, because the trial court failed to instruct the jury on the defense of contributory negligence, that judgment was reversed in Hasson v. Ford Motor Co. (1977) 19 Cal. 3d 530, 138 Cal. Rptr. 705, 564 P.2d 857 . On retrial, the jury returned a verdict for plaintiff in the amount of $7,570,719 in compensatory damages and $4,000,000 in punitive damages. The trial court found the award was excessive, and reduced it to $9,247,719, but rejected the other grounds raised by defendant for a new trial. Defendant appealed.

The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment, holding that the jury had been properly instructed, that the award was not excessive, that punitive damages were proper, and that the evidence sufficiently supported the judgment. In particular, the Court ruled that the jury had been properly instructed that the manufacturer had a nondelegable duty to deliver the product to its ultimate user free from dangerous defects. The Court explained that the manufacturer not only has such a duty, but that the duty extends to all who are injured by the product, not just its ultimate purchaser (32 Cal. 3d 388, 405-406) .

[b] Plaintiff Not Required to Have Privity of Contract

In Elmore v. American Motors Corp. (1969) 70 Cal. 2d 578, 75 Cal. Rptr. 652, 451 P.2d 84 , plaintiffs were injured in an automobile collision caused by a defect in the other automobile involved in the crash. Plaintiffs brought an action in strict liability against the defective automobile's manufacturer and retailer. Defendants moved for nonsuit, which was granted. Plaintiffs appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed the judgment, holding that although plaintiffs were bystanders rather than purchasers or users of the defective automobile, they were nevertheless entitled to bring an action based on strict liability. The Court ruled that privity of contract was irrelevant in a strict liability case, regardless of whether the defendant is a manufacturer or a retailer. Thus, as bystanders, indeed as occupants of an automobile other than the defective automobile, plaintiffs were entitled to bring the action (70 Cal. 2d 578, 583-587) .

[c] Bystander May Bring Strict Liability Action

Elmore v. American Motors Corp. (1969) 70 Cal. 2d 578, 75 Cal. Rptr. 652, 451 P.2d 84 , is discussed in § 190.50[3][b].

[d] Driver and Passenger of Automobile May Bring Strict Liability Action Against Manufacturer of Another Automobile

Elmore v. American Motors Corp. (1969) 70 Cal. 2d 578, 75 Cal. Rptr. 652, 451 P.2d 84 , is discussed in § 190.50[3][b].

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
2. Who May Be Plaintiff?

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.51

§ 190.51 Supporting Contention That Plaintiff Is Person Who May Bring Products Liability Action--Heirs of Decedent Killed by Defective Product May Assert Strict Products Liability Theory in Wrongful Death Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 377]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities supporting the contention that defendant is liable in strict products liability for injuries caused by defendant's product (see, e.g., §§ 190.70, 190.71).]

PLAINTIFFS ARE ENTITLED TO BRING THIS ACTION IN STRICT PRODUCTS LIABILITY BECAUSE THEY ARE THE HEIRS OF _____ [name], DECEDENT, WHO WAS KILLED BY A DEFECTIVE PRODUCT, NAMELY, _____ [describe, e.g., THE EARTH MOVER DESCRIBED IN THE ABOVE-ENTITLED ACTION, WHICH WAS SOLD TO DECEDENT BY DEFENDANTS].

Heirs May Recover Under Strict Products Liability Theory. The heirs of a decedent killed by a defective product may recover on a strict products liability theory (Barrett v. Superior Court (1990) 222 Cal. App. 3d 1176, 1191, 272 Cal. Rptr. 304).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that the heirs of a person killed by a defective product may bring a wrongful death action, pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 377, based on a strict products liability theory [see Barrett v. Superior Court (1990) 222 Cal. App. 3d 1176, 1191, 272 Cal. Rptr. 304] .

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of strict products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities in opposition to a defendant's motion for summary judgment in a wrongful death action, based on the theory of strict products liability, that asserts that plaintiffs, as heirs of a decedent killed by the product that is the subject of the action, cannot base a wrongful death action on that theory. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should show that plaintiffs are heirs of the decedent who was killed by the product, and that the theory of strict products liability is applicable to the facts of the case.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion and forms relating to death actions generally, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 181, Death and Survival Actions (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Points and Authorities

For memoranda of points and authorities related to death actions generally, see Ch. 66, Death and Survival Actions .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Heirs May Recover Under Strict Products Liability Theory

In Barrett v. Superior Court (1990) 222 Cal. App. 3d 1176, 272 Cal. Rptr. 304 , the widow and minor child of a decedent killed while driving an earth mover brought an action against the owner and lessor, as well as the manufacturer, of the earth mover, asserting "causes of action" enumerated as (1) negligence, (2) strict liability, (3) breach of implied warranty, and (4) wrongful death. (The court of appeal later noted that more properly characterized, plaintiffs' suit consisted of only one true "cause of action," that is, for the injury they had suffered as a result of the wrongful death of the decedent, alleging four counts based on the same primary right of plaintiffs and the same primary duty of defendants, each of which merely alleged additional circumstances out of which the primary right and primary duty arose.) The decedent was killed when an earth mover he was driving off a trailer rolled off the trailer and rolled over, crushing him. The earth mover was leased to his employer. Plaintiffs asserted, supported by evidence admitted in the trial court, that the lessor-owner of the earth mover had negligently repaired it during the course of its ownership, had installed defective seat belts, and had negligently installed a "shade canopy"; that the earth mover had been originally manufactured and sold without a roll cage; and that at the time of the injury, a shade canopy, but no roll bar, was installed in it. With respect to the strict liability count, defendant lessor-owner brought a motion for judgment on the pleadings asserting that strict liability in tort will not support a cause of action for wrongful death. The trial court denied the motion in that respect. Both defendants later brought a motion for summary judgment on that count, on the grounds that: (1) plaintiffs had no standing to sue on a theory of strict liability; (2) strict liability in tort would not support a wrongful death cause of action; and (3) a distributor of secondhand or used machinery may not be held liable on a theory of strict liability in tort. The trial court granted the motion, and plaintiffs petitioned the court of appeal for a writ of mandate directing the trial court to vacate its order and enter a new order denying the motion.

The court of appeal issued an alternative writ, holding that the heirs of a decedent killed by a defective product may recover on a strict products liability theory (222 Cal. App. 3d 1176, 1191) . The court noted that the issue presented has never been the subject of a published opinion (although commentators and courts have assumed that heirs may recover on a strict products liability theory), and proceeded to analyze the application of the strict products liability theory to wrongful death actions, in lengthy detail (222 Cal. App. 3d 1176, 1183-1196) . The court rejected defendants' assertion that the term "wrongful act," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 377 (governing action for damages based on death of person caused by "wrongful act or neglect of another"), means an intentional or "fault-based" act, precluding its application to strict products liability. The court concluded that the term "wrongful act" within the meaning of that statute means any kind of "tortious act," which encompasses the act of placing a defective product on the market (222 Cal. App. 3d 1176, 1183-1191) .

The court first examined the public policy considerations behind the enactment of Code Civ. Proc. § 377, that is, the legislative creation of a cause of action for wrongful death: (1) compensation for survivors; (2) deterrence of conduct; and (3) the lack of limitation on the measure of damages (222 Cal. App. 3d 1176, 1185) . The court stated that its interpretation of the term "wrongful act" should be one that emphasizes the deterrent aspect of the statute, rather than one that emphasizes the aspect limiting recovery, and one that recognizes that only conduct that is subject to conscious control or improvement can be deterred by the risk of potential liability for damages (222 Cal. App. 3d 1176, 1185-1186) . The court phrased the question as follows: whether interpreting the term "wrongful act" to encompass the act of putting a defective product into the stream of commerce, so as to allow a decedent's heirs to recover damages under a theory of strict products liability (1) emphasizes the deterrent effect of the wrongful act, and (2) takes into account whether the placing of defective products into the stream of commerce is conduct that can be deterred. The court therefore considered: (1) the purpose behind the creation of strict products liability doctrine as a predicate for liability; (2) the effect of extending the use of the doctrine as a theory of recovery to persons other than the purchasers or users of the defective product; and (3) the nature of the conduct that forms the basis for liability for damages under that theory. The primary purpose of the doctrine, the court stated, is to insure that the costs of injuries resulting from defective products are borne by the manufacturers that put the products on the market rather than by the injured persons who are powerless to protect themselves. Other purposes are: (1) to provide a "short cut" to liability when negligence may be present but difficult to prove; (2) to provide an economic incentive for improved product safety; (3) to induce the reallocation of resources toward safer products; and (4) to spread the risk of loss among all who use the product (222 Cal. App. 3d 1176, 1186) .

With regard to the effect of extending the doctrine to heirs of the decedent, the court stated that to do so would serve the same purpose as extending the doctrine to bystanders, that is, it would deter foreseeable wrongful conduct and allocate the cost of injury among the industry (and ultimately consumers as a whole), rather than force innocent survivors to bear the burden alone. Furthermore, the court stated, failure to do so would have the anomalous effect of "rewarding" the manufacturer of a defective product that kills its user, rather than merely maiming him or her, by making it more difficult for the deceased user's heirs, who would no longer be able to use the "short cut" theory of strict products liability rather than negligence, to prove liability (222 Cal. App. 3d 1176, 1187) . The court rejected defendants' contention that the doctrine is imposed regardless of fault and therefore cannot be reconciled with the term "wrongful act" within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 377. The court explained that although some cases state that strict products liability is imposed regardless of fault, that is only true if "fault" is equated with negligence. Rather, application of the doctrine requires a showing of "fault" defined as the responsibility for placing a defective product into the stream of commerce (222 Cal. App. 3d 1176, 1188-1189) . The court noted other indicators that the doctrine of strict products liability involves fault or wrongdoing: the award of punitive damages in some instances, and application of comparative-fault principles (222 Cal. App. 3d 1176, 1189) . The court also stated that the fact that there can be no recovery under the theory of strict products liability without some evidence of foreseeability demonstrates that allowing a plaintiff in a wrongful death action to proceed under a strict products liability theory furthers not only the policy of compensating survivors, but also the policy of deterring conduct that is susceptible to conscious control (222 Cal. App. 3d 1176, 1190) . The court also found that the juxtaposition of "wrongful act" with "neglect" within the statute supports the conclusion that "wrongful act" means "any tortious conduct" rather than a willful or intentional tort, as urged by defendants (222 Cal. App. 3d 1176, 1190-1191) . The court rejected defendants' argument that Code Civ. Proc. § 377 excludes the theory of strict products liability because the statute was enacted prior to the development of that theory, holding that the term "wrongful act" may properly be expanded in that sense because to do so would not create a new right in plaintiffs or a new duty in defendants (222 Cal. App. 3d 1176, 1192) .

The court also rejected defendants' argument that Ault v. International Harvester Co. (1974) 13 Cal. 3d 113, 117 Cal. Rptr. 812, 528 P.2d 1148 [see § 190.280[3][a]], compels the conclusion that "wrongful act" does not include the act of placing a defective product on the market. That opinion interpreted the phrase "to prove negligence or culpable conduct" as used in Evid. Code § 1151 as not excluding evidence of subsequent remediation in strict products liability cases. The court held that defendant "reads too much into that opinion" by asserting that Ault supports the conclusion that the term "wrongful act" under Code Civ. Proc. § 377 does not include the act of placing a defective product on the market (222 Cal. App. 3d 1176, 1192-1196) . Rather, the court stated, Ault interpreted the Evidence Code provision in a way that comported with both the public policy behind that statute and the public policy behind the strict products liability doctrine, and consequently the actual holding in Ault and the considerations behind that holding are inapplicable in this case (222 Cal. App. 3d 1176) . Finally, the court rejected the contention that defendant lessor-owner was entitled to summary judgment on the ground that it was a mere "used machinery dealer" and therefore exempt from application of strict products liability. The court noted that defendant failed to produce any evidence that it was simply a dealer in used machinery, and that it was not responsible for any modification, dilapidation, or misuse that would have rendered the earth mover unreasonably unsafe for its intended use, in which case the exemption would not apply (222 Cal. App. 3d 1176, 1196-1197) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
2. Who May Be Plaintiff?

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.52

§ 190.52 Supporting Contention That Plaintiff Is Person Who May Bring Products Liability Action--Independent Cause Exception to Firefighter's Rule

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities supporting the contention that defendant is liable in strict products liability for injuries caused by defendant's product.]

PLAINTIFF [FIREFIGHTER or POLICE OFFICER or PUBLIC OFFICER] IS ENTITLED TO BRING THIS STRICT LIABILITY ACTION BECAUSE THE FIREFIGHTER'S RULE DID NOT APPLY TO BAR CLAIM.

A. Firefighter's Rule Does Not Modify Broad Interpretation of Independent Cause Exception. The statutory firefighter's rule does not modify the broad interpretation of the independent cause exception set forth in Donohue v. San Francisco Housing Authority (Civ. Code § 1714.9(e); Vasquez v. North County Transit Dist. (9th Cir. 2002) 292 F.3d 1049, 1056-1057) .

B. Firefighter's Rule Does Not Bar Claim Based on Allegation That Product's Malfunction Was Independent of Fire. The firefighter's rule does not apply to conduct other than that which necessitated the summoning of the firefighter or police officer, and does not apply to independent acts of misconduct that are committed after the firefighter or police officer has arrived at the scene (Stapper v. GMI Holdings, Inc. (1999) 73 Cal. App. 4th 787, 86 Cal. Rptr. 2d 688, 690) .

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a firefighter, police officer, or other public officer is not barred by the firefighter's rule from bringing a products liability action.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Firefighter's Rule Does Not Modify Broad Interpretation of Independent Cause Exception

In Vasquez v. North County Transit Dist. (9th Cir. 2002) 292 F.3d 1049 , applying California law, a railroad crossing gate broke and struck a police officer who had been dispatched to the crossing because the crossing gate arms were stuck in the "down" position. The officer alleged that the problem that necessitated his presence at the scene--that is, the cross-gate arms being stuck in the down position--was not same as the allegedly negligent act that caused the gate arm to fall sideways and strike him, i.e., the arm's attaching bolts being improperly designed. The district granted summary judgment in favor of the defendants on the ground of the firefighter's rule. The Ninth Circuit reversed. It explained that different courts have interpreted the independent cause exception to the firefighter's rule in different ways. It agreed with the plaintiff that benchmark interpretation was Donohue v. San Francisco Hous. Auth. (1993) 16 Cal. App. 4th 658, 20 Cal. Rptr. 2d 148 , which held that the fact that a firefighter was injured while in the regular course of his duties and that the hazard was one normally encountered as part of his job, was not dispositive. The court concluded that Civ. Code § 1714.9(e)--which specifically mentions the independent cause exception--applied and supported Donohue's broad interpretation of the exception. Genuine issues of fact existed as to whether the independent cause exception applied (292 F.3d 1049, 1056-1057) .

[b] Firefighter's Rule Does Not Bar Claim Based on Allegation that Product's Malfunction Was Independent of Fire

In Stapper v. GMI Holdings, Inc. (1999) 73 Cal. App. 4th 787, 86 Cal. Rptr. 2d 688 , a firefighter responded to a report of a fire at a residence. She found herself trapped in the garage when the door would not open. She sustained serious injuries, and brought a products liability action alleging that the garage door opener was defectively designed because the Genie device had a worm screw device that affixed down the door in a permanent condition. The trial court granted nonsuit on her claims, but the court of appeal reversed. The firefighter's rule did not bar her claim because she alleged that the garage door's malfunction was independent of the fire, not caused by the fire. Also, exonerating the manufacturer from any duty of care it might have owed the plaintiff would not further the policy considerations supporting the firefighter's rule. The manufacturer's argument that the firefighter's rule applied because the risk of a blocked exit is reasonably anticipated by firefighters was without merit. The underlying principle of the firefighter's rule is assumption of risk, and in making an assumption of the risk analysis, courts focus not the foreseeability of the hazard but on the defendant's duty of care and the relationship of the parties (73 Cal. App. 4th 787, 791-797) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
2. Who May Be Plaintiff?

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.53

§ 190.53 Opposing Contention That Plaintiff Is Person Who May Bring Products Liability Action--Commercial Purchaser Exception

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities opposing the contention that defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product (see, e.g., §§ 190.82 -190.94).]

PLAINTIFF IS NOT ENTITLED TO BRING THIS STRICT LIABILITY ACTION BECAUSE PLAINTIFF IS A COMMERCIAL PURCHASER.

Commercial Purchaser May Not Bring Strict Liability Action. A plaintiff who is a commercial purchaser may not bring an action in strict liability against a defendant. A plaintiff is considered to be a commercial purchaser when, in purchasing the allegedly defective product, the plaintiff and defendant (1) deal in a commercial setting, (2) deal from positions of relatively equal economic strength, (3) bargain the specifications of the product, and (4) negotiate concerning the risk of loss from defects in it (Kaiser Steel Corp. v. Westinghouse Elec. Corp. (1976) 55 Cal. App. 3d 737, 748, 127 Cal. Rptr. 838).

NOTE:

Kaiser Steel Corp. v. Westinghouse Elec. Corp., discussed in § 190.53[3][a], was superseded by statute on other grounds as stated in Barnett v. American-Cal Medical Services (1984) 156 Cal. App. 3d 260, 265, 202 Cal. Rptr. 735

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a defendant is subject to a products liability action. The ground of opposition set forth is that plaintiff is not entitled to bring the action because plaintiff is subject to the commercial purchaser exception outlined in Kaiser Steel Corp. v. Westinghouse Elec. Corp. (1976) 55 Cal. App. 3d 737, 127 Cal. Rptr. 838 .

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a demurrer or a motion for summary judgment on the issue that plaintiff is not entitled to bring the action.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should set forth the factors showing that the parties dealt in a commercial setting, that they occupied positions of relatively equal economic strength, that they bargained for the specifications of the product, and that they negotiated concerning the risk of loss from defects in the product [see, e.g., Kaiser Steel Corp. v. Westinghouse Elec. Corp. (1976) 55 Cal. App. 3d 737, 748, 127 Cal. Rptr. 838] .

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities in § 190.50.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Commercial Purchaser May Not Bring Strict Liability Action

In Kaiser Steel Corp. v. Westinghouse Elec. Corp. (1976) 55 Cal. App. 3d 737, 127 Cal. Rptr. 838 , superseded by statute on other grounds as stated in Barnett v. American-Cal Medical Services (1984) 156 Cal. App. 3d 260, 265, 202 Cal. Rptr. 735 , defendant, a commercial enterprise, sold an allegedly defective generator to plaintiff, another commercial enterprise. Plaintiff brought an action in strict liability, warranty, and negligence against defendant. Defendant sought summary judgment and nonsuit on the causes of action, all of which were granted by the trial court. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed the judgment as to the warranty and negligence causes of action, but affirmed that part of the judgment nonsuiting the strict liability cause of action. The court held that because both plaintiff and defendant were commercial enterprises contracting from positions of relatively equal bargaining power for a product designed to negotiable specifications and not furnished off the shelf, public policy would not be served by extending strict liability. Because the specifications of the product were negotiable, the tort doctrine of products liability as between the buyer and seller was no inducement to design and produce a safe product. And, because the manufacturer and buyer bargained in a commercial setting not only for the product but also for the measure and mode of reimbursement for defects in the product, any societal interest in loss shifting was absent. Thus, a plaintiff may not bring an action based in strict liability when the parties (1) deal in a commercial setting, (2) deal from positions of relatively equal economic strength, (3) bargain the specifications of the product, and (4) negotiate concerning the risk of loss from defects in it (55 Cal. App. 3d 737, 746-748) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Commercial Purchaser May Not Bring Strict Liability Action

In Appalachian Ins. Co. v. McDonnell Douglas Corp. (1989) 214 Cal. App. 3d 1, 262 Cal. Rptr. 716 , the purchaser of a telecommunications satellite brought an action in strict liability and negligence against the manufacturer and seller of the rocket that launched the satellite, arising from the failure of the satellite to reach the desired orbit. The court of appeal affirmed summary judgment in favor of the defendant, and held that the strict liability theory did not apply to a lawsuit over a defective product that arises in a commercial setting and involves only a business loss. The court stated that application of a strict liability theory would improperly invade rules of law adopted in the California Commercial Code, which regulates the various aspects of plaintiff's purchase of the product from defendant, including liability for defects based on express and implied warranties (including disclaimers of warranties). Therefore, the contractual disclaimer controlled, precluding liability (214 Cal. App. 3d 1, 32-33) .

In Gentry Constr. Co. v. Superior Court (1989) 212 Cal. App. 3d 177, 260 Cal. Rptr. 421 , a homeowner brought an action in strict liability against the contractor that built his home and the developer that graded the lots, based on the defective soil conditions. The contractor filed a cross complaint against the developer, from which it purchased the land, alleging causes of action, among others, for total indemnity based on strict liability, and for comparative indemnity. The court of appeal upheld the trial court's summary adjudication that the contractor could not, as a matter of law, maintain a cause of action for total indemnity based on strict liability against the developer, holding that a commercial plaintiff may not rely on the doctrine of strict liability to recover its losses (212 Cal. App. 3d 177, 180) . The court noted that this case involved losses incurred by a consumer who had a claim for strict liability, rather than losses occurring solely between commercial entities, and that the surviving cause of action in the cross complaint for comparative indemnity will allow strict liability damages to be apportioned between two strictly liable tortfeasors [see § 190.245[3][c]] (212 Cal. App. 3d 177, 180, 182-183) .

In Southern Cal. Edison Co. v. Harnischfeger Corp. (1981) 120 Cal. App. 3d 842, 175 Cal. Rptr. 67 , the trial court granted a motion for summary judgment in favor of defendant manufacturer of a crane in an action brought by a power company for property damage caused by corrosion and breakage of the cable on the crane. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment as to the cause of action based on breach of warranty, but reversed the judgment as to the causes of action for strict liability and negligence, holding that material questions of fact remained as to causation. Defendant unsuccessfully argued that the Kaiser rule applied and that plaintiff was not entitled to bring the action. The court of appeal disagreed, finding that factual questions remained as to whether plaintiff had bargained for the crane's design specifications. Because this factor remained undetermined, not all the Kaiser criteria had been shown and the exception did not apply to preclude the application of products liability (120 Cal. App. 3d 842, 855) .

International Knights of Wine, Inc. v. Ball Corp. (1980) 110 Cal. App. 3d 1001, 168 Cal. Rptr. 301 , abrogated on other grounds by Sacramento Reg. Trans. Dist. v. Grumman Flxible (1984) 158 Cal. App. 3d 289, 204 Cal. Rptr. 736 , was an action in which plaintiff corporation had purchased bottled wine that was damaged by the corrosion of sealing caps from defendant winery. Although the trial court granted a directed verdict for plaintiff on a warranty theory, the court granted motions for judgment on the pleadings for defendants on a strict liability theory. The court of appeal reversed the judgment on the strict liability cause of action, holding that the facts of the case did not justify the imposition of the commercial purchaser exception to the strict liability rule, and that defendant winery was not exempted from the imposition of strict liability. Specifically, the court found that the record did not indicate anything about the parties' relative economic strength or ability to negotiate respecting risk of loss from a defective product. Because that element was missing, the Kaiser exception did not apply (110 Cal. App. 3d 1001, 1005-1007) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
2. Who May Be Plaintiff?

19-190 California Points & Authorities §§ 190.54-190.69

[Reserved]

§§ 190.54[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
3. Who May Be Defendant?

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.70

§ 190.70 Supporting Contention That Defendant Is Person Who Is Subject to Strict Liability--Manufacturer Who Places Article on Market

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities supporting the contention that defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product (see, e.g., §§ 190.71 -190.80).]

DEFENDANT _____ [name] IS STRICTLY LIABLE BECAUSE, AS A MANUFACTURER, DEFENDANT PLACED A DEFECTIVE ARTICLE ON THE MARKET THAT CAUSED INJURY TO A HUMAN BEING.

Manufacturer Is Strictly Liable for Placing Defective Article on Market That Injures Human Being. A manufacturer is strictly liable in tort when an article he or she places on the market, knowing that it is to be used without inspection for defects, proves to have a defect that causes injury to a human being (Greenman v. Yuba Power Prods., Inc. (1963) 59 Cal. 2d 57, 62, 27 Cal. Rptr. 697, 377 P.2d 897 ; Fluor Corp. v. Jeppesen & Co. (1985) 170 Cal. App. 3d 468, 474, 216 Cal. Rptr. 68).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a manufacturer is strictly liable for placing a defective product on the market that causes injury to a human being.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication on the issue that the manufacturer was subject to strict liability. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

These points and authorities should be combined with points and authorities regarding the existence of a defect in the product placed on the market by manufacturer, and regarding the causation of plaintiff's injuries. Counsel should insert argument in this form, along with the other points and authorities combined with this form, to show the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should show that the product placed on the market by manufacturer was defective and that the defect caused plaintiff's injuries, subjecting manufacturer to strict liability; in showing defect and causation, facts should be stated that show the relationship between a finding of defect and causation and the points and authorities relating to defect and causation.

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in §§ 190.82 -190.94 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Manufacturer Is Strictly Liable for Placing Defective Article on Market That Injures Person

In Greenman v. Yuba Power Prods., Inc. (1963) 59 Cal. 2d 57, 27 Cal. Rptr. 697, 377 P.2d 897 , plaintiff was using a combination power tool to turn wood into a chalice when the wood flew out of the machine and struck him on the forehead. Plaintiff brought an action against the manufacturer and the retailer of the tool. The trial court refused to instruct the jury on negligence and express warranty theories against defendant retailer, and refused to instruct on an implied warranty theory against defendant manufacturer. Instead, the trial court only instructed the jury on an implied warranty theory against defendant retailer, and on a negligence and an express warranty theory against defendant manufacturer. The jury relieved defendant retailer of liability, but assessed $65,000 in damages against defendant manufacturer. Defendant manufacturer appealed the verdict on the theory that plaintiff had failed to give it timely notice of breach of warranty, while plaintiff appealed only the judgment against defendant retailer in the event that the judgment against defendant manufacturer was reversed.

The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment, holding that defendant manufacturer was strictly liable under the circumstances, and that warranty need not be established at all. Specifically, the Court held that strict liability may be imposed on any manufacturer who places a defective article on the market, knowing that it is to be used without inspection for defects, that proves to have a defect that causes injury to a human being. The Court based its decision on public policy, explaining that the purpose of imposing strict liability on manufacturers is to insure that the costs of injuries resulting from defective products are borne by the manufacturers that put such products on the market rather than by the injured persons who are powerless to protect themselves (59 Cal. 2d 57, 61-63) .

The facts and procedural background of Fluor Corp. v. Jeppesen & Co. (1985) 170 Cal. App. 3d 468, 216 Cal. Rptr. 68 , are discussed in § 190.20[3][a]. In reversing the judgment, the court of appeal recited the fundamental policies underlying strict products liability. Its recitation included a quotation of prior case law, including language from Greenman (170 Cal. App. 3d 468, 474) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
3. Who May Be Defendant?

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.71

§ 190.71 Supporting Contention That Defendant Is Person Who Is Subject to Strict Liability--Person Who Is Part of Overall Producing and Marketing Enterprise--In General

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities supporting the contention that defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product (see, e.g., §§ 190.72 -190.74).]

DEFENDANT _____ [name] IS SUBJECT TO STRICT LIABILITY BECAUSE DEFENDANT IS PART OF THE OVERALL PRODUCING AND MARKETING ENTERPRISE.

A. Strict Liability Extends to All Who Are Part of Producing and Marketing Enterprise. Strict liability extends to all those who are part of the overall producing and marketing enterprise that should bear the cost of injuries from defective products (Vandermark v. Ford Motor Co. (1964) 61 Cal. 2d 256, 262, 37 Cal. Rptr. 896, 391 P.2d 168).

[Optional] B. One Who Plays More Than Random and Accidental Role in Marketing Enterprise Is Subject to Strict Liability. A person who plays more than a random and accidental role in the overall marketing enterprise of a product is subject to strict liability for an injury proximately caused by a defect in that product (Garcia v. Halsett (1970) 3 Cal. App. 3d 319, 326, 82 Cal. Rptr. 420).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a person who is a part of the overall producing and marketing enterprise is subject to strict liability.

These points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities in any of §§ 190.72-190.74. These points and authorities may also be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication on the issue that the manufacturer was subject to strict liability. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, and with any other relevant points and authorities combined with this form, to show the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should show facts indicating that defendant played a substantial role in the producing or marketing of the defective product, and was part of the overall commercial marketing chain [see, e.g., Garcia v. Halsett (1970) 3 Cal. App. 3d 319, 82 Cal. Rptr. 420 (licensor of chattel); Vandermark v. Ford Motor Co. (1964) 61 Cal. 2d 256, 37 Cal. Rptr. 896, 391 P.2d 168 (retailer)].

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in §§ 190.82 -190.94 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Strict Liability Extends to All Who Are Part of Producing and Marketing Enterprise

In Vandermark v. Ford Motor Co. (1964) 61 Cal. 2d 256, 37 Cal. Rptr. 896, 391 P.2d 168 , plaintiffs sustained personal injuries when the brakes failed in the automobile in which they were riding. Plaintiffs brought a negligence and warranty action against the manufacturer of the car and the retailer who sold the car. The trial court granted the manufacturer's nonsuit motion on all causes of action, and directed a verdict in favor of the retailer on the warranty causes of action. The jury returned a verdict for the retailer on the negligence causes of action. Plaintiffs appealed.

The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment in favor of the retailer on the negligence causes of action, but reversed the judgment in all other respects. The Court held that plaintiffs had presented prima facie cases of both strict liability and negligence. More importantly, however, the Court held that retailers, like manufacturers, are an integral part of the overall producing and marketing enterprise that should bear the cost of injuries resulting from defective products. Thus, the Court extended the strict liability doctrine to retailers and held that in this case, plaintiffs had established a prima facie case of strict liability against the retailer (61 Cal. 2d 256, 260-263) .

[b] One Who Plays More Than Random and Accidental Role in Marketing Enterprise Is Subject to Strict Liability

In Garcia v. Halsett (1970) 3 Cal. App. 3d 319, 82 Cal. Rptr. 420 , plaintiff was injured when he attempted to remove clothing from a launderette's washing machine that continued to spin while its door was open. Plaintiff brought an action against the owner of launderette. At trial, the judge refused to instruct the jury on strict liability, and judgment was entered for defendant. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed the judgment, holding that the trial court erred in refusing to instruct on strict liability. The court held that defendant could be found strictly liable for injuries sustained from a defective washing machine that, although not manufactured or distributed by defendant, was provided by defendant to the public for use by the public. The court explained that in providing the machine to the public for use by the public, defendant played more than a random and accidental role in the overall marketing enterprise of the machine. Thus, a licensor of chattels, like a manufacturer, retailer, and lessor of chattels, is subject to strict liability (3 Cal. App. 3d 319, 324-326) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Strict Liability Extends to All Who Are Part of Producing and Marketing Enterprise

In Fortman v. Hemco, Inc. (1989) 211 Cal. App. 3d 241, 259 Cal. Rptr. 311 , a child was severely injured when she was ejected from a jeep, after a custom-made door, part of a fiberglass top that was sold as an after-market product, flew open while the vehicle was moving. She brought an action in strict liability, based on design defect, against various defendants involved in the design and marketing of the jeep top, all of whom settled, with the exception of the manufacturer of the fiberglass mold for the top. The court of appeal affirmed judgment for the plaintiff, holding that the defendant's participation in the overall production enterprise as the mold-maker is sufficient to warrant imposition of strict liability (211 Cal. App. 3d 241, 251-255) .

In Bay Summit Cmty. Ass'n v. Shell Oil Co. (1996) 51 Cal. App. 4th 762, 59 Cal. Rptr. 2d 322 , plaintiffs brought an action for fraud and strict liability against a company that had supplied resin for an allegedly defective plumbing system that had been installed in their condominium complex. Although the trial court determined that the damages caused by defective fittings in the plumbing system were not made by the defendant, it instructed the jury that the company could be held strictly liable because it had been involved in marketing the plumbing system for a number of years. The jury concluded that the company had committed fraud and was thus strictly liable for damages caused by the plumbing system. The court of appeal reversed, holding that although the defendant was subject to strict liability as a result of its involvement in marketing the defective system, the trial court's jury instructions regarding the elements of strict liability were misleading. Specifically, the instruction failed to explain that the imposition of strict liability based on the marketing enterprise theory depends on whether the plaintiff can establish that (1) the defendant received a direct financial benefit from the sale of the product; (2) the defendant's role was a necessary factor in bringing the product to market; and (3) the defendant had control over, or a substantial ability to influence, the manufacturing or distribution process (51 Cal. App. 4th 762, 775) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
3. Who May Be Defendant?

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.72

§ 190.72 Supporting Contention That Defendant Is Person Who Is Subject to Strict Liability--Person Who Is Part of Overall Producing and Marketing Enterprise--Retailer

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and should be combined with a general form regarding the liability of a person who is part of the overall producing and marketing enterprise (see, e.g., § 190.71). The following may also be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities supporting the contention that defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product.]

DEFENDANT _____ [name] IS SUBJECT TO STRICT LIABILITY BECAUSE DEFENDANT IS A RETAILER AND AS SUCH IS PART OF THE OVERALL PRODUCING AND MARKETING ENTERPRISE.

Retailer Is Part of Producing and Marketing Enterprise. A retailer, like a manufacturer, is engaged in the business of distributing goods to the public, and as such is an integral part of the overall producing and marketing enterprise that should bear the cost of injuries resulting from defective products (Vandermark v. Ford Motor Co. (1964) 61 Cal. 2d 256, 262, 37 Cal. Rptr. 896, 391 P.2d 168).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a retailer is a part of the overall producing and marketing enterprise and is subject to strict liability.

These points and authorities should be combined with the points and authorities in § 190.71. These points and authorities may also be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication on the issue that defendant retailer was subject to strict liability. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, and with any other relevant points and authorities combined with this form, to show the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should show facts indicating that defendant stood in the position of a retailer and as such played a substantial role in the producing or marketing enterprise of the defective product [see, e.g., Vandermark v. Ford Motor Co. (1964) 61 Cal. 2d 256, 37 Cal. Rptr. 896, 391 P.2d 168] .

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in §§ 190.82 -190.94 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Retailer Is Part of Producing and Marketing Enterprise

The facts and procedural background of Vandermark v. Ford Motor Co. (1964) 61 Cal. 2d 256, 37 Cal. Rptr. 896, 391 P.2d 168 , are discussed in § 190.71[3][a]. In reversing the judgment and extending strict liability to retailers, the Court explained that a retailer is an integral part of the overall producing and marketing enterprise, and may often be the only member of that enterprise who is reasonably available to the injured plaintiff. Furthermore, a retailer may often play a substantial part in insuring that the product is safe, and may be in a position to exert pressure on the manufacturer to insure that the product is safe. The Court found that imposing strict liability on a retailer as well as on a manufacturer would afford maximum protection to an injured plaintiff. In addition, the Court explained that retailers and manufacturers can adjust the costs of plaintiff protection between them in the course of their continuing business relationship (61 Cal. 2d 256, 261-263) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
3. Who May Be Defendant?

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.73

§ 190.73 Supporting Contention That Defendant Is Person Who Is Subject to Strict Liability--Person Who Is Part of Overall Producing and Marketing Enterprise--Licensor of Chattel

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and should be combined with a general form regarding the liability of a person who is part of the overall producing and marketing enterprise (see, e.g., § 190.71). The following may also be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities supporting the contention that defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product.]

DEFENDANT _____ [name] IS SUBJECT TO STRICT LIABILITY BECAUSE DEFENDANT IS A LICENSOR OF CHATTELS AND AS SUCH IS PART OF THE OVERALL PRODUCING AND MARKETING ENTERPRISE.

Licensor of Chattel Is Part of Overall Producing and Marketing Enterprise and Is Subject to Strict Liability. Although a licensor of a chattel is not engaged in the distribution of a product in the same manner as a manufacturer, retailer, or lessor, a licensor does provide the chattel to the public for use by the public, and consequently plays more than a random and accidental role in the overall marketing enterprise of the product in question. Thus, a licensor of a chattel is subject to strict liability for injuries proximately caused by a defect in the licensed chattel (Garcia v. Halsett (1970) 3 Cal. App. 3d 319, 326, 82 Cal. Rptr. 420).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a licensor of chattel is a part of the overall producing and marketing enterprise and is subject to strict liability.

These points and authorities should be combined with the points and authorities in § 190.71. These points and authorities may also be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication on the issue that defendant licensor was subject to strict liability. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, and with any other relevant points and authorities combined with this form, to show the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should show facts indicating that defendant stood in the position of a licensor of a chattel and as such played a substantial role in the producing or marketing enterprise of the defective product [see, e.g., Garcia v. Halsett (1970) 3 Cal. App. 3d 319, 82 Cal. Rptr. 420 (launderette owner)].

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in §§ 190.82 -190.94 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Licensor of Chattel Is Part of Overall Producing and Marketing Enterprise and Is Subject to Strict Liability

The facts and procedural background of Garcia v. Halsett (1970) 3 Cal. App. 3d 319, 82 Cal. Rptr. 420 , are discussed in § 190.71[3][b]. In extending strict liability to the owner of a launderette who provided washing machines for use by the public, the court held that defendant was a part of a marketing chain and should bear the cost of injuries to plaintiff. The court explained that under the circumstances, plaintiff user of a licensed chattel was in an even worse position than a person who is a retail buyer, because plaintiff had no opportunity to inspect the licensed chattel as would a retail buyer, nor did plaintiff have any control over the licensed chattel. Rather, plaintiff's only choice was to pick, at random, a licensed chattel provided by defendant for use by the public (3 Cal. App. 3d 319, 325-326) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
3. Who May Be Defendant?

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.73A

§ 190.73A Supporting Contention That Defendant Is Person Who Is Subject to Strict Liability--Defendant Is Bulk Supplier of Raw Asbestos Fiber Incorporated into Finished Product

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and should be combined with a general form regarding the liability of a person who is part of the overall producing and marketing enterprise (see, e.g., § 190.71). The following may also be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities supporting the contention that defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product.]

DEFENDANT _____ [name] IS STRICTLY LIABLE FOR PLAINTIFF'S INJURIES BECAUSE A BULK SUPPLIER OF RAW ASBESTOS IS SUBJECT TO STRICT PRODUCTS LIABILITY.

Bulk Supplier of Raw Asbestos Is Subject to Strict Products Liability. A bulk supplier of raw asbestos incorporated into a finished product is subject to strict products liability to a person suffering from a disease caused by exposure to the supplier's asbestos (Garza v. Asbestos Corp. (2008) 161 Cal. App. 4th 651, 659, 74 Cal. Rptr. 3d 359 ; Arena v. Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corp. (1998) 63 Cal. App. 4th 1178, 1188-1191, 74 Cal. Rptr. 2d 580 ; Jenkins v. T&N PLC (1996) 45 Cal. App. 4th 1224, 1227-1231, 53 Cal. Rptr. 2d 642).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a supplier of raw asbestos is subject to strict liability.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with

points and authorities supporting a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication on the issue that the supplier is subject to strict liability for supplying raw asbestos fiber. The points and authorities may also be adopted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should describe how defendant's raw asbestos fibers were incorporated into the finished product, how the plaintiff was exposed to that product, and how the plaintiff was injured by defendant's raw fibers [see, e.g., Jenkins v. T&N PLC (1996) 45 Cal. App. 4th 1224, 53 Cal. Rptr. 2d 642] .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Bulk Supplier of Raw Asbestos Fiber Is Subject to Strict Products Liability

In Garza v. Asbestos Corp. (2008) 161 Cal. App. 4th 651, 74 Cal. Rptr. 3d 359 , the plaintiff was exposed to asbestos-containing cement while serving in the Navy as a boilerman. He was diagnosed with asbestos-related diseases and filed a suit against the supplier of the chrysotile asbestos used in the cement. The jury returned a special verdict in favor of the plaintiff.

The court of appeal affirmed. It rejected the defendant's argument that Arena v. Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corp., below, which held that raw asbestos is a product that may have a design defect and that strict liability can apply to the supplier of a defective raw material, was wrongly decided. Arena's holding is consistent with the law governing the liability of component manufacturers (161 Cal. App. 4th 651, 659) .

In Arena v. Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corp. (1998) 63 Cal. App. 4th 1178, 74 Cal. Rptr. 2d 580 , the plaintiff was exposed to asbestos while working in a naval shipyard. He filed a personal injury complaint against several defendants, including the company that supplied asbestos fibers to the insulating cement manufacturer. The trial court ruled in favor of the plaintiff against two defendants.

The court of appeal agreed with Jenkins v. T&N PLC, below, that suppliers of raw asbestos can be held strictly liable for harm caused by the product. Raw asbestos fibers do not change when they become a component part of another asbestos product. This fact distinguished Walker v. Stauffer Chem. Corp. (1971) 19 Cal. App. 3d 669, 96 Cal. Rptr. 803 , which refused to impose liability on a mere supplier of a standard chemical ingredient incorporated into a drain cleaning product. The fact that the design of the finished asbestos product was not the supplier's responsibility was irrelevant, because it was not the manufacturing process that created the dangerous propensity of the asbestos. The court also distinguished cases upholding the general rule of nonliabilty of ingredient suppliers. As in Walker, those cases involved ingredients such as solvents and chemicals that were substantially changed by their incorporation into finished products. Restatement (Third) of Torts: Products Liability § 5, providing that raw material sellers are not subject to liability for harm caused by defective design of the end product, was inapplicable to this case, because it was a defect in the raw asbestos itself that caused the injury. Nonetheless, the trial court erroneously failed to apply Proposition 51 to the case, requiring remand (see § 190.229[3][a], below) (63 Cal. App. 4th 1178, 1188-1191) .

In Jenkins v. T&N PLC (1996) 45 Cal. App. 4th 1224, 53 Cal. Rptr. 2d 642 , the plaintiff was exposed to asbestos dust while serving in the Navy. He worked with pipe insulation as part of his duties. After being diagnosed with mesothelioma almost 40 years later, he filed suit against several defendants, including the supplier of the raw asbestos fibers in the pipe insulation. Judgment on a special verdict in favor of the plaintiff was entered.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that as a matter of law, a bulk supplier of raw asbestos fiber incorporated into a finished product can be subject to strict products liability to a person suffering from a disease caused by the supplier's asbestos. The rule imposing liability on a component part manufacturer when the component part was defective when it left its control is applicable to component raw material incorporated into a finished consumer product. Furthermore, raw asbestos fibers can constitute a "product" for strict liability purposes (45 Cal. App. 4th 1224, 1227-1231) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
3. Who May Be Defendant?

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.74

§ 190.74 Supporting Contention That Defendant Is Person Who Is Subject to Strict Liability--Defendant Is Manufacturer of Defective Component Part

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities supporting the contention that defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product (see, e.g., §§ 190.70 -190.73, 190.75 -190.77).]

DEFENDANT, _____ [specify name], IS STRICTLY LIABLE FOR PLAINTIFF'S INJURIES CAUSED BY A DEFECT IN A COMPONENT PART MANUFACTURED BY THE DEFENDANT.

Manufacturer of Defective Component Part Is Strictly Liable for Injuries Caused by Component Part. A component part manufacturer may be held strictly liable for injuries caused by a defect if the part had a defect at the time it left the component part manufacturer's possession, and manufacturer had participated in and was responsible for testing the durability of the component part after installation in the finished product (Garza v. Asbestos Corp. (2008) 161 Cal. App. 4th 651, 659, 74 Cal. Rptr. 3d 359 ; Gonzalez v. Autoliv ASP, Inc. (2007) 154 Cal. App. 4th 780, 788, 64 Cal. Rptr. 3d 908 , Springmeyer v. Ford Motor Co., (1998) 60 Cal. App. 4th 1541, 1552-1553, 71 Cal. Rptr. 2d 190 ; Jenkins v. T&N PLC (1996) 45 Cal. App. 4th 1224, 1228, 53 Cal. Rptr. 2d 642).

Manufacturer of Windows Can Be Strictly Liable for Harm to Other Property Resulting From Defects in Window. A manufacturer of windows installed in a mass-produced home can be strictly liable for harm resulting from defects in those windows (Jimenez v. Superior Court (2002) 29 Cal. 4th 473, 481, 127 Cal. Rptr. 2d 614, 58 P.3d 450).

Component Parts Manufacturer Defense Applies Only to Generic, "Off-the-Shelf" Components. The component parts manufacturer defense applies to generic or "off-the-shelf" components, not to components which are in reality a separate product with a specific purpose and use (Tellez-Cordova v. Campbell-Hausfeld/Scott Fetzger Co. (2004) 129 Cal. App. 4th 577, 582, 28 Cal. Rptr. 3d 744 ; Springmeyer v. Ford Motor Co. (1998) 60 Cal. App. 4th 1541, 1554, 71 Cal. Rptr. 2d 190).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a manufacturer of a defective component part may be held strictly liable for injuries caused by a defect. Under these circumstances, the "component parts manufacturer" defense is inapplicable.

The form may be combined with other points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a demurrer or motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication on the issue that defendant is subject to strict liability. The form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, The component manufacturer is liable for defects that existed at the time the part left the manufacturer's possession, and when the manufacturer had participated in and was responsible for testing the durability of the component part after installation in the finished product [Springmeyer v. Ford Motor Co., (1998) 60 Cal. App. 4th 1541, 1552-1553, 71 Cal. Rptr. 2d 190] .

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case these points and authorities may be used to oppose the contention supported by the points and authorities in § 190.85.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Manufacturer of Windows Can Be Strictly Liable for Harm to Other Property Resulting From Defects in Window

In Jimenez v. Superior Court (2002) 29 Cal. 4th 473, 127 Cal. Rptr. 2d 614, 58 P.3d 450 , owners of a mass-produced home in a development brought claims alleging that defective windows caused property damage. The California Supreme Court resolved a split among the courts of appeal and held that a manufacturer of windows installed in a mass-produced home during its construction can be strictly liable in tort for harm resulting from defects in those windows.

The court explicitly rejected the window manufacturers' contention that extending strict products liability to component manufacturers like themselves would not serve the purpose of strict products liability. The policies underlying the doctrine are equally applicable to component manufacturers and suppliers. Component manufacturers are an integral part of the overall producing and marketing enterprise, may be the only member of that enterprise reasonably available to an injured plaintiff, and may be in the best position to ensure product safety. Moreover, component part manufacturers can adjust the costs of liability in the course of their continuing business relationship with other participants in the overall manufacture and marketing enterprise.

The court next rejected the manufacturers' argument that subjecting them to strict liability would be improper because they had no physical control over the windows at the time of the alleged harm. Also, the fact that the windows were assembled and installed by other parties did not change the court's analysis, because the mere assembly of a product that is sold in parts is not a "substantial change" in the product within the meaning of § 402(1)(b) of Restatement (Second) of Torts. Finally, the court was unconvinced that holding the window manufacturers subject to strict liability will "open the litigation floodgates."

The court explicitly disapproved La Jolla Village Homeowners' Assn. v. Superior Court (1989) 212 Cal. App. 3d 1131, 1144-1146 , and Casey v. Overhead Door Corp. (1999) 74 Cal. App. 4th 112, 87 Cal. Rptr. 2d 603 , to the extent they are inconsistent with the court's opinion (29 Cal. 4th 473, 479-481) .

[b] Manufacturer of Defective Component Part Is Strictly Liable for Injuries Caused by Component Part

Garza v. Asbestos Corp. (2008) 161 Cal. App. 4th 651, 74 Cal. Rptr. 3d 359 , is discussed in § 190.73A[3][a].

In Gonzalez v. Autoliv ASP, Inc. (2007) 154 Cal. App. 4th 780, 64 Cal. Rptr. 3d 908 , the plaintiff sustained injuries to her eye in an automobile accident. She brought an action against, inter alia, the manufacturer of the front airbag module, alleging that the front airbag system was defective because the airbag deployed with excessive force. The trial court granted the manufacturer's motion for summary judgment.

The court of appeal reversed. Although the manufacturer's expert opined that the airbag module deployed in accordance with its intended design, the manufacturer offered no evidence that the benefits of the design outweighed its risks, as it was required to do to meet its burden of showing the absence of a design defect. The fact that the defendant was a component part manufacturer did not change the court's conclusion. To avail itself of the component part manufacturer defense, the manufacturer would have had to show that its product--the front airbag module--was not defective. Restatement (Third) of Torts: Products Liability §§ 2(b) and (5), taken together, provided further support for the rule that a component part manufacturer may be held liable for a defect in a component (154 Cal. App. 4th 780, 788-789) .

In Springmeyer v. Ford Motor Co., (1998) 60 Cal. App. 4th 1541, 71 Cal. Rptr. 2d 190 , a mechanic was injured while working on an engine. A fan blade broke off and struck him causing severe personal injuries. The mechanic brought a products liability action against multiple defendants, including the automobile manufacturer and the manufacturer of the fan. A jury apportioned 50 percent of fault to the automobile manufacturer and 30 percent to the manufacturer of the fan.

Reversing in part because the two manufacturers were not deemed jointly liable for 80 percent of the damages awarded by the jury, the court of appeal held that the manufacturer of the fan component could not avail itself of the "component parts manufacturer" defense. Notwithstanding the arguments of the fan manufacturer, there was evidence that the manufacturer participated in and had responsibility for testing the fan in its engine environment. In addition, it was the fan that broke and not other parts of the engine, which distinguishes this case from ones involving the manufacturer of a nondefective component part. Finally, whether the fan was a generic or an off-the-shelf component was debatable. A jury could reasonably conclude that the fan was defective at the time it left the component part manufacturer's factory (60 Cal. App. 4th 1541, 1552-1553) .

Jenkins v. T&N PLC (1996) 45 Cal. App. 4th 1224, 53 Cal. Rptr. 2d 642 , is discussed in § 190.73A[3][a].

[c] Component Parts Manufacturer Defense Applies Only to Generic, "Off-the-Shelf" Components

In Tellez-Cordova v. Campbell-Hausfeld/Scott Fetzger Co. (2004) 129 Cal. App. 4th 577, 28 Cal. Rptr. 3d 744 , plaintiff became ill from exposure to airborne toxins produced by grinders, sanders, and saws manufactured by defendants. He brought a negligence and strict liability action alleging that the tools were specifically designed to be used with abrasive wheels or discs and when used for their intended purpose, breathable metallic dust was generated. The trial court held that the complaint failed to state a cause of action.

The Court of Appeal reversed. Although the defendants claimed that they supplied generic, multi-use products, the court found that the tools manufactured by defendants were specifically designed to be used with the abrasive wheels or discs for the intended purpose of grinding and sanding materials, that the wheels and discs were harmless without the power supplied by defendants' tools, and that when the tools were used for the purposed intended by defendants, harmful dust was released into the air. The policy reasons underlying the component parts defense did not apply to the instant case (e.g., defendants would not have to employ a huge variety of experts to provide warnings or incorporate safety features unnecessary for most uses, and there was no "finished product manufacturer" in a superior position to warn users). Unlike cases in which the component parts doctrine precluded liability (see § 190.85), the tools' hazard was not obvious, and the tools were designed to be used in only one "finished product" (i.e., in combination with the abrasive wheels and disc) (129 Cal. App. 4th 577, 581-584) .

Springmeyer v. Ford Motor Co. (1998) 60 Cal. App. 4th 1541, 71 Cal. Rptr. 2d 190 , is discussed in § 190.74[3][b].

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
3. Who May Be Defendant?

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.75

§ 190.75 Supporting Contention That Defendant Is Person Who Is Subject to Strict Liability--Manufacturer of Complete Product Is Strictly Liable for Defect in Component Part Supplied by Another

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities supporting the contention that defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product (see, e.g., §§ 190.70 -190.74, 190.76, 190.77).]

DEFENDANT _____ [name] IS STRICTLY LIABLE FOR PLAINTIFF'S INJURIES CAUSED BY THE _____ [describe product] MANUFACTURED BY DEFENDANT, EVEN THOUGH THE PRODUCT'S DEFECT WAS CONTAINED IN A COMPONENT PART SUPPLIED BY ANOTHER.

Manufacturer Strictly Liable Even if Defect Due to Component Part Supplied by Another. Strict liability encompasses defects regardless of their source. Thus, a manufacturer of a completed product cannot escape liability by tracing the defect to a component part supplied by another (Vandermark v. Ford Motor Co. (1964) 61 Cal. 2d 256, 261, 37 Cal. Rptr. 896, 391 P.2d 168).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a manufacturer is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries from the manufacturer's product, even though the defect in the product is due to a component part supplied to the manufacturer by another.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with

points and authorities supporting a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication on the issue that the manufacturer is strictly liable. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should show that plaintiff was injured by manufacturer's product that contained a defect in one of its component parts supplied to manufacturer by another [see, e.g., Vandermark v. Ford Motor Co. (1964) 61 Cal. 2d 256, 37 Cal. Rptr. 896, 391 P.2d 168 (defective brakes as component part of automobile)].

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in §§ 190.82 -190.94 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Manufacturer Strictly Liable Even if Defect Due to Component Part Supplied by Another

The facts and procedural background of Vandermark v. Ford Motor Co. (1964) 61 Cal. 2d 256, 37 Cal. Rptr. 896, 391 P.2d 168 , are discussed in § 190.71[3][a]. In reversing the judgment, the Court held that defendant manufacturer could be strictly liable for injuries caused by its product, even though the defect in the product could be traced to a component part supplied to manufacturer by another. The Court explained that a manufacturer is strictly liable for a defective product that it produces, regardless of the source of the defect (61 Cal. 2d 256, 261) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
3. Who May Be Defendant?

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.75A

§ 190.75A Supporting Contention That Defendant Is Person Who Is Subject to Strict Liability--Defendant Is Manufacturer of Products Which, When Used For Their Intended Purpose, Resulted in Release of Toxins

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities supporting the contention that defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product (see, e.g., §§ 190.70, 190.77).]

DEFENDANT _____ [name] IS STRICTLY LIABLE FOR PLAINTIFF'S INJURIES, BECAUSE IT MANUFACTURED PRODUCTS WHICH WERE SPECIFICALLY DESIGNED TO BE USED ONLY WITH CERTAIN EQUIPMENT, WHICH WAS HARMLESS WITHOUT THE POWER SUPPLIED BY DEFENDANT'S PRODUCTS, AND WHEN ITS PRODUCTS WERE USED FOR THE PURPOSE INTENDED BY DEFENDANT, TOXINS WERE RELEASED.

Manufacturer Strictly Liable For Product Designed For Only One Use, In Combination With Specified Equipment. A manufacturer is subject to strict liability when its product, which was specifically designed to be used only with certain equipment for one intended purpose, is used for that intended purpose and causes the generation and release of toxins from the equipment (Tellez-Cordova v. Campbell-Hausfeld/Scott Fetzger Co. (2004) 129 Cal. App. 4th 577, 583-585, 28 Cal. Rptr. 3d 744).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a manufacturer is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries from the manufacturer's product, which is defective only when used in combination with certain other products.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication on the issue that the manufacturer is strictly liable. These points and authorities may also be adopted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should show that plaintiff was injured by exposure to toxic substances released from discs, belts and wheels used on defendant's tools [see, e.g., Tellez-Cordova v. Campbell-Hausfeld/Scott Fetzger Co. (2004) 129 Cal. App. 4th 577, 28 Cal. Rptr. 3d 744] .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Manufacturer Strictly Liable For Product Designed For Only One Use, In Combination With Specified Equipment

The facts and procedural background of Tellez-Cordova v. Campbell-Hausfeld/Scott Fetzger Co. (2004) 129 Cal. App. 4th 577, 28 Cal. Rptr. 3d 744 , are discussed in § 190.74[3][c]. The defendants argued on appeal that a manufacturer has no duty to warn of defects in another party's products. This argument missed the mark of plaintiffs' complaint, which was that defendants' tools (i.e., grinders, sanders, and saws) created the toxic dust, even if the dust did not come directly from the tools, and that the tools had no function without the abrasives which disintegrated into toxic dust (129 Cal. App. 4th 577, 583-585) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
3. Who May Be Defendant?

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.76

§ 190.76 Supporting Contention That Defendant Is Person Who Is Subject to Strict Liability--Manufacturer Cannot Delegate Duty to Deliver Product to Purchaser Free From Dangerous Defects

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities supporting the contention that defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product (see, e.g., §§ 190.70 -190.75, 190.77).]

DEFENDANT MANUFACTURER, _____ [name], IS STRICTLY LIABLE EVEN THOUGH DEFENDANT DELEGATED A PART OF THE MANUFACTURING PROCESS TO A THIRD PARTY, BECAUSE A MANUFACTURER CANNOT DELEGATE ITS DUTY TO DELIVER THE PRODUCT TO THE PURCHASER FREE FROM DANGEROUS DEFECTS.

A. Manufacturer Is Strictly Liable Regardless of What Part of Manufacturing Process Was Delegated to Third Parties. Strict liability applies to the manufacturer of a completed product regardless of what part of the manufacturing process the manufacturer chooses to delegate to third parties (Vandermark v. Ford Motor Co. (1964) 61 Cal. 2d 256, 261, 37 Cal. Rptr. 896, 391 P.2d 168).

B. Manufacturer Cannot Delegate Duty to Deliver Product Free From Dangerous Defects. The manufacturer of a completed product cannot delegate its duty to have that product delivered to the ultimate purchaser free from dangerous defects (Hasson v. Ford Motor Co. (1982) 32 Cal. 3d 388, 405-406, 185 Cal. Rptr. 654, 650 P.2d 1171 ; Vandermark v. Ford Motor Co. (1964) 61 Cal. 2d 256, 261, 37 Cal. Rptr. 896, 391 P.2d 168).

[Optional] C. Manufacturer Cannot Escape Liability Because of Dealer's Act or Failure to Act. The manufacturer of a defective product cannot escape liability on the ground that the defect in the product may have been caused by something one of its authorized dealers did or failed to do (Vandermark v. Ford Motor Co. (1964) 61 Cal. 2d 256, 261, 37 Cal. Rptr. 896, 391 P.2d 168).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a manufacturer is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries from manufacturer's product regardless of what part of the manufacturing process has been delegated to another party, because a manufacturer has the nondelegable duty to deliver its product to the ultimate purchaser free from dangerous defects. These points and authorities may also be submitted in support of the contention that a manufacturer cannot escape strict liability because its dealer created the defect in the product.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication on the issue that the manufacturer is strictly liable. The points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should describe the act or task performed by the dealer that created or added to the product's defect, and describe how that act or task was part of the manufacturing process as delegated by the manufacturer [see, e.g., Vandermark v. Ford Motor Co. (1964) 61 Cal. 2d 256, 37 Cal. Rptr. 896, 391 P.2d 168 (defect in car may have been caused by something one of its authorized dealers did or failed to do)].

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in §§ 190.82 -190.94 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Manufacturer Is Strictly Liable Regardless of What Part of Manufacturing Process Was Delegated to Third Parties

The facts and procedural background of Vandermark v. Ford Motor Co. (1964) 61 Cal. 2d 256, 37 Cal. Rptr. 896, 391 P.2d 168 , are discussed in § 190.71[3][a]. In reversing the judgment, the Court held that defendant manufacturer could not escape strict liability merely because the defect in the car manufactured by defendant might have been caused by something one of the manufacturer's authorized dealers did or failed to do. Rather, the Court held that defendant manufacturer had a nondelegable duty to deliver its product to the ultimate purchaser free from dangerous defects, and would be held strictly liable for a defective product regardless of what part of the manufacturing process had been delegated to a third party (61 Cal. 2d 256, 261) .

[b] Manufacturer Cannot Delegate Duty to Deliver Product Free From Dangerous Defects

Vandermark v. Ford Motor Co. (1964) 61 Cal. 2d 256, 37 Cal. Rptr. 896, 391 P.2d 168 , is discussed in §§ 190.71[3][a] and 190.76[3][a].

Hasson v. Ford Motor Co. (1982) 32 Cal. 3d 388, 405-406, 185 Cal. Rptr. 654, 650 P.2d 1171 , is discussed in § 190.50[3][a].

[c] Manufacturer Cannot Escape Liability Because of Dealer's Act or Failure to Act

Vandermark v. Ford Motor Co. (1964) 61 Cal. 2d 256, 37 Cal. Rptr. 896, 391 P.2d 168 , is discussed in §§ 190.71[3][a] and 190.76[3][a].

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
3. Who May Be Defendant?

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.77

§ 190.77 Supporting Contention That Defendant Is Person Who Is Subject to Strict Liability--Seller Who Alters Product

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities supporting the contention that defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product (see, e.g., §§ 190.70 -190.76).]

DEFENDANT SELLER, _____ [name], IS STRICTLY LIABLE BECAUSE, BY ALTERING THE _____ [describe product], DEFENDANT IS TANTAMOUNT TO A MANUFACTURER.

Seller Who Alters Product Is Tantamount to Manufacturer. A seller who has made extensive modifications to the product it sells is tantamount to a manufacturer for purposes of strict liability (Green v. City of Los Angeles (1974) 40 Cal. App. 3d 819, 838, 115 Cal. Rptr. 685).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a seller of a product, although not its original manufacturer, is strictly liable as a manufacturer because the seller made extensive modifications to the product.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural con text in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication on the issue that the seller is subject to strict liability for altering the product. The points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should describe the modifications made to the product by defendant seller, and how those modifications related to the product's defect [see, e.g., Green v. City of Los Angeles (1974) 40 Cal. App. 3d 819, 115 Cal. Rptr. 685 (extensive modifications made by seller to crane boom)].

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in §§ 190.82 -190.94 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Seller Who Alters Product Is Tantamount to Manufacturer

In Green v. City of Los Angeles (1974) 40 Cal. App. 3d 819, 115 Cal. Rptr. 685 , a plaintiff was injured and another plaintiff's decedent was killed in an accident when a crane boom fell and struck them while they were loading a ship. Plaintiffs brought an action based in strict liability, negligence, and warranty for personal injuries and wrongful death against numerous defendants, including the seller of the crane. Defendant seller had made extensive modifications of the crane prior to its sale. The trial court entered judgment against defendants, and the other defendants were allowed indemnity from defendant seller. Defendant seller appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed on various grounds, including holding that the other defendants were entitled to indemnity from defendant seller. The court also held that because defendant seller had made extensive modifications to the crane prior to its sale, the seller was tantamount to a manufacturer and subject to strict liability. Furthermore, defendant seller's actions made its liability the primary liability subject to indemnification (40 Cal. App. 3d 819, 837-838) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Seller Who Alters Product Is Tantamount to Manufacturer

The facts and procedural background of Barrett v. Superior Court (1990) 222 Cal. App. 3d 1176, 272 Cal. Rptr. 304 , are discussed in § 190.51[3][a]. The court of appeal held that the heirs of a decedent killed by a defective product may recover on a strict products liability theory (222 Cal. App. 3d 1176, 1183-1196) . The court also rejected defendant's contention that it was a "used machinery dealer," and therefore exempt from liability under the theory of strict products liability. The court noted that the cases relied on by defendant all involved defendants who either sold used machinery without making any adjustments, repairs, or modifications to the machinery, or simply acted as auctioneers of the machinery. Moreover, in one of those cases, the court of appeal stated that it was not deciding whether the defendant might be liable under the theory of strict products liability if the defect proved is the result of subsequent modification, dilapidation, or misuse (222 Cal. App. 3d 1176, 1196) . The court noted that in this case, the defendant in its motion for summary judgment failed to produce any evidence that it was simply a dealer in used machinery, or that it was not responsible for any modification, dilapidation, or misuse that would have rendered the earth mover unreasonably unsafe for its intended use. Therefore, defendant was not entitled to summary judgment on that ground (222 Cal. App. 3d 1176, 1197) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
3. Who May Be Defendant?

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.78

§ 190.78 Supporting Contention That Defendant Is Person Who Is Subject to Strict Liability--Exception to General Rule of Successor Nonliability Applies

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities supporting the contention that defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product.]

DEFENDANT _____ [name] IS STRICTLY LIABLE BECAUSE AN EXCEPTION TO THE GENERAL RULE OF SUCCESSOR NONLIABILITY EXISTS, BECAUSE _____ [THERE IS AN EXPRESS OR IMPLIED AGREEMENT OF ASSUMPTION or THE TRANSACTION AMOUNTS TO A CONSOLIDATION OR MERGER OF THE TWO CORPORATIONS or THE PURCHASING CORPORATION IS A MERE CONTINUATION OF THE SELLER or] THE TRANSFER OF ASSETS TO THE PURCHASER WAS FOR THE FRAUDULENT PURPOSE OF ESCAPING LIABILITY FOR THE SELLER'S DEBTS].

Successor to Manufacturer May Be Strictly Liable for Defective Product if Exception to General Rule of Successor Nonliability Applies. The general rule of successor nonliability does not apply if: (1) there is an express or implied agreement of assumption; (2) the transaction amounts to a consolidation or merger of the two corporations; (3) the purchasing corporation is a mere continuation of the seller; or (4) the transfer of assets to the purchaser is for the fraudulent purpose of escaping liability for the seller's debts (Ray v. Alad Corp. (1977) 19 Cal. 3d 22, 28, 136 Cal. Rptr. 574, 560 P.2d 3 ; Fisher v. Allis-Chalmers Corp. Prod. Liab. Trust (2002) 95 Cal. App. 4th 1182, 1188-1190, 116 Cal. Rptr. 2d 310).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a successor to the original manufacturer of a defective product is strictly liable for injuries sustained from that product.

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in § 190.244 may be used to oppose the points and authorities in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Successor to Manufacturer May Be Strictly Liable for Defective Product if Exception to General Rule of Successor Nonliability Applies

Ray v. Alad Corp. (1977) 19 Cal. 3d 22, 136 Cal. Rptr. 574, 560 P.2d 3 , is discussed in § 190.79[3][a].

In Fisher v. Allis-Chalmers Corp. Prod. Liab. Trust (2002) 95 Cal. App. 4th 1182, 116 Cal. Rptr. 2d 310 , the decedent was fatally burned by hot oil expelled by a voltage regulator. The plaintiff brought a products liability claim against the manufacturer of the regulator and the purported successor in interest of the manufacturer. The trial court granted summary judgment in favor of the purported successor. The court of appeal reversed.

The purported successor had agreed to assume some of the products liability claims against the manufacturer through Subpara. 2.01C of the Transfer Agreement, which provided that the purchaser would assume "any and all claims or liabilities ... now in existence or hereafter arising from or relating to the conduct of the business ... . including but not limited to ..." The issue was whether the contractual assumption included the plaintiff's products liability claim.

The provisions of Subpara. 2.01C were not ambiguous on their face, and the phrases "any and all" and "of any kind or nature" did not exclude plaintiff's theory of products liability. Under a literal reading of Subpara. 2.01C, the purported manufacturer agreed to assume the liability represented by plaintiff's lawsuit. Thus, it was not entitled to summary judgment. However, on remand, the possibility remained that the purported successor could attack the broad assumption language contained in Subpara. 2.01C by proving that one of the exceptions contained in clauses (a)-(d) applied, or that the language of the Subpara. 2.01C was ambiguous (95 Cal. App. 4th 1182, 1188-1190) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
3. Who May Be Defendant?

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.79

§ 190.79 Supporting Contention That Defendant Is Person Who Is Subject to Strict Liability Under Product Line Theory--Successor to Manufacturer

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities supporting the contention that defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product (see, e.g., §§ 190.70 -190.77).]

DEFENDANT _____ [name] IS STRICTLY LIABLE BECAUSE DEFENDANT IS THE SUCCESSOR TO THE MANUFACTURER OF _____ [specify product].

A. Successor to Manufacturer Is Strictly Liable for Defective Product Manufactured by Original Manufacturer. A person who acquires a manufacturing business and continues the output of its line of products is strictly liable in tort for defects in units of the same product line previously manufactured and distributed by the entity from which the business was acquired when (1) a plaintiff's remedies against the original manufacturer have been virtually destroyed by the successor's acquisition, (2) the successor is able to assume the original manufacturer's risk-spreading role, and (3) the successor enjoys the original manufacturer's good will (Ray v. Alad Corp. (1977) 19 Cal. 3d 22, 31, 34, 136 Cal. Rptr. 574, 560 P.2d 3 ; Sanders v. CEG Corp. (1979) 95 Cal. App. 3d 779, 786-787, 157 Cal. Rptr. 252).

[Optional] B. *Alad Is Not Given Narrow Construction. The rule announced in Ray v. Alad Corp. (1977) 19 Cal. 3d 22, 31-34, 136 Cal. Rptr. 574, 560 P.2d 3 , imposing strict liability on a successor to the original manufacturer of a defective product, is not to be construed so narrowly as to create an exclusive exception to the general rule for successor liability permitting a similar result only in an Alad clone. It is essential to focus on the policy considerations underlying strict products liability rather than merely counting the factors mentioned in Alad and giving each equal weight (Rawlings v. D.M. Oliver, Inc. (1979) 97 Cal. App. 3d 890, 900, 159 Cal. Rptr. 119).

[Optional] C. Successor May Be Strictly Liable Even Though It Has Discontinued the Defective Product. In determining whether a successor to the original manufacturer of a defective product is strictly liable for injuries sustained from that product, it is irrelevant to consider the manner in which the successor company elects to use the good will of its predecessor in marketing its products. Instead, the focus of the determination is on the business continued by the successor manufacturer in a general sense and its ability to spread the costs of injuries sustained as a result of defective products, and not merely whether a specific line of products was discontinued (Rawlings v. D.M. Oliver, Inc. (1979) 97 Cal. App. 3d 890, 901, 159 Cal. Rptr. 119).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a successor to the original manufacturer of a defective product is strictly liable for injuries sustained from that product.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication on the issue that defendant is subject to strict liability. The points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should show facts indicating that defendant succeeded to the original manufacturer, that plaintiff has no remedy against the original manufacturer, that defendant is able to assume the original manufacturer's risk-spreading role, and that defendant is enjoying the original manufacturer's good will [see, e.g., Ray v. Alad Corp. (1977) 19 Cal. 3d 22, 31, 136 Cal. Rptr. 574, 560 P.2d 3 (successor to manufacturer of defective ladder); Rawlings v. D.M. Oliver, Inc. (1979) 97 Cal. App. 3d 890, 900, 159 Cal. Rptr. 119 (successor to manufacturer of dryer); Sanders v. CEG Corp. (1979) 95 Cal. App. 3d 779, 786-787, 157 Cal. Rptr. 252 (successor by merger to original manufacturer of hydrohammer)].

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in §§ 190.82 -190.94 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities. The points and authorities in § 190.89 specifically oppose the contentions supported by these points and authorities.

[c] Related Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in § 190.244 may be added to support the contention that a successor corporation is liable for injuries caused by a predecessor's product under a strict liability theory.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Successor to Manufacturer Is Strictly Liable for Defective Product Manufactured by Original Manufacturer

In Ray v. Alad Corp. (1977) 19 Cal. 3d 22, 136 Cal. Rptr. 574, 560 P.2d 3 , plaintiff fell from a ladder and was injured. Plaintiff brought an action in strict liability against a corporation that neither manufactured nor sold the ladder. Prior to plaintiff's injury, defendant had succeeded to the business of the ladder's manufacturer through a purchase of the manufacturer's assets for an adequate cash consideration. Defendant acquired manufacturer's plant, equipment, inventory, trade name, and good will. Defendant also continued to manufacture the same line of ladders as had the original manufacturer. Because defendant had not manufactured the ladder that injured plaintiff, however, defendant moved for summary judgment, which was granted. Plaintiff appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed the judgment, holding that under the circumstances defendant could be held strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries, and that plaintiff's claim was an exception to the general rule against imposition on a successor corporation of its predecessor's liabilities. The Court explained that justification of its imposition of strict liability rested on (1) the virtual destruction of plaintiff's remedies against the original manufacturer caused by the successor's acquisition of the business, (2) the successor's ability to assume the original manufacturer's risk-spreading role, and (3) the fairness of requiring the successor to assume a responsibility for defective products that was a burden necessarily attached to the original manufacturer's good will being enjoyed by the successor in the continued operation of the business. Thus, the Court concluded that a party that acquires a manufacturing business and continues the output of its line of products under such circumstances assumes strict tort liability for defects in units of the same product line previously manufactured and distributed by the entity from which the business was acquired (19 Cal. 3d 22, 30-34) .

In Sanders v. CEG Corp. (1979) 95 Cal. App. 3d 779, 157 Cal. Rptr. 252 , plaintiff's decedent was killed when the hydrohammer that he was operating overturned. Plaintiff brought an action for wrongful death against the successor corporation to the original manufacturer of the hydrohammer. Defendant, served in Oklahoma, moved to quash service of process for lack of jurisdiction. The trial court granted the motion, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that California had personal jurisdiction over defendant because it was the successor to the manufacturer of a defective product that was sold in California. In reaching its conclusion, the court followed Alad in holding that defendant, by merging with the original manufacturer and becoming its successor, is subject to strict liability for a defective product manufactured by the original manufacturer (95 Cal. App. 3d 779, 786-787) .

[b] Alad Is Not Given Narrow Construction

In Rawlings v. D.M. Oliver, Inc. (1979) 97 Cal. App. 3d 890, 159 Cal. Rptr. 119 , plaintiff injured her hand when a coemployee turned on a dryer that plaintiff was cleaning. Plaintiff brought an action in strict liability against the successor corporation that purchased the manufacturer. Defendant claimed that the facts of the case were distinguishable from Alad [see § 190.79[3][a]], because plaintiff was injured before the business had been sold, and because the predecessor was a sole proprietorship. Because the exact fact pattern in Alad did not exist, defendant claimed that the exception to the rule that successors are not liable for their predecessors' debts did not apply. On this ground, defendant moved for summary judgment. The trial court granted the motion, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed the summary judgment, holding that a successor to the original manufacturer could be held strictly liable for a product manufactured by the original manufacturer, even if the facts did not exactly follow the Alad facts. The court explained that Alad should not be construed narrowly, and that it is essential to focus on the policy considerations underlying strict products liability rather than merely counting the factors mentioned in Alad and giving each equal weight. The court then found that the Alad exception applied under the circumstances, and that defendant could be held strictly liable (97 Cal. App. 3d 890, 900-902) .

[c] Successor May Be Strictly Liable Even Though It Has Discontinued the Defective Product

The facts and procedural background of Rawlings v. D.M. Oliver, Inc. (1979) 97 Cal. App. 3d 890, 159 Cal. Rptr. 119 , are discussed in § 190.79[3][b]. In determining whether the Alad exception [see § 190.79[3][a]] applied, the court explained that considering the manner in which a successor uses its predecessor's good will is irrelevant. Instead, the determination should focus on the business continued by the successor manufacturer in a general sense and its ability to spread the costs of injuries sustained as a result of defective products, and not merely whether a specific line of products was discontinued (97 Cal. App. 3d 890, 901) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Successor to Manufacturer Is Strictly Liable for Defective Product Manufactured by Original Manufacturer

In Rosales v. Thermex-Thermatron, Inc. (1998) 67 Cal. App. 4th 187, 78 Cal. Rptr. 2d 861 (opinion on rehearing), a jury awarded the plaintiff damages against the successor to a manufacturer that had manufactured a defective heat sealing machine 24 years earlier. The jury found for the plaintiff. The court of appeal affirmed, finding that the elements necessary for imposing successor liability under the Alad "product-line" theory were satisfied in this case. First, the sale of the original manufacturer destroyed the plaintiff's remedies against it. Second, the successor had the ability to assume the risk-spreading role of the predecessor. Third, the successor corporation continued to benefit from the predecessor's good will, for example, by retaining its brands, and using its customer lists (67 Cal. App. 4th 187, 194-195).

[b] Alad Is Not Given Narrow Construction

In Petrini v. Mohasco Corp. (1998) 61 Cal. App. 4th 1091, 71 Cal. Rptr. 2d 910 , a trial court granted the defendant's motion for summary judgment on the ground that the defendant was not a successor-in-interest liable for injuries caused by asbestos floor tiles manufactured by the disappearing corporation in a statutory merger. At the time of the merger the disappearing-predecessor corporation was a shell with no assets. The court of appeal reversed, noting that under Alad recognizes the consolidation and merger of two corporations as a basis for imposing successor liability. In this case, out-of-state statutes governing the merger provide that the survivor assumes the liabilities of the constituent corporations. This rule applies regardless of whether the disappearing corporation brings assets to the merger, or whether the successor corporation continues its predecessor's business (61 Cal. App. 4th 1091, 1096) .

In Oliver Mach. Co. v. United States Fid. & Guar. Co. (1986) 187 Cal. App. 3d 1510, 232 Cal. Rptr. 691 , a court of appeal refused to extend the holding in Alad in the context of insurance defense, when the purchaser of a predecessor company's product contended that the successor company's insurer owed it a duty of defense. The successor company continued to manufacture a line of the predecessor's products but marketed them under its own name. It subsequently obtained liability insurance and included coverage for a particular vendor as an additional insured, for which the vendor paid the named insured, on the basis of an estimated purchase of a quantity of that particular product. The court held that coverage concerning the predecessor's products was excluded by a policy provision that stated that coverage extended only to the named insured's products. The court declined to extend what it called the "narrow exception for successor liability" under Alad, noting that under Alad, the successor corporation acquired the plant, equipment, inventory, trade name, and good will of the predecessor and gave no outward indication of any change in ownership (187 Cal. App. 3d 1510, 1517) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
3. Who May Be Defendant?

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.80

§ 190.80 Supporting Contention That Defendant Is Person Who Is Subject to Strict Liability--Identity of Actual Manufacturer Unknown--Market Share Liability

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities supporting the contention that defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product (see, e.g., § 190.50).]

EACH DEFENDANT IS STRICTLY LIABLE FOR THE PERCENTAGE OF _____ [specify product, e.g., DIETHYLSTILBESTEROL, OR DES] SOLD BY THAT DEFENDANT ON THE MARKET, EVEN THOUGH PLAINTIFF CANNOT IDENTIFY THE SPECIFIC DEFENDANT WHO ACTUALLY MANUFACTURED THE _____ [specify product, e.g., DES] THAT INJURED PLAINTIFF, BECAUSE _____ [specify product, e.g., DES] WAS MANUFACTURED FROM AN IDENTICAL FORMULA BY SEVERAL DIFFERENT MANUFACTURERS, PLAINTIFF CANNOT IDENTIFY THE SPECIFIC PRODUCT THROUGH NO FAULT OF PLAINTIFF'S OWN, AND DEFENDANTS ARE MANUFACTURERS REPRESENTING A SUBSTANTIAL SHARE OF THE MARKET OF _____ [specify product, e.g., DES].

A. Manufacturers of Substantial Share of Market Liable Under Market Share Theory. When a product has been manufactured by several different manufacturers from an identical formula, but the manufacturer of the specific product that caused plaintiff's injuries cannot be identified through no fault of plaintiff, the plaintiff may bring a products liability action against the manufacturers of a substantial share of the market of that product at the time the product was sold to the plaintiff, if plaintiff joins in the action manufacturers constituting a substantial percentage of the market (Sindell v. Abbott Labs. (1980) 26 Cal. 3d 588, 611-612, 163 Cal. Rptr. 132, 607 P.2d 924).

B. Each Defendant's Liability Proportional to Its Share of Market. Each defendant is held liable for the proportion of the judgment represented by its share of that market unless it demonstrates that it could not have made the product that caused plaintiff's injuries (Brown v. Superior Court (1988) 44 Cal. 3d 1049, 1074-1075, 245 Cal. Rptr. 412, 751 P.2d 470 ; Sindell v. Abbott Labs. (1980) 26 Cal. 3d 588, 612, 163 Cal. Rptr. 132, 607 P.2d 924).

[Optional] C. Market Share Liability Applicable to Manufacturer of Product Used for Unintended Purpose but With Manufacturer's Knowledge and Acquiescence. Market share liability is not limited to only those manufacturers whose product was used only in accord with the purpose for which it was manufactured. Rather, market share liability extends to a manufacturer who reaped a market share of the product's use, despite its production for another purpose, when that manufacturer knew or should have known that its product was being used for that other purpose, yet did nothing to prevent such use, thereby acquiescing in such use and claiming for itself a share of the market (Miles Labs., Inc. v. Superior Court (1982) 133 Cal. App. 3d 587, 595-596, 184 Cal. Rptr. 98).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that the manufacturers of a substantial share of the market of a product may be held liable in a products liability action, each manufacturer being held liable for its percentage of the market of the product, even though the identity of the actual manufacturer of the product that injured plaintiff cannot specifically be identified. Counsel may also contend that a manufacturer is liable under the market share theory, even though that manufacturer produced the product for a purpose other than the one for which it was used, if that manufacturer knew of and acquiesced to that unintended use [see optional Paragraph C].

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication on the issue that the manufacturers are strictly liable. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should describe the product and its formula, show that the same formula was generally used by the manufacturers of the product, show that the manufacturers joined in the action represent a substantial share of the market of that product at the time it was sold, and explain why plaintiff, through no fault of his or her own, cannot identify the specific manufacturer of the product that injured plaintiff [see, e.g., Sindell v. Abbott Labs. (1980) 26 Cal. 3d 588, 611-612, 163 Cal. Rptr. 132, 607 P.2d 924 (DES manufactured from identical formula by 90 percent of joined defendants; years had passed since plaintiff's mother had ingested DES, and no records had been kept indicating specific manufacturer)].

[b] Causes of Action Under Market Share Theory

Although Sindell was brought under several theories of liability, including negligence, strict liability, and breach of warranty, and the market share concept was alleged as a separate cause of action, the California Supreme Court limited the permissible causes of action under the market share theory in Brown v. Superior Court (1988) 44 Cal. 3d 1049, 245 Cal. Rptr. 412, 751 P.2d 470 [see § 190.90[3][a]]. The Court in Brown held that a manufacturer of prescription drugs is not strictly liable for injuries caused by a design defect that was neither known nor knowable at the time the drug was distributed, and that it can be held liable in strict liability only for failing to warn of known or knowable defects, or failure to provide the proper packaging [Brown v. Superior Court (1988) 44 Cal. 3d 1049, 1069, 245 Cal. Rptr. 412, 751 P.2d 470] . Consequently, there is no strict liability cause of action under the market share theory for defective design under Barker v. Lull Eng'g Co. (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 413, 143 Cal. Rptr. 225, 573 P.2d 443 [Brown v. Superior Court (1988) 44 Cal. 3d 1049, 1065, 245 Cal. Rptr. 412, 751 P.2d 470] .

Furthermore, the Court in Brown held that a plaintiff in a market share action may not prosecute a cause of action for fraud or breach of warranty. The Court cited problems of proof on a fraud claim, and the inconsistency of a warranty claim with its holding regarding strict liability [Brown v. Superior Court (1988) 44 Cal. 3d 1049, 1069-1072, 245 Cal. Rptr. 412, 751 P.2d 470 ; see § 190.90[3][a]]. It therefore seems that the plaintiff in a market theory action is limited to a cause of action in strict liability, confined to issues of proper warning or packaging.

[c] Related Points and Authorities

For forms of memoranda supporting a concurrent causes or concert of action theory, see Ch. 165, Negligence .

[d] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in §§ 190.86 and 190.87 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Manufacturers of Substantial Share of Market Liable Under Market Share Theory

In Sindell v. Abbott Labs. (1980) 26 Cal. 3d 588, 163 Cal. Rptr. 132, 607 P.2d 924 , plaintiff developed cancer later in life as a result of the ingestion of diethylstilbesterol (DES) by her mother during her pregnancy with plaintiff for the purpose of preventing miscarriage. In 1971, the Food and Drug Administration ordered DES removed from the market. Plaintiff brought a class action suit against eleven drug companies that had manufactured DES. Because many years had elapsed between the time the drug was taken and the manifestation of plaintiff's injuries, plaintiff was unable to specifically identify which of the defendants was the manufacturer of the DES actually ingested by her mother.

The complaint stated causes of action in negligence, strict liability, violation of express and implied warranties, false and fraudulent representations, misbranding of drugs in violation of federal law, conspiracy, and "lack of consent." A separate cause of action alleged that defendants were jointly liable regardless of which particular brand of DES was ingested by plaintiff's mother, because defendants collaborated in marketing, promoting, and testing the drug, relied on each other's tests, and adhered to an industry-wide safety standard. Plaintiff alleged that DES was produced from a common and mutually agreed-on formula as a fungible drug interchangeable with other brands of the same product, that defendants knew or should have known that it was customary for doctors to prescribe the drug by its generic rather than its brand name, and that pharmacists filled prescriptions from whatever brand of the drug that happened to be in stock. Defendants demurred to the complaint, which was sustained without leave to amend. Plaintiff appealed with regard to five of the named defendants.

The Supreme Court reversed, holding that a new concept was warranted under which plaintiff could state a cause of action by shifting the burden of proof of responsibility to defendants. The Court set forth the market share theory, holding that when all defendants produced a drug from an identical formula, and the plaintiff cannot identify the manufacturer of the specific product through no fault of plaintiff's, the plaintiff may state a cause of action by joining the manufacturers of a substantial share of the market (611-612). The Court considered application of Summers v. Tice (1943) 33 Cal. 2d 80, 199 P.2d 1 [see Ch. 165, Negligence], in which plaintiff was injured when two hunters negligently shot in his direction, and the Court held that under those or similar circumstances, the burden of proving responsibility shifts to the defendants because they are in a better position to offer evidence to determine which one caused the injury (26 Cal. 3d 588, 599) . However, application of Summers would be inappropriate to shift the burden of proof of causation to defendants in this case because there is a possibility that none of the named defendants produced the particular drug, and that the responsible manufacturer would escape liability (26 Cal. 3d 588, 611) . Rather, the Court approached the issue of causation from a different perspective. The Court found it reasonable to measure the likelihood that any of the defendants supplied the product that allegedly injured plaintiff by the percentage that the DES sold by each of them bears to the entire production of the drug sold by all for that purpose. According to plaintiff's briefs, one named company and five or six others produced 90 percent of the DES marketed. The Court noted that if that fact were proved at trial, there is a corresponding likelihood that that comparative handful of producers manufactured the DES that caused plaintiff's injuries, and only a 10 percent likelihood that the offending producer would escape liability. It stated that if plaintiff joins in the action the manufacturers of a substantial share of the DES that her mother might have taken, the injustice of shifting the burden of proof to defendants to demonstrate that they could not have made the substance that injured plaintiff is significantly diminished. Although 75 to 80 percent of the market was suggested as a requirement, the Court held only that a "substantial percentage" is required (26 Cal. 3d 588, 611-612) . The presence in the action of a substantial share of the appropriate market also provides a ready means to apportion damages among the defendants. Each defendant will be held liable for the proportion of the judgment represented by its share of that market unless it demonstrates that it could not have made the product that caused plaintiff's injuries. Under this approach, each manufacturer's liability would approximate its responsibility for the injuries caused by its own products. The Court noted that some minor discrepancy in the correlation between market share and liability is inevitable, and that a defendant may possibly be held liable for a somewhat different percentage of the damage than its share of the appropriate market would justify. It is probably impossible, with the passage of time, to determine market share with mathematical exactitude. However, the Court decided that the difficulty of apportioning damages among the defendant producers in exact relation to their market share does not seriously militate against that rule (26 Cal. 3d 588, 612-613) . The Court noted that there are practical problems involved in defining the market and determining market share, but stated that these are largely matters of proof that cannot properly be determined at the pleading stage of proceedings. The Court rejected defendants' contention that liability in the absence of proof of responsibility for the injury would be unfair and contrary to public policy, holding that each manufacturer's liability for an injury would be approximately equivalent to the damage caused by the DES it manufactured (26 Cal. 3d 588, 613) .

[b] Each Defendant's Liability Proportional to Its Share of Market

The facts and procedural background of Brown v. Superior Court (1988) 44 Cal. 3d 1049, 245 Cal. Rptr. 412, 751 P.2d 470 , are discussed in 190.88[3][a]. The Court held that imposition of joint liability on defendants in a market share action would be inconsistent with the rationale underlying the market share doctrine, because it would allow any defendant to be held responsible for the entire judgment even though its market share may have been comparatively insignificant. Liability would be measured not by the likelihood of responsibility for the plaintiff's injuries but by the financial ability of a defendant to undertake payment of the entire judgment or a large portion of it. A defendant that paid a larger percentage of the judgment than warranted by its market share would have the burden of seeking indemnity from other defendants, and it would bear the loss if producers of DES that might have been held liable in the action were not amenable to suit, or if a codefendant was bankrupt. Therefore, the imposition of joint liability among defendant manufacturers in a market share action would frustrate Sindell's goal of achieving a balance between the interests of DES plaintiffs and manufacturers of the drug (44 Cal. 3d 1049, 1075) .

Sindell v. Abbott Labs. (1980) 26 Cal. 3d 588, 163 Cal. Rptr. 132, 607 P.2d 924 , is discussed in § 190.80[3][a]. The Court held that in the application of the market share theory, each defendant will be held liable for the proportion of the judgment represented by its share of that market unless it demonstrates that it could not have made the product that caused plaintiff's injuries (26 Cal. 3d 588, 612) .

[c] Market Share Liability Applicable to Manufacturer of Product Used for Unintended Purpose but With Manufacturer's Knowledge and Acquiescence

In Miles Labs., Inc. v. Superior Court (1982) 133 Cal. App. 3d 587, 184 Cal. Rptr. 98 , plaintiff's mother had ingested diethylstilbesterol (DES) while pregnant with plaintiff. As a result, plaintiff later was required to have her reproductive organs surgically removed. Plaintiff brought an action based in strict liability against numerous manufacturers of DES. One of the manufacturers moved for summary judgment, claiming that it had only manufactured and marketed DES for use in treating prostate cancer in males, not for use to prevent miscarriages. The trial court denied the motion, and that defendant sought a writ of mandate.

The court of appeal denied the petition, holding that the declaration in support of the motion was inadmissible and failed to establish that defendant's product was not prescribed by physicians for use to prevent miscarriages. Further, the court held that the declaration missed the point of plaintiff's allegation that defendant knew or should have known that its drug was being prescribed to prevent miscarriages, that defendant did nothing to prevent that use, and that by acquiescing in that use defendant had claimed for itself a share of the market (133 Cal. App. 3d 587, 593-596) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
3. Who May Be Defendant?

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.80A

§ 190.80A Supporting Contention That Defendant Is Person Who Is Subject to Products Liability--Immunity Statute Applied to Tobacco Only During Ten-Year Period

[1] Form Supporting Contention That Defendant Is Person Who Is Subject to Products Liability--Immunity Statute Applied to Tobacco Only During Ten-Year Period

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities supporting the contention that defendant is liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product.]

DEFENDANT _____ [specify manufacturer] IS LIABLE FOR PLAINTIFF'S INJURIES BECAUSE THE IMMUNITY STATUTE, CIVIL CODE SECTION 1714.45, SHIELDS TOBACCO COMPANIES IN PRODUCTS LIABILITY ACTIONS ONLY FOR CONDUCT THEY ENGAGED IN FROM JANUARY 1, 1988, THROUGH DECEMBER 31, 1997.

A. Tobacco Companies' Conduct Outside Statutory Immunity Period Is Determined by General Tort Principles. Amendments to Civil Code Section 1714.45 restored general tort principles that had governed liability of tobacco companies before the former version of that statute, and tobacco companies are not shielded from liability for conduct before and after the 10-year immunity period between January 1, 1988, and December 31, 1997 (Naegele v. R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. (2002) 28 Cal. 4th 856, 867, 123 Cal. Rptr. 2d 61, 50 P.3d 769 ; Myers v. Philip Morris Co. (2002) 28 Cal. 4th 828, 841-848, 123 Cal. Rptr. 2d 40, 50 P.3d 751 ; Boeken v. Philip Morris Inc. (2005) 127 Cal. App. 4th 1640, 1670, 26 Cal. Rptr. 3d 638).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a cigarette manufacturer is liable under general tort principles for its conduct before January 1, 1988, and after December 31, 1997.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

NOTE:
Former Civ. Code § 1714.45(a) included tobacco among the common consumer products immunized from most products liability claims. Civ. Code § 1714.45 was amended effective January 1, 1998, so that tobacco is no longer included in its list of "inherently unsafe" products. Amended § 1714.45(b) also expressly provides that it does not exempt the manufacture or sale of tobacco products by tobacco manufacturers and their successors in interests from products liability actions.

[a] Tobacco Companies' Conduct Outside Statutory Immunity Period Is Determined by General Tort Principles

Naegele v. R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. (2002) 28 Cal. 4th 856, 123 Cal. Rptr. 2d 61, 50 P.3d 769 , is discussed in § 190.81[3][a].

In Myers v. Philip Morris Co. (2002) 28 Cal. 4th 828, 123 Cal. Rptr. 2d 40, 50 P.3d 751 , the plaintiff, who smoked from 1956 to 1997 and lived in smoke-filled environments until August 1998, was diagnosed with lung cancer in April 1998. The Ninth Circuit certified to the California Supreme Court a question asking whether amended Civ. Code § 1714.45 applies to a claim that accrued after the effective date but which is based on conduct that occurred prior to the effective date. Applying the presumption against retroactivity of a statute, the California Supreme Court concluded that the repeal statute is prospective only, and that the immunity statute continues to shield tobacco companies in products liability actions for conduct they engaged in during the ten-year period ending January 1, 1998. Neither the language of § 1714.45(f) nor its legislative history constituted "clear indication" that the repeal statute was to apply retroactively, and constitutional considerations also reinforced the Court's construction of the statute as prospective only. As for the tobacco companies' conduct before the immunity period, however, liability must be determined by applying general tort principles. Although the repeal statute has no retroactive effect, it nonetheless removed the protection that the immunity statute conferred on tobacco companies for their conduct occurring before the immunity statute's effective date. A retroactive effect is one that impairs rights that a party possessed when he or she acted, and the repeal statute did not did not impair any rights that the tobacco companies possessed before the immunity period. On the contrary, by abrogating the immunity statute, the repeal statute restored the law governing products liability for tobacco products to what it had been before January 1, 1998 (28 Cal. 4th 828, 841-848) .

Boeken v. Philip Morris Inc. (2005) 127 Cal. App. 4th 1640, 26 Cal. Rptr. 3d 638 , is discussed in § 190.81[3][a].

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
3. Who May Be Defendant?

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.81

§ 190.81 Supporting Contention That Defendant Is Person Who Is Subject to Products Liability--Cigarette Manufacturer Manipulated Addictive Properties of Cigarettes Via Additives

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities supporting the contention that defendant is liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product.]

DEFENDANT _____ [specify manufacturer] IS LIABLE FOR PLAINTIFF'S INJURIES BECAUSE BETWEEN JANUARY 1, 1988, AND JANUARY 1, 1998, IT MANIPULATED THE ADDICTIVE PROPERTIES OF ITS CIGARETTES BY _____ [describe manipulation, e.g., ADDING AMMONIA TO THE NICOTINE DELIVERY SYSTEM], THEREBY INCREASING ADDICTION AND DEPENDENCE AND EXPOSING PLAINTIFF TO A RISK OTHER THAN THOSE INHERENT IN ITS TOBACCO PRODUCT.

Immunity Statute's Protection Does Not Extend to Allegations that Tobacco Companies Used Additives that Exposed Smokers to Dangers Beyond Those Commonly Associated With Cigarette Smoking. The immunity statute, former Civ. Code § 1714.45(a), does not bar claims that tobacco companies manipulated the addictive properties of cigarettes via additives and controlled nicotine delivery through adding ammonia (Naegele v. R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. (2002) 28 Cal. 4th 856, 862-867, 123 Cal. Rptr. 2d 61, 50 P.3d 769 ; Boeken v. Philip Morris Inc. (2005) 127 Cal. App. 4th 1640, 1670, 26 Cal. Rptr. 3d 638, 662) .

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a cigarette manufacturer is liable for exposing the plaintiff to a risk other than those inherent in its product between January 1, 1988 and January 1, 1998.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

NOTE:
Former Civ. Code § 1714.45(a) included tobacco among the common consumer products immunized from most products liability claims. Civ. Code § 1714.45 was amended effective January 1, 1998, so that tobacco is no longer included in its list of "inherently unsafe" products. Amended § 1714.45(b) also expressly provides that it does not exempt the manufacture or sale of tobacco products by tobacco manufacturers and their successors in interests from products liability actions.

[a] Immunity Statute's Protection Does Not Extend to Allegations that Tobacco Companies Used Additives that Exposed Smokers to Dangers Beyond Those Commonly Associated With Cigarette Smoking

In Naegele v. R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. (2002) 28 Cal. 4th 856, 123 Cal. Rptr. 2d 61, 50 P.3d 769 , the court addressed what forms of conduct during the 10-year immunity period fall within the protection conferred by the immunity statute. The court concluded that the statute's protection does not extend to allegations that the tobacco companies used additives that exposed smokers to dangers beyond those commonly known to be associated with cigarette smoking. Looking to the history and purpose of the immunity statute, the court found that it was intended to protect tobacco companies from liability for products containing pure and unadulterated tobacco, when the claim seeks damages for injuries or deaths resulting from risks that are commonly known to be inherent in tobacco products. Thus, the immunity statute did not bar claims that the defendants manipulated the addictive properties of cigarettes via additives and controlled nicotine delivery through adding ammonia. However, allegations that the defendants increased the nicotine content of their cigarettes through blended or high-nicotine tobacco, and lied about the addictive nature of smoking, fell squarely within the reach of the immunity statute (28 Cal. 4th 856, 862-867) .

In Boeken v. Philip Morris Inc. (2005) 127 Cal. App. 4th 1640, 26 Cal. Rptr. 3d 638 , the plaintiff began smoking the defendant's cigarettes in 1957 and was diagnosed with lung cancer in 1999. He filed suit in 2000, alleging negligence, strict products liability, and fraud. The jury determined that the cigarettes were defective either in design or failure to warn. On appeal, the manufacturer argued that the trial court erred in instructing the jury with BAJI No. 9.00.5 instead of 9.00.6, which was derived from the former version of Civ. Code § 1714.45. Before the defendant filed its reply brief, Naegele and Myers were published. In its supplemental opening brief, the defendant claimed that it had requested a jury instruction that would have limited its liability for any wrongs committed during the 10-year immunity period (proposed special instruction "O"). However, the court of appeal was unable to find in the record any ruling by the trial court rejecting this instruction. The inference from the record was that the defendant's proposed instructions was either withdrawn or never proffered to the court.

The court of appeal further noted that proposed instruction "O" was incomplete because it did not incorporate the term "unadulterated" within its language. It rejected the defendant's argument that the omission was so minor that the trial court was required to modify the instruction. There was ample evidence that the defendnat incorporated additives that not only increased the risk of harm from nicotine, but also created harmful effects not inherent in smoking unadulterated tobacco, and that these additives contributed to the plaintiff's lung cancer. Thus, even if the defendant did not withdraw proposed instruction "O," and the trial court did refuse to give it, the trial court did not err (127 Cal. App. 4th 1640, 1670) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
3. Who May Be Defendant?

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.81A

§ 190.81A Supporting Contention That Defendant Is Person Who Is Not Subject to Strict Liability--Concert of Action Not Applicable

[1] FORM Supporting Contention That Defendant Is Person Who Is Not Subject to Strict Liability--Concert of Action Not Applicable

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities supporting the contention that defendant is not strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by a product.]

DEFENDANT _____ [name] IS NOT SUBJECT TO STRICT LIABILITY UNDER THE CONCERT OF ACTION THEORY BECAUSE DEFENDANT _____ [name] PLAYED NO ROLE IN THE DESIGN, MANUFACTURE, DISTRIBUTION, OR SALE OF _____ [specify product].

A. Allegations Regarding Defendants' Inadequate Testing and Warnings and Their Reliance on Each Others' Marketing Techniques Do Not Establish Concert of Action. Allegations that two or more defendants failed to test their product adequately or to warn of its dangers, relied on tests performed by each other, and took advantage of each others' promotional and marketing techniques, do not establish concert of action liability (Sindell v. Abbott Labs. (1980) 26 Cal. 3d 588, 605, 163 Cal. Rptr. 132, 607 P.2d 924).

B. Concert of Action Is Limited to Conduct by Small Number of Individuals and Injury to Single Plaintiff, With Substantial Involvement by Defendant. Application of the concert of action doctrine is limited to conduct by a small number of individuals whose actions resulted in a tort against a single plaintiff, usually over a short span of time, and to a defendant that either directly participated in the acts that caused the damage, or encouraged or assisted the person that directly caused the injuries by participating in a joint activity (Sindell v. Abbott Labs. (1980) 26 Cal. 3d 588, 605, 163 Cal. Rptr. 132, 607 P.2d 924 ; Chavers v. Gatke Corp. (2003) 107 Cal. App. 4th 606, 615-616, 131 Cal. Rptr. 2d 198).

C. Application of Concert of Action to Common Industry Situations Would Expand Doctrine Beyond Its

Intended Scope. Application of the concert of action doctrine to common industry practices would expand the doctrine beyond its intended scope, subjecting virtually any manufacturer to liability for the defective products of an entire industry, even if that manufacturer did not make the injury-causing product (Sindell v. Abbott Labs. (1980) 26 Cal. 3d 588, 605, 163 Cal. Rptr. 132, 607 P.2d 924 ; Cadlo v. Owens-Ill., Inc. (2004) 125 Cal. App. 4th 513, 522, 23 Cal. Rptr. 3d 1 , modified, 2004 Cal. App. LEXIS 2260).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that the defendant is not subject to liability in a products liability action under the concert of action theory, because the defendant played no role in the design, manufacture, distribution, or sale of the offending product.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a demurrer or a motion for summary judgment on the issue that the defendant may not be subjected to strict liability.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should set forth the facts indicating that the defendant's connection to the product, if any, was limited to relying on other manufacturers' or suppliers' testing and promotion methods [see, e.g., Sindell v. Abbott Labs. (1980) 26 Cal. 3d 588, 605, 163 Cal. Rptr. 132, 607 P.2d 924] .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Allegations Regarding Defendants' Inadequate Testing and Warnings and Their Reliance on Each Others' Marketing Techniques Do Not Establish Concert of Action

In Sindell v. Abbott Labs. (1980) 26 Cal. 3d 588, 163 Cal. Rptr. 132, 607 P.2d 924 , the plaintiff brought an action against 11 drug companies that were engaged in the business of manufacturing, promoting, and marketing DES between 1941 and 1971. The trial court dismissed the action on the ground that the plaintiff did not, and stated that she could not, identify which defendant had manufactured the drug responsible for her injuries. One of the theories on which the plaintiff relied was concert of action [see Restatement (Second) of Torts § 876]. Concert of action requires a common design by two or more tortfeasors to commit a tortious act. The theory may be used to impose liability on a person who did not personally cause harm to the plaintiff, but whose advice or encouragement to act operated as moral support to a tortfeasor. If the act encouraged is known to be tortious, it has the same effect on the liability of the adviser as participation or physical assistance. If the encouragement or assistance is a substantial factor in causing the resulting tort, the one giving it is also a tortfeasor and is responsible for the consequences of the other's act [see Restatement (Second) of Torts § 876].

The California Supreme Court rejected application of concert of action liability. It held that allegations that the defendants failed to adequately test the drug or to give sufficient warning of its dangers and that they relied on the tests performed by one another and took advantage of each others' promotional techniques were insufficient to satisfy the requirements of the theory. The Court noted that this sort of conduct is common practice in industry, and held that application of the concert of action theory to this situation would render virtually any manufacturer liable for the defective products of an entire industry. The Court also noted that cases supporting application of concert of action usually involved conduct by a small number of individuals whose actions resulted in a tort against a single plaintiff, usually over a short span of time (26 Cal. 3d 588, 605) .

[b] Concert of Action Is Limited to Conduct by Small Number of Individuals and Injury to Single Plaintiff, With Substantial Involvement By Defendant

Sindell v. Abbott Labs. (1980) 26 Cal. 3d 588, 605, 163 Cal. Rptr. 132, 607 P.2d 924 , is discussed in § 190.81A[3][a].

In Chavers v. Gatke Corp. (2003) 107 Cal. App. 4th 606, 131 Cal. Rptr. 2d 198 , the plaintiff contended that his mesothelioma was caused by inhalation of asbestos particles while repairing friction brakes over the course of several years. The plaintiff was unable to prove that he had ever worked with brake shoes manufactured by the defendant. Nevertheless, he contended that the defendant was liable under the concert of action theory, because in the 1930s the defendant had contributed to financing a private research laboratory to study the health effects of asbestos. The laboratory eventually reported the hazards of asbestos to its manufacturers, but the information was not made public for many years. The court of appeal held that as a matter of law, the trial court did not err in refusing to instruct on the concert of action theory. Applying concert of action to these sorts of industrywide circumstances would expand the doctrine far beyond its intended scope, and would render virtually any manufacturer liable for the defective products of an entire industry. The court also expressed its constitutional concerns over application of the concert of action theory, pointing out that requiring a manufacturer to stand trial predicated solely on its exercise of its First Amendment rights could have a chilling effect on participation in trade group activity (107 Cal. App. 4th 606, 615-616) .

[c] Application of Concert of Action to Common Industry Situations Would Expand Doctrine Beyond Its Intended Scope

Sindell v. Abbott Labs. (1980) 26 Cal. 3d 588, 605, 163 Cal. Rptr. 132, 607 P.2d 924 , is discussed in § 190.81A[3][a].

In Cadlo v. Owens-Ill., Inc*. (2004) 125 Cal. App. 4th 513, 23 Cal. Rptr. 3d 1 , modified, 2004 Cal. App. LEXIS 2260* , the plaintiff, while serving in the U.S. Navy, was exposed to asbestos insulation, some of which may have been Kaylo. Any Kaylo to which he was exposed was manufactured by Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corp. (OCF), which had purchased the defendant's Kaylo division seven years before the plaintiff's first exposure. The trial court sustained the defendant's demurrer to plaintiff's concert of action cause of action, and the court of appeal affirmed. Allegations that OCF, with the defendant's approval and assistance, marketed the product by falsely representing its safe use and concealing its hazards, did not support a concert of action cause of action, because the plaintiff's injuries were not caused by any asbestos-containing material manufactured by the defendant, and because the plaintiff did not allege that the defendant continued to encourage its successor to make false representations about the product (125 Cal. App. 4th 513, 522) .

46 of 179 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
3. Who May Be Defendant?

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.82

§ 190.82 Opposing Contention That Defendant Is Person Who Is Subject to Strict Liability--Defendant Played Random and Accidental Role in Distribution of Product

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities opposing the contention that defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product (see, e.g., § 190.84).]

DEFENDANT _____ [name] IS NOT SUBJECT TO STRICT LIABILITY BECAUSE DEFENDANT PLAYED ONLY A RANDOM AND ACCIDENTAL ROLE IN THE DISTRIBUTION OF _____ [specify product].

A. Strict Liability Does Not Apply to Person Who Plays Random and Accidental Role in Distribution of Product. Strict liability may not be imposed against a person who plays a random and accidental role in the distribution of a product (Tauber-Arons Auctioneers Co. v. Superior Court (1980) 101 Cal. App. 3d 268, 277, 284, 161 Cal. Rptr. 789).

[Optional] B. Auctioneer Plays Random and Accidental Role in Distribution of Product and Is Not Strictly Liable. In auctioning a product that he or she has not modified, altered, inspected, tested, or operated, an auctioneer plays only a random and accidental role in the distribution of that product and may not be held strictly liable for injuries caused by that product (Brejcha v. Wilson Mach., Inc. (1984) 160 Cal. App. 3d 630, 637-640, 206 Cal. Rptr. 688 ; Tauber-Arons Auctioneers Co. v. Superior Court (1980) 101 Cal. App. 3d 268, 277, 284, 161 Cal. Rptr. 789).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a defendant is subject to a products liability action. The ground of opposition set forth is that defendant, as an auctioneer or any other person of similar or parallel stance, played only a random and accidental role in the distribution of the product, and as such is not subject to strict liability.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a demurrer or a motion for summary judgment on the issue that defendant may not be subjected to strict liability.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should set forth the factors indicating that defendant's role in the production or distribution chain was merely random and accidental rather than substantial [see, e.g., Tauber-Arons Auctioneers Co. v. Superior Court (1980) 101 Cal. App. 3d 268, 161 Cal. Rptr. 789 (auctioneer plays random and accidental role)].

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contentions supported by the points and authorities in §§ 190.70 -190.79.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Strict Liability Does Not Apply to Person Who Plays Random and Accidental Role in Distribution of Product

In Tauber-Arons Auctioneers Co. v. Superior Court (1980) 101 Cal. App. 3d 268, 161 Cal. Rptr. 789 , plaintiff was injured while operating a planer. Plaintiff brought an action in strict liability against the auctioneer who had sold the planer. Plaintiff moved for a ruling that defendant auctioneer was a seller subject to strict liability. The trial court entered an order determining that the issue was without substantial controversy, and defendant auctioneer sought a writ of mandate.

The court of appeal issued a peremptory writ of mandate directing the trial court to vacate its order and to enter an order denying plaintiff's motion. The court held that an auctioneer, as a matter of public policy, should not be strictly liable for a design defect created by the original manufacturer of an item that is auctioned. The court reasoned that because defendant auctioneer had only played a random and accidental role in the distribution of the planer, auctioneer could not be subject to strict liability (101 Cal. App. 3d 268, 273-284) .

[b] Auctioneer Plays Random and Accidental Role in Distribution of Product and Is Not Strictly Liable

In Brejcha v. Wilson Mach., Inc. (1984) 160 Cal. App. 3d 630, 206 Cal. Rptr. 688 , plaintiff was injured while operating a rolling machine purchased from defendant at an auction. Plaintiff brought an action in strict liability, negligence, and warranty against defendant auctioneer. Defendant moved for summary judgment, which was granted by the trial court. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that defendant was not subject to liability on any of the three theories set forth by plaintiff. In regard to the strict liability cause of action, the court held that, as a matter of law, defendant could not be held liable because defendant had sold the product at auction without warranty and "as is, where is," meaning that the item had not been modified, altered, inspected, tested, or operated by the auctioneer. As such, defendant auctioneer had only played a random and accidental role in the distribution of the product and could not be held strictly liable for injuries caused by the product (160 Cal. App. 3d 630, 637-640) .

Tauber-Arons Auctioneers Co. v. Superior Court (1980) 101 Cal. App. 3d 268, 161 Cal. Rptr. 789 , is discussed in § 190.82[3][a].

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
3. Who May Be Defendant?

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.83

§ 190.83 Opposing Contention That Defendant Is Person Who Is Subject to Strict Liability--Defendant Played No Role in Design, Manufacture, Distribution, or Marketing of Product

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities opposing the contention that defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by a defective product (see, e.g., § 190.82).]

DEFENDANT _____ [name] IS NOT SUBJECT TO STRICT LIABILITY BECAUSE DEFENDANT PLAYED NO ROLE IN THE DESIGN, MANUFACTURE, DISTRIBUTION, OR MARKETING OF THE PRODUCT THAT INJURED PLAINTIFF.

[or]

DEFENDANT _____ [name] IS NOT SUBJECT TO STRICT LIABILITY BECAUSE DEFENDANT WAS NOT PART OF THE CHAIN OF DISTRIBUTION OF THE ALLEGEDLY DEFECTIVE PRODUCT.

A. Defendant Played No Role In Design, Manufacture, Distribution, Or Marketing of Product That Injured Plaintiff. To hold a defendant liable for injuries caused by a product, the plaintiff must show, at least, that the plaintiff was exposed to the defendant's product (Cadlo v. Owens-Ill., Inc. (2004) 125 Cal. App. 4th 513, 521-522, 23 Cal. Rptr. 3d 1).

B. Defendant's Historic Role in Development of Product Did Not Provide Basis for Products Liability Claims Against It. A defendant's historic role in the design, manufacture, and marketing of an asbestos product does not support a plaintiff's liability claims against it in the absence of any allegation or evidence that defendant had actual connection with the design, manufacture, or distribution of the asbestos product to which the plaintiff was exposed (Cadlo v. Owens-Ill., Inc. (2004) 125 Cal. App. 4th 513, 521-522, 23 Cal. Rptr. 3d 1).

C. Defendant Who Was Not Part of Product's Chain of Distribution Cannot Be Held Strictly Liable. A defendant cannot be held strictly liable if it was not part of the chain of distribution of the allegedly defective product that injured the plaintiff (*Taylor v. Elliott Turbomachinery Co. (2009) 171 Cal. App. 4th 564, 2009 Cal. App. LEXIS 214, at 24) .

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a defendant is subject to a products liability action. The ground of opposition set forth is that the defendant had no connection with the design, manufacture, or distribution of the product to which the plaintiff was exposed.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a demurrer or a motion for summary judgment on the issue that defendant may not be subjected to strict liability.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should set forth facts showing that the product that caused the plaintiff's injuries was not manufactured, designed, or distributed by the defendant because the plaintiff's first contact with the allegedly defective product occurred several years after the defendant sold the product line or otherwise ceased all affiliation with the product.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Defendant Played No Role In Design, Manufacture, Distribution, Or Marketing of Product That Injured Plaintiff

In Cadlo v. Owens-Ill., Inc. (2004) 125 Cal. App. 4th 513, 521-522, 23 Cal. Rptr. 3d 1 (2004) , the defendant developed the asbestos product Kaylo in the 1930s and sold its Kaylo division to OCF in 1958. The plaintiff was first exposed to Kaylo in 1965, seven years after the defendant had ceased all affiliation with Kaylo. Any Kaylo with which the plaintiff came into contact was manufactured by OCF, not by the defendant. The plaintiff was diagnosed with mesothelioma in 2002 and brought a products liability action against the defendant. The trial court granted judgment as a matter of law in favor of the defendant, and the plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court held that to establish a defendant's liability for injuries caused by a product, the plaintiff must show, at least, that he or she was exposed to the defendant's product. In this case, it was undisputed that the plaintiff could not have come into contact with a product designed, manufactured, distributed, or marketed, because the plaintiff's first exposure to Kaylo was 1965, seven years after the defendant had ceased all affiliation with this product (125 Cal. App. 4th 513, 523) .

[b] Defendant's Historic Role in Development of Product Did Not Provide Basis for Products Liability Claims Against It

The facts and procedural background of Cadlo v. Owens-Ill., Inc. (2004) 125 Cal. App. 4th 513, 521-522, 23 Cal. Rptr. 3d 1 (2004) , are discussed in § 190.83[3][a]. The court of appeal held that the defendant's historic role in the design, manufacture, and marketing of Kaylo, the allegedly defective product, did not support the plaintiff's products liability claims in the absence of any allegation or evidence that the defendant had actual connection with the design, manufacture, or distribution of the product to which the plaintiff was exposed. The court distinguished Fortman v. Hemco, Inc. (1989) 211 Cal. App. 3d 241, 259 Cal. Rptr. 311 , which held that an entity that was part of the "overall manufacturing enterprise" was subject to strict liability. In this case, although the defendant may have designed the original Kaylo, the plaintiff offered no evidence that the defendant was the designer of the Kaylo sold by another entity during the time of the plaintiff's exposure. Nor was there evidence that the defendant was the designer of an integral element in the manufacture of another product, by a different company, without which the Kaylo sold by this other entity could not have been produced (125 Cal. App. 4th 513, 524-525) .

[c] Defendant Who Was Not Part of Product's Chain of Distribution Cannot Be Held Strictly Liable

In Taylor v. Elliott Turbomachinery Co. (2009) 171 Cal. App. 4th 564 , the decedent was exposed to asbestos-containing products while serving in the Navy. The defendants supplied the Navy with equipment used in the ship's propulsion system, some of which included asbestos-containing parts. The asbestos-containing parts to which the decedent was exposed were manufactured and supplied by third parties. The plaintiff nevertheless alleged that defendants breached their duty to warn the decedent of the risks inherent in the asbestos-containing materials supplied by other manufacturers. The trial court granted defendants' motions for summary judgment. The court of appeal affirmed. The defendants could not be held strictly liable because they were not part of the chain of distribution of the asbestos-containing parts to which the decedent was exposed (*171 Cal. App. 4th 564, 2009 Cal. App. LEXIS 214, at *22-24) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Defendant Played No Role In Design, Manufacture, Distribution, or Marketing of Product That Injured Plaintiff.

In Dicola v. White Bros. Performance Prods., Inc. (2008) 158 Cal. App. 4th 666, 69 Cal. Rptr. 3d 888 , a motorcycle driver and his wife were killed while riding on a motorcycle the driver built himself. Plaintiffs brought a wrongful death and products liability action alleging that the accident was caused when the motorcycle's side stand failed to retract upon coming into contact with the ground. The trial court granted summary judgment in favor the defendants on product identification grounds. On appeal, the plaintiffs contended that the defendants did not meet their initial summary judgment burden of showing that they did not manufacture or distribute the side stand.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that the plaintiffs did not adequately preserve this argument on appeal. However, it would have rejected plaintiffs' arguments even if it had considered them on the merits. The defendants' expert evidence constituted sufficient prima facie evidence that they did not manufacture or distribute the side stand, and plaintiffs' evidence was insufficient to raise a triable issue of fact (158 Cal. App. 4th 666, 678) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
3. Who May Be Defendant?

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.84

§ 190.84 Opposing Contention That Defendant Is Person Who Is Subject to Strict Liability--Used Goods Dealer

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be com bined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities opposing the contention that defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product (see, e.g., § 190.82).]

DEFENDANT _____ [name] IS NOT SUBJECT TO STRICT LIABILITY BECAUSE DEFENDANT SOLD THE _____ [specify product] IN THE CAPACITY OF A USED GOODS DEALER.

A. Used Goods Dealer Is Not Subject to Strict Liability. A used goods dealer may not be held strictly liable for damages or injuries from a defective used product that he or she buys and sells in the ordinary course of business without handling, modifying, repairing, or reconditioning (Arriaga v. Citicapital Commercial Corp. (2008) 167 Cal. App. 4th 1527, 1540, 85 Cal. Rptr. 3d 143 ; Wilkinson v. Hicks (1981) 126 Cal. App. 3d 515, 521, 179 Cal. Rptr. 5 ; LaRosa v. Superior Court (1981) 122 Cal. App. 3d 741, 753-754, 176 Cal. Rptr. 224).

[Optional] B. Used Goods Dealer Is Not Required to Inspect or Repair Used Good. A dealer in used goods may not be held strictly liable for failing to dismantle, inspect for latent defects, and repair or recondition the used good that he or she will sell, even if the dealer has the facilities and employees to do so. The dealer is not an insurer against defects that came into existence after the original chain of distribution and while the product was under the control of previous consumers (Wilkinson v. Hicks (1981) 126 Cal. App. 3d 515, 521, 179 Cal. Rptr. 5).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a defendant is subject to a products liability action. The ground of opposition set forth is that defendant is a used goods dealer and is not subject to strict liability for injuries from a used good that he or she sells.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a demurrer or a motion for summary judgment on the issue that defendant may not be subjected to strict liability.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should describe defendant's business as dealing in used goods, and should indicate that defendant did not repair, recondition, or otherwise handle the used good before its sale [see, e.g., Wilkinson v. Hicks (1981) 126 Cal. App. 3d 515, 179 Cal. Rptr. 5 (used punch press sold by used goods dealer without repair or reconditioning)].

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contentions supported by the points and authorities in §§ 190.70 -190.79.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Used Goods Dealer Is Not Subject to Strict Liability

In Arriaga v. Citicapital Commercial Corp. (2008) 167 Cal. App. 4th 1527, 85 Cal. Rptr. 3d 143 , the plaintiff's finger became entangled in a glue spreading machine from which a guard had been removed. The defendant's predecessor had financed the glue spreader through a finance lease for the buyer. It purchased the machine for, then rented it to, the buyer, but did not select, manufacture, or supply the machine. The buyer eventually sold the machine to plaintiff's employer.

The trial court granted the defendant's motion for summary judgment, holding that even assuming that defendant was a seller and not merely a financing company, it was not subject to strict liability. The court of appeal affirmed. Even if defendant was considered to be the seller of the glue spreading machine, its role was limited to selling a used product to which it had no connection other than having obtained bare legal title through the financing mechanism. As previous courts of appeal have held, a seller of used machinery is not strictly liable in tort unless it rebuilds the product and thus assumes a role analogous to that of a manufacturer. The risk-reduction rationale supporting the imposition of strict liability on retailers (e.g., their ability to exert pressure on manufacturers to ensure the safety of products) is inapplicable to used goods dealers (Arriaga v. Citicapital Commercial Corp. (2008) 167 Cal. App. 4th 1527, 1540-1541, 85 Cal. Rptr. 3d 143).

In Wilkinson v. Hicks (1981) 126 Cal. App. 3d 515, 179 Cal. Rptr. 5 , plaintiff's hand was crushed while using a punch press sold by defendant, a dealer in used machinery, to plaintiff's employer. Plaintiff brought an action based in strict liability, negligence, and warranty against defendant. The trial court refused to submit the strict liability cause of action to the jury, and the jury returned a verdict for defendant on the negligence and warranty causes of action. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that defendant could not be held strictly liable because defendant was a dealer in used machinery. The court followed the earlier decision of LaRosa v. Superior Court.

In LaRosa v. Superior Court (1981) 122 Cal. App. 3d 741, 176 Cal. Rptr. 224 , plaintiff was injured while using a malfunctioning punch press. Plaintiff brought an action in strict liability and negligence against the used goods dealer from whom plaintiff's employer had purchased the press. Defendant moved for summary judgment. The trial court granted summary judgment on the strict liability theory, but denied summary judgment on the negligence theory.

Plaintiff sought a writ of prohibition or mandate to vacate the order granting partial summary judgment.

The court of appeal, after issuing an alternative writ of mandate, discharged the alternative writ and denied relief to plaintiff. The court ruled that as a used goods dealer, defendant was not subject to an action based in strict liability. The court reasoned that a used goods dealer was independent of the initial marketing and distribution enterprise, and when a plaintiff has not shown that the dealer caused or created the defect in the used product sold in the regular course of business, the dealer should not be held strictly liable for injury caused by the product. Because the dealer is not integrally involved in the initial manufacturing-marketing-distributing process, the dealer lacks the initial retailer's or distributor's ability to join other integral members of the initial process, and cannot require the retailer or distributor to adjust the costs of protecting injured parties. Additionally, the used goods dealer does not have a relationship with the unidentifiable prior misuser of the product that is akin to the relationship between an initial retailer and a manufacturer, thus the usual policy considerations behind strict liability do not apply (122 Cal. App. 3d 741, 746-761) .

[b] Used Goods Dealer Is Not Required to Inspect or Repair Used Good

The facts and procedural background of Wilkinson v. Hicks (1981) 126 Cal. App. 3d 515, 179 Cal. Rptr. 5 , are discussed in § 190.84[3][a]. In affirming the judgment, the court of appeal was not swayed by plaintiff's claims that defendant failed to dismantle, inspect for latent defects, and repair or recondition the punch press, although defendant had the facilities and employees to do so. The court held that defendant had no duty to dismantle, inspect, repair, or recondition the used goods that were sold, and that to impose strict liability for failure to routinely perform such tasks would effect a radical change in the used product market that the court declined to impose (126 Cal. App. 3d 515, 519-522) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
3. Who May Be Defendant?

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.85

§ 190.85 Opposing Contention That Defendant Is Person Who Is Subject to Strict Liability--Defendant Is Manufacturer of Nondefective Component Part of Defective Product

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities opposing the contention that defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product (see, e.g., § 190.169).]

EVEN IF THE _____ [specify product] WERE FOUND TO BE DEFECTIVE, DEFENDANT _____ [name] IS NOT SUBJECT TO STRICT LIABILITY BECAUSE DEFENDANT MERELY SUPPLIED A NONDEFECTIVE COMPONENT PART AND DEFENDANT HAD NO ROLE IN DESIGNING THE FINISHED _____ [specify product].

A. Manufacturer of Nondefective Component Part Is Not Strictly Liable for Defective Product. A component part manufacturer may not be held strictly liable for injuries sustained from a defective product of which the component is a part, if the component part had no defect at the time it left the component part manufacturer's possession, and if the component part manufacturer had no role in designing the finished product (*Taylor v. Elliott Turbomachinery Co. (2009) 171 Cal. App. 4th 564, 2009 Cal. App. LEXIS 214, at 35 ; Lee v. Electric Motor Div. (1985) 169 Cal. App. 3d 375, 386-387, 215 Cal. Rptr. 195 ; Wiler v. Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. (1979) 95 Cal. App. 3d 621, 629, 157 Cal. Rptr. 248).

B. Strict Liability for Defective Product Lies With Manufacturer of Finished Product and Not With Manufacturer of Nondefective Component Part. A component part manufacturer may reasonably rely on the manufacturer who designs and produces a finished product, of which the component is a part, to take appropriate measures to insure proper design and installation of the component part (Lee v. Electric Motor Div. (1985) 169 Cal. App. 3d 375, 386-387, 215 Cal. Rptr. 195 ; Wiler v. Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. (1979) 95 Cal. App. 3d 621, 629, 157 Cal. Rptr. 248). Accordingly, if the component part is not defective but the finished product is defective, responsibility for injuries from the finished product rests with the manufacturer of the finished product and not with the component part manufacturer (Wiler v. Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. (1979) 95 Cal. App. 3d 621, 629-630, 157 Cal. Rptr. 248).

[Optional] C. Manufacturer of Noncomponent Part Has No Duty to Investigate Safety of Finished Product. The manufacturer of a nondefective component part has no duty to investigate the safety of a finished product, of which the component is a part, that was solely designed and manufactured by another manufacturer (Lee v. Electric Motor Div. (1985) 169 Cal. App. 3d 375, 387, 215 Cal. Rptr. 195).

[Optional] D. Fact that Manufacturer Produced Component Pursuant to Specifications Does Not Deprive It of Defense. The fact that a manufacturer produced its component part pursuant to specifications, thereby arguably limiting the part's use, does not deprive the manufacturer of the component part defense (*Taylor v. Elliott Turbomachinery Co. (2009) 171 Cal. App. 4th 564, 2009 Cal. App. LEXIS 214, at *36-37) .

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a defendant is subject to a products liability action. The ground of opposition set forth is that defendant is not strictly liable because defendant merely manufactured a nondefective component part that was installed in the finished product by the manufacturer of the finished product.

If counsel seeks to oppose a contention that a component part manufacturer had a duty to warn of the dangers of the finished product, counsel should combine the points and authorities with those set forth in § 190.169. Counsel may also combine the points and authorities with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a demurrer or a motion for summary judgment on the issue that defendant may not be subjected to strict liability.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should state facts showing that the component part was not defective when it left defendant's possession, and that defendant had no control over the design of the ultimate product and installation of the component [see, e.g., Lee v. Electric Motor Div. (1985) 169 Cal. App. 3d 375, 215 Cal. Rptr. 195 (nondefective motor installed in defective meat grinder); Wiler v. Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. (1979) 95 Cal. App. 3d 621, 157 Cal. Rptr. 248 (installation of defective valve system by automobile manufacturer on nondefective tire)].

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contentions supported by the points and authorities in §§ 190.70 -190.79.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Manufacturer of Nondefective Component Part Is Not Strictly Liable for Defective Product

In Taylor v. Elliott Turbomachinery Co. (2009) 171 Cal. App. 4th 564 , the decedent was exposed to asbestos-containing products while serving in the Navy. The defendants supplied the Navy with equipment used in the ship's propulsion system, some of which included asbestos-containing parts. The asbestos-containing parts to which the decedent was exposed were manufactured and supplied by third parties. The plaintiff nevertheless alleged that defendants breached their duty to warn the decedent of the risks inherent in the asbestos-containing materials supplied by other manufacturers. The trial court granted defendants' motions for summary judgment. The court of appeal affirmed. Under the component parts doctrine, the component part manufacturer is not liable for injuries caused by the finished product unless the component itself was defective at the time it left the manufacturer. The court rejected the plaintiff's argument that the component parts doctrine applies only to manufacturers of fungible, multi-use components. The fact that the defendants manufactured their equipment to Navy specifications did not deprive them of the component parts defense. Here, defendants were not liable because defendants' equipment did not release the asbestos that caused the decedent's injuries, and because they did not participate in the integration of their components into the design of the propulsion system (*171 Cal. App. 4th 564, 2009 Cal. App. LEXIS 214, at *35-39) .

In Lee v. Electric Motor Div. (1985) 169 Cal. App. 3d 375, 215 Cal. Rptr. 195 , plaintiff was injured when her hand became caught in a meat grinder and its motor did not automatically shut off. Plaintiff brought an action in strict liability against the manufacturer of a motor used as a component part in the meat grinder. Plaintiff alleged that the product was defective because it had a manufacturing defect, a design defect, and no warning that the motor would not stop immediately. Plaintiff failed, however, to show that the motor came off the assembly line in a substandard condition. Plaintiff also did not sufficiently show that defendant had any role in the design of the meat grinder; instead, defendant had only been told to supply the grinder manufacturer with a standard motor. The trial court granted defendant's motion for summary judgment, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment, holding first that plaintiff had failed to show a manufacturing defect. The court also held that the component manufacturer had no duty to warn that the motor did not stop immediately; rather, that duty rested with the manufacturer of the grinder, who was solely responsible for the packaging, labeling, and marketing of the final product. Most importantly, however, the court held that the component manufacturer could not be held liable for a defect in the completed product. The court reasoned that strict liability should not be imposed because defendant played no role in designing the grinder and had no duty to insure that the grinder's manufacturer properly installed the motor manufactured by defendant. The court also explained that defendant, as a manufacturer of a nondefective component part, had no duty to investigate the safety of the finished product that was solely designed and manufactured by another manufacturer (169 Cal. App. 3d 375, 383-390) .

In Wiler v. Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. (1979) 95 Cal. App. 3d 621, 157 Cal. Rptr. 248 , plaintiff's decedent was killed in an automobile accident after a tire on the automobile in which decedent was riding deflated. Plaintiff brought an action in strict liability against the manufacturer of the tire. Defendant moved for summary judgment on the grounds that the only defect in the tire was from a valve stem manufactured and attached to it by the automobile manufacturer rather than defendant. The motion was granted and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment, holding that defendant may not be held strictly liable for a defect in a completed product when defendant merely manufactured a nondefective component part that was installed in that product. The court explained that, in dealing with an automotive manufacturer that designs and produces automotive products, defendant tire manufacturer could reasonably believe that the automobile manufacturer would take appropriate measures to insure proper design and installation of the valve stem. Thus, the court held that responsibility for the defective valve, as distinguished from the tire, rested with the automobile manufacturer and not with defendant tire manufacturer (95 Cal. App. 3d 621, 629-630) .

[b] Strict Liability for Defective Product Lies With Manufacturer of Finished Product and Not With Manufacturer of Nondefective Component Part

Lee v. Electric Motor Div. (1985) 169 Cal. App. 3d 375, 215 Cal. Rptr. 195 , and Wiler v. Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. (1979) 95 Cal. App. 3d 621 , 157 Cal. Rptr. 248 , are discussed in § 190.85[3][a].

[c] Manufacturer of Noncomponent Part Has No Duty to Investigate Safety of Finished Product

Lee v. Electric Motor Div. (1985) 169 Cal. App. 3d 375, 215 Cal. Rptr. 195 , is discussed in § 190.85[3][a].

[d] Fact that Manufacturer Produced Component Pursuant to Specifications Does Not Deprive It of Defense

Taylor v. Elliott Turbomachinery Co. (2009) 171 Cal. App. 4th 564 , is discussed in § 190.85[3][a].

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
3. Who May Be Defendant?

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.86

§ 190.86 Opposing Contention That Defendant Is Person Who Is Subject to Strict Liability--Identity of Actual Manufacturer Unknown--Market Share Liability Not Applicable to Manufacturing Defect

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities opposing the contention that defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product (see, e.g., § 190.226).]

DEFENDANT _____ [name] IS NOT SUBJECT TO STRICT LIABILITY BECAUSE PLAINTIFF CANNOT PROVE THAT DEFENDANT'S PRODUCT CAUSED PLAINTIFF'S INJURIES AND PLAINTIFF ALLEGES A MANUFACTURING RATHER THAN DESIGN DEFECT.

Market Share Liability Theory Does Not Apply to Manufacturing Defect. The market share liability theory, under which each manufacturer of a substantial share of the market of a product becomes proportionately liable for injuries sustained from a defective product unless that manufacturer proves that its product could not possibly have caused the injuries, is not applicable in a case in which the plaintiff was injured by a product that, although individually defective in its manufacture, in general is not intrinsically defective for the purpose for which it was used. Thus, when a product has a manufacturing defect but not a design defect, a manufacturer may not be held strictly liable for injuries caused by the product if the plaintiff cannot prove that the manufacturer was the manufacturer of the product that injured the plaintiff (Sheffield v. Eli Lilly & Co. (1983) 144 Cal. App. 3d 583, 593-594, 192 Cal. Rptr. 870).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a defendant is subject to a products liability action. The ground of opposition set forth is that because plaintiff has only alleged a manufacturing rather than a design defect in the product, and because a market share liability theory does not apply to such a case, defendant is not strictly liable because plaintiff cannot prove that the product that caused plaintiff's injuries was in fact manufactured by defendant.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a demurrer or a motion for summary judgment on the issue that defendant may not be subjected to strict liability.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should state facts showing that the product had no design defect, and that plaintiff is unable to prove that defendant manufactured the product that actually injured plaintiff [see, e.g., Sheffield v. Eli Lilly & Co. (1983) 144 Cal. App. 3d 583, 192 Cal. Rptr. 870 (deviant antipolio vaccine that was not intrinsically defective)].

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contentions supported by the points and authorities in § 190.80.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Market Share Liability Theory Does Not Apply to Manufacturing Defect

In Sheffield v. Eli Lilly & Co. (1983) 144 Cal. App. 3d 583, 192 Cal. Rptr. 870 , plaintiff developed polio after having received antipolio vaccinations in 1956 and 1957. The antipolio vaccine that was administered in general at that time was not intrinsically defective; however, plaintiff was administered a vaccine that was individually deviant. Years later, plaintiff brought an action in strict liability against the five manufacturers who had manufactured all of the antipolio vaccine that was administered during both 1956 and 1957. Because plaintiff could not identify the specific manufacturer of the vaccine that plaintiff actually received, defendants moved for summary judgment. The trial court granted the motion, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that the market share liability theory announced in Sindell v. Abbott Labs. (1980) 26 Cal. 3d 588, 611-612, 163 Cal. Rptr. 132, 607 P.2d 924 [see § 190.80[3][a]], did not apply to a manufacturing defect case. The court held that it would not be fair to shift the burden of proof of causation to defendants when the vaccine generally produced on the market was not defective, but that only the individual vaccine with which plaintiff had been inoculated contained a manufacturing defect. Unlike in Sindell, plaintiff's delay in discovering causation was in no way related to the nature of the defective product or any other act or omission of the unknown tortfeasor. More importantly, the deep pocket theory that all victims of a defective product should be compensated from an industry-wide fund would not be served because its indiscriminate application, as in this case, would penalize the careful and careless producer alike, and would fail to act as a deterrent to the careless producer or provide an incentive to product safety industry-wide. Even worse, application of the Sindell theory in a manufacturing defect case might result in keeping beneficial but potentially dangerous products off the market, inhibit drug research and development, and unreasonably raise the cost of health care. Finally, application of the doctrine would wrongly punish drug manufacturers who have not produced a defective product, while giving the tortfeasor who manufactured the defective vaccine an undeserved contribution (144 Cal. App. 3d 583, 592-599) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
3. Who May Be Defendant?

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.87

§ 190.87 Opposing Contention That Defendant Is Subject to Strict Liability--Identity of Actual Manufacturer Unknown--Injury Not Caused by Fungible Product

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief. It may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum or points and authorities opposing the contention that defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's products.]

DEFENDANT _____ [name] IS NOT SUBJECT TO STRICT LIABILITY UNDER THE MARKET SHARE THEORY BECAUSE PLAINTIFF HAS NOT ALLEGED THAT INJURY WAS CAUSED BY A FUNGIBLE PRODUCT.

Market Share Liability Does Not Apply When Injury Not Caused by Fungible Product. A plaintiff must allege that his or her injury was caused by a fungible product in order to state a cause of action under the market share theory of liability (Sindell v. Abbott Labs. (1980) 26 Cal. 3d 588, 611, 163 Cal. Rptr. 132, 607 P.2d 924 ; Setliff v. E.I. Du Pont de Nemours & Co. (1995) 32 Cal. App. 4th 1525, 1537, 38 Cal. Rptr. 2d 763).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a defendant was is subject to a strict products liability action on a market share liability theory. The ground for the contention is that the manufacturers did not make fungible goods.

This form may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to oppose strict liability under a market share theory. It may be used in connection with a pretrial motion, such as a demurrer, or motion for summary judgment. It may also be used in a trial or appellate brief.

In an appropriate case, this form may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities in § 190.80.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Market Share Liability Does Not Apply When Injury Not Caused by Fungible Product

Sindell v. Abbott Labs. (1980) 26 Cal. 3d 588, 163 Cal. Rptr. 132, 607 P.2d 924 , is discussed in § 190.80[3][a]. In recognizing a new theory of liability known as market share liability, the California Supreme Court applied the theory to fungible goods--that is, a drug produced from an identical formula (26 Cal. 3d 588, 611) .

In Setliff v. E.I. Du Pont de Nemours & Co. (1995) 32 Cal. App. 4th 1525, 1537, 38 Cal. Rptr. 2d 763 , the plaintiff brought a strict liability action under a market share theory against 40 named defendants, manufacturers of paints, solvents, strippers, and glue products, alleging that he was injured by these products while he had been an employee at a paint store. Nonsettling defendants demurred to the complaint, arguing that the plaintiff had failed to state a cause of action under any nonidentification theory of liability. The trial court agreed and granted judgments of dismissal in their favor.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that allegations of "fungibility" are a prerequisite to the imposition of market share liability. In this case, the plaintiff merely identified the product as "paints, solvents, strippers and glue products" without identifying a common toxic chemical ingredient or other "fungible" agent common to all the products (32 Cal. App. 4th 1525, 1537) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Market Share Liability Does Not Apply When Injury Not Caused by Fungible Product

In Ferris v. Gatke Corp. (2003) 107 Cal. App. 4th 1211, 132 Cal. Rptr. 2d 819 , the decedent was exposed to asbestos while he was employed in naval shipyards, while he was employed as an upholsterer, and when he replaced the friction brake shoes on his and his neighbors' automobiles for nearly 40 years. The trial court granted defense motions in limine to exclude evidence supporting the theory of market share liability, and the court of appeal affirmed. Observing that it is unclear whether the "fungibility" exception set forth in Wheeler v. Raybestos-Manhattan [Wheeler v. Raybestos-Manhattan (1992) 8 Cal. App. 4th 1152, 1155-1158, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 109] remains viable in the 21st century, the court did not decide the validity of Wheeler because it had no application to this case. The decedent had been exposed to asbestos from several sources, and he was unable to identify two manufacturers to whose products he was exposed (107 Cal. App. 4th 1211, 1220-1223) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
3. Who May Be Defendant?

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.88

§ 190.88 Opposing Contention That Defendant Is Person Who Is Subject to Strict Liability--Identity of Actual Manufacturer Unknown--Defendants Not Subject to Joint and Several Liability

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities opposing the contention that defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product.]

DEFENDANT _____ [name] IS NOT SUBJECT TO JOINT AND SEVERAL LIABILITY BECAUSE PLAINTIFF BROUGHT THE ACTION UNDER THE MARKET SHARE THEORY, AND DEFENDANT _____ [name] IS LIABLE ONLY FOR THAT PROPORTION OF THE JUDGMENT REPRESENTED BY ITS SHARE OF THE MARKET.

Joint and Several Liability Inapplicable to Market Share Theory Actions. Defendants in a market share theory action are not subject to joint and several liability (Brown v. Superior Court (1988) 44 Cal. 3d 1049, 1074-1075).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a defendant that was joined with other defendants under a market share theory action is subject to joint and several liability [see Brown v. Superior Court (1988) 44 Cal. 3d 1049, 1074-1075, 245 Cal. Rptr. 412, 751 P.2d 470] .

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a motion for summary adjudication on the issue whether defendant is subject to joint and several liability. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should state facts showing that the action was brought under the market share theory, and that each defendant is therefore liable only for that proportion of the judgment represented by its share of the market.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contentions supported by the points and authorities in § 190.80.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Joint and Several Liability Inapplicable to Market Share Theory Actions

In Brown v. Superior Court (1988) 44 Cal. 3d 1049, 245 Cal. Rptr. 412, 751 P.2d 470 , a woman who was injured because her mother had ingested the prescription drug diethylstilbesterol (DES) brought a market share theory action against DES manufacturers, relying on Sindell v. Abbott Labs. (1980) 26 Cal. 3d 588, 163 Cal. Rptr. 132, 607 P.2d 924 [see § 190.80[3][a]]. Numerous similar cases were consolidated for trial. The trial court made several pretrial rulings in favor of defendants: (1) that defendants cannot be held strictly liable for DES defects, but only for failure to warn of the drug's known or knowable side effects and failure to provide proper packaging; (2) that neither breach of warranty nor fraud will lie in an action based on the market share theory of Sindell; and (3) that defendants cannot be held jointly and severally liable for the entire amount of the judgment if plaintiff prevails, but that each defendant would be liable only for the proportion of the amount awarded that represented its share of the DES market. Plaintiff filed a petition for writ of mandate or prohibition. The court of appeal denied the writ, and plaintiff filed petition for hearing in Supreme Court.

The Supreme Court affirmed. With respect to the ruling regarding the apportionment of damages, the Court held that the imposition of joint liability on defendants in a market share action would be inconsistent with the rationale of Sindell, under which each defendant would be held liable for the proportion of the judgment represented by its market share (44 Cal. 3d 1049, 1074-1075) . The Court rejected plaintiff's argument that Sindell compels joint and several liability because defendants are ordinarily jointly and severally liable for a plaintiff's injuries, and the Court in Sindell did not specifically provide an exception (44 Cal. 3d 1049, 1074) . The Court noted that in Sindell it attempted to fashion a remedy for persons injured by a drug taken by their mothers a generation ago, making identification of the manufacturer impossible in many cases. In order to provide relief to an injured DES daughter faced with that dilemma, it realized that it would have to allow recovery of damages against some defendants that may not have manufactured the drug that caused the damage. To protect those defendants against excessive liability, it considered and rejected the theories of liability suggested by the plaintiff, and formulated, instead, the market share concept. Under that doctrine, to decrease the likelihood that a manufacturer of DES would be held liable for injuries caused by products that it did not make, and to achieve a reasonable approximation of its responsibility for injuries caused by the DES it produced, the plaintiff is required to join in the action the manufacturers of a substantial share of the relevant DES market. Once the manufacturers were joined, the injustice of shifting the burden of proof to defendants to exonerate themselves would be diminished. Each defendant would be held liable for the proportion of the judgment represented by its market share, and its overall liability for injuries caused by DES would approximate the injuries cause by the DES it manufactured. A DES manufacturer found liable under this approach would not be held responsible for injuries caused by other producer of the drug. The Court in Sindell acknowledged that only an approximation of a manufacturer's liability could be achieved by this procedure, but recognized that that result was preferable to denying recovery altogether to plaintiffs injured by DES (44 Cal. 3d 1049, 1074-1075) .

The Court in Brown stated that imposition of joint liability on defendants in a market share action would be inconsistent with this rationale, because it would allow any defendant to be held responsible for the entire judgment even though its market share may have been comparatively insignificant. Liability would be measured not by the likelihood of responsibility for the plaintiff's injuries but by the financial ability of a defendant to undertake payment of the entire judgment or a large portion of it. A defendant that paid a larger percentage of the judgment than warranted by its market share would have the burden of seeking indemnity from other defendants, and it would bear the loss if producers of DES that might have been held liable in the action were not amenable to suit, or if a codefendant was bankrupt. Therefore, the imposition of joint liability among defendant manufacturers in a market share action would frustrate Sindell's goal of achieving a balance between the interests of DES plaintiffs and manufacturers of the drug. The Court also rejected plaintiff's alternative contention that each defendant's liability should be "inflated" in proportion to its market share in an amount sufficient to assure that plaintiff would recover the entire amount of the judgment. The Court found that approach a retreat from Sindell's attempt to achieve a close approximation between a DES manufacturer's liability for damages and its individual responsibility for the injuries caused by the products it manufactured (44 Cal. 3d 1049, 1075) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
3. Who May Be Defendant?

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.89

§ 190.89 Opposing Contention That Defendant Is Person Who Is Subject to Strict Liability Under Product Line Theory--Defendant Not Liable as Successor

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities opposing the contention that defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries.]

DEFENDANT _____ [name] IS NOT SUBJECT TO STRICT LIABILITY FOR PLAINTIFF'S INJURIES AS A SUCCESSOR TO THE INTERESTS OF THE ORIGINAL MANUFACTURER OF THE PRODUCT THAT INJURED PLAINTIFF BECAUSE DEFENDANT DOES NOT FIT WITHIN THE THREE-PRONG TEST OF RAY V. ALAD.

A. Successor to Manufacturer Is Not Liable for Defective Product Manufactured by Original Manufacturer Unless Three-Prong Test of Ray v. Alad Is Satisfied. An entity that succeeds to the interests of the original manufacturer of a product that has injured a plaintiff is not strictly liable as a successor unless each prong of the three-prong test established in Ray v. Alad Corp. (1977) 19 Cal. 3d 22, 136 Cal. Rptr. 574, 560 P.2d 3 , is satisfied (Chaknova v. Wilbur-Ellis Co. (1999) 69 Cal. App. 4th 962, 970-974, 81 Cal. Rptr. 2d 871 ; Lundell v. Sidney Mach. Tool Co. (1986) 190 Cal. App. 3d 1546, 1556, 236 Cal. Rptr. 70).

[Optional] B. First Prong of Ray v. Alad Test Not Satisfied if Plaintiff's Remedies Not Destroyed by Defendant-Successor's Acquisition. A successor to the interests of the original manufacturer of a product that has injured a plaintiff is not strictly liable to the plaintiff unless the successor's acquisition of the interests of the original manufacturer virtually destroyed the plaintiff's remedies (Chaknova v. Wilbur-Ellis Co. (1999) 69 Cal. App. 4th 962, 971, 81 Cal. Rptr. 2d 871 ; Lundell v. Sidney Mach. Tool Co. (1986) 190 Cal. App. 3d 1546, 1551-1553, 236 Cal. Rptr. 70).

[Optional] C. Second Prong of Ray v. Alad Test Not Satisfied if Defendant-Successor Not Able to Assume Risk-Spreading Role of Original Manufacturer. A successor to the interests of the original manufacturer of a product that has injured a plaintiff is not strictly liable to the plaintiff unless the successor is able to assume the original manufacturer's risk-spreading role (Chaknova v. Wilbur-Ellis Co. (1999) 69 Cal. App. 4th 962, 972-973, 81 Cal. Rptr. 2d 871 ; Lundell v. Sidney Mach. Tool Co. (1986) 190 Cal. App. 3d 1546, 1553-1555, 236 Cal. Rptr. 70).

[Optional] D. Third Prong of Ray v. Alad Test Not Satisfied if Unfair to Require Defendant-Successor to Assume Responsibility for Defective Product Based on Successor's Use of Original Manufacturer's Good Will While Continuing Business. A successor to the interests of the original manufacturer of a product that has injured a plaintiff is not strictly liable to the plaintiff unless it is fair to require the successor to assume responsibility for defective products in that this burden necessarily attached to the original manufacturer's good will being enjoyed by the successor in continuing the business (Chaknova v. Wilbur-Ellis Co. (1999) 69 Cal. App. 4th 962, 973-974, 81 Cal. Rptr. 2d 871 ; Lundell v. Sidney Mach. Tool Co. (1986) 190 Cal. App. 3d 1546, 1556, 236 Cal. Rptr. 70).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a defendant in a products liability action who is the successor to the original manufacturer of the defective product is strictly liable for the injuries sustained from the product.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which the issue is raised. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities in opposition to summary judgment or summary adjudication on the issue that defendant is subject to strict liability. They may also be adopted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

In the appropriate case, these points and authorities may be used to oppose the contentions supported by the points and authorities in § 190.79.

[b] Related Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in § 190.244 may be added to these points and authorities to support the contention that a successor corporation is not liable for injuries caused by a predecessor's product.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Successor to Manufacturer Is Not Liable for Defective Product Manufactured by Original Manufacturer Unless Three-Prong Test of Ray v. Alad Is Satisfied

In Chaknova v. Wilbur-Ellis Co. (1999) 69 Cal. App. 4th 962, 81 Cal. Rptr. 2d 871 , the decedent developed asbestosis as a result of exposure to asbestos-containing products distributed by a company later purchased the defendant. The circumstances of the purchase transaction differed significantly from Ray v. Alad and did not satisfy the three criteria necessary to support liability under the product line theory (69 Cal. App. 4th 962, 970-974) .

In Lundell v. Sidney Mach. Tool Co. (1986) 190 Cal. App. 3d 1546, 236 Cal. Rptr. 70 , plaintiff was injured by a defective lathe and brought an action for strict products liability. The lathe was manufactured by the Sidney Machine Co., a business entity that no longer existed in its original form. Prior to plaintiff's injury, this company had changed hands on three separate occasions. The company, in its various transmuted forms, had not manufactured lathes for 10 years prior to the time defendant acquired the assets of the machine company. Defendant operated under the name of the original manufacturer. However, the business was in no way similar to that of the original manufacturer. Defendant merely supplied replacement parts to repair the lathes that were still in operation. At trial, defendant's motion for summary judgment was granted on the grounds that defendant was not liable as the successor of the original manufacturer.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court applied the three-prong test, established in Ray v. Alad Corp. (1977) 19 Cal. 3d 22, 136 Cal. Rptr. 574, 560 P.2d 3 [see § 190.79], to determine whether defendant had assumed the burden of strict successor products liability. The court noted that all three prongs of the Ray v. Alad test must be satisfied before successor liability may attach (190 Cal. App. 3d 1546, 1556) .

[b] First Prong of Ray v. Alad Test Not Satisfied if Plaintiff's Remedies Not Destroyed by Defendant-Successor's Acquisition

In Chaknova v. Wilbur-Ellis Co. (1999) 69 Cal. App. 4th 962, 81 Cal. Rptr. 2d 871 , the decedent developed asbestosis as a result of exposure to asbestos-containing products distributed by a company later purchased the defendant. Plaintiff failed to establish the first factor of Ray v. Alad, because the corporate entity which had been the distributor continued to exist for 15 months after the sale, and had available $3.7 million available to satisfy asbestos claims (69 Cal. App. 4th 962, 971, 81 Cal. Rptr. 2d 871).

The facts and procedural background of Lundell v. Sidney Mach. Tool Co. (1986) 190 Cal. App. 3d 1546, 236 Cal. Rptr. 70 , are discussed in § 190.89[3][a]. The court held that plaintiff's remedies were not destroyed by defendant's acquisition of the business. Rather, the court found that the destruction of plaintiff's remedies had occurred long before defendant acquired the business. In this regard, the court relied on the fact that the nature of the business had changed from a lathe manufacturing concern to a small sole proprietorship supplying but not manufacturing parts (190 Cal. App. 3d 1546, 1552-1553) .

[c] Second Prong of Ray v. Alad Test Not Satisfied if Defendant-Successor Not Able to Assume Risk-Spreading Role of Original Manufacturer

In Chaknova v. Wilbur-Ellis Co. (1999) 69 Cal. App. 4th 962, 81 Cal. Rptr. 2d 871 , the decedent developed asbestosis as a result of exposure to asbestos-containing products distributed by a company later purchased the defendant. Plaintiff failed to establish the second factor of Ray v. Alad, because the defendant sold its asbestos business 31 years before the decedent brought his action--that is, the "specter of asbestos-related injuries" did not appear for many years after the sale. Thus, the defendant had no way to calculate the health risks posed by asbestos and incorporate those risks into its pricing and insurance decisions (69 Cal. App. 4th 962, 972-973) .

The facts and procedural background of Lundell v. Sidney Mach. Tool Co. (1986) 190 Cal. App. 3d 1546, 236 Cal. Rptr. 70 , are discussed in § 190.89[3][a]. The court held, in applying the second prong of the Ray v. Alad test, that successor liability should not be imposed because there was no equivalence between the predecessor and successor's assets and resources, so that the successor did not have the ability to pass along to the purchasers of new products the costs of meeting the risk of claims from defects in previously manufactured products. The court also noted that factors to be used in determining this issue included (1) the reasonable commercial expectations of the successor, (2) the placing of the economic burdens of liability on those best able to pay for those costs, and (3) the degree of culpability of the successor (190 Cal. App. 3d 1546, 1554-1555) .

[d] Third Prong of Ray v. Alad Test Not Satisfied if Unfair to Require Defendant-Successor to Assume Responsibility for Defective Product Based on Successor's Use of Original Manufacturer's Good Will While Continuing Business

In Chaknova v. Wilbur-Ellis Co. (1999) 69 Cal. App. 4th 962, 81 Cal. Rptr. 2d 871 , the decedent developed asbestosis as a result of exposure to asbestos-containing products distributed by a company later purchased the defendant. Plaintiff failed to establish the third factor of Ray v. Alad. Given the 35-year time lapse since the defendant had been engaged in the asbestos business, the short 39-month time period it spent in the business, the impossibility at the time of envisioning the need to spread such an enormous but unknown risk, the payment of adequate consideration for the business, and the fact that the distributor had continued as a corporate entity with substantial assets for 15 months after the sale, it would be unfair to impose product line liability on the defendant (69 Cal. App. 4th 962, 973-974, 81 Cal. Rptr. 2d 871).

The facts and procedural background of Lundell v. Sidney Mach. Tool Co. (1986) 190 Cal. App. 3d 1546, 236 Cal. Rptr. 70 , are discussed in § 190.89[3][a]. The court noted that under the third-prong of the Ray v. Alad test, successor liability may be imposed only if it is fair to require the successor to assume responsibility for defective products in that this burden necessarily attached to the original manufacturer's good will being enjoyed by the successor in continuing the business. Analyzing the Ray v. Alad case, the court suggested that it is fair to impose liability when the successor acquires the trade name, good will, and customer lists of the original manufacturer and exploits the good will of the original manufacturer. The court found, however, that because defendant-successor sold different products (replacement parts, not lathes) and conducted business on a smaller scale than the manufacturer, that this prong of the Ray v. Alad test was not satisfied (190 Cal. App. 3d 1546, 1556) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] First Prong of Ray v. Alad Test Not Satisfied if Plaintiff's Remedies Not Destroyed by Defendant Successor's Acquisition

In Stewart v. Telex Communications, Inc. (1992) 1 Cal. App. 4th 190, 1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 669 , plaintiff was erecting an antenna for a citizen's band radio when the antenna touched an overhead power line, causing high-voltage electricity to surge through and severely burn plaintiff. The antenna had been manufactured by a company that declared bankruptcy. Defendant was the company that purchased the manufacturer from the bankruptcy trustee in the subsequent sale (1 Cal. App. 4th 190, 193-194) . The trial court held that successor liability did not apply because the bankruptcy proceeding, not defendant's acquisition of the assets, had destroyed plaintiff's remedy (1 Cal. App. 4th 190, 195) . The court of appeal affirmed, holding that successor liability is inappropriate unless the evidence shows that defendant was a cause in the bankruptcy (1 Cal. App. 4th 190, 200) .

In Phillips v. Cooper Labs. (1989) 215 Cal. App. 3d 1648, 264 Cal. Rptr. 311 , a DES action brought under the market-share theory of liability, plaintiffs sued several entities involved in the purchase and reorganization of the predecessor manufacturer of the drug, including one company to which were transferred the predecessor's marketing and sales assets, including its goodwill, name, drug trademark, sales force, retail lists, and old inventories, for an adequate consideration. The court of appeal reversed the trial court's order that that corporation was potentially liable as successor in interest, because the criterion under Ray v. Alad, regarding the destruction of plaintiff's remedies, was absent, inasmuch as the predecessor company continued successfully for 10 years in a different line of business, and its eventual dissolution was unconnected to the successor's acquisition of the product in question (215 Cal. App. 3d 1648, 1659) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
3. Who May Be Defendant?

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.90

§ 190.90 Opposing Contention That Defendant Is Person Who Is Subject to Strict Liability--Defendant Is Manufacturer of Prescription Drug That Is Unavoidably Unsafe

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities opposing the contention that defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product.]

DEFENDANT _____ [name] IS NOT SUBJECT TO STRICT LIABILITY BECAUSE DEFENDANT IS THE MANUFACTURER OF A PRESCRIPTION DRUG THAT IS INCAPABLE OF BEING MADE SAFE FOR ITS INTENDED AND ORDINARY USE, AND DEFENDANT PROVIDED PROPER WARNINGS AND PACKAGING OF THE DRUG.

A. Strict Liability Inapplicable to Unavoidably Unsafe Prescription Drug Absent Faulty Warning or Packaging. A manufacturer is not strictly liable for injuries caused by a prescription drug that is unavoidably unsafe as long as the drug was properly prepared and accompanied by warnings of its dangerous propensities that were either known or reasonably scientifically knowable at the time of distribution (Brown v. Superior Court (1988) 44 Cal. 3d 1049, 1069, 245 Cal. Rptr. 412, 751 P.2d 470).

B. Unavoidably Unsafe Products Include Prescription Drugs. Unavoidably unsafe products are products that, in the present state of human knowledge, are quite incapable of being made safe for their intended and ordinary use, which commonly includes drugs, vaccines, and new or experimental drugs as to which, because of lack of time and opportunity for sufficient medical experience, there can be no assurance of safety. Experience justifies the marketing and use of the drug notwithstanding a medically recognizable risk (Brown v. Superior Court (1988) 44 Cal. 3d 1049, 1058, 245 Cal. Rptr. 412, 751 P.2d 470 ; see also Restatement (Second) of Torts § 402A, cmt. k).

[Optional] C. Defective Design Test Inapplicable to Prescription Drugs. A drug manufacturer's liability for injuries caused by the defective design of a prescription drug is not measured by the standard applied in strict products liability actions to measure a design defect (Brown v. Superior Court (1988) 44 Cal. 3d 1049, 1061-1065, 245 Cal. Rptr. 412, 751 P.2d 470).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a defendant is subject to a products liability action. The ground of opposition is that defendant is the manufacturer of a prescription drug that is incapable of being made safe for its intended and ordinary use [see Brown v. Superior Court (1988) 44 Cal. 3d 1049, 1069, 245 Cal. Rptr. 412, 751 P.2d 470] .

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication on the issue that defendant is not strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Therefore, counsel should set forth facts showing that the prescription drug in question is incapable of being made safe for its intended and ordinary use, and falls within the definition of "unavoidably unsafe" products described in Restatement (Second) of Torts § 402A, comment k [see § 190.90[3][a]].

[b] Related Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in §§ 190.170, 190.173, and 190.174 may be combined with the points and authorities in this form.

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in § 190.163 may be used to oppose the points and authorities in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Strict Liability Inapplicable to Unavoidably Unsafe Prescription Drug Absent Faulty Warning or Packaging

The facts and procedural background of Brown v. Superior Court (1988) 44 Cal. 3d 1049, 245 Cal. Rptr. 412, 751 P.2d 470 , are discussed in § 190.88[3][a]. Regarding the issue of the applicability of strict products liability to prescription drugs, the Court held that a manufacturer is not strictly liable for injuries caused by a prescription drug as long as the drug was properly prepared and accompanied by warnings of its dangerous propensities that were either known or reasonably scientifically knowable at the time of distribution (4 Cal. 3d 955, 1069) . The Court noted conflicting court of appeal decisions regarding this issue, and summarized initially its three distinctive choices regarding strict liability of prescription drug manufacturers: (1) that the manufacturer is strictly liable for a defect in its product because it was defectively designed, as that term is defined in Barker v. Lull Eng'g Co. (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 413, 143 Cal. Rptr. 225, 573 P.2d 443 [see § 190.110[3][a]], or because of a failure to warn of its dangerous propensities even though those dangers were neither known nor scientifically knowable at the time of distribution; (2) that liability attaches only if a manufacturer fails to warn of dangerous propensities of which it was or should have been aware, in conformity with Restatement (Second) of Torts § 402A, comment k; or (3) that strict liability for design defects should apply to prescription drugs unless the particular drug that caused the injury is found to be "unavoidably dangerous." The Court adopted the Restatement approach, which states that there are some products that, in the present state of human knowledge, are incapable of being made safe for their intended and ordinary use, which commonly include drugs. For example, with respect to a vaccine for a serious disease, both the marketing and use of the product are fully justified, notwithstanding the unavoidable high degree of risk involved. That product, properly prepared, and accompanied by proper directions and warning, is neither defective nor unreasonably dangerous. Moreover, many new or experimental drugs, which lack assurances of safety due to urgency of need, are justifiably marketed and used notwithstanding a medically recognizable risk. If a drug of this type is properly prepared and marketed, and includes a proper warning, the seller is not held strictly liable for unfortunate consequences attending its use, merely because the seller has undertaken to supply the public with an apparently useful and desirable product, attended with a known but apparently reasonable risk (44 Cal. 3d 1049, 1058-1059) . In adopting comment k, the Court rejected the contrary view that a drug manufacturer should be strictly liable for a defective product due to defective design as defined in Barker--that is, a product that is either "perfectly" manufactured but lacking a safety device, or lacking adequate warnings or instructions [see § 190.110[3][a]]. The Court noted that there is an important distinction between prescription drugs and other products, such as construction machinery, to which the Barker test apply. Other products are generally used to make work easier or to provide pleasure, while prescription drugs may be necessary to alleviate pain and suffering or to sustain life. Moreover, unlike other important medical products such as wheelchairs, harm to some users from prescription drugs is unavoidable. In addition, the Court noted the public policy considerations in support of rapid development and marketing of beneficial new drugs (44 Cal. 3d 1049, 1063) . The Court also rejected the imposition of liability based on failure to warn of the drug's dangerous propensities, even though the dangers were neither known nor scientifically knowable at time of distribution. Although some decisions apply strict liability principles to a failure-to-warn case by holding that it is irrelevant whether the manufacturer knew of the danger or should have known of it, most jurisdictions hold to the contrary (44 Cal. 3d 1049, 1065) . That is, liability is conditioned on the actual or constructive knowledge of the risk by the manufacturer as of the time the product was sold or distributed (44 Cal. 3d 1049, 1065-1066) . This rule is consistent with Restatement (Second) of Torts § 402A, comment j, which confines the duty to warn to a situation in which the seller "has knowledge, or by the application of reasonable, developed human skill and foresight should have knowledge of ... the danger." To hold the manufacturer liable for failure to warn of a danger of which it would be impossible to know, based on the present state of human knowledge, would make the manufacturer the virtual insurer of the product. The likelihood of the producer's liability would increase with significant advances in scientific knowledge, discouraging the development of new and improved drugs to combat disease. Thus, the Court disagreed with plaintiff's assertion that defendants should be held liable for failing to warn the physician who prescribed DES to plaintiff's mother of alleged defects in the drug that were neither known by defendants nor scientifically knowable at the time the drug was distributed (44 Cal. 3d 1049, 1066) . The Court also expressly disapproved the holding of Kearl v. Lederle Labs. (1985) 172 Cal. App. 3d 812, 829-830, 218 Cal. Rptr. 453 , which stated that strict liability for design defects should apply to prescription drugs, unless the particular drug that caused the injury is found to be "unavoidably dangerous," pursuant to a preliminary "mini trial" by the trial judge, weighing the benefit and risk of that particular product (44 Cal. 3d 1049, 1066-1067) . The Court rejected the holding in Kearl on the grounds that it does not allow the manufacturer to predict the test by which its product will be ultimately evaluated, that it fosters different conclusions at the trial level for the same drug, and tat the judge and jury in the same case may render inconsistent findings (44 Cal. 3d 1049, 1067-1068) .

[b] Unavoidably Unsafe Products Includes Prescription Drugs

Brown v. Superior Court (1988) 44 Cal. 3d 1049, 245 Cal. Rptr. 412, 751 P.2d 470 , is discussed in § 190.90[3][a].

[c] Defective Design Test Inapplicable to Prescription Drugs

Brown v. Superior Court (1988) 44 Cal. 3d 1049, 245 Cal. Rptr. 412, 751 P.2d 470 , is discussed in § 190.90[3][a].

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
3. Who May Be Defendant?

2-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.90A

§ 190.90A Opposing Contention That Defendant Is Person Who Is Subject to Strict Liability--Defendant Is Manufacturer of Implanted Medical Device That Was Properly Manufactured

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities opposing the contention that defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product.]

DEFENDANT _____ [name] IS NOT SUBJECT TO STRICT LIABILITY BECAUSE DEFENDANT IS THE MANUFACTURER OF AN IMPLANTED PRESCRIPTION MEDICAL PRODUCT WHICH WAS PROPERLY MADE, AND WHICH WAS DISTRIBUTED WITH ADEQUATE WARNINGS.

A. Manufacturer Cannot Be Held Strictly Liable for Properly Made Prescription Medical Product With Adequate Warnings. A manufacturer is not strictly liable for an implanted prescription medical product which was properly made, and distributed with warnings of the risks of which the manufacturer knew or should have known at the time (Notmeyer v. Stryker Corp. (2007) 502 F. Supp. 2d 1051, 1058-1059 ; Hufft v. Horowitz (1992) 4 Cal. App. 4th 8, 17, 5 Cal. Rptr. 2d 377).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a defendant is subject to a products liability design defect action. The ground of opposition is that defendant is the manufacturer of an implanted prescription medical product which was properly made and which was distributed with adequate warnings [see Notmeyer v. Stryker Corp. (2007) 502 F. Supp. 2d 1051, 1058-1059 ; Hufft v. Horowitz (1992) 4 Cal. App. 4th 8, 17, 5 Cal. Rptr. 2d 377].

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication on the issue that defendant is not strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Therefore, counsel should set forth facts showing that the implanted prescription product was properly manufactured in accordance with its specifications, and was distributed with warnings regarding risks of which the manufacturer knew or should have known at the time.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Manufacturer Cannot Be Held Strictly Liable for Properly Made Prescription Medical Product With Adequate Warnings

The facts and procedural background of Notmeyer v. Stryker Corp. (N.D. Cal. 2007) 502 F. Supp. 2d 1051 , are discussed in § 190.259[4]. Part of the plaintiff's prosthetic hip replacement system shattered, requiring revision surgery. The court granted the manufacturers' motion to dismiss the plaintiff's strict liability design defect claim, as California caselaw provides that manufacturers of implanted prescription medical devices cannot be held strictly liable for defective design [502 F. Supp. 2d 1051, 1059] .

In Hufft v. Horowitz (1992) 4 Cal. App. 4th 8, 5 Cal. Rptr. 2d 377 , the plaintiff's inflatable penile prosthesis (IPP) caused him to experience a nearly constant erection. The device was removed after three unsuccessful surgical attempts to correct the problem. He brought several common law claims against the manufacturer. The trial court granted the manufacturer's motion for summary judgment.

The court of appeal first held that Brown v. Superior Court (1988) 44 Cal. 3d 1049, 245 Cal. Rptr. 412, 751 P.2d 470 , which immunizes manufacturers of prescription drugs from strict liability for design defects, applies to manufacturers of implanted prescription medical devices as well. Brown v. Superior Court (1988) 44 Cal. 3d 1049, 245 Cal. Rptr. 412, 751 P.2d 470 , is discussed in § 190.90[3][a]. Accordingly, the court held that "a manufacturer is not strictly liable for injuries caused by an implantable prescription medical product which has been (1) properly made and (2) distributed with information regarding risks and dangers of which the manufacturer knew or should have known at the time" [4 Cal. App. 4th 8, 20] . However, the manufacturer was not entitled to summary judgment because it did not show that the warnings accompanying the IPP were adequate [4 Cal. App. 4th 8, 23] .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
3. Who May Be Defendant?

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.91

§ 190.91 Opposing Contention That Defendant Is Person Who Is Subject to Strict Liability--Defendant Landlord Not Subject to Strict Liability

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities opposing the contention that defendant is liable in strict products liability for injuries caused by defendant's product.]

DEFENDANT _____ [name] IS NOT SUBJECT TO STRICT LIABILITY, BECAUSE PLAINTIFF'S ACTION IS BASED ON AN ALLEGED DEFECT IN A DWELLING LEASED BY DEFENDANT TO PLAINTIFF; LANDLORDS ARE NOT WITHIN THE CLASS OF PERSONS WHO MAY BE HELD STRICTLY LIABLE UNDER THE DOCTRINE OF PRODUCTS LIABILITY.

Strict Liability Inapplicable to Landlords. Strict tort liability for an injury caused by a defect in leased premises does not apply to landlords leasing residential property or hotel proprietors renting hotel rooms because they are not within the class of persons who may be held strictly liable under the doctrine of products liability (Peterson v. Superior Court (1995) 10 Cal. 4th 1185, 1205-1210, 43 Cal. Rptr. 2d 836, 899 P.2d 905 , overruling Becker v. IRM Corp. (1985) 38 Cal. 3d 454, 213 Cal. Rptr. 213, 698 P.2d 116).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a defendant is subject to a products liability action. The ground of opposition is that defendant, as the lessor of real property, is not an entrepreneur who places his product in the chain of commerce and therefore cannot be held strictly liable for a defect in the dwelling.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context

in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities in support of a motion for summary judgment on the ground that defendant is not subject to strict liability.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should set forth facts showing that defendant leased the premises in question as an isolated act; if appropriate, counsel could show that the leased residence is a single-family dwelling normally occupied by the defendant, and defendant owns no property specifically for leasing purposes.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Strict Liability Inapplicable to Landlords

In Peterson v. Superior Court (1995) 10 Cal. 4th 1185, 43 Cal. Rptr. 2d 836, 899 P.2d 905 , a hotel guest brought an action against a hotel proprietor, seeking damages for injuries sustained when she slipped and fell in the bathtub while taking a shower. Before trial, the defendants filed a motion in limine to prevent the plaintiff from arguing that strict liability applied in this case. The trial court granted the motion, ruling as a matter of law that the California Supreme Court's decision in Becker v. IRM Corp. (1985) 38 Cal. 3d 454, 213 Cal. Rptr. 213, 698 P.2d 116 , did not apply to hotel proprietors. Plaintiff filed a writ of mandate and/or prohibition in the court of appeal challenging the trial court's order, which the court of appeal summarily denied. The plaintiff filed a petition for review by the California Supreme Court, which was granted. The Supreme Court then transferred the case to the court of appeal with directions to vacate its earlier order and issue an alternative writ. The court of appeal issued a peremptory writ of mandate directing the trial court to permit the plaintiff to proceed on a strict liability theory pursuant to Becker. The defendants then petitioned for review.

The Supreme Court reversed, holding that Becker should be overruled because that decision constituted an unwarranted extension of the doctrine of products liability. The Court found that the circumstances of landlords and hotel proprietors leasing residential dwellings and hotel rooms to the public does not bring them within the class of persons who may properly be held strictly liable under the doctrine of products liability (10 Cal. 4th 1185, 1188-1189, 1210) .

The Supreme Court noted that its decision in Becker had received a chilly reception, and had been extensively criticized by commentators (10 Cal. 4th 1185, 1192-1193) . In reexamining Becker, the Court focused on the portion of the opinion addressing the products liability doctrine. First, the Court held that the rationales for applying strict liability to retailers and manufacturers who place products in the stream of commerce do not apply to landlords or hotel proprietors, at least when they do not also have the status of a builder (10 Cal. 4th 1185, 1198-1200) . Second, the Court concluded that the "implied representation of safety" justification for imposing strict liability was inapplicable insofar as this overstates the effect of the implied warranty of habitability. In brief, according to this Court, a tenant renting a dwelling does not have an expectation of safety similar to that of a consumer purchasing a new product (10 Cal. 4th 1185, 1203-1206) . Third, the Court determined that "loss spreading" did not justify the imposition of strict liability on landlords because it often would be unjust to hold a landlord strictly liable for a defect of which the landlord had no knowledge, and moreover, loss spreading is not the sole consideration for imposing strict liability (10 Cal. 4th 1185, 1206-1208) . Finally, the Court noted that landlords, unlike manufacturers, did not have any special knowledge of the product needed to mount a defense (10 Cal. 4th 1185, 1209-1210) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Strict Liability Inapplicable to Landlords

In McCarthy v. Martinson (1996) 51 Cal. App. 4th 632, 59 Cal. Rptr. 2d 149 , a tenant sustained injuries when she inadvertently walked through an untempered glass door in her apartment. She brought an action against her landlords for strict liability, negligence, and breach of implied habitability. A week before trial, the California Supreme Court overruled Becker v. IRM Corp. (1985) 38 Cal. 3d 454, 213 Cal. Rptr. 213 , which held that a residential landlord could be held strictly liable to a tenant for latent defects in an apartment [see Peterson v. Superior Court (1995) 10 Cal. 4th 1185, 43 Cal. Rptr. 2d 836 ; see also § 190.91[3][a]]. The trial court excluded the strict liability count from trial because it gave retroactive effect to the Supreme Court's decision overruling Becker. The court of appeal affirmed, holding that although the public may have relied on Becker for almost 10 years, the case had merely added one cause of action to others that were already available to the plaintiff. Full retroactivity still allowed the plaintiff to proceed against the landlord under general tort principles (51 Cal. App. 4th 632, 637-638) . Further, the court determined that the parties would not have actually relied on Becker when entering into the apartment lease. It then found that the change in law was foreseeable, because Becker had not been applied in other jurisdictions and had been subject to consistent criticism (51 Cal. App. 4th 632, 638) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
3. Who May Be Defendant?

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.92

§ 190.92 Opposing Contention That Defendant Is Person Who Is Subject to Strict Liability--Defendant Was Merely Intermediate Seller Not In Business of Selling Product

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities opposing the contention that defendant is liable in strict products liability for injuries caused by defendant's product.]

DEFENDANT _____ [name] IS NOT SUBJECT TO STRICT LIABILITY BECAUSE DEFENDANT IS NOT IN THE BUSINESS OF SELLING _____ [describe product, e.g., PLASTIC INJECTION MOLDING MACHINES], BUT WAS MERELY AN INTERMEDIATE SELLER OF THAT PRODUCT.

A. Intermediate Seller Not Subject to Strict Products Liability. An intermediate seller, not in the business of selling a product, is not subject to strict liability for injuries arising from the use of the product (Ortiz v. HPM Corp. (1991) 234 Cal. App. 3d 178, 188-189, 285 Cal. Rptr. 728).

[Optional] B. Seller of Used Goods Not Subject to Strict Liability Based on Minor Modifications of Product. A seller of used goods is not subject to strict liability based on modifications made to the product if the changes are not so extensive that they constitute a remanufacture of the product (Ortiz v. HPM Corp. (1991) 234 Cal. App. 3d 178, 189, 285 Cal. Rptr. 728).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a defendant is subject to a products liability action. The ground of opposition is that defendant, as an intermediate seller that is not in the business of selling the product, is not subject to strict liability for injuries arising from the use of the product [see Ortiz v. HPM Corp.

(1991) 234 Cal. App. 3d 178, 188-189, 285 Cal. Rptr. 728] . Optional Paragraph B is for use if plaintiff asserts that defendant is tantamount to a manufacturer by reason of modifications made to the product before sale, and defendant wishes to assert that the modifications were not sufficiently extensive to constitute a remanufacture and thus to subject defendant to strict liability [see Ortiz v. HPM Corp. (1991) 234 Cal. App. 3d 178, 189, 285 Cal. Rptr. 728] .

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities in support of a motion for nonsuit in a cause of action for strict liability.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should set forth facts showing that defendant's role regarding the sale of the product was merely as an intermediate seller, and that defendant was not engaged in the business of selling that product. If the issue of modifications is raised, defendant should also describe any modifications made to the product prior to sale, and show that they were not so extensive that they constituted a remanufacture of the product.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities in § 190.77.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Intermediate Seller Not Subject to Strict Products Liability

In Ortiz v. HPM Corp. (1991) 234 Cal. App. 3d 178, 285 Cal. Rptr. 728 , an employee in a manufacturing company fell into the mold area of a plastic injection molding machine, sustaining serious injuries. His wife, a fellow employee, observed the accident. They brought suit against their employer, the manufacturer of the machine, the original purchaser and user of the machine (hereafter referred to as the "intermediate seller"), and the used goods dealer that sold it to the employer. The husband sought damages on theories of strict liability, breach of warranty, and negligence; and the wife alleged causes of action for negligent infliction of emotional distress. The employer settled with plaintiffs and was dismissed from the action. The trial was bifurcated, and the liability and damages phases tried separately. The court granted motions for nonsuit brought by the intermediate seller and the used goods dealer, as well as the manufacturer's motion for nonsuit as to the wife. The jury returned a verdict on the liability phase of trial, finding negligence on the part of the manufacturer, but assessed comparative fault of 90 percent to plaintiff. Judgment was eventually entered against the manufacturer and damages awarded. Plaintiffs appealed, arguing that the motions for nonsuit should have been denied.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment in all respects except with regard to the nonsuit on the cause of action for negligent infliction of emotional distress, and the judgment of nonsuit in favor of the intermediate seller on the cause of action for negligence (234 Cal. App. 3d 178, 191) . With respect to the cause of action in strict liability against the intermediate seller, the court initially noted that under the stream of commerce approach followed in California, strict liability in tort has been applied not only to manufacturers but to the various links in the commercial marketing chain, including retailers, wholesale-retail distributors, personal property lessors and bailors, and licensors of personalty. The rule of strict liability applies to any person engaged in the business of selling products for use or consumption. It therefore applies to any manufacturer of a product, and to any wholesale or retail dealer or distributor. It is not necessary that the seller be engaged solely in the business of selling those products. The rule does not, however, apply to the occasional seller of food or other products that is not engaged in that activity as a part of its business [see Restatement (Second) of Torts § 402A, cmt. f] (234 Cal. App. 3d 178, 187) . The court noted that the intermediate seller established at trial that it was not in the business of selling plastic injection molding machines, and successfully asserted that its one-time sale of the machines when it closed down its operation in southern California rendered it merely an occasional seller, not subject to strict products liability (234 Cal. App. 3d 178, 188) . The court noted several prior cases in which an intermediate owner-seller of equipment was held to be an occasional seller of an isolated sale of discarded equipment and not engaged in the activity of selling the product as part of its business, and consequently not subject to strict products liability (234 Cal. App. 3d 178, 188-189) . The court stated that in this case, the evidence showed that the intermediate seller used the plastic injection molding machines in its own operation for several years, and then engaged in a one-time sale of the used equipment at the time it shut down its southern California operating facility. There was no evidence demonstrating that it was in the business of selling plastic injection molding machines (234 Cal. App. 3d 178, 189) .

[b] Seller of Used Goods Not Subject to Strict Liability Based on Minor Modifications of Product

The facts and procedural background of Ortiz v. HPM Corp. (1991) 234 Cal. App. 3d 178, 285 Cal. Rptr. 728 , are discussed in § 190.92[3][a]. The court of appeal held that an intermediate seller that is not is the business of selling a product, is not subject to strict liability for injuries arising from the use of the product (234 Cal. App. 3d 178, 188-189) . The plaintiffs argued that defendant intermediate seller made extensive modifications to the machines and should therefore be considered a remanufacturer subject to strict liability. The court noted that a seller of used goods that has made extensive modifications to a product prior to sale, has been considered tantamount to a manufacturer, and subject to strict products liability. The evidence at trial showed that when defendant purchased the machine from the manufacturer, it specified certain modifications to the original design, enabling it to use particular dies. Defendant also made the following modifications to accommodate its particular large dies: (1) modified the front safety gate guarding the mold area, moving it outward from the center of the machine, and increasing the unguarded area surrounding the machine; (2) further modified the safety gate, increasing the distance from the floor to the bottom of the gate by three inches; and (3) changed the rear safety gate. The court stated that the evidence fell far short of the virtual redesign and reconstruction of the product that would constitute remanufacture, such as that in Green v. City of Los Angeles (1974) 40 Cal. App. 3d 819, 838, 115 Cal. Rptr. 685 , which supported treating the intermediate owner as a manufacturer [see § 190.77[3][a]].

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
3. Who May Be Defendant?

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.93

§ 190.93 Opposing Contention That Defendant Is Person Who Is Subject to Strict Liability--Defendant Was Merely Occasional Seller

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities opposing the contention that defendant is liable in strict products liability for injuries caused by defendant's product.]

DEFENDANT _____ [name] IS NOT SUBJECT TO STRICT LIABILITY FOR ANY ALLEGED DEFECT IN THE PRODUCT SOLD BY DEFENDANT, BECAUSE DEFENDANT IS NOT IN THE BUSINESS OF SELLING SUCH PRODUCTS, THE SALE WAS A ONE-TIME TRANSACTION, AND THE DEFENDANT MADE NO MAJOR MODIFICATIONS TO THE PRODUCT BEFORE THE SALE. DEFENDANT IS NOT A MANUFACTURER, DISTRIBUTOR, RETAILER OR OTHER PERSON PLACING A PRODUCT IN THE CHAIN OF COMMERCE, AS REQUIRED FOR A STRICT PRODUCTS LIABILITY ACTION.

Strict Liability Inapplicable to Occasional Sale of Product. A person who makes a one-time sale of a product to another is an occasional seller and is not subject to strict products liability. An isolated transaction is insufficient to impose strict liability against a seller who is not otherwise in the business of selling the product. An occasional seller also cannot be treated as a manufacturer, unless before the sale the seller altered the product to the extent that it was redesigned and reconstructed (Ortiz v. HPM Corp. (1991) 234 Cal. App. 3d 178, 188-190).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a defendant is subject to a products liability action. The ground of opposition is that defendant, as an occasional seller, is not a manufacturer, distributor, or retailer who places the product in the chain of commerce. Therefore, defendant may not be held strictly liable for a defect in the product [see Oritz v. HPM Corp. (1991) 234 Cal. App. 3d 178, 188-190, 285 Cal. Rptr. 728] .

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities in support of a motion for summary judgment on the ground that defendant is not subject to strict liability.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should set forth facts showing that defendant sold the product at issue as a one-time transaction, such as that defendant sold the item solely to liquidate another business, is employed in another occupation, and does not regularly sell such items.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities in §§ 190.71, 190.72, and 190.77.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Strict Liability Inapplicable to Occasional Sale of Product

In Oritz v. HPM Corp. (1991) 234 Cal. App. 3d 178, 285 Cal. Rptr. 728 , a wife found her husband pressed between a cylinder and a stationary part of a plastic injection molding machine at their place of work. He sustained serious injuries. Their employer had purchased the machine from a used-machinery dealer, who had purchased it from the first owner. Plaintiffs sued all of these persons, plus the manufacturer of the machine. The trial court granted several nonsuit motions, including one for a cause of action for strict liability against the first owner of the machine. The jury verdict assessed comparative fault of 90 percent against the husband and 10 percent against the manufacturer. The plaintiffs appealed.

With respect to the strict products liability issues, the court of appeal affirmed the trial court's granting of a motion for nonsuit in favor of the first owner. The court held that strict liability is inapplicable to the occasional seller of a product who does not engage in that activity as part of his or her business (234 Cal. App. 3d 178, 187) . The court noted that the first owner had merely transferred the machine in a one-time transaction when it closed its operation. Therefore, defendant was merely an occasional seller and was not subject to strict products liability (234 Cal. App. 3d 178, 189) .

The court further held that minor alterations in the machines made by the first owner did not amount to a redesign and reconstruction of the machine. Therefore, the first owner was not tantamount to a manufacturer subject to strict liability (234 Cal. App. 3d 178, 189-190) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
3. Who May Be Defendant?

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.94

§ 190.94 Opposing Contention That Defendant Is Person Who Is Subject to Strict Liability--Defendant Was Employer

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities opposing the contention that defendant is liable in strict products liability for injuries caused by defendant's product].

DEFENDANT _____ [name] IS NOT SUBJECT TO STRICT LIABILITY, BECAUSE DEFENDANT WAS PLAINTIFF'S EMPLOYER, AND BECAUSE PLAINTIFF'S INJURY WAS NOT PROXIMATELY CAUSED BY A DEFECTIVE PRODUCT MANUFACTURED BY DEFENDANT, AND THE PRODUCT WAS NOT PROVIDED TO THE PLAINTIFF BY AN INDEPENDENT THIRD PERSON WHO OBTAINED THE PRODUCT FROM THE DEFENDANT FOR VALUABLE CONSIDERATION.

Strict Liability Inapplicable to Employers Except Under Narrow Factual Circumstances Set Forth in Labor Code Section 3602. Since the 1982 amendment of Labor Code Section 3602, the dual capacity exception to the general exclusivity of the workers' compensation remedy has been limited to the narrow factual circumstances presented where the employee's injury was caused by the employer's product, which itself was provided to the employee not be the employer, but by an independent third person who obtained the product from the employer for valuable consideration (Ashdown v. Ameron Int'l Corp. (2000) 83 Cal. App. 4th 868, 875-878, 100 Cal. Rptr. 2d 20).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a defendant is subject to a products liability action. The ground of opposition is that California's workers' compensation law provides the exclusive remedy against defendant, the plaintiff's employer, for injury or death arising out of and in the course of employment [Labor

Code § 3600 et seq.], and that the narrow factual circumstances required for application of the dual capacity exception do not exist.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Strict Liability Inapplicable to Employers Except Under Narrow Factual Circumstances Set Forth in Labor Code § 3602

In Ashdown v. Ameron Int'l Corp. (2000) 83 Cal. App. 4th 868, 100 Cal. Rptr. 2d 20 , the decedent was employed as a pipe inspector for defendant's predecessors from 1964 to 1966, during which time he was exposed to asbestos used in his employer's manufacture of pipes and other products. He became disabled in 1994. He was diagnosed with mesothelioma and died later that year. In the resultant action, the trial court granted defendant's motion for summary judgment on the ground of the exclusivity of the workers' compensation remedy. On appeal, plaintiffs argued that their causes of action accrued at the time of decedent's original exposure to asbestos between 1964 and 1966, and that the dual capacity exception in effect prior to the 1982 amendment of Labor Code § 3602 was applicable.

The court of appeal affirmed, rejecting plaintiffs' contention that the causes of action accrued at the time of decedent's original exposure to asbestos. After analyzing Buttram v. Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corp. (1997) 16 Cal. 4th 520, 66 Cal. Rptr. 2d 438, 941 P.2d 71 , and the statutory standards for determining when a workers' compensation claim accrues, the court concluded that for purposes of establishing whether the 1982 amendment applied, the appropriate test for determining when the causes of action accrued is by the date on which the decedent was first diagnosed with the asbetsos-related diseases for which damages were being sought, or when he otherwise first discovered that he had the disease. Thus, Labor Code § 3602, as amended in 1982, applied to plaintiffs' action. Since the 1982 amendment, the dual capacity exception has been limited to the narrow factual circumstances presented where the employee's injury was caused by the employer's product, which itself was provided to the employee not be the employer, but by an independent third person who obtained the product from the employer for valuable consideration. The doctrine did not apply to the facts of the case (83 Cal. App. 4th 868, 875-878) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
3. Who May Be Defendant?

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.95

§ 190.95 Opposing Contention That Defendant Is Person Who Is Subject to Strict Liability--Defendant Was Finance Lessor

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities opposing the contention that defendant is liable in strict products liability for injuries caused by defendant's product.]

DEFENDANT _____ [name] IS NOT SUBJECT TO STRICT LIABILITY FOR AN ALLEGED DEFECT IN THE PRODUCT SOLD BECAUSE IT MERELY PROVIDED FINANCING FOR THE TRANSACTION AND WAS OUTSIDE THE DIRECT CHAIN OF DISTRIBUTION.

A. Strict Liability Inapplicable to Finance Lessors. A finance lessor is not subject to strict liability for injuries arising from the use of a product because it is outside the direct chain of distribution (Arriaga v. Citicapital Commercial Corp. (2008) 167 Cal. App. 4th 1527, 1532, 85 Cal. Rptr. 3d 143] .

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a defendant is subject to a products liability action. The ground of opposition is that defendant, as a finance lessor outside the direct chain of distribution, is not subject to strict liability for injuries arising from the use of the product [see Arriaga v. Citicapital Commercial Corp. (2008) 167 Cal. App. 4th 1527, 1532, 85 Cal. Rptr. 3d 143] .

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities in support of a motion for summary judgment on the ground that defendant is not subject to strict liability.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should set forth facts showing that the defendant merely provided the financing for the transaction, and was not involved in any other activities such as manufacture or assembly that would subject it to strict liability.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities in §§ 190.71, 190.72, and 190.77.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Strict Liability Inapplicable to Finance Lessors

In Arriaga v. Citicapital Commercial Corp. (2008) 167 Cal. App. 4th 1527, 85 Cal. Rptr. 3d 143 , the plaintiff's finger became entangled in a glue spreading machine from which a guard had been removed. The defendant's predecessor financed the glue spreader through a finance lease for the buyer. As a finance lessor, that company purchased the machine for, then rented it to, the buyer. It did not select, manufacture, or supply the machine. The buyer eventually sold the machine to plaintiff's employer.

The trial court granted the defendant's motion for summary judgment, because, among other reasons, it neither manufactured nor assembled the glue spreader. The court of appeal affirmed. Strict liability was inapplicable because as the entity that merely provided the financing, the defendant was outside the direct chain of distribution. The court explained that finance lessors perform a function similar to that performed by banks. However, rather than simply loaning money, the finance lessor "purchases" the equipment for the specific purpose of "renting" it to the user. Because it did not select the specific product involved in the litigation, a finance lessor does not maintain an ongoing relationship with a particular manufacturer. Unlike a retailer or a commercial lessor, it is not in a position to exert pressure on the manufacturer to improve the product's safety. Moreover, a finance lessor does not play an integral role in the "producing and marketing enterprise" of a product and is not strictly liable under a marketing or distribution theory. Imposing strict products liability on a finance lessor would not further the policy considerations underlying the strict products liability doctrine (Arriaga v. Citicapital Commercial Corp. (2008) 167 Cal. App. 4th 1527, 1536-1539, 85 Cal. Rptr. 3d 143).

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
3. Who May Be Defendant?

19-190 California Points & Authorities §§ 190.96-190.109

[Reserved]

§§ 190.96[Reserved]

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
4. Design Defect

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.110

§ 190.110 Supporting Contention That Product Is Defective in Design--Dual Alternative Test

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities supporting the contention that defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product (see, e.g., §§ 190.111 -190.119).]

THE _____ [specify product, e.g., LAWNMOWER] IS DEFECTIVE IN ITS DESIGN BECAUSE _____ [IT FAILED TO PERFORM AS SAFELY AS AN ORDINARY CONSUMER WOULD EXPECT and/or IT CAUSED INJURIES TO PLAINTIFF AND DEFENDANT HAS FAILED TO SHOW THAT THE BENEFITS OF ITS DESIGN OUTWEIGH THE RISKS].

A. Dual Test for Design Defect. A product may be found defective in design, so as to subject a manufacturer to strict liability for resulting injuries, under either of two alternative tests. First, a product may be found defective in design if the plaintiff establishes that the product failed to perform as safely as an ordinary consumer would expect when used in an intended or reasonably foreseeable manner. Second, a product may alternatively be found defective in design if the plaintiff demonstrates that the product's design proximately caused his or her injury and the defendant fails to establish, in light of the relevant factors, that, on balance, the benefits of the challenged design outweigh the risk of danger inherent in the design (Barker v. Lull Eng'g Co. (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 413, 432, 143 Cal. Rptr. 225, 573 P.2d 443 ; Gonzalez v. Autoliv ASP, Inc. (2007) 154 Cal. App. 4th 780, 786, 64 Cal. Rptr. 3d 908).

B. Dual Test Applied in the Alternative. The ordinary consumer expectation test and the risk-benefits tests are alternative tests (Bracisco v. Beech Aircraft Corp. (1984) 159 Cal. App. 3d 1101, 1106 n.6, 206 Cal. Rptr. 431). Thus, a product may be found defective in design, even if it satisfies ordinary consumer expectations, if through hindsight the jury determines that the product's design embodies excessive preventable danger, or, in other words, if the risk of danger inherent in the challenged design outweighs the benefits of such design (Barker v. Lull Eng'g Co. (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 413, 430, 143 Cal. Rptr. 225, 573 P.2d 443). On the other hand, if a jury were to find that the benefits of the design of the defendant's product outweighed its risks, the jury would not be precluded from finding that the product was nevertheless defective because it did not perform as safely as an ordinary consumer would expect (see Curtis v. State of California ex rel. Dept. of Transportation (1982) 128 Cal. App. 3d 668, 690-691).

C. Satisfying Consumer Expectations Test. The consumer expectations test is satisfied if the evidence shows that the product failed to perform as safely as an ordinary consumer would expect when used in an intended or reasonably foreseeable manner (Barker v. Lull Eng'g Co. (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 413, 429, 143 Cal. Rptr. 225, 573 P.2d 443 ; Bullock v. Philip Morris USA, Inc. (2008) 159 Cal. App. 4th 655, 674 ; Boeken v. Philip Morris Inc. (2005) 127 Cal. App. 4th 1640, 1668, 26 Cal. Rptr. 3d 638, 660) .

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a product is defective in its design if either (1) it fails to perform as safely as an ordinary consumer would expect, or (2) if the product causes the injury and defendant fails to show that the product's benefits outweigh its risks.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication on the issue that the product was defective in design. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should show in what way the product did not operate as would be expected by an ordinary consumer, or, alternatively, should describe how the product caused injuries to plaintiff and explain how defendant has failed to show that the design's benefits outweigh its risks [see, e.g., Curtis v. State of California ex rel. Dept. of Transportation (1982) 128 Cal. App. 3d 668 (defective truck design under consumer expectation test)].

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in §§ 190.120, 190.126, and 190.240 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Dual Test for Design Defect

In Barker v. Lull Eng'g Co. (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 413, 143 Cal. Rptr. 225, 573 P.2d 443 , plaintiff was operating a high-lift loader at a construction site when the loader began to tip. Plaintiff jumped off, was struck by a piece of falling lumber, and suffered serious injury. Plaintiff brought an action in strict liability against the manufacturer and the lessor of the loader, alleging that the product had been defectively designed. At trial, the jury was instructed that to be entitled to recovery under a strict liability theory, plaintiff must prove that the defective product was unreasonably dangerous. The jury returned verdict for defendants, and plaintiff appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed the judgment. The Court upheld its previous decision in Cronin v. J.B.E. Olson Corp. (1972) 8 Cal. 3d 121, 104 Cal. Rptr. 433, 501 P.2d 1153 , in which the Court held that a plaintiff was not required to prove that a defective product was unreasonably dangerous in order to recover on a strict liability theory. The Court clarified Cronin by specifying that the plaintiff need not prove unreasonable danger, regardless of whether the defect was one in its manufacturing or in its design. More importantly, however, the Court took the opportunity to set forth a working definition of "design defect" by providing a dual alternative test. The first test, commonly known as the

"consumer expectation test," examines whether the product performed as safely as an ordinary consumer would expect when it is used in an intended or reasonably foreseeable manner. The second test, commonly known as the "risk-benefits test," asks whether the product's design proximately caused the plaintiff's injury, and whether the defendant has failed to show that, in light of the relevant factors, on balance, the benefits of the design outweigh the risk of danger inherent in the design (20 Cal. 3d 413, 422-432) .

Gonzalez v. Autoliv ASP, Inc. (2007) 154 Cal. App. 4th 780, 64 Cal. Rptr. 3d 908 , is discussed in § 190.74[3][b].

[b] Dual Test Applied in the Alternative

In Bracisco v. Beech Aircraft Corp. (1984) 159 Cal. App. 3d 1101, 206 Cal. Rptr. 431 , plaintiffs' decedent was killed in an airplane crash. Plaintiffs brought an action in strict liability and negligence against the airplane manufacturer and other defendants. The trial judge modified the standard design defect instruction, and in so doing merely listed the factors to be proven by plaintiffs on either theory without explaining to the jury which factors needed to be found for each test under the theory. The jury returned a verdict in favor of the defendants. Plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeals reversed the judgment in favor of the manufacturer, holding that the trial court erred in modifying the standard design defect instruction. The court held that the instruction, as modified, erroneously imposed on plaintiffs the more onerous burden of proving each issue for both the consumer expectation test and the risk-benefits test. Instead, the trial court should have instructed the jury that plaintiffs needed to either prove each issue relevant to the consumer expectation test, or each issue relevant to the risk-benefits test, but not both (159 Cal. App. 3d 1101, 1105-1107) .

The facts and procedural background of Barker v. Lull Eng'g Co. (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 413, 143 Cal. Rptr. 225, 573 P.2d 443 , are discussed in § 190.110[3][a]. In setting forth the dual test, the Supreme Court specified that the tests were alternative to each other. For example, the Court pointed out that even if the product performed as safely as reasonably expected by a consumer, the product could nevertheless be found defective under the risk-benefits test (20 Cal. 3d 413, 430) .

In Curtis v. State of California ex rel. Dep't of Transp. (1982) 128 Cal. App. 3d 668, 180 Cal. Rptr. 843 , plaintiff was driving a truck when he struck a cow on the freeway. Plaintiff's head struck a beam inside the truck, causing severe cervical fractures and permanent quadriplegic paralysis. Plaintiff brought an action in strict liability and negligence against the manufacturer of the truck and against the State of California. The strict liability cause of action alleged that the truck was defectively designed because the beam had been placed too close to the driver's head. At trial, the jury was instructed on alternate theories of strict liability and negligence. Although the jury returned a special verdict that the benefits of the design of the truck outweighed the risk of danger inherent in the design, they also returned special verdicts in favor of plaintiff and against defendants. The trial court reduced the amount of the verdict by deducting an amount equivalent to plaintiff's comparative negligence, sums received in settlement before trial, and workers' compensation benefits. Plaintiff appealed the reduction of the award. Defendant manufacturer cross appealed.

The court of appeal reversed the reduction and ordered the trial court to reinstate the original award. Among the many issues considered by the court was whether or not defendants could be liable in light of the special verdict by the jury that the benefits of the design outweighed its risks. The court held that such a special verdict does not preclude a finding of design defect under the consumer expectation test, or under a negligence theory. Thus, the original award was proper, even though the jury did not specify the theory on which liability was based (128 Cal. App. 3d 668, 687-691) .

[c] Satisfying Consumer Expectations Test

Barker v. Lull Eng'g Co. (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 413, 429, 143 Cal. Rptr. 225, 573 P.2d 443 , is discussed in § 190.110[3][a].

The facts and procedural background of Bullock v. Philip Morris USA, Inc. (2008) 159 Cal. App. 4th 655 , are discussed in § 190.223A[3][f]. The court found no error with respect to the cigarette manufacturer's liability for design defect. Evidence of the manufacturer's extensive efforts to mislead the public about the dangers of smoking and to create a false controversy as to whether smoking causes lung cancer, together with evidence that smokers are particularly vulnerable to this type of manipulation, supported the jury's finding that the ordinary consumer was misled and unaware of the dangers of smoking (159 Cal. App. 4th 655, 674) .

In Boeken v. Philip Morris Inc. (2005) 127 Cal. App. 4th 1640, 26 Cal. Rptr. 3d 638, 660 , the plaintiff filed suit alleging negligence, strict products liability, and fraud against a manufacturer of "light" cigarettes. The jury determined that the cigarettes were defective either in design or failure to warn. The court of appeal held that substantial evidence supported the finding that the "light" cigarettes were a defective product under the consumer expectations test. In so concluding, the court took into consideration expert testimony that "light" cigarettes actually delivered substantial nicotine and tar to smokers who "compensate"--that is, adjust how they smoke to obtain a satisfying amount of nicotine. This expert further testified that most smokers are unaware that they compensate, and that compensation draws carcinogens further into the lungs, increasing the risk of contracting a more aggressive type of cancer than the type that is more prevalent among smokers of regular-strength cigarettes (127 Cal. App. 4th 1640, 1668) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
4. Design Defect

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.111

§ 190.111 Supporting Contention That Product Is Defective in Design--Risk-Benefits Test--Relevant Factors

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities supporting the contention that defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product (see, e.g., §§ 190.110, 190.112 -190.117).]

THE _____ [specify product] IS DEFECTIVE IN ITS DESIGN BECAUSE AFTER CONSIDERING THE RELEVANT FACTORS THAT MAY BE CONSIDERED IN APPLYING THE RISK-BENEFITS TEST, THE RISKS INHERENT IN THE PRODUCT'S DESIGN OUTWEIGH THE BENEFITS OF THE DESIGN.

Relevant Factors to Be Considered by Jury in Applying Risk-Benefits Test. In evaluating the adequacy of a product's design pursuant to the risk-benefits test (in which the risks inherent in a product's design are weighed against the benefits of that design), a jury may consider the following, among other relevant factors: (1) the gravity of the danger posed by the challenged design; (2) the likelihood that such danger would occur; (3) the mechanical feasibility of a safer alternative design; (4) the financial cost of an improved design; and (5) the adverse consequences to the product and to the consumer that would result from an alternative design (Barker v. Lull Eng'g Co. (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 413, 431, 143 Cal. Rptr. 225, 573 P.2d 443).

[2] Comments

CAUTION:

Under former Civ. Code § 1714.4(a), which was repealed in 2002, in a products liability action based on injuries sustained from the discharge of a firearm or ammunition, the firearm or ammunition could not be deemed defective in design on the basis that its benefits did not outweigh the risk of injury posed by its potential to cause serious injury, damage, or death when discharged. However, former Civ. Code § 1714.4(c) did not affect a products liability action based on the improper selection of design alternatives

[see § 190.241].

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a product is defective in its design because the risks inherent in its design outweigh the benefits of that design.

These points and authorities should be combined with the points and authorities in § 190.110. These points and authorities may also be combined with the points and authorities in §§ 190.112 -190.114, and with other points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication on the issue that the product was defective in design. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should forth facts showing that the risks inherent in the product's design outweigh the benefits of that design; specifically, counsel should show (1) the gravity of the danger posed by the challenged design, (2) the likelihood that such danger would occur, (3) the mechanical feasibility of a safer alternative design, (4) the financial cost of an improved design, and (5) the adverse consequences to the product and to the consumer that would result from an alternative design [see, e.g., Barker v. Lull Eng'g Co. (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 413, 431, 143 Cal. Rptr. 225, 573 P.2d 443] .

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in § 190.126 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities. In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in §§ 190.120 and 190.240 may also be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities. Such a situation may often arise, because the burden of proof on the risk-benefits test may often shift to the defendant in a design defect case, as discussed in § 190.112.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Relevant Factors to Be Considered by Jury in Applying Risk-Benefits Test

The facts and procedural background of Barker v. Lull Eng'g Co. (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 413, 143 Cal. Rptr. 225, 573 P.2d 443 , are discussed in § 190.110[3][a]. The Supreme Court reversed the judgment for defendants, and held that the issue of whether a product's design is defective is determined under a dual alternative test. The second of these tests, the risk-benefits test, examines whether the risks inherent in the product's design outweigh its benefits. In enunciating this test, the Court explained that a jury, in evaluating the balancing of the risks and benefits of the product's design, may consider the following, among other relevant factors: (1) the gravity of the danger posed by the challenged design; (2) the likelihood that such danger would occur; (3) the mechanical feasibility of a safer alternative design; (4) the financial cost of an improved design; and (5) the adverse consequences to the product and to the consumer that would result from an alternative design (20 Cal. 3d 413, 431) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Relevant Factors to be Considered By Jury in Applying Risk-Benefits Test

In Hansen v. Sunnyside Prods., Inc. (1997) 55 Cal. App. 4th 1497, 65 Cal. Rptr. 2d 266 , a user of a household cleanser containing hydrofluoric acid brought a products liability action against the manufacturer after she sustained injuries while using the product. At trial, the jury returned a defense verdict finding no liability on the part of the defendant after defense counsel argued in closing argument that in determining whether there was a design defect under the risk-benefit test, the jury could consider the warning label as part of the product. The trial court granted plaintiffs a partial judgment notwithstanding the verdict (JNOV) on the issues of liability and comparative fault, concluding that product warnings could not be considered in determining the existence of a design defect under the risk-benefit test. The court of appeal reversed, holding that the determination of a design defect requires a balancing of several factors, including the likelihood that the product will cause harm. The presence of package warnings is relevant to the likelihood that harm will occur, and to the ultimate inquiry of whether the design embodies excessive preventable danger (55 Cal. App. 4th 1497, 1513-1517) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
4. Design Defect

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.112

§ 190.112 Supporting Contention That Product Is Defective in Design--Risk-Benefits Test--Shifting Burden of Proof--In General

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities supporting the contention that defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product (see, e.g., §§ 190.110, 190.111, 190.113 -190.119).]

THE BURDEN HAS SHIFTED TO DEFENDANT _____ [name] TO PROVE THAT THE PRODUCT IS NOT DEFECTIVE BECAUSE PLAINTIFF MADE A PRIMA FACIE SHOWING THAT HIS/HER INJURIES WERE PROXIMATELY CAUSED BY THE PRODUCT'S DESIGN.

A. Shifting Burden of Proof Once Prima Facie Showing of Proximate Cause Is Made. In the determination of the adequacy of a products design under the risk-benefits standard, once the plaintiff makes a prima facie showing that his or her injury was proximately caused by the product's design, the burden shifts to the defendant to prove, in light of the relevant factors, that the product is not defective (Campbell v. General Motors Corp. (1982) 32 Cal. 3d 112, 119, 184 Cal. Rptr. 891, 649 P.2d 224 ; Barker v. Lull Eng'g Co. (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 413, 431, 143 Cal. Rptr. 225, 573 P.2d 443 ; Gonzalez v. Autoliv ASP, Inc. (2007) 154 Cal. App. 4th 780, 786-787, 64 Cal. Rptr. 3d 908 ; McCabe v. American Honda Motor Co. (2002) 100 Cal. App. 4th 1111, 1126, 123 Cal. Rptr. 2d 303).

B. Burden of Proof Shifts, Not Simply Burden of Producing Evidence. The burden that is shifted to defendant in the risk-benefits determination is one affecting the burden of proof, rather than simply the burden of producing evidence (Barker v. Lull Eng'g Co. (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 413, 432, 143 Cal. Rptr. 225, 573 P.2d 443 ; Moreno v. Fey Mfg. Corp. (1983) 149 Cal. App. 3d 23, 27, 196 Cal. Rptr. 487 ; see Evid. Code §§ 605, 606).

[Optional] C. Plaintiff Need Only Show That Injury-Causing Design Existed When Product Left Defendant's

Possession. Once the burden has shifted in the risk-benefits determination, the plaintiff is not required to prove that a defect in design existed when the product left the defendant's possession. Instead, the plaintiff shows that the design of the product that injured the plaintiff was the same as the design of the product when it left the defendant's possession (Lunghi v. Clark Equip. Co. (1984) 153 Cal. App. 3d 485, 497-498, 200 Cal. Rptr. 387).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that once plaintiff makes a prima facie showing that the product's design proximately caused his or her injuries, the burden of proof shifts to the defendant to prove that the product is not defective.

These points and authorities should be combined with the points and authorities in §§ 190.110 and 190.111, and may be combined with the points and authorities in §§ 190.113 and 190.114, if appropriate. These points and authorities may also be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication on the issue that the product was defective in design. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should include sufficient facts to make a prima facie showing that plaintiff's injury was proximately caused by the product's design [see, e.g., Campbell v. General Motors Corp. (1982) 32 Cal. 3d 112, 184 Cal. Rptr. 891, 649 P.2d 224 (plaintiff established prima facie case of design defect in bus by showing that bus lacked appropriate handrail)].

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in §§ 190.120 and 190.240 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Shifting Burden of Proof Once Prima Facie Showing of Proximate Cause Is Made

In Campbell v. General Motors Corp. (1982) 32 Cal. 3d 112, 184 Cal. Rptr. 891, 649 P.2d 224 , plaintiff sustained personal injuries when the bus in which she was riding made a sharp turn, and, having no handrail to grab, she was thrown to the floor. Plaintiff brought an action in strict liability against the bus manufacturer. Defendant moved for judgment of nonsuit, which was granted, and plaintiff appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed the judgment, holding that plaintiff had established a prima facie case of design defect in the bus by showing that that bus lacked an appropriate handrail, the lack of which substantially caused her injuries. The Court reiterated the risk-benefits test first set forth in Barker v. Lull Eng'g Co. (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 413, 143 Cal. Rptr. 225, 573 P.2d 443 , as well as Barker's rule that once a prima facie showing of causation is made, the burden of proof shifts to the defendant to prove that the product is not defective. Thus, because the prima facie case was set forth and the burden of proof had shifted, the trial court erred in granting a nonsuit to defendant (32 Cal. 3d 112, 119-120) .

The facts and procedural background of Barker v. Lull Eng'g Co. (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 413 , 143 Cal. Rptr. 225, 573 P.2d 443 , are discussed in § 190.110[3][a]. The Supreme Court reversed the judgment for defendants, and held that the issue of whether a product's design is defective is determined under a dual alternative test. The second of these tests, the risk-benefits test, examines whether the risks inherent in the product's design outweigh its benefits. The Court held that once the plaintiff makes a prima facie showing that the product's design proximately caused his or her injuries, the burden shifts to the defendant to prove that the design is not defective. The Court based its holding on public policy grounds, reasoning that the burden should shift to the defendant because most of the evidentiary matters that may be relevant to the risk-benefits determination are similar to issues typically presented in a negligent design case and involve technical matters peculiarly within the knowledge of the manufacturer (20 Cal. 3d 413, 431-432) .

In Gonzalez v. Autoliv ASP, Inc. (2007) 154 Cal. App. 4th 780, 64 Cal. Rptr. 3d 908 , the plaintiff sustained injuries to her eye in an automobile accident. She brought an action against, inter alia, the manufacturer of the front airbag module, alleging that the front airbag system was defective because the airbag deployed with excessive force. The trial court granted the manufacturer's motion for summary judgment.

The court of appeal reversed. Although the manufacturer's expert opined that the airbag module deployed in accordance with its intended design, the manufacturer offered no evidence that the benefits of the design outweighed its risks, as it was required to do to meet its burden of showing the absence of a design defect (154 Cal. App. 4th 780, 788) .

In McCabe v. American Honda Motor Co. (2002) 100 Cal. App. 4th 1111, 123 Cal. Rptr. 2d 303 , the plaintiff's airbag failed to deploy in a collision. She brought an action against the air bag manufacturer, alleging that the air bag was defective in design as well as manufacture. The trial court granted summary judgment in favor of the manufacturer on the basis of its expert declaration that the air bag was not intended to inflate under the circumstances of the crash. The plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, holding, inter alia, that the manufacturer failed to negate the risk benefit theory. Even if it demonstrated that the air bag performed in conformity with its design, that evidence, by itself, was not sufficient to negate the plaintiff's design defect theory under the risk benefit theory (Cal. App. 4th 1111, 1123-1127).

[b] Burden of Proof Shifts, Not Simply Burden of Producing Evidence

The facts and procedural background of Barker v. Lull Eng'g Co. (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 413, 143 Cal. Rptr. 225, 573 P.2d 443 , are discussed in § 190.110[3][a]. The California Supreme Court held that a product can be shown to be defective under a risk-benefits test, but once the plaintiff makes a prima facie showing that the product's design proximately caused his or her injuries, the burden shifts to the defendant to prove that the design is not defective. To emphasize its holding, the Court explicitly stated that the burden that shifts to defendant is one of proof, and not simply a burden of producing evidence. The Court explained that public policy dictates that the burden that shifts be one of proof because a manufacturer who seeks to escape liability for an injury proximately caused by its product's design on a risk-benefit theory should bear the burden of persuading the trier of fact that its product should not be judged defective (20 Cal. 3d 413, 431-432) .

In Moreno v. Fey Mfg. Corp. (1983) 149 Cal. App. 3d 23, 196 Cal. Rptr. 487 , plaintiff, while riding a motorcycle, was sideswiped by a truck and the truck's bumper severed plaintiff's leg. Plaintiff brought an action in strict liability against the manufacturer of the truck for personal injuries. At trial, plaintiff submitted a proposed jury instruction that if he proved by a preponderance of the evidence that the bumper design was the proximate cause of his injury, defendant had the burden of proving by a preponderance of the evidence that the benefits of the design of the bumper outweighed its risks. The trial court rejected the instruction, and instead instructed the jury that the plaintiff had the burden of proving that the bumper was defective in design. In a special verdict, the jury found that the product did not have a design defect, and judgment was entered in favor of defendant. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed the judgment, holding that under Barker, plaintiff had made a prima facie showing of causation from the design, and that the burden of proof had shifted to defendant. The court further emphasized that the burden that shifted was one of proof and not simply one of producing evidence. Because the point was the crucial issue in the case, prejudicial error resulted requiring reversal of the judgment (149 Cal. App. 3d 23, 26-28) .

[c] Plaintiff Need Only Show That Injury-Causing Design Existed When Product Left Defendant's Possession.

In Lunghi v. Clark Equip. Co. (1984) 153 Cal. App. 3d 485, 200 Cal. Rptr. 387 , plaintiffs' decedent was crushed to death by the descending boom and bucket of a front-end loader while trying to rescue a fellow employee trapped in the loader's framework. Plaintiffs brought an action for wrongful death against the loader manufacturer, based on strict liability and negligence. The jury returned a special verdict that the loader was not defective in design. Plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal reversed the judgment, holding that the trial court made certain evidentiary and instructional errors. In addition, the court held that the trial court erred in instructing the jury that the plaintiff had the burden of establishing that a defect in design existed when the product left the defendant's possession, because the burden of proof shifts to defendant once plaintiff establishes that the injury was proximately caused by the product's design. The court further stated that the focus of the jury instruction on this issue ought to be on plaintiffs' burden to show that the design of the product that injured plaintiff was the same as the design of the product when it left defendant's possession (153 Cal. App. 3d 485, 489-498) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Shifting Burden of Proof Once Prima Facie Showing of Proximate Cause Is Made

In Bresnahan v. Chrysler Corp. (1995) 32 Cal. App. 4th 1559, 38 Cal. Rptr. 2d 446 , the plaintiffs brought an action in strict liability against manufacturers of allegedly defective automobile air bags. The trial court granted defendant's motion for nonsuit, and the court of appeal held that the nonsuit was improper. The court of appeal found that the plaintiff had established a prima facie case of causation by offering proof that her injuries resulted from the impact of her arm with the windshield. That injury would not have occurred had the air bag not deployed. This prima facie showing of proximate cause shifted the burden of proof to the defendant on the "risk-benefit" issue. The defendant had the burden of proving that balance of risks and benefits inherent in the design of the air bags were of no consequence. The plaintiff was not required to present evidence on this issue in her prima facie case (32 Cal. App. 4th 1559, 1565) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
4. Design Defect

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.113

§ 190.113 Supporting Contention That Product Is Defective in Design--Risk-Benefits Test--Shifting of Burden of Proof--Violation of Safety Statute, Regulation, or Ordinance as Sufficient Prima Facie Showing

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities supporting the contention that defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product (see, e.g., §§ 190.110 -190.112, 190.114 -190.119).]

THE BURDEN TO PROVE THAT THE _____ [specify product, e.g., LAWNMOWER] WAS NOT DEFECTIVE HAS SHIFTED TO DEFENDANT BECAUSE PLAINTIFF HAS SHOWN THAT DEFENDANT VIOLATED A _____ [SAFETY STATUTE and/or REGULATION and/or ORDINANCE] IN MANUFACTURING THE PRODUCT.

A. Violation of Statute, Regulation, or Ordinance as Prima Facie Showing of Causation. A showing that the defendant violated a safety statute, regulation, or ordinance in manufacturing the product may be a sufficient prima facie showing that the plaintiff's injury was proximately caused by the product's design, thereby shifting the burden to the defendant to prove, in light of the relevant factors, that the product is not defective (see McGee v. Cessna Aircraft Co. (1983) 139 Cal. App. 3d 179, 187, 188 Cal. Rptr. 542).

B. Facts Sufficient for Showing. Plaintiff makes a sufficient prima facie showing to shift the burden to defendant to prove that the product is not defective when plaintiff comes forward with evidence showing that (1) plaintiff used the product, (2) some occurrence caused the plaintiff's injuries, and (3) the occurrence could have happened because some objective feature of the product was not manufactured in compliance with a statute, regulation, or ordinance (see McGee v. Cessna Aircraft Co. (1983) 139 Cal. App. 3d 179, 187-188, 188 Cal. Rptr. 542).

[2] Comments

CAUTION:
Under former Civ. Code § 1714.4(a), which was repealed in 2002, in a products liability action based on injuries sustained from the discharge of a firearm or ammunition, the firearm or ammunition could not be deemed defective in design on the basis that its benefits did not outweigh the risk of injury posed by its potential to cause serious injury, damage, or death when discharged. However, former Civ. Code § 1714.4(c) did not affect a products liability action based on the improper selection of design alternatives [see § 190.241].

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that plaintiff has made a sufficient prima facie showing that the product's design proximately caused plaintiff's injury, thus shifting the burden of proof of defective design to defendant, by showing that the design was manufactured in violation of a safety statute, regulation, or ordinance, and that such violation could have resulted in plaintiff's injuries.

These points and authorities should be combined with the points and authorities in §§ 190.110 -190.112, and may be combined with the points and authorities in § 190.114, if appropriate. These points and authorities may also be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication on the issue that the product was defective in design. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should describe how defendant violated a safety statute, regulation, or ordinance, and how that violation could have caused the accident that occurred [see, e.g., McGee v. Cessna Aircraft Co. (1983) 139 Cal. App. 3d 179, 188 Cal. Rptr. 542 (fire could have entered plane's cockpit through its accumulator tank fittings, which were not built in compliance with federal aviation regulation requirements)].

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in §§ 190.120 and 190.240 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Violation of Statute, Regulation, or Ordinance as Prima Facie Showing of Causation

In McGee v. Cessna Aircraft Co. (1983) 139 Cal. App. 3d 179, 188 Cal. Rptr. 542 , plaintiff was injured in a fire that occurred after the private airplane in which she was riding crashed. Plaintiff brought an action in strict liability and negligence against the airplane manufacturer. The court of appeal reversed the first verdict rendered in the case for defendant in McGee v. Cessna Aircraft Co. (1978) 82 Cal. App. 3d 1005, 147 Cal. Rptr. 694 . On retrial, the trial court allowed plaintiff to present evidence that defendant had violated certain federal air safety regulations concerning the providing of aircraft firewalls and for protection of occupants in emergency landing conditions; however, the court refused to instruct the jury on shifting the burden of proof of causation to the manufacturer. The jury returned a verdict in favor of the manufacturer, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that the failure to give the proffered instruction was reversible error. The court held that the burden of proof may be shifted under such circumstances, under both the negligence and strict liability theories. More specifically, with regard to the strict liability theory, the court ruled that under the circumstances proximate cause may be inferred from the violation of the federal aviation regulation in the manufacturing of the plane. Thus, plaintiff had made a sufficient prima facie showing of causation to be entitled to a shifting of the burden of proof on the issue of whether the product was defective (139 Cal. App. 3d 179, 186-187) .

[b] Facts Sufficient for Showing

The facts and procedural background of McGee v. Cessna Aircraft Co. (1983) 139 Cal. App. 3d 179, 188 Cal. Rptr. 542 , are discussed in § 190.113[3][a]. The court found that the evidence presented by plaintiff was sufficient to shift the burden of proof of defective design to the manufacturer because the plaintiff presented the following evidence: (1) plaintiff had been an occupant of the plane; (2) the fire had caused plaintiff's injuries; and (3) the fire could have entered the cockpit through the accumulator tank fittings that were not in compliance with specifications required by the federal aviation regulations (139 Cal. App. 3d 179, 188) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
4. Design Defect

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.114

§ 190.114 Supporting Contention That Product Is Defective in Design--Risk-Benefits Test--Defendant Cannot Complain of Failure to Instruct

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in an appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities supporting the contention that defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product (see, e.g., §§ 190.110 -190.113, 190.115 -190.119).]

DEFENDANT _____ [name] CANNOT COMPLAIN ON APPEAL THAT THE TRIAL COURT FAILED TO INSTRUCT ON THE RISK-BENEFITS TEST.

Failure to Instruct. The risk-benefit test was formulated primarily to aid injured persons, and the defendant cannot on appeal complain of the trial court's failure to instruct the jury on the risk-benefit test (Grimshaw v. Ford Motor Co. (1981) 119 Cal. App. 3d 757, 802, 174 Cal. Rptr. 348).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in an appellate brief in support of the contention that a defendant may not complain on appeal that the trial court failed to instruct the jury on the risk-benefit test. These points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities in §§ 190.110 -190.113, if appropriate.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Failure to Instruct

In Grimshaw v. Ford Motor Co. (1981) 119 Cal. App. 3d 757, 174 Cal. Rptr. 348 , one plaintiff suffered personal injuries and another plaintiff's decedent suffered fatal personal injuries when the automobile in which they were riding was rearended and burst into flames. Plaintiffs brought an action in strict liability against the automobile manufacturer, alleging design defect of the gas tank. The surviving plaintiff sought punitive damages under Civ. Code § 3294 in addition to compensatory damages because defendant had tested the automobile and knew of the defect and danger, yet proceeded to market the product. The heirs of the driver who was killed in the accident sought but were denied leave to amend their complaint to seek punitive damages. The jury awarded both compensatory and punitive damages to the surviving plaintiff, and compensatory damages to the heirs of the deceased driver. The trial court reduced the amount of punitive damages awarded to the surviving plaintiff. All parties appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment. The court held that the trial court did not err by instructing the jury as to only one of the two-prongs of the Barker test, and in any event the defendant had no right to complain on appeal that the trial court had failed to instruct on the risk-benefits test. The court reasoned that the risk-benefits test was formulated to aid injured persons, not manufacturers. The court also ruled, among other issues, that punitive damages were available and substantial evidence supported their award (119 Cal. App. 3d 757, 801-836) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
4. Design Defect

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.115

§ 190.115 Supporting Contention That Product Is Defective in Design--Consumer Expectation Test--Expert Testimony Not Necessary if Matter of Common Experience

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities supporting the contention that defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product (see, e.g., §§ 190.110 -190.114, and 190.116 -190.119).]

PLAINTIFF DOES NOT NEED TO INTRODUCE EXPERT TESTIMONY AS TO CONSUMER EXPECTATIONS OF THE _____ [specify product] BECAUSE THE QUESTION IS A MATTER OF COMMON EXPERIENCE, AND PLAINTIFF HAS INTRODUCED EVIDENCE CONCERNING HIS/HER USE OF THE PRODUCT, THE CIRCUMSTANCES SURROUNDING HIS/HER INJURY, AND THE OBJECTIVE FEATURES OF THE PRODUCT THAT ARE RELEVANT TO AN EVALUATION OF ITS SAFETY.

A. Expert Testimony on Consumer Expectations Not Necessary When Matter Is of Common Experience. The determination of the consumer expectation test of Barker v. Lull Eng'g Co. (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 413, 143 Cal. Rptr. 225, 573 P.2d 443 , involves the jurors' own sense of whether the product meets ordinary expectations regarding its safety under the circumstances presented by the evidence. When the question is a matter of common experience, no expert testimony is required to enable the jury to reach its decision (Campbell v. General Motors Corp. (1982) 32 Cal. 3d 112, 126, 184 Cal. Rptr. 891, 649 P.2d 224 ; Akers v. Kelley Co. (1985) 173 Cal. App. 3d 633, 650, 219 Cal. Rptr. 513).

B. Evidence of Use, Injury, and Features of Product Is Sufficient for Consumer Expectation Test When Matter Is of Common Experience. For purposes of the consumer expectation test of Barker v. Lull Eng'g Co. (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 413, 143 Cal. Rptr. 225, 573 P.2d 443 , if the product is one within the common experience of ordinary consumers, it is generally sufficient if the plaintiff provides evidence concerning (1) his or her use of the product, (2) the circumstances surrounding the injury, and (3) the objective features of the product that are relevant to an evaluation of its safety (Campbell v. General Motors Corp. (1982) 32 Cal. 3d 112, 126, 184 Cal. Rptr. 891, 649 P.2d 224).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that plaintiff does not need to introduce expert testimony to prove that the product fails to meet the ordinary expectations of a consumer because the matter is one of common experience and plaintiff has introduced evidence concerning (1) his or her use of the product, (2) the circumstances surrounding the injury, and (3) the objective features of the product that are relevant to an evaluation of its safety.

These points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities in § 190.110. These points and authorities may also be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication on the issue that defendant is subject to strict liability. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, and with any other relevant points and authorities combined with this form, to show the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should show facts indicating (1) that the comprehension of the product and its dangers is one of common experience, (2) the plaintiff's use of the product, (3) the circumstances surrounding the injury, and (4) the objective features of the product that are relevant to an evaluation of its safety [see, e.g., Campbell v. General Motors Corp. (1982) 32 Cal. 3d 112, 184 Cal. Rptr. 891, 649 P.2d 224 (public transportation as matter of common experience; sufficient to show use, injury, and features of product)].

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in §§ 190.120 and 190.240 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Expert Testimony on Consumer Expectations Not Necessary When Matter Is of Common Experience

The facts and procedural background of Campbell v. General Motors Corp. (1982) 32 Cal. 3d 112, 184 Cal. Rptr. 891, 649 P.2d 224 , are discussed in § 190.112[3][a]. In reversing the judgment for defendant, the Supreme Court held that plaintiff did not need to introduce expert testimony to prove that the bus failed to satisfy the ordinary consumer expectations as to safety. Thus, the bus was defective under the consumer expectation test as set forth in Barker v. Lull Eng'g Co. (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 413, 143 Cal. Rptr. 225, 573 P.2d 443 [see § 190.110[3][a]]. In reaching its decision, the Court explained that public transportation is a matter of common experience, thus no expert testimony need be required to enable the jury to reach its determination (32 Cal. 3d 112, 126) .

In Akers v. Kelley Co. (1985) 173 Cal. App. 3d 633, 219 Cal. Rptr. 513 , plaintiff sustained severe personal injuries when, four hours after the blade of a forklift truck struck the dockboard, the dockboard flew apart and struck plaintiff. Plaintiff brought an action in strict liability and negligence against the manufacturer of the dockboard. Defendant's experts testified that in their opinion, plaintiff had pulled the release cable, thus causing the dockboard to catapult. In a special verdict, the jury determined that the dockboard was defective in design and/or manufacture, that defendant had been negligent, and that plaintiff was without fault. The jury awarded plaintiff $3.5 million. Defendant moved for a new trial and judgment notwithstanding the verdict, both of which were denied. Defendant then appealed the judgment.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that the jury had been properly instructed as to the consumer expectation test, and that the trial court had properly refused to give a risk-benefit test instruction. Further, the court held that the trial court had properly refused to give an instruction that defendant is not liable for injuries caused by a product when plaintiff knew that the product had been broken by a third party prior to the accident (173 Cal. App. 3d 633, 645-652) . In reaching its conclusion that the jury had been properly instructed concerning the consumer expectation test, the court rejected defendant's contention that the test was inapplicable because the dockboard and its dangers were not matters of common experience. The court rejected earlier views [see Lunghi v. Clark Equip. Co. (1984) 153 Cal. App. 3d 485, 200 Cal. Rptr. 387 ; Bates v. John Deere Co. (1983) 148 Cal. App. 3d 40, 195 Cal. Rptr. 637] , and held that Campbell did not exclude the use of the consumer expectation test in cases in which the matter is not one of common experience. Rather, the court read Campbell as holding only that the plaintiff in that case was entitled to establish, and did establish, a prima facie case of failure to meet consumer expectations without the benefit of expert testimony, because public transportation is a matter of common experience (173 Cal. App. 3d 633, 649-651) .

[b] Evidence of Use, Injury, and Features of Product Is Sufficient for Consumer Expectation Test When Matter Is of Common Experience

The facts and procedural background of Campbell v. General Motors Corp. (1982) 32 Cal. 3d 112, 184 Cal. Rptr. 891, 649 P.2d 224 , are discussed in § 190.112[3][a]. In holding that expert testimony is not necessary for the consumer expectations test when the matter is of common experience, the Supreme Court held that it is generally sufficient for plaintiff to provide evidence concerning (1) his or her use of the product, (2) the circumstances surrounding the injury, and (3) the objective features of the product that are relevant to an evaluation of its safety (32 Cal. 3d 112, 127) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Expert Testimony on Consumer Expectations Not Necessary When Matter Is of Common Experience

In West v. Johnson & Johnson Prods., Inc. (1985) 174 Cal. App. 3d 831, 220 Cal. Rptr. 437 , plaintiff suffered from toxic shock syndrome after using defendant manufacturer's tampon. Plaintiff brought an action in strict liability against defendant on the theories of design defect and defect from failure to warn. At trial, the court instructed the jury on the consumer expectation test. The jury awarded a verdict for plaintiff, and defendant appealed. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment, holding that the consumer expectation test had been properly given. The court of appeal rejected the Lunghi rule that the consumer expectation test cannot be used in a case when expert testimony is presented. Instead, the court read Campbell as simply saying that plaintiff is entitled to establish a prima facie case of failure to meet consumer expectations without the benefit of expert testimony [see § 190.115[3][a]]. Thus, even though expert testimony had been admitted at trial, the facts of the case warranted giving the consumer expectation test instruction (174 Cal. App. 3d 831, 865-866) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
4. Design Defect

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.116

§ 190.116 Supporting Contention That Product Is Defective in Design--Consumer Expectation Test Can Apply Even if Matter Is Not of Common Experience

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities supporting the contention that defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product (see, e.g., §§ 190.110 -190.115, 190.117 -190.119).]

PLAINTIFF IS ENTITLED TO AN INSTRUCTION REGARDING THE CONSUMER EXPECTATION TEST, EVEN THOUGH THE _____ [specify product] AND ITS DANGERS MAY NOT BE A MATTER OF COMMON EXPERIENCE, BECAUSE THE FACTS SUPPORT AN INFERENCE THAT THE PRODUCT'S DESIGN VIOLATED MINIMUM SAFETY ASSUMPTIONS OF A REASONABLE CONSUMER.

A. Consumer Expectation Test Is Applicable Even if Matter Not of Common Experience. The consumer expectation test may be applicable in a strict products liability case, even if the question of the ordinary consumer expectations regarding safety is not necessarily a matter of common experience. The reasonable juror with no previous experience with the product may nevertheless be able to conclude from the nature of the incident that caused the injury alleged that the product did not meet ordinary consumer expectations as to its safety (Akers v. Kelley Co. (1985) 173 Cal. App. 3d 633, 650-651, 219 Cal. Rptr. 513 ; see Soule v. General Motors Corp. (1994) 8 Cal. 4th 548, 565-568, 34 Cal. Rptr. 2d 607, 882 P.2d 298).

B. Critical Question Involves Inquiry Into Facts and Circumstances of Product's Failure. In assessing the applicability of the consumer expectations test, the critical question is whether the product, in the context of the facts and circumstances of its failure, is one about which ordinary consumers can form minimum safety expectations (Soule v. General Motors Corp. (1994) 8 Cal. 4th 548, 568, 34 Cal. Rptr. 2d 607, 882 P.2d 298 ; McCabe v. American Honda Co. (2002) 100 Cal. App. 4th 1111, 1124, 123 Cal. Rptr. 2d 303).

C. Consumer Expectation Test Is Not Foreclosed by Necessity of Expert Testimony to Explain Nature of Alleged Defect. The consumer expectations test is not foreclosed simply because expert testimony may be necessary to explain the nature of the alleged defect or the mechanism of the product's failure (Arnold v. Dow Chem. Co. (2001) 91 Cal. App. 4th 698).

D. Fact That Expert Testimony Was Required to Establish Legal Causation Does Not Preclude Use of Consumer Expectations Test. The fact that expert testimony is required to establish legal causation does not mean that an ordinary user of the product is unable to form assumptions about the product's safety (Jones v. John Crane, Inc. (2005) 132 Cal. App. 4th 990, 1003, 35 Cal. Rptr. 3d 144).

E. Consumer Expectations Test Applies to Strict Liability Actions Involving Asbestos-Containing Products. Asbestos-containing products are subject to the consumer expectations test (Morton v. Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corp. (1995) 33 Cal. App. 4th 1529, 1536, 40 Cal. Rptr. 2d 22 ; Sparks v. Owens-Illinois, Inc. (1995) 32 Cal. App. 4th 461, 474-475, 38 Cal. Rptr. 2d 739).

F. Consumer Expectations Test Applies to Strict Liability Actions Involving Raw Materials. Raw materials are subject to the consumer expectations test (Garza v. Asbestos Corp. (2008) 161 Cal. App. 4th 651, 660, 74 Cal. Rptr. 3d 359 , Arena v. Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corp. (1998) 63 Cal. App. 4th 1178, 1187, 74 Cal. Rptr. 2d 580).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that plaintiff is entitled to an instruction regarding the consumer expectation test, even though the product and its dangers are not matters of common experience.

These points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities in § 190.110. They may also be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication on the issue that defendant is subject to strict liability. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form and with any other relevant points and authorities combined with this form, to show the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should show facts indicating that the reasonable juror would be able to make conclusions regarding the ordinary consumer expectations of the safety of the product given the nature of the injury [see, e.g., Akers v. Kelley Co. (1985) 173 Cal. App. 3d 633, 650-651, 219 Cal. Rptr. 513 (reasonable juror with no previous experience of dockboards as able to conclude that dockboard failed to meet consumer expectations of safety given particular nature of incident); cf. Soule v. General Motors Corp. (1994) 8 Cal. 4th 548, 565-570, 34 Cal. Rptr. 2d 607, 882 P.2d 298 (consumer expectations test can be submitted to jury only if facts permit inference that product's performance did not meet minimum safety expectations of ordinary users; test improperly given to jury in case involving technical, mechanical issues of automobile's crashworthiness)].

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in §§ 190.120, 190.124, and 190.240 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Consumer Expectation Test Is Applicable Even if Matter Not of Common Experience

The facts and procedural background of Akers v. Kelley Co. (1985) 173 Cal. App. 3d 633, 219 Cal. Rptr. 513 , are discussed in § 190.115[3][a]. In affirming the judgment for plaintiff, the court of appeal rejected the notion raised in prior cases that the consumer expectation test may not be applied when the product is beyond the ken of the ordinary person on the street. Rather, the court viewed Campbell v. General Motors Corp. (1982) 32 Cal. 3d 112, 184 Cal. Rptr. 891, 649 P.2d 224 , as saying simply that the plaintiff in that case was entitled to establish, and did establish, a prima facie case of failure to meet consumer expectations without the benefit of expert testimony, because public transportation is a matter of common experience. In the court of appeal's view, the consumer expectation test was entirely appropriate in a case such as the one at bar. The court reasoned that even in certain kinds of accidents in which fairly complex machinery is involved, the events may nevertheless be so bizarre that the average juror, on hearing the particulars, might reasonably think: "Whatever the user may have expected from that contraption, it certainly wasn't that." In this case, a dockboard flew apart and injured plaintiff. A reasonable juror with no previous experience of dockboards could conclude that the dockboard in question failed to meet consumer expectations as to its safety. Thus, the jury instruction on the test had been proper (173 Cal. App. 3d 633, 649-651) .

The facts and procedural background of Soule v. General Motors Corp. (1994) 8 Cal. 4th 548, 34 Cal. Rptr. 2d 607, 882 P.2d 298 , are discussed in § 190.124[3][a]. In holding that it was error to instruct the jury on the consumer expectation test, the Court held that the jury may be instructed on the test only if the facts actually permit an inference that the product's performance did not meet the minimum safety expectations of its ordinary users (8 Cal. 4th 548, 568) . The Court quoted from Akers v. Kelley Co. (1985) 173 Cal. App. 3d 633, 219 Cal. Rptr. 513 , concerning the facts that case, in which the injury resulted from an accident that a reasonable juror could conclude was outside any consumer expectation as to the product's safety (8 Cal. 4th 548, 565) . The Court noted that the court in Akers declined to limit the consumer expectations test to products or accidents of common experience (8 Cal. 4th 548, 565) . However, the Court stated that a complex product, even when being used as intended, may cause injury in a way that does not engage its ordinary consumers' reasonable minimum assumptions about safe performance (8 Cal. 4th 548, 566-567) . For example, the ordinary consumer of an automobile has no idea how it should perform in all foreseeable situations, or how safe it should be made against all foreseeable hazards (8 Cal. 4th 548, 567) . In such a case, a design defect can be proved only under the risk-benefits test (8 Cal. 4th 548, 568) .

Although the Court did not overrule Akers, the Court held that it was error to instruct the jury on the consumer expectations test because the crashworthiness of the automobile under the particular circumstances that caused plaintiff's injury was outside the ordinary consumer's expectations (8 Cal. 4th 548, 570) . The cases may be reconciled as analyzing the expectations concerning the specific accident or injury, not those regarding the product generally. Thus, in a footnote, the Court noted that the consumer expectations test could be used to prove an automobile's design is defective, for example, if a design caused the vehicle to roll over and catch fire in a two-mile-per-hour collision (8 Cal. 4th 548, 566 n.3).

[b] Critical Question Involves Inquiry into Facts and Circumstances Of Product's Failure

Soule v. General Motors Corp. (1994) 8 Cal. 4th 548, 568, 34 Cal. Rptr. 2d 607, 882 P.2d 298 , is discussed in § 190.116[3][a].

In McCabe v. American Honda Motor Co. (2002) 100 Cal. App. 4th 1111, 123 Cal. Rptr. 2d 303 , plaintiff was injured when the driver's side air bag in her automobile failed to deploy in a frontal collision. In holding that triable issues of fact precluded a finding that the consumer expectations test was inapplicable as a matter of law, the court explained the apparent inconsistencies of Pruitt v. General Motors Corp. (1999) 72 Cal. App. 4th 1480, 1483, 86 Cal. Rptr. 2d 4 [see § 190.125[3][a]], and Bresnahan v. Chrysler Corp. (1995) 32 Cal. App. 4th 1559, 1568, 38 Cal. Rptr. 2d 446 . The three cases involved three factually distinct scenarios. Whether a product is susceptible to the consumer expectation analysis cannot be determined by looking at the product in isolation, but must be considered in the context of the facts surrounding its failure. As the Supreme Court made clear in Soule v. General Motors Corp. (1994) 8 Cal. 4th 548, 568-569, 34 Cal. Rptr. 2d 607, 882 P.2d 298 , the critical question is whether the circumstances of the product's failure permit an inference that the product's design performed below the legitimate, commonly accepted minimum safety assumptions of its ordinary consumers. Deciding whether the functioning of an air bag lends itself, in every circumstance, to the consumer expectation test would improperly focus on the nature of the product without regard to the circumstances of its purported failure. Issues of material fact existed as to the circumstances of the accident (speed and collision range), and plaintiff provided sufficient evidence for the jury to infer that nondeployment of air bag, in the context of a high-speed, head-on collision, violates minimum safety expectations of an ordinary consumer (100 Cal. App. 4th 1111, 1122) .

[c] Consumer Expectation Test Is Not Foreclosed by Necessity of Expert Testimony to Explain Nature of Alleged Defect

In Arnold v. Dow Chem. Co. (2001) 91 Cal. App. 4th 698, 110 Cal. Rptr. 2d 722 , plaintiffs claimed that their children's injuries were caused by exposure to pesticide applied in their home. The court rejected defendants' contention that the consumer expectation test was inapplicable, holding that the case was more like Sparks v. Owens-Ill., Inc. (1995) 32 Cal. App. 4th 461, 38 Cal. Rptr. 2d 739 , than Soule v. General Motors Corp. (1994) 8 Cal. 4th 548, 568-569, 34 Cal. Rptr. 2d 607, 882 P.2d 298 (91 Cal. App. 4th 698, 727) .

[d] Fact That Expert Testimony Was Required to Establish Legal Causation Does Not Preclude Use of Consumer Expectations Test

In Jones v. John Crane, Inc. (2005) 132 Cal. App. 4th 990, 35 Cal. Rptr. 3d 144 , the jury returned a special verdict in favor of the plaintiffs, finding that the defendant's valve packing and gaskets contained a design defect that caused the decedent to suffer injury. The court of appeal affirmed, holding that the consumer expectations was properly applied to the plaintiffs' products liability claims. The court rejected the defendant's contention that the many experts required to explain the "complex nature and behavior" of the defendant's products--in particular, measurements of the amounts of asbestos released during ordinary handling--rendered the test inapplicable. The court explained that the consumer expectations test does not require inquiry into how exposure to a particular level of asbestos may lead to the development of cancer. Instead, it merely asks whether the circumstances permit an inference that the product's design performed below the commonly accepted minimum safety assumptions of its ordinary consumer. The fact that expert testimony is required to establish legal causation does not mean that an ordinary user of the product is unable to form assumptions about the product's safety (132 Cal. App. 4th 990, 1003) .

[e] Consumer Expectations Test Applies to Strict Liability Actions Involving Asbestos-Containing Products

Morton v. Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corp. (1995) 33 Cal. App. 4th 1529, 40 Cal. Rptr. 2d 22 , is discussed in § 190.116[4][a].

Sparks v. Owens-Illinois, Inc. (1995) 32 Cal. App. 4th 461, 38 Cal. Rptr. 2d 739 , is discussed in § 190.116[4][a].

[f] Consumer Expectations Test Applies to Strict Liability Actions Involving Raw Materials

Garza v. Asbestos Corp. (2008) 161 Cal. App. 4th 651, 74 Cal. Rptr. 3d 359 , is discussed in § 190.73A[3][a].

Arena v. Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corp. (1998) 63 Cal. App. 4th 1178, 74 Cal. Rptr. 2d 580 , is discussed in § 190.116[4][a].

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Consumer Expectations Test Is Applicable Even if Matter Not of Common Experience

In Arena v. Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corp. (1998) 63 Cal. App. 4th 1178, 74 Cal. Rptr. 2d 580 , the plaintiffs brought an action against a manufacturer of asbestos insulation for injuries sustained due to occupational exposure to asbestos. The court of appeal rejected defendant's argument that the "consumer expectations" text did not apply. The court followed Morton v. Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corp. (1995) 33 Cal. App. 4th 1529, 40 Cal. Rptr. 2d 22 , and Sparks v. Owens-Ill., Inc. (1995) 32 Cal. App. 4th 461, 38 Cal. Rptr. 2d 739 , in applying the consumer expectations test to a supplier of raw asbestos. Whether the emission of asbestos-laden dust violates the common safety assumptions of the consumer is an appropriate method of determining if asbestos products are defective (63 Cal. App. 4th 1178, 1182) .

In Morton v. Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corp. (1995) 33 Cal. App. 4th 1529, 40 Cal. Rptr. 2d 22 , the plaintiffs brought an action in strict liability against a manufacturer of asbestos insulation for injuries sustained due to exposure to the insulation while working in a shipyard. After a trial, the jury found the defendant liable and responsible for 12 percent of the plaintiff's damages. On appeal, the defendant objected to the plaintiff's "consumer expectations" theory, contending that the trial court should have granted its motion for nonsuit because "consumer expectations" did not apply as a matter of law. The court of appeal affirmed, holding that the use of the "consumer expectation test" is not precluded in complex cases involving expert testimony. In this case, the plaintiff presented several witnesses who testified that they had no expectation that exposure to the insulation was unsafe. The court cited Sparks v. Owens-Ill., Inc. (1995) 32 Cal. App. 4th 461, 38 Cal. Rptr. 2d 739 , with approval. In addition, the court found that it was irrelevant under the "consumer expectation test" whether the scientific community was unaware of the dangers of asbestos because this did not relate to what an ordinary consumer expected in terms of safety (33 Cal. App. 4th 1529, 1534-1536).

In Bresnahan v. Chrysler Corp. (1995) 32 Cal. App. 4th 1559, 38 Cal. Rptr. 2d 446 , the plaintiffs brought an action in strict liability against manufacturers of allegedly defective automobile air bags. The trial court granted defendant's motion for nonsuit, which barred the plaintiff from pursuing the consumer expectations test. The court of appeal reversed, holding that the "consumer expectations test" is not precluded whenever "crashworthiness" or other complex product or technical questions are at issue. In this case, plaintiff's theory did not pose any peculiar esoteric circumstances that would bar use of the consumer expectations test. An ordinary consumer is equipped to form an expectation regarding the measure of safety to expect from an air bag during a minor rear-end collision (32 Cal. App. 4th 1559, 1567-1569) .

In Sparks v. Owens-Ill., Inc. (1995) 32 Cal. App. 4th 461, 38 Cal. Rptr. 2d 739 , the plaintiffs brought an action in strict liability against a manufacturer of asbestos insulation for injuries sustained due to exposure to the insulation while working on a ship. The trial court gave jury instructions specifying that the "consumer expectations test" be used to determine whether the insulation was defective, and the jury returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiff. The court of appeal affirmed, holding that the use of the "consumer expectation test" is not precluded in complex cases involving expert testimony. In this case, the plaintiff had every right to expect that the use of a seemingly innocuous product would not lead to a serious injury (32 Cal. App. 4th 461, 475-476) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
4. Design Defect

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.117

§ 190.117 Supporting Contention That Product Is Defective in Design--Test for Defective Design Focuses on Adequacy of Product and Not on Manufacturer's Conduct

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities supporting the contention that defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product (see, e.g., §§ 190.110 -190.116, 190.118, 190.119).]

EVIDENCE THAT DEFENDANT MANUFACTURER'S CONDUCT WAS REASONABLE IS IRRELEVANT BECAUSE THE DUAL ALTERNATIVE DESIGN DEFECT TEST FOCUSES ATTENTION ON THE ADEQUACY OF THE PRODUCT AND NOT WHETHER THE MANUFACTURER'S CONDUCT WAS REASONABLE.

A. Focus Is on Adequacy of Product and Not on Manufacturer's Conduct. The dual alternative design defect test explicitly focuses the trier of fact's attention on the adequacy of the product itself, rather than on the manufacturer's conduct, and places the burden on the manufacturer, rather than the plaintiff, to establish that because of the complexity of, and trade-offs implicit in, the design process, an injury-producing product should nevertheless not be found defective (Barker v. Lull Eng'g Co. (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 413, 432, 143 Cal. Rptr. 225, 573 P.2d 443 ; McLaughlin v. Sikorsky Aircraft (1983) 148 Cal. App. 3d 203, 208, 195 Cal. Rptr. 764).

B. Reasonableness of Manufacturer's Conduct Is Irrelevant. Because the immediate focus in strict liability cases is on the product itself and not on the system that produced it, the fact that the manufacturer took reasonable precautions in an attempt to design a safe product or otherwise acted as a reasonably prudent manufacturer would have under the circumstances will not preclude the imposition of liability under strict liability principles if, on hindsight, the trier of fact concludes that the product's design is unsafe to consumers, users, or bystanders (Barker v. Lull Eng'g Co. (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 413, 434, 143 Cal. Rptr. 225, 573 P.2d 443 ; McLaughlin v. Sikorsky Aircraft (1983) 148 Cal. App. 3d 203, 208, 195 Cal. Rptr. 764).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that the main focus in a design defect action is on the product itself, and thus evidence of the manufacturer's conduct in manufacturing the product is irrelevant.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication on the issue that defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should argue that the main issue is whether the product is defective, and that defendant should not be permitted to introduce evidence that defendant took every precaution in manufacturing the product [see, e.g., Barker v. Lull Eng'g Co. (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 413, 143 Cal. Rptr. 225, 573 P.2d 443 ; McLaughlin v. Sikorsky Aircraft (1983) 148 Cal. App. 3d 203, 195 Cal. Rptr. 764 (evidence that defendant had complied with military specifications in designing aircraft as irrelevant in determining whether benefits of design outweigh risks)].

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in §§ 190.120 and 190.240 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Focus Is on Adequacy of Product and Not on Manufacturer's Conduct

The facts and procedural background of Barker v. Lull Eng'g Co. (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 413, 143 Cal. Rptr. 225, 573 P.2d 443 , are discussed in § 190.110[3][a]. The California Supreme Court reversed the judgment for defendants, and held that the issue of whether a product's design is defective is determined under a dual alternative test. In addition, the Court explicitly stated that in a design defect case, the main focus is on whether the product itself is defective, and not whether the manufacturer took reasonable precautions to attempt to design a safe product (20 Cal. 3d 413, 432-434) .

In McLaughlin v. Sikorsky Aircraft (1983) 148 Cal. App. 3d 203, 195 Cal. Rptr. 764 , plaintiff members of the armed forces were injured when the combat and rescue helicopter in which they were riding while on active duty crashed. The plaintiffs brought an action in strict liability against the manufacturer of the helicopter. The trial court admitted evidence that defendant had complied with military specifications in designing the aircraft, but did not permit defendant to assert a defense of government contractor immunity. The jury returned a verdict for defendant, and plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal reversed the judgment, holding that it was prejudicial error to admit evidence that defendant had complied with military specifications in designing the aircraft, as that evidence was not relevant to the issue of whether the aircraft had a defect in design and manufacture. Furthermore, the court held that the trial court committed prejudicial error in refusing to instruct the jury that such evidence is irrelevant in determining whether the benefits of the design outweigh its inherent risks. In explaining its reasoning, the court cited Barker and stated that the focus in a design defect issue is on the product itself and not on the system that produced it. However, the court ruled that evidence that the design comported with the state of the art is relevant to the risk-benefits determination. The court also held that, on retrial, defendant would be entitled to establish a defense of government contractor immunity; the court indicated that the trial court should bifurcate the case and try the immunity issue first (148 Cal. App. 3d 203, 207-212) .

[b] Reasonableness of Manufacturer's Conduct Is Irrelevant

Barker v. Lull Eng'g Co. (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 413, 143 Cal. Rptr. 225, 573 P.2d 443 , is discussed in § 190.110[3][a].

McLaughlin v. Sikorsky Aircraft (1983) 148 Cal. App. 3d 203, 195 Cal. Rptr. 764 , is discussed in § 190.117[3][a].

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Focus Is on Adequacy of Product and Not on Manufacturer's Conduct

The facts and procedural background of Akers v. Kelley Co. (1985) 173 Cal. App. 3d 633, 219 Cal. Rptr. 513 , are discussed in §§ 190.115[3][a] and 190.116[3][a]. In affirming the judgment for plaintiff, the court of appeal held that the trial court had properly rejected an instruction on the risk-benefits test that had been proffered by defendant. The court explained that the rejected instruction would have erroneously injected into the case notions of the reasonableness of the manufacturer's conduct, which is not relevant when applying the risk-benefits test (173 Cal. App. 3d 633, 651-652) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
4. Design Defect

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.118

§ 190.118 Supporting Contention That Product Is Defective in Design--Design Defect--Lack of Safety Device as Evidence of Defect

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities supporting the contention that defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product (see, e.g., §§ 190.110 -190.117, 190.119).]

PLAINTIFF MAY PROVE THE EXISTENCE OF A DESIGN DEFECT BY INTRODUCING EVIDENCE THAT PLAINTIFF USED THE _____ [specify product] IN AN INTENDED OR REASONABLY FORESEEABLE MANNER AND THAT PLAINTIFF'S ATTEMPT TO AVOID INJURY WAS FRUSTRATED BY THE ABSENCE OF A SAFETY DEVICE.

A. Evidence That Plaintiff Used Product in Intended or Reasonably Foreseeable Manner and That Attempt to Avoid Injury Frustrated by Lack of Safety Device. The plaintiff in a design defect action may properly introduce evidence that he or she was injured while using the product in an intended or reasonably foreseeable manner and an attempt to avoid injury was frustrated by the absence of a particular safety device. This is particularly true when the injury that occurred is precisely the sort that the safety device is designed to prevent (Campbell v. General Motors Corp. (1982) 32 Cal. 3d 112, 126, 184 Cal. Rptr. 891, 649 P.2d 224 ; see Titus v. Bethlehem Steel Corp. (1979) 91 Cal. App. 3d 372, 381, 154 Cal. Rptr. 122).

[Optional] B. Case May Not Be Taken From Jury Because Only Evidence of Defect Is Lack of Safety Device. It is particularly appropriate that the jury be allowed to determine the inference to be drawn when the evidence indicates that a safety device, designed to prevent the very injury that occurred, was not present. To otherwise take the case from the jury simply because the plaintiff could not prove to a certainty that the device would have prevented the accident would erroneously enable the manufacturer to prevail on the basis of its failure to provide the safeguard (Campbell v.

General Motors Corp. (1982) 32 Cal. 3d 112, 121, 184 Cal. Rptr. 891, 649 P.2d 224).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a design defect may be established by showing that the product lacked a safety device that would have prevented or lessened the impact of the accident.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication on the issue that defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries, or supporting a motion for a new trial on the ground that the case should not have been taken from the jury. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should include facts showing that plaintiff was injured while using the product in an intended or reasonably foreseeable manner, that plaintiff attempted to avoid injury but was frustrated by the absence of a particular safety device, that had the safety device been present plaintiff would have avoided injury, and that the injury that occurred is precisely the sort that the safety device is designed to prevent [see, e.g., Campbell v. General Motors Corp. (1982) 32 Cal. 3d 112, 126, 184 Cal. Rptr. 891, 649 P.2d 224 (plaintiff had established prima facie case of design defect in bus by showing that bus lacked handrail as safety device)].

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in §§ 190.120 and 190.240 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Evidence That Plaintiff Used Product in Intended or Reasonably Foreseeable Manner and that Attempt to Avoid Injury Frustrated by Lack of Safety Device

The facts and procedural background of Campbell v. General Motors Corp. (1982) 32 Cal. 3d 112, 184 Cal. Rptr. 891, 649 P.2d 224 , are discussed in § 190.112[3][a]. The California Supreme Court reversed a judgment of nonsuit against plaintiff, holding that plaintiff had established a prima facie case of design defect in the bus by showing that the bus lacked an appropriate handrail as a safety device, and that the lack substantially caused her injuries. The Court ruled that a prima facie case of design defect may be shown by evidence that plaintiff was injured while using the product in an intended or reasonably foreseeable manner, and that plaintiff attempted to avoid injury but that attempt was frustrated by the lack of a safety device, especially when the injury is the sort that the safety device would be designed to prevent (32 Cal. 3d 112, 121-126) .

In Titus v. Bethlehem Steel Corp. (1979) 91 Cal. App. 3d 372, 154 Cal. Rptr. 122 , plaintiff sustained personal injuries while playing on an oil well pumping unit. Plaintiff brought an action in strict liability against the manufacturer of the pumping unit. At trial, plaintiff attempted to prove that the unit was defective because it lacked a safety device; however, the trial court refused to instruct the jury that "defect" could include lack of a safety device. The jury rendered a special verdict that the product was not defective, and judgment was entered for defendant. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed the judgment, holding that the trial court erred in failing to give the instruction. The court explained that a product may be found defective if it does not include a safety device necessary for its reasonable safety (91 Cal. App. 3d 372, 377-382) .

[b] Case May Not Be Taken From Jury Because Only Evidence of Defect Is Lack of Safety Device

The facts and procedural background of Campbell v. General Motors Corp. (1982) 32 Cal. 3d 112, 184 Cal. Rptr. 891, 649 P.2d 224 , are discussed in §§ 190.112[3][a] and 190.118[3][a]. The trial court had erroneously taken the case from the jury and decided that as a matter of law, no design defect had been shown. The Supreme Court reversed, holding that the jury should have been allowed to draw their own inferences from the evidence that the product lacked a safety device designed to prevent the injury that occurred. The Court explained that public policy is not served in taking the case from the jury merely because the plaintiff could not prove to a certainty that the safety device, if installed, would have prevented the plaintiff's injuries (32 Cal. 3d 112, 121) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
4. Design Defect

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.119

§ 190.119 Supporting Contention That Product Is Defective in Design--Product Itself Not Defective but Dangerous When Placed Adjacent to Machinery

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities supporting the contention that defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product (see, e.g., §§ 190.110 -190.118).]

THE DESIGN OF THE _____ [specify product] WAS DEFECTIVE BECAUSE, EVEN THOUGH THE PRODUCT ITSELF IS NOT DEFECTIVE, IT PRESENTED AN EXCESSIVE PREVENTABLE DANGER WHEN PLACED IN CLOSE PROXIMITY TO OTHER MACHINERY.

A. Design May Present Excessive Preventable Danger in Intended Use. A defective design claim is not necessarily defeated when the product itself is not defective and its design does not result in the product being dangerous if the product does become dangerous when placed adjacent to other machinery. If the product is part of a network of equipment, and its intended use includes regular cleaning or other activity that may involve the use of adjacent machinery, the product's design could present an excessive preventable danger in its intended use because of its proximity to that machinery (DeLeon v. Commercial Mfg. & Supply Co. (1983) 148 Cal. App. 3d 336, 343-344, 195 Cal. Rptr. 867).

[Optional] B. Less Safe Means of Using Product or Adjacent Machinery Should Be Taken Into Account by Designer of Product. The excessive preventable danger in the intended use of the product due to its proximity to other machinery should be contemplated by the designer of the product. Although the designer may contemplate that a user of the product will employ a safe method in using the product, it may nevertheless be foreseeable that a user will resort to an alternative, less safe means of using the product or the adjacent machinery (see DeLeon v. Commercial Manufacturing & Supply Co. (1983) 148 Cal. App. 3d 336, 343-344, 195 Cal. Rptr. 867).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a product is defective in its design because it presents an excessive preventable danger when placed adjacent to other machinery, even though the product itself is not defective.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication on the issue that defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should set forth facts showing that the product became dangerous when placed adjacent to other machinery and, if appropriate, that the product was part of a network of equipment whose intended use included regular cleaning or other activity that involved the use of the adjacent machinery. Counsel should also demonstrate how the product's design presented an excessive preventable danger in its intended use because of its proximity to that machinery, and why it was foreseeable that a user would resort to an alternative, less safe means of using the product or the adjacent machinery [see, e.g., DeLeon v. Commercial Mfg. & Supply Co. (1983) 148 Cal. App. 3d 336, 195 Cal. Rptr. 867 (placement of bin near conveyor belt and line shaft as presenting excessive preventable danger because one foreseeable method of cleaning bin was to stand on conveyor belt, which presented preventable danger of coming into contact with line shaft)].

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in §§ 190.120 and 190.240 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Design May Present Excessive Preventable Danger in Intended Use

In DeLeon v. Commercial Mfg. & Supply Co. (1983) 148 Cal. App. 3d 336, 195 Cal. Rptr. 867 , plaintiff sustained personal injuries when plaintiff's arm came in contact with an exposed overhead line shaft. Plaintiff had been standing on a conveyor belt that was adjacent to a holding bin, in order to clean the bin. Plaintiff brought an action in strict liability and negligence against the manufacturer of the bin. Defendant moved for summary judgment, which was granted, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. The court held that triable issues of fact existed as to whether the manufacturer was responsible for the design of the product, whether the plaintiff's accident was foreseeable, and whether the manufacturer had a duty to warn. The court explained that although the holding bin itself was not defective, and standing alone did not present any danger, its placement adjacent to the conveyor belt and line shaft as a part of a network of food processing equipment did present an excessive preventable danger in the intended use of the bin. Thus, the product might be found to be defective in design, even though the product itself, standing alone, contained no defect (148 Cal. App. 3d 336, 342-344) .

[b] Less Safe Means of Using Product or Adjacent Machinery Should Be Taken Into Account by Designer of Product

The facts and procedural background of DeLeon v. Commercial Mfg. & Supply Co. (1983) 148 Cal. App. 3d 336, 195 Cal. Rptr. 867 , are discussed in § 190.119[3][a]. In reversing the summary judgment for defendant, the court of appeal held that a triable issue on design defect had been presented, even though the cleaning method employed by plaintiff was not the safest method. The court held that although plaintiff may not have used the product as intended by its designer when she stood on other equipment to clean it, the plaintiff's action may nevertheless have been a foreseeable one. The court explained that even though the designer of the bin may contemplate that its cleaning will be by a safe method built into the machinery, it may be foreseeable that workers will resort to alternative, less safe means because of the time or trouble involved using the safe way (148 Cal. App. 3d 336, 344) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
4. Design Defect

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.119A

§ 190.119A Supporting Contention That Finding of Strict Liability Is Supported--Defective Product Was Substantial Factor in Causing Injury

[1] Form

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authority supporting the contention that defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries].

DEFENDANT IS STRICTLY LIABLE FOR PLAINTIFF'S INJURIES BECAUSE DEFENDANT'S DEFECTIVE PRODUCT WAS A PROXIMATE CAUSE OF PLAINTIFF'S INJURIES.

A. Defendant Is Strictly Liable if Defendant's Asbestos Product Was Substantial Factor in Plaintiff's Risk of Developing Cancer. In an asbestos case, the plaintiff need not prove that fibers from the defendant's product were among the ones that actually began the process of malignant cellular growth, as long as the plaintiff can show that exposure to the defendant's product was in reasonable medical probability a substantial factor in the plaintiff's risk of developing cancer (Rutherford v. Owens-Ill., Inc. (1997) 16 Cal. 4th 953, 982-983 Cal. Rptr. 2d 16, 941 P.2d 1203 ; Jones v. John Crane Inc. (2005) 132 Cal. App. 4th 990, 999, 35 Cal. Rptr. 3d 144).

B. Defendant Does Not Shift Burden of Production by Showing That Plaintiff Has No Personal Recall of Defendant's Product. The defendant does not shift the burden of production to the plaintiff by showing that the plaintiff has no personal recall of the defendant's product (Weber v. John Crane, Inc. (2006) 143 Cal. App. 4th 1433, 1439, 50 Cal. Rptr. 3d 71).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a finding of strict liability is supported because defendant's defective product was a substantial factor in causing plaintiff's injuries.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a motion for summary adjudication on the issue that the defective product was a proximate cause of the plaintiff's injury. These points and authorities may also be adopted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should include facts showing that the plaintiff's exposure to the defendant's asbestos products was a substantial factor contributing to the plaintiff's risk of developing lung cancer [see, e.g., Jones v. John Crane Inc. (2005) 132 Cal. App. 4th 990, 999, 35 Cal. Rptr. 3d 144] .

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in § 190.122 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Defendant Is Strictly Liable if Defendant's Asbestos Product Was Substantial Factor in Plaintiff's Risk of Developing Cancer

Rutherford v. Owens-Ill., Inc. (1997) 16 Cal. 4th 953, 982-983, 67 Cal. Rptr. 2d 16, 941 P.2d 1203 , is discussed in § 190.285.

In Jones v. John Crane, Inc. (2005) 132 Cal. App. 4th 990, 35 Cal. Rptr. 3d 144 , the plaintiffs' decedent was regularly exposed to asbestos products during his 27-year naval career. After being diagnosed with lung cancer, he brought a complaint against 46 defendants and settled with all but two of them. The jury returned a special verdict in favor of the plaintiffs, finding that the defendant's valve and pump packing were a substantial factor in causing the decedent's cancer. The court of appeal held that substantial evidence supported the verdict. The court rejected the defendant's contention that the decedent's total exposure to asbestos from its products was significantly less than a lifetime of exposure to ambient asbestos. Expert testimony supported the jury's finding that the decedent's exposure to the defendant's asbestos-containing products was a substantial factor contributing to the risk of his developing lung cancer--that is, that his lung cancer was caused by cumulative exposure, with each of many separate exposures having constituted substantial factors (132 Cal. App. 4th 990, 999) .

[b] Defendant Does Not Shift Burden of Product by Showing That Plaintiff Has No Personal Recall of Defendant's Product

In Weber v. John Crane, Inc. (2006) 143 Cal. App. 4th 1433, 50 Cal. Rptr. 3d 71 , the decedent developed mesothelioma after nearly 40 years of workplace exposure to asbestos-containing products. The trial court granted the defendant's motion for summary judgment on the ground that there was no triable issue of fact that its product was a cause of plaintiff's disease. The appellate court reversed, clarifying that a defendant does not shift the burden of production to the plaintiff by showing that the plaintiff has no personal recall of the defendant's product. Rather, the defendant must make an affirmative showing that the plaintiff will be unable to prove his or her case by any means. The fact that the plaintiff was unable to recall whether he had worked around defendant's product over 40 years earlier did not mean that he would be unable to recognize defendant's product if shown its packaging or logo. Defendant's evidence did not support an inference that the plaintiff did not possess and could not reasonably obtain the requisite evidence.

Thus, the burden did not shift to plaintiff to make a prima facie showing of a triable issue of material fact regarding his exposure to defendant's product (143 Cal. App. 4th 1433, 1439-1443) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
4. Design Defect

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.120

§ 190.120 Opposing Contention That Product Is Defective in Design--Unavoidably Dangerous Product

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities opposing the contention that defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product (see, e.g., §§ 190.82 -190.86, 190.164 -190.171).]

DEFENDANT _____ [name] IS NOT SUBJECT TO A STRICT LIABILITY ACTION BASED ON DESIGN DEFECT BECAUSE THE _____ [specify product] THAT INJURED PLAINTIFF IS AN UNAVOIDABLY DANGEROUS PRODUCT.

A. Strict Liability Inapplicable to Inherently Dangerous Product. There is no strict liability when the product is fit to be sold and reasonably safe for use but has inherent dangers that no human skill or knowledge has yet been able to eliminate (Garcia v. Joseph Vince Co. (1978) 84 Cal. App. 3d 868, 878, 148 Cal. Rptr. 843).

B. Prescription Drug Design Defect Claims Not Measured by Strict Liability Standards. A manufacturer's liability for a defectively designed prescription drug is not measured by standards of strict liability, but by Restatement (Second) of Torts § 402A, comment k (Brown v. Superior Court (1988) 44 Cal. 3d 1049, 1061, 245 Cal. Rptr. 412, 751 P.2d 470).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that defendant is subject to a products liability action based on design defect. The ground of opposition set forth is that the product that injured plaintiff is an unavoidably dangerous product, exempted from strict liability based on design defect. There is some overlap between this form and the form in § 190.121, which opposes a strict products liability action on the ground that the product that damaged the plaintiff was a common consumer product, such as sugar or tobacco, used routinely by consumers with the knowledge that the product has some inherently unsafe aspects. For a form regarding the inapplicability of strict liability for design defects to manufacturers of "unavoidably unsafe" products, see § 190.90.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a demurrer or a motion for summary judgment on the issue that defendant is subject to strict liability. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should include facts showing that the product is fit to be sold and reasonably safe, but that it has inherent unavoidable dangers. For example, if the product is an article of sports equipment for use in a combat sport, such as a fencing mask, counsel should show that the product was safely made, but that its use is inherently dangerous due to the nature of the sport [see, e.g., Garcia v. Joseph Vince Co. (1978) 84 Cal. App. 3d 868, 878, 148 Cal. Rptr. 843] .

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be used to oppose the contention supported by the points and authorities in §§ 190.110 -190.119.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Strict Liability Inapplicable to Inherently Dangerous Product

In Garcia v. Joseph Vince Co. (1978) 84 Cal. App. 3d 868, 148 Cal. Rptr. 843 , a fencer was injured when his opponent's saber broke through his mask during a college fencing meet. Evidence showed that the mask was penetrated by a defectively sharp and narrow blade. The participants used sabers produced by two different manufacturers, and after the injury occurred, the one that injured plaintiff was placed with all the other sabers and never specifically identified. Plaintiff brought an action against the manufacturer of the mask, and the two manufacturers of the sabers, one of which also manufactured the mask. The mask was produced at trial. The trial court entered judgment of nonsuit in favor of both defendants, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. With respect to the mask manufacturer, it held that there is no strict liability when the product is fit to be sold and reasonably safe for use, but has inherent dangers that no human skill or knowledge has yet been able to eliminate (84 Cal. App. 3d 868, 878) . The court noted that the case against each defendant presented different issues. With respect to the manufacturer of the saber, plaintiff could not sufficiently identify which defendant produced it, and therefore failed to meet his burden of proof on that issue. With regard to the manufacturer of the mask, the issue is whether evidence of an injury, received while engaged in an inherently dangerous sporting event that protective equipment was intended to guard against, establishes a prima facie case of strict liability for improper design against the manufacturer of the equipment (84 Cal. App. 3d 868, 872) . Under the general rule, a manufacturer is strictly liable in tort when an article placed on the market, with knowledge that it is to be used without inspection for defects, proves to have a defect that causes injury to a human being. There was no evidence whatsoever suggesting any defect in the manufacture of the mask (84 Cal. App. 3d 868, 876) . Plaintiff failed to establish a prima facie case in failing to prove that the mask was used as intended or in a reasonably foreseeable manner, and in failing to prove that the presence of a particular design feature about which he complained caused the injury. The court noted that the evidence was clear that the mask was not intended to be used against a sharp, pointed, or defective blade, and rejected plaintiff's contention that the use of defective blade is a foreseeable risk in a fencing match (84 Cal. App. 3d 868, 877) . The court also rejected plaintiff's contention that the mask was defective, because the evidence showed it to be adequate protection against the type of weapon appropriate for fencing. Considering that the rules required a rounded saber, the mask was subjected to a use for which it was not intended (84 Cal. App. 3d 868, 878) . Even assuming a reasonably foreseeable use of the mark, plaintiff failed to present sufficient evidence of a design to go to the jury (84 Cal. App. 3d 868, 879) .

[b] Prescription Drug Design Defect Claims Not Measured by Strict Liability Standards

Brown v. Superior Court (1988) 44 Cal. 3d 1049, 245 Cal. Rptr. 412, 751 P.2d 470 , is discussed in § 190.90[3][a].

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Strict Liability Inapplicable to Inherently Dangerous Product

The facts and procedural history of Johnson v. Honeywell Int'l Inc. (2009) 179 Cal. App. 4th 549, 101 Cal. Rptr. 3d 726 , are discussed in § 190.245A[3][a]. On remand, the case proceeded against the manufacturers of the R-22 refrigerant. The plaintiff filed an amended complaint, bringing causes of action for, inter alia, strict liability on a design defect risk-benefit theory. The defendants successfully demurred to the complaint in part based on the sophisticated user defense.

The Court of Appeal reversed the judgment and remanded the case for further proceedings, holding that the sophisticated user defense did not apply to plaintiff's design defect cause of action. The defendants also argued that the important of commercial air conditioning in modern society warranted treating refrigerants as an unavoidably safe product. The Court of Appeal refused to do so. Comment k is based on public policy considerations, and the evidentiary record on demurrer was inadequate to analyze and decide the issue (179 Cal. App. 4th 549, 562) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
4. Design Defect

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.121

§ 190.121 Opposing Contention That Product Is Defective--Inherently Unsafe Common Consumer Product

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate memorandum of points and authorities opposing the contention that defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product (see, e.g., §§ 190.82-190.86, 190.164-190.171).]

DEFENDANT _____ [name] IS NOT SUBJECT TO A STRICT LIABILITY ACTION BASED ON _____ [specify, e.g., DESIGN DEFECT and/or FAILURE TO WARN] BECAUSE THE _____ [specify product] THAT INJURED PLAINTIFF IS AN INHERENTLY UNSAFE COMMON CONSUMER PRODUCT WITHIN THE MEANING OF CIVIL CODE SECTION 1714.45.

Strict Liability Based on Design Defect or Failure to Warn Prohibited if Product Is Inherently Unsafe Common Consumer Product. In a products liability action, excepting actions based on manufacturing defects or breach of express warranty, a manufacturer or seller is not liable if the product is inherently unsafe and the product is known to be unsafe by the ordinary consumer who consumes the product with the ordinary knowledge common to the community and the product is a common consumer product intended for personal consumption, such as sugar, castor oil, alcohol, or butter (Civ. Code § 1714.45; Richards v. Owens-Ill., Inc. (1997) 14 Cal. 4th 985, 1003, 60 Cal. Rptr. 2d 103, 928 P.2d 1181).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that defendant is subject to a strict products liability action based on any theory other than a manufacturing defect or breach of express warranty. The ground of opposition set forth is that the product that allegedly damaged the plaintiff is a common consumer product that is used routinely by consumers with the knowledge that it has some harmful aspects.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should include facts showing that the defendant's product is known to be unsafe by the ordinary consumer, and that the ordinary consumer nonetheless consumes the product. Counsel should also attempt to argue that the defendant's product is a common consumer product intended for personal consumption, such as sugar. Civ. Code § 1714.45 no longer exempts tobacco manufacturers and their successors from liability in products liability actions for the manufacture and sale of tobacco products. However, sellers or distributors of tobacco products remain exempt.

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case these points and authorities may be used to oppose the contention supported by the points and authorities in §§ 190.110 -190.119.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Strict Liability Based on Design Defect or Failure to Warn Prohibited if Product Is Inherently Unsafe Common Consumer Product

In Richards v. Owens-Ill., Inc. (1997) 14 Cal. 4th 985, 60 Cal. Rptr. 2d 103, 928 P.2d 1181 , a retired employee for Mare Island Naval Shipyard sued Owens-Illinois, Inc. and numerous other manufacturers of asbestos products, claiming respiratory injury and fear of cancer arising from exposure to asbestos on the job. The complaint alleged causes of action based on negligence, strict liability for a "defective" product, and negligent and intentional infliction of emotional distress. Richard's case was consolidated for trial with similar claims of four other plaintiffs. Defendant sought permission to establish that, in addition to plaintiff's own "negligence" for smoking and the "fault assigned to other asbestos manufacturers and employers, cigarette manufacturers also shared "fault" for plaintiff's injuries because they supplied the harmful tobacco products that plaintiff had consumed. Defendant urged that, under Prop. 51 [Civ. Code § 1431 et seq.], its liability for plaintiff's noneconomic damages should be reduced by the proportionate fault to tobacco companies, even though the tobacco companies were immune from direct suit under former Civ. Code § 1714.45. The trial court ruled that "no tobacco company defense" could be presented and excluded all proffered evidence concerning the fault of tobacco manufacturers. It also refused to allow a verdict form in which fault could be apportioned to these entities. The jury returned a verdict for plaintiff and apportioned fault among plaintiff, defendant, and various other entities to which the jury was allowed to assign fault. Defendants appealed.

The court of appeals reversed the judgment, holding that the trial court's denial of the proffered "tobacco company defense" was prejudicial error. The court concluded that a defendant in an asbestos action may reduce its own liability for noneconomic damages by proving that tobacco suppliers share fault for lung injuries suffered by a plaintiff who smoked. Richards petitioned for review, raising only the "tobacco company defense" issue. Owens-Illinois also confined its answer to the "tobacco company defense" and the Supreme Court of California chose to confine their decision to the same issue.

The California Supreme Court reversed the judgment of the court of appeal and remanded for further proceedings. The Court concluded that to the extent former Civ. Code § 1714.45 afforded tobacco suppliers immunity from direct liability on the grounds that their immunized conduct breaches no duty and constitutes no tort, the statute also precludes indirect assignment of comparative fault to such entities for the purposes of Prop. 51, which abolished the system of joint and several liability (14 Cal. 4th 985, 1001) . In making this decision, the Court applied the legislative intent of several analogous and more expansive provisions and determined that the legislature intended that § 1714.45 abrogate existing tort rules governing the duty of care, causation, and fault. The premise underlying § 1714.45 is that suppliers of products that are inherently unsafe, but that the public wishes to have available despite awareness of their dangers, should not be responsible in tort for harm caused by their products (14 Cal. 4th 985, 1002) .

NOTE:

After the California Supreme Court's decision in Richards, Civ. Code § 1714.45 was amended to remove tobacco manufacturers and their successors from its protections. However, the sale or distribution of tobacco products by persons other than manufacturers remains exempt under that statute.

Effective January 1, 1998, the California legislature amended § 1714.45 to read, "(b) This section does not exempt the manufacture or sale of tobacco products by tobacco manufacturers and their successors in interest from products liability actions ... ." The former version of § 1714.45(a)--known as the immunity statute--continues to shield tobacco companies in products liability actions for conduct they engaged in during the ten-year period ending Jan. 1, 1998. However, the immunity statute does not bar claims that tobacco companies manipulated the addictive properties of cigarettes via additives and controlled nicotine delivery through adding ammonia. As for the tobacco companies' conduct before the immunity period, however, liability is determined by applying general tort principles [see §§ 190.80, 190.81].

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
4. Design Defect

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.122

§ 190.122 Opposing Contention That Finding of Strict Liability Is Supported--Alleged Defects Did Not Cause or Contribute to Injury

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities opposing the contention that defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries (see, e.g., §§ 190.82 -190.90, 190.123, 190.124, 190.164 -190.171).]

DEFENDANT CANNOT BE HELD STRICTLY LIABLE FOR PLAINTIFF'S INJURIES ON A DESIGN DEFECT THEORY BECAUSE THE DEFECT(S) ALLEGED WAS/WERE NOT THE PROXIMATE CAUSE OF PLAINTIFF'S INJURIES.

A. No Strict Liability Based on Design Defect if Defect Did Not Cause Injury. Total failure to show that a defect caused or contributed to the injury cannot support a finding of strict liability based on design defect (Matthews v. Hyster Co. (9th Cir. 1988) 854 F.2d 1166, 1168-1169) .

B. Required Allegations Regarding Causation. To sufficiently allege causation, the plaintiff must allege that: (1) the plaintiff was exposed to each of the products claimed to have caused a specific illness; (2) each product caused the injury; (3) as a result of the exposure, toxins entered the plaintiff's body; (4) the plaintiff suffered from a specific illness, and each toxin that entered the plaintiff's body was a substantial factor in bringing about, prolonging, or aggravating that illness; and (5) each toxin that was absorbed was manufactured or supplied by a named defendant (Bockrath v. Aldrich Chem. Co. (1999) 21 Cal. 4th 71, 82, 86 Cal. Rptr. 2d 846, 980 P.2d 398).

C. Plaintiff Bears Burden of Proving Causation. In products liability actions, the plaintiff must prove that the defective product supplied by the defendant was a substantial factor in bringing about his or her injury (Rutherford v. Owens-Ill., Inc. (1997) 16 Cal. 4th 953, 968, 67 Cal. Rptr. 2d 16, 941 P.2d 1203).

D. Plaintiff Must Prove That Defective Product Was Substantial Factor in Causing His or Her Injuries. California has adopted substantial factor test for cause-in-fact determinations (Rutherford v. Owens-Ill., Inc. (1997) 16 Cal. 4th 953, 968, 67 Cal. Rptr. 2d 16, 941 P.2d 1203 ; Whiteley v. Philip Morris, Inc. (2004) 117 Cal. App. 4th 635, 694-703, 11 Cal. Rptr. 3d 807 ; Lineaweaver v. Plant Insulation Co. (1995) 31 Cal. App. 4th 1409, 1416, 37 Cal. Rptr. 2d 902).

E. Mere Possibility of Exposure Does Not Create Triable Issue of Fact on Causation. The mere possibility of exposure to the defendant's product does not create a triable issue of fact on causation (Andrews v. Foster Wheeler LLC (2006) 138 Cal. App. 4th 96, 108, 41 Cal. Rptr. 3d 229).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that defendant is subject to a products liability action based on design defect. The ground of opposition set forth is that plaintiff has failed to show that the alleged defect caused or contributed to the injury [see Matthews v. Hyster Co. (9th Cir. 1988) 854 F.2d 1166, 1168-1169] .

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a motion for directed verdict against the plaintiff [see, e.g., Matthews v. Hyster Co. (9th Cir. 1988) 854 F.2d 1166, 1167] .

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should include facts showing the lack of causation between the alleged defects and injury.

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in § 190.119A may be used to oppose the contentions supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Strict Liability Based on Design Defect if Defect Did Not Cause Injury

In Matthews v. Hyster Co. (9th Cir. 1988) 854 F.2d 1166 , a longshoreman brought a products liability action against the manufacturer of a forklift to recover damages for injuries that he incurred while operating the forklift. Plaintiff testified that he stepped on the brake while driving the forklift, and the forklift failed to stop. The forklift hit a truck, and plaintiff was consequently injured. Plaintiff alleged four separate design defects in the forklift: lack of a brake in the "inching pedal" (a type of clutch); lack of warning about the absence of that brake; defective design of the emergency brake; and failure of the vehicle manual to prescribe maintenance sufficient to prevent contaminants from entering the brake system. Defendant moved for directed verdict against the plaintiff on the ground that plaintiff failed to show that any of the alleged defects caused or contributed to his injuries. The district court granted the motion, and plaintiff appealed.

The federal court of appeals affirmed, holding that a total failure to show that the defect caused or contributed to the accident precludes a finding of strict products liability. The court noted that even if the forklift were defective for lack of a brake in the inching pedal, there was no evidence that the lack of that brake confused the plaintiff, or that the brake's absence was in any way the cause of the accident (854 F.2d 1166, 1168) . Inasmuch as plaintiff testified that he did not think that the inching pedal contained a brake, and that he did not depress the inching pedal expecting it to stop, the lack of warning on the forklift about the presence of a brake in the inching pedal did not contribute to the accident. Plaintiff also testified that he did not attempt to use the emergency brake; and substantial evidence did not exist to prove that the design of the emergency brake caused or contributed to the accident. Finally, no evidence of defective maintenance, or of any contaminant in the brake system was produced. (The court also affirmed with respect to a negligence cause of action based on the same conduct underlying the strict liability cause of action, holding that causation must be proved to link the negligence to the accident that occurred.) (854 F.2d 1166, 1169) .

[b] Required Allegations Regarding Causation

In Bockrath v. Aldrich Chem. Co. (1999) 21 Cal. 4th 71, 86 Cal. Rptr. 2d 846, 980 P.2d 398 , a plaintiff who contracted multiple myeloma brought a suit against at least 55 defendants, most of whom were manufacturers of products to which he was exposed during the course of his employment. His complaint included causes of action for negligence, strict liability, failure to warn, design defect, and fraudulent concealment. The court dismissed the complaint, and the court of appeal affirmed. The Supreme Court granted review to decide how a complaint alleging harmful long-term exposure to multiple toxins must plead causation.

The court explained that in Rutherford v. Owens-Ill., Inc. (1997) 16 Cal. 4th 953, 67 Cal. Rptr. 2d 16 , it had addressed the question of proof of causation in the context of products liability actions, explaining that the "plaintiff must prove that the defective products supplied by the defendant were a substantial factor in bringing about his or her injury." In cases like the instant one, presenting complicated and possibly esoteric medical causation issues, the standard of proof ordinarily required is "a reasonable medical probability based upon competent expert testimony that the defendant's conduct contributed to [the] plaintiff's injuries." Again citing Rutherford, the court stated that "[t]he substantial factor standard is a relatively broad one, requiring only that the contribution of the individual cause be more than negligible or theoretical." The Supreme Court of California remanded the cause to give plaintiff the opportunity to allege that each defendant's product was a substantial factor, as that term was defined in Rutherford, in causing his multiple myeloma.

To allege that each defendant's product was a substantial factor in causing his disease, the plaintiff would have to: (1) allege that he was exposed to each of the toxic materials claimed to have caused a specific illness; (2) identify each product that allegedly caused the injury; (3) allege that as a result of the exposure, the toxins entered his body; (4) allege that he suffers from a specific illness, and that each toxin that entered his body was a substantial factor in bringing about, prolonging, or aggravating that illness; and (5) except in a case governed by market share liability, allege that each toxic he absorbed was manufactured or supplied by a named defendant (21 Cal. 4th 71, 78-80, 86 Cal. Rptr. 2d 846, 980 P.2d 398).

[c] Plaintiff Bears Burden of Proving Causation

In Rutherford v. Owens-Ill., Inc. (1997) 16 Cal. 4th 953, 67 Cal. Rptr. 2d 16, 941 P.2d 1203 , the Supreme Court rejected an alternative-liability burden shifting instruction in asbestos cases and set forth the requirements of proof in asbestos actions. The court held that in a cause of action for asbestos-related injuries, the plaintiff must establish some threshold exposure to the defendant's defective asbestos-containing products, and must establish in a reasonable medical probability that a particular exposure or series of exposures was a "legal cause" of his or her injury--that is, was a substantial factor in bringing about the injury. In asbestos-related cancer cases, the plaintiff need not prove that fibers from defendant's product were the ones, or among the ones, that actually began the process of malignant cellular growth. Instead, the plaintiff may meet the burden of proving that exposure to defendant's product was a substantial factor causing the illness by showing that in reasonable medical probability it was a substantial factor contributing to the plaintiff's or decedent's risk of developing cancer.

The trial court had instructed the liability phase jury pursuant to Solano County Complex Asbestos Litigating General Order No. 21.000, which shifted the burden of proof to defendants in asbestos cases tried on a products liability theory to prove that their products were not a legal cause of plaintiff's injuries, providing the plaintiff first established certain predicate facts.

The Supreme Court held that the instruction shifting the burden of proof to defendants is unnecessary and incorrect in cases of asbestos-related cancer. Although proof of causation in such cases always presents inherent practical difficulties, no insuperable barriers prevent an asbestos-related cancer plaintiff from demonstrating that exposure to defendant's asbestos product was, in reasonable medical probability, a substantial factor in causing or contributing to his or her risk of developing cancer. Thus, the fundamental justification for a burden shift on causation--that is, that without such a shift all defendants might escape liability and the plaintiff be left "remediless"--was lacking. Asbestos plaintiffs can met their burden of proving legal causation under traditional tort principles.

Next, the court explained that the standardized instructions defining cause-in-fact causation under the substantial factor test [BAJI No. 3.76] and the doctrine of concurrent proximate legal causation [BAJI No. 3.77] must be augmented by an additional instruction for asbestos-induced cancer cases. Four factors necessitated a departure from the standard instructions: (1) the scientific uncertainty regarding the biological mechanisms by which inhalation of asbestos fibers lead to lung cancer; (2) the uncertainty that frequently exists whether a plaintiff was even exposed to dangerous asbestos fibers produced by a particular defendant; (3) the question of whether the risk of cancer created by exposure to the particular asbestos-containing product was significant enough to be considered a legal cause of the disease; and (4) the "impossibility" of proving "the unknowable path of a given asbestos fiber."

To rectify the shortcomings in BAJI Nos. 3.76 and 3.77, the jury must also be instructed that "the plaintiff need not prove that fibers from the defendant's product were the ones or among the ones, that actually began the process of malignant cellular growth. Instead, the plaintiff may meet the burden of proving that exposures to defendant's product was a substantial factor causing the illness by showing that in reasonable medical probability it was a substantial factor contributing to plaintiff's or decedent's risk of developing cancer." However, the giving of the burden-shifting instruction in this case was harmless (16 Cal. 4th 953, 957-958, 67 Cal. Rptr. 2d 16).

[d] Plaintiff Must Prove That Defective Product Was Substantial Factor in Causing His or Her Injuries

Rutherford v. Owens-Ill., Inc. (1997) 16 Cal. 4th 953, 67 Cal. Rptr. 2d 16, 941 P.2d 1203 , is discussed in § 190.122[3][c].

In Whiteley v. Philip Morris, Inc. (2004) 117 Cal. App. 4th 635, 11 Cal. Rptr. 3d 807 (2004) , the defendants conceded on appeal that the record contained substantial evidence that smoking their cigarettes caused plaintiff's lung cancer. However, they argued that the plaintiff failed to prove that any negligent design of the cigarettes was a cause of her injury.

The court of appeal agreed. Even accepting the plaintiff's argument that Rutherford v. Owens-Illinois, Inc. supplied the appropriate standard of causation, the plaintiff failed to produce sufficient evidence to satisfy the Rutherford formulation. That is, there was no substantial evidence from which the jury could conclude that the negligent design of cigarettes was "in reasonable medical probability" a "substantial factor" contributing to the plaintiff's risk of developing lung cancer. During the trial, the plaintiff had presented expert testimony that it was feasible to reduce the cancer-causing potential of cigarettes by removing carcinogens from the smoke. However, this evidence was insufficient to support the finding that such negligence was a "cause" of the plaintiff's injuries. The plaintiff's expert witnesses did not attempt to quantify the likelihood that the asserted design defects of cigarettes--as distinguished from smoking cigarettes in general--contributed to the plaintiff's developing lung cancer. Their testimony concerning nicotine addiction did not rise to the level of a "reasonable medical probability" that this negligent design was a substantial factor in causing the plaintiff's lung cancer. Nor did the plaintiff present evidence from which the jury could assume that if the suggested design changes had been made, the plaintiff would have smoked the safer cigarettes, smoked less, or quit altogether (117 Cal. App. 4th 635, 694-703) .

In Lineaweaver v. Plant Insulation Co. (1995) 31 Cal. App. 4th 1409, 37 Cal. Rptr. 2d 902 , a negligence case, the court stated that in the context of asbestos litigation, a plaintiff must demonstrate exposure to defendant's product and biological processes from the exposure which result in disease. In evaluating whether exposure was a substantial factor in causing asbestos disease, the standard should be the same as used in other negligence cases: is there "is there a reasonable medical probability based upon competent expert testimony that the defendant's conduct contributed to plaintiff's injury" (31 Cal. App. 4th 1409, 1416, 37 Cal. Rptr. 2d 902).

[e] Mere Possibility of Exposure Does Not Create Triable Issue of Fact on Causation

In Andrews v. Foster Wheeler LLC (2006) 138 Cal. App. 4th 96, 41 Cal. Rptr. 3d 229 , a sailor claimed he developed an asbestos-related disease after more than 20 years of workplace exposure to asbestos. He admitted in deposition that he did not know if he had ever been present when anyone was working with defendant's asbestos products. The defendant submitted plaintiffs' nonresponsive answers to special interrogatories designed to elicit information about the plaintiff's exposure to defendant's product. Specifically, the plaintiff submitted the names of coworkers and supervisors and provided a list of depositions, but did not disclose any facts known by those persons or contained in the documents. In light of the interrogatory questions, plaintiff's failure to provide any information admitted that he had no further information. The defendant thus met its initial burden of making a prima facie showing that a triable issue of fact did not exist regarding causation. Expert declarations submitted in response to defendant's summary judgment motion, suggesting that plaintiff could have been exposed to asbestos fibers released into the air from condensers many years before he came aboard, amounted to little more than speculation. The court affirmed the summary judgment granted in favor of the defendant (138 Cal. App. 4th 96, 108) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] No Strict Liability Based on Design Defect if Defect Did Not Cause Injury

In Kennedy v. Southern Cal. Edison Co. (9th Cir. 2001) 268 F.3d 763 , the decedent developed chronic myelogenous leukemia. The plaintiffs claimed that decedent's husband had brought home microscopic particles of radioactive material, known as "fuel fleas," from a nuclear generating station. They alleged negligence on the part of the utility and brought a products liability claim alleging faulty production of nuclear fuel rods. After the California Supreme Court issued Rutherford v. Owens-Illinois, Inc. [see § 190.122[3][c]], the plaintiffs requested a Rutherford instruction. The court refused their requests, and the jury returned a verdict for both defendants. In its initial panel opinion, the Ninth Circuit expanded Rutherford to apply to single-defendant hazardous substances cases where the defense of alternative possible causes is raised. The court withdrew its opinion and granted rehearing. It then held that no reasonable jury could have found that fuel fleas were a substantial factor in causing decedent's leukemia. Thus, the district court's failure to give the Rutherford instruction was harmless error. The court explained that the plaintiff needed to prove by a preponderance of the evidence that radiation from the station was a substantial factor in causing the decedent's leukemia. In other words, all the jury need have concluded, if given a Rutherford instruction, was that it was more probable than not that in reasonable medical likelihood the radiation was a substantial factor in contributing to her risk of developing leukemia. The radiation could only have been a substantial factor if it played more than an "infinitesimal" or "theoretical" part in bringing about the disease. No reasonable juror, however, could have made this finding, because the defendant introduced uncontroverted expert testimony that, if decedent had been exposed to "fuel fleas" as under plaintiffs' scenario, there was only a one in 100,000 chance that her disease was caused by the exposure. The contribution of the fuel fleas, even assuming exposure and ingestion, only played in infinitesimal or theoretical part in bringing about her injury (268 F.3d 763, 769-771) .

The facts and procedural background of Soule v. General Motors Corp. (1994) 8 Cal. 4th 548, 34 Cal. Rptr. 2d 607, 882 P.2d 298 , are discussed in § 190.124[3][a]. The Court held that defendant's proffered instruction, that any design defect could not be a legal cause of plaintiff's injuries if the collision would have caused the same injuries regardless of the defect, was a correct statement of the law (8 Cal. 4th 548, 572) . The trial court erred in refusing this instruction. However, the Court held that the error was harmless given counsel's arguments to the jury, and the other instructions on causation given by the trial court (8 Cal. 4th 548, 582-583) .

In Hunter v. Pacific Mech. Corp. (1995) 37 Cal. App. 4th 1282, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 335 , the plaintiff, a bricklayer sued asbestos manufacturers and installers for alleged asbestos-related injuries suffered as a result of working at various jobsites. One defendant moved for summary judgment on the ground that there was insufficient evidence that defendant was at the same jobsite as the plaintiff. The trial court granted the defendant's motion. The court of appeal affirmed, holding that the bricklayer's deposition testimony failed to demonstrate a material issue of fact relating to causation. The mere fact that the defendant was potentially present at the jobsite was insufficient to present an issue of triable fact as to causation. Instead, the record "offers only speculation and conjecture" (37 Cal. App. 4th 1282, 1289) .

In Visueta v. General Motors Corp. (1991) 234 Cal. App. 3d 1609, 286 Cal. Rptr. 402 , a wrongful death action was filed by the heirs of the victim whose car was struck by an oncoming truck. The truck owner and driver cross-complained against the truck manufacturer, but the trial court granted the manufacturer's motion for summary judgment. The trial court found that no causal relationship existed as a matter of law between the victim's death and a claimed design defect in the inaccessible placement of the emergency parking brake. The court of appeal affirmed, emphasizing evidence that the brake had not been maintained and was inoperable, and the driver's admission that he never used it (234 Cal. App. 3d 1609, 1616-1617) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
4. Design Defect

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.123

§ 190.123 Opposing Contention That Finding of Strict Liability Is Supported--Particular Product Used by Plaintiff Not Shown to Be Defective--Product Has Not Malfunctioned

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities opposing the contention that defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries (see, e.g., §§ 190.82 -190.90, 190.122, 190.124, 190.164 -190.171).]

DEFENDANT CANNOT BE HELD STRICTLY LIABLE FOR PLAINTIFF'S INJURIES ON A DESIGN-DEFECT THEORY, BECAUSE PLAINTIFF HAS NOT PROVED THAT THE _____ [describe product] USED BY PLAINTIFF HAS MALFUNCTIONED, WHICH IS ESSENTIAL TO ESTABLISH LIABILITY FOR AN INJURY CAUSED BY THE ALLEGED DEFECT.

Plaintiff Must Show Product Has Malfunctioned. When a plaintiff alleges a product is defective, proof that the product has malfunctioned is essential to establish liability for an injury caused by the defect (Khan v. Shiley Inc. (1990) 217 Cal. App. 3d 848, 855, 266 Cal. Rptr. 106).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that defendant is subject to a products liability action based on design defect. The ground of opposition set forth is that plaintiff has failed to show that the product malfunctioned and hence has failed to show that the injuries were caused by the defects alleged [see Khan v. Shiley Inc. (1990) 217 Cal. App. 3d 848, 855, 266 Cal. Rptr. 106] .

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with

points and authorities supporting a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication of the issue that a cause of action for strict liability based on design defect cannot lie if plaintiff fails to prove that the product has malfunctioned.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, and in any other relevant points and authorities combined with this form, to show the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should state facts showing that plaintiff has failed to show that the particular product used has malfunctioned.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Plaintiff Must Show Product Has Malfunctioned

In Khan v. Shiley Inc. (1990) 217 Cal. App. 3d 848, 266 Cal. Rptr. 106 , a heart patient brought an action against the manufacturer of a heart valve based on a defect in the valve. Two years after receiving a heart-valve implant, plaintiff learned from her surgeon that the heart-valve manufacturer was recalling those valves because of their propensity to fracture. Numerous malfunctions had been reported, resulting in the deaths of the patients in whom the valve had been implanted. She brought an action against the manufacturer, alleging negligence, fraud and misrepresentation, breach of warranty, strict liability in tort, and intentional infliction of emotional distress. The complaint acknowledged that plaintiff's heart valve had "not yet malfunctioned," but alleged that it was defective and likely to malfunction, the apprehension about which caused the plaintiff emotional distress. Defendant filed a motion for summary judgment, arguing that the action was premature because there was no indication that the particular valve in question had failed or would fail. The trial court granted the motion, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed with respect to the causes of action in negligence, breach of warranty, and strict liability, and reversed with respect to the cause of action in fraud. Plaintiff contended that the trial court erred in finding that "malfunction" is an element in a products liability lawsuit, asserting instead that the owner of a product that functions as intended, but contains an inherent defect that may cause the product to fail in the future, has an action against the manufacturer. The court of appeal noted that regardless which theory of recovery is used, when a plaintiff alleges that a product is defective, proof that the product has malfunctioned is essential to establish liability for an injury caused by the defect (217 Cal. App. 3d 848, 855) . A manufacturer is strictly liable in tort when the manufacturer, knowing that an article is to be used without inspection for defects, places it on the market and it proves to have a defect that causes injury to a human being. The court stated that this essential element of causation was missing in this case. Plaintiff's alleged injury was not caused by any defect in the valve. Rather, it was caused, if at all, by the knowledge that the valve might, at some future time, fracture (217 Cal. App. 3d 848, 855) . The court rejected plaintiff's argument that the California Supreme Court's decision in Molien v. Kaiser Found. Hosps. (1980) 27 Cal. 3d 916, 167 Cal. Rptr. 831, 616 P.2d 813 , entitled her to a jury determination of her claims for emotional injuries. In Molien [see Ch. 153, Mental Suffering and Emotional Distress], the Court stated that damages for emotional distress could be recovered, in the absence of physical injury, by an individual who is a direct victim of the defendant's negligent conduct, if it was foreseeable that serious emotional distress would result from the negligent conduct. The court of appeal noted, however, that negligent infliction of emotional distress is not an independent tort. Damages for severe emotional distress are recoverable in a negligence action when they result from the breach of a duty owed the plaintiff that is assumed by the defendant or imposed on the defendant as a matter of law, or that arises out of a relationship between the two. The court rejected plaintiff's contention that she was "the quintessential direct victim" as contemplated by Molien, holding that she "has not yet been victimized." In the absence of product malfunction, plaintiff cannot establish that defendant breached any duty to her. The court also rejected application of Barth v. Firestone Tire and Rubber Co. (N.D. Cal. 1987) 673 F. Supp. 1466 , to this case. In Barth, a class-action suit, an employee exposed to industrial chemicals alleged both injury to his immune system, rendering him more susceptible to developing cancer, and injury through the increased risk of cancer (217 Cal. App. 3d 848, 856) . Thus, the emotional injuries alleged by the plaintiff in Barth constituted an element of damages for the underlying legal injury. By contrast, in this case, plaintiff's alleged emotional injuries are not a basis for recovery absent a ground for imposing liability pursuant to a recognized cause of action. The court held that as long as the valve continues to function, no cause of action exists under any product-liability theory. The court also stated that the causes of action in negligence (failure to warn) and breach of warranty fail for the same reason--that is, they cannot be premised on the risk that the valve may malfunction in the future (217 Cal. App. 3d 848, 857) . The court proceeded to distinguish the cause of action in fraud, in that it involved the defendant's conduct rather than the safety of the product, and held that defendant failed to meet its burden to establish that there was no triable issue of material fact with respect to the fraud claim (217 Cal. App. 3d 848, 857-858) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
4. Design Defect

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.123A

§ 190.123A Opposing Contention That Finding of Strict Liability Is Supported--Product Not Shown to Be Defective Merely Because Plaintiff Collided With It

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum supporting the contention that defendant is not strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by a product.]

DEFENDANT CANNOT BE HELD STRICTLY LIABLE FOR PLAINTIFF'S INJURIES ON A DESIGN-DEFECT THEORY, BECAUSE PLAINTIFF HAS NOT PROVED THAT THE _____ [describe product], WHICH WAS PROPERLY FUNCTIONING AND PLAINLY VISIBLE, WAS DEFECTIVE MERELY BECAUSE PLAINTIFF COLLIDED WITH IT.

A. Properly Functioning, Plainly Visibly Product Is Not Defective. A properly functioning, plainly visible product is not rendered defective simply because the plaintiff collided with it (Souza v. Squaw Valley Ski Corp. (2006) 138 Cal. App. 4th 262, 271, 41 Cal. Rptr. 3d 389).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in opposition to the contention that defendant is subject to a products liability action based on design defect. The ground of opposition set forth is that plaintiff has failed to show that the product, which was properly functioning and plainly visible, was rendered defectively simply because plaintiff collided with it [see Souza v. Squaw Valley Ski Corp. (2006) 138 Cal. App. 4th 262, 271, 41 Cal. Rptr. 3d 389] .

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with

points and authorities supporting a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication of the issue that a cause of action for strict liability based on design defect cannot lie if plaintiff fails to prove that the product is defective.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form, and in any other relevant points and authorities combined with this form, to show the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should state facts showing that the product was properly functioning and plainly visible at the time of the incident.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Properly Functioning, Plainly Visibly Product Is Not Defective

In Souza v. Squaw Valley Ski Corp. (2006) 138 Cal. App. 4th 262, 41 Cal. Rptr. 3d 389 , the plaintiff collided with a snowmaking hydrant on a ski trail, injuring her mouth. The hydrant protruded about five feet above snow level and was plainly visible at the time of the accident. The plaintiff brought a product liability action alleging that the hydrant was defectively designed in that it was inadequately padded, located in the middle of the trail, and its nozzle was positioned in an uphill direction. The trial court granted summary judgment in favor of the defendant. The appellate court affirmed. It first pointed out that the plaintiff was neither a user of the hydrant nor a bystander to its use, and that the hydrant was properly functioning as snowmaking equipment and not being used as a product at the time of the accident. In the words of the trial court, a plainly visible and generally avoidable snowmaking hydrant is not defectively designed simply because a skier runs into it (138 Cal. App. 4th 262, 271) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
4. Design Defect

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.124

§ 190.124 Opposing Contention That Finding of Strict Liability Is Supported--Lack of Factual Support for Inference That Design Did Not Meet Minimum Safety Expectations of Ordinary Users Precludes Finding of Defect Without Balancing of Risks and Benefits

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities opposing the contention that defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries (see, e.g., §§ 190.82 -190.90, 190.122, 190.123, 190.125, 190.164 -190.171).]

DEFENDANT CANNOT BE HELD STRICTLY LIABLE FOR PLAINTIFF'S INJURIES ON THE GROUND THAT THE PRODUCT WAS DEFECTIVE IN DESIGN BECAUSE IT DID NOT PERFORM AS SAFELY AS ITS ORDINARY CONSUMERS WOULD EXPECT, BECAUSE THE CIRCUMSTANCES OF THE PRODUCT'S FAILURE DO NOT PERMIT AN INFERENCE THAT THE REASONABLE MINIMUM SAFETY EXPECTATIONS OF THE PRODUCT'S ORDINARY CONSUMERS WERE VIOLATED.

Circumstances of Product Failure Must Permit Inference That Consumer Expectations Were Not Met. A defendant cannot be held strictly liable for a design defect based solely on the consumer expectations test if the circumstances of the product's failure do not permit an inference that the product's design performed below the legitimate, commonly accepted minimum safety assumptions of its ordinary consumers (Soule v. General Motors Corp. (1994) 8 Cal. 4th 548, 568-569, 34 Cal. Rptr. 2d 607, 882 P.2d 298).

Expert Witnesses May Not Be Used When Product's Minimum Safety Is Within Lay Juror's Common Knowledge. Expert witnesses may not be used to demonstrate what an ordinary consumer would or should expect when the minimum safety of a product is within the common knowledge of lay jurors (Soule v. General Motors Corp. (1994) 8 Cal. 4th 548, 567, 34 Cal. Rptr. 2d 607 ; Bell v. Bayerische Motoren Werke Aktiengesellschaft (2010) 181 Cal. App. 4th 1108, 1129) .

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that the defendant is strictly liable for injuries allegedly caused by a design defect in a product when the theory of liability is the "consumer expectation" test. The ground of opposition is that the consumer expectation test cannot be the basis for strict liability because the circumstances of the product's failure do not permit an inference that the product's design performed below the legitimate, commonly accepted minimum safety assumptions of its ordinary consumers [Soule v. General Motors Corp. (1994) 8 Cal. 4th 548, 568-569, 34 Cal. Rptr. 2d 607, 882 P.2d 298] .

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss facts tending to show that the particular product failure involved could not have violated reasonable minimum assumptions about the safety of the product [see Soule v. General Motors Corp. (1994) 8 Cal. 4th 548, 566-570, 34 Cal. Rptr. 2d 607, 882 P.2d 298 (alleged defect in design of automobile concerning crashworthiness of wheel assembly held outside safety assumptions of ordinary consumers)].

[b] Related Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in § 190.124A may be added to support the contention that a defendant is not liable under the consumer expectation test.

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contentions supported by the points and authorities in §§ 190.115 and 190.116.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Circumstances of Product Failure Must Permit Inference That Consumer Expectations Were Not Met

In Soule v. General Motors Corp. (1994) 8 Cal. 4th 548, 34 Cal. Rptr. 2d 607, 882 P.2d 298 , plaintiff's ankles were severely injured when her car, manufactured by defendant, collided with another vehicle. Plaintiff sued, alleging that a defective design caused the left front wheel to break free in the collision, collapse rearward, and smash the floorboard into her feet. Defendant asserted that the design was not defective, and that in any event the force of the collision caused the injuries notwithstanding any defect. At trial, each party's position was supported by expert testimony. The trial court instructed the jury that defendant could be liable for injuries caused by the defective design of a product if either (1) the product failed to perform as safely as an ordinary consumer would expect, or (2) there is a risk of danger inherent in the design that outweighs the benefit of the design. The trial court also instructed the jury on legal cause, but refused defendant's proffered instruction that defendant was not liable if the injuries that plaintiff suffered would have occurred even without any improper design. The jury returned a verdict for plaintiff and the trial court entered judgment on that verdict. The court of appeal affirmed; the Supreme Court granted review and affirmed the judgment.

The Court held that the jury should not have been instructed on the consumer expectation test, because an ordinary consumer cannot reasonably expect that an automobile will be designed to remain intact in any and all collisions, nor can common experience inform consumers how safely an automobile's design should perform under the specific circumstances involved in this case (8 Cal. 4th 548, 570) . The Court held that unless the facts actually permit an inference that the product's performance did not meet the minimum safety expectations of its ordinary users, the jury must engage in the balancing of risks and benefits required by the second prong of the alternative test set out in Barker v. Lull Eng'g Co. (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 413, 417-418, 435, 143 Cal. Rptr. 225, 573 P.2d 443 (8 Cal. 4th 548, 568) . The Court did not preclude the use of the consumer expectations test in all cases involving crashworthiness, complex products, or technical causation questions. Instead, the Court defined the crucial question to be determined in each case as whether the circumstances of the product's failure permit an inference that the product's design performed below the legitimate, commonly accepted minimum safety assumptions of its ordinary consumers (8 Cal. 4th 548, 568-569) .

The Court held that the error was harmless, due to the extensive evidence regarding the dangers and benefits of the design, the arguments of counsel that focused on the risk-benefit test, and the absence of any indication that the jury relied on the consumer expectations test in reaching its verdict for plaintiff (8 Cal. 4th 548, 570-571) .

[b] Expert Witnesses May Not Be Used When Product's Minimum Safety Is Within Lay Juror's Common Knowledge

Soule v. General Motors Corp. (1994) 8 Cal. 4th 548, 34 Cal. Rptr. 2d 607 , is discussed in § 190.123[3][a].

In Bell v. Bayerische Motoren Werke Aktiengesellschaft (2010) 181 Cal. App. 4th 1108 , the plaintiff lost control of his vehicle and suffered severe injuries. He and his wife brought an action against the manufacturers, contending, inter alia, that an ordinary consumer would not have recognized the potential risk of sustaining a significant head or neck injury in a rollover accident in the vehicle. The jury returned a special verdict in favor of defendants on the negligence and products liability claims. The trial court granted plaintiffs' motion for a new trial but denied their motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict.

On appeal, plaintiffs contended that the new trial order was proper because, inter alia, the evidence compelled the conclusion that an ordinary consumer would not have been aware of the potential risks. They claimed that the testimony of defendant's own engineers indicated that the vehicle's risks had not been apparent to them, and that if the risks were not apparent to automotive experts, they could not have been apparent to ordinary consumers.

The Court of Appeal disagreed, and reversed the order granting a new trial. The consumer expectations test focuses on the safety expectations of an ordinary consumer rather than those of an expert. Where the minimum safety of a product is within the common knowledge of lay jurors, expert witnesses may not be used to demonstrate what an ordinary consumer would or should expect. The plaintiffs did not contend the minimum safety of the vehicle was not within the common knowledge of lay jurors. The jury was thus entitled to disregard the testimony of the defendants' engineers in concluding that the potential risks would have been apparent to an ordinary consumer (181 Cal. App. 4th 1108, 1129) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
4. Design Defect

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.125

§ 190.125 Opposing Contention That Product Is Defective in Design--Consumer Expectation Test Does Not Apply if Safety of Product Is Not Within Consumer's Everyday Experience

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities opposing the contention that defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product (see, e.g., §§ 190.120 -190.124).]

THE SAFETY OF THE DESIGN OF THE _____ [specify product] THAT INJURED PLAINTIFF WAS NOT WITHIN THE EVERYDAY EXPERIENCE OF THE CONSUMER. THE CONSUMER EXPECTATION TEST IS THEREFORE INAPPLICABLE AND EXPERT TESTIMONY IS NECESSARY TO EVALUATE THE DESIGN'S RISKS AND BENEFITS.

Consumer Expectation Test Does Not Apply if Safety of Product Is Not Within Everyday Experience of Consumer. The consumer expectation test is reserved for cases in which the everyday experience of the product's users permits a conclusion that the product's design violated minimum safety assumptions, and is thus defective regardless of expert opinion about the merits of the design. If the issue of design defect goes beyond the common or everyday experience of the consuming public, then jurors need expert testimony to evaluate the risks and benefits of the challenged design (Stephen v. Ford Motor Co. (2005) 134 Cal. App. 4th 1363, 1371, n.6, 37 Cal. Rptr. 3d 9 ; Morson v. Superior Court (2001) 90 Cal. App. 4th 775, 109 Cal. Rptr. 2d 343 ; Pruitt v. Gen. Motors Corp. (1999) 72 Cal. App. 4th 1480, 1483, 86 Cal. Rptr. 2d 4 ; see also Soule v. General Motors Corp. (1994) 8 Cal. 4th 548, 567, 143 Cal. Rptr. 225, 573 P.2d 443).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that consumer expectation test applies in determining the safety of the design of a product alleged to have caused injury, in that the safety of the product is not within the everyday experience of the consumer.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a motion for summary adjudication on the issue of defendant's strict liability. They may also be adapted for use in a trial brief (for example, to oppose a jury instruction regarding the consumer expectation test) or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should include facts showing that the minimum safety standards of the product are not within the common knowledge of lay jurors [see, e.g., Pruitt v. Gen. Motors Corp. (1999) 72 Cal. App. 4th 1480, 1483, 86 Cal. Rptr. 2d 4 (minimum air bag safety standards not within common knowledge of lay jurors); see also Soule v. General Motors Corp. (1994) 8 Cal. 4th 548, 567, 143 Cal. Rptr. 225, 573 P.2d 443 (alleged defect in design of automobile concerning crashworthiness of wheel assembly was outside safety assumptions of ordinary consumers)].

[b] Related Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in § 190.124 may be added to support the contention that a defendant is not liable under the consumer expectation test.

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be used to oppose the contention supported by the points and authorities in §§ 190.115 -190.116.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Consumer Expectation Test Does Not Apply if Safety of Product Is Not Within Everyday Experience of Consumer

In Stephen v. Ford Motor Co. (2005) 134 Cal. App. 4th 1363, 37 Cal. Rptr. 3d 9 , the tread separated from the rear tire of the plaintiff's Ford Explorer. The plaintiff brought an action against the manufacturers of the tire and the vehicle, alleging that they were defectively designed. The trial court excluded and limited the testimony of the plaintiff's experts and granted the defendants' motions for nonsuit. The court of appeal affirmed. The plaintiff was not entitled to prove by circumstantial evidence that there was a design defect because the tire and vehicle performed below the standard expected by an ordinary consumer when used in a reasonably foreseeable manner. The consumer expectation test does not apply in a case such as this one, in which an expert must balance the benefits of design against the risk of danger (134 Cal. App. 4th 1363, 1371 n.6).

In Pruitt v. Gen. Motors Corp. (1999) 72 Cal. App. 4th 1480, 86 Cal. Rptr. 2d 4 , the plaintiff was driving her car when she collided with another car. Plaintiff was wearing her seatbelt and shoulder harness, and the air bag deployed. Plaintiff suffered jaw injuries. Plaintiff brought a products liability action against defendant manufacturer, alleging that the air bag deployment caused her injuries. At trial, the court granted plaintiff's motion to exclude expert testimony offered by defendant regarding ordinary consumer expectations but also granted defendant's motion to preclude plaintiff's testimony about her expectations concerning the safety of the airbag. Plaintiff did testify at trial, however, that she had not expected the air bag to injure her (72 Cal. App. 4th 1480, 1482) . The trial court instructed the jury on products liability, design defect, and on the elements of failure to warn. The plaintiff requested a jury instruction regarding the consumer expectation test. The trial court refused to give the instruction. The jury failed to find a defect in design or a failure to warn defect and rendered judgment for defendant. Plaintiff appealed, contending that the jury should have been instructed on the consumer expectation test.

The court of appeals affirmed. The court repeated the application of the consumer expectation test from Soule v. General Motors Corp. (1994) 8 Cal. 4th 548, 567, 143 Cal. Rptr. 225, 573 P.2d 443 [see § 190.124[3][a]], which stated that the consumer expectation test was reserved for cases in which the everyday experience of the product's users permits a conclusion that the product's design violated minimum safety assumptions, and is thus defective regardless of expert opinion about the merits of the design (72 Cal. App. 4th 1480, 1483) . The court of appeal noted that the deployment of an air bag was not part of the everyday experience of the consuming public. Likewise, that minimum safety standards for air bags were not within the common knowledge of lay jurors. The court discussed some of the examples given in Soule for when the consumer expectation test would be appropriate: automobiles that explode while idling at a stoplight, or roll over and catch fire in a collision at two miles per hour. The court added its own example of air bags inflating for no apparent reason while one is cruising down the road at 65 miles per hour (72 Cal. App. 4th 1480, 1484) . The court held that jurors in this case were in need of expert testimony to evaluate the risks and benefits of the challenged design. Plaintiff's own expert had testified that in designing airbags there were tradeoffs involving complex technical issues. As a result, the court affirmed the trial court's decision not to give the consumer expectations instruction (72 Cal. App. 4th 1480, 1484) .

In Morson v. Superior Court (2001) 90 Cal. App. 4th 775, 109 Cal. Rptr. 2d 343 , the plaintiffs claimed that the defendants manufactured and distributed latex gloves that contained chemical substances, including latex rubber, certain powders, or other substances that were of a toxic nature when used independently and or in combination with other such chemical substances. The plaintiffs claimed that improperly designed and manufactured latex gloves may cause latex allergy by allowing excessive levels of allergenic agents to remain present on the surface of the glove during manufacture (90 Cal. App. 4th 775, 780) . The plaintiffs requested a jury instruction regarding the consumer expectation test. The Superior Court of San Diego made a general court order restricting plaintiffs from seeking these instructions. The plaintiffs filed a writ of mandate to have the court order set aside.

The court of appeals affirmed finding that the trial court did not err in issuing a general order restricting plaintiffs from seeking jury instructions pursuant to the consumer expectation test of design defect. The alleged creation or exacerbation of allergies by the gloves were not subjects of commonly accepted minimum safety assumptions of an ordinary consumer (90 Cal. App. 4th 775, 795) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
4. Design Defect

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.126

§ 190.126 Opposing Contention that Product Is Defective--Benefits of Design Outweigh Inherent Risks

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate memorandum of points and authorities opposing the contention that defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product (see, e.g., §§ 190.82-190.86, 190.164-190.171).]

THE _____ [specify product] IS NOT DEFECTIVE IN ITS DESIGN BECAUSE AFTER CONSIDERING THE RELEVANT FACTORS THAT MAY BE CONSIDERED IN APPLYING THE RISK-BENEFITS TEST, THE BENEFITS OF THE PRODUCT'S DESIGN OUTWEIGH THE RISKS INHERENT IN ITS DESIGN.

Aesthetics Is Proper Consideration in Risk-Benefit Analysis. A jury may properly consider aesthetics in balancing the benefits of a challenged design against the risk of danger inherent in the design (Bell v. Bayerische Motoren Werke Aktiengesellschaft (2010) 181 Cal. App. 4th 1108, 1131) .

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that defendant is subject to strict products liability based on design defect. The ground of opposition set forth is that the benefits of the product's design outweigh the risks inherent in its design.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a motion for summary adjudication on the issue of defendant's strict liability. They may also be adopted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the point of law stated. For example, counsel should argue that aesthetics is a proper consideration in the risk-benefit test; that the product at issue is not a strictly utilitarian product; and that much of the product's perceived benefit lies in its appearance [see, e.g., Bell v. Bayerische Motoren Werke Aktiengesellschaft (2010) 181 Cal. App. 4th 1108, 1131] .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Aesthetics Is Proper Consideration in Risk-Benefit Analysis

In Bell v. Bayerische Motoren Werke Aktiengesellschaft (2010) 181 Cal. App. 4th 1108 , the plaintiff lost control of his vehicle and suffered severe injuries. He and his wife brought an action against the manufacturers. Plaintiffs requested that the trial court instruct the jury with CACI No. 1204, listing the factors for the jury to consider in deciding whether the benefits of the design outweighed the risks of the design. The court approved defendants' request to modify the instructions by including "aesthetics" as a relevant factor in the risk-benefit analysis. Plaintiffs then withdrew their proposed instruction. The court instructed the jury on, inter alia, design defect based on the consumer expectations test. The jury returned a special verdict in favor of defendants on the negligence and products liability claims. The trial court granted plaintiffs' motion for a new trial but denied their motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict.

On appeal, plaintiffs contended that the new trial order was proper because, inter alia, the court's ruling on defendants' requested modification of CACI No. 1204 was error. The court of appealed disagreed, stating that aesthetics is a proper consideration in the risk-benefit analysis. It reasoned that "much of the perceived benefit of a car lies in its appearance," and that a car is not a strictly utilitarian product. The court reversed the order granting a new trial (181 Cal. App. 4th 1108, 1130) .

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be used to oppose the contention supported by the points and authorities in §§ 190.110 -190.111.

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
4. Design Defect

19-190 California Points & Authorities §§ 190.127-190.139

[Reserved]

§§ 190.127[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
5. Manufacturing Defect

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.140

§ 190.140 Supporting Contention That Product Is Defective in Manufacture--Definition of Manufacturing Defect

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities supporting the contention that defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product (see, e.g., § 190.110).]

DEFENDANT _____ [name] IS STRICTLY LIABLE BECAUSE DEFENDANT _____ [MANUFACTURED or SOLD] A PRODUCT THAT IS DEFECTIVE IN ITS MANUFACTURE.

Product Has Manufacturing Defect if It Comes off Assembly Line in Defective Condition. A product has a manufacturing defect if it differs from the manufacturer's intended result or from other ostensibly identical units of the same product line, as when it comes off the assembly line in a substandard condition (Notmeyer v. Stryker Corp . (N.D. Cal. 2007) 502 F. Supp. 2d 1051, 1059 ; Barker v. Lull Eng'g Co. (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 413, 429, 143 Cal. Rptr. 225, 573 P.2d 443).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a product has a manufacturing defect because it does not conform to the original plans for the product or it differs from other ostensibly identical units.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication on the issue that the product is defective. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, and with any other relevant points and authorities combined with this form, to show the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should show facts indicating that the product that injured plaintiff differed from its original design or was substandard in its manufacture, and that variation caused plaintiff's injuries.

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in § 190.141 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Product Has Manufacturing Defect if It Comes off Assembly Line in Defective Condition

The facts and procedural background of Notmeyer v. Stryker Corp. (N.D. Cal. 2007) 502 F. Supp. 2d 1051 , are discussed in § 190.259[4]. The court held that the plaintiff presented sufficient circumstantial evidence to raise a triable issue of fact as to whether the femoral head to his hip replacement system contained a manufacturing defect (502 F. Supp. 2d 1051, 1059-1060) .

The facts and procedural background of Barker v. Lull Eng'g Co. (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 413, 143 Cal. Rptr. 225, 573 P.2d 443 , are discussed in § 190.110[3][a]. In reversing the judgment, the Court explained the difference between a manufacturing and a design defect. Specifically, the Court pointed out that a manufacturing defect is readily identifiable because the defective product differs from the manufacturer's intended result or from other ostensibly identical units of the same product line. For example, a product has a manufacturing defect when it comes off the assembly line in a substandard condition. A design defect, on the other hand, cannot be identified simply by comparing the injury-producing product with the manufacturer's plans or with other units of the same product line, because by definition the plans and all such units will reflect the same design. Rather, to have a design defect, the design from which all units are produced must itself be defective (20 Cal. 3d 413, 429) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Product Has Manufacturing Defect When It Comes off Assembly Line in Defective Condition

In Montez v. Ford Motor Co. (1980) 101 Cal. App. 3d 315, 161 Cal. Rptr. 578 , plaintiff brought an action in strict liability and negligence against the manufacturer of an automobile. Plaintiff had suffered serious injuries when she was ejected from the car after the driver failed to negotiate a sharp curve on the highway. The trial court instructed the jury solely on a strict liability theory, but failed to properly instruct the jury as to the definition of a manufacturing defect. Although the court of appeal affirmed the ensuing judgment for defendant on the grounds that this error was not prejudicial, the court stated that the proper manufacturing defect instruction should have been given. The court pointed out that a manufacturing defect is accurately defined as existing when the product differs from the manufacturer's intended result or differs from apparently identical products from the same manufacturer (101 Cal. App. 3d 315, 320-322) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
5. Manufacturing Defect

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.141

§ 190.141 Opposing Contention That Product Is Defective in Manufacture--Product Does Not Differ From Manufacturer's Intended Result and Does Not Differ Significantly From Identical Units From Same Product Line

[1] FORM 190.141 Opposing Contention That Product Is Defective in Manufacture--Product Does Not Differ From Manufacturer's Intended Result and Does Not Differ Significantly From Identical Units From Same Product Line

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities opposing the contention that defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product.]

DEFENDANT _____ [name] CANNOT BE HELD STRICTLY LIABLE FOR PLAINTIFF'S INJURIES ON A MANUFACTURING DEFECT THEORY BECAUSE DEFENDANT'S PRODUCT DID NOT DIFFER FROM DEFENDANT'S INTENDED RESULT OR HAVE MATERIALLY SIGNIFICANT DIFFERENCES FROM IDENTICAL UNITS FROM THE SAME PRODUCT LINE.

Product Not Defectively Manufactured. A product is not defectively manufactured if it does not differ from the manufacturer's intended result, and does not have materially significant differences among identical units from the same product line (Gonzalez v. Autoliv ASP, Inc. (2007) 154 Cal. App. 4th 780, 792, 64 Cal. Rptr. 3d 908 ; In re Coordinated Latex Glove Litig. (2002) 99 Cal. App. 4th 594, 613, 121 Cal. Rptr. 2d 301).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition of the contention that a product has a manufacturing defect because it does not conform to the original plans for the product or it differs from other ostensibly identical units.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context

in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication on the issue that the product is not defective. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should show facts indicating that the product that injured the plaintiff did not differ from its original design and was not substandard in its manufacture.

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in § 190.140 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Product Not Defectively Manufactured

The facts and procedural background of Gonzalez v. Autoliv ASP, Inc. (2007) 154 Cal. App. 4th 780, 64 Cal. Rptr. 3d 908 , are discussed in § 190.74[3][b]. The court of appeal held that the plaintiff presented no evidence of a manufacturing defect. She did not even allege that the front airbag module of the vehicle in which she was a passenger performed differently from other identical units (154 Cal. App. 4th 780, 792) .

In In re Coordinated Latex Glove Litig. (2002) 99 Cal. App. 4th 594, 121 Cal. Rptr. 2d 301 , the plaintiff claimed that defective natural rubber latex (NRL) gloves caused her to develop a life-threatening allergy to all forms of NRL by allowing excessive levels of latex proteins to remain present on the surface of the gloves during manufacture. It was undisputed that the allergic agents could be reduced or eliminated through washing and chlorinating procedures in the design and manufacture of the gloves. The plaintiff contended that the defendant "took too long" to make this its standard practice, in light of its knowledge and research. The court of appeal concluded that the plaintiff failed to show that the latex gloves--which were manufactured precisely as intended, complied with government standards, and fulfilled their primary barrier function--had manufacturing defects due to the existence of evidence of the manufacturer's improvement efforts, targets, and goals, at different times and locations, reflective of the available state of scientific knowledge regarding latex protein levels of exposure (99 Cal. App. 4th 594, 613) .

84 of 179 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
5. Manufacturing Defect

19-190 California Points & Authorities §§ 190.142-190.159

[Reserved]

§§ 190.142[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
6. Failure to Warn

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.160

§ 190.160 Supporting Contention That Defendant Is Strictly Liable for Failure to Warn of Known or Knowable Potential Dangers That Render Product Unsafe for Intended or Reasonably Foreseeable Use--In General

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities supporting the contention that defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product (see, e.g., §§ 190.61 -190.162)]

DEFENDANT _____ [name] IS STRICTLY LIABLE BECAUSE DEFENDANT FAILED TO WARN [ADEQUATELY] OF THE POTENTIAL DANGERS INHERENT IN THE USE OF THE _____ [describe product] THAT WERE _____ [KNOWN TO DEFENDANT or KNOWABLE SCIENTIFICALLY], THAT IS, _____ [describe potential danger in absence of adequate warning], AND THE _____ [ABSENCE or INADEQUACY] OF THE WARNING RENDERED THE PRODUCT UNSAFE FOR ITS INTENDED OR REASONABLY FORESEEABLE USE.

A. Manufacturer Is Strictly Liable for Failure to Warn. A manufacturer is liable in strict products liability for injuries incurred because of a defect in a product caused by the manufacturer's failure to warn of known or scientifically knowable potential dangers that render the product unsafe for its intended or reasonably foreseeable use (Carlin v. Superior Court (1996) 13 Cal. 4th 1104, 1109, 56 Cal. Rptr. 2d 162, 920 P.2d 134 ; Anderson v. Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corp. (1991) 53 Cal. 3d 987, 995-1003, 281 Cal. Rptr. 528, 810 P.2d 549 ; Jones v. John Crane, Inc. (2005) 132 Cal. App. 4th 990, 1004-1005, 35 Cal. Rptr. 3d 144).

B. Strict Liability Invoked for Warning Defects. Strict liability has been invoked for three types of defects: manufacturing defects, design defects, and "warning defects" (inadequate warnings or failure to warn) (Anderson v. Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corp. (1991) 53 Cal. 3d 987, 995, 281 Cal. Rptr. 528, 810 P.2d 549).

C. Liability for Failure to Warn Is Distinct From Consumer Expectations Test. Products liability under a failure-to-warn theory is a distinct cause of action from one under the consumer expectations test (Boeken v. Philip Morris Inc. (2005) 127 Cal. App. 4th 1640, 1669, 26 Cal. Rptr. 3d 638, 660 ; Arnold v. Dow Chem. Co. (2001) 91 Cal. App. 4th 698, 717, 110 Cal. Rptr. 2d 722).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a manufacturer may be held strictly liable for failing to warn of known or knowable potential dangers involved when a product is used for its intended purpose or in a reasonably foreseeable manner [see Anderson v. Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corp. (1991) 53 Cal. 3d 987, 995-1003, 281 Cal. Rptr. 528, 810 P.2d 549] .

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a motion for summary judgment, or summary adjudication regarding the existence of a cause of action for strict products liability [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(f)]. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, and with any other relevant points and authorities combined with this form, to show the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should show that the plaintiff used the product in its intended or reasonably foreseeable manner, that the potential dangers were known or scientifically knowable to defendant at all relevant times, and either that no warning was given, or that the warning given was inadequate to prevent the potential danger.

[b] Related Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in §§ 190.163 and 190.283 may be combined with the points and authorities in this form.

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in §§ 190.164 -190.176 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Manufacturer Is Strictly Liable for Failure to Warn

The facts and procedural background of Carlin v. Superior Court (1996) 13 Cal. 4th 1104, 56 Cal. Rptr. 2d 162, 920 P.2d 134 are discussed in § 190.163[3][a]. The Court reaffirmed the strict liability standard of Anderson v. Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corp. (1991) 53 Cal. 3d 987, 995-1003, 281 Cal. Rptr. 528, 810 P.2d 549 , and refused a defendant's invitation to adopt a new standard of simple negligence applicable only to the pharmaceutical industry. A manufacturer of prescription drugs is strictly liable for failing to warn of known or reasonably scientifically knowledgeable risks from prescription drugs (13 Cal. 4th 1104, 1109) .

Anderson v. Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corp. (1991) 53 Cal. 3d 987, 281 Cal. Rptr. 528, 810 P.2d 549 , is discussed in § 190.164[3][a]. In limiting the cause of action for strict products liability, based on the failure to warn, to cases in which the danger was known or knowable, the Court recognized that a failure to warn could support a strict liability cause of action if that knowledge existed (53 Cal. 3d 987, 995-1000) .

The Court also held that a defendant is required to warn of scientifically knowable dangers, and that the failure to provide this type of warning can also be a basis for strict products liability (53 Cal. 3d 987, 1000) .

In Jones v. John Crane, Inc. (2005) 132 Cal. App. 4th 990, 35 Cal. Rptr. 3d 144 , the jury returned a special verdict in favor of the plaintiffs on their warning claim. The court of appeal affirmed, holding that substantial evidence supported the jury's finding that there was a scientifically known or knowable medical probability that the defendant's products would increase the risk of cancer at the time of the decedent's exposure. Scientific, medical, and historical articles regarding the causal connection between asbestos and lung cancer supported the jury's findings that the risks associated with the defendant's products were known or knowable at the time of the decedent's exposure. Moreover, articles published by 1950 connecting packing and gaskets with the risk of asbestos-related disease supported the jury's rejection of the defendant's claim that it had no reason to suspect any danger associated with its product (132 Cal. App. 4th 990, 1004-1005) .

[b] Strict Liability Invoked for Warning Defects

Anderson v. Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corp. (1991) 53 Cal. 3d 987, 281 Cal. Rptr. 528, 810 P.2d 549 , is discussed in § 190.164[3][a]. In the course of discussing the evolution of the failure-to-warn concept of strict products liability, the Supreme Court stated that strict liability has been invoked for three types of defects: manufacturing defects, design defects, and "warning defects" (inadequate warnings or failure to warn) (53 Cal. 3d 987, 995) .

[c] Liability for Failure to Warn Is Distinct From Consumer Expectations Test

In Boeken v. Philip Morris Inc. (2005) 127 Cal. App. 4th 1640, 26 Cal. Rptr. 3d 638 , the plaintiff filed suit alleging negligence, strict products liability, and fraud against the manufacturer of "light" cigarettes. The jury determined that the cigarettes were defective either in design or failure to warn. On appeal, the defendant argued that the consumer expectations test is essentially one for failure to warn, and thus preempted by the federal Public Health Cigarette Smoking Act of 1968. The court of appeal disagreed, pointing out that products liability under a failure-to-warn theory is a distinct cause of action from one under the consumer expectations test (127 Cal. App. 4th 1640, 1668) .

In Arnold v. Dow Chem. Co. (2001) 91 Cal. App. 4th 698, 110 Cal. Rptr. 2d 722 , plaintiffs alleged that exposure to the defendants' pesticide products caused them serious injuries. The trial court granted summary judgement for the defendants, ruling that the Federal Insecticide, Fungicide and Rodenticide Act (FIFRA) [7 U.S.C.S. § 136 et seq.] preempted the plaintiffs' state law claims. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment with respect to the failure to warn claim, but reversed and remanded with respect to the other causes of action. It concluded that the plaintiffs did not allege a failure-to-warn claim, but a design defect cause of action. The court rejected the defendants' contention that the plaintiffs' causes of actions were merely attempts to bypass FIFRA preemption through artful pleading, pointing out that the consumer expectations test is independent from a failure-to-warn cause of action (91 Cal. App. 4th 698, 717) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Manufacturer Is Strictly Liable for Failure to Warn

Dosier v. Wilcox-Crittendon Co. (1975) 45 Cal. App. 3d 74, 119 Cal. Rptr. 135 , is discussed in § 190.165[3][a].

NOTE:
Although Dosier held in favor of the defendant, it is used in this form because it best defines the "foreseeability" component of the failure-to-warn cause of action.

[b] Strict Liability Invoked for Warning Defects

In Bunch v. Hoffinger Indus., Inc. (2004) 123 Cal. App. 4th 1278, 20 Cal. Rptr. 3d 780 , the 11-year-old plaintiff dove into an above-ground swimming pool that was four feet deep, struck the pool bottom, and was rendered a quadriplegic. In the plaintiff's suit against the pool's manufacturer, the jury awarded the plaintiff over $12 million in damages, and the defendant appealed. The court of appeal affirmed, rejecting the defendant's argument that it owed no duty to warn of possible injury from the obvious danger of diving into a shallow above-ground pool. The plaintiff had offered her own testimony that she thought that the homeowner was "just being a mom" when she told the plaintiff not to dive into the pool and that the sticker on the pool meant "not to do a pike dive." The plaintiff testified that a label warning of disabling dangers would have prevented her from diving on the day of the incident. She also presented expert testimony that young divers cannot necessarily appreciate the depth of above-ground pools, that warnings to children must spell out the dangers to be effective, and that the risk of paraplegia was not readily apparent to an 11-year-old child (123 Cal. App. 4th 1278, 1303-1304) . The court held that the lack of a label on the pool liner adequately warning of the dangers of diving into an above-ground pool was a substantial factor in causing the plaintiff's injuries, and that the danger of diving into a shallow above-ground pool was not open and obvious to an 11-year-old child as a matter of law (123 Cal. App. 4th 1278, 1299-1300) .

In Livingston v. Marie Callenders, Inc. (1999) 72 Cal. App. 4th 830, 85 Cal. Rptr. 2d 528 , the plaintiff went to a restaurant and was interested in ordering the soup. He told the waitress he had asthma and asked if the soup contained monosodium glutamate (MSG). The waitress assured him it did not. Plaintiff ordered and ate the soup. In fact, the soup contained MSG. Plaintiff suffered MSG symptom complex, including respiratory arrest, hypoxia, cardiac arrest and brain damage. Plaintiff brought an action against the defendant restaurant for, among other causes of action, strict liability and negligence. He alleged that because the defendant's soup contained MSG, it was defective and unfit for human consumption. The trial court dismissed all causes of action except the negligence claim and all the defendants except the restaurant. The court concluded that there was nothing wrong with the soup, or the MSG in the soup. The case proceeded to trial on the negligence cause of action against the restaurant. The jury did not find the defendant negligent, and plaintiff appealed (72 Cal. App. 4th 830, 833-834) . The court of appeal held that a defendant restaurant may be strictly liable for failing to warn customers about additives in the food served. In the context of allergies [see Restatement (Second) of Torts § 402A, cmt. j], a duty to warn exists when the additives contain an ingredient to which a substantial number of the population is allergic, the ingredient is one whose danger is not generally known, or if known is not one which the customer would reasonably expect to find in the food served, and the restaurant knew or should have known that the ingredient was present and was dangerous (72 Cal. App. 4th 830, 839) . The court felt the trier of fact should determine those issues and held that the trial court erred in striking plaintiff's strict liability claim. Plaintiff was entitled to a trial on the theory that there was a failure to warn of an ingredient to which a substantial number of the population are allergic (72 Cal. App. 4th 830, 840) .

The facts and procedural background of Lunghi v. Clark Equip. Co. (1984) 153 Cal. App. 3d 485, 200 Cal. Rptr. 387 , are discussed in § 190.112[3][c]. The court of appeal reversed the judgment, despite a jury finding that the product was not defective, because the trial court refused to instruct the jury that failure to provide any warning or an adequate warning may constitute a design defect. Even though the mechanical design features were not defective, the court explained, a product may nevertheless have a "design defect" if the defendant had a duty to warn of known dangers (153 Cal. App. 3d 485, 493-494) .

In Wright v. Stang Mfg. Co. (1997) 54 Cal. App. 4th 1218, 63 Cal. Rptr. 2d 422 , a city firefighter brought a strict products liability action for personal injuries when a deck gun and its attachments mounted on a fire truck broke loose and failed under pressure. The suit was brought against the alleged successors of the corporation that manufactured the deck gun. The trial court granted summary judgment for the defendants on the grounds that there was insufficient evidence of defect, and no duty to warn about a nondefective component part. The court of appeal reversed, holding that the plaintiff had asserted a triable strict liability action based on a warning defect theory. The defendants had failed to establish that the dangers of the deck gun were generally known, or that plaintiff was aware of the dangers or potential dangers associated with the use and operation of the deck gun (54 Cal. App. 4th 1218, 1231) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
6. Failure to Warn

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.161

§ 190.161 Supporting Contention That Defendant Is Strictly Liable for Failure to Warn--Failure to Supply Adequate Assembly and Use Instructions That Warn of Danger of Improper Assemblage or Use

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and should be combined with a general form regarding failure to warn (see, e.g., § 190.160). The following may also be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities supporting the contention that defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product.]

DEFENDANT _____ [name] IS STRICTLY LIABLE BECAUSE THE ASSEMBLY AND USE INSTRUCTIONS THAT WERE FURNISHED WITH _____ [specify product] WERE INADEQUATE AND DID NOT WARN PLAINTIFF OF THE DANGERS OF IMPROPER ASSEMBLY OR USE, THEREBY RENDERING THE PRODUCT DEFECTIVE.

Product Is Defective if Assembly and Use Instructions Do Not Adequately Warn of Danger of Improper Assembly or Use. A product requiring assembly and use in conformity with the supplier's directions is defective if the supplier fails to warn adequately of conditions and circumstances created by such assembly or use that would render the product dangerous to the user. Therefore, the supplier is strictly liable for any injury proximately resulting from composing and furnishing a set of instructions for assembly and use that does not adequately avoid the danger of injury (Midgley v. S.S. Kresge Co. (1976) 55 Cal. App. 3d 67, 74, 127 Cal. Rptr. 217).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a product is defective and strict liability is thereby incurred if the supplier of the product fails to adequately warn of the danger of improper assembly or use in the assembly and use instructions [see Midgley v. S.S. Kresge Co. (1976) 55 Cal. App. 3d 67, 74, 127 Cal. Rptr. 217] .

These points and authorities should be combined with the points and authorities in § 190.160. These points and authorities may also be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities in opposition to defendant's motion for summary judgment [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c]. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, and with any other relevant points and authorities combined with this form, to show the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel might show facts indicating that the product came with assembly and use instructions, but that those instructions did not adequately guide the user in assembling the product, and as a result, plaintiff erroneously assembled the product and was injured when the product failed to properly perform its function [see, e.g., Midgley v. S.S. Kresge Co. (1976) 55 Cal. App. 3d 67, 127 Cal. Rptr. 217 (inadequate assembly instructions for unassembled telescope)].

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in §§ 190.164 -190.176 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Product Is Defective if Assembly and Use Instructions Do Not Adequately Warn of Danger of Improper Assembly or Use

In Midgley v. S.S. Kresge Co. (1976) 55 Cal. App. 3d 67, 127 Cal. Rptr. 217 , plaintiff's eye sustained permanent damage after viewing through a telescope that he improperly assembled by following the telescope's inadequate assemblage directions. Plaintiff brought an action in strict liability, negligence, and warranty against the manufacturer of the unassembled telescope. Plaintiff claimed that defendant had failed to warn of the product's dangerous propensities. The trial court, however, instructed the jury only in terms of negligence on the warning issue, and refused to instruct in terms of strict liability on that issue. The jury returned a verdict for defendant, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that a warning instruction should have been given in terms of strict liability based on failure to warn. The court explained that a product requiring assembly and use in conformity with the supplier's directions is defective if the supplier fails to warn adequately of conditions and circumstances created by the assembly or use that would render the product dangerous to the user. Therefore, the supplier is strictly liable for injury proximately resulting from composing and furnishing a set of instructions for assembly and use that does not adequately avoid the danger of injury (55 Cal. App. 3d 67, 74) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
6. Failure to Warn

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.162

§ 190.162 Supporting Contention That Defendant Is Strictly Liable for Failure to Warn--Plaintiff Not Required to Prove That He or She Was Unaware of Defect or to Show Avoidance of Assumption of Risk

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and should be combined with a general form regarding failure to warn (see, e.g., § 190.160). The following may also be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities supporting the contention that defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product.]

PLAINTIFF IS ENTITLED TO RECOVER EVEN IF PLAINTIFF DOES NOT PROVE THAT HE/SHE WAS NOT AWARE OF THE DEFECT IN _____ [specify product] OR THAT HE/SHE TOOK STEPS TO AVOID ASSUMING THAT PRODUCT'S RISK.

Product's User Is Not Required to Prove Nonawareness of Defect or Avoidance of Assumption of Risk. In proving that a product is defective because its manufacturer or supplier did not adequately warn of its dangers, a plaintiff is not required to prove that, as a user, he or she was not aware of the defect. Nor is the plaintiff required to make a showing that would avoid the defense of assumption of risk (Burke v. Almaden Vineyards, Inc. (1978) 86 Cal. App. 3d 768, 772, 150 Cal. Rptr. 419).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that in proving failure to warn, plaintiff is not required to prove that he or she was unaware of the product's defect or that he or she took steps to avoid assuming the product's risk [see Burke v. Almaden Vineyards, Inc. (1978) 86 Cal. App. 3d 768, 772, 150 Cal. Rptr. 419] .

These points and authorities should be combined with the points and authorities in § 190.160. These points and authorities may also be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication regarding the existence of a cause of action in strict products liability [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(a), (f)]. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, and with any other relevant points and authorities combined with this form, to show the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should set forth facts indicating that he or she has established a cause of action based on a failure to warn [see § 190.160], and that no further showing, regarding nonawareness of the defect or avoidance of assumption of the risk, is required.

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in §§ 190.164 -190.176 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Product's User Is Not Required to Prove Nonawareness of Defect or Avoidance of Assumption of Risk

In Burke v. Almaden Vineyards, Inc. (1978) 86 Cal. App. 3d 768, 150 Cal. Rptr. 419 , plaintiff was injured when the plastic cork of a champagne bottle spontaneously ejected and struck her eyeglass lens. Plaintiff brought an action in strict products liability against the manufacturer of the bottle, alleging the defendant failed to warn of the cork's potential danger. To prove that there was a failure to warn, plaintiff sought to introduce evidence that defendant placed a warning on the bottles four years after the accident. Defendant objected, but offered to stipulate that it would have been possible, feasible, and practicable to have attached the warning on the labels. The trial court ruled that the probative value of the evidence was outweighed by the risk of undue prejudice, but gave plaintiff the choice of accepting or rejecting the stipulation. Plaintiff accepted the stipulation on the condition that her objection would not be deemed waived. The jury found for the defendant, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that the trial court abused its discretion in excluding the evidence of the subsequent warning (86 Cal. App. 3d 768, 772-775) . In the context of determining the issue whether potential prejudice outweighs probative value for the purposes of Evid. Code § 352, the court stated that when a manufacturer or supplier of a product is or should have been aware that a product is unreasonably dangerous absent a warning and the warning is feasible, strict liability in tort will attach if appropriate and conspicuous warning is not given. The court also stated that liability does not attach if the dangerous propensity is either obvious or known to the injured person at the time he or she uses the product. Plaintiff had the burden of proving (1) that defendant knew or should have known of a hazard that required warning and (2) that it was feasible for defendant to have given it. Plaintiff was not required to prove that, as a user, she was unaware of the defect, or to make a showing that would avoid the defense of assumption of the risk (86 Cal. App. 3d 768, 772) . The court did not believe that the consuming public knows that the pressure of carbonation in a sparkling wine causes the cork to eject itself within a certain number of seconds after the wire seal is removed (86 Cal. App. 3d 768, 772-773) . The court therefore examined the evidentiary value of the subsequent warning and concluded that it afforded a reasonable, logical, and natural inference of the potential danger that requires a warning, and found that the probative value was not outweighed by the risk of prejudice (86 Cal. App. 3d 768, 773-774) . The court rejected defendant's argument that inasmuch as the plaintiff knew of the hazard, the absence of the warning was not the proximate cause of her injury, finding that the evidence of her knowledge of the particular hazard of spontaneous ejection of the cork was not conclusive (86 Cal. App. 3d 768, 775) .

NOTE:

The "unreasonably dangerous" aspect of the holding in Burke v. Almaden Vineyards has been modified [see Cavers v. Cushman Motor Sales, Inc. (1979) 95 Cal. App. 3d 338, 157 Cal. Rptr. 142 ; see also § 190.172[3][a]].

88 of 179 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
6. Failure to Warn

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.163

§ 190.163 Supporting Contention That Defendant Is Strictly Liable for Failure to Warn--Defendant Is Manufacturer of Prescription Drug That Is Unavoidably Unsafe

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities supporting the contention that defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product.]

DEFENDANT _____ [name], THE MANUFACTURER OF THE PRESCRIPTION DRUG _____ [specify drug, e.g., DES], IS SUBJECT TO STRICT LIABILITY BECAUSE DEFENDANT FAILED TO WARN OF THE DANGEROUS PROPENSITIES OF THAT DRUG THAT WERE EITHER KNOWN OR REASONABLY KNOWABLE SCIENTIFICALLY AT THE TIME OF DISTRIBUTION.

A. Manufacturer of Prescription Drug Strictly Liable for Failure to Warn. A manufacturer is strictly liable for injuries caused by a prescription drug that is unavoidably unsafe if the manufacturer failed to warn of its dangerous propensities that were either known or reasonably scientifically knowable at the time of distribution (Carlin v. Superior Court (1996) 13 Cal. 4th 1104, 1109, 56 Cal. Rptr. 2d 162, 920 P.2d 134 ; Brown v. Superior Court (1988) 44 Cal. 3d 1049, 1069, 245 Cal. Rptr. 412, 751 P.2d 470).

B. FDA Regulation Does Not Preempt Strict Liability for Failure to Warn. Federal Food and Drug Administration (FDA) regulations do not expressly preempt common law tort remedies for failure to warn (Carlin v. Superior Court (1996) 13 Cal. 4th 1104, 1113, 56 Cal. Rptr. 2d 162, 920 P.2d 134).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a defendant that is the manufacturer of a prescription drug that is unavoidably unsafe is strictly liable for injuries resulting from its failure to warn of the dangerous propensities of the drug that were either known or reasonably scientifically knowable at the time of distribution [see Brown v. Superior Court (1988) 44 Cal. 3d 1049, 1069, 245 Cal. Rptr. 412, 751 P.2d 470] .

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication on the issue that defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Therefore, counsel should set forth facts showing that defendant knew of the dangerous propensities of the drug, or that those dangers were scientifically knowable at the time the drug was distributed, and that defendant failed to provide adequate warnings regarding those dangers to the physicians who prescribed the drug. In appropriate cases, federal Food and Drug Administration (FDA) action or inaction is admissible to show whether a risk was known or reasonably scientifically knowable [Carlin v. Superior Court (1996) 13 Cal. 4th 1104, 1114, 56 Cal. Rptr. 2d 162, 920 P.2d 134 ; see § 190.283].

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in §§ 190.90, 190.170, 190.173, and 190.174 may be combined with the points and authorities in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Manufacturer of Prescription Drug Strictly Liable for Failure to Warn

In Carlin v. Superior Court, (1996) 13 Cal. 4th 1104, 56 Cal. Rptr. 2d 162, 920 P.2d 1347 , the plaintiff sustained injuries from ingesting the drug Halcion, which was prescribed for her by a physician between 1987 and 1992. She brought suit against Upjohn, the manufacturer of the drug. The plaintiff sought damages on the theories of strict liability for failure to properly prepare and/or warn of the dangerous propensities of the drug and breach of warranty. The drug manufacturer demurred, alleging that under California law, no cause of action for strict liability or breach of warranty can be stated against a prescription drug manufacturer based on failure to warn. The trial court sustained the demurrer as to those causes of action without leave to amend. Plaintiff petitioned for a writ of mandate.

The court of appeal ordered issuance of a writ of mandate directing the trial court to vacate its order sustaining the demurrer to the cause of action for strict liability and breach of warranty and to enter a new order overruling the demurrer. The California Supreme Court granted review.

The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment of the court of appeal. Among the many issues considered by the court was whether the plaintiff had a cause of action for strict liability for defendant's failure to warn. The court relied on its previous decision in Anderson v. Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corp. (1993) 53 Cal. 3d 987, 281 Cal. Rptr. 528, 810 P.2d 549 [see § 190.160[3][a]], in which the Court determined that manufacturers are strictly liable for injuries caused by their failure to give warning of dangers that were known to the scientific community at the time the product was manufactured and distributed (13 Cal. 4th 1104, 1109) . The Court held that Anderson applies to prescription drug manufacturers to the same extent as other manufacturers (13 Cal. 4th 1104, 1110) . The premise behind the strict liability standard is to insure that the costs of injuries resulting from defective products are borne by the manufacturers that put such products on the market rather than by the injured persons who are powerless to protect themselves (13 Cal. 4th 1104, 1110) .

In adopting the strict liability standard, the Court rejected the defendant's argument that a strict liability standard for failure to warn about known or reasonably scientifically knowable risks from prescription drugs is inconsistent with federal regulatory policy (13 Cal. 4th 1104, 1113) . The Court also rejected the contention that applying strict liability for failure to warn will result in excessive labeling of risks. Application of the failure to warn theory requires factual determinations on whether a causal link exists between an alleged side effect and a prescription drug and decisions whether the risk is more than merely speculative or conjectural (13 Cal. 4th 1104, 1116) .

The facts and procedural background of Brown v. Superior Court (1988) 44 Cal. 3d 1049, 245 Cal. Rptr. 412, 751 P.2d 470 , are discussed in § 190.88[3][a]. The Supreme Court discussed at length the various theories under which a manufacturer of an "unavoidably unsafe" drug could be held strictly liable, and determined that the manufacturer is not strictly liable for a "design defect" as that term is defined and analyzed under Barker v. Lull Eng'g Co. (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 413, 143 Cal. Rptr. 225, 573 P.2d 443 . Rather, the manufacturer is strictly liable only for failure to warn of the drug's dangerous propensities that were either known or reasonably knowable scientifically at the time of distribution, or for a failure to properly package the product (44 Cal. 3d 1049, 1056-1069) .

[b] FDA Regulation Does Not Preempt Strict Liability for Failure to Warn

The facts and procedural background of Carlin v. Superior Court (1996) 13 Cal. 4th 1104, 56 Cal. Rptr. 2d 162, 920 P.2d 134 , are discussed in § 190.63[3][a]. In reaffirming that prescription drug manufacturers are strictly liable for failure to warn, the Court rejected the defendant's argument that federal Food and Drug Administration (FDA) drug labeling requirements are determinative of a manufacturer's liability under state law. While not irrelevant [see § 190.283], FDA regulations do not preempt common law tort remedies for failure to warn (13 Cal. 4th 1104, 1113) . Thus, the FDA's approval of a particular warning is not determinative of strict liability under state law. However, manufacturer may not be held liable for failing to give a warning expressly precluded by FDA regulation [see § 190.174] (13 Cal. 4th 1104, 1115 n.4).

In Motus v. Pfizer (C.D. Cal. 2000) 127 F. Supp. 2d 1085 , the plaintiff's husband committed suicide while taking defendants drug in his treatment for depression. The plaintiff brought suit seeking recovery on strict liability for the pain, suffering and losses that her husband sustained while using defendants drug. The plaintiff alleged that defendant negligently failed to adequately warn the medical community, the general public and plaintiff's decedent of the dangers, contraindications and side effects of the drug' and that in the United States, the drug was not properly labeled by defendants, was not accompanied by proper warnings for safe, informed use, and that the labeling did not warn physicians in general and decedent in particular of the dangers inherent in its use, particularly that the drug can cause the user to become violent and suicidal (127 F. Supp. 2d 1085, 1087) . Defendant moved for partial summary judgment dismissing plaintiff's "inadequate warning" claims. Defendant sought an order that as a matter of law it may not be held liable for its failure to include in the labeling a warning of the risk of suicide. Defendant argued that under both California law and under the federal "conflict" preemption doctrine, plaintiff's state law claims based on defendant's failure to include a suicide warning in the drug's labeling were barred because the Food and Drug Administration (FDA) had already considered and rejected the inclusion of such a warning in the drug's labeling.

Partial summary judgment was denied to the defendant for the failure to establish that the FDA's approval of manufacturer's proposed warnings preempted plaintiff from asserting state law tort claims based on failure to warn of a suicide risk. The court held that: FDA requirements are minimum standards and that FDA approval is not a shield to liability; 21 C.F.R. § 314.70(c)(2)(i) permits manufacturers to strengthen warning labels without prior FDA approval; Defendant had not limited its attack to any specific warnings; and finally the FDA had not made any statement that defendant could not include a strengthened suicide warning (127 F. Supp. 2d 1085, 1096) . In light of these factors, the court found that defendant had not established that it would be impossible to comply simultaneously with FDA requirements and with a state law or decision requiring a strengthened warning (127 F. Supp. 2d 1085, 1096) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Manufacturer of Prescription Drug Strictly Liable for Failure to Warn

In Rodriguez v. Superior Court (1990) 221 Cal. App. 3d 1371, 271 Cal. Rptr. 114 , a minor who contracted Reyes Syndrome sued the manufacturer of baby aspirin, alleging strict products liability arising from use of the aspirin in a reasonably foreseeable manner. The court of appeal reversed the trial court's grant of defendant's motion for judgment on the pleadings, holding that the plaintiff stated a cause of action pursuant to the requirements of Brown v. Superior Court (1988) 44 Cal. 3d 1049, 245 Cal. Rptr. 412, 751 P.2d 470 , on the basis of pleadings providing that: (1) use of aspirin was reasonably foreseeable by defendant; (2) use involved substantial, foreseeable danger; and (3) adequate warnings were not given (221 Cal. App. 3d 1371, 1374-1376) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
6. Failure to Warn

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.164

§ 190.164 Opposing Contention That Defendant Is Strictly Liable for Failure to Warn--No Showing of Defendant's Knowledge of Potential Dangers

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities opposing the contention that defendant is liable in strict products liability for injuries caused by defendant's product (see, e.g., §§ 190.165 -190.172).]

DEFENDANT _____ [name] IS NOT STRICTLY LIABLE FOR PLAINTIFF'S INJURIES, BECAUSE PLAINTIFF HAS MADE NO SHOWING THAT DURING THE RELEVANT PERIOD OF TIME, DEFENDANT HAD ACTUAL OR CONSTRUCTIVE KNOWLEDGE OF THE POTENTIAL DANGERS INHERENT IN THE USE OF THE PRODUCT WITHOUT A WARNING.

A. Defendant's Knowledge of Danger Is Component of Failure-to-Warn Cause of Action. The defendant's actual or constructive knowledge of the potential dangers is a requisite element of a failure-to-warn cause of action in strict products liability (Anderson v. Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corp. (1991) 53 Cal. 3d 987, 1000, 281 Cal. Rptr. 528, 810 P.2d 549 ; Gonzalez v. Autoliv ASP, Inc. (2007) 154 Cal. App. 4th 780, 793, 64 Cal. Rptr. 3d 908).

[Optional] B. State-of-the-Art Evidence Admissible. State-of-the-art evidence is admissible in a failure-to-warn cause of action in strict products liability (Anderson v. Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corp. (1991) 53 Cal. 3d 987, 1004, 281 Cal. Rptr. 528, 810 P.2d 549).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a defendant is strictly liable for failing to warn the user of the product's dangers. The ground of opposition is that plaintiff failed to show that the defendant had actual or constructive knowledge of the potential dangers during the relevant period of time [see Anderson v. Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corp. (1991) 53 Cal. 3d 987, 281 Cal. Rptr. 528, 810 P.2d 549 ; Gonzalez v. Autoliv ASP, Inc. (2007) 154 Cal. App. 4th 780, 793, 64 Cal. Rptr. 3d 908]. The optional paragraph is for use to contend that state-of-the-art evidence is admissible in a failure-to-warn cause of action, that is, that the defendant may use state-of-the-art evidence to prove that the potential dangers asserted by plaintiff were scientifically unknown and unknowable during the relevant period of time.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities in support of defendant's motion for summary judgment on the ground that there is no triable issue of fact regarding defendant's knowledge or knowability of the asserted potential dangers. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should indicate plaintiff's failure to establish the existence of defendant's actual or constructive knowledge, and should also introduce evidence that the specific danger was not knowable at the relevant time.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Defendant's Knowledge of Danger Is Component of Failure-to-Warn Cause of Action

In Anderson v. Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corp. (1991) 53 Cal. 3d 987, 281 Cal. Rptr. 528, 810 P.2d 549 , plaintiff brought an action against defendant manufacturers of asbestos products, asserting various theories of recovery, including strict products liability, and seeking damages for respiratory injuries he allegedly incurred because of exposure to the asbestos while working in his occupation as an electrician at a military facility over a period of some 30 years. Ultimately, the amended complaint alleged a cause of action in strict products liability for the manufacture and distribution of asbestos, and other products containing asbestos, which contained design and manufacturing defects that caused injury to users and consumers, including the plaintiff, while being used in a reasonably foreseeable manner. Another cause of action focused on punitive damages, but also included allegations of failure to warn, and alleged that defendants marketed their products with specific prior knowledge, from scientific studies and medical data, that there was a high risk of injury and death from exposure to asbestos or asbestos-containing products; that defendants knew consumers and members of the general public had no knowledge of the potentially injurious nature of asbestos; and that defendants failed to warn users of the risk of danger. Defendant's pleading raised the state-of-the-art defense, asserting that even those at the vanguard of scientific knowledge at the time the products were sold could not have known that asbestos was dangerous to users in the concentrations associated with defendant's products. Plaintiff moved before trial to prevent defendants from presenting state-of-the-art evidence. By that time, plaintiff had indicated that he was proceeding, concerning his assertion of defective design, only on the "consumer expectation" prong of the design defect test set out in Barker v. Lull Eng'g Co. (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 413, 143 Cal. Rptr. 225, 573 P.2d 443 [see § 190.110[3][a]]. Accordingly, the argument of plaintiff's motion was directed primarily to the applicability of the state-of-the-art defense to that theory of strict liability.

The trial court granted the motion, on the ground that state-of-the-art evidence is irrelevant to any theory of strict liability. Defendants then moved to prevent plaintiff from proceeding on the failure-to-warn theory, arguing that plaintiff had waived the argument by striking his cause of action for punitive damages, and that it would be unfair to permit plaintiff to proceed. In response to the trial court's request for an offer of proof on the failure-to-warn allegations, plaintiff submitted evidence showing the initial absence of any warning, subsequent warnings that were inadequate during the relevant period, and the ultimate removal of the products from the market. Defendants argued that the state of the art, that is, what was scientifically knowable during the period of plaintiff's exposure to the asbestos, was their obvious and only defense to any cause of action for failure to warn, and that, in view of the trial court's decision to exclude state-of-the-art evidence, fairness dictated that plaintiff be precluded from proceeding on that theory. The trial court granted defendants' motion without a statement of reasons and, at trial, refused plaintiff's request for jury instructions pursuant to BAJI 9.00.7 (providing that a product is defective if the use of the product in a reasonably foreseeable manner by defendant involves a substantial danger not recognizable by the ordinary user, and the manufacturer fails to give adequate warning of the danger; also requiring adequate warning to the consumer of a product of potential risks or side effects that are known, or should have been known, which may follow the foreseeable use of the product). Following a jury verdict for defendants, including a special verdict that the products had no design defects, plaintiff moved for a new trial, asserting that the court erred in precluding proof of liability on a failure-to-warn theory, and that substantial evidence did not support the special verdict. The trial court granted the motion, agreeing with plaintiff that, with or without the state-of-the-art evidence, he was entitled to try the failure-to-warn cause of action. The court of appeal affirmed the order granting the new trial, on both grounds. The court of appeal stated that in strict liability asbestos cases, including those prosecuted on a failure-to-warn theory, state-of-the-art evidence is not admissible, because it focuses on the reasonableness of the defendant's conduct, which is irrelevant in strict liability.

The Supreme Court granted review and reversed, holding that actual or constructive knowledge of the potential dangers is a component of a failure-to-warn cause of action in strict products liability and, therefore, that state-of-the-art evidence is admissible (53 Cal. 3d 987, 1000, 1004) . The Court acknowledged that resolution of the evidentiary issue of whether state-of-the-art evidence is admissible requires a determination of whether knowledge (actual or constructive) is a component of strict liability on the failure-to-warn theory (53 Cal. 3d 987, 990) .

The Court traced the evolution of the failure-to-warn theory of strict products liability from the inception of the strict products liability doctrine in Greenman v. Yuba Power Prods., Inc. (1963) 59 Cal. 2d 57, 27 Cal. Rptr. 697, 377 P.2d 897 [see § 190.70[3][a]], and its refinement of the design-defect test in Barker v. Lull Eng'g Co. (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 413, 143 Cal. Rptr. 225, 573 P.2d 443 [see § 190.110[3][a]], through the line of cases, primarily at the appellate level, that have formulated the failure-to-warn theory (53 Cal. 3d 987, 994-995) . In Cavers v. Cushman Motor Sales, Inc. (1979) 95 Cal. App. 3d 338, 157 Cal. Rptr. 142 [see § 190.172[3][a]], the first case in which failure to warn was the sole theory of liability, the court of appeal approved a jury instruction that the product (a golf cart), otherwise properly manufactured, could be defective if no warning was given of a dangerous propensity in the operation of the product, and the absence of the warning rendered the product "substantially dangerous" to the user. The Court noted that a number of cases recognized that a failure to give adequate warnings might subject a manufacturer or distributor to strict liability when it knew or should have known of the danger and the necessity of warnings to ensure safe use (53 Cal. 3d 987, 996) . However, the Court noted, these cases did not address the specific factual question whether or not the manufacturer or distributor knew or should have known of the risks involved in the products, either because the nature of the product or the risk involved made the discussion unnecessary or because the plaintiff limited the action to risks about which the defendant obviously knew or should have known. Moreover, the opinions did not discuss knowledge or knowability as a component of the failure-to-warn theory of strict liability.

The Court observed, however, that a knowledge or knowability component clearly was included as an implicit condition of strict liability, and in that regard, California was in accord with authorities in a majority of other states (53 Cal. 3d 987, 997) . The Court noted that Oakes v. E.I. Du Pont de Nemours & Co., Inc. (1969) 272 Cal. App. 2d 645, 77 Cal. Rptr. 709 , was the first case to discuss knowledge or knowability as a condition of strict liability in the failure-to-warn context. In holding that the manufacturer of a weed-killing chemical did not have an obligation to warn a user of unknown or unknowable allergies to the product, Oakes accepted the premise that knowledge or knowability was a factor in the obligation to warn under Restatement (Second) of Torts § 402A, comment j (53 Cal. 3d 987, 998) . In Brown v. Superior Court (1988) 44 Cal. 3d 1049, 245 Cal. Rptr. 412, 751 P.2d 470 [see § 190.88[3][a]], the Supreme Court held that a manufacturer is not strictly liable for injuries caused by a prescription drug so long as it was properly prepared and accompanied by warnings of its dangerous propensities that were either known or reasonably scientifically knowable at the time of distribution (53 Cal. 3d 987, 999) . The Court stated that Brown applied only to prescription drugs, but that its "logic and common sense" are not limited to drugs, and that Brown "clearly implied that knowledge is also a component of strict liability for failure to warn in cases other than prescription drug cases." The Court concluded that knowledge, actual or constructive, is a requisite element for strict liability for failure to warn (53 Cal. 3d 987, 1000) .

The Court noted that one of the guiding principles of the strict liability doctrine was to relieve a plaintiff of the evidentiary burdens inherent in a negligence cause of action. Although, the Court observed, a minority view contends that the incorporation of the knowledge requirement improperly infuses negligence concepts into strict liability law, the claim that a particular component "ring of" negligence has not precluded its acceptance in the context of strict liability, pursuant to several of the Court's prior decisions. The Court cited as an example its opinion in Barker, in which it rejected the claim that the risk/benefit test was unacceptable because it introduced an element that "rings of negligence" (53 Cal. 3d 987, 1001) . The Court also stated that the "warning defect" theory is "rooted in negligence" to a greater extent than are the manufacturing- or design-defect theories, in that the warning defect relates to a failure extraneous to the product itself. Thus, while a manufacturing or design defect can be evaluated without reference to the conduct of the manufacturer, the giving of a warning cannot. The Court stated that if every product that has no warning were defective per se, and for that reason subject to strict liability, the mere fact of injury by an unlabeled product would automatically permit recovery, which is not the purpose and goal of the failure-to-warn theory of strict liability. Further, if a warning automatically precluded liability in every case, a manufacturer or distributor could easily escape liability with overly broad, and thus practically useless, warnings (53 Cal. 3d 987, 1002) .

Despite its roots in negligence, the Supreme Court stated, failure to warn in strict liability differs markedly from failure to warn in the negligence context. Negligence law requires a plaintiff to prove that a manufacturer or distributor did not warn of a particular risk for reasons that fell below the acceptable standard of care, that is, what a reasonably prudent manufacturer would have known and warned about. Strict liability is not concerned with the standard of due care or the reasonableness of a manufacturer's conduct. The rules of strict liability require a plaintiff to prove only that the defendant did not adequately warn of a particular risk that was known or knowable in light of the generally recognized and prevailing best scientific and medical knowledge available at the time of manufacture or distribution. Therefore, in strict liability, as opposed to negligence, the reasonableness of the defendant's failure to warn is immaterial (53 Cal. 3d 987, 1002-1003) . Stated another way, a reasonably prudent manufacturer that reasonably decides that the risk of harm is such as not to require a warning (for example, on the basis of the manufacturer's own testing showing results contrary to that of others in the scientific community), although possibly escaping liability under negligence principles, would be subject to strict products liability if it failed to give warning of dangers that were known to the scientific community at the time it manufactured or distributed the product. That is, whatever may be reasonable from the point of view of the manufacturer, the user of the product must be given the option either to refrain from using the product at all or to use it in such a way as to minimize the degree of danger (53 Cal. 3d 987, 1003) In conclusion, the Court recognized that an important goal of strict liability is to spread the risks and costs of injury to those most able to bear them, but that the drafters of the doctrine never intended to make the manufacturer or distributor the insurer of the safety of their products, or to impose absolute liability (53 Cal. 3d 987, 1003-1004) . The Court therefore also held that a defendant in a strict products liability action based on an alleged failure to warn of a risk of harm may present evidence of the state of the art, that is, evidence that the particular risk was neither known nor knowable by the application of scientific knowledge available at the time of manufacture, distribution, or both (53 Cal. 3d 987, 1004) .

The facts and procedural background of Gonzalez v. Autoliv ASP, Inc. (2007) 154 Cal. App. 4th 780, 64 Cal. Rptr. 3d 908 , are discussed in § 190.74[3][b]. The court of appeal held that the plaintiff failed to identify any particular risk known to the airbag module manufacturer for which it should have provided a warning (154 Cal. App. 4th 780, 793) .

[b] State-of-the-Art Evidence Admissible

Anderson v. Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corp. (1991) 53 Cal. 3d 987, 281 Cal. Rptr. 528, 810 P.2d 549 , is discussed in § 190.164[3][a].

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
6. Failure to Warn

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.165

§ 190.165 Opposing Contention That Defendant Is Strictly Liable for Failure to Warn--No Duty to Warn of Unforeseeable Use of Product

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities opposing the contention that defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product (see, e.g., §§ 190.164, 190.166 -190.171).]

DEFENDANT _____ [name] IS NOT STRICTLY LIABLE FOR PLAINTIFF'S INJURIES BECAUSE _____ [specify product] WAS NOT USED IN A REASONABLY FORESEEABLE MANNER.

A. Product Must Be Used in Reasonably Foreseeable Manner. In order to invoke the doctrine of strict liability based on failure to warn, a plaintiff must prove that at the time of injury, the product was being used in a manner that the manufacturer is required to anticipate. The question of what a manufacturer is "required to anticipate" in connection with the use of a product is one of reasonable foreseeability (Dosier v. Wilcox-Crittendon Co. (1975) 45 Cal. App. 3d 74, 78, 119 Cal. Rptr. 135).

B. No Duty to Warn of Use That Is Not Reasonably Foreseeable. A manufacturer has no duty to warn against a use that is not reasonably foreseeable (Dosier v. Wilcox-Crittendon Co. (1975) 45 Cal. App. 3d 74, 81, 119 Cal. Rptr. 135).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a defendant is strictly liable for failing to warn the user of the product's dangers. The ground of opposition set forth is that defendant is not strictly liable for failing to warn against a use of its product that is not reasonably foreseeable.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a demurrer or motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication on the issue that the product is not defective. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should state facts showing that plaintiff had been injured as a result of a use of the product that was not reasonably foreseeable [see, e.g., Dosier v. Wilcox-Crittendon Co. (1975) 45 Cal. App. 3d 74, 119 Cal. Rptr. 135 (use of hook in airport maintenance plant not reasonably foreseeable use when hook intended to be used as bull tie, stallion chain, or cattle tie)].

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be used to oppose the contentions supported by the points and authorities in §§ 190.160 -190.162.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Product Must Be Used in Reasonably Foreseeable Manner

In Dosier v. Wilcox-Crittendon Co. (1975) 45 Cal. App. 3d 74, 119 Cal. Rptr. 135 , plaintiff was injured while working at an airport maintenance plant when a cast iron hook, which was attached to a counterweight as a part of a rigging process, gave way, causing the counterweight to fall on his arm. The hook had been manufactured for use principally as a bull tie, stallion chain, or cattle tie. It was given to plaintiff by a plant foreman as part of a sling, and there was no marking on it regarding its content or lifting capacity. The hook had been purchased by the airline at a harness and saddlery wares outlet, from a display board containing harness equipment. At the time of purchase, there was no discussion regarding its intended use. Plaintiff brought an action based in strict liability against the manufacturers of the hook, claiming both defect (apparently design defect) and failure to warn. The trial court received evidence concerning the circumstances surrounding the purchase of the hook, and its use by the airline. The trial court entered judgment for defendants following a jury trial, and the plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that the trial court properly allowed evidence of circumstances surrounding the purchase of the hook and its use by the airline, because it bore on the issue of the manufacturer's intended use for the product and, ultimately, on the issue of foreseeability (45 Cal. App. 3d 74, 78-82) . Plaintiff stated the issues on appeal as follows: (1) whether the hook was defective because defendants failed to provide warnings of its proper use and capacity; and (2) whether plaintiff's use of the hook for lifting was reasonably foreseeable by the manufacturer (45 Cal. App. 3d 74, 77-78) . The court noted that the one common element in both issues is whether the hook was being used in a way intended by the manufacturer, and that the main issue of the case was that of foreseeability of the product's use, because there is "no duty to warn against a use that is not reasonably foreseeable" (45 Cal. App. 3d 74, 78, 81) . In order to invoke the doctrine of strict liability, the court stated, the plaintiff must prove that the product was being used, at the time of injury, in a way the manufacturer intended it to be used. In applying this rule, courts have held that it should not be narrowly applied, and that even an "unusual use" that the manufacturer is required to anticipate should not relieve the manufacturer of liability in the absence of warnings against that use. The court stated that what a manufacturer is required to anticipate in connection with the use of a product is a question of reasonable foreseeability, and that foreseeability of the misuse of a product is a question of fact. Consequently, the court rejected plaintiff's assertion of prejudicial error based on admission of evidence concerning the circumstances surrounding the purchase of the hook, holding that that evidence bears directly on the issue of foreseeability (45 Cal. App. 3d 74, 78) .

[b] No Duty to Warn of Use That Is Not Reasonably Foreseeable

The facts and procedural background of Dosier v. Wilcox-Crittendon Co. (1975) 45 Cal. App. 3d 74, 119 Cal. Rptr. 135 , are discussed in § 190.165[3][a].

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
6. Failure to Warn

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.166

§ 190.166 Opposing Contention That Defendant Is Strictly Liable for Failure to Warn--No Duty to Warn of Known and Recognized Danger

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities opposing the contention that defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product (see, e.g., §§ 190.164, 190.165, 190.167 -190.171).]

DEFENDANT _____ [name] IS NOT STRICTLY LIABLE BECAUSE PLAINTIFF SUSTAINED INJURIES FROM A KNOWN AND RECOGNIZED DANGER AND DEFENDANT HAD NO DUTY TO WARN OF THAT DANGER.

Manufacturer or Retailer Has No Duty to Warn of Known and Recognized Danger. A manufacturer or retailer has no duty to warn of a danger, or the potentiality of a danger, that is generally known and recognized (Johnson v. American Standard, Inc. (2008) 43 Cal. 4th 56, 67, 74 Cal. Rptr. 3d 108, 179 P.3d 905 ; Holmes v. J.C. Penney Co. (1982) 133 Cal. App. 3d 216, 220, 183 Cal. Rptr. 777 ; Bojorquez v. House of Toys, Inc. (1976) 62 Cal. App. 3d 930, 933, 133 Cal. Rptr. 483).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a defendant is strictly liable for failing to warn the user of the product's dangers. The ground of opposition set forth is that defendant is not strictly liable for failing to warn of a known and recognized danger.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context

in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a demurrer or motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication on the issue that the product is not defective. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should state facts showing that even if plaintiff had been injured by the product, the danger that resulted in the injury was one that was generally known and recognized [see, e.g., Holmes v. J.C. Penney Co. (1982) 133 Cal. App. 3d 216, 183 Cal. Rptr. 777 (danger of harm from firing of pellet gun as obvious); Bojorquez v. House of Toys, Inc. (1976) 62 Cal. App. 3d 930, 133 Cal. Rptr. 483 (danger of harm from slingshot as generally known and recognized)].

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be used to oppose the contentions supported by the points and authorities in §§ 190.160 -190.162.

[b] Related Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in §§ 190.245A and 190.246 may be combined with the points and authorities in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Manufacturer or Retailer Has No Duty to Warn of Known and Recognized Danger

In Holmes v. J.C. Penney Co. (1982) 133 Cal. App. 3d 216, 183 Cal. Rptr. 777 , plaintiff was struck and injured by a pellet fired from a pellet gun. The carbon dioxide cartridges powering the pellet gun had been bought from defendant retailer by a minor. Plaintiff brought an action in negligence and strict liability against defendant. The trial court sustained defendant's demurrer without leave to amend, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that plaintiff had no cause of action in either negligence or strict liability. In regards to the latter, the court held that defendant had no duty to warn of the dangers of using the carbon dioxide cartridges to power pellet guns, because that danger was obvious. The court followed Bojorquez v. House of Toys, Inc. (1976) 62 Cal. App. 3d 930, 133 Cal. Rptr. 483 , in holding that a seller does not need to warn of a danger or potentiality of danger that is generally known and recognized (133 Cal. App. 3d 216, 220) .

In Bojorquez v. House of Toys, Inc. (1976) 62 Cal. App. 3d 930, 133 Cal. Rptr. 483 , plaintiff was hit in the eye by a projectile fired from a slingshot. Plaintiff brought an action in negligence and strict liability against the retailer and the wholesaler of the slingshot. Defendants moved for summary judgment, which was granted. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment, holding that plaintiff had no cause of action against defendants in either negligence or strict liability. Specifically as to strict liability, the court held that defendants had no duty to warn of the danger of the slingshot, because a seller has no duty to warn of a danger or potentiality of danger that is generally known and recognized (62 Cal. App. 3d 930, 933-934) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Manufacturer or Retailer Has No Duty to Warn of Known and Recognized Danger

In Rosburg v. Minnesota Mining & Mfg. Co. (1986) 181 Cal. App. 3d 726, 226 Cal. Rptr. 299 , plaintiff brought a strict products liability action against the manufacturers of a breast implant device, alleging as a theory of recovery that the defendant had failed to warn her of the dangerous propensity of the product. The court of appeal held that failure to warn of the dangerous propensity of a product does not render the product defective unless the failure to warn was the cause of the injury. The court then held that defendant could not be liable on a failure-to-warn theory because the injured party was in fact warned of the dangerous propensity of the product by her physician (181 Cal. App. 3d 726, 734-735) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
6. Failure to Warn

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.167

§ 190.167 Opposing Contention That Defendant Is Strictly Liable for Failure to Warn--No Duty to Warn Every Ultimate User of Product When Person Controlling Product's Use Has Received Warning

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities opposing the contention that defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product (see, e.g., §§ 190.164 -190.166, 190.168 -190.171).]

DEFENDANT _____ [name] IS NOT STRICTLY LIABLE FOR PLAINTIFF'S INJURIES BECAUSE, EVEN THOUGH DEFENDANT DID NOT WARN PLAINTIFF OF THE DANGERS OF _____ [specify product], DEFENDANT DID IN FACT ADEQUATELY WARN _____ [specify person who controlled product's use], WHO CONTROLLED THE USE OF _____ [specify product], OF THAT PRODUCT'S DANGERS.

A. Manufacturer Has No Duty to Warn Every Ultimate User of Product of Its Dangers When Person Controlling Product's Use Has Received Adequate Warning. A manufacturer or retailer discharges its duty to warn of the dangers of its products when it adequately warns the person who controls the use of that product. When that person has been adequately warned, the manufacturer or retailer has no further duty to warn any other ultimate user of the product who is not a person controlling or operating the product (see Stevens v. Cessna Aircraft Co. (1981) 115 Cal. App. 3d 431, 433, 170 Cal. Rptr. 925).

[Optional] B. Airplane Manufacturer Has Duty to Warn Pilot but Not Passengers of Plane's Dangers. An airplane manufacturer has the duty to warn the plane's pilot of the dangers of the plane. However, once the manufacturer has adequately warned the pilot, the manufacturer has no further duty to warn the passengers of the plane of the same dangers (Stevens v. Cessna Aircraft Co. (1981) 115 Cal. App. 3d 431, 433-434, 170 Cal. Rptr. 925).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a defendant is strictly liable for failing to warn all ultimate users of the product's dangers. The ground of opposition set forth is that defendant is not strictly liable for failing to warn all ultimate users when defendant adequately warned the person controlling the use of the product of the product's dangers.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a demurrer or motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication on the issue that the product is not defective. The points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should state facts showing that defendant had issued adequate warnings to the person who controlled or operated the product [see, e.g., Stevens v. Cessna Aircraft Co. (1981) 115 Cal. App. 3d 431, 170 Cal. Rptr. 925 (no duty to warn passengers of overload danger when plane's pilot had been adequately warned in owner's manual)].

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities may be used to oppose the contentions supported by the points and authorities in §§ 190.160 -190.162.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Manufacturer Has No Duty to Warn Every Ultimate User of Product of Its Dangers When Person Controlling Product's Use Has Received Adequate Warning

In Stevens v. Cessna Aircraft Co. (1981) 115 Cal. App. 3d 431, 170 Cal. Rptr. 925 , plaintiff's decedent was killed in a four-passenger airplane crash. Plaintiff brought an action in strict liability against the plane's manufacturer, on the ground that defendant failed to post a warning to the passengers as to the plane's load capacity, and that the plane was subsequently overloaded, causing the crash. Defendant moved for summary judgment, which was granted by the trial court. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that defendant had no duty to warn the passengers of the load capacity of the plane, because only the pilot has control of the plane and responsibility under federal regulations to determine the aircraft's weight prior to takeoff. Because the owner's manual for this type of plane contained the necessary information for use by the pilot, defendant's duty to warn only the pilot had been met. The court reasoned that in the airplane situation, the passenger necessarily depends on the skill and judgment of the pilot to determine the load capacity of the airplane in light of the flying conditions to be encountered. It would be impossible ultimately to provide meaningful information to the passenger, and in the long run a rule requiring the manufacturer to provide such information directly to the passenger would not be in the interests of passenger safety (115 Cal. App. 3d 431, 433-434) .

[b] Airplane Manufacturer Has Duty to Warn Pilot but Not Passengers of Plane's Dangers

Stevens v. Cessna Aircraft Co. (1981) 115 Cal. App. 3d 431, 170 Cal. Rptr. 925 , is discussed in § 190.167[3][a].

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Manufacturer Has No Duty to Warn Every Ultimate User of Product of Its Dangers When Person Controlling Product's Use Has Received Adequate Warning

In Persons v. Salomon N. Am., Inc. (1990) 217 Cal. App. 3d 168, 265 Cal. Rptr. 773 , an action arising from a ski accident in which the plaintiff's rented ski bindings failed to release after a fall, the plaintiff filed a motion for partial directed verdict against the manufacturer of the bindings, seeking to establish that the manufacturer was strictly liable for failure to warn her that the bindings were dangerous when used with the type of boots she rented (which were made of a certain plastic) unless the boots were first treated with silicone. The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's denial of the motion, holding that the manufacturer had a duty to warn only the supplier of the product, rather than the ultimate consumer, because once the product was distributed, the manufacturer had no practical way to provide an effective warning directly to the consumer, and analysis of the plastic composition of boots required calibration with a special instrument, which was properly done by the ski-shop technician. Once the manufacturer warned the supplier, the supplier had a duty to warn the ultimate consumer (217 Cal. App. 3d 168, 176-178) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
6. Failure to Warn

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.168

§ 190.168 Opposing Contention That Defendant Is Strictly Liable for Failure to Warn--Bulk Manufacturer Has No Duty to Warn Ultimate Consumer of Product That Is Subsequently Repackaged by Distributor or Retailer

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities opposing the contention that defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product (see, e.g., §§ 190.164 -190.167, 190.169 -190.171).]

DEFENDANT _____ [name] IS NOT STRICTLY LIABLE FOR PLAINTIFF'S INJURIES BECAUSE PLAINTIFF WAS INJURED BY A REPACKAGED PRODUCT AND DEFENDANT, AS BULK MANUFACTURER OF THE PRODUCT IN ITS ORIGINAL FORM, HAD INCLUDED ADEQUATE WARNINGS TO THE DISTRIBUTOR IN ITS BULK SALE AND THUS HAD NO DUTY TO WARN OF THE DANGERS OF THE PRODUCT AS SUBSEQUENTLY REPACKAGED BY THE DISTRIBUTOR.

Bulk Manufacturer Who Has Provided Adequate Warning in Bulk Sale of Product to Distributor Has No Duty to Warn Ultimate Consumer of Product's Dangers When Distributor Has Subsequently Repackaged, Relabeled, and Remarketed Product. A bulk manufacturer has no duty to warn the ultimate consumer of a product of that product's dangers when the product has been repackaged, relabeled, and remarketed by a distributor and the manufacturer has provided adequate warnings in its initial bulk sale to the distributor (Groll v. Shell Oil Co. (1983) 148 Cal. App. 3d 444, 449, 196 Cal. Rptr. 52).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a defendant is strictly liable for failing to warn of the product's dangers. The ground of opposition set forth is that defendant is not strictly liable for failing to warn the ultimate user of a product that has been repackaged, relabeled, and remarketed by a distributor, when defendant included adequate warnings in its initial bulk sale of the product to the distributor.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a demurrer or motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication on the issue that defendant is subject to strict liability. The points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should state facts showing that defendant was a bulk manufacturer, that defendant had adequately warned the distributor of the product's dangers in the initial bulk sale, and that the distributor had subsequently repackaged and relabeled the product into the product's form at time of purchase by the ultimate consumer [see, e.g., Groll v. Shell Oil Co. (1983) 148 Cal. App. 3d 444, 196 Cal. Rptr. 52 (bulk manufacturer of fuel had no duty to warn ultimate consumer of repackaged fuel)].

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities may be used to oppose the contentions supported by the points and authorities in §§ 190.160 -190.162.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Bulk Manufacturer Who Has Provided Adequate Warning in Bulk Sale of Product to Distributor Has No Duty to Warn Ultimate Consumer of Product's Dangers When Distributor Has Subsequently Repackaged, Relabeled, and Remarketed Product

In Groll v. Shell Oil Co. (1983) 148 Cal. App. 3d 444, 196 Cal. Rptr. 52 , plaintiff was injured while using fuel to light a fireplace. Plaintiff brought an action in negligence, warranty, and strict liability based on failure to warn against the manufacturer of the fuel. Defendant manufacturer had sold the fuel in a bulk sale to a distributor. Defendant had included a data sheet warning of the fuel's dangerous propensities with the product in the bulk sale. The distributor, however, packaged the product in individual containers that warned only that the fuel was flammable and should be kept away from heat. Plaintiff had purchased the product from the distributor. Defendant manufacturer moved for nonsuit, and the trial court granted the motion. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that plaintiff was not injured by inadequate warning, but rather by his own improper use of the product. The court also held that defendant manufacturer was absolved of its responsibility at the time it provided adequate warnings to the distributor who subsequently repackaged, relabeled, and marketed the product. The court explained that to hold otherwise would impose an onerous burden on a bulk sales manufacturer to inspect the subsequent labeling of the packaged product. In addition, a bulk manufacturer would have severe enforcement problems if the bulk product purchaser failed to adhere to the recommended warnings (148 Cal. App. 3d 444, 448-449) .

CAUTION:

The Supreme Court ordered depublished a case that is similar in facts and issues to Groll v. Shell Oil Co. (1983) 148 Cal. App. 3d 444 , 196 Cal. Rptr. 52 . In Pennwalt Corp. v. Superior Court (1985) 171 Cal. App. 3d 923, 218 Cal. Rptr. 675 , the court of appeal held that defendant bulk manufacturer had no duty to warn the ultimate consumer of the dangers of a chemical in its repackaged form. As in Groll, defendant had no control over the subsequent repackaging, relabeling, and combining of its product with other chemicals, nor any ability to monitor those actions. The Supreme Court ordered that Pennwalt be depublished on November 20, 1985.

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
6. Failure to Warn

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.169

§ 190.169 Opposing Contention That Defendant Is Strictly Liable for Failure to Warn--Manufacturer of Nondefective Component Part Has No Duty to Warn of Danger of Finished Product

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities opposing the contention that defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product (see, e.g., § 190.85).]

DEFENDANT _____ [name] IS NOT STRICTLY LIABLE FOR PLAINTIFF'S INJURIES BECAUSE DEFENDANT ONLY MANUFACTURED A NONDEFECTIVE COMPONENT PART OF THE PRODUCT THAT INJURED PLAINTIFF AND AS A RESULT HAD NO DUTY TO WARN PLAINTIFF OF THE DANGERS OF THE FINISHED PRODUCT.

Duty to Warn Rests With Manufacturer of Finished Product and Not With Manufacturer of Nondefective Component Part. The manufacturer of a nondefective component part who has no control over the design, manufacture, and packaging of a finished product has no duty to warn the consumer of that finished product of any danger that arises after the nondefective component part is installed in the finished product. Rather, the manufacturer of the finished product is in the best position to protect against and warn of the danger (Lee v. Electric Motor Div. (1985) 169 Cal. App. 3d 375, 389, 215 Cal. Rptr. 195).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a defendant is strictly liable for failing to warn of the product's dangers. The ground of opposition set forth is that defendant is not strictly liable for failing to warn the user of a finished product if defendant has only manufactured a nondefective component part of that finished product.

These points and authorities may be combined with other points and authorities pertaining to component part manufacturers as set forth in § 190.85. These points and authorities may also be combined with other points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a demurrer or motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication on the issue that defendant is subject to strict liability. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should state facts showing that defendant manufactured only a component part of the finished product, that the component part was not defective, and that defendant had no control over the design, manufacture, and packaging of the finished product [see, e.g., Lee v. Electric Motor Div. (1985) 169 Cal. App. 3d 375, 215 Cal. Rptr. 195 (manufacturer of nondefective motor had no duty to warn of danger of meat grinder in which motor was installed)].

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be used to oppose the contentions supported by the points and authorities in §§ 190.160 -190.162.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Duty to Warn Rests With Manufacturer of Finished Product and Not With Manufacturer of Nondefective Component Part

The facts and procedural background of Lee v. Electric Motor Div. (1985) 169 Cal. App. 3d 375, 215 Cal. Rptr. 195 , are discussed in § 190.85[3][a]. In affirming the judgment, the court held that a manufacturer of a nondefective component part has no duty to warn of the dangers of the finished product in which the part is installed. In its reasoning, the court stressed the fact that defendant component manufacturer gave no input and had no control over the design, manufacture, and packaging of the finished product. Thus, the manufacturer of the finished product, and not the component manufacturer, is in the best position to protect against and warn of the danger that arises after the nondefective component part is installed in the finished product (169 Cal. App. 3d 375, 389) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
6. Failure to Warn

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.170

§ 190.170 Opposing Contention That Defendant Is Strictly Liable for Failure to Warn--Drug Manufacturer Has Duty to Warn Doctor but Not Patient

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities opposing the contention that defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product (see, e.g., § 190.167).]

DEFENDANT _____ [name] IS NOT STRICTLY LIABLE FOR PLAINTIFF'S INJURIES BECAUSE AS A DRUG MANUFACTURER, DEFENDANT HAD A DUTY TO WARN ONLY PLAINTIFF'S DOCTOR OF THE DANGERS OF _____ [specify product] AND DID NOT HAVE A DUTY TO WARN PLAINTIFF AS THE ULTIMATE USER OF THE DRUG.

Drug Manufacturer Has Duty to Warn Doctor but Not Patient. The duty of adequate warning by the manufacturer of an ethical drug is discharged by its warning of hazards to doctors who may in the exercise of their medical judgments decide to use the drug as a part of their chemotherapy. Absent special circumstances, known or foreseeable in the exercise of due care by the manufacturer, there is no duty to warn the patient (Carlin v. Superior Court (1996) 13 Cal. 4th 1104, 1116, 56 Cal. Rptr. 2d 162, 920 P.2d 134 ; Carmichael v. Reitz (1971) 17 Cal. App. 3d 958, 989, 95 Cal. Rptr. 381).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a defendant is strictly liable for failing to warn of the product's dangers. The ground of opposition set forth is that defendant drug manufacturer is not strictly liable for failing to warn a medical patient when defendant has adequately warned the physician who prescribed the drug to the patient.

These points and authorities may be combined with other points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a demurrer or motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication on the issue that defendant is subject to strict liability. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should state facts showing that defendant was a drug manufacturer who adequately warned the medical profession of the dangers of its drug [see, e.g., Carmichael v. Reitz (1971) 17 Cal. App. 3d 958, 95 Cal. Rptr. 381 (manufacturer warned doctor but not patient of dangers of drug to treat endometriosis)].

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be used to oppose the contentions supported by the points and authorities in §§ 190.160 -190.162.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Drug Manufacturer Has Duty to Warn Medical Profession but Not Patient

The facts and procedural background of Carlin v. Superior Court (1996) 13 Cal. 4th 1104, 56 Cal. Rptr. 2d 162, 920 P.2d 134 are discussed in § 190.163[3][a]. In reaffirming that prescription drug manufacturers are strictly liable for failure to warn, the Court added that the duty to warn runs to the physician, not the patient. The physician who dispenses the drug to his or her patients is responsible for making sure that the warning reaches patients for whom the drug is prescribed (13 Cal. 4th 1104, 1116) .

In Carmichael v. Reitz (1971) 17 Cal. App. 3d 958, 95 Cal. Rptr. 381 , plaintiff suffered pulmonary embolisms and thrombophlebitis after taking a drug for treatment of endometriosis. Plaintiff brought an action in strict liability and negligence against the manufacturer of the drug and the doctor who prescribed the drug to plaintiff. The trial court granted a nonsuit in favor of defendant doctor, and the jury returned a verdict in favor of defendant manufacturer. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment as to each defendant. With regard to defendant manufacturer, the court held that defendant was not strictly liable under a duty to warn theory, because a drug manufacturer's duty to warn extends only to warning of the drug's hazards to doctors who may in the exercise of their medical judgments decide to use the drug as a part of their chemotherapy. Absent special circumstances, known or foreseeable in the exercise of due care by the manufacturer, there is no duty to warn the patient. The court reasoned that in reality, it is the prescribing doctor and not the patient who stands in the shoes of the ordinary consumer. The court did qualify its holding, however, by noting that if the promotional features of communications to the doctors by the manufacturer unfairly and unreasonably predominate, a warning otherwise adequate may become inadequate and the adequacy of the warning may present a jury question (17 Cal. App. 3d 958, 989) . However, such was not this case. In fact, plaintiff had actually become aware of the dangers of the drug after taking it, yet continued to take the drug even after acquiring such knowledge. Thus, assumption of the risk was an applicable defense under the circumstances (17 Cal. App. 3d 958, 991-992) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Drug Manufacturer Has Duty to Warn Medical Profession but Not Patient

Finn v. G.D. Searle & Co. (1984) 35 Cal. 3d 691, 200 Cal. Rptr. 870, 677 P.2d 1147 , is discussed in § 190.193[4][a]. Although the subject was not technically at issue in the case, a jury instruction that included language regarding the duty to warn the doctor, but not the patient was upheld. In a case involving both strict liability and negligence theories based on failure to warn, the Supreme Court affirmed a judgment for the defendant drug manufacturer. At issue was a jury instruction that had been given on failure to warn. Specifically, the trial court had instructed the jury that the manufacturer of a drug is under a duty to exercise reasonable care to warn the medical profession of potential dangers reasonably foreseeable from use of its drug. The jury was further instructed that the duty of the drug manufacturer is to warn the medical profession, and that the manufacturer had no duty to insure that the warning reaches the patient for whom the drug is prescribed. In the appeal, plaintiff disputed the injection of "reasonable care" and "reasonable foreseeability" into the strict liability instruction, but did not dispute the latter phrase regarding the duty to warn the medical profession, but not the patient. The Court held that the instruction was not prejudicial (35 Cal. 3d 691, 698-702) .

NOTE:

It is unclear whether principles of negligence will be required to be injected in future duty to warn instructions. However, because the duty to warn a physician rather than a patient was not disputed in Finn v. G.D. Searle & Co., that portion of the jury instruction appears to continue to be settled law.

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
6. Failure to Warn

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.171

§ 190.171 Opposing Contention That Defendant Is Strictly Liable for Failure to Warn--Manufacturer Has No Duty to Warn When Plaintiff Is Injured by Another Manufacturer's Product

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities opposing the contention that defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product (see, e.g., §§ 190.164 -190.167).]

DEFENDANT _____ [name] IS NOT STRICTLY LIABLE FOR PLAINTIFF'S INJURIES BECAUSE PLAINTIFF'S INJURIES WERE PROXIMATELY CAUSED BY A PRODUCT MANUFACTURED BY SOMEONE OTHER THAN DEFENDANT AND THEREFORE DEFENDANT DID NOT HAVE A DUTY TO WARN PLAINTIFF OF THE DANGERS OF EITHER DEFENDANT'S PRODUCT OR OF THE DANGERS OF THE PRODUCT THAT CAUSED PLAINTIFF'S INJURIES.

A. Manufacturer Has No Duty to Warn of Risks of Its Product if Product of Another Has Proximately Caused Plaintiff's Injuries. A manufacturer is not strictly liable for failing to warn of risks of using its product when it is shown that the proximate cause of injury to a plaintiff is not the manufacturer's product but rather is a product manufactured by someone else (Powell v. Standard Brands Paint Co. (1985) 166 Cal. App. 3d 357, 362-363, 212 Cal. Rptr. 395 ; Blackwell v. Phelps Dodge Corp. (1984) 157 Cal. App. 3d 372, 377-378, 203 Cal. Rptr. 706).

B. Manufacturer Has No Duty to Warn of Risks of Another's Product. A manufacturer's duty to warn is restricted to warnings based on the characteristics of the manufacturer's own product. The manufacturer is not required to study and analyze the products of others and to warn users of risks of those products (*Taylor v. Elliott Turbomachinery Co. (2009) 171 Cal. App. 4th 564, 2009 Cal. App. LEXIS 214, at 25 ; Powell v. Standard Brands Paint Co. (1985) 166 Cal. App. 3d 357, 364, 212 Cal. Rptr. 395 ; Blackwell v. Phelps Dodge Corp. (1984) 157 Cal. App. 3d 372, 377-378, 203 Cal. Rptr. 706).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a defendant is strictly liable for failing to warn of a product's dangers. The ground of opposition set forth is that defendant manufacturer has no duty to warn of the dangers of its product when plaintiff's injuries are proximately caused by the product of another, and that defendant has no duty to warn of the dangers of the products of another.

These points and authorities may be combined with other points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a demurrer or motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication on the issue that defendant is subject to strict liability. The points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should state facts showing that plaintiff's injuries were not proximately caused by defendant's product but instead were caused by the product of another [see, e.g., Powell v. Standard Brands Paint Co. (1985) 166 Cal. App. 3d 357, 212 Cal. Rptr. 395 (although plaintiff had been using defendant's thinner, plaintiff switched brands and was injured while using another manufacturer's thinner); Blackwell v. Phelps Dodge Corp. (1984) 157 Cal. App. 3d 372, 203 Cal. Rptr. 706 (tank car and not defendant's acid that was loaded into tank car was allegedly defective for lack of warnings)].

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities may be used to oppose the contentions supported by the points and authorities in §§ 190.160 -190.162.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Manufacturer Has No Duty to Warn of Risks of Its Product if Product of Another Has Proximately Caused Plaintiff's Injuries

In Powell v. Standard Brands Paint Co. (1985) 166 Cal. App. 3d 357, 212 Cal. Rptr. 395 , plaintiffs incurred injuries and damages from an explosion that occurred while plaintiffs were stripping a tile floor with a buffer and thinner. Plaintiffs brought an action in strict liability and negligence against various suppliers and manufacturers of buffers and thinners. One such defendant (respondent), moved for summary judgment. Respondent claimed that although plaintiffs had used its lacquer thinner product to begin a job, the accident had occurred the next day while plaintiffs used another manufacturer's lacquer thinner. Plaintiffs claimed that even though the accident occurred while using another manufacturer's thinner, respondent nevertheless breached its duty to warn of the product's highly flammable characteristics. The trial court disagreed, and granted respondent's motion. Plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the summary judgment in favor of respondent, holding that respondent may not be held strictly liable for failing to warn of the risks of using its product when plaintiff's injury was proximately caused by a product manufactured by someone else. The court explained that respondent's failure to warn was simply not a legal proximate cause of plaintiffs' injuries (166 Cal. App. 3d 357, 362-363) . The court also held that respondent's duty to warn was restricted to warnings based on the characteristics of respondent's own product, and that the law did not require respondent to study and analyze the products of others and to warn users of risks of those products. The court explained that a manufacturer's decision to supply warnings, and the nature of any warnings, are based on and tailored to the risks of use of the manufacturer's own product. Thus, even when a manufacturer erroneously omits warnings, the most that manufacturer could reasonably foresee is that consumers might be subject to the risks of the manufacturer's own product, because those are the only risks that manufacturer is required to know (166 Cal. App. 3d 357, 364) . However, the court declined to rule on whether a manufacturer could be liable for failing to warn of its risks or the risks of another's product when another's product proximately causes a plaintiff's injuries, if the following circumstances exist: (1) the product immediately causing injury (product B) is subject to the same generic description as the product previously used with inadequate warnings (product A); (2) product B is generally used for the same purposes as product A by consumers; (3) product B's warnings are inadequate; and (4) product B has risks of use identical to those of product A. The court commented that this theory of liability gains credence to the extent a generically identical product, with presumably identical risks of use, is made by a limited number of manufacturers in an industry, and there is an industry-wide practice of omitting warnings on the product. In such a situation, each manufacturer has reason to know the risks of the other products and that a consumer will receive no adequate warnings from the other products. However, the court stopped short of deciding whether liability would exist under such circumstances, because in this case plaintiffs' attorneys had not pleaded facts necessary to support such a legal theory (166 Cal. App. 3d 357, 365) . The case does leave open the possibility, however, that such a theory might constitute a viable cause of action in the future.

In Blackwell v. Phelps Dodge Corp. (1984) 157 Cal. App. 3d 372, 203 Cal. Rptr. 706 , plaintiffs sustained personal injuries while attempting to unload a tank car filled with sulfuric acid. Plaintiffs brought an action in strict liability and negligence against various defendants, including the company that supplied and loaded the acid into the tank car. Plaintiffs contended that that company failed to warn plaintiffs of a possible accumulation of pressure within the tank, or to instruct them on how to unload the acid safely. Defendant successfully moved for summary judgment, and plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that defendant acid supplier was not subject to strict liability for failure to warn of the dangers of the product of another. Plaintiff had alleged that the tank car, and not the acid that defendant supplied and loaded into the tank car, was dangerous and defective. Thus, defendant incurred no liability to plaintiffs for its failure to warn them of danger from formation of pressure in the acid allegedly caused by defective design of the tank car, or to instruct them on how safely to unload the acid from the tank. Because defendant neither owned nor leased the tank car, defendant was without authority to put any warnings or instructions on the car, the absence of which allegedly made the car a defective product. Thus, as a matter of law, defendant could not be held strictly liable to plaintiffs for having failed to provide such warnings and instructions (157 Cal. App. 3d 372, 378-380) .

[b] Manufacturer Has No Duty to Warn of Risks of Another's Product

In Taylor v. Elliott Turbomachinery Co. (2009) 171 Cal. App. 4th 564 , the decedent was exposed to asbestos-containing products while serving in the Navy. The defendants supplied the Navy with equipment used in the ship's propulsion system, some of which included asbestos-containing parts. The asbestos-containing parts to which the decedent was exposed were manufactured and supplied by third parties. The plaintiff nevertheless alleged that defendants breached their duty to warn the decedent of the risks inherent in the asbestos-containing materials supplied by other manufacturers. The trial court granted defendants' motions for summary judgment.

The court of appeal affirmed. The defendants had no duty to warn of the hazards of products made or supplied by other manufacturers and used in conjunction with the defendants' equipment. Although a manufacturer may owe a duty to warn when the use of its product in combination with the product of another creates a potential hazard, that duty arises only when the manufacturer's own product causes the risk of harm (*171 Cal. App. 4th 564, 2009 Cal. App. LEXIS 214, at *25-33) .

Powell v. Standard Brands Paint Co. (1985) 166 Cal. App. 3d 357, 212 Cal. Rptr. 395 , is discussed in § 190.171[3][a].

Blackwell v. Phelps Dodge Corp. (1984) 157 Cal. App. 3d 372, 203 Cal. Rptr. 706 , is discussed in § 190.171[3][a].

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Manufacturer Has No Duty to Warn of Risks of Its Product When Product of Another Has Proximately

Caused Plaintiff's Injuries

In Garman v. Magic Chef, Inc. (1981) 117 Cal. App. 3d 634, 173 Cal. Rptr. 20 , plaintiff's decedent was injured, and subsequently died, when she lit a cooking stove located adjacent to the propane gas system of her motor home. A copper tubing of the system had two gas leaks, and five minutes after the stove was lit, flammable vapor from the leaks contacted the flame and an explosion ensued. Plaintiff brought an action in strict liability against numerous defendants, including defendant manufacturer of the stove. As to the latter defendant, plaintiff claimed that, although the stove itself contained no physical defect, it came with a defective warning and installation instruction. The trial court granted a summary judgment in favor of this defendant, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment, holding that as a matter of law the stove manufacturer had no duty to warn that a lighted but properly operating stove might ignite gas leaking from some other place. In other words, the absence of a warning by defendant stove manufacturer did not proximately cause the explosion. Thus, a manufacturer has no duty to warn when a person's injuries are not caused by any unreasonably dangerous condition or feature of that manufacturer's product. Nor may the maker of a product be liable for failing to warn of injury that may befall a person who uses that product in an unsafe place or in conjunction with another product that because of a defect or improper use is itself unsafe. Thus, defendant was under no duty to warn of the possible defect in the product of another and was not liable for failing to do so (117 Cal. App. 3d 634, 637-639) .

NOTE:

Another court of appeal disagreed with the holding in Garman v. Magic Chef, Inc. that the warning requirement is limited to unreasonably or unavoidably dangerous products. In that case, the court held that directions or warnings should be used if reasonably required to prevent the use of a product from becoming unreasonably dangerous. The court stated that it is the lack of such a warning that renders a product unreasonably dangerous and therefore defective [Gonzales v. Carmenita Ford Truck Sales, Inc. (1987) 192 Cal. App. 3d 1143, 1151, 238 Cal. Rptr. 18] .

[b] Manufacturer Has No Duty to Warn of Risks of Another's Product

Garman v. Magic Chef, Inc. (1981) 117 Cal. App. 3d 634, 173 Cal. Rptr. 20 , is discussed in § 190.171[4][a].

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
6. Failure to Warn

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.172

§ 190.172 Opposing Contention That Defendant Is Strictly Liable for Failure to Warn--Determining Existence of Defect Requires Weighing of Degrees of Danger

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities opposing the contention that defendant is liable in strict products liability for injuries caused by defendant's product (see, e.g., §§ 190.164 -190.171).]

DEFENDANT _____ [name] IS NOT STRICTLY LIABLE FOR PLAINTIFF'S INJURIES, BECAUSE DEFENDANT'S PRODUCT IS NOT DEFECTIVE ON THE BASIS OF A WEIGHING OF THE DEGREES OF DANGER CAUSED BY THE _____ [ABSENCE or INADEQUACY] OF WARNING REGARDING THE FORESEEABLE USES OF THE PRODUCT.

A. Determination of Existence of Defect Requires Weighing of Degrees of Danger. The determination whether the absence of a warning renders a product defective requires a weighing of the degrees of danger, involving all relevant criteria, inherent in the foreseeable uses of the product (Cavers v. Cushman Motor Sales, Inc. (1979) 95 Cal. App. 3d 338, 349, 157 Cal. Rptr. 142).

[Optional] B. "Substantially Dangerous" Standard Appropriate to Determine Threshold Degree of Danger. The determination whether the absence of a warning renders a product defective is appropriately governed by the "substantially dangerous" standard when the term is adequately defined, and the determination is made from the evidence and measured in the light of all relevant criteria (Cavers v. Cushman Motor Sales, Inc. (1979) 95 Cal. App. 3d 338, 349, 157 Cal. Rptr. 142).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a defendant is strictly liable for failure to warn the user of the dangerous propensities of a product that is otherwise faultlessly made. The ground of opposition is that a weighing of the degrees of danger inherent in the foreseeable use of the product without an adequate warning is necessary to determine the existence of a defect, and that under the facts, the threshold degree of danger was not evidenced, and therefore no defect exists in the product [see Cavers v. Cushman Motor Sales, Inc. (1979) 95 Cal. App. 3d 338, 349, 157 Cal. Rptr. 142] . The optional paragraph is for use if the "substantially dangerous" standard is used to determine the required threshold degree of danger under the circumstances.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of strict products liability. For example, they may be used in support of the use of jury instructions that require the jury to find that the absence of an adequate warning rendered the use of the product "substantially dangerous," in opposition to plaintiff's contention that the jury should not be allowed to consider the degrees of danger involved, nor be provided with any guidance regarding the definition of "danger" in a failure-to-warn case. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Therefore, counsel should show that the evidence and controlling criteria warrant the definition and explanation of the degree of danger required to be established to render the product defective for the purpose of imposing strict liability on the manufacturer because of its failure to warn of the dangerous propensities of the product [see Cavers v. Cushman Motor Sales, Inc. (1979) 95 Cal. App. 3d 338, 349, 157 Cal. Rptr. 142 ("substantially dangerous" standard appropriate if term properly defined and explained)].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Determination of Existence of Defect Requires Weighing of Degrees of Danger

In Cavers v. Cushman Motor Sales, Inc. (1979) 95 Cal. App. 3d 338, 157 Cal. Rptr. 142 , the lessee of a golf cart, who was injured while riding in the cart, brought an action against the manufacturer and lessor of the cart. The action alleged that defendants were strictly liable because of their failure to warn of the product's propensity to tip over while turning. Plaintiff, who rented the cart in conjunction with a business-related golf tournament, allowed an acquaintance to drive the cart while he rode as a passenger. While the driver attempted to negotiate a turn, the cart either tipped over or began to tip over, at which point plaintiff allegedly extended his leg out of the cart to brace himself, and incurred injuries. (Evidence conflicted regarding whether or not the cart actually tipped over, and the speed at which it was moving.) Plaintiff brought an action against the driver, her employer, the golf club that leased the cart, and the cart manufacturer. The jury returned a special verdict in favor of defendants, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed (95 Cal. App. 3d 338, 351) . The court noted that the plaintiff's sole theory of recovery was strict liability in tort for failure to warn of the golf cart's propensity to tip while turning. Plaintiff contended that the trial court erred in giving the following jury instruction: "An article otherwise appropriately made and maintained is defective within the meaning of the instruction which I have just given if the manufacturer and/or lessor fails to adequately warn of dangerous propensities of such article which in the absence of an adequate warning renders the article substantially dangerous to the user." Plaintiff specifically contended that the trial court's use of the adverb "substantially" to modify the term "dangerous" is contrary to California law and prejudicially increased his burden of proof. The court noted that prior to Cronin v. J.B.E. Olson Corp. (1972) 8 Cal. 3d 121, 104 Cal. Rptr. 433, 501 P.2d 1153 , the cases involving products liability actions required that a two-pronged test be met to establish liability. The claimant was required to prove (1) "a defective condition," and (2) that the defect was "unreasonably dangerous." In Cronin, the California Supreme Court eliminated the plaintiff's burden of establishing that a proved defect was also "unreasonably dangerous" (95 Cal. App. 3d 338, 342) . Plaintiff argued that the prohibition of Cronin against the use of the term "unreasonably dangerous" applies with equal force to failure-to-warn cases, and that the term "substantially dangerous" is an equivalent term. The court of appeal concluded that Cronin, while eliminating in manufacturing-defect cases the dual burden of proving both the existence of a defect and a resultant unreasonable degree of danger, did not preclude weighing the degree of dangerousness in failure-to-warn cases (95 Cal. App. 3d 338, 343) . The court traced the development of the strict products liability from Greenman v. Yuba Power Prods., Inc. (1963) 59 Cal. 2d 57, 62, 27 Cal. Rptr. 697, 377 P.2d 897 [see § 190.70[3][a]], through Cronin in relevant respects. The court stated that although the Supreme Court in Cronin abolished the Restatement's requirement that the product prove not only defective but also "unreasonably dangerous" as a result of the defect, it did not overrule or disapprove of any prior cases that gave meaning to the word "defect." Therefore, Cronin did not alter the standard for defectiveness set forth in Canifax v. Hercules Powder Co. (1965) 237 Cal. App. 2d 44, 53, 46 Cal. Rptr. 552 , which is that a product otherwise free of defects in manufacture and design may become defective if it is "unreasonably dangerous to place [it] in the hands of the user without a suitable warning" (95 Cal. App. 3d 338, 344) . The court noted that appellate decisions in the wake of Cronin have not directly addressed the effect of Cronin on failure-to-warn cases, with the exception of Dor v. Wilcox-Crittendon Co. (1975) 45 Cal. App. 3d 74, 81 n.3, 119 Cal. Rptr. 135 [see § 190.165[3][a]], which observed that "[t]he inclusion of the element of 'unreasonably dangerous' when applied to a duty to warn is entirely different than when applied to a defect in design or manufacture." Other cases either applied the Canifax formula without modification, applied that formula after deleting the term "unreasonably," or avoided discussion of degrees of danger altogether. The court stated that the problem lies in the absence of a precise or easily adaptable definition of "defect" (95 Cal. App. 3d 338, 345) . In Barker v. Lull Eng'g Co. (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 413, 428, 143 Cal. Rptr. 225, 573 P.2d 443 [see § 190.110[3][a]], the Supreme Court recognized the need for "giving content to the defectiveness standard," and the danger of telling the jury that the plaintiff may recover for injury caused by "defects" without defining for them the meaning of the term (95 Cal. App. 3d 338, 346) .

The court also stated that the concept of defect, which "raises considerably more difficulties" in the design context than in the manufacturing or production context, is all the more elusive when applied to failure-to-warn cases (95 Cal. App. 3d 338, 346-347) . In those cases, the jury must decide whether a product flawlessly designed and produced may nevertheless possess such risks to the user without a suitable warning that it becomes "defective" simply by the absence of a warning. Barker held that a trial court may properly formulate instructions to elucidate the "defect" concept in varying circumstances, further explaining that Cronin was never meant to preclude a trial court from framing a definition of defect, appropriate to the circumstances of a particular case, to guide the jury regarding the standard to be applied in determining whether a product is defective or not (95 Cal. App. 3d 338, 347) . Applying the principles of Barker to failure-to-warn cases, the court held that in assisting the jury's determination of whether the absence of a warning makes a product defective, the trial court should focus on such relevant considerations as the normal expectations of the consumer regarding how the product will perform, degrees of simplicity or complication in the operation or use of the product, the nature and magnitude of the danger to which the user is exposed, the likelihood of injury, and the feasibility and beneficial effect of including a warning (95 Cal. App. 3d 338, 347-348) . The court disagreed with plaintiff's contention that he was entitled to an instruction that eliminated from jury consideration all references to degrees of danger. The court stated that when, as in this case, plaintiff is relieved of the burden of proving a defect in either manufacture or design, permitting recovery on proof that the product was merely "dangerous" would turn every manufacturer into an insurer as long as plaintiff could show that the product contained no warning and that he or she was injured while using it (95 Cal. App. 3d 338, 348) . The court held that elimination of any consideration of degrees of danger is also contrary to the principles of Barker, specifically, that the concept of "excessive preventable danger" and the balancing of risks must be employed because the term "defect" does not easily lend itself to definition (95 Cal. App. 3d 338, 348-349) .

The court recognized that a failure-to-warn instruction that predicates liability on a finding of "danger," without regard for degree or without consideration of relevant factors, does not accurately reflect existing case precedent. The court then examined the instructions on defect for failure to warn given by the trial court. The court felt that the trial court "wisely chose to omit the word 'unreasonably' from the original Canifax formulation," inasmuch as the Supreme Court has indicated that the word improperly introduces an element that rings of negligence in a strict liability case, and may tend to divert the jury's attention from the condition of the product to the conduct of the seller. Instead, the trial court told the jurors that an otherwise faultlessly made article may be deemed defective if the manufacturer/lessor fails to warn of dangerous propensities that in the absence of an adequate warning render the article substantially dangerous to the user. The court stated that by using the adverb "substantially," the trial court appropriately indicated that a weighing of degrees of danger was necessarily involved in determining the existence of a defect. Moreover, the trial court gave the jury detailed guidance on the meaning of "substantial danger": "The term substantial danger as used in these instructions does not mean any danger, however remote, or a trivial danger nor conversely is the term synonymous with great or extreme danger. A substantial danger does not fall precisely in any specific area in the spectrum of danger. The term substantial danger means danger that is real and not insignificant. The word danger is to some extent self defining when one considers its antonym insubstantial. Whether a danger is substantial or insubstantial must be determined from the evidence and measured in the light of several criteria, none of which is totally controlling including the potential injurious consequences of such danger, the likelihood that injury might result, the quality and extent of anger to which the user is exposed, and whether a danger is latent or patent (patent means apparent and latent is its antonym)" (95 Cal. App. 3d 338, 349) . The court stated that when the instructions on the definition of "defect" are viewed as a whole, it is evident that they adequately focused the jury's attention on the relevant factors that must be considered in determining whether the magnitude of the danger inherent in the use of a product was sufficiently great as to require a warning. The court therefore stated that it could not conclude that the jurors were misled or confused as a result of the instruction given (95 Cal. App. 3d 338, 350) .

NOTE:

In Anderson v. Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corp. (1991) 53 Cal. 3d 987, 1001, 281 Cal. Rptr. 528, 810 P.2d 549 [see § 190.164[3][a]], the Supreme Court cited Cavers with approval. The Court noted that "Cavers was principally concerned with the propriety of the term 'substantially dangerous' and concluded that it is necessary to weigh the degree of danger involved when determining whether a warning defect exists. The standard suggested in Cavers to govern this weighing process was similar to that provided for the jury's risk/benefit analysis in Barker" [Anderson v. Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corp. (1991) 53 Cal. 3d 987, 995-1003, 281 Cal. Rptr. 528, 810 P.2d 549] .

[b] "Substantially Dangerous" Standard Appropriate to Determine Threshold Degree of Danger

Cavers v. Cushman Motor Sales, Inc. (1979) 95 Cal. App. 3d 338, 157 Cal. Rptr. 142 , is discussed in § 190.172[3][a].

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
6. Failure to Warn

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.173

§ 190.173 Opposing Contention That Defendant Is Strictly Liable for Failure to Warn--Manufacturer of Nonprescription Drug Has No Duty Beyond That Imposed by Statute and Regulation to Warn in Language Other Than English

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other forms of memorandum of points and authorities opposing the contention that defendant is liable in strict products liability for injuries caused by defendant's product (see, e.g., §§ 190.164 -190.172.]

DEFENDANT, AS A MANUFACTURER OF A NONPRESCRIPTION DRUG, HAD NO DUTY TO WARN OF DANGERS ASSOCIATED WITH ITS PRODUCT BEYOND THOSE WARNINGS REQUIRED BY STATUTE AND REGULATION, AND NO STATUTE OR REGULATION REQUIRES WARNINGS IN A LANGUAGE OTHER THAN ENGLISH.

A. Nonprescription Drug Labeling Requirements Impose Proper Standard of Care. The existing legislative and administrative standard of care concerning warnings and other label information required to accompany nonprescription drugs is also the proper standard applicable to tort actions (Ramirez v. Plough, Inc. (1993) 6 Cal. 4th 539, 552-553, 25 Cal. Rptr. 2d 97, 863 P.2d 167).

B. Nonprescription Drug Manufacturers Have No Duty to Warn in Language Other Than English. The legislative/regulatory standard of care, which mandates nonprescription drug package warnings in English only, precludes the imposition of any duty to warn in languages other than English Ramirez v. Plough, Inc. (1993) 6 Cal. 4th 539, 555).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a defendant is strictly liable for failure to warn the user of a dangerous propensity of a product that is otherwise faultlessly made. The ground of opposition is that a manufacturer of nonprescription drug has only the duties to warn that are imposed by statute and regulation, and that the absence of any statute or regulation requiring warnings in a language other than English precludes the imposition in a tort action of a duty to warn in any other language [Ramirez v. Plough, Inc. (1993) 6 Cal. 4th 539, 555, 25 Cal. Rptr. 2d 97, 863 P.2d 167] .

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue regarding the duty to warn of dangerous propensities of a product. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss the regulations and statutes governing the defendant manufacturer, and the failure of those statutes and regulations to impose the duty to warn that plaintiff alleges [see Ramirez v. Plough, Inc. (1993) 6 Cal. 4th 539, 554-555, 25 Cal. Rptr. 2d 97, 863 P.2d 167 (legislature and relevant administrative agencies have power to require warnings in other languages)].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Nonprescription Drug Labeling Requirements Impose Proper Standard of Care

In Ramirez v. Plough, Inc. (1993) 6 Cal. 4th 539, 25 Cal. Rptr. 2d 97, 863 P.2d 167 , plaintiff's mother had administered a children's aspirin manufactured by Plough, Inc. (Plough) while plaintiff was suffering from an upper respiratory infection. The aspirin package warned that aspirin, given to children with flu or chicken pox, could cause Reye Syndrome in rare cases; the warning was in English, and because plaintiff's mother read only Spanish did not understand the warning. Plaintiff contracted Reye's Syndrome, and sued Plough alleging that it breached its duty to warn by not including Spanish-language warnings with its product. The trial court granted Plough's motion for summary judgment, stating that there was no duty to warn in a foreign language, and that there was no causal relationship between Plough's activities and plaintiff's injury. Plaintiff appealed, and the court of appeal reversed, holding that evidence of Plough's knowledge that its product was used by non-English-speaking consumers, and the lack of any evidence of the costs of Spanish-language labeling, made the reasonableness of Plough's failure to include a warning in Spanish a triable issue of fact.

The Supreme Court reversed. The Court held that the formulation of the standard of care is a question of law for the court, and that the legal issue before it was the nature and scope of Plough's conceded duty to warn (6 Cal. 4th 539, 546) . A standard of care can be based on statute, and although statutory standards of care are commonly invoked by plaintiffs to establish a breach of duty by a defendant [see Evid. Code § 669], the Court stated that there is some room in tort law for a defense of statutory compliance (6 Cal. 4th 539, 547-548) . The extensive regulation of labeling of nonprescription drugs by the federal government [21 U.S.C.S. § 352; 21 C.F.R. § 201 et seq.], under which manufacturers are not required to include warnings in languages other than English, persuaded the Court that any requirement that warnings be given in other languages should be imposed by legislative and administrative bodies rather than the courts (6 Cal. 4th 539, 550-553) . The Court concluded that the uniformity and clarity of the regulations setting forth the required warnings require the adoption of the legislative/regulatory standard of care that mandates nonprescription drug package warnings in English only (6 Cal. 4th 539, 555) .

[b] Nonprescription Drug Manufacturers Have No Duty to Warn in Language Other Than English

The facts and procedural background of Ramirez v. Plough, Inc. (1993) 6 Cal. 4th 539 , 25 Cal. Rptr. 2d 97, 863 P.2d 167 , are discussed in § 190.173[3][a].

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
6. Failure to Warn

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.174

§ 190.174 Opposing Contention That Defendant is Strictly Liable for Failure to Warn--Prescription Drug Manufacturer Is Not Liable for Failure to Give Warning Expressly Precluded by Food and Drug Administration (FDA)

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PRESCRIPTION DRUG MANUFACTURER IS NOT STRICTLY LIABLE FOR PLAINTIFF'S INJURIES FOR FAILING TO WARN OF _____ [specify dangers] BECAUSE THIS WARNING WAS EXPRESSLY PRECLUDED BY FDA REGULATION, SPECIFICALLY _____ [specify applicable federal Food and Drug Administration (FDA) regulation].

Prescription Drug Manufacturer Has No Duty to Give Warning Expressly Precluded by FDA. A prescription drug manufacturer is not strictly liable for failing to give warnings expressly precluded by the federal Food and Drug Administration (Carlin v. Superior Court (1996) 13 Cal. 4th 1104, 1114-1115, 56 Cal. Rptr. 2d 162, 920 P.2d 134).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition of the contention that defendant is a prescription drug manufacturer strictly liable for failing to warn of known or reasonably scientifically knowable dangers. A prescription drug manufacturer is not strictly liable for failing to give warnings expressly precluded by the federal Food and Drug Administration (FDA). In appropriate cases, however, FDA action or inaction may be admissible to prove whether a risk was known or reasonably scientifically knowable [Carlin v. Superior Court (1996) 13 Cal. 4th 1104, 1114, 56 Cal. Rptr. 2d 162, 920 P.2d 134 ; see § 190.283].

The form should be combined with other forms in this publication as necessary to complete argument as to all issues and to place the argument within its proper procedural context. One appropriate procedural context for this contention, for example, would be a motion by a defendant pharmaceutical manufacturer for summary judgment or opposition to such a motion by a plaintiff, when the evidentiary facts clearly support the contention and disclosing no triable issue as to any material fact [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c]. In this context counsel would need to submit a statement of undisputed facts supported by cognizable evidence in the form of a request for judicial notice or one or more affidavits or declarations. The latter supply facts that are within the personal knowledge of the affiant or declarant [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702], and may also provide the necessary foundation for any accompanying discovery documents or other documentary evidence attached in the form of an exhibit. References to exhibits and declarations must reference the number or letter of the exhibit, the specific page, and, if applicable, the paragraph or line number [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1113(g)].

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, in a particular case, it may be significant that the FDA precludes manufacturers from warning about theoretical hazards [see 21 C.F.R. § 201.57(d), (e)]. Under other circumstances, it may be significant that the FDA precludes warnings of adverse reactions that are subject to dispute in the medical community [see 21 C.F.R. § 1.21(c)(1)].

[b] Related Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in §§ 190.90, 190.170, 190.173 may be combined with the points and authorities in this form.

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in § 190.163 may be used to oppose the points and authorities in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Prescription Drug Manufacturer Has No Duty to Give Warning Expressly Precluded by FDA

The facts and procedural background of Carlin v. Superior Court (1996) 13 Cal. 4th 1104, 56 Cal. Rptr. 2d 162, 920 P.2d 134 , are discussed in § 190.163[3][a]. In reaffirming that prescription drug manufacturers are strictly liable for failure to warn, the Court rejected the plaintiff's argument that FDA regulations are essentially irrelevant to a strict liability action for failure to warn. Because strict liability under failure to warn is not absolute liability, drug manufacturers are not strictly liable for a risk that is not known or reasonably scientifically knowable. In this context, it is significant that the FDA precludes drug manufacturers from warning of every conceivable adverse reaction and warning of potential safety hazards when differences of opinion exist within the medical community with respect to potential adverse reactions (13 Cal. 4th 1104, 1114) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
6. Failure to Warn

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.175

§ 190.175 Opposing Contention That Defendant Is Strictly Liable for Failure to Warn--Utility Company Has No Duty to Warn Customers of Dangers of Storing Volatile Substances Near Gas-Fired Heater

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities opposing the contention that defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product.]

DEFENDANT, _____ [specify name], AS A SUPPLIER OF UTILITIES, IS NOT STRICTLY LIABLE FOR FAILURE TO WARN BECAUSE DEFENDANT HAS NO DUTY TO WARN PLAINTIFF OF THE DANGERS OF STORING VOLATILE SUBSTANCES NEAR GAS-FIRED HEATERS.

Utility Has No Duty to Warn of Risks Associated with Storing Volatile Substances Near Gas-Fired Heaters. A gas company has no duty to warn its customers of the dangers of storing or using flammable liquids near unelevated gas-fired water heaters when it learns that its customer has such a water heater. No duty of care extends to customers injured by an explosion caused when flammable materials stored or used near the heater (Salazar v. Southern Cal. Gas. Co. (1997) 54 Cal. App. 4th 1370, 1385, 63 Cal. Rptr. 2d 522).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a utility supplier is strictly liable for failing to warn of a product's dangers. The ground of opposition set forth is that the supplier has no duty to warn of the dangers of its product when plaintiff's injuries are proximately caused by storing volatile substances near a gas-fired heater.

The form may be combined with other points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a demurrer or motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication on the issue that defendant is subject to strict liability. The form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should state facts showing that defendant has no duty to warn plaintiff of the dangers of placing volatile substances near a gas fired heater [see, e.g., Salazar v. Southern Cal. Gas. Co. (1997) 54 Cal. App. 4th 1370, 1385, 63 Cal. Rptr. 2d 522] .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Utility Has No Duty to Warn of Risks Associated with Storing Volatile Substances Near Gas-Fired Heaters

In Salazar v. Southern Cal. Gas Co. (1997) 54 Cal. App. 4th 1370, 63 Cal. Rptr. 2d 522 , plaintiff incurred injuries from a flash fire that occurred when flammable material that plaintiff was using was ignited by the pilot light of an unelevated water heater in his garage. Plaintiff brought a products liability action against the gas company that supplied the gas to the water heater, alleging a duty based on supplying an inherently hazardous material and creation of a hidden danger. The trial court granted defendant's motion for summary judgment on the ground that the defendant owed the plaintiff no duty.

The court of appeal affirmed the summary judgment in favor of the defendant, holding that the defendant owed no duty on the theory it supplied an inherently dangerous gas. The court explained that a gas company that does not install or maintain gas lines in its customer's premises and is not responsible for their maintenance is not liable for injuries caused by leaks in the lines of which it has no knowledge. Although a gas company has a duty to make sure that gas lines are safe before turning the gas on, once the gas is turned on, it has no duty to inspect a customer's gas lines absent notice of a leak. If a gas company knows at the time it turns on the gas or becomes aware after turning on the gas that there are defects in the pipes, or if the company is in possession of facts that would suggest to a person of ordinary care and prudence that the pipes are leaking or are unsafe for the transportation of gas, it has a duty to inspect and insure the pipes are safe before it furnishes or continues to furnish gas through them. The court concluded that defendant did not breach any duty of care to the plaintiff for injuries incurred when the plaintiff used a flammable material near a gas-fired heater because the inherently dangerous gas did not cause the explosion, as there were no defective gas lines or valves to cause the gas to leak and result in the injury-causing explosion (54 Cal. App. 4th 1370, 1377) .

The court also held that the defendant did not create a hidden danger by supplying gas to an unelevated water heater and therefore had no duty to warn of the danger of the water heater or to disconnect the service, even though the defendant had placed on the water heater a warning not to store flammable liquids near the water heater. The court rejected the contention that elevated water heaters decrease the incidence of fires caused by vapors from flammable liquids coming into contact with the water heaters on the grounds that there was no certain connection between the elevation of gas-fired water heaters and decrease in incidences of such fires. In addition, defendant was not responsible for the positioning of the water heater. The water heater involved in plaintiff's injury was not dangerous or defective, and it was flammable materials used near the water heater, not the gas reacting with the unelevated water heater, that caused the explosion. The court concluded that a gas company has no duty to warn its customers of the dangers of storing or using flammable liquids near unelevated gas-fired water heaters even after learning that a customer has such a water heater, and has no duty to disconnect the customer's gas service if the customer fails to elevate the water heater (54 Cal. App. 4th 1370, 1383-1385) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
6. Failure to Warn

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.176

§ 190.176 Opposing Contention that Defendant Is Strictly Liable for Failure to Warn--Lack of Warning or Allegedly Inadequate Warning Did Not Proximately Cause Injury

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities opposing the contention that defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries.]

DEFENDANT CANNOT BE HELD STRICTLY LIABLE FOR PLAINTIFF'S INJURIES BECAUSE ANY [specify] FAILURE TO WARN [or] ALLEGEDLY INADEQUATE WARNING WAS NOT THE PROXIMATE CAUSE OF PLAINTIFF'S INJURIES.

A. No Strict Liability Based on Failure to Warn if Failure to Warn or Inadequate Warning Did Not Proximately Cause Injury. Plaintiff asserting causes of action based on failure to warn must prove not only that no warning was provided or that the warning was inadequate, but also that the inadequacy or absence of warning caused his or her injury (Motus v. Pfizer Inc. (C.D. Cal. 2001) 196 F. Supp. 2d 984, 994-995 ; Conte v. Wyeth, Inc. (2008) 168 Cal. App. 4th 89, 112, 85 Cal. Rptr. 3d 299).

B. No Proximate Cause When Prescribing Physician Did Not Read Warning. An inadequate warning that the prescribing physician did not read or rely upon cannot be the proximate cause of a plaintiff's injury (Conte v. Wyeth, Inc. (2008) 168 Cal. App. 4th 89, 112, 85 Cal. Rptr. 3d 299).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that the defendant is subject to a products liability action based on failure to warn of a product's dangers.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Strict Liability Based on Failure to Warn if Failure to Warn or Inadequate Warning Did Not Proximately Cause Injury

In Motus v. Pfizer Inc. (C.D. Cal. 2001) 196 F. Supp. 2d 984 , the decedent committed suicide after being prescribed the drug Zoloft. Plaintiff brought a products liability action against the manufacturer, alleging that the Zoloft's package insert and marketing materials did not warn that the drug can cause suicide ideation. The court granted summary judgment in favor of the manufacturer on the ground that plaintiff was unable to create a genuine issue as to whether the manufacturer's alleged failure to provide an adequate warning causes her injuries.

The California Supreme Court has not adopted the rebuttable presumption adopted by many other states that had an adequate warning been given, the plaintiff would have heeded it. Because the presumption was not applicable, the manufacturer would be entitled to summary judgment if the plaintiff produced no evidence that the prescribing physician would have acted differently had the manufacturer provided an adequate warning about the risk of suicide associated with ingestion of Zoloft. The decedent had not disclosed any contraindications to the physician suggesting that he was not a good candidate for Zoloft; his symptoms had not worsened over a period of time; and plaintiff introduced no evidence that the non-disclosed risk was so high that it would have affected the physician's decision to prescribe the drug or that the physician actually relied on the manufacturer's statements. On the record, plaintiff failed to establish a question of fact on causation (196 F. Supp. 2d 984, 995-997) .

Conte v. Wyeth, Inc. (2008) 168 Cal. App. 4th 89, 85 Cal. Rptr. 3d 299 , is discussed in § 190.176[3][b].

[b] No Proximate Cause When Prescribing Physician Did Not Read Warning

In Conte v. Wyeth, Inc. (2008) 168 Cal. App. 4th 89, 85 Cal. Rptr. 3d 299 , the plaintiff developed tardive dyskinesia after taking metoclopramide, the generic version of the prescription drug Reglan, for almost four years. She filed suit against several defendants. Her claims against the generic manufacturers alleged that they knew or should have known of the widespread tendency among physicians to prescribe the drug for longer than one year, even though it is approved for only 12 weeks of use, and gave misleading or false warnings about the drug's side effects. The trial court granted summary judgment in favor of the generic manufacturers on grounds of preemption and plaintiff's lack of reliance on their warnings or product labeling.

The court of appeal affirmed the dismissal of the generic manufacturers. The plaintiff provided no evidence that the prescribing physician relied on any of their price lists or package inserts, the only product information they disseminated. The allegedly inadequate warnings thus could not have been the proximate cause of plaintiff's injury (168 Cal. App. 4th 89, 112) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
A. Strict Liability
6. Failure to Warn

19-190 California Points & Authorities §§ 190.177-190.189

[Reserved]

§§ 190.177[Reserved]

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
B. Negligence

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.190

§ 190.190 Supporting Contention That Defendant Is Liable for Negligence in Products Liability Action [Civ. Code § 1714(a)]--Plaintiff Is Person or Member of Class of Persons to Whom Defendant Owed Duty of Ordinary Care

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief. It may be combined with forms supporting the contention that all the elements of actionable negligence exist (see Ch. 165, Negligence).]

DEFENDANT SHOULD BE HELD LIABLE FOR NEGLIGENTLY _____ [MANUFACTURING and/or SELLING and/or SUPPLYING] _____ [specify product] BECAUSE PLAINTIFF IS _____ [A PERSON or A MEMBER OF A CLASS OF PERSONS] TO WHOM DEFENDANT OWED A DUTY OF CARE.

A. Persons to Whom Duty Owed. A manufacturer or supplier of a commodity that is or is likely to be dangerous for the use for which it is made or supplied owes a duty to exercise reasonable care to make it safe for those who will use it and those in whose vicinity it is to be used (Pike v. Frank G. Hough Co. (1970) 2 Cal. 3d 465, 473, 85 Cal. Rptr. 629, 467 P.2d 229 ; Gall v. Union Ice Co. (1951) 108 Cal. App. 2d 303, 309, 239 P.2d 48).

[EITHER]

B. Duty to Expected Users Unaware of Dangerous Propensities. A manufacturer has the duty to use reasonable care to warn of a dangerous condition of its product or of facts that make it likely to be dangerous to expected users who may not realize the product's dangerous condition (Putensen v. Clay Adams Inc. (1970) 12 Cal. App. 3d 1062, 1076, 91 Cal. Rptr. 319).

[OR]

B. Duty to Foreseeable Nonusers. The duty to inspect a product extends not only to the user of the product but also to third persons who can reasonably be expected to be in the vicinity of the probable use of the product (Benton v. Sloss (1952) 38 Cal. 2d 399, 405-406, 240 P.2d 575 ; see Zucker v. Passetti Trucking Co. (1961) 191 Cal. App. 2d 260, 265, 12 Cal. Rptr. 692).

[CONTINUE]

C. Factors for Determining if Defendant Owed Duty to Plaintiff. The factors to be considered in determining whether a defendant, in the absence of privity, owed a duty of reasonable care to the plaintiff are (1) the foreseeability of harm to the plaintiff, (2) the degree of certainty that the plaintiff suffered injury, (3) the closeness of the connection between the defendant's conduct and the injury suffered, (4) the moral blame attached to the defendant's conduct, (5) the policy of preventing future harm, (6) the extent of the burden to the defendant and consequences to the community of imposing a duty to exercise care with resulting liability for breach, and (7) the availability, cost, and prevalence of insurance for the risk involved (Connor v. Great W. Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1968) 69 Cal. 2d 850, 864-865, 870, 73 Cal. Rptr. 369, 447 P.2d 609 ; U.S. Fin. v. Sullivan (1974) 37 Cal. App. 3d 5, 13, 112 Cal. Rptr. 18).

[Optional] D. Developer Liable for Negligent Impairment of Lender's Security Interest. A developer, including those persons performing the excavation, grading, engineering, soil testing, construction, and other work involved in a development, may be held liable to a lender for negligent impairment of the lender's security interest (U.S. Fin. v. Sullivan (1974) 37 Cal. App. 3d 5, 13, 112 Cal. Rptr. 18).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that defendant owed a duty of care to plaintiff and breached that duty. The first alternative Paragraph B should be used if defendant breached its duty to an expected user of the product; the second alternative Paragraph B should be used if defendant breached its duty toward a foreseeable nonuser. Optional Paragraph D should be used if defendant is a developer whose breach of duty impaired a lender's security interest. These contentions may arise in several procedural contexts, including opposing a demurrer or opposing a motion for nonsuit [see, e.g., U.S. Fin. v. Sullivan (1974) 37 Cal. App. 3d 5, 112 Cal. Rptr. 18 (demurrer); Pike v. Frank G. Hough Co. (1970) 2 Cal. 3d 465, 85 Cal. Rptr. 629, 467 P.2d 229 (nonsuit)].

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of the persons to whom defendant owes a duty of care in a products liability action. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Counsel should show that plaintiff was a person or member of the class of persons to whom defendant owed a duty of care. For example, counsel should show that plaintiff was a foreseeable user of the product or was a nonuser reasonably expected to be in the vicinity of the area where the product was used.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a discussion and forms for use in actions involving negligence in general, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender). For a discussion and forms for use in products liability actions based on strict liability, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 460, Products Liability (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Points and Authorities

For points and authorities relating to actions for negligence in general, see Ch. 165, Negligence .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Persons to Whom Duty Owed

In Pike v. Frank G. Hough Co. (1970) 2 Cal. 3d 465, 85 Cal. Rptr. 629, 467 P.2d 229 , plaintiff's decedent was killed when he was struck while standing behind a paydozer that had no rearview mirrors and no audible or visible backup warning signal. Plaintiff sued the manufacturer for defective design of the paydozer on both a negligence and a strict liability theory. The trial court granted a nonsuit against plaintiff, and plaintiff appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed. Rejecting defendant's argument that it had no duty to install safety devices to protect against a patent peril of being struck by the paydozer, the Court noted that it was not obvious to bystanders that the operator is incapable of observing them in its direct path, and the manufacturer's duty of due care extends to all persons within the range of potential danger (2 Cal. 3d 465, 473) .

In Gall v. Union Ice Co. (1951) 108 Cal. App. 2d 303, 239 P.2d 48 , defendants, the manufacturer and seller of a drum of sulphuric acid, were sued for damages for wrongful death of plaintiffs' decedent, who was killed when the drum exploded. Plaintiffs alleged that the manufacturer and seller violated their duty to warn the purchaser of the potential danger of the acid if certain precautions were not taken by not placing warning labels on the drum. The trial court ruled against both defendants and they appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court relied on Rest Torts § 388 in setting forth the duty of a vendor or supplier of a potentially dangerous commodity. The court said that the duty imposed on a supplier of a chattel for another's use is to exercise reasonable care to give to those who are to use the chattel the information that the supplier possesses and that he should realize to be necessary to make its use safe for them and those in whose vicinity it is to be used (108 Cal. App. 2d 303, 309) .

[b] Duty to Expected Users Unaware of Dangerous Propensities

In Putensen v. Clay Adams Inc. (1970) 12 Cal. App. 3d 1062, 91 Cal. Rptr. 319 , plaintiff brought an action against a manufacturer, a hospital, and a physician for damages for personal injuries suffered as a result of allegedly defective tubing used during a heart catheterization procedure. When inserted into plaintiff's artery, the tubing developed a kink and the physician had to perform heart surgery to remove it. The court granted a nonsuit in favor of defendant manufacturer and the jury returned a verdict in favor of defendant hospital and defendant physician. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgments in favor of defendant hospital and physician, and reversed the judgment in favor of the manufacturer. The court held that there was sufficient evidence of negligence on the part of the manufacturer to let the issue go to the jury. The court stated that the manufacturer was required to be reasonably careful to prevent dangerous conditions in the tubing from either a manufacturing or a design defect so that it was reasonably safe for its intended and reasonably foreseeable uses. Additionally, the manufacturer has a duty to use reasonable care to give warning of the dangerous condition of the product to those whom he should expect to use the product or be endangered by its probable use if the manufacturer has reason to believe that they will not realize its dangerous condition (12 Cal. App. 3d 1062, 1076-1077) .

[c] Duty to Foreseeable Nonusers

In Benton v. Sloss (1952) 38 Cal. 2d 399, 240 P.2d 575 , defendant, a used car dealer, contracted with a minor for the sale of a used car. When he discovered that the buyer was a minor, he refused to complete the sale until the minor secured written parental consent to the sale. The dealer allowed the minor to drive the car home. The minor's father would not consent to the sale and phoned the dealer, telling him to come and pick up the car. The dealer refused to do so. The minor then attempted to return the car but the dealer was not at the car lot. He then picked up three passengers, and engaged in a race with another vehicle. The brakes on the car failed, causing an accident that injured the passengers. The injured passengers then sued the minor and the minor's father, as well as the car dealer for negligently failing to inspect the brakes on the car. Judgment was entered in favor of defendant father and against defendant minor and defendant car dealer. The car dealer appealed.

The Supreme Court affirmed. The Court said that the dealer could reasonably foresee that the brakes would be used in emergency conditions arising under ordinary highway speeds, and the likelihood of negligent operation of the vehicle was one of the hazards the dealer could reasonably foresee. The possibility of a driver's negligently placing himself in a position from which he could not extricate himself without adequate brakes imposed on the dealer a duty to test and adjust the brakes, and prevent the car from endangering the lives of occupants, pedestrians, and other users of the highways. This duty extended to third persons who could reasonably be expected to be in the vicinity of the probable use of the automobile, as well as to the prospective buyer (38 Cal. 2d 399, 405-406) .

In Zucker v. Passetti Trucking Co. (1961) 191 Cal. App. 2d 260, 12 Cal. Rptr. 692 , defendant driver was driving a dump truck owned by defendant trucking company, and towing a compressor rented from defendant rental company. There was no cotter pin in the hitch connecting the truck and the compressor, and the safety chain supplied by the rental company was defective. As a result, the compressor came loose from the truck and jack-knifed across the highway, colliding with plaintiffs' automobile. Plaintiffs sued the driver, the trucking company, and the rental company for injuries suffered in the accident. Judgment was for plaintiffs, and the rental company appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court said that the rental company had a duty to inspect the safety chain for defects prior to renting the compressor, because it was established that the company knew the machine was being rented for the purpose of being used on the public highways. The duty did not arise merely from the contract of bailment, but was a general duty imposed by law on the company to refrain from putting on the highway an instrumentality that might reasonably be expected to cause harm not only to the bailee, but to third persons lawfully using the highway (191 Cal. App. 2d 260, 265) .

[d] Factors for Determining if Defendant Owed Duty to Plaintiff

In Connor v. Great W. Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1968) 69 Cal. 2d 850, 73 Cal. Rptr. 369, 447 P.2d 609 , plaintiffs were purchasers of homes in a residential development, and cross complainants were holders of promissory notes secured by second deeds of trust on the property. The homes suffered serious damage from cracking caused by ill-designed foundations that could not withstand the expansion and contraction of adobe soil. Plaintiffs filed actions for negligent construction against the development company that developed and sold the homes, and against the savings and loan association that lent the money to finance the development on the ground that its participation brought it into a joint enterprise with the development company, making it vicariously liable, or on the ground that it breached an independent duty of care to plaintiffs. The lender's motion for nonsuit was granted, and plaintiffs appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed the motion for nonsuit. While the Court found that no joint venture or joint enterprise existed between the developer and the lender, and therefore the lender could not be held vicariously liable for the negligence of the developer, it did find that the lender was liable to the plaintiffs for its own negligence. The evidence at trial showed the following: that the lender had the right to exercise extensive control over the enterprise; that it received not only interest for its construction loans but substantial fees for making them, as well as a 20 percent capital gain for "warehousing" the land; and that the lender received protection from loss of profits in the event individual home buyers sought permanent financing elsewhere. The Court said that it was clear that the lender became an active participant in a home construction enterprise, rather than a mere lender content to lend money at interest on the security of real property. Noting that a duty of care may arise in the absence of privity if public policy dictates the existence of such a duty, the Court found that a duty existed on the part of the lender toward the buyers of the homes. The Court considered the following factors in reaching their decision: (1) the extent to which the transaction was intended to affect plaintiff; (2) the foreseeability of harm to him; (3) the degree of certainty that plaintiff suffered injury; (4) the closeness of the connection between defendant's conduct and the injury suffered; (5) the moral blame attached to defendant's conduct; and (6) the policy of preventing future harm. However, when the Court applied these same factors to the cross complainants as pledgees of notes secured by second deeds of trust on the property, the Court found that the lender owed them no independent duty (69 Cal. 2d 850, 864-865, 870) .

In U.S. Fin. v. Sullivan (1974) 37 Cal. App. 3d 5, 112 Cal. Rptr. 18 , plaintiff loan company had financed a real property development and taken a security interest in the developed property. When defects in the lots and homes were discovered, plaintiff sued the developer and others involved in the development for damages for impairment of its security. The trial court sustained demurrers with leave to amend to some of plaintiffs causes of action and sustained demurrers without leave to amend and subsequently dismissed others. Plaintiff appealed the judgment of dismissal.

Procedurally, the court of appeal held that because not all the counts had been dismissed, the entry of dismissal should not have been granted, and an appeal therefrom did not lie. However, the court agreed to accept the parties' stipulation that the record on appeal be treated as an application for a writ of mandate, and issued a writ ordering vacation of the judgment of dismissal. The court held that there is nothing in principle or public policy that militates against liability to a mortgagee or beneficiary of a deed of trust when negligent conduct has resulted in the impairment of the mortgagee's or beneficiary's security interest. Any exception to the general rule that everyone is responsible for his or her negligent acts (as codified in Civ. Code § 1714) involves balancing the following factors: (1) the foreseeability of harm to plaintiff; (2) the degree of certainty that the plaintiff suffered injury; (3) the closeness of the connection between the defendant's conduct and the injury suffered; (4) the moral blame attached to the defendant's conduct; (5) the policy of preventing future harm; (6) the extent of the burden to the defendant and consequences to the community of imposing a duty to exercise care with resulting liability for breach; and (7) the availability, cost, and prevalence of insurance for the risk involved (37 Cal. App. 3d 5, 13) .

[e] Developer Liable for Negligent Impairment of Lender's Security Interest

U.S. Fin. v. Sullivan (1974) 37 Cal. App. 3d 5, 112 Cal. Rptr. 18 , is discussed in § 190.190[3][d].

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Factors for Determining if Defendant Owed Duty to Plaintiff

In Biakanja v. Irving (1958) 49 Cal. 2d 647, 320 P.2d 16 , plaintiff heir sued defendant notary public for the difference between the value of the deceased's whole estate and the value plaintiff actually received because the will was denied probate due to an inadequate attestation. The Supreme Court affirmed judgment for plaintiff. The Court said that the determination in a specific case whether the defendant will be held liable to a third person not in privity is a matter of policy and involves the balancing of various factors, among which are the extent to which the transaction was intended to affect the plaintiff, the foreseeability of harm to him or her, the degree of certainty that the plaintiff suffered injury, the closeness of the connection between the defendant's conduct and the injury suffered, the moral blame attached to the defendant's conduct, and the policy of preventing future harm (49 Cal. 2d 647, 650) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
B. Negligence

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.191

§ 190.191 Supporting Contention That Manufacturer Breached Duty of Ordinary Care [Civ. Code § 1714(a)]--Failure to Manufacture Product Carefully

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief. It may be combined with a general form of points and authorities supporting the contention that defendant owed and breached a duty to plaintiff (see, e.g., § 190.190), as well as with forms supporting the contention that all the elements of actionable negligence exist (see Ch. 165, Negligence).]

DEFENDANT MANUFACTURER, _____ [name], SHOULD BE HELD LIABLE FOR PLAINTIFF'S INJURIES BECAUSE DEFENDANT NEGLIGENTLY MANUFACTURED _____ [specify product] [AND FAILED TO CONDUCT APPROPRIATE INSPECTIONS AND TESTS OF THE PRODUCT THAT WOULD HAVE REVEALED THE DEFECT(S)], RESULTING IN A DANGEROUS PRODUCT THAT INJURED PLAINTIFF WHILE IT WAS BEING USED FOR ITS INTENDED PURPOSE.

A. Duty to Manufacture Carefully. A manufacturer is required to be reasonably careful to prevent dangerous conditions in its product by a miscarriage in its manufacturing process so that the product is reasonably safe for the purposes for which it is intended, and for other uses that are reasonably foreseeable (Putensen v. Clay Adams Inc. (1970) 12 Cal. App. 3d 1062, 1077, 91 Cal. Rptr. 319).

[Optional] B. Failure to Inspect or Test Product. If the defective condition of the product could have been disclosed by a reasonable inspection and tests, and such inspection and tests had been omitted, the manufacturer has been negligent (Sheward v. Virtue (1942) 20 Cal. 2d 410, 414, 126 P.2d 345 ; Putensen v. Clay Adams Inc. (1970) 12 Cal. App. 3d 1062, 1078, 91 Cal. Rptr. 319).

[Optional] C. Failure to Conduct Tests Under Conditions Under Which Product Will Be Used. The extent of a manufacturer's duty depends on the intended use of the product. If a manufacturer knows its product will be used under conditions involving a high risk of danger, the manufacturer is under a duty to conduct its testing of the product under similar conditions. Failure to do so will be considered a breach of the duty to manufacture a product in a reasonably careful manner (see Warner v. Santa Catalina Island Co. (1955) 44 Cal. 2d 310, 319-320, 282 P.2d 12).

[Optional] D. Failure to Use Appropriate Tests to Reveal Defects. The knowledge of a known danger, on a known use, makes vigilance a duty. When the tests a manufacturer uses admittedly fail to reveal all defects in a product, it is for the jury to determine whether the manufacturer's failure to use other tests that are recognized as good and sound engineering procedures in the particular field constitutes negligence (Edison v. Lewis Mfg. Co. (1959) 168 Cal. App. 2d 429, 442-443, 336 P.2d 286).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a manufacturer owed and breached the duty to manufacture its product carefully, resulting in a dangerous product. The duty to manufacture a product in a careful manner encompasses the duty to reasonably inspect and test the product for defects [see optional Paragraphs B-D]. This argument may arise in several different procedural contexts, including opposing a demurrer or a motion for nonsuit [see, e.g., Warner v. Santa Catalina Island Co. (1955) 44 Cal. 2d 310, 319-320, 282 P.2d 12 (nonsuit)].

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of the failure of a manufacturer to carefully manufacture the product. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Counsel should show that defendant was negligent in failing to manufacture its product safely. For example, counsel should show that defendant either failed to inspect the product, or in testing the product, did not use the accepted testing procedures in the particular industry that would reveal the particular defect that caused plaintiff's injuries.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a discussion and forms for use in actions involving negligence in general, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender). For a discussion and forms for use in products liability actions based on strict liability, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 460, Products Liability (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Points and Authorities

For points and authorities relating to actions for negligence in general, see Ch. 165, Negligence .

[d] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in § 190.200 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Duty to Manufacture Carefully

The facts and procedural background of Putensen v. Clay Adams Inc. (1970) 12 Cal. App. 3d 1062, 91 Cal. Rptr. 319 , are discussed in § 190.190[3][b]. In reversing a judgment of nonsuit in favor of defendant, a manufacturer of tubing used in surgical procedures, the court of appeal held that a manufacturer is required to be reasonably careful to prevent dangerous conditions in its product by a miscarriage in its manufacturing process so that the product is reasonably safe for the purposes for which it is intended, and for other uses that are reasonably foreseeable (12 Cal. App. 3d 1062, 1077) .

[b] Failure to Inspect or Test Product

In Sheward v. Virtue (1942) 20 Cal. 2d 410, 126 P.2d 345 , plaintiff was injured when the chair she was sitting on in a beauty parlor collapsed, throwing her to the floor. She sued the manufacturer of the chair and the beauty shop for negligence. The jury returned verdicts against both defendants, and the trial judge granted defendant beauty shop's motion for a new trial. Plaintiffs appealed the order granting a new trial, and defendant manufacturer appealed the judgment against it.

The Supreme Court affirmed both the judgment against the manufacturer and the order granting the beauty operator a new trial. The Court rejected the manufacturer's contention that because no evidence was presented as to what tests other manufacturers performed to discover defects, it could not be held guilty of negligence for failing to perform tests. Noting that a manufacturer may not justify failure to use ordinary care by showing that others in the same business practiced a similar want of care, the Court held that if the defective condition of the product could have been disclosed by reasonable inspection and tests, defendant is negligent if such tests and inspections are omitted (20 Cal. 2d 410, 413-414) .

The facts and procedural background of Putensen v. Clay Adams Inc. (1970) 12 Cal. App. 3d 1062, 91 Cal. Rptr. 319 , are discussed in § 190.190[3][b]. The court of appeal pointed out that there was evidence that the manufacturer of the tubing did not conduct tests to determine its thickness and the uniformity and strength of its walls. The court held that when an article is such that it is reasonably certain, if negligently manufactured or designed, to place life and limb in peril, the manufacturer may be charged with negligence if the defective condition could be disclosed by a reasonable inspection and tests, and such inspection and tests are omitted (12 Cal. App. 3d 1062, 1078) .

[c] Failure to Conduct Tests Under Conditions Under Which Product Will Be Used

In Warner v. Santa Catalina Island Co. (1955) 44 Cal. 2d 310, 282 P.2d 12 , plaintiff lost the sight in one eye in a shooting gallery when a bullet fired at a target ricocheted and struck him. After settling with the owners and operators of the gallery, he sued defendant manufacturer for negligence in the manufacture, testing, and inspection of the cartridges. The trial court granted the manufacturer's motion for nonsuit and plaintiff appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed. Extensive evidence had been presented at trial showing that while the cartridges were designed and sold for use in short range shooting galleries, none of the testing on the cartridges was done under actual shooting gallery conditions. The manufacturer sold its cartridges on the theory that when the bullets hit a metal surface, they disintegrated into powder or dust, although its testing showed that the cartridges actually ricocheted from 30 to 40 feet. From this evidence, the Court held that the jury could have inferred that defendant was guilty of negligence in manufacturing and inspecting a product dangerous to human life, and a judgment of nonsuit was improper (44 Cal. 2d 310, 319-320) .

[d] Failure to Use Appropriate Tests to Reveal Defects

In Edison v. Lewis Mfg. Co. (1959) 168 Cal. App. 2d 429, 336 P.2d 286 , plaintiff's decedent was killed in a fall from an oil well derrick when a "D-ring" on his safety belt broke at the point it was welded. Plaintiffs sued the manufacturer for negligence in manufacturing and testing the D-ring. The jury returned a verdict against defendant and defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. There was conflicting evidence presented at trial as to whether more reasonably practicable methods of testing were employed in the welding industry for discovering defects in safety rings than the ones defendant used. The court said that the knowledge of a known danger, on a known use, makes vigilance a duty. When the tests a manufacturer used admittedly failed to reveal all defects in the product, it is for the jury to determine whether the manufacturer's failure to use other tests that are recognized as good and sound engineering procedures in the particular field constitutes negligence (168 Cal. App. 2d 429, 442-443) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
B. Negligence

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.192

§ 190.192 Supporting Contention That Manufacturer Breached Duty of Ordinary Care [Civ. Code § 1714(a)]--Failure to Design Product Safely for Its Intended Use

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief. It may be combined with a general form of points and authorities supporting the contention that defendant owed and breached a duty to plaintiff (see, e.g., § 190.190), as well as with forms supporting the contention that all the elements of actionable negligence exist (see Ch. 165, Negligence).]

DEFENDANT MANUFACTURER, _____ [name], SHOULD BE HELD LIABLE FOR PLAINTIFF'S INJURIES ON THE GROUND OF NEGLIGENCE BECAUSE DEFENDANT FAILED TO DESIGN _____ [specify product] SO THAT IT WOULD BE SAFE FOR ITS INTENDED USE.

A. Standard of Care in Designing Product. When a chattel is either inherently dangerous or when it is reasonably certain, if negligently designed or manufactured, to place life and limb in danger, the manufacturer is under a duty to use reasonable care to design his product so as to make it not accident-proof, but safe for the use for which it is intended. What is "reasonable care" involves a balancing of the likelihood of harm to be expected from a product with a given design, as well as the gravity of harm if the harm occurs, against the burden of the precaution that would be effective to avoid the harm (Pike v. Frank G. Hough Co. (1970) 2 Cal. 3d 465, 470, 85 Cal. Rptr. 629, 467 P.2d 229 ; Varas v. Barco Mfg. Co. (1962) 205 Cal. App. 2d 246, 257-258, 22 Cal. Rptr. 737).

[Optional] B. Evidence of Lack of Due Care in Designing Product. For the purpose of showing that there has been a failure to comply with the standard of due care, it is proper to introduce evidence as to the necessity and feasibility of changes in the design of parts of a product so as to enhance the factor of safety. The standard of due care is not necessarily identical to the standard of care "usual and customary" in the particular community. Customary practice is not, in and of itself, ordinary care; it is only evidence of ordinary care (Varas v. Barco Mfg. Co. (1962) 205 Cal. App. 2d 246, 259, 22 Cal. Rptr. 737).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that defendant was negligent in designing its product, making it unsafe for its intended use. Optional Paragraph B may be used to show that, while defendant's conduct was identical to that of other similarly situated defendants, this "usual and customary" standard of care fell below the standard of due care. These contentions may arise in several procedural contexts, including opposing a motion for nonsuit [see, e.g., Varas v. Barco Mfg. Co. (1962) 205 Cal. App. 2d 246, 261, 22 Cal. Rptr. 737] .

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of the duty of a defendant to use reasonable care in designing its product. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should show that plaintiff's injuries were caused by a defect in the design of defendant's product, that the product was being used in the manner in which it was intended, and what design changes were necessary to make the product safer.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a discussion and forms for use in actions involving negligence in general, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender). For a discussion and forms for use in products liability actions based on strict liability, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 460, Products Liability (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Points and Authorities

For points and authorities relating to actions for negligence in general, see Ch. 165, Negligence .

[d] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in § 190.201 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Standard of Care in Designing Product

The facts and procedural background of Pike v. Frank G. Hough Co. (1970) 2 Cal. 3d 465, 85 Cal. Rptr. 629, 467 P.2d 229 , are discussed in § 190.190[3][a]. Quoting Restatement (Second) of Torts § 402A in defining the duty of a manufacturer with respect to the design of products, the Supreme Court said that a manufacturer of a chattel made under a plan or design that makes it dangerous for the uses for which it is manufactured is subject to liability to others whom the manufacturer should expect to use the chattel or to be endangered by its probable use for physical harm caused by the failure to exercise reasonable care in the adoption of a safe plan or design. The Court stated that what is "reasonable care" varies with the facts of each case, but involves a balancing of the likelihood of harm to be expected from a machine with a given design and the gravity of harm if it happens against the burden of the precaution which would be effective to avoid the harm (2 Cal. 3d 465, 470) .

In Varas v. Barco Mfg. Co. (1962) 205 Cal. App. 2d 246, 22 Cal. Rptr. 737 , plaintiff was a machine operator who was injured when gas and oil leaking from the gas cap of the machine splashed onto his body and caught fire. Plaintiff sued the manufacturer for negligent design of the threads on the gas cap and for breach of warranty. The court granted defendant's motion for nonsuit on all causes of action, and plaintiff appealed the judgment of nonsuit on the negligence cause of action.

The court of appeal reversed the judgment of nonsuit on the negligence cause of action. In discussing the duty of a manufacturer with respect to the design of a product, the court stated that when a chattel is either inherently dangerous or when it is reasonably certain, if negligently designed or manufactured, to place life and limb in danger, the manufacturer owes a duty toward a user to use reasonable care to design the product so as to make it not accident-proof, but safe for the use for which it is intended (205 Cal. App. 2d 246, 257-258) .

[b] Evidence of Lack of Due Care in Designing Product

The facts and procedural background of Varas v. Barco Mfg. Co. (1962) 205 Cal. App. 2d 246, 22 Cal. Rptr. 737 , are discussed in § 190.192[3][a]. The trial court had prohibited plaintiff from introducing expert testimony on what type of remedies were available to prevent gas from leaking from a cap, unless plaintiff could first lay a foundation that the witness had knowledge of safety standards usual and customary in the community applicable to the particular machine in question or a similar one. The court ruled that exclusion of this testimony was error, noting that the standard of due care was not necessarily identical to the standard of care "usual and customary" in the particular community, and customary practice is only evidence of ordinary care. The court said that it is proper to introduce evidence as to the necessity and feasibility of changes in the design of parts of a machine so as to enhance the factor of safety for the purpose of showing that there has been a failure to comply with the standard of due care (205 Cal. App. 2d 246, 258-259) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
B. Negligence

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.193

§ 190.193 Supporting Contention That Manufacturer or Seller Breached Duty of Ordinary Care [Civ. Code § 1714(a)]--Failure to Provide Any Warnings of Dangers Inherent in Use of Product

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief. It may be combined with a general form of points and authorities supporting the contention that defendant owed and breached a duty to plaintiff (see, e.g., § 190.190), as well as with forms supporting the contention that all the elements of actionable negligence exist (see Ch. 165, Negligence).]

DEFENDANT _____ [name], A _____ [specify status, e.g., MANUFACTURER], OWED A DUTY TO PLAINTIFF TO EXERCISE REASONABLE CARE IN WARNING OF THE DANGEROUS PROPENSITIES THAT DEFENDANT KNEW OR SHOULD HAVE KNOWN WERE INHERENT IN THE ANTICIPATED USE OF _____ [specify product] THAT A USER WOULD NOT ORDINARILY DISCOVER. DEFENDANT BREACHED THAT DUTY BY FAILING TO PROVIDE SUCH A WARNING.

A. Duty to Provide Appropriate Warning of Known Dangers That User Would Not Ordinarily Discover. A manufacturer or seller of a product must give an appropriate warning of any known dangers that the user of the product would not ordinarily discover. The likelihood of an accident taking place and the seriousness of the consequences are factors considered in determining whether the duty to warn has been breached (Tingey v. E.F. Houghton & Co. (1947) 30 Cal. 2d 97, 102-103, 179 P.2d 807).

B. Exercise of Reasonable Care. A manufacturer or seller of a commodity that is or is likely to be dangerous for the use for which it is made or supplied owes a duty to exercise reasonable care to make it safe for those who will use it and those in whose vicinity it is to be used. The duty is to exercise reasonable care to give the information that the manufacturer or seller possesses and which he or she should realize to be necessary to make its use safe (Gall v. Union Ice Co. (1951) 108 Cal. App. 2d 303, 309-310, 239 P.2d 48).

C. Knowledge of Dangerous Propensity of Product. One of the elements of liability for negligence for failure to warn is that the manufacturer or seller knew or should have known of the dangerous character of the product that the user would not ordinarily discover (see Briggs v. National Indus., Inc. (1949) 92 Cal. App. 2d 542, 546, 207 P.2d 110).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that defendant was negligent by not exercising reasonable care to provide plaintiff with a warning of the dangers that defendant knew or should have known were inherent in the use of the particular product defendant manufactured or supplied. The argument may arise in several procedural contexts, including opposing a motion for nonsuit and in opposing a demurrer to plaintiff's complaint [see, e.g., Schwartz v. Helms Bakery Ltd. (1967) 67 Cal. 2d 232, 60 Cal. Rptr. 510, 430 P.2d 68 (nonsuit); Brockett v. Kitchen Boyd Motor Co. (1968) 264 Cal. App. 2d 69, 70 Cal. Rptr. 136 (demurrer)].

For memoranda of points and authorities regarding a cause of action in strict products liability based on failure to warn, see Part I, Subpart F.

These points and authorities may be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue that defendant breached its duty of reasonable care by failing to provide a warning of its product's dangerous propensities. For example, it may be used in opposition to a demurrer to the complaint [see, e.g., Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings, § 71.20 et seq.]. The points and authorities in this form may be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss either defendant's knowledge of the dangerous character of the product or the facts showing that defendant should have known of the dangerous character of the product, the fact that there was no warning given, facts showing why the particular danger was inherent in the use of the product, and facts showing that plaintiff would not ordinarily know of the danger.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a discussion and forms for use in actions involving negligence in general, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender). For a discussion and forms for use in products liability actions based on strict liability, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 460, Products Liability (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Points and Authorities

For points and authorities relating to actions for negligence in general, see Ch. 165, Negligence .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Duty to Provide Appropriate Warning of Known Dangers That User Would Not Ordinarily Discover

In Tingey v. E.F. Houghton & Co. (1947) 30 Cal. 2d 97, 102, 179 P.2d 807 , plaintiffs, the widow and children of a tool company employee, sought damages for the employee's death caused by an explosion of chemicals sold by defendant manufacturer to the tool company. The evidence at trial presented two possible explanations for the explosion: that it resulted from contamination by a foreign substance of one of the two chemicals supplied by the manufacturer, and that it was likely the chemical was contaminated before it left the manufacturer's plant, or that it resulted from an employee mixing the chemicals from the two drums together. Neither drum contained a warning label. The trial court found for plaintiff and defendant appealed, claiming the evidence was insufficient to support the implied finding of negligence.

The Supreme Court affirmed. The Court said that if the jury accepted the theory that the explosion resulted from an employee mixing the two chemicals, it could have found that the mixing, with the resulting explosion, was a direct consequence of defendant's negligence in failing to give an adequate warning of the dangerous nature of its products (30 Cal. 2d 97, 102) . Noting that the manufacturer knew of all the perils involved in the use of the chemicals, the Court stated that it was for the jury to determine whether the manufacturer should have foreseen that an employee might not take precautions to avoid contamination in the absence of a warning to do so. In addition, it was proper for the jury to conclude that without a warning label an employee could not anticipate that mixing the two chemicals would cause an explosion, because they were both intended for the same method of use and for the same general purpose (30 Cal. 2d 97, 103) .

[b] Exercise of Reasonable Care

The facts and procedural background of Gall v. Union Ice Co. (1951) 108 Cal. App. 2d 303, 239 P.2d 48 , are discussed in § 190.190[3][a]. In affirming a judgment against the seller of a drum of sulphuric acid that exploded and killed plaintiffs' decedent, the Supreme Court stated that the duty imposed on a supplier of a chattel for another's use is to exercise reasonable care to give to those who are to use the chattel the information that the supplier possesses and that he or she should realize to be necessary to make its use safe for them and those in whose vicinity it is to be used (108 Cal. App. 2d 303, 309-310) .

[c] Knowledge of Dangerous Propensity of Product

In Briggs v. National Indus., Inc. (1949) 92 Cal. App. 2d 542, 207 P.2d 110 , plaintiff brought an action against the manufacturer of a cold wave preparation, a beauty shop owner, and the operator in the shop who applied the preparation to plaintiff's hair. Some of the cold wave solution splashed on plaintiff's forehead, face, and arm, and within three days she suffered severe skin inflammation. Testimony at trial showed no other instances of injury resulting from the cold wave, and indicated that plaintiff was allergic to a substance in the preparation. Plaintiff alleged that the manufacturer was negligent in failing to warn the public and intended users that the product contained a toxin that might cause serious damage to users, and that great care should be taken in the application of the product. The jury returned a verdict in favor of defendants shop owner and operator, and against defendant manufacturer. The trial judge granted the manufacturer's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, and entered judgment in favor of the manufacturer. Plaintiff appealed from the judgment entered in favor of the manufacturer.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court noted that the record showed extensive use of the cold wave preparation by both plaintiff and defendants with no evidence of injuries other than those alleged in this case. While deferring to the jury's finding that the beauty shop owner and operator were not liable for negligent application of the cold wave solution, the court pointed out that the manufacturer did include instructions with the solution stating that it was to be used on the hair and not the skin, and there was evidence that no injury would have occurred if these instructions had been followed. The court noted that the general rule is that a manufacturer must give an appropriate warning of any known dangers that the user of his or her product would not ordinarily discover, and that one of the essential elements of liability is knowledge on the part of the manufacturer of the dangerous character of the product. Because there was no evidence that the manufacturer had any such knowledge here, there was no liability for plaintiffs injuries (92 Cal. App. 2d 542, 546) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Duty to Provide Appropriate Warning of Known Dangers That User Would Not Ordinarily Discover

In Finn v. G.D. Searle & Co. (1984) 35 Cal. 3d 691, 200 Cal. Rptr. 870, 677 P.2d 1147 , plaintiff, a minor child who suffered blindness after prolonged usage of a drug prescribed for treatment of a serious, and often fatal, skin disease sued the prescribing physician and the drug manufacturer. One of the theories of liability advanced by plaintiff at trial was that the manufacturer was liable because it failed to warn of potential dangers and possible side effects associated with use of the drug. The trial court modified one of plaintiff's proposed jury instructions from "The manufacturer of a prescription drug is under a duty to warn the medical profession of potential dangers from use of its drug ..." to "The manufacturer of a drug is under a duty to exercise reasonable care to warn the medical profession of potential dangers reasonably foreseeable from use of its drug ... ." Plaintiff objected to this modification on the grounds that it injected negligence concepts into the jury's consideration, thereby vitiating his strict liability claim. The jury returned a verdict in favor of both defendants and plaintiff appealed.

The Supreme Court affirmed. While acknowledging that it originally granted a hearing in the case to consider the application of strict liability principles to side effects produced by prescription drugs, after reviewing the record the Court declined to reach that issue. The Court noted that in duty-to-warn cases, under a negligence standard the jury must determine the reasonableness of the manufacturer's conduct when it failed to warn, while under a strict liability standard the determination is whether the product has been rendered defective because, applying an objective standard, and weighing the relevant costs and benefits, a warning was required. The Court found that the jury instructions as modified were appropriate, because plaintiff relied on cases emphasizing the overlap of negligence and strict liability principles, and failed to offer instructions calling for a jury to consider whether the benefit of a particular warning would outweigh its costs under Barker v. Lull Eng'g Co. (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 413, 143 Cal. Rptr. 225, 573 P.2d 443 (35 Cal. 3d 691, 699) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
B. Negligence

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.194

§ 190.194 Supporting Contention That Manufacturer or Seller Breached Duty of Ordinary Care [Civ. Code § 1714(a)]--Failure to Provide Adequate Warnings of Dangers Inherent in Use of Product

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief. It may be combined with a general form of points and authorities supporting the contention that defendant owed and breached a duty to plaintiff (see, e.g., § 190.190), as well as with forms supporting the contention that all the elements of actionable negligence exist (see Ch. 165, Negligence).]

DEFENDANT _____ [specify status, e.g., MANUFACTURER] _____ [name] WAS NEGLIGENT BECAUSE ALTHOUGH _____ [A WARNING and/or INSTRUCTIONS] WERE PROVIDED WITH THE _____ [specify product], THE _____ [WARNING and/or INSTRUCTIONS] WERE INADEQUATE.

A. Duty to Provide Adequate Warning. When a duty to warn exists, the warning must not only be complete, but must also be given in such a way as to call sufficient attention to it (Larramendy v. Myres (1954) 126 Cal. App. 2d 636, 640-641, 272 P.2d 824 ; Gall v. Union Ice Co. (1951) 108 Cal. App. 2d 303, 309, 239 P.2d 48).

[Optional] B. Failure to Give Special Warning of Particular Hazard. A manufacturer must give adequate warning to the ultimate users of the product of any dangerous propensity that it knows or should have known would result in the type of accident that occurred. When there is evidence that the manufacturer was aware that its general warnings were often disregarded, it is a question of fact for the jury whether the manufacturer should have given special warnings regarding the particular hazard associated with the product (Casetta v. United States Rubber Co. (1968) 260 Cal. App. 2d 792, 796, 67 Cal. Rptr. 645).

[Optional] C. Compliance With Regulations or Directives Insufficient. A manufacturer's duty to warn may not be satisfied by compliance with industry regulations or directives if the manufacturer knows or has reason to know of greater dangers not included in the warnings (Stevens v. Parke, Davis & Co. (1973) 9 Cal. 3d 51, 65, 69, 107 Cal.

Rptr. 45, 507 P.2d 653).

[Optional] D. Adequate Warning May Be Rendered Inadequate by Overpromotion. An adequate warning may be eroded or even nullified by overpromotion of a product through a vigorous sales program that may have the effect of persuading the user or supplier to disregard the warning (Stevens v. Parke, Davis & Co. (1973) 9 Cal. 3d 51, 69, 107 Cal. Rptr. 45, 507 P.2d 653 ; Love v. Wolf (1964) 226 Cal. App. 2d 378, 395, 38 Cal. Rptr. 183).

[Optional] E. Incomplete Warning. A manufacturer of a dangerous or potentially dangerous product has a duty to insure that an adequate warning is given to the public with respect to its use. It is a question for the trier of fact whether there is sufficient evidence to support a finding that a manufacturer has breached this duty if warnings are given for some, but not all, the dangers inherent in the use of the product (Crane v. Sears Roebuck & Co. (1963) 218 Cal. App. 2d 855, 859, 32 Cal. Rptr. 754 ; Larramendy v. Myres (1954) 126 Cal. App. 2d 636, 640-641, 272 P.2d 824).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that defendant was negligent by providing plaintiff with an inadequate warning of the dangers inherent in the use of the particular product defendant manufactured or supplied. The argument may arise in several procedural contexts, including opposing a motion for nonsuit and in opposing a demurrer to plaintiff's complaint [see, e.g., Schwartz v. Helms Bakery Ltd. (1967) 67 Cal. 2d 232, 60 Cal. Rptr. 510, 430 P.2d 68 (nonsuit); Brockett v. Kitchen Boyd Motor Co. (1968) 264 Cal. App. 2d 69, 70 Cal. Rptr. 136 (demurrer)].

These points and authorities may be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue that defendant provided an inadequate warning concerning the dangerous propensities of its product. For example, this form may be combined with general points and authorities opposing a demurrer to the complaint [see, e.g., Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings, § 71.20 et seq.]. The points and authorities in this form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss the nature and extent of the warning that defendant did provide, and the facts showing why this warning was inadequate.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a discussion and forms for use in actions involving negligence in general, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender). For a discussion and forms for use in products liability actions based on strict liability, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 460, Products Liability (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Points and Authorities

For points and authorities relating to actions for negligence in general, see Ch. 165, Negligence .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Duty to Provide Adequate Warning

In Larramendy v. Myres (1954) 126 Cal. App. 2d 636, 272 P.2d 824 , plaintiff, a 12-year old girl, brought an action for damages against the manufacturer and supplier of a smoke-making device for injuries received when she used the device in her dance class and it set fire to her dress, causing her severe burns. The device contained instructions and warnings of danger due to the smoke, but no mention of danger from fire. Defendants argued that they owed no duty to plaintiff and therefore could not be held liable. The trial court found for plaintiff and defendants appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court said that a duty of care exists in the absence of privity not only when the article manufactured is inherently dangerous, but also when it is reasonable certain, if negligently manufactured or constructed, to place life and limb in peril. There was sufficient evidence to support the trial court's finding that defendants breached this duty by failing to reasonably warn of the dangerous propensities of the device, because the warnings given were incomplete and did not warn of the danger from fire (126 Cal. App. 2d 636, 640-641) .

The facts and procedural background of Gall v. Union Ice Co. (1951) 108 Cal. App. 2d 303, 239 P.2d 48 , are discussed in § 190.190[3][a]. There was considerable evidence presented at trial that defendants regularly inspected all drums for a proper label, that they sent warning letters to all purchasers, including the deceased's employer, and that their agents had given personal instructions in proper safety measures to their customers. However, there was also evidence that the particular drum that exploded did not have a warning label on it. Because defendant had a duty to make sure all drums were conspicuously labeled in a manner to call attention to the danger involved, defendant was not relieved of liability (108 Cal. App. 2d 303, 309) .

[b] Failure to Warn of Particular Hazard

In Casetta v. United States Rubber Co. (1968) 260 Cal. App. 2d 792, 67 Cal. Rptr. 645 , plaintiff, a tire repairman, brought an action for damages against the manufacturer and distributor of a tire for injuries suffered when the tire exploded while he was mounting it on a tire rim. One of his theories of liability was that the manufacturer was negligent in failing to warn him of a particular hazard in mounting the tire on the particular type of safety rim involved in the accident. The trial court refused to instruct the jury on the failure to warn theory, either under principles of strict liability or negligence. The jury was instructed on the theory of strict liability of a manufacturer or distributor of a defective product and returned a verdict in favor of plaintiff. The trial court granted defendant's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict and entered judgment in favor of defendant. Plaintiff appealed from the judgment entered in favor of defendant, and also appealed the trial court's refusal to instruct the jury on its failure-to-warn theory.

The court of appeal held that the trial court properly determined that there was insufficient evidence to support a finding of a defect in the tire that would support a judgment against the manufacturer or distributor based on strict liability. However, the court of appeal reversed and remanded the case because there was substantial evidence to show that defendants failed to warn prospective users regarding the special hazards arising from mounting the tire on "safety" rims, and the trial court erred in withholding this issue from the jury. The court said that a manufacturer must give adequate warning to the ultimate users of the product of any dangerous propensity that it knows of should have known would result in the type of accident that occurred. While the defendants in this case distributed posters containing general instructions and warnings for the mounting of all tires, there was evidence that they were aware that these warnings were often disregarded. The court of appeal noted that it was a question of fact for the jury whether defendants should have given special warnings regarding the particular hazard associated with safety rims (260 Cal. App. 2d 792, 796) .

[c] Compliance With Regulations or Directives Insufficient

In Stevens v. Parke, Davis & Co. (1973) 9 Cal. 3d 51, 107 Cal. Rptr. 45, 507 P.2d 653 , plaintiffs, the widower and surviving children of a woman who died allegedly from ingesting the drug chloromycetin, sued the manufacturer and the prescribing physician for damages for wrongful death. The complaint stated causes of action for breach of warranty, strict liability in tort, and negligence of the manufacturer for overpromotion of the drug and of the prescribing physician for lack of due care in prescribing it. The trial court granted the manufacturer's motion for nonsuit on the warranty and strict liability actions, but denied it on the negligence action, and denied the physician's motion for nonsuit. The jury returned a verdict against both defendants in the amount of $400,000 and the court ordered remittitur of the verdict on the ground that the damages were excessive due to the prejudice and passion of the jury. Plaintiffs refused to consent to remittitur and the court granted defendant's motion for a new trial solely on the issue of damages.

The Supreme Court reversed the order granting a new trial and affirmed the judgment for plaintiffs. The order for new trial was reversed on the grounds that the trial judge failed to adequately specify his reasons in writing for the order, as is required by Code Civ. Proc. § 657. Regarding the manufacturer's contention that the record showed as a matter of law that it was not negligent, the Court noted that there was evidence of overpromotion of the drug to the medical community by the manufacturer's salespersons. Although the manufacturer complied with directives as to warnings issued by the United States Food and Drug Administration, its duty to warn was not fulfilled because it knew or should have known of greater dangers not included in the warnings. In rejecting the manufacturer's claim that it was insulated from liability because of the physician's intervening negligent act in prescribing the drug, the Court stated that an adequate warning to the medical profession may be eroded or even nullified by overpromotion of the drug through a vigorous sales program that may have the effect of persuading the physician to disregard the warning. Because it was reasonably foreseeable--indeed, the desired result of the extensive advertising and promotional campaign carried out by the manufacturer--that a physician might prescribe the drug despite its dangers, the manufacturer should not be relieved of liability (9 Cal. 3d 51, 65, 69) .

[d] Adequate Warning May Be Rendered Inadequate by Overpromotion

Stevens v. Parke, Davis & Co. (1973) 9 Cal. 3d 51, 107 Cal. Rptr. 45, 507 P.2d 653 , is discussed in § 190.194[3][c].

In Love v. Wolf (1964) 226 Cal. App. 2d 378, 38 Cal. Rptr. 183 , plaintiff filed suit against a prescribing physician and the manufacturer of the drug chloromycetin, for injuries she suffered after taking the drug. Plaintiff charged that the manufacturer was negligent in failing to provide adequate warning of known dangers of the drug. The jury returned a verdict in favor of plaintiffs and defendants appealed.

The court of appeal reversed and remanded for a new trial on the grounds that the misconduct of plaintiff's counsel resulted in an unfair trial. However, the court also held that the manufacturer's motion for nonsuit and directed verdict in its favor was properly denied. The evidence at trial indicated that defendant's salesmen, or "detail" men, promoted the virtues of the drug while minimizing its dangers, and that physicians were influenced by the persuasive advertising. The court held that because the manufacturer had watered down the warnings required by the Food and Drug Administration and had caused its detail men to promote a wider use of the drug by physicians than proper medical practice justified, the manufacturer must be retained as a defendant on retrial (226 Cal. App. 2d 378, 395) .

[e] Incomplete Warning

In Crane v. Sears Roebuck & Co. (1963) 218 Cal. App. 2d 855, 32 Cal. Rptr. 754 , plaintiff brought an action for negligence and breach of warranty against the seller and manufacturer of a wall surface preparer for injuries she sustained as a result of a fire caused by the preparer exploding while she was using it. The warning label on the can cautioned against using the solution "near fire or flames," warned that it was an inflammable mixture, and cautioned about poisonous fumes. It did not mention that the mixture could be explosive or combustible. The trial court found in favor of plaintiff and defendants appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court said that it was a question of fact for the jury whether the label contained an adequate warning. While defendant manufacturer maintained that it was not liable because it only mixed the ingredients for the preparer from the formula supplied them by defendant seller, the court concluded that a manufacturer of a dangerous product cannot claim exemption from liability from the use of the product when the label does not give appropriate warning to the purchasing public, thereby constituting in effect a "trap for the unwary." In view of the latent, dangerous qualities of the surface preparer, the manufacturer had a duty to insure that an adequate warning was given to the public with respect to its use (218 Cal. App. 2d 855, 859) .

The facts and procedural background of Larramendy v. Myres (1954) 126 Cal. App. 2d 636, 272 P.2d 824 , are discussed in § 190.194[3][a]. The court of appeal stated that there was sufficient evidence for the trial court to find that defendants neglected to reasonably warn of the dangerous propensities of the device because the written directions did not include a warning that there was a danger from fire (126 Cal. App. 2d 636, 641) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Duty to Provide Adequate Warning

In Hernandez v. Badger Constr. Equip. Co. (1994) 28 Cal. App. 4th 1791, 34 Cal. Rptr. 2d 732 , a shipyard employee was injured on the job by a crane. His employer filed a complaint against the manufacturer of the crane to recover the amount of workers' compensation paid to the employee, proceeding on both a negligence theory for the manufacturer's failure to provide an adequate warning, and on a strict liability theory for design defect and failure to warn. The jury found that the manufacturer was negligent, but that the crane did not have a "design" defect. The court of appeal held that there was substantial evidence supporting the manufacturer's liability for plaintiffs' injuries. The jury's findings on the negligence and strict liability theories were not inconsistent. The fact that the cranes were not "defective" when initially made and sold, did not relieve the manufacturer of its duty to provide a complete warning. In this case, there was evidence that the manufacturer had begun to retrofit older cranes, and its failure to conduct an adequate campaign to warn against defects constituted negligence (28 Cal. App. 4th 1791, 1827-1830) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
B. Negligence

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.195

§ 190.195 Supporting Contention That Seller of Product Breached Duty of Ordinary Care [Civ. Code § 1714(a)]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief. It may be combined with a general form of points and authorities supporting the contention that defendant owed and breached a duty to plaintiff (see, e.g., § 190.190), as well as with forms supporting the contention that all the elements of actionable negligence exist (see Ch. 165, Negligence).]

DEFENDANT SELLER _____ [name] SHOULD BE HELD LIABLE FOR PLAINTIFF'S INJURIES BECAUSE DEFENDANT WAS NEGLIGENT IN SELLING THE _____ [specify product] BY FAILING TO _____ [USE REASONABLE CARE or INSPECT AND TEST THE PRODUCT PRIOR TO SALE], CAUSING IT TO BE A DANGEROUS PRODUCT.

A. Failure of Seller to Use Reasonable Care. The duty imposed on a supplier of a chattel for another's use is to exercise reasonable care to give to those who are to use the chattel the information that the supplier possesses and that he or she should realize to be necessary to make its use safe for them and those in whose vicinity it is to be used. The supplier's duty is to exercise reasonable care to inform those for whose use the article is supplied of dangers that are peculiarly within the supplier's knowledge (Gall v. Union Ice Co. (1951) 108 Cal. App. 2d 303, 306, 239 P.2d 48).

[Optional] B. Seller's Performance of Auxiliary Functions. When a seller undertakes to perform functions auxiliary to the sale, such as preparation, installation, servicing, or repairing, in addition to merely selling the product, he has a duty to inspect or test the product for defects prior to the sale (see, e.g., Green v. City of Los Angeles (1974) 40 Cal. App. 3d 819, 836 n.4, 837-838, 115 Cal. Rptr. 685).

[Optional] C. Seller's Duty When Product Is Used or Second-Hand. The seller of a used or second-hand product, rather than manufacturer, has a duty to inspect and test the product prior to sale and will be held liable for injuries resulting from failure to do so (see, e.g., Green v. City of Los Angeles (1974) 40 Cal. App. 3d 819, 836 n.4, 838, 115 Cal. Rptr. 685).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a seller of a product breached the duty to use reasonable care in selling the product. Optional Paragraph B may be used if defendant seller undertook auxiliary functions in the sale without inspecting or testing the product for defects. Optional Paragraph C may be used if defendant sold a used product without inspecting or testing it. These arguments may arise in several procedural contexts, including opposing a demurrer to a complaint, or opposing an appeal of a judgment against a defendant seller [see, e.g., Green v. City of Los Angeles (1974) 40 Cal. App. 3d 819, 115 Cal. Rptr. 685] .

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue of a seller's liability for negligence in a products liability action. The points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should include facts showing that the product being sold was second-hand, the seller failed to test and inspect the product prior to sale, and that the defect causing plaintiff's injuries could have been discovered by reasonable inspection or tests.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a discussion and forms for use in actions involving negligence in general, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender). For a discussion and forms for use in products liability actions based on strict liability, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 460, Products Liability (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Points and Authorities

For points and authorities relating to actions for negligence in general, see the Ch. 165, Negligence.

[d] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in § 190.204 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Failure of Seller to Use Reasonable Care

The facts and procedural background of Gall v. Union Ice Co. (1951) 108 Cal. App. 2d 303, 239 P.2d 48 , are discussed in § 190.190[3][a]. In affirming a judgment against the seller of a drum of sulphuric acid that exploded and killed plaintiffs' decedent, the Supreme Court stated that the duty imposed on a supplier of a chattel for another's use is to exercise reasonable care to give to those who are to use the chattel the information that the supplier possesses and that he should realize to be necessary to make its use safe for them and those in whose vicinity it is to be used (108 Cal. App. 2d 303, 309) .

[b] Seller's Performance of Auxiliary Functions

In Green v. City of Los Angeles (1974) 40 Cal. App. 3d 819, 115 Cal. Rptr. 685 , plaintiffs were the family of a longshoreman who was killed, and another longshoreman who was injured, when a crane boom fell and struck them while they were loading a ship. Named as defendants were the city that operated the harbor, the lessor of the crane, the seller of the crane, and the shipowner. Judgment was entered against the shipowner for breach of warranty and against the seller of the crane for negligence, breach of implied warranty, and strict liability. The shipowner was allowed to recover for indemnity against the city, the lessor, and the seller, while the city and the lessor, in turn, were allowed to recover in indemnity from the seller of the crane, resulting in the imposition of ultimate liability on the seller. All defendants appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court stated that the evidence was sufficient to support the trial court's findings and these findings justified holding the seller liable on all three theories of liability. The trial court had found that in addition to selling the crane, the seller reassembled and reconditioned it, and made substantial modifications to the crane prior to acceptance by the city. The seller failed to inspect the crane or make tests to ascertain what effect the modifications had on its components. Furthermore, the seller had knowledge of a fracture in the crane and failed to conduct the visual and scientific tests that the court found were "proper practice" to conduct at the time and under the circumstances (40 Cal. App. 3d 819, 836 n.4, 837-838) .

[c] Seller's Duty When Product Is Used or Second-Hand

The facts and procedural background of Green v. City of Los Angeles (1974) 40 Cal. App. 3d 819, 115 Cal. Rptr. 685 , are discussed in § 190.195[3][b]. The court of appeal noted that under the findings by the trial court, which cited the extensive modifications the seller made to a used crane, the seller was tantamount to a manufacturer insofar as liability was concerned and had a duty to inspect and test the product prior to sale (40 Cal. App. 3d 819, 836 n.4, 838) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
B. Negligence

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.196

§ 190.196 Supporting Contention That Lessor or Bailor Breached Duty of Ordinary Care [Civ. Code § 1714(a)]--Failure to Inspect and Furnish Reasonably Safe Chattel [Civ. Code § 1955]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief. It may be combined with a general form of points and authorities supporting the contention that defendant owed and breached a duty to plaintiff (see, e.g., § 190.190), as well as with forms supporting the contention that all the elements of actionable negligence exist (see Ch. 165, Negligence).]

DEFENDANT _____ [LESSOR or BAILOR] SHOULD BE HELD LIABLE FOR PLAINTIFF'S INJURIES BECAUSE HE/SHE/IT OWED AND BREACHED A DUTY TO INSPECT AND PROVIDE A REASONABLY SAFE CHATTEL TO _____ [LESSEE or BAILEE].

A. Duty to Furnish Chattel Safe for Intended Use. A lessor or bailor of personal property has a duty under Section 1955 of the Civil Code to furnish a reasonably safe chattel to the lessee or bailee, and is liable for injuries to users of the chattel that may result from his or her negligence; this duty is based on the duty to exercise ordinary care that is due everybody (see Civ. Code § 1955; Holmes Packaging Mach. Corp. v. Bingham (1967) 252 Cal. App. 2d 862, 869, 60 Cal. Rptr. 769).

B. Duty to Inspect. A lessor or bailor for hire of a chattel must use reasonable care to examine the chattel before letting it in order to make certain that it is fit for the use for which it is intended (see Civ. Code § 1955; Zucker v. Passetti Trucking Co. (1961) 191 Cal. App. 2d 260, 265, 12 Cal. Rptr. 692).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a lessee or bailor of personal property owes a duty to the lessee or bailee to exercise reasonable care in inspecting the chattel to determine that it is reasonably safe for its intended use, and is liable for injuries resulting from his or her negligent breach of that duty [see Civ. Code § 1955]. This argument may arise in several procedural contexts, including in an appeal from a judgment after trial [see, e.g., Zucker v. Passetti Trucking Co. (1961) 191 Cal. App. 2d 260, 12 Cal. Rptr. 692] .

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue set forth in this form. The points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should discuss the facts that make defendant fall into the category of a bailor or lessor, as well as the specific manner in which defendant breached the duty to exercise reasonable care.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a discussion and forms for use in actions involving negligence in general, California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender). For a discussion and forms for use in products liability actions based on strict liability, see Ch. 460, Products Liability (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Points and Authorities

For points and authorities relating to actions for negligence in general, see Ch. 165, Negligence .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Duty to Furnish Chattel Safe for Intended Use

In Holmes Packaging Mach. Corp. v. Bingham (1967) 252 Cal. App. 2d 862, 60 Cal. Rptr. 769 , plaintiff machinery company brought an action for money due from a lessee for the rental of certain machinery. Defendant lessee contended that he was entitled to rescind the leases because plaintiff had breached an implied warranty that the property was of merchantable quality and fit for the purpose for which it was leased. The trial court ruled in favor of defendant and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed on the ground that the disclaimer clause contained in the lease agreement excluded all implied warranties and precluded defendant from rescinding the lease. However, in discussing the duty of a bailor or lessor, the court stated that the duty of a bailor imposed under Civ. Code § 1955, that one who hires a chattel for the use of others ordinarily assumes a duty to furnish a proper and reasonably safe chattel, and that he or she is liable for injuries that may result from his or her negligence to one using the chattel, finds its basis in the duty to exercise ordinary care that is due everybody (252 Cal. App. 2d 862, 869) .

[b] Duty to Inspect

The facts and procedural background of Zucker v. Passetti Trucking Co. (1961) 191 Cal. App. 2d 260, 12 Cal. Rptr. 692 , are discussed in § 190.190[3][c]. The court of appeal affirmed a judgment for plaintiffs, who were injured when their automobile was struck by a compressor that was rented from defendants and broke loose from a truck because of a defective cotter pin and safety chain. The court stated that the bailor has a duty to inspect to discover defects. This is a general duty imposed by law on the bailor to refrain from putting on the highway an instrumentality that might reasonably be expected to cause harm not only to the bailee but to third persons lawfully using the highway (191 Cal. App. 2d 260, 265) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
B. Negligence

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.197

§ 190.197 Supporting Contention That Endorser of Product Breached Duty of Ordinary Care [Civ. Code § 1714(a)]--Negligent Misrepresentation of Product

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief. It may be combined with a general form of points and authorities supporting the contention that defendant owed and breached a duty to plaintiff (see, e.g., § 190.190, 130), as well as with forms supporting the contention that all the elements of actionable negligence exist (see Ch. 165, Negligence).]

DEFENDANT ENDORSER OF _____ [specify product] SHOULD BE HELD LIABLE FOR PLAINTIFF'S INJURIES BECAUSE DEFENDANT NEGLIGENTLY MISREPRESENTED TO THE PUBLIC THAT _____ [specify product] WAS _____ [describe nature of endorsement, e.g., SAFE FOR ITS INTENDED USE], PLAINTIFF RELIED ON THE ENDORSEMENT IN PURCHASING THE PRODUCT, AND PLAINTIFF WAS INJURED BECAUSE THE PRODUCT WAS DEFECTIVE AND NOT AS REPRESENTED IN THE ENDORSEMENT.

Duty of Endorser to Exercise Ordinary Care in Endorsing Product to Public. An endorser that voluntarily involves itself in the marketing process and, in effect, loans its reputation to promote and induce the sale of a product for its own economic gain has a duty to use ordinary care so that members of the consuming public who rely on the endorsement are not unreasonably exposed to a risk of harm (Hanberry v. Hearst Corp. (1969) 276 Cal. App. 2d 680, 683-684, 81 Cal. Rptr. 519).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that defendant endorser breached its duty of ordinary care in misrepresenting a product to the public. For example, an endorser may be held liable for negligent misrepresentation if it fails to exercise reasonable care testing or inspecting a product, and a member of the public relies on the endorsement in purchasing the product and is subsequently injured by the product because of its defective condition [see, e.g., Hanberry v. Hearst Corp. (1969) 276 Cal. App. 2d 680, 81 Cal. Rptr. 519] . This argument may arise in several procedural contexts, including on appeal from a judgment of dismissal after sustaining of a demurrer without leave to amend [see, e.g., Hanberry v. Hearst Corp. (1969) 276 Cal. App. 2d 680, 81 Cal. Rptr. 519] .

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue that defendant endorser breached its duty of ordinary care in endorsing a product. The points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should discuss the context in which defendant became an endorser of the product, the nature of the endorsement, facts showing that plaintiff relied on the endorsement, and facts showing why the endorsement was false.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a discussion and forms for use in actions involving negligence in general, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender). For a discussion and forms for use in products liability actions based on strict liability, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 460, Products Liability (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Points and Authorities

For points and authorities relating to actions for negligence in general, see Ch. 165, Negligence .

[d] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in § 190.208 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Duty of Endorser to Exercise Ordinary Care in Endorsing Product to Public

In Hanberry v. Hearst Corp. (1969) 276 Cal. App. 2d 680, 81 Cal. Rptr. 519 , plaintiff purchased a pair of shoes that had been advertised as meeting the "Good Housekeeping Consumer's Guaranty Seal," an endorsement of good quality given by defendant as publisher of the magazine Good Housekeeping. Plaintiff was injured when she slipped and fell on her vinyl floor while wearing the shoes, and she alleged that the shoes were defective in that they were slippery and unsafe on certain types of floor coverings. Plaintiff sued the retail store that sold her the shoes, the distributor of the shoes, and the publisher of Good Housekeeping magazine. Defendant publisher's demurrer to the third amended complaint was sustained without leave to amend and the action was dismissed as to the publisher. Plaintiff appealed the judgment of dismissal.

The court of appeal reversed. The court said that implicit in the Good Housekeeping seal and certification is the representation that the publisher has taken reasonable steps to make an independent examination of the product endorsed, with some degree of expertise, and found it satisfactory. The court concluded that one who endorses a product for his own economic gain, and for the purpose of inducing the public to buy it, may be liable to a purchaser who, relying on the endorsement, buys the product and is injured because it is defective and not as represented in the endorsement. In voluntarily assuming this business relationship, Good Housekeeping had placed itself in the position where public policy imposed on it the duty to use ordinary care in the issuance of its seal and certification of quality so that members of the consuming public who rely on its endorsement are not unreasonably exposed to the risk of harm (276 Cal. App. 2d 680, 683-684) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
B. Negligence

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.198

§ 190.198 Supporting Contention That Lender Breached Duty of Ordinary Care to Third Person [Civ. Code § 1714(a)]--Lender Acted Outside Scope of Regular Activities or Was Party to Misrepresentation [Civ. Code § 3434]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief. It may be combined with a general form of points and authorities supporting the contention that defendant owed and breached a duty to plaintiff (see, e.g., § 190.190), as well as with forms supporting the contention that all the elements of actionable negligence exist (see Ch. 165, Negligence)].

DEFENDANT LENDER _____ [name] SHOULD BE HELD LIABLE FOR PLAINTIFF'S DAMAGES BECAUSE _____ [DEFENDANT'S ACTS WERE OUTSIDE THE SCOPE OF REGULAR ACTIVITIES OF A LENDER or DEFENDANT WAS A PARTY TO MISREPRESENTATIONS THAT LED TO PLAINTIFF'S INJURIES].

A. Factors for Determining if Defendant Owed Duty to Plaintiff. [See § 190.190, Paragraph C.]

B. Statutory Liability of Lender. A lender who loans money to a borrower, so that the borrower may finance the design, manufacture, construction, repair, modification, or improvement of real or personal property for the sale or lease to others, may be held liable to third persons for any loss or damage occasioned by any defect in the real or personal property or for any loss or damage resulting from the failure of the borrower to use due care in the design, manufacture, construction, repair, modification, or improvement of the property if the loss or damage is a result of an act of the lender outside the scope of the activities of a lender of money, or if the lender has been a party to misrepresentations with respect to the property (see Civ. Code § 3434; see also Connor v. Great W. Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1968) 69 Cal. 2d 850, 864-865, 870, 73 Cal. Rptr. 369, 447 P.2d 609 (decided before 1969 enactment of Civ. Code § 3434).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that defendant, as a lender of money for the design, manufacture, construction, repair, modification, or improvement of real or personal property, should be held liable for plaintiff's damages from defects in the property caused by defendant's failure to exercise reasonable care. This argument may arise in several procedural contexts, including an appeal from a judgment of nonsuit [see, e.g., Connor v. Great W. Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1968) 69 Cal. 2d 850, 73 Cal. Rptr. 369, 447 P.2d 609] .

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue that defendant lender is liable to plaintiff purchaser for loss or damage resulting from a defect in the purchased property. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should discuss the acts that defendant lender performed or the misrepresentations the lender made that plaintiff contends makes the lender liable under the provisions Civ. Code § 3434.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a discussion and forms for use in actions involving negligence in general, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender). For a discussion and forms for use in products liability actions based on strict liability, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 460, Products Liability (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Points and Authorities

For points and authorities relating to actions for negligence in general, see Ch. 165, Negligence .

[d] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in § 190.205 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Statutory Liability of Lender

Connor v. Great W. Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1968) 69 Cal. 2d 850, 73 Cal. Rptr. 369, 447 P.2d 609 , is discussed in § 190.190[3][d].

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
B. Negligence

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.198A

§ 190.198A Supporting Contention That Name-Brand Drug Manufacturer Breached Duty of Care When Prescription Was Filled With Generic Drug--Negligent Misrepresentation

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief. It may be combined with a general form of points and authorities supporting the contention that defendant owed and breached a duty to plaintiff (see, e.g., § 190.190), as well as with forms supporting the contention that all the elements of a negligent misrepresentation claim exist (see § 105.280).]

DEFENDANT _____ [name], A NAME-BRAND DRUG MANUFACTURER, OWED A DUTY TO PROVIDE ADEQUATE WARNINGS TO PLAINTIFF, WHOSE PHYSICIAN FORESEEABLY RELIED ON DEFENDANT'S PRODUCT INFORMATION WHEN PRESCRIBING A DRUG THAT THAT WAS FILLED WITH A GENERIC EQUIVALENT. DEFENDANT BREACHED THAT DUTY, AND IS LIABLE FOR NEGLIGENT MISREPRESENTATION.

A. Name-Brand Drug Manufacturer's Duty of Care in Disseminating Product Information Extends to Persons Injured by Generic Version When Physician Relied on Information in Prescribing Drug. A name-brand drug manufacturer's duty to use due care when providing product warnings extends to persons whose physicians foreseeably rely on its product information when prescribing a medication, even if the prescription is filled with a generic equivalent (Conte v. Wyeth, Inc.(2008) 168 Cal. App. 4th 89, 94-95, 85 Cal. Rptr. 3d 299).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a name-brand drug manufacturer owes a duty to a person whose physician relied on the manufacturer's warning in prescribing the drug, when the prescription was filled with a generic equivalent. The cause of action should be negligent misrepresentation, not strict liability, under which the manufacturer would have no duty to warn with respect to another manufacturer's product (see § 190.171).The argument may arise in several procedural contexts, including an appeal from a judgment of dismissal after granting a motion for summary judgment [see, e.g., Conte v. Wyeth, Inc. (2008) 168 Cal. App. 4th 89, 94-95, 85 Cal. Rptr. 3d 299] .

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue that the defendant prescription drug manufacturer owed a duty of ordinary care with respect to a person who was injured by ingesting a generic version of the defendant's drug.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should describe the warning defendant provided for the drug, explain how plaintiff's physician relied on that warning when prescribing the drug, and discuss how plaintiff was injured by consuming a generic version of the drug.

[b] Related Points and Authorities

For points and authorities relating to negligent misrepresentation in general, see Ch. 105, Fraud .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Name-Brand Drug Manufacturer's Duty of Care in Disseminating Product Information Extends to Persons Injured by Generic Version When Physician Relied on Information in Prescribing Drug

In Conte v. Wyeth, Inc. (2008) 168 Cal. App. 4th 89, 85 Cal. Rptr. 3d 299 , the plaintiff developed tardive dyskinesia after taking metoclopramide, the generic version of the prescription drug Reglan, for almost four years. She filed suit against several defendants. Her fraud by concealment and negligent misrepresentation claims against the name-brand manufacturer alleged that the defendant knew or should have known of the widespread tendency among physicians to prescribe the drug for longer than one year, even though it is approved for only 12 weeks of use, and gave misleading or false warnings about the drug's side effects. The trial court granted summary judgment in favor of the name-brand manufacturer on two grounds: (1) the plaintiff could not show that her physician relied upon the product labeling provided by the defendant, and (2) a name-brand manufacturer owes no duty to persons who take only generic versions of the drug.

The court of appeal reversed. It held that a name-brand drug manufacturer's duty to use due care when providing product warnings extends to persons whose physicians foreseeably rely on its product information when prescribing a medication, even if the prescription is filled with a generic version of the drug. The court further held that a material factual dispute existed as to whether the plaintiff's physician relied on the name-brand manufacturer's product information.

Although the physician stated in his declaration that he did not rely on any of the defendant's product information in formulating his course of treatment, he also testified that he "probably" read the defendant's monograph on Reglan during his residency and that he generally refers to the PDR when considering whether to prescribe Reglan. This was sufficient to create a factual dispute on the reliance element.

The court next rejected the defendant's contention that plaintiff's claim was in reality a strict products liability lawsuit disguised as a fraud and misrepresentation action, precluding recovery because the defendant did not manufacture or sell the drug that injured her. The plaintiff did not contend that inadequate warnings made the drug unreasonably dangerous. Rather, she claimed that defendant failed to use due care when disseminating its product information (Cal. App. 4th 89, 94-95).

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
B. Negligence

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.199

§ 190.199 Supporting Contention That Seller of Services Breached Duty of Ordinary Care [Civ. Code § 1714(a)]--Seller of Services May Be Liable on Negligence Theory, Although Not Liable on Strict Products Theory

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

ALTHOUGH DEFENDANT _____ [name], A SELLER OF SERVICES, MAY NOT BE HELD LIABLE UNDER A STRICT LIABILITY THEORY, DEFENDANT SHOULD BE HELD LIABLE FOR PLAINTIFF'S INJURIES CAUSED BY DEFENDANT'S _____ [NEGLIGENT and/or INTENTIONAL] ACTS.

Liability of Seller of Services. Although those who sell their services for the guidance of others in their economic, financial, or personal affairs may not be held strictly liable for resulting injuries, they may be held liable for negligence or intentional misconduct (see Gagne v. Bertran (1954) 43 Cal. 2d 481, 487, 275 P.2d 15 ; Carmichael v. Reitz (1971) 17 Cal. App. 3d 958, 978, 95 Cal. Rptr. 381).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a person engaged in selling services for the guidance of the economic, financial, or personal affairs of another may be held liable for negligent or intentional misconduct, although he or she cannot be held liable under a theory of strict liability. This form may be combined with general forms of contention supporting the existence of the elements of a negligence action [see Ch. 165, Negligence].

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that a person engaged in selling services may be held liable for negligence or intentional acts. The argument may arise in several procedural contexts, including opposing a motion for nonsuit [see, e.g., Carmichael v. Reitz (1971) 17 Cal. App. 3d 958, 95 Cal. Rptr. 381] . These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss facts showing that defendant negligently performed services that were sold to the plaintiff, and that plaintiff was injured by defendant's negligent acts or omissions.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a discussion and forms for use in actions involving negligence in general, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender). For a discussion and forms for use in products liability actions based on strict liability, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 460, Products Liability (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Points and Authorities

For points and authorities relating to actions for negligence in general, see Ch. 165, Negligence .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Liability of Seller of Services

In Gagne v. Bertran (1954) 43 Cal. 2d 481, 275 P.2d 15 , plaintiff filed an action against defendant based on breach of warranty, deceit, and negligence. Plaintiff had hired defendant to perform soil tests on two unimproved lots that plaintiff had contracted to buy. Defendant reported concerning the amount of fill on the lots and plaintiff, in reliance on defendant's report, purchased the lots and began constructing a building on them. After construction was underway, plaintiff discovered that defendant's findings were incorrect. Plaintiff incurred increased construction costs as a result, and sued defendant to recover these costs. The trial court returned a judgment against defendant, and he appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed, holding that plaintiff had not proven any injuries resulting from defendant's report. Discussing the causes of action against defendant, the Court said that defendant could not be held liable under a theory of strict liability of a warranty because persons who sell their services for the guidance of others in their economic, financial, or personal affairs are not liable in the absence of negligence or intentional misconduct (43 Cal. 2d 481, 487) . The Court did hold, however, that the evidence at trial supported the causes of action for deceit and negligence (487-490).

Carmichael v. Reitz (1971) 17 Cal. App. 3d 958, 95 Cal. Rptr. 381 , involved an action by a women against two doctors, a medical clinic and a drug manufacturer for damages for pulmonary embolisms and thrombophlebitis she suffered after taking the drug Enovid. The trial court granted a nonsuit as to the doctors and the medical clinic, and the jury returned a verdict in favor of the drug manufacturer. Plaintiff appealed the nonsuit in favor of one of the doctors, and the judgment in favor of the manufacturer.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court disagreed with plaintiff's theory that the doctor should be held strictly liable for her injuries as a retailer of the drug. Acknowledging that strict liability is no longer restricted to purely sales transactions, the court nevertheless held that a distinction must be made between a transaction in which the primary purpose is acquisition or use of a product, and one in which the primary purpose is to obtain services. The essence of the relationship between a physician and a patient is the physician's professional services. The court concluded that a person who sells services for the guidance of others will not be held liable in the absence of negligence or intentional misconduct (43 Cal. 2d 481) . The court held that there was insufficient evidence to go to the jury on the theory of negligence (43 Cal. 2d 481) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
B. Negligence

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.199A

§ 190.199A Supporting Contention That Defendant Breached Duty of Ordinary Care [Civ. Code § 1714(a)]--Designing, Distribution, and Marketing of Firearms and Ammunition

[1] Form

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief. It may be combined with a general form supporting the contention that defendant breached its duty of care (see, e.g., Ch. 165, Negligence).]

DEFENDANT _____ [name] IS LIABLE FOR PLAINTIFF'S INJURIES BECAUSE DEFENDANT BREACHED THE DUTY TO USE ORDINARY CARE AND SKILL WITH RESPECT TO THE DESIGNING, DISTRIBUTION, OR MARKETING OF FIREARMS AND AMMUNITION.

Designing, Distribution, and Marketing of Firearms and Ammunition Are Not Exempt From Duty to Use Care. The designing, distribution, and marketing of firearms and ammunition are not exempt from the duty to use ordinary care and skill (Civ. Code § 1714(a)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that the defendant is liable for the plaintiff's damages as a result of the failure to exercise reasonable care with respect to the design, distribution, or marketing of firearms and ammunition.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue that the defendant is liable to the plaintiff for injuries resulting from firearms or ammunition. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should discuss the acts of the defendant with respect to the design, distribution, or marketing of firearms and ammunition that plaintiff contends makes the defendant liable under the provisions of Civ. Code § 1714(a).

[c] Related Points and Authorities

For points and authorities related to former Civ. Code § 1714.4(a), see § 190.241.

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
B. Negligence

2-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.199B

§ 190.199B Opposing Contention That Defendant Is Liable for Negligence in Products Liability Action--Defendant Did Not Breach Duty of Ordinary Care

[1] FORM

The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief. It may be combined with a general form opposing the contention that defendant breached its duty of care (see Ch. 165, Negligence).]

DEFENDANT SHOULD NOT BE HELD LIABLE FOR NEGLIGENTLY _____ [MANUFACTURING and/or SELLING and/or SUPPLYING] _____ [specify product] BECAUSE PLAINTIFF DID NOT SHOW THAT DEFENDANT BREACHED ITS DUTY OF CARE.

A. Proof of Breach of Duty of Care Is Required Element of Negligence. A plaintiff must show that the defendant breached its duty of care to prevail on a negligence claim (Merrill v. Navegar, Inc. (2001) 26 Cal. 4th 465, 477, 110 Cal.Rptr. 2d 370, 28 P.3d 1161 ; Gonzalez v. Autoliv ASP, Inc. (2007) 154 Cal. App. 4th 780, 793, 64 Cal. Rptr. 3d 908).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that defendant is liability in negligence in a products liability action.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the defendant is not liable in negligence. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the point of law stated. For example, counsel should show that the plaintiff did not identify any specific breach of a duty of care on the part of the defendant.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Proof of Breach of Duty of Care Is Required Element of Negligence

Merrill v. Navegar, Inc. (2001) 26 Cal. 4th 465, 477, 110 Cal.Rptr. 2d 370, 28 P.3d 1161 is discussed in § 190.241[3][a].

The facts and procedural background of Gonzalez v. Autoliv ASP, Inc. (2007) 154 Cal. App. 4th 780, 64 Cal. Rptr. 3d 908 , are discussed in § 190.74[3][b]. The court of appeal held that the plaintiff did not identify a specific breach of duty of care on the part of the defendant to withstand summary judgment (154 Cal. App. 4th 780, 793-794) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
B. Negligence

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.200

§ 190.200 Opposing Contention That Manufacturer Breached Duty of Ordinary Care [Civ. Code § 1714(a)]--Defect Could Not Be Discovered by Reasonable Inspection

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief. It may be combined with a general form opposing the contention that defendant breached its duty of care (see Ch. 165, Negligence).]

DEFENDANT SHOULD NOT BE HELD LIABLE FOR FAILURE TO INSPECT ITS PRODUCT BECAUSE A REASONABLE INSPECTION WOULD NOT HAVE REVEALED THE DEFECT THAT CAUSED PLAINTIFF'S INJURIES.

Defect Must Be Discoverable. When there is no evidence that an examination or inspection of the product would have revealed the existence of any defect, the defendant will not be held liable. A defendant is not responsible for defects that cannot be found by a reasonable, practicable inspection (Trust v. Arden Farms Co. (1958) 50 Cal. 2d 217, 220, 324 P.2d 583).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that defendant was negligent in manufacturing the product because he or she failed to make a reasonable inspection. The ground for the contention is that a reasonable inspection would not have revealed the defect. This argument may arise in several procedural contexts, including supporting a motion for nonsuit or a motion for summary judgment [see, e.g., Trust v. Arden Farms Co. (1958) 50 Cal. 2d 217, 324 P.2d 583 (nonsuit)].

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue of no liability for failure to inspect a product if the defect causing plaintiff's injuries could not have been discovered by a reasonable inspection. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should show that plaintiff has failed to present evidence showing that a defect existed in the product, or showing that a reasonable inspection would have revealed the defect that caused plaintiff's injuries.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities in § 190.191.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a discussion and forms for use in actions involving negligence in general, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender). For a discussion and forms for use in products liability actions based on strict liability, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 460, Products Liability (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Points and Authorities

For points and authorities relating to actions for negligence in general, see Ch. 165, Negligence .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Defect Must Be Discoverable

In Trust v. Arden Farms Co. (1958) 50 Cal. 2d 217, 324 P.2d 583 , plaintiff was injured when a milk bottle she was setting down on her drainboard broke, cutting her wrist. She filed suit against the manufacturer of the bottle and against the milk company that filled the bottle and delivered the milk to her. The trial court granted a nonsuit in favor of both defendants and plaintiff appealed.

The Supreme Court affirmed. Noting that the record showed there was a total absence of any evidence of negligence on the part of either defendant, the Court said that the mere breaking of the bottle cannot give rise to an inference that defendant was negligent in failing to discover the defect. In regard to the dairy's liability, the Court said that while it may have had a duty to examine the bottles, it was not responsible for defects that could not be found by a reasonable, practicable inspection (50 Cal. 2d 217, 220) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
B. Negligence

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.201

§ 190.201 Opposing Contention That Manufacturer Breached Duty of Ordinary Care [Civ. Code § 1714(a)]--Product Was Misused by User and Misuse Was Not Reasonably Foreseeable at Time Product Was Manufactured

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief. It may be combined with a general form opposing the contention that defendant breached its duty of care (see Ch. 165, Negligence).]

DEFENDANT _____ [name] SHOULD NOT BE HELD LIABLE FOR NEGLIGENTLY DESIGNING THE _____ [specify product] BECAUSE PLAINTIFF'S INJURIES WERE CAUSED BY THE MISUSE OF THE PRODUCT BY _____ [name of user and/or third party] AND THE MISUSE WAS NOT REASONABLY FORESEEABLE AT THE TIME THE PRODUCT WAS MANUFACTURED.

A. Misuse Not Foreseeable at Time of Manufacture. Although a manufacturer may have had knowledge at the time of an accident that its product was being misused, that fact cannot retroactively create a design defect in the product that was unforeseeable at the time of the original manufacture [and installation] (Sanders v. Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Ry. Co. (1977) 65 Cal. App. 3d 630, 652, 135 Cal. Rptr. 555).

[Optional] B. No Duty to Repair or Recall Product if Manufactured According to Purchaser's Specifications and Not Dangerous When Properly Used. In the absence of any proof that a manufacturer knew of possible misuse of a product at the time of its manufacture, when the product was made to the purchaser's specifications and those specifications called for a product that could only become inherently dangerous if not properly used, and when the purchaser installed, used, maintained, and repaired the product, the manufacturer did not have any duty to repair or recall the product (Sanders v. Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Ry. Co. (1977) 65 Cal. App. 3d 630, 652, 135 Cal. Rptr. 555).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that defendant negligently designed a product, making it unsafe for its intended use, when plaintiff's injuries were caused by the unforeseeable misuse of the product by either the user or a third party. This argument may arise in several procedural contexts. For example, defendant might raise this argument in an appeal of a judgment against it, after its motion for nonsuit was denied [see, e.g., Sanders v. Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Ry. Co. (1977) 65 Cal. App. 3d 630, 135 Cal. Rptr. 555] .

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue of unforeseeable misuse. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should present facts showing how the product was misused, the types of misuse defendant had protected against, and how the misuse involved was not foreseeable.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities in § 190.192.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Misuse Not Foreseeable at Time of Manufacture

In Sanders v. Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Ry. Co. (1977) 65 Cal. App. 3d 630, 135 Cal. Rptr. 555 , plaintiff railroad employee was injured when the divider door on a boxcar he was unloading fell on him. Plaintiff filed suit for damages against the railroad that owned the boxcar and against the shipper. Plaintiff recovered damages of $250,000 against the shipper, and the shipper cross complained for indemnity against both the railroad and the manufacturer. After settling prior to trial, the railroad cross complained for indemnity against the manufacturer of the door. After trial on the principal action, the jury made a special finding that the shipper was guilty of passive negligence, and the court entered judgment based on that finding. The trial court also found that the railroad and manufacturer were actively negligent. Following trial on the cross complaints, the trial court entered judgment apportioning the amount of damages against the shipper between the shipper, the railroad, and the manufacturer. All defendants appealed.

The court of appeal reversed the judgment apportioning liability of the shipper, remanded for proceedings not inconsistent with its opinion, and dismissed appeals from the judgment entered on the special finding as nonappealable. The court further held that there was insufficient evidence to impose liability on the manufacturer of the door. The court noted that the door was manufactured to the railroad's specifications, and the railroad was responsible for installing, using, repairing, and maintaining it. Although there was evidence presented that the fall of the divider door resulted from the abuse to which it had been subjected over a period of time, and that at the time of the accident the manufacturer was aware of prior problems with the doors attributable to this abuse, the court held that this knowledge could not retroactively create a design defect in the product that was unforeseeable at the time of the original manufacture and installation (65 Cal. App. 3d 630, 652) .

[b] No Duty to Repair or Recall Product if Manufactured According to Purchaser's Specifications and Not Dangerous When Properly Used

The facts and procedural background of Sanders v. Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Ry. Co. (1977) 65 Cal. App. 3d 630, 135 Cal. Rptr. 555 , are discussed in § 190.201[3][a]. The court stated that in the absence of any proof of knowledge of misuse at the time of manufacture, when the product was made to the purchaser's specifications and those specifications called for a product that could only become inherently dangerous if not properly used, and when the purchaser installed, used, maintained, and repaired the product, defendant had no duty to repair or recall its product (65 Cal. App. 3d 630, 652) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
B. Negligence

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.202

§ 190.202 Opposing Contention That Manufacturer Breached Duty of Ordinary Care [Civ. Code § 1714(a)]--No Duty to Warn During Declared State of Emergency

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief. It may be combined with a general form opposing the contention that defendant breached its duty of care (see Ch. 165, Negligence).]

DEFENDANT _____ [name] SHOULD NOT BE HELD LIABLE FOR FAILURE TO PROVIDE ADEQUATE WARNINGS OF DANGERS INHERENT IN USE OF DEFENDANT'S PRODUCT BECAUSE THE GOVERNMENT DECLARED A STATE OF EMERGENCY PURSUANT TO GOVERNMENT CODE SECTION 8550 ET SEQ. AND A MANUFACTURER HAS NO DUTY TO WARN OR OTHERWISE INTERVENE IN A DECLARED STATE OF EMERGENCY.

No Duty to Warn in Declared State of Emergency. A manufacturer has no duty to warn, or otherwise intervene, in a declared state of emergency even after becoming aware of certain alleged deficiencies in the State's warnings (Macias v. State of California (1995) 10 Cal. 4th 844, 856-858, 42 Cal. Rptr. 2d 592, 897 P.2d 530).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that the defendant was negligent in manufacturing a product because of a failure to issue adequate warnings of dangers inherent in the manufacturer's product. The ground for the contention is that a manufacturer has no common-law duty to warn in a declared state of emergency.

This form may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue of no liability for failure to warn. It may be used in connection with a pretrial motion, such as a demurrer, or motion for summary judgment. It may also be used in a trial or appellate brief.

In an appropriate case, this form may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities in § 190.193.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a discussion and forms for use in actions involving negligence in general, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender). For a discussion and forms for use in products liability actions based on strict liability, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 460, Products Liability (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Points and Authorities

For points and authorities relating to actions for negligence in general, see Ch. 165, Negligence .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Duty to Warn in Declared State of Emergency

In Macias v. State of California (1995) 10 Cal. 4th 844, 42 Cal. Rptr. 2d 592, 897 P.2d 530 , plaintiffs filed a suit against malathion manufacturers seeking damages for injuries allegedly sustained through helicopter spraying of the insecticide malathion based on the manufacturers' negligence in failing to provide a complete warning of dangers inherent in the use of this insecticide. The spraying was part of the State of California's effort to eradicate the Medfly after the Governor declared a state of emergency under the Emergency Services Act (Gov. Code § 8550 et seq.) due to the danger Medfly infestations posed for California's agricultural industry.

The trial court granted defendants' motion for summary judgment, holding that the manufacturers had no duty to warn the general public of risks because they reasonably relied on the State to provide warnings to residents of the area being sprayed. The court of appeal reversed because it determined that the question of whether the defendants "reasonably relied" on the State's warnings presented a material question of fact. Defendants' petitioned for review by the California Supreme Court.

The California Supreme Court reversed. The Court ruled that the court of appeal failed to consider the significance of the fact that the malathion was used by the State acting pursuant to a declared agricultural emergency. The Court found that Gov. Code § 8550 envisions that the State centrally coordinate and command its response to a public emergency. To judicially impose a private duty to disseminate warnings that supplement those issued by the State would represent an unwarranted intrusion in the State's sovereign authority and could severely compromise the State's efforts to deal with the crisis. In addition, the manufacturers had no duty to second-guess the information conveyed by the State even after becoming aware of alleged problems with the State's warnings. The manufacturers were not negligent in that they had no duty to warn plaintiffs or otherwise intervene in the Medfly eradication project (10 Cal. 4th 844, 856-860) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
B. Negligence

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.203

§ 190.203 Opposing Contention That Manufacturer Breached Duty of Ordinary Care [Civ. Code § 1714(a)]--No Duty to Warn of Rare, Idiosyncratic, Hypersensitive, or Unusual Reactions

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum or points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief. It may be combined with a general form opposing the contention that defendant breached its duty of care (see Ch. 165, Negligence).]

DEFENDANT _____ [name] SHOULD NOT BE HELD LIABLE FOR FAILURE TO PROVIDE ADEQUATE WARNINGS OF DANGERS INHERENT IN USE OF DEFENDANT'S PRODUCT BECAUSE THERE IS NO DUTY TO WARN OF THE POSSIBILITY OF RARE, IDIOSYNCRATIC, OR UNUSUAL REACTIONS TO AN OTHERWISE SAFE AND USEFUL PRODUCT.

No Duty to Warn of Possibility of Rare, Idiosyncratic, or Unusual Reactions to Otherwise Safe and Useful Product.

A defendant has no duty to warn of the possibility of rare, idiosyncratic, or unusual reactions to an otherwise safe and useful product (Friedman v. Merck & Co. (2003) 107 Cal. App. 4th 454, 131 Cal. Rptr. 2d 885).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a product seller was negligent because of it failed to issue adequate warnings of dangers inherent in the product. The ground for the contention is that a seller has no common law duty to warn of the possibility of rare, idiosyncratic, hypersensitive, or unusual reactions to an otherwise safe and useful product.

This form may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue of no liability for failure to warn. It may be used in connection with a pretrial motion, such as a demurrer, or motion for summary judgment. It may also be used in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a discussion and forms for use in actions involving negligence in general, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender). For a discussion and forms for use in products liability actions based on strict liability, see Ch. 460, Products Liability (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Duty to Warn of Possibility of Rare, Idiosyncratic, or Unusual Reactions to Otherwise Safe and Useful Product.

In Friedman v. Merck & Co. (2003) 107 Cal. App. 4th 454, 131 Cal. Rptr. 2d 885 , plaintiff was required to undergo a TB test as a condition to his receiving employment. He told his prospective employer that he could not submit to the test if it contained animal products. The employer asked the defendants whether the TB test contained animal products. The defendants replied that the TB test was "Vegan safe," and this information was relayed to the plaintiff. After submitting to the TB test, the plaintiff learned that he had been injected with bovine serum as part of the test. Plaintiff brought an action claiming injuries to his nervous system and severe mental pain and anguish. The trial court sustained defendants' demurrers to plaintiff's negligence and negligent infliction of emotional distress causes of action, finding that defendants owed no duty to the plaintiff.

The court of appeal affirmed. It found that the TB test was a safe and useful product, and that this plaintiff's injury arose because of his particular sincerely held beliefs as a strict ethical vegan. Citing Restatement (Second) of Torts § 402A, comment j, the court noted that there is no duty to warn of the possibility of rare, idiosyncratic, or unusual reactions to an otherwise useful product. It concluded that the TB test distributor's negligent failure to warn that the test contained animal products was not sufficiently likely to result in serious harm to a sufficiently appreciable segment of the general public to justify the imposition of a duty to warn on the defendants. Nor did the defendants, by voluntarily responding to the employer's inquiry, assume a duty to exercise care for plaintiff's emotional condition. The plaintiff thus failed to state a cause of action for negligence or negligent infliction of emotional distress.

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
B. Negligence

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.204

§ 190.204 Opposing Contention That Seller of Product Breached Duty of Ordinary Care [Civ. Code § 1714(a)]--Seller Had No Duty to Test or Inspect Product

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief. It may be combined with a general form opposing the contention that defendant breached its duty of care (see Ch. 165, Negligence).]

DEFENDANT _____ [name] IS NOT LIABLE FOR PLAINTIFF'S INJURIES BECAUSE DEFENDANT, AS SELLER OF THE _____ [specify product], _____ [ONLY HAD A DUTY TO CONDUCT REASONABLE INSPECTIONS AND TESTS OF THE PRODUCT, WHICH HE/SHE/IT PERFORMED and/or HAD NO DUTY TO CONDUCT AN INSPECTION WHEN THE NATURE OF THE PRODUCT PRECLUDED INSPECTION and/or HAD NO DUTY TO INSPECT A PACKAGED PRODUCT and/or HAD NO DUTY TO INSPECT A VEHICLE SOLD TO A DEALER].

A. Defective Condition Could Not Be Discovered by Reasonable Inspection or Test. Liability is imposed on a seller only if the defective condition of the part could have been discovered by reasonable inspection and tests (Post v. Alameda Amusement Co. (1953) 117 Cal. App. 2d 588, 592, 256 P.2d 580).

[Optional] B. No Duty to Inspect and Test When Nature of Product Precludes Inspection. The duty to use reasonable care in testing and inspecting a product depends on the circumstances of the particular case. A defendant will not be held liable for failure to conduct a reasonable inspection when the nature of the product precludes the inspection (see, e.g., Post v. Alameda Amusement Co. (1953) 117 Cal. App. 2d 588, 592, 256 P.2d 580).

[Optional] C. No Duty to Inspect Packaged Product. The law does not impose a duty of inspection to discover latent defects on the wholesaler and retailer of packaged articles in which they deal (Gobin v. Avenue Food Mart (1960) 178 Cal. App. 2d 345, 347, 2 Cal. Rptr. 822).

[Optional] D. No Duty to Inspect Vehicle Sold to Dealer. A party is expressly relieved from the obligation to inspect or repair a new or used vehicle when the vehicle is sold to a dealer (Veh. Code § 24007; see Fruehauf Corp. v. Lakeside Chevrolet Co. (1981) 117 Cal. App. 3d 783, 789, 173 Cal. Rptr. 55).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that defendant owed and breached the duty to test and inspect a product prior to sale. Optional Paragraphs B and C may be used if the nature of the particular product precludes a duty to inspect. These arguments may arise in several procedural contexts, including in opposition to an appeal by plaintiff from a summary judgment in favor of the seller [see, e.g., Fruehauf Corp. v. Lakeside Chevrolet Co. (1981) 117 Cal. App. 3d 783, 173 Cal. Rptr. 55] .

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue that the seller did not have a duty to inspect or test the product. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should discuss the nature of the product and the requisite duty defendant had to make a reasonable test or inspection of the product, and the facts showing that defendant satisfied that duty.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities in §§ 190.190 and 190.195.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a discussion and forms for use in actions involving negligence in general, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender). For a discussion and forms for use in products liability actions based on strict liability, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 460, Products Liability (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Points and Authorities

For points and authorities relating to actions for negligence in general, see Ch. 165, Negligence .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Defective Condition Could Not Be Discovered by Reasonable Inspection or Test

In Post v. Alameda Amusement Co. (1953) 117 Cal. App. 2d 588, 256 P.2d 580 , plaintiffs filed an action for damages against a drive-in theater and the manufacturer of an electric car heater for injuries sustained when the heater malfunctioned, causing electric shock and burns on plaintiffs' hands and legs. The evidence showed that the switches on the heaters were manufactured by various firms and assembled into the heater unit by defendant manufacturer, who tested them and then packaged and shipped the heaters to the theater. Each switch bore the approval of the Underwriters' Laboratories, Inc., meaning that it had been passed, checked and approved by the National Board of Fire Underwriters. The theater's electrical engineer prepared installation plans and their electrical contractor installed the heaters. The theater did not take the heaters apart to inspect the switches, as it was standard practice to rely on the Underwriters' label. There was evidence presented that the switch on the heater was defective and caused the accident. The jury returned verdicts in favor of defendant theater, and in favor of plaintiffs and against defendant manufacturer. Plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court said that the evidence showed that the defective condition of the switch could not be dis covered except by opening the heater, which required a special key or screwdriver that only the manufacturer had. Liability is imposed if the defective condition of the part could have been discovered by reasonable inspection and tests. The reasonableness of the inspection and tests used must depend on the circumstances of the particular case. The court noted that the evidence showed that defendant gave the heater such inspection as was possible without taking the heater apart, and as a matter of law it could not be said that defendant theater did not exercise reasonable care (117 Cal. App. 2d 588, 592) .

[b] No Duty to Inspect and Test When Nature of Product Precludes Inspection

The facts and procedural background of Post v. Alameda Amusement Co. (1953) 117 Cal. App. 2d 588, 256 P.2d 580 , are discussed in § 190.204[3][a]. In affirming a verdict in favor of defendant theater, the court of appeal noted that the duty to use reasonable care in testing and inspecting a product depends on the circumstances of the particular case. A defendant will not be held liable for failure to conduct a reasonable inspection when the nature of the product precludes the inspection (117 Cal. App. 2d 588, 592) .

[c] No Duty to Inspect Packaged Product

In Gobin v. Avenue Food Mart (1960) 178 Cal. App. 2d 345, 2 Cal. Rptr. 822 , plaintiffs were a 6-year old boy and his mother. The boy sued for injuries incurred when a plastic dart was ejected from its toy gun into his eye, and his mother sued for medical expenses. They sued the food market where the gun and dart were bought, the wholesale toy house that distributed the toy, and the manufacturer under negligence and breach of warranty theories. Plaintiffs' request for instructions as to all defendants on res ipsa loquitur were refused, and the jury returned a verdict in favor of all defendants. Plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The evidence showed that the dart and gun, when they left the manufacturer's hands, were attached to a piece of cardboard and wrapped in a plastic bag stapled at the top, and that there was no evidence that the plastic bag was ever opened or the gun and darts removed until after their purchase. Stating that there was nothing in the evidence to support a res ipsa loquitur instruction as to the wholesaler or retailer, the court concluded that the law does not impose a duty of inspection to discover latent defects on the wholesaler and retailer of packaged articles in which they deal. The court also rejected plaintiffs' reliance on Ybarra v. Spangard (1944) 25 Cal. 2d 486, 154 P.2d 687 . In Ybarra, an unconscious surgery patient was injured by one of the medical defendants to whom he had entrusted his body, but there was no way the patient could prove which defendant had done the negligent act. The court declined to extend the Ybarra doctrine to a case in which a conscious person receives an injury from a known object in a known way (178 Cal. App. 2d 345, 347) .

[d] No Duty to Inspect Vehicle Sold to Dealer

In Fruehauf Corp. v. Lakeside Chevrolet Co. (1981) 117 Cal. App. 3d 783, 173 Cal. Rptr. 55 , a used vehicle dealer was sued for damages for injuries caused by a trailer detaching from a towing vehicle and hitting plaintiffs' car. The trailer was sold by the dealer to a power tool supply company that owned and operated the trailer on the date of the accident. The dealer filed a cross complaint for indemnity and equitable contribution against the prior seller from whom the dealer had purchased the trailer. The prior seller moved for summary judgment, based in part on the provisions of Veh. Code § 24007, which exempts from its inspection and repair requirements any person who sells a vehicle to a dealer. The trial court granted the summary judgment motion and cross complainant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, stating that the prior seller was justified in relying on the provisions of Veh. Code § 24007 to relieve it from liability. The intervention of the dealer relieved the prior seller of any liability to the consumer for negligence, breach of warranty or strict liability. The statute resulted in imposition of full responsibility on the dealer-purchaser for the condition of the vehicle at the time it was sold to the consuming public (117 Cal. App. 3d 783, 789) .

121 of 179 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
B. Negligence

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.204A

§ 190.204A Opposing Contention That Manufacturer or Seller Breached Duty of Ordinary Care--No Duty to Avoid Negligently Causing Emotional Distress to Product Owner Who Lends Defective Product to Family Member

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum or points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief. It may be combined with a general form opposing the contention that defendant breached its duty of care (see Ch. 165, Negligence).]

DEFENDANT _____ [name] IS NOT LIABLE FOR PLAINTIFF'S EMOTIONAL DISTRESS BECAUSE DEFENDANT, AS MANUFACTURER/SELLER OF _____ [specify product], HAD NO DUTY TO AVOID NEGLIGENTLY CAUSING EMOTIONAL DISTRESS TO A PRODUCT OWNER WHO LENDS A DEFECTIVE, INJURY-CAUSING PRODUCT TO A FAMILY MEMBER.

No Duty to Avoid Negligently Causing Emotional Distress to Owners Who Lend Defective Products to Family Members. A manufacturer or seller has no duty to avoid negligently causing emotional distress to a product owner who lends a defective product to a family member, who is then injured out of the owner's presence using the defective product (Gu v. BMW of N. Am., LLC (2005) 132 Cal. App. 4th 195, 206-210, 33 Cal. Rptr. 3d 617).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that the defendant is liable for emotional distress caused by its breach of the duty to market and sell a product that is safe for its purchaser and foreseeable users.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue that the defendant owed no duty to avoid negligently causing emotional distress to the product owner. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should discuss the nature of the product, the circumstances of the family member's accident and injury, and that the plaintiff did not witness the accident.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a discussion and forms for use in actions involving negligence in general, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For points and authorities relating to actions for negligence in general, see Ch. 165, Negligence .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Duty to Avoid Negligently Causing Emotional Distress to Owners Who Lend Defective Products to Family Members

In Gu v. BMW of N. Am., LLC (2005) 132 Cal. App. 4th 195, 33 Cal. Rptr. 3d 617 , the plaintiff's sister was involved in a fatal accident while driving the plaintiff's automobile. The plaintiff was not a passenger in the vehicle and did not witness the accident. Nevertheless, she brought a cause of action against the manufacturer of the automobile for negligent infliction of emotional distress. She claimed that she suffered emotional distress as the direct victim of the defendant's negligence in failing to use due care in the design and manufacture of the vehicle's head protection system. The trial court sustained the defendant's demurrer without leave to amend. The court of appeal affirmed, concluding that the defendant owed no duty to the plaintiff that would allow her to recover for emotional distress on the theory that she, as the owner of the vehicle, was the direct victim of the defendant's alleged negligence. The court rejected the plaintiff's contention that the defendant's relationship with the plaintiff as the purchaser of one of its automobiles gave rise to a duty of care to the plaintiff. Because the plaintiff had been outside the range of potential danger at the time of the accident, the defendant owed her no duty of care. Moreover, her lending the automobile to a family member did not constitute "use" of the automobile. The court also rejected the plaintiff's contention that a special relationship sufficient to give rise to a duty of care arose by virtue of the purchase agreement for the automobile. Nor did a duty not to cause plaintiff emotional distress arise under Civ. Code § 1714. Finally, the court pointed out that expanding liability of product manufacturers to the extent urged by the plaintiff would increase insurance costs and the demands for payment from the pool of available funds (132 Cal. App. 4th 195, 206-210) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
B. Negligence

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.205

§ 190.205 Opposing Contention That Lender Breached Duty of Ordinary Care to Third Person [Civ. Code § 1714(a)]--Lender Did Not Act Outside Scope of Regular Activities and Was Not Party to Misrepresentation [Civ. Code § 3434]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief. It may be combined with a general form opposing the contention that defendant breached its duty of care (see Ch. 165, Negligence).]

DEFENDANT _____ [name], AS A LENDER OF MONEY TO _____ [name], THE BORROWER, SHOULD NOT BE HELD LIABLE TO PLAINTIFF(S) _____ [name(s)] FOR ANY DEFECTS IN THE _____ [REAL and/or PERSONAL] PROPERTY INVOLVED IN THIS ACTION THAT WAS _____ [DESIGNED and/or MANUFACTURED and/or CONSTRUCTED and/or REPAIRED and/or MODIFIED and/or IMPROVED] BY BORROWER THROUGH THE LOAN PROCEEDS BECAUSE PLAINTIFF'S LOSS OR DAMAGES DID NOT RESULT FROM AN ACT BY DEFENDANT OUTSIDE THE SCOPE OF THE ACTIVITIES OF A LENDER OF MONEY, AND BECAUSE DEFENDANT HAS NOT BEEN A PARTY TO ANY MISREPRESENTATIONS WITH RESPECT TO THE PROPERTY.

A. Lender Did Not Act Outside Scope of Lender's Activities and Not Party to Any Misrepresentations. A lender who makes a loan of money, the proceeds of which are used or may be used by the borrower to finance the design, manufacture, construction, repair, modification, or improvement of real or personal property for the sale or lease to others, shall not be held liable to third persons for any loss or damage occasioned by any defect in the real or personal property or for any loss or damage resulting from the failure of the borrower to use due care in the design, manufacture, construction, repair, modification, or improvement of the property, unless the loss or damage is a result of an act of the lender outside the scope of the activities of a lender of money, or unless the lender has been a party to misrepresentations with respect to the property (Civ. Code § 3434; Fox & Carskadon Financial Corp. v. San Francisco Fed. Sav. & Loan Assn. (1975) 52 Cal. App. 3d 484, 489).

B. Intent of Legislature to Define Lender's Duty of Due Care. It is the intent of the legislature in Section 3434 of the Civil Code to define when a duty of care is placed on a financial institution for failures on the part of borrowers, and it cannot be expanded to grant relief on a negligence theory (Fox & Carskadon Financial Corp. v. San Francisco Fed. Sav. & Loan Assn. (1975) 52 Cal. App. 3d 484, 488).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a lender of money is liable for loss or damages to third persons resulting from the failure of a borrower to use due care in using loan proceeds to design, manufacture, construct, repair, modify, or improve real or personal property, or from any defect in such property. The ground for opposition is that the lender did not act outside the scope of the activities of a lender and has not been a party to misrepresentations regarding the property [see Civ. Code § 3434]. This argument may arise in several procedural contexts, including in responding to an appeal by plaintiff from a summary judgment for defendant [see, e.g., Fox & Carskadon Financial Corp. v. San Francisco Fed. Sav. & Loan Assn. (1975) 52 Cal. App. 3d 484] .

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue that a lender is not liable to third persons for loss or damages resulting from defects in real or personal property. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should discuss the acts that defendant lender performed, pointing out that all these acts were within the scope of a lender of money, and that none of these acts constitute a misrepresentation about the property [see Civ. Code § 3434].

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities in § 190.198.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a discussion and forms for use in actions involving negligence in general, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender). For a discussion and forms for use in products liability actions based on strict liability, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 460, Products Liability (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Points and Authorities

For points and authorities relating to actions for negligence in general, see Ch. 165, Negligence .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Lender Did Not Act Outside Scope of Lender's Activities and Not Party to Any Misrepresentations.

In Fox & Carskadon Financial Corp. v. San Francisco Fed. Sav. & Loan Assn. (1975) 52 Cal. App. 3d 484 , plaintiffs, a real estate brokerage corporation and a limited partnership formed by the brokerage corporation, brought an action against a savings and loan association alleging that the association owed them a duty of care in making a construction loan to an apartment building developer. Plaintiffs had agreed to buy the apartment project from the developer. When defendant foreclosed its trust deed securing the construction loan, plaintiffs lost their equity in the project. Defendant's motion for summary judgment was granted, and plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, stating that Civ. Code § 3434 could not be expanded to grant plaintiffs relief on a negligence theory. In support of the holding that defendant owed plaintiffs no duty of care, the court noted that defendant's participation in the project was limited to that of a conventional construction lender with no interest in whether the project made a profit, that it could not foresee the harm to plaintiffs because it had previously done extensive business with the developer and had experienced no difficulty, that the connection between defendant's conduct and plaintiffs' injury was remote, and that there was no moral blame attached to defendant's actions as plaintiffs were in a position to protect themselves from the loss (52 Cal. App. 3d 484, 489) .

[b] Intent of Legislature to Define Lender's Duty of Due Care

The facts and procedural background of Fox & Carskadon Financial Corp. v. San Francisco Fed. Sav. & Loan Assn. (1975) 52 Cal. App. 3d 484 , are discussed in § 190.205[3][a]. In rejecting plaintiffs' assertion that its situation was analagous to the homeowners in Connor v. Great W, Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1968) 69 Cal. 2d 850, 864-865, 870, 73 Cal. Rptr. 369, 447 P.2d 609 [see § 190.191[3][d]], the court of appeal noted that Civ. Code § 3434 was enacted shortly after the Connor decision and that its intent is to define when a duty of care is placed on a financial institution for failures on the part of borrowers. The court ruled that to grant plaintiffs relief on a negligence theory would be to expand lender liability beyond the legislature's implied limit (52 Cal. App. 3d 484, 488) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
B. Negligence

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.206

§ 190.206 Opposing Contention That Researcher Breached Duty of Ordinary Care to Third Person [Civ. Code § 1714(a)]--Research Activity For Manufacturer Does Not Create Duty Supporting Negligent Undertaking Claim

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities opposing the contention that defendant breached its duty of care (see Ch. 165, Negligence).]

DEFENDANT, _____ [specify name], SHOULD NOT BE HELD LIABLE FOR NEGLIGENTLY PERFORMING AN UNDERTAKING OWED THE PLAINTIFF BECAUSE DEFENDANT'S RESEARCH ACTIVITIES DO NOT CREATE A DUTY TO ENSURE SAFETY OF MANUFACTURER'S PRODUCTS.

Research Activity For Manufacturer Does Not Create Duty For Negligent Undertaking Claim. Those who perform research for a manufacturer do not owe a duty to third parties for injuries caused by the manufacturer's products (Artiglio v. Corning Inc. (1998) 18 Cal. 4th 604, 618, 76 Cal. Rptr. 2d 479, 957 P.2d 1313).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a defendant researcher owes a duty of care to third parties injured by a manufacturer's product. The ground of opposition is that the plaintiffs will not be able to establish a negligent undertaking claim because the defendant's research activities do not create a duty of care towards the manufacturer's customers. The researcher did not undertake to ensure the safety of the manufacturer's products.

The form may be combined with other points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a demurrer or motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication on the issue that defendant is subject to strict liability. The form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should state facts showing that the risk of injury was unforeseeable, for example, because many years had elapsed between the research activities and the alleged injuries [Artiglio v. Corning, Inc. (1998) 18 Cal. 4th 604, 618,6 Cal. Rptr. 2d 479, 957 P.2d 1313] .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Research Activity For Manufacturer Does Not Create Duty For Negligent Undertaking Claim

In Artiglio v. Corning, Inc. (1998) 18 Cal. 4th 604, 6 Cal. Rptr. 2d 479, 957 P.2d 1313 , plaintiffs alleged that they suffered personal injuries caused by silicone breast implants. The plaintiffs pleaded many causes of action, including negligence. The trial court granted defendant's motion for summary judgment on the negligence claim on the ground that the defendant owed plaintiffs no duty of care. The court of appeal affirmed, rejecting plaintiffs' argument that the defendant had engaged in an undertaking that created a duty of care (also known as the "Good Samaritan" doctrine). The plaintiffs had alleged that a subsidiary of the manufacturer (Dow Chemical) had assumed a duty of care by conducting silicone toxicology research in the 1940s and 1950s (18 Cal. 4th 604, 612) .

The Supreme Court affirmed. One of the key issues in a negligent undertaking claim is whether the activities of the defendant constitute an "undertaking" that produces a correlative duty of care owed to a third party. The "Good Samaritan" duty is limited and does not continue indefinitely. In this case, while the defendant (Dow Chemical) had performed silicone toxicology research for a manufacturer of medical products, which theoretically implicated the protection of third-party patients, the Court concluded that the research activities were too attenuated and remote to create a duty of care. Many years had elapsed between the research activities and the alleged injuries. In addition, trademark and trade name agreements did not constitute a general undertaking by Dow Chemical to guarantee the safety of the parent corporation's silicone product line (18 Cal. 4th 604, 618) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
B. Negligence

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.207

§ 190.207 Opposing Contention That Product Certifier Breached Duty of Care [Civ. Code § 1714(a)]--U.L Did Not Undertake to Test For and Certify Against Medical Risks of Asbestos

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum or points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief. It may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities opposing the contention that defendant breached its duty of care (see Ch. 165, "Negligence," Part 1).]

DEFENDANT, _____[specify name of product certifier], SHOULD NOT BE HELD LIABLE FOR NEGLIGENTLY PERFORMING AN UNDERTAKING OWED TO THE _____ [insert PLAINTIFF or DECEDENT] BECAUSE BY TESTING _____ [specify products] AND CERTIFYING THEM AS SAFE, IT DID NOT UNDERTAKE TO GUARANTEE _____ [insert PLAINTIFF'S or DECEDENT'S] SAFETY FROM CANCER-CAUSING ASBESTOS.

Defendant Did Not Undertake to Guarantee Plaintiff's Safety From Cancer-Causing Asbestos By Testing and Certifying Appliances As Safe. A product certifier does not undertake to test for and certify safety from the medical risks of asbestos through its process of testing small appliances and certifying them as safe from injury from fire, electrical shock, or sharp objects (Dekens v. Underwriters Labs. Inc. (2003) 107 Cal. App. 4th 1177, 132 Cal. Rptr. 2d 699, 704-707) .

[1] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a defendant product certifier owes a duty of care to persons injured by a manufacturer's products. The ground of opposition is that the plaintiff is unable to establish a negligent undertaking claim because the product certifier did not undertake to test for and certify safety from the medical risks of asbestos through its process of testing small appliances and certifying them as safe from injury from fire, electrical shock, or sharp objects.

The form may be combined with other points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of negligence. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a demurrer or motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication on the issue that defendant is liable in negligence. The form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing a relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should state facts showing that the defendant never tested or certified appliances for medical risks associated with asbestos or represented that any appliance was safe from asbestos injuries.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Defendant Did Not Undertake to Guarantee Plaintiff's Safety From Cancer-Causing Asbestos By Testing and Certifying Appliances As Safe.

In Dekens v. Underwriters Labs. Inc. (2003) 107 Cal. App. 4th 1177, 132 Cal. Rptr. 2d 699, 704-707 , the decedent developed mesothelioma after working for more than 35 years repairing small appliances, some of which contained asbestos. Plaintiffs brought a wrongful death action against several defendants, including Underwriters Laboratories Inc. (U.L.). The trial court granted U.L.'s motion for summary judgment on the ground that U.L. had certified the appliances for electrical safety and did not assume the responsibility of telling consumers whether the product was safe or unsafe because of asbestos.

The court of appeal affirmed, rejecting plaintiffs' claim that by testing small appliances and certifying them as safe, U.L. had undertaken to guarantee the decedent's safety from illness resulting from his exposure to asbestos while repairing those small appliances. U.L. successfully negated the element of an undertaking by presenting evidence that it testing and certified small appliances for safety from fire, shock, and injuries from sharp objects, not for the medical risks associated with asbestos. Moreover, it never made a representation that any small appliance was safe with respect to asbestos. Plaintiff's evidence--which included the depositions of former U.L. employees, a CPSC report listing hair dryers as containing asbestos, and pages from U.L.'s website--was insufficient to establish a triable issue as to whether U.L. tested or certified the medical safety of consumer products containing asbestos.

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
B. Negligence

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.208

§ 190.208 Opposing Contention That Publisher Has Duty to Investigate Advertised Product--Publisher Did Not Endorse Product

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities opposing the contention that defendant owed and breached a duty to plaintiff.]

DEFENDANT _____ [name], AS A PUBLISHER, HAD NO DUTY TO INVESTIGATE THE ADVERTISED PRODUCT THAT CAUSED PLAINTIFF'S INJURIES BECAUSE DEFENDANT DID NOT ENDORSE THE PRODUCT FOR ECONOMIC GAIN NOR FOR THE PURPOSE OF INDUCING THE PUBLIC TO BUY IT.

A. Nonendorsing Publisher Has No Duty to Investigate Advertised Product. A publisher that advertises a product but in no way sponsors or endorses the product for its own economic gain or for the purpose of inducing the public to buy it, has no duty to investigate the product, and is not subject to a products liability action for injuries caused by use of the product (Walters v. Seventeen Magazine (1987) 195 Cal. App. 3d 1119, 1121-1122, 241 Cal. Rptr. 101).

B. Mere Advertising Is Constitutionally Protected Activity. Mere advertisement is protected commercial speech under the First Amendment (Walters v. Seventeen Magazine (1987) 195 Cal. App. 3d 1119, 1121-1122, 241 Cal. Rptr. 101).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a defendant owes a duty to a plaintiff who was injured by a product that the defendant, as a publisher, advertised but did not endorse for its own economic gain or for the purpose of inducing the public to buy it [see Walters v. Seventeen Magazine (1987) 195 Cal. App. 3d

1119, 1121-1122, 241 Cal. Rptr. 101] .

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue that an advertiser is not liable to the user of a product that it did not endorse. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a demurrer to the complaint. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Therefore, counsel should set forth facts showing that defendant in no way endorsed the product, profited economically from it, nor induced the public to buy it.

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities in § 190.197.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Nonendorsing Publisher Has No Duty to Investigate Advertised Product

In Walters v. Seventeen Magazine (1987) 195 Cal. App. 3d 1119 , 241 Cal. Rptr. 101 , a woman brought an action against a magazine publisher and its parent company for injuries sustained when she used a product advertised in the magazine. Plaintiff had read an advertisement for a particular tampon, used that product, and contracted toxic shock syndrome. The complaint alleged negligence, products liability, breach of warranty, conspiracy, fraudulent advertising, and associated theories. The defendants had not endorsed the product. Defendants demurred on the ground that a publisher does not warrant products it advertises, has no duty to investigate them, and cannot be held liable for defective products unless it endorses a product for economic gain and for the purpose of inducing the public to buy it. The defendant publisher also claimed protection for commercial speech under the First Amendment. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that a publisher that in no way sponsors or endorses products, and does not represent the quality, promote, or attempt to induce the public to buy a product, is not subject to products liability for injuries caused by the product. The court distinguished the holding in Hanberry v. Hearst Corp. (1969) 276 Cal. App. 2d 680, 81 Cal. Rptr. 519 , which stated that a publisher that endorsed a product in its magazine was liable for injuries caused by the use of the product [see § 190.197[3][a]]. In Hanberry, the publisher had endorsed the product for its own gain, and for the purpose of encouraging the public to buy it. It also in effect loaned its reputation to promote and induce the sale of the product (by affixing the "Good Housekeeping Seal" to the advertisement). In doing so, the publisher placed itself in the position in which public policy imposes on it the duty to use ordinary care in the issuance of its certification of quality so that members of the consuming public who rely on its endorsement are not unreasonably exposed to the risk of harm (195 Cal. App. 3d 1119, 1121) . The court noted that the court in Hanberry limited the plaintiff's cause of action to one for negligent misrepresentation, rejecting alternate theories of warranty and products liability, on the ground that those theories do not extend to one not directly involved in manufacturing products for, or supplying products to, the consuming public. The court found Hanberry inapposite because the publisher in the case before the court did not in any way sponsor or endorse the advertised product, and there was no representation of quality, no promotional effort, and no attempt to induce the public to buy the product beyond merely printing the advertisement. The court rejected plaintiff's argument that the advertisements were indistinguishable from feature articles, implying an endorsement to the immature reader. The court found that the advertisements were in fact easily distinguishable from feature articles. The court stated an unwillingness to create a new tort of negligent failure to investigate the safety of an advertised product. That tort would require publications to maintain huge staffs scrutinizing and testing each product offered. The enormous cost of testing, and skyrocketing insurance rates, would deter many magazines from accepting advertising, hastening their demise from lack of revenue. Publications that complied would need to raise their prices beyond the reach of the average consumer, or would fail because of tort judgments. The court noted that these reasons support the United States Supreme Court's vigilance about linking commercial speech to the First Amendment (195 Cal. App. 3d 1119, 1122) .

[b] Mere Advertising Is Constitutionally Protected Activity

Walters v. Seventeen Magazine (1987) 195 Cal. App. 3d 1119, 241 Cal. Rptr. 101 , is discussed in § 190.208[3][a].

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
B. Negligence

19-190 California Points & Authorities §§ 190.209-190.219

[Reserved]

§§ 190.209[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
C. Damages

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.220

§ 190.220 Supporting Contention That Plaintiff Is Entitled to Purely Economic Damages--Economic Damages Available on Negligence Theory if J'Aire Factors Met

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities supporting the contention that defendant is liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product (see, e.g., § 190.223)].

DEFENDANT _____ [name] IS LIABLE TO PLAINTIFF FOR PURELY ECONOMIC DAMAGES BECAUSE _____ [specify transaction, intent of plaintiff in entering into transaction, and defendant's knowledge of plaintiff's intent, if applicable, e.g., PLAINTIFF PURCHASED CANS FROM DEFENDANT THAT DEFENDANT KNEW PLAINTIFF INTENDED TO USE AS CONTAINERS IN WHICH TO PACK PLAINTIFF'S FOODS FOR SALE TO A THIRD PARTY PURSUANT TO A BUSINESS CONTRACT]; DEFENDANT SHOULD HAVE REASONABLY FORESEEN THAT _____ [specify result that was reasonably foreseeable, e.g., IF DEFENDANT DID NOT SUPPLY PLAINTIFF WITH THE CANS, PLAINTIFF WOULD NOT BE ABLE TO FULFILL ITS BUSINESS CONTRACT WITH THE THIRD PARTY AND THAT PLAINTIFF WOULD SUFFER ECONOMIC LOSSES]; PLAINTIFF IN FACT SUFFERED ECONOMIC LOSSES BECAUSE _____ [specify cause of economic losses, e.g., THE CANS DELIVERED TO PLAINTIFF BY DEFENDANT HAD CORRODED AND WERE UNUSABLE]; DEFENDANT, AS _____ [specify defendant's role in marketing chain, e.g., MANUFACTURER AND SELLER] OF THE DEFECTIVE _____ [specify product, e.g., CANS], WAS CLOSELY CONNECTED TO PLAINTIFF'S ECONOMIC LOSS; DEFENDANT IS MORALLY TO BLAME BECAUSE _____ [specify moral blame, e.g., IT SHIPPED DEFECTIVE GOODS That, HAD THEY BEEN USED AS CONTAINERS FOR PLAINTIFF'S FOODS, WOULD HAVE BEEN HAZARDOUS TO THE HEALTH OF THE ULTIMATE CONSUMERS OF PLAINTIFF'S PRODUCT]; AND PUBLIC POLICY WARRANTS IMPOSING LIABILITY BECAUSE _____ [specify public policy reason for imposing liability, e.g., CONTAINER MANUFACTURERS SHOULD BEAR THE ECONOMIC LOSS OF DEFECTIVE AND POTENTIALLY DANGEROUS CANS THAT WOULD OTHERWISE BE USED TO PACK FOODS DESTINED TO BE PURCHASED AND EATEN BY HAPLESS CONSUMERS].

A. Economic Damages Are Recoverable in Negligence Action. A plaintiff may bring an action based in negligence against a defendant to recover purely economic damages caused by a defective product, so long as the plaintiff is able to prove that the risk of harm was reasonably foreseeable and was closely connected with the defendant's conduct and that the damages were not wholly speculative, nor the injury part of the plaintiff's ordinary business risk (Huang v. Garner (1984) 157 Cal. App. 3d 404, 420, 203 Cal. Rptr. 800 ; see J'Aire Corp. v. Gregory (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 799, 808, 157 Cal. Rptr. 407, 598 P.2d 60).

WARNING:

In Aas v. Superior Court (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 627, 648-649, 101 Cal. Rptr. 2d 718, 12 P.3d 1125 [see § 190.224[3][a]], the Supreme Court expressly disapproved Huang to the extent it was inconsistent with the views set out in that opinion.

B. Six-Part Balancing Test for Determining Recoverability of Economic Damages. The six-part balancing test adopted in J'Aire Corp. v. Gregory (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 799, 157 Cal. Rptr. 407, 598 P.2d 60 , from Biakanja v. Irving (1958) 49 Cal. 2d 647, 320 P.2d 16 , is employed in a negligence action against a defendant to recover purely economic damages caused by a defective product, to determine whether the plaintiff is entitled to recover those damages. Specifically, the trial court will examine (1) the extent to which the transaction was intended to affect the plaintiff, (2) the foreseeability of harm to the plaintiff, (3) the degree of certainty that the plaintiff would suffer injury, (4) the closeness of the connection between the defendant's conduct and the injury sustained, (5) the moral blame attaching to the defendant's conduct, and (6) the policy and need of preventing future harm (Ales-Peratis Foods Int'l, Inc. v. American Can Co. (1985) 164 Cal. App. 3d 277, 286, 209 Cal. Rptr. 917 ; Huang v. Garner (1984) 157 Cal. App. 3d 404, 423, 203 Cal. Rptr. 800 ; see J'Aire Corp. v. Gregory (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 799, 804, 157 Cal. Rptr. 407, 598 P.2d 60 ; Biakanja v. Irving (1958) 49 Cal. 2d 647, 650, 320 P.2d 16).

WARNING:

In Aas v. Superior Court (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 627, 648-649, 101 Cal. Rptr. 2d 718, 12 P.3d 1125 [see § 190.224[3][a]], the Supreme Court expressly disapproved Huang to the extent it was inconsistent with the views set out in that opinion.

[2] Comments

CAUTION:

One court of appeal has rendered a contrary decision, at least if the transaction involves merchants governed by the California Uniform Commercial Code [see Sacramento Reg'l Transit Dist. v. Grumman Flxible (1984) 158 Cal. App. 3d 289, 204 Cal. Rptr. 736 ; see also § 190.220[4][a]].

CAUTION:

In Aas v. Superior Court (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 627, 645-646, 101 Cal. Rptr. 2d 718, 12 P.3d 1125 , [see § 190.224[3][a]], the Supreme Court determined that homeowners and a homeowners association could not recover in negligence from the developer, contractor, and subcontractors who built their dwellings for construction defects that have not caused property damage. Focusing on the third factor in J'Aire, which looks to "the degree of certainty that the plaintiff suffered injury ...," the court noted that construction defects that have not ripened into property damage, or at least involuntary out-of-pocket losses, do not comfortably fit the definition of "appreciable harm"--an essential element of a negligence claim. The court further stated that it did not believe that the J'Aire court intended to dispense with the rule that appreciable, nonspeculative, present injury is an essential element of a tort cause of action.

However, effective January 1, 2003, there is a limited new cause of action in California for certain specified housing defects, Cal. Civ. Code § 895 et seq. The Right to Repair Act (the Act) established building standards pertaining to new residential construction and provides homeowners with a cause of action against builders and individual product manufacturers for violation of those standards. Cal. Civ. Code §§ 896, 936.

A court of appeal stated that the Act abrogated the economic loss rule in such as case, thereby legislatively superseding Aas. Greystone Homes, Inc. v. Midtec, Inc. (2008) 168 Cal. App. 4th 1194, 1202, 86 Cal. Rptr. 3d 196 .

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a defendant is liable under a negligence theory for purely economic damages suffered by plaintiff from a defect in defendant's product.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication on the issue that defendant is subject to negligence liability. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, and in any other relevant points and authorities combined with this form, to show the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should show facts indicating (1) the extent to which the transaction was intended to affect plaintiff, (2) the foreseeability of harm to plaintiff, (3) the degree of certainty that plaintiff suffered injury, (4) the closeness of the connection between defendant's conduct and the injury suffered, (5) the moral blame attached to defendant's conduct, and (6) the policy and need of preventing future harm [see, e.g., Ales-Peratis Foods Int'l, Inc. v. American Can Co. (1985) 164 Cal. App. 3d 277, 209 Cal. Rptr. 917 (liability for economic damages suffered when plaintiff was unable to use defective cans purchased from defendant to package and sell plaintiff's seafood); Huang v. Garner (1984) 157 Cal. App. 3d 404, 423, 203 Cal. Rptr. 800 (liability for economic damages suffered when plaintiff purchased defective apartment complex)].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Economic Damages Are Recoverable in Negligence Action

In J'Aire Corp. v. Gregory (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 799, 157 Cal. Rptr. 407, 598 P.2d 60 , plaintiff entered into a contract with defendant to renovate and improve plaintiff's restaurant. Defendant failed to perform its contractual obligations within a reasonable time, and plaintiff suffered loss of business and loss of profits as a result. Plaintiff brought an action against defendant for economic damages, and defendant demurred to the complaint. The trial court sustained the demurrer without leave to amend, and dismissed the complaint. Plaintiff appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed the judgment of dismissal, holding that under the facts presented, a cause of action for negligent loss of expected economic advantage may be maintained. The Court stated that a plaintiff's interest in prospective economic advantage may be protected against injury occasioned by negligent as well as intentional conduct. Even when only an injury to prospective economic advantage is claimed, recovery is not foreclosed, so long as on balance, the facts indicate that recovery is appropriate. To determine the appropriateness of recovery, the Court applied the six-part balancing test as previously announced in Biakanja v. Irving (1958) 49 Cal. 2d 647, 650, 320 P.2d 16 . Specifically, this test involves the examination of (1) the extent to which the transaction was intended to affect the plaintiff, (2) the foreseeability of harm to the plaintiff, (3) the degree of certainty the plaintiff would suffer injury, (4) the closeness of the connection between the defendant's conduct and the injury sustained, (5) the moral blame attaching to the defendant's conduct, and (6) the policy of preventing future harm. The Court explained that these factors, as applied in subsequent cases, will place a limit on recovery by focusing judicial attention on the foreseeability of the injury and the nexus between defendant's conduct and plaintiff's injury. Thus, recovery for negligent interference with prospective economic advantage is limited to instances in which the risk of harm is foreseeable and is closely connected with defendant's conduct, and in which damages are not wholly speculative, and the injury is not part of plaintiff's ordinary business risk (24 Cal. 3d 799, 803-808) .

CAUTION:

One court of appeal has rendered a contrary decision, at least regarding transactions that involve merchants governed by the California Uniform Commercial Code (the UCC). In Sacramento Reg'l Transit Dist. v. Grumman Flxible (1984) 158 Cal. App. 3d 289, 204 Cal. Rptr. 736 , plaintiff, who operated a fleet of buses as public mass transportation, purchased 103 new buses from defendant manufacturer. After delivery, plaintiff discovered that 26 of the buses had cracked fuel tank supports. Plaintiff also discovered that other parts of other buses were damaged. Plaintiff had the buses repaired and restored to service. Plaintiff then filed an action in strict liability and negligence against defendant. Defendant demurred, contending that plaintiff sought only economic damages, which were not recoverable under either theory. The trial court sustained the demurrer and dismissed the action, and plaintiff appealed. The court of appeal affirmed, holding that neither a strict liability nor a negligence action could be maintained for purely economic damages caused by a defective product. The court refused to apply the J'Aire balancing test, noting that transactions involving the construction or modification of structures, such as that involved in J'Aire, are generally not governed by the UCC, which applies to transactions involving movable goods. The court explained that the judicial creation of a tort remedy for economic loss caused by the negligence of a builder of a structure poses no conflict with the law of sales as set forth in the UCC, but that the creation of a tort remedy in a case in which the UCC does govern would pose a conflict with the purposes of that code. Thus, the court concluded that in this case, the provisions of the UCC rather than tort law should govern the commercial affairs of plaintiff and defendant merchants, including any economic loss caused by a defective product [Sacramento Reg'l Transit Dist. v. Grumman Flxible (1984) 158 Cal. App. 3d 289, 298-300, 204 Cal. Rptr. 736 ; see also § 190.224].

[b] Six-Part Balancing Test for Determining Recoverability of Economic Damages

J'Aire Corp. v. Gregory (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 799, 157 Cal. Rptr. 407, 598 P.2d 60 , is discussed in § 190.220[3][a].

In Biakanja v. Irving (1958) 49 Cal. 2d 647, 320 P.2d 16 , defendant, a notary public, prepared a will for plaintiff's brother that was denied probate because it was not properly attested. Plaintiff, who would have received all of her brother's property under the will, received only one-eighth of the estate by intestate succession. Plaintiff brought an action against defendant based in negligence, even though plaintiff was not in privity of contract with defendant. The jury returned a verdict in favor of plaintiff, and defendant appealed.

The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment, holding that plaintiff was entitled to recovery despite the absence of privity. The Court explained that determining whether a defendant will be held liable to a third person not in privity is a matter of policy and involves the balancing of various factors, among which are the extent to which the transaction was intended to affect the plaintiff, the foreseeability of harm to him or her, the degree of certainty that plaintiff suffered injury, the closeness of the connection between defendant's conduct and the injury suffered, the moral blame attached to defendant's conduct, and the policy of preventing future harm (49 Cal. 2d 647, 650-651) .

In Ales-Peratis Foods Int'l, Inc. v. American Can Co. (1985) 164 Cal. App. 3d 277, 209 Cal. Rptr. 917 , plaintiff, a buyer, packager, and seller of seafood, purchased cans manufactured by defendant for use in plaintiff's business. When the cans were delivered, plaintiff discovered that they had corroded and were not usable. As a result, plaintiff lost the opportunity to can a large quantity of abalone, and lost a contract for the sale of the abalone. Plaintiff then brought an action in negligence to recover economic losses suffered because of plaintiff's inability to use the cans. Defendant moved for summary judgment, on the grounds that California law does not permit tort recovery for economic loss alone. The trial court granted the judgment, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that although it is unclear whether recovery for purely economic damages may still not be available in a strict liability cause of action, they may at least be available under certain circumstances in a negligence cause of action. Because plaintiff did not pursue recovery on a strict liability theory, the court did not reach the issue of whether J'Aire had also changed the rule prohibiting recovery for economic losses under a strict liability theory. However, the court held that the six-part balancing test of J'Aire and Biakanja v. Irving (1958) 49 Cal. 2d 647, 320 P.2d 16 , may be applied in a products liability action based in negligence. Specifically, the six-part test examines (1) the extent to which the transaction was intended to affect the plaintiff, (2) the foreseeability of harm to the plaintiff, (3) the degree of certainty the plaintiff would suffer injury, (4) the closeness of the connection between the defendant's conduct and the injury sustained, (5) the moral blame attaching to the defendant's conduct, and (6) the need to prevent future harm. In applying the test to this case, the court found that: (1) plaintiff's contract with defendant was for defendant to supply plaintiff with cans that defendant knew plaintiff needed to execute a business contract to supply a product to be placed in the cans; (2) defendant could have reasonably foreseen that if it did not fulfill its contract with plaintiff, plaintiff could not fulfill its contract with a third party; (3) because defendant did not properly perform its contract with plaintiff, plaintiff was prevented from fulfilling its contract with the third party;, (4) the close connection between defendant's acts and the damages suffered was pleaded and patent; (5) moral blame attached to defendant because it shipped defective goods which, if plaintiff had used, would have been hazardous to the health of the ultimate consumers of plaintiff's product; and (6) cause of the close connection between plaintiff and defendant and the high degree of foreseeability of economic harm, public policy warranted imposing liability (164 Cal. App. 3d 277, 281-291) .

The facts and procedural background of Huang v. Garner (1984) 157 Cal. App. 3d 404, 203 Cal. Rptr. 800 , are discussed in §§ 190.28[3][a] and 190.220[4][a]. The court applied the six-part test of J'Aire and Biakanja and found that: (1) the developer owed a duty of reasonable care to those who subsequently purchased the defective housing structure, regardless of whether those purchasers lived in the building or used it for investment purposes; (2) it was foreseeable that construction defects would damage subsequent purchasers and residents of the property; (3) failure to comply with the building code presented potential risk of harm to later purchasers; (4) the defects caused the injuries suffered by plaintiffs; (5) the violation of building code standards involved sufficient moral blame; and (6) the public policy of preventing future harm would be served by penalizing the violation of the building code (157 Cal. App. 3d 404, 424-425) .

WARNING:

In Aas v. Superior Court (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 627, 648-649, 101 Cal. Rptr. 2d 718, 12 P.3d 1125 [see § 190.224[3][a]], the Supreme Court expressly disapproved Huang to the extent it was inconsistent with the views set out in that opinion.

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Economic Damages Are Recoverable in Negligence Action

In Pisano v. American Leasing (1983) 146 Cal. App. 3d 194, 194 Cal. Rptr. 77 , plaintiff purchased a sanding machine to use in his cabinetmaking business. The sander was defective and damaged the wooden cabinets he had contracted to construct for a third party. Plaintiff brought an action in strict liability, negligence, and breach of warranty against the sander's manufacturer. Defendant moved for summary judgment, contending that plaintiff cannot recover damages for economic loss and that plaintiff could not recover under the warranty theory because plaintiff had not relied on any express warranties. The trial court granted the motion, and plaintiff appealed. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment with regard to the warranty cause of action but reversed with regard to the strict liability and negligence causes of action. The court held that because plaintiff's property had been damaged, those causes of action may be brought. The court also held that under the negligence theory, plaintiff could seek recovery for both physical damage and economic losses. However, under the strict liability theory, plaintiff could seek recovery only for damages to his cabinet and could not seek damage for economic losses (146 Cal. App. 3d 194, 196-197) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
C. Damages

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.221

§ 190.221 Supporting Contention That Plaintiff Is Entitled to Recover in Tort When Product Defect Causes Damage to "Other Property"--Economic Loss Rule Does Not Preclude Recovery for Damage to Another Part of Product

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities supporting the contention that defendant is liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product.]

DEFENDANT _____ [name] IS STRICTLY LIABLE TO PLAINTIFF BECAUSE DEFECT IN DEFENDANT'S PRODUCT CAUSED DAMAGE TO "OTHER PROPERTY"--THAT IS, PROPERTY OTHER THAN THE PRODUCT ITSELF.

A. Economic Loss Rule Allows Plaintiff to Recover in Strict Products Liability When Product Defect Causes Damage to Other Property. The economic loss rule allows a plaintiff to recover in strict products liability in tort when a product defect causes damage to "other property"--that is, property other than the product itself (Jimenez v. Superior Court (2002) 29 Cal. 4th 473, 481-484, 127 Cal. Rptr. 2d 614, 58 P.3d 450).

B. Economic Loss Rule Does Not Necessarily Bar Recovery in Tort for Damage That Defective Product Causes to Other Portions of Larger Product. The economic loss rule does not necessarily bar recovery in tort for damage that a defective product, for example, a window, causes to other portions of a larger product, for example, a house (Jimenez v. Superior Court (2002) 29 Cal. 4th 473, 481-484, 127 Cal. Rptr. 2d 614, 58 P.3d 450).

C. Manufacturer of Defective Window May Be Strictly Liable for Damage Caused to Other Parts of Home. The manufacturer of a defective window installed in a mass-produced home may be strictly liable in tort for damage that the window's defect causes to other parts of the home in which it is installed (Jimenez v. Superior Court (2002) 29 Cal. 4th 473, 483, 127 Cal. Rptr. 2d 614, 58 P.3d 450).

D. Distinguishing Between "Other Property" and Defective Product Itself Requires Determination of Whether Defective Part Is Discrete Element. Distinguishing between "other property" and the defective product itself in a case involving component-to-component damage requires a determination of whether the defective part is a sufficiently discrete element of the larger product that it is not reasonable to expect that its failure will invariably damage other portions of the finished product (KB Home v. Superior Court (2003) 112 Cal. App. 4th 1076, 1087, 5 Cal. Rptr. 3d 587).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that the defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's damages when defendant's product damages property other than the product itself.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Economic Loss Rule Allows Plaintiff to Recover in Strict Liability When Product Defect Causes Damage to Other Property

In Jimenez v. Superior Court (2002) 29 Cal. 4th 473, 127 Cal. Rptr. 2d 614, 58 P.3d 450 , owners of a mass-produced home in a development brought claims alleging that defective windows caused property damage. The trial court granted the window manufacturers' motions for summary judgment. The court of appeal issued a writ directing the court to vacate its order.

The Supreme Court affirmed. After holding that manufacturers of windows installed in mass-produced home can be strictly liable for harm resulting from defects from the windows, the court held that the manufacturers may be strictly liable in tort for resulting physical damage to other parts of the house. It explained that the economic loss rule does not necessarily bar recovery in tort for damage that a defective product causes to other portions of a larger product into which the former had been incorporated. In construction cases, the rule does not bar recovery in tort if the plaintiff produces evidence of damage to other property, which may include other portions of the structure. In so holding, the court explicitly rejected the defense contention that the "product" was the entire house, and that damage caused to other parts of the house was damage to the product itself (29 Cal. 4th 473, 481-484) .

[b] Economic Loss Rule Does Not Necessarily Bar Recovery in Tort for Damage That Defective Product Causes to Other Portions of Larger Product

Jimenez v. Superior Court (2002) 29 Cal. 4th 473, 127 Cal. Rptr. 2d 614, 58 P.3d 450 , is discussed in § 190.221[3][a].

[c] Manufacturer of Defective Window May Be Strictly Liable for Damage Caused to Other Parts of Home

Jimenez v. Superior Court (2002) 29 Cal. 4th 473, 127 Cal. Rptr. 2d 614, 58 P.3d 450 , is discussed in § 190.221[3][a].

[d] Distinguishing Between "Other Property" and Defective Product Itself Requires Determination of Whether Defective Part Is Discrete Element

In KB Home v. Superior Court (2003) 112 Cal. App. 4th 1076, 5 Cal. Rptr. 3d 587 , the plaintiff installed about 2,200 forced air furnaces manufactured by defendant in homes it built. Stainless steel NOx rods installed above the furnaces were defective and damaged other parts of the furnaces. After replacing the rods, plaintiff brought tort claims seeking to recover the cost of repairing and replacing the furnaces. The trial court ruled that the furnace was a single, integrated product and that damage caused by its allegedly defective emissions control device to different component of furnace did not constitute damage to "other property," and that the economic loss rule accordingly barred plaintiff's tort claims. The plaintiff filed a petition for writ of mandate directing the court to vacate its orders. The court of appeal granted the petition, holding that the trial court's ruling deprived plaintiff of its right to have material issues of fact submitted to the jury.

The court explained that to determine the applicability of the economic loss rule, it first had to determine what the product at issue is. The Supreme Court, in Jimenez v. Superior Court, did not provide any direct guidance as to how to make this crucial evaluation. Distinguishing between "other property" and the defective product itself in a case involving component-to-component damage requires a determination whether the defective part is a sufficiently discrete element of the larger product that it is not reasonable to expect its failure invariably to damage other portions of the finished product. Factors that may be properly considered in determining what the product at issue is under that test include: (1) whether the defective component performs an integral function in the operation of the larger product; (2) whether the component has any independent use to the consumer; (3) how related the property damage is to the inherent nature of the defect in the component; and (4) whether the component itself or the larger product was placed into the stream of commerce. Resolution of the issue should be left to the trier of fact (112 Cal. App. 4th 1076, 1087) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
C. Damages

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.222

§ 190.222 Supporting Contention That Plaintiff Is Entitled to Recover in Tort--Economic Loss Rule Does Not Bar Fraud or Intentional Misrepresentation Claims That Are Independent of Defendant's Breach of Contract

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities supporting the contention that plaintiff is entitled to recover in tort (see, e.g., § 190.221).]

PLAINTIFF IS ENTITLED TO RECOVER IN TORT FROM DEFENDANT _____ [name] BECAUSE DEFENDANT'S CONDUCT CONSTITUTED FRAUD _____ [AND or OR] INTENTIONAL MISREPRESENTATION THAT IS INDEPENDENT OF DEFENDANT'S BREACH OF CONTRACT.

A. Economic Loss Rule Does Not Necessarily Bar Recovery in Tort for Fraud and Misrepresentation Independent of Breach of Contract. The economic loss rule does not necessarily bar recovery in tort for damages that the plaintiff suffers due to a defective product, if the defendant's acts constituted fraud or intentional misrepresentation that was independent of the defendant's breach of contract (Robinson Helicopter Co. v. Dana Corp. (2004) 34 Cal. 4th 979, 989-992, 22 Cal. Rptr. 3d 352, 102 P.3d 268).

B. Economic Loss Rule Does Not Apply to Any Affirmative Fraud Action Where Plaintiff Can Establish That Fraud Exposed Plaintiff to Liability. The economic loss rule is inapplicable to any affirmative fraud action in which the plaintiff can establish that the fraud exposed the plaintiff to liability (County of Santa Clara v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (2006) 137 Cal. App. 4th 292, 318, 40 Cal. Rptr. 3d 313 , review granted, depublished, 80 Cal. Rptr. 3d 629, 188 P.3d 579, 2008 Cal. LEXIS 9073).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a plaintiff is entitled to recover in tort because the economic loss rule does not preclude damages for fraud or intentional misrepresentation that is independent of the defendant's breach of contract.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting or opposing a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication on the issue of whether the defendant's fraud or misrepresentation was independent of defendant's breach of contract. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form to show the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should show facts indicating that the defendant made affirmative representations that the plaintiff relied on to the plaintiff's detriment.

[b] Related Points and Authorities

For points and authorities relating to the availability of tort damages generally, see Ch. 64, Damages: Tort . For points and authorities relating to fraud generally, see Ch. 105, Fraud and Deceit .

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in § 190.224 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Economic Loss Rule Does Not Necessarily Bar Recovery in Tort for Fraud and Misrepresentation Independent of Breach of Contract

In Robinson Helicopter Co. v. Dana Corp. (2004) 34 Cal. 4th 979, 22 Cal. Rptr. 3d 352, 102 P.3d 268 , the defendant manufactured sprag clutches for the plaintiff's helicopters. The aircraft's FAA type certificate required that each clutch be ground to a specified level of hardness. Without informing the plaintiff or the FAA, the defendant changed its grinding process to a different level, but the defendant continued to provide written certificates that the clutches had been manufactured in conformance with the plaintiff's specifications. The clutches that were ground at the nonconforming level of hardness resulted in several cases of cracked clutch assemblies, requiring the plaintiff to spend over $1.5 million in replacement costs. However, the nonconforming clutches did not result in any injury or property damage. The plaintiff filed suit, alleging fraud and misrepresentation. At trial, the jury found for the plaintiff, and the defendant appealed. The court of appeal applied the economic loss rule and held that the plaintiff could not recover in tort because the plaintiff had suffered only economic losses. The plaintiff sought review by the California Supreme Court, which reversed, holding the economic loss rule did not bar the plaintiff's claims of fraud and intentional misrepresentation and rejecting a broad interpretation of the economic loss rule that would bar tort recovery in every case in which only economic damages occur.

The Court focused its decision solely on the defendant's provision of the false certificates of conformance. It pointed to its previous decision, Erlich v. Menezes (1999) 21 Cal. 4th 543 , in which it stated that conduct amounting to a breach of contract becomes tortious only if it also violates a duty independent of the contract arising from principles of tort law. Among the situations in which tort damages have been permitted in contract cases include a breach of duty that directly causes physical injury. A tortious breach of contract may also occur if the breach is accompanied by a traditional common law tort, such as fraud, or if one party intentionally breaches the contract knowing that the breach will cause severe harm, such as mental anguish, or substantial consequential damages (34 Cal. 4th 979, 989) .

According to the Court, the defendant's issuance of the false certificates of conformance unquestionably constituted affirmative misrepresentations that the plaintiff justifiably relief on to the plaintiff's detriment--that is, the elements of fraud. Therefore, the defendant's tortious conduct was separate from the breach itself (providing the nonconforming clutches). The defendant's provision of faulty clutches also exposed the plaintiff to liability for personal damages and to disciplinary action by the FAA. The Court held that the economic loss rule did not bar the plaintiff's fraud and intentional misrepresentation claims because they were independent of the defendant's breach of contract (34 Cal. 4th 979, 990-991) .

The Court noted that its holding was supported by California's public policy favoring a business climate free of deceptive practices. It dismissed concerns that its decision would open the floodgates to litigation, because the holding was narrow in scope and limited to a defendant's affirmative misrepresentations that a plaintiff relies on and that expose a plaintiff to liability for personal damages independent of the plaintiff's economic loss (34 Cal. 4th 979, 992) .

[b] Economic Loss Rule Does Not Apply to Any Affirmative Fraud Action Where Plaintiff Can Establish That Fraud Exposed Plaintiff to Liability

In County of Santa Clara v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (2006) 137 Cal. App. 4th 292, 40 Cal. Rptr. 3d 313 , review granted, depublished, 80 Cal. Rptr. 3d 629, 188 P.3d 579, 2008 Cal. LEXIS 9073 , governmental entities filed a class action against lead paint and pigment manufacturers alleging, inter alia, fraud. The trial court granted summary judgment in favor of the manufacturers on the products liability and fraud causes of action on statute of limitations grounds. The Court of Appeal reversed.

The court first determined that Robinson Helicopter Co. v. Dana Corp. (2004) 34 Cal. 4th 979, 22 Cal. Rptr. 3d 352, 102 P.3d 268 , discussed in § 190.222[3][a], precludes application of the economic loss rule to any intentional affirmative fraud action where the plaintiff can establish that the fraud exposed the plaintiff to liability, as opposed to only fraud actions that also accompany, but are independent of, breach of contract causes of action. The court found support for its conclusion in the structure of the Robinson opinion. Namely, it was only after the supreme court held that the defendant's conduct constituted a tort independent of its breach of contract that the court addressed the application of the economic loss rule. In the instant case, the municipalities alleged that the manufacturers made affirmative representations about the dangers of exposure to low levels of lead, causing them to delay making timely efforts to prevent and treat low-level lead exposure. This delay resulted in more people being exposed as well as increased the cost of treatment for those who had been exposed. These people might hold the plaintiffs liable for the permanent damage to their bodies. Thus, the plaintiffs' potential liability to persons exposed to lead in their buildings was independent of the economic harm to plaintiffs from the additional costs of prevention and treatment. Thus, the economic loss doctrine did not apply to plaintiffs' fraud cause of action.

The court next concluded that defendants failed to establish that the plaintiffs' fraud cause of action accrued more than three years prior to the filing of the complaint and was thus time-barred under Code Civ. Proc. § 338(d) (137 Cal. App. 4th 292, 328-329) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
C. Damages

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.223

§ 190.223 Supporting Contention That Plaintiff Is Entitled to Punitive Damages [Civ. Code § 3294]--Punitive Damages Available in Strict Products Liability Action

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities supporting the contention that defendant is liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product (see, e.g., §§ 190.220, 190.284)].

PLAINTIFF IS ENTITLED TO RECOVER PUNITIVE DAMAGES FROM DEFENDANT _____ [name] BECAUSE DEFENDANT ACTED DESPICABLY IN PLACING _____ [specify product] ON THE MARKET IN WILLFUL AND CONSCIOUS DISREGARD OF THE SAFETY OF OTHERS.

A. Punitive Damages Available in Products Liability Action When Defendant Consciously Disregards Safety of Others. A plaintiff may recover punitive damages under Section 3294 of the Civil Code in a strict products liability case [based on design defect] against a defendant who has acted despicably with a willful conscious disregard of the safety of others (Civ. Code § 3294(a), (c)(1); see Hasson v. Ford Motor Co. (1982) 32 Cal. 3d 388, 402-403, 185 Cal. Rptr. 654, 650 P.2d 1171 (decided under prior law); Grimshaw v. Ford Motor Co. (1981) 119 Cal. App. 3d 757, 810, 174 Cal. Rptr. 348 (decided under prior law)). A defendant has acted with such conscious disregard when that defendant, aware of the probable dangerous consequences of his or her conduct, willfully and deliberately failed to avoid those consequences (Hasson v. Ford Motor Co. (1982) 32 Cal. 3d 388, 402-403, 185 Cal. Rptr. 654, 650 P.2d 1171 (decided under prior law); Hilliard v. A.H. Robins Co. (1983) 148 Cal. App. 3d 374, 395, 196 Cal. Rptr. 117 (decided under prior law)).

[Optional] B. Conscious Disregard of Probability of Injury to Consuming Public May Prove Conscious Disregard of Safety of Others. Evidence that a defendant's conduct constituted a conscious disregard of the probability of injury to members of the consuming public may prove that the defendant acted with a conscious disregard of the safety of others under the meaning of Section 3294 of the Civil Code (Grimshaw v. Ford Motor Co. (1981) 119 Cal. App. 3d 757, 813, 174 Cal. Rptr. 348 (decided under prior law)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that punitive damages should be imposed on defendant in a strict products liability case.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication on the issue that defendant is subject to punitive damages. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, and in any other relevant points and authorities combined with this form, to show the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should show facts indicating that defendant was aware of the probable dangerous consequences of his or her conduct, and that he or she willfully and deliberately failed to avoid those consequences [see, e.g., Hasson v. Ford Motor Co. (1982) 32 Cal. 3d 388, 185 Cal. Rptr. 654, 650 P.2d 1171 (decided under prior law; defendant placed automobile with defective brakes on market, knowing earlier identical models were defective); Hilliard v. A.H. Robins Co. (1983) 148 Cal. App. 3d 374, 196 Cal. Rptr. 117 (decided under prior law; defendant had reports from employees about wicking hazard of IUD); Grimshaw v. Ford Motor Co. (1981) 119 Cal. App. 3d 757, 174 Cal. Rptr. 348 (decided under prior law; defendant had conducted crash tests that showed dangers of automobile that it subsequently marketed)].

[b] Effect of 1987 Amendment to Civ. Code § 1714

The 1987 amended version of Civ. Code § 3294(c)(1) has changed the definition of malice that is applicable when a defendant's conduct was not intended to cause injury to the plaintiff. Prior to the amendment, such malice was defined as conduct that is carried on by the defendant with conscious disregard of the safety or rights of others. The 1987 amendment added the requirements that the defendant's conduct be "despicable" and that the conduct be carried out with a "willful" as well as conscious disregard of the safety or rights of others. Some of the cases discussed in this form are based on prior law under which the requirements for entitlement to punitive damages were less rigorous than under current law. Counsel should note that the earlier definition of malice is still applicable in any action in which the trial commenced prior to January 1, 1988 [see Civ. Code § 3294(e)].

[c] Related Points and Authorities

For points and authorities relating to the availability of punitive or exemplary damages generally, see Ch. 64, Damages: Tort . For points and authorities relating to the amount of punitive damages in products liability cases, see § 190.223A.

[d] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in § 190.226 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Punitive Damages Available in Products Liability Action When Defendant Consciously Disregards Safety of Others

The facts and procedural background of Hasson v. Ford Motor Co. (1982) 32 Cal. 3d 388, 185 Cal. Rptr. 654, 650 P.2d 1171 (decided under prior law), are discussed in § 190.50[3][a]. The Supreme Court affirmed a judgment imposing punitive damages against an automobile manufacturer for personal injuries sustained by plaintiff when the brakes of the automobile failed, holding that substantial evidence had been presented to support the award. The Court explained that punitive damages were available on a showing of a conscious disregard of the safety of others, which may constitute malice within the meaning of Civ. Code § 3294. The Court noted that in order to justify an award of punitive damages on this basis, plaintiff must establish that defendant was aware of the probable dangerous consequences of his or her conduct, and that he or she willfully and deliberately failed to avoid those consequences. In this case, the Court held that substantial evidence had been introduced that established that defendant had been aware of such consequences but had willfully and deliberately failed to avoid those consequences. Specifically, plaintiff had introduced evidence that defendant had marketed a nearly identical model of the automobile in 1965 that had numerous failures and was similarly defective, yet defendant proceeded to market the 1966 model despite its knowledge of those previous failures (32 Cal. 3d 388, 402-403) .

The facts and procedural background of Grimshaw v. Ford Motor Co. (1981) 119 Cal. App. 3d 757, 174 Cal. Rptr. 348 (decided under prior law), are discussed in § 190.114[3][a]. In affirming the judgment, the court of appeal held that punitive damages were properly imposed on the manufacturer of an automobile that had burst into flames when rear-ended, killing plaintiff's decedent. The court held that even though the case was based on a design defect theory of strict products liability, punitive damages were nevertheless available under Civ. Code § 3294. The court reasoned that the interpretation of the word "malice," as used in Civ. Code § 3294, encompassed conduct evincing the callous and conscious disregard of public safety by those who manufacture and market mass-produced articles, and that such an interpretation was consonant with and furthered the objectives of punitive damages. The court explained that governmental safety standards and the criminal law have failed to provide adequate consumer protection against the manufacture and distribution of defective products, and that punitive damages were the most effective remedy for consumer protection against defectively designed mass-produced articles (119 Cal. App. 3d 757, 810) .

In Hilliard v. A.H. Robins Co. (1983) 148 Cal. App. 3d 374, 196 Cal. Rptr. 117 (decided under prior law), plaintiff suffered severe personal injuries when a Dalkon Shield intrauterine device (IUD), which had been inserted in her, migrated into her pelvic cavity and caused serious infection. Plaintiff brought an action in strict liability, warranty, and negligence against the manufacturer of the IUD and against other defendants. The trial court bifurcated the issue of punitive damages, and the jury returned a general verdict against the defendant manufacturer for general damages but exonerating the other defendants. Defendant manufacturer then moved for a directed verdict on the bifurcated punitive damage issue, which the trial court granted. Both plaintiff and defendant manufacturer appealed.

The court of appeal reversed the directed verdict on the punitive damages issue, but affirmed the remaining portion of the judgment. The court held that plaintiff had presented sufficient evidence of malice for the jury to consider awarding punitive damages, that the trial court erroneously excluded evidence proffered by plaintiff on the issue of punitive damages, and that no other reversible error had been committed. In discussing the punitive damages issue, the court reiterated prior appellate case law that punitive damages may be recovered in a products liability case. Additionally, the court stated that in order to justify an award of punitive damages on the basis of a conscious disregard of the safety of others, plaintiff must establish that defendant was aware of the probable dangerous consequences of its conduct and that it willfully and deliberately failed to avoid those consequences. In this case, plaintiff had presented substantial evidence to establish conscious disregard. Specifically, plaintiff presented evidence showing that defendant had reports from its own employees about a wicking hazard of the IUD, which had caused the migration of the device in plaintiff; that defendant had elected to continue to market the device without changing the product to reduce the wicking effect; that defendant knew of x-ray problems in showing where the IUD was located, such as those experienced by plaintiff, yet did nothing to change the product to alleviate the radiolucency problem; and that defendant knew of a large number of cases of pelvic inflammatory disease and other complications from use of the IUD, yet defendant continued to market the product (148 Cal. App. 3d 374, 397-398) .

[b] Conscious Disregard of Probability of Injury to Consuming Public May Prove Conscious Disregard of Safety of Others

The facts and procedural background of Grimshaw v. Ford Motor Co. (1981) 119 Cal. App. 3d 757, 174 Cal. Rptr. 348 (decided under prior law), are discussed in §§ 190.114[3][a] and 190.223[3][b]. The court of appeal found ample evidence to support a finding of malice to justify imposing punitive damages on defendant manufacturer. Specifically, defendant had conducted crash tests, the results of which showed that the automobile's fuel tank and rear structure would expose consumers to serious injury or death in a 20-30-miles-per-hour collision. Defendant knew of and could have corrected the hazardous design defects at minimal cost, but decided to defer correction of the shortcomings by engaging in a cost-benefit analysis balancing human lives and limbs against corporate profits. The court viewed defendant's institutional mentality as one of callous indifference to public safety. Because substantial evidence had been presented that defendant's conduct constituted conscious disregard of the probability of injury to members of the consuming public, malice under the meaning of Civ. Code § 3294 had been shown and the imposition of punitive damages was proper (119 Cal. App. 3d 757, 813) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Punitive Damages Available in Products Liability Action When Defendant Consciously Disregards Safety of Others

In Vossler v. Richards Mfg. Co. (1983) 143 Cal. App. 3d 952, 192 Cal. Rptr. 219 (decided under prior law), plaintiff sustained personal injuries after being surgically implanted with a prosthetic device that, because of a manufacturing error, did not fit the template for which it was made. The device's manufacturing defect was known to the manufacturer at the time of sale, but was concealed from its sales personnel, the surgeon who designed it, and from the medical profession. Plaintiff brought an action in strict liability against the device's manufacturer. The jury awarded plaintiff both compensatory and punitive damages, and defendant appealed. The court of appeal affirmed the verdict. The court held that the trial court had not committed alleged errors in certain evidentiary rulings, and that jury instructions regarding compensatory and punitive damages were not erroneous. Further, the court held that the award of punitive damages was appropriate under the circumstances, even though the ratio of the punitive damages to the compensatory damages was 20 to 1. The court explained that the punitive damages award was justified because defendant had purposely concealed the discrepancy in size between the medium final component as originally designed and as later produced by defendant from the medical profession, from the device's inventor, and from its own sales personnel, solely to protect its market position. In addition, defendant had further attempted to capitalize on its concealment of its manufacturing error by marketing the originally designed medium-size components as a purportedly new size. The court expressed reservations about applying the "conscious disregard for the safety of others" standard in all products liability cases, because a manufacturer designing a product must take trade-offs in terms of product safety against cost and utility, and the imposition of such a standard may tend to discourage product development. However, the court held that such considerations were not relevant in this case, because the case did not involve a design defect but rather a manufacturing defect of which defendant was aware when it decided to continue to market the product (143 Cal. App. 3d 952, 966-968) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
C. Damages

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.223A

§ 190.223A Supporting Contention That Amount of Punitive Damages Awarded Is Excessive--Constitutional Guideposts

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities supporting the contention that the amount of punitive damages awarded is excessive (see § 190.223).]

THE AMOUNT OF PUNITIVE DAMAGES AWARDED TO PLAINTIFF IS EXCESSIVE UNDER FEDERAL AND STATE CONSTITUTIONAL STANDARDS.

A. Review of Punitive Damages Award Encompasses Three Constitutional "Guideposts." A review of a punitive damages award encompasses the following three constitutional "guideposts": (1) the degree of reprehensibility of the defendant's conduct; (2) the disparity between the actual harm suffered by the plaintiff and the punitive damages award; and (3) the difference between the punitive damages awarded by the jury and the civil penalties authorized or imposed in comparable cases (State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v. Campbell (2003) 538 U.S. 408, 418, 123 S. Ct. 1513, 155 L. Ed. 2d 585 ; BMW of N. Am., Inc. v. Gore (1996) 517 U.S. 559, 575, 116 S. Ct. 1589, 134 L. Ed. 2d 809 ; Bullock v. Philip Morris USA, Inc. (2008) 159 Cal. App. 4th 655, 689) .

B. Factors Guiding Determination of Degree of Reprehensibility. Factors that guide the determination of the degree of reprehensibility are: (1) whether the harm caused was physical as opposed to economic; (2) whether the tortious conduct evinced an indifference to or a reckless disregard of the health or safety of others; (3) whether the target of the conduct was financially vulnerable; (4) whether the conduct involved repeated actions or was an isolated incident; and (5) whether the harm was the result of intentional malice, trickery, or deceit, or was mere accident (State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v. Campbell (2003) 538 U.S. 408, 419, 123 S. Ct. 1513, 155 L. Ed. 2d 585 ; Bullock v. Philip Morris USA, Inc. (2008) 159 Cal. App. 4th 655, 690 ; Boeken v. Philip Morris Inc. (2005) 127 Cal. App. 4th 1640, 1690, 26 Cal. Rptr. 3d 638, 677) .

C. U.S. Supreme Court Cases Do Not Preclude California From Considering Defendant's Recidivism in Assessing Culpability. Due process concerns do not prohibit state courts, in awarding or reviewing punitive damages, from considering the defendant's illegal or wrongful conduct towards others that was similar to the conduct that injured the plaintiff (Johnson v. Ford Motor Co. (2005) 35 Cal. 4th 1191, 29 Cal. Rptr. 3d 401, 113 P.3d 82).

D. Factors to Consider in Determining Whether Punitive Damages Award Is Excessive. Three factors to consider in reviewing whether a punitive damages award is excessive are: (1) the reprehensibility of the acts of the defendant in light of the record as a whole; (2) the amount of compensatory damages awarded; and (3) the wealth of the particular defendant (Boeken v. Philip Morris Inc. (2005) 127 Cal. App. 4th 1640, 1689, 26 Cal. Rptr. 3d 638, 676) .

E. Punitive Damages Previously Awarded for Same Conduct Are Relevant. Punitive damages previously imposed against the defendant for the same conduct in other cases, as well as possible future awards, are relevant in determining the amount of punitive damages required to sufficiently punish and deter, as long as the other cases involve identical issues (Boeken v. Philip Morris Inc. (2005) 127 Cal. App. 4th 1640, 1701, 26 Cal. Rptr. 3d 638, 685) .

F. Due Process Clause Prohibits State From Using Punitive Damages to Punish Defendant For Injury It Inflicted Upon Nonparties. The Due Process Clause forbids a state to use a punitive damages award to punish a defendant for injury that it inflicted upon strangers to the litigation (Philip Morris USA v. Williams (2007) 569 U.S. 346, 127 S. Ct. 1057, 1063, 166 L. Ed. 2d 940 ; Bullock v. Philip Morris USA, Inc. (2008) 159 Cal. App. 4th 655, 692-694 .

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that the punitive damages awarded to the plaintiff in a strict products liability case are excessive under federal and state constitutional standards.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of punitive damages. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a motion for a new trial on the issue of punitive damages. These points and authorities may also be adopted for use in an appellate brief.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form to show the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should show facts indicating that the compensatory damages award was significant, that other punitive damages awards have previously been imposed against the defendant, and that there is the possibility of future punitive damages awards in cases with identical issues [see, e.g., Boeken v. Philip Morris Inc. (2005) 127 Cal. App. 4th 1640, 1692, 26 Cal. Rptr. 3d 638, 678] .

[c] Related Points and Authorities

For points and authorities relating to the plaintiff's entitlement to punitive damages, see § 190.223.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Review of Punitive Damages Award Encompasses Three Constitutional "Guideposts"

In State Farm Mut Auto. Ins. Co. v. Campbell (2003) 538 U.S. 408, 123 S. Ct. 1513, 155 L. Ed. 2d 585 , the U.S. Supreme Court applied the factors set forth in BMW of North America, Inc. v. Gore [BMW of N. Am., Inc. v. Gore (1996) 517 U.S. 559, 575, 116 S. Ct. 1589, 134 L. Ed. 2d 809] , to reverse a $145 million punitive damages award in an insurance bad faith case arising out of a fatal motor vehicle accident. The insurer had refused to settle the wrongful death and tort case against its insureds. The jury ultimately returned a judgment against the insureds for over three times the amount offered in settlement. The insurer at first refused to cover the excess liability, resulting in prolonged litigation among all the parties. The insureds then filed their bad faith, fraud, and emotional distress claim against the insurer. The Utah jury awarded $2.6 million in compensatory damages and $145 million in punitive damages, which the trial court reduced to $1 million and $25 million, respectively. Applying the Gore guideposts, the Utah Supreme Court then reinstated the $145 million punitive damages award.

In a 6 to 3 opinion authored by Justice Kennedy, the U.S. Supreme Court reversed. Reiterating principles set forth in earlier cases governing punitive damages, the Court again expressed its concern over the imprecise manner in which punitive damages systems are administered, especially if the decision maker is presented with irrelevant evidence or vague jury instructions. The Court concluded that this case was neither difficult nor close under the three Gore guideposts.

Addressing the first guidepost, the reprehensibility of the defendant's conduct, the Court found that a more modest punishment could have satisfied the state's legitimate objectives. Instead, the case was improperly used as a platform to expose and punish the perceived deficiencies in the defendant's operations throughout the country. As stated in Gore, the jury should be instructed that it may not use evidence of out-of-state conduct to punish a defendant for conduct that was lawful where it occurred. The Utah court also erred in awarding punitive damages to punish and deter conduct that bore no relation to the insureds' harm--for example, the defendant's investigation into the personal life of one of its employees (538 U.S. 408, 419-424) .

Turning to the second Gore guidepost, the disparity between the actual harm suffered by the plaintiff and the punitive damages award, the Court again declined to impose a bright-line ratio that a punitive damages award cannot exceed. It pointed out, however, that in practice, few awards exceeding a single-digit ratio between punitive damages and compensatory damages will satisfy due process. Noting that the case did not involve any physical assault or trauma, and that the compensatory damages award was substantial, the Court found that there was a presumption against the 145-to-1 ratio between the punitive damages and compensatory damages awards (538 U.S. 408, 424-428) .

The court only briefly addressed the third Gore guidepost, the difference between the punitive damages awarded and the civil penalties authorized in similar cases. The Court noted that a $10,000 fine for an act for fraud was the most relevant civil sanction, an amount that was dwarfed by the $145 million punitive damages award. The Court concluded that proper application of the Gore factors would likely justify a punitive damages award at or near the amount of compensatory damages (538 U.S. 408, 428-429) .

Bullock v. Philip Morris USA, Inc. (2008) 159 Cal. App. 4th 655 , is discussed at § 190.223A[3][f].

[b] Factors Guiding Determination of Degree of Reprehensibility

State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v. Campbell (2003) 538 U.S. 408, 123 S. Ct. 1513, 155 L. Ed. 2d 585 , is discussed in § 190.223A[3][a].

Bullock v. Philip Morris USA, Inc. (2008) 159 Cal. App. 4th 655 , is discussed at § 190.223A[3][f].

In Boeken v. Philip Morris Inc. (2005) 127 Cal. App. 4th 1640, 26 Cal. Rptr. 3d 638 , the plaintiff, a smoker, brought an action against a cigarette manufacturer for injuries caused by its product. The jury awarded the plaintiff $5,539,127 in compensatory damages and $3 billion in punitive damages. The trial court reduced the punitive damages award to $100 million. The court of appeal initially reduced that award to $50 million. On rehearing, after extensive evaluation of the federal and state standards for review of punitive damages, the court of appeal affirmed the $50 million award.

In making its determination, the court pointed out that the plaintiff's injuries were physical, as opposed to merely economic, that he was physically and psychologically vulnerable, that the defendant knew that it was manufacturing a dangerous product, and in fact added chemicals to it to make it more addictive. Moreover, the defendant continued its conduct for nearly half a century with indifference to the safety of others (127 Cal. App. 4th 1640, 1692) . As for the ratio of compensatory damages to punitive damages, the court interpreted State Farm's language as being instructive, not binding (127 Cal. App. 4th 1640, 1695-1696) . The court next examined the defendant's wealth and accepted the trial court's finding of the defendant's value at between $30 and $35 million (127 Cal. App. 4th 1640, 1697) . The court found no analogous civil or criminal penalties against which to measure the award of punitive damages. Applying the law to the facts, the court found that the defendant's 40 years of fraud and continuing conscious disregard for the safety of consumers was "exceptionally extreme." At the same time, it acknowledged that the compensatory damages award of $5.5 million was significant. The court took into consideration previous punitive damages awards imposed against the defendant, as well as the possibility of future awards in cases with identical issues. The court concluded that more than a single digit multiplier was not justified, but that the extreme reprehensibility of defendant's conduct justified a ratio of at least 9 to 1 (127 Cal. App. 4th 1640, 1700-1703) .

[c] U.S. Supreme Court Cases Do Not Preclude California From Considering Defendant's Recidivism In Assessing Culpability

In Johnson v. Ford Motor Co. (2005) 35 Cal. 4th 1191, 29 Cal. Rptr. 3d 401 , a fraud case that did not involve products liability, the California Supreme Court addressed the due process considerations of punitive damages awards. The plaintiffs alleged that the defendant, an automobile manufacturer, concealed their automobile's history of transmission work when reselling the car. The jury awarded the plaintiffs $17,811 in compensatory damages and $10 million in punitive damages. The court of appeal held that the defendant could constitutionally be punished only for its fraud on the plaintiffs and not for its overall course of conduct. It reduced the punitive damages award to $53,435, approximately three times the compensatory damages. The California Supreme Court reversed, holding that the court of appeal failed to adequately consider that the defendant's conduct was more reprehensible because it was part of a repeated corporate practice, rather than an isolated incident. After reviewing the U.S. Supreme Court's analyses in Gore and State Farm, the Court found that due process does not prohibit state courts, in awarding or reviewing punitive damages, from considering the defendant's wrongful conduct towards others that was similar to the tortious conduct that injured the plaintiff. It accordingly found that a civil defendant's recidivism remains pertinent to an assessment of culpability (35 Cal. 4th 1191, 1196-1204) . The Court criticized the approach to punitive damages taken by the court of appeal in Romo v. Ford Motor Co. [Romo v. Ford Motor Co. (2003) 113 Cal. App. 4th 738, 749, 6 Cal. Rptr. 3d 793] , as incorrectly suggesting that appellate review must be "blind to the state's interest in punishing and deterring a wrongful corporate practice." The Court found that California's policy of using punitive damages to deter continuation or imitation of a corporation's course of wrongful conduct in fact survived U.S. Supreme Court cases such as Gore and State Farm. However, the court disapproved of the plaintiffs' "aggregate disgorgement" theory of punitive damages (35 Cal. 4th 1191, 1206) .

[d] Factors to Consider in Determining Whether Punitive Damages Award Is Excessive

Boeken v. Philip Morris Inc. (2005) 127 Cal. App. 4th 1640, 26 Cal. Rptr. 3d 638 , is discussed in § 190.223A[3][b].

[e] Punitive Damages Previously Awarded For Same Conduct Are Relevant

Boeken v. Philip Morris Inc. (2005) 127 Cal. App. 4th 1640, 26 Cal. Rptr. 3d 638 , is discussed in § 190.223A[3][b].

[f] Due Process Clause Prohibits State From Using Punitive Damages to Punish Defendant for Injury It Inflicted Upon Nonparties

In Philip Morris USA v. Williams (2007) 569 U.S. 346, 127 S. Ct. 1057, 166 L. Ed. 2d 940 , the U.S. Supreme Court struck down a $79.5 million punitive damage against a cigarette manufacturer, holding that an award based in part upon the jury's desire to punish the defendant for harming persons not before the court would amount to a taking of "property" without due process.

The case began in an Oregon state court, where the jury awarded a smoker's estate $821,0000 in compensatory damages and $79.5 million in punitive damages. The award was initially reduced to $32 million, but was restored by the Oregon Court of Appeals. The Oregon Supreme Court found that the $79.5 million award was not grossly excessive. The U.S. Supreme Court granted certiorari to consider (1) the manufacturer's claim that Oregon had unconstitutionally permitted it to be punished for harming nonparty victims; and (2) whether Oregon had ignored the requirement that punitive damages be reasonably related to the plaintiff's harm.

Justice Breyer wrote the opinion of the Court, in which Chief Justice Roberts and Justices Kennedy, Souter, and Alito joined. It answered only the first of the two questions, limiting its consideration to the Constitution's procedural limitations. Without any introduction, the Court stated that the Due Process Clause prohibits a state from using a punitive damages award to punish a defendant for injury that it inflicts upon nonparties. It based its conclusion on three factors. First, the Due Process Clause prohibits a state from punishing an individual without providing that individual an opportunity to present every available defense. Second, permitting punishment for injuring a nonparty victim would open the door to limitless questions involving factors such as the number of other victims and the severity of their injuries, magnifying concerns of arbitrariness and uncertainty. Finally, the Court found no authority supporting the use of punitive damages awards for the purpose of punishing a defendant for harming others. It explained that its approval in State Farm of considering the potential harm the defendant's conduct could have caused referred to potential harm to the plaintiff.

Acknowledging that a plaintiff may show harm to others to demonstrate reprehensibility, the Court cautioned that a jury may not go beyond this and use the punitive damages award for the prohibited purpose described above. Thus, the Due Process Clause requires States to provide assurances that juries are not seeking merely to determine reprehensibility but also to punish for harm caused to strangers. As for the Oregon court's concern over how a jury can "consider" harm to others yet withhold that consideration from the punishment calculation, the Court held that where the risk of misunderstanding is significant, a court--upon request--must protect against that risk. In conclusion, the Oregon Supreme Court applied the wrong constitutional standard when considering the cigarette manufacturer's appeal. The Court vacated the judgment and remanded the case (549 U.S. 346, 127 S. Ct. 1057).

Justice Stevens, Justice Thomas, and Justice Ginsburg each wrote separate dissenting opinions.

In Bullock v. Philip Morris USA, Inc. (2008) 159 Cal. App. 4th 655 , the trial court refused to give the cigarette manufacturer's requested jury instruction not to impose punishment for harms suffered by persons other than the plaintiff. The jury returned a special verdict finding in favor of the plaintiff on several counts and awarding her $850,000 in compensatory damages. The jury later awarded her $28 billion in punitive damages. The trial court subsequently remitted the punitive damages award to $28 million, an amount 33 times greater than the compensatory damages award. The California Supreme Court depublished and granted review [48 Cal. Rptr. 3d 365, 141 P.3d 718] , agreeing to defer further action pending the U.S. Supreme court's decision in Philip Morris USA v. Williams. Philip Morris USA v. Williams (2007) 569 U.S. 346, 127 S. Ct. 1057, 166 L. Ed. 2d 940 , is discussed in § 190.223A[3][f]. On remand, the appellate court concluded that the refusal to give the cigarette manufacturer's proposed instruction not to impose punishment for harm caused to nonparties to the litigation was error. The court ordered a new trial to determine the amount of punitive damages (159 Cal. App. 4th 655, 692-694) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
C. Damages

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.223B

§ 190.223B Supporting Contention That Defendant May Not Apportion Fault to Entity That Lacked Legal "Fault"--Civ. Code § 1431.2

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum supporting the contention that defendant may not apportion fault to another entity.]

DEFENDANT _____ [name] MAY NOT APPORTION FAULT UNDER CIV. CODE § 1431.2 TO PARTY WHO LACKS LEGAL "FAULT."

A. Tobacco Companies Protected Under Former Civ. Code § 1714.45 Were Not Tortfeasors to Which Comparative Fault Could Be Assigned. Tobacco companies protected by former Civ. Code § 1714.45 had no "fault" or responsibility, and could not be assigned comparative fault pursuant to Proposition 51 (Richards v. Owens-Illinois, Inc. (1997) 14 Cal. 4th 985, 988-989, 60 Cal. Rptr. 2d 103, 928 P.2d 1181).

B. Party Absolved of Liability by Primary Assumption of Risk Is Not Subject to Allocation of Fault. A party who has been granted summary judgment on the ground of primary assumption of risk is not subject to allocation of fault under Civ. Code § 1431.2 ( Ford v. Polaris Indus., Inc. (2006) 139 Cal. App. 4th 755, 777-779, 43 Cal. Rptr. 3d 215).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of the contention that defendant may not apportion fault to an entity pursuant to Civ. Code § 1431.2 because the entity lacks legal fault and is thus not a tortfeasor to whom comparative fault may be assigned.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with

points and authorities supporting a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication of the issue that defendant may not apportion fault pursuant to Civ. Code § 1431.2.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form, and in any other relevant points and authorities combined with this form, to show the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[c] Related Points and Authorities

For memorandum opposing the contention that defendant is jointly and severally liable for noneconomic damages under Civ. Code § 1431.2, see § 190.228.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Tobacco Companies Protected Under Former Civ. Code § 1714.45 Were Not Tortfeasors to Which Comparative Fault Could Be Assigned

In Richards v. Owens-Illinois, Inc. (1997) 14 Cal. 4th 985, 60 Cal. Rptr. 2d 103, 928 P.2d 1181 , the plaintiff was a smoker who brought a products liability action for asbestos-related injury. The defendant asbestos manufacturer contended that cigarette manufacturers shared fault for plaintiff's injuries because they provided an inherently unsafe product, and that defendant's liability for plaintiff's noneconomic damages should have been reduced accordingly. The trial court refused to allow a verdict form in which fault could be apportioned to the tobacco companies. The jury returned a verdict for plaintiff and apportioned fault among plaintiff, defendant, and several other entities. The Court of Appeal reversed, concluding that a defendant in an asbestos action could reduce its own liability for noneconomic damages by proving that tobacco companies shared fault.

The Supreme Court of California reversed. It held that Civil Code § 1714.45, as it appeared at the time, amounted to a legislative judgment that the tobacco companies had no legal fault or responsibility for harm caused by their products. The court concluded that under the conditions described in the statute, a tobacco supplier breached no duty and committed no tort against knowing and voluntary smokers by making cigarettes available to them. Thus, the tobacco companies were not tortfeasors to which comparative fault could be assigned for purposes of Proposition 51 (14 Cal. 4th 985, 998-1001) .

[b] Party Absolved of Liability by Primary Assumption of Risk Is Not Subject to Allocation of Fault

In Ford v. Polaris Indus., Inc. (2006) 139 Cal. App. 4th 755, 43 Cal. Rptr. 3d 215 , the plaintiff sustained severe orifice injuries after falling off the rear of a personal watercraft. The trial court granted the operator's motion for summary judgment, concluding that the activity that she and the plaintiff were engaged in was subject to the doctrine of primary assumption of risk. The court then determined that the watercraft manufacturer was not entitled to summary judgment on assumption of risk grounds. It also denied the manufacturer's request to allocate fault to the operator pursuant to Civil Code § 1431.2. The jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff.

The appellate court held that the court properly denied the manufacturer's request for a jury form allocating some fault to the operator. The case was controlled by Richards v. Owens-Illinois, Inc. (1997) 14 Cal. 4th 985, 60 Cal. Rptr. 2d 103, 928 P.2d 1181 . The judgment in the operator's favor on primary assumption of risk grounds constituted a judgment that as a matter of law; she therefore owed no duty to the plaintiff. Because she breached no duty and committed no tort, no degree of legal fault could be apportioned to her (139 Cal. App. 4th 755, 777-779) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
C. Damages

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.223C

§ 190.223C Supporting Contention That Defendant Is Jointly and Severally Liable for Noneconomic Damages [Civ. Code § 1431.2]--Proposition 51 Does Not Apply Where Plaintiff's Injuries Are Caused Solely by Defective Product

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum supporting the contention that defendant is jointly and severally liable for noneconomic damages.]

DEFENDANT _____ [specify manufacturer] IS JOINTLY AND SEVERALLY LIABLE FOR PLAINTIFF'S NONECONOMIC DAMAGES BECAUSE PROPOSITION 51 DOES NOT APPLY WHERE PLAINTIFF'S INJURIES WERE CAUSED SOLELY BY A DEFECTIVE PRODUCT.

A. Proposition 51 Does Not Apply Where Plaintiff's Injuries Were Caused Solely By Defective Product. Proposition 51 does not apply in a strict products liability case where the plaintiff's injuries were caused solely by a defective product and defendants are all in the same chain of distribution (Bostick v. Flex Equipment Co. (2007) 147 Cal. App. 4th 80, 92 ; Wimberly v. Derby Cycle Corp. (1997) 56 Cal. App. 4th 618, 65 Cal. Rptr. 2d 532).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of the contention that defendant is jointly and severally liable for plaintiff's noneconomic damages because Civ. Code § 1431.2 is inapplicable (Bostick v. Flex Equipment Co. (2007) 147 Cal. App. 4th 80, 92 ; Wimberly v. Derby Cycle Corp. (1997) 56 Cal. App. 4th 618, 65 Cal. Rptr. 2d 532).

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication of the issue that defendant is jointly and severally liable for plaintiff's noneconomic damages.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form, and in any other relevant points and authorities combined with this form, to show the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should state facts showing that plaintiff's injuries were caused solely by the defective product, and that the defendants were all in the same chain of distribution.

[c] Related Points and Authorities

For memorandum opposing the contention that defendant is jointly and severally liable for noneconomic damages under Civ. Code § 1431.2, see §§ 190.228, 190.229.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Proposition 51 Does Not Apply Where Plaintiff's Injuries Were Caused Solely by Defective Product

In Bostick v. Flex Equipment Co. (2007) 147 Cal. App. 4th 80 , the plaintiff was injured while working out on weight-lifting equipment. He entered into a settlement with the gym for $7.3 million. In his product liability action against the equipment manufacturer, the jury awarded him $3.3 million in economic damages and $13 million in noneconomic damages. It apportioned 90 percent of the fault to the manufacturer, 10 percent to plaintiff, and zero percent to "other entities." The trial court concluded that the claimed liability common to the gym and the manufacturer was fully joint and several, and thus reduced plaintiff's award against the manufacturer by the full amount of his settlement with the gym.

On appeal, the plaintiff contended that Proposition 51 applied, and the manufacturer was only severally liable for his noneconomic damages. He further contended that the court erred in setting off the full amount of his $7.3 million settlement with the gym, because the setoff should have been limited to that portion of the settlement attributable to economic damages only.

The appellate court held that the court did not err in reducing plaintiff's award by the full amount of his settlement with the gym. It followed Wimberly v. Derby Cycle Corp*. (1997) 56 Cal. App. 4th 618, 65 Cal. Rptr. 2d 532* , which held that Proposition 51 does not apply in a strict products liability action involving a single indivisible injury because liability is imposed under this doctrine irrespective of fault. This plaintiff's injuries were caused by a single defective product, and the manufacturer was found liable under strict products liability. Thus, Proposition 51 was not triggered. To apportion noneconomic damages under Proposition 51 would result in the reduction or possible elimination of a plaintiff's recovery for noneconomic damages, thereby defeating the social justifications for strict products liability. Proposition 51 is not triggered in a strict products liability case where there is one defective product and all of the defendants are in the same chain of distribution. This is because Proposition 51 was intended to apply only when defendants' fault is comparable, and in a strict products liability case, there is no fault to compare (147 Cal. App. 4th 80, 93-95) .

In Wimberly v. Derby Cycle Corp*. (1997) 56 Cal. App. 4th 618, 65 Cal. Rptr. 2d 532* , the plaintiff was injured when the fork assembly of his bicycle broke. He brought a strict products liability action against several entities, including the designer, manufacturer, and seller of the fork assembly. He settled with several of the defendants and proceeded to trial against the distributor only. The jury returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiff. On appeal, the defendant contended that the court erred in refusing to apply Proposition 51 to require the jury the apportion fault among it and the other defendants in the chain of distribution.

The appellate court rejected this contention, ruling that Proposition 51 did not modify the common law rule that defendants in an action for strict products liability who are in the chain of distribution of the same defective product are jointly and severally liable for all of plaintiff's economic and noneconomic damages. In reaching its conclusion, the court relied on prior case law holding that Proposition 51 does not relieve defendants whose liability is solely vicarious for all liability for noneconomic damages. Strict products liability is similar to vicarious liability, and to limit a defendant's responsibility in strict products liability cases for noneconomic damages to a proportionate share based on fault would defeat the policy reasons that supported the doctrine. Thus, Proposition 51 has no application in a strict products liability case where the plaintiff's injuries are caused solely by a defective product (56 Cal. App. 4th 618, 630-633) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
C. Damages

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.224

§ 190.224 Opposing Contention That Plaintiff Is Entitled to Purely Economic Damages--Economic Damages Not Available in Strict Liability Action

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities opposing the contention that defendant is liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product (see, e.g., § 190.226)].

DEFENDANT _____ [name] IS NOT STRICTLY LIABLE TO PLAINTIFF, BECAUSE PLAINTIFF SUFFERED ONLY ECONOMIC DAMAGES, WITHOUT ADDITIONAL PHYSICAL HARM TO THE PROPERTY.

A. Economic Damages Alone Are Not Available in Strict Products Liability Action. A plaintiff is precluded from recovery on a theory of strict products liability when plaintiff's damages consist solely of economic losses (Aas v. Superior Court (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 627, 636, 101 Cal. Rptr. 2d 718, 12 P.3d 1125 ; Seely v. White Motor Co. (1965) 63 Cal. 2d 9, 18, 45 Cal. Rptr. 17, 403 P.2d 145 ; Stearman v. Centex Homes (2000) 78 Cal. App. 4th 611, 623, 92 Cal. Rptr. 2d 761 ; Sacramento Reg'l Transit Dist. v. Grumman Flxible (1984) 158 Cal. App. 3d 289, 293, 204 Cal. Rptr. 736).

B. J'Aire Decision Does Not Extend to Strict Liability Action. Strict tort liability was not expanded by the decision of J'Aire Corp. v. Gregory (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 799, 157 Cal. Rptr. 407, 598 P.2d 60 , to encompass recovery for economic damages (Aas v. Superior Court (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 627, 644, 101 Cal. Rptr. 2d 718, 12 P.3d 1125 ; Huang v. Garner (1984) 157 Cal. App. 3d 404, 423, 203 Cal. Rptr. 800).

[Optional] C. Expenses of Repairing Defect Are Purely Economic Damages for Which Recovery Is Not Available Under Strict Liability Theory. The rule imposing strict liability in tort for damages to property presupposes (1) a defect and (2) further damage to the plaintiff's property caused by the defect. When the defect and the damage are one and the same, the defect may not be considered to have caused physical injury. Thus, the expenses of repairing the property under these circumstances constitute purely economic damages for which plaintiff may not recover under a strict liability theory (Sacramento Reg'l Transit Dist. v. Grumman Flxible (1984) 158 Cal. App. 3d 289, 294, 204 Cal. Rptr. 736 ; see also County of Santa Clara v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (2006) 137 Cal. App. 4th 292, 321, 40 Cal. Rptr. 3d 313 , review granted, depublished, 80 Cal. Rptr. 3d 629, 188 P.3d 579, 2008 Cal. LEXIS 9073 , Stearman v. Centex Homes (2000) 78 Cal. App. 4th 611, 623, 92 Cal. Rptr. 2d 761).

[Optional] D. Plaintiff Is Not Entitled to Economic Damages if Alleged Construction Defect Has Not Caused Any Personal Injury or Property Damage. If the defective product has not caused personal injury or property damage, then damages are not available in strict liability or negligence. The tort does not support recovery of damages representing the lost benefit of the bargain (Aas v. Superior Court (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 627, 639-640, 101 Cal. Rptr. 2d 718, 12 P.3d 1125).

[Optional] E. When Defect and Damage Are One and Same, Defect May Not Be Considered to Have Caused Physical Injury. When the defect and the damage are one and the same, the defect may not be considered to have caused physical injury (County of Santa Clara v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (2006) 137 Cal. App. 4th 292, 321, 40 Cal. Rptr. 3d 313 , review granted, depublished, 80 Cal. Rptr. 3d 629, 188 P.3d 579, 2008 Cal. LEXIS 9073).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's damages. The ground of opposition set forth is that plaintiff sustained only economic damages, for which defendant may not be held strictly liable.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a demurrer or motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication on the issue that defendant is subject to strict liability. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should state facts showing that plaintiff sustained neither personal injuries nor property damage yet, or no personal injury nor property damage beyond the defect itself, and that plaintiff's sole damages are economic in nature [see, e.g., Aas v. Superior Court (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 627, 639-640, 101 Cal. Rptr. 2d 718, 12 P.3d 1125 (no tort damages in absence of personal injury or damage to property); Stearman v. Centex Homes (2000) 78 Cal. App. 4th 611, 623, 92 Cal. Rptr. 2d 761 (strict liability damages for construction defects because there was injury to property); Sacramento Reg'l Transit Dist. v. Grumman Flxible (1984) 158 Cal. App. 3d 289, 204 Cal. Rptr. 736 (no strict liability for economic damages from purchase of buses with cracked fuel tank supports); Huang v. Garner (1984) 157 Cal. App. 3d 404, 420, 423, 203 Cal. Rptr. 800 (no strict liability for economic damages from purchase of defective apartment complex)].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Economic Damages Alone Are Not Available in Strict Products Liability Action

NOTE:

Effective January 1, 2003, there is a limited new cause of action in California for certain specified housing defects, Cal. Civ. Code § 895 et seq. The Right to Repair Act (the Act) established building standards pertaining to new residential construction and provides homeowners with a cause of action against builders and individual product manufacturers for violation of those standards. Cal. Civ. Code §§

896, 936. In Greystone Homes, Inc. v. Midtec, Inc. (2008) 168 Cal. App. 4th 1194, 1202, 86 Cal. Rptr. 3d 196 , the court of appeal stated that the Act abrogated the economic loss rule in such as case, thereby legislatively superseding Aas v. Superior Court, below.

In Aas v. Superior Court (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 627, 639-640, 101 Cal. Rptr. 2d 718, 12 P.3d 1125 , plaintiffs owned single-family homes in a subdivision built by defendant developer and subcontractors. Plaintiff homeowners' association was responsible for managing and maintaining a condominium project of defendants. Plaintiffs alleged their dwellings suffered from a variety of construction defects affecting virtually all components and aspects of construction. Based on these defects, plaintiffs asserted causes of action for negligence, strict liability, and breaches of implied and express warranty and contract. In pretrial proceedings, defendants moved for orders in limine excluding evidence of those alleged construction defects that had not caused property damage. The trial court granted defendants' motions as to plaintiffs' tort claims. With the court's encouragement, plaintiffs sought review of the rulings in limine by petition for writ of mandate. The court of appeal denied the petitions.

The Supreme Court granted review of that decision and affirmed. The Court first evaluated the principles that hold that economic damages are not recoverable in strict liability. It phrased the question as whether plaintiffs could recover in negligence the cost of repair, or the diminished value attributable to, construction defects that have not caused property damage. Plaintiffs no long argued that strict liability provides a remedy for defects that have not caused property damage. Appreciable, nonspeculative, present injury was an essential element of a tort cause of action. Tort law provides a remedy for construction defects that cause property damage or personal injury. Focusing on the conduct of persons involved in the construction process, courts in this state have found such a remedy in the law of negligence. Viewing the home as a product, courts have also found a tort remedy in strict products liability, even when the property damage consists of harm to a sound part of the home caused by another, defective part. For defective products and negligent services that have caused neither property damage nor personal injury, however, tort remedies have been uncertain. Any construction defect can diminish the value of a house. But the difference between price paid and value received, and deviations from standards of quality that have not resulted in property damage or personal injury, are primarily the domain of contract and warranty law or the law of fraud, rather than of negligence. In actions for negligence, a manufacturer's liability is limited to damages for physical injuries; no recovery is allowed for economic loss alone (24 Cal. 4th 627, 636) . Whatever the product, whether homes or automobiles, strict liability affords a remedy only when the defective product causes property damage or personal injury. The tort does not support recovery of damages representing the lost benefit of a bargain, such as the cost of repairing a defective product or compensation for its diminished value (24 Cal. 4th 627, 639) .

The Court next evaluated plaintiffs claims, based on J'Aire Corp. v. Gregory (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 799, 805, 157 Cal. Rptr. 407, 598 P.2d 60 [see § 190.220[3][a]], that where the risk of harm is foreseeable, an injury to the plaintiff's economic interests should not go uncompensated merely because it was unaccompanied by any injury to his person or property. The Court rephrased the question this way: Does the law of negligence protect plaintiffs' economic interests in having houses that fully comply with the building codes, measured by the cost of repairs or diminished value associated with noncompliance, even though the asserted harm to those interests is unaccompanied by any injury to person or property? The Court found that negligence did not provide such recovery. It did not matter in negligence whether or not the risk of harm was foreseeable because there was no actual harm (24 Cal. 4th 627, 646) . In conclusion, the Court, applying the J'Aire factors, did not find they justified a broad rule permitting recovery of repair costs unaccompanied by property damage or personal injury. The case was remanded for further proceedings (24 Cal. 4th 627, 652) .

In Seely v. White Motor Co. (1965) 63 Cal. 2d 9, 45 Cal. Rptr. 17, 403 P.2d 145 , plaintiff purchased a truck manufactured by defendant. The truck bounced violently while being operated by plaintiff and overturned. Plaintiff was not personally injured, but the truck was damaged. Plaintiff brought an action in strict liability against defendant. The trial court found that defendant had breached its warranty to plaintiff but also found that plaintiff had not proved that an alleged defect in the truck had caused the accident. The trial court then awarded plaintiff $20,000 for payments on the purchase price and for lost profits, but refused to award damages for the repair of the truck. Both plaintiff and defendant appealed.

The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment, holding that plaintiff had not proved that the defect had caused the damage to the truck. In reaching its decision, the Court concluded that physical damage to property, as well as personal injury, is recoverable under a strict liability theory. However, the Court indicated that recovery is limited to those two kinds of injury and does not extend to economic loss. In dicta, the Court also indicated that a plaintiff may not recover for economic loss alone in a negligence action as well as in a strict liability action (63 Cal. 2d 9, 18) .

NOTE:

The view expressed in the negligence dicta in Seely v. White Motor Co., was modified by the Supreme Court's opinion in J'Aire Corp. v. Gregory (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 799, 157 Cal. Rptr. 407, 598 P.2d 60 [see § 190.220[3][a]].

The facts and procedural background of Sacramento Reg'l Transit Dist. v. Grumman Flxible (1984) 158 Cal. App. 3d 289, 204 Cal. Rptr. 736 , are discussed in § 190.220[3][a]. The court of appeal held that defendant bus manufacturer may not be held strictly liable for the economic damages suffered by plaintiff from the delivery of buses that had cracked fuel tank supports and other defects. The court explained that when damage consists solely of economic losses, recovery on a theory of products liability is precluded. The court further explained that because both plaintiff and defendant were merchants, to impose strict liability under the circumstances of this case would improperly invade the rule of law adopted by the legislature in the California Uniform Commercial Code (158 Cal. App. 3d 289, 294-295) . The court rejected plaintiff's argument that it is anomalous to allow a consumer to sue on a theory of products liability when physical injury to a person has occurred but not when a defect is discovered that will ultimately cause the physical injury. The court concluded that the more reasonable view is that the merchant will repair the product as plaintiff did in this case. Because the question is not whether a defective product will be put in use, but rather who should bear the economic cost of repairs, the court chose not to disturb the allocation of those costs as agreed to by knowledgeable merchants (158 Cal. App. 3d 289, 297-298) .

[b] J'Aire Decision Does Not Extend to Strict Liability Action

The facts and procedural background of Huang v. Garner (1984) 157 Cal. App. 3d 404, 203 Cal. Rptr. 800 , are discussed in §§ 190.28[3][a] and 190.220[3][a]. Although the court of appeal allowed plaintiff to recover economic damages under a negligence theory, plaintiff was precluded from recovering such damages under a strict liability theory. The court relied on prior appellate case law in holding that a plaintiff is not entitled to recover economic damages in a strict liability action, and further held that the Supreme Court decision in J'Aire Corp. v. Gregory (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 799, 157 Cal. Rptr. 407, 598 P.2d 60 [see § 190.220[3][a]], did not change this traditional rule with respect to strict liability (157 Cal. App. 3d 404, 420) .

WARNING:

In Aas v. Superior Court (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 627, 648-649, 101 Cal. Rptr. 2d 718, 12 P.3d 1125 [see § 190.224[3][a]], the Supreme Court expressly disapproved Huang to the extent it was inconsistent with the views set out in that opinion.

[c] Expenses of Repairing Defect Are Purely Economic Damages for Which Recovery Is Not Available Under Strict Liability Theory

County of Santa Clara v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (2006) 137 Cal. App. 4th 292, 40 Cal. Rptr. 3d 313 , review granted, depublished, 80 Cal. Rptr. 3d 629, 188 P.3d 579, 2008 Cal. LEXIS 9073 , is discussed in § 190.261[3][b].

The facts and procedural background of Sacramento Reg'l Transit Dist. v. Grumman Flxible (1984) 158 Cal. App. 3d 289, 204 Cal. Rptr. 736 , are discussed in § 190.224[3][a]. The court of appeal held that plaintiff could not recover the cost of repair of the cracked fuel tank supports of the buses that plaintiff had purchased from defendant. The court held that the costs of repair were not recoverable, because plaintiff had failed to allege that the costs were due to a physical injury to the buses other than the defect itself. The court explained that the rule imposing strict liability in tort for damages to property presupposes (1) a defect and (2) further damage to plaintiff's property caused by the defect. When the defect and the damage are one and the same, the defect may not be considered to have caused physical injury. Thus, the court characterized the costs of repair as purely economic damages rather than physical damages, for which plaintiff could not recover (158 Cal. App. 3d 289, 294) .

[d] Plaintiff Is Not Entitled to Economic Damages if Alleged Construction Defect Has Not Caused Any Personal Injury or Property Damage

Aas v. Superior Court (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 627, 101 Cal. Rptr. 2d 718, 12 P.3d 1125 , is discussed in § 190.224[3][a].

[e] When Defect and Damage Are One and Same, Defect May Not Be Considered to Have Caused Physical Injury

County of Santa Clara v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (2006) 137 Cal. App. 4th 292, 40 Cal. Rptr. 3d 313 , review granted, depublished, 80 Cal. Rptr. 3d 629, 188 P.3d 579, 2008 Cal. LEXIS 9073 , is discussed in § 190.261[3][b].

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Economic Damages Alone Are Not Available in Strict Products Liability Action

In Greystone Homes, Inc. v. Midtec, Inc. (2008) 168 Cal. App. 4th 1194, 86 Cal. Rptr. 3d 196 , a builder brought an action against the manufacturer of plumbing fittings, alleging that several homeowners had made claims against the builder for damage caused by the defective fittings. The trial court granted the manufacturer's motion for summary on the ground of the economic loss rule. It acknowledged that the Right to Repair Act (the Act), Civ. Code § 895 et seq. , provides an exception to the economic loss rule for actions brought under the Act by homeowners, but concluded that the builder was not entitled to pursue the statutorily created cause of action. The court of appeal reversed. It explained that the Act, effective January 1, 2003, established building standards pertaining to new residential construction and provides homeowners with a cause of action against builders and individual product manufacturers for violation of those standards. The Act abrogated the economic loss rule, thereby legislatively superseding Aas v. Superior Court (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 627, 101 Cal. Rptr. 2d 718, 12 P.3d 1125 . A builder may recover from a product manufacturer for economic losses caused by the manufacturer's violations of the standards set forth in the Act through an equitable indemnity action. However, a builder may not recover for economic losses through a direct negligence claim based on the manufacturer's violations of the standards (Cal. App. 4th 1194, 1203).

In Carrau v. Marvin Lumber & Cedar Co. (2001) 93 Cal. App. 4th 281, 112 Cal. Rptr. 2d 869 , the plaintiff could not recover under a strict products liability theory the costs of repairing or replacing defective windows he had purchased and incorporated into a residence he built. The only evidence of actual property damage to property other than the windows was several hundred dollars worth of damage to sheet rock and wallpaper, and the persons who purchased his house had paid the costs of repairing this damage. Nor could he recover damages based on diminution in value to the residence resulting from installation of the defective windows (93 Cal. App. 4th 281, 112 Cal. Rptr. 2d 869, 877-878) .

In Stearman v. Centex Homes (2000) 78 Cal. App. 4th 611, 623, 92 Cal. Rptr. 2d 761 , Plaintiffs filed a strict liability action based on defendant's defective construction of the foundation of plaintiffs' tract home, resulting in severe slab movement and deformation, and causing extensive cracks throughout the interior and exterior surfaces of the home. The trial court entered judgment in favor of plaintiffs, defendant appealed, and plaintiffs cross-appealed the denial of their request for certain expert fees incurred. The court reversed the denial of recovery of the expert fees as damages and otherwise affirmed the judgment of the trial court. The court followed applicable precedent and held that the damage that plaintiffs sustained to their home was physical injury falling outside the parameters of economic loss, and was thus compensable under strict liability in tort. The court also found that plaintiffs incurred the relevant expert fees in relation to the costs of repair and that such expenses were recoverable as damages in this construction defect case.

In Fieldstone Co. v. Briggs Plumbing Prods., Inc. (1997) 54 Cal. App. 4th 357, 62 Cal. Rptr. 2d 701 , a developer brought an action for breach of express and implied warranties, implied equitable indemnity, strict liability, and declaratory relief against a manufacturer of bathroom sinks, which had been installed in plaintiff's real estate developments. Plaintiff sought to recover the costs for replacing the sinks. The trial court granted summary judgment for the defendants on the strict liability count, and the court of appeals affirmed. The defendants were not strictly liable because the plaintiff was merely seeking recovery of replacement costs when a poorly designed and built product failed to meet the plaintiff's expectations. Economic losses that are not recoverable in a strict liability action include damages for the costs of repair and replacement of a defective product. The court found there was no physical injury to plaintiff's property (54 Cal. App. 4th 357, 363-364) .

In San Francisco Unified Sch. Dist. v. W.R. Grace & Co. (1995) 37 Cal. App. 4th 1318 , 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 305 , a case decided after J'Aire, the plaintiff, a school district, owned buildings that contained asbestos and filed a cause of action for strict liability or negligence against asbestos manufacturers before asbestos contamination had occurred. The trial court dismissed the action on the ground that the action was barred by the statute of limitations. The court of appeal reversed the judgment, holding that the action was not barred by the statute of limitations because the owner of a building containing asbestos cannot state a cause of action in tort until physical injury (i.e., contamination) occurs. Recovery for a fully economic loss due to the mere presence of asbestos is not available in California (37 Cal. App. 4th 1318, 1327-1328) .

Pisano v. American Leasing (1983) 146 Cal. App. 3d 194, 194 Cal. Rptr. 77 , is discussed in § 190.220[4][a].

In Rodrigues v. Campbell Indus. (1978) 87 Cal. App. 3d 494, 151 Cal. Rptr. 90 , a case decided before J'Aire, plaintiffs suffered losses in earnings when they were forced to return from the high seas to repair their fishing vessel that had been defectively constructed. Plaintiffs' action in strict liability, negligence, and warranty against the vessel's manufacturer was dismissed by the trial court, and plaintiffs appealed. The court of appeal reversed the judgment, holding that plaintiffs had stated a cause of action for negligence and strict liability under federal admiralty law. However, the court held that plaintiffs had not stated a cause of action under state law for either negligence or strict liability, because recovery for a pure economic loss is not available in California. Rather, recovery under state law is restricted to recovery for physical harm to person or property (87 Cal. App. 3d 494, 498) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
C. Damages

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.225

§ 190.225 Opposing Contention That Plaintiff Is Entitled to Purely Economic Damages--Purely Economic Damages Not Available in Negligence Action Absent Special Relationship Between Parties

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief. It may be combined with a general form opposing the contention that defendant is liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product (see, e.g., § 190.86).]

DEFENDANT _____ [name] IS NOT LIABLE TO PLAINTIFF FOR PURELY ECONOMIC DAMAGES BECAUSE NO SPECIAL RELATIONSHIP EXISTS BETWEEN THE PARTIES TO THIS NEGLIGENCE ACTION AS REQUIRED BY THE J'AIRE DECISION, SPECIFICALLY _____ [specify which of six J'Aire factors were not met: (1) the extent to which the transaction was intended to affect the plaintiff, (2) the foreseeability of harm to the plaintiff, (3) the degree of certainty of injury to the plaintiff, (4) the closeness of the connection between the defendant's conduct and plaintiff's injury, (5) the moral blame of defendant's conduct, and/or (6) the policy of preventing future harm, e.g., DEFENDANTS DID NOT INTEND THE TRANSACTION TO AFFECT PLAINTIFF BECAUSE THEY DID NOT RECOMMEND THE AUTOMATIC MILKING SYSTEM TO PLAINTIFF TO FULFILL ANY PARTICULAR NEED DISTINCT FROM THE NEEDS OF ALL POTENTIAL PURCHASERS OF THE EQUIPMENT].

Economic Damages Alone Are Not Available in Negligence Action Unless Parties Have Special Relationship. Economic damages, standing alone, are unavailable in a negligence action when the parties do not have a "special relationship." The presence or absence of a duty of care depends on an examination of the following six factors: (1) the extent to which the transaction was intended to affect the plaintiff, (2) the foreseeability of harm to the plaintiff, (3) the degree of certainty of injury to the plaintiff, (4) the closeness of the connection between the defendant's conduct and plaintiff's injury, (5) the moral blame attached to defendant's conduct, and (6) the policy and need of preventing future harm (J'Aire Corp. v. Gregory (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 799, 804, 157 Cal. Rptr. 407, 598 P.2d 60 ; Ott v. Alfa-Laval Agri, Inc. (1995) 31 Cal. App. 4th 1439, 1449-1456, 37 Cal. Rptr. 790).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition of the contention that the defendant is liable for purely economic damages in a negligence action. The ground for the contention is that the parties do not have a "special relationship" supporting such liability as required by J'Aire Corp. v. Gregory (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 799, 157 Cal. Rptr. 407, 598 P.2d 60 .

This form may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue of no liability for economic damages. It may be used in connection with a pretrial motion, such as a demurrer or a motion for summary judgment. It may also be used in a trial or appellate brief.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities in § 190.224.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a discussion and forms for use in actions involving negligence in general, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Points and Authorities

For points and authorities relating to actions for negligence in general, see Ch. 165, Negligence .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Economic Damages Alone Are Not Available in Negligence Action Unless Parties Have Special Relationship

J'Aire Corp. v. Gregory (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 799, 157 Cal. Rptr. 407, 598 P.2d 60 , is discussed in § 190.220[3][a].

In Ott v. Alfa-Laval Agri, Inc. (1995) 31 Cal. App. 4th 1439, 1449-1456, 37 Cal. Rptr. 790 , plaintiffs brought a negligence action against milking machine manufacturers for lost profits caused by problems associated with an automatic milking system manufactured by the defendants. At the close of all evidence, the case was submitted to the jury on four counts, and the jury rendered a verdict for the plaintiffs on three counts and for the defendants on one count. The court then granted defendants' motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict on one count, and granted defendant's motion for a new trial on the economic damages portion of another count entered for plaintiffs. Both parties appealed.

The court of appeal reversed the judgment in favor of the plaintiffs on two counts and the order for a new trial, and instead ordered the trial court to enter judgment notwithstanding the verdict for the defendants. In the published part of its opinion, the court held that the plaintiffs were not permitted to recover purely economic damages. Recovery of economic damages, standing alone and absent personal injury or property damage, is only available if the parties have a "special relationship" as required by J'Aire Corp. v. Gregory (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 799, 157 Cal. Rptr. 407, 598 P.2d 60 .

The court rejected plaintiffs' argument that J'Aire focused on a foreseeability standard, and instead held that a six-part test needed to be applied in full to determine the presence or absence of a duty of care supporting an award of economic damages (31 Cal. App. 4th 1439, 1454-1455) . Specifically, the court held that the existence of a special relationship under J'Aire depends on the following six criteria: (1) the extent to which the transaction was intended to affect the plaintiff, (2) the foreseeability of harm to the plaintiff, (3) the degree of certainty that the plaintiff would suffer injury, (4) the closeness of the connection of the defendant's conduct and plaintiff's injury, (5) the moral blame attached to defendant's conduct, and (6) the policy and need of preventing future harm (31 Cal. App. 4th 1439, 1449) .

The court concluded that the evidence did not support a finding of a "special relationship" between the parties. There was no evidence that the automatic milking system was intended to affect the plaintiffs in a particular way, as opposed to all potential purchasers of the equipment. Nor was injury to the plaintiffs reasonably foreseeable because the evidence showed that the decline in milk production was related to a problem that plaintiffs did not notice for some fifteen years (31 Cal. App. 4th 1439, 1455-1456) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Economic Damages Alone Are Not Available in Negligence Action Unless Parties Have Special Relationship

In Zamora v. Shell Oil Co. (1997) 55 Cal. App. 4th 204, 63 Cal. Rptr. 2d 762 , homeowners brought products liability actions against companies involved in the manufacture of defective pipes. At trial, one defendant, who had provided components for the pipes, was found to be negligent to each plaintiff, including 14 plaintiffs who had sustained no damage as a result of the pipes. The court of appeals affirmed in part and reversed in part. The court found that the parties did not have any special relationship to trigger application of the J'Aire exception to the general rule that economic loss alone is insufficient to state a negligence cause of action. Specifically, defendant's manufacturing of the component did not involve a transaction specifically intended to affect the particular needs of any of the 14 homeowners, and there was insufficient certainty that the 14 homeowners suffered any injury (55 Cal. App. 4th 204, 212) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
C. Damages

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.226

§ 190.226 Opposing Contention That Plaintiff Is Entitled to Punitive Damages [Civ. Code § 3294]--Punitive Damages Not Available in Strict Liability Action Based on Market-Share Liability Theory

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities opposing the contention that defendant is liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product (see, e.g., § 190.86).]

DEFENDANT _____ [name] IS NOT SUBJECT TO THE IMPOSITION OF PUNITIVE DAMAGES, BECAUSE PLAINTIFF HAS NOT IDENTIFIED DEFENDANT AS THE ACTUAL MANUFACTURER OF THE PRODUCT THAT INJURED PLAINTIFF BUT INSTEAD HAS BASED HIS/HER/ITS CLAIM ON A MARKET-SHARE LIABILITY THEORY.

A. Punitive Damages Are Not Available in Market-Share Liability Case. A plaintiff may not recover punitive damages from any defendant in a strict liability action if plaintiff's sole theory of liability is based on the market-share liability theory as announced in Sindell v. Abbott Labs. (1980) 26 Cal. 3d 588 , 163 Cal. Rptr. 132 , 607 P.2d 924 (Magallanes v. Superior Court (1985) 167 Cal. App. 3d 878, 889-890, 213 Cal. Rptr. 547).

B. Punitive Damages Are Not Available Unless Plaintiff Identifies Actual Manufacturer and Proves Manufacturer Acted With Malice or Oppression. A plaintiff may not recover punitive damages against a defendant manufacturer who participated in the marketing of a defective product unless plaintiff proves that (1) the defendant was the actual manufacturer of the defective product that injured plaintiff, and (2) the defendant acted with malice or oppression in placing the product on the market (Magallanes v. Superior Court (1985) 167 Cal. App. 3d 878, 890, 213 Cal. Rptr. 547).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a defendant is subject to punitive damages. The ground of opposition set forth is that defendant may not be subject to punitive damages because plaintiff's claim is based solely on a market-share liability theory.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a demurrer, motion to strike, or motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication on the issue whether defendant is subject to punitive damages. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should state facts showing that plaintiff claims only that defendant manufacturer participated in the general marketing of a product that injured plaintiff, but that plaintiff has not claimed that defendant's product was the product that injured plaintiff, nor that defendant acted with malice or oppression in marketing its product [see, e.g., Magallanes v. Superior Court (1985) 167 Cal. App. 3d 878, 213 Cal. Rptr. 547 (no punitive damages against manufacturer of DES if plaintiff bases claim solely on market-share liability theory and cannot prove that defendant's DES injured plaintiff or that defendant marketed DES with malice or oppression)].

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities in § 190.223.

[b] Related Points and Authorities

For points and authorities relating to the availability of punitive or exemplary damages generally, see Ch. 64, Damages: Tort .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Punitive Damages Are Not Available in Market-Share Liability Case

In Magallanes v. Superior Court (1985) 167 Cal. App. 3d 878, 213 Cal. Rptr. 547 , plaintiff's mother, while pregnant with plaintiff, had ingested the drug diethylstilbestrol (DES). As a result, plaintiff developed cancer later in life. Plaintiff brought an action in strict liability against the manufacturers and distributors of a substantial share of the DES available to plaintiff's mother at the time she ingested the DES. Plaintiff sought both compensatory and punitive damages. Defendants moved to strike the punitive damage allegations. The court granted the relief, and plaintiff sought a writ of mandate.

The court of appeal denied the petition for writ of mandate, holding that a defendant found liable under a market-share liability theory could not be liable for punitive damages. The court held that in order for punitive damages to be available against a defendant, that defendant must be identified as having supplied the user with the product, and that in so supplying the product the defendant was guilty of malice or oppression. Because under a market-share theory the identity of the actual supplier is not determined, defendants liable under the theory cannot be assessed with punitive damages. The court based its decision on public policy considerations. The court noted that the market-share rule of Sindell v. Abbott Labs. (1980) 26 Cal. 3d 588, 163 Cal. Rptr. 132, 607 P.2d 924 [see § 190.80[3][a]], provides a logical and reasonable basis for awarding and apportioning compensatory damages when a plaintiff cannot identify the producer who supplied the injury-causing substance. However, the court explained that significantly different considerations govern the imposition of punitive damages, which are an individualized punishment and deterrent imposed on a particular and identified defendant whose malicious or oppressive acts are the proximate cause of the injury sustained by plaintiff. The imposition of punitive damages is thus not intended to punish a defendant merely because it distributes its product in the marketplace. In fact, the court explained, to do so would be unfair. If a plaintiff is permitted to seek punitive damages in a case in which liability for compensatory damages is based solely on participation in the market, some suppliers, who are not named as defendants, but who may have acted with malice in manufacturing and distributing DES, and one of which may have provided the specific substance ingested by plaintiff's mother, would fortuitously escape liability altogether. At the same time others, whose conduct was no more culpable, and who may have caused plaintiff no actual harm, but who have been named as defendants, would remain subject to the burden of punitive damages. Thus, the court precluded the award of punitive damages against any defendant in the case, unless plaintiff could (1) first identify that defendant as the one who supplied the DES that was ingested by plaintiff's mother, and (2) also prove that the defendant who supplied the DES acted with malice or oppression (167 Cal. App. 3d 878, 886-890) .

[b] Punitive Damages Are Not Available Unless Plaintiff Identifies Actual Manufacturer and Proves Manufacturer Acted With Malice or Oppression

Magallanes v. Superior Court (1985) 167 Cal. App. 3d 878, 213 Cal. Rptr. 547 , is discussed in § 190.226[3][a].

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
C. Damages

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.227

§ 190.227 Opposing Contention That Plaintiff is Entitled to Punitive Damages [Civ. Code § 3294]--Punitive Damages Not Available in Strict Products Liability Action When Plaintiff Suffers No Personal Injury

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities opposing the contention that the defendant is liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by a defective product (see, e.g., § 190.86).]

DEFENDANT _____ [specify name] IS NOT SUBJECT TO THE IMPOSITION OF PUNITIVE DAMAGES IN A STRICT PRODUCTS LIABILITY ACTION BECAUSE THE PLAINTIFF SUFFERED NO PERSONAL OR OTHER EGREGIOUS INJURY.

Punitive Damages Are Not Available in Strict Products Liability Action Absent Proof That Plaintiff Suffered Personal Injuries. A plaintiff may not recover punitive damages in a strict products liability action when the plaintiff suffered no personal or other egregious injury (Gawara v. United States Brass Corp. (1998) 63 Cal. App. 4th 1341, 1363, 74 Cal. Rptr. 2d 663).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a defendant is subject to punitive damages in a strict products liability action. The ground of opposition is that a defendant may not be subject to punitive damages when a plaintiff suffers no personal or other egregious injury.

The form may be combined with other points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a demurrer or motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication on the issue that defendant is subject to punitive damages. The form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated, for example, that the plaintiff only suffered damage to property [Gawara v. United States Brass Corp. (1998) 63 Cal. App. 4th 1341, 1360-1363, 74 Cal. Rptr. 2d 663] .

In an appropriate case, this points and authorities may be used to oppose the contention supported by the points and authorities in § 190.223.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Punitive Damages Are Not Available in Strict Products Liability Action Absent Proof That Plaintiff Suffered Personal Injuries

In Gawara v. United States Brass Corp. (1998) 63 Cal. App. 4th 1341, 74 Cal. Rptr. 2d 663 , the plaintiffs commenced a strict products liability action against manufacturers and sellers of plumbing parts on the ground that the defendants installed defective polybutylene plumbing in their homes. A jury awarded the plaintiffs both compensatory and punitive damages.

The court of appeal reversed the judgment in part, finding that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover punitive damages because the only damage suffered was damage to property. The plaintiffs cited no California strict products liability case in which punitive damages were awarded absent proof of personal injury. There was also no evidence that the defendant's violated "rights" of the plaintiffs sufficient to support an award of punitive damages. A plaintiff must suffer personal, or other egregious, injuries to merit an award of punitive damages in a strict products liability action (63 Cal. App. 4th 1341, 1363) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
C. Damages

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.228

§ 190.228 Opposing Contention That Defendant Is Jointly and Severally Liable for Noneconomic Damages [Civ. Code § 1431.2]--Proposition 51 Requires Apportionment of Fault to Absent or Immune Tortfeasors

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities opposing the contention that the defendant is liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by a defective product (see, e.g., § 190.86).]

DEFENDANT _____ [specify name] IS NOT JOINTLY AND SEVERALLY LIABLE FOR PLAINTIFF'S NONECONOMIC DAMAGES BECAUSE PROPOSITION 51 REQUIRES ALLOCATION OF FAULT TO ALL TORTFEASORS, INCLUDING ABSENT OR IMMUNE TORTFEASORS.

Proposition 51 Contains No Exception for Damages Attributable to Fault of Persons Who Are Immune From Liability. Under Proposition 51, an award for noneconomic damages should be reduced by the amount attributable to the fault of plaintiff's employer, which is immune from liability for work-related injuries under the workers' compensation law [DaFonte v. Up-Right, Inc. (1992) 2 Cal. 4th 593, 600, 7 Cal. Rptr. 2d 238, 828 P.2d 140 ; Taylor v. John Crane Inc. (2003) 113 Cal. App. 4th 1063, 1068, 6 Cal. Rptr. 3d 695] .

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a defendant is jointly and severally liable for an award for noneconomic damages. The ground of opposition is that Proposition 51 requires allocation of fault for noneconomic damages to all tortfeasors, including absent or immune tortfeasors.

The form may be combined with other points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated, for example, that the negligence of plaintiff's employer contributed to his injury [DaFonte v. Up-Right, Inc. (1992) 2 Cal. 4th 593, 600, 7 Cal. Rptr. 2d 238, 828 P.2d 140] .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Proposition 51 Contains No Exception for Damages Attributable to Fault of Persons Who Are Immune From Liability

In DaFonte v. Up-Right, Inc. (1992) 2 Cal. 4th 593, 600, 7 Cal. Rptr. 2d 238, 828 P.2d 140 , the plaintiff was injured by equipment while on the job. The trial court reduced his award of noneconomic damages against the manufacturer by 45 percent, the amount attributable to the fault of the employer, which was immune from liability under the workers' compensation system. The Supreme Court held that this procedure was proper, explaining that there was no exception under Proposition 51 for damages attributable to the fault of persons who are immune from liability.

In Taylor v. John Crane Inc. (2003) 113 Cal. App. 4th 1063, 1068, 6 Cal. Rptr. 3d 695 , the plaintiff was diagnosed with mesothelioma after years of working as a Navy machinist. He worked with asbestos products manufactured by the defendant as well by other manufacturers. The jury found that defendant was 31 percent liable for plaintiff's injuries and the Navy, which was not a party, was 16 percent liable. The court reduced the plaintiffs' noneconomic damages by the fault allocated to the Navy. The court of appeal affirmed. Even assuming that the Navy was immune under the Feres/Stencel rule, under Proposition 51, the court properly allowed the fault of the Navy to be taken into account in allocating responsibility for plaintiff's injuries.

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
C. Damages

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.229

§ 190.229 Opposing Contention That Defendant Is Jointly and Severally Liable for Noneconomic Damages [Civ. Code § 1431.2]--Proposition 51 Applies Where Plaintiff's Injuries Are Caused by Separate Products

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum opposing the contention that defendant is liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by a defective product].

DEFENDANT _____ [specify name] IS NOT JOINTLY AND SEVERALLY LIABLE FOR PLAINTIFF'S NONECONOMIC DAMAGES BECAUSE PROPOSITION 51, REQUIRING ALLOCATION OF FAULT TO ALL TORTFEASORS, APPLIES WHEN SEPARATE PRODUCTS CAUSED PLAINTIFF'S INJURIES.

A. Proposition 51 Applies in Strict Liability Asbestos Case Where Multiple Products Caused Plaintiff's Injuries. Proposition 51 is applicable in a strict liability asbestos exposure case where multiple products cause the plaintiff's injury and the evidence provides a basis to allocate liability for noneconomic damages between defective products (Wilson v. John Crane, Inc. (2000) 81 Cal. App. 4th 847, 852, 97 Cal. Rptr. 2d 240 ; Arena v. Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corp. (1998) 63 Cal. App. 4th 1178, 1198, 74 Cal. Rptr. 2d 580).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a defendant is jointly and severally liable for an award for noneconomic damages. The ground of opposition is that Proposition 51 is applicable in a strict liability where multiple products cause the plaintiff's injury.

The form may be combined with other points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated, for example, that plaintiff's injuries were caused by multiple asbestos products and that there is a basis to apportion liability for noneconomic damages among the products (see Arena v. Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corp. (1998) 63 Cal. App. 4th 1178, 1198, 74 Cal. Rptr. 2d 580).

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

For a memorandum supporting the contention that defendant is jointly and severally liable for noneconomic damages under Civ. Code § 1431.2, see § 190.223C.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Proposition 51 Applies in Strict Liability Asbestos Case Where Multiple Products Caused Plaintiff's Injuries

In Wilson v. John Crane, Inc. (2000) 81 Cal. App. 4th 847, 97 Cal. Rptr. 2d 240 , the plaintiff developed mesothelioma after working for 37 years at various power plants. He settled against all but one defendant and proceeded to trial against that defendant alone. The jury attributed 2.5 percent of the total fault to defendant. It awarded plaintiff $595,000 in economic damages and $3 million in noneconomic damages. The jury also awarded plaintiff's wife $1 million for loss of consortium. The trial court entered an amended judgment adjusting the net award to reflect a credit for plaintiff's settlement with other defendants. The effect was to fix defendant's liability for noneconomic damages according to its proportionate share of liability, thereby reducing them from $3 million to $75,000. The loss of consortium damages were likewise reduced from $1 million to $25,000. The appellate court held that Civ. Code § 1431.2 was applicable by its terms (81 Cal. App. 4th 847, 859) .

In Arena v. Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corp. (1998) 63 Cal. App. 4th 1178, 74 Cal. Rptr. 2d 580 , the plaintiff was exposed to asbestos for 30 years while working at a shipyard. He brought a product liability action against multiple defendants to recover for his injuries. All but two defendants settled. The trial court concluded that Proposition 51 did not apply and awarded joint and several damages of $388,820.

The appellate court held that Proposition 51 applies to cases based on strict liability. It held that Wimberly v. Derby Cycle Corp*. (1997) 56 Cal. App. 4th 618, 65 Cal. Rptr. 2d 532* , could be reconciled with the policies underlying Proposition 51 by requiring apportionment of noneconomic damages between separate products which have caused a plaintiff's injuries. The court interpreted DaFonte v. Up-Right, Inc. (1992) 2 Cal. 4th 593, 7 Cal. Rptr. 2d 238, 828 P.2d 140 , as indicating the supreme court's unwillingness to base the application of Proposition 51 on either the status of the defendant or on the theory of defendant's liability. Neither principles of comparative fault nor the policy underlying Proposition 51 require the exclusion of its application in the strict liability context. The court concluded that Proposition 51 is applicable in a strict liability asbestos exposure case where multiple products cause the plaintiff's injuries and the evidence provides a basis to allocate liability for noneconomic damages between the defective products. The court remanded the action for the trial court to make the appropriate allocations pursuant to Proposition 51 (63 Cal. App. 4th 1178, 1193-1198) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
C. Damages

19-190 California Points & Authorities §§ 190.230-190.239

[Reserved]

§§ 190.230[Reserved]

141 of 179 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
D. Defenses

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.240

§ 190.240 Supporting Contention That Product Not Defective--Benefits of Its Design Outweigh Risks--Design Comported With State of the Art

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities supporting the contention that defendant is not liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product (see, e.g., § 190.120).]

THE BENEFITS OF THE DESIGN OF THE _____ [specify product] OUTWEIGH ITS RISKS, THUS RENDERING THE PRODUCT NOT DEFECTIVE, BECAUSE THE DESIGN COMPORTS WITH THE STATE OF THE ART AND AN ALTERNATIVE DESIGN IS _____ [TOO COSTLY and/or NOT FEASIBLE].

A. Evidence of Feasibility and Cost of Alternative Designs Is Relevant to Risk-Benefits Test. The feasibility and cost of alternative designs, which are peculiarly within the manufacturer's knowledge, are among the relevant factors of the risk-benefits test for a design defect that is set forth in Barker v. Lull Eng'g Co. (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 413, 143 Cal. Rptr. 225, 573 P.2d 443 (McLaughlin v. Sikorsky Aircraft (1983) 148 Cal. App. 3d 203, 210, 195 Cal. Rptr. 764).

B. Evidence of State of the Art Is Relevant to Feasibility and Cost of Alternative Designs. Evidence that a product's design comported with the state of the art is relevant to a proper determination of the cost and feasibility of alternative designs of the product (McLaughlin v. Sikorsky Aircraft (1983) 148 Cal. App. 3d 203, 210, 195 Cal. Rptr. 764).

C. Evidence of State of the Art Is Distinguishable From Evidence of Industry Custom and Usage, and Is Therefore Admissible. Unlike evidence of industry custom and usage, which constitutes evidence of the customary practices of an industry, evidence of the state of the art of a product constitutes evidence of the capabilities of an industry. Thus, although evidence of industry custom and usage is irrelevant in a products liability action, evidence of the state of the art of product is admissible in such an action (McLaughlin v. Sikorsky Aircraft (1983) 148 Cal. App. 3d 203, 210, 195 Cal. Rptr. 764).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that the product is not defective, because its design comported with the state of the art and alternative designs are too costly and not feasible, and thus its benefits outweigh its risks [see Barker v. Lull Eng'g Co. (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 413, 432, 143 Cal. Rptr. 225, 573 P.2d 443 (risk-benefits test); see also §§ 190.110 -190.114].

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication on the issue that defendant is not strictly liable. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, and in any other relevant points and authorities combined with the fore going form, to show the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should show facts indicating (1) the state of the art of the product at the time of its production, (2) the product's conformance with that state of the art, and (3) the excessive cost of an alternative design or the unfeasibility of an alternative design, or both if applicable [see, e.g., McLaughlin v. Sikorsky Aircraft (1983) 148 Cal. App. 3d 203, 195 Cal. Rptr. 764 (state of art of manufacture of aircraft as admissible)]. This may be done by attaching affidavits or declarations under penalty of perjury from expert witnesses qualified to testify about the type of product in question [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002, 2003, 2015.5].

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be used to oppose the contentions supported by the points and authorities in §§ 190.110 -190.114.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Evidence of Feasibility and Cost of Alternative Designs Is Relevant to Risk-Benefits Test

The facts and procedural background of McLaughlin v. Sikorsky Aircraft (1983) 148 Cal. App. 3d 203, 195 Cal. Rptr. 764 , are discussed in § 190.117[3][a]. Although the court of appeal reversed the judgment for defendant, the court nevertheless held that state-of-the-art evidence was relevant to the risk-benefits test of Barker v. Lull Eng'g Co. (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 413, 432, 143 Cal. Rptr. 225, 573 P.2d 443 , and was therefore admissible. Specifically, the court explained that the feasibility and cost of alternative designs are among the relevant factors of the risk-benefits test, and that evidence that the product's design comported with the state of the art is relevant to a proper determination of these cost and feasibility factors. In reaching its conclusion, the court recognized the rule that evidence of industry custom and usage is irrelevant in a products liability case [see § 190.251]. However, the court distinguished evidence of the state of the art, which constitutes evidence of the capabilities of an industry, from evidence of industry custom and usage, which constitutes evidence of the customary practices of an industry. Thus, the court found no error in admitting the state-of-the-art evidence showing industry capability (148 Cal. App. 3d 203, 210) .

[b] Evidence of State of the Art Is Relevant to Feasibility and Cost of Alternative Designs

The facts and procedural background of McLaughlin v. Sikorsky Aircraft (1983) 148 Cal. App. 3d 203, 195 Cal. Rptr. 764 , are discussed in §§ 190.117[3][a] and 190.240[3][a].

[c] Evidence of State of the Art Is Distinguishable From Evidence of Industry Custom and Usage, and Is Therefore Admissible

McLaughlin v. Sikorsky Aircraft (1983) 148 Cal. App. 3d 203, 195 Cal. Rptr. 764 , is discussed in §§ 190.117[3][a] and 190.240[3][a].

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
D. Defenses

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.241

§ 190.241 Supporting Contention That Product Not Defective--Former Civ. Code § 1714.4(a) Bars Plaintiffs from Holding a Gun Manufacturer Liable on a Common Law Negligence Theory

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities supporting the contention that defendant is not liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product.]

DEFENDANT _____ [specify manufacturer] MAY NOT BE HELD LIABLE IN A PRODUCTS LIABILITY ACTION ON THE BASIS THAT THE BENEFITS OF _____ [specify product] DO NOT OUTWEIGH THE RISK OF INJURY POSED BY THE WEAPON WHEN DISCHARGED.

Former Civil Code Section 1714.4 Provides Protection From Liability for Gun Manufacturers on Common Law Negligence Claims. Former Civil Code Section 1714.4(a) stated that in a products liability action, no firearm or ammunition shall be deemed defective in design on the basis that the benefits of the product do not outweigh the risk of injury posed by its potential to cause serious injury, damage, or death when discharged. Common law negligence claims based on the conduct of the manufacturer in designing the weapon are covered under Section 1714.4 and fall within the definition of a products liability action (Merrill v. Navegar, Inc. (2001) 26 Cal. 4th 465, 110 Cal. Rptr. 2d 370, 28 P.3d 116).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that former Civ. Code § 1714.4(a) barred plaintiff(s) from holding a gun manufacturer liable on a common law negligence theory [see Merrill v. Navegar, Inc. (2001) 26 Cal. 4th 465, 110 Cal. Rptr. 2d 370, 28 P.3d 116] .

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context

in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication on the issue that defendant is not strictly liable. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, and in any other relevant points and authorities combined with this form, to show the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Points and Authorities

For points and authorities related to the duty to use ordinary care with respect to the design, distribution, or marketing of firearms and ammunition, see § 190.199A.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Former Civ. Code § 1714.4 Provides Protection From Liability for Gun Manufacturers on Common Law Negligence Claims

In Merrill v. Navegar, Inc. (2001) 26 Cal. 4th 465, 110 Cal. Rptr. 2d 370, 28 P.3d 116 , a gunman killed eight people and wounded six before turning a gun on himself during a shooting rampage at a high-rise office building. The gunman used two semiautomatic assault pistols produced by Navegar, Inc. Plaintiff's brought an action in negligence, negligence per se, and strict liability. In their common law negligence claim, plaintiff's alleged that the manufacturer acted negligently by manufacturing, marketing, and making these weapons available to the general public because the benefits did not outweigh the risk they might inflict serious injury or death when discharged. Navegar moved for summary judgment arguing in part that former Civ. Code § 1714.4 barred the plaintiffs' benefit-risk theory of negligence. Plaintiff's responded that former Civ. Code § 1714.4 had no application in this case because it was not a products liability action. The trial court granted Navegar's motion holding that courts have refused to impose a duty on a gun manufacturer not to sell their products because of the potential misuse of the product by a third party. However, the court rejected Navegar's reliance on former Civ. Code § 1714.4 in a footnote, finding the statute inapplicable because plaintiffs were not asserting a "products liability theory."

The plaintiffs appealed the trial court's decision. The court of appeal reversed the trial court's grant of summary judgment for Navegar on plaintiffs' common law negligence theory. The court concluded that Navegar had a legal duty not to manufacture, market and distribute the weapon in a manner that increases the risk of harm inherent in handguns. However, they agreed with the trial court that former Civ. Code § 1714.4 was inapplicable since it was not a products liability action.

On review, the Supreme Court reversed the court of appeals judgment with directions to affirm the summary judgment for Navegar. The Court held that the basis of plaintiffs' argument that they seek to hold Navegar liable for "negligent conduct, not for making a defective product," and that they "make no assertion that Navegar should be liable because the risks posed by the weapon outweigh its benefits," was not determinative. The Court had held previously in Jiminez v. Sears, Roebuck & Co. (1971) 4 Cal. 3d 379, 387, 93 Cal. Rptr. 769, 482 P.2d 681 , that a plaintiff may premise a products liability action on the negligence of the defendant. The Court held that the plaintiff could not avoid the legislative policy reflected in former Civ. Code § 1714.4 by simply declining to use the word "defect" or "defective," or reformulating their claim to be negligent distribution to the general public. Plaintiffs' claim that Navegar's decision to distribute their product to the general public was negligent, given the weapon's particular design features, was simply a reformulated claim that the weapon, as designed, failed the risk/benefit test (26 Cal. 4th 465, 481) .

NOTE:

Civ. Code § 1714.4 was repealed in 2002, probably in response to the Merrill decision. That same year, the California legislature amended Civ. Code § 1714(a) to add that "[t]he design, distribution, or marketing of firearms and ammunition is not exempt from the duty to use ordinary care and skill that is required by this section. ..."

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
D. Defenses

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.242

§ 190.242 Supporting Contention That Defendant Is Not Liable--Adequate Warning on Product

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities supporting the contention that defendant is not liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product (see, e.g., §§ 190.164 -190.171).]

DEFENDANT _____ [name] IS NOT [STRICTLY] LIABLE TO PLAINTIFF, BECAUSE ADEQUATE WARNING WAS GIVEN TO USERS OF _____ [specify product].

[EITHER]

A. Adequate Warning Is Sufficient Defense to Strict Products Liability Action. An adequate warning of a product's dangers is a sufficient defense to a strict liability action for injuries sustained from the product (Temple v. Velcro USA, Inc. (1983) 148 Cal. App. 3d 1090, 1094, 196 Cal. Rptr. 531).

[AND/OR]

B. Adequate Warning Is Warranty Disclaimer and Negates Negligence and Wilful Misconduct. An adequate warning is a proper disclaimer to any express or implied warranties, and negates any negligence or willful misconduct (Temple v. Velcro USA, Inc. (1983) 148 Cal. App. 3d 1090, 1094, 196 Cal. Rptr. 531).

[Optional] C. Adequate Warning Is Given if Placed on Product or if Sent to Owners of Product. Warning of a product's dangers is adequate if it adequately informs the user of the danger and it is placed on the product or, if the dangerousness of the product is realized only after its sale, it is sent to each owner of the product (Temple v. Velcro USA, Inc. (1983) 148 Cal. App. 3d 1090, 1094, 196 Cal. Rptr. 531).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that the product is not defective, because it contained an adequate warning or because defendant sent adequate warning to each of its owners.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication on the issue that defendant is not strictly liable. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, and in any other relevant points and authorities combined with this form, to show the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should state that warning was put on the product or, if the product's danger was realized only after its sale, was sent to each owner of the product. Counsel should further state the contents of the warning and show that the contents adequately warned the user of the product's danger [see, e.g., Temple v. Velcro USA, Inc. (1983) 148 Cal. App. 3d 1090, 196 Cal. Rptr. 531 (adequate warning sent to each owner of closure on hot air balloon deflation panel)].

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be used to oppose the contentions supported by the points and authorities in §§ 190.160 -190.162.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Adequate Warning Is Sufficient Defense to Strict Products Liability Action

In Temple v. Velcro USA, Inc. (1983) 148 Cal. App. 3d 1090, 196 Cal. Rptr. 531 , plaintiff's decedent was killed when the hot air balloon in which he was riding plummeted to the ground, because of the failure of a closure on the balloon's deflation panel. Plaintiff brought an action in strict liability, negligence, and warranty against the manufacturer of the closure. Defendant introduced evidence that after its product was on the market, it discovered that some owners were using it in hot air balloons, which was found to be inherently dangerous. Defendant had then sent a warning to all owners of balloons using its product, including plaintiff's decedent, who received his warning before his fatal accident. The warning informed each owner that the closure should not be used in hot air balloons, and that such use was inherently dangerous, was not designed for that purpose, and was improper. Defendant moved for summary judgment, which was granted. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that an adequate warning is a sufficient defense to a strict liability action. The court noted that although the warning had not been placed on the product, because defendant did not realize its dangerousness until after the sale, warning was nevertheless eventually given, and plaintiff's decedent should have read its contents before further using the balloon. The court also stated that adequate warning is a proper disclaimer to any express or implied warranties and negates any negligence or willful misconduct. The court then examined the language of the warning and held that the trial court had properly found the language to be an adequate warning as a matter of law. Thus, summary judgment was proper (148 Cal. App. 3d 1090, 1094-1095) .

[b] Adequate Warning Is Warranty Disclaimer and Negates Negligence and Willful Misconduct

Temple v. Velcro USA, Inc. (1983) 148 Cal. App. 3d 1090, 196 Cal. Rptr. 531 , is discussed in § 190.242[3][a].

[c] Adequate Warning Is Given if Placed on Product or if Sent to Owners of Product

Temple v. Velcro USA, Inc. (1983) 148 Cal. App. 3d 1090, 196 Cal. Rptr. 531 , is discussed in § 190.242[3][a].

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
D. Defenses

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.243

§ 190.243 Supporting Contention That Defendant Is Not Liable--Government Contractor Immunity

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities supporting the contention that defendant is not liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product (see, e.g., §§ 190.164 -190.171).]

DEFENDANT _____ [name] IS NOT [STRICTLY] LIABLE TO PLAINTIFF, BECAUSE THE _____ [specify military equipment involved in injury, e.g., HELICOPTER] WAS DESIGNED BY DEFENDANT IN HIS/HER CAPACITY AS A GOVERNMENT CONTRACTOR AND THAT _____ [specify military equipment, e.g., HELICOPTER] CONFORMED TO SPECIFICATIONS MADE BY THE UNITED STATES.

A. Government Contractor Immunity Provides Protection From Liability for Design Defects. The doctrine of government contractor immunity protects the contractor from liability for design defects in military equipment if: (1) the United States approved reasonably precise specifications; (2) the equipment conformed to those specifications; and (3) the supplier warned the United States about dangers in the use of the equipment that were known to the supplier but not to the United States Boyle v. United Techs. Corp. (1988) 487 U.S. 500, 108 S. Ct. 2510, 101 L. Ed. 2d 442, 458 ; Oxford v. Foster Wheeler LLC (1990) 177 Cal. App. 4th 700, 708, 99 Cal. Rptr. 3d 418 ; McKay v. Rockwell Int'l Corp. (9th Cir. 1983) 704 F.2d 444, 451) .

B. Commercially Available Products Are Subject to Government Contractor Defense. The fact that a product is commercially available does not deprive its manufacturer of the government contractor defense (Oxford v. Foster Wheeler LLC (1990) 177 Cal. App. 4th 700, 710, 99 Cal. Rptr. 3d 418 ; Jackson v. Deft, Inc. (1990) 223 Cal. App. 3d 1305, 1319, 273 Cal. Rptr. 214).

C. Government Contractor Defense Applies to Negligence Claims. The government contractor defense is not limited to products liability causes of action and applies to related negligence claims (Oxford v. Foster Wheeler LLC (1990) 177 Cal. App. 4th 700, 710, 99 Cal. Rptr. 3d 418).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that the defendant is not liable for any injuries to the plaintiff because the defendant was immunized by the government contractor immunity.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication on the issue that the defendant is not liable. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should attach copies of the government's detailed specifications, rather than merely alleging the general contract requirements, in order to show that the specifications were required by the government.

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in §§ 190.257, 190.258, and 190.258.1 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Government Contractor Immunity Provides Protection From Liability for Design Defects

In Boyle v. United Techs. Corp. (1988) 487 U.S. 500, 108 S. Ct. 2510, 101 L. Ed. 2d 442 , a Marine helicopter copilot was killed when his helicopter crashed and he was unable to escape and drowned. The copilot's father sued defendant, builder of the helicopter. The district court's judgment in favor of plaintiff was reversed by the court of appeals. Plaintiff appealed.

The United States Supreme Court vacated the court of appeals judgment and remanded the case. The Court explained that a few areas, involving uniquely federal interests, are so committed by the Constitution and laws of the United States to federal control that state law is preempted and replaced, when necessary, by federal common law. The Court characterized the government contractor defense as involving two areas that involve such uniquely federal interests. The first is the obligations to and rights of the United States under its contracts. Although the issue involves an obligation to third persons under a government contract rather than to the United States, and may be classified as a tort, that liability arises out of performance of the contract. The second is the civil liability of federal officials for actions taken in the course of their duty. The Court observed that the federal contractor defense involves an independent contractor performing its obligation under a procurement contract, rather than an official performing his or her duty as a federal employee, but the same interest in getting the government's work done is obviously implicated (487 U.S. 500) . The Court explained that the federal government's interest in the procurement of equipment is implicated in this case even though the dispute is one between private parties. The imposition of liability on government contractors will directly affect the terms of government contracts: either the contractor will decline to manufacture the design specified by the government, or it will raise its price. Either way, the interests of the United States will be directly affected (487 U.S. 500, 505) . After finding that the procurement of equipment by the United States is an area of uniquely federal interest, the Court explained that displacement of state law is appropriate only when a significant conflict exists between an identifiable federal policy or interest and the operation of state law, or the application of state law would frustrate specific objeces of federal legislation (487 U.S. 500, 505-507) . It concluded that the state-imposed duty of care that is the asserted basis of defendant contractor's liability is precisely contrary to the duty imposed by the government contract

(the duty to manufacture and deliver helicopters with the sort of escape hatch mechanism shown by the specifications) (487 U.S. 500, 509) . The Court found a significant conflict between federal interests and state law in the context of government procurement. In the Federal Tort Claims Act, Congress authorized damages to be recovered against the United States for harm caused by the negligent or wrongful conduct of government employees, to the extent that a private person would be liable under the law of the place where the conduct occurred. However, excepted from this consent by 28 U.S.C.S. § 2680(a) is any claim based on the exercise or performance or the failure to exercise or perform a discretionary function or duty on the part of a federal agency or an employee of the government, whether or not the discretion involved be abused (487 U.S. 500, 511) . The Court said that the selection of the appropriate design for military equipment to be used by the armed forces is a discretionary function. It makes little sense to insulate the government against financial liability for the judgment that a particular feature of military equipment is necessary when the government produces the equipment itself, but not when it contracts for the production. The Court concluded that state law that holds government contractors liable for design defects in military equipment does in some circumstances present a significant conflict with federal policy and must be displaced (487 U.S. 500, 510-513). The Court held that liability for design defects in military equipment cannot be imposed, pursuant to state law, when (1) the United States approved reasonably precise specifications; (2) the equipment conformed to those specifications; and (3) the supplier warned the United States about dangers in the use of the equipment that were known to the supplier but not to the United States. The Court said the first two of these conditions assure that the suit is within the area where the policy of the discretionary function would be frustrated, i.e., they assure that the design feature in question was considered by a government officer, and not merely by the contractor itself. The third condition is necessary because in its absence the displacement of state tort law would create some incentive for the manufacturer to withhold knowledge of risks (conveying that knowledge might disrupt the contract, but withholding it would produce no liability). The Court said it adopted the third condition to prevent its effort to protect discretionary functions from being impeded by cutting off information highly relevant to the discretionary decision (487 U.S. 500, 512) .

Oxford v. Foster Wheeler LLC (1990) 177 Cal. App. 4th 700, 99 Cal. Rptr. 3d 418 , is discussed in 190.243[3][b].

In McKay v. Rockwell Int'l Corp. (9th Cir. 1983) 704 F.2d 444 , two widows of Navy pilots whose husbands died in unrelated crashes of naval aircraft brought actions against defendant, manufacturer of the aircraft, seeking damages for the deaths of their husbands. The actions were consolidated. The district court rendered judgment for plaintiffs. Plaintiffs appealed the measure and amount of damages. Defendant also appealed, contending that military suppliers should not be liable to members of the armed forces for injuries caused by defects in military hardware.

The court of appeal reversed and remanded. The court initially explained that under the Feres-Stencel doctrine the United States is immune from liability for the deaths of the pilots. It then addressed the government contractor defense, explaining that the defense protects a government contractor from liability for acts done by him or her while complying with government specifications during execution of performance of a contract with the United States. The defense is applicable even when the United States is immune from suit. Historically, the government contractor defense was applied only to construction projects, but now applies to military equipment design defect cases (704 F.2d 444, 448) . The reasons for applying the government contractor defense to suppliers of military equipment with design defects approved by the government parallel those supporting the Feres-Stencel doctrine. First, the United States cannot be directly or indirectly liable to armed services personnel injured by defective military products. However, holding the suppliers liable in government contractor cases without regard to the extent of government involvement in fixing the product's design and specifications would subvert the Feres-Stencel rule, as suppliers would pass the cost of accidents on the to the United States through higher prices, despite the government's immunity. Second, to hold military suppliers liable for defective designs when the United States set or approved the design specifications would thrust the judiciary into the making of military decisions. Trials on design defects when government specifications are at issue would involve second guessing military orders, and would often require members of the Armed Services to testify regarding each other's decisions and actions. Third, in setting specifications for military equipment, the United States is required by the exigencies of defense efforts to push technology towards its limits and thereby to incur risks beyond those that would ordinarily be acceptable. A supplier is generally unable to negotiate the elimination of those risks. Finally, a government contractor defense provides incentives for suppliers of military equipment to work closely with and to consult the military authorities in the development and testing of equipment. The defense thus encourages fixing the locus of responsibility for military equipment design with more precision than is possible under a system in which the defense is not allowed (704 F.2d 444, 449-450) . The court held that under the Feres-Stencel doctrine and the government contractor rule, a supplier of military equipment is not subject to strict liability for a design defect when: (1) the United States is immune from liability under Feres and Stencel; (2) the supplier proves that the United States established, or approved, reasonably precise specifications for the allegedly defective military equipment; (3) the equipment conformed to those specifications; and (4) the supplier warned the United States about patent errors in the government's specifications or about dangers involved in the use of the equipment that were known to the supplier but not to the United States. The court explained that the imposition of the duty to warn of known defects is necessary to enable the United States to balance the risks and benefits inherent in the use of the equipment. The court acknowledged the impreciseness of the term "military equipment." It did not define the term, but set forth its parameters as somewhere between an ordinary consumer product purchased by the armed forces and the escape system of a reconnaissance aircraft. It noted that the rule does not relieve suppliers of military equipment of liability for defects in the manufacture of an ordinary consumer product purchased by the armed forces. To hold otherwise would remove the incentive from manufacturers to use all cost-justified means to conform to government specifications in the manufacture of military equipment (704 F.2d 444, 451) .

[b] Commercially Available Products Are Subject to Government Contractor Defense

In Oxford v. Foster Wheeler LLC (1990) 177 Cal. App. 4th 700, 99 Cal. Rptr. 3d 418 , the decedent was exposed to asbestos while working in the boiler repair shop on a navy vessel at various shipyards. Defendant had manufactured the boilers pursuant to detailed military specifications. Decedent developed mesothelioma many years later. His widow brought a wrongful death action alleging products liability and negligence. In a special verdict, the jury found against the plaintiff on her products liability claims for design defect and failure to warn, but in favor of plaintiffs on her negligence claim. The jury also found that the defendant had proven the three elements of the government contractor defense. The trial court found that the defense did not foreclose judgment against the defendant, reasoning that the defense verdict on the products liability claim did not subsume the jury's finding on negligent failure to warn, and that the government contractor defense does not apply to failure to warn claims.

The Court of Appeal reversed and remanded the action for a new trial, holding that the special verdict form was irreconcilability inconsistent. It did, however, agree with the trial court that jury's verdict on the government contractor defense did not entitle the defendant to judgment in its favor.

The court first agreed with Jackson v. Deft, Inc., (1990) 223 Cal. App. 3d 1305, 273 Cal. Rptr. 214 , that commercial availability of a product is not the dispositive issue regarding the defense. Confining the defense to products made exclusively for the military would be "unduly confining." Rather, the focus is whether the area involves "uniquely federal interests," and if so, whether application of state law conflicts with federal policy. The court determined that substantial evidence supported each of the jury's findings regarding the three elements of the defense. Moreover, the defense applies to related negligence claims.

However, the government contractor defense does not immunize a defendant from all liability. The defense has limited application in failure-to-warn cases, coming into play only if the applicable federal contract includes warning requirements that significantly conflict with those that would be imposed under state law. The jury here had not been given a government contractor defense tailored to the failure-to-warn context. Although the jury's findings appeared to preclude liability for claims relating to the design of the boilers, the defense did not necessarily immunize defendant from liability on the failure-to-warn claims (177 Cal. App. 4th 700, 709-710) .

Jackson v. Deft, Inc. (1990) 223 Cal. App. 3d 1305, 273 Cal. Rptr. 214 , is discussed in 190.258[3][a].

[c] Government Contractor Defense Applies to Negligence Claims.

Oxford v. Foster Wheeler LLC (1990) 177 Cal. App. 4th 700, 99 Cal. Rptr. 3d 418 , is discussed in 190.243[3][b].

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
D. Defenses

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.244

§ 190.244 Supporting Contention That Defendant Is Not Liable in Action Based on Negligence--Successor Manufacturer Not Liable for Product of Predecessor Absent Existence of Factors That Would Justify Liability

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities supporting the contention that defendant is not liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product (see, e.g., §§ 190.89 and 190.164 -190.171).]

DEFENDANT _____ [name] IS NOT LIABLE TO PLAINTIFF, BECAUSE THE _____ [describe product, e.g., PRESCRIPTION DRUG DIETHYLSTILBESTROL] THAT WAS ALLEGEDLY PRODUCED NEGLIGENTLY AND THAT ALLEGEDLY CAUSED PLAINTIFF'S INJURIES WAS MANUFACTURED BY A PREDECESSOR CORPORATION OF DEFENDANT, AND DEFENDANT CORPORATION HAS INSUFFICIENT CONNECTIONS WITH THE PREDECESSOR CORPORATION TO WARRANT THE IMPOSITION OF LIABILITY ON IT.

Successor Corporation Not Liable for Negligence of Predecessor Under General Liability Theory Absent Existence of Factors That Would Justify Liability. A corporation that purchases the principal assets of another corporation does not assume the predecessor corporation's liabilities unless: (1) there is an express or implied agreement of assumption; (2) the transaction amounts to a consolidation or merger of the two corporations; (3) the purchasing corporation is a mere continuation of the seller; or (4) the transfer of assets to the purchaser is for the fraudulent purpose of escaping liability for the seller's debts (Monarch Bay II v. Professional Serv. Indus., Inc. (1999) 75 Cal. App. 4th 1213, 89 Cal. Rptr. 2d 778 ; Maloney v. American Pharm. Co. (1988) 207 Cal. App. 3d 282, 287, 255 Cal. Rptr. 1).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that the defendant is not liable for any injuries to the plaintiff because the product that allegedly caused the injuries was manufactured by a predecessor corporation, and defendant, as the successor corporation, did not purchase the business under circumstances that warrant imposition of liability on it [see Monarch Bay II v. Professional Serv. Indus., Inc. (1999) 75 Cal. App. 4th 1213, 89 Cal. Rptr. 2d 778 ; Maloney v. American Pharm. Co. (1988) 207 Cal. App. 3d 282, 287-290, 255 Cal. Rptr. 1] .

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a motion for summary judgment.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should set forth the circumstances of the sale of the predecessor corporation's assets, and show that the requisite connections between the corporations are absent under the general theory of successor liability.

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in § 190.78 and § 190.79 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[c] Related Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in § 190.89 may be added to to support the contention that a successor corporation is not liable for injuries caused by a predecessor's product.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Successor Corporation Not Liable for Negligence of Predecessor Under General Liability Theory Absent Existence of Factors That Would Justify Liability

In Monarch Bay II v. Professional Serv. Indus., Inc. (1999) 75 Cal. App. 4th 1213, 89 Cal. Rptr. 2d 778 , an apartment complex was built on a site certified by a geotechnical firm. After the buildings were completed and occupied, the defendant corporation purchased all the assets of the geotechnical firm, including its goodwill. The defendant corporation also assumed all equipment and building leases, hired the predecessor's two shareholders and its employees, and both signed a covenant not to compete for two years (75 Cal. App. 4th 1213, 1215). In the meantime, Monarch Bay II had acquired the project from the original apartment complex owner. In 1992, the hillside under the project gave way, damaging two buildings and requiring their evacuation. Monarch Bay II sued all the parties involved in the geological investigation and construction of the project. The plaintiff named the successor corporation of the geotechnical engineering firm based on Ray v. Alad Corp., (1977) 19 Cal. 3d 22, 136 Cal. Rptr. 574 . The trial court granted the defendant corporation's motion for summary judgment, finding that the Ray exception, which allows for a successor to be liable for the liabilities of its predecessor, applies only to strict products liability claims (75 Cal. App. 4th 1213, 1216) . On appeal, the court affirmed the judgment (75 Cal. App. 4th 1213, 1219) . The court of appeal rejected the plaintiff's contention that it had presented sufficient evidence to meet the exception for successor non-liability under a strict liability theory, based on Ray v. Alad Corp. (1977) 19 Cal. 3d 22, 136 Cal. Rptr. 574, 560 P.2d 3 [see § 190.79[3][a]]. The court of appeal held that the exception that created successor liability was based entirely on the policies underlying strict liability claim and not the policies of general negligence (75 Cal. App. 4th 1213, 1217) . The court also disagreed with the plaintiff's contention that the factual distinctions in Maloney v. American Pharmaceutical Co. rendered that decision inapplicable, noting that the Maloney court's conclusion that Ray applied only to strict liability was unequivocal and had nothing to do with factual distinctions (75 Cal. App. 4th 1213, 1217-1218) . The court of appeal saw no policy reasons to extend the Ray exception to claims for general negligence, noting that such an extension would further complicate the transfer of assets, increase transaction costs, defeat the legitimate expectations of the parties to a negotiation and sale, and reduce the number of opportunities for a financially troubled company (75 Cal. App. 4th 1213, 1218) .

In Maloney v. American Pharm. Co. (1988) 207 Cal. App. 3d 282, 255 Cal. Rptr. 1 , a manufacturer of diethylstilbestrol (DES) experienced financial difficulties. Its president assisted the principal secured creditor in liquidating the assets, and he subsequently formed the defendant corporation, which purchased from the creditor the predecessor's name, goodwill, and patents and trademarks, limited to nonprescription drug products only. The assets sold to defendant constituted approximately 10 percent of the total liquidated assets of the predecessor corporation, and did not include any machinery, equipment, buildings, inventory, stock, or accounts receivable. Defendant corporation never made or sold any prescription drugs, and in particular, never made or sold DES. Plaintiffs, a woman who ingested DES manufactured by the predecessor company and her daughter, allegedly suffered injuries caused by the drug. They brought an action against defendant corporation on theories of strict liability for a defective product, negligent manufacture, breach of implied warranty, breach of express warranty, and fraud. Defendant filed a motion for summary judgment on the ground that it was a mere successor corporation of the manufacturer of the product, and that it neither marketed nor manufactured the drug DES. The trial court granted the motion and entered a judgment of dismissal, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that plaintiffs failed to show that defendant's connections with the predecessor corporation were sufficient to warrant the imposition of liability (207 Cal. App. 3d 282, 287-290) . The court initially noted that plaintiffs presently asserted liability on the sole theory of negligent manufacture of DES, and not for strict liability or breach of warranty, pursuant to retroactive application of Brown v. Superior Court (1988) 44 Cal. 3d 1049, 1066, 1072, 245 Cal. Rptr. 412, 751 P.2d 470 , which held those theories inapplicable under the circumstances [see § 190.90[3][a]]. The usual rule of successor liability is that a corporation purchasing the principal assets of another corporation assumes the other's liabilities only if: (1) there is an express or implied agreement of assumption; (2) the transaction amounts to a consolidation or merger of the two corporations; (3) the purchasing corporation is a mere continuation of the seller; or (4) the transfer of assets to the purchaser is for the fraudulent purpose of escaping liability for the seller's debts. The court rejected plaintiffs' contention that defendant was liable for the predecessor's negligent acts on the third ground stated above, that is, that it was a mere continuation of the predecessor corporation. Before one corporation can be said to be a mere continuation or reincarnation of another, there must be insufficient consideration running from the new company to the old (207 Cal. App. 3d 282, 287) . In this case, there is no evidence of insufficient consideration for the sale. Although plaintiffs correctly stated that defendant corporation held itself out to customers as a continuation of the predecessor corporation, they failed to show inadequate consideration, an essential requirement in imposing liability. Additional factors negating plaintiffs' contention are that: (1) the two corporations shared only one officer, and mere continuation typically involves several common officers; (2) 10 percent of the liquidated assets do not constitute "principal assets"; and (3) the sale occurred from the predecessor's secured creditor to the successor corporation, and not directly from predecessor to successor corporation. The court rejected plaintiffs' contention that the criteria set forth in Ray v. Alad Corp. (1977) 19 Cal. 3d 22, 136 Cal. Rptr. 574, 560 P.2d 3 should be applied in lieu of the general rule of successor liability [see § 190.79[3][a]]. The Court in Ray held that imposition of strict liability on a successor corporation theory should not be determined according to the general rule of successor liability, but rather required analysis under a discrete set of factors. Under Ray, imposition of strict liability on a successor to a manufacturer rests on: (1) the virtual destruction of the plaintiff's remedies against the original manufacturer caused bhe successor's acquisition of the business; (2) the successor's ability to assume the original manufacturer's risk-spreading role; and (3) the fairness of requiring the successor to assume a responsibility for defective products that was a burden necessarily attached to the enjoyment by the successor of the predecessor's good will. The court rejected plaintiffs' contention that Ray applies to negligence as well as strict liability theory, noting that Ray clearly states that it created an exception to the general rule of successor liability for the purpose of establishing a discrete rule for a strict liability cause of action (207 Cal. App. 3d 282, 289) . Inasmuch as plaintiffs were unable to allege a strict liability theory (pursuant to application of Brown), Ray is also inapplicable (207 Cal. App. 3d 282, 289-290) . Consequently, the court affirmed summary judgment for defendant and dismissal (207 Cal. App. 3d 282, 290) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Successor to Manufacturing Corporation Not Liable in Absence of Exception to General Rule of Successor Nonliability

In Franklin v. USX Corp. (2001) 87 Cal. App. 4th 615, 105 Cal. Rptr. 2d 11 , plaintiffs claimed that their decedent contracted cancer as a result of childhood exposure to asbestos carried home by her parents while working at a ship yard. They attempted to hold the defendant liable as the successor to the shipyard. However, the language of the purchasing agreement unambiguously showed that the successor did not assume the tort liabilities of its predecessor. Nor was there liability under the de facto merger, mere continuation, or product line exceptions (87 Cal. App. 4th 615, 621-625, 105 Cal. Rptr. 2d 11).

In Chaknova v. Wilbur-Ellis Co. (1999) 69 Cal. App. 4th 962, 81 Cal. Rptr. 2d 871 , the decedent developed asbestosis as a result of exposure to asbestos-containing products distributed by a company later purchased the defendant. A letter written by defendant's attorney to the state Commissioner of Corporations, in which he discussed defendant's "assumption of the balance of [the distributor's] liabilities," did not amount to an assumption of liabilities for the distributor's tortious acts. Nor did defendant assume the distributor's tort liabilities when it merged with its wholly owned subsidiary to which had been transferred the right, title, and interest in the distributor's assets and business. Because nothing in the purchase agreement between the defendant and the distributor made defendant liable for any of the distributor's pre-sale tort liabilities, the subsidiary did not acquire those liabilities when it acquired the distributor's assets and was still not liable for them when it later merged with its parent (69 Cal. App. 4th 962, 968-969, 81 Cal. Rptr. 2d 871).

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
D. Defenses

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.245

§ 190.245 Supporting Contention That Comparative Indemnity Applies--Defendant Is Entitled to Comparative Apportionment of Liability

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities supporting the contention that other defendants are liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by a defective product (see, e.g., § 190.246).]

LIABILITY FOR INJURIES CAUSED BY A DEFECTIVE PRODUCT MUST BE APPORTIONED BETWEEN/AMONG DEFENDANTS IN CONFORMITY WITH THE COMPARATIVE FAULT FINDINGS RENDERED BY THE JURY AT TRIAL.

A. Liability Is Apportioned in Conformity With Comparative Fault Findings. In an action for injuries caused by a defective product, liability is appropriately apportioned between or among the tortfeasors in conformity with the comparative fault findings rendered by the jury at trial (Safeway Stores, Inc. v. Nest-Kart (1978) 21 Cal. 3d 322, 325, 146 Cal. Rptr. 550, 579 P.2d 441).

[Optional] B. Liability Is Apportioned Even When Liability of One Defendant Derives From Negligence While Liability of Other Derives From Strict Products Liability. The comparative indemnity doctrine is a permissible basis for apportioning liability between tortfeasors when the liability of one defendant derives from negligence, while the liability of another defendant derives from strict products liability (Safeway Stores, Inc. v. Nest-Kart (1978) 21 Cal. 3d 322, 325, 328, 146 Cal. Rptr. 550, 579 P.2d 441).

[Optional] C. Liability Is Apportioned Between Strictly Liable Tortfeasors. Multiple tortfeasors who are strictly liable to the same plaintiff may seek comparative indemnity from each other (Gentry Constr. Co. v. Superior Court (1989) 212 Cal. App. 3d 177, 182-183, 260 Cal. Rptr. 421).

[Optional] D. With Regard to Noneconomic Damages, Defendant's Percentage of Fault Must Be Compared to

Fault of All Persons Who Contributed to Injury. Each defendant is liable only for the amount of noneconomic damages allocated to that defendant in direct proportion to that defendant's percentage of fault (Civ. Code § 1431.2(a)). To determine the defendant's share, the defendant's fault must be compared with all fault responsible for the plaintiff's injuries, even if the other persons responsible are not parties or are immune from tort liability (DaFonte v. Up-Right, Inc. (1992) 2 Cal. 4th 593, 602-603, 7 Cal. Rptr. 2d 238, 828 P.2d 140 ; Wilson v. John Crane, Inc. (2000) 81 Cal. App. 4th 847, 851-852, 97 Cal. Rptr. 2d 240).

[2] Comments

CAUTION:

Special rules apply to the responsibility of a franchisee to a franchisor for products liability concerning a new motor vehicle [see Veh. Code § 3064(a); see also California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 515, Securities and Franchise Regulation (Matthew Bender)].

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that liability must be apportioned between or among defendants, regardless of whether liability is based on negligence or strict liability.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication on the issue that defendant is not solely liable for plaintiff's injuries. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in the form and in any other relevant points and authorities combined with the form, to show the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should state the jury findings apportioning liability or, if the matter has not proceeded to trial, facts indicating a proper apportionment of liability [see, e.g., Safeway Stores, Inc. v. Nest-Kart (1978) 21 Cal. 3d 322, 146 Cal. Rptr. 550, 579 P.2d 441 (liability as apportioned on 80-to-20 basis to comport with jury findings)].

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion and forms relating specifically to cross complaints for comparative indemnity regarding products liability, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 460, Products Liability (Matthew Bender). For discussion and forms relating to indemnity generally, see Ch. 300, California Forms of Pleading and Practice , Indemnity and Contribution (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Points and Authorities

For forms of memoranda of points and authorities related to indemnity in general, see Ch. 115, Indemnity and Contribution .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Liability Is Apportioned in Conformity With Comparative Fault Findings

In Safeway Stores, Inc. v. Nest-Kart (1978) 21 Cal. 3d 322, 146 Cal. Rptr. 550, 579 P.2d 441 , plaintiff was seriously injured while in a supermarket when the shopping cart that she was using broke and fell on her foot. Plaintiff brought an action in strict liability and negligence against the supermarket and the manufacturer of the cart. The jury returned a verdict for plaintiff, indicating that defendant supermarket's liability was grounded on both negligence and strict liability principles, while defendant manufacturer's liability was grounded solely on strict liability principles. The jury found that defendant supermarket's comparative fault was 80 percent, and that defendant manufacturer's was 20 percent. The trial court entered a judgment of $20,000, which defendants satisfied on an 80-to-20 percent basis. Defendant supermarket then moved for a judgment of contribution to require defendant manufacturer to pay an additional 30 percent of the judgment to defendant supermarket, to achieve an equal 50-to-50 apportionment. The trial court granted the motion, and defendant manufacturer appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed the order of a 50-to-50 apportionment between the two tortfeasors, holding that comparative fault principles dictated that the proper apportionment should reflect the jury finding of an 80-to-20 percent apportionment of fault. The Court held that comparative indemnity was to be used as the basis for apportioning liability between two tortfeasors, one whose liability rests on California's strict products liability doctrine and the other whose liability derives, at least in part, from negligence theory. The Court explained that the same basic equitable considerations that led to the adoption of the comparative apportionment rule of liability among multiple tortfeasors, as outlined in American Motorcycle Assn. v. Superior Court of Los Angeles County (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 578 , applied equally to strictly liable defendants (21 Cal. 3d 322, 327-332) . The Court also held that American Motorcycle was retroactive to this case and to those cases in which the comparative indemnity question was properly preserved at trial and on appeal (21 Cal. 3d 322, 334) .

[b] Liability Is Apportioned Even When Liability of One Defendant Derives From Negligence While Liability of Other Derives From Strict Products Liability

Safeway Stores, Inc. v. Nest-Kart (1978) 21 Cal. 3d 322, 146 Cal. Rptr. 550, 579 P.2d 441 , is discussed in § 190.245[3][a].

[c] Liability Is Apportioned Between Strictly Liable Tortfeasors

In Gentry Constr. Co. v. Superior Court (1989) 212 Cal. App. 3d 177, 260 Cal. Rptr. 421 , a homeowner brought an action in strict liability against the contractor that built his house, the developer that graded the lots, and others, seeking damages arising from allegedly defective soil conditions. The contractor, which purchased the land from the developer, cross complained against the developer, stating causes of action, among others, for comparative indemnity as well as total indemnity based on the developer's strict liability. The trial court granted summary adjudication for the developer in holding that the contractor, as a matter of law, cannot maintain a cause of action in strict products liability against the developer. The contractor filed a petition for writ of mandate, requesting the court of appeal to direct the trial court to vacate its finding on that issue.

The court of appeal denied the petition (212 Cal. App. 3d 177, 184) . The court first noted that the contractor, as a commercial plaintiff, may not rely on the doctrine of strict liability to recover its losses (212 Cal. App. 3d 177, 180) . The court further noted that this case involved not simply losses incurred by a commercial enterprise, but rather losses incurred by a consumer who potentially had a claim for strict liability. The court stated that when two tortfeasors may both be strictly liable to a consumer, no authority prevents one of the tortfeasors from attempting to shift responsibility for the consumer's losses to the other tortfeasor by seeking comparative indemnity under the principles set forth in American Motorcycle Assn. v. Superior Court of Los Angeles County (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 578 . The court noted that other jurisdictions have allowed indemnity between strictly liable tortfeasors, and that the California Supreme Court, in Safeway Stores, Inc., v. Nest-Kart (1981) 21 Cal. 3d 322, 146 Cal. Rptr. 550, 579 P.2d 441 [see § 190.245[3][a]], suggested that indemnity is available in California under those circumstances (212 Cal. App. 3d 177, 181) .

The court noted that other cases that have created exceptions to the rule of comparative indemnity have done so only when, because of the particular factual context, fairness did not require that any part of the loss be shifted from a defendant to a third party, or when the loss-shifting would interfere in a special relationship between the plaintiff and the third party (212 Cal. App. 3d 177, 181-182) . Unlike those situations, in the case of two strictly liable tortfeasors, fairness dictates that the plaintiff's damages be allocated between the tortfeasors in proportion to their responsibility for the plaintiff's injuries. The court held that multiple tortfeasors who are strictly liable to the same plaintiff may seek comparative indemnity from each other or from negligent tortfeasors (212 Cal. App. 3d 177, 182-183) .

The court stated, however, that absent a statute or agreement to the contrary, such defendants are not entitled to any type of indemnity other than the comparative indemnity available under American Motorcycle. The court noted that the California Supreme Court, in Far W. Fin. Corp. v. D & S Co. (1988) 46 Cal. 3d 796, 251 Cal. Rptr. 202, 760 P.2d 399 , rejected a party's contention that its claim for total indemnity, rather than comparative indemnity, was not barred under Code Civ. Proc. § 877.6(c) by a good-faith settlement. In deciding that issue, the Supreme Court stated that there are not two separate equitable indemnity doctrines in California, but rather a single "comparative indemnity" doctrine that permits partial indemnification on a comparative fault basis in appropriate cases. Thus, the effect of "comparative" indemnity includes the complete range of proportional possibilities, from a complete shifting of responsibility for the loss to no shift at all (212 Cal. App. 3d 177, 182-183) .

The court then examined the facts of the case before it in light of the controlling law. The trial court's summary adjudication, narrowly interpreted, barred the contractor's strict-liability claims against the developer regarding losses that the contractor itself suffered. The court noted that a developer that has the ability to protect itself from the risks posed by defective products cannot recoup damage it suffers by way of a claim for strict liability in tort, and in that sense, the trial court's order was a correct statement of the law (212 Cal. App. 3d 177, 183) . However, the contractor made no such damage claim against the developer. Rather, the contractor sought to recover from the developer only the damages it might be required to pay to the plaintiff. In that light, the summary adjudication order was inconsistent with the ruling in Safeway, which suggests that strict liability may be equitably apportioned. The court stated that on that analysis alone it would be inclined to grant the petition for a writ of mandate. However, in making its motion for summary adjudication, the developer's attack was directed solely toward the contractor's cause of action for total indemnity based on strict liability. The effect of the order was to nullify that cause of action, which is supported by the holding of Far West. A surviving cause of action in the cross complaint, for comparative indemnity, was not the subject of the trial court's order. Under controlling case law, the contractor can seek no more than comparative indemnity. Therefore, the attack on the cause of action for total indemnity was well taken. If that cause of action had sought no more than comparative indemnity, it would be mere surplusage. On the other hand, if it was an attempt to allege more than comparative indemnity, that is, an equitable claim not subject to the good-faith settlement bar in Code Civ. Proc. § 877.6(c), it contravened controlling authority. Accordingly, he court held that the trial court properly granted the order nullifying the cause of action for total indemnity (212 Cal. App. 3d 177, 184) .

[d] With Regard to Noneconomic Damages, Defendant's Percentage of Fault Must Be Compared to Fault of All Persons Who Contributed to Injury

In DaFonte v. Up-Right, Inc. (1992) 2 Cal. 4th 593, 7 Cal. Rptr. 2d 238, 828 P.2d 140 , plaintiff was seriously injured when he was cleaning a moving conveyor belt of a mechanical grape harvester and his arm was pulled into it. He received workers' compensation benefits, and then sued the manufacturer of the harvester on negligence and product defect theories. The workers' compensation insurer also sought subrogation, and the two suits were consolidated (2 Cal. 4th 593, 596) . The jury allocated 15 percent fault to the plaintiff, 45 percent to the employer, and 40 percent to the manufacturer and awarded $355,000 in economic damages and $300,000 in noneconomic damages. The total damage award was reduced by 15 percent for the plaintiff's fault and by 45 percent of the noneconomic damages attributable to the employer. Thus, the trial court entered a judgment against the manufacturer for $421,750, plus costs. It refused to reduce the judgment by any amount of the workers' compensation benefits the plaintiff had received and denied any subrogation to the insurer (2 Cal. 4th 593, 596-597) .

The court of appeal reversed the judgment in part, finding that the manufacturer was entitled to a reduction for the full amount of the workers' compensation benefits received from the employer, whose proportionate share of fault exceeded the benefits paid. It also found that a full joint and several award of the noneconomic damages should have been made, except for the amounts representing the plaintiff's fault and the employer's fault to the extent of the compensation paid.

The court's rationale was that the employer was limited to payment of workers' compensation benefits and was immune from tort liability. Thus, the court entered a modified judgment of $533,074, plus costs (2 Cal. 4th 593, 597) .

The Supreme Court reversed, holding that a defendant's liability for noneconomic damages cannot exceed the defendant's proportionate share of fault as compared with all fault responsible for the plaintiff's injuries, regardless of whether the other tortfeasors are present in the lawsuit (2 Cal. 4th 593, 603) . It interpreted Civ. Code § 1431.2 as limiting the joint liability of every defendant to economic damages and protecting every defendant from becoming liable for any share of noneconomic damages beyond that which is attributable to that defendant's own comparative fault. That is, the statute does not expressly provide that a defendant should be protected from such liability to co-defendants, but should remain jointly liable for noneconomic damages caused by nonparties (2 Cal. 4th 593, 602) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Liability Is Apportioned Between Strictly Liable Tortfeasors

In GEM Developers v. Hallcraft Homes of San Diego, Inc. (1989) 213 Cal. App. 3d 419, 261 Cal. Rptr. 626 , a condominium association brought an action in strict liability against the contractor of the condominium project, seeking damages arising from construction defects, and the contractor sought comparative equitable indemnity in a cross complaint against the company that initially graded the lots, which was not named as a defendant in the underlying complaint. The trial court entered judgment in favor of the cross defendant on the ground that the contractor could not seek comparative equitable indemnity on a strict liability theory in a commercial setting; the court of appeal reversed, holding that a defendant-indemnitee may in an action for indemnity seek apportionment of the loss on any theory that was available to the plaintiff on which the plaintiff would have been successful, including the doctrine of strict liability (213 Cal. App. 3d 419, 426-430) . The court also held that it was irrelevant that the cross defendant was not joined as a defendant in the underlying complaint (213 Cal. App. 3d 419, 430-431) .

[b] With Regard to Noneconomic Damages, Defendant's Percentage of Fault Must Be Compared to Fault of All Persons Who Contributed to Injury

In Wilson v. John Crane, Inc. (2000) 81 Cal. App. 4th 847, 97 Cal. Rptr. 2d 240 , following a jury trial on plaintiffs' claims for personal injuries and loss of consortium arising from exposure to asbestos, the defendant corporation was ordered to pay damages. Defendant raised numerous challenges to the judgment. Plaintiffs cross-appealed from the judgment insofar as it limited their recovery of noneconomic damages to that proportion of such damages as the jury found attributable to this particular defendant. Finding no merit in either side's arguments, the court affirmed the judgment in its entirety. Under Civ. Code § 1431.2, in an action against multiple defendants, each defendant was liable only for the amount of non-economic damages allocated to that defendant in direct proportion to that defendant's percentage of fault. Therefore, as set forth in Civ. Code § 1431.2(a), defendant's liability was not joint, but severed. Plaintiffs' non-economic damages for loss of consortium were explicitly within the scope of Civ. Code § 1431.2(b)(2) (81 Cal. App. 4th 847, 851-852) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
D. Defenses

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.245A

§ 190.245A Supporting Contention That Sophisticated User Defense Applies--Defendant Had No Duty to Warn

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities supporting the contention that defendant is not liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product (see, e.g., § 190.89 and §§ 190.164-190.171).]

THE SOPHISTICATED USER DEFENSE APPLIES AND RELIEVES THE DEFENDANT, _____ [specify name] OF LIABILITY FOR FAILURE TO WARN BECAUSE PLAINTIFF, AS A _____ [specify occupation], COULD REASONABLY BE EXPECTED TO KNOW OF THE DANGERS OF _____ [specify defendant's product].

A. Manufacturer Not Liable If Sophisticated User Knew or Should Have Known of Risk. A manufacturer is not liable to a sophisticated user of its product for failing to warn of a danger if that user knew or should have known of the risk (Johnson v. American Standard, Inc. (2008) 43 Cal. 4th 56, 71, 74 Cal. Rptr. 3d 108, 179 P.3d 905).

B. Sophisticated User Defense Applies to Negligence and Strict Liability Causes of Action. The sophisticated user defense applies to both negligence and strict liability causes of action (Johnson v. American Standard, Inc. (2008) 43 Cal. 4th 56, 71, 74 Cal. Rptr. 3d 108, 179 P.3d 905).

C. Relevant Time for Determining User Sophistication Is Time of Injury. A sophisticated user's knowledge of a risk is measured from the time of his or her injury, not from the date of the product's manufacture (Johnson v. American Standard, Inc. (2008) 43 Cal. 4th 56, 73-74, 74 Cal. Rptr. 3d 108, 179 P.3d 905).

D. Sophisticated User Defense Applies to Failure-to-Warn Cause of Action on Negligence Per Se Theory. The sophisticated user defense applies to negligent failure-to-warn cause of action on a negligence per se theory (Johnson v. Honeywell Int'l Inc. (2009) 179 Cal. App. 4th 549, 558, 101 Cal. Rptr. 3d 726).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that defendant is not liable for the plaintiff's injuries because the plaintiff was a sophisticated user who knew or should have known of the product's risk of danger [see Johnson v. American Standard, Inc. (2008) 43 Cal. 4th 56, 71, 74 Cal. Rptr. 3d 108, 179 P.3d 905] .

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication. The points and authorities may also be adopted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should describe how persons working in the plaintiff's field could reasonably be expected to know of the hazard of the injury-causing product.

[b] Related Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in §§ 190.166 and 190.246 may be combined with the points and authorities in this form.

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in § 190.262 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussing of Authorities

[a] Manufacturer Not Liable If Sophisticated User Knew or Should Have Known of Risk

In Johnson v. American Standard, Inc. (2008) 43 Cal. 4th 56, 74 Cal. Rptr. 3d 108, 179 P.3d 905 , the plaintiff--an HVAC technician--was exposed to phosgene gas from decomposed refrigerant (R-22) while performing routine maintenance jobs. He developed pulmonary fibrosis and filed an action against numerous defendants, including the manufacturer of the air conditioning equipment. He alleged that the defendant failed to warn of the dangers of R-22 exposure. The trial court granted the defendant's motion for summary judgment. The Court of Appeal affirmed on the ground that the sophisticated user defense applies in California.

The Supreme Court of California affirmed. After giving an overview of the development of the sophisticated user doctrine in other jurisdictions and the obvious danger rule in California, the court explicitly adopted the sophisticated user defense. It next defined some of the parameters of the doctrine. First, it chose an objective standard and held that a manufacturer is not liable for risks about which the sophisticated user knew or should have known. Next, the court held that the sophisticated user defense applies to both negligence and strict liability causes of action. Finally, it concluded that the relevant time for determining user sophistication is when the user is injured, not the date of product manufacture.

Applying these rules to the facts of the case, the court concluded that sophisticated user defense applied because the defendant presented undisputed evidence that HVAC technicians should have known of the risk of phosgene gas (43 Cal. 4th 56, 71-74) .

[b] Sophisticated User Defense Applies to Negligence and Strict Liability Causes of Action

Johnson v. American Standard, Inc. (2008) 43 Cal. 4th 56, 74 Cal. Rptr. 3d 108, 179 P.3d 905 , is discussed in § 190.245A[3][a].

[c] Relevant Time for Determining User Sophistication Is Time of Injury

Johnson v. American Standard, Inc. (2008) 43 Cal. 4th 56, 74 Cal. Rptr. 3d 108, 179 P.3d 905 , is discussed in § 190.245A[3][a].

[d] Sophisticated User Defense Applies to Failure-to-Warn Cause of Action on Negligence Per Se Theory

The facts and procedural history of Johnson v. Honeywell Int'l Inc. (2009) 179 Cal. App. 4th 549, 101 Cal. Rptr. 3d 726 , are discussed in § 190.245A[3][a]. On remand, the case proceeded against the manufacturers of the R-22 refrigerant. The plaintiff filed an amended complaint, bringing causes of action for negligence on a negligence per se theory, and for strict liability on a design defect risk-benefit theory. The negligence per se claim alleged that the defendants violated statutes requiring them to provide direct purchasers with MSDS containing adequate warnings of their products' safety hazards. The trial court determined that the sophisticated user defense barred both causes of action and entered judgment for the defendants.

The Court of Appeal held that the sophisticated user defense applied to plaintiff's negligence cause of action, but not to his strict liability cause of action. It first rejected plaintiff's argument that application of the defense to his negligence per se theory would improperly absolve manufacturers of their statutory duties. Application of the doctrine only means that some plaintiffs cannot recover in tort if the law is broken; it does not give anyone permission to break the law.

However, the court determined that sophisticated user defense--a defense based on the need for a warning--does not apply to a design defect cause of action. The court reversed the judgment and remanded the case for further proceedings (179 Cal. App. 4th 549, 557-559) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
D. Defenses

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.246

§ 190.246 Supporting Contention That Bulk Supplier and Sophisticated Buyer Defenses Apply

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities supporting the contention that the defendant is not liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by a defective product.]

THE BULK SUPPLIER AND SOPHISTICATED BUYER DEFENSES RELIEVE THE DEFENDANT, _____ [specify name], OF LIABILITY FOR NEGLIGENCE BECAUSE _____ [specify the raw material supplied] WAS NOT INHERENTLY DANGEROUS, _____ [specify name of purchaser of materials] WAS A SOPHISTICATED BUYER THAT SUBSTANTIALLY CHANGED _____ [specify the raw material supplied] WHEN IT MANUFACTURED _____ [specify product made from materials], AND THE DEFENDANT HAD ONLY A LIMITED ROLE IN DEVELOPING AND DESIGNING _____ [specify product].

Bulk Supplier of Raw Materials to Sophisticated Buyer Is Not Liable for Negligence. A bulk supplier of raw materials that are not inherently dangerous is not liable for injuries caused by a product manufactured from these materials when the manufacturer is a sophisticated buyer with a duty to investigate the hazards of its own product, the manufacturer substantially changed the materials during manufacture of this product, and the bulk supplier only had a limited role in developing and designing the product (Artiglio v. General Elec. Co. (1998) 61 Cal. App. 4th 830, 841, 71 Cal. Rptr. 2d 817).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a bulk supplier of raw materials is entitled to claim the bulk supplier and sophisticated buyer defenses.

The form may be combined with other points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a demurrer or motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication on the issue that defendant is liable for negligence. The form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, the raw materials that were supplied are not inherently dangerous [Artiglio v. General Elec. Co. (1998) 61 Cal. App. 4th 830, 841, 71 Cal. Rptr. 2d 817] .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Bulk Supplier of Raw Materials to Sophisticated Buyer Is Not Liable for Negligence

In Artiglio v. General Elec. Co. (1998) 61 Cal. App. 4th 830, 841, 71 Cal. Rptr. 2d 817 , the plaintiffs sued a supplier of silicone used in manufacturing breast implants for negligently failing to disclose information about the dangers of using silicone in medical products. The trial court granted the defendant's motion for summary judgment and dismissed the negligent failure-to-warn cause of action.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment, finding that the defendant was entitled to claim the bulk supplier and sophisticated buyer defenses as a matter of law. The duty of a supplier of raw materials to warn about the hazards of its materials is more limited than the duty of the manufacturer using the materials in its end products. Raw material suppliers are not liable to ultimate consumers when (1) the material they supply are not inherently dangerous, (2) the material is sold in bulk to a sophisticated buyer, (3) the material is substantially changed during the manufacturing process, and (4) the supplier has a limited role in developing and designing the end product (61 Cal. App. 4th 830, 840) .

In this case, the court of appeal found that the defendant had established all elements of the bulk supplier/sophisticated buyer defenses. First, silicone is not inherently dangerous and only became potentially hazardous when it was used in a medical product. Second, there is no dispute that the implant manufacturers that purchased the silicone were sophisticated and had a duty to investigate the potential dangers of the breast implants. Third, the silicone was substantially changed because the manufacturers were responsible for "cooking" the silicone into silicone gel and silicone shells, injecting the gel into shells and packaging the implants. Fourth, while the defendant developed silicone to meet the specifications of implant manufacturers and consulted with them regularly, the defendant did not exercise any control over the design of the implants (61 Cal. App. 4th 830, 841) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
D. Defenses

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.247

§ 190.247 Supporting Contention That Action for Personal Injuries Brought Under Market Share or Products Liability Theory Barred by Statute of Limitations [Code Civ. Proc. § 335.1; Note: Former Code Civ. Proc. § 340(3) provided for a one-year period]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities supporting the contention that the action is time-barred.]

PLAINTIFF'S _____ [MARKET SHARE or PRODUCTS LIABILITY] ACTION IS BARRED BECAUSE IT WAS NOT FILED WITHIN [TWO YEARS or ONE YEAR] AFTER THE ACCRUAL OF THE CAUSE OF ACTION IN THAT PLAINTIFF HAD A SUSPICION OF WRONGDOING, AND DISCOVERED THE RELEVANT FACTS UNDERLYING PLAINTIFF'S CAUSE OF ACTION, MORE THAN [TWO YEARS or ONE YEAR] PRIOR TO FILING THE COMPLAINT.

[EITHER]

A. Market Share Action For Personal Injuries Must Be Brought Within One Year After Accrual of Cause of Action Under Former Code Civ. Proc. § 340(3). The one-year limitations period of former Code Civ. Proc. 340(3) applied to a case brought for personal injuries under the market share theory (Jolly v. Eli Lilly & Co. (1988) 44 Cal. 3d 1103, 1109, 245 Cal. Rptr. 658, 751 P.2d 923 ; see also Norgart v. Upjohn Co. (1999) 21 Cal. 4th 383, 87 Cal. Rptr. 2d 453, 981 P.2d 79).

[OR]

A. Products Liability Action for Personal Injuries Must Be Brought Within Two Years After Accrual of Cause of Action Under Code Civ. Proc. § 335.1. The two-year statute of limitation of Code of Civil Procedure Section 335.1 applies to products liability claims (Pooshs v. Altria Group (N.D. Cal. 2004) 331 F. Supp. 2d 1089, 1092) .

[CONTINUE]

B. Statute Begins to Run When Plaintiff Has Information to Be Put on Inquiry of Wrongdoing. The statute of limitations begins once the plaintiff has a suspicion of wrongdoing, or has notice or information of circumstances to put a reasonable person on inquiry. A plaintiff need not be aware of the specific "facts" necessary to establish the claim (Jolly v. Eli Lilly & Co. (1988) 44 Cal. 3d 1103, 1110-1111, 245 Cal. Rptr. 658, 751 P.2d 923).

C. Statute Begins to Run on Discovery of Facts, Not Their Legal Significance. It is the discovery of facts, not their legal significance, that starts the statute of limitations (Jolly v. Eli Lilly & Co. (1988) 44 Cal. 3d 1103, 1113, 245 Cal. Rptr. 658, 751 P.2d 923 ; see also Norgart v. Upjohn Co. (1999) 21 Cal. 4th 383, 87 Cal. Rptr. 2d 453, 981 P.2d 79).

D. Discovery Rule Allows Accrual of Cause of Action if Plaintiff Has No Reason to Suspect Identity of Defendant. The discovery rule allows accrual of a cause of action even if the plaintiff does not have reason to suspect the defendant's identity, because the identity of the defendant is not an element of a cause of action (Fox v. Ethicon Endo-Surgery Inc. (2005) 35 Cal. 4th 797, 807, 27 Cal. Rptr. 3d 661, 110 P.3d 914).

E. Statute of Limitations Begins to Run Under Discovery Rule When Plaintiff Has Reason to Suspect Injury and Some Wrongful Cause, Unless Reasonable Investigation Would Not Have Revealed Cause of Action's Factual Basis. Under the delayed discovery rule, a cause of action accrues and the statute of limitations begins to run when the plaintiff has reason to suspect an injury and some wrongful cause, unless the plaintiff pleads and proves that a reasonable investigation at that time would not have revealed a factual basis for that particular cause of action. In that case, the statute of limitations for that cause of action will be tolled until such time as a reasonable investigation would have revealed its factual basis (Fox v. Ethicon Endo-Surgery Inc. (2005) 35 Cal. 4th 797, 803, 27 Cal. Rptr. 3d 661, 110 P.3d 914).

F. Accrual of Personal Actions Arising From Exposure to Hazardous Material or Toxic Substance. In actions for illness or injury based on exposure to a hazardous material or toxic substance, the statute of limitations begins to run on the later of either the date of injury or the date on which the plaintiff becomes aware of, or reasonably should have become aware of, all of the following: (1) an injury; (2) the physical cause of that injury; and (3) sufficient facts to put a reasonably person on inquiry notice that the injury was caused or contributed to by the wrongful act of another (Code Civ. Proc. § 340.8(a)).

G. Accrual of Wrongful Death Actions Arising From Exposure to Hazardous Material or Toxic Substance. In actions for wrongful death based on exposure to a hazardous material or toxic substance, the statute of limitations begins to run on the later of either the date of the decedent's death or the date on which the plaintiff is aware of, or reasonably should have become aware of, the physical cause of death and sufficient facts to put a reasonable person on inquiry notice that the death was caused or contributed to by the wrongful act of another (Code Civ. Proc. § 340.8(b)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a plaintiff's market share action or products liability action for personal injuries is barred by the two-year statute of limitations under Code Civ. Proc. § 335.1 [see Pooshs v. Altria Group (N.D. Cal. 2004) 331 F. Supp. 2d 1089, 1092] or the one-year statute of limitations of former Code Civ. Proc. § 340(3) [see Jolly v. Eli Lilly & Co. (1988) 44 Cal. 3d 1103, 1113, 245 Cal.

Rptr. 658, 751 P.2d 923] .

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the defense of the statute of limitations. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication on the issue that plaintiff's action is time-barred. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Therefore, counsel should set forth facts showing that the cause of action accrued prior to one year before the filing of the action. Counsel should argue facts showing that plaintiff had notice of information sufficient to put a reasonable person on inquiry of a wrongdoing prior to that period, and that plaintiff discovered the necessary facts prior to that period, whether or not plaintiff was aware of their legal significance at the time.

[b] Sindell Did Not Create New Tort With New Statute of Limitations

The seminal market share theory action was Sindell v. Abbott Labs. (1980) 26 Cal. 3d 588, 611-612, 163 Cal. Rptr. 132, 607 P.2d 924 , which established that when a product has been produced by several different manufacturers from an identical formula, but the manufacturer of the specific product that caused the injuries cannot be identified through no fault of the plaintiff, the plaintiff may bring a products liability action against the manufacturers of a substantial share of the market of that product at the time the product was sold to the plaintiff [see § 190.80]. Consequently, Sindell permitted the bringing of an action that was previously impossible to pursue if the plaintiff could not identify the specific manufacturer of the precise drug that caused the injury. However, Sindell did not create a new tort with an independent starting date for purposes of the statute of limitations. Consequently, a person who was aware of injury and causation regarding a prescription drug must have filed the action within one year of that discovery, and cannot consider the filing of the Sindell decision as the accrual of the cause of action [see Jolly v. Eli Lilly & Co. (1988) 44 Cal. 3d 1103, 1115-1118, 245 Cal. Rptr. 658, 751 P.2d 923] .

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in § 190.260 may be used to oppose the points and authorities in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Market Share Action For Personal Injuries Must Be Brought Within One Year After Accrual of Cause of Action Under Former Code Civ. Proc. § 340(3)

In Norgart v. Upjohn Co. (1999) 21 Cal. 4th 383, 87 Cal. Rptr. 2d 453, 981 P.2d 79 , plaintiffs' married daughter committed suicide while being treated by a psychiatrist and taking the prescription drug Halcion. Shortly after their daughter's death, plaintiffs discovered that she had received psychiatric treatment and was taking this medication at the time of her death. Within a year after her death, her father suspected that an "individual or individuals" had done something wrong to his daughter that had caused her to take her own life. These individuals included her husband--whom he suspected of physical abuse--and the psychiatrist--whom he suspected of professional negligence. Over six years after the death, they sued the manufacturer of Halcion, alleging that it had not provided adequate warnings and that the drug was unreasonably dangerous. The California Supreme Court held that the complaint was untimely due to plaintiffs' earlier suspicions of wrongdoing by someone, putting them on notice of a potential claim. Under the discovery rule, plaintiffs' wrongful death action accrued when they came to suspect, or had reason to suspect, a factual basis for the cause of action. This would have occurred as early as their daughter's death, or shortly after, based on their investigation. In a footnote, the court disapproved of a portion of Bristol-Myers Squibb Co. v. Superior Court (1995) 32 Cal. App. 4th 959, 38 Cal. Rptr. 2d 298 , to the extent that it read Jolly to require that a plaintiff must do more than suspect a factual basis for the elements of a cause of action in order to discover the cause of action. The court noted that had plaintiffs brought one or more causes of action for wrongful death against their daughter's husband and psychiatrist by filing a "Doe" complaint within the limitations period, they could have amended that complaint to substitute the manufacturer for one of the Does within the three-year period effectively enlarging the limitations period. The amended complaint would have related back to the original one (21 Cal. 4th 383, 408, 87 Cal. Rptr. 2d 453, 981 P.2d 79).

In Jolly v. Eli Lilly & Co. (1988) 44 Cal. 3d 1103, 245 Cal. Rptr. 658, 751 P.2d 923 , a woman who was injured because her mother had ingested the prescription drug diethylstilbesterol (DES) brought a market share theory action against DES manufacturers, pursuant to the creation of that theory under Sindell v. Abbott Labs. (1980) 26 Cal. 3d 588, 163 Cal. Rptr. 132, 607 P.2d 924 [see § 190.80[3][a]]. Plaintiff had known that she had been injured, and had suspected that DES had caused her injuries, more than one year prior to filing the complaint. However, she was unable to identify the particular manufacturer, and consequently was unable to state a cause of action until Sindell created the market share theory. She brought the action within one year after Sindell was filed. Defendants moved for summary judgment, asserting that the action was barred by former Code Civ. Proc. § 340(3), which provides a one-year statute of limitations period for an action "for injury ... caused by the wrongful act or neglect of another." The trial court granted defendants' motion. The court of appeal reversed, and defendants filed a petition for review.

The Supreme Court reversed the judgment of the court of appeal, holding that the action was barred by the one-year statute of limitations, which began to run when plaintiff suspected that defendants' conduct was wrongful, not when Sindell was filed (44 Cal. 3d 1103, 1112-1118) . Generally, ignorance of the legal significance of known facts or the identity of the defendant would not delay the running of the statute, but ignorance of a "critical fact" could have that effect. In reversing the trial court holding, the court of appeal had relied on the decision in Kensinger v. Abbott Labs. (1985) 171 Cal. App. 3d 376, 217 Cal. Rptr. 313 , which held that the statute did not begin to run until the plaintiff knew or reasonably should have known of the facts constituting wrongful conduct, as well as the fact of her injury and its relation to DES. Relying on Kensinger, the court of appeal held that it could not be said that "as a matter of law" plaintiff was or should have been aware of facts establishing wrongdoing, e.g., "either failure to test or failure to warn," until within one year of the date she filed suit. The Supreme Court, however, disapproved the holding of Kensinger, stating that it goes too far. Under the discovery rule, the statute of limitations begins to run when the plaintiff suspects or should suspect that an injury was caused by wrongdoing, i.e., that someone has done something wrong to him or her (44 Cal. 3d 1103, 1110) . The limitations period begins once the plaintiff has notice or information of circumstances to put a reasonable person on inquiry (44 Cal. 3d 1103, 1110-1111) . A plaintiff need not be aware of the specific "facts" necessary to establish the claim, because that process is contemplated by pretrial discovery. Once the plaintiff has a suspicion of wrongdoing, and therefore an incentive to sue, he or she must decide whether to file suit or delay asserting his or her rights. As long as suspicion exists, it is clear that the plaintiff must find the facts, and cannot wait for the facts to find plaintiff (44 Cal. 3d 1103, 1111) . Plaintiff stated that as early as three years prior to filing the action, she was interested in "obtaining more information" about DES because she wanted to "make a claim"; she felt that someone had done something wrong to her concerning DES, that it was a defective drug, and that she should be compensated. Thus, by her own admission, she suspected that defendants' conduct was wrongful well over a year before she filed suit (44 Cal. 3d 1103, 1112) .

The Court rejected plaintiff's contention that the Sindell decision redefined "causation" and "wrongful," and provided the crucial "fact" necessary for her to suspect wrongdoing. It is the discovery of facts, not their legal significance, that starts the statute (44 Cal. 3d 1103, 1113) . Plaintiff contended that prior to Sindell, the defective "product" was defined as the specific DES pills her mother ingested, and consequently that she could not establish a causal link between any particular manufacturer and her injury. She argued that Sindell redefined the defective "product" as generic DES, making all manufacturers of DES contributors to her injury. She therefore claimed a new ability to establish a causal link between the harm suffered and defendants. Defendants contended that that effect was not contemplated by Sindell, but rather, that Sindell merely shifted the burden of proof of identifying the particular manufacturer (44 Cal. 3d 1103, 1114) . The Court noted that Sindell was more than a mere "burden shifting" case, because the actual manufacturer might possibly not be named in the suit (44 Cal. 3d 1103, 1114-1115) . However, Sindell did not create an entirely new tort, nor identify a new "product." Sindell merely bridged the causal gap between DES manufacturers as a group and plaintiff's injury. Sindell did not provide plaintiff with the critical "fact" that started the limitations period. Nor did it create a new tort with an independent starting date for purposes of the statute of limitations. Rather, Sindell demonstrated the legal significance of facts already known to plaintiff (44 Cal. 3d 1103, 1115) .

The Court addressed plaintiff's concern that prior to Sindell she could not have stated a cause of action because under prior law, she was required to identify the precise manufacturer of the pills ingested by her mother (44 Cal. 3d 1103, 1115-1116) . However, a change in the law, either by statute or by case law, does not revive claims otherwise barred by the statute of limitations (44 Cal. 3d 1103, 1116) . The Court also stated that although resolution of the statute of limitations issue is normally a question of fact, when the uncontradicted facts established through discovery are susceptible of only one legitimate inference, summary judgment is proper (44 Cal. 3d 1103, 1112) .

[b] Products Liability Action for Personal Injuries Must Be Brought Within Two Years After Accrual of Cause of Action Under Code Civ. Proc. § 335.1

In Pooshs v. Altria Group (N.D. Cal. 2004) 331 F. Supp. 2d 1089 , the plaintiff smoked cigarettes from 1953 through 1991. She was diagnosed with lung cancer in January 2003. She filed suit against several tobacco companies in January 2004. She contended that lung cancer is a disease separate and distinct from nicotine addiction and that under the discovery rule, the two-year statute of limitations of Code Civ. Proc. § 335.1 did not begin to run until her lung cancer diagnosis in January 2003. The federal district court held that to the extent there was any conflict between the California court of appeal [see Wagner v. Apex Marine Ship Mgmt. Corp. (2000) 83 Cal. App. 4th 1444, 1452-1454, 100 Cal. Rptr. 2d 533] , and the Ninth Circuit, it was bound to follow the latter. In a case before the Ninth Circuit, in which the plaintiff alleged addiction as a specific injury, the Ninth Circuit barred application of the two-injury rule, finding that the plaintiff had constructive knowledge of the hazards of smoking from the date he reasonably should have known that he was addicted to nicotine [Soliman v. Philip Morris, Inc. (9th Cir. 2002) 311 F.3d 966] . That rule applied to this case, even though the plaintiff asserted that she did not claim addiction as part of her damages. The allegations that she had become addicted to nicotine and was injured by that addiction ran as a thread throughout the complaint, and the court dismissed her claim as time-barred (331 F. Supp. 2d 1089, 1092) .

[c] Statute Begins to Run When Plaintiff Has Information to Be Put on Inquiry of Wrongdoing

Jolly v. Eli Lilly & Co. (1988) 44 Cal. 3d 1103, 245 Cal. Rptr. 658, 751 P.2d 923 , is discussed in § 190.247[3][a].

[d] Statute Begins to Run on Discovery of Facts, Not Their Legal Significance

Norgart v. Upjohn Co. (1999) 21 Cal. 4th 383, 87 Cal. Rptr. 2d 453, 981 P.2d 79 , is discussed in § 190.247[3][a].

Jolly v. Eli Lilly & Co. (1988) 44 Cal. 3d 1103, 245 Cal. Rptr. 658, 751 P.2d 923 , is discussed in § 190.247[3][a].

[e] Discovery Rule Allows Accrual of Cause of Action if Plaintiff Has No Reason to Suspect Identity of Defendant

Fox v. Ethicon Endo-Surgery, Inc*. (2005) 35 Cal. 4th 797, 807, 27 Cal. Rptr. 3d 661, 110 P.3d 914* , is discussed in § 190.247[3][f].

[f] Statute of Limitations Begins to Run Under Discovery Rule When Plaintiff Has Reason to Suspect Injury and Some Wrongful Cause, Unless Reasonable Investigation Would Not Have Revealed Cause of Action's Factual Basis

In Fox v. Ethicon Endo-Surgery, Inc. (2005) 35 Cal. 4th 797, 27 Cal. Rptr. 3d 661, 110 P.3d 914 , the plaintiff's intestine was perforated during surgery, and she filed a medical malpractice complaint against the surgeon. During his deposition the following year, the surgeon first raised the possibility that the perforation was caused by a malfunctioning stapler. The plaintiff then filed a first amended complaint adding the manufacturer of the stapler as a named defendant. The trial court sustained the manufacturer's demurrer to the products liability complaint, concluding that the statute of limitations barred the claim. The court of appeal reversed and remanded with directions to grant the plaintiff leave to amend to allege facts explaining why she did not have reason to discover earlier the factual basis of her products liability claim.

The California Supreme Court affirmed. Distinguishing both Jolly and Norgart, the court concluded that the plaintiff's claim was not necessarily time-barred. Under the delayed discovery rule, a cause of action accrues and the statute of limitations begins to run when the plaintiff has reason to suspect an injury and some wrongful cause, unless the plaintiff pleads and proves that a reasonable investigation at that time would not have revealed a factual basis for that particular cause of action. In that situation, the statute of limitations for that cause of action is tolled until such time as a reasonable investigation would have revealed its factual basis. The Court explained that to rely on the discovery rule, a potential plaintiff must specifically plead facts to show both (1) the time and manner of discovery and (2) the inability to have made earlier discovery despite reasonable diligence. To adequately allege facts supporting a theory of delayed discovery, the plaintiff must plead that despite diligent investigation of the circumstances of the injury, he or she could not have reasonably discovered facts supporting the cause of action within the applicable limitations period. The plaintiff in this case only partially met this requirement by alleging that there was no way "through which her reasonable diligence would have revealed, or through which she would have suspected" the stapler as a cause of her injury until August 13, 2001. She needed to allege specific facts supporting her allegations. She could have cured this defect by adding to her complaint the allegation that she did not suspect or have reason to discover facts supporting a products liability action against the manufacturer until after deposing her surgeon (35 Cal. 4th 797, 807-809) .

The Court specifically rejected the bright-line test of Bristol-Myers Squibb v. Superior Court [Bristol-Myers Squibb v. Superior Court (1995) 32 Cal. App. 4th 959, 966, 38 Cal. Rptr. 2d 298] , which held that if a plaintiff has cause to sue based on knowledge or suspicion of negligence, the statute of limitations starts to run as to all potential defendants. The Bristol-Myers Squibb court had failed to make the distinction between a plaintiff's ignorance of the identity of a particular defendant and ignorance that a product was the cause of the plaintiff's injury. The Court reiterated that although ignorance of the identity of the manufacturer is not an essential element of a products liability cause of action and therefore will not delay the running of the statute of limitations, a plaintiff's ignorance of wrongdoing involving a product's defect will usually delay accrual, because such wrongdoing is essential to that cause of action (35 Cal. 4th 797, 812-814) . A diligent plaintiff's investigation may only disclose an action for one type of tort (for example, medical malpractice), and facts supporting an entirely different type of tort action (for example, products liability) may, through no fault of the plaintiff, only come to light at a later date. Therefore, the rule in Bristol-Myers Squibb that all claims arising from any injury accrue simultaneously, even if based on distinct types of wrongdoing, is inconsistent with the generic elements approach set forth in Norgart (35 Cal. 4th 797, 814-815) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Statute Begins to Run on Discovery of Facts, Not Their Legal Significance

In Rivas v. Safety-Kleen Corp. (2002) 98 Cal. App. 4th 218, 119 Cal. Rptr. 2d 503 , plaintiff was exposed to various toxic chemicals at the workplace. He filed suit in 1998 against the chemical manufacturers and distributors. The court dismissed his suit on statute of limitations grounds, ruling that he had sufficient knowledge of injury and wrongdoing for purposes of the statute of limitations more than one year prior to the date the complaint was filed. The court of appeal affirmed. The plaintiff's being informed by physicians in 1991 that he was suffering from a serious condition and being asked to provide a list of all chemicals he came into contact with and to stay away from solvent was sufficient to arouse suspicion and lead to further investigation. Moreover, the fact that the plaintiff filed a workers' compensation claim in 1996 based on exposure to toxic chemicals was definitive proof that he had a suspicion that "someone had done something wrong to [him]" within the meaning of Jolly (98 Cal. App. 4th 218, 119 Cal. Rptr. 2d 503, 511) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
D. Defenses

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.248

§ 190.248 Supporting Contention That Action in Strict Liability for Defects in Real Property Development or Improvement Barred by Statute of Limitations [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 337.1, 337.15]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities supporting the contention that the action is time-barred.]

PLAINTIFF'S ACTION IN STRICT LIABILITY FOR _____ [LATENT or PATENT] DEFECTS IN REAL PROPERTY _____ [DEVELOPMENT or IMPROVEMENT] IS BARRED BECAUSE IT WAS BROUGHT MORE THAN _____ [if latent defect, TEN YEARS or, if patent defect, FOUR YEARS] AFTER THE SUBSTANTIAL COMPLETION OF THE DEVELOPMENT.

[EITHER]

A. Limitation on Action for Latent Defects in Real Property Development or Improvement. No action may be brought to recover damages from any person, or the surety of a person, who develops real property or performs or furnishes the design, specifications, surveying, planning, supervision, testing, or observation of construction or construction of an improvement to real property more than 10 years after the substantial completion of the development or improvement for any latent deficiency in the design, specification, surveying, planning, supervision, or observation of construction or construction of an improvement to, or survey of, real property, or injury to property, real or personal, arising out of any such latent deficiency (Code Civ. Proc. § 337.15(a); Lantzy v. Centex Homes (2003) 31 Cal. 4th 363, 366, 2 Cal. Rptr. 3d 655, 73 P.3d 517).

B. Limitation Period for Latent Defects Applies to Strict Liability Action. The 10-year limitation provision of Code of Civil Procedure Section 337.15 applies to a cause of action for a latent defect in real property development or improvement based on products liability (Stoneson Dev. Corp. v. Superior Court (1987) 197 Cal. App. 3d 178, 181, 242 Cal. Rptr. 721).

[OR]

A. Limitation on Action for Patent Defects in Real Property Development or Improvement. No action shall be brought to recover damages from any person performing or furnishing the design, specifications, surveying, planning, supervision or observation of construction or construction of an improvement to real property more than four years after the substantial completion of such improvement for any patent deficiency in the design, specifications, surveying, planning, supervision or observation of construction or construction of an improvement to, or survey of, real property, except as otherwise provided (Code Civ. Proc. § 337.1(a)(1)).

B. Limitation Period for Patent Defects Applies to Strict Liability Action. The four-year limitation provision of Section 317.1 of the Code of Civil Procedure applies to a cause of action for a patent defect in real property development or improvement based on products liability (Mattingly v. Anthony Indus., Inc. (1980) 109 Cal. App. 3d 506, 512-513, 167 Cal. Rptr. 292).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a plaintiff's strict-liability action for defects in real property development or improvement is time-barred, pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 337.1 (patent defects) or Code Civ. Proc. § 337.15 (latent defects) [see Stoneson Development Corp. v. Superior Court (1987) 197 Cal. App. 3d 178, 181, 242 Cal. Rptr. 721 (latent defects); Mattingly v. Anthony Indus., Inc. (1980) 109 Cal. App. 3d 506, 512-513, 167 Cal. Rptr. 292 (patent defects)]. The first alternative Paragraphs A and B are for use if the defect is latent; the second alternative Paragraphs A and B are for use if the defect is patent.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the defense of the statute of limitations. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication on the issue that plaintiff's action is time-barred. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Therefore, counsel should set forth facts showing that the development or improvement was substantially completed more than four years, for patent defects, or ten years, for latent defects, prior to the filing of the action. If counsel is claiming applicability of the four-year statute, it may be appropriate to argue facts supporting the contention that the defect is patent.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Limitation on Action for Latent Defects in Real Property Development or Improvement

In Lantzy v. Centex Homes (2003) 31 Cal. 4th 363, 2 Cal. Rptr. 3d 655, 73 P.3d 517 , the California Supreme Court concluded that the 10-year period set forth in Code Civ. Proc. § 337.15 is not subject to equitable tolling while a potential defendant's promises or attempts to repair the defects are pending. The court held that a broad tolling-for-repairs rule would have contravened the legislature's clear intent to ensure a generous but firm cutoff date for latent-defects suits. The court also held that the homeowners failed to plead facts that would equitably estop the defendant from asserting the limitations period (31 Cal. 4th 363, 383) .

[b] Limitation Period for Latent Defects Applies to Strict Liability Action

In Stoneson Dev. Corp. v. Superior Court (1987) 197 Cal. App. 3d 178, 242 Cal. Rptr. 721 , a homeowner brought a strict liability action against a real property developer, alleging that defendant's improper repair of mudslide damage to her property caused further damage in subsequent mudslides 10 years later. The homeowner brought an action one year after the damage. The developer moved to strike the second cause of action based on breach of implied warranty, and the third cause of action based on strict products liability. The homeowner contended that the 10-year statute of limitations pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 337.15 did not bar the cause of action based on products liability. The trial court granted the motion to strike the second cause of action, and denied the motion to strike the cause of action in strict liability. The developer filed a petition for peremptory writ of mandate to direct the trial court to vacate its order regarding the cause of action in strict liability.

The court of appeal let the writ issue, holding that Code Civ. Proc. § 337.15 applies to a strict liability action. Pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 337.15(a), no action may be brought to recover damages from any person who develops real property or performs or furnishes the design, specifications, surveying, planning, supervision, testing, or observation of construction or construction of an improvement to real property more than 10 years after the substantial completion of the development or improvement for any of the following: (1) any latent deficiency in the design, specification, surveying, planning, supervision, or observation of construction or construction of an improvement to, or survey of, real property; or (2) injury to property, real or personal, arising out of any such latent deficiency (197 Cal. App. 3d 178, 179-180) . The parties did not dispute that Code Civ. Proc. § 337.15 applied to an action for negligence or breach of contract, nor did they dispute that the homeowner had stated a cause of action for products liability. The only dispute was whether the provision in Code Civ. Proc. § 337.15 that "no action" may be filed beyond the 10-year period includes an action based on products liability. The Court noted that nothing in the language of that statute suggests that products liability actions are exempt from its scope. The Court rejected the homeowner's argument, based on equity and public policy, that since the early 1980's, homeowners' insurance policies have been written so that there is no coverage for either earthslide or negligent construction, and that application of Code Civ. Proc. § 337.15 essentially leaves the homeowner without a remedy (197 Cal. App. 3d 178, 180) . The Court noted that the same point could be made regarding a cause of action for negligence or brech of contract. Further, to construe the statute as not covering a cause of action for products liability would render illusory the protection the legislature intended to give the developer (197 Cal. App. 3d 178, 180-181) . The case is one of first impression in California. However, the court of appeal in Mattingly v. Anthony Indus., Inc. (1980) 109 Cal. App. 3d 506, 512-513, 167 Cal. Rptr. 292 , held that Code Civ. Proc. § 337.1, which provides a limitation of four years on actions based on patent defects, applies to strict liability actions [see § 190.248[3][c]]. The Court concluded that inasmuch as the complaint in this case was filed more than 10 years after the developer completed its work on the property, Code Civ. Proc. § 337.15 applies to bar the cause of action based on products liability (197 Cal. App. 3d 178, 181) .

[c] Limitation Period for Patent Defects Applies to Strict Liability Action

In Mattingly v. Anthony Indus., Inc. (1980) 109 Cal. App. 3d 506, 167 Cal. Rptr. 292 , tenants of an apartment building brought an action against the swimming-pool contractor for negligence, strict liability, and attractive nuisance after plaintiffs' child fell into the swimming pool on the property. The complaint, which alleged that the absence of a fence or barrier around the pool caused the injury, was filed 14 years after the completion of the pool, and within one year of the injury. Defendant moved for summary judgment on the ground that the action was time-barred pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 337.1, which states that an action based on a patent deficiency in an improvement to real property is barred by a four-year procedural statute of limitations. Code Civ. Proc. § 337.1(e) provides that a "patent" deficiency is a deficiency that is apparent by reasonable inspection. The trial court granted defendant's motion, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that Code Civ. Proc. § 337.1 applies to a strict liability action. The Court first determined that the absence of fencing was a patent, rather than latent, defect, holding that the appropriate test is not subjective, but rather objective, based on the reasonable expectations of the average consumer (109 Cal. App. 3d 506, 510-511) . Moreover, if an unfenced swimming pool in a family apartment building is a deficiency in design, it was deficient from the time it was constructed, and that deficiency is a patently obvious one (109 Cal. App. 3d 506, 512) . The court rejected plaintiff's contention that Code Civ. Proc. § 340(3) (one-year statute for personal injuries), rather than Code Civ. Proc. § 337.1, should apply because a swimming pool is a "product" for purposes of strict products liability actions. Whether a swimming pool is a product is irrelevant, because Code Civ. Proc. § 337.1 is the appropriate statute even if the cause of action is in strict liability. Consequently, the statute had obviously run prior to plaintiff's injury (109 Cal. App. 3d 506, 512) . In enacting Code Civ. Proc. §§ 337.1 and 337.15, the legislature intended to protect contractors against liability extending for a potentially limitless period of time. The court cited statements from the California Supreme Court to the effect that a contractor is in the business of constructing improvements and must devote its capital to that end; the need to provide reserves against an uncertain liability extending indefinitely into the future could seriously impinge on the conduct of its enterprise. The Supreme Court concluded that the statute running from the date of construction was primary, and cut off all liability of the contractor [see Regents of Univ. of Cal. v. Hartford Accident & Indem. Co. (1978) 21 Cal. 3d 624, 633] . Therefore, whether or not the swimming pool is a product, it is unarguably an improvement to real property, and any action for a patently deficient or defective design must have been brought within four years of the date of completion of the pool (109 Cal. App. 3d 506, 513) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Limitation on Action for Latent Defects in Real Property Development or Improvement

In Mills v. Forestex Co. (2003) 108 Cal. App. 4th 625, 134 Cal. Rptr. 2d 273 , plaintiffs' contractor installed hardboard manufactured by the defendant on their house and garage. Within a year, the siding began to warp, and the nails eventually began to back out. The plaintiffs filed an action against the contractor and the manufacturer. The court held that Code Civ. Proc. §§ 337.1 and 337.15, which apply to actions against persons involved in construction of improvements to real property and establish statutes of limitations for patent and latent defects, did not apply to the manufacturer of the product incorporated into the improvement. However, plaintiffs' claims against the contractor were subject to Code Civ. Proc. § 337.1's four-year limitation period. They began to run upon discovery of the defective siding. Plaintiffs' claims against the manufacturer were barred by Comm. Code § 2725's four-year statute of limitations.

Assuming plaintiffs adequately stated a claim for strict products liability, the action against the contractor was subject to Code Civ. Proc. 337.15. Upon discovery of the latent defect, the action was governed by Code Civ. Proc. § 338(b)'s three-year statute of limitations, in that the defect caused an injury to real property. Their strict liability claim against the manufacturer was also governed by § 338(b), but without the prior intervention of § 337.15 (108 Cal. App. 4th 625, 643) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
D. Defenses

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.249

§ 190.249 Supporting Contention That Products Liability Action Is Preempted by Federal Law

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities supporting the contention that defendant is not liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product.]

PLAINTIFF'S PRODUCTS LIABILITY ACTION FOR DAMAGES CAUSED BY A _____ [DEFECT and/or FAILURE TO WARN ABOUT RISKS INHERENT] IN _____ [specify product] IS PREEMPTED BY FEDERAL LAW, SPECIFICALLY _____ [specify applicable federal statute or regulation, e.g., TITLE 15 OF THE UNITED STATES CODE, SECTIONS 1381-1431] BECAUSE OF THE CLEAR AND MANIFEST INTENT OF CONGRESS TO SUPERSEDE STATE LAW.

A. Federal Preemption Requires Dismissal of State Products Liability Claim When Congress Intends to Supersede State Law. Federal preemption applies when Congress intends for uniform federal requirements to supersede state law, either expressly or by implication (Freightliner Corp. v. Myrick (1995) 514 U.S. 280, 287, 115 S. Ct. 1483, 131 L. Ed. 2d 385 ; Carrillo v. ACF Indus., Inc. (1999) 20 Cal. 4th 1158, 86 Cal. Rptr. 832, 980 P.2d 386 ; McGuan v. Endovascular Technologies, Inc. (2010) 182 Cal. App. 4th 974, 981 ; Williamson v. Mazda Motor of Am., Inc. (2008) 167 Cal. App. 4th 905, 910, 84 Cal. Rptr. 3d 545 , modified and reh'g denied, 2008 Cal. App. LEXIS 2269 ; Jessen v. Mentor Corp. (2007) 158 Cal. App. 4th 1480, 1487, n.5 ; Frastaci v. Vapor Corp. (2007) 158 Cal. App. 4th 1389, 1394 ; Burroughs v. Precision Airmotive Corp. (2000) 78 Cal. App. 4th 681, 699, 93 Cal. Rptr. 2d 124).

[Optional] B. State Products Liability Claim Is Preempted by Federal Railroad Legislation. The Locomotive Boiler Inspection Act (BIA) (49 U.S.C.S. § 20701 et seq.) preempts a state claim based on products liability stemming from defects in railroad equipment, because Congress intended to occupy the entire field of regulation and federal standards displace all state requirements, notwithstanding a lack of conflict between the federal standards and state law (Scheiding v. General Motors Corp. (2000) 22 Cal. 4th 471, 475, 93 Cal. Rptr. 2d 342, 993 P.2d 996 ; Frastaci v. Vapor Corp. (2007) 158 Cal. App. 4th 1389, 1393-1404) .

[Optional] C. State Tort Claim Based on "No Air Bag" Design Defect Is Preempted. The National Traffic and Motor Vehicle Safety Act of 1966 (15 U.S.C.S. §§ 1381-1431) preempts a state common-law tort action against an automobile manufacturer when the action alleges a design defect based on the manufacturer's failure to install air bags in the vehicle, when the vehicle complies with federal safety standards under the Safety Act (Geier v. American Honda Motor Co. (2000) 529 U.S. 861, 866-867, 120 S. Ct. 1913, 146 L. Ed. 2d 914 ; Nissan Motor Corp. v. Superior Court (1989) 212 Cal. App. 3d 980, 982-983, 261 Cal. Rptr. 80).

[Optional] D. FIFRA Preempts Rules Imposing Labeling Requirement That Diverge From Those In Federal Statute. Section 136v(b) of the Federal Insecticide, Fungicide and Rodenticide Act (FIFRA) preempts statutory or common law rules that would impose a labeling requirement different from those set out in FIFRA and its regulations (Bates v. Dow Agrosciences LLC (2005) 544 U.S. 431, 452, 125 S. Ct. 1788, 161 L. Ed. 2d 687).

[Optional] E. Federal Aviation Legislation Expressly Preempts State Law. The General Aviation Revitalization Act of 1994 (GARA), 49 United States Code Service Section 40101 et seq., expressly preempts state law (Burroughs v. Precision Airmotive Corp. (2000) 78 Cal. App. 4th 681, 690, 93 Cal. Rptr. 2d 124).

[Optional] F. Savings Clause of FDA Modernization Act Does Not Entirely Exclude Conflict Preemption. The savings clause of the federal Food and Drug Administration Modernization Act of 1997, 21 United States Code Service Section 379r(d)(2), which was designed specifically to preserve Proposition 65, does not entirely exclude conflict preemption (Gaeta v. Perrigo Pharmaceuticals. Co. (N.D. Cal. 2008) 562 F. Supp. 2d 1091, 1095 ; Dowhal v. SmithKline Beecham Consumer Healthcare (2004) 32 Cal. 4th 910, 926, 12 Cal. Rptr. 3d 262, 88 P.3d 1).

[Optional] G. Warranty and Fraud Claims Are Not Saved From Preemption by Saving Clause of FDA Modernization Act. Claims for breach of warranty and fraud are not actions under "products liability law" within the meaning of 21 United States Code Service Section 379r(e), the savings clause for products liability claims of the Food and Drug Administration Modernization Act's express preemption provision for over-the-counter (OTC) drugs (Kanter v. Warner-Lambert Co. (2002) 99 Cal. App. 4th 780, 790-791, 122 Cal. Rptr. 2d 72).

[Optional] H. MDA Preempts Fraud-on-FDA Claims. The federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act, as amended by the Medical Device Amendments of 1976, preempts fraud-on-the-FDA claims (21 U.S.C.S. § 301; Buckman v. Plaintiffs' Legal Comm. (2001) 531 U.S. 341, 343, 121 S. Ct. 1012, 148 L. Ed. 2d 854 ; McGuan v. Endovascular Technologies, Inc. (2010) 182 Cal. App. 4th 974, 984) .

[Optional] I. Federal Safety Appliance Acts Preempts Certain State Law Claims Regarding Railroad Freight Cars. The federal Safety Appliance Acts (SAA), 49 United States Code Service Section 20301 et. seq., preempts a common law cause of action alleging defective design of a rail car for failure to incorporate a safety appliance not prescribed by the SAA or its regulations (Carillo v. ACF Indus., Inc. (1999), 20 Cal. 4th 1158, 1165, 86 Cal. Rptr. 832, 980 P.2d 386).

[Optional] J. Dormant Commerce Clause Preempts Laws That Impermissibly Burden Interstate Commerce. The Dormant Commerce Clause preempts laws that jeopardize the welfare of the nation as a whole by placing an undue burden on interstate commerce (Haynes v. AMTRAK (C.D. Cal. 2006) 423 F. Supp. 2d 1073, 1082) .

[Optional] K. MDA's Express Preemption Clause Bars Common Law Claims Regarding Safety or Effectiveness of Medical Device With Premarket Approval. 21 U.S.C.S. § 360k(a), the express preemption clause of the Medical Device Amendments of 1976, bars common law claims challenging the safety or effectiveness of a medical device given FDA premarket approval, if (1) the government has established requirements applicable to the device; and (2) the common law claims are based upon state requirements with respect to the device that are "different from, or in addition to" the federal ones (Riegel v. Medtronic, Inc. (2008) 552 U.S. 312, 128 S. Ct. 999, 1006-1008, 169 L. Ed. 2d 892 ; McGuan v. Endovascular Technologies, Inc. (2010) 182 Cal. App. 4th 974, 982 ; Jessen v. Mentor Corp. (2007) 158 Cal. App. 4th 1480, 1489-1490 ; Blanco v. Baxter Healthcare Corp. (2008) 158 Cal. App. 4th 1039, 1052-1057, 70 Cal. Rptr. 3d 566).

[Optional] L. FMVSS 208 Preempts Claim Regarding Lap-Only Seatbelt. FMVSS 208 preempts a common law claim alleging that an automobile with a lap-only seatbelt in the rear inboard seating position is defective (Williamson v. Mazda Motor of Am., Inc. (2008) 167 Cal. App. 4th 905, 912-919, 84 Cal. Rptr. 3d 545 , modified and reh'g denied, 2008 Cal. App. LEXIS 2269).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that the plaintiff's state common-law cause of action in tort for design defect, or failure to warn, is preempted by federal legislation, such as, for example, the National Traffic and Motor Vehicle Safety Act of 1966 (15 U.S.C.S. §§ 1381-1431) [see Geier v. American Honda Motor Co. (2000) 529 U.S. 861, 868, 120 S. Ct. 1913, 146 L. Ed. 2d 914] , the Medical Device Amendments of 1976 (21 U.S.C.S. § 360k(a) [see Riegel v. Medtronic, Inc. (2008) 128 S. Ct. 999, 1006-1008], or the Federal Insecticide, Fungicide and Rodenticide Act (FIFRA) (7 U.S.C.S. § 136 et seq.) [see Bates v. Dow Agrosciences LLC (2005) 544 U.S. 431, 452, 125 S. Ct. 1788, 161 L. Ed. 2d 687] .

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of preemption of a products liability action. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication of the issue that a state common-law action in tort for design defect is preempted by federal law. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, and in any other relevant points and authorities combined with this form, to show the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should state facts showing that railroad equipment has been designed in compliance with federal safety standards, and that a plaintiff's claim of a design defect for lack of a guardrail is therefore contrary to federal law and preempted [see Carrillo v. ACF Indus., Inc. (1999) 20 Cal. 4th 1158, 86 Cal. Rptr. 832, 980 P.2d 386] .

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in § 190.259 may be used to oppose the points and authorities in this form.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion and forms relating to products liability generally, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 460, Products Liability (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Federal Preemption Requires Dismissal of State Products Liability Claim When Congress Intends to Supersede State Law

In Freightliner Corp. v. Myrick (1995) 514 U.S. 280, 115 S. Ct. 1483, 131 L. Ed. 2d 385 , two lawsuits were consolidated involving essentially identical accidents in which 18-wheel tractor-trailers jackknifed into oncoming traffic. The suits were instituted under state tort law against the tractor-trailer manufacturers who moved for summary judgment on the basis of the preemption of state claims by federal vehicle standards promulgated under the National Traffic and Motor Vehicle Safety Act. The district court granted summary judgment, and on appeal, the Eleventh Circuit reversed, holding that the state claims were not expressly preempted by federal statute. While the Supreme Court agreed that the specific situation at issue in this case did not require express preemption, the Court then addressed the issue of implied preemption, holding that an express preemption clause does not foreclose implied preemption of state claims when a conflicting state statute encroaches on an area that Congress intends to be regulated by uniform federal standards (514 U.S. 280, 287) .

In Carrillo v. ACF Indus., Inc. (1999) 20 Cal. 4th 1158 , the plaintiff brought design defect and failure to warn claims against a railcar manufacturer after he fell from the top of a hopper car that had no guardrail. Neither the Federal Safety Appliance Act (SAA) [49 U.S.C.S. § 20301 et seq.], its regulations [see 49 C.F.R. § 231 et seq.], nor the Federal Railroad Safety Act (FRSA) [49 U.S.C.S. § 20101 et seq.] required this feature. A jury awarded the plaintiff $1.4 million in damages. The defendant sought a judgment notwithstanding the verdict on the ground that state tort remedies were preempted by the SAA and the FRSA. The trial court denied the motion. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment, holding that federal law did not preempt the plaintiff's action because neither statute specifically addressed the subject of guardrails on hopper cars. The Supreme Court granted the defendant's petition for review and reversed (20 Cal. 4th 1158, 1161) .

The Supreme Court held that the Federal Safety Appliance Act [49 U.S.C.S. § 20301 et seq.] reflected congressional intent to regulate railroad safety appliances, thus precluding state law tort claims based on design defects (20 Cal. 4th 1158, 1170) . Although hoppers were not specified in the statute, other railway freight cars were required to have guardrails. Hopper car guardrails served the same function as handholds, running boards or tank car guardrails and thus came within the broad category of safety appliances standardized by the SAA (20 Cal. 4th 1158, 1165) .

McGuan v. Endovascular Technologies, Inc. (2010) 182 Cal. App. 4th 974 , is discussed in § 190.249[3][k].

Williamson v. Mazda Motor of Am., Inc. (2008) 167 Cal. App. 4th 905, 84 Cal. Rptr. 3d 545 , modified and reh'g denied, 2008 Cal. App. LEXIS 2269 , is discussed in § 190.249[3][l].

Burroughs v. Precision Airmotive Corp. (2000) 78 Cal. App. 4th 681, 93 Cal. Rptr. 2d 124 , is discussed in § 190.249[3][e].

Jessen v. Mentor Corp. (2007) 158 Cal. App. 4th 1480 , is discussed in § 190.249[3][k].

Frastaci v. Vapor Corp. (2007) 158 Cal. App. 4th 1389 , is discussed in § 190.249[3][b].

[b] State Products Liability Claim Is Preempted by Federal Railroad Legislation

In Scheiding v. General Motors Corp. (2000) 22 Cal. 4th 471, 93 Cal. Rptr. 2d 342, 993 P.2d 996 , the plaintiffs, former railroad employees, their spouses and survivors, sued the defendant corporations for asbestos related injuries. The plaintiffs alleged that the defendant's locomotives and related equipment were defective because they contained asbestos materials. The plaintiffs alleged causes of action for negligence, strict liability and failure to warn. The trial court dismissed the claims, and the court of appeal affirmed, holding that the Locomotive Boiler Inspection Act (BIA) [49 U.S.C.S. § 20701 et seq.] preempted plaintiffs' claims based on strict products liability and other state common law claims. The Supreme Court granted review and affirmed (22 Cal. 4th 471, 473) .

The Court held that because the BIA extends to the design, the construction and the material of every part of the locomotive and all its appurtenances, Congress intended the BIA to occupy this field. It would be contrary to Congress' purpose of uniform national regulation to allow the states to reoccupy fields from which they had previously been displaced. Since Congress intended to occupy an entire field of regulation, such as locomotive equipment, then the federal standards must displace all state requirements, notwithstanding a lack of conflict between that standard and state law (22 Cal. 4th 471, 475) . The Court noted the practical rationale for this determination was to ensure uniformity of railroad standards across state lines. To impose tort liability on railroad equipment manufacturers would force them to conform to design and construction standards imposed by the states, which was not what BIA intended (22 Cal. 4th 471, 476) . The Court also found that the plaintiffs' failure to warn claims were also preempted, despite the fact that the BIA did not address warning or instruction labels, because the subject of the label, locomotive insulation, fell under the BIA (22 Cal. 4th 471, 484) .

In Frastaci v. Vapor Corp. (2007) 158 Cal. App. 4th 1389 , a locomotive repairman died of an asbestos-related disease. His wife and children brought an action against the locomotive manufacturer, alleging several common law causes of action. The trial court sustained the manufacturer's demurrer on the ground that the Locomotive Boiler Inspection Act (BIA) [49 U.S.C.S. § 20701 et. seq.] preempted the claims. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that Scheiding v. General Motors Corp. (2000) 22 Cal. 4th 471, 93 Cal. Rptr. 2d 342, 993 P.2d 996 , forecloses design defect claims against locomotive manufacturers, regardless of whether the locomotive was "in use" or off line in roundhouses and repair shops when the injury occurred. The fact that the Federal Employers' Liability Act [45 U.S.C.S. § 51 et seq.] requires a locomotive to be "in use" at the time of injury before BIA applies did not change the court's analysis. Nor was it persuaded that the presumption against preemption should apply. The court was unwilling to "second-guess Congress's decision to require national uniformity in the field of railroad safety" (158 Cal. App. 4th 1389, 1393-1404) .

[c] State Tort Claim Based on "No Air Bag" Design Defect Is Preempted

In Geier v. American Honda Motor Co. (2000) 529 U.S. 861, 120 S. Ct. 1913, 146 L. Ed. 2d 914 , the U.S. Supreme Court held that a "no air bag" claim conflicts with the objectives of FMVSS 208 and is thus preempted by the National Traffic and Motor Vehicle Safety Act of 1966 (529 U.S. 861, 868)

In Nissan Motor Corp. v. Superior Court (1989) 212 Cal. App. 3d 980, 261 Cal. Rptr. 80 , plaintiffs brought a wrongful-death action against an automobile manufacturer and others, alleging that the automobile was defective in that it failed to have an "automatic air bag," and that the three-point restraint system was defective. The defendant automobile manufacturer moved for summary adjudication of the issue that the "no air bag" claim is preempted by federal law. The trial court denied the motion, and the defendant filed a petition for writ of mandate.

The court of appeal let the writ of mandate issue, directing the trial court to vacate its order and to grant the defendant's motion for summary adjudication. In doing so, the court held that the National Traffic and Motor Vehicle Safety Act of 1966 [15 U.S.C.S. §§ 1381-1431] preempts a state common-law tort action against an automobile manufacturer when the action alleges a design defect based on the manufacturer's failure to install air bags in the vehicle, (212 Cal. App. 3d 980, 983) . The court noted that the Federal Motor Vehicle Safety Standard 208, revised by the United States Department of Transportation in 1972 to include passive restraints, established requirements for the occupant restraint system in the 1982 automobile in question, and required the three-point safety-belt system that the manufacturer installed, or an air bag; it never required air bags. 15 U.S.C.S. § 1392(d) requires all state vehicle safety standards to be identical to federal vehicle safety standards. The court concluded that a state common-law requirement for air bags would be contrary to the federal requirements and, therefore, preempted. The court noted that federal law provides that compliance with any federal motor-vehicle safety standards does not exempt any person from common-law liability [15 U.S.C.S. § 1397(c)] and does not expressly exempt nonidentical state motor-vehicle safety standards.

[d] FIFRA Preempts Rules Imposing Labeling Requirement That Diverge From Those In Federal Statute

In Bates v. Dow Agrosciences LLC (2005) 544 U.S. 431, 125 S. Ct. 1788, 161 L. Ed. 2d 687 Texas peanut farmers filed suit, alleging that the defendant's pesticide "Strongarm" severely damaged their crops. Strongarm's label stated,

"Use of Strongarm is recommended in all areas where peanuts are grown." When the plaintiffs applied Strongarm on soils with pH levels of 7.2 or higher, as is typical in western Texas, the pesticide severely damaged their peanut crops. The plaintiffs gave the defendant notice of their intent to bring suit, alleging that the defendant knew or should have known that Strongarm would stunt the growth of peanuts in soils with pH levels of 7.0 or greater. The defendant filed a declaratory judgment action contending that FIFRA expressly or impliedly preempted the plaintiffs' claims. The plaintiffs counterclaimed, asserting several state law claims. The federal district court granted the defendant's motion for summary judgment, rejecting one claim on state law grounds and dismissing the remainder as expressly preempted by 7 U.S.C.S. § 136v(b). The Fifth Circuit affirmed. It held that § 136v(b) preempts any state law claim in which a judgment against the defendant "would induce it to alter its product label." This decision was consistent with a majority of the federal courts, but conflicted with the decisions of other courts and with the views of the EPA. The U.S. Supreme Court granted certiorari to resolve the conflict.

In a 7 to 2 majority opinion written by Justice Stevens, the U.S. Supreme Court vacated the Fifth Circuit's decision and remanded. The Court rejected the plaintiffs' argument that FIFRA's express preemption does not apply to tort actions--that is, that the term "requirements" as used in § 136v(b) does not encompass tort actions. Although the Court pointed out that the Fifth Circuit was "quite wrong" in assuming that any event, such as a jury verdict, that might "induce" a pesticide manufacturer to change its label should be viewed as a requirement, the Court agreed that the term "requirements" in § 136v(b) reaches beyond positive enactments, such as statutes and regulations, to embrace common law duties (544 U.S. 431, 443) .

Next, the Court set forth its test to determine whether FIFRA preempts a particular state rule. First, the rule must be a requirement "for labeling or packaging." For example, rules governing the design of a product are not preempted. Second, the rule must impose a labeling or packaging requirement that is "in addition to or different from those required under this subchapter." As an example, a state regulation requiring the word "poison" to appear in red letters would not be preempted if an EPA regulation imposed the same requirement (544 U.S. 431, 443) .

The Court then pointed out that common law rules requiring manufacturers to design reasonably safe products, to use due care in testing their products, to market products free from defects, and to honor their express warranties, clearly did not satisfy the first condition of the test (these common law rules were not requirements "for labeling or packaging"). Thus, FIFRA did not preempt the plaintiffs' claims for defective design, defective manufacture, negligent testing, and breach of express warranty. The Court also noted that the plaintiffs' off-label claims (their warranty and fraud claims based on oral representations made by the defendant's agents) fell outside the text of § 136v(b) for another reason: FIFRA defines labeling by reference to "written, printed, or graphic matter" and not to oral representations. The Court expressly disapproved of the "effects-based" test used by many federal and state courts to determine whether a non-warning claim was preempted: that is, whether a judgment against a manufacturer would cause it to alter the pesticide label. This test was unsupported in the text of § 136v(b), which refers only to "requirements," and the test was overbroad because it would impeach many "genuine" design defect claims (544 U.S. 431, 445) .

The Court next turned to the plaintiffs' fraud and negligent-failure-to-warn claims--claims that virtually all prior federal and state courts had found preempted. Although agreeing that these claims were premised on common law rules that qualify as "requirements for labeling or packaging," thereby passing the first part of its test, the Court noted that some courts had "too quickly" concluded that failure-to-warn claims were preempted under FIFRA without weighing the obvious textual differences between the preemption clauses in FIFRA and the statutes at issue in those cases. Specifically, unlike the Smoking Act, § 136v(b) prohibits only state law labeling and packaging requirements that are "in addition to or different from" the labeling and packaging requirements under FIFRA. Consequently, § 136v(b) does not preempt a state law labeling requirement if that state law labeling requirement is equivalent to, and fully consistent with, FIFRA's misbranding provisions. The Court held that state law need not explicitly incorporate FIFRA's standards as an element of a cause of action to survive preemption, but left it to the Fifth Circuit to decide whether the particular common law duties in question were equivalent to FIFRA's misbranding standards (544 U.S. 431, 447) .

The Court went on to explain that the "parallel requirements" reading of § 136v(b) that it adopted found strong support in an earlier case [Medtronic Inc. v. Lohr (1996) 518 U.S. 470, 116 S. Ct. 2240, 135 L. Ed. 2d 700] , in which the Court had found that nothing in the preemption provision of the statute regulating medical devices denied the state of Florida the right to provide a traditional damages remedy for violations of common law duties that parallel federal requirements. The Court then rejected the defendant's argument that such a reading of parallel state requirements would establish a "crazy-quilt" of anti-misbranding requirements different from the requirement defined by FIFRA. Moreover, even if the defendant had offered a plausible reading of § 136v(b), the Court would still have had a duty to accept the reading that disfavored presumption. The Court also found the policy objections raised by the defendant against its reading of § 136v(b) to be unpersuasive (544 U.S. 431, 447-449) .

The Court concluded that § 136v(b) retains a narrow, but still important role. It preempts competing state labeling standards that would create significant inefficiencies for manufacturers, as well as any statutory or common law rule that would impose a labeling requirement that diverges from those set out in FIFRA. It does not, however, preempt any state rules that are fully consistent with federal requirements (544 U.S. 431, 452) .

Although the Court settled on its interpretation of § 136v(b), whether that provision preempted the plaintiffs' fraud and failure-to-warn claims remained undecided. Because the Court had not received sufficient briefing on this issue, it remanded it to the Fifth Circuit. The Court specifically emphasized that a state law labeling requirement must in fact be equivalent to a requirement under FIFRA to survive preemption. It cautioned that a state law requirement need not be phrased in language identical to FIFRA; general equivalence is sufficient (544 U.S. 431, 453) .

NOTE:

Bates overruled in part an earlier California Supreme Court decision, which had concluded that FIFRA preempts state law claims for failure to warn of the risks of using a pesticide, and that if a claim, however couched, boils down to an assertion that a pesticide's label failed to warn of the damage that the plaintiff allegedly suffered, it is preempted by FIFRA [Etcheverry v. Tri-Ag Serv., Inc. (2000) 22 Cal. 4th 316, 93 Cal. Rptr. 2d 36, 993 P.2d 366] .

[e] Federal Aviation Legislation Expressly Preempts State Law

In Burroughs v. Precision Airmotive Corp. (2000) 78 Cal. App. 4th 681, 93 Cal. Rptr. 2d 124 , the plaintiffs suffered injuries in the crash of a light plane, allegedly due to a malfunction of the engine's carburetor. Defendant was the successor manufacturer to the original manufacturer of the carburator. The carburator was built and installed by the original manufacturer in 1968. Plaintiffs sued Defendant on a failure to warn theory. Defendant was granted summary adjudication finding that Defendant was a successor to the original manufacturer was entitled to the protections under § 2(A) of the General Aviation Revitalization Act of 1994 (GARA) [49 U.S.C.S. § 40101].

The court of appeals affirmed. The court found that GARA expressly preempted state law. In pertinent part, Section 2(a) of GARA provided that no civil action for damages or death or injury to persons or damage to property arising out of an accident involving a general aviation aircraft may be brought against the manufacturer of the aircraft or the manufacturer of any new component, system, subassembly, or other part of the aircraft, in its capacity as a manufacturer if the accident occurred ... [more than 18 years after the date of delivery of the aircraft and/or component to the first purchaser or lessee]. Section 2(d) provides that "[t]his section supersedes any State law to the extent that such law permits a civil action described in subsection (a) to be brought after the applicable limitation period for such civil action established by subsection (a)." The court evaluated whether Defendant, as a successor to the original manufacturer was took on the same duties and obligations imposed by GARA. The court and found that the Defendant did, and so was entitled to the protections of GARA. The court found the plaintiffs' claims preempted, and further, that the statute of repose contained within GARA also shielded Defendant from liability (78 Cal. App. 4th 681, 689-690) .

[f] Savings Clause of FDA Modernization Act Does Not Entirely Exclude Conflict Preemption

In Gaeta v. Perrigo Pharms. Co. (N.D. Cal. 2008) 562 F. Supp. 2d 1091 , the minor plaintiff was given defendant's generic OTC ibuprofen for three days. He subsequently suffered liver failure and other complications. The plaintiffs brought a products liability alleging that the defendant failed to adequately warn of the risks of liver and renal failure associated with the use of OTC ibuprofen in children. The court granted the defendant's motion for summary judgment. Plaintiff's state-law claims were preempted, where FDA had once rejected a warning regarding the risks of liver injury associated with the drug. The defendant complied with the FDA's labeling requirements for OTC ibuprofen. The 1997 Modernization Act's savings clause, 21 U.S.C. § 379r(e), did not preclude the court's conflict preemption analysis (562 F. Supp. 2d 1091, 1097) .

In Dowhal v. SmithKline Beecham Consumer Healthcare (2004) 32 Cal. 4th 910, 12 Cal. Rptr. 3d 262, 88 P.3d 1 , the plaintiff filed suit against the distributors of a nicotine replacement therapy (NRT) product, alleging violation of Proposition 65 [Health & Safety Code § 25249.6], which requires warnings that chemicals can cause reproductive toxicity. The FDA refused to allow the defendant to use the warning mandated by California's Proposition 65 warning, and instead required the defendant to use less broad language. The FDA had sent the defendant a letter rejecting the defendant's proposed "can harm your baby" warning and proposed instead that all nicotine replacement products bear uniform warnings advising pregnant women to consult their health care provider and try to stop smoking without using an NRT product.

The California Supreme Court first noted that 21 U.S.C.S. § 379r(d)(2), the savings clause of the preemption provision for over-the-counter drugs in the Food and Drug Modernization Act of 1997, was designed specifically to preserve California's Proposition 65. However, the Court held that the savings clause does not entirely exclude conflict preemption, and that notwithstanding language in the savings clause, the federal requirement prevails if the warning mandated by California law directly conflicts with the one required by the FDA. The Court noted that the FDA ruling reflected the agency's concern that the defendant's proposed Proposition 65 warning might discourage pregnant women from stopping smoking. It concluded that the letter established a federal policy prohibiting defendants from giving consumers any warning other than the one approved by the FDA, and that use of a Proposition 65 warning would conflict with that policy. Even though it is probably true that nicotine in the defendant's products can cause reproductive harm, the FDA has the authority to prohibit truthful statements on a product label if they are misleading. Therefore, this was a case of direct conflict, justifying preemption (32 Cal. 4th 910) .

[g] Warranty and Fraud Claims Are Not Saved From Preemption by Saving Clause of FDA Modernization Act

In Kanter v. Warner-Lambert Co. (2002) 99 Cal. App. 4th 780, 122 Cal. Rptr. 2d 72 , the plaintiffs brought claims against three manufacturers of over-the-counter drugs for treatment of head lice. They claimed that the product labels contained false and misleading statements about the effectiveness of the drugs. The trial court granted summary judgment for the defendants, finding that the claims were preempted by 21 U.S.C.S. § 379r(a), the preemption provision of the Food and Drug Administration Modernization Act of 1997. The court of appeal affirmed, holding that the plaintiffs' claims for breach of warranty were not actions under "the products liability law" within the meaning of § 379r(e), the savings clause. The savings clause unambiguously states that the preemption provisions of the section do not affect "the products liability law of any State." Under California products liability law, injury to the plaintiff from a defective product is an essential element of a cause of action. The plaintiffs in this case acknowledged that their complaint did not allege any personal injury or property damage as a result of using the defendants' products. The court rejected the plaintiffs' contention that Congress intended the phrase "products liability law" in § 379r(e) to have a broader meaning, encompassing an expansive category of actions imposing liability on commercial sellers of products (99 Cal. App. 4th 780, 790-791) .

[h] MDA Preempts Fraud-on-FDA Claims

In Buckman v. Plaintiffs' Legal Comm. (2001) 531 U.S. 341, 121 S. Ct. 1012, 148 L. Ed. 2d 854 , the U.S. Supreme Court held that plaintiffs' state law fraud-on-the-FDA claims conflicted with, and were therefore impliedly preempted by, the FDCA as amended by the MDA. In the late 1990's, thousands of plaintiffs across the country had brought fraud-on-the-FDA cases against bone screw device manufacturers, claiming that the FDA would not have approved the screws had defendants not made fraudulent representations regarding their intended use (531 U.S. 341, 349-353) .

The facts and procedural background of McGuan v. Endovascular Technologies, Inc. (2010) 182 Cal. App. 4th 974 , are discussed in § 190.249[3][k]. The court examined plaintiff's claims relating to defendants' alleged "withholding from the FDA, surgeons and public" reported failures of the device. Assuming that plaintiffs stated causes of action for fraud-on-the FDA, these claims were preempted under Buckman. Plaintiffs attempted to distinguish Buckman on the ground that FDA had not investigated the Buckman defendant for any alleged wrongdoing whereas it had taken "strong action" against the instant defendants. Plaintiffs argued that Justice Stevens' concurring opinion in Buckman was "an invitation" to bring a case involving fraud "policed" by the FDA. However, the circumstances referred to by Justice Stevens (i.e., FDA determining that a defendant committing fraud during the 510(k) process and taking steps to remove the device from the market) did not take place in the instant case.

The court next rejected plaintiffs' contention that Buckman does not apply to causes of action for fraud on patients and their physicians, and that these claims were permissible "parallel" claims under Riegel v. Medtronic, Inc. (discussed in § 190.249[3][k]). Although plaintiffs' fraud claims were premised on violations of FDA regulations, this did not resolve the issue. Unlike Riegel, Buckman did not involve the MDA preemption provision, but relied on implied preemption principles. Those implied principles applied equally to claims involving defendants' misrepresentations to plaintiffs and their physicians. Allowing plaintiff to proceed with their state law fraud claim would also impermissibly conflict with FDA's responsibility to police fraud consistently with "the Administration's judgment and objectives" as stated by Buckman (182 Cal. App. 4th 974, 985-986) .

[i] Federal Safety Appliance Acts Preempts Certain State Law Claims Regarding Railroad Freight Cars

Carillo v. ACF Indus., Inc. (1999), 20 Cal. 4th 1158, 1165), is discussed in § 190.249[3][a].

[j] Dormant Commerce Clause Preempts Laws That Impermissibly Burden Interstate Commerce

In Haynes v. AMTRAK (C.D. Cal. 2006) 423 F. Supp. 2d 1073 , the decedent died from deep vein thrombosis (DVT) after riding on an Amtrak train from Chicago to Los Angeles. The plaintiff brought an action alleging that the carrier violated common law and statutory duties. After finding that plaintiff's state law claims were not preempted by either the federal Amtrak Act or the Federal Railroad Safety Act, the court found that the claims regarding train seats and seating configurations were unduly burdensome on interstate commerce and were preempted by the Commerce Clause. The "Dormant Commerce Clause" prevents states from jeopardizing the welfare of the nation as a whole by placing undue burdens on the flow of interstate commerce. In other words, a state law may violate the Commerce Clause's unwritten rules either by imposing an undue burden on producers engaged in interstate activities or by treating out-of-state producers less favorably than their location competitors. It would be unduly burdensome on the passenger train industry to require different standards regarding passenger seats, e.g., regarding leg room, as a train crossed state boundaries. The duty to warn passengers of the dangers of DVT, in contrast, was not unduly burdensome on commerce and not preempted (423 F. Supp. 2d 1073, 1083-1084) .

[k] MDA's Express Preemption Clause Bars Common Law Claims Regarding Safety or Effectiveness of Medical Device With Premarket Approval

In Riegel v. Medtronic, Inc. (2008) 552 U.S. 312, 128 S. Ct. 999, 169 L. Ed. 2d 892 , the U.S. Supreme Court held that the MDA's preemption clause bars common law claims challenging the safety or effectiveness of a medical device given FDA premarket approval.

The case involved an Evergreen Balloon Catheter, a PMA-approved Class III device. The device was inserted into the decedent's coronary artery, despite the fact that it was contraindicated for patients such as the decedent. The decedent's physician inflated the catheter beyond its rated burst pressure despite the label's warning against doing so. The catheter ruptured, and the decedent developed a heart block and other complications. The decedent and his wife brought a products liability action against the manufacturer, raising several common law claims under New York law. The district court ruled that the MDA preempted most of the claims. The U.S. Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit affirmed, and the high Court granted certiorari.

The Court first set out to determine whether the federal government established requirements applicable to the catheter, because the MDA expressly preempts only state requirements "different from, or in addition to, any requirement applicable ... . to the device" under federal law [21 U.S.C.S. § 360k(a)]. The Court found that unlike the § 510(k) process analyzed in Medtronic v. Lohr (1996) 518 U.S. 470, 116 S. Ct. 2240, 135 L. Ed. 2d 700 (discussed in § 190.259[3][a]) premarket approval does impose "requirements" under the MDA. Premarket approval--in contrast to general labeling duties--is specific to individual devices. The Court specifically stated that premarket approval is focused on safety, not equivalence, unlike § 510(k), which the Lohr Court had found was focused on equivalence, not safety. The FDA grants premarket approval only after it determines that a device offers reasonable assurances of safety and effectiveness (21 U.S.C.S. § 360e(d)), unlike devices that enter the market through § 510(k). Moreover, the FDA requires a device that has received premarket approval to be made with almost no deviations from the specifications in its approval application. This is in direct contrast to a device entering the market as a substantial equivalent, which is not required to "take any particular form for any particular reason" (128 S. Ct. 999, 1007) .

The next part of the Court's preemption inquiry was to determine whether the plaintiffs' common law claims relied upon "any requirement" of New York law applicable to the catheter that was "different from, or in addition to" federal requirements and that related "to the safety or effectiveness of the device included in a requirement applicable to the device" (21 U.S.C.S. § 360k(a)). Again, the Court answered in the affirmative. It adhered to its view set forth in previous preemption cases that common-law causes of action for negligence and strict liability do impose "requirements." "Absent other indication," stated the Court, "reference to a State's 'requirements' includes its common-law duties" (128 S. Ct. 999, 1007-1008) . The Court posited that tort law, applied by a jury who sees "only the cost of a more dangerous design, and is not concerned with its benefits," is "less deserving of preservation" than a state statute or regulation (128 S. Ct. 999, 1008) .

The Court then addressed some of the dissent's points. The plain language of the MDA's preemption clause, wrote Justice Scalia, indicated that Congress intended to remove judicial recourse for consumers injured by FDA-approved devices, and it was not for the Court to speculate as to its motives. The lack of ambiguity in the MDA meant that the Court did not rely on the FDA's current view on the topic. If it had, however, the degree of deference accorded to the FDA's position might be reduced by the fact that the agency's earlier position had been different (128 S. Ct. 999, 1009) .

Next, the court rejected the plaintiffs' contention that the duties underlying their claims were not preempted--even if they imposed "requirements"--because general common-law duties are not requirements maintained "with respect to devices." The plain language of the statute--that no State "may establish or continue in effect with respect to a device ... any requirement" relating to safety or effectiveness--did not support their interpretation (128 S. Ct. 999, 1010) . The statute does not say that preempted state requirements must apply only to the device in question. 21 CFR § 808.1(d)(1), the FDA regulation relied on by the plaintiffs limiting the scope of preemption, did not change the Court's analysis (128 S. Ct. 999, 1010-1011) .

In conclusion, the Court pointed out that § 360k does not prevent a State from providing a damages remedy for claims premised on a violation of FDA regulations, in which case the state duties "parallel" rather than add to federal requirements. However, the Riegel plaintiffs did not raise such a claim in their briefs before the Second Circuit (128 S.

Ct. 999, 1010-1011) .

In McGuan v. Endovascular Technologies, Inc. (2010) 182 Cal. App. 4th 974 , plaintiffs were injured after being implanted with a Class III medical device, the ANCURE Endograft System. They brought products liability actions against the designers, manufacturers, and distributors of the device. The trial court granted defendants' motion for summary judgment on grounds that the action was preempted by federal law.

The Court of Appeal affirmed. It began its opinion with a brief history of the problem-plagued device. Various negative reports came to the manufacturer's attention shortly after its approval, resulting in the initiation of an internal investigation and one by outside auditors. Defendant recalled the device, but in March 2001, it provided information to FDA which was at best "evasive." FDA re-approved the device five months later. A subsequent Department of Justice investigation found that the existence of the independent auditor reports had persuaded FDA not to impose additional regulatory measures beyond those proposed by the defendant. The defendant pled guilty to counts of shipping misbranded medical devices and making false statements arising from provision of incomplete information to FDA. The plea agreement stated that about 2,628 additional MDRs concerning the system had not been reported to FDA as required by law.

Riegel v. Medtronic, Inc., above, set forth a two-part test to determine whether the MDA's preemption provision, 21 U.S.C. § 360k(a), bars common law claims: (1) whether the federal government has established requirements "applicable to" the defendant's device; (2) and if so, whether the common law claims are based upon statement requirements that are "different from, or in addition to" the federal ones, and that relate to safety and effectiveness.

The first part of the test was clearly satisfied because Riegel made it clear that premarket approval imposes "federal requirements" applicable to a defendant's device. The second part of the test resulted in federal preemption for the following reason: Plaintiffs' complaints did not allege that defendants violated federal regulations. Because the FDA had re-approved the device prior to plaintiffs' surgeries, FDA gave its approval of the device's design, testing, intended use, manufacturing methods, performance standards, and labeling. Thus, to the extent that plaintiffs alleged that the device was unsafe and its warnings were inadequate, they sought to impose requirements that were "different from, or in addition to" the MDA. Their common law claims for strict product liability, negligence, breach of express and implied warranties, and violations of Consumer Legal Remedies Act were accordingly preempted.

The defendant's fraudulent conduct occurring after March 2001 (i.e., when it informed FDA that the company was not attempting to hide information from the agency) did not save the action from federal preemption. The complaint did not allege a cause of action for fraud-on-the-FDA or fraud and misrepresentation. Rather, it stated a cause of action for fraudulent concealment, which did not refer to FDA's re-approval of the device or allege that defendants violated any federal regulations or provided inaccurate information to FDA. To prevail on the fraudulent concealment cause of action, the jury would have to find that the FDA-approved warnings were inaccurate. This cause of action would also impose "requirements" that were "different from, or in addition to" those imposed by FDA, and was thus preempted (182 Cal. App. 4th 974, 983-984) .

In Jessen v. Mentor Corp. (2007) 158 Cal. App. 4th 1480 , the plaintiff's testicular prosthesis became deformed and had to be replaced. The plaintiff filed an action against the manufacturer, claiming that the prosthesis was defective because it lacked a sufficient warning that it had to be filled prior to implantation. The trial court granted the manufacturer's motion for summary judgment on preemption grounds.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that the common law tort claims relating to the safety or effectiveness of the PMA-approved device were preempted unless the plaintiff could demonstrate a triable issue of fact that the manufacturer failed to adhere to federal regulatory standards. The court then determined that the manufacturer met its burden of proving that the implant was designed, manufactured, and labeled according to FDA specifications (158 Cal. App. 4th 1480, 1489-1491) .

In Blanco v. Baxter Healthcare Corp. (2008) 158 Cal. App. 4th 1039, 70 Cal. Rptr. 3d 566 , the heart valve implanted in the decedent 15 years earlier failed. The plaintiffs filed a complaint against the manufacturer asserting several state law causes of action. The trial court granted summary judgment in favor of the manufacturer on preemption grounds. Plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, first concluding that PMA approval for the valve was a device-specific federal requirement that could preempt any conflicting state requirement. The next step was to compare the federal requirements with the state requirements to determine whether they fell within the preemptive scope of the statute and regulations. Examining the allegations made under each cause of action as well as the statement of facts and supporting evidence, the court determined that the plaintiffs' negligence and strict liability claims were preempted (158 Cal. App. 4th 1039, 1052-1057) .

[l] FMVSS 208 Preempts Claim Regarding Lap-Only Seatbelt

In Williamson v. Mazda Motor of Am., Inc. (2008) 167 Cal. App. 4th 905, 84 Cal. Rptr. 3d 545 , modified and reh'g denied, 2008 Cal. App. LEXIS 2269 , the decedent was killed in a collision involving her family's minivan. She was seated in the inboard rear seat, which was equipped with a two-point (lap-only) seatbelt. Her family filed an action alleging that the vehicle was defective because the rear inboard seat should have had a three-point (lap/shoulder) seatbelt. The trial court granted the defendants' motion for judgment on the pleadings on the ground that federal law preempted the claim to the extent it was based on a lap-only seat belt claim. The parties ultimately stipulated to a dismissal of plaintiffs' remaining claims, and the court entered judgment for the defendants.

The court of appeal affirmed. It gave a brief history of FMVSS 208, which specifies performance requirements for crash protection of occupants. FMVSS 208 permits manufacturers to install lap-only seatbelts in the inboard seats. The court reviewed Geier v. American Honda Motor Co. (2000) 529 U.S. 861, 866-874, 120 S. Ct. 1913, 146 L. Ed. 2d 814 , discussed in § 190.249[3][c], in which the U.S. Supreme Court held that a common law "no airbag" case conflicted with FMVSS 208 and was thus preempted. Although Geier involved airbags, not seatbelts, the court was persuaded by the reasoning of three courts from other jurisdictions which applied Geier to hold that similar claims were preempted. Thus, to the extent that plaintiffs based their theory of recovery on defendants' failure to install a lap/shoulder seatbelt in the middle row inboard seat, their claim was barred by the version of FMVSS 208 in effect at the time the minivan was manufactured (167 Cal. App. 4th 905, 912-919) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Federal Preemption Requires Dismissal of State Products Liability Claim When Congress Intends to Supersede State Law

In Papike v. Tambrands Inc. (9th Cir. 1997) 107 F.3d 737 , the plaintiff contracted Toxic Shock Syndrome (TSS) while using the defendant's tampons. The district court held that the MDA preempted the plaintiff's state law claim alleging failure to warn of the risk of TSS associated with tampon use. The Ninth Circuit affirmed. It explained that the FDA had promulgated a "device-specific" and "disease-specific" regulation in 21 C.F.R. § 801.430 mandating the specific content of the TSS warnings on tampon boxes. This fact distinguished the plaintiff's case from other MDA preemption cases, such as Medtronic, Inc. v. Lohr (1996) 518 U.S. 470, 116 S. Ct. 2240, 135 L. Ed. 2d 700 [see § 190.259[3][a]]. The court concluded that preemption is triggered by, and the scope of preemption is limited to, instances in which specific FDA requirements apply to a particular device. Preemption was warranted in this case because the defendant's warnings tracked the language of the federal regulations almost verbatim. This result was completely consistent with Medtronic, which did not involve device-specific federal requirements (107 F.3d 737, 740-742) .

In In re Tobacco Cases II (2007) 41 Cal. 4th 1257, 163 P.3d 106 , the Supreme Court of California was presented with the issue of federal preemption of minors' unfair competition claims against the tobacco companies. The court ruled that the U.S. Supreme Court's decision in Lorillard Tobacco Co. v. Reilly (2001) 533 U.S. 525, 121 S. Ct. 2404, 150 L. Ed. 2d 532 , which held that the cigarette Labeling Act preempted state regulations banning outdoor cigarette advertising within 1,000 feet of any school, park, or playground, was inconsistent with and impliedly disapproved the California court's previous decision, Mangini v. R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1057, 31 Cal. Rptr. 2d 358, 875 P.2d 73 , holding that the Labeling Act did not preempt a similar claim. The court acknowledged that California's unfair competition law--a law of general application--was not preempted on its face by the Labeling Act. However, the plaintiffs' claim was also based on the penal law section prohibiting sales of tobacco products to minors, i.e., a statute based largely on health concerns. Their unfair competition claim sought to impose on the tobacco companies a duty not to advertise in a way that could encourage minors to smoke--a duty which the Lorillard Court determined was subjection to preemption. Moreover, plaintiffs' cause of action did not fall within the exception allowing states to prohibit activity that constitutes an inchoate crime (41 Cal. 4th 1257, 1272) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
D. Defenses

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.250

§ 190.250 Opposing Contention That Product Not Defective Because Defendant Followed Industry Custom or Usage in Producing Product and Thus Defendant Not Strictly Liable--Evidence of Industry Custom or Usage Is Irrelevant

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities opposing the contention that defendant is not liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product (see, e.g., § 190.251).]

DEFENDANT _____ [name] MAY NOT INTRODUCE EVIDENCE OF INDUSTRY CUSTOM OR USAGE, BECAUSE THAT EVIDENCE IS IRRELEVANT TO THE ISSUE OF WHETHER THE _____ [specify product] IS DEFECTIVE.

Evidence of Industry Custom or Usage Is Irrelevant. In a strict products liability case, evidence of industry custom or usage is irrelevant to the issue of whether a product is defective (Akers v. Kelley Co. (1985) 173 Cal. App. 3d 633, 652, 219 Cal. Rptr. 513 , disapproved on other grounds, People v. Nessler (1977) 16 Cal. 4th 561, 582 ; Grimshaw v. Ford Motor Co. (1981) 119 Cal. App. 3d 757, 803, 174 Cal. Rptr. 348).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that defendant's product is not defective. The ground of opposition set forth is that defendant may not introduce evidence of industry custom or usage on the issue of defect, because such evidence is irrelevant to that issue.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities opposing a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication on the issue that defendant is not subject to strict liability. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should state that defendant's proffered evidence is of industry custom or usage, and is therefore inadmissible [see, e.g., Akers v. Kelley Co. (1985) 173 Cal. App. 3d 633, 219 Cal. Rptr. 513 (jury instruction to consider hazards recognized by industry as properly rejected); Grimshaw v. Ford Motor Co. (1981) 119 Cal. App. 3d 757, 174 Cal. Rptr. 348 (refusal to instruct jury on custom and usage of automobile industry); Titus v. Bethlehem Steel Corp. (1979) 91 Cal. App. 3d 372, 378, 154 Cal. Rptr. 122 (error to argue custom and practice in industry to offer safety guards as optional equipment)].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Evidence of Industry Custom or Usage Is Irrelevant

The facts and procedural background of Akers v. Kelley Co. (1985) 173 Cal. App. 3d 633, 219 Cal. Rptr. 513 , are discussed in §§ 190.115[3][a], 190.116[3][a], and 190.117[4][a]. In affirming the judgment for plaintiff, the court of appeal held that the trial court had properly rejected an instruction on the risk-benefits test that had been proffered by defendant that included as a relevant consideration whether the hazard was recognized by the industry. The court explained that the rejected instruction would have erroneously injected into the case notions of industry custom and usage, which are not relevant when applying the risk-benefits test (173 Cal. App. 3d 633, 651-652) .

The facts and procedural background of Grimshaw v. Ford Motor Co. (1981) 119 Cal. App. 3d 757, 174 Cal. Rptr. 348 , are discussed in §§ 190.114[3][a] and 190.223[3][b]. In affirming the judgment for plaintiff, the court of appeal held that the trial court did not err by refusing to instruct the jury to consider custom or usage in determining whether the automobile's design was defective. The court explained that in a strict products liability case, industry custom or usage is irrelevant to the issue of defect. The court pointed out that the Supreme Court's enumeration in Barker v. Lull Eng'g Co. (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 413, 143 Cal. Rptr. 225, 573 P.2d 443 , of factors that may be considered under the risk-benefit test fails to mention custom or usage in the industry, and that the Court otherwise made clear by implication in Barker that they are inappropriate considerations (119 Cal. App. 3d 757, 803) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Evidence of Industry Custom or Usage Is Irrelevant

The facts and procedural background of Titus v. Bethlehem Steel Corp. (1979) 91 Cal. App. 3d 372, 154 Cal. Rptr. 122 , are discussed in § 190.118[3][a]. In reversing the judgment for defendant, the court of appeal held that defendant had erred in maintaining throughout the trial and in final argument that it was custom and practice in the industry for manufacturers of oil well pumping units to offer security guards as optional equipment. The court explained that custom and usage is not a defense to a cause of action based on strict liability, because custom and usage is relevant only to whether defendant exercised reasonable care in producing the product, which is irrelevant to strict liability (91 Cal. App. 3d 372, 378) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
D. Defenses

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.251

§ 190.251 Opposing Contention That Product Not Defective Because Product's Design Complied With Owner Specifications--Compliance With Owner Specifications Is Irrelevant to Defect Issue and Risk-Benefits Test

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities opposing the contention that defendant is not liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product (see, e.g., § 190.250).]

DEFENDANT _____ [name] MAY NOT INTRODUCE EVIDENCE THAT THE _____ [specify product] WAS DESIGNED ACCORDING TO OWNER SPECIFICATIONS, BECAUSE THAT EVIDENCE IS IRRELEVANT TO THE ISSUE OF WHETHER THE _____ [specify product] IS DEFECTIVE.

A. Evidence of Compliance With Owner Specifications Is Irrelevant. Evidence that the product's manufacturer followed owner specifications in creating the product's design is irrelevant in determining whether the product's design is defective (McLaughlin v. Sikorsky Aircraft (1983) 148 Cal. App. 3d 203, 207-208, 195 Cal. Rptr. 764).

B. Feasibility of Alternative Design Does Not Include Compliance With Owner Specifications. The feasibility of an alternative design, which is a factor considered in the risk-benefit test of Barker v. Lull Eng'g Co. (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 413, 143 Cal. Rptr. 225, 573 P.2d 443 , allows a consideration of physical or mechanical feasibility rather than administrative or bureaucratic feasibility, and does not include the necessity to comply with owner specifications (McLaughlin v. Sikorsky Aircraft (1983) 148 Cal. App. 3d 203, 209, 195 Cal. Rptr. 764).

[Optional] C. Building Product in Accordance With Government Specifications Is Not a Defense. In a strict products liability case, a defendant may not assert in defense to the claim that the product is defective that the manufacturer built the product in accordance with government standards or specifications (McLaughlin v. Sikorsky Aircraft (1983) 148 Cal. App. 3d 203, 209, 195 Cal. Rptr. 764).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that defendant's product is not defective. The ground of opposition set forth is that defendant may not introduce evidence that the manufacturer had designed the product in accordance with owner specifications, because that evidence is irrelevant to the issue of whether the product is defective.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities opposing a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication on the issue that defendant is not subject to strict liability. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should state that defendant's proffered evidence merely shows that the product was designed in accordance with owner specifications, and that such evidence is irrelevant to the issue of whether the product is defective [see, e.g., McLaughlin v. Sikorsky Aircraft (1983) 148 Cal. App. 3d 203, 195 Cal. Rptr. 764 (irrelevant that aircraft was designed in accordance with government specifications)].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Evidence of Compliance With Owner Specifications Is Irrelevant

The facts and procedural background of McLaughlin v. Sikorsky Aircraft (1983) 148 Cal. App. 3d 203, 195 Cal. Rptr. 764 , are discussed in §§ 190.117[3][a] and 190.240[3][a]. In reversing the judgment for defendant, the court of appeal held that evidence that the manufacturer had followed Navy specifications for the aircraft's design was irrelevant to the risk-benefits test of Barker v. Lull Eng'g Co. (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 413, 432, 143 Cal. Rptr. 225, 573 P.2d 443 , and was therefore inadmissible [see §§ 190.110 -190.114]. Specifically, the court ruled that such evidence had been improperly introduced at trial, and that the trial court had improperly rejected a jury instruction proffered by plaintiff that would have instructed the jury not to consider such evidence as a defense to the claim that the product is defective. The court explained that the question of the feasibility of an alternative design, a factor described in the risk-benefits test of Barker, allows a consideration of physical or mechanical feasibility rather than administrative or bureaucratic feasibility, and does not include the necessity to comply with owner specifications. Because the evidence had been introduced, the trial court's refusal to instruct the jury on this essential point was prejudicial error and required reversal (48 Cal. App. 3d 203) .

[b] Feasibility of Alternative Design Does Not Include Compliance With Owner Specifications

McLaughlin v. Sikorsky Aircraft (1983) 148 Cal. App. 3d 203, 195 Cal. Rptr. 764 , is discussed in § 190.251[3][a].

[c] Building Product in Accordance With Government Specifications Is Not a Defense

McLaughlin v. Sikorsky Aircraft (1983) 148 Cal. App. 3d 203, 195 Cal. Rptr. 764 , is discussed in § 190.251[3][a].

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
D. Defenses

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.252

§ 190.252 Opposing Contention That Plaintiff Is Not Entitled to Recovery Because Plaintiff's Lack of Care Contributed to Injury--Error to Instruct Jury That Defendant Not Liable as Matter of Law for Injuries From Use of Broken Product After Plaintiff Became Aware of Damaged State

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities opposing the contention that defendant is not liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product (see, e.g., §§ 190.253, 190.256).]

DEFENDANT _____ [name] IS NOT ENTITLED TO AN INSTRUCTION THAT DEFENDANT IS NOT LIABLE AS A MATTER OF LAW FOR PLAINTIFF'S INJURIES FROM THE USE OF A BROKEN PRODUCT AFTER PLAINTIFF HAD BECOME AWARE OF THE PRODUCT'S DAMAGED STATE, BECAUSE PLAINTIFF HAS INTRODUCED SUBSTANTIAL EVIDENCE THAT THE PRODUCT WAS INITIALLY DEFECTIVE IN _____ [DESIGN and/or MANUFACTURE].

Error to Instruct That Defendant Not Liable as Matter of Law for Injuries From Broken Product When Evidence Suggests That Product Was Initially Defective. It is error to instruct a jury that a manufacturer is not liable as a matter of law for injuries resulting from a plaintiff's use of a broken product after the plaintiff became aware of the fact that the product is in a broken or damaged state, when the plaintiff has introduced substantial evidence suggesting that the product was initially defective in _____ [design and/or manufacture]. The error of such an instruction is that it assumes that the product in question had no inbuilt defects when it left the hands of the manufacturer (Akers v. Kelley Co. (1985) 173 Cal. App. 3d 633, 647, 219 Cal. Rptr. 513).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that plaintiff is not entitled to recovery. The ground of opposition set forth is that defendant is not entitled to an instruction that defendant is not liable as a matter of law for injuries resulting from plaintiff's use of a broken product after plaintiff became aware of the fact that the product was in a broken or damaged state. Such an instruction is improper if plaintiff has introduced substantial evidence suggesting that the product was initially defective in design or manufacture or both.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities opposing a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication on the issue that defendant is not strictly liable. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should state facts showing that the product was initially defective in either design or manufacture or both [see, e.g., Akers v. Kelley Co. (1985) 173 Cal. App. 3d 633 , 219 Cal. Rptr. 513 (court properly refused instruction because plaintiff had introduced substantial evidence that dockboard was initially defective in both design and manufacture)].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Error to Instruct That Defendant Not Liable as Matter of Law for Injuries From Broken Product When Evidence Suggests That Product Was Initially Defective

The facts and procedural background of Akers v. Kelley Co. (1985) 173 Cal. App. 3d 633, 219 Cal. Rptr. 513 , are discussed in § 190.115[3][a]. In affirming the judgment for plaintiff, the court of appeal held that the trial court had properly refused to instruct the jury that a manufacturer is not liable as a matter of law for injuries resulting from plaintiff's use of a broken product after plaintiff became aware of the fact that the product was in a broken or damaged state. The court explained that the vice of the proffered instruction was that it assumed that the dockboard in question had no in-built defects when it left the manufacturer's factory. In this case, however, plaintiff had introduced substantial evidence suggesting that the dockboard was initially defective in both design and manufacture. Thus, the instruction was properly refused (173 Cal. App. 3d 633, 647) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
D. Defenses

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.253

§ 190.253 Opposing Contention That Plaintiff Is Not Entitled to Recovery Because Plaintiff's Lack of Care Contributed to Injury--Plaintiff's Comparative Negligence or Secondary Assumption of Risk Requires Reduction of Plaintiff's Recovery by Proportion of Fault but Does Not Bar Recovery

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities opposing the contention that defendant is not liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product (see, e.g., §§ 190.252, 190.256).]

PLAINTIFF'S COMPARATIVE NEGLIGENCE OR SECONDARY ASSUMPTION OF RISK REDUCES PLAINTIFF'S RECOVERY BY PLAINTIFF'S PROPORTIONAL FAULT BUT DOES NOT BAR RECOVERY.

A. Comparative Fault Applies to Strict Products Liability Cases. The system of comparative fault applies to actions founded on strict products liability (Daly v. General Motors Corp. (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 725, 742, 144 Cal. Rptr. 380, 575 P.2d 1162).

B. Plaintiff's Recovery Is Reduced Only to Extent Plaintiff Contributed to Injury. In a strict products liability case, a plaintiff's recovery is reduced only to the extent that his or her own lack of reasonable care contributed to his or her injury (Daly v. General Motors Corp. (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 725, 737, 144 Cal. Rptr. 380, 575 P.2d 1162).

[Optional] C. Assumption of Risk Requires Application of Comparative Fault Principles Rather Than Bar of Action if Defendant Owed Duty to Plaintiff. The manufacturer of a product owes a duty to users of its product, making the primary assumption of risk doctrine inapplicable in strict products liability actions; plaintiff's knowing encounter of a risk of injury caused by the defendant's breach constitutes secondary assumption of risk, which is merged into the comparative fault system (Milwaukee Elec. Tool Corp. v. Superior Court (1993) 15 Cal. App. 4th 547, 560-565, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 24).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that plaintiff is barred from recovery. The ground of opposition set forth is that plaintiff's recovery is reduced only to the extent that plaintiff contributed to plaintiff's injuries.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities opposing a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication on the issue that defendant is not strictly liable. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should state to what extent plaintiff contributed to his or her injuries, if at all, and that plaintiff is entitled to recover the remaining percentage representing the extent to which defendant caused plaintiff's injuries [see, e.g., Daly v. General Motors Corp. (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 725, 144 Cal. Rptr. 380, 575 P.2d 1162 (evidence of plaintiff's negligence does not automatically bar recovery but is evidence of comparative negligence)]. If this form is used to oppose a contention that plaintiff's action is barred by the assumption of risk doctrine, counsel should discuss facts and precedent supporting the position that a manufacturer of a defective product does owe a duty to users of that product for purposes of analyzing assumption of the risk. Because of that duty, the manufacturer's defense is limited to secondary assumption of risk, which does not bar plaintiff's action but applies principles of comparative fault [see Milwaukee Elec. Tool Corp. v. Superior Court (1993) 15 Cal. App. 4th 547, 560-565, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 24] .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Comparative Fault Applies to Strict Products Liability Cases

In Daly v. General Motors Corp. (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 725, 144 Cal. Rptr. 380, 575 P.2d 1162 , plaintiffs' decedent sustained fatal head injuries when the car that he was driving at 50 miles per hour hit a metal freeway divider, his door was thrown open, and he was ejected from the car. Plaintiffs brought an action in strict liability against the car's manufacturer and various companies in its chain of distribution. Plaintiffs claimed at trial that the car was defective because an improperly designed door latch was activated by the impact, causing decedent to be ejected from the car. Defendants, on the other hand, introduced evidence indicating that the decedent had failed to use either the seat belt or the door lock, and that decedent had been intoxicated, which had led to his failure to use the seat belt or door lock. The jury returned a verdict in favor of defendants, and plaintiffs appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed the judgment, holding that the defenses presented by defendants should not automatically act as a total bar to plaintiffs' recovery, but that instead the principles of comparative negligence apply to a strict liability action. The Court explained that the goal of strict products liability is not frustrated by the adoption of comparative principles, because plaintiffs are still relieved of proving that the manufacturer or distributor was negligent in the production, design, or dissemination of the article in question; defendant is still subject to strict liability; and the principle of protecting the defenseless is still preserved, because plaintiff's recovery is reduced only to the extent that his or her own lack of reasonable care contributed to his or her injury (20 Cal. 3d 725, 731-743) . In addition, the Court found that reversible error occurred by the admission of evidence of the decedent's intoxication and failure to use safety devices in the car (20 Cal. 3d 725, 744-746) .

[b] Plaintiff's Recovery Is Reduced Only to Extent Plaintiff Contributed to Injury

Daly v. General Motors Corp. (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 725, 144 Cal. Rptr. 380, 575 P.2d 1162 , is discussed in § 190.253[3][a].

[c] Assumption of Risk Requires Application of Comparative Fault Principles Rather Than Bar of Action if

Defendant Owed Duty to Plaintiff

In Milwaukee Elec. Tool Corp. v. Superior Court (1993) 15 Cal. App. 4th 547, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 24 , the plaintiff was using a drill manufactured by the Milwaukee Electric Tool Corp. (Milwaukee), to drill through angle iron while on an A-frame ladder. The drill had a side-support handle, which was designed to control the rotational forces generated by the drill; the plaintiff knew that the drill would occasionally "bind up"--that is, the drill bit would stop, causing the body of the drill to rotate in a counterclockwise direction--and that the side-support handle would protect the user from this phenomenon. Plaintiff was injured when the drill bound up while he was using his free hand to hold a post on the building where he was working; the rotation of the drill threw plaintiff off the ladder, causing serious injuries to plaintiff's wrist and arm. Plaintiff sued Milwaukee on theories of strict products liability, breach of express and implied warranty, and negligence. Milwaukee moved for summary adjudication establishing that its affirmative defense of plaintiff's assumption of risk barred the causes of action for strict products liability and breach of warranty. The trial court denied the motion, and Milwaukee sought a writ of mandate from the court of appeal. The court of appeal denied the writ, but the Supreme Court granted review, and remanded the petition to the court of appeal for reconsideration in light of the intervening decision in Knight v. Jewett (1992) 3 Cal. 4th 296, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 2, 834 P.2d 696 .

The court of appeal again denied the petition, holding that assumption of the risk did not bar the plaintiff's action, but merely required apportionment of fault under comparative fault principles (15 Cal. App. 4th 547, 551) . The court examined the development of the strict products liability theory, and noted the retention of some concepts from the law of negligence, which was the context in which the Supreme Court applied the assumption of risk principles in Knight (15 Cal. App. 4th 547, 555-559) . The court relied on authorities including Daly v. General Motors Corp. (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 725, 734-737, 144 Cal. Rptr. 380, 575 P.2d 1162 [see § 190.253[3][a]], which held that comparative fault principles applied to strict products liability actions as well as those based on negligence, to conclude that negligence theory and strict products liability theory were functionally similar insofar as duty and breach are concerned (15 Cal. App. 4th 547, 559) . Therefore, the assumption of risk analysis used in Knight, focusing on whether an action is barred because the doctrine requires a finding that defendant owed no duty to prevent plaintiff's injury, or whether the action is instead subject to comparative fault principles on the ground that defendant did owe a duty to plaintiff but plaintiff knowingly encountered a risk of injury caused by the defendant's breach of that duty, is properly applied to strict products liability actions (15 Cal. App. 4th 547, 559-561) .

In determining whether Milwaukee had established the bar of primary assumption of risk, the court stated that a manufacturer has a duty to users of its products, to produce defect-free products (15 Cal. App. 4th 547, 562) . The court also rejected Milwaukee's contention that plaintiff's allegedly dangerous misuse of the drill reduced or removed that duty of care. Although assumption of risk principles have been used to find that no duty exists in cases involving the firefighter's rule, or in cases in which a veterinarian is injured by an animal that he or she is treating, those cases involve professional persons employed to confront the very dangers posed by the injury-causing agent (15 Cal. App. 4th 547, 562-563) . In contrast, the user of a power tool is not employed for the purpose of testing the manufacturer's products for defects (15 Cal. App. 4th 547, 563) . Once the manufacturer's duty to users of its products is established, the assumption of risk defense asserted by the manufacturer is necessarily limited to secondary assumption of risk, under which liability is apportioned according to fault (15 Cal. App. 4th 547, 565-566) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
D. Defenses

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.254

§ 190.254 Opposing Contention That Plaintiff Is Not Entitled to Recovery Because of Primary Assumption of Risk--Defendant Owes Duty to Participants Not to Increase Risk of Harm Over and Above That Inherent in Sport

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of pints and authorities opposing the contention that defendant is not liable for injuries caused by defendant's product.]

PRIMARY ASSUMPTION OF RISK DID NOT BAR RECOVERY BECAUSE DEFENDANT OWES A DUTY TO PARTICIPANTS NOT TO INCREASE THE RISK OF HARM OVER AND ABOVE THAT INHERENT IN THE SPORT.

A. Defendant Owes Duty to Participants Not to Increase Risk of Harm Over and Above That Inherent in Sport. Although a defendant owes no duty of care to protect a plaintiff against risks inherent in a particular sport voluntarily played by the plaintiff, the defendant owes a duty to participants not to increase the risk of harm over and above that inherent in the sport (Ford v. Polaris Indus., Inc. (2006) 139 Cal. App. 4th 755, 767, 43 Cal. Rptr. 3d 215 ; Knight v. Jewett (1992) 3 Cal. 4th 296, 316 ; American Golf Corp. v. Superior Court (2000) 79 Cal. App. 4th 30, 35, 93 Cal. Rptr. 2d 683).

B. Risk Is Inherent in Sport if Its Elimination Would Chill Vigorous Participation and Alter Fundamental Nature of Activity. A risk is inherent in a sport if its elimination would (1) chill vigorous participation in the sport, and (2) alter the fundamental nature of the activity (Ford v. Polaris Indus., Inc. (2006) 139 Cal. App. 4th 755, 772, 43 Cal. Rptr. 3d 215 ; Ferrari v. Grand Canyon Dories (1995) 32 Cal. App. 4th 248, 253, 38 Cal. Rptr. 2d 65).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that plaintiff is barred from recovery under the doctrine of primary assumption of risk.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Defendant Owes Duty to Participants Not to Increase Risk of Harm Over and Above That Inherent in Sport

In Ford v. Polaris Indus., Inc. (2006) 139 Cal. App. 4th 755, 43 Cal. Rptr. 3d 215 , the plaintiff sustained severe orifice injuries after falling off the rear of a personal watercraft. The jet-powered nozzle propelled a high-pressure stream of water that ripped her internal organs apart. She alleged that the watercraft was defectively designed because there was no means for a passenger to hold on other than to the operator. The trial court ruled that primary assumption of risk did not bar her suit. The jury returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiff.

The appellate court affirmed. Finding the reasoning of Milwaukee Electric Tool Corp. v. Superior Court (1993) 15 Cal. App. 4th 547, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 24 "instructive," the court found that primary assumption of risk did not foreclose plaintiff's strict products liability claim. The court acknowledged that the general risk of falling and coming into contact with water is inherent in jet skiing. However, it declined to find that the specific risks of sustaining orifice injuries are inherent in the sport. Orifice injuries and the conduct that causes them do not belong to the "fundamental nature or habit" of the sport. These injuries occur because of rearward ejection into an extremely dangerous, defined space. Providing an alternative to hanging on to the operator would not change the fundamental nature of the sport or deter vigorous participation. The court was unconvinced by defendant's argument that the nature of the sport and its inherent risks is defined by the industry standard. Cases cited by defendant did not support its proposition that primary assumption of risk will preclude a strict products liability design defect claim against a recreational equipment manufacturer simply because its equipment is "essentially the same" in design as that of other manufacturers. The defendant neglected to take into consideration a key principle of Knight v. Jewett (1992) 3 Cal. 4th 296, 834 P.2d 696 : that the examination of duty under a primary assumption of risk inquiry takes into account a defendant's role in, or relationship to, the sport in question. Analogizing the duty of sports venue proprietors and operators, where the asserted design defect is the failure to incorporate protection against a serious injury into recreational equipment, the court rephrased the manufacturer's duty to design nondefective products as a duty to take reasonable steps to minimize without altering the nature of the sport, at least under circumstances where the risk poses the gravest danger.

The court next rejected the manufacturer's contention that the jury should have been instructed that in addition to proving a harmful, defective design, the plaintiff also had to prove that the defect increased the risk of harm beyond those risks that are a normal part of the sport of jet skiing. A finding of a design defect would itself establish that the manufacturer increased the risk of harm inherent in jet skiing, and the requested instructions would have been redundant and confusing. The given standard risk/utility/design defect instructions were adequate (139 Cal. App. 4th 755, 767-775) .

In Knight v. Jewett (1992) 3 Cal. 4th 296, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 2, 834 P.2d 696 , defendant broke plaintiff's finger in a game of touch football. The Supreme Court of California affirmed the dismissal of plaintiff's negligence claim, holding that it was barred by the primary assumption of risk doctrine.

The court addressed the distinction between the principles of assumption of risk and comparative fault and adopted the phrases "primary assumption of risk" for the former and "secondary assumption of risk" for the latter. In primary assumption of risk cases, there is no duty on the part of the defendant to protect the plaintiff. In secondary assumption of risk cases, defendant does owe a duty of care to the plaintiff but the plaintiff knowingly encounters a risk of injury caused by the defendant's breach of that duty.

A plaintiff who has suffered harm in primary assumption of risk situations is not entitled to recover from the defendant, regardless of whether plaintiff's conduct in undertaking the activity was reasonable or unreasonable. Whether the defendant owed a legal duty to protect a plaintiff from a particular risk of harm does not turn on the reasonableness or unreasonableness of the plaintiff's conduct, but rather on the nature of the activity or sport in which the defendant is engaged and the relationship of the defendant and the plaintiff to that activity or sport.

In this case, defendant's conduct in the course of the touch football game did not breach any legal duty owed to plaintiff, and the case accordingly fell within the primary assumption of risk doctrine (3 Cal. 4th 296, 308-309) .

In American Golf Corp. v. Superior Court (2000) 79 Cal. App. 4th 30, 93 Cal. Rptr. 2d 683 , a golfer's shot ricocheted off a wooden yardage marker, injuring a companion golfer. The injured golfer brought a personal injury action against the golf course for negligent design and placement of the marker. The court of appeal held that the action was barred by the doctrine of primary assumption of risk. The court held that golf is an active sport, errant shots are an inherent risk of golf, markers are an integral part of the sport, and the golf course did not increase the risk of injury by its design and placement of the marker (79 Cal. App. 4th 30, 35) .

[b] Risk Is Inherent in Sport if Its Elimination Would Chill Vigorous Participation and Alter Fundamental Nature of Activity.

Ford v. Polaris Indus., Inc. (2006) 139 Cal. App. 4th 755, 43 Cal. Rptr. 3d 215 , is discussed in § 190.254[3][a].

In Ferrari v. Grand Canyon Dories (1995) 32 Cal. App. 4th 248, 38 Cal. Rptr. 2d 65 , the plaintiff's head struck the metal frame of a raft during a commercial rafting trip sponsored by the defendants. The trial court held that her negligence claim was barred by the doctrine of primary assumption of risk. The court of appeal affirmed (32 Cal. App. 4th 248, 253) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
D. Defenses

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.255

§ 190.255 Opposing Contention That Plaintiff Is Not Entitled to Recovery Because of Primary Assumption of Risk--Manufacturer Owes Duty to User of Its Product

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities opposing the contention that defendant is not liable for injuries caused by defendant's product.]

PRIMARY ASSUMPTION OF RISK DID NOT BAR RECOVERY, BECAUSE PURSUANT TO STRICT PRODUCTS LIABILITY, A MANUFACTURER OWES A DUTY TO A USER OF ITS PRODUCT, THUS MAKING THE PRIMARY ASSUMPTION OF THE RISK DOCTRINE INAPPLICABLE.

Manufacturer's Duty to Users of Product Under Strict Liability Makes Primary Assumption of Risk Inapplicable as Defense. A defendant cannot establish that it is entitled to the defense of primary assumption of risk, unless the defendant owes no legal duty to the plaintiff. Because the manufacturer of a product owes a duty to the users of its products to make defect-free products, the doctrine of primary assumption of risk is inapplicable in a products liability action (Ford v. Polaris Indus., Inc. (2006) 139 Cal. App. 4th 755, 768-769, 43 Cal. Rptr. 3d 215 ; Milwaukee Elec. Tool Corp. v. Superior Court (1993) 15 Cal. App. 4th 547, 565, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 24).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that the plaintiff is barred from recovery under the doctrine of primary assumption of risk.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Manufacturer's Duty to Users of Product Under Strict Liability Makes Primary Assumption of Risk

Inapplicable as Defense

Ford v. Polaris Indus., Inc. (2006) 139 Cal. App. 4th 755, 43 Cal. Rptr. 3d 215 , is discussed in § 190.254[3][a].

In Milwaukee Elec. Tool Corp. v. Superior Court (1993) 15 Cal. App. 4th 547, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 24 , a drill manufacturer contended that the plaintiff's claim against it was barred by primary assumption of risk. The court of appeal disagreed. It pointed out that pursuant to Knight v. Jewett, primary assumption of risk embodies a legal conclusion that there is no duty on the part of a defendant to protect the plaintiff from a particular risk. Under products liability, in contrast, a manufacturer does owe a duty to produce detect-free products (15 Cal. App. 4th 547, 557) . Moreover, in using a defective product, the user does not intend to confront a risk that is inherent in its use. To the extent that the user does elect to use the product with knowledge of the danger posed by the defect, the user's actions are subsumed by comparative negligence. The manufacturer is not relieved of its duty to make a defect-free product. This makes the primary assumption of risk doctrine inapplicable (15 Cal. App. 4th 547, 565) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Manufacturer's Duty to Users of Product Under Strict Liability Makes Primary Assumption of Risk Inapplicable as Defense

The facts and procedural background of Bunch v. Hoffinger Indus., Inc. (2004) 123 Cal. App. 4th 1278, 20 Cal. Rptr. 3d 780 , are discussed in § 190.160[4][b]. The court held that assumption of risk does not insulate equipment suppliers from liability for providing defective equipment and specifically that primary assumption of risk did not bar the plaintiff's products liability claim (123 Cal. App. 4th 1278, 1300-1301) .

The facts and procedural background of Wright v. Stang Mfg. Co. (1997) 54 Cal. App. 4th 1218, 63 Cal. Rptr. 2d 422 , are discussed in § 190.160[4][b]. The court noted that defendants in primary assumption of the risk cases that owed no duty to an injured plaintiff are in a different position than is a manufacturer of a tool that ultimately injures its user, because the user was not necessarily a professional employed to confront the very danger posed by the injury-causing agent. The court concluded that because primary assumption of the risk was not applicable in the strict products liability context, the plaintiff's cause of action was not barred (54 Cal. App. 4th 1218, 1233) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
D. Defenses

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.256

§ 190.256 Opposing Contention That Plaintiff Is Not Entitled to Recovery Because Plaintiff's Lack of Care Contributed to Injury--Plaintiff's Conduct Compared to Defendant's Product and Not to Defendant's Conduct

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities opposing the contention that defendant is not liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product (see, e.g., §§ 190.117, 190.252, 190.253).]

IN APPORTIONING FAULT, PLAINTIFF'S CONDUCT IS COMPARED TO DEFENDANT'S PRODUCT AND NOT TO DEFENDANT'S CONDUCT.

Plaintiff's Conduct Compared to Defendant's Product and Not to Defendant's Conduct. For the purpose of apportionment of comparative fault in a strict products liability action, a plaintiff's conduct is compared to the defendant's product, and not to the defendant's conduct (Fluor Corp. v. Jeppesen & Co. (1985) 170 Cal. App. 3d 468, 480, 216 Cal. Rptr. 68).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that defendant's conduct is relevant to the apportionment of comparative fault. The ground of opposition set forth is that in apportioning fault, plaintiff's conduct is compared to defendant's product, and not to defendant's conduct.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability; typically, these may include the points and authorities contained in § 190.117. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should differentiate between defendant's product and defendant's conduct, and explain that the former rather than the latter is to be compared to plaintiff's conduct in apportioning fault [see, e.g., Fluor Corp. v. Jeppesen & Co. (1985) 170 Cal. App. 3d 468, 216 Cal. Rptr. 68 (jury must compare jet crew's conduct to defendant's airport approach chart, not to defendant's conduct in manufacturing chart)].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Plaintiff's Conduct Compared to Defendant's Product and Not to Defendant's Conduct

The facts and procedural background of Fluor Corp. v. Jeppesen & Co. (1985) 170 Cal. App. 3d 468, 216 Cal. Rptr. 68 , are discussed in §§ 190.20[3][a] and 190.70[3][a]. In reversing the judgment for defendant, on the grounds that the trial court erred in failing to instruct the jury on a strict products liability theory, the court of appeals pointed out that the crew's alleged negligence may still be a significant factor in determining comparative negligence. However, the court expressly stated that for purpose of apportionment under comparative negligence, plaintiff's conduct was to be compared not to defendant's conduct, but to its product (170 Cal. App. 3d 468, 480) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
D. Defenses

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.257

§ 190.257 Opposing Contention That Government Contractor Immunity Is Applicable--No Government Specification

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities opposing the contention that defendant is not liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product (see, e.g., §§ 190.250 -190.256).]

GOVERNMENT CONTRACTOR IMMUNITY DOES NOT APPLY TO IMMUNIZE DEFENDANT _____ [name] FROM LIABILITY FOR DAMAGES CAUSED BY THE DESIGN OF _____ [specify equipment or product] BUILT BY DEFENDANT UNDER DEFENDANT'S CONTRACT WITH THE GOVERNMENT BECAUSE THE GOVERNMENT DID NOT SPECIFY THE DESIGN TO BE USED.

Government Contractor Immunity Requires Specification by Government. A contractor may not successfully assert the government contractor immunity unless the government contract contains reasonably precise building specifications; when the contract is silent concerning the details, and does not specifically require or direct anything of the contractor, the government is not compelling any particular design of the contractor, and the contractor is responsible for his or her own design (see Merritt, Chapman & Scott Corp. v. Guy F. Atkinson Co. (9th Cir. 1961) 295 F.2d 14, 15-16) .

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that the defendant is not liable for any injuries to the plaintiff because as a government contractor the defendant was protected by the government contractor immunity. The ground of opposition is that the immunity is inapplicable because the defendant rather than the government specified the product's design.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities opposing a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication on the issue that the defendant is not liable. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel might attach a copy of the contract between the defendant and the government, illustrating the lack of government design specification.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities in § 190.243.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Government Contractor Immunity Requires Specification by Government

In Merritt, Chapman & Scott Corp. v. Guy F. Atkinson Co. (9th Cir. 1961) 295 F.2d 14 , plaintiff brought an action for damages against defendants, contractors on a government dam, when a temporary upper cofferdam collapsed on two different occasions. The district court judgment was for plaintiff. Defendants appealed.

The court of appeals affirmed. The court responded to defendants' contention that they were protected by the government contract defense by explaining that in order to rely on that defense, defendants' obligation must have been contained within their contract with the government. The court looked at the contract and found that the plans and specifications were silent concerning the details, except for some references concerning the crest elevation. The government did not require or direct anything of defendants regarding the materials to be used, the construction methods to be used, the sequence of construction, or any other detail (295 F.2d 14, 15) . Plaintiff alleged defendants were negligent in five different respects. The court found that of these five, three were not subject to any direct government control and were entirely within the discretion of defendants, and the remaining two were not required of defendants by any government directive or authority. It found no evidence of government compulsion. The court said that compulsion must exist before the government contract defense is available. It explained that in cases in which the government contract defense was upheld, the plans and specifications were drawn and adopted prior to the contract. In such cases the contractor was entitled to follow those plans and specifications, exercising due and proper care and skill, and to require parties damaged to look to the government, which required such a contract, for relief. The government contractor immunity defense will provide the contractor with relief provided such plans and specifications are inadequate, there has been no departure from the plans, and the work has not been done in an improper, careless, or negligent manner by the contractor (295 F.2d 14, 15-16) . The court also noted that although the Corps of Engineers had indicated its preference to hold the upper cofferdam as long as they could, this did not prevent defendants from disregarding those wishes, and making their own decision (295 F.2d 14, 17) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
D. Defenses

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.258

§ 190.258 Opposing Contention That Government Contractor Immunity Is Applicable--No Significant Conflict Between Government Contractual Requirements and State Law

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities opposing the contention that defendant is not liable for injuries caused by defendant's product.]

THE GOVERNMENT CONTRACTOR IMMUNITY DOES NOT APPLY TO IMMUNIZE DEFENDANT _____ [name] FROM LIABILITY FOR DAMAGES CAUSED BY THE DESIGN OF _____ [specify equipment or product] PRODUCED BY DEFENDANT UNDER CONTRACT WITH THE GOVERNMENT, BECAUSE DEFENDANT HAS FAILED TO SHOW THE NECESSARY SIGNIFICANT CONFLICT BETWEEN THE GOVERNMENT CONTRACTUAL REQUIREMENTS AND STATE LAW.

No Government Contractor Immunity When Significant Conflict Between Contractual Requirement and Law Has Not Been Established. The government contractor defense does not apply when the necessary significant conflict between federal contracting requirements and state law has not been established (Jackson v. Deft (1990) 223 Cal. App. 3d 1305, 1317, 273 Cal. Rptr. 214).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a defendant is not liable for any injuries to the plaintiff on the ground of government contractor immunity. The ground of opposition is that defendant has failed to show the necessary significant conflict between the government contractual requirements and state law [see Jackson v. Deft (1990) 223 Cal. App. 3d 1305, 1317, 273 Cal. Rptr. 214] .

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities in opposition to defendant's motion for summary judgment.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Therefore, counsel should show that defendant was not precluded by virtue of the government contract from rendering the product safe. For example, if the government contract included relevant specifications, counsel should show that the specifications did not limit further refinement of the design feature in question, which was capable of being made safe without violating the contract.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities in § 190.243.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Government Contractor Immunity When Significant Conflict Between Contractual Requirement and Law Has Not Been Established

In Jackson v. Deft (1990) 223 Cal. App. 3d 1305, 273 Cal. Rptr. 214 , a civilian painter employed for several years by the United States Navy brought an action against the suppliers of a certain paint product, seeking damages arising from respiratory injuries he incurred because of exposure to a chemical in the paint (toluene diisocyanate), on the basis that the paint can labels contained inadequate warnings of the dangers of the product (among other theories of liability). Plaintiff alleged that during his employment by the Navy, at two locations, he was exposed to the paint supplied by defendants, which caused him to develop asthma and other disabilities. Defendants moved for summary judgment on the ground that the military contractor defense as defined in Boyle v. United Techs. Corp. (1988) 487 U.S. 500, 108 S. Ct. 2510, 101 L. Ed. 2d 442 [see § 190.243[3][a]], shielded them from any liability under state tort law, and that alternatively, the warnings on their paint products were adequate as a matter of law. One defendant asserted the following: (1) it produced the paint product, a weather-resistant coating, according to military specifications from the Navy; (2) it provided the military with any information it had regarding hazards associated with the use of its product; (3) Navy specifications included specific provisions for marking and labeling, including caution labeling; (4) defendant complied with all Navy specifications, including cautionary language; and (5) regarding the adequacy of its warnings under principles of state tort law, the warnings on its paint can labels were "clear, understandable, and completely unambiguous." Defendant's supporting evidence included the military specifications under which it produced the paint product, copies of certain of its labels, and a declaration its sales vice-president. The declaration stated that defendant complied with all labeling requirements of military specifications, including cautions on product use. The specifications varied for successive periods of time. The first specification required a label on every component container in every kit and on each exterior shipping container, cautioning in capital letters that the coating material is toxic and should be used with adequate ventilation, and that the user should avoid breathing vapors or getting the product in the eyes, on skin, or on clothing. The specification also required a label on each component unit with usage instructions and specific precautions; it was later superseded by an Air Force specification, which required less information on each label on each individual can and container. That specification required only a brief statement regarding the danger of flammability and the need for protective clothing and adequate ventilation, and directed the user to contact the departmental medical service for safe handling instructions. From that point on, defendant used that language on its labels. The other defendant asserted that: (1) the Navy approved reasonably precise specifications for the labeling of the paint coating; (2) it labeled the coating pursuant to the specifications; (3) the Navy was aware of the hazards of the chemical in question; (4) the Navy made no complaints concerning its compliance with the labeling requirements of the specifications; and (5) the labels it used provided adequate warning and explanation of proper procedures for use. That defendant's motion was supported by the pertinent military specifications, copies of its labels, and declarations of its vice-president. One of those labels warned in capital letters that the product was flammable and contained harmful, potentially irritating vapor; it also included a caution regarding adequate ventilation, protective clothing, and fire prevention, and an admonition to follow OSHA regulations regarding ventilation and respiratory equipment. Plaintiff asserted that defendants failed to establish all the elements of the military contractor's defense, and that the product manufactured by defendants was defective and did not contain an adequate warning. Plaintiff submitted evidence that one of the defendants sold 20 percent of its business in that product to industrial accounts. The sales vice-president for that defendant did not know if anyone at the corporation investigated whether the labels sold to the Navy provided adequate warning of the hazards of the chemical in question, but speculated that some of its technical directors might have investigated the subject. He also testified that the staff determined what language to use on the labels, on the basis of what the Navy requested, other unspecified information it normally receives from its association, and any information from its supplier. The vice-president who testified on behalf of the other defendant stated that it also sold that paint to commercial accounts, that he considered the military labeling specifications to be minimum standards, and that, in his view, the company was not limited by those specifications, and could add additional information that it considered appropriate. Plaintiff submitted a declaration by a psychologist specializing in "the area of human factors," who analyzed and criticized the labels of both defendants, but the trial court sustained one defendant's objection to consideration of that declaration, in part for lack of qualification of the witness as an expert. The trial court granted summary judgment on the alternative grounds of military contractor immunity, and the adequacy as a matter of law of the warnings. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that triable issues of fact remained regarding both grounds (223 Cal. App. 3d 1305, 1313-1321) . The court first considered whether defendants established all the elements of the military contractor's defense, noting that that issue is generally a question of fact for the jury. The court noted that in Boyle, the United States Supreme Court clarified at least to some extent the circumstances under which a contractor providing military equipment to the federal government can be held liable under state tort law for injury caused by a design defect (223 Cal. App. 3d 1305, 1314) . Boyle held that liability for design defects in military equipment cannot be imposed under state law when: (1) the United States approved reasonably precise specifications; (2) the equipment conformed to those specifications; and (3) the supplier warned the United States about the dangers in the use of the equipment that were known to the supplier but not to the United States. The first two conditions assure that the design feature was considered by a government officer and not merely by the contractor itself; the third condition avoids creating an incentive for the manufacturer to withhold knowledge of risks. The court of appeal noted that although Boyle did not address the applicability of the defense in a failure-to-warn case, federal appellate cases (in jurisdictions other than the Ninth Circuit) have considered the issue since Boyle. In one of those cases, the court noted, "Stripped to its essentials, the military contractor's defense under Boyle is to claim 'The Government made me do it.' " Boyle displaces state law only when the Government, making a discretionary, safety-related military-procurement decision contrary to the requirements of state law, incorporates this decision into a military contractor's contractual obligations, thereby limiting the contractor's ability to accommodate safety in a different fashion. That court concluded that if there was an issue of material act regarding the government's control over the warnings accompanying a product, the matter could not be resolved on summary judgment. In another case, the courts found that although the government contractor defense could apply to failure-to-warn cases, it was inapplicable to the facts before it, because there was no conflict between the state duty to warn and the federal contractual duty (223 Cal. App. 3d 1305, 1316) .

On the basis of those cases and others, the court of appeal stated that the defendants' evidence did not establish as a matter of law the necessary significant conflict between federal contracting requirements and state law. The court noted that although defendants' evidence did show that certain warnings were required by the military specifications, the evidence did not establish that the specifications placed any limitation on additional information from the manufacturers to users of their products. Rather, the evidence suggested that no such limitation existed. The court concluded that there is at least a triable issue of fact concerning the existence of a substantial conflict between a federal interest and state law, and the trial court erred in granting summary judgment for defendants (223 Cal. App. 3d 1305, 1317) . Although determination of that issue was not necessary to its holding, the court noted that the paint in question could be considered "military equipment" for the purposes of applying the military contractor defense. It stated that, in its view, if a product is produced according to military specifications and used by the military because of particular qualities that serve a military purpose, and is incidentally sold commercially as well, that product may nonetheless still qualify as military equipment. Therefore, the evidence that the paint produced by defendants was also sold commercially does not absolutely foreclose application of the military contractor defense. Conversely, it stated, the scant evidence in the record concerning the qualities of the paints that made them suitable for military aircraft is insufficient to establish as a matter of law that they are military equipment (223 Cal. App. 3d 1305, 1318-1319) .

The court also discussed the adequacy of the warnings under state law. The court found that the trial court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to consider the declaration of the psychologist who testified on behalf of plaintiff (223 Cal. App. 3d 1305, 1319-1320) . It nevertheless concluded that the trial court erred in holding that the warnings were adequate as a matter of law. The court stated that under California law, a product may be defective because of the absence of an adequate warning of the dangers inherent in its use. Whether the absence of a warning makes a product defective depends on several factors, among them the normal expectations of the consumer regarding how a product will perform, degrees of simplicity or complication in its operation or use, the nature and magnitude of the danger to which the user is exposed, the likelihood of injury, and the feasibility and beneficial effect of including a warning. The court noted that the labels of the two defendants were not identical (and that one defendant ultimately shortened its cautionary instructions), and that reasonable people might disagree about whether any or all of the warnings were unambiguous and conspicuous, and whether they provided sufficient information on the extent of risks and symptoms of overexposure to defendants' products. It concluded that defendants were not entitled to summary judgment on the ground that their labels were adequate as a matter of law (223 Cal. App. 3d 1305, 1320) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
D. Defenses

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.258A

§ 190.258A Opposing Contention That Government Contractor Immunity Is Applicable--Finding That Defense Applies to Design Defect Claim Does Not Necessarily Immunize Defendant on Failure-to-Warn Claim

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities opposing the contention that defendant is not liable for injuries caused by defendant's product.]

GOVERNMENT CONTRACTOR IMMUNITY DOES NOT APPLY TO IMMUNIZE DEFENDANT _____[name] FROM LIABILITY FOR DAMAGES CAUSED BY THE FAILURE TO WARN OF THE DANGERS OF _____ [specify equipment or product], BECAUSE DEFENDANT DID NOT ESTABLISH AN IDENTIFIABLE INTEREST IN THE EXISTENCE OR METHOD OF A WARNING AND A SIGNIFICANT CONFLICT BETWEEN THAT FEDERAL INTEREST AND THE OPERATION OF STATE LAW.

A. No Government Contractor Immunity for Failure-to-Warn Claims Unless Federal Contract Includes Warning Requirements That Significantly Conflict With State Law. The government contractor defense applies in failure-to-warn cases only if the applicable federal contract includes warning requirements that significantly conflict with those that would be imposed under state law (Oxford v. Foster Wheeler LLC (1990) 177 Cal. App. 4th 700, 711, 99 Cal. Rptr. 3d 418 ; Jackson v. Deft, Inc. (1990) 223 Cal. App. 3d 1305, 1317, 273 Cal. Rptr. 214).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a defendant is not liable for any injuries to the plaintiff on the ground of government contractor immunity. The ground of opposition is that the defendant failed to show that the applicable federal contract included warning requirements that significantly conflicted with those that would be imposed under state law (Oxford v. Foster Wheeler LLC (1990) 177 Cal. App. 4th 700, 711, 99 Cal. Rptr. 3d 418 ; Jackson v. Deft, Inc. (1990) 223 Cal. App. 3d 1305, 1317, 273 Cal. Rptr. 214).

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities in opposition to defendant's motion for summary judgment.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should point to the absence of any specific warning requirements in the federal contract at issue that would significantly conflict with those that would be imposed under state law.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities in § 190.243.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Government Contractor Immunity for Failure-to-Warn Claims Unless Federal Contract Includes Warning Requirements That Significantly Conflict With State Law

In Oxford v. Foster Wheeler LLC (1990) 177 Cal. App. 4th 700, 99 Cal. Rptr. 3d 418 , the decedent was exposed to asbestos while working in the boiler repair shop on a navy vessel at various shipyards. Defendant had manufactured the boilers pursuant to detailed military specifications. He developed mesothelioma many years later. His widow brought a wrongful death action alleging products liability and negligence. In a special verdict, the jury found against the plaintiff on her products liability claims for design defect and failure to warn, but in favor of plaintiffs on their negligence claim. The jury also found that the defendant had proven the three elements of the government contractor defense. The trial court found that the defense did not foreclose judgment against the defendant, reasoning that the defense verdict on the products liability claim did not subsume the jury's finding on negligent failure to warn, and that the government contractor defense does not apply to failure to warn claims.

The court of appeal reversed and remanded the action for a new trial, holding that the special verdict form was irreconcilably inconsistent. It did, however, agree with the trial court that the jury's verdict on the government contractor defense did not entitle the defendant to judgment in its favor.

The court first agreed with Jackson v. Deft, Inc., (1990) 223 Cal. App. 3d 1305, 273 Cal. Rptr. 214 , that commercial availability of a product is not the dispositive issue regarding the defense. Confining the defense to products made exclusively for the military would be "unduly confining." Rather, the focus is on whether the area involves "uniquely federal interests," and if so, whether application of state law conflicts with federal policy. The court determined that substantial evidence supported each of the jury's findings regarding the three elements of the defense.

However, the government contractor defense does not immunize a defendant from all liability. The defense has limited application in failure-to-warn cases, coming into play only if the applicable federal contract includes warning requirements that significantly conflict with those that would be imposed under state law. The jury here had not been given a government contractor defense tailored to the failure-to-warn context. Although the jury's findings appeared to preclude liability for claims relating to the design of the boilers, the defense did not necessarily immunize defendant from liability on the failure-to-warn claims (177 Cal. App. 4th 700, 709-711) .

Jackson v. Deft, Inc. (1990) 223 Cal. App. 3d 1305, 273 Cal. Rptr. 214 , is discussed in 190.258[3][a].

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
D. Defenses

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.259

§ 190.259 Opposing Contention That Federal Preemption is Applicable

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities opposing the contention that defendant is not liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product.]

PLAINTIFF'S PRODUCTS LIABILITY ACTION FOR DAMAGES CAUSED BY A DEFECT IN _____ [specify product, e.g. A SEAT BELT] IS NOT PREEMPTED BY FEDERAL LAW, BECAUSE _____ [specify applicable federal statute or regulation, e.g., TITLE 15 OF THE UNITED STATES CODE, SECTIONS 1381-1431] DOES NOT EVINCE A CLEAR AND MANIFEST INTENT TO SUPERSEDE STATE LAW.

[or]

PLAINTIFF'S PRODUCTS LIABILITY ACTION FOR DAMAGES CAUSED BY A DEFECT IN _____ [specify product] IS NOT PREEMPTED BY FEDERAL LAW, BECAUSE IT IS NOT IMPOSSIBLE FOR THE DEFENDANT TO COMPLY WITH BOTH ITS STATE AND FEDERAL OBLIGATIONS.

A. Federal Preemption Inapplicable Absent Congressional Intent to Supersede State Law. Federal preemption does not apply when Congress did not intend for federal requirements to supersede state law (*Wyeth v. Levine (March 4, 2009) 2009 U.S. LEXIS 1774, at 16 ; Altria Group, Inc. v. Good (2008) --U.S.--, 129 S. Ct. 538, 543, 172 L. Ed. 2d 398, 406 ; Medtronic v. Lohr (1996) 518 U.S. 470, 485-486, 116 S. Ct. 2240, 135 L. Ed. 2d 700 ; McKenney v. Purepac Pharm. Co. (2008) 167 Cal. App. 4th 72, 80, 83 Cal. Rptr. 3d 810 ; Ketchum v. Hyundai Motor Co. (1996) 49 Cal. App. 4th 1672, 1679, 57 Cal. Rptr. 2d 595).

B. No Federal Preemption When Defendant Has Failed to Show Conflicting Statutory Specifications. Federal

preemption does not apply when defendant fails to prove that its product was designed, manufactured, and labeled according to federal specifications, or that state specifications conflict with federal standards (*Wyeth v. Levine (March 4, 2009) 2009 U.S. LEXIS 1774, at 30 ; LaPlante v. Wellcraft Marine Corp. (2001) 94 Cal. App. 4th 282, 114 Cal. Rptr. 2d 196 ; Steele v. Collagen Corp. (1997) 54 Cal. App. 4th 1474, 1490 ; Armstrong v. Optical Radiation Corp. (1996) 50 Cal. App. 4th 580, 592-595, 57 Cal. Rptr. 2d 763).

C. FDA Regulation Does Not Preempt Strict Liability for Failure to Warn. Federal Food and Drug Administration (FDA) regulations do not preempt common law tort remedies for failure to warn (*Wyeth v. Levine (March 4, 2009) 2009 U.S. LEXIS 1774, at 45 ; McKenney v. Purepac Pharm. Co. (2008) 167 Cal. App. 4th 72, 83-84, 83 Cal. Rptr. 3d 810 ; Carlin v. Superior Court (1996) 13 Cal. 4th 1104, 1113).

D. No Federal Preemption of Design Claims Involving "Substantially Equivalent" Medical Device. The MDA does not preempt design claims involving "substantially equivalent" medical devices because the § 510(k) process does not require a device to take a particular form, and because the claims do not impose a legal standard "different from or in addition to" federal requirements (Medtronic, Inc. v. Lohr (1996) 518 U.S. 470, 494-495, 116 S. Ct. 2240, 135 L. Ed. 2d 700).

E. No Federal Preemption of Express Warranty Claims Regarding Cigarettes. The federal Public Health Cigarette Smoking Act of 1969 (15 U.S.C.S. § 1331 et seq.) does not preempt causes of action for breach of express warranty because those causes of action are derived from and measured by the terms of the warranty, and because the requirements imposed by an express warranty are not imposed "under state law," but rather by the warrantor (Cipollone v. Liggett Group (1992) 505 U.S. 504, 525, 112 S. Ct. 2608, 120 L. Ed. 2d 407).

F. No Federal Preemption of Certain Fraud Claims Regarding Cigarettes. The federal Public Health Cigarette Smoking Act of 1969 (15 U.S.C.S. § 1331 et seq.) does not preempt causes of action for fraud based on concealment of material facts insofar as they rely on a state law duty to disclose those facts through channels of communication other than advertising or promotion. The federal Act does not preempt fraudulent misrepresentation claims with respect to advertising and promotion because those claims are predicated not on a duty "based on smoking and health," but on the more general duty not to deceive (Altria Group, Inc. v. Good (2008)-- U.S. --, 129 S. Ct. 538, 545-546, 172 L. Ed. 2d 398 ; Cipollone v. Liggett Group (1992) 505 U.S. 504, 528-529, 112 S. Ct. 2608, 120 L. Ed. 2d 407 ; Whiteley v. Philip Morris, Inc. (2004) 117 Cal. App. 4th 635, 666-677).

G. FIFRA Does Not Preempt State Rule Unless It Satisfies Two Conditions. A particular state rule is not preempted by § 136v(b) of the Federal Insecticide, Fungicide, and Rodenticide Act (FIFRA) unless it satisfies two conditions: (1) it is a requirement "for labeling or packaging," and (2) it imposes a labeling or packaging requirement that is "in addition to or different from" those required under FIFRA (Bates v. Dow Agrosciences L.L.C. (2005) 544 U.S. 431, 125 S. Ct. 1788, 161 L. Ed. 2d 687, 702-703) .

H. State Law Labeling Requirement That Is Equivalent to and Consistent With FIFRA's Misbranding Provisions Is Not Preempted. A state law labeling requirement is not preempted by § 136v(b) if it is equivalent to and fully consistent with FIFRA's misbranding provisions (Bates v. Dow Agrosciences LLC (2005) 544 U.S. 431, 125 S. Ct. 1788, 161 L. Ed. 2d 687, 705) .

I. State Law Requirement Need Not Be Phrased in Identical Language to Corresponding FIFRA Requirement. A state law requirement need not be phrased in the identical language as its corresponding FIFRA requirement to survive preemption (Bates v. Dow Agrosciences LLC (2005) 544 U.S. 431, 125 S. Ct. 1788, 161 L. Ed. 2d 687, 709) .

J. Claims Based on Oral Representations Are Outside Scope of FIFRA Preemption. Because FIFRA defines labeling as written, printed, or graphic matter accompanying a pesticide, state law claims based on an agent's oral representations do not constitute requirements "for labeling or packaging" and are not preempted (Bates v. Dow Agrosciences LLC (2005) 544 U.S. 431, 125 S. Ct. 1788, 161 L. Ed. 2d 687, 704 n.17).

K. Express Warranty Claims Not Preempted if Defendant Voluntarily Warranted Product's Fitness for Particular Purpose. State law claims for breach of warranty are not preempted where the manufacturer or retailer voluntarily warranted the pesticide product's fitness for a particular purpose (Sun Valley Packing v. Consep, Inc. (2001) 94 Cal. App. 4th 315, 322, 114 Cal. Rptr. 2d 237).

L. Savings Clause of Federal Railroad Safety Act Permits State Regulation of Matter Not Covered by Federal Regulations or Orders. The savings clause of the Federal Railroad Safety Act's express preemption provision permits a state to adopt or continue to enforce a law that covers subject matter not already covered by federal regulations or orders (49 U.S.C. § 20106; Haynes v. AMTRAK (C.D. Cal. 2006) 423 F. Supp. 2d 1073, 1081) .

M. Savings Clause of Federal Railroad Safety Act Permits State Regulation of Matters Covered by Federal Regulations if Law Meets Three Criteria. The savings clause of the Federal Railroad Safety Act's express preemption provision permits a State to enact or enforce laws on matters covered by federal regulation if the law (1) is necessary to address local safety concerns, (2) is compatible with federal law, and 3) does not necessarily burden state commerce (49 U.S.C. § 20106; Haynes v. AMTRAK (C.D. Cal. 2006) 423 F. Supp. 2d 1073, 1081) .

N. FDA Labeling Regulation Does Not Preempt Warning Claim Against Generic Drug Manufacturer. The FDA regulation requiring generic manufacturers to use the same labeling used on the original listed drug does not preempt a failure-to-warn claim against a generic drug manufacturer (McKenney v. Purepac Pharm. Co. (2008) 167 Cal. App. 4th 72, 77, 83 Cal. Rptr. 3d 810).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that defendant has no liability because plaintiff's state common law claims are preempted by federal statutory requirements. The ground of opposition set forth is that defendant has failed to show that Congress intended the federal requirement to preempt state common law or that defendant has not established that its product was designed, manufactured, or labeled according to federal statutory specifications.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities opposing a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication on the issue that defendant is not subject to strict liability. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should set forth facts showing that the plaintiffs state claims are not preempted by federal statutory requirements.

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in § 190.249 may be used to oppose the points and authorities in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Federal Preemption Inapplicable Absent Congressional Intent to Supersede State Law

Wyeth v. Levine (March 4, 2009) 2009 U.S. LEXIS 1774 , is discussed in § 190.259[3][c].

Altria Group, Inc. v. Good (2008) -- U.S. --, 129 S. Ct. 538, 172 L. Ed. 2d 398 , is discussed in § 190.259[3][f].

In Medtronic v. Lohr (1996) 518 U.S. 470, 116 S. Ct. 2240, 135 L. Ed. 2d 700 , plaintiff filed a common law negligence claim in Florida state court against the manufacturer of plaintiff's pacemaker when his pacemaker failed, requiring emergency surgery. According to the plaintiff's treating physician, the pacemaker failed because of a defect in the lead. The manufacturer removed the case to the United States District Court on the basis of diversity. Thereafter, the manufacturer moved for summary judgment, alleging that the plaintiff's claims were preempted by 21 U.S.C.S. § 360k(a), which provides that no state may establish or continue in effect with respect to a device intended for human use any requirement that is different from, or in addition to, any requirement applicable to the decide under the Federal Drug and Cosmetic Act [21 U.S.C.S. § 301 et seq.].

The district court granted the defendant's motion and dismissed the complaint. On appeal, the Eleventh Circuit reversed in part and affirmed in part, holding that: (1) common-law actions were state requirements within the meaning of § 360k(a); (2) the claims based on negligent design were not preempted by § 360k(a); and (3) the claims based on negligent manufacture and failure to warn were preempted by § 360k(a). The United States Supreme Court reversed the Eleventh Circuit's decision insofar as it held that any of the claims were preempted by federal law.

The Court first provided a framework for determining whether a federal statute preempts state law. Preemption analysis must begin with the text of the preemption statute, but that there is a presumption against preemption that supports a narrow interpretation of the statute. There is a presumption that federal statutes do not supersede the historic police powers of the states unless it is the clear and manifest purpose of Congress to do so. In addition, because preemption analysis is guided by the idea that "the purpose of Congress is the ultimate touchstone" in every preemption case, any understanding of the scope of a preemption statute rests primarily on a "fair understanding of congressional purpose. The Court determined that although Congress' intent primarily is discerned from the language of the preemption statute and the statutory framework surrounding it, the structure and purpose of the statute as revealed not only in the text, but through the reviewing court's reasoned understanding of the way in which Congress intended the statute and its surrounding regulatory scheme to affect business, consumers, and the law, is also considered relevant (518 U.S. 470, 485-486) .

McKenney v. Purepac Pharm. Co. (2008) 167 Cal. App. 4th 72, 83 Cal. Rptr. 3d 810 , is discussed in § 190.259[3][n].

Ketchum v. Hyundai Motor Co. (1996) 49 Cal. App. 4th 1672, 57 Cal. Rptr. 2d 595 , was an appeal from a trial court's $14 million judgment against defendant for injuries sustained by plaintiff while a passenger in an automobile manufactured by the defendant. The court of appeal affirmed in part and reversed in part. In the published portion of the opinion, the court concluded that the design defect claim based on a seat belt design that complied with federal standards was not preempted by the National Traffic and Safety Act. The federal statute provided that "compliance with any Federal motor vehicle safety standard issued under this subchapter does not exempt any person from any liability under common law." The court determined that Congress intended these federal provisions to specify only the minimum standards for motor vehicle safety. There was no intent to supersede higher safety performance standards (49 Cal. App. 4th 1672, 1679) .

NOTE:

In Geier v. American Honda Motor Co. (2000) 529 U.S. 861, 866-874, 120 S. Ct. 1913, 146 L. Ed. 2d 814 , discussed in § 190.249[3][c], the U.S. Supreme Court held that the FMVSA's saving clause does not bar conflict preemption, and that a common law "no airbag" case conflicted with FMVSS 208 and was thus preempted. Geier effectively abrogated Ketchum's approach to determining the preemptive effect of FMVSS 208 (Williamson v. Mazda Motor of Am., Inc. (2008) 167 Cal. App. 4th 905, 914, 84

Cal. Rptr. 3d 545 , modified and reh'g denied, 2008 Cal. App. LEXIS 2269). Ketchum should thus not be cited in support of any proposition broader than then general preemption principle stated in this point.

[b] No Federal Preemption When Defendant Has Failed to Show Conflicting Statutory Specifications

Wyeth v. Levine (March 4, 2009) 2009 U.S. LEXIS 1774 , is discussed in § 190.259[3][c].

In LaPlante v. Wellcraft Marine Corp. (2001) 94 Cal. App. 4th 282, 114 Cal. Rptr. 2d 196 , the plaintiff had been thrown from a boat and then struck by it. The court of appeal held that the Federal Boat Safety Act (FBSA) neither expressly nor impliedly preempted claims alleging inadequate handhold areas in a boat's tow area. In finding no express preemption, the court stated that the FBSA's preemption provision, 46 U.S.C.S. § 4306, only expressly precludes a state from enforcing a law or regulation that is not identical to a regulation prescribed by the Coast Guard. It does not prohibit the establishment or enforcement by state laws or regulations for which no Coast Guard regulations have been promulgated. Moreover, the preemption provision must be read in conjunction with the savings clause.

The court also found that United States v. Locke (2000) 529 U.S. 89, 120 S. Ct. 1135, 146 L. Ed. 2d 69 , did not establish field preemption through the FBSA, as that case involved commercial oil tankers, not recreational vessels. Several factors weighed against a finding of field preemption. First, boat safety has traditionally been within the purview of state regulation. Second, the language of the FBSA preemption clause only precludes a state from acting when the Coast Guard has promulgated a regulation. Third, the savings clause makes it clear that Congress did not intend to preclude all state regulation. Fourth, the FBSA does not mandate the promulgation of regulations but merely permits it [46 U.S.C.S. § 4302(a)]. Finally, the Coast Guard has not promulgated a comprehensive scheme of federal regulation.

The court also found that plaintiff's common law claims were not subject to conflict preemption. Because the Coast Guard has not adopted any regulations dealing with handrails or handgrips, there is no federal regulations which would conflict with a state common law claim of negligent failure to install such handhold devices. The absence of Coast Guard regulation of handhold devices did not reflect an intention that handhold devices remain unregulated. Unlike the "no propeller guard" cases, in which courts have uniformly concluded that the failure of the Coast Guard to adopt a regulation reflected an intention that the area not be regulated, the Coast Guard did not undertake a comparable decision making process involving handhold devices (94 Cal. App. 4th 282, 291-295) .

In Steele v. Collagen Corp. (1997) 54 Cal. App. 4th 1474, 63 Cal. Rptr. 2d 879 , plaintiff brought a personal injury action against a collagen manufacturer, alleging that she developed an autoimmune disorder after receiving a test injection of the defendant's product. The trial court granted defendant summary judgment, holding that plaintiff's causes of action were preempted by the Medical Device Amendments to the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act [21 U.S.C.S. §§ 360c, 360k] because the product had been approved by the Food and Drug Administration (FDA). The court of appeal reversed, holding that the defendant has the burden of proving preemption by establishing that its product was designed, manufactured, and labeled according to the specifications approved by the FDA. Defendant only established that its product had been through the premarket approval (PMA) process, and preemption did not follow from that fact alone. The court remanded the case for further proceedings because it could not determine whether the defendant met the applicable federal standard of care (54 Cal. App. 4th 1474, 1490) .

NOTE:

In Riegel v. Medtronic, Inc. (2008) 552 U.S. 312, 128 S. Ct. 999, 169 L. Ed. 2d 892 , the U.S. Supreme Court held that the preemption clause of the Medical Device Amendments of 1976 (MDA) bars common law claims challenging the safety or effectiveness of a medical device with premarket approval. Armstrong v. Optical Radiation Corp., below, although not yet overruled, should not be cited to support the contention that state law claims are not "different from, or in addition to" duties imposed by federal law. The facts and procedural background of Riegel v. Medtronic, Inc. (2008) 552 U.S. 312, 128 S. Ct. 999, 169 L. Ed. 2d 892 , are discussed in § 190.249[3][k].

In Armstrong v. Optical Radiation Corp. (1996) 50 Cal. App. 4th 580, 57 Cal. Rptr. 2d 763 , plaintiff brought an action in negligence, strict liability, and breach of warranty against the manufacturer of a surgical aid for injuries she allegedly sustained as a result of the use of the product during surgery. The trial court granted the defendant's motion for summary judgment on the ground that plaintiff's claims were preempted by the Medical Device Amendments of 1976 [21 U.S.C.S. § 360c et seq.] to the Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act [21 U.S.C.S. § 301 et seq.] The court of appeal reversed, holding that plaintiff's negligence cause of action was not preempted by federal regulation. To preempt a state common law claim, the defendant must establish the existence of a state law requirement specifically developed with respect to medical devices which differ from or are in addition to federal requirements specific to a particular device. The court determined that although the FDA imposed federal law requirements specifically developed with respect to the defendant's product, but there was no conflicting state law requirement specifically developed with respect to the device. To the extent the negligence claim paralleled federal requirements or was based on a violation of FDA regulations, it was not "different from, or in addition to" the duties mandated by federal law. Moreover, the state law requirements "were not specifically developed 'with respect to' medical devices" (50 Cal. App. 4th 580, 592-595) .

[c] FDA Regulation Does Not Preempt Strict Liability for Failure to Warn

In Wyeth v. Levine (March 4, 2009) 2009 U.S. LEXIS 1774 , the U.S. Supreme held in a 6-3 opinion that FDA approval of a drug's label does not provide a complete defense to failure-to-warn claims. The three key elements to the ruling are:

- It was not impossible for the drug manufacturer to comply with both its state and federal law obligations regarding drug labeling.

- Plaintiff's state-law failure-to warn claims did not stand as an obstacle to the accomplishment of Congress' purpose in the FDCA.

- The FDA's Preemption Preamble to its 2006 Final Rule was not entitled to deference.

Levine began when the plaintiff received an injection of the anti-nausea drug Phenergan as part of her migraine treatment. The drug was injected directly into her vein through the "IV-push" method. It entered her artery, causing gangrene and resulting in the amputation her entire forearm. She brought a claim against the manufacturer, alleging that the label was defective because it did not instruct practitioners to use the IV-drip method of intravenous administration rather than the higher risk IV-push method. The Phenergan label did warn of the danger of gangrene and amputation following inadvertent intra-arterial injection.

The jury found in favor of the plaintiff. The trial court denied Wyeth's motion for judgment n.o.v., rejecting the manufacturer's preemption arguments. The Vermont Supreme affirmed. The state court ruled that federal labeling requirements created a floor, not a ceiling, for state regulation, and that conflict preemption did not bar the plaintiff's claims. The U.S. Supreme Court granted Wyeth's petition for certiorari.

Justice Stevens delivered the opinion of the Court, which Justices Kennedy, Souter, Ginsburg, and Breyer joined. Before beginning its analysis, The Court identified two legal principles that guided its analysis: the "purpose of Congress" as the ultimate touchstone in every preemption case, and its recognition of the presumption against preemption.

The Court then turned to Wyeth's first argument: that it would have been impossible to comply with the state-law duty to modify labeling without violating federal law. This argument failed, because FDA's "change being effected" (CBE) regulation does permit a manufacturer to make certain changes to its label before receiving FDA approval of its supplemental application, 21 C.F.R. § 314.70(c)(6)(iii)(A), (C). The manufacturer's contention that the CBE regulation was not implicated because a 2008 amendment allows the manufacturer only to change its label "to reflect newly acquired information"-- 73 Fed. Reg. 49603, 49609-- was also unsuccessful. Wyeth could have revised the Phenergan label even under the amended regulation, because "newly acquired information" includes "new analyses of previously submitted data." 73 Fed. Reg. 49604 . Wyeth could have analyzed the accumulating data from the 20+ incidents of amputation resulting from Phenergan over the years, and added a stronger warning about IV-push administration of the drug.

The Court rejected the manufacturer's argument that unilaterally adding a stronger warning about IV-push administration would have subjected it to liability for unauthorized distribution. The Court identified a fundamental misunderstanding at the core of Wyeth's argument: that the FDA bears the primary responsibility for the content of a drug's label at all times. To the contrary, numerous amendments to the FDCA and FDA regulations make it clear that ultimate responsibility for a drug's labeling rests with the manufacturer. When the risk of gangrene from IV-push injection became apparent, Wyeth had a duty to adequately warn of that risk, and the CBE regulation permitted it to provide that warning before receiving FDA's approval. In short, absent clear evidence that FDA would not have approved such a change--and Wyeth did not offer any--it was not impossible for the drug manufacturer to comply with both federal and state requirements.

The Court next rejected Wyeth's "purposes and objectives" preemption argument: that requiring it to comply with a state-law duty to provide a stronger warning would interfere with Congress' purpose to entrust FDA to make drug labeling decision. The Court construed the evidence of "Congress' purposes" as actually supporting the opposite point of view: that FDCA establishes only a floor for drug regulation. Had Congress believed that state-law suits posed an obstacle to its objectives, it would have enacted an express preemption provision at some point in the statute's 70-year history. The majority viewed Congress' "silence on the issue, coupled with its certain awareness of the prevalence of state tort litigation," as strong evidence that the legislature did not intend FDA oversight to be the exclusive means of ensuring drug safety.

The Court put to rest the contention that the Preemption Preamble to a 2006 FDA regulation-- 71 Fed. Reg. 3922-- in which the agency declared that its approval of labeling preempts conflicting state law, is entitled to deference. The majority clarified that agencies have no inherent authority to pronounce on preemption. The weight accorded to an agency's view on the issue depends on "its thoroughness, consistency, and persuasiveness." Under this standard, the 2006 Preemption Preamble did not merit deference. The Court criticized the agency's failure to comply with notice-and-comment requirements when it finalized its rule in 2006. Moreover, the FDA's position in 2006 contradicted evidence of Congress' purpose, and reversed the agency's own longstanding position regarding state tort law as a complementary form of drug regulation.

Finally, the Court distinguished the regulatory scheme regarding passive restraint devices in its "no-airbag" case, Geier v. American Honda Motor Co. (2000) 529 U.S. 861, 120 S. Ct. 1913, 146 L. Ed. 2d 914 . While acknowledging that some state-law claims might frustrate the achievement of Congress's purposes in the FDCA, the one at issue in this case was not one of them. In the end, the Court concluded that the plaintiff's state law failure-to-warn claim was not preempted.

Justice Breyer wrote a one-paragraph concurring opinion. Justice Thomas penned a lengthy, separate opinion, concurring only in the majority's judgment. Justice Alito wrote the dissenting opinion, joined by Chief Justice Roberts and Justice Scalia (*2009 U.S. LEXIS 1774, at 45) .

The facts and procedural background of Carlin v. Superior Court (1996) 13 Cal. 4th 1104, 56 Cal. Rptr. 2d 162, 920 P.2d 134 are discussed in § 190.163[3][a]. In reaffirming that prescription drug manufacturers are strictly liable for failure to warn, the Court rejected the defendant's argument that federal Food and Drug Administration (FDA) drug labeling requirements are determinative of a manufacturer's liability under state law. While not irrelevant (see § 190.283), FDA regulations do not preempt common law tort remedies for failure to warn (13 Cal. 4th 1104, 1113) .

Thus, the FDA's approval of a particular warning is not determinative of strict liability under state law. However, a manufacturer may not be held liable for failing to give a warning expressly precluded by FDA regulation [see § 190.174] (13 Cal. 4th 1104, 1115 n.4).

McKenney v. Purepac Pharm. Co. (2008) 167 Cal. App. 4th 72, 83 Cal. Rptr. 3d 810 , is discussed in § 190.259[3][n].

[d] No Federal Preemption of Design Claims Involving "Substantially Equivalent" Medical Device

Medtronic, Inc. v. Lohr (1996) 518 U.S. 470, 116 S. Ct. 2240, 135 L. Ed. 2d 700 , is discussed in § 190.259[3][a].

[e] No Federal Preemption of Express Warranty Claims Regarding Cigarettes

In Cipollone v. Liggett Group., Inc. (1992) 505 U.S. 504, 112 S. Ct. 2608, 120 L. Ed. 2d 407 , the plaintiff's decedent began smoking in 1942 and died of lung cancer in 1984. The plaintiff claimed that the defendants were responsible for the decedent's death because they breached express warranties contained in their advertising, because they failed to warn consumers about the hazards of smoking, because they fraudulently misrepresented those hazards to consumers, and because they conspired to deprive the public of medical and scientific information about smoking. The Third Circuit held that federal law preempted the plaintiff's state-law claims, but the United States Supreme Court granted certiorari and reversed in part. The Court determined that federal law preempted state-law claims that relied on a state law requirement or prohibition with respect to promotion or advertising. However, the plaintiff's claim that the defendants breached an express warranty was not preempted because that cause of action is derived from and measured by the terms of the warranty, and because the requirements imposed by an express warranty are not imposed "under state law," but rather by the warrantor (505 U.S. 504, 525) .

[f] No Federal Preemption of Certain Fraud Claims Regarding Cigarettes

In Altria Group, Inc. v. Good (2008)--U.S.--, 129 S. Ct. 538, 172 L. Ed. 2d 398 , U.S. Supreme Court was presented with the issue of whether the Federal Cigarette Labeling & Advertising Act (Labeling Act) preempted claims alleging that tobacco manufacturers violated state unfair trade practices acts or consumer protection acts by advertising that "light" cigarettes delivered less tar and nicotine than regular brands. The controversy stemmed from statements issued by the FTC in 1966 that it would not challenge factual statements about cigarettes' tar and nicotine content based on the "Cambridge Filter Method" test. The Cambridge test was supposed to produce uniform data regarding tar and nicotine content. The industry then began promoting cigarettes with lower tar and nicotine as "light" cigarettes. The Court ended the controversy by holding in a 5-4 ruling that neither the Labeling Act's preemption provision nor the FTC's actions in the field preempted state-law claims predicated on the duty not to deceive.

The case was brought by a group of Maine smokers of "light" cigarettes. They alleged that the manufacturers deliberately deceived them about the true nature of those cigarettes in violation of the Maine Unfair Trade Practices Act (MUTPA) [Me. Rev. Stat. Ann. Tit. 5, § 207]. They claimed that the manufacturers knew that smokers of "light" cigarettes actually inhale as much tar and nicotine as do smokers of regular cigarettes because of their tendency to engage in "compensatory" smoking. The district court ruled that the MUTPA claim was preempted. The First Circuit Court of Appeals reversed, holding that the smokers' claim was not a warning neutralization claim, but rather, a fraud claim. The U.S. Supreme Court granted the manufacturers' petition for certiorari.

At issue in the case was one of the Labeling Act's two express preemption provisions, § 5(b). That section provides that "[n]o requirement or prohibition based on smoking and health shall be imposed under State law with respect to the advertising or promotion of any cigarettes the packages of which are labeled in conformity with the provisions of this chapter" [15 U.S.C. § 1334(b)].

Justice Stevens delivered the opinion of the Court, in which Justices Kennedy, Souter, Ginsburg, and Breyer joined.

The Court began its express preemption analysis by announcing its adherence to the presumption against preemption. Next, it briefly reviewed the plurality's opinion in Cipollone v. Liggett Group, Inc. (1992) 505 U.S. 504, 528-529, 112 S. Ct. 2608, 120 L. Ed. 2d 407 . To determine whether a particular common law claim was preempted, the Cipollone plurality had inquired "whether the legal duty that is the predicate of the common-law damages action constitutes a 'requirement or prohibition based on smoking and health...with respect to...advertising or promotion.' giving that clause a fair but narrow reading." Applying that standard, the Cipollone plurality had concluded that fraudulent misrepresentation and concealment claims were not preempted. The Good Court stated that the duty not to deceive, as codified in the MUTPA, is likewise unrelated to smoking and health.

The Court then rejected the tobacco companies' argument that the smokers' claim was analogous to the "warning neutralization" claim found to be preempted in Cipollone because it was based on statements that "might create a false impression" rather than statements that are "inherently false." After eliminating that argument, it was clear to the majority that Cipollone's holding that the common-law fraud claim survived preemption directly applied to the Good smokers' MUTPA claim. The Court declined to reject the express preemption framework established by the Cipollone plurality, despite its possible lack of "theoretical elegance." The Court also distinguished Riegel v. Medtronic, Inc. (2008) 552 U.S.312128 S. Ct. 999, 169 L. Ed. 2d 892 , in which it had found that the Medical Device Amendments of 1976 expressly preempted state law claims. In sum, the Court concluded that the phrase "based on smoking and health," narrowly construed, does not encompass the general duty not to make fraudulent statements.

Next, the Court rejected the petitioners' alternative argument that the smokers' claim was impliedly preempted because it presented an obstacle to longstanding FTC policy. A review of FTC regulatory actions revealed that there never was in fact any government policy authorizing the use of the "light" and "low tar" descriptors based on Cambridge Filter Method test results. Significantly, the Agency rescinded its 1966 guidance concerning the Cambridge Filter Method in 2008, referring to it as "sufficiently flawed" [73 Fed. Reg. 74500] . Justice Thomas wrote a dissenting opinion, joined by Chief Justice Roberts and Justices Scalia and Alito (129 S. Ct. 538, 545-546) .

The facts and procedural background of Cipollone v. Liggett Group., Inc. (1992) 505 U.S. 504, 112 S. Ct. 2608, 120 L. Ed. 2d 407 are discussed in § 190.259[3][e]. The United States Supreme Court held that federal law did not preempt the plaintiff's claim of failure to warn insofar as it relied solely on the defendant's testing or research practices or other actions unrelated to advertising. The claim alleging intentional fraud in misrepresenting and concealing a material fact, to the extent that it related to the duty to disclose material facts, was also not preempted. The claim alleging a conspiracy to misrepresent or conceal material facts concerning the hazards of smoking was similarly not preempted (505 U.S. 504, 528-529) .

In Whiteley v. Philip Morris, Inc. (2004) 117 Cal. App. 4th 635 , the plaintiff and her husband brought fraudulent misrepresentation claims against the defendants. The court of appeal found that federal law did not preempt these claims because the defendants' false assurances that they would keep the public informed of their findings regarding smoking and health, and the manufacturing of a false controversy regarding the health effects of smoking, were affirmative misrepresentations outside the preemptive reach of the federal statute. The court also found that misrepresentation by "half-truths" is a species of affirmative misrepresentation and fraud that is not preempted (117 Cal. App. 4th 635, 666-677) .

[g] FIFRA Does Not Preempt State Rule Unless It Satisfies Two Conditions

Bates v. Dow Agrosciences, LLC. (2005) 544 U.S. 431, 125 S. Ct. 1788, 161 L. Ed. 2d 687 , is discussed in § 190.249[3][d].

[h] State Law Labeling Requirement That Is Equivalent to and Consistent With FIFRA's Misbranding

Provisions Is Not Preempted

Bates v. Dow Agrosciences, LLC. (2005) 544 U.S. 431, 125 S. Ct. 1788, 161 L. Ed. 2d 687 , is discussed in § 190.249[3][d].

[i] State Law Requirement Need Not Be Phrased in Identical Language to Corresponding FIFRA Requirement

Bates v. Dow Agrosciences, LLC. (2005) 544 U.S. 431, 125 S. Ct. 1788, 161 L. Ed. 2d 687 , is discussed in § 190.249[3][d].

[j] Claims Based on Oral Representations Are Outside Scope of FIFRA Preemption

Bates v. Dow Agrosciences, LLC. (2005) 544 U.S. 431, 125 S. Ct. 1788, 161 L. Ed. 2d 687 , is discussed in § 190.249[3][d].

[k] Express Warranty Claims Not Preempted if Defendant Voluntarily Warranted Product's Fitness for Particular Purpose

In Sun Valley Packing v. Consep, Inc. (2001) 94 Cal. App. 4th 315, 114 Cal. Rptr. 2d 237 , a manufacturer's representative recommended to fruit growers a use of the manufacturer's pest mating disruption product that was contrary to the label's directions. The representative also guaranteed that the procedure would control pests. The fruit growers applied the product, but it did not work, and they suffered substantial loss to their orchards. In the growers' action against the manufacturer, the trial court concluded that the representative's statements constituted an off-label guarantee and that FIFRA preemption did not apply to the plaintiffs' statelaw claims. The court of appeal affirmed.

The court of appeal held that in addition to preempting warning claims, FIFRA preempts claims based on breach of an express warranty required and approved by the EPA. Such claims challenge the product label itself, either directly or indirectly. FIFRA also preempts claims based on off-label statements that merely repeat information in the label itself. However, if a manufacturer or retailer voluntarily warrants a pesticide's fitness for a particular purpose, FIFRA does not preempt this voluntary contractual commitment. If the warranty actually addresses matters outside the scope of the required label, a plaintiff is not barred from bringing a common law action. FIFRA thus did not preempt the plaintiffs' claims based on the defendant's express oral guarantee. Nor did FIFRA preemption rules require the court to enforce a damages limitation provision clause in the label that it found invalid under California law (94 Cal. App. 4th 315, 322) .

[l] Savings Clause of Federal Railroad Safety Act Permits State Regulation of Matter Not Covered by Federal Regulations or Orders

In Haynes v. AMTRAK (C.D. Cal. 2006) 423 F. Supp. 2d 1073 , the decedent died from deep vein thrombosis (DVT) after riding on an Amtrak train from Chicago to Los Angeles. The plaintiff brought an action alleging that the carrier violated common law and statutory duties.

The court first held that the federal Amtrak Act did not preempt California common law claims alleging dangerous seating configurations in trains and failure to warn passengers about DVT. The Amtrak Act's express preemption clause, 49 U.S.C.S. § 24301(g), relates to state laws "related to rates, routes, or services." Federal case law has made it clear that a state law does not relate to prices unless it "acts immediately and exclusively upon price," or unless the existence of a price is essential to the law's operation. Although plaintiffs' claims, if successful, could result in higher costs leading to higher rates, they did not work to regulate Amtrak's rates directly. A provision of the Act requiring Amtrak to maintain a minimum amount of liability insurance to handle passengers' claims, 49 U.S.C. § 28103(c), was further evidence that Congress did not intend to preempt all state tort law claims against Amtrak

The court next found that the Federal Railroad Safety Act (FRSA) did not preempt plaintiff's common law claims. Pointing out that FRSA preemption is even more disfavored than preemption generally, the court found that the claims were covered by the first part of the savings clause of the FRSA's express preemption provision, 49 U.S.C. § 20106. There are no federal safety regulations subsuming California tort actions regarding the potential of DVT from poorly designed seats or seating configurations. Nor are there any regulations regarding the duty to warn passengers about DVT.

Despite the absence of preemption under the FRSA, the court nevertheless found that state laws regarding seats and seating configurations were unduly burdensome on interstate commerce and the passenger train industry and were preempted by the Commerce Clause. The duty to warn passengers of the dangers of DVT, in contrast, was not unduly burdensome on commerce and not preempted (423 F. Supp. 2d 1073, 1083-1084) .

[m] Savings Clause of Federal Railroad Safety Act Permits State Regulation of Matters Covered by Federal Regulations if Law Meets Three Criteria

Haynes v. AMTRAK (C.D. Cal. 2006) 423 F. Supp. 2d 1073 , is discussed in § 190.259[3][l].

[n] FDA Labeling Regulation Does Not Preempt Warning Claim Against Generic Drug Manufacturer

In McKenney v. Purepac Pharm. Co. (2008) 167 Cal. App. 4th 72, 83 Cal. Rptr. 3d 810 , the plaintiff developed the skin condition tardive dyskinesia following her ingestion of metoclopramide, the generic form of the prescription drug Reglan. She filed a failure-to-warn suit against the generic manufacturer. The superior court sustained the manufacturer's demurrer, holding that all of plaintiff's claims were preempted by federal law. The court of appeal reversed, rejecting the defendant's argument that the failure-to-warn claim was barred by conflict preemption. The court concluded that the federal requirement that a generic drug have the same labeling as a listed drug [57 Fed. Reg. 17950, 17961 (Apr. 28, 1992)] does not necessarily result in federal preemption of state failure-to-warn claims against generic manufacturers. The court pointed out that the FDA mechanism for compelling labeling revisions applies to both new and generic drugs, and saw no reason to distinguish between the two types of drugs for preemption purposes. The court found that nothing had changed since Carlin v. Superior Court (1996) 13 Cal. 4th 1104, 56 Cal. Rptr. 2d 162, 920 P.2d 1347 [discussed in § 190.259[3][c]) mandating the conclusion that generic drug manufacturers are exempt from strict products liability because they must obtain FDA approval before making label changes (167 Cal. App. 4th 72, 82-84) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] No Federal Preemption When Defendant Has Failed to Show Conflicting Statutory Specifications

In Notmeyer v. Stryker Corp. (N.D. Cal. 2007) 502 F. Supp. 2d 1051 , part of the plaintiff's prosthetic hip replacement system shattered, requiring revision surgery. The plaintiff brought various state law claims against the manufacturer. The particular device utilized had been given FDA approval under the MDA's special 30-day premarket approval (PMA) supplemental review process. Going against the overwhelming weight of authority, the court determined that the PMA process does not constitute or create "specific FDA requirements applicable to a particular device" and thus cannot be used to preempt related state law causes of action [502 F. Supp. 2d 1051, 1058] .

NOTE:

The following year, the U.S. Supreme Court held that 21 U.S.C.S. § 360k(a), the MDA's express preemption clause, bars common law claims challenging the safety or effectiveness of a medical device given FDA premarket approval. The facts and procedural background of Riegel v. Medtronic, Inc. (2008) 552 U.S. 312, 128 S. Ct. 999, 169 L. Ed. 2d 892 , are discussed in § 190.249[3][k]. Perhaps anticipating the Riegel decision, the court added that the fact that the device received the special 30-day PMA supplemental process "cast further doubt on whether plaintiff's state law claims" were preempted [ 502 F. Supp. 2d 1051, 1058, n.3].

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
D. Defenses

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.260

§ 190.260 Opposing Contention That Action for Personal Injuries Under Products Liability Theory Is Barred by Statute of Limitations

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum opposing the contention that the action is time-barred.]

PLAINTIFF'S PRODUCTS LIABILITY ACTION IS NOT BARRED BECAUSE IT WAS NOT FILED WITHIN TWO YEARS OF THE ACCRUAL OF THE CAUSE OF ACTION, IN THAT PLAINTIFF HAD NO SUSPICION OF WRONGDOING, AND HAD NOT DISCOVERED THE RELEVANT FACTS UNDERLYING HIS/HER CAUSE OF ACTION, MORE THAN TWO YEARS PRIOR TO FILING THE COMPLAINT.

A. Statute Does Not Begin to Run if Plaintiff Has Insufficient Information to Be Put on Inquiry of Wrongdoing. The statute of limitations begins once the plaintiff has a suspicion of wrongdoing, or has notice or information of circumstances to put a reasonable person on inquiry. If the evidence supports a reasonable inference that the plaintiff was not put on notice of wrongdoing, or if further factual development is required, then it cannot yet be determined when the limitations begins to run (Clark v. Baxter Healthcare Corp. (2000) 83 Cal. App. 4th 1048, 1059-1060, 100 Cal. Rptr. 2d 223).

B. Discovery Rule Delays Accrual if Diligent Investigation Discloses Only One Kind of Wrongdoing and Injury Was Caused by Wholly Different Kind of Wrongdoing. If a plaintiff's reasonable and diligent investigation discloses only one kind of wrongdoing and the injury in question was actually caused by tortious conduct of a wholly different sort, the discovery rule postpones accrual of the statute of limitations on the newly discovered claim (Grisham v. Philip Morris U.S.A., Inc. (2007) 40 Cal. 4th 623, 646, 54 Cal. Rptr. 3d 735, 151 P.3d 1151 ; Fox v. Ethicon Endo-Surgery, Inc. (2005) 35 Cal. 4th 797, 813, 27 Cal. Rptr. 3d 661, 110 P.3d 914).

C. Statute of Limitations Begins to Run Under Discovery Rule When Plaintiff Has Reason to Suspect Injury and Some Wrongful Cause, Unless Reasonable Investigation Would Not Have Revealed Cause of Action's Factual

Basis. Under the delayed discovery rule, a cause of action accrues and the statute of limitations begins to run when the plaintiff has reason to suspect an injury and some wrongful cause, unless the plaintiff pleads and proves that a reasonable investigation at that time would not have revealed a factual basis for that particular cause of action. In that case, the statute of limitations for that cause of action is tolled until such time as a reasonable investigation would have revealed its factual basis (Fox v. Ethicon Endo-Surgery Inc. (2005) 35 Cal. 4th 797, 803, 27 Cal. Rptr. 3d 661, 110 P.3d 914).

D. Suspicion Required to Trigger Statute of Limitations May Not Be Imputed to Plaintiff. The suspicion necessary to trigger the statute of limitations may not be imputed to a plaintiff (Nelson v. Indevus Pharms., Inc. (2006) 142 Cal. App. 4th 1202, 1206, 48 Cal. Rptr. 3d 668).

E. Plaintiff Has No Obligation to Seek Out News of Drug's Dangerous Side Effects Through Media. A plaintiff has no obligation to seek out news of a prescription drug's dangerous side effects by reading newspapers or watching television news (Nelson v. Indevus Pharms., Inc. (2006) 142 Cal. App. 4th 1202, 1208, 48 Cal. Rptr. 3d 668).

F. Media Reports of Hazardous or Toxic Substances Do Not, by Themselves, Put Reasonable Person on Inquiry Notice. Media reports regarding hazardous material or toxic substances do not, by themselves, constitute sufficient facts to put a reasonable person on inquiry notice that the injury or death was caused or contributed to by the wrongful acts of another (Code Civ. Proc. § 340.8(c)(2); Nelson v. Indevus Pharms., Inc. (2006) 142 Cal. App. 4th 1202, 1208-1209, 48 Cal. Rptr. 3d 668).

G. No Special Presumption Based on Common Knowledge That Smoking Is Addictive or Harmful. There is no special presumption that smokers are aware of the addictiveness or health hazards of smoking (Grisham v. Philip Morris U.S.A., Inc. (2007) 40 Cal. 4th 623, 638, 54 Cal. Rptr. 3d 735, 151 P.3d 1151).

H. Appreciable Harm Rule Does Not Apply When There Is Earlier Economic Injury and Later Physical Injury. The appreciable harm rule does not apply to cases where there is an earlier manifesting economic injury and a later manifesting physical injury (Grisham v. Philip Morris U.S.A., Inc. (2007) 40 Cal. 4th 623, 644, 54 Cal. Rptr. 3d 735, 151 P.3d 1151 .

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a plaintiff's medical products liability action for personal injuries is barred by the one-year statute of limitations under former Code Civ. Proc. § 340(3) [see Clark v. Baxter Healthcare Corp. (2000) 83 Cal. App. 4th 1048, 1059-1060, 100 Cal. Rptr. 2d 223] . The statute of limitations for personal injuries and deaths under the current statute, Code Civ. Proc. § 335.1, is two years.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to oppose the defense of the statute of limitations. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities opposing a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication on the issue that plaintiff's action is time-barred. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Therefore, counsel should set forth facts showing that the cause of action did not accrue one year before the filing of the action. Counsel should argue facts showing that plaintiff had insufficient notice of information to put a reasonable person on inquiry of a wrongdoing prior to that period, and that plaintiff had not discovered the necessary facts prior to that period, whether or not plaintiff was aware of their legal significance at the time.

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in § 190.247 may be used to oppose the points and authorities in this form.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion and forms relating to products liability generally, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 460, Products Liability (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Statute Does Not Begin to Run if Plaintiff Has Insufficient Information to Be Put on Inquiry of Wrongdoing

In Clark v. Baxter Healthcare Corp. (2000) 83 Cal. App. 4th 1048, 1059-1060, 100 Cal. Rptr. 2d 223 , a products liability action, plaintiff Kirsten Clark sued four manufacturer/distributor defendants who produced and supplied latex gloves that she used in the course of her employment as a nurse, and that caused her to experience allergic reactions. The defendants moved for summary judgment, asserting that the action was barred by the one-year statute of limitations under former Code Civ. Proc., § 340(3). The trial court handling this coordinated litigation heard this motion dealing with the facts relating to Clark, individually, and determined her complaint was not timely filed and granted the defendants motions for summary judgment.

On appeal, the court determine that triable material issues of fact existed as to whether the plaintiff's complaint was timely filed, based on the nature of the allergic reactions she suffered from exposure to the substance of latex in the form of gloves, and whether this constituted the required facts and circumstances to put her on inquiry notice of a potential manufacturing or design defect (or an actionable failure to warn or negligence), that existed in gloves manufactured from that substance. The record could support an inference that she did not become aware of a potential wrongfulness component of her cause of action until more information than the existence of her allergies placed her on inquiry notice and then was actually gained. The court concluded that triable material issues of fact remain as to the limitations issue. Accordingly, the court of appeal reversed the summary judgment entered in favor of the defendants and remanded for further proceedings (83 Cal. App. 4th 1048, 1059-1060) .

[b] Discovery Rule Delays Accrual if Diligent Investigation Discloses Only One Kind of Wrongdoing and Injury Was Caused by Wholly Different Kind of Wrongdoing

Grisham v. Philip Morris U.S.A., Inc. (2007) 40 Cal. 4th 623, 54 Cal. Rptr. 3d 735, 151 P.3d 1151 , is discussed in § 190.260[3][g].

Fox v. Ethicon Endo-Surgery, Inc*. (2005) 35 Cal. 4th 797, 27 Cal. Rptr. 3d 661, 110 P.3d 914* , is discussed in § 190.247[3][f].

[c] Statute of Limitations Begins to Run Under Discovery Rule When Plaintiff Has Reason to Suspect Injury and Some Wrongful Cause, Unless Reasonable Investigation Would Not Have Revealed Cause of Action's Factual Basis

Fox v. Ethicon Endo-Surgery, Inc*. (2005) 35 Cal. 4th 797, 27 Cal. Rptr. 3d 661, 110 P.3d 914* , is discussed in § 190.247[3][f].

[d] Suspicion Required to Trigger Statute of Limitations May Not Be Imputed to Plaintiff

In Nelson v. Indevus Pharmaceuticals, Inc. (2006) 142 Cal. App. 4th 1202, 48 Cal. Rptr. 3d 668 , the plaintiff took the diet drug Redux in 1997. She stopped taking the drug after about a month because she was not losing weight. She did not contact an attorney until 2002, when she saw the attorney's television advertisement. She filed her products liability lawsuit in 2003 after receiving the results of an echocardiogram. The trial court granted the drug manufacturer's motion for summary judgment on statute of limitations grounds.

The court of appeal reversed, explaining that the suspicion necessary to trigger the statute of limitations may not be imputed to a plaintiff. A plaintiff's duty to investigate does not begin until the plaintiff actually has a reason to investigate. The court specifically rejected the contention that information given to the general public through media coverage about the dangers of the drug Redux triggered the statute of limitations. The plaintiff had no duty to read newspapers and watch television news and otherwise seek out news of the drug's dangerous side effects.

The court also held that Code Civ. Proc. § 340.8, which provides that media reports do not, in and of themselves, constitute sufficient facts to put a reasonable person on inquiry notice, is not limited to environmental hazards but also applies to cases alleging personal injury caused by harmful chemicals. The Legislature's intent that the statute apply to actions involving prescription drugs is found in the chaptered bill.

In addition to rejecting defendant's "construction suspicion" argument, the court declined to find that common and nonspecific such as intermittent heart palpitations, fatigue, and dizziness should, as a matter of law, have caused plaintiff to investigate the possibility that she had been harmed by the diet drugs [Nelson v. Indevus Pharms., Inc. (2006) 142 Cal. App. 4th 1202, 1206-1211] .

[e] Plaintiff Has No Obligation to Seek Out News of Drug's Dangerous Side Effects Through Media

Nelson v. Indevus Pharmaceuticals, Inc. (2006) 142 Cal. App. 4th 1202, 48 Cal. Rptr. 3d 668 , is discussed in § 190.260[3][e].

[f] Media Reports of Hazardous or Toxic Substances Do Not, by Themselves, Put Reasonable Person on Inquiry Notice

Nelson v. Indevus Pharmaceuticals, Inc. (2006) 142 Cal. App. 4th 1202, 48 Cal. Rptr. 3d 668 , is discussed in § 190.260[3][e]. See also Code Civ. Proc. § 340.8.

[g] No Special Presumption Based on Common Knowledge That Smoking Is Addictive or Harmful

In Grisham v. Philip Morris U.S.A., Inc. (2007) 40 Cal. 4th 623, 54 Cal. Rptr. 3d 735, 151 P.3d 1151 , the U.S. Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals certified questions asking (1) whether persons are presumed to have been aware by 1988 that smoking causes addiction and other health problems, and if California does recognize such a presumption, under what circumstances can it be rebutted; and (2) if plaintiff seeks damages resulting from an addiction to tobacco, does a personal injury action accrue when the plaintiff recognizes that he is addicted to tobacco?

The court first concluded that the repealed tobacco immunity statute did not serve as a basis of a conclusive presumption that a particular plaintiff who was a smoker was or should have been aware in 1988 that cigarettes were addictive or dangerous. The court next held that there is no special presumption that smokers are aware of the addictiveness or health hazards of smoking. Rather, the law recognizes a general, rebuttable presumption that plaintiffs have knowledge of the wrongful cause of an injury. If a plaintiff's cause of action depends on delayed discovery of his or her addiction to be timely, he or she must plead facts showing an inability to have discovered that addiction, e.g., reasonable reliance on tobacco company misrepresentations. The first plaintiff in this consolidated action failed to do so with respect to her unfair competition and related causes of action relating to economic injury.

However, the plaintiff alleged two different injuries--one physical and the other economic--giving rise to two different types of action. Her claims that involved primarily physical injury were filed within one year of the diagnosis of her ailments. The court declined to extend the appreciable harm rule to the circumstances of this case, where there was an early manifesting economic injury and a later manifesting physical injury. Such an extension would be inconsistent with the discovery rule. The basic rationale of Fox v. Ethicon Endo-Surgery Inc. (2005) 35 Cal. 4th 797 --that the discovery of one cause of action does not necessarily mean that plaintiff should have discovered the factual basis for a qualitatively different type of action--was fully applicable here. Thus, plaintiff's discovery of her alleged unfair competition cause of action and related causes of action for economic injury based on smoking addiction did not start the statute of limitations running on her tort cause of action based on later-discovered appreciable harm (40 Cal. 4th 623, 646) .

[h] Appreciable Harm Rule Does Not Apply When There Is Earlier Economic Injury and Later Physical Injury

Grisham v. Philip Morris U.S.A., Inc. (2007) 40 Cal. 4th 623, 54 Cal. Rptr. 3d 735 , is discussed in § 190.260[3][g].

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
D. Defenses

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.261

§ 190.261 Opposing Contention That Action in Strict Liability or Negligence for Injury to Real or Personal Property Is Barred by Statute of Limitations

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities opposing the contention that the action is time-barred.]

PLAINTIFF'S ACTION IN STRICT LIABILITY OR NEGLIGENCE FOR INJURY TO _____ [REAL or PERSONAL] PROPERTY WAS NOT BARRED UNDER CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE SECTION _____ [338(b) or 338(c)] BECAUSE IT WAS BROUGHT WITHIN THREE YEARS AFTER PLAINTIFF DISCOVERED OR SHOULD HAVE DISCOVERED THE INJURY AND ITS CAUSE.

A. Discovery Rule Applies to Negligence and Strict Liability Claims for Damage Caused by Product Defect to Real or Personal Property. A negligence or strict products liability claim to recover for damages that a product defect causes to real or personal property is governed by the statute of limitations contained in either Code Civ. Proc. § 338(b) or Code Civ. Proc. § 338(c), which commences to run when the plaintiff knows, or should have known, of the defect (Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. v. Sparks Constr., Inc. (2004) 114 Cal. App. 4th 1135, 1150-1151, 8 Cal. Rptr. 3d 446).

B. Economic Loss Alone Does Not Amount to Type of "Damage" That Causes Products Liability Cause of Action to Accrue. Economic loss alone, without physical injury, does not constitute the type of "damage" that will cause a negligence or strict liability cause of action to accrue (County of Santa Clara v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (2006) 137 Cal. App. 4th 292, 318, 40 Cal. Rptr. 3d 313 , review granted, depublished, 80 Cal. Rptr. 3d 629, 188 P.3d 579, 2008 Cal. LEXIS 9073).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that the plaintiff's negligence or strict liability action, which seeks to recover for damage that a defect caused to real or personal property, is time-barred pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 338(b) (real property) or Code Civ. Proc. § 338(c) (personal property).

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel is opposing the defense of the statute of limitations. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities opposing a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication on the issue that the plaintiff's action is time-barred. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Therefore, counsel should set forth facts showing that the plaintiff did not discover, or could not have discovered in the exercise of reasonable diligence, the injury and its cause until a specified time.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Discovery Rule Applies to Negligence and Strict Liability Claims for Damage Caused by Product Defect to Real or Personal Property

In Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. v. Sparks Constr., Inc. (2004) 114 Cal. App. 4th 1135, 8 Cal. Rptr. 3d 446 , a defective ballcock in a residence caused a toilet to leak, which in turn caused severe damage to real and personal property. The owners of the residence filed a claim with their insurer, the plaintiff. The plaintiff filed a second amended complaint as the homeowners' subrogee, which contained causes of action for negligence and strict products liability causes and sought to recover for damage that the defect in the ballcock caused to the home and its contents. These claims were governed by the three-year limitations period, applicable to actions for injury to real and personal property, of Code Civ. Proc. § 338(b), (c). Accrual of these causes of action was subject to the discovery rule--that is, they did not accrue until discovery of the defect. The plaintiff's original complaint alleged that the leak was discovered in June 1999, but the second amended complaint alleged that it was not discovered until September 1999. Assuming that the original allegation was binding, the limitations period ran in June 2002. Assuming that the action was not commenced against these defendants until they actually filed their answers in January and March 2002, the action was commenced before the statute had run. Therefore, the trial court erred in ruling that statute of limitations barred the second amended complaint (114 Cal. App. 4th 1135, 1150-1151) .

[b] Economic Loss Alone Does Not Amount to Type of "Damage" That Causes Products Liability Cause of Action to Accrue

In County of Santa Clara v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (2006) 137 Cal. App. 4th 292, 40 Cal. Rptr. 3d 313 , review granted, depublished, 80 Cal. Rptr. 3d 629, 188 P.3d 579, 2008 Cal. LEXIS 9073 , governmental entities filed a class action against a group of lead manufacturers under, inter alia, strict products liability and negligence. The trial court granted summary judgment in favor of the manufacturers on these causes of action on statute of limitations grounds. The Court of Appeal reversed. It explained that a tort cause of action accrues only when "appreciable and actual harm" is caused by the wrongful conduct. Because a cause of action accrues only when the elements of the cause of action--including damage--occur, the "appreciable and actual harm" that results in accrual must be harm of the specific type that is recoverable as damages on that type of cause of action. The damages alleged in plaintiffs' strict liability and negligence causes of action were costs for "inspecting, testing, and removing the hazards" of lead paint and other unspecified damages. However, economic loss alone, without physical injury, does not constitute the type of damage that causes strict liability or negligence to accrue. Rather, the compensable injury must be physical harm to persons or property. Because plaintiffs were public entities, not human beings, and were not authorized to sue on behalf of any human beings, accrual of their causes of action depended on the occurrence of physical injury to their property. However, plaintiffs' allegations of damage did not include the requisite allegations of physical injury to their buildings. They alleged only that lead paint is harmful to human beings. Their damages allegations amounted to mere assertions that the presence of lead paint required them to incur expenses to find and remove it. These expenses were purely economic damages. Thus, their causes of action for strict products liability and negligence never accrued.

Defendants' motion for summary judgment was based solely on the statute of limitations, and they did not assert that plaintiffs failed to state a cause of action due to the absence of allegations of physical injury to the buildings. Because the plaintiffs were not given an opportunity to respond to the motion on that unstated ground, it would have been inappropriate to uphold the lower court's ruling on that ground. The court thus ordered superior court to vacate its order (137 Cal. App. 4th 292, 316-325) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
D. Defenses

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.262

§ 190.262 Opposing Contention That Sophisticated User Defense Applies--Sophisticated User Defense Is Inapplicable to Strict Liability Design Defect Claim Under Risk-Benefit Analysis

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities opposing the contention that the sophisticated user defense applies.]

THE SOPHISTICATED USER DEFENSE DOES NOT APPLY TO RELIEVE THE DEFENDANT, _____ [specify name] OF STRICT LIABILITY FOR THE DEFECTIVE DESIGN OF _____ [specify product] BECAUSE THE SOPHISTICATED USER DEFENSE DOES NOT APPLY TO A DESIGN DEFECT CAUSE OF ACTION.

A. Sophisticated User Defense Is Inapplicable to Design Defect Cause of Action. The sophisticated user defense concerns warnings and does not apply to a strict liability design defect cause of action under the risk-benefit analysis (Johnson v. Honeywell Int'l Inc. (2009) 179 Cal. App. 4th 549, 559, 101 Cal. Rptr. 3d 726).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that the sophisticated user doctrine bars plaintiff's strict liability design defect cause of action under the risk-benefit analysis.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication. The points and authorities may also be adopted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in § 190.245A may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Sophisticated User Defense Is Inapplicable to Design Defect Cause of Action

The facts and procedural history of Johnson v. Honeywell Int'l Inc. (2009) 179 Cal. App. 4th 549, 101 Cal. Rptr. 3d 726 , are discussed in § 190.245A[3][a]. On remand, the case proceeded against the manufacturers of the R-22 refrigerant. The plaintiff filed an amended complaint, bringing causes of action for negligence on a negligence per se theory, and for strict liability on a design defect risk-benefit theory. The trial court determined that the sophisticated user defense barred both causes of action and entered judgment for the defendants.

The Court of Appeal held that the sophisticated user defense applied to plaintiff's negligence cause of action, but not to his strict liability cause of action. The sophisticated user defense concerns warnings. Plaintiff's design defect claim, in contrast, was not concerned with warnings. The court saw "no logical reason" why a defense based on the need for a warning should apply. In a footnote, the court pointed out that the plaintiff acknowledged that the defense would apply to a strict liability design defect cause of action on the consumer expectations theory, because he could not make a claim to be an "ordinary consumer." The court reversed the judgment and remanded the case for further proceedings (179 Cal. App. 4th 549, 559) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
D. Defenses

19-190 California Points & Authorities §§ 190.263-190.279

[Reserved]

§§ 190.263[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
E. Evidence and Proof

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.280

§ 190.280 Supporting Contention That Evidence Is Admissible in Strict Liability Action--Proof of Defect--Evidence of Remedial or Precautionary Measures Taken After Accident

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities supporting the contention that defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product (see, e.g., §§ 190.281, 190.282).]

EVIDENCE THAT DEFENDANT _____ [name] TOOK _____ [REMEDIAL and/or PRECAUTIONARY] MEASURES WITH REGARD TO THE _____ [specify product] AFTER PLAINTIFF'S ACCIDENT HAD OCCURRED IS ADMISSIBLE TO PROVE THAT THE _____ [specify product] WAS DEFECTIVE.

Evidence of Remedial or Precautionary Measures Is Admissible to Prove Defect. Evidence of subsequent remedial or precautionary measures taken by a defendant with regard to its product is admissible to prove that the product is defective. Section 1151 of the Evidence Code does not prohibit the admission of such evidence, because that section by its own terms excludes evidence of subsequent remedial or precautionary measures only when such evidence is offered to prove negligence or culpable conduct, neither of which is in issue in a strict liability action for placing a defective product on the market (Ault v. International Harvester Co. (1974) 13 Cal. 3d 113, 117-118, 117 Cal. Rptr. 812, 528 P.2d 1148).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that plaintiff may introduce evidence that defendant took remedial or precautionary measures with regard to its product after plaintiff's accident occurred, to prove that the product is defective.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication on the issue that defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries. The points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in the form and with any other relevant points and authorities combined with this form, to show the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should show facts indicating the remedial or precautionary measures that were taken by defendant with regard to the product, and explain how the undertaking of those measures tends to prove that the product is defective [see, e.g., Ault v. International Harvester Co. (1974) 13 Cal. 3d 113, 117 Cal. Rptr. 812, 528 P.2d 1148 (evidence that defendant had substituted iron for aluminum in producing gear box after plaintiff's accident as admissible to show that gear box was defective)].

[b] Evidence Inadmissible When Remedial Measures Taken by Entity Not Strictly Liable

One court of appeal has held that in a strict liability action against an elevator manufacturer, Evid. Code § 1151 precludes the use of evidence of remedial measures taken by the nonparty employer of the plaintiff, when the employer's liability, if any, arose from its negligence rather than from a strict liability theory [Santilli v. Otis Elevator Co., 215 Cal. App. 3d 210, 213, 263 Cal. Rptr. 496] . The court found that the inclusion of a strict liability theory in the complaint against the defendant manufacturer was not controlling, nor was the nonparty status of the entity that undertook the remedial measures [Santilli v. Otis Elevator Co., 215 Cal. App. 3d 210, 212-214, 263 Cal. Rptr. 496] .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Evidence of Remedial or Precautionary Measures Is Admissible to Prove Defect

In Ault v. International Harvester Co. (1974) 13 Cal. 3d 113, 117 Cal. Rptr. 812, 528 P.2d 1148 , plaintiff sustained personal injuries when the motor vehicle in which he was riding plunged to the bottom of a canyon. Plaintiff brought an action in strict liability, warranty, and negligence against the manufacturer of the vehicle, alleging that the accident was caused by a defect in the design of the vehicle's gear box. At trial, plaintiff established evidence that after the accident, defendant changed the production of the gear box by substituting iron for aluminum, a material which plaintiff asserted was defective for the purpose of producing the box. The jury awarded plaintiff $700,000, and defendant appealed.

The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment, holding that the evidence that defendant had substituted iron for aluminum was admissible to show that the gear box was defective. The Court explained that the evidence was not excludable under the terms of Evid. Code § 1151, as that section by its own terms excludes evidence of subsequent remedial or precautionary measures only when such evidence is offered to prove negligence or culpable conduct. The case at bar was a strict liability action against a manufacturer, for which neither negligence nor culpability is a necessary ingredient. Because plaintiff would recover if he established that the product was defective, without showing that defendant breached a duty of due care or that defendant was guilty of culpable conduct, the evidence was admissible (13 Cal. 3d 113, 117-121) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Evidence of Remedial or Precautionary Measures Is Admissible to Prove Defect

In Magnante v. Pettibone-Wood Mfg. Co. (1986) 183 Cal. App. 3d 764, 228 Cal. Rptr. 420 , the court of appeal followed Ault in holding that a plaintiff suing under a theory of strict products liability was not prohibited by Evid. Code § 1151 from introducing evidence of subsequent repairs made to the defective product in an attempt to cure the defect (183 Cal. App. 3d 764, 766-767) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
E. Evidence and Proof

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.281

§ 190.281 Supporting Contention That Evidence Is Admissible in Strict Liability or Negligence Action--Proof of Defect, Knowledge, or Cause of Accident--Evidence of Other Accidents, Occurrences, or Failures

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities supporting the contention that defendant is liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product (see, e.g., §§ 190.280, 190.282).]

EVIDENCE OF THE OTHER SIMILAR _____ [ACCIDENTS or OCCURRENCES or FAILURES] IS ADMISSIBLE.

[EITHER]

A. Evidence Is Admissible to Prove Defective Condition, Knowledge, or Cause of Accident. Evidence of other accidents or occurrences is admissible to prove a defective condition, knowledge, or the cause of an accident, provided that the circumstances underlying them are similar and not too remote (Elsworth v. Beech Aircraft Corp. (1984) 37 Cal. 3d 540, 555, 208 Cal. Rptr. 874, 691 P.2d 630 ; Ault v. International Harvester Co. (1974) 13 Cal. 3d 113, 121-122, 117 Cal. Rptr. 812, 528 P.2d 1148 .

[OR]

A. Evidence Is Admissible to Prove Defect. Evidence of _____ [accidents or occurrences or failures] occurring in models that are nearly identical or substantially similar to the model of the product that injured the plaintiff is admissible to prove that the product that injured the plaintiff was defective (Hasson v. Ford Motor Co. (1982) 32 Cal. 3d 388, 403-404, 185 Cal. Rptr. 654, 650 P.2d 1171 .

[Optional] B. Evidence Is Admissible to Show Defendant Had Notice of Dangerous Condition. Evidence of previous _____ [accidents or occurrences or failures] is admissible to show that the defendant had notice of a dangerous condition, so long as the previous _____ [accidents or occurrences or failures] occurred under similar circumstances. All that is required to show similar circumstances is that the previous _____ [accidents or occurrences or failures] were such as to attract the defendant's attention to the dangerous situation (Elsworth v. Beech Aircraft Corp. (1984) 37 Cal. 3d 540, 555, 208 Cal. Rptr. 874, 691 P.2d 630 ; Hasson v. Ford Motor Co. (1982) 32 Cal. 3d 388, 403-404, 185 Cal. Rptr. 654, 650 P.2d 1171 .

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that plaintiff may introduce evidence of other accidents, occurrences, or failures in either a negligence or a strict products liability action.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication on the issue that defendant is liable for plaintiff's injuries. The points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form and with any other relevant points and authorities combined with the form, to show the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should state facts describing the other accidents, occurrences, or failures, and explain their similarities to the defective condition of the product that injured plaintiff [see, e.g. Elsworth v. Beech Aircraft Corp. (1984) 37 Cal. 3d 540, 555, 208 Cal. Rptr. 874, 691 P.2d 630 (in negligence action, evidence of other accidents involving similar or same model of plane as admissible to show plane was in defective condition); Hasson v. Ford Motor Co. (1982) 32 Cal. 3d 388, 403-404, 185 Cal. Rptr. 654, 650 P.2d 1171 (in strict liability action, evidence of similar failures in other models nearly identical to car as admissible to show that car was defective); Ault v. International Harvester Co. (1974) 121-122, 117 Cal. Rptr. 812, 528 P.2d 1148 (in strict liability action, evidence of other similar accidents as admissible to show causation and defect, provided that circumstances are similar and not remote)].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Evidence Is Admissible to Prove Defective Condition, Knowledge, or Cause of Accident

In Elsworth v. Beech Aircraft Corp. (1984) 37 Cal. 3d 540, 208 Cal. Rptr. 874, 691 P.2d 630 , plaintiffs' decedents were killed when the twin engine airplane in which they were flying stalled, spun, and crashed shortly after its takeoff. Plaintiffs brought an action in negligence against the plane's manufacturer. Plaintiffs argued that defendant was negligent per se, because the plane did not comply with various safety regulations adopted by the Federal Aeronautics Administration (FAA), even though the FAA had certified the design as complying with all applicable safety regulations. Plaintiffs also introduced evidence of other accidents involving aircraft built by defendant. The jury returned a verdict for plaintiffs, and defendant appealed.

The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that the cause of action was viable because, even though the federal government had occupied the field of regulating aircraft activity, the state of California may simultaneously grant damages for violation of those regulations (37 Cal. 3d 540, 547-552) . In addition, the Court held that the evidence of prior accidents of other aircraft built by defendant had been properly admitted. Specifically, plaintiffs had introduced evidence of 20 similar stall/spin accidents of aircraft built by defendant. Fifteen of these involved another model built by defendant, and five involved the same model as in plaintiffs' accident. The Court, relying on prior appellate case law, held that evidence of prior accidents is admissible to prove a defective condition, knowledge, or the cause of an accident, provided that the circumstances of the other accidents are similar and not too remote. In this case, plaintiffs had introduced expert testimony that the defect in the design of the model of the plane in which plaintiffs had flown was in its wings, which caused the aircraft to spin unduly in a single engine stall; that the other model had the same design defect; and that this common characteristic produces identical single engine stall/spin characteristics. This evidence of the similarity in the design of both models was sufficient to justify the trial court's conclusion that evidence regarding the other accidents was admissible (37 Cal. 3d 540, 554-555) .

The facts and procedural background of Ault v. International Harvester Co. (1974) 13 Cal. 3d 113, 117 Cal. Rptr. 812, 528 P.2d 1148 , are discussed in § 190.280[3][a]. In affirming the judgment for plaintiff, the Supreme Court held that the trial court did not err in admitting evidence of an accident occurring before plaintiff's accident and of an accident occurring after plaintiff's accident. In these two other accidents, gear boxes made of aluminum in the same type of motor vehicle had allegedly failed. The Court ruled that the evidence was admissible because evidence of other accidents is admissible to prove a defective condition, knowledge, or the cause of an accident, provided that the circumstances of the other accidents are similar and not too remote. In this case, all three gear boxes had inherent similarities in their physical and mechanical properties, and contained similar defects. Thus, the evidence was properly admitted (13 Cal. 3d 113, 121-122) .

[b] Evidence Is Admissible to Prove Defect

The facts and procedural background of Hasson v. Ford Motor Co. (1982) 32 Cal. 3d 388, 185 Cal. Rptr. 654, 650 P.2d 1171 , are discussed in §§ 190.50[3][a] and 190.223[3][b]. In affirming the judgment for plaintiff, the Supreme Court held that evidence of pre-recall brake failures in 1965 Continental models had been properly admitted to prove defect in the 1966 Continental model in which plaintiff was riding. The Court explained that plaintiff was not required to prove that the two models were exactly the same, but needed only to show substantial similarity between the two (32 Cal. 3d 388, 403-404) .

[c] Evidence Is Admissible to Show Defendant Had Notice of Dangerous Condition

The facts and procedural background of Elsworth v. Beech Aircraft Corp. (1984) 37 Cal. 3d 540, 208 Cal. Rptr. 874, 691 P.2d 630 , are discussed in § 190.281[3][b]. In affirming the judgment for plaintiffs, the Supreme Court held that the evidence of the other stall/spin accidents was admissible to show that defendant had notice of a dangerous condition. The Court, relying on prior appellate case law, explained that admissibility for this purpose required only that the previous injury be such as to attract the defendant's attention to the dangerous situation. Because the prior accidents should have alerted defendant to the faulty spinning characteristics of the plane, and because it was contrary to FAA regulations to spin either of the two plane models, defendant should have been alerted to the fact that the spinning of the airplanes in the prior accidents was unintentional and may have been due to a defect in their design (37 Cal. 3d 540, 555) .

The facts and procedural background of Hasson v. Ford Motor Co. (1982) 32 Cal. 3d 388, 185 Cal. Rptr. 654, 650 P.2d 1171 , are discussed in §§ 190.50[3][a], 190.223[3][b], and 190.281[3][b]. In affirming the judgment for plaintiff, the Supreme Court also held that evidence of letters and testimony concerning the brake failure in the 1965 and 1966 Continental models had been properly admitted at trial. The Court explained that the requirement of showing similarity of circumstances between the 1965 and 1966 models was relaxed. Relying on previous appellate case law, the Court reiterated that all that is required to show similarity is that the previous injury be such as to attract the defendant's attention to the dangerous situation. Because the letters complained of brake failure in the 1965 model due to fluid boil, defendant had been alerted to a dangerous situation, and had notice that the problem persisted even after the brake system was modified (32 Cal. 3d 388, 404) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Evidence is Admissible to Prove Defect

In Aetna Casualty & Surety Co. v. Farmers Brothers Co., 65 Cal. App. 4th 574 , the plaintiffs commenced a products liability action against a manufacturer of a coffee maker to recover damages resulting from a fire allegedly caused by a defective heating unit in the coffee maker. The jury returned a verdict for the plaintiffs. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment, finding that uncontroverted evidence established that the origin and heat source of the fire was the coffee maker. Evidence of the functioning of substantially similar related products was sufficient to prove that the product in question was defective. Wattage tests introduced into evidence by the plaintiff constituted adequate proof that the heating unit could have ignited the coffee urn handle, thereby starting the fire (65 Cal. App. 4th 574, 579) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
E. Evidence and Proof

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.282

§ 190.282 Supporting Contention That Evidence Is Admissible in Strict Liability Action--Proof of Duty to Warn--Evidence of Post-Accident Warning

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities supporting the contention that defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product (see, e.g., §§ 190.280, 190.281).]

EVIDENCE THAT DEFENDANT _____ [name] ADDED A WARNING TO THE _____ [specify product] AFTER PLAINTIFF'S ACCIDENT HAD OCCURRED IS ADMISSIBLE TO PROVE THAT DEFENDANT HAD A DUTY TO WARN OF ITS DANGERS.

Evidence of Post-Accident Warning Is Admissible in Strict Products Liability Action to Prove Duty to Warn. Evidence that a manufacturer added a warning to its product after the plaintiff's accident had occurred is admissible in a strict products liability action to prove that the manufacturer had a duty to warn of the product's dangers. The exclusionary rule of Section 1151 of the Evidence Code does not preclude admission of such post-accident warning evidence in a strict products liability action (Schelbauer v. Butler Mfg. Co. (1984) 35 Cal. 3d 442, 450, 452, 198 Cal. Rptr. 155, 673 P.2d 743 ; Burke v. Almaden Vineyards, Inc. (1978) 86 Cal. App. 3d 768, 771, 771-772 n.2, 150 Cal. Rptr. 419).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that plaintiff, to prove that defendant had a duty to warn of the product's dangers, may introduce evidence in a strict products liability action that defendant added a warning to the product after plaintiff's accident had occurred.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context

in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication on the issue that defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, and with any other relevant points and authorities combined with this form, to show the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should describe the warning that was added to the product by defendant, and explain that the warning warned of the same or similar dangers that caused plaintiff's injuries [see, e.g., Schelbauer v. Butler Mfg. Co. (1984) 35 Cal. 3d 442, 198 Cal. Rptr. 155, 673 P.2d 743 (post-accident warning of dangers of excessive oil coating as admissible to prove duty to warn); Burke v. Almaden Vineyards, Inc. (1978) 86 Cal. App. 3d 768, 150 Cal. Rptr. 419 (post-accident warning of dangers of corks of wine bottles as admissible to prove that defendant should have warned of dangers)].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Evidence of Post-Accident Warning Is Admissible in Strict Products Liability Action to Prove Duty to Warn

In Schelbauer v. Butler Mfg. Co. (1984) 35 Cal. 3d 442, 198 Cal. Rptr. 155, 673 P.2d 743 , plaintiff sustained personal injuries when he slipped on a roofing panel that was excessively oiled. Plaintiff brought an action in strict liability and negligence against the manufacturer of the roofing panels. At trial, plaintiff introduced into evidence a copy of defendant's dealer information literature in which a warning had been added after plaintiff's accident. The jury returned a verdict for plaintiff, and defendant moved for a new trial. The trial court issued an order conditionally granting the new trial, unless plaintiff consented to a 15 percent reduction of his award. Plaintiff filed a written consent to the remittitur, and the trial court denied defendant's motion for a new trial. Defendant appealed from both the judgment and the denial of the motion for a new trial.

The Supreme Court modified the trial court's order to provide for a new trial limited to the issue of the proper apportionment of liability, holding that the trial court erred in using a remittitur to condition a new trial order to reduce an excessive damage award only because it reflected an improper apportionment of liability (35 Cal. 3d 442, 452-458) . However, the Court also ruled that at the new trial, evidence of defendant's post-accident warning would be admissible to prove that defendant had a duty to warn of the product's dangers. The Court explained that its reasoning in Ault v. International Harvester Co. (1974) 13 Cal. 3d 113, 117 Cal. Rptr. 812, 528 P.2d 1148 [see § 190.280[3][a]], was as applicable to a post-accident warning in the context of a strict liability action as it was to a post-accident change in the manufacture or design of a product. Thus, the Court held that Evid. Code § 1151 did not preclude the admission of post-accident warning evidence in a strict products liability action (35 Cal. 3d 442, 449-452) .

The facts and procedural background of Burke v. Almaden Vineyards, Inc. (1978) 86 Cal. App. 3d 768, 150 Cal. Rptr. 419 , are discussed in § 190.162[3][a]. In reversing the judgment for defendant, the court of appeal held that the trial court abused its discretion in excluding the evidence of the subsequent warning. The court noted that the evidence was not excludable under Evid. Code § 1151 (86 Cal. App. 3d 768, 771, 771-772 n.2). The main issue, however, was whether the probative force of the evidence was outweighed by prejudice under Evid. Code § 352. The court ruled that the trial court had erred in ruling affirmatively, and held that the jury, not the trial court, should have determined the probative force of the evidence. The court explained that the proffered evidence of the subsequent warning afforded reasonable, logical, and natural inferences that a hazard existed that was not obvious and that created an unreasonable risk of harm in the absence of warning, and that a manufacturer does not ordinarily red-flag a product unless there is a potential danger that requires a warning. The court further explained that the only prejudice of the proffered evidence lay in these inferences. Thus, the evidence should have been admitted at trial (86 Cal. App. 3d 768, 772-775) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Evidence of Post-Accident Warning Is Admissible in Strict Products Liability Action to Prove Duty to Warn

In West v. Johnson & Johnson Prods., Inc. (1985) 174 Cal. App. 3d 831, 220 Cal. Rptr. 437 , plaintiff suffered from toxic shock syndrome after using defendant manufacturer's tampon. Plaintiff brought an action in strict liability against defendant on the theories of design defect and defect from failure to warn. The jury awarded plaintiff damages, and defendant appealed. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment. In so doing, the court held that the trial court did not err in admitting evidence of warnings that were placed on the tampon boxes after plaintiff's illness, as evidence that the product was defective. The court reiterated the rule that in a strict products liability action, post-accident warnings are admissible to show that the product was defective at the time of injury (174 Cal. App. 3d 831, 855) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
E. Evidence and Proof

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.283

§ 190.283 Supporting Contention That Evidence Is Admissible in Strict Liability Action--Proof of Duty to Warn--Evidence of FDA Action or Inaction

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

EVIDENCE OF FDA _____ [ACTION or INACTION], SPECIFICALLY _____ [specify FDA action or inaction, such as a citation to a specific FDA regulation, or the absence of an FDA regulation] IS ADMISSIBLE TO PROVE THAT DRUG MANUFACTURER _____ [HAD or DID NOT HAVE] A DUTY TO WARN OF THE DANGERS OF _____ [specify drug] BECAUSE THE EVIDENCE SHOWS WHETHER THE DRUG'S DANGERS [ARE or ARE NOT] KNOWN OR REASONABLY SCIENTIFICALLY KNOWABLE.

A. Evidence of FDA Action or Inaction is Admissible in Failure-to-Warn Action to Show Risk. In a strict liability failure-to-warn action, evidence of FDA action or inaction, though not dispositive, may be admissible to show whether a risk was known or reasonably scientifically knowable (Carlin v. Superior Court (1996) 13 Cal. 4th 1104, 1114).

B. Evidence of FDA Action or Inaction May Be Considered in Design Defect Claim. In a design defect claim, evidence of FDA action or inaction, through not dispositive, may be considered to show whether a product is safe or not safe (O'Neill v. Novartis Consumer Health, Inc. (2007) 147 Cal. App. 4th 1388, 1395, 55 Cal. Rptr. 3d 551).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in a strict liability failure-to-warn action in support of the contention that evidence of FDA action or inaction is admissible to prove whether the dangers of a prescription drug are known or reasonably scientifically knowable [Carlin v. Superior Court (1996) 13 Cal. 4th 1104, 1114] . The form may be used by either a plaintiff or a defendant depending on which party the FDA action or inaction favors.

The form should be combined with other forms in this publication as necessary to complete argument as to all issues and to place the argument within its proper procedural context. One appropriate procedural context for this contention, for example, would be a motion for summary judgment when FDA action or inaction clearly support the contention and disclose no triable issue as to any material fact [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c]. In this context counsel would need to submit a statement of undisputed facts supported by cognizable evidence in the form of a request for judicial notice or one or more affidavits or declarations. The latter supply facts that are within the personal knowledge of the affiant or declarant [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2002(1), 2003; Evid. Code § 702], and may also provide the necessary foundation for any accompanying discovery documents or other documentary evidence attached in the form of an exhibit. References to exhibits and declarations must reference the number or letter of the exhibit, the specific page, and, if applicable, the paragraph or line number [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1113(g)].

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, in a particular case, a defendant may wish to introduce evidence of a FDA regulation that expressly precludes manufacturers from warning about theoretical hazards [see 21 C.F.R. § 201.57(d), (e)] because a prescription drug manufacturer is not strictly liable for failing to give warnings expressly precluded by the FDA [see § 190.174]. Under other circumstances, a plaintiff may wish to introduce evidence of FDA approval of a particular warning to show that a danger was known or reasonably scientifically knowable.

[b] Related Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in §§ 190.90, 190.163, 190.166, 190.173, and 190.174 may be combined with the points and authorities in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Evidence of FDA Action or Inaction is Admissible in Failure-to-Warn Action to Show Risk.

The facts and procedural background of Carlin v. Superior Court (1996) 13 Cal. 4th 1104 are discussed in § 190.163[3][a]. In reaffirming that prescription drug manufacturers are strictly liable for failure to warn, the Court, rejected the plaintiffs argument that FDA regulations are essentially irrelevant in a common law action for failure to warn. Although FDA regulations do not expressly preempt common law tort remedies for failure to warn, in appropriate cases, FDA action or inaction, though not dispositive, may be admissible to show whether a risk was known or reasonably scientifically knowable. For example, in a particular case, it may be significant that the FDA precludes manufacturers from warning about theoretical hazards [see 21 C.F.R. § 201.57(d), (e)]. Under other circumstances, it may be significant that the FDA precludes warnings of adverse reactions that are subject to dispute in the medical community [see 21 C.F.R. § 1.21(c)(1)]. On the other hand, the FDA's approval of a particular warning, while not determinative of liability, may be relevant to what risks have been indicated by state-of-the-art scientific data (13 Cal. 4th 1104, 1113-1114) .

[b] Evidence of FDA Action or Inaction May Be Considered in Design Defect Claim

In O'Neill v. Novartis Consumer Health, Inc. (2007) 147 Cal. App. 4th 1388, 55 Cal. Rptr. 3d 551 , plaintiffs claimed that they suffered strokes after using PPA-containing cough and cold products. The trial court refused their proffered instructions and instead instructed the jury that "FDA action or inaction, through not dispositive, may be considered to show whether a product is safe or not safe." The jury returned defense verdicts on their products liability claims. On appeal, plaintiffs contended that the court erred in refusing to instruct the jury that compliance with FDA standards cannot be considered as a basis for assessing the safety of the product in a design defect claim. The Court of Appeal affirmed. It held that the trial court properly incorporated the essence of the holding of Ramirez v. Plough, Inc. (1993) 6 Cal. 4th 539, 25 Cal. Rptr. 2d 97, 863 P.2d 167 , in its given instruction (147 Cal. App. 4th 1388, 1395) .

171 of 179 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
E. Evidence and Proof

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.284

§ 190.284 Supporting Contention That Evidence Is Admissible in Strict Liability or Negligence Action--Proof of Malice and Punitive Damages [Civ. Code § 3294]--Evidence of Failure to Change Known Defective Product or to Remove Product From Market

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities supporting the contention that defendant is liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product (see, e.g., § 190.223).]

EVIDENCE THAT DEFENDANT _____ [name] FAILED TO CHANGE THE _____ [specify product] OR REMOVE IT FROM THE MARKET AFTER LEARNING OF ITS DANGERS IS ADMISSIBLE TO PROVE THAT DEFENDANT ACTED DESPICABLY AND WITH WILLFUL AND CONSCIOUS DISREGARD OF THE SAFETY OF OTHERS AND IS THEREFORE SUBJECT TO THE IMPOSITION OF PUNITIVE DAMAGES.

Evidence of Failure to Change or Remove Product From Market Is Admissible on Issue of Malice and Punitive Damages. On the issue of malice and punitive damages, a plaintiff may present any evidence that would tend to prove the essential factors of the conscious disregard concept of malice. Such evidence includes the defendant's failure to make changes in a known defective product or to withdraw a known dangerous product from the market. The evidence is not excludable under Section 1151 of the Evidence Code, which only excludes evidence of affirmative remedial or precautionary conduct (Hilliard v. A.H. Robins Co. (1983) 148 Cal. App. 3d 374, 400-401, 196 Cal. Rptr. 117 ; see Civ. Code § 3294(a), (b)(1)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that plaintiff, for the purpose of proving malice and punitive damages, may introduce evidence in a strict products liability or negligence action that defendant failed to change or remove the product from the market after learning of its dangers.

These points and authorities may be combined with other points and authorities pertaining to punitive damages as set forth in § 190.223. These points and authorities may also be combined with other points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication on the issue that defendant is liable for plaintiff's injuries. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, and with any other relevant points and authorities combined with this form, to show the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should set forth facts stating the circumstances under which defendant learned of the product's defect and dangers, and that defendant nevertheless continued to market the product unaltered [see, e.g., Hilliard v. A.H. Robins Co. (1983) 148 Cal. App. 3d 374, 196 Cal. Rptr. 117 (evidence that defendant continued to market IUD unaltered even after learning of large number of cases of pelvic inflammatory disease from its use as admissible to prove malice and punitive damages)].

The 1987 amended version of Civ. Code § 3294(c)(1) has changed the definition of malice that is applicable when a defendant's conduct was not intended to cause injury to the plaintiff. Prior to the amendment, such malice was defined as conduct that is carried on by the defendant with conscious disregard of the safety or rights of others. The 1987 amendment added the requirements that the defendant's conduct be "despicable" and that the conduct be carried out with a "willful" as well as a conscious disregard of the safety or rights of others. The cases discussed in this form are based on prior law under which the requirements for entitlement to punitive damages were less rigorous than under current law. The earlier definition of malice is still applicable in any action in which the trial commenced prior to January 1, 1988 [see Civ. Code § 3294(e)].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Evidence of Failure to Change or Remove Product From Market Is Admissible on Issue of Malice and Punitive Damages

The facts and procedural background of Hilliard v. A.H. Robins Co. (1983) 148 Cal. App. 3d 374, 196 Cal. Rptr. 117 , are discussed in § 190.223[3][b]. In reversing the directed verdict for defendant on the punitive damages issue, the court of appeal held that evidence of defendant's failure to either change its IUD or to remove it from the market, even after learning of a large number of cases of pelvic inflammatory disease and other complications from its use, was admissible to prove malice and punitive damages. The court explained that although proffered evidence is generally inadmissible if it deals with events occurring after a plaintiff had last used the product, such evidence is admissible on the issue of malice and punitive damages if it tends to prove the essential factors of the conscious disregard concept of malice. The court further held that the evidence was not excludable under Evid. Code § 1151, which makes evidence of subsequent repairs inadmissible to establish prior negligence or other culpable conduct. The court explained that the policy purpose of Evid. Code § 1151 is to exclude evidence of affirmative remedial or precautionary conduct, not to exclude evidence of the failure to make changes in a defective product or the failure to withdraw a dangerous product from the market. In fact, because the failure to make changes in a known defective product or to remove such a product from the market does not promote public safety, the admission of such evidence is consistent with the policy consideration of Evid. Code § 1151 (148 Cal. App. 3d 374, 400-401) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
E. Evidence and Proof

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.285

§ 190.285 Supporting Contention That Defect and Proximate Cause Resulting in Plaintiff's Injury May Be Proved by Circumstantial Evidence in Strict Liability or Negligence Action

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities supporting the contention that defendant is liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product (see, e.g., §§ 190.286, 190.287).]

PLAINTIFF HAS PRESENTED SUFFICIENT CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE THAT PROVES THAT THE _____ [specify product] WAS DEFECTIVE [IN DESIGN] AND THAT THE DEFECT PROXIMATELY CAUSED PLAINTIFF'S INJURIES.

A. Plaintiff May Establish Defect by Circumstantial Evidence. A plaintiff may establish that a product is defective [in design] by circumstantial evidence, particularly when the product has been destroyed or damaged to the extent that a physical determination of defect is precluded (Notmeyer v. Stryker Corp. (N.D. Cal. 2007) 502 F. Supp. 2d 1051, 1059-1060 ; Vandermark v. Ford Motor Co. (1964) 61 Cal. 2d 256, 260, 37 Cal. Rptr. 896, 391 P.2d 168 ; Hughes Tool Co. v. Max Hinrichs Seed Co. (1980) 112 Cal. App. 3d 194, 201, 169 Cal. Rptr. 160).

B. Plaintiff May Establish Proximate Cause by Circumstantial Evidence. A plaintiff may establish that a defect in a product proximately caused his or her injuries by circumstantial evidence (Elmore v. American Motors Corp. (1969) 70 Cal. 2d 578, 583-584, 75 Cal. Rptr. 652, 451 P.2d 84 ; Southern Cal. Edison Co. v. Harnischfeger Corp. (1981) 120 Cal. App. 3d 842, 852, 175 Cal. Rptr. 67).

C. Plaintiff May Establish Proximate Cause by Showing Defect Was Substantial Factor for Injury. A plaintiff may establish proximate cause by showing that a defect in a product, in reasonable medical probability, was a substantial factor in contributing plaintiff's injuries by circumstantial evidence (Rutherford v. Owens-Ill., Inc. (1997) 16 Cal. 4th 953, 982-983, 67 Cal. Rptr. 2d 16, 941 P.2d 1203).

D. Reasonable Inferences Are Available to Show Causation in Food Poisoning Cases. Reasonable inferences drawn from substantial evidence are available to establish causation in food poisoning cases (Sarti v. Salt Creek Ltd. (2008) 167 Cal. App. 4th 1187, 1191, 85 Cal. Rptr. 3d 506).

E. Plaintiff Is Not Required to Exclude All Possibilities of Illness Other Than Defendant's Food. A plaintiff in a food poisoning case is not required to exclude all possibilities of his or her illness other than the defendant's food (Sarti v. Salt Creek Ltd. (2008) 167 Cal. App. 4th 1187, 1210, 85 Cal. Rptr. 3d 506).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that plaintiff may prove defect and causation by circumstantial evidence in a strict liability or negligence action, particularly when the product has been destroyed or damaged to the extent that a physical determination of defect is precluded.

These points and authorities may be combined with other points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication on the issue that defendant is liable for plaintiff's injuries. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, and with any other relevant points and authorities combined with this form, to show the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should state the circumstantial evidence that tends to prove defect and causation, explain how the evidence tends to prove defect and causation, and if applicable, state that the product was destroyed or severely damaged in plaintiff's accident so that a physical determination of defect cannot be made [see, e.g., Elmore v. American Motors Corp. (1969) 70 Cal. 2d 578, 75 Cal. Rptr. 652, 451 P.2d 84 (inference from circumstantial evidence that plaintiffs' injuries proximately caused by defect in car that existed at time of sale as proper); Vandermark v. Ford Motor Co. (1964) 61 Cal. 2d 256, 37 Cal. Rptr. 896, 391 P.2d 168 (failure of brakes as properly established by circumstantial evidence); Southern Cal. Edison Co. v. Harnischfeger Corp. (1981) 120 Cal. App. 3d 842, 175 Cal. Rptr. 67 (defect in crane and proximate cause of damage as properly shown by circumstantial evidence); Hughes Tool Co. v. Max Hinrichs Seed Co. (1980) 112 Cal. App. 3d 194, 169 Cal. Rptr. 160 (design defect of helicopter and spray equipment as properly shown by circumstantial evidence when product itself is destroyed)].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Plaintiff May Establish Defect by Circumstantial Evidence

The facts and procedural background of Notmeyer v. Stryker Corp. (N.D. Cal. 2007) 502 F. Supp. 2d 1051 are discussed in § 190.90A[3][a]. The court held the plaintiff presented sufficient circumstantial evidence to raise a triable issue of fact as to whether the femoral head to his hip replacement system contained a manufacturing defect (502 F. Supp. 2d 1051, 1059-1060) .

The facts and procedural background of Vandermark v. Ford Motor Co. (1964) 61 Cal. 2d 256, 37 Cal. Rptr. 896, 391 P.2d 168 , are discussed in §§ 190.71[3][a], 190.72[3][a], 190.75[3][a], and 190.76[3][a]. In reversing the judgment for defendants, the Supreme Court held that the trial court had erred in striking testimony on the possible causes of the failure of the piston in the master cylinder of the brakes of the car, and in rejecting plaintiffs offer to prove that all the possible causes were attributable to defendants. The Supreme Court explained that plaintiffs were entitled to establish the existence of a defect and defendants' responsibility for that defect by circumstantial evidence, particularly when, as in this case, the damage to the car in the collision precluded a determination of whether the master cylinder assembly of the brakes had been properly installed and adjusted before the accident (61 Cal. 2d 256, 260) .

In Hughes Tool Co. v. Max Hinrichs Seed Co. (1980) 112 Cal. App. 3d 194, 169 Cal. Rptr. 160 , the seller of a helicopter and agricultural spray equipment brought an action against a partnership and an individual partner for failure to make payments on the promissory note for the helicopter and equipment. The partnership had stopped payment after the helicopter caught fire in midair during spraying operations, completely destroying the helicopter and equipment. The partnership then cross complained for damages based on strict products liability, breach of warranty, and negligence. The trial court awarded damages on both the complaint and cross complaint, offsetting the judgment against the partnership with the judgment against the plaintiff cross defendant, leaving a net judgment of $5,000 for plaintiff cross defendant. The trial court failed, however, to offset the judgment against the individual partner. The partnership and individual defendant appealed, claiming error as to the latter. The cross defendant appealed on the judgment against it on the cross complaint.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment on the cross complaint for defective product and breach of implied warranty of fitness (112 Cal. App. 3d 194, 200-202). The court also vacated the judgment against the individual defendant, and modified the judgment against the cross defendant to provide for a net recovery of $27,000 for the cross complainant (112 Cal. App. 3d 194, 205). In affirming the judgment on the cross complaint, the court held that substantial evidence supported the trial court's findings on the proximate cause of the fire, and the trial court's conclusion that the helicopter and spray equipment were defective products. The court explained that design defect may be shown by circumstantial evidence in the event the product itself is destroyed. Thus, the court rejected cross defendant's contention that expert testimony on the cause of the fire was not sufficient evidence to support the judgment (112 Cal. App. 3d 194, 200-201).

[b] Plaintiff May Establish Proximate Cause by Circumstantial Evidence

The facts and procedural background of Elmore v. American Motors Corp. (1969) 70 Cal. 2d 578, 75 Cal. Rptr. 652, 451 P.2d 84 , are discussed in § 190.50[3][b]. In reversing the judgment for defendants, the Supreme Court held that the rule that a plaintiff is entitled to establish the existence of a defect and defendants' responsibility for it by circumstantial evidence is equally applicable to a plaintiff seeking to prove that the defect caused his or her injuries. Thus, the Court viewed the evidence in this case that the drive shaft of the car had been disconnected prior to the accident as properly furnishing an inference that plaintiffs' injuries were proximately caused by a defect in the car that existed at the time of sale (70 Cal. 2d 578, 583-584) .

The facts and procedural background of Southern Cal. Edison Co. v. Harnischfeger Corp. (1981) 120 Cal. App. 3d 842, 175 Cal. Rptr. 67 , are discussed in § 190.53[4][a]. In reversing the summary judgment for defendant on the causes of action for strict liability and negligence, the court of appeal held that plaintiff had presented sufficient evidence of causation to be presented to the jury. The court explained that plaintiff had met the threshold requirement of establishing the elements of defect and proximate cause through circumstantial evidence. Thus, summary judgment had been improper (120 Cal. App. 3d 842, 852-854) .

[c] Plaintiff May Establish Proximate Cause by Showing Defect Was Substantial Factor for Injury

In Rutherford v. Owens-Ill., Inc. (1997) 16 Cal. 4th 953 ; 67 Cal. Rptr. 2d 16, 941 P.2d 1203 , an individual filed an asbestos-related cause of action in products liability against an asbestos manufacturer and others. The complaint alleged that plaintiff had contracted lung cancer as a result of his exposure to defendant's asbestos products while on the job, and alleged causes of action for products liability, negligent and intentional infliction of emotional distress, and loss of consortium against. After the individual died of lung cancer, the complaint was amended to allege a wrongful death action brought by the wife and daughter. The trial court bifurcated the trial into damages and liability phases. During the liability phase of the trial, the trial court instructed the jury pursuant to local county general order that permitted the plaintiff to elect to shift the burden to the defendant manufacturer to prove its products were not a legal cause of plaintiff's injuries. The court of appeal reversed the trial court's decision on the grounds that the trial court erred in allowing the burden-shifting instruction.

The California Supreme Court affirmed the court of appeal's decision that the trial court erred by shifting the burden to the defendant to prove it products were not a legal cause of plaintiff's injuries and death. Although plaintiffs in complex asbestos litigation cannot be expected to prove the scientifically unknown details of carcinogenesis, or trace the unknowable path of a given asbestos fiber, the impossibility of proof does not justify use of a burden-shifting instruction. The Court found that asbestos plaintiffs can meet their burden of proving legal causation by demonstrating that exposure to defendant's defective asbestos-containing product, in reasonable medical probability, was a substantial factor in contributing to the aggregate dose of asbestos the plaintiff inhaled or ingested. The substantial factor test is a relatively broad one, requiring only that the contribution of the individual cause be more than negligible or theoretical. A standard instruction tells juries that each of several actors or forces acting concurrently to cause an injury is a legal cause of the injury "regardless of the extent to which each contributes to the injury" (16 Cal. 4th 953, 976-978) .

[d] Reasonable Inferences Are Available to Show Causation in Food Poisoning Cases

In Sarti v. Salt Creek Ltd. (2008) 167 Cal. App. 4th 1187, 85 Cal. Rptr. 3d 506 , the plaintiff became ill after splitting a raw tuna-and-vegetable appetizer with her friend at the defendant's restaurant. Almost two weeks later testing revealed the presence of campylobacter bacteria in her sample. Campybacter is not found in raw tuna unless the tuna has been cross-contaminated by raw chicken. The Health Department issued a food-borne illness report identifying four practices at the defendant's restaurant that could lead to cross-contamination: failure to sanitize wipe-down rags, an insufficient amount of sanitizer in the dishwasher, the use of chicken tongs for other food; and the storage of raw vegetables under raw meat. The plaintiff filed a breach of warranty suit against the restaurant. At trial the defendant presented evidence that the plaintiff's friend had not become ill and that its staff followed strict procedures to prevent cross-contamination. The jury found the restaurant liable and awarded substantial damages. The trial judge granted the defendant's motion for judgment n.o.v. on the ground that inferences are unavailable in food poisoning cases.

The court of appeals reversed and ordered reinstatement of the jury's verdict. It held that food poisoning cases are governed by the same rules of causation that govern other tort cases, and that reasonable inferences drawn from substantial evidence are available to show causation. It declined to follow Minder v. Cielito Lindo Rest. (1977) 67 Cal. App. 3d 1003, 136 Cal. Rptr. 915 , to extent that that case imposed a "heightened" standard of causation in food poisoning cases.

The court next applied its holding to the facts of the case. It concluded that the jury could have reasonably inferred either that a rag used to wipe down a raw chicken board was used to wipe down a vegetable or tuna board, or that raw chicken juice leaked into the vegetables stored beneath the chicken. In contrast to Minder, discussed above, the plaintiff's expert expressly linked campylobacter and the cross-contamination found at the restaurant and explained why the plaintiff's friend might not have become ill after eating the same contaminated food (167 Cal. App. 4th 1187, 1191) .

[e] Plaintiff Is Not Required to Exclude All Possibilities of Illness Other Than Defendant's Food

The facts and procedural background of Sarti v. Salt Creek Ltd. (2008) 167 Cal. App. 4th 1187, 85 Cal. Rptr. 3d 506 , are discussed in § 190.258[3][d]. The court rejected the defendant's contention that the plaintiff was required, as a matter of law, to exclude all "possibilities" for her food poisoning other than the meal she consumed at its restaurant. The standard for causation is "substantial factor." The defendant did not present substantial evidence requiring a finding that the plaintiff picked the campylobacter from a source unrelated to the restaurant (167 Cal. App. 4th 1187, 1210) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Plaintiff May Establish Defect by Circumstantial Evidence

The facts and procedural background of Barker v. Lull Eng'g Co. (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 413, 143 Cal. Rptr. 225, 573 P.2d 443 , are discussed in §§ 190.110[3][a], 190.110[3][b], 190.111, 190.112, 190.117, and 190.140. In devising a comprehensive definition of design defect, the Supreme Court discussed the failure to satisfy ordinary consumer expectations as to safety, the resulting injuries for which a manufacturer is strictly liable. In its discussion, the Court relied on Vandermark [see § 190.285[3][a]] and on Elmore [see § 190.285[3][b]] to hold that an injured plaintiff will frequently be able to demonstrate the defectiveness of a product by resort to circumstantial evidence, even when the accident itself precludes identification of the specific defect at fault (20 Cal. 3d 413, 430) .

173 of 179 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
E. Evidence and Proof

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.286

§ 190.286 Supporting Contention That Evidence Is Sufficient to Be Submitted to Jury on Strict Liability Theory--Proof of Defect by Fact of Accident When Accident Shortly After Sale, Plaintiff Did Not Bring About Accident, and Expert Testimony Suggests Defect

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities supporting the contention that defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product (see, e.g., §§ 190.285, 190.287).]

PLAINTIFF HAS PRESENTED SUFFICIENT EVIDENCE OF A DEFECT IN THE _____ [specify product] TO BE SUBMITTED TO THE JURY BECAUSE PLAINTIFF HAS SHOWN THAT THE ACCIDENT OCCURRED SHORTLY AFTER THE PRODUCT'S SALE, PLAINTIFF DID NOTHING TO BRING ABOUT THE ACCIDENT, AND EXPERT TESTIMONY HAS INDICATED THAT A DEFECT IN FACT WAS RESPONSIBLE FOR THE ACCIDENT.

Evidence Sufficient to Show That Accident Occurred Shortly After Sale, Plaintiff Did Nothing to Bring About Accident, and Expert Testimony Indicates Defect Was Responsible for Accident. When a product fails to such an extent that its examination can furnish no clue as to the specific part that failed, the issue of whether a defendant is strictly liable for a plaintiff's injuries may still be submitted to the jury based on the facts that (1) the accident occurred shortly after sale, (2) plaintiffs did nothing to bring about the accident, and (3) expert testimony suggests a defect in fact was responsible for the accident (Hinckley v. La Mesa R.V. Ctr., Inc. (1984) 158 Cal. App. 3d 630, 643, 205 Cal. Rptr. 22).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that the product is defective when plaintiff shows that the accident occurred shortly after sale, plaintiff did nothing to bring about the accident, and expert testimony suggests a defect was responsible for the accident.

These points and authorities may be combined with other points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities opposing a motion for nonsuit, or supporting a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication on the issue that defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, and with any other relevant points and authorities combined with this form, to show the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should state facts showing that the accident occurred shortly after the sale of the product, that plaintiff did nothing to bring about the accident, and that the product was destroyed to such an extent that it is impossible to determine the specific part that failed. In addition, counsel should outline the expert testimony, and explain how it suggests that a defect in fact was responsible for the accident [see, e.g., Hinckley v. La Mesa R.V. Ctr., Inc. (1984) 158 Cal. App. 3d 630, 205 Cal. Rptr. 22 (inference of defect from fact that motor home was destroyed in fire, fire occurred shortly after motor home's purchase, plaintiffs did nothing to bring about fire, and expert testimony that suggested defect caused fire)].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Evidence Sufficient to Show That Accident Occurred Shortly After Sale, Plaintiff Did Nothing to Bring About Accident, and Expert Testimony Indicates Defect Was Responsible for Accident

In Hinckley v. La Mesa R.V. Ctr., Inc. (1984) 158 Cal. App. 3d 630, 205 Cal. Rptr. 22 , plaintiff's motor home was destroyed in a fire. A separate fire had earlier occurred in the motor home's engine compartment, which had been repaired before the second fire occurred. Plaintiff brought an action in strict liability, negligence, and warranty against the seller and manufacturer of the motor home. The trial court granted a nonsuit for the defendants, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that sufficient circumstantial evidence had been presented to allow the jury to consider a strict liability theory. The court also held that sufficient evidence had been presented on the negligence and warranty theories, and that the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur was applicable (158 Cal. App. 3d 630, 637-645) . With regard to the strict liability theory, defendants argued that plaintiff failed to affirmatively establish a defect in manufacture or design defect, and that plaintiffs improperly inferred a defect solely from the fact of the accident. The court rejected this contention, holding that when a product fails to such an extent that its examination can furnish no clue as to the specific part that failed, the facts that (1) the accident occurred shortly after sale, (2) plaintiffs did nothing to bring about the accident, and (3) expert testimony suggests a defect in fact was responsible for the accident, allow the issue of whether defendants are strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries to be submitted to the jury (158 Cal. App. 3d 630, 642-643) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
E. Evidence and Proof

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.287

§ 190.287 Supporting Contention That Plaintiff Is Entitled to Res Ipsa Loquitur Instruction--Both Negligence and Strict Liability Alleged

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities supporting the contention that defendant is liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product (see, e.g., §§ 190.285, 190.286).]

PLAINTIFF IS ENTITLED TO A RES IPSA LOQUITUR INSTRUCTION ON THESE FACTS ON PLAINTIFF'S NEGLIGENCE CAUSE OF ACTION, EVEN THOUGH PLAINTIFF HAS ALSO ALLEGED A STRICT LIABILITY CAUSE OF ACTION.

Plaintiff Entitled to Res Ipsa Loquitur Instruction When Warranted, Even if Plaintiff Has Also Alleged Strict Liability. A plaintiff is not required to elect whether to proceed on a negligence theory or a strict liability theory. Thus, the plaintiff is entitled to a res ipsa loquitur instruction on the plaintiff's negligence cause of action if warranted under the facts of the case, even if the plaintiff has additionally alleged a separate cause of action based on a strict liability theory (Jiminez v. Sears, Roebuck & Co. (1971) 4 Cal. 3d 379, 386-387, 93 Cal. Rptr. 769, 482 P.2d 681).

[2] Comments

CAUTION:

One court of appeal has held that a trial court erred in instructing the jury on res ipsa loquitur in a case in which both negligence and strict liability were alleged [Moreno v. Sayre (1984) 162 Cal. App. 3d 116, 208 Cal. Rptr. 444 ; see § 190.287[3][a]].

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that plaintiff is entitled to a res ipsa loquitur instruction on plaintiff's negligence cause of action, even though plaintiff has additionally alleged a strict liability cause of action.

These points and authorities may be combined with other points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a motion for new trial on the ground that the jury should have been given a res ipsa loquitur instruction for the negligence cause of action. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, and with any other relevant points and authorities combined with this form, to show the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should state facts showing that the criteria for a res ipsa loquitur instruction have been met [see, e.g., Jiminez v. Sears, Roebuck & Co. (1971) 4 Cal. 3d 379, 93 Cal. Rptr. 769, 482 P.2d 681 (res ipsa loquitur instruction should be given under facts of case in which plaintiff sustained injuries from fall from ladder)].

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in § 190.288 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion and forms relating to res ipsa loquitur, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For forms of memoranda of points and authorities related to res ipsa loquitur, see Ch. 165, Negligence .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Plaintiff Entitled to Res Ipsa Loquitur Instruction When Warranted, Even if Plaintiff Has Also Alleged Strict Liability

In Jiminez v. Sears, Roebuck & Co. (1971) 4 Cal. 3d 379, 93 Cal. Rptr. 769, 482 P.2d 681 , plaintiff sustained injuries when the ladder he was using broke and he fell. Plaintiff brought an action in strict liability and negligence against the retailer of ladder. The trial judge instructed the jury as to strict liability, but refused to instruct the jury as to res ipsa loquitur; the negligence instructions had been withdrawn. The jury returned a verdict for defendant, and plaintiff moved for a new trial. The trial court granted the motion, stating that under the pleadings and evidence plaintiff was entitled to have the issues of negligence and res ipsa loquitur go to the jury. Defendant appealed the grant of a new trial.

The Supreme Court affirmed the order, holding that a res ipsa loquitur instruction to presume negligence may be proper in a case in which strict liability is also instructed to the jury. The Court explained that instructions on the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur may have been helpful to plaintiff. In a products liability case based on negligence, as in other negligence cases, the conditions of application of the doctrine do not require proof of any particular defect, but only a showing that the occurrence of the injury is of such a nature that it can be said in the light of past experience that it was probably the result of negligence of someone and that defendant is probably the one responsible. Plaintiff proves the conditions of the doctrine, which do not involve proof of the defect, and the jury is told to draw an inference of negligent causation on the part of defendant. Although that inference may necessarily mean that the product had a defect, plaintiff can prevail under the doctrine without identifying the particular defect. Nor does the fact that plaintiff introduced some evidence as to particular defects preclude resort to the res ipsa doctrine. The Court further noted that its prior cases have assumed without discussing the point that a plaintiff in a products liability case could seek recovery at the same time on theories of strict liability in tort and in negligence. The Court saw no valid reason to require plaintiff to elect whether to proceed on the theory of strict liability in tort or on the theory of negligence. Rather, plaintiff was entitled to have instructions on negligence in addition to those on strict liability, which would not have been confusing to the jury (4 Cal. 3d 379, 383-387) .

NOTE:

At least one court of appeal case has held that a trial court erred in instructing the jury on res ipsa loquitur in a case in which both negligence and strict liability were alleged. In that case, plaintiff sustained personal injuries when he attempted to remove scrap metal from the chamber of a punch press during its operation. Plaintiff brought an action in strict liability, negligence, and warranty against the manufacturer and the distributors of the press. The trial court instructed the jury on res ipsa loquitur, and the jury returned a verdict against all defendants but in favor of the manufacturer on the cross complaints for indemnification. Defendant manufacturer appealed.

The court of appeal reversed the judgment, holding that the trial court erred in instructing the jury on res ipsa loquitur. The court noted that the doctrine was not applicable under the facts of the case, because plaintiff could not show that the instrumentality that caused the injury was under the exclusive control of defendant [Moreno v. Sayre (1984) 162 Cal. App. 3d 116, 124, 208 Cal. Rptr. 444] . Furthermore, the court observed that the instruction was erroneously given because it was tantamount to telling the jury that the product was the instrumentality that caused the injury and that the product was defective [Moreno v. Sayre (1984) 162 Cal. App. 3d 116, 123-126, 208 Cal. Rptr. 444] . The court explained that, whether plaintiff's case was cast in the principles of negligence or in strict liability, plaintiff had the burden of proving that the product had a defect, and that the defect caused the malfunction that led to his injury. Such proof was not only the essence of the products liability theory, it was also required before plaintiff could pursue his res ipsa loquitur theory. Once plaintiff proved those facts, however, the question of negligence would be unnecessary because liability would attach under strict liability. Thus, the court viewed the key issue in the lawsuit as whether defendant's product was related to plaintiff's injury. Under these circumstances, the court stated that a jury instruction that negligence is assumed from the fact of the accident was tantamount to telling the jury that defendant's product was the instrumentality that caused the injury and that the product was defective. The court noted that the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is designed to assist a plaintiff in establishing the element of negligence when it is shown that a defendant was in control of the thing that produced the injury. However, the court would not allow the doctrine to be invoked to establish the conditions precedent to its invocation, those conditions being the identity of the instrumentality and the defendant's control of that instrumentality [Moreno v. Sayre (1984) 162 Cal. App. 3d 116, 124-125, 208 Cal. Rptr. 444] .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
E. Evidence and Proof

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.288

§ 190.288 Opposing Contention That Evidence Is Sufficient to Be Submitted to Jury on Strict Liability Theory--Inference of Defect by Fact of Accident May Not Be Drawn--Res Ipsa Loquitur Not Applicable

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities opposing the contention that defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product (see, e.g., § 190.120).]

DEFENDANT _____ [name] IS NOT STRICTLY LIABLE FOR PLAINTIFF'S INJURIES BECAUSE PLAINTIFF HAS NOT AFFIRMATIVELY ESTABLISHED A DEFECT AND THE JURY MAY NOT INFER A DEFECT FROM THE MERE FACT THAT THE ACCIDENT OCCURRED NOR OTHERWISE APPLY THE DOCTRINE OF RES IPSA LOQUITUR.

A. Plaintiff Must Affirmatively Establish Defect. In a strict products liability action, a plaintiff must affirmatively establish and prove by competent evidence that the product was either defective in design or manufacture or both, thus causing the injury, or that inadequate warning relative to use of the product was given (Barrett v. Atlas Powder Co. (1978) 86 Cal. App. 3d 560, 564, 150 Cal. Rptr. 339).

B. Jury May Not Infer Defect From Fact of Accident. The jury may not draw an inference of defect from the mere fact of the accident (Barrett v. Atlas Powder Co. (1978) 86 Cal. App. 3d 560, 564, 150 Cal. Rptr. 339).

C. Res Ipsa Loquitur Is Not Applicable to Strict Liability Action. The doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is not applicable to a cause of action that is based on the theory of strict liability (Barrett v. Atlas Powder Co. (1978) 86 Cal. App. 3d 560, 565, 150 Cal. Rptr. 339 ; Tresham v. Ford Motor Co. (1969) 275 Cal. App. 2d 403, 407, 79 Cal. Rptr. 883).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries from defendant's product. The ground of opposition set forth is that plaintiff has not affirmatively established that the product is defective, and the jury may not infer defect from the mere fact of the accident nor otherwise apply the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur.

These points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a motion for nonsuit, or a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication on the issue that the product is not defective. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should show that plaintiff has failed to set forth any evidence to prove that the product is defective, and is attempting to rely solely on the fact that the accident happened in order to prove a defect existed [see, e.g., Barrett v. Atlas Powder Co. (1978) 86 Cal. App. 3d 560, 150 Cal. Rptr. 339 (no competent evidence that blasting cap was defective in design or manufacture or needed warning; res ipsa loquitur inapplicable); Tresham v. Ford Motor Co. (1969) 275 Cal. App. 2d 403, 79 Cal. Rptr. 883 (res ipsa loquitur not available to prove defect in brakes caused injuries)].

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be used to oppose the contention supported by the points and authorities in § 190.287.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion and forms relating to res ipsa loquitur, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 380, Negligence (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Points and Authorities

For forms of memoranda of points and authorities related to res ipsa loquitur, see Ch. 165, Negligence .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Plaintiff Must Affirmatively Establish Defect

In Barrett v. Atlas Powder Co. (1978) 86 Cal. App. 3d 560, 150 Cal. Rptr. 339 , plaintiff suffered personal injuries from a blasting cap that detonated in his hand while he was examining it. Plaintiff brought an action in strict liability against the manufacturer and retailer of the blasting cap. The trial court granted defendants' motion for summary judgment, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that the record did not reveal triable issues of fact concerning defendants' liability. Specifically, plaintiff did not establish by competent evidence that the product was defective in design or manufacture, or any basis for assuming that the cap was subject to spontaneous explosion for which warning must be given. Because plaintiff must affirmatively establish and prove by competent evidence that the product was defective or needed a warning, and plaintiff failed to do so, summary judgment was proper (86 Cal. App. 3d 560, 564-565) .

[b] Jury May Not Infer Defect From Fact of Accident

The facts and procedural background of Barrett v. Atlas Powder Co. (1978) 86 Cal. App. 3d 560, 150 Cal. Rptr. 339 , are discussed in § 190.288[3][a]. The court of appeal held that plaintiff must affirmatively establish a defect and that an inference of defect as a result of the accident may not be drawn (86 Cal. App. 3d 560, 565) .

[c] Res Ipsa Loquitur Is Not Applicable to Strict Liability Action

The facts and procedural background of Barrett v. Atlas Powder Co. (1978) 86 Cal. App. 3d 560, 150 Cal. Rptr. 339 , are discussed in § 190.288[3][a]. The court of appeal explained that in essence, plaintiff was asking that the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur be applied. The court rejected this notion, holding that the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is inapplicable to any action predicated on the theory of strict liability (86 Cal. App. 3d 560, 565) .

In Tresham v. Ford Motor Co. (1969) 275 Cal. App. 2d 403, 79 Cal. Rptr. 883 , plaintiff sustained personal injuries when the brakes of the car in which plaintiff was riding failed. Plaintiff brought an action in strict liability against the automobile manufacturer. The judgment had previously been reversed in Vandermark v. Ford Motor Co. (1964) 61 Cal. 2d 256, 37 Cal. Rptr. 896, 391 P.2d 168 [see § 190.71[3][a]]. On retrial, plaintiffs dismissed all causes of action except those based on strict liability. The trial court refused to instruct the jury as to res ipsa loquitur. The jury returned a verdict for defendant, and plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment. The court held that the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is not available in a cause of action based solely on strict liability. The court reasoned that plaintiff was erroneously attempting to shift the burden of proof to defendants to show the existence of a defect that proximately caused injury to plaintiffs. The court explained that such a shift of the burden would have the inappropriate effect of making defendants insurers unless they could produce satisfactory evidence that the automobile was not defective or, even if defective, that the defect did not cause the injury or damage (275 Cal. App. 2d 403, 406-410) . the burden of proof to defendants to show the existence of a defect that proximately caused injury to plaintiffs. The court explained that such a shift of the burden would have the inappropriate effect of making defendants insurers unless they could produce satisfactory evidence that the automobile was not defective or, even if defective, that the defect did not cause the injury or damage (275 Cal. App. 2d 403, 406-410) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
E. Evidence and Proof

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.289

§ 190.289 Opposing Contention that Expert Opinion Is Admissible in Strict Liability or Negligence Action--Expert Opinion Must Be Based on Matter That Provides Reasonable Basis for Opinion [Evid. Code § 801]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memoradum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memoradum of points and authorities opposing the contention that defendant is strictly liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product (see, e.g., § 190.120).]

THE OPINION OF PLAINTIFF'S EXPERT THAT _____ [name defendant's product] CAUSES _____ [name plaintiff's illness or injury] IS INADMISSIBLE BECAUSE IT IS BASED ON A MATTER THAT DOES NOT PROVIDE A REASONABLE BASIS FOR THE OPINION OFFERED.

Matter on Which Expert Relies Must Provide Reasonable Basis for Particular Opinion Offered. Under Evidence Code Section 801, the matter on which an expert relies in forming his or her expert opinion must provide a reasonable basis for the particular opinion offered, and an expert opinion based on speculation or conjecture is inadmissible (Stephen v. Ford Motor Co. (2005) 134 Cal. App. 4th 1363, 1372-1373, 37 Cal. Rptr. 3d 9 ; Lockheed Litig. Cases (2004) 115 Cal. App. 4th 558, 564, 10 Cal. Rptr. 3d 34).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition of the contention that the opinion on general causation offered by plaintiff's expert is admissible. The ground of opposition is that the opinion does not comply with Evidence Code § 801 because it is based on a matter that does not provide a reasonable basis for the opinion offered.

These points and authorities may be combined with the points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a motion for nonsuit, or a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication on the issue that the product is not defective. These points and authorities may also be adopted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should show that the report on which the plaintiff's expert relied--examining painters exposed to hundreds of substances--did not indicate whether persons exposed to only the five chemicals supplied by the defendants contracted cancer at a rate greater than the national average [see, e.g., Lockheed Litig. Cases (2004) 115 Cal. App. 4th 558, 563-565, 10 Cal. Rptr. 3d 34] .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Matter on Which Expert Relies Must Provide Reasonable Basis for Particular Opinion Offered.

In Stephen v. Ford Motor Co. (2005) 134 Cal. App. 4th 1363, 37 Cal. Rptr. 3d 9 , the tread separated from the rear tire of the plaintiff's vehicle. The vehicle was towed to a scrap yard, where the insurance adjuster and the plaintiff's boyfriend took a few photographs of the vehicle. After the vehicle was sold for scrap, the plaintiff brought an action against the manufacturers of the tire and the vehicle, alleging that both the vehicle and the tire were defectively designed. The trial court excluded the testimony of the plaintiff's tire expert, substantially limited the testimony of her directional stability expert, and granted the defendants' motions for nonsuit. The court of appeal affirmed, holding that the tire expert's testimony was properly excluded. The "Kepner-Tregoe" analysis that the expert used to form his design defect theory requires empirical testing to confirm the conclusions reached from an examination of the data, but the expert admitted that no tests had been performed on the plaintiff's tire. Moreover, he was not aware of anyone else using the Kepner-Tregoe analysis for forensic tire evaluation. The amateur photographs that he used as a substitute for testing did not show the interior of the tire or the tread belt piece that detached, and the expert conceded that he had never before rendered an expert opinion based on photographs. The plaintiff failed to show that there was any substantial similarity between the tire failures relied on by the expert and her own tire failure. She also failed to establish that the amateur photographs were sufficient to support the expert's conclusions. The expert's opinions and conclusions were thus speculation (134 Cal. App. 4th 1363, 1372-1373) .

In Lockheed Litig. Cases (2004) 115 Cal. App. 4th 558, 10 Cal. Rptr. 3d 34 , plaintiffs sued the manufacturers and suppliers of chemicals, seeking damages for wrongful death allegedly caused by exposure to five toxic chemicals. Plaintiffs' expert based his general causation opinion on a study which analyzed prior epidemiological studies of painters' exposure to dozens of chemicals. The study concluded that the painters experienced a 40 percent greater incidence of lung cancer and a 20 percent greater incidence of various other types of cancer than did the general population. The trial court excluded the testimony on grounds that the study did not provide a reasonable basis for the expert's opinion. The court of appeal affirmed, concluding that an expert opinion must be based on matter that provides a reasonable basis for the opinion, and the court did not err by excluding an opinion that did not comply with this rule.

The plaintiffs argued that under Evid. Code § 801(b), a court should determine only whether the type of matter that an expert relies on in forming his or her opinion is the type of matter that an expert reasonably can rely on in forming an opinion, without regard to whether the matter relied on reasonably does support the opinion offered. According to the plaintiffs, because an expert reasonably can rely on an epidemiological study in forming an opinion, the trial court must admit any expert opinion testimony based on an epidemiological study. The court of appeal rejected this argument. Matter that provides a reasonable basis for one opinion does not necessarily provide a reasonable basis for another opinion. The court construed the language of Evid. Code § 801(b) to mean that the matter relied on must provide a reasonable basis for the particular opinion offered, and that an expert opinion based on speculation or conjecture is inadmissible.

The study on which the expert relied showed that painters who were exposed to more than 130 substances and thousands of chemical compounds contracted cancer at a greater rate than the national average. The study did not indicate, however, whether persons exposed to only the five chemicals supplied by the defendants contracted cancer at a rate greater than the national average. The trial court thus did not abuse its discretion in excluding the expert's testimony (115 Cal. App. 4th 558, 563-565) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
E. Evidence and Proof

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.290

§ 190.290 Opposing Contention That Defect and Proximate Cause May Be Proved Without Expert Testimony in Products Liability Action

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities opposing the contention that defendant is liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product].

PLAINTIFF MUST INTRODUCE EXPERT TESTIMONY TO ESTABLISH THAT _____ [specify product] WAS DEFECTIVE IN DESIGN AND THAT THE DEFECT CAUSED PLAINTIFF'S INJURIES.

A. Expert Testimony Is Required to Establish Causation if Issue Is Complex. Expert testimony is required to establish causation if the complexity of the causation issue is beyond common experience (Stephen v. Ford Motor Co. (2005) 134 Cal. App. 4th 1363, 1373-1374, 37 Cal. Rptr. 3d 9).

B. Causation In Personal Injury Action Must Be Based on Expert Testimony Causation in a personal injury action must be proven within a reasonable medical probability, based on competent expert testimony (Jones v. Ortho Pharm. Corp. 163 Cal. App. 3d 396, 402-403, 209 Cal. Rptr. 456).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that the plaintiff does not need to introduce expert testimony to prove that a product is defective and was the proximate cause of the plaintiff's injury.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting summary judgment or summary adjudication on the grounds that the defendant is not subject to strict liability. These points and authorities may also be adopted for use in an appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form to show the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should show facts indicating that the comprehension of the product design and the causation issue are beyond the common experience of both judges and jurors [see, e.g., Stephen v. Ford Motor Co. (2005) 134 Cal. App. 4th 1363, 1373-1374, 37 Cal. Rptr. 3d 9] .

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in § 190.115 may be used to oppose the contentions supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Expert Testimony Is Required to Establish Causation if Issue Is Complex

The facts and procedural background of Stephen v. Ford Motor Co. (2005) 134 Cal. App. 4th 1363, 37 Cal. Rptr. 3d 9 , are discussed in § 190.289[3][a]. The plaintiff's theory about tire failure was based on the tire's chemical characteristics and the supposedly defective "recipe" used in the manufacturing process--a theory plainly beyond the common experience of both judges and jurors. The plaintiff's failure to present expert testimony was thus fatal to her products liability and negligence claims (134 Cal. App. 4th 1363) .

[b] Causation in Personal Injury Action Must Be Based on Expert Testimony

In Jones v. Ortho Pharm. Corp. 163 Cal. App. 3d 396, 402-403, 209 Cal. Rptr. 456), the plaintiff brought an action to recover for a cancerous condition she allegedly suffered as a result of the contraceptive pill manufactured by the defendant. The trial court granted the defendant's motion for nonsuit on the ground that the evidence was insufficient to establish a reasonable causal connection between the development or aggravation of the disease and the use of the pill. The court of appeal affirmed. The only evidence relating to the causal connection between the pill and the plaintiff's precancerous condition was the highly conjectural and ambiguous testimony of her experts that the ingestion of the drug may have had some effect on the development or progression of the disease. This evidence was insufficient to establish proximate cause (163 Cal. App. 3d 396, 402-403) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 190 PRODUCTS LIABILITY
PART II. FORMS
E. Evidence and Proof

19-190 California Points & Authorities § 190.291

§ 190.291 Opposing Contention That Evidence Is Admissible in Strict Liability Action--Proof of Defect--Compliance With Industry Customs or Standards

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate form of memorandum supporting the contention that defendant is liable for plaintiff's injuries caused by defendant's product].

EVIDENCE OF DEFENDANT'S COMPLIANCE WITH ITS INDUSTRY'S CUSTOM OR SAFETY STANDARDS IS INADMISSIBLE IN A STRICT PRODUCTS LIABILITY ACTION.

A. Evidence of Defendant's Compliance With Industry Custom or Standard Is Not Relevant to Issue of Defect. A manufacturer may not defend a strict products liability action with evidence that it complied with its industry's customs or standards on safety (Buell-Wilson v. Ford Motor Co. (2006) 141 Cal. App. 4th 525, 545, 46 Cal. Rptr. 3d 147 , dismissed and remanded, 93 Cal. Rptr. 3d 536, 207 P.3d 1, 2009 Cal. LEXIS 4439 ; Grimshaw v. Ford Motor Co. (1981) 119 Cal. App. 3d 757, 803, 174 Cal. Rptr. 348).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in opposition of the contention that evidence of defendant's compliance with industry custom or standard on safety is admissible in a strict products liability action.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of products liability. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities supporting a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication of the issue that defendant is liable for plaintiff's injuries. The points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form, and in any other relevant points and authorities combined with this form, to show the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Evidence of Defendant's Compliance With Industry Custom or Standard Is Not Relevant to Issue of Defect

In Buell-Wilson v. Ford Motor Co. (2006) 141 Cal. App. 4th 525, 46 Cal. Rptr. 3d 147 , dismissed and remanded, 93 Cal. Rptr. 3d 536, 207 P.3d 1, 2009 Cal. LEXIS 4439 , the plaintiff was rendered a paraplegic when her Ford Explorer rolled over and its roof crushed. The jury found that the vehicle was defectively unstable and not crashworthy due to a roof defect. The appellate court held that the trial court properly excluded expert testimony that the Explorer's rollover rate was comparative to other vehicles on the road (141 Cal. App. 4th 525, 545-546) .

Grimshaw v. Ford Motor Co. (1981) 119 Cal. App. 3d 757, 174 Cal. Rptr. 348 , is discussed in § 190.114[3][a].

179 of 179 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
Chapters 191through 194 RESERVED

19-191 California Points & Authorities Chapters 191through 194

RESERVED

Chapters 191RESERVED

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 195 PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW

19-195 California Points & Authorities 195.syn

§ 195.syn Synopsis to Chapter 195: PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW

§ 195.01 Scope of Chapter

§ 195.02 Governing Law

§ 195.03 How to Use the Forms in This Chapter

[1] Page Limits on Memoranda

[2] Using the Forms to Build a Draft Memorandum

§ 195.04 Related Discussion and Forms

[1] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[2] Related Points and Authorities Chapters

§§ 195.05-195.09 [Reserved]

§ 195.10 Writ of Mandate--General Form

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Propriety of Mandate for Review

[b] Decisions Reviewable

[c] Entity Exceeded Jurisdiction as Grounds for Writ

[d] Abuse of Discretion as Grounds for Writ

[e] Failure to Conduct Fair Trial as Grounds for Writ

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Decisions Reviewable

§ 195.11 Writ of Mandate--Independent Judgment Test Applies

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Reviewing Weight of Evidence

[b] Authority to Exercise Independent Judgment

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Reviewing Weight of Evidence

[b] Authority to Exercise Independent Judgment

§ 195.12 Writ of Mandate--Decision Substantially Affects Vested Fundamental Right

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Effect of Decision on Petitioner's Rights

[b] "Vested" Denotes Possessed or Acquired

[c] "Fundamental" Denotes Important Right Not Necessarily of Constitutional Dimension

[d] "Fundamental" and "Vested" Not Absolutes but Are Weighed Together

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Effect of Decision on Petitioner's Rights

[b] "Vested" Denotes Possessed or Acquired

[c] "Fundamental" Denotes Important Right Not Necessarily of Constitutional Dimension

§ 195.13 Writ of Mandate--Agency Is Not Directly Authorized to Exercise Judicial Functions

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Constitutional Authority to Exercise Judicial Functions

§ 195.14 Writ of Mandate--Substantial Evidence Test Applies

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Determining Support of Substantial Evidence

[b] Findings Based on Hearsay

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Determining Support of Substantial Evidence

§ 195.15 Writ of Mandate--Invasion of Constitutional Right

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Scope of Review When Constitutional Right Invaded

§ 195.16 Writ of Mandate--Review of Action by Nongovernmental Agency Is Proper

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Nongovernmental Agency Decision Reviewable by Writ

[b] Association's Membership Decision Reviewable by Writ

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Association's Membership Decision Reviewable by Writ

§ 195.17 Writ of Mandate--Court May Receive Additional Evidence

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Receipt of Additional Evidence

[b] Events Transpiring After Agency's Decision

[c] Evidence on Issue First Raised in Mandate Petition

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Receipt of Additional Evidence

§ 195.18 Writ of Mandate--Agency Usurped Judicial Power

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Exercise of Judicial Power

[b] Test for Constitutionality

[c] Treble Damages

[d] Immediately Effective Restitution Orders

[e] Compensatory Damages for Emotional Distress

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Exercise of Judicial Power

§ 195.19 Writ of Mandate--Petitioner May Recover Attorney's Fees

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Recovery of Attorney's Fees

[b] Fees May Be Recovered Without Formal Hearing

[c] Arbitrary or Capricious Action or Conduct

[d] Fees to Association Complaining on Behalf of Members

§§ 195.20-195.29 [Reserved]

§ 195.30 Violation of Administrative Adjudication "Bill of Rights"--General Form

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Inquiry on Review Extends to Whether There Was a Fair Trial

[b] Minimum Standards Stated in Adjudication "Bill of Rights"

§ 195.31 Violation of Administrative Adjudication "Bill of Rights"--Petitioner Denied of Notice or Opportunity to Be Heard

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

§ 195.32 Violation of Administrative Adjudication "Bill of Rights"--Petitioner denied Copy of Governing Procedure

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

§ 195.33 Violation of Administrative Adjudication "Bill of Rights"--Petitioner Denied Open Hearing

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Petitioner Is Entitled to Open Hearing

§ 195.34 Violation of Administrative Adjudication "Bill of Rights"--Agency Failed to Separate Between Adjudicative and Prosecutorial Functions

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Agency Must Separate Adjudicative and Prosecutorial Functions

§ 195.35 Violation of Administrative Adjudication "Bill of Rights"--Petitioner Denied Opportunity to Disqualify Presiding Officer

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Presiding Officer Subject to Disqualification

§ 195.36 Violation of Administrative Adjudication "Bill of Rights"--Petitioner Denied Proper Written Decision

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Agency Must Provide Proper Written Decision

§ 195.37 Violation of Administrative Adjudication "Bill of Rights"--Agency Relied on Decision Not Designated and Indexed as Precedent

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Agency Relied on Nondesignated Decision

[b] Additional Authorities

§ 195.38 Violation of Administrative Adjudication "Bill of Rights"--Agency Conducted Improper Ex Parte Communications

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Agency Conducted Improper Ex Parte Communications

§ 195.39 Violation of Administrative Adjudication "Bill of Rights"--Petitioner Denied Language Assistance

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

§ 195.40 Violation of Administrative Adjudication "Bill of Rights"--Petitioner Bore Burden of Proof

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

§ 195.41 Violation of Administrative Adjudication "Bill of Rights"--Agency Followed Rules That Were Not Promulgated in Accordance With APA

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

§ 195.42 Demurrer Should Be Sustained--No Violation of Administrative Adjudication "Bill of Rights"--Agency Followed Rules That Were Not Required to Be Promulgated in Accordance With APA

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Agency Followed Rules That Were Not Required to Be Promulgated in Accordance With APA

§§ 195.43-195.49 [Reserved]

§ 195.50 Demurrer Should Be Sustained--Petition Fails to State Cause of Action, General Form

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Opposing Memoranda

§ 195.51 Demurrer Should Be Sustained--Failure to Allege Discretion Vested in Agency

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Failure to Allege Discretion Vested in Agency

§ 195.52 Demurrer Should Be Sustained--Failure to Allege Hearing Requirement

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Failure to Allege Hearing Requirement

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Failure to Allege Hearing Requirement

§ 195.53 Demurrer Should Be Sustained--Failure to Allege That Evidence Must Be Taken

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Failure to Allege That Evidence Must Be Taken

§ 195.54 Demurrer Should Be Sustained--Failure to Allege That Decision Resulted From Hearing

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Failure to Allege That Decision Resulted From Hearing

§ 195.55 Demurrer Should Be Sustained--Failure to Allege That Decision Is Invalid

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Failure to Allege That Decision Is Invalid

§ 195.56 Demurrer Should Be Sustained--Failure to Allege That Petitioner Is Beneficially Interested in Writ

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Failure to Allege That Petitioner Is Beneficially Interested in Writ

§ 195.57 Demurrer Should Be Sustained--Failure to Allege No Plain, Speedy, Adequate Remedy

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Failure to Allege No Plain, Speedy, Adequate Remedy

§ 195.58 Demurrer Should Be Sustained--Substantial Evidence Rather Than Independent Judgment Applies, General Form

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Application of Proper Standard of Review

[d] Administrative Decisions Held to Merit Substantial Evidence Review

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Independent Judgment Test Applies Only in Limited Circumstances

[b] Substantial Evidence Rule Applies When Decision Does Not Affect Fundamental Vested Right

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Substantial Evidence Rule Applies When Decision Does Not Affect Fundamental Vested Right

§ 195.59 Demurrer Should Be Sustained--Statute Provides for Review Under Substantial Evidence Test

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Statute Provides for Review Under Substantial Evidence Test

§ 195.60 Substantial Evidence Test Applies When Decision Impacts on Economic Interests Not Fundamental Vested Rights

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Decision Impacts on Economic Interests Not Fundamental Vested Rights

§ 195.61 Demurrer Should Be Sustained--Substantial Evidence Test Applies to Employer's Right to Establish Procedures

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Substantial Evidence Test Applies to Employer's Right to Establish Procedures

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Substantial Evidence Test Applies to Employer's Right to Establish Procedures

§ 195.62 Demurrer Should Be Sustained--Substantial Evidence Test Applies to License Proceedings

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Substantial Evidence Test Applies to Right to License

§ 195.63 Demurrer Should Be Sustained--Substantial Evidence Test Applies to Decision by Hospital Board

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Decision by Private Hospital Board

§ 195.64 Demurrer Should Be Sustained--Petition Barred by Statute of Limitations, General Form

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Determining Appropriate Statute of Limitation

[d] Opposing Authorities

[e] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Statute of Limitation as Bar

§ 195.65 Demurrer Should Be Sustained--Four-Year Statute of Limitation Applies

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Opposing Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Four-Year Limitation Period Applies If No Other Period Specifically Applies

§ 195.66 Demurrer Should Be Sustained--Thirty-Day Statute of Limitation Applies to Review of Specified Agency's Decision

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Thirty-Day Limitation Period for Review of Decision by Specified Agency

[b] Thirty-Day Limitation Period for Review of Decision by Delegate of Specified Agency

§ 195.67 Demurrer Should Be Sustained--Ninety-Day Statute of Limitation Applies to Review of Local Agency's Decision

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Opposing Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Ninety-Day Limitation Period for Review of Local Agency Decision

[b] Service by Mail Does Not Extend Ninety-Day Period

§ 195.68 Demurrer Should Be Sustained--Petitioner Failed to Exhaust Administrative Remedies, General Form

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Opposing Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Court Lacks Jurisdiction When Petitioner Fails to Exhaust Administrative Remedies

[b] Affected Public Exception Does Not Apply When Petitioner Participated

[c] Affected Public Exception Does Not Apply Without Factual Support

[d] Later Claim Barred by Exhaustion of Remedies Doctrine

[e] Failure to Request Reconsideration Regarding Matters Not Previously Considered by Agency

[f] Exhaustion Required Even If Constitutional Rights Are at Issue

[g] Exhaustion Required Even If Questions Concerning Agency's Jurisdiction Arise

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Court Without Jurisdiction When Petitioner Fails to Exhaust Administrative Remedies

§ 195.69 Demurrer Should Be Sustained--Futility Exception to the Exhaustion of Remedies Requirement Does Not Apply

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Agency Has Not Declared What Its Ruling Will Be

[b] Mere Fact That Similar Claims Were Denied Is Not Determinative

[c] Mere Potential for Unfairness Not Sufficient

§ 195.70 Demurrer Should Be Sustained--Petitioner Failed to Exhaust Judicial Remedies

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Petitioner Did Not Appeal Prior Administrative Ruling

§ 195.71 Demurrer Should Be Sustained--No Mandate Review of Alcoholic Beverage Control Appeals Board Decision, General Form

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Court Will Transfer to Proper Court

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Review of Appeals Board Decision

§ 195.72 Demurrer Should Be Sustained--No Mandate Review of Worker's Compensation Appeals Board Decision

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Review of Workers' Compensation Appeals Board Decision

[d] Court Will Transfer to Proper Court

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Review of Appeals Board Decision

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Review of Appeals Board Decision

§ 195.73 Demurrer Should Be Sustained--No Violation of Due Process When Prosecuting Agency Attorney Simultaneously Served As Adviser to Agency on Unrelated Matter

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Violation of Due Process Occurs When Prosecuting Agency Attorney Simultaneously Served as Adviser to Agency on Unrelated Matter

§§ 195.74-195.79 [Reserved]

§ 195.80 Demurrer Should Be Overruled--Invalidity Allegation Is Sufficient

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Decision is Invalid

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Decision is Invalid

§ 195.81 Demurrer Should Be Overruled--Beneficial Interest Allegation Is Sufficient

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Interest of Participant in Administrative Proceeding

[b] Beneficial Interest of License Applicant

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Interest of Participant in Administrative Proceeding

[b] Beneficial Interest of License Applicant

§ 195.82 Demurrer Should Be Overruled--Failure to Support Decision With Findings Is Abuse of Discretion

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Decision Not Supported by Findings

[b] Presumption of Sufficient Findings Inapplicable

[c] Findings Must Be Legally Relevant

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Decision Not Supported by Findings

[b] Presumption of Sufficient Findings Inapplicable

[c] Findings Must Be Legally Relevant

§ 195.83 Demurrer Should Be Overruled--Failure to Support Findings With Evidence Is Abuse of Discretion

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Findings Not Supported By Evidence

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Findings Not Supported by Evidence

§ 195.84 Demurrer Should Be Overruled--Failure to Proceed in Manner Required by Law Is Abuse of Discretion

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Failure to Proceed as Required by Law

[b] Failure to Follow Spirit of Law

[c] Failure to Recognize Implications of Following Explicit Requirements

[d] Harmonizing Conflicting Laws

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Failure to Proceed as Required by Law

§ 195.85 Demurrer Should Be Overruled--Exhaustion of Remedies Inapplicable to Petition, General Form

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Exceptions to Exhaustion Requirement

§ 195.86 Demurrer Should Be Overruled--Exhaustion of Remedies Inapplicable to Constitutional Challenge to Statute

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Exceptions for Constitutional Challenge to Statute on Its Face

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Exception for Constitutional Challenge to Statute on Its Face

§ 195.87 Demurrer Should Be Overruled--Exhaustion of Remedies Inapplicable to State and Local Law Conflict

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Exceptions for Conflicting Local and State Laws

§ 195.88 Demurrer Should Be Overruled--Exhaustion of Remedies Inapplicable When Alternative Remedies Are Available

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Exception for Alternative Remedies

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Exception for Alternative Remedies

§ 195.89 Demurrer Should Be Overruled--Exhaustion of Remedies Inapplicable to Predetermined Cases

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Exception for Predetermined Cases

§ 195.90 Demurrer Should Be Overruled--Exhaustion of Remedies Inapplicable to Assertion of Wholly Illegal Act

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Exception for Assertion of Wholly Illegal Action

§ 195.91 Demurrer Should Be Overruled--Exhaustion of Remedies Inapplicable to Threatened Irreparable Injury

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Exception for Threatened Irreparable Injury

§ 195.92 Demurrer Should Be Overruled--Exhaustion of Remedies Inapplicable to Unidentifiable Administrative Remedy

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Exception for Unidentifiable Administrative Remedy

§ 195.93 Demurrer Should Be Overruled--Exhaustion of Remedies Inapplicable to Protection of Public Interest

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Exception for Protecting Public Interest

§ 195.94 Demurrer Should Be Overruled--Exhaustion of Remedies Inapplicable Because Pursuit of Remedies Is Futile

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Exception When Pursuit of Administrative Remedies Is Futile

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Exception When Pursuit of Administrative Remedies Is Futile

§ 195.95 Demurrer Should Be Overruled--Exhaustion of Remedies Inapplicable to Constitutionality Inadequate Procedures

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Exception for Constitutionally Inadequate Procedures

§ 195.96 Demurrer Should Be Overruled--Exhaustion of Remedies Inapplicable Because of Newer Statutory Remedy for Common Law Right

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Exception When Newer Statutory Remedy Provides for Enforcement of Preexisting Common Law Right

§ 195.97 Demurrer Should Be Overruled--Exhaustion of Remedies Inapplicable Because Dispute Requires Statutory Construction

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Exception for Dispute Requiring Statutory Construction

§ 195.98 Demurrer Should Be Overruled--Exhaustion of Remedies Inapplicable Because Party Could Predict Decision

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Exception When Aggrieved Party Can Positively Predict Administrative Agency's Decision

§ 195.99 Demurrer Should Be Overruled--Exhaustion of Remedies Inapplicable Because Subject Beyond Agency's Jurisdiction

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Exception When Subject Matter Beyond Agency's Jurisdiction

§ 195.100 Demurrer Should Be Overruled--Exhaustion of Remedies Inapplicable Because Agency Waived Requirement

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Exception When Agency Has Waived Exhaustion Requirement

§ 195.101 Demurrer Should Be Overruled--Exhaustion of Remedies Inapplicable Because Copetitioner Satisfied Requirement

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Exception When Coplaintiff Has Exhausted Administrative Remedies

§ 195.102 Demurrer Should Be Overruled--Exhaustion of Remedies Inapplicable Because Agency Has Inadequate Procedure for Redress

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Exhaustion of Remedies Inapplicable Because Agency Has Inadequate Procedure for Redress

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Exhaustion of Remedies Inapplicable Because Agency Has Inadequate Procedure for Redress

§ 195.103 Demurrer Should Be Overruled--Exhaustion of Remedies Inapplicable Because Agency is Estopped from Asserting It

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Exhaustion of Remedies Inapplicable Because Agency Is Estopped from Asserting It

§ 195.104 Demurrer Should Be Overruled--Statute of Limitations Does Not Bar Petition, General Form

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Limitation Under Administrative Procedure Act

[d] Last Day for Reconsideration Order

[e] Extension of Time

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Limitation of Mandate Proceeding

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Limitation of Mandate Proceeding

§ 195.105 Demurrer Should Be Overruled--Ninety-Day Period for Review of Local Agency Decision Begins on Notice of Time to Seek Judicial Review

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Split of Authority Regarding Finality

[c] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Notice Triggers Finality and Commencement of 90-Day Period

[b] Although Decision Final, 90-Day Period Is Tolled Until Notice Given

§ 195.106 Demurrer Should Be Overruled--Service on Party's Attorney Does Not Trigger Ninety-Day Period for Review of Local Agency Decision

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Service of Notice on Party's Lawyer Cannot Substitute for Service on Party

§§ 195.107-195.119 [Reserved]

§ 195.120 Return by Answer--General Form

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

§ 195.121 Return by Answer--Petition is Barred by Laches

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Laches as Bar to Administrative Mandamus

[b] Entire Time Involved in Pursuing Remedy as Considered

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Laches as Bar to Administrative Mandamus

§§ 195.122-195.129 [Reserved]

§ 195.130 Motion for Summary Judgment Should Be Denied--Questions Not Moot From Compliance With Penalty Provisions of Decision

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Compliance With Penalty

§§ 195.131-195.139 [Reserved]

§ 195.140 Order Directing Filing of Record Is Proper--All or Part of Record May Be Filed

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Judicial Order to File Record

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Judicial Order to File Record

§ 195.141 Motion for Discovery and Augmentation of Record

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Discovery Must Lead to Admissible Evidence

[b] Requirements of Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5(e)

§§ 195.142-195.149 [Reserved]

§ 195.150 Change of Venue Is Justified--Designated Court Is Not Proper

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Venue in Mandate Proceeding

[b] Venue of Action Against Public Officer

[c] County in Which Cause Arose

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] County in Which Cause Arose

§§ 195.151-195.159 [Reserved]

§ 195.160 Stay of Operation of Administrative Decision Is Proper--Stay Is Not Against Public Interest

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Stay of Operation of Administrative Decision

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 195 PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
PART I. INTRODUCTION

19-195 California Points & Authorities § 195.01

§ 195.01 Scope of Chapter

This chapter contains memoranda relating to review of a final administrative adjudicative order or decision pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5.

Part II, Subpart A, relating to a petition for writ of administrative mandate, includes forms of memoranda generally supporting issuance of the writ of mandate [§ 195.10 et seq.], and supporting issuance of the writ based on violation of the administrative adjudication "Bill of Rights" [§ 195.30 et seq.].

Part II, Subpart B, relating to opposition to petition, includes the following forms:

- Supporting [§ 195.50 et seq.] and opposing demurrer [§ 195.80 et seq.] to petition for writ of administrative mandate.
- Supporting return by answer [§ 195.120 et seq.].
- Opposing motion for summary judgment on ground that questions are not moot from compliance with penalty provisions of an administrative decision [§ 195.130].

Part II, Subpart C, relating to miscellaneous procedures, includes the following forms:

- Supporting application for order directing filing of record [§§ 195.140, 195.141].
- Supporting motion for change of venue [§ 195.150].
- Supporting motion for stay of operation of administrative decision [§ 195.160].

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:

Administrative LawAgency AdjudicationDecisionsGeneral OverviewAdministrative LawAgency AdjudicationReview of Initial DecisionsAdministrative LawJudicial ReviewRemediesMandamusAdministrative LawJudicial ReviewRemediesStays of Proceedings & Supersedeas

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 195 PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
PART I. INTRODUCTION

19-195 California Points & Authorities § 195.02

§ 195.02 Governing Law

A mandate proceeding for review of a final administrative adjudicatory order or decision is governed by two sets of statutes and one special statute. The special statute, Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5, provides certain procedural variations that became necessary when the so-called "traditional" mandate proceeding was adapted for review of administrative decisions. It is the principal governing statute.

Next in importance are Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1084-1097, 1107, and 1108, which govern mandate proceedings in general.

Finally, mandate proceedings, like all civil proceedings, are governed by Code Civ. Proc. § 307 et seq., which contain general civil procedure provisions. In the event of a conflict between the latter group of statutes and the former group, however, the former statutes prevail [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1109]. See also Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.490 et seq. for procedural and format requirements for writ petitions filed in an appellate court.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Administrative LawJudicial ReviewRemediesMandamusCivil ProcedureRemediesWritsCommon Law WritsMandamus

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 195 PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
PART I. INTRODUCTION

19-195 California Points & Authorities § 195.03

§ 195.03 How to Use the Forms in This Chapter

[1] Page Limits on Memoranda

One of the more significant drafting requirements to keep in mind are page limits: supporting memoranda must not exceed 15 pages in (or 20 pages in a summary adjudication proceeding). Exhibits, declarations, attachments, table of contents, a table of authorities, or the proof of service are not included in the page limitation. A reply or closing memorandum may not exceed 10 pages [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1113(d)]. Any party desiring to file a longer memorandum must obtain leave of court [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1113(e)]. These and other drafting requirements are discussed in further detail in Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs, § 1.05.

[2] Using the Forms to Build a Draft Memorandum

The forms included in this chapter are designed to be combined with other points and authorities to form a complete memorandum. For a detailed discussion on how to select and use the forms in the publication to build a draft memorandum and complete the draft, with detailed discussion of all drafting requirements and strategic or stylistic considerations, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs, §§ 1.03 -1.06.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePleading & PracticeMotion PracticeOpposing MemorandaCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeMotion PracticeSupporting MemorandaCivil ProcedureSummary JudgmentOppositionMemoranda in OppositionCivil ProcedureSummary JudgmentSupporting MaterialsMemoranda of LawCivil ProcedureAppealsBriefs

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 195 PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
PART I. INTRODUCTION

19-195 California Points & Authorities § 195.04

§ 195.04 Related Discussion and Forms

[1] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For detailed discussion and forms relating generally to review by California courts of agency adjudications, see the following chapters in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender):

- Ch. 474, Availability of Judicial Review of Agency Decisions.
- Ch. 474A, Timing of Judicial Review of Agency Decisions.
- Ch. 474B, Standards in Reviewing Agency Decisions.
- Ch. 474C, Procedures in Reviewing Agency Decisions.

For other related discussion and forms relating to judicial review generally, see:

- Ch. 40, Appeal (discussion and forms relating to civil appeals).
- Ch. 358, Mandate and Prohibition (discussion and forms relating to immediate judicial review of orders by extraordinary writ of mandate or prohibition).
- Ch. 492, Review (Certiorari), Writ of (discussion and forms relating to immediate judicial review of civil proceedings by extraordinary writ of review).

For detailed discussion and forms relating generally to California public administrative law generally, and public agency adjudications specifically, see respectively the following chapters in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender):

- Ch. 470, Overview of Public Administrative Law et seq.

- Ch. 473, Public Agency Adjudication et seq.

[2] Related Points and Authorities Chapters

Memoranda that may be combined with the forms in this chapter, relating to mandate proceedings generally, may be found in Ch. 358, Mandate and Prohibition .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Administrative LawAgency AdjudicationGeneral OverviewAdministrative LawJudicial ReviewRemediesMandamusAdministrative LawJudicial ReviewRemediesProhibitionAdministrative LawJudicial ReviewReviewabilityGeneral OverviewAdministrative LawJudicial ReviewStandards of ReviewGeneral Overview

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 195 PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
PART I. INTRODUCTION

19-195 California Points & Authorities §§ 195.05-195.09

[Reserved]

§§ 195.05[Reserved]

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 195 PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
PART II. FORMS
A. Petition for Writ of Mandate
1. Grounds Supporting Petition Generally

19-195 California Points & Authorities § 195.10

§ 195.10 Writ of Mandate--General Form

[1] FORM Writ of Mandate--General Form
SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA,
COUNTY OF _____

	)
	)	NO. _____
_____ [name],	)	MEMORANDUM IN SUPPORT OF PETITION
Petitioner,	)	FOR WRIT OF MANDATE
vs.	)	Date: _____
_____ [name],	)	Time: _____
Respondent.	)	Location: _____
	)	[Judge: _____]
	)	Date Action Filed: _____
	)	[Trial Date: _____]

_____

THE COURT SHOULD GRANT THE PETITION FOR A WRIT OF MANDATE BECAUSE THE RESPONDENT [EXCEEDED ITS JURISDICTION and/or ABUSED ITS DISCRETION and/or DID NOT AFFORD THE PETITIONER A FAIR TRIAL] IN REACHING ITS FINAL ADJUDICATORY [ORDER or DECISION].

A. Propriety of Mandate for Review. A final administrative adjudicatory decision is reviewable in a judicial proceeding for, and is correctable by, a writ of mandate (Drummey v. State Bd. of Funeral Directors (1939) 13 Cal. 2d 75, 82-85, 87 P.2d 848).

B. Decisions Reviewable. A final administrative order or decision is reviewable in a mandate proceeding if it was the result of an administrative proceeding in which by law a hearing was required for the purpose of taking evidence on the basis of which the agency had discretion to determine relevant facts (Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5(a)).

[EITHER]

C. Writ of Mandate Is Remedy for Administrative Action in Excess of Entity's Jurisdiction. Adjudicatory activity by an administrative entity which exceeds its jurisdiction is grounds for issuance of a writ of mandate (Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5(b); Hardin Oldsmobile v. New Motor Vehicle Board (1997) 52 Cal. App. 4th 585, 598, 60 Cal. Rptr. 2d 583 .

[AND/OR]

D. Writ of Mandate Is Remedy for Abuse of Discretion. Abuse of discretion by an administrative adjudicatory entity is grounds for issuance of a writ of mandate (Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5(b)). Abuse of discretion is established if the entity did not proceed in the manner provided by law (Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5(b); Environmental Protection and Information Center v. California Department of Forestry and Fire Protection (2008) 44 Cal. 4th 459, 478-479, 80 Cal. Rptr. 3d 28, 187 P.3d 888 ; Kolender v. San Diego County Civil Service Commission (2007) 149 Cal. App. 4th 464, 470-471, 57 Cal. Rptr. 3d 84); or if the entity's order or decision is not supported by the findings, or if the findings are not supported by the evidence (Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5(b)).

[AND/OR]

E. Writ of Mandate Is Remedy for Failure to Conduct Fair Trial. Failure of an administrative adjudicatory entity to conduct a fair trial is grounds for issuance of a writ of mandate (Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5(b)). An administrative determination is not the product of a fair trial if, for example, an adjudicator is biased or has a pecuniary interest in the outcome of the proceedings (Nasha L.L.C. v. City of Los Angeles (2004) 125 Cal. App. 4th 470, 482-485, 22 Cal. Rptr. 3d 772 ; Clark v. City of Hermosa Beach (1996) 48 Cal. App. 4th 1152, 1170, 56 Cal. Rptr. 2d 223).

[As appropriate, add specific points and authorities supporting petition for administrative mandate. See § 195.11 et seq.]
Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for Petitioner _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a petition for writ of mandate for review of a final administrative adjudicatory order or decision.

With appropriate modifications this memorandum may be used to oppose a demurrer to the petition or a motion for judgment on the pleadings in favor of the respondent.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. Any statement of fact should be supported by adequate reference to evidence admitted or otherwise cognizable by the court.

For example, if it is contended that the administrative agency abused its discretion because its findings are not supported by the evidence, the petition must allege the substance of the evidence, including facts subject to judicial notice. If a record of the evidence is available, the petition must be accompanied by a transcript of the evidence attached as an exhibit and incorporated by reference. Thus, in his or her argument, counsel should refer either to the particular allegation of the petition that sets forth the evidence at issue, or to the specific page and line number of the verbatim record of the hearing attached as an exhibit to the petition.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For further discussion concerning pleading requirements of a petition for writ of mandate to review an administrative decision, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 474C, Procedures in Reviewing Agency Decisions (Matthew Bender); see also the following related chapters:

- Ch. 474, Availability of Judicial Review of Agency Decisions.
- Ch. 474A, Timing of Judicial Review of Agency Decisions.
- Ch. 474B, Standards in Reviewing Agency Decisions.

For additional references to related pleading and practice chapters, see § 195.04[1].

[d] Opposing Memoranda

For memoranda that may be used to oppose the contentions set forth in this form, see § 195.50 et seq., generally supporting demurrer to petition, including:

- §§ 195.50-195.57, based on failure to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action;
- §§ 195.64-195.67, based on untimeliness under applicable statutes of limitation; and
- §§ 195.68, based on failure to exhaust administrative remedies.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Propriety of Mandate for Review

Drummey v. State Bd. of Funeral Directors (1939) 13 Cal. 2d 75, 87 P.2d 848 , was an appeal from the judgment of the superior court in a proceeding for review of an administrative decision. The petitioner sought review alternatively by means of writs of review (certiorari), prohibition, and mandate. A demurrer to the petition was sustained as to the alleged cause of action for writs of review and prohibition (on the basis of then recent Supreme Court decisions holding such writs to be unavailable for review of an administrative decision) but was overruled as to the alleged cause of action for writ of mandate. The eventual judgment was in favor of the petitioner and ordered issuance of a peremptory writ of mandate. The Supreme Court, hearing the appeal, affirmed the superior court judgment and established the rule stated in Paragraph A. After pointing out that it had recently (in 1936 and 1937) held the writs of review (i.e., certiorari) and prohibition unavailable in such circumstances, and thatthere was no statutory procedure for review, the Supreme Court stated that mandate was the only possible remedy available to those aggrieved by administrative adjudicatory decisions. Historically, the writ of mandate was invented to provide a remedy when no other remedy existed. From an early date it has been held that, when no other remedy is available, mandamus is the proper remedy for one improperly deprived of a professional license by an administrative board to secure the restoration of such license. Statement of the rule in regard to deprivation of a license merely describes the case that was before the Court and does not limit the application of the general rule. After stating the rule the Court set out principles for guiding the superior court's inquiry on review, which principles were later (in 1945) incorporated in Section 1094.5 of the Code of Civil Procedure (13 Cal. 2d 75, 82-85) .

[b] Decisions Reviewable

Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5(a) provides that when the writ is issued for the purpose of inquiring into the validity of any final administrative order or decision made as the result of a proceeding in which by law a hearing is required to be given, evidence is required to be taken, and discretion in the determination of facts is vested in the inferior tribunal, corporation, board, or officer, the case shall be heard by the court sitting without a jury.

[c] Entity Exceeded Jurisdiction as Grounds for Writ

Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5(b) provides that a writ of mandate is an appropriate remedy when an administrative entity exceeds its jurisdiction in an adjudicatory matter.

In Hardin Oldsmobile v. New Motor Vehicle Board (1997) 52 Cal. App. 4th 585, 60 Cal. Rptr. 2d 583 , a car dealership brought an action against a manufacturer, alleging that defendant accepted bribes in exchange for favors concerning vehicle allocations and new dealership awards. Plaintiff alleged both federal and state causes of action and filed the case in federal district court. The court stayed the proceedings to allow plaintiff to obtain action by the New Motor Vehicle Board. To comply with the district court's order, plaintiff filed a petition for redress with the Board, but also requested the Board to determine it did not have jurisdiction over the claims so that the plaintiff could resume prosecution of the matter as a civil lawsuit. However, the Board accepted jurisdiction over the state law claims. Plaintiff petitioned for a writ of mandate or prohibition, which was denied by the superior court.

The Court of Appeal reversed, finding that the Board should have been prohibited from exercising jurisdiction over the dispute (52 Cal. App. 4th 585, 589). The Board's jurisdiction is specific and limited, not general. It is authorized to mediate "honest" disputes between any manufacturer and any member of the public, but that does not extend to serious accusations of misconduct as were raised by the plaintiff in this case (52 Cal. App. 4th 585, 591). Nor did the board have the authority to award monetary damages, as were being claimed by the plaintiff (52 Cal. App. 4th 585, 596-597). Under these circumstances, the Board's assertion of jurisdiction violated the judicial powers clause of the State Constitution (52 Cal. App. 4th 585, 598).

[d] Abuse of Discretion as Grounds for Writ

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5(b) an administrative adjudicatory entity abuses its discretion when it fails to proceed in accordance with the applicable law, or when its order or decision is not supported by the findings, or when the findings are not supported by the evidence.

In Environmental Protection and Information Center v. California Department of Forestry and Fire Protection (2008) 44 Cal. 4th 459, 478-479, 80 Cal. Rptr. 3d 28, 187 P.3d 888 , the Pacific Lumber Company entered into an agreement with state and federal governments regarding litigation arising from logging on Pacific Lumber's property in Humboldt County. The agreement provided that the state and federal governments would purchase a portion of Pacific Lumber's property for conservation purposes, and that Pacific Lumber could log the rest of its property, provided that it obtained certain regulatory approvals from state and federal agencies. Pacific Lumber obtained the approvals. Various environmental and labor groups challenged the validity of the regulatory approvals through administrative mandate petitions.

The California Supreme Court held that the standard for review of agency decisions in connection with regulatory approvals is generally abuse of discretion. It held that abuse of discretion is established if the respondent agency has not proceeded in the manner required by law, the order or decision is not supported by the findings, or the findings are not supported by the evidence (44 Cal. 4th 459, 478) . The Court specifically held that it was reviewing for errors of law, and not whether substantial evidence supported the administrative agency's findings. It held that, for purposes of its review, it would accept that the administrative findings were supported by the evidence and would confine its review to determining whether the state agencies failed to proceed in a manner required by law (44 Cal. 4th 459, 479) .

In Kolender v. San Diego County Civil Service Commission (2007) 149 Cal. App. 4th 464, 470-471, 57 Cal. Rptr. 3d 84 , the plaintiff, San Diego County Sheriff Kolender, demoted his employee, defendant Margaret Gant, from a supervisor position in the detention processing unit to detention processing technician. Gant appealed to the San Diego County Civil Service Commission, which reduced the penalty to a temporary demotion and reinstated her as a supervisor. The Sheriff filed a petition for writ of administrative mandate, requesting the trial court to vacate the Commission's order, asserting the charges of incompetence were supported by substantial evidence and the Sheriff was required to take this action to protect the public service. The trial court granted the petition because it found the Commission had abused its discretion in reducing Gant's penalty in light of the sentencing errors she had made and the prior discipline she had received for ignoring Sheriff's department directives regarding staffing.

The court of appeal upheld the trial court's ruling. It looked at whether the Commission abused its discretion when it reduced the discipline imposed upon Gant, to reinstate her as a supervisor after a temporary suspension (149 Cal. App. 4th 464, 470-471) . The court held that some deference should be accorded to the Commission with respect to the degree of punishment imposed (149 Cal. App. 4th 464, 470-471) . In reviewing the record to evaluate this exercise of discretion, the court's focus should be on whether the Commission appropriately performed its job in reviewing the manner of discipline imposed on the employee in light of the employer's administration of its own standards and rules. The court held that the Commission should independently review the facts and law, and the Sheriff's findings and final disciplinary order are not due substantial deference (149 Cal. App. 4th 464, 470-471) . The court held that the agency's discretion is not unfettered, and reversal is warranted when the agency abuses its discretion, or exceeds the bounds of reason. The specific criteria to be considered in evaluating a public employee discipline dispute include whether the administrative decision manifests an indifference to public safety and welfare. In considering whether such abuse occurred in the context of public employee discipline, the court held that the overriding consideration is the extent to which the employee's conduct resulted in, or if repeated is likely to result in, harm to the public service. Other relevant factors include the circumstances surrounding the misconduct and the likelihood of its recurrence (149 Cal. App. 4th 464, 470-471) .

[e] Failure to Conduct Fair Trial as Grounds for Writ

Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5(b) provides that a writ of mandate is an appropriate remedy when an administrative entity fails to conduct a fair trial in an adjudicatory matter.

In Nasha L.L.C. v. City of Los Angeles (2004) 125 Cal. App. 4th 470, 482-485, 22 Cal. Rptr. 3d 772 , Nasha owned five lots within an area subject to the Mulholland Scenic Parkway Specific Plan (Mulholland Plan). The Mulholland Plan was designed to preserve the area's scenic and biological features. Nasha sought to develop the property with five new three-story single-family homes. Because the site was located within the boundaries of the Mulholland Plan, Nasha was required to file an application to determine the proposed development's compliance with the Mulholland Plan.

The City Planning Department issued a proposed mitigated negative declaration (MND) for the project. The Santa Monica Mountains Conservancy (Conservancy) submitted written comments arguing that the proposed MND was deficient for inadequately addressing potential impacts to the nearby wildlife movement corridor. Various neighbors, including Mark Hennessy (Hennessy), also submitted comments claiming the MND was deficient and complained the project would substantially interfere with deer and wildlife habitat, and would degrade wildlife migration.

In response, the Planning Department amended the proposed MND. The Mulholland Design Review Board (DRB) then recommended disapproval of the project on various grounds. Nonetheless, the City Planning Director conditionally approved Nasha's application and certified the MND.

The Conservancy and Hennessy then appealed the Director's decision to the Planning Commission. Shortly before the Planning Commission hearing on the appeal, Commissioner Lucente authored an unsigned article hostile to the project in a local residents association newsletter. In addition to serving on the Planning Commission, Lucente also was president of the local residents association. During the pendency of the appeal to the Planning Commission, Lucente introduced Hennessy at the association's monthly meeting. At that meeting, Hennessy proceeded to speak against the project and in support of his appeal.

At the hearing before the Planning Commission, Lucente did not disclose his authorship of the article or his contact with Hennessy.

When the matter came on for hearing before the Planning Commission, Lucente made some opening remarks. He did not disclose that he authored the newsletter article. Nor did he state that the article advocated a position against the project and sought to rally residents to support the appeal to the Planning Commission.

At the hearing, the Planning Commission heard from various speakers, including representatives of Nasha, the Conservancy, and various area residents, including Hennessy. At the conclusion of the hearing, Lucente made a motion to grant the appeal. The motion was granted

A week after the hearing, Nasha filed a request for reconsideration based on Lucente's bias. The Planning Commission did not reconsider its decision.

Nasha then filed a petition for writ of mandate to overturn the Planning Commission's decision. Nasha named as defendants the City, the Planning Commission, and Lucente in his capacity as a planning commissioner. Nasha pled that the Planning Commission's reversal of the Director's approval of the project was arbitrary, capricious, an abuse of discretion, a denial of Nasha's fundamental right to a fair and impartial decision, and unsupported by substantial evidence. The trial court rejected Nasha's claim of bias arising out of Lucente's prehearing involvement attacking the project and denied Nasha's petition for writ of mandate. Nasha appealed.

The court of appeal held that the proceeding before the Planning Commission was quasi-judicial in nature, rather than quasi-legislative, because the matter involved the determination and application of facts of an individual case, rather than the adoption of general public policy rules. Accordingly, the court held, procedural due process principles applied (125 Cal. App. 4th 470, 482). Procedural due process requires that the hearing be conducted before a reasonably impartial, noninvolved reviewer (125 Cal. App. 4th 470, 482). While the standard of impartiality required at an administrative hearing is less exacting than that required in judicial proceedings, the court held that Nasha must establish an unacceptable probability of actual bias on the part of those who have actual decision-making power over their claims (125 Cal. App. 4th 470, 483). The court held that Lucente's newsletter article gave rise to an unacceptable probability of actual bias and was sufficient to preclude Lucente from serving as a reasonably impartial, noninvolved reviewer (125 Cal. App. 4th 470, 483) .

In Clark v. City of Hermosa Beach (1996) 48 Cal. App. 4th 1152, 56 Cal. Rptr. 2d 223 the Court of Appeal reversed the defendant City's decision denying a building permit on grounds that the plaintiff had not received a fair trial (48

Cal. App. 4th 1152, 1177). The City Council as a whole had an active interest in the subject matter of the plaintiff's application and one of the voting members of the Council was clearly biased against the plaintiff's application (48 Cal. App. 4th 1152, 1172-1173) . The plaintiff's application for a building permit had been approved by the City's planning commission but was denied by the City Council on an appeal from the commission's determination. One member of the Council was clearly biased against the plaintiff because he leased an apartment one block away from the plaintiff's proposed construction and would lose an ocean view if the proposed building were completed. Before being elected to the Council, this Councilmember had opposed an earlier building permit application by the plaintiff.

In addition, the Council had repeatedly considered adoption of a proposed ordinance which would have restricted the height of new construction to 30 feet. Plaintiff's building was planned under the existing 35-foot limit. The proponents of the proposed zoning law change had been unable to obtain the necessary super-majority to pass such an ordinance. However, as a simple majority of the Council, they had blocked all new construction in excess of 30 feet. Under these circumstances, the Court of Appeal found that the Council had an interest in the outcome of the proceedings and had not conducted a fair trial of the plaintiff's building permit application, and reversed for a rehearing.

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Decisions Reviewable

In Jabola v. Pasadena Redevelopment Agency (1981) 125 Cal. App. 3d 931, 178 Cal. Rptr. 452 , petitioner appealed from the trial court's denial of a petition for administrative mandate under Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5 to review her discharge by an administrative agency. On appeal, the administrative agency contended that an employee's discharge was at the will of the agency, and that the decision was therefore not subject to review pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5. The court of appeal disagreed, stating that administrative mandamus is applicable whenever an agency exercises an adjudicatory function in considering facts presented in an administrative hearing and that discharge of an employee was such a situation (125 Cal. App. 3d 931, 934) . Counsel should note that Jabola v. Pasadena Redevelopment Agency (1981) 125 Cal. App. 3d 931, 178 Cal. Rptr. 452 , was disapproved on another ground in Cranston v. City of Richmond (1985) 40 Cal. 3d 755, 768 n.10, 221 Cal. Rptr. 779, 710 P.2d 845 .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 195 PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
PART II. FORMS
A. Petition for Writ of Mandate
1. Grounds Supporting Petition Generally

19-195 California Points & Authorities § 195.11

§ 195.11 Writ of Mandate--Independent Judgment Test Applies

[1] FORM Writ of Mandate--Independent Judgment Test Applies

[This form should be combined with a memorandum generally supporting a petition for administrative mandate. See § 195.10.]

THE COURT SHOULD EXERCISE ITS INDEPENDENT JUDGMENT ON THE EVIDENCE AND DETERMINE WHETHER THE FINDINGS OF THE FINAL ADMINISTRATIVE ADJUDICATORY _____ [ORDER or DECISION] ARE SUPPORTED BY THE WEIGHT OF THE EVIDENCE, BECAUSE IT IS ALLEGED THAT THE EVIDENCE DOES NOT SUPPORT THE FINDINGS, AND BOTH (A) THE _____ [ORDER or DECISION] SUBSTANTIALLY AFFECTS A VESTED FUNDAMENTAL RIGHT OF PETITIONER, AND (B) RESPONDENT IS NOT DIRECTLY AUTHORIZED BY THE CONSTITUTION TO EXERCISE JUDICIAL FUNCTIONS.

A. Reviewing Weight of Evidence. When it is claimed that the findings are not supported by the evidence, in cases in which the court is authorized by law to exercise its independent judgment on the evidence, abuse of discretion is established if the court determines that the findings are not supported by the weight of the evidence (Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5(c)).

B. Authority to Exercise Independent Judgment. A court is authorized to exercise its independent judgment on the evidence when the administrative order or decision attacked substantially affects a vested fundamental right of the petitioner and the respondent agency is not directly authorized by the Constitution to exercise judicial functions (Strumsky v. San Diego County Employees Retirement Ass'n (1974) 11 Cal. 3d 28, 32, 35, 112 Cal. Rptr. 805, 520 P.2d 29 ; Rojo v. Kliger (1990) 52 Cal. 3d 65, 90-91, 276 Cal. Rptr. 130, 801 P.2d 373 ; Griffiths v. Superior Court (2002) 96 Cal. App. 4th 757, 767-768, 117 Cal. Rptr. 2d 445).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a petition for writ of mandate for review of a final administrative adjudicatory order or decision, when the petition alleges an abuse of discretion consisting of a failure of the evidence to support the findings on which the administrative order or decision is based. For related points and authorities for use in contending that (a) the order or decision substantially affects a vested fundamental right of the petitioner, and (b) the respondent is not directly authorized by the Constitution to exercise, see §§ 195.12 and 195.13, respectively.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. See § 195.10[2][b] for further discussion.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion and forms relating to judicial review of administrative decisions generally, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 474, Availability of Judicial Review ; Ch. 474A, Timing of Judicial Review of Agency Decisions ; Ch. 474B, Standards in Reviewing Agency Decisions ; Ch. 474C, Procedures in Reviewing Agency Decisions (Matthew Bender). For discussion and forms of petitions for writ of mandate to review administrative decisions affecting physicians, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 414, Physicians and Other Medical Personnel (Matthew Bender).

[d] Opposing Memoranda

For memoranda that may used to oppose the contentions set forth in this form, see §§ 195.58 -195.63, supporting demurrer to petition, asserting that substantial evidence test is the appropriate standard to apply.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Reviewing Weight of Evidence

Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5(c) provides that, when it is claimed that the findings are not supported by the weight of the evidence, in cases in which the court is authorized by law to exercise its independent judgment on the evidence, abuse of discretion is established if the court determines that the findings are not supported by the weight of the evidence.

[b] Authority to Exercise Independent Judgment

Strumsky v. San Diego County Employees Retirement Ass'n (1974) 11 Cal. 3d 28, 112 Cal. Rptr. 805, 520 P.2d 29 , involved an appeal from a judgment denying the petitioner a writ of mandate sought to set aside the decision of the respondent board which denied her certain death benefits. The Supreme Court reversed and remanded to the trial court on the basis that the trial court had erroneously applied the substantial judgment test in reviewing the decision of the board, instead of the independent judgment test. The Court noted that formerly the independent judgment test had been held inapplicable in the case of agencies of constitutional origin which were granted judicial power by the Constitution and local agencies. While this rule is still valid as to the constitutional agencies, there is no longer any valid reason to apply the substantial evidence rule to decisions of local agencies, and the independent judgment test applies. The Court confirmed the holding in Bixby v. Pierno (1971) 4 Cal. 3d 130, 144-145, 93 Cal. Rptr. 234, 481 P.2d 242 , that when an administrative decision affects a right which has been legitimately acquired or is otherwise vested, and when that right is of a fundamental nature from the standpoint of its economic aspect or its effect in human terms and the importance to the individual, then a full and independent judicial review of the decision is indicated, with the sole exception of agencies of constitutional origin with limited judicial power (11 Cal. 3d 28, 32, 35) .

In The Habitat Trust for Wildlife, Inc. v. City of Rancho Cucamonga (2009) 175 Cal. App. 4th 1306, 1321-1322, 96 Cal. Rptr. 3d 813 , a developer sought to develop property into a residential subdivision. The environmental impact report (EIR) required the developer to transfer a certain number of acres for habitat conservation to the County of San Bernardino or other qualified conservation entity approved by the City. The City agreed that it would not unreasonably withhold any necessary consent or approvals. The plaintiff opposed the EIR and challenged the development project. The developer and the plaintiff entered into an agreement under which the developer agreed to convey real property to the plaintiff for conservation purposes and the plaintiff agreed to withdraw its objections to the development project. However, the City refused to approve the plaintiff as a qualified conservation entity. The plaintiff filed a petition for writ of mandate under Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5, challenging the City's determination that it was not qualified to receive and manage land to mitigate the environmental impacts of projects within the City. The plaintiff argued that the City's decision prevented the plaintiff from conducting and growing its business and damaged its reputation, thereby depriving it of a fundamental, vested right. The plaintiff argued that the City unreasonably withheld its consent to approval of the plaintiff, that the City exceeded its authority in denying qualified conservation entity status to the plaintiff, and that the City's hearing was arbitrary, unfair and capricious because its criteria were vague and because the plaintiff was not a part of the proceedings. The trial court denied the plaintiff's petition.

On appeal, the plaintiff argued that because the City agreed that any necessary consent or approvals would not be unreasonably withheld, the standard of review applicable to its writ petition should be a reasonableness standard. It also argued that because the City denied the plaintiff's qualified conservation entity status for the project knowing that a contract between the developer and the plaintiff existed, the denial created a stigma against the plaintiff and implicated a fundamental right, requiring an independent review standard. The court held that in the context of judicial review of administrative decisions, a fundamental right is one that is of such importance to the individual in the life situation that its vital nature demands a full and independent judicial review when abridged (175 Cal. App. 4th 1306, 1321) . The court held that the City considered whether the plaintiff had sufficiently demonstrated that it met its criteria to be a qualified conservation entity for the developer's project. The plaintiff's contract with the developer did not create a fundamental, vested right to be found a qualified conservation entity by the City. The plaintiff also argued that it had a fundamental vested right to be a qualified conservation entity for this project because the City had already deemed it a qualified conservation entity for prior projects. The court rejected this argument, holding that the City's decision did not affect the plaintiff's rights to own or manage property that it already had or for any future projects if it demonstrated compliance with the City's criteria (175 Cal. App. 4th 1306, 1321-1322) . The court also rejected the plaintiff's argument that the City's denial of qualified conservation entity status stigmatized it and therefore entitled it to independent review. The court held the City's decision affected only the plaintiff's status for this development project; the City did not suggest that the plaintiff had engaged in any wrongdoing or that it could not qualify for future projects (175 Cal. App. 4th 1306, 1322) .

In State Water Resources Control Bd. Cases (2006) 136 Cal. App. 4th 674, 39 Cal. Rptr. 3d 189 , various water districts challenged State Water Resources Control Board decisions regarding coordinated water rights. The trial court upheld some of the challenges. The Board argued that its interpretations of various Water Code provisions were entitled to deference and should not be overturned, unless clearly erroneous.

The court of appeal disagreed. It first held that Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5 applies to a writ proceeding seeking to challenge the Board's water rights decision. The inquiry in such a case extends to whether the Board has proceeded without, or in excess of jurisdiction; whether there was a fair trial; and whether there was any prejudicial abuse of discretion. The court held that the trial court is authorized to exercise its independent judgment on the evidence when the right or interest affected by the administrative decision is a vested one (136 Cal. App. 4th 674, 721) . If the right affected is vested, the decision is reviewed by means of a limited trial de novo in which the trial court not only examines the record for errors of law but also exercises its independent judgment upon the weight of the evidence produced before the administrative agency together with any further evidence properly admitted by the court (136 Cal. App. 4th 674, 721) . If, on the other hand, the right is not vested the trial court's scope of review extends only to matters of law appearing on the record of the administrative proceeding; accordingly its review of the evidence produced below is limited to a determination of whether it is legally sufficient to sustain the decision (136 Cal. App. 4th 674, 721) . The court held that courts must independently judge the text of a statute, taking into account and respecting an agency's interpretation of its meaning, whether embodied in a formal rule or less formal representation. If a statute's meaning and legal effect is at issue, an agency's interpretation is one among several tools available to the court. Depending on the context, it may be helpful, enlightening, even convincing. It may sometimes be of little worth. Considered alone and apart from the context and circumstances that produce them, agency interpretations are not binding or necessarily even authoritative (136 Cal. App. 4th 674, 722) . Thus, the court held that it would exercise its independent judgment, giving deference to the Board's interpretation only if the Board shows that such deference is warranted by the circumstances (136 Cal. App. 4th 674, 722) .

Griffiths v. Superior Court (2002) 96 Cal. App. 4th 757, 767-768, 117 Cal. Rptr. 2d 445 involved a physician whose license was revoked by the Medical Board of California because he was convicted of several misdemeanors for drunk driving. The physician filed a petition for writ of administrative mandamus, arguing that the Medical Board violated due process of law by failing to find a substantial relationship between his convictions and his duties, functions, and qualifications as a physician. The trial court upheld the Medical Board's decision. The court of appeal relied on Bixby v. Pierno (1971) 4 Cal. 3d 130, 143-146, 93 Cal. Rptr. 234, 481 P.2d 242 and held that, after an administrative agency imposes discipline on a professional licensee, the trial court to which application for mandate is made exercises its independent judgment on the facts (96 Cal. App. 4th 757, 767-768) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Reviewing Weight of Evidence

In Maples v. Kern County Assessment Appeals Board (2002) 96 Cal. App. 4th 1007, 1013-1014, 117 Cal. Rptr. 2d 663 , a property company that operated federally subsidized low-income housing challenged the assessment made of the property by the county assessor. The property company and the assessor agreed that the income approach was the proper valuation for appraising the property. However, they disagreed on whether the subsidized interest rate or a general market rate should be applied to calculate the capitalization rate. The Kern County Assessment Appeals Board adopted the property company's calculation. The trial court issued a writ of mandate directing the board to vacate its determination. The company appealed.

The parties disagreed on whether the court of appeal should defer to the Board's findings or review the case de novo. The company argued that the Board's decision should be upheld if supported by substantial evidence. The assessor contended that the absence of a factual dispute required that the case be resolved as a matter of law.

The court of appeal held that the Board, as a board of equalization, was a constitutional agency exercising quasi-judicial powers delegated to it by the California Constitution (96 Cal. App. 4th 1007, 1014) . Therefore, the Board's factual determinations were entitled to the same deference as a judicial decision, i.e., review under the substantial evidence standard. However, the court held that when a board of equalization purports to decide a question of law, the decision is reviewed de novo. The court held that where a taxpayer claims a valid valuation method was improperly applied, the trial court is limited to reviewing the administrative record. The court may overturn the Board's decision only if no substantial evidence in the administrative record supports it. However, where the taxpayer challenges the validity of the valuation method itself, the court is faced with a question of law. In such a case, the court must inquire into whether the challenged valuation method is arbitrary, in excess of discretion, or in violation of the standards prescribed by law. The court noted that whether a taxpayer is challenging "method" or "application" is not always easy to ascertain (96 Cal. App. 4th 1007, 1014) .

Byrnes v. Riles (1984) 157 Cal. App. 3d 1170, 204 Cal. Rptr. 100 , involved an appeal from the granting of a writ of an administrative mandate ordering a school district to pay the private-school tuition of a severely language-handicapped student. The trial court had ruled that the administrative record did not support the hearing officer's determinations. On appeal, the district argued that the decision should be reversed as the trial court did not specify the standard it applied in reviewing the hearing officer's decision. In upholding the decision, the court concluded that the trial court had used the independent judgment standard, which Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5 requires when it is claimed that an administrative determination is not supported by the evidence and when the court is statutorily authorized to receive additional evidence (157 Cal. App. 3d 1170, 1170-1171) . Although abuse of discretion is established if the court finds that the determinations are not supported by the weight of the evidence, such a finding is not, by itself, evidence of arbitrary and capricious conduct by the hearing officer that would entitle the complainant to an award of attorney's fees under Gov. Code § 800.

[b] Authority to Exercise Independent Judgment

In County of Alameda v. Board of Retirement (1988) 46 Cal. 3d 902, 251 Cal. Rptr. 267, 760 P.2d 464 , a county petitioned for a writ of mandate to review the county board of retirement's decision to award a public employee service-connected disability benefits. The trial court reviewed the board's decision by applying the independent judgment test, and the court of appeal affirmed. The Supreme Court also affirmed, holding that the independent judgment test applies because of the county's direct pecuniary interest in challenging administrative benefits awards. Citing Interstate Brands v. Unemployment Ins. Appeals Bd. (1980) 26 Cal. 3d 770, 780-781, 163 Cal. Rptr. 619, 608 P.2d 707 , the Court in County of Alameda reasoned that the county's interest under the retirement system is analogous to the interest of a private employer in an unemployment insurance reserve account, with the only discernible difference being the identity of one employer as public and the other as private (46 Cal. 3d 902, 907-910) .

In Webster v. Trustees of Cal. State University (1993) 19 Cal. App. 4th 1456, 24 Cal. Rptr. 2d 150 , plaintiff, a tenured state university professor over 70 years of age, petitioned for a writ of mandate after being terminated from his employment for substandard performance. The trial court applied the substantial evidence test in holding that postretirement-age employment is not a vested right and that substantial evidence supported the termination. The court of appeal reversed, holding that the trial court should have applied the independent judgment test because plaintiff made a timely application for the continuation of tenure under Gov. Code § 43662. The court also held that, under the administrative scheme adopted by the university, plaintiff had a vested right to continued employment and was entitled to an independent review of the administrative record by a superior court judge under Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5 (19 Cal. App. 4th 1456, 1462) .

In Dominey v. Department of Personnel Administration (1988) 205 Cal. App. 3d 729, 252 Cal. Rptr. 620 , respondent Department of Personnel Administration (DPA) denied petitioners' claim, which sought reclassification of their jobs in the Justice Department and awards of back pay for work done "out of class." The trial court denied their petition for writ of mandate after concluding that the DPA decision was quasi-legislative and subject to the standard of review applicable in ordinary mandate proceedings. The court of appeal affirmed on the reclassification issue, but reversed and remanded on the back-pay issue, holding that the DPA decision on the latter was quasi-adjudicative and subject to review under the independent judgment standard applicable in administrative mandate proceedings (205 Cal. App. 3d 729, 738-740, 743) . The court held that the independent judgment standard applied, rather than the substantial evidence standard, because the DPA was a legislative, not a constitutional, agency, and an award of back pay involved a fundamental vested right (205 Cal. App. 3d 729, 740-743) . The court declined to follow Allen v. Department of Personnel Adminstration (1987) 193 Cal. App. 3d 355, 361-362, 238 Cal. Rptr. 317 , to the extent that it held that DPA decisions were subject to the substantial evidence standard (205 Cal. App. 3d 729, 741-742) .

In Golde v. Fox (1979) 98 Cal. App. 3d 167, 159 Cal. Rptr. 864 , the court of appeal upheld the trial court's refusal to follow the recommendations of an administrative law judge. Instead, the trial court affirmed the revocation of petitioner's real estate license by the Real Estate Commissioner on the ground of moral turpitude arising out of petitioner's guilty plea to a charge of possession for sale of 800 pounds of marijuana. In this regard, the court of appeal held that, because a fundamental vested right was involved, the trial court had correctly followed its own independent judgment in reweighing the evidence which had been presented to an administrative law judge (98 Cal. App. 3d 167, 173) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 195 PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
PART II. FORMS
A. Petition for Writ of Mandate
1. Grounds Supporting Petition Generally

19-195 California Points & Authorities § 195.12

§ 195.12 Writ of Mandate--Decision Substantially Affects Vested Fundamental Right

[1] FORM Writ of Mandate--Decision Substantially Affects Vested Fundamental Right

[This form should be combined with a memorandum supporting exercise by reviewing court of its independent judgment on evidence. See § 195.11.]

THE COURT SHOULD EXERCISE ITS INDEPENDENT JUDGMENT ON THE EVIDENCE BECAUSE THE _____ [ORDER or DECISION] SUBSTANTIALLY AFFECTS A VESTED FUNDAMENTAL RIGHT OF PETITIONER.

A. Effect of Decision on Petitioner's Rights. The courts must decide, on a case-by-case basis, whether some fundamental and basic right of the petitioner will suffer substantial interference because of the administrative order or decision attacked and, if so, whether that right is possessed by and vested in the petitioner rather than merely sought by him (Bixby v. Pierno (1971) 4 Cal. 3d 130, 144, 93 Cal. Rptr. 234, 481 P.2d 242 ; Prentice v. Board of Administration, California Public Employees' Retirement System (2007) 157 Cal. App. 4th 983, 988, 69 Cal. Rptr. 3d 167).

B. "Vested" Denotes Possessed or Acquired. For purposes of determining the applicability of independent judgment review, the term "vested" denotes a right that is either already possessed or legitimately acquired (Berlinghieri v. Department of Motor Vehicles (1983) 33 Cal. 3d 392, 396, 188 Cal. Rptr. 891, 657 P.2d 383 ; The Termo Company v. Luther (2008) 169 Cal. App. 4th 394, 406-408, 86 Cal. Rptr. 3d 687).

C. "Fundamental" Denotes Important Right Not Necessarily of Constitutional Dimension. For purposes of determining the applicability of independent judgment review, the term "fundamental" denotes a right or interest that is important to individuals in their life situations. The right or interest need not be "fundamental" in a constitutional sense that gives rise to due process or equal protection, but need only be of such substantial importance as to warrant independent judgment review (Berlinghieri v. Department of Motor Vehicles (1983) 33 Cal. 3d 392, 397-398, 188 Cal. Rptr. 891, 657 P.2d 383). Thus, the mere preservation of purely economic privileges will not likely be deemed "fundamental," while a basic human right such as the right to pursue a lawful business or occupation will be "fundamental" (Bixby v. Pierno (1971) 4 Cal. 3d 130, 145-146, 93 Cal. Rptr. 234, 481 P.2d 242 ; Wences v. City of Los Angeles (2009) 177 Cal. App. 4th 305, 313-318, 99 Cal. Rptr. 3d 199 ; San Benito Foods v. Veneman (1996) 50 Cal. App. 4th 1889, 1897; 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 571).

D. "Fundamental" and "Vested" Not Absolutes but Are Weighed Together. For purposes of determining the applicability of independent judgment review, the terms "fundamental" and "vested" are not used to establish absolutes but are used in a relative sense. It is the weighing of both the fundamental and vested nature of the right that determines whether independent judgment review is required. In other words, the importance and effect of the right is weighed together with the degree to which that right is possessed, to determine whether independent judgment review is required (Frink v. Prod (1982) 31 Cal. 3d 166, 177-178, 181 Cal. Rptr. 893, 643 P.2d 476). Thus, for example, when the degree to which a right is vested is not overwhelming but the degree of fundamentalness is, independent judgment review may nevertheless be required (Frink v. Prod (1982) 31 Cal. 3d 166, 180, 181 Cal. Rptr. 893, 643 P.2d 476).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a petition for writ of mandate for review of a final administrative adjudicatory order or decision, when the petition alleges an abuse of discretion consisting of a failure of the evidence to support the findings on which the administrative order or decision is based, and the order or decision substantially affects a vested fundamental right of the petitioner.

This form should be combined with a memorandum supporting exercise by reviewing court of its independent judgment on evidence [see § 195.11]. For points that may be used to contend that the respondent is not directly authorized by the Constitution to exercise judicial functions, see § 195.13.

For references to related Pleading and Practice chapters, see § 195.11.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. See § 195.10[2][b] for further discussion.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Effect of Decision on Petitioner's Rights

In Bixby v. Pierno (1971) 4 Cal. 3d 130, 93 Cal. Rptr. 234, 481 P.2d 242 , the Supreme Court stated that the courts must decide on a case-by-case basis whether an administrative decision or class of decisions substantially affects a fundamental vested right and thus requires independent judgment review (4 Cal. 3d 130, 144).

In Prentice v. Board of Administration, California Public Employees' Retirement System (2007) 157 Cal. App. 4th 983, 988, 69 Cal. Rptr. 3d 167 , a public employee challenged his retirement allowance. He applied to the California Public Employees' Retirement System's (PERS) determination of his retirement allowance. Unhappy with PERS's ruling, he filed an administrative appeal, which was denied. He then sought review of the PERS decision by a writ of mandate filed in the trial court, which the trial court denied. The court of appeal held that when an administrative decision substantially affects a fundamental vested right, the trial court, in determining under Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5 whether there has been an abuse of discretion because the findings are not supported by the evidence, must exercise its independent judgment on the evidence and find an abuse of discretion if the findings are not supported by the weight of the evidence (157 Cal. App. 4th 983, 988) .

[b] "Vested" Denotes Possessed or Acquired

In Berlinghieri v. Department of Motor Vehicles (1983) 33 Cal. 3d 392, 188 Cal. Rptr. 891, 657 P.2d 383 , plaintiff's driver's license was suspended by the Department of Motor Vehicles for six months for failure to submit to a blood alcohol test. In upholding the administrative decision on appeal, the superior court rejected the independent judgment test, and found that the administrative decision was supported by substantial evidence. Plaintiff appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed, holding that the independent judgment test applied because the suspension of a driver's license is a fundamental vested right. The Court cited the language in Bixby v. Pierno (1971) 4 Cal. 3d 130, 143-144, 93 Cal. Rptr. 234, 481 P.2d 242 , that if the decision of an administrative agency will substantially affect a fundamental vested right, then the trial court must not only examine the administrative record for errors of law, but also must exercise its independent judgment on the evidence (33 Cal. 3d 392, 395). The Court explained that the term "vested" denotes a right that is either already possessed or legitimately acquired. Thus, retention of driver's license once issued is a "vested" right (33 Cal. 3d 392, 396) . The Court further explained that, in the independent judgment review context, the term "fundamental" referred to a right or interest that is important enough to individuals in their life situations to require an independent judicial review of the evidence. Thus, the right may be "fundamental" even though it does not rise to the level of a fundamental right for purposes of due process or equal protection (33 Cal. 3d 392, 397) . The Court then concluded that the right to retain a driver's license is "fundamental" as well as "vested," and that the independent judgment test applied to the initial judicial review of an administrative decision to suspend a license (33 Cal. 3d 392, 396-398) . The case was then remanded to the trial court for further proceedings consistent with the Court's opinion.

In The Termo Company v. Luther (2008) 169 Cal. App. 4th 394, 406-408, 86 Cal. Rptr. 3d 687 , the State Oil and Gas Supervisor ordered the plugging and abandonment of 28 oil wells. The order was based on the finding that the wells had no potential for future commercial production and as idle wells posed a threat to public health and safety and natural resources. The Department of Conservation affirmed the order on the ground that the wells were deserted within the meaning of Public Resources Code § 3237 because there had been no production for seven years and no attempt at production, and the owners were at a stalemate concerning future operations. The owners of the wells filed petitions for administrative mandamus seeking to overturn the decision and the underlying administrative order. The trial court denied the petitions. The owners appealed on the ground that the trial court erred in applying the substantial evidence standard of review because a fundamental vested right was at stake.

The court of appeal held that the right to continue to operate existing oil wells and to extract oil was a fundamental right. The court further held that the fundamental right was also a vested right, given the number of years the wells have been either in operation or in idle status. The court held that the administrative order would shut down a business that had existed for more than 20 years and would terminate the right to produce oil, a valuable resource. Therefore, the court held that the right to extract oil was vested. Moreover, the court held, the right was fundamental "considering its potentially massive economic aspect and its considerable effect in human terms" (169 Cal. App. 4th 394, 407-408) .

[c] "Fundamental" Denotes Important Right Not Necessarily of Constitutional Dimension

Berlinghieri v. Department of Motor Vehicles (1983) 33 Cal. 3d 392, 188 Cal. Rptr. 891, 657 P.2d 383 , is discussed in § 195.12[3][b].

In Bixby v. Pierno (1971) 4 Cal. 3d 130, 93 Cal. Rptr. 234, 481 P.2d 242 , the Court stated that, in determining whether the right is fundamental, the courts do not alone weigh the economic aspect of it, but the effect of it in human terms and the importance of it to the individual in the life situation. This approach applies in such an instance as the opportunity to continue the practice of one's trade or profession (4 Cal. 3d 130, 144-145).

Wences v. City of Los Angeles (2009) 177 Cal. App. 4th 305, 313-318, 99 Cal. Rptr. 3d 199 , involved an off-duty police officer's reprimand for improper use of force. As a result of the reprimand, the plaintiff filed an administrative appeal, after which the hearing officer upheld the reprimand. The plaintiff filed a petition for writ of administrative mandate. At trial, the parties agreed that the independent judgment standard of review applied to the trial court's review of the administrative decision. However, the trial court applied the substantial evidence test in ruling on the petition because the only discipline imposed on the plaintiff was a reprimand, and, therefore, a fundamental right was not at stake. The trial court held that the administrative decision did not deprive the plaintiff of any property or employment right, did not affect him financially, and therefore did not authorize the court to exercise its independent judgment on the evidence pursuant Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5(c).

The court of appeal reversed. It held that if an administrative decision substantially affects a fundamental vested right, the trial court must exercise its independent judgment on the evidence (177 Cal. App. 4th 305, 313) . The court held that a right may be deemed fundamental based on the character and quality of either the right's economic or human. Courts should not weigh only the economic aspect of the right, but its effect in human terms and the importance of it to the individual in the individual's life (177 Cal. App. 4th 305, 313-314) . The court noted that courts have repeatedly held that discipline imposed on public employees affects their fundamental vested right in employment, and therefore, when a public employee challenges an employer's disciplinary action, the trial court is required to exercise its independent judgment on the evidence (177 Cal. App. 4th 305, 313-314) . The court of appeal held that the trial court erred by focusing only on the impact of the reprimand on the plaintiff, rather than on the nature of the right the reprimand affected (177 Cal. App. 4th 305, 314) . The court held that the nature of the right affected here was the plaintiff's right to nonprobationary employment. It held further that the reprimand may affect the plaintiff's future opportunities for career advancement (177 Cal. App. 4th 305, 316) .

Suspension of a license to operate a commercial food processing plant was held to be a fundamental, vested right in San Benito Foods v. Veneman (1996) 50 Cal. App. 4th 1889, 1897, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 571 . The nature of the petitioner's right to process food was "crucial to plaintiff's economic viability as a food processor." Review of a decision to suspend that license required application of the independent judgment standard, even though the decision would have resulted in negligible economic harm to the petitioner. Accordingly, the Court of Appeal reversed the Superior Court's ruling which had upheld the suspension under the substantial evidence standard (50 Cal. App. 4th 1889, 1897).

[d] "Fundamental" and "Vested" Not Absolutes but Are Weighed Together

In Frink v. Prod (1982) 31 Cal. 3d 166, 181 Cal. Rptr. 893, 643 P.2d 476 , petitioner applied for welfare benefits, which were denied. Petitioner appealed the administrative decision to the superior court, which applied the substantial evidence test and upheld the denial of benefits. The superior court, however, noted that had the independent judgment test been applied, the court would have reversed the decision because the weight of evidence was in petitioner's favor. Petitioner appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed the judgment, holding that the independent judgment test applied to an applicant who is denied welfare benefits. The Court explained that under existing case law the trial court properly applied the substantial evidence standard but that the case law was wrong and the independent judgment standard applied. The Court pointed out that Welf. & Inst. Code § 10962 provides for judicial review of such decisions by mandate pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5 and that Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5 was designed to leave to the courts the establishment of standards for deciding which cases require independent judgment review and which require substantial evidence review (31 Cal. 3d 166, 172-174) . In reaching its decision, the Court restated the following applicable rules: (1) In determining whether the right is fundamental, the courts do not only weigh the economic aspect of it, but the effect of it in human terms and the importance of it to the individual in the life situation (31 Cal. 3d 166, 174, 176) ; (2) for purposes of determining the applicability of independent judgment review, the terms "fundamental" and "vested" are not used to establish absolutes but are used in a relative sense, that it is the weighing of both the fundamental nature and the vested nature of the right which determines whether independent judgment review is required (31 Cal. 3d 166, 177) ; and (3) the ultimate question in determining whether the right is sufficiently basic and fundamental to justify independent judgment review in each case is whether the affected right is deemed to be of sufficient significance to preclude its extinction or abridgement by a body (administrative agency) lacking judicial power (31 Cal. 3d 166, 176) . The Court held that the right of the needy disabled to public assistance is of such significance as to require independent judgment review (31 Cal. 3d 166, 178) , that while the degree to which the applicant's right is vested may not be overwhelming, the degree of fundamentalness is, and that, weighing them together, the independent judgment standard should be applied to decisions denying applications for welfare benefits (31 Cal. 3d 166, 180) .

The Court, to the extent they were inconsistent, overruled Tripp v. Swoap (1976) 17 Cal. 3d 671, 131 Cal. Rptr. 789, 552 P.2d 749 , and Bertch v. Social Welfare Dep't (1955) 45 Cal. 2d 524, 289 P.2d 485 , and disapproved Ferreira v. Swoap (1976) 62 Cal. App. 3d 875, 133 Cal. Rptr. 449 ; Millen v. Swoap (1976) 58 Cal. App. 3d 943, 130 Cal. Rptr. 387 ; Repko v. Carleson (1975) 48 Cal. App. 3d 249, 122 Cal. Rptr. 29 ; Henderling v. Carleson (1974) 36 Cal. App. 3d 561, 111 Cal. Rptr. 612 ; County of Madera v. Carleson (1973) 32 Cal. App. 3d 764, 108 Cal. Rptr. 515 ; Taylor v. Martin (1972) 28 Cal. App. 3d 1057, 105 Cal. Rptr. 211 ; Stratton-King v. Martin (1972) 28 Cal. App. 3d 686, 104 Cal. Rptr. 916 ; and County of Contra Costa v. Social Welfare Board (1962) 199 Cal. App. 2d 468, 18 Cal. Rptr. 573 .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Effect of Decision on Petitioner's Rights

The right to continued welfare benefits is both fundamental and vested so that the independent judgment standard is invoked in reviewing a welfare decision [Harlow v. Carleson (1976) 16 Cal. 3d 731, 737, 129 Cal. Rptr. 298, 548 P.2d 698] . An administrative decision denying an application for welfare benefits also affects a fundamental right and is subject to judicial review by the independent judgment standard [Frink v. Prod (1982) 31 Cal. 3d 166, 171-180, 181 Cal. Rptr. 893, 643 P.2d 476 (overruling or disapproving numerous cases to the contrary)]. Similarly, a policeman's right to disability benefits for injuries incurred in performance of duties is fundamental and vested, and a trial court is required to exercise independent judgment in reviewing an administrative board's decision [Dickey v. Retirement Bd. (1976) 16 Cal. 3d 745, 748-751, 129 Cal. Rptr. 289, 548 P.2d 689] . Furthermore, since Unemployment Insurance Act benefits constitute property rights for purposes of judicial review, the parties are entitled to independent evaluation of the evidence by the superior court, including findings on all essential fact questions [Bilyeu v. Unemployment Ins. Appeals Bd. (1982) 130 Cal. App. 3d 657, 661, 181 Cal. Rptr. 837] .

In Sandarg v. Dental Board of California (2010) 184 Cal. App. 4th 1434, 1440, 109 Cal. Rptr. 3d 826, the Dental Board of California revoked the petitioner's dental license after adopting a decision by an administrative law judge. The superior court denied the petitioner's petition for writ of mandate seeking reinstatement of his license. The court of appeal held that the right to practice one's profession is a fundamental vested right. If an administrative agency revokes a person's license to practice that profession, when the petitioner brings a petition for a writ of mandate to restore the license, the trial court must apply its independent judgment to its review of the facts underlying the administrative decision [184 Cal. App. 4th 1434, 1440].

In Seering v. Dept. of Social Services (1987) 194 Cal. App. 3d 298, 239 Cal. Rptr. 422 , which arose out of a mandate proceeding to require the Department of Social Services to set aside its decision revoking a license to operate a family day care home for children based on allegations that one of the operators of the home had sexually abused one of the children attending the home, the court of appeal, in affirming the judgment denying the writ, held that the trial court had properly applied the "independent judgment" test in reviewing the administrative record because the trial court must exercise its independent judgment on the evidence if the decision of the administrative agency substantially affects a fundamental vested right and that the right to engage in such occupation is such a right (194 Cal. App. 3d 298, 302 n.1).

[b] "Vested" Denotes Possessed or Acquired

In Dominey v. Department of Personnel Administration (1988) 205 Cal. App. 3d 729, 252 Cal. Rptr. 620 , discussed in § 195.11[4][b], this supplement, the court of appeal held that a claim of back pay by public employees was vested in the sense of "already possessed" or "legitimately acquired," because if petitioners prevailed on the claim they would be entitled to compensation for work already performed (205 Cal. App. 3d 729, 742-743) .

[c] "Fundamental" Denotes Important Right Not Necessarily of Constitutional Dimension

In Dominey v. Department of Personnel Administration (1988) 205 Cal. App. 3d 729, 252 Cal. Rptr. 620 , discussed in § 195.11[4][b], the court of appeal held that a claim of back pay by public employees involved a fundamental right because this compensation directly affected a public employee's ability to support his or her family (205 Cal. App. 3d 729, 742) .

Schmitt v. City of Rialto (1985) 164 Cal. App. 3d 494, 210 Cal. Rptr. 788 , involved termination of a police officer's employment with a city, which was held to be a vested fundamental right. Thus, the superior court was required to exercise its independent judgment in reviewing the city council's findings regarding plaintiff's misconduct and its relation to his fitness for the position, but the determination of discharge, being in the nature of discipline or a penalty, was subject to review by the superior court only for abuse of discretion (164 Cal. App. 3d 494, 500-504) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 195 PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
PART II. FORMS
A. Petition for Writ of Mandate
1. Grounds Supporting Petition Generally

19-195 California Points & Authorities § 195.13

§ 195.13 Writ of Mandate--Agency Is Not Directly Authorized to Exercise Judicial Functions

[1] FORM Writ of Mandate--Agency Is Not Directly Authorized to Exercise Judicial Functions

[This form should be combined with a memorandum supporting exercise by reviewing court of its independent judgment on evidence. See § 195.11.]

THE COURT SHOULD EXERCISE ITS INDEPENDENT JUDGMENT ON THE EVIDENCE BECAUSE THE PETITION ALLEGES AN ABUSE OF DISCRETION CONSISTING OF A FAILURE OF THE EVIDENCE TO SUPPORT THE FINDINGS ON WHICH THE ADMINISTRATIVE _____ [ORDER or DECISION] IS BASED, AND THE RESPONDENT IS NOT DIRECTLY AUTHORIZED BY THE CONSTITUTION TO EXERCISE JUDICIAL FUNCTIONS.

Constitutional Authority to Exercise Judicial Functions. Certain state agencies, being directly authorized by the Constitution to exercise judicial functions, may do so to the limited extent of the constitutional grant of power without offending the separation-of-powers doctrine; and, because their factual determinations are due all of the deference and respect usually accorded a judicial decision, a court reviewing such an agency's decision may not exercise its independent judgment on the evidence. All other state agencies and all local agencies, however, have no authority to exercise judicial functions; their factual determinations are not due the deference and respect usually accorded judicial decisions; therefore, a court reviewing such an agency's decision may exercise its independent judgment on the evidence (Strumsky v. San Diego County Employees Retirement Ass'n (1974) 11 Cal. 3d 28, 32, 35-37, 42-44, 112 Cal. Rptr. 805, 520 P.2d 29).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a petition for writ of mandate for review of a final administrative adjudicatory order or decision, when the petition alleges an abuse of discretion consisting of a failure of the evidence to support the findings on which the administrative order or decision is based, and the respondent is not directly authorized by the Constitution to exercise judicial functions.

This form should be combined with a memorandum supporting exercise by reviewing court of its independent judgment on evidence [see § 195.11]. For points and authorities that may be used to contend that the agency order or decision substantially affects a vested fundamental right of the petitioner respondent, see § 195.12.

For references to related Pleading and Practice chapters, see § 195.11.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. See § 195.10[2][b] for further discussion.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Constitutional Authority to Exercise Judicial Functions

In Strumsky v. San Diego County Employees' Retirement Ass'n (1974) 11 Cal. 3d 28, 112 Cal. Rptr. 805, 520 P.2d 29 (discussed in § 195.10[3][b]), the Court held that the entire judicial power of the state government is concentrated in the state court system and some "constitutional agencies" (11 Cal. 3d 28, 43). The Court also observed that, though the status of certain agencies as constitutional agencies has been clearly established, the status of certain others remains unclear pending judicial determination of that question. With respect to local agencies, however, there is no longer any doubt--because judicial powers may no longer be exercised by "local agencies," the factual findings of those agencies are entitled to no greater deference than those of other agencies lacking judicial powers under the Constitution (11 Cal. 3d 28, 44). The Court, therefore, held that in all cases of review of an adjudicatory decision of a local agency, if the order or decision of the agency substantially affects a fundamental vested right, the court must exercise its independent judgment on the evidence and find an abuse of discretion if the findings are not supported by the weight of the evidence (11 Cal. 3d 28, 32) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 195 PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
PART II. FORMS
A. Petition for Writ of Mandate
1. Grounds Supporting Petition Generally

19-195 California Points & Authorities § 195.14

§ 195.14 Writ of Mandate--Substantial Evidence Test Applies

[1] FORM Writ of Mandate--Substantial Evidence Text Applies

[This form should be combined with a memorandum generally supporting a petition for administrative mandate. See § 195.10.]

IN A CASE IN WHICH THE COURT IS REQUIRED TO APPLY THE SUBSTANTIAL EVIDENCE TEST, THE COURT MUST EXAMINE THE ENTIRE ADMINISTRATIVE RECORD TO DETERMINE WHETHER THE FINDINGS ON WHICH THE ADMINISTRATIVE ORDER OR DECISION IS BASED ARE SUPPORTED BY EVIDENCE OF PONDERABLE LEGAL SIGNIFICANCE, REASONABLE IN NATURE, CREDIBLE, AND OF SOLID VALUE.

A. Determining Support of Substantial Evidence. In a case in which the court may not exercise its independent judgment to determine the weight of the evidence, the court must determine whether the findings on which the administrative order or decision is based are supported by substantial evidence in the light of the whole record (Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5(c)). Substantial evidence is evidence of ponderable legal significance, reasonable in nature, credible, and of solid value [Plastic Pipe and Fittings Association v. California Building Standards Commission (2004) 124 Cal. App. 4th 1390, 1406-1407, 22 Cal. Rptr. 3d 393] . The phrase "substantial evidence in the light of the whole record" signifies that the court is to apply the "substantial evidence" rule as generally applied in judicial proceedings in California and not the "scintilla" rule applied in other jurisdictions (Martin v. Alcoholic Beverage Control Appeals Bd. (1959) 52 Cal. 2d 238, 246, 340 P.2d 1). The court must examine not just the evidence in support of the administrative decision being reviewed but, rather, all of the evidence in the record (Le Vesque v. Workmen's Compensation Appeals Bd. (1970) 1 Cal. 3d 627, 638 n.22, 83 Cal. Rptr. 208, 463 P.2d 432 ; La Costa Beach Homeowners' Association v. California Coastal Commission (2002) 101 Cal. App. 4th 804, 814, 124 Cal. Rptr. 2d 618). Factual matters are viewed most favorably to the prevailing party, and conflicts are decided in favor of the respondent (12319 Corporation v. Business License Com. (1982) 137 Cal. App. 3d 54, 64, 186 Cal. Rptr. 726).

[Optional] B. Findings Based on Hearsay. Administrative findings are not based on substantial evidence when they are based solely on hearsay, and there has been a timely objection (see Gov. Code § 11513(d); Ashford v. Culver City Unified School Dist. (2005) 130 Cal. App. 4th 344, 29 Cal. Rptr. 3d 728 ; Dibble v. Gourley (2002) 103 Cal. App. 4th 496, 502-503, 126 Cal. Rptr. 2d 709).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a petition for writ of mandate for review of a final administrative adjudicatory order or decision, when the petition alleges an abuse of discretion consisting of a failure of the evidence to support the findings on which the administrative order or decision is based, and the court is precluded from exercising its independent judgment on the evidence either because (a) the order or decision does not substantially affect a vested fundamental right of the petitioner, or because (b) the respondent is directly authorized by the Constitution to exercise judicial functions. In such a case, the court is limited to determining whether the findings are supported by substantial evidence in the light of the whole record [Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5(c)].

For references to related Pleading and Practice chapters, see § 195.11.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. See § 195.10[2][b] for further discussion.

[c] Related Memoranda

For points and authorities pertaining to mandate proceedings generally, see Ch. 150, Mandate and Prohibition . For points and authorities relating to use of the substantial evidence test in reviewing public school teacher dismissal proceedings, see Ch. 211, Schools: Certification, Dismissal, and Related Employment Issues .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Determining Support of Substantial Evidence

Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5(c) provides that, when it is claimed that the findings are not supported by the evidence, in cases in which the court is authorized by law to exercise its independent judgment on the evidence, abuse of discretion is established if the court determines that the findings are not supported by the weight of the evidence; in all other cases abuse of discretion is established if the court determines that the findings are not supported by substantial evidence in the light of the whole record.

La Costa Beach Homeowners' Association v. California Coastal Commission (2002) 101 Cal. App. 4th 804, 124 Cal. Rptr. 2d 618 , was an appeal of a decision by the California Coastal Commission granting a conditional permit to develop coastal property. The court of appeal reversed the trial court and held that substantial evidence supported the Coastal Commission's decision (101 Cal. App. 4th 804, 814) .

Plastic Pipe and Fittings Association v. California Building Standards Commission (2004) 124 Cal. App. 4th 1390, 22 Cal. Rptr. 3d 393 was an appeal from the judgment of the superior court in a mandate proceeding for review of an administrative adjudicatory decision. The court of appeal held that there was substantial evidence in the record to support the trial court's findings. The court held that evidence is substantial if a reasonable trier of fact could conclude that the evidence is reasonable, credible, and of solid value (124 Cal. App. 4th 1390, 1406-1407) .

Martin v. Alcoholic Beverage Control Appeals Bd. (1959) 52 Cal. 2d 238, 340 P.2d 1 , was an appeal from the judgment of the superior court in a mandate proceeding for review of an administrative adjudicatory decision. On appeal, the Supreme Court considered the meaning of the phrase in Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5(c), "substantial evidence in the light of the whole record." Citing earlier cases in which similar language was construed, the Court stated that such phrases have been consistently construed as signifying no more than the adoption by the Legislature, for particular purposes, of the "substantial evidence" rule as generally applied in judicial proceedings in this state rather than the "scintilla" rule, which has been applied in judicial proceedings in some other jurisdictions (52 Cal. 2d 238, 246) .

Le Vesque v. Workers' Compensation Appeals Bd. (1970) 1 Cal. 3d 627, 83 Cal. Rptr. 208, 463 P.2d 432 , was a hearing in the Supreme Court following the court of appeal's denial of a petition for writ of review (certiorari) to review an adjudicatory decision of the Workmen's Compensation Appeals Board. In discussing the proper method of applying the "substantial evidence" test, the Court stated that the reviewing court must consider the entire record and may not isolate only the evidence which supports the board's findings and thus disregard relevant evidence in the record (1 Cal. 3d 627, 638 n.22).

12319 Corporation v. Business License Com. (1982) 137 Cal. App. 3d 54, 186 Cal. Rptr. 726 , was an appeal from a denial by the trial court of a request for a writ of mandamus and/or prohibition and/or administrative mandamus and the dissolving of its order staying the revocation of petitioner's licenses to operate a nightclub. On the issue of sufficiency of the evidence, the court of appeal stated that its power to review the sufficiency of evidence begins and ends with the determination as to whether or not there is any substantial evidence, contradicted or uncontradicted, which would support the finding. Factual matters, the court added, are viewed most favorably to the prevailing party and conflicts are decided in favor of the respondent (137 Cal. App. 3d 54, 64) .

[b] Findings Based on Hearsay

Gov. Code § 11513(d) , formerly Gov. Code. Code § 11513(c), provides that hearsay evidence "may be used for the purpose of supplementing or explaining other evidence but over timely objection shall not be sufficient in itself to support a finding unless it would be admissible over objection in civil actions" [emphasis added]. The words, "over timely objection," were added in 1995 (operative July 1, 1997).

Prior to the 1995 amendment of Gov. Code § 11513(d), there was a split in the courts of appeal regarding whether former Gov. Code § 11513(c) permitted hearsay evidence standing alone to be substantial evidence for an administrative finding if it is admitted without objection [see, e.g., Carl S. v. Commission for Teacher Preparation and Licensing (1981) 126 Cal. App. 3d 365, 370-371, 178 Cal. Rptr. 753 (concluding that hearsay standing alone cannot be substantial evidence for finding, even if it is admitted without objection)].

It appears that Gov. Code § 11513(d), as amended, excludes hearsay evidence, standing alone, from supporting a finding, when there has been a timely objection as defined in the statute. Conversely, however, it appears that the added phrase, "over timely objection" qualifies the statement regarding lack of sufficiency, and the statute permits a finding that is based solely on hearsay when there has been no timely objection. Therefore, it appears that the position of Carl S, above, and others, is no longer valid.

In Ashford v. Culver City Unified School Dist. (2005) 130 Cal. App. 4th 344, 29 Cal. Rptr. 3d 728 , a plumber employed by a school district was terminated when he allegedly used sick days to do freelance plumbing work outside of the school district. At the administrative hearing against him, the school district presented videotapes allegedly showing the petitioner engaged in activities inconsistent with his claim of illness. The only witness at the hearing was the district's assistant superintendent of human resources, who had not made the videotapes, was not present when they were made, and did not know the person who made them. In addition, she did not know if the person who made the videotapes was at any particular site on any particular date, or whether the dates on the videos were accurate. Based on this evidence, the board of education found that the petitioner was not sick when he took the sick days and dismissed him. The petitioner appealed. The court of appeal held that while administrative bodies are not required to strictly follow the rules of evidence, hearsay evidence standing alone has no weight (130 Cal. App. 4th 344, 349) . Citing Government Code § 11513(d), the court held that hearsay evidence may be used to supplement or explain other evidence but may not be sufficient in itself to support a finding unless it would be admissible over objection in civil actions (130 Cal. App. 4th 344, 349) . The court held that the videotapes were hearsay because they were out-of-court statements by the person making the videotapes about petitioner's activities, and were offered to prove the truth of the district's assertion that petitioner was working on days when he claimed to be ill. Because the board's findings and conclusion were based on the videotapes, their admission into evidence to support the district's case was not harmless error, and thus, the court held, the board's decision against petitioner must be set aside (130 Cal. App. 4th 344, 350) .

In Dibble v. Gourley (2002) 103 Cal. App. 4th 496, 126 Cal. Rptr. 2d 709 , a motorist was arrested for driving under the influence of alcohol. The officer's sworn statement to the Department of Motor Vehicles stated that the motorist had been involved in an accident. Attached to the officer's statement were reports that detailed the circumstances surrounding the accident and arrest. The DMV suspended the motorist's license. The motorist requested a hearing, but he did not appear. When the DMV suspended the motorist's license, the motorist filed a petition for writ of mandate, arguing that the officer's unsworn reports were inadmissible hearsay. The trial court denied the motorist's petition. The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's decision, holding that the motorist waived his claim of error by not objecting to the admissibility of the unsworn reports at the hearing (103 Cal. App. 4th 496, 502-503) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Determining Support of Substantial Evidence

State Water Resources Control Bd. Cases (2006) 136 Cal. App. 4th 674, 763-764, 39 Cal. Rptr. 3d 189 , involved coordinated water rights proceedings in which various State Water Resources Control Board decisions were challenged. The court discussed the substantial evidence standard and held that to be substantial, "evidence must be reasonable in nature, credible, and of solid value; it must actually be 'substantial proof of the essentials which the law requires in a particular case" (136 Cal. App. 4th 674, 763). With respect to the burden of proof regarding substantial evidence, the court held that when an appellant challenges an administrative decision as being unsupported by substantial evidence, the appellant, not the board, has the burden to demonstrate that the administrative record does not contain sufficient evidence to support the agency's decision (136 Cal. App. 4th 674, 763-764).

In Graber v. City of Upland (2002) 99 Cal. App. 4th 424, 121 Cal. Rptr. 2d 649 , the plaintiffs challenged two ordinances that were adopted by the defendant city on the ground that the ordinances violated the Community Redevelopment Law (Health & Saf. Code § 33000 et seq.) and improperly upset the tax distribution balance between the redevelopment agency and other taxing jurisdictions. The trial court applied the substantial evidence standard and ruled in favor of the plaintiffs, holding that the city ordinances were invalid because there was insufficient evidence that the area at issue was predominantly urbanized and blighted. The court of appeal upheld the application of the substantial evidence standard, but held that courts should not be a "rubber stamp" for local governments (99 Cal. App. 4th 424, 430). It held that the Community Redevelopment Law requires substantial evidence in the administrative record demonstrating the existence of specific characteristics of urbanization and blight. If the specific finding required by the Community Redevelopment Law cannot be made from the evidence in the administrative record, the evidence is not "substantial" proof of the essentials which the law requires and the finding is not supported by substantial evidence (99 Cal. App. 4th 424, 430-431).

In Desmond v. County of Contra Costa (1993) 21 Cal. App. 4th 330, 25 Cal. Rptr. 2d 842 , the board of supervisors denied a homeowner's application for a land use permit finding that the homeowner's proposal was unsuitable to the character of the neighborhood. The homeowner petitioned the trial court for a writ of mandate. The trial court applied the substantial evidence test and denied the petition on the ground that the homeowner failed to establish either that the board of supervisors' finding was not supported by substantial evidence in the record or that the finding was legally irrelevant to the denial of the request for a land use permit. Affirming the trial court's decision, the court of appeal held that when the standard of review is the substantial evidence test, it is presumed that the findings and actions of the administrative agency were supported by substantial evidence and, therefore, the burden was on the homeowner to show that there was no substantial evidence whatsoever to support the findings of the board (21 Cal. App. 4th 330, 335-336) .

Apte v. Regents of University of California (1988) 198 Cal. App. 3d 1084, 244 Cal. Rptr. 312 , was an appeal from the trial court's grant of a peremptory writ of mandate ordering the University of California to pay salary and benefits for one academic year to a former associate professor, as well as attorney fees, and to conduct an evidentiary hearing on compensation for lost salary in subsequent academic years. In modifying the judgment to delete the requirement of a further hearing, and affirming the judgment as modified, the court of appeal said that, when a statewide agency is delegated quasi-judicial power by the Constitution, the reviewing court is limited to determining whether there was substantial evidence supporting the agency's decision, substantial evidence being relevant evidence that a reasonable mind might accept as adequate to support a conclusion (198 Cal. App. 3d 1084, 1091) . The court added that in reviewing the evidentiary basis of an agency's decision, the court (trial and appellate) must consider not just the evidence supporting the agency's decision, but all relevant evidence in the administrative record, including evidence that fairly detracts from the evidence supporting the agency's decision, and that this consideration involves some weighing of the evidence to fairly estimate its worth (198 Cal. App. 3d 1084, 1091) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 195 PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
PART II. FORMS
A. Petition for Writ of Mandate
1. Grounds Supporting Petition Generally

19-195 California Points & Authorities § 195.15

§ 195.15 Writ of Mandate--Invasion of Constitutional Right

[1] FORM Writ of Mandate--Invasion of Constitutional Right

[This form should be combined with a memorandum generally supporting a petition for administrative mandate. See § 195.10.]

THE COURT SET ASIDE THE ADMINISTRATIVE ADJUDICATORY _____ [ORDER or DECISION], DESPITE THE REASONS GIVEN FOR THE _____ [ORDER or DECISION], BECAUSE THE REAL REASON FOR THE _____ [ORDER or DECISION] WAS OFFICIAL DISSATISFACTION WITH PETITIONER'S EXERCISE OF A CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHT OF _____ [identify, e.g., FREE SPEECH], AND THE ACTION OF _____ [identify agency] WAS NOT JUSTIFIED BY A COMPELLING PUBLIC INTEREST.

Scope of Review When Constitutional Right Invaded. When it is claimed that the real reason for an administrative order or decision adversely affecting a person's interests is official dissatisfaction with his exercise of a constitutional right, the court must make an independent assessment of established factual elements and determine whether this was the true reason for dismissal so that, absent the exercise of such right, the adverse action would not have been taken; if this is determined to be true, the court should proceed to consider whether the consequent limitation on constitutional rights was justified by a compelling public interest (Bekiaris v. Board of Educ. (1972) 6 Cal. 3d 575, 593, 100 Cal. Rptr. 16, 493 P.2d 480).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a petition for writ of mandate for review of a final administrative adjudicatory order or decision, when the petition alleges that the real reason for the order or decision was not stated in the accusation but was, instead, official dissatisfaction with the petitioner's exercise of a constitutional right (such as freedom of speech).

This form should be combined with a memorandum generally supporting a petition for administrative mandate [see § 195.10].

For forms of memoranda supporting a petition for writ of administrative mandate, based on an agency's violation of a petitioner's administrative adjudication "Bill of Rights" under Gov. Code § 11425.10, see § 195.30 et seq..

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. See § 195.10[2][b] for further discussion.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Scope of Review When Constitutional Right Invaded

Bekiaris v. Board of Educ. (1972) 6 Cal. 3d 575, 100 Cal. Rptr. 16, 493 P.2d 480 , was an appeal from the judgment of the superior court denying a writ of mandate to compel a school board to set aside the allegedly wrongful dismissal of petitioner from employment and to reimburse him for damages suffered by reason of lost employment. The Supreme Court reversed the judgment because the trial court and the board failed to resolve the petitioner's contention that the true reason for his dismissal was the board's disapproval of his exercise of First Amendment rights through out-of-school political activities. The Court held that in such a case the reviewing court is required to make an independent assessment of established factual elements and determine whether the true reason for the administrative action was official dissatisfaction with the person's exercise of constitutional rights, so that, absent the exercise of these rights, the agency would not have taken the action in question. If it determines that question in the negative and also finds no legal error in the record, it should deny the writ. If it determines that question in the affirmative, it should proceed to determine whether or not the consequent limitation on constitutional rights was justified by a compelling public interest. If it concludes that it was not justified by a compelling public interest, it should issue a writ of mandate requiring the agency to set aside its decision. If it concludes that it was so justified, it should deny the petition for the writ (6 Cal. 3d 575, 593) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 195 PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
PART II. FORMS
A. Petition for Writ of Mandate
1. Grounds Supporting Petition Generally

19-195 California Points & Authorities § 195.16

§ 195.16 Writ of Mandate--Review of Action by Nongovernmental Agency Is Proper

[1] FORM Writ of Mandate--Review of Action by Nongovernmental Agency Is Proper

[This form should be combined with a memorandum generally supporting a petition for administrative mandate. See § 195.10.]

THE COURT SHOULD GRANT THE PETITION FOR WRIT OF MANDATE, BECAUSE THE COURT MAY REVIEW A DECISION OF A NONGOVERNMENTAL AGENCY BY WRIT OF MANDATE.

A. Nongovernmental Agency Decision Reviewable by Writ. A writ of mandate under Section 1094.5 of the Code of Civil Procedure is available to review not only administrative decisions by governmental agencies, but also administrative decisions by nongovernmental agencies in all cases in which the subject decision is the product of a proceeding in which a hearing and related protections are required by law (Anton v. San Antonio Community Hosp. (1977) 19 Cal. 3d 802, 815-817, 140 Cal. Rptr. 442, 567 P.2d 1162).

[Optional] B. Association's Membership Decision Reviewable by Writ. Administrative mandate pursuant to Section 1094.5 of the Code of Civil Procedure is proper to review membership decisions of associations in all cases in which the subject decision is the product of a proceeding in which a hearing and related procedural protections are required by law (see Anton v. San Antonio Community Hosp. (1977) 19 Cal. 3d 802, 813-817, 140 Cal. Rptr. 442, 567 P.2d 1162).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be used in support of a petition for a writ of mandate to review an administrative decision of a nongovernmental agency.

Optional Paragraph B should be used when a person is seeking judicial review of an administrative decision of an association, for example, when seeking review of a hospital's decision to expel a member of its hospital staff. Counsel should include points and authorities supporting the substantive grounds on which petitioner is claiming that the association's decision was improper [see Ch. 22, Associations and Clubs].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. See Comments under § 195.10[2][b] for further discussion.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For pleading and practice forms relating to administrative mandate generally, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 474, Availability of Judicial Review of Agency Decisions et seq. (Matthew Bender). For discussion and forms relating to exclusion or expulsion from membership in an association, see Ch. 61, Associations and Clubs , in that publication.

[d] Related Memoranda

For memoranda relating to exclusion or expulsion from membership in an association, see Ch. 22, Associations and Clubs .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Nongovernmental Agency Decision Reviewable by Writ

In Anton v. San Antonio Community Hosp. (1977) 19 Cal. 3d 802, 140 Cal. Rptr. 442, 567 P.2d 1162 , a physician petitioned the superior court for a writ of mandate under Code Civ. Proc. § 1085 to compel defendant hospital to reappoint him to its medical staff. The trial court treated the proceeding as though it had been brought pursuant to the provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5 (administrative mandate) and denied plaintiff relief. Although reversing the judgment on other grounds, the Supreme Court concluded that the trial court had properly treated the proceeding as one for administrative mandate under Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5. The Court held that a petition for a writ of mandate to review an administrative decision under Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5 was proper to review decisions of nongovernmental agencies (19 Cal. 3d 802, 817, 820) . The Court noted that the language of the statute did not limit mandate review under Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5 to administrative decisions by governmental agencies (19 Cal. 3d 802, 816) . The Court said that since Code Civ. Proc. § 1085 mandate is available to compel acts on the part of governmental and nongovernmental agencies, and since the language of Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5 describing the kind of administrative body whose decisions are subject to review is substantially identical to that in Code Civ. Proc. § 1085, it follows that mandate review under Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5 is available for administrative decisions by nongovernmental agencies (19 Cal. 3d 802, 816-817) .

[b] Association's Membership Decision Reviewable by Writ

The factual and procedural background of Anton v. San Antonio Community Hosp. (1977) 19 Cal. 3d 802, 140 Cal. Rptr. 442, 567 P.2d 1162 , is discussed in [a], above. In Anton, the Supreme Court reversed a judgment denying a physician's petition for writ of mandate to compel a private, nonprofit hospital to reinstate him to membership on the hospital staff. Addressing itself to the proper procedure for review of the hospital's decision, the Court held that this case fulfilled all of the statutory requirements for review under the procedure established by Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5 (19 Cal. 3d 802, 815) . The Court, noting that Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5 used substantially identical language to Code Civ. Proc. § 1085 in describing the kind of administrative body whose decisions are subject to mandate review under its provisions, held that Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5 was to be applied to the same spectrum of agencies to which Code Civ.

Proc. § 1085 has been held applicable (19 Cal. 3d 802, 817) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Association's Membership Decision Reviewable by Writ

In Tiholiz v. Northridge Hospital Foundation (1984) 151 Cal. App. 3d 1197, 199 Cal. Rptr. 338 , the court of appeal affirmed the trial court's denial of a writ of administrative mandate. The court made note of the procedures followed, without finding them improper (151 Cal. App. 3d 1197, 1201) . The court said that the function of the trial court was to determine whether the tribunal's administrative record contained substantial evidence in support of the administrative disposition. The appellate court's role is limited to determining whether there was substantial evidence supporting the trial court's ruling (151 Cal. App. 3d 1197, 1203-1204).

In Applebaum v. Board of Directors (1980) 104 Cal. App. 3d 648, 163 Cal. Rptr. 831 , the court of appeal affirmed the trial court's granting of plaintiff's petition for a writ of administrative mandate compelling a private hospital to reinstate the plaintiff physician as a member of its staff (104 Cal. App. 3d 648, 650) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 195 PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
PART II. FORMS
A. Petition for Writ of Mandate
1. Grounds Supporting Petition Generally

19-195 California Points & Authorities § 195.17

§ 195.17 Writ of Mandate--Court May Receive Additional Evidence

[1] FORM Writ of Mandate--Court May Receive Additional Evidence

[This form should be combined with a memorandum generally supporting a petition for administrative mandate. See § 195.10.]

AT THE HEARING ON THE PETITION THE COURT MAY RECEIVE, IN ADDITION TO THE EVIDENCE THAT WAS PRODUCED IN THE ADMINISTRATIVE PROCEEDING, (A) ANY EVIDENCE THAT COULD NOT, IN THE EXERCISE OF REASONABLE DILIGENCE, HAVE BEEN PRODUCED IN THAT PROCEEDING, AND (B) ANY EVIDENCE THAT WAS IMPROPERLY EXCLUDED IN THAT PROCEEDING.

A. Receipt of Additional Evidence. Although the petitioner is not entitled to a complete new trial of the issues litigated in the administrative proceeding, the court may receive, in the judicial proceeding for review of an administrative adjudicatory order or decision, not only the evidence that was presented in the administrative proceeding, but also (a) any evidence which could not, in the exercise of reasonable diligence, have been produced in that proceeding, and (b) any evidence that was improperly excluded in that proceeding (Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5(e); Sierra Club v. California Coastal Commission (2005) 35 Cal. 4th 839, 863, 28 Cal. Rptr. 3d 316, 111 P.3d 294 ; Bixby v. Pierno (1971) 4 Cal. 3d 130, 143 n.10, 93 Cal. Rptr. 234, 481 P.2d 242 ; Town of Tiburon v. Bonander (2009) 180 Cal. App. 4th 1057, 1075-1076, 103 Cal. Rptr. 3d 485).

[Optional] B. Events Transpiring After Agency's Decision. A superior court is authorized under Section 1094.5(e) of the Code of Civil Procedure to receive relevant evidence of events which transpired after the date of the administrative agency's decision (Windigo Mills v. Unemployment Ins. Appeals Bd. (1979) 92 Cal. App. 3d 586, 597, 155 Cal. Rptr. 63).

[Optional] C. Evidence on Issue First Raised in Mandate Petition. A court does not abuse its discretion under Section 1094.5(e) of the Code of Civil Procedure by denying a motion to strike evidence that was not part of the administrative record when that evidence is on an issue that is first raised in a petition for writ of administrative mandamus (Cranston v. City of Richmond (1985) 40 Cal. 3d 755, 773, 221 Cal. Rptr. 779, 710 P.2d 845).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a petition for writ of mandate for review of a final administrative adjudicatory order or decision, when the petition alleges that the petitioner has certain evidence that he or she could not, in the exercise of reasonable diligence, have presented at the administrative proceeding or that certain evidence was improperly excluded in that proceeding [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5(e)].

This form should be combined with a memorandum generally supporting a petition for administrative mandate [see § 195.10]. With appropriate modifications, this memorandum may be used to oppose a motion for summary judgment in favor of the respondent.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. See Comments under § 195.10[2][b] for further discussion.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Receipt of Additional Evidence

Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5(e) provides that, when the court finds that there is relevant evidence which, in the exercise of reasonable diligence, could not have been produced or which was improperly excluded at the hearing before respondent, the court may enter judgment remanding the case to be reconsidered in the light of that evidence; or, in cases in which the court is authorized by law to exercise its independent judgment on the evidence, the court may admit that evidence at the hearing on the writ without remanding the case.

In Sierra Club v. California Coastal Commission (2005) 35 Cal. 4th 839, 28 Cal. Rptr. 3d 316, 111 P.3d 294 , the Sierra Club filed a petition for writ of mandate challenging the Coastal Commission's approval of a housing development project that straddled the coastal zone boundary. The Commission issued a permit, finding that the part of the proposed project within the coastal zone conformed with the Coastal Act's policies and requirements. The Sierra Club filed a writ of mandate, arguing that the Commission erred in issuing the permit without considering the adverse impacts in the coastal zone of activities originating in the portion of the project site located outside of the coastal zone. The superior court denied the writ of mandate. The Court of Appeal affirmed. The Sierra Club appealed to the California Supreme Court.

The Sierra Club challenged the permit approval based on its counsel's declaration that the coastal program analyst told him that Commission staff reviewed the final Environmental Impact Report (EIR) in connection with its consideration of the proposed project, but the Commissioners did not. The Sierra Club argued that by failing to review the City's EIR, the Commission members violated the CEQA Guidelines, which provide that "[t]he decisionmaking body of a public agency shall not delegate the following functions: (1) Reviewing and considering a final EIR ... prior to approving a project." Sierra Club also asserted that because the Commissioners did not themselves review the City's EIR, the Court of Appeal erred in partially relying on that EIR to find that substantial evidence supported the Commission's decision.

The California Supreme Court upheld the Court of Appeal's holding. It held that the legislative history of the applicable statute showed that with respect to proposed developments straddling the coastal zone, the legislature intended to divide permit authority between the Commission and other local public entities having jurisdiction over portions of a development outside the coastal zone. In addition, the Court held that the Sierra Club's argument depended on evidence that was not part of the administrative record. The Court held that judicial review may be conducted solely on the record of the proceeding before the administrative agency (35 Cal. 4th 839, 863-864) . Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5(e), a reviewing court may receive additional evidence only if that evidence "in the exercise of reasonable diligence, could not have been produced or that was improperly excluded at the hearing before" the administrative agency (35 Cal. 4th 839, 863). Thus, in reviewing the Commission's decision, courts must review only the record before the Commission unless the petitioner shows it could not have produced the new evidence in the exercise of reasonable diligence or unless relevant evidence was improperly excluded at the administrative hearing (35 Cal. 4th 839, 863). Because Sierra Club made no attempt to establish either of these prerequisites, the Court refused to consider the statement in counsel's declaration (35 Cal. 4th 839, 863-864).

Bixby v. Pierno (1971) 4 Cal. 3d 130, 93 Cal. Rptr. 234, 481 P.2d 242 was an appeal from the judgment of the superior court in a mandate proceeding for review of an administrative adjudicatory decision. In holding that a trial court must give a limited trial de novo when called on to exercise its independent judgment on the evidence, the court stated that the trial court must exercise its independent judgment on the weight of the evidence produced or which could not, in the exercise of reasonable diligence, have been produced before the administrative agency and any evidence which might have been improperly excluded by the administrative agency (4 Cal. 3d 130, 143 n.10).

Town of Tiburon v. Bonander (2009) 180 Cal. App. 4th 1057, 1075-1076, 103 Cal. Rptr. 3d 485 , involved a special assessment district formed by the plaintiff town to place overhead utility lines underground within the district. Each homeowner in the district agreed to pay between $16,000 to $20,000 per parcel to cover the cost of installing the utility lines underground from the street to each residence. The plaintiff's original estimate of the cost was too low, so the plaintiff imposed a supplemental assessment to cover the increased costs. When the plaintiff filed an action to validate the supplemental assessment pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 860, the defendants, a group of affected property owners, filed a cross-complaint challenging the supplemental assessment. The trial court limited its review to the administrative record associated with the supplemental district. The trial court granted the plaintiff's motion for summary judgment on most of the defendants' claims. The defendants dismissed one of their claims in order for the trial court to enter a final judgment.

On appeal, the defendants argued that the supplemental assessment failed to satisfy the proportionality requirement imposed by Cal. Const. Art. XIII D § 4, which mandates that assessments may not exceed the reasonable cost of the proportional special benefit conferred on a parcel. The court of appeal first held that it would exercise its independent judgment in reviewing whether the assessment violated Cal. Const. Art. XIII D § 4 because the validity of the assessment was a constitutional question. The defendants argued that the court should review the validity of both the original and supplemental assessments, even though the trial court reviewed only the supplemental assessment. The court of appeal agreed, holding that under Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5(e), a court authorized to exercise independent judgment may admit and consider extra-record evidence in administrative mandate proceedings if the evidence was improperly excluded by the public agency or could not have been produced through the exercise of reasonable diligence at the time of the hearing [180 Cal. App. 4th 1057, 1075-1076] . The court held that the supplemental district concerned the same project as the original district and employed the same special benefit formulas, boundaries, zones, and methodology, and was evidence that the plaintiff considered in forming the supplemental district [180 Cal. App. 4th 1057, 1076] .

[b] Events Transpiring After Agency's Decision

Windigo Mills v. Unemployment Ins. Appeals Bd. (1979) 92 Cal. App. 3d 586, 155 Cal. Rptr. 63 , was an appeal from the judgment in the superior court in a mandate proceeding for review of a decision by the Unemployment Insurance Board. In reviewing the admissibility of new evidence at the administrative mandate hearing, the court found that when the Legislature granted the superior court the discretion to receive relevant evidence which, in the exercise of reasonable diligence, could not have been produced at the administrative hearing [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5(e)], it reasonably may be inferred that the Legislature meant to authorize the receipt of evidence of events which took place after the administrative hearing (92 Cal. App. 3d 586, 596-597). The court of appeal held that a superior court is authorized under Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5(e) to receive relevant evidence of events which transpired after the date of the agency's decision (92 Cal. App. 3d 586, 597).

[c] Evidence on Issue First Raised in Mandate Petition

Cranston v. City of Richmond (1985) 40 Cal. 3d 755, 221 Cal. Rptr. 779, 710 P.2d 845 , was an appeal from the judgment in the superior court in a mandate proceeding for review of a city personnel board decision discharging petitioner police officer from his job pursuant to a city personnel rule proscribing conduct unbecoming an employee of the city service. In the superior court, petitioner contended, among other things, that his discharge denied him due process of law because the rule was unconstitutionally vague in that it provided no standard on which his conduct could be judged. In its memorandum in opposition to the petition, respondents included an exhibit consisting of excerpts from the city Police Department Manual. Petitioner moved to strike the exhibit on the ground that it was not part of the administrative record. The trial court denied the motion and denied the petition. Petitioner then sought review of the denial in the Supreme Court.

The Supreme Court affirmed the trial court's judgment denying the petition (40 Cal. 3d 755, 759). The Court held that the rule, viewed in the context of other rules and practices pertaining to police service, was not so vague as to preclude discipline for conduct that was so obviously improper for a police officer and so clearly outside the scope of any substantive legal protection as the reckless and unlawful conduct in which petitioner engaged (40 Cal. 3d 755, 759). The rule was, therefore, not unconstitutionally vague as applied to a police officer who had engaged in the sort of patently unlawful and reckless conduct engaged in by petitioner (40 Cal. 3d 755, 772). The Court then addressed petitioner's argument in support of his contention that the trial court erred in denying his motion to strike respondents' additional evidence. Petitioner argued that because the police department manual was available to respondents at the time of the administrative hearing, that evidence could, with reasonable diligence, have been produced at the hearing, and that therefore the requirements of Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5(e) were not met. The Court held this argument to be without merit. The Court noted that respondents sought to introduce portions of the manual pertaining to the conduct expected of police officers because these provisions were relevant to the issue of whether the rule under which petitioner was discharged was unconstitutionally vague. Petitioner did not challenge the constitutionality of the rule in the hearing before the city personnel board; the issue was first raised in the petition for writ of mandate. Until petitioner raised the issue in his petition, respondents had no reason to anticipate that the challenge would be made and, consequently, had no reason to offer into evidence those portions of the manual that were relevant to petitioner's constitutional challenge. The Court held, under these circumstances, that the trial court did not abuse its discretion under Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5(e) by denying petitioners motion to strike respondents' exhibit (40 Cal. 3d 755, 773).

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Receipt of Additional Evidence

Garamendi v. Golden Eagle Insurance Company (2005) 128 Cal. App. 4th 452, 27 Cal. Rptr. 3d 239 was an appeal of the California Insurance Commissioner's rejection of tort claims against an insurance company. Two former employees of Golden Eagle filed claims against Golden Eagle in liquidation proceedings to recover for alleged fraudulent inducement of their employment contracts, wrongful discharge, defamation, and intentional infliction of emotional distress. The Commissioner rejected the claims. In a proceeding in the trial court to review the Commissioner's rejections, appellants submitted evidence that the Commissioner had not considered during the claims investigation. The trial court refused to consider this new evidence in reviewing the Commissioner's decisions, but the court offered to send the matter back to the Commissioner for further consideration in light of the additional evidence. The court of appeal held that it was appropriate to apply a rule analogous to that applied by trial courts in reviewing adjudicatory administrative decisions under Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5 (128 Cal. App. 4th 452, 468). The court of appeal held that while the trial court may accept and consider evidence that was not before the Commissioner in reviewing the rejection of a claim, the court may consider that evidence only to rule on issues other than the merits of the claim, such as the thoroughness of the Commissioner's investigation, the fairness of the Commissioner's procedures, or the Commissioner's unjustified failure to consider relevant evidence (128 Cal. App. 4th 452, 468). On the other hand, the court must evaluate the Commissioner's exercise of discretion in ruling on the merits of the claims based only on the evidence the Commissioner actually considered (128 Cal. App. 4th 452, 468).

Tiholiz v. Northridge Hospital Foundation (1984) 151 Cal. App. 3d 1197, 199 Cal. Rptr. 338 , involved an appeal from a denial of a writ of administrative mandate. In its decision to deny the writ, the trial court admitted portions of two declarations from persons present at the administrative hearing. Appellant had claimed that the administrative procedure was not fair and that the admissions by the trial court were erroneous. The appellate court upheld the trial court's action. The declarations admitted by the trial court related to the hearing itself and whether the petitioner had raised his objections at that time. In supporting the trial court's actions, the appellate court cited Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5, which allows the admission of evidence by the trial court. It noted that the trial court was exercising its independent judgment on the evidence regarding the issue of fairness that petitioner had raised (151 Cal. App. 3d 1197, 1204-1205).

Curtin v. Department of Motor Vehicles (1981) 123 Cal. App. 3d 481, 176 Cal. Rptr. 690 , was an appeal by the Department of Motor Vehicles in which the department claimed that the trial court, in its review of the department's decision suspending Curtin's license, had erroneously considered evidence outside the record of the administrative proceeding. The contested evidence was a letter from the department to Curtin concerning an unrelated previous suspension which resulted from a departmental error and which had been terminated. The letter arrived after the administrative hearing on the present suspension and was not a part of the administrative record, but the trial court considered it in reviewing the propriety of the department's decision.

Although it reversed and remanded on other grounds, the court of appeal held that the admission of the letter was proper under Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5(e), which allows the admission of relevant evidence during a mandate proceeding which could not have been produced by reasonable diligence or which was wrongfully excluded at the administrative hearing. Although it failed to specify the standard of review which had governed the trial court, the court of appeal held that the rule of Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5(e) applied whether the independent judgment or substantial evidence test is employed by the trial court. The letter concerning Curtin's erroneous license suspension, held the court, was both relevant and impossible to produce at the administrative hearing, and thus came within the purview of Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5(e) (123 Cal. App. 3d 481, 484-485).

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 195 PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
PART II. FORMS
A. Petition for Writ of Mandate
1. Grounds Supporting Petition Generally

19-195 California Points & Authorities § 195.18

§ 195.18 Writ of Mandate--Agency Usurped Judicial Power

[1] FORM Writ of Mandate--Agency Usurped Judicial Power

[This form should be combined with a memorandum generally supporting a petition for administrative mandate. See § 195.10.]

THE PETITION FOR A WRIT OF MANDATE SUFFICIENTLY ALLEGES THE INVALIDITY OF THE ADMINISTRATIVE _____ [ORDER or ACTION] OF THE _____ [identify agency], BECAUSE IT ALLEGES FACTS SHOWING THAT THE _____ [ORDER or ACTION] IS AN UNCONSTITUTIONAL USURPATION OF JUDICIAL POWER.

A. Judicial Power Is Vested in Courts. The judicial power of California is vested in the Supreme Court, superior courts, and municipal courts (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 1).

B. Exercise of Judicial Power. Agencies not vested by the California Constitution with judicial powers may not exercise judicial powers (see Strumsky v. San Diego County Employees Retirement Assn. (1974) 11 Cal. 3d 28, 42, 112 Cal. Rptr. 805, 520 P.2d 29).

C. Test for Constitutionality. The exercise of an act of a judicial nature by an administrative agency is constitutional only when the act is authorized by statute or legislation, is reasonably necessary to effectuate the agency's primary, legitimate regulatory purposes, and when the act does not usurp the power of courts to make enforceable, binding judgments (Walnut Creek Manor v. Fair Employment & Housing Com. (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 245, 256, 284 Cal. Rptr. 718, 814 P.2d 704 ; McHugh v. Santa Monica Rent Control Bd. (1989) 49 Cal. 3d 348, 359, 372, 374, 261 Cal. Rptr. 318, 777 P.2d 91).

[Optional] D. Treble Damages. An award of treble damages by an administrative agency violates the judicial powers clause of the California Constitution (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 1) and is invalid (McHugh v. Santa Monica Rent Control Bd. (1989) 49 Cal. 3d 348, 378, 386, 261 Cal. Rptr. 318, 777 P.2d 91).

[Optional] E. Immediately Effective Restitution Orders. An administrative order requiring immediate payment of money or authorizing immediate withholding of money that would otherwise be owed violates the judicial powers clause of the California Constitution (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 1) if the order takes effect before the court has an opportunity to decide whether to stay the order pending review by writ of mandate (McHugh v. Santa Monica Rent Control Bd. (1989) 49 Cal. 3d 348, 376-377, 386, 261 Cal. Rptr. 318, 777 P.2d 91).

[Optional] F. Compensatory Damages for Emotional Distress. An award by an administrative agency of unlimited general compensatory damages for emotional distress violates the judicial powers clause of the California Constitution (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 1), and is invalid (Walnut Creek Manor v. Fair Employment & Housing Com. (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 245, 251, 265, 267, 284 Cal. Rptr. 718, 814 P.2d 704).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be used in support of a petition for a writ of mandate to review an administrative decision, when the petition alleges that the challenged act or decision by the agency is a usurpation of the judicial power vested in the courts by Cal. Const, art. VI, § 1.

This form should be combined with a memorandum generally supporting a petition for administrative mandate [see § 195.10].

This form should not be used if the agency has acted pursuant to a grant of judicial power through the California Constitution. Some statewide agencies, such as the Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control and the Public Utilities Commission, are created by the Constitution, and are thereby vested with certain judicial powers [see Cal. Const., arts. XII, XX, § 22]. Others, such as the Workers' Compensation Appeals Board, have been legislatively endowed with judicial powers pursuant to a specific constitutional authorization [see Cal. Const., art. XIV, §§ 1, 4].

For references to related Pleading and Practice chapters, see § 195.10.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should show that the action taken by the agency is not reasonably necessary to effectuate the agency's primary, legitimate regulatory purposes. See Comments under § 195.10[2][b] for further discussion.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Exercise of Judicial Power

The facts and procedural background of Strumsky v. San Diego County Employees Retirement Assn. (1974) 11 Cal. 3d 28, 112 Cal. Rptr. 805, 520 P.2d 29 are set forth in § 195.11[3]. In Strumsky, the Supreme Court noted that Cal. Const., art. VI disposes of all judicial power not expressly disposed of elsewhere in the California Constitution (11 Cal. 3d 28, 42).

[b] Test for Constitutionality

In Walnut Creek Manor v. Fair Employment & Housing Com. (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 245, 284 Cal. Rptr. 718, 814 P.2d 704 , a African-American male filed a complaint of housing discrimination with the Fair Employment and Housing Commission. An administrative law judge awarded the complainant, among other damages, $1,500 in unspecified compensatory damages. On consideration of additional argument, the Commission found that complainant had been discriminated against on the basis of marital status as well as race, and awarded him, among other damages and fees, $50,000 in compensatory damages for emotional distress. On petition for writ of administrative mandate on issues unrelated to the judicial powers doctrine, the trial court remanded the case to the Commission, and all parties appealed. The court of appeal held, on the issue of agency usurpation of judicial power, that Gov. Code § 12987 of the Fair Employment and Housing Act (Gov. Code § 12900 et seq.) authorizes the Commission to award unlimited compensatory damages for housing discrimination. However, the court held the award of general compensatory damages for emotional distress to be an unconstitutional exercise of judicial power by a nonjudicial body in violation of the judicial powers clause of Cal. Const., art. VI, § 1.

The California Supreme Court affirmed the appellate court's ruling on this issue, modifying the judgment with directions to order the superior court to modify its writ to strike the award of compensatory damages for emotional distress (54 Cal. 3d 245, 273). In affirming as modified, the Court applied the test, first articulated in McHugh v. Santa Monica Rent Control Bd. (1989) 49 Cal. 3d 348, 261 Cal. Rptr. 318, 777 P.2d 91 , and set forth in the discussion of McHugh, below, for determining whether an administrative agency's award of general compensatory damages violates the judicial powers clause (54 Cal. 3d 245, 255-256). Under the first, or substantive, prong of the test, the Court initially inquires as to whether the award is authorized by legislation and is reasonably necessary to accomplish the administrative agency's regulatory purposes. Next, the Court closely scrutinizes the agency's asserted regulatory purposes to ascertain whether the award is merely incidental to a proper, primary regulatory purpose, or whether it is in reality an attempt to transfer determination of a traditional common-law claim from the courts to the agency whose primary purpose is the processing of that type of claim (54 Cal. 3d 245, 256). Under the second, or procedural, prong of the test, the Court ascertains whether judicial power remains ultimately with the courts through the power of judicial review (54 Cal. 3d 245, 265). Noting McHugh's express rejection of the proposition that an agency may exercise all manner of judicial-like power on the simple condition that judicial review of the administrative decision remains available, the Court found the Commission's award of compensatory damages for emotional distress in violation of the judicial powers clause. Even though the award satisfied the second prong of the McHugh test, it failed the first prong of the test (54 Cal. 3d 245, 264-267).

In McHugh v. Santa Monica Rent Control Bd. (1989) 49 Cal. 3d 348, 261 Cal. Rptr. 318, 777 P.2d 91 , two tenants filed an administrative complaint, pursuant to a city charter amendment, alleging that a landlord had overcharged them on rent. After a hearing officer made initial determinations and orders, the parties appealed to the city's rent control board. The board held that the tenants had been overcharged, and awarded restitution of excess rent as well as treble damages. The board expressly authorized one of the tenants to withhold excess rent from future rent payments, and the board's order further stated that the withheld amounts would not form the basis for an unlawful detainer proceeding based on non-payment of rent. The landlord filed a petition for writ of mandate under Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5, seeking to compel the rent control board to set aside its decision on the ground that administrative adjudication of "excess rents" violated the judicial powers clause of the California Constitution (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 1). After a hearing, the trial court granted the landlord's motion for summary judgment and entered judgment granting the petition for writ of mandate. It issued a peremptory writ ordering the rent control board to vacate its decisions regarding the two tenants. The trial court declared invalid a provision in the charter amendment that permitted administrative adjudication of excess rents, noting that the provision required the board to exercise judicial powers that fell within the ambit of Cal. Const., art. VI, § 1. The rent control board appealed.

The California Supreme Court reversed the judgment, but ordered the trial court to issue a new writ directing the board to reduce its awards to eliminate the treble damages (49 Cal. 3d 348, 379, 386) . The Court also directed that enforcement of future restitution orders of the rent control board be stayed so that parties contesting such orders are afforded an opportunity to seek judicial relief before the orders actually take effect (49 Cal. 3d 348, 377 n.44, 386). The Court concluded that the contested charter amendment provision was constitutionally infirm in that it (1) authorized the rent control board to award treble damages and (2) permitted orders awarding restitution to become effective before there was an opportunity for the court to decide whether to stay the challenged order pending review of the administrative decision by writ of mandate (49 Cal. 3d 348, 386) . The Court adopted a two-part test for determining whether an agency's acts of judicial nature constitute an unconstitutional exercise of judicial powers: an administrative agency may constitutionally hold hearings, determine facts, apply the law to those facts, and order relief, including certain types of monetary relief, so long as (1) the activities are authorized by statute or legislation and are reasonably necessary to effectuate the administrative agency's primary, legitimate regulatory purposes, and (2) the essential judicial power (that is, the power to make enforceable binding judgments) remains ultimately in the courts, through review of agency determinations (49 Cal. 3d 348, 359, 372, 374). The Court found that an administrative order directing restitution of excess rent would be permissible under the test, but that the board's actual order, assessing treble damages and directing the immediate withholding of money that would otherwise be owed, did not meet the test (49 Cal. 3d 348, 375-379).

[c] Treble Damages

The facts and procedural background of McHugh v. Santa Monica Rent Control Bd. (1989) 49 Cal. 3d 348, 261 Cal. Rptr. 318, 777 P.2d 91 are discussed in [b], above. In McHugh, the Supreme Court concluded that the rent control board's imposition of treble damages pursuant to the city charter amendment violated the judicial powers clause (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 1) (49 Cal. 3d 348, 386). The Court found that the agency's assessment of treble damages violated the first prong of the Court's test for constitutionality, which requires that the activity in question be reasonably necessary to effectuate the administrative agency's primary, legitimate regulatory purpose (49 Cal. 3d 348, 372, 378-379). The Court noted that administrative agencies regularly exercise a range of powers designed to induce compliance with their regulatory authority (such as the imposition of fines or penalties) and there is no reason to believe that such options would be insufficient under the circumstances of the case (49 Cal. 3d 348, 378-379). More significant to the Court, however, was its belief that the power to award damages would pose a risk of producing arbitrary, disproportionate results that would magnify, beyond acceptable risks, the possibility of arbitrariness inherent in any scheme of administrative adjudication (49 Cal. 3d 348, 379).

[d] Immediately Effective Restitution Orders

The facts and procedural background of McHugh v. Santa Monica Rent Control Bd. (1989) 49 Cal. 3d 348, 261 Cal. Rptr. 318, 777 P.2d 91 are discussed in [3][b], above. In McHugh, the Supreme Court concluded that the rent control board's authorization to one tenant to withhold overpaid rent immediately, pursuant to a city charter amendment, violated the judicial powers clause (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 1) (49 Cal. 3d 348, 377). The Court found that the agency's authorization to the tenant violated the second prong of the Court's test for constitutionality, which requires that the activity in question not usurp the power of the courts to make enforceable binding judgments through the review of agency determinations (49 Cal. 3d 348, 372, 376-377) . The Court noted that under the charter amendment, the board could direct a tenant to withhold rent money otherwise due before the landlord had even the opportunity to obtain judicial review by petition for writ of mandate and a stay of the board's order (49 Cal. 3d 348, 376).

[e] Compensatory Damages for Emotional Distress

The facts and procedural background of Walnut Creek Manor v. Fair Employment & Housing Com. (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 245, 284 Cal. Rptr. 718, 814 P.2d 704 , are discussed in Test for Constitutionality, above. In that case, the Supreme Court held that a $50,000 award by the Fair Employment and Housing Commission of compensatory damages for emotional distress to an individual found to have been the victim of housing discrimination based on race and marital status violated the judicial powers clause of the California Constitution (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 1) (54 Cal. 3d 245, 257, 265). The Court found that the Commission's award violated the first prong of the Court's test for constitutionality, in that the award was neither reasonably necessary to accomplish nor merely incidental to the Commission's primary regulatory purposes (54 Cal. 3d 245, 264). In so ruling, the Court invalidated Gov. Code § 12987 of the Fair Employment and Housing Act (Gov. Code § 12900 et seq.) under the judicial powers clause insofar as that statute authorizes the award of nonquantifiable general compensatory damages for emotional distress and other intangible injury (54 Cal. 3d 245, 267).

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Exercise of Judicial Power

In Lance Camper Mfg. Corp. v. Republic Indem. Co. (1996) 44 Cal. App. 4th 194, 51 Cal. Rptr. 2d 622 , an employer brought an action against its workers' compensation insurer for breach of contract and bad faith. The trial court granted the insurer's motion for judgment on the pleadings, concluding that an employer must pursue administrative review before suing its insurer for breach of contract. The court of appeal disagreed, ruling that the Insurance Commissioner's supervisory and regulatory power over the insurance industry does not give him power to adjudicate all insurance disputes unless persuasive legislative intent to grant this authority can be identified (44 Cal. App. 4th 194, 199). The court noted that the California Supreme Court has acknowledged in Moradi-Shalal v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Companies (1988) 46 Cal. 3d 287, 250 Cal. Rptr. 116, 758 P.2d 58 that private civil actions against insurers are not foreclosed by the powers of the Insurance Commissioner. Since the insured is not challenging rates as being unfair and contrary to administrative regulations, but rather is challenging the insurer's claims handling practices, the insured's claim is not one that is subject to administrative review (44 Cal. App. 4th 194, 203). The court thus reversed the trial court order of dismissal of the action.

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 195 PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
PART II. FORMS
A. Petition for Writ of Mandate
1. Grounds Supporting Petition Generally

19-195 California Points & Authorities § 195.19

§ 195.19 Writ of Mandate--Petitioner May Recover Attorney's Fees

[1] FORM Writ of Mandate--Petitioner May Recover Attorney's Fees

[This form should be combined with a memorandum generally supporting a petition for administrative mandate. See § 195.10.]

THE COURT SHOULD AWARD PETITIONER HIS/HER ATTORNEY'S FEES IF THE PETITIONER PREVAILS, BECAUSE THE _____ [ORDER or DECISION] WAS THE RESULT OF ARBITRARY OR CAPRICIOUS ACTION OR CONDUCT BY _____ [identify public agency or official], A _____ [PUBLIC AGENCY or PUBLIC OFFICIAL IN HIS/HER OFFICIAL CAPACITY], AND THE PETITIONER IS PERSONALLY OBLIGATED TO PAY THOSE FEES.

A. Recovery of Attorney's Fees. In any civil proceeding for review of a final administrative adjudicatory order or decision (except one made by the State Board of Control), when it is shown that the order or decision was the result of arbitrary or capricious action or conduct by a public agency or a public official in his or her official capacity, the complainant, if he or she prevails, may collect reasonable attorney's fees, computed at $100 per hour, but not to exceed $7,500, when he or she is personally obligated to pay those fees (Gov. Code § 800; Zuehlsdorf v. Simi Valley Unified School District (2007) 148 Cal. App. 4th 249, 255-256, 55 Cal. Rptr. 3d 467 ; Abshear v. Teachers' Retirement Board (1991) 231 Cal. App. 3d 1629, 1638, 282 Cal. Rptr. 833).

[Optional] B. Fees May Be Recovered Without Formal Hearing. A denial of rights resulting from an administrative proceeding is no less because the denial did not follow a formal administrative hearing, nor would the attorney's fees and costs for seeking review be any less, and thus attorney's fees may be allowed for review of administrative proceedings when there was no formal administrative hearing (Forrest v. Trustees of Cal. State University & Colleges (1984) 160 Cal. App. 3d 357, 366-368, 206 Cal. Rptr. 595 ; A.B.C. Federation of Teachers v. A.B.C. Unified Sch. Dist. (1977) 75 Cal. App. 3d 332, 342, 344-345, 142 Cal. Rptr. 111).

[Optional] C. Arbitrary or Capricious Action or Conduct. Arbitrary or capricious action or conduct encompasses action or conduct that is not supported by a fair or substantial reason, shows a stubborn insistence on following unauthorized conduct, or amounts to a bad-faith legal dispute (Abshear v. Teachers' Retirement Board (1991) 231 Cal. App. 3d 1629, 1638, 282 Cal. Rptr. 833 ; Cerini v. City of Cloverdale (1987) 191 Cal. App. 3d 1471, 1481, 237 Cal. Rptr. 116).

[Optional] D. Fees to Association Complaining on Behalf of Members. An award of attorney's fees to an association complaining on behalf of its members is authorized if the association is obligated to pay the fees (Redondo Beach Police Officers Assn. v. City of Redondo Beach (1977) 68 Cal. App. 3d 595, 596, 597, 137 Cal. Rptr. 384).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a petition for writ of mandate, or an appellate brief, for review of a final administrative adjudicatory order or decision, when the petition or brief contends that the order or decision was the result of arbitrary or capricious action or conduct by the respondent and that the petitioner is personally obligated to pay attorney's fees in some amount up to $7,500 [Gov. Code § 800].

The request for attorney's fees should be raised in the trial court, because the issue of arbitrary or capricious conduct is one of fact and, as such, inextricably related to the merits of the case [Plumbing etc. Employers Council v. Quillin (1976) 64 Cal. App. 3d 215, 222-223, 134 Cal. Rptr. 332] . Given the factual nature of the issue, Gov. Code § 800 does not permit a determination of the issue by the appellate court when the issue was not raised below. Moreover, the statute certainly does not permit a determination of the issue by the trial court after an appeal has become final [Plumbing etc. Employers Council v. Quillin (1976) 64 Cal. App. 3d 215, 225, 134 Cal. Rptr. 332] .

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. See Comments under § 195.10[2][b] for further discussion.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Recovery of Attorney's Fees

Gov. Code § 800 provides that in any civil action to appeal or review the award, finding, or other determination of any administrative proceeding under the Government Code or under any other provision of state law, except actions resulting from actions of the State Board of Control, when it is shown that the award, finding, or other determination of the proceeding was the result of arbitrary or capricious action or conduct by a public entity or an officer thereof in his or her official capacity, the complainant, if he or she prevails in the civil action, may collect reasonable attorney's fees, computed at $100 per hour, but not to exceed $7,500, when he or she is personally obligated to pay the fees, from the public entity, in addition to any other relief granted or other costs awarded.

In Zuehlsdorf v. Simi Valley Unified School District (2007) 148 Cal. App. 4th 249, 255-256, 55 Cal. Rptr. 3d 467 , plaintiff Jessica Zuehlsdorf was a high school sophomore who transferred to the defendant school district from a private school. Zuehlsdorf had played varsity basketball at the private school and wished to play varsity soccer in the defendant school district. Under the California Interscholastic Federation requirements, Zuehlsdorf could not play varsity basketball at the public school because she had participated in that sport at the private school. She was, however, permitted to play any other varsity level sport at the public school, including varsity soccer. Zuehlsdorf tried out for varsity soccer and made the team. Before her first game, Zuehlsdorf's coach told her she could not participate. Zuehlsdorf filed a petition for writ of mandate seeking a restraining order enjoining defendants from preventing her from playing varsity soccer. The school district acknowledged that Zuehlsdorf was eligible to play varsity soccer under CIF rules, but claimed that the CIF permitted them to enact more stringent regulations concerning eligibility. Thus, the school district decided that Zuehlsdorf was ineligible to play varsity soccer for one calendar year upon her enrollment within that league. The school district held a special meeting to consider Zuehlsdorf's appeal and reaffirmed its decision as to Zuehlsdorf's ineligibility.

The trial court granted a writ of mandate and temporary restraining order to reinstate Zuehlsdorf in the athletic program. The trial court awarded Zuehlsdorf $6,344 in attorney's fees pursuant to Gov. Code § 800. The school district appealed the attorney's fees award, arguing that the court erred because there was no factual finding that it acted arbitrarily and capriciously.

The court of appeal disagreed. It noted that the trial court issued a detailed written decision concluding that the school district's exclusion of Zuehlsdorf, based on their own rule whose terms they could not define, was "illogical and capricious." The trial court had observed that, if the rule was interpreted as the defendants suggested, a student would never know if he or she was qualified to participate. Contrary to the school district's argument, the court of appeal held that the trial court made a clear factual finding that the district's conduct was capricious (148 Cal. App. 4th 249, 256) .

In Abshear v. Teachers' Retirement Board (1991) 231 Cal. App. 3d 1629, 282 Cal. Rptr. 833 , plaintiff sought a disability allowance from defendant board after a knee injury permanently prevented her from working as a physical education teacher. The board denied her application, concluding that she had sufficient college education units to obtain a teaching credential in subjects other than physical education. After a hearing, an administrative law judge reached the same decision, and the board adopted that decision. Plaintiff then filed a petition for a writ of mandate in superior court. The superior court issued the writ, commanding the board to either grant disability benefits to plaintiff or require her to participate in a rehabilitation program to enable her to perform classroom teaching duties within a reasonable time. In so doing, the superior court also awarded plaintiff her attorney's fees in the amount of $1,500. The board appealed from the judgment.

The court of appeal affirmed the superior court's judgment and award of attorney's fees. Furthermore, the appellate court ordered that plaintiff was entitled to recover her attorney's fees on appeal (231 Cal. App. 3d 1629, 1639). In so ruling, the court held that the board's decision not to grant plaintiff a disability allowance and not to rehabilitate her for classroom teaching was arbitrary and capricious in that it was not supported by a fair and substantial reason (231 Cal. App. 3d 1629, 1639). The court based its ruling on the facts that even though plaintiff had completed college-level course work in various subjects for which a teaching credential could be issued, her course work was done nearly 30 years earlier and, not surprisingly, she could remember nothing of the course contents. The court noted that, given these facts, even though plaintiff might be eligible to obtain a credential in one of those subjects, she would still not be qualified to teach them because there was no evidence that she possessed any classroom teaching skills or any transmittable knowledge of those subjects (231 Cal. App. 3d 1629, 1635, 1637). In light of these facts, the board's decision directly contradicted the legislative mandate that teacher credentialing be based not on the completion of course work alone but on specified additional criteria which the board knew plaintiff could not meet (231 Cal. App. 3d 1629, 1636-1637).

[b] Fees May Be Recovered Without Formal Hearing

In Forrest v. Trustees of Cal. State University & Colleges (1984) 160 Cal. App. 3d 357, 206 Cal. Rptr. 595 , plaintiff was a probationary employee within defendant's system. After he received notice of his termination for failure to pass his probationary period as a custodian, he filed a request for a grievance hearing. Plaintiff's grievance was summarily denied in a letter without any formal administrative hearing on the ground that it was untimely filed. Plaintiff then filed a petition for a writ of mandate to compel defendants to process his grievance and pay him back salary from the date of his dismissal. The trial court granted the petition and judgment was entered directing defendants to process the grievance, pay plaintiff back salary, and allow him reasonable attorney's fees and costs. Defendants appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the issuance of the writ of mandate and the award of attorney's fees and costs. Defendants claimed that Gov. Code § 800, the basis for the award of attorney's fees, did not apply, as the writ was not an action to review an administrative proceeding. The court disagreed and distinguished the cases cited by defendants. Gov. Code § 800 was not meant to be interpreted narrowly. The language clearly indicated a legislative intent to allow a prevailing petitioner attorney's fees for reviewing arbitrary or capricious action or conduct by a public entity or officer thereof for any award, finding, or other determination of any administrative proceeding. Denial of plaintiff's grievance resulted from an administrative decision of some public officer which occurred necessarily at an administrative proceeding. His alleged denial of rights was no less because the denial did not follow a full-blown administrative hearing, nor were the attorney's fees and costs for seeking a review any less. Gov. Code § 800 provides fees and costs for review by a civil action of an administrative determination by a public entity, and there is no rationale for limiting it to appeal or review from a formal administrative hearing. It is a remedial statute designed to enable employees to seek relief in the courts against arbitrary or capricious action by public entities or officers, and as such, should be liberally construed (160 Cal. App. 3d 357, 366-368).

In A.B.C. Federation of Teachers v. A.B.C. Unified Sch. Dist. (1977) 75 Cal. App. 3d 332, 142 Cal. Rptr. 111 , six teachers were hired by defendant district to teach during the 1975-76 school year at an annual salary plus a stipend for extra service assignments. During the school year, the district notified the teachers by letter that, pursuant to a newly-amended school board policy deleting the stipend, they would not receive stipends. The teachers then filed a grievance in accordance with district procedure demanding payment of the stipends. The district sent them a letter denying their grievance. The teachers then filed a petition for a writ of mandate, demanding payment of the stipends and characterizing the district's action as arbitrary and capricious and an abuse of discretion. The trial court found mandate to be an appropriate remedy for the teachers and granted their petition. It found the district's action to be arbitrary and capricious and awarded them attorney's fees. The district appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment of the trial court. In so doing, it held that mandate was an appropriate remedy for the teachers. While not discussing the relationship among issues of the propriety of the remedy, the absence of a formal administrative hearing, and the award of attorney's fees, the court found the district had an official duty to pay the stipends. This duty arose out of the district's legal duty not to reduce teachers' salaries after the beginning of the school year, and constituted an obligation imposed by provisions of the Education Code and district salary schedules and policies (75 Cal. App. 3d 332, 342). The court also held the award of attorney's fees to be justified, in that the law was well settled that teachers' salaries could not be reduced retroactively after the beginning of the school year. Therefore, the district's conduct was arbitrary and capricious in that it manifested a stubborn insistence on following an unauthorized course of action (75 Cal. App. 3d 332, 343-344). In upholding the award of attorney's fees to the teachers, the appellate court further found that the trial court made a specific finding of fact, supported by testimony at trial on the mandate petition, that the teachers were personally obligated to pay their attorney's fees (75 Cal. App. 3d 332, 344).

[c] Arbitrary or Capricious Action or Conduct

The facts and procedural background of Abshear v. Teachers' Retirement Board (1991) 231 Cal. App. 3d 1629, 282 Cal. Rptr. 833 are discussed in Recovery of Attorney's Fees, above. In that case, the court of appeal found the Teachers' Retirement Board decision arbitrary and capricious because it directly contradicted the legislative mandate that teacher credentialing be based not on the completion of course work alone but on specified additional criteria that it knew plaintiff could not meet (231 Cal. App. 3d 1629, 1636-1637). As such, the court held the decision unsupported by a fair and substantial reason. The court also held plaintiff justified to an award of attorney's fees in the superior court and on appeal (231 Cal. App. 3d 1629, 1639). In support of its ruling, the court held an administrative agency's or public official's action to be arbitrary and capricious if it encompasses conduct that is not supported by a fair or substantial reason, shows a stubborn insistence on following unauthorized conduct, or amounts to a bad-faith legal dispute (231 Cal. App. 3d 1629, 1638).

In Cerini v. City of Cloverdale (1987) 191 Cal. App. 3d 1471, 237 Cal. Rptr. 116 , the city council of defendant city terminated plaintiff city police officer. Plaintiff then exercised his right to have a city appeals board review the city council's decision. After plaintiff exercised the right, but before the hearing, the city council reduced the board's power to make binding decisions to the power to find facts only. The city council then rejected the board's finding that the officer's actions did not impugn his job capabilities, and voted to uphold his termination despite the board's recommendation that he be reinstated with back pay. Plaintiff sought review by way of administrative mandate, seeking a writ to command the city to comply with the board's decision to reinstate him. The trial court entered judgment denying the petition and plaintiff appealed from that judgment.

The court of appeal reversed the judgment and remanded the case to the trial court with directions to issue the writ and award plaintiff his attorney's fees under Gov. Code § 800. In so ruling, the court held defendant's conduct leading up to and including its decision to uphold plaintiff's discharge constituted an unjustifiable reaction, unsupported by substantial reason or fact, to plaintiff's attempt to pursue his right of appeal. The court found the city council's eleventh-hour resolution to reduce the appeals board's authority, in violation of the meet-and-confer requirements of the Meyers-Milias-Brown Act (Gov. Code § 3500 et seq.), and its decision to uphold plaintiff's termination despite the board's ruling that the sustained charges did not impugn his professional ability and that he be reinstated to be arbitrary and capricious conduct within the meaning of Gov. Code § 800 (191 Cal. App. 3d 1471, 1481-1482). In support of its decision, the court held recovery of attorney's fees to be proper when an administrative agency or public official makes an unsubstantiated determination or engages in conduct not supported by substantial reason, engages in a bad-faith legal dispute, or follows a course of action contrary to law (191 Cal. App. 3d 1471, 1481).

[d] Fees to Association Complaining on Behalf of Members

In Redondo Beach Police Officers Assn. v. City of Redondo Beach (1977) 68 Cal. App. 3d 595, 137 Cal. Rptr. 384 , defendant city, to carry out the provisions of the Meyers-Milias-Brown Act (Gov. Code § 3500), included three city police captains in an employee representation unit comprised of city employees who were not peace officers. The captains subsequently requested recognition as a separate bargaining unit within plaintiff association, which was comprised of all peace officers from the rank of lieutenant and below. The city refused the request, and the association sought a writ of mandate compelling the city to place them in plaintiff association. The trial court issued a peremptory writ in plaintiff's favor and awarded attorney's fees to the association. The city appealed from the judgment issuing the writ.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment of the trial court and the award of attorney's fees to plaintiff association. Although the court stated that the award of fees was amply justified (68 Cal. App. 3d 595, 597), it did not articulate a rationale for the award. In support of its ruling, the court found that Gov. Code. § 3508, a provision of the Meyers-Milias-Brown Act, clearly entitled all peace officers to representation by an employee representational group from which other types of employees are excluded. Additionally, the court cited case law holding unequivocally the same (68 Cal. App. 3d 595, 597). Finally, the court described case law cited by defendant in support of its decision as "quite unhelpful" (68 Cal. App. 3d 595, 598). The court further noted that there was no merit to defendant's contention that plaintiff association had no standing to sue and was not a real party in interest (68 Cal. App. 3d 595, 599). In light of these points raised by the court, counsel could argue that defendant's conduct was arbitrary and capricious in that it constituted a course of conduct contrary to law [see, e.g., Cerini v. City of Cloverdale (1987) 191 Cal. App. 3d 1471, 1481, 237 Cal. Rptr. 116 , discussed in [c], above].

17 of 199 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 195 PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
PART II. FORMS
A. Petition for Writ of Mandate
1. Grounds Supporting Petition Generally

19-195 California Points & Authorities §§ 195.20-195.29

[Reserved]

§§ 195.20[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 195 PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
PART II. FORMS
A. Petition for Writ of Mandate
2. APA Adjudication "Bill of Rights"

19-195 California Points & Authorities § 195.30

§ 195.30 Violation of Administrative Adjudication "Bill of Rights"--General Form

[1] FORM Violation of Administrative Adjudication "Bill of Rights"--General Form

[This form should be combined with a memorandum generally supporting a petition for administrative mandate. See § 195.10.]

THE COURT SHOULD SET ASIDE THE _____ [DECISION or ORDER] OF _____ [identify agency] ON THE GROUND THAT PETITIONER WAS DENIED A FAIR TRIAL, BECAUSE THE ADJUDICATIVE PROCEEDINGS FAILED TO MEET MINIMUM DUE PROCESS AND PUBLIC INTEREST REQUIREMENTS.

A. Inquiry on Review Extends to Whether There Was a Fair Trial. The inquiry in a case in which a writ is issued for the purpose of inquiring into the validity of any final administrative order or decision under Code of Civil Procedure Section 1094.5(a) extends to questions whether there was a fair trial (Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5(b)).

B. Minimum Standards Stated in Adjudication "Bill of Rights." Government Code Section 11425.10 specifies the minimum due process and public interest requirements that must be satisfied in a public agency hearing that is subject to Government Code Section 11400 et seq., [including a formal hearing under Government Code Section 11500 et seq.] (25 Cal. L. Revision Comm'n Reports 711, Comment to 1995 enactment of Gov. Code § 11425.10).

[As appropriate, add specific points and authorities supporting petition for administrative mandate based on violation of Gov. Code § 11425.10. See § 195.31 et seq.]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a petition for writ of mandate for review of a final administrative adjudicatory order or decision on the ground that the petitioner was deprived of a fair hearing because the respondent failed to comply with the requirements stated in the Administrative Adjudication "Bill of Rights" set out in the Administrative Procedure Act (APA; Gov. Code § 11340 et seq.), which became operative July 1, 1997 [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5(b); 25 Cal. L. Revision Comm'n Reports 711, Comment to 1995 enactment of Gov. Code § 11425.10].

This form should be combined with a memorandum generally supporting a petition for administrative mandate [see § 195.10 et seq.]. As appropriate, this form should be combined with specific points and authorities supporting petition for administrative mandate based on violation of Gov. Code § 11425.10 [see § 195.31 et seq.].

With appropriate modifications this memorandum may be used to oppose a demurrer to the petition or a motion for judgment on the pleadings in favor of the respondent.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. Any statement of fact should be supported by adequate reference to evidence admitted or otherwise cognizable by the court. See also Comments in § 195.11[2][b].

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For further discussion related to pleading requirements of a petition for writ of mandate to review an administrative decision, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 474C, Procedures in Reviewing Agency Decisions (Matthew Bender). For further discussion relating to the APA's administrative adjudication "Bill of Rights," see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 473, Public Agency Adjudication (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Inquiry on Review Extends to Whether There Was a Fair Trial

The inquiry in a case in which a writ is issued for the purpose of inquiring into the validity of any final administrative order or decision under Code of Civil Procedure Section 1094.5(a) extends to questions whether the respondent has proceeded without or in excess jurisdiction; whether there was a fair trial; and whether there was any prejudicial abuse of discretion [Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5(b)].

Chapter 4.5 (Gov. Code § 11400 et seq.), that portion of the Administrative Procedure Act which includes the administrative adjudication bill of rights provisions, applies generally to agency proceedings to the same extent as Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5(a), which states that Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5 applies only when an agency has issued a final decision "as the result of a proceeding in which by law a hearing is required to be given, evidence is required to be taken, and discretion in the determination of facts is vested in the [state agency]" [see 25 Cal. L. Rev. Comm. Reports 55 (1995)].

[b] Minimum Standards Stated in Adjudication "Bill of Rights"

Gov. Code § 11425.10 specifies the minimum due process and public interest requirements that must be satisfied in an agency hearing that is subject to Gov. Code § 11400 et seq., including one conducted under the formal hearing provisions of the Administrative Procedure Act (Gov. Code § 11500 et seq.) [25 Cal. L. Revision Comm'n Reports 711, Comment to 1995 enactment of Gov. Code § 11425.10 (operative July, 1, 1997)].

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 195 PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
PART II. FORMS
A. Petition for Writ of Mandate
2. APA Adjudication "Bill of Rights"

19-195 California Points & Authorities § 195.31

§ 195.31 Violation of Administrative Adjudication "Bill of Rights"--Petitioner Denied of Notice or Opportunity to Be Heard

[1] FORM Violation of Administrative Adjudication "Bill of Rights"--Petitioner Denied of Notice or Opportunity to Be Heard

[This form should be combined with a memorandum generally supporting a petition for writ of administrative mandamus to set aside judgment or order on ground violation of Gov. Code § 11425.10. See § 195.30.]

RESPONDENT DENIED PETITIONER A FAIR HEARING BY FAILING TO PROVIDE HIM/HER WITH _____ [NOTICE and/or OPPORTUNITY TO BE HEARD].

Petitioner Is Entitled to Notice and Opportunity to Be Heard. The agency must give the person to which the agency action is directed notice and an opportunity to be heard, including the opportunity to present and rebut evidence (Gov. Code § 11425.10(a)(1)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a petition for writ of mandate for review of a final administrative adjudicatory order or decision, when the petition alleges denial of a fair trial based on violation of a person's rights under Gov. Code § 11425.10(a), the APA's administrative adjudication "Bill of Rights" (operative July, 1, 1997). The basis of this form is that the petitioner was denied notice or opportunity to be heard [Gov. Code § 11425.10(a)(1)].

This form should be combined with a memorandum generally supporting a petition for writ of administrative mandamus to set aside judgment or order on ground violation of Gov. Code § 11425.10 [see § 195.30].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. Thus, counsel would cite facts set forth in the petition relating to the agency's failure to give notice, or failure to give the petitioner a notice to be heard. See also Comments under § 195.30[2][b].

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 195 PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
PART II. FORMS
A. Petition for Writ of Mandate
2. APA Adjudication "Bill of Rights"

19-195 California Points & Authorities § 195.32

§ 195.32 Violation of Administrative Adjudication "Bill of Rights"--Petitioner denied Copy of Governing Procedure

[1] FORM Violation of Administrative Adjudication "Bill of Rights"--Petitioner denied Copy of Governing Procedure

[This form should be combined with a memorandum generally supporting a petition for writ of administrative mandamus to set aside judgment or order on ground violation of Gov. Code § 11425.10. See § 195.30.]

RESPONDENT DENIED PETITIONER A FAIR HEARING BY FAILING TO MAKE AVAILABLE TO HIM/HER A COPY OF THE GOVERNING PROCEDURE.

Petitioner Is Required to Receive Copy of Governing Procedure. The agency must make available to the person to the person to which the agency action is directed a copy of the governing procedure, including a statement whether Gov. Code § 11500 et seq. applies to the proceeding (Gov. Code § 11425.10(a)(2)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a petition for writ of mandate for review of a final administrative adjudicatory order or decision, when the petition alleges denial of a fair trial based on violation of a persons rights under Gov. Code § 11425.10(a), the APA's administrative adjudication "Bill of Rights" (operative July 1, 1997). The basis of this form is that the petitioner was denied a copy of the governing procedure [Gov. Code § 11425.10(a)(2)].

This form should be combined with a memorandum generally supporting a petition for writ of administrative mandamus to set aside judgment or order on ground violation of Gov. Code § 11425.10 [see § 195.30].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. Thus, counsel would refer to facts set forth in the petition in his or her argument relating to the failure to make the governing procedure available to the petitioner. See also Comments under § 195.30[2][b].

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 195 PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
PART II. FORMS
A. Petition for Writ of Mandate
2. APA Adjudication "Bill of Rights"

19-195 California Points & Authorities § 195.33

§ 195.33 Violation of Administrative Adjudication "Bill of Rights"--Petitioner Denied Open Hearing

[1] FORM Violation of Administrative Adjudication "Bill of Rights"--Petitioner denied Copy of Governing Procedure

[This form should be combined with a memorandum generally supporting a petition for writ of administrative mandamus to set aside judgment or order on ground violation of Gov. Code § 11425.10. See § 195.30.]

RESPONDENT DENIED PETITIONER A FAIR HEARING BY FAILING TO CONDUCT A HEARING THAT IS OPEN TO PUBLIC OBSERVATION.

Petitioner Is Entitled to Open Hearing. The hearing must be open to public observation as provided in Gov. Code § 11425.20 (Gov. Code § 11425.10(a)(3)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a petition for writ of mandate for review of a final administrative adjudicatory order or decision, when the petition alleges denial of a fair trial based on violation of a persons rights under Gov. Code § 11425.10(a), the APA's administrative adjudication "Bill of Rights" (operative July 1, 1997). The basis of this form is that the petitioner was denied an open hearing [Gov. Code § 11425.10(a)(3)].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. Thus, counsel should refer to facts set forth in the petition showing that the hearing was not open to public observation as required by Gov. Code §§ 11425.10(a)(3), 11425.10. See also Comments under § 195.30[2][b].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Petitioner Is Entitled to Open Hearing

Gov. Code § 11425.20 requires a hearing open to public observation. The presiding officer may order closure or make other protective orders for specified purposes [see Gov. Code § 11425.20(a)]. The section also provides for hearings conducted by telephone, television, or other electronic means [see Gov. Code § 11425.20(b)].

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 195 PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
PART II. FORMS
A. Petition for Writ of Mandate
2. APA Adjudication "Bill of Rights"

19-195 California Points & Authorities § 195.34

§ 195.34 Violation of Administrative Adjudication "Bill of Rights"--Agency Failed to Separate Between Adjudicative and Prosecutorial Functions

[1] FORM Violation of Administrative Adjudication "Bill of Rights"--Agency Failed to Separate Between Adjudicative and Prosecutorial Functions

[This form should be combined with a memorandum generally supporting a petition for writ of administrative mandamus to set aside judgment or order on ground violation of Gov. Code § 11425.10. See § 195.30].

RESPONDENT DENIED PETITIONER A FAIR HEARING BY FAILING TO SEPARATE THE ADJUDICATIVE FUNCTION FROM THE INVESTIGATIVE, PROSECUTORIAL, AND ADVOCACY FUNCTIONS WITHIN THE AGENCY.

Agency Must Separate Adjudicative and Prosecutorial Functions. The adjudicative function must be separated from the investigative, prosecutorial, and advocacy functions within the agency as provided in Government Code Section 11425.30 (Gov. Code § 11425.10(a)(4)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a petition for writ of mandate for review of a final administrative adjudicatory order or decision, when the petition alleges denial of a fair trial based on violation of a persons rights under Gov. Code § 11425.10(a), the APA's administrative adjudication "Bill of Rights" (operative July 1, 1997). The basis of this form is that the agency failed to separate the adjudicative function from the investigative, prosecutorial, and advocacy functions within the agency as provided in Gov. Code § 11425.30.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. Therefore, counsel should refer to facts set forth in the petition showing that the presiding officer served, or was subject to a person who served, in an investigative, prosecutorial, or advocate capacity in the proceeding. See also Comments under § 195.30[2][b].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Agency Must Separate Adjudicative and Prosecutorial Functions

Gov. Code § 11425.30 forbids a person from serving as a presiding officer in an adjudicative proceeding if the person has served as an investigator, prosecutor, or advocate in the proceeding or its preadjudicative stage, or if the person is subject to the authority, direction, or discretion, of a person who has served in any of those capacities [see Gov. Code § 11425.30(a)].

23 of 199 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 195 PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
PART II. FORMS
A. Petition for Writ of Mandate
2. APA Adjudication "Bill of Rights"

19-195 California Points & Authorities § 195.35

§ 195.35 Violation of Administrative Adjudication "Bill of Rights"--Petitioner Denied Opportunity to Disqualify Presiding Officer

[1] FORM Violation of Administrative Adjudication "Bill of Rights"--Petitioner Denied Opportunity to disqualify Presiding Officer

[This form should be combined with a memorandum generally supporting a petition for writ of administrative mandamus to set aside judgment or order on ground violation of Gov. Code § 11425.10. See § 195.30.]

RESPONDENT DENIED PETITIONER A FAIR HEARING BY DENYING HIM/HER OF THE OPPORTUNITY TO DISQUALIFY THE PRESIDING OFFICER ON THE GROUND OF _____ [BIAS and/or PREJUDICE and/or INTEREST].

Presiding Officer Subject to Disqualification. The presiding officer is subject to disqualification for bias, prejudice, or interest as provided in Government Code Section 11425.40 (Gov. Code § 11425.10(a)(5); Haas v. County of San Bernardino (2002) 27 Cal. 4th 1017, 1034, 119 Cal. Rptr. 2d 341, 45 P.3d 280 (possibility, even implicit, of future employment in exchange for favorable decisions creates an objective, constitutionally impermissible appearance and risk of bias)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a petition for writ of mandate for review of a final administrative adjudicatory order or decision, when the petition alleges denial of a fair trial based on violation of a persons rights under Gov. Code § 11425.10(a), the APA's administrative adjudication "Bill of Rights" (operative July, 1, 1997). The basis of this form is that the agency denied the petitioner the opportunity to disqualify the presiding officer on the ground of bias, prejudice, and interest as provided in Gov. Code § 11425.40 [Gov. Code § 11425.10(a)(5); but see Morongo Band of Mission Indians v. State Water Resources Control Board (2009) 45 Cal. 4th 731, 736-742, 88 Cal. Rptr. 3d

610, 199 P.3d 1142 (no violation of due process when prosecuting agency attorney simultaneously served as adviser to agency on unrelated matter); see also § 195.73].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. See also Comments under § 195.30[2][b].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Presiding Officer Subject to Disqualification

Under Gov. Code § 11425.40 , the presiding officer is subject to disqualification for bias, prejudice, or interest in the proceeding [Gov. Code § 11425.40(a)]. Certain grounds are excluded under the statute [see Gov. Code § 11425.40(b)].

In Haas v. County of San Bernardino (2002) 27 Cal. 4th 1017, 1034, 119 Cal. Rptr. 2d 341, 45 P.3d 280 , the California Supreme Court held that a temporary administrative hearing officer has a pecuniary interest requiring disqualification when the government unilaterally selects and pays the officer on an ad hoc basis and the officer's income from future adjudicative work depends entirely on the government's good will. The Court granted a petitioner's motion to disqualify the hearing officer when the officer was selected and paid for by the government, and when it appeared possible that she would be hired by the government in future cases only if she ruled in the government's favor. The Court held that the problem arises from the lack of specific statutory standards governing temporary hearing officers appointed by counties under Gov. Code § 27724, and that procedures like those set forth in the Administrative Procedure Act (Gov. Code § 11340 et seq.) are an adequate remedy.

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 195 PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
PART II. FORMS
A. Petition for Writ of Mandate
2. APA Adjudication "Bill of Rights"

19-195 California Points & Authorities § 195.36

§ 195.36 Violation of Administrative Adjudication "Bill of Rights"--Petitioner Denied Proper Written Decision

[1] FORM Violation of Administrative Adjudication "Bill of Rights"--Petitioner Denied Proper Written Decision

[This form should be combined with a memorandum generally supporting a petition for writ of administrative mandamus to set aside judgment or order on ground violation of Gov. Code § 11425.10. See § 195.30].

RESPONDENT DENIED PETITIONER A FAIR HEARING BY DENYING HIM/HER OF A WRITTEN DECISION, BASED ON THE RECORD, WITH A STATEMENT OF THE FACTUAL AND LEGAL BASIS OF THE DECISION.

Agency Must Provide Proper Written Decision. The decision must be in writing, be based on the record, and include a statement of the factual and legal basis of the decision as provided in Government Code Section 11425.50 (Gov. Code § 11425.10(a)(6)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a petition for writ of mandate for review of a final administrative adjudicatory order or decision, when the petition alleges denial of a fair trial based on violation of a persons rights under Gov. Code § 11425.10(a), the APA's administrative adjudication "Bill of Rights" (operative July, 1, 1997). The basis of this form is that the agency denied petitioner a fair hearing by denying him or her of a written decision, based on the record, with a statement of the factual and legal basis of the decision, as provided in Gov. Code § 11425.50 [Gov. Code § 11425.10(a)(6)].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. Thus, for example, counsel would refer to defects in the written decision, pointing out how those defects fail to satisfy the statutory requirements for a written decision. See also Comments under § 195.30[2][b].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Agency Must Provide Proper Written Decision

Under Gov. Code § 11425.50 , the decision must be in writing and include a statement of the factual and legal basis for the decision [Gov. Code § 11425.50(b)]. The statement of the factual basis for the decision must be based exclusively on the evidence of record in the proceeding and on matters officially noticed in the proceeding [Gov. Code § 11425.50(c)]. The statement may be in the language of, or by reference to the pleadings, but a mere repetition or paraphrase of the relevant statute or regulation is not sufficient unless it is accompanied by a concise and explicit statement of the underlying facts of record that support the decision [Gov. Code § 11425.50(b) (also providing requirements when decision based on credibility of witness)].

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 195 PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
PART II. FORMS
A. Petition for Writ of Mandate
2. APA Adjudication "Bill of Rights"

19-195 California Points & Authorities § 195.37

§ 195.37 Violation of Administrative Adjudication "Bill of Rights"--Agency Relied on Decision Not Designated and Indexed as Precedent

[1] FORM Violation of Administrative Adjudication "Bill of Rights"--Agency Relied on Decision Not Designated and Indexed as Precedent

[This form should be combined with a memorandum generally supporting a petition for writ of administrative mandamus to set aside judgment or order on ground violation of Gov. Code § 11425.10. See § 195.30.]

RESPONDENT DENIED PETITIONER A FAIR HEARING BY RELYING ON A DECISION AS PRECEDENT THAT THE AGENCY HAS NOT DESIGNATED AND INDEXED AS PRECEDENT.

Agency Relied on Nondesignated Precedent Decision. A decision may not be relied on a precedent unless the agency designates and indexes the decision as precedent as provided in Government Code Section 11425.60 (Gov. Code § 11425.10(a)(7)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a petition for writ of mandate for review of a final administrative adjudicatory order or decision, when the petition alleges denial of a fair trial based on violation of a persons rights under Gov. Code § 11425.10(a), the APA's administrative adjudication "Bill of Rights" (operative July 1, 1997). The basis of this form is that the agency relied on a decision that it has not designated and indexed as precedent, as provided in Gov. Code § 11425.60 [Gov. Code § 11425.10(a)(7)].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. Thus, for example, counsel would refer to the specific portion of the decision that cites as legal basis a decision that has not been designated as precedent, and point out how the agency relied on that decision as precedent. See also Comments under § 195.30[2][b].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Agency Relied on Nondesignated Decision

Under Gov. Code § 11425.60 , a decision may not be relied on a precedent unless the agency designates the decision as a precedent decision [Gov. Code § 11425.60(a)]. The section states the criteria for designating a decision as precedent, but provides that the agency's designation or failure to designate, is not subject to judicial review [see Gov. Code § 11425.60(b)].

[b] Additional Authorities

In Corrales v. Bradstreet (2007) 153 Cal. App. 4th 33, 62 Cal. Rptr. 3d 440 , employees who sought payment for missed meal and rest periods under Labor Code § 226.7 petitioned for a writ of mandate against the Labor Commissioner. The Commissioner sought to apply to all such claims, as a binding precedent decision, an administrative decision which held that Labor Code § 226.7 payments constitute penalties rather than wages, thereby resulting in a shorter limitations period and smaller recoveries. The employees complained that the Commissioner violated statutory duties relating to timely processing of employee claims under Labor Code § 98, and improperly issued the precedent decision purporting to be binding in all Labor Code § 98 hearings, in circumvention of rulemaking requirements of the Administrative Procedure Act (APA). The trial court denied the petition.

The court of appeal reversed. It held that Labor Code § 98 hearings are not subject to the APA's administrative adjudication provisions, and therefore Government Code § 11425.60 does not apply. Consequently, the designation of the administrative decision as a binding precedent was invalid, requiring reversal of the judgment (153 Cal. App. 4th 33, 51) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 195 PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
PART II. FORMS
A. Petition for Writ of Mandate
2. APA Adjudication "Bill of Rights"

19-195 California Points & Authorities § 195.38

§ 195.38 Violation of Administrative Adjudication "Bill of Rights"--Agency Conducted Improper Ex Parte Communications

[1] FORM Violation of Administrative Adjudication "Bill of Rights"--Agency Conducted Improper Ex Parte Communications

[This form should be combined with a memorandum generally supporting a petition for writ of administrative mandamus to set aside judgment or order on ground violation of Gov. Code § 11425.10. See § 195.30.]

RESPONDENT DENIED PETITIONER A FAIR HEARING BY ENGAGING IN UNAUTHORIZED EX PARTE COMMUNICATIONS.

Agency Conducted Improper Ex Parte Communications. Ex parte communications are restricted pursuant to Government Code Section § 11430.10 et seq. (Gov. Code § 11425.10(a)(8); Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control v. Alcoholic Beverage Control Appeals Board (2006) 40 Cal. 4th 1, 10, 50 Cal. Rptr. 3d 585, 145 P.3d 462).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a petition for writ of mandate for review of a final administrative adjudicatory order or decision, when the petition alleges denial of a fair trial based on violation of a person's rights under Gov. Code § 11425.10(a), the APA's administrative adjudication "Bill of Rights" (operative July 1, 1997). The basis of this form is that the agency conducted improper ex parte communications [Gov. Code § 11425.10(a)(8)].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. Thus, counsel would refer to facts cited in the petition relating to communications with the presiding officer, arguing that those communications constitute ex parte communications that are unauthorized under Gov. Code § 11430.10 et seq. See also Comments under § 195.30[2][b].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Agency Conducted Improper Ex Parte Communications

In Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control v. Alcoholic Beverage Control Appeals Board (2006) 40 Cal. 4th 1, 50 Cal. Rptr. 3d 585, 145 P.3d 462 , the Department filed accusations against three licensees for various alleged violations of their liquor licenses. In each case, the Administrative Law Judge considered the parties' evidence and issued a proposed decision to the Department dismissing the accusation. After each administrative hearing but before the Department rendered its decision, the Department prosecutor prepared a report of hearing and apparently sent it to the Department's chief counsel, but not to any of the licensees. These reports were not part of the records, but the generic form provided space for the prosecutor to summarize the issues and the evidence presented at the hearing and to recommend a particular disposition of the case. In each case, the Department rejected the ALJ's proposed decision to dismiss the accusation and suspended the licensee's licenses.

The licensees appealed the Department's decisions to the Alcoholic Beverage Control Appeals Board (Board), arguing that the Department violated their due process rights because the decision maker, the Department's chief counsel, was the prosecutor's supervisor and a biased advocate rather than a neutral decision maker. The Board held that the reports were ex parte communications between the agency's decision maker or decision maker's advisor (the Department's chief counsel) and a party (the Department's prosecutor) prohibited under the APA, and the Department had violated the APA by failing to make the report part of the administrative record, notify the parties of its inclusion, and allow the licensees an opportunity to respond. The court of appeal affirmed.

The California Supreme Court looked at the case to determine how the APA and due process clause apply to a unitary administrative agency like the Department that combines prosecutorial and adjudicative functions in resolving administrative matters. It examined Gov. Code § 11425.10 prohibition against ex parte communications and held that none of the exceptions to the rule permit prosecutors and other adversarial agency employees to have off-the-record contact about substantive issues with the agency head, or anyone to whom the agency head delegates decision-making authority, during the pendency of an adjudicative proceeding (40 Cal. 4th 1, 10) .

The Department argued that the APA limits ex parte communications only during the trial stage, not during the decision stage. After the close of the evidentiary hearing, according to the Department, the agency's prosecutor may secretly advise the agency head without violating the APA. The Court disagreed, based on the APA's legislative history (40 Cal. 4th 1, 11-15) . The Department expressed concern that a rule precluding contact between an agency prosecutor and a decision-maker would have dramatic consequences for agencies, requiring them to split and depriving agency heads of their subordinates' advice. The Court held that nothing about their interpretation of the APA required splitting agencies. It held that the Department could still function as a unitary agency, but that it must afford licensees fundamentally fair hearings by observing a limited internal separation of functions. It held that agency heads are free to speak with anyone in the agency and to solicit and receive advice from whomever they please, except the personnel who served as adversaries in a specific case (40 Cal. 4th 1, 16) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 195 PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
PART II. FORMS
A. Petition for Writ of Mandate
2. APA Adjudication "Bill of Rights"

19-195 California Points & Authorities § 195.39

§ 195.39 Violation of Administrative Adjudication "Bill of Rights"--Petitioner Denied Language Assistance

[1] FORM Violation of Administrative Adjudication "Bill of Rights"--Petitioner Denied Language Assistance

[This form should be combined with a memorandum generally supporting a petition for writ of administrative mandamus to set aside judgment or order on ground violation of Gov. Code § 11425.10. See § 195.30.]

RESPONDENT DENIED PETITIONER A FAIR HEARING BY DEPRIVING HIM/HER OF LANGUAGE ASSISTANCE.

Petitioner Denied Language Assistance. Language assistance must be made available as provided in Government Code Section 11435.05 et seq. (Gov. Code § 11425.10(a)(9)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a petition for writ of mandate for review of a final administrative adjudicatory order or decision, when the petition alleges denial of a fair trial based on violation of a person's rights under Gov. Code § 11425.10(a), the APA's administrative adjudication "Bill of Rights" (operative July 1, 1997). The basis of this form is that the petitioner was denied language assistance as provided in Gov. Code § 11435.05 et seq. [Gov. Code § 11425.10(a)(9)].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. See also Comments under § 195.30[2][b].

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 195 PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
PART II. FORMS
A. Petition for Writ of Mandate
2. APA Adjudication "Bill of Rights"

19-195 California Points & Authorities § 195.40

§ 195.40 Violation of Administrative Adjudication "Bill of Rights"--Petitioner Bore Burden of Proof

[1] FORM Violation of Administrative Adjudication "Bill of Rights"--Petitioner Bore Burden of Proof

[This form should be combined with a memorandum generally supporting a petition for writ of administrative mandamus to set aside judgment or order on ground of violation of Gov. Code § 11425.10. See § 195.30.]

IN A PUNITIVE ACTION, RESPONDENT DENIED PETITIONER A FAIR HEARING BY REQUIRING HIM OR HER TO BEAR BURDEN OF PROVING RESPONDENT'S CASE HAD NO MERIT.

Petitioner Required to Meet Burden of Proof. In a punitive action, Respondent may not be relieved of its burden of proving its case against Petitioner (Brown v. City of Los Angeles (2002) 102 Cal. App. 4th 155, 175-176, 125 Cal. Rptr. 2d 474 ; Los Angeles Police Protective League v. City of Los Angeles (2002) 102 Cal. App. 4th 85, 92-94, 124 Cal. Rptr. 2d 911).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a petition for writ of mandate for review of a final administrative adjudicatory order or decision, when the petition alleges denial of a fair trial based on violation of a person's rights under Gov. Code § 11425.10(a), the APA's administrative adjudication "Bill of Rights." The basis of this form is that the petitioner was required to bear the burden of proof.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. Thus, counsel would refer to the facts cited in the petition showing that the petitioner was required to bear the burden of proof in the case.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

In Los Angeles Police Protective League v. City of Los Angeles (2002) 102 Cal. App. 4th 85, 124 Cal. Rptr. 2d 911 , the Los Angeles Police Protective League, on behalf of officers of the Los Angeles Police Department, challenged the Department's disciplinary procedure. The League argued that the appeal process for an officer's challenge to a punitive reduction in pay grade or involuntary reassignment did not satisfy due process because it relieved the Department of any burden of proof as to the good cause for the Department's action, and relieved the Department of the obligation to present evidence in support of its action.

The court of appeal agreed, holding that the police officers held a property interest in their advanced pay grades and bonus positions and could not be deprived of that property interest without due process of law, including the right to have the Department bear the burden of proving its case against them (102 Cal. App. 4th 85, 92-94).

In Brown v. City of Los Angeles (2002) 102 Cal. App. 4th 155, 175-176, 125 Cal. Rptr. 2d 474 , the Los Angeles Police Department downgraded Petitioner police officer's paygrade. Petitioner challenged the Department's administrative appeal process on the ground that it did not satisfy due process because it relieved the Department of the burden of proving its case against Petitioner. The court of appeal agreed, holding that relieving the Department of the burden of proving its case against Petitioner violated Petitioner's due process rights (102 Cal. App. 4th 155, 175-176).

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 195 PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
PART II. FORMS
A. Petition for Writ of Mandate
2. APA Adjudication "Bill of Rights"

19-195 California Points & Authorities § 195.41

§ 195.41 Violation of Administrative Adjudication "Bill of Rights"--Agency Followed Rules That Were Not Promulgated in Accordance With APA

[1] FORM Violation of Administrative Adjudication "Bill of Rights"--Agency Followed Rules That Were Not Promulgated in Accordance With APA

[This form should be combined with a memorandum generally supporting a petition for writ of administrative mandamus to set aside judgment or order on ground of violation of Gov. Code § 11425.10. See § 195.30.]

RESPONDENT DENIED PETITIONER A FAIR HEARING BY APPLYING RULES AND REGULATIONS THAT WERE NOT PROMULGATED IN ACCORDANCE WITH THE APA.

No state agency may issue, utilize, enforce, or attempt to enforce any guideline, criterion, bulletin, manual, instruction, order, standard of general application, or other rule, which is a regulation as defined in Government Code Section 11342.600, unless it has been adopted as a regulation and filed with the Secretary of State (Gov. Code § 11340.5(a)). The APA defines a "regulation" as "every rule, regulation, order, or standard of general application or the amendment, supplement, or revision of any rule, regulation, order, or standard adopted by any state agency to implement, interpret, or make specific the law enforced or administered by it, or to govern its procedure" (Gov. Code § 11342.600).

If a rule constitutes a regulation under the APA, it may not be adopted, amended, or repealed except in conformity with "basic minimum procedural requirements" (Gov. Code § 11346(a)). The agency must give the public notice of its proposed regulatory action (Gov. Code §§ 11346.4, 11346.5), issue a complete text of the proposed regulation with a statement of the reasons for it (Gov. Code § 11346.2(a), (b)), give interested parties an opportunity to comment on the proposed regulation (Gov. Code § 11346.8), respond in writing to public comments (Gov. Code §§ 11346.8(a), 11346.9), and forward a file of all materials on which the agency relied in the regulatory process to the Office of Administrative Law (Gov. Code § 11347.3(b)), which reviews the regulation for consistency, clarity, and necessity (

Gov. Code §§ 11349.1, 11349.3). Any regulation or order of repeal that substantially fails to comply with these requirements may be judicially declared invalid (Gov. Code § 11350; Morning Star Co. v. State Bd. of Equalization (2006) 38 Cal. 4th 324, 332-342, 42 Cal. Rptr. 3d 47, 132 P.3d 249 ; Naturist Action Committee v. Department of Parks and Recreation (2009) 175 Cal. App. 4th 1244, 1249-1250, 96 Cal. Rptr. 3d 620 ; County of San Diego v. Bowen (2008) 166 Cal. App. 4th 501, 516-520, 82 Cal. Rptr. 3d 818 ; Capen v. Shewry (2007) 155 Cal. App. 4th 378, 386-389, 65 Cal. Rptr. 3d 890 ; Syngenta Crop Prot., Inc. v. Helliker (2006) 138 Cal. App. 4th 1135, 42 Cal. Rptr. 3d 191).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a petition for writ of mandate for review of a final administrative adjudicatory order or decision, when the petition alleges denial of a fair trial based on violation of a person's rights under Gov. Code § 11425.10(a), the APA's administrative adjudication "Bill of Rights." The basis of this form is that the agency applied regulations that were not promulgated pursuant to the APA and are therefore invalid.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case [see § 195.30[2][b]].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

In Morning Star Co. v. State Bd. of Equalization (2006) 38 Cal. 4th 324, 332-342, 42 Cal. Rptr. 3d 47, 132 P.3d 249 , a taxpayer challenged a hazardous materials assessment imposed by the California Department of Toxic Substance Control pursuant to Health & Safety Code § 25205.6 on all corporations with 50 or more employees within California, based on the use of common office supplies such as fluorescent light bulbs and batteries. The taxpayer claimed the assessment was overbroad and did not comply with the APA. The superior court granted summary judgment in the agencies' favor, holding that the statute being applied specifies a procedure for the Department to follow on an annual basis; it does not contemplate the propriety or necessity of agency rule-making. The court of appeal affirmed, holding that the APA does not apply to the enforcement of an existing statute or regulation, even if it involves an interpretation of the statute, unless the means of enforcement are set out by an agency in a new rule of general application.

The California Supreme Court reversed. It held that the Department's interpretation of Health & Safety Code § 25205.6 was a regulation as defined in Gov. Code § 11342.600, because it was a rule of general application that interpreted the law (38 Cal. 4th 324, 334-335) . As such, it was invalid under Gov. Code § 11340.5(a), because it did not comply with the Administrative Procedure Act. The Court held that the exception set forth in Gov. Code § 11340.9(f) for an agency interpretation representing the only legally tenable interpretation of a law did not apply because the complexity of the statutory scheme indicated that the Legislature did not intend a rote or ministerial application by the agency (38 Cal. 4th 324, 337-338) . The Court directed the Board to conduct further administrative proceedings on the taxpayer's refund request, without relying on the invalid regulation (38 Cal. 4th 324, 341) .

Naturist Action Committee v. Department of Parks and Recreation (2009) 175 Cal. App. 4th 1244, 1249-1250, 96 Cal. Rptr. 3d 620 , involved a California regulation prohibiting nudity at state parks. In 1979, the director of the defendant department issued an internal memorandum stating that enforcement of nude sunbathing regulations within the State Park System would be made only upon the complaint of a private citizen. This memorandum came to be known as the Cahill Policy. In 2008, the new director of the defendant department issued an internal memorandum rescinding the Cahill Policy as it applied to San Onofre State Beach. The plaintiffs filed a petition for writ of mandate arguing that the defendant's new policy was a regulation that was unenforceable because it did not comply with the APA's rule-making procedures. The plaintiffs sought to reinstate the Cahill Policy pending the defendant's compliance with the APA by giving public notice of the terms of the new policy and offering a public discussion. The trial court granted the writ, holding that the rescission of the Cahill Policy was a regulation that did not comply with the APA.

On appeal, the court looked at the validity of the Cahill Policy. The court held that the APA defined "regulation" very broadly. The court cited Tidewater Marine Western, Inc. v. Bradshaw (1996) 14 Cal. 4th 557, 571, 59 Cal. Rptr. 2d 186, 927 P.2d 296 , for the California Supreme Court's definition of a regulation. First, a regulation must be intended to apply generally, rather than in only a specific case. Second, a regulation must implement, interpret, or make specific the law enforced or administered by the agency, or govern the agency's procedure (175 Cal. App. 4th 1244, 1249) . The court held that the Cahill Policy satisfied both of these elements. The language of the memorandum stated that the defendant would enforce the prohibition against nude sunbathing within the State Park System only when specific complaints were made. Thus, it applied generally to all state parks. Second, the court held that the Cahill Policy implemented the California regulation prohibiting nudity by explaining that the department would not strictly enforce it (175 Cal. App. 4th 1244, 1249) .

The court of appeal further held that the Cahill Policy was invalid because it was not adopted in compliance with the APA. The court held that there was no evidence the defendant sent notice of the regulation to the public, provided an opportunity for public comment, or filed all underlying materials with the Office of Administrative Law, as required by the APA (175 Cal. App. 4th 1244, 1250) . The court held that the Cahill Policy was an "underground" regulation that was unenforceable. Therefore, the court held that the defendant's rescission of the Cahill Policy did not have to go through the APA rule-making process because its effect was merely to discontinue an invalid policy (175 Cal. App. 4th 1244, 1250) .

In County of San Diego v. Bowen (2008) 166 Cal. App. 4th 501, 516-520, 82 Cal. Rptr. 3d 818 , the defendant California Secretary of State decertified and then recertified many voting systems in the state. She imposed numerous preconditions for recertification, including manual ballot tallying. Several counties filed a writ of mandate, challenging these preconditions on the ground that the defendant enacted them without following the APA. The trial court denied the plaintiff's petition, holding that because the manual tallying requirements did not constitute a "regulation," the defendant was not required to comply with the APA.

The court of appeal disagreed. It held that the APA defines "regulation" very broadly. The court cited Tidewater Marine Western, Inc. v. Bradshaw (1996) 14 Cal. 4th 557, 571, 59 Cal. Rptr. 2d 186, 927 P.2d 296 , for the California Supreme Court's definition of a regulation. First, a regulation must be intended to apply generally, rather than in only a specific case. Second, a regulation must implement, interpret, or make specific the law enforced or administered by the agency, or govern the agency's procedure (166 Cal. App. 4th 501, 517) . The defendant argued that the manual tallying requirement did not satisfy the first prong of Tidewater because it did not apply to every voting system in California. The court rejected this argument, holding that a rule need not apply universally to satisfy the first Tidewater prong; a rule applies generally if it declares how a certain class of cases will be decided (166 Cal. App. 4th 501, 517) . With respect to the second prong, the court held that the manual tallying requirement made concrete various provisions of the Elections Code that authorized the defendant to ensure the reliability of electronic voting systems. Consequently, the court held, the manual tallying requirement made specific the law enforced by the agency (166 Cal. App. 4th 501, 519) . Because the defendant did not contend that she was otherwise exempted from the APA, or that she satisfied those requirements, the court held that the manual tallying requirements were void (166 Cal. App. 4th 501, 520) .

In Capen v. Shewry (2007) 155 Cal. App. 4th 378, 386-389, 65 Cal. Rptr. 3d 890 , the plaintiff, a licensed physician, sought to build a surgical clinic that he would wholly own and operate, in which nonowner, nonlessee physicians would practice. He was informed by the State Department of Health Services (Department) that a license for the clinic was required because it would be used by physicians who do not share in its ownership and operation in violation of Health and Safety Code § 1204(b)(1). The plaintiff sued the defendant Department for declaratory relief, claiming that the statute was ambiguous and that the Department's interpretation was a regulation requiring compliance with the APA. The trial court ruled in the plaintiff's favor.

The court of appeal upheld the judgment. It held that the Department's interpretation of the statute was a regulation subject to the APA. The court held that the exception set forth in Gov. Code § 11340.9(f) for an agency interpretation representing the only legally tenable interpretation of a law did not apply because the law could be read in more than one way of consequence to a claimed application (155 Cal. App. 4th 378, 387-388) . Because the Department's unwritten interpretation was a generally applicable policy, the court held that it constituted a regulation subject to the rulemaking procedures of the APA. Since the Department did not comply with those procedures its interpretive regulation was void (155 Cal. App. 4th 378, 389) .

In Syngenta Crop Prot., Inc. v. Helliker (2006) 138 Cal. App. 4th 1135, 42 Cal. Rptr. 3d 191 , Dow, a pesticide manufacturer, submitted data to the state Department of Pesticide Regulation (the "Department") concerning the health effects and environmental impacts of the active ingredients in its pesticides in connection with its applications for pesticide registration. The Department had issued California notice 2002-3 (the Notice) describing the general data requirements for registration of a new pesticide containing a currently registered active ingredient. The Notice stated "Some have incorrectly assumed that DPR has the same data requirements for registration actions, such as amendments to currently registered pesticides and new products containing currently registered active ingredients, as it does for new pesticide products containing new active ingredients. This notice is intended to correct any misconceptions and to restate DPR's existing general data requirements for pesticide products." The Department provided no prior notice of the proposed Notice or opportunity to comment on the proposal. The Department also proposed amendments to the California Code of Regulations and characterized the amendments as changes without regulatory effect. The Office of Administrative Law approved the amendments.

Dow filed a combined complaint and petition for writ of mandate for, among other things, violation of the APA by adopting amendments to the California Code of Regulations and issuing the Notice without providing public notice and an opportunity to comment. All the parties filed summary judgment motions. The trial court did not address Dow's challenges to the validity of the regulatory amendments and the Notice.

The court of appeal held that the notice and regulatory amendments were adopted in violation of the APA and were therefore invalid (138 Cal. App. 4th 1135, 1179) . The court noted that the Notice purported to restate the Department's existing data requirements for pesticide products. However, the court concluded that the Notice was a regulation for purposes of the rulemaking provisions of the APA because it provided a standard of general application that interpreted the regulations concerning data requirements (138 Cal. App. 4th 1135, 1178). The court held that the amendments to the California Code of Regulations were also regulations for purposes of the rulemaking provisions because Govt. Code § 11342.600 defines "regulation" to include amendments to a regulation to implement, interpret, or make specific the law enforced or administered by the agency. The court held that the issue was not whether the Department's construction of the California Code of Regulations was reasonable or consistent with its prior practice, but whether the Department's construction was the only legally tenable construction and did not materially alter any regulatory requirement (138 Cal. App. 4th 1135, 1179) . The court held that the amendments did not reflect the only legally tenable construction of the former regulations and were not the sort of clearly nonsubstantive changes or changes compelled by law contemplated by the California Code of Regulations (138 Cal. App. 4th 1135, 1179). Even if the amendments were consistent with the Department's practice under the former regulations, the Department was required to inform the public of the proposed formalization of that practice in amended, enforceable regulations (138 Cal. App. 4th 1135, 1179) . The court concluded that the Department's complete failure to comply with the rulemaking procedural requirements of the APA was a "substantial failure" and rendered invalid the Notice and regulatory amendments (138 Cal. App. 4th 1135, 1179) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 195 PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
PART II. FORMS
A. Petition for Writ of Mandate
2. APA Adjudication "Bill of Rights"

19-195 California Points & Authorities § 195.42

§ 195.42 Demurrer Should Be Sustained--No Violation of Administrative Adjudication "Bill of Rights"--Agency Followed Rules That Were Not Required to Be Promulgated in Accordance With APA

[1] FORM

[This form should be combined with a memorandum generally opposing a petition for writ of administrative mandamus on the ground of violation of Gov. Code § 11425.10.]

THE COURT SHOULD SUSTAIN THE DEMURRER TO THE PETITION FOR WRIT OF MANDATE BECAUSE RESPONDENT DID NOT DENY PETITIONER A FAIR HEARING IN THAT THE RULES AND REGULATIONS RESPONDENT APPLIED WERE NOT REQUIRED TO BE PROMULGATED IN ACCORDANCE WITH THE APA.

A regulation that is intended only for the internal management of an agency need not be promulgated in accordance with the APA (Californians for Pesticide Reform v. Department of Pesticide Regulation (2010) 184 Cal. App. 4th 887, 905-909, 109 Cal. Rptr. 3d 428).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a demurrer to a petition for writ of mandate for review of a final administrative adjudicatory order or decision when the petition argues that the agency followed rules that were not promulgated in accordance with the APA.

As appropriate, this form should be combined with specific points and authorities supporting a demurrer to a petition for administrative mandate on the ground that the petition fails to allege facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action [see §§ 195.51 -195.57].

With appropriate modifications this memorandum may be used to support a respondent's motion for judgment on the pleadings in favor of the respondent.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. In a demurrer, counsel may also request judicial notice, if appropriate, to show the insufficient specificity of the alleged facts [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.]. For further discussion, see § 195.10[2][b].

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion and forms relating to judicial review of administrative decisions generally, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 474, Public Administrative Law: Availability of Judicial Review (Matthew Bender). For further discussion relating to judicial notice, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Agency Followed Rules That Were Not Required to Be Promulgated in Accordance With APA

Californians for Pesticide Reform v. Department of Pesticide Regulation (2010) 184 Cal. App. 4th 887, 905-909, 109 Cal. Rptr. 3d 428 , involved the Toxic Air Contaminants Act (Act), which imposes responsibilities for the identification and control of toxic air contaminants (TAC). Under the Act, the defendant is responsible for assessing the risks of pesticides and determining whether a pesticide should be listed as a toxic air contaminant. The defendant developed a prioritization procedure by which certain active ingredients were assessed for risk. After the risk assessment, the defendant prepares a report for review by the public and a scientific review panel. The panel's findings then serve as the basis for a rulemaking that can lead to a regulation determining the pesticide to be a TAC. The plaintiff filed a petition for writ of mandate against the defendant, arguing that the prioritization process constituted an underground regulation that was not passed in accordance with the Administrative Procedure Act. The trial court held that the procedure was a matter of internal management and not subject to the rulemaking provisions of the APA.

On appeal, the defendant argued the prioritization process was not a regulation within the meaning of the APA because the defendant did not use the process as a general standard to administer, implement, enforce, or make specific the law. Instead, the defendant argued, the procedure reflected the defendant's efforts to comply with the Act. The court disagreed, holding that because the enforcement of a pesticide prioritization process would have a broad and long-term application, the policy was intended as a rule of general application [184 Cal. App. 4th 887, 906-907] . The court held further that the defendant adopted the prioritization policy to implement the Act.

However, the court held that the APA's internal management exception applied to the prioritization procedure. The court held that under Gov. Code § 11340.9(d), the APA's definition of "regulation" specifically excepts a rule, regulation, order, or standard of general application that relates only to the internal management of an agency [184 Cal. App. 4th 887, 907] . The court held that the defendant was authorized to evaluate all pesticides in California and was given the discretion to determine the order in which the pesticides would be evaluated. The court held that the prioritization policy did not determine whether the pesticides would undergo review, but merely prioritized when they would undergo review [184 Cal. App. 4th 887, 909] .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 195 PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
PART II. FORMS
A. Petition for Writ of Mandate
2. APA Adjudication "Bill of Rights"

19-195 California Points & Authorities §§ 195.43-195.49

[Reserved]

§§ 195.43[Reserved]

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 195 PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
PART II. FORMS
B. Opposition to Petition
1. Demurrer

19-195 California Points & Authorities § 195.50

§ 195.50 Demurrer Should Be Sustained--Petition Fails to State Cause of Action, General Form

[1] FORM Demurrer Should Be Sustained--Petition Fails to State Cause of Action, General Form

SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA,
COUNTY OF _____

	)
	)	NO. _____
_____ [name],	)	MEMORANDUM SUPPORTING DEMURRER TO Petitioner,	)	PETITION FOR WRIT OF MANDATE
vs.	)	Date: _____
_____ [name],	)	Time: _____
Respondent.	)	Location: _____
	)	[Judge: _____]
	)	Date Action Filed: _____
	)	[Trial Date: _____]

_____

THE COURT SHOULD SUSTAIN THE DEMURRER TO THE PETITION FOR WRIT OF MANDATE BECAUSE THE ADJUDICATORY _____ [ORDER or DECISION] FAILS TO STATE A CAUSE OF ACTION.

A. Demurrer in Mandate Proceeding. A party on whom a peremptory writ or notice has been served may make a return by demurrer in a mandate proceeding (Code Civ. Proc. § 1089).

B. Objection by Demurrer. The party against whom a petition for a writ of mandate has been filed may object, by demurrer as provided in Code of Civil Procedure Section 430.30, to the petition on the ground that it does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action (Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)). When any ground for objection to a petition appears on the face thereof (or from any matter of which the court is required to or may take judicial notice), the objection on that ground may be taken by a demurrer to the petition (Code Civ. Proc. § 430.30(a)).

[As appropriate, add specific points and authorities supporting demurrer to petition for administrative mandate on the ground that the petition fails to allege facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. See §§ 195.51 -195.57.]

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for Respondent _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a demurrer to petition for writ of mandate for review of a final administrative adjudicatory order or decision when the petition fails to state a cause of action.

As appropriate, this form should be combined with specific points and authorities supporting demurrer to petition for administrative mandate on the ground that the petition fails to allege facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action [see §§ 195.51-195.57].

The party intending to use a part of the administrative record in a case brought under Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5 must lodge that part of the record at least five days before the hearing [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1140]. For a form of memorandum supporting an application for an order directing the filing of a record, see § 195.140].

With appropriate modifications this memorandum may be used to support a respondent's motion for judgment on the pleadings in favor of the respondent.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. In this instance, involving a pleading requirement, counsel should argue that the facts alleged by the opposing party are not sufficient to constitute a cause of action. In his or her argument, counsel would refer to the specific number of the relevant allegation. In a demurrer, counsel may also request judicial notice, if appropriate, to show the insufficient specificity of the alleged facts [see Evid. Code § 450 et seq.]. For further discussion, see § 195.10[2][b].

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion and forms relating to judicial review of administrative decisions generally, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 474, Public Administrative Law: Availability of Judicial Review (Matthew Bender). For discussion and forms relating to petitions for writ of mandate to review administrative decisions affecting physicians, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 414, Physicians and Other Medical Personnel (Matthew Bender). For further discussion relating to judicial notice, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 321, Judicial Notice (Matthew Bender).

[d] Opposing Memoranda

When appropriate, the memorandum set forth in § 195.80 et seq. may be used to oppose the contentions set forth in this form.

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 195 PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
PART II. FORMS
B. Opposition to Petition
1. Demurrer

19-195 California Points & Authorities § 195.51

§ 195.51 Demurrer Should Be Sustained--Failure to Allege Discretion Vested in Agency

[1] FORM Demurrer Should Be Sustained--Failure to Allege Discretion Vested in Agency

[This form should be combined with points and authorities generally supporting a demurrer to a petition for administrative mandate based on failure to allege facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. See § 195.50.]

THE PETITION FOR WRIT OF MANDATE FAILS TO STATE A CAUSE OF ACTION BECAUSE IT DOES NOT ALLEGE FACTS TENDING TO SHOW THAT DISCRETION TO DETERMINE CERTAIN RELEVANT FACTS IS VESTED IN THE _____ [identify agency whose order or decision is the subject of proceeding].

Failure to Allege Discretion Vested in Agency. To allege a cause of action for review of a final administrative adjudicatory order or decision in a mandate proceeding, the petitioner must state facts showing that discretion to determine certain relevant facts is vested in the agency whose order or decision is the subject of the proceeding (Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5(a)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a demurrer to petition for writ of mandate for review of a final administrative adjudicatory order or decision when the petition fails to state a cause of action. The basis of this form is that the petition fails to allege facts showing that discretion to determine certain relevant facts is vested in the agency whose order or decision is the subject of the proceeding.

This form should be combined with points and authorities generally supporting a demurrer to a petition for administrative mandate based on failure to allege facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action [see § 195.50].

With appropriate modifications this memorandum may be used to support a respondent's motion for judgment on the pleadings in favor of the respondent.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. See Comments under § 195.50[2][b] for further discussion.

[c] Opposing Memoranda

When appropriate, the memorandum set forth in § 195.80 et seq. generally, may be used to oppose the contentions set forth in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Failure to Allege Discretion Vested in Agency

Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5(a) provides that, when a writ of mandate is issued for the purposes of inquiring into the validity of a final administrative order or decision made as the result of a proceeding in which by law a hearing is required to be given, evidence is required to be taken and discretion in the determination of facts is vested in the inferior tribunal, corporation, board or officer (i.e., agency), the case is heard by the court sitting without a jury.

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 195 PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
PART II. FORMS
B. Opposition to Petition
1. Demurrer

19-195 California Points & Authorities § 195.52

§ 195.52 Demurrer Should Be Sustained--Failure to Allege Hearing Requirement

[1] FORM Demurrer Should Be Sustained--Failure to Allege Hearing Requirement

[This form should be combined with points and authorities generally supporting a demurrer to a petition for administrative mandate based on failure to allege facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. See § 195.50.]

THE PETITION FOR WRIT OF MANDATE FAILS TO STATE A CAUSE OF ACTION BECAUSE IT DOES NOT ALLEGE FACTS TENDING TO SHOW THAT BY LAW A HEARING IS REQUIRED TO BE HELD FOR THE PURPOSE OF DETERMINING THOSE FACTS.

Failure to Allege Hearing Requirement. To allege a cause of action for review of a final administrative adjudicatory order or decision in a mandate proceeding, the petitioner must state facts showing that, by law, a hearing is required to be held for the purpose of determining certain relevant facts (Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5(a); 300 Deharo Street Investors v. Department of Housing and Community Development (2008) 161 Cal. App. 4th 1240, 1249-1250, 75 Cal. Rptr. 3d 98 ; Excelsior College v. California Bd. of Registered Nursing (2006) 136 Cal. App. 4th 1218, 1237-1238, 39 Cal. Rptr. 3d 618 ; Duarte & Witting, Inc. v. New Motor Vehicle Board (2002) 104 Cal. App. 4th 626, 634-641, 128 Cal. Rptr. 2d 501 ; Weary v. Civil Service Com. (1983) 140 Cal. App. 3d 189, 194-195, 189 Cal. Rptr. 442).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a demurrer to petition for writ of mandate for review of a final administrative adjudicatory order or decision when the petition fails to state a cause of action. The basis of this form is that the petition fails to state facts showing that, by law, a hearing is required to be held for the purpose of determining certain relevant facts.

This form should be combined with a memorandum generally supporting a demurrer to a petition for administrative mandate based on failure to allege facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action [see § 195.50].

With appropriate modifications this memorandum may be used to support a respondent's motion for judgment on the pleadings in favor of the respondent.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. See § 195.50[2][b] for further discussion.

[c] Opposing Memoranda

When appropriate, the memoranda set forth in § 195.80 et seq. generally, may be used to oppose the contentions set forth in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Failure to Allege Hearing Requirement

In 300 Deharo Street Investors v. Department of Housing and Community Development (2008) 161 Cal. App. 4th 1240, 1249-1250, 75 Cal. Rptr. 3d 98 , the plaintiff landlord submitted a written request for a rent increase to the Department of Housing and Community Development pursuant to Health & Saf. Code § 50670(e), and Cal. Code Regs., tit. 25, § 7683(c). The Department denied the request based upon its review of the paperwork. The trial court concluded plaintiff's sole remedy was a petition for administrative mandamus pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5. The plaintiff appealed, arguing that no administrative hearing occurred and that a writ of administrative mandamus applies only to claims challenging administrative orders or decisions made as the result of a proceeding in which by law a hearing is required to be given, evidence is required to be taken, and discretion in the determination of facts is vested in the administrative tribunal. The Department argued that the plaintiff's written request for a rent increase, and the Department's denial of the request based upon its review of his paperwork, constituted a "paper hearing."

The court of appeal held that for Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5 to apply, a hearing must be required by law. Here, the court held, no statute or regulation required the Department to hold a hearing on the plaintiff's request for a rent increase. The court held that when an agency makes a decision based upon one party's unilateral submissions of information and documents, without taking and considering evidence from opposing parties, no hearing occurs within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5 (161 Cal. App. 4th 1240, 1250) .

The court held that, even assuming the Department's review of the plaintiff's request could be considered a hearing, it did not trigger administrative mandamus review because it was not required by law (161 Cal. App. 4th 1240, 1251) . Moreover, the court held, even if a "purely documentary" hearing satisfied Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5, there must be something in the nature of a hearing, i.e., an adversarial process in which the agency resolves disputed facts after affording interested parties an opportunity to present evidence (161 Cal. App. 4th 1240, 1251) .

In Excelsior College v. California Bd. of Registered Nursing (2006) 136 Cal. App. 4th 1218, 39 Cal. Rptr. 3d 618 , the California Board of Registered Nursing (Board) had previously recognized Plaintiff Excelsior College, a New York-based distance learning nursing program's program as equivalent to the minimum requirements of accredited programs in California, thus enabling Excelsior graduates to apply for licensure in California. However, the Board subsequently concluded that it had no authority to evaluate out-of-state programs before a nursing program graduate applies for licensure. Excelsior sought an administrative writ of mandate to invalidate the Board's interpretation of the applicable law and to compel the Board to continue accepting the Excelsior program as equivalent to California's minimum requirements. The Board demurred to the petition, arguing that the petition did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action in that Excelsior had no legal right to an adjudicatory hearing by law. The trial court granted the demurrer.

The court of appealed agreed. It noted that administrative mandate pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5 is available only if the decision resulted from a "proceeding in which by law: 1) a hearing is required to be given, 2) evidence is required to be taken, and 3) discretion in the determination of facts is vested in the agency" (136 Cal. App. 4th 1218, 1237-1238) . The court held that the legal right to an evidentiary hearing may be granted by statute, regulation or rule, or by due process if a liberty or property interest is implicated (136 Cal. App. 4th 1218, 1238). Excelsior claimed it was entitled to an evidentiary hearing under due process because it had a property interest in the Board's continued recognition of equivalency. The court rejected this argument, stating that the fact that Excelsior graduates were exempt from certain requirements for 20 years did not confer a property interest upon Excelsior. Thus, Excelsior had no due process right to an evidentiary hearing regarding the Board's decision that Excelsior graduates will be treated the same as graduates from all other out-of-state schools (136 Cal. App. 4th 1218, 1238).

In Duarte & Witting, Inc. v. New Motor Vehicle Board (2002) 104 Cal. App. 4th 626, 128 Cal. Rptr. 2d 501 , an automobile corporation terminated a dealer's franchise because the corporation discontinued the line of automobiles the dealer sold. The dealer filed a protest of the termination with the New Motor Vehicle Board. Without a hearing, the Board granted the corporation's motion to dismiss the protest on the ground that the Board could not require the corporation to continue producing the line of automobiles.

The dealer filed a petition for a writ of administrative mandate with the superior court, arguing that the Board did not have the power to dismiss the protest and was required to conduct an evidentiary hearing on statutory "good cause" factors for termination. The superior court denied the petition.

The court of appeal affirmed. It held that the Board had implicit power to dismiss the protest and that a hearing was not necessary when the undisputed facts showed good cause for terminating the franchise (104 Cal. App. 4th 626, 637-641) .

Weary v. Civil Service Com. (1983) 140 Cal. App. 3d 189, 189 Cal. Rptr. 442 , arose when plaintiff, a civil service employee, received an "improvement needed" rating for the work she performed, and she instituted an administrative appeal to defendant Civil Service Commission. While the appeal was pending, plaintiff was laid off, and was not placed on the reemployment list because of her rating. Thereafter, a hearing on the appeal was ordered pursuant to a rule of the commission allowing it to grant a hearing at its own discretion. At the hearing of the appeal the hearing officer ordered that plaintiff be placed on the reemployment list because the rating was unjustified, but the commission reviewed the evidence presented at the hearing and the hearing transcript and rejected the officer's proposed findings of fact and conclusions of law, finding instead that the rating was proper. Plaintiff then petitioned the superior court for a writ of administrative mandamus under Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5. The court conducted an independent review of the evidence and, exercising its independent judgment, granted the writ on the ground that the rating was unreasonable under the circumstances. The commission appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that administrative mandamus under Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5 was not available to review the decision of the commission (140 Cal. App. 3d 189, 194) . The court held that judicial review under Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5 is available only from a decision resulting from a proceeding in which by law (1) a hearing is required to be given, (2) evidence is required to be taken, and (3) discretion in the determination of facts is vested in the agency [citing Taylor v. State Personnel Bd. (1980) 101 Cal. App. 3d 498, 502, 161 Cal. Rptr. 677] (140 Cal. App. 3d 189, 194-195). The rule under which plaintiff obtained a hearing before the commission made the grant of a hearing discretionary, and therefore not required by law, leaving plaintiff's only avenue of review a petition under Code Civ. Proc. § 1085 to determine whether the action of the commission was an abuse of discretion (140 Cal. App. 3d 189, 195) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Failure to Allege Hearing Requirement

In Heist v. County of Colusa (1984) 163 Cal. App. 3d 841, 213 Cal. Rptr. 278 , a county board of supervisors had passed a resolution, following a public hearing, ordering a portion of a certain road abandoned. Plaintiff, a taxpayer, filed a petition for an extraordinary writ in superior court alleging that the board's action constituted gross abuse of discretion and a gift of public property. The trial court denied the petition, and plaintiff appealed. Plaintiff contended that the abandonment of a county road by the board is a judicial act, governed by Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5, which requires the findings of the board to be supported by substantial evidence. The court of appeal, however, held that abandonment of a county road is a legislative act, governed by Code Civ. Proc. § 1085, and that review thereof is limited to an examination of the proceeding to determine whether the action of the administrative body has been arbitrary, capricious, or entirely lacking in evidentiary support, or whether it has failed to give the notices and follow the procedures required by law (163 Cal. App. 3d 841, 845-846) . Reviewing the evidence as a whole, the appellate court held that the board's act was not arbitrary or capricious (163 Cal. App. 3d 841, 848) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 195 PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
PART II. FORMS
B. Opposition to Petition
1. Demurrer

19-195 California Points & Authorities § 195.53

§ 195.53 Demurrer Should Be Sustained--Failure to Allege That Evidence Must Be Taken

[1] FORM Demurrer Should Be Sustained--Failure to Allege That Evidence Must Be Taken

[This form should be combined with a memorandum generally supporting a demurrer to a petition for administrative mandate based on failure to allege facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. See § 195.50.]

THE PETITION FOR WRIT OF MANDATE FAILS TO STATE A CAUSE OF ACTION BECAUSE IT DOES NOT ALLEGE FACTS TENDING TO SHOW THAT EVIDENCE IS REQUIRED TO BE TAKEN AT A HEARING.

Failure to Allege That Evidence Must Be Taken. To allege a cause of action for review of a final administrative adjudicatory order or decision in a mandate proceeding, the petitioner must state facts showing that evidence is required to be taken at the hearing required by law to determine certain relevant facts (Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5(a)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a demurrer to petition for writ of mandate for review of a final administrative adjudicatory order or decision when the petition fails to state a cause of action. The basis of this form is that the petition fails to show that evidence is required to be taken at the hearing required by law to determine certain relevant facts.

This form should be combined with a memorandum generally supporting a demurrer to a petition for administrative mandate based on failure to allege facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action [see § 195.50].

With appropriate modifications this memorandum may be used to support a respondent's motion for judgment on the pleadings in favor of the respondent.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. See § 195.50[2][b] for further discussion.

[c] Opposing Memoranda

When appropriate, the memoranda set forth in § 195.40 generally, may be used to oppose the contentions set forth in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Failure to Allege That Evidence Must Be Taken

For discussion of Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5(a) , see § 195.51[3][a].

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 195 PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
PART II. FORMS
B. Opposition to Petition
1. Demurrer

19-195 California Points & Authorities § 195.54

§ 195.54 Demurrer Should Be Sustained--Failure to Allege That Decision Resulted From Hearing

[1] FORM Demurrer Should Be Sustained--Failure to Allege That Decision Resulted From Hearing

[This form should be combined with a memorandum generally supporting a demurrer to a petition for administrative mandate based on failure to allege facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. See § 195.50.]

THE PETITION FOR WRIT OF MANDATE FAILS TO STATE A CAUSE OF ACTION BECAUSE IT DOES NOT ALLEGE FACTS TENDING TO SHOW THAT A FINAL ADMINISTRATIVE ORDER OR DECISION WAS MADE AS A RESULT OF HEARING AND A DETERMINATION OF CERTAIN RELEVANT FACTS.

Failure to Allege That Decision Resulted From Hearing. To allege a cause of action for review of a final administrative adjudicatory order or decision in a mandate proceeding, the petitioner must state facts showing that a final administrative order or decision was made as the result of a hearing required by law at which evidence was taken to determine certain relevant facts, and the determination of those facts (Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5(a)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a demurrer to petition for writ of mandate for review of a final administrative adjudicatory order or decision when the petition fails to state a cause of action. The basis of this form is that the petition fails to show that a final administrative order or decision was made as the result of a hearing required by law at which evidence was taken to determine certain relevant facts, and the determination of those facts.

This form should be combined with a memorandum generally supporting a demurrer to a petition for administrative mandate based on failure to allege facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action [see § 195.50].

With appropriate modifications this memorandum may be used to support a respondent's motion for judgment on the pleadings in favor of the respondent.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. See § 195.50[2][b] for further discussion.

[c] Opposing Memoranda

When appropriate, the memoranda set forth in § 195.80 et seq. generally, may be used to oppose the contentions set forth in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Failure to Allege That Decision Resulted From Hearing

For discussion of Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5(a), see § 195.51[3][a].

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 195 PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
PART II. FORMS
B. Opposition to Petition
1. Demurrer

19-195 California Points & Authorities § 195.55

§ 195.55 Demurrer Should Be Sustained--Failure to Allege That Decision Is Invalid

[1] FORM Demurrer Should Be Sustained--Failure to Allege That Decision Is Invalid

[This form should be combined with a memorandum generally supporting a demurrer to a petition for administrative mandate based on failure to allege facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. See § 195.50.]

THE PETITION FOR WRIT OF MANDATE FAILS TO STATE A CAUSE OF ACTION BECAUSE IT DOES NOT ALLEGE FACTS TENDING TO SHOW THAT THE ORDER OR DECISION IS INVALID.

Failure to Allege That Decision Is Invalid. To allege a cause of action for review of a final administrative adjudicatory order or decision in a mandate proceeding, the petitioner must state facts showing that the order or decision is invalid (Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5(a)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a demurrer to petition for writ of mandate for review of a final administrative adjudicatory order or decision when the petition fails to state a cause of action. The basis of this form is that the petition fails to show that the order or decision is invalid.

This form should be combined with a memorandum generally supporting a demurrer to a petition for administrative mandate based on failure to allege facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action [see § 195.50].

With appropriate modifications this memorandum may be used to support a respondent's motion for judgment on the pleadings in favor of the respondent.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. See § 195.50[2][b] for further discussion.

[c] Opposing Memoranda

When appropriate, the memoranda set forth in § 195.80 may be used to oppose the contentions set forth in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Failure to Allege That Decision Is Invalid

For discussion of Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5(a) , see § 195.51[3][a].

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 195 PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
PART II. FORMS
B. Opposition to Petition
1. Demurrer

19-195 California Points & Authorities § 195.56

§ 195.56 Demurrer Should Be Sustained--Failure to Allege That Petitioner Is Beneficially Interested in Writ

[1] FORM Demurrer Should Be Sustained--Failure to Allege That Petitioner Is Beneficially Interested in Writ

[This form should be combined with a memorandum generally supporting a demurrer to a petition for administrative mandate based on failure to allege facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. See § 195.50.]

THE PETITION FOR WRIT OF MANDATE FAILS TO STATE A CAUSE OF ACTION BECAUSE IT DOES NOT ALLEGE FACTS TENDING TO SHOW THAT THE PETITIONER IS BENEFICIALLY INTERESTED IN ISSUANCE OF THE WRIT.

Failure to Allege That Petitioner Is Beneficially Interested in Writ. To allege a cause of action for review of a final administrative adjudicatory order or decision in a mandate proceeding, the petitioner must state facts showing that the petitioner is beneficially interested in the issuance of the writ (Code Civ. Proc. § 1086; Personnel Comm'n v. Barstow Unified Sch. Dist. (1996) 43 Cal. App. 4th 871, 50 Cal. Rptr. 2d 797).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a demurrer to petition for writ of mandate for review of a final administrative adjudicatory order or decision when the petition fails to state a cause of action. The basis of this form is that the petition fails to show that the petitioner is beneficially interested in the issuance of the writ.

This form should be combined with a memorandum generally supporting a demurrer to a petition for administrative mandate based on failure to allege facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action [see § 195.50].

With appropriate modifications this memorandum may be used to support a respondent's motion for judgment on the pleadings in favor of the respondent.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. See § 195.50[2][b] for further discussion.

[c] Opposing Memoranda

When appropriate, the memoranda set forth in § 195.81 may be used to oppose the contentions set forth in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Failure to Allege That Petitioner Is Beneficially Interested in Writ

For discussion of Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5(a) , see § 195.51[3][a].

In Personnel Comm'n v. Barstow Unified Sch. Dist. (1996) 43 Cal. App. 4th 871, 50 Cal. Rptr. 2d 797 , a personnel commission of a school district sought a writ of mandate compelling the district to vacate a decision to lay off the district's transportation workers and contract with a private company. The superior court granted a writ, but the court of appeal reversed on procedural grounds, concluding that the commission lacked standing to sue. Code Civ. Proc. § 1086 provides that a writ of mandate must be issued upon the verified petition of the party beneficially interested. The requirement that a petitioner be beneficially interested generally means the person must have some special interest to be served or some particular right to be preserved or protected over and above the interest held in common with the public at large (43 Cal. App. 4th 871, 877) . The function of the personnel commission is to classify employees and positions, and to review certain decisions at the instance of an affected employee. However, it has no authority to take legal action to challenge decisions of the district concerning the employment of classified employees or the contracting out of work (43 Cal. App. 4th 871, 879) . Finding that the commission had no beneficial interest in the proceeding, the court reversed the judgment of the superior court, and remanded with directions to dismiss the proceeding with respect to the claims of the commission.

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 195 PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
PART II. FORMS
B. Opposition to Petition
1. Demurrer

19-195 California Points & Authorities § 195.57

§ 195.57 Demurrer Should Be Sustained--Failure to Allege No Plain, Speedy, Adequate Remedy

[1] FORM Demurrer Should Be Sustained--Failure to Allege No Plain, Speedy, Adequate Remedy

[This form should be combined with a memorandum generally supporting a demurrer to a petition for administrative mandate based on failure to allege facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. See § 195.50.]

THE PETITION FOR WRIT OF MANDATE FAILS TO STATE A CAUSE OF ACTION BECAUSE IT DOES NOT ALLEGE FACTS TENDING TO SHOW THAT THE PETITIONER HAS NO PLAIN AND SPEEDY REMEDY IN THE ORDINARY COURSE OF LAW.

Failure to Allege No Plain, Speedy, Adequate Remedy. To allege a cause of action for review of a final administrative adjudicatory order or decision in a mandate proceeding, the petitioner must state facts showing that the petitioner has no plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law (Code Civ. Proc. § 1086).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a demurrer to petition for writ of mandate for review of a final administrative adjudicatory order or decision when the petition fails to state a cause of action. The basis of this form is that the petition fails to show that the petitioner has no plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law.

This form should be combined with a memorandum generally supporting a demurrer to a petition for administrative mandate based on failure to allege facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action [see § 195.50].

With appropriate modifications this memorandum may be used to support a respondent's motion for judgment on the pleadings in favor of the respondent.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. See § 195.50[2][b] for further discussion.

[c] Opposing Memoranda

When appropriate, the memoranda set forth in § 195.80 et seq. generally, may be used to oppose the contentions set forth in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Failure to Allege No Plain, Speedy, Adequate Remedy

For discussion of Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5(a), see § 195.51[3][a].

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 195 PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
PART II. FORMS
B. Opposition to Petition
1. Demurrer

19-195 California Points & Authorities § 195.58

§ 195.58 Demurrer Should Be Sustained--Substantial Evidence Rather Than Independent Judgment Applies, General Form

[1] FORM Demurrer Should Be Sustained--Substantial Evidence Rather Than Independent Judgment Applies, General Form

[Caption. see § 195.50.]

THE COURT SHOULD SUSTAIN THE DEMURRER TO THE PETITION FOR WRIT OF MANDATE BECAUSE IN THIS CASE THE SUBSTANTIAL EVIDENCE TEST, RATHER THAN THE INDEPENDENT JUDGMENT TEST, DEFINES THE PROPER SCOPE OF REVIEW OF THE FINAL ADMINISTRATIVE ADJUDICATORY _____ [ORDER or DECISION] OF THE _____ [identify agency].

A. Demurrer in Mandate Proceedings. [See § 195.50[1], Paragraph A].

B. General Rule. When it is claimed that an administrative agency's findings are not supported by the evidence, in cases in which the court is authorized by law to exercise its independent judgment on the evidence, abuse of discretion is established if the court determines that the findings are not supported by the weight of the evidence; and in all other cases abuse of discretion is established if the court determines that the findings are not supported by substantial evidence in the light of the whole record (Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5(c)).

C. Independent Judgment Test Applies Only in Limited Circumstances. On reviewing an administrative decision when it is claimed the evidence does not support the findings, the court is authorized to exercise its independent judgment on the evidence, and to determine whether the findings are supported by the weight of the evidence, when both (1) the administrative decision in question substantially affects a vested fundamental right of the person seeking judicial review and (2) the agency in question is not directly authorized by the California Constitution to exercise judicial functions (Bixby v. Pierno (1971) 4 Cal. 3d 130, 143, 93 Cal. Rptr. 234, 481 P.2d 242 ; see Strumsky v. San Diego County Employees Retirement Ass'n (1974) 11 Cal. 3d 28, 32, 35, 112 Cal. Rptr. 805, 520 P.2d 29).

D. Substantial Evidence Test Applies When Decision Does Not Affect Fundamental Vested Right. When an administrative decision does not involve, or substantially affect, any fundamental vested right, the trial court must review the entire administrative record to determine whether the findings are supported by substantial evidence (Bixby v. Pierno (1971) 4 Cal. 3d 130, 144 , 93 Cal. Rptr. 234 , 481 P.2d 242 ; SP Star Enterprises, Inc. v. City of Los Angeles (2009) 173 Cal. App. 4th 459, 468-471, 93 Cal. Rptr. 3d 152 ; Jaramillo v. State Bd. for Geologists and Geophysicists (2006) 136 Cal. App. 4th 880, 888-889, 39 Cal. Rptr. 3d 170).

[As appropriate, this form should be combined with a memorandum asserting that the substantial evidence test applies in a particular instance. See §§ 195.58 -195.63.]

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for Respondent _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a demurrer to a petition for a writ of mandate for review of a final administrative adjudicatory order or decision of a local agency when the order or decision does not substantially affect a vested fundamental right of the petitioner, or when the respondent is directly authorized by the Constitution to exercise judicial functions. In such cases, the court is limited to determining whether the findings are supported by substantial evidence in the light of the whole record [Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5].

This form should be combined with a caption [see § 195.50]. It should also be combined with a memorandum asserting that the substantial evidence test applies in a particular instance [see §§ 195.58 -195.63].

With appropriate modifications, this memorandum may be submitted in opposition to a petition for a writ of administrative mandate [see, e.g., § 195.10[3]], or in support of an answer to such a petition. Furthermore, this memorandum may be incorporated into an appellate brief when a trial court has misapplied the independent judgment test.

For detailed coverage of the standards of judicial review applicable to administrative decisions, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 474, Availability of Judicial Review of Agency Decisions , et seq. (Matthew Bender).

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. See § 195.50[2][b] for further discussion.

[c] Application of Proper Standard of Review

The issue of whether the independent judgment test applies to a particular administrative decision is not always easily resolved. The courts are required to decide on a case-by-case basis whether an administrative decision or class of decisions substantially affects fundamental rights and thus requires independent judgment review [Bixby v. Pierno (1971) 4 Cal. 3d 130, 144, 93 Cal. Rptr. 234, 481 P.2d 242] . Therefore, situations may arise in which there are no reported cases on point concerning a particular type of administrative decision.

[d] Administrative Decisions Held to Merit Substantial Evidence Review

The memoranda set forth in §§ 195.58 -195.63 illustrate three general types of administrative decisions that have been held to merit substantial evidence review, rather than independent judgment review. Counsel should note that there are numerous other cases determining the appropriate standard of judicial review [see, e.g., Berlinghieri v. Department of Motor Vehicles (1983) 33 Cal. 3d 392, 398, 188 Cal. Rptr. 891, 657 P.2d 383 (suspension of driver's license by Department of Motor Vehicles as subject to independent judgment review); Mileikowsky v. Tenet Healthsystem (2005) 128 Cal. App. 4th 531, 554-555, 27 Cal. Rptr. 3d 171 (hearing officer's imposition of terminating sanction reviewed under abuse of discretion standard); MHC Operating Limited Partnership v. City of San Jose (2003) 106 Cal. App. 4th 204, 220, 130 Cal. Rptr. 2d 564 (in challenge to rent control board ruling, court reviewed factual determinations for substantial evidence and independently reviewed interpretation of ordinance, according it due deference)].

In certain instances, the standard of review is governed by statute [see, e.g., Bus. & Prof. Code § 2087 (substantial evidence rule applies when Medical Board of California denies accreditation to medical school); see also Tex-Cal Land Management, Inc. v. Agricultural Labor Relations Bd. (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 335, 342-346, 156 Cal. Rptr. 1, 595 P.2d 579 (California Legislature may provide for review under substantial evidence standard of decisions of statewide agencies on which California Constitution does not confer judicial power)]. The memorandum set forth in § 195.66 is an example of such a statute.

[e] Opposing Memoranda

When appropriate, the memoranda set forth in § 195.80 et seq. generally, may be used to oppose the contentions set forth in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Independent Judgment Test Applies Only in Limited Circumstances

In Bixby v. Pierno (1971) 4 Cal. 3d 130, 93 Cal. Rptr. 234, 481 P.2d 242 , petitioner sought a writ of mandamus to compel defendant Commissioner of Corporations to set aside his decision approving a recapitalization plan submitted for approval by real party in interest. The trial court found that the commissioner's ruling was supported by substantial evidence and did not constitute an abuse of discretion. Petitioner appealed.

The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment. Reciting the text of Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5(c), the court noted that the provision does not establish a single standard for judicial review of the evidentiary basis for agency determinations (4 Cal. 3d 130, 137). If a decision of an administrative agency will substantially affect a vested, fundamental right, the trial court not only examines the administrative record for errors of law but also exercises its independent judgment on the evidence disclosed in a limited trial de novo (4 Cal. 3d 130, 143). If an administrative decision does not involve, or substantially affect, any fundamental vested right, the trial court must still review the entire administrative record to determine whether the findings are supported by substantial evidence and whether the agency committed any errors of law, but the trial court need not look beyond that whole record of the administrative proceedings (4 Cal. 3d 130, 144). The Court found that the administrative decision in the instant case did not tangentially involve any important or fundamental right and therefore did not call for an independent judgment review. It noted that petitioners did not allege any deprivation of their right to a livelihood or a deprivation of their property (4 Cal. 3d 130, 147) . The court concluded that the trial court properly applied the substantial evidence standard, and that the commissioner's findings were indeed supported by substantial evidence (4 Cal. 3d 130, 148-151) .

Strumsky v. San Diego County Employees Retirement Ass'n (1974) 11 Cal. 3d 28, 112 Cal. Rptr. 805, 520 P.2d 29 , is discussed in § 195.11[3][b].

[b] Substantial Evidence Rule Applies When Decision Does Not Affect Fundamental Vested Right

Bixby v. Pierno (1971) 4 Cal. 3d 130, 93 Cal. Rptr. 234, 481 P.2d 242 , is discussed in § 195.58[3][a].

SP Star Enterprises, Inc. v. City of Los Angeles (2009) 173 Cal. App. 4th 459, 468-471, 93 Cal. Rptr. 3d 152 , involved an owner of an adult entertainment club seeking a license to sell alcoholic beverages. The city's zoning commissioner granted the application for one year. After several parties appealed to the city central area planning commission, the application was denied. The plaintiff sought review of the commission's ruling in the trial court through administrative mandamus pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5. The trial court denied the mandamus petition, holding that substantial evidence supported the commission's ruling.

On appeal, the plaintiff argued that topless dancing is a recognized form of protected activity and that because the commission's decision affected the plaintiff's ability to engage in protected activity, the trial court was required to conduct an independent review of the record. The court of appeal disagreed. It held that generally when a case involves purely economic interests, courts are less likely to find a right to be fundamental and vested. The court held further that an application for a conditional use permit to sell alcohol for onsite consumption did not involve a fundamental vested right or the right of free speech (173 Cal. App. 4th 459, 468-471) .

In Jaramillo v. State Bd. for Geologists and Geophysicists (2006) 136 Cal. App. 4th 880, 39 Cal. Rptr. 3d 170 , the Board for Geologists and Geophysicists of the State of California Department of Consumer Affairs (the Board) cited Jaramillo for practicing or offering to practice geophysics without a license. After an evidentiary hearing, the administrative law judge found that Jaramillo was practicing geophysics without a license and issued a proposed decision that sustained the citation and ordered him to pay the fine and cease and desist from violating the law. The Board adopted the ALJ's proposed decision as its own.

Jaramillo filed a petition for writ of mandate under Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5 in which he contended that the administrative decision affected his fundamental right to operate his business, and thus the court committed reversible error when it failed to apply the independent judgment standard of review, finding that no fundamental right was implicated in this case. The Board opposed the petition on the ground that the substantial evidence test applied because Jaramillo was not licensed, he was not a member of the geophysical profession, and thus no fundamental vested right was involved.

The court of appeal agreed with the Board. It held that if an underlying administrative decision substantially affects a fundamental vested right, the trial court, in determining whether the agency abused its discretion because the findings are not supported by the evidence, must exercise its independent judgment on the evidence and find an abuse of discretion if the findings are not supported by the weight of the evidence (136 Cal. App. 4th 880, 888). If an administrative decision does not substantially affect a fundamental vested right, the trial court considers only whether the findings are supported by substantial evidence in the light of the whole record (136 Cal. App. 4th 880, 888-889). Whether an administrative decision substantially affects a fundamental vested right must be decided on a case-by-case basis. Although no exact formula exists by which to make this determination, the issue is whether the affected right is deemed to be of sufficient significance to preclude its extinction or abridgment by a body lacking judicial power (136 Cal. App. 4th 880, 888-889). The court concluded that Jaramillo did not have a vested right to operate his business because he was not operating it legally 136 Cal. App. 4th 880, 891) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Substantial Evidence Rule Applies When Decision Does Not Affect Fundamental Vested Right

In Automotive Management Group, Inc. v. New Motor Vehicle Bd. (1993) 20 Cal. App. 4th 1002, 24 Cal. Rptr. 2d 904 , an automobile dealer submitted to the New Motor Vehicle Board a protest of its termination as a franchised dealer. An administrative law judge rejected the dealer's protest because it was untimely and the dealer petitioned the court for a writ of mandate. The trial court applied the substantial evidence test and denied the dealer's petition. The court of appeal held that the trial court properly applied the substantial evidence test rather than the independent judgment test. The court noted that the independent judgment test is applied only when the administrative decision substantially affects a fundamental, vested right, and no case has held that an automobile franchise is a fundamental vested right (20 Cal. App. 4th 1002, 1009-1010) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 195 PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
PART II. FORMS
B. Opposition to Petition
1. Demurrer

19-195 California Points & Authorities § 195.59

§ 195.59 Demurrer Should Be Sustained--Statute Provides for Review Under Substantial Evidence Test

[1] FORM Demurrer Should Be Sustained--Statute Provides for Review Under Substantial Evidence Test

[This form should be combined with a memorandum generally supporting a demurrer to a petition for administrative mandate based on application of substantial evidence rule. See § 195.58.]

THE SUBSTANTIAL EVIDENCE TEST DEFINES THE PROPER SCOPE OF REVIEW OF THE FINAL ADMINISTRATIVE ADJUDICATORY _____ [ORDER or DECISION] OF THE _____ [identify agency] BECAUSE THE LEGISLATURE HAS EXPRESSLY PROVIDED THAT THE TRIAL COURT WILL REVIEW DECISIONS OF THE AGENCY UNDER THE SUBSTANTIAL EVIDENCE TEST.

Statute Provides for Review Under Substantial Evidence Test. The trial court may not exercise its independent judgment, but must review the entire record for substantial evidence, if the agency is of constitutional origin and has been granted limited judicial power by the constitution or if the Legislature accords finality to the findings of a statewide agency, that is, if the Legislature expressly provides that the trial court will review decisions of the agency under the substantial evidence test (Kensington University v. Council for Private Postsecondary etc. Education (1997) 54 Cal. App. 4th 27, 40, 62 Cal. Rptr. 2d 582).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a demurrer to a petition for a writ of mandate for review of a final administrative adjudicatory order or decision of a local agency when the order or decision is made when the agency is of constitutional origin and has been granted limited judicial power by the constitution, or the Legislature accords finality to the findings of a statewide agency.

This form should be combined with a memorandum generally supporting a demurrer to a petition for administrative mandate on the ground that the substantial evidence test, rather than the independent judgment test applies [see § 195.58].

With appropriate modifications, this memorandum may be submitted in opposition to a petition for a writ of administrative mandate or in support of an answer to such a petition. Furthermore, this memorandum may be incorporated into an appellate brief when a trial court has misapplied the independent judgment test.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. That is, counsel should state facts showing that either of the circumstances stated in § 195.59[2][a] apply. See also § 195.50[2][b] for further discussion.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Statute Provides for Review Under Substantial Evidence Test

In Kensington University v. Council for Private Postsecondary etc. Education (1997) 54 Cal. App. 4th 27, 62 Cal. Rptr. 2d 582 , a university submitted a supplemental petition for writ of mandate seeking to vacate the decision of the Council for Private Postsecondary and Vocational Education denying the university's application to operate as a degree-granting institution under the Education Code. The trial court entered judgment denying the petition and the university appealed. On appeal, the university contend, among other things, that the trial court failed to apply the proper standard of review to the record of the administrative hearing.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment of the trial court. Citing Dominey v. Department of Personnel Administration (1988) 205 Cal. App. 3d 729, 741, 252 Cal. Rptr. 620 , the court stated that trial court is authorized to exercise its independent judgment on the evidence when the administrative agency is of legislative origin and its decision affects a fundamental vested right. On the other hand, the trial court may not exercise its independent judgment, but must instead review the entire record for substantial evidence, if the agency is of constitutional origin and has been granted limited judicial power by the constitution or if the Legislature accords finality to the findings of a statewide agency, that is, if the Legislature expressly provides that the trial court will review decisions of the agency under the substantial evidence test. With regard to the agency in present case, the Legislature has provided by statute that a party aggrieved by Council's final decision and order may seek judicial review by filing a petition for writ of mandate and that "[t]he factual bases supporting the final decision set forth in the council's statement of decision shall be conclusive if supported by substantial evidence on the record considered as a whole" (54 Cal. App. 4th 27, 41) . The court concluded that the university failed to establish that the trial court erred in applying the substantial evidence standard of review (54 Cal. App. 4th 27, 42) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 19 Chapters 190-195 PRODUCTS LIABILITY---to---PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
CHAPTER 195 PUBLIC ADMINISTRATIVE LAW
PART II. FORMS
B. Opposition to Petition
1. Demurrer

19-195 California Points & Authorities § 195.60

§ 195.60 Substantial Evidence Test Applies When Decision Impacts on Economic Interests Not Fundamental Vested Rights

[1] FORM Substantial Evidence Test Applies When Decision Impacts on Economic Interests Not Fundamental Vested Rights

[This form should be combined with a memorandum generally supporting a demurrer to a petition for administrative mandate based on application of substantial evidence rule. See § 195.58.]

THE SUBSTANTIAL EVIDENCE TEST DEFINES THE PROPER SCOPE OF REVIEW OF THE FINAL ADMINISTRATIVE ADJUDICATORY _____ [ORDER or DECISION] OF THE _____ [identify agency] BECAUSE THE AGENCY'S DECISION DOES NOT IMPACT ON ANY VESTED FUNDAMENTAL RIGHT, ONLY ON ECONOMIC INTERESTS.

Decision Impacts on Economic Interests Not Fundamental Vested Rights. When the impact of an agency's decision is purely economic, a trial court properly applies the substantial evidence test (Antelope Valley Press v. Poizner (2008) 162 Cal. App. 4th 839, 849-852, 75 Cal. Rptr. 3d 887 ; Tennison v. California Victim Compensation and Government Claims Board (2007) 152 Cal. App. 4th 1164, 1181-1182, 62 Cal. Rptr. 3d 88 ; JKH Enterprises, Inc. v. Department of Industrial Relations (2006) 142 Cal. App. 4th 1046, 1059-1061, 48 Cal. Rptr. 3d 563; E.W.A.P., Inc. v. City of Los Angeles (1997) 56 Cal. App. 4th 310, 327, 65 Cal. Rptr. 2d 325).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a demurrer to a petition for a writ of mandate for review of a final administrative adjudicatory order or decision of a local agency when the order or decision would impact mere economic interests, rather than fundamental vested rights.

