Great Lakes Properties, Inc. v. City of El Segundo (1977) 19 Cal. 3d 152, 137 Cal. Rptr. 154, 561 P.2d 244 , involved the interpretation of former Pub. Res. Code § 27428, which provided that "Any person who prevails in a civil action brought to enjoin a violation of [the California Coastal Zone Conservation Act of 1972] or to recover civil penalties shall be awarded his costs, including reasonable attorneys fees." In former Pub. Res. Code § 27105 (now Pub. Res. Code § 30111), the act also defined "person" to include individuals and business and governmental entities. The trial court awarded attorneys' fees to successful cross defendants, and cross plaintiff appealed from the orders making the awards.

The Supreme Court affirmed, rejecting cross plaintiff's contention that the "person" to whom attorneys' fees could be awarded under Pub. Res. Code § 27428 were restricted to plaintiffs. The Court stated that when the language of a statute is clear, its plain meaning should be followed, and cited Leroy T. v. Workmen's Comp. Appeals Bd. (1974) 12 Cal. 3d 434, 438, 115 Cal. Rptr. 761, 525 P.2d 665 , for the proposition that the party contending that a provision of an act must not be applied according to the natural or customary purport of its language must show either that some other section of the act expands or restricts its meaning, that the provision itself is repugnant to the general purview of the act, or that the act considered in pari materia with other acts, or with the legislative history of the subject matter, imports a different meaning (19 Cal. 3d 152, 155-156) . Relying on the broad definition of "person" in former Pub. Res. Code § 27105, the Court found nothing in the act to limit the meaning of the term "person" in Pub. Res. Code § 27428 to plaintiffs (19 Cal. 3d 152, 156-158) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] No Construction of Clear Statute

In West Covina Hospital v. Superior Court (1986) 41 Cal. 3d 846, 226 Cal. Rptr. 132, 718 P.2d 119 , plaintiff brought an action against a hospital for negligence in granting surgical privileges. Plaintiff desired to call as a witness a physician who had served on a medical staff review committee that evaluated the allegedly negligent surgeon. The hospital objected to the testimony on the ground that Evid. Code § 1157 does not allow such a review committee member to testify about the evaluation of a doctor reviewed by the committee. The trial court stated that the doctor could testify so long as he did so voluntarily. The hospital sought a writ of mandate to compel the trial court to vacate its order allowing the testimony, and the court of appeal granted the writ. The Supreme Court granted review, and held that Evid. Code § 1157 does not preclude a hospital medical review staff committee member from testifying about committee proceedings, if he or she does so voluntarily. The Court stated that it gives effect to statutes according to the usual, ordinary import of the language employed in framing them. When statutory language is clear and unambiguous there is no need for construction, and courts should not indulge in it. The Court pointed out that the statutory provision stating that a member of a hospital medical staff committee may not be "required" to testify is not the same as either providing that the member may not testify or that the hospital or committee has a privilege to preclude such testimony (41 Cal. 3d 846, 850) .

In Lamberton v. Rhodes-Jamieson (1988) 199 Cal. App. 3d 748, 245 Cal. Rptr. 162 , the court of appeal affirmed the denial of a motion under Code Civ. Proc. § 876(a) seeking to require contribution from joint judgment debtor tortfeasors. With respect to Code Civ. Proc. § 876(a), the court said: (1) the provisions were clear and there was nothing to interpret; (2) the Legislature has power to prescribe legal definitions of its own language, and when the meaning to be given to particular terms is prescribed by the Legislature, it is binding on the courts; (3) it is a cardinal rule that a court is not justified in ignoring the plain words of a statute unless it clearly appears that the language used is contrary to what, beyond question, was the intent of the Legislature; and (4) if the words of a statute are clear, the court should not add to or alter them to accomplish a purpose that does not appear on the face of the statute or from its legislative history (199 Cal. App. 3d 748, 754) .

Terminal Plaza Corp. v. City and County of San Francisco (1986) 186 Cal. App. 3d 814, 230 Cal. Rptr. 875 , concerned the interpretation of a city planning commission resolution requiring a developer to build a 12-foot-wide pedestrian way adjacent to its new building and requiring the developer to obtain plaintiff's consent before building any part of the pedestrian way on an adjacent parcel co-owned by plaintiff and the developer. The developer failed to build the pedestrian way. Plaintiff, anticipating a possible eminent domain action by the city, brought a mandate action to compel the city to enforce the resolution and require the developer to build the structure on his own land. Reversing the trial court's denial of the writ of mandate, and directing the trial court to issue the writ, the court of appeal held that the normal rules of statutory construction would apply to the interpretation of the resolution. The court found the resolution to be straightforward and unambiguous, and it rejected extrinsic evidence offered by the developer and the city that purportedly clarified the meaning of the resolution (186 Cal. App. 3d 814, 826-830) .

In Flood v. Wyeth Laboratories, Inc. (1986) 183 Cal. App. 3d 1272, 228 Cal. Rptr. 700 , the court was faced with the question of whether Health & Safety Code § 429.36 (repealed in 1995; now see Health & Safety Code § 120455), providing that no person shall be liable for any injury causedby an act or omission in the administration of a vaccine or other immunizing agent to a minor, including the residual effects of the vaccine or immunizing agent, applied to vaccine manufacturers so as to immunize them from products liability, including strict liability in tort. In holding that it did not apply, the court said that the first step in the process of statutory construction is the examination of the language of the statute for ambiguity, and that if the statutory language is clear and unambiguous, there is no need for construction and courts should not indulge in it (183 Cal. App. 3d 1272, 1277) .

Mitchell v. Franchise Tax Board (1986) 183 Cal. App. 3d 1133, 228 Cal. Rptr. 750 , was an action against the Franchise Tax Board for negligence, slander of title, and interference with credit relations arising out of a personal income tax proposed assessment and a tax lien placed on plaintiffs' property. The trial court sustained a demurrer to the complaint without leave to amend on the ground the action was barred by Gov. Code § 860.2, providing that neither a public entity nor a public employee is liable for injury caused by (1) instituting any judicial or administrative proceeding or action for or incidental to the assessment or collection of a tax, or (2) an act or omission in the interpretation or application of any law relating to the tax. Plaintiffs appealed from the subsequent judgment of dismissal, contending that § 860.2 confers immunity on public employees and entities only for their discretionary acts in the administration of the tax laws and not for ministerial acts. In affirming the judgment, the court of appeal rejected the argument on the ground that the statute contains no such limitation but grants immunity whether the act or omission is discretionary or ministerial. When statutory language is clear and unambiguous, there is no need for construction and courts should not indulge in it (183 Cal. App. 3d 1133, 1136) .

Additional cases stating that courts should not indulge in statutory construction when statutory language is clear and unambiguous include Atlantic Richfield Co. v. Workers' Comp. Appeals Bd. (1982) 31 Cal. 3d 715, 726, 182 Cal. Rptr. 778, 644 P.2d 1257 ; Referendum Committee v. City of Hermosa Beach (1986) 184 Cal. App. 3d 152, 159, 229 Cal. Rptr. 51 ; and Carl S. v. Commission for Teacher Preparation & Licensing (1981) 126 Cal. App. 3d 365, 372, 178 Cal. Rptr. 753 .

[b] Give Statute Effect According to Usual Meaning of Its Language

Dubins v. Regents of University of California (1994) 25 Cal. App. 4th 77, 30 Cal. Rptr. 2d 336 , concerned the interpretation of the Fair Employment and Housing Act (Gov. Code § 12900 et seq.). The court of appeal reversed a trial court's sustaining of a demurrer without leave to amend. The appellate court determined that the mere fact that the Legislature enacts an amendment indicates that it thereby intended to change the original act by creating a new right or withdrawing an existing one. Therefore, any material change in the language of the original act is presumed to indicate a change in legal rights (25 Cal. App. 4th 77, 85) .

In Gray v. Firthe (1987) 194 Cal. App. 3d 202, 239 Cal. Rptr. 389 , the court of appeal, construing Code Civ. Proc. § 583.310, held that statutes are required to be given effect according to the usual, ordinary import of the language used in framing them (194 Cal. App. 3d 202, 208) .

[c] Plain Language of Statute Adhered to When Legislative History Creates Conflicting Inferences

In Pearce v. Superior Court (1983) 149 Cal. App. 3d 1058, 197 Cal. Rptr. 238 , the trial court sustained defendants' demurrers without leave to amend in a shareholder's derivative action based on plaintiff's lack of standing to sue. On plaintiff's petition for an alternative writ of mandate, the court of appeal directed the order to be vacated, finding that plaintiff did have standing under Corp. Code § 800. Noting that legislative history gave rise to conflicting inferences about plaintiff's standing, the court of appeal cited the rule that when the language of a statute is clear, its plain meaning should be followed, and legislative history giving rise to conflicting inferences does not justify departing from the plain language of the statute (149 Cal. App. 3d 1058, 1067) .

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE COURT SHOULD NOT ENGAGE IN THE WHOLESALE REWRITING OF _____ [specify statute] IN ORDER TO PRESERVE ITS CONSTITUTIONALITY.

No Wholesale Rewriting to Preserve Constitutionality. A court may not engage in the wholesale rewriting of a statute in order to preserve its constitutionality (Blair v. Pitchess (1971) 5 Cal. 3d 258, 282, 96 Cal. Rptr. 42, 486 P.2d 1242 ; Bayscene Resident Negotiators v. Bayscene Mobilehome Park (1993) 15 Cal. App. 4th 119, 134, 18 Cal. Rptr. 2d 626).

[Set forth additional points and authorities relating to other rules of statutory interpretation that support interpretation desired (see §§ 217.24, 217.25, 217.40, and 217.41.]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

The foregoing points and authorities may be submitted in support of a party's contention that a statute is unconstitutional. It may be combined with other points and authorities in support of a party's contention that a statute is unconstitutional. The form sets out the rule of statutory interpretation that a court may not engage in the wholesale rewriting of a statute in order to preserve its constitutionality. Such an argument might be made in any type of action or proceeding in which a question arises concerning how a statute should be construed, and in which the constitutionality of a statute is at issue.

The foregoing points and authorities may be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities relating to the procedural context in which the issue of statutory interpretation arises. The points and authorities set forth in this form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should also insert argument in the foregoing form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the point of law stated. Thus, counsel should show that the statute cannot be construed in a manner preserving its constitutionality, other than by wholesale rewriting of the statute.

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 217.23 may be used to oppose the contention supported by the foregoing points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Wholesale Rewriting to Preserve Constitutionality

In Blair v. Pitchess (1971) 5 Cal. 3d 258, 96 Cal. Rptr. 42, 486 P.2d 1242 , the Supreme Court was presented with the issue of the constitutionality of California's former claim and delivery law (former Code Civ. Proc. §§ 509-521, now Code Civ. Proc. § 511.010 et seq.). Plaintiffs, residents and taxpayers of Los Angeles County, won a summary judgment in the trial court. The judgment included a permanent injunction. Defendants appealed.

Defendants argued on appeal that in some instances the execution of the claim and delivery process would not violate constitutional protections. The Court, however, found that it could not narrow the scope of the claim and delivery law without completely redrafting its provisions (5 Cal. 3d 258, 282-283) . The Court quoted from Seaboard Acceptance Corp. v. Shay (1931) 214 Cal. 361, 369, 5 P.2d 882 : "This court cannot, as already pointed out, in the exercise of its power to interpret, rewrite the statute. If this court were to insert in the statute all or any of the above qualifying provisions, it would in no sense be interpreting the statute as written, but would be rewriting the statute in accord with the presumed legislative intent. That is a legislative and not a judicial function" (5 Cal. 3d 258, 282) .

Bayscene Resident Negotiators v. Bayscene Mobilehome Park (1993) 15 Cal. App. 4th 119, 18 Cal. Rptr. 2d 626 , involved the constitutionality of a Chula Vista City mobilehome rent control ordinance. On a petition to affirm an arbitration award, the trial court dismissed the petition in its entirety on finding that the binding arbitration requirement in the ordinance was unconstitutional. On appeal, the court of appeal stated that "to find the arbitration provision constitutional, this court would be required to delete the word 'binding' or to add a requirement for a trial de novo or judicial review of the arbitration award for sufficiency of the evidence." A court "may not engage in the wholesale rewriting of a statute in order to preserve its constitutionality" (15 Cal. App. 4th 119, 134) . The court concluded that the binding arbitration provision of the ordinance was unconstitutional (15 Cal. App. 4th 119, 135) .

B. INTERPRETATION OF WORDS OF STATUTE

21-217 California Points & Authorities § 217.40

§ 217.40 Supporting Contention That Words of Statute Be Accorded Usual Meaning

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum supporting or opposing a motion, or in a trial or appellate brief. It should be combined with the general memorandum set out in § 217.20.]

IN CONSTRUING _____ [specify statute] THE COURT SHOULD TURN TO THE WORDS FIRST, ACCORDING THEM THEIR USUAL MEANING [AND CHOOSING THE ONE OF SEVERAL MEANINGS THAT WILL BEST ATTAIN THE PURPOSES OF THE STATUE].

A. Turn First to Words to Determine Intent. In determining legislative intent, the court turns first to the words themselves for the answer (People v. Cruz (1996) 13 Cal. 4th 764, 775, 55 Cal. Rptr. 2d 117, 919 P.2d 731 ; Walnut Creek Manor v. Fair Employment & Housing Com. (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 245, 268, 284 Cal. Rptr. 718, 814 P.2d 704 ; Palos Verdes Faculty Assn. v. Palos Verdes Peninsula Unified Sch. Dist. (1978) 21 Cal. 3d 650, 658, 147 Cal. Rptr. 359, 580 P.2d 1155).

B. Words to Be Given Usual Meaning. The words of a statute should be accorded their usual, ordinary, and commonsense meaning as understood when the statute was enacted, keeping in mind the purpose for which the statute was adopted (*Astrue v. Ratliff (2010) ___ U.S. ___, 130 S. Ct. 2521, 177 L. Ed. 2d 91, 2010 U.S. LEXIS 4763, at *12-15 ; Carcieri v. Salazar (2009) ___ U.S. ___, 129 S. Ct. 1058, 172 L. Ed. 2d 791, 800-802 ; Ali v. Federal Bureau of Prisons (2008) 552 U.S. 214, 128 S. Ct. 831, 169 L. Ed. 2d 680, 689-692 ; Koons Buick Pontiac GMC, Inc. v. Nigh (2004) 543 U.S. 50, 125 S. Ct. 460, 467-468, 160 L. Ed. 2d 389 ; People v. Cruz (1996) 13 Cal. 4th 764, 775, 55 Cal. Rptr. 2d 117, 919 P.2d 731 ; Walnut Creek Manor v. Fair Employment & Housing Com. (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 245, 268, 284 Cal. Rptr. 718, 814 P.2d 704 ; Hamilton v. State Bd. of Education (1981) 117 Cal. App. 3d 132, 141, 172 Cal. Rptr. 748).

[Optional] C. Word With More Than One Meaning to Be Construed to Attain Purposes of Statute. The objective sought to be achieved by a statute as well as the evil to be prevented is of prime consideration in the word's interpretation, and when a word of common usage has more than one meaning, the one that will best attain the purposes of the statute should be adopted, even though the ordinary meaning of the word is thereby enlarged or restricted (Sierra Club v. City of Hayward (1981) 28 Cal. 3d 840, 860-861 n.12, 171 Cal. Rptr. 619, 623 P.2d 180).

[Set forth additional points and cite authorities relating to other rules of statutory interpretation that aid in ascertaining legislative intent behind statute and support interpretation desired (see §§ 217.21 -217.24, 217.41 -217.46, 217.60 -217.63, 217.80 -217.86, 217.88).]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of a party's contention that a statute should be construed in a particular manner. The form sets out the rule of statutory interpretation that a word or words in a statute should be interpreted in accordance with their usual and ordinary meaning. When a word has more than one such meaning, the form may also be used to support the contention that the meaning that will best attain the statute's purpose should be adopted. Such an argument might be made in any type of action or proceeding in which a question arises concerning how a statute should be construed. This form should be combined with the general form set forth in § 217.20, which relate to the construction of statutes to ascertain and effectuate legislative intent.

Counsel should note that the proposition that a court should turn first to the words of a statute to determine the Legislature's intent is a starting point in statutory interpretation. Thus, the court may go on from this proposition to find an ambiguity in the words that requires the application of further rules of interpretation [see Moyer v. Workmen's Comp. Appeals Bd. (1973) 10 Cal. 3d 222, 230-231, 110 Cal. Rptr. 144, 514 P.2d 1224 (word with two possible definitions)] or may apply the rule that when the words of a statute are clear, the court should not add to or alter them to accomplish a purpose that does not appear on the face of the statute or from its legislative history [see California Teachers Assn. v. San Diego Community College Dist. (1981) 28 Cal. 3d 692, 698, 170 Cal. Rptr. 817, 621 P.2d 856 ; see also § 217.25].

This form may be combined with a memorandum relating to the procedural context in which the issue of statutory interpretation arises. This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should also insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should include a discussion pointing to dictionary definitions of the relevant word or words used in the statute and, if appropriate, demonstrate how the context and purpose of the legislation argues in favor of applying one of multiple possible meanings.

[b] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the forms set out in §§ 217.41 -217.44 may be used to oppose the contentions supported by the foregoing form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Turn First to Words to Determine Intent

People v. Cruz (1996) 13 Cal. 4th 764, 55 Cal. Rptr. 2d 117, 919 P.2d 731 , is discussed in § 217.20[3][a].

The facts and procedural background of Walnut Creek Manor v. Fair Employment & Housing Com. (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 245, 284 Cal. Rptr. 718, 814 P.2d 704 , are discussed in § 217.20[3][a]. In reversing the court of appeal, the Supreme Court held that in ascertaining legislative intent, the court must look first to the words of the statute themselves, giving to the language its usual, ordinary import (54 Cal. 3d 245, 268) . The Court then turned to the statutory language and construed the relevant term, "unlawful practice." Citing Webster's New International Dictionary and Black's Law Dictionary, the Court concluded that the plain meaning of the term "practice" meant a course of conduct or repeated acts. Thus, defendants were liable for only one punitive damage award resulting from a single unlawful practice even though defendants were guilty of multiple acts of discrimination against one plaintiff (54 Cal. 3d 245, 268-270) .

The procedural background of Palos Verdes Faculty Assn. v. Palos Verdes Peninsula Unified Sch. Dist. (1978) 21 Cal. 3d 650, 147 Cal. Rptr. 359, 580 P.2d 1155 , is discussed in § 217.20[3][a]. In affirming, the Supreme Court cited Moyer v. Workmen's Comp. Appeals Bd. (1973) 10 Cal. 3d 222, 230, 110 Cal. Rptr. 144, 514 P.2d 1224 (discussed under § 217.40[4][c]), for the rule that in determining legislative intent the courts turn first to the words themselves for the answer and must give effect to statutes according to the usual, ordinary import of the language employed in framing them (21 Cal. 3d 650, 658) . The Court compared the language of former Educ. Code § 13506 (now see Educ. Code § 45028), which provided that teachers "shall be classified on the salary schedule on the basis of uniform allowance for years of training and years of experience" with earlier language that it had replaced by amendment, which had provided that "uniform allowance may be made in any schedule of salaries for years of training and years of experience." The Court, also applying a rule of construction that the Legislature's intent to change a law is inferred from an amendment making substantial changes in statutory language previously construed by the courts, held that the statute required teachers to be classified wholly on a uniform basis of years of training and years of experience (21 Cal. 3d 650, 659-661) .

[b] Words to Be Given Usual Meaning

The issue in Astrue v. Ratliff (2010) ___ U.S. ___, 130 S. Ct. 2521, 177 L. Ed. 2d 91, 2010 U.S. LEXIS 4763 , was whether an award of attorney's fees under a provision of the Equal Access to Justice Act (EAJA) is payable to the prevailing litigant, rather than to the litigant's attorney, and is therefore subject to an offset to satisfy the litigant's debt to the government. The EAJA provides in pertinent part that "a court shall award to a prevailing party ... fees and other expenses ... in any civil action ... brought by or against the United States ... unless the court finds that the position of the United States was substantially justified" (28 U.S.C. § 2412(d)). Relying on the plain text of the statute, the Court held that a fee award is payable directly to the litigant (*2010 U.S. LEXIS 4763, at *14-15) .

The Supreme Court noted that the term "prevailing party" in fee statutes is a "term of art" that refers to the prevailing litigant, and nothing in the EAJA supports a different reading. Indeed, other subsections within the same EAJA provision underscore that the term "prevailing party" in carries its usual and settled meaning. Those provisions, for example, distinguish the litigant who receives the fee award from the attorney who performed the work that generated the fees (see, e.g., 28 U.S.C. § 2412(d)(1)(B) (the "prevailing party" must apply for the fees award and "sho[w]" that he or she "is a prevailing party and is eligible to receive an award" by, among other things, submitting "an itemized statement from any attorney ... representing or appearing in behalf of the party" that details the attorney's hourly rate and time spent on the case)) (*2010 U.S. LEXIS 4763, at *10-12) .

The Supreme Court rejected an argument that the EAJA's use of the verb "award" should be interpreted as making EAJA fees payable directly to a prevailing party's attorney. Quoting from Black's Law Dictionary, the Court explained that the transitive verb "award" has a settled meaning in the litigation context: "[t]o give or assign by sentence or judicial determination" (see Black's Law Dictionary 125 (5th ed. 1979)). The Court concluded that the plain meaning of the word "award" in this EAJA provision is that the court must "give or assign by ... judicial determination" to the "prevailing party" attorney's fees in the amount sought and substantiated under the EAJA (see 28 U.S.C. § 2412(d)(1)(A),(B)) (*2010 U.S. LEXIS 4763, at *12-13) . The Court also rejected an argument that the EAJA's reference to "attorney's fees" establishes that the fees are payable to the prevailing party's attorney. That an attorney may have a beneficial interest or a contractual right in fees awarded under the EAJA to the prevailing party does not establish that the statute "awards" the fees directly to the attorney (*2010 U.S. LEXIS 4763, at *14-15) .

The plaintiffs in Carcieri v. Salazar (2009) ___ U.S. ___, 129 S. Ct. 1058, 172 L. Ed. 2d 791 , disputed the authority of the Secretary of the Interior to acquire property for the use of a certain Indian tribe pursuant to the Indian Reorganization Act (IRA; see 25 U.S.C. § 465). The IRA authorizes such acquisitions for the benefit of tribes "now under Federal jurisdiction" (25 U.S.C. § 479). The tribe involved in this case was under federal jurisdiction when the Secretary made the disputed acquisition, but the tribe had not been under federal jurisdiction when the IRA was enacted in 1934. The precise issue, therefore, was whether the statutory word "now" refers to the time of the relevant acquisition of property or to the time of the statute's enactment (172 L. Ed. 2d 791, 796) .

The Supreme Court held that the statutory term "now under Federal jurisdiction" unambiguously refers to those tribes that were under federal jurisdiction at the time of enactment of the statute. The Court started with the ordinary meaning of the word "now," as understood when the IRA was enacted. Citing the 1934 edition of Webster's New International Dictionary, the Court said the primary definition of "now" was "[a]t the present time; at this moment; at the time of speaking." The Court also noted that the 1933 edition of Black's Law Dictionary stated that "'[n]ow' as used in a statute ordinarily refers to the date of its taking effect..." (172 L. Ed. 2d 791, 800) .

The Court went on to observe that the statutory context of the IRA makes clear that "now" does not mean "now or hereafter" or "at the time of application." The Court reasoned that if Congress had intended to legislate such a definition, it could have done so explicitly, as it did in other provisions of the IRA (see 25 U.S.C. §§ 468, 472), or it could have omitted the word "now" altogether. Instead, Congress limited the statute by the word "now," and the Court stated that it was obliged to give effect, if possible, to every word Congress used (172 L. Ed. 2d 791, 801-802) .

Lastly, the Court refused to consider an argument that there was no policy justification for limiting the Secretary's authority under the IRA to those tribes that were under federal jurisdiction in 1934. The Court explained that such policy arguments need not be considered, because Congress's use of the word "now" speaks for itself, and the courts must presume that Congress meant what it said in the statute (172 L. Ed. 2d 791, 802) .

In Ali v. Federal Bureau of Prisons (2008) 552 U.S. 214, 128 S. Ct. 831, 169 L. Ed. 2d 680 , the United States Supreme Court considered the scope of 28 U.S.C. § 2680, which specifies exceptions to the general waiver of sovereign immunity under the Federal Tort Claims Act (FTCA) (see 28 U.S.C. §§ 1346, 2671 et seq.). The FTCA generally authorizes "claims against the United States, for money damages ... for injury or loss of property ... caused by the negligent or wrongful act or omission of any employee of the Government while acting within the scope of his office or employment" (28 U.S.C. § 1346(b)(1)). In 28 U.S.C. § 2680(c), the FTCA exempts from this waiver certain categories of claims, including "any claim arising in respect of the assessment or collection of any tax or customs duty, or the detention of any goods, merchandise, or other property by any officer of customs or excise or any other law enforcement officer."

The plaintiff in this case was a federal prisoner who sued the Federal Bureau of Prisons, as well as Bureau officials, claiming that they were responsible for the loss of the plaintiff's personal property when he was transferred between prisons. The plaintiff contended that the government had waived its immunity from claims based on the negligent acts of Bureau officials, arguing that Section 2680(c) preserved immunity only as to officers acting in a customs or excise capacity.

The Supreme Court rejected the plaintiff's contention and held that Section 2680(c) preserves immunity for claims arising out of the detention of property by any federal law enforcement officers, not just customs or excise officers (169 L. Ed. 2d 680, 692) .

The Court initially observed that Section 2680(c)'s reference to "any other law enforcement officer" suggests a broad meaning and is most naturally read to mean law enforcement officers "of whatever kind" (169 L. Ed. 2d 680, 686-687) .

The Court explained that ejusdem generis (the principle that when a general term follows a specific one, the general term should be understood as a reference to subjects akin to the one with specific enumeration) does not apply to the phrase "any other law enforcement officer" in Section 2680(c). The principle applies when a phrase includes a list of specific items that share a common attribute. In such a case, the general term may be construed as sharing the common attribute. However, in Section 2680(c) the phrase "any officer of customs or excise or any other law enforcement officer" is not a list of specific items followed by a general term. Rather, it is a disjunctive phrase, with one specific and one general category. The absence of a list of specific items thus undercuts any inference that Congress focused on some common attribute when it used the catchall words "any other law enforcement officer" (169 L. Ed. 2d 680, 689-691) .

The Supreme Court also noted that the canon noscitur a sociis (a word is known by the company it keeps) is inapplicable, because of the absence of contextual cues that would shed light on the intended meaning of "any other law enforcement officer." The Court acknowledged that "customs" and "excise" are mentioned twice in Section 2680(c), but it found nothing in the overall statutory context to suggest that customs and excise officers were the exclusive focus of the provision. The emphasis on customs and excise is not inconsistent with a broad interpretation of "any other law enforcement officer" (169 L. Ed. 2d 680, 691) .

Finally, the Supreme Court pointed out that a broad reading of the phrase "any other law enforcement officer" does not violate the rule against superfluities. It does not render the phrase "any officer of customs or excise" superfluous, because Congress may have used the phrase to remove any doubt that officers of customs or excise were included in "law enforcement officers." Moreover, the plaintiff's proposed interpretation would render "any other law enforcement officer" superfluous because it is not clear when, if ever, "any other law enforcement officer" acts in a customs or excise capacity (169 L. Ed. 2d 680, 691) .

In Koons Buick Pontiac GMC, Inc. v. Nigh (2004) 543 U.S. 50, 125 S. Ct. 460, 160 L. Ed. 2d 389 , the United States Supreme Court interpreted the language of 15 U.S.C. § 1640(a)(2), the civil damages provision of the Truth in Lending Act. As amended in 1995, Section 1640(a)(2) provided for statutory damages equal to the following:

> (2)(A)(i) in the case of an individual action twice the amount of any finance charge in connection with the transaction, (ii) in the case of an individual action relating to a consumer lease ... 25 per centum of the total amount of monthly payments under the lease, except that the liability under this subparagraph shall not be less than $100 nor greater than $1,000 ... .

The issue in this case was whether the clause-(ii) limiting provision "except that the liability under this subparagraph shall not be less than $100 nor greater than $1,000," was also applicable to the circumstances described in clause (i). The Supreme Court held that the limiting provision did apply to both clauses. In arriving at that conclusion, the Court relied on the conventional meaning of the word "subparagraph." The Court noted that Congress ordinarily adheres to a hierarchical scheme in subdividing statutory sections. This hierarchy is set forth in the drafting manuals prepared by the legislative counsel's offices in the House and the Senate. The manuals provide for subdivision of statutory sections into subsections (starting with (a)), paragraphs (starting with (1)), subparagraphs (starting with (A)), and clauses (starting with (i)). Thus, applying the conventional meaning of the word "subparagraph," it was clear that the limiting provision was intended to apply to the circumstances described in clause (i) as well as clause (ii) (543 U.S. 50, 60-62).

People v. Cruz (1996) 13 Cal. 4th 764, 55 Cal. Rptr. 2d 117, 919 P.2d 731 , is discussed in § 217.20[3][a].

Walnut Creek Manor v. Fair Employment & Housing Com. (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 245, 268, 284 Cal. Rptr. 718, 814 P.2d 704 , is discussed under § 217.40[3][a].

Hamilton v. State Bd. of Education (1981) 117 Cal. App. 3d 132, 172 Cal. Rptr. 748 , involved a petition for a writ of mandate to compel defendant to grant plaintiffs' petition for formation of two new school districts. The superior court denied the petition for a writ of mandate, and plaintiffs appealed.

The issue on appeal was whether or not defendant board has discretion to deny a petition for formation of a school district when the petition meets the criteria guidelines established for review of such petitions. The court of appeal affirmed, holding that defendant did have such discretion. At issue was the language of former Educ. Code § 35500, providing that "[t]he State Board of Education shall establish minimum standards for the formation of districts which it shall apply in approving or disapproving petitions for the formation of new districts." The court found that the language of the statute was sufficiently ambiguous as to require interpretation consistent with legislative intent (117 Cal. App. 3d 132, 136) . Citing In re Rojas (1979) 23 Cal. 3d 152, 155, 151 Cal. Rptr. 649, 588 P.2d 789 , and People ex rel. Younger v. Superior Court (1976) 16 Cal. 3d 30, 43, 127 Cal. Rptr. 122, 544 P.2d 1322 , the court noted that the words of a statute should be accorded their usual, ordinary, and commonsense meaning, keeping in mind the purpose for which the statute was adopted. The court then pointed to the phrase "minimum standards" in Educ. Code § 35500 as an indication that the statute has reference to minimal threshold requirements for consideration of a petition and as supporting the interpretation that defendant may not approve a petition that fails to comply with the requirements, but is not under any compulsion to approve a petition that meets those requirements (117 Cal. App. 3d 132, 141) .

[c] Word With More Than One Meaning to Be Construed to Attain Purposes of Statute

The plaintiffs in Sierra Club v. City of Hayward (1981) 28 Cal. 3d 840, 171 Cal. Rptr. 619, 623 P.2d 180 , sought a writ of mandamus to set aside defendant city council's resolution partially cancelling an agricultural land preservation agreement under the California Land Conservation Act of 1965 (Gov. Code § 51200 et seq.). Under the act, owners of agricultural land may contract with local public entities to restrict their land to agricultural use or compatible uses for a 10-year period in return for favorable property tax treatment. Such contracts automatically renew every year until notice of nonrenewal is given, and the land remains restricted for 10 years after that while the tax benefits are gradually diminished. Cancellation is an exception to this general procedure for terminating an agreement by nonrenewal. The superior court entered judgment denying the writ, and plaintiffs appealed.

The Supreme Court, in reversing, considered language of Gov. Code § 51282, which at that time provided that "[a] potential alternative use of the land may be considered [as grounds for cancellation] only if there is no proximate, noncontracted land suitable for the use to which it is proposed the contracted land be put." In construing the words "proximate" and "use" the Court stated the well-established principle that the purpose of a statute is a guiding star in defining the language it employs, quoting People ex rel. S.F. Bay etc. Com. v. Town of Emeryville (1968) 69 Cal. 2d 533, 543-544, 72 Cal. Rptr. 790, 446 P.2d 790 , for the statement that the objective sought to be achieved by a statute as well as the evil to be prevented is of prime consideration in a word's interpretation, and that when a word of common usage has more than one meaning, the one which will best attain the purposes of the statute should be adopted, even though the ordinary meaning of the word is thereby enlarged or restricted (28 Cal. 3d 840, 860-861 n.12). The Court accordingly defined "proximate" as referring to spatial rather than causal relationships, and as meaning property close enough to the restricted parcel to serve as a practical alternative for the proposed use rather than meaning contiguous property (28 Cal. 3d 840, 861) . The Court also gave "use" a flexible meaning focusing on whether or not another parcel or combination of parcels could serve a use substantially similar to that proposed for the restricted parcel, rather than focusing on the suitability of another parcel for the identical use (28 Cal. 3d 840, 862) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Turn First to Words to Determine Intent

Dubins v. Regents of University of California (1994) 25 Cal. App. 4th 77, 30 Cal. Rptr. 2d 336 , concerned the interpretation of the Fair Employment and Housing Act (Gov. Code § 12900 et seq.). The court of appeal reversed a trial court's order sustaining a demurrer without leave to amend. The appeals court explained that the meaning of the words of a statute can only be determined with reference to the context in which the words are used; that is, with reference to such purpose as may be discerned from examining the entire enactment of which the words are part. A statutory phrase may be said to be clear and unambiguous if the meaning assigned to it is not in conflict with other language in the same act. Thus, in analyzing the legislative usage of certain words, the objective sought to be achieved by a statute, as well as the evil to be prevented, is of prime consideration (25 Cal. App. 4th 77, 83) .

Jutzi v. County of Los Angeles (1987) 196 Cal. App. 3d 637, 242 Cal. Rptr. 74 , was an action against a county hospital for malpractice in rendering emergency medical services, in which the court of appeal, in affirming judgment for defendant, construed Health & Safety Code § 1799.110(c). The court stated that, in construing a statute to determine the legislative intent, the court first looks to the language of the statute, attempting to give effect to the usual, ordinary import of that language and seeking to avoid making any language mere surplusage. Significance if possible should be attributed to every word, phrase, sentence and part of an act in pursuance of the legislative purpose (196 Cal. App. 3d 637, 650) .

In Los Angeles County Safety Police Assn. v. County of Los Angeles (1987) 192 Cal. App. 3d 1378, 237 Cal. Rptr. 920 , the court of appeal, in holding that former Penal Code § 830.4, relating to peace officers, was intended by the Legislature to apply to a charter county, said that to determine legislative intent a court should turn first to the statute's words (192 Cal. App. 3d 1378, 1387) .

[b] Words to Be Given Usual Meaning

In George M. v. Superior Court (1988) 201 Cal. App. 3d 755, 247 Cal. Rptr. 330 , an adoption proceeding, the court of appeal held that a father who was found to have a "legitimate" child under Arizona law was entitled to certain statutory parental rights, including the necessity of his consent to adoption, and to a special custodial preference. The father's entitlement to such rights depended on his being "a father as to whom the child is a legitimate child under prior law of this state or under the law of another jurisdiction," under former Civ. Code § 7017(a)(1) (now see Fam. Code § 7660). In construing the term "legitimate" as used in the applicable Arizona statute and in former Civ. Code § 7017(a)(1), courts are bound to give effect to statutes according to the usual, ordinary import of the language employed in framing them. Although a court may properly rely on extrinsic aids, it should first turn to the words of the statute to determine the intent of the Legislature. Because the language of former § 7017(a) was clear, its plain meaning was required to be followed; thus, the section's reference to a "legitimate" child under another jurisdiction's law properly applied to the Arizona judgment (201 Cal. App. 3d 755, 759) .

In CEJA v. J.R. Wood, Inc. (1987) 196 Cal. App. 3d 1372, 242 Cal. Rptr. 531 , the court of appeal, in construing Lab. Code § 4558 (relating to workers' compensation), said that (1) when construing the meaning of a word in a statute, a court should first look to the plain dictionary meaning of the word unless it has a specific legal definition; and (2) each word, phrase, and provision in a statute is presumed to have a meaning and to perform a useful function (196 Cal. App. 3d 1372, 1375-1376) .

In Flood v. Wyeth Laboratories, Inc. (1986) 183 Cal. App. 3d 1272, 228 Cal. Rptr. 700 , the court was faced with the question of whether former Health & Safety Code § 429.36 (now see Health & Safety Code § 120455), providing that no person shall be liable for any injury caused by an act or omission in the administration of a vaccine or other immunizing agent to a minor, including the residual effects of the vaccine or immunizing agent, applied to vaccine manufacturers so as to immunize them from products liability, including strict liability in tort. In holding that it did not so apply because the statute was limited to persons who administer vaccines, the court said that courts must give statutory language its usual, ordinary meaning (183 Cal. App. 3d 1272, 1277) .

In Moyer v. Workmen's Comp. Appeals Bd. (1973) 10 Cal. 3d 222, 110 Cal. Rptr. 144, 514 P.2d 1224 , petitioner sought a review of respondent's determination of his permanent disability rating. Respondent had rated petitioner based on his age and occupation at the time of making the determination rather than as of the time of injury because petitioner had undergone rehabilitation training. Petitioner argued that his acceptance of the rehabilitation program was not voluntary, as required by Lab. Code § 139.5 (later repealed as of Jan. 1, 2009, and until that date applicable only to injuries occurring before Jan. 1, 2004), because he was not told that the retraining would result in a different or lesser disability rating and that he had an election to participate in the rehabilitation and take a lesser sum or to not participate and receive his regular and higher disability rating. The Supreme Court annulled respondent's decision and remanded the case. The Court found that "voluntary" could either mean freedom from compulsion or it could mean deliberate, in the sense of acting with full knowledge of the intended action (10 Cal. 3d 222, 231) . Stating the rule set out in Paragraph C of the foregoing form, the Court looked to the general purpose of Lab. Code § 139.5 in determining that the Legislature had used the term "voluntary" in the sense of deliberate (10 Cal. 3d 222, 232-234) .

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a party's contention that a statute should be construed in a particularmanner. The form sets out the rule of statutory interpretation that when a statute defines a word used in the statute, the court should follow that meaning. Such an argument might be made in any type of action or proceeding in which a question arises concerning how a statute should be construed. These points and authorities should be combined with the general points and authorities set forth in § 217.20, which relate to the construction of statutes to ascertain and effectuate the legislative intent.

These points and authorities may be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities relating to the procedural context in which the issue of statutory interpretation arises. The points and authorities set forth in this form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should also insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should set out the statutory definition of the word or words in question and specify how the statute in which the word or words are used should be applied, given that definition.

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 217.40 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Statutory Definition Binding on Court

In Urban Renewal Agency v. California Coastal Zone Conservation Com. (1975) 15 Cal. 3d 577, 125 Cal. Rptr. 485, 542 P.2d 645 , plaintiff public agency and the City of Monterey sought judicial review by mandamus of defendant commission's decision denying plaintiffs an exemption from the permit requirement of the California Coastal Zone Conservation Act (former Pub. Res. Code § 27000 et seq.; now see California Coastal Act of 1976, Pub. Res. Code § 30000 et seq.). Plaintiffs sought the exemption on the basis of a grandfather clause provided for by former Pub. Res. Code § 27404, which exempted from its permit requirements persons who had obtained a vested right under a building permit prior to adoption of the act by initiative in 1972. The superior court granted relief to plaintiffs, and defendants appealed.

Although the Supreme Court reversed on other grounds, it rejected defendants' contention that plaintiffs, as municipal corporations, could not acquire vested rights against the state. The Court acknowledged that under common law it might be that plaintiffs, as creatures of the state, could not acquire such vested rights, but the Court looked to the language of former Pub. Res. Code § 27404, which defined vested rights as extending to any "person" who has diligently and in good faith performed substantial work and incurred substantial liabilities. The Court then addressed the question whether or not "person" as used in former Pub. Res. Code § 27404 was intended to include municipal corporations. The answer was clear because the act, in former Pub. Res. Code § 27105, expressly defined "person" for purposes of the act as including any agency of federal, state, and local government. The Court adhered to this definition, holding that when a statute prescribes the meaning to be given to particular terms used by the statute, generally that meaning is binding on the courts (15 Cal. 3d 577, 583-585) .

A. Previously Construed Words Presumed to Be Used in Same Sense. After the courts have construed the meaning of particular words, and the Legislature subsequently undertakes to use those same words in a later enactment, it is presumed that the Legislature intended the subject language would be accorded the same meaning (People v. Wells (1996) 12 Cal. 4th 979, 986, 50 Cal. Rptr. 2d 699, 911 P.2d 1374 ; In re D. (1980) 28 Cal. 3d 210, 216, 168 Cal. Rptr. 455, 617 P.2d 1087).

[Optional] B. [a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a party's contention that a statute should be construed in a particular manner. The form sets out the rule of statutory interpretation that when a word or expression has been construed by the courts and is subsequently used in another statute in the same connection, it is presumed to have been used in the same sense as it was previously construed. Such an argument might be made in any type of action or proceeding in which a question arises concerning how a statute should be construed. These points and authorities should be combined with the general points and authorities set forth in § 217.20, which relate to the construction of statutes to ascertain and effectuate the legislative intent.

These points and authorities may be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities relating to the procedural context in which the issue of statutory interpretation arises. The points and authorities set forth in this form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should also insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should include a discussion showing that before the statute containing the word or expression to be construed was enacted, a court had construed the same word or expression in another statute on the same or an analogous subject.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Previously Construed Words Presumed to Be Used in Same Sense

The defendant in People v. Wells (1996) 12 Cal. 4th 979, 50 Cal. Rptr. 2d 699, 911 P.2d 1374 , was convicted of vehicular manslaughter, under Penal Code § 192(c), defined as driving a vehicle while in the commission of an unlawful act. The defendant's car struck another vehicle, injuring the driver and killing the passenger. At trial, evidence was presented that the defendant was speeding and otherwise driving recklessly, in violation of several Vehicle Code provisions. The trial court instructed the jury that an "unlawful act" is one inherently dangerous to human life or safety and further instructed the jury that defendant's several misdemeanor Vehicle Code violations were inherently dangerous to human life and safety. The court of appeal reversed and remanded, finding that defendant's speeding did not qualify as an inherently dangerous unlawful act under Penal Code § 192(c).

In interpreting the meaning of the phrase "unlawful act," the court of appeal relied on People v. Stuart (1956) 47 Cal. 2d 167, 302 P.2d 5 , and identical language in Penal Code § 192(b). The court of appeal understood the holding of Stuart to say that the "unlawful act" in question must be inherently dangerous to human life in the abstract. The California Supreme Court reversed the court of appeal, disagreeing with the lower court's reading of Stuart. The Supreme Court said that Stuart stood for the proposition that the "unlawful act" must simply be dangerous to human life and safety, not dangerous in the abstract (12 Cal. 4th 979, 986) . The Supreme Court also stated that use of the phrase "unlawful act" in Penal Code § 192(b), (c), reflected that the Legislature intended the phrase be given the same meaning in both sections, citing the rule that courts presume the Legislature intended similar phrases be accorded the same meaning, unless a contrary intent appears. Accordingly, the Supreme Court found that under both sections, "unlawful act" meant conduct inherently dangerous under the circumstances of its commission, rather than in the abstract, and found that defendant's speeding and recklessness thus satisfied the definition (12 Cal. 4th 979, 988-989) .

Petitioner in In re D. (1980) 28 Cal. 3d 210, 168 Cal. Rptr. 455, 617 P.2d 1087 , sought a writ of habeas corpus on the ground that she had been improperly sentenced to prison when she should have been first remanded to the California Youth Authority (hereinafter referred to as "CYA") for evaluation. The court of appeal ordered the writ to issue, and the Supreme Court granted the Attorney General's petition for hearing.

The Supreme Court rejected the Attorney General's contention that petitioner was ineligible for commitment to the CYA because she had been sentenced to life in prison. The Court held that petitioner's sentence was an indeterminate one of 25 years to life, so that she was not ineligible for CYA commitment. Noting that the statute under which petitioner was sentenced, by providing for a term of "25 years to life," employed language that had been commonly and uniformly utilized in California to denote an indeterminate sentence, the Court quoted City of Long Beach v. Payne (1935) 3 Cal. 2d 184, 191, 44 P.2d 305 , for the well-recognized rule of construction that after the courts have construed the meaning of anyparticular word of expression, and the Legislature subsequently undertakes to use those exact words in the same connection, the presumption is almost irresistible that it used them in the precise and technical sense that had been placed on them by the courts (28 Cal. 3d 210, 216) .

[b] Adoption of Previous Construction of Federal Legislation on Which State Statute Patterned

Petitioner in Kaplan's Fruit & Produce Co. v. Superior Court (1979) 26 Cal. 3d 60, 160 Cal. Rptr. 745, 603 P.2d 1341 , unsuccessfully sought a preliminary injunction to restrain pickets of real party in interest from obstructing ingress and egress from petitioner's wholesale facility. Petitioner filed a petition for a writ of mandate to compel the superior court to issue the injunction.

One issue before the Supreme Court was whether or not the injunctive relief sought from the superior court was precluded by the Agricultural Labor Relations Act (Lab. Code § 1140 et seq.). Lab. Code § 1160.9 makes the procedures under that act the exclusive method of redressing unfair labor practices, so that if the picketing constituted an unfair labor practice, the superior court would not have jurisdiction to issue the injunction. Real party in interest argued that picketing that obstructs customers' access to the employer's place of business constituted an unfair labor practice under Lab. Code § 1154(d), which prohibits unions from threatening, coercing, or restraining any person from using or otherwise dealing with the products of any other producer, processor, or manufacturer or to cease doing business with any other person. The Court relied on the United States Supreme Court's interpretation of the substantially identical language of 29 U.S.C. § 158(b)(4) to hold that Lab. Code § 1154(d) did not apply to primary picketing (picketing of the employer with which the union has a dispute, as opposed to secondary picketing of other employers who do business with the employer involved in the dispute). In so holding, the Court quoted Belridge Farms v. Agricultural Labor Relations Bd. (1978) 21 Cal. 3d 551, 557, 147 Cal. Rptr. 165, 580 P.2d 665 (discussed under § 217.42[3][a]), for the proposition stated in Paragraph B of the foregoing form (26 Cal. 3d 60, 73) .

[a] Previously Construed Words Presumed to Be Used in Same Sense

In Belridge Farms v. Agricultural Labor Relations Bd. (1978) 21 Cal. 3d 551, 147 Cal. Rptr. 165, 580 P.2d 665 , the Supreme Court held that decisions of the general counsel of the Agricultural Labor Relations Board not to issue unfair labor practice complaints are not reviewable. The Court held that such decisions are not final orders of the board that would be subject to review under the provisions of the Agricultural Labor Relations Act, relying on the construction of the National Labor Relations Act by federal courts. The Court noted that the relevant language of the two acts was identical, and stated that when legislation has been judicially construed and a subsequent statute on the same or an analogous subject is framed in the identical language, it will ordinarily be presumed that the Legislature intended that the language as used in the later enactment would be given a like interpretation (21 Cal. 3d 551, 557) .

In Estate of Sax (1989) 214 Cal. App. 3d 1300, 263 Cal. Rptr. 190 , the court of appeal held that a surviving putative spouse is a "surviving spouse" for purposes of former Prob. Code § 6560 (now see Prob. Code § 21610 et seq.), which applies when a testator omits from a will his or her "surviving spouse who married the testator after the execution of the will" (214 Cal. App. 3d 1300, 1306) . In construing the statute, the court noted that there was no case law or legislative history on the issue (214 Cal. App. 3d 1300, 1302-1304) . Therefore, the court applied the principle of statutory construction that a legislature is presumed to be aware of the judicial interpretation of words dealing with the same or analogous topics and is further presumed to intend the same well-settled meaning of these words, unless it expressly states otherwise (214 Cal. App. 3d 1300, 1304) . At the time the statute was enacted, courts had held that the term "surviving spouse" included a putative spouse for purposes of intestate succession under former Prob. Code § 201 (now Prob. Code § 6401); receipt of worker's compensation death benefits under Lab. Code § 4702; standing under Code Civ. Proc. § 337 to bring a wrongful death action; and the application of other state and federal statutes (214 Cal. App. 3d 1300, 1304-1305) . With this wealth of cases, the court held, the Legislature would have indicated if it had intended a different meaning (214 Cal. App. 3d 1300, 1305) .

The court of appeal in Allis-Chalmers Corp. v. City of Oxnard (1981) 126 Cal. App. 3d 814, 179 Cal. Rptr. 159 , affirmed a judgment denying plaintiff injunctive relief against defendant city's issuance of bonds. Plaintiff argued that the bond issue was invalid because the interest rate exceeded the statutorily imposed maximum of 8 percent. The court noted a previous case construing the meaning of another statute that imposed a maximum rate of interest on public bonds. The Legislature is presumed to have knowledge of existing judicial decisions and to have enacted statutes in light of the decisions. When words used in a new statute have been construed as having been used in a particular sense in a former statute on the same or an analogous subject, they are presumed to have been used in the same sense in the new statute unless there is a clearly expressed intention to the contrary (126 Cal. App. 3d 814, 819) .

PART II. FORMS
B. INTERPRETATION OF WORDS OF STATUTE

21-217 California Points & Authorities § 217.43

§ 217.43 Supporting Contention That Words of Statute Be Construed in Context

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum supporting or opposing a motion, or in a trial or appellate brief. It should be combined with the general memorandum set out in § 217.20.]

THE WORD(S) "_____" [specify] IN _____ [specify statute] SHOULD BE CONSTRUED IN CONTEXT, KEEPING IN MIND THE NATURE AND OBVIOUS PURPOSE OF THE STATUTE.

A. Statutory Language to Be Construed in Context. In interpreting particular words, phrases, or clauses in a statute, the entire substance of the statute or that portion relating to the subject under review should be examined in order to determine the scope and purpose of the provision containing such words, phrases, or clauses. The words in question must be construed in context, keeping in mind the nature and obvious purpose of the statute in which they appear (Tripp v. Swoap (1976) 17 Cal. 3d 671, 679, 131 Cal. Rptr. 789, 552 P.2d 749 ; Frazier v. City of Richmond (1986) 184 Cal. App. 3d 1491, 1496-1497, 228 Cal. Rptr. 376 ; see Kucana v. Holder (2010) ___ U.S. ___, 130 S. Ct. 827, 175 L. Ed. 2d 694, 705-706 ; Lamie v. United States Tr. (2004) 540 U.S. 526, 124 S. Ct. 1023, 157 L. Ed. 2d 1024, 1034-1036) .

[Optional] B. Noscitur a Sociis. Under the rule of noscitur a sociis, the meaning of a word may be enlarged or restrained by reference to the object of the whole clause in which it is used (People v. Stout (1971) 18 Cal. App. 3d 172, 177, 95 Cal. Rptr. 593).

[Optional] C. Last Antecedent Rule. Qualifying words, phrases, and clauses are to be applied to the words or phrases immediately preceding them and not to words or phrases more remote (White v. County of Sacramento (1982) 31 Cal. 3d 676, 680, 183 Cal. Rptr. 520, 646 P.2d 191).

[Optional] D. Words Grouped in List. Words grouped in a list should be given related meaning (Droeger v. Friedman, Sloan & Ross (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 26, 38, 283 Cal. Rptr. 584, 812 P.2d 931).

[Optional] E. General Words Used in Conjunction With Specific Words. If a statute uses a general word in conjunction with other words describing specific acts that would ordinarily be within the ambit of the general word, the court may then infer that the general word refers to conduct other than those specific acts (Estate of Griswold (2001) 25 Cal. 4th 904, 911, 108 Cal. Rptr. 2d 165, 24 P.3d 1191).

[Optional] F. Adverb Modifying Transitive Verb Usually Also Applies to Verb's Object. When a sentence in a statute contains a transitive verb that has an object, an adverb that modifies the verb is commonly understood to apply to the entire action conveyed by the complete predicate, including the object of the verb (Flores-Figueroa v. United States (2009) ___ U.S. ___, 129 S. Ct. 1886, 173 L. Ed. 2d 853, 857-859, 862) .

[Set forth additional points and authorities relating to other rules of statutory interpretation that aid in ascertaining legislative intent behind statute and support interpretation desired (see §§ 217.21 -217.24, 217.40 -217.42, 217.44 -217.46, 217.60 -217.63, 217.80 -217.86, 217.88).]

This form may be submitted in support of a party's contention that a statute should be construed in a particular manner. The form sets out the rule of statutory interpretation that a word or words used in a statute should be construed in context, keeping in mind the nature and obvious purpose of the statute in which they appear. Such an argument might be made in any type of action or proceeding in which a question arises concerning how a statute should be construed. This form should be combined with the general form set forth in § 217.20, which relate to the construction of statutes to ascertain and effectuate the legislative intent.

This form may be combined with a memorandum relating to the procedural context in which the issue of statutory interpretation arises. This form also may be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should also insert argument in the foregoing form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should set out the definition or definitions of the word or words in question, and demonstrate how giving them the desired interpretation is consistent with and will further the purpose of the statute.

This form may be used in conjunction with or in opposition to the contention supported by the form set out in § 217.40. If combined with § 217.40, counsel should demonstrate how the usual meaning of the word or one of several possible meanings of the word, construed in context, will further the purpose of the statute. If used to oppose § 217.40, counsel should demonstrate how application of the usual meaning of the word would be inconsistent with the purposes of the statute, so that the word should be read, in context, as having a different meaning. In opposing § 217.40, counsel should also consider combining this form with those set out in §§ 217.21, 217.42, and 217.44 -217.46.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Statutory Language to Be Construed in Context

In Tripp v. Swoap (1976) 17 Cal. 3d 671, 131 Cal. Rptr. 789, 552 P.2d 749 , plaintiff instituted administrative mandamus proceedings to challenge the determination of defendant Director of the State Department of Social Welfare that plaintiff was ineligible for disability welfare benefits. Defendant appealed from a judgment awarding plaintiff retroactive payment of benefits with attorneys' fees and prejudgment interest.

On appeal, defendant contended that prejudgment interest was not allowable because it was not authorized to be awarded under Welf. & Inst. Code § 10962, which relates to judicial review of benefit determinations. Plaintiff argued that the interest had been properly awarded on the basis of Civ. Code § 3287(a), relating to interest on damages generally. The Supreme Court, after noting the fundamental rule that courts should ascertain the intent of the Legislature so as to effectuate the purpose of the law, quoted West Pico Furniture Co. v. Pacific Finance Loans (1970) 2 Cal. 3d 594, 608, 86 Cal. Rptr. 793, 469 P.2d 665 , in stating that in interpreting particular words, phrases, or clauses in a statute, the entire substance of the statute or that portion relating to the subject under review should be examined in order to determine the scope and purpose of the provision containing those words, phrases, or clauses. The Court additionally quoted Moyer v. Workmen's Comp. Appeals Bd. (1973) 10 Cal. 3d 222, 230, 110 Cal. Rptr. 144, 514 P.2d 1224 (discussed in § 217.40[4][c]), for the proposition that the words in question must be construed in context, keeping in mind the nature and obvious purpose of the statute in which they appear (17 Cal. 3d 671, 679) . When two codes are construed, they must be read together and effect given to all their provisions, if possible. The Court held that the failure of the Legislature to mention interest in Welf. & Inst. Code § 10962 did not reveal any intent to deny such interest to recipients of wrongfully withheld benefits, and that Civ. Code § 3287(a) provided clear authority for awarding such interest. Thus, the Court affirmed the judgment, although modifying it on other grounds (17 Cal. 3d 671, 679-685) .

In Frazier v. City of Richmond (1986) 184 Cal. App. 3d 1491, 228 Cal. Rptr. 376 , the court of appeal affirmed a trial court judgment that defendant city's payments to plaintiff city employees for insurance and medical plan contributions should not be deemed "salary" under the city charter for retirement computation purposes. The court noted that the contexts in which the term "salary" was used in the charter suggested that the drafters specifically intended to exclude payments for insurance and medical plan contributions from the retirement computation formulas (184 Cal. App. 3d 1491, 1496-1497) .

Kucana v. Holder (2010) ___ U.S. ___, 130 S. Ct. 827, 175 L. Ed. 2d 694 , involved the interpretation of a federal statute that bars judicial review of decisions of the Attorney General "the authority for which is specified under this subchapter to be in the discretion of the Attorney General" (8 U.S.C. § 1252(a)(2)(B)(ii)). The parties in the case disagreed over whether the statutory word "under" referred only to the Attorney General's discretionary authority specified "in" the statute, or whether it encompassed matters made discretionary under regulations adopted "pursuant to" the statute. Looking to the context surrounding the word "under," the United States Supreme Court concluded that the word referred only to matters specified in the statute. In so holding, the Court remarked that "[t]he word 'under' is chameleon; it 'has many dictionary definitions and must draw its meaning from its context'" (175 L. Ed. 2d 694, 705-706 (quoting Ardestani v. INS (1991) 502 U.S. 129, 135, 112 S. Ct. 515, 116 L. Ed. 2d 496)).

In Lamie v. United States Tr. (2004) 540 U.S. 526, 124 S. Ct. 1023, 157 L. Ed. 2d 1024 , the petitioner was an attorney who had performed legal services for the debtor in a Chapter 7 bankruptcy proceeding, despite lacking the bankruptcy trustee's authorization to do so. When the petitioner filed an application for an award of fees the trustee objected. After the bankruptcy court, the district court, and the Fourth Circuit denied the fee request, the Supreme Court affirmed, holding that Section 330(a)(1) of the Bankruptcy Code (11 U.S.C. § 330(a)(1)) prohibits an award of fees unless the attorney was retained with the trustee's approval in accordance with Section 327 of the Bankruptcy Code (11 U.S.C. § 327).

Section 330(a)(1) regulates the award of fees for services rendered by attorneys in connection with bankruptcy proceedings (see 11 U.S.C. § 330(a)(1)). Section 330(a)(1) was amended by the Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1994 (108 Stat. 4106). Prior to the 1994 amendment, Section 330(a)(1) provided that the court could award "to a trustee, to an examiner, to a professional person employed under section 327 or 1103 of this title, or to the debtor's attorney ... reasonable compensation for actual, necessary services rendered by such trustee, examiner, professional person, or attorney" (emphasis added to highlight material deleted in 1994 amendment). After the 1994 amendment, Section 330(a)(1) provided that the court could award "to a trustee, an examiner, a professional person employed under section 327 or 1103 ... reasonable compensation for actual, necessary services rendered by the trustee, examiner, professional person, or attorney." The 1994 amendment, therefore, contained apparent legislative drafting errors. It left Section 330(a)(1) with a missing "or." Also, the deletion of the first, but not the second, reference to "attorney" destroyed the former parallelism that existed in the former version of the statute and so cast doubt on the meaning of the second reference to "attorney" (see 157 L. Ed. 2d 1024, 1031-1032) . (Section 330(a)(1) was later amended in 2005 to authorize compensation to persons appointed to serve as ombudsmen under 11 U.S.C. §§ 332 and 333, but the 2005 amendment did not correct the apparent legislative drafting errors described above [see Pub. L. 109-8, 119 Stat. 23 (effective Oct. 17, 2005)]).

In this case, the Supreme Court held that despite the grammatical deficiencies created by the 1994 amendment of Section 330(a)(1), the statute clearly prohibited an award of fees in a Chapter 7 bankruptcy case to an attorney who had not been retained in accordance with Bankruptcy Code Section 327.

The Supreme Court found that the then-current text of Section 330(a)(1) is not ambiguous. The Court acknowledged that the statute was awkward, and even ungrammatical; but that did not make it ambiguous on the point at issue. In its first part, the statute authorized an award of compensation to one of three types of persons: trustees, examiners, and Section 327 professional persons. A debtor's attorney not engaged in accordance withSection 327 was simply not included within the class of persons eligible for compensation. The statute then went on to define what type of compensation may be awarded: compensation that is (1) reasonable; (2) for actual, necessary services; and (3) rendered by four types of persons (the same three persons plus an "attorney"). Thus, under the clear terms of the statute, unless the applicant for compensation was one of three types of persons listed in the first part, the kind of service rendered by the applicant was irrelevant (157 L. Ed. 2d 1024, 1034) .

The Court found that the missing "or" in the then-current text of the statute did not make it ambiguous. There are numerous federal statutes that inadvertently lack a conjunction. Such statutes nevertheless are read for their plain meaning. In the case of Section 330(a)(1), the missing conjunction neither altered the text's substance nor obscured its meaning. In contrast, the meaning of a statute might be altered or obscured if a "not" were missing or if an "or" were inadvertently substituted for an "and" (157 L. Ed. 2d 1024, 1034) .

The Supreme Court also found that Section 330(a)(1)'s nonparalleled fourth category of persons who could render compensable services did not cloud the statute's meaning. The word "attorney" could be read in straightforward fashion to refer to attorneys qualified as Section 327 professional persons. Although this reading would render the word "attorney" surplusage, the Court noted that surplusage does not always produce ambiguity, and the preference for avoiding surplusage constructions is not absolute. If there are two ways to read statutory text (either "attorney" was surplusage, in which case the text was plain; or "attorney" was nonsurplusage, in which case the text was ambiguous), applying the rule against surplusage is generally inappropriate. In such an instance, the plain-meaning approach is preferable, because that approach respects the words of Congress (157 L. Ed. 2d 1024, 1034-1035) .

The Supreme Court went on to find that applying the plain meaning of the then-current text of Section 330(a)(1) did not lead to any absurd result that would require treating the statute as ambiguous. The Court rejected a contention that the plain words of the statute eliminated compensation for debtors' attorneys. The Court pointed out that fees could be recovered by a debtor's attorney so long as he or she was engaged in accordance with Section 327. In particular, Section 327's limitation on a Chapter 7 debtor's incurring debts for professional services without the trustee's approval was not absurd (157 L. Ed. 2d 1024, 1032-1035) .

Because Section 330(a)(1) was unambiguous, the Supreme Court concluded that the statute should be construed in accordance with its plain, nonabsurd meaning. Accordingly, the Court held that the statute did not authorize compensation awards to bankruptcy debtors' attorneys from estate funds, unless they were employed as authorized by Section 327. In the context of a Chapter 7 case, that meant the attorney must have been employed by the trustee and approved by the bankruptcy court (157 L. Ed. 2d 1024, 1035-1036 ; see 11 U.S.C. § 327(a), (e)).

The Court closed its analysis by reviewing the legislative history behind the 1994 amendment to Section 330(a)(1), even though the lack of ambiguity in the statutory text made it unnecessary to rely on the legislative history. The Court observed that the legislative history provided no clear guidance on the congressional intent. For example, the unexplained deletion of "or the debtors [sic] attorney" from a draft of the 1994 legislation lent credibility to the argument that the deletion was a scrivener's error that should not be given any effect. On the other hand, other aspects of the legislative record suggested that the amendment was part of an effort to curtail abuses in fee awards (157 L. Ed. 2d 1024, 1036-1038) .

[b] Noscitur a Sociis

Defendant in People v. Stout (1971) 18 Cal. App. 3d 172, 95 Cal. Rptr. 593 , appealed from his conviction for possessing and exhibiting obscene matter in violation of Penal Code § 311.2(a). In the court of appeal defendant argued that he was exempt from the statute under former Penal Code § 311.2(b), which provided in part that the statute did "not apply to a motion picture operator or projectionist." Defendant argued that since he was the cashier and supervisor of the physical surroundings of the theater, he was within the exception applicable to motion picture operators. The court rejected defendant's contention, however, finding that "motion picture operator" is stated in the alternative to "projectionist" and is in close relationship to that term. The court quoted Vilardo v. County of Sacramento (1942) 54 Cal. App. 2d 413, 420, 129 P.2d 165 , to state that under the rule of noscitur a sociis the meaning of a word may be enlarged or restrained by reference to the object of the whole clause in which it is used. Applying that canon of construction and reviewing the statute's legislative history, the court held that "motion picture operator" had to be understood in terms of the associated word "projectionist," and that it did not include defendant, who had duties as cashier and janitor in addition to being projectionist (18 Cal. App. 3d 172, 177) .

[c] Last Antecedent Rule

In White v. County of Sacramento (1982) 31 Cal. 3d 676, 183 Cal. Rptr. 520, 646 P.2d 191 , plaintiff peace officer was assigned by defendants to a lower paying position based on plaintiff's alleged deficient performance. Plaintiff requested a hearing before the Sacramento County Civil Service Commission, but the request was denied. Plaintiff filed a petition for a writ of mandate to compel the commission to grant plaintiff a hearing. Relying on the Bill of Rights Act (Gov. Code § 3300 et seq.), plaintiff contended that the Department could not reassign him to a lower paying position without affording him an administrative appeal. Gov. Code § 3304(b) provided thatno "punitive action" could be undertaken by any public agency without providing the public safety officer with an opportunity for administrative appeal. Gov. Code § 3303 defined "punitive action" as "any action which may lead to dismissal, demotion, suspension, reduction in salary, written reprimand, or transfer for purposes of punishment." The trial court denied plaintiff's petition and plaintiff appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed. Defendants argued that the "for purposes of punishment" clause in Gov. Code § 3303 qualified each of the terms preceding it, so that a demotion or reduction in salary would need to be "for purposes of punishment" (not for deficient performance) in order to be deemed an appealable "punitive action." The Court noted that, under the last antecedent rule of statutory construction, qualifying words, phrases and clauses are to be applied to the words or phrases immediately preceding and are not to be construed as extending to or including others more remote. Under this rule, the Court found that "for purposes of punishment" was intended to modify only the term "transfer." In support of its conclusion, the Court indicated that "for purposes of punishment" was not set off from the preceding terms by a comma; instead, the entire phrase "transfer for purposes of punishment" was set off from the preceding terms by a comma followed by the word "or." The Court found that this use of the word "or" indicated an intention to use it disjunctively so as to designate alternative or separate categories (31 Cal. 3d 676, 680) .

[d] Words Grouped in List

In Droeger v. Friedman, Sloan & Ross (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 26, 283 Cal. Rptr. 584, 812 P.2d 931 , a wife brought a marital dissolution action against her husband, retaining a law firm to represent her. While the dissolution action was pending, the wife executed a promissory note and deed of trust on community real property to secure the firm's fees.

The husband, who had not joined in the execution of the note or deed of trust, brought an action against the law firm to quiet title in the community real property. The law firm demurred to the husband's complaint, claiming that the deed of trust was enforceable against the wife's one-half interest in the property. The court sustained the demurrer without leave to amend and entered a judgment of dismissal. The court of appeal reversed, holding that under former Civ. Code § 5127 (now Fam. Code § 1102), both spouses must consent to the transfer of community real property. Thus, the husband was entitled to void the encumbrance in its entirety (54 Cal. 3d 26, 30-31) . The Supreme Court granted review.

The Supreme Court affirmed the court of appeal, construing former Civ. Code § 5127, which states in part that both spouses "must join in executing any instrument by which ... community real property or any interest therein is leased for a period longer than one year, or is sold, conveyed, or encumbered." Citing the rule that words grouped in a list should be given related meaning, the Court held that the term "encumbered" could not be interpreted to have a different effect from the terms "leased," "sold," or "conveyed" (54 Cal. 3d 26, 38) .

[e] General Words Used in Conjunction With Specific Words

Estate of Griswold (2001) 25 Cal. 4th 904, 108 Cal. Rptr. 2d 165, 24 P.3d 1191 , involved the interpretation of Probate Code § 6452, which bars a "natural parent" or a relative of that parent from inheriting through a child born out of wedlock on the basis of the parent-child relationship unless the parent or relative "acknowledged the child" and "contributed to the support or the care of the child." The Supreme Court concluded that "acknowledged the child" refers to conduct other than contributing to the support or care of the child, since the statute specifically requires such contribution plus acknowledgement before a natural parent may inherit from a child who was born out of wedlock. The Court explained that a different interpretation of the statute would make the "acknowledged the child" language surplusage and unnecessary (25 Cal. 4th 904, 911) .

[f] Adverb Modifying Transitive Verb Usually Also Applies to Verb's Object

In Flores-Figueroa v. United States (2009) ___ U.S. ___, 129 S. Ct. 1886, 173 L. Ed. 2d 853 , the United States Supreme Court construed a federal statute that imposed criminal penalties on any person who "knowingly transfers, possesses, or uses, without lawful authority, a means of identification of another person" (see 18 U.S.C. § 1028A(a)(1)). The Court rejected the government's argument that a violation of the statute was established by the defendant's knowing possession of identification, even if the defendant thought the identification was fake and did not know that it actually belonged to another person. The Court explained that when a sentence in a statute contains a transitive verb that has an object, an adverb that modifies the verb is commonly understood to apply to the entire action conveyed by the complete predicate, including the object of the verb. Thus, under the statute in question, punishment could be imposed only if the government proved not only that the defendant knew that he or she was transferring, possessing, or using something, but also that the defendant knew the something was another person's means of identification (173 L. Ed. 2d 853, 857-859, 862) .

[a] Statutory Language to Be Construed in Context

Jutzi v. County of Los Angeles (1987) 196 Cal. App. 3d 637, 242 Cal. Rptr. 74 , was an action against a county hospital for malpractice in rendering emergency medical services, in which the court of appeal, in affirming judgment for defendant, construed Health & Safety Code § 1799.110(c). The court stated that the various parts of a statutory enactment must be harmonized by considering the particular clause or section in the context of the statutory framework as a whole (196 Cal. App. 3d 637, 650) .

The court of appeal in M Restaurants, Inc. v. San Francisco Local Joint Exec. Bd. Culinary etc. Union (1981) 124 Cal. App. 3d 666, 177 Cal. Rptr. 690 , upheld the trial court's refusal to dissolve a preliminary injunction enjoining defendant unions from, among other things, blocking entrances and threatening customers and suppliers of plaintiff employer. Stating the rule that when used in a statute, words must be construed in context, keeping in mind the nature and obvious purpose of the statute in which they appear, the court held that Code Civ. Proc. § 527.3, restricting the equity jurisdiction of the courts over labor disputes did not prevent the court from issuing the injunction (124 Cal. App. 3d 666, 679) . The court held that the language of the statute, which bars courts from enjoining anyone from publicizing a labor dispute by any method "not involving fraud, violence or breach of the peace," and which further provides that the section does not intend to permit "breach of the peace, disorderlyconduct, the unlawful blocking of access or egress to premises where a labor dispute exists, or other similar unlawful activity," allows the courts to enjoin such conduct (124 Cal. App. 3d 666, 680-681) .

In Clinton v. County of Santa Cruz (1981) 119 Cal. App. 3d 927, 174 Cal. Rptr. 296 , the court of appeal reversed the trial court's determination that zoning classification as a timber preserve zone depended on the active use of the land or the subjective intent of the owner to use the land for the growing and harvesting of timber. The court looked to the purpose of the Forest Taxation Reform Act (Gov. Code § 51100 et seq.) to encourage timber production and harvesting and to protect forest resources, and the rule, among others, that statutory language must be read in context, keeping in mind the nature and purpose of the enactment, in rejecting the landowner's contention that his land did not contain any "timber," defined as trees "maintained for eventual harvest." "Maintained" could be read in either an active or a passive sense. In light of the context, it should be read in a passive sense that does not require any affirmative action or intent on the part of the landowner as a prerequisite for trees constituting "timber" subject to the act (119 Cal. App. 3d 927, 933-935) .

[b] Noscitur a Sociis

Coffee-Rich, Inc. v. Fielder (1972) 27 Cal. App. 3d 792, 104 Cal. Rptr. 252 , appeal dismissed, 411 U.S. 979, 93 S. Ct. 2268, 36 L. Ed. 2d 955 , involved appeals by both parties in a case that, in part, dealt with the constitutionality of several statutes regulating products resembling milk products. The court of appeal applied the rule of noscitur a sociis to hold that use of the word "imports" in Food & Agric. Code § 35191, imposing record-keeping requirements on every person that manufactures or "imports" any such products, was not intended to apply to an individual making a retail purchase in another state (27 Cal. App. 3d 792, 812-813) .

[c] Last Antecedent Rule

In City of Victorville v. County of San Bernardino (1991) 233 Cal. App. 3d 1312, 285 Cal. Rptr. 206 , the court interpreted the following phrase from a criminal statute: "[a]ll fines ... collected upon conviction ... in any municipal court or justice court ..." [quoting from former Penal Code § 1203.1 (superseded by Penal Code § 1463, which now has other wording)]. The county argued that the provision applied only to fines "collected" in municipal or justice courts. Applying the last antecedent rule, the court held that it was the "conviction," not the "collection," that must occur in the municipal court or justice court (233 Cal. App. 3d 1312, 1322) .

In Mayo v. Department of Motor Vehicles (1987) 193 Cal. App. 3d 406, 238 Cal. Rptr. 465 , the sole issue on appeal was the interpretation of a part of Veh. Code § 13352.3(a), before its 1992 amendment, providing that "the department shall immediately revoke the privilege to operate a motor vehicle of any person upon [a] showing that the person was convicted of a violation of § 23152 or 23153 while under 18 years of age." Defendant, who committed a drunk driving offense while he was under 18 years of age but was convicted after his 18th birthday, contended that the statute only applies to persons who suffered a drunk driving conviction before 18 years of age. The court of appeal disagreed, finding that under the last antecedent rule of statutory construction, the phrase "while under 18 years of age" pertains to and qualifies the word "violation," which immediately precedes the phrase, rather than the more remote word "convicted." Accordingly, the statute refers to a person who commits a violation while under 18 years of age (193 Cal. App. 3d 406, 409) .

§ 217.44 Supporting Contention That General Words Following Enumeration of Particular Classes of Persons or Things Should Be Construed as Applicable Only to Persons or Things of Same General Nature

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief. It should be combined with the general points and authorities set out in § 217.20.]

IN CONSTRUING _____ [specify statute], THE COURT SHOULD APPLY THE DOCTRINE OF EJUSDEM GENERIS, THAT WHEN GENERAL WORDS FOLLOW THE ENUMERATION OF PARTICULAR CLASSES OF PERSONS OR THINGS, THE GENERAL WORDS WILL BE CONSTRUED AS APPLICABLE ONLY TO PERSONS OR THINGS OF THE SAME GENERAL NATURE OR CLASS AS THOSE ENUMERATED.

A. Particular Qualifies General. Particular expressions qualify those which are general (Civ. Code § 3534).

B. Ejusdem Generis. The doctrine of ejusdem generis states that when general words follow the enumeration of particular classes of persons or things, the general words will be construed as applicable only to persons or things of the same general nature or class as those enumerated. The rule is based on the obvious reason that if the Legislature had intended the general words to be used in their unrestricted sense, it would not have mentioned the particular things or classes of things that would in that event be mere surplusage (Sears, Roebuck & Co. v. San Diego County Dist. Council of Carpenters (1979) 25 Cal. 3d 317, 331 n.10, 158 Cal. Rptr. 370, 599 P.2d 676 , cert. denied, 447 U.S. 935, 100 S. Ct. 3038, 65 L. Ed. 2d 1130).

[a] Use of Form

The foregoing points and authorities may be submitted in support of a party's contention that a statute should be construed in a particular manner. The form sets out the rule of statutory interpretation that general words following a specific enumeration of persons or things should be construed as applying only to similar persons or things. Such an argument might be made in any type of action or proceeding in which a question arises concerning how a statute should be construed. These points and authorities should be combined with the general points and authorities set forth in § 217.20, which relate to the construction of statutes to ascertain and effectuate the legislative intent.

The foregoing points and authorities may be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities relating to the procedural context in which the issue of statutory interpretation arises. The points and authorities set forth in this form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should also insert argument in the foregoing form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should demonstrate that, even though the person or thing that he or she does not want to have included within the scope of the statute falls within the general words of the statute, the person or thing is dissimilar to the specific persons or things enumerated before the general words, and therefore should not be included within the scope of the statute.

Counsel should note that the rule of ejusdem generis is merely an extrinsic aid to interpretation for use only when the clear meaning of the words used in the statute is doubtful, and that the rule cannot be used to create doubts or offset the plain meaning of the statute [People v. Fields (1980) 105 Cal. App. 3d 341, 344, 164 Cal. Rptr. 336 (not applied because it would restrict phrase to less than its fair import and commonly understood meaning)].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Ejusdem Generis

Sears, Roebuck & Co. v. San Diego County Dist. Council of Carpenters (1979) 25 Cal. 3d 317, 158 Cal. Rptr. 370, 599 P.2d 676 , cert. denied, 447 U.S. 935, 100 S. Ct. 3038, 65 L. Ed. 2d 1130 , involved defendant's appeal from an order granting a preliminary injunction against defendant's peaceful picketing on plaintiff's property. In reversing, the Supreme Court rejected plaintiff's contention that the injunction was authorized by Code Civ. Proc. § 527.3, which provides, in part, that "[i]t is not the intent of [Section 527.3] to permit conduct that is unlawful including breach of the peace, disorderly conduct, the unlawful blocking of access or egress to premises where a labor dispute exists, or other similar unlawful activity." The Court quoted Scally v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co. (1972) 23 Cal. App. 3d 806, 819, 100 Cal. Rptr. 501 , for the proposition stated in Paragraph B of the foregoing form, and also cited Civ. Code § 3534 and In re Johnson (1914) 167 Cal. 142, 138 P. 740 (25 Cal. 3d 317, 331 n.10). Applying the canon of construction of ejusdem generis, the Court held that the statute's reference to "conduct that is unlawful" must be limited to conduct that constitutes breach of the peace, disorderly conduct, the blocking of access or egress, or other "similar unlawful activity," and does not apply to peaceful picketing on private sidewalks because it does not involve violence or substantially impair the rights of others (25 Cal. 3d 317, 330-331) .

[a] Ejusdem Generis

Playboy Enterprises, Inc. v. Superior Court (1984) 154 Cal. App. 3d 14, 201 Cal. Rptr. 207 , involved an attempt by defendant to compel a nonparty magazine publisher to produce in discovery all records and editorial materials concerning a magazine interview of plaintiffs in the case. The magazine asserted that it was immune from contempt for failure to produce the materials under Evid. Code § 1070 and Cal. Const., art. I, § 2, which provide immunity to newspersons from being held in contempt for failure to disclose sources and unpublished information. In construing the constitutional provision, one of the rules of statutory construction the court used was that when general words follow a specific enumeration of particular classes of persons or things, the general words will be presumed to apply to persons or things of the same general nature or class as those enumerated (154 Cal. App. 3d 14, 21) . In applying the rule, the court held that the statutory language defining protected material that lists "other data of whatever sort" was intended to refer to physical source items of the same general nature as the particular source items enumerated previously in the section (154 Cal. App. 3d 14, 21-22) .

Expressio Unius Est Exclusio Alterius. The enumeration of particulars in a statute suggests the application of the doctrine of expressio unius est exclusio alterius, under which the expression of one thing in a statute implies the intentional exclusion of the omitted thing (*Garson v. [a] Use of Form

The foregoing memorandum may be submitted in support of a party's contention that a statute should be construed in a particular manner. The form sets out the rule of statutory interpretation that the expression of one thing in a statute implies the intentional exclusion of things omitted from the statute. Such an argument might be made in any type of action or proceeding in which a question arises concerning how a statute should be construed. This memorandum should be combined with the general memorandum set forth in § 217.20, which relates to the construction of statutes to ascertain and effectuate the legislative intent.

The foregoing form may be combined with a memorandum relating to the procedural context in which the issue of statutory interpretation arises. The points and authorities set forth in this form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should also insert argument in the foregoing form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should show that the statute enumerates particulars that are covered by the statute or that are excepted from it, and further show how the facts of the case relate to the enumeration of particulars in the statute.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Expressio Unius Est Exclusio Alterius

In Garson v. Juarique (1979) 99 Cal. App. 3d 769, 160 Cal. Rptr. 461 , plaintiff appealed from a judgment for defendant in an action for personal injuries sustained when defendant's dog caused plaintiff to fall down. The dog had been sitting on defendant's unenclosed front lawn in accordance with defendant's command when plaintiff walked by with her dog. Defendant's dog bolted across the lawn and ran into either plaintiff or her dog. The trial court had found that defendant had violated a Glendale city ordinance prohibiting animal owners from allowing their animals to run at large, giving rise to a rebuttable presumption of negligence on defendant's part, but that the presumption was rebutted by proof that defendant had acted as would a person of ordinary prudence who desired to comply with the law. The ordinance provided in part that "[d]ogs shall not be considered to be at large if they are in the custody and control of a competent person and restrained by a chain or leash not over six feet in length attached to a collar or harness, or confined within an automobile."

The court of appeal reversed, finding that the trial court's determination that the presumption of negligence had been rebutted was based on an erroneous interpretation of the ordinance. The trial court had found that defendant had been in compliance with the statute while his dog had been sitting in his unenclosed front yard on defendant's command, and that the violation had not occurred until the dog leapt up and ran at plaintiff and her dog, and the trial court's finding that the presumption of negligence was rebutted was based on this interpretation. The court of appeal, however, noted that the ordinance enumerated several particular ways to restrain a dog, and did not refer to the possibility that other ways, such as the psychological restraint of commanding a trained dog to sit, might also satisfy the ordinance. The court held that the enumeration of particulars suggested that the doctrine of expressio unius est exclusio alterius applied. The court cited Wildlife Alive v. Chickering (1976) 18 Cal. 3d 190, 196, 132 Cal. Rptr. 377, 553 P.2d 537 , and County of Madera v. Superior Court (1974) 39 Cal. App. 3d 665,670, 114 Cal. Rptr. 283 , for the definition of the doctrine, that the expression of one thing in a statute implies the intentional exclusion of the omitted thing (99 Cal. App. 3d 769, 774) . Since the trial court had misapprehended the manner in which defendant had violated the ordinance, the court of appeal held that it had also erred in determining that the presumption of negligence arising from the violation had been rebutted (99 Cal. App. 3d 769, 774-775) .

In In re Lance W. (1985) 37 Cal. 3d 873, 210 Cal. Rptr. 631, 694 P.2d 744 , a juvenile defendant was arrested and searched, and police officers found evidence of illegal drugs. Defendant moved to suppress the evidence, alleging that the warrantless search was conducted without probable cause. Although the trial court concluded that the arrest and search were illegal and that the evidence should be suppressed because of lack of probable cause, it held that Cal. Const. art. I, § 28(d), eliminated any independent state ground for suppression of the evidence [see Cal. Const. art. I, § 28(d) ("Except as provided by statute hereafter enacted by a two-thirds vote of the membership in each house of the Legislature, relevant evidence shall not be excluded in any criminal proceeding")]. The trial court thus denied defendant's motion to suppress, sustained the allegations of the juvenile petition, and ruled that the maximum confinement for the violation would be three years.

The Supreme Court affirmed, holding in part that Section 28(d) requires that relevant evidence must not be excluded in any criminal proceeding with limited, enumerated exceptions to that command. The Court concluded that the exception claimed by the juvenile, the vicarious exclusionary rule, did not fall within the enumeration. Thus, under the familiar rule of construction expressio unius est exclusio alterius, when exceptions to a general rule are specified by statute, other exceptions are not to be implied or presumed (37 Cal. 3d 873, 888) .

Plaintiffs in Wildlife Alive v. Chickering (1976) 18 Cal. 3d 190, 132 Cal. Rptr. 377, 553 P.2d 537 , petitioned for a writ of mandate to require the Fish and Game Commission to suspend the hunting season for black bear for failure to have prepared an environmental impact report under the California Environmental Quality Act of 1970 (Pub. Res. Code § 21000 et seq.). Defendants prevailed in superior court, and plaintiffs appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed. The Court found that the act was expressly made applicable to all state agencies, and that while a number of specific exemptions were provided for, none was expressly applicable to defendant commission. Citing State Board of Education v. Levit (1959) 52 Cal. 2d 441, 461, 343 P.2d 8 , and Estate of Pardue (1937) 22 Cal. App. 2d 178, 181, 70 P.2d 678 , the Court held that under the familiar rule of construction, expressio unius est exclusio alterius, when exceptions to a general rule are specified by statute, other exceptions are not to be implied or presumed. Although the Court noted that this rule is inapplicable when its operation would contradict a discernible and contrary legislative intent, the Court found that the application of the rule was consistent with the act in the case before it (18 Cal. 3d 190, 195) . One factor considered by the Court was the presence in the act of an alternative procedure to environmental impact reports for qualified state agencies having important environmental protection responsibilities. Based on the presence of this provision, the Court stated that under the doctrine of expressio unius est exclusio alterius the creation of a limited express exemption suggests that a broader implied exemption could not have been intended. Thus, the express exemption that was provided for certain agencies that followed abbreviated procedures could be said to imply a rejection of other exemptions not expressly granted in the act (18 Cal. 3d 190, 196) .

Bearden v. U.S. Borax, Inc. (2006) 138 Cal. App. 4th 429, 41 Cal. Rptr. 3d 482 , concerned the validity of an administrative "wage order" issued by the Industrial Welfare Commission (IWC) that provided an exception from the general statutory requirement that two meal breaks be allowed for employees who work 12-hour shifts. (The California Legislature de-funded the IWC effective July 1, 2004. However, the IWC wage orders remain in effect, and the Division of Labor Standards Enforcement will continue to enforce the provisions of the wage orders (see Lab. Code § 61).

Generally, the IWC had the power under Labor Code § 516 to adopt or amend working condition orders with respect to break periods and meal periods, except as provided by Labor Code § 512. Section 512 generally requires employers to provide meal periods, but it specifies certain exemptions from the meal-period requirements. For example, the statute provides exemptions for waivers of certain meal periods by employees, and for the wholesale baking industry, the motion picture industry, and the broadcasting industry (see Lab. Code § 512(a), (c), (d)).

This case involved an IWC order that created an additional exemption from the statutory meal-period requirements for certain collective bargaining agreements (see Wage Order No. 16-2001, 8 Cal. Code Reg. § 11160, P 10(E)). The court of appeal held that the IWC lacked authority to enact the order creating the additional exemption. Because the introductory clause of Labor Code § 516 reads "[e]xcept as provided in Section 512 ...," the court held that the IWC's authority to adopt or amend orders under Section 516 could only be exercised in manner consistent with Labor Code § 512. Applying the maxim expressio unius est exclusio alterius, the court concluded that because Section 512 specifies certain exceptions to the general meal-break requirements, the IWC's creation of an addition exception was inconsistent with Section 512 and was therefore barred by Section 516 (138 Cal. App. 4th 429, 434-440) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Expressio Unius Est Exclusio Alterius

One of the causes of action alleged in a cross complaint in Cianci v. SuperiorCourt (1985) 40 Cal. 3d 903, 221 Cal. Rptr. 575, 710 P.2d 375 , was for conspiracy to violate the Cartwright Act (Bus. & Prof. Code § 16700 et seq.) in relation to a medical department in a hospital. The trial court sustained a demurrer to that cause of action on the ground the Cartwright Act does not apply to the medical profession. In reversing and holding that the Cartwright Act does apply to the medical profession, the Supreme Court looked to the comprehensive breadth of the act (40 Cal. 3d 903, 916-918) . The Court noted that even if the act's plain language did not compel the conclusion that it covered professions, the act had to be construed to cover them given the comprehensive scope of the statutory language; it would do violence to that language to limit the act's applicability on the ground that because they are not expressly included they are necessarily excluded. Indeed, the Court noted that under the rule of expressio unius est exclusio alterius, the act should be construed to apply to professions because labor unions were expressly excluded from the statute, so that other groups not excluded should be deemed included (40 Cal. 3d 903, 918) .

In Conservatorship of Romo (1987) 190 Cal. App. 3d 279, 235 Cal. Rptr. 377 , the court of appeal held that Prob. Code § 2580 does not permit a conservatee's will to be made and executed by his or her conservator, by his or her attorney, or by the probate court. The court reversed an order approving and confirming a conservatee's will written by the conservators of her person. The court examined the list of matters about which a conservator may exercise a "substituted judgment" for the conservatee, as set forth in Prob. Code § 2580 et seq. It was significant that the making of conservatee's will by a conservator was not listed. If that were the legislative purpose, it must reasonably be assumed that the Legislature would have said so. When a statute enumerates things on which it is to operate it is to be construed as excluding from its effect all those not expressly mentioned (190 Cal. App. 3d 279, 284-285) . Note that Prob. Code § 2580 was later amended by the Legislature [see Stats. 1995, ch. 730, § 4], and now expressly authorizes a conservator or other interested person to petition the court for an order authorizing or requiring the conservator to make a will for the conservatee [see Prob. Code § 2580(a), (b)(13)].

In De Weese v. Unick (1980) 102 Cal. App. 3d 100, 162 Cal. Rptr. 259 , approximately four years after a judgment declaring defendant to be the natural father of plaintiff's child was entered pursuant to defendant's stipulation, defendant made a motion for an order to compel plaintiff and her child to submit to a newly developed blood test. The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's order denying the motion, on the ground that res judicata precluded relitigation of the issue due to the final judgment of paternity despite defendant's argument that the judgment was not final because it included an order for child support, which was subject to modification or revocation under former Civ. Code § 4700(a) (now Fam. Code § 3650 et seq.). The court applied the maxim expressio unius est exclusio alterius in holding that the determination of paternity was final and not subject to modification or revocation, since former § 4700(a) referred to "[a]ny order for child support" and nowhere mentioned the modifiability or revocability of a judgment determining paternity (102 Cal. App. 3d 100, 104-106) .

§ 217.46 Supporting Contention That Statute Be Construed to Produce Internal Harmony and Avoid Surplusage [Code Civ. Proc. § 1858]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum supporting or opposing a motion, or in a trial or appellate brief. It should be combined with the general memorandum set out in § 217.20.]

_____ [Specify statute] SHOULD BE CONSTRUED TO PRODUCE INTERNAL HARMONY AND ACCORD MEANING TO EVERY WORD AND PHRASE.

A. All Provisions to Be Given Effect. In the construction of a statute, the office of the judge when there are several provisions or particulars is to adopt such a construction, if possible, as will give effect to all (Code Civ. Proc. § 1858; Parris v. Zolin (1996) 12 Cal. 4th 839, 845, 50 Cal. Rptr. 2d 109, 911 P.2d 9).

B. Preference for Interpretation Producing Internal Harmony and Avoiding Surplusage. Wherever reasonable, interpretations that produce internal harmony, avoid redundancy, and accord significance to each word and phrase are preferred (Pacific Legal Foundation v. Unemployment Ins. Appeals Bd. (1981) 29 Cal. 3d 101, 114, 172 Cal. Rptr. 194, 624 P.2d 244). An interpretation that renders particular terms of a statute surplusage ordinarily should be rejected; instead, every word should be given some significance (Ste. Marie v. Riverside County Reg'l Park & Open-Space Dist. (2009) 46 Cal. 4th 282, 289-290, 93 Cal. Rptr. 3d 369, 206 P.3d 739 ; *City of San Jose v. Superior Court (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 47, 55, 19 Cal. [a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of a party's contention that a statute should be construed in a particular manner. The form sets out the rule of statutory interpretation that a statute should be interpreted to produce internal harmony and to avoid making words and phrases used in the statute surplusage. Such an argument might be made in any type of action or proceeding in which a questionarises concerning how a statute should be construed. This form should be combined with the general memorandum presented in § 217.20, which relates to the construction of statutes to ascertain and effectuate the legislative intent. This form may also be combined with a memorandum relating to the procedural context in which the issue of statutory interpretation arises.

Counsel should also insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should demonstrate how the interpretation of the statute that he or she favors produces internal harmony and accords meaning to every word and phrase without redundancy. Counsel should demonstrate how, in contrast, the opposition's interpretation produces internal discord and makes some of the words or phrases redundant or surplusage.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] All Provisions to Be Given Effect

Parris v. Zolin (1996) 12 Cal. 4th 839, 50 Cal. Rptr. 2d 109, 911 P.2d 9 , is discussed in § 217.20[3][b].

[b] Preference for Interpretation Producing Internal Harmony and Avoiding Surplusage

Pacific Legal Foundation v. Unemployment Ins. Appeals Bd. (1981) 29 Cal. 3d 101, 172 Cal. Rptr. 194, 624 P.2d 244 , involved an action for declaratory relief to overturn a precedent decision of defendant board. Plaintiff was a third party that had not been a party to the administrative proceedings, but challenged the validity of the decision as precedent pursuant to Unemp. Ins. Code §§ 409-409.2, which authorize such actions. Defendant board had awarded benefits to a claimant, but the superior court sustained plaintiff's contention that benefits should have been denied pursuant to Unemp. Ins. Code § 1253(c), which requires claimants to be "available for work," because the claimant had failed to take initiative in seeking work beyond complying with the instructions given to him by the Employment Development Department pursuant to Unemp. Ins. Code § 1253(e). Defendant board appealed to challenge this interpretation.

The Supreme Court reversed, holding that the superior court had erred in holding that even if a claimant did comply with seek-work instructions under Unemp. Ins. Code § 1253(e), he or she may be ineligible under Unemp. Ins. Code § 1253(c) for failure to make a diligent search on his or her own initiative for all suitable work. The established meaning of "availability for work" under Unemp. Ins. Code § 1253(c) relates to restrictions the claimant imposes on the type of work he or she will accept, rather than to the search for work. This interpretation was supported by settled principles of statutory construction, including the rule that whenever reasonable, interpretations that produce internal harmony, avoid redundancy, and accord significance to each word and phrase are preferred. Noting that Unemp. Ins. Code § 1253(e) set forth specific work-search responsibilities and was the only part of the statute to expressly refer to the claimant's seek-work responsibilities, the Court held that to infer a broader seek-work obligation from the "availability" language of subdivision (c) than that stated in subdivision (e) would strain the former and render the latter pointless. Additionally, the specification of availability and seek-work requirements in separate subdivisions implied that the Legislature considered them to be discrete tests (29 Cal. 3d 101, 114) .

Ste. Marie v. Riverside County Reg'l Park & Open-Space Dist. (2009) 46 Cal. 4th 282, 93 Cal. Rptr. 3d 369, 206 P.3d 739 , involved the interpretation of Public Resources Code Sections 5540 and 5565. Section 5540 provides, in part, that a regional-park or open-space district "may not validly convey any interest in any real property actually dedicated and used" for park or open-space purposes, without either (1) the consent of a majority of the voters of the district at a special election, or (2) authorization by the Legislature issued after a resolution of intention has been adopted by at least a two-thirds vote of the board of directors of the district (emphasis added to quotation). Section 5565 provides, in part, that legal title to all property acquired by a district "shall immediately and by operation of law vest in the district, and shall be held by the district in trust for, and is dedicated and set apart for, the uses and purposes set forth in this article" (emphasis added). The question for the California Supreme Court in this case was whether real property acquired and "dedicated" under Section 5565 was also "actually dedicated" so as to trigger the consent or approval requirements of Section 5540 when the district decides to convey an interest in the property.

The Supreme Court noted that the same word--"dedicated"--is used in both statutes, and one rule of statutory construction specifies that a word given a particular meaning in one part of a law should be given the same meaning in other parts of the same law. However, the Court concluded that this axiom of construction did not control in this situation, because, although the same word is used in both statutes, the Legislature did not use it in the same way. Section 5565 states that land is "dedicated," while Section 5540 imposes conveyance restrictions on land that is "actually dedicated." Treating these two usages of "dedicated" as meaning the same thing would render the qualifying word "actually" surplusage, thus violating the rule of statutory construction that courts should, if possible, accord meaning to every word and phrase in a statute so as to better effectuate the Legislature's intent (46 Cal. 4th 282, 289) .

The Court found it significant that Section 5540 also provides that "[a]n easement or other interest in real property may be dedicated for park or open-space purposes, or both, by the adoption of a resolution by the board of directors, and any interest so dedicated may be conveyed only as provided in this section." The Court reasoned that if under Section 5565 real property is deemed dedicated for park or open-space purposes at the moment of acquisition, Section 5540's provision for dedication by adopting a resolution would be unnecessary and superfluous. The Court concluded that this anomaly strongly suggested that the Legislature could not have intended that real property should be deemed actually dedicated at the moment a district acquires it (46 Cal. 4th 282, 289-290) .

The Court found support for its conclusion in the established practices of regional-park and open-space districts, which for decades have interpreted Section 5540 as giving them (1) the option of acquiring land without formally dedicating it for park or open-space purposes, (2) the ability to hold land in a "land bank" until it is deemed appropriate for formal dedication, and (3) the authorization to later dedicate such property in perpetuity for park purposes (46 Cal. 4th 282, 294) .

City of San Jose v. Superior Court (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 47, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 73, 850 P.2d 621 , involved the question whether a juvenile charged with resisting arrest and assault on a police officer could discover certain portions of police personnel records pertaining to the arresting officers. The trial court ordered disclosure of prior complaints alleging incidents of excessive force and racial prejudice by two of the arresting officers, as well as the results of the investigations of those complaints. The city sought, by petition for writ of mandate, to compel the trial court to vacate its order to the extent it required disclosure of the results of the police department's investigations. The court of appeal denied the petition. The city then petitioned the Supreme Court for the same relief.

The Supreme Court also denied the city's petition. The case was governed by Evid. Code §§ 1043-1045, which provide the procedure for the discovery of peace officers' personnel records. A portion of Evid. Code § 1045(a) provides that "[n]othing in this article shall be construed to affect the right of access to records of complaints, or investigations of complaints, or discipline imposed as a result of such investigations ... ." The Court found that that language clearly supported the order for disclosure of discipline imposed on the arresting officers. The city contended that another portion of Evid. Code § 1045 compelled a different result. The city's interpretation, however, would have rendered the above-quoted language surplusage. The Court rejected the city's interpretation, stating "[w]e ordinarily reject interpretations that render particular terms of a statute mere surplusage, instead giving every word some significance" (City of San Jose v. Superior Court (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 47, 55, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 73, 850 P.2d 621).

In Pugliese v. Superior Court (2007) 146 Cal. App. 4th 1444, 53 Cal. Rptr. 3d 681 , the issue was whether the three-year statute of limitations for the tort of domestic violence barred a plaintiff from recovering damages for acts of domestic violence occurring during her marriage to the defendant, but more than three years before the filing of the complaint. Specifically, Code of Civil Procedure § 340.15(a) provides as follows: "In any civil action for recovery of damages suffered as a result of domestic violence, the time for commencement of the action shall be the later of the following: [P] (1) Within three years from the date of thelast act of domestic violence by the defendant against the plaintiff. ..." Construing this language, the court of appeal emphasized that in ascertaining the legislative intent, courts will adopt a statutory interpretation that avoids making any language mere surplusage. Thus, the court in this case held that the words "last act" in Section 340.15(a) would be rendered superfluous unless the statute is interpreted as adopting the continuing tort theory, allowing a domestic violence victim to recover damages for all acts of domestic violence occurring during the marriage, provided the victim proves a continuing course of abusive conduct and files suit within three years of the "last act" of domestic violence (146 Cal. App. 4th 1444, 1451) .

[a] Preference for Interpretation Producing Internal Harmony and Avoiding Surplusage

Gay Law Students Assn. v. Pacific Tel. & Tel. Co. (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 458, 156 Cal. Rptr. 14, 595 P.2d 592 , involved, in part, a class action for declaratory and injunctive relief against defendant telephone company's alleged employment discrimination against homosexuals. The trial court sustained a demurrer to the complaint, and entered judgment favoring defendant. In reversing, the Supreme Court applied the rule of interpretation that in attempting to ascertain legislative intent, effect should be given, whenever possible, to the statute as a whole and to every word and clause thereof, leaving no part of the provision useless or deprived of meaning. The Court held that Pub. Util. Code § 453(a), which prevents public utilities from subjecting any person to any prejudice or disadvantage as to rates, charges, service, facilities, or in any other respect, could not be narrowly interpreted to relate only to service-related discrimination, butthat it extended to discrimination in any respect, including employment (Gay Law Students Assn. v. Pacific Tel. & Tel. Co. (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 458, 478, 156 Cal. Rptr. 14, 595 P.2d 592).

Campbell v. Zolin (1995) 33 Cal. App. 4th 489, 39 Cal. Rptr. 2d 348 , involved a mandate proceeding to review a decision by the Department of Motor Vehicles (DMV) to suspend the petitoner's license for failing to comply with financial responsibility laws under the Vehicle Code. Petitioner had been involved in an accident on private property (a parking lot in an apartment complex) that resulted in damage to both the vehicle driven by petitioner and another vehicle, but no injuries. The primary issue on appeal was whether this accident was "a reportable off-highway accident" that was required to be reported to the DMV under Veh. Code § 16000(a).

The court of appeal noted that Veh. Code § 16000.1(a) defines a reportable off-highway accident as one that (1) occurs off the street or highway, (2) involves a vehicle subject to registration under the Vehicle Code, and (3) results in damage to the property of any one person in excess of the statutory amount (at the time, $500) or in injury or death. However, Veh. Code § 16000.1(b) excludes from the definition any accident that "occurs off-highway in which damage occurs only to the property of the driver or owner of the motor vehicle and no bodily injury or death of a person occurs." The petitioner argued that § 16000.1(b) excluded all off-highway accidents that involve only property damage and that therefore the accident in this case was not reportable. The DMV argued that the accident was reportable because the § 16000.1(b) exclusion applies only when the accident involves no injury or death and all of the property damage is sustained by the driver whose compliance with financial responsibility laws is in question (Campbell v. Zolin (1995) 33 Cal. App. 4th 489, 494-495, 39 Cal. Rptr. 2d 348). The court of appeal noted that in construing a statute to ascertain legislative intent, the court must first look to the words of the statute themselves, giving to the language its usual, ordinary import and according significance, if possible, to every, word, phrase, and sentence in pursuance of the legislative purpose. The court observed that a construction that makes some words surplusage is to be avoided. The court further stated that the words of the statute must be construed in context, keeping in mind the statutory purpose, and that statutes relating to the same subject must be harmonized, both internally and with each other, to the extent possible. Applying these rules of construction, the court held that petitioner's construction of Veh. Code § 16000.1(b) was unsupportable because it would render as mere surplusage the portion of Veh. Code § 16000.1(a) defining a reportable off-highway accident as one that results in property damage exceeding $500. Had the Legislature intended to exclude from the reporting requirements all off-highway accidents involving only property damage, it would not have included property damage as a component of the general definition of a reportable off-highway accident (33 Cal. App. 4th 489, 495) . The court further held that petitioner's interpretation clashed with the Legislature's clear purpose of broadening financial responsibility laws to include off-highway accidents resulting in damage to vehicles, buildings, and other property (Campbell v. Zolin (1995) 33 Cal. App. 4th 489, 495-496, 39 Cal. Rptr. 2d 348).

In Clavell v. North Coast Business Park (1991) 232 Cal. App. 3d 328, 283 Cal. Rptr. 419 , the court construed Lab. Code § 98.2, which provides a 10-day limit on notice of appeals from administrative rulings and, by a 1988 amendment, incorporates the mail-extension provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 1013. A literal reading of the statutes seemed to make the incorporation meaningless because § 1013 excepted "appeals" from its coverage. The court held that "appeals" refer only to appeals from judicial decisions, reasoning that a literal reading would make the 1988 amendment a meaningless act of the Legislature (Clavell v. North Coast Business Park (1991) 232 Cal. App. 3d 328, 331-332, 283 Cal. Rptr. 419).

In Los Angeles County Safety Police Assn. v. County of Los Angeles (1987) 192 Cal. App. 3d 1378, 237 Cal. Rptr. 920 , the court of appeal held that former Penal Code § 830.4, relating to peace officers, was intended by the Legislature to apply to a charter county. In reaching this holding, the court said that the various parts of a statutory enactment must be harmonized by considering the particular clause or section in the context of the statutory framework as a whole, that a statute should not be given a construction that results in rendering one of its provisions inconsequential, that an interpretation that would render terms surplusage should be avoided, and that every word should be given some significance, leaving no part useless or devoid of meaning (Los Angeles County Safety Police Assn. v. County of Los Angeles (1987) 192 Cal. App. 3d 1378, 1390, 237 Cal. Rptr. 920).

In Leeth v. Workers' Comp. Appeals Bd. (1986) 186 Cal. App. 3d 1550, 231 Cal. Rptr. 468 , the appellate court interpreted Lab. Code § 4453(c)(2), relating to the average weekly earnings of a worker injured in the lower paying of two jobs that he held. The court said that (1) a statute should not be given a construction that results in rendering one of its provisions inconsequential; (2) in attempting to ascertain the legislative intention, effect should be given, whenever possible, to the statute as a whole and to every word and clause of it, leaving no part of the provision useless or deprived of meaning; and (3) in short, a statute should be construed so that effect is given to all its provisions, leaving no part superfluous or inoperative, or void or insignificant, and so that one section will not destroy another (Leeth v. Workers' Comp. Appeals Bd. (1986) 186 Cal. App. 3d 1550, 1556, 231 Cal. Rptr. 468).

§ 217.60 Supporting Contention That Statute Be Construed in Harmony With Whole System of Law of Which It Is Part So That All May Have Effect

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum supporting or opposing a motion, or in a trial or appellate brief. It should be combined with the general form set out in § 217.20.]

_____ [Specify statute] SHOULD BE CONSTRUED IN THE CONTEXT OF THE WHOLE SYSTEM OF LAW OF WHICH IT IS PART SO THAT ALL MAY BE HARMONIZED AND HAVE EFFECT.

A. Construe Statutes on Same Subject Together. Statutes in pari materia are those that relate to the same person or thing, or to the same class of persons or things. In the construction of a particular statute, or in the interpretation of any of its provisions, all acts relating to the same subject, or having the same general purpose, should be read in connection with the particular statute or provisions, as together constituting one law (Isobe v. Unemployment Ins. Appeals Bd. (1974) 12 Cal. 3d 584, 590, 116 Cal. Rptr. 376, 526 P.2d 528 ; Kendall-Brief Co. v. Superior Court (1976) 60 Cal. App. 3d 462, 466, 131 Cal. Rptr. 515).

B. Construe in Harmony With Whole System of Law. Every statute should be construed with reference to the whole system of law of which it is a part so that all may be harmonized and have effect (Landrum v. Superior Court (1981) 30 Cal. 3d 1, 14, 177 Cal. Rptr. 325, 634 P.2d 352 ; O'Brien v. Dudenhoeffer (1993) 16 Cal. App. 4th 327, 332, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 826). Whenever possible, statutes must be reconciled and interpretations that would require one or another to be ignored must be avoided. When the relevant statutes may be reconciled, their provisions cannot be disregarded (Fuentes v. Workers' Comp. Appeals Bd. (1976) 16 Cal. 3d 1, 7, 128 Cal. Rptr. 673, 547 P.2d 449).

[Optional] C. Statutes Enacted in Same Legislative Session Especially to Be Construed Together. Application of the rule that statutes in pari materia should be construed together is most justified, and has the greatest probative force, in the case of statutes relating to the same subject matter that were passed at the same session of the Legislature, especially if they were passed or approved or take effect on the same day (International Business Machines v. State Bd. of Equalization (1980) 26 Cal. 3d 923, 932, 163 Cal. Rptr. 782, 609 P.2d 1).

[Optional] D. Repeal by Implication Not Favored. Repeal by implication, the rule that gives effect to the more recently enacted of laws that are in irreconcilable conflict, is not favored and is recognized only when there is no rational basis for harmonizing the potentially conflicting laws (Nickelsberg v. Workers' Comp. Appeals Bd. (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 288, 298, 285 Cal. Rptr. 86, 814 P.2d 1328 ; Fuentes v. Workers' Comp. Appeals Bd. (1976) 16 Cal. 3d 1, 7, 128 Cal. Rptr. 673, 547 P.2d 449). It should not be presumed that the Legislature in the enactment of statutes intends to overthrow long-established principles of law unless such intention is made clearly to appear either by express declaration or by necessary implication (Fuentes v. Workers' Comp. Appeals Bd. (1976) 16 Cal. 3d 1, 7, 128 Cal. Rptr. 673, 547 P.2d 449).

[Optional] E. No Implied Repeal of Statutes Enacted by Same Bill. When both statutes are part of the same bill, enacted and chaptered together, the rule requiring the courts to reconcile the statutes is even more compelling, for neither can be viewed as an implied repeal of the other (International Business Machines v. State Bd. of Equalization (1980) 26 Cal. 3d 923, 932, 163 Cal. Rptr. 782, 609 P.2d 1).

[Optional] F. Different Codes and Legislative Acts To Be Construed Together. The different codes blend into each other and constitute a single statute for the purposes of statutory construction, and the legislative intent may be determined not only from an individual code but the whole body of law (Winzler & Kelly v. Department of Industrial Relations (1981) 121 Cal. App. 3d 120, 125, 174 Cal. Rptr. 744). Similarly, if two potentially conflicting statutes are contained in different legislative acts, the courts will strive to effectuate the purpose of each by harmonizing them, if possible, in a way that allows both to be given effect (Chavez v. City of Los Angeles (2010) 47 Cal. 4th 970, 986, 104 Cal. Rptr. 3d 710, 224 P.3d 41).

[Set forth additional points and cite authorities relating to other rules of statutory interpretation that aid in ascertaining legislative intent behind statute and support interpretation desired (see §§ 217.21 -217.24, 217.40 -217.46, 217.63, 217.80 -217.86, 217.88).]

The foregoing form may be submitted in support of a party's contention that a statute should be construed in a particular manner. The form sets out the rule of statutory interpretation that every statutemust be construed with reference to the whole system of law of which it is part so that all may be harmonized and be given effect. Such an argument might be made in any type of action or proceeding in which a question arises concerning how a statute should be construed. These points and authorities should be combined with the general form set forth in § 217.20, which relates to the construction of statutes to ascertain and effectuate the legislative intent.

The foregoing form may be combined with a memorandum relating to the procedural context in which the issue of statutory interpretation arises. This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should also insert argument in the foregoing form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should set out all the statutory provisions bearing on the issue presented in the case and demonstrate how the construction he or she advocates allows all the relevant statutes to be given effect. When the statute to be construed is part of a code or act that includes sections setting forth definitions and rules of construction that govern or relate to interpretation of that code or act, counsel may wish to include reference to those sections [see, e.g., Civ. Code §§ 1802-1802.21 (Unruh Act definitions); Prob. Code § 1 et seq. (Probate Code preliminary provisions and definitions)].

[b] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the forms set out in §§ 217.61 and 217.62 may be used to oppose the contention supported by the foregoing form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Construe Statutes on Same Subject Together

In Isobe v. Unemployment Ins. Appeals Bd. (1974) 12 Cal. 3d 584, 116 Cal. Rptr. 376, 526 P.2d 528 , one category of plaintiffs had been awarded disability benefits by a referee. More than 10 days after the referee's decision, defendant board assumed jurisdiction over the disability claims and reversed the referee's decision on the ground that plaintiffs actually discontinued work because of a trade dispute. Plaintiffs appealed from a judgment denying writ of mandate to set aside defendant's decision.

The Supreme Court reversed as to the disability category of plaintiffs, holding that defendant board lacked authority to assume jurisdiction under Unemp. Ins. Code § 1336 because under Unemp. Ins. Code § 1334 the referee's decision became final when there was no appeal pursuant to Unemp. Ins. Code § 1336 within 10 days after the decision was mailed. Applying the rule of statutory construction set forth in Paragraph A of the foregoing form, the Court held that the 10-day time limit provided for in Unemp. Ins. Code § 1334 (since amended to provide a 20-day limit) applied to reviews initiated by defendant board on its own motion as well as to appeals by parties or the Director of Human Resources Development under Unemp. Ins. Code § 1336 (12 Cal. 3d 584, 590-591) .

Kendall-Brief Co. v. Superior Court (1976) 60 Cal. App. 3d 462, 131 Cal. Rptr. 515 , involved a dispute over petitioner's right to use a private street as an easement over the property of the real parties in interest. Real parties in interest recorded a notice of pendency of action (lis pendens) against the property to which petitioner claimed the easement was appurtenant, as well as against the road. Petitioner moved to expunge the lis pendens as to its property, and when the superior court denied the motion, petitioner sought a writ of mandate from the court of appeal.

In denying the writ, the court of appeal noted that while former Code Civ. Proc. § 409 allowed a lis pendens to be recorded in an action concerning real property or affecting the title or right of possession of real property, former Code Civ. Proc. § 409.1 provides only that if the action does not affect title to or the right of possession to real property, the lis pendens may be expunged. Real parties in interest argued that the underlying litigation concerned real property, so that the lis pendens could not be expunged under former Code Civ. Proc. § 409.1. The court rejected this argument, noting that the argument overlooked the fact that former Code Civ. Proc. §§ 409 and 409.1 relate to the same subject matter and are to be interpreted together under the usual rule of statutory construction. Stating the rule set out in Paragraph A of the foregoing form, the court read the two sections together to hold that the phrase "concerning real property" had the same meaning as "affecting the title or the right of possession of real property" (60 Cal. App. 3d 462, 466-467) . The court went on, however, to hold that an action involving the existence of an easement over the servient tenement affects the title or the right of possession of the dominant tenement, and that, therefore, the lis pendens should not be expunged (60 Cal. App. 3d 462, 467-469) . Note that the lis pendens law, including Sections 409 and 409.1, was repealed and reenacted in substantially revised form in 1992 [see Code Civ. Proc. § 405 et seq.]. "Use of an easement" is now expressly within the definition of "real property claim" for which a lis pendens may be recorded [see Code Civ. Proc. § 405.4].

[b] Construe in Harmony With Whole System of Law

In Landrum v. Superior Court (1981) 30 Cal. 3d 1, 177 Cal. Rptr. 325, 634 P.2d 352 (discussed in § 217.20[4][a]), defendant sought a writ of prohibition to prevent prosecution on a burglary information that had been made against him after the magistrate dismissed a previous complaint charging the identical offense. The Supreme Court was confronted with thequestion of whether the 10-day period within which a criminal defendant's preliminary examination had to be held under former Penal Code § 859b (prior to its 1980 amendment) was required to be calculated from the time of defendant's first arraignment or could be measured from the time of his or her arraignment on the second complaint. This question turned on the magistrate's authority to dismiss a complaint without hearing evidence. The Court analyzed two statutes in this regard, concluding that under Penal Code § 871 the magistrate could only dismiss after a hearing. The Court found authority, however, under former Penal Code § 1385 (now Penal Code § 1385(a)), which allowed dismissals in the furtherance of justice, and overruled a previous Supreme Court decision that had held that former § 1385 did not apply to magistrates. The Court found repudiation of the prior case's interpretation of former § 1385 to be necessary in order to give effect to Penal Code § 859b and reconcile it with Penal Code § 871, citing previous Supreme Court cases for the cardinal rule of statutory construction that every statute should be construed with reference to the whole system of law of which it is a part so that all may be harmonized and have effect (30 Cal. 3d 1, 14) .

O'Brien v. Dudenhoeffer (1993) 16 Cal. App. 4th 327, 332, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 826 , involved the question of whether the appointment of a temporary conservator under Prob. Code § 1872 is a judicial determination of incapacity to give away real property. In construing Prob. Code § 1872 the court took note of Civ. Code § 40, which provides that the establishment of a conservatorship "is a judicial determination of the incapacity of the conservatee." The court held that when the two statutes are read together they "inexorably compel the conclusion that an order for conservatorship, temporary or permanent, is a judicial determination of incapacity to give away real property." The court based its construction on the rule that a statute must be construed in the context of the entire statutory scheme of which it is a part, in order to achieve harmony among its parts. The court stated that "[t]his principle applies even though the two provisions are in separate codes" (16 Cal. App. 4th 327, 332) .

The petitioner in Fuentes v. Workers' Comp. Appeals Bd. (1976) 16 Cal. 3d 1, 128 Cal. Rptr. 673, 547 P.2d 449 , sought review of an award of benefits made by the respondent board for a permanent disability caused by an industrial injury. The petitioner challenged the method used by respondent to compute the amount of the award under Lab. Code § 4658 to take into account petitioner's previous permanent disability, for which compensation could not be awarded because of former Lab. Code § 4750 (repealed as of Apr. 19, 2004). Former Section 4750 provided that employers were liable to compensate only for the portion of disability caused by an industrial injury, as though no prior disability had existed.

The Supreme Court affirmed the award as calculated, finding that the method favored by petitioner for computing the award would improperly enhance the benefits on the basis of preexisting disabilities. Use of those methods to calculate an award under Lab. Code § 4658 would have effectively repealed part of former Section 4750 (16 Cal. 3d 1, 6-7) . The petitioner urged that there was an irreconcilable conflict between the two sections, and that Section 4658, as the more recently enacted provision, had to be given effect. The Court rejected this contention, however, stating that whenever possible, courts must reconcile statutes and seek to avoid interpretations that would require one statute or the other to be ignored, and that the rule giving precedence to the later statute is invoked only if the two cannot be harmonized (16 Cal. 3d 1, 7) . The Court found that the statutes, as applied by the board, were complementary rather than contradictory, and the Court concluded that when relevant statutes may be reconciled, their provisions cannot be disregarded (16 Cal. 3d 1, 7-8) .

[c] Statutes Enacted in Same Legislative Session Especially to Be Construed Together

In International Business Machines v. State Bd. of Equalization (1980) 26 Cal. 3d 923, 163 Cal. Rptr. 782, 609 P.2d 1 , plaintiff recovered a sales tax refund for sales tax paid on leases of personal property. Former Rev. & Tax. Code § 6006.3 provided that taxable leases included only original or renewals of original leases entered into after August 1, 1965, and Rev. & Tax. Code § 6391 provides for a sales tax exemption for rentals payable under a lease of personal property when the lessor is unconditionally obligated to lease the property for an amount fixed by the lease prior to August 1, 1965. Plaintiff's refund related to sales tax on leases executed prior to August 1, 1965, but subject to modification or cancellation. Defendant board appealed from the judgment in plaintiff's favor.

The Supreme Court reversed, rejecting plaintiff's contention that former Rev. & Tax. Code § 6006.3 provided a broader exemption than that provided by Rev. & Tax. Code § 6391. The Court sustained defendant's contention that the two statutes had to be construed together, reading the § 6006.3 exemption in a narrow sense to avoid inconsistency with § 6391 (26 Cal. 3d 923, 930-935) . Both sections were enacted simultaneously as part of the same bill; the Court applied the established rule of statutory construction that similar statutes should be construed in light of one another. The Court cited People v. Caudillo (1978) 21 Cal. 3d 562, 585, 146 Cal. Rptr. 859, 580 P.2d 274 , for the statement that application of the rule that statutes in pari materia should be construed together is most justified and has the greatest probative force when statutes relating to the same subject matter were passed at the same session of the Legislature, especially if they were passed or approved or took effect on the same day (26 Cal. 3d 923, 932) .

[d] Repeal by Implication Not Favored

In Nickelsberg v. Workers' Comp. Appeals Bd. (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 288, 285 Cal. Rptr. 86, 814 P.2d 1328 , a workers' compensation petitioner sought to reopen an award based on new and further temporary disability more than nine years after the initial award. The Appeals Board held that the original award of medical treatment did not implicitly carry with it a commensurate award of temporary total disability after the time and jurisdictional limits of Lab. Code §§ 5410 and 5804 had expired.

In upholding the board, the Supreme Court construed amendments to Lab. Code § 4656, eliminating a 240-week limit within five years on temporary total disability (Lab. Code § 4656 was later amended to impose a different limit on temporary total disability payments for some injuries), so as not to impliedly repeal the time and jurisdictional limits of Lab. Code §§ 5410 and 5804 (54 Cal. 3d 288, 298) . The Court harmonized the three provisions by analyzing the legislative placement and classification given them and related provisions in the Labor Code. Section 4656 is in Part 2, "Computation of Compensation," Chapter 2, "Compensation Schedules." Section 5410 is found in Part 4, "Compensation Proceedings," Chapter 2, "Limitations of Proceedings;" and Section 5804 is found in Part 4, "Compensation Proceedings," Chapter 6, "Findings and Awards." The Court concluded that these classifications made it unlikely that the Legislature intended the amendment to § 4656 to implicitly alter either the time limitations for initiating proceedings under § 5410 or the jurisdictional restrictions of § 5804. The Legislature was presumed to be aware of the long history of judicial interpretation of §§ 5410 and 5804 (54 Cal. 3d 288, 298 n.7).

The facts and procedural background of Fuentes v. Workers' Comp. Appeals Bd. (1976) 16 Cal. 3d 1, 128 Cal. Rptr. 673, 547 P.2d 449 , are discussed under § 217.60[3][b]. In Fuentes, the Supreme Court noted that two of the possible constructions of Lab. Code § 4658 would require the Court to discern a legislative intent to effect a repeal or partial repeal of former Lab. Code § 4750 (later repealed as of Apr. 19, 2004). The Court stated that repeals by implication are not favored and are recognized only when there is no rational basis for harmonizing two potentially conflicting laws, citing In re White (1969) 1 Cal. 3d 207, 212, 81 Cal. Rptr. 780, 460 P.2d 980 . Quoting Theodor v. Superior Court (1972) 8 Cal. 3d 77, 92, 104 Cal. Rptr. 226, 501 P.2d 234 , the Court further stated that it should not be presumed that the Legislature in the enactment of statutes intends to overthrow long-established principles of law unless such intention is made clearly to appear either by express declaration or by necessary implication. Applying the rule of statutory construction that a specific statute prevails over a general one, the Court held that Lab. Code §§ 4658 and 4750 were complementary, rather than contradictory, and functioned together quite harmoniously (16 Cal. 3d 1, 6-7) .

[e] No Implied Repeal of Statutes Enacted by Same Bill

The facts and procedural background of International Business Machines v. State Bd. of Equalization (1980) 26 Cal. 3d 923, 163 Cal. Rptr. 782, 609 P.2d 1 , are discussed under § 217.60[3][c]. There, in reversing, the Supreme Court noted that both statutes were part of the same bill, enacted and chaptered together, and held that the rule requiring the courts to reconcile the statutes is even more compelling in such a case, for neither can be viewed as an implied repeal of the other (26 Cal. 3d 923, 932) .

[f] Different Codes and Legislative Acts To Be Construed Together

In Winzler & Kelly v. Department of Industrial Relations (1981) 121 Cal. App. 3d 120, 174 Cal. Rptr. 744 , plaintiffs sought a writ of mandate to review defendant department's determination that a certain class of workers was covered by the prevailing wage law applicable to public contractors and to review defendant's determination of the rate. The superior court granted relief to plaintiffs on the ground that administrative hearings should have been held before the determinations had been issued, and defendant appealed.

In reversing, the court of appeal held that in order to determine the issue of whether or not a prior hearing was required before making a coverage determination under the prevailing wage law, it was necessary to consider the Administrative Procedure Act (Gov. Code § 11370 et seq.), which establishes minimum procedural requirements applicable to quasi-legislative and quasi-judicial actions by state agencies, together with the prevailing wage law. The court stated that in considering them together, it followed the established principles that hold that the different codes blend into each other and constitute a single statute for the purposes of statutory construction and that the legislative intent may be determined not only from an individual code but from the whole body of law (121 Cal. App. 3d 120, 124-125) .

In Chavez v. City of Los Angeles (2010) 47 Cal. 4th 970, 104 Cal. Rptr. 3d 710, 224 P.3d 41 , the California Supreme Court dealt with a potential conflict between Code Civ. Proc. § 1033(a) and Gov. Code § 12965(b). Section 1033(a) authorizes a trial court to deny costs to a prevailing plaintiff in an unlimited civil case if the judgment could have been recovered in a limited civil case. Section 12965(b), which is part of the California Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA), gives the trial court discretion to award attorney's fees and costs to a prevailing plaintiff in a FEHA action. The Court explained that even if two potentially conflicting statutes are contained in different legislative acts, the courts will strive to effectuate the purpose of each by harmonizing them, if possible, in a way that allows both to be given effect (47 Cal. 4th 970, 986) . Applying that approach in this case, the Court gave effect to both provisions, concluding that section 1033(a) gives a trial court discretion to deny attorney's fees to a plaintiff who prevails on a FEHA claim but recovers an amount that could have been recovered in a limited civil case. In exercising that discretion, however, the trial court must give due consideration to the policies and objectives of the FEHA in general and of its fee-shifting provision in particular (47 Cal. 4th 970, 986-989) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Construe Statutes on Same Subject Together

In Summers v. Newman (1999) 20 Cal. 4th 1021, 86 Cal. Rptr. 2d 303, 978 P.2d 1225 , an employee appealed a trial court's order that the employer was entitled to recover attorney fees and costs in addition to full reimbursement for workers' compensation benefits. The parties had settled a lawsuit against a third party for damages to compensate the employee for injuries sustained in a motor vehicle accident. The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's award and the Supreme Court granted review. The issue before the Court was how attorney fees and costs are to be allocated when an injured employee and his employer hire separate attorneys, both of whom actively participate in litigation against the third party tortfeasor that terminates successfully by settlement. The employer argued that Lab. Code § 3860(e) unambiguously established the employer's right to recover all reimbursable compensation costs without deduction for litigationexpenses. The Court disagreed that the language of section 3860 was unambiguous. To resolve ambiguities, the Court stated, courts may employ a variety of extrinsic construction aids, including legislative history, and will adopt the construction that best harmonizes the statute both internally and with related statutes (20 Cal. 4th 1021, 1026) . In this case, the Court looked to related statutory provisions that the Court had authoritatively construed. Section 3860, the Court observed, is closely related to Lab. Code § 3856 (distribution of proceeds of settlement with third party tortfeasor), which the Court construed in Quinn v. State of California (1975) 15 Cal. 3d 162, 124 Cal. Rptr. 1, 539 P.2d 761 . Under Quinn, the employer and the employee were viewed as having equivalent claims against the third party, comparable to co-beneficiaries under a will seeking to recover an amount owed to the estate. The Court was aware of no analogous situation in which all attorney fees and other litigation expenses are charged against the share of just one of the parties benefiting from the litigation (20 Cal. 4th 1021, 1031-1032) . Thus, the Court concluded that construing section 3860(e) to require that the fee paid to the employer's attorney be deducted from the employer's reimbursable compensation costs is more consistent with general principles of law applied in analogous situations (20 Cal. 4th 1021, 1031) .

In Ohio Farmers Ins. Co. v. Quin (1988) 198 Cal. App. 3d 1338, 244 Cal. Rptr. 359 , an insurer brought an action for declaratory relief to determine whether coverage was excluded, based on entrustment of the automobile by a person expressly excluded from coverage. The court of appeal, in affirming the existence of coverage, interpreted the 1982 version of Ins. Code § 11580.1(d)(1) and (e) (exclusion of named persons) in the context of the statutory insurance scheme regarding coverage of permissive users. The court held, in part, that language in one section of a statute should be construed consistently with language of other sections and with the purpose of the entire statutory scheme (198 Cal. App. 3d 1338, 1348) .

[b] Construe in Harmony With Whole System of Law

In California Mfrs. Assn. v. Public Utilities Com. (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 836, 157 Cal. Rptr. 676, 598 P.2d 836 , the Supreme Court stated that statutes must be harmonized both internally and with each other, to the extent possible. The Court applied this rule in holding that rebates received by utilities from suppliers had to be refunded to the utilities' customers on the basis of prior usage under Pub. Util. Code § 453.5, rather than placed in a reserve account so as to offset future rates under Pub. Util. Code § 792.5 (24 Cal. 3d 836, 844) . The Court found that its construction of Pub. Util. Code § 453.5 was reasonably inferable from that section's own language and reflected its purpose while not impairing the implementation of § 792.5 (24 Cal. 3d 836, 848) .

In Neumarkel v. Allard (1985) 163 Cal. App. 3d 457, 209 Cal. Rptr. 616 , certificated employees of a county superintendent of schools, who had been dismissed from their administrative and supervisory positions, filed a writ of mandate to compel the superintendent to comply with termination procedures set forth in Educ. Code §§ 44949 and 44955. By their own terms, these statutes limit their benefits to probationary or permanent school employees. Educ. Code § 1296, applicable to employees of a county superintendent, limits permanent status to persons employed for the requisite period "in a teaching position." In contrast, Educ. Code § 44897, applicable to school district employees, requires only that the employee be in a position requiring certification, which includes administrative and other nonteaching positions. Applying the principle that various parts of a statutory enactment must be harmonized by considering the particular clause or section in a context of the statutory framework as a whole, the court refused to apply a broader meaning to "teaching position" as used in Educ. Code § 1296, so as to include administrative and other nonteaching positions (163 Cal. App. 3d 457, 465) . The court also applied the principle that a statute dealing expressly with a particular subject controls and takes priority over a general statute, and held that the employees must have permanent or probationary status to receive the termination benefits of Educ. Code § 44949 or 44955 (163 Cal. App. 3d 457, 463) . Since the county superintendent employees did not have the requisite teaching positions to attain permanent or probationary status, they were not entitled to the termination benefits (163 Cal. App. 3d 457, 464-466) .

[c] Repeal by Implication Not Favored

Board of Supervisors v. Lonergan (1980) 27 Cal. 3d 855, 167 Cal. Rptr. 820, 616 P.2d 802 , cert. denied, 450 U.S. 918, 101 S. Ct. 1362, 67 L. Ed. 2d 344 (1981) , involved a dispute over the application of Cal. Const., art. XIIIA. Plaintiff argued that art. XIIIA applied to property on the unsecured tax roll for 1978-1979, consisting of personal property and a limited number of possessory interests in real property, as well as to property on the secured tax roll, which includes most real property. In reversing a declaratory judgment in plaintiff's favor, the Supreme Court found that art. XIIIA could only apply to property on the 1978-1979 unsecured roll if art. XIIIA had repealed Cal. Const., art. XIII, § 2. Applying the rule that the law shuns repeal by implication, the Court held that Cal. Const., art. XIIIA did not apply to such property. The presumption against implied repeals is so strong that when a new enactment conflicts with an existing provision, in order for the second law to repeal or supersede the first, the former must constitute a revision of the entire subject so that the court may say that it was intended to be a substitute for the first (27 Cal. 3d 855, 868) .

Defendant in Hays v. Wood (1979) 25 Cal. 3d 772, 160 Cal. Rptr. 102, 603 P.2d 19 , was a city councilman who challenged the disclosure requirements of the conflict-of-interest provisions of the Political Reform Act of 1974 (Gov. Code § 81000 et seq.). He argued, among other things, thatformer Gov. Code § 87207, which required disclosure of the names of persons who paid legal or brokerage fees to a business entity in which a person required to make disclosures had an interest, conflicted with the attorney-client privilege provided for in Evid. Code § 950 et seq. The Supreme Court stated there is a presumption against repeals by implication, and that they will occur only when the two acts are so inconsistent that there is no possibility of concurrent operation, or when the later provision gives undebatable evidence of an intent to supersede the earlier, and that the courts are bound to maintain the integrity of both statutes if they may stand together. The Court, although subsequently holding former Gov. Code § 87207 unconstitutional for violating attorneys' and real estate brokers' rights to equal protection, first held that there was no conflict between former Gov. Code § 87207 and Evid. Code §§ 950-962, because the privilege does not ordinarily protect the client's identity. In the limited situations when the privilege does apply to the client's identity, that identity may be protected by the public agency charged with the enforcement of former Gov. Code § 87207 (25 Cal. 3d 772, 784-785) .

In Sanford v. Garamendi (1991) 233 Cal. App. 3d 1109, 284 Cal. Rptr. 897 , the court held that the repeal of Ins. Code § 1643 by Proposition 103 did not impliedly repeal Fin. Code §§ 772 and 1208. The court reasoned that repeal by implication will be found only if (1) the two acts are so inconsistent that there is no possibility of concurrent operation, or (2) the later provision gives undebatable evidence of an intent to supersede the earlier. Further, the court stated that a claim of repeal by implication is even more suspect when the Legislature repeals certain acts and excludes mention of other acts that refer to the same subject (233 Cal. App. 3d 1109, 1122) . Analyzing ballot materials for Proposition 103 and for Proposition 100, which expressly repealed Fin. Code § 772, the court reasoned that reconciliation was possible because, although Proposition 103 permitted banks to enter the insurance business, the electorate may have intended the prohibition of bank subsidiaries under former Fin. Code § 772(b) (deleted operative Jan. 1, 2004) to continue (233 Cal. App. 3d 1109, 1123-1124) . The remainder of Fin. Code § 772 was repealed effective January 1, 2009 (Stats. 2008, ch. 125, § 49).

California State Auto. Assn. v. Franchise Tax Bd. (1987) 191 Cal. App. 3d 1253, 237 Cal. Rptr. 44 , involved interpretation of Rev. & Tax. Code § 24405, which provides a deduction for organizations operated on a cooperative or mutual basis. The Franchise Tax Board contended that the automobile association was not eligible for the deduction for the taxable years 1968-1971 because it was not organized under Corp. Code § 12200 et seq., governing cooperative corporations. Both parties agreed that during the relevant period, the association could not have been organized under the cooperative corporations statutes because it was neither an ultimate producer or consumer. The court of appeal said that the Board's argument required the assumption that, in enacting the cooperative corporations statutes in 1939, the Legislature, without expressly saying so, intended to repeal the deduction for organizations that were operated cooperatively or mutually but could not become a "cooperative corporation" under the 1939 law. In affirming the allowance of the deduction, the court said it was fundamental that amendments or repeals by implication are disfavored and are to be recognized only when there is an irreconcilable conflict between statutes. Moreover, it should not be presumed that the Legislature, in enacting statutes, intends to overthrow long-established principles of law unless such intention is made clear by declaration or necessary implication (191 Cal. App. 3d 1253, 1261-1262) .

PART II. FORMS
C. INTERPRETATION IN RELATION TO OTHER STATUTES

21-217 California Points & Authorities § 217.61

§ 217.61 Supporting Contention That Specific Provision Governs General Provision Broad Enough to Cover Same Subject

[The following may be included in a memorandum supporting a motion, or in a trial or appellate brief. It should be combined with the general memorandum set out in § 217.20.]

THE COURT SHOULD APPLY _____ [specify statute] TO THIS CASE BECAUSE IT IS A SPECIFIC PROVISION RELATING TO THE PARTICULAR SUBJECT INVOLVED AND THEREFORE GOVERNS _____ [specify general statute], WHICH IS A GENERAL STATUTE, EVEN THOUGH _____ [specify general statute] STANDING ALONE WOULD BE BROAD ENOUGH TO INCLUDE THE PARTICULAR SUBJECT INVOLVED.

A. Specific Provision Governs General. When a general and particular provision are inconsistent, the latter is paramount to the former (Code Civ. Proc. § 1859). A specific provision relating to a particular subject will govern a general provision, even though the general provision standing alone would be broad enough to include the subject to which the specific provision relates (San Francisco Taxpayers Assn. v. Board of Supervisors (1992) 2 Cal. 4th 571, 577, 7 Cal. Rptr. 2d 245, 828 P.2d 147 ; Jones v. Pierce (1988) 199 Cal. App. 3d 736, 742, 245 Cal. Rptr. 149).

[Optional] B. Specific Provision as Exception to General Provision Regardless of Which Enacted First. The special act will be considered as an exception to the general statute whether it was passed before or after such general enactment (Agricultural Labor Relations Bd. v. Superior Court (1976) 16 Cal. 3d 392, 420, 128 Cal. Rptr. 183, 546 P.2d 687 ; Nunes Turfgrass, Inc. v. Vaughan-Jacklin Seed Co., Inc. (1988) 200 Cal. App. 3d 1518, 1539, 246 Cal. Rptr. 823).

[Set forth additional points and authorities relating to other rules of statutory interpretation that aid in ascertaining legislative intent behind statute and support interpretation desired (see §§ 217.21 -217.24, 217.40 -217.46, 217.62, 217.80 -217.86, 217.88).]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

The foregoing points and authorities may be submitted in support of a party's contention that a statute should be construed in a particular manner. The form sets out the rule of statutory interpretation that specific provisions govern general provisions that, standing alone, would apply to the same subject. Such an argument might be made in any type of action or proceeding in which a question arises concerning how a statute should be construed. These points and authorities should be combined with the general points and authorities set forth in § 217.20, which relate to the construction of statutes to ascertain and effectuate the legislative intent.

The foregoing points and authorities may be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities relating to the procedural context in which the issue of statutory interpretation arises. The points and authorities set forth in this form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should also insert argument in the foregoing form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should include discussion showing that the statute he or she desires to have applied to the case relates to the particular subject matter involved and therefore should govern over another statute or statutes that might apply but are of broader application. Counsel should note that the rule giving precedence to particular over general provisions applies only when the provisions cannot be reconciled, because the courts must maintain the integrity of both statutes if an apparent conflict can be reconciled [see § 217.60]. A specific statute will repeal a general statute by implication only to the extent that they are irreconcilable and only when there is no rational basis for harmonizing them [see State Compensation Ins. Fund v. Workers' Comp. Appeals Bd. (1979) 88 Cal. App. 3d 43, 58, 152 Cal. Rptr. 153] . Thus, counsel should also demonstrate that the provisions are irreconcilable or that, as reconciled, the more specific statute applies to the case. If the statutes may be reconciled, counsel may combine the foregoing points and authorities with those set out in § 217.60.

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 217.60 may be used to oppose the contention supported by the foregoing points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Specific Provision Governs General

In San Francisco Taxpayers Assn. v. Board of Supervisors (1992) 2 Cal. 4th 571, 7 Cal. Rptr. 2d 245, 828 P.2d 147 , the Board of Supervisors for San Francisco City and County (Board) interpreted the Cal. Const. art. XIIIB, § 5, limit on governmental appropriations to retirement funds as not applying to appropriations for certain mandatory employee benefits, including retirement contributions, which it claimed came within the Cal. Const. art. XIIIB, § 9, debt service exception to the limitation. Plaintiff brought suit to challenge the Board's exclusion of retirement contributions from the spending limit. Plaintiff alleged that the Board's action violated § 5 (2 Cal. 4th 571, 574-576) . After the superior court granted plaintiff's motion for summary judgment, it entered judgment declaring the Board's action invalid and ordering the Board, by injunction and writ of mandate, to revise its appropriations limit to include retirement contributions. On the Board's appeal, the court of appeals reversed. The Supreme Court granted review to resolve a conflict among the courts of appeal (2 Cal. 4th 571, 576) .

The Supreme Court reversed the court of appeal, holding that the more specific of the two provisions, § 5, controlled over the more general provision, § 9. The basis for the Court's decision was the ordinary principle of interpretation that "a specific provision relating to a particular subject will govern in respect to that subject, as against a general provision, although the latter, standing alone, would be broad enough to include the subject to which the more particular provision relates" (2 Cal. 4th 571, 577) .

Jones v. Pierce (1988) 199 Cal. App. 3d 736, 245 Cal. Rptr. 149 , involved the question whether a California resident who owned a motorhome, which was based and registered in Oregon but was incidentally driven in California, was required to register the vehicle under Veh. Code § 4000(a). Holding that the motorhome was excepted from the registration requirement by Veh. Code § 4000.4, the court of appeal said that a special statute dealing with a particular subject constitutes an exception so as to control and take precedence over a conflicting general statute on the same subject. This is so notwithstanding that the general provision, standing alone, would be broad enough to include the subject to which the more particular one relates (199 Cal. App. 3d 736, 742) .

[b] Specific Provision as Exception to General Provision Regardless of Which Enacted First

In Agricultural Labor Relations Bd. v. Superior Court (1976) 16 Cal. 3d 392, 128 Cal. Rptr. 183, 546 P.2d 687 , petitioner board sought a writ of mandate from the Supreme Court to compel respondent courts to vacate orders enjoining petitioner from enforcing a regulation regarding farm labor organizers' access to agricultural property. The regulation was promulgated under the Agricultural Labor Relations Act (Lab. Code § 1140 et seq.). One of the attacks on its validity was that it conflicted with the general trespass statute of the Penal Code, Penal Code § 602. The Court recognized that administrative regulations cannot contravene statutory provisions, but applied the rule of Code Civ. Proc. § 1859 that when a special and a general statute are in conflict, the former controls. Citing previous Supreme Court decisions, the Court further stated that the special act will be considered as an exception to the general statute whether it was passed before or after such general enactment. The Court extended this proposition to hold that a regulation validly adopted pursuant to a delegation of authority under a special statute likewise prevails over the terms of a general statute, and that the access regulation expressed the Legislature's intent in the Agricultural Labor Relations Act (16 Cal. 3d 392, 420) .

The court of appeal in Nunes Turfgrass, Inc. v. Vaughan-Jacklin Seed Co., Inc. (1988) 200 Cal. App. 3d 1518, 246 Cal. Rptr. 823 , held that the alleged unconscionability and unenforceability of a limitation on consequential damages in a commercial contract should be tested under Com. Code § 2719(3), rather than under Civ. Code § 1668. The court stated that a special statute is considered an exception to a general statute whether it was passed before or after the general enactment (200 Cal. App. 3d 1518, 1539) .

[a] Specific Provision Governs General

In People v. DeLaCruz (1993) 20 Cal. App. 4th 955, 20 Cal. Rptr. 2d 202 , defendant, a restaurant security guard, was convicted of violating Penal Code § 375(d), which prohibits the use of a gas such as chemical Mace in a public place. Although defendant was certified to use Mace, he was convicted after he was found to have not acted in self-defense in spraying a patron. The court of appeal reversed, holding that prosecution under Penal Code § 375(d) was barred, because the alleged conduct was covered under a more specific statute, Penal Code § 12403.7(a)(7). The court reasoned that because of the comprehensive nature of Penal Code § 12403.7, its express recognition that there may be other conflicting provisions within the law, and its provision of punishment consistent with the scope and intent of the law, it was intended to preclude prosecution under the more general provisions of Penal Code § 375(d), when the person certified to possess and use tear gas was in defendant's type of situation. Thus, the court held that prosecution under a general statute is precluded when the facts of the alleged offense parallel the acts proscribed by a special statute.

The court reasoned that when a general statute standing alone would include the same matter as a special act, and consequently conflict with it, the special act will be considered as an exception to the general statute whether it was passed before or after the general enactment. It also defined the term "Notwithstanding other provisions of law" in Penal Code § 12403.7, which it said has been read as an expression of legislative intent to have the specific statute control despite the existence of other law that might otherwise govern. Accordingly, it is not necessary that Penal Code § 12403.7 contain all the elements of Penal Code § 375 for it to take precedence as a special statute (20 Cal. App. 4th 955, 962) .

The court in Neumarkel v. Allard (1985) 163 Cal. App. 3d 457, 209 Cal. Rptr. 616 (discussed in § 217.60[4][b]), applied the principle that a statute dealing expressly with a particular subject controls and takes priority over a general statute (163 Cal. App. 3d 457, 463) .

In Fleming v. Kent (1982) 129 Cal. App. 3d 887, 181 Cal. Rptr. 361 , the court of appeal reversed a judgment of dismissal, holding that plaintiffs' action was not barred by the statute of limitations. Applying the axiom of statutory construction that a particular or specific provision will take precedence over a conflicting general provision, the court held that the case was governed by Educ. Code § 4026, which provides that changes in school district boundaries become conclusive after one year, rather than by Code Civ. Proc. § 349.1, which provides for a six-month statute of limitations for challenging boundary changes of public entities in general (129 Cal. App. 3d 887, 891-892) .

[b] Specific Provision as Exception to General Provision Regardless of Which Enacted First

In Tafoya v. Hastings College (1987) 191 Cal. App. 3d 437, 236 Cal. Rptr. 395 , which involved the applicability of the Bagley-Keene Open Meeting Act (Gov. Code § 11120 et seq.) to the Board of Directors and faculty of Hastings College of the Law, the court of appeal held that it did not apply, because under Educ. Code § 92201 Hastings is an affiliate of the University of California and only the meetings of the Regents of the University and certain of its committees are subject to the act [see Educ. Code §§ 92020, 92030, 92032]. The court said that a statute must be construed toward giving it meaning and effect, and that when the same subject matter is covered by inconsistent provisions, one of which is special and the othergeneral, the special one, whether or not enacted first, is an exception to the general statute and controls unless an intent to the contrary clearly appears (191 Cal. App. 3d 437, 447-448) .

In Fleming v. Kent (1982) 129 Cal. App. 3d 887, 181 Cal. Rptr. 361 (discussed under § 217.61[4][a]), the court stated that a special statute constitutes an exception to a general statute and governs whether enacted before or after the general statute (129 Cal. App. 3d 887, 892) .

THE COURT SHOULD APPLY _____ [specify later-enacted statute], WHICH IS IN IRRECONCILABLE CONFLICT WITH _____ [specify earlier-enacted statute] AND WHICH THEREFORE REPEALED _____ [specify earlier statute] BY IMPLICATION.

Repeal by Implication. When two or more statutes concern the same subject matter and are in irreconcilable conflict, the doctrine of implied repeal provides that the most recently enacted statute expresses the will of the Legislature and thus, to the extent of the conflict, impliedly repeals the earlier enactment (*In re S. [a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a party's contention that a statute should be construed in a particular manner. The form sets out the rule of statutory interpretation that a later-enacted statute repeals an earlier statute that is irreconcilable with the later statute. Such an argument might be made in any type of action or proceeding in which a question arises concerning how a statute should be construed. These points and authorities should be combined with the general points and authorities set forth in § 217.20, which relate to the construction of statutes to ascertain and effectuate the legislative intent.

These points and authorities may be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities relating to the procedural context in which the issue of statutory interpretation arises. The points and authorities set forth in this form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should also insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the point of law stated. Thus, counsel should include discussion demonstrating that the statute on which he or she is relying was enacted subsequent to the statute that he or she does not want to be applied to the case and is irreconcilable, clearly repugnant, and so inconsistent with the earlier statute that there is no rational basis for harmonizing the statutes [see In re S. (1977) 19 Cal. 3d 727, 744-745, 139 Cal. Rptr. 708, 566 P.2d 610 (repeal by implication found); Fuentes v. Workers' Comp. Appeals Bd. (1976) 16 Cal. 3d 1, 7, 128 Cal. Rptr. 673, 547 P.2d 449 (repeal by implication not found)]. Alternatively, if counsel is relying on language included in an earlier-enacted statute, he or she must show that the language was added to that statute by amendment subsequent to the enactment of the statute that he or she does not want to have applied to the case [see McGriff v. County of Los Angeles (1973) 33 Cal. App. 3d 394, 398-399, 109 Cal. Rptr. 186] .

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 217.60 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Repeal by Implication

Defendant in In re S. (1977) 19 Cal. 3d 727, 139 Cal. Rptr. 708, 566 P.2d 610 , was declared a ward of juvenile court on the basis of a misdemeanor. Defendant appealed, arguing that his arrest without a warrant was illegal because the offense was not committed in the arresting officer's presence. The Supreme Court reversed. The Court noted that while former Welf. & Inst. Code § 625.1 imposed an "in the presence of the arresting officer" requirement for warrantless juvenile misdemeanor arrests, Welf. & Inst. Code § 625 did not contain that requirement. To resolve the conflict between the two statutes, the Court turned to the doctrine of implied repeal, stating that when two or more statutes concern the same subject matter and are in irreconcilable conflict, the doctrine of implied repeal provides that the most recently enacted statute expresses the will of the Legislature and thus to the extent of the conflict impliedly repealsthe earlier enactment. The Court recognized that repeals by implication are not favored and that they are recognized only when there is no rational basis for harmonizing the two potentially conflicting statutes and the statutes are irreconcilable, clearly repugnant, and so inconsistent that they cannot have concurrent operation (19 Cal. 3d 727, 744) . Nonetheless, the Court found that there was no rational way to reconcile Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 625 and 625.1 and gave effect to § 625.1 as the more recently enacted statute (19 Cal. 3d 727, 744-745) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Repeal by Implication

In Governing Board v. Mann (1977) 18 Cal. 3d 819, 135 Cal. Rptr. 526, 558 P.2d 1 , the Supreme Court reversed a judgment upholding the authority of plaintiff school board to dismiss defendant teacher under former Educ. Code § 13403(h) (now see Educ. Code §§ 44932(a)(8), 87732(g)) on the basis of a criminal conviction for possession of marijuana. Educ. Code § 13403(h) authorized school districts to terminate teachers who are convicted of felonies or crimes involving moral turpitude, but the Court held that it was impliedly repealed as to defendant's marijuana conviction by the subsequent enactment of Health & Safety Code § 11361.7(b), which provides that public agencies may not impose any collateral sanctions on individuals for specified marijuana-related convictions. The Court noted that although Health & Safety Code § 11361.7(b) did not specifically refer to Educ. Code § 13403(h), and although repeals by implication are not favored, when a subsequently enacted specific statute directly conflicts with an earlier, more general provision, it is settled that the subsequent legislation effects a limited repeal of the former statute to the extent that the two are irreconcilable (18 Cal. 3d 819, 827-828) .

Petitioner in Wolfe v. Board of Medical Quality Assurance (1981) 124 Cal. App. 3d 703, 177 Cal. Rptr. 538 , a podiatrist who graduated from podiatry school in 1951 and was licensed in three states, sought a writ of mandate to compel defendant to grant him a license by reciprocity to practice podiatric medicine in California. Defendant had denied the license on the basis of former Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 2487 and 2488 (both later repealed; a different Bus. & Prof. Code § 2488 was enacted operative Jan. 1, 2004). The court of appeal, although affirming a judgment denying the relief sought, noted a conflict between Bus. & Prof. Code § 2487, which entirely excluded pre-1958 graduates from reciprocity, and Bus. & Prof. Code § 2488, a later-enacted statute that did not totally exclude pre-1958 graduates, and held that § 2488 repealed by implication the language of § 2487 referring to the total exclusion of pre-1958 graduates. The court recognized that repeals by implication are not favored but held that when a subsequently enacted specific statute directly conflicts with an earlier, more general provision, it is settled that the subsequent legislation effects a limited repeal of the former statute to the extent that the two are irreconcilable (124 Cal. App. 3d 703, 709) .

IN CONSTRUING _____ [specify statute], THE COURT SHOULD APPLY THE RULE THAT WHEN ONE PART OF A STATUTE CONTAINS A TERM OR PROVISION, THE OMISSION OF THAT TERM OR PROVISION FROM ANOTHER PART OF THE SAME STATUTE INDICATES THAT THE LEGISLATURE INTENDED TO CONVEY A DIFFERENT MEANING.

Omission of Provision Included in Statute on Related Subject or in Other Part of Same Statute. When a statute with reference to one subject contains a given term or provision, the omission of that term or provision from another part of the same statute, or from a similar statute concerning a related subject, is significant to show that a different legislative intention existed (*Murphy v. [a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of a party's contention that a statute should be construed in a particular manner. The form sets out the rule of statutory interpretation that when a statute or portion of a statute omits a provision that is included in another statute or in another portion of the same statute, the omission shows that a different meaning was intended. Such an argument might be made in any type of action or proceeding in which a question arises concerning how a statute should be construed. This form should be combined with the general memorandum presented in § 217.20, which relates to the construction of statutes to ascertain and effectuate the legislative intent. This form may also be combined with a memorandum relating to the procedural context in which the issue of statutory interpretation arises.

Counsel should also insert argument in the foregoing form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the point of law stated. Thus, counsel should compare the language of two or more statutes on the same or a related subject and demonstrate that the Legislature, by including a particular provision in one or more of the statutes and omitting it in the statute to be construed, must have intended that the provision not apply to the statute to be construed.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Omission of Provision Included in Statute on Related Subject or in Other Part of Same Statute

Murphy v. Kenneth Cole Prods., Inc. (2007) 40 Cal. 4th 1094, 56 Cal. Rptr. 3d 880, 155 P.3d 284 , involved a claim that the plaintiff's former employer had violated California wage laws by failing to compensate the plaintiff for overtime work, failing to provide meal and rest periods, and failing to provide itemized pay statements. In May 2004, the trial court filed its statement of decision and a judgment awarding the plaintiff unpaid overtime, payments for missed meal and rest periods, penalties for failing to furnish itemized pay statements, waiting time penalties, and prejudgment interest. In awarding payments for missed meal and rest periods under Labor Code § 226.7, the court applied the three-year statute of limitations in Code of Civil Procedure § 338 and awarded payments dating from October 2000. On appeal, the employer contended, among other things, that the payments for the meal and rest periods were penalties and therefore subject to the one-year statute of limitations in Code of Civil Procedure § 340. The court of appeal agreed with the employer on this point and reversed the trial court's judgment. The Supreme Court granted review and ultimately reversed the court of appeal's judgment.

Labor Code § 226.7(a) provides that "[n]o employer shall require any employee to work during any meal or rest period mandated by an applicable order of the Industrial Welfare Commission." Subdivision (b) of the statute further provides that "[i]f an employer fails to provide an employee a meal period or rest period in accordance with an applicable order of the Industrial Welfare Commission, the employer shall pay the employee one additional hour of pay at the employee's regular rate of compensation for each work day that the meal or rest period is not provided" (Lab. Code § 226.7(b)).

The major substantive issue before the Supreme Court in this case was whether an award of "one additional hour of pay" under Labor Code § 226.7(b) constitutes a wage or a penalty. Wage claims are subject to the three-year limitation of Code of Civil Procedure § 338(a) (governing "[a]n action upon a liability created by statute, other than a penalty or forfeiture"). But penalties are subject to the one-year limitation of Code Civ. Proc. 340(a) or (governing "[a]n action upon a statute for a penalty or forfeiture").

The Supreme Court concluded that the "additional hour of pay" under Labor Code § 226.7(b) constitutes a wage and is therefore subject to the three-year limitations period of Code of Civil Procedure § 338(a) (40 Cal. 4th 1094, 1102-1111) . In coming to this conclusion, the Court reviewed the statutory language and the legislative and administrative history. One important circumstance cited by the Court was that the legislature did not use the term "penalty" to describe the "additional hour of pay" in Section 226.7, while simultaneously establishing penalties explicitly labeled as such in other provisions enacted as part of the same bill (see Lab. Code §§ 203.1, 226). In addition, several other Labor Code provisions expressly impose "penalties" for various violations of the wage laws (see, e.g., Lab. Code §§ 226.3, 230.8, 1197.1). Under the circumstances, therefore, the Legislature's decision not to call the Section 226.7 remedy a "penalty," while using that word to describe remedies provided in other statutes, is evidence that the Legislature did not intend Section 226.7 to constitute a penalty for statute-of-limitations purposes 40 Cal. 4th 1094, 1108-1109) .

Cornette v. Department of Transp. (2001) 26 Cal. 4th 63, 109 Cal. Rptr. 2d 1, 26 P.3d 332 , arose from an automobile accident. The plaintiffs sued the Department of Transportation (Caltrans), alleging that the accident resulted from a dangerous highway condition created by the Caltrans's decision not to have a median barrier at the location where the accident occurred. Caltrans asserted the affirmative defense of design immunity. Over the objection of the plaintiffs, the trial court ruled that it would try to determine all issues relating to the design immunity. On appeal from a judgment for Caltrans, the plaintiffs contended that all but one of the design immunity issues should have been tried to the jury. The court of appeal reversed and remanded for a new trial.

Under Gov. Code § 830.6, a public entity may avoid liability for injuriescaused by a dangerous condition on its property by raising the affirmative defense of design immunity. Section 830.6 provides that a showing of design immunity consists of the following elements: (1) a causal relationship between the plan or design and the accident, (2) discretionary approval of the plan or design prior to the accident, and (3) a determination by "the trial or appellate court" that there is substantial evidence supporting the reasonableness of the plan or design. Section 830.6 goes on to provide that design immunity, once established, may be lost if (1) the plan or design has become dangerous because of a change in physical conditions; (2) the public entity had actual or constructive notice of the dangerous condition thus created; and (3) the public entity had a reasonable time to obtain the funds and carry out the necessary remedial work to bring the property back into conformity with a reasonable plan or design, or if the public entity, unable to remedy the condition because of impossibility or lack of funds, had not reasonably attempted to provide adequate warnings.

The Supreme Court in this case observed that the statute clearly requires the third element of design immunity (the existence of substantial evidence supporting the reasonableness of the design) to be determined by the court. However, because the statute does not contain any similar language requiring the court to determine the existence of any necessary element of a loss of design immunity, the Court held that immunity-loss issues are triable by a jury. The Court stated that when one part of a statute contains a term or provision, the omission of that term or provision from another part of the same statute indicates that the Legislature intended to convey a different meaning. Therefore, the Court held that the trial court had erred in interpreting the statute as requiring a bench trial on design immunity issues other than the third element of immunity. Accordingly, the Supreme Court affirmed the court of appeal's judgment remanding the case for a jury trial (26 Cal. 4th 63, 68-73, 80) .

In Moncharsh v. Heily & Blase (1992) 3 Cal. 4th 1, 10 Cal. Rptr. 2d 183, 832 P.2d 899 , an arbitrator made a binding award against an attorney in favor of his former law firm regarding attorney's fees collected by the attorney for cases originally retained by the firm. The attorney petitioned the superior court to vacate and modify the arbitration award. The superior court ruled that the arbitrator's rulings on questions of fact and law were conclusive and subject to review only if an error of law appeared on the face of the award. The court also held that there was no such error in this case. The court of appeal affirmed but stated the rule differently: arbitration awards are not subject to review unless "an error of law appears on the face of the ruling and then only if the error would result in substantial injustice" (3 Cal. 4th 1,

The Supreme Court granted review on the limited issue of whether, and on what circumstances, a trial court may review an arbitrator's award (3Cal. 4th 1, 8) . The Court determined legislative intent by comparing a provision in a related statute [Code Civ. Proc. § 1296], permitting judicial review of an arbitration award, with the provision applying in this case [Code Civ. Proc. § 1286.2], permitting vacation of arbitration award only for acts amounting to fraud or corruption. The Court concluded: "[b]y specifically providing [in Code Civ. Proc. § 1296] for judicial review and correction of error, but not in section 1286.2, we may infer that the Legislature did not intend to confer traditional judicial review in private arbitration cases. 'Where a statute, with reference to one subject contains a given provision, the omission of such provision from a similar statute concerning a related subject ... is significant to show that a different intention existed' " (3 Cal. 4th 1, 26) .

In City of Dublin v. County of Alameda (1993) 14 Cal. App. 4th 264, 17 Cal. Rptr. 2d 845 , the court of appeal faced the issue whether the California Integrated Waste Management Act of 1989 (Pub. Res. Code § 40000 et seq.) precludes local action by initiative. The trial court had granted a writ of mandate invalidating a county initiative measure approved by the voters of Alameda County regulating solid waste disposal. One of the bases on which the trial court invalidated the initiative measure was a holding that the act precluded local action by initiative. The court of appeal reversed. The court noted that no legislative intent to preclude action by the electorate is perceptible in most of the act's provisions. The court compared those many provisions to one particular provision of the act, Pub. Res. Code § 40059, which had language precluding local action by initiative in certain circumstances not before the court (14 Cal. App. 4th 264, 279-280) . The court stated that "when a statute contains a particular provision, the omission of that provision from similar statutes on the same or a related subject reveals a different intent" (14 Cal. App. 4th 264, 280) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Omission of Provision Included in Statute on Related Subject

Mitchell v. City of Indio (1987) 196 Cal. App. 3d 881, 242 Cal. Rptr. 235 , was an action to invalidate an annexation of land by the city. The city's notice of a public hearing on the annexation was given 14 days before the hearing date, rather than 15 days as required by statute at that time (see former Gov. Code §§ 56154 and 57002 [now see Gov. Code § 56154 (requiring 21 days' notice)]. Plaintiffs failed to show that the one day would have made any difference in the outcome of the matter. Defendants were granted a summary judgment, and plaintiffs appealed. They contended that the 15-day notice requirement for public hearings on annexation was mandatory under Gov. Code § 56106 and that the city's failure to comply with it should have invalidated the annexation. Gov. Code § 56106 provides that any provisions governing the time within which an official, a conducting authority, or the commission is to act shall in all instances, "except for notice requirements," be deemed directory, rather than mandatory. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment, pointing out that Gov. Code § 56107 contains no exception for notices and provides that no reorganization "shall be invalidated because of any defect, error, irregularity, or omission in any act, determination or procedure which does not adversely and substantially affect the rights of any person ... ." If the Legislature had intended to except cases with notice defects from Gov. Code § 56107's prejudice requirement, it presumably would have so stated. When a statute, with reference to one subject, contains a given provision, the omission of such provision from a similar statute concerning a related subject is significant to show that a different intention existed, and that so it was in the case before it. The inclusion of the notice provision in Gov. Code § 56106 and its omission from Gov. Code § 56107 shows that the Legislature intended to except notice requirements from the general rule of Gov. Code § 56106 (time provisions are directory), but did not intend to except notice requirements from the general rule of Gov. Code § 56107 (harmless irregularities will not invalidate reorganization) (196 Cal. App. 3d 881, 888) .

Balboa Ins. Co. v. Aguirre (1983) 149 Cal. App. 3d 1002, 197 Cal. Rptr. 250 , involved a breach-of-indemnity-agreement action in which defendants successfully moved to dismiss under former Code Civ. Proc. § 583(d) for plaintiff's failure to bring the action to trial within three years. On appeal, plaintiff contended that a provision contained in former Code Civ. Proc. § 583(c) that precluded mandatory dismissal before five years had passed from the time the complaint was filed should apply to dismissals under former Code Civ. Proc. § 583(d) as well. The court of appeal rejected plaintiff's argument and affirmed the trial court's dismissal, holding that when a statute on a particular subject omits a particular provision, inclusion of that provision in another statute concerning a related matter indicates legislative intent that the provision is not applicable to the statute from which it was omitted (Balboa Ins. Co. v. Aguirre (1983) 149 Cal. App. 3d 1002, 1008, 197 Cal. Rptr. 250).

Plaintiff in Allis-Chalmers Corp. v. City of Oxnard (1981) 126 Cal. App. 3d 814, 179 Cal. Rptr. 159 , an action for declaratory and injunctive relief to challenge a bond issue, appealed from a summary judgment entered in defendant's favor. The court of appeal affirmed. Plaintiff contended that the bond issue violated Sts. & Hy. Code § 10602, which provides that certain municipal improvement bonds may be issued and sold as the legislative body directs, subject to a maximum interest rate of 8 percent, because while the bonds were to bear interest at 8 percent, they were additionally to be sold at a 5 percent discount. In holding that the 8 percent rate specified in Sts. & Hy. Code § 10602 applied only to the interest rateappearing on the face of the bonds, and not to the net interest rate yielded by the discount sale of the bonds, the court applied the rule stated in this form. The court reasoned that since some statutes relating to the issuance of bonds expressly limit the net rate of interest on bonds, such as Gov. Code §§ 43655 and 43727, while Sts. & Hy. Code § 10602 contains no similar provision, it had to be presumed that the Legislature did not intend that limitation to apply in the issuance of bonds under Sts. & Hy. Code § 10602 (Allis-Chalmers Corp. v. City of Oxnard (1981) 126 Cal. App. 3d 814, 820-821, 179 Cal. Rptr. 159).

_____ [Specify statute] SHOULD BE CONSTRUED AS INCORPORATING _____ [specify other statute] AS IT PRESENTLY EXISTS BECAUSE _____ [specify first statute] CROSS REFERS TO A WHOLE SYSTEM OR BODY OF LAWS OF WHICH _____ [specify other statute] IS A PART, RATHER THAN TO _____ [specify other statute] SPECIFICALLY.

Effect of Cross-Reference to Other Statutes. When a statute adopts by specific reference the provisions of another statute, regulation, or ordinance, the provisions are incorporated in the form in which they exist at the time of the reference and not as subsequently modified; however, if the reference is general instead of specific, such as to a system or body of laws, then the referring statute takes the law or laws referred to not only in their contemporary form, but also as they may be changed from time to time (People v. Cooper (2002) 27 Cal. 4th 38, 44, 115 Cal. Rptr. 2d 219, 37 P.3d 403 ; People v. Eddy (1995) 32 Cal. App. 4th 1098, 1105, 38 Cal. Rptr. 2d 563).

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of either of two possible alternative contentions concerning the interpretation of a statute that contains a cross reference to another statute. If the reference to the provisions of the other statute is specific, this form may be submitted in support of the contention that the referring statute should be construed as incorporating the other statute as it existed when the first statute was initially enacted (or when the cross reference was first added). Alternatively, if the reference is to a general body or system of laws, the points and authorities in this form may be submitted in support of the contention that the reference should be construed as incorporating the second statute as it presently exists.

These points and authorities should be combined with the general points and authorities set forth in § 217.20 concerning the construction of statutes to ascertain and effectuate legislative intent. They may also be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the procedural context in which thew issue of statutory interpretation arises, or they may be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, if counsel is arguing for a construction of the statute that incorporates a prior version of the statute referred to, counsel should show that the reference contained in the first statute is narrow and specific. By contrast, if counsel is arguing for a construction of the first statute that incorporates the present version of the second statute, counsel should demonstrate that the reference in the first statute is to a general system or body of laws of which the second statute is a part, rather than to provisions of the second statute specifically.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Effect of Cross-Reference to Other Statutes

In People v. Cooper (2002) 27 Cal. 4th 38, 115 Cal. Rptr. 2d 219, 37 P.3d 403 , the question before the Supreme Court was the proper amountof presentence conduct credits to be awarded to the defendant, who had been convicted of second-degree murder. The resolution depended on the interaction of three statutory provisions: former Penal Code §§ 190, 2933.1, and 4019. As in effect at the relevant time, § 190 prescribed the punishment for second-degree murder and provided for credits as follows: "Article 2.5 (commencing with Section 2930) of Chapter 7 of Title 1 of Part 3 [of the Penal Code] shall apply to reduce any minimum term ... imposed pursuant to this section, but the person shall not otherwise be released on parole prior to that time." This portion of § 190 was enacted by voter initiative and thus could not be amended without voter approval. When this version of § 190 was enacted, Article 2.5 contained no provisions relating to presentence conduct credits, but the Legislature subsequently amended Article 2.5 by adding § 2933.1, which limited presentence credits for certain felonies (including second-degree murder). The defendant argued that, at the time of his offense, § 190 incorporated by specific reference the code sections contained in Article 2.5. Because § 190 expressly authorized Article 2.5 credits to reduce the minimum term imposed and § 2933.1 later limited the availability of credits without voter approval, the defendant claimed that § 2933.1 was inapplicable to his sentence.

The Supreme Court rejected this argument. The Court acknowledged the general principle that when a statute adopts by specific reference the provisions of another statute, those provisions are incorporated in the form in which they exist at the time of the reference, not as subsequently amended. However, there is a cognate rule to the effect that if the reference is general instead of specific, such as a reference to a system or body of laws or to a general law relating to a particular subject, the referring statute takes the law or laws referred to not only in their contemporary form, but also as they may be changed from time to time or even repealed (People v. Cooper (2002) 27 Cal. 4th 38, 44, 115 Cal. Rptr. 2d 219, 37 P.3d 403). Applying this rule, the Court explained that, when the relevant version of § 190 was adopted, Article 2.5 authorized only postsentence prison conduct credits. Penal Code Section 4019, which authorized presentence credits, was contained in a different Article. Thus, the addition of § 2933.1 to Article 2.5 did not authorize presentence credits, but rather just limited the credits available under § 4019. Because § 190 did not specifically authorize or prohibit presentence credits, and only generally referred to Article 2.5, the Supreme Court held that the Legislature's enactment of § 2933.1 was not an invalid modification of § 190 as adopted by the electorate (People v. Cooper (2002) 27 Cal. 4th 38, 46-47, 115 Cal. Rptr. 2d 219, 37 P.3d 403).

The Court distinguished this case from In re Oluwa (1989) 207 Cal. App. 3d 439, 255 Cal. Rptr. 35 , which involved a legislative amendment of Article 2.5 postsentence conduct credits. The Supreme Court approved the Oluwa court's holding that the legislative amendment was inconsistent with the intent of the electorate and therefore invalid (People v. Cooper (2002) 27 Cal. 4th 38, 45, 48, 115 Cal. Rptr. 2d 219, 37 P.3d 403).

In People v. Eddy (1995) 32 Cal. App. 4th 1098, 38 Cal. Rptr. 2d 563 , the defendant was initially sentenced to four years in state prison after being convicted of vehicle theft and of possessing a controlled substance for sale, based on crimes committed in 1991 and 1992. The trial court subsequently stayed the criminal proceedings and committed to the defendant to the California Rehabilitation Center (CRC). After spending 504 days in the CRC, defendant was excluded from the facility, and the four-year prison term was reinstated. The trial court granted defendant credit for the time actually spent in the CRC, but did not grant the defendant any good behavior and participation credit under Penal Code § 2931 or worktime credit under Penal Code § 2933 for the time he was in the CRC. Defendant appealed, contending he was entitled to such credit, but the court of appeal affirmed.

Welf. & Inst. Code § 3201(c) provides that CRC committees may not be confined for a period exceeding that which they would have spent in prison had sentence been executed, "including application of good behavior and participation credit provisions of Article 2.5 (commencing with Section 2930) of Chapter 7 of Title I of Part 3 of the Penal Code [Penal Code § 2930 et seq.]." In 1982, the Penal Code was amended to make good behavior and participation credit under Penal Code § 2931 inapplicable to crimes committed on and after January 1, 1983, and instead substituted a worktime credit system under Penal Code § 2933. On appeal, defendant contended among other things that he was entitled to good behavior and participation credit under Penal Code § 2931 because Welf. & Inst. Code § 3201 incorporates § 2931 as it existed in 1980, when § 3201 was first amended to make specific reference to the conduct credit system under Penal Code § 2930 et seq. In so arguing, defendant relied on the maxim of statutory construction that when a statute adopts by specific reference the provisions of another statute, regulation, or ordinance, the provisions are incorporated in the form in which they exist at the time of the reference and not as subsequently modified (citing Palermo v. Stockton Theatres, Inc. (1948) 32 Cal. 2d 53, 58-59, 195 P.2d 1). However, the court of appeal, also citing Palermo, noted a converse rule of statutory construction, which the court believed to be more appropriate to this case: if the reference is general instead of specific, such as to a system or body of laws, then the referring statute takes the law or laws referred to not only in their contemporary form, but also as they may be changed from time to time (People v. Eddy (1995) 32 Cal. App. 4th 1098, 1105, 38 Cal. Rptr. 2d 563). The court held that the reference in Welf. & Inst. Code § 3201 was to an entire system or body of laws (namely Penal Code § 230 et seq.), rather than to § 2931 specifically, and therefore § 3201 adopted the entire pertinent system of laws not only in its contemporary form, but also as it may beamended in the future (People v. Eddy (1995) 32 Cal. App. 4th 1098, 1106, 38 Cal. Rptr. 2d 563).

§ 217.65 Opposing Contention That Specific Provision Governs General Provision--Neither Provision Is More Specific

[1] FORM

THE PRINCIPLE THAT A SPECIFIC PROVISION TAKES PRECEDENCE OVER A GENERAL PROVISION IS INAPPLICABLE IN THIS CASE.

Principle That Specific Provision Governs General Provision Is Inapplicable if Neither Provision Is More Specific. The principle that a specific provision takes precedence over a general provision has no application if neither provision under consideration is significantly more specific than the other, such as provisions that govern different subject areas (Mejia v. Reed (2003) 31 Cal. 4th 657, 666, 3 Cal. Rptr. 3d 390, 74 P.3d 166).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be used to oppose a contention that the court should apply a given statutory provision because it is more specific than another.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the circumstances of the case and the point of law stated. Thus, counsel should establish that neither of the conflicting statutory provisions is more specific than the other, for example because each provides specific regulation of a different subject area (see Mejia v. Reed (2003) 31 Cal. 4th 657, 666, 3 Cal. Rptr. 3d 390, 74 P.3d 166).

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, this form of points and authorities may be used in opposition to the points and authorities set forth in § 217.61.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Principle That Specific Provision Governs General Provision Is Inapplicable if Neither Provision Is More Specific

In Mejia v. Reed (2003) 31 Cal. 4th 657, 3 Cal. Rptr. 3d 390, 74 P.3d 166 , the plaintiff was the mother of a child whose father was married to another woman. In a later divorce proceeding, the father and his wife entered into a marital settlement agreement under which the father transferred all his interest in jointly held real property to his wife. The plaintiff brought the present action, claiming that the purpose of this transfer was to prevent her from collecting child support. The plaintiff sought to impose a lien on the transferred real property pursuant to the Uniform Fraudulent Transfer Act (UFTA) (Civ. Code § 3439.07; see Civ. Code § 3439 et seq.). The trial court assumed that assumed that the UFTA applied to the marital settlement agreement, but it granted the father's summary judgment motion on the grounds that no evidence was presented of actual intent to defraud, and that constructive fraud under the UFTA was not established because the transfer had not rendered the father insolvent (see Civ. Code § 3439.05). The court of appeal reversed, holding that although the UFTA applies to marital settlement agreements, triable issues of fact precluded summary judgment.

The Supreme Court reversed the judgment of the court of appeal. The Supreme Court held that the UFTA does apply to marital settlement agreements (31 Cal. 4th 657, 668-669) . The Court also found that there was no triable issue of constructive fraud under the UFTA, because the transfer had not rendered the father insolvent (31 Cal. 4th 657, 669-672) . However, further proceedings were necessary to determine the existence of actual intent to defraud (31 Cal. 4th 657, 672) . Accordingly, the Supreme Court remanded the case for further proceedings (31 Cal. 4th 657, 672) .

Whether the UFTA applies to transfers made under marital settlement agreements was a question of first impression in this case. The Supreme Court was faced with an apparent conflict between the provisions of the UFTA and the Family Code. The UFTA provides remedies for present and future creditors in the case of a debtor's transfer that is actually or constructively fraudulent (see Civ. Code §§ 3439.04(a), 3439.05). On its face, the UFTA applies to all transfers. It defines "transfer" as "every mode, direct or indirect, absolute or conditional, voluntary or involuntary, of disposing of or parting with an asset or an interest in an asset. ..." (Civ. Code § 3439.01 (i)). The UFTA excepts only certain transfers resulting from lease terminations or lien enforcement (Civ. Code § 3439.08(e)). Thus, the UFTA on its face encompasses transfers made under a marital settlement agreement.

On the other hand, the Family Code provides that property received by a married person in a division of property under a marital settlement agreement "is not liable for a debt incurred by the person's spouse before or during marriage, and the person is not personally liable for the debt, unless the debt was assigned for payment by the person in the division of the property" (Fam. Code § 916(a)(2)). The only statutory exception to this grant of immunity from liability is a provision that preserves the liability of property subject to a preexisting lien (Fam. Code § 916(a)(2)); the statute does not mention fraudulent transfers. Thus, on its face, the Family Code provision would appear to protect transfers of marital property incident to dissolution from being set aside under the UFTA.

Faced with this apparent conflict, the Supreme Court looked first at the statutory text, but the Court found that the statutory language was not sufficient to resolve the conflict. In particular, the Court found that the principle that a specific provision takes precedence over a general provision was not helpful in this instance. That principle is inapplicable if neither provision under consideration is significantly more specific than the other. In this case, the Family Code provision governing the validity of marital settlement agreements might be viewed as more specific than the UFTA, since the UFTA applies to all transactions, not just those made as part of marital settlements. On the other hand, the UFTA could be viewed as more specific because it deals only with fraudulent transfers, whereas the marital-settlement provision regulates all transfers made in marital settlement agreements. The Court concluded that the Legislature's failure to address the rare instance in which these provisions overlap does not suggest any legislative intent as to which one should prevail (31 Cal. 4th 657, 666-667) .

Ultimately, the Supreme Court found that neither the statutory language nor the legislative history was sufficient to resolve the conflict (31 Cal. 4th 657, 666-668) . Under the circumstances, the Court turned to a consideration of the relevant policy considerations bearing on the question of legislative intent. Based on the general legislative policy of protecting creditors from fraudulent transfers, including transfers between spouses, the Court concluded that the UFTA applies to transfers made under marital settlement agreements (31 Cal. 4th 657, 668-669) .

THE COURT MAY CONSIDER THE REPORT OF _____ [specify legislative committee] IN INTERPRETING _____ [specify statute].

Consideration of Legislative Committee Reports. Statements in legislative committee reports concerning the statutory objects and purposes that are in accord with a reasonable interpretation of the statute are legitimate aids in determining legislative intent (Southern Cal. Gas Co. v. Public Utilities Com. (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 653, 658-659, 156 Cal. Rptr. 733, 596 P.2d 1149).

[Set forth additional points and authorities relating to other rules of statutory interpretation that aid in ascertaining legislative intent behind statute and support interpretation desired (see §§ 217.21 -217.24, 217.40 -217.46, 217.60 -217.63, 217.81 -217.86, 217.88).]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a party's contention that a statute should be construed in a particular manner. The form sets out the rule of statutory interpretation that courts may rely on statements in legislative committee reports in interpreting a statute. Such an argument might be made in any type of action or proceeding in which a question arises concerning how a statute should be construed. These points and authorities should be combined with the general points and authorities set forth in § 217.20, which relate to the construction of statutes to ascertain and effectuate the legislative intent.

The foregoing points and authorities may be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities relating to the procedural context in which the issue of statutory interpretation arises. The points and authorities set forth in this form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should also insert argument in the foregoing form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the point of law stated. Thus, counsel should set out the report or parts of it on which he or she seeks to rely.

Legislative analyses that have been looked to by courts in addition to Assembly and Senate committee reports include the Legislative Counsel's Digest, committee bill digests, the Assembly Office of Research's Digest for the third assembly reading, the Senate Democratic Caucus Analysis, the Enrolled Bill Memorandum to the Governor, and the Enrolled Bill Report to the Governor's office [see Southland Mechanical Constructors Corp. v. Nixen (1981) 119 Cal. App. 3d 417, 427-428, 173 Cal. Rptr. 917 ; but see Allis-Chalmers Corp. v. City of Oxnard (1981) 126 Cal. App. 3d 814, 820, 179 Cal. Rptr. 159 (questioning evidentiary value of Legislative Counsel's Digest)]. The court may take judicial notice of such materials [see Southland Mechanical Constructors Corp. v. Nixen (1981) 119 Cal. App. 3d 417, 428 n.7, 173 Cal. Rptr. 917] . In addition to legislative materials, courts may also consider the wider historical circumstances of a law's enactment in determining legislative intent. For example, the purpose of a statute may be determined from statements in law review articles or other cases [see Industrial Risk Insurers v. Rust Engineering Co. (1991) 232 Cal. App. 3d 1038, 1043, 283 Cal. Rptr. 873] .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Consideration of Legislative Committee Report

Petitioners in Southern Cal. Gas Co. v. Public Utilities Com. (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 653, 156 Cal. Rptr. 733, 596 P.2d 1149 , sought review of a decision of defendant commission. The decision required petitioners to institute home insulation assistance and financing programs pursuant to Pub. Util. Code § 2782, which directs defendant to permit utilities to institute such programs. The Supreme Court, in reversing and holding that Pub. Util. Code § 2782 was permissive only and did not allow defendant to make such programs mandatory for utilities, relied on legislative committee analyses of the bill that created the act and which specifically and repeatedly stated that the bill would merely permit rather than require utility participation (24 Cal. 3d 653, 658-659) . The analyses included those prepared for the Assembly Committee on Energy and Diminishing Materials, the Assembly Ways and Means Committee, and the Senate Public Utilities, Transportation, and Energy Committee. The Court also noted analyses prepared by the Assembly Office of Research for the Assembly vote of concurrence with Senate amendments, by the Senate Democratic Caucus for the Senate third reading, and by the Legislative Analyst (24 Cal. 3d 653, 658 n.4). Citing Southern Pacific Co. v. Industrial Acci. Com. (1942) 19 Cal. 2d 271, 275, 120 P.2d 880 , the Court held that statements in legislative committee reports concerning the statutory objects and purposes that are in accord with a reasonable interpretation of the statute are legitimate aids in determining legislative intent (24 Cal. 3d 653, 659) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Consideration of Legislative Committee Reports

In Altaville Drug Store, Inc. v. Employment Development Department (1988) 44 Cal. 3d 231, 242 Cal. Rptr. 732, 746 P.2d 871 , the Supreme Court, which was concerned with the meaning of the word "spouse" as used in Unemp. Ins. Code § 1032, quoted in part a legislative committee report on the 1979 amendment to Unemp. Ins. Code § 1032 (44 Cal. 3d 231, 235-236) . The Court said that statements of legislative committees pertaining to the purpose of legislation are presumed to express the legislative intent of statutes as enacted (44 Cal. 3d 231, 238) .

Milligan v. City of Laguna Beach (1983) 34 Cal. 3d 829, 196 Cal. Rptr. 38, 670 P.2d 1121 , was an action by a landowner that alleged that a dangerous condition on unimproved public property had damaged his property adjacent to the public property. The defendant successfully argued in the trial court that it was immune under Gov. Code § 831.2 to an action by a landowner, but the Supreme Court reversed. In examining the applicability of Gov. Code § 831.2 to the situation before it, the Court examined the comments to the Government Claims Act adopted by the Assembly and Senate Committees and held that the comments clearly stated the purpose of the act (34 Cal. 3d 829, 831-832) . The Court held that such an expressed legislative purpose supersedes all other rules of construction, and the enactment must be applied in accordance with the legislative direction expressed in the comments (34 Cal. 3d 829, 831) .

In Mir v. Charter Suburban Hospital (1994) 27 Cal. App. 4th 1471, 33 Cal. Rptr. 2d 243 , one of the issues concerned the interpretation of Bus. & Prof. Code § 809.9, which allows an award of attorney's fees to the prevailing party in certain actions to challenge the decision of a hospital peer review committee "if the other party's conduct in bringing, defending, or litigating the suit was frivolous, unreasonable, without foundation, or in bad faith." The physician, who had prevailed in a mandate proceeding challenging a hospital's disciplinary action against him, argued that a physician should be able to recover fees under this statute whenever a hospital's disciplinary decision is reversed in a mandate proceeding as unsupported by substantial evidence. The hospital argued that the lack of substantial evidence does not in itself mean that the action was unreasonable or without foundation so as to entitle the physician to attorney's fees. In holding that the hospital's interpretation of the statute was correct, the court of appeal relied in part on various legislative committee reports issued in connection with the bill that enacted Bus. & Prof. Code § 809.9,each of which emphasized that the purpose of fee awards was to act as a sanction for frivolous or bad faith prosecution or defense of a peer review proceeding (27 Cal. App. 4th 1471, 1483-1484) .

In Southland Mechanical Constructors Corp. v. Nixen (1981) 119 Cal. App. 3d 417, 173 Cal. Rptr. 917 , the court of appeal affirmed a judgment dismissing plaintiff's complaint against defendant attorneys for legal malpractice on the ground, in part, that the action was barred by the statute of limitations, Code Civ. Proc. § 340.6(a), which relates to actions against attorneys "for a wrongful act or omission ... arising in the performance of professional services." In determining that the Legislature intended the phrase "wrongful act or omission" to encompass both the tort and breach of contract aspects of malpractice, the court followed the general rule that the legislative records may be looked at to determine legislative intention, and that it will be presumed that the Legislature adopted the proposed legislation with the intent and meaning expressed in committee reports (119 Cal. App. 3d 417, 427) . The court looked to several analyses, including the Legislative Counsel's Digest, the Bill Digest of the Assembly Committee on the Judiciary, the Assembly Office of Research's Digest for the third assembly reading, the Senate Committee on the Judiciary Analysis, the Senate Democratic Caucus Analysis, the Enrolled Bill Memorandum to the Governor, and the Enrolled Bill Report to the Governor's office (119 Cal. App. 3d 417, 428) .

IN CONSTRUING _____ [specify statute], THE COURT SHOULD GIVE SUBSTANTIAL WEIGHT TO THE REPORT OF _____ [specify commission or drafter of statute] BECAUSE IT PROPOSED THE STATUTE SUBSEQUENTLY ADOPTED BY THE LEGISLATURE.

Consideration of Reports of Commissions That Propose Statutes. Reports of commissions that have proposed statutes that are subsequently adopted are entitled to substantial weight in construing the statutes. This is particularly true when the statute proposed by the commission is adopted by the Legislature without any change whatsoever and when the commission's comment is brief, because in such a situation there is ordinarily strong reason to believe that the legislators' votes were based in large measure on the explanation of the commission proposing the bill (Owens v. Superior Court (1980) 28 Cal. 3d 238, 246, 168 Cal. Rptr. 466, 617 P.2d 1098).

The foregoing points and authorities may be submitted in support of a party's contention that a statute should be construed in a particular manner. The form sets out the rule of statutory interpretation that the report of a commission that proposed the statute is entitled to substantial weight in construing the statute. Such an argument might be made in any type of action or proceeding in which a question arises concerning how a statute should be construed. These points and authorities should be combined with the general points and authorities set forth in § 217.20, which relate to the construction of statutes to ascertain and effectuate the legislative intent.

The foregoing points and authorities may be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities relating to the procedural context in which the issue of statutory interpretation arises. The points and authorities set forth in this form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should also insert argument in the foregoing form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the point of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss the drafting of the statute by the commission and set out its report or the parts of its report on which he or she seeks to rely. If appropriate, counsel should point out that the statute was enacted as proposed without any change and that the commission's report on the proposed enactment was brief, because these factors may increase the probative value of the report in establishing the legislative intent.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Consideration of Reports of Commissions That Propose Statutes

In Owens v. Superior Court (1980) 28 Cal. 3d 238, 168 Cal. Rptr. 466, 617 P.2d 1098 , petitioner sought a writ of mandate or prohibition to compeldefendant court to dismiss the information against him pursuant to Penal Code § 1382 for failure to bring him to trial within 60 days of the filing of felony charges against him in superior court. The contested issue was whether or not the 60-day period was stayed by continuances requested by defendant. The Supreme Court noted that, on its face, the statute had no provision for suspending the running of the 60-day period and found that the legislative history substantiated the import of the language. The Court reviewed the confusion in the meaning of the statute that prevailed prior to its amendment in 1959, in which year the Judicial Council outlined the ambiguities that afflicted the section and proposed an amendment to the section that was adopted verbatim by the Legislature. The Judicial Council's recommendation stated, in part, that the amendment would clarify the law by establishing that dismissal under Penal Code § 1382 may be had even though defendant previously consented to a delay beyond the statutory period and by eliminating the possibility that delays attributable to a defendant that are wholly within the statutory period may prevent dismissal. Quoting Van Arsdale v. Hollinger (1968) 68 Cal. 2d 245, 249-250, 66 Cal. Rptr. 20, 437 P.2d 508 , the Court held that reports of commissions that have proposed statutes that are subsequently adopted are entitled to substantial weight in construing the statutes. This is particularly true when the statute proposed by the commission is adopted by the Legislature without any change whatsoever and when the commission's comment is brief, because in such a situation there is ordinarily strong reason to believe that the legislators' votes were based in large measure on the explanation of the commission proposing the bill. Thus, reasoning that the Judicial Council's explanation of its recommendation could leave little doubt that the Legislature also had the same intent, and that the effects desired were incompatible with a rule that the running of the 60-day period is tolled by delays requested by defendant, the Court ordered a peremptory writ of mandate to issue to compel dismissal of the information (28 Cal. 3d 238, 246) . It should be noted that Penal Code § 1382 has since been amended to provide certain exceptions to the 60-day requirement, including one applying when the defendant requests or consents to the setting of a trial date beyond the 60-day period [Penal Code § 1382(a)(2)].

[a] Consideration of Reports of Commissions That Propose Statutes

The Supreme Court in Brian W. v. Superior Court (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 618, 143 Cal. Rptr. 717, 574 P.2d 788 , denied a petition for a writ of mandate that sought to compel defendant court to exclude the press from a hearing to determine petitioner's fitness to be dealt with under the juvenile court law. In determining that the juvenile court law policy favoring confidentiality of proceedings did not require exclusion of the press, the Court relied on the comments of a special study commission on juvenile justice that had been created by the Governor. Welf. & Inst. Code § 676, relating to persons who may be admitted to juvenile hearings, was adopted verbatim by the Legislature from the draft statute proposed by the study commission. The Court held that explanatory comments by a law revision commission are persuasive evidence of the intent of the Legislature in subsequently enacting its recommendations into law (20 Cal. 3d 618, 622-623) .

In Hong v. Somerset Associates (1984) 161 Cal. App. 3d 111, 207 Cal. Rptr. 597 , and Guthman v. Moss (1984) 150 Cal. App. 3d 501, 198 Cal. Rptr. 54 , the 1976 report of the California Law Revision Commission was relied on to uphold the reasonableness of a liquidated damage clause in a commercial real estate transaction and to allow an uninitialled clause to be enforced by a defaulting buyer in a residential real estate transaction, respectively. Both cases involved Civ. Code § 1671 et seq. (Stats. 1977, ch. 198, § 5), which adopted without change the recommendations of the commission. Both stated that a report of Law Revision Commission proposing a statute that is subsequently adopted without change is entitled to substantial weight in determining legislative purpose and intent (161 Cal. App. 3d 111, 115 n.6 ; 150 Cal. App. 3d 501, 510 , respectively).

Consideration of Legislator's Statement Reflecting Legislature's Intent. An individual legislator's statement may be considered in construing a statute if the circumstances indicate that theletter reflects the Legislature's collective intent (*City of Long Beach v. For example, a legislator's statement that is a reiteration of the discussion and events that transpired in the Legislature when the statute was under consideration, or was printed pursuant to a motion to publish it as a letter of legislative intent, may be considered in construing a statute (*Sierra Club v. [a] Use of Form

The foregoing points and authorities may be submitted in support of a party's contention that a statute should be construed in a particular manner. The form sets out the rule of statutory interpretation that a legislator's statement that reiterates the discussion and events in the Legislature when the statute was under consideration or that was published as a letter of legislative intent may be considered in interpreting the statute. Such an argument might be made in any type of action or proceeding in which a question arises concerning how a statute should be construed. These points and authorities should be combined with the general points and authorities set forth in § 217.20, which relate to the construction of statutes to ascertain and effectuate the legislative intent.

The foregoing points and authorities may be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities relating to the procedural context in which the issue of statutory interpretation arises. The points and authorities set forth in this form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should also insert argument in the foregoing form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the point of law stated. Thus, counsel should point out the aspects of the legislator's statement that make it reflective of the intent of the Legislature as a whole rather than only of the individual legislator.

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 217.83 may be used to oppose the contention supported by the foregoing points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Consideration of Legislator's Statement Reflecting Legislature's Intent

In City of Long Beach v. Department of Indus. Relations (2004) 34 Cal. 4th 942, 22 Cal. Rptr. 3d 518, 102 P.3d 904 , the Supreme Court considered whether a January 1, 2001, amendment of California's prevailing wage law was retroactive. The amendment expanded the definition of "public works" to include the design and preconstruction phases of construction [Lab. Code § 1720(a)(1)]. In determining that the Legislature had not intended the amendment to have retroactive application, the Court relied in part on a letter from the amendment's author, Senator John Burton, seeking to respond to interested parties' "concerns" regarding its operation. The letter recited that the amendment was "intended only to operate prospectively and therefore will only apply to contracts for public works entered into on and after the effective date of the legislation which will be January 1, 2001." The Court remarked that letters from individual legislators are usually given little weight unless they reflect the Legislature's collective intent. In this case, the Court found it significant that the Burton letter was presented, prior to the bill's enactment, to the full Senate, which carried his motion to print it in the Senate Daily Journal. Under these circumstances, the letter carried more weight as indicative of probable legislative intent (34 Cal. 4th 942, 952) .

Sierra Club v. California Coastal Comm'n (2005) 35 Cal. 4th 839, 28 Cal. Rptr. 3d 316, 111 P.3d 294 , involved the construction of certain provisions of the California Coastal Act of 1976 (Pub. Res. Code § 30000 et seq.). In construing an ambiguous provision of the Act, the Supreme Court considered a letter from Senator Smith, the author of the legislation, to the Secretary of the Senate. The Court noted that although it generally does not consider the understanding of individual legislators in construing statutes, the letter from Senator Smith was relevant because it purported to reiterate statements made to the Legislature during consideration of the legislation and because it had been printed with the Senate's consent pursuant to Senator Smith's motion (35 Cal. 4th 839, 853 & n.8).

On appeal, the husband relied on a Senate resolution incorporating a letter written by the assemblyman who wrote the amendment. The letter expressed the author's view that the amendment was intended to operate retroactively and noted that he had so argued in obtaining its passage. The Supreme Court recognized that the letter was irrelevant to the extent that it merely reflected the author's personal views. The Court found, however, that the letter did more than reflect the author's views; it stated that he had argued those views in obtaining the bill's passage. The Court cited Rich v. State Board of Optometry (1965) 45 Cal. Rptr. 512 , in which an assemblyman's testimony was admitted as an indicator of legislative intent because the testimony was not an expression of individual opinion but a reiteration of the discussion and events that transpired in the Assembly committee hearing when the amendments were under consideration. Thus, the Court held that since the author's letter alluded to the argument he had presented in securing passage of the amendment as well as to his personal views, it could be considered because it shed light on the legislative debate (16 Cal. 3d 583, 589-590) . The Court also held that the letter was relevant because it was printed pursuant to another senator's motion to publish it as a letter of legislative intent (16 Cal. 3d 583, 590) .

The Court did note that the letter was not conclusive and that in the face of conflicting indicia of legislative intent, a motion to print a letter of legislative intent would command less respect than a formal resolution of legislative intent and that an individual legislator's recount of argument preceding passage of a bill probably merits less weight then extensive committee reports on the bill or a formal record of the legislative debates. Those problems were not presented by the case, however, because the author's letter was the only legislative history available on the statute, and the Court reversed (16 Cal. 3d 583, 590-591) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Consideration of Legislator's Statement Reflecting Legislature's Intent

In Billings v. California Coastal Com. (1980) 103 Cal. App. 3d 729, 163 Cal. Rptr. 288 , the court of appeal, in construing the California Coastal Act of 1976 (Pub. Res. Code § 30000 et seq.), relied on a letter the Speaker of the Assembly sent to all members of the Assembly prior to the final vote on the bill that contained the act. Citing In re Marriage of Bouquet (1976) 16 Cal. 3d 583, 589-590, 128 Cal. Rptr. 427, 546 P.2d 1371 (discussed under § 217.82[3][a]), the court held that it could consider the letter because it summarized the Legislature's discussion and events prior to final passage of the bill. The letter referred to many revisions, negotiations, and compromises that led to the final version and detailed the final 22 major revisions (103 Cal. App. 3d 729, 738) .

21-217 California Points & Authorities § 217.83

§ 217.83 Supporting Contention That Legislator's Statement of Intent of Statute Should Not Be Considered in Interpreting Statute

[1] FORM

THE STATEMENT OF _____ [name of legislator] SHOULD NOT BE CONSIDERED IN INTERPRETING _____ [specify statute], BECAUSE IT IS MERELY A STATEMENT OF HIS/HER INDIVIDUAL MOTIVES OR UNDERSTANDING.

Legislator's Statement of Intent Not to Be Considered. In interpreting a statute, courts will not rely on evidence of the individual views of proponents of the legislation (People v. Cruz (1996) 13 Cal. 4th 764, 780, n.9, 55 Cal. Rptr. 2d 117, 919 P.2d 731). Nor is there any exception to this principle simply because the legislator whose motives are proffered actually authored the bill in controversy, as there is no guarantee that those who supported the proposal shared the author's view of its compass (Williams v. Garcetti (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 561, 569, 20 Cal. Rptr. 2d 341, 853 P.2d 507 ; California Teachers Assn. v. San Diego Community College Dist. (1981) 28 Cal. 3d 692, 699-701, 170 Cal. Rptr. 817, 621 P.2d 856).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a party's contention that a statute should be construed in a particularmanner. The form sets out the rule of statutory interpretation that an individual legislator's statement of his or her personal opinion and understanding regarding the statute is not to be considered even if the legislator authored the statute. Such an argument might be made in any type of action or proceeding in which a question arises concerning how a statute should be construed. These points and authorities should be combined with the general points and authorities set forth in § 217.20, which relate to the construction of statutes to ascertain and effectuate the legislative intent. They may also be combined with the general points and authorities set forth in § 217.25 relating to the impropriety of construing a statute that is not ambiguous.

These points and authorities may be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities relating to the procedural context in which the issue of statutory interpretation arises. The points and authorities set forth in this form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should also insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the point of law stated. Thus, counsel should analyze the statement to show that it expresses only the legislator's personal opinion. Counsel should also show that the statement does not reiterate the legislative discussion and events leading to the adoption of amendments, and that it was not adopted by the Legislature as a letter of legislative intent [see In re Marriage of Bouquet (1976) 16 Cal. 3d 583, 590, 128 Cal. Rptr. 427, 546 P.2d 1371] .

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 217.82 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Legislator's Statement of Intent Not to Be Considered

See discussion of People v. Cruz (1996) 13 Cal. 4th 764, 55 Cal. Rptr. 2d 117, 919 P.2d 731 , in § 217.20[3][a].

In Williams v. Garcetti (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 561, 20 Cal. Rptr. 2d 341, 853 P.2d 507 , plaintiff taxpayers sought injunctive and declaratory relief to stop enforcement of an amendment to Penal Code § 272, which imposed on parents the duty to "exercise reasonable care, supervision, protection, and control over their minor child." Plaintiffs alleged that the statute as amended was unconstitutionally vague and overbroad and impinged on the right to privacy. The trial court granted summary judgment to defendants, and the court of appeal reversed, determining that the amended statute was unconstitutionally vague.

The Supreme Court reversed, with directions to affirm the judgment of the trial court. In the course of its analysis, the Court rejected an argument made by defendants that the Court should consider a declaration of a legislative assistant to the author of the amendment. Defendants sought to show with that declaration that the purpose of the amendment was only to clarify existing law. The Court stated that in construing a statute it would not consider the motives or understandings of an individual legislator, even if he or she authored the statute (5 Cal. 4th 561, 568-569) .

In California Teachers Assn. v. San Diego Community College Dist. (1981) 28 Cal. 3d 692, 170 Cal. Rptr. 817, 621 P.2d 856 , plaintiff sought reclassification and back pay for a certain category of defendant district's employees. The superior court granted a peremptory writ of mandate directing defendants to reclassify the employees but denied the writ as to back pay, and plaintiff and defendants appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed. On the issue of the amount of back pay, the Court addressed former Educ. Code § 13503.1 (now see Educ. Code § 45025), which provided for part-time employees' compensation to be fixed in accordance with the ratio between "time actually served" by the part-time employees and full-time employees. The Court held that the phrase "time actually served" clearly encompassed the employee's duties outside the classroom, and noted that the scanty legislative history of the statute appeared to support its plain meaning (28 Cal. 3d 692, 698) . Plaintiff relied on a statement made by the author of amendments to the statute to support an interpretation limited to time actually served teaching in the classroom. The Court held, however, quoting In re Marriage of Bouquet (1976) 16 Cal. 3d 583, 589-590, 128 Cal. Rptr. 427, 546 P.2d 1371 , that use of the statement would violate the settled principle of statutory construction that in construing a statute courts do not consider the motives or understandings of an individual legislator, even when the legislator was the author of the bill in question (28 Cal. 3d 692, 699-700) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Legislator's Statement of Intent Not to Be Considered

Dubins v. Regents of University of California (1994) 25 Cal. App. 4th 77, 30 Cal. Rptr. 2d 336 concerned the interpretation of the Fair Employment and Housing Act (Gov. Code § 12900 et seq.). The court of appeal reversed a trial court's order sustaining a demurrer without leave to amend. The appellate court reasoned that, while it is true that courts inquiring into legislative purpose give consideration to statements made by the sponsor of a bill, the rule that legislative intent may be inferred from a statement of the sponsor only applies when that statement itself is unambiguous. Isolated, ambiguous remarks by the sponsor about a bill are not sufficient to demonstrate legislative intent. Also, the principle that legislative intentmay be inferred from the statements of a sponsor of a bill only applies when that statement is consistent with the statutory language and other legislative history (25 Cal. App. 4th 77, 86-87) .

In Flood v. Wyeth Laboratories, Inc. (1986) 183 Cal. App. 3d 1272, 228 Cal. Rptr. 700 , the court of appeal was faced with the question of whether former Health & Safety Code § 429.36 (now see Health & Safety Code § 120455), providing that no person shall be liable for any injury caused by an act or omission in the administration of a vaccine or other immunizing agent to a minor, including the residual effects of the vaccine or immunizing agent, applied to vaccine manufacturers so as to immunize them from products liability, including strict liability in tort. In holding that it did not so apply, the court said that it did not consider the motives or understandings of individual legislators in construing a statute, nor did it carve an exception to this principle simply because the legislator whose motives are in question actually authored the bill in controversy, because there is no guarantee that those who supported the proposal shared the author's view of its limits (183 Cal. App. 3d 1272, 1279) .

The court of appeal in California Coastal Com. v. Quanta Investment Corp. (1980) 113 Cal. App. 3d 579, 170 Cal. Rptr. 263 , reversed the trial court's order denying plaintiff commission's application for a preliminary injunction to restrain defendant from converting apartments to stock cooperatives without obtaining permits from plaintiff. The court had to determine whether or not the conversion constituted a "development" under Pub. Res. Code § 30106 so as to be subject to the permit requirements of the California Coastal Act of 1976 (Pub. Res. Code § 30000 et seq.). While the appeal was pending, legislation was enacted to expressly include such conversions. The legislation included a grandfather clause specifying the scope of the legislation's application to past and pending conversions. The court considered a declaration by the author of the legislation regarding his intent in relation to the grandfather clause, but chose to disregard it. The declaration was of miniscule probative value because it failed to show at what point in the legislative process the author's views were made known to the committee considering the bill, which was substantially amended in the course of its passage. As a result, the court held that the declaration was not a reliable index of the collective legislative intent (113 Cal. App. 3d 579, 604-605) .

Failure to Enact Specific Provision. The Legislature's rejection of a specific provision contained in an act as originally introduced is most persuasive to the conclusion that the act should not be construed to include the omitted provision (Murphy v. Kenneth Cole Prods., Inc. (2007) 40 Cal. 4th 1094, 1106-1108, 56 Cal. Rptr. 3d 880, 155 P.3d 284 ; *Cooper v. Swoap (1974) 11 Cal. 3d 856, 865, 115 Cal. [a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of a party's contention that a statute should be construed in a particular manner. The form sets out the rule of statutory interpretation that a statute should not be construed to include a specific provision that was considered and rejected by the Legislature. Such an argument might be made in any type of action or proceeding in which a question arises concerning how a statute should be construed. This form should be combined with the general memorandum presented in § 217.20, which relates to the construction of statutes to ascertain and effectuate the legislative intent. This form may also be combined with a memorandum relating to the procedural context in which the issue of statutory interpretation arises.

The foregoing points and authorities may be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities relating to the procedural context in which the issue of statutory interpretation arises. The points and authorities set forth in this form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should also insert argument in the foregoing form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the point of law stated. Thus, counsel should trace the legislative history of the statute to show that the interpretation sought to be avoided was the subject of an express provision of the original bill or a proposed amendment to it that would have adopted that interpretation but which was rejected by the Legislature. Other than in the case of the Legislature rejecting provisions contained in bills or offered as amendments, the failure of the Legislature to pass a bill is of little value as evidence of legislative intent. Thus, the failure of the Legislature to enact one bill containingan express provision on a subject is not persuasive that another bill on the same subject, but not containing the provision, should not be construed to achieve the result that would have prevailed under the unpassed bill [see Agricultural Labor Relations Bd. v. Superior Court (1976) 16 Cal. 3d 392, 417-418, 128 Cal. Rptr. 183, 546 P.2d 687 ; *State Compensation Ins. Fund v. Workers' Comp. Appeals Bd. (1979) 88 Cal. App. 3d 43, 62-63, 152 Cal. [3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Failure to Enact Specific Provision

The factual and procedural background of Murphy v. Kenneth Cole Prods., Inc. (2007) 40 Cal. 4th 1094, 56 Cal. Rptr. 3d 880, 155 P.3d 284 , are discussed in § 217.63[3][a]. The major substantive issue before the Supreme Court in this case was whether an award under Labor Code § 226.7(b) (which requires that an employer pay "one additional hour of pay" per day to an employee who has been denied meal and rest periods) constitutes a wage or a penalty. Wage claims are subject to the three-year limitation of Code of Civil Procedure § 338(a) (governing "[a]n action upon a liability created by statute, other than a penalty or forfeiture"). But penalties are subject to the one-year limitation of Code Civ. Proc. 340(a) or (governing "[a]n action upon a statute for a penalty or forfeiture").

The Supreme Court concluded that the "additional hour of pay" under Labor Code § 226.7(b) constitutes a wage and is therefore subject to the three-year limitations period of Code of Civil Procedure § 338(a) (40 Cal. 4th 1094, 1102-1111) . In coming to this conclusion, the Court reviewed the statutory language and the legislative and administrative history. One factor that the Court found significant was that in enacting Section 226.7, the Legislature amended the original bill to eliminate a "penalty" that would have been collected by the Labor Commissioner in addition to a payment to the employee. The Court reasoned that the Legislature's "rejection of a specific provision contained in an act as originally introduced is 'most persuasive' that the act should not be interpreted to include what was left out" (40 Cal. 4th 1094, 1106-1108) .

Cooper v. Swoap (1974) 11 Cal. 3d 856, 115 Cal. Rptr. 1, 524 P.2d 97 , involved a class action challenging a regulation of the State Department of Social Welfare relating to aid to families with dependent children (AFDC). The regulation deemed housing shared by AFDC recipients with a recipient of an adult aid program, such as aid to the disabled, to constitute a "noncash economic benefit" and treated it as income warranting reduction of AFDC benefits. Plaintiffs appealed after summary judgment was granted in defendants' favor.

The Supreme Court reversed, holding that the regulation was incompatible with the governing statutory scheme, the Welfare Reform Act of 1971 [Stats. 1971, ch. 578]. The Court noted that a bill including a section expressly adopting the substance of the regulation was introduced and died in the 1971 session of the Legislature, and that the same section was subsequently offered as an amendment to the bill that ultimately became the Welfare Reform Act of 1971, but was rejected in committee, on the floor, and in final negotiations on the bill (11 Cal. 3d 856, 864 n.11). The Legislature's specific rejection of the substance of the challenged regulation provided the clearest indication that the measure was not consistent with legislative intent (11 Cal. 3d 856, 865) .

The court of appeal in California Coastal Com. v. Quanta Investment Corp. (1980) 113 Cal. App. 3d 579, 170 Cal. Rptr. 263 , reversed the trial court's order denying plaintiff commission's application for a preliminary injunction to restrain defendant from converting apartments to stock cooperatives without obtaining permits from plaintiff. The court had to determine whether or not the conversion constituted a "development" under Pub. Res. Code § 30106 so as to be subject to the permit requirements of the California Coastal Act of 1976 (Pub. Res. Code § 30000 et seq.). While the appeal was pending, legislation was enacted to expressly include such conversions. As originally introduced, the bill provided that it was declaratory of existing law, but in the course of amendment this provision was deleted and a grandfather clause specifying the scope of the legislation's application to past and pending conversions was added. In holding that the legislation did not apply to the case before it, the court noted that the deletion of the flat statement that the bill was declaratory of existing law, which had been included in the original proposed bill and which survived the first amendment but which did not appear in the final version of the bill that was enacted, strongly signified that there was no legislative concurrence in that policy statement. The court cited Madrid v. Justice Court (1975) 52 Cal. App. 3d 819, 825, 125 Cal. Rptr. 348 , for the principle that the Legislature's rejection of a specific provision contained in an act as originally introduced is most persuasive to the conclusion that the act should not be construed to include the omitted provision (113 Cal. App. 3d 579, 601-602) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Failure to Enact Specific Provision

In Ventura v. City of San Jose (1984) 151 Cal. App. 3d 1076, 199 Cal. Rptr. 216 , the court of appeal reversed the lower court's decision upholding local ordinances banning the sale of fireworks. The court found that in enacting Health & Safety Code § 12541, by deleting manufacture and sale from areas in which local governments may regulate, the Legislature intended that the state preempt those areas. When the Legislature has rejected a specific provision which was part of an act when originally introduced, the law as enacted should not be construed to contain that provision (151 Cal. App. 3d 1076, 1080) .

§ 217.85 Supporting Contention That Amendment Substantially Changing Previously Construed Statute Shows Legislative Intent to Change Law

[The following may be included in a memorandum supporting or opposing a motion, or in a trial or appellate brief. It should be combined with the general form set out in § 217.20.]

THE COURT SHOULD CONSTRUE _____ [specify statute] TO _____ [describe desired interpretation of statute] BECAUSE IT IS PRESUMED THAT THE LEGISLATURE WAS AWARE OF THE PREVIOUS CONTRARY JUDICIAL INTERPRETATION OF _____ [specify statute] AND INTENDED TO ALTER THE LAW WHEN IT AMENDED THE STATUTE TO MAKE SUBSTANTIAL CHANGES IN THE STATUTORY LANGUAGE.

Intent to Alter Law Inferred From Substantial Changes in Statutory Language. When the Legislature amends a statute that has been the subject of judicial construction, it is presumed that the Legislature was fully cognizant of the construction, and when substantial changes are made in the statutory language it is usually inferred that the lawmakers intended to alter the law in those particulars affected by the changes (Goodman v. Lozano (2010) 47 Cal. 4th 1327, 1336-1337, 104 Cal. Rptr. 3d 219, 223 P.3d 77 ; *Palos Verdes Faculty Assn. v. Palos Verdes Peninsula Unified Sch. Dist. (1978) 21 Cal. 3d 650, 659, 147 Cal. [Set forth additional points and cite authorities relating to other rules of statutory interpretation that aid in ascertaining legislative intent behind statute and support interpretation desired (see §§ 217.21 -217.24, 217.40 -217.46, 217.60 -217.63, 217.80 -217.84, 217.86, 217.88).]

The foregoing form may be submitted in support of a party's contention that a statute should be construed in a particular manner. The form sets out the rule of statutory interpretation that when the Legislature amends a statute that has been judicially construed and makes substantial changes in the statutory language, a legislative intent to alter the law is inferred. Such an argument might be made in any type of action or proceeding in which a question arises concerning how a statute should be construed. This form should be combined with the general form set forth in § 217.20, which relates to the construction of statutes to ascertain and effectuate the legislative intent.

The foregoing form may be combined with forms relating to the procedural context in which the issue of statutory interpretation arises. This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should also insert argument in the foregoing form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the point of law stated. Thus, counsel should contrast the prior judicial construction of the statute with the subsequent changes made by the Legislature in the statutory language to demonstrate that the manner in which the language was changed reveals an intent to alter the law.

[b] Opposing Memorandum

In an appropriate case, the form set out in § 217.88 may be used to oppose the contention supported by the foregoing form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Intent to Alter Law Inferred From Substantial Changes in Statutory Language

In Goodman v. Lozano (2010) 47 Cal. 4th 1327, 104 Cal. Rptr. 3d 219, 223 P.3d 77 , the California Supreme Court considered whether a statutory amendment was intended to overrule a judicial construction of the statute's pre-amendment language (the statute was Code Civ. Proc. § 1032, as repealed and added in 1986). The Court noted that it was not dispositive that the Legislature did not explicitly address the particular judicial decision. Even in the absence of the specific rejection of a judicial decision, the circumstances may indicate that the amendment was intended to reject the judicial construction of the statute. Rather, the Legislature's repeal of a prior statute, together with its enactment of a new statute on the same subject with significant differences in language, strongly suggests the Legislature intended to change the law (47 Cal. 4th 1327, 1336-1337) .

The facts and procedural background of Palos Verdes Faculty Assn. v. Palos Verdes Peninsula Unified Sch. Dist. (1978) 21 Cal. 3d 650, 147 Cal. Rptr. 359, 580 P.2d 1155 , are discussed in § 217.20[3][a]. The Supreme Court affirmed the trial court's judgment issuing a writ of mandate, construing former Educ. Code § 13506 (now Educ. Code § 45028) as requiring plaintiff to be placed on the salary schedule as he requested. The Court applied the principle of statutory construction that when the Legislature, in amending a statute, makes substantial changes in statutory language that had earlier been the subject of judicial construction, it is usually inferred that the lawmakers intended to alter the law in the particulars affected by the changes. Application of this rule indicated that the Legislature in former Educ. Code § 13506 had intended to require that salary classifications of teachers proceed wholly on a uniform basis of years of training and years of experience and to change a previous interpretation of that section that had allowed "reasonable" classifications (21 Cal. 3d 650, 659-661) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Intent to Alter Law Inferred From Substantial Changes in Statutory Language

In Gray v. Firthe (1987) 194 Cal. App. 3d 202, 239 Cal. Rptr. 389 , the court of appeal, construing Code Civ. Proc. § 583.310, said that an intention to change the law or the meaning of a statute will generally be inferred or presumed from a material change in the statutory language, and that such an intent is inferred when the existing law is amended by deletion of an express provision of the previous statute and the substitution of an alternative provision (194 Cal. App.

In County of Los Angeles v. State of California (1987) 43 Cal. 3d 46, 233 Cal. Rptr. 38, 729 P.2d 202 , plaintiff local governments contended that they were entitled to reimbursement from the State of California forincreases in workers' compensation benefits mandated by the State of California. At issue was the interpretation of a statute requiring state reimbursement when the state requires a local government to provide an "increased level of service." The applicable law did not define "increased level of service," but under a repealed statute that had governed reimbursement prior to extensive changes in reimbursement law in 1975, "increased level of service" included any requirement mandated by state law that made necessary expanded or additional costs to a local agency. Plaintiffs argued that this definition of "increased level of service" continued to apply. The court rejected plaintiffs' argument, noting that one cannot reasonably conclude that the statutory definition of a phrase of art continues after it has been specifically repealed. A change must have been intended; otherwise deletion of the preexisting definition makes no sense (County of Los Angeles v. State of California (1987) 43 Cal. 3d 46, 54-55, 233 Cal. Rptr. 38, 729 P.2d 202). On examining the legislative intent behind the 1975 legislation that repealed the defining statute and established new reimbursement law, the court concluded that the prior definition of "increased level of service" was no longer valid (County of Los Angeles v. State of California (1987) 43 Cal. 3d 46, 55-56, 233 Cal. Rptr. 38, 729 P.2d 202).

§ 217.86 Supporting Contention That Legislature Adopted Judicial Interpretation of Statute by Reenacting Previously Construed Portions Without Change

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief. It should be combined with the general points and authorities set out in § 217.20.]

THE COURT SHOULD FOLLOW THE PREVIOUS JUDICIAL INTERPRETATION OF _____ [specify statute] BECAUSE THE LEGISLATURE IS PRESUMED TO HAVE BEEN AWARE OF AND TO HAVE ACQUIESCED IN THE PREVIOUS JUDICIAL INTERPRETATION OF _____ [specify statute] BY REENACTING IT WITHOUT ALTERING PORTIONS OF IT THAT HAD BEEN CONSTRUED.

Adoption of Judicial Interpretation by Reenactment Without Change. When the Legislature amends a statute without altering portions of the provision that have previously been judicially construed, the Legislature is presumed to have been aware of and to have acquiesced in the previous judicial construction. Accordingly, reenacted portions of the statute are given the same construction they received before the amendment (Marina Point, Ltd. v. Wolfson (1982) 30 Cal. 3d 721, 734, 180 Cal. Rptr. 496, 640 P.2d 115 , cert. denied, 459 U.S. 858, 103 S. Ct. 129, 74 L. Ed. 2d 111). Moreover, the Legislature's failure to adopt a proposed amendment to an existing statute is of little weight in determining the relevant intent of the earlier Legislature that enacted that law (Lolley v. Campbell (2002) 28 Cal. 4th 367, 378-379, 121 Cal. Rptr. 2d 571, 48 P.3d 1128).

[Set forth additional points and authorities relating to other rules of statutory interpretation that aid in ascertaining legislative intent behind statute and support interpretation desired (see §§ 217.21 -217.24, 217.40 -217.46, 217.60 -217.63, 217.80 -217.85, 217.88).]

The foregoing points and authorities may be submitted in support of a party's contention that a statute should be construed in a particular manner. The form sets out the rule of statutory interpretation that when the Legislature reenacts statutory language that has been judicially construed, it is presumed to have acquiesced in the previous judicial construction. Such an argument might be made in any type of action or proceeding in which a question arises concerning how a statute should be construed. These points and authorities should be combined with the general points and authorities set forth in § 217.20, which relate to the construction of statutes to ascertain and effectuate the legislative intent.

The foregoing points and authorities may be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities relating to the procedural context in which the issue of statutory interpretation arises. The points and authorities set forth in this form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should also insert argument in the foregoing form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the point of law stated. Thus, counsel should specify the statutory language and the case law interpreting it on which he or she is relying and show that the statute of which the language is part has been amended but that the Legislature left the language in question intact. Each of the California codes includes a section to the effect that its provisions are to be construed as restatements and continuations, and not as new enactments, insofar as they are substantially the same as existing statutory provisions, and counsel may wish to cite the section to that effect pertaining to the code that contains the statute to be construed [see, e.g., Civ. Code § 5; Code Civ. Proc. § 5; Educ. Code § 3].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Adoption of Judicial Interpretation by Reenactment Without Change

In Lolley v. Campbell (2002) 28 Cal. 4th 367, 121 Cal. Rptr. 2d 571, 48 P.3d 1128 , the Supreme Court held that a superior court may assess attorney's fees against an employer who unsuccessfully appeals an administrative order to pay wages under Lab. Code § 98.2(c), even if the employee could not afford counsel and was represented on appeal without charge by the Labor Commissioner. Arguing that the employee had not "incurred" fees within the meaning of the statute, the employer pointed to recent legislation that amended the statute but did not change the relevant portion of it. The employer contended that one proposed change in the statute, which was deleted from the final version of the bill, would have provided expressly for an award of fees to the commissioner for representing an employee. The employer maintained that the failed amendment was intended to change pre-existing law and thus was evidence of what that law was. The Supreme Court rejected this argument, holding that a later Legislature's failure to adopt a proposed amendment to an existing law is of little weight in determining the relevant intent of the earlier Legislature that enacted that law. The Court stated that "no clear inference may be drawn from the failed amendment about the Legislature's understanding of [Lab. Code § 98.2(c)] at the time that it was enacted ... . [T]he statute presently in effect [is binding], not ... a legislative statement of intent that failed to become law" (Lolley v. Campbell (2002) 28 Cal. 4th 367, 378-379, 121 Cal. Rptr. 2d 571, 48 P.3d 1128).

Defendant tenants in Marina Point, Ltd. v. Wolfson (1982) 30 Cal. 3d 721, 180 Cal. Rptr. 496, 640 P.2d 115 , cert. denied, 459 U.S. 858, 103 S. Ct. 129, 74 L. Ed. 2d 111 , resisted plaintiff landlord's action for unlawful detainer on the ground that their eviction, based on their having a child, was in violation of the Unruh Civil Rights Act (Civ. Code § 51). The municipal court rejected defendants' contention, holding that Civ. Code § 51 did not protect families with children from discrimination but was limited to protected classes specifically designated by statute or judicial determination. Defendants appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed, holding that Civ. Code § 51 does extend its protection to families with children. The Court held that the municipal court's interpretation of the statute, restricting its coverage to designated classes, directly conflicted with In re Cox (1970) 3 Cal. 3d 205, 216, 90 Cal. Rptr. 24, 474 P.2d 992 , which had held that the identification of particular bases of discrimination in the statute is illustrative rather than restrictive, and that the protection of the act extends to prohibit all arbitrary discrimination by business establishments (Marina Point, Ltd. v. Wolfson (1982) 30 Cal. 3d 721, 732, 180 Cal. Rptr. 496, 640 P.2d 115 , cert. denied, 459 U.S. 858 (1982)) . Subsequent to Cox, the Legislature amended Civ. Code § 51 to add sex to the enumerated bases of discrimination proscribed by the section. The Court applied the rule of statutory interpretation set out in the foregoing form. The Court found the rule particularly applicable because they did not need to simply presume that the Legislature knew of the Cox interpretation, as Cox was referred to in the legislative history. If the Legislature had disagreed with Cox, it would presumably have altered the preexisting language to so indicate, but instead the Legislature had reenacted the previously construed language verbatim and simply added an explicit reference to sex discrimination to highlight the statute's application in that area and thereby endorsed the Cox interpretation (Marina Point, Ltd. v. Wolfson (1982) 30 Cal. 3d 721, 734-735, 180 Cal. Rptr. 496, 640 P.2d 115 , cert. denied, 459 U.S. 858 (1982)) .

Some two decades later, the Legislature reaffirmed the Supreme Court's holding in Marina Pt., Ltd. v. Wolfson. In adding marital status and sexual orientation to the bases of discrimination expressly proscribed by the Unruh Civil Rights Act [Civ. Code § 51(b), (c), (e)(5),(6)], the Legislature expressly stated that (1) the addition of prohibited bases of discrimination was not intended to affect the Supreme Court's holding in Marina Pt., Ltd. v. Wolfson, and (2) the bases of discrimination enumerated in the Act are illustrative rather than restrictive [Stats. 2005, ch. 420, § 2].

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Adoption of Judicial Interpretation by Reenactment Without Change

After the court of appeal in In re Marriage of Skelley (1976) 18 Cal. 3d 365, 134 Cal. Rptr. 197, 556 P.2d 297 , granted respondent's motion to dismiss petitioner's appeal from an order modifying temporary spousal support, the Supreme Court granted hearing and denied the motion. In holding that orders modifying temporary support are appealable under Code Civ. Proc. § 904.1, the Court reviewed the judicial interpretation of former Code Civ. Proc. § 963, under which temporary support orders had been held appealable. Noting that Code Civ. Proc. § 904.1 utilized language virtually identical to former Code Civ. Proc. § 963, the Court stated that when a statute that has been construed by the courts is reenacted in the same or substantially the same terms, the Legislature is presumed to be familiar with that construction and to have adopted it as part of the law (In re Marriage of Skelley (1976) 18 Cal. 3d 365, 369, 134 Cal. Rptr. 197, 556 P.2d 297).

In Orange County Employees Assn., Inc. v. County of Orange (1993) 14 Cal. App. 4th 575, 17 Cal. Rptr. 2d 695 , the court of appeal applied the rule set forth in the foregoing form to statutory interpretations in AttorneyGeneral's opinions. The issue in the case was whether Penal Code §§ 830.33, 830.35, and 830.36 allowed a county or its municipal courts to preclude airport law enforcement officers, deputy coroners, and court service officers from carrying concealed firearms while off duty. In concluding that the statutes did not allow the county or its municipal courts to do so, the court relied in large part on the fact that the Attorney General had interpreted language identical to that in Penal Code §§ 830.33, 830.35, and 830.36 prior to the enactment of those statutes. The Attorney General had interpreted the language to apply only to on-duty officers. The court held that when Penal Code §§ 830.33, 830.35, and 830.36 were passed, "the Legislature was presumably aware of the Attorney General's opinions" (Orange County Employees Assn., Inc. v. County of Orange (1993) 14 Cal. App. 4th 575, 581-582, 17 Cal. Rptr. 2d 695).

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief. It should be combined with the general points and authorities set out in § 217.20.]

IN CONSTRUING _____ [specify statute or constitutional amendment adopted by voters], THE COURT SHOULD CONSIDER THE OFFICIAL BALLOT PAMPHLET BECAUSE IT PROVIDES INDICIA OF THE INTENT OF THE VOTERS.

Consideration of Arguments Contained in Voters' Pamphlets. In interpreting ambiguous language in a statute or constitutional amendment enacted by the voters, it is appropriate to consider indicia of voters' intent other than the language of the provision itself. Such indicia include the analysis and arguments contained in the official voters' pamphlet (Legislature v. Eu (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 492, 504-505, 286 Cal. Rptr. 283, 816 P.2d 1309 ; *White v. [a] Use of Form

The foregoing points and authorities may be submitted in support of a party's contention that a statute or constitutional amendment adopted by the voters should be construed in a particular manner. The form sets out the rule of construction that a court may consider the analysis and arguments presented in a voters' pamphlet in determining the intent of the voters. These indicia of voters' intent may be used in any proceeding when the language of a statute or constitutional amendment, adopted through the initiative or referendum process, is ambiguous in itself. These points and authorities should be combined with the general points and authorities set forth in § 217.20, which relate to the construction of statutes to ascertain and effectuate legislative intent. The points and authorities in this form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should also insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should set out the voters' pamphlet or the parts of it on which he or she seeks to rely. Courts may take judicial notice of materials contained in voters' pamphlets [In re Quinn (1973) 35 Cal. App. 3d 473, 484 n.4, 110 Cal. Rptr. 881] .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Consideration of Arguments Contained in Voters' Pamphlets

In Legislature v. Eu (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 492, 286 Cal. Rptr. 283, 816 P.2d 1309 , the Supreme Court was asked to decide a constitutional attack on Proposition 140, The Political Reform Act of 1990. After the voters adopted the act in the November 1990 election, petitioners sought a writ of mandate in the Supreme Court, which exercised its original jurisdiction because of the importance to the public of the issues presented. Part of the attack challenged the provisions regarding term limits. Specifically, the issue was whether Proposition 140 imposed a lifetime ban on officers who had served the specified number of terms or merely limited the number of consecutive terms an officer could serve. In holding that a lifetime ban was intended, the Court considered arguments contained in the voters' pamphlet both for and against the provision. The Court was especially influenced by the arguments against the provision, which repeatedly stressed the lifetime nature of the ban (54 Cal. 3d 492, 504-505) .

In White v. Davis (1976) 13 Cal. 3d 757, 120 Cal. Rptr. 94, 533 P.2d 222 , petitioners brought a taxpayers' suit against the Los Angeles police chief, seeking a permanent injunction barring the police from spendingpublic funds to conduct covert intelligence gathering activities at the University of California at Los Angeles. The superior court sustained defendant's demurrer without leave to amend, entered judgment in defendant's favor, and dismissed the suit. Petitioners appealed.

In addition to asserting that the police's conduct infringed their constitutional freedoms of speech and association, the petitioners claimed that the conduct abridged their right to privacy, which had been added to the California Constitution by amendments enacted in 1972 [Cal. Const. art. I, § 1]. After reviewing the voters' pamphlet to determine the principal objectives of the newly adopted amendment, the Supreme Court concluded that the police activity epitomized the kind of governmental conduct the amendment condemned. The Court reversed the trial court's ruling sustaining defendant's demurrer.

§ 217.88 Opposing Contention That Amendment Substantially Changing Previously Construed Statute Shows Legislative Intent to Change Law--Mere Change in Phraseology

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief. It should be combined with the general points and authorities set out in § 217.20.]

THE COURT SHOULD FOLLOW THE PREVIOUS JUDICIAL INTERPRETATION OF _____ [specify statute] BECAUSE THE MERE CHANGE IN ITS PHRASEOLOGY INCIDENT TO ITS REVISION DID NOT CHANGE ITS MEANING, SINCE THE INTENT TO CHANGE ITS MEANING DOES NOT CLEARLY APPEAR.

Mere Change in Phraseology. A mere change in phraseology, incident to a revision of the Constitution or a statute, does not result in a change of meaning unless the intent to make such a change clearly appears (*Mosk v. [a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a party's contention that a statute should be construed in a particular manner. The form sets out the rule of statutory interpretation that a mere change in phraseology, incident to a revision of a statute, does not result in a change of meaning unless the intent to make such a change clearly appears. Such an argument might be made in any type of action or proceeding in which a question arises concerning how a statute should be construed. These points and authorities should be combined with the general points and authorities set forth in § 217.20, which relate to the construction of statutes to ascertain and effectuate the legislative intent.

These points and authorities may be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities relating to the procedural context in which the issue of statutory interpretation arises. The points and authorities set forth in this form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should also insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the point of law stated. Thus, counsel should show that the change in the statute was a mere change in phraseology incident to a major revision of the statute or was intended to clarify the law rather than change it.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities set out in § 217.85.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Mere Change in Phraseology

In Mosk v. Superior Court (1979) 25 Cal. 3d 474, 159 Cal. Rptr. 494, 601 P.2d 1030 , petitioner sought a writ of mandate to quash a subpoena ordering him to appear as a witness at a public hearing before the Commission on Judicial Performance on the ground that a public investigation was unconstitutional. In sustaining this contention, the Supreme Court noted that former Cal. Const, art. VI, § 10b, had expressly provided that all proceedings before the commission "shall be confidential," and that, as part of an overall revision of the California Constitution, this language had been replaced with new § 18(e) (now see Cal. Const, art. VI, § 18(f)), which provides that "[t]he Judicial Council shall make rules implementing this section and providing for confidentiality of proceedings." The Court recognized the general rule that a substantial change in the language of a statute or constitutional provision by an amendment indicates an intention to change its meaning. However, citing prior California appellate cases, theCourt held that a mere change in phraseology, incident to a revision of the Constitution or a statute, does not result in a change of meaning unless the intent to make such a change clearly appears (25 Cal. 3d 474, 493) . The Court proceeded to reject the Commission's contention that under the new language it had discretion to determine when proceedings are to be confidential, finding no intent to change the constitutional requirement of confidentiality (25 Cal. 3d 474, 499) .

In DeCastro West Chodorow & Burns, Inc. v. Superior Court (1996) 47 Cal. App. 4th 410 , 54 Rptr. 2d 792, defendants in a legal malpractice action sought a writ of mandate to compel the superior court to vacate its order denying summary adjudication on the issue of plaintiffs' entitlement to so-called "lost opportunity" damages. The issue presented on appeal was whether Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(f)(1) permitted summary adjudication on one of two or more parts of a plaintiff's compensatory damages claim in the wake of a 1993 amendment. The court of appeal affirmed denial of the motion, finding that Code Civ. Proc. § 437c does not permit summary adjudication of part of a cause of action. Because defendants' motion for summary adjudication would only have disposed of one portion of plaintiffs' compensatory damages claim, rather than the entire claim, the appellate court found it was properly denied.

In 1993 Code Civ. Proc. § 437c, subdivision f, was amended, inter alia, to permit summary adjudication of "one or more claims for damages." Defendants argued that the meaning of the statute was changed by the amendment to permit disposal of part of a plaintiff's claim for damages, and thus was a departure from the earlier rule. However, the appellate court pointed out that a mere change in the phraseology of a statute, incident to a revision, does not result in a change of meaning unless the intent to make such a change clearly appears (47 Cal. App. 4th 410, 418) . Not finding any evidence of a change in meaning, the court held that the 1993 amendment did not alter Code of Civ. Proc. § 437c, but was merely an attempt to clarify the meaning of the prior enactment (47 Cal. App. 4th 410, 422-423) .

[a] Mere Change in Phraseology

The facts and procedural background of Jones v. Tracy School Dist. (1980) 27 Cal. 3d 99, 165 Cal. Rptr. 100, 611 P.2d 441 , are discussed in § 217.111[3][b]. In determining that the award of attorneys' fees is mandatory rather than discretionary under Lab. Code § 1197.5, the Supreme Court reviewed the legislative history of the section and found that the bill that amended the statute to add the attorneys' fees provision, as introduced in the Legislature, contained two sentences, the second of which unequivocally mandated an award of attorneys' fees. The Court noted that in the course of passage, the bill was amended and the two sentences condensed into one, and held that even though the Assembly altered the phraseology of the original bill, it demonstrated no intent to change the original bill's mandatory award of attorneys' fees (27 Cal. 3d 99, 110-111) .

A. Exceptions to Rule That Reenactment of Statute Without Changing Portions Previously Interpreted by Judiciary Adopts Judicial Interpretation. The doctrine concerning the implied adoption of a judicial construction of a statute by reenactment of the statute is not without exceptions; the persuasion that lies behind the doctrine is merely one factor in the total effort to give fair meaning to statutory language (I. J. Weinrot & Son, Inc. v. Jackson (1985) 40 Cal. 3d 327, 336, 220 Cal. Rptr. 103, 708 P.2d 682).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

The foregoing points and authorities may be submitted in support of a party's contention that a statute should be construed in a manner opposed to the way in which it was interpreted by a judicial decision prior to the statute's reenactment. The form sets out the rule of statutory construction that the intent of the Legislature is paramount and the fact that a statute was given a certain construction by the judiciary prior to its reenactment without change in the relevant portions does not require a finding that the Legislature intended to adopt the judicial construction. Such an argument might be made in any type of action or proceeding in which a question arises concerning how a statute should be construed. Of course, a party seeking to overcome prior judicial interpretation of a statute is faced with a formidable burden under the rule of stare decisis, although to the extent the interpretation is dicta, the burden of it is lessened [see I. J. Weinrot & Son, Inc. v. Jackson (1985) 40 Cal. 3d 327, 339, 220 Cal. Rptr. 103, 708 P.2d 682] . These points and authorities should be combined with the general points and authorities set forth in § 217.20, which relate to the construction of statutes in general.

The foregoing points and authorities may be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities relating to the procedural context in which the issue of statutory interpretation arises. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, in arguing that the reenactment of a statute did not incorporate a prior judicial interpretation because the Legislature's purpose was totally unrelated to the topic of the judicial decision and other factors indicate that the Legislature intended a different interpretation, the facts supporting such a position should be specifically noted.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Exceptions to Rule That Reenactment of Statute Without Changing Portions Previously Interpreted by Judiciary Adopts Judicial Interpretation

Plaintiff's employee in I. J. Weinrot & Son, Inc. v. Jackson (1985) 40 Cal. 3d 327, 220 Cal. Rptr. 103, 708 P.2d 682 , was injured by the negligence of defendant, and plaintiff sought damages under Civ. Code § 49 for injury to an employee. The trial court sustained a demurrer to the cause of action.

A divided Supreme Court affirmed. It rejected plaintiff's contention that Civ. Code § 49 provided a cause of action for an employer seeking recovery for lost profits and expenses resulting from the negligent injury to its employee even though the court of appeal in 1933 interpreted this statute as providing such a cause of action [see Darmour Prod. Corp. v. H.M. Baruch Corp. (1933) 135 Cal. App 351, 352-353, 27 P.2d 664] , and the Legislature subsequently, in 1939, reenacted the relevant provisions of Civ. Code § 49 without change. The Supreme Court noted that the presumption that a reenactment of a statute adopts a prior judicial interpretation is merely one factor in the total effort to give fair meaning to statutory language. The Court held that the prior judicial interpretation of Civ. Code § 49 was incorrect and that the subsequent reenactment of that section did not incorporate that prior interpretation since "[e]ven a cursory review of the 1939 amendments indicates that the Legislature's purpose in amending section 49 had nothing to do with broadening the master's right of action for injuries to a servant" (40 Cal. 3d 327, 335-336) .

§ 217.90 Opposing Contention That Legislative Silence After Court Has Construed Statute Gives Rise to Presumption of Legislative Awareness of and Acquiescence in Construction

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief. It should be combined with the general points and authorities set out in § 217.20.]

THE COURT SHOULD NOT FOLLOW THE PREVIOUS JUDICIAL INTERPRETATION OF _____ [specify statute] BECAUSE THE LEGISLATURE IS NOT PRESUMED TO HAVE BEEN AWARE OF AND TO HAVE ACQUIESCED IN THE INTERPRETATION BY VIRTUE OF ITS SILENCE ON _____ [specify statute].

A. Legislative Silence After Court Has Construed Statute as Not Indicative of Approval. The Legislature's failure to act on a statute after a court has construed the statute may indicate many things other than approval of the construction of the statute (Cianci v. Superior Court (1985) 40 Cal. 3d 903, 924, 221 Cal. Rptr. 575, 710 P.2d 375).

B. Legislative Silence After Court Has Construed Statute as Giving Rise to Arguable Inference of Approval, at Most. Legislative silence after a court has construed a statute gives rise, at most, to an arguable inference of acquiescence or passive approval, but something more than mere silence should be required before that acquiescence is elevated into a species of implied legislation (Cianci v. Superior Court (1985) 40 Cal. 3d 903, 923, 221 Cal. Rptr. 575, 710 P.2d 375).

[Optional] C. Legislative Silence After Judicial Construction as Not Indicative of Approval Despite Subsequent Legislative Action on Other Parts of Same Act. When a court has construed statutory language in an act, and the Legislature subsequently amends that act, but takes no action on the previously construed part, the Legislature is not presumed to have been aware of and to have acquiesced in the judicial construction (*Moradi-Shalal v. [a] Use of Form

The foregoing points and authorities may be submitted in support of a party's contention that a statute should be construed in a particular manner. The form sets out the rule of statutory interpretation that legislative silence after a court has construed a statute gives rise, at most, to an arguable inference of acquiescence or passive approval, but that something more than mere silence is required before that acquiescence is elevated into a species of implied legislation. This argument might be made in any type of action or proceeding in which a question arises concerning how a statute should be construed. These points and authorities should be combined with the general points and authorities set forth in § 217.20, which relate to the construction of statutes to ascertain and effectuate the legislative intent.

The foregoing points and authorities may be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities relating to the procedural context in which the issue of statutory interpretation arises. For example, the points and authorities set forth in this form may be submitted in support of a petition for a peremptory writ of mandate seeking to overrule a trial court's order sustaining a demurrer to a complaint [see Cianci v. Superior Court (1985) 40 Cal. 3d 903, 908, 221 Cal. Rptr. 575, 710 P.2d 375] . They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

For example, counsel should insert argument showing that the Legislature's failure to act on a statute after a court has construed the statute indicates something other than approval of the construction of the statute.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Legislative Silence After Court Has Construed Statute as Not Indicative of Approval

In Cianci v. Superior Court (1985) 40 Cal. 3d 903, 221 Cal. Rptr. 575, 710 P.2d 375 , plaintiff physicians sued defendant physicians and a corporation, seeking dissolution of a limited partnership, an accounting, damages, and the imposition of a constructive trust. The action arose out of a dispute among the parties over the establishment, funding, and operation of a hyperbaric medicine department at a hospital. Petitioner answered and cross complained, alleging, among other things, conspiracy to violate the Cartwright Act (Bus. & Prof. Code § 16700 et seq.). Real parties demurred to this cause of action on the ground that the Cartwright Act does not apply to the medical profession, and the trial court sustained the demurrer on that ground. Petitioner then sought review in the Supreme Court, by way of prerogative writ, of the trial court's ruling.

The Supreme Court issued a peremptory writ of mandate, holding that the Cartwright Act applied to the medical profession and that the demurrer should have been sustained (40 Cal. 3d 903, 925) . In so holding, the Court overruled Willis v. Santa Ana etc. Hospital Assn. (1962) 58 Cal. 2d 806, 26 Cal. Rptr. 640, 376 P.2d 568 , which held that the professions were not within the Cartwright Act's coverage (40 Cal. 3d 903, 921, 925) . The Willis holding was based, in part, on that Court's reasoning that Bus. & Prof. Code § 16720 does not expressly include the professions (40 Cal. 3d 903, 921) . In overruling Willis, the Court addressed what it termed real parties' "implicit contention" that the doctrine of stare decisis prevented the Court from reconsideration of the issue decided in Willis. The Court found that contention to be without merit (40 Cal. 3d 903, 923) . The Court concluded that not only was it altogether proper for it to reexamine Willis, but also that it would be improper not to do so. Since Willis, the Legislature had not acted on the precise matter addressed in both that case and the instant case. Relying on County of Los Angeles v. Workers' Comp. Appeals Bd. (1981) 30 Cal. 3d 391, 404, 179 Cal. Rptr. 214, 637 P.2d 681 , the Court held that the Legislature's failure to act mayhave indicated many things other than approval of Willis' construction of Bus. & Prof. Code § 16720 (40 Cal. 3d 903, 924) .

[b] Legislative Silence After Court Has Construed Statute as Giving Rise to Arguable Inference of Approval, at Most

The facts and procedural background of Cianci v. Superior Court (1985) 40 Cal. 3d 903, 221 Cal. Rptr. 575, 710 P.2d 375 , are discussed under § 217.90[3][a]. In Cianci, the Supreme Court held that the Cartwright Act applied to the medical profession. In so holding, the Court addressed the fact that since Bus. & Prof. Code § 16720 had been previously construed in Willis v. Santa Ana etc. Hospital Assn. (1962) 58 Cal. 2d 806, 26 Cal. Rptr. 640, 376 P.2d 568 , to exclude the medical profession from coverage under the Cartwright Act, the Legislature had not acted on Bus. & Prof. Code § 16720. Relying on People v. Daniels (1969) 71 Cal. 2d 1119, 1127-1128, 80 Cal. Rptr. 897, 459 P.2d 225 , the Court held that legislative silence after a court has construed a statute gives rise, at most, to an arguable inference of acquiescence or passive approval. But something more than mere silence should be required before that acquiescence is elevated into a species of implied legislation (40 Cal. 3d 903, 923) . Finding nothing more than mere silence on the Legislature's part, the Court overruled Willis and its construction of Bus. & Prof. Code § 16720 (40 Cal. 3d 903, 923-925) .

[c] Legislative Silence After Judicial Construction as Not Indicative of Approval Despite Subsequent Legislative Action on Other Parts of Same Act

In Moradi-Shalal v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Companies (1988) 46 Cal. 3d 287, 250 Cal. Rptr. 116, 758 P.2d 58 , a statutory bad-faith action by a third-party claimant against the insurer of the tortfeasor, the Supreme Court defined the procedural prerequisite for a statutory third-party action under Ins. Code § 790.03(h) (unfair claims-settlement practices of insurers), but, more importantly, prospectively overturned a prior Supreme Court case, Royal Globe Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1979) 23 Cal. 3d 880, 885-888, 153 Cal. Rptr. 842, 592 P.2d 329 . The decision in Royal Globe had established private standing under that statute. The Court noted that the Legislature had modified Ins. Code § 790.03 (prohibited acts of insurers) without changing the claims-settlement subdivision, or addressing the Royal Globe standing issue. The Court held that although the Legislature may have passively acquiesced in Royal Globe, it never expressly or impliedly adopted its holding; consequently, the Supreme Court was free to reexamine it (46 Cal. 3d 287, 300-301) .

The facts and procedural background of Cianci v. Superior Court (1985) 40 Cal. 3d 903, 221 Cal. Rptr. 575, 710 P.2d 375 , are discussed in § 217.90[3][a]. In Cianci, the Supreme Court held that the Cartwright Act applied to the medical profession. In so holding, the Court addressed real parties' contention that because the Legislature acted twice on the Cartwright Act subsequent to the decision in Willis v. Santa Ana etc. Hospital Assn. (1962) 58 Cal. 2d 806, 809, 26 Cal. Rptr. 640, 376 P.2d 568 (Cartwright Act not applicable to professions and construing Bus. & Prof. Code § 16720), without altering the provision that Willis had construed, the Legislature must be presumed to have been aware of and to have acquiesced in the Willis holding. The Court found this argument unpersuasive. Legislative silence after a court has construed a statute gives rise, at most, to an arguable inference of acquiescence or passive approval. But something more than mere silence should be required before that acquiescence is elevated into a species of implied legislation (40 Cal. 3d 903, 923) . The Court noted that even though the Legislature enacted Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 16721 and 16721.5 (prohibiting exclusionary discrimination in business transactions, letters of credit, and contracts for goods and services) subsequent to Willis, the Legislature did not act on Bus. & Prof. Code § 16720. According to the Court, this inaction implied no approval of the Willis decision. The Court noted that Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 16721 and 16721.5 appeared, in fact, to have arisen in response to the Arab boycott against Israel, as a means to prevent California firms' compliance with the boycott (40 Cal. 3d 903, 923 n.7).

[The following may be included in a memorandum supporting or opposing a motion, or in a trial or appellate brief. It should be combined with the general form set out in § 217.20.]

IN CONSTRUING _____ [specify statute], THE COURT NEED NOT TREAT THE REPORT OF _____ [specify commission or drafter of statute] AS EVIDENCE OF THE LEGISLATURE'S INTENT IN ADOPTING THE STATUTE.

Commission Report Does Not Necessarily Reflect Legislative Intent. If a law revision commission's comment on a given statutory provision is just one item in a lengthy report, there may be alegitimate question whether the Legislature was aware of and endorsed that comment in enacting the statute (Conservatorship of Wendland (2001) 26 Cal. 4th 519, 542, 110 Cal. Rptr. 2d 412, 28 P.3d 151).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a party's contention that a statute should be construed in a particular manner. The form reflects the principle that a comment in a law revision commission's report need not be deemed to manifest legislative intent if it is doubtful whether the Legislature was aware of and endorsed the comment in enacting the statute (Conservatorship of Wendland (2001) 26 Cal. 4th 519, 542, 110 Cal. Rptr. 2d 412, 28 P.3d 151). Such an argument might be made in any type of action or proceeding in which a question arises concerning how a statute should be construed. These points and authorities may be combined with the general points and authorities set forth in § 217.20, which relate to the construction of statutes to ascertain and effectuate the legislative intent.

These points and authorities may be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities relating to the procedural context in which the issue of statutory interpretation arises. The points and authorities set forth in this form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should also insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the principle of statutory interpretation stated. Thus, counsel should show that the law revision report was lengthy and the particular comment at issue was a minor component of that report.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities set out in § 217.81.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Commission Report Does Not Necessarily Reflect Legislative Intent

In Conservatorship of Wendland (2001) 26 Cal. 4th 519, 110 Cal. Rptr. 2d 412, 28 P.3d 151 , the issue was whether a conservator may withhold artificial nutrition and hydration from a conscious conservatee who is not terminally ill, comatose, or in a persistent vegetative state, and who has not given formal instructions for health care or appointed an agent or surrogate for health-care decisions. Prob. Code § 2355(a) required that, in making such health-care decisions, the conservator follow the conservatee's wishes, if known. In this case, the trial court ordered the conservator not to withhold nutrition and hydration, holding that the evidence did not meet a "clear and convincing" standard necessary to establish that the conservatee wished to die. The court of appeal endorsed the "clear and convincing" standard of proof but reversed on other grounds. The Supreme Court reversed the court of appeal's decision and reinstated the trial court's judgment. The Supreme Court agreed with the lower courts' application of the "clear and convincing" standard of proof, at least as to decisions to withdraw life-sustaining treatment from conscious conservatees who have left no formal health-care directions.

However, the Court rejected an argument that Prob. Code § 2355(a) should be interpreted to require only a preponderance of the evidence to establish the conservatee's wishes. This argument was based on the Law Revision Commission Report to the 1999 Health Care Decisions Law, which amended Section 2355. That Report expressly stated that "the standard is by preponderance of the evidence. Proof is not required by clear and convincing evidence." The Supreme Court did not find a strong inference that the Legislature approved that comment, however; the Court noted that "one may legitimately question whether the Legislature can fairly be assumed to have read and endorsed every statement in the commission's 280-page report on the Health Care Decisions Law." To minimize the possibility of Section 2355's unconstitutional application, the Court construed the statute as requiring clear and convincing evidence of a conscious conservatee's wish to refuse life-sustaining treatment when the conservator relies on that wish to justify withholding life-sustaining treatment (26 Cal. 4th 519, 542) .

[The following may be included in a memorandum supporting or opposing a motion, or in a trial or appellate brief. It should be combined with the general memorandum set out in § 217.20.]

IN CONSTRUING _____ [specify statute], THE COURT SHOULD FOLLOW THE INTERPRETATION OF THE _____ [specify administrative agency], BECAUSE, AS THE AGENCY _____ [CHARGED WITH ITS ENFORCEMENT or THAT PUT THE STATUTORY MACHINERY INTO EFFECT or THAT PUT THE STATUTORY MACHINERY INTO EFFECT AND IS CHARGED WITH ITS ENFORCEMENT], ITS INTERPRETATION IS ENTITLED TO GREAT WEIGHT AND SHOULD BE FOLLOWED UNLESS CLEARLY ERRONEOUS.

A. Great Weight of Administrative Interpretation. When an administrative agency is charged with enforcing a particular statute, its interpretation of the statute will be accorded great respect by the courts and will be followed if not clearly erroneous (Judson Steel Corp. v. Workers' Comp. Appeals Bd. (1978) 22 Cal. 3d 658, 668, 150 Cal. Rptr. 250, 586 P.2d 564 ; see Federal Express Corp. v. Holowecki (2008) 552 U.S. 389, 128 S. Ct. 1147, 1154-1158, 170 L. Ed. 2d 10 ; Barnhart v. Walton (2002) 535 U.S. 212, 218-222, 122 S. Ct. 1265, 152 L. Ed. 2d 330 ; Jevne v. Superior Court (2005) 35 Cal. 4th 935, 958, 28 Cal. Rptr. 3d 685, 111 P.3d 954). Consistent administrative construction of a statute over many years, particularly when it originated with those charged with putting the statutory machinery into effect, is entitled to great weight (Gay Law Students Assn. v. Pacific Tel. & Tel. Co. (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 458, 491, 156 Cal. Rptr. 14, 595 P.2d 592).

[Optional] B. Reenactment of Statute After Administrative Construction. Reenactment of a statutory provision after it has been interpreted by an administrative agency is persuasive of a legislative intent to adopt the administrative construction (Western Oil & Gas Assn. v. Air Resources Board (1984) 37 Cal. 3d 502, 520, 208 Cal. Rptr. 850, 691 P.2d 606 ; Division of Industrial Safety v. Municipal Court (1976) 61 Cal. App. 3d 696, 701, 132 Cal. Rptr. 573).

[Set forth additional points and cite authorities relating to other rules of statutory interpretation that aid in ascertaining legislative intent behind statute and support interpretation desired (see §§ 217.21 -217.24, 217.40 -217.46, 217.60 -217.63, 217.80 -217.86, 217.88, 217.130, 217.131, 217.133).]

This form may be submitted in support of a party's contention that a statute should be construed in a particular manner. The form sets out the rule of statutory interpretation that courts should give great weight to the interpretation given to a statute by an administrative agency charged with its implementation or enforcement, and should follow that interpretation unless it is clearly erroneous. Such an argument might be made in any type of action or proceeding in which a question arises concerning how a statute should be construed. This form should be combined with the general form set forth in § 217.20, which relate to the construction of statutes to ascertain and effectuate the legislative intent.

This form may be combined with a memorandum relating to the procedural context in which the issue of statutory interpretation arises. This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should also insert argument in the foregoing form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of the law stated. Thus, counsel should show that the administrative agency charged with the implementation or enforcement of the law has interpreted it in the same manner in which counsel wishes the court to construe it. If the administrative interpretation is of long standing and its reversal would render numerous transactions questionable, those factors should be pointed out [see Castaneda v. Holcomb (1981) 114 Cal. App. 3d 939, 945-946, 170 Cal. Rptr. 875] .

[b] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the form set out in § 217.111 may be used to oppose the contentions supported by the foregoing form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Great Weight of Administrative Interpretation

Petitioner in Judson Steel Corp. v. Workers' Comp. Appeals Bd. (1978) 22 Cal. 3d 658, 150 Cal. Rptr. 250, 586 P.2d 564 , terminated the seniority rights and then the employment of an employee who was absent from his job for over 12 months because of an industrial injury. A workers' compensation judge ruled that petitioner had violated Lab. Code § 132a, which prohibits discrimination against workers who are injured in the course and scope of their employment, and increased the employee's compensation by one-half. Defendant board denied reconsideration, and petitioner sought judicial review.

In the Supreme Court petitioner contended that Lab. Code § 132a had to be strictly construed because it imposed a penalty. The Court, however, citing Bodinson Mfg. Co. v. California E. Com. (1941) 17 Cal. 2d 321, 325-326, 109 P.2d 935 , stated that when an administrative agency is charged with enforcing a particular statute, its interpretation of the statute will be accorded great respect by the courts and will be followed if not clearly erroneous. Noting that defendant board had interpreted Lab. Code § 132a as expressing a policy opposing all discrimination against workers based solely on their having been injured in the course of employment, the Court affirmed and upheld defendant board's conclusion that an employer may not discharge an employee for absence from the job because of an injury sustained in the course and scope of employment (Judson Steel Corp. v. Workers' Comp. Appeals Bd. (1978) 22 Cal. 3d658, 668-669, 150 Cal. Rptr. 250, 586 P.2d 564).

Federal Express Corp. v. Holowecki (2008) 552 U.S. 389, 128 S. Ct. 1147, 170 L. Ed. 2d 10 , arose under the Age Discrimination in Employment Act (ADEA) (see 29 U.S.C. § 621 et seq.). The case presented the question of what constitutes an employee's "charge" of unlawful discrimination filed with the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC) so as to commence the statutory 60-day waiting period, which must expire before the employee can sue the employer (see 29 U.S.C. § 626(d)).

The Supreme Court noted when a federal agency with statutory authority to issue regulations invokes that authority to issue regulations interpreting ambiguous statutory terms, the courts defer to the agency's reasonable interpretations (see Chevron U.S.A. Inc. v. Natural Res. Def. Council, Inc. (1984) 467 U.S. 837, 843-845, 104 S. Ct. 2778, 81 L. Ed. 2d 694). Further, the agency is entitled to further deference when it adopts a reasonable interpretation of a regulation it has put in force; in such a case, a court will accept the agency's position unless it is plainly erroneous or inconsistent with the regulation (see Auer v. Robbins (1997) 519 U.S. 452, 461, 117 S. Ct. 905, 137 L. Ed. 2d 79). In this case, however, the EEOC's formally adopted regulations did not define "charge," so this level of deference was not applicable (128 S. Ct. 1147, 1154-1155) .

Even in the absence of regulations, an agency's interpretation of a statute is entitled to a "measure of respect" if it has been applied consistently by the agency and reflects a body of experience and informed judgment to which courts and litigants may properly resort for guidance (see Skidmore v. Swift & Co. (1944) 323 U.S. 134, 140, 65 S. Ct. 161, 89 L. Ed. 124). The Court in this case applied that level of deference to the EEOC's interpretation of "charge" as embodied in the agency's compliance manual and internal directives, which had been binding on EEOC staff for at least five years. Finding the EEOC's interpretation reasonable, the Supreme Court adopted it in this case, concluding that a filing that alleges unlawful discrimination and specifies the name of the charged party is to be deemed a "charge" if it can be reasonably construed as a request for the EEOC to take remedial action to protect the employee's rights or otherwise to settle a dispute between the employer and employee (128 S. Ct. 1147, 1156-1158) .

Barnhart v. Walton (2002) 535 U.S. 212, 122 S. Ct. 1265, 152 L. Ed. 2d 330 , involved a dispute over the application of Social Security Act provisions authorizing the payment of disability insurance benefits and Supplemental Security Income to certain persons with disabilities. Specifically, the dispute was over the proper interpretation of the statutory definition of "disability." The relevant statutes defined "disability" as an "[i]nability to engage in any substantial gainful activity by reason of any medically determinable physical or mental impairment which can be expected to result in death or which has lasted or can be expected to last for a continuous period of not less than 12 months" (see 42 U.S.C. §§ 423(d)(1)(A), 1382c(a)(3)(A)). Acting pursuant to statutory rulemaking authority (see 42 U.S.C. §§ 405(a), 1383(d)(1)), the Social Security Administration (the Agency) issued regulations interpreting the relevant statutory provisions. The Agency read the term "inability" as including a 12-month requirement: in its view, the "inability" (to engage in any substantial gainful activity) must last, or must be expected to last, for at least 12 months. Second, the Agency read the term "expected to last" as applicable only if the "inability" has not yet lasted 12 months. In the case of a later Agency determination--in which the "inability" did not last 12 months--the Agency would automatically assume that the claimant failed to meet the duration requirement. It would not look back to decide hypothetically whether, despite the claimant's actual return to work before 12 months expired, the "inability" nonetheless might have been expected to last that long (see 20 C.F.R. §§ 1520(b), 1592(d)(2)).

The United States Supreme Court upheld the Social Security Administration's interpretation. The Court noted that it is settled that if a statute speaks clearly to the precise question of interpretation at issue, the courts must give effect to the unambiguously expressed intent of Congress. However, if the statute is silent or ambiguous with respect to the specific issue, the courts must sustain the administrative agency's interpretation of the statute if it is based on a permissible (i.e., reasonable) construction of the statute (Barnhart v. Walton (2002) 535 U.S. 212, 218-222, 122 S. Ct. 1265, 152 L. Ed. 2d 330).

A major issue in Jevne v. Superior Court (2005) 35 Cal. 4th 935, 28 Cal. Rptr. 3d 685, 111 P.3d 954 , was whether the federal Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. § 78a et seq.) preempts California's Ethics Standards for Neutral

Arbitrators in Contractual Arbitration (Cal Rules of Ct., Ethics Stds. Neutral Arbitrators [formerly Cal. Rules of Ct., Appen., Div. VI]; see Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.85(a)) in arbitrations conducted under the National Association of Securities Dealers (NASD) Code of Arbitration Procedure, which has been approved by the federal Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC). In deciding the preemption issue, it was necessary for the California Supreme Court to determine whether the detailed disclosure requirements of the California Standards conflict with the NASD standards by significantly impeding or impairing accomplishment of the goals of the NASD Code, and thereby the goals of the Securities Exchange Act. In deciding that question, the Court relied heavily on the SEC's opinion that the California Standards' disclosure requirements will adversely affect NASD arbitrations in three ways: by increasing administrative costs associated with the more detailed disclosure requirements, by reducing the number of available arbitrators (because many will be unwilling to comply with the California requirements), and by reducing the nationwide uniformity and consistency of NASD arbitrations by imposing special disclosure requirements applicable in only one state. Based on the views of the SEC, the Court concluded that the Securities Exchange Act preempts the California Standards' rules on arbitrator disclosure (35 Cal. 4th 935, 956-958) . In explaining its reliance on the SEC's opinion, the Supreme Court remarked that "[i]n deciding whether a state law conflicts with a federal law by hindering the complete accomplishment of the federal law's objective, we give considerable weight to the views of the federal agency charged with administering the federal law" (35 Cal. 4th 935, 958) .

Gay Law Students Assn. v. Pacific Tel. & Tel. Co. (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 458, 156 Cal. Rptr. 14, 595 P.2d 592 , involved, in part, a class action for declaratory relief and mandate to compel defendant California Fair Employment Practice Commission toaccept jurisdiction over complaints of employment discrimination based on homosexuality. The superior court denied plaintiffs' request for relief and entered judgment for defendants.

The Supreme Court affirmed as to defendant commission, sustaining defendant's contention that the California Fair Employment Practice Act (former Lab. Code § 1410 et seq.; now see Gov. Code § 12900 et seq.) did not prohibit discrimination against homosexuals. Plaintiffs argued that discrimination on the ground of sexual orientation constituted discrimination on the basis of sex, which was prohibited by former Lab. Code § 1420(a) (now see Gov. Code § 12940(a)). In rejecting plaintiffs' argument, the Court noted that defendant commission, the agency charged with administering the act, had, since the prohibition on discrimination based on sex was added to the statute, consistently refused to accept jurisdiction over complaints charging discrimination based on sexual orientation. Quoting Di Giorgio Fruit Corp. v. Department of Employment (1961) 56 Cal. 2d 54, 61-62, 13 Cal. Rptr. 663, 362 P.2d 487 , the Court stated that such consistent administrative construction of a statute over many years, particularly when it originated with those charged with putting the statutory machinery into effect, is entitled to great weight (Gay Law Students Assn. v. Pacific Tel. & Tel. Co. (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 458, 491, 156 Cal. Rptr. 14, 595 P.2d 592).

[b] Reenactment of Statute After Administrative Construction

Western Oil & Gas Assn. v. Air Resources Board (1984) 37 Cal. 3d 502, 208 Cal. Rptr. 850, 691 P.2d 606 , involved the validity of standards of ambient air quality adopted by the Air Resources Board, pursuant to the authority granted the Board by Health & Safety Code § 39606(b). Complaining that the standards established by Board regulations were invalid because, in part, the Board refused to consider the economic effects of the regulations, plaintiff oil companies and trade associations sought writs of mandate commanding the Board to rescind its resolutions adopting the standards. The trial court decided in favor of plaintiffs and ordered issuance of the requested writs of mandate. Contending that Health & Safety Code § 39606(b) does not require the Board, in adopting standards of ambient air quality, to consider the economic consequences of compliance with the standards, the Board appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed the trial court's judgment. Acknowledging that the statute is ambiguous and that reasonable minds may differ as to whether the Legislature intended economic consequences to be taken into account at the state or local levels, the Court held that the Legislature did not intend to impose on the Board the obligation to consider the economic consequences of the standards it proposes to adopt prior to their promulgation (Western Oil & Gas Assn. v. Air Resources Board (1984) 37 Cal. 3d 502, 524, 208 Cal. Rptr. 850, 691 P.2d 606). In so holding, the Court noted that the Board's long-established administrative interpretation of Health & Safety Code § 39606(b) supported the Board's contention. As a contemporaneous construction of a statute by an administrative agency charged with its enforcement, the Board's interpretation was entitled to great weight. Legislative reenactment of the critical statutory language, essentially without change, constituted at least some evidence that the Board's construction was acceptable to the Legislature (Western Oil & Gas Assn. v. Air Resources Board (1984) 37 Cal. 3d 502, 520, 209 Cal. Rptr. 850, 691 P.2d 606).

Division of Industrial Safety v. Municipal Court (1976) 61 Cal. App. 3d 696, 132 Cal. Rptr. 573 , involved a dispute over plaintiff's jurisdiction to enforce safety conditions in workplaces. Plaintiff obtained a warrant from defendant court to investigate noise at a railroad yard belonging to real party in interest, but that court subsequently granted the motion of real party in interest to quash the warrant. Plaintiff petitioned the superior court for a writ of mandate, and the superior court issued a peremptory writ directing the municipal court to vacate its order quashing the warrant. Real party in interest appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. The court reviewed the jurisdictional and definitional provisions of the Labor Code relating to plaintiff's jurisdiction and found that jurisdiction over employees of steam railroads was governed by Lab. Code § 6800 (prior to its 1978 amendment), which extended only to shop employees. Employee safety generally was covered by other sections of the Labor Code prior to the 1973 enactment of the California Occupational Safety and Health Act, which replaced the relevant general sections in nearly identical terms but did not amend Lab. Code § 6800 et seq. dealing with railroads. The court determined that the specific provisions of Lab. Code § 6800 granting limited jurisdiction over railroad workers had to be held to control over the general provisions of the pre-1973 Labor Code sections dealing with plaintiff's jurisdiction in general, and noted that this was the construction given the statutory scheme by plaintiff's previous administrative action. In holding that the 1973 act did not change this result, the court held that the reenactment of the pre-1973 jurisdictional provisions of the Labor Code in the California Occupational Safety and Health Act of 1973 in light of the administrative interpretation of the prior sections by plaintiff was persuasive of a legislative intent to adopt the administrative construction (Division of Industrial Safety v. Municipal Court (1976) 61 Cal. App. 3d 696, 701, 132 Cal. Rptr. 573).

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Great Weight of Administrative Interpretation

Water Quality Assn. v. Santa Barbara County (1996) 44 Cal. App. 4th 732, 52 Cal. Rptr. 2d 184 was a suit by a trade organization against the city and county of Santa Barbara challenging more stringent water softening requirements imposed by those entities than under state law. The central question in the case was whether the local ordinances were preempted by state law. In making its determination, the court looked to the interpretation of relevant state law by the Water Resources Control Board. The court stated the general rule that the contemporaneous construction of a statute by an agency charged with enforcement is entitled to great weight by the courts; however, in this instance, the court declined to follow the agency's reading of the legislative history and held that the ordinances were preempted (Water Quality Assn. v. Santa Barbara County (1996) 44 Cal. App. 4th 732, 744, 52 Cal. Rptr. 2d 184).

County of Alameda v. State Bd. of Control (1993) 14 Cal. App. 4th 1096, 18 Cal. Rptr. 2d 487 , involved the construction of former Gov. Code § 13960(d), a provisionof the Victims of Violent Crime Act (now see Gov. Code § 13950 et seq.). The act established a Restitution Fund, out of which certain payments are made to victims of crime. The issue was whether an indigent victim of crime who was treated at a county hospital, or a victim eligible for assistance through the County Medical Services Program, suffered a "pecuniary loss" within the meaning of Gov. Code § 13960. The State Board of Control, charged with enforcing and interpreting the act, took the position that, because the county provided medical care as a form of public assistance, the indigent crime victim did not suffer pecuniary loss within the meaning of Gov. Code § 13960. The court of appeal accepted the Board's interpretation, stating that the Board's interpretation of statutes it is charged with enforcing and interpreting is entitled to great weight and should be followed unless clearly erroneous (County of Alameda v. State Bd. of Control (1993) 14 Cal. App. 4th 1096, 1106, 18 Cal. Rptr. 2d 487).

In Anderson v. San Francisco Rent Stabilization & Arbitration Bd. (1987) 192 Cal. App. 3d 1336, 237 Cal. Rptr. 894 , the trial court granted a peremptory writ of mandate overturning the decision, which had been followed since 1974, of the San Francisco Rent Stabilization and Arbitration Board that residential landlords could, under San Francisco's Residential Rehabilitation Loan Program, pass through to tenants under a prescribed rent formula increased "monthly loan payments" secured by the property at the time the loan is made, including payments unrelated to rehabilitation of the property. The superior court judgment directed that only rehabilitation-related payments be included. In reversing the judgment granting the writ, the court of appeal said that the courts construe ordinances by the same rules they apply to statutes. Additionally, although the interpretation of a statute is ultimately the responsibility of the courts, the contemporaneous construction of a statute by an administrative agency charged with its administration and interpretation, while not necessarily controlling, is entitled to great weight and should be respected by the courts unless it is clearly erroneous or unauthorized. This is particularly true when there has been continued public reliance on and acquiescence in such interpretations (Anderson v. San Francisco Rent Stabilization & Arbitration Bd. (1987) 192 Cal. App. 3d 1336, 1343, 237 Cal. Rptr. 894).

The court of appeal in Engs Motor Truck Co. v. State Bd. of Equalization (1987) 189 Cal. App. 3d 1458, 235 Cal. Rptr. 117 , affirmed the trial court's and the State Board of Equalization's interpretation of Rev. & Tax. Code § 6396, which provides an exemption from sales and use tax for property "shipped to a point outside this state." The court agreed with the interpretation given by 18 Cal. Code Reg. § 1620 requiring actual delivery outside California in order for the exemption to apply (Engs Motor Truck Co. v. State Bd. of Equalization (1987) 199 Cal. App. 3d 1458, 1471, 235 Cal. Rptr. 117). The court said that in interpreting a statute and testing the validity of a regulation, the administrative agency's construction is entitled to great weight and should be upheld if it is reasonable (Engs Motor Truck Co. v. State Bd. of Equalization (1987) 199 Cal. App. 3d 1458, 1466, 235 Cal. Rptr. 117).

Castaneda v. Holcomb (1981) 114 Cal. App. 3d 939, 170 Cal. Rptr. 875 , involved an action for a declaratory judgment to construe a provision of the charter of the City of San Bernardino, which required resolutions to pass the Common Council by four votes and to be approved by the mayor or, if the mayor did not approve, to pass the Common Council by five votes. The issue was whether a resolution passed by five votes automatically became effective notwithstanding the mayor's disapproval or would have to be reconsidered and passed by the Common Council by five votes subsequent to the mayor's disapproval. The evidence showed that the former interpretation had been followed by city officials for at least 25 years, and the court of appeal inferred that the same interpretation had prevailed since 1905. It was likely that numerous transactions had been entered into in reliance on the long-standing interpretation of the charter; invalidation of the interpretation would require major readjustments and extensive litigation. For these and other reasons, consistent administrative construction of a statute over many years, particularly when it originated with those charged with putting the statutory machinery into effect, is entitled to great weight, and courts will generally not depart from such a construction unless it is clearly erroneous. Finding that the city's interpretation was not clearly erroneous, the court followed it (Castaneda v. Holcomb (1981) 114 Cal. App. 3d 939, 945-946, 170 Cal. Rptr. 875).

PART II. FORMS
E. ADMINISTRATIVE INTERPRETATION

21-217 California Points & Authorities § 217.111

§ 217.111 Opposing Contention That Administrative Agency's Interpretation of Statute Entitled to Great Weight

[The following may be included in a memorandum supporting or opposing a motion, or in a trial or appellate brief. It should be combined with the general memorandum set out in § 217.20.]

IN CONSTRUING _____ [specify statute], THE COURT SHOULD NOT FOLLOW THE INTERPRETATION OF THE _____ [specify administrative agency], BECAUSE THE ULTIMATE INTERPRETATION OF A STATUTE IS AN EXERCISE OF JUDICIAL POWER, AND IT IS THE COURT'S RESPONSIBILITY TO DECLARE THE STATUTE'S TRUE MEANING EVEN IF THIS REQUIRES REJECTION OF AN EARLIER ERRONEOUS ADMINISTRATIVE CONSTRUCTION.

A. Overthrowing Administrative Interpretation. Despite the great weight to which an administrative interpretation is entitled, the ultimate interpretation of a statute is an exercise of judicial power, and it is the responsibility of the courts to declare the statute's true meaning even if this requires rejection of an earlier erroneous administrative interpretation (Murphy v. Kenneth Cole Prods., Inc. (2007) 40 Cal. 4th 1094, 1105 n.7, 56 Cal. Rptr. 3d 880, 155 P.3d 284 ; Wheeler v. Board of Administration (1979) 25 Cal. 3d 600, 605, 159 Cal. Rptr. 336, 601 P.2d 568 ; Wilcox v. Enstad (1981) 122 Cal. App. 3d 641, 652-653, 176 Cal. Rptr. 560).

[Optional] B. Internal Agency Memorandum Not Controlling. Deference to an administrative interpretation of a statute is not appropriate when the interpretation is contained in an internal memorandum rather than in an administrative regulation that might be subject to the notice and hearing requirements of proper administrative procedure. This is particularly true when the memorandum was composed andcirculated after the agency has become a party or amicus curiae in the case (Jones v. Tracy School Dist. (1980) 27 Cal. 3d 99, 107, 165 Cal. Rptr. 100, 611 P.2d 441 ; Campbell v. Arco Marine, Inc. (1996) 42 Cal. App. 4th 1850, 1860, 50 Cal. Rptr. 2d 626).

[Optional] C. Agency May Not Enlarge Legislative Enactment. Fundamentally, an administrative agency and its employees may not enlarge the scope of a legislative enactment through internal agency memoranda or other methods of statutory interpretation (Department of Transportation v. Superior Court (1996) 47 Cal. App. 4th 852, 858).

[Optional] D. No Deference Owed to Agency Interpretation Embodied in Void Regulations. The general rule of deference to an agency interpretation of a statute does not apply if the interpretation was not adopted in accordance with applicable legal requirements (Church v. Jamison (2006) 143 Cal. App. 4th 1568, 1577-1583).

[Set forth additional points and cite authorities relating to other rules of statutory interpretation that aid in ascertaining legislative intent behind statute and support interpretation desired (see §§ 217.21 -217.24, 217.40 -217.46, 217.60 -217.63, 217.80 -217.86, 217.88, 217.130, 217.131, 217.133).]

This form may be submitted in opposition to a party's contention that an administrative agency's interpretation of a statute should be followed by the court. The form sets out the rule of statutory interpretation that despite the great weight to which the administrative interpretation of a statute is entitled, the ultimate interpretation of a statute is an exercise of judicial power, and it is the responsibility of the courts to declare the statute's true meaning even if it requires rejection of an earlier erroneous administrative interpretation. The appropriate paragraphs of this form should be combined with the general form set forth in § 217.20, which relate to the construction of statutes to ascertain and effectuate the legislative intent.

The appropriate paragraphs of this form may be combined with a memorandum relating to the procedural context in which the issue of statutory interpretation arises. This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should also insert argument in the foregoing form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should formulate an argument based on other rules of statutory construction showing that the administrative agency's interpretation was erroneous.

In an appropriate case, this form may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the form set out in § 217.110.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Overthrowing Administrative Interpretation

The factual and procedural background of Murphy v. Kenneth Cole Prods., Inc. (2007) 40 Cal. 4th 1094, 56 Cal. Rptr. 3d 880, 155 P.3d 284 , are discussed in § 217.63[3][a]. The major substantive issue before the Supreme Court in this case was whether an award under Labor Code § 226.7(b) (which requires that an employer pay "one additional hour of pay" per day to an employee who has been denied meal and rest periods) constitutes a wage or a penalty. Wage claims are subject to the three-year limitation of Code of Civil Procedure § 338(a) (governing "[a]n action upon a liability created by statute, other than a penalty or forfeiture"). But penalties are subject to the one-year limitation of Code Civ. Proc. 340(a) or (governing "[a]n action upon a statute for a penalty or forfeiture").

The Supreme Court concluded that the "additional hour of pay" under Labor Code § 226.7(b) constitutes a wage and is therefore subject to the three-year limitations period of Code of Civil Procedure § 338(a) (40 Cal. 4th 1094, 1102-1111) . In coming to this conclusion, the Court reviewed the statutory language and the legislative and administrative history. The Court observed that the Department of Labor Standards Enforcement (DLSE) construction had made inconsistent interpretations of the statute, and for that reason the DLSE's interpretations were not entitled to significant deference. In any event, the Court pointed out that whether or not it is owed deference, an administrative interpretation of a given statute is not binding on the courts. Ultimately, it is for the judiciary to ascertain the correct interpretation of statutes (40 Cal. 4th 1094, 1105 n.7).

In Wheeler v. Board of Administration (1979) 25 Cal. 3d 600, 159 Cal. Rptr. 336, 601 P.2d 568 , defendant board calculated plaintiff's benefit under California's Public Employees' Retirement System by deducting $288, the maximum amount of benefit for which the federal Social Security Administration found plaintiff eligible, despite the Social Security Administration's reduction of that maximum benefit to $106 for so long as plaintiff was receiving payments under a California workers' compensation award. Plaintiff appealed from the superior court's denial of a writ of mandate.

The issue before the Supreme Court was whether former Gov. Code § 21293.5, which requires reduction of certain disability retirement benefits by amounts a retired state employee is "entitled to receive" in federal retirement or disability benefits, requires reduction by the maximum amount of federal benefit the retiree could be entitled to receive or by the amount actually received after reductions are made from the maximum amount of federal benefit for overlapping state benefits. The Court recognized that great weight should be given to the administrative interpretation of the Board of Retirement unless clearly erroneous, quoting Neeley v. Board of Retirement (1974) 36 Cal. App. 3d 815, 820, 111 Cal. Rptr. 841 . The Court went on, however, to quote Crumpler v. Board of Administration (1973) 32 Cal. App. 3d 567, 578, 108 Cal. Rptr. 293 , to state that the ultimate interpretation of a statute is of course an exercise of judicial power, and that it is the responsibility of the courts to declare its true meaning even if it requires rejection of an earlier erroneous administrative interpretation (Wheeler v. Board of Administration (1979) 25 Cal. 3d 600, 605, 159 Cal. Rptr. 336, 601 P.2d 568). TheCourt then applied other rules of statutory interpretation to determine that the federal benefits that a retiree is "entitled to receive" means benefits actually paid to him or her after deduction of the federally mandated offset for workers' compensation benefits (Wheeler v. Board of Administration (1979) 25 Cal. 3d 600, 605-607, 159 Cal. Rptr. 336, 601 P.2d 568).

Petitioner in Wilcox v. Enstad (1981) 122 Cal. App. 3d 641, 176 Cal. Rptr. 560 , sought a writ of mandate in an original proceeding in the court of appeal to compel respondent, as Kern County Clerk, to take no further action on a recall petition brought by real parties in interest to remove petitioner from her elective office. The issue involved the operation of Elec. Code § 27215, relating to the clerk's examination of petitions for recall elections to determine their sufficiency. That section provides for a random sample to be checked and if it shows the number of valid signatures to be within 90 to 110 percent of the number of signatures required for a sufficient petition, the clerk is required to examine and verify each signature filed. If the petition is insufficient, no action is to be taken on it. Respondent, taking a random sampling pursuant to Elec. Code § 27215, had found the petition to contain less than 90 percent of the number of valid signatures required to qualify the petition for the ballot. Rather than taking no further action, however, respondent informed the proponents of the petition that they could file a supplemental petition, a procedure allowed under Elec. Code § 27214, which relates to an alternative method of verifying petitions by checking signatures individually. Respondent pointed out that the office of the Secretary of State, charged with oversight of the elections process in California, interprets Elec. Code § 27215 to allow a supplemental filing period. In holding to the contrary, the court of appeal stated that while an administrative interpretation or practical construction by the officials who are required to administer a statute is entitled to great weight, it is the duty of the court, when such a question of law is properly presented, to state the true meaning of the statute, even though this requires the overthrow of an earlier erroneous administrative construction (Wilcox v. Enstad (1981) 122 Cal. App. 3d 641, 652-653, 176 Cal. Rptr. 560).

[b] Internal Agency Memorandum Not Controlling

Defendant in Jones v. Tracy School Dist. (1980) 27 Cal. 3d 99, 165 Cal. Rptr. 100, 611 P.2d 441 , reclassified plaintiff employee, a female, so that she received a decreased salary while continuing to perform the same work as her male coworkers. After six years, defendant reinstated plaintiff but refused to give her back pay. Defendant refused to accept the recommendation of the United States Department of Labor that it owed plaintiff back pay for six years, and plaintiff sued for the back pay under Lab. Code § 1197.5, the California "equal pay" provision. The superior court granted plaintiff's motion for summary judgment but restricted her recovery to the two years preceding the filing of the complaint pursuant to Lab. Code § 1197.5(h), and plaintiff appealed.

The Supreme Court, although reversing because the statute of limitations might have been tolled by plaintiff's pursuit of a federal remedy, held that Lab. Code § 1197.5(h), in addition to constituting a statute of limitations for filing an action for pay discrimination based on gender, restricts recovery of back pay to the two years preceding filing of the complaint. In arguing that she was entitled to recover back pay for the entire six-year period during which she was discriminated against, plaintiff observed that her position was supported by a policy statement of the Department of Industrial Relations that recovery under Lab. Code § 1197.5 includes the balance of wages for the entire period of discrimination. The Court noted that it ordinarily deferred to the administrative interpretation of a statute adopted by the agency charged with its enforcement, but held that such deference was not appropriate in the case before it. The interpretation on which plaintiff relied occurred in an internal memorandum, rather than in an administrative regulation that might be subject to the notice and hearing requirements of proper administrative procedure. Moreover, the memorandum was composed and circulated after the department had become amicus curiae in the case, and after its issuance was cited by both plaintiff and the department in their respective briefs. The Court held that the chronology substantially diluted the authoritative force of the memorandum (Jones v. Tracy School Dist. (1980) 27 Cal. 3d 99, 107, 165 Cal. Rptr. 100, 611 P.2d 441).

In Campbell v. Arco Marine, Inc. (1996) 42 Cal. App. 4th 1850, 50 Cal. Rptr. 2d 626 , an out-of-state resident, employed by a California based corporation, sued under the Fair Employment and Housing Act (Gov. Code § 12900 et seq.) for sexual harassment. The employer argued that the California Legislature did not intend the act to apply to conduct directed toward citizens of other states which takes place outside the boundaries of California. The trial court granted summary judgment against the plaintiff on the grounds that the statute was intended to protect California residents exclusively and therefore was not designed to apply extra-territorially. The plaintiff appealed and argued that the statute was intended to apply to non-residents if they are employed by California-based companies.

In affirming summary judgment, the court of appeal examined the legislative history of the statute and subsequent enactments. The court found that the "findings and declarations of policy" contained in Gov. Code § 12920 stated that the protections of the statute were designed for the people of California. In addition, the court cited a 1984 amendment which explicitly provided that the statute was intended to protect "the civil rights of California citizenry." The plaintiff argued that the court should look instead to an internal memorandum from the Department of Fair Employment and Housing, the agency authorized to adopt rules and regulations to carry out the function of the Fair Employment and Housing Act. The internal memorandum implied that where the disputed conduct occurred outside California, the agency would accept complaints which potentially could establish a connection between the alleged harm and some action ofthe employer within the state. In rejecting that argument, the court of appeal stressed that courts are obliged to construe statutes according to the legislature's own statement of purpose whenever possible. It added that an internal agency memorandum, as opposed to an administrative regulation which would ordinarily be subject to notice and hearing requirements, is entitled to only "slight deference." Furthermore, the court stated that an interpretation of a statute that is not contemporaneous with its enactment, but undertaken years later is not entitled to great weight. Accordingly, the court of appeal was unpersuaded to defer to the agency memorandum, given that it was in informal policy decision prepared years after the statute's enactment (Campbell v. Arco Marine, Inc. (1996) 42 Cal. App. 4th 1850, 1859-1861, 50 Cal. Rptr. 2d 626).

[c] Agency May Not Enlarge Legislative Enactment

In Department of Transportation v. Superior Court (1996) 47 Cal. App. 4th 852, 55 Cal. Rptr. 2d 2 , plaintiffs sued the California Department of Transportation (CALTRANS) for personal injuries arising out of a traffic collision which occurred when a third-party vehicle crossed over a center lane divider and struck plaintiffs' vehicle. Plaintiffs sought discovery of certain categories of records and information maintained by CALTRANS. The trial court ordered production and CALTRANS petitioned for writ of mandate, challenging the order.

CALTRANS argued that 23 U.S.C. § 409, which precludes discovery or evidentiary admission of reports and other data compiled for safety purposes, preempted California law and prevented disclosure of the information. The court of appeal disagreed, finding that although the statute expressly preempted state law, CALTRANS had the burden of proving the specific information at issue was subject to preemption. It held that CALTRANS had failed to meet its burden. CALTRANS had argued for an expansive interpretation of 23 U.S.C. § 409, based upon regulations adopted by the U.S. Department of Transportation for highway safety improvement, at 23 C.F.R. § 924.1 et seq. Accordingly, CALTRANS claimed these regulations provided criteria to determine the types of documents and other information falling within the scope of the exclusions specified in 23 U.S.C. § 409. CALTRANS further relied on a memorandum from an official of the Federal Highway Administration who asserted that the information sought by plaintiffs was allegedly compiled pursuant to 23 C.F.R. § 924.1 and thus was not discoverable. The appellate court dismissed this argument on the ground that an administrative agency and its employees may not enlarge the scope of a legislative enactment and so denied the petition (Department of Transportation v. Superior Court (1996) 47 Cal. App. 4th 852, 857-858, 55 Cal. Rptr. 2d 2).

[d] No Deference Owed to Agency Interpretation Embodied in Void Regulations

One of the issues presented in Church v. Jamison (2006) 143 Cal. App. 4th 1568, 50 Cal. Rptr. 3d 166 , was the proper application of Labor Code Section 227.3. Section 227.3 generally provides that if an employee is terminated without having used all of his or her vested vacation time, the unused vested vacation must be paid to the employee as wages. One question raised in this case was whether the appropriate statute of limitations (e.g., Code Civ. Proc. §§ 337(1), 338(a), 339(1)) should be applied not just to limit the time after termination for the employee to file suit, but also "in reverse," to limit the years for which unused vested vacation may be claimed. The court of appeal in this case held that the statute of limitations should only limit the time for filing suit, not the number of years for which unused vested vacation pay could be claimed (143 Cal. App. 4th 1568, 1580 -1583).

In so holding, the court of appeal rejected the contrary holding of another court of appeal (see Sequeira v. Rincon-Vitova Insectaries, Inc. (1995) 32 Cal. App. 4th 632, 637, 38 Cal. Rptr. 2d 264 (holding that if employment relationship was governed by written contract, four-year statute of limitations, Code Civ. Proc. § 337(1), limits right to vacation pay to that which vested within four years prior to termination of employment)).

The court of appeal's holding in this case was also contrary to the position taken in the enforcement manual of the California Division of Labor Standards Enforcement (DLSE). The court of appeal explained that the general rule of deference to an agency interpretation does not apply if the interpretation was not adopted in accordance with applicable legal requirements. As relevant in this case, the California Supreme Court has held that the interpretive policies contained in the DLSE enforcement manual are void as regulations, because they were not promulgated in accordance with the Administrative Procedure Act (see Tidewater Marine Western, Inc. v. Bradshaw (1996) 14 Cal. 4th 557, 572, 59 Cal. Rptr. 2d 186, 927 P.2d 296 ; see Gov. Code § 11340 et seq. (Administrative Procedure Act)). As a result, the court of appeal did not give any weight to the statutory interpretations in the DLSE's enforcement manual (143 Cal. App. 4th 1568, 1578-1580) .

F. RETROACTIVITY

21-217 California Points & Authorities § 217.130

§ 217.130 Supporting Contention That Statute Should Be Applied Retroactively--Retroactive Application Necessary to Effectuate Legislative Intent

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief. It may be combined with the general points and authorities set out in § 217.20.]

_____ [Specify statute or THE _____ (year) AMENDMENT TO _____ (specify statute)] SHOULD BE APPLIED RETROACTIVELY BECAUSE RETROACTIVE APPLICATION IS NECESSARY TO EFFECTUATE THE LEGISLATIVE INTENT.

A. Statute Given Retroactive Effect If Necessary to Effectuate Legislative Intent. Although legislative enactments are generally presumed to operate prospectively and not retroactively, this presumption is rebuttable. If the legislature clearly intended a statute to operate retroactively, the court must carry out that intent unless due process considerations prevent the court from doing so. The court may infer the Legislature's intent from the express provisions of the statute as well as from extrinsic sources such as the legislative history (Preston v. State Bd. of Equalization (2001) 25 Cal. 4th 197, 221-222, 105 Cal. Rptr. 2d 407, 19 P.3d 1148 ; In re Marriage of Bouquet (1976) 16 Cal. 3d 583, 587, 128 Cal. Rptr. 427, 546 P.2d 1371 ; Mannheim v. Superior Court (1970) 3 Cal. 3d 678, 686, 91 Cal. Rptr. 585, 478 P.2d 17 ; Yoshioka v. Superior Court (1997) 58 Cal. App. 4th 972, 980, 68 Cal. Rptr. 2d 553).

[Optional] B. Constitutional Infirmity of Former Law as Indication of Legislative Intent. When a new statute is enacted to replace an old statute, the probable constitutional infirmity of the old law is one factor indicating legislative intent that the new law be applied retroactively (In re Marriage of Bouquet (1976) 16 Cal. 3d 583, 588, 128 Cal. Rptr. 427, 546 P.2d 1371 ; Dandona v. Araluce (In re Marriage of Dandona & Araluce) (2001) 91 Cal. App. 4th 1120, 1125-1126, 111 Cal. Rptr. 2d 390).

[Set forth additional points and authorities relating to the particular statute in question and that support retroactive application of it. In addition, counsel may wish to set forth points and authorities relating to other rules of statutory interpretation that aid in ascertaining legislative intent behind statute and support retroactive application (see §§ 217.21 -217.25, 217.40 -217.46, 217.60 -217.63, 217.80 -217.86, 217.88, 217.110, 217.111, 217.131).]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a party's contention that a statute should be given retroactive effect, that is, should be applied to facts and circumstances arising prior to its enactment. Such an argument might be made in any type of action or proceeding in which a party seeks to have a newly enacted statute applied to his or her case. These points and authorities may be combined with the general points and authorities set forth in § 217.20, which relate to the construction of statutes to ascertain and effectuate the legislative intent.

These points and authorities may be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities relating to the procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of the retroactivity of a statute. The points and authorities set forth in this form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should include a discussion of any evidence of legislative intent, such as the legislative history behind the particular statute, showing why retroactive application of the statute is necessary to effectuate that intent.

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 217.133 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Statute Given Retroactive Effect If Necessary to Effectuate Legislative Intent

Preston v. State Bd. of Equalization (2001) 25 Cal. 4th 197, 105 Cal. Rptr. 2d 407, 19 P.3d 1148 , involved the application of a sales-tax exemption under Rev. & Tax. Code §§ 6011(c)(10) and 6012(c)(10). The Supreme Court held that the general presumption that statutes operate prospectively, and not retroactively, is rebuttable. If the legislature clearly intended a statute to operate retroactively, the court must carry out that intentunless due process considerations prevent the court from doing so. The Legislature's intent to have a statute operate retroactively may be inferred from the express provisions of the statute, as well as from extrinsic sources, including the legislative history (Preston v. State Bd. of Equalization (2001) 25 Cal. 4th 197, 221-222, 105 Cal. Rptr. 2d 407, 19 P.3d 1148).

After reviewing the statutory text, including the Legislature's official statement of intent, as well as the legislative history, the Court concluded that the tax provisions involved in this case were intended to apply retroactively (Preston v. State Bd. of Equalization (2001) 25 Cal. 4th 197, 222-224, 105 Cal. Rptr. 2d 407, 19 P.3d 1148). The court then considered whether giving the statutes retroactive effect would violate due process requirements. The Court concluded that due process was not violated, because retroactive application of the statutes could only reduce a claimant's tax liability and therefore could not impair any vested right. Furthermore, the Court found that applying the statute's tax exemption retroactively did not constitute a gift of public funds in violation of Cal. Const., art. XVI, § 6. Although the Legislature generally cannot provide retroactive relief for taxes that have become fixed and vested, a retroactive tax exemption will be upheld if it is based on the Legislature's reasonable determination that the exemption serves a public purpose (Preston v. State Bd. of Equalization (2001) 25 Cal. 4th 197, 224-225, 105 Cal. Rptr. 2d 407, 19 P.3d 1148). In this case, the Court held that the exemption was enacted to further the public purpose of providing certainty to business taxpayers and improving the business climate in California (Preston v. State Bd. of Equalization

The facts and procedural background of In re Marriage of Bouquet (1976) 16 Cal. 3d 583, 128 Cal. Rptr. 427, 546 P.2d 1371 , are set out in § 217.82[3][a]. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed. The Court noted that although legislative enactments are generally presumed to operate prospectively and not retroactively, this presumption does not defy rebuttal. Relying on Mannheim v. Superior Court (1970) 3 Cal. 3d 678, 686, 91 Cal. Rptr. 585, 478 P.2d 17 (discussed below), the Court observed that it has explicitly subordinated the presumption against the retroactive application of statutes to the transcendent canon of statutory construction that the design of the Legislature be given effect (In re Marriage of Bouquet (1976) 16 Cal. 3d 583, 587, 128 Cal. Rptr. 427, 546 P.2d 1371). The Court examined several pertinent factors bearing on the legislative intent and concluded that the Legislature intended that former amended Civ. Code § 5118 (now see Fam. Code § 771) be applied retroactively (In re Marriage of Bouquet (1976) 16 Cal. 3d 583, 587-591, 128 Cal. Rptr. 427, 546 P.2d 1371). The Court also held that the retroactive application of the statute was not unconstitutional (In re Marriage of Bouquet (1976) 16 Cal. 3d 583, 591-594, 128 Cal. Rptr. 427, 546 P.2d 1371).

Mannheim v. Superior Court (1970) 3 Cal. 3d 678, 91 Cal. Rptr. 585, 478 P.2d 17 , arose out of the administration of the estate of an intestate decedent. Petitioner, as attorney for the heirs of decedent's predeceased husband, filed a petition in probate court to determine heirship. In response to this petition, the probate court entered a decree providing that (1) decedent left no surviving spouse, issue, or descendants of issue, (2) the entire estate consisted of property formerly held in joint tenancy by decedent and her predeceased husband, and (3) petitioner's clients were entitled to one-half of the estate. The probate court made no allocation of the remainder of the estate.

Under the laws of intestate succession that were in effect at the time of decedent's death and at the time the above decree was entered [former Prob. Code §§ 230, 231 (now see Prob. Code §§ 240, 6402, 6404, 6800, 6806); former Prob. Code § 228 (now see Prob. Code § 6402.5)], one-half of decedent's property was properly distributed to the heirs of her predeceased husband, and the remaining half should have been distributed to the state of California under former Prob. Code § 1027 (now see Prob. Code § 11902), to be held for five years, during which it could be claimed by unknown heirs of the decedent. If none appeared by the end of that period, the property would permanently escheat to the state. Shortly after the decree was entered, the Legislature amended former Prob. Code § 228 to provide that if any property subject to that section would otherwise escheat to the state because there is no relative, including next of kin of the decedent or his or her predeceased spouse, the property should be distributed in accordance with Prob. Code § 296.4 (governing distribution of community property of spouses who die simultaneously). Prob. Code § 296.4 had itself previously been amended and the effect of this amendment was to prevent the escheat of any community property of a husband and wife who die simultaneously if either leaves any heirs. By incorporating that distribution scheme into former Prob. Code § 228, the Legislature effectively provided the same treatment for community property of spouses who die at different times. After this amendment became effective, petitioner moved in the probate proceedings for an order decreeing that no portion of the estate escheat to the state and that the remaining one-half of the estate be distributed to petitioner's clients. When the probate court denied the motion, petitioner sought a writ of mandate to compel the probate court to enter such an order.

The Supreme Court granted the writ. It held, inter alia, that the amendment of former Prob. Code § 228 should be applied retroactively to any estate that had not vested absolutely in the state on the effective date of the amendment, regardless of when the decedent died (Mannheim v. Superior Court (1970) 3 Cal. 3d 678, 687, 91 Cal. Rptr. 585, 478 P.2d 17). The Court observed that one rule of statutory construction counsels that statutes are not to be given a retrospective operation unless it is clearlymade to appear that such was the legislative intent. But this canon expressly subordinates its effect to the fundamental rule of construction that a statute must be interpreted so as to effectuate legislative intent. The act that amended Prob. Code § 296.4 provided that it applied to any portion of an estate that had not vested in the state or permanently escheated to the state on the effective date of the act, regardless of when the decedent died (Mannheim v. Superior Court (1970) 3 Cal. 3d 678, 686, 91 Cal. Rptr. 585, 478 P.2d 17). When the Legislature amended former Prob. Code § 228, it expressly fashioned its revision in reference to the provisions of Prob.

Code § 296.4. Thus, the Court reasoned, the Legislature must have been fully aware of the latter section and must be deemed to have been conscious of the statutory provision for its retroactive application. In the absence of any indication to the contrary, the Court concluded that the Legislature intended to make former Prob. Code § 228, as amended, operate in the same manner as Prob. Code § 296.4, that is, retroactively (Mannheim v. Superior Court (1970) 3 Cal. 3d 678, 687, 91 Cal. Rptr. 585, 478 P.2d 17).

In Yoshioka v. Superior Court (1997) 58 Cal. App. 4th 972, 68 Cal. Rptr. 2d 553 , the petitioner and real parties in interest were involved in an automobile accident, and the petitioner had no auto insurance at the time of the accident. The petitioner filed his complaint in superior court, alleging that he was rear-ended by real parties and subsequently sustained serious injuries. After the petitioner filed his action, Proposition 213 was passed, creating Civ. Code § 3333.4. The initiative prohibits uninsured motorists and drunk drivers from collecting noneconomic damages in any action arising out of the operation or use of a motor vehicle. It also prohibits recovery of any damages by felons for injuries caused in the commission of or flight from a felony. The matter was set for trial. Based on Proposition 213, the real party brought a motion in limine to exclude all evidence of general damages and bar all jury instructions on that issue. The trial court granted the motion in limine because he refused to rule that Proposition 213 was unconstitutional in its retroactive application and looked for appellate review on that issue. Further, he granted the real parties' request to amend their answer to add Proposition 213 as an affirmative defense. The trial was continued and the petitioner filed a petition for writ of mandate.

The court of appeal denied the petition for writ of mandate. Proposition 213 was applied to the petitioner by the concept of secondary retroactivity, defined as retroactivity that affects the future legal consequences of past transactions. The petitioner's case involved an accident occurring prior to Proposition 213's passage, yet encompassed a trial set following its effective date. Since the initiative did not expressly state that it will apply retroactively, the court stated that it must determine the electorate's intent. In order to determine such intent, stated the court, it is best to look at the language of the initiative itself. Generally, "[t]he presumption is very strong that a statute was not meant to act retrospectively, [wherein] [i]t ought not receive such a construction unless the words used are so clear, strong and imperative that no other meaning can be annexed to them, or unless the intention of the legislature cannot be otherwise satisfied" (quoting from U.S. Fidelity Co. v. Struthers Wells Co. (1908) 209 U.S. 306, 314, 28 S. Ct. 537, 539, 52 L. Ed. 804). Although the petitioner argued that the words, "provisions shall apply to all actions in which the initial trial has not commenced prior to January 1, 1997" are susceptible to an alternate interpretation that the voters wanted to give uninsured motorists sufficient time to bring their case to trial if the case was already pending, the court stated that other sections of the initiative support a clear finding of retroactive intent. The initiative specifically states, "A Yes vote on this measure means: Uninsured drivers or drivers convicted of driving under the influence of alcohol or drugs at the time of an accident could no longer sue someone who was at fault for the accident for non-economic losses (such as pain and suffering)." The court concluded that on its face, the words "no longer" in this context can only be interpreted as the initiative no longer allowing the uninsured to sue for noneconomic losses (Yoshioka v. Superior Court (1997) 58 Cal. App. 4th 972, 981, 68 Cal. Rptr. 2d 553). The court also considered whether the retroactive application of Proposition 213 violated the petitioner's constitutional rights, and held that it did not (Yoshioka v. Superior Court (1997) 58 Cal. App. 4th 972, 993, 68 Cal. Rptr. 2d 553).

[b] Constitutional Infirmity of Former Law as Indication of Legislative Intent

The facts and procedural background of In re Marriage of Bouquet (1976) 16 Cal. 3d 583, 128 Cal. Rptr. 427, 546 P.2d 1371 , are set out in §§ 217.82[3][a], and 217.130[3][a]. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed. In holding that the former amended Civ. Code § 5118 (now see Fam. Code § 771) applied retroactively, the Court noted that former § 5118 would be subject to strong constitutional challenge. The probable constitutional infirmity of the former law lends some support to the conclusion that the Legislature intended the amendment to have retroactive effect, based on the inference that the Legislature wished to replace the possibly infirm law with its constitutionally unobjectionable successor as soon as possible. Although noting that this inference is not conclusive, the Court did state that it is of some value in ascertaining the Legislature's intent (In re Marriage of Bouquet (1976) 16 Cal. 3d 583, 588, 128 Cal. Rptr.

In Dandona v. Araluce (In re Marriage of Dandona & Araluce) (2001) 91 Cal. App. 4th 1120, 111 Cal. Rptr. 2d 390 , the court of appeal held that the 2000 amendment of what is now Fam. Code § 3653(d) (formerly Fam.Code § 3653(c)) could be applied retroactively. That amendment gave the superior court discretion, when reducing or terminating spousal or child support, to order reimbursement of amounts previously overpaid. A 1999 amendment to the statute had eliminated this discretion, which had existed under previous law. The court of appeal held that the 2000 amendment could constitutionally be applied retroactively to authorize reimbursement of amounts overpaid while the 1999 amendment was in effect. In so holding, the court noted that although a retroactive application of a law may violate due process if it interferes with a vested property interest, the Legislature may constitutionally use its police power to abrogate rights that derive from unfair former laws. In this case, the 1999 amendment had created an unfair situation because it deprived support obligors of a right to reimbursement and created a windfall for overpaid obligees (Dandona v. Araluce (In re Marriage of Dandona & Araluce) (2001) 91 Cal. App. 4th 1120, 1125-1126, 111 Cal. Rptr. 2d 390).

[a] Statute Given Retroactive Effect If Necessary to Effectuate Legislative Intent

Negrette v. California State Lottery Com. (1994) 21 Cal. App. 4th 1739, 26 Cal. Rptr. 2d 809 , was an action by a lottery player against the Lottery Commission seeking the prize money for a ticket that he allegedly mailed rather than redeeming it. The trial court granted summary judgment for defendant, properly applying the definition of "substantial proof," which is required under Gov. Code § 8880.32(b). The court of appeal affirmed, finding that, although the definition of the term had been added after appellant's claim had been denied, it had merely clarified existing law, and not imposed additional requirements for the discretionary validation of a claim. The court found that a statute is retroactive if it substantially changes the legal effect of past events, and an amendment that merely clarifies existing law may be given retroactive effect, even without an expression of legislative intent for retroactivity (Negrette v. California State Lottery Com. (1994) 21 Cal. App. 4th 1739, 1744, 26 Cal. Rptr. 2d 809).

In Nelson v. Flintkote Co. (1985) 172 Cal. App. 3d 727, 218 Cal. Rptr. 562 , the court of appeal held that Code Civ. Proc. § 340.2 (limitations statute for asbestos-related injuries and illness) applies to complaints for damages for injuries and illness caused by exposure to asbestos that are filed after the effective date of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.2 by a plaintiff who is not yet disabled but who received an informed diagnosis of asbestos is more than one year before the enactment of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.2. Code Civ. Proc. § 340.2 applies to a plaintiff in the foregoing circumstances if the timeliness of the claim has not been adjudicated prior to the effective date of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.2. The court found the legislative history supported the conclusion that the Legislature intended Code Civ. Proc. § 340.2 to be remedial in purpose, subject not only to liberal construction but also to retroactive application in a manner that would encompass the causes of action of as many asbestosis victims as possible (Nelson v. Flintkote Co. (1985) 172 Cal. App. 3d 727, 732, 218 Cal. Rptr. 562). The court held that a statute of limitations for a common law tort, such as at issue in the case at bench, is a procedural rule, and as such, not subject to the general rule that statutes should not be retroactive. A statute that is procedural in nature may be given effect as to pending and future litigation even if the event underlying the cause of action occurred before the statute took effect (Nelson v. Flintkote Co. (1985) 172 Cal. App. 3d 727, 733, 218 Cal. Rptr. 562).

In Hudson Properties Co. v. Governing Board (1985) 168 Cal. App. 3d 63, 213 Cal. Rptr. 909 , the court of appeal, in adjudicating the rights of the parties to a dispute involving the purchase of school property, held that former Educ. Code § 39369.5, which granted to former owners of school property a right of first refusal, applied retroactively. The court reached this result even though there was no express statement of legislative intent on the issue of retroactivity of former Educ. Code § 39369.5, and even though the court stated that it could not infer from the statutory language itself that a retroactive application was intended (Hudson Properties Co. v. Governing Board (1985) 168 Cal. App. 3d 63, 70-71, 213 Cal. Rptr. 909). After determining the apparent purpose of the statute, the court inferred that the Legislature intended that it apply retroactively because there was no apparently good or logical reason to limit or restrict accomplishment of the statutory purposes by a prospective interpretation (168 Cal. App. 3d 63, 70-71) .

F. RETROACTIVITY

21-217 California Points & Authorities § 217.131

§ 217.131 Supporting Contention That Statute Should Be Applied Retroactively--Retroactive Application of Provision Clarifying Law

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief. It may be combined with the general points and authorities set out in § 217.20. It may also be combined with the points and authorities set out in § 217.130.]

_____ [Specify statute or THE _____ (year) AMENDMENT TO _____ (specify statute)] SHOULD BE APPLIED RETROACTIVELY BECAUSE IT MERELY CLARIFIES EXISTING LAW AND THEREFORE IS NOT PRESUMED TO OPERATE PROSPECTIVELY ONLY.

A. Retroactive Application of Provision Clarifying Law. Despite the general rule that a statute is presumed to operate prospectively only, an amendment that merely clarifies existing law applies retroactively (Colmenares v. Braemar Country Club, Inc. (2003) 29 Cal. 4th 1019, 1028-1031 , Cal. Rptr. 2d 662, 63 P.3d 220 ; Arcadia Redevelopment Agency v. Ikemoto (1993) 16 Cal. App. 4th 444, 457, 20 Cal. Rptr. 2d 112 ; State Bd. of Equalization v. Board of Supervisors (1980) 105 Cal. App. 3d 813, 824, 164 Cal. Rptr. 739).

B. Clarifying Amendment Applies to Existing Cause of Action. When a statute provides that it clarifies or declares existing law, the provision indicates a legislative intent that the amendment apply to all existing causes of action from the date of its enactment. In accordance with the general rules of statutory construction, the court must give effect to this intention unless there is some constitutional objection thereto (Western Security Bank v. Superior Court (1997) 15 Cal. 4th 232, 244, 62 Cal. Rptr. 2d 243, 933 P.2d 507 ; see Carter v. California Dept. of Veterans Affairs (2006) 38 Cal. 4th 914, 44 Cal. Rptr. 3d 223, 229, 135 P.3d 637).

[Set forth additional points and authorities relating to other rules of statutory interpretation that aid in ascertaining legislative intent behind statute and support interpretation desired (see §§ 217.21 -217.25, 217.40 -217.46, 217.60 -217.63, 217.80 -217.86, 217.88, 217.110, 217.111)].

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a party's contention that a statute should be given retroactive effect, that is, should be applied to facts and circumstances arising prior to its enactment, on the ground that the statute merely clarifies existing law and thus is not subject to the usual presumption of prospective operation. Such an argument might be made in any type of proceeding in which a party seeks to have a newly enacted statute applied to his or her case. These points and authorities may be combined with the general points and authorities set forth in § 217.20, which relate to the construction of statutes to ascertain and effectuate the legislative intent.

These points and authorities may be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities relating to the procedural context in which the issue of statutory interpretation arises. The points and authorities set forth in this form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should also insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the point of law stated. Thus, counsel should demonstrate that the statute to be applied retroactively in fact merely clarifies existing law.

CAUTION:

The foregoing form is not for use when the Legislature enacts a clarifying provision subsequent to a contrary judicial interpretation by a court higher than that to which the memorandum or brief is presented. In such a case, the lower court is bound by stare decisis to follow the prior judicial interpretation rather than to apply the legislative clarification retroactively [see McClung v. Employment Dev. Dep't (2004) 34 Cal. 4th 467, 475-476, 20 Cal. Rptr. 3d 428, 99 P.3d 1015 (once California Supreme Court has finally and definitively interpreted statute, Legislature has no power to decide that subsequent amendment merely declares existing law); People v. Savala (1981) 116 Cal. App. 3d 41, 58-61, 60 n.11, 171 Cal. Rptr. 882] .

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 217.133 may be used to oppose the contention supported by the foregoing points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Retroactive Application of Provision Clarifying Law

In Colmenares v. Braemar Country Club, Inc. (2003) 29 Cal. 4th 1019, 130 Cal. Rptr. 2d 662, 63 P.3d 220 , the plaintiff sued his former employer, alleging discrimination based on physical disability in violation of the Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA) (Gov. Code § 12900 et seq.). While the case was on appeal, the FEHA provision defining "physical disability" was amended (see Gov. Code § 12926(k)). The question for the Supreme Court, therefore, was whether the amended version of the statute applied to the plaintiff's claim, which was based on conduct that occurred prior to the amendment of the statute.

Prior to the amendment, the FEHA provided that "a '[p]hysical disability' includes ... [h]aving" a "disease, disorder, condition, cosmetic disfigurement, or anatomical loss" that both "[a]ffects one or more" of certain enumerated "body systems" and "[l]imits an individual's ability to participate in major life activities." The amendment changed the FEHA's requirement that a physical disease or condition limit "major life activities" to the singular "a major life activity." The act also included a legislative declaration that the FEHA definition of "physical disability" requires a "limitation" upon a major life activity, but does not require, as does the federal Americans With Disabilities Act, a "substantial limitation" (

Gov. Code § 12926.1(c)). The Legislature further declared that it intended state law to require a "limitation" rather than a "substantial limitation," despite language in a prior Supreme Court decision that could have been read as interpreting the FEHA provision as requiring a "substantial limitation" (Gov. Code § 12926.1(d); see Cassista v. Community Foods (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 1050, 1060, 22 Cal. Rptr. 2d 287, 856 P.2d 1143). In the same act, the Legislature also amended other, non-FEHA statutes to delete the term "substantial" from thelimitation test for physical disability under those statutes (see, e.g., Civ. Code § 54(b), Gov. Code § 19231). The legislative history showed an intention to standardize statutory definitions of disability to clarify that California's disability protections are broader than federal protections (29 Cal. 4th 1019, 1026-1027) .

Based on this pattern of legislative action, the Supreme Court concluded that the Legislature intended not to make a retroactive change, but only to clarify the degree of limitation required to be physical disabled under the FEHA. The Court also found it significant that the FEHA provision used the term "limits," not "substantially limits," both before and after the amendment (29 Cal. 4th 1019, 1027-1028) . Finally, the Court reviewed its decision in Cassista and found that the comment in that case that might be read to require a "substantial" limitation was dictum and did not accurately reflect the law on that point (29 Cal. 4th 1019, 1028-1029) . Accordingly, because the amendment did not change the law but merely clarified it, the Supreme Court held that the FEHA provision as amended was applicable to the plaintiff's claim in this case, even though the claim was based on events occurring prior to the amendment (29 Cal. 4th 1019, 1031-1032) .

Arcadia Redevelopment Agency v. Ikemoto (1993) 16 Cal. App. 4th 444, 20 Cal. Rptr. 2d 112 involved the issue whether 1992 amendments to Rev. & Tax. Code § 97.5 applied retroactively. Those amendments included community redevelopment agencies within the reach of the statute and subjected them to apportionment of property tax revenues. The court of appeal held that the legislative history indicated plainly that the amendments clarified rather than changed existing law. The court stated: "A statute will not be retroactively applied unless the Legislature clearly intended it to be retroactive. The requirement of legislative intent for retroactivity, however, does not apply to an amendment that merely clarifies existing law" (16 Cal. App. 4th 444, 457) .

State Bd. of Equalization v. Board of Supervisors (1980) 105 Cal. App. 3d 813, 164 Cal. Rptr. 739 , involved a dispute over the validity of a regulation for the implementation of Proposition 13 (Cal. Const., art. XIIIA), enacted by initiative in June 1978. Proposition 13 ties property taxes to the acquisition value rather than to the market value of property. In November 1978, the voters approved Proposition 8, which amended the California Constitution to expressly provide for reduction in the acquisition value to reflect a decline in the value of property. The issue in this case was whether Proposition 8 applied retroactively.

The court of appeal held that it did. The court acknowledged the rule of statutory construction providing that a statute will be presumed to operate prospectively unless the intent that it is to be retroactive clearly appears from the statute itself, except that a statute may be applied retroactively to comport with presumed legislative intent. The court held that a further exception to the general rule arises when the Legislature merely clarifies existing law (105 Cal. App. 3d 813, 824) . Relying on the voter's pamphlet for Proposition 8 and on the Legislative Counsel's Digest, the court found that Proposition 8 was a clarifying provision, which was intended to go into effect at the same time as Proposition 13 (105 Cal. App. 3d 813, 823-825) .

[b] Clarifying Amendment Applies to Existing Cause of Action

Carter v. California Dept. of Veterans Affairs (2006) 38 Cal. 4th 914, 44 Cal. Rptr. 3d 223, 135 P.3d 637 , involved the question whether the 2003 amendment of Gov. Code § 12940(j)(1) was declaratory of existing law. Prior to the amendment, Section 12940(j)(1) made employers liable under certain conditions for unlawful on-the-job harassment suffered by their employees. The 2003 amendment, which expressly made employers liable for sexual harassment committed by nonemployees against employees, included a legislative statement that the amendment was declaratory of existing law. The Supreme Court held that, because it had not yet definitively interpreted Gov. Code § 12940(j)(1) with respect to employer liability for sexual harassment of employees by nonemployees, the legislative statement was entitled to "due consideration" in determining the effect of the amendment (44 Cal. Rptr. 3d 223, 229) . The Court distinguished McClung v. Employment Development Dept. (2004), 34 Cal. 4th 467, 475-476, 20 Cal. Rptr. 3d 428, 99 P.3d 1015 (see § 217.133[3][e]), which involved a statutory provision that had been definitively interpreted by the California Supreme Court (44 Cal. Rptr. 3d 223, 229) . In the present case, the Court ultimately held that the amendment of Section 12940(j)(1) was declaratory of existing law and was applicable to conduct occurring before the operative date of the amendment (44 Cal. Rptr. 3d 223, 235-236) .

In Western Security Bank v. Superior Court (1997) 15 Cal. 4th 232, 244, 62 Cal. Rptr. 2d 243, 933 P.2d 507 , a bank attempted to draw on standby letters of credit, of which it was a beneficiary, after a judicial foreclosure of real property security for its loan left a deficiency. The issuer of the letters of credit refused to honor the bank's demand on the letters of credit and filed an action for declaratory relief seeking a declaration that it was not obligated to honor the bank's tender of the letters of credit. The trial court filed a judgment decreeing that the Bank was entitled to recover from the issuer of the letters of credit, and the issuer could seek reimbursement from the borrowers. The issuer appealed and the borrowers cross appealed.

The court of appeal, after rehearing, reversed the trial court, holding that the trial court's judgment indirectly imposed on the borrower an equivalent of a prohibited deficiency judgment. The Legislature soon acted to express a clear, contrary intent, and enacted an urgency measure specifically meant to abrogate the court of appeal's holding. After the Legislature's action, the Supreme Court returned the case to the court of appeal for reconsideration in light of the statutory changes. The court of appeal concluded that the Legislature's action wasprospective only and had no impact on the court's earlier analysis of the parties' rights and obligations, and reiterated its former conclusions.

The Supreme Court again granted review and reversed. In considering the effect of the Legislature's action on the case, the Court reviewed principles of retroactivity and clarification. The Court quoted from California Emp. Etc. Com. v. Payne (1947) 31 Cal. 2d 210, 213, 187 P.2d 702 , that "whether a statute should apply retrospectively or only prospectively is, in the first instance, a policy question for the legislative body enacting the statute." Thus, when a statute provides that it clarifies or declares existing law, "it is obvious that such a provision is indicative of a legislative intent that the amendment apply to all existing causes of action from thedate of its enactment. In accordance with the general rules of statutory construction, we must give effect to this intention unless there is some constitutional objection thereto" (15 Cal. 4th 232, 244) . According to the Court, the court of appeal erred in concluded that the Legislature's enactment had no effect on the case, because the Legislature explicitly intended to abrogate the court of appeal's prior decision and make certain the parties obligations when letters of credit supported loans also secured by real property (15 Cal. 4th 232, 252) . Thus, the Court held that the Legislature manifestly intended the respective obligations of the parties to a letter of credit transaction should remain unaffected by the antideficiency laws, whether those obligations arise before or after the enactment (15 Cal. 4th 232, 252, 253) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Retroactive Application of Provision Clarifying Law

In American Psychometric Consultants, Inc. v. Workers' Comp. Appeals Bd. (1995) 36 Cal. App. 4th 1626, 43 Cal. Rptr. 2d 254 , several employers and workers' compensation carriers sought restitution of amounts that they had paid for medical-legal fees to medical evaluators several years earlier. In each case, the fees had been incurred before the employer/carrier had had an opportunity to respond to the employee's workers' compensation claim, but in each case the fees were paid by the employer/carrier after negotiation and without protest. One issue on appeal was whether 1993 amendments to Lab. Code §§ 4620 and 4621, which provided that employers/carriers are not liable for medical-legal evaluations performed prior to the time that the workers' compensation claim was in dispute, could be applied to the issues in this case. The court of appeal noted that legislation ordinarily will not be applied retroactively unless the Legislature has clearly expressed an intent to do so. However, the court observed, in connection with a number of the amendments involved in this case, the Legislature had declared that the changes were "declaratory of existing law." The court observed that, theoretically, changes of this sort do not result in retroactive application at all, but merely clarify the law that is already in existence (36 Cal. App. 4th 1626, 1643) . The court concluded that the amendments at issue were merely intended to clarify the law that was already in existence and that they could thereby be applied to the issues in the case (36 Cal. App. 4th 1626, 1643) . However, the court concluded that restitution of the fees was not equitable under the circumstances of this case (36 Cal. App. 4th 1626, 1645-1647) .

In Borden v. Division of Medical Quality (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 874, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 905 , petitioner, a physician, brought an administrative mandate proceeding to review a decision of the Division of Medical Quality revoking petitioner's license to practice medicine. While administrative proceedings against petitioner were pending, the Legislature amended Bus. & Prof. Code § 2229, which sets forth guidelines for the exercise of the Division's disciplinary authority over licensed physicians. The amendments provided that protection of the public, rather than rehabilitation of the physician, is to be the highest priority for the Division in exercising its disciplinary authority. Although the Division initially placed petitioner on probation, the Division later reconsidered its decision and revoked petitioner's license, citing the amendments to Bus. & Prof. Code § 2229. The trial court issued a writ of mandate ordering the Division to reverse its decision, ruling that the amendments to § 2229 could not be applied retroactively, but the court of appeal reversed. The court noted that although statutes are generally not construed to apply retroactively, a well-recognized exception exists when the legislation merely clarifies existing law (30 Cal. App. 4th 874, 882) . After reviewing the background and purpose of the physician disciplinary statutes as they existed prior to the amendments, the court concluded public protection was already a high priority under existing law and that it was always within the Division's power to revoke a physician's license in order to protect the public. The court therefore concluded that the amendment merely clarified existing law and was not a substantive change in the law. Therefore, the amended statute could be applied to this case (30 Cal. App. 4th 874, 882-885) .

In Mahon v. Safeco Title Ins. Co. (1988) 199 Cal. App. 3d 616, 245 Cal. Rptr. 103 , the court of appeal was concerned with the question of whether Unemp. Ins. Code § 1960 applied retroactively to litigation pending at the time of its enactment. It is a maxim that no statute is to be given retroactive effect unless the Legislature has expressly so declared. Nevertheless, the court explained that the rule disfavoring retroactivity is meant to avoid the unfairness that attends changing the law after the action has been taken in justifiable reliance on the former law and that the characterization of the application of a statute as retroactive depends on the propensity for unfairness (199 Cal. App. 3d 616, 620-621) . The doctrine of nonretroactivity is qualified with exceptions for circumstances that ordinarily do not give rise to a substantial claim of unfairness. For example, the court said that procedural rules amended during the pendency of a proceeding apply as amended. Similarly, an exception to the general rule that statutes are not construed to apply retroactively arises when the legislation merely clarifies existing law (199 Cal. App. 3d 616, 621) .

_____ [Specify statute or THE _____(year) AMENDMENT TO _____(specify statute)] SHOULD BE APPLIED RETROACTIVELY BECAUSE IT MERELY CHANGES A PROCEDURE AND THEREFORE IS NOT PRESUMED TO OPERATE PROSPECTIVELY ONLY.

A. Change in Procedural Law Applicable Retroactively. A new procedural statute or an amendment to an existing procedural statute that changes a procedural rule is applicable to causes of action existing at the time of its enactment (Strauch v. Superior Court (1980) 107 Cal. App. 3d 45, 48-49, 165 Cal. Rptr. 552).

[Optional] B. Procedural Statute Does Not Create New Action or Destroy Defense. A statute is procedural when it neither creates a new cause of action nor deprives the defendant of any defense on the merits (Owens v. Superior Court (1959) 52 Cal. 2d 822, 833, 345 P.2d 921).

[Optional] C. Statute Regulating Costs May Be Applied to Pending Actions. Whether a particular cost, including attorney's fees, is allowed a litigant depends on the terms of the statute that is in effect at the time the judgment is rendered, not on the law that existed when the action was commenced, unless the Legislature has clearly indicated its intent in the new legislation that costs will not be recoverable in actions pending when the new statute becomes operative. Application to pending actions of new statutes regarding costs is not considered to be giving "retroactive" effect to that legislation (Mir v. Charter Suburban Hospital (1994) 27 Cal. App. 4th 1471, 1478, 33 Cal. Rptr. 2d 243).

These points and authorities may be combined with the general points and authorities set forth in § 217.20, which relate to the construction of statutes to ascertain and effectuate the legislative intent.

These points and authorities may be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities relating to the procedural context in which the issue of statutory interpretation arises. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should set forth the impact of the legislative enactment, describing its effect on procedure rather than on a substantive right.

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 217.133 may be used to oppose the contention supported by the points and authorities in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Change in Procedural Law Applicable Retroactively

In Strauch v. Superior Court (1980) 107 Cal. App. 3d 45, 165 Cal. Rptr. 552 , plaintiff filed a complaint for medical malpractice against defendant but did not accompany it with a certificate of merit or a certificate of inability to comply in timely fashion, as was then required by former Code Civ. Proc. § 411.30. Plaintiff sought and was granted relief from late filing for mistake of law, and filed the certificate. Defendant unsuccessfully moved to strike the complaint, claiming plaintiff's failure was jurisdictional. After the trial court's ruling, former Code Civ. Proc. § 411.30 was amended to authorize the filing of a certificate of merit after the filing ofa medical malpractice complaint. Defendant petitioned for a writ of mandate directing the trial court to enter an order granting his motion to strike the complaint and denying plaintiff's motion for relief. Defendant claimed that the trial court had abused its discretion, and sought to have statutory provisions applicable at the time of the trial court's decision but later repealed enforced against plaintiff.

The court of appeal denied the petition. Before concluding that plaintiff had complied with the policy underlying former Code Civ. Proc. § 411.30, which was that a plaintiff provide some independent support of the merits of the action before pursuing that action, the court explained the effects of statutory amendments. Civ. Code § 3 provides that statutes are presumed to operate prospectively. A statute is not made retroactive merely because it draws on facts existing prior to its enactment. Thus, changes in procedural law are applicable to existing causes of action. The effect of such statutes is actually prospective in nature since they relate to the procedure to be followed in the future. An amendment of a procedural statute applies to cases pending at the time of its enactment, providing vested rights are not affected (107 Cal. App. 3d 45, 48-49) . The court explained that a statute is procedural when it neither creates a new cause of action nor deprives the defendant of any defense on the merits. It concluded that the amendments to former Code Civ. Proc. § 411.30 were procedural because they did not create a new cause of action or deprive a malpractice defendant of any defense on the merits or affect vested rights (107 Cal. App. 3d 45, 49) .

[b] Procedural Statute Does Not Create New Action or Destroy Defense

In Owens v. Superior Court (1959) 52 Cal. 2d 822, 345 P.2d 921 , plaintiff brought an action for damages against defendant for injuries suffered after he was bitten by defendant's dog. Although the cause of action arose in California while defendant was a resident, he became a permanent resident of Arizona before the action was commenced. After he was served in Arizona, defendant moved to quash service of summons on the ground that it was ineffective to give the trial court jurisdiction over him. The court denied his motion and he filed a petition for a writ of prohibition to prevent further proceedings against him.

The California Supreme Court denied the peremptory writ. Defendant contended that former Code Civ. Proc. § 417(b) (now Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10), which enables a court to render a personal judgment against a defendant (if he or she was personally served) absent from the state but who was domiciled in the state at the time the cause of action arose, was inapplicable because it was enacted not only after the cause of action arose and after he had changed his domicile, but after the action was commenced (52 Cal. 2d 822, 827) . The Court disagreed with defendant. The statute governed procedure only because it neither created a new cause of action nor deprived the defendant of any defense on the merits. Defendant had no vested right to have the jurisdiction of the California courts limited as it was at the time he left the state. Accordingly, the Court concluded that former Code Civ. Proc. § 417(b) permitted entry of a personal judgment pursuant to service made after its effective date (52 Cal. 2d 822, 833) .

[c] Statute Regulating Costs May Be Applied to Pending Actions

In Mir v. Charter Suburban Hospital (1994) 27 Cal. App. 4th 1471, 33 Cal. Rptr. 2d 243 , a physician brought a mandate proceeding to challenge a disciplinary action imposed by a hospital's peer review committee. The trial court ruled in favor of the physician, finding that the committee's decision was not supported by substantial evidence. While the mandate proceeding was pending in the trial court, the Legislature enacted Bus. & Prof. Code § 809.9, which allows the prevailing party in a proceeding to challenge certain medical committee actions to recover costs, including attorney's fees, under certain circumstances. After the trial court's judgment was affirmed on appeal, the physician moved for an order awarding attorney's fees under this statute. The trial court granted the motion, and the hospital appealed.

One of the issues on appeal was whether Bus. & Prof. Code § 809.9 could be applied "retroactively" to the case. The court of appeal noted that, generally, a new statute is not to be given retroactive application unless it clearly appears that the Legislature so intended. However, whether a particular cost, including attorney's fees, is allowed a litigant depends on the terms of the statute that is in force at the time that the judgment is rendered, not on the law that existed when the suit commenced, unless a provision in the new legislation clearly indicates the Legislature's intent that such costs not be recoverable in actions pending when the new statute becomes operative. The court observed that application to pending suits of new statutes regarding costs is not regarded as giving retroactive effect to such legislation (27 Cal. App. 4th 1471, 1478) . In this case, Bus. & Prof. Code § 809.9 was potentially applicable because it became operative on January 1, 1990, and the trial court issued its ruling in favor of the physician on January 10, 1990. Since there was no clear indication that the Legislature did not intend Bus. & Prof. Code § 809.9 to apply to pending suits, the court held that the statute was fully applicable to this case (27 Cal. App. 4th 1471, 1478) . The court concluded, however, that the physician was not entitled to attorney's fees under § 809.9 merely because the committee lacked substantial evidence to support its decision and that a new hearing was required to determine whether the hospital's action was so lacking in merit as to be frivolous or in bad faith. The court therefore reversed the order and remanded the action for a new hearing on the motion for attorney's fees (27 Cal. App. 4th 1471, 1481-1488) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Change in Procedural Law Applicable Retroactively

In Department of Health Services v. Fontes (1985) 169 Cal. App. 3d 301, 215 Cal. Rptr. 14 , the court of appeal affirmed a judgment for the Department of Health Services in a creditor's claim proceeding against the estate of a Medi-Cal recipient for the amount of benefits that had been received by her. The court framed the issue as whether Welf. & Inst. Code § 14009.5 authorized the department to claim reimbursement for Medi-Cal benefits from the estate of a Medi-Cal recipient, when the recipient died after its effective date, but the benefits were received before its effective date. It said that a statute is not retroactive in its application merely because it draws on antecedent facts for its operation. The ultimate test is whether the statute as applied changes the legal effect of past transactions. Application of a statute that changes existing rights would be retroactive because the legal effects of past events would be changed. But a statute's application that merely affects procedures to be followed in the future is prospective because it does not deprive a person of any right that he or she had prior to the effective date of the statute (169 Cal. App. 3d 301, 304) . The court held that the application of Welf. & Inst. Code § 14009.5 to estates that arose after its effective date did not affect any existing rights and accordingly, had no impermissibly retroactive effect, even when the benefits had been received prior to its effective date (169 Cal. App. 3d 301, 305) .

F. RETROACTIVITY

§ 217.133 Opposing Contention That Statute Be Given Retroactive Application

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief. It should be combined with the general points and authorities set out in § 217.20.]

_____ [Specify statute or THE _____ (year) AMENDMENT TO _____ (specify statute)] SHOULD NOT BE APPLIED RETROACTIVELY, BECAUSE IT DOES NOT CLEARLY APPEAR THAT THE LEGISLATURE INTENDED IT TO APPLY RETROACTIVELY AND IT IS NOT A MERE CLARIFICATION OF EXISTING LAW.

A. No Retroactive Operation Absent Clear Intent. As a general rule of construction, statutes are not to be given retroactive effect unless the intent of the Legislature cannot be otherwise satisfied, or unless the new statute merely clarifies existing law. The Legislature, of course, is well acquainted with this fundamental rule, and when it intends a statute to operate retroactively, it uses clear language to accomplish that purpose (Balen v. Peralta Junior College Dist. (1974) 11 Cal. 3d 821, 828, 828 n.8, 114 Cal. Rptr. 589, 523 P.2d 629 ; Harpole v. Conrad N. Hilton Foundation (1996) 44 Cal. App. 4th 890, 906-907, 52 Cal. Rptr. 2d 491 ; Nelson v. A.H. Robins Co. (1983) 149 Cal. App. 3d 862, 870, 197 Cal. Rptr. 179).

[Optional] B. Destruction of Previously Acquired Interest Disfavored. Application of a statute to destroy interests that matured prior to its enactment is generally disfavored, absent specific legislative provision for retroactivity or other indication of legislative intent (Balen v. Peralta Junior College Dist. (1974) 11 Cal. 3d 821, 830, 114 Cal. Rptr. 589, 523 P.2d 629 ; see In re Marriage of Buol (1985) 39 Cal. 3d 751, 759, 218 Cal. Rptr. 31, 705 P.2d 354).

[Optional] C. Statute Modifying Civil Liability Not to Be Construed Retroactively. Absent some clear policy requiring the contrary, statutes modifying liability in civil cases are not to be construed retroactively (Robinson v. Pediatric Affiliates Medical Group, Inc. (1979) 98 Cal. App. 3d 907, 912, 159 Cal. Rptr. 791).

[Optional] D. Statute Shortening Period of Limitations Not to Be Construed Retroactively. To avoid the unconstitutional effect of retroactive application, a statute of limitations cannot be applied retroactively to destroy an accrued caused of action that is not barred by the then applicable statute of limitations (Krusesky v. Baugh (1982) 138 Cal. App. 3d 562, 566, 188 Cal. Rptr. 57).

[Optional] E. Erroneous Characterization of Statute as "Declaratory of Existing Law" Not Sufficient Evidence of Retroactive Intent. When a statute is amended in response to a judicial interpretation of the statute, an erroneous statement by the Legislature that the amendment merely declares existing law is not sufficient to overcome the strong presumption against retroactively applying the amendment [McClung v. Employment Dev. Dep't (2004) 34 Cal. 4th 467, 472-475, 20 Cal. Rptr. 3d 428, 99 P.3d 1015] .

[Set forth additional points and authorities relating to other rules of statutory interpretation that aid in ascertaining legislative intent behind statute and support interpretation desired (see §§ 217.21 -217.25, 217.40 -217.46, 217.60 -217.63, 217.80 -217.86, 217.88, 217.110, 217.111).]

This of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a party's contention that a statute should be given retroactive effect, that is, should be applied to facts and circumstances arising prior to its enactment. Such an argument might be made in any type of proceeding in which a party seeks to have a newly enacted statute applied to his or her case. These points and authorities may be combined with the general points and authorities set forth in § 217.20, which relate to the construction of statutes to ascertain and effectuate the legislative intent.

These points and authorities may be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities relating to the procedural context in which the issue of statutory interpretation arises. The points and authorities set forth in this form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should also insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should set forth the facts showing that the statute in question was enacted subsequent to the occurrences that are the subject of dispute and that there is no indication that the statute was intended to apply retroactively.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities set out in §§ 217.130 and 217.131.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Retroactive Operation Absent Clear Intent

Plaintiff in Balen v. Peralta Junior College Dist. (1974) 11 Cal. 3d 821, 114 Cal. Rptr. 589, 523 P.2d 629 , a school teacher, was dismissed by defendant district without cause or hearing. Plaintiff brought an action for reinstatement, lost salary, and damages. The superior court granted defendant's motion for summary judgment and dismissed plaintiff's action on the ground that plaintiff was a temporary employee dischargeable at will under former Educ. Code § 13446 (now see Educ. Code § 44954). Plaintiff appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed, holding that plaintiff was not a temporary employee but a probationary employee under former Educ. Code §§ 13334 (now see Educ. Code §§ 44915, 87476), 13336 (now see Educ. Code § 44917, 87478), and 13337 (now see Educ. Code § 44919, 87480), and as such was entitled to pretermination notice and hearing. The Court relied on the provisions of those statutes as of 1965, when defendant hired plaintiff. Defendant argued that plaintiff's status was changed to that of a temporary employee by a later statute, former Educ. Code § 13337.5 (now see Educ. Code § 87482). The Court rejected this contention, citing Interinsurance Exchange v. Ohio Cas. Ins. Co. (1962) 58 Cal. 2d 142, 149, 23 Cal. Rptr. 592, 373 P.2d 640 , and Di Genova v. State Bd. of Education (1962) 57 Cal. 2d 167, 176, 18 Cal. Rptr. 369, 367 P.2d 865 , for the general rule of construction that statutes are not to be given retroactive effect unless the intent of the Legislature cannot be otherwise satisfied, that the Legislature is well acquainted with this fundamental rule, and that when it intends a statute to operate retroactively, it uses clear language to accomplish that purpose. The Court found nothing in former Educ. Code § 13337.5 to indicate that it was intended to be applicable to employment rendered prior to its enactment (11 Cal. 3d 821, 828) . The Court also noted that former Educ. Code § 13337.5 substantially changed the system for classification of teachers so that the exception to the general rule of nonretroactivity applicable to legislation merely clarifying existing law did not apply to the case (11 Cal. 3d 821, 828-829 n.8).

Harpole v. Conrad N. Hilton Foundation (1996) 44 Cal. App. 4th 890, 52 Cal. Rptr. 2d 491 , involved claims by attorneys for the personal representative of the estate of Conrad Hilton, under Prob. Code § 18100 et seq., for fees. The attorneys had previously been awarded substantial "ordinary" and "extraordinary" fees for services rendered to the estate in the course of a special administration that ended in 1980. The attorneys petitioned for additional extraordinary fees and the estate sought disgorgement of portions of fees already paid. The trial court denied the petition for the additional fees, but also denied the estate's claim for repayment of fees. Both sides appealed. The questions presented on appeal were: does the court have the power to order repayment of any portion of fees previously awarded, and can the court take into account, in determining the amount of any future payments, the effect of prior fee awards from which no appeal was taken?

The statutory scheme for determining attorney compensation rates in probate matters was modified in 1987. The estate argued that the allowable attorney fees should be recalculated on the basis of the 1987 modification. The court of appeal stated the rule that a change in the law which deprives a person of a vested right or substantially impairs such a right is invalid, to the extent it purports to be retroactive, because it denies due process. The court added, however, that the rule does not equally apply when the change is merely "procedural" and not "substantive." But the court qualified that exception by adding that even procedural statutes will ordinarily, for reasons of fairness, be given only prospective application unless a clear legislative intent appears. Because the court found that modification of a prior statutory fee award would affect substantial vested rights, the 1987 modification could not be applied retroactively to deprive the attorneys of those fees already awarded. However, the court determined that while theycould not be retroactively modified, the prior fee awards could be considered in determining the amount of any future compensation sought by attorneys, and thus denied further compensation (44 Cal. App. 4th 890, 906-908) .

In Nelson v. A.H. Robins Co. (1983) 149 Cal. App. 3d 862, 197 Cal. Rptr. 179 , plaintiff brought an action alleging injuries from a defective IUD device, naming a family planning clinic and several Does as defendants. Subsequently, plaintiff filed an amended complaint naming the manufacturer of the device and several others as defendants. More than three years elapsed from the date of filing of the original complaint to service of defendants first named in the amended complaint. The newly named defendant manufacturer moved to dismiss the action as to it for failure to prosecute prior to trial, under former Code Civ. Proc. § 581a(a) (now see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 583.210, 583.250). The trial court granted the motion, and plaintiff appealed from the judgment dismissing her action.

The court of appeal reversed the order of dismissal and remanded the case to the trial court. Preliminarily, the court held that former Code Civ. Proc. § 581a(a) was applicable to the case, since under the facts before it the three-year period within which defendants named in a complaint must be served under had run with respect to the newly named defendants by the time they were served (149 Cal. App. 3d 862, 867-868) . The court stated that a plaintiff may be excused from dismissal when he or she had exercised reasonable diligence in serving the defendants. However, the court noted that after the action had already been brought the Legislature had eliminated reasonable diligence as an excuse by enacting former Code Civ. Proc. § 581a(f) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 583.240(d)), whose effect was to make dismissal mandatory except under the conditions set out in that section (149 Cal. App. 3d 862, 869-870) . In determining whether or not former Code Civ. Proc. § 581a(f) should have been applied retroactively to plaintiff's action, the court stated that there was no language in the section itself or in its legislative history implying that that section should operate retroactively. The court held that the silence of the enactment as to retroactive application is an authoritative statement that the Legislature intended it to have prospective application only. Additionally, an explicit rule calling for prospective application of former Code Civ. Proc. § 581a(f) appears in Code Civ. Proc. § 3, which states that no part of the Code of Civil Procedure is retroactive unless explicitly so declared (149 Cal. App. 3d 862, 870) .

The court also noted that former Code Civ. Proc. § 581a(f) was a procedural statute since its enactment neither created a new right nor eliminated a defense. There is authority suggesting that rules against retroactivity should not be applied to procedural statutes. However, the court held that such rules are applicable to a statute, even if it is procedural in form, when the substantive effect of the statute would be to change the legal effects of past events. In the case before it, the trial court's failure to hold a hearing to determine whether or not plaintiff had exercised reasonable diligence had taken place before the enactment of former Code Civ. Proc. § 581a(f), and was therefore a past event whose effect would be changed by a retroactive application of the section.

The court concluded that former Code Civ. Proc. § 581a(f) did not apply retroactively so as to reach the case before it, and that the trial court should therefore on remand conduct a hearing to determine whether or not the plaintiff had exercised reasonable diligence under pre-existing case law (149 Cal. App. 3d 862, 870-871) .

[b] Destruction of Previously Acquired Interest Disfavored

The facts and procedural background of Balen v. Peralta Junior College Dist. (1974) 11 Cal. 3d 821, 114 Cal. Rptr. 589, 523 P.2d 629 , are discussed under § 217.133[3][a]. In reversing, the Supreme Court rejected defendant's contention that former Educ. Code § 13337.5 (now see Educ. Code § 87482) should be applied to plaintiff prospectively from the time of its passage so as to reclassify him as a temporary teacher from that time. The Court held that application of a statute to destroy interests that matured prior to its enactment is generally disfavored. Absent specific legislative provision for retroactivity or other indication of legislative intent, it would manifestly be unjust to interpret the new section in a manner that would strip petitioner of his previously acquired status (11 Cal. 3d 821, 830) .

In re Marriage of Buol (1985) 39 Cal. 3d 751, 218 Cal. Rptr. 31, 705 P.2d 354 , involved a marital dissolution proceeding in which the only issue was the status of the home as separate or community property. Although title was taken in joint tenancy, the wife had made all the payments with her separate property money. The trial court found that the parties had an enforceable oral agreement and entered judgment awarding the home to the wife. The husband appealed from the judgment. While the appeal was pending, former Civ. Code § 4800.1 (now see Fam. Code § 2580) was enacted, providing that evidence of a written agreement to the contrary is required to rebut the presumption that property acquired during marriage in joint tenancy is community property.

The Supreme Court affirmed. It framed the issue as whether former Civ. Code § 4800.1 was to be given retroactive effect. The Court found that applied retroactively, former Civ. Code § 4800.1 unquestionably was substantive. A statute is substantive in effect when it imposes a new or additional liability and substantially affects existing rights and obligations. The Court noted that former Civ. Code § 4800.1 imposed a statute of frauds where there was none before, penalizing the unwary for relying onthe law as it existed at the time the property rights were created rather than at the time dissolution proceedings were underway. By eliminating the means by which one might prove the existence of the vested property right, imposing instead an evidentiary requirement with which it is impossible to comply, the Court found the statute affected the vested property right itself (39 Cal. 3d 751, 758-759) .

[c] Statute Modifying Civil Liability Not to Be Construed Retroactively

Plaintiff father in Robinson v. Pediatric Affiliates Medical Group, Inc. (1979) 98 Cal. App. 3d 907, 159 Cal. Rptr. 791 , recovered a judgment for medical expenses incurred on behalf of his minor daughter, who was injured by defendant's medical malpractice. The medical expenses had already been paid by an insurance company at the time of trial. Defendant appealed, contending that recovery of medical expenses was barred by Civ. Code § 3333.1, which abolishes the collateral source rule and thus allows reduction of damages by compensation received from other sources.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court noted that plaintiff's cause of action arose several months before Civ. Code § 3333.1 was enacted, and held that Civ. Code § 3333.1 did not apply retroactively. Citing White v. Lyons (1871) 42 Cal. 279, 284-285 , and a New York case, the court held that absent some clear policy requiring the contrary, statutes modifying liability in civil cases are not to be construed retroactively. The court found this rule to be applicable, since Civ. Code § 3333.1 may result in the reduction of damages for which a defendant is liable (98 Cal. App. 3d 907, 912) .

[d] Statute Shortening Period of Limitations Not to Be Construed Retroactively

On November 13, 1980, plaintiff in Krusesky v. Baugh (1982) 138 Cal. App. 3d 562, 188 Cal. Rptr. 57 , filed an action for legal malpractice arising out of her attorney's failure to secure her community property rights to part of her former husband's military retirement pension in a 1969 divorce proceeding. The trial court granted defendant's demurrer to the complaint on the ground that Code Civ. Proc. § 340.6, the statute of limitations for legal malpractice actions, barred her action. Code Civ. Proc. § 340.6 generally limits the time in which to bring a legal malpractice action to one year from discovery, or four years from the occurrence. The statute became effective January 1, 1978. (The statute was amended effective January 1, 2009, to provide a special limitation period for a malpractice plaintiff who must establish his or her factual innocence of an underlying criminal charge as an element of his or her claim against an attorney; in such a case the time to commence the malpractice action is two years after the plaintiff achieves postconviction exoneration in the form of a final judicial disposition of the criminal case (see Code Civ. Proc. § 340.6(a)).)

The plaintiff in this case appealed, contending, among other things, that she remained unaware of her rights for many years after the divorce, until less than one year before suit was filed.

The court of appeal reversed the judgment of the trial court with instructions to the trial court to overrule the demurrer based on the statute of limitations. Citing prior California law, the court stated that a statute is presumed to be prospective only and will not be applied retroactively unless such intention clearly appears in the language of the statute itself. Moreover, a shortened period of limitations cannot be applied retroactively to wipe out an accrued cause of action that is not barred by the then applicable statute of limitations. To avoid the unconstitutional effect of retroactive application, a statute of limitations must be applied prospectively to such causes of action. The court concluded that since Code Civ. Proc. § 340.6 contains no expression of legislative intent on retroactivity, the presumption is that the Legislature intended the limitations period to operate prospectively. Consequently, since plaintiff filed her action less than three years after the effective date of the statute, she was not barred by the four-year occurrence rule of the statute (138 Cal. App. 3d 562, 566-567) .

[e] Erroneous Characterization of Statute as "Declaratory of Existing Law" Not Sufficient Evidence of Retroactive Intent

McClung v. Employment Dev. Dep't (2004) 34 Cal. 4th 467, 20 Cal. Rptr. 3d 428, 99 P.3d 1015 , involved the interpretation of an amendment of Gov. Code § 12940(j), the Fair Employment and Housing Act provision that prohibits an employer's harassment of an employee. In 1999 the Supreme Court interpreted the provision as not imposing personal liability on a nonsupervisory employee who harasses another employee (see Carrisales v. Department of Corrections (1999) 21 Cal. 4th 1132, 1140, 90 Cal. Rptr. 2d 804, 988 P.2d 1083). The next year, the Legislature amended the statute by adding Gov. Code § 12940(j)(3) to impose personal liability on any employee who harasses a fellow employee. Section 12940(j) also contained a provision stating that "[t]he provisions of this subdivision are declaratory of existing law" (Gov. Code § 12940(j)(2)).

The question presented in this case was whether Section 12940(j)(3) was applicable to make a nonsupervisor liable for harassment occurring before the January 1, 2001, effective date of Section 12940(j)(3). The Supreme Court held that Section 12940(j)(3) was not applicable to conduct occurring prior its effective date (34 Cal. 4th 467, 476, 20 Cal. Rptr. 3d 428, 436) .

The Court emphasized that the Legislature had no power to state that the amendment of Gov. Code § 12940(j) was "declaratory of existing law," because the amendment unquestionably changed the law by overruling a definitive and final judicial interpretation of the statute. The Court explained that the interpretation of a statute is an exercise of the judicial power the California Constitution assigns to the courts. The Legislature has no authority to interpret a statute, because that is a judicial task. If the courts have not yet finally and conclusively interpreted a statute and are in the process of doing so, a declaration of a later Legislature as to whatan earlier Legislature intended is entitled to consideration. But even then, a legislative declaration of an existing statute's meaning is but a factor for a court to consider and is neither binding nor conclusive in construing the statute. Moreover, once the California Supreme Court has finally and definitively interpreted a statute, the Legislature has the power (subject to constitutional restraints) to overrule the decision by amending the statute, but it has no power to decide that the amendment merely declares existing law (34 Cal. 4th 467, 472-476, 20 Cal. Rptr. 3d 428).

The Supreme Court went on to hold that the change in the law represented by Section 12940(j)(3) did not operate retroactively. Generally, a statute that interferes with antecedent rights will not operate retroactively in the absence of a clear expression of legislative intent to apply the statute retroactively. In this case, the Court found nothing to overcome the strong presumption against retroactivity. In particular, the Court rejected a contention that an intent to apply Section 12940(j)(3) retroactively was shown by the statement that the subdivision's provisions merely declared existing law. The Court explained that when a statute is amended in response to a judicial interpretation of the statute, an erroneous statement by the Legislature that the amendment merely declares existing law is not sufficient to overcome the strong presumption against retroactively applying the amendment (34 Cal. 4th 467, 476, 20 Cal. Rptr. 3d 428). The Court also noted that any inference of legislative intent to have Section 12940(j)(3) apply retroactively was weakened by the fact that Section 12940(j)(2), which contains the "declaratory of existing law" language, predated the enactment of Section 12940(j)(3) (34 Cal. 4th 467, 476, 20 Cal. Rptr. 3d 428).

[a] No Retroactive Operation Absent Clear Intent

In Evangelatos v. Superior Court (1988) 44 Cal. 3d 1188, 246 Cal. Rptr. 629, 753 P.2d 585 , plaintiff high school student brought a tort action against several defendants after he sustained personal injuries while using certain chemicals. After the action was filed, but before the time of trial, Proposition 51, which modified the joint and several liability doctrine, and limited an individual tortfeasor's liability for noneconomic damages to a proportion of those damages equal to the tortfeasor's own percentage of fault, was passed by the voters. The parties sought a determination of whether or not Proposition 51 was applicable to their action. Both the trial court and court of appeal found it applicable.

The Supreme Court did not, and reversed. The Court explained that the first rule of construction is that legislation must be considered as addressed to the future, not to the past. A retrospective operation will not be given to a statute that interferes with antecedent rights unless that is the unequivocal and inflexible import of the terms, and the manifest intention of the legislature (44 Cal. 3d 1188, 1207) . The Court observed that nothing in the language of Proposition 51 expressly indicated that the statute was to apply retroactively, rather, the subject of retroactivity or prospectivity was not addressed. It said that under Civ. Code § 3 and the general principle of prospectivity, the absence of any express provision directing retroactive application strongly supported prospective operation of the measure (44 Cal. 3d 1188, 1209) . The presumption of prospectivity assures that reasonable reliance on current legal principles would not be defeated in the absence of a clear indication of a legislative intent to override such reliance (44 Cal. 3d 1188, 1214) . In the absence of an express declaration of retroactivity, the Court concluded that the proposition must be interpreted as prospective (44 Cal. 3d 1188, 1227) .

In Cole v. Fair Oaks Fire Protection Dist. (1987) 43 Cal. 3d 148, 233 Cal. Rptr. 308, 729 P.2d 743 , the Supreme Court affirmed a trial court decision holding that 1982 amendments to the Labor Code were inapplicable to an action by a firefighter against his employer for damages for intentional infliction of emotional distress resulting in a disabling stroke that occurred prior to the effective date of the amendments. The Court noted that even in the case of a procedural statute, in the absence of a showing that the Legislature clearly intended the amendments to be applied retroactively, they will be applied prospectively only. While there would be no constitutional bar to retroactivity of the statutes if the Legislature so desired, there was no legislative history to support retroactive application (43 Cal. 3d 148, 153) .

In re Marriage of Reuling (1994) 23 Cal. App. 4th 1428, 28 Cal. Rptr. 2d 726 , was a marital dissolution proceeding in which the court of appeal upheld a trial court's valuation of community property stock and stock options as of the time of trial. It rejected a former wife's contention that amendments to former Civ. Code § 5125(e) [now see Fam. Code § 1100(e)], which imposes a higher fiduciary standard on management and control of community property, should have been applied retroactively to the proceeding.

The court of appeal reasoned that a statute is retroactive if it affects rights, obligations, acts, transactions, and conditions performed or existing prior to adoption of the statute and substantially changes the legal effect of those past events. There is a strong presumption that statutes are to operate prospectively, absent a clear indication to the contrary. This long-established presumption applies particularly to laws creating new obligations, imposing new duties, or exacting new penalties because of past transactions. The rationale behind the presumption is that retroactive laws are characterized by want of notice and lack of knowledge of past conditions, and they disturb feelings of security in past transactions. Also, the purpose of a legislative alterations would not often attain significant advancement by application of the amended legislation to transactions that preceded the legislative change (23 Cal. App. 4th 1428, 1439) .

In Russell v. Superior Court (1986) 185 Cal. App. 3d 810, 230 Cal. Rptr. 102 , the court of appeal reversed a decision of the trial court that the Fair Responsibility Act of 1986 could be applied retroactively. Plaintiff's personal injury action against several defendants was awaiting trial on June 3, 1986, when the California voters passed the act (Proposition 51). The act eliminates joint and several liability for noneconomic damages, substituting a law of several liability only. Plaintiff and defendants filed motions in limine in the trial court on whether the act would be applied retroactively to plaintiff's action and the trial court ruled that it would be so applied. Plaintiff petitioned the Supreme Court for a writ of mandate and the Supreme Court transferred the matter to the court of appeal. The court of appeal reversed the trial court, holding that Proposition 51 applies only to causes of action arising after the effective date. The court relied on the presumption against retroactivity that applies when there is no clear legislative intent that the law apply retroactively, and on the fact that Civ. Code § 3 provides that no part of the Civil Code is to be retroactively applied in the absence of an express declaration. In addition, the language of the statute supported a finding of prospective application, and the stated goal of the statute, to lower insurance premiums, would not be furthered by a retroactive application (185 Cal. App. 3d 810, 818-821) .

[b] Statute Modifying Civil Liability Not to Be Construed Retroactively

In Perry v. Heavenly Valley (1985) 163 Cal. App. 3d 495, 209 Cal. Rptr. 771 , an action for injuries sustained by a former ski resort employee allegedly caused by the negligent attachment of ski bindings by another employee, the court of appeal reversed summary judgment for defendant. The court held that Lab. Code § 3602, as amended to abolish the dual capacity doctrine, was subject to the presumption against retroactivity. If the presumption was applied, it would bar a right of action that plaintiff previously had (163 Cal. App. 3d 495, 503-504) . Additionally, the statute is not expressly retroactive (163 Cal. App. 3d 495, 500-501) , and the Legislature was not clarifying existing law (163 Cal. App. 3d 495, 502-503) .

F. RETROACTIVITY

21-217 California Points & Authorities § 217.134

§ 217.134 Supporting Contention That Application of Statute Does Not Constitute Retroactive Effect

[The following may be included in a memorandum supporting or opposing a motion, or in a trial or appellate brief. It should be combined with the general memorandum set out in § 217.20.]

_____ [Specify statute or THE _____ (year) AMENDMENT TO _____ (specify statute)] SHOULD BE APPLIED TO THE PRESENT CASE, BECAUSE ITS APPLICATION WOULD NOT AMOUNT TO A RETROACTIVE APPLICATION OF THE STATUTE.

A. Statute Does Not Have Retroactive Effect Unless It Substantially Changes Legal Consequences of Past Events. A statute affecting the consequences of past events is not considered to have retroactive effect if it does not impair legal rights that arose when the events occurred (Californians for Disability Rights v. Mervyn's, LLC (2006) 39 Cal. 4th 223, 230-233, 46 Cal. Rptr. 3d 57, 138 P.3d 207 ; Myers v. Philip Morris Cos. (2002) 28 Cal. 4th 828, 847, 123 Cal. Rptr. 2d 40, 50 P.3d 751).

B. Application of Statute Is Not Retroactive If It Is Triggered by Event Occurring After Statute's Effective Date. The critical question for determining retroactivity of a statute usually is whether the last act or event necessary to trigger application of the statute occurred before or after statute's effective date. If in a given case that last act or event occurs after the effective date of the statute, then applying the statute in that case does not constitute a retroactive application (In re E.J. (2010) 47 Cal. 4th 1258, 1273-1274, 104 Cal. Rptr. 3d 165, 223 P.3d 31).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be used to support a contention that applying a given statute to the present case would not constitute a retroactive application of the statute. This form may be combined with the general memorandum set forth in § 217.20, which relates to the construction of statutes to ascertain and effectuate the legislative intent.

This form may be combined with a memorandum relating to the procedural context in which the issue of statutory interpretation arises. It may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should explain how the application of the statute would not impair any legal rights that existed before the enactment of the statute.

[b] Opposing Memorandum

In an appropriate case, the memorandum set out in § 217.133 may be used to oppose the contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Statute Does Not Have Retroactive Effect Unless It Substantially Changes Legal Consequences of Past Events

In Californians for Disability Rights v. Mervyn's, LLC (2006) 39 Cal. 4th 223, 46 Cal. Rptr. 3d 57, 138 P.3d 207 , the California Supreme Court approved the application of Proposition 64 to cases pending on the measure's effective date, because that did not constitute an impermissible "retroactive" application. Proposition 64, which took effect with its passage on November 2, 2004, added a standing requirement to California's unfair competition and false advertisinglaws (Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 17200 et seq., 17500 et seq.). Specifically, a private plaintiff can no longer bring a class or representative action under those laws unless he or she suffered injury in fact and lost money or property as a result of the alleged unfair competition or false advertising (Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 17203, 17204, 17535, as amended by Proposition 64). The Supreme Court held that applying Proposition 64's standing provisions to cases pending on the measure's effective date did not constitute a "retroactive" application, because the measure did not change the legal consequences of past conduct by imposing any new or different liabilities based on such conduct. The measure left entirely unchanged the substantive rules governing business and competitive conduct. Nothing that was lawful before Proposition 64 became unlawful, and nothing that was unlawful before the proposition was made lawful. Moreover, the measure did not eliminate any right to recover. Although applying Proposition 64's standing rules to pending cases could be seen as impairing the settled rights and expectations of uninjured plaintiffs to continue prosecution of their actions, that consequence was relatively insignificant and did not make such application of the measure "retroactive" (39 Cal. 4th 223, 230-233) .

In Myers v. Philip Morris Cos. (2002) 28 Cal. 4th 828, 123 Cal. Rptr. 2d 40, 50 P.3d 751 , the plaintiff, who smoked from 1956 to 1997 and lived in smoke-filled environments until August 1998, was diagnosed with lung cancer in April 1998. In 1999, she filed a products-liability suit in federal court against several tobacco companies. Answering a question certified to it by the Ninth Circuit, the California Supreme Court considered the applicability of Civ. Code § 1714.45, which formerly granted tobacco companies complete immunity in certain product liability suits as of January 1, 1988, but was amended to remove that immunity as of January 1, 1998. Noting the absence of a clear indication of legislative intent to have the repealing statute act retroactively, the Court held that the repeal of the immunity statute did not remove any immunity for conduct occurring while the immunity statute was in effect (28 Cal. 4th 828, 840-847, 123 Cal. Rptr. 2d 40, 50 P.3d 751). However, the Court also held that the repealing statute did remove protection that had been available under the immunity statute for conduct occurring before the immunity statute's effective date. In effect, the repealing statute restored the law to what it had been prior to the effective date of the (later-repealed) immunity statute. Thus, the removal of protection for conduct predating the immunity statute was not an impermissible retroactive effect of the repealing statute, because a retroactive effect is one that impairs rights a party possessed when he or she acted (28 Cal. 4th 828, 847) .

In In re E.J. (2010) 47 Cal. 4th 1258, 104 Cal. Rptr. 3d 165, 223 P.3d 31 , the California Supreme Court held that Penal Code § 3003.5(b), which places restrictions on where paroled sex offenders subject to lifetime registration may reside, applies to persons who were convicted of registrable offenses before the effective date of the statute but were paroled--and sought housing--after that date. The Court noted that often, the critical question for determining retroactivity is whether the last act or event necessary to trigger application of the statute occurred before or after the statute's effective date. The Court explained that under Section 3003.5(b), the pivotal "last act or event" that must occur before the mandatory residency restrictions come into play is the registered sex offender's securing of a residence upon his or her release from custody on parole. If that last act or event occurs after the effective date of Penal Code § 3003.5(b), then a conclusion that it was a violation of the registrant's parole does not constitute a retroactive application of the statute (47 Cal. 4th 1258, 1273-1274) .

§ 218.02 Governing Law

Subpoenas are the "process" used by courts to compel the production of evidence, including the attendance of a witness and books, documents or other things in the witness's control [Code Civ. Proc. § 1985(a)]. This process is governed by Code of Civil Procedure § 1985 et seq. Subpoenas for electronically stored information and access to that information by the party serving the subpoena are governed specifically by Code Civ. Proc. § 1985.8. Special rules apply to public employees [Gov. Code §§ 68097.1, 68097.3].

Proc. § 1985.6*, or a person whose personally identifying information, as defined in *Civ. [a] Use of Form

This memorandum is for use in support of a motion for an order quashing or modifying a subpoena or subpoena duces tecum pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1987.1 on the grounds that the subpoenaing party failed to serve the subpoena in a timely manner. This form can combined with § 218.20 for use by a party or witness who has not been timely served. The form also can be combined with § 218.21 for use by a consumer or employee whose personal records or employment records, respectively, have been subpoenaed but who has not received timely service under Code Civ. Proc. § 1985.3 (consumer) or Code Civ. Proc. § 1985.6 (employee).

Although service generally is limited to California residents (see Code Civ. Proc. § 1989), service on nonresident members of the California Highway Patrol is permitted under Gov. Code § 68097.3 [see § 218.28 for discussion of residency for purposes of a subpoena], and the form can be used to challenge untimely service to a nonresident member. Other contentions supporting a motion to quash or modify a subpoena are contained in §§ 218.23-218.26.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[OR]

Immunity of California Legislator. California legislators are immune from service of process during a session of the Legislature or for five days before and after a session (Cal. Const., art. IV, § 14; see Harmer v. Superior Court (1969) 275 Cal. App. 2d 345, 348, 79 Cal. Rptr. 855). Subpoenas are a "process" (Code Civ. Proc. § 1985(a)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum is for use in support of a motion for an order quashing or modifying a subpoena or subpoena duces tecum pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1987.1(a) on the grounds that the subpoena power of the court does not extend to the person subpoenaed. This form should be used by a witness or party in combination with § 218.20, which sets forth the statutory authority for the motion.

In general, service is limited to California residents [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1989], but there are limited exceptions that permit service on nonresident members of the California Highway Patrol under Gov. Code § 68097.3 [see § 218.22] and nonresident custodians of records under Code Civ. Proc. § 1987.3 [see § 218.28].

Although not subject to a subpoena as witnesses, nonresidents are subject to service of a summons while in California [Severn v. Adidas Sportschuhfabriken (1973) 33 Cal. App. 3d 754, 762-763, 109 Cal. Rptr. 328] . On the other hand, persons who are immune from service of a summons are also not subject to the subpoena power of California courts. Subpoenas are a "process" [Code Civ. Proc. § 1985(a)]. Accordingly, persons immune from service of process could move to have service of the subpoena quashed. For further discussion, see Ch. 132, Jurisdiction: Personal Jurisdiction and Inconvenient Forum in this publication.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[c] Related Memoranda

For forms and discussion related to a motion to quash service of a summons on grounds of immunity which may be adapted for use to quash service of the subpoena, see Ch. 132, Jurisdiction: Personal Jurisdiction and Inconvenient Forum in this publication. For forms relating to deposition subpoenas, see Ch. 83, Discovery: Depositions , in this publication.

[d] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, contentions set out in § 218.28 may be used to oppose the motion supported by this memorandum.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Immunity of California Legislator

Harmer v. Superior Court (1969) 275 Cal. App. 2d 345, 79 Cal. Rptr. 855 , was a proceeding for a writ of prohibition by three California state senators and a California state assemblyman, all members of the Advisory Commission on Indian Affairs, to restrain the superior court from proceeding against them in a civil class action, on behalf of American Indians residing in California. One of the legislators was served with a subpoena. The Legislature was in session at the time of service (and at the time that the appellate decision was rendered). The trial court denied a motion to quash service based on a California Legislator's state constitutional immunity from process.

The court of appeal reversed, and granted the writ. The exemption from civil process in the California Constitution for California Legislators (Cal. Const., art. IV, § 14), creates an exemption from civil process without qualification as to the kind or subject matter of the lawsuit, including one relating to a Legislator's personal affairs. Although immunity may convey some incidental personal advantage, the immunity is designed to protect legislators from distraction and interference during the legislative session. The immunity is not restricted to a class of lawsuits that involve legislative functions (275 Cal. App. 2d 345, 348) .

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum is for use in support of a motion for an order quashing or modifying a subpoena or subpoena duces tecum pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1987.1 on the grounds that the subpoenaing party has not properly served a subpoena on a public employee. This form should be used by a witness or party in combination with § 218.20, which sets forth the statutory authority for the motion.

In general, personal service of a subpoena is required [Code Civ. Proc. § 1987]. Under certain circumstances, however, government employees can be required to attend if service is made as required by the statute. This form is for use when personal service has not been made, or when service has not been made as provided for public employees defined in Gov. Code § 68097.1 as provided by that statute, or service has not been made for attendance of a nonresident Highway Patrol officer as provided by Gov. Code § 68097.3.

This form may be combined with other memoranda supporting a motion to quash or modify a subpoena contained in §§ 218.22, 218.23, 218.25 and 218.26. Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

For memoranda relating to deposition subpoenas, see Ch. 83, Discovery: Depositions , in this publication.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Service on Superior of Resident Peace Officers and Other Public Employees

Under Gov. Code § 68097.1, enumerated public employees may be obliged to attend court as witnesses to duty-related events or transactions even if they have not been served personally provided that two copies of the subpoena have been served on an employee's immediate superior, or an agent designated to receive service by that superior. The following public employees are covered by this provision: (1) peace officers; (2) membersof the California Highway Patrol, State Police or State Fire Marshal's Office; (3) sheriffs; (4) deputy sheriffs; (5) marshals; (6) deputy marshals; (7) district attorneys; (8) inspectors; (9) probation officers; (10) building inspectors; (11) firefighters; (12) city police officers; (13) other state employees; and (14) employees of the trial courts [Gov. Code § 68097.1].

[b] Service on Office of Nonresident Member of California Highway Patrol

Under Gov. Code § 68097.3, a nonresident member of the California Highway Patrol may be obliged to attend court as a witness if personally served or if service is made, during usual office hours, to the person in charge of the office where the member filed his or her report, at least five days before the date of the member's required attendance. This is an exception to the general rule that nonresidents are not subject to service of a subpoena [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1989].

This memorandum is for use in support of a motion for an order quashing or modifying a subpoena duces tecum pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1987.1(a) on the grounds that the subpoena was not served with a sufficient affidavit under Code Civ. Proc. § 1985(b). This form can combined with the form in § 218.20 for use by a party witness. The form also can be combined with the form in § 218.21 for use by any of the persons specified in Code Civ. Proc. § 1987.1(b) who are challenging a subpoena requesting personal or employment records or, in certain circumstances, personally identifying information [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1987.1(a), (b)].

A subpoena is invalid if a copy of the affidavit is not served at the time of service of the subpoena [Code Civ. Proc. § 1987.5]. The affidavit must show good cause for the production of the matters and things specified in the subpoena. The exact matters or things must be set forth, their materiality to the issues of the cases must be specified in full detail, and the affidavit must state that the desired matters are in possession of or under the control of the witness [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1985(b)].

CAUTION--Deposition Subpoenas:

A court of appeal decision has held that the provisions in Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1985 and 1987.5 providing that a subpoena is invalid if a copy of the affidavit showing good cause is not served at the time of service of the subpoena are inconsistent with and therefore superseded by Code Civ. Proc. § 2020.510 to the extent that they apply to deposition subpoenas [see Terry v. SLICO (2009) 175 Cal. App. 4th 352, 355, 95 Cal. Rptr. 3d 900 (Civil Discovery Act provisions supersede general subpoena provisions)]. Therefore, use of this form appears to be inappropriate if the subpoena at issue is a deposition subpoena. For a memorandum to be used to oppose a memorandum asserting application of Code Civ. Proc. § 1987.5 in relation to a deposition subpoena, see § 218.40.

This form may be combined with other memoranda supporting a motion to quash or modify a subpoena contained in §§ 218.22-218.24 and 218.26. Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For forms and discussion related to obtaining an order quashing or modifying a subpoena pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1987.1, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 535, Subpoena (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Memoranda

For a memorandum in opposition to this motion, on the grounds that there is no requirement under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2020.410(c) or 2020.510(b) that a deposition subpoena be accompanied by an affidavit or declaration showing good cause for the production of the documents and things designated, see § 218.40. For additional memoranda relating to deposition subpoenas, see Ch. 83, Discovery: Depositions .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Affidavit Accompanying Subpoena Duces Tecum Must Show Good Cause

In Grannis v. Board of Medical Examiners (1971) 19 Cal. App. 3d 551, 96 Cal. Rptr. 863 , the Board of Medical Examiners disciplined a physician, after holding an administrative hearing, for unprofessional conduct based on the physician's alcoholism. In a mandamus proceeding, the trial court affirmed the order of the Board revoking the physician's certificate to practice. The court also granted the Board's motion to quash a subpoena duces tecum which sought to compel the production of any documents in the possession of the Board's executive secretary regarding actions taken by the board against physicians convicted of drunk driving misdemeanors and "what, if any, discipline or penalties were imposed" (19 Cal. App. 3d 551, 564 (emphasis omitted)).

The court of appeal held that the trial court did not abuse its discretion in granting the board's motion to quash the subpoena duces tecum. The affidavit served with the subpoena duces tecum was made on "information and belief" without specifying additional supporting facts. The court held that this did not satisfy the good cause requirement of Code Civ. Proc. § 1985 even under the liberal standards of modern discovery law. The court noted that the request did not specify any specific records of other disciplinary action, or any actions taken against a specific doctor, such as the defendant. The affidavit did not even specify the nature of penalties "if any" imposed. The subpoena would have required the board to conduct a burdensome blanket search of records having dubious relevance to the case (19 Cal. App. 3d 551, 564-566) .

[b] Affidavit Accompanying Subpoena Duces Tecum Must Show Materiality of Requested Matter

In Lee v. Superior Court (2009) 177 Cal. App. 4th 1108, 99 Cal. Rptr. 3d 712 , proceedings under California's Sexually Violent Predator Act (SVPA) (Welf. & Inst. Code, § 6600 et seq.), the superior court denied motions by five defendants to quash subpoenas duces tecum issued by the district attorney. Each defendant filed a petition for writ of prohibition/mandate, and the petitions were consolidated. The subpoenas duces tecum sought a wide range of information including medical and psychological records, visitor logs, activity logs, patient arrival and departure logs, disciplinary records, mail logs, patient property requests and inventories, and trust accounts records.

The court of appeal held that the subpoenas were ineffective because each failed to include a declaration containing a sufficient statement of materiality, as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 1985(b). With respect to the medical records, declarations that lacked any factual bases for the legal conclusion that documents were material to the proceedings failed to comply with Code Civ. Proc. § 1985(b) (177 Cal. App. 4th 1108, 1129) . While the declarations of the subpoenas requesting nonmedical records included a fuller statement of materiality than the declarations supporting the subpoenas seeking medical records, they failed to contain sufficient factual bases or explanations for the conclusion that all of those types of documents were material to the narrow issues presented in an SVPA proceeding (177 Cal. App. 4th 1108, 1130) . The superior court therefore erred by ordering compliance with the subpoenas (177 Cal. App. 4th 1108, 1129-1131) .

People v. Schmitt (1957) 155 Cal. App. 2d 87, 317 P.2d 673 , was a prosecution for conspiracy to commit theft and the crime of false advertising. The defendant was a licensed chiropractor who advertised that he could cure cancer with a device (an oscilloclast) that harmonized the electronic oscillations of the human body. He alleged that he was being persecuted by a local television station that televised an expose of his treatment methods, and subpoenaed the station's financial records, reports and correspondence relating to the expose including records of payment to the American Cancer Society. The trial court granted the People's motion to quash the subpoena.

The court of appeal affirmed the defendant's conviction, and ruled that the trial court did not err in quashing the subpoena duces tecum. The allegations in the defendant's affidavit regarding the supposed conspiracy to persecute him were indefinite and insufficient to show that the documents were material to some disputed issue of fact at the trial (155 Cal. App. 2d 87, 105-106) .

[c] Request for All Documents Improper

Pacific Auto Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1969) 273 Cal. App. 2d 61, 77 Cal. Rptr. 836 , arose from an action for interference with contract filed by a county against defendants for money allegedly paid by the county to one of the defendants for medical services relating to injuries which he received when he was involved in an accident with one of the other defendants. The county served a subpoena duces tecum on an investigator who investigated the accident for the defendant insurance company. The subpoena required the investigator to produce all records and correspondence between him and the insurance company prior to the filing of the complaint which concerned the accident and related settlement negotiations. The trial court denied the insurance company's motion to quash the subpoena.

The court of appeal issued a writ of mandate requiring the court to vacate its order denying the motion to quash the subpoena duces tecum and to enter its order granting the motion. The court held that the subpoena was overbroad and did not sufficiently identify the material to be produced. The moving party had made no attempt to specify any particular documents or records, or their contents (273 Cal. App. 2d 61, 68-70) .

[d] Omnibus Description Improper

Flora Crane Service, Inc. v. Superior Court (1965) 234 Cal. App. 2d 767, 45 Cal. Rptr. 79 , arose out of an action for breach of contract in which it was alleged that the individual defendant was the alter ego of the corporate defendant. The trial court granted the defendant's motion to quash a subpoena duces tecum "without prejudice to the right to seek a new subpoena," and the plaintiff filed a petition for a writ of mandate.

In denying the writ, the court noted that the requisite identification may be defeated by the generality of the description, as in a so-called omnibusdescription. The unlimited characteristics of such a description may impair or destroy exactitude so that the custodian of records is not reasonably apprised of what he or she must produce (234 Cal. App. 2d 767, 786-787) .

This memorandum is for use in support of a motion for an order quashing or modifying a subpoena duces tecum pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1987.1(a) on the grounds that subpoenaing party was not authorized to disclose information that is personal and private. They should be combined with § 218.21, when appropriate, for use by a consumer or employee who, pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1985.3 or 1985.6, is challenging the subpoena of his or her personal or employment records.

The court may make an order modifying the subpoena as appropriate to protect the parties, witnesses, consumers, or employees from unreasonable or oppressive demands, including unreasonable violations of a witness's, consumer's, or employee's right of privacy [Code Civ. Proc. § 1987.1(a)]. However, nothing in Code Civ. Proc. § 1987.1 requires an person to quash, modify, or condition any subpoena duces tecum of personal records of any consumer served under Code Civ. Proc. § 1985.3(b)(1) or employment records of any employee served under Code Civ. Proc. § 1985.6(b)(1) [Code Civ. Proc. § 1987.1(c)]. For forms relating to prohibiting disclosure on the basis of the nonstatutory right of privacy, see Ch. 81, Discovery: Privileges and Other Discovery Limitations in this publication.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1985.3 (consumer) and Code Civ. Proc. § 1985.6 (employee), a consumer or employee, or his or her representative, has a right to receive notice from the subpoenaing party that the subpoenaing party has requested production of the consumer's personal records or the employee's employment records by a witness. Before the witness is required to produce the records, the subpoenaing party must either (1) serve upon the witness proof of service on the consumer or employee in accordance with Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1985.3(b) and 1985.6(b); or (2) furnish the witness with a written authorization to release the records [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1985.3(c) (consumer), 1985.6 (employee)]. However, if the subpoenaing party is the consumer or the employee, and the consumer or employee isthe only subject of the subpoenaed records, notice to the consumer or to the employee and the delivery of the other documents specified in Code Civ. Proc. § 1985.3(b) or in Code Civ. Proc. § 1985.6(b) are not required [Code Civ. Proc. § 1985.3(l) (consumer); Code Civ. Proc. § 1985.6(k) (employee)].

This general notice requirement also applies when the personal records of a public employee are subpoenaed from a state or local agency [Code Civ. Proc. § 1985.4]. Pub. Util. Code § 2891 has a similar requirement applicable when phone records of a consumer are subpoenaed [Code Civ. Proc. § 1985.3(f)]. The consumer or employee also may bring a motion to quash or modify the subpoena duces tecum before the date for production of the records [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1985.3(g), 1985.6(f)(1); see § 218.21].

This form may be combined with other memoranda supporting a motion to quash or modify a subpoena contained in §§ 218.22-218.25. Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

In an appropriate case, contentions set out in §§ 218.29 and 218.30 may be used to oppose the motion supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Production of Private Records of Public Employees Improper Without Service on Employee

Under Civ. Code § 1798.3, the term "personal information" means any information that is maintained by an agency that identifies or describes an individual, including, but not limited to, his or her name, social security number, physical description, home address, home telephone number, education, financial matters, and medical or employment history. It includes statements made by, or attributed to, the individual.

Gov. Code § 6254 establishes exemptions from the requirement of disclosure under the Public Records Act [Gov. Code § 6250 et seq.]. Gov. Code § 6254(c) sets out exemptions for personnel, medical, or similar files, the disclosure of which would constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. Other provisions of the Act also provide for exemption from disclosure. For example, Gov. Code § 6255 provides that an agency may withhold any record by demonstrating that on the facts of the particular case the public interest served by not making the record public clearly outweighs the public interest served by disclosing the record. For detailed discussion of the Public Records Act, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 429, Privacy (Matthew Bender), and DeMeo, California Deposition and Discovery Practice, Ch. 30, Right to Privacy (Matthew Bender).

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Production of Medical Records Improper Without Service on Patient

In Colleen M. v. Fertility and Surgical Assoc. of Thousand Oaks (2005) 132 Cal. App. 4th 1466, 34 Cal. Rptr. 3d 439 , plaintiff patient, who paid for in her vitro fertilization treatment using her ex-fiance's credit card, sued defendant health care provider for invasion of privacy and infliction of emotional distress, alleging the provider wrongfully disclosed the contents of her medical records to her ex-fiance and to his attorney. The trial court granted the provider's motion for summary judgment, and the patient appealed. The appellate court held, in part, that the provider was not liable for disclosure of the patient's medical records to the ex-fiance's attorney, because disclosure was compelled under Civ. Code § 56.10(b)(3) (132 Cal. App. 4th 1466, 1478) . Undisputed evidence showed the ex-fiance's attorney complied with the requirements Code Civ. Proc. § 1985.3(e), including that the patient be given notice of her right to object and to seek the services of an attorney in order to protect her privacy rights, and the patient did not file an objection. This evidence was sufficient to establish a complete defense to cause of action under Civ. Code § 56.10(b)(3) (132 Cal. App. 4th 1466, 1479) . Plaintiff's attorney's "weasel worded" testimony he was never "made aware" of the subpoena and notice of right to object would not support a finding by the trier of fact the documents were not received at the attorney's office (132 Cal. App. 4th 1466, 1480) .

A. Nonresident Custodian of Records Must Comply With Subpoena Duces Tecum If Attendance Not Required. When a subpoena duces tecum is served on a custodian of records or other qualified witness as provided by Evidence Code Section 1560 et seq. and his or her personal attendance is not required by the terms of the subpoena, then the residency limitations of Code of Civil Procedure Section 1989 do not apply (Code Civ. Proc. § 1987.3).

[AND/OR]

A. Service on Resident Partner in Lieu of Nonresident Custodian of Records Is Proper. A subpoena duces tecum served on the California partner of a national corporation is proper even though the corporation has designated an out-of-state custodian of records (*see Boal v. [a] Use of Form

This memorandum is for use in combination with § 218.27 to support a motion for an order directing compliance with a subpoena duces tecum on the grounds that the person served is subject to a subpoena. This memorandum also may be used to oppose a motion to quash or modify a subpoena on the grounds that the person subpoenaed is not subject to service [see § 218.23]. This form also may be combined with other memoranda supporting an order directing compliance [see §§ 218.29, 218.30]. Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Nondomiciliary May Be Obliged to Attend as Witness

In re Morelli (1970) 11 Cal. App. 3d 819, 91 Cal. Rptr. 72 , was a proceeding in which an intended nonparty expert witness in a personal injury action was found guilty of contempt for failing to appear. In a habeas corpus proceeding, the petitioner alleged, among other things, that the contempt complaint was inadequate because the papers failed to allege the petitioner's residence so as to indicate that he was subject to subpoena at the time of service.

In denying habeas corpus, the court of appeal noted that no California decision had construed residency for purposes of subpoena power. The court interpreted residence under Code Civ. Proc. § 1989 as residence in fact and not domicile. The court noted that residence is commonly interpreted as an "abode" or "address," and a person may have more than one residence at the same time. In contrast, domicile connotes a more settled and permanent presence, and a person has but one. The sojourning connection required under Code Civ. Proc. § 1989 is not as permanent as a domiciliary relationship. A mere "resident" (even if a nondomiciliary) has a sojourning connection of a type and duration which makes it not a hardship for attendence as a witness to be required (11 Cal. App. 3d 819, 831) .

[b] Service on Resident Partner in Lieu of Nonresident Custodian of Records Is Proper

In Boal v. Price Waterhouse & Co. (1985) 165 Cal. App. 3d 806, 212 Cal. Rptr. 42 , the plaintiff, a former partner of a national brokerage firm, sought to recover retirement benefits allegedly due. The trial court entered judgment against the plaintiff.

The court of appeal reversed on the ground that the plaintiff was improperly denied a jury trial. The court discussed an issue relating to a subpoena duces tecum served on a resident partner of the defendant because that matter may also arise on retrial (see Code Civ. Proc. § 43). The defendant contended that the subpoena was never properly served on the custodian of records for the firm located in New York. The court found this contention patently "ridiculous." The subpoena in this case was served on a resident partner who (1) was a party to the lawsuit, and (2) over whom the court had personal jurisdiction. Such a person may be required by service of a subpoena in California to produce documents wherever located. Other means must be used to secure documents when the subpoena has been served on a nonparty, nonresident custodian of records if the personal appearance of the custodian is required (165 Cal. App. 3d 806, 810-811) .

[The following should be combined with a general memorandum in support of a motion to direct compliance with a subpoena (see § 218.27).]

_____ [SHORTENING or WAIVING] THE SERVICE REQUIREMENTS FOR SUBPOENAING _____ [CONSUMER'S PERSONAL RECORDS UNDER CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE SECTION 1985.3(b) or EMPLOYEE'S EMPLOYMENT RECORDS UNDER CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE SECTION 1985.6(b)] PRESERVES THE _____ [CONSUMER'S or EMPLOYEE'S] RIGHT OF NOTICE AND TO MOVE TO QUASH OR MODIFY A SUBPOENA [DUCES TECUM] UNDER CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE [SECTION 1985.3(g) or SECTION 1985.6(f)] AND _____ [GOOD CAUSE and/or DUE DILIGENCE] HAS BEEN SHOWN.

[EITHER]

A. Subpoenaing Party Has Shown Good Cause to Shorten Time for Service on Consumer or Employee. On good cause shown, the time for service of notice of the subpoena duces tecum on the consumer under Code of Civil Procedure Section 1985.3(b), or on the employee under Code of Civil Procedure Section 1985.6(b), can be shortened provided that the rights of the consumer or employee are preserved (*Code Civ. [AND/OR]

B. Subpoenaing Party Has Shown Due Diligence for Waiver of Proof of Service Requirements. By showing due diligence, the subpoenaing party may obtain a waiver of requirements of constructive notice and proof of service on the consumer under Code of Civil Procedure Section 1985.3(c), or on the employee under Code of Civil Procedure Section Berkson (1988) 199 Cal. App. 3d 1230, 1238-1239, 245 Cal. Rptr. 525*).

This form is for use in combination with the form in § 218.27 to support a motion for an order directing compliance with a subpoena duces tecum to compel production of a consumer's personal records or an employee's employment records pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1987.1 on the grounds that the subpoenaing party may shorten, or the consumer or employee has waived service requirements under Code Civ. Proc. § 1985.3 (consumer) or Code Civ. Proc. § 1985.6 (employee). Good cause or due diligence must be shown.

This form also may be used to support a motion for an order directing compliance with a subpoena duces tecum to compel production of a consumer's personal records or an employee's employment records pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1987.1 on the grounds that, because the subpoenaing party is the consumer or the employee, and the consumer or employee is the only subject of the subpoenaed records, notice to the consumer or to the employee and the delivery of the other documents specified in Code Civ. Proc. § 1985.3(b) or in Code Civ. Proc. § 1985.6(b) are not required [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1985.3(l) (consumer); Code Civ. Proc. § 1985.6(k) (employee)].

This form also may be used to oppose a motion to quash or modify a subpoena duces tecum initiated by a consumer or employee [see § 218.21], or a witness [see § 218.20], on grounds that disclosure of personal or employment records is unauthorized [see § 218.26]. This form should be combined with the memorandum seeking compliance on the grounds that the subpoenaing party has complied with the procedures under Code Civ. Proc. § 1985.3 that are designed to protect the privacy rights of consumers in their personal records, or similarly under Code Civ. Proc. § 1985.6 for the employment records of employees [see § 218.30]. Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Patient Waives Doctor-Patient Privilege by Inaction

Inabnit v. Berkson (1988) 199 Cal. App. 3d 1230, 245 Cal. Rptr. 525 , was an action against a physician specializing in psychiatry brought by a mother and daughter seeking damages for the disclosure of their medical records to the attorney for a defendant in a separate wrongful death action brought by plaintiffs. The trial court granted summary judgment for the defendant.

The court of appeal affirmed. Plaintiffs, through their attorneys, received notice pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1985.3 that the medical records were being sought pursuant to a subpoena duces tecum in the wrongful death action. The plaintiffs then did nothing to claim the psychotherapist-patient privilege. This inaction constituted a waiver of the patient's right to confidentiality of medical information under Civ. Code. § 56 et seq., which left the defendant in the position of being compelled to disclose the medical records (199 Cal. App. 3d 1230, 1236-1239) .

[a] Patient Waives Doctor-Patient Privilege by Inaction

In Colleen M. v. Fertility and Surgical Assoc. of Thousand Oaks (2005) 132 Cal. App. 4th 1466, 34 Cal. Rptr. 3d 439 , plaintiff patient, who paid for in her vitro fertilization treatment using her ex-fiance's credit card, sued defendant health care provider for invasion of privacy and infliction of emotional distress, alleging the provider wrongfully disclosed the contents of her medical records to her ex-fiance and to his attorney. The superior court granted the provider's motion for summary judgment, and the patient appealed. The appellate court held, in part, that the provider was not liable for disclosure of the patient's medical records to the ex-fiance's attorney, because disclosure was compelled under Civ. Code § 56.10(b)(3) (132 Cal. App. 4th 1466, 1478) . Undisputed evidence showed the ex-fiance's attorney complied with the requirements of Code Civ. Proc. § 1985.3(e), and the patient did not file an objection. This evidence was sufficient to establish a complete defense to cause of action under Civ. Code § 56.10(b)(3) (citing Inabnit, discussed in § 218.29[3][a]) (132 Cal. App. 4th 1466, 1479) .

EITHER

A. Subpoenaed Person Opposing Inspection, Copying, Testing, or Sampling Has Burden of Demonstrating Inaccessibility of Electronically Stored Information. The subpoenaed person opposing inspection, copying, testing, or sampling on the basis that the information is from a source that is not reasonably accessible because of undue burden or expense bears the burden of demonstrating that inaccessibility (see Code Civ. Proc. § 1985.8(d)).

AND/OR

B. Court May Order Discovery of Electronically Stored Information From Source That Is Not Reasonably Accessible For Good Cause. If subpoenaing party shows good cause for the production of electronically stored information from a source that is not reasonably accessible because of undue burden or expense, the court may order discovery (Code Civ. Proc. § 1985.8(e)).

[2] Comments

This memorandum is for use in combination with the form in § 218.30A to support a motion for an order compelling compliance with a subpoena or subpoena duces tecum for production of the requested electronically stored information (ESI) in accordance with Code Civ. Proc. § 1985.8(a) on the grounds that [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1985.8(d), (e)]:

- The party or person opposing inspection, copying, testing, or sampling of ESI on the basis that the information is from a source that is not reasonably accessible because of undue burden or expense has not met its burden of demonstrating that inaccessibility, or

- Good cause has been shown for the production of ESI from a source that is not reasonably accessible because of undue burden or expense.

This form also may be used to oppose a motion to quash or modify a subpoena [see § 218.26A], on grounds that the requested information is reasonably accessible or that no good cause has been shown to justify compelling production of ESI that is not reasonably accessible because of undue burden or expense [see § 218.26B]. Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Court May Limit Production Even If It Finds Good Cause for Discovery or That Electronically Stored Information Is Readily Accessible

If the court finds good cause for the production of ESI from a source that is not reasonably accessible, the court may set conditions for discovery, including allocation of the expense of discovery [Code Civ. Proc. § 1985.8 (f)]. Further, the court must limit the frequency or extent of discovery of ESI, even from a source that is reasonably accessible, if the court determines that any of the following conditions exists [Code Civ. Proc. § 1985.8(g)]:

- It is possible to obtain the information from some other source that is more convenient, less burdensome, or less expensive.

- The discovery sought is unreasonably cumulative or duplicative.

- The party seeking discovery has had ample opportunity by discovery in the action to obtain the information sought.

- The likely burden or expense of the proposed discovery outweighs the likely benefit, taking into account the amount in controversy, the resources of the parties, the importance of the issues in the litigation, and the importance of the requested discovery in resolving the issues.

If a motion is filed under Code of Civil Procedure Section 1987.1 for an order to quash or modify a subpoena from the state of California for personally identifying information as defined in Civil Code Section 1798.79.8(b), for use in an action pending in another state or territory or district of the United States, or in a foreign nation, and that subpoena has been served on any Internet service provider, or on the provider of any other interactive computer service, as defined in 47 United States Code Section 230(f)(2), the court must award the amount of the reasonable expenses incurred in making the motion, including reasonable attorney's fees, if the moving party prevails and if the underlying action arises from the moving party's exercise of free speech rights on the Internet, and the respondent has failed to make a prima facie showing of a cause of action (Code Civ. Proc. § 1987.2(b)).

This memorandum supports a motion for an award of costs consisting of reasonable expenses, including reasonable attorney fees, incurred in supporting a motion to quash or modify a subpoena from the state of California for personally identifying information [see Civ. Code § 1798.79.8(b) (definition)], for use in an action pending in another state, territory, or district of the United States, or in a foreign nation, when that subpoena has been served on any Internet service provider, or on the provider of any other interactive computer service [see 47 U.S.C. § 230(f)(2) (definition) [Code Civ. Proc § 1987.2(b)]. The court must award the amount of the reasonable expenses incurred in making the motion, including reasonable attorney's fees, if the moving party prevails, and if the underlying action arises from the moving party's exercise of free speech rights on the Internet, and the respondent has failed to make a prima facie showing of a cause of action [Code Civ. Proc. § 1987.2(b)].

§ 218.40 Opposing Motion for Order Quashing or Modifying Deposition Subpoena Notice [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2020.010 et seq., 2020.210 et seq.]--Affidavit Showing Good Cause Is Not Required to Be Served With Deposition Subpoena [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2020.410(c), 2020.510(b)]

[This form should be combined with a general memorandum opposing a motion to quash or modify a deposition subpoena notice (see, e.g., § 83.70).]

IF A DEPOSITION SUBPOENA COMMANDS [_____ ONLY THE PRODUCTION OF BUSINESS RECORDS FOR COPYING or THE DEPONENT'S ATTENDANCE AND TESTIMONY AND THE PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTS AND THINGS], AN AFFIDAVIT SHOWING GOOD CAUSE FOR THE PRODUCTION OF THE _____ [BUSINESS RECORDS or DOCUMENTS AND THINGS DESIGNATED] IS NOT REQUIRED.

[EITHER]

A. Affidavit Showing Good Cause Is Not Required. If a deposition subpoena commands only the production of business records for copying, an affidavit or declaration showing good cause for the production of the business records is not required (Code Civ. Proc. § 2020.410(c); see Terry v. SLICO (2009) 175 Cal. App. 4th 352, 355, 95 Cal. Rptr. 3d 900).

[OR]

A. Affidavit Showing Good Cause Is Not Required. If a deposition subpoena commands the attendance and testimony of the deponent, and the production of documents and things, an affidavit or declaration showing good cause for the production of the documents and things designated is not required (Code Civ. Proc. § 2020.510(b); Terry v. SLICO (2009) 175 Cal. App. 4th 352, 355, 95 Cal. Rptr. 3d 900).

[CONTINUE]

B. General Subpoena Provisions Are Preempted by Civil Discovery Act With Respect to Deposition Subpoenas. The requirement in Code Civ. Proc §§ 1987.5 and 1985 that a subpoena is invalid unless a copy of the affidavit upon which the subpoena is based is served on the person served with the subpoena is inapplicable to deposition subpoenas because those provisions are preempted by the Civil Discovery Act, specifically CCP §§ 2020.410(c), 2020.510(b), which state that such a subpoena need not be accompanied by an affidavit or declaration (Terry v. SLICO (2009) 175 Cal. App. 4th 352, 358-360, 95 Cal. Rptr. 3d 900).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum is for use in opposition to a motion for an order quashing or modifying a deposition subpoena pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1987.1(a). The grounds for the motion are that under the Civil Discovery Act there is no requirement that the subpoena be accompanied by an affidavit or declaration showing good cause for the production of the documents and things designated, and that contrary requirements in the general subpoena provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure are preempted [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2020.410(C), 2020.510(b); Terry v. SLICO (2009) 175 Cal. App. 4th 352, 355, 95 Cal. Rptr. 3d 900 (provisions of Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1985 and 1987.5 requiring affidavit do not apply to deposition subpoenas)].

This form may be combined with the memorandum opposing a motion for an order staying taking of deposition and quashing the deposition notice contained in § 83.70.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Affidavit Showing Good Cause Is Not Required

Terry v. SLICO (2009) 175 Cal. App. 4th 352, 95 Cal. Rptr. 3d 900 , is discussed in 218.40[3][b], below.

In Terry v. SLICO (2009) 175 Cal. App. 4th 352, 95 Cal. Rptr. 3d 900 , a percipient nonparty witness challenged a superior court order that imposed sanctions on him for failing to appear at a deposition after being served with a subpoena demanding his testimony and the production of documents. The subpoena was unaccompanied by a supporting affidavit or declaration. The nonparty witness opposed a motion to compel his attendance on the ground that the subpoena served on him was invalid (175 Cal. App. 4th 352, 355) .

The court of appeal held that service of the deposition subpoena on the witness was effective despite the absence of a supporting affidavit or declaration, and therefore the trial court did not abuse its discretion in imposing reasonable monetary sanctions for failure to comply with the subpoena (175 Cal. App. 4th 352, 359) .

The general provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure dealing with the issuance of subpoenas, Code Civ. Proc. § 1985 et seq., apply to deposition subpoenas only to the extent that those provisions are not modified by provisions in the nonparty discovery chapter of the Civil Discovery Act, Code Civ. Proc. § 2020.010 et seq. (175 Cal. App. 4th 352, 356) . Code Civ. Proc. § 1987.5 provides that in the case of a subpoena duces tecum requiring appearance and the production of matters and things at the taking of a deposition, the subpoena is not valid unless a copy of the affidavit on which the subpoena was based is attached to the deposition notice served on each party or its attorney. Code Civ. Proc. § 2020.510(b), however, provides that a deposition subpoena commanding the attendance and the testimony of the deponent, and the production of business records, documents, or tangible things, need not be accompanied by an affidavit or declaration showing good cause. Faced with these two contradictory and irreconcilable provisions, the court of appeal held, as a matter of first impression, that Code Civ. Proc. § 2020.510(b) controls (175 Cal. App. 4th 352, 355) . Treating Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1985 and 1987.5 as the controlling would be at odds with Code Civ. Proc. § 2020.030 (providing that general subpoena provisions that include Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1985 and 1987.5 apply to a deposition subpoena "[e]xcept as modified in this chapter") and with the "fundamental understanding" that the provisions of the Civil Discovery Act prevail, to the extent that its provisions concerning nonparty discovery overlap or conflict with other provisions of more general application (175 Cal. App. 4th 352, 359) .

This chapter contains points and authorities supporting and opposing various contentions with respect to subrogation. Included are points and authorities supporting [see §§ 220.20 -220.27] and opposing [see §§ 220.41 -220.47] contentions by a subrogee or obligor, respectively, that subrogation lies. It also includes points and authorities supporting [see § 220.28] and opposing [see §§ 220.49, 220.50] contentions by the obligor and subrogee, respectively, that the action is for injury to the person and hence not subject to subrogation. Finally, it includes points and authorities supporting [see §§ 220.29 -220.40, 220.48] and opposing [see §§ 220.51 -220.57] contentions by the obligor and subrogee, respectively, that the subrogated action is subject to a specified defense.

PART I. INTRODUCTION

§ 220.03 Subrogation Defined

Subrogation is the substitution of one person (the subrogee) who by reason of some obligation or to preserve an interest has paid a creditor (the subrogor) a claim for which another person (the obligor) is primarily liable. Application of the doctrine enables the subrogee to recover from the obligor the amount of the claim paid to the subrogor [see Offer v. Superior Court (1924) 194 Cal. 114, 118, 228 P. 11 ; Redington v. Cornwell (1891) 90 Cal. 49, 58, 27 P. 40 ; Crowley Maritime Corp. v. Boston Old Colony Ins. Co. (2008) 158 Cal. App. 4th 1061, 1068, 70 Cal. Rptr. 3d 605 (insurance context); Hartford Cas. Ins. Co. v. Mt. Hawley Ins. Co. (2004) 123 Cal. App. 4th 278, 287, 20 Cal. Rptr. 3d 128 ; Ferraro v. Southern Cal. Gas Co. (1980) 102 Cal. App. 3d 33, 47, 162 Cal. Rptr. 238] . Subrogation is broadly defined as the substitution of one person in the place of another with reference to a lawful claim or right. It is a substitution of one person in place of another with reference to a lawful claim, demand or right, so that the person substituted succeeds to the rights of the other in relation to a debt or claim, and its rights remedies, or securities [State Bar of Cal. v. Statile (2008) 168 Cal. App. 4th 650, 662-663, 86 Cal. Rptr. 3d 72 (regarding statutory rights of subrogation)].

CHAPTER 220 SUBROGATION
PART I. INTRODUCTION

22-220 California Points & Authorities § 220.04

§ 220.04 Kinds of Subrogation

Subrogation has been said to be of two sorts, "legal" (or equitable) and "conventional" (or contractual). Legal subrogation has its source in equity and arises by operation of law. Conventional subrogation arises by the act of the parties and rests in contract [Fifield Manor v. Finston (1960) 54 Cal. 2d 632, 638, 7 Cal. Rptr. 377, 354 P.2d 1073 ; Knight v. Alefosio (1984) 158 Cal. App. 3d 716, 723, 205 Cal. Rptr. 42] .

Subrogation has also been classified as "common law subrogation" or "statutory subrogation" [see Commercial Union Assurance Co. v. City of San Jose (1982) 127 Cal. App. 3d 730, 734, 736-737, 179 Cal. Rptr. 814 ; Phoenix of Hartford Ins. Cos. v. Colony Kitchens (1976) 57 Cal. App. 3d 140, 144-145, 128 Cal. Rptr. 893 ; see also County of San Diego v. Sanfax Corp. (1977) 19 Cal. 3d 862, 875-876 n.7, 140 Cal. Rptr. 638, 568 P.2d 363] . Common law subrogation is nonstatutory, or merely confirmed by statute, and arises from common law equitable principles. Statutory subrogation is allowed only when authorized by statute.

Small claims courts lack jurisdiction of actions in subrogation by reason of the fact that subrogation operates as an equitable assignment and former Code Civ. Proc. § 117.5 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 116.420) provides that no claim shall be filed or prosecuted in the small claims court by the assignee of the claim [*Allianz Ins. Co. v. Municipal Court (1981) 126 Cal. 22-220 California Points & Authorities § 220.20

§ 220.20 Supporting Contention That Subrogation Lies--Doctrine of Equitable Subrogation Is Liberally Applied to Promote Justice and Actual Loss to Subrogor Is Not Required

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THIS IS A PROPER CASE FOR APPLICATION OF THE DOCTRINE OF EQUITABLE SUBROGATION BECAUSE THE DOCTRINE APPLIES WHENEVER A PERSON, NOT ACTING AS A MERE VOLUNTEER OR INTRUDER, PAYS A DEBT FOR WHICH ANOTHER IS PRIMARILY LIABLE, AND WHICH IN EQUITY AND GOOD CONSCIENCE SHOULD HAVE BEEN DISCHARGED BY THE LATTER; THE DOCTRINE IS LIBERALLY APPLIED TO PROMOTE JUSTICE. [ACTUAL LOSS TO THE SUBROGOR IS NOT REQUIRED].

A. When Equitable Subrogation Lies. The doctrine of equitable subrogation includes every instance in which one person, not acting as a mere volunteer or intruder, pays a debt for which another is primarily liable, and which in equity and good conscience should have been discharged by the latter (Meyer Koulish Co. v. Cannon (1963) 213 Cal. App. 2d 419, 424, 28 Cal. Rptr. 757 ; Estate of Kemmerrer (1952) 114 Cal. App. 2d 810, 814, 251 P.2d 345).

B. Liberal Application of Doctrine. The doctrine of equitable subrogation is liberally applied to promote justice (Meyer Koulish Co. v. Cannon (1963) 213 Cal. App. 2d 419, 424, 28 Cal. Rptr. 757).

[Optional] C. Actual Loss to Subrogor Not Required. Actual loss to a subrogor is not a prerequisite to equitable subrogation; all that is required is that the subrogor would have suffered loss had not the subrogee discharged the liability or paid the loss (Northwestern Mut. Ins. Co. v. Farmers' Ins. Group (1978) 76 Cal. App. 3d 1031, 1044, 143 Cal. Rptr. 415).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that the doctrine of equitable subrogation is liberally applied to promote justice. The argument may be used in any proceeding in which it is contended that subrogation lies.

These points and authorities may be used alone or combined with a memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue. For example, they may be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities in support of a motion for summary judgment by plaintiff in a subrogated action when it can be indisputably shown that there is no defense to the action, or in support of a motion for a new trial if the trial court erroneously ruled that subrogation does not lie [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 437c (summary judgment), 657(6), (7) (new trial)]. They may also be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities in opposition to: (1) a general demurrer to a complaint in subrogation [see Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]; (2) a nonstatutory motion by defendant in a subrogated action for judgment on the pleadings; or (3) a motion by defendant for summary judgment in a subrogated action [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c]. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, if the contention is made in support of or in opposition to a motion, other than a motion for judgment on the pleadings or new trial, counsel should present the facts showing subrogation lies and that allowing subrogation will promote justice in the case. The facts would normally be presented in one or more supporting affidavits or declarations under penalty of perjury to which reference may be made in this memorandum [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009, 2015.5; see also Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b)]. If the contention is made in opposition to a demurrer or motion for judgment on the pleadings, counsel should show that the complaint sufficiently alleges the facts. For the papers on which a motion for new trial may be based, see Code Civ. Proc. § 658.

[d] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in §§ 220.41 -220.44 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] When Equitable Subrogation Lies

Meyer Koulish Co. v. Cannon (1963) 213 Cal. App. 2d 419, 28 Cal. Rptr. 757 , was an action in subrogation by an insurer in the names of its insureds against a partnership and one of the partners for damages for breach of contract. Plaintiff insureds had shipped jewelry to defendants on consignment pursuant to consignment memoranda which placed the risk of loss from all hazards on defendants. While defendant partner was on a sales trip, his trunk containing the jewelry was stolen from the baggage room of a railway station while the trunk was checked on the railroad claim ticket.

Plaintiffs' motion for summary judgment was granted, and defendants appealed, contending that neither an insurance company nor a reimbursed insured can recover against anyone other than a wrongdoer who caused the loss.

Holding the insurer was properly subrogated to the claims of its insureds against defendants, the court of appeal affirmed the summary judgment as to one plaintiff and modified it as to the other to reduce the amount recovered to that prayed for in the complaint. The court said the principle on which the right of subrogation is founded applies in all cases in which one person, not a volunteer, pays a debt for which another is primarily answerable, and which, in equity and good conscience, should have been discharged by the latter, and that the principle is applied in favor of those who are legally bound to pay debts of others, such as sureties, guarantors, and insurers (213 Cal. App. 2d 419, 423-424) . The court said that this result is not affected by either the fact the obligor was not guilty of any negligence or wrongdoing or the fact the right involved was a contractual one, rather than a right founded in tort (213 Cal. App. 2d 419, 425) .

Estate of Kemmerrer (1952) 114 Cal. App. 2d 810, 251 P.2d 345 , was an appeal from a probate order denying a widow's petition that the decedent's entire estate be set aside to her. An order setting aside the estate to the widow was and is authorized by Prob. Code § 645 (for estates of decedents dying on or after July 1, 1987, see Prob. Code § 6609) with respect to estates that do not exceed a specified amount after payment of the expenses of the last illness, funeral charges, and the expenses of administration. Decedent died testate, survived by his widow, three children, and his mother. He disinherited his widow and did not provide for his children, stating they were amply provided for by his life insurance. By his will, he left his estate to a friend. The estate consisted of $400 in cash, a car worth $200, and accounts receivable totaling $1,441.73. Decedent's mother paid $335 toward the funeral expenses and filed a creditor's claim. The friend also filed a claim for $816.75 paid by her for hospital and nursing services during decedent's last illness. Both claims were allowed and approved. The executor filed a petition for instructions and first account, requesting permission to pay attorney fees and the claims for funeral and last illness expenses on a pro rata basis. The widow filed objections, asserting the payments made by the friend and mother were voluntary, and requested that the estate be set aside to her. The trial court approved the executor's accounts, overruled the widow's objections, and denied her petition to set aside the estate. The widow appealed, contending that Prob. Code § 645 (for estates of decedents dying on or after July 1, 1987, see Prob. Code § 6609), requiring that funeral and last illness expenses be paid before an estate may be assigned to the widow or children, contains no requirement of reimbursement to those who have voluntarily paid the expenses as a prerequisite to the assignment.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court held that neither the mother nor the friend was a volunteer or intermeddler or acting officiously, within the intent and purpose of the equitable policies governing subrogation, and said it perceived no difficulty in applying the doctrine of subrogation to their claims (114 Cal. App. 2d 810, 813-814) . The court said as now applied, the doctrine of equitable subrogation is broad enough to include every instance in which one person, not acting as a mere volunteer or intruder, pays a debt for which another is primarily liable, and which in equity and good conscience should have been discharged by the latter (114 Cal. App. 2d 810, 814) .

[b] Liberal Application of Doctrine

The facts and procedural background of Meyer Koulish Co. v. Cannon (1963) 213 Cal. App. 2d 419, 28 Cal. Rptr. 757 , are discussed in § 220.20[3][a]. In affirming the summary judgment for one plaintiff and modifying it as to the other plaintiff, the court said the equitable doctrine of subrogation will be liberally applied to promote justice (213 Cal. App. 2d 419, 424) .

[c] Actual Loss to Subrogor Not Required

Northwestern Mut. Ins. Co. v. Farmers' Ins. Group (1978) 76 Cal. App. 3d 1031, 143 Cal. Rptr. 415 , was a subrogated action by one insurer against another insurer to recover the loss resulting from defendant's alleged bad faith failure to accept reasonable settlement offers within their policy limits. Plaintiff's insured was involved in a rear-end accident while driving a pickup truck owned by his father who was defendant's insured. Plaintiff's insured, as a permissive user of the truck, was also insured under an omnibus clause in defendant's policy. Defendant's policy provided liability limits in the amount of $10,000 for injury or death of one person and $20,000 for injury or death arising out of one accident. Plaintiff's policy provided liability limits in the amounts of $25,000/$50,000. Under California law, defendant was the primary insurer and plaintiff the excess insurer [see Ins. Code § 11580.9(d)].

At the time of the accident, the occupants of the pickup were plaintiff's insured (who was an adult son of defendant's insured), an adult brother of plaintiff's insured, the brother's minor son, and a minor friend of the son. All the occupants were thrown from the truck and killed. The estates of the two minors each filed a wrongful death action against the truck owner and the estate of plaintiff's insured and estate of the brother (which was subsequently dismissed from the cases after its motion for nonsuit was granted). Defendant, as the primary insurer, undertook the defense of all the defendants in those actions. The offers of plaintiffs in the wrongful death cases to settle each case for $3,500 apparently did not reach defendant's file; their subsequent offers to settle each case for $4,500 was rejected by defendant, who offered $1,000 in each case on a take-it-or-leave-it basis. The wrongful death cases were consolidated for trial and the jury returned verdicts against the estate of plaintiff's insured in the amount of $30,000 for one plaintiff and $20,000 for the other. Judgments were entered accordingly. Defendant paid $10,000 on each judgment. Plaintiff paid the balance of each of the judgments, then sued defendant. Judgment in the subrogated action was for plaintiff and defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court held that a permissive user of an automobile who is insured under the omnibus clause of the vehicle owner's liability insurance policy has a right of action against the owner's insurer for its bad faith refusal to effect settlement within policy limits (76 Cal. App. 3d 1031, 1036, 1041-1044) . The cause of action is assignable (76 Cal. App. 3d 1031, 1041) . In addition, the permissive user's automobile liability insurer, whose coverage constitutes excess insurance, may be subrogated to the permissive user's right of action and recover from the owner's insurer, whose coverage constitutes the primary insurance, the amount the excess insurer was required to pay on a judgment against the permissive user as a result of the primary insurer's bad faith refusal to settle (76 Cal. App. 3d 1031, 1036, 1044-1053) . In response to defendant's contention that the decedent's estate had no right of action against it for bad faith refusal to settle because there was no judgment against the estate in excess of all applicable insurance and the estate was never threatened with or suffered any loss, the court said it is not a prerequisite to equitable subrogation that the subrogor suffered actual loss; it is required only that the subrogor would have suffered loss had the subrogee not discharged the liability or paid the loss (76 Cal. App. 3d 1031, 1044) .

Caito v. United Cal. Bank (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 694, 144 Cal. Rptr. 751, 576 P.2d 466 , is discussed in § 220.41[3][a]]. The Supreme Court, although holding there was no right to subrogation in the case before it, said that the doctrine of equitable subrogation is broad enough to include every instance in which one person, not acting as a mere volunteer or intruder, pays a debt for which another is primarily liable, and which in equity and good conscience should have been discharged by the latter (20 Cal. 3d 694, 704) .

St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Murray Plumbing & Heating Corp. (1976) 65 Cal. App. 3d 66, 135 Cal. Rptr. 120 , is discussed in § 220.45[3][a]]. The court of appeal, although holding that there was no right to subrogation in the case before it, said that generally the right of subrogation applies in all cases in which a person, not a volunteer, pays a debt for which another is primarily answerable, and which, in equity and good conscience, should have been discharged by the latter (65 Cal. App. 3d 66, 72) .

[b] Liberal Application of Doctrine

St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Murray Plumbing & Heating Corp. (1976) 65 Cal. App. 3d 66, 135 Cal. Rptr. 120 , is discussed in § 220.45[3][a]]. The court of appeal, although holding that there was no right to subrogation in the case before it, said the equitable doctrine of subrogation is to be liberally applied to promote justice (65 Cal. App. 3d 66, 72) .

[c] Actual Loss to Subrogor Not Required

Troost v. Estate of DeBoer (1984) 155 Cal. App. 3d 289, 202 Cal. Rptr. 47 , is discussed in § 220.24[3][a]]. The court of appeal quoted the rule that it is not a prerequisite to equitable subrogation that the subrogor have suffered actual loss; it is required only that the subrogor would have suffered loss had the subrogee not discharged the liability or paid the loss (155 Cal. App. 3d 289, 294-295) .

§ 220.21 Supporting Contention That Subrogation Lies--Payor of Note Secured by Mortgage or Trust Deed at Instance of Mortgagor or Trustor Is Subrogated to Mortgagee's or Beneficiary's Right Against Mortgagor or Trustor

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE DOCTRINE OF EQUITABLE SUBROGATION APPLIES IN THIS CASE BECAUSE PLAINTIFF _____ [PAID OFF or ADVANCED MONEY FOR THE PAYMENT OF] A NOTE SECURED BY A _____ [MORTGAGE or TRUST DEED] AT THE REQUEST OF THE _____ [MORTGAGOR or TRUSTOR] WITH THE UNDERSTANDING THAT HE/SHE WAS TO _____ [HAVE A FIRST LIEN ON THE PROPERTY AS SECURITY FOR REPAYMENT or BE PAID OUT OF THE PROCEEDS OF THE SUBSEQUENT SALE OF THE PROPERTY].

Subrogation of Payor of Mortgage or Trust Deed to Mortagee's or Beneficiary's Right Against Mortgagor or Trustor. A person who, having no previous interest and being under no obligation, pays off a note secured by a mortgage or trust deed, or advances money for its payment, at the instance of a debtor party and for his or her benefit, is subrogated to the right of the mortagee or beneficiary against the mortgagor or trustor (see Simon Newman Co. v. Fink (1928) 206 Cal. 143, 146, 273 P. 565 (chattel mortgage); Grant v. De Otte (1954) 122 Cal. App. 2d 724, 729, 265 P.2d 952 (trust deed)).

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that the doctrine of equitable subrogation applies to a person who, having no previous interest, and being under no obligation, pays off a note secured by a mortgage or trust deed, or advances money for its payment at the request of a debtor party and for his or her benefit.

These points and authorities may be used alone or combined with a memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue. For example, they may be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities in support of a motion for summary judgment by plaintiff in a subrogated action when it can be indisputably shown that there is no defense to the action, or in support of a motion for a new trial if the trial court erroneously ruled that subrogation does not lie [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 437c (summary judgment), 657(6), (7) (new trial)]. They may also be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities in opposition to: (1) a general demurrer to a complaint in subrogation [see Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]; (2) a nonstatutory motion by defendant in a subrogated action for judgment on the pleadings; or (3) a motion by defendant for summary judgment in a subrogated action [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c]. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, if the contention is made in support of or in opposition to a motion, other than a motion for judgment on the pleadings or new trial, counsel should present the facts establishing that the plaintiff, in making payment, did not act as a volunteer and that subrogation lies. The facts would normally be presented in one or more supporting affidavits or declarations under penalty of perjury to which reference may be made in this memorandum [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009, 2015.5; see also Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b)]. If the contention is made in opposition to a demurrer or motion for judgment on the pleadings, counsel should show that the complaint sufficiently alleges the facts. For the papers on which a motion for new trial may be based, see Code Civ. Proc. § 658.

[b] Rights of Redeemer of Property From Lien

A closely analogous problem is the right of a person to redeem property from a lien and to be subrogated to the benefits of the lien. Statute provides that every person having an interest in property subject to a lien has the right to redeem it from the lien at any time after the claim is due and before his or her right of redemption is foreclosed and, by such redemption, becomes subrogated to all the benefits of the lien as against all owners of other interests in the property, except insofar as he or she was bound to make redemption for their benefit [Civ. Code § 2903]. Statute further provides that one who has a lien inferior to another on the same property has a right (1) to redeem the property in the same manner as its owner might from the superior lien, and (2) to be subrogated to all the benefits of the superior lien, when necessary for the protection of his or her interests, on satisfying the claim secured thereby [Civ. Code § 2904; see Riley v. Turpin (1956) 47 Cal. 2d 152, 156-157, 301 P.2d 834 ; Stein v. Simpson (1951) 37 Cal. 2d 79, 83-84, 230 P.2d 816] .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Subrogation of Payor of Mortgage or Trust Deed to Mortagee's or Beneficiary's Right Against Mortgagor or Trustor

Simon Newman Co. v. Fink (1928) 206 Cal. 143, 273 P. 565 , was an action by a lender against a borrower, a bank, and the bank's cashier to revive and foreclose a first mortgage on personal property. The borrower had given the bank the mortgage to secure payment of two promissory notes aggregating $2,400. The bank's cashier handled the loan transactions. Subsequently, the borrower executed and delivered personally to the bank's cashier a note for $2,500 and a mortgage covering the same personal property. Both mortgages were recorded. Later, the borrower arranged with plaintiff for another loan. With the bank cashier's knowledge, it was agreed that with the funds borrowed from plaintiff the borrower would pay off the note and mortgage to the bank and give plaintiff a new mortgage on the same personal property. During the negotiations, plaintiff requested of the bank's cashier a report of how the borrower "stood." The cashier sent plaintiff a copy of the chattel mortgage and a statement that the amount due the bank was $2,400 plus interest. He also wrote that he, personally, held two notes from the borrower, one for $400 plus interest and one for $325 plus interest, which were unsecured. No mention was made of the $2500 note and the mortgage given to secure it. Plaintiff replied by letter requesting the cashier to prepare a release of the chattel mortgage held by the bank and stating it was not concerned with the borrower's indebtedness to the cashier personally and would not pay it. Plaintiff paid the borrower's debt to the bank and recorded both the release of the first mortgage and the mortgage given plaintiff by the borrower to secure the amount of his indebtedness to it. Evidence of the $2,500 note to the cashier and mortgage given to secure it was introduced at trial. The borrower testified he did not know he had given the note and mortgage to the cashier personally but believed he was dealing with him as an officer of the bank and that the second note and mortgage was a renewal of the first. Judgment was for plaintiff, and defendants appealed.

The Supreme Court affirmed. The Court said the general rule is that one who advances money to pay off an encumbrance on realty at the instance of either the owner of the property or the holder of the incumbrance, either on the express understanding, or under circumstances from which an understanding will be implied, that the advance made is to be secured by a first lien on the property, is not a mere volunteer. In the event the new security is for any reason not a first lien on the property, the holder of the new security, if not chargeable with culpable and inexcusable neglect, will be subrogated to the rights of the prior encumbrancer under the security held by the latter, unless the superior or equal equities of others would be prejudiced by it, and to this end equity will set aside a cancellation of the security, and revive it for the benefit of the holder of the new security (206 Cal. 143, 146) . The Court held the rule applies to mortgages on personal property as well as to mortgages on real property (206 Cal. 143, 145, 147) .

Grant v. De Otte (1954) 122 Cal. App. 2d 724, 265 P.2d 952 , was an action by a deceased attorney's executor for equitable subrogation of a claimed lien to a lien of a trust deed, or in the alternative to declare an equitable lien on the proceeds of the sale of real property covered by the trust deed. The trust deed had been executed by a husband and wife to secure payment of a promissory note. The husband subsequently died and the wife was charged with his murder. Plaintiff's deceased was employed to defend her, and she was acquitted. She was unable to pay the attorney's fees and orally agreed to sell the property and pay plaintiff's deceased from the proceeds. She employed plaintiff's deceased to assist her in selling the property. He listed the property with real estate agents and spent a substantial amount of his own money advertising the property but was unable to effect a sale. During this period the wife was unable to pay the monthly installments of principal and interest on the note and trust deed and defaulted; she was also unable financially to keep up the property as required by the trust deed. She asked plaintiff's deceased to make the necessary payments and he did so in order to prevent the loss of the money owed him for fees that would result from the foreclosure and in reliance on the wife's promise to repay him from the proceeds of the sale. The wife subsequently died and her executor requested plaintiff's deceased to continue the former payments since the estate had no assets. Plaintiff's deceased continued to make the payments until his death. The note and trust deed then became delinquent and the trustee gave notice of default and sale. At the request of defendant executor, plaintiff executor purchased the trust deed and note so the property could be sold and pay preferred claims against the estate of defendant's deceased. The property was subsequently sold. Since the present action was a cloud on the title, it was stipulated by plaintiff and defendant that on payment to plaintiff of the principal and interest accrued on the trust deed plaintiff would release his trust deed lien, that $9,500 of the proceeds of the sale would be impounded by the court until final judgment, and that this sum would constitute the only fund or property of the estate of defendant's deceased to which resort might be had to satisfy any judgment obtained. The complaint prayed that the $9,500 be declared subject to the lien of the trust deed in lieu of the real property formerly subjected to it, that plaintiff be subrogated to the rights of the trustee with respect to the payments made by plaintiff's deceased plus interest, and that the lien of the trust deed be revived for that purpose. Defendant's demurrer to the complaint was sustained without leave to amend and plaintiff appealed from the judgment of dismissal.

The court of appeal reversed. The court held the complaint stated a cause of action for the imposition of an equitable lien. The court stated that the doctrine of equitable subrogation applies to one who, having no previous interest and being under no obligation, pays off a mortgage, or advances money for its payment, at the instance of a debtor party and for his or her benefit; such a person is in no true sense a mere stranger and volunteer and, therefore, may be subrogated to the right of the mortagee against the mortgagor. The court added that it is a general rule that one who, acting in a representative capacity, satisfies obligations for the benefit of his or her principal, is subrogated to the rights of the creditor against the principal (122 Cal. App. 2d 724, 729) .

[a] Subrogation of Payor of Mortgage or Trust Deed to Mortagee's or Beneficiary's Right Against Mortgagor or Trustor

Katsivalis v. Serrano Reconveyance Co. (1977) 70 Cal. App. 3d 200, 138 Cal. Rptr. 620 , was an action by a widow against a lender to cancel a promissory note that had been executed, together with a trust deed, by her deceased husband for himself individually, and for her as attorney in fact pursuant to a power of attorney previously executed by her, in order to refinance two preexisting obligations secured by property held by the husband and widow in joint tenancy. The court of appeal reversed the trial court's judgment that imposed an equitable lien on the property in favor of defendant measured by the terms of the refinancing trust deed. The court of appeal held that imposition of an equitable lien in the amount of the new loan was error, but that the lender was entitled to relief on the general principles stated in Simon Newman Co. v. Fink (1928) 206 Cal. 143, 273 P. 565 [see § 220.21[3][a]]. The general rule applies in situations involving both a fraud perpetrated on the new security holder or involving a mistake of fact (70 Cal. App. 3d 200, 210-211) . That is, the court held the lender was equitably subrogated to the rights of the former lenders whose loans it had discharged. The court instructed the trial court to determine the amount for which the lender could properly claim a lien by subrogation to those rights (70 Cal. App. 3d 200, 215) .

§ 220.22 Supporting Contention That Subrogation Lies--Surety on Payment to Creditor of Principal Debtor's Obligation Is Subrogated to Any Cause of Action Creditor or Debtor Has Against Third Parties Responsible for Loss

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THIS IS A PROPER CASE FOR SUBROGATION BECAUSE PLAINTIFF SURETY, PURSUANT TO THE TERMS OF ITS BOND, PAID _____ [identify creditor to whom payment was made] AS THE RESULT OF _____ [identify loss] AND IS THEREFORE SUBROGATED TO ANY CAUSE OF ACTION _____ [THE CREDITOR or THE DEBTOR or EITHER THE CREDITOR OR THE DEBTOR] HAS AGAINST THIRD PARTIES RESPONSIBLE FOR THE LOSS[, AS WELL AS TO THE CREDITOR'S RIGHTS TO PRIORITIES OR SECURITIES].

Subrogation of Surety. A surety who pays a principal debtor's obligation to a creditor is subrogated to any cause of action either the creditor or debtor has against third parties responsible for the loss, as well as to the creditor's rights to priorities or securities (see Civ. Code §§ 2848, 2849; Regents of Univ. of Cal. v. Hartford Accident & Indem. Co. (1978) 21 Cal. 3d 624, 638 n.6, 147 Cal. Rptr. 486, 581 P.2d 197 ; *Commercial Standard Ins. Co. v. Bank of Am. [a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a surety who pays a principal debtor's obligation to a creditor is subrogated to any cause of action either the creditor or debtor has against third parties responsible for the loss, as well as to the creditor's rights to priorities or securities.

memorandum of points and authorities in support of a motion for summary judgment by plaintiff in a subrogated action when it can be indisputably shown that there is no defense to the action, or in support of a motion for a new trial if the trial court erroneously ruled that subrogation does not lie [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 437c (summary judgment), 657(6), (7) (new trial)]. They may also be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities in opposition to: (1) a general demurrer to a complaint in subrogation [see Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]; (2) a nonstatutory motion by defendant in a subrogated action for judgment on the pleadings; or (3) a motion by defendant for summary judgment in a subrogated action [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c]. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, if the contention is made in support of or in opposition to a motion, other than a motion for judgment on the pleadings or new trial, counsel should present the facts (1) establishing that the plaintiff paid a loss sustained by its principal or on account of its principal's default, (2) that subrogation lies, and (3) that a cause of action exists against defendant to which plaintiff is subrograted. The facts would normally be presented in one or more supporting affidavits or declarations under penalty of perjury to which reference may be made in this memorandum [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009, 2015.5; see also Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b)]. If the contention is made in opposition to a demurrer or motion for judgment on the pleadings, counsel should show that the complaint sufficiently alleges the facts. For the papers on which a motion for new trial may be based, see Code Civ. Proc. § 658.

[b] Surety Defined and Surety Insurance

A surety, or guarantor, is defined as one who promises to answer for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another, or hypothecates property as security therefor [Civ. Code § 2787]. Surety is a class of insurance defined in Ins. Code § 105 [Ins. Code § 100(5)].

[c] Duty of Principal to Reimburse Surety

A surety who pays the principal debt extinguishes the obligation and thus cannot as subrogee sue the debtor on the original debt [Regents of Univ. of Cal. v. Hartford Accident & Indem. Co. (1978) 21 Cal. 3d 624, 637-638, 147 Cal. Rptr. 486, 581 P.2d 197] . The principal is, however, bound to reimburse a surety who satisfies the principal obligation or any part of it for what the surety has disbursed, including necessary costs and expenses [Civ. Code § 2847]. For further discussion and forms of complaints for use by a surety to secure reimbursement from a principal and to compel contribution by cosureties, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 538, Suretyship, Bonds, and Undertakings (Matthew Bender).

[f] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in §§ 220.41 -220.45 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Subrogation of Surety

Regents of Univ. of Cal. v. Hartford Accident & Indem. Co. (1978) 21 Cal. 3d 624, 147 Cal. Rptr. 486, 581 P.2d 197 , was an action by the owner of a married student apartment project against the architect who designed the project, the general contractor, and the surety on the contractor's performance bond for damages because of latent construction defects. The trial court rendered summary judgment for defendants based on the ten-year period of limitation on the commencement of actions set forth in Code Civ. Proc. § 337.15. Plaintiff appealed from that portion of the judgment in favor of the surety.

The Supreme Court reversed on the ground a construction surety was not among those parties protected by Code Civ. Proc. § 337.15 and said a statute of limitations that describes only an action against the principal does not bar suits against the surety (21 Cal. 3d 624, 629, 632) . (Code Civ. Proc. § 337.15 was amended in 1980 to include sureties.) The Court characterized the surety's argument that a surety compelled to pay after the statute of limitations has run on the principal debt is denied its right to recover from the principal as the subrogee of the creditor's claim as betraying a misunderstanding of California suretyship law. The Court explained that under California decisions a surety who pays the principal debt extinguishes that obligation and thus cannot sue the debtor as subrogee of the original debt (21 Cal. 3d 624, 637) . Thus, subrogation in California suretyship law is not the surety's primary remedy for recourse against the principal but refers instead to a variety of rights which the surety may assert against third parties, cosureties, and property, most of which are unaffected by the running of the statute of limitations on the principal debt (21 Cal. 3d 624, 637-638) . The Court, in a footnote, explained: (1) the surety may be subrogated to any causes of action either the creditor or the debtor has against third parties responsible for the loss, and such causes of action should not be affected by the period of limitation governing the original debt; (2) the surety may also rely on Civ. Code § 2848 to seek contribution from cosureties; and (3) the surety may be subrogated to the creditor's rights to priorities or securities (21 Cal. 3d 624, 638 n.6).

Commercial Standard Ins. Co. v. Bank of Am. (1976) 57 Cal. App. 3d 241, 129 Cal. Rptr. 91 , arose out of an action by a property owner against a building contractor and its surety resulting from the contractor's default on an agreement to construct a duplex. Prior to executing the contract, the owner had entered into an agreement with a bank for a construction loan for which the owner agreed to pay the bank a loan fee and a specified percent per annum on the outstanding loan balance. The bank agreed to disburse the loan funds to the contractor for work completed on the project as evidenced by inspection reports supplied by bank employees. As a condition to granting the loan, the bank required the contractor to post performance and labor and material payment bonds. Thereafter, the contractor, as principal, and the surety executed and delivered to the owner, as creditor, a performance bond in the amount of the construction loan and a labor and materials payment bond in a specified amount. After a substantial start had been made on the project, the contractor defaulted. The owner filed a complaint against the surety and contractor for damages for fraud and a declaration that the performance and payment bonds were valid and binding as against the contractor and surety. The surety answered and cross complained against the bank for a declaration of the surety's right to be indemnified by the bank and to be subrogated to the owner's claims against the bank to recover damages for the bank's alleged negligent disbursement of the loan proceeds. The surety alleged: (1) the bank disbursed an excessive amount of the loan proceeds to the contractor; (2) the excessive disbursements were allegedly caused either by the bank's failure properly to inspect the construction project to ascertain the amount of work completed, or by the bank's failure to disburse funds in accordance with correct inspection reports; (3) because of the bank's negligent disbursement of funds there were, when the contractor defaulted, insufficient funds held by the bank to complete the project; and (4) the surety incurred liability as a direct and proximate result of the bank's negligence. The bank's demurrer to the cross complaint was sustained without leave to amend, and the surety appealed, contending it became subrogated to the owner's rights against all malefactors, including the bank, on making good the owner's loss resulting from the contractor's default. The bank contended the surety's right to subrogation was negated by Civ. Code §§ 2847 and 2848, that is, the surety was subrogated to the rights of the owner against the contractor, but not against third persons, including the bank.

The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's judgment of dismissal of the cause of action based on implied indemnity but reversed as to the causes for equitable subrogation and negligence. With respect to the bank's contention, the court said that Civ. Code § 2848 does not comprehensively and exclusively measure a surety's rights to subrogation, but is merely declaratory of the common law on the subject and controlling only so far as it goes. The court noted that: (1) California cases have approved application of the doctrine of subrogation to the creditor's rights against third persons when the surety's equities are superior to those of the third-party wrongdoer [see § 220.44]; (2) having agreed to and undertaken to disburse the loan proceeds in accordance with the value of the construction as it progressed, the bank owed the owner the duty to exercise reasonable care in so doing; and (3) the cross complaint alleged that it was the bank's negligence that caused the loss. Accordingly the court held the surety should be subrogated to the rights of the owner against the bank (57 Cal. App. 3d 241, 247-248) . The court further held that the cross complaint stated an independent cause of action for negligence against the bank (57 Cal. App. 3d 241, 248-249) .

[a] Waiver of Subrogation Rights

In Cathay Bank v. Lee (1993) 14 Cal. App. 4th 1533, 18 Cal. Rptr. 2d 420 , a lender sued a loan guarantor to recover a deficiency between the amount of the loan and the amount the lender obtained at a private foreclosure sale. The issue was whether the guarantor had explicitly waived his rights under Union Bank v. Gradsky (1968) 265 Cal. App. 2d 40, 71 Cal. Rptr. 64 , which held that a lender is estopped to recover a deficiency judgment against the guarantor when it elects a remedy (nonjudicial foreclosure) that cuts off the guarantor's subrogation rights against the debtor.

The court of appeal reversed a summary judgment for the lender and ordered that summary judgment be entered in favor of the guarantor. While the guaranty agreement informed the guarantor that he might lose subrogation rights, it failed to inform the guarantor that the loss of subrogation rights gives the guarantor immunity from a deficiency judgment, in the form of the estoppel defense, and that the guarantor was waiving that defense under the terms of the agreement. Noting that waiver is the intentional relinquishment of a known right, the court concluded that the guaranty agreement failed to contain a sufficiently "explicit" or "specific" waiver of the estoppel defense.

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THIS IS A PROPER CASE FOR SUBROGATION BECAUSE THE CAUSE OF ACTION SUED ON IS FOR TORTIOUS INJURY TO PROPERTY WHICH IS ASSIGNABLE AND THEREFORE SUBJECT TO SUBROGATION.

A. Assignability of Action. A thing in action, arising out of the violation of a right of property, or out of an obligation, may be transferred by the owner (Civ. Code § 954; see Civ. Code § 953).

B. Assignable Cause of Action as Subject to Subrogation. A person may be subrogated to another person's cause of action against a third person if. the cause of action is assignable (Offer v. Superior Court (1924) 194 Cal. 114, 120-121, 228 P. 11 ; Royal Indem. Co. v. Security Truck Lines (1963) 212 Cal. App. 2d 61, 64-65, 27 Cal. Rptr. 858).

[Optional] C. Applicability of Rule to Property Insurers. An insurer that pays its insured a loss under an insurance policy covering property is subrogated to the insured's cause of action against a third party who tortiously caused the loss (Offer v. Superior Court (1924) 194 Cal. 114, 118, 228 P. 11 ; Automobile Ins. Co. v. Union Oil Co. (1948) 85 Cal. App. 2d 302, 305, 193 P.2d 48 ; see Ins. Code § 2071).

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a cause of action for tortious injury to property is assignable under Civ. Code § 954 and is therefore subject to subrogation.

These points and authorities may be used alone or combined with a memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue. For example, they may be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities in support of a motion for summary judgment by plaintiff in a subrogated action when it can be indisputably shown by affidavits, declarations, admissions, answers to interrogatories, depositions, and matters of which judicial notice must or may be taken that there is no defense to the action, or in support of a motion for a new trial if the trial court erroneously ruled that subrogation does not lie [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 437c (summary judgment), 657(6), (7) (new trial)]. They may also be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities in opposition to: (1) a general demurrer to a complaint in subrogation [see Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]; (2) a nonstatutory motion by defendant in a subrogated action for judgment on the pleadings; or (3) a motion by defendant for summary judgment in a subrogated action [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c]. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, if the contention is made in support of or in opposition to a motion, other than a motion for judgment on the pleadings or new trial, counsel should present the facts establishing that (1) the plaintiff paid a loss sustained by, for example, its insured for damage to property, (2) the loss was caused by the tortious conduct of the defendant, and (3) a cause of action exists in favor of plaintiff's insured against defendant to which plaintiff is subrogated. The facts would normally be presented in one or more supporting affidavits or declarations under penalty of perjury to which reference may be made in this memorandum [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009, 2015.5; for the papers on which a motion for summary judgment may be based or opposed, see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b)]. If the contention is made in opposition to a demurrer or motion for judgment on the pleadings, counsel should show that the complaint sufficiently alleges the facts. For the papers on which a motion for new trial may be based, see Code Civ. Proc. § 658.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Assignable Cause of Action as Subject to Subrogation

Offer v. Superior Court (1924) 194 Cal. 114, 228 P. 11 , was a proceeding in prohibition arising out of a superior court action by an insurance carrier to recover a sum of money it had paid its insured for damage to the insured's car allegedly caused by defendant's negligence. The amount sought was below the minimum jurisdiction of the superior court, and the defendant demurred to the complaint on that ground. Plaintiff contended an action in subrogation is an equitable action and that under the provisions of the California Constitution (as it then read) and former Code Civ. Proc. § 112, the superior court had original jurisdiction of all actions in equity. The demurrer was overruled and defendant filed for a writ of prohibition.

The Supreme Court granted the writ. In holding that the superior court did not have subject matter jurisdiction of the action, the Court said (1) under Civ. Code § 954, a thing in action arising out of the violation of a property right or an obligation may be transferred by the owner; (2) the insured's cause of action arose out of the violation of a right of property; (3) under Civ. Code § 954 the cause of action was assignable; and (4) plaintiff's cause of action arose by way of subrogation or equitable assignment which is an assignment by operation of law (194 Cal. 114, 121) .

Royal Indem. Co. v. Security Truck Lines (1963) 212 Cal. App. 2d 61, 27 Cal. Rptr. 858 , was an action by an insurance carrier against a truck company to recover a sum paid by plaintiff to its insured pursuant to the terms of its policy for the replacement of a sign at a gasoline service station. The complaint alleged the sign was irreparably damaged by a truck owned by defendant and operated by its employee. Defendant filed a counterclaim for an amount substantially in excess of that sued for by plaintiff which allegedly was owed defendant by plaintiff's insured (subrogor) for the wrongful removal of a sign at another service station which plaintiff's insured had previously leased from defendant. Plaintiff stipulated to the verity of the counterclaim, authorized judgment to be entered accordingly, and preserved its right to appeal. The trial court accordingly entered judgment that plaintiff was entitled to its judgment against defendant and that defendant was entitled to a setoff against the judgment in its entirety [see § 220.30]. On appeal, plaintiff contended, among other things, that although a counterclaim could be asserted against an assignee it could not be asserted against a subrogee.

The court of appeal rejected plaintiff's argument and affirmed the judgment. With respect to defendant's contention that plaintiff was not an assignee, the court pointed out that under Civ. Code § 954 a thing in action arising out of the violation of a right of property, or out of an obligation, may be transferred by the owner. Under this section the insured's right of action was assignable, and the insurer merely had a cause of action by way of subrogation or equitable assignment, which is an assignment by operation of law (212 Cal. App. 2d 61, 64-65) .

NOTE:

Counterclaims have been abolished and causes formerly asserted by counterclaim are now asserted by cross complaint [see Code Civ. Proc. § 428.80]. However, a setoff is asserted by pleading the defense of payment [Code Civ. Proc. § 431.70].

[b] Applicability of Rule to Property Insurers

The facts and procedural background of Offer v. Superior Court (1924) 194 Cal. 114, 228 P. 11 , are discussed in § 220.23[3][a]. In ordering the writ of prohibition issued, the Supreme Court said the principle on which the right of subrogation is founded applies to cases of suretyship, but is applied in all cases in which one party pays a debt for which another is primarily answerable and which, in equity and good conscience, should have been discharged by the latter. Thus, insurance companies are given the right. This right of the insurer against the wrongdoer does not rest on any relation of contract or of privity between them but arises out of the nature of the contract of insurance as a contract of indemnity. The right arises independent of a provision in the contract of insurance which gives the insurer the right to recover damages from the person responsible for the loss (194 Cal. 114, 118) .

Automobile Ins. Co. v. Union Oil Co. (1948) 85 Cal. App. 2d 302, 193 P.2d 48 , was an action by fire insurers to recover the amounts paid their insured under their policies for damages to the insured's plant by a fire caused by a cleaning product manufactured and sold by defendant to the insured for cleaning greasy and oily floors. It was alleged the product was highly flammable and the fire occurred while the plant floors were being cleaned with the product by a regularly employed janitor, when, not knowing the product was flammable, he lit a match. Defendant's objection to the introduction of evidence on the ground the action was barred by the statute of limitations was sustained and judgment was entered for defendant.

The court of appeal reversed on the ground the trial court had applied the wrong statute of limitations. In reaching its decision, the court acknowledged that Ins. Code § 2070 requires that all fire insurance policies be on a standard form and that the standard form is set forth in Ins. Code § 2071, which contains a subrogation provision. Nevertheless, the court held the insurer's right against a third-party wrongdoer does not arise out of or depend on any contractual relation or of privity between them, but emanates from the nature of the insurance contract as a contract of indemnity (85 Cal. App. 2d 302, 305) . Quoting Offer v. Superior Court (1924) 194 Cal. 114, 118, 228 P. 11 , the court said the right of subrogation arises independent of a provision in the contract of insurance that gives the insurer the right to recover damages from the person responsible for the loss (85 Cal. App. 2d 302, 305-306) .

NOTE:

§ 220.24 Supporting Contention That Subrogation Lies--Insurer Is Subrogated to Rights of Its Insured When Conditions for Subrogation Are Met

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THIS ACTION IN SUBROGATION IS PROPER BECAUSE ALL THE ELEMENTS FOR EQUITABLE SUBROGATION OF PLAINTIFF INSURER TO THE RIGHTS OF ITS INSURED AGAINST THE DEFENDANT HAVE BEEN MET.

A. Elements of Equitable Subrogation. The elements of an insurer's cause of action based on equitable subrogation are as follows: (1) the insured has suffered a loss for which the party to be charged is liable, either because he or she is a wrongdoer whose act or omission caused the loss or because he or she is legally responsible to the insured for the loss caused by the wrongdoer; (2) the insurer, in whole or in part, has compensated the insured for the same loss for which the party to be charged is liable; (3) the insured has an existing, assignable cause of action against the party to be charged, which action the insured could have asserted for his or her own benefit had he or she not been compensated for the loss by the insurer; (4) the insurer has suffered damages caused by the act or omission on which the liability of the party to be charged depends; (5) justice requires that the loss should be entirely shifted from the insurer to the party to be charged, whose equitable position is inferior to that of the insurer; and (6) the insurer's damages are in a stated sum, usually the amount it has paid to its insured, assuming the payment was not voluntary and was reasonable (Troost v. Estate of DeBoer (1984) 155 Cal. App. 3d 289, 294, 202 Cal. Rptr. 47).

B. Insurer's Right to Subrogation. In the case of insurance, subrogation takes the form of an insurer's right to be put in the position of the insured to pursue recovery from third parties legally responsible to the insured for a loss that the insurer has both insured and paid (Fire Ins. Exch. v. Hammond (2000) 83 Cal. App. 4th 313, 317, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 596).

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that plaintiff insurer is properly subrogated to the rights of its insured against defendant because all the elements for equitable subrogation are present. For a memorandum of points and authorities for use by a property insurer subrogated to the rights of its insured against a third party tortfeasor who damaged or destroyed the property, see § 220.23. For a memorandum of points and authorities for use by an insurer subrogated to the rights of its insured against defendant indemnitor, see § 220.25. For a form of memorandum of points and authorities for use by an insurer in an action against it by its insured to support the propriety of a cross complaint for declaratory relief against a third party tortfeasor for a declaration of the insurer's right to be indemnified by the cross defendant, see § 220.27.

These points and authorities may be used alone or combined with a memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue. For example, they may be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities in support of a motion for summary judgment by plaintiff in a subrogated action when it can be indisputably shown that there is no defense to the action, or in support of a motion for a new trial if the trial court erroneously ruled that subrogation does not lie [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 437c (summary judgment), 657(6), (7) (new trial)]. They may also be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities in opposition to: (1) a general demurrer to a complaint in subrogation [see Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]; (2) a nonstatutory motion by defendant in a subrogated action for judgment on the pleadings; or (3) a motion by defendant for summary judgment in a subrogated action [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c]. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, if the contention is made in support of or in opposition to a motion, other than a motion for judgment on the pleadings or new trial, counsel should present the facts establishing that all the elements for equitable subrogation are present. The facts would normally be presented in one or more supporting affidavits or declarations under penalty of perjury to which reference may be made in this memorandum [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009, 2015.5; see also Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b)]. If the contention is made in opposition to a demurrer or motion for judgment on the pleadings, counsel should show that the complaint sufficiently alleges the existence of all the elements for equitable subrogation. For the papers on which a motion for new trial may be based, see Code Civ. Proc. § 658.

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in §§ 220.42 -220.45 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Elements of Equitable Subrogation

Troost v. Estate of DeBoer (1984) 155 Cal. App. 3d 289, 202 Cal. Rptr. 47 , was an action by an insured to recoup from an insurance agent the amount of the gap between an insured's primary liability coverage and the excess liability coverage resulting from the agent's negligent failure, as agent for the insured, to have procured sufficient primary coverage. The amount of the gap was $150,000 and was discovered when plaintiff was sued by a third party for damages for personal injuries resulting from an automobile accident involving one of plaintiff's employees. The insured was financially unable to pay the $150,000 and sued both the primary and excess insurers and the agent. The underlying personal injury case was settled for $300,000. The primary insurer paid $100,000. The excess insurer was liable for amounts in excess of $250,000, that is, for $50,000, and the insured was liable for the full amount of the gap, $150,000. The excess insurer agreed to pay the full $200,000 over the $100,000 paid by the primary insurer and plaintiff agreed to dismiss it as a defendant from the action, to pursue the action against the agent to recoup the $150,000, and to pay the excess insurer any moneys recovered. Judgment was entered for plaintiff pursuant to a directed verdict, and defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court said that only the legal conclusions to be drawn from the facts, and not the facts, were in dispute, and the court listed the elements of an insurer's cause of action based on equitable subrogation (155 Cal. App. 3d 289, 294) . The court held the elements were met. The court rejected defendant's argument that the insured suffered no loss because the insurer paid the amount of the gap. It is not a prerequisite to equitable subrogation that the subrogor have suffered actual loss; it is required only that the subrogor would have suffered loss had the subrogee not discharged the liability or paid the loss (155 Cal. App. 3d 289, 294-295) . The court also rejected the argument that the action was not assignable, holding that it was assignable as provided in Civ. Code §§ 953 and 954 (155 Cal. App. 3d 289, 296-297) . Defendant also argued that the excess insurer had no equity superior to that of defendant, but the court said the excess insurer was not contractually bound to indemnify the insured for the amounts between $ l00,000 and $250,000, nor was defendant, but it was defendant's wrong that created the potential liability both as to defendant and as to the excess insurer; manifestly, the excess insurer's equity was superior to that of defendant (155 Cal. App. 3d 289, 297) . Finally, the court held that the excess insurer was not a stranger or intermeddler who had no interest to protect. Aside from its interest in seeing that the reasonable expectations of its insured were fulfilled, the excess insurer was faced with a lawsuit claiming it was liable on the basis of an estoppel to deny coverage resulting from the representations (that plaintiff had $1 million automobile liability coverage) of defendant agent, who was clearly the excess insurer's agent for some purposes (155 Cal. App. 3d 289, 297) . The court concluded that the trial court properly ruled the doctrine of equitable subrogation applied (155 Cal. App. 3d 289, 298) .

The court also rejected defendant's argument that the insured had no recoverable claim because there was insurance coverage based on defendant's representations as the excess insurer's agent that there was coverage (thus estopping the insurer from denying coverage) and the insured's settlement with the excess insurer constituted a release of its agent as well. The court said defendant was not acting as agent for the insurer in representing to the insured that the insured had $1 million of insurance coverage and therefore the excess insurer was not estopped to deny coverage. The dual agency relationship was also the answer to the contention that the dismissal of the excess insurer from the lawsuit also constituted a release of defendant agent. Defendant negligently failed, as agent for the insured, to procure the required insurance. Thus defendant's liability to the insured was entirely independent of his capacity as agent for the insurer, and the release of the excess insurer did not release defendant (155 Cal. App. 3d 289, 298-299) .

In Fire Ins. Exch. v. Hammond (2000) 83 Cal. App. 4th 313, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 596 , the insureds maintained a fire insurance policy on a dwelling that they owned. They leased the dwelling pursuant to a rental agreement that did not expressly require either party to maintain fire insurance. The lessees did not obtain fire insurance. During their occupancy of the dwelling, the lessees negligently started a fire, causing damage to the property that was covered under the insured's fire insurance policy. The insurer paid the benefits covering the loss to the insureds, then sued the lessees for negligence and breach of contract under a subrogation theory. The rental agreement provided:

> MAINTENANCE, REPAIRS, OR ALTERATIONS: Tenant shall, at [the tenant's] own expense, and at all times, maintain the premises in a clean and sanitary manner including all equipment, appliances, furniture and furnishings therein and shall surrender the same, at termination hereof, as in good condition as received, normal wear and tear excepted. Tenant shall be responsible for damages caused by [the tenant's] negligence and that of [the tenant's] family or invitees and guests. ...
> DAMAGES TO PREMISES: if the premises are ... damaged by fire or from any other cause as to render them untenantable, then either party shall have the right to terminate this Lease as of the date on which such damage occurs, through written notice to the other party, to be given within fifteen ... days after the occurrence of such damage; except that should such damage or destruction occur as a result of the abuse or negligence of Tenant, or its invitees, then Owner only shall have the right of termination. ... If this lease is not terminated, the Owner shall promptly repair the premises and there shall be a proportionate deduction of rent until the premises are repaired and ready for Tenant's occupancy. The proportionate reduction shall be based on the extent to which the making of repairs interferes with Tenant's reasonable use of the premises.

The lessees moved for summary judgment, arguing that subrogation was unavailable as a matter of law, on the ground that the lessor's fire policy was for the mutual benefit of the lessor and the lessees. The court entered judgment for the lessees, finding that the "DAMAGES TO PREMISES" section of the agreement "adverts to fire damage ... and there is no specific obligation placed upon [the lessees] to obtain insurance." The insurer appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that the rental agreement contained no term expressly or impliedly overriding the provision holding the lessees liable for their negligence or the negligence of their guests or invitees, whatever the cause. The insurer's subrogation action was therefore viable, and the lessees were not entitled to judgment as a matter of law (83 Cal. App. 4th 313, 321) . Initially, the court noted that in the case of insurance, subrogation takes the form of an insurer's right to be put in the position of the insured to pursue recovery from third parties legally responsible to the insured for a loss that the insurer has both insured and paid. The right of subrogation is purely derivative. An insurer entitled to subrogation is in the same position as an assignee of the insured's claim and succeeds only to the rights of the insured. The subrogated insurer is said to "stand in the shoes" of its insured, because it has no greater rights than the insured and is subject to the same defenses that can be asserted against the insured. Thus, an insurer cannot acquire by subrogation anything to which the insured has no rights, and an insurer may claim no rights that the insured does not have. The court also noted that in California, a lessee is not responsible for negligently caused fire damages if the lessor and lessee intended the lessor's fire policy to be for their mutual benefit (83 Cal. App. 4th 313, 317) . However, under the rental agreement in this case, the parties had no reasonable expectation that the lessees were exculpated from liability for negligently caused fire damages, or that the lessor's fire insurance policy was for their mutual benefit. The agreement contained no term expressly or impliedly overriding the provision holding the lessees liable for their negligence or the negligence of their guests or invitees, whatever the cause, nor did the lessors and lessees have any other understanding to that effect. Accordingly, the court held that the insurer's subrogation action was viable and that the lessees were not entitled to judgment as a matter of law (83 Cal. App. 4th 313, 321) .

[a] Insurer's Right to Subrogation

In Interstate Fire & Cas. Ins. Co. v. Cleveland Wrecking Co. (2010) 182 Cal. App. 4th 23, 105 Cal. Rptr. 3d 606, the insurer issued a CGL policy to the steel subcontractor on a construction project; the policy named the general contractor as an additional insured. Although the other subcontractor, which provided demolition services, was also obligated by agreement to provide indemnity and defense coverage to the general contractor, it failed to do so. An employee of the steel subcontractor was injured on the project because of negligence by an employee of the demolition subcontractor.

The injured person filed suit against the demolition subcontractor and the general contractor, alleging, among other things, the demolition subcontractor's negligence. The general contractor sought indemnity and defense from the demolition subcontractor, which refused; and from the steel subcontractor's insurer, which accepted. The general contractor filed a cross-complaint against both subcontractors for indemnification and breach of contract. The general contractor and injured person entered into a good-faith settlement; the steel contractor's insurer funded the settlement payment. The demolition subcontractor also entered into a good-faith settlement with the injured person. The insurer then filed an action for subrogation against the demolition subcontractor, alleging breach of its contract with the general contractor by failing to defend and indemnify it. The trial court entered a dismissal, sustaining a demurrer to the complaint on the ground that the underlying good-faith settlement prevented the general contractor from suing the subcontractor for indemnity or contribution for its alleged negligent conduct; and that the general contractor could not claim breach of the duty to defend because of the lack of consequential damages. The trial court held that the insurer's equitable position was not superior to that of the subcontractor (182 Cal. App. 4th 23, 31). The appellate court reversed, holding that a good-faith settlement order does not bar a nonsettling tortfeasor from asserting an indemnification claim against the settling defendants based on an express contract. Because an insurer stands in the shoes of its insured, the insurer can pursue a cause of action against the settling tortfeasor for breach of an express contractual indemnification clause (182 Cal. App. 4th 23, 32-33, 50). The elements of subrogation are met by the following: (1) the insured general contractor suffered a loss for which the defendant is liable; (2) the loss was one for which the insurer was not primarily liable; (3) the insurer compensated the insured for the loss; (4) the insured has a cause of action against the defendant; (5) the insurer suffered damages arising from the defendant's act or omission; and (6) the insurer's equitable position is superior to the defendant's (182 Cal. App. 4th 23, 34-49).

In Crowley Maritime Corp. v. Boston Old Colony Ins. Co. (2008) 158 Cal. App. 4th 1061, 70 Cal. Rptr. 3d 605 , a maritime case involving several insurers, the insured corporation received indemnification for claims from two of plaintiff's insurers. Those insurers sought equitable contribution from other insurers of the plaintiff, including two foreign insurers, one of which petitioned to compel arbitration of the equitable contribution claim under English law, based on arbitration agreements. The trial court denied the petition on the grounds that the equitable contribution claim did not arise from contract; and the indemnifying insurers were not signatories to the arbitration agreements. The appellate court affirmed, holding that the equitable contribution claims arose from equity, rather than from contract. Exceptions to the general rule against compelling nonsignatories to arbitrate did not apply in this case (158 Cal. App. 4th 1061, 1066-1067). In so holding, the court stated that the insurers seeking equitable contribution confused that doctrine with equitable subrogation. In the insurance context, equitable subrogation generally involves the substitution of the insurer in the position of its insured to seek reimbursement from responsible third parties for the loss paid the insured by the insurer. An insurer entitled to subrogation is in the same position as an assignee of the insured's claim, and succeeds only to the rights of the insured case (158 Cal. App. 4th 1061, 1067) .

THIS ACTION IS PROPER BECAUSE PLAINTIFF HAS PAID THE TORT LIABILITY OF ITS INSURED WHO WAS INDEMNIFIED AGAINST THE LOSS BY DEFENDANT INDEMNITOR.

Subrogation of Indemnitee's Insurer Against Indemnitor. An insurer that pays a tort liability of its insured who is expressly indemnified against the loss by another is subrogated to the insured's claim for indemnity against the other (Rossmoor Sanitation, Inc. v. Pylon, Inc. (1975) 13 Cal. 3d 622, 633-635, 119 Cal. Rptr. 449, 532 P.2d 97).

[2] Comments

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that an insurer that pays a claim or judgment against its insured who is indemnified against the loss by another, is subrogated to its insured's claim against the indemnitee.

These points and authorities may be used alone or combined with a memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue. For example, they may be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities in support of a motion for summary judgment by plaintiff in a subrogated action when it can be indisputably shown that there is no defense to the action, or in support of a motion for a new trial if the trial court erroneously ruled that subrogation does not lie [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 437c (summary judgment), 657(6), (7) (new trial)]. They may also be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities in opposition to: (1) a general demurrer to a complaint in subrogation [see Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]; (2) a nonstatutory motion by defendant in a subrogated action for judgment on the pleadings; or (3) a motion by defendant for summary judgment in a subrogated action [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c]. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, if the contention is made in support of or in opposition to a motion, other than a motion for judgment on the pleadings or new trial, counsel should present the facts establishing that the plaintiff insured the indemnitee, the indemnitee was liable on the tort claim or judgment, the plaintiff paid the claim or judgment, and the indemnitee was indemnified against that specific liability by defendant indemnitor. The facts would normally be presented in one or more supporting affidavits or declarations under penalty of perjury to which reference may be made in this memorandum [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009, 2015.5; see also Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b)]. If the contention is made in opposition to a demurrer or motion for judgment on the pleadings, counsel should show that the complaint sufficiently alleges the facts. For the papers on which a motion for new trial may be based, see Code Civ. Proc. § 658.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Subrogation of Indemnitee's Insurer Against Indemnitor

Rossmoor Sanitation, Inc. v. Pylon, Inc. (1975) 13 Cal. 3d 622, 119 Cal. Rptr. 449, 532 P.2d 97 , was a declaratory relief action by a sanitation district and its insurer against a sewage facility contractor and its insurer for indemnity to recover sums expended in satisfying a prior tort judgment against the district. The district had employed the contractor to construct a sewage pump station and sewer lines. In the employment contract, the contractor agreed to indemnify the district against all claims for damages arising out of the work and for attorney fees and costs that might be incurred in the event of a damage suit. The contractor also agreed to obtain insurance for itself and to name the district in the policy as an additional insured, and did so. The district also had independent coverage under a policy issued by plaintiff insurer. Both policies contained "other insurance" clauses, each stating that an apportionment would be made if the insured had other insurance against a loss covered by the policy. One of the contractor's employees was killed and another injured in the cave-in of a trench which they had entered without shoring it, although shoring material was available. The injured employee and the deceased employee's heirs sued the district and recovered judgment which was paid by plaintiff insurer. The trial court (1) concluded defendant insurer's policy was primary insurance because it was part of the consideration for the job and plaintiff insurer's policy was excess; (2) declared the indemnity agreement was sufficiently explicit to cover the accident; (3) found that any negligence by the district was of a passive nature; (4) was of the opinion that each insurer was subrogated to the rights of their respective insureds; and (5) rendered judgment in favor of plaintiffs. Defendants appealed.

The Supreme Court affirmed. The Court said the indemnity clause was a general indemnity provision which indemnified against passive but not active negligence and concluded the evidence, although conflicting, supported the trial court's finding that the district's negligence was passive (13 Cal. 3d 622, 629-631) . An insurer on paying a loss is subrogated in a corresponding amount to the insured's right of action against any person responsible for the loss, and insurance companies may be subrogated to the rights of their insureds (13 Cal. 3d 622, 633-634) . It would thus appear that the trial court could properly find that plaintiff insurer was subrogated to the district's right of indemnification since it had paid the tort judgment for the district and the district had a right of indemnity against the contractor (13 Cal. 3d 622, 634) . The Court concluded that notwithstanding the "other insurance" clauses, the right of indemnity and subrogation must control. Because defendant insurer's policy was part of the consideration for the construction job, it was the primary insurer under the facts of the case, and plaintiff insurer was subrogated to the rights of the district (13 Cal. 3d 622, 634-635) .

[a] Subrogation of Indemnitee's Insurer Against Indemnitor

In Century Indem. Co. v. London Underwriters (1993) 12 Cal. App. 4th 1701, 16 Cal. Rptr. 2d 393 , a primary and an excess insurer filed a complaint in intervention to determine the priority of their subrogation rights in a contractor's action against a subcontractor for indemnification following the settlement of a wrongful death action in which the primary insurer paid policy limits of $500,000 and the excess insurer paid $600,000. The court of appeal held that the excess insurer was entitled to reimbursement with the $500,000 in indemnification funds received by the insured from the subcontractor. Although both policies had subrogation clauses, the primary insurer was below the excess insurer in order of preference because it had agreed to absorb the first $500,000 of loss, and because it stood in the shoes of the insured and was therefore bound by a clause in the excess policy giving the excess insurer preference over any primary insurer to any available reimbursement from a third party (12 Cal. App. 4th 1701, 1709-1710) .

NOTE:

In Reliance Nat'l Indem. Co. v. General Star Indem. Co. (1999) 72 Cal. App. 4th 1063, 85 Cal. Rptr. 2d 627 , the court of appeal recognized that Rossmoor held that if parties have express contracts with respect to the duty to indemnify, the extent of that duty must be determined from the contract and not by reliance on the independent doctrine of equitable indemnity [Reliance Nat'l Indem. Co. v. General Star Indem. Co. (1999) 72 Cal. App. 4th 1063, 1080, 85 Cal. Rptr. 2d 627 ; see also Rossmoor Sanitation, Inc. v. Pylon, Inc. (1975) 13 Cal. 3d 622, 628, 119 Cal. Rptr. 449, 532 P.2d 97] . The court in Reliance noted, however, that Rossmoor was an action between insureds on a contract for indemnity in which apportionment of loss between two primary carriers was raised in a cross action. Reliance, by contrast, was an action between two insurers (primary and excess). The court in Reliance pointed out that Rossmoor did not establish that in all cases in which a contract for indemnity exists, an insurer is entitled to bring a subrogation action on the agreement. It did not purport to establish a general rule that a contractual indemnity agreement between an insured and a third party takes precedence over well-established general rules of primary and excess coverage in an action between insurers [Reliance Nat'l Indem. Co. v. General Star Indem. Co. (1999) 72 Cal. App. 4th 1063, 1081, 85 Cal. Rptr. 2d 627] .

Similarly, JPI Westcoast Constr., L.P. v. RJS & Assoc., Inc. (2007) 156 Cal. App. 4th 1448, 68 Cal. Rptr. 3d 91 , involved a dispute between two primary carriers, each of whose policies contained an "other insurance" clause, on the issue of whether their respective liability on the loss should be settled on the standard basis of apportionment, or by subrogation to an insured's right to indemnity. Indeed, an "other insurance" issue can arise only between carriers on the same level of coverage. This case involved a subrogation claim by a secondary or excess carrier, and a primary carrier. Hence, Rossmoor was inapplicable (156 Cal. App. 4th 1448, 1460) .

§ 220.26 Supporting Contention That Subrogation Lies--Excess Insurer Has Subrogation Claim Against Primary Insurer Based on Primary Insurer's Wrongful Failure to Settle Within Primary Policy Limits and Excess Insurer's Resultant Payment of Excess Policy Benefits in Ultimate Settlement of Claim

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with other appropriate forms of memorandum of points and authorities supporting the contention that a subrogation action lies (see, e.g., § 220.20).]

PLAINTIFF, AS EXCESS INSURER, MAY SEEK RECOVERY AGAINST DEFENDANT, AS PRIMARY INSURER, BECAUSE DEFENDANT WRONGFULLY FAILED TO SETTLE THE UNDERLYING CLAIM WITHIN THE LIMITS OF THE PRIMARY POLICY, RESULTING IN AN ULTIMATE SETTLEMENT UNDER THE TERMS OF WHICH PLAINTIFF MADE A PAYMENT OF BENEFITS UNDER THE EXCESS POLICY. AN EXCESS JUDGMENT IN THE UNDERLYING ACTION IS NOT A PREREQUISITE TO THIS CAUSE OF ACTION IN SUBROGATION.

A. Prior Excess Judgment Is Not Prerequisite to Equitable Subrogation Action Between Insurers. A prior excess judgment is not a prerequisite to a subrogation action based on the subrogation rights of an excess insurer against the primary insurer, when those rights arise from the primary insurer's allegedly wrongful failure to settle and the excess insurer's resultant payment of benefits under the excess insurance policy pursuant to an ultimate settlement (Fortman v. Safeco Inc. Co. (1990) 221 Cal. App. 3d 1394, 1399-1402, 271 Cal. Rptr. 117).

[Optional] B. Prior Excess Judgment Is Not Prerequisite to Equitable Subrogation Assigned to Third Party. A third-party claimant who obtains an assignment of the excess insurer's subrogation rights against the primary insurer, on the basis of the primary insurer's allegedly wrongful failure to settle the claim within the limits of the primary insurance policy, and the excess insurer's resultant payment to the third party of benefits under the excess policy under an ultimate settlement, may state a cause of action in subrogation against the primary insurer without first obtaining an excess judgment against the insured (Fortman v. Safeco Inc. Co. (1990) 221 Cal. App. 3d 1394, 1399-1402, 271 Cal. Rptr. 117).

[2] Comments

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a subrogation action lies, when it is based on the rights of an excess insurer against a primary insurer that arise from an underlying claim against the insured in which the primary insurer wrongfully fails to settle within policy limits while having an opportunity to do so, resulting in an ultimate settlement under which the excess insurer pays benefits to the third party [see Fortman v. Safeco Inc. Co. (1990) 221 Cal. App. 3d 1394, 1399-1402, 271 Cal. Rptr. 117] . Optional Paragraph B is for use if the excess insurer assigned its equitable subrogation claim against the primary insurer to the third party.

These points and authorities may be used alone or combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of the existence of a cause of action in subrogation. For example, they may be used in opposition to defendant's motion for summary judgment and combined with points and authorities regarding summary judgments generally. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form and in any other relevant points and authorities combined with this form, to show the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should state facts showing that the excess insurer has a subrogation claim against the primary insurer, on the basis of the primary insurer's conduct with regard to the underlying third-party claim.

[b] Nature and Extent of Excess Insurer's Rights Against Primary Insurer

An excess insurer's ability to sue a primary insurer for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing rests exclusively on equitable subrogation principles, not on any independent duty to the excess carrier [Fireman's Fund Ins. Co v. Maryland Cas. Co. (1994) 21 Cal. App. 4th 1586, 1601, 26 Cal. Rptr. 2d 762 ; Commercial Union Assurance Cos. v. Safeway Stores (1980) 26 Cal. 3d 912, 917-918, 164 Cal. Rptr. 709, 610 P.2d 1038 ; Wallbrook Ins. Co. v. Liberty Mut. Ins. Co. (1992) 5 Cal. App. 4th 1445, 1454, 7 Cal. Rptr. 2d 513 ; Continental Cas. Co. v. Royal Ins. Co. (1990) 219 Cal. App. 3d 111, 117, 268 Cal. Rptr. 193] . Moreover, the excess insurer ordinarily is not a third party beneficiary of the contract between the primary insurer and the insured [see Fireman's Fund Ins. Co v. Maryland Cas. Co. (1994) 21 Cal. App. 4th 1586, 1600, 26 Cal. Rptr. 2d 762] .

A subrogated insurer stands in the shoes of its insured, and has no greater rights against the third party than did the insured [Fireman's Fund Ins. Co v. Maryland Cas. Co. (1994) 21 Cal. App. 4th 1586, 1596, 26 Cal. Rptr. 2d 762 ; Continental Mfg. Corp. v. Underwriters at Lloyd's London (1960) 185 Cal. App. 2d 545, 556, 8 Cal. Rptr. 276] . Thus, it is subject to all defenses the third party (in this case, the primary insurer) could have asserted against the insurer [Fireman's Fund Ins. Co v. Maryland Cas. Co. (1994) 21 Cal. App. 4th 1586, 1596, 26 Cal. Rptr. 2d 762] . For example, an excess carrier cannot maintain a bad faith claim against a primary carrier when the insured has released the primary carrier from liability [Fireman's Fund Ins. Co v. Maryland Cas. Co. (1994) 21 Cal. App. 4th 1586, 1595-1598, 26 Cal. Rptr. 2d 762 (action alleging that primary carrier allocated its portion of settlement contribution among various policy years in manner that compelled excess carrier to pay disproportionate amount of total cost; in connection with settlement, insured released primary carrier from bad faith liability)]. Since the only basis on which an excess carrier can sue for breach of the implied covenant is by way of equitable subrogation to the insured's rights, the insured's release of those rights precludes the primary carrier from maintaining such an action. Thus, before using this form, counsel should attempt to ascertain whether the primary carrier has any potential defenses against the insured that might defeat an action by the excess carrier.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Prior Excess Judgment Is Not Prerequisite to Equitable Subrogation Action Between Insurers

In Fortman v. Safeco Inc. Co. (1990) 221 Cal. App. 3d 1394, 271 Cal. Rptr. 117 , an injured third party brought an action against the primary insurer of one of the defendants in her underlying personal injury action. The action against the insurer was based on subrogation rights that were assigned to her by the excess insurer and that arose from the primary insurer's conduct in the course of the settlement negotiations. A child who was injured in a jeep accident brought an underlying action against the manufacturers of the jeep and the jeep shell, and the supplier of the door handle of the jeep shell. The primary insurer of the supplier of the door handle refused to settle within its policy limits before trial, failed to apprise the excess insurer of settlement negotiations or the trial schedule, and failed to retain experts to evaluate the claim. During trial, the primary insurer agreed to a settlement that included payments by the excess insurer. The plaintiff in that case proceeded in trial exclusively against the jeep manufacturer and sought to exonerate the settling defendant. Pursuant to a special verdict in the underlying action, the injured child's mother, who was driving, was found 75 percent responsible, the jeep manufacturer 25 percent responsible, and the supplier of the door handle (referred to as the "insured") zero percent responsible for the injuries. No judgment was entered regarding the insured. The excess insurer contributed $1.125 million of its $2 million excess policy limits, and assigned its equitable subrogation claim against the primary insurer to the third party, who brought a subrogation action against the primary insurer. The primary insurer successfully moved for summary judgment, on the ground that an excess judgment against the insured, and a conclusive judicial determination of the insured's liability, are prerequisites to the subrogation action. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that neither an excess judgment against the insured, nor a conclusive judicial determination of the insured's liability, is a prerequisite to the subrogation action (221 Cal. App. 3d 1394, 1399-1402) . The court rejected the primary insurer's assertion that an excess judgment is a legal prerequisite, because that argument ignores the substantial distinction between a claimant's action against a tortfeasor's liability insurer, and a suit between insurers to determine and prorate their respective responsibilities for an insured event. Injured claimants may sue the tortfeasor's insurer because they are considered third-party beneficiaries of the insurance contract, and the prior-judgment requirement prevents claimants' actions unless they first perfect their third-party beneficiary status by securing a judgment against the insured tortfeasor. In contrast, actions between liability insurers are not based on contract. Insurers' respective obligations flow from equitable principles that do not stem from an agreement between the insurers, and the application of those principles is not controlled by the language of their contracts with the respective policy holders. Therefore, insurers are able to resolve disputes regarding their respective rights and duties by direct actions among themselves without the limits imposed in other contexts by the direct-action proscription. The court held that the California Supreme Court's decision in Moradi-Shalal v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Cos. (1988) 46 Cal. 3d 287, 250 Cal. Rptr. 116, 758 P.2d 58 , holding that a conclusive judicial determination of the insured's liability is a prerequisite to viable third-party statutory actions against the insurer, is not a factor, because an equitable action between insurers to adjust their respective rights and duties is distinct from the statutory bad-faith actions formerly permitted under Ins.

Moreover, this case was a first-party action (221 Cal. App. 3d 1394, 1401) . The court rejected defendant's argument that a settling excess insurer cannot sue a primary insurer for bad faith, holding that an excess insurer that has settled and discharged the insured's liability may recover from the primary insurer an amount in excess of the primary insurer's policy limits if the excess insurer can prove that the primary insurer's unreasonable refusal to settle within its policy limits resulted in loss to the excess insurer in an amount in excess of the primary limits that it would not otherwise have had (221 Cal. App. 3d 1394, 1399-1400) . In this case, defendant repeatedly, and allegedly in bad faith, refused settlement offers below its policy limits. Had the case been settled for any of those amounts, the excess insurer would have paid nothing. Instead, the excess insurer paid over a million dollars toward the eventual settlement. The defendant's reasoning would result in the excess insurer suffering a loss without a remedy. On the other hand, an excess insurer that proceeded to trial and was required to pay a portion of a resulting judgment would be able to prosecute a similar action, and doing so might expose the excess insurer to a bad-faith claim by the insured. Such a rule would encourage trials in cases that otherwise might settle (221 Cal. App. 3d 1394, 1401) . Although defendant claimed that the court's ruling would encourage sham settlements and collusive agreements between excess insurers and tort plaintiffs, the court stated that those possibilities were not present in the instant case. The excess insurer made its payment because of the defendant's refusal to settle within its primary policy limits. In cases inviting collusion, cited by defendant, the insured must show the existence, not actual payment, of an excess judgment. In the equitable subrogation context, the excess insurer must show it actually paid an amount in excess of the primary insurer's policy limits. The court stated that courts can easily distinguish equitable subrogation cases, with facts suggesting a collusive settlement, from cases like the one before it, in which the excess insurer actually paid a settlement (221 Cal. App. 3d 1394, 1402) .

[b] Prior Excess Judgment Is Not Prerequisite to Equitable Subrogation Assigned to Third Party

Fortman v. Safeco Inc. Co. (1990) 221 Cal. App. 3d 1394, 271 Cal. Rptr. 117 , is discussed in § 220.26[3][a].

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Prior Excess Judgment Is Not Prerequisite to Equitable Subrogation Action Between Insurers

In Continental Cas. Co. v. Royal Ins. Co. (1990) 219 Cal. App. 3d 111, 268 Cal. Rptr. 193 , an excess insurer sued a primary insurer for breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing, and unfair claims practices, on the basis of the excess insurer's payment of benefits under the terms of an ultimate settlement, following the primary insurer's allegedly bad-faith refusal to settle within the primary policy limits. Although the issue of the absence of an excess judgment did not arise, the court of appeal affirmed judgment for plaintiff on the basis of the excess insurer's payment of benefits under a settlement. The main issue in the case was whether the primary insurer could raise as an affirmative defense the excess insurer's settlement conduct. The court held that it could not, because of the excess insurer's lack of control over settlement negotiations conducted by the primary insurer (219 Cal. App. 3d 111, 117-120) .

22-220 California Points & Authorities § 220.27

§ 220.27 Supporting Contention That Cross Complaint by Insurer as Potential Subrogee for Declaration of Right to Indemnification Against Third-Party Tortfeasor Is Proper

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief].

THE CROSS COMPLAINT IN THIS ACTION IS PROPER BECAUSE AN INSURER, AS THE POTENTIAL SUBROGEE OF ITS INSURED, MAY, IN AN ACTION AGAINST IT BY ITS INSURED, FILE A CROSS COMPLAINT FOR A DECLARATION OF ITS RIGHT TO BE INDEMNIFIED BY A THIRD-PARTY TORTFEASOR IN THE EVENT JUDGMENT IN THE MAIN ACTION IS RENDERED IN FAVOR OF THE INSURED.

A. Declaratory Relief Action Authorized. Any person who desires a declaration of his or her rights or duties with respect to another may, in cases of actual controversy relating to the legal rights and duties of the respective parties, bring an original action or cross-complaint in the superior court for a declaration of his or her rights and duties. He or she may ask for a declaration of rights or duties, either alone or with other relief; and the court may make a binding declaration of these rights or duties, whether or not further relief is or could be claimed at the time. The declaration may be either affirmative or negative in form and effect, and the declaration shall have the force of a final judgment. The declaration may be had before there has been any breach of the obligation in respect to which said declaration is sought (Code Civ. Proc. § 1060).

B. Cross Complaint by Potential Subrogee for Declaration of Right to Be Indemnified by Third-Party Tortfeasor as Proper. In an action by an insured against its insurer to recover insurance benefits, the filing of a cross complaint by the insurer as the potential subrogee of its insured for a declaration of its right to be indemnified by the third-party tortfeasor for any judgment rendered against it in the main action by its insured is proper even though neither an indemnitor nor a surety may recover damages from a third person unless the indemnitor or surety has actually made the payment required by its contract of indemnity or surety (Liberty Mut. Ins. Co. v. Harris, Kerr, Forster & Co. (1970) 10 Cal. App. 3d 1100, 1102-1103, 89 Cal. Rptr. 437).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a cross complaint, filed by an insurer in an action by an insured against the insurer to recover policy benefits, for a declaration of the insurer's right to be reimbursed by the cross defendant, a third-party tortfeasor, in the event judgment in the main action is rendered for plaintiff insured is proper even though the insurer has not paid the insured's claim.

The argument set out in this form may be used in any proceeding in which it is contended that the cross complaint is improper. For a memorandum of points and authorities supporting the contention that payment is normally a condition precedent to the filing of an action in subrogation, see § 220.42.

These points and authorities may be used alone or combined with a memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue. For example, they may be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities in support of a motion for leave to file a cross complaint not timely filed [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 428.10, 428.50(c) (permissive cross complaints)]. They may also be combined in a memorandum of points and authorities (1) in opposition to a motion to strike the cross complaint [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 435-437]; (2) in opposition to a general demurrer to the cross complaint [see Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]; or (3) in opposition to a nonstatutory motion by the cross defendant for judgment on the pleadings. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. If the contention is made in support of a motion for leave to file a cross complaint, the facts showing that granting the motion would be in the interest of justice [see Code Civ. Proc. § 428.50(c)] should be set forth in one or more separate affidavits or declarations under penalty of perjury to which reference may be made in this memorandum [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009, 2015.5].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Cross Complaint by Potential Subrogee for Declaration of Right to Be Indemnified by Third-Party Tortfeasor as Proper

Liberty Mut. Ins. Co. v. Harris, Kerr, Forster & Co. (1970) 10 Cal. App. 3d 1100 , 89 Cal. Rptr. 437 , arose out of an action by an insured who had suffered a loss by the dishonesty of an employee against its insurers on their refusal to indemnify the insured for the loss. The insurers denied liability, but each cross complained against an accounting firm for a declaration that if the insurer were held liable to the insured, the accounting firm was liable to the insurer based on the alleged negligence of the firm in auditing the insured's books. It was alleged that if the firm had exercised ordinary care in auditing the insured's books, the employee's dishonesty would have been discovered by the insured in time to prevent or drastically reduce the insured's loss, and that by reason of the insured's reliance on the firm, the employee's defalcations were not discovered until a specified date. Cross defendant's demurrers to the cross complaints were sustained without leave to amend. The insurers appealed from the order of dismissal, contending their cross actions were proper in that they were proceeding through the declaratory relief action on a sort of "presubrogation" theory.

The court of appeal reversed. The court noted that had the allegations in the cross complaints been made by the insured, they would have stated (as against a general demurrer) a cause of action for malpractice, and the issue was whether or not the insurers could assert the insured's rights against the accounting firm. The court said it was undisputed that neither an indemnitor nor a surety may recover damages from a third person unless the indemnitor or surety has actually made the payment required by the contract of indemnity or surety, and noted that neither insurer had paid the insured (10 Cal. App. 3d 1100, 1102) . The court nevertheless pointed out that the action for declaratory relief as to one's right to indemnity was clearly established under California case law and reversed the order of dismissal (10 Cal. App. 3d 1100, 1103-1104) .

PART II. FORMS

22-220 California Points & Authorities § 220.28

§ 220.28 Supporting Obligor's Contention That Cause of Action for Tortious Injury to Person Is Not Subject to Subrogation

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF HAS NO STANDING, AS SUBROGEE, TO MAINTAIN THIS ACTION FOR DAMAGES FOR PERSONAL INJURIES BECAUSE AN ACTION FOR TORTIOUS INJURY TO PERSON IS NOT ASSIGNABLE AND NOT SUBJECT TO SUBROGATION IN THE ABSENCE OF A STATUTE AUTHORIZING IT.

A. Actions Required to Be Prosecuted by Real Party in Interest. Every action, with exceptions not here applicable, must be prosecuted in the name of the real party in interest (Code Civ. Proc. § 367).

B. Nonassignability of Actions for Personal Injury. Although no cause of action is lost by reason of the death of any person, causes of action for tortious injury to person are not assignable (see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 377.20, 377.22).

C. Nonassignable Actions as Not Subject to Subrogation in Absence of Statute. Because causes of action for tortious injury to person are not assignable they are not, in the absence of a statute authorizing it, subject to subrogation (see Fifield Manor v. Finston (1960) 54 Cal. 2d 632, 639-640, 7 Cal. Rptr. 377, 354 P.2d 1073 ; Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. v. McDonald, Hecht & Solberg (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 1373, 1383, 36 Cal. Rptr. 2d 424 ; Peller v. Liberty Mut. Fire Ins. Co. (1963) 220 Cal. App. 2d 610, 34 Cal. Rptr. 41).

[2] Comments

These points and authorities may be submitted to support a contention that plaintiff, as subrogee of a right of action for damages for personal injury, is not the real party in interest and has no standing to maintain the action because the action is not assignable and, hence, not subject to subrogation.

These points and authorities may be used alone or combined with a memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue. For example, they may be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities (1) in support of a general demurrer to the complaint [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 430.10(e), 430.30(a)], or (2) in support of a nonstatutory motion by defendant for judgment on the pleadings. They may also be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities in support of a motion by defendant or in opposition to a motion by plaintiff for summary judgment [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c (summary judgment)]. Should the trial court erroneously rule that plaintiff is entitled to maintain the action, these points and authorities may be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities in support of a petition for writ of mandate to compel the trial court to vacate its ruling [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1085, 1086] and for a writ of prohibition to restrain the trial court from proceeding with the action [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1102, 1103]. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, if the contention is made in support of a demurrer to the complaint or a motion by defendant for judgment on the pleadings, counsel should simply point out that the complaint is by the plaintiff as subrogee and it seeks recovery of damages for tortious injury to a person. If the contention is made in support of or in opposition to a motion, other than a motion for judgment on the pleadings, any facts not appearing from the face of the complaint may be presented in one or more supporting affidavits or declarations under penalty of perjury to which reference may be made in this memorandum [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009, 2015.5; see also Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b) (summary judgment papers)]. If the contention is made in support of a petition for a writ of mandate and/or a writ of prohibition, counsel should show, in addition to the above, that the contention relating to plaintiff's lack of standing was properly raised in and rejected by the trial court. This would normally be shown by attaching to the petition authenticated copies of the appropriate trial court records.

[b] Rights Generally Not Assignable

The only causes or rights of action that are not transferable or assignable in any sense are those founded on wrongs of a purely personal nature, such as negligent personal injuries, slander, assault and battery, malicious prosecution, and others of like nature. All other demands, claims, and rights of action whatever are generally held to be transferable [Reichert v. General Ins. Co. (1968) 68 Cal. 2d 822, 834, 69 Cal. Rptr. 321, 442 P.2d 377] .

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in §§ 220.49 and 220.50 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Nonassignable Actions as Not Subject to Subrogation in Absence of Statute

Fifield Manor v. Finston (1960) 54 Cal. 2d 632, 7 Cal. Rptr. 377, 354 P.2d 1073 , was an action to recover the cost of essential medical care rendered a deceased person pursuant to a life-care contract. The decedent's injuries and death resulted from a car accident allegedly caused by defendants' negligence. The complaint alleged that plaintiff, a nonprofit corporation, had entered into a life-care contract with the decedent in which it had expressly agreed to provide the decedent with all essential medical care. Thereafter, the decedent was struck by a car negligently operated by one of the defendants and died some six weeks later as the result of his injuries. Pursuant to the contract, plaintiff provided the decedent with essential medical services, including treatment by doctors, nursing care, medication, and hospitalization, valued at a specified amount for which plaintiff prayed recovery. Plaintiff claimed both a direct right of recovery from defendants based on the negligent interference with a contractual relation, and a right of subrogation, under an express assignment in the life-care contract, for all expenses it incurred as the result of the injuries to the decedent. A general demurrer to the complaint was sustained without leave to amend and plaintiff appealed.

The Supreme Court affirmed. The Court rejected both of plaintiff's claims. The Court held the action was not assignable under former Civ. Code § 956 (providing for survival of certain actions and stating that nothing in the section shall be construed as making such actions assignable), and hence not subject to subrogation in the absence of a statute authorizing it (54 Cal. 2d 632, 639, 643) . In reaching this conclusion, the Court traced the history of former Civ. Code § 956. (Former Civ. Code § 956 was repealed in 1961 and incorporated in substantially the same language in the 1961 amendment to Prob. Code § 573; in 1992, Prob. Code § 573 was repealed and replaced by Code Civ. Proc. § 377.20 et seq., relating to survival of causes of action; Code Civ. Proc § 377.22 provides that nothing in the chapter will be construed as affecting the assignability of causes of action.) The Court said historically at common law the assignability of tort causes of action depended on survivability; so causes of action for damage to property, since they survived death, were assignable and causes of action for injury to the person, since they did not survive, were not assignable. This rule prevailed until the Supreme Court in 1946 held under former Prob. Code § 574 that a cause of action for injury to the estate of the person, which resulted from the injury to his person, did survive. Former Civ. Code § 956 was enacted in 1949 and expressly provided against the assignability of the causes of action specified in it (actions for physical injury to person) (54 Cal. 2d 632, 638-639) . The Court said the question presented was whether a third party may be subrogated either by the operation of equitable principles (legal subrogation) or by contract with the injured party (conventional subrogation) to any part of a cause of action for injury to the person in view of the fact that under the law no such cause of action may be assigned. The Court pointed out that plaintiff had not cited any California case in which a right of subrogation to a cause of action for tortious injury to the person had been recognized, except in cases when the right of subrogation has been expressly granted by statute, and that the legislature, when it has desired to give a right of subrogation in such cases, has done so in express language (54 Cal. 2d 632, 639) . While subrogation and assignment have certain technical differences, each operates to transfer from one person to another a cause of action against a third, and the reasons of policy which make certain causes of action nonassignable operate as forcefully against the transfer of such causes of action by subrogation (54 Cal. 2d 632, 640) . The Court declared itself satisfied that subrogation should not be applied in view of the express reservation against assignment in former Civ. Code § 956 [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 377.20 et seq.] (54 Cal. 2d 632, 643) .

In Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. v. McDonald, Hecht & Solberg (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 1373, 36 Cal. Rptr. 2d 424 , the plaintiff insurers paid more than $10 million to settle a lawsuit against their insureds involving misrepresentations in the sale of residential units. The insureds then sued their attorneys for legal malpractice, contending that the attorneys caused those representations to be made. The insurers joined the legal malpractice suit as plaintiffs under a subrogation theory. The trial court dismissed the insurers as plaintiffs on the grounds that legal malpractice claims are nonassignable and the insurers could not be subrogated to a nonassignable claim. The trial court entered judgment dismissing the insurers as plaintiffs, and they appealed.

On appeal, the insurers acknowledged that existing case law holds that legal malpractice claims generally are not assignable, and that nonassignable claims are not subject to subrogation. However, they argued that the public policies articulated in those cases were not applicable to a subrogation claim by an insurer who paid a claim against its insured resulting from the attorney's negligence. The insurers argued that their interests were directly affected by the attorney's malpractice and were "aligned" or "virtually identical" with the insured's interests against the attorney. The insurers contended that under these circumstances, the trial court's ruling was inequitable in light of other public policies favoring reasonable settlements, encouraging liability carriers to meet their insureds' reasonable expectations, transferring risks to actual tortfeasors, and spreading loss among tortfeasors (30 Cal. App. 4th 1373, 1380) .

The court of appeal held that however forceful the equities supporting the insurer's public policy contentions might be, it could not depart from settled law. Under that law, the law firm owed its client a "duty of undivided loyalty and diligence" (30 Cal. App. 4th 1373, 1383) . That duty was owed solely to the insureds, and the insurers were not clients of the law firm (30 Cal. App. 4th 1373, 1383) . The court reiterated that California courts have uniformly held that nonassignable claims are not subject to subrogation absent express statutory authorization (30 Cal. App. 4th 1373, 1384) . Accordingly, the trial court's judgment was affirmed.

Peller v. Liberty Mut. Fire Ins. Co. (1963) 220 Cal. App. 2d 610, 34 Cal. Rptr. 41 , was a declaratory relief action by insureds against their insurer to determine the validity of subrogation provisions of automobile insurance policies. Each policy contained the provision that the insurer agreed to pay all reasonable expenses incurred within one year from the date of accident for medical services. However, in connection with the payment of medical services, the policies further provided, under the heading "Subrogation," that in the event of any payment under the medical expense coverage of the policy, the company would be subrogated to all the right of recovery therefor which the injured person or anyone receiving that payment may have against any person or organization, and that person is required to execute and deliver instruments and papers and do whatever is necessary to secure those rights. Plaintiffs were injured and incurred medical expenses that the insurer refused to pay unless and until each plaintiff assigned to it his or her right of recovery to the extent of the payments. Plaintiffs' motion for judgment on the pleadings was granted on the ground the subrogation provisions were invalid and contrary to the long established rule of common law that causes of action arising out of personal injuries are not assignable. Defendant appealed, contending the right of subrogation provided in the policies was distinguishable from an assignment in that it constituted an indemnity.

The court of appeal held the legal effect of the policy provisions was the same regardless of what term was attached to the procedure, since the result was to transfer the insured's cause of action against a third-party tortfeasor to the insurer, and affirmed the judgment (220 Cal. App. 2d 610, 611-612) . The court said the legislature enacted Civ. Code § 954 providing for the assignment of a thing in action arising out of a violation of a property right, but by former Civ. Code § 956 [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 377.20 et seq.] expressly provided against the assignability of causes of action arising out of personal injuries. Since the legislature had recognized the common law rule against the assignability of causes of action arising out of personal injuries, any change in the rule must be by legislative action (220 Cal. App. 2d 610, 612) .

NOTE:

Additional cases stating the general rule that actions for personal injuries are not subject to assignment or subrogation include: Lee v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. (1976) 57 Cal. App. 3d 458, 465, 129 Cal. Rptr. 271 ; and West v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. (1973) 30 Cal. App. 3d 562, 565, 106 Cal. Rptr. 486 [see § 220.50[3][a]].

22-220 California Points & Authorities § 220.29

§ 220.29 Supporting Obligor's Contention That Subrogee Is Subject to All Defenses That Obligor Has Against Subrogor

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF IN THIS ACTION, AS SUBROGEE, IS, EXCEPT AS OTHERWISE EXPRESSLY PROVIDED BY STATUTE, SUBJECT TO THE SAME DEFENSES THAT WOULD BE AVAILABLE TO DEFENDANT IN AN ACTION BY THE SUBROGOR.

Defenses Against Subrogor. Except as otherwise provided by statute, a subrogee is subject to any defenses the obligor has against the subrogor (Commercial Union Assurance Co. v. City of San Jose (1982) 127 Cal. App. 3d 730, 733, 179 Cal. Rptr. 814 ; Iusi v. City Title Ins. Co. (1963) 213 Cal. App. 2d 582, 588, 28 Cal. Rptr. 893).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the general contention that, except as otherwise provided by statute, plaintiff as subrogee is subject to all defenses the obligor has against the subrogor. The form is for use when a more specific form set out in this chapter is not applicable. Statutes providing otherwise would include those granting an extended period of limitations on the commencement of subrogated actions by specified entities [see § 220.51]. For memoranda of points and authorities based on specific defenses, see §§ 220.30 -220.33, and § 220.38. For forms of memoranda of points and authorities for use in raising defenses the obligor may have against the subrogee, see §§ 220.34 -220.37. For other forms containing points that may be used in support of a defense the obligor may have against the subrogee, see §§ 220.41 -220.45.

These points and authorities may be used alone or combined with a memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue. For example, they may be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities (1) in opposition to a demurrer to the answer [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 430.20(a), 430.50(b)], or (2) in opposition to a motion by plaintiff to strike the affirmative defense [see Code Civ. Proc. § 435(b)]. They may also be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities in support of a motion by defendant or in opposition to a motion by plaintiff for summary judgment [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c]. Should the trial court erroneously rule that the defense may not be raised, these points and authorities may be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities in support of a petition for writ of mandate to compel the trial court to vacate its ruling [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1085, 1086] and for a writ of prohibition to restrain the trial court from proceeding with the action [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1102, 1103]. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, if the contention is made in opposition to a demurrer to the answer or a motion by plaintiff to strike the affirmative defense, counsel need only show that the defense is properly alleged. The points and authorities will establish its propriety. If the contention is made in support of or in opposition to a motion, other than a motion to strike, counsel for defendant should present the facts establishing the existence of the defense. The facts would normally be presented in one or more supporting affidavits or declarations under penalty of perjury to which reference may be made in the memorandum of points and authorities [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009, 2015.5; see also Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b) (summary judgment)]. If the contention is made in support of a petition for a writ of mandate and/or a writ of prohibition, counsel should show, in addition to the above, that the trial court erroneously ruled on the availability of the defense. This would normally be shown by attaching to the petition authenticated copies of the appropriate trial court records.

[d] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in §§ 220.51 -220.56 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Defenses Against Subrogor

The facts and procedural background of Commercial Union Assurance Co. v. City of San Jose (1982) 127 Cal. App. 3d 730, 179 Cal. Rptr. 814 , are discussed in § 220.33[3][a]. This was an action by an insurer against a city to recover as the subrogee of its insured amounts paid under the insured's policy for property damage. The city's demurrer to the complaint was sustained on the ground that more than six months had elapsed between the date the city rejected the insured's claim for damages and the commencement of the action, and plaintiff appealed from the subsequent judgment of dismissal. In affirming the judgment, the court of appeal said that generally the insurer's subrogated right is its right to be put in the position of its insured against third parties legally responsible to its insured for the loss which the insurer has both insured and paid, and the tortfeasor is usually permitted to assert all defenses available against the insured (127 Cal. App. 3d 730, 733) .

The facts and procedural background of Iusi v. City Title Ins. Co. (1963) 213 Cal. App. 2d 582, 28 Cal. Rptr. 893 , are discussed in § 220.31[3][a]. This was an appeal from a judgment entered in favor of plaintiff, a real estate broker, against defendant title company, for breach of an agreement as to which the broker claimed to be a third party beneficiary to the extent of the amount of his claimed commission. In attempting to uphold the judgment on appeal, plaintiff suggested the trial court had, in awarding him judgment, applied the theory of subrogation. The court of appeal reversed. It held that the judgment could not be supported on a subrogation theory because that theory was completely outside the issues raised by the pleadings (213 Cal. App. 2d 582, 585-586) . The court added, however, that even assuming plaintiff's pleadings could possibly encompass such a theory, plaintiff, as subrogee, had no greater rights than his subrogors and would be subject to the same defenses the title companies (obligors) would have against the subrogors (213 Cal. App. 2d 582, 588) . The court said the subrogors' action would have been barred by an affirmative defense (213 Cal. App. 2d 582, 588-589) .

PART II. FORMS

22-220 California Points & Authorities § 220.30

§ 220.30 Supporting Obligor's Contention That Subrogee's Action Is Subject to Setoff Against Subrogor

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF'S SUBROGATED CLAIM FOR MONEY COEXISTED WITH AN INDEPENDENT CLAIM FOR MONEY BY DEFENDANT OBLIGOR AGAINST PLAINTIFF'S SUBROGOR AT A TIME WHEN NEITHER CLAIM WAS BARRED BY THE STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS, AND DEFENDANT IS THEREFORE ENTITLED IN THIS ACTION TO ASSERT THAT PLAINTIFF'S CLAIM HAS BEEN PAID TO THE EXTENT THE TWO CLAIMS EQUAL EACH OTHER.

A. When Setoff Exists. When cross demands for money have existed between persons at any point in time when neither was barred by the statute of limitations and an action is thereafter commenced by one of the persons, the other person may assert in the answer the defense of payment in that the two demands are compensated so far as they equal each other, notwithstanding that an independent action asserting the person's claim would at the time of filing the answer be barred by the statue of limitations (Code Civ. Proc. § 431.70).

B. Right to Setoff Not Defeated by Assignment. Neither person can be deprived of the benefits of Section 431.70 of the Code of Civil Procedure by the assignment or death of the other (Code Civ. Proc. § 431.70; see also Code Civ. Proc. § 368).

C. Right to Setoff in Subrogated Action. Subrogation is the equivalent of an equitable assignment, and hence an obligor's claim for money from the subrogor that coexisted with the subrogor's claim against the obligor may be claimed by the obligor in an action against it by the subrogee (see Royal Indem. Co. v. Security Truck Lines (1963) 212 Cal. App. 2d 61, 64-66, 27 Cal. Rptr. 858).

[2] Comments

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that an unrelated claim for money by the obligor against the subrogor that coexisted with the subrogor's claim may be asserted by the obligor in a subsequent action by the subrogee.

These points and authorities may be used alone or combined with a memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue. For example, they may be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities in support of a motion by defendant obligor for summary adjudication of the issue of defendant's right to claim a setoff against plaintiff's claim in a subrogated action when it can be indisputably shown that the setoff is a valid claim against the subrogor and that both claims coexisted at a time when neither was barred by the statute of limitations [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 437c, 431.70]. These points and authorities may also be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities in opposition to: (1) a demurrer to the answer challenging the right to a setoff [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 430.20(a), 430.50(b)]; or (2) a motion by plaintiff in a subrogated action to strike the defense [see Code Civ. Proc. § 436(a)]. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, if the contention is made in support of or in opposition to a motion, counsel should present the facts establishing that defendant has a valid claim for money against the subrogor and that both the subrogor's claim, to which plaintiff has become subrogated, and defendant's claim coexisted at a point in time when neither was barred by the statute of limitations [see Code Civ. Proc. § 431.70]. The facts would normally be presented in one or more supporting affidavits or declarations under penalty of perjury to which reference may be made in the memorandum of points and authorities [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009, 2015.5]. If the contention is made in opposition to a demurrer, counsel should show that the answer sufficiently alleges the facts.

[b] When Cross Demand as Money Judgment Barred

For the purposes of Code Civ. Proc. § 431.70, a money judgment is a demand for money and, as applied to a money judgment, the demand is barred by the statute of limitations when enforcement of the judgment is barred under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 683.010-683.320, relating to period for enforcement and renewal of judgments [Code Civ. Proc. § 431.70].

[c] When Defense of Payment Barred

The defense of payment (setoff) authorized by Code Civ. Proc. § 431.70 is not available if the cross demand is barred for failure to have asserted it in a prior action under Code Civ. Proc. § 426.30, relating to compulsory cross complaints [Code Civ. Proc. § 431.70].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Right to Setoff in Subrogated Action

The facts and procedural background of Royal Indem. Co. v. Security Truck Lines (1963) 212 Cal. App. 2d 61, 27 Cal. Rptr. 858 , are discussed in § 220.23[3][a]. On appeal, plaintiff subrogee contended the trial court erred in allowing the counterclaim because: its insured (the subrogor) was not a party to the action; the counterclaim (now affirmative defense [see Code Civ. Proc. § 431.70]) was entirely unrelated to the present action; the facts alleged did not sufficiently state a counterclaim; and plaintiff was not an assignee of its insured's rights and the counterclaim could not be asserted against plaintiff as the subrogee of its insured. The court of appeal rejected plaintiff's arguments and affirmed the judgment. After holding the counterclaim was proper and sufficiently alleged, the court said it has long been held that subrogation is the equivalent of an equitable assignment (212 Cal. App. 2d 61, 64) . The court pointed out that had the action been brought by the insured, there was no question that defendant would have been able to assert its counterclaim and that any defense the wrongdoer has against the insured is good against the insurer (212 Cal. App. 2d 61, 65-66) . There appeared to be no reason why plaintiff as the equitable assignee or subrogee of its insured should not be subject to the same right of counterclaim by defendant. In the absence of equitable considerations which would militate against the subrogee or equitable assignee, the right attained is the same as that held by the subrogor or equitable assignor and is subject to the same qualifications, limitations, and burdens (212 Cal. App. 2d 61, 66) .

§ 220.31 Supporting Obligor's Contention That Action Is Barred--Statute of Limitations Has Run on Subrogor's Action

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF'S ACTION IN SUBROGATION IS BARRED BY THE PROVISIONS OF _____ [specify applicable statute of limitations, e.g., CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE SECTION 338(2)].

A. Applicable Statute of Limitations. Except as otherwise expressly provided by statute, a subrogation action is subject to the same statute of limitations that applies to the subrogor's action against the obligor and commences to run at the same time (see Iusi v. City Title Ins. Co. (1963) 213 Cal. App. 2d 582, 588, 28 Cal. Rptr. 893 ; Automobile Ins. Co. v. Union Oil Co. (1948) 85 Cal. App. 2d 302, 304-305, 193 P.2d 48).

[Set forth statute of limitations that applies to subrogor's action. The following are examples.]

[EITHER]

B. Action for Injury to Real or Personal Property. If the subrogor's action arises out of injury to real property or to goods or chattels, the action is, unless otherwise expressly provided by statute, governed by Code of Civil Procedure Section 338(b) or (c), and thus must be commenced against the tortfeasor within three years (Automobile Ins. Co. v. Union Oil Co. (1948) 85 Cal. App. 2d 302, 307, 193 P.2d 48).

[OR]

B. Action for Personal Injury. If the subrogor's action arises from a personal injury as the result of a wrongful act, the action is, unless otherwise expressly provided by statute, governed by Code of Civil Procedure Section 335.1, and thus must be commenced against the tortfeasor within two years (one year, prior to 2003) (see County of San Diego v. Sanfax Corp. (1977) 19 Cal. 3d 862, 869, 871-886, 140 Cal. Rptr. 638, 568 P.2d 363 ; see also former Code Civ. Proc. § 340(3)).

[OR]

B. Action to Recover Workers' Compensation Benefits Paid. A subrogation action under Labor Code Section 3852 by an employer against a tortfeasor to recover a sum equivalent to the benefits the employer was required to provide the employee under the Workers' Compensation Law is controlled by Code of Civil Procedure Section 335.1, and thus must be commenced within two years (one year, prior to 2003) after the date the employee was injured (County of San Diego v. Sanfax Corp. (1977) 19 Cal. 3d 862, 868, 140 Cal. Rptr. 638, 568 P.2d 363 ; see also former Code Civ. Proc. § 340(3)).

[CONTINUE]

[Optional] C. Disability of Minority Tolling Statute of Limitations as Not Subrogated. The disability of a minor which tolls the statute of limitations under Code of Civil Procedure Section 352(a) is personal and is not subject to transfer by assignment or subrogation (Amie v. Superior Court (1979) 99 Cal. App. 3d 421, 426, 160 Cal. Rptr. 271).

[2] Comments

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that an action by the subrogee, unless otherwise expressly provided by statute, is subject to the same statute of limitations that applies to the subrogor's action and that under the applicable statute the action is barred. With respect to the second alternative Paragraph B, see § 220.28 for the general rule that actions for damages for personal injuries are not subject to subrogation, and see §§ 220.49 and 220.50 for discussion of when such actions may be subrogated.

These points and authorities may be used alone, or combined with a memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue. For example, if the bar of the statute appears from the face of the complaint or from matter of which the court must or may take judicial notice, they may be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities (1) in support of a general demurrer to the complaint [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 430.10(e), 430.30(a)], or (2) in support of a nonstatutory motion by defendant for judgment on the pleadings. They may also be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities in support of a motion by defendant or in opposition to a motion by plaintiff for summary judgment [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c]. Should the trial court erroneously rule that the action is not barred, these points and authorities may be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities in support of a petition for writ of mandate to compel the trial court to vacate its ruling or make an appropriate order [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1085, 1086] and for a writ of prohibition to restrain the trial court from proceeding with the action [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1102, 1103]. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, if the contention is made in support of a demurrer to the complaint or a motion by defendant for judgment on the pleadings, counsel should simply point out that it appears from the complaint itself or from matters of which the court must or may take judicial notice when the cause of action arose and when the complaint was filed. The points and authorities should establish the statute of limitations that applies. If the contention is made in support of or in opposition to a motion, other than a motion for judgment on the pleadings, counsel for defendant should present the facts establishing that the action is barred. The facts would normally be presented in one or more supporting affidavits or declarations under penalty of perjury to which reference may be made in the memorandum of points and authorities [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009, 2015.5]. If the contention is made in support of a petition for a writ of mandate and/or a writ of prohibition, counsel should show, in addition to the above, that the bar of the statute was properly raised and ruled against in the trial court. This would normally be shown by attaching to the petition authenticated copies of the appropriate trial court records.

[d] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in §§ 220.51 and 220.52 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Applicable Statute of Limitations

Iusi v. City Title Ins. Co. (1963) 213 Cal. App. 2d 582, 28 Cal. Rptr. 893 , was an appeal from a judgment for plaintiff, a real estate broker, against defendant title companies, for breach of an agreement as to which the broker claimed to be a third-party beneficiary. Plaintiff had acted as real estate broker for the sellers in the sale of two parcels of land owned by them. The nominal purchaser was one Frances King, acting as a "dummy" for a person, who was also represented by a real estate broker. Two standard form deposit receipt agreements were signed by the two brokers and purportedly by King. The agreements were presented to the sellers and they signed. Each agreement recited that plaintiff had received $1,000 from the title company as a deposit on the purchase price of the parcel therein described and each provided for additional amounts to be paid into escrow within 90 days. The agreements further provided that if the additional payments were not timely made, the deposit would be forfeited to the sellers, provided, however, that one half the deposit was to be paid plaintiff as his commission.

The sellers became unwilling to consummate the sales. Plaintiff sued them for the full amount of his commission

($4,574.25) on the theory he'd produced a purchaser ready, able, and willing to purchase the property. The sellers cross complained for their one-half of the deposit which they claimed had been forfeited by the purchaser. King also sued the sellers for specific performance, but lost her case because she had failed to make the additional downpayments within the time prescribed in the deposit agreements. In plaintiff's action, King testified she had not signed the deposit agreements or authorized anyone to sign them for her. Accordingly, the court held plaintiff had not produced a real purchaser and was not entitled to a commission. The court further held the $2,000 forfeited because additional downpayments were not made within the time prescribed. The court found plaintiff had not received the $2,000 deposit, had falsely represented to the sellers that he had, and was estopped to deny that he had. Judgment was rendered on the cross complaint for the sellers for one-half the total deposit plus costs ($1,038.70).

Plaintiff filed the present action against the notary who acknowledged the forged signatures of King and her surety (first count) and against the title companies on the theory they had breached their contract, of which plaintiff was a third-party beneficiary, with the real purchaser by their failure to have paid the additional monies into escrow as required by the deposit agreements (second count). The amount claimed in each count was the amount of plaintiff's claimed commission in full. Plaintiff obtained judgment under the first count and the insurance company satisfied the judgment in full. With respect to the title companies, the trial court held they were not liable for the commission but rendered judgment against them for $1,038.70, "the same being the amount due the [sellers] from the plaintiff herein." Defendants appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. The court pointed out that the quoted statement obviously referred to the judgment obtained by the sellers on their cross complaint against plaintiff in the prior action. The court said, however, there was no mention of this judgment anywhere in plaintiff's complaint and that the record did not show that any issue involving it was ever raised during the trial (213 Cal. App. 2d 582, 585) . The court rejected plaintiff's suggestion that the trial court had applied the theory of subrogation on the ground any recovery on such a theory was outside the issues raised by the pleadings (213 Cal. App. 2d 582, 585-586) . However, the court added that assuming plaintiff's pleadings could encompass such a theory, plaintiff, as subrogee, had no greater rights than his subrogors, the sellers, and would be subject to the same defenses the title companies would have against them. This would include the defense of the statute of limitations (213 Cal. App. 2d 582, 588) . Equity will enforce subrogation only when the action is brought within the time in which an action could have been brought to enforce the original obligation to which the right of subrogation is sought (213 Cal. App. 2d 582, 588) . The court said the statute of limitations had already run on any action the sellers had against the title companies by the time of the alleged subrogation and rejected plaintiff's argument that the title companies were estopped to plead the bar of the statute (213 Cal. App. 2d 582, 588-589) .

The facts and procedural background of Automobile Ins. Co. v. Union Oil Co. (1948) 85 Cal. App. 2d 302, 193 P.2d 48 , are discussed in § 220.23[3][b]. The court of appeal reversed the judgment for defendant on the ground the wrong statute of limitations had been applied. The court said an insurer subrogated to the rights of its insured against a third-party responsible for a loss by fire which the insurer paid is subject to the same statute of limitations that applies to its insured. Whatever period of limitation was applicable to the insured passed by subrogation to the insurance carriers, who by reason of such subrogation are put in the place of the party to whose rights they are subrogated (85 Cal. App. 2d 302, 304-305) .

[b] Action for Injury to Real or Personal Property

The facts and procedural background of Automobile Ins. Co. v. Union Oil Co. (1948) 85 Cal. App. 2d 302, 193 P.2d 48 , are discussed in § 220.23[3][b]. Defendant pleaded the action was barred by the provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 339(1), which provides a two-year period of limitation on actions on a contract, obligation, or liability not founded on an instrument in writing. Defendant's objection on that ground to the introduction of evidence was sustained and judgment was entered for defendant.

The court of appeal reversed. The court held the insured's action was ex delicto (arising from wrong or tort as opposed to contract) for tortious damage to property, and held such actions are controlled by former Code Civ. Proc. § 338(2) and (3) [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 338(b) and (c)], providing a three-year period of limitations (85 Cal. App. 2d 302, 307-309) .

[c] Action for Personal Injury

County of San Diego v. Sanfax Corp. (1977) 19 Cal. 3d 862, 140 Cal. Rptr. 638, 568 P.2d 363 , was an action by a county against a manufacturer to recover workers' compensation benefits paid and payable to two county employees injured in an explosion while using defendant's product. One of the injured employees was a county employee; the other was a United States Marine who, although on active duty, was working for the county as part of a civilian job training program established between the Marine Corps and the county. The county initially did not regard this man as its workers' compensation responsibility and did not provide him with benefits. Both employees sued the manufacturer within one year of the accident. The Marine in his action joined the county as a defendant. In this action, the county's motion for summary judgment on the ground it owed the Marine only workers' compensation benefits was granted. The county also filed a lien on its employee's action to recover its workers compensation expenses. Prior to the county's filing its action against the manufacturer, the employees, without the county's consent, settled their personal injury actions with the manufacturer. The county's action was filed within a year after the settlements and of the county's agreeing to pay benefits to the Marine but more than two years after the accident. Defendant's demurrer to the complaint was sustained without leave to amend on the ground the actions were barred by former Code Civ. Proc. § 340(3) [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 335.1 (two-year limitations period, beginning in 2003)], which imposed a one-year statute of limitations on actions for injury caused by the wrongful act or neglect of another. Plaintiff appealed from the subsequent judgment of dismissal.

The Supreme Court affirmed. It held that the one year-period of limitations set forth in former Code Civ. Proc. § 340(3) [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 335.1 (two-year limitations period, beginning in 2003)] governed the employee's action against the tortfeasor (19 Cal. 3d 862, 874) .

[d] Action to Recover Workers' Compensation Benefits Paid

The facts and procedural background of County of San Diego v. Sanfax Corp. (1977) 19 Cal. 3d 862, 140 Cal. Rptr. 638, 568 P.2d 363 , are discussed in § 220.31[3][c]. In affirming the judgment of dismissal on the ground the action was barred by former Code Civ. Proc. § 340(3) [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 335.1 (two-year limitations period, beginning in 2003)], the Court rejected the county's contention that the action was on a liability created by statute and hence governed by the three-year period of limitation set forth in former Code Civ. Proc. § 338(1) [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 338(a)] (19 Cal. 3d 862, 868-869) . The Court noted that in granting employers the right to sue third parties, the legislature simply gave statutory recognition to principles of equitable subrogation (19 Cal. 3d 862, 876 n.7). The Court said that recognizing the procedural and substantive interchangeability of employee and employer third-party actions, the cases have consistently held that the same statute of limitations, former Code Civ. Proc. § 340(3) [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 335.1 (two-year limitations period, beginning in 2003)], governs both employee and employer actions (19 Cal. 3d 862, 874) . The Court accordingly held that the one-year statute of limitations of former Code Civ. Proc. § 340(3) [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 335.1 (two-year limitations period, beginning in 2003)] governed an employer's action under Lab. Code § 3852 (19 Cal. 3d 862, 878-879, 886) . The Court further held that the statute runs from the date of injury and not from the date the employer agrees to pay, pays, or is ordered to pay workers' compensation benefits (19 Cal. 3d 862, 879-884) .

NOTE:

The Federal Employers' Liability Act, as distinguished from the California's Workers' Compensation Law, does not contain subrogation provisions. An action by the employer against a third-party tortfeasor under the federal act is one for indemnity, and thus the cause of action accrues and the statute of limitations commences to run when the employer pays the underlying claim [see Southern Pac. Transp.

Co. v. Ohbayashi Am. Corp. (1983) 147 Cal. App. 3d 233, 236-239, 195 Cal. Rptr. 63] .

[e] Disability of Minority Tolling Statute of Limitations as Not Subrogated

Amie v. Superior Court (1979) 99 Cal. App. 3d 421, 160 Cal. Rptr. 271 , was a mandate proceeding arising out of an action against a father by a county seeking reimbursement for child support. The father demurred to the complaint on the ground the action was barred by the three-year period of limitations imposed by former Code Civ. Proc. § 338(1) [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 338(a)] on a liability created by statute, to the extent the complaint sought recovery for public assistance paid for support more than three years before the complaint was filed. The demurrer was overruled, and the father petitioned for a writ of mandate to require the trial court to enter an order sustaining the demurrer. In the writ proceeding, the county argued that its right of action was derived by way of assignment or subrogation from the child's right of action against her parent for support and that as the child's minority would toll the statute of limitations in an action commenced by her, the statute likewise tolled the statute as to the county's action (99 Cal. App. 3d 421, 425) .

The court of appeal rejected the argument and ordered the writ issued. The court said the disability of a minor which tolls the statute of limitations is personal and may not be transferred by assignment or subrogation (99 Cal. App. 3d 421, 426, 428) .

[a] Applicable Statute of Limitations

In Employers Ins. of Wausau v. Granite State Ins Co. (9th Cir. 2003) 330 F.3d 1214 , the primary insurer brought a subrogation action against the excess insurer after paying the third-party claim of a mutual insured. The federal district court vacated a judgment for the primary insurer after applying a two-year statute of limitations under Civ. Code § 339. On cross-appeal, the excess insurer contended that even if the action was not time-barred, it was not liable for any portion of the settlement because the primary policy was not exhausted. The Ninth Circuit reversed the dismissal of the action as time-barred, but also reversed the decision that the excess policy was triggered, remanding with instructions to enter judgment for the excess insurer. With respect to the applicable statute of limitations, the Ninth Circuit held that the statute of limitations in a subrogation action is the statute of limitations that would have been applicable if the insured had brought suit on the insured's own behalf. A direct action by the third party against the excess insurer would have been subject to a four-year statute of limitations under Code Civ. Proc. § 337. Accordingly, the primary insurer must be afforded a four-year period in which to enforce the third party's rights against the excess insurer (330 F.3d 1214, 1218-1219) .

Commercial Union Assurance Co. v. City of San Jose (1982) 127 Cal. App. 3d 730, 179 Cal. Rptr. 814 , is discussed in § 220.33[3][a]]. The court of appeal said that in a subrogated action by an insurer, the tortfeasor is usually permitted to assert all defenses available against the insured, including the statute of limitations (127 Cal. App. 3d 730, 733) . Equity will enforce subrogation only when the action is brought within the time in which an action could have been brought to enforce the original obligation to which the right of subrogation is sought (127 Cal. App. 3d 730, 734) .

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF INSURER'S ACTION IN SUBROGATION, BASED ON ITS PAYMENTS TO ONE OF ITS INSUREDS, IS BARRED BECAUSE AT ALL RELEVANT TIMES DEFENDANT WAS INSURED BY PLAINTIFF UNDER A SEPARATE POLICY.

Insurer Cannot Recover From One Insured Amount Paid to Another Insured Pursuant to Separate Policy. An insurer is barred from recovering from one of its insureds an amount that it paid to another insured pursuant to a separate policy (National Union Fire Ins. v. Engineering-Sci. (9th Cir. 1989) 884 F.2d 1208, 1210) .

[2] Comments

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that an action by the subrogee is barred, when the subrogee is an insurer seeking to recover amounts paid to one insured under a policy with respect to which defendant is a third party, and when defendant was also insured by plaintiff under a separate policy that was in effect at the time [see National Union Fire Ins. v. Engineering-Sci. (9th Cir. 1989) 884 F.2d 1208, 1210] .

These points and authorities may be used alone or combined with a memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the action for subrogation is barred. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities relating to a motion for summary judgment. Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should show that the defendant was insured by plaintiff under a separate policy when the event underlying plaintiff's action occurred.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Insurer Cannot Recover From One Insured Amount Paid to Another Insured Pursuant to Separate Policy

In National Union Fire Ins. v. Engineering-Sci. (9th Cir. 1989) 884 F.2d 1208 , an insurer brought an action in subrogation against an engineering company, which it insured under a professional negligence policy, to recover amounts paid under a builder's risk insurance policy issued to a general contractor. A sewer pipeline, designed by defendant and constructed by a general contractor, sustained extensive damage in severe weather, repairs for which plaintiff paid $4 million under a builder's risk policy issued to the contractor. Plaintiff had also issued a professional negligence policy to the engineering company that designed the pipeline, insuring it against errors and omissions. In a subrogation action brought in federal court on diversity grounds, plaintiff sued the engineering company to recover benefits paid under the builder's risk policy. Defendant successfully moved for summary judgment, and plaintiff appealed.

The federal court of appeal affirmed, holding that an insurer cannot recover amounts paid under one insurance policy from another policy holder (884 F.2d 1208, 1210) . The court noted that no California court had addressed the precise issue whether an insurer, claiming subrogation for amounts paid an insured under one policy, is barred from suing a third party whom it has also insured under a separate policy. In a case in which an insurer sued a subcontractor that was a coinsured under a policy, the California court of appeal denied relief, holding that an insurer is barred from subrogating against its own insured for a loss against which it had insured [see St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Murray Plumbing & Heating Corp. (1976) 65 Cal. App. 3d 66, 75-77, 135 Cal. Rptr. 120 ; see also § 220.45[3][a]]. The federal court of appeal agreed with that opinion and concluded that California courts would probably bar a subrogation action by an insurance company against its own insured under the circumstances in the case before it (884 F.2d 1208, 1210) .

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THIS ACTION IS BARRED BECAUSE PLAINTIFF SUBROGEE FAILED TO FILE IT WITHIN THE TIME REQUIRED BY SECTION 945.6(a) OF THE GOVERNMENT CODE AFTER THE CLAIM WAS REJECTED.

A. Time Within Which Action Must Be Commenced. With exceptions not here pertinent, any suit brought against a public entity on a cause of action for which a claim is required to be presented must, if written notice of rejection is given in accordance with Gov. Code § 913, be commenced not later than six months after the date the notice is personally delivered or deposited in the mail (Gov. Code § 945.6(a)).

B. Action Not Timely Filed After Rejection of Claim as Barred. In the absence of special considerations, an insurer's right to recover on the insured's cause of action against an alleged public entity tortfeasor for damages is barred when the statutory period prescribed by Section 945.6(a) of the Government Code has run on the insured's claim and no action has been filed (Commercial Union Assurance Co. v. City of San Jose (1982) 127 Cal. App. 3d 730, 735, 179 Cal. Rptr. 814).

These points and authorities may be used alone or combined with a memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue. For example, they may be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities (1) in support of a general demurrer to the complaint [see Code Civ. Proc. §§

430.10(e), 430.30(a)], or (2) in support of a nonstatutory motion by defendant for judgment on the pleadings when the date the claim was rejected is alleged. They may also be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities in support of a motion by defendant or in opposition to a motion by plaintiff for summary judgment when the date the claim was rejected is not alleged or has been falsely alleged to make the filing of the action timely [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c]. Should the trial court erroneously rule that plaintiff is entitled to maintain the action, these points and authorities may be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities in support of a petition for writ of mandate [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1085, 1086] to compel the trial court to vacate its ruling and for a writ of prohibition [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1102, 1103] to restrain the trial court from proceeding with the action. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, if the contention is made in support of a demurrer or a motion for judgment on the pleadings, counsel should simply show (from the court's records) that the complaint was filed more than six months after it alleges the claim was rejected. The points and authorities should establish that the action is barred. If the contention is made in support of or in opposition to a motion, other than a motion for judgment on the pleadings, counsel should present the facts showing the claim was rejected more than six months before the action was filed. The facts would normally be presented in one or more supporting affidavits or declarations under penalty of perjury to which reference may be made in this memorandum of points and authorities [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009, 2015.5]. If the contention is made in support of a petition for a writ of mandate and/or a writ of prohibition, counsel should show, in addition to the above, that the objection was properly raised in and rejected by the trial court. This would normally be shown by attaching to the petition authenticated copies of the appropriate trial court records.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Action Not Timely Filed After Rejection of Claim as Barred

Commercial Union Assurance Co. v. City of San Jose (1982) 127 Cal. App. 3d 730, 179 Cal. Rptr. 814 , was an action by an insurer against a city to recover as the subrogee of its insured amounts paid for property damage. The complaint alleged that plaintiff's insured suffered property damage from falling tree branches allegedly caused by the city's negligence; the damage was covered by an insurance policy then in force between the insurer and its insured; on April 14, 1978 the insured presented a claim to the city for $30,000 damages [see Gov. Code § 905]; on May 18, 1978 the city rejected the claim and gave notice of the rejection; on June 27, 1978 the insurer paid the insured $550 for lost rents; on January 4, 1979 the insurer notified the city it would be pursuing its subrogation rights against the city after paying repair costs estimated in the range of $15,000 to $20,000; and on January 30, 1979 the city served on the insurer a "Notice of Insufficiency and/or Non-Acceptance of Claim." The complaint was filed on February 3, 1979 by the insurer as subrogee to recover damages to be ascertained. The city's demurrer to the complaint was sustained with leave to amend on the ground more than six months had elapsed between the date the city rejected the insured's claim for damages and the commencement of the action. Following plaintiff's failure to amend, a judgment of dismissal was entered, and plaintiff appealed. Plaintiff contended that it had no cause of action until it and its insured agreed on the amount of the loss and such sum was paid to the insured; its letter of January 4, 1979, constituted a timely claim for its own independent rights within the provisions of Gov. Code § 911.2 (relating to the time for presenting a claim); and in any event, principles established in connection with the statutory rights of subrogation of uninsured motorist insurers established that plaintiff's action was not barred.

The court of appeal rejected the contentions and affirmed the judgment. The court said generally the insurer's subrogated right is its right to be put in the position of its insured against third parties legally responsible to its insured for the loss which the insurer has both insured and paid, and the tortfeasor is usually permitted to assert all defenses available against the insured including the statute of limitations (127 Cal. App. 3d 730, 733) . The court pointed out that under Gov. Code § 945.6(a) the insured's right to commence an action against the city expired on or about November 18, 1978 (127 Cal. App. 3d 730, 733-734) . The court explained that the right of an insurer to be subrogated to the rights of its insured is generally distinguished from a claim for contribution or indemnity or statutory subrogation. In the former cases the rule is that equity will enforce subrogation only when the action is brought within the time in which an action could have been brought to enforce the original obligation to which the right of subrogation is sought. This is also the general rule for common law subrogation as distinguished from indemnity or contribution. The same limitation is applied to an employer's statutory right to subrogation against a tortfeasor for workers' compensation benefits paid to an employee for injuries caused by the tortfeasor's negligence (127 Cal. App. 3d 730, 734-735) . The court concluded that in the absence of special considerations, the insurer's right to recover on the insured's cause of action against the alleged tortfeasor for the damages to the insured's property was barred when the statutory period ran on the insured's cause of action (127 Cal. App. 3d 730, 735) . The court distinguished those cases involving subrogation rights of an insurer paying uninsured motorist benefits [see § 220.51] on the ground those rights are governed by a special statute that does not apply in other cases (127 Cal. App. 3d 730, 735-736) .

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THIS ACTION IS BARRED BECAUSE A PRIOR ACTION ON THE SAME CAUSE WAS PROSECUTED BY PLAINTIFF'S SUBROGOR, AND A JUDGMENT WAS ENTERED IN THAT ACTION AND HAS BECOME FINAL.

A. Right of Action and Cause of Action Distinguished. Both the partial subrogee and the partial subrogor have a claim against the obligor and each may sue the obligor; that is, each has a right of action against the obligor, but there is only one cause of action (Ventura County Employees' Ret. Ass'n v. Pope (1978) 87 Cal. App. 3d 938, 953, 151 Cal. Rptr. 695).

B. Prohibition Against Splitting Cause of Action. A party may not split a single cause of action and make it the basis of separate suits (see Wulfjen v. Dolton (1944) 24 Cal. 2d 891, 894, 151 P.2d 846 ; Ferraro v. Southern Cal. Gas Co. (1980) 102 Cal. App. 3d 33, 41, 162 Cal. Rptr. 238).

C. Action Is Res Judicata. When a partial subrogee and a partial subrogor have split the cause of action by each separately suing the obligor and a judgment in one of the actions has previously been entered and become final, the cause of action is res judicata and the second action is barred (see Ferraro v. Southern Cal. Gas Co. (1980) 102 Cal. App. 3d 33, 41, 162 Cal. Rptr. 238 ; Phillips v. Western Pac. R.R. Co. (1971), 22 Cal. App. 3d 441, 444, 99 Cal. Rptr. 451).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that an action by a partial subrogee is barred by the doctrine of res judicata when a judgment has been rendered in a prior action on the same cause by plaintiff's partial subrogor.

These points and authorities may be used alone or combined with a memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue of res judicata. For example, if it appears from the face of the complaint or judicially noticed matter that the action is barred by a prior judgment, they may be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities: (1) in support of the obligor's general demurrer to the partial subrogee's complaint [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 430.10(e), 430.30(a)]; or (2) in support of a nonstatutory motion by defendant for judgment on the pleadings. If the obligor has filed an answer pleading that the action is barred by res judicata [see Code Civ. Proc. § 431.30(b)(2)], these points and authorities may be used in support of a motion by the obligor for a separate trial of that defense [see Code Civ. Proc. § 597], or these points and authorities may be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities in support of the obligor's motion for summary judgment on the ground the action has no merit because it is barred by the doctrine of res judicata [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c]. In any of these proceedings, counsel for the obligor should ask the court to take judicial notice of the prior action [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 437c(b), 430.70; Evid. Code §§ 452(d), 453]. Should the trial court erroneously rule against the defense, these points and authorities may be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities in support of a petition for writ of mandate [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1085, 1086] to compel the trial court to vacate its ruling and for a writ of prohibition [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1102, 1103] to restrain the trial court from proceeding with the action. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

With appropriate modifications, the points and authorities may be used in support of any of these proceedings when the action is by the partial subrogor and the prior action was by the partial subrogee.

If no final judgment has been entered in the prior action, whether by the partial subrogee or the partial subrogor, these points and authorities may, with appropriate modifications, be combined with points and authorities (1) in support of a motion to consolidate the actions [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1048(a)]; (2) in support of a demurrer to the complaint on the ground there is another action pending between the same parties on the same cause [see Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(c)]; (3) for a separate trial of that defense [see Code Civ. Proc. § 597]; or (4) in support of a demurrer to the complaint on the ground there is a defect (nonjoinder) of parties plaintiff [see Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(d)]. They may also be used in support of a motion to compel joinder of the partial subrogee or partial subrogor, as the case may be [see Code Civ. Proc. § 389].

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Partial Subrogee or Subrogor

When a third party (subrogee) pays the creditor (subrogor) only a portion of the obligation of the principal debtor or tortfeasor (obligor), there is but a partial subrogation; the third party is a partial subrogee and the creditor is a partial subrogor [see, e.g., Ferraro v. Southern Cal. Gas Co. (1980) 102 Cal. App. 3d 33, 42-43, 162 Cal. Rptr. 238 ; Bank of Orient v. Superior Court (1977) 67 Cal. App. 3d 588, 594, 136 Cal. Rptr. 741] .

[c] Nature of Objection and Waiver

The splitting of a cause of action is not a jurisdictional defect but rather an affirmative defense that must be pleaded by the defendant or is waived [Ferraro v. Southern Cal. Gas Co. (1980) 102 Cal. App. 3d 33, 43-44, 162 Cal. Rptr. 238] . The same is true of the alternative objection that the partial subrogee or partial subrogor has failed to join the other as a party in his or her action against the obligor; the failure is not a jurisdictional defect in the fundamental sense, since it does not deprive the trial court of subject matter jurisdiction [Ferraro v. Southern Cal. Gas Co. (1980) 102 Cal. App. 3d 33, 44-45, 162 Cal. Rptr. 238] . The omitted party is not an indispensable party but only what would have been a conditionally necessary party under Code Civ. Proc. § 389 prior to its 1971 amendment [Peerless Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1970) 6 Cal. App. 3d 358, 361-363, 85 Cal. Rptr. 679] . Hence, the objection of nonjoinder is waived if not timely and properly made [Peerless Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1970) 6 Cal. App. 3d 358, 361, 363, 85 Cal. Rptr. 679] . A fortiori, the objection may not be raised for the first time on appeal from the judgment [Ferraro v. Southern Cal. Gas Co. (1980) 102 Cal. App. 3d 33, 44-45, 162 Cal. Rptr. 238] .

[d] How to Avoid Defense That Action Has Been Split

To avoid the defense that the cause of action has been split (as well as the issue of nonjoinder of a party), both the partial subrogee and partial subrogor should, each to enforce his or her own claim, join together as plaintiffs in a lawsuit against the debtor or tortfeasor. If either person is unwilling to be joined as a plaintiff in an action by the other, the other may sue the obligor and name the unwilling plaintiff as a defendant in that action, as authorized by Code Civ. Proc. § 382 [see Offer v. Superior Court (1924) 194 Cal. 114, 118-119, 228 P. 11 ; Phillips v. Western Pac. R.R. Co. (1971) 22 Cal. App. 3d 441, 443, 99 Cal. Rptr. 451] . If this is done, a cross complaint by the unwilling plaintiff as defendant on his or her partial claim against the codefendant (the principal debtor or tortfeasor), does not constitute, but rather prevents, an impermissible splitting of a cause of action [Phillips v. Western Pac. R.R. Co. (1971) 22 Cal. App. 3d 441, 445, 99 Cal. Rptr. 451 ; see Ferraro v. Southern Cal. Gas Co. (1980) 102 Cal. App. 3d 33, 42-43, 162 Cal. Rptr. 238] .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Right of Action and Cause of Action Distinguished

Ventura County Employees' Ret. Ass'n v. Pope (1978) 87 Cal. App. 3d 938, 151 Cal. Rptr. 695 , was an action by a county employees' retirement association against an alleged third-party tortfeasor to recover one-half the disability benefits payable to an employee-member of the association who was injured in an automobile collision with defendant.

The employee had settled her personal claim against defendant for $20,000 and executed a general release in his favor. The association was not a party to the settlement. Prior to the settlement, the employee had applied to the association for disability benefits and, after the settlement, was found by the association to be totally disabled for the performance of her duties, and was granted benefits. Thirteen months after the accident, the association notified defendant's insurance adjusters of its intention to seek subrogation. Without adjudicating the wrongfulness of defendant's conduct or determining his tort liability, the trial court gave judgment for plaintiff for $17,000, and defendant appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. The court held reversal was mandated by the trial court's failure to make any factual determinations of defendant's liability (87 Cal. App. 3d 938, 943) . In holding the claims of the association and of the employee constituted but a single cause of action, the court said our legal vocabulary may be deficient in failing to differentiate sufficiently between the operative facts that form the basis for a legal claim [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 307, 425.10] and the right of the person entitled to pursue the claim [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 367, 378]. The deficiency becomes particularly pronounced when multiple claimants are pursuing a single wrong. The court suggested we employ the term "cause of action" to identify the operative facts giving rise to a claim for relief, and the term "right of action" to identify the right of a person entitled to pursue all or part of a particular claim for relief. The court observed that such differentiation in vocabulary was hinted at in Smith v. County of Los Angeles (1969) 276 Cal. App. 2d 156, 162-164, 81 Cal. Rptr. 120 , in which the court, in referring to separate suits against third parties by an employer and by an employee, declared that each of the two plaintiffs had a separate right of action, which the court then distinguished from what it referred to as the total action involving the totality of recovery. The court in Ventura explained that if it made a similar differentiation, it would see that one cause of action containing various facets had been separately pursued by different claimants, each of whom possessed a right of action. By using a precise vocabulary, the court could, it said, identify the association's right of action as part of the employee's cause of action (87 Cal. App. 3d 938, 953) .

[b] Prohibition Against Splitting Cause of Action

Wulfjen v. Dolton (1944) 24 Cal. 2d 891, 151 P.2d 846 , did not involve subrogation, but is the leading case on the splitting of causes of action. Plaintiff had filed a prior action against individuals and a corporation in which she alleged the individuals were the organizers and promoters of the corporation, and that they controlled the corporation and the corporation was their alter ego. Additionally, through the fraud of the individuals she was induced to advance substantial sums of money to the corporation which she later learned to be insolvent, and she'd given notice of rescission. The complaint in that action alleged causes of action for fraud, rescission, and money had and received. The trial court found the rescission was effective against the corporation, but that the corporation was not the alter ego of the individual defendants and all money advanced by plaintiff went to the corporation. Judgment in that action was entered in favor of plaintiff against the corporation, and plaintiff appealed. While the appeal was pending, she filed the present action for damages for conspiracy to defraud arising out of the same matters alleged in the prior action. Defendants were the same individuals sued in the prior action amid another person who was not a party to the prior action. Defendants invoked the defenses of pendency of the former action, election of remedies, and estoppel. Judgment was for the defendants, and plaintiff appealed.

The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment in part and reversed it in part. The Court said it is clearly established that a party may not split up a single cause of action and make it the basis of separate suits, and in such case the first action may be pleaded in abatement of any subsequent suit on the same claim (24 Cal. 2d 891, 894) . The rule against splitting a cause of action is based on two reasons: (1) defendant should be protected against vexatious litigation; and (2) it is against public policy to permit litigants to consume the time of the courts by relitigating matters already judicially determined, or by asserting claims which properly should have been settled in some prior action (24 Cal. 2d 891, 894-895) . With respect to the individuals sued in both actions, the Court held the case fell within the scope of this principle of law and plaintiff was simply seeking a different form of relief based on the same cause of action (24 Cal. 2d 891, 895) . The violation of one primary right constitutes a single cause of action, though it may entitle the injured party to many forms of relief; the relief is not to be confounded with the cause of action, one not being determinative of the other (24 Cal. 2d 891, 895-896) . Accordingly, the Court affirmed the judgment as to those defendants sued in both actions and reversed it as to the defendant who had not been joined in the prior action (24 Cal. 2d 891, 897) .

Ferraro v. Southern Cal. Gas Co. (1980) 102 Cal. App. 3d 33, 162 Cal. Rptr. 238 , was an action arising out of the destruction of buildings by an explosion caused by a gas service connection being pulled loose by a backhoe operator laying a new electrical line. After the explosion, the owners of the buildings settled their claims with their fire insurance carrier and executed a subrogation agreement with it. The insurer then filed a complaint against the electrical utility, the contractor, and the gas company. About six months later, the owners of the property filed the present action against the same defendants. Consistent with their subrogation agreement, plaintiff owners alleged they had received insurance benefits in the amount of $70,000 from their insurer. They did not attempt to join the insurer, nor did the insurer seek to join. At the conclusion of the liability phase of the trial, the jury determined the electrical utility and the contractor were 85 percent at fault and the gas company was 15 percent at fault. At the beginning of the damage phase, plaintiff owners settled their claim with the electrical utility and the contractor for $35,000, and the case continued against the gas company only. Counsel for plaintiffs stipulated that the court could deduct the sum of $65,500 (the $70,000 insurance proceeds received minus $4,500 for the costs of collecting it) from any damage verdict rendered in their favor. The jury returned a verdict for plaintiffs for $91,081.12, but judgment was entered for zero dollars due to deductions for the insurance proceeds and the settlement received by plaintiffs. Plaintiffs appealed. Defendant moved to dismiss the appeal on the ground plaintiffs had split their cause of action.

The court denied the motion to dismiss on the ground the defense was waived by failure to have raised it in the trial court, but affirmed the judgment on the ground defendant could not be subjected to double liability [see § 220.37] (102 Cal. App. 3d 33, 43-44, 46-47, 53) . The court nevertheless said it has become axiomatic that a single cause of action cannot be split and made the basis for several suits and that the policy behind the rule was set out in Wulfjen v. Dolton (1944) 24 Cal. 2d 891, 894-895, 151 P.2d 846 . Quoting that case, the court said the rule against splitting a cause of action has two bases: (1) defendant should be protected against vexatious litigation; and (2) it is against public policy to permit litigation to consume the time of the courts by relitigating matters already judicially determined, or by asserting claims which properly should have been settled in some prior action (102 Cal. App. 3d 33, 41) .

The facts and procedural background of Ferraro v. Southern Cal. Gas Co. (1980) 102 Cal. App. 3d 33, 162 Cal. Rptr. 238 , are discussed in § 220.34[3][b]. In affirming the judgment, the court said the rule against splitting a cause of action is both a rule of abatement of actions--a defendant in a second suit may plead the pendency of the first in abatement--and a rule involving the application of the doctrine of res judicata--a defendant in a second suit, if a previous suit has been concluded and judgment rendered on the merits, may plead that judgment as a bar (102 Cal. App. 3d 33, 41) .

Phillips v. Western Pac. R.R. Co. (1971), 22 Cal. App. 3d 441, 99 Cal. Rptr. 451 , was an action by an insurance carrier as the partial subrogee of its insureds to recover the amount paid the insureds on account of losses sustained by the destruction of property caused by a fire for which the railroad was alleged to be responsible. Plaintiff joined the insureds as defendants under the provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 382 (unwilling plaintiff sued as defendant). The railroad filed a general denial. The insureds filed an answer to the complaint denying they had refused to join as plaintiffs and a cross complaint against the railroad for negligence and damages greatly in excess of the amount of the insurance company's claim. The railroad served and filed an offer of judgment in the amount of the insurer's claim, and the insurance company accepted it. Judgment was entered accordingly. The railroad then filed its answer to the cross complaint, pleading, as an affirmative defense, that the insureds were proceeding on a split cause of action and were barred by the judgment in favor of the insurer. The insureds' general demurrer to the affirmative defense was sustained without leave to amend. The matter was tried and judgment was for the cross complainants, with the railroad being allowed to offset against the judgment the amount it had previously paid the insurer. The railroad appealed, contending the cross complaint was a splitting of the cause originally brought by the insurer.

The court of appeal pointed out that the affirmative defense was based on the long-established rule that a single cause of action cannot be split. Otherwise, stated, an entire claim cannot be divided and made the basis of several suits (22 Cal. App. 3d 441, 444) . The court said if an effort is made to split a cause of action into more than one lawsuit, the defendant in the second suit may plead the pendency of the first in abatement. If the judgment has previously been rendered on the merits in the first suit, the defendant in the second suit can plead the judgment as a bar, based on res judicata (22 Cal. App. 3d 441, 444) . The court, however, held the procedure followed by the insurer (joining the insureds as defendants) allowed determination of the entire liability of the railroad in a single lawsuit and, therefore, prevented, rather than caused, a splitting of the action and, accordingly, affirmed the judgment (22 Cal. App. 3d 441, 445-446) .

[a] Right of Action and Cause of Action Distinguished

The facts and procedural background of Ferraro v. Southern Cal. Gas Co. (1980) 102 Cal. App. 3d 33, 162 Cal. Rptr. 238 , are discussed in § 220.34[3][b]. In affirming the judgment, the court cited Ventura County Employees' Ret. Ass'n v. Pope (1978) 87 Cal. App. 3d 938, 953, 151 Cal. Rptr. 695 [see § 220.34[3][a]], for a discussion of the problems in differentiating sufficiently between the operative facts that form the basis of a legal claim and the right of the person entitled to pursue that claim. The court said it adopted the approach in Ventura by using the terms "cause of action" and "right of action" to so differentiate (102 Cal. App. 3d 33, 41 n.3).

22-220 California Points & Authorities § 220.35

§ 220.35 Supporting Obligor's Contention That Subrogee Cannot Recover From Obligor Without Pleading and Proving Subrogor's Cause of Action Against Obligor

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF IS PRECLUDED FROM RECOVERING IN THIS ACTION AS SUBROGEE BECAUSE PLAINTIFF HAS FAILED TO _____ [PLEAD or PROVE] ANY CAUSE OF ACTION IN FAVOR OF _____ [name of plaintiff's subrogor] AGAINST DEFENDANT.

A. Burden of Proof. Except as otherwise provided by law, a party has the burden of proof as to each fact the existence or nonexistence of which is essential to the claim for relief or defense that he or she is asserting (Evid. Code § 500).

B. Degree of Care. The party claiming a person did not exercise a requisite degree of care has the burden of proof on that issue (Evid. Code § 521).

C. Issues of Fact as Arising on Pleadings. An issue of fact arises on a material allegation in the complaint controverted by the answer (Code Civ. Proc. § 590(1)).

D. Obligor's Liability to Subrogor as Required to Be Pleaded and Proved. A subrogee must plead and prove the facts establishing the liability of the defendant obligor to the subrogor (see Breese v. Price (1981) 29 Cal. 3d 923, 926-927, 930-931, 176 Cal. Rptr. 791, 633 P.2d 987 (required to be proved); Campan v. Molle (1899) 124 Cal. 415, 416-417, 57 P. 208 (required to be pleaded)).

E. Recovery in Subrogated Action Prohibited if Subrogor's Liability Not Established. If the obligor is not liable to the subrogor, the subrogee cannot recover. For example, if it is found in the case of an alleged liability based on negligence that the subrogor's loss or harm was not caused by defendant's negligence, the subrogee cannot prevail (Breese v. Price (1981) 29 Cal. 3d 923, 930, 176 Cal. Rptr. 791, 633 P.2d 987 ; Mendenhall v. Curtis (1980) 102 Cal. App. 3d 786, 792, 162 Cal. Rptr. 569).

[2] Comments

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that in order for the subrogee to recover, he or she must, in addition to pleading and proving a right to subrogation, plead and prove the subrogor's cause of action against the defendant obligor.

The foregoing points and authorities may be used alone or combined with a memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue. For example if the elements of the subrogor's cause of action against the obligor are not alleged, they may be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities (1) in support of a general demurrer to the complaint [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 430.10(e), 430.30(a)], or (2) in support of a nonstatutory motion for judgment on the pleadings. They may also be cited orally to the court in support of an objection by defendant to the introduction of any evidence by plaintiff. If plaintiff fails to prove a cause of action in favor of the subrogor against defendant, these points and authorities may be cited in support of a motion for nonsuit or judgment or combined with a memorandum of points and authorities in support of a motion for new trial if the verdict or judgment is for plaintiff [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 581c (motion for nonsuit), 631.8 (motion for judgment), 657(6) (motion for new trial on ground of insufficiency of evidence or verdict or decision is against law)]. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, if the contention is made in support of a demurrer, motion for judgment on the pleadings, or objection to the introduction of evidence, counsel for defendant should show that the complaint fails to state one or more of the essential elements of the subrogor's cause of action against the obligor. If the contention is made in support of a motion for nonsuit or judgment, counsel should show that it appears from plaintiff's opening statement or after the close of plaintiff's evidence, as the case may be, that defendant is not liable to the subrogor, or in the case of a subrogated cause of action based on tort that the tort was not the proximate cause of the subrogor's loss. If the contention is made in support of a motion for new trial on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence, counsel should show that there was no evidence or insufficient evidence presented to establish either that the defendant was liable to the subrogor or that the defendant's tort was a proximate cause of the subrogor's loss.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Obligor's Liability to Subrogor as Required to Be Alleged and Proved

Breese v. Price (1981) 29 Cal. 3d 923, 176 Cal. Rptr. 791, 633 P.2d 987 , was an action by an employee against a third-party tortfeasor for alleged damages resulting from an automobile accident in which the employer's insurer intervened seeking reimbursement for the amount of its payment to the employee pursuant to a compromise of his workers' compensation claim. The Workers' Compensation Appeals Board had found the employee suffered neither temporary nor permanent disability and required no medical treatment and rendered an award of $25 to cover "medical-legal" expenses. Nevertheless, the workers' compensation carrier negotiated a "compromise and release of claim" which recited the carrier's offer to pay the employee $10,885 including medical expenses of $735, and the board subsequently approved the compromise. The third party admitted responsibility for the automobile accident, but denied any resultant damages to the employee or employer. The trial court, concluding the third party was barred from challenging the reasonableness of the compromise, entered judgment in favor of the employer for the full amount of the settlement, and the third party appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed. The Court held a defendant who was not a party to the compensation proceedings and who has had neither notice nor opportunity to be heard is not bound by the terms of the settlement (29 Cal. 3d 923, 925-926) . The Court said in the personal injury action, the burden remains on the carrier (subrogee) to prove defendant (obligor) was negligent; defendant's negligence was the proximate cause of the injuries of plaintiff-employee (subrogor); and the amount of defendant's tort liability for such injuries (29 Cal. 3d 923, 926) . An employer (or its carrier) seeking reimbursement for compensation payments bears the burden of establishing that a defendant's negligence is the proximate cause of an employee's injuries and the amount of tort damages reasonably resulting therefrom. A defendant in the third-party tort action must be permitted the opportunity of presenting evidence to the contrary, whether the claim is asserted by an employee for his or her own injury, or by an employer (or carrier) for reimbursement of compensation paid (29 Cal. 3d 923, 930-931) . The Court disapproved any inconsistency in State Comp. Ins. Fund v. Williams (1974) 38 Cal. App. 3d 218, 112 Cal. Rptr. 226 , and Board of Admin. v. Ames (1963) 215 Cal. App. 2d 215, 29 Cal. Rptr. 917 .

Campan v. Molle (1899) 124 Cal. 415, 57 P. 208 , was an action to cancel a homestead and apply the property to the payment of a prior judgment rendered for plaintiff against defendants on a note executed by defendants to plaintiff. The note was for a loan in the amount necessary to enable defendants to purchase a parcel of land and given to plaintiff with a promise to execute a mortgage on the land to secure the note when title to the land was obtained. However, after receiving title, defendants refused to execute the mortgage and filed a declaration of homestead on the premises. Defendants' demurrer to the complaint was sustained. Plaintiff appealed from the subsequent judgment, claiming he was subrogated to the rights of the vendor of the land and was entitled to enforce the claim against the land as fully as could the vendor.

The Supreme Court affirmed. The Court said the complaint did not contain the contract between the vendor and defendants or show the relation between them, and it did not appear from the complaint that the vendor had any rights he could enforce against defendants (124 Cal. 415, 416) . The complaint merely showed that defendants had the right to purchase the land for a given sum of money. Nor did it appear when defendants paid the money to the vendor or when the land was conveyed to them. The Court said that as the vendor was to retain title to the land until full payment was made, there was no vendor's lien to which plaintiff could be subrogated. The Court concluded the transaction between plaintiff and defendants was merely a loan of money on their agreement to give him security, which they afterwards refused to do (124 Cal. 415, 417) .

[b] Recovery in Subrogated Action Prohibited If Subrogor's Liability Not Established

The facts and procedural background of Breese v. Price (1981) 29 Cal. 3d 923, 176 Cal. Rptr. 791, 633 P.2d 987 , are discussed in § 220.35[3][a]. In reversing the judgment for the employer, the Supreme Court, quoting Mendenhall v. Curtis (1980) 102 Cal. App. 3d 786, 792, 162 Cal. Rptr. 569 , said if in an action by the employer (subrogee) to recover workers' compensation benefits paid, the court finds the injuries of the employee (subrogor) were not caused by the negligence of the defendant (obligor), the employer cannot prevail (29 Cal. 3d 923, 930) .

Mendenhall v. Curtis (1980) 102 Cal. App. 3d 786, 162 Cal. Rptr. 569 , was an action by an employee for personal injuries allegedly sustained in an automobile accident in which the employer, a self-insured county, intervened in order to recover workers' compensation benefits paid to the employee. Before commencement of trial, the county's motion in limine for a ruling that defendant be precluded from contesting either the reasonableness of the amount of compensation benefits paid or that such payments were the proximate result of the accident was granted over defendant's objection. The court based its ruling on Lab. Code §§ 3854 and 3855, relating to evidence and proof. The court instructed the jury that the workers' compensation benefits paid shall be considered as proximately caused by the accident and that the issues the county had the burden of proving were defendant's negligence and the amount of workers' compensation benefits paid. By special verdicts the jury found, as to plaintiff, that defendant was negligent but the negligence was not a proximate cause of any injury to plaintiff and, as to the county, defendant was 100 percent negligent and plaintiff was not negligent. On the basis of the special verdicts, the court entered judgment that plaintiff take nothing on his complaint and that the county recover $23,769.10 and costs from defendant. Defendant appealed from the judgment in favor of the county.

The court of appeal reversed. The court quoted and explained the interpretations given to Lab. Code §§ 3854 and 3855 (102 Cal. App. 3d 786, 790-792) , and added it had found no cases construing these sections as foreclosing the third party from litigating the question of whether or not his tortious conduct was a proximate cause of any injury to the employer. The court said a third party's liability is not determined in the Industrial Accident Commission (the predecessor to the Workers' Compensation Appeals Board) proceeding but rather in the action against the third party. If the trial court had found the employee's injuries were not caused by the third party's negligence, the employer could not have prevailed. In order to establish defendant's liability for the workers' compensation benefits paid by the county, it was incumbent on the county to prove not only that defendant was negligent but that such negligence was a proximate cause of the employee's injuries (102 Cal. App. 3d 786, 792) . The court concluded that the trial court had erred in its interpretation of Lab. Code § 3854 and that the jury finding that defendant's negligence was not a proximate cause of any injury to plaintiff was inconsistent with the judgment in favor of the county for the amount of workers' compensation benefits paid to plaintiff (102 Cal. App. 3d 786, 793-794) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Obligor's Liability to Subrogor as Required to Be Alleged and Proved

The factual background of Ventura County Employees' Ret. Ass'n v. Pope (1978) 87 Cal. App. 3d 938, 151 Cal. Rptr. 695 , is discussed in § 220.34[3][a]. In reversing the judgment for plaintiff, the court said it started with the basic claim: an automobile collision, assertedly the fault of Pope (obligor), resulted in personal injuries to Temple (subrogor). This claim contains the elements of a tort cause of action in favor of Temple against Pope, one whose component parts consist of Pope's liability for fault and Temple's damages for personal injuries incurred as a consequence of Pope's fault. Thus far, Pope's liability extends solely to Temple and consists of damages for personal injuries proximately caused by his wrong. These damages may include such elements as pain and suffering, medical expenses, loss of earnings, future pain and suffering, future medical expenses, loss of future earnings, and loss of future earning power. Each element of damage stems from personal injuries suffered by Temple, and even the most remote, the loss of future earning power, is merely an aspect of the damages that resulted to Temple from her personal injuries (87 Cal. App. 3d 938, 950) .

The court said external matters soon complicated its analysis, since various agencies may underwrite portions of the costs of Temple's personal injuries and compensate her for these losses. These agencies include employers, compensation carriers, medical service groups, medical insurers, and such disability insurers as pension funds and retirement associations, which may compensate the injured person for loss of ability to work. Each agency carrying a portion of the costs of the injured person's personal injuries reduces the injured person's own losses, but this reduction is not designed to absolve a wrongdoer from full liability in damages for his or her wrong, and, under present tort theory, the wrongdoer still bears the ultimate loss. Hence current practice and procedure authorize a carrying agency to obtain reimbursement from the wrongdoer for its costs in compensating the injured person for personal injuries caused by the wrongdoer. The mechanism used to achieve this result is subrogation, a legal device which transfers a portion of the injured person's claim for damages against the wrongdoer to the agency that carried that portion of the costs of personal injuries (87 Cal. App. 3d 938, 950) . But regardless of substitution of parties and subrogation of claimants who have borne portions of the costs of personal injuries, all claims of third parties for damages for personal injuries to an injured person derive from the injured person's claims against the tortfeasor for damages for personal injuries (87 Cal. App. 3d 938, 951) . The court concluded that all damage claims against Pope are portions of one cause of action in tort for personal injuries, no matter how fragmented, subdivided, or subrogated they have become, and that plaintiff's claim against Pope is not a separate cause of action, but remains a subdivision of Temple's claim for damages for personal injuries, and that a claim for damages for personal injuries continues as an action in tort, no matter who prosecutes the cause of action (87 Cal. App. 3d 938, 952-953, 955) .

§ 220.36 Supporting Oblilgor's Contention That Subrogee May Not Recover Amount Greater Than That Which Could Have Been Recovered by Subrogor

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF IS PRECLUDED FROM RECOVERING IN THIS ACTION ANY AMOUNT IN EXCESS OF THAT WHICH COULD HAVE BEEN RECOVERED IN AN ACTION BY ITS SUBROGOR.

A. Subrogation as Derivative Right. Rights under subrogation are derivative rights (Board of Admin. v. Glover (1983) 34 Cal. 3d 906, 915, 196 Cal. Rptr. 330, 671 P.2d 834 ; Ventura County Employees' Ret. Ass'n v. Pope (1978) 87 Cal. App. 3d 938, 952, 151 Cal. Rptr. 695).

B. Subrogee as Limited to Recovering No More Than Amount Recoverable by Subrogor. A subrogee succeeds only to the rights of the subrogor and may not recover an amount greater than that which could have been recovered by the subrogor (see Breese v. Price (1981) 29 Cal. 3d 923, 926, 928, 176 Cal. Rptr. 791, 633 P.2d 987).

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a subrogee may not recover any amount in excess of that which could have been recovered in an action by the subrogor.

These points and authorities may be used alone or combined with a memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue. For example, they may be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities in support of a motion for an order striking as irrelevant the allegations of a complaint seeking an amount in excess of the amount that is recoverable by the subrogor [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 435-437]. They may also be combined with points and authorities in support of a motion after trial to vacate the judgment awarding plaintiff an excessive amount and enter a judgment for the correct amount [see Code Civ. Proc. §

663 (motions to vacate)]. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, if the contention is made in support of a motion to strike, counsel should show that plaintiff is seeking to recover an amount in excess of that which could be recovered in an action by the subrogor. This fact must, however, appear from the face of the complaint or from judicially notice matter [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437]. If the contention is made in support of a motion to vacate the judgment and enter another and different judgment, counsel should show the legal basis for the decision is not consistent with or supported by the facts presented at trial or the judgment is not supported by the jury's special verdict, as the case may be [see Code Civ. Proc. § 663].

[d] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in § 220.56 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Subrogation as Derivative Right

Board of Admin. v. Glover (1983) 34 Cal. 3d 906, 196 Cal. Rptr. 330, 671 P.2d 834 , was an action by the Board of Administration of the Public Employees' Retirement System (PERS) against a third-party tortfeasor to recover a portion of the disability retirement benefits it had awarded to a county employee who was injured when her car was struck by a vehicle driven by defendant. Although PERS had informed the employee that any settlement she might reach with a third party responsible for her injuries would require its consent, the employee, without notifying PERS or obtaining its consent, a few days before expiration of the one-year statute of limitations of former Code Civ. Proc. § 340(3) [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 335.1 (two-year statute of limitations, beginning in 2003)], settled her personal injury claim against defendant for $15,000, the policy limit of defendant's automobile liability insurance, and executed a general release in defendant's favor. At the time of settlement, neither defendant nor his insurance carrier knew of the employee's claim for disability retirement benefits or, therefore, of the possibility that PERS or any other party would have a claim for reimbursement against any settlement proceeds. After learning that the employee had settled her third-party claim, and under the authority of Gov. Code § 21453, PERS sued defendant pursuant to Lab. Code § 3852 (relating to workers' compensation) to recoup its payments to the employee. Defendant cross complained against the employee for indemnification of any judgment that might be rendered against him in the PERS action. The trial court rendered judgment in favor of defendant in the primary action and in favor of the employee on his cross complaint. Plaintiff appealed.

The Supreme Court affirmed. The Court said having previously held Lab. Code § 3852, pursuant to which PERS sued defendant, simply gave statutory recognition to principles of equitable subrogation, it concluded those principles sustained the trial court's judgment in favor of defendant (34 Cal. 3d 906, 911) . The Court pointed out that because the employee's settlement with defendant, effected without PERS' consent, did not purport to exclude the disability retirement benefits the employee received from PERS, the employer was relegated to its derivative right of subrogation which depended on the employee's primary right to recover from the defendant (34 Cal. 3d 906, 914) . Quoting Ventura County Employees' Ret. Ass'n v. Pope (1978) 87 Cal. App. 3d 938, 952, 151 Cal. Rptr. 695 , the Court said the nature of subrogation and its prohibition against double recovery make it abundantly clear that subrogation involves a succession to the rights of others. Rights under subrogation are derivative rights, and succession to another's rights, like water, cannot rise higher than its source (34 Cal. 3d 906, 915) .

The facts and background of Ventura County Employees' Ret. Ass'n v. Pope (1978) 87 Cal. App. 3d 938, 151 Cal. Rptr. 695 , are discussed in § 220.34[3][a]. In reversing the judgment for plaintiff, the court stated that the nature of subrogation and its prohibition against double recovery make it abundantly clear that subrogation involves a succession to the rights of others. Rights under subrogation are derivative rights, and succession to another's rights, like water, cannot rise higher than its source (87 Cal. App. 3d 938, 952) .

[b] Subrogee as Limited to Recovering No More Than Amount Recoverable by Subrogor

The facts and procedural background of Breese v. Price (1981) 29 Cal. 3d 923, 176 Cal. Rptr. 791, 633 P.2d 987 , are discussed in § 220.35[3][a]. In reversing the judgment for the employer's insurance carrier, the Supreme Court said that if in the personal injury action the trier finds the tort liability of defendant (obligor) equals or exceeds the amount of the settlement made by the workers' compensation insurance carrier (subrogee) with the injured employee (subrogor), then the carrier is entitled to full reimbursement, but if defendant's tort liability is less than the settlement amount, the carrier is entitled to reimbursement only up to the amount of defendant's tort liability (29 Cal. 3d 923, 926) . The Court added the employer (or its carrier) is entitled to full reimbursement provided the tort liability of the defendant (obligor), in an amount equal to or in excess of the employer's expenditures, is otherwise established (29 Cal. 3d 923, 929) .

§ 220.37 Supporting Obligor's Contention That Double Recovery or Double Liability Is Prohibited

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF IS PRECLUDED FROM RECOVERING IN THIS ACTION [FOR _____ (specify item of loss)] BECAUSE SUCH RECOVERY _____ [WOULD CONSTITUTE DOUBLE RECOVERY FOR THE SAME ITEM OF LOSS or SUBJECT DEFENDANT TO DOUBLE LIABILITY FOR THE SAME ITEM OF INJURY].

A. Double Recovery Prohibited. Only one totality of recovery of damages for loss or injury is allowed, and only one totality of liability can be imposed on the tortfeasor. Duplicate recovery of damages is barred, and neither double recovery of the same item of loss nor double liability for the same item of injury is permitted [Board of Admin. v. Glover (1983) 34 Cal. 3d 906, 915, 196 Cal. Rptr. 330, 671 P.2d 834 ; Ventura County Employees' Ret. Ass'n v. Pope (1978) 87 Cal. App. 3d 938, 951, 151 Cal. Rptr. 695] .

[Optional] B. Amount Paid to Subrogated Insurer May Be Offset Against Subrogor's Claim. An insured (a partial subrogor) may not collect from the obligor-tortfeasor the full amount of his or her claim without an offset for the amount the obligor paid to the insurer (a partial subrogee) which reimbursed the insured for a portion of his or her loss and was pro tanto subrogated to the insured's cause of action against the obligor, as that would subject the obligor to double liability on the same claim [Ferraro v. Southern Cal. Gas Co. (1980) 102 Cal. App. 3d 33, 46-47, 162 Cal. Rptr. 238] .

[Optional] C. Setoff of Amount of Workers' Compensation Lien Assigned to Obligor. A workers' compensation carrier (a partial subrogee) which has paid benefits to an injured employee may assign its lien on any recovery that might be obtained by the injured employee in an action against a third-party tortfeasor to the third-party tortfeasor, who may then set off the face amount of the lien against any recovery by the injured employee, even though the lien was assigned for less than its face value [Quinn v. Warnes (1983) 144 Cal. App. 3d 309, 317-318, 192 Cal. Rptr. 660] .

[2] Comments

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that double recovery for the same loss or double liability for the same injury is prohibited. The double recovery alternative should be used if plaintiff has already recovered for the loss or the same item of loss; the double liability alternative should be used when, for example, both the subrogee and subrogor sue in the same action and each seeks to recover for the same injury or item of injury, or when the subrogor is suing to recover the full amount of the loss from the obligor who has already paid the claim of the partial subrogee. Optional Paragraph B should be included if the obligor has paid the partial subrogee's claim and the obligor seeks to recover the full amount of the loss. Optional Paragraph C should be included if the obligor took an assignment of the partial subrogee's claim for less than its face value which it wishes to assert against the partial subrogor.

These points and authorities may be used alone or combined with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue. For example if it appears from the face of the complaint or from judicially noticed matter that plaintiff seeks double recovery for the same loss, they may be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities: (1) in support of a general demurrer to the complaint [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 430.10(e), 430.30(a)]; or (2) in support of a nonstatutory motion for judgment on the pleadings. In such case, they may also be cited orally to the court at trial in support of an objection by defendant to the introduction of any evidence by plaintiff. If the ground of objection does not appear from the face of the complaint, they may be combined with points and authorities in support of a motion for summary judgment [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c]. If it appears at trial after plaintiff's opening statement or presentation of evidence that any recovery by plaintiff would constitute double recovery or subject the defendant to double liability, these points and authorities may be cited in support of a motion for nonsuit or judgment [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 581c (motion for nonsuit), 631.8 (motion for judgment)]. If judgment is rendered for plaintiff and awards a double recovery or imposes a double liability, or both, they may be combined with points and authorities: (1) in support of a motion to vacate the judgment and enter another and different judgment [see Code Civ. Proc. § 663]; or (2) in support of a motion for new trial on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict or decision or the verdict or decision is against the law [see Code Civ. Proc. § 657(6)]. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, if the contention is made in support of a demurrer, motion for judgment on the pleadings, or objection to the introduction of evidence, counsel for defendant should show, either from the face of the complaint itself or from judicially noticed matter, that plaintiff seeks double recovery or that any recovery would subject defendant to double liability for the same loss. If the contention is made in support of a motion for summary judgment, counsel should show the action has no merit because any recovery would constitute a double recovery or subject defendant to double liability for the same loss [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(a)]. If the contention is made in support of a motion for nonsuit or judgment, counsel should show that it appears from plaintiff's opening statement or evidence, as the case may be, that plaintiff is seeking double recovery or that any recovery would subject defendant to double liability for the same loss. If the contention is made in support of a motion to vacate the judgment and enter another and different judgment or a motion for new trial, counsel should show, on the basis of the evidence presented at trial, that the judgment results in a double recovery or subjects the defendant to double liability. For the papers on which a motion for new trial may be based, see Code Civ. Proc. § 658.

[b] Example

If the total amount of an insured's loss from a fire is $100,000, the liability of the tortfeasor who caused the fire is $100,000. If the insurer pays the insured the policy limit of $50,000, the tortfeasor is still liable for the full amount of $100,000. Of this amount, $50,000 would go to reimburse the partial subrogee and the balance would go to the partial subrogor. That is, the tortfeasor would not be liable for the sum of $150,000 ($50,000 to the partial subrogee and $100,000 to the partial subrogor). To impose such liability would subject the obligor to double liability, and to allow the partial subrogor to collect $50,000 from its insurer and $100,000 from the obligor would constitute double recovery as well [see Ferraro v. Southern Cal. Gas Co. (1980) 102 Cal. App. 3d 33, 46-47, 162 Cal. Rptr. 238] .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Double Recovery or Liability Prohibited

The facts and background of Board of Admin. v. Glover (1983) 34 Cal. 3d 906, 196 Cal. Rptr. 330, 671 P.2d 834 , are discussed in § 220.36[3][a]. In affirming the judgment for plaintiff, the Court quoted Ventura County Employees' Ret. Ass'n v. Pope (1978) 87 Cal. App. 3d 938, 951-952, 151 Cal. Rptr. 695 , for the rule that prohibits double recovery of damages, a rule of special importance in the prosecution of subrogation claims because the proration of damages among those who have shared the costs of personal injuries increases the possibility of duplicate claims for the same loss. Only one totality of recovery of damages for personal injuries is allowed, and only one totality of liability may be imposed on the tortfeasor. Duplicate recovery of damages is barred, and neither double recovery of the same item of loss nor double liability for the same item of injury is permitted. Whether an action is brought by an employer, a compensation carrier, an employee, or a county retirement association, the burden on the tortfeasor remains the same (34 Cal. 3d 906, 915-916) . The Court held that the burden of failure to comply with the statutory obligation of notice to PERS of the employee's settlement is on the employee. The Court said that to impose on a settling third-party defendant, who in the context of a settlement is merely an alleged tortfeasor, the duty to give notice under the statute or be subject to the employer's subrogation claim unfairly creates a legal obligation which would be impossible to fulfill when, as here, defendant was unaware of the existence of the employer subrogee. In addition, it violates the acknowledged statutory purpose of avoiding double liability, and the principle that acts of others over whom the tortfeasor has no control, and which occur after commission of the tort, ought not to extend his or her liability (34 Cal. 3d 906, 916) . The Court added that relieving an unknowing alleged tortfeasor of the consequences of the settlement's invalidity is a necessary adjunct of the rule of subrogation prohibiting both double recovery and double liability (34 Cal. 3d 906, 917) .

However, the Court added that when the third-party tortfeasor prior to settlement is or reasonably should be aware of the possibility of the employer's claim, such tortfeasor may also incur liability to the employer under the statutory scheme because of his or her failure to notify the employer of the settlement and to obtain its consent to it (34 Cal. 3d 906, 919) .

The facts and procedural background of Ventura County Employees' Ret. Ass'n v. Pope (1978) 87 Cal. App. 3d 938, 151 Cal. Rptr. 695 , are discussed in § 220.34[3][a]. The court concluded that plaintiff association (subrogee), in assuming a portion of the costs of personal injuries suffered by Temple (subrogor) as a consequence of the accident (specifically, the loss of her ability to work), underwrote the costs of her disability to the extent it compensated her for that loss, and thereby succeeded to her claim for damages against Pope (obligor) for loss of future earning power. Temple and plaintiff cannot both recover damages from Pope for the same loss of her ability to work, for that would be double recovery. Double recovery is avoided by identifying plaintiff as an agency subrogated to Temple's claim against the tortfeasor sanctioning only one total recovery for loss of future earning power, and requiring the injured person and plaintiff to divide this recovery between themselves as their interests appear (87 Cal. App. 3d 938, 952) .

[b] Amount Paid to Subrogated Insurer May Be Offset Against Subrogor's Claim

The facts and procedural background of Ferraro v. Southern Cal. Gas Co. (1980) 102 Cal. App. 3d 33, 162 Cal. Rptr. 238 , are discussed in § 220.34[3][b]. To preclude defendant from further arguing to the jury plaintiffs' receipt of insurance benefits covering the loss from the explosion and fire, plaintiffs asked the court to include an instruction to the jury defining collateral source and instructing the jury that it should make no deduction for the recovered insurance proceeds as they were recovered from a collateral source. The trial court refused to do so (102 Cal. App. 3d 33, 39) . On appeal, plaintiff argued that the trial court's refusal to so instruct was error. The court of appeal rejected the argument and affirmed the judgment. The court said the $70,000 insurance proceeds could not be considered a collateral source recovery because of the subrogation agreement with the insurer. The court explained that when an insurance carrier becomes subrogated to the claim of an insured against a third-party tortfeasor the payment of insurance proceeds is no longer a collateral source. To so characterize the receipt of the $70,000 would violate the rule against double recovery, since both the subrogee and the subrogor have a right of action against the tortfeasor, and the tortfeasor would have potential double liability if payment of insurance benefits by the subrogee to the subrogor were designated a collateral source. The court concluded that the trial judge properly denied plaintiffs' request for a collateral source jury instruction, and similarly that it correctly denied plaintiffs' motion to be relieved from their stipulation with defendant regarding the deduction of $65,500 (the amount of the insurance proceeds less the cost of their collection) from any verdict in their favor. The court said the effect of this stipulation was to prevent double liability of the gas company in accordance with proper legal principles (102 Cal. App. 3d 33, 47) .

[c] Setoff of Amount of Workers' Compensation Lien Assigned to Obligor

Quinn v. Warnes (1983) 144 Cal. App. 3d 309, 317, 192 Cal. Rptr. 660 , was an action by an employee who had been injured in an automobile accident against the alleged negligent driver of the other car. The employee had received workers' compensation benefits for temporary disability, and the compensation carrier filed a notice of lien claim in the employee's action. The carrier became insolvent, and defendant and his liability insurer purchased the lien claim for half its face amount. Plaintiff's attorney waived his fee on that portion of the judgment subject to the lien. Judgment was for plaintiff. On defendant's motion, the trial court ordered that defendant and his insurer be allowed a setoff or credit against the judgment in the full amount of the lien. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court pointed out that the waiver by plaintiff's attorney of attorney's fees on that portion of the judgment subject to the compensation carrier's lien was not rendered ineffective by Lab. Code § 3856(b), giving plaintiff a right to reasonable attorney fees as a reduction of the employer's carrier's lien amount. The court held the statute does not require that the amount which could otherwise have gone to the attorney should go to plaintiff. Since the lien amount represented benefits already paid to plaintiff, to give him a portion of the lien amount would result in prohibited double recovery by the employee (144 Cal. App. 3d 309, 313) . The court held the settlement between the insurance carrier and defendant's insurer was valid, notwithstanding the lack of presettlement notice to the employee [see Lab. Code § 3860] and notwithstanding the lack of his written consent [see Lab. Code § 3859], since plaintiff was in no way adversely affected by it (144 Cal. App. 3d 309, 317) . The court further pointed out that to allow the defendant an offset only in the amount paid for the lien, as opposed to its face amount, would also result in prohibited double recovery to the employee (144 Cal. App. 3d 309, 312 n.2, 318) .

PART II. FORMS

22-220 California Points & Authorities § 220.38

§ 220.38 Supporting Obligor's Contention That Tortfeasor May Contest Both Liability and Causation of Injuries and Assert Comparative Negligence

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT IN THIS ACTION HAS THE SAME RIGHT TO CONTEST LIABILITY AND CAUSATION OF INJURIES TO PLAINTIFF'S SUBROGOR, INCLUDING THE RIGHT TO RAISE THE ISSUE OF COMPARATIVE NEGLIGENCE, THAT HE/SHE WOULD HAVE WERE THE ACTION BROUGHT BY THE SUBROGOR.

Tortfeasor's Right to Contest Liability and Causation of Injuries. A defendant third-party tortfeasor in an action by the subrogee is entitled to contest liability to the same extent as in an action brought by the injured subrogor, and implicit in the right to contest liability are rights to raise the issue of comparative negligence and to contest the causality of the subrogor's injuries (Breese v. Price (1981) 29 Cal. 3d 923, 930, 176 Cal. Rptr. 791, 633 P.2d 987 ; Ventura County Employees' Ret. Ass'n v. Pope (1978) 87 Cal. App. 3d 938, 943, 945, 151 Cal. Rptr. 695).

[2] Comments

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that the alleged tortfeasor in an action by the subrogee has the same right to contest both his or her liability and causation of injuries, including the issue of comparative negligence, that he or she could do in an action by the subrogor.

These points and authorities may be used alone or combined with a memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue. For example, if the complaint fails to allege the essential elements of the tort cause of action [see § 220.35], they may be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities (1) in support of a general demurrer to the complaint [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 430.10(e), 430.30(a)], or (2) in support of a nonstatutory motion by defendant for judgment on the pleadings. They may also be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities in opposition to a demurrer to the answer in which nonliability and noncausation are alleged or in opposition to a motion to strike the portions of the answer so alleging [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 430.20(a), 430.50(b) (demurrers to answer), 435(b) (motions to strike)]. Should the trial court erroneously rule that such issues may not be litigated, these points and authorities may be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities in support of a petition for writ of mandate to compel the trial court to vacate its ruling or make an appropriate order [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1085, 1086] and for a writ of prohibition to restrain the trial court from proceeding with the action [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1102, 1103]. They may also be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities in support of a motion for new trial on the same ground [see Code Civ. Proc. § 657(6), (7))]. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, if the contention is made in support of a demurrer to the complaint or a motion by defendant for judgment on the pleadings, counsel should show that the complaint fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action by the subrogor against the defendant. If the contention is made in opposition to a demurrer to the answer or a motion to strike the issues from the answer, defendant should show that the issues are properly alleged. If the contention is made in support of a motion for new trial, defendant should show that the trial court ruled against defendant's contention and, if appropriate, that defendant excepted to the court's ruling. For matters that are deemed reserved without exception, see Code Civ. Proc. § 647. If the contention is made in support of a petition for a writ of mandate and/or a writ of prohibition, counsel should show, in addition to the above, that the contention was properly made in the trial court and that the trial court ruled against it. This would normally be shown by attaching to the petition authenticated copies of the appropriate trial court records.

[b] Illustrations of Application of Doctrine of Comparative Negligence

Under the doctrine of comparative negligence, the third-party tortfeasor is liable to the subrogee only to the extent of the tortfeasor's proportional share of responsibility, regardless of the amount the subrogee has paid [see Finney v. Manpower, Inc. (1981) 123 Cal. App. 3d 1066, 1071, 177 Cal. Rptr. 74] . For example, if a fire caused $100,000 worth of damage to insured property, the insurer, on paying the insured $100,000, would be subrogated to the rights of the insured against the person whose negligence caused the fire [see Ins. Code § 2071]. If in that action, the trier of fact concluded that the defendant was only 60 percent at fault and the insured was 40 percent at fault, the $100,000 recovery would be reduced 40 percent; that is, the insurer would recover judgment for $60,000 only on its subrogated claim.

As another example, if an employee were injured by a third-party tortfeasor and the insurer's compensation insurer paid benefits as a result of the injury, either the employee or the employer (or the employer's insurer) could sue the third-party tortfeasor, or they could join in an action against the tortfeasor, or one could intervene in the other's action against the tortfeasor, or, if the employee alone sued, the employer's insurer could secure a lien on any judgment recovered [see Lab. Code §§ 3852-3856; County of San Diego v. Sanfax Corp. (1977) 19 Cal. 3d 862, 872-873, 140 Cal. Rptr. 638, 568 P.2d 363] . If in an action by the employee and the employer's insurer the jury awards the injured plaintiff employee total damages in the sum of $550,000 and it finds the tortfeasor was 22 percent negligent, the employee 78 percent negligent, and the employer zero percent negligent, and the employer's insurer paid benefits in the sum of $52,423, the total damages awarded would be reduced by the amount of $429,000 (78 percent attributable to the employee), leaving a difference of $121,000 as the total amount to be paid by defendant tortfeasor. Of this amount, the employer would recover $52,423, which, subtracted from $121,000, leaves $68,577, which would be the employee's net recovery [see Jarvis v. Southern Pac. Transp. Co. (1983) 142 Cal. App. 3d 246, 259, 191 Cal. Rptr. 29] .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Tortfeasor's Right to Contest Liability and Causation of Injuries.

The facts and procedural background of Breese v. Price (1981) 29 Cal. 3d 923, 176 Cal. Rptr. 791, 633 P.2d 987 , are discussed in § 220.35[3][a]. In reversing the judgment for plaintiff, the Supreme Court held that a defendant who was not a party to the compensation proceedings and who has had neither notice nor opportunity to be heard is not bound by the terms of the settlement (29 Cal. 3d 923, 925-926) . Furthermore, the Court quoted Ventura County Employees' Ret. Ass'n v. Pope (1978) 87 Cal. App. 3d 938, 943, 945, 151 Cal. Rptr, 695 , for the rule that a defendant may contest liability in a subrogation action by an employer (subrogee) to the same extent as in an action brought by the injured employee (subrogor), and that implicit in the right to contest liability are rights to raise the issue of comparative negligence and to contest the causality of the employee's injuries; that is, defendant may contest both liability and causation of injuries to the same extent as if the injured employee had brought the action (29 Cal. 3d 923, 930) .

The facts and procedural background of Ventura County Employees' Ret. Ass'n v. Pope (1978) 87 Cal. App. 3d 938, 151 Cal. Rptr. 695 , are discussed in § 220.34[3][a]. In reversing the judgment for plaintiff, the court said it is clear a defendant may contest liability in a subrogation action by an employer to the same extent as in an action brought by the injured employee. Implicit in the right to contest liability are rights to raise the issue of comparative negligence and to contest the causality of the employee's injuries. The court said it thought that similar rules apply to a subrogation action by a county retirement association (87 Cal. App. 3d 938, 943) . The court rejected as erroneous defendant's contention that the failure of the retirement board to notify him of the liability hearing and to allow him to be heard at its meeting violated the guarantee of procedural due process. Defendant had a basic misconception that allowance of disability benefits constituted an adjudication of defendant's tort liability for the accident, a misconception paralleled by the trial court's erroneous conclusion that evidence of fault and comparative negligence could not be considered at trial. The initial determination of the Association to initiate suit against the asserted third-party tortfeasor was merely a determination to seek in court through subrogation recovery of benefits payable to a member. Defendant may contest both liability and causation of injuries to the same extent as if the injured employee herself had brought the action (87 Cal. App. 3d 938, 945) .

§ 220.39 Supporting Obligor's Contention That Affirmative Relief Otherwise Barred by Statute of Limitations May Be Sought by Cross Complaint in Action by Insurer Subrogee to Recover Payments Made Under Uninsured Motorist Provisions of Policy

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT HAS THE SAME RIGHT TO SEEK AFFIRMATIVE RELIEF IN THIS ACTION THAT HE/SHE WOULD HAVE HAD WERE THE ACTION BROUGHT BY PLAINTIFF'S INSURED, NOTWITHSTANDING THE STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS HAS RUN ON DEFENDANT'S CLAIM.

Obligor's Right to Seek Affirmative Relief. A defendant sued by an insurer subrogee under the extended period of limitations set out in Section 11580.2(g) of the Insurance Code to recover uninsured motorist benefits paid to its insured may by cross complaint seek affirmative relief arising out of the accident giving rise to defendant's liability to the same extent he or she could have done in an action by the subrogor, notwithstanding the statute of limitations may have run on the defendant's cross claim (see Liberty Mut. Ins. Co. v. Fales (1973) 8 Cal. 3d 712, 717, 719, 106 Cal. Rptr. 21, 505 P.2d 213).

[2] Comments

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a defendant obligor, in an action by an insurer subrogee under the extended period of limitations provided in Ins. Code § 11580.2(g) to recover payments made to its insured subrogor under the uninsured motorist provisions of its policy, may seek affirmative relief to the same extent he or she could have done were the action brought by the insured, and that plaintiff may not rely on the two-year statute of limitations for personal injury actions imposed by Code Civ. Proc. § 335.1 (one-year statute of limitations, prior to 2003, under former Code Civ. Proc. § 340(3)) to cut off this right. For a memorandum of points and authorities supporting a claim to setoff, as opposed to a claim for affirmative relief, see § 220.30.

These points and authorities may be used alone or combined with a memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue. For example, they may be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities (1) in support of a motion for leave to file a late cross complaint seeking affirmative relief [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 426.10, 426.30, 426.50], (2) in opposition to a motion to strike a timely filed cross complaint seeking affirmative relief [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 435(b), 436(b)], or (3) in opposition to a general demurrer to the cross complaint on the ground the cross action is barred by the statute of limitations [see Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the point of law stated. Thus, if the contention is made in support of a motion to file a late cross complaint, counsel for defendant should show that the cross action arose out of the accident sued on and is therefore a compulsory cross complaint [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 426.10(c), 426.30(a)] and that defendant acted in good faith in failing to timely file the cross complaint [see Code Civ. Proc. § 426.50]. The facts would normally be presented in one or more supporting affidavits or declarations under penalty of perjury [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009, 2015.5]. If the contention is made in opposition to a motion to strike or a general demurrer to the cross complaint, counsel should show from the court's records that the cross complaint was timely filed and that the cause of action stated arose out of the same accident and hence constitutes a compulsory cross complaint. The supporting points and authorities will establish that the cross complaint is proper.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Obligor's Right to Seek Affirmative Relief

Liberty Mut. Ins. Co. v. Fales (1973) 8 Cal. 3d 712, 106 Cal. Rptr. 21, 505 P.2d 213 , was an action in subrogation by an insurer against an uninsured motorist to recover the amount of a claim plaintiff had, under the uninsured motorist provision in its policy, paid to its insured and a passenger in the insured's car. The action had been timely filed under Ins. Code § 11580.2(g), providing an extended limitation period (three years after payment of the uninsured motorist claim) [see § 220.51] in which to commence the action, but after the one-year statute of limitations of former Code Civ. Proc. § 340(3) [(now see Code Civ. Proc. § 335.1 (two-year limitations period, beginning in 2003)] had run on the defendant's action against the insured. Defendant challenged the constitutionality of Ins. Code § 11580.2(g). The trial court ruled the section constitutional and rendered judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appealed, asserting he was precluded from seeking affirmative relief in the insurer's action because the one-year limitation on actions for damages for personal injuries of former Code Civ. Proc. § 340(3) [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 335.1 (two-year limitations period, beginning in 2003)] had run before the insurer's action was filed, and that Ins. Code § 11580.2(g) was unconstitutional insofar as it allowed an insurer subrogated to the claim of its insured to file suit against an uninsured motorist three years from the time it pays the claim, whereas the uninsured motorist is precluded from seeking affirmative relief unless he or she sues within one year after the accident.

Without reaching the constitutional issue, the Supreme Court held defendant had the right to seek affirmative relief by means of a cross complaint in the trial court but waived the right by not attempting to do so and affirmed the judgment (8 Cal. 3d 712, 719) . The Court said that an insurer, in its role as subrogee, has no greater rights than those possessed by its insured and its claims are subject to the same defenses. Had the insured and his passenger filed a timely action, defendant could have sought affirmative relief for any injuries he had suffered in the same collision. The legislature did not intend by the enactment of Ins. Code § 11580.2(g) to afford the insurer advantages over the uninsured motorist which its own insured did not enjoy--that is, the power, by delayed filing, to preclude the uninsured motorist from seeking affirmative relief for personal injuries by cross claim. The Court held the insurer could not rely on the defense of the statute of limitations as to the cross claim when its action is filed more than one year from the date of the accident, and could not rely on former Code Civ. Proc. § 340(3) [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 335.1 (two-year limitations period, beginning in 2003)] to bar defendant's right to seek affirmative relief (8 Cal. 3d 712, 717) .

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

SUBROGEE INSURER'S COMPLAINT IN INTERVENTION TO RECOVER A SUBROGATED PROPERTY LOSS AGAINST DEFENDANT SHOULD BE DISMISSED PURSUANT TO CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE SECTIONS 583.310 AND 583.360, BECAUSE THE MATTER HAS NOT BEEN BROUGHT TO TRIAL WITHIN FIVE YEARS SINCE THE FILING OF THE SUBROGOR INSURED'S COMPLAINT, AND THE COMPLAINT IN INTERVENTION INVOLVES ESSENTIALLY THE SAME CAUSES OF ACTION AS PLAINTIFF'S CLAIM AGAINST DEFENDANT.

A. Five-Year Limitations Period for Trial of Action. An action shall be brought to trial within five years after the action is commenced against the defendant (Code Civ. Proc. § 583.310).

B. Mandatory Dismissal of Action Not Timely Brought to Trial. An action shall be dismissed by the court on its own motion or on motion of the defendant, after notice to the parties, if the action is not brought to trial within the time prescribed under Code of Civil Procedure Sections 583.310-583.260. The requirements of these provisions are mandatory and are not subject to extension, excuse, or exception except as expressly provided by statute (Code Civ. Proc. § 583.360).

C. Complaint in Intervention Is Subject to Mandatory-Dismissal Period Applicable to Original Complaint if Same Causes of Action Asserted. A subrogee insurer seeking to recover a subrogated property loss in an action brought by the subrogor insured against the tortfeasor is subject to dismissal of its complaint in intervention if the action is not brought to trial within five years of the filing of the original complaint pursuant to Code of Civil Procedure Sections 583.310 and 583.360, and the complaint in intervention involves essentially all the same causes of action as the subrogor's claim (Bright v. American Termite Control Co. (1990) 220 Cal. App. 3d 1464, 1468-1469, 269 Cal. Rptr. 793).

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a complaint in intervention, brought by a subrogee insurer to recover a subrogated property loss from the tortfeasor defendant, is subject to the five-year mandatory-dismissal provisions of Code Civ. Proc. §§ 583.310 and 583.360. The grounds for the contention are that the action has not been brought to trial within five years of the filing of the original complaint, and the complaint in intervention involves essentially the same causes of action as the subrogor insured's claim against the tortfeasor [see Bright v. American Termite Control Co. (1990) 220 Cal. App. 3d 1464, 1468-1469, 269 Cal. Rptr. 793] .

These points and authorities may be used alone or combined with a memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the complaint in intervention is subject to mandatory dismissal. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities relating to a motion for dismissal under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 583.310 and 583.360. Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should show that the complaint in intervention involves essentially the same causes of action as those asserted by the subrogor insured against the defendant tortfeasor in the original complaint.

[b] Single Cause of Action Against Defendant

This form is based on the contention that the subrogee insurer and the plaintiff in the original complaint have a single, rather than a separate, cause of action against the defendant, in that the rights and interests of the insurer as the plaintiff in intervention are substantially similar and "not adverse" to those of the plaintiffs vis-a-vis the defendants [see Bright v. American Termite Control Co. (1990) 220 Cal. App. 3d 1464, 1469, 269 Cal. Rptr. 793] . By contrast, a complaint in intervention brought by a subrogee insurer that possesses a distinct and separate cause of action against the defendant would be subject to its own independent time frame for the purposes of the mandatory-dismissal statute [see Bright v. American Termite Control Co. (1990) 220 Cal. App. 3d 1464, 1468, 269 Cal. Rptr. 793 ; see also § 220.40[3][a]].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Complaint in Intervention Is Subject to Mandatory-Dismissal Period Applicable to Original Complaint if Same Causes of Action Asserted

In Bright v. American Termite Control Co. (1990) 220 Cal. App. 3d 1464, 269 Cal. Rptr. 793 , insureds under a policy covering property loss brought an action against the tortfeasor to recover damages arising from the defendant's alleged misapplication of a chemical when their house was treated to exterminate termites. Approximately two months after the at-issue memorandum was filed, the insurer filed a complaint in intervention to recover subrogated property loss. Both the complaint in intervention and the original complaint stated numerous identical causes of action pertaining to negligence, strict liability, and other issues. The original complaint alleged additional causes of action personal to the plaintiff insureds. Approximately four years later, plaintiffs settled with defendants but filed no motion to dismiss. Rather, the trial date was continued. The subrogee insurer successfully moved to strike the at-issue memorandum and to remove the case from the trial calendar, and several months later, or almost six years after the filing of the original complaint, moved to set the case specially for trial. The court denied the motion and issued an order to show cause why the court should not dismiss the complaint in intervention pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 583.360(a) (dismissal if action not brought to trial within prescribed time). In dismissing the action and the complaint in intervention, the trial court found that the complaint in intervention had alleged the same causes of action as had been alleged by the plaintiffs in their complaint, and that the insurer had no separate cause of action. The court therefore concluded that the five-year dismissal statute commenced with respect to the insurer, not with the filing of the complaint in intervention, but with the filing of the original complaint, and that the five-year period had elapsed. The insurer appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that inasmuch as the subrogee insurer had no separate claim against the defendants, the complaint in intervention was subject to the five-year dismissal rule from the date of the filing of the original complaint (220 Cal. App. 3d 1464, 1468-1470) . The court noted that the test for determining whether a subsequently filed claim has a life independent of the original complaint for purposes of the five-year mandatory-dismissal rule [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 583.310, 583.360] is whether the claim asserts a separate cause of action. Although the California Supreme Court has not applied the test of a separate cause of action to complaints in intervention, it has applied this test in the context of cross-complaints, counterclaims, and separate lawsuits subsequently consolidated. The Court has held that the time for bringing the claim to trial runs from the filing of the cross-complaint, counterclaim, or separate but consolidated lawsuit, because each claim states a separate cause of action that can be separately brought and tried, and the claims are thus distinct though simultaneous actions with their own independent time frames for the purposes of the mandatory-dismissal statute. In this case, the court of appeal noted that in contrast, the subrogee insurer's situation involved a property subrogation claim with essentially the same causes of action as alleged by plaintiff. The court recognized that in a property subrogation matter, the subrogor insured and the subrogee insurer each possess a separate right of action, and the insurer is not limited to an action in intervention but may bring a separate independent action to recover directly from the third-party tortfeasor [see Deutschmann v. Sears, Roebuck & Co. (1982) 132 Cal. App. 3d 912, 915-916, 183 Cal. Rptr. 573] . Nonetheless, apart from the existence of a separate "right of action," the proscription against splitting a single "cause of action" is impermissibly violated, unless waived by the defendant, when the insurer attempts to maintain a separate suit against the defendant [see Ferraro v. Southern Cal. Gas Co. (1980) 102 Cal. App. 3d 33, 41 n.3, 43-44, 162 Cal. Rptr. 238 ; see also § 220.34[3][a]] (220 Cal. App. 3d 1464, 1468-1469) . The court concluded that the insurer's complaint in intervention to recover a subrogated property loss states essentially the same causes of action. The running of the time period for the five-year dismissal rule on filing of the plaintiff's original complaint is supported by one of the purposes of intervention. Intervention is permitted to avoid delay and multiplicity of actions when claims are the same or substantially similar and arise out of the same facts. If Code Civ. Proc. §§ 583.310 and 583.360 were construed to mean that the date of an intervener's cause of action is the date to bring the five-year period for bringing causes to trial, an intervener could file its complaint and extend the time in which defendant would be subject to litigation to close to ten years. This would defeat the purpose of avoiding delay (220 Cal. App. 3d 1464, 1469) . Moreover, the strong public policy in favor of expediting and disposing of litigation supports the holding that the three-year discretionary-dismissal statute [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 583.410, 583.420] begins to run from the date of the filing of the original complaint and not from the date of the subsequent complaint in intervention. That policy supports the same conclusion with regard to the five-year dismissal statute in the instant case. The court noted that the intervener has theoretical independence as a separate party in other contexts, for example, with regard to the right to demand a jury trial, and to object to the court's jurisdiction. Moreover, when an intervener has a subrogation claim, the dismissal of the plaintiff's complaint for failure to serve and return summons in a timely manner does not affect the intervener's independent right to continue the action. However, the court held that even an acknowledgment of the independent and separate nature of the intervener's right of action in certain contexts does not detract from its recognition of the essentially parallel causes of action filed in the present case, the mutuality of interests between the plaintiff and the plaintiff in intervention vis-a-vis the defendants, the policy of avoiding delays in litigation, and the inadvisability of extending the time from five years to ten years in which the defendants would be subject to litigation (220 Cal. App. 3d 1464, 1470) .

§ 220.41 Opposing Contention That Subrogation Lies--Prerequisites for Equitable Subrogation to Rights of Secured Creditor Have Not Been Satisfied

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief].

THE DOCTRINE OF EQUITABLE SUBROGATION TO THE RIGHTS OF A SECURED CREDITOR DOES NOT APPLY IN THIS CASE BECAUSE THE PREREQUISITES FOR APPLICATION OF THE DOCTRINE HAVE NOT BEEN SATISFIED IN THAT _____ [specify, e.g., THERE IS NO SHOWING THAT PLAINTIFF WAS NOT PRIMARILY LIABLE ON THE OBLIGATION PAID].

Prerequisites for Equitable Subrogation. One who claims to be equitably subrogated to the rights of a secured creditor must satisfy the following prerequisites: (1) payment must have been made by the subrogee to protect his or her own interest; (2) the subrogee must not have acted as a volunteer; (3) the debt must be one for which the subrogee was not primarily liable; (4) the entire debt must have been paid; and (5) subrogation must not work any injustice to the rights of others (Caito v. United Cal. Bank (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 694, 704, 144 Cal. Rptr. 751, 576 P.2d 466).

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that the action is one in which the doctrine of equitable subrogation applies. The ground of opposition is that the person seeking to be subrogated to the rights of a secured creditor has failed to satisfy one or more of the prerequisites for application of the doctrine. For memoranda of points and authorities relating to the absence of a specific element which may be incorporated with these points and authorities, see §§ 220.42 -220.44.

These points and authorities may be used alone or in combination with a memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities in opposition to a motion by plaintiff for summary judgment under Code Civ. Proc. § 437c. They may also be combined with points and authorities in support of a motion by defendant for summary judgment when the omission of an essential prerequisite can be indisputably established. If the omission of one of the essential prerequisites appears from the face of the complaint or from judicially noticed matter, these points and authorities may be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities (1) in support of a general demurrer to the complaint [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 430.10(e), 430.30(a)], or (2) in support of a nonstatutory motion for judgment on the pleadings. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, if the contention is made in opposition to a motion by plaintiff for summary judgment, defendant should show that one or more of the essential prerequisites have not been met or that there are disputed fact questions as to whether they have been met. If the contention is made in support of a motion for summary judgment, defendant should show the indisputable facts establishing that one or more of the essential prerequisites for application of the doctrine of equitable subrogation have not been satisfied. For papers on which a motion for summary judgment may be based or opposed, see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b). If the contention is made in support of a general demurrer to a complaint or a motion for judgment on the pleadings, defendant should show that it appears from the face of the complaint or from judicially noticed matter that the one or more of the prerequisites have not been satisfied.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contentions supported by the points and authorities in §§ 220.20 -220.23.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Prerequisites for Equitable Subrogation

Caito v. United Cal. Bank (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 694, 144 Cal. Rptr. 751, 576 P.2d 466 , was an action by two cotenants of a farm for partition, an accounting, and a declaration of the rights and priorities of the parties. Defendants were (1) the other two cotenants, (2) a lending bank that was beneficiary and trustee of a first trust deed on the property, and (3) a second bank that was beneficiary and trustee of a second trust deed. Plaintiffs had signed the loan instruments to the first bank as comakers, but had intended to sign merely to accommodate defendant cotenants to whom the loan was made. Plaintiffs later loaned defendant cotenants $6,000 to keep the bank loan in a current status and further paid over to the first bank $17,500 in farm rentals as required by an assignment of the rentals to the bank. The second trust deed was subsequently given by defendant cotenants without plaintiffs' knowledge or consent to secure extension of an independent loan approximating $140,000 made to them. While the action was pending, the first bank nonjudicially foreclosed the first trust deed and caused the farm to be sold for $130,000. The bank retained approximately $44,500 in satisfaction of the balance due it on the first note, deposited the balance of the sale proceeds (approximately $85,500) into court, and was dismissed from the action. The trial court found plaintiffs had acted as accommodation parties. It concluded that the $44,500 was to be charged only to defendant cotenants' one-half interest ($65,000) of the proceeds from the sale. As to the $20,500 balance of that interest, the court ruled that plaintiffs' right to reimbursement from defendant cotenants for the $6,000 loan and $17,500 farm rentals had priority over the claim of the second bank on the second trust deed, with the result that the second bank was awarded nothing. The second bank appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed on the ground plaintiffs had signed the instruments to the first bank as comakers and acquired no rights as accommodating parties against either bank, each of which was a bona fide encumbrancer for value. The Court held that both plaintiffs and defendant cotenants were liable as principal obligors to the first bank, that the surplus (approximately $85,500) deposited in court was to be divided equally between them, and that the second bank's claim against the proceeds paid to defendant cotenants was superior to plaintiffs' claim (20 Cal. 3d 694, 701-703) . Plaintiffs contended that their loan of $6,000 to defendant cotenants to keep the first bank's loan current and their payment of $17,500 in farm rentals to the first bank reduced the amount of the loan secured by the first trust deed and that they were therefore entitled to be subrogated to the right of the first bank in that amount against defendant cotenants' share of the surplus [see § 220.21]. The Court said that one who claims to be equitably subrogated to the rights of a secured creditor must satisfy certain prerequisites. Quoting Grand v. De Otte (1954) 122 Cal. App. 2d 724, 728, 265 P.2d 952 [see § 220.21[3][a]], the Court said that these prerequisites are as follows: (1) payment must have been made by the subrogee to protect his or her own interest; (2) the subrogee must not have acted as a volunteer; (3) the debt paid must be one for which the subrogee was not primarily liable; (4) the entire debt must have been paid; and (5) subrogation must not work an injustice to the rights of others (20 Cal. 3d 694, 704) . By way of illustration, the Court said it was obvious a debtor-landowner, having granted to creditors successive security interests in his or her lands, cannot be subrogated to the priority position of the senior creditor when the debtor satisfies the obligation owed that creditor as the debtor has not, in such a case, satisfied the third prerequisite that the debt paid be one for which he or she was not primarily liable (20 Cal. 3d 694, 704) . The Court held the third prerequisite was lacking since plaintiffs were comakers of the note and therefore primarily liable on the debt owed to the lending bank (20 Cal. 3d 694, 705) . The Court added that even if this rule were not strictly applied, plaintiffs still were not entitled to subrogation. With respect to the $17,500 payment of rentals, the Court held there could be no subrogation for two reasons: first, because the rentals were paid to the lending bank pursuant to an assignment of rents and plaintiffs were merely agents of the bank in collecting and paying them over; and second, because secret, undisclosed equities existing between cotenants cannot be used to defeat the rights of a bona fide encumbrancer for value (20 Cal. 3d 694, 706) . With respect to the $6,000 loan, the Court held subrogation would not lie because the loan was made before the second trust deed was executed and was an undisclosed claim and hence did not in any way alter the security position of the second bank's lien. The Court said that to permit subrogation in such a case would work an injustice to the bank, thereby violating the fifth requirement for equitable subrogation, listed above. The Court concluded the doctrine of equitable subrogation was not applicable to any of plaintiffs' claims and therefore declined to consider the defendant bank's argument that the doctrine of equitable subrogation was inapplicable because the entire debt to the first bank was not retired by plaintiffs' advances (20 Cal. 3d 694, 707) .

In reaching this result, the Court distinguished the situation in which there are codebtors who are equally obligated cotenants of land pledged as security. In such a case, there is the initial problem of who is primarily liable for the debt owed the senior creditor. If the record shows, for instance, that each cotenant is personally obligated for half of the debt, and if one cotenant is required to pay the full debt in order to protect his or her position, then it appears he or she should be subrogated to the senior creditor's security position, but only to the extent of the half payment made on behalf of the defaulting cotenant, assuming all other prerequisites for equitable subrogation are satisfied. The person cannot be subrogated to the full amount of the payment because half of it was made on his or her own account as the primary obligor (20 Cal. 3d 694, 704-705) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Prerequisites for Equitable Subrogation

In Gulf Ins. Co. v. TIG Ins. Co. (2001) 86 Cal. App. 4th 422, 103 Cal. Rptr. 2d 305 , an insurer (the plaintiff) executed

a performance bond for a contractor as principal and the county as obligee. During the course of the construction work, the contractor damaged adjacent real property. The county declared the contractor in default under the construction contract, and the plaintiff performed the contractor's remaining obligations under the performance bond, which allegedly included the repair and restoration of the damage caused to the owner of the adjacent real property, by paying $47,000 to another company that performed the work. The contractor allegedly maintained commercial general liability insurance written by another insurer (the CGL insurer) at all relevant times. The plaintiff sued the contractor's CGL insurer, alleging that it became subrogated to the contractor's and the county's rights as insureds under the CGL policy. The trial court sustained the CGL insurer's demurrers to a cause of action for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing. The amended complaint asserted causes of action for declaratory relief, equitable indemnity, and contribution. On appeal, the plaintiff claimed error in the sustaining of the demurrer to its claim for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing. The appellate court held that the plaintiff was not equitably subrogated to the contractor's rights as insured with respect to the contractor's CGL insurer, because the contractor did not suffer an injury for which the plaintiff (as surety) paid, such that the CGL insurer should be held liable. That is, the plaintiff was not equitably subrogated to the contractor's rights with respect to the bad faith claim against the CGL insurer because the CGL insurer's allegedly wrongful conduct did not result in any injury to the contractor (86 Cal. App. 4th 422, 432) .

In Herrick Corp. v. Canadian Ins. Co. (1994) 29 Cal. App. 4th 753, 34 Cal. Rptr. 2d 844 , an injured worker sued both the general contractor and two subcontractors. The insurer for one subcontractor paid an amount on behalf of its insured, based on the insured's promise to indemnify the general contractor. The insurer that made this payment then sought equitable contribution from the insurer for the other subcontractor. The court held that the risk insured against--a subcontractor's contractual obligation to indemnify a general contractor for any liability the general contractor incurred for bodily injury--is not the same risk as the general contractor's tort liability to the subcontractor's employee (29 Cal. App. 4th 753, 762) . Since the two risks are not the same, the insurer is subrogated only to the rights of its own insured subcontractor, not to the rights of the general contractor against another insurer (29 Cal. App. 4th 753, 765) . However, the right to defense costs paid by the subcontractor's insurer is subrogated unless the general contractor expressly released the other subcontractor for claims for defense costs (29 Cal. App. 4th 753, 766) .

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief].

THE DOCTRINE OF EQUITABLE SUBROGATION DOES NOT APPLY IN THIS CASE BECAUSE PLAINTIFF HAS FAILED TO _____ [ALLEGE or PROVE] THAT PLAINTIFF PAID THE OBLIGATION FOR WHICH SUBROGATION IS SOUGHT.

Payment as Required to Be Alleged and Proved. With exceptions not here applicable, a complaint in subrogation must allege payment by the subrogee. The failure of the subrogee to plead or prove that he or she paid the debt will prevent his or her recovery as subrogee (Iusi v. City Title Ins. Co. (1963) 213 Cal. App. 2d 582, 587-588, 28 Cal. Rptr. 893).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that the action is one in which the doctrine of equitable subrogation applies. The ground of opposition is that plaintiff has failed to allege or prove that he or she paid the obligation for which subrogation is sought. The exceptions to the requirement of alleging or proving payment referred to in the form would occur in the case of statutory subrogation when the subrogee is authorized to recover, for example, an actuarial equivalent of payments to be made [see, e.g., Gov. Code § 21451 (subrogation of Public Employees Retirement System to recover portion of actuarial equivalent of benefits for which system is liable because of death or injury of employee member caused by defendant)].

These points and authorities may be used alone or combined with a memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue. For example if plaintiff has failed to allege payment, they may be combined with points and authorities either (1) in support of a general demurrer to a complaint [

Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)], or (2) in support of a nonstatutory motion for judgment on the pleadings. They may also be combined with points and authorities in support of a motion by defendant for summary judgment when the failure to pay the obligation can be indisputably established, or in opposition to a motion by plaintiff for summary judgment if there are disputed fact issues as to whether payment was made [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c]. If plaintiff fails to prove payment at trial, these points and authorities may be cited in support of an oral motion for nonsuit or judgment or combined with a memorandum of points and authorities in support of a motion for new trial [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 581c (motion for nonsuit), 631.8 (motion for judgment), 657(6) (motion for new trial)]. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, if the contention is made in support of a general demurrer to a complaint or a motion for judgment on the pleadings, defendant should show that the complaint fails to allege payment. If the contention is made in support of a motion for summary judgment, counsel should show that payment was in fact not made, or, if the contention is made in opposition to plaintiff's motion for summary judgment, that payment was not made or there are disputed fact issues as to whether payment was made [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b)]. If the contention is made in support of a motion for nonsuit or judgment or in support of a motion for new trial, counsel should show that no evidence of payment was introduced.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contentions supported by the points and authorities in §§ 220.20 -220.23.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Payment as Required to Be Alleged and Proved

The facts and procedural background of Iusi v. City Title Ins. Co. (1963) 213 Cal. App. 2d 582, 587, 28 Cal. Rptr. 893 , are discussed in § 220.31[3][a]. In reversing the judgment for plaintiff, the court of appeal rejected plaintiff's argument in support of the judgment that the trial court applied the theory of subrogation. The appellate court said the judgment could not be sustained on this ground because subrogation was completely outside the issues raised by the pleadings (213 Cal. App. 2d 582, 586) . The court added, however, that even assuming plaintiff's pleadings could possibly encompass such a theory, any recovery on this theory would be prevented by plaintiff's failure to either plead or prove that he had paid the sellers' judgment (the obligation) and thereby acquired a right, as a subrogee, to proceed against the title company (the obligor) on this theory (213 Cal. App. 2d 582, 587) . Quoting Arp v. Blake & Cohn (1923) 63 Cal. App 362, 367, 218 P. 773 , the court said that the doctrine of subrogation requires that the person seeking its benefit must have paid a debt due to a third person before he or she can be substituted to that person's rights; it is not the liability to pay, but an actual payment to the creditor, that raises the equitable right (213 Cal. App. 2d 582, 587-588) .

§ 220.43 Opposing Contention That Subrogation Lies--Plaintiff in Making Payment Was Mere Volunteer

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief].

THE DOCTRINE OF EQUITABLE SUBROGATION DOES NOT APPLY IN THIS CASE BECAUSE PLAINTIFF, IN PAYING _____ [specify obligation paid], WAS ACTING AS A MERE VOLUNTEER.

Inapplicability of Doctrine of Subrogation to Mere Volunteer. Subrogation does not apply in favor of one who has officiously and as a mere volunteer paid the debt of another that the payor was under no obligation to pay, nor will it be allowed when it will work any injustice to the rights of others (see Stein v. Simpson (1951) 37 Cal. 2d 79, 84, 230 P.2d 816 ; McMillan v. O'Brien (1934) 219 Cal. 775, 779-782, 29 P.2d 183).

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that the action is one in which the doctrine of equitable subrogation applies. The ground of opposition is that plaintiff in making payment acted as a mere volunteer and, therefore, is not entitled to subrogation.

These points and authorities may be used alone or combined with a memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue. For example, they may be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities in opposition to a motion for summary judgment under Code Civ. Proc. § 437c. They may also be combined with points and authorities in support of a motion by defendant for summary judgment when the voluntariness of the payment can be indisputably established. If the fact plaintiff acted as a mere volunteer in making payment appears from the face of the complaint or from judicially noticed matter, these points and authorities may be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities (1) in support of a general demurrer to the complaint [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 430.10(e), 430.30(a)], or (2) in support of a nonstatutory motion for judgment on the pleadings. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, if the contention is made in opposition to a motion by plaintiff for summary judgment, defendant should show that in making payment plaintiff acted as a mere volunteer or that there are disputed fact questions as to whether the payment was voluntary. If the contention is made in support of a motion for summary judgment, defendant should show the facts indisputably establishing the nature of the payment as voluntary [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b)]. If the contention is made in support of a general demurrer to a complaint or a motion for judgment on the pleadings, defendant should show that it appears from the face of the complaint or from judicially noticed matter that the payment was voluntary.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contentions supported by the points and authorities in §§ 220.20 -220.23.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Inapplicability of Doctrine of Subrogation to Mere Volunteer

Stein v. Simpson (1951) 37 Cal. 2d 79, 230 P.2d 816 , was an action to quiet title to real property. Plaintiffs were the owners of the property which had a value of over $50,000. It was encumbered by a first trust deed securing a debt owed a bank amounting to $18,000. Defendant loaned plaintiffs $20,000 at a usurious rate of interest which was to be paid back at the rate of $2,000 per month for four months with the balance becoming due and payable in the fifth month, and took a second trust deed on the property to secure repayment of the note. Plaintiffs paid $8,000 on the note reducing the principal to $12,000. Plaintiffs properly tendered the balance due, but defendant refused to accept it. Defendant gave notice of default under his trust deed and election to sell. An hour before the sale, plaintiffs' agent offered defendant the full amount claimed by him to be due, but defendant refused to accept it, saying he wanted the property, not the money. Defendant bid $36,000 for the property and plaintiffs' agent bid $50,000. However, the agent had only $17,000 with him. At defendant's request, all bids were declared off and a new sale was started. It was then announced that defendant had paid the bank the note secured by the first trust deed and the sale would be for the amount represented by both trust deeds (however, the notice of sale had stated that the sale would be subject to the bank's first trust deed). Defendant had paid the bank the amount due on the first trust deed that morning, but did not secure from the bank an assignment of the indebtedness. The request of plaintiffs' agent for a 24-hour postponement of the sale to obtain funds to cover the $50,000 bid was refused at defendant's direction. The sale proceeded. Plaintiffs' agent bid $17,000 and defendant bid $18,000. The property was sold to defendant. The trial court found the sale invalid, that plaintiffs owed defendant only $12,000, and that this amount was due without interest. The court further found that defendant ad no property interest to protect in paying off the first trust deed, that he had acted as a volunteer in doing so, and that his purpose was to spring a surprise on plaintiffs at the sale and enable him to secure the property for himself. Judgment was entered for plaintiffs quieting their title to the property, subject to their paying defendant the $12,000 within 30 days. Defendant appealed, contending he was entitled to be repaid the amount he'd paid the bank ($17,380.85) in addition to the $12,000.

The Supreme Court affirmed. The Court said defendant was seeking subrogation. The principle on which subrogation is founded applies in all cases in which one person, not a volunteer, pays a debt for which another is primarily answerable, and which, in equity and good conscience, should have been discharged by the latter (37 Cal. 2d 79, 83) . The rule has found express application with reference to payment by a junior lien holder of a senior lien on the same property pursuant to the provisions of Civ. Code §§ 2903 and 2904 (discussed in § 220.21[2][b]). It is the general rule that a junior lien holder who pays the debt secured by a senior lien to protect his or her interest thereby becomes subrogated to the rights of the senior lienholder as against the owner of the property, even though he or she takes no assignment of the senior lien (37 Cal. 2d 79, 83-84) . However, the Court said the one invoking subrogation must not have been a volunteer, an officious intermeddler, in making the payment, and that he or she must have had some interest to protect. The Court held that defendant had no such interest because his interest was extinguished when plaintiff tendered full payment on the second deed of trust (37 Cal. 2d 79, 84) . The Court acknowledged the rule that when a person discharges a lien not incurred by the person on property not his or her own, but which the person mistakenly believes to be his or hers, is subrogated to the rights of the lienholder. However, there was no mistake of fact or law on defendant's part since his purpose was to acquire the property for less than its value and not to protect any supposed interest he had in it (37 Cal. 2d 79, 84-86) .

McMillan v. O'Brien (1934) 219 Cal. 775, 29 P.2d 183 , was an action between adjoining landowners in which plaintiff sought to quiet title to a narrow strip of real property between the adjoining landowners' lots. Defendant in his answer pleaded that he and his predecessors in interest had for many years been assessed and paid taxes on the strip of land and sought recovery of the amount of taxes paid if it was determined that plaintiff was the true owner. A California Supreme Court decision some 25 years earlier had quieted title to this strip in plaintiff's predecessor in interest. Judgment was entered quieting plaintiff's title and adjudging that defendant had no right, title, claim, or interest or estate in the property and forever barring him from asserting any claim to it. Defendant appealed.

The Supreme Court affirmed. The Court held that a person who pays taxes on another's property, which appears of record as belonging to the other person, in the honest but mistaken belief that the land belongs to him or her is a mere volunteer and may not recover the amount paid from the true owner under the doctrine of equitable subrogation (219 Cal. 775, 779-782) .

[a] Excess Insurer Barred From Maintaining Action Against Primary Insurer

In Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. v. Maryland Cas. Co. (1994) 21 Cal. App. 4th 1586, 26 Cal. Rptr. 2d 762 , the court held that an excess insurer that contended it was not liable because the damages in question manifested themselves prior to inception of its policies, but that nevertheless settled with a third party claimant after the claimant, the insured, and the primary insurer had already entered into a settlement and release that discharged all parties except excess insurer from further liability, acted as a mere volunteer and was not entitled to equitable subrogation from the primary insurer because its payment represented amounts for which the excess insurer itself claimed it was not liable, and for which no other party was liable since the obligation of all other parties had been discharged by the prior settlement (21 Cal. App. 4th 1586, 1597-1598) .

PART II. FORMS

22-220 California Points & Authorities § 220.44

§ 220.44 Opposing Contention That Subrogation Lies--Plaintiff's Equities Are Not Superior to Those of Defendant

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief].

THE DOCTRINE OF EQUITABLE SUBROGATION DOES NOT APPLY IN THIS CASE BECAUSE PLAINTIFF'S EQUITIES ARE NOT SUPERIOR TO THOSE OF DEFENDANT.

A. Subrogation Not Available if Inequitable. Subrogation is a creation of equity and is, therefore, subject to the limitation that it will not be allowed when it would be inequitable to third persons (Federal Ins. Co. v. Allen (1970) 13 Cal. App. 3d 648, 650, 92 Cal. Rptr. 125).

B. When Surety or Insurer May Recover From Third Person. To recover through subrogation against a third person when a wrongdoer causes loss both to a surety or insurer by reason of its bond or insurance policy and to the third person, the surety or insurer must have an equity superior to that of the third person (Continental Ins. Co. v. Morgan, Olmstead, Kennedy & Gardner, Inc. (1978) 83 Cal. App. 3d 593, 602, 148 Cal. Rptr. 57 ; see Federal Ins. Co. v. Allen (1970) 13 Cal. App. 3d 648, 650, 92 Cal. Rptr. 125).

C. Fault of Third Person Must Be Related to Primary Cause of Loss for Surety or Insurer to Prevail. In order for the surety or insurer suing in subrogation to have an equity superior to that of a third person, the fault of the third person must be related to the primary cause of the loss; it is only when the third person dealing with the wrongdoer is in a better position to avoid the loss than the insured or the surety that the surety has a superior equity permitting it to recover as subrogee (Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. v. Morse Signal Devices (1984) 151 Cal. App. 3d 681, 687, 198 Cal. Rptr. 756 ; Continental Ins. Co. v. Morgan, Olmstead, Kennedy & Gardner, Inc. (1978) 83 Cal. App. 3d 593, 603-604, 148 Cal. Rptr. 57).

D. Burden of Proof and Imputed Negligence. The burden is on the surety or insurer to establish its superior equity and, for the purpose of weighing the equities, the negligence or other fault of the insured is imputed to the surety or insurer seeking subrogation (Continental Ins. Co. v. Morgan, Olmstead, Kennedy & Gardner, Inc. (1978) 83 Cal. App. 3d 593, 602, 148 Cal. Rptr. 57).

[Optional] E. Subrogation as Not Enforced When Equities Are Equal or Rights Are Not Clear. Subrogation will not be enforced when the equities are equal or the rights not clear (Meyers v. Bank of America etc. Assn. (1938) 11 Cal. 2d 92, 101, 77 P.2d 1084 ; Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. v. Morse Signal Devices (1984) 151 Cal. App. 3d 681, 686, 198 Cal. Rptr. 756).

[Optional] F. Effect of Formal Assignment of Insured's Claim. A formal assignment to the insurer of the insured's claim adds nothing to the right of the insurer to recover from the third person and does not convert an action for equitable subrogation into an action at law so as to defeat defenses otherwise available to the third person (Meyers v. Bank of Am. Nat'l Trust & Sav. Ass'n (1938) 11 Cal. 2d 92, 94, 77 P.2d 1084 ; Federal Ins. Co. v. Allen (1970) 13 Cal. App. 3d 648, 650, 92 Cal. Rptr. 125).

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that plaintiff is entitled to recover on its subrogated claim. The ground of opposition is that the surety or insurer seeking to be subrogated to the rights of its insured against a third party has no equity superior to that of the third-party defendant and, therefore, is not entitled to recover. Optional Paragraph E should be included if the equities between plaintiff and defendant are equal or if plaintiff's rights are not clear. Optional Paragraph F should be included if plaintiff claims its right to sue derives from a written assignment to it by its insured of any cause of action the insured has against third persons for the loss covered by the bond or insurance.

These points and authorities may be used alone or combined with a memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities in opposition to a motion by plaintiff for summary judgment under Code Civ. Proc. § 437c. They may also be combined with points and authorities in support of a motion by defendant for summary judgment when the nonexistence of any superior equity in plaintiff can be indisputably established. If the lack of any superior equity in plaintiff appears from the face of the complaint or from judicially noticed matter, these points and authorities may be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities (1) in support of a general demurrer to the complaint [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 430.10(e), 430.30(a)], or (2) in support of a nonstatutory motion for judgment on the pleadings. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, if the contention is made in opposition to a motion by plaintiff for summary judgment, defendant should show either plaintiff has failed to establish any superior equity in it or there are disputed fact questions as to whether a superior equity exists in plaintiff. If the contention is made in support of a motion for summary judgment, defendant should show the indisputable facts establishing that plaintiff has no equity superior to that of defendant [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b)]. If the contention is made in support of a general demurrer to a complaint or a motion for judgment on the pleadings, defendant should show that the complaint fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action in that it fails to allege any facts showing that plaintiff's equities are superior to those of defendant.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities in §§ 220.20 -220.23.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Subrogation Not Available if Inequitable

Federal Ins. Co. v. Allen (1970) 13 Cal. App. 3d 648, 92 Cal. Rptr. 125 , was an action by a fidelity surety which had paid an employee-theft claim for stolen tires to recover their value from the tire dealers who had purchased them. Plaintiff had issued the fidelity bond to a tire and rubber company indemnifying the company against the theft or embezzlement of its property by any of its employees. The thefts were committed over a two-year period by the employer's warehouse foreman who concealed the thefts by juggling the books. The trial court found: (1) neither defendant had any reason to question the employee's ownership of the tires or knew that the employee, formerly an independent tire dealer, was in the tire company's employ; (2) nothing in the price or other circumstances of the employee's offers or sales to them could have put either purchaser on notice or inquiry of the employee's lack of title; and (3) the tire company in fact was negligent in its supervision of its employee and early in the series of the thefts was put on notice of facts that should have permitted it to prevent them. Judgment was for defendants, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court said a surety for compensation on a fidelity bond, on its payment to the employer, is subrogated to the employer's rights, but subrogation, as a creation of equity, is subject to the limitation that it will not be allowed when it will be inequitable to third persons. Because the purchasers had no notice of the employee's thefts, and there was nothing to put them on inquiry, implying that to order repayment would be inequitable (13 Cal. App. 3d 648, 650) .

[b] When Surety or Insurer May Recover From Third Person

Continental Ins. Co. v. Morgan, Olmstead, Kennedy & Gardner, Inc. (1978) 83 Cal. App. 3d 593, 148 Cal. Rptr. 57 , was an action by a surety, as the subrogee of a bank, against a broker that had acted as principal or agent in purchasing United States treasury bills stolen from the bank. On July 28, 1970, more than $3,000,000 in treasury bills were stolen. During July 1970 the bank's security broke down and millions of dollars in bearer treasury bills were left unattended on a desk top. Sign-in procedures were not followed. Employees of the bank and purported workmen coming on the premises had access to the treasury bills on the unattended desk top at times when other employees in the section were socializing. On the date of the theft, treasury bills piled on a desk top were unattended for 45 minutes. Two purported Western Union repairmen were in the vicinity of the desk on that day. A bank employee of 13 years did not report on July 29th to her work station at the desk where the bills were left and never again reported for work. Supervisory personnel of the bank originally believed that because of some operational error the treasury bills merely appeared to be missing. However, as a precautionary measure, the bank informed plaintiff on July 28th that the bills were missing. On July 30th the bank undertook to determine the serial numbers of the missing bills and asked the Federal Reserve to assemble a list of identification numbers of stolen treasury bills. It received the list on August 7th and on that date circulated an internal bulletin that treasury bills had been stolen. It also notified a stock clearing corporation which sent out a limited "flier" to its members communicating the information. On August 10th the bank phoned a notice to R.L.

Polk & Co., a national bank directory publisher, which included the serial numbers of the missing treasury bills in a widely circulated notice. A total of $500,000 of the bills were negotiated through defendant broker by an individual using a fictitious name who first contacted defendant on July 21st, stating he wished to liquidate United States Treasury bills. The man was informed of defendant's policy to require that the bills be in hand before defendant would sell them. Shortly thereafter on the same day, the man brought five $10,000 bearer treasury bills and one $10,000 bearer FNMA certificate to defendant for sale. Defendant checked the securities against a list of stolen government securities and found them to be legitimate. It bought the FNMA certificate as principal and sold the five treasury bills as agent for the man. On July 31st, August 6th, and August 19th, it bought $200,000, $100,000, and $200,000, respectively, in treasury bills from the man and immediately resold them. Payment to the man was in the form of certified checks generally in $10,000 denominations. On August 27th defendant was notified by the FBI that $500,000 in stolen treasury bills had been negotiated through it. On August 28th, it received R. L. Polk's notice of the stolen securities issued by Polk in response to the bank's communication. Defendant was able to stop payment on $30,000 of the checks issued to the man in the August 19th transaction, but the remainder of the checks cleared. The trial court found that defendant was not at fault, that the bank was, and that, in any event, by reason of its failure to establish a superior equity, plaintiff was not entitled to relief except to the extent that a small portion of the loss had been prevented by defendant's action in stopping payment on its checks after the fraud was discovered. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court said that in Meyers v. Bank of Am. Nat'l Trust & Sav. Ass'n (1938) 11 Cal. 2d 92, 98, 102-103, 77 P.2d 1084 [see § 220.44[3][e]], the California Supreme Court followed the rule in the majority of jurisdictions in adopting the principle that when a wrongdoer causes loss both to a surety by reason of its bond and to a third person, the surety's normal right of recovery through subrogation against the third person is limited to situations in which the surety's equity is superior to that of the third person (83 Cal. App. 3d 593, 602) . The court said the trial court's conclusion that plaintiff had not established a superior equity to defendant was correct (83 Cal. App. 3d 593, 604) .

The facts and procedural background of Federal Ins. Co. v. Allen (1970) 13 Cal. App. 3d 648, 92 Cal. Rptr. 125 , are discussed in § 220.44[3][a]. In affirming the judgment for defendants, the court said plaintiff in effect vouched for the employee's integrity and accepted a premium for its agreement to indemnify against his defalcations. Defendants had no notice whatever of the employee's thefts, and there were no facts to put either defendant on inquiry. The court concluded that plaintiff had thus failed to show a superior, or even an equal, equity, and held it could not recover from either defendant (13 Cal. App. 3d 648, 650) .

[c] Fault of Third Person Must Be Related to Primary Cause of Loss for Surety or Insurer to Prevail

Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. v. Morse Signal Devices (1984) 151 Cal. App. 3d 681, 198 Cal. Rptr. 756 , was an action against various burglar and fire alarm companies by an insurance company, as subrogee of its insureds for losses arising from property damage sustained by its insureds, allegedly as a result of the failure of the alarm systems. Each of plaintiff's insureds had contracted with one of the alarm companies to have burglar or fire alarm systems maintained. Each of the alarm companies' contracts contained various disclaimers and a liquidated damages clause limiting the company's liability to a refund of a specified portion of the amount paid for the company's services. In each of 11 separate incidents, a fire or burglary occurred at an insured's premises, and the alarm system failed to function properly either because of a mechanical failure or because of the failure of the company's personnel to notify police or fire departments on receiving signals from otherwise properly functioning systems. Plaintiff alleged that when the alarm companies received alarm signals but failed to notify the proper officials, such "knowing" failure amounted to gross negligence and that, as a proximate result of the alarm companies' breach of their contractual duty or negligent or grossly negligent acts, the fires or burglaries were not aborted. Defendants' demurrers to the complaint were sustained without leave to amend, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. Quoting Continental Ins. Co. v. Morgan, Olmstead, Kennedy & Gardner, Inc. (1978) 83 Cal. App. 3d 593, 603-604, 148 Cal. Rptr. 57 , the court said that only if the person dealing with the wrongdoer is in a better position to avoid the loss than is the insured or the surety does the surety have the superior equity permitting it to recover as a subrogee. In the case of the check forged by a bonded employee, the primary cause of the loss is the conduct of the dishonest employee. The action of the bank in paying the check is secondary. Absent some negligent conduct of a character which promotes or encourages the employee's fraud, the bank is not in a better position to avoid the loss than is the insured's employer (151 Cal. App. 3d 681, 687-688) . Applying this statement to the case before it, the court said the primary cause of the loss was the creator of the fire or the burglar. The alarm companies' alleged negligence would be secondary to the creation of the perils (151 Cal. App. 3d 681, 688) . Thus, while the alarm companies may have been negligent in performance of their contractual duties, their negligence did not create the harm (151 Cal. App. 3d 681, 687) .

The facts and procedural background of Continental Ins. Co. v. Morgan, Olmstead, Kennedy & Gardner, Inc. (1978) 83 Cal. App. 3d 593, 148 Cal. Rptr. 57 , are discussed in § 220.44[3][b]. In affirming the judgment for defendant, the court of appeal said that the fault of the third person that creates the superior equity in the surety suing in subrogation must be related to the "primary cause" of the loss. Only if the person dealing with the wrongdoer is in a better position to avoid the loss than is the insured or the surety does the surety have the superior equity permitting it to recover as a subrogee (83 Cal. App. 3d 593, 603-604) . The court said the primary cause of the loss was the theft of the treasury bills by the bank's employees or invitees, and, contributing to the loss, were the bank's negligence in failing to undertake minimal measures to protect the millions in dollars of negotiable securities and its negligent delay in reporting the loss. Defendant's negligence, if any, was secondary as the bank's loss occurred prior to the time defendant had anything to do with the stolen treasury bills (83 Cal. App. 3d 593, 604) .

[d] Burden of Proof and Imputed Negligence

The facts and procedural background of Continental Ins. Co. v. Morgan, Olmstead, Kennedy & Gardner, Inc. (1978) 83 Cal. App. 3d 593, 148 Cal. Rptr. 57), are discussed in § 220.44[3][b]. In affirming the judgment for defendant, the court said the burden of proof is on the surety to establish its superior equity and, in weighing the equities, the negligence or other fault of the insured is imputed to the surety seeking subrogation (83 Cal. App. 3d 593, 602) . The court concluded that defendant's negligence, if any, was certainly no greater than the bank's negligence, which is imputed to its subrogee, and on those facts the trial court's conclusion that plaintiff had not established a superior equity to defendant was correct (83 Cal. App. 3d 593, 604) .

[e] Subrogation as Not Enforced When Equities Are Equal or Rights Are Not Clear

Meyers v. Bank of Am. Nat'l Trust & Sav. Ass'n (1938) 11 Cal. 2d 92, 77 P.2d 1084 , was an action by a bonding company (the surety) on a fidelity bond in the name of its insured against a bank to recover losses resulting from the forgery of the insured's name on numerous checks made payable to the insured. The forgeries were committed by the insured's office manager who received the checks in the course of the insured's business. After forging the insured's signature, the office manager negotiated the checks with an individual who paid full value for them in the ordinary course of business and deposited them in his bank account with defendant bank which presented them to the respective drawees and received full payment. Judgment was for plaintiff, and defendant appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed. The Court said subrogation is equity's second method of compelling the ultimate payment by one who in justice and good conscience ought to make it--of putting the charge where it justly belongs. It is not an absolute right but depends on the superiority of the equities of the one who asserts it over those of the one against whom it is sought; it will never be enforced when the equities are equal or the rights not clear (11 Cal. 2d 92, 101) . The Court pointed out that the indemnitor had discharged its primary contract liability by paying what it had contracted to pay, that it had retained to its own use the premiums and benefits of the contract, and that it was seeking to recover from the bank the amount thus paid. The Court said it must be conceded the bank was an innocent third party whose duty to the employer was based on an entirely different theory of contract, with which the indemnitor was not in privity, and neither the indemnitor nor the bank was the wrongdoer, but by independent contract obligation each was liable to the employer. The Court concluded that, in equity, it could not be said the satisfaction by the bonding company of its primary liability should entitle it to recover against the bank on a totally different liability (11 Cal. 2d 92, 102) . The Court held the surety had no superior equities and was not entitled to be subrogated to any claim plaintiff might have had against the bank (11 Cal. 2d 92, 103) .

The facts and procedural background of Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. v. Morse Signal Devices (1984) 151 Cal. App. 3d 681, 198 Cal. Rptr. 756 , are discussed in § 220.44[3][c]. In affirming the judgment for defendants, the court said that subrogation is equity's second method of compelling the ultimate payment by one who in justice and good conscience ought to make it--of putting the charge where it justly belongs. It is not an absolute right but depends on the superiority of the equities of the one who asserts it over those of the one against whom it is sought; it will never be enforced when the equities are equal or the rights not clear (151 Cal. App. 3d 681, 686) . The court said the insureds are in the best position to place a value on the contents of their premises, and the insurance company, which charges its premiums based on the extent of insurance coverage, is in the best position to spread the risks assumed. The court added that the insureds procured insurance for the very losses that were suffered and concluded that plaintiff was not equitably subrogated to any of the insureds' causes of action based on breach of contract or negligence (151 Cal. App. 3d 681, 688) .

[f] Effect of Formal Assignment of Insured's Claim

The facts and procedural background of Meyers v. Bank of Am. Nat'l Trust & Sav. Ass'n (1938) 11 Cal. 2d 92, 77 P.2d 1084 , are discussed in § 220.44[3][e]. The bonding company (the surety), on reimbursement of the insured's losses, took an assignment of any cause of action the insured had against the bank, together with the right to maintain an action at law thereon in the insured's name. On appeal, plaintiff contended the action was assignable, the insured had a legal right to assign it, and that, because both the legal right to assign and the right of action were legal in nature, the action was at law and the equitable doctrine of subrogation was inapplicable. The Supreme Court rejected the contention. The Court said assignment of an assignable cause of action is but one of the recognized forms of subrogation and when one is entitled to substitution in the place of one entitled to institute and maintain an action, neither a written nor an oral contract is necessary to effect transfer of the right. Consequently, a formal written assignment of the claim adds nothing to its enforceability by the assignee and the action is subject to the same defenses as though no assignment of any sort had been made (11 Cal. 2d 92, 94) . Thus, the defense which the plaintiff sought to preclude by suing at law (that plaintiff had no equities superior to defendant) was permitted to be raised (11 Cal. 2d 92, 96-97, 100-103) .

The facts and procedural background of Federal Ins. Co. v. Allen (1970) 13 Cal. App. 3d 648, 92 Cal. Rptr. 125 , are discussed in § 220.44[3][a]. On payment of the loss, plaintiff took from the tire company an assignment of all its rights against those who might be liable to the company in connection with the loss and argued that the action was one at law for conversion, to be treated as though brought by the tire company, and that negligence was not a defense to the action. In affirming the judgment for defendants, the court pointed out that a surety for compensation on a fidelity bond does not stand in the shoes of the employer whose loss it has paid; such a surety, on its payment to the employer, is subrogated to the employer's rights. The court said a formal written assignment adds nothing to the enforceability by the assignee of the cause of action, and it is subject to the same defenses as though no assignment had been made. The court concluded that the surety could recover only if it showed an equity superior to that of the defendants (13 Cal. App. 3d 648, 650) .

[a] Subrogation as Not Enforced When Equities Are Equal or Rights Are Not Clear

In Morgan Creek Residential v. Kemp (2007) 153 Cal. App. 4th 675, 63 Cal. Rptr. 3d 232 , rev. denied, 2007 Cal. LEXIS 13272 (2007) , a land development company brought an action against a developer/builder seeking equitable contribution and subrogation under the California Uniform Commercial Code. Plaintiff had paid monies pursuant to a letter of credit as security for a loan to complete a construction project; the debtors defaulted on the loan. The court dismissed the complaint without leave to amend; and the appellate court affirmed, holding with regard to the subrogation claim that subrogation depends on the superiority of the equities of the party that asserts it over those of the one against whom it is sought. The plaintiff claimed merely equal rights, not superior rights over defendants. Yet the defendants, as mere guarantors, bargained for limited exposure. To allow plaintiff to recover from them on plaintiff's letter of credit would work an injustice to the defendants' rights. Plaintiff's attempt to use a subrogation theory to obtain apportionment from others who were not primarily liable is inconsistent with the aim of subrogation. Comm. Code § 5117 might allow plaintiff to go after the debtors on the underlying obligation, but it does not allow plaintiff to go after defendants as mere guarantors (153 Cal. App. 4th 675, 690-695) .

In Maryland Cas. Co. v. Nationwide Mut. Ins. Co. (2000) 81 Cal. App. 4th 1082, 97 Cal. Rptr. 2d 374 , an action between insurers of the same insured, the court of appeal refused to apply the doctrine of equitable subrogation to allocate defense costs between them, because both insurers had issued primary policies regarding the loss. Therefore, the doctrine of equitable contribution applied (81 Cal. App. 4th 1082, 1092-1093) .

§ 220.45 Opposing Contention That Subrogation Lies--Loss Caused by Negligence of Coinsured

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief].

THE DOCTRINE OF EQUITABLE SUBROGATION DOES NOT APPLY IN THIS CASE BECAUSE DEFENDANT WAS A COINSURED OF PLAINTIFF'S SUBROGOR UNDER THE SAME LIABILITY POLICY.

Loss Caused by Negligence of Coinsured. No right of subrogation can arise in favor of an insurer against its own insured since, by definition, subrogation exists only with respect to rights of the insurer against third persons to whom the insurer owes no duty; hence, an insurance company that has paid a loss to one insured under its policy cannot as subrogee recover from a coinsured under the policy the amount paid by it even though the coinsured's negligence may have caused the loss, there being no fraud or design on his or her part (St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Murray Plumbing & Heating Corp. (1976) 65 Cal. App. 3d 66, 75-77, 135 Cal. Rptr. 120).

[2] Comments

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that the action is one in which the doctrine of equitable subrogation applies. The ground of opposition is that an insurer, on paying an insured for the loss from a peril insured against by a policy may not, as subrogee of the insured, sue under the same policy a coinsured whose negligence caused the loss.

These points and authorities may be used alone or combined with a memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue. For example, they may be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities in opposition to a motion by plaintiff for summary judgment under Code Civ. Proc. § 437c. They may also be combined with points and authorities in support of a motion by defendant for summary judgment. If the fact that defendant was a coinsured under the same policy appears from the face of the complaint or from judicially noticed matter, these points and authorities may be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities (1) in support of a general demurrer to the complaint [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 430.10(e), 430.30(a)], or (2) in support of a nonstatutory motion for judgment on the pleadings. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, if the contention is made in opposition to a motion by plaintiff or in support of a motion by defendant for summary judgment, defendant should show he or she was a coinsured under the same insurance policy as plaintiff's subrogor [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b)]. If the contention is made in support of a general demurrer to a complaint or a motion for judgment on the pleadings, defendant should show that the complaint fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action because it shows on its face that defendant was a coinsured under the same insurance policy as plaintiff's subrogor.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities in § 220.22 or § 220.224.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Loss Caused by Negligence of Coinsured

St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Murray Plumbing & Heating Corp. (1976) 65 Cal. App. 3d 66, 135 Cal. Rptr. 120 , was an action against subcontractors by a builder's risk insurer, as subrogee of its insured, a general contractor, for reimbursement of the sum ($283,000) paid for water damage to property located on the insured project while the building was under construction. Plaintiff paid the money to the general contractor who thereafter disbursed a portion of it to the various subcontractors suffering property damage. Plaintiff alleged that as a result of defendants' negligence, strict liability, breach of warranty, and breach of contract a four inch cast iron pipe broke causing extensive flooding. Plaintiff's insurance policy listed the insured as the general contractor "for its account and/or the account of its subcontractors" and insured against all risks of direct physical loss, damage, or destruction of property of the insured or of others in the custody or control of the insured. On the case being called for trial the court preliminarily determined a special defense raised by the defendants, ruling as a matter of law that plaintiff could not maintain a subrogation action against defendants since they were also insureds under the terms of the policy. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court said the policy was obviously procured by the general contractor for the mutual benefit of the subcontractors and clearly extended coverage to them as additional assureds (65 Cal. App. 3d 66, 74) . The court said that the bulk of authority elsewhere establishes the principle that an insurer may not subrogate against a coinsured of its subrogor and saw no reason not to follow that authority (65 Cal. App. 3d 66, 75) . The court said no right of subrogation can arise in favor of an insurer against its own insured since, by definition, subrogation exists only with respect to rights of the insurer against third persons to whom the insurer owes no duty (65 Cal. App. 3d 66, 75) . The court also said that the courts have consistently held that where an insurance company has paid a loss to one insured under its policy it cannot as subrogee recover the amount so paid from a coinsured under the policy even though the latter's negligence may have caused the loss, there being no fraud or design on his or her part (65 Cal. App. 3d 66, 76) . The court then said that cases in which an insurance company attempts to recover, as a subrogee, against a party for whose benefit the insurance was written and whose negligence has occasioned the loss, are concededly rare, but there are some, mostly in the field of builder's risk insurance. The courts have consistently held, in the builder's risk cases, that the insurance company, having paid a loss to one insured, cannot, as subrogee, recover from another of the parties for whose benefit the insurance was written, even though the latter's negligence may have occasioned the loss, there being no design or fraud on his or her part (65 Cal. App. 3d 66, 76-77) .

Rokeby-Johnson v. Aquatronics Int'l, Inc. (1984) 159 Cal. App. 3d 1076, 206 Cal. Rptr. 232 , was a subrogated action by an insurer to recover a sum paid to its insured for loss of equipment caused by a fire on board a vessel at sea against the operator of the ship to whom the insured had furnished the equipment. Plaintiff contended the loss resulted from defendant's negligence and failure to provide a seaworthy vessel. In the written agreement between the insured and the ship operator for the insured to furnish services and equipment, the insured had undertaken to provide insurance protection for the operator. The agreement was executed some three weeks after insurance coverage of the equipment had been bound by the brokers. At the mandatory settlement conference before trial, defendant advised plaintiff it would assert as a defense that it was an implied-in-law coinsured of the insured which defense, if established, would defeat the insurer's subrogation action. Plaintiff filed a notice of motion in limine to exclude testimony at trial on this defense on the ground it was new matter and should have been pleaded as an affirmative defense. The court denied the motion and, although unpersuaded that the defense had to be pleaded, allowed defendant to amend its answer to do so. At trial, the judge bifurcated the issues and, relying on Liberty Mut. Fire Ins. Co. v. Auto Spring Supply Co. (1976) 59 Cal. App. 3d 860, 865-866, 131 Cal. Rptr. 211 (a subrogated action by an insurer of a commercial building against the named insured's sublessee arising out of damage to the building by fire, in which the court held the sublessee was an implied-in-law coinsured of the named insured), ruled that defendant was an implied-in-law coinsured and thus the insurer could have no right of subrogation against him. The court said the language of the contract between the parties was clear, that it specifically provided that the named insured would, at its own expense, obtain insurance coverage and listed a number of coverages, including personal property insurance, which applied to the equipment. The court said it had to assume that the purpose of providing for the insuring of the equipment was to assure defendant that it would have no liability in the event there was a loss of that equipment and the carrier would take care of the loss, and, thus, it followed that the clear purpose of the provision was for the benefit of defendant. The court concluded the commercial expectation of the parties was that the named insured's insurance would cover any loss of the equipment, and if subrogation were permitted, defendant would become the source of the funds used to cover the lost equipment which would be contrary to the expressed intent of plaintiff's named insured. Plaintiff appealed, contending it was entitled to subrogation because defendant was not named as an additional insured; there was no waiver of subrogation in the parties' agreement; the agreement did not absolve defendant from the consequences of its own negligence; and the agreement did not absolve defendant from the consequences of its failure to furnish a seaworthy vessel. The court of appeal rejected plaintiff's contentions and affirmed the judgment. The court quoted with approval the trial court's explanation of its decision, including the statements set forth above (159 Cal. App. 3d 1076, 1080-1084) . A surety which is subrogated to the rights of the principal against a third person takes the rights subject to all defenses which the third person has as against the principal (159 Cal. App. 3d 1076, 1083) . If the rights of the assured have been limited by lawful contract, the rights of the insurer are likewise limited (159 Cal. App. 3d 1076, 1086) .

22-220 California Points & Authorities § 220.46

§ 220.46 Opposing Contention That Subrogation Lies--Plaintiff Insurer's Subrogor Waived Subrogation Rights for Damage by Fire to Leased Premises

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief].

PLAINTIFF MAY NOT, AS THE SUBROGEE OF ITS INSURED, RECOVER FROM DEFENDANT THE AMOUNT PAID FOR _____ [LOSS OF or DAMAGE TO] THE INSURED'S PROPERTY BY FIRE BECAUSE PLAINTIFF'S INSURED, IN LEASING THE PROPERTY TO DEFENDANT, WAIVED ANY SUBROGATION RIGHTS AGAINST DEFENDANT FOR DAMAGE BY FIRE.

A. Right of Insurer as Subrogee. A subrogation as applied to an insurer is the right to be put in the position of its insured against third parties legally responsible to its insured for the loss which the insurer has both insured and paid (Parsons Mfg. Corp. Inc. v. Superior Court (1984) 156 Cal. App. 3d 1151, 1158, 203 Cal. Rptr. 419).

B. Waiver of Subrogation Rights. Provisions in a lease that place on the lessor the burden of insuring the leased premises against fire caused by either the lessor or lessee's negligence constitute a waiver of subrogation, and the lessor's fire insurer may not, as subrogee of its insured, recover from the lessee payments made on account of fire loss or damage caused by the lessee's negligence (Parsons Mfg. Corp., Inc. v. Superior Court (1984) 156 Cal. App. 3d 1151, 1162-1163, 203 Cal. Rptr. 419).

[2] Comments

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that plaintiff fire insurer is entitled to recover on its subrogated claim against its insured's lessee who negligently caused the fire. The ground of opposition is that any right to subrogation against the lessee was waived by the agreement of plaintiff's insured to insure the premises against loss or damage by fire caused by either the lessor's or lessee's negligence. The contention in this form is closely related to the contention that an alleged obligor is an implied-in-law coinsured [see Rokeby-Johnson v. Aquatronics

Int'l, Inc. (1984) 159 Cal. App. 3d 1076, 1084-1085, 206 Cal. Rptr. 232 [see also § 220.45[4][a]]. Consequently, it might be advisable for the alleged obligor in a fact situation presented by this form to plead as an affirmative defense to the action both a waiver of subrogation and that the defendant is an implied-in-law coinsured of plaintiff's insured.

These points and authorities may be used alone or combined with a memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue. For example, they may be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities in opposition to a motion by plaintiff in surer for summary judgment under Code Civ. Proc. § 437c. They may also be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities in support of a motion by defendant lessee for summary judgment when the lessor's agreement to have the property insured against loss or damage by fire for the benefit of both the lessor and lessee can be indisputably established. If the waiver of subrogation appears from the face of the complaint or from judicially noticed matter, these points and authorities may be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities (1) in support of a general demurrer to the complaint [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 430.10(e), 430.30(a)], or (2) in support of a nonstatutory motion for judgment on the pleadings. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, if the contention is made in opposition to a motion by plaintiff for summary judgment, defendant should show either that subrogation was waived or that there are disputed fact questions as to whether subrogation was waived. If the contention is made in support of a motion for summary judgment, defendant should show the indisputable facts establishing that subrogation was waived [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b)]. If the contention is made in support of a general demurrer to a complaint or a motion for judgment on the pleadings, defendant should simply point out that the complaint fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action in that it shows on its face, or it appears from judicially noticed matter, that any right the insurer might have had to subrogation against the lessee was waived by the lessor.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities in § 220.23.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Right of Insurer as Subrogee

Parsons Mfg. Corp. Inc. v. Superior Court (1984) 156 Cal. App. 3d 1151, 203 Cal. Rptr. 419 , was a mandate proceeding arising out of an action by an insurer against its insured's lessee to recover the amount paid by the insurer on account of damage by fire to the leased premises allegedly caused by defendant's negligence. Defendant entered a general denial to the complaint and asserted as an affirmative defense that the lessor in the lease had waived subrogation against the lessee for damage to the leased premises by fire. The lease agreement provided for return of the premises in the same condition as received, "damage by fire, act of God or by the elements excepted." It also contained other provisions suggesting that the lessor would provide fire insurance for the building. Plaintiff moved for partial summary judgment, seeking a determination that the lessor had not waived subrogation. Defendant countered with its own motion for summary judgment, seeking to establish as a complete defense the asserted waiver of subrogation. The primary evidence presented by each party in support of its motion was the lease agreement. The trial court ruled in plaintiff's favor on both motions, and defendant petitioned the court of appeal for a writ of mandate.

The court of appeal granted the petition and ordered issuance of a writ directing the trial court to vacate its rulings on the motions for summary judgment and partial summary judgment and to enter summary judgment for defendant. In reaching its conclusion, the court held plaintiff's showing in support of its motion for partial summary judgment was insufficient. The lease agreement alone was a sufficient showing by the lessee in support of its motion, and the matters presented by plaintiff in opposition to defendant's motion failed to rebut the inference from the language of the lease that the lessor would procure insurance for the benefit of both the lessor and lessee (156 Cal. App. 3d 1151, 1163-1164) . The court said that a subrogation as applied to an insurer is its right to be put in the position of its insured against third parties legally responsible to its insured for the loss which the insurer has both insured and paid (156 Cal. App. 3d 1151, 1158) .

[b] Waiver of Subrogation Rights

The facts and procedural background of Parsons Mfg. Corp. Inc. v. Superior Court (1984) 156 Cal. App. 3d 1151, 203 Cal. Rptr. 419 , are discussed in § 220.46[3][a]. In reaching its conclusion to grant the writ, the court stated the principle that a lessee may, by contract with the lessor, establish protection against suit for negligently caused fire damage, that is, that subrogation may be waived, but added what is not answered by the California cases is what contractual provisions are required to secure such protection (156 Cal. App. 3d 1151, 1160) . A lease provision merely excepting "damage by fire" from the lessee's duty to return the premises in good condition may not protect the lessee; on the other hand, an express requirement that the lessor maintain fire insurance for the premises may provide such protection (156 Cal. App. 3d 1151, 1160) . The court held that when the lease agreement adverts to the possibility of fire and there is no clear language or other admissible evidence showing an agreement to the contrary, the agreement should be read to place on the lessor the burden of insuring the premises (as distinguished from the lessee's personal property) against lessor and lessee negligence and when the lease has been drawn by the lessor its language will be construed strictly against the lessor and its insurer (156 Cal. App. 3d 1151, 1162) . The court said the lease agreement was rife with hints the lessor would procure insurance on the premises and the lessee was entitled to expect that the insurance would be for its benefit as well as for the lessor's (156 Cal. App. 3d 1151, 1162-1163) .

§ 220.47 Opposing Contention That Subrogation Lies--Insurer May Not Intervene in Insured's Action Against Obligor for Damages if Insurance Contract Failed to Provide for Subrogation of Benefits in Question

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief].

THE INSURER MAY NOT, AS THE SUBROGEE OF ITS INSURED, INTERVENE IN ITS INSURED'S ACTION FOR DAMAGES, INCLUDING LOSS OF INCOME, TO RECOVER FROM THE OBLIGOR THE AMOUNT IT PAID ITS INSURED AS _____ [describe benefits in question, e.g., INCOME CONTINUATION BENEFITS] UNDER THE TERMS OF ITS LIABILITY POLICY BECAUSE IT DID NOT RESERVE THE RIGHT TO SUBROGATION TO SUCH PAYMENTS IN THE INSURANCE POLICY, ALTHOUGH IT EXPRESSLY RESERVED THE RIGHT TO SUBROGATION AS TO OTHER COVERAGES.

A. Kinds of Subrogation. There are two sorts of subrogation, "legal" (or equitable) and "conventional" (or contractual). Legal subrogation has its source in equity and arises by operation of law (Knight v. Alefosio (1984) 158 Cal. App. 3d 716, 723, 205 Cal. Rptr. 42).

B. Conventional Subrogation. Conventional subrogation arises by contract; conversely, a right to conventional subrogation does not exist in the absence of a contractual provision (see Knight v. Alefosio (1984) 158 Cal. App. 3d 716, 723, 205 Cal. Rptr. 42).

C. Legal Subrogation. Legal subrogation has its source in equity and arises by operation of law; it does not arise from any contractual relationship between the parties, but takes place as a matter of equity with or without an agreement to that effect when a person having a liability or a right or a fiduciary relationship pays a debt due by another under such circumstances that the person is in equity entitled to the security or obligation held by the creditors whom he or she has paid (Knight v. Alefosio (1984) 158 Cal. App. 3d 716, 723, 205 Cal. Rptr. 42).

D. Inapplicability of Legal Subrogation to Override Insurance Policy. The principle of legal or equitable subrogation does not apply in favor of an insurer to override a policy that fails to provide for such subrogation, although it provides for subrogation with respect to other coverages, so as to permit the insurer to intervene in the insured's action against the tortfeasor to recover damages for personal injuries, including the loss to which the insurer claims to be subrogated (Knight v. Alefosio (1984) 158 Cal. App. 3d 716, 724, 205 Cal. Rptr. 42).

These points and authorities are for use by an insured in a memorandum of points and authorities in opposition to a motion by an insurer, asserting a right to both conventional and legal subrogation, to intervene in the insured's action against the third-party tortfeasor on the narrow ground the insurance contract gives no right to subrogation as to the specific claim to which the insurer claims to be subrogated although it contains provisions for subrogation with respect to other coverages. These points and authorities may also used by the insured in an action against him or her by the insurer to recoup its payments from the proceeds of a judgment recovered by the insured against the third-party tortfeasor in combination with a memorandum of points and authorities: (1) in support of a general demurrer to the complaint [see Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]; (2) in support of the insured's nonstatutory motion for judgment on the pleadings; or (3) in support of a motion by the insured for summary judgment when the inapplicability of the doctrine of subrogation does not appear from the face of the complaint [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c]. With appropriate modifications, these points and authorities may also be used in a trial or appellate brief.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Kinds of Subrogation

Knight v. Alefosio (1984) 158 Cal. App. 3d 716, 205 Cal. Rptr. 42 , was an action by an insured for damages for personal injuries resulting from an automobile accident against the driver of the other vehicle. The demand included a claim for loss of income. Plaintiff was insured under a policy providing coverage under "Personal Injury Protection" for income continuation benefits, pursuant to which the insurer paid such benefits to the insured. The insurer's motion under Code Civ. Proc. § 387(a) to intervene in the action on the ground it was subrogated to the insured's right to recover from defendant payments made for income continuation benefits was denied, and the insurer appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court said subrogation is of two sorts: "legal" (or equitable) and "conventional" (or contractual) (158 Cal. App. 3d 716, 723) .

[b] Conventional Subrogation

The facts and procedural background of Knight v. Alefosio (1984) 158 Cal. App. 3d 716, 205 Cal. Rptr. 42 , are discussed in § 220.47[3][a]. The insurer claimed a right to conventional subrogation based on the insurance policy it issued to plaintiff. The court rejected the claim on the ground the policy did not contain a reservation of the right to subrogate with respect to the income continuation benefits as it did with respect to liability and uninsured motorist coverage set forth in other sections of the insurance contract and, therefore, the insurer did not have a contractual subrogation right (158 Cal. App. 3d 716, 721, 723) . The court held that when the insurance contract is silent as to subrogation rights it means that such a right was not bargained for and hence not acquired by the insurance company. The court said in so holding it was only giving effect to the carrier's probable intent as expressed in the policy it drafted. It, therefore, followed that the insurer was not a person who had an interest in the matter in litigation or in the success of either of the parties or an interest against both, and the trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying intervention (158 Cal. App. 3d 716, 723) .

[c] Legal Subrogation

The facts and procedural background of Knight v. Alefosio (1984) 158 Cal. App. 3d 716, 205 Cal. Rptr. 42 , are discussed in § 220.47[3][a]. The insurer also contended it was entitled to legal subrogation. In rejecting this contention, the court said legal subrogation has its source in equity and arises by operation of law when a person having a liability or a right or a fiduciary relationship in the premises pays a debt due by another under such circumstances that the person is in equity entitled to the security or obligation held by the creditors whom he or she has paid. It does not arise from any contractual relationship between the parties, but takes place as a matter of equity with or without an agreement to that effect. The court declared itself satisfied that the principle of legal or equitable subrogation should not be applied (158 Cal. App. 3d 716, 723) .

[d] Inapplicability of Legal Subrogation to Override Insurance Policy

The facts and procedural background of Knight v. Alefosio (1984) 158 Cal. App. 3d 716, 205 Cal. Rptr. 42 , are discussed in § 220.47[3][a]. In affirming the order denying the insurer's motion to intervene, the court said the doctrine of subrogation cannot be invoked to override the contract of the parties and does not apply when its enforcement would be inconsistent with the terms of the contract or if the contract expressly or by implication forbids its application. The court rejected the insurer's contention that it enjoyed a right of equitable subrogation notwithstanding its failure to reserve the right under the policy. This would in effect permit the company to rewrite the policy to the detriment of its insured, who had paid a premium for a designated benefit without the company's right of subrogation. The reasonable expectation of the insured had to be that the company had no right of recovery (subrogation) in respect to income continuation benefits. The court said that when the policy reserves the right of subrogation with respect to claims paid under certain policy coverages, it does not have the right as to other coverages that do not reserve the right (158 Cal. App. 3d 716, 724) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Inapplicability of Legal Subrogation to Override Insurance Policy

In Continental Ins. Co. v. American Prot. Indus. (1987) 197 Cal. App. 3d 322, 242 Cal. Rptr. 784 , an insured filed an action against a burglar-alarm company, seeking contract, tort, and equitable remedies based on losses suffered from burglaries in the insured's warehouses. The plaintiff's insurer joined in the action, alleging a cause of action in fraud based on the defendant's conduct toward the insured, and asserting an interest by right of subrogation. The court of appeal affirmed summary judgment against the insurer, holding that the doctrine of equitable subrogation is inapplicable when the insured is a party plaintiff in an action against a third-party tortfeasor, and no contractual right of subrogation is in evidence or admitted by the parties (197 Cal. App. 3d 322, 327) .

§ 220.48 Supporting Obligor's Contention That Subrogation Is Unavailable--Insurer's Subrogation Claim Barred by Insured's Release of Obligor

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

WHEN AN INSURED HAS RELEASED AN OBLIGOR FROM LIABILITY WITH RESPECT TO A CLAIM, THE INSURER HAS NO RIGHT OF SUBROGATION AGAINST THE OBLIGOR WITH RESPECT TO MATTERS COVERED BY THE RELEASE [Add if used in connection with motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication: AND SUMMARY _____ (JUDGMENT or ADJUDICATION) THEREFORE IS APPROPRIATE].

A. Limitation on Insurer's Rights as Subrogee. A subrogated insurer stands in the shoes of its insured, and has no greater rights against a third-party obligor than did its insured (Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. v. Maryland Cas. Co. (1994) 21 Cal. App. 4th 1586, 1596-1597, 26 Cal. Rptr. 2d 762 ; Continental Mfg. Corp. v. Underwriters at Lloyd's London (1960) 185 Cal. App. 2d 545, 556, 8 Cal. Rptr. 276).

B. Insurer Subject to Defenses. A subrogated insurer is subject to all defenses that the third-party obligor could have asserted against the insured (Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. v. Maryland Cas. Co. (1994) 21 Cal. App. 4th 1586, 1596-1597, 26 Cal. Rptr. 2d 762).

C. Effect of Release. When an insured has released a third-party obligor, neither the insured nor the subrogated insurer has any rights to recover from the third party (Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. v. Maryland Cas. Co. (1994) 21 Cal. App. 4th 1586, 1596-1597, 26 Cal. Rptr. 2d 762 ; *Continental Mfg. Corp. v. Underwriters at Lloyds London (1960) 185 Cal. App. 2d 545, 556, 8 Cal. [a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted to support the contention that an insurer is not entitled to subrogation because its insured has released the third-party obligor from liability. This situation can arise, for example, when an insurer advances funds to cover its insured's medical expenses, the insured thereafter settles with the third party tortfeasor (or the tortfeasor's insurer) and releases the tortfeasor from further liability in connection with the settlement, and the insurer subsequently seeks to recover from the tortfeasor the amounts the insurer advanced to its insured. It can also arise when an insured settles with and releases its primary insurer, and an excess insurer subsequently seeks to assert a claim against the primary insurer arising out of the subject matter covered by the release [see, e.g., Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. v. Maryland Cas. Co. (1994) 21 Cal. App. 4th 1586, 26 Cal. Rptr. 2d 762] .

This issue typically will be raised in connection with a defendant's motion for summary judgment [see Code. Civ. Proc. § 437c(a)] or summary adjudication [see Code. Civ. Proc. § 437c(f)] in an action by a plaintiff insurer seeking subrogation. When used in either of these contexts, this form may be combined, when appropriate, with general points and authorities supporting a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication [see Ch. 221, Summary Judgments]. The existence of a release barring a subrogation claim may be asserted as an affirmative defense in a subrogation action.

Counsel should insert these arguments following a statement of the case reciting the factual and procedural posture of the litigation. It will be necessary to demonstrate that the basis of plaintiff's claim is an alleged right of subrogation. To establish this, the complaint or answers to contention interrogatories should be incorporated into the statement of the case, and attached as exhibits to the moving papers. In addition, the existence of a release of claims from the insured-subrogor must be proven. The preferable method for doing this is to introduce the release as an exhibit, with an accompanying declaration laying the necessary foundation for introduction of the release into evidence.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Limitation on Insurer's Rights as Subrogee

In Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. v. Maryland Cas. Co. (1994) 21 Cal. App. 4th 1586, 26 Cal. Rptr. 2d 762 , litigation between a condominium homeowners' association, a developer, and a contractor terminated by way of settlement. Among other things, the settlement agreement provided that the developer would release its primary insurance carrier from further liability. Subsequently the developer's excess carrier, which made payments in connection with a separate settlement, sought equitable subrogation rights in an action against the primary carrier. The trial court granted summary judgment dismissing the action.

The Court of Appeal affirmed, ruling that because the subrogated insurer stands in the shoes of its insured, the insurer has no greater rights against a third party than did the insured, and its therefore subject to all defenses the third party could have asserted against the insured (21 Cal. App. 4th 1586, 1596-1597) .

In Continental Mfg. Corp. v. Underwriters at Lloyds London (1960) 185 Cal. App. 2d 545, 8 Cal. Rptr. 276 , an insured lessor leased an aircraft to a lessee under an agreement specifying that the lessee would not be responsible for in-flight damage to the aircraft and would be held harmless in the event of damage. When the plane was involved in an aerial mishap, the insurer refused to pay the lessor's claim on the ground that the lessor's contractual release of the lessee had foreclosed the insurer's subrogation rights against the lessee, in violation of the terms of the policy under which the insurer was required to be subrogated to any rights of the insured against third parties. The court agreed, holding that since the insured had contractually released the lessee, it could not place any claim against the lessee. "Unquestionably, [the insurer], as subrogee of [the insured], could have no rights that [the insured] did not have and, therefore, could not maintain an action against [the lessee]. ... In other words, the defendant-insurer merely stands in the shoes of [the insured] and has no greater rights against a third person than it has" (185 Cal. App. 2d 545, 555-556) .

[b] Insurer Subject to Defenses

The facts in Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. v. Maryland Cas. Co. (1994) 21 Cal. App. 4th 1586, 26 Cal. Rptr. 2d 762 , are discussed in § 220.48[3][a]. The court of appeal ruled that as a corollary of the principle that a subrogated insurer stands in the shoes of its insured, the insurer is subject to all defenses the third party could have asserted against the insured (21 Cal. App. 4th 1586, 1596-1597) .

[c] Effect of Release

Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. v. Maryland Cas. Co. (1994) 21 Cal. App. 4th 1586, 26 Cal. Rptr. 2d 762 , is discussed in § 220.48[3][a]. The court of appeal held that since a subrogee-insurer steps into the shoes of its insured and is subject to all the claims and defenses that could have been asserted against its insured, a release executed by the insured cuts off the subrogation rights of the insurer (21 Cal. App. 4th 1586, 1596-1597) .

Continental Mfg. Corp. v. Underwriters at Lloyds London (1960) 185 Cal. App. 2d 545, 8 Cal. Rptr. 276 , is discussed in § 220.48[3][a]. The court of appeal held that since a subrogee-insurer steps into the shoes of its insured and is subject to all the claims and defenses that could have been asserted against its insured, a release executed by the insured cuts off the subrogation rights of the insurer (185 Cal. App. 2d 545, 555-556) .

In Mitchell v. Holmes (1935) 9 Cal. App. 2d 461, 50 P.2d 473 , the insured was involved in an auto accident with a third party. The insured's vehicle was a total loss, and that loss was paid by the insured' auto insurer. At the same time the third party paid the insured $2,000 for bodily injury and in return received a general release of claims from the insured. The insurer later sued the third party to recover the amounts it paid the insured for property damage. The trial court entered judgment in favor of the third party, citing the release. The insurer's assignee appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. Citing out-of-state authority, the court simply stated that because the insured, as subrogor, had released the third party from further liability, the insurer-subrogee could not recover from the third party (9 Cal. App. 2d 461, 463-464) .

NOTE:

The court in Mitchell seemed to imply that for a release to defeat a subrogee's rights, the release had to have been executed without knowledge of the subrogee's potential claim [see Mitchell v. Holmes (1935) 9 Cal. App. 2d 461, 463-464, 50 P.2d 473] . A number of subsequent cases have also stated that a release will not bar the insured's subrogation rights if the tortfeasor obtained the release from the insured with knowledge that the insured had already been indemnified by the insurer [see, e.g., Conservatorship of Edwards (1988) 198 Cal. App. 3d 1176, 1184, 244 Cal. Rptr. 330] . However, none of the reported decisions has actually permitted an insurer's subrogation rights to survive a release executed by a party to the underlying claim [see California Insurance Law and Practice, Ch. 35, § 35.11[5][b] (Matthew Bender)].

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a cause of action for personal injuries is not subject to subrogation. The ground of opposition is that the action is expressly authorized by statute. Alternative Paragraphs A set forth various statutes that expressly authorize subrogation. Optional Paragraph B may be used if the obligor has argued that the statute authorizing subrogation by a pension or retirement system violates the equal protection clause of the federal or state constitution.

These memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a policy provision requiring the insured to reimburse the insurer for medical payments made by it under the terms of the policy out of any recovery received by the insured from a third-party tortfeasor constitutes a prohibited assignment or subrogation of a nonassignable cause of action and is, therefore, void.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Insurance Clause Requiring Reimbursement of Medical Payments From Proceeds of Settlement or Judgment as Valid and Enforceable

Lee v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. (1976) 57 Cal. App. 3d 458, 129 Cal. Rptr. 271 , was an appeal from that portion of a summary judgment declaring valid provisions in automobile insurance policies issued by defendant insurer requiring plaintiff insureds to reimburse defendant from the proceeds of any settlement or judgment against a third-party tortfeasor for medical payments made by defendant pursuant to the terms of the policies. The policies, under the heading medical payment coverage, required defendant insurer to pay reasonable medical expenses incurred within one year from the date of accident. Under the heading "subrogation," the policies provided that on payment of the medical coverage, the company shall be subrogated to the extent of such payment to the proceeds of any settlement or judgment that may result from the exercise of any rights of recovery which the injured person or anyone receiving such payment may have against any person or organization and such person shall execute and deliver instruments and papers and do whatever else is necessary to secure such rights and do nothing after loss to prejudice the rights. Pursuant to cross motions for summary judgment, the trial court rendered its judgment in favor of defendant insurer on the validity of the subrogation or reimbursement provisions of the policies.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court acknowledged the well-established rule in California that an assignment of a cause of action for personal injuries is void and in the absence of statutory authority a cause of action for personal injury is not subject to subrogation (57 Cal. App. 3d 458, 465) . However, the court also said that it is clearly established that insurance contract provisions requiring reimbursement of medical payments under the label of subrogation, but providing only access to the proceeds of settlement or judgment resulting from the exercise of rights of recovery by the injured person, are valid and enforceable (57 Cal. App. 3d 458, 465-466) . The court explained that subrogation or assignment of a cause of action for personal injury operates to transfer from one person to another that cause against a third party and, hence, the policy provision, though labeled subrogation, was not a true subrogation. The court said the right given the insurer was not the chose in action but the proceeds of any settlement or judgment resulting from the exercise of the injured party's rights of recovery against a third-party tortfeasor, and the right of repayment, reimbursement, or subrogation did not arise until the proceeds of settlement or judgment came into existence (57 Cal. App. 3d 458, 466) .

West v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. (1973) 30 Cal. App. 3d 562, 106 Cal. Rptr. 486) was a declaratory relief action by plaintiff insureds, a husband and wife, to establish their right to recover from their insurer reimbursement for medical treatment received and paid for by them as a result of an automobile accident. The day after the accident plaintiffs notified defendant's local agent of the accident, but there was no contact between them and the insurer until after they had settled their claim against the driver of the other vehicle. They then made demand on defendant for payment of the medical expenses incurred based on the policy clause requiring defendant to pay reasonable medical expenses incurred within one year from the date of the accident. The policy, however, also included the condition that, on payment of medical expenses, the insurer shall be subrogated to the extent of such payment to the proceeds of any settlement or judgment that may result from the exercise of any rights of recovery which the injured person or anyone receiving such payment may have against any person or organization. Judgment was for defendant. Plaintiffs appealed, contending the policy condition, by use of the word "subrogated," was invalid as constituting a prohibited assignment of a cause of action to recover damages for personal injuries insofar as medical specials were involved.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court acknowledged the well-settled rule that an assignment of a cause of action for damages for personal injuries is prohibited by former Prob. Code § 573 [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 377.20 et seq.] as well as at common law, but held that an agreement to reimburse an insurer in the event of recovery of damages by an insured from a third-party tortfeasor by either judgment or settlement is valid. There is no legal prohibition against the insurer requiring its insured to provide it with a lien to the extent of benefits paid under the policy against any recovery by the insured from a third party (30 Cal. App. 3d 562, 565) . The court said plaintiffs' contention failed because the subrogation was not to the chose in action but to the proceeds of any settlement or judgment that might result from the exercise of any rights of recovery the injured person might have against third persons. The "subrogation" does not arise until proceeds of settlement or judgment come into existence (30 Cal. App. 3d 562, 565-566) .

§ 220.51 Opposing Obligor's Contention That Action Is Barred by Statute of Limitations--Special Statute of Limitation Applies

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief].

THIS ACTION WAS TIMELY FILED BECAUSE IT IS GOVERNED BY _____ [specify, statutory provision, e.g., SECTION 11580.2(g)] OF THE INSURANCE CODE], WHICH EXPRESSLY PROVIDES THAT THE ACTION MAY BE FILED AT ANY TIME WITHIN _____ [YEAR(S)] AFTER _____ [specify event, e.g., THE DATE PAYMENT WAS MADE].

[Set forth the applicable period of limitations; for example, EITHER]

A. Action by Insurer to Recover Payment Made Under Uninsured Motorist Provision of Policy. An action in subrogation by a liability insurer to recover the amount paid its insured under the uninsured motorist provision of its policy is timely if commenced within three years from the date the payment was made (Ins. Code § 11580.2(g)).

[OR]

A. Action by Board of Administration on Behalf of California's Public Retirement System. An action in subrogation by the State Board of Administration on behalf of the Public Employees' Retirement System against a tortfeasor for injury to or death of an employee-member to recover the authorized portion of benefits paid as disability retirement allowances and special death benefits is timely if commenced within three years after the system's liability to pay benefits is fixed (Gov. Code §§ 20250, 20255).

[OR]

A. Action by County Retirement Association. An action in subrogation by a county retirement association against a tortfeasor for injury to or death of an employee-member to recover the authorized portion of benefits paid is timely if commenced within three years after the liability of the retirement system to pay benefits is fixed (Gov. Code § 31823).

[CONTINUE]

B. Purpose of Extended Period of Limitation. The purpose of the extended period of limitation is to protect the subrogation rights of the subrogee where the statute of limitations on the subrogor's cause of action might expire before the subrogee's cause of action arises (Liberty Mut. Ins. Co. v. Fales (1973) 8 Cal. 3d 712, 716, 106 Cal. Rptr. 21, 505 P.2d 213 (construing Ins. Code § 11580.2(g)).

[2] Comments

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that an action by the subrogee is subject to the same statute of limitations that applies to the subrogor's action and that the action is barred by the applicable statute. The ground of opposition is that the action is governed by a special statute of limitations and under the statute the action was timely filed.

These points and authorities may be used alone or combined with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities (1) in opposition to a general demurrer to the complaint [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 430.10(e), 430.30(a)], or (2) in opposition to a nonstatutory motion by defendant for judgment on the pleadings. They may also be combined with points and authorities in opposition to a motion by defendant for summary judgment [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c]. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities in § 220.31.

[b] Extended Period of Limitations on Statutory Right to Subrogation

A purely statutory right to subrogation may, if an applicable statute expressly so provides, be subject to a different, more extended statute of limitations than that applicable to the subrogor. In this event the subrogee has a greater right than that of the subrogor [see Commercial Union Assurance Co. v. City of San Jose (1982) 127 Cal. App. 3d 730, 735-736, 179 Cal. Rptr. 814 ; Allstate Ins. Co. v. County of Alameda (1973) 33 Cal. App. 3d 418, 421, 109 Cal. Rptr. 53] . However, an action not brought within the longer period provided by the statute is barred [see Phoenix of Hartford Ins. Cos. v. Colony Kitchens (1976) 57 Cal. App. 3d 140, 144-145, 128 Cal. Rptr. 893 (action by insurer under Ins. Code § 11580.2(g))].

[c] Cross Claim by Obligor

The subrogee may not, however, in any such action rely on the statute of limitations applicable to the subrogor's cause of action to cut off the obligor's right to seek affirmative relief by a cross claim [Liberty Mut. Ins. Co. v. Fales (1973) 8 Cal. 3d 712, 716-717, 106 Cal. Rptr. 21, 505 P.2d 213 (action by insurer under Ins. Code § 11580.2(g)); see § 220.39].

[d] Uninsured-Motorist Limitations Period Constitutional

The three-year limitations period under Ins. Code § 11580.2(g), regarding an insurer's subrogation action against an uninsured driver, was found to be constitutional on the ground that it bears a rational relationship to the state's purpose of permitting insurers that are required to write insurance based on the risk of their insureds' being injured by uninsured drivers to seek reimbursement from those drivers [West Am. Ins. Co. v. Chalk (1989) 213 Cal. App. 3d 825, 831, 261 Cal. Rptr. 837] .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Purpose of Extended Period of Limitation

The facts and procedural background of Liberty Mut. Ins. Co. v. Fales (1973) 8 Cal. 3d 712, 716, 106 Cal. Rptr. 21, 505 P.2d 213 , which involved Ins. Code § 11580.2(g), are discussed in § 220.39[3][a]. The action involved a subrogated claim of an insured that had paid an uninsured motorist claim under a policy. In affirming the judgment for plaintiff, the Supreme Court said the purpose of these extended periods of limitation is to protect the subrogation rights of the subrogee when the statute of limitations on the subrogor's cause of action might expire before the subrogee's cause of action arises (8 Cal. 3d 712, 716-717) .

The Court declined to rule on the constitutionality of Ins. Code § 11580.2(g), because it was unnecessary to its opinion (8 Cal. 3d 712, 715) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Purpose of Extended Period of Limitations

In West Am. Ins. Co. v. Chalk (1989) 213 Cal. App. 3d 825, 261 Cal. Rptr. 837 , an automobile-liability insurer filed an action against an uninsured motorist within the three-year limitations period of Ins. Code § 11580.2(g), to recover benefits paid to three insureds, one of whom settled the claim with the insurer within one year of the accident, and two of whom preserved their rights by filing suit against the tortfeasor within one year of the accident (although they never served the complaint), and later settled with the insurer. The court of appeal affirmed judgment for the insurer, rejecting the defendant's contention that the insurer is not entitled to assert a claim as subrogee after its subrogors can no longer do so (pursuant to the one-year limitations period applicable to actions by the insured against the uninsured motorist), because the subrogation right is statutory rather than pursuant to common law. The court held that the extended limitation period of Ins. Code § 11580.2(g) was intended to protect the subrogation rights of the insurer from being barred before they actually accrue (213 Cal. App. 3d 825, 829-831) .

22-220 California Points & Authorities § 220.52

§ 220.52 Opposing Obligor's Contention That Action Is Barred by Statute of Limitations--Joinder Under Workers' Compensation Law After Statute of Limitations Has Run Is Authorized

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief].

THE COMPLAINT IN INTERVENTION BY THE _____ [EMPLOYER or EMPLOYEE] FILED IN THE TIMELY-FILED ACTION OF THE _____ [EMPLOYEE or EMPLOYER] AGAINST THE THIRD-PARTY TORTFEASOR IS PROPER, ALTHOUGH FILED AFTER THE STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS HAS RUN ON THE ACTION AGAINST THE THIRD-PARTY TORTFEASOR, BECAUSE THE JOINDER IS EXPRESSLY AUTHORIZED BY STATUTE.

A. Joinder Authorized. Under the Workers' Compensation Law, if an action against a third-party tortfeasor for injury to an employee is brought by either the employer or employer, the other may, at any time before trial on the facts, join as party plaintiff or shall consolidate the action if brought independently (Lab. Code § 3853).

B. Joinder Authorized Although Statute of Limitation Has Run. When an action is brought against a third-party tortfeasor by either the employer or the employee, the other is permitted at any time before trial on the facts to join as a party plaintiff under Section 3853 of the Labor Code, and this is true even though the statute of limitations may have run on the other's claim after the complaint was filed and before intervention is sought (Jordan v. Superior Court (1981) 116 Cal. App. 3d 202, 206-210, 172 Cal. Rptr. 30 ; Harrison v. Englebrick (1967) 254 Cal. App. 2d 871, 874, 62 Cal. Rptr. 831).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a complaint in intervention by the subrogee employer (or its workers' compensation insurer) or by the subrogor employee filed in the other's timely-filed action against a third-party tortfeasor more than two years after the injury to the employee is barred by the statute of limitations for personal injury actions [Code Civ. Proc. § 335.1; see former Code Civ. Proc. § 340(3) (one-year limitations period, prior to 2003)]. The ground of opposition is that joinder of the employer or employee as a party plaintiff in the other's timely-filed action is expressly authorized by statute.

These points and authorities may be used alone or combined with a memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue. For example, they may be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities (1) in opposition to a general demurrer to the complaint in intervention [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 430.10(e), 430.30(a)], or (2) in opposition to a nonstatutory motion by defendant for judgment on the pleadings. They may also be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities in opposition to a motion by defendant for summary judgment [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c]. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities in § 220.31.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Joinder Authorized Although Statute of Limitation Has Run

Jordan v. Superior Court (1981) 116 Cal. App. 3d 202, 172 Cal. Rptr. 30 , arose out of an action by a workers' compensation carrier that had paid disability and medical benefits to an employee who had fallen and injured himself on the premises of a third-party customer to whom the employee was making a delivery on behalf of his employer. The employer's action against the customer was filed two days before the one-year statute of limitation had run on the action under former Code Civ. Proc. § 340(3) [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 335.1 (two-year limitations period, beginning in 2003)]. Three weeks later, after the statute had run, the employee filed a complaint in intervention against the third-party customer for general and special damages for his injuries. The third party successfully demurred to the complaint in intervention on the ground the action was barred by the statute of limitation, and the employee filed for a writ of mandate to compel the trial court to vacate its order of dismissal.

The court of appeal ordered the writ issued. The court said an the injury is caused by a third party, both the employer and employee are entitled to sue the third party [Lab. Code § 3852]. A workers' compensation insurer has the same right to sue as an employer [Lab. Code § 3850(b)]. The time for bringing suit, whether commenced by the employer or employee, was governed by the one-year period of limitation in former Code Civ. Proc. § 340(3) [now see Code Civ.

Proc. § 335.1 (two-year limitations period, beginning in 2003)] (116 Cal. App. 3d 202, 206) . The court, however, added that under Lab. Code § 3853, when an action is brought against a third party by either the employer or the employee, the other may at any time before trial on the facts join as party plaintiff. Quoting Harrison v. Englebrick (1967) 254 Cal. App. 2d 871, 875, 62 Cal. Rptr. 831 , the court said the law was clearly established that when the employer's action is timely filed the employee may intervene and press his or her complaint in intervention to recover damages for personal injuries, even though the employee does not appear and make such a claim until more than one year after the injury (116 Cal. App. 3d 202, 206-207) .

Harrison v. Englebrick (1967) 254 Cal. App. 2d 871, 62 Cal. Rptr. 831 , arose out of a timely-filed action by an employee who was injured in the course of his employment by the alleged negligent conduct of the third-party defendants. Almost three years after the accident, the employer's compensation carrier filed a complaint in intervention to recover worker's compensation benefits paid. Defendants' demurrer to the complaint in intervention was sustained without leave to amend on the ground the action was barred by the one-year period of limitation set forth in former Code Civ. Proc. § 340(3) [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 335.1 (two-year limitations period, beginning in 2003)], and the carrier appealed from the subsequent judgment of dismissal.

The court of appeal reversed. The court said it had been held that if the carrier files suit before the employee, and does so within one year of the date of injury, the injured employee's complaint in intervention was timely even though filed well after the one-year period. The court saw no reason not to apply this rule equally to the situation where the employee's action is timely filed and it is the carrier who seeks to intervene after expiration of the one-year period (254 Cal. App. 2d 871, 874) .

§ 220.53 Opposing Obligor's Contention That Action Against Public Entity Is Barred for Failure to File Timely Claim--Claim Was Timely Filed After Accrual of Action in Subrogation to Recover Uninsured Motorist Benefits Paid

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief].

THIS ACTION IN SUBROGATION TO RECOVER UNINSURED MOTORIST BENEFITS PAID BY PLAINTIFF IS NOT BARRED BY PLAINTIFF'S FAILURE TO HAVE FILED A CLAIM WITHIN 100 DAYS AFTER THE ACCIDENT BECAUSE THE CLAIM WAS FILED WITHIN 100 DAYS AFTER PLAINTIFF'S CAUSE OF ACTION ACCRUED.

A. Claim Requirement. A claim against a public entity relating to a cause of action for death or injury to person, personal property, or growing crops shall be presented not later than six months after accrual of the cause of action (Gov. Code § 911.2).

B. When Cause of Action Accrues. A cause of action accrues within the meaning of Section 911.2 of the Government Code on the date the cause of action would be deemed to have accrued within the meaning of the statute of limitation that would apply if there were no requirement that a claim be presented and acted on by the public entity before an action could be commenced (Gov. Code § 901).

C. Applicable Statute of Limitation. The statute of limitation that applies to a liability insurer's subrogated action to recover benefits paid under the uninsured motorist provisions of its policy is Section 11580.2(g) of the Insurance Code, which provides that the action may be brought within three years from the date the payment was made (Allstate Ins. Co. v. County of Alameda (1973) 33 Cal. App. 3d 418, 420-421, 109 Cal. Rptr. 53 .

D. When Subrogated Action to Recover Uninsured Motorist Benefits Paid Accrues. A liability insurer's subrogated action to recover payments made under the uninsured motorist provisions of its policy accrues, within the meaning of (Ins. Code § 11580.2(g), on the date it pays the claim (Allstate Ins. Co. v. County of Alameda (1973) 33 Cal. App. 3d 418, 421, 109 Cal. Rptr. 53).

E. Claim Filed Within Six Months After Insurer's Subrogated Action Accrued as Timely. A claim by the insurer against the public entity presented within six months after the subrogated cause of action accrues is timely (see Allstate Ins. Co. v. County of Alameda (1973) 33 Cal. App. 3d 418, 421, 109 Cal. Rptr. 53 (decided prior to 1987 legislation that changed claim presentation period to six months for acts or omissions occurring on or after January 1, 1988)).

[Optional] F. Liability of Public Entity. The term "any person," as used in Section 11580.2(g) of the Insurance Code, authorizing the insurer to recover from any person legally liable for the injury or death to the extent that payment was made, includes a governmental entity (Allstate Ins. Co. v. County of Alameda (1973) 33 Cal. App. 3d 418, 421, 109 Cal. Rptr. 53).

[2] Comments

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a subrogated action against a public entity by an insurer which has paid a claim under the uninsured motorist provisions of its policy is barred because no claim was presented within six months of the date of injury. The ground of opposition is that the claim was filed within six months after the insurer's cause of action against the public entity accrued by its payment of the claim.

These points and authorities may be used alone or combined with a memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue. For example, they may be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities (1) in opposition to a general demurrer to the complaint [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 430.10(e), 430.30(a)], or (2) in opposition to a nonstatutory motion by defendant for judgment on the pleadings. They may also be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities in opposition to a motion by defendant for summary judgment [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c]. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Applicable Statute of Limitation

Allstate Ins. Co. v. County of Alameda (1973) 33 Cal. App. 3d 418, 109 Cal. Rptr. 53 , was an action in subrogation against a county by an insurance company to recover the amount of a claim it had paid under the uninsured motorist provisions of its policy. Plaintiff alleged that on a specified date a minor (plaintiff's insured) was riding in an uninsured automobile driven by another on a county road; the road had been negligently designed, constructed, and maintained, and was in a dangerous condition; and, as a proximate result, the car went out of control, left the road, and injured the insured. The insured did not file a claim with the county. Almost 20 months after the accident, plaintiff reached a minor's compromise with the insured which was approved by the superior court. About a month later, plaintiff filed a claim in subrogation against the county which was rejected. About four and a half months later, plaintiff filed the present action. The county demurred to the complaint on the ground the claim was barred by the claims presentation requirements of Gov. Code § 911.2 and moved for summary judgment. The motion for summary judgment was granted, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. The court said under Gov. Code § 901 the statute of limitation that would be applicable to plaintiff's cause of action but for the claims requirements of the Government Code is set forth in Ins. Code § 11580.2(g), which provides the action may be brought within three years from the date payment was made by the insurer (33 Cal. App. 3d 418, 420-421) .

[b] When Subrogated Action to Recover Uninsured Motorist Benefits Paid Accrues

The facts and procedural background of Allstate Ins. Co. v. County of Alameda (1973) 33 Cal. App. 3d 418, 109 Cal. Rptr. 53 , are discussed in § 220.53[3][a]. In reversing the summary judgment for the county, the court said that under Ins. Code § 11580.2(g), plaintiff's cause of action accrued on the date it paid the minor's claim (33 Cal. App. 3d 418, 421) .

NOTE:

Allstate was discussed by way of analogy with approval by the California Supreme Court in People ex rel. Dep't of Transp. v. Superior Court of Los Angeles County (1980) 26 Cal. 3d 744, 754-755 . This Supreme Court case did not, however, involve the issue as to when an action in equitable subrogation under Ins. Code § 11580.2(g) accrues for the purposes of the claims statutes, but rather the issue as to when a tort defendant's equitable indemnity action against a governmental entity accrues for these purposes. The Court's opinion was subsequently modified by the 1981 amendment of Gov. Code § 901 to expressly provide that the date a cause of action for equitable indemnity or partial equitable indemnity accrues is the date on which defendant is served with the complaint giving rise to defendant's claim for equitable indemnity or partial equitable indemnity against the public entity (Stats. 1981, ch 856).

[c] Claim Filed Within Six Months After Insurer's Subrogated Action Accrued as Timely

The facts and procedural background of Allstate Ins. Co. v. County of Alameda (1973) 33 Cal. App. 3d 418, 109 Cal. Rptr. 53 , are discussed in § 220.31[3][a]. In reversing the summary judgment for the county, the court held the insurer's claim was timely filed because it was presented within 100 days after its subrogated cause of action accrued, which was the date the claim was paid, as required by Gov. Code § 911.2 (33 Cal. App. 3d 418, 421) .

NOTE:

The claim-presentation period has been extended to six months for actions based on acts or omissions occurring after January 1, 1988 [see Gov. Code § 911.2].

[d] Liability of Public Entity

The facts and procedural background of Allstate Ins. Co. v. County of Alameda (1973) 33 Cal. App. 3d 418, 109 Cal. Rptr. 53 , are discussed in § 220.31[4][a]. In reversing the summary judgment for the county, the court held the term "any person," as used in Ins. Code § 11580.2(g), authorizing the insurer to recover from any person legally liable for the injury or death to the extent that payment was made, includes a governmental entity (33 Cal. App. 3d 418, 421) .

§ 220.54 Opposing Obligor's Contention That Action Against Public Entity Is Barred for Failure to File Timely Claim--Subrogor Satisfied Claim-Filing Requirements, and Subrogee-Insurer Has Same Rights as Subrogor

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THIS ACTION IN SUBROGATION FOR INDEMNITY IS NOT BARRED BY SUBROGEE-INSURER'S FAILURE TO HAVE FILED A CLAIM WITH THE PUBLIC ENTITY _____ [specify, e.g., DEFENDANT], BECAUSE THE SUBROGOR-INSURED HAS ALREADY SATISFIED THE CLAIM REQUIREMENTS, AND THE SUBROGEE-INSURER HAS A RIGHT OF ACTION EQUAL TO THAT OF THE SUBROGOR.

A. Subrogee-Insurer Acquires Rights of Subrogee Against Public Entity. A subrogee-insurer's right of action is equal to and limited by the right of action possessed by its insured, and if the insured has already satisfied the claims requirements against a public entity for indemnity, a subrogee-insurer that pays the injured party on behalf of the insured has a cause of action against the public entity without first independently satisfying the claims requirements or filing a separate claim (Smith v. Parks Manor (1987) 197 Cal. App. 3d 872, 880-881, 243 Cal. Rptr. 256).

B. Claim-Presentment Requirements Liberally Construed. The Government Tort Claims Act should not be applied to snare the unwary when its purpose of apprising the governmental body of pending claims is satisfied; courts employ a test of substantial rather than strict compliance in evaluating whether the demands of the act have been met (Smith v. Parks Manor (1987) 197 Cal. App. 3d 872, 879, 243 Cal. Rptr. 256).

[Optional] C. Failure to Plead Compliance With Claims Statutes Can Be Cured by Amendment to Complaint. A subrogee that fails to plead timely compliance with the claims statutes may amend the complaint to plead the requisite facts (Smith v. Parks Manor (1987) 197 Cal. App. 3d 872, 881-882, 243 Cal. Rptr. 256).

[2] Comments

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a subrogated action against a public entity by an insurer that has paid a claim on behalf of the insured is barred because it did not separately satisfy the claims requirements, if the insured had already satisfied those requirements [see Smith v. Parks Manor (1987) 197 Cal. App. 3d 872, 880-881, 243 Cal. Rptr. 256] . For a form in opposition to a contention that a subrogated action is barred by untimely filing, based on uninsured motorist statutes, see § 220.53.

These points and authorities may be used alone or combined with a memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the points and authorities, for example, in opposition to a general demurrer to the complaint [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 430.10(e), 430.30(a); see also Smith v. Parks Manor (1987) 197 Cal. App. 3d 872, 243 Cal. Rptr. 256 (reversing sustaining of demurrer)]. If optional Paragraph C is used, it may be combined with a general contention that sustaining a demurrer without leave to amend when the defect can be cured by amendment constitutes an abuse of discretion.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should set forth the dates on which the action against the insured was filed, and on which the insured filed a claim against the public entity, and show that the intervening time was less than the controlling limitations period.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities in § 220.32.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Subrogee-Insurer Acquires Rights of Subrogor Against Public Entity

In Smith v. Parks Manor (1987) 197 Cal. App. 3d 872, 243 Cal. Rptr. 256 , a developmentally disabled person who was injured in an automobile accident brought an action for negligent supervision against the residential facility responsible for his care, and one of its employees. The employer's insurer provided the defense in the action, and caused the defendants to file cross complaints seeking comparative and equitable indemnity from a county hospital that treated the plaintiff for the injuries. The insured filed its cross complaint within the limitations period of Gov. Code § 911.2, although its employee filed his cross complaint after the period had lapsed. The cause of action, according to case law controlling at the time, accrued when the defendants suffered a loss through payment of a judgment or debt [now see Gov. Code § 901 (cause of action accrues when defendant is served with complaint giving rise to indemnity liability)]. The insurer ultimately paid the plaintiff the amount of the negotiated settlement. The defendants filed a claim against the cross defendant. The cross defendant denied the claim, and filed a motion for judgment on the pleadings on the cross complaint, contending that the cross complainants failed to state a cause of action for indemnity. The trial court granted the motion on the ground that the insurer had become subrogated to the rights of the cross complainants, and the employee had failed to comply with claims-filing procedures. The trial court granted the motion. Subsequently, the insurer sought and obtained leave to intervene. The cross defendant demurrered to the complaint in intervention, contending that the intervenor (insurer) had failed to comply with the claims-filing requirements of Gov. Code § 911.2, and that the action was therefore barred by the statute of limitations. The trial court sustained the demurrer without leave to amend. Intervenor appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that as subrogee, the insurer acquired the rights of the insured, and therefore was not required to file an independent claim against the public entity (197 Cal. App. 3d 872, 880-881) . The defendant insured complied with the limitations provisions under Gov. Code § 911.2 by filing the cross complaint prior to the accrual of the cause of action for equitable indemnity (that is, prior to the payment of the settlement), which excused and took the place of timely filing of a claim with the cross defendant county (197 Cal. App. 3d 872, 881) . The court reasoned that the primary function of the Government Tort Claims Act is to apprise the governmental body of imminent legal action, so that it may investigate and evaluate the claim and, when appropriate, avoid litigation by settling meritorious claims. The act should not be applied to snare the unwary when its purpose has been satisfied. Consequently, courts employ a test of substantial rather than strict compliance in evaluating whether the demands have been met (197 Cal. App. 3d 872, 879) . The court rejected cross defendant's contention that the insurer may not rely on the insured's timely satisfaction of the claims statutes, because it was required to file an independent and timely claim on its own behalf (197 Cal. App. 3d 872, 880) . Although a party with a separate and distinct injury must independently comply with the claims statutes, a subrogee's right of action is not independent and separate, but is equal to and limited by the right of action possessed by its insured. Requiring the filing of a separate claim would in that case be redundant and superfluous if the requirements of the claims statutes had already been satisfied by the subrogor. In the instant case, the insured's filing of a cross complaint prior to the accrual of the cause of action for equitable indemnity excused and took the place of timely filing of a claim with the cross defendant county. The substitution of intervenor as subrogee of the insured's cause of action did not change the nature of the claim and, hence, required no filing of an independent claim by intervenor (197 Cal. App. 3d 872, 881) . Further, although the intervenor failed to plead timely compliance with the claims statutes, it may nevertheless amend the complaint to plead the requisite facts. It is an abuse of discretion to sustain a demurrer without leave to amend when there is a reasonable possibility that the defect in the complaint can be cured by amendment (197 Cal. App. 3d 872, 881-882) .

§ 220.55 Opposing Obligor's Contention That Intervention in Action Against Public Entity Is Barred for Failure to File Claim--Claim by Subrogor Sufficient

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THIS ACTION IN INTERVENTION TO RECOVER WORKERS' COMPENSATION BENEFITS PAID BY INTERVENOR-SUBROGEE IS NOT BARRED BY INTERVENOR'S FAILURE TO HAVE FILED A CLAIM WITHIN SIX MONTHS AFTER PLAINTIFF-SUBROGOR'S CAUSE OF ACTION ACCRUED BECAUSE THE CLAIM FILED BY PLAINTIFF FULFILLED THE PURPOSE OF THE CLAIM FILING REQUIREMENT AND NO ADDITIONAL CLAIM BY INTERVENOR IS NECESSARY.

A. Claim Requirement. [See § 220.53, Paragraph A.]

B. Intervention by Workers' Compensation Insurer Subrogee Permissible When Subrogee Has Not Filed Claim. An insurance carrier who has paid workers' compensation benefits to an injured employee may intervene as subrogee in a personal injury action brought by that injured employee against a public entity without first complying with the claim filing requirements of the California Tort Claims Act (San Diego Unified Port Dist. v. Superior Court (1988) 197 Cal. App. 3d 843, 851-852, 243 Cal. Rptr. 163).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that intervention by an insurer in an action against a public entity is barred because the insurer did not present a claim against the public entity within six months after accrual of the cause of action. The ground of opposition is that the injured individual, to whom the insurer paid workers' compensation benefits, timely filed the requisite claim, and that such claim fulfilled the purpose of the claim filing requirement, which is to provide the public entity sufficient information to enable it to investigate claims adequately and to settle them, if appropriate, without the expense of litigation. Permitting intervention by the insurance carrier, in addition to fulfilling the purpose of the claim filing requirement, is also in keeping with the comprehensive and rational statutory scheme established by the legislature for reimbursing an employer or carrier for compensation benefits paid [see Lab. Code §§ 3850-3864].

These points and authorities may be used alone or combined with a memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue. For example, they may be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities in opposition to a general demurrer to the intervention complaint [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 430.10(e), 430.50]. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Intervention by Workers' Compensation Insurer Subrogee Permissible When Subrogee Has Not Filed Claim

In San Diego Unified Port Dist. v. Superior Court (1988) 197 Cal. App. 3d 843, 243 Cal. Rptr. 163 , while working in a cafeteria located in an airport owned by defendant public entity, plaintiff sustained serious injuries. Plaintiff was paid a substantial amount of workers' compensation benefits by her employer's insurance carrier, and filed a timely claim against defendant pursuant to the California Tort Claims Act. After defendant rejected the claim, plaintiff timely filed suit. Her employer's insurance carrier, without filing a separate claim against defendant, intervened in plaintiff's suit to recover compensation benefits. The carrier alleged plaintiff's compliance with the filing requirements excused it from those requirements. After its demurrer on the ground the carrier failed to allege compliance with the claims requirement was overruled by the trial court, defendant sought a writ of mandate.

The court of appeal denied the writ. Defendant contended that the written claim filing requirement is mandatory and that the filing of a claim by one party, with respect to a prospective cause of action, cannot relieve another party from having to file an independent action. The court distinguished the case from Pacific Tel. & Tel. Co. v. County of Riverside (1980) 106 Cal. App. 3d 183, 165 Cal. Rptr. 29 , in which the carrier had timely filed for reimbursement of workers' compensation benefits and the widow, seeking damages for wrongful death, sought to intervene without having filed a claim. In that case the filing of the carrier's claim did not meet the filing requirements for the widow's wrongful death action, and intervention was barred. The Pacific Telephone court reasoned that the carrier's claim did not indicate the extent of potential damages under the wrongful death action, and did not provide the entity with the information necessary to make an informed decision on settlement. Confronted with the complex litigation and high damages possible in a wrongful death suit, rather than liability to an employer under the Labor Code, the entity's posture on settlement may have been significantly different. The court dismissed defendant's reliance on language from Pacific Telephone to the effect that the right of subrogation in Lab. Code § 3853 is subject to the claims filing requirement of the Government Code, noting that to the extent Pacific Telephone addresses subrogation rights it is dictum. There the widow had no subrogation rights. It is the employer or carrier subrogee who enjoys the right of subrogation (197 Cal. App. 3d 843, 851) . After distinguishing Pacific Telephone, the court concluded that there was no reason to defeat the comprehensive and rational statutory scheme established by the legislature to reimburse an employer or carrier by requiring what would be in effect a duplicate written claim against the public entity. It said its decision not only furthered the purposes of the Labor Code's statutory scheme to reimburse carriers for compensation benefits paid, but was consistent with the nonfault nature of workers' compensation law. The court explained that the overall purpose of workers' compensation law is to provide compensation to injured employees regardless of fault. Therefore, on notification of a claim a carrier does not normally institute a full scale investigation into the circumstances of the worker's injury, but normally relies on the employee to pursue actions against third-party tortfeasors. The court opined that if the carrier is unable to rely on an employee's claim filed against a governmental entity, the carrier would be required to expeditiously investigate any accident to determine whether a public entity was involved. This would not only create a difficult administrative burden, but would result in increased costs for the carrier that must ultimately be borne by the employer. The court concluded that since the purposes of the claims statute are served by the filing of the employee's claim, there is no reason to impose this added burden on the workers' compensation system (197 Cal. App. 3d 843, 852) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Intervention by Workers' Compensation Insurer Subrogee Permissible When Subrogee Has Not Filed Claim

In Pacific Tel. & Tel. Co. v. County of Riverside (1980) 106 Cal. App. 3d 183, 165 Cal. Rptr. 29 , after two of its employees were killed in a vehicle accident, plaintiff telephone company timely filed a claim against defendant county to recover workers' compensation benefits paid on account of those deaths. When defendant rejected the claim, plaintiff timely filed an action against defendant. Some time later the widow of one of the deceased employees filed a complaint in intervention for wrongful death in plaintiff's action. She alleged plaintiff's compliance with the claims filing requirement. The trial court sustained defendant's demurrer on the ground that widow had failed to allege compliance with the claims filing requirement, and dismissed her complaint. Widow appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. Widow maintained that pursuant to Lab. Code § 3850, she and plaintiff employer were members of a class whose common interest was established by plaintiff's claim seeking damages occasioned by the death of two employees requiring workers' compensation and death benefits to be paid. The court did not reach that question, but explained that even assuming that plaintiff filed a claim as a representative of a class, it did not follow that the claim for damages filed by plaintiff satisfied the claims statute with respect to another member of the class who suffered different damages as a result of the same tortious event. The court explained that a class claim must pass two tests to comply with the claims statute. First, there must be some compliance with all the required elements. Second, the claim must also satisfy the substantial compliance test. Widow argued that the claim filed by plaintiff constituted substantial compliance regarding the claim for wrongful death because the policy behind the claim requirement had been substantially satisfied. The court disagreed, explaining that plaintiff's claim merely averred the circumstances of the accident and sought reimbursement of workers' compensation benefits paid. That claim did not notify defendant that widow claimed damages for the wrongful death of her husband or of the extent of the damages she claimed (106 Cal. App. 3d 183, 190-191) . The court said the purpose of the claims statutes is to provide the public entity sufficient information to enable it to investigate claims adequately and to settle them, if appropriate, without the expense of litigation. The statutes must be satisfied even in the face of the public entity's actual knowledge of the circumstances surrounding the claim. Such knowledge--standing alone--constitutes neither substantial compliance nor a basis for estoppel (106 Cal. App. 3d 183, 191) . The court cited with approval the reasoning in Roberts v. State of California (1974) 39 Cal. App. 3d 844 , 114 Cal. Rpr. 518, a factually identical case. That court said that notice to a public entity that a workers' compensation carrier and an employer may sue alerts it to possible liability under the Labor Code, but does not alert the public entity to a possible wrongful death action by a wife. The court went on to say that exposure to liability under the Labor Code is different in kind and nature from exposure to a wrongful death action, with all the attendant possibilities of complex litigation and extremely high damages if liability is established. It said that widow's contention overlooked one of the purposes of the claims statute, which is to provide the entity with the opportunity for orderly fiscal planning by advance knowledge of potential claims and to rectify promptly a condition that resulted in injury in order to prevent further losses. The court concluded that even if plaintiff's action could be regarded as a class action, the claim filed by plaintiff did not relieve widow of the necessity of filing a claim for damages for wrongful death (106 Cal. App. 3d 183, 191-192) . The court also responded to a contention by widow that Lab. Code §§ 3850 and 3853 constitute a special statutory subrogation authority that gives an employee the right to join an action against a public entity third party even after the period for filing a claim has passed. It said that in the absence of any showing to the contrary, it must be presumed that the legislature intended the right of subrogation in Lab. Code § 3853 to be read in the context of and subject to the claims filing requirement of the Government Code (106 Cal. App. 3d 183, 194) .

Code § 3852 Against Third-Party Tortfeasor Is for Indemnity and Not Subrogation to Extent It Seeks to Recover Amount Paid to Department of Industrial Relations Under Lab. Code § 4706.5(a) for Death of Employee Without Dependents

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief].

PLAINTIFF IS EXPRESSLY AUTHORIZED BY STATUTE TO RECOVER FROM THE THIRD-PARTY TORTFEASOR THE AMOUNT [REQUIRED TO BE] PAID TO THE DEPARTMENT OF INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS ON ACCOUNT OF THE DEATH OF ITS [INSURED'S] EMPLOYEE WITHOUT DEPENDENTS, AND TO THAT EXTENT THE STATUTE PROVIDES FOR INDEMNITY RATHER THAN EQUITABLE SUBROGATION.

A. Payment of Death Benefit to Department of Industrial Relations. Whenever any fatal injury is suffered by an employee under such circumstances as to entitle the employee to compensation benefits, but for his or her death, and the employee does not leave surviving any person entitled to a dependency death benefit, the employer shall pay a sum to the Department of Industrial Relations equal to the total dependency death benefit that would be payable to a surviving spouse with no dependent children (Lab. Code § 4706.5(a)).

B. Right of Employer to Recover Death Benefit Paid to Department of Industrial Relations. Any employer who pays or becomes obligated to pay an amount to the Department of Industrial Relations pursuant to Section 4706.5 of the Labor Code may make a claim or bring an action against the third-party tortfeasor and may recover in the same suit, in addition to the total amount of compensation, damages for which he or she was liable (*Lab. C. Lab. Code § 3852 as Authorizing Action for Indemnity. To the extent that Section 3852 of the Labor Code authorizes recovery by an employer (or the employer's insurer) from a third-party tortfeasor of the amount paid to the Department of Industrial Relations pursuant to Section 4706.5(a) of the Labor Code on the death of an employee without dependents, it provides an action for indemnity, rather than an action in equitable subrogation (Travelers Ins.

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a subrogee may not recover any amount in excess of that which could have been recovered in an action by the subrogor. The ground of opposition is that recovery of the excess amount is a form of indemnity and is expressly authorized by statute.

These points and authorities may be used alone or combined with points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the issue. For example, they may be combined with points and authorities (1) in opposition to a demurrer to the complaint [see Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)], (2) in opposition to a motion for an order striking as irrelevant the allegations of a complaint seeking an amount in excess of the amount that would be recoverable by a subrogor [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 435-437], or (3) in opposition to a motion for summary judgment [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c]. They may also be combined with points and authorities in opposition to a motion after trial to vacate the judgment to the extent it awards plaintiff an amount in excess of that which could have been recovered by the subrogor and to enter judgment in a different amount [see Code Civ. Proc. § 663]. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities in § 220.36.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Lab. Code § 3852 as Authorizing Action for Indemnity

Travelers Ins. Co. v. Sierra Pac. Airlines (1983) 149 Cal. App. 3d 1144, 197 Cal. Rptr. 416 , was an action by a workers' compensation insurer against an airline under Lab. Code § 3852 to recover a payment required to be made to the state Department of Industrial Relations under Lab. Code § 4706.5 on account of the death of an employee without dependents who was killed in the crash of one of defendant's aircraft. Judgment was for plaintiff, and defendant appealed, contending plaintiff had no right to recover under Lab. Code § 3852 because that statute is simply a recognition of the doctrine of equitable subrogation and is not an indemnity statute. Defendant argued that since the statute deals with equitable subrogation, plaintiff cannot stand in the shoes of a subrogee because its payments were not made to an "injured person," but rather to the Department of Industrial Relations.

The court of appeal affirmed. Relying in part on Associated Indem. Corp. v. Pacific Sw. Airlines (1982) 128 Cal. App. 3d 898, 180 Cal. Rptr. 685 , and in part on its own analysis, the court held the recovery under Lab. Code § 3852 of payments made to the Department of Industrial Relations under Lab. Code § 4706.5 was an action for indemnity and not in subrogation (149 Cal. App. 3d 1144, 1152, 1154) . The court further held that Lab. Code § 4706.5 does not open the door to double liability and it does not violate constitutional equal protection or due process requirements (149 Cal. App. 3d 1144, 1158-1160) .

Associated Indem. Corp. v. Pacific Sw. Airlines (1982) 128 Cal. App. 3d 898, 907, 180 Cal. Rptr. 685 , was an action by a workers' compensation carrier for reimbursement under Lab. Code § 3852 of the sums it was required to pay to the state Department of Industrial Relations under the provisions of Lab. Code § 4706.5(a), in lieu of benefits to dependents, resulting from the death of certain passengers, acting within the scope of their employment, killed in the crash of one of defendant's aircraft. Following the trial court's judgment granting defendant's motion for partial summary judgment, Lab. Code § 3852 was amended to mandate that reimbursement by adding "or who pays or becomes obligated to pay an amount to the Department of Industrial Relations pursuant to Section 4706.5" of the Labor Code in the second sentence of the statute. The legislature expressly declared, however, that the amendment did not change existing law [Stats. 1981, ch 21, § 12].

The court of appeal reversed the partial summary judgment. The court said the legislature, by amending Lab. Code § 3852, permitted an employer or the employer's insurer who pays an amount to the state when an employee entitled to workers' compensation dies without dependents, to make a claim or bring an action against the third-party tortfeasor, and that this is the same conclusion the court reached in analyzing the provisions of the prior law (128 Cal. App. 3d 898, 908) . Defendant claimed, among other things, that Lab. Code § 3852 (prior to its amendment) was merely a legislative recognition of the doctrine of equitable subrogation. (That is, the insurer merely stepped into the shoes of the injured or deceased employee and could recover from the tortfeasor only what could have been recovered by the employee.) The court rejected the contention and held that while Lab. Code § 3852 does serve as a subrogation statute under certain applicable circumstances, it is actually much more, notwithstanding its location in the code under a "subrogation" title, and that, as involved in the case, it was more akin to the equitable doctrine of indemnity (128 Cal. App. 3d 898, 905-906) . The court explained that indemnity rests on a difference between the primary and secondary liability of two parties and inures to a person who, without active fault, has been compelled by some legal obligation to pay money due to the initial negligence of another, which, in equity and good conscience, should be borne by the other (128 Cal. App. 3d 898, 906) . The court said tortfeasors should bear responsibility for all the consequences of their wrongs, including statutorily mandated payments under Lab. Code § 4706.5, and held that Lab. Code § 3852, to the extent it authorizes the employer or the employer's insurer to recover from the defendant the "damages" the plaintiff is required to pay in the award pursuant to Lab. Code § 4706.5(a), provides an action for indemnity (128 Cal. App. 3d 898, 906, 907) .

NOTE:

The court in Travelers Ins. Co. v. Sierra Pac. Airlines (1983) 149 Cal. App. 3d 1144, 197 Cal. Rptr. 416 , stated that the analysis in Associated Indemnity Corp. was undermined by that court's reliance on State Comp. Ins. Fund v. Williams (1974) 38 Cal. App. 3d 218, 112 Cal. Rptr. 226 , which had been explicitly and implicitly disapproved in Breese v. Price (1981) 29 Cal. 3d, 923, 931, 176 Cal. Rptr. 791, 633 P.2d 987 , and in County of San Diego v. Sanfax Corp. (1977) 19 Cal. 3d 862, 876 n.7, 140 Cal. Rptr. 638, 568 P.2d 363 .

§ 220.57 Opposing Contention That Insured May Compromise Claim Against Third-Party Tortfeasor in Action in Which Surety Is Joined--Insured May Not Derogate Rights of Surety Against Third-Party Tortfeasors

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

_____ [specify, e.g., PLAINTIFF], THE INSURED UNDER A SURETYSHIP, MAY NOT COMPROMISE ITS CLAIM AGAINST _____ [specify, e.g., DEFENDANT], AS THIRD-PARTY TORTFEASOR WITH RESPECT TO THE SURETYSHIP, BECAUSE THE SURETY HAS NOT CONSENTED TO THE COMPROMISE, AND THE RIGHTS OF THE SURETY WITH RESPECT TO THE THIRD-PARTY TORTFEASOR HAVE NOT YET BEEN DETERMINED.

A. Rights of Insurer Should Be Determined in Action Against Tortfeasors. After the insurer has intervened in an action against a wrongdoer, and has shown a monetary interest in the result of the action, the court will not permit a settlement between the insured and the wrongdoer to the detriment of the insurer, but will protect the rights of all parties (Conservatorship of Edwards (1988) 198 Cal. App. 3d 1176, 1185, 244 Cal. Rptr. 330).

B. Insured May Not Compromise Claim Against Third-Party Tortfeasor in Action Including Surety, to Detriment of Rights of Surety Against Third-Party Tortfeasor. In an action in which the parties include a surety, the insured, and a third-party tortfeasor, the insured may not compromise its claim against the third party without either the consent of the surety, or a prior determination of the rights of the surety against the third party must be determined prior to any settlement between the insured and the third party (Conservatorship of Edwards (1988) 198 Cal. App. 3d 1176, 1183-1185, 244 Cal. Rptr. 330).

[Optional] C. Payment on Surety Bond Creates Assignment by Operation of Law. In equity, the payment on a surety bond creates an assignment of a portion of the claim against the third party by operation of law, and no formal assignment or transfer is necessary (Conservatorship of Edwards (1988) 198 Cal. App. 3d 1176, 1181, 244 Cal. Rptr. 330).

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that an insured may compromise a claim against a tortfeasor, in an action in which the surety is joined [see Conservatorship of Edwards (1988) 198 Cal. App. 3d 1176, 1183-1185, 244 Cal. Rptr. 330] .

These points and authorities may be used alone or combined with a memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the points and authorities. For example, they may be used in opposition to a probate petition requesting approval of compromise of a third-party claim against the estate [see Conservatorship of Edwards (1988) 198 Cal. App. 3d 1176, 244 Cal. Rptr. 330] .

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should set forth the terms of the suretyship agreement, and show right to subrogation against the third party.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Rights of Insurer Should Be Determined in Action Against Tortfeasors

In Conservatorship of Edwards (1988) 198 Cal. App. 3d 1176, 244 Cal. Rptr. 330 , the initial conservator of an estate posted a surety bond at the time of his appointment. In the course of his administration of the estate, he deposited estate funds into two banks, in blocked accounts that should have prevented the funds from being released without court order. However, both banks allowed the conservator to withdraw funds from the accounts without court order, and he misappropriated a large portion of the withdrawn funds. The probate court suspended the conservator's powers, and appointed a successor, who filed objections to the first conservator's accounts in the instant action. The successor also filed actions on behalf of the estate against both banks. In the instant action, she filed a motion to enforce the surety bond. Initially, the surety objected on the ground that the actions against the banks were pending, and that the surety's rights to subrogation should first be determined in those actions. Ultimately, the surety paid the amount of the bond, pursuant to a stipulation providing that the surety "enjoy all rights to subrogation or other indemnity, provided by law." The conservator filed petitions for orders authorizing her to compromise the estate's claims against the two banks. The surety objected, claiming a right to subrogation, and a right to a lien against the settlement. The amount of the surety-bond proceeds added to the settlement amounts did not total the amount lost by the estate. The trial court granted the conservator's petitions and approved the settlements, over the objections of the surety, and disallowed the surety's lien. The surety appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that the insured may not compromise third-party claims in an action that involves a surety, without prior determination of the surety's rights against the third party (198 Cal. App. 3d 1176, 1183-1185) . In order to clarify the issue, the court asked the following question: what are the rights of the surety when an insured, without the consent of the surety that is also a party to the insured's actions against the tortfeasors, has settled with third-party tortfeasors for an amount that, when added to the sum paid by the surety, will not compensate the insured for its entire loss? The court first corrected the surety's misconception that due to the insured's release to the banks, the surety had no standing to recover from them. Ordinarily, an insurer stands in the shoes of its insured, and if an action of the insured is barred, the action of the insurer is also barred. However, when the tortfeasor obtains a release from the insured with knowledge that the insured has already been indemnified by the insurer, the release of the tortfeasor does not bar the right of subrogation of the insurer. The court discussed California cases brought under the Workers' Compensation Act (Lab. Code §§ 3850-3864) that recognized the right of a surety to claim reimbursement from either its insured or a third-party tortfeasor that has settled in bad faith. On the other hand, when a tortfeasor settles with an insured in good faith without knowledge that the insured has received benefits from the insurer, the insurer's right to recovery from the tortfeasor is barred, but the insurer may be able to recover from its insured (198 Cal. App. 3d 1176, 1184) . With respect to the surety's right to a determination vis-a-vis the third-party tortfeasors, the California Supreme Court has stated that the liability of the tortfeasor and the totality of recovery for the tortfeasance, including any subrogation rights, should be determined in one action [see Board of Administration v. Glover (1983), ; see also § 220.36[3][a]]. Courts in other jurisdictions have also held that the rights of the surety should be determined in the actions against the tortfeasors. After the insurer has intervened in an action by the insured against the wrongdoer, and has shown a monetary interest in the result of the action, the court will not permit a settlement between the insured and the wrongdoer to the detriment of the insurer, but will protect the rights of all parties (198 Cal. App. 3d 1176, 1185) . Consequently, the court reversed the orders approving the settlement on the ground that a prior determination of the rights of the surety is required. Inasmuch as the motion for approval of the settlement by the probate court was premature, the surety's motion for a lien on the settlement proceeds was also premature. A party having only a prospective right of subrogation is not entitled to a lien on settlement proceeds (198 Cal. App. 3d 1176, 1185) .

PART I. INTRODUCTION

§ 221.01 Scope of Chapter

This chapter contains points and authorities that may be submitted in civil actions to support or oppose motions for summary judgment or for summary adjudication of a cause of action, affirmative defense, claim for punitive damages, or the issue whether one or more defendants owed a duty to one or more plaintiffs.

It includes general forms for use in supporting [see § 221.20] and opposing [see § 221.29] motions for summary judgment and for supporting [see § 221.21] and opposing [see § 221.30] motions for summary adjudication on the ground of whether or not there is any triable issue as to any material fact, and opposing summary adjudication on the ground that summary adjudication would not completely dispose of the cause of action, affirmative defense, claim for damages, or issue of duty [see § 221.31].

It also includes general forms of evidentiary objection for use by the moving party [see § 221.22] and the opposing party [see § 221.34], forms of objection to the adequacy of a statement of disputed or undisputed material facts for use by the moving party [see § 221.23] or the opposing party [see § 221.44], a form for use by the moving party to oppose a contention that a continuance is needed to obtain facts essential to justify opposition to the motion [see § 221.24], a form for use by the moving party to oppose a request for an untimely motion for continuance [see § 221.25], a form for use by the moving party to oppose a contention that the motion is untimely because it cannot be heard within 30 days before the original trial date [see § 221.27], a form for use by the supporting party to oppose the objection that a motion for summary adjudication will not completely dispose of a cause of action [see § 221.28], a form for use by the opposing party in requesting sanctions [see § 221.32], a form for use by the opposing party objecting to the motion as untimely, a form for use by the moving or opposing party in requesting that judicial notice be taken [see § 221.46], and a form for use by the moving party or the opposing party in an appellate brief setting forth the standard for appellate review of a grant of summary judgment [see § 221.47].

Finally, the chapter includes specific forms for use in combination with the general forms in opposing motions for summary judgment or summary adjudication based on inferences reasonably deducible from the evidence that raise triable issues as to any material fact [see §§ 221.35, 221.36], based on evidence and inferences reasonably deducible from the evidence in an action carrying a higher standard of proof [see § 221.45], based on specific objections to matters contained in the moving party's affidavits or declarations [see §§ 221.37 -221.42], and based on the ground that facts essential to justify opposition may exist but cannot be presented at the time of the motion [see § 221.43].

CHAPTER 221 SUMMARY JUDGMENTS
PART I. INTRODUCTION

22-221 California Points & Authorities § 221.02

§ 221.02 Governing Law

Motions for summary judgment or summary adjudication are governed by Code Civ. Proc. § 437c and Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1350. Objections to evidence in the papers in a summary judgment proceeding are governed by Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 3.132 and 3.1354. Local court rules should always be consulted, as these commonly affect summary judgment proceedings [see, e.g., Los Angeles Co. Super. Ct. Rules, Rule 9.21].

Summary judgment proceedings in particular cases are also governed by Civ. Code § 1781(c) (separate proceeding similar to summary judgment in consumer class actions); Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1029.6(e), (f) (defendant in medical malpractice action may move to require plaintiff to file undertaking or for summary judgment, but not both), 1038 (recovery of defense costs in certain situations), 1170.7 (expedited summary judgment procedures in unlawful detainer or forcible entry action).

PART I. INTRODUCTION

§ 221.03 Use of This Chapter

With appropriate modifications, the moving party may combine his or her memorandum of points and authorities in support of a motion for summary judgment [see § 221.20] or summary adjudication [see § 221.21] with individual points and authorities relating to inferences reasonably deducible from evidence [see § 221.35], and to a request that the court take judicial notice of certain matters [see § 221.46].

The forms of memoranda of points and authorities in this chapter for use in opposing motions for summary judgment [see § 221.29] or summary adjudication [see § 221.30] on the ground that a triable issue of material fact exists may be combined with the individual points and authorities relating to a request for sanctions [see § 221.32], objections to the evidence contained in the moving party's papers [see § 221.34], inferences that raise triable issues [see §§ 221.35, 221.36], objections to specific matters contained in the moving party's affidavits or declarations [see §§ 221.37 -221.42], the unavailability of essential opposition facts [see § 221.43], an objection to the adequacy of the moving party's statement of material facts contended to be undisputed [see § 221.44], the applicability of a higher standard of proof in an action carrying a higher burden [see § 221.45], and a request that the court take judicial notice of certain matters [see § 221.46].

The trial court has discretion to permit the filing of supplemental affidavits or declarations, for example, by the moving party in response to the opposing party's counteraffidavits or counterdeclarations [see Johnson v. Banducci (1963) 212 Cal. App. 2d 254, 259-260, 27 Cal. Rptr. 764] . Thus, the moving party may file a reply memorandum objecting to evidence contained in the opposing party's papers [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b)(4)]; [see § 221.22]. This reply memorandum may becombined with individual points and authorities relating to the adequacy of the opposing party's statement in response to the material facts contended to be undisputed by the moving party [see § 221.23], and with the appropriately modified individual points and authorities relating to objections that the opposing affidavits or declarations are not made on personal knowledge [see § 221.37], contain inadmissible evidence [see § 221.38], do not affirmatively show that the affiant is competent to testify [see § 221.39], or contain ultimate facts or conclusions [see § 221.40], and relating to a request for sanctions [see § 221.32].

The chapter also contains a form for use by either party in an appellate brief to set forth the standard for appellate review [see § 221.47].

Each form in this chapter may also be combined with memoranda of points and authorities that relate to the particular causes of action and grounds involved. See the specific chapters in this set for particular substantive areas, such as contracts, fraud, indemnity and contribution, and libel and slander.

A memorandum supporting or opposing a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication may not exceed 20 pages in length. A reply or closing memorandum may not exceed 10 pages in length [*see Cal. § 221.05 Summary Judgment in Personal Injury or Property Damage Actions Involving Multiple Defendants

In actions that arise out of an injury to the person or to property, when a motion for summary judgment was granted on the basis that the defendant was without fault, no other defendant during trial, over plaintiff's objection, may attempt to attribute fault to or comment on the absence or involvement of the defendant who was granted the motion [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(l)].

CHAPTER 221 SUMMARY JUDGMENTS
PART I. INTRODUCTION

22-221 California Points & Authorities § 221.06

§ 221.06 Effect of Summary Adjudication as Distinguished From Final Judgment

Summary adjudication under Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(f) disposes of less than the entire action. Specifically, if any party contends that one or more causes of action within an action has no merit or that there is no defense thereto, or that there is no merit to an affirmative defense as to any cause of action, or both, or that there is no merit to a claim for damages under Civ. Code § 3294, or that one or more defendants either owed or did not owe a duty to the plaintiff or plaintiffs, then he or she may move for summary adjudication as to that cause or causes of action, that affirmative defense, that claim for damages, or that issue of duty [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(f)(1); for further discussion, see § 221.21[2]].

If a motion for summary adjudication is granted, at the trial of the action, the cause or causes of action within the action, affirmative defense or defenses, claim for damages, or issue or issues of duty as to the motion which has been granted, are deemed to be established and the action will proceed as to the cause or causes of action, affirmative defense or defenses, claim for damages, or issue or issues of duty remaining [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(n)(1)]. At trial, the fact the motion was granted will not bar any cause of action, defense, claim for damages, or issue of duty as to which summary adjudication was not sought or was denied [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(n)(2)]. In addition, at trial, neither a party, nor a witness, nor the court is allowed to comment to a jury on the grant or denial of a motion for summary adjudication [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(n)(3)].

Except when a separate judgment may properly be awarded in the action, no final judgment may be entered on a motion for summary adjudication prior to termination of the action, but the final judgment must, in addition to any matters determined in the action, award judgment as established by the summary adjudication proceeding [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(k)]. Thus, a summary adjudication essentially has the same evidentiary effect as a summary judgment; it is binding on the trial court prior to judgment, unless it is vacated by an appellate court on pretrial review or by the trial court on reconsideration of its ruling [see Abadjian v. Superior Court (1985) 168 Cal. App. 3d 363, 370, 214 Cal. Rptr. 234 (decided under former Code Civ. Proc. § 437c; trial court erred in ignoring summary adjudication of issue when ruling on subsequent, separate pretrial motion)].

An order granting summary adjudication is not an appealable order. The method for obtaining appellate review of such an order is through a writ of mandate [see Jacobs-Zorne v. Superior Court (1996) 46 Cal. App. 4th1064, 54 Cal. Rptr. 2d 385] . In most cases, an interim order must await review on appeal from the final judgment. However, in cases of significant legal impact, appellate courts may consider a petition for an extraordinary writ. The adequacy of an appellate remedy depends on the circumstances of the case, vesting a large measure of discretion in the appellate court to grant or deny a writ [see City of Oakland v. Superior Court (1996) 45 Cal. App. 4th 740, 750, 53 Cal. Rptr. 2d 120] .

When a summary adjudication would dispose of a cause of action that is independent of and severable from the remaining causes of action, it may be possible to obtain a separate, final, and appealable summary judgment with regard to that cause of action, sometimes called a partial summary judgment [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(k); James Talcott, Inc. v. Short (1979) 100 Cal. App. 3d 504, 506 n.1, 161 Cal. Rptr. 63 ; see also De Grandchamp v. Texaco, Inc. (1979) 100 Cal. App. 3d 424, 431-436, 160 Cal. Rptr. 899] . However, at least one court has held that the entry of a separate judgment is void when a second cause of action is still pending between the parties and the causes of action have never been severed into separate lawsuits [Trani v. R.G. Hohman Enterprises, Inc. (1975) 52 Cal. App. 3d 314, 315-316, 125 Cal. Rptr. 34] . Therefore, if the moving party desires a separate, final judgment in such a case, he or she should first sever the causes of action under Code Civ. Proc. § 1048(b) [see Ch. 45, Consolidation, Severance, and Coordination of Actions], and then seek summary judgment rather than for summary adjudication.

_____ [DEFENDANT or PLAINTIFF] MAY MOVE FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT WHEN HE/SHE CONTENDS THAT _____ [for motion by defendant THE ACTION HAS NO MERIT or for motion by plaintiff THERE IS NO DEFENSE TO THE ACTION]. SUMMARY JUDGMENT MUST BE GRANTED WHEN THE PAPERS SUBMITTED SHOW THAT THERE IS NO TRIABLE ISSUE AS TO ANY MATERIAL FACT AND THAT _____ [DEFENDANT or PLAINTIFF] IS ENTITLED TO JUDGMENT AS A MATTER OF LAW.

[EITHER]

A. Summary Judgment for Defendant. A defendant may move for summary judgment in any action or proceeding if it is contended that the action has no merit (Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(a)). A cause of action has no merit if (1) one or more of the elements of the cause of action cannot be separately established, even if that element is separately pleaded, or (2) a defendant establishes an affirmative defense to the cause of action (Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(o)). The motion shall be granted if all of the papers submitted show that there is no triable issue as to any material fact and that defendantis entitled to a judgment as a matter of law (Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(c)).

[OR]

A. Summary Judgment for Plaintiff. A plaintiff may move for summary judgment in any action or proceeding if it is contended that there is no defense to the action. Such motion must be granted if all of the papers submitted show that there is no triable issue as to any material fact and that plaintiff is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law (Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(a), (c)).

[EITHER]

B. Burden of Production. A _____ [plaintiff or cross complainant] has met his or her burden of showing that there is no defense to a cause of action if he or she has proved each element of the cause of action entitling him or her to judgment on that cause of action. Once the _____ [plaintiff or cross complainant] has met that burden, the burden shifts to the _____ [defendant or cross defendant] to show that a triable issue of one or more material facts exists as to that cause of action or a defense thereto (Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(p)(1); see Aguilar v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (2001) 25 Cal. 4th 826, 850, 107 Cal. Rptr. 2d 841, 24 P.3d 493).

[OR]

B. Burden of Production. A _____ [defendant or cross defendant] has met his or her burden of showing that a cause of action has no merit if he or she has shown that one or more elements of the cause of action, even if not separately pleaded, cannot be established, or that there is a complete defense to that cause of action. Once the _____ [defendant or cross defendant] has met that burden, the burden shifts to the _____ [plaintiff or cross complainant] to show that a triable issue of one or more material facts exists as to that cause of action or a defense thereto (Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(p)(2); see Aguilar v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (2001) 25 Cal. 4th 826, 850, 107 Cal. Rptr. 2d 841, 24 P.3d 493).

[Optional] C. Negation of Element of Plaintiff's Cause of Action Not Required. A moving defendant is not required to conclusively negate an element of the plaintiff's cause of action. All that is required is that the defendant show that one or more elements of the cause of action cannot be established by the plaintiff (Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(p)(2); Aguilar v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (2001) 25 Cal. 4th 826, 853, 107 Cal. Rptr. 2d 841, 24 P.3d 493). The defendant may do this by showing that the plaintiff does not possess and cannot reasonably obtain, needed evidence (Aguilar v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (2001) 25 Cal. 4th 826, 854, 107 Cal. Rptr. 2d 841, 24 P.3d 493 ; see Saelzler v. Advanced Group 400 (2001) 25 Cal. 4th 763, 780-781, 107 Cal. Rptr. 2d 617).

[Optional] D. Reliance on Absence of Evidence to Support Nonmoving Party's Case. A moving defendant may rely on factually devoid discovery responses to shift the burden of production pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(p)(2). Once the burden has shifted as a result of factually devoid discovery responses, the plaintiff must set forth the specific facts that prove the existence of a triable issue of a material fact (Union Bank v. Superior Court (1995) 31 Cal. App.

4th 573, 590, 37 Cal. Rptr. 2d 653 ; Hunter v. Pacific Mechanical Corp. (1995) 37 Cal. App. 4th 1282, 1287, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 335 (disapproved in Aguilar v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (2001) 25 Cal. 4th 826, 850, 855 n.23, 107 Cal. Rptr. 2d 841, 24 P.3d 493 to the extent language in it would purportedly allow a defendant moving for summary judgment simply to point out through argument an absence of evidence to support an element of the plaintiff's cause of action)).

[Discovery responses are factually devoid when the plaintiff is asked a specific question about the matter at issue and, although the matter would be in plaintiff's personal knowledge, responds that he or she does not recall (see Chaknova v. Wilbur-Ellis Co. (1999) 69 Cal. App. 4th 962, 975-976 n.12, 81 Cal. Rptr. 2d 871)].

[Optional] E. Evidence and Inferences Considered by Court. In determining whether the supporting papers show that there is no triable issue as to any material fact, the court must consider all of the evidence set forth in the papers, except that to which objections have been made and sustained by the court, and all inferences reasonably deducible from such evidence, if not contradicted by other inferences or evidence which raise a triable issue as to any material fact (Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(c); Hirsch v. Blish (1977) 76 Cal. App. 3d 163, 166, 142 Cal. Rptr. 646 (use of inference)).

[Optional] F. Effect of Admission Against Interest Obtained During Discovery. An admission against interest by the party opposing a motion for summary judgment is extended a very high credibility value in determining whether or not triable issues of fact exist; when such an admission demonstrates that there is no factual issue to be tried, certain requirements of summary judgment procedure, such as the liberal construction of the opposing party's counteraffidavits, are relaxed or altered in their operation (D'Amico v. Board of Medical Examiners (1974) 11 Cal. 3d 1, 21-22, 112 Cal. Rptr. 786, 520 P.2d 10). The court may give great weight to admissions made in depositions and disregard contradictory and self-serving affidavits of that party (Benavidez v. San Jose Police Dept. (1999) 71 Cal. App. 4th 853, 860-861, 84 Cal. Rptr. 2d 157 ; see Wilkins v. National Broadcasting Co. (1999) 71 Cal. App. 4th 1066, 1082, 84 Cal. Rptr. 2d 329 (deposition admissions valued so highly that controverting affidavits may be disregarded as irrelevant, inadmissible or evasive)).

[Optional] G. Effect of Judicial Admission. A defendant who moves for summary judgment may rely on allegations contained in the plaintiff's complaint, which constitute judicial admissions. As such they are conclusive concessions of the truth of a matter and have the effect of removing it from the issues. Contradictory evidence is limited to that which collaterally attacks the prior judicial admission on the basis of mistake, inadvertence, or lack of authority (Barr v. ACandS, Inc. (1997) 57 Cal. App. 4th 1038, 1055-1056, 67 Cal. Rptr. 2d 494).

[Optional] H. Presumption Eliminates Triable Issue When No Contradictory Evidence Offered. A presumption which affects the burden of producing evidence and operates in favor of the moving party may eliminate the existence of a triable issue of fact and thus justify summary judgment when no contradictory evidence is offered by the opposing party; such a presumption requires the trier of fact to assume the existence of a presumed fact unless, and until, evidence is introduced by the opposing party which would support a finding of its nonexistence (see Evid. Code § 604; Security Pac. Nat. Bank v. Associated Motor Sales (1980) 106 Cal. App. 3d 171, 178-180, 165 Cal. Rptr. 38).

[Optional] I. Only Material Issue Presented Is Question of Law. When the only material issue presented is a question of law, it is appropriate for the trial court to resolve the legal issue and grant summary judgment (Morales v. Fansler (1989) 209 Cal. App. 3d 1581, 1584, 258 Cal. Rptr. 96).

[Optional] J. No Merit If Essential Element of Case Lacking. A cause of action has no merit if one or more of the elements of the cause of action cannot be separately established, even if that element is separately pleaded (Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(o)(1)). Summary judgment may not be defeated because there are disputed factual issues which are unnecessary to the determination of a case; when the defendant's showing negates an essential element of the plaintiff's case, then no amount of factual conflict on other aspects of the case will preclude summary judgment (Yurick v. Superior Court (1989) 209 Cal. App. 3d 1116, 1120, 257 Cal. Rptr. 665).

[Optional] K. No Merit If Complete Defense. A cause of action has no merit if a defendant establishes an affirmative defense to that cause of action (Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(p)(2); City of Emeryville v. Superior Court (1991) 2 Cal. App. 4th 21, 24-25, 2 Cal. Rptr. 2d 826).

[Optional] L. Responsive Evidence Giving Rise to Mere Speculation Is Insufficient to Establish Triable Issue of Material Fact. When parties have had sufficient opportunity adequately to develop their factual cases through discovery and the defendant has made a sufficient showing to establish a prima facie case in the defendant's favor, to avert summary judgment the plaintiff must produce substantial responsive evidence sufficient to establish a triable issue of material fact on the merits of defendant's showing. For this purpose, responsive evidence that gives rise to no more than mere speculation cannot be regarded as substantial, and is insufficient to establish a triable issue of material fact (Sangster v. Paetkau (1998) 68 Cal. App. 4th 151, 162-163, 80 Cal. Rptr. 2d 66).

[Optional] M. Determining Triable Issue of Fact Does Not Turn on Trial Court's Discretion. Whether there is a triable issue of material fact does not turn on the trial court's discretion. A motion for summary judgment shall be granted if all the papers submitted show that there is no triable issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law (Fretland v. County of Humboldt (1999) 69 Cal. App. 4th 1478, 1490, 82 Cal. Rptr. 2d 359).

[Optional] N. Party Cannot Create Issue of Fact by Contradicting Prior Discovery Responses. A party cannot create an issue of fact by a declaration which contradicts the party's own prior discovery responses (Whitmire v. Ingersoll-Rand Co. (2010) 184 Cal. App. 4th 1078, 1087-1090 (deposition and interrogatory responses)). In determining whether a triable issue of material fact exists, the trial court may give great weight to admissions made in discovery and disregard contradictory and self-serving affidavits of the party (Whitmire v. Ingersoll-Rand Co. (2010) 184 Cal. App. 4th 1078, 1087) .

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted by a defendant or plaintiff in any action or proceeding in support of a motion for summary judgment when the defendant contends that the action has no merit or when plaintiff contends there is no defense to the action. The motion must be granted if all of the papers submitted show that there is no triable issue as to any material fact and that the defendant or plaintiff is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(a), (c)]. Counsel should note, however, that summary judgment may not be used in proceedings to terminate parental rights under Fam. Code §§ 7826, 7827 [see In re Mark K. (1984) 159 Cal. App. 3d 94, 102-103, 205 Cal. Rptr. 393 (construing former Civ. Code §§ 232(a)(5), (6))].

Optional Paragraph C may be included when the moving defendant does not present evidence to conclusively negate an element of the plaintiff's cause of action, but can show that the plaintiff does not possess and cannot reasonably obtain evidence to prove plaintiff's case.

Optional Paragraph D may be used when the defendant moves for summary judgment and the plaintiff has failed to produce evidence supporting one or more elements of his or her case. The optional bracketed sentence at the end of Paragraph D is for use when the basis for arguing that discovery is factually devoid is that plaintiff was asked specific material questions and responded that he or she could not recall. Optional Paragraph E may be used when arguing for the court to consider specific evidence or presumptions. The paragraphs might both be used in addressing different issues underlying the motion.

Optional Paragraph F should be included when the motion is based in whole or in part on an admission against interest by the opposing party which shows that there is no factual issue to be tried.

Optional Paragraph G should be included when the motion is based in whole or in part on a judicial admission by the plaintiff which shows there is no factual issue to be tried.

Optional Paragraph H should be included when the motion is supported by a presumption affecting the burden of producing evidence which operates in favor of the moving party to eliminate the existence of a triable issue of fact.

Optional Paragraph I should be included when the only material issue raised by the parties is a legal issue to be resolved by the court.

Optional Paragraph J should be included when the motion is by a defendant whose showing negates an essential element of the plaintiff's case but defendant wishes to concede that a factual conflict exists on other aspects of the case. Optional Paragraph J may also be used in a separate supplemental memorandum of points and authorities when defendant's showing in support of the motion negates an essential element of plaintiff's cause of action but the plaintiff, in his or her opposing papers, insists the summary judgment motion should be denied because factual conflict exists on other aspects of the case.

Optional Paragraph K should be included when the motion is by a defendant who demonstrates a complete defense to the action, or, in the case of summary adjudication, a complete defense to a cause of action.

Optional Paragraph L may be used when the defendant moves for summary judgment and plaintiff's responsive evidence gives rise to no more than mere speculation.

Optional Paragraph M may be used to reenforce the point that the court is required to grant summary judgment when all the papers submitted show there is no triable issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Counsel should also attach affidavits, declarations, or other papers that support the motion. The supporting papers must include a separate statement of material facts that the moving party contends are undisputed, along with supporting evidence for each fact [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b)]. Counsel may attach copies of any necessary documents if the originals are produced at the hearing and made available for inspection by the adverse party [Dugar v. Happy Tiger Records, Inc. (1974) 41 Cal. App. 3d 811, 816, 116 Cal. Rptr. 412 ; see Evid. Code § 1520 et seq.].

For points and authorities which may be combined with this form in support of motions for summary judgment relating to particular causes of action and grounds, see the specific chapter in this set relating to the particular substantive area, such as Ch. 50, Contracts; Ch. 105, Fraud and Deceit; Ch. 115, Indemnity and Contribution; and Ch. 142, Libel and Slander (Defamation).

[b] Related Uses

As "any party" may move for summary judgment under Code Civ. Proc. § 437c, this form may be adapted for use by a cross complainant or cross defendant [see, e.g., IT Corp. v. Superior Court (1978) 83 Cal. App. 3d 443, 446, 147 Cal. Rptr. 828 (summary judgment for cross defendant); Nationwide Investment Corp. v. California Funeral Service, Inc. (1974) 40 Cal. App. 3d 494, 504, 114 Cal. Rptr. 77 (summary judgment for cross complainant)].

[c] Trial Court's Power to Consider Arguments Not Presented

In ruling on a motion for summary judgment, the trial court is not required to limit its decision to an analysis of the specific arguments presented. If another valid and legal reason that would support the summary judgment motion exists, the trial court may consider it when it can do so without depriving the responding party of a fair hearing [Barczewski v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co. (1989) 210 Cal. App. 3d 406, 413, 258 Cal. Rptr. 386] .

[d] Remedy When Motion Improperly Denied

A writ of mandate is a proper remedy to compel a trial court to grant a motion for summary judgment when the affidavits in support of the moving party are sufficient to sustain a judgment in his or her favor, and the opponent does not by counteraffidavit show facts sufficient to present a triable issue of fact [Rose v. Fife (1989) 207 Cal. App. 3d 760, 764-765 n.4, 255 Cal. Rptr. 440 ; see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(m)(1) (procedure for seeking review by peremptory writ)].

[e] Summary Judgment as Res Judicata

A judgment entered on a motion for summary judgment is a determination that there is no factual dispute and that one party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Such a judgment is as final and conclusive a determination of the merits as a judgment after trial and, when final, is res judicata [Stuart v. Lilves (1989) 210 Cal. App. 3d 1215, 1219, 258 Cal. Rptr. 780 (reversing order denying defendant's motion to vacate sister state judgment entered in California after sister-state refused to give full faith and credit to a California summary judgment on ground that the California judgment was not a judgment on the merits and, instead, entered judgment for plaintiff against defendant)].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Burden of Production

The burden for the moving party plaintiff is to prove each element of the cause of action entitling plaintiff to judgment on that cause of action [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(p)(1)].

The burden for a moving party defendant is to prove that one or more elements of the cause of action, even if not separately pleaded, cannot be established, or that there is a complete defense to that cause of action [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(p)(2)].

After the moving party has met this burden, the burden shifts to the opposing party to show that a triable issue of material fact exists as to that cause of action or a defense to it [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(p)(1), (2)].

In Aguilar v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (2001) 25 Cal. 4th 826, 107 Cal. Rptr. 2d 841, 24 P.3d 493 , an individual brought an antitrust action on behalf of herself and other consumers of gasoline against petroleum companies alleging an unlawful conspiracy under the Cartwright Act (Bus. & Prof. Code § 16720 et seq.). The trial court granted the defendants' motions for summary judgment, but later granted the plaintiff's motion for a new trial. The court of appeal reversed the superior court's order and remanded the case to the superior court with directions to issue an order granting summary judgment to the defendants.

The Supreme Court affirmed the court of appeal. The Court clarified the 1992 and 1993 amendments to Code Civ. Proc. § 437c, noting that the amendments largely, but not completely, conformed California summary judgment law to its federal counterpart (25 Cal. 4th 826, 849) . The Court then explained the two types of burden on the motion, a burden of persuasion and a burden of production (25 Cal. 4th 826, 850) .

First, from commencement to conclusion, the party moving for summary judgment bears the burden of persuasion that there is no triable issue of material fact and that he or she is entitled to judgment as a matter of law (25 Cal. 4th 826, 850) . The moving party's burden is more properly one of persuasion rather than of proof, since he or she must persuade the court that there is no material fact for a reasonable trier of fact to find, and not prove any such fact to the satisfaction of the court itself as though it were sitting as the trier of fact (25 Cal. 4th 826, 850 n.11). There is a triable issue of material fact if, and only if, the evidence would allow a reasonable trier of fact to find the underlying fact in favor of the party opposing the motion in accordance with the applicable standard of proof. Thus, a plaintiff bears the burden of persuasion that each element of the cause of action in question has been proved, and hence that there is no defense thereto (Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(o)(1); see now Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(p)(1)). A defendant bears the burden of persuasion that one or more elements of the cause of action in question cannot be established, or that there is a complete defense thereto (Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(o)(2); see now Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(p)(1)) (25 Cal. 4th 826, 850) .

Second, the party moving for summary judgment bears an initial burden of production to make a prima facie showing of the nonexistence of any triable issue of material fact; if he or she carries this burden of production,the moving party causes a shift, and the opposing party is then subjected to a burden of production to make a prima facie showing of the existence of a triable issue of material fact (25 Cal. 4th 826, 850) .

How the parties moving for, and opposing, summary judgment may each carry their burden or persuasion and/or production depends on which would bear what burden of proof at trial. For example, if a plaintiff who would bear the burden of proof by a preponderance of evidence at trial moves for summary judgment, he or she must present evidence that would require a reasonable trier of fact to find any underlying material fact more likely than not--otherwise, he or she would not be entitled to judgment as a matter of law (25 Cal. 4th 826, 850-851) .

[b] Negation of Element of Plaintiff's Cause of Action Not Required

The facts and procedural background of Aguilar v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (2001) 25 Cal. 4th 826, 107 Cal. Rptr. 2d 841, 24 P.3d 493 , are discussed under § 221.20[3][a].

In affirming the court of appeal, the Supreme Court held that summary judgment law no longer requires a defendant moving for summary judgment to conclusively negate an element of the plaintiff's cause of action (25 Cal. 4th 826, 826, 853) .

However, California continues to require a defendant moving for summary judgment to present evidence, and not simply point out, that the plaintiff does not possess, and cannot reasonably obtain, needed evidence. Whereas, under federal law, "pointing out through argument" may be sufficient, under state law, it is not (25 Cal. 4th 826, 854-855) . The defendant must support the motion with evidence including "affidavits, declarations, admissions, answers to interrogatories, depositions, and matters of which judicial notice" must or may be taken. (Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b)(1)). The defendant may present evidence that the plaintiff does not possess, and cannot reasonably obtain, needed evidence--as through admissions by the plaintiff following extensive discovery to the effect that he or she has discovered nothing. But the defendant must indeed present "evidence." The court disapproved Hunter v. Pacific

Mechanical Corp. (1995) 37 Cal. App. 4th 1282, 1288, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 335 , to the extent that language in it purportedly allowed a defendant moving for summary judgment simply to point out, "an absence of evidence to support" an element of the plaintiff's cause of action (25 Cal. 4th 826, 855 n.23).

At trial the plaintiff would have borne the burden of proof by a preponderance of the evidence as to her Cartwright Act cause of action. The defendants carried their initial burden of production to make a prima facie showing of the absence of any conspiracy through the declarations by their officers, managers, and similar employees, and through material from others including third parties that would require a reasonable jury not to find any conspiracy more likely than not. Plaintiff did not carry the burden of production that shifted to her to make a prima facie showing of the presence of unlawful conspiracy since her evidence was at best ambiguous as were the inferences that she drew from it (25 Cal. 4th 826, 861-862) .

In Saelzler v. Advanced Group 400 (2001) 25 Cal. 4th 763, 107 Cal. Rptr. 2d 617 , the plaintiff sued the owners of an apartment complex after she was criminally assaulted on the premises. Plaintiff claimed that defendant's failure to take proper security precautions was the proximate cause of her damages. Defendant filed a motion for summary judgment, arguing that plaintiff was unable to establish a causal link between defendant's omissions and her injuries. Plaintiff had no evidence showing the identity of her assailants, whether they were trespassers or tenants, whether the security gate was broken, or whether defendant could reasonably have warned the public of unspecified dangers from unknown assailants. The trial court granted summary judgment for defendant. The court of appeal reversed the trial court, but the Supreme Court reversed the court of appeal and affirmed the trial court. The Supreme Court held that the defendant had met its burden of showing that one element of plaintiff's cause of action, causation, could not be established. The court further held that the declaration of plaintiff's security expert based on the same evidence was equally speculative since he equally unaware of assailants' identities, and his opinion regarding causation was too tenuous to create a triable issue. Therefore, the burden shifted to plaintiff to show that a triable issue of fact existed as to causation. Plaintiff could not meet that burden (25 Cal. 4th 763, 780-781) .

[c] Reliance on Absence of Evidence to Support Nonmoving Party's Case

The litigation in Union Bank v. Superior Court (1995) 31 Cal. App. 4th 573, 37 Cal. Rptr. 2d 653 (Second Dist. Div. Five) , arose out of a transaction for the lease of medical equipment and involved numerous causes of action and defendants. One defendant, the lender that repossessed the equipment, moved for summary judgment relying on the plaintiffs' responses to requests for admissions and interrogatories. The plaintiffs refused to admit that the defendant had not defrauded them. However, in related interrogatories seeking facts underlying their refusal to make the admission, the plaintiffs merely stated that they believed that the defendant acted knowingly and fraudulently and reserved the right to further respond. The defendant included these responses to admissions and interrogatories in its statement of undisputed facts. The plaintiffs' response to the separate statement of undisputed facts relied on declarations that attached documents relating to the loan, and included statements about financial losses, a belief that the defendant was responsible for the losses, and that therewere unanswered questions about the where funds had gone. The trial court denied summary judgment, and the defendant sought a writ of mandate.

The court of appeal issued the writ and directed the trial court to grant summary judgment. The defendant argued that the factually devoid answers to the Judicial Council form interrogatories were sufficient to require plaintiffs to prove their case concerning the alleged misrepresentations and fraudulent conspiracy. Defendant also argued that the plaintiffs failed to provide substantial evidence of misrepresentations or a conspiracy in the declarations and documents cited in their opposition separate statement, and the court agreed (31 Cal. App. 4th 573, 580-581) . The court extensively analyzed the 1992 and 1993 amendments to Code Civ. Proc. § 437c, and concluded that the Legislature had intended the burden-shifting characteristics of Fed. R. Civ. P., Rule 56, as interpreted in Celotex Corp. v. Catrett (1986) 477 U.S. 317, 106 S. Ct. 2548, 91 L. Ed 2d 265 , to be applied to California summary judgment motions when a defendant relied on a plaintiff's factually inadequate discovery answers to seek summary judgment (31 Cal. App. 4th 573, 581-590) . Applying these principles, the court held that the defendant was entitled to summary judgment. Defendant's separate statement cited facts proving that repossession took place in accordance with the lending documents, and included plaintiffs' interrogatory responses, which demonstrated that they had no evidence. That was sufficient to shift the burden to the plaintiff, and the plaintiffs' conclusory declarations were not sufficient to raise a triable issue (31 Cal. App. 4th 573, 592-593) .

The court expressly limited their holding to the narrow issue before it and noted that they were not addressing other issues concerning the application of Rule 56 or Celotex Corp. to California summary judgment motions (31 Cal. App. 4th 573, 591-592) .

In Hunter v. Pacific Mechanical Corp. (1995) 37 Cal. App. 4th 1282, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 335 (disapproved in Aguilar v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (2001) 25 Cal. 4th 826, 850, 855 n.23, 107 Cal. Rptr. 2d 841, 24 P.3d 493 to the extent language in it would purportedly allow a defendant moving for summary judgment simply to point out through argument an absence of evidence to support an element of the plaintiff's cause of action), plaintiff sued multiple defendants alleging injuries resulting from his occupational exposure to asbestos. One of the defendants moved for summary judgment, relying on plaintiff's deposition testimony that he could not recall ever working in the same area with that defendant's employees. The plaintiff offered evidence showing overlap in work sites with the defendant during various time frames, suggesting that it was possible plaintiff could have been at the same job sites as defendant's employees. The trial court granted the motion for summary judgment, reasoning that the defendant had shown that the plaintiff could not establish liability on defendant's behalf and that plaintiff had submitted no facts to refute this.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court first noted that the 1992 and 1993 amendments of Code Civ. Proc. § 437c had moved toward the federal standard for the burden of proof. Thus, if the nonmoving party has the burden of proof at trial, the moving party need not support its summary judgment motion with evidence negating an essential element of the nonmoving party's case to satisfy its burden. The moving party need only point to the absence of evidence to support the nonmoving party's case. The nonmoving party must then set forth specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial (37 Cal. App. 4th 1282, 1286) . The court noted that Union Bank v. Superior Court (1995) 31 Cal. App. 4th 573, 37 Cal. Rptr. 2d 653 , had described the new framework for summary judgment practice in California under Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(o)(2). Specifically, a moving defendant may now rely on factually devoid discovery responses to shift the burden of proof under Section 437c(o)(2). Once the burden has shifted as a result of factually devoid discovery responses, the plaintiff must set forth the specific facts that prove the existence of a triable issue of a material fact (37 Cal. App. 4th 1282, 1287) . Plaintiff urged the court of appeal not to follow the Union Bank decision. However, noting that plaintiff's argument relied on evidence of legislative intent considered and found unpersuasive in Union Bank, the court choose not to reanalyze the issues and stated that it found Union Bank persuasive. The court thus reviewed the trial court's grant of summary judgment using the same standards as set out in Union Bank, found the plaintiff's evidence to be only speculation and conjecture, and affirmed the summary judgment (37 Cal. App. 4th 1282, 1289-1290) .

Hunter has been criticized in Hagen v. Hickenbottom (1995) 41 Cal. App. 4th 168, 48 Cal. Rptr. 2d 197 (Sixth Dist.) , discussed in § 221.29[4][b]. Hagen dealt with the version of Section 437c including the 1992, but not the 1993 amendments. The Hagen court nonetheless ventured to disagree with those who would be understood to suggest that a moving defendant may shift the burden by simply suggesting the possibility that the plaintiff cannot prove its case. The court stated that Section 437c requires the defendant to make some affirmative showing in support of his or her motion, more than pointing out the "absence of evidence." Thus, if a defendant cannot negate an element of the plaintiff's case, the defendant should be required to produce direct or circumstantial evidence that the plaintiff not only does not have but cannot reasonably expect to obtain a prima facie case. The court interpreted Union Bank, above, as satisfying that criteria because there the interrogatories demanded all facts substantiating plaintiff's refusal to admit. Plaintiffs' answers strongly supported an inference that plaintiffs had no facts to support their theory. The Hagen court particularly questioned the result in Hunter [Hagen v. Hickenbottom (1995) 41 Cal. App. 4th 168, 185-187, 48 Cal. Rptr. 2d 197 ; see Rio Linda Unified School Dist. v. Superior Court (1997) 52 Cal. App. 4th 732, 735, 60 Cal. Rptr. 2d 710 (Third Dist. court noted that moving party not now limitedto supporting its motion with affirmative evidence; it may also establish its prima facie entitlement to judgment by demonstrating that its opponent's discovery responses are devoid of evidence to support an element of the opponent's case; however, court also noted in footnote 1 that Sixth District in Addy v. Bliss & Glennon (1996) 44 Cal. App. 4th 205, 214, 51 Cal. Rptr. 2d 642 , held that moving party must also produce evidence that the opponent cannot reasonably expect to produce evidence supporting the infirm element; because infirmity in the cause of action before it was irremedial court did not have to reach issue of whether Addy is correct); see also Addy v. Bliss & Glennon (1996) 44 Cal. App. 4th 205, 214, 51 Cal. Rptr. 2d 642 (discussed in § 221.29[4][b])].

In Certain Underwriters at Lloyd's of London v. Superior Court (1997) 56 Cal. App. 4th 952, 65 Cal. Rptr. 2d 821 , the court did not read Hunter (as had the court in Addy v. Bliss & Glennon (1996) 44 Cal. App. 4th 205, 214, 51 Cal. Rptr. 2d 642) to suggest that a moving defendant may shift the burden simply by suggesting the possibility that the plaintiff cannot prove its case. In the court's view, Hunter does no more than express its agreement with Union Bank. According to the court, quoting from Hunter, the defendant was not required to come forward with evidence of its own to demonstrate affirmatively that the plaintiff could not prevail. Rather, it was enough to show through factually vague discovery responses that the plaintiff lacked any significant probative evidence. In other words the defendant could effectively show that the element of causation could not be established by pointing to an absence of evidence to support that element [Certain Underwriters at Lloyd's of London v. Superior Court (1997) 56 Cal. App. 4th 952, 960 n.6, 65 Cal. Rptr. 2d 821 (Second Dist, Div. One)] . The court also noted that although defendant's initial burden can be met by the presentation of factually vague discovery responses or otherwise, no cases suggest that Code Civ. Proc. § 437c permits the moving defendant to meet its initial burden without any showing at all [Certain Underwriters at Lloyd's of London v. Superior Court (1997) 56 Cal. App. 4th 952, 956, 65 Cal. Rptr. 2d 821] .

Ultimately, the California Supreme Court disapproved language in decisions purportedly allowing a defendant moving for summary judgment simply to point out through argument an absence of evidence to support an element of the plaintiff's cause of action, specifically giving Hunter as an example [Aguilar v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (2001) 25 Cal. 4th 826, 850, 855 n.23, 107 Cal. Rptr. 2d 841, 24 P.3d 493] .

In Chaknova v. Wilbur-Ellis Co. (1999) 69 Cal. App. 4th 962, 81 Cal. Rptr. 2d 871 , involving an action for asbestos-related injuries, the trial court granted summary judgment in defendant's favor. The court of appeal affirmed, holding that defendant met its burden of establishing that it was not liable for the plaintiffs' injuries and that the plaintiffs failed to create triable issues of material fact (69 Cal. App. 4th 962, 965, 978) . In reaching this conclusion, the court noted that a moving defendant may rely on factually devoid discovery responses to shift the burden of proof pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(o)(2) (see now Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(p)(1)). Once the burden shifts as a result of the factually devoid discovery responses, the plaintiff must set forth specific facts that prove the existence of a triable issue of material fact (69 Cal. App. 4th 962, 974) . If the plaintiff fails to make that showing, summary judgment must be granted (69 Cal. App. 4th 962, 975) . The court distinguished Villa v. McFerren (1995) 35 Cal. App. 4th 733, 41 Cal. Rptr. 2d 719 , and Hagen v. Hickenbottom (1995) 41 Cal. App. 4th 168, 48 Cal. Rptr. 2d 197 , in which defendant's reliance on plaintiff's factually devoid discovery responses was inadequate to shift the burden of proof because plaintiff could not be expected to have knowledge of matters particularly within defendant's own knowledge or within plaintiff's decedent's knowledge. The court followed Hunter v. Pacific Mechanical Corp. (1995) 37 Cal. App. 4th 1282, 1287, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 335 , and held that specific questions to which the plaintiff responded that he could not recall were sufficient to support a showing of factually devoid discovery responses, which distinguished Scheiding v. Dinwiddie Construction Co. (1999) 69 Cal. App. 4th 64, 81 Cal. Rptr. 2d 360 , in which the plaintiff had never been asked the relevant specific questions (69 Cal. App. 4th 962, 975-976, n.12).

The court also rejected plaintiffs' argument that certain general discovery responses supported an inference that asbestos products brokered by defendant might have been present at job sites where plaintiff's decedent worked, finding that the evidence was neither actually nor hypothetically susceptible to such an inference. First, plaintiff' deposition testimony was more specific in stating that he had no such knowledge or recollection, and second, under Hunter, the evidence presented by plaintiffs was insufficient, as it offered only speculation and conjecture regarding exposure to asbestos-containing products brokered by defendant (69 Cal. App. 4th 962, 976-977) .

For discussion of Scheiding v. Dinwiddie Construction Co. (1999) 69 Cal. App. 4th 64, 81 Cal. Rptr. 2d 360 , see § 221.29[3][b].

[d] Evidence and Inferences Considered by Court

Hirsch v. Blish (1977) 76 Cal. App. 3d 163, 142 Cal. Rptr. 646 , was an action for property damage and personal injuries resulting from an automobile accident. Plaintiff filed the complaint one year and three days after the accident. After the property damage claim was settled and dismissed, defendant moved for summary judgment on the personal injury cause of action on the ground that it was barred by the one-year statute of limitations contained in Code Civ. Proc. § 340(3) (see now Code Civ. Proc. § 335.1, which extends statute of limitations to two years for personal injury actions). Plaintiff argued that the statute was tolled for a two-week periodafter the date of the accident during which defendant was absent from the state while driving to and from St. Louis on vacation. The trial court granted summary judgment, and plaintiff appealed from the judgment.

The court of appeal affirmed summary judgment for defendant. It construed the provision of Veh. Code § 17463, which excludes from the time limited for commencement of certain actions the period a person is out of state and cannot be located through the exercise of reasonable diligence, as requiring plaintiff to actively exercise reasonable diligence to locate defendant. The court stated that the lack of a triable issue of fact may be established by an inference if the inference is the only reasonable one that may be drawn from the evidence presented for and against the motion for summary judgment. The court held that total failure of contact of anyone seeking defendant with defendant's neighbors, business associates, and relatives, and the failure of any notice directed to defendant's long-time place of residence supports only one reasonable inference--that no one, including plaintiff, was diligently seeking defendant's whereabouts during his absence from the state (76 Cal. App. 3d 163, 166) .

D'Amico v. Board of Medical Examiners (1974) 11 Cal. 3d 1, 112 Cal. Rptr. 786, 520 P.2d 10 , was a mandamus proceeding by graduates of out-of-state osteopathic colleges to compel state medical and osteopathic boards to examine and license plaintiffs as physicians and surgeons. The Supreme Court affirmed summary judgment for plaintiffs, declaring enactments which forbid licensure of such graduates in California regardless of individual qualifications to be unconstitutional because they deny plaintiffs equal protection of the laws, and ordered the issuance of a peremptory writ of mandate directing the osteopathic board to furnish, receive, and process application forms and to examine and license plaintiffs and others in their class who are found to be qualified. Although the Court held that the trial court improperly employed the strict scrutiny test in reviewing the legislative classification in question under the equal protection clause, it sustained the judgment because plaintiffs had demonstrated that the classification did not bear a rational relationship to any conceivable legitimate state interest. In reaching this holding, the Court used admissions filed by the Attorney General on behalf of the medical board during discovery proceedings. The Court noted that when discovery has produced an admission on the part of the party opposing summary judgment which demonstrates that there is no factual issue to be tried, certain requirements of summary judgment procedure, such as the liberal construction of an opposing party's counteraffidavits, are relaxed or altered in their operation. Admissions against interest obtained during discovery have a very high credibility value. Accordingly, the Court stated that when such an admission becomes relevant to the determination, on motion for summary judgment, of whether or not there exist triable issues of fact between the parties, it is entitled to and should receive a kind of deference not normally accorded evidentiary allegations in affidavits (11 Cal. 3d 1, 21-22) .

In Wilkins v. National Broadcasting Co. (1999) 71 Cal. App. 4th 1066, 84 Cal. Rptr. 2d 329 , two National Broadcasting Company, Inc., producers (defendants) responded to a company's advertisement for investors and arranged to meet with a company salesperson. They met with the plaintiffs, who were company representatives, at a restaurant and videotaped the lunch meeting with hidden cameras. Portions of the videotape appeared in a subsequent television broadcast. Plaintiffs alleged causes of action for physical intrusion on solitude or into private affairs, unlawful eavesdropping on or recording of confidential communications, fraud, and various other causes of action. The trial court granted summary judgment in favor of the defendants. Judgment was entered and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. In affirming, the court noted that California courts do not permit a party to defeat summary judgment by contradicting in a declaration that party's previous deposition testimony. On a motion for summary judgment, the credibility of deposition admissions are valued so highly that the controverting affidavits may be disregarded as irrelevant, inadmissible or evasive (71 Cal. App. 4th 1066, 1082) .

In Benavidez v. San Jose Police Dept. (1999) 71 Cal. App. 4th 853, 84 Cal. Rptr. 2d 157 , plaintiffs were a mother and son. After the mother was attacked on three separate occasions by her live-in boyfriend within one twenty four hour period, plaintiffs sued the defendants for negligence, intentional infliction of emotional distress, negligence per se, and violation of 42 U.S.C. § 1983 for failing to take adequate precautions to protect her and her son. The trial court granted summary judgment in favor of the defendants. Plaintiffs appealed from the judgment only as to the causes of action for negligence and negligent infliction of emotional distress (71 Cal. App. 4th 853, 856, 868) .

The court of appeals affirmed (71 Cal. App. 4th 853, 856) . Plaintiffs' causes of action for negligence were premised on the police department's failure to protect them from the final attack (71 Cal. App. 4th 853, 859) . The plaintiff mother argued that she produced evidence that a special relationship was created, specifying, among other things, her declaration in opposition to summary judgment. In analyzing the statements made in the declaration, the court noted that it was constrained by the well-settled rule that a party cannot create an issue of fact by a declaration that contradicts his or her prior discovery responses. In determining whether any triable issue of material facts exists, the trial court may, in its discretion, give great weight to admissions made in deposition and disregard contradictory and self-serving affidavits of the party (71 Cal. App. 4th 853 ,860). This is because, as explained in D'Amico v. Board of Medical Examiners (1994) 11 Cal. 3d 1 , when there is a clear and unequivocal admission by the plaintiff in his or her deposition the trial court is forced to conclude there is no substantial evidence of the existence of a triable issue of fact notwithstanding a contradictory declaration in opposition to summary judgment. Admissions against interest have a very high credibility value. This is especially true when, as in this case, the admission is obtained not in the normal course of human activities and affairs but in the context of an established pretrial procedure whose purpose is to elicit facts. Accordingly, when such an admission becomes relevant to the determination, on motion for summary judgment, of whether or not there exists triable issues of fact (as opposed to legal issues) between the parties, it is entitled to and should receive a kind of deference not normally accorded evidentiary allegations in affidavits (71 Cal. App. 4th 853, 861) . With these rules in mind, plaintiff's statement in her declaration that she told the officers she wanted to go to a shelter and that they ignored her directly and unequivocally contradicted her deposition testimony that she did not say anything and that she did not tell them she wanted to leave her apartment. Under the case law, her latter statement must be disregarded (71 Cal. App. 4th 853, 861) . Similarly, plaintiff's statement in her declaration that the officers told her "Don't worry, we're here!" which led her to believe that they would remain to protect her and her son is belied in her deposition testimony (71 Cal. App. 4th 853, 862) .

The court distinguished two cases that held that declarations that contradict earlier discovery responses may sometimes be considered. Price v. Wells Fargo Bank (1989) 213 Cal. App. 3d 465, 261 Cal. Rptr. 735 involved admissions that were circumstantial, tacit, or fragmentary and equivocal concessions, whereas in contrast, the admissions in the earlier deposition in this case were not equivocal. They directly and unequivocally contradicted the later statements. Niederer v. Ferreira (1987) 189 Cal. App. 3d 1485, 234 Cal. Rptr. 779 , involved a plaintiff's misunderstanding of a legal term of art. The contradiction in the instant case cannot be explained based on plaintiff's lack of understanding of a legal term of art (71 Cal. App. 4th 853, 862) . Plaintiff's responses were contradictory and mutually exclusive. Under these circumstance, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in ruling that the contradictory statements in plaintiff's declaration must be disregarded, and therefore that those statements failed to raise a triable issue of fact (71 Cal. App. 4th 853, 862) .

[f] Effect of Judicial Admission

Barr v. ACandS, Inc. (1997) 57 Cal. App. 4th 1038, 67 Cal. Rptr. 2d 494 involved three consolidated cases. The trial court determined as a matter of law that the plaintiffs' claims arising out of occupational exposure to asbestos were barred by the statute of limitations set forth in Code Civ. Proc. § 340.2 as a result of the filing of prior suits involving the same exposure. Plaintiffs appealed (57 Cal. App. 4th 1038, 1042) .

The court of appeal affirmed the trial court judgments in defendants' favor. In one of the cases plaintiff contended that plaintiff's second action sought damages for a different and distinct injury from that alleged in the first action. In the trial court, as well as on appeal, defendant argued that the second suit did not arise from a separate injury but sought damages instead for the very same injuries alleged in plaintiff's first action. The trial court in deciding the issue looked no further than the pleadings in the first action, particularly the allegations that plaintiff's exposure to asbestos or asbestos containing products at the defendant site cause plaintiff severe and permanent injury, including cancer. Therefore, the trial court would not consider evidence plaintiff offered contradicting plaintiff's prior pleading in an effort to raise a material issue of fact as to when plaintiff's cause of action against defendant commenced (57 Cal. App. 4th 1038, 1054-1055) . Plaintiff referred to the same extrinsic evidence on appeal, arguing a triable issue of fact existed as to whether plaintiff had actually been diagnosed with cancer when plaintiff filed the first action in 1993. Plaintiff once again relied on a declaration of an expert witness indicating that the results of the witness's 1996 examination of plaintiff first revealed cancer and the preliminary fact sheet attached to plaintiff's complaint in the first action which identified plaintiff's injuries as asbestosis and asbestos-related pleural disease. Plaintiff argued that plaintiff had a separate claim and a separate one-year limitation period for each distinct injury. The court concluded that it did not have determine the issue of whether asbestos-caused cancer constitutes a separate and distinct injury to which a separate limitations period applies. The court agreed with the trial court that plaintiff was bound by the allegations contained in plaintiff's first complaint that plaintiff had contracted asbestos-induced cancer (57 Cal. App. 4th 1038, 1055) . The court quoting Uram v. Abex Corp. (1990) 217 Cal. App. 3d 1425, 1433, 266 Cal. Rptr. 695 , and citing other cases, noted that a defendant moving for summary judgment may rely on allegations in plaintiff's complaint which are judicial admissions. As such, they are conclusive concessions of truth of a matter and have the effect of removing it from the issues (57 Cal. App. 4th 1038, 1055-1056) . The court further noted that contradictory evidence is limited to that which collaterally attacks the prior judicial admission on the basis of mistake, inadvertence, or lack of authority (57 Cal. App. 4th 1038, 1056) .

There is some authority that has not given a judicial admission conclusive effect [see Kirby v. Albert D. Seeno Construction Co. (1992) 11 Cal. App. 4th 1059, 1066-1067, 14 Cal. Rptr. 2d 604 (court refused to give conclusive effect to ambiguous statement in an unverified complaint when statement was explained in deposition testimony under oath; summary judgment should not be entered on mistaken legal conclusions in complaint when facts submitted in opposition indicate existence of materialfactual issue); see also 24 Hour Fitness, Inc. v. Superior Court (1998) 66 Cal. App. 4th 1199, 1211, 78 Cal. Rptr. 2d 533 (admission in complaint that party acted within course and scope of employment will not bind plaintiff on summary judgment if plaintiff offers countervailing evidence in opposition to summary judgment motion); Prilliman v. United Air Lines, Inc. (1997) 53 Cal. App. 4th 935, 961, 62 Cal. Rptr. 2d 142 (judicial admission has not been accorded as broad application as discovery admission; judicial admission, however, not involved in case)].

[g] Presumption Eliminates Triable Issue When No Contradictory Evidence Offered

Security Pac. Nat. Bank v. Associated Motor Sales (1980) 106 Cal. App. 3d 171, 165 Cal. Rptr. 38 , was an action by a bank against a commercial checking account customer for the recovery of an overdraft resulting from the dishonor by payor banks of checks indorsed and deposited in defendant's account, and to impose indorser's liability on defendant in respect of the same dishonored checks. Plaintiff 's motion for summary judgment was granted by the trial court, and defendant appealed from the judgment.

The court of appeal affirmed summary judgment for plaintiff as to the second cause of action to impose indorser's liability, deeming it unnecessary to discuss the sufficiency of plaintiff's showing of its right to recover under the first cause of action. As defendant admitted its indorsement of the checks in its answer, the court stated that plaintiff's right to recover required only that it prove that the checks were dishonored and that timely notice of dishonor was given by it to defendant. As proof of dishonor, plaintiff submitted the returned checks bearing insufficient funds stamps. The stamps created a presumption of dishonor under former Com. Code § 3510 (now see Com. Code § 3505(a)), which presumption affects the burden of producing evidence under former Com. Code § 1210. Such presumptions under Evid. Code § 604 require the trier of fact to assume the existence of the presumed fact unless and until evidence is introduced which would support a finding of its nonexistence. As defendant failed to present any evidence to contradict the presumption of dishonor, there was no triable issue of fact in that respect (106 Cal. App. 3d 171, 176-180) . Since timely notice of dishonor was established by plaintiff's uncontradicted declarations, the court held that summary judgment was properly granted.

[h] Only Material Issue Presented Is Question of Law

In Morales v. Fansler (1989) 209 Cal. App. 3d 1581, 258 Cal. Rptr. 96 , defendants had leased premises to tenants for use as a restaurant. The lease required the tenants to obtain personal injury liability insurance in the minimum amount of $500,000 per injured person and $1 million per occurrence. The tenants obtained liability insurance for only $300,000 per person. Plaintiff minor was seriously burned when his parents and he and his siblings were having lunch at the restaurant; he wandered into the kitchen where he fell or was knocked into a large pot of soup, which had been left on the kitchen floor, and was seriously burned. Plaintiffs received $300,000 in settlement from the tenants' insurance carrier, and sued defendants for negligence in failing to make sure the tenants obtained the required $500,000 insurance policy. The trial court granted defendants' motion for summary judgment. The court of appeal affirmed. The court said that where the only material issue presented is a question of law, it is appropriate for the court to resolve the legal issue and grant summary judgment (209 Cal. App. 3d 1581, 1584) . The court said the only material issue involved in the case was whether defendants had a legal duty to the plaintiffs to see to it that their tenants obtained insurance in the full amount agreed to, that this was a question of law (209 Cal. App. 3d 1581, 1585) , and that, as a matter of law, the defendants owed plaintiffs no such duty (209 Cal. App. 3d 1581, 1585-1589) .

[i] No Merit if Essential Element of Case Lacking

Yurick v. Superior Court (1989) 209 Cal. App. 3d 1116, 257 Cal. Rptr. 665 , was an action by a former hospital employee against a hospital alleging sex discrimination, unlawful retaliation, intentional infliction of emotional distress, wrongful discharge, and age harassment, and against her former supervisor for age harassment and intentional infliction of emotional distress. Some 10 months before the supervisor had become plaintiff's supervisor, plaintiff had filed with the Department of Fair Employment and Housing a charge against the hospital alleging unlawful sex discrimination in employment, but failed to amend it to include an allegation of age discrimination or any other subsequent event. The motion of the supervisor for summary judgment was denied, and he petitioned for a writ of mandate. In granting the writ, the court of appeal, although it acknowledged the rule that summary judgment may not be granted if the papers submitted show a triable issue of material fact, said that summary judgment may not be defeated merely because there are disputed factual issues; if the defendant's showing negates an essential element of the plaintiff's case, then no amount of factual conflict on other aspects of the case will preclude summary judgment (209 Cal. App. 3d 1116, 1120) . The court held that (1) plaintiff's claim of sex discrimination did not encompass the cause of action alleged against the supervisor and that plaintiff had failed to exhaust her administrative remedy as to that cause (209 Cal. App. 3d 1116, 1123) ; and (2) the defendant's showing completely negated an essential element of the action for intentional infliction of emotional distress, namely, outrageous conduct (209 Cal. App. 3d 1116, 1130) .

[j] No Merit if Complete Defense

A 1992 amendment of Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(f) (that part of subsection (f) was moved to Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(n) in 1993, see now Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(o) effective in 2003) codifies the holding of City of Emeryville v. Superior Court (1991) 2 Cal. App. 4th 21, 2 Cal. Rptr. 2d 826 . In that case, cross defendant City of Emeryville moved for summary adjudication in an automobile accident case arising out of a police pursuit, claiming immunity because it had adopted a vehicle pursuit policy under standards set by the Vehicle Code. The trial court ruled that it had no jurisdiction to decide the merits of an affirmative defense, interpreting Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(f), as amended by Stats. 1990, ch. 1561, as defining "no merit" exclusively in terms of elements of a cause of action.

The court of appeal reversed, clarifying an ambiguity caused by the Legislature's 1990 amendment of Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(f) regarding when summary adjudication is available. The summary adjudication statute provides that a party may move for summary adjudication if it contends that one or more causes of action has "no merit" or that "there is no defense thereto," and "a cause of action has no merit if one or more of the elements of the cause of action ... cannot be established." Discussing the legislative history of the statute, the court concluded that the definition of "no merit" in Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(f) was not intended to be exclusive, and held that, in keeping with well-established case law, a defendant may still show "no merit" by establishing a complete defense to a cause of action (2 Cal. App. 4th 21, 25) .

[k] Responsive Evidence Giving Rise to Mere Speculation Is Insufficient to Establish Triable Issue of Material Fact

In Sangster v. Paetkau (1998) 68 Cal. App. 4th 151, 80 Cal. Rptr. 2d 66 , plaintiff filed a complaint for malicious prosecution against defendants arising from an underlying cross complaint for fraud and breach of fiduciary duty filed by the defendants against the plaintiff. The plaintiff had prevailed as cross-defendant on the underlying cross complaint after a lengthy trial. Defendants moved for summary judgment arguing, among other things, that the undisputed facts established probable cause for the defendants to prosecute the underlying cross complaint against the plaintiff. The trial court found that no triable issue of material fact existed as to defendants' having probable cause to initiate the underlying cross complaint against the plaintiff. It granted defendants' motion for summary judgment on that basis. Judgment was entered, and plaintiff appealed (68 Cal. App. 4th 151, 157-160) .

The court of appeal affirmed judgment for the defendants. In so doing the court noted that under Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(c), a trial court is required to grant summary judgment if all the papers and affidavits submitted, together with all inferences reasonable deducible from the evidence and uncontradicted by other inferences or evidence, show that there is no triable issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law (68 Cal. App. 4th 151, 161) . The plaintiff opposing a summary judgment motion cannot rely on his or her pleadings alone, but must file opposition to the motion, with affidavits setting forth specific facts showing a triable issue of material fact exists as to cause of action or defense (68 Cal. App. 4th 151, 162) . The purpose of the summary judgment procedure is to identify those cases in which there is no triable issue as to any material fact. For practical purposes, an issue of material fact is one which in the context and circumstances of the case warrants the time and cost of factfinding by trial. In other words, not every issue of fact is worth submission to a jury. The purpose of summary judgment is to separate cases in which there are material issues of fact meriting trial from those in which there are no such issues (68 Cal. App. 4th 151, 162) . When the parties have had sufficient opportunity adequately to develop their factual cases through discovery and the defendant has made a sufficient showing to establish a prima facie case in the defendant's favor, in order to avert summary judgment the plaintiff must produce substantial responsive evidence sufficient to establish a triable issue of material fact on the merits of the defendant's showing. For this purpose, responsive evidence that gives rise to no more than mere speculation cannot be regarded as substantial and is insufficient to establish a triable issue of material fact (68 Cal. App. 4th 151, 162-163) .

With regard to the malicious prosecution action the court noted that the probable cause element of a malicious prosecution action requires an objective judicial determination of the reasonableness of the defendant's prior lawsuit. The existence or absence of probable cause is a question of law to be determined by the trial court from the facts. The question for the trial court is whether, on the basis of the facts known to the defendant, the prosecution of the prior action was legally tenable (68 Cal. App. 4th 151, 164) . The fact there may be some disputed facts relevant to the merits of the underlying action does not of itself defeat a motion for summary judgment in a malicious prosecution action. If undisputed facts in the record do establish an objectively reasonable basis for bringing the underlying action, the existence of other, allegedly disputed facts is immaterial (68 Cal. App. 4th 151, 167) . Viewed objectively, the evidence clearly established probable cause for all the three causes of action alleged in the underlying cross-complaint. The court concluded that the plaintiff failed to meet the threshold requirement for the malicious prosecution action of demonstrating an absence of probable cause and thus the defendants were entitled to prevail on their motion for summary judgment (68 Cal. App. 4th 151, 172) .

In Fretland v. County of Humboldt (1999) 69 Cal. App. 4th 1478, 82 Cal. Rptr. 2d 359 , the trial court granted a summary judgment which disposed of plaintiff's action against plaintiff's former employer. Plaintiff appealed from the judgment. Plaintiff contended triable issues of fact existed as to plaintiff's claims for discrimination in violation of the California Fair Employment and Housing Act (Gov. Code § 12900 et seq; hereafter FELA), assault and battery, and emotional distress. The court of appeal initially held that the plaintiff's claims were barred by the exclusive remedy provisions of the workers' compensation law and affirmed the judgment, but the California Supreme Court granted review and thereafter transferred the case to the court of appeal with directions to vacate its earlier decision and to reconsider the case in light of Moorpark v. Superior Court (1998) 18 Cal. 4th 1143, 77 Cal. Rptr. 2d 445, 959 P.2d 752 .

The court of appeal then vacated its earlier decision and reversed judgment in defendant's favor holding that plaintiff's FEHA and emotional distress claims were not barred by the exclusive remedy provisions of the workers' compensation law. The court of appeal however, affirmed summary judgment against the plaintiff on plaintiff's assault and battery claim on the basis that it was barred by the exclusive remedy provisions (69 Cal. App. 4th 1478, 1481, 1492-1493) . One argument defendant raised on appeal was that the trial court properly exercised its discretion in determining there was no triable issue as to the material fact that there was no ratification (by the defendant of alleged wrongful conduct by its employee). In rejecting this argument, the court noted that whether there is a triable issue of material fact does not turn on the trial court's discretion. A motion for summary judgment shall be granted if all the papers submitted show that there is no triable issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. The trial court's summary judgment is subject to independent review. The only exception to the independent review standard applies when the court of appeal reviews a trial court's exercise of discretion as allowed by Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(e). Under all other circumstances, it is legally and procedurally incorrect to apply an abuse of discretion standard (69 Cal. App. 4th 1478, 1490) . For discussion of standard of review and issues for which an abuse of discretion standard on appeal may apply, [see § 221.47[2][a]; see also discussion in California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 537, Summary Judgment (Matthew Bender)].

[m] Party Cannot Create Issue of Fact by Contracting Prior Discovery Responses.

In Whitmire v. Ingersoll-Rand Co. (2010) 184 Cal. App. 4th 1078 , plaintiff, on her own behalf and as successor in interest to her husband, sued defendants, inter alia, for, inter alia, negligence and strict liability related to the husband's exposure to asbestos. The husband had been employed as an electrician at a public utility's power plants. After he contracted mesothelioma, plaintiffs sued defendants, among other defendants, alleging that the husband had contracted mesothelioma from exposure at the power plants to asbestos-containing products for which defendants were responsible. He had worked at three locations in Northern California. Although in the complaint plaintiffs alleged that he had been exposed to asbestos as a result of defendants' conduct at all three sites, in opposition to defendants' motion for summary judgment, plaintiffs produced no evidence that he was exposed to asbestos at either the second or third site. On appeal, they did not contend that he was injured by exposure to asbestos attributable to defendants at either the second or third site. Plaintiffs thereby forfeited any claim against defendants with respect to exposure to asbestos at the second or third site (184 Cal. App. 4th 1078, 1081 ; see North Coast Business Park v. Nielsen Construction Co. (1993) 17 Cal. App. 4th 22, 31, 21 Cal. Rptr. 2d 104 (possible theories not fully developed or factually presented to trial court cannot create triable issue on appeal); Hoffman v. Sports Car Club of America (1986) 180 Cal. App. 3d 119, 126, 225 Cal. Rptr. 359 (where plaintiff failed to present evidence supporting claim in opposition to summary judgment motion, claim was not preserved)). In their complaint, plaintiffs alleged causes of action for negligence, strict liability, false representation, and intentional tort/intentional failure to warn. They alleged generally that defendants negligently and with conscious disregard for the safety of exposed persons "researched, manufactured, fabricated, designed, modified, tested or failed to test, abated or failed to abate, warned or failed to warn of the health hazards, labeled, assembled, distributed, leased, bought, offered for sale, supplied, sold, inspected, serviced, installed, contracted for installation, repaired, marketed, warranted, re-branded, manufactured for others, packaged, and advertised" asbestos and asbestos-containing products. Defendants served "all-facts" interrogatories on plaintiffs requesting the details of the husband's alleged exposure to asbestos specifically attributable to defendants, and in their responses, plaintiffs set forth two theories of such exposure: The first was that defendants were collectively an outside contractor that performed modification and overhaul work to power plant boilers, including the removal or "ripout" of asbestos-containing insulation from the boilers and resulting in the husband inhaling heavy dust. In a declaration later submitted in opposition to defendants' summary judgment motion, the husband stated that defendants' repair work took place at the first site. However, plaintiffs' responses to special interrogatories stated unequivocally that defendants collectively were an outside contractor at the third facility, not the first one. The second was that defendants exposed the husband to asbestos as the general contractor responsible for the construction of the first site, and the husband was exposed to asbestos fibers released from work he performed on the various asbestos-containing materials, products and equipment, and from work performed by others on the various asbestos-containing products, material and equipment in his immediate vicinity, at the first site. Defendants moved for summary judgment on the issue of causation, contending that plaintiffs had not produced and could not produce evidence that the husband was ever exposed to asbestos attributable to defendants, much less that asbestos attributable to defendants was a substantial factor in the causation of his alleged injury. In opposition, plaintiffs argued that defendants failed to meet the initial moving burden of demonstrating the absence of a triable issue of material fact and, in the alternative, submitted evidence that plaintiffs contended was sufficient to create a triable controversy as to whether the husband was exposed to asbestos as a result of defendants' conduct. At the hearing, the trial court's tentative ruling was to grant summary judgment; the court proposed to disregard the husband's declaration alleging exposure at the first plant because it was inconsistent with prior discovery responses in which the husband declared he had been exposed at the third facility. It appeared from the hearing that this was the court's ultimate ruling, although the judgment did not state the reasons (184 Cal. App. 4th 1078, 1080-1083) .

The Court of Appeals affirmed. The court first reviewed the summary judgment standard generally and the causation standard with regard to asbestos litigation (184 Cal. App. 4th 1078, 1083-1084) . The court found that plaintiffs did not present sufficient evidence to raise a triable issue of fact regarding exposure at the first site, noting that plaintiffs had forfeited any argument that defendants failed to meet their initial burden of production with respect to exposure at the first site by failing to so argue in their opening brief (184 Cal. App. 4th 1078, 1084-1085 ; see Fidelity National Title Ins. Co. v. Schroeder (2009) 179 Cal. App. 4th 834, 847, n.11, 101 Cal. Rptr. 3d 854 ; Tilton v. Reclamation Dist. No. 800 (2006) 142 Cal. App. 4th 848, 864, n.12, 48 Cal. Rptr. 3d 366). The court held that reasonable jurors could not find that, as to the first site, plaintiffs had produced sufficient evidence to create a triable issue of fact that the husband was exposed to such asbestos-containing materials with enough frequency and regularity as to show a reasonable medical probability that the exposure was a factor in causing his illness. In contending that the husband was exposed to asbestos from insulation disturbed by defendants at the first site, plaintiffs primarily relied on a declaration from the husband submitted in opposition to defendants' summary judgment motion, in which he claimed that he was exposed to asbestos dust in the early 1960's when defendants performed work on boilers at the first site. However, the trial court properly disregarded the declaration on the basis that it contradicted his previous deposition testimony and interrogatory responses, and thus did not create a triable issue of fact, because a party cannot create an issue of fact by a declaration contradicting the party's own prior discovery responses (184 Cal. App. 4th 1078, 1087 ; see Shin v. Ahn (2007) 42 Cal. 4th 482, 500, n. 12, 64 Cal. Rptr. 3d 803, 165 P.3d 581 ; see also Preach v. Monter Rainbow (1993) 12 Cal. App. 4th 1441, 1451, 16 Cal. Rptr. 2d 320 (party cannot create issue of fact by declaration contradicting party's prior pleadings)). Because the declaration submitted in opposition to defendants' motion for summary judgment clearly contradicted the husband's earlier deposition testimony and interrogatory responses, the trial court could fairly disregard the declaration and conclude there was no substantial evidence of the existence of a triable issue of fact (184 Cal. App. 4th 1078, 1087; see D'Amico v. Board of Medical Examiners (1974) 11 Cal. 3d 1, 21, 112 Cal. Rptr. 786, 520 P.2d 10). Further, the trial court's decision to disregard the declaration was well justified, given that the declaration did not even acknowledge the contrary interrogatory responses and that plaintiffs provided no explanation for the contradiction at the time the declaration was submitted (184 Cal. App. 4th 1078, 1088) . A careful examination in light of the entire record yielded no explanation for the discrepancy and no basis for concluding that the interrogatory responses were obviously mistaken (184 Cal. App. 4th 1078, 1088 ; see Price v. Wells Fargo Bank (1989) 213 Cal. App. 3d 465, 482, 261 Cal. Rptr. 735). The trial court was perfectly entitled to give plaintiffs' answers to special interrogatories special consideration (184 Cal. App. 4th 1078, 1088 ; see Girard v. Ball (1981) 125 Cal. App. 3d 772, 781, 178 Cal. Rptr. 406), and to conclude that the husband's contradictory declaration did not constitute substantial evidence of the existence of a triable issue of fact (184 Cal. App. 4th 1078, 1088) . The trial court did not erroneously fail to consider other evidence they submitted besides the declaration, to find that plaintiffs had raised a triable issue as to whether defendants' activities as outside contractor exposed the husband to asbestos, because, without considering the declaration concerning exposure from boiler work at the first site, plaintiffs failed to present sufficient other evidence to raise a triable issue of fact whether the husband was exposed to asbestos at the site that was disturbed by defendants in their capacity as outside contractor (184 Cal. App. 4th 1078, 1089-1090) . Plaintiffs also failed to create a triable issue as to whether the husband was exposed to asbestos specified by defendants at the first site, because liberally construing plaintiffs' evidence, the most the court could conclude was that asbestos likely would have been found in some of the insulation in two buildings at the site and the husband worked in those buildings, which was not of sufficient weight to support a reasonable inference of causation. Further, plaintiffs presented insufficient evidence that the husband was actually exposed to asbestos attributable to defendants in other buildings at the site with sufficient frequency to create a reasonable probability that this exposure contributed to his disease, since nothing in the record established that he worked in those buildings at all (184 Cal. App. 4th 1078, 1090-1094) .

[a] Summary Judgment for Defendant

In Wyckoff v. State of California (2001) 90 Cal. App. 4th 45, 108 Cal. Rptr. 2d 198 , plaintiff in an automobile accident case sued the State for damages for personal injury and wrongful death, claiming that the center median barrier at the collision site constituted a dangerous condition of public property. The trial court granted the State's motion for summary judgment on the ground of design immunity under Gov. Code § 830.6. The court of appeal affirmed. The court held that the normal rules requiring denial of summary judgment if any triable issue of fact appears were not fully applicable in the case of a claim of design immunity. In a claim of design immunity, the defendant public entity is not required to prove that the design was a reasonable one. Instead, the defendant must only show some substantial evidence that a reasonable public employee or legislative body could have approved the design. Therefore, on a motion for summary judgment, the existence of a possible conflict in the evidence regarding the reasonableness of the design will not defeat summary judgment, as long as there is substantial evidence of reasonableness, even if contradicted (90 Cal. App. 4th 45, 50-51) .

Johnson v. Stratlaw, Inc. (1990) 224 Cal. App. 3d 1156, 274 Cal. Rptr. 363 , was a wrongful death action against a pizza parlor owner by the parents of a 16-year-old employee of the parlor who had been killed in a single-car accident on his way home from work. Plaintiffs alleged that the defendant had been negligent in requiring their son to work a 5:00 p.m. until after 2:00 a.m. shift on a non-schoolday, in violation of the hours prescribed for minors by Lab. Code § 1391, causing the minor to become tired and involved in the accident. The trial court granted defendant's motion for summary judgment, and plaintiffs appealed. The court of appeal affirmed, holding that the accident came within the special risk exception to the coming and going rule (barring workers' compensation for injuries received while traveling to and from work) and that the action was, therefore, barred by the exclusive remedy provisions (Lab. Code § 3600) of the workers' compensation law (224 Cal. App. 3d 1156, 1160-1164) .

In Trerice v. Blue Cross of California (1989) 209 Cal. App. 3d 878, 257 Cal. Rptr. 338 , the appellate court affirmed summary judgment for the defendant in an action by an employee against her former employer for intentional infliction of emotional distress, arising out of a company reorganization by the employer in which it had first presented the employee with a termination package, later withdrew the package, retained plaintiff as an employee, but required her to do work that was previously below her rank, and ultimately terminated her employment with conditions less advantageous than those originally offered. Although the court said that summary judgment is appropriate when the evidence in support of the moving party establishes that there is no triable issue of fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law (209 Cal. App. 3d 878, 882) , it added that when there is no material issue of fact to be tried and the sole question remaining is one of law, the trial court must determine the issue of law (209 Cal. App. 3d 878, 883) . The court explained thatto state a cause of action for intentional infliction of emotional distress, plaintiff must, among other things, show outrageous conduct by the defendant, that to be outrageous the conduct must be so extreme as to exceed all bounds of that usually tolerated in a civilized society, and that the trial court correctly found that, as a matter of law, the employer's conduct was not outrageous (209 Cal. App. 3d 878, 883) .

In Kurokawa v. Blum (1988) 199 Cal. App. 3d 976, 245 Cal. Rptr. 463 , the court of appeal, in affirming a summary judgment for the defendant on the ground that the action for breach of contract and fraud based on defendant's alleged promises to cohabit with plaintiff in a nonmarital relationship, help her in her business ventures, and jointly to accumulate, share, and account for property and income was barred by the statute of limitations, said that summary judgment is proper only if the affidavits in support of the defendant would be sufficient to sustain a judgment in his favor and plaintiff does not by affidavit show facts which present a triable issue (199 Cal. App. 3d 976, 988) .

In Stalnaker v. Boeing Co. (1986) 186 Cal. App. 3d 1291, 231 Cal. Rptr. 323 , a deceased employee's heirs appealed a grant of summary judgment in favor of the deceased's employer on the ground that plaintiffs' sole and exclusive remedy was workers' compensation. In affirming the trial court judgment, the court of appeal noted that while the defendant's declarations establish a complete defense to plaintiffs' action or demonstrate an absence of an essential element of plaintiffs' case, and the plaintiffs' opposition papers do not show that a triable issue of fact with respect to that defense or that essential element exists, no amount of factual conflicts on other aspects of the case will affect the result (citing Frazier, Dame, Doherty, Parrish & Hanawalt v. Boccardo, Blum, Lull, Niland, Teerlink & Bell (1977) 70 Cal. App. 3d 331, 338, 138 Cal. Rptr. 670). Defendants' declarations established that the deceased's injuries arose out of and in the course of his employment and that therefore the provisions under the workers' compensation law provided his sole and exclusive remedy. The court of appeal rejected plaintiffs' contentions that the allegations in their complaint gave rise to a cause of action independent of a workers' compensation claim and thus raised a triable issue of fact (186 Cal. App. 3d 1291, 1301) .

In Columbus Line, Inc. v. Gray Line Sight-Seeing Companies Associated, Inc. (1981) 120 Cal. App. 3d 622, 174 Cal. Rptr. 527 , an action for personal injuries by passengers against a vessel owner, a shore excursion manager, and a sightseeing trade association, the vessel owner and excursion manager filed a cross complaint for equitable indemnity against the trade association. The trade association moved for and obtained a summary judgment on the complaint on the ground that it was not negligent towards plaintiffs nor vicariously liable for the negligence of any codefendant. As cross defendant, the trade association then moved for and obtained summary judgment on the cross complaint. The court of appeal affirmed summary judgment for the trade association on the cross complaint, holding that collateral estoppel applied to preclude litigation of the indemnity issues which had been determined by the prior adjudication of the summary judgment on the complaint (120 Cal. App. 3d 622, 631) . Accordingly, the trial court had correctly determined that there was no triable issue of material fact and that the trade association was entitled to judgment on the cross complaint as a matter of law (120 Cal. App. 3d 622, 633) .

In Barnes v. State Bd. of Equalization (1981) 118 Cal. App. 3d 994, 173 Cal. Rptr. 742 , an action for declaratory relief and refund of sales and use tax, the court of appeal affirmed a summary judgment for defendant on the ground that plaintiff failed to exhaust his administrative remedies by refusing to present the factual issues to defendant so that it could render a decision on the merits. Because such a failure is a jurisdictional procedural defect which bars court action, there were no issues of fact or law left for the trial court (118 Cal. App. 3d 994, 1001-1002) .

In O'Connor v. Bloomer (1981) 116 Cal. App. 3d 385, 172 Cal. Rptr. 128 , an action for personal injuries brought by a patient against a hospital, a surgeon, and assistant surgeons, the court, in affirming the grant of summary judgment for the assistant surgeons, explained that the summary judgment procedure is designed to resolve causes of action where no triable issue exists as to any material fact. The court held that the supporting papers proved that defendants had no responsibility concerning the availability of a replacement aortic valve discovered to be missing during surgery, and that because they had no such responsibility, the doctrine of res ipsa loquitor did not apply (116 Cal. App. 3d 385, 391-392) .

In Warren v. Herndon (1981) 115 Cal. App. 3d 141, 171 Cal. Rptr. 220 , an action for damages for slander, the court affirmed summary judgment for defendants because of plaintiff's inability to prove malice on the part of defendants. After determining from the supporting declarations that the allegedly slanderous statements were not made with knowledge of their falsity or with a reckless disregard of whether they were true or false, the court held that defendants were entitled as a matter of law to summary judgment because the opposing declarations failed to raise any triable issues of material fact regarding the declarant's state of mind in making the allegedly slanderous statements (115 Cal. App. 3d 141, 149) .

In Orsetti v. City of Fremont (1978) 80 Cal. App. 3d 961, 146 Cal. Rptr. 75 , an action for inverse condemnation, the court affirmed summary judgment for defendant and held that such an action does not lie for the mere declaration of an intent to amend a general plan, nor does it lie for zoning actions in which the effect is mere reduction in market value through regulation of the land's use. The court stated that if a moving party shows that he or she is entitled to summary judgment, the opponent ofthe motion cannot rely on his or her pleadings, but must make an independent showing that he or she has sufficient proof of the matters alleged to raise a question of fact. Plaintiff did not file any declarations which presented a question of fact as to whether defendants' actions constituted a property-taking device (80 Cal. App. 3d 961, 966, 969-970) .

In Versa Technologies, Inc. v. Superior Court (1978) 78 Cal. App. 3d 237, 142 Cal. Rptr. 570 , an action for damages for personal injuries allegedly caused by a defective product, plaintiff had conceded that he had named the wrong party, but did not file a voluntary dismissal. In directing that a peremptory writ of mandate be issued requiring that the denial of defendant's motion for summary judgment be vacated and that a new order granting the motion be entered, the court stated that where a question of identity of one of the parties is raised in the form of a motion for summary judgment, then the opposing party should be required, at the very least, to file a counteraffidavit under penalty of perjury setting forth the facts on which he or she bases his or her good-faith belief that the party is the actual manufacturer of the product involved (78 Cal. App. 3d 237, 240) .

Frazier, Dame, Doherty, Parrish & Hanawalt v. Boccardo, Blum, Lull, Niland, Teerlink & Bell (1977) 70 Cal. App. 3d 331, 138 Cal. Rptr. 670 , was an action for tortious interference with contractual relations brought by a law firm against another law firm, an insurance company, and an investigator. The court of appeal, after reversing the grant of summary judgment in favor of defendant law firm and the investigator, affirmed summary judgment for defendant insurance company because the investigator's conduct in "capping" for a particular law firm was beyond the scope of his relationship with the insurance company, and there was no evidence to subject the company to liability under any theory of vicarious liability. The court noted that if the defendants' declarations in support of the motion for summary judgment establish a complete defense to plaintiff's case, and the plaintiff's declaration in reply does not show that a triable issue of fact with respect to that defense or that an essential element exists, then no amount of factual conflicts on other aspects of the case will affect the result and the motion should be granted (70 Cal. App. 3d 331, 338) .

County of Los Angeles v. Security Ins. Co. (1975) 52 Cal. App. 3d 808, 125 Cal. Rptr. 701 , was an action brought against developers on alleged breaches of agreements to complete street improvements and against defendant on alleged breaches of payment bonds entered into by defendant's predecessor in interest. The court reversed the denial of defendant's motion for summary judgment and ordered that a peremptory writ of mandate be issued directing the trial court to grant defendant's motion. It held that the cause of action against defendant was barred by the four-year statute of limitations on written obligations contained in Code Civ. Proc. § 337(1), which defendant had asserted as an affirmative defense in its answer. The court referred to the general rule that a defendant is entitled to a summary judgment when the record establishes as a matter of law that a cause of action asserted against him or her cannot prevail (52 Cal. App. 3d 808, 816) .

In Wood v. Brown (1974) 39 Cal. App. 3d 232, 114 Cal. Rptr. 63 , an action filed during decedent's lifetime to recover sums of money on various theories, defendant executrix was substituted as the party defendant. The court of appeal affirmed the grant of summary judgment for defendant on the ground that plaintiff neither filed a creditor's claim with the clerk of the court in the probate proceeding nor presented a claim to the special administrator within the four-month filing period as required by former Prob. Code § 707 [now see Prob. Code §§ 9002 (claim filing requirement), 9100 (time for filing claim)]. The court summarized the general rule that summary judgment is proper if the affidavits filed by the moving party state facts sufficient to sustain a judgment in his or her favor and the counteraffidavits do not set forth competent and sufficient evidence to present a triable issue of fact (39 Cal. App. 3d 232, 239) .

Craig v. Earl (1961) 194 Cal. App. 2d 652, 15 Cal. Rptr. 207 , was an action for damages and for an injunction based on an alleged trespass on plaintiff's land and the construction and maintenance of a pipeline thereon. The court of appeal affirmed summary judgment for defendants because defendants had made an adequate showing that they were entitled to judgment in their favor, and plaintiff failed to show facts which, if proved, would support a finding that defendants performed the actions on which the suit was based. The court noted that the counteraffidavits filed in response to defendant's motion may not create issues outside the pleadings, are not a substitute for an amendment to the pleadings, and are an ineffective defense to the motion unless they set forth facts showing that a good cause of action exists on the merits (194 Cal. App. 2d 652, 656) .

[b] Summary Judgment for Plaintiff

In Northern Cal. Psychiatric Society v. City of Berkeley (1986) 178 Cal. App. 3d 90, 223 Cal. Rptr. 609 , several psychiatric associations and an individual psychiatrist and taxpayer brought an action against a city for declaratory and injunctive relief concerning a city ordinance banning the use of electric shock treatment on any person within the city. The court of appeal upheld the trial court's granting of plaintiff's motion for summary judgment on grounds that state law preempted the city ordinance, and that the ordinance was unconstitutional (178 Cal. App. 3d 90, 99-109) .

The facts and procedural background of Security Pac. Nat. Bank v. Associated Motor Sales (1980) 106 Cal. App. 3d 171, 165 Cal. Rptr. 38 , are discussed under § 221.20[3][g]. The court of appeal affirmed summary judgment for plaintiff as to its action to impose indorser's liability on defendant, partly on the ground that defendant failed to present any evidence to contradict a presumption that the checks in question weredishonored. In so holding, the court stated that a presumption that operates so as to preclude the trier of fact from finding contrary to the presumption absent contrary evidence operates to eliminate the existence of a triable issue of fact when no contrary evidence is offered (106 Cal. App. 3d 171, 179-180) .

In People v. One 1964 Chevrolet Corvette Convertible (1969) 274 Cal. App. 2d 720, 79 Cal. Rptr. 447 , a forfeiture proceeding against an automobile alleged to have been unlawfully used for the possession of marijuana, the court affirmed summary judgment for the People because the driver's prior criminal conviction necessarily established his knowing possession of the drug in the car and collaterally estopped him and the owner from relitigating this issue. The court noted that summary judgment may be entered in the discretion of the trial court if the moving party's affidavits are sufficient to sustain a judgment in his or her favor and the opposing party does not show facts which may be deemed sufficient to present a triable issue (274 Cal. App. 2d 720, 729) .

[c] Burden of Proof

In Weseloh Family Limited Partnership v. K.L. Wessel Construction Co. (2004) 125 Cal. App. 4th 152, 22 Cal. Rptr. 3d 660 , defendant design engineers contracted with the builder of retaining walls to design walls for an automobile dealership project. When the walls failed, plaintiff property owners and general contractor sued the design engineers for negligence. The trial court granted summary judgment in favor of defendants on the ground that defendants did not owe a duty of care to plaintiffs. The court of appeal affirmed. The court held that defendants had satisfied their burden of production under Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(p)(2) by submitting undisputed evidence showing they did not owe plaintiffs a duty of care. The burden then shifted to plaintiffs to show either that such a duty existed or that there was a triable issue of material fact on the duty issue. Because plaintiffs did not meet their burden of showing a triable issue pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(p)(2), the court affirmed summary judgment for the defendants (125 Cal. App. 4th 152, 172-173) .

In Renna v. County of Fresno (2000) 78 Cal. App. 4th 1, 92 Cal. Rptr. 2d 586 , the trial court granted defendant's motion for summary judgment as to all three of plaintiff's causes of action. Plaintiff appealed claiming the trial court improperly granted summary judgment as to plaintiff's third cause of action, for alleged failure to pay plaintiff overtime wages in violation of the Fair Labor Standard's Act (29 U.S.C. § 201 et seq.). The court of appeal affirmed judgment for defendants. In so doing, the court noted that on appeal from a grant of summary judgment, the appellate court reviews the record de novo and independently determines if the motion was properly granted. The appellate court uses the same standards and rules as the trial court in deciding the propriety of the motion in evaluating the propriety of a grant of summary judgment. In a case in which the defendant was the moving party, the defendant must demonstrate through admissible evidence that one or more essential elements of the cause of action cannot be established. Once the defendant has made such a showing, the burden shifts to the plaintiff to produce evidence that a triable issue of fact exists as to an essential element of the cause of action (78 Cal. App. 4th 1, 5) .

In Ostayan v. Serrano Reconveyance Co. (2000) 77 Cal. App. 4th 1411, 92 Cal. Rptr. 2d 577 , which involved a seven count complaint, plaintiff claimed that he had been mislead into purchasing a parcel of income property at a trust deed foreclosure and sought to undo the transaction or, in the alternative, recover damages. The trial court granted summary judgment in favor of the defendants. The court of appeal affirmed. In so doing the court noted that the moving party bears the burden of establishing, by declarations and evidence, a complete defense to plaintiff's action or the absence of an essential element of plaintiff's case. The moving party must demonstrate that under no hypothesis is there a material factual issue requiring a trial. When the moving party makes that showing, the burden shifts to the opposing party to show, by responsive separate statement and admissible evidence, that triable issues of fact exist (77 Cal. App. 4th 1411, 1418) .

In Riverside County Community Facilities Dist. v. Bainbridge 17 (1999) 77 Cal. App. 4th 644, 92 Cal. Rptr. 2d 29 , involving a complaint to foreclose liens of special taxes, the trial court granted summary judgment in plaintiff's favor. The court of appeal affirmed. In so doing the court noted that in evaluating the propriety of a grant of summary judgment appellate review is de novo, and the appellate court independently reviews the record before the trial court. In practical effect, the appellate court assumes the role of a trial court and applies the same rules and standards that govern a trial court's determination of a motion for summary judgment. When the plaintiff is the moving party, the appellate court determines whether the plaintiff has met its burden under Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(o)(1) (see now Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(p)(1)) of showing there is no defense to a cause of action because the admissible evidence produced by the plaintiff proves each element of the cause of action entitling the party to judgment on that cause of action. If the moving party has met its statutory burden of proof and the summary judgment motion prima facie justifies a judgment, the burden shifts to the opposing party and the appellate court determines whether that party has met its burden under section 437c. When the defendants are the opposing parties, the appellate court determines whether they have met their burden under Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(o)(1) of producing admissible evidence showing that a triable issue of one or more material facts exists as to that cause of action or a defense to it (77 Cal. App. 4th 644, 653) .

In Hanson v. Lucky Stores, Inc. (1999) 74 Cal. App. 4th 215, 87 Cal. Rptr. 2d 487 , plaintiff sought damages for discrimination in violation of the Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA) (Gov. Code § 12900 et seq.) and wrongful termination in violation of public policy. The trial court granted defendant's motion for summary judgment. The court of appeal affirmed. In so doing, the court of appeal set forth the burdens of proof in defense motions for summary judgment in employment discrimination actions (see 74 Cal. App. 4th 215, 223-225) .

[d] Reliance on Absence of Evidence to Support Nonmoving Party's Case

In Wilkins v. National Broadcasting Co. (1999) 71 Cal. App. 4th 1066, 84 Cal. Rptr. 2d 329 , involving causes of action for physical intrusion on solitude or into private affairs, unlawful eavesdropping on or recording of confidential communications, fraud, and various other causes of action, the court of appeal, in affirming summary judgment in the defendants' favor, noted that under the current version of the summary judgment statute, a moving defendant need not support his or her motion with affirmative evidence negating an essential element of the responding party's case. Instead, the moving defendant may, through factually vague discovery responses or otherwise, point to the absence of evidence to support the plaintiff's case. When that is done, the burden shifts to the plaintiff to present evidence showing there is a triable issue of material fact. If the plaintiff is unable to meet his or her burden of proof regarding an essential element of his or her case, all other facts are rendered immaterial (71 Cal. App. 4th 1066, 1074) .

[e] Evidence and Inferences Considered by Court

In Basich v. Allstate Insurance Co. (2001) 87 Cal. App. 4th 1112, 105 Cal. Rptr. 2d 153 , the appellate court affirmed the trial court's grant of defendant's motion for summary adjudication as to punitive damages. Plaintiff argued that defendant Allstate's motion was procedurally defective because defendant failed to cite specifically to evidence in the record to support its claim that plaintiff could not prove that Allstate had acted with malice, oppression, or fraud. The court of appeal held that, although Allstate's memorandum of points and authorities did not repeat specific citations to the record, Allstate had submitted a comprehensive statement of undisputed material facts, which separately identified the punitive damages claim and each supporting material fact claimed to be without dispute. Citation to the record in the separate statement was sufficient; nothing more was required (87 Cal. App. 4th 1112, 1118) .

The court of appeal in Haskell v. Carli (1987) 195 Cal. App. 3d 124, 240 Cal. Rptr. 439 , reversed the trial court's grant of plaintiffs' motion for summary judgment, based on an earlier grant of motion for adjudication of issues, in a case seeking specific performance of an ambiguous contract. The trial court had admitted parol evidence in the form of a will and an affidavit of a party to the contract. Although plaintiffs had objected to their admission, the trial court had not heard or ruled on an objection based on the parol evidence rule. The court of appeal reversed, holding that the will and affidavit created an ambiguity that should have been permitted to go to trial for resolution. The evidence may not have been proper evidence, but as no objection was made on the basis of parol evidence, the trial court was bound to consider them in ruling on summary adjudication [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b)(5), (c)] (195 Cal. App. 3d 124, 129-132) .

In Hoover Community Hotel Development Corp. v. Thomson (1985) 167 Cal. App. 3d 1130, 213 Cal. Rptr. 750 , an action for breach of contract and conspiracy based on tortious injury to business relations was brought by plaintiff after one of the defendants refused to sell certain real property to plaintiff and sold it instead to one of the other defendants. The court of appeal affirmed the summary judgment granted to defendants. In holding that plaintiff had raised no triable issue of fact in opposition to the motion for summary judgment, the court held that (1) a declaration in the form of a legal conclusion is not sufficient to create a triable issue of fact (167 Cal. App. 3d 1130, 1137) ; (2) in ruling on motions for summary judgment, a trial court is permitted to draw inferences from related facts set forth in the declarations (167 Cal. App. 3d 1130, 1139) ; and (3) a declaration of fact by a party is not necessarily sufficient to create a factual issue if that declaration is contradicted by a prior admission of the declaring party (167 Cal. App. 3d 1130, 1141) .

In Hooks v. Southern Cal. Permanente Medical Group (1980) 107 Cal. App. 3d 435, 165 Cal. Rptr. 741 , while summarizing summary judgment rules, the court stated that in determining such a motion it must consider presumptions and draw inferences from the facts adduced where the inference is the only reasonable one that may be drawn, except that the court has no power in a summary proceeding to weigh one inference against another or against other evidence (107 Cal. App. 3d 435, 441-442) .

In C.L. Smith Co. v. Roger Ducharme, Inc. (1977) 65 Cal. App. 3d 735, 135 Cal. Rptr. 483 , an action for breach of contract by which plaintiff allegedly was supposed to perform masonry work for defendant general contractor, and for defendant's negligent failure to list plaintiff's name on the bid proposal form, the court affirmed summary judgment for defendant. Concerning the cause of action for breach of contract, the court stated that it could reasonably be inferred that the parties intended to reduce the terms of their agreement to writing. The court observed that the trial court is now permitted to draw inferences from related facts set forth in the declarations in ruling on summary judgment motions. The evidence supporting the motion showed that no written agreement was ever signed by defendant, thus no contract was entered into and there was nothing tobreach. As plaintiff only presented different conclusions of ultimate fact in his opposing papers, the court held that summary judgment was proper as to the first count (65 Cal. App. 3d 735, 742) .

[f] No Merit If Essential Element of Case Lacking

In Armato v. Baden (1999) 71 Cal. App. 4th 885, 84 Cal. Rptr. 2d 294 , plaintiff, after settling with a managed care corporation and one of its employees for negligent treatment of a broken wrist, filed another action against four doctors who worked part-time as independent contractors for the managed care corporation and who did not treat plaintiff. Plaintiff asserted the theory that even though defendants never met or treated plaintiff and did not supervise the treatment, their conduct in allowing their names and status as doctors to be used in connection with the managed care corporation led plaintiff to believe that the treating employee was a medical doctor, and had plaintiff known that the employee was only a physician assistant, plaintiff would not have let the employee treat plaintiff. Thus, the issue before the court was whether an independent contractor of a professional service corporation which permits his or her name and status to be associated with the corporation creates an "ostensible partnership" so as to make him or her liable for the torts of the corporation's employee. The trial court granted defendants' motions for summary judgment. In affirming the summary judgments in defendants' favor, the court of appeal, noted that if respondents' declarations in support of the motions for summary judgment demonstrate an absence of an essential element of appellant's case, and appellant's declarations submitted in reply do not show that a triable issue of fact exists with respect to that essential element, no amount of factual conflicts on other aspects of the case will affect the result and the motion for summary judgment should be granted (71 Cal. App. 4th 885, 893) .

[g] Effect of Admission Against Interest Obtained During Discovery

In Golden Eagle Refinery Co., Inc. v. Associated Intern. Ins. Co. (2001) 85 Cal. App. 4th 1300, 102 Cal. Rptr. 2d 834 , the plaintiff brought an action against its insurer to recover remediation costs incurred for environmental clean up of groundwater contamination. Defendant brought a motion for summary adjudication on the ground that plaintiff could not establish one element of its case, i.e., damages. The motion was based on plaintiff's interrogatory responses in which it admitted that it was unable to attribute damages to any particular cause, event, or time. The trial court granted defendant's motion, and the court of appeal affirmed, on the ground that plaintiff's admission that it would not be able to establish an essential element of its case, damages, was fatal to its cause of action for breach of contract (85 Cal. App. 4th 1300, 1310-1312) .

Thompson v. Williams (1989) 211 Cal. App. 3d 566, 259 Cal. Rptr. 518 , was an action by one attorney against another attorney to recover a referral fee. Defendant's motion for summary judgment was granted on the ground that an accord and satisfaction sufficient to establish a complete defense to plaintiff's complaint were shown, and hence, there remained triable fact issues to be determined. The court of appeal affirmed, holding that the requirement that the debtor make clear that acceptance of what he or she tendered was subject to the condition that it was to be in full satisfaction of the creditor's unliquidated claim was established by plaintiff's deposition testimony (211 Cal. App. 3d 566, 573) , and holding that plaintiff's own deposition testimony established that he, the creditor, clearly understood when accepting the tendered negotiated amount that such monies were intended to constitute payment in full of his claim (211 Cal. App. 3d 566, 574) . The court said that admissions against interest have high credibility value, particularly when they are made in the context of proceedings designed to elicit the facts. Accordingly, when such an admission becomes relevant to the determination, on motion for summary judgment, of whether or not there exist triable issues of fact between the parties, it is entitled to and should receive a kind of deference not normally accorded evidentiary allegations in affidavits, that after-the-fact attempts to reverse prior admissions are impermissible because a party cannot rely on contradictions in his or her own testimony to create a triable issue of fact, and that the assertion of facts contrary to prior testimony does not constitute substantial evidence of the existence of a triable issue of fact (211 Cal. App. 3d 566, 573-574) .

Nunez v. R'Bibo (1989) 211 Cal. App. 3d 559, 260 Cal. Rptr. 1 , was an action for damages for personal injuries sustained by a self-employed gardener hired by defendant to trim the branches of some trees in front of defendant's house. Plaintiff sustained severe back and head injuries when the limb of a tree he was cutting swung down, striking the ladder on which he was standing and causing him to fall. The ladder was owned by defendant. Plaintiff had asked and been given permission to use it because it was taller than his own. Plaintiff noticed the ladder was shaky or loose and he considered it dangerous, but nevertheless used it. Defendant's motion for summary judgment was granted on the ground of implied assumption of risk by plaintiff, and plaintiff appealed. The court of appeal affirmed. A portion of one of the declarations submitted by a witness in opposition to the motion was contradicted by his earlier deposition to the contrary, and the deposition evidence was corroborated by plaintiff's deposition. The court said that not all forms of evidence in connection with a summary judgment motion are of equal weight, and that when a defendant can establish a part of his defense with the admissions offered by plaintiff, the admissions are considered so valuable that contradictory affidavits may be disregarded (211 Cal. App. 3d 559, 563) .

In Advanced Micro Devices, Inc. v. Great American Surplus Lines Ins. Co. (1988) 199 Cal. App. 3d 791, 245 Cal. Rptr. 44 , a manufacturer brought an action against its primary and excess insurers asserting wrongful rejection of a claim for costs incurred in cleaning up toxic waste. The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's granting of summary judgment in favor of the insurers, noting that affidavits submitted by plaintiff contained repudiation of the affiant's previous deposition testimony. When an admission against interest is relevant to the determination of the existence of a triable issue of fact, it is entitled to and should receive a kind of deference not normally accorded evidentiary allegations in affidavits (199 Cal. App. 3d 791, 800) .

[h] No Merit If Essential Element of Case Lacking

In Brunelle v. Signore (1989) 215 Cal. App. 3d 122, 263 Cal. Rptr. 415 , the court of appeal affirmed a summary judgment for defendant homeowner in an action by a guest who had been bitten by a violin spider while spending a weekend at defendant's vacation home which abutted the desert. Neither party had seen the spider before it bit the plaintiff, and defendant was unaware that violin spiders had migrated into California. After pointing out that the essential elements of a cause of action for negligence are (1) a legal duty of care owed by the defendant to the plaintiff, (2) a breach of that duty, and (3) the breach was the proximate or legal cause of plaintiff's injury (215 Cal. App. 3d 122, 127) , the court held that an owner or occupier of a private residence has no duty to protect or prevent bites from harmful insects [or spiders] when: (1) it is not generally known that the specific insect [or spider] is indigenous to the area; (2) the homeowner has no knowledge that a specific harmful insect [or spider] is prevalent in the area where his or her residence is located; (3) the homeowner has on no occasion seen the specific type of harmful insect [or spider] either outside or inside the home; and (4) neither the homeowner nor the injured guest had seen the specific insect [or spider] that bit the guest either before or after the bite occurred, and that to impose a duty under these circumstances, where the owner or occupier of the premises had no reason to anticipate or guard against such an occurrence would be unfair and against public policy (215 Cal. App. 3d 122, 129) .

Mitsui Manufacturers Bank v. Superior Court (1989) 212 Cal. App. 3d 726, 260 Cal. Rptr. 793 , was a proceeding in mandate arising out of an action by a bank against a commercial borrower and its guarantors for money, enforcement of continuing guaranties, and foreclosure of its security interest resulting from an arm's-length routine lender/borrower contract. The defendants cross complained against the plaintiff for tort damages for alleged breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing by reneging on its alleged oral promise to renew short term credit indefinitely until the borrower was able to secure substitute long-term financing from another lender or, failing that, to provide the long-term financing itself. The cross defendant's motion for summary judgment was denied, and it petitioned the court of appeal for a writ of mandate. In granting the writ directing the trial court to vacate its order denying the motion for summary judgment and to grant the motion, the court of appeal held, in effect, that the essential element of duty necessary to invoke the covenant of good faith and fair dealing was lacking, that the ordinary arm's-length commercial lender/borrower relationship was insufficient as a matter of law to generate tort damages for the breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing, and that the application of this doctrine was limited to cases involving unique fiduciary-like relationships between the parties, such as the kind that exists between an insurer and its insured (212 Cal. App. 3d 726, 729-733) .

[i] No Merit if Complete Defense

In Bay Area Rapid Transit Dist. v. Superior Court (1996) 46 Cal. App. 4th 476, 53 Cal. Rptr. 2d 906 , plaintiff brought an action against BART for negligent maintenance based on injuries she received after a train she was riding jerked back and forth. BART moved for summary judgment on the basis of statutory design immunity, introducing evidence of a design which may cause lurching during acceleration. In opposition to this motion, plaintiff offered an expert declaration stating that there had been a failure of one of the elements of the system, and that this could be caused by negligent maintenance or supervision. In reply to the opposition, BART set forth the undisputed fact that the car in question had received preventive maintenance six days before the accident. The trial court denied BART's motion, and BART sought a writ of mandate. The court of appeal noted that recent amendments of the summary judgment statute changed the burden of proof, so that a defendant moving for summary judgment meets the burden of proof of showing that the action has no merit if that party shows that there is a complete defense to the action. If the defendant does this, the burden shifts back to the plaintiff to show that a triable issue of one or more material facts exists as to that defense. At this point, the plaintiff cannot rely on the mere allegations or denial of the pleadings, but must set forth specific facts showing that a triable issue of material facts exists (46 Cal. App. 4th 476, 481) . The court then reasoned that in this situation, BART had demonstrated that the accident was caused by the design of the train, because the acceleration system could cause lurching. The burden then shifted to plaintiff to show that something other than the acceleration design produced the lurching that caused the accident in question. The court concluded that the declaration by plaintiff's expert failed to raise a triable issue of fact (46 Cal. App. 4th 476, 481-482) . The court thus issued a pemptory writ of mandate directing the trial court to enter a new order granting the motion for summary judgment.

[j] Responsive Evidence Giving Rise to Mere Speculation Insufficient to Establish Triable Issue of Material Fact

In Fisher v. Gibson (2001) 90 Cal. App. 4th 275, 109 Cal. Rptr. 2d 145 , plaintiff moved for summary judgment or adjudication in an action to set aside certain fraudulent transfers. Defendant opposed the motion, but submitted no supporting evidence. Instead, defendant argued that he should not be required to substantively oppose the motion because he was the target of an ongoing grand jury investigation and was therefore entitled to assert his privilege against self incrimination. The trial court held that defendant had not satisfied the requirements of Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(h), and the court proceeded to rule on the motion. The appellate court affirmed, on the ground that defendant had not demonstrated by way of affidavit that facts essential to justify opposition might exist but could not then be presented; defendant had not presented any evidence that he was the subject of a grand jury proceeding or that even if he were, he was therefore precluded from presenting substantive opposition to the motion for summary judgment (90 Cal. App. 4th 275, 283-284) .

A. Summary Adjudication. A party may move for summary adjudication as to one or more causes of action within an action, one or more affirmative defenses, one or more claims for damages, or one or more issues of duty, if that party contends that the cause of action has no merit or that there is no affirmative defense thereto, or that there is no merit to an affirmative defense as to any cause of action, or both, or that there is no merit to a claim for damages, as specified in Civil Code Section 3294, or that one or more defendants either owed or did not owe a duty to the plaintiff or plaintiffs (Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(f)(1)). [If defendant is moving party, include: A cause of action has no merit if (1) one or more of the elements of the cause of action cannot be separately established, even if that element is separately pleaded, or (2) a defendant establishes an affirmative defense to the cause of action (Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(o))].

[CONTINUE]

B. Procedure on Motion for Summary Adjudication. A motion for summary adjudication may be made by itself or as an alternative to a motion for summary judgment and shall proceed in all procedural respects as a motion for summary judgment (Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(f)(2)). Hence, a motion for summary adjudication must be granted if all the papers submitted show that there is no triable issue as to any material fact with respect to the matter sought to be adjudicated, and that the moving party is entitled to summary adjudication as a matter of law (see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(c) (stating rule applicable to motions for summary judgment)).

C. Burden of Proof. [See § 221.20, Paragraph B].

[Optional] D. Court Not Limited to Negligence Causes of Action to Rule on Issue of Duty, but May Also Do So in Context of Contractual Obligations. The Legislature did not intend the words "an issue of duty" in Code of Civil Procedure § 437c(f) to apply only to negligence causes of action. If, under the facts and circumstances of a given case, a court finds it appropriate to determine the existence or nonexistence of a duty in the nature of a contractual obligation, it may properly do so by ruling on that issue presented by a motion for summary adjudication (Linden Partners v. Wilshire Linden Associates (1998) 62 Cal. App. 4th 508, 518-519, 73 Cal. Rptr. 2d 708).

[Optional] E. A Ruling That Completely Disposes of an Issue of Duty, but Which Has No Dispositive Impact on Other Issues, Is Appropriate. The substantive areas which may be challenged under Code of Civil Procedure § 437c(f) are stated in the disjunctive, that is, "a cause of action, an affirmative defense, a claim for damages or an issue of duty." The plain meaning of this language is that a motion for summary adjudication may be granted or denied as to any of these substantive areas, standing alone, and without reference to the dispositive effect of such ruling on any of the companion substantive issues. A ruling that completely disposes of an issue of duty as required by the last sentence of the section, but which has no dispositive impact on other issues, is in full conformance with legislative intent and the straight-forward, unambiguous language of the Code of Civil Procedure § 437c(f). Thus, on a motion for summary adjudication, the court may rule whether a defendant owes or does not owe a duty to plaintiff without regard for the dispositive effect of such ruling on other issues in the litigation, except that the ruling must completely dispose of the issue of duty (Linden Partners v. Wilshire Linden Associates (1998) 62 Cal. App. 4th 508, 519-522, 73 Cal. Rptr. 2d 708).

[Optional] F. Reliance on Absence of Evidence to Support Nonmoving Party's Case. On a motion for summary adjudication, a defendant may rely on a plaintiff's factually inadequate discovery answers to seek summary adjudication of a particular cause of action. If plaintiff fails to adduce evidence during discovery to support the factual allegations of his or her complaint, the burden shifts to the plaintiff and the motion may be granted if the plaintiff does not set forth specific facts to show a triable issue of material fact (Lazar v. Hertz Corp. (1999) 69 Cal. App. 4th 1494, 1508, 82 Cal. Rptr. 2d 368).

[Optional] G. Evidence and Inferences Considered by Court. [See § 221.20, Paragraph E.]

This memorandum may be submitted by a defendant or plaintiff in any action or proceeding in support of a motion for summary adjudication of a cause of action or causes of action within an action, an affirmative defense, a claim for punitive damages under Civ. Code § 3294, or the issue of whether or not one or more defendants owed a duty to one or more plaintiffs [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(f)(1)].

As noted in Paragraph B, a motion for summary adjudication may be made separately or as an alternative to a motion for summary judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(f)(2)]. If made in the alternative, this form should be combined with a memorandum supporting a motion for summary judgment [see § 221.20].

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Counsel should also attach affidavits, declarations, or other papers that support the motion. The supporting papers must include a separate statement of material facts that the moving party contends are undisputed, along with supporting evidence for each fact [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b)(1)]. Counsel may attach copies of any necessary documents if the originals are produced at the hearing and made available for inspection by the adverse party [Dugar v. Happy Tiger Records, Inc. (1974) 41 Cal. App. 3d 811, 816, 116 Cal. Rptr. 412 ; see Evid. Code § 1520].

A motion for summary adjudication is not to be procedurally defective when the supporting memorandum does not repeat specific citations to the record, but the moving papers include a comprehensive statement of undisputed material facts, which separately identify the claim that was the subject of the motion and each supporting material fact claimed to be without dispute with respect to that claim [Basich v. Allstate Ins. Co. (2001) 87 Cal. App. 4th 1112, 1118-1119, 105 Cal. Rptr. 2d 153 (separate statement of undisputed material facts specifically identified evidence in support of each undisputed fact with appropriate citation to the record, nothing more was required and defendant fully complied with Code Civ. Proc § 437c(b) and Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1350(c), (d), enumerating requirements for papers filed in support of motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication of issues)]. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1350(d) governs the format for motions for summary adjudication. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1350(h) governs the format for motions for summary judgment [Truong v. Glasser (2009) 181 Cal. App. 4th 102, 118, 103 Cal. Rptr. 3d 811 (because defendant's motion sought summary judgment, rather than summary adjudication of subissue, his separate statement met requirements of Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1350 without necessity of separately listing subissues as to which summary adjudication was sought)]. Even if additional headings are required, the court's power to deny summary judgment on the basis of failure to comply with Cal. Rules of Court, Rule 3.1350 is discretionary, not mandatory [Truong v. Glasser (2009) 181 Cal. App. 4th 102, 118, 103 Cal. Rptr. 3d 811 (trial court did not abuse its discretion by declining to reject defendant's summary judgment motion based on absence of headings within separate statement of material facts, where facts critical to ruling were adequately identified, and plaintiffs did not explain how any alleged deficiency in defendant's separate statement of material facts impaired plaintiffs' ability to marshal evidence to show that material facts were in dispute as to proper application of statute of limitations); see Cadlo v. Owens-Illinois, Inc. (2004) 125 Cal. App. 4th 513, 523, 23 Cal. Rptr. 3d 1 ; cf. San Diego Watercrafts, Inc. v. Wells Fargo Bank (2002) 102 Cal. App. 4th 308, 315-316, 125 Cal. Rptr. 2d 499] .

[b] Related Uses

Because "any party" may move for summary judgment or summary adjudication of a cause of action, duty issue, punitive damages claim, or defense under Code Civ. Proc. § 437c, this form may be adapted for use by a cross-complainant or cross-defendant [see, e.g., 580 Folsom Associates v. Prometheus Development Co. (1990) 223 Cal. App. 3d 1, 19, 272 Cal. Rptr. 227 (summary judgment for cross defendant); Nymark v. Heart Fed. Savings & Loan Assn. (1991) 231 Cal. App. 3d 1089, 1094, 283 Cal. Rptr. 53 (summary judgment for cross complainant)].

[c] Summary Adjudication of Cause of Action, Defense, Claim for Punitive Damages, or Issue of Duty

If any party contends that one or more causes of action within an action has no merit or that there is no defense thereto, or that there is no merit to an affirmative defense as to any cause of action, or both, or that there is no merit to a claim for damages under Civ. Code § 3294 (that is, a claim for punitive damages), or that one or more defendants either owed or did not owe a duty to the plaintiff orplaintiffs, then he or she may move for summary adjudication as to that cause or causes of action, that affirmative defense, that claim for damages, or that issue of duty [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(f)(1)]. A cause of action has no merit if one or more of the elements of the cause of action, even if not separately pleaded, cannot be established, or if there is a complete defense to the cause of action [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(o); see also Nazaroff v. Superior Court (1978) 80 Cal. App. 3d 553, 558, 145 Cal. Rptr. 657 (peremptory writ issued to set aside partial summary judgment on a cause of action because of triable issues of fact)].

A motion for summary adjudication must proceed in all procedural respects as a motion for summary judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(f)(2)]. Hence, it appears that, by analogy to a motion for summary judgment, a motion for summary adjudication must be granted if all the papers submitted show that there is no triable issue as to any material fact with respect to the matter sought to be adjudicated, and that the moving party is entitled to summary adjudication as a matter of law [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(c); see also Haskell v. Carli (1987) 195 Cal. App. 3d 124, 130, 240 Cal. Rptr. 439 (decided prior to amendment effective January 1, 1991, holding that motions for summary adjudication are governed by Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b), (c))].

The court will not grant a motion for summary adjudication unless it completely disposes of a cause of action, an affirmative defense, a claim for damages, or an issue of duty [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(f)(1)].

If a motion for summary adjudication is granted, at the trial of the action, the cause or causes of action within the action, affirmative defense or defenses, claim for damages, or issue or issues of duty as to the motion which has been granted, shall be deemed to be established and the action shall proceed as to the cause or causes of action, affirmative defense or defenses, claim for damages, or issue or issues of duty remaining [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(n)(1)].

In trying the action, the fact that a motion for summary adjudication has been granted as to one or more causes of action, affirmative defenses, claims for damages, or issues of duty within the action will not operate to bar any cause of action, affirmative defense, claim for damages, or issue of duty as to which summary adjudication was not sought or was denied [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(n)(2)]. Moreover, at trial, neither a party, nor a witness, nor the court is allowed to comment to a jury on the grant or denial of a motion for summary adjudication [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(m)(3)].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Court Not Limited to Negligence Causes of Action to Rule on Issue of Duty, but May Also Do So in Context of Contractual Obligations

In Linden Partners v. Wilshire Linden Associates (1998) 62 Cal. App. 4th 508, 73 Cal. Rptr. 2d 708 , plaintiffs agreed to buy a medical office building from the defendants. The purchase agreement obligated the defendants to furnish, but not until close of escrow, estoppel certificates signed by each tenant attesting to the space occupied, the date of the current lease, length of the terms, the amount of current monthly rent, and other information that would serve as a relatively full disclosure of the terms and conditions of the landlord/tenant relationship between the defendants (as landlords) and the tenants. A further condition of plaintiff's obligation under the agreement was the approval of estoppel certificates signed by at least 75 percent of the tenants and dated not more than 20 days before the close of escrow. Defendants agreed to provide estoppel certificates signed by defendants for the balance of the tenants. One tenant in the building had a subtenant. The subtenant refused to sign an estoppel certificate. The sublessor also refused to sign an estoppel certificate for its subtenant. A month before the escrow period, defendants broached to plaintiffs an idea concerning a buy-out of the tenant's lease. Defendant suggested to plaintiffs if the tenant was brought off, the space occupied by the tenant could be leased at a higher rate. There was no word about the amount of the subtenant's rent in the tenant's lease and in the sublease there was a paragraph which stated an amount of base rental and then described the methodology for calculating the total rental. Ultimately, the parties held a meeting to discuss the tenant's buy out. At that meeting the plaintiffs asked how to calculate the subtenant's rent. One of the defendants present at the meeting described how to make the calculations. Plaintiffs followed defendants directions and calculated the subtenant's monthly rental to be $9,327.61. On or about the day of the close of escrow, defendants put an estoppel certificate for the subtenant in escrow, showing the subtenant's monthly rental to be $9,327.61. Escrow closed and now the plaintiffs were the subtenant's landlord. Plaintiffs inquired and finally received the subtenant's first rent check which was for $6,177.60. Both parties had made the same mistake of applying the figure of the subtenant's pro rata share of operating expenses to the amount of such expenses attributable to the sublessordating back to the base year of 1972, instead of the much smaller amount of such expenses dating back only to 1982, as provided for in the sublease. Plaintiffs immediately called the error to the defendants' attention and demanded that the defendants make up the difference. They refused and a suit was filed. Plaintiff alleged causes of action for intentional and negligent misrepresentation, breach of written contract and money had and received. A jury trial followed with the jury finding for defendants on the fraud and money claims and for plaintiffs on the breach of contract claim awarding damages in the sum of $131,000 plus interest. Defendants appealed (62 Cal. App. 4th 508, 512-515) .

The court of appeal affirmed. One issue before the court of appeal was whether the law and motion judge had erred in granting plaintiffs motion for summary adjudication regarding the issue of duty. Defendants argued that the judge's ruling on the issue of duty was improper as a matter of law in that the issue of duty as determined by the law and motion judge in the case was not the kind of issue of duty contemplated by Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(f). In support of its argument, defendants relied principally on Regan Roofing Co. v. Superior Court (1994) 24 Cal. App. 4th 425, 29 Cal. Rptr. 2d 413 (62 Cal. App. 4th 508, 517) . The court concluded that such reliance was misplaced noting that Regan does not support the defendants in the argument that normal and customary contractual performance obligations are not duties under Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(f) (62 Cal. App. 4th 508, 517-518) . Neither this court nor the Regan court believes that the Legislature intended the word "an issue of duty" in Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(f) to apply only to negligence causes of action (62 Cal. App. 4th 508, 518) . Rather, if under the facts and circumstances of a given case, a court finds it appropriate to determine the existence or nonexistence of a duty in the nature of a contractual obligation, it may properly do so by ruling on that issue presented by a motion for summary adjudication (62 Cal. App. 4th 508, 519) . In the case before the court, the agreement did not specifically provide that defendants had a duty (i.e., contractual obligation) to deliver to plaintiffs an estoppel certificate containing an accurate statement of the current monthly rental from the subtenant. Such language was, however, implicit in the obligatory language of the agreement and the court was asked to declare and define such duty by motion for summary adjudication. Thus, the court held that under the facts and circumstance of the case, such motion was a proper subject for summary adjudication and the duty that was found was the kind of duty to which the Legislature intended Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(f) to apply (62 Cal. App. 4th 508, 519) .

Note that Regan Roofing Co. v. Superior Court (1994) 24 Cal. App. 4th 425, 29 Cal. Rptr. 2d 413 is discussed in § 221.30[3][a].

[b] A Ruling That Completely Disposes of an Issue of Duty, but Which Has No Dispositive Impact on Other Issues, Is Appropriate

The facts and procedural background of Linden Partners v. Wilshire Linden Associates (1998) 62 Cal. App. 4th 508, 73 Cal. Rptr. 2d 708 , are discussed under § 221.21[3][a]. One issue before the court of appeal was whether the law and motion judge had erred in granting plaintiffs motion for summary adjudication regarding the issue of duty. Defendants argued that, to be consonant with the legislative purpose of Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(f), a ruling on summary adjudication which determines an issue of duty must, in the words of Regan Roofing Co. v. Superior Court (1994) 24 Cal. App. 4th 425, 436, 29 Cal. Rptr. 2d 413 , "dispose of an entire cause of action or affirmative defense ... [or] terminate [some] portion of [an] action" (62 Cal. App. 4th 508, 519) . Defendants asserted that the judge's ruling on the issue of duty did not have such dispositive effect and that, based on the language of Regan, such ruling failed to meet the legislative requirement of the section (62 Cal. App. 4th 508, 519) . The court rejected this argument noting that the language from Regan, on which defendants based their argument, seems clearly at variance from the language of Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(f) (62 Cal. App. 4th 508, 519) . Rather, the court noted that the substantive areas which may be challenged under Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(f) are stated in the disjunctive, i.e., "... a cause of action, an affirmative defense, a claim for damages or an issue of duty." The plain meaning of this language is that a motion for summary adjudication may be granted or denied as to any of these substantive areas, standing alone, and without reference to the dispositive effect of such ruling on any of the companion substantive issues. A ruling that completely disposes of an issue of duty as required by the last sentence of the section, but which has no dispositive impact on other issues would appear to be fully in conformance with legislative intent and the straightforward, unambiguous language of the Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(f) (62 Cal. App. 4th 508, 519-520) . The court concluded that it could not accept Regan as controlling precedent (62 Cal. App. 4th 508, 520) and held that on a motion for summary adjudication, the court may rule whether a defendant owes or does not owe a duty to plaintiff without regard for the dispositive effect of such ruling on other issues in the litigation, except that the ruling must completely dispose of the issue of duty (62 Cal. App. 4th 508, 522) .

Note that Regan Roofing Co. v. Superior Court (1994) 24 Cal. App. 4th 425, 29 Cal. Rptr. 2d 413 is discussed in § 221.30[3][a].

[c] Reliance on Absence of Evidence to Support Nonmoving Party's Case

In Lazar v. Hertz Corp. (1999) 69 Cal. App. 4th 1494, 82 Cal. Rptr. 2d 368 , plaintiff filed a class action complaint for damages and injunctive relief against four rental companies alleging they refused to rent automobiles to persons underage 25 or unreasonably restricted such rentals. The trial court sustained demurrers to four of the seven causes of action alleged without leave to amend. Plaintiff voluntarily dismissed two additional causes of action, leaving only one cause of action alleging unfair business practices by defendants against plaintiff and those younger drivers who were charged a surcharge because of their age. Ultimately, the trial court granted a motion for summary adjudication filed by two of the defendants on the last cause of action. The trial court then entered judgment in favor of the defendants, all of the alleged causes of action having been adjudicated against plaintiff, and plaintiff appealed (69 Cal. App. 4th 1494, 1499-1500) .

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment. With regard to summary adjudication, in the trial court the defendants argued that plaintiff's discovery responses were factually devoid of evidence and thus, plaintiff had no evidence to support the factual allegations of the plaintiff's complaint. On appeal, as in the trial court, plaintiff argued that plaintiff was not obligated to bring forth any evidence of unfair surcharges to survive a summary adjudication motion. In rejecting this argument, the court of appeal noted that on a motion for summary adjudication, a defendant may rely on a plaintiff's factually inadequate discovery answers to seek summary adjudication of a particular cause of action. If plaintiff fails to adduce evidence during discovery to support the factual allegations of his or her complaint, the burden shifts to the plaintiff, and the motion may be granted if the plaintiff does not set forth specific facts to show a triable issue of material fact. Plaintiff did not put forth any evidence in the trial court or on appeal in support of plaintiff's claim that the surcharge was unreasonably high or unreasonably imposed on younger drivers such that it constituted an unfair business practice. Because plaintiff failed to meet this burden, the defendants were entitled to summary adjudication in their favor as a matter of law (69 Cal. App. 4th 1494, 1508) .

[a] Reliance on Absence of Evidence to Support Nonmoving Party's Case

In Certain Underwriters at Lloyd's of London v. Superior Court (1997) 56 Cal. App. 4th 952, 65 Cal. Rptr. 2d 821 , involving an insurance coverage dispute, the trial court denied defendant's motion for summary adjudication of issues and defendant filed a petition for writ of mandate. Although the court of appeal denied the petition and refused to read the 1993 amendment to Code Civ. Proc. § 437c as a wholesale adoption of Fed. R. Civ. P., Rule 56 (56 Cal. App. 4th 952, 960-962) , the court, quoting from Leslie G. v. Perry & Associates (1996) 43 Cal. App. 4th 472, 482, 50 Cal. Rptr. 2d 785 , noted that a moving defendant may, through factually vague discovery responses or otherwise, point to the absence of evidence to support the plaintiff's case. When that is done, the burden shifts to the plaintiff to present evidence showing there is a triable issue of material fact. If the plaintiff is unable to meet its burden of proof regarding an essential element of its case, all other facts are rendered immaterial (56 Cal. App. 4th 952, 956) . In noting that the defendant's initial burden can be met by the presentation of factually vague discovery responses or otherwise, the court, however, also noted that no case suggests that Code Civ. Proc. § 437c permits the moving defendant to meet its initial burden without any showing at all (56 Cal. App. 4th 952, 956) .

[b] Court May Grant Summary Adjudication on Issue of Duty

Public Utilities Com. v. Superior Court (2010) 181 Cal. App. 4th 364, 105 Cal. Rptr. 3d 234 , was a mandate proceeding challenging the trial court's denial of a motion for summary adjudication or judgment brought by defendant, which was a public agency, in a wrongful death action arising out of a fatal accident at a railroad crossing. The crossing was controlled by flashing lights. Plaintiffs claimed that the railroad crossing constituted a dangerous condition because a recommendation by defendant to upgrade the crossing's warning devices by installing a gate was not implemented. Plaintiffs conceded that defendant did not own the property on which the railroad crossing was located, but contended that defendant controlled the property within the meaning of Gov. Code § 830 because of its regulatory power over the crossing, including its authority over installation of safety devices. The trial court adopted that analysis and denied defendant's motion (181 Cal. App. 4th 364, 366-372) . The Court of Appeal found that a public entity's ability to regulate property it neither owned nor possessed was not equivalent to a public entity having control of the property within the meaning of § 830 and concluded that as a matter of law that defendant did not control the railroad crossing. The court issued a writ of mandate directing the trial court to summarily adjudicate in favor of defendant the issue whether it owed a duty to plaintiffs based upon the allegation that it controlled the railroad crossing. The question whether the crossing was controlled by defendant within the meaning of Gov. Code § section 830 was an issue of law. The trial court therefore erred in concluding that there was a triable issue of material fact on this issue. Code of Civil Procedure section 437c(f)(1) permits a trial court to summarily adjudicate an issue of duty (181 Cal. App. 4th 364, 380-381) .

EVIDENCE CONTAINED IN THE PAPERS OPPOSING A MOTION FOR SUMMARY _____ [JUDGMENT or ADJUDICATION] TO WHICH OBJECTIONS HAVE BEEN MADE AND SUSTAINED MAY NOT BE CONSIDERED BY THE COURT IN DETERMINING WHETHER THERE IS NO TRIABLE ISSUE OF MATERIAL FACT.

A. Exclusion of Evidence to Which Objections Have Been Sustained. Evidence contained in any of the papers submitted in opposition to a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication, to which evidentiary objections have been made and sustained by the court, must not be considered by the court in determining whether all the papers show that there is no triable issue as to any material fact (Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(c)).

B. Objections to Evidence. _____ [Specify objecting party, e.g., Defendant] _____ [name] objects to _____'s [specify opposing party, e.g., Plaintiff] evidence as set forth in Written Objections to Evidence, filed concurrently with this Reply.

[Optional] C. Reliance on Pleadings Is Inadequate. The party opposing a motion for _____ [summary judgment or summary adjudciation] may not rely on the mere allegations or denial of its pleadings to show that a triable issue of material fact exists but, instead, must set forth the specific facts showing that a triable issue of material fact exists as to that cause of action or a defense thereto (Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(p)).

[Optional] D. Opposing Party's Papers May Not Create Issue Outside Pleadings. The party opposing a motion for _____ [summary judgment or summary adjudication] may not create issues outside the pleadings (*Laabs v. [a] Use of Form

This reply memorandum may be used by a party moving for summary judgment or summary adjudication to point out the fact that evidence to which objections have been made and sustained must not be considered by the court in determining whether the papers show there is no triable issue of material fact. Optional Paragraph C should be used if the opposing party seeks to rely improperly on its pleadings in opposing the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(p)]. On the other hand, counter affidavits filed in response to a defendant's motion for summary judgment may not create issues outside the pleadings and are not a substitute for an amendment to the pleadings [Malmstrom v. Kaiser Aluminum & Chemical Corp. (1986) 187 Cal. App. 3d 299, 313, 231 Cal. Rptr. 820] .

Any reply to the opposition must be served and filed by the moving party not less than five days preceding the noticed or continued date of hearing, unless for good cause the court orders otherwise [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b)(4)].

It is recommended that objections raised orally at the hearing be accompanied by the objections in writing, as well as by a supporting memorandum. Effective January 1, 2007, the California Rules of Court contain specific format requirements for written objections to evidence in support of or in opposition to a motion for summary judgment. All written objections to evidence must be served and filed separately from the other papers in support of or in opposition to the motion. Each written objection must be numbered consecutively and must:

(1) Identify the name of the document in which the specific material objected to is located;

(2) State the exhibit, title, page, and line number of the material objected to;

(3) Quote or set forth the objectionable statement or material; and

(4) State the grounds for each objection to that statement or material.

The objections must also follow one of two formats specified in Rule 3.1354 [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1354(b)]. Written objections must be served and filed at the same time as the objecting party's opposition or reply papers are served and filed [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1354(a)]. A party submitting written objections to evidence must also submit with the objections a proposed order, which also must follow one of two formats shown in Rule 3.1354(c).

CAUTION:
Objections on specific evidence may be referenced by the objection number in the right column of a separate statement in opposition or reply to a motion, but the objections must not be restated or reargued in the separate statement [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1354(b)].

For forms of objections to evidence and proposed order, see Ch. 537, Summary Judgment , §§ 537.86, 537.87 in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender).

A party desiring to make objections to evidence in the papers on a motion for summary judgment must either submit objections in writing pursuant to Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1354, or make arrangements for a court reporter to be present at the hearing [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1352].

[b] Waiver of Evidentiary Objections

Evidentiary objections not made at the hearing on the motion are deemed waived [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b)(5), (d)].

The provision relating to waiver of evidentiary objection set out in Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b), was amended effective January 1, 1991, and the same legislation added the similar provision set out in Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(d). In connection with these amendments, the Legislature expressly noted its intent that all objections to the form and substance of the moving and opposing papers must be first made in the trial court and not on appeal by the parties or by the appellate court, and that the rules to contrary stated in Witchell v. De Korne (1986) 179 Cal. App. 3d 965, 225 Cal. Rptr. 176 , and Zuckerman v. Pacific Savings Bank (1986) 187 Cal. App. 3d 1394, 232 Cal. Rptr. 458 were abrogated [Stats. 1990, Ch. 1561, § 1]. These decisions had held that, notwithstanding the waiver of evidentiary objections set out in Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b), a party had a right to object on appeal to matters relating to the competency of the witness or the sufficiency of the affidavits, and that this right was not waived by failure to object at the trial level [see Zuckerman v. Pacific Savings Bank (1986) 187 Cal. App. 3d 1394, 1404, 232 Cal. Rptr. 458 (objection on ground that declaration was not based on personal knowledge); Witchell v. De Korne (1986) 179 Cal. App. 3d 965, 974, 225 Cal. Rptr. 176 (objection to sufficiency of supporting affidavit)].

Evidentiary objections submitted in proper written form before the hearing, as well as oral objections made during the hearing, preserve the evidentiary issues for appeal; the trial court has a duty to rule on objections presented in proper form, and if the trial court fails to rule then the objections are preserved on appeal [Reid v. Google, Inc. (2010) 50 Cal. 4th 512, 531, 235 P.3d 988, 113 Cal. Rptr. 3d 327].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Opposing Party's Papers May Not Create Issue Outside Pleadings

Laabs v. City of Victorville (2008) 163 Cal. App. 4th 1242, 78 Cal. Rptr. 3d 372 was a personal injury action arising out of an automobile accident. Plaintiff sued various parties, including the City of Victorville and the County of San Bernardino. She alleged her injuries were caused by a dangerous condition of public property. The accident in question occurred at the intersection of a four-lane, north/south road and a two-lane, east/west road. The two-lane road has a stop side at the westbound intersection. The accident occurred when a northbound vehicle on the larger road collided with a westbound vehicle turning from the smaller road onto the larger road. Plaintiff was a passenger in the vehicle traveling northbound. The other vehicle was turning left from the two-lane road when the two vehicles collided. The vehicle plaintiff was riding in, which was traveling at an estimated 74 miles per hour, spun around, jumped a curb, and crashed into a light pole on the adjacent sidewalk. In her First Amended Complaint, Plaintiff alleged that the City and County were negligent in designing, constructing, and maintaining the roads in that there was inadequate sight distance for the turning car to see the northbound car. The City moved for summary judgment on the grounds that the intersection was not a dangerous condition as a matter of law and on the basis of various immunities. Plaintiff opposed the motion on various grounds, but also argued that the placement of the light pole constituted a dangerous condition that contributed to the severity of her injuries. The court granted the City's motion for summary judgment, and the plaintiff appealed.

On appeal, the City argued that because Plaintiff did not make allegations regarding the placement of the light pole in her complaint, the court could not properly consider this argument on appeal. Plaintiff argued that although the light pole was not specifically mentioned in the complaint, the City's dangerous condition liability was mentioned and the light pole fit into that allegation. The court noted that in summary judgment proceedings, the pleadings delimit the issues to be considered and an opposing plaintiff may not bring up new, unpleaded issues in the opposing papers. Plaintiff should have sought to amend her complaint prior to the summary judgment hearing or at the hearing itself in order to raise the allegations about the light pole, as amendments to pleadings are readily allowed in the context of a summary judgment motion. Because the complaint attempted to predicate liability on a totally different condition, it was not broad enough to encompass the light pole theory of liability. The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's grant of summary judgment in defendant's favor (163 Cal. App. 4th 1242, 1257) .

Allyson v. Department of Transportation (1997) 53 Cal. App. 4th 1304, 1318-1321, 62 Cal. Rptr. 2d 490 , involved a personal injury action, in which the plaintiff suffered personal injuries in a roadside, motor vehicle accident during an early spring snowstorm. The theory of the plaintiff's action was that the defendant, for many reasons, was responsible for the slippery and therefore dangerous condition of the highway. The defendant pleaded the weather immunity defense of Gov. Code § 831. The trial court granted summary judgment in the defendant's favor.

The court of appeal affirmed, noting that the defendant's filings in support of its motion were sufficient to provide the factual basis to make its affirmative defense available and thereby shift the burden to the plaintiff to demonstrate a triable issue of material fact with reference to that defense (53 Cal. App. 4th 1304, 1317-1318) . Although the plaintiff's filings in an effort to carry the plaintiff's burden were extensive, none of the plaintiff's filings were even remotely addressed to the dispositive issue framed by the pleadings, i.e., whether theimmunity provided for in Gov. Code § 831 was factually available. The plaintiff's filings were all addressed to nonissues and were based on the fallacious theory that the defendant had an unqualified duty to remedy the allegedly dangerous condition existing at the time of the plaintiff's injury on the state route at the location in question (53 Cal. App. 4th 1304, 1318) .

Sutherland v. Barclays American/Mortgage Corp. (1997) 53 Cal. App. 4th 299, 61 Cal. Rptr. 2d 614 , involved an action against a mortgage company. The plaintiff owned a condominium that sustained severe damage in an earthquake. The mortgage company agreed to put a "stop" on the plaintiff's account for three months during which time the plaintiff did not have to make any payments. The plaintiff thought that the mortgage payments would resume at the regular amount at the end of the three month period thereby extending the life of the mortgage by three months. A week before the end of the "stop" period, the mortgage company informed the plaintiff that the next scheduled payment had to include not only the regular monthly amount, but also the sum of the three months' payments not made during the "stop" period. The plaintiff sent the mortgage company a check for one month only which was returned as an improper partial payment, and the mortgage company declared the plaintiff in default. The plaintiff filed an action against the mortgage company, alleging several causes of action, and seeking declaratory and injunctive relief to prevent foreclosure of the plaintiff's home. The trial court granted summary judgment for the defendant mortgage company.

The court of appeal reversed the summary judgment, with directions to enter summary adjudication as to certain claims. The court concluded that some but not all of the plaintiff's causes of action raised triable issues of fact. On appeal, the plaintiff argued that the court should recognize a new cause of action when a mortgagee false declares a mortgagor to be in default with intent of assigning the load to HUD and collecting on federal mortgage insurance. According to the plaintiff, the mortgagee in that situation is attempting to defraud the federal government. The court of appeal declined to address this contention because it was raised for the first time on appeal. In this regard the court noted that the complaint did not plead such a theory of liability and the issue was not addressed during the summary judgment proceedings. Quoting from Nash v. Fifth Amendment (1991) 228 Cal. App. 3d 1106, 1116, 279 Cal. Rptr. 465 , the court stated that it is well established that a motion for summary judgment must be directed to the issues raised by the pleadings. The papers filed in response to a defendant's motion for summary judgment may not create issues outside the pleadings, and are not a substitute for an amendment to the pleadings. A defendant is not required to refute liability on some theoretical possibility not included in the pleading (53 Cal. App. 4th 299, 317) .

Myricks v. Lynwood Unified School Dist. (1999) 74 Cal. App. 4th 231, 87 Cal. Rptr. 2d 734 , involved a personal injury action. Based on the evidence, the trial court granted summary judgment in favor of defendants finding no basis for imposing liability against them for plaintiffs' injuries. Plaintiffs appealed (74 Cal. App. 4th 231, 234-237) .

The court of appeal affirmed. The sole issue on appeal was whether sufficient evidence existed to create a triable issue of fact regarding the defendant's potential liability for the accident which gave rise to the personal injuries (74 Cal. App. 4th 231, 234) . In concluding that there was no legal basis to expose the defendants to potential liability for the accident (74 Cal. App. 4th 231, 234) , the court noted that an issue of fact can only be created by a conflict in the evidence. It is not created by speculation, conjecture, imagination, or guess work, nor is it raised by cryptic, broadly phrased, and conclusory assertions or mere possibilities (74 Cal. App. 4th 231, 237) .

[Caption. See § 221.22.]

THE COURT SHOULD GRANT _____ [specify moving party, e.g., PLAINTIFF'S or DEFENDANT'S] MOTION FOR SUMMARY _____ [JUDGMENT or ADJUDICATION] BECAUSE _____ [specify opposing party, e.g., DEFENDANT or PLAINTIFF] HAS _____ [SUBMITTED AN INADEQUATE or NOT SUBMITTED A] SEPARATE STATEMENT IN RESPONSE TO _____ [specify moving party, e.g., PLAINTIFF'S or DEFENDANT'S] STATEMENT OF MATERIAL FACTS CONTENDED TO BE UNDISPUTED.

A. Inadequacy or Lack of Statement of Disputed or Undisputed Material Facts. The opposing papers must include a separate statement that responds to each of the material facts contended by the moving party to be undisputed, indicating whether the opposing party agrees or disagrees that those facts are undisputed (Mills v. Forestex Co. (2003) 108 Cal. App. 4th 625, 640-641, 134 Cal. Rptr. 2d 273 ; Frazee v. Seely (2001) 95 Cal. App. 4th 627, 635-636, 115 Cal. Rptr. 2d 780). The statement also must set forth plainly and concisely any other material facts that the opposing party contends are disputed. Each material fact contended by the opposing party to be disputed must be followed by a reference to the supporting evidence. The failure to comply with this requirement of a separate statement may constitute a sufficient ground, in the court's discretion, for granting the motion (Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b)(3)). When the moving party hasmet its initial burden of proof, the court has discretion under Code of Civil Procedure Section 437c(b) to grant summary judgment based on the opposing party's failure to file a proper separate statement (Collins v. Hertz Corp. (2006) 144 Cal. App. 4th 64, 74-75, 50 Cal. Rptr. 3d 149 ; Thatcher v. Lucky Stores, Inc. (2000) 79 Cal. App. 4th 1081, 1083, 1086, 94 Cal. Rptr. 2d 575).

[Optional] B. Lack of Knowledge Insufficient to Create Dispute. A separate statement of disputed facts that asserts a lack of knowledge and a claim that a fact is "disputed" is insufficient when the opposing party has not requested a continuance to conduct further discovery or otherwise explained its ignorance (City of Hope Nat. Medical Center v.

This reply memorandum of points and authorities may be used by a party moving for summary judgment or summary adjudication in order to raise objections to the adequacy or lack of the opposing party's statement of disputed or undisputed facts [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b)]. When appropriate, this form should be combined with a general reply memorandum objecting to evidence contained in the opposing party's papers [see § 221.22].

Any reply to the opposition must be served and filed by the moving party not less than five days preceding the noticed or continued date of hearing, unless the court for good cause orders otherwise. Evidentiary objections not raised in such a written reply or orally at the hearing are deemed waived [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b)(4)].

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should show by specific reference if the opposing party (1) has not responded or has responded inadequately to each material fact that the moving party contends is undisputed, (2) has not set forth plainly and concisely any material facts that the opposing party contends are disputed, (3) has not referred to supporting evidence for each material fact contended to be disputed, or (4) has failed completely to respond to the moving party's statement of undisputed facts.

With regard to paragraph A, some cases have upheld the granting of summary judgment based on the opposing party's failure to file a separate statement as required under Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b)(3) without specifying any requirement that the moving party first satisfy its burden of proof [see, e.g., Kaplan v. LaBarbera (1997) 58 Cal. App. 4th 175, 179, 67 Cal. Rptr. 2d 903 (failure to submit separate statement in opposition to motion alone is sufficient to uphold grant of motion; summary judgment for defendant upheld); Blackman v. Burrows (1987) 193 Cal. App. 3d 889, 893, 238 Cal. Rptr. 642 (trial court did not abuse its discretion in granting summary judgment motion based on opposing party's failure to submit separate statement); see also Gilbertson v. Osman (1986) 185 Cal. App. 3d 308, 315 316, 229 Cal. Rptr. 2d 627 (trial courts may grant motion if opposing party fails to submit separate statement of material facts if failure significantly interferes with court's mission of seeking truth and justice; plaintiff's failure to submit separate statement did not justify order granting summary judgment; disapproved on other grounds in Woods v. Young (1991) 53 Cal. 3d 315, 328 n.4, 279 Cal. Rptr. 613, 807 P.2d 455)].

Other cases have held, however, that the court does not have discretion under Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b)(3) to grant summary judgment based on the opposing party's failure to file a proper separate statement unless the moving party has met its initial burden of proof [Thatcher v. Lucky Stores, Inc. (2000) 79 Cal. App. 4th 1081, 1086, 94 Cal. Rptr. 2d 575 ; see Kulesa v. Castleberry (1996) 47 Cal. App. 4th 103, 111-112, 54 Cal. Rptr. 669 (court's discretion to grant motion under Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b) does not override court's Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(c) duty to review all papers filed in conjunction with motion); see also Pepperell v. Scottsdale Ins. Co. (1998) 62 Cal. App. 4th 1045, 1055 n.7, 73 Cal. Rptr. 2d 164 (because defendant did not make prima facie showing of entitlement to summary judgment, plaintiffs' failure to file opposition papers, including a responding separate statement, was irrelevant; although trial court has discretion to grant summary judgment when opposing party fails to comply with statutory requirement of separate statement, appellate court will not affirm granting of summary judgment solely on that basis); Cravens v. State Bd. of Equalization (1997) 52 Cal.App. 4th 253, 255, 257, 60 Cal. Rptr. 2d 436 (trial court had power to grant unopposed defense motion for summary judgment when moving papers had met its burden, and plaintiff could not avoid entry of summary judgment by filing request for dismissal without prejudice on day before scheduled hearing date)]. Thus, when the circumstance warrant, counsel may consider revising paragraph A.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Inadequacy or Lack of Statement of Disputed or Undisputed Material Facts

In Mills v. Forestex Co. (2003) 108 Cal. App. 4th 625, 134 Cal. Rptr. 2d 273 , plaintiffs filed a complaint against the builder of their home for breach of express warranty, breach of implied warranty and strict product liability after the siding began to warp and buckle. They also sued the manufacturer of the siding. The defendants brought a motion for summary judgment on the ground that the applicable statute of limitations had run on all of the causes of action. The trial court granted the motion and the plaintiffs appealed.

During the appeal, plaintiffs attempted to introduce facts regarding the timing of their discovery of the defect that they did not set forth in their separate statement. The appellate court concluded that it would not consider these new facts that were not in the separate statement and affirmed the motion for summary judgment against plaintiffs. The court reiterated the rule that the statutory requirement for a separate statement mandates that the party specify within that document any facts he or she deems disputed. If the fact is not set forth in the separate statement, it is considered not to exist. The court noted that it t is irrelevant if the fact is buried in all of the papers filed with the court; it must be set forth in the separate statement (108 Cal. App. 4th 625, 640-641) .

In Frazee v. Seely (2001) 95 Cal. App. 4th 627, 115 Cal. Rptr. 2d 780 , plaintiff client filed a malpractice action against defendants, attorneys and law firms. A motion for summary judgment was filed by one of the law firms and their attorneys, and the court permitted another firm and its attorneys to join in the motion. The trial court granted the motion but was reversed on appeal because the court erred by allowing the other law firm to join in the motion for summary judgment without filing a separate statement. A simple notice of joinder in a motion for summary judgment is insufficient to satisfy the requirements of Code Civ. Proc. 437c(b); each moving party must support their motion for summary judgment with a separate statement responding to each of the material facts contended by the moving party to be undisputed, and indicating whether the opposing party agrees or disagrees that those facts are undisputed. The motion for summary judgment filed by the first law firm included a separate statement that mentions the other law firm only in terms of their initial involvement in the dissolution action. It did not set forth facts relating to the second firm's alleged malpractice that they contend are not in dispute. Without such factual assertions, the court's grant of summary judgment was improper (95 Cal. App. 4th 627, 635-637) .

In Collins v. Hertz Corp. (2006) 144 Cal. App. 4th 64, 50 Cal. Rptr. 3d 149 , two employees sued their former employer along with individual employees and supervisors for workplace harassment, retaliation, and various other causes of action. Defendants moved for summary judgment. In response, the plaintiffs (there were three plaintiffs at the outset) filed three opposing memoranda and four separate statements. Defendant objected that plaintiffs' papers failed to comply with the Code of Civil Procedure or the Rules of Court. The court agreed, and ordered plaintiffs' counsel to re-file opposing papers which complied with the rules. Plaintiffs submitted amended papers; however, the separate statement still failed to comply with the applicable rules. For example, plaintiffs' separate statement failed to unequivocally state whether Hertz's undisputed facts were disputed or undisputed. Therefore, the court deemed the facts undisputed and granted summary judgment in Hertz's favor. Plaintiffs appealed the ruling.

The court of appeal affirmed (144 Cal. App. 4th 64, 80) . The court held that the trial court had properly stricken portions of plaintiffs' separate statement for failure to comply with the summary judgment statute. The statute requires an opposing party's separate statement to respond specifically to each purportedly undisputed fact with a statement indicating whether the party agrees or disagrees the fact is undisputed and, for each fact she disputes, a citation to the evidence supporting her position. Additionally, the trial court was correct in not permitting plaintiffs to file individual separate statements. The court gave plaintiffs a chance to cure the defects in their opposition papers, but the amended papers still did not comply with the statute. Therefore, it could not be said that the court abused its discretion in granting summary judgment (144 Cal. App. 4th 64, 74-75) .

Thatcher v. Lucky Stores, Inc. (2000) 79 Cal. App. 4th 1081, 94 Cal. Rptr. 2d 575 , involved a personal injury action. The trial court granted defendant's summary judgment motion on the ground "plaintiffs failed to file any opposition or opposing separate statement of undisputed facts to the motion." The ruling was consistent with a local court rule. Plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed (79 Cal. App. 4th 1081, 1087) . The court concluded that defendant met its initial burden of proof, and due to plaintiffs' failure to file opposition, summary judgment was proper (79 Cal. App. 4th 1081, 1083) . In reaching its conclusion, the court, however, addressed the trial court's order and the local court rule. Reviewing the Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(c) standard for granting summary judgment, and defendant's burden of proof under Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(o)(2) (see now Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(p)(2)) the court found that although these provisions do not expressly state that the court is prohibited from granting summary judgment when the moving party has not met its initial burdenof proof, to conclude otherwise would be contrary to the statute's apparent intent and strong policy against disposing of cases on procedural deficiencies rather than trying cases on the merits (79 Cal. App. 4th 1081, 1085) .While Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b) [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b)(3)] allows the court, in its discretion, to grant summary judgment if the opposing party fails to file a proper separate statement, this provision does not authorize doing so without first determining that the moving party has met its initial burden of proof. In Kulesa v. Castleberry (1996) 47 Cal. App. 4th 103, 106, 113, 54 Cal. Rptr. 2d 669 , the court stated that a trial court must consider all of the papers submitted before exercising its discretion to grant a summary judgment based on the failure to file an adequate separate statement and concluded that when the most cursory view of all the papers shows the motion to be utterly without factual or legal merit, the court has no discretion to grant summary judgment (79 Cal. App. 4th 1081, 1086) . Accordingly, unless the moving party has met its initial burden of proof, the court does not have discretion under Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b) to grant summary judgment based on the opposing party's failure to file a proper separate statement (79 Cal. App. 4th 1081, 1086) .

The court concluded that the local rule was invalid as applied to summary judgment motions since it authorized the court to grant summary judgment based solely on the absence of opposition, without a preliminary finding that the moving party met its initial burden of proof. Such a result is contrary to the statutory law and case law construing Code Civ. Proc. § 437c (79 Cal. App. 4th 1081, 1086-1087) . Lack of opposition was thus an improper ground on which to grant summary judgment, absent a finding that defendant met its initial burden of proof (79 Cal. App. 4th 1081, 1087) . The court, however, found that defendant met its initial burden of proof and affirmed the judgment (79 Cal. App. 4th 1081, 1083, 1087) .

[b] Lack of Knowledge Insufficient to Create Dispute

In City of Hope Nat. Medical Center v. Superior Court (1992) 8 Cal. App. 4th 633, 10 Cal. Rptr. 2d 465 , plaintiff insurer sought to recover money paid by mistake to defendant hospital, a bona fide creditor of the insured. Defendant moved for summary judgment, contending that the insurer was not entitled to reimbursement unless the payments made to the hospital were induced by the hospital's fraudulent conduct. Plaintiff submitted a separate statement of disputed facts in which it asserted a lack of knowledge to support a claim that a fact was disputed. The trial court denied the motion, and defendant filed a petition for writ of mandate (8 Cal. App. 4th 633, 636) .

The court of appeal granted the writ, thus reversing the trial court's holding. In commenting on the adequacy of plaintiff's separate statement of disputed facts, the court noted that an assertion of lack of knowledge and a claim that a fact is "disputed" is not enough. Further, because plaintiff did not request a continuance to conduct further discovery or otherwise explain its lack of knowledge, plaintiff's ignorance sounds more imagined than real (8 Cal. App. 4th 633, 636 n.1).

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Inadequacy or Lack of Statement of Disputed or Undisputed Material Facts

In Wall Street Network, Ltd. v. New York Times Co. (2008) 164 Cal. App. 4th 1171, 80 Cal. Rptr. 3d 6 , plaintiff sued defendants for breach of contract and misrepresentation arising out of an internet marketing agreement. Defendant moved for summary judgment, contending plaintiff could not establish that it had performed under the agreement. The trial court granted defendants' motion for summary judgment, and plaintiff appealed. On appeal, plaintiff argued the trial court had erred by refusing to consider deposition testimony set forth in oral argument but not included with plaintiff's opposition. The deposition had taken place three days before plaintiff's opposition was due, but plaintiff neither included the testimony in its opposition nor submitted a declaration from the deponent. The appellate court noted the split of authority regarding courts' authority to consider evidence not included in a party's separate statement. However, in this case there was no abuse of discretion in the trial court's refusal to consider the testimony at the summary judgment hearing. The deponent was available to provide a declaration, but none was submitted with the opposition. Although the deposition took place prior to the due date for the opposition, plaintiff did not include the testimony in support of its contention that there was a triable issue of fact (164 Cal. App. 4th 1171, 1189-1190) .

In Frank and Freedus v. Allstate Ins. Co. (1996) 45 Cal. App. 4th 461, 52 Cal. Rptr. 2d 678 , plaintiff brought an action against its insurer for failure to defend it in a suit by an ex-employee for wrongful termination. The trial court found that the insurer had no duty to defend, and granted its motion for summary judgment. On appeal, plaintiff claimed that the summary judgment was improperly limited to the complaint in the underlying action, failing to take into account extrinsic evidence which revealed facts bringing the action into the terms of the policy. However, plaintiff failed to demonstrate any language in the policy providing a duty to defend. The court of appeal stated that in defending against a summary judgment motion, the opposing party asserting a material factual dispute must present the facts through declarations or affidavits. A mere assertion in a complaint that such evidence exists is not sufficient to raise a material issue of fact meriting a trial (45 Cal. App. 4th 461, 475-476) . Concluding that plaintiffs failed to show any potential for coverage under the policy, the court affirmed the judgment.

In Lyons v. Security Pacific Nat. Bank (1995) 40 Cal. App. 4th 1001, 48 Cal. Rptr. 2d 174 , a defendant bank successfully moved for summary judgment in an action alleging conspiracy in connection with a loan transaction. The trial court permitted the plaintiff to oppose the motion orally at the hearing on the motion. In opposing the motion, plaintiff presented no separate statement, affidavits or declarations or other documentary evidence to dispute or contradict the facts presented by defendant in its supporting papers. In upholding the summary judgment, the court of appeal stated that when no affidavits are filed in opposition to a motion for summary judgment, the trial court is entitled to accept as true the facts alleged in the movant's affidavits. Allegations and promises to prove facts are inadequate (40 Cal. App. 4th 1001, 1014) . Additionally, the court held that a party may not orally oppose a motion for summary judgment, since without at least a separate statement and evidence in the form of supporting affidavits or declarations, it is impossible to demonstrate disputed facts (40 Cal. App. 4th 1001, 1006, 1013) .

Plaintiff in Sacks v. FSR Brokerage, Inc. (1992) 7 Cal. App. 4th 950, 9 Cal. Rptr. 2d 306 , sued the defendant sellers and brokers for fraud, breach of contract, and other causes of action arising from the defective condition of property plaintiff had purchased. Defendant brokerage moved for summary judgment based on the absence of any triable factual issues. Plaintiff filed a brief response and opposition to the motion based exclusively on the lack of jurisdiction because of purportedly inadequate service (7 Cal. App. 4th 950, 954) . The trial court granted the motion, and stated in its order that the moving party had adequately supported each of its issues and plaintiff failed to offer any contrary evidence or arguments in opposition (7 Cal. App. 4th 950, 960) . Plaintiff appealed, in part because the trial court did not specifically refer to evidence proffered in support of the motion that indicated that no triable issue exists. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment and rejected plaintiff's argument regarding the inadequacy of the order. The court of appeal noted that plaintiff had filed no substantive opposition, and thus had not provided a separate statement of disputed facts. The trial court did not err in not specifically referring to evidence bearing upon the conclusion that no triable issues of fact existed, and its granting of the motion was consistent with the procedural requirements of the summary judgment statute (7 Cal. App. 4th 950, 960-961) .

Barisich v. Lewis (1990) 226 Cal. App. 3d 12, 275 Cal. Rptr. 331 , was a quiet title action in which the trial court granted plaintiff's motion for summary judgment, the defendant appealed and the court of appeal affirmed. The appellate court said that opinions or conclusions in the opposing party's declaration were not sufficient to create a triable issue of fact so as to defeat summary judgment, that the opposing party's burden is to set forth "evidentiary" facts which disclose the existence of a triable, factual issue, and that the defendant had failed to do so (226 Cal. App. 3d 12, 22) .

In Buehler v. Alpha Beta Co. (1990) 224 Cal. App. 3d 729, 274 Cal. Rptr. 14 , the trial court granted a summary judgment for defendant in a slip and fall case on the ground defendant had established a prima facie defense of no liability and that plaintiff had failed to file a separate statement of undisputed material facts which, by itself, constituted a basis for the summary judgment. The court of appeal affirmed on both grounds. With respect to the separate statement, the court pointed out that Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b), requires that (1) the opposition papers include a separate statement which responds to each of the material facts contended by the moving party to be undisputed, indicating whether the opposing party agrees or disagrees that those facts are undisputed; (2) the statement also set forth plainly and concisely any other material facts which the opposing party contends are disputed; and (3) that each material fact contended by the opposing party to be disputed be followed by a reference to the supporting evidence, and provides that failure to comply with this requirement of a separate statement may constitute a sufficient ground, in the court's discretion, for granting the motion (224 Cal. App. 3d 729, 734-735) . The court said that this explicitly gives the trial court discretion to grant a motion for summary judgment when an opposing party fails to comply with the requirement of a separate statement. It is not an appellate court's function to substitute its own view as to the proper decision. To find an abuse of discretion, it must appear that the trial court acted arbitrarily, capriciously, or without any basis in reason (224 Cal. App. 3d 729, 735) . The court concluded that to the extent that the summary judgment was based on Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b) [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b)(3)], the trial court acted well within its discretion (224 Cal. App. 3d 729, 735) .

§ 221.23A Supporting Motion for Summary Judgment or Summary Adjudication--Reply Memorandum Objecting to Evidence Contained in Opposing Party's Papers--Affidavit or Declaration of Opposing Party's Expert Witness Conflicts With Expert's Earlier Statements

[Caption. See § 221.22]

THE COURT SHOULD GRANT _____ [specify moving party, e.g., PLAINTIFF'S or DEFENDANT'S] MOTION FOR SUMMARY _____ [JUDGMENT or ADJUDICATION] BECAUSE STATEMENTS IN THE EXPERT'S AFFIDAVIT OR DECLARATION SUBMITTED BY _____ [specify opposing party, e.g., DEFENDANT or PLAINTIFF] CONFLICT WITH EARLIER STATEMENTS BY THE SAME EXPERT AND THE CONFLICT IS NOT EXPLAINED.

Statements in Expert's Affidavit or Declaration Conflict with Earlier Statements by Same Expert and Conflict Is Not Explained. In a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication, when an expert's declaration contains statements that conflict with statements the expert made previously, such as in a previous report on a material issue, and the conflict is unexplained, the declaration or affidavit does not establish a triable issue of fact (141 Cal. App. 4th 525, 565-566)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This reply memorandum may be used by a party moving for summary judgment or summary adjudication in order to raise objections to an affidavit or declaration of an expert submitted by the opposing party, when statements in the expert's affidavit or declaration conflict with earlier statements by the same expert, and the conflict is not explained. When appropriate, this form should be combined with a general reply memorandum objecting to evidence contained in the opposing party's papers [see § 221.22].

Any reply to the opposition must be served and filed by the moving party not less than five days preceding the noticed or continued date of hearing, unless the court for good cause orders otherwise. Evidentiary objections not raised in a written reply or orally at the hearing are deemed waived [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b)(4)].

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should show by specific reference how the statements of the expert in the affidavit or declaration submitted in opposition to the motion for summary judgment conflict with earlier statements by the same expert, and how the conflict is not explained.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Statements in Affidavit or Declaration of Expert Conflict With Earlier Statements by Same Expert and Conflict Is Not Explained

Alvis v. County of Ventura (2009) 178 Cal. App. 4th 536, 100 Cal. Rptr. 3d 494 , arose from a massive landslide after heavy rains in 2005. Plaintiffs suffered injuries or were relatives of persons who died as a result of the slide. They sued the county, alleging causes of action for a dangerous condition of public property, nuisance and inverse condemnation. The county moved for summary adjudication on all causes of action except inverse condemnation, resting on the county's design immunity (see Gov. Code § 830.6). In opposition to the count's motion, plaintiffs submitted the declaration of a registered geotechnical and civil engineer. The county objected to the declaration on the ground, inter alia, that its conclusions were contradicted by an earlier report by him and submitted the affidavit of a registered civil and geotechnical engineer to that effect. Although the trial court overruled the county's objection to the declaration, it found the declaration did not constitute substantial evidence so as to raise a triable issue of fact and granted the county's motion. Plaintiffs dismissed the inverse condemnation cause of action and appealed the judgment arising from the summary adjudication (178 Cal. App. 4th 536, 538-547) .

The Court of Appeal affirmed. The court reviewed the motion for summary adjudication de novo and reached the same conclusion as the trial court. Most significantly, a statement in the expert's declaration asserting that the slide started at the bottom of the cliff when the wall failed directly contradicted his prior statement in a report to an insurance company that the "[f]ailure started as a landslide in the upper reaches and then flowed at a rapid rate down to the developed area below." The statement that the slide started in the upper reaches of the cliff directly undercut the premise on which his entire declaration was based, and he offered no explanation. Although the prior statement was not in the form of testimony under oath, the court could not accept as substantial evidence of a triable issue of fact a declaration that directly contradicted the declarant's prior statement, where the contradiction was unexplained (178 Cal. App. 4th 536, 547-549) .

This reply memorandum of points and authorities may be used by a party moving for summary judgment or summary adjudication to object to a request by the opposing party for a continuance in the motion proceeding. The ground for the objection is that the opposing papers do not adequately show that the continuance is needed for the opposing party to gather facts essential to his or her opposition to the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(h)].

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in reply to the contention supported by the points and authorities set out in § 221.43.

[b] Request for Continuance

If it appears from the affidavits submitted in opposition to a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication or both that facts essential to justify opposition may exist but cannot, for reasons stated, then be presented, the court shall deny the motion, or order a continuance to permit affidavits to be obtained, or discovery to be had, or may make any other order as may be just [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(h)].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Evidence Sought to Be Produced Is Not Essential to Justify Opposition

In Yuzon v. Collins (2004) 116 Cal. App. 4th 149 , 10 Cal. Rprt. 3d 18, an invitee was bitten by a dog at an apartment complex. The plaintiff filed an action against the landlord. In his opposition to the summary judgment motion, plaintiff requested a continuance of the summary judgment hearing. Plaintiff contended that his animal behavior expert, Richard H. Polsky, Ph.D., needed more time to review discovery materials and prepare his declaration.

After the plaintiff's continuance request was denied and the landlord's motion for summary judgment was granted, the injured party sought review.

The appellate court affirmed the denial of the continuance, holding that the power to determine when a continuance should be granted is generally within the discretion of the court, and there is no right to a continuance as a matter of law. However, Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(h) mandates a continuance of a summary judgment hearing upon a good faith showing by affidavit that a continuance is needed to obtain facts essential to justify opposition to the motion. In this case, plaintiff sought a continuance to obtain Dr. Polsky's expert declaration regarding the landlord's' actual knowledge of the dog's vicious propensities. While the subject matter (Collins' knowledge of the dog's vicious propensities) was essential to plaintiff's opposition to the summary judgment motion, the trial court was ultimately proven correct in concluding Dr. Polsky's declaration has no material relevance regarding that issue. Dr. Polsky's declaration, when reviewed by the trial court with regard to the motion for reconsideration, failed to create a triable issue of material fact. Accordingly, there was no error in denying the motion for continuance (116 Cal. App. 4th 149, 167) .

In affirming, the court determined that the landlord only had a duty of care to protect the invitee if he had actual knowledge of the dog's vicious nature in time to protect against the dangerous condition on his property. He did not have a duty to inspect the premises. The evidence showed that the landlord allowed the tenants to have a dog. The landlord thought that the tenants still owned a dog that had died. He was not aware that they owned the dog involved in the incident. The dog in question was kept inside of the apartment, and the landlord rarely visited. The dog's act of pushing on a door and barking constituted normal animal behavior; it was not enough to put the landlord on notice of the dog's existence or its allegedly violent propensities. The landlord was not aware of any acts of aggression by the dog. Finally, the motion to reconsider was properly denied because an expert witness did not raise an issue of fact about the landlord's knowledge.

In Hartenstine v. Superior Court (1987) 196 Cal. App. 3d 206, 241 Cal. Rptr. 756 , a hospital brought an action against a federal employee to recover the cost of hospital expenses that the employee had failed to pay. The employee cross complained against his insurance company, which had denied benefits under his claim. In the cross complaint, the insured set forth causes of action for breach of contract, common-law bad-faith breach of the implied covenant of fair dealing, and statutory bad faith under Ins. Code § 790.03(h). The insurer filed a motion for summary adjudication under former Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(f) of the issue of subject matter jurisdiction over the stated causes of actions in tort, on the ground that they were preempted by federal statute (Federal Employee Health Benefits Act, specifically 5 U.S.C. § 8902(m)(1)). The trial court granted the motion.

The court of appeal affirmed, rejecting, among other things, the insured's contention that the trial court should have granted a continuance in order to allow the insured to obtain a copy of his employee's insurance contract and other documentation. In the instant case, the insurer had attached a copy of the insurance contract to its motion. Moreover, it is a document that should have originally been attached to the insured's cross complaint. The insured failed to show either that the evidence sought was essential to justify opposition, or that he could not have obtained it in the two-year period between the filing of the insured's second amended cross complaint and the insurer's motion for summary adjudication. Consequently, the insured's contention that the trial court should have granted a continuance was without merit (196 Cal. App. 3d 206, 221) .

[b] Request for Continuance Must Be Supported by Good-Faith Showing by Affidavit

In American Continental Ins. Co. v. C & Z Timber Co. (1987) 195 Cal. App. 3d 1271, 241 Cal. Rptr. 466 , an insurer brought an action against the insured seeking declaratory relief to determine its liability with regard to an airplane insurance policy. The airplane had crashed while carrying a paying passenger, and while operated by a pilot specifically named in the pilot-clause endorsement. The policy expressly excluded coverage for flights carrying paying passengers. The defendant contended that plaintiff was estopped from enforcing the exclusion because of its negligence in specifically insuring an incompetent pilot. The plaintiff filed a motion for summary judgment on the cause of action regarding denial of coverage. The defendant filed a memorandum in opposition to the motion, making various assertions but failing to support them with declarations or affidavits. The trial court granted plaintiff's motion for summary judgment.

The court of appeal affirmed, rejecting defendant's contention that the matter should have been continued to allow discovery, and holding that no triable issue of fact remained for determination (195 Cal. App. 3d 1271, 1279-1281) . Pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(h), if it appears from the affidavits submitted in opposition to a motion for summary judgment that facts essential to justify opposition may exist but cannot, for reasons stated, then be presented, the court shall deny the motion, or order a continuance to permit affidavits to be obtained or discovery to be had, or may make any other order as may be just. Generally, power to determine when a continuance should be granted is within the discretion of the court, and there is no right to a continuance as a matter of law. The need for a continuance must be made by a good-faith showing by affidavit. It is not enough merely to raise the issue in an opposition memorandum. Defendant alleged in conclusional terms in its memorandum that much discovery remained to be done, but failed to provide supporting affidavits or declarations detailing facts establishing the existence of controverting evidence, and the reasons why that evidence could not be presented at the time of the hearing. Moreover, defendant had over one year from the filing of the complaint until the filing of the motion in which to conduct discovery, but failed to offer an explanation for not obtaining discovery in that time (195 Cal. App. 3d 1271, 1280) . The moving party must only negate the existence of triable issues of fact in a fashion that entitles it to judgment on the issues raised by the pleadings; it is not required to refute liability on some theoretical possibility not included in the pleadings (195 Cal. App. 3d 1271, 1281) .

[c] Party Seeking Continuance Must Make Showing It Has Been Diligent in Conducting Discovery

In Cooksey v. Alexakis (2004) 123 Cal. App. 4th 246, 19 Cal. Rptr. 3d 810 , an orthopedic patient was suing her doctor for medical negligence following treatment for a knee injury. Defendant filed a motion for summary judgment, and plaintiff filed a request for continuance along with her opposition. In support of the request, plaintiff's attorney submitted a declaration stating that he had retained an expert who needed to review responses to outstanding written discovery and defendant's deposition testimony prior to finalizing his opinions (123 Cal. App. 4th 246, 252) .

On the scheduled date of the summary judgment hearing, plaintiff filed an ex parte application for an order continuing the motion and the trial, which was less than 30 days away. In support of this application, plaintiff submitted two declarations: one from her expert, stating that defendant's treatment fell below the standard of care, and one from her attorney, stating that he needed to depose defendant because his progress notes were illegible.

At the hearing on the application, plaintiff's counsel admitted that he had made a tactical decision not to depose defendant earlier. He also stated that he had not submitted his expert's declaration in opposition to defendant's summary judgment motion because he had not wanted to disclose his expert's opinions before defendant's deposition. The trial court denied plaintiff's request for a continuance and granted defendant's summary judgment motion. The trial court specifically stated that plaintiff's counsel failed to present any explanation in his declaration as to why the allegedly necessary discovery had not been completed sooner. Moreover, at the hearing on the ex parte application, plaintiff's counsel acknowledged that he had withheld his expert's declaration as a tactical decision (123 Cal. App. 4th 246, 253-254) .

The appellate court affirmed the denial of the continuance, holding that plaintiff failed to make a good showing as to what facts essential to oppose the motion may have existed and why such facts could not have been discovered sooner. The court further held that a trial court may consider whether a party requesting a continuance under Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(h) has been diligent in completing discovery (123 Cal. App. 4th 246, 257) .

The court's analysis was two-fold. First, the court held that the declarations submitted by plaintiff's counsel failed to show how the outstanding discovery was related to plaintiff's opposition (123 Cal. App. 4th 246, 254) . Counsel's initial declaration simply stated that the expert needed to review written discovery responses and defendant's deposition testimony in order to finalize his opinions and prepare a declaration in opposition to the motion. Similarly, the expert's declaration, while stating that defendant's conduct fell below the standard of care, did not show that the expert needed to review discovery results in order to confirm or augment his opinion (123 Cal. App. 4th 246, 257-258) .

Second, noting there is a split of opinion on the issue in the courts of appeal, the Second District held that a lack of diligence in completing discovery may be a ground for denying a request for a continuance of asummary judgment motion. The court noted that the appellate courts in the First, Second, and Sixth Districts have upheld such diligence requirements, while the Fourth District has questioned whether diligence in conducting discovery should be a factor in ruling on a continuance request (123 Cal. App. 4th 246, 255) . While acknowledging that the summary judgment statute does not mention diligence, the court noted that Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(h) requires a party seeking a continuance to declare why "facts essential to justify opposition ... cannot, for reasons stated, then be presented" (123 Cal. App. 4th 246, 257 , quoting Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(h), italics in original). The court also cited a line of cases requiring the declarations to be in good faith in support of its holding that the party seeking a continuance must set forth a justifiable reason why essential facts cannot be presented. In the instant case, plaintiff's counsel had admitted that he delayed discovery for tactical reasons. This was not a justifiable reason for a continuance under Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(h) (123 Cal. App. 4th 246, 257) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Request for Continuance Must Be Supported by Good-Faith Showing by Affidavit

The facts and procedural background of Thatcher v. Lucky Stores, Inc. (2000) 79 Cal. App. 4th 1081, 94 Cal. Rptr. 2d 575 are discussed under § 221.23[3][a]. In affirming summary judgment for defendant, the court concluded that the trial court was not required to continue the summary judgment motion under Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(h), because plaintiffs' continuance request was not included in timely opposition to the summary judgment motion and plaintiffs failed to establish that facts essential to justifying opposition might exist but could not be presented before the hearing (79 Cal. App. 4th 1081, 1083) .

In Scott v. CIBA Vision Corp. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 307, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 902 , plaintiff filed a products liability action against the maker of a contact lens cleaning product. Defendant moved for summary judgment on the ground that the product was regulated exclusively by the Food and Drug Administration, so that state claims were preempted. Plaintiff moved to continue the matter for further discovery. The trial court denied the continuance and granted the summary judgment. With regard to the motion for continuance, the court of appeal noted that the trial court stated as its reason for denial of the motion that no affidavit had been filed in support of the request, pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(h). Plaintiff claimed that various discovery orders amounted to affidavits within the meaning of the statute. However, the court ruled that it was incumbent upon plaintiff to show by affidavit that the requested discovery could reasonably lead to evidence which would refute the essential facts of preemption. Since plaintiff did not submit any such affidavit, the conditions of Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(h) were not met and continuance was not mandatory (38 Cal. App. 4th 307, 326) . Also agreeing with the trial court on the issue of preemption, the court of appeal affirmed the judgment.

Hill v. Physicians & Surgeons Exchange (1990) 225 Cal. App. 3d 1, 274 Cal. Rptr. 702 , was an action by a medical patient against her doctor's insurer. The patient had previously sued the doctor, settling that case for $284,303.21, with payment of $15,000 by the doctor and an assignment of his rights against the insurer for reimbursement under the policy and for failure to appear and defend him. The trial court granted the insurer's motion for summary judgment, and plaintiff appealed, contending, among other things, that the trial court erred in failing to grant a continuance to allow her to take the doctor's out-of-state deposition under Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(h). In affirming the judgment, the court of appeal, after quoting Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(h), said that Code Civ. Proc. § 437c mandates a continuance of a summary judgment hearing on a good-faith showing by affidavit that a continuance is needed to obtain facts essential to justify opposition to the motion, and that it is not enough to merely raise the issue in the opposition memorandum (225 Cal. App. 3d 1, 7-8) .

In O'Laskey v. Sortino (1990) 224 Cal. App. 3d 241, 273 Cal. Rptr. 674 , a personal injury action, the complaint was filed eight days after the statute of limitations had run. The case languished for approximately two years during which time plaintiff's attorney hired an investigator, who, through a ruse, secured from the defendant over the telephone an admission that defendant had been absent from the state for two weeks in July of "last year." If this statement was true and "last year" was during the limitations period, the two-week absence would have triggered application of the tolling period provided in Code Civ. Proc. § 351, and the complaint would have been timely filed. The conversation was tape-recorded without the defendant's knowledge. However, in his deposition defendant denied he had been out of the state for more than one weekend and, based on this testimony, defendant moved for summary judgment. In opposition, plaintiff submitted a transcript of the taped conversation and his lawyer's declaration purporting to authenticate the transcript and the tape, and requested a continuance to depose his investigator. The trial court denied the request for a continuance, refused to receive the transcript in evidence, and granted the motion for summary judgment. The tape itself was not offered in evidence. Chronologically, the action was filed on February 27, 1986; plaintiff obtained the transcript from his investigator on June 16, 1986; on March 18, 1988, plaintiff filed an amended complaint to allege that the defendant had been out of the state for at least eight days during the statutory period; defendant answered the complaint on August 4, 1988; on September 9, 1988, plaintiff took defendant's deposition; plaintiff's deposition of his investigator was scheduled for December 9, 1988, but unilaterally canceled by plaintiff; and the summary judgment motion was heard on December 13, 1988 (224 Cal. App. 3d 241, 244-245, 251) .

This reply memorandum of points and authorities may be used by a party moving for summary judgment or summary adjudication to object to a request by the opposing party for a continuance in the motion proceeding. The ground for the objection is that the request for the continuance was not filed in a timely manner and/or that a previous request for continuance was already granted [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(h); Roth v. Rhodes (1994) 25 Cal. App. 4th 530, 30 Cal. Rptr. 2d 706] .

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should show by specific reference that a previous request for continuance by the moving party has been granted.

In appropriate circumstances, this form may be combined with the points and authorities in § 221.24.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Request for Continuance Must Be Brought in a Timely Manner

In Roth v. Rhodes (1994) 25 Cal. App. 4th 530, 30 Cal. Rptr. 2d 706 , Roth, a doctor of podiatry wishing to lease office space in a medical building operated by defendants, brought suit against defendants attacking their policy limiting tenants to medical doctors. The suit alleged violations of the Cartwright Act and common law prohibitions on restraint of trade, unfair competition, interference with prospective business advantage, and intentional interference with the right to practice a profession, and violations of the Unruh Civil Rights Act. The trial court granted judgment on the pleadings on the cause of action for interference with prospective business advantage and granted summary adjudication on all other causes of actions (25 Cal. App. 4th 530, 535-536) .

At the time of the hearing on the motions, Roth's counsel presented the trial court with a declaration requesting a continuance. The declaration stated Roth needed time to conduct further discovery and time to obtain and interview his expert witnesses. The court denied the continuance on grounds the request was untimely and the declaration was insufficient to support a continuance (25 Cal. App. 4th 530, 536, 547) .

On appeal Roth argued that his complaint stated sufficient facts to constitute a cause of action and also that the trial court had a mandatory duty to continue the hearing as requested. The court of appeal disagreed on all counts and stated that there was no such mandatory duty under the facts of the case and that the trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying the request (25 Cal. App. 4th 530, 536) .

Addressing the issue of the request for continuance, the court of appeal noted that the trial court did not hear the motion until six weeks after it had been filed. Next, the trial court had already once continued the hearing at Roth's request to permit him to file late opposition. The court of appeal stated that the statute does not provide for an unlimited number ofcontinuances. At the time of the motion, the case had been pending two and one-half years, well beyond the goals of the Trial Court Delay Reduction Act of 1990. The case was close to trial. Although the trial was subsequently continued, at the time the motion was noticed, it was scheduled to be heard near the last day permitted by Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(a), which requires the motion to be heard no later than 30 days before the date of trial. Roth did not request the continuance until the time of the hearing. The court of appeal stated that this in and of itself was an adequate basis for denial of the continuance. Furthermore, no reason was given for the lateness of the request. This too, was sufficient basis for the denial of the continuance. Finally, the declaration failed to satisfy the requirement of Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(h) that makes it a condition that the party moving for a continuance show "facts essential to justify opposition may exist." The declaration indicated that two depositions remained to be completed and Roth had not yet received his expert opinions. However, there was no statement which suggested what facts might have existed to support the opposition to the motions. The trial court was fully justified in finding the declaration insufficient to support a continuance (25 Cal. App. 4th 530, 547-548) .

This reply memorandum of points and authorities may be used by the moving party when a party opposing a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication submits declarations or affidavits from an expert in opposition to the motion, and there is a legitimate question regarding the foundation of the expert's opinion. Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Continuance to Depose Expert Who Has Supplied Declaration Concerning Foundation of Opinion

The facts, procedural background, and discussion of St. Mary Medical Center v. Superior Court (1997) 50 Cal. App. 4th 1531, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 182 are set forth under § 221.43[3][b] [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(h)]. In St. Mary Medical Center, plaintiffs submitted a declaration from an expert doctor in opposition to the defendants' motion for summary judgment. The court of appeal issued a writ of mandate ordering the trial court to (1) set aside its order denying the deposition of plaintiffs' expert doctor, and (2) enter a different order granting the motion with the deposition to be limited to foundational issues relating to the opinions rendered by the doctor in the doctor's declaration in opposition to the motion for summary judgment (50 Cal. App. 4th 1531, 1541) . In so ruling, the court noted that it believed that in proper circumstances the court should allow a party to a summary proceeding the opportunity to take limited discovery which may effectively dispose of the proceeding (50 Cal. App. 4th 1531, 1538-1539) . Although there has been no exchange of experts pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 2034 (Code Civ. Proc. § 2034.210 et seq. operative July 1, 2005), under proper circumstances the parties should be allowed to depose an expert who supplies a declaration or affidavit in support of or in opposition to summary judgment or summary adjudication when there is a legitimate question regarding the foundation of the expert's opinion (50 Cal. App. 4th 1531, 1540) . Whether to grant discovery in a given case falls within the trial court's sound discretion based on all the facts presented. There must be objective facts presented that create a significant question regarding the validity of the affidavit or declaration which, if successfully pursued, will impeach the foundational basis of the affidavit or declaration in question (50 Cal. App. 4th 1531, 1540-1541) .

The foregoing reply memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted by a party moving for summary judgment when it is contended in the opposition papers that the motion is untimely (see § 221.33). The first alternative paragraph may be used to respond to the objection that the motion is untimely because it cannot be heard within 30 days before the original trial date. The second alternative paragraph may be used to respond to the objection that the motion was filed prematurely, before the expiration of 60 days after the general appearance of the party against whom the motion is directed.

See also § 221.22[2].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Trial Date as Used in Code of Civil Procedure Section 437c(a) Includes Continued Trial Date

Green v. Bristol Myers Co. (1988) 206 Cal. App. 3d 604, 253 Cal. Rptr. 745 , was a product liability action, in which defendant's motion for summary judgment was noticed for hearing more than 30 days before the continued trial date then in effect but after the original trial date. The motion was granted, and plaintiff appealed from the judgment, contending that the requirement of Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(a) that the summary judgment motion be heard no later than 30 days before the date of trial, unless the court for good cause orders otherwise, means that the summary judgment motion must be heard no later than 30 days prior to the initial trial date and that any continuance of that date will not extend the time within which a motion may be heard.

The court of appeal rejected the contention and affirmed the judgment. The court held that, in keeping with the legislative intent to dispose of meritless claims prior to trial, the inescapable conclusion is that the 30-day time limit on summary judgment hearings should be calculated based on the trial date in existence when the motion is noticed regardless of whether or not that date is the original trial date. To construe the statute otherwise would unduly bar otherwise meritorious motions such as the one presented from being heard and requiring the wasteful expenditure of time and money in the unnecessary litigation of a baseless claim (206 Cal. App. 3d 604, 609) .

[b] Motion Heard More Than 60 Days After General Appearance Is Timely

In Sadlier v. Superior Court (1986) 184 Cal. App. 3d 1050, 229 Cal. Rptr. 374 , an action on promissory notes, one of the defendants sought a writ of mandate to compel the trial court to vacate its order granting a motion for summary adjudication of the issues because the motion was filed and served prior to 60 days from the defendant's first general appearance and prior to the defendant's filing of an answer.

The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's order, holding that the court did not err in permitting the motion even though it had been filed less than 60 days after the general appearance because the hearing was held after the 60-day period. The court also held that the filing of an answer by the defendant is not a prerequisite to the filing of a motion for summary adjudication of the issues (184 Cal. App. 3d 1050, 1054-1056) .

THE ALLEGATIONS RELATING TO _____ [identify allegations at issue] CONSTITUTE A SEPARATE AND DISTINCT WRONGFUL ACT, WHICH, ALTHOUGH ALLEGED IN THE SAME CAUSE OF ACTION AS ANOTHER WRONGFUL ACT, IS A SEPARATE CAUSE OF ACTION THAT MAY BE CHALLENGED BY SUMMARY ADJUDICATION.

A. Cause of Action as Separate and Distinct Wrongful Act. Allegations relating to two separate matters involving acts performed at different times, with different and distinct obligations, involve two separate and distinct causes of action, regardless of how pleaded in the complaint (Lilienthal & Fowler v. Superior Court (1993) 12 Cal. App. 4th 1848, 1854, 16 Cal. Rptr. 2d 458).

B. Challenge to Separate Act by Summary Adjudication Appropriate. A party may move for summary adjudication challenging a separate and distinct wrongful act, even though that act is combined with other wrongful acts alleged in the same cause of action (Lilienthal & Fowler v. Superior Court (1993) 12 Cal. App. 4th 1848, 1853, 16 Cal. Rptr. 2d 458).

[Optional] C. Challenge to Declaratory Relief Action by Summary Adjudication Appropriate. A party may move for summary adjudication of a properly pled cause of action for declaratory relief even though the controversy between the parties in the declaratory relief action spills over into other causes of action. For example, the fact that the same issue of contract interpretation is also raised in other causes of action does not in itself bar declaratory relief or summary adjudication of the declaratory relief cause of action (Southern Cal. Edison Co. v. Superior Court (1995) 37 Cal. App. 4th 839, 846-847, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 227).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This reply memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted by a party moving for summary adjudication when the opposition contends in its papers that a favorable ruling regarding one transaction of two alleged in the same cause of action will not dispose of the entire cause of action [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(f) (summary adjudication of one or more causes of action within an action)]. In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in reply to the contention supported by the points and authorities set out in § 221.30.

Any reply to the opposition must be served and filed by the moving party not less than five days preceding the noticed or continued date of hearing, unless the court for good cause orders otherwise [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b)(4)].

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should show by specific reference how the transactions described under the same cause of action are separate and distinct from one another, regardless of how they are pleaded in the complaint.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Cause of Action as Separate and Distinct Wrongful Act

In Lilienthal & Fowler v. Superior Court (1993) 12 Cal. App. 4th 1848, 16 Cal. Rptr. 2d 458 , real parties in interest filed a legal malpractice complaint in which they alleged a cause of action for breach of contract relating to two separate and distinct matters, and one for negligence relating to the same two matters. Petitioners filed a motion for summary adjudication on the ground that any claim relating to the earlier of the two matters was barred by the statute of limitations. The trial court denied the motion on the ground that a favorable ruling would not completely disposeof a cause of action as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(f) (12 Cal. App. 4th 1848, 1851) .

The court of appeal reversed, holding that although Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(f) does not specifically define "cause of action," allegations relating to two separate matters involving acts performed at different times, with different and distinct obligations, involve two separate and distinct causes of action, regardless of how pleaded in the complaint (12 Cal. App. 4th 1848, 1854) . Summary adjudication is appropriate to challenge a separate and distinct wrongful act, even though that act is combined with other wrongful acts alleged in the same cause of action (12 Cal. App. 4th 1848, 1853) .

[b] Challenge to Declaratory Relief Action by Summary Adjudication Appropriate

In Southern Cal. Edison Co. v. Superior Court (1995) 37 Cal. App. 4th 839, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 227 , the parties disputed the meaning of certain contract language. The plaintiff's complaint stated causes of action for declaratory relief, specific performance, and breach of contract. After discovery, plaintiff moved for summary adjudication of its declaratory relief cause of action, and the court granted the motion. Defendant challenged the trial court's authority to grant the motion because the issue of the meaning of the contract language that was the basis of the declaratory relief action was also raised in the specific performance and breach of contract claims.

Although reversing the trial court on substantive grounds, the court of appeal rejected the defendant's procedural argument. The court characterized defendant's position as a misunderstanding of Hood v. Superior Court (1995) 33 Cal. App. 4th 319, 39 Cal. Rptr. 2d 296 , in which the court of appeal had issued a writ of mandate directing the trial court to set aside its order granting summary adjudication of a declaratory relief action. In Hood, the moving party had plucked certain issues out of the existing complaint and cross complaint and placed them in a purported declaratory relief cause of action solely for the purpose of moving for summary adjudication on that cause of action and thereby make an end run around the Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(f) requirement that a summary adjudication motion dispose of a complete cause of action. The court expressed its view that Hood does not prohibit a trial court from granting summary adjudication in a properly pled cause of action for declaratory relief merely because the controversy between the parties spills over into other causes of action. Rather, Hood teaches that parties will not be allowed to misuse the declaratory relief cause of action in an attempt to subvert the requirement that a motion for summary adjudication must completely dispose of a cause of action (37 Cal. App. 4th 839, 846) . The court noted that the interpretation of a contract is clearly a proper subject of declaratory relief, and concluded that the fact that the same issue of contract interpretation is also raised in other causes of action does not in itself bar declaratory relief of summary adjudication of that cause of action (37 Cal. App. 4th 839, 847) .

SUMMARY JUDGMENT IS IMPROPER WHEN A TRIABLE ISSUE OF MATERIAL FACT EXISTS AND THE MOVING PARTY IS NOT ENTITLED TO A JUDGMENT AS A MATTER OF LAW.

A. Rules Governing Summary Judgment Procedure. It is proper for a court to grant a motion for summary judgment only if the supporting papers are sufficient to sustain a judgment as a matter of law in favor of the moving party and the opposing party has not presented any facts which give rise to a triable issue as to any material fact (Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(c)). In examining the supporting and opposing papers, the moving party's affidavits or declarations are strictly construed and those of the opposing party are liberally construed. Statements of fact contained in the affidavits or declarations in opposition to the motion should be accepted as true, and doubts as to the propriety of granting the motion should be resolved in favor of the party opposing the motion. Summary judgment is a drastic procedure and should be used with caution so that it does not become a substitute for the open trial method of determining facts (Corwin v. Los Angeles Newspaper Service Bureau, Inc. (1971) 4 Cal. 3d 842, 851-852, 94 Cal. Rptr. 785, 484 P.2d 953 ; Jos. Schlitz Brewing Co. v. Downey Distributor (1980) 109 Cal. App. 3d 908, 914, 916, 167 Cal. Rptr. 510).

[EITHER]

B. Burden on Moving Party. A _____ [plaintiff or cross complainant] moving for summary judgment has met his or her burden of showing that there is no defense to a cause of action if that party has proved each element of the cause of action entitling the party to judgment on that cause of action. Once the _____ [plaintiff or cross complainant] has met that burden, the burden shifts to the _____ [defendant or cross defendant] to show that a triable issue of one or more material facts exists as to that cause of action (Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(o)(1)).

[OR]

B. Burden on Moving Party. A _____ [defendant or cross defendant] moving for summary judgment has met his or her burden of showing that a cause of action has no merit if that party has shown that one or more elements of the cause of action, even if not separately pleaded, cannot be established, or that there is a complete defense to that cause of action. Once the _____ [defendant or cross defendant] has met that burden, the burden shifts to the _____ [plaintiff or cross complainant] to show that a triable issue of one or more material facts exists as to that cause of action (Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(p)(2); Aguilar v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (2001) 25 Cal. 4th 826, 850, 107 Cal. Rptr. 2d 841). A moving defendant may not shift the burden simply by suggesting the possibility that the plaintiff cannot prove its case. A _____ [defendant or cross defendant] moving for summary judgment is not required to conclusively negate an element of the plaintiff's cause of action but the _____ [defendant or cross defendant] must show that the plaintiff cannot establish at least one element of the cause of action--for example, that the plaintiff cannot prove element X. The _____ [defendant or cross defendant] must also show that the _____ [plaintiff or cross plaintiff] cannot reasonably obtain needed evidence, because he or she must be allowed a reasonable opportunity to oppose the motion under Code of Civil Procedure Section 437c(h) (Aguilar v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (2001) 25 Cal. 4th 826, 853-854, 107 Cal. Rptr. 2d 841). A moving _____ [defendant or cross defendant] must present evidence, and not simply point out, that the plaintiff does not possess, and cannot reasonably obtain, needed evidence. The _____ [defendant or cross defendant] must support the motion with evidence including "affidavits, declarations, admissions, answers to interrogatories, depositions, and matters of which judicial notice" must or may be taken (Code Civ.Proc. § 437c(b)(1); Aguilar v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (2001) 25 Cal. 4th 826, 854-855, 107 Cal. Rptr. 2d 841, 24 P.3d 493). [Add if defendant contends there is an absence of evidence on a material issue, but the issue was not addressed at all in discovery: Although one case has stated that this circumstantial evidence requirement may be supported by inferring from factually devoid discovery responses that there is no further evidence available to support the motion, that case also stated that no inference can be made with respect to questions that were neither asked nor answered. Thus, when defendant has not directed a question to a relevant issue, factually devoid discovery responses as to that issue cannot support the defendant's motion (see Scheiding v. Dinwiddie Construction Co. (1999) 69 Cal. App. 4th 64, 71, 76, 80, 83, 81 Cal. Rptr. 2d 360 ; see also Gulf Ins. Co. v. Berger, Kahn, Shafton, Moss, Figler, Simon & Gladstone (2000) 79 Cal. App. 4th 114, 133-136, 93 Cal. Rptr. 2d 534 (following Scheiding; plaintiff's nonresponsive answer to interrogatory did not constitute "factually devoid" discovery to shift burden to plaintiff on question of causation of plaintiff's damages, since discovery did not call for information on that subject, or for other information from which information on that subject could be deduced))]. In the present case, _____ [add argument identifying the element as to which defendant contends there is an absence of evidence, and the absence of any question posed in discovery that should have elicited evidence on that issue].

[Optional] C. Defendant's Motion Based on Affirmative Defense. The burden on a defendant moving for summary judgment based on the assertion of an affirmative defense is heavier than the burden to show one or more elements of plaintiff's action cannot be established. Instead of merely submitting evidence to negate a single element of plaintiff's cause of action, or offering evidence, such as vague or insufficient discovery responses, that the plaintiff does not have evidence to create an issue of fact as to one or more elements of his or her case, the defendant has the initial burden to show that undisputed facts support each element of the affirmative defense. The defendant must demonstrate that under no hypothesis is there a material factual issue requiring trial. If the defendant does not meet this burden, the motion must be denied. Only if the defendant meets this burden does the burden shift to plaintiff to show an issue of fact concerning at least one element of the defense (Anderson v. Metalclad Insulation Corp. (1999) 72 Cal. App. 4th 284, 289-290, 85 Cal. Rptr. 2d 331). [Moreover, the submission of evidence which is equivocal, or from which conflicting inferences may be drawn is insufficient to meet the movant's burden (Anderson v. Metalclad Insulation Corp. (1999) 72 Cal. App. 4th 284, 297, 85 Cal. Rptr. 2d 331)]. Thus, there is no obligation on the plaintiff to establish anything by affidavit unless and until the moving party has by affidavit stated facts establishing every element of the affirmative defense necessary to sustain a judgment in his or her favor (Huynh v. Ingersoll-Rand (1993) 16 Cal. App. 4th 825, 830, 20 Cal. Rptr. 2d 296 ; see Anderson v. Metalclad Insulation Corp. (1999) 72 Cal. App. 4th 284, 289-290, 297, 85 Cal. Rptr. 2d 331).

[Optional] D. No Need to Review Counter Declaration Unless Moving Party's Declaration Is Sufficient to Support Motion. The trial court need not look to the opposing party's counter affidavits or counterclaims to evaluate their sufficiency unless the moving party's declaration standing alone, but considered in light of the pleading, would support the summary judgment motion (Rawlings v. D.M. Oliver Inc. (1979) 97 Cal. App. 3d 890, 896, 159 Cal. Rptr. 119).

[Optional] E. Sufficiency of Opponent's Response Papers. The opposing party need not include undisputed material in the separate statement of disputed facts which is not listed in the moving parties' separate statement of undisputed material facts (Assad v. Southern Pacific Transportation Co. (1996) 42 Cal. App. 4th 1609, 1614, 50 Cal. Rptr. 2d 443).

[Optional] F. Moving Party's Pleadings Will Not Support Motion. If the evidence accompanying the summary judgment motion is deficient, the moving party cannot rely on the unsupported allegations in his or her pleadings to support the motion (Lipson v. Superior Court (1982) 31 Cal. 3d 362, 374, 182 Cal. Rptr. 629, 644 P.2d 822).

[Optional] G. Moving Party's Burden of Eliminating All Triable Issues of Fact. If a plaintiff pleads several theories, the defendant has the burden of demonstrating there are no material facts requiring trial on any of them. The moving defendant whose declarations omit facts as to any such theory permits that portion of the complaint to be unchallenged. Even if no opposition is presented, the moving party still has the burden of eliminating all triable issues of fact (Wright v. Stang Manufacturing Co. (1997) 54 Cal. App. 4th 1218, 1228, 63 Cal. Rptr. 2d 422).

[Optional] H. Defendant's Burden to Refute Material Issues Raised by the Pleadings When Complaint Alleges Facts to Refute an Affirmative Defense. The defendant has the initial burden to show that the undisputed facts support each element of the affirmative defense. If, in anticipation of an affirmative defense, the complaint alleges facts to refute it, the pleadings themselves create a material issue that defendant would have to refute to obtain summary judgment (Bacon v. Southern Cal. Edison Co. (1997) 53 Cal. App. 4th 854, 858, 62 Cal. Rptr. 2d 16).

[Optional] I. Strict Standards Apply to Defendant's Attempt to Disprove Element of Plaintiff's Cause of Action. If the defendant claims that the plaintiff cannot establish the cause of action pled because the defendant's affirmative evidence discloses facts that negate the existence of an essential element of the plaintiff's claim by proving the contrary is true, the court should evaluate the defendant's evidence under the same strict standards which were held to apply to a defendant's attempt to disprove an element of the plaintiff's cause of action before the 1992 and 1993 amendments to Code of Civil Procedure Section 437c, in order to avoid unjustly depriving the plaintiff of a trial (Tibor v. Superior Court (1997) 52 Cal. App. 4th 1359, 1368, 61 Cal. Rptr. 2d 326).

[Optional] J. Sole Declaration of Party Raising Triable Issue of Fact Sufficient. The sole declaration of a party opposing a summary judgment motion which raises a triable issue of fact is sufficient to deny the motion. Code of Civil Procedure Section 437c(e) does not allow a trial court to weigh the credibility of a declaration submitted by the party opposing a summary judgment motion and then grant the motion, except where the declaration is facially so incredible as a matter of law that the moving party otherwise would be entitled to summary judgment (Estate of Housley (1997) 56 Cal. App. 4th 342, 359-360, 65 Cal. Rptr. 2d 628).

[Optional] K. Moving Party's Burden to Eliminate All Triable Issues Notwithstanding Absence of Opposition. Even if no opposition is presented, the moving party still has the burden of eliminating all triable issues of fact (Nazir v. United Airlines (2009) 178 Cal. App. 4th 243, 290, 100 Cal. Rptr. 3d 296 ; Teselle v. McLoughlin (2009) 173 Cal. App. 4th 156, 173, 92 Cal. Rptr. 3d 696 ; Wright v. Stang Manufacturing Co. (1997) 54 Cal. App. 4th 1218, 1228, 63 Cal. Rptr. 2d 422).

[Optional] L. No Need to Look at Plaintiff's Opposing Papers Until Defendant Makes Requisite Showing. Only if the defendant makes the requisite showing does the court need to examine the plaintiff's opposing papers to determine if they demonstrate the existence of a triable issue of material fact (Salazar v. Southern Cal. Gas Co. (1997) 54 Cal. App. 4th 1370, 1376, 63 Cal. Rptr. 2d 522).

[Optional] M. Plaintiff Need Not Demonstrate Triable Issue of Fact When Defendant Fails to Meet its Burden. Unless the moving defendant meets its burden, plaintiff has no obligation to demonstrate that there is a triable issue of fact (LeVine v. Weis (1998) 68 Cal. App. 4th 758, 763, 80 Cal. Rptr. 2d 439).

[Optional] N. Motion Based on Issues Asserted in Prior Unsuccessful Motion for Summary Adjudication. When there has been an earlier denial of a summary adjudication motion either filed alone, or as an alternative to a summary judgment motion, a party may not thereafter move for summary judgment based on issues asserted in the earlier denied summary adjudication motion unless that party establishes, to the court's satisfaction, newly discovered facts or circumstances or a change of law supporting the issues reasserted in the summary judgment motion. The specific requirements of the summary judgment statute contained in California Code of Civil Procedure Section 437c(f)(2) govern such a motion rather than the general provisions of the reconsideration statute contained in Code of Civil Procedure Section 1008 (Cal. Civ. Proc. § 437c(f)(2); Le Francois v. Goel (2005) 35 Cal. 4th 1094, 1099, 29 Cal. Rptr. 3d 249 ; Nieto v. Blue Shield of California Life & Health Ins. Co. (2010) 181 Cal. App. 4th 60, 71-74 ; Coffman Specialties, Inc. v. Dept. of Transp. (2009) 176 Cal. App. 4th 1135, 1144, 98 Cal. Rptr. 3d 643 ; Bagley v. TRW, Inc. (1999) 73 Cal. App. 4th 1092, 1096 n.3, 86 Cal. Rptr. 2d 909).

[Optional] O. Deposition Statement Obtained During Discovery is Not an Unequivocal Admission That Would Support Granting of Summary Judgment. Deposition answers are evidence to be weighed in conjunction with other evidence and do not constitute judicial admissions under the D'Amico rule (D'Amico v. Board of Medical Examiners (1974) 11 Cal. 3d 1, 21-22, 112 Cal. Rptr. 786, 520 P.2d 10) because the D'Amico rule has never stood for the proposition that highly inculpatory testimony elicited from a party in a deposition may be sufficient by itself to warrant summary judgment, or that it relieves the moving party of its ordinary burden of showing the absence of a genuine factual dispute (Scalf v. D.B. Log Homes, Inc. (2005) 128 Cal. App. 4th 1510, 1522-1523, 27 Cal. Rptr. 3d 826).

[Add memoranda that which set forth any grounds for opposition based on the existence of a triable issue of material fact on substantive grounds according to the particular causes of action and facts involved; also add memoranda that set forth anyevidentiary or procedural objections to the motion for summary judgment (see §§ 221.32, 221.34- 30).]

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted by a plaintiff or defendant in opposition to a motion for summary judgment such as the one supported by the memorandum set out in § 221.20. Any opposition to a motion for summary judgment must be served and filed not less than 14 days preceding the noticed or continued date of hearing, unless the court for good cause orders otherwise [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b)(2)].

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated, including argument showing the insufficiency of the supporting affidavits or declarations, the existence of a triable issue, or both. In addition, counsel should attach affidavits or declarations that oppose the motion, along with the opposing party's separate statement in response to the moving party's statement of undisputed material facts [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b)(2), (c)].

With regard to optional paragraph C, the bracketed material may be inserted if the facts warrant.

[b] Existence of Triable Issue of Material Fact

The general ground for the opposition set out in this form is that a triable issue of material fact exists [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(c)]. This is shown when the moving party fails to meet its burden, or when the opposing party has presented facts which give rise to a triable issue of material fact [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(p)].

[c] Analysis Required of Court

The trial court and any reviewing court use the same three-step analysis to evaluate a motion for summary judgment [Perkins v. Howard (1991) 232 Cal. App. 3d 708, 712, 283 Cal. Rptr. 764] : (1) identifying the issues as framed by the pleadings, as it is those allegations to which the motion must respond by establishing a complete defense or by showing that there is no factual basis for relief on any theory reasonably contemplated by the opponent's pleading; (2) determining whether the moving party's showing has established facts which negate the opponent's claim and justify a judgment in movant's favor; and (3) determining whether the opposition demonstrates the existence of a triable, material factual issue.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Rules Governing Summary Judgment Procedure

Corwin v. Los Angeles Newspaper Service Bureau, Inc. (1971) 4 Cal. 3d 842, 94 Cal. Rptr. 785, 484 P.2d 953 , was an action for violations of Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 16720, 16726 (prohibited restraints of trade under Cartwright Act). Plaintiffs, operators of a publication service and legal advertising business, contended that defendants, a countywide newspaper service bureau and its members, entered into representation agreements which constituted illegal restraints of trade and tying arrangements. The trial court granted defendants' motion for summary judgment, and plaintiffs appealed from the judgment entered in favor of defendants.

The Supreme Court concluded that the trial court had erroneously granted the summary judgment and reversed the judgment. The Court held that the representation agreements constituted restraints on trade, and that whether less restrictive means were available and whether justifications existed were questions which should not have been decided on a summary judgment motion. It also held that the question whether the processing of legal advertising by defendants was a single product or separate products tied together was one of fact which remained to be resolved at trial. In reviewing the trial court's actions, the Court commented that summary judgment is proper only if the supporting affidavits would be sufficient to sustain a judgment in the moving party's favor andthe opposing party does not, by affidavit, show such facts as may be deemed by the judge hearing the motion to be sufficient to present a triable issue. The Court stated that the aim of the procedure is to discover, through the media of affidavits, whether the parties possess evidence requiring the weighing procedures of a trial. In examining the sufficiency of the affidavits, the moving party's affidavits are strictly construed and those of the opposing party are liberally construed, and doubts as to the propriety of granting the motion should be resolved in favor of the opposing party. The Court noted that such summary procedure is drastic and should be used with caution so that it does not become a substitute for the open trial method of determining facts (4 Cal. 3d 842, 851-852) .

Jos. Schlitz Brewing Co. v. Downey Distributor (1980) 109 Cal. App. 3d 908, 167 Cal. Rptr. 510 , was an action by a beer manufacturer against a wholesale distributor of its beer for the balance owing on defendant's open account and against defendant distributor's sole stockholders on their written guaranties. Defendants cross complained against plaintiff for breach of contract, interference with a business advantage, fraud, and conspiracy, based on an alleged oral agreement with plaintiff that defendant had the assignable right to be the wholesale distributor in a given area and on plaintiff's covenant to deal in good faith, both of which plaintiff violated by terminating defendant's rights to its substantial damage after defendant had received an oral offer to purchase the distributorship. Plaintiff and cross defendant moved for summary judgment on its complaint as well as the cross complaint, and defendants and cross complainants also moved for summary judgment. The trial court denied defendants' motion and instead granted plaintiff's motion for summary judgment. Defendants appealed from the judgment.

The court of appeal reversed judgment for plaintiff. After examining the facts in the supporting and opposing papers, the court held that defendant distributor's opposing declaration contained the germ of a potential cause of action by defendant/cross complainant for intentional interference with prospective business or economic advantage. Existing triable issues of fact included whether or not a business or economic advantage existed as a result of the oral offer or state of negotiations, whether plaintiff had knowledge of the offer or negotiations, and whether there existed a motivation on plaintiff's part to intentionally interfere with that relationship so as to gain an advantage for itself. Also, inferences drawn from defendant's opposing declaration raised triable issues of material fact as to the existence and breach of the oral agreement, and as to the claims of fraud and conspiracy.

The court based its holdings on Code Civ. Proc. § 437c which provides that summary judgment must be granted if all the papers submitted show that there is no triable issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law. In examining the supporting and opposing papers, the court applied the general rule that summary judgment is proper only if the supporting affidavits are sufficient to sustain a judgment for the moving party and the opposing affidavits do not show facts sufficient to present a triable issue of fact. The moving party's affidavits are strictly construed and the opponent's liberally construed, and doubts as to the propriety of summary judgment are resolved against granting the motion (109 Cal. App. 3d 908, 914) . When looking at defendant distributor's declaration concerning triable issues as to the intentional interference cause of action, the court stated that it is the better rule that the facts alleged in opposing papers be accepted as true and that such papers to be sufficient need not necessarily be composed wholly of strictly evidentiary facts (109 Cal. App. 3d 908, 916-917 ; but see Overland Plumbing, Inc. v. Transamerica Ins. Co. (1981) 119 Cal. App. 3d 476, 483-484, 174 Cal. Rptr. 1 , discussed in § 221.37[4][a]).

[b] Burden on Moving Party

The burden of proof for the moving party plaintiff is to prove each element of the cause of action entitling plaintiff to judgment on that cause of action [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(p)(1)].

The burden of proof for a moving party defendant is to prove that one or more elements of the cause of action, even if not separately pleaded, cannot be established, or that there is a complete defense to that cause of action [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(o)(1), (2)]. After the moving party has met this burden of proof, the burden shifts to the opposing party to show that a triable issue of material fact exists as to that cause of action or a defense to it [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(o)(1), (2)]. The meaning of this language has been the subject of much debate [see Scheiding v. Dinwiddie Construction Co. (1999) 69 Cal. App. 4th 64, 72-73, 81 Cal. Rptr. 2d 360] .

The language regarding burden of proof was added to Code Civ. Proc. § 437c in 1992 [see Stats. 1992, Ch. 1348, § 1] and moves California summary judgment law closer to the federal standard under Fed. R. Civ. P., Rule 56, as interpreted by Celotex Corp. v. Catrett (1986) 477 U.S. 317, 325, 106 S. Ct. 2548, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265 [Aguilar v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (2001) 25 Cal. 4th 826, 848, 107 Cal. Rptr. 2d 841, 24 P.3d 493 ; see also Saelzler v. Advanced Group 400 (2001) 25 Cal. 4th 763, 767-768, 107 Cal. Rptr. 2d. 617, 23 P.3d 1143] (1992 and 1993 amendments to Code Civ. Proc. § 437c have changed summary judgment law dramatically and like its federal counterpart, statute now places initial burden on moving party, and shifts it to opposing party on showing that one or more elements of cause of action cannot be established). It has been noted that the Legislature intended that the burden-shifting characteristics of Fed. R. Civ. P., Rule 56, as interpreted by Celotex, were to be applied to California summary judgment motions when a defendant relied on a plaintiff's factually inadequate discovery answers to seek summary judgment [Union Bank v. Superior Court (1995) 31 Cal. App. 4th 573, 590-592, 37 Cal. Rptr. 2d 653 (court declined to address other issues concerning how federal rule or Celotex analysis may apply); see Aguilar v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (2001) 25 Cal. 4th 826, 854, 107 Cal. Rptr. 2d 841, 24 P.3d 493 (California summary judgment law now conforms largely, but not completely with its federal counterpart; must at least show that moving party does not possess and cannot reasonably obtain needed evidence)]. More properly, the burden may be described as [Aguilar v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (2001) 25 Cal. 4th 826, 850, 107 Cal. Rptr. 2d 841, 24 P.3d 493] :

- First, that from commencement to conclusion of the motion the moving party has the burden of persuasion that there is no triable issue of fact and that he or she is entitled to judgment as a matter of law, and

- Second, that the burden that shifts is a burden of production. The moving party has the initial burden of production to make a prima facie showing of the nonexistence of any triable issue of material fact, and if he or she carries that burden, the burden shifts, and the opposing party has a burden of production to make a prima facie showing of the existence of a triable issue of fact.

How the parties moving for, and opposing, summary judgment may each carry their burden of persuasion and/or production depends on which would bear what burden of proof at trial. For example, if a plaintiff who would bear the burden of proof by a preponderance of evidence at trial moves for summary judgment, he or she must present evidence that would require a reasonable trier of fact to find any underlying material fact more likely than not; otherwise, he or she would not be entitled to judgment as a matter of law [Aguilar v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (2001) 25 Cal. 4th 826, 851, 107 Cal. Rptr. 2d 841, 24 P.3d 493] .

In Aguilar v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (2001) 25 Cal. 4th 826, 107 Cal. Rptr. 2d 841, 24 P.3d 493 , an individual brought an antitrust action on behalf of herself and other consumers of gasoline against petroleum companies alleging an unlawful conspiracy under the Cartwright Act (Bus. & Prof. Code § 16720 et seq.) The trial court granted the defendants' motions for summary judgment, but later granted the plaintiff's motion for a new trial. The court of appeal reversed the superior court's order and remanded the case to the superior court with directions to issue an order granting the defendants summary judgment.

The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment of the court of appeal. The Court held that summary judgment law no longer requires a defendant moving for summary judgment to conclusively negate an element of the plaintiff's cause of action. All that the defendant need do is to show that the plaintiff cannot establish at least one element of the cause of action--for example that the plaintiff cannot prove element X (25 Cal. 4th 826, 853) . However, California continues to require a defendant moving for summary judgment to present evidence, and not simply point out through argument, that the plaintiff does not possess, and cannot reasonably obtain, needed evidence. Whereas, under federal law, "pointing out through argument" may be sufficient, under state law, it is not (25 Cal. 4th 826, 854-855) . The defendant must support the motion with evidence including "affidavits, declarations, admissions, answers to interrogatories, depositions, and matters of which judicial notice" must or may be taken (Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b)), for example, admissions by the plaintiff following extensive discovery to the effect that he or she has discovered nothing. But the defendant must indeed present "evidence." The court disapproved language in certain cases, giving Hunter v. Pacific Mechanical Corp. (1995) 37 Cal. App. 4th 1282, 1288, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 335 as an example, purportedly allowing a defendant moving for summary judgment simply to point out, "an absence of evidence to support" an element of the plaintiff's cause of action (25 Cal. 4th 826, 855 n.23).

At trial the plaintiff would have borne the burden of proof by a preponderance of the evidence as to her Cartwright Act cause of action. The defendants carried their initial burden of production to make a prima facie showing by presenting evidence that would require a reasonable jury not to find in their favor on the issue of conspiracy. Plaintiff did not carry the burden of production that shifted to her to make a prima facie showing of the presence of unlawful conspiracy since her evidence and the inferences she drew from it were at best ambiguous (25 Cal. 4th 826, 861-862) .

In Scheiding v. Dinwiddie Construction Co. (1999) 69 Cal. App. 4th 64, 81 Cal. Rptr. 2d 360 , plaintiff husband and wife sued hundreds of defendants for damages after the husband was diagnosed with asbestosis and asbestos-related pleural disease. The complaint alleged that plaintiff husband was exposed to asbestos fibers at various work sites during his career. In responses to interrogatories and in the husband's deposition, the plaintiffs did not identify any job site at which the defendant Dinwiddie was the general contractor. At the deposition neither Dinwiddie nor any other defendant asked the husband to identify any job site where Dinwiddie had been present. Dinwiddie asked no questions at the deposition and conducted no other discovery. Dinwiddie moved for summary judgment, arguing lack of causation because the husband, in his deposition, had not identified any job site where Dinwiddie was general contractor. Dinwiddie supported the motion with a declaration by its defense counsel that plaintiff husband failed to mention Dinwiddie in the course of discovery. Plaintiff's opposed the motion on the basis that Dinwiddie had not shown that the element of causation could not be established. The trial court granted summary judgment in defendant's favor, and plaintiffs appealed.

In reversing the judgment, the court of appeal found that it was confronted with a record that arguably disclosed no affirmative evidence insupport of the motion and none in opposition. The court framed the issue as what quantum of evidence is needed to trigger the evidentiary burden shifting on a summary judgment motion (69 Cal. App. 4th 64, 70) .

The court noted that although the 1992 and 1993 amendments to California's summary judgment law adopted the federal mechanism of burden shifting, they did not change California's fundamental requirement that the moving party prove its right to summary judgment (69 Cal. App. 4th 64, 71) . Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(c), (o)(2) (see now Code Civ.

Proc. § 437c(p)(2)) implies a need for concrete evidence from the moving party and expressly requires the moving party to supply more than bare assertions, whether alleged in a pleading or by way of argument, that the opposing party has no evidence to support a particular claim (69 Cal. App. 4th 64, 75-76) .

The court noted that an apparent majority of the appellate courts accept the proposition that a defendant can meet the burden of proof by showing that a plaintiff has no evidence to support plaintiff's case. A minority view does not disagree with this general proposition but suggests that a defendant must do more than merely argue there is an absence of evidence and must produce affirmative evidence to show that the plaintiff cannot establish a prima facie case. The Supreme Court has not directly considered the issue (69 Cal. App. 4th 64, 81) .

The Scheiding court attempted to reconcile the two views based on the inferences available from California's Civil Discovery Act of 1986 [Code Civ. Proc. § 2016 et seq. (Code Civ. Proc. § 2016.010 et seq., operative July 1, 2005)], which imposed on the plaintiffs in Union Bank v. Superior Court (1995) 31 Cal. App. 4th 573, 37 Cal. Rptr. 2d 653 , a duty to answer interrogatories in a straightforward fashion, and as completely as possible, given the information available to them. The court in Union Bank could therefore presume that the plaintiffs had answered "fully and truthfully," and could infer that they had no other evidence to support their claims. The plaintiffs had not asked for a continuance to obtain further evidence (69 Cal. App. 4th 64, 81) . In Hunter v. Pacific Mechanical Corp. (1995) 37 Cal. App. 4th 1282, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 335 , the court inferred a lack of evidence from discovery responses, which was an extension of the inference that supported the court's conclusion in the Union Bank case: since the plaintiff had a statutory duty to respond fully, plaintiff's factually devoid answers showed plaintiff had no facts (69 Cal. App. 4th 64, 78-79) . The court stated that Hagen v. Hickenbottom (1995) 41 Cal. App. 4th 168, 186, 51 Cal. Rptr. 2d 642 , which is often cited for its criticism of the expansive boundary delineated by Hunter, actually argues caution more than disagreement. The Hagen court noted in part that (1) a defendant must make an affirmative showing in support of his or her motion, which connotes something significantly more than simply pointing out to the court that there is an absence of evidence, and (2) before the burden of producing even a prima facie case should be shifted to the plaintiff in advance of trial, a defendant who cannot negate an element of the plaintiff's case should be required to produce direct or circumstantial evidence that the plaintiff not only does not have but cannot reasonably expect to obtain a prima facie case (69 Cal. App. 4th 64, 82-83) . The court concluded that it agreed with Hunter that the circumstantial evidence which would be required by Hagen can consist of "factually devoid" discovery responses from which an absence of evidence can be inferred. The court also agreed with the view in Hagen that the burden should not shift without stringent review of the direct, circumstantial and inferential evidence. Reconciliation of the two views is not difficult once the inferential reasoning expressly permitted by Code Civ. Proc. § 437c is considered (69 Cal. App. 4th 64, 83) .

Ultimately the court did not decide whether the more cautious view is the better one because the trial court's ruling was incorrect even under the more circumspect approach. Because defendant conducted no discovery and in plaintiff's deposition, plaintiff was not asked a single question concerning the defendant, there was not a sufficient basis for an inference that plaintiffs could not produce further evidence to support an element crucial to their claims. The duty to answer completely only extended so far as the reasonable ambit of the questions asked. The plaintiff had no duty to volunteer information that was not requested. The initial burden cannot be shifted without the evidence and inferences described by the statute, and Dinwiddie's motion, unlike the motions in Union Bank and Hunter, relied on argument rather than on evidence. (69 Cal. App. 4th 64, 82-83) .

Gulf Ins. Co. v. Berger, Kahn, Shafton, Moss, Figler, Simon & Gladstone (2000) 79 Cal. App. 4th 114, 93 Cal. Rptr. 2d 534 , involved an action for legal malpractice and breach of contract against defendants concerning their defense of plaintiff's insureds in a previous lawsuit. The trial court granted defendants' motion for summary judgment, ruling that plaintiff lacked standing and failed to present a triable issue of fact with regard to causation. Judgment was entered, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. The court first concluded that plaintiff had standing to sue the defendants (see 79 Cal. App. 4th 114, 125-133) . The court then addressed the causation issue. With respect to whether there was a triable issue regarding causation, the motion for summary judgment was based solely on one interrogatory response by plaintiff (79 Cal. App. 4th 114, 123-124) . The court discussed Union Bank v. Superior Court (1995) 31 Cal. App. 4th 573, 37 Cal. Rptr. 2d 653 , and Scheiding v. Dinwiddie Construction Co. (1999) 69 Cal. App. 4th 64, 80, 83, 81 Cal. Rptr. 2d 360 , regarding reliance on and what constitutes "factually devoid" discovery responses. The court noted how Scheiding (which it referred to as Dinwiddie) distinguished Union Bank because the discovery in Dinwiddie, unlike Union Bank, failed to reveal any facts relevant to a particularissue because no discovery was directed at that issue. Thus, the court could not infer from the discovery responses that there was no other evidence on the disputed issue (79 Cal. App. 4th 114, 134) . The court concluded that to grant summary judgment, a court must be able to infer from the record that the plaintiff could produce no other evidence on the disputed point (79 Cal. App. 4th 114, 134)

The court held that the discovery proffered by the defendants consisting of plaintiff's nonresponsive answer to the interrogatory did not constitute "factually devoid" discovery to shift the burden to the plaintiff on the question of causation of plaintiff's damages, because it did not call for information on that subject, or for other information from which information on that subject could be deduced. Moreover, to the extent that nonresponsive information was provided which might have born on the question of causation, since it was not called for by the interrogatory, it would be speculation to determine what response would have been provided to a question squarely asking about plaintiff's damages. The court cannot assume that all information was provided to an interrogatory that was not propounded (79 Cal. App. 4th 114, 135-136) .

[c] Defendant's Motion Based on Affirmative Defense

Anderson v. Metalclad Insulation Corp. (1999) 72 Cal. App. 4th 284, 85 Cal. Rptr. 2d 331 , involved an action for asbestos related personal injuries. Plaintiff filed the complaint on June 14, 1996. The trial court granted defendant's motion for summary judgment on the ground that plaintiff's complaint was filed after the limitation period specified in Code Civ. Proc. § 340.2. Plaintiff appealed (72 Cal. App. 4th 284, 286-289) .

The court of appeal reversed (72 Cal. App. 4th 284, 297) . In so doing the court stated that the burden on a defendant moving for summary judgment based on the assertion of an affirmative defense is heavier than the burden to show one or more elements of plaintiff's action cannot be established. Instead of merely submitting evidence to negate a single element of plaintiff's cause of action, or offering evidence, such as vague or insufficient discovery responses, that the plaintiff does not have evidence to create an issue of fact as to one or more elements of his or her case, the defendant has the initial burden to show that undisputed facts support each element of the affirmative defense. The defendant must demonstrate that under no hypothesis is there a material factual issue requiring trial. If the defendant does not meet this burden, the motion must be denied. Only if the defendant meets this burden does the burden shift to plaintiff to show an issue of fact concerning at least one element of the defense (72 Cal. App. 4th 284, 289-290) .

To prevail on its summary judgment motion based on the affirmative defense that the action was barred by Code Civ. Proc. § 340.2, defendant bore the burden of submitting uncontradicted evidence of three elements triggering the statutory period; (1) the plaintiff was disabled within the meaning of the statute, (2) the disability was caused or contributed to by plaintiff's exposure to asbestos, and (3) the plaintiff knew, or in the exercise of reasonable diligence should have known, the causes or contributing factors of his disability (72 Cal. App. 4th 284, 292) . The court noted that the only logical inference from the evidence that plaintiff filed a workers' compensation claim based on injury described as asbestosis was that, as of the date of filing, plaintiff knew, or through the exercise of reasonable diligence should have known, that he had an injury and that the injury was caused, or contributed to, by exposure to asbestos. Knowledge that exposure to asbestos is a cause or contributing cause of plaintiff's condition is, however, only one element of the defense. Defendant also had the burden of presenting evidence which, if uncontradicted, would establish that plaintiff's injury rendered him disabled as defined in Code Civ. Proc. § 340.2(b) (72 Cal. App. 4th 284, 292) . The court concluded that although defendant offered evidence that, at least as of February or April 1995, plaintiff knew he had been injured by asbestos, defendant failed to meet its additional burden to submit evidence which, if undisputed, would support that, as of that same date, or earlier, plaintiff was permanently precluded from performing his regular occupation. The submission of evidence which is equivocal, or from which conflicting inferences may be drawn, is insufficient to meet the movant's burden. The trial court therefore should have denied the motion, rather than shifting the burden to plaintiff to present evidence that he was not disabled (72 Cal. App. 4th 284, 297) .

Huynh v. Ingersoll-Rand (1993) 16 Cal. App. 4th 825, 20 Cal. Rptr. 2d 296 , was a personal injury action against the manufacturer of a hand-held power grinder. The manufacturer moved for summary judgment based on the affirmative defense of misuse. The alleged misuse was using improper attachments contrary to a warning inscribed on the grinder's handle in tiny print. The trial court granted summary judgment, and the plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. In so doing the court noted that the burden on the moving party, when as is typical that party is a defendant, becomes even heavier when the summary judgment motion is based on an affirmative defense. Instead of merely supplying enough evidence to negate a single element of plaintiff's cause of action, the moving party must produce evidence which proves a complete defense. There is no obligation on the plaintiff to establish anything by affidavit unless and until the moving party has by affidavit stated facts establishing every element of the affirmative defense necessary to sustain a judgment in his or her favor (16 Cal. App. 4th 825, 830) . The court held that a triable issue of fact remained on the misuse defense because the defendant had failed to offer evidence on one element of the defense, that the misuse was the actual cause of the plaintiff's injury (16 Cal. App. 4th 825, 831-832) . The court went on to notethat even if the defendant had sustained its burden on the misuse issue, a triable issue remained on another element of the defense, the adequacy of the warning (16 Cal. App. 4th 825, 833-835) .

[d] No Need to Review Counter Declaration Unless Moving Party's Declaration Is Sufficient to Support Motion

Rawlings v. D.M. Oliver, Inc. (1979) 97 Cal. App. 3d 890, 159 Cal. Rptr. 119 , was an action for damages for personal injury based on strict liability in tort and negligence. Plaintiff was injured while cleaning an allegedly defective kelp dryer when a coworker activated the machine. The dryer had been manufactured according to the plans and specifications of the owners by a corporation which was then purchased by defendant. Defendant moved for summary judgment on the grounds that the manufacturer had complied with the owner's plans and specifications, and that as a successor to the business of the manufacturer, defendant was not liable for its predecessor's defective products. No counterdeclarations were filed, and summary judgment was granted for defendant.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that the dangerousness of the product and the duty to warn its users remained as triable issues, despite the manufacturer's compliance with the owner's plans, and that strict liability may be imposed even though the product is not mass-produced. The court also held that due to the ambiguity of the sales agreement and the lack of extrinsic evidence to interpret it, defendant had not eliminated the reasonable inferences that support the existence of either an express or implied assumption of liabilities by the defendant, and that the case came within the exception to the general rule against imposition on a successor corporation of its predecessor's liabilities. In summarizing summary judgment rules, the court stated that the trial court need not look to any counteraffidavits or counterdeclarations unless the moving party's declaration standing alone, but considered in light of the pleadings, would support the summary judgment motion (97 Cal. App. 3d 890, 896) .

[e] Sufficiency of Opponent's Response Papers

In Assad v. Southern Pacific Transportation Co. (1996) 42 Cal. App. 4th 1609, 50 Cal. Rptr. 2d 443 , a personal injury action, plaintiff and defendant had entered into a stipulation to accomplish a partial settlement of the case. As part of the stipulation, defendant conceded negligence on one of the claims, while reserving the right to dispute any issues relating to damage causation and the existence and extent of any injuries. Thereafter, defendant moved for summary judgment on the ground that the firefighter's rule applied and defeated an element of plaintiff's cause of action, without mentioning the stipulation or that it had conceded negligence. Plaintiff set forth the stipulation in full in his opposition, but did not list it in a statement of disputed facts, and made no argument with respect to it. The trial court granted the motion, stating that plaintiff offered no evidence which raised a substantial controversy as to the applicability of the firefighter's rule.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that applicability of the firefighter's rule, as an issue relevant to duty, had not been reserved for dispute by the stipulation and thus could not be the basis for summary judgment (42 Cal. App. 4th 1609, 1613, 1616) . In so holding, the court rejected the defendant's argument that in order to argue the stipulation plaintiff was required to set forth the agreement in a counter, separate statement of material facts. Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b) [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b)(3)] requires a party opposing a summary judgment to respond to each of the material facts the moving party contends to be undisputed, indicating whether the opposing party agrees or disagrees that those facts are disputed. The section further requires the opposing party to list any other material facts which the opposing party considers disputed. However, since the moving party did not list the stipulation as an undisputed fact (or refer to it at all) and the existence of the stipulation was not in dispute, plaintiff had no obligation to include it in his separate statement, and thus waived nothing by not including it (42 Cal. App. 4th 1609, 1614) . The court stated that what plaintiff was required to do was place the stipulation in evidence in the opposition to the motion for summary judgment, and noted that plaintiff had done this (42 Cal. App. 4th 1609, 1615) .

[f] Moving Party's Pleadings Will Not Support Motion

The facts and procedural background of Lipson v. Superior Court (1982) 31 Cal. 3d 362, 182 Cal. Rptr. 629, 644 P.2d 822 , are set out under Burden of Moving Party, above. In that case, the Supreme Court noted that defendant had not introduced any evidence to support its contention that plaintiff 's injuries were proximately caused by the chemical boil-over, which plaintiff fireman had come to contain, and not by any misrepresentation by defendant as to the nature of the substances involved in the boil-over (31 Cal. 3d 362, 374) . The Court then cited Joslin v. Marin Mun. Water Dist. (1967) 67 Cal. 2d 132, 147, 60 Cal. Rptr. 377, 429 P.2d 889 , for the rule that if the evidence accompanying the motion for summary judgment is deficient, the moving party cannot rely on the unsupported allegations in his or her pleadings to prove the case (31 Cal. 3d 362, 374) .

[g] Moving Party's Burden of Eliminating All Triable Issues of Fact

Nazir v. United Airlines (2009) 178 Cal. App. 4th 243, 100 Cal. Rptr. 3d 296 was a wrongful discharge lawsuit in which plaintiff, a Pakistani man, sued United Airlines and his supervisor for harassment, discharge, discrimination, retaliation and several other causes of action. United terminated plaintiff after he allegedly violated United's policy with respect to a female employee of an outside service provider. Defendants filed a motion for summary judgment or, in the alternative, summary adjudication. Defendants' moving papers totaled 1,056 pages and plaintiff's opposition totaled over 3,000 pages. Defendants' motion sought adjudication of 44 issues. Defendants also filed a reply, which included a nearly 300 page "reply separate statement" along with 153 pages of exhibits and evidence in support of that reply. The trial court granted summary judgment for defendants with little comment, except a blanket statement to the effect that plaintiff's opposition was mostly verbiage, and utterly lacking in the identification and presentation of evidence demonstrating a disputed issue of fact. The court overruled all of plaintiff's evidentiary objections without comment and sustained all except one of defendants' objections, again without comment.

The court of appeals began its opinion, which reversed the grant of summary judgment on 8 of the 14 causes of action, by noting that the case was a "poster child" for the criticism that courts are too often making determinations properly reserved for the factfinder, especially in employment law cases in which courts sometimes require the employee to essentially prove his or her case at the summary judgment stage. The trial court's order stated that "alternatively," it found that plaintiff's response to defendants' separate statement failed to confirm to the requirements of the Code of Civil Procedure and Rules of Court. On appeal, defendants argued that the court of appeals should affirm summary judgment on this ground. The court of appeals disagreed, noting the trial court had only said it would be at liberty to disregard plaintiff's separate statement. Under the applicable case law, a grant of summary judgment is too harsh a consequence for a separate statement that fails to conform to requirements (see, e.g., Collins v. Hertz Corp. (2006) 144

Cal. App. 4th 64, 74, 50 Cal. Rptr. 3d 149). The proper response, rather, is to give the opposing party an opportunity to file a proper separate statement (see, e.g., Parkview Villas Assn., Inc. v. State Farm Fire & Casualty Co. (2005) 133 Cal. App. 4th 1197, 1211, 35 Cal. Rptr. 3d 411).

The trial court granted summary adjudication of plaintiff's harassment claim on the basis that plaintiff failed to exhaust his administrative remedies and the harassment allegations were untimely. The court of appeals disagreed, finding that the materials plaintiff submitted to the Department of Fair Employment and Housing were adequate to demonstrate a triable issue as to whether plaintiff exhausted his administrative remedies. Plaintiff also demonstrated a triable issue as to the "continuing violation" doctrine developed by the U.S. Supreme Court. Furthermore, plaintiff raised a triable issue as to his discrimination claims. As to those claims, the trial court ruled that defendants had presented a legitimate, non-discriminatory basis for terminating plaintiff, which shifted the burden to plaintiff to present evidence that the reason for termination was pretext. The court of appeals disagreed, holding that plaintiff's evidence created a triable issue as to the pretext issue.

The court concluded its opinion by theorizing that the trial court had not read all of the papers, which totaled over 5,000 pages, and referred to the misleading picture painted by the mass of paper before the trial court, and to the error that resulted. And the two are undoubtedly related, as what apparently happened is that the trial court did not read all the papers, shown, for example, by the facts that it sustained "objections" to evidence where no objection was set forth. While not reading the papers cannot be condoned, it can perhaps be understood, as we hesitate to speculate how long it would take a trial court to meaningfully digest over 2,200 pages of separate statements, analyze and rule on 764 objections set out in 325 pages, review it all in light of the applicable law, and then write a proper order. The court used its opinion to remind trial courts of their inherent powers to insure the orderly administration of justice and control summary judgment procedures (178 Cal. App. 4th 243, 290) .

Teselle v. McLoughlin (2009) 173 Cal. App. 4th 156, 92 Cal. Rptr. 3d 696 arose out of a complex estate planning dispute. Plaintiff was the sister of two deceased brothers, George and Charles. The "George" trust provided that upon the death of either brother, the deceased brother's 50% share of certain jointly owned properties would be deeded to the other trust. Plaintiff was granted a 20% share of the estate in the George trust. An amendment to the George trust, however, deleted any reference to three of the properties (the "Waterloo properties"), due to the settlor's desire to sell the properties. Shortly after the amendment, Charles died. George died shortly thereafter. Following Charles' death, plaintiff deeded the George trust's 50% interest in the Waterloo properties to the Charles trust, without knowing of the amendment. Plaintiff filed an action as successor trustee to the George trust, seeking to recover half of the Waterloo properties on behalf of George's heirs. Plaintiff alleged that because of the amendment, the Waterloo properties were no longer subject to the exchange agreement of the trusts. Plaintiff alleged numerous causes of action against defendants, who were individuals with interests in the "Charles" trust. Defendants moved for summary judgment, relying on the unamended trust and not addressing the amendment to the trust. Plaintiff filed a response to defendants' separate statement one day late, and did not file a points and authorities. The court granted defendants' motion on the basis that plaintiff's opposition did not comply with Code Civ. Proc. § 437c. The court cited section (b), which states that the court may grant summary judgment in its discretion for failure to comply with "this requirement" of a separate statement.

The court of appeals reversed. Read in context, section (b) of the summary judgment statute requires that "each material fact contended by the opposing party to be disputed shall be followed by a reference to the supporting evidence." Thus, the court's discretion to grant summary judgment for failure to comply with (b) only applies where the opposing party fails to cite supporting evidence in opposition to a disputed material fact. The court noted that the statute requires the moving party to address the material facts as set forth in the complaint. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(p)(2), the opposing party is only obligated to show a triable issue of fact once the moving party makes a prima facie showing of the nonexistence of a material fact. The court may not grant summary judgment in its discretion under § 437c(b) for failure to comply with the separate statement requirement unless the moving party has met its initial burden of proof. In this case, the George trust amendment was a material fact, set forth in the complaint, that was ignored by defendants' motion for summary judgment. The complaint alleged that due to the amendment, George's interest in the Waterloo property was no longer subject to the exchange agreement. Defendants failed to address this material fact, instead setting forth the unamended trust in their separate statement. Therefore, defendants failed to comply with the summary judgment statute, which requires a moving party to set forth the material facts it contends are disputed (173 Cal. App. 4th 156, 173) .

Wright v. Stang Manufacturing Co. (1997) 54 Cal. App. 4th 1218, 63 Cal. Rptr. 2d 422 , involved a product liability action against the defendants. The plaintiff, a firefighter employed by the city of Glendale, wasinjured when a "deck gun" or water cannon mounted on a fire truck broke loose while under pressure from the water pump, throwing the plaintiff in the air and on the ground with the deck gun landing on him. The plaintiff's wife asserted a claim for loss of consortium. The trial court granted summary judgment in favor of the defendants, and the plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. In discussing summary judgment principles, the court stated that if a plaintiff pleads several theories, the defendant has the burden of demonstrating there are no material facts requiring trial on any of them. The moving defendant whose declarations omit facts as to any such theory permits that portion of the complaint to be unchallenged. Even if no opposition is presented, the moving party still has the burden of eliminating all triable issues of fact (54 Cal. App. 4th 1218, 1228) . The court found that to the extent that the plaintiffs were asserting a design defect theory of strict products liability, the motion for summary judgment should have been denied in that there was a triable issue of fact as to whether the deck gun was defectively designed. In their moving papers, the defendants failed to provide sufficient authority or evidence to negate the design theory of product defect (54 Cal. App. 4th 1218, 1229) . Moreover, the defendants failed to counter the declaration of the plaintiffs' expert or otherwise negate the plaintiffs' allegations that the manufacturer of the deck gun did not provide an adequate warning against the potential dangerous and foreseeable "mismatch" of the deck gun and riser pipe attachments which did not have adequate strength or design to withstand the water pressures generated with the use of the deck gun, and the alleged foreseeable danger that the deck gun or its attachments may become separated from the fire truck under such pressures. Thus, the court concluded that triable issues of fact existed on the "warning defect" aspect of strict products liability (54 Cal. App. 4th 1218, 1236) .

[h] Defendant's Burden to Refute Material Issues Raised By the Pleadings When Complaint Alleges Facts to Refute An Affirmative Defense

Bacon v. Southern Cal. Edison Co. (1997) 53 Cal. App. 4th 854, 62 Cal. Rptr. 2d 16 , an action by a minor who at the age of 13 sustained permanent injuries when he climbed to the top of an electrical transmission tower, received a shock and was knocked to the ground. The defendant owned the tower and real property under it. The tower was located in a residential neighborhood, near a park and under a paved pathway. The trial court ruled that the defendant was immune from liability under Civ. Code § 846, and that the plaintiff failed to show an issue of fact as to whether the defendant wilfully and maliciously failed to maintain the electrical transmission tower or warn or guard against a dangerous condition of the tower where the plaintiff was injured, and granted summary judgment in favor of the defendant.

The court of appeal affirmed, noting the rule that a defendant has the initial burden to show that the undisputed facts support each element of the affirmative defense. If, in anticipation of an affirmative defense, the complaint alleges facts to refute it, the pleadings themselves create a material issue that the defendant would have to refute to obtain summary judgment (53 Cal. App. 4th 854, 858) . The court concluded, however, that the defendant refuted the plaintiff's allegation of willful and malicious conduct by presenting evidence that it placed barbed wire and a warning sign at the tower, and that the warning sign and barriers were extant at the time the plaintiff climbed the tower (53 Cal. App. 4th 854, 857) .

[i] Strict Standards Apply To Defendant's Attempt to Disprove Element of Plaintiff's Cause of Action

In Tibor v. Superior Court (1997) 52 Cal. App. 4th 1359, 61 Cal. Rptr. 2d 326 , the plaintiff had been charged in an earlier criminal case with forcible rape using a deadly weapon. Initially, the accused was represented by one deputy public defender until the case was turned over to another deputy public defender. Eventually, the accused sought and received permission to represent himself. During the criminal trial, the victim testified on direct examination, but refused to be cross-examined. The case was dismissed, and the accused was released from jail. Thereafter, he sued the two deputy public defenders who had represented him in the criminal matter for legal malpractice in connection with DNA testing that the plaintiff requested, and locating alibi witnesses, claiming that the malpractice cost plaintiff 655 days of freedom. The court granted summary judgment in favor of only one of the defendants. The other defendant sought a writ of mandate directing the superior court to set aside its order denying that defendant's summary judgment motion.

The court of appeal granted the writ, directing the superior court to set aside the order denying the defendant's summary judgment motion and to enter a new and different order granting the motion. The court in reaching its conclusion, however, quoted as follows from Brantley v. Pisaro (1996) 42 Cal. App. 4th 1591, 1601, 50 Cal. Rptr. 2d 431 : "The task of resolving a defendant's motion for summary judgment will be facilitated by identifying at the outset the ground relied upon by the moving defendant. Is the defendant claiming the plaintiff cannot establish the cause of action pled (1) because the plaintiff's factually insufficient discovery responses demonstrate the plaintiff cannot prove an essential element of the cause of action; or (2) because the defendant's affirmative evidence discloses facts which negate the existence of an essential element of the plaintiff's claim by proving the contrary is true. If it is the latter, the court should evaluate defendant's evidence under the same strict standards which were held to apply to a defendant's attempt to disprove an element of the plaintiff's cause of action before the 1992 and 1993 amendmentsto section 437(c), in order to avoid unjustly depriving the plaintiff of a trial" (52 Cal. App. 4th 1359, 1368) . The court pointed out that the defendant, in support of his motion, did not rely on factually insufficient discovery responses by the plaintiff. Rather, the defendant argued that the plaintiff's causes of action for legal malpractice could not be established as a matter of law because the relevant undisputed facts proved that the defendant did not breach his duty of care to the plaintiff. In the alternative, the defendant argued that even if there was a breach of the duty of care, the relevant undisputed facts proved that the breach did not cause the defendants's damages. In other words, the defendant maintained that he disproved two essential elements of the plaintiff's claim, i.e., breach of duty, and casation (52 Cal. App. 4th 1359, 1368-1369) .

Ultimately, the court concluded that the defendant's papers failed to satisfy his burden of proof with respect to the breach of duty element (52 Cal. App. 4th 1359, 1369) . However, with regard to causation in a legal malpractice case, the court held that a former criminal defendant, to establish proximate cause, must prove by a preponderance of the evidence not only that the plaintiff's former attorney was negligent in the representation, but that the plaintiff was innocent of the criminal charges filed against him. A public defender charged with legal malpractice, in bringing a summary judgment motion, is required to demonstrate that a reasonable cause exists to believe that the plaintiff committed the offense for which the arrest was made. The burden then shifts to the plaintiff to establish that facts exist that would lead no person of ordinary care and prudence to believe or conscientiously entertain any honest and strong suspicion that the plaintiff is guilty of the crime charged. The court would then be required to make a finding as a matter of law as to factual innocence. Should the court find that a reasonable cause exists to believe that the plaintiff committed the offense for which the arrest was made, the court would be required to grant the public defender's motion for summary judgment since such a finding in effect means that the plaintiff cannot, as a matter of law, prove by a preponderance of the evidence that he is innocent of the criminal charges filed against him. Thus, the question of factual innocence is wholly one for the trial court, and not for the jury (52 Cal. App. 4th 1359, 1373) . The court concluded as a matter of law that reasonable cause existed to believe that the plaintiff committed the rape for which he was arrested (52 Cal. App. 4th 1359, 1368) .

[j] Sole Declaration of Party Raising Triable Issue of Fact Sufficient

In Estate of Housley (1997) 56 Cal. App. 4th 342, 65 Cal. Rptr. 2d 628 , the decedent had executed a will and inter vivos trust in 1989, naming the plaintiff as a beneficiary. In 1994, the decedent executed a codicil and amended the trust to remove the plaintiff as a beneficiary in each. After the decedent died and the decedent's will and codicil were admitted to probate, the plaintiff filed a petition in probate seeking to place a constructive trust on the decedent's estate, and an order declaring the plaintiff to be a beneficiary of the trust based on the plaintiff's detrimental reliance on the deceased's alleged promises to leave all of the deceased property to the plaintiff. The plaintiff alleged that the decedent breached an oral agreement to leave all of the decedent's property to the plaintiff. The trial court found that equitable estoppel did not preclude the successor executor of the decedent's will form asserting the applicable statute of frauds, and granted summary judgment in favor of the successor executor. The plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, agreeing that the plaintiff's papers opposing the summary judgment motion presented sufficient evidence to create triable issues of material fact on whether equitable estoppel should apply. The court noted that contrary to the success executor's contention, the sole declaration of a party opposing a summary judgment motion which raises a triable issue of fact is sufficient to deny the motion. Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(e) does not allow a trial court to weigh the credibility of a declaration submitted by the party opposing a summary judgment motion and then grant the motion, except where the declaration is facially so incredible as a matter of law that the moving party otherwise would be entitled to summary judgment (56 Cal. App. 4th 342, 359-360) .

[k] Moving Party's Burden to Eliminate All Triable Issue Notwithstanding Absence of Opposition

The facts and procedural background of Wright v. Stang Manufacturing Co. (1997) 54 Cal. App. 4th 1218, 63 Cal. Rptr. 2d 422 , are set out under Moving Party's Burden of Eliminating All Triable Issues of Fact, above. In reversing summary judgment in favor of the defendants, the court of appeal noted the rule that even if no opposition is presented, the moving party still has the burden of eliminating all triable issues of fact (54 Cal. App. 4th 1218, 1228) .

[l] No Need To Look at Plaintiff's Opposing Papers Until Defendant Makes Requisite Showing

Salazar v. Southern Cal. Gas Co. (1997) 54 Cal. App. 4th 1370, 63 Cal. Rptr. 2d 522 , involved a personal injury action in which summary judgment was entered in favor of the defendant, and the plaintiffs appealed. The court of appeal affirmed, but in so doing stated the following rules concerning summary judgment: when it is the defendant who moves for summary judgment, summary judgment is proper if the defendant either proves an affirmative defense or disproves at least one essential element of the plaintiff's cause of action, or if the defendants shows that an elementof the cause of action cannot be established. The defendant must show that under no possible hypothesis within the reasonable purview of the allegations of the complaint is there a material question of fact which requires examination by trial. Only if the defendant makes the requisite showing does the court need to examine the plaintiff's opposing papers to determine if they demonstrate the existence of a triable issue of material fact (54 Cal. App. 4th 1370, 1376) .

[m] Plaintiff Need Not Demonstrate Triable Issue of Fact When Defendant Fails to Meet its Burden

LeVine v. Weis (1998) 68 Cal. App. 4th 758, 80 Cal. Rptr. 2d 439 , involved, among other causes of action, wrongful termination under the False Claims Act (Gov. Code § 12650 et seq.). The trial court granted summary adjudication in favor of defendants and later plaintiff's entire action was dismissed. Plaintiff appealed. The court of appeal reversed the grant of summary adjudication for the cause of action based on the False Claims Act, but in all other respects affirmed the judgment. In so doing the court stated that summary judgment or summary adjudication is properly granted only when there is no triable issue of fact and the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. When the defendant is the moving party, defendant bears the burden of showing that one or more elements of the cause of action cannot be established or that there is complete defense. Unless the defendant meets its burden, plaintiff has no obligation to demonstrate that there is a triable issue of fact (68 Cal. App. 4th 758, 763) .

[n] Motion Based on Issues Asserted in Prior Unsuccessful Motion for Summary Adjudication

Le Francois v. Goel (2005) 35 Cal. 4th 1094, 29 Cal. Rptr. 3d 249 involved causes of action for misrepresentation and false promises. Plaintiffs sued their former employer and three of its officers. All defendants moved for summary judgment or, in the alternative, summary adjudication and the trial court denied the motion. Over a year later, the individual defendants filed a second motion for summary judgment based on the same grounds as the first motion.

Plaintiffs argued that the second motion violated Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(f)(2). The court granted defendants' motion, and plaintiffs appealed. The court of appeals held that although the motion violated both Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(f)(2) and Code Civ. Proc. § 1008, the trial court had inherent power to rule on the second motion even though it was not based on new facts or law.

The court briefly addressed the interplay between Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(f)(2) and Code Civ. Proc. § 1008, noting that while it seemed logical that the more specific provisions of the summary judgment statute governed, it was inconsequential as the two statutes say essentially the same thing. Turning to separation of powers principles, the court held that Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(f)(2) clearly limits the parties' ability to file repetitive motions not based on new facts or law, and that this was a permissible exercise of the Legislature's authority. However, the statute does not limit the court's ability to reconsider its prior rulings on its own motion. In fact, Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(f)(2) specifically states only that "a party may not" file a second motion not based on new facts or law. Accordingly, any reconsideration of a prior ruling not based on new facts or law must formally begin with the court on its own motion. The second summary judgment motion was improper and the court's ruling was reversed. The court specifically stated that, on remand, nothing precluded the trial court from reconsidering its initial ruling on its own motion (35 Cal. 4th 1094, 1109) .

In Holland v. Morse Diesel Internat., Inc., 86 Cal. App. 4th 1443, 1447, 104 Cal. Rptr. 2d 239 (2001) , plaintiff failed to disclose information about her medical condition and treatment on a health insurance application she submitted to defendant. She filed an action against defendant after it rescinded her insurance policy, asserting claims for breach of contract, breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, declaratory relief and violation of Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200. She alleged that the rescission of her policy constituted unlawful postclaims underwriting in violation of Ins. Code § 10384 and was an unreasonable use of her insurance application in violation of Ins. Code § 10381.5. Defendant answered and cross-complained, seeking a declaratory judgment that it rightfully rescinded the insurance contract, thereby precluding plaintiff from maintaining her action on the ground that plaintiff made material false representations and omitted material facts in her application concerning her medical condition and history and that it would not have issued the policy had she provided complete and accurate information. The trial court granted defendant's motion for summary judgment on the complaint and cross-complaint, on the ground that defendant had no duty to further investigate plaintiff's medical history because her application did not provide notice of any concerns; however, the trial court vacated its own order on the basis of new case law, reconsidered its prior order and denied it without prejudice. The trial court denied defendant's renewed motion for summary judgment on the ground that, although, even given recent authority, an insurer retains the right to rescind an insurance policy due to the insured's fraud, defendant's separate statement failed to establish that the material facts were undisputed with respect to each element of fraud. The trial court granted defendant's subsequent motion for summary judgment, ruling that it was entitled to rescission as a matter of law in view of the undisputed evidence that plaintiff made material misrepresentations and omissions regarding her medical history (Holland v. Morse Diesel Internat., Inc. (2001) 86 Cal. App. 4th 1443, 104 Cal. Rptr. 2d 239 .

The Court of Appeal affirmed. With regard to plaintiff's challenge that the summary judgment motion was improperly refiled in violation of Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(f)(2), even disregarding that defendant's motion for summary judgment fell outside the scope of Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(f)(2), because the prior motion was one for summary judgment rather than summary adjudication, the trial court properly exercised its discretion in determining that this provision did not bar summary judgment because the operative motion addressed an issue not raised by the prior motion. In its order denying the prior motion the trial court expressly stated that the motion's failure to address the elements of fraud was the basis for its denial. The operative summary judgment motion addressed this previously omitted issue, asserting that defendant was entitled to judgment because plaintiff committed fraud on the application and specifically identified the elements of fraud established by the undisputed evidence. The trial court had no reason to reach the question of whether the operative summary judgment motion relied on the same facts and law presented in the prior motion because the motion targeted an issue, plaintiff's fraud, not previously asserted. Even assuming that the operative summary judgment motion did not assert a new issue, the court nevertheless concluded that the trial court had inherent authority to reconsider sua sponte its prior order denying defendant's second motion for summary judgment, citing Le Francois v. Goel (2005) 35

Cal. 4th 1094, 1096-1097, 1105, 29 Cal. Rptr. 3d 249, 112 P.3d 636 , in which the California Supreme Court concluded a trial court has the authority to reconsider sua sponte an earlier interim ruling on a motion for summary judgment even though the moving party may not have asserted any new issues or newly discovered facts or law that would support the filing of a second or renewed motion for summary judgment pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. §§ 437c(f)(2) or 1008. The record supported the conclusion that the trial court effectively sua sponte reconsidered its prior order denying defendant's second motion for summary judgment. In the prior order, the trial court indicated that it would consider whether defendant was entitled to summary judgment on the ground that the undisputed evidence satisfied the elements of fraud. It characterized defendant's second summary judgment motion as seeking adjudication on the theory that plaintiff's concealment of material information entitled defendant to rescind coverage and found that theory insufficient. Though the trial court observed that the unstated inferences from the evidence identified in the separate statement might support the existence of fraud, the trial court believed that each of the elements of fraud (as enumerated in CACI No. 1900) had to be set forth explicitly in the separate statement and defendant's separate statement was insufficient to support summary judgment or summary adjudication. At the time it denied the second summary judgment motion, the trial court had already determined that it would reconsider its order if defendant could demonstrate that there was no triable issue of fact as to each element of fraud. That reconsideration may have been prompted by a motion filed in violation of § 437c(f)(2) did not alter the trial court's inherent authority to reconsider its prior order denying summary judgment (181 Cal. App. 4th 60, 71-74) .

Bagley v. TRW, Inc. (1999) 73 Cal. App. 4th 1092, 86 Cal. Rptr. 2d 909 , involved several causes of action based on plaintiff having been fired from employment. Defendant initially moved for summary judgment or, in the alternative summary adjudication of 130 issues. The trial court denied the summary judgment motion, granted summary adjudication in part as to each cause of action and denied summary adjudication in part as to each cause of action. The case was later reassigned to another judge. Relying on the same facts and the same law, the defendant thereafter made a second motion for summary judgment or, in the alternative, summary adjudication of each of plaintiff's causes of action which was heard by the new judge, who granted summary judgment. Plaintiff appealed (73 Cal. App. 4th 1092, 1093-1096) .

The court of appeal reversed (73 Cal. App. 4th 1092, 1098) . The court initially noted that under Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(f)(2), a party may not move for summary judgment based on issues asserted in an earlier denied motion for summary adjudication, unless that party establishes to the court's satisfaction, newly discovered facts or circumstances or a change of law supporting the issues reasserted in the summary judgment motion (73 Cal. App. 4th 1092, 1096) . Although neither party cited Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(f)(2) in their briefs and directed the court's attention to Code Civ. Proc. § 1008, the statute generally governing reconsideration motions, the court noted that quite clearly the case before it must be decided by the specific requirements of the summary judgment statute rather than the general provisions of the reconsideration statute (73 Cal. App. 4th 1092, 1096 n.3). The court held that the second motion for summary judgment was improper because it was not based on new facts or law, or, indeed, on anything that had not already been presented at the time of the first motion (73 Cal. App. 4th 1092, 1096-1097) .

[o] Deposition Statement Obtained During Discovery is Not an Unequivocal Admission That Would Support Granting of Summary Judgment

For discussion of D'Amico v. Board of Medical Examiners (1974) 11 Cal. 3d 1, 21-22, 112 Cal. Rptr. 786, 520 P.2d 10 , see § 221.20[3][e].

Scalf v. D.B. Log Homes, Inc. (2005) 128 Cal. App. 4th 1510, 27 Cal. Rptr. 3d 826 arose out of the construction of a log cabin home. Scalf sold the log home kit and D.B. Log Homes ("Lodge Log") manufactured the kit. Litigation commenced when the home's builder filed a complaint against the homeowners to foreclose a mechanic's lien. Scalf and Lodge Log each filed cross-complaints against the other. During discovery, Lodge Log took Walter Scalf's deposition. Lodge Log's counsel elicited testimony from Scalf to the effect that there was nothing wrong with the Lodge Log home kit and that Scalf did not attribute any of the eventual problems with the home to Lodge Log. Lodge Log moved for summary judgment on Scalf's cross-complaint. In its moving papers, Lodge Log asserted that Scalf's deposition testimony constituted judicial admissions that he was "perfectly happy" with the Lodge Log product and had "no criticisms" of Lodge Log's conduct. In opposition, Scalf produced evidence from other depositions to the effect that the material Lodge Log provided was defective and that material was missing. The trial court granted summary judgment, ruling that under D'Amico Scalf's deposition testimony constituted "conclusive judicial admissions" that the Lodge Log kit was not defective and that it was disregarding opposing evidence which undermined Scalf's admissions. Scalf appealed (128 Cal. App. 4th 1510, 1518) .

The court of appeals reversed. The court noted that in order to obtain summary judgment on its express indemnity claim, Lodge Log had to demonstrate that it was entirely free of negligence. In order to do so, Lodge Log relied entirely on Scalf's deposition testimony, and the trial court ruled that Lodge Log had carried its burden of showing it was free from fault. The court of appeals disagreed, stating that Scalf's testimony fell short of demonstrating that none of the problems with the home were attributable to Lodge Log. The court held that Lodge Log misinterpreted the D'Amico case in asserting that Scalf's testimony was an unequivocal admission exonerating Lodge Log from all wrongdoing in the case. The D'Amico rule is limited to instances where credible discovery admissions are contradicted only by self-serving declarations of a party. The court distinguished between written discovery admissions made under the "direction and supervision of counsel" and "easily misunderstood answers" given by a lay deponent (128 Cal. App. 4th 1510, 1522) . The court clarified that deposition answers are evidence to be weighed in conjunction with other evidence and do not constitute judicial admissions, stating that "D'Amico has never stood for the proposition that highly inculpatory testimony elicited from a party in a deposition may be sufficient by itself to warrant summary judgment, or that it relieves the moving party of its ordinary burden of showing the absence of a genuine factual dispute" (128 Cal. App. 4th 1510, 1522-1523) . Scalf's testimony that he had found nothing wrong with the kit and that he had no criticisms of Lodge Log's conduct were not equivalent to judicial admissions that Lodge Log was free from fault. Furthermore, it was error for the trial court to refuse to consider evidence which contradicted Scalf's testimony in opposition to the motion. Evidence in the form of other deposition testimony showed there was a triable issue of fact as to Lodge Log's liability. The D'Amico rule does not permit a trial court to disregard contrary evidence; it instead permits a trial court to disregard declarations by a party which contradict that party's own discovery responses (128 Cal. App. 4th 1510, 1524-1525) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Rules Governing Summary Judgment Procedure

In Great American Ins. Companies v. Gordon Trucking, Inc. (2008) 165 Cal. App. 4th 445, 81 Cal. Rptr. 3d 65 , plaintiff insurer sued defendant for negligence after a truck fire damaged the vehicle of one of plaintiff's insureds. Defendant moved for summary judgment on the basis that plaintiff could not establish breach of duty or causation. The trial court granted defendant's motion for summary judgment, and plaintiff appealed. The court of appeals reversed. Defendants had offered plaintiff's insured's interrogatory responses as evidence of the lack of causation. Although a defendant may rely on plaintiff's factually devoid discovery responses to show that plaintiff's cause of action has no merit, it was improper for defendant to rely on plaintiff's insured's discovery responses. An insurer is not bound by discovery responses made by its insured during the insured's litigation with a third party tortfeasor (165 Cal. App. 4th 445, 452) .

Crookall v. Davis, Punelli, Keathley & Willard (1998) 65 Cal. App. 4th 1048, 77 Cal. Rptr. 2d 250 , involved a legal malpractice action in which the trial court had granted summary judgment in favor of the defendants. The court of appeal in reversing the judgment noted, in part, that on appeal it independently assesses the correctness of the trial court's ruling, applying same legal standard as the trial court. The appellate court construes the moving party's affidavits strictly, the opponents affidavits liberally, and resolves doubts about the propriety of granting of the motion in favor of party opposing it (65 Cal. App. 4th 1048, 1057) .

Pay'N Pak Stores, Inc. v. Superior Court (1989) 210 Cal. App. 3d 1404, 258 Cal. Rptr. 816 , arose out of an action for breach of contract in connection with a lease of commercial property. The trial court granted summary adjudication on the issue of whether the landlord of a shopping center had a legal right to refuse the tenants' requests to sublease. On petition of the landlord, the court of appeal found the declarations of the parties presented factual disputes and raised factual issues making summary adjudication inappropriate, and ordered issuance of a writ of mandate directing the trial court to enter an order denying the motion for summary adjudication (210 Cal. App. 3d 1404, 1408-1412) .

In Spradlin v. Cox (1988) 201 Cal. App. 3d 799, 247 Cal. Rptr. 347 , a personal injury action against a worker and the worker's employer, the court of appeal reversed a summary judgment for defendants on the ground that there was a conflict in the evidence and that the conflict convinced it that a triable issue remained. The court stated that summary judgment is proper only if the affidavits in support of the moving party would be sufficient to sustain a judgment in his or her favor and the opponent does not by affidavit show facts sufficient to present a triable issue of fact. The affidavits of the moving party are strictly construed andthose of the opponent liberally construed, and doubts as to the propriety of summary judgment should be resolved against granting the motion (201 Cal. App. 3d 799, 805) . The court added that the summary procedure is drastic and should be used with caution so that it does not become a substitute for the open trial method of determining facts (201 Cal. App. 3d 799, 805-806) .

Walker v. County of Los Angeles (1987) 192 Cal. App. 3d 1393, 238 Cal. Rptr. 146 , was a personal injury action against a county. Plaintiff alleged that an abandoned dog bit off his thumb as he was trying to capture the dog at the express request of one of the animal control officers of defendant, who failed to give plaintiff proper equipment and support and otherwise failed to exercise due care in connection with plaintiff's attempt to capture the dog. In reversing, on the ground that a triable fact existed in regard to whether the officer and through her the county owed a duty of due care toward plaintiff, the court said that (1) the summary judgment procedure, inasmuch as it denies the adverse party's right to a trial, is drastic and should be used with caution; (2) summary judgment is properly granted only when the evidence in support of the moving party establishes that there is no issue of fact to be tried; (3) the affidavits of the moving party are strictly construed and those of the opponent liberally construed; and (4) doubts about the propriety of summary judgment should be resolved against granting the motion (192 Cal. App. 3d 1393, 1396) .

In Perry v. Medina (1987) 192 Cal. App. 3d 603, 237 Cal. Rptr. 532 , the trial court granted summary judgment for defendants in a wrongful death action on the ground that plaintiff parent was not a dependent of her deceased son [see former Code Civ. Proc. § 377(b)(2); now see Code Civ. Proc. § 377.60(b)]. In reversing the judgment on the ground that whether plaintiff was or was not a dependent presented factual issues not subject to resolution on a summary judgment motion, the court of appeal said that the rules for adjudication of a motion for summary judgment are as follows: (1) the matter to be determined by the trial court is whether facts have been presented that give rise to a triable factual issue; (2) the court may not pass on the issue itself; (3) summary judgment is proper only if the affidavits or declarations in support of the motion would be sufficient to sustain a judgment in favor of the moving party and the opponent does not by affidavits show facts sufficient to present a triable issue of fact; (4) the affidavits of the moving party are strictly construed; and (5) doubts about the propriety of summary judgment should be resolved against granting the motion (192 Cal. App. 3d 603, 606) . The court added that such summary procedure is drastic and should be used with caution so that it does not become a substitute for the open trial method of determining facts (192 Cal. App. 3d 603, 606-607) .

In Twohig v. Briner (1985) 168 Cal. App. 3d 1102, 214 Cal. Rptr. 729 , an automobile passenger brought an action against the driver and owner for damages resulting from personal injuries sustained in a traffic accident. Defendant, who may not have been at fault in the accident, had allegedly removed the seat belts after purchasing the automobile. The court of appeal reversed the trial court's grant of defendant's summary judgment motion, holding that whether or not defendant breached a duty of due care in operating and maintaining the vehicle by removing the seatbelts constituted two triable factual issues: whether the risk of the particular harm incurred was reasonably foreseeable under the circumstances and, if so, whether it was unreasonable to remove the seat belts in light of the risk involved (168 Cal. App. 3d 1102, 1105-1109) .

Harding v. State of California ex rel. Dept. of Transportation (1984) 159 Cal. App. 3d 359, 205 Cal. Rptr. 561 , involved actions for inverse condemnation, nuisance, and violation of civil rights. Plaintiffs appealed from the trial court order sustaining a demurrer to and ordering entry of judgment of dismissal on the nuisance and civil rights actions, and the grant of summary judgment on the inverse condemnation action. The court of appeal affirmed dismissal of the nuisance and civil rights actions, but reversed summary judgment on the inverse condemnation action, holding plaintiffs had alleged unique damage to their property and should be allowed to establish that they suffered from a peculiar and substantial burden as a result of their proximity to a state highway (159 Cal. App. 3d 359, 367) . The court noted that summary judgment is proper only if the movant's affidavits would be sufficient to sustain judgment in his or her favor and his or her opponent does not, by affidavit, show facts that may be deemed by the judge hearing the motion sufficient to present a triable issue. The aim of summary judgment is to discover, through the media of affidavits, whether the parties possess evidence requiring the weighing procedures of a trial. The movant's affidavits are strictly construed and those of his or her opponent liberally construed, and doubts as to the propriety of granting the motion should be resolved in favor of the party opposing the motion. This summary procedure is drastic and should be used with caution so that it does not become a substitute for the open trial method of determining facts (159 Cal. App. 3d 359, 363-364) .

In Saelzler v. Advanced Group 400 (2001) 25 Cal. 4th 763, 107 Cal. Rptr. 2d. 617, 23 P.3d 1143 , a deliverywoman brought a negligence action against the owners of an apartment complex in which she alleged that she was assaulted on the premises by unknown assailants after she attempted to deliver a package to an apartment resident in the midafternoon. The trial court found that the plaintiff failed to show that the defendants' breach of duty to safeguard the premises was a proximate cause of her assault and granted defendants' motion for summary judgment. The court of appeal reversed, holding that the plaintiff's showing was sufficient to raise a triable causation issue.

The Supreme Court reversed the court of appeal with directions to affirm the award of summary judgment in the defendants' favor, holding that the trial court properly granted summary judgment to the defendants based on the plaintiff's failure adequately to demonstrate that the defendants' negligence was an actual, legal cause of her injuries. The Court noted that the 1992 and 1993 amendments to Code Civ. Proc. § 437c have changed summary judgment law dramatically and, like its federal counterpart, the statute now places the initial burden on the moving party, and shifts it to opposing party on a showing that one or more elements of the cause of action cannot be established (25 Cal. 4th 763, 767-768) . The Court pointed out that most of the assaults and similar incidents of crime the plaintiff had cited occurred during nighttime, and the record indicated the defendants did provide extensive nighttime security. Moreover, the plaintiff's own evidence showed that that the defendants at least attempted to keep all security gates in working order, performing regular inspections and repairs.

Assuming that a triable issue existed regarding the extent or reasonableness of the defendants' security efforts, even a flagrant failure to provide such measures would not justify shifting to the defendants the burden of conclusively proving the absence of causation. No matter how inexcusable a defendant's act or omission might appear, the plaintiff must show the act or omission caused, or substantially contributed to, her injury. Otherwise, the defendants might be held liable for conduct which actually caused no harm, contrary to the recognized policy against making landowners the insurer of the absolute safety of anyone entering their premises The Court noted that under the current version of the summary judgment statute, a moving defendant need not support his or her motion with affirmative evidence negating an essential element of the responding party's case. In short, concluded the Court, the plaintiff could not prove that the defendants' omissions were a substantial factor in causing her injuries, and no proper basis existed for shifting the burden of proof on that issue to the defendants (25 Cal. 4th 763, 780-781) . Although finding no such facts were indicated in the present case, the court noted in dicta that, in a given case, direct or circumstantial evidence may show an assailant took advantage of the landowner's lapse (such as a failure to keep a security gate in repair) in the course of committing an attack, and that the omission was a substantial factor in causing the injury. Eyewitnesses, security cameras, even fingerprints or recent signs of break-in or unauthorized entry, might show what transpired at the scene (

In Weber v. John Crane, Inc. (2006) 143 Cal. App. 4th 1433, 50 Cal. Rptr. 3d 71 , plaintiffs sued various manufacturers, suppliers and contractors based on plaintiff Weber's alleged exposure to asbestos over the course of nearly 40 years. John Crane was one of the defendants named, based on products allegedly manufactured, sold or supplied by John Crane from 1960-1964. Crane moved for summary judgment, claiming there was no triable issue of material fact that John Crane was a cause of plaintiff's injuries. In support of the motion, Crane cited plaintiff's deposition testimony that he had not heard of the name "John Crane, Inc." and did not associate any product or service with that name. Plaintiff also stated in deposition that he did not recall working around a product manufactured by John Crane. The court granted defendant's motion, stating that the fact that plaintiff himself had no idea about a connection between himself and defendant was enough to shift the burden to plaintiffs. Plaintiffs appealed after their motion for reconsideration was denied.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that defendant's evidence that Weber was unfamiliar with the name John Crane, Inc. and could not associate any product with that name was insufficient to meet its burden. Rather, defendant's evidence showed only that plaintiffs would be unable to prove their case with Weber's deposition testimony. Under Aguilar and Scheiding, the defendant must make an affirmative showing that plaintiff will be unable to prove his case by any means, not just by a single means. John Crane produced no evidence allowing an inference that plaintiffs neither possess, nor reasonably can obtain, evidence that Weber was exposed to a John Crane product containing asbestos. Thus, the burden did not shift to plaintiffs to make a prima facie showing of a triable issue of material fact (143 Cal. App. 4th 1433, 1442) .

See Rubenstein v. Rubenstein (2000) 81 Cal. App. 4th 1131, 1142, 1151-1152, 97 Cal. Rptr. 2d 707 , discussed under § 221.29[4][f].

See Thatcher v. Lucky Stores, Inc. (2000) 79 Cal. App. 4th 1081, 94 Cal. Rptr. 2d 575 discussed under § 221.23[3][a].

In Neverkovec v. Fredericks (1999) 74 Cal. App. 4th 337, 87 Cal. Rptr. 2d 856 , the court examined the problem that occurs when an injured party settles with an alleged tortfeasor's insurer, signing a general release agreement that appears to excuse everyone in the world from liability, and thereafter proceeds against a different alleged tortfeasor who raises the general release as a defense. Under these circumstances, the trial court granted summary judgment for the defendant (74 Cal. App. 4th 337, 341-343) .

The court of appeal reversed. The court concluded that the defendant did not meet the burden of showing that he was a third party beneficiary of the release (74 Cal. App. 4th 337, 341) . With regard to the burden of proof, the court noted that a defendant moving for summary judgment may meet the burden of showing the action is meritless by establishing a complete defense. If the defendant makes a sufficient showing, the burden shifts to the plaintiff to present specific facts showing a triable issue of material fact (74 Cal. App. 4th 337, 344) . To obtain summary judgment on the ground that a general release has discharged him or her from liability, a third party to the release agreement must affirmatively show the parties intended to release him or her. The burden of proof is on third party under both contract law and the summary judgment statute. Because the court mustconsider the circumstances of the contracting parties' negotiations to determine whether a third party not named in the release was an intended beneficiary, it will seldom be sufficient for the third party to simply rely on a literal application of the terms of the release (74 Cal. App. 4th 337, 344) . Accordingly, when defendant moved for summary judgment contending the general release operated to relieve defendant from any liability and the plaintiff responded that the extrinsic evidence showed that the parties never intended to release defendant, even if the general release was sufficient to shift the burden of proof to plaintiff, the extrinsic evidence before the court raised a triable issue regarding the parties intent to release defendant (74 Cal. App. 4th 337, 343-344) .

In City of San Jose v. Department of Health Services (1998) 66 Cal. App. 4th 35, 77 Cal. Rptr. 2d 609 , the trial court granted summary judgment in plaintiff's favor. Although the court of appeal affirmed the judgment, the court noted with regard to the standard of review that the appellate court determines if the moving party's showing has established facts that negate the opponent's claim and justify a judgment in the movant's favor. The motion must stand self-sufficient and cannot succeed because the opposition is weak. A party cannot succeed without disproving even those claims on which the opponent would have the burden of proof at trial (66 Cal. App. 4th 35, 40) .

Travelers Casualty & Surety Co. v. Superior Court (1998) 63 Cal. App. 4th 1440, 75 Cal. Rptr. 2d 54 , involved an issue of coverage of third party claims under a general liability policy. Insurers moved for summaryadjudication of their duty to indemnify plaintiff arguing that plaintiff's claim for indemnification for particular site damages was barred by the affirmative defense of the pollution exclusion contained in their insurance policies (63 Cal. App. 4th 1440, 1447) . The trial court denied the insurers' motion, on among other grounds, that they had failed to meet their burden of proof. Defendants' sought review by a petition for a writ of mandate (63 Cal. App. 4th 1440, 1449-1450) .

The court of appeal issued a peremptory writ of mandate directing the trial court to enter a new order granting the motion (63 Cal. App. 4th 1440, 1464) . Quoting from Addy v. Bliss & Glennon (1996) 44 Cal. App. 4th 205, 214, 51 Cal. Rptr. 2d 642 , which quoted Hagen v. Hickenbottom (1995) 41 Cal. App. 4th 168, 186, 48 Cal. Rptr. 2d 197 , the court noted that it is clear from the 1992 amendment that a defendant have "shown that one or more elements of the cause of action ... cannot be established" (§ 437c, former subd. (n)(2), Stats. 1992, ch. 1348, § 1, now subd. (o)), that a defendant must make an affirmative showing in support of defendants motion. Such a showing connotes something significantly more than simply pointing out to the court that there is an absence of evidence. Before the burden of producing even a prima facie case should be shifted to plaintiff in advance of trial, a defendant who cannot negate an element of the plaintiff's case should be required to produce direct or circumstantial evidence that the plaintiff not only does not have but cannot reasonably expect to obtain a prima facie case. If that showing can be made it is both fair to defendant and consistent with efficient administration of justice that the plaintiff be called upon, on risk of summary judgment, to make a prima facie case (63 Cal. App. 4th 1440, 1452-1453) . The court further noted, with regard to coverage of third party claims under a general liability policy, that the burden of proof regarding the sudden and accidental exception to the pollution exclusion is different in a motion for summary adjudication than at trial. When an insurer moves for summary adjudication of the duty to indemnify based on the affirmative defense of the qualified pollution exclusion, the insurer has the burden of establishing tht affirmative defense as a matter of law pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(o)(2) (see now Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(p)(2)). Having met that initial burden, the insurer than has the additional burden, pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(o)(2) (see now Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(p)(2)) of making an affirmative showing that the insured cannot establish that the claims fall within the sudden and accidental exception to the pollution exclusion. To show that the sudden and accidental exception cannot be established, the insurer must show by direct or circumstantial evidence that the insured cannot reasonably be expected to make a prima facia showing that the claimed environmental damage arose from a sudden and accidental discharge, dispersal, release, or escape of pollutants. The insurer may point to the insured's interrogatory answers as evidence that the insured has no facts to support its theory of liability (i.e., the theory that damages are covered because they arose from sudden and accidental pollution discharges). If the insurer meets this burden, the burden shifts to the insured to show a triable issue of material fact exists as to the application of either the pollution exclusion or the sudden and accidental exception (63 Cal. App. 4th 1440, 1456) . The court concluded that the insurers had met their burden in their motion for summary adjudication causing the burden of proof to shift to the plaintiff and that plaintiff failed to meet its burden (63 Cal. App. 4th 1440, 1460-1463) .

In Addy v. Bliss & Glennon (1996) 44 Cal. App. 4th 205, 51 Cal. Rptr. 2d 642 (Sixth Dist.) , the plaintiff brought an action for employment discrimination. The trial court granted summary judgment in favor of the defendant, and the plaintiff appealed.

The court of appealed affirmed. In doing so, however, the court of appeal rejected the defendant's argument that it may show a cause of action has no merit merely by pointing out the absence of essential evidence to support some element of the plaintiff's case. Rather, the court agreed with the plaintiff that a moving defendant may not shift the burden to the plaintiff to put on a prima facie case simply by pointing out the absence of essential evidence to support the plaintiff's case, and that a defendant must make an affirmative showing in support of a motion for summary judgment (44 Cal. App. 4th 205, 210, 214) . The court followed Hagen v. Hickenbottom (1995) 41 Cal. App. 4th 168, 48 Cal. Rptr. 2d 197 (Sixth Dist.) . Although Hagan dealt only with the 1992 amendments to the summary judgment statute, and not the 1993 amendments, the court believed its reasoning was equally sound with respect to the latter amendments. Thus, a moving defendant must make an affirmative showing in support of his or her motion (44 Cal. App. 4th 205, 214) . However, the court concluded that the defendant had made a satisfactory showing by submitting evidence that the plaintiff had received the same training as other people in her position, and that her demotion was due to her inability to successfully satisfy job requirements (44 Cal. App. 4th 205, 219) .

In Hagen v. Hickenbottom (1995) 41 Cal. App. 4th 168, 48 Cal. Rptr. 2d 197 (Sixth Dist.) , plaintiffs, grandchildren of a decedent, brought an action to set aside a revocable living trust in favor of defendant on the grounds of undue influence. Defendant moved for summary judgment on the basis that plaintiffs had offered no evidence that she had done or said anything wrong. Defendant's "defense of truth" consisted of admitting having made the statements to decedent alleged by plaintiff, but asserting that the statements were true. The trial court, holding that plaintiffs had not shown a triable issue of fact to dispute that what defendant told decedent was true or specifying any other wrongful conduct, granted the summary judgment.

The court of appeal reversed, concluding that defendant neither demonstrated the legal validity of a "defense of truth" nor made a showingsufficient to require plaintiffs to put on a prima facie factual case at the summary judgment stage. The court held that in light of the 1992 amendment, a defendant must make an affirmative showing in support of his or her motion. Such a showing connotes something significantly more than simply pointing out to the court that there is an absence of evidence. Before the burden of producing even a prima facie case should be shifted to the plaintiff in advance of trial, a defendant who cannot negate an element of the plaintiff's case should be required to produce direct or circumstantial evidence that the plaintiff not only does not have, but cannot reasonably expect to obtain, a prima facie case. When such a showing can be made, the plaintiff may be called upon, on risk of summary judgment, to make a prima facie case (41 Cal. App. 4th 168, 186) . Applying these criteria, the court concluded that defendant did not make a showing that plaintiff's case could not be established sufficient to shift the burden in the summary judgment proceedings (41 Cal. App. 4th 168, 187) . The Hagan court interpreted Union Bank v. Superior Court (1995) 31 Cal. App. 4th 573, 37 Cal. Rptr. 2d 653 (Second Dist., Div. Five) , as satisfying the circumstance of the above criteria, but disagreed with those that suggest that a moving defendant may shift the burden simply by suggesting the possibility that the plaintiff cannot prove its case (41 Cal. App. 4th 168, 186) . Union Bank is discussed in § 221.20[3][c].

[c] Defendant's Motion Based on Affirmative Defense

In Consumer Cause, Inc. v. Smilecare (2001) 91 Cal. App. 4th 454, 110 Cal. Rptr. 2d 627 , plaintiff's complaint alleged that defendant, a dental care provider, had violated the warning provisions of the Safe Drinking Water and Toxic Enforcement Act of 1986 (Proposition 65) [Health & Safety Code §§ 25249.5-25249.13] by failing to warn employees and patients that certain types of fillings contained mercury. In its answer, defendant raised the affirmative defense that it was exempt, under the terms of the Act, from its warning provisions. Defendant brought a motion for summary judgment which relied on plaintiff's admission in discovery responses that plaintiff did not have any evidence to dispute the applicability of the exemption. The trial court granted the motion. The court of appeal reversed. The court held that a moving defendant may point to the absence of evidence to support plaintiff's case and shift the burden to plaintiff; if the plaintiff is unable to meet its burden of proof regarding an essential element of its case, the motion should be granted. However, the court held that in this case, defendant was not seeking to negate an element of plaintiff's case. Rather, the motion was based on an affirmative defense, and therefore the moving defendant had the initial burden to show that undisputed facts support each element of the affirmative defense. If defendant does not meet this initial burden, plaintiff has no obligation to establish anything (91 Cal. App. 4th 454, 467-468) .

[d] Moving Party's Burden to Eliminate All Triable Issues of Fact

In Juarez v. Boy Scouts of America, Inc. (2000) 81 Cal. App. 4th 377, 97 Cal. Rptr. 2d 12 , plaintiff alleged that while he was a member of a boy scout troop he had been sexually molested by a scoutmaster. Plaintiff's complaint contained causes of action based on breach of fiduciary duty, various forms of negligence, intentional infliction of emotional distress, and premises liability. The trial court granted defendants' motions for summary judgment and plaintiff appealed. The court of appeal affirmed summary judgment for defendants except as to one cause of action for negligence against two of the defendants, as to which the court reversed summary judgment (see 81 Cal. App. 4th 377, 385, 411-413) . In so doing, the court noted that a defendant is not entitled to summary judgment unless that moving party negates all theories of liability pleaded by the plaintiff (81 Cal. App. 4th 377, 397) .

In Campbell v. Derylo (1999) 75 Cal. App. 4th 823, 89 Cal. Rptr. 2d 519 , a negligence action involving injuries sustained from defendant's runaway snowboard, the trial court granted summary judgment for defendant. The court of appeal reversed. The court of appeal noted that the moving party bears the burden of proving that the claims of the adverse party are entirely without merit on any legal theory. The opposition must demonstrate only the existence of at least one triable issue of fact and all doubts as to propriety of granting motion must be resolved in favor of the party opposing the motion (75 Cal. App. 4th 823, 826) .

[e] No Need to Look at Plaintiff's Opposing Papers Until Defendant Makes Requisite Showing

See Rubenstein v. Rubenstein (2000) 81 Cal. App. 4th 1131, 1142, 1151-1152, 97 Cal. Rptr. 2d 707 , discussed under § 221.29[4][f].

The facts and procedural background of Thatcher v. Lucky Stores, Inc. (2000) 79 Cal. App. 4th 1081, 94 Cal. Rptr. 2d 575 are discussed under § 221.23[3][a]. Although the court concluded that the defendant met its initial burden of proof and due to plaintiff's failure to file opposition affirmed summary judgment in defendant's favor (79 Cal. App. 4th 1081, 1083, 1087) , the court also stated that unless the moving party has met its initial burden of proof, the court does not have discretion under Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b) [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b)(3)] to grant summary judgment based on the opposing party's failure to file a proper separate statement (79 Cal. App. 4th 1081, 1086) .

[f] Plaintiff Need Not Demonstrate Triable Issue of Fact When Defendant Fails to Meet its Burden

In Rubenstein v. Rubenstein (2000) 81 Cal. App. 4th 1131, 97 Cal. Rptr. 2d 707 , an action to set aside on grounds of fraud and perjury a judgmentin a marital dissolution obtained in family court, and to recover damages, the trial court had granted defendant's motion for summary judgment and plaintiff appealed. In reversing the judgment, the court of appeal noted that on summary judgment motions, once the moving defendant has met his or her initial burden, the burden shifts to the plaintiff to show that a triable issue of one or more material facts exists (81 Cal. App. 4th 1131, 1142) . The trial court, in granting summary judgment, had based its decision in part on plaintiff's failure to file a proper opposing separate statement and the untimeliness of plaintiff's papers. However, it was defendant's burden, in the first instance, to establish defendant's right to the relief defendant sought. Until that was done, plaintiff had no burden to produce opposing evidence or to disprove anything at all. Accordingly, the procedural defects in plaintiff's opposition did not entitled defendant to summary judgment and the grant of summary judgment was error (81 Cal. App. 4th 1131, 1151-1152) .

Binder v. Aetna Life Ins. Co. (1999) 75 Cal. App. 4th 832, 89 Cal. Rptr. 2d 540 , involved a suit against an employer for breach of the implied-in-fact contract not to terminate except for "good cause," and for age discrimination. The trial court granted summary judgment for the defendant. The court of appeal reversed. In so doing, the court of appeal stated that even though plaintiff bears the burden of proof at trial, the moving defendant bears the initial burden of showing the lack of any triable factual issue. A responding plaintiff has no evidentiary burden unless the moving defendant has first met its initial burden. Only after the moving defendant meets its initial burden does the burden shift to the plaintiff to demonstrate the existence of a triable issue (75 Cal. App. 4th 832, 839-840) .

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted by any party to oppose a motion for summary adjudication of a cause of action, affirmative defense or claim for punitive damages under Civ. Code § 3294 [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(f)].

The cases cited in the form were decided under former Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(f), which provided for summary adjudication of "issues" [see also discussion in § 221.21[2][c]]. They are cited as persuasive authority to the extent that they appear to remain consistent with Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(f), as amended.

A motion for summary adjudication must proceed in all procedural respects as a motion for summary judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(f)(2)]. Hence, any opposition to a motion for summary adjudication must be served and filed not less than 14 days preceding the noticed or continued date of hearing, unless the court for good cause orders otherwise [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b)].

Optional Paragraph B is for use in any procedural setting in which the party is seeking to have an order granting summary adjudication reconsidered or set aside. If it is being used, the form should be modified to reflect that procedural setting.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated, including argument showing either the insufficiency of the supporting affidavits or declarations or the existence of a triable issue of fact. In addition, counsel should attach affidavits or declarations that oppose the motion [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b)(2)].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Summary Adjudication Not Proper When Triable Issue of Fact Exists

Because a motion for summary adjudication is required to proceed in all procedural respects as a motion for summary judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(f)], it appears that it is subject to the general provisions governing summary judgment motions. Thus, by analogy to summary judgment motions, it is proper to grant a motion for summary adjudication only when all the papers submitted show that there is no triable issue as to any material fact with respect to the matter sought to be adjudicated, and that the moving party is entitled to summary adjudication as a matter of law (see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(c) (stating rule applicable to motions for summary judgment)). For additional rules for opposing a motion for summary judgment, see § 221.29.

Tauber-Arons Auctioneers Co. v. Superior Court (1980) 101 Cal. App. 3d 268, 161 Cal. Rptr. 789 , arose from an action in which plaintiff sought damages for personal injuries allegedly suffered while operating a defective planer which his employer had purchased at an auction sale conducted by defendant. Plaintiff moved for summary adjudication of issues under former Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(f), to establish the issues that defendant sold the planer and, as a seller, was subject to the rule of strict liability. The trial court granted the motion, determining that petitioner was engaged in the sale and distribution of the planer as a commercial marketer participating as an integral part of the business enterprise of marketing. Defendant then initiated a proceeding for a peremptory writ of mandate to compel the trial court to vacate its order.

After determining that relief by writ of mandate was appropriate, the court of appeal held that it was not appropriate for the trial court to declare that petitioner, as a marketer, was strictly liable on account of any defect in the planer. The court ordered that a peremptory writ of mandate issue requiring the trial court's order to be set aside, and that an order denying the motion be entered. The court reasoned that the policy of the doctrine of strict liability does not justify the imposition of strict liability on every dealer in secondhand goods for defects created by innumerable manufacturers of the class or classes of products with which he or she may deal. Additionally, if the defect was a design defect created by the original manufacturer, the facts adduced did not support liability because they showed that defendant had no special position with the original manufacturer and played no more than a random and accidental role in the distribution of the planer. In reviewing a trial court's order declaring an issue to be without substantial controversy, the court stated that it was bound by the rules generally applicable to review of summary judgments. Relying on Nazaroff v. Superior Court (1978) 80 Cal. App. 3d 553, 558, 145 Cal. Rptr. 657 (discussed under § 221.30[3][b]), it referred to the general rule that summary judgment is proper only if the supporting papers, strictly construed, contain facts sufficient to entitle the moving party to judgment, and the opposing papers, liberally construed, show that there is no issue of fact to be tried (101 Cal. App. 3d 268, 273-274) .

[b] Triable Issues of Fact Relating to Cause of Action

In Nazaroff v. Superior Court (1978) 80 Cal. App. 3d 553, 145 Cal. Rptr. 657 , the plaintiff, the mother of a young child who died from the effects of near drowning in a swimming pool, brought an action for wrongful death and her emotional distress at witnessing the injury to her son, against the owners of the pool. The record indicated that the mother was away from the pool when she heard a shout, went to the scene, and observed her child being pulled from the swimming pool. The owners moved for and were granted a partial summary judgment on the cause of action for emotional distress. The plaintiff petitioned for writ of mandate, seeking to set aside the partial summary judgment for emotional distress.

The court of appeal granted the petition, commanding the trial court to set aside and vacate its order granting summary judgment as to the cause of action for emotional distress and to enter an order denying the motion as to that cause of action. The court balanced the criteria stated in Dillon v. Legg (1968) 68 Cal. 2d 728, 740, 69 Cal. Rptr. 72, 441 P.2d 912 , particularly the "sensory and contemporaneous observance of the accident" requirement. The reviewing court could not say as a matter of law that the injuries resulting from the defendant's negligence, that is, the near drowning of the child, were not still being experienced at the time the mother first observed her son. Therefore, the court concluded, the record demonstrated that there were triable issues of fact to carry to the jury as to whether the alleged physical harm to the mother resulted from emotional shock proximately caused by the direct emotional impact from the contemporaneous observation of the immediate consequence of defendant's negligence (80 Cal. App. 3d 553, 557, 566-567) .

[a] Summary Adjudication Not Proper When Triable Issue of Fact Exists

In Mason v. Superior Court (1985) 163 Cal. App. 3d 989, 210 Cal. Rptr. 63 , plaintiffs sought in the first count cancellation of a deed to real property, quiet title, ejectment, and declaratory relief, and in the second count damages. Plaintiffs also recorded and filed a lis pendens. Defendants moved for summary judgment and for summary adjudication of issues in the alternative under former Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(f), and also moved to expunge plaintiffs' lis pendens. The trial court granted defendants' motion for summary judgment on count one only, and granted the motion to expunge the lis pendens. Plaintiffs filed a petition for writ of mandate requesting issuance of the writ only with respect to the order expunging the lis pendens. The court of appeal issued the peremptory writ in regard to both orders, holding that partial summary judgment was precluded by the existence of a triable issue of fact based on evidence presented with respect to construction of the deed (163 Cal. App. 3d 989, 993-994, 997-999) .

§ 221.31 Opposing Motion for Summary Adjudication--Disposition of Cause of Action, Affirmative Defense, Claim for Damages, or Issue of Duty Not Complete [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(f)]

[Caption. See § 221.30.]

SUMMARY ADJUDICATION AS TO _____ [specify matter sought to be adjudicated, e.g., THE THIRD CAUSE OF ACTION OF PLAINTIFF'S FIRST AMENDED COMPLAINT] IS IMPROPER BECAUSE IT DOES NOT COMPLETELY DISPOSE OF A CAUSE OF ACTION, AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE, CLAIM FOR DAMAGES, OR AN ISSUE OF DUTY AND THE MOVING PARTY IS NOT ENTITLED TO SUMMARY ADJUDICATION AS A MATTER OF LAW.

A. Summary Adjudication Not Proper Unless It Completely Disposes of Cause of Action, Defense, Damage Claim, or DutyIssue. A motion for summary adjudication shall be granted only if it completely disposes of a cause of action, an affirmative defense, a claim for damages, or an issue of duty (Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(f)(1); see Hood v. Superior Court (1995) 33 Cal. App. 4th 319, 324, 39 Cal. Rptr. 2d 296). For purposes of determining whether a complaint in fact asserts one or more causes of action for pleading purposes depends on whether it alleges invasion of one or more primary rights, and the manner in which a plaintiff elects to organize his or her claims within the body of the complaint is irrelevant to determining the number of causes of action alleged under the primary right theory (Hindin v. Rust (2004) 118 Cal. App. 4th 1247, 1257-1258, 13 Cal. Rptr. 3d 668).

[Optional] B. Summary Adjudication Not Proper When Disposition of Issue of Contractual Duty Is Not Complete. An interpretation of a contractual duty that does not fully dispose of any portion of the action is not a proper subject of summary adjudication (Regan Roofing Co. v. Superior Court (1994) 24 Cal. App. 4th 425, 437, 29 Cal. Rptr. 2d 413 ; see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(f)(1)).

[Optional] C. Summary Adjudication of Component of Damages Not Proper Unless It Completely Disposes of Cause of Action. A motion for summary adjudication of a single item of compensatory damage may not be granted unless the motion disposes of an entire cause of action (DeCastro West Chodorow & Burns, Inc. v. Superior Court (1996) 47 Cal. App. 4th 410, 422, 54 Cal. Rptr. 2d 792).

[Optional] D. Piecemeal Adjudication of Claim for Punitive Damages Prohibited. Code of Civil Procedure section 437c(f) disallows piecemeal adjudication of a claim for punitive damages. The basic concept of summary adjudication is meant to dispose of an entire substantive area. Thus, a grant of summary adjudication in this area must cover the entire claim. Summary adjudication is not properly granted as a piecemeal disposition of some of the asserted facts within a claim for punitive damages, but may only be granted when the entire claim for punitive damages is eliminated. According, when a claim for punitive damages is based on an interrelated set of facts and circumstances, if any one or more of the facts would support a claim for punitive damages, then summary judgment is not available to eliminate from trial other facts relating to the claim for punitive damages (Catalano v. Superior Court (2000) 82 Cal. App. 4th 91, 92, 95, 97-98, 97 Cal. Rptr. 2d 842).

[Add points and authorities which set forth any particular evidentiary or procedural objections to the motion for summary adjudication (see §§ 221.32, 221.34 -221.44) and any grounds for opposition based on an issue of duty not resolved on substantive grounds according to the particular issue and facts involved.]

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted by any party to oppose a motion for summary adjudication of a cause of action, an affirmative defense, a claim of damages, or the issue of whether or not one or more defendants owes a duty to one or more plaintiffs, such as one supported by the points and authorities set out in § 221.21 [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(f)].

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated, including argument showing either the insufficiency of the supporting affidavits or declarations, or the existence of an unresolved cause of action, affirmative defense, claim for damages, or issue of duty. In addition, counsel should attach affidavits or declarations that oppose the motion [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b)(2)].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Summary Adjudication Not Proper Unless It Completely Disposes of Cause of Action, Defense, Damage Claim, or Duty Issue

In Hood v. Superior Court (1995) 33 Cal. App. 4th 319, 39 Cal. Rptr. 2d 296 , an insurer filed an action against an agent for breach of a noncompetition agreement. After the trial court denied defendant's motion for summary adjudication of the agent's cross complaint, plaintiff amended its complaint to add a cause of action for declaratory relief as to issues raised in the cross complaint, and successful moved for summary adjudication of the declaratory relief cause of action. The court of appeal issued a writ of mandate.

The appellate court acknowledged that the amended statute permitted summary adjudication of a cause of action relating to a separate and distinct wrongful act, even though the charging pleading combined it with other wrongful acts in a single pleaded cause of action. On the other hand, a party cannot select issues (other than duty and punitive damages) implicated in one or more causes of action, amend its pleading to add a cause of action for declaratory relief as to those issues, then obtain a summary adjudication of the declaratory relief cause of action. The result would fully subvert Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(f)(1), which restricts the summary adjudication remedy to motions that would adjudicate an entire cause of action or affirmative defense, or the issues of duty or punitive damages. When the adjudication of a declaratory relief action does not adjudicate the entirety of any cause of action, it is prohibited by the statute. Failure to deny the motion is an abuse of discretion (33 Cal. App. 4th 319, 321-324) .

In Hindin v. Rust (2004) 118 Cal. App. 4th 1247, 13 Cal. Rptr. 3d 668 plaintiffs had made an uninsured motorist claim against defendant State Farm Insurance Co. Plaintiffs were awarded $34,000 and State Farm subsequently filed a superior court petition to vacate the award. The petition was later dismissed, but plaintiffs filed a bad faith/discrimination suit against State Farm. This suit was settled for $30 million. As a part of that settlement, the Los Angeles Superior Court ordered that plaintiffs were not precluded by the settlement agreement from copying, publishing, or disseminating any document or information procured from State Farm during the litigation. After the settlement, State Farm obtained information that plaintiffs' uninsured motorist claim had been fraudulent. The fraud investigation was eventually turned over to the FBI and Los Angeles District Attorney. At one point, State Farm made a motion to suppress various documents, claiming that plaintiffs' attorneys had illegally provided copies to Arizona plaintiff's counsel in violation of the settlement agreement. After a copy of the Los Angeles Superior Court order was presented, State Farm withdrew its motion and the court issued sanctions against State Farm for submitting such a motion without merit. Following this turn of events, State Farm filed a federal court restitution action to recover the $30 million and to seek return of the internal State Farm documents. Plaintiffs filed motions to dismiss State Farm's action on various grounds, one of which was that the Los Angeles Superior Court order was controlling with respect to the documents. State Farm's counsel then amended its complaint to strike the document claims. The federal court granted plaintiffs' motion to dismiss, and this order was affirmed by the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeal. Thereafter, plaintiffs and plaintiffs' attorneys filed the instant malicious prosecution lawsuits against State Farm. The litigation went through numerous motions and appeals therefrom, but this particular opinion arose from State Farm's summary adjudication motion.

The issue on appeal was whether State Farm could property seek summary adjudication of plaintiffs' malicious prosecution action as to whether State Farm had probable cause to bring one of its two federal court claims. The trial court had granted summary adjudication as to one of the two underlying claims, and the court of appeal held that this was impermissible. Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(f)(1) provides that a "motion for summary adjudication shall be granted only if it completely disposes of a cause of action. ..." This statute was the result of a 1990 amendment to the summary judgment statute designed to " 'stop the practice of adjudication of facts or adjudication of issues that do not completely dispose of a cause of action or a defense.' " (118 Cal. App. 4th 1247, 1255 , quoting DeCastro West Chodorow & Burns, Inc. v. Superior Court (1996) 47 Cal. App. 4th 410, 418-19, 54 Cal. Rptr. 2d 792). The court of appeals stated that whether a complaint asserts one or more causes of action depends on whether it alleges invasion of one or more primary rights. A primary right is the plaintiff's right to be free from the particular injury suffered, and therefore is distinguishable from the legal theory on which liability is premised. The court held that plaintiffs' malicious prosecution action sought to vindicate a single primary right--the right to be free from defending against a lawsuit initiated with malice. Therefore, a summary adjudication motion seeking to "establish that some but not all of the multiple grounds for liability asserted in the prior action were brought with probable cause is improper for failure to completely dispose of an entire cause of action." (118 Cal. App. 4th 1247, 1259) .

[b] Summary Adjudication Not Proper When Disposition of Issue of Contractual Duty Is Not Complete

In Regan Roofing Co. v. Superior Court (1994) 24 Cal. App. 4th 425, 29 Cal. Rptr. 2d 413 , plaintiffs were several subcontractors against whom a cross complaint for express indemnity, breach of contract, implied indemnity, equitable indemnity, contribution, and declaratory relief wasbrought by a developer sued for various construction defects in its development of a condominium project. Each of the subcontracts between the developer and subcontractors contained an indemnity clause favoring the developer. The developer then brought a motion for summary adjudication under Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(f) with regard to the type of indemnity provision included in the subcontracts and whether the subcontractors owed the developer a duty to defend pursuant to the subcontracts. The trial court summarily adjudicated in favor of the developer on the issue that the indemnity provision contained in the subcontract agreement was a type which would cover the developer's own negligence in the construction of the condominium project. The trial court also ruled that the subcontractors had a current duty to defend the developer regardless of any determination of their duty to indemnify it under the subcontracts.

The court of appeal issued a writ of mandate directing the lower court to vacate its order granting in part the summary adjudication motion and to enter a new order denying the motion in full (24 Cal. App. 4th 425, 438) . On appeal, the subcontractors argued that the lower court's ruling was not a proper subject of summary adjudication under Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(f) because it did not completely dispose of any cause of action or defense of the cross complaint, nor was it a proper adjudication of an issue of duty owed by the subcontractors to the developer, as allowed by statute (24 Cal. App. 4th 425, 429) . In its ruling, the court stated that the dispositive issue presented in the case concerned the proper interpretation of Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(f) as to the "type of issue" which may be summarily adjudicated (24 Cal. App. 4th 425, 432) . The appellate court noted that the trial court expressly stated it was not adjudicating the specific contractual duties, rights, and/or liability as pertaining to each individual subcontractor, as it was not clear that each of them had signed a subcontract. Therefore, the ruling on summary adjudication was essentially an interpretation of contract provisions and had certain advisory qualities, as it did not dispose of an entire cause of action or affirmative defense, nor did it terminate any portion of the action with its determination of an issue of duty (24 Cal. App. 4th 425, 435-436) . Thus, although the ruling attempted to resolve certain elements of the cause of action for breach of contract provisions, i.e., those concerning the nature of the contract and possibly the subcontractors' performance or excuse of nonperformance, it left unresolved the issues of the subcontractors' breach and the general damages (24 Cal. App. 4th 425, 436) .

The court further stated that summary adjudication of the duty to defend and its relationship to the duty to indemnify was premature, as no determination had yet been made as to whether the subcontractors were negligent in the performance of their work, thereby giving rise to a duty to indemnify and a related duty to defend (24 Cal. App. 4th 425, 436) . The developer had not clearly established that under the indemnity clause the duty to defend against claims of liability is entirely free-standing of the duty to indemnify for liability arising out of the subcontractors' negligence (24 Cal. App. 4th 425, 436) . It was also unclear as to whether the subcontractors were expected to defend the developer against claims for which it may be strictly liable, but for which the subcontractors are not strictly liable (24 Cal. App. 4th 425, 436-437) .

Furthermore, as a practical matter the trial court's ruling did not finally resolve the duty to defend issue. Since there were approximately 24 subcontractors doing different work at different phases of the construction, their duty to defend would be limited to the issues concerning the type of work they did. Although this would not present particular problems with regard to the ultimate division of the costs of defense, it does pose practical problems for an immediate or current duty to defend up to and including trial (24 Cal. App. 4th 425, 437) . The trial court's ruling is thus preliminary or advisory in character and does not fully dispose of any portion of the action; furthermore, it is inconsistent with the legislative intent of Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(f) to stop the practice of adjudication of facts or adjudication of issues that do not completely dispose of a cause of action or a defense [see City of Emeryville v. Superior Court (1991) 2 Cal. App. 4th 21, 25, 2 Cal. Rptr. 2d 826] (24 Cal. App. 4th 425, 433, 437) .

The court of appeal also concluded that the trial court's labeling of the subject indemnity provision as a particular type was also essentially advisory in nature. Although a trial court may interpret a contractual provision as a matter of law, where such interpretation of contractual duties does not fully dispose of any portion of the action, it is not a proper subject for summary adjudication (24 Cal. App. 4th 425, 437) .

Note that in Linden Partners v. Wilshire Linden Associates (1998) 62 Cal. App. 4th 508, 519-522, 73 Cal. Rptr. 2d 708 , the court rejected Regan Roofing Co. v. Superior Court (1994) 24 Cal. App. 4th 425, 29 Cal. Rptr. 2d 413 as controlling precedent, with regard to summary adjudication of an issue of duty. The Linden court held the on a motion for summary adjudication, the court may rule whether a defendant owes or does not owe a duty to plaintiff without regard for the dispositive effect of such ruling on other issues in the litigation, except that the ruling must completely dispose of the issue of duty (62 Cal. App. 4th 508, 522) . Linden Partners v. Wilshire Linden Associates (1998) 62 Cal. App. 4th 508, 73 Cal. Rptr. 2d 708 is discussed in § 221.21[3][b].

[c] Summary Adjudication of Component of Damages Not Proper Unless It Completely Disposes of Cause of Action

In DeCastro West Chodorow & Burns, Inc. v. Superior Court (1996) 47 Cal. App. 4th 410, 54 Cal. Rptr. 2d 792 , plaintiffs brought an actionfor legal malpractice based on an advised tax plan involving the transfer of assets of a hotel. The complaint sought damages for money paid to a business associate as a result of the alleged negligence, as well as damages for lost opportunity to sell or refinance the hotel during a time when there was a cloud on the title. Defendants moved for summary adjudication on the ground that the claim for damages for an alleged lost opportunity could not be established. After the trial court denied the motion, defendants moved for reconsideration, contending the 1993 amendments to Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(f)(1) permitted the court to adjudicate a claim for damages. The court denied the motion for reconsideration, and defendants filed a petition for writ of mandate.

The court of appeal reviewed the history of Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(f)(1) and concluded that the reference in the statute allowing court to dispose of "one or more claims for damages" is limited to punitive damages (47 Cal. App. 4th 410, 421) . Defendants claimed that their interpretation was supported by case law with Lilienthal & Fowler v. Superior Court (1993) 12 Cal. App. 4th 1848, 16 Cal. Rptr. 2d 458 . However, the court stated that Lilienthal was not applicable because that case involved two separate and distinct claims rather than a single item of compensatory damage which did not dispose of the entire cause of action (47 Cal. App. 4th 410, 421-422) . The court was sympathetic to defendants' concerns that without a summary adjudication they would have to prepare for trial on an unmeritorious issue, but reasoned that these concerns were best addressed to the Legislature (47 Cal. App. 4th 410, 423) . Concluding that Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(f)(1) does not permit summary adjudication of a single item of compensatory damage which does not dispose of an entire cause of action, the court denied the petition for writ of mandate.

[d] Piecemeal Adjudication of Claim for Punitive Damages Prohibited

In Catalano v. Superior Court (2000) 82 Cal. App. 4th 91, 97 Cal. Rptr. 2d 842 , plaintiffs originally filed suit against defendants for attorney fees under a contingent fee contract. Defendants (cross complainants) filed a cross complaint against plaintiffs (cross defendants) and others alleging, among other things, a cause of action for fraudulent breach of fiduciary duty and a cause of action for intentional misrepresentation and seeking punitive damages. Cross defendants filed a motion for summary adjudication concerning the claim for punitive damages. The motion was presented as five separate issues which contained factual allegations. The trial court followed the format propounded in cross defendants' motion ruling separately on each factual allegation. The court granted summary adjudication on four issues but denied it on the fifth issue. The court also granted cross defendants' motion for summary adjudication on all causes of action against one of the cross complainants. Cross complainants, except the one against whom summary adjudication on all causes of action had been granted, filed a petition for writ of mandate challenging the trial court's partial granting of cross defendants' summary adjudication motion.

The court of appeal granted the petition issuing a peremptory writ of mandate directing the trial court to vacate its order granting partial summary adjudication and enter an order denying summary judgment with regard to punitive damages (82 Cal. App. 4th 91, 98) . In issuing a peremptory writ, the court noted that Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(f) disallows piecemeal adjudication of a claim for punitive damages. Although a claim for punitive damages is specifically set forth as an area which may properly be the subject of summary adjudication, in keeping with the purposes of Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(f), a grant of summary adjudication in this area must cover the entire claim. The purpose of the enactment of Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(f) was to stop the practice of piecemeal adjudication of facts that did not completely dispose of a substantive area (82 Cal. App. 4th 91, 95) . Thus, summary adjudication is not properly granted as a piecemeal disposition of some of the asserted facts within a claim for punitive damages, but may only be granted when the entire claim for punitive damages is eliminated. Accordingly, when a claim for punitive damages is based on an interrelated set of facts and circumstances, if any one or more of the facts would support a claim for punitive damages, then summary judgment is not available to eliminate from trial other facts relating to the claim for punitive damages (82 Cal. App. 4th 91, 97-98) . The court, however, did not decide whether summary adjudication must eliminate all claims for punitive damages in one action if there are separate and distinct claims for punitive damages, having nothing to do with one another, contained within one complaint (82 Cal. App. 4th 91, 98 n.5).

IF _____ [AFFIDAVITS or DECLARATIONS] ARE PRESENTED IN BAD FAITH OR SOLELY FOR PURPOSES OF DELAY, THE COURT MUST ORDER THE PARTY PRESENTING SUCHPAPERS TO PAY THE REASONABLE EXPENSES INCURRED BY THE OTHER PARTY.

A. Sanctions for Filing Papers in Bad Faith. If the court determines, at any time, that any of the affidavits or declarations are presented in bad faith or solely for purposes of delay, the court must order the party presenting such papers to pay the other party the amount of the reasonable expenses that the filing of the papers caused the other party to incur (*Code Civ. [2] Comments

These points and authorities may be combined with a general form of memorandum of points and authorities in opposition to a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication [see §§ 221.29, 221.30] when the opposing party claims that the moving party has presented any affidavits or declarations in bad faith or solely for purposes of delay. If the court determines the claim to be valid, it must order the moving party to pay the opposing party the amount of the reasonable expenses which the filing of the papers caused the opposing party to incur [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(j)].

Sanctions are not to be imposed pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(j) except on notice contained in a party's papers, or on the court's own noticed motion, and after an opportunity to be heard [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(j)].

[b] Related Uses

This form may be adapted for use as a supplemental memorandum of points and authorities by a party moving for summary judgment or summary adjudication who claims that the opposing party has presented affidavits or declarations in bad faith or solely for purposes of delay.

Because Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(j) permits the court to determine "at any time" that an affidavit or declaration was presented in bad faith or solely for purposes of delay, these points and authorities may also be adapted for use by the moving or opposing party to support a motion for expenses after trial, during which the bad faith of the party filing affidavits or declarations relating to a motion for summary judgment became apparent.

[c] Payment of Expenses for Frivolous Actions

In appropriate cases, it appears that the applicable statute governing sanctions generally [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 128.5-128.7], may also be cited as authority for the imposition of sanctions. For detailed discussion of these statutes and their applicability, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 510, Sanctions . For form of memoranda of points and authorities based on these statutes, see Ch. 207, Sanctions , in this publication.

[d] Related Federal Rule

Because Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(j) provides for sanctions for bad faith filing similar to those which have been provided for under Fed. R. Civ. P., Rule 56(g), federal cases decided under the federal rule should apply in determining whether the papers were filed in bad faith or solely for purposes of delay (note that Fed. R. Civ. P., Rule 56(g), also provides for attorney's fees and contempt proceedings) [see Scripps Memorial Hosp., Inc. v. California Employment Comm'n (1944) 24 Cal. 2d 669, 677, 151 P.2d 109 ; *State of Cal. ex rel. Dep't of Employment v. General Ins. Co. (1970) 13 Cal. App. 3d 853, 859 n.3, 96 Cal. A motion for summary judgment may be made at any time after 60 days have elapsed since the general appearance in the action or proceeding of each party against whom the motion is directed or at such earlier time after such general appearance as the court, with or without notice and on good cause shown, may direct (*Code Civ. [a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be combined with a general form of memorandum of points and authorities in opposition to a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication [see §§ 221.29, 221.30] when the opposing party contends that the motion was untimely filed or the notice of motion was untimely served. [3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Untimely Notice

In Urshan v. Musicians' Credit Union (2004) 120 Cal. App. 4th 758, 15 Cal. Rptr. 3d 839 , the trial court offered to shorten the time limits to accommodate a motion for summary judgment before the scheduled trial date. Without consulting one of the parties (the "borrower"), the court set a briefing schedule that allowed the other party (the "lender") three days to file a motion and the borrower two days to file an opposition.

On appeal, the court held that a trial court has discretion to shorten the initial 60-day period to bring a motion for summary judgment on a showing of good cause. Similarly, a trial court has discretion to shorten the 30-day period in which a motion for summary judgment must be heard before trial where circumstances warrant. However, the legislature did not similarly authorize a trial court to shorten the minimum notice period for hearings on summary judgment motions. Such discretionary language is notably absent from the statute. Moreover, the statutory language regarding minimum notice is mandatory, not directive (120 Cal. App. 4th 758, 764) .

In reversing the subsequent summary judgment for the lender, the appellate court held that the trial court did not have authority to shorten the former minimum 28-day notice period for hearing a motion for summary judgment (now 75-day notice) in the absence of the parties' express consent. Not only was the shortened time period violative of the statute, notice and opportunity to prepare to be heard was so minimal that the procedure was tantamount to a denial of due process. The court also declined to infer from the borrower's silence a waiver of the right to the statutorily mandated minimum notice period (120 Cal. App. 4th 758, 766) .

In McMahon v. Superior Court (2003) 106 Cal. App. 4th 112, 130 Cal. Rptr. 2d 407 , the trial court had issued an order shortening time for any notice of motion of a summary judgment to be filed. The plaintiffs sought a petition for writ of mandate, arguing that the court had no such authority. The court of appeal granting the peremptory writ of mandate directing the trial court to vacate its order, holding that Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(a) gives no authority to the trial court to shorten the 75-day notice period of the statute. The court of appeal noted that the statute gives trial courts authority to shorten the 60-day and 30-day periods of the statute, regarding the filing of the motion, but not the 75-day period (106 Cal. App. 4th 112, 115-118) .

In Robinson v. Woods (2008) 168 Cal. App. 4th 1258, 86 Cal. Rptr. 3d 241 was a quiet title action. Defendant filed and mailed a motion for summary judgment but provided only 76 days notice, rather than the statutorily required 80, and set the hearing only 18 days before trial without seeking court approval. Plaintiffs' opposition pointed out these procedural errors and did not argue the merits of the motion or file a separate statement of undisputed and disputed facts. The trial court, noting procedural mistakes on both sides, continued the hearing to the 80th day after mailing, directed defendants to file a declaration stating why the motion should be heard within 30 days of trial and invited plaintiffs to file a separate statement. At the hearing, the court ruled defendants had set forth valid reasons for the motion to be heard within 30 days of trial. Plaintiffs did not file an additional opposition. Because plaintiffs had failed to file a substantive opposition, the court granted defendants' motion for summary judgment. Plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeals reversed, and began by stating that "the importance of providing the minimum statutory notice of a summary judgment hearing cannot be overemphasized" (168 Cal. App. 4th 1258, 1262) . In McMahon v. Superior Court (2003) 106 Cal. App. 4th 112, 130 Cal. Rptr. 2d 407 , the court held that trial courts do not have the authority to shorten the minimum notice period for summary judgment motions. The court erred in continuing the hearing for four days, and that error constituted an abuse of discretion. The court also erred in ruling at the hearing that it would hear the motion within 30 days of trial. In doing so, it provided plaintiffs with no time to prepare an opposition on the merits (168 Cal. App. 4th 1258, 1268) .

§ 221.34 Opposing Motion for Summary Judgment or Summary Adjudication--Objection to Evidence Contained in Moving Party's Papers [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(c)]

[This form should be combined with a general form of memorandum of points and authorities opposing a motion for summary judgment (see § 221.29) or summary adjudication (see § 221.30), as well as with forms relating to specific procedural or evidentiary objections (see §§ 221.37 -221.42).]

EVIDENCE CONTAINED IN THE PAPERS SUPPORTING A MOTION FOR SUMMARY _____ [JUDGMENT or ADJUDICATION] TO WHICH OBJECTIONS HAVE BEEN MADE AND SUSTAINED MAY NOT BE CONSIDERED BY THE COURT IN DETERMINING WHETHER THERE IS NO TRIABLE ISSUE OF MATERIAL FACT.

A. Exclusion of Evidence to Which Objections Have Been Sustained. Evidence contained in any of the papers submitted in support of a motion for summary judgment [or summary adjudication] to which evidentiary objections have been made and sustained by the court must not be considered by the court in determining whether the papers show that there is no triable issue as to any material fact (Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(c)).

B. Objections to Evidence. _____ [Specify objecting party, e.g., Plaintiff] _____ [name] objects to _____'s [specify moving party, e.g., Defendant] evidence as set forth in Written Objections to Evidence, filed concurrently with this Opposition.

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be combined with a general memorandum of points and authorities in opposition to a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication [see §§ 221.29, 221.30] when the opposing party seeks point out the fact that evidence to which objections have been made and sustained must not be considered by the court in determining whether the papers show there is no triable issue of material fact. For objections to matters contained in the moving party's affidavits or declarations on the ground of lack of personal knowledge, inadmissibility of evidence, or incompetency to testify [see §§ 221.37 -221.39].

Any oral objection at the hearing would most likely be any objections to the opposing papers. The best practice is for the opposing party to raise objections to the supporting papers in writing, such as by the foregoing form, supported by points and authorities. Effective January 1, 2007, the California Rules of Court contain specific format requirements for written objections to evidence in support of or in opposition to a motion for summary judgment. All written objections to evidence must be served and filed separately from the other papers in support of or in opposition to the motion. Each written objection must be numbered consecutively and must:

(1) Identify the name of the document in which the specific material objected to is located;

(2) State the exhibit, title, page, and line number of the material objected to;

(3) Quote or set forth the objectionable statement or material; and

(4) State the grounds for each objection to that statement or material.

The objections must also follow one of two formats specified in Rule 3.1354 [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1354(b)]. Written objections must be served and filed at the same time as the objecting party's opposition or reply papers are served and filed [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1354(a)]. A party submitting written objections to evidence must also submit with the objections a proposed order, which also must follow one of two formats shown in Rule 3.1354(c).

CAUTION:
Objections on specific evidence may be referenced by the objection number in the right column of a separate statement in opposition or reply to a motion, but the objections must not be restated or reargued in the separate statement [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1354(b)].

For forms of objections to evidence and proposed order, see Ch. 537, Summary Judgment , §§ 537.86, 537.87 in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender).

A party desiring to make objections to evidence in the papers on a motion for summary judgment must either submit objections in writing pursuant to Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1354, or make arrangements for a court reporter to be present at the hearing [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1352].

[b] Waiver of Evidentiary Objections

Evidentiary objections not raised at the hearing on the motion are deemed waived [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b)(5), (d); see also discussion in § 221.22[2][b]].

§ 221.35 Opposing Motion for Summary Judgment or Summary Adjudication--Inference Reasonably Deducible From Evidence Raises Triable Issue [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(c)]

[1] FORM

[This form should be combined with a general form of memorandum of points and authorities opposing a motion for summary judgment (see § 221.29) or summary adjudication (see § 221.30).]

SUMMARY _____ [JUDGMENT or ADJUDICATION] IS IMPROPER WHEN AN INFERENCE REASONABLY DEDUCIBLE FROM THE EVIDENCE SET FORTH IN THE SUPPORTING OR OPPOSING PAPERS RAISES A TRIABLE ISSUE AS TO A MATERIAL FACT.

A. Inference of Triable Issue Reasonably Deducible From Evidence. Summary judgment [or summary adjudication] is improper when an inference reasonably deducible from the evidence contained in the supporting or opposingpapers, except evidence to which objections have been made and sustained by the court, raises a triable issue as to a material fact (Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(c); Maxwell v. Colburn (1980) 105 Cal. App. 3d 180, 184-185, 163 Cal. Rptr. 912).

[Optional] B. Court Must Consider Inferences Favoring Opposing Party. The court must consider the bare evidence and the reasonable inferences deducible from the evidence, and determine whether the evidence is sufficient to support a potential judgment in favor of the opposing party. The moving party's evidence must be strictly construed, while the opposing party's evidence must be liberally construed. The court must therefore consider what inferences favoring the opposing party a factfinder could reasonably draw from the evidence. If the evidence is in conflict, the factual issues must be resolved by trial. [A trial court may not grant summary judgment for a defendant simply on its opinion that plaintiff's claims are "implausible," if a reasonable factfinder could find for plaintiff on the evidence presented] (Binder v. Aetna Life Ins. Co. (1999) 75 Cal. App. 4th 832, 838-840, 89 Cal. Rptr. 2d 540).

[Optional] C. Failure to Raise Argument in Statement of Undisputed Material Facts Is Not Sufficient Reason to Grant Summary Judgment. The court's discretion under Code of Civil Procedure Section 437c(b) to grant a summary judgment based on the failure of the opposing party to file an adequate separate statement does not preempt the court's duty under Code Civil Procedure Section 437c(c) to consider all the submitted papers when determining whether the moving party is entitled to a judgment. Thus, a trial court must consider all of the papers submitted to determine whether triable issues of fact exist before exercising its discretion under Code of Civil Procedure Section 437c(b) to grant a summary judgment based on the opposing party's failure to file an adequate separate statement (Kulesa v. Castleberry (1996) 47 Cal. App. 4th 103, 111-112, 54 Cal. Rptr. 2d 669).

[Optional] D. Expert Witness Declaration Provides Triable Issue of Causation When Opinion Properly Supported. An expert witness declaration is sufficient to raise a triable issue of fact regarding causation if the declaration establishes the matters relied upon in expressing the opinion, that the opinion rests on matters of a type reasonably relied upon, and the bases for the opinion are set forth (Sanchez v. Hillerich & Bradsby Co. (2002) 104 Cal. App. 4th 703, 718, 128 Cal. Rptr. 2d 529).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities should be combined with a general form of memorandum of points and authorities in opposition to a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication [see §§ 221.29, 221.30] when the opposing party claims that an inference reasonably deducible from the evidence contained in the supporting or opposing papers raises a triable issue as to a material fact [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(c)]. For an opposing memorandum for use when a supporting inference reasonably deducible from the evidence is contradicted by other inferences or evidence, see § 221.36.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Inference of Triable Issue Reasonably Deducible From Evidence

Maxwell v. Colburn (1980) 105 Cal. App. 3d 180, 163 Cal. Rptr. 912 , was an action for damages for personal injuries sustained when plaintiffs were struck by defendant's automobile while plaintiffs were crossing a street. Defendant moved for summary judgment on the ground that there was no triable issue of fact because there was no evidence of negligence on his part. He supported the motion by his declaration that he applied the car's brakes as soon as he saw plaintiffs step into his lane of traffic. Plaintiffs did not file opposing papers, and defendant's motion was granted. Plaintiffs appealed from the judgment.

The court of appeal reversed judgment for defendant. The court referred to the provision of Code Civ. Proc. § 437c which requires the court to consider all of the evidence set forth in the papers and "all inferences reasonably deducible from such evidence" (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(c); "such" in the quoted phrase now reads "the"). The court stated that the fact that plaintiffs' attorney did not urge the trial court to draw certain inferences of negligence did not relieve the trial or appellate courts from a duty to take those inferences into account. The court then held that the trial court erred in granting the summary judgment because reasonable inferences of defendant's negligence could be drawn from defendant's declaration. Referring to the "radius of lights" doctrine, the court stated that a rational inference of negligence arose under the particular circumstances of the case from the fact that defendant was unable to stop his vehicle in time to avoid hitting plaintiffs. Thus, factual questions remained for the jury as to whether defendant was negligent in failing to drive at a speed that would have enabled him to stop in time to avoid the collision or whether he was excused because plaintiffs suddenly stepped in front of him, and whether defendant should have applied his brakes immediately on seeing plaintiffs in the center of the road rather than waiting until they walked in front of his car (105 Cal. App. 3d 180, 184-186) . The court approved the observation that courts are very reluctant to uphold asummary judgment in comparative negligence cases, and that negligence is a question of fact if different conclusions can be rationally drawn from the evidence (105 Cal. App. 3d 180, 186) .

[b] Court Must Consider Inferences Favoring Opposing Party

Binder v. Aetna Life Ins. Co. (1999) 75 Cal. App. 4th 832, 89 Cal. Rptr. 2d 540 , involved a suit against an employer for breach of the implied-in-fact contract not to terminate except for "good cause," and for age discrimination. The trial court granted summary judgment for the defendant. The court of appeal reversed. In so doing, the court of appeal noted that a court must consider the bare evidence and the reasonable inferences deducible from the evidence, and determine whether the evidence is sufficient to support a potential judgment in favor of opposing party. The moving party's evidence must be strictly construed, while the opposing party's evidence must be liberally construed. The court must therefore consider what inferences favoring the opposing party a factfinder could reasonably draw from the evidence. While viewing the evidence in this manner, the court must bear in mind that its primary function is to identify issues rather than to determine issues. Only when inferences are indisputable may the court decide the issues as a matter of law. If the evidence is in conflict, the factual issues must be resolved by trial (75 Cal. App. 4th 832, 838-840) . The court further stated that the trial court may not weigh the evidence in the manner of a factfinder to determine whose version is more likely true. Nor may trial the court grant summary judgment based on the court's evaluation of credibility. Nor may the trial court grant summary judgment for a defendant simply on its opinion that plaintiff's claims are "implausible," if a reasonable factfinder could find for plaintiff on the evidence presented (75 Cal. App. 4th 832, 840) .

[c] Failure to Raise Argument in Statement of Undisputed Material Facts Is Not Sufficient Reason to Grant Summary Judgment

In Kulesa v. Castleberry (1996) 47 Cal. App. 4th 103, 54 Cal. Rptr. 2d 669 , plaintiffs brought an action for legal malpractice against their former attorneys for failure to pursue a personal injury claim. The trial court granted defendant's motion for summary judgment on the ground that the action was barred by the statute of limitations. The court of appeal reversed the judgment on this ground, finding that the running of the statute had been tolled. In argument on appeal, in addition to the statute of limitations issue, defendants contended that even if their position on the statute of limitations were not upheld, they were entitled to summary judgment because plaintiffs had failed to raise the tolling argument in their separate statement of undisputed material facts.

The court of appeal found against defendants on this issue also. The court recognized that Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b) [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b)(3)] gives a trial court discretion to grant a summary judgment motion when the opposing party fails to comply with the statutory requirements of a separate statement. However, the court held that the court's discretion under Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b) does not preempt its duty under Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(c) to consider all the submitted papers when determining whether the moving party is entitled to a judgment (47 Cal. App. 4th 103, 111) . The court thus concluded that a trial court may not grant a summary judgment motion based on an inadequate separate statement until it reviews all of the papers filed in conjunction with the motion (47 Cal. App. 4th 103, 112) . Although plaintiffs' separate statement was inadequate in that it failed to raise the issue of the tolling of the statute of limitations, information relating to the tolling issue appeared in plaintiffs' points and authorities and their evidentiary exhibits. The court thus reversed the judgment and remanded for further proceedings.

Finally, the court noted that in this case the legal argument was simple and easy to find and cautioned that a court may have discretion to grant the motion when the case is complex and the opposing party buries its triable issues of fact in voluminous exhibits or convoluted rhetoric. Thus, thc court warned that to say that the court has a duty to look at all the papers submitted is not to say that the court has a duty to grope its way through a maze of arguments and reams of documents searching for obscure traces of triable issues of material fact (47 Cal. App. 4th 103, 117) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Inference of Triable Issue Reasonably Deducible From Evidence

Bryant v. Bakshandeh (1991) 226 Cal. App. 3d 1241, 277 Cal. Rptr. 379 , was an action for wrongful death resulting from the death of the plaintiffs' infant son from an infection resulting from procedures carried out in preparing him for elective surgery. The procedure required the insertion of a catheter in the boy's urethra. The doctors' attempts to insert it failed. A urologist, who was in the hospital attending to his own patient, answered a "stat" call for assistance. He also attempted several times but failed to insert the catheter, and then said he could not complete the catheterization without cystoscoping the child. One of the doctors ascertained that the urologist had experience with this procedure and told him to proceed. The urologist left the room for several minutes, returned, performed the cystoscopy, and made several more unsuccessful attempts to insert the catheter. The operation was then postponed. Three days later the boy died from an infection resulting from perforation of his rectal pouch during the preoperative procedures. In his motion for summary judgment, the urologistclaimed that he had performed the procedures on an emergency basis and that he was exempt from liability under the Good Samaritan statutes (Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 2395, 2396). His motion was granted. The court of appeal reversed. The court said that summary judgment is properly granted only when the evidence in support of the moving party establishes that there is no issue of fact to be tried, that mere conclusions of law or fact are insufficient to satisfy the evidentiary requirements for summary judgment, and that summary judgment may not be based on inferences which are contradicted by other inferences (226 Cal. App. 3d 1241, 1245) . The court held that the urologist did not, as a matter of law, come within the protection of the Good Samaritan statutes and that a material issue of fact existed as to whether the urologist had a reasonable good-faith belief that he was responding to an emergency situation when he performed the requested procedure or whether, under the circumstances, a physician acting in good faith would have reasonably concluded that his immediate assistance was not required because no emergency existed (226 Cal. App. 3d 1241, 1245-1247) .

Fidelity National Title Ins. Co. v. Miller (1989) 215 Cal. App. 3d 1163, 264 Cal. Rptr. 17 , was an action by a title insurance company against a seller of real property to recover what it had paid to the purchaser of the property after the discovery of a recorded restrictive covenant by which the seller had granted a view easement over the property. The seller had conveyed the property by unrestricted grant deed, thereby triggering application of the statutorily implied covenant against encumbrances (see Civ. Code § 1113). Prior to sale, the seller had informed the buyer of the possible existence of the easement, and the buyer had asked the title company to check it out. The title company failed to find any recorded easement and issued a preliminary report not mentioning the encumbrance and a subsequent title policy that also failed to mention the encumbrance. After escrow closed, the buyer discovered the covenant had been recorded and sued the title insurer, which paid him $125,000 under the policy for diminution in the value of the property resulting from the encumbrance. The buyer executed a release and assignment of rights to the insurer, which then sued the seller. The seller's motion for summary judgment was granted, and defendant appealed. The court of appeal reversed. After quoting the provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(c) set out in the foregoing form, the court said that in ruling on a summary judgment motion, the trial court under Code Civ. Proc. § 437c is not limited to a search for facts on a particular issue, but may draw inferences regarding that issue from the relevant facts set forth in the affidavits; hence, the trial court is to consider all inferences reasonably deducible from the evidence, and the lack of a triable issue of fact may be established by inference when a particular inference is the only reasonable one that can be drawn from the evidence for and against the motion (215 Cal. App. 3d 1163, 1172) . The court added, however, that summary judgments are reversible on the finding of factual issues based on inferences first drawn by the appellate court (215 Cal. App. 3d 1163, 1172) , and then proceeded to identify the several factual issues that required trial (215 Cal. App. 3d 1163, 1171-1176) .

In Caudel v. East Bay Mun. Utility Dist. (1985) 165 Cal. App. 3d 1, 211 Cal. Rptr. 222 , plaintiff brought an action in negligence for injuries sustained on the job site against a utility district that had employed, as an independent contractor, the company for which defendant worked. The trial court granted summary judgment in favor of defendant on the ground that an employer is not liable in negligence for torts of the independent contractor. In reversing the judgment, the court of appeal noted that, although nonliability of an employer in those circumstances is the general rule, recognized exceptions exist, including the "peculiar risk of harm" exception (165 Cal. App. 3d 1, 6-8) . The court held that plaintiff's papers raised the inference that the peculiar risk doctrine applied, and that triable issues of fact were raised thereby; the fact that respondent's evidence raised inferences negating the application of the exception did not resolve the factual issues precluding summary judgment (165 Cal. App. 3d 1, 9-10) .

In People v. Rath Packing Co. (1974) 44 Cal. App. 3d 56, 118 Cal. Rptr. 438 , an action by the government to enjoin a meat processor from selling allegedly short-weight packages of bacon at the retail level, the court of appeal reversed summary judgment granting the People the injunction. The court stated that the trial court must look to all facts presented in the parties' affidavits in determining whether or not an issue is triable; the court is not limited to a search for "facts" regarding a particular issue but may draw inferences regarding that issue from related facts set forth in the affidavits. Although former Code Civ. Proc. § 437c was still in effect, the court applied this test from Code Civ. Proc. § 437c as amended in 1973, as the former statute did not prescribe a procedure for the evaluation of affidavits. The court held that defendant's declaration contained facts from which a reasonable inference could be drawn that plaintiff had erred in weighing defendant's bacon products, sufficiently countering the People's statement of fact regarding the accuracy of the weighings (44 Cal. App. 3d 56, 64) .

[b] Failure to Raise Argument in Statement of Undisputed Material Facts Is Not Sufficient Reason to Grant Summary Judgment

The facts and procedural background of Thatcher v. Lucky Stores, Inc. (2000) 79 Cal. App. 4th 1081, 94 Cal. Rptr. 2d 575 are discussed under § 221.23[3][a]. Although the court concluded that the defendant met its initial burden of proof and due to plaintiff's failure to file opposition affirmed summary judgment in defendant's favor (79 Cal. App. 4th 1081, 1083, 1087) , the court also concluded that unless the moving party hasmet its initial burden of proof, the court does not have discretion under Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b) [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b)(3)] to grant summary judgment based on the opposing party's failure to file a proper separate statement (79 Cal. App. 4th 1081, 1086) .

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities should be combined with a general form of memorandum of points and authorities in opposition to a motion for summary judgment [see § 221.29] or summary adjudication [see § 221.30] when the opposing party claims that an inference which supports the motion is contradicted by other inferences or evidence which raise a triable issue as to any material fact [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(c)].

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Supporting Inference Contradicted by Other Inference Which Raises Triable Issue

Jos. Schlitz Brewing Co. v. Downey Distributor (1980) 109 Cal. App. 3d 908, 167 Cal. Rptr. 510 , involved an action by a beer manufacturer against a wholesale distributor of its beer for the balance owing on defendant's open account. Defendant cross complained for breach of contract, interference with a business advantage, fraud, and conspiracy, based on an alleged oral agreement with plaintiff providing that defendant had the assignable right to be the wholesale distributor in a given area and on plaintiff's covenant to deal in good faith, both of which plaintiff violated by terminating defendant's rights when defendant had received an offer to purchase the distributorship. The trial court granted plaintiff's motion for summary judgment, and defendant appealed from the judgment.

The court of appeal reversed judgment for plaintiff. The court's discussion of defendant's action for interference with a business advantage and of general summary judgment rules are found in § 221.29[3][a]. As to defendant's action for breach of contract, the court stated that defendant's declaration, at least by inference, contradicted plaintiff's declaration which had negated the existence of any oral agreements. The court referred to the provision of Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(c) that states that "summary judgment shall not be granted by the court based on inferences reasonably deducible from such evidence, if contradicted by other inferences or evidence, which raise a triable issue as to any material fact." Pursuant to this language, the court held that by virtue of defendant's opposing declaration, triable issues remained as to the existence of an oral agreement and whether or not the agreement had been breached. As to defendant's claim of fraud and conspiracy, the court stated that a possible inference of fraud and conspiracy could be gleaned from defendant's declaration in contradiction to plaintiff's declarations, based on plaintiff's actions after learning that defendant had received an offer to purchase the distributorship. Looking to the same provision of Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(c) and to the rule that the moving party's declarations are strictly construed and the opponent's liberally construed, the court held that triable issues of material facts remained as to the fraud and conspiracy claims (109 Cal. App. 3d 908, 918-919) .

[b] Expert Witness Declaration Provides Triable Issue of Causation When Opinion Properly Supported

In Sanchez v. Hillerich & Bradsby Co. (2002) 104 Cal. App. 4th 703, 128 Cal. Rptr. 2d 529 , a pitcher was seriously injured when struck by a line drive hit by an aluminum bat. He filed suit against the bat manufacturer and others alleging that the design and use of this particular batsignificantly increased the inherent risk in the sport of baseball that a pitcher would be hit by a line drive. Defendants moved for summary judgment asserting primary assumption of the risk and that the pitcher would be unable to prove causation. The trial court concluded that the pitcher would be unable to prove that his injuries resulted from the alleged increased risk the particular bat posed to pitchers. The plaintiff appealed and the trial court's decision was reversed.

The appellate court stated that while a court may dismiss an expert declaration in connection with a summary judgment motion, if the declaration establishes that the expert's opinion is speculative, lacks foundation, or is stated without sufficient certainty, the expert witness opinion may raise a triable issue of fact regarding causation if the expert declaration establishes the matters relied upon in expressing the opinion, that the opinion rests on matters of a type reasonably relied upon, and the bases for the opinion (104 Cal. App. 4th 703, 718) . The plaintiffs did not challenge the expert's credentials. He was a kinesiologist who, since 1983, has specialized "in the analysis of biomechanics of trauma." His declaration establishes that in forming his opinions he reviewed plaintiff's medical records, relied upon "literature regarding skull fracture and traumatic brain injury biomechanics," undertook a quantitative analysis regarding "velocity necessary to cause Mr. Sanchez's injury pattern" and "utilizing basic principles of dynamics related to the flight of a baseball" reached an opinion about the range of speed of the ball which hit appellant. While he does not spell out the actual calculations he used, the declaration was not deficient for purposes of summary judgment. If respondents had desired to do so, they could have deposed the expert in an attempt to demonstrate his opinions had no basis in fact or science. The expert also relied upon literature from the NCAA regarding reaction times, which provided: "Game conditions using high powered aluminum bats often result in speeds well in excess of 100 mph. At 100 mph, the ball will travel 52 feet in .354 seconds; at 110 mph, a ball will travel 52 feet in .321 seconds. The NCAA Baseball Rules Committee is aware that there is some risk even with wood bats, but believes that the increased risk of injury resulting from the use of high powered aluminum bats is clear. To ignore this risk would, in our opinion, be irresponsible." The appellate court concluded that these factors provided independent corroboration for some of the facts relied upon by the expert and provided further facts relevant to the issue of causation sufficient to raise a triable issue of fact regarding causation (104 Cal. App. 4th 703, 718-719) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Supporting Inference Contradicted by Other Inference Which Raises Triable Issue

In Pieper v. Commercial Underwriters Ins. Co. (1997) 59 Cal. App. 4th 1008, 69 Cal. Rptr. 2d 551 , the court of appeal, in affirming the trial court's granting of summary judgment in favor of the defendant, noted that the court must consider presumptions and draw inferences from the facts adduced where the inference is the only reasonable one that may be drawn. The court has no power in a summary proceeding to weigh one inference against another or against other evidence, however (59 Cal. App. 4th 1008, 1015) .

See Bryant v. Bakshandeh (1991) 226 Cal. App. 3d 1241, 1245, 277 Cal. Rptr. 379 , discussed in § 221.35[4][a].

In Garcia v. Rockwell Internat. Corp (1986) 187 Cal. App. 3d 1556, 232 Cal. Rptr. 490 , an employee sued his employer, alleging that the employer wrongfully suspended him without pay and demoted him in retaliation for reporting to a federal agency the employer's mischarging activities on an Air Force contract. The trial court granted summary judgment in favor of defendant employer, who claimed that the employee was suspended for mischarging time and not for "whistle-blowing." The court reversed, holding in part that a triable issue of fact existed regarding the reason for the employee's suspension and that thus summary judgment was inappropriate. The court applied Code Civ. Proc. § 437c, which prohibits the granting of summary judgment in a case involving conflicting inferences reasonably deducible from the facts. Because the affidavits of the employer and the employee lacked direct evidence for either conflicting theory of the case and contained circumstantial evidence supportive of both, the court held that the determination of the true reason for the employee's suspension and demotion should be resolved by the trier of fact and not on motion for summary judgment (187 Cal. App. 3d 1556, 1562) . See also Bryant v. Bakshandeh (1991) 226 Cal. App. 3d 1241, 1245, 277 Cal. Rptr. 379 , discussed in § 221.35[4][a].

In Hepp v. Lockheed-California Co. (1978) 86 Cal. App. 3d 714, 150 Cal. Rptr. 408 , plaintiff sued his former employer for breach of contract and fraud. Defendant had failed to offer available positions to plaintiff in violation of its policy to offer job openings to qualified persons who had been laid off within two years. Defendant's motion for summary judgment was granted on the grounds that the rehiring policies were only directives to assist supervision, were not contracts, and were not made for the employee's benefit. In reversing judgment for defendant, the court applied the provision of Code Civ. Proc. § 437c that prohibits the grant of summary judgment based on inferences if they are contradicted by other inferences which raise a triable issue of fact. Defendant's papers supported an inference that the policies were management guidelines only and not intended for the benefit of the employees. However, the court held that a contrary factual inference could be drawn that the policies were intended to benefit employees and be a positive inducement for employees to take and continue employment, in light of the risk of periodic layoffs in the aerospace industry. Thus, the court held that a triable issue of fact existedas to the intent of the policy regulations, and that summary judgment should have been denied (86 Cal. App. 3d 714, 718-719) .

§ 221.37 Opposing Motion for Summary Judgment or Summary Adjudication--Supporting Affidavit or Declaration Not Made on Personal Knowledge [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(d)]

[This form should be combined with a general form of memorandum of points and authorities in support of a motion for summary judgment (see § 221.29) or summary adjudication (see § 221.30), and with a form of objection to evidence (see § 221.34).]

SUMMARY _____[JUDGMENT or ADJUDICATION] IS IMPROPER WHEN THE SUPPORTING _____ [AFFIDAVIT(S) or DECLARATION(S)] _____ [IS or ARE] NOT MADE ON PERSONAL KNOWLEDGE.

Personal Knowledge Required. Summary judgment [or summary adjudication] is improper when supporting affidavits or declarations are not made on personal knowledge of the affiant or declarant (Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(d); Bowden v. Robinson (1977) 67 Cal. App. 3d 705, 719-720, 136 Cal. Rptr. 871).

[2] Comments

These points and authorities should be combined with a general memorandum in opposition to a motion for summary judgment [see § 221.29] or summary adjudication [see § 221.30], and with a form of objection [see § 221.34], when the opposing party claims that the affidavit or declaration submitted by the moving party in support of the motion is not made on personal knowledge [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(d); see Evid. Code § 702].

Supporting and opposing affidavits or declarations must be made by any person on personal knowledge. However, any objections based on the failure to comply with this requirement must be made at the hearing or will be deemed waived [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(d); see also discussion in § 221.22[2][b]]. Moreover, a summary judgment might properly be granted even when the supporting declaration is not based on personal knowledge if there is other relevant and proper evidence before the court showing that there is no cause of action, or defense to the cause of action, as the case may be [

see Korens v. R. W. Zukin Corp. (1989) 212 Cal. App. 3d 1054, 1062, 261 Cal. Rptr. 137] .

Some local courts require that declarations supporting a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication state that the facts set forth are personally known to the declarant and that he or she has firsthand knowledge of the same, and state facts which the declarant relies on as establishing his or her personal knowledge of the substantive facts asserted [see, e.g., Los Angeles Co. Super. Ct. Rules, Rule 9.21(c)].

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[i] Related Uses

With appropriate modifications, these points and authorities may be incorporated by the moving party into a supplemental memorandum to object that the opposing affidavits or declarations are not made on personal knowledge of the affiant or declarant [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b), (d); Overland Plumbing Inc. v. Transamerica Ins. Co. (1981) 119 Cal. App. 3d 476, 483-484, 174 Cal. Rptr. 1 ; Pepper Indus., Inc. v. Home Ins. Co. (1977) 67 Cal. App. 3d 1012, 1017, 134 Cal. Rptr. 904 (discussed under § 221.37[4] [a])]. The moving party would file the supplemental memorandum as a separate paper after receipt of the opposing party's affidavits or declarations, if supplemental memoranda are permitted by local court rules and practice [see § 221.22].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Personal Knowledge Required

Bowden v. Robinson (1977) 67 Cal. App. 3d 705, 136 Cal. Rptr. 871 , was an action for common law fraud, fraud under the Corporate Securities Act of 1968, and money had and received, based on an alleged false representation made by defendants to plaintiff that defendants were qualified to issue California stock. Plaintiff relied on the representation and paid defendants cash for shares, but did not receive any certificates. After both parties moved for summary judgment, the trial court denied plaintiff's motion and granted defendants' motion, from which judgment plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed judgment for defendants and remanded the case for further proceedings. The court disagreed with defendants' argument that the Corporate Securities Law of 1968 superseded all other claims previously cognizable at common law relating to securities transactions. Although it held that plaintiff's common count for money had and received was barred by the applicable statute of limitations, it also held that the complaint stated a cause of action for common law fraud and for fraudunder Corp. Code § 25401. With respect to these two causes of action, the court held that triable issues of fact remained. In examining defendants' supporting declarations, the court held that statements made "to the best of my knowledge" by the declarant did not satisfy the requirement for personal knowledge under Code Civ. Proc. § 437c, but, rather, implied something similar to information and belief. Strictly construing defendants' supporting papers, the court found that many unresolved issues of fact remained. It also determined that the trial court had not erred in denying plaintiff's motion, as his affidavits contained averments not within his personal knowledge, which constituted inadmissible hearsay, conclusion, and opinion (67 Cal. App. 3d 705, 719-721) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Personal Knowledge Required

Garibay v. Hemmatt (2008) 161 Cal. App. 4th 735, 74 Cal. Rptr. 3d 715 , regarding improper expert testimony, is discussed under § 221.38[3][a].

Lopez v. University Partners (1997) 54 Cal. App. 4th 1117, 63 Cal. Rptr. 2d 359 , involved an action for personal injuries. The trial court granted summary judgment in favor of the defendants, and the court of appeal affirmed. The court held that declarations on information and belief submitted by the plaintiff and the plaintiff's construction expert in opposition to the motion were insufficient to raise a triable issue of fact. Declarations based on information and belief are insufficient to satisfy the burden of either the moving or opposing party on a motion for summary judgment or adjudication. Thus, the declarations submitted by the plaintiff were insufficient to satisfy its burden under Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(o)(2) (see now Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(p)(2)) of showing the existence of a triable issue of fact (54 Cal. App. 4th 1117, 1124-1125) .

In Overland Plumbing, Inc. v. Transamerica Ins. Co. (1981) 119 Cal. App. 3d 476, 174 Cal. Rptr. 1 , an action by an insured against its insurer to recover a loss covered by a policy of theft insurance, the court of appeal affirmed the grant of summary judgment for plaintiff. The court held that portions of defendant's counterdeclaration made to the best of the declarant's knowledge and belief failed to satisfy the personal knowledge requirement of Code Civ. Proc. § 437c. Disagreeing with the language in Jos. Schlitz Brewing Co. v. Downey Distributor (1980) 109 Cal. App. 3d 908, 916, 167 Cal. Rptr. 510 , to the effect that opposing papers need not necessarily be composed wholly of strictly evidentiary facts, the court stated that since the 1973 amendment to Code Civ. Proc. § 437c, opposing as well as supporting papers must be made and affirmatively shown to be on personal knowledge and based on admissible evidence (119 Cal. App. 3d 476, 483-484) .

Pepper Indus., Inc. v. Home Ins. Co. (1977) 67 Cal. App. 3d 1012, 134 Cal. Rptr. 904 , was an action by an insured for declaratory relief against its primary and excess insurers. Plaintiff moved for summary judgment to determine that the general liability insurance policies issued by the two companies provided coverage for plaintiff's liability, if any, to a city for an explosion and fire allegedly resulting from plaintiff's discharge of gasoline into the city sewer system, and that the pollution endorsements in each policy did not exclude coverage. The court of appeal affirmed judgment for plaintiff, holding that the policy in question, on appeal, afforded coverage for plaintiff's liability resulting from the fire and explosion, and that the pollution endorsement did not exclude liability for that type of accident. In examining the opposing declaration by one of defendant's claims representatives for excess insurance, the court observed that the declarant's statement relating to his "understanding" about the amount of the premium charged in relation to the coverage provided was not a statement of fact within his personal knowledge (67 Cal. App. 3d 1012, 1017) .

§ 221.38 Opposing Motion for Summary Judgment or Summary Adjudication--Supporting Affidavit of Declaration Contains Inadmissible Evidence [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(d)]

[1] FORM

[This form should be combined with a general form of memorandum of points and authorities opposing a motion for summary judgment (see § 221.29) or summary adjudication (see § 221.30), and with a form of objection (see § 221.34).]

[A] SUPPORTING _____ [AFFIDAVIT(S) or DECLARATION(S)] WHICH CONTAIN[S] INADMISSIBLE EVIDENCE MAY NOT BE CONSIDERED BY THE COURT IN DETERMINING A MOTION FOR SUMMARY _____ [JUDGMENT or ADJUDICATION].

A. Admissible Evidence Required. Affidavits or declarations supporting a motion for summary judgment [or summary adjudication] must set forth admissible evidence (Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(d); Franklin v. Benevolent & Protective Order of Elks (1979) 97 Cal. App. 3d 915, 930, 159 Cal. Rptr. 131).

[Optional] B. Hearsay. Hearsay evidence contained in supporting affidavits or declarations may not be considered by the court in determining a motion for summary judgment [or summary adjudication] (see Evid. Code § 1200; Garibay v. Hemmatt (2008) 161 Cal. App. 4th 735, 743, 74 Cal. Rptr. 3d 715 ; Franklin v. Benevolent & Protective Order of Elks (1979) 97 Cal. App. 3d 915, 930, 159 Cal. Rptr. 131).

[Optional] C. Best-Evidence Rule. Generally, averments in the supporting affidavits or declarations which depend on written documentation are incompetent and cannot be considered unless the original document or certified or authenticated copies of such instruments are attached, an excuse for nonproduction is shown, or the originals are produced for inspection by the adverse party at the hearing on the motion (Dugar v. Happy Tiger Records, Inc. (1974) 41 Cal. App. 3d 811, 815-817, 116 Cal. Rptr. 412).

[Optional] D. Unauthenticated Writing. An unauthenticated writing incorporated by reference into supporting affidavits or declarations may not be considered by the court in determining a motion for summary judgment [or summary adjudication] (see Evid. Code §§ 1400, 1401; Garibay v. Hemmatt (2008) 161 Cal. App. 4th 735, 743, 74 Cal. Rptr. 3d 715 ; Dixon v. Grace Lines, Inc. (1972) 27 Cal. App. 3d 278, 290, 103 Cal. Rptr. 595).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities should be combined with a general memorandum in opposition to a motion for summary judgment [see § 221.29] or summary adjudication of an issue [see § 221.30], and with a form of objection [see § 221.34], when the opposing party claims that the affidavit or declaration of the moving party in support of the motion does not set forth admissible evidence [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(d)]. It should be noted that the presence of inadmissible evidence regarding an immaterial fact in a paper supporting a motion for summary judgment is not a valid ground for denying the motion [Overland Plumbing, Inc. v. Transamerica Ins. Co. (1981) 119 Cal. App. 3d 476, 481, 174 Cal. Rptr. 1 (discussed in § 221.37[4][a])].

Supporting and opposing affidavits or declarations must set forth admissible evidence. However, any objections based on the failure to comply with this requirement must be made at the hearing or will be deemed waived [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(d); see also § 221.22[2][b]].

The optional paragraphs in this form contain potential evidentiary objections affecting admissibility. In reviewing the adverse party's papers, counsel should consider all evidentiary objections.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[i] Related Uses

With appropriate modifications, these points and authorities may be incorporated by the moving party into a supplemental memorandum to object that the opposing affidavits or declarations contain inadmissible evidence [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b), (d); see, e.g., Wilkinson v. Norcal Mut. Ins. Co. (1979) 98 Cal. App. 3d 307, 314, 159 Cal. Rptr. 416 (discussed under § 221.38[3][b])]. The moving party would file the supplemental memorandum as a separate paper after receipt of the opposing party's affidavits or declarations, if supplemental memoranda are permitted by local court rules and practice [see § 221.22].

[b] Inability to Recall Exact Words Spoken

If the matters stated in an affidavit or declaration in support or opposition to a summary judgment motion are within the affiant's or declarant's personal knowledge, then his or her inability to recall the exact words spoken goes only to the weight, not the admissibility, of the evidence [Buehler v. Oregon-Washington Plywood Corp. (1976) 17 Cal. 3d 520, 528-529, 131 Cal. Rptr. 394, 551 P.2d 1226] .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Admissible Evidence Required

In Garibay v. Hemmatt (2008) 161 Cal. App. 4th 735, 74 Cal. Rptr. 3d 715 , plaintiff sued defendant for medical malpractice after her tubal ligation failed and she became pregnant. Defendant filed a motion for summary judgment. The sole evidence in support of the motion consisted of an expert declaration from an obsetrician/gynecologist who had reviewed medical records from defendant's office and from the hospital where plaintiff had her tubal ligation. The expert's declaration opined that defendant's actions were within the standard of care and not medical malpractice based on medical that were not admitted into evidence and for which no foundation was offered to admit the records under the business records exception to the hearsay rule. The trial court granted defendant's motion for summary judgment, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeals reversed. The court began by noting that defendant's motion for summary judgment was supported solely by the expert declaration and not by deposition testimony or a declaration on the part of defendant. Although the expert's declaration stated he had reviewed medical records and hospital records, these records were not in evidence. The expert did not have personal knowledge of the facts stated in the records. The court stated that without testimony providing for the authentication of the medical records, the expert declaration had no evidentiary value, and therefore, defendant's motion had no evidentiary basis (161 Cal. App. 4th 735, 743) .

Franklin v. Benevolent & Protective Order of Elks (1979) 97 Cal. App. 3d 915, 159 Cal. Rptr. 131 , was an action by a public school teacher against the Elks and a local lodge for publication of a libelous statement, in defendants' national magazine, concerning plaintiff's prior teaching experience. The trial court granted defendants' motion for summary judgment on the grounds that because plaintiff was a public figure, actual malice was an essential element of her action, and that the record demonstrated as a matter of law that defendants had published the statement without actual malice. Plaintiff appealed from the judgment for defendants.

The court of appeal reversed judgment for defendants. The court agreed with the trial court's determination that a public school teacher is not a public official within the meaning of New York Times Co. v. Sullivan (1964) 376 U.S. 254, 84 S. Ct. 710, 11 L. Ed. 2d 686 . However, contrary to the trial court, it held that plaintiff was not a public figure and, therefore, defendants did not have a qualified constitutional privilege and plaintiff was not required to prove publication with actual malice. Plaintiff had not voluntarily and actively sought, in connection with the controversy surrounding her choice of teaching materials, to influence the resolutions of the issues involved. The court held that defendants' voluminous collection of clippings, offered in support of their summary judgment motion, relating to a similar controversy over plaintiff's teaching methods while working for another school district, was inadmissible hearsay. The court stated that it is elementary that affidavits in support of a motion for summary judgment must contain, and may be considered only to the extent that they contain, admissible evidence (97 Cal. App. 3d 915, 930) . The court deemed it unnecessary to consider the validity of the trial court's determination that there was no triable issue of fact with respect to actual malice.

Franklin v. Benevolent & Protective Order of Elks (1979) 97 Cal. App. 3d 915, 159 Cal. Rptr. 131 , is discussed under § 221.38[3][a].

[c] Best-Evidence Rule

Dugar v. Happy Tiger Records, Inc. (1974) 41 Cal. App. 3d 811, 116 Cal. Rptr. 412 , was an action on a debt by an assignor, alleging both common counts and fraudulent misrepresentation. Plaintiff moved for summary judgment. One supporting affidavit contained statements by the affiant that he had examined the documents attached to the affidavit and incorporated them by reference, and that they were accurate. However, the business records in question, showing the commercial transactions between plaintiff's assignor and defendant, were not attached. A second affiant stated that he also had reviewed copies of the business documents which were attached to the first affidavit, and concluded that the sum in question was due and owing to plaintiff. The trial court granted the unopposed motion and rendered judgment in plaintiff's favor.

The court of appeal reversed judgment for plaintiff. The court held that although plaintiff subsequently attempted to add the documents in question as an exhibit and incorporate them by reference into the affidavits by the declaration of her attorney, the declaration was unverified and thus could not support the motion. In discussing defendant's other contentions raised on appeal, the court noted that materials incorporated by reference into an affidavit must conform to the rules of evidence. It stated the general rule that averments in the movant's affidavits which depend on written documents are incompetent under the best evidence rule and cannot be considered, unless the original documents or certified or authenticated copies of them are annexed to the affidavits, or excuse for nonproduction of them is shown. The court decided that the documents did not fall within the business records exception of former Evid. Code § 1550 so as to permit use of the photostatic copies. Further, former Evid. Code § 1510 permits the use of copies only where the originals are themselves produced at the hearing and made available for inspection by the adverse party, but the record did not disclose whether the originals were in fact produced [see now Evid. Code § 1520 et seq.]. The court held that such a blank record does not give rise to the inference that the section was complied with or was even relied on to make copies admissible. Thus, the trial court's consideration of the photostatic copies violated the best evidence rule and constituted reversible error (41 Cal. App. 3d 811, 815-818) .

[d] Unauthenticated Writing

Dixon v. Grace Lines, Inc. (1972) 27 Cal. App. 3d 278, 103 Cal. Rptr. 595 , was an action for damages under the Jones Act for negligence and, under general maritime law, for unseaworthiness and for maintenance, cure, and wages, for personal injuries sustained by plaintiff while employed as a seaman by defendant. Plaintiff was injured on a private pier while attempting to board a private launch to return to defendant's ship. Defendant's motion for summary judgment was granted, and plaintiff appealed from the judgment.

The court of appeal reversed judgment for defendant. After examining the substantive issues relating to the Jones Act and general maritime law, the court held that defendant's declaration in support of its motion for summary judgment failed to set forth facts showing that plaintiff was not entitled to maintenance, cure, and wages under his second cause of action. Further, it did not appear that the declarant, if sworn as a witness, could testify competently to the facts, as there was no showing that the matters stated were within his personal knowledge. The supporting declaration incorporated a letter from a shipping firm which stated that there was no relationship between the launch and defendant's ship. However, the court held that the letter could not properly be considered in support of the motion. The letter was unauthenticated, there was no stipulation as to its authenticity, and the declarant did not state, nor did the letter show, who the declarant was or how he came to have knowledge of the matters set forth in the letter (27 Cal. App. 3d 278, 290) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Admissible Evidence Required

See Guthrey v. State of California (1998) 63 Cal. App. 4th 1108, 75 Cal. Rptr. 2d 27 , which is discussed in § 221.40[3][a].

In Kramer v. Barnes (1963) 212 Cal. App. 2d 440, 27 Cal. Rptr. 895 , an action based on negligence for damages arising from personal injuries sustained in a multiple-car collision, the trial court granted a motion for summary judgment brought by one of the defendants. In reversing judgment for defendant, the court of appeal stated the general rules that an affidavit's sufficiency must be tested by the same rules as those applicable to oral testimony, and that an affidavit which sets forth only conclusions, opinions, or ultimate facts is insufficient. The court held that one of defendant's supporting affidavits contained only hearsay, and the affiant thus could not competently testify to the matters stated (212 Cal. App. 2d 440, 446) .

[b] Hearsay

Wilkinson v. Norcal Mut. Ins. Co. (1979) 98 Cal. App. 3d 307, 159 Cal. Rptr. 416 , was an action for damages by a doctor against his medical malpractice carrier by reason of the rate charged and conditions imposedin his policy. The court of appeal affirmed judgment for defendant, granted on the ground that plaintiff had failed to exhaust his available administrative remedies. The court held that the oral hearsay statement made to plaintiff by an employee of the Department of Insurance, to the effect that they could not help plaintiff, was insufficient to exhaust the administrative remedy. Moreover, the statement was hearsay and thus inadmissible under former Code Civ. Proc. § 437c (which did not provide for waiver of evidentiary objections) to prove the truth of the facts asserted (98 Cal. App. 3d 307, 314) .

[c] Best-Evidence Rule

In Ritchey v. Villa Nueva Condominium Ass'n (1978) 81 Cal. App. 3d 688, 146 Cal. Rptr. 695 , an action for injunctive and declaratory relief, and for damages for malicious prosecution, abuse of process, and interference with a contractual relationship, plaintiff challenged the validity of an amendment to the bylaws of the homeowners association which restricted occupancy to adults only, preventing plaintiff from leasing his condominium to a woman with two children. The trial court granted summary judgment for defendant. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment and held that, although the amendment was a restraint on the right of alienation and a limitation on the right of occupancy, the amendment was reasonable. Plaintiff argued that the association was bound by the condition to his federally insured loan for the purchase of his condominium, which required him to certify that he would not discriminate against families with children in leasing or selling the unit. However, plaintiff failed to attach a copy of the loan agreement to any of his declarations. Citing Dugar v. Happy Tiger Records, Inc. (1974) 41 Cal. App. 3d 811, 815-816, 116 Cal. Rptr. 412 (discussed under § 221.38[3][c]), the court stated that averments in an affidavit or declaration which depend on written documentation are incompetent and cannot be considered, unless the original document or certified or authenticated copies of such instruments are annexed thereto or unless excuse for nonproduction is shown. As plaintiff failed to attach essential documents, the court held that his declarations were insufficient to raise a triable issue of fact on the question (81 Cal. App. 3d 688, 696-697) .

22-221 California Points & Authorities § 221.39

§ 221.39 Opposing Motion for Summary Judgment or Summary Adjudication--Supporting Affidavit or Declaration Does Not Affirmatively Show Affiant Competent to Testify [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(d)]

[1] FORM

[This form should be combined with a general form of memorandum of points and authorities opposing a motion for summary judgment (see § 221.29) or summary adjudication (see § 221.30), and with a form of objection (see § 221.34).]

SUMMARY JUDGMENT IS IMPROPER WHEN THE SUPPORTING _____ [AFFIDAVIT(S) or DECLARATION(S)] _____ [DOES or DO] NOT AFFIRMATIVELY SHOW THAT THE _____ [AFFIANT or DECLARANT] IS COMPETENT TO TESTIFY TO THE MATTERS STATED THEREIN.

Showing of Competency to Testify Required. Summary judgment [or summary adjudication] is improper when the supporting affidavit or declaration does not affirmatively show that the affiant or declarant is competent to testify to the matters stated therein (Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(d); Dixon v. Grace Lines, Inc. (1972) 27 Cal. App. 3d 278, 290, 103 Cal. Rptr. 595 ; Fisher v. Cheeseman (1968) 260 Cal. App. 2d 503, 506, 67 Cal. Rptr. 258).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities should be combined with a general memorandum in opposition to a motion for summary judgment [see § 221.29] or summary adjudication [see § 221.30], and with a form of objection [see § 221.34], when the opposing party claims that the affidavit or declaration of the moving party in support of the motion does not affirmatively show that the affiant or declarant is competent to testify to the matters stated therein [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(d)].

Supporting and opposing affidavits or declarations must show affirmatively that the affiant is competent to testify to the matters stated therein. However, any objections based on the failure to comply with this requirement must be made at the hearing or will be deemed waived [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(d); see also discussion in § 221.22[2][b]]. Moreover, a summary judgment might properly be granted even when the supporting declaration is not based on personal knowledge if there is other relevant and proper evidence before the court showing that there is no cause of action, or defense to the cause of action, as the case may be [see Korens v. R.W. Zukin Corp. (1989) 212 Cal. App. 3d 1054, 1062, 261 Cal. Rptr. 137] .

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Nature of Showing Competence

It should be noted that the affirmative showing required by Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(d) may be made without actually reciting the conclusion inthe declaration or affidavit that the maker is competent to testify as to the matters stated in the paper if sworn as a witness. It is sufficient that the declaration set forth facts which show the declarant's competence and firsthand knowledge. Failure to state conclusions as to competence and firsthand knowledge will not render the affidavit or declaration unacceptable even if local rules of court state that it should contain such conclusions [Roy Brothers Drilling Co. v. Jones (1981) 123 Cal. App. 3d 175, 181-182, 176 Cal. Rptr. 449 ; see Los Angeles Co. Super. Ct. Rules, Rule 9.21(c) (declaration as required to state facts showing that facts set forth are within declarant's firsthand knowledge)].

[i] Related Uses

With appropriate modifications, the foregoing points and authorities may be incorporated by the moving party into a supplemental memorandum to object that the opposing affidavits or declarations fail to affirmatively show that the affiant or declarant is competent to testify to the matters stated therein [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b), (d); Apodoca v. Schiffahrtsgesellschaft De Vries & Co. (1962) 199 Cal. App. 2d 605, 607, 18 Cal. Rptr. 869 (opposing affidavits contained only hearsay matters to which affiants would not be competent to testify)]. The moving party would file the supplemental memorandum as a separate paper after receipt of the opposing party's affidavits or declarations, if supplemental memoranda are permitted by local court rules and practice [see § 221.22].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Showing of Competency to Testify Required

The facts and procedural background of Dixon v. Grace Lines, Inc. (1972) 27 Cal. App. 3d 278, 103 Cal. Rptr. 595 , are discussed in § 221.38[3][d]. In holding that the declaration in support of defendant's motion for summary judgment was insufficient, the court stated that it did not appear that the declarant, if sworn as a witness, could testify competently to the facts concerning the connection of defendant's ship with the private launch which plaintiff was attempting to board to return to defendant's ship when the injury occurred. Although the declarant was one of the attorneys for defendant, there was no showing that the matters were within his personal knowledge (27 Cal. App. 3d 278, 290) .

Fisher v. Cheeseman (1968) 260 Cal. App. 2d 503, 67 Cal. Rptr. 258 , was an action to recover on a promissory note which plaintiff became holder of after several payments were allegedly in default. Plaintiff's motion for summary judgment was granted, and defendant appealed from the judgment.

The court of appeal reversed judgment for plaintiff. The court held that defendant's opposing affidavit defeated plaintiff's motion by presenting the special defense of novation, in that a corporation had been substituted as the one obligated to pay the note, releasing defendant of his obligation (260 Cal. App. 2d 503, 506-507) . In examining plaintiff's supporting affidavits, the court stated the general rule that each affidavit must affirmatively show that the affiant, if sworn as a witness, can testify competently to the matters stated. The affidavit by plaintiff's assignor failed to show that the affiant knew whether or not any payments were made after the assignment. The second supporting affidavit by the assignor's attorney also failed to show that the affiant was competent to testify that the balance claimed due on the note had not been paid in full after the assignment (260 Cal. App. 2d 503, 506) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Showing of Competency to Testify Required

In Salasguevara v. Wyeth Laboratories, Inc. (1990) 222 Cal. App. 3d 379, 271 Cal. Rptr. 780 , the court of appeal reversed a summary judgment in favor of a laboratory and a physician in an action against them by a minor for injuries incurred following the administration of a vaccine manufactured by the laboratory and administered by the physician. Plaintiff alleged that the laboratory was negligent both in marketing the vaccine and for failing to warn of the vaccine's known dangers, and that the physician was liable for immunizing plaintiff without taking a complete medical history and by failing to warn of the dangers inherent in the vaccine. The defendants' summary judgment motion was based on the fact that plaintiff was precluded from giving required expert testimony in support of his complaint based on his failure to file a designation of expert witnesses for trial and the subsequent denial by the trial court of plaintiff's motion for an extension of time in which to file the designation. The laboratory's motion was supported solely by reference to portions of the deposition of one of the doctors who had treated plaintiff to the effect that he personally didn't think plaintiff's disabilities were related to the vaccine based on his understanding of plaintiff's condition. The physician's motion was not supported by any declarations at all. After pointing out that (1) on a summary judgment motion the burden is on the moving party to make a sufficient showing that the claim is entirely without merit and that if that showing is deficient summary judgment must be denied (222 Cal. App. 3d 379, 384) , and (2) medical causation can only be determined by expert medical testimony (222 Cal. App. 3d 379, 385) , the court discussed the kind of medical testimony required on the issue of causation (222 Cal. App. 3d 379, 385) . The court noted that, prior to the motion, defendant laboratory had designated four expert witnesses, each of whom was highly qualified, to testify concerning liability issues, including causation, and that no declaration from any of them had been submitted in support of the motion (222 Cal. App. 3d 379, 385-386) . The court further pointed outthat the deposition excerpts relied on were by a doctor who had been designated not on liability issues, but as one of the treating doctors who was to testify as to plaintiff's condition and present complaints, that the doctor saw the plaintiff for a routine physical examination, that the child was being seen by other doctors for his neurological problems, that declarations from these other doctors had been submitted in support of the motion, and that there was no showing from the excerpts that the deposed doctor had any training, experience, or skill that would qualify him to give an opinion about the vaccine or the causation issues (222 Cal. App. 3d 379, 386) . The court further held that, while expert testimony is required to establish negligence in a medical malpractice case, a party need not rely on his or her own designated experts, but may, instead, call as a witness an expert designated by another party who has been deposed (222 Cal. App. 3d 379, 387) .

The facts and procedural background of Bowden v. Robinson (1977) 67 Cal. App. 3d 705, 136 Cal. Rptr. 871 , are discussed in § 221.37[3][a]. In examining defendant's declaration in support of his motion for summary judgment, the court stated that the declarant's legal conclusion concerning the stock issuance was not admissible evidence of which the declarant had personal knowledge, and that there was no affirmative showing that the declarant was competent to testify to the matters stated therein (67 Cal. App. 3d 705, 720) .

In Kramer v. Barnes (1963) 212 Cal. App. 2d 440, 27 Cal. Rptr. 895 , an action for damages for personal injuries sustained in a multiple-car collision, the court of appeal reversed judgment granting defendant summary judgment. In examining the supporting affidavit by one of defendant's passengers, the court noted that it merely stated an opinion that another affidavit by defendant's second passenger was true and correct and, hence, amounted to nothing more than hearsay and conclusion. In testing the first affidavit's sufficiency by the rules applicable to oral testimony, the court stated that it was obvious that the affiant could not competently testify to the matters if she took the stand during trial (212 Cal. App. 2d 440, 446) .

PART II. FORMS

22-221 California Points & Authorities § 221.40

§ 221.40 Opposing Motion for Summary Judgment or Summary Adjudication--Supporting Affidavit or Declaration Contains Ultimate Facts and Conclusions

[1] FORM

[This form should be combined with a general form of memorandum of points and authorities opposing a motion for summary judgment (see § 221.29) or summary adjudication (see § 221.30), and with a form of objection to evidence (see § 221.34).]

SUMMARY _____ [JUDGMENT or ADJUDICATION] IS IMPROPER WHEN A SUPPORTING _____ [AFFIDAVIT or DECLARATION] ONLY STATE(S) ULTIMATE FACTS AND CONCLUSIONS.

Evidentiary Facts Required. The supporting affidavits or declarations must state all the requisite evidentiary facts and not merely the ultimate facts. Moreover, neither conclusions of law nor conclusions of fact are sufficient to support summary judgment [or summary adjudication] (Colby v. Schwartz (1978) 78 Cal. App. 3d 885, 889, 144 Cal. Rptr. 624 ; Rodes v. Shannon (1961) 194 Cal. App. 2d 743, 748, 15 Cal. Rptr. 349 ; see Guthrey v. State of California (1998) 63 Cal. App. 4th 1108, 1119-1120, 75 Cal. Rptr. 2d 27).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities should be combined with a general memorandum in opposition to a motion for summary judgment [see § 221.29] or summary adjudication [see § 221.30], and with a form of objection [see § 221.34], when the opposing party claims that an affidavit or declaration of the moving party in support of the motion contains ultimate instead of evidentiary facts, or merely conclusions of law or fact.

Some local courts require that declarations supporting a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication set forth statements of fact with particularity and not set forth conclusions, except where a proper foundation for them has been established [see Los Angeles Co. Super. Ct. Rules, Rule 9.21(c)].

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[i] Related Uses

With appropriate modifications, the foregoing points and authorities may be incorporated by the moving party into a supplemental memorandum to object that the opposing affidavits or declarations contain ultimate facts or conclusions [see, e.g., Weaver v. Superior Court (1979) 95 Cal. App. 3d 166, 187, 156 Cal. Rptr. 745 ; Whitney's at the Beach v. Superior Court (1970) 3 Cal. App. 3d 258, 270-271, 83 Cal. Rptr. 237] . The moving party would file this memorandum as a separate paper after receipt of the opposing party's affidavits or declarations, if supplemental memoranda are permitted by local court rules and practice [see § 221.22].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Evidentiary Facts Required

The facts and procedural background of Travelers Casualty & Surety Co. v. Superior Court (1998) 63 Cal. App. 4th 1440, 75 Cal. Rptr. 2d 54 , are discussed in § 221.29[4][b]. In concluding that an expert's declaration that the plaintiff had submitted in opposition to a summary adjudication motion was insufficient, the court noted that expert declarations cannot create a triable question of fact if the expert's opinion is based on factors that are remote, speculative, or conjectural (63 Cal. App. 4th 1440, 1462) .

Guthrey v. State of California (1998) 63 Cal. App. 4th 1108, 1120, 75 Cal. Rptr. 2d 27 , involved an employment discrimination case. The trial court granted defendants motion for summary judgment finding that plaintiff failed to present any admissible evidence to dispute defendants' referenced facts and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court noted that a motion for summary judgment must be decided on admissible evidence in the form of affidavits, declarations, admissions, answers to interrogatories, depositions and matters of which judicial notice can be taken (63 Cal. App. 4th 1108, 1119-1120) . Quoting from Hayman v. Block (1986) 176 Cal. App. 3d 629, 638, 222 Cal. Rptr. 293 , the court further noted that personal knowledge and competency must be shown in the supporting and opposing affidavits and declarations, and that the affidavits (and declarations) must cite evidentiary facts, not ultimate facts or legal conclusions (63 Cal. App. 4th 1108, 1120) . The evidence offered in the trial court to support plaintiff's gender discrimination contention had included plaintiff's declaration and the declarations of other employees who had worked under plaintiff's supervisor. These declarations were objected to and the objections were sustained. The court concluded that the declarations of the other employees were properly excluded since they were purely conclusional and based on opinion, not facts (63 Cal. App. 4th 1108, 1119) . Similarly, plaintiff's declaration was objectionable because it was based on opinion and conclusions instead of evidentiary fact (63 Cal. App. 4th 1108, 1120) .

Colby v. Schwartz (1978) 78 Cal. App. 3d 885, 144 Cal. Rptr. 624 , was an action for damages allegedly resulting from defendant doctors' negligent diagnosis, care for, and treatment of plaintiff's decedent following an automobile accident. Three defendants successfully moved for summary judgment based on good samaritan legislation. Plaintiff appealed from the order dismissing two defendants from the action after granting their motions for summary judgment.

The court of appeal reversed the order dismissing defendants. The court held that the good samaritan legislation is not applicable when physicians are rendering emergency medical care as part of their normal course of practice. The court also held that summary judgment was improper because the question of whether defendants fulfilled their duty of care to the decedent remained a material triable issue of fact, particularly as to the timeliness of diagnosis and remedial steps taken. It stated that defendants' supporting declarations were deficient in that they contained, in part, only conclusions by merely asserting without supportive factual allegations that defendants met the standard of care required of them (78 Cal. App. 3d 885, 889) .

Rodes v. Shannon (1961) 194 Cal. App. 2d 743, 15 Cal. Rptr. 349 , was an action by a purchaser for specific performance of a contract to convey real property. Plaintiff moved for summary judgment, and defendant opposed the motion on the ground that plaintiff failed to allege facts showing that the contract was fair, the consideration adequate, and that it would be inequitable to enforce it. Plaintiff filed a second supporting affidavit in which she asserted that the consideration was full, adequate, fair, just, and equitable under the circumstances. The motion was granted, and defendant appealed from the judgment.

The court of appeal reversed judgment for plaintiff. The court held that the defect in the pleading did not preclude the granting of a motion for summary judgment if the supporting affidavits were factually sufficient. The court stated that a moving party's affidavits or declarations must state facts establishing every element necessary to sustain a judgment in his or her favor. Thus, the movant's affidavits or declarations must state all the requisite evidentiary facts and not merely the ultimate facts, and neither conclusions of law nor conclusions of fact are sufficient to satisfy the required showing. The court held that plaintiff's affidavit which merely repeated the general allegations of the pleading was insufficient, and that it did not allege evidentiary facts (194 Cal. App. 2d 743, 748-749) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Evidentiary Facts Required

Johnson v. Superior Court (2006) 143 Cal. App. 4th 297, 49 Cal. Rptr. 3d 52 was a medical malpractice action arising from allegedly negligent treatment for prostate cancer. Plaintiff alleged that defendants implanted an excessive amount of radioactive material in him, resulting in damage to surrounding tissues and organs. Defendants filed a motion for summary judgment, alleging their treatment was within the standard of care. The court granted defendants' motion, and after the court denied plaintiff's motion for reconsideration, plaintiff appealed. The court of appeals reversed, holding that defendants did not meet their burden of presenting evidence that would preclude a reasonable trier of fact from finding it was more likely than not that their treatment fell below the standard of care. The expert declaration relied on by defendants was inadequate in containing merely two conclusory statements: a statement that the treatment plan for plaintiff was within the standard of care and a statement that an evaluation done nearly six months after the radiation was implanted showed the treatment had been adequate. The declaration, therefore, only stated that what was planned before the operation and what was done at the time the radiation was implanted was within the standard of care. The declaration failed to set forth a standard for a proper dosage of the radiation or explain why the radiation implanted deviated from the treatment plan. All the declaration stated was that what was done was within the standard of care, without explaining how the amount of radiation implanted is normally determined. Therefore, the declaration was insufficient to establish the nonexistence of a triable issue of material fact (143 Cal. App. 4th 297, 308) .

The facts and procedural background of Benavidez v. San Jose Police Dept. (1999) 71 Cal. App. 4th 853, 84 Cal. Rptr. 2d 157 , are discussed in § 221.20[3][e]. The trial court granted summary judgment in favor of defendants. In affirming the judgment, the court of appeal noted that the ultimate issue, whether the police owed a duty to the plaintiffs, is a question of law for the trial court. Courts have been highly critical and must be cautious when an expert offers legal conclusions as to ultimate facts in the guise of an expert opinion. Accordingly, to the extent a retired field training police officer's declaration submitted by the plaintiff in opposition to the motion draws legal conclusions, the court rejected the declaration (71 Cal. App. 4th 853, 864-865) .

See also Bryant v. Bakshandeh (1991) 226 Cal. App. 3d 1241, 1245, 277 Cal. Rptr. 379 , discussed in § 221.35[4][a].

Pacific Architects Collaborative v. State of California (1979) 100 Cal. App. 3d 110, 166 Cal. Rptr. 184 , was an action to recover expenses incurred in preparing mobile trailers pursuant to a bid solicitation by a state agency. The trial court granted defendant's motions for judgment on the pleadings and summary judgment. In affirming the judgment, the court of appeal held that governmental immunity precluded the imposition of any liability based on a tort theory, and that there was no implied promise to award the contract to the lowest bidder so as to support a cause of action on a promissory estoppel theory. In reviewing the law applicable to summary judgments, the court stated the general rule that the movant's affidavits or declarations must state all of the requisite evidentiary facts and not merely the ultimate facts. Moreover, neither conclusions of law nor conclusions of fact are sufficient to satisfy the statutory requirements (100 Cal. App. 3d 110, 119-120) .

In Fuller v. Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. (1970) 7 Cal. App. 3d 690, 86 Cal. Rptr. 705 , an action for personal injury based on negligent and careless manufacture, assembly, and inspection and on improper design of a tire, the court of appeal reversed the grant of summary judgment for defendant. The court held that defendant's supporting declarations by two expert witnesses were insufficient because they did not negate defective design as a basis for negligence or strict liability. Further, the court found a more fundamental deficiency in defendant's declarations in that they both relied for their effect on conclusions and opinions. The court stated the general rule that affidavits or declarations which set forth only conclusions, opinions, or ultimate facts are insufficient. It explained that the sufficiency of an affidavit or declaration is to be tested by whether the affiant or declarant could be charged with perjury if any of the material allegations proved false. An affidavit or declaration stating opinions and conclusions would not come within this rule (7 Cal. App. 3d 690, 693) .

SUMMARY _____ [JUDGMENT or ADJUDICATION] IS IMPROPER WHEN THE ONLY PROOF OF A MATERIAL FACT OFFERED IN SUPPORT OF THE SUMMARY JUDGMENT IS A[N] _____ [AFFIDAVIT or DECLARATION] MADE BY THE SOLE WITNESS TO SUCH FACT.

Sole Witness to Material Fact. If a party is otherwise entitled to a summary judgment [or summary adjudication], it must not be denied on grounds of credibility or for want of cross examination of witnesses furnishing affidavits or declarations in support of the motion, except that summary judgment [or summaryadjudication] may be denied in the discretion of the court when the only proof of a material fact offered in support of the motion is an affidavit or declaration made by an individual who was the sole witness to the fact (Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(e); Times Mirror Co. v. Superior Court (1988) 198 Cal. App. 3d 1420, 1430, 244 Cal. Rptr. 556).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities should be combined with a general memorandum in opposition to a motion for summary judgment [see § 221.29] or summary adjudication [see § 221.30] when the opposing party claims that the only proof of a material fact offered in support of the motion is an affidavit or declaration made by an individual who was the sole witness to the fact [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(e)]. Although present case law has not yet construed the phrase "sole witness," if it is construed to mean the only available witness, then Evid. Code § 240 would apply to determine when other witnesses to the facts in question are unavailable.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Sole Witness to Material Fact

In Times Mirror Co. v. Superior Court (1988) 198 Cal. App. 3d 1420, 244 Cal. Rptr. 556 , a witness to a murder brought an invasion-of-privacy action against a newspaper for publishing her name in the early stages of the criminal investigation, after efforts had been made by her and on her behalf to protect her identity.

The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's denial of the defendant's motion for summary judgment, holding, inter alia, that Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(e) authorizes the court to deny summary judgment when there is only one witness to a material fact, and noting that the only witness regarding the source of the plaintiff's identity was the reporter (198 Cal. App. 3d 1420, 1430) .

§ 221.43 Opposing Motion for Summary Judgment or Summary Adjudication--Facts Essential to Opposition Currently Unavailable [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(h)]

[1] FORM

[This form should be combined with a general form of memorandum of points and authorities opposing a motion for summary judgment (see § 221.29) or summary adjudication (see § 221.30).]

SUMMARY _____ [JUDGMENT or ADJUDICATION] IS IMPROPER WHEN FACTS ESSENTIAL TO JUSTIFY OPPOSITION MAY EXIST BUT CANNOT BE PRESENTED AT THE TIME OF THE MOTION.

A. Unavailability of Opposing Facts. If it appears from the affidavits or declarations submitted in opposition to a motion for summary judgment [or summary adjudication] that facts essential to justify opposition may exist but cannot, for reasons stated, then be presented, the court shall deny the motion, or order a continuance to permit affidavits to be obtained or discovery to be had, or may make such other order as may be just (Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(h)). The use of the words "may" and "shall" in subdivision (h) leaves little room for doubt that continuances are to be liberally granted. Indeed, an opposing party can compel continuance of a summary judgment motion by making a declaration meeting the requirements of Code of Civil Procedure section 437c(h) (Bahl v. Bank of America (2001) 89 Cal. App. 4th 389, 395, 107 Cal. Rptr. 2d 270). Code Civ. Proc. § 437c provides that if, after granting a continuance to allowed specified additional discovery, the courtdetermines that the party seeking summary judgment has unreasonably failed to allow the discovery to be conducted, the court shall grant a continuance to permit the discovery to go forward or deny the motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(i)].

[Optional] B. Continuance to Depose Expert Who Has Supplied Declaration Concerning Foundation of Opinion. Under proper circumstances, although there has been no exchange of experts pursuant to Code of Civil Procedure Section 2034 (Code Civ. Proc. § 2034.210 et seq. operative July 1, 2005), a continuance may be granted to permit a party to depose an expert who supplies a declaration or affidavit in support of _____ [summary judgment or summary adjudication] when there is a legitimate question regarding the foundation of the expert's opinion (see St. Mary Medical Center v. Superior Court (1997) 50 Cal. App. 4th 1531, 1539-1540, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 182).

[Optional] C. Lack of Diligence Alone Does Not Preclude Continuance. Although the court may deny the continuance when lack of diligence results in the party having insufficient information to know if facts essential to opposition may exist, which renders the party unable to provide the affidavit required under Code of Civil Procedure section 437c(h), the court's discretion to deny a continuance is strictly limited when a party submits an affidavit demonstrating that facts essential to justify opposition exist, but have not been presented to the court because the party has not been diligent in search for the facts through discovery. The strong policy favoring disposition of cases on the merits outweighs the competing policy favoring judicial efficiency (Bahl v. Bank of America (2001) 89 Cal. App. 4th 389, 398, 107 Cal. Rptr. 2d 270).

These points and authorities should be combined with a general memorandum in opposition to a motion for summary judgment [see § 221.29] or summary adjudication [see § 221.30] when the opposing party claims that facts essential to justify opposition may exist but cannot, for reasons stated, then be presented [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(h)].

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should indicate to the court what additional evidence he or she expects to discover if a continuance were granted [see Vanderbilt Growth Fund, Inc. v. Superior Court (1980) 105 Cal. App. 3d 628, 638, 164 Cal. Rptr. 621] . The relevancy of the facts sought should be shown to demonstrate that they are essential to justify opposition [see Evid. Code § 210 (relevant evidence defined); Pacific Architects Collaborative v. State of California (1979) 100 Cal. App. 3d 110, 126-127, 166 Cal. Rptr. 184 ; Coast-United Advertising, Inc. v. Long Beach (1975) 51 Cal. App. 3d 766, 772-773, 124 Cal. Rptr. 487] . Additionally, counsel should show that he or she has diligently used the discovery procedures or other available means to obtain the facts essential to opposition [see James Talcott, Inc. v. Short (1979) 100 Cal. App. 3d 504, 509-510, 161 Cal. Rptr. 63 (failure to seek access to business records or to obtain limited use immunity); Wiler v. Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. (1979) 95 Cal. App. 3d 621, 628, 157 Cal. Rptr. 248] . Local court rules may require that a request for a continuance or denial be supported by an affidavit or declaration stating the reasons that the opposing evidence cannot then be presented, an estimate of the time required, and the procedures necessary to obtain such evidence [see, e.g., Los Angeles Co. Super. Ct. Rules, Rule 9.21(g)].

The party claiming lack of access to facts essential to justify opposition may request the court to deny the motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication of an issue, to order a continuance to permit affidavits or declarations to be obtained or discovery to be had, or to make such other order as may be just [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(h)]. It should be noted that the discretionary power of the court to "make such other order as may be just" includes the power to grant a motion for summary judgment conditionally, unless the opposing party can demonstrate within a specified period of time that a triable issue exists concerning the matters in question [see, e.g., Mamola v. California ex rel. Dep't of Transp. (1979) 94 Cal. App. 3d 781, 784-785, 156 Cal. Rptr. 614] .

Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(h) does not compel the court to grant a continuance to allow the opposing party to bring its papers into conformity with format requirements when the party does not present the affidavits that the time is needed to obtain new facts. Whether to grant a continuance in this situation remains in the court's discretion [Lucas v. George T. R. Murai Farms, Inc. (1993) 15 Cal. App. 4th 1578, 1586, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 436 (denial of continuance is not abuse of discretion when motion was made at hearing seven weeks after reply papers raised format issue)].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Unavailability of Opposing Facts

In Bahl v. Bank of America (2001) 89 Cal. App. 4th 389, 107 Cal. Rptr. 2d 270 , an action against a bank on multiple causes of action arising out of the termination of plaintiff's employment, the plaintiff requested a continuance because discovery was still ongoing; for example, transcripts of depositions essential to justify opposition had not yet been received from the court reporter, and the defendant produced over 600 pages of documentation after the plaintiff filed her opposition to the motion. The court denied the requests for a continuance and granted the defendant's motion for summary judgment.

Reversing, the court of appeal held that the plaintiff submitted sufficient affidavits in connection with both her initial request for a continuance and her subsequent requests. The court noted that the drafter's inclusion of the words "may" and "shall" in the statute left little room for doubt that the continuances are to be liberally granted and that the opposing party may compel a continuance by making a declaration that meets the requirements of Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(h) (89 Cal. App. 4th 389, 395) . The court proceeded to find that the plaintiff's affidavits were sufficient to support a continuance. At the time of the plaintiff's initial request for a continuance, her counsel declared that a witness had testified in conflict with statements made in the declarations supporting defendant's motion. Counsel also informed the court that he would not be receiving copies of the witness' deposition transcript for another week. In addition, counsel indicated he had noticed the deposition of witness who was the most knowledgeable as to certain facts and that witness still had to be deposed. Both witnesses were declarants in support of defendant's motion, and the court said that it was hard-pressed to imagine evidence more "essential to justify opposition" than that which might undermine the weight or credibility of declarations made in support of a motion for summary judgment (89 Cal. App. 4th 389, 395-396) . Moreover, plaintiff had demanded production of certain documents but did not receive the hundreds of pages of documents from defendant until after having filed her initial opposition and request for continuance. The court stated that plaintiff was entitled to a meaningful opportunity to review and evaluate those documents (89 Cal. App. 4th 389, 396) .

The court then pointed out that the trial court had denied the continuance requests in part because it felt that the plaintiff had been dilatory in conducting discovery (the case was roughly 18 months old when the court denied the continuance). The court recognized that when lack of diligence results in a party's having insufficient information to know if facts essential to justify opposition may exist, and the party is therefore unable to provide the requisite affidavit under Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(h), the trial judge may deny the request for continuance of the motion. However, when a party submits an affidavit demonstrating that facts essential to justify opposition exist, but have not been presented to the court because the party has not been diligent in search for the facts through discovery, the court's discretion is strictly limited (89 Cal. App. 4th 389, 397-398) . The court recognized that the trial judge is confronted with opposing responsibilities when a continuance of a summary judgment motion hearing is requested. These are the policy of the Trial Court Delay Reduction Act (Gov. Code § 68600 et seq.) requiring the judge to actively assume and maintain control of the pace of the litigation, and the guiding principle of deciding cases on the merits rather than on procedural deficiencies. When these policies collide head-on, the court held that the strong public policy favoring disposition on the merits outweighs the competing policy favoring judicial efficiency (89 Cal. App. 4th 389, 398) . In this case, the court held that the denial of plaintiff's request for a continuance abused the court's limited discretion where the plaintiff's affidavit informed the court of outstanding discovery matters and why essential facts could not be presented at the time, the defendant did not suggest that it suffered any prejudice on account of the plaintiff's due diligence deficit, and the parties had provided no indication that there was a special reason to protect the trial date (89 Cal. App. 4th 389, 399) .

[b] Continuance to Depose Expert Who Has Supplied Declaration Concerning Foundation of Opinion

St. Mary Medical Center v. Superior Court (1997) 50 Cal. App. 4th 1531, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 182 , involved a medical malpractice action. After answering the complaint, the defendants filed a motion for summary judgment. No trial date had yet been set. The defendants raised the issue of the statute of limitations, and also asserted that none of them were negligent in the care and treatment of the plaintiffs. In opposition to the motion, the plaintiffs relied on the declaration of their expert, a board certified internist, to establish triable issues of fact relating to the defendants' negligence. The defendants noticed the deposition of the plaintiffs' expert, and at the same time took their motion for summary judgment off calendar. The plaintiffs' counsel instructed the expert not to appear for the deposition, and explained to the defendants' counsel that the expert was a retained expert, and therefore the terms of Code Civ. Proc. § 2034 applied and that until there had been an exchange of experts, the deposition of the expert was premature (50 Cal. App. 4th 1531, 1535) . The defendants moved to compel the deposition of the expert. The trial court denied the motion, and defendants filed a petition for writ of mandate seeking to have the trial court's order reversed.

The court of appeal issued a writ of mandate ordering the trial court to set aside the order denying the deposition of the plaintiffs' expert doctorand enter a different order granting the motion with the deposition to be limited to foundational issues relating to the opinions rendered by the doctor in the doctor's declaration in opposition to the motion for summary judgment (50 Cal. App. 4th 1531, 1541) . The court of appeal noted that it believed that in proper circumstances, the court should allow a party to a summary proceeding the opportunity to take limited discovery which may effectively dispose of the proceeding (50 Cal. App. 4th 1531, 1538-1539) . The court pointed out that Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(h) contemplates that the party opposing a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication may request a continuance for purposes of discovery. On the other hand, Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(h) has no comparable provision for the moving party. The moving party, however, controls when the motion is brought, and except for expert witnesses, will have had a chance to depose the necessary witnesses prior to noticing the motion. This obviously cannot be the situation when one or more witnesses to the action will be experts, and there has not as of yet been a designation called for under Code Civ. Proc. § 2034 (Code Civ. Proc. § 2034.210 et seq. operative July 1, 2005) (50 Cal. App. 4th 1531, 1539) . Here there has been a form of designation of experts, those identified in the motion for summary judgment and the opposition. While it is true that motions for summary judgment are to be heard on affidavits or declarations, contradictions raised by discovery may require the trial court to disregard the declarations or affidavits. This applies equally to party and nonparty deponents. Thus, under proper circumstances, although there has been no exchange of experts pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 2034 (Code Civ. Proc. § 2034.210 et seq. operative July 1, 2005), the parties should be allowed to depose an expert who supplies a declaration or affidavit in support of or in opposition to summary judgment or summary adjudication when there is a legitimate question regarding the foundation of the expert's opinion (50 Cal. App. 4th 1531, 1540) . Whether to grant discovery in a given case falls within the trial court's sound discretion based on all the facts presented. There must be objective facts presented that create a significant question regarding the validity of the affidavit or declaration which, if successfully pursued, will impeach the foundational basis of the affidavit or declaration in question (50 Cal. App. 4th 1531, 1540-1541) .

[This form should be combined with a general form of memorandum of points and authorities opposing a motion for summary judgment (see § 221.29) or summary adjudication (see § 221.30). When appropriate, it may also be combined with a form of objection to evidence contained in the moving party's papers (see § 221.34).]

_____ [Specify moving party, e.g., PLAINTIFF'S or DEFENDANT'S] MOTION FOR SUMMARY _____ [JUDGMENT or ADJUDICATION OF AN ISSUE] SHOULD BE DENIED BECAUSE _____ [specify moving party, e.g., PLAINTIFF or DEFENDANT] HAS _____ [SUBMITTED AN INADEQUATE or NOT SUBMITTED A] SEPARATE STATEMENT SETTING FORTH MATERIAL FACTS THAT _____ [specify moving party, e.g., PLAINTIFF or DEFENDANT] CONTENDS ARE UNDISPUTED.

Inadequacy or Lack of Statement of Undisputed Material Facts. The papers supporting a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication must include a separate statement setting forth plainly and concisely all material facts that the moving party contends are undisputed. Each of the material facts stated must be followed by a reference to the supporting evidence. Failure to comply with this requirement of a separate statement may in the court's discretion constitute a sufficient ground for denial of the motion (Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b)(1); see also Zimmerman v. Larson (2005) 131 Cal. App. 4th 1466, 1475, 33 Cal. Rptr. 3d 111).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities should be combined with a general memorandum in opposition to a motion for summary judgment [see § 221.29] or summary adjudication of an issue [see § 221.30], and, when appropriate, with a form of objection to evidence [see § 221.34], when the opposing party claims that the moving party has submitted an inadequate, or failed to submit a separate, statement of material facts that the moving party contends are undisputed [see

Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b)].

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counselshould show that the moving party (1) has not plainly and concisely set forth the material facts contended to be undisputed, (2) has not referred to supporting evidence for each material fact contended to be undisputed, or (3) has failed completely to include a separate statement of undisputed facts.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Inadequacy of Lack of Statement of Undisputed Material Facts

In Zimmerman v. Larson (2005) 131 Cal. App. 4th 1466, 33 Cal. Rptr. 3d 111 , a law firm sued its former client, Larson, for payment of fees incurred when the firm represented Larson in a divorce action. During the course of the divorce proceedings, Larson had filed for bankruptcy protection under Chapter 11. The trial court granted summary judgment in favor of Larson on the ground that the firm had failed to file a statement of compensation paid or agreed to be paid with the bankruptcy court as required by bankruptcy laws and, furthermore, that the firm failed to see a review of the reasonableness of its fees from the bankruptcy court. The law firm appealed. (131 Cal. App. 4th 1466, 1469, 1474-1475) .

The court of appeals disagreed with the trial court's ruling, stating that Larson did not present sufficient evidence to establish that the firm was required to comply with the bankruptcy statute at issue. However, the court affirmed summary judgment in favor of Larson on other grounds. In its opinion, the court discussed the separate statement requirement, noting that the language of Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b) is discretionary in that it states a failure to comply with the separate statement requirement "may in the court's discretion constitute a sufficient ground for denial of the motion" (Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b)(1)). This discretionary language has led appellate courts to hold that trial courts may consider evidence not referenced in a moving party's separate statement (see, e.g., San Diego Watercrafts, Inc. v. Wells Fargo Bank (2002) 102 Cal. App. 4th 308, 125 Cal. Rptr. 2d 499). The court agreed with prior courts that trial courts have discretion to overlook procedural errors in moving and opposition papers, but only if the evidence presented warrants it. In this particular case, the court stated, the decision to overlook "glaring omissions and concessions" was not warranted (131 Cal. App. 4th 1466, 1478) . For example, Larson's contention was that the law firm's representation was in connection with the bankruptcy within the meaning of a particular bankruptcy statute. Larson made no effort to support this contention until his reply brief. No facts in support of the contention appeared in the separate statement. Although the trial court was permitted to look beyond the separate statement at the exhibits and other evidence, the evidence did not support Larson's contention. Because Larson failed to meet his burden of proving the legal work was in connection with the bankruptcy, the trial court should not have granted summary judgment on that ground (131 Cal. App. 4th 1466, 1485). The court of appeals affirmed the grant of summary judgment on two independent grounds (131 Cal. App. 4th 1466, 1469) .

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted by any party to oppose a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication [see §§ 221.29, 221.30] in an action in which the plaintiff's claim carries a clear and convincing burden of proof [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(p); see, e.g., Code Civ. Proc. § 425.14].

Counsel should insert the argument into the form showing the relationship between facts of the case and the points of law stated, including argument showing how the evidence or the inferences reasonably drawn from them, or both, fail to meet the higher standard of proof.

[b] Related Points and Authorities

For points and authorities in opposition to motions for summary judgment or summary adjudication relating to particular causes of actions and grounds, see the specific, substantive chapters in this set.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Evidence and Inferences Reasonably Drawn Fail to Meet Standard

In Rowe v. Superior Court (1993) 15 Cal. App. 4th 1711, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 625 , plaintiff sought amend its complaint to assert a claim for punitive damages against a religious organization pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 425.14. The pre-pleading burden of proof set out in the statute is clear and convincing evidence. The trial court misapplied the overly stringent standard for weighing plaintiff's evidence and denied the motion to amend.

The court of appeal issued a peremptory writ of mandate vacating the order denying the motion to amend. In holding that the heightened standard did not impair the right to a jury trial, the court analogized the burden to that imposed on a plaintiff who responds to a summary judgment under Rule 56 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, which has been upheld against claims that it violated the federal right to a jury trial. The court adopted the analysis of Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc. (1986) 477 U.S. 242, 254-255, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 2513, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202, 216 , which stated, "in ruling on a motion for summary judgment, the judge must view the evidence presented through the prism of the substantive evidentiary burden." Thus, when a motion for summary judgment is made in a case in which the plaintiff's claim carries a clear and convincing burden of proof, the evidence and all inferences reasonably drawn them must meet that higher standard (15 Cal. App. 4th 1711, 1724) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Evidence and Inferences Reasonably Drawn Fail to Meet Standard

In Reader's Digest Assn. v. Superior Court (1984) 37 Cal. 3d 244, 208 Cal. Rptr. 137, 690 P.2d 610 , a church (The Synanon Church) and its founder filed an action for libel against a magazine publication and one of its reporters. Defendants moved for summary judgment, which the trial court denied. In granting defendants' writ of mandate, the court of appeal confirmed the standard of review in a summary judgment in a First Amendment action. Since a jury verdict in a defamation case can only be supported when actual malice is shown by clear and convincing evidence, rather than by a preponderance of evidence as in most cases, the evidence and all the inferences that can reasonably be drawn from it must meet the higher standard in a summary judgment motion (37 Cal. 3d 244, 252) .

[b] Clear and Convincing Standard in Summary Adjudication of Punitive Damages Claim

In Basich v. Allstate Ins. Co. (2001) 87 Cal. App. 4th 1112, 1118, 105 Cal. Rptr. 2d 153 , involving an insured's action for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, judgment for nonsuit was entered in the insurer's favor on the ground that the insured had failed to file the action within the applicable limitation period, the insurer's motion for summary adjudication on the issues of punitive damages was granted, and the insured appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment insofar as it granted the motion for summary adjudication, and reversed the judgment as to nonsuit on other grounds (87 Cal. App. 4th 1112, 1115) . With regard to summary adjudication, the insured argued that the trial court improperly evaluated the evidence he submitted to rebut the insured's showing that the handling of the claim was not malicious, oppressive, or fraudulent by the clear-and-convincing standard applicable at trial. The court rejected that contention, and held that if, in fact, the trial court viewed the evidence submitted by the insured in opposition to the motion for summary adjudication with the clear-and-convincing standard in mind, it did so properly (87 Cal. App. 4th 1112, 1118) . The court reasoned that the holding in Reader's Digest Assn. v. Superior Court (1984) 37 Cal. 3d 244, 208 Cal. Rptr. 137, 690 P.2d 610 , should not be limited to public figure defamation cases, but should be applied to any summary judgment [or summary adjudication] motion involving a claim that must be proved by clear and convincing evidence, including a claim for punitive damages. The court concluded that if the plaintiff is going to prevail on a punitive damage claim, he or she can only do so by establishing malice, oppression, or fraud by clear and convincingevidence and thus, any evidence submitted in response to a motion for summary adjudication must necessarily meet that standard (87 Cal. App. 4th 1112, 1119-1121) .

The foregoing points and authorities should be combined with a general memorandum supporting [see § 221.20] or opposing [see § 221.29] a motion for summary judgment or supporting [see § 221.21] or opposing [see § 221.30] a motion for summary adjudication when the moving or opposing party seeks to have the trial court take judicial notice of specified matters [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b)(1), (2); see Evid. Code §§ 450-460].

Although this form cites no cases in support of the statutory grounds set forth, counsel may wish to do so, particularly where there is any doubt as to whether the specific matter of which counsel seeks to have the court take judicial notice comes within the statutory description. For example, a court may take judicial notice of its own records, including the prior pleadings in the case [Evid. Code § 452(d); People v. Cavanna (1989) 214 Cal. App. 3d 1054, 1058, 263 Cal. Rptr. 177] . However, any incorporation by reference of matter in the court's file shall set forth with specificity the exact matter to which reference is being made and shall not incorporate the entire file [*Code Civ. [3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Use of Judicially Noticed Matters

Parker v. Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corp. (1970) 3 Cal. 3d 176, 89 Cal. Rptr. 737, 474 P.2d 689 , involved an action by an actress against a movie production studio for money due under an employment contract and for damages for breach of the contract. The trial court granted plaintiff's motion for summary judgment, and defendant appealed from the ensuing judgment. The Supreme Court affirmed judgment for plaintiff, rejecting defendant's argument that plaintiff failed to mitigate her damages by accepting what the Court found to be inferior employment. In summarizing summary judgment procedures, the Court stated that the trial court may consider facts which are properly the subject of judicial notice (3 Cal. 3d 176, 181 ; see 3 Cal. 3d 176, 188-189 of dissenting opinion).

Stevens v. Cessna Aircraft Co. (1981) 115 Cal. App. 3d 431, 170 Cal. Rptr. 925 , was a wrongful death action brought against an airplane manufacturer. Plaintiff alleged that the plane crashed because it was overloaded, and that the plane was defective because it failed to contain a warning posted for passengers as to the load capacity. The court of appeal affirmed the grant of defendant's motion for summary judgment on the ground that defendant had no duty to provide such information to the passengers. In discussing the sufficiency of defendant's supporting declarations, the court stated that the pilot's responsibilities could be established by reference to the applicable federal regulations, of which judicial notice could be taken, as Code Civ. Proc. § 437c permits a motion to be supported by matters of which judicial notice must or may be taken (115 Cal. App. 3d 431, 434) .

[b] Matters Subject to Mandatory Judicial Notice

Judicial notice must be taken of the following matters [Evid. Code §§ 11, 451]:

(a) the decisional, constitutional, and public statutory law of California and of the United States and the provisions of any charter described in Cal. Const., art. XI, §§ 3-5;

(b) any matter made a subject of judicial notice by Gov. Code §§ 11343.8, 11344.6, or 18576 or by 44 U.S.C. § 1507;

(c) rules of professional conduct for members of the bar adopted pursuant to Bus. & Prof. Code § 6076 and rules of practice and procedure for the courts of California adopted by the Judicial Council;

(d) rules of pleading, practice, and procedure prescribed by the United States Supreme Court, such as the Rules of the United States Supreme Court, the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, the Admiralty Rules, the Rules of the Court of Claims, the Rules of the Customs Court, and the General Orders and Forms in Bankruptcy;

(e) the true signification of all English words and phrases and of all legal expressions; and

(f) facts and propositions of generalized knowledge that are so universally known that they cannot reasonably be the subject of dispute.

[c] Matters Subject to Permissive Judicial Notice

Judicial notice may be taken of the following matters to the extent that they are not embraced within Evid. Code § 451 [Evid. Code §§ 11, 452]:

(a) the decisional, constitutional, and statutory law of any state of the United States and the resolutions and private acts of the United States Congress and of the California Legislature;

(b) regulations and legislative enactments issued by or under the authority of the United States or any public entity in the United States;

(c) official acts of the legislative, executive, and judicial departments of the United States or of any state of the United States;

(d) records of any court of California or any court of record of the United States or of any state of the United States;

(e) rules of court of any court of California or any court of record of the United States or of any state of the United States;

(f) the law of an organization of nations and of foreign nations and public entities in foreign nations;

(g) facts and propositions that are of such common knowledge within the territorial jurisdiction of the court that they cannot reasonably be the subject of dispute; and

(h) facts and propositions that are not reasonably subject to dispute and are capable of immediate and accurate determination by resort to sources of reasonably indisputable accuracy.

[d] Matters Subject to Permissive Judicial Notice Conditionally Mandatory on Request

The trial court must take judicial notice of any matter specified in Evid. Code § 452 if a party requests it and (a) gives each adverse party sufficient notice of the request, through the pleadings or otherwise, to enable such adverse party to prepare to meet the request; and (b) furnishes the court with sufficient information to enable it to take judicial notice of the matter [Evid. Code §§ 11, 453]. The request may be made in the memorandumof points and authorities, as appears here. Alternatively, a separate request for judicial notice may be filed, or the request may be made in the supporting declaration [see, e.g., Wood v. Brown (1974) 39 Cal. App. 3d 232, 235 n.3, 114 Cal. Rptr. 63] .

CAUTION:
The foregoing partial form is intended primarily for use in an appellate brief. Counsel should refer to Ch. 50, Appeal: Briefs, in California Forms of Pleading and Practice for rules specific to the format of appellate briefs. Moreover, there are conflicting opinions concerning the showing required to shift the burden of proof and the standard of review to be applied [see further discussion in California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 537, Summary Judgment (Matthew Bender)]. Accordingly, the cases counsel cite in the appellate brief regarding the standard of review will depend on the facts of the case.

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of or in opposition to an appeal of summary judgment. This should be combined with § 221.20, adapting it for use in an appellate brief, and inserted as Paragraph B, re-lettering the subsequent paragraphs as appropriate.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should show by specific reference how the trial court did or did not correctly apply the three-step analysis in granting summary judgment.

See also § 221.20[2].

[b] Standard of Appellate Review

[i] Independent Review

Review of a trial court's determination involves pure matters of law, requiring a reassessment of the legal significance of the documents [AARTS Productions, Inc. v. Crocker National Bank (1986) 179 Cal. App. 3d 1061, 1064, 225 Cal. Rptr. 203] . Since a summary judgment motion raises only questions of law regarding the construction and effect of the supporting and opposing papers, the appellate court independently reviews them on appeal, applying the same analysis required of the trial court [Catholic Healthcare West v. California Ins. Guarantee Assn. (2009) 178 Cal. App. 4th 15, 23, 100 Cal. Rptr. 3d 125 ; Barisich v. Lewis (1990) 226 Cal. App. 3d 12, 15-16, 275 Cal. Rptr. 331 ; Royster v.

Cushman (1989) 213 Cal. App. 3d 65, 68, 261 Cal. Rptr. 458] . Likewise, an appellate court independently reviews a trial court's order denying summary adjudication [Certain Underwriters at Lloyd's of London v. Superior Court (2001) 24 Cal. 4th 945, 972, 103 Cal. Rptr. 2d 672 (ruling denying summary adjudication resolves pure question of law: whether there is any triable issue as to any material fact and, if not, whether moving party is entitled to adjudication in his or her favor as matter of law)]. For discussion of independent review standard, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 537, Summary Judgment (Matthew Bender).

The abuse of discretion standard of review applies in limited circumstances with respect to summary judgment. In particular, summary judgment may be denied in the court's discretion under certain circumstances related to the credibility or cross-examination of witnesses [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(e)], and the court also retains discretion regarding certain procedural matters, such as the filing of a separate statement and the time constraints for filing opposition or reply [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b); see Saldana v. Globe-Weis Systems Co. (1991) 233 Cal. App. 3d 1505, 1512 n.3, 285 Cal. Rptr. 385 ; see also Centennial Ins. Co. v. United States Fire Ins. Co. (2001) 88 Cal. App. 4th 105, 111, 105 Cal. Rptr. 2d 559 (abuse of discretion standard applicable in motions for summary adjudication involving determination by trial court of appropriate method of allocating defense costs among multiple liability insurance carriers, each insuring same insured); Fretland v. County of Humboldt (1999) 69 Cal. App. 4th 1478, 1490, 82 Cal. Rptr. 2d 359 (noting that only rulings under Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(e) are discretionary); Scott v. CIBA Vision Corp. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 307, 313-314, 326, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 902 (when continuance is not mandatory because conditions of Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(h) are not met, appellate court reviews trial court's denial of continuance under abuse of discretion standard); Krieger v. Nick Alexander Imports, Inc. (1991) 234 Cal. App. 3d 205, 212 n.3, 285 Cal. Rptr. 717 (trial court has discretion when party seeks additional time for discovery under Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(h))].

Evidentiary rulings on summary judgment may also be reviewed for an abuse of discretion [see Nazir v. United Airlines (2009) 178 Cal. App. 4th 243, 100 Cal. Rptr. 3d 296 (recognizing split of authority as to standard of review of rulings on evidentiary objections but reviewing objections under abuse of discretion standard; for additional discussion, see § 221.29[3][f]); see also Jackson v. County of Los Angeles (1997) 60 Cal. App. 4th 171, 192 n.15, 70 Cal. Rptr. 2d 96 (citing Aguimatang v. California State Lottery (1991) 234 Cal. App. 3d 769, 797-798, 286 Cal. Rptr. 57); but see Gatton v. A.P. Green Services, Inc. (1998) 64 Cal. App. 4th 688, 692, 75 Cal. Rptr. 2d 523 (when trial court sustains objection to deposition transcript based on inadmissible hearsay in connection with summary judgment motion, appellate court independently reviews deposition's admissibility and legal effect of facts properly presented)].

[ii] Abuse of Discretion Standard Abrogated

Notwithstanding the Legislature's clear intent in the 1973 amendment of Code Civ. Proc. § 437c to abrogate the use of discretion in deciding whether to grant summary judgment, some courts may use the abuse of discretion standard as opposed to the independent appellate review standard [Saldana v. Globe-Weis Systems Co. (1991) 233 Cal. App. 3d 1505, 1512, 285 Cal. Rptr. 385 (listing opinions applying abuse of discretion standard and noting the issue of which standard to use was not contested on appeal in these cases)].

In Prata v. Superior Court (2001) 91 Cal. App. 4th 1128, 111 Cal. Rptr. 2d 296 , the trial court grated summary adjudication to a defendant in anaction brought under the unfair competition law [Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 et seq.], terminating the individual plaintiff's cause of action brought on behalf of plaintiff and other consumers similarly situated. The trial court exercised its discretion in holding that the cause of action was not suitable as a representative action. The appellate court affirmed, holding that although the general rule on appeal requires a de novo review, in the circumstance where a trial court is required to exercise its discretion in passing on a motion for summary judgment, and grants or denies the motion on the basis of its equitable determination of a question as to which the exercise of judicial discretion is proper, the standard of review on appeal necessarily is whether the trial court's decision amounted to an abuse of discretion (91 Cal. App. 4th 1128, 1135) .

In Centennial Insurance Co. v. United States Fire Insurance Co. (2001) 88 Cal. App. 4th 105, 105 Cal. Rptr. 2d 559 , the court held that in the limited and exceptional circumstances where a trial court is required to and properly does exercise its discretion in passing on a summary judgment motion, the standard of review on appeal is whether the trial court's decision amounted to an abuse of discretion. In that case, three insurers had issued liability policies to the same insured for various time periods; and each insured paid a portion of the settlement in the underlying action. Thereafter, two of the insurers filed an action against the third, claiming the third had not contributed its proper share to the settlement; plaintiffs argued that each insured should contribute a one third share. Defendant argued that it should contribute only its proportionate share, based upon its "time on the risk"; i.e., the proportion of the time that its policy was in effect. The trial court adopted the "time on the risk" theory. The appellate court held that the proper method of allocation was a matter for the trial court's equitable discretion, and on summary judgment, its review was limited to whether the trial court had abused that discretion (88 Cal. App. 4th 105, 110) .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Independent Appellate Review

In Catholic Healthcare West v. California Ins. Guarantee Assn. (2009) 178 Cal. App. 4th 15, 100 Cal. Rptr. 3d 125 , the California Insurance Guarantee Association (CIGA) cross-complained for indemnity, alleging that CIGA mistakenly believed that claims made by or on behalf of cross-defendant were covered claims, the claims were not covered claims and CIGA was not authorized to pay them, and defendant was legally obligated to return the $ 186,093.51 paid by CIGA, but had refused to return the payment as demanded by CIGA. CIGA then moved for summary judgment. The trial court granted summary judgment to CIGA on its cross-complaint for the return of payments made by CIGA, on the ground that CIGA was not statutorily authorized to pay the claims (178 Cal. App. 4th 15, 17-23) . In reversing, the Court of Appeal noted that appellate courts independently review a motion for summary judgment using the same legal standards that governed the trial court's determination of the motion. Code of Civil Procedure § 437c contains these standards, which courts apply using a three-step analysis. First, a court must identify the issues framed by the allegations in the pleadings. Second, a court must determine whether the moving party has satisfied its initial burden of producing evidence to make a prima facie showing of the nonexistence of any triable issue of material fact. Third, if the moving party has made the requisite showing, a court must examine the opposition and determine whether it demonstrates the existence of a triable issue of material fact (178 Cal. App. 4th 15, 23) .

In Inter Mountain Mortgage, Inc. v. Sulimen (2000) 78 Cal. App. 4th 1434, 93 Cal. Rptr. 2d 790 , involving a complaint for fraud, negligence, and equitable indemnity, the trial court granted defendants' motion for summary judgment.

The court of appeal, in reversing the judgment for the defendants, noted that in determining whether the defendant has satisfied his or her initial burden of proof under Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(o)(2) (see now Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(p)(2)), the appellate court decides de novo whether an issue of material fact exists and whether the moving party was entitled to summary judgment as a matter of law. In other words, the appellate court must assume the role of the trial court and reassess the merits of the motion. In doing so, the appellate court will consider only the facts properly before the trial court at the time it ruled on the motion. The appellate court carries out its appellate function by applying the same three-step analysis required of the trial court. First, the appellate court identities the issues framed by the pleadings. Second, the appellate court determines whether the moving party's showing has satisfied his or her burden of proof and justifies a judgment in the movant's favor. When a summary judgment motion prima facie justifies a judgment, the third and final step is to determine whether the opposition demonstrates the existence of a triable issue of material fact (78 Cal. App. 4th 1434, 1439) .

In Burroughs v. Precision Airmotive Corp. (2000) 78 Cal. App. 4th 681, 93 Cal. Rptr. 2d 124 , plaintiffs were injured when a light aircraft crashed, allegedly due to a malfunction in the engine's carburetor. Their complaint alleged theories of negligence, strict liability and breach of warrant. Based on a recent federal statute of repose, the trial court initially granted defendant's motions for summary adjudication as to plaintiffs' theories of strict liability and breach of warranty, but denied it as to their negligence cause of action. Defendant thereafter filed a second motion for summary adjudication as to the remaining cause of action for negligence on the grounds that (1) it was a product liability claim that was barred and preempted by the federal statute of repose, (2) defendant owed no independent duty with regard to the product, and (3) even if it had a duty, defendant satisfied that duty. The trial court granted the motion and entered judgment in favor of defendant. Plaintiffs appealed.

In affirming, the court of appeal noted that on appeal from a summary judgment, an appellate court conducts an independent review, applying the same three-step process as the trial court. The appellate court first looks to the pleadings to identify the elements of the cause of action for which relief is sought. The appellate then examines the moving party's motion to see whether it shows that one or more elements of the causeof action cannot be established or that there is a complete defense to that cause of action. If the moving party has made the requisite showing, the burden shifts to the party opposing the motion to set forth specific facts to show that a triable issue of one or more material facts exists as to that cause of action or defense thereto. If the opposing party fails to sustain this burden, summary judgment is proper (78 Cal. App. 4th 681, 688) .

[a] Independent Appellate Review

Wall Street Network, Ltd. v. New York Times Co. (2008) 164 Cal. App. 4th 1171, 80 Cal. Rptr. 3d 6 was an action for breach of contract and misrepresentation arising out of an internet marketing agreement between plaintiff's assignor and defendants. Defendants moved for summary judgment, and the trial court granted the motion. Plaintiff filed a motion for new trial, which the court denied. The court of appeals affirmed, noting that an order granting summary judgment is properly challenged by a motion for new trial. Although rulings on new trial motions are generally reviewed under an abuse of discretion standard, because the order denying the new trial followed a summary judgment determination, the court of appeals examined the matter de novo (164 Cal. App. 4th 1171, 1176) .

In Assilzadeh v. California Federal Bank (2000) 82 Cal. App. 4th 399, 98 Cal. Rptr. 2d 176 , an action seeking damages for fraudulent concealment, negligence and breach of fiduciary duty, the trial court granted summary judgment in defendants' favor. In affirming, the court of appeal noted that as a summary judgment motion raises only questions of law regarding the construction and effect of supporting and opposing papers, the appellate court independently applies the same three-step analysis as required of the trial court. The court identifies the issues framed by the pleadings; determines whether the moving party's showing establishes facts that negate the opponent's claim and justify a judgment in the moving party's favor; and, if it does, the court finally determines whether the opposition demonstrates the existence of a triable, material factual issue (82 Cal. App. 4th 399, 408) .

In Tahoe Vista Concerned Citizens v. Counter of Placer (2000) 81 Cal. App. 4th 577, 96 Cal. Rptr. 2d 880 , plaintiffs challenged the issuance of conditional use permits, claiming the permits had not undergone sufficient environmental review and violated governing parking regulations. The trial court granted summary judgment for defendants and plaintiffs appealed. The court of appeal affirmed (81 Cal. App. 4th 577, 580, 595) . In so doing the court noted that because the trial court's determination is one of law based on the papers submitted, the appellate court must make its own independent determination regarding the construction and effect of the supporting and opposing papers. The appellate court applies the same three-step analysis required of trial court. The appellate court first begins by identifying the issues framed by the pleadings because it is these allegations to which the motion must respond. The court then determines whether the moving party's showing has established facts that justify a judgment in movant's favor. When a summary judgment motion prima facie justifies a judgment, the final step is to determine whether the opposition demonstrates the existence of a triable, material factual issue (81 Cal. App. 4th 577, 587-588) .

In Renna v. County of Fresno (2000) 78 Cal. App. 4th 1, 92 Cal. Rptr. 2d 586 , the trial court granted defendant's motion for summary judgment as to all three of plaintiff's causes of action. Plaintiff appealed claiming the trial court improperly granted summary judgment as to plaintiff's third cause of action, for alleged failure to pay plaintiff overtime wages in violation of the Fair Labor Standard's Act (29 U.S.C. § 201 et seq.). The court of appeal affirmed. The court noted that on appeal from a grant of summary judgment, the appellate court reviews the record de novo and independently determines if the motion was properly granted. The appellate court uses the same standards and rules as the trial court in deciding the propriety of the motion. A three-step analysis is used in reviewing a motion for summary judgment. First, the appellate court must identity the issues framed by the pleadings. Second, the court determines whether the moving party has met its statutory burden of proof. In a case when the defendant was the moving party, the defendant must demonstrate through admissible evidence that one or more essential elements of the cause of action cannot be established. Once the defendant has made such a showing, the burden shifts to the plaintiff to produce evidence that a triable issue of fact exists as to an essential element of the cause of action. The third and final step is to determine if the opposing party has demonstrated that a triable issue of fact exists as to the cause of action. In determining whether the nonmoving party, in this case the plaintiff, has demonstrated a triable issue of fact, the court must strictly construe the moving party's evidence, and liberally construe the opposing party's evidence, with any doubt as to granting the motion being resolved in favor of the opposing party (78 Cal. App. 4th 1, 5) .

In Riverside County Community Facilities Dist. v. Bainbridge 17 (1999) 77 Cal. App. 4th 644, 92 Cal. Rptr. 2d 29 , involving a complaint to foreclose liens of special taxes, the trial court granted summary judgment in plaintiff's favor. The court of appeal affirmed. In so doing the court noted that in evaluating the propriety of a grant of summary judgment appellate review is de novo, and the appellate court independently reviews the record before the trial court. In practical effect, the appellate court assumes the role of a trial court and applies the same rules and standards that govern a trial court's determination of a motion for summary judgment. Because the granting of a summary judgment motion involves pure questions of law, the appellate court is required to reassess the legal significance and effect of the papers presented by the parties in connection with the motion. The appellate court applies the same three-step analysis required of the trial court in ruling on a motion for summary judgment. First, the appellate court identities the issues framed by the pleadings because the court's sole function on a motion for summary judgment is to determine from the submitted evidence whether there is a triable issue as to any material fact. To be material for purposes of a summary judgment proceeding, a fact must relate to some claim or defense in issue under the pleadings, and it must also be essential to the judgment in some way. Second, the appellate court determines whether the moving party has met its statutory duty. When as here the plaintiff is the moving party, the appellate courtdetermines whether the plaintiff has met its burden under Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(o)(1), of showing there is no defense to a cause of action because the admissible evidence produced by the plaintiff proves each element of the cause of action entitling the party to judgment on that cause of action. Finally, if the moving party has met its statutory burden of proof and the summary judgment motion prima facie justifies a judgment, the burden shifts to the opposing party and the appellate court determines whether that party has met its burden under Code Civ. Proc. § 437c. When as here the defendants are the opposing parties, the appellate court determines whether they have met their burden under Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(o)(1) (see now Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(p)(1)) of producing admissible evidence showing that a triable issue of one or more material facts exists as to that cause of action or a defense to it. In making this determination, he court strictly construes the evidence of the moving party and liberally construes that of the opponents, and any doubts as to the propriety of granting the motion should be resolved in favor of the party opposing the motion (77 Cal. App. 4th 644, 652-653) .

In Aetna Health Plans of Cal., Inc. v. Yucaipa-Calimesa Joint Unified School Dist. (1999) 72 Cal. App. 4th 1175, 85 Cal. Rptr. 2d 672 , a cross-complaint was filed seeking recovery on theories of equitable indemnity, partial equitable indemnity, contribution, and similar theories. The trial court granted summary judgment in favor of cross-defendant. Cross-complainant appealed. The court of appeal affirmed. The court in discussing the standard of review noted that the appellate court exercises independent judgment as to the legal effect of the undisputed facts disclosed by the parties' papers. In so doing, the appellate court applies the same three-step analysis required of the trial court. The appellate court first identifies issues framed by the pleadings, since it is these allegations to which the motion must respond. Secondly, the court determines whether the moving party has established facts that negate the opponent's claim and justify a judgment in the movant's favor. Finally, if the summary judgment motion prima facie justifies a judgment, the court determines whether the opposition demonstrates the existence of a triable, material factual issue (72 Cal. App. 4th 1175, 1186) .

In Pepperell v. Scottsdale Ins. Co. (1998) 62 Cal. App. 4th 1045, 73 Cal. Rptr. 2d 164 , the trial court granted summary judgment in the defendant's favor. The court of appeal reversed. The court of appeal in discussing the standard of review noted that because a summary judgment motions raise only questions of law regarding the construction and effect of the supporting and opposing papers, the appellate court independently reviews them on appeal applying the same three analysis required by the trial court. First, the court identifies the issues framed by the pleadings, since it is these allegations to which the motion must respond by establishing a complete defense or otherwise showing there is no factual basis for relief on any theory reasonably contemplated by the opponent's pleading. Second, the court determines whether the moving party has established facts which negate the opponent's claim and justify a judgment in the movant's favor. When a summary judgment motion prima facie justifies a judgment, the third and final step is to determine whether the opposition demonstrates the existence of a triable, material factual issue (62 Cal. App. 4th 1045, 1054) .

In Romero v. American President Lines, Ltd. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 1199, 45 Cal. Rptr. 2d 421 , a summary judgment in defendant's favor was upheld because the plaintiff produced no competent evidence to support her claims. However, as an initial matter on review, the parties disputed the applicable standard of review, with defendant contending that the court of appeal should review only for an abuse of discretion, and plaintiff contending that the review must be de novo. Although the court upheld the summary judgment for defendant, it agreed with plaintiff on this point, stating that on review from an order granting summary judgment, it must exercise de novo review. The court thus conducted an independent review of the questions in the case, rather than applying an abuse of discretion standard (38 Cal. App. 4th 1199, 1202) .

SUMMARY ADJUDICATION AS TO _____ [specify matter sought to be adjudicated, e.g., THE THIRD CAUSE OF ACTION OF PLAINTIFF'S FIRST AMENDED COMPLAINT] IS BECAUSE A SUPERSEDING PLEADING HAS RENDERED THE MOTION MOOT.

A. Summary Adjudication Is Not Proper When Superseding Pleading Has Rendered Motion Moot. An amendatory pleading supersedes the original one, which ceases to perform any function as a pleading (State Compensation Insurance Fund v. Superior Court (2010) 184 Cal. App. 4th 1124, 1130-1131) . Thus, an amended complaint supersedes all prior complaints (State Compensation Insurance Fund v. Superior Court (2010) 184 Cal. App. 4th 1124, 1130-1131) . An amended complaint furnishes the sole basis for the cause of action, and the original complaint ceases to have any effect either as a pleading or as a basis for judgment (State Compensation Insurance Fund v. Superior Court (2010) 184 Cal. App. 4th 1124, 1131) . Because there is but one complaint in a civil action, the filing of an amended complaint moots a motion directed to a prior complaint (State Compensation Insurance Fund v. Superior Court (2010) 184 Cal. App. 4th 1124, 1131) . Thus, once an amended complaint is filed, it is error to grant summary adjudication on a cause of action contained in a previous complaint (State Compensation Insurance Fund v. Superior Court (2010) 184 Cal. App. 4th 1124, 1131) .

These points and authorities may be submitted by any party to oppose a motion for summary adjudication of a cause of action on the ground that a superseding pleading has rendered the opposing party's motion moot.

A motion for summary adjudication must proceed in all procedural respects as a motion for summary judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(f)(2)]. Hence, any opposition to a motion for summary adjudication must be served and filed not less than 14 days preceding the noticed or continued date of hearing, unless the court for good cause orders otherwise [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b)].

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated, including argument showing how a superseding pleading has rendered the opposing party's motion for summary adjudication moot.

[c] Related Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

In State Compensation Insurance Fund v. Superior Court (2010) 184 Cal. App. 4th 1124 , State Compensation Insurance Fund (the Fund) sued real party in interest in superior court to collect unpaid premiums the Fund claimed were owed for workers' compensation insurance policies. The original complaint included a cause of action for fraud. Asserting that the three-year limitations period in Code Civ. Proc. § 338(d) barred the fraud claim, real party in interest moved for summary adjudication of that cause of action. The Fund later filed a first amended complaint that included expanded fraud allegations. Real party in interest did not file an amended motion in response to the first amended complaint, and did not renotice its original motion. The superior court granted the motion for summary adjudication, ruling that there was undisputed evidence that the Fund was on notice of the alleged fraud more than three years prior to the filing of this action. The Fund initially filed a petition for writ of mandate in the Court of Appeal, which the court denied as premature. After receiving the superior court's final order on the motion for summary adjudication, the Fund filed a new petition to which real party in interest filed a preliminary opposition. The Court of Appeals filed an order issuing an alternative writ of mandate. Counsel informed the court that the superior court had declined to comply with the alternative writ and had elected instead to show cause. Real party in interest filed a return to the alternative writ, and the Fund filed a reply (184 Cal. App. 4th 1124, 1127-1129) .

The Court of Appeal granted the petition for writ of mandate. The court found that the first amended complaint superseded the prior complaint, and that it raised new issues of fact regarding when the statute of limitations began to run on the fraud claim. The first amended complaint alleged a cause of action for fraud in which real party in interest and others conspired to avoid paying the proper premium for real party in interest's policies, which continued long after real party in interest was notified that its policies would be cancelled (184 Cal. App. 4th 1124, 1130-1134) .

- Points and authorities supporting [see §§ 222.40, 222.41, 222.60, 222.80, 222.100, 222.120] and opposing [see §§ 222.81, 222.121] contentions relating to the creation of a suretyship.

- Points and authorities supporting [see §§ 222.140, 222.160, 222.180] and opposing [see §§ 222.141, 222.161, 222.181] contentions about the existence of certain types of suretyship contracts.

- Points and authorities supporting [see §§ 222.200, 222.201, 222.220, 222.221] and opposing [see §§ 222.202, 222.222-224] contentions that a surety is liable.

- Points and authorities supporting [see §§ 222.320 -222.323] and opposing [see §§ 222.324, 222.325] contentions relating to the availability of relief to the surety and creditor.

The related concept of "accommodation parties" to negotiable instruments [see Com. Code § 3419] is addressed in Ch. 166, Negotiable Instruments. This chapter focuses on suretyship contracts, and does not address statutory bonds and undertakings, which are controlled by Code Civ. Proc. §§ 995.010-996.560.

PART I. INTRODUCTION

22-222 California Points & Authorities § 222.02

§ 222.02 Governing Law

Suretyship is governed by Civ. Code §§ 2787-2855. The statute of limitations in an action against a surety is contained in Code Civ. Proc. § 359.5. Additional statutes which might apply in particular cases are Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1050 (action by surety to compel principal to pay), 1055 (procedure for giving notice to surety to defend action), and 1912 (circumstances when surety bound on notice of action).

Civ. Code § 2809 (amount of surety's obligation) has been used to support the awarding of attorney's fees [see Withers v. Bousfield (1919) 42 Cal. App. 304, 320, 183 P. 855] , costs [see McConnell v. Herbert (1934) 2 Cal. 2d 66, 70-71, 38 P.2d 781] , and interest [see Burns v. Massachusetts etc. Ins. Co. (1944) 62 Cal. App. 2d 962, 146 P.2d 24] when an action has been brought against the surety to enforce the suretyship contract.

Consumer contract guaranties are governed by the Consumer Contract Awareness Act of 1990 (Civ. Code § 1799.200 et seq.), particularly Civ. Code § 1799.206.

CHAPTER 222 SURETYSHIP
PART I. INTRODUCTION

22-222 California Points & Authorities § 222.03

§ 222.03 Parties to Suretyship Agreement

A suretyship obligation (sometimes referred to as a guaranty) is a tripartite relationship. The three parties involved are (1) the creditor (or the promissee or guarantee), who is the party to whom the obligation is owed; (2) the principal debtor (or the principal), who is the party originally liable on the obligation; and (3) the surety (or the guarantor), who is the party who guarantees the performance of the principal and is secondarily liable. The terms are often used interchangeably by the courts [see Civ. Code § 2787; Wiener v. Van Winkle (1969) 273 Cal. App. 2d 774, 786, 78 Cal. Rptr. 761] .

CHAPTER 222 SURETYSHIP
PART II. FORMS
A. General Definition Of Suretyship

22-222 California Points & Authorities § 222.20

§ 222.20 Supporting Contention That Suretyship [Civ. Code § 2787] Exists--General Form

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

A SURETYSHIP RELATIONSHIP EXISTS BECAUSE _____ [name], THE SURETY, PROMISED TO ANSWER TO _____ [name], THE CREDITOR, FOR THE DEBT, DEFAULT, OR MISCARRIAGE OF _____ [name], THE PRINCIPAL.

A. Surety Is One Who Promises to Answer for Another. A surety (or guarantor) is one who promises to answer for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another, or hypothecates property as security therefor. The surety, or party secondarily liable, is part of a tripartite relationship with the party secured and the principal obligor (Civ. Code § 2787; see Butterfield v. Northwestern National Ins. Co. (1980) 100 Cal. App. 3d 974, 978-979, 161 Cal. Rptr. 280).

B. Suretyship Contracts Governed by General Rules Governing Interpretation of Contracts and Creation of Contract Preferred. Suretyship contracts are interpreted by the same rules as other contracts. Of two permissible constructions, one that establishes a valid suretyship contract is preferred to one that does not (Civ. Code § 2837; Superior Wholesale Elec. Co. v. Cameron (1968) 264 Cal. App. 2d 488, 493, 70 Cal. Rptr. 636).

C. Intent Rather Than Format Establishes Suretyship. No particular form of agreement is required to establish a suretyship contract. So long as the agreement establishes the intention to create a suretyship contract, no set words and form are required (Superior Wholesale Elec. Co. v. Cameron (1968) 264 Cal. App. 2d 488, 493, 70 Cal. Rptr. 636).

[Optional] D. Addition of Descriptive Words to Guarantor's Signature Does Not Nullify Guarantor's Personal Obligation. When a guaranty expressly describes a personal obligation on the part of the guarantor and raises no question about his or her individual liability, the addition of descriptive words to his or her signature does not, under the principle of descriptio personae, alter his or her personal obligation (Sebastian International, Inc. v. Peck (1987) 195 Cal. App. 3d 803, 809, 240 Cal. Rptr. 911).

[Add additional points and authorities, if appropriate, supporting the contention that defendant is liable as surety (see, e.g., §§ 222.40, 222.60, 222.80, 222.100, 222.120, 222.140, 222.160, 222.180, 222.200, 222.201, 222.220, 222.221)].

[2] Comments

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a party's contention that a suretyship relationship exists and that the surety is liable to plaintiff creditor for the default of the principal debtor. If the surety is otherwise challenging the fact that a surety relationship was created or that he or she is liable as a surety, counsel may desire to use additional contentions specific to the facts [see, e.g., §§ 222.40, 222.60, 222.80, 222.100, 222.120, 222.140, 222.160, 222.180, 222.200, 222.201, 222.220, 222.221]. Optional Paragraph D should be included in this form if the guaranty agreement expressly refers to the guarantor by name and specifies that he or she unconditionally and irrevocably guarantees the principal's obligation, but, in addition to signing the guaranty, the guarantor added to his or her signature words descriptive of him or herself.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of existence of the suretyship relationship. For example, this argument might arise in opposing a motion for summary judgment or an appeal premised on the argument that no suretyship relationship was created [see, e.g., Superior Wholesale Elec. Co. v. Cameron (1968) 264 Cal. App. 2d 488, 493, 70 Cal. Rptr. 636] . These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should show how the surety relationship was created and the capacity of each person to the agreement. For example, counsel might include a copy of a letter written by the surety, highlighting the surety's promise to pay the debt owed to plaintiff if the principal debtor remains unable to do so [see, e.g., Superior Wholesale Elec. Co. v. Cameron (1968) 264 Cal. App. 2d 488, 70 Cal. Rptr. 636] .

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For forms for use in revoking a continuing guaranty and for use in actions by and against sureties, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 538, Suretyship, Bonds, and Undertakings (Matthew Bender).

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 222.21 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Surety Is One Who Promises to Answer for Another

In Butterfield v. Northwestern National Ins. Co. (1980) 100 Cal. App. 3d 974, 161 Cal. Rptr. 280 , the State Board of Equalization, in an effort to collect unpaid sales taxes due from a corporation, brought an action on a guaranty agreement executed by defendant on behalf of the corporation and in favor of the State of California. Defendant's signature on the agreement had been acknowledged by a notary public. Defendant cross complained for indemnity against the notary public and her corporate surety for damages he might sustain by reason of the notary's alleged misconduct. Defendant alleged that he had never appeared before the notary. The trial court sustained the surety's demurrer to the cross complaint without leave to amend on the ground that the action against the surety was barred by the statute of limitations contained in former Code Civ. Proc. § 338(6) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 338(f)). Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 338(f)). Defendant contended that the language of former Code Civ. Proc. § 338(6), requiring action against a notary public on his or her bond, refers to a different bond than the surety bond the notary is required to file, and that sureties are not among those entitled to the protection of the statute. The court disagreed, saying that there was only one bond, the one issued by the surety, and it is under that bond that the surety may be sued by one injured as a consequence of defalcation by the notary. The court stated that, according to Civ. Code § 2787, a surety is one who promises to answer for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another, known as the principal. The suretyship relationship is a tripartite relationship between the party secured, the principal obligor, and the surety, or the party secondarily liable. Because of the nature of the relationship, an individual cannot be his or her own surety. The court noted that a notary's official bond is distinguishable from the usual surety bond only in that it applies to the acts of a public official (100 Cal. App. 3d 974, 978-979) .

[b] Suretyship Contracts Governed by General Rules Governing Interpretation of Contracts and Creation of Contract Preferred

In Superior Wholesale Elec. Co. v. Cameron (1968) 264 Cal. App. 2d 488, 70 Cal. Rptr. 636 , an electrical contractor owed a large sum of money to plaintiff. In consideration of plaintiff's forbearance of suit and recordation of a mechanic's lien, the electrical contractor, and others with whom he did business, executed and delivered to plaintiff a letter for the amount owed. Plaintiff later sued them all for the amount owed. The trial court found the letter to be a written guaranty and not merely a confirmation of the loan arrangement. The action against the electrical contractor was dismissed after he filed for bankruptcy and the trial court judgment was for plaintiff. Only defendant general contractor appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. Civ. Code § 2837 provides that a suretyship contract is to be interpreted by the ordinary rules of contract construction. That construction does not mean that words are to be distorted out of their natural meaning, or that by implication something can be read into the contract that it will not reasonably bear. But it does mean that the contract shall be fairly construed with a view to effect the object for which it was given and to accomplish the purpose for which it was designed. If the intention of the parties cannot be ascertained with certainty from the instrument itself, it may be necessary to look at the surrounding circumstances to determine its meaning (264 Cal. App. 2d 488, 492) . Letters of guaranty should not be construed with nice and technical care; instead, they should be construed according to the facts and circumstances accompanying the transaction. No particular form of agreement is required to establish a suretyship contract. So long as the agreement establishes the intention to create such a contract, no set words and form are required. Any uncertainty or ambiguity in a contract prepared by the guarantor will be most strongly interpreted and construed against it. Of two permissible constructions, one that establishes a valid contract is preferred to one that does not (264 Cal. App. 2d 488, 493). It is no defense that the original obligor filed bankruptcy following the execution and delivery of the written guaranty. A surety remains fully liable when the obligation of the principal is discharged in bankruptcy (264 Cal. App. 2d 488, 494).

[c] Intent Rather Than Format Establishes Suretyship

The facts and procedural background of Superior Wholesale Elec. Co. v. Cameron (1968) 264 Cal. App. 2d 488, 70 Cal. Rptr. 636 , are discussed in § 222.20[3][b].

[d] Addition of Descriptive Words to Guarantor's Signature Does Not Nullify Guarantor's Personal Obligation

In Sebastian International, Inc. v. Peck (1987) 195 Cal. App. 3d 803 , the court of appeal affirmed a summary judgment for plaintiff in an action by a sublessor of commercial premises to recover unpaid rent against a corporate officer of the sublessee, based on his personal guaranty of lease, which referred to the officer by name as "guarantor" and specified that he jointly, severally, unconditionally, and irrevocably guaranteed the corporation's rental obligations. The court held that the officer was individually liable under the guaranty for the corporation's unpaid rent and that the addition of the words "vice president" to his signature were merely descriptive and, as a matter of law under the principle of descriptio personae, did not alter his obligation (195 Cal. App. 3d 803, 809). The court said that the principle of descriptio personae is well recognized in California law and found the rationale of non-California cases persuasive (195 Cal. App. 3d 803, 808) . Quoting from out-of-state cases, the court said that a director, officer, or other agent, signing a corporate contract containing a promise in the proper form for an individual, is not relieved from personal liability by the addition to his or her name of terms such as "director," "president," or the like, and that these terms are regarded merely as descriptio personae, that is, a term descriptive of the person rather than the relationship in which he or she signs the agreement (195 Cal. App. 3d 803, 808) . Further quoting from a federal case quoting a New Mexico case, the court said that (1) where a writing in the nature of a contract is signed by a person and contains apt words to bind the person personally, the fact that to such signature is added such words as "trustee," "agent," "treasurer," "president," and the like does not change the character of the person so signing, but is considered as merely descriptive of the person; (2) the mere fact that a person sustains an agency relation to another does not prevent him from becoming personally liable on a contract with a third person; and (3), if it appears from the contract that he or she pledged his or her own credit or bound him or herself personally, the addition of such words as "president" and the like will be considered as mere descriptio personae (195 Cal. App. 3d 803, 808) .

The court further noted, however, that the guaranty before it would be rendered a nullity if the defendant had signed only in his corporate capacity, since the corporation was already bound under the terms of the sublease (195 Cal. App. 3d 803, 809) and, further, that the record contained no evidence that defendant had the authority as vice president to bind the corporation under the terms of the guaranty (195 Cal. App. 3d 803, 809 n. 2).

The court of appeal in Home Federal Savings & Loan Assn. v. Ramos (1991) 229 Cal. App. 3d 1609, 284 Cal. Rptr. 1 , affirmed a judgment for the lender against an individual guarantor of a loan to a partnership. The borrower was a partnership having a corporation as the general partner. The signature line on the note referred to the individual defendant as "Ronald J. Ramos, President" of R/J Co. as general partner of Peacock Ridge, the development partnership. The guaranty agreement signature line was prepared for signature by "Ronald J. Ramos (Guarantor)" but was signed by defendant as "R.J. Ramos, Pres." The court's function was to interpret the document consistent with the expressed intent of the parties under an objective standard, and the court concluded that a reasonable lender in plaintiff's position would not have made the loan if it intended only the general partner to be bound as guarantor. Thus, the addition of the abbreviation "Pres." after defendant's signature did not change the legal effect of the document as defendant's personal guaranty of the Peacock Ridge partnership's liability under the note (229 Cal. App. 3d 1609, 1613) . To interpret the document as a guaranty by the corporate general partner was objectively unreasonable because the corporation was already liable without the guaranty, and that interpretation would render the guaranty a nullity (229 Cal. App. 3d 1609, 1614) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Surety Is One Who Promises to Answer for Another

Trust One Mortgage Corp. v. Invest America Mortgage Corp. (2005) 134 Cal. App. 4th 1302, 37 Cal. Rptr. 3d 83 , was an action by a lender to enforce a loan broker's agreement with respect to what the broker would do for the lender's benefit in the event that the borrower defaulted on a loan. The lender contended that the broker had promised to indemnify the lender; the broker insisted that the promise was a guaranty. The court of appeal, concluding that the agreement was for indemnity, succinctly pointed out the distinction between an agreement to indemnify and a guaranty. Indemnity is a contract by which one engages to save another from a legal consequence of the conduct of one of the parties, or of some other person (Civ. Code § 2772). A surety or guarantor is one who promises to answer for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another, or hypothecates property as security therefor (Civ. Code § 2787). A guarantor makes a direct promise to perform the principal's obligation in the event that the principal fails to perform. An indemnitor does not make a direct promise to perform the principal's obligation; the indemnitor promises to reimburse the indemnitee for losses suffered or to hold the indemnitee harmless (134 Cal. App. 4th 1302, 1309) .

B. Suretyship Does Not Exist if No Promise to Answer for Debt of Another. When an instrument does not promise to answer for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another person, or does not hypothecate property as security for such a debt, default, or miscarriage, it does not come within the definition of a suretyship (*Civ. [2] Comments

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a party's contention that a suretyship relationship exists. The ground of the opposition is that the party alleged to be the surety in fact stands in a different relationship. This form may be combined with other forms of contentions for use in opposing the existence of or liability as a surety [see, e.g., §§ 222.22, 222.81, 222.121, 222.141, 222.181, 222.202, 222.222 -222.224].

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of the nonexistence of any suretyship. For example, this argument may arise in opposing a motion for summary judgment based on a defense specific to suretyships [see, e.g., Union Bank v. Winnebago Industries, Inc. (1975) 528 F.2d 95] . These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel might allege facts indicating that the person alleging to be a surety signed a promissory note as a comaker and never expressed an intention to be anything other than a comaker.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities set out in § 222.20.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Suretyship Does Not Exist if No Promise to Answer for Another

In Union Bank v. Winnebago Industries, Inc. (1975) 528 F.2d 95 , defendant was a manufacturer of recreational motor vehicles, selling through franchised retail dealers who often financed their inventory by flooring arrangements with banks. Under a flooring arrangement the dealer ordered and received vehicles from the manufacturer, the manufacturer's invoice was paid directly by the bank, and the dealer repaid that amount plus interest to the bank on reselling the vehicle at retail. Defendant prepared a repurchase agreement in which it promised to repurchase vehicles from plaintiff bank if a specific franchise dealer defaulted on its flooring arrangement. After the dealer defaulted, plaintiff notified defendant and demanded a repurchase. Plaintiff refused to comply with additional conditions defendant then attached to its repurchase, and liquidated the vehicles inventory, later bringing suit against defendant for the deficiency. Defendant removed the action to federal court because of diversity of citizenship. The district court granted plaintiff's motion for summary judgment. On a motion to reconsider, defendant offered affidavits alleging an intention on its part to create a surety relationship. The court rejected the motion.

The circuit court of appeal affirmed the summary judgment. Defendant contended that it was a surety pursuant to the repurchase agreement and was entitled to the protections afforded by statute, specifically Civ. Code § 2845 (creditor must proceed against principal if surety so requests), Civ. Code § 2849 (surety entitled to security held by creditor), and Civ. Code § 2819 (exoneration of surety). The court found that the contract was not a surety but simply a promise to repurchase the vehicles on the dealer's default enforceable according to its terms without reference to suretyship principals. The express terms of the agreement were clear and bore no intimation of any surety relationship. The manifest purpose of the repurchase agreement was to induce additional extensions of credit to defendant's retail dealers. It provided that if defendant failed to repurchase after demand, defendant would pay any deficiency. Nor did the agreement require defendant to stand in the shoes of the defaulting principal. Defendant's duty to repurchase was severely limited. The agreement does not purport to guarantee any debt the dealer might owe plaintiff. In effect, defendant guaranteed the value and resale of only a portion of plaintiff's collateral; it did not guarantee dealer's debt (528 F.2d 95, 98-99) .

In Birkhofer v. Krumm (1935) 4 Cal. App. 2d 43, 40 P.2d 553 , cert. denied, 305 U.S. 653, 59 S. Ct. 249, 83 L. Ed. 423 (1938) , a couple executed a promissory note secured by a deed of trust on property to plaintiff. Later they conveyed the property to defendant. The deed recited that it was subject to a deed of trust that defendant grantee assumed and agreed to pay. Plaintiff assigned his interest in the note and deed of trust to another who eventually assigned that interest to additional parties. After failing to make some of the payments, defendant requested an extension of time in the payment schedule, and executed an extension agreement guaranteeing the payment of the note and any extension. Defendant defaulted. Plaintiffs brought an action to secure judgment for the unpaid principal of the note against defendant. An attachment was issued and levied on defendant's property. Defendant moved to discharge the attachment on the ground that it was secured by a deed of trust on real property and that the security had not been exhausted or become valueless. The trial court granted the motion to discharge the attachment. Plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. It disagreed with plaintiffs' contention that the extension agreement was a guaranty. The instrument did not promise to answer for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another person, and did not come within the definition of a guaranty. It contained no promise to answer for the mortgagor or any other person. The court also noted that the agreement materially changed the terms of the promissory note signed by the original grantors without their knowledge or consent and released them from liability for any deficiency judgment. There can be no guaranty without any debt, default, or miscarriage of another for which to answer (4 Cal. App. 2d 43, 50-51) .

[b] Promise to Protect Promisee From Its Liability to Third Persons Constitutes Indemnity Contract

In Goodman v. Severin (1969) 274 Cal. App. 2d 885, 79 Cal. Rptr. 555 , cross complainants, owners of a small interest in the corporation in which they were officers, were indebted on a personal note secured by a pledge of their corporate stock. Unable to pay the entire debt, cross complainants obtained a loan from a bank, secured by the stock, written guaranties, and cross defendant's agreement to purchase the pledged stock at a price sufficient to discharge cross complainants' obligation in full if they defaulted. Cross complainants defaulted and the bank demanded that cross defendant purchase the remaining pledged stock. Cross defendant failed to do so, and the bank conducted a pledge sale. The bank brought action against cross complainants and joined cross defendant. Plaintiff's motion for summary judgment was granted. Cross complainants paid substantially all the awarded amount and then sought reimbursement from cross defendant. The trial court awarded the reimbursement plus interest and attorney's fees. Cross defendant appealed.

The court of appeal deleted the award of attorney's fees but otherwise affirmed the judgment. Cross defendant contended that the trial court erroneously found against his claim that he was merely a surety of cross complainants' obligation to the bank. In response, the court analyzed the agreement, noting that cross defendant undertook to purchase the stock so that the principal balance owed by cross complainants to the bank might thereby be liquidated. Inherent in such undertaking is a promise to purchase the pledged stock at a specified price, in an amount sufficient to satisfy the obligation due. In indemnity contracts the engagement is to make good and save another from loss on some obligation which he or she has incurred or is about to incur to a third person, and is not, as in suretyship, a promise to one to whom another is answerable. The essential distinction between an indemnity contract and a suretyship contract is that the promisor in an indemnity contract undertakes to protect his or her promisee against loss or damage through a liability on the part of the latter to a third person, while the undertaking of a surety is to protect the promisee against loss or damages through the failure of a third person to carry out obligations to the promisee. Cross defendant undertook to protect cross complainants against loss or damage through their liability to the third person bank. The facts did not come within the definition of a contract of suretyship since there was no failure of a third person to carry out obligations to the promisee (274 Cal. App. 2d 885, 892-893) . The agreement provided that cross complainants were to be entirely discharged from any further liability arising under the transaction. None of the circumstances implied the existence of a surety principal relationship whereby cross defendant could have compelled cross complainants to pay the obligation when due and before he had paid it himself, as allowed by Civ. Code § 2846 (274 Cal. App. 2d 885, 894) .

[c] Person Signing Note as Maker Is Presume to Be Comaker and Not Surety

In Holtman v. Ledford (1959) 170 Cal. App. 2d 481, 339 P.2d 150 , defendant owned an equity in two vehicles which he had purchased from plaintiff. A bank held an installment note secured by a chattel mortgage on both vehicles which was signed by defendant alone. Later defendant sold the vehicles to another. A new note and chattel mortgage were drawn and signed by that buyer and defendant. Plaintiff signed the new note and mortgage as guarantor, and the old note and mortgage were cancelled by the bank as paid in full. Ownership of the vehicles and the insurance policy were transferred to the buyer. The buyer later died in an accident that caused extensive damage to the vehicles after only one payment had been made. After plaintiff's demand to defendant for payment of the deductible and the note payments in default was ignored, plaintiff paid the deductible and took possession of the vehicles. He repaired them, paid off the note and mortgage, and sold them. He then brought action against defendant to recover the deficiency. Defendant contended that he was a surety and Civ. Code § 2845 applied to enable him to require his creditor to proceed against the principal. Defendant claimed he requested the bank to apply the insurance against the indebtedness and to let him sell the vehicles and pay the bank the difference. The trial court found that defendant signed the note as a maker and not as a surety. The trial court judgment was for plaintiff. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. When one signs a note with others as maker it will be presumed that they are comakers and are liable as such, not as principal and surety. Defendant sought to refute this presumption, but the evidence supported his being a maker. Defendant received consideration for the sale and for signing the note and further benefited because he was released from sole liability on the original note, and in effect substituted therefor a joint and several obligation with the buyer as another maker (170 Cal. App. 2d 481, 483) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Suretyship Does Not Exist if No Promise to Answer for Another

In Matthews v. Hinton (1965) 234 Cal. App. 2d 736, 44 Cal. Rptr. 692 , defendants, lessors of an unimproved tract of land, agreed to subordinate their title and to join in any deed of trust given to secure construction loans for improving the property. Sublessees gave defendants an assumption agreement guaranteeing performance of the lessee's obligation under the master lease. The sublessees then borrowed money secured by a deed of trust with power of sale, executed by themselves and defendants, all of whom were collectively designated as trustor. After the sublessees defaulted on the note, the creditor commenced sale proceedings. The sublessees filed an unsuccessful suit to enjoin the sale. The property was sold at a trustee's sale. Defendants filed a cross complaint alleging that the creditor had wrongfully sold the property and sought damages. Defendants claimed that the deed of trust was signed by them as sureties only, and before selling the property the creditor should have resorted to other assets of the sublessees, the principal debtors. The trial court granted the creditor's motion for summary judgment. The court of appeal affirmed. Defendants claimed they were sureties as a matter of law and that Civil Code provisions requiring that the property of the principal debtors be resorted to first before selling defendants' interests applied. The court said that their claim to suretyship protections and immunities was at variance with the role in which they contracted. The suretyship relation arises when two persons are under obligation to the same creditor, but one of them bears the ultimate burden of the obligation. The obligor ultimately responsible for the debt is the principal and the other is the surety. Whether one is a surety depends not so much on the relation with the creditor as on the relation with the principal debtor. In that tripartite relationship one of the obligors may be a surety in the sense that, if called on to pay the debt, he or she may indemnify himself or herself by an action against the primary obligor; nevertheless, so far as the creditor is concerned, that person contracts for a primary liability. One who signs a security document or other contract as a principal will be held as such even though the creditor knows that as between the signer and the fellow obligor, the former is only a surety (234 Cal. App. 2d 736, 740-741) . In signing as trustor, defendants as principals entered into a direct contractual relationship with the creditor for their own financial benefit. Having signed the trust deed as principals, they subjected their reversionary interest to primary liability (234 Cal. App. 2d 736, 741) . The creditor's knowledge of the relationship between defendant and the sublessees did not make sureties of the former (234 Cal. App. 2d 736, 742) .

In Torrey Pines Bank v. Hoffman (1991) 231 Cal. App. 3d 308, 282 Cal. Rptr. 354 , the bank sued the guarantors of a construction loan. The nominal borrower was a revocable living trust of which the defendants were trustors, trustees, and beneficiaries. At the time the deed of trust was executed to secure the construction loan, the defendants signed personal guaranties, in which they waived antideficiency protection [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 580a, 580b, 726, discussed in Ch. 555, Trust Deeds and Real Property Mortgages]. After a nonjudicial foreclosure, the bank commenced this action to enforce the personal guaranties. Judgment was entered for the defendants. The court of appeal affirmed. It is well established that when a primary obligor purports to take on additional liability as a guarantor, nothing is added to the primary obligation (231 Cal. App. 3d 308, 319-320) . The correct inquiry is whether the purported debtor is anything other than an instrumentality used by the individuals who guaranteed the obligation, and whether that instrumentality actually removed the individuals from their status as obligors under another name. The evidence in this transaction demonstrated substantial identity between the individual guarantors and the debtor trustees. The bank was presented with substantially the same financial information for both the family trust and the individual guarantors, as an inducement to make the loan. It had a copy of the family trust naming the defendants as their own trustees and beneficiaries (along with their children). Although the guaranties were signed by the defendants as individuals, the bank was well aware of their trustor/trustee/beneficiary capacities and should have been aware of the rules regarding the purpose, usefulness, and limitations of an inter vivos trust (231 Cal. App. 3d 308, 320) . The next inquiry was whether the debt incurred by the family trust actually imposed any obligations on the individual trustees. The loan was made on February 7, 1986, before enactment of Prob. Code § 18000, and was thus governed by prior case law. Under that law, trustees are personally liable on a contract unless the contract stipulates that the trustee is not liable. The trust itself was silent on the issue. Accordingly, these trustees were personally liable on the construction loan to the trust, and there is a significant identity between the individuals and their inter vivos trust during their lifetimes. The trust should be considered a "mere instrumentality" through which the defendants operated, but which never served to remove them from the status of primary obligors. Accordingly, they were the primary obligors and could not be liable as guarantors (231 Cal. App. 3d 308, 321) .

§ 222.22 Opposing Contention That Suretyship [Civ. Code § 2787] Exists--Letter of Credit Is Not Suretyship Obligation

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with a general contention form opposing the existence of a suretyship (see, e.g., § 222.21).]

NO SURETYSHIP RELATIONSHIP EXISTS BECAUSE _____ [name], THE ALLEGED SURETY, MERELY SIGNED A LETTER OF CREDIT. A LETTER OF CREDIT IS NOT A FORM OF SURETYSHIP OBLIGATION.

Letter of Credit Is Not Form of Suretyship Obligation. A letter of credit is not a form of suretyship obligation [Civ. Code § 2787; see Western Security Bank v. Superior Court (1997) 15 Cal. 4th 232, 246-247, 62 Cal. Rptr. 2d 243, 933 P.2d 507 ; DBJJJ, Inc. v. National City Bank (2004) 123 Cal. App. 4th 530, 534, 19 Cal. Rptr. 3d 904)].. For purposes of Civil Code Section 2787, the term "letter of credit" means a "letter of credit" as defined in Commercial Code Section 5102(a)(10), whether or not the engagement is governed by Commercial Code Section 5101 et seq. (letters of credit) (Civ. Code § 2787). Thus, a letter of credit is a definite undertaking that takes the form of a record that is authenticated by a signature or in accordance with the parties' agreement or the standard practice (see Com. Code §§ 5104, 5108(e)), by an issuer to a beneficiary at the request or for the account of an applicant (or in the case of a financial institution, to itself or for its own account), to honor a documentary presentation by payment or delivery of an item of value (Com. Code § 5102(a)(10)).

[2] Comments

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a party's contention that a suretyship relationship exists.

The ground of the opposition is that a letter of credit is not a suretyship obligation [Civ. Code § 2787]. These points and authorities may be combined with other forms of contentions for use in opposing the existence or liability of a surety [see, e.g., §§ 222.21, 222.81, 222.121, 222.141, 222.181, 222.202, 222.222 -222.224].

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of the nonexistence of any suretyship. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case; for example, facts indicating that the person alleged to be a surety signed a letter of credit and not a promissory note, guaranty of collection, or other form of suretyship obligation.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

In Western Security Bank v. Superior Court (1997) 15 Cal. 4th 232, 62 Cal. Rptr. 2d 243, 933 P.2d 507 the California Supreme Court examined the use of standby letters of credit as additional collateral for loan obligations secured by real property. At issue was whether the respective obligations of the parties to a letter of credit should remain unaffected by the antideficiency laws, regardless of whether those obligations arose before or after the enactment of Stats. 1994, ch. 611. In examining whether that chapter effected a change in the law or merely a clarification of the law, the Supreme Court also reviewed the legislative changes made by that chapter to Civ. Code § 2787. The legislation added a statement reflecting an established formal distinction: a letter of credit is not a form of suretyship obligation (see Stats. 1994, ch. 611, § 1). The court noted that generally a surety's liability for an obligation is secondary to, and derivative of, the liability of the principal. By contrast, the liability of the issuer of a letter of credit to the letter's beneficiary is direct and independent of the underlying transaction between the beneficiary and the issuer's customer (15 Cal. 4th 232, 246-247) . Therefore, as the amendment to Civ. Code § 2787 made clear, existing law viewed a letter of credit as an independent obligation of the issuing bank rather than as a form of guaranty or a surety obligation. The Court held that the legislature plainly intended that the enactment of Stats. 1994, ch. 611, did not effect a change in the law but simply clarified and confirmed the state of the law before the court of appeal's opinion in the case. The legislature manifestly intended that the respective obligations of the parties to a letter of credit should remain unaffected by the antideficiency laws, whether those obligations arose before or after the enactment of Stats. 1994, ch. 611 (15 Cal. 4th 232, 252-253) .

In DBJJJ, Inc. v. National City Bank (2004) 123 Cal. App. 4th 530, 19 Cal. Rptr. 3d 904 the court noted that a letter of credit involves at least three separate, independent transactions: "(1) the undertaking from the issuer of the letter of credit to the beneficiary; (2) the agreement between the issuer and the credit applicant; and (3) the underlying contract between the applicant and the beneficiary" (123 Cal. App. 4th 530, 534) .

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with a general contention form supporting the existence of a suretyship (see, e.g., § 222.20).]

A SURETYSHIP RELATIONSHIP EXISTS WHETHER OR NOT _____ [name], THE PRINCIPAL DEBTOR, HAS KNOWLEDGE OF OR HAS GIVEN CONSENT FOR THE SURETYSHIP. THE PRINCIPAL DEBTOR HAS NO PART IN THE ACTION ON THE SURETYSHIP CONTRACT.

A. Knowledge of Principal Debtor Is Not Required for Suretyship Contract. A person may become a surety even without the knowledge or consent of the principal (Civ. Code § 2788; Erickson Motor Co. v. Russell (1922) 57 Cal. App. 307, 308-309, 207 P. 50 ; see Kelley v. Goldschmidt (1920) 47 Cal. App. 38, 42-43, 190 P. 55).

B. Principal Debtor Has No Part in Action on Suretyship Contract. A suretyship contract is an independent contract, entirely independent of any contract of debt, the payment of which is thereby assured, and an action on a suretyship contract is on an independent contract of the surety which does not involve the principal debtor (Kelley v. Goldschmidt (1920) 47 Cal. App. 38, 42-43, 190 P. 55).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a party's contention that a suretyship relationship exists even when the principal debtor did not consent to the suretyship contract and had no knowledge of it.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of the principal debtor's consent not being necessary for the suretyship contract to exist. For example, this argument may arise in opposing a demurrer premised on the argument that no suretyship relationship exists [see, e.g., Erickson Motor Co. v. Russell (1922) 57 Cal. App 307, 207 P 50] . These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel might allege facts illustrating a creditor's assignment of an installment contract in which the creditor guaranteed the principal debtor's payments without the principal's knowledge.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Knowledge of Principal Debtor Is Not Required for Suretyship Contract

In Erickson Motor Co. v. Russell (1922) 57 Cal. App 307, 207 P 50 , plaintiff and defendant contracted for the sale of an automobile. Under the terms of the conditional contract, defendant was to make monthly payments and plaintiff could declare the entire purchase price to be due if payments were not made. Plaintiff assigned the contract to a security company and guaranteed the prompt monthly payments by defendant. After defendant failed to make several payments, the security company demanded that plaintiff pay the balance due. Plaintiff did so and then brought an action against defendant for reimbursement. The trial court overruled defendant's general demurrer and rendered judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. Defendant contended that plaintiff's complaint was a statement of a conclusion of law rather than facts alleging a cause of action. The court disagreed and explained that plaintiff, in addition to assigning the contract to the security company, guaranteed its prompt payment, and paid the amount due on demand after defendant failed to make the required payments. When plaintiff, as guarantor, paid to the creditor the amount due, it became subrogated to the rights of the creditor and to reimbursement of the amount paid. When a guarantor pays the principal's matured debt the guarantor has a right of action against the principal to be reimbursed for the amount paid, whether there is an express agreement by the principal to indemnify the guarantor or not. Civ. Code § 2788 states that a person may become guarantor even without the knowledge or consent of the principal (57 Cal. App 307, 308-309) .

In Kelley v. Goldschmidt (1920) 47 Cal. App 38, 190 P 55 , the principal debtor executed a promissory note payable on demand in favor of a bank. As a part of the same transaction, defendants executed a written guaranty, indorsed on the back of the note, in which they guaranteed the payment of the note and all expenses of collection. The bank assigned the note to plaintiff while more than half the note remained unpaid. Plaintiff brought an action against defendants as guarantors and the principal debtor, later dismissing the action against the principal. Plaintiff filed an affidavit for attachment after defendants did not pay, claiming that there was no security for repayment. Defendants alleged that after their guaranty, a corporation conveyed a trust deed on real property to secure the repayment, the bank accepted the declaration, and the property was still subject to that lien. A writ of attachment was issued and personal property levied by the sheriff. The trial court denied defendants' motion to discharge the attachment. Defendants appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The question on appeal was the meaning of the trust deed. Defendants contended that it was intended to secure payment not only of the promissory note, but also performance of the conditions of the guaranties endorsed on the note. The court disagreed, noting that former Civ. Code §§ 2787 and 2788 provided that a guaranty is a promise to answer for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another person and one may became a guarantor even without the knowledge or consent of the principal. A guaranty is an independent contract, entirely independent of any contract of debt, the payment of which is thereby assured, and an action on a guaranty is on an independent contract of the guarantor with which the principal debtor has nothing to do. The liability of the guarantor depends entirely on the terms of the guaranty contract and there is no privity, mutuality, or joint liability between the principal debtor and the guarantor. Because a guaranty creates an obligation wholly independent of that of the debt it is given to secure, there would have to be a clear and unequivocal intent expressed in a trust deed given to secure payment, when there has also been given a guaranty for the payment of the same debt, to find that the purpose of the trust deed, given subsequent to the guaranty, was to secure payment not only of the promissory note evidencing that debt but also to secure the performance of the guaranty. This is because the guaranty is itself security for the payment of the same debt. There was no intent clearly and unequivocally expressed in the trust deed. "Debts" meant the debts created by the note and was not intended to refer to and include the obligations created by the guarantors (47 Cal. App 38, 42-43) .

It should be noted that this case was written prior to the 1939 amendment to Civ. Code § 2787, which eliminated the distinction between sureties and guarantors. The result might be different had Civ. Code § 2850 (surety entitled to have principal's property applied first) been applicable.

[b] Principal Debtor Has No Part in Action on Suretyship Contract

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with a general contention form supporting the existence of a suretyship (see, e.g., § 222.20).]

A SURETYSHIP RELATIONSHIP EXISTS BECAUSE THE OFFER OF _____ [name], THE SURETY, TO GUARANTEE THE PERFORMANCE OF _____ [name], THE PRINCIPAL DEBTOR, WAS ACCEPTED BY _____ [name], THE CREDITOR, AND THE OFFER DID NOT CONTAIN ANY EXPRESS REQUIREMENT FOR NOTIFYING THE SURETY OF ACCEPTANCE. NOTICE OF ACCEPTANCE [OR THE SIGNATURE OF THE CREDITOR ON THE CONTRACT] IS NOT REQUIRED UNDER THESE CIRCUMSTANCES.

A. Absolute Suretyship Obligation Does Not Require Notice of Acceptance. Unless notice of acceptance is expressly required, an offer to become a surety may be accepted by acting on it, or by acceptance on other consideration. An absolute suretyship obligation is binding on the surety without notice of acceptance (Civ. Code § 2795; Davenport v. Stratton (1944) 24 Cal. 2d 232, 243-244, 149 P.2d 4 ; Bank of Santa Ana v. Molina (1969) 1 Cal. App. 3d 607, 617-618, 81 Cal. Rptr. 885).

[Optional] B. Suretyship Obligation Arises on Creditor's Acceptance, Not Necessarily on Creditor's Signature. The creditor must acccept the surety's guaranty, either by acting on it and extending credit, or by communicating its acceptance to the surety. Acceptance does not require that the creditor sign the suretyship contract (Skaggs-Stone, Inc. v. LaBatt (1960) 182 Cal. App. 2d 142, 143-144, 5 Cal. Rptr. 882 ; Hickey Pipe etc. Co. v. Fitzgerald (1934) 3 Cal. App. 2d 389, 390, 39 P.2d 472).

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a party's contention that a suretyship relationship exists and has existed from the time the creditor accepted the surety's offer to guarantee the principal debtor's performance [see Civ. Code § 2795].

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of existence of the suretyship relationship. For example, this argument may arise on a summary judgment motion or an appeal premised on the argument that no suretyship relationship exists [see, e.g., Bank of Santa Ana v. Molina (1969) 1 Cal. App. 3d 607, 617-618, 81 Cal. Rptr. 885] . These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel might illustrate the existence of the suretyship obligation by submitting a copy of the surety's written guaranty and present facts showing the creditor's acceptance of that offer by extending credit to the principal debtor.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Absolute Suretyship Obligation Does Not Require Notice of Acceptance

In Davenport v. Stratton (1944) 24 Cal. 2d 232, 149 P.2d 4 , the lessor of a commercial building had the lessee evicted and its possession restored when rental payments were in default. Thereafter the lessor exerted efforts to secure new tenants and was only partially successful. After giving the lessee credit for all payments or rents received, a substantial amount was claimed by the lessor to be due and unpaid. Defendant had guaranteed to pay the rent or any other sum to be paid by the lessee under the lease terms. Plaintiff, assignee of the lessor, brought action to recover the amount unpaid against defendant as one of the guarantors of the lease. The jury returned a verdict in favor of defendant and the trial court entered judgment accordingly. Plaintiff appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed. Among the issues addressed was defendant's contention that the lease was not physically attached to the guaranty at the time defendant signed the guaranty, and therefore he was released from any liability under the guaranty. The Court disagreed, explaining that the guaranty agreement expressly referred to both the lease and the later agreement and said that it was intended to apply to both documents. Defendant knew at the time of signing the guaranty that the lessor had required that it be guaranteed before it would deliver the lease. To permit him to deny annexation would be to perpetrate fraud. He was estopped to deny the plain and explicit terms of the document which he voluntarily executed (24 Cal. 2d 232, 243) . Defendant also contended that the judgment should be affirmed because he was never notified of his acceptance by the lessor as a guarantor of the lease. The guaranty was absolute in form and bound defendant without notice of his acceptance. Neither was defendant entitled to notice of the tenant's default (24 Cal. 2d 232, 243-244) .

In Bank of Santa Ana v. Molina (1969) 1 Cal. App. 3d 607, 81 Cal. Rptr. 885 , a construction and land development business applied for a loan of credit with plaintiff. Plaintiff asked for continuing guaranties. Each of the three partners of the construction company and defendant, a guarantor, signed a separate form of guaranty provided by plaintiff. Plaintiff made a loan, and payments were made until only a small portion remained unpaid. Thereafter plaintiff made additional loans to the construction company. When they were not paid, plaintiff brought an action for the monies owed, plus interest and attorney's fees. The trial court entered judgment against defendant. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. After the court addressed defendant's concern with the signature authenticity and delivery, it evaluated his contention that plaintiff had to notify him of its acceptance of the guaranty. Defendant claimed that plaintiff owed obligations to him and had affirmative duties of disclosure. He contended that plaintiff should have disclosed that defendant's continuing guaranty had been received, that the original obligation, which was limited as to purpose and time, was not repaid and extensions were requested, and that the obligation was paid down and was again being renewed. The court stated that since there was nothing to put plaintiff on notice that defendant would claim he had neither signed nor delivered the guaranty, it did not have any obligation to inform him it had received the guaranty. The record did not indicate that plaintiff had notice of any claim that the continuing guaranty applied only to the original loan. In the absence of anything putting plaintiff on notice that defendant requested that information, defendant's obligation was not affected by the fact that he was not informed that the original obligation had been reduced, that it was being renewed, and that new loans were being made (1 Cal. App. 3d 607, 617-618) .

[b] Suretyship Obligation Arises on Creditor's Acceptance, Not Necessarily on Creditor's Signature

In Skaggs-Stone, Inc. v. LaBatt (1960) 182 Cal. App. 2d 142, 5 Cal. Rptr. 882 , a public employees' association owed plaintiff money for merchandise furnished by plaintiff at its request. Defendant had guaranteed the account in writing. In the action brought by plaintiff to recover the sums owed, defendant's motion for change of venue was denied. Defendant appealed the order denying its motion.

The court of appeal affirmed the order The guaranty was prepared by plaintiff and forwarded to defendant in another county. Defendant signed it and returned it to plaintiff by mail. Defendant charged that when he signed the guaranty and deposited it in the mail the contract was complete. Although that is the general rule of offer and acceptance, suretyship contracts differ in that the creditor must accept the surety's guaranty, either by acting on it and extending credit, or by communicating its acceptance to the surety. There does not appear to be any way in which a creditor can extend credit in reliance on a guaranty until the creditor has knowledge of the guarantor's undertaking. The contract reflected that defendant anticipated that the creditor required notice of the undertaking since it was addressed to plaintiff at its place of business (182 Cal. App. 2d 142, 143-144) .

In Hickey Pipe etc. Co. v. Fitzgerald (1934) 3 Cal. App. 2d 389, 39 P.2d 472 , defendant signed and delivered a written instrument to plaintiff in which he guaranteed the payment by an oil company of credit for products received. The instrument contained a waiver of notice of acceptance, notice of sale, and indebtedness incurred, and notice of credit given. Plaintiff brought suit for monies owed. The trial court judgment was for plaintiff. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. Among defendant's contentions on appeal was that the instrument constituted a mere offer and of itself imposed no obligations on him. The court said that when plaintiff acted on it and extended the credit it became a completed contract. The acceptance by plaintiff was evidenced by the furnishing of goods on credit, and the instrument expressly waived note of acceptance. Nor was it essential to the validity of the contract that it be signed by plaintiff (3 Cal. App. 2d 389, 390) .

§ 222.60 Supporting Contention That Suretyship Exists--Liability of Surety Limited to Local Contract Terms [Civ. Code § 2799]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with a general contention form supporting the existence of a suretyship (see, e.g., § 222.20).]

BECAUSE _____ [name], THE SURETY, ASSUMED LIABILITY AS SURETY IN CONNECTION WITH AN UNSETTLED CONTRACT, HIS/HER/ITS LIABILITY IS LIMITED TO THE RISKS INCURRED UNDER THE TERMS OF SIMILAR CONTRACTS IN THE LOCALE IN WHICH THE PRINCIPAL CONTRACT IS TO BE PERFORMED.

Liability of Surety to Unsettled Contract Limited to Local Contract Terms. In an assumption of liability as surety in connection with a contract, the terms of which are not then settled, it is implied that its terms shall be such as will not expose the surety to greater risks than he or she would incur under those terms which are most common in similar contracts at the place where the principal contract is to be performed (Civ. Code § 2799).

[2] Comments

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a party's contention that because the surety assumed liability as a surety on an unsettled contract, the surety's liability is limited to the risks assumed in similar contracts in the locale in which the contract is to be performed [see Civ. Code § 2799].

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of the conditions or amount of the surety's liability. For example, this argument may arise in opposing an appeal premised on the argument that the surety assumed liability for more than is normally assumed in suretyship contracts. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel might allege facts illustrating that the surety assumed liability as surety on a building contract for which the penalty for noncompliance with the building time schedule was not settled. Counsel can determine the local penalty amounts on building contracts in that area to put a ceiling on the amount of the surety's liability.

§ 222.80 Supporting Contention That Suretyship Exists--Apparent Principal Is in Fact Surety [Civ. Code § 2832]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with a general contention form supporting the existence of a suretyship (see, e.g., § 222.20).]

_____ [Name], AN APPARENT PRINCIPAL, MAY SHOW THAT HE/SHE/IT IS IN FACT A SURETY, WITHOUT ANY SHOWING THAT _____ [name], THE CREDITOR, ACCEPTED HIM/HER/IT AS SURETY.

A. Apparent Principal May Show Real Existence as Surety. One who appears to be a principal, whether by the terms of a written instrument or otherwise, may show that he or she is in fact a surety, except as against persons who have acted on the faith of his or her apparent character of principal. It is not necessary to show that the creditor accepted him or her as surety (Civ. Code § 2832; Mead v. Sanwa Bank California (1998) 61 Cal. App. 4th 561, 571-572, 71 Cal. Rptr. 2d 625 ; Wexler v. McLucas (1975) 48 Cal. App. 3d Supp 9, 12-13 , 121 Cal. Rptr. 453).

[Optional] B. Proof of Surety Is Good Against One Who Does Not Come Within Good Faith Exception. The creditor's knowledge and acceptance of the signer's intention to be a surety, and not a principal or purchaser, enables the signer to show he or she is a surety rather than a principal. An agreement to pay only if the maker fails to pay, combined with the creditor's failure to come within the exception, support a finding of surety (Civ. Code § 2832; Wexler v. McLucas (1975) 48 Cal. App. 3d Supp 9, 12-13 , 121 Cal. Rptr. 453).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a party's contention that a suretyship relationship exists by showing that although a party appeared to be a principal, he or she was in fact a surety and that no one relied on his or her apparent character of principal [see Civ. Code § 2382].

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of existence of the suretyship relationship. For example, this argument may arise on a summary judgment motion or an appeal premised on the argument that no suretyship relationship exists [see, e.g., Wexler v. McLucas (1975) 48 Cal. App. 3d Supp 9 , 121 Cal. Rptr. 453] . These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel might include a factual description of how the party signed an instrument with the intent to be a surety, responsible for payment only on the maker's failure to pay, with the creditor's knowledge that the party was signing in that capacity.

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 222.81 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Apparent Principal May Show Real Existence as Surety

In Mead v. Sanwa Bank California (1998) 61 Cal. App. 4th 561, 71 Cal. Rptr. 2d 625 , the owners of property who signed a lease with a developer and executed a deed of trust in favor of the developer's construction lender sued the developer, the lender, and lender's assignee after the developer defaulted and the lender's assignee foreclosed on the owners' fee interest. As to the lender, the owners pleaded that they were sureties rather than principal obligors. The trial court dismissed their claim against the lender after a demurrer was sustained to each count alleged and the landowners did not amend their complaint. The owners appealed from the order of dismissal and from the post-judgment order awarding attorney's fees to the lender (61 Cal. App. 4th 561, 566) .

The appellate court held that the landowners sufficiently pleaded their status as sureties. Their allegations included the fact that the bank's officer considered them as third parties, the construction loan agreement and note were signed by the developer alone, and the deed of trust identified secured obligation as being that of developer and expressly provided that owners had no personal liability for debt. The complaint also alleged that the bank's officer considered the property owners to be third parties rather than principal obligors (61 Cal. App. 4th 561, 571-572) . The court also found, however, that the owners' complaint did not plead sufficient facts to constitute a cause of action against the lender (61 Cal. App. 4th 561, 572) .

In Wexler v. McLucas (1975) 48 Cal. App. 3d Supp 9 , 121 Cal. Rptr. 453 , defendant's son and his wife, in order to purchase furniture from plaintiff's assignor, had defendant sign the sale contract and security agreement. Defendant thought she was signing as cosigner, although the agreement did not designate her as cosigner. After defendant's son was not able to maintain the original payment plan, plaintiff agreed to accept a lesser amount per installment. Plaintiff later brought an action against defendant for money owed, waiving its security interest in the furniture when defendant's son failed to pay the balance due on the furniture after it was delivered. The trial court entered judgment against defendant. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. Among the issues addressed by the court was defendant's role as surety rather than principal. The court noted that Civ. Code § 2832 was applicable. That section provides that one who appears to be a principal by the terms of a written instrument may show that he or she is in fact a surety except as against persons who have acted on the faith of his or her apparent character of principal. There was no evidence to indicate that plaintiff or his assignor were within the exception (48 Cal. App. 3d Supp 9, 13) .

[b] Proof of Surety Is Good Against One Who Does Not Come Within Good-Faith Exception

The facts and procedural background of Wexler v. McLucas (1975) 48 Cal. App. 3d Supp 9 , 121 Cal. Rptr. 453 , are discussed in § 222.80[3][a]. In Wexler, the court of appeal held that defendant was a surety rather than the principal. The evidence indicated that defendant intended to be a surety and not a principal or purchaser even though she was asked to sign as cosigner. She neither bought nor possessed the furniture and only agreed to pay for it if her son failed to do so. Such agreement is that of a surety: one who promises to answer for the default of another (48 Cal. App. 3d Supp 9, 12-13) . The court found that Civ. Code § 2832 was applicable, and that there was no evidence to indicate that plaintiff or his assignor came within the exception of persons who have acted on the faith of the surety's apparent character as principal (48 Cal. App. 3d Supp 9, 13) .

_____ [Name], AN APPARENT PRINCIPAL, MAY NOT SHOW THAT HE/SHE/IT IS A SURETY AS AGAINST _____ [name(s)] BECAUSE _____ [THIS or THOSE] PERSON(S) _____ [HAS or HAVE] ACTED ON THE FAITH OF THE APPARENT CHARACTER OF _____ [name of apparent principal] AS PRINCIPAL.

A. One Who Appears to Be Principal May Not Prove Role As Surety Against Those Who Have Acted on Apparent Character of Principal. The maker of an instrument who appears by its terms to be a principal may not show that he or she is in fact a surety as against persons who have acted on the faith of the maker's apparent character of principal (Civ. Code § 2832; Beverly Hills Nat. Bank v. Glynn (1968) 267 Cal. App. 2d 859, 868-869, 73 Cal. Rptr. 808).

[Optional] B. Apparent Surety Must Prove Creditor's Knowledge of Surety Relationship. An apparent principal may show real character as surety only when the creditor knew that the third party (claimed to be the principal in fact) had agreed with the maker to pay the obligation to the creditor; [thus, a borrower's extension of credit using money loaned by the creditor, with the creditor's knowledge, does not make the borrower a surety as against the creditor] (Civ. Code § 2832; Beverly Hills Nat. Bank v. Glynn (1968) 267 Cal. App. 2d 859, 868-869, 73 Cal. Rptr. 808).

[2] Comments

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a party's contention that no suretyship relationship exists because the party attempting to show his or her character as surety appeared to be a principal and acted on the faith of this apparent character [see Civ. Code § 2832].

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of the inapplicability of Civ. Code § 2832 to allow an apparent principal to prove himself or herself to be in fact a surety. For example, this argument may arise on a motion for summary judgment or an appeal premised on the argument that no suretyship relationship exists [see, e.g., Beverly Hills Nat. Bank v. Glynn (1968) 267 Cal. App. 2d 859, 73 Cal. Rptr. 808] . These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Since an apparent principal may show his or her character as surety only against persons who have not acted on faith of his or her apparent character of principal, to disprove any claims of the existence of a suretyship, counsel must show reliance on the apparent character of principal. For example, counsel might describe a loan made in the principal's own name, the proceeds of which were given to the same person for whom the principal was acting as surety.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities set out in § 222.80.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] One Who Appears to Be Principal May Not Prove Role as Surety Against Those Who Have Acted on Apparent Character of Principal

In Beverly Hills Nat. Bank v. Glynn (1968) 267 Cal. App. 2d 859, 73 Cal. Rptr. 808 , a borrower had obtained two loans from plaintiff, and on application for a third, he was told that he needed a continuing guaranty before the loan would be granted. The borrower went to defendant, his attorney, and asked for his assistance. After a meeting among the parties, plaintiff loaned the borrower the money, and defendant executed a continuing guaranty that guaranteed all sums of money which plaintiff had advanced or thereafter lent to the borrower. Defendant did not read the guaranty, but later claimed that his understanding of the content was different from the actual guaranty. In addition to the loans made by plaintiff to the borrower, defendant made loans to him with money borrowed in his name from plaintiff. Plaintiff brought action against defendant on the notes he guaranteed as well as on his own promissory notes. Defendant contended that in regard to the notes in his name, he was actually a surety and not the principal. He also contended that plaintiff did not provide information as to the true state of the borrower's poor financial condition. The trial court held that defendant had no liability for the notes executed prior to the guaranty, due to lack of consideration. But the court found defendant was liable for a note that was a partial renewal of an earlier note, with the bank's forbearance on the original note constituting consideration. Defendant was also liable for all the notes after the guaranty that were in the borrower's name as well as in defendant's name. Both plaintiff and defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the portion of the judgment in favor of plaintiff, reversed the portion in favor of defendant, and vacated and remanded the portion assessing attorney's fees and costs. Defendant asserted that it was error to find that he was a maker and not a surety of the promissory notes executed by him as maker. Parol evidence is admissible by the maker of an instrument who appears by its terms to be a principal to show that the maker is in fact a surety, except as against persons who have acted on the faith of the apparent character of principal. Plaintiff's awareness that the monies were to be loaned by defendant to the borrower would not have made a difference. In the cases in which the doctrine of Civ. Code § 2832 has been applied, there was also evidence that, to the knowledge of the creditor, the third party (claimed to be the principal in fact) had agreed with the maker to pay the obligation to the creditor. Nothing in the evidence proffered concerning those notes went that far. The mere fact that a lender knew that the proceeds of the loan were to be used to finance the borrower in lending transactions of his or her own does not, as between the creditor and the borrower, make the latter a surety for the borrower's customers (267 Cal. App. 2d 859, 868-869) .

In defendant's second appeal the court of appeal affirmed these results [Beverly Hills Nat. Bank v. Glynn (1971) 16 Cal. App. 3d 274, 93 Cal. Rptr. 907] .

[b] Apparent Surety Must Prove Creditor's Knowledge of Surety Relationship

The facts and procedural background of Beverly Hills Nat. Bank v. Glynn (1968) 267 Cal. App. 2d 859, 73 Cal. Rptr. 808 , are discussed in § 222.81[3][a]. In Beverly Hills, the court of appeal found defendant liable for notes he had guaranteed as well as notes obtained in his own name to be lent to the person whose payment he guaranteed. The court said that plaintiff's awareness that the monies were to be loaned by defendant to the borrower would not have made a difference. In the cases in which the doctrine of Civ. Code § 2832 has been applied, there was also evidence that, to the knowledge of the creditor, the third party (claimed to be the principal in fact) had agreed with the maker to pay the obligation to the creditor. Nothing in the evidence proffered as to those notes went that far. The mere fact that a lender knew that the proceeds of the loan were to be used to finance the borrower in lending transactions of his or her own did not, as between the creditor and the borrower, make the latter a surety for the borrower's customers (267 Cal. App. 2d 859, 868-869) .

[EITHER]

A. Suretyship Obligation That Is Part of Original Obligation Does Not Require Distinct Consideration. When a suretyship obligation is entered into at the same time with the original obligation, or with the acceptance of the latter by the creditor, and forms with that obligation a part of the consideration to the creditor, no other consideration need exist (Civ. Code §§ 1605, 2792; Glickman v. Collins (1975) 13 Cal. 3d 852, 859-861, 120 Cal. Rptr. 76, 533 P.2d 204 ; *Gardena Valley Airport, Inc. v. All American Sports Enterprises, Inc. (1964) 230 Cal. Suretyship Obligation May Apply to Past Loans if Express Language Is Used. A suretyship obligation may apply to loans made prior to the execution of the suretyship obligation when the language of the obligation is express to this effect. [a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a party's contention that a suretyship relationship exists and is supported by consideration. The necessary consideration may be shown in a variety of ways. Paragraph A may be used when the suretyship obligation is part of the original obligation and no distinct consideration need be shown. Paragraph B sets forth the necessity for consideration when the suretyship obligation is not part of the original obligation and may be used in conjunction with the optional paragraphs. Optional Paragraph C may be used when the suretyship obligation applies to past loans. Optional Paragraph D may be used when the suretyship obligation was not executed contemporaneously with the underlying obligation. Optional Paragraphs E and F present presumptions of the presence of consideration, as indicated by a written suretyship obligation and benefit to surety, respectively.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of the requisite consideration to support the guaranty. For example, this argument may be used in support of a motion for summary judgment by plaintiff against a surety if there is a dispute as to whether there was consideration for the suretyship agreement [see, e.g., Sharman v. Longo (1967) 249 Cal. App. 2d 948, 58 Cal. Rptr. 79] . These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief. If the issue of lack of consideration is raised for the first time on appeal by the alleged surety, a creditor who adequately pleaded consideration in his or her complaint can argue that the lack of consideration should have been raised as an affirmative defense in the answer [see, e.g., Elster's Sales v. Longo (1970) 4 Cal. App. 3d 216, 221-222, 84 Cal. Rptr. 83] .

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel might illustrate the presence of consideration by describing the suretyship obligation as only one document in a single transaction, for which there was sufficient consideration.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Suretyship Obligation That Is Part of Original Obligation Does Not Require Distinct Consideration

In Glickman v. Collins (1975) 13 Cal. 3d 852, 120 Cal. Rptr. 76, 533 P.2d 204 , plaintiff's husband asked her for a divorce so he could marry defendant. They agreed to enter into an agreement whereby plaintiff would seek a divorce in Nevada, the property was divided, and monthly support payments were to be made by plaintiff's former husband. Before plaintiff would sign the agreement, out of concern that the support payments would not be made, she informed her husband and defendant that unless defendant agreed to guarantee the payment of the support obligations due, she would not sign the property settlement agreement. Defendant signed the guaranty agreement. A year after their marriage, defendant and plaintiff's former husband divorced and at that time the support payments to plaintiff ceased. Plaintiff obtained a judgment against her former husband for the past due payments. When that remained unpaid, plaintiff demanded the money from defendant, filing an action when defendant refused to pay. The trial court judgment was for plaintiff. Defendant appealed.

The Supreme Court modified the judgment by striking the sum for medical insurance payments, and otherwise affirmed. Defendant asserted that the guaranty agreement was unenforceable because there was no consideration, alleging that the stated consideration, plaintiff's execution of the property settlement agreement, was insufficient on two grounds. First, she claimed that since the property settlement agreement was dated earlier than the guaranty, it could not be consideration for the guaranty, asserting that even if they were contemporaneously executed, plaintiff was already obligated to comply with the terms of the property settlement agreement by virtue of the promise between the original spouses. The Court said that contention was without merit because the dates on the documents did not accurately reflect the chronology of their execution. The guaranty was actually executed before the property settlement and as part of the same transaction with it. The two instruments could be treated as if entered into contemporaneously and could serve as consideration for each other. When a suretyship obligation is entered into at the same time with the original obligation or with the acceptance of the latter by the creditor, and forms with that obligation a part of the consideration, no other consideration need exist [Civ. Code § 2792]. Defendant's second ground for alleging inadequate consideration was that plaintiff was already bound by the terms of the first agreement, and there was accordingly no new consideration. The Court responded that this is contradicted by the trial court's implied finding that there was sufficient new consideration. The obligations of both spouses under the final agreement differed from those under the original one, the new burdens thereby imposed on plaintiff and the new benefits thereby conferred on plaintiff's former husband furnished sufficient new consideration for defendant's promise to guarantee his undertaking. In any event, the written guaranty was itself presumptive evidence of consideration and defendant failed to sustain her burden of overcoming this presumption by showing an absence of new consideration in the second property settlement agreement. The Court said that consideration could also be found in plaintiff's statement that she would sign the settlement agreement and proceed with the divorce as soon as she received the executed guaranty. Her prompt execution of the final settlement agreement and filing for a divorce, bargained for in exchange for the guaranty, conferred sufficient benefit to satisfy the requirements of new consideration (13 Cal. 3d 852, 859-861) .

In Gardena Valley Airport, Inc. v. All American Sports Enterprises, Inc. (1964) 230 Cal. App. 2d 478, 41 Cal. Rptr. 93 , plaintiffs leased premises to defendant company, which then constructed a race track with necessary improvements at a substantial cost. The parties later executed another lease which cancelled the initial agreement and leased the premises for a longer time. This interim lease was to remain in effect until a 50-year lease, the escrow for which was opened the same day, was finalized. After defendant was in default in payment of rents and minimum guaranties, a promissory note was executed by defendant in favor of one of the plaintiffs for rentals due and advances made; the note was guaranteed by an officer of defendant. On the same day a chattel mortgage was also executed by defendant to secure payment of its note to the same plaintiff. Defendant defaulted and a renewal note was executed by defendant; the guaranty was continued and defendant's vice president joined as coguarantor. The renewal note was secured by a chattel mortgage. No payment of any kind was made on the renewal note and plaintiffs filed two actions. The property was attached and taken into the marshal's possession pursuant to a writ of attachment. After the marshal relinquished possession of the property, plaintiff in whose favor the note was executed took possession of it pursuant to the chattel mortgage to foreclose and sell. The actions were consolidated for trial. In the first action plaintiffs recovered monies due under the lease and defendant took nothing on its cross complaint for damages arising from plaintiffs' alleged conversion of personal property. In the other action plaintiffs were given judgment for the deficiency due on the promissory note against the coguarantors. The trial court denied any relief on defendants' cross complaint for damages resulting from alleged conversion. The appeals of defendants were consolidated.

The court of appeal affirmed. In addition to other arguments made, defendants asserted that the interim lease was executed without consideration. Civ. Code § 1614 provides that a written instrument is presumptive evidence of a consideration. Therefore, defendants had the burden to establish a want of consideration. Not only did defendants not meet that burden, but plaintiffs made an affirmative showing that the lease carried the consideration required by law. The 50-year lease and the interim lease were executed on the same day. Defendants conceded that there was consideration for the 50-year lease; since both instruments were manifestly executed in consideration of each other, there was also consideration for the interim lease. Civ. Code §§ 1614 and 1615 (burden of showing lack of consideration on party seeking to invalidate or avoid instrument) also govern the claim that there was no consideration for the undertaking of defendant's vice president as guarantor. Additionally, Civ. Code § 2792 provides that when a suretyship obligation is entered into at the same time with the original obligation, no other consideration need exist. The original note was cancelled by mutual agreement. Thereafter the renewal note was executed by defendant; since it was guaranteed on the same date by defendant's vice president, Civ. Code § 2792 was clearly applicable (230 Cal. App. 2d 478, 483-484) .

[b] Distinct Consideration for Suretyship Obligation

The facts and procedural background of Beverly Hills Nat. Bank v. Glynn (1968) 267 Cal. App. 2d 859, 73 Cal. Rptr. 808 , are discussed in § 222.81[3][a]. In Beverly Hills Nat. Bank, the court of appeal found defendant liable as a guarantor. The court said that a guaranty is not enforceable unless it was given for some consideration. That consideration may either be the contemporaneous or subsequent loaning of money, or the forbearance to collect on an obligation previously incurred. There was consideration for the guaranty as to all of the notes (267 Cal. App. 2d 859, 867-868) . Defendant also argued that the successive events were part of a single transaction and that the guaranty was not supported by consideration. The court found that there was consideration for the guaranty as applied to the note executed as a part of a single transaction (267 Cal. App. 2d 859, 867-868) .

In Sharman v. Longo (1967) 249 Cal. App. 2d 948, 58 Cal. Rptr. 79 , plaintiff, a professional basketball player and coach, was hired by a newly formed basketball team. During the negotiations plaintiff indicated he had to be assured that he would earn his former salary. The contract was evidenced by three documents, the third of which was a surety agreement. The surety agreement was written when it was discovered the cost of a bond was prohibitive, and it was agreed that the corporation would substitute a surety agreement signed by two persons. Defendant and another signed the third document, agreeing to serve as personal sureties for the promised salary. When the corporation become insolvent, plaintiff sought recourse under the guaranty agreement. The trial court granted plaintiff's motion for summary judgment and rendered judgment against both defendant and the other guarantor for the unpaid salary due plaintiff. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. Defendant contended that there was no consideration to support his promise of guaranty. He argued that a suretyship obligation entered into after the principal obligation has been incurred must have a new consideration to support it. Whether or not there is sufficient consideration is a question of fact and a guaranty entered into after the primary agreement has been executed and the consideration supporting it has passed requires a distinct consideration. The court said there was no issue of fact before the trial court to support that defense (249 Cal. App. 2d 948, 952) . Defendant did not allege any facts disputing plaintiff's statement that the guaranty was promised as part of the original contract of employment. Defendant alleged that he had no personal knowledge that plaintiff required a salary guaranty at the time of the original negotiations and that he was not a party to those negotiations. The court responded that was no defense against plaintiff's action on the guaranty (249 Cal. App. 2d 948, 953) . Since the agreement between plaintiff and the corporation required two guarantors, plaintiff was not bound to perform until the guarantors were supplied. Once defendant had signed the guaranty, plaintiff was no longer free to withdraw. This constituted the detriment to plaintiff which was the consideration for defendant's guaranty (249 Cal. App. 2d 948, 954) .

[c] Suretyship Obligation May Apply to Past Loans if Express Language Is Used

The facts and procedural background of Beverly Hills Nat. Bank v. Glynn (1968) 267 Cal. App. 2d 859, 73 Cal. Rptr. 808 , are discussed in § 222.81[3][a]. In Beverly Hills Nat. Bank, the court of appeal found defendant liable as a guarantor. The court explained its finding of consideration. The guaranty applied to all money which the bank had advanced; the language patently put defendant on notice that there had been earlier loans. The court referred to Bank of America v. Granger (1931) 115 Cal. App 210, 1 P.2d 479 , in which the court held that prior loans were within the guaranty because of the express language contained in the document. A guaranty may apply to loans made prior to the execution of the guaranty (267 Cal. App. 2d 859, 867-868) .

In Perry v. Cassidy (1959) 170 Cal. App. 2d 175, 338 P.2d 531 , defendant's husband borrowed money from a bank and executed a note in the bank's favor. After the note had become due, defendant's husband asked for another loan on an automobile he owned. The bank agreed to make another loan to defendant's husband if defendant would execute a continuing guaranty. She did so and the bank lent the money. The loan proceeds were applied to the note. After the automobile loan was paid, the note was assigned to plaintiff. Plaintiff brought an action against defendant and her husband to recover the balance due. The trial court judgment was for plaintiff. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. Defendant contended that the guaranty was executed without good and sufficient consideration. The court disagreed, stating that the guaranty unconditionally guaranteed any and all indebtedness of defendant's husband for any and all obligations already or later incurred and expressly stated that it was executed for a valuable consideration. By making the loan after presentation of the guaranty and delaying enforcement of the first note, the bank suffered detriment. The loan was consideration for the guaranty and the consideration would extend to the prior loan. The court cited Bank of America v. Granger (1931) 115 Cal. App 210, 1 P.2d 479 , a case involving similar facts in which the court applied Civ. Code § 1606 and held that by its delay in enforcing the collection of a prior loan, the bank suffered a prejudice which constituted a good consideration for the guaranty. An existing legal obligation resting on the promisor is a good consideration for a promise, to an extent corresponding with the extent of the obligation, but no further or otherwise (170 Cal. App. 2d 175, 176-177) .

[d] Suretyship Obligation as Part of Single Transaction Is Supported by Consideration Even Though Not Executed Contemporaneously With Primary Contract

In Donovan v. Wechsler (1970) 11 Cal. App. 3d 210, 89 Cal. Rptr. 669 , plaintiff executed a written contract with a construction company for the conditional sale of construction equipment. Plaintiff required that defendant, a major shareholder of the construction company, execute a personal guaranty of the sale. Defendant executed a written guaranty prior to the delivery of the equipment which specifically guaranteed all the terms of the sale and was applicable to successors or assigns. Plaintiff assigned the sale to a credit company with recourse. When the construction company defaulted, the credit company declared a default, repossessed the equipment, and reassigned the sale to plaintiff together with the repossessed equipment and the guaranty. Plaintiff sold the equipment and brought action against defendant on the guaranty for the difference between the sale price and the resale price. The trial court judgment was for plaintiff. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. Defendant argued many points, among them that the guaranty was without consideration. The court disagreed, explaining that no sale would have been consummated except for defendant's guaranty. Even assuming the guaranty was executed a few days later, as defendant contended, and not concurrently with the sale, there was ample consideration for the guaranty. The guaranty was an intrinsic part of the sale. The guaranty was made to plaintiff and its assigns. There is no case which prevents the assignment of a guaranty. That the credit company was not damaged because it recovered its purchase price from plaintiff did not prevent plaintiff from recovering on the sale. The recourse arrangement between plaintiff and the credit company required plaintiff to take the sale back from the credit company (11 Cal. App. 3d 210, 215) .

In Challenge-Cook Bros., Inc. v. Lantz (1967) 256 Cal. App. 2d 536, 64 Cal. Rptr. 239 , a corporation and plaintiff's assignor signed a three-year lease on a trencher and related equipment. The corporation made a security deposit and defendant signed a written guaranty in which he guaranteed its performance under the lease. After 10 payments the corporation defaulted. Plaintiff repossessed and resold most of the equipment. Plaintiff brought an action for damages and costs. The corporation defaulted in the action. Defendant alleged that the lease terminated with the repossession and that there was no consideration for his guaranty. The trial court judgment was for plaintiff. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. Defendant contended that there was no consideration for his guaranty because the lease was executed almost three weeks before he signed the guaranty, and the first month's rent had already been paid. He cited Civ. Code § 2792 to support his claim. The court noted that the record was silent as to the circumstances under which the lease and guaranty were executed. Plaintiff relied on Civ. Code §§ 1614 and 1615, which establish a presumption of consideration from the fact a contract is in writing and place the burden of showing a want of consideration on the guarantor seeking to invalidate the instrument. If the guaranty agreement was requested and given orally, contemporaneously with the agreement to lease, the provisos (although unenforceable as to the promise to answer for the debt of another until reduced to writing) were given for a consideration which in turn supported the subsequently executed written agreement. Defendant failed to meet the burden of coming forward with evidence in support of his defense (256 Cal. App. 2d 536, 539-540) .

[e] Written Suretyship Obligation Is Presumed to Be Supported by Consideration

The facts and procedural background of Glickman v. Collins (1975) 13 Cal. 3d 852, 120 Cal. Rptr. 76, 533 P.2d 204 , are discussed in § 222.100[3][a]. In Glickman, the Supreme Court held the guaranty to be supported by consideration. After citing specific examples of the consideration in the case, the Court noted that in any event, the written guaranty was itself presumptive evidence of consideration and defendant failed to sustain her burden of overcoming this presumption by showing an absence of new consideration in the second property settlement agreement (13 Cal. 3d 852, 859-861) .

The facts and procedural background of Challenge-Cook Bros., Inc. v. Lantz (1967) 256 Cal. App. 2d 536, 64 Cal. Rptr. 239 , are discussed in § 222.100[3][d]. In Challenge-Cook, the court of appeal found the guaranty to be supported by consideration. Plaintiff relied on Civ. Code §§ 1614 and 1615 for the presumption of consideration which arises when a contract is in writing, and the principle that the burden of showing a want of consideration is on the guarantor who is seeking to invalidate the contract. Defendant failed to meet the burden of coming forward with evidence in support of his defense that consideration was lacking (256 Cal. App. 2d 536, 539-540) .

[f] Surety Deriving Benefit From Transaction Presumed to Have Received Consideration

In Mortgage Guarantee Co. v. Chotiner (1936) 8 Cal. 2d 110, 64 P.2d 138 , a corporation executed a promissory note secured by a deed of trust. At the same time defendants, stockholders of the corporation, executed a written guaranty in which they waived notice of nonpayment and authorized extensions. The real property covered by the deed of trust was conveyed by the corporation to another. Prior to maturity, the note was transferred to plaintiffs. The real property was sold at a trustee's sale. Plaintiff brought an action for the stipulated deficiency. The trial court judgment was for defendants after finding, among other questions, that the guaranty was without consideration. Plaintiffs appealed.

The Supreme Court affirmed the opinion of the court of appeal that reversed the trial court judgment. One of plaintiffs' contentions was that the guaranty was executed coincidentally with the note, making a separate consideration unnecessary. The Court agreed with plaintiffs and said that inasmuch as the execution of the note and guaranty was coincidental, Civ. Code § 2792 provides that no other consideration need exist. Furthermore, the guarantors were officers and stockholders of the family corporation which executed the note, and therefore, they derived a benefit from the transaction, of itself a good consideration for the guaranty (8 Cal. 2d 110, 112-113) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Suretyship Obligation as Part of Single Transaction Is Supported by Consideration Even Though Not Executed Contemporaneously With Primary Contract

In Miller v. Smith (1960) 179 Cal. App. 2d 114, 3 Cal. Rptr. 492 , plaintiffs leased their deep-sea fishing business and accompanying real and personal property to defendant principal for five years. Defendant guarantor signed a guaranty on the lease dated 11 days after the date on the lease. Plaintiffs repossessed the business and brought an action for damages after defendant principal failed to perform the terms of the lease. Defendant guarantor alleged that the guaranty had been executed without consideration. On appeal the court reversed the trial court's judgment in favor of defendant guarantor. The principal was permitted to occupy the property as of the date on the lease, even though the lease was neither fully executed nor delivered on that date. There was a conflict as to whether the lease was fully executed and delivered before the execution of the guaranty or at the same time as the guaranty; if the guaranty was executed as a part of the lease transaction the consideration for the lease furnished consideration for the contract of guaranty (179 Cal. App. 2d 114, 116) . The court found that the principal's entry while the lease was still being negotiated and before it was finally executed and delivered was not attributable to the unexecuted lease but created a mere tenancy at will. The subsequent execution and delivery of the written lease operated to enlarge the rights of defendant principal by converting that tenancy at will to a term for years and hence was supported by consideration (179 Cal. App. 2d 114, 117) .

[b] Written Suretyship Obligation Is Presumed to Be Supported by Consideration

Note that in a case of first impression, the court of appeal in Rancho Santa Fe Pharmacy, Inc. v. Seyfert (1990) 219 Cal. App. 3d 875, 268 Cal. Rptr. 505 , held that the presumption of Civ. Code § 1614 is one affecting the burden of producing evidence and not the burden of proof (219 Cal. App. 3d 875, 884) . Once evidence is admitted sufficient to call the existence of consideration into question, the proponent of the written instrument, usually the creditor, retains the burden of proving consideration (219 Cal. App. 3d 875, 883) . The holding required reversal of a judgment in favor of the creditor and against the guarantors because conflicting and erroneous instructions had been given regarding the burdens of proof.

§ 222.120 Supporting Contention That Suretyship Exists--Exception to Requirement That Suretyship Obligation Be in Writing [Civ. Code § 2794]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with a general contention form supporting the existence of a suretyship (see, e.g., § 222.20).]

A SURETYSHIP OBLIGATION EXISTS EVEN THOUGH THE PROMISE IS NOT IN WRITING AND SIGNED BY _____ [name], THE SURETY, BECAUSE _____ [specify facts showing promise contained within exception in Civ. Code § 2794 to writing requirement, e.g., THE PROMISE WAS ON A CONSIDERATION BENEFICIAL TO THE PROMISOR] AND THUS IS NOT REQUIRED TO BE IN WRITING PURSUANT TO THE EXCEPTION CONTAINED IN SECTION 2794 OF THE CIVIL CODE.

[EITHER]

A. Writing Not Required if Promisor Received Property or Received Discharge From Obligation as Consideration. A promise to answer for the debt of another is deemed an original obligation and is not required to be in writing pursuant to Section 2793 of the Civil Code when the promise is made by one who has received property of another on an undertaking to apply it pursuant to that promise; or by one who has received a discharge from an obligation, in whole or in part, in consideration of that promise (Civ. Code § 2794(1)).

[AND/OR]

B. Writing Not Required if Creditor's Obligation Renders Promisor the Principal Debtor and Beneficiary of Promise the Principal's Surety. A promise to answer for the debt of another is deemed an original obligation and is not required to be in writing pursuant to Section 2793 of the Civil Code when the creditor parts with value, or enters into an obligation, in consideration of the obligation in respect to which the promise is made, in terms or under circumstances such as to render the promisor the principal debtor and the person in whose behalf it is made, the principal's surety (Civ. Code § 2794(2)).

[AND/OR]

C. Writing Not Required if Promise Is on Consideration of Cancellation of Antecedent Obligation and Substitution of New Promise. A promise to answer for the debt of another is deemed an original obligation and is not required to be in writing pursuant to Section 2793 of the Civil Code when the promise, being for an antecedent obligation of another, is made on the consideration that the party receiving it cancels the antecedent obligation, accepting the new promise as a substitute therefor (Civ. Code § 2794(3); California Viking Sprinkler Co. v. Pacific Indem. Co. (1963) 213 Cal. App. 2d 844, 852, 29 Cal. Rptr. 194).

[AND/OR]

D. Writing Not Required if Promise Is for Antecedent Obligation and on Consideration of Release of Property or Person. A promise to answer for the debt of another is deemed an original obligation and is not required to be in writing pursuant to Section 2793 of the Civil Code when the promise, being for an antecedent obligation of another, is made on the consideration that the party receiving it releases the property of another from a levy, or his or her person from imprisonment under an execution on a judgment obtained on the antecedent obligation (Civ. Code § 2794(3)).

[AND/OR]

E. Writing Not Required if Promise Is on Consideration Beneficial to Promisor, as Determined by Main Purpose of Promisor. A promise to answer for the debt of another is deemed an original obligation and is not required to be in writing pursuant to Section 2793 of the Civil Code when the promise is on a consideration beneficial to the promisor, whether moving from either party to the antecedent obligation, or from another person. A consideration is beneficial to the promisor when the leading and main purpose of the promisor is to subserve some purpose or interest of his or her own (Civ. Code § 2794(4); Schumm v. Berg (1951) 37 Cal. 2d 174, 187-188, 231 P.2d 39 ; Farr & Stone Ins. Brokers, Inc. v. Lopez (1976) 61 Cal. App. 3d 618, 621-622, 132 Cal. Rptr. 641).

[AND/OR]

F. Writing Not Required if Paid Factor Undertakes to Sell Merchandise and Act as Surety. A promise to answer for the debt of another is deemed an original obligation and is not required to be in writing pursuant to Section 2793 of the Civil Code when a factor undertakes, for a commission, to sell merchandise and act as surety in connection with the sale (Civ. Code § 2794(5)).

[AND/OR]

G. Writing Not Required if Promise Is Made by Holder of Instrument for Payment of Money During Transfer of Instrument for Payment of Debt or New Consideration. A promise to answer for the debt of another is deemed an original obligation and is not required to be in writing pursuant to Section 2793 of the Civil Code when the holder of an instrument for the payment of money, on which a third person is or may become liable, transfers it in payment to a precedent debt of his or her own, or for a new consideration, and in connection with that transfer enters into a promise respecting that instrument (Civ. Code § 2794(6)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a party's contention that a suretyship relationship exists even though the promise is not in writing because the obligation is within one of the exceptions in Civ. Code § 2794, deeming it to be an original promise and not requiring a writing. Alternative paragraphs set forth the various exceptions of Civ. Code § 2794 and may be used alone or in conjunction with each other. Paragraph A may be used when the promisor received consideration for the promise in the form of property or discharge from an obligation. Paragraph B may be used when the creditor's consideration renders the promisor the principal debtor and the person on whose behalf the promise is made the principal's surety. Paragraphs C and D may be used when the promise is made for an antecedent obligation of another, and has as its consideration either the cancellation of that obligation and substitution of the new promise or the release of property or person, respectively. Paragraph E may be used when the promise is on a consideration beneficial to the promisor. Paragraph F may be used when a factor, for a commission, sells merchandise, acting as a surety in connection with the sale. Paragraph G may be used when the promisor is the holder of an instrument for the payment of money and makes the promise in connection with the transfer of the instrument either in payment of an antecedent debt or for a new consideration.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that a writing is not required for the promise to answer for the obligation of another pursuant to an exception contained in Civ. Code § 2794. For example, this argument may arise in opposing a demurrer premised on the argument that no suretyship relationship exists [see, e.g., Schumm v. Berg (1951) 37 Cal. 2d 174, 187-188, 231 P.2d 39] . These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel might describe the promisor's main purpose in making the promise as being one to his or her own pecuniary benefit, as it would be if a major stockholder orally promised to pay the bills of the corporation to enable it to establish enough credit to retain a publicity campaign [see Civ. Code § 2794(4)].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Writing Not Required if Promise Is on Consideration of Cancellation of Antecedent Obligation and Substitution of New Promise

In California Viking Sprinkler Co. v. Pacific Indem. Co. (1963) 213 Cal. App. 2d 844, 29 Cal. Rptr. 194 , a general contractor in an Air Force construction project supplied its required bond for the benefit of all persons supplying labor or materials. The subcontractor, as principal, and defendant, as surety, issued the subcontract bond, whereby defendant agreed to hold the general contractor, as sole obligee under the bond, harmless from all loss sustained by reason of the subcontractor's failure to perform. Later the subcontractor and plaintiff executed a contract in which plaintiff agreed to supply labor and materials for the subcontractor. When plaintiff was not reimbursed for the labor and materials it had supplied, it gave notice to the subcontractor of the amount unpaid, notifying the general contractor as well. After the subcontractor filed for bankruptcy, plaintiff instituted suit in federal court against the general contractor and its surety to recover from them, by virtue of their bond, the claimed balance. A settlement was reached between defendant's agent and plaintiff which was later repudiated by defendant. Thereafter plaintiff filed a state action for breach of the oral agreement to compromise a claim. The trial court denied defendant's motion for a new trial and denied a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, rendering a verdict for plaintiff. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the order denying motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict and reversed the judgment. Although the reversal was based on an error on an agency issue, the court addressed all of defendant's contentions. Defendant contended that the action was barred by the statute of frauds, claiming that the promise was a special promise to answer for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another and Civ. Code § 1624 and former Code Civ. Proc. § 1973(2)) required it to be in writing, and that it was not within the exceptions in Civ. Code § 2794. The court agreed that it was a promise to take over the debt of another, but found that it came within the exception provided by Civ. Code § 2794(3), and was an original obligation of the promisor and did not need to be in writing. The exception provides that a promise to answer for the obligation for another need not be in writing when the promise, being for an antecedent obligation of another, is made on the consideration that the party receiving it cancels the antecedent obligation, accepting the new promise as a substitute therefor. The consideration alleged was the dismissal with prejudice of the federal court action. The effect of that dismissal would cancel any obligation embraced in that action which might be owed to plaintiff. A judgment for plaintiff in the general action would render defendant liable on its indemnity bond. Thus plaintiff agreed to cancel the antecedent obligation asserted in the federal suit by dismissing that suit with prejudice and to accept defendant's promise of compromise as a substitute therefor. A new promise which discharges another obligation by novation, or one in which no obligation of the other exists or is contemplated, is necessarily original since there can be no debt of another (213 Cal. App. 2d 844, 852) .

[b] Writing Not Required if Promise Is on Consideration Beneficial to Promisor, as Determined by Main Purpose of Promisor

In Schumm v. Berg (1951) 37 Cal. 2d 174, 231 P.2d 39 , plaintiff was the illegitimate son of an actor. When the actor refused to marry plaintiff's mother she demanded that he acknowledge his paternity or she would institute proceedings to have him declared the father. The actor, believing that a suit would be damaging to his social and professional standing, entered into an oral agreement with the mother for the support of plaintiff. The mother agreed to include the actor's first name in plaintiff's name. She married another man shortly before plaintiff was born. The actor made initial payments and then refused to comply with the agreement. When the actor died and a claim against his estate was rejected, plaintiff brought an action. The trial court sustained executors defendants' demurrer without leave to amend. Plaintiffs appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed. Among the other issues discussed in the case was the validity of the oral agreement. Defendants asserted that the oral contract was unenforceable because it was within the statute of frauds. They claimed that the contract was within the provision requiring a writing for a special promise to answer for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another. Their argument was premised on the idea that the actor promised to answer for the obligation of the mother's husband to support plaintiff; since they were married when plaintiff was born, plaintiff was presumed legitimate and the husband was liable for his support. The Court said that argument was predicated on the incorrect assumption that the promise was to plaintiff. The promise was an original promise to the mother. Among other reasons why the statute did not apply is the rule provided by Civ. Code § 2794(4), that a promise to answer for the debt of another is deemed an original obligation and not within the statute when the promise is on a consideration beneficial to the promisor, whether moving from either party to the antecedent obligation, or from another person. Whenever a promise to answer an antecedent obligation of another is made on a fresh consideration beneficial to the promisor, no matter from what source it may move, the promise is an original one and valid though oral; or, whenever the leading and main object of the promisor is not to become surety of another, but to subserve some purpose or interest of his or her own, the promise is not within the statute, although the effect of this promise may be to pay the debt or discharge the obligation of another. The mother's promise to name the child after the actor and to refrain from instituting an action was beneficial to the actor. This accords with the basic principal that the important question is whether the promise made is in fact an assumption of another's liability or the primary obligation of the promisor himself or herself. In the former case, the promise is within the statute and must be in writing, but in the latter case the promise is valid though verbal. The precise language used in making the promise is important, as a slight change in phraseology may have the effect of changing a promise, intended to be conditional and collateral, into an independent undertaking (37 Cal. 2d 174, 187-188) .

In Farr & Stone Ins. Brokers, Inc. v. Lopez (1976) 61 Cal. App. 3d 618, 132 Cal. Rptr. 641 , plaintiff insurance company provided comprehensive insurance to a company. When the company fell behind on its premium payments, plaintiff advanced money to the insurance carriers on the company's behalf. Defendants' children later assumed management of the company and defendant agreed to assist them. When defendant met with plaintiff to discuss the company's insurance obligations, it was agreed that the company would make regular payments on the past premiums and pay all future premiums when due. Defendant promised that if the company could not pay the premiums he would pay them on his own. The company made one payment; defendant sent a letter stating that he and his children were not associated with the company. Plaintiff brought an action for the amount owed on the premiums. The trial court judgment was for plaintiff. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. Defendant contended that the statute of frauds barred enforcement of his oral promise. Plaintiff relied on an exception provided by Civ. Code § 2794(4), which states that a promise to answer for the obligation of another is deemed an original obligation of the promisor and need not be in writing when the promise is on a consideration beneficial to the promisor, whether moving from either party to the antecedent obligation, or from another person. Defendant argued that the exception did not apply because there was no consideration beneficial to him because he received nothing of immediate and direct pecuniary benefit. The court disagreed. The forebearance of plaintiff to cancel the company's insurance policies was a detriment to plaintiff, which passed on the opportunity to obtain rebates on prepaid premiums, and a benefit to defendant's children, who had an ownership interest in the company. Defendant had a direct and personal concern in the welfare of his children and their economic venture. Additionally, his own business reputation was at stake since he assumed a position with the company. Whenever the leading and main object of the promisor is not to become surety of another but to subserve some purpose or interest of his or her own, the promise is not within the statue of frauds even though performance of the promise may pay the debt or discharge the obligation of another. The consideration required for Civ. Code § 2794(4) usually is, but need not be, pecuniary. The important question is whether the promise is only an assumption of another's liability or a new and primary obligation of the promisor (61 Cal. App. 3d 618, 621-622) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Writing Not Required if Promise Is on Consideration Beneficial to Promisor, as Determined by Main Purpose of Promisor

In Michael Distributing Co. v. Tobin (1964) 225 Cal. App. 2d 655, 37 Cal. Rptr. 518 , defendant was a major owner in a building corporation employed in building a major housing project. The corporation agreed to make its subcontractor's building supplies payments. After the corporation fell behind in payments as a result of financial difficulties, defendant orally promised that if plaintiff would continue to deliver the supplies, he personally would supply funds to the corporation to enable it to pay plaintiff in full for all merchandise. Plaintiff relied on that promise and continued to deliver the supplies, later bringing an action for monies owed. The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's judgment for plaintiff. Defendant urged that the statute of frauds applied since he promised to answer for the debt of another and that promise was not in writing. The court reviewed cases examining the application of Civ. Code § 2794(4) in rejecting defendant's argument. The court explained that an exception to the statute occurs when the oral promise is made for a consideration beneficial to the promisor, in which it appears that the promise was given merely for the promisor's own pecuniary or business advantage. In that case it is deemed an original obligation of the promisor and need not be in writing. The test for determining if the new promise is excluded from the statute depends on the main purpose or leading object of the promisor. Although a third party is the original obligor or the primary debtor, the promisor may have a personal, immediate, and pecuniary interest in the transaction and is therefore a party to be benefited by the performance of the promisee. In those cases the reason which prompted the statutory provision fails, and the courts will give effect to the promise. In evaluating the consideration of that contract, they will use the main purpose or leading object rule. Whenever a promise to answer an antecedent obligation o another is made on a fresh consideration beneficial to the promisor, no matter from what source it may move, the promise is an original one and valid though oral; or, whenever the leading and main object of the promisor is not to become surety of another, but to serve some purpose or interest of his or her own, the promise is not within the statute, although the effect of the promise may be to pay the debt or discharge the obligation of another. Defendant was benefited personally by the contract, and his promise to pay for the building materials was supported by consideration consisting of plaintiff's continued delivery of building supplies (225 Cal. App. 2d 655, 664-666) .

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a party's contention that no suretyship exists because the writing required to create a suretyship obligation does not exist and none of the exceptions contained in Civ. Code § 2794 apply [see Civ. Code §§ 1624(a)(2), 2793].

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of the nonexistence of a suretyship due to lack of a written instrument. For example, this argument may arise on a motion for summary judgment or an appeal premised on the argument that no suretyship relationship exists because of the lack of writing [see, e.g., Barnes v. Hartman (1966) 246

Cal. App. 2d 215, 54 Cal. Rptr. 514] . These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should allege facts describing an oral promise to pay the debts of another not supported by any writing.

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities set out in § 222.120.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Suretyship Obligation Must Be in Writing

In Barnes v. Hartman (1966) 246 Cal. App. 2d 215, 54 Cal. Rptr. 514 , plaintiff property owner entered into a long term lease with lessee. The lease contained provisions for the lessee to make improvements on the land and for plaintiff to subordinate his interest in the property to a construction loan so long as there was no personal obligation on his part. Plaintiff signed the trust deed which secured the promissory note. Defendant was the payee of the note and named beneficiary. After the lessee defaulted in its payments on the note, plaintiff sold the property, using some of the proceeds to pay the demands of defendant, including a specific amount which was interest charged in excess of the legal rate. Plaintiff brought an action in usury and contended that he was a borrower by reason of signing the loan agreement and further became a surety by reason of signing the trust deed. Defendant argued that no cause of action resided in plaintiff since he did not fall within the class of persons protected by the usury code provisions. The trial court judgment was for defendant. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. In addressing defendant's contention that plaintiff was not entitled to bring an usury action the court touched on the requirements of a guaranty contract. Plaintiff contended that if he was not a borrower, he was a surety for the loan and could maintain the action. Plaintiff never signed an instrument or document guaranteeing the repayment of the loan as required by Civ. Code § 2793. The lease contract under the terms of which plaintiff agreed to subordinate his remaining estate in the property was independent of the loan agreement between the lessee and defendant. As to plaintiff, any legal consideration was embraced within the lease agreement. Defendant did not request or require any consideration from plaintiff. Plaintiff, by signing the deed of trust, was satisfying a legal obligation owed by him and arising out of the lease contract between him and the lessee (246 Cal. App. 2d 215, 221-223) .

In Frudden v. Peppers Fruit Co. (1932) 126 Cal. App 544, 14 P.2d 874 , it was alleged that defendant corporation executed a written guaranty of the grocery account of an individual. The guaranty was revoked shortly thereafter, when the individual owed plaintiff money. Thereafter plaintiff continued to extend credit and received payments from the individual in excess of the balance due at the time of the revocation. When the individual failed to pay his account in full, plaintiff brought an action against defendant. Plaintiff sought an amount twice the amount owing at the time of revocation. Defendant denied that it executed any guaranty and alleged that the person who signed the purported guaranty did not have the authority to do so. The trial court judgment was for plaintiff. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. Civ. Code §§ 1624 and 2793 state that an agreement to answer for the debt of another must be in writing. As the one who signed the purported guaranty was an employee of defendant, his authority to execute the written agreement was also required to be in writing. Plaintiff contended that it was an original obligation of the corporation rather than an agreement to answer for the debt of another and therefore not required to be in writing by virtue of Civ. Code § 2794(2). The evidence did not support plaintiff's contentions. Civ. Code § 2794(2) had no application unless the agreement was one to render the party making the promise the principal debtor, and the person in whose behalf it is made his or her surety (126 Cal. App 544, 545-546) .

1. Continuing

22-222 California Points & Authorities § 222.140

§ 222.140 Supporting Contention That Continuing Suretyship Exists--Guaranty Is Continuing [Civ. Code § 2814]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with a general form, such as § 222.20, supporting the existence of a suretyship].

A CONTINUING SURETYSHIP EXISTS BECAUSE _____ [name], THE SURETY, GUARANTEED TO ANSWER FOR THE FUTURE LIABILITY OF _____ [name], THE PRINCIPAL, INCURRED UNDER SUCCESSIVE TRANSACTIONS THAT _____ [CONTINUE THE PRINCIPAL'S LIABILITY and/or RENEW THE PRINCIPAL'S LIABILITY FROM TIME TO TIME AFTER IT HAS BEEN SATISFIED].

A. Continuing Suretyship Obligation Establishes Surety's Continuing Liability for Principal's Future Transactions. A continuing suretyship obligation is one relating to a future liability of the principal under successive transactions that either continue liability or from to time to time renew it after it has been satisfied (Civ. Code § 2814; Central Building, LLC v. Cooper (2005) 127 Cal. App. 4th 1053, 1055, 26 Cal. Rptr. 3d 212 ; Berg Metals Corp. v. Wilson (1959) 170 Cal. App. 2d 559, 569-570, 339 P.2d 869).

[Optional] B. Standing Credit Is Continuing Suretyship Obligation. When, by the terms of an instrument, it is evident that the object is to give a standing credit to the principal, to be used from time to time either indefinitely or for a certain period, it is deemed a continuing suretyship obligation (Berg Metals Corp. v. Wilson (1959) 170 Cal. App. 2d 559, 569-570, 339 P.2d 869 ; Kierulff & Ravenscroft v. Koping (1928) 94 Cal. App 473, 479, 271 P 353).

[Optional] C. Continuing Suretyship Obligation May Be for Limited Amount. When a surety contains a limitation as to the amount for which the surety will be bound, but contains no limitation as to time, it will be construed to be a continuing suretyship obligation operative without limitation, except as to the amount of liability, until revoked. The limit has reference to the amount of the surety's liability, and not to the amount of the dealing between the principal and the creditor (Goldman v. Dangerfield (1929) 101 Cal. App 67, 72-73, 281 P 400 ; Lean v. Geagan (1912) 20 Cal. App 260, 262, 128 P 792).

[Optional] D. Suretyship Obligation for Prospective Transactions Is Implied to Be Continuing Unless Otherwise Specified. A continuing suretyship obligation contemplates a succession of liabilities for which, as they accrue, the surety becomes liable. It is prospective in its operation, and is intended to provide security in respect to future transactions, within certain limits. Unless the words of the suretyship fairly imply that the liability of the surety is to be limited, it is generally regarded as continuing until the suretyship obligation is revoked (Berg Metals Corp. v. Wilson (1959) 170 Cal. App. 2d 559, 570-571, 339 P.2d 869 ; see Kierulff & Ravenscroft v. Koping (1928) 94 Cal. App 473, 476, 271 P 353).

[Optional] E. Parol Evidence Admissible if Instrument Is Ambiguous. The character of the suretyship obligation is determined by reference to all relevant surrounding circumstances. Whether or not a guaranty is continuing must be determined from the language of the instrument, or, in case of ambiguity, by resort to parol evidence of the circumstances under which it was made (Berg Metals Corp. v. Wilson (1959) 170 Cal. App. 2d 559, 569-570, 339 P.2d 869).

[Optional] F. Principal's Payments Do Not Discharge Surety Unless Full Debt Is Discharged. If the contract is found to be a continuing suretyship obligation, payments by the principal do not discharge the surety unless they discharge the full debts to which the suretyship obligation attached (Berg Metals Corp. v. Wilson (1959) 170 Cal. App. 2d 559, 570-571, 339 P.2d 869 ; Goldman v. Dangerfield (1929) 101 Cal. App 67, 75, 281 P 400).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a party's contention that a continuing suretyship exists and the surety's liability is prospective and includes future transactions [see Civ. Code § 2814].

- Optional Paragraph B may be used when the object of the transaction was to grant a standing credit for the principal.

- Optional Paragraph C may be used when a limitation as to amount, but not duration, was included in the suretyship obligation.

- Optional Paragraph D may be used when the suretyship obligation was for future transactions for an unspecified duration.

- Optional Paragraph E may be used to support the admission of parol evidence as to the continuing nature of the obligation.

- Optional Paragraph F may be used when the principal made some payments, but not in an amount sufficient to discharge the full amount owed.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of the continuing liability of the surety. For example, this argument may arise in opposing a motion for a new trial premised on the argument that the suretyship was not continuing and defendant was not liable [see, e.g., Lean v. Geagan (1912) 20 Cal. App 260, 260-261, 128 P 792] . They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should present facts showing:

- That the suretyship obligation was signed by the surety.
- That the obligation was without time limitations.
- Whether or not a standing credit was provide.
- Whether or not the suretyship obligation was for a limited amount.

Counsel should also present any parol evidence of the circumstances under which the obligation was made.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Continuing Suretyship Obligation Establishes Surety's Continuing Liability for Principal's Future Transactions

In Central Building, LLC v. Cooper (2005) 127 Cal. App. 4th 1053, 26 Cal. Rptr. 3d 212 , a corporation which was often late making its rent payments on leased premises negotiated a lease termination agreement, a new lease, and personal guaranty agreements by the individual principal shareholders. The new lease and lease termination agreements specifically referenced the personal guaranties as additional consideration for the lease. The corporation's payments continued to be late almost every month. Before the lease term expired, the parties entered into a first amendment to the lease, which provided that except as modified all terms and conditions of the lease remained unchanged. After expiration of the extended term, the corporation remained on the premises pursuant to the holdover provision of the lease. The parties thereafter executed a second amendment to the lease, and except as modified, the original lease terms remained in effect. The corporation never paid rent after the date of the second lease amendment and the lessor filed a complaint for breach of contract against the guarantors and the corporation. Although the corporation admitted that it owed unpaid rent and other fees, the guarantors denied any liability. The trial court entered judgment against the corporation and the guarantors (127 Cal. App. 4th 1053, 1058) .

Defendants argued that the guaranty agreements did not extend beyond the term of the new lease, or into the period of the holdover tenancy, and that they should not be held for the corporation's admitted defaults. The lessor contended that the agreement was a continuing guaranty, applicable to future transactions, which remained in effect, and the court of appeal agreed. After reviewing the general principles of suretyship and guaranty and the terms of the governing documents, it concluded that the guaranty agreements applied to the lease as amended (127 Cal. App. 4th 1053). The court initially noted that guaranty agreements may be limited or continuing. In this case, the agreement specifically stated that it was a continuing guaranty. Although a continuing guaranty may be revoked at any time, this guaranty was expressly made irrevocable and had no expiration date. Furthermore, no limiting language was present in the guaranty agreements. The language in the relevant documents plainly made the guaranty applicable to modifications in the lease such as extensions of the lease term. The guarantors also expressly waived their statutory right under Civ. Code § 2819 to exoneration when the original obligation is altered (127 Cal. App. 4th 1053, 1060) . The court stated that even without the express term in the guaranty allowing modification, a modification of the underlying obligation generally does not revoke a continuing guaranty, but only modifies the guaranty in the same way that the underlying obligation is modified. The fact that the lease termination agreement expressly terminated the prior guaranty agreements demonstrated that the parties knew how to terminate a personal guaranty when that was their intent (127 Cal. App. 4th 1053). The appellate court therefore concluded that the guaranty agreements were continuing guaranties of performance under the lease that applied to the lease amendments, and affirmed the judgment (127 Cal. App. 4th 1053, 1065) .

In Berg Metals Corp. v. Wilson (1959) 170 Cal. App. 2d 559, 339 P.2d 869 , plaintiff's predecessor in interest was a company that acted as the broker for a business that bought and sold scrap iron and steel. The two companies made two written agreements by which plaintiff's predecessor became the sole broker for the business and provided for certain advances to be made by plaintiff's predecessor to the other business. The individual defendants, owners of the business, induced plaintiff's predecessor to make the two contracts and to furnish the additional funds. One of the contracts provided, among other things, that if the business failed to deliver specified securities, the individual defendants agreed to personally and individually indemnify plaintiff's predecessor and hold it harmless from any loss or damages. The other agreement stated that the business was in debt to plaintiff's predecessor. Defendants executing the agreements expressly agreed that the guaranty would pertain to advances up to $15,000; for anything beyond that amount they would not be responsible under the guaranty. Plaintiff eventually brought an action on the written guaranty. The trial court judgment was for plaintiff. Defendants appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court thoroughly examined the nature of a continuing guaranty. Defendants argued that the two instruments were to be construed as a single agreement, a guaranty limited to a single loan of $15,000, which was paid, resulting in a release of their obligation as guarantors. However, the court accepted plaintiff's contention that it was a continuing guaranty on which less than $15,000 was due at the time of suit, and that the guarantors were not released, even though the total of the fluctuating loan exceeded that amount at times. The guaranty agreement referred to loss for any money remaining unpaid pursuant to the loans up to $15,000. At the time the guaranty was made the indebtedness actually amounted to more than $15,000; defendants' contention would strangle their obligation at birth. There was never any intention that a single lump sum loan should be made (170 Cal. App. 2d 559, 568-569) .

The court states that question of whether a guaranty is a continuing one is to be determined by reference to all relevant surrounding circumstances. A continuing guaranty is one relating to a future liability of the principal under successive transactions which either continue liability or from time to time renew it after it has been satisfied. Whether or not a guaranty is continuing must be determined from the language of the instrument, or, in case of ambiguity, by resort to parol evidence of the circumstances under which it was made. Unless the words of the guaranty fail to imply that the guarantor's liability is to be limited, it will be regarded as continuing until the guaranty is revoked. A guarantor may limit the amount for which he or she will be liable, or the time for which the guaranty will run, or may limit liability to a single transaction between the principal debtor and the creditor, as distinguished from a continuing guaranty. However, a limitation on the amount for which the guarantor will be liable does not necessarily mean that the guaranty is not continuing. That type of limitation s not considered a condition to the extent of the credit to be given the debtor, breach of which would release the guarantor; and the guarantor may still be liable although the principal debtor has at various times contracted and paid debts equal or greater than the amount of the guaranty (170 Cal. App. 2d 559, 569-570) .

When the guaranty contains a limitation as to te amount for which the guarantor will be boun, but contains no limitation as to time, and there is nothing in the circumstances surrounding the execution to evince a contrary intention, it will be construed to be a continuing guaranty and operative without limitation, except as to the amount of liability, until revoked. The limit has reference to the amount of the guarantor's liability, and not to the amount of dealing between the principal and the guarantee, and the guarantor will be held liable to the extent of the guaranty, notwithstanding the fact that the principal debtor may have contracted debts to an amount equal to or greater than the sum named in the guaranty, and paid them. But when it is apparent, whether from the guaranty language or from language in connection with the circumstances, that the intention was to limit the guaranty to the amount specified for the first transaction, or series of transactions, it is not a continuing one and will not extend to other transactions after that limit has been reached. A continuing guaranty contemplates a succession of liabilities for which as they accrue, the guarantor becomes liable. It is prospective in its operation, and is generally intended to provide security in respect to future transactions, within certain limits. Unless the words in a which a guaranty is expressed fairly imply that the liability of the guarantor is to be limited, it is generally regarded as continuing until the guaranty is revoked. If the contract is found to be a continuing guaranty, the payment by the principal does not discharge the guarantor unless the principal discharges the full debts to which the guaranty attaches (170 Cal. App. 2d 559, 570-571) .

[b] Standing Credit Is Continuing Suretyship Obligation

The facts and procedural background of Berg Metals Corp. v. Wilson (1959) 170 Cal. App. 2d 559, 339 P.2d 869 , are discussed in § 222.140[3][a]. In Berg, the court of appeal affirmed plaintiff's judgment. The court explained what constitutes a continuing guaranty. When by the terms of an instrument it is evident that the object is to give a standing credit to the principal, to be used from time to time either indefinitely or for a certain period, it is deemed a continuing guaranty (170 Cal. App. 2d 559, 569-570) .

In Kierulff & Ravenscroft v. Koping (1928) 94 Cal. App. 473, 271 P. 353 , defendant executed a written guaranty to establish the credit of her husband in which she guaranteed his debts up to $500. In the course of business with plaintiff, defendant's husband, the principal, accrued a balance in excess of the amount of the guaranty. Plaintiff brought suit against defendant when the principal defaulted. The trial court judgment awarded plaintiff $500. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court identified the main issue as whether or not the guaranty was a continuing guaranty. If it was, defendant was liable even though her principal purchased goods of more than twice the amount specified as the extent of defendant's liability. A guaranty limiting the amount for which the guarantor will be bound, but without limitation as to time, and without circumstances to evince a contrary intention, will in general be construed to be a continuing guaranty and operative until revoked (94 Cal. App. 2d 473, 476) . When, by the terms of the guaranty, it is evident that the object is to give a standing credit to the principal, to be used from time to time, either indefinitely or for a certain period, it is generally deemed a continuing guaranty. Whether a contract of guaranty is a continuing undertaking is a question of intention which must be gathered from the instrument itself or from the course of dealings between the parties, or from both (94 Cal. App. 2d 473, 478) . The guaranty in question was executed simultaneously with an order for an amount less than one fifth the value of the guaranty. It was not reasonable to hold that the guaranty was executed simply to cover that specific order, or any other particular specific order. If that was not the case, then it necessarily followed that the purpose of the instrument was to establish the credit of the principal and charge defendant with liability for her dealings with plaintiffs to the extent of the guaranty (94 Cal. App. 2d 473, 479) .

[c] Continuing Suretyship Obligation May Be for Limited Amount

In Goldman v. Dangerfield (1929) 101 Cal. App. 67, 281 P. 400 , defendants executed a guaranty of payment for merchandise purchased from a company by the owner of a woman's dress store, up to a specified amount. After execution of the guaranty, the owner opened an account with the company and bought merchandise from time to time, purchasing merchandise in excess of the amount of the guaranty. Sometime later, defendants terminated the guaranty. Plaintiff, assignee of the company, brought an action to recover on the guaranty. The trial court found that the purported guaranty was not in fact a guaranty and entered judgment for defendants. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. The issue on appeal was whether the guaranty was a continuing guaranty. The evidence showed that the guaranty was not intended to cover a single purchase; by its terms it referred to all merchandise purchased, and thus Civ. Code § 2814 applied. The guaranty covered the successive transactions of the principal, the owner. Her liability was renewed from time to time as she purchased merchandise on the open account. There was no time limit in the guaranty. The only limitation was as to the extent of the obligation (101 Cal. App. 67, 71) . When a guaranty contains a limitation as to the amount for which the guarantor will be bound, but contains no limitation as to time, and there is nothing in the circumstances surrounding the execution of the contract to evince a contrary intention, it will be construed to be a continuing guaranty and operative without limitation, except as to the amount of liability, until revoked. The limit mentioned in defendants' guaranty referred to the amount of dealing between the principal and the creditor. The guarantor was to be held liable to the extent of the guaranty, notwithstanding the fact that the principal debtor may have, during the existence of the contract, contracted debts to an amount equal to or greater than the sum named in the guaranty and paid them. But when it is apparent, either from the language of the guaranty itself or from the language used in connection with the circumstances that the intention is to limit the guaranty as to the amount specified for the first transaction or series of transactions, it is not a continuing one and will not extend to other transactions after that limit has once been reached. There was nothing in the surrounding circumstances to show that the intention was to limit the guaranty to any particular transaction (101 Cal. App. 67, 73) . Whether a guaranty is a continuing undertaking is a question of intention which must be gathered from the instrument itself or from the course of dealing between the parties, or from both. If it appears that a future course of dealing for a definite time or a succession of credits to be given was contemplated by the parties, the contract will be construed as a continuing guaranty. The guaranty contemplated a succession of liabilities for which, as they accrued, the guarantor became liable. It was prospective in its operation, and was generally intended to provide security in respect to future transactions, within certain limits. As the court found the contract to be a continuing guaranty, the payments by the principal did not discharge the guarantor unless they discharged the full debts to which the guaranty attached (101 Cal. App. 67, 75) .

In Lean v. Geagan (1912) 20 Cal. App. 260, 128 P. 792 , defendant executed and delivered to plaintiff's predecessor a guaranty for the indebtedness of the principal for merchandise received. The guaranty provided that the amount due or to become due would at no time exceed $1000. Merchandise valued at $1100 was delivered to the principal. Plaintiff brought action against defendant for the amount of the guaranty. The trial court judgment was for plaintiff. Defendant's motion for a new trial was granted. Plaintiff appealed from that order.

The court of appeal reversed the order granting a new trial, and held the contract to be a continuing guaranty. The court said that the mere extension of credit beyond the sum named did not exonerate the obligor. When a guaranty contains a limitation as to the amount for which the guarantor will be bound, but contains no limitation as to the time, and there is nothing in the circumstances surrounding the execution to evince a contrary intention, it will be construed to be a continuing guaranty and operative until revoked. The guarantor will be held liable to the extent of the guaranty, notwithstanding the fact that the principal debtor may have contracted debts to an amount greater than the sum named in the guaranty. The limitation mentioned in the guaranty has reference to the amount of the guarantor's liability, and not to the amount of the dealing between the purchaser and the creditor. Any ambiguity in a guaranty contract, concerning the liability of the guarantor, will be resolved in favor of protecting the creditor to the extent of the sum named therein. Such a provision will be construed as a limitation on the amount of the guarantor's liability rather than as a condition on which any liability whatever attaches (20 Cal. App. 260, 262) .

[d] Suretyship Obligation for Prospective Transactions Is Implied to Be Continuing Unless Otherwise Specified

The facts and procedural background of Berg Metals Corp. v. Wilson (1959) 170 Cal. App. 2d 559, 339 P.2d 869 , are discussed in § 222.140[3][a]. In Berg, the court of appeal affirmed plaintiff's judgment. The court stated that a continuing guaranty contemplates a succession of liabilities for which, as they accrue, the guarantor becomes liable. It is prospective in its operation, and is generally intended to provide security in respect to future transactions, within certain limits. Unless the words in a which a guaranty is expressed fairly imply that the liability of the guarantor is to be limited, it is generally regarded as continuing until the guaranty is revoked (170 Cal. App. 2d 559, 570-571) .

The facts and procedural background of Kierulff & Ravenscroft v. Koping (1928) 94 Cal. App 473, 271 P. 353 , are discussed in § 222.140[3][b]. In Kierulff, the court of appeal affirmed the judgment for plaintiff. The court explained that even when the amount is limited, the liability under a guaranty will be regarded as continuing when, by the terms of the contract, it is evident that the object is to give a standing credit to the principal debtor, to be used from time to time either indefinitely or until a certain period has passed. The guaranty in question was executed simultaneously with an order for an amount less than one fifth the value of the guaranty. The court found that it was not reasonable to hold that the guaranty was executed simply to cover that specific order, or any other particular specific order. If that was not the case, then it necessarily followed that the purpose of the instrument was to establish the credit of the principal and charge defendant with liability for her dealings with plaintiffs to the extent of the guaranty (94 Cal. App 473, 479) .

[e] Parol Evidence Admissible if Instrument Is Ambiguous

Berg Metals Corp. v. Wilson (1959) 170 Cal. App. 2d 559, 339 P.2d 869 is discussed in § 222.140[3][a].

[f] Principal's Payments Do Not Discharge Surety Unless Full Debt Is Discharged

The facts and procedural background of Berg Metals Corp. v. Wilson (1959) 170 Cal. App. 2d 559, 339 P.2d 869 , are discussed in § 222.140[3][a]. In Berg, the court of appeal affirmed plaintiff's judgment. In reviewing the law governing continuing guaranties, the court stated that if a contract is found to be a continuing guaranty, the payment by the principal does not discharge the guarantor unless the principal discharges the full debts to which the guaranty attaches (170 Cal. App. 2d 559, 570-571) .

The facts and procedural background of Goldman v. Dangerfield (1929) 101 Cal. App. 67, 281 P. 400 , are discussed in § 222.140[3][c]. In Goldman, the court of appeal reversed the judgment in favor of defendant. The court reviewed the guaranty and the relation between the parties and found that the guaranty was continuing. The guaranty contemplated a succession of liabilities for which, as they accrued, the guarantor became liable. It was prospective in its operation and was generally intended to provide security in respect to future transactions, within certain limits. If a contract is a continuing guaranty, the payments by the principal do not discharge the guarantor unless they discharge the full debts to which the guaranty attached (101 Cal. App. 67, 75) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Continuing Suretyship Obligation Establishes Surety's Continuing Liability for Principal's Future Transactions

The court of appeal in Champion Home Builders Co. v. Sipes (1990) 219 Cal. App. 3d 1415, 269 Cal. Rptr. 75 , affirmed a judgment for the creditor against the surety based in part on a finding that the defendants' obligation was a continuing guaranty. The guaranty provided that it extended to "any and all indebtedness of Dealer as may be owing to you. This is a continuing Guaranty relating to any indebtedness, including that arising under successive transactions which shall either continue the indebtedness or from time to time renew it after it has been satisfied." The court found that the guaranty applied to successive security agreements, not just the one executed simultaneously with the guaranty (219 Cal. App. 3d 1415, 1424) .

22-222 California Points & Authorities § 222.141

§ 222.141 Opposing Contention That Continuing Suretyship Exists

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with a general contention form opposing the existence of a suretyship (see, e.g., § 222.21).]

THE OBLIGATION OF _____ [name], THE SURETY, UNDER THE SURETYSHIP CREATED WAS LIMITED TO _____ [A SPECIFIED TIME PERIOD and/or A SPECIFIC TRANSACTION and/or A SPECIFIC AMOUNT]. [ACCORDING TO THE CIRCUMSTANCES SURROUNDING THE EXECUTION OF THE AGREEMENT], IT WAS NOT THE INTENTION OF _____ [name], THE SURETY, OR _____ [name], THE PRINCIPAL, TO CREATE A CONTINUING UNLIMITED SURETYSHIP.

A. Liability of Surety Is Limited and Not Continuing. A surety's guaranty is not continuing as to successive transactions by the principal if the suretyship obligation does not continue the surety's liability and does not renew it from time to time after it has been satisfied. An obligation may be limited as to the time it will run or the amount for which the surety will be liable, or may be limited to a single transaction (see Civ. Code § 2814; Berg Metals Corp. v. Wilson (1959) 170 Cal. App. 2d 559, 569-570, 339 P.2d 869).

[Optional] B. Use of Parol Evidence to Determine Parties' Intentions if Suretyship Obligation Is Ambiguous. The trial court may resort to the circumstances surrounding the execution of a suretyship obligation in order to determine the parties' intentions as to whether or not the obligation is continuing (R. N. Nason & Co. v. Kennedy (1919) 40 Cal. App. 159, 162, 180 P. 349).

[Optional] C. Suretyship Obligation Is Presumed Limited Unless Intent to Create Continuing Obligation Is Unequivocal. An intention to guarantee payment on a continuing basis ought to appear unequivocally, and in doubtful cases the presumption ought to be against finding a continuing suretyship obligation (R. N. Nason & Co. v. Kennedy (1919) 40 Cal. App 159, 162, 180 P 349).

[Optional] D. Payments Should Be Applied to Guaranteed Purchase Before Subsequent Unguaranteed Purchase. When a creditor sells goods to a customer under a limited suretyship obligation, and afterwards sells other goods, the first money the creditor receives from the purchaser should be applied to the payment of the goods covered by the suretyship obligation (R. N. Nason & Co. v. Kennedy (1919) 40 Cal. App 159, 161-162, 180 P 349).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a party's contention that a continuing suretyship obligation exists. The ground of the opposition is that the obligation created was limited in some way, usually to a period of time, specific transaction, or specific amount, and thus was not a continuing suretyship obligation [see Civ. Code § 2814; Berg Metals Corp. v. Wilson (1959) 170 Cal. App. 2d 559, 339 P.2d 869 ; R. N. Nason & Co. v. Kennedy (1919) 40 Cal. App 159, 180 P 349] .

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of the specific and limited extent of the suretyship. For example, this argument may arise on a summary judgment motion or an appeal premised on the argument that the suretyship obligation was limited [see, e.g., R. N. Nason & Co. v. Kennedy (1919) 40 Cal. App 159, 180 P 349] . These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should allege facts describing how the guaranty was limited, for example, by limitations on time or amount, or on the transactions to which it applied. If the guaranty does not contain express limitations demonstrating the parties' intent, counsel should refer to any appropriate circumstances surrounding the execution of the instrument to indicate that the parties intended a limited guaranty [see R. N. Nason & Co. v. Kennedy (1919) 40 Cal. App 159, 162, 180 P 349] .

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities set out in § 222.140.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Liability of Surety Is Limited and Not Continuing

The facts and procedural background of Berg Metals Corp. v. Wilson (1959) 170 Cal. App. 2d 559, 339 P.2d 869 , are discussed in § 222.140[3][c]. Although the court of appeal found that the suretyship obligation in question was continuing, rather than limited, its description of a continuing obligation provides a distinct contrast to the elements of a limited obligation. Unless the words of the guaranty fail to imply that the guarantor's liability is to be limited, it will be regarded as continuing until the guaranty is revoked. A guarantor may limit the amount for which he or she will be liable, or the time for which the guaranty will run, or may limit liability to a single transaction between the principal debtor and the creditor, as distinguished from a continuing guaranty (170 Cal. App. 2d 559, 569-570) .

[b] Use of Parol Evidence to Determine Parties' Intentions if Guaranty Is Ambiguous

In R. N. Nason & Co. v. Kennedy (1919) 40 Cal. App 159, 180 P 349 , defendant executed a written guaranty in which she guaranteed the account of her son up to the sum of $750 for goods purchased. The guaranty was executed after defendant's son placed an initial order for goods with plaintiff's agent. Plaintiff said that it could not ship the goods unless payment was guaranteed and sent a guaranty form for defendant to sign. Plaintiff had thought the original order too large and had reduced it to $750. There was no arrangement or understanding for the purchase of goods other than the initial order which the guaranty was intended to cover. After the initial purchase, defendant's son from time to time did buy other goods from plaintiff, on which he paid all but $740. Plaintiff brought an action against defendant as guarantor for that amount. The trial court judgment was for defendant. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. Plaintiff contended that the guaranty was a continuing guaranty as defined by Civ. Code § 2814. Defendant contended that it was a guaranty for goods bought to the extent only of $750, and since that sum was paid by defendant's son, the obligation of the guaranty was discharged. While defendant guaranteed the account and agreed to pay if he did not, the guaranty was silent as to what particular account or bill it had reference to. There was nothing contained in the guaranty disclosing with certainty the parties' intention. By reason of that uncertainty the trial court properly resorted to the circumstances surrounding the execution of the instrument to determine the intent (40 Cal. App 159, 161-162) . The language of the guaranty was equally susceptible of two interpretations, and thus was ambiguous as to whether the guaranty was or was not continuing. Reviewing the parol evidence of the initial order, plaintiff's refusal to sell without a guaranty, the absence of an arrangement for a line of credit, and the absence of an understanding that other purchases were to be made or contemplated, the court held that it could be fairly understood and intended that the guaranty cover the initial order only (40 Cal. App 159, 162) .

[c] Guaranty Is Presumed Limited Unless Intent to Create Continuing Guaranty Is Unequivocal

The facts and procedural background of R. N. Nason & Co. v. Kennedy (1919) 40 Cal. App 159, 180 P 349 , are discussed in § 222.141[3][b]. In Nason, the court of appeal affirmed a judgment in favor of defendant guarantor. Addressing the issue of whether the guaranty was continuing or limited to a single transaction, the court noted that it ought to appear unequivocally that it was the intention of defendant to guarantee payment for goods to be purchased from time to time, and in every doubtful case the presumption ought to be against holding a guaranty to be continuing (40 Cal. App 159, 162) .

[d] Payments Should Be Applied to Guaranteed Purchase Before Subsequent Unguaranteed Purchase

The facts and procedural background of R. N. Nason & Co. v. Kennedy (1919) 40 Cal. App 159, 180 P 349 , are discussed in § 222.141[3][b]. In Nason, the court of appeal found that the guaranty was limited to the initial order and affirmed a judgment in favor of defendant guarantor. The court stated that when a creditor sells goods to a customer under a guaranty from a third person for payment, and afterwards sells other goods, the first money the creditor receives from the purchaser should be applied to the payment of the goods covered by the guaranty (40 Cal. App 159, 161-162) .

22-222 California Points & Authorities § 222.160

§ 222.160 Supporting Contention That Guaranty of Collectibility Exists--Guaranty That Obligation Is Good or Collectible [Civ. Code §§ 2800-2802]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with a general contention form supporting the existence of a suretyship (see, e.g., § 222.20).]

A GUARANTY OF COLLECTIBILITY, RATHER THAN A SURETYSHIP OBLIGATION, WAS CREATED BECAUSE _____ [name], THE GUARANTOR, GUARANTEED THAT THE OBLIGATION OF _____ [name], THE PRINCIPAL DEBTOR, WAS GOOD, OR COLLECTIBLE.

A. Guaranty of Collectibility Imports That Obligation Is Collectible by Usual Legal Proceedings. When a guaranty is to the effect that an obligation is good, or collectible, it imports that the debtor is solvent, and that the demand is collectible by the usual legal proceedings, if taken with reasonable diligence (Civ. Code § 2800; see Ohio Electric Car Co. v. Le Sage (1920) 182 Cal. 450, 454-455, 188 P 982).

[Optional] B. No Discharge for Failure to Proceed Against Principal if No Collection Would Have Resulted. A guaranty is not discharged by an omission to take proceedings on the principal debt, or on any collateral security for its payment, if no part of the debt could have been collected thereby (Civ. Code § 2801).

[Optional] C. Principal's Removal From State Equivalent to Insolvency. The removal of the principal from the state, leaving no property therein from which the obligation might be satisfied, is equivalent to the insolvency of the principal in its effect on the rights and obligations of the guarantor (Civ. Code § 2802).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a party's contention that a guaranty of collectibility was created, and that the guarantor is liable to the creditor for the amount of the obligation because the creditor has used due diligence in trying to collect from the principal debtor [see Civ. Code § 2800].

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of the existence of a guaranty of collectibility rather than a guaranty of payment or performance. For example, this argument may arise on an appeal premised on the argument that the obligation created was a guaranty of collectibility rather than a suretyship [see, e.g., Ohio Electric Car Co. v. Le Sage (1920) 182 Cal. 450, 188 P 982] . These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should describe the terms of the guaranty that indicate that the guarantor guaranteed that the obligation was good or collectible. For example, counsel could describe a guarantor's agreement to hold the creditor harmless from any loss sustained by reason of doing business with the debtor, implying the condition that the creditor must first pursue legal remedies against the principal debtor [see, e.g., Ohio Electric Car Co. v. Le Sage (1920) 182 Cal. 450, 188 P 982] .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Guaranty of Collectibility Imports That Obligation Is Collectible by Usual Legal Proceedings

In Ohio Electric Car Co. v. Le Sage (1920) 182 Cal. 450, 188 P 982 , plaintiff brought a complaint on five counts against several defendants. The action against the individual defendant was based on his guaranty of a contract between plaintiff and principal company. The contract between plaintiff and the principal company provided that the principal would have the exclusive right to sell plaintiff's electric automobiles. In the guaranty, defendant guaranteed to hold plaintiff whole and harmless from any and all loss or damage by reason of any transaction with the principal. When the debt remained unpaid, plaintiff brought an action. The trial court judgment was for plaintiff. Defendant appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed. The Court defined a guaranty of collectibility and distinguished it from a guaranty of payment or performance. Defendant's guaranty was not an unconditional guaranty and did not come within the rule described by Civ. Code §§ 2806 and 2807, that a guarantor of payment or performance is liable to the guarantee immediately on the default of the principal and without demand or notice. The guaranty clearly imported a condition, that plaintiff must suffer some loss or damage from the transactions guaranteed, in order to make the guaranty operative. Citing Civ. Code §§ 2800-2802, the Court described it as a guaranty of collection and imported that the debtor was solvent and that the demand was collectible by the usual legal proceedings, if taken with reasonable diligence. If those proceedings were not taken, the guarantor was discharged unless no part of the debt could have been collected thereby or unless the principal obligor had removed from the state, leaving no property from which the obligation might be satisfied. The Court made a distinction between a guaranty and guaranty of collection. In the first case the liability of the guarantor is fixed by the failure of the principal debtor to pay at maturity, or at the time when payment was guaranteed. In the second, no liability is incurred until after, by the use of due and reasonable diligence, the creditor has been unable to collect the debt from the principal debtor (182 Cal. 450, 454-455) .

§ 222.161 Opposing Contention That Guarantor Is Liable on Guaranty of Collectibility--Creditor Did Not Pursue Usual Legal Proceedings Against Principal With Reasonable Diligence [Civ. Code §§ 2800-2802]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with a general contention form opposing the existence of a suretyship (see, e.g., § 222.21).]

_____ [Name], THE GUARANTOR, IS NOT LIABLE BECAUSE _____ [name], THE CREDITOR, DID NOT USE REASONABLE DILIGENCE TO PURSUE THE USUAL LEGAL PROCEEDINGS TO COLLECT THE OBLIGATION OF WHICH THE GUARANTOR GUARANTEED THE COLLECTIBILITY.

No Liability Occurs Until Creditor Has Pursued Usual Legal Proceedings With Due Diligence. In a guaranty of collectibility, no liability is incurred until after, by the use of due and reasonable diligence, the creditor has been unable to collect the debt from the principal debtor. The mere nonpayment of a debt when it becomes due does not constitute loss or damage within the meaning of a guaranty of collection (Ohio Electric Car Co. v. Le Sage (1920) 182 Cal. 450, 454-456, 188 P 982 ; Citizens' Nat'l Trust & Sav. Bank v. Seaboard Surety Corp. (1935) 4 Cal. App. 2d 766, 769, 41 P.2d 956 ; see Civ. Code § 2800).

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that the guarantor is liable on a guaranty of collectibility. The ground of the opposition is that the creditor did not use reasonable diligence and pursue the usual legal proceedings to collect from the principal [see Civ. Code § 2800; Citizens' Nat'l Trust & Sav. Bank v. Seaboard Surety Corp. (1935) 4 Cal. App. 2d 766, 41 P.2d 956] .

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of the existence of a guaranty of collectibility rather than a guaranty of payment or performance and the necessity that the creditor pursue the usual legal proceedings to collect from the principal before the guarantor is liable. For example, this argument may arise on an appeal premised on the argument that the guarantor is not liable because the obligation created was a guaranty of collectibility rather than a suretyship [see, e.g., Citizens' Nat'l Trust & Sav. Bank v. Seaboard Surety Corp. (1935) 4 Cal. App. 2d 766, 769, 41 P.2d 956] . These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial brief. Apparently the usual legal proceedings required of the creditor prior to seeking recovery from the guarantor might include an action for breach of contract, or, if a money judgment has been rendered, an attempt to enforce the judgment against the debtor.

Counsel should insert argument in these form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel might describe a guaranty in which the guarantor conditioned its liability on the creditor's being unable to recover any of the amount owed directly from the principal.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Liability Occurs Until Creditor Has Been Unable to Collect Through Due Diligence

The facts and procedural background of Ohio Electric Car Co. v. Le Sage (1920) 182 Cal. 450, 188 P 982 , are discussed in § 222.160[3][a]. In Ohio Electric Car, the Supreme Court reversed the judgment finding defendant liable on its guaranty. The Court explained that due diligence by the creditor is required before the guarantor of collectibility will be found liable. It was a guaranty of collection and imported that the debtor was solvent and that the demand was collectible by the usual legal proceedings, if taken with reasonable diligence. If those proceedings were not taken, Civ. Code §§ 2800-2802 provide that the guarantor was discharged unless no part of the debt could have been collected thereby or unless the principal obligor had removed from the state, leaving no property from which the obligation might be satisfied. In a guaranty of collection, no liability is incurred until after, by the use of due and reasonable diligence, the creditor has been unable to collect the debt from the principal debtor (182 Cal. 450, 454-455) . The mere nonpayment of a debt when it becomes due is sufficient foundation for an action to recover the debt, but it does not constitute loss or damage within the meaning of a guaranty of collection (182 Cal. 450, 456) .

In Citizens' Nat'l Trust & Sav. Bank v. Seaboard Surety Corp. (1935) 4 Cal. App. 2d 766, 41 P.2d 956 , a corporation's note payable to itself and guaranteed by three individuals was transferred to plaintiff bank, together with defendant's bond. Naming the corporation and the individual guarantors as principals and itself as surety, defendant's bond provided that defendant was bound to the holders of the note on the condition that if the obligee collected the note from the principals or any of them, then the bond obligation would be void, otherwise it remained in full force and effect. When the note was due, plaintiff made demand on the maker and guarantors. Plaintiff notified defendant of the nonpayment and demanded payment from it as surety. When payment was not forthcoming, plaintiff brought an action against the maker and guarantors of the note. That judgment was for plaintiff. Defendants appealed that judgment but without filing any bond staying execution. That appeal was pending and undetermined. When again before the trial court, defendant claimed it was a guaranty of collectibility and not a guaranty of payment. The trial court judgment was for defendant, finding the action on the guaranty was prematurely brought. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. When the guaranty is of the collection or collectibility of the note, it is generally held to be a conditional guaranty; equivalent to a guaranty that the note is collectible by due course of law, and the guarantor is bound only on condition that the payee of the note use due diligence to collect the debt from the maker and give the guarantor notice of the principal's default. A guaranty of the collection of the amount of a debt as it becomes due is an undertaking that the debt will be paid if the principal is prosecuted with reasonable diligence. A guaranty of payment is very different from a guaranty of collectibility. Civ. Code § 2807 provides for the guarantor's liability immediately on the principal's default, without notice or demand. Civ. Code § 2800 provides that a guaranty of collectibility imports that the demand is collectible by the usual legal proceedings, if taken with reasonable diligence. (4 Cal. App. 2d 766, 768-769) . Defendant's obligation was a guaranty of collectibility, and the liability of defendant did not accrue immediately on the default of the principal. When there was no attempt to show that either the maker or the guarantor was insolvent, or that the debt could not be collected from them, the action on the guaranty was premature (4 Cal. App. 2d 766, 769) .

§ 222.180 Supporting Contention That Unconditional Suretyship Exists--Guaranty Is Unconditional [Civ. Code § 2806]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with a general contention form supporting the existence of a suretyship (see, e.g., § 222.20).]

THE SURETYSHIP CREATED IS ABSOLUTE AND _____ [name], THE SURETY, IS LIABLE WITHOUT CONDITION BECAUSE NONE OF THE CONTRACT TERMS OR SURROUNDING CIRCUMSTANCES IMPORT ANY CONDITION PRECEDENT TO THE SURETY'S LIABILITY.

A. Suretyship Is Deemed Unconditional Unless Condition Precedent Is Imported by Its Terms. A suretyship obligation is deemed unconditional unless its terms import some condition precedent to the liability of the surety. The facts and surrounding circumstances may be examined if there is some contract ambiguity as to the parties' intent in importing any condition precedent to the liability of the surety (Civ. Code § 2806; Cooke v. Mesmer (1912) 164 Cal. 332, 342, 128 P 917 ; Neumeyer v. Union Bank (1974) 43 Cal. App. 3d 873, 877-878, 118 Cal. Rptr. 116).

[Optional] B. Condition Precedent Will Not Be Implied Unless Suretyship Agreement Is Unclear. The liability of the surety depends entirely on the terms of the suretyship agreement, and when there is nothing confusing, ambiguous, or uncertain in the terms of the guaranty, conditions will not be implied (see Pacific M. & T. Co. v. Bonding & Ins. Co. (1923) 192 Cal. 278, 282-284, 219 P 972 ; Standard Oil Co. v. Houser (1950) 101 Cal. App. 2d 480, 486, 225 P.2d 539).

[Optional] C. Surety Is Liable When Complete Guaranty Is Received by Innocent Creditor. When the surety's undertaking is complete and regular on its face and the creditor has no notice of conditions imposed by the surety, the surety will be liable without regard to any conditions. The creditor may rely on the natural inference which would be drawn under the circumstances, as might be indicated by an omission of an item which appears unnecessary, when there is nothing imposing a duty of inquiry by the surety (Pacific M. & T. Co. v. Bonding & Ins. Co. (1923) 192 Cal. 278, 284, 219 P 972 ; Busse v. Pacific Employers Ins. Co. (1974) 43 Cal. App. 3d 558, 569-570, 117 Cal. Rptr. 718).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a creditor's contention that an unconditional suretyship exists and the surety is liable without the necessity for the occurrence of any alleged condition precedent [see Civ. Code § 2806]. Optional Paragraph B may be used to counter an attempt to imply a condition precedent when the suretyship agreement is clear. Optional Paragraph C may be used when a complete suretyship obligation was received by an innocent creditor who had no notice of any purported conditions and no duty to inquire after a missing term.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of the absolute nature of the suretyship. For example, this argument may arise on a summary judgment motion or an appeal premised on the argument that the suretyship obligation was absolute [see, e.g., Busse v. Pacific Employers Ins. Co. (1974) 43 Cal. App. 3d 558, 117 Cal. Rptr. 718] . These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should refer to the terms of the contract to show that the guaranty is unconditional. If there is any ambiguity in the contract, counsel should also refer to the facts and surrounding circumstances to demonstrate that the parties intended the guaranty be unconditional, or that the creditor did not have constructive notice of any unstated conditions.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Suretyship Is Deemed Unconditional Unless Condition Precedent Is Imported by Its Terms

In Cooke v. Mesmer (1912) 164 Cal. 332, 128 P 917 , plaintiff was the assignee of a bank. Defendants were guarantors of 36 promissory notes deposited with the bank as security for money loaned by the bank to the principal. Plaintiff brought an action to recover the amount due on the notes in an amount to discharge the obligations of the principal to the bank. The trial court judgment was for plaintiff for the full amount claimed. One defendant appealed the judgment and an order denying the motion for a new trial.

The Supreme Court modified the judgment by striking the award of attorney's fees and otherwise affirmed. In addition to other issues, the Court discussed the unconditional nature of the guaranty. The action was against defendants on their absolute and unconditional guaranty, endorsed on the back of each note. The Court said that the words "with all costs of collection, including reasonable attorneys fees" were words of extension rather than of limitation, and in no degree implied that the guaranty was to be effective only in the event that plaintiff was unable to collect from the makers. An action on a guaranty is one on an independent contract of the guarantor, with which the principal debtor has nothing to do. The Court noted defendant's unsuccessful attempt to apply Civ. Code § 2809 (surety's excessive obligation as reducible in proportion to principal's obligation) to limit its liability, and went on to discuss the unconditional nature of the obligation. Civ. Code § 2806 says that a guaranty is to be deemed unconditional unless its terms import some condition precedent to the liability of the guarantor. There was nothing in the terms of the guaranty or in the facts and circumstances of the case to import any condition precedent to the liability of the guarantors. It was not disputed that if the guaranty was an absolute and unconditional guaranty of payment, an effort to collect from the makers was not a prerequisite to the guarantors' liability (164 Cal. 332, 342) .

In Neumeyer v. Union Bank (1974) 43 Cal. App. 3d 873, 118 Cal. Rptr. 116 , plaintiff was the executrix for a deceased person, whose accommodation pledge of a corporation served as partial security for a loan made by defendant to the major shareholders. The pledge was embodied in an agreement contained in two documents. The agreement provided that defendants would give the deceased written notice of the debtors' default, and for a period of 30 days subsequent to that notice the deceased would have an option to purchase the loan. It also provided that during the 30-day period defendant would have unlimited right and privilege to exercise any and all rights and remedies available to it. When the default occurred, defendant provided the requisite notice and notified the deceased that a sale of collateral would be held. The deceased attended the sale after advising defendant that he was not going to buy the loan. Plaintiff brought an action, alleging that defendant breached its agreement when it held the sale of collateral less than 30 days after the notice, thereby exonerating the junior note pledged by the deceased, and resulting in damages to the deceased in the amount of the fair market value of the junior note. The trial court found that the parties intended that the 30-day option was expressly subordinate to defendant's right to foreclose on all collateral, including the stock and the note, and that defendant did not breach its agreement by failing to defer its foreclosure sale for 30 days. The trial court judgment was for defendant. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. Plaintiff raised several contentions on appeal, none of them successful. Plaintiff argued that the deceased was in the position of an exonerated surety. Disagreeing, the court referred to Civ. Code § 2806, which provides that a suretyship obligation is to be deemed unconditional unless its terms purport some condition precedent to the liability of the surety. The deceased's obligation was not conditional. The passage of the 30-day period was not a condition precedent to his obligation, in the event of a default, to the extent of the junior notes which he had pledged (43 Cal. App. 3d 873, 878) .

[b] Condition Precedent Will Not Be Implied Unless Suretyship Is Unclear

In Pacific M. & T. Co. v. Bonding & Ins. Co. (1923) 192 Cal. 278, 219 P 972 , plaintiff and a lumber company contracted for the company to provide its output of lumber from its lumber mill to plaintiff. The second paragraph called for plaintiff to accept a draft drawn on it by the company for a stipulated sum as payment on account. A bond was given to secure the faithful performance of the terms and conditions of that paragraph. It was executed by an authorized agent of the bonding company, and delivered to its agent with instructions to have the company sign as principal and then to deliver the bond to plaintiff. The agent delivered the bond to plaintiff without the company's signature. The company's draft on plaintiff was accepted by plaintiff. That draft was later changed to four smaller ones, the total value of which equaled the original sum. These drafts were negotiated to innocent purchasers for value before maturity by the company and were all paid by plaintiff at maturity, at which time plaintiff learned that the company had failed in its contract and was insolvent. Because of the company's default, plaintiff was compelled to purchase lumber in the open market to fulfill its agreements. Plaintiff brought an action for damages and the amount of the bond. The trial court found that the bond was not signed by the principal or delivered to plaintiff and that there was a material change in the terms of the agreement to the detriment of defendant. The trial court judgment was for defendant. Plaintiff appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed. Plaintiff raised three separate contentions on appeal. The Court agreed with its contention that the evidence did not support the finding that the bond was not properly executed and delivered. Plaintiff argued that the bond was binding on the surety regardless of the fact that it was not signed by the principal, because the principal was bound by the terms of the main contract which the bond was given to secure, and because the surety was bound by the acts of its agent in delivering the bond. Defendant claimed that its liability was conditioned on the principal's liability, that it was not a completed bond because the principal failed to sign it, and that it was the intention of the surety that the bond should not be effective and not be delivered until that signature had been affixed. The Court said that the bond was binding without the signature of the principal. It was a joint and several obligation guaranteeing the faithful performance by the principal of the terms and conditions of the main contract. That contract obligated the principal to perform certain specified acts and to comply with certain specified terms and conditions. The principal signed the main contract and thereby assumed the same obligations and liabilities as those covered by the bond; its signature on the bond would have added nothing to either its obligation or its liability. When the failure of a principal to sign the instrument affects the surety injuriously, the surety is not bound. But when the failure of a principal to sign the instrument in no way affects the rights or liability of the surety, the instrument is valid, and the surety is bound, unless the surety signed on the express condition that the principal should also sign before delivery of the instrument to the creditor, or the statute absolutely requires the principal to sign (192 Cal. 278, 282-284) . When the bond was delivered to the creditor without the principal's signature, the creditor did not have constructive notice of an condition attached to its execution by the surety. The natural inference which the creditor would draw under the circumstances would be that the principal's signature was omitted because it was not necessary (192 Cal. 278, 284) .

In Standard Oil Co. v. Houser (1950) 101 Cal. App. 2d 480, 225 P.2d 539 , defendant executed a continuing guaranty for the account of a freight company. The guaranty specified that it was for debts of whatever nature, and for goods sold and delivered, and was effective until the creditor received a written revocation. After the execution of the guaranty plaintiff issued two credit cards to the freight company. Defendant, a director of the company, had issued the guaranty when he was told it was needed in order to save money by buying gasoline on credit. After the freight company was in arrears on payment and filed for bankruptcy, plaintiff brought an action against defendant to recover the amount owed. The trial court judgment was for plaintiff. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. Defendant raised several contentions specific to the language of the guaranty. One of the contentions was that sales made by dealers other than plaintiff were limited to the terms of the credit cards, and that defendant was not liable because those terms had not been strictly observed. The court disagreed, noting that the guaranty was one of all charges of whatever nature. That terminology included without limitation all charges of any and every kind made by plaintiff against the freight company (101 Cal. App. 2d 480, 485-486) . Defendant contended that two separate types of sale were covered by the guaranty: charges for goods sold by plaintiff and charges for goods sold by independent dealers pursuant to the credit cards. The court disagreed. There was nothing confusing, ambiguous, or uncertain in the terms of the guaranty. There was no condition precedent that charges must have been made on the credit cards. The credit cards were not a part of the guaranty nor were they regarded by defendant as such since no credit cards were issued until after the guaranty had been signed. Plaintiff determined the terms to be inserted in the cards and defendant did not know what those terms would be when the guaranty was executed. The condition on which the cards might be used were subject to change by plaintiff from time to time and at any time. The terms and conditions of the credit cards did not enter into the guaranty (101 Cal. App. 2d 480, 486) . The intent of the parties to a suretyship contract is ascertained, first, by resort to the contract itself. If the intention of the parties cannot be ascertained with certainty from the contract, then resort may be had to the surrounding circumstances to determine its meaning. But if the contract is so precise and express that there can be no doubt as to the intention of its terms the court cannot do otherwise than follow the declared intention of the parties. Civ. Code § 2806 provides that a suretyship obligation is to be deemed unconditional unless its terms import some condition precedent to the liability of the surety (101 Cal. App. 2d 480, 487-488) .

[c] Surety Is Liable When Complete Guaranty Is Received by Innocent Creditor

Pacific M. & T. Co. v. Bonding & Ins. Co. (1923) 192 Cal. 278, 219 P 972 is discussed in § 222.180[3][b].

In Busse v. Pacific Employers Ins. Co. (1974) 43 Cal. App. 3d 558, 117 Cal. Rptr. 718 , plaintiff had made a loan to two individuals for the construction of a house on a lot they owned. The loan was secured by a deed of trust and a performance bond was executed. The individuals were partners in a construction company. An escrow was opened among various parties, including plaintiff and the individuals, whereby another dwelling would be built on another vacant lot owned by the individuals. The escrow instructions provided that plaintiff would recover the deed of trust on the property securing the first loan. From the proceeds in escrow plaintiff would be paid a small amount and on close of escrow plaintiff would be issued a new note in the remaining amount secured by a deed of trust on the second property. Plaintiff's loan was conditioned on a performance bond. When the individuals' construction company applied to defendant for the bond, defendant's agent said that it would not write a construction bond when the property owners and the contractor were the same people. Therefore, among the bond recitations was a statement that one individual as principal had entered into a written contract with the other individual as owner for the construction of a house and that the right of the mortgagee was conditioned on the owner's payments to the contractor as called for in their contract. No written contract between the individuals existed. When the residence was not finished and a foreclosure sale took place, plaintiff sustained damages, for which he brought an action against defendant on the bond. The trial court found that the bond was conditioned on the owner's making payments to the contractor as provided in the nonexistent contract, and because that condition was not met, defendant was not liable on the bond. The trial court judgment was for defendant. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed and remanded. The court stated that when a surety seeks to avoid liability on the ground that the undertaking was delivered conditionally and the conditions were not performed, one of two rules will be applied. When the surety's undertaking is complete and regular on its face and the creditor has no notice of conditions imposed by the surety, the surety will be liable; on the other hand, when the undertaking is so incomplete on its face as to suggest nonperformance of some condition imposed by a surety, it carries notice to the creditor and relieves the surety. When a surety signs an obligation regular on its face and turns it over to the principal on the condition others also sign it, the surety is bound even though it is delivered by the principal in violation of the condition if the guaranty is accepted by the creditor without notice of the condition (192 Cal. 278, 288-289) . In effect, defendant's bond was delivered to plaintiff who became the innocent creditor, without knowledge of the condition, the moment the escrow was closed and his consideration had been delivered to the individual contractor. The court cited Pacific M. & T. Co. v. Bonding & Ins. Co. (1923) 192 Cal. 278, 219 P 972 (discussed in § 222.180[3][b]), for the general rule that when a bond is delivered to the creditor without the principal's signature, the creditor does not have constructive notice of any condition attached to its execution by the surety. The natural inference which a creditor would draw under the circumstances is that the principal's signature was omitted because it was not necessary. The court will look to the face of the bond or the transaction itself to see if there is anything that would impose a duty on the creditor to ask the surety whether any conditions had been imposed before delivery made (192 Cal. 278, 289) .

§ 222.181 Opposing Contention That Unconditional Suretyship Exists--Guaranty Is Conditional [Civ. Code § 2806]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with a general contention form opposing the existence of a suretyship (see, e.g., § 222.21).]

THE SURETYSHIP CREATED IS CONDITIONAL AND _____ [name], THE SURETY, IS NOT LIABLE BECAUSE THE SPECIFIED CONDITION PRECEDENT HAS NOT OCCURRED.

A. Failure of Condition Precedent to Surety's Liability Precludes Recovery. When a suretyship contract stipulates a condition to the surety's liability, failure to comply with that condition will prevent recovery from the surety (Union Indemnity Co. v. Lang (9th Cir. 1934) 71 F.2d 901, 905-906 ; Schwab v. Bridge (1915) 27 Cal. App. 204, 206-207, 149 P. 603).

B. Intention to Create Condition Precedent. Parties may agree that any matter shall be a condition precedent, and if the words used in the contract are so precise, express, and strong that that intention only is compatible with the terms employed, a court can only give effect to that declared intention (Federated Mortgage Investors v. Hunt (1970) 7 Cal. App. 3d 371, 86 Cal. Rptr. 687 ; Schwab v. Bridge (1915) 27 Cal. App 204, 206-207, 149 P. 603).

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a surety's contention that the suretyship obligation was conditional, and since the condition did not occur, the surety is not liable [see Civ. Code § 2806].

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of the conditional nature of the guarantor's liability. For example, this argument may arise on a motion for summary judgment or an appeal premised on the argument that the suretyship obligation was conditional [see, e.g., Schwab v. Bridge (1915) 27 Cal. App. 204, 149 P. 603] . These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should include a description of the conditions to the surety's liability, such as the surety's liability only occurring if the note was owing and presented to him or her by a specified date.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities set out in § 222.180.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Failure of Condition Precedent to Surety's Liability Precludes Recovery

In Union Indemnity Co. v. Lang (9th Cir. 1934) 71 F.2d 901 , plaintiff, a general contractor, subcontracted with welders for the welding of a gas pipe line. In accordance with the subcontract, the welders furnished a faithful performance bond, executed by defendant. The bond provided that as a condition precedent to the right of recovery, the owner would notify defendant of any breach by the principal of the contract, and also of any act or omission which might cause a loss for which the surety might become liable immediately after that breach or act or omission became known to the owner. Both the bond and contract stated that time was of the essence. The subcontractor began work late, performed slowly, and eventually abandoned the project. Plaintiff was unhappy with the subcontractor's slow performance throughout the job, wrote advising it that it had failed to abide by the terms and specifications of the subcontract, and notified it that plaintiff was exercising its privilege to work on the job. Plaintiff sent defendant a copy of the notice; this was defendant's first indication of any failure of the subcontractor to perform. One month later plaintiff notified defendant that the subcontractor was in default and demanded payment of the extra payroll. Plaintiff brought an action to recover the cost of completing the subcontractor's work and the amount it paid for labor and material. The trial court judgment was for plaintiff. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. The court confined its inquiry to whether or not plaintiff failed to notify defendant of any breach by the subcontractor and of any act or omission which might have caused a loss for which the surety might become liable. The court observed that plaintiff had knowledge from the onset of the subcontractor's failure to perform in a timely manner and had reason to believe that it would not complete performance, but did not inform defendant for more than five weeks. Plaintiff asserted that defendant had not shown that it had been prejudiced because of lack of notice. The court concluded that the rule of strictissimi juris applies in the interpretation of conditions precedent in a suretyship contract. It said that to read into the contract the necessity for prejudice to the surety by failure to receive the requested notice would be to hold the surety beyond the express terms of the contract, to read something into the contract that it would not reasonably bear, and to impose a burden not clearly inferable from the language of the contract. When a suretyship contract stipulates that notice shall be given to the surety of the principal's default, failure to comply with the condition or to give notice within the time specified will prevent recovery from the surety (71 F.2d 901 905-906) .

In Schwab v. Bridge (1915) 27 Cal. App 204, 149 P 603 , the principal assigned funds held in trust to defendant as security for advances made by defendant to him. The company of which the principal was the major stockholder was in debt, and to secure this indebtedness the principal requested defendant to guarantee the account. Defendant executed a guaranty in the amount of $1500, with the proviso that it must be due and presented to him by a specified date. The debt was not paid, and the guaranty contract was assigned to plaintiff, who brought action to recover $1500 with interest. The trial court judgment was for plaintiff. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. Defendant contended that the guaranty contract was conditional, dependent on presentation of a demand and that the presentation and demand had to be made within the time limited in the guaranty; since the demand was not made until after the time specified, no liability accrued. The court agreed. When a suretyship contract stipulates that notice shall be given to the surety of the principal's default, failure to comply with that condition within the time specified will prevent recovery from the surety (27 Cal. App 204, 206-207) .

[b] Intention to Create Condition Precedent

In Federated Mortgage Investors v. Hunt (1970) 7 Cal. App. 3d 371, 86 Cal. Rptr. 687 , a limited partnership owned an apartment building which was encumbered by two deeds of trust, held by two different companies. Both loans went into default for nonpayment of taxes. The general partner in the limited partnership developed a plan to convert the building into condominiums, and an agreement was reached among the three parties to achieve that end. One holder was willing to advance the delinquent taxes, depending on certain conditions specified in the agreement. In a separate written instrument, defendant guaranteed partial repayment to that holder of the taxes by a certain date. The holder paid the taxes, and plaintiff, its successor in interest, brought suit to recover the monies paid, alleging four causes of action. The trial court found that defendant's obligation to reimburse the holder for the payment of taxes was conditioned on the payment of the taxes by the holder, as provided in the agreement among the three parties. Since those conditions were not fulfilled, neither the holder nor anyone else was required to pay the taxes under the provisions of the agreement. The trial court judgment was for defendant. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. Plaintiff contended that the trial court erred in finding that the conditions to the holder's obligations set forth in the agreement were also conditions to defendant's obligation. The court disagreed, stating that the intention of the parties as expressed in the contract is the source of contractual rights and duties. A court must ascertain and give effect to that intention by determining what the parties meant by the words they used (7 Cal. App. 3d 371, 378-379) . The court found that the holder had no duty to pay the taxes until the conditions had been met, and because they were not all met, the holder paid the taxes at its own risk (7 Cal. App. 3d 371, 379) .

The facts and procedural background of Schwab v. Bridge (1915) 27 Cal. App 204, 149 P 603 , are discussed in § 222.181[3][a]. In Schwab, the court of appeal found that a condition precedent to defendant's liability had not occurred and defendant was not liable. While it is true that conditions precedent are not favored by the law, and are to be strictly construed against one seeking to avail himself or herself of them, it is equally true that parties to a contract may, if they think proper, agree that any matter shall be a condition precedent. If the words used in the contract are so precise, express, and strong that such intention only is compatible with the terms employed, a court can only give effect to that declared intention of the parties. The only question in every case is whether that intention is so declared, and when that intention is sufficiently expressed to make the fulfillment of that act a condition precedent, it will be one (27 Cal. App 204, 206-207) .

§ 222.200 Supporting Contention That Surety Is Liable--Surety Is Liable Immediately on Principal's Default and Without Notice or Demand [Civ. Code § 2807]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with a general contention form supporting the existence of a suretyship (see, e.g., § 222.20).]

_____ [Name], THE SURETY, IS LIABLE FOR THE FULL AMOUNT ON THE OBLIGATION, THE PERFORMANCE OF WHICH HE/SHE/IT UNCONDITIONALLY GUARANTEED, BECAUSE _____ [name], THE PRINCIPAL, HAS DEFAULTED AND LIABILITY ACCRUED IMMEDIATELY ON THE DEFAULT OF _____ [name], THE PRINCIPAL, AND NO NOTICE OR DEMAND IS REQUIRED OF _____ [name], THE CREDITOR.

A. Surety Liable On Default of Principal Without Notice. A surety who has assumed liability for payment or performance is liable to the creditor immediately on the default of the principal, and without demand or notice. The bringing of an action, with its attendant process, constitutes sufficient notice of default (Civ. Code § 2807; Bloom v. Bender (1957) 48 Cal. 2d 793, 799-800, 313 P.2d 568 ; State Bd. of Equalization v. Balboa Ins. Co. (1978) 89 Cal. App. 3d 499, 504, 155 Cal. Rptr. 205).

B. Creditor Need Not Exhaust Remedies Against Principal. The liability of a surety of an absolute and unconditional guaranty is fixed when the principal obligation matures; it is not predicated on the exhaustion by the creditor of available remedies against the principal, or the exhaustion of other security for the debt (Civ. Code § 2807; Ralston-Purina Co. v. Carter (1962) 210 Cal. App. 2d 372, 379-380, 26 Cal. Rptr. 690 ; Bank of America v. McRae (1947) 81 Cal. App. 2d 1, 7, 183 P.2d 385).

[Optional] C. Surety of Installment Payments Liable as Each Installment Is Due. The liability of the surety of installment payments becomes fixed and unconditional as each payment becomes due (Glickman v. Collins (1975) 13 Cal. 3d 852, 862-863, 120 Cal. Rptr. 76, 533 P.2d 204).

D. Liability of Surety Equivalent to Principal's Liability. The obligation of a surety must not be larger in amount or in other respects more burdensome than that of the principal; when the surety has guaranteed the principal's entire obligation, the surety's obligation will include all the elements of the principal's obligation (Civ. Code § 2809; Moore v. Ohio Casualty Ins. Co. (1983) 140 Cal. App. 3d 988, 994-995, 189 Cal. Rptr. 829 ; Boliver v. Surety Co. (1977) 72 Cal. App. 3d Supp. 22, 30-31).

[Optional] E. Surety May Remain Liable After Principal Has Been Discharged. Although the surety is not liable when the principal has not incurred any obligation or has fully performed its obligation, the surety can contract to remain liable if the principal has been discharged without full performance of its incurred obligation (Bloom v. Bender (1957) 48 Cal. 2d 793, 801-805, 313 P.2d 568).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a creditor's contention that the surety is liable on the full amount of the obligation, the performance of which was guaranteed by the surety, and that the liability accrued immediately on the principal's default and without notice from the creditor [see Civ. Code §§ 2807, 2809]. Optional Paragraph C may be used if the obligation involves installment payments. Optional Paragraph E may be used when the principal has been discharged and the creditor seeks payment from the surety.

Civ. Code § 2808 provides that if the suretyship obligation is conditional and the surety cannot otherwise acquire knowledge of the principal's default, the creditor may need to provide notice of default to the surety before liability will accrue. Whether or not a suretyship is conditional may also arise as an issue. For contentions supporting and opposing the presence of a condition, see §§ 222.180, 222.181.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of liability without notice. For example, this argument may arise in opposing a summary judgment premised on the argument that the surety was not liable due to lack of notice, [see, e.g., State Bd. of Equalization v. Balboa Ins. Co. (1978) 89 Cal. App. 3d 499, 504, 155 Cal. Rptr. 205] . The points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel might include facts describing the surety's guaranty of the principal debtor's obligation for monthly child support payments and the installment dates which have accrued, leading to the liability of the surety on those dates. Counsel need not allege notice to the surety [see, e.g., Glickman v. Collins (1975) 13 Cal. 3d 852, 120 Cal. Rptr. 76, 533 P.2d 204] .

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 222.202 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Surety Liable on Default of Principal Without Notice

In Bloom v. Bender (1957) 48 Cal. 2d 793, 313 P.2d 568 , defendant executed a guaranty that unconditionally guaranteed the payment of all amounts that the principal might owe to an unlimited extent. No notice of the various obligations was required. Immediately on notice of default defendant was obligated to pay without question the amount owed, and defendant's liability would not be affected by any composition or other settlement. The principal became indebted for $5000. The creditor signed a compromise of creditors and agreed to accept its pro rata dividend as an accord and satisfaction and release of all its claims against the principal, receiving $320. The creditor assigned its interest to plaintiff, who brought an action against defendant to recover the amount due. The trial court judgment was for plaintiff for the full amount owed. Defendant appealed.

The Supreme Court affirmed. The Court addressed several of defendant's arguments, including that notice of default was a condition precedent to her liability. The Court said that neither the law nor the agreement require notice. Civ. Code § 2807 provides that a surety who has assumed liability for payment or performance is liable to the creditor immediately on the default of the principal, and without demand or notice. The agreement specifically provided that notice was not required of the several obligations or failure to meet them as they matured, and that immediately on notice of default in the payment, defendant would pay the amount due. The bringing of suit, with its attendant process, constituted sufficient notice of default (48 Cal. 2d 793, 799-800) .

In State Bd. of Equalization v. Balboa Ins. Co. (1978) 89 Cal. App. 3d 499, 155 Cal. Rptr. 205 , defendant executed a bond as security for the payment of the sales and use taxes incurred by a company. When the company incurred tax liability, a lien certificate was recorded. After the company refused to pay, plaintiff demanded that defendant pay under the terms of the bond, later bringing an action. Defendant alleged that no demand was made, other than notice given by plaintiff to defendant more than three years after its notice of cancellation to plaintiff. The trial court granted summary judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The case centered around the applicable statute of limitations. However, defendant also contended that the notice given to it was not equivalent to a demand and that by waiting an unreasonable time plaintiff increased the interest and made defendant's liability greater than that of the principal. The court disagreed, referring to Civ. Code § 2807 for the point that a surety who has assumed liability for payment is liable to the creditor immediately on the default of the principal, and without demand or notice. Citing Bloom v. Bender (1957) 48 Cal. 2d 793, 313 P.2d 568 (discussed above), the court said that the bringing of the action constituted sufficient notice of default and that neither the law not the agreement between the parties provided that notice was required (89 Cal. App. 3d 499, 504) .

[b] Creditor Need Not Exhaust Remedies Against Principal

In Ralston-Purina Co. v. Carter (1962) 210 Cal. App. 2d 372, 26 Cal. Rptr. 690 , defendant guaranteed the payment for merchandise received by the principal debtor, a turkey grower. The guaranty provided that defendant would be responsible for the payment of the purchase price of the merchandise to a stated amount. Thereafter the principal entered into a contract with plaintiff. Plaintiff brought suit for the balance due against the principal debtor and defendant as guarantor. The trial court judgment was for plaintiff. Defendant guarantor appealed.

The court of appeal remanded and directed the trial court to modify the judgment by striking certain charges, including attorney's fees. The appeal dealt with several contentions. Defendant demanded that plaintiff pursue its remedies against the principal and claimed that by plaintiff's refusal to comply with that demand its failure to exhaust its remedies, plaintiff failed to take a judgment against the principal. The court responded that the liability of the guarantor of an absolute and unconditional guaranty is fixed when the principal obligation matures and is not predicated on the exhaustion by the creditor of available remedies against the principal, or the exhaustion of other security for the debt. It is immaterial whether the debtor can or cannot pay the debt (210 Cal. App. 2d 372, 379-380) .

In Bank of America v. McRae (1947) 81 Cal. App. 2d 1, 183 P.2d 385 , plaintiff, as the executor an estate, brought suit against defendant on several counts, including four promissory notes due to the estate, and an indebtedness due to the bank. Prior to his death, the deceased had guaranteed payment of the notes which were originally payable to the bank and renewed in the name of the executor of the estate after the claims were allowed. Defendant, son of the deceased and a legatee under his will, assigned to the bank all his interest in his father's estate to secure payment of that indebtedness. Defendant cross complained with a charge of mismanagement of the estate. After the bank was appointed executor of the will, the claims were approved by the probate judge and filed in the estate for the amounts of notes on the theory that the estate became liable therefor as a guarantor. The trial court judgment was for plaintiff. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. In its decision, among the other issues addressed, the court discussed when the guarantor's liability arises in an unconditional guaranty. The original notes matured according to their express terms prior to the guarantor's death. There was then an absolute liability of the estate to pay the notes since the maker had defaulted. It was not necessary for the bank to first exhaust its remedy by suit, foreclosure of the lien, or otherwise as a prerequisite to liability of the guarantor. The guaranty was absolute and unconditional. Civ. Code § 2807 dictates that the liability of a guarantor of an absolute and unconditional guaranty is fixed when the principal obligation matures and is not predicated on the exhaustion by the creditor of his or her remedies against the principal debtor, or the exhaustion of other security for the debt. It is also immaterial whether the debtor can or cannot pay the debt. A guaranty is unconditional unless its terms import some condition precedent to the guarantor's liability (81 Cal. App. 2d 1, 7) .

[c] Surety of Installment Payments Liable as Each Installment Is Due

The facts and procedural background of Glickman v. Collins (1975) 13 Cal. 3d 852, 120 Cal. Rptr. 76, 533 P.2d 204 , are discussed in § 222.100[3][a]. In Glickman, the Supreme Court modified the amount of the judgment for plaintiff. It said that defendant was liable under the guaranty for the payment of the required monthly payments. Prior to the time the monthly payments became due, plaintiff had no duty to pursue the principal as defendant's liability for each monthly payment became fixed and unconditional as each payment became due, without regard to plaintiff's remedies against the principal. This result was required by Civ. Code § 2807 (13 Cal. 3d 852, 862-863) .

[d] Liability of Surety Equivalent to Principal's Liability

In Moore v. Ohio Casualty Ins. Co. (1983) 140 Cal. App. 3d 988, 189 Cal. Rptr. 829 , a proceeding involving the enforcement of an undertaking, the trial court granted plaintiff's motion for summary judgment in an unlawful detainer action. The trial court issued a writ of execution and ordered the tenants to surrender possession of the property and to pay rent from the end of the lease period until they vacated the premises. The tenants appealed and obtained an order staying execution of the judgment. The order granted a further stay contingent on the tenants posting an undertaking. They obtained the undertaking from defendant. The trial court issued a notice of intended ruling, finding that the bond had nothing to do with the appeal. The trial court awarded plaintiff the full amount of the undertaking issued by defendant as surety guaranteeing compliance by the tenants. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal modified the amount of the award, but otherwise affirmed. Among other points, the court said that both Civ. Code §§ 2787 and 2809 and the terms of the instrument itself lead to the conclusion that plaintiff should not have been awarded the full face value of the bond. Common law bonds and undertakings are treated as sureties. Civ. Code § 2809 limits the surety's liability to that of the principal. The extent of plaintiff's damages limited the amount owed on the surety bond (140 Cal. App. 3d 988, 994-995) .

The facts and procedural background of Boliver v. Surety Co. (1977) 72 Cal. App. 3d Supp. 22, 28-29 , are discussed in § 222.201[3][a]. In Boliver, the court upheld the liability of the surety for the entire award granted. Civ. Code § 2809 provides that the obligation of a surety must be neither larger in amount nor in other respects more burdensome than that of the principal. The liability of the principals included attorneys' fees. If the obligation of the surety is commensurate with that of each of the principals, it properly should include their burden of attorneys' fees as well as the basic liability. If the principal contract provided that the owner is entitled to attorneys' fees if the contractor is successfully sued, the principal may recover attorneys' fees incurred in a successful suit against the surety on the contractor's bond (72 Cal. App. 3d Supp. 22, 30-31) .

[e] Surety May Remain Liable After Principal Has Been Discharged

The facts and procedural background of Bloom v. Bender (1957) 48 Cal. 2d 793, 313 P.2d 568 , are discussed in § 222.200[3][a]. In Bloom, the Supreme Court upheld defendant's liability as surety and provided a very thorough analysis of Civ. Code § 2809. Defendant claimed that Civ. Code § 2809, which provides that the obligation of a surety must be neither larger in amount nor in other respects more burdensome than that of the principal, applied to eliminate its liability. It also said that a surety contract wherein the surety agreed to remain liable even though the principal is released is a contract which imposed greater obligations on the surety than on the principal, and the surety's obligations must be reduced to an amount not exceeding those of the principal. The Court discussed this contention at length, explaining the historical antecedents to the statutes and concluding that defendant's argument would logically require that under Civ. Code § 2809 every surety contract be unenforceable to the extent that it contemplated continuing liability of the surety after termination of the principal's liability, requiring a construction of Civ. Code § 2809 which is inharmonious with other code provisions relating to suretyship, and with established common law rules on the subject. While a surety is not liable when the principal does not incur any obligation under the base contract or when the principal has fully performed the contract obligation, the Court stated that no case dealing with Civ. Code § 2809 has been found in which it was suggested that when the principal incurs an actual obligation, the surety may not agree to remain liable if the principal is discharged by an arrangement such as a composition of creditors without having fully performed the contract obligation. It is a general suretyship principle that while a surety cannot be held beyond the express terms of the contract, the contract is to be interpreted by the same rules used in construing other types of contracts. Civ. Code § 2837 is to the same effect, and Civ. Code § 3268, applicable to the suretyship statutes, further provides that the ascertained intent of the parties controls the contrac nterpretation. The terms of the agreement indicate that the parties intended that defendant should not be released by a composition such as the one effected. Construction of Civ. Code § 2809 to give effect to the agreement was not contrary to the basic policy of the statute; furthermore, carrying out the specific intent of the parties accords with the basic rules of suretyship law. The parties by their contract specifically agreed that the liability of the surety was not to be terminated by the discharge of the debtor through a composition of creditors. This expressed intention alone might well be controlling under the provision of Civ. Code §§ 2837 and 3268, but even if a waiver of the limitation of Civ. Code § 2809 was necessary, the language of the contract adequately expressed such a waiver. By guaranteeing a debt the surety assumes liability if the principal is unable to pay. If the principal is totally insolvent, the surety will be compelled to pay the entire debt, but if the principal is able to make some payment on the debt the obligation of the surety is correspondingly reduced. The surety cannot be held to be prejudiced when by consensual agreement he or she undertakes to remain liable after the obligation of the principal is discharged through a composition (48 Cal. 2d 793, 801-805) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Surety Liable on Default of Principal Without Notice

In Baralat Development Co. v. Lichter (1987) 191 Cal. App. 3d 933, 236 Cal. Rptr. 701 , plaintiff obtained a judgment for recovery of defaulted rent payments and attorney's fees against the corporate lessee and its two coguarantors, who signed their names to the lease individually in that capacity. One defendant guarantor, who had sold his interest in the corporation prior to the default, and had unsuccessfully attempted to extricate himself from the lease obligations, appealed, contending that plaintiff did not notify him of the default until the amount owing was substantial. The court of appeal affirmed, noting that Civ. Code §§ 2807 and 2808 place the primary burden to discover the default on the surety, and that notice of default to the surety is not a requirement under either statute (191 Cal. App. 3d 933, 936) .

[b] Creditor Need Not Exhaust Remedies Against Principal

In McDonald v. Gravenstein etc. Assn. (1941) 42 Cal. App. 2d 329 , plaintiff leased his ranch on a share rental basis and signed a marketing contract with defendant on behalf of his lessee. After plaintiff brought an action against defendant, defendant cross complained against plaintiff for the monies remaining unpaid by the lessee. The court of appeal affirmed a judgment for defendant on his cross complaint. The court stated that plaintiff could be held primarily liable as a guarantor. Plaintiff signed the contract, not as a principal, but as a guarantor, in order that his tenant could procure the capital and supplies for the commission of the lease. The guaranty arose out of the original contract, and the delivery of the goods, on the faith of a guaranty that they would be paid for, constituted a sufficient consideration for the guaranty. The promise to pay was absolute and unconditional; therefore, the liability of the guarantor was fixed when the principal obligation matured, and was not predicated on the exhaustion by the creditor of his remedy against the original debtor (42 Cal. App. 2d 329, 332-333) .

[c] Liability of Surety Equivalent to Principal's Liability

In National Technical Systems v. Superior Court (2002) 97 Cal. App. 4th 415 , a subcontractor sought to enforce a stop notice release bond against the bond surety. The subcontractor also obtained a judgment against the general contractor in a related breach of contract action. The trial court granted the surety's motions in limine to preclude evidence of the previous trial and judgment against the general contractor, and to preclude evidence of certain damages, including attorney fees. The subcontractor filed a petition for writ of mandate. With respect to whether the subcontractor was entitled to recover attorney fees from the surety based on the attorney fees clause in the contract, the court found that the trial court erred in granted the motion in limine to exclude evidence of the attorney fees the subcontractor had incurred. All of the elements set forth in Boliver v. Surety Co. (1977) 72 Cal. App. 3d Supp. 22, 30-31 , discussed above, were present. There was a construction contract, providing for attorney fees to the prevailing party, supported by a surety bond issued by a third party which did not specifically provide for the surety's liability for attorney fees. Therefore, the subcontractor could recover from the surety on the stop notice release bond the attorney fees provided for in its subcontract, provided that the total recovery did not exceed the amount of the bond (97 Cal. App. 4th 415, 425-426) .

In Cates Construction, Inc. v. Talbot Partners (1999) 21 Cal. 4th 28, 86 Cal. Rptr. 2d 855, 980 P.2d 407 , the contractor on a condominium project and its performance surety sued the developer and the developer's lender for breach of construction contract and to foreclose on a mechanic's lien. The developer and lender asserted cross-complaints, including one by the developer as obligee against the surety for bad faith. The trial court ruled against the contractor and surety on all of their claims. It also awarded compensatory damages to the developer and lender on their contract claims, and awarded punitive damages to the developer against the surety on the bad faith claim. The surety and contractor appealed. The court of appeal affirmed in part, modified in part, and remanded. The supreme court granted review. On the issue of whether the surety was contractually liable under the performance bond for damages attributable to the general contractor's failure to complete the project by an agreed date, the court held that the bond and construction contract construed together permitted the developer to recover delay damages from the surety. It first noted that performance bonds, like all contracts of surety, are construed with reference to the same rules that govern interpretation of other types of contracts. The court also noted that as a general rule, the obligation of a surety must be neither larger in amount nor in other respects more burdensome than that of the principal, citing Civ. Code § 2809. Here, the construction contract between the contractor and developer explicitly contemplated that all time limits specified therein were of the essence of the contract, and required the developer to obtain a performance bond in the full amount of the contract sum as security for the faithful performance of the contract documents. Taken together as a whole, the bond and underlying construction contract were fairly and reasonably read as requiring the surety to answer for damages suffered by the developer as a direct result of the contractor's failure to promptly and faithfully perform the contract. Although the bond did not explicitly mention the subject of delay damages, the surety knew from the construction contract, which had been "made a part" of the bond, that time was of the essence of the contract and that the bond's purpose was to provide security for the faithful performance of the contract in the event of the contractor's default (21 Cal. 4th 28, 39-43) .

In Washington International Insurance Co. v. Superior Court (1998) 62 Cal. App. 4th 981, 73 Cal. Rptr. 2d 282 , the subcontractor on a public contract filed suit against the surety seeking to recover on a public works payment bond after the contractor failed to make progress payments. The superior court denied the surety's motion to strike portions of the first amended complaint to delete the subcontractor's claim that the surety was liable for certain sums which the contractor had failed to pay to the subcontractor. The sums represented a statutory "interest penalty" imposed pursuant to Pub. Con. Code § 10262.5, which the contractor was required to pay to the subcontractor because of the contractor's failure to make timely payments on the subcontract. The surety filed a petition for writ of mandate, which the court of appeal denied. The court held that the surety was obligated to pay the subcontractor the statutory "interest penalty" for the contractor's failure to make timely payments on the subcontract. Whether the two percent per month interest penalty was interest or a penalty, it was an amount that the principal was obligated to pay, and the surety was obligated to pay amounts the principal should have paid but did not (62 Cal. App. 4th 981, 990-991) .

In Pacific Employers Ins. Co. v. City of Berkeley (1984) 158 Cal. App. 3d 145 , 204 Cal. Rptr. 387 , the court of appeal upheld plaintiff surety's liability for liquidated damages. Plaintiff had issued a performance bond for a contractor who later abandoned the building project. After another contractor completed the project, the city claimed an offset against the balance due plaintiff for liquidated damages caused by the principal's delay. The court found that because plaintiff surety assumed the principal contractor's obligations under the contract and completed the work, it stood in the same position to the contract as did the original contractor. Since the principal contractor would have been liable for liquidated damages had it, rather than the surety completed the work, the requirements of Civ. Code § 2809, which provide that the obligation of a surety be no greater than that of its principal, are satisfied if plaintiff surety is held liable for the liquidated damages (158 Cal. App. 3d 145, 156) .

§ 222.201 Supporting Contention That Surety Is Liable--Liability of Surety on Conditional Obligation and Notice of Default [Civ. Code § 2808]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with a general contention form supporting the existence of a suretyship (see, e.g., § 222.20).]

_____ [Name], THE SURETY, IS LIABLE FOR THE FULL AMOUNT OF THE CONDITIONAL OBLIGATION, THE PERFORMANCE OF WHICH HE/SHE/IT GUARANTEED, BECAUSE THE CONDITION OCCURRED AND _____ [name], THE SURETY, WAS ABLE TO ACQUIRE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DEFAULT OF _____ [name], THE PRINCIPAL BY THE EXERCISE OF REASONABLE DILIGENCE.

A. Liability of Surety on Conditional Obligation Is Commensurate With Principal's Liability. The liability of the surety on a conditional obligation is commensurate with that of the principal (Civ. Code § 2808; Boliver v. Surety Co. (1977) 72 Cal. App. 3d Supp 22, 28-29,).

[Optional] B. Surety on Conditional Obligation Is Not Entitled to Notice of Default Unless Surety Is Unable to Otherwise Acquire Notice. The surety on a conditional obligation is not entitled to notice of the default of the principal unless the surety is unable, by the exercise of reasonable diligence, to acquire information of that default and the creditor has actual notice. [When the surety can require the principal to provide notice of default directly to the surety, the creditor will not be required to provide notice to the surety] (Civ. Code § 2808; American Fidelity Fire Ins. Co. v. State Bd. of Equalization (1973) 34 Cal. App. 3d 51, 55-56, 109 Cal. Rptr. 545 , cert. denied, 415 U.S. 990, 94 S. Ct. 1589, 39 L. Ed. 2d 887 (1974)) .

[Optional] C. Surety May Remain Liable After Principal Has Been Discharged. [See § 222.200, Paragraph E.]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a creditor's contention that the surety is liable because the condition on which the obligation depended occurred. Optional Paragraph B may be used if the surety was able to acquire knowledge of the principal's default by the exercise of reasonable diligence without notice by the creditor [see Civ. Code § 2808].

Civ. Code § 2808 provides that if the suretyship obligation is conditional and the surety cannot otherwise acquire knowledge of the principal's default, the creditor may need to provide notice of default to the surety before liability will accrue. Whether or not a suretyship is conditional may also arise as an issue. For contentions supporting and opposing the presence of a condition, see §§ 222.180 and 222.181, respectively.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of the surety's liability on a conditional obligation. For example, this argument may arise in opposing an appeal premised on the argument that the surety was liable immediately on the principal's default without any notice [see, e.g., American Fidelity Fire Ins. Co. v. State Bd. of Equalization (1973) 34 Cal. App. 3d 51, 55-56, 109 Cal. Rptr. 545 , cert. denied, 415 U.S. 990, 94 S. Ct. 1589, 39 L. Ed. 2d 887 (1974)] . These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel might include facts showing that the surety guaranteed the principal's payment of delinquent tax penalties conditioned on the principal's being delinquent in its payment and that the surety could have acquired notice of the default directly from the principal [see, e.g., American Fidelity Fire Ins. Co. v. State Bd. of Equalization (1973) 34 Cal. App. 3d 51, 55-56, 109 Cal. Rptr. 545 , cert. denied, 415 U.S. 990, 94 S. Ct. 1589, 39 L. Ed. 2d 887 (1974)] .

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 222.202 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Liability of Surety on Conditional Obligation Is Commensurate With Principal's Liability

In Boliver v. Surety Co. (1977) 72 Cal. App. 3d Supp 22, 140 Cal. Rptr. 259 , defendant surety company issued contractor's bonds for defendant contractor and his employee. Plaintiff contracted with defendant contractor for the construction of a home. Plaintiff brought an action against all defendants for breach of contract, claiming a failure of completion and substantial defects in the construction. The municipal court judgment was for plaintiff. Defendant surety company appealed.

The superior court appellate department affirmed. In addition to its other contentions, defendant surety argued that it could not be held liable for the attorney's fees. The construction contract had a unilateral attorney's fees clause (72 Cal. App. 3d Supp 22, 28-29) . The court noted that as a surety, defendant was bound by the provisions of the Civil Code governing suretyships. Civ. Code § 2808 provides that when one assumes liability as surety on a conditional obligation, liability is commensurate with that of the principal. Civ. Code § 2809 provides that the obligation of a surety must be neither larger in amount nor in other respects more burdensome than that of the principal. The liability of the principals included attorney's fees based on the application of Civ. Code § 1717 (reciprocal attorney's fees). Because the obligation of the surety was commensurate with that of each of the principals, it properly included their burden of attorney's fees as well as the basic liability. If the principal contract provides that the owner is entitled to attorney's fees if he or she successfully sues the contractor, the principal may recover attorney's fees incurred in a successful suit against the surety on the contractor's bond (72 Cal. App. 3d Supp 22, 30-31) .

[b] Surety on Conditional Obligation Is Not Entitled to Notice of Default Unless Surety Is Unable to Otherwise Acquire Notice

In American Fidelity Fire Ins. Co. v. State Bd. of Equalization (1973) 34 Cal. App. 3d 51, 109 Cal. Rptr. 545 , cert. denied, 415 U.S. 990, 94 S. Ct. 1589, 39 L. Ed. 2d 887 (1974) , plaintiff insurance company executed surety bonds in guaranteeing the payment of use and sales taxes due from retailers primarily liable for the taxes. Plaintiff paid the principal, interest, and the penalties due on some bonds when their principals defaulted, but refused to pay the penalty assessments on the bonds of defaulting taxpayers when the default occurred prior to the time the bond was issued. Plaintiff brought a class action suit against defendant for declaratory relief and for the refund of specified sums paid. Defendant filed a cross complaint for taxes owed. The trial court judgment was for defendant. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. In addition to other contentions, plaintiff asserted that notice to it as the surety was required by Civ. Code § 2808. The court disagreed, saying that the surety could acquire information concerning the default by requiring it from the principal and the Civ. Code § 2808 notice requirement due to the surety's inability to acquire that information did not apply to plaintiff's situation (34 Cal. App. 3d 51, 55-56) .

§ 222.202 Opposing Contention That Surety Is Liable--Surety Not Liable on Conditional Obligation if Principal Not Liable [Civ. Code §§ 2808, 2809]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with a general contention form opposing the existence of a suretyship (see, e.g., § 222.21).]

_____ [Name], THE SURETY, IS NOT LIABLE ON THE CONDITIONAL OBLIGATION, THE PERFORMANCE OF WHICH HE/SHE/IT GUARANTEED, BECAUSE HIS/HER/ITS OBLIGATION AS SURETY IS THE SAME AS THAT OF _____ [name], THE PRINCIPAL, AND THE PRINCIPAL DID NOT ACCRUE ANY LIABILITY.

Surety Not Liable on Conditional Obligation if Principal Not Liable. Since the liability of a surety on a conditional obligation is commensurate with that of the principal, when the principal is not liable on the obligation, neither is the surety. The liability of a surety, in the absence of a different contractual provision, accrues at the same time as that of the principal, or on default of the principal (Civ. Code §§ 2808, 2809; U.S. Leasing Corp. v. duPont (1968) 69 Cal. 2d 275, 290, 295, 70 Cal. Rptr. 393, 444 P.2d 65 ; Michel & Pfeffer v. Oceanside Properties, Inc. (1976) 61 Cal. App. 3d 433, 441, 132 Cal. Rptr. 179).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a surety's contention that he or she is not liable on the conditional obligation guaranteed because the principal's liability never accrued [see Civ. Code §§ 2808, 2809].

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of the surety's lack of liability. For example, this argument may arise in opposing an appeal premised on the argument that the surety was liable [see, e.g., Michel & Pfeffer v. Oceanside Properties, Inc. (1976) 61 Cal. App. 3d 433, 441, 132 Cal. Rptr. 179] . These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel might include facts demonstrating that the creditor is seeking compensation from the surety for an obligation of the principal which was not part of the contract that the surety guaranteed [see, e.g., U.S. Leasing Corp. v. duPont (1968) 69 Cal. 2d 275, 70 Cal. Rptr. 393, 444 P.2d 65] .

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contentions supported by the points and authorities set out in §§ 222.200, 222.201.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Surety Not Liable on Conditional Obligation if Principal Not Liable

In U.S. Leasing Corp. v. duPont (1968) 69 Cal. 2d 275, 70 Cal. Rptr. 393, 444 P.2d 65 , plaintiff, a leasing corporation, executed with the principal lessee a lease commitment letter for the lease of restaurant and kitchen equipment for eight years. The commitment to lease required a deposit and was subject to several conditions, among them a continuing guaranty from defendants. A lease was written and defendants executed a guaranty in which they expressly assumed to pay all rents and all other sums reserved in the lease on demand, including all schedules made a part thereof, and to perform all of the terms therein required to be performed by the lessee. The guaranty contained a provision permitting plaintiff and the principal lessee to increase the amount of the principal lessee's indebtedness above defendants' maximum liability and consenting to changes of the terms of the lease without affecting defendants' liability, but made no reference to any rents or conditions other than those set forth in the lease. After the principal lessee defaulted and filed a petition for bankruptcy, plaintiff demanded of defendants the rent claimed to be past due under the lease. When defendants refused to pay, plaintiff brought an action for declaratory relief to establish and enforce defendants' liability. The trial court's judgment was for plaintiff. Defendants appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed and remanded. Defendants raised several contentions on appeal. After defining what the surety's liability was, the Court considered whether defendants' liability under their guaranty had accrued. The obligation of a surety must be neither larger in amount nor in other respects more burdensome than that of a principal. Therefore, since the liability of a surety is commensurate with that of the principal, when the principal is not liable on the obligation, neither is the surety. No liability could be imposed on defendants as sureties unless the principal was liable under the lease (69 Cal. 2d 275, 290) . The Court found that the provisions in the guaranty relating to modification of the lease could not be construed to encompass such a fundamental and radical change in the nature of the principal's obligation, and concluded that no payment schedule as was contemplated in the lease was even issued for the principal's approval and that when it filed for bankruptcy, no payment on the rental of the subject equipment was yet due (69 Cal. 2d 275, 292) . Plaintiff sued to recover not on the basis of the lease provisions, which were devoid of any rent schedules, but rather on the basis of schedules which were collateral to the lease and not encompassed within the terms of defendant's guaranty (69 Cal. 2d 275, 295) .

In Michel & Pfeffer v. Oceanside Properties, Inc. (1976) 61 Cal. App. 3d 433, 132 Cal. Rptr. 179 , plaintiff subcontractor brought an action against a contractor, its surety, and the property owner for payment on a bond, foreclosure of a mechanic's lien, and common count based on work performed. The action was based on a multi-party construction contract, and two subcontracts in which the performance was guaranteed by defendant surety. The trial court judgment ordered the contractor and surety to pay plaintiff and gave plaintiff a lien on the property.

The court of appeal reversed. The case discussed many issues, and in its discussion of suretyship, the court explained the accrual of the surety's liability. Civ. Code § 2809 provides that the obligation of a surety must be neither larger in amount nor in other respects more burdensome than that of the principal. Therefore, since the liability of a surety is commensurate with that of the principal, when the principal is not liable on the obligation, neither is the surety. The liability of a surety, in the absence of a different contractual provision, accrues at the same time as that of the principal, or on default of the principal. The contractor had not defaulted, as the final payment under the two contracts was not then due. The deferred final payment agreed to by plaintiff precluded recovery on any mechanic's lien on the property (61 Cal. App. 3d 433, 441) .

§ 222.220 Supporting Contention That Surety Is Liable--Surety Not Exonerated by Statutory Remedies Available to Surety [Civ. Code § 2845]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with a general contention form supporting the existence of a suretyship (see, e.g., § 222.20).]

_____ [Name], THE SURETY, IS LIABLE ON THE OBLIGATION, THE PERFORMANCE OF WHICH HE/SHE/IT GUARANTEED, BECAUSE _____ [_____ (name), THE CREDITOR, HAS DONE ALL THAT HE/SHE/IT IS LEGALLY REQUIRED TO DO IN ORDER TO COLLECT FROM _____ (name), THE PRINCIPAL and/or THE SURETY DID NOT DEMAND THAT _____ (name), THE CREDITOR, PURSUE ITS OTHER REMEDIES AVAILABLE AGAINST _____ (name), THE PRINCIPAL and/or THE FAILURE OF _____ (name), THE CREDITOR, TO PURSUE OTHER REMEDIES DID NOT PREJUDICE THE SURETY and/or THE SURETY HAS ATTEMPTED TO REQUIRE _____ (name), THE CREDITOR, TO PURSUE A REMEDY THAT IS AVAILABLE TO THE SURETY].

[EITHER]

A. Creditor Took All Steps Legally Required to Collect From Principal. Although a surety may require the creditor to proceed against the principal, or to pursue any other remedy in the creditor's power that the surety cannot pursue, and that would lighten the surety's burden, the surety is still completely liable on the guaranty if the creditor has taken all steps legally required to collect from the principal (see Civ. Code § 2845; Wiener v. Van Winkle (1969) 273 Cal. App. 2d 774, 783-784, 78 Cal. Rptr. 761).

[AND/OR]

B. Surety Must Make Demand of Creditor Prior to Creditor's Action Against Surety. The surety must make a demand on the creditor, prior to the creditor's action against the surety, to proceed against the principal or pursue other available remedies in order to claim any exoneration pursuant to Section 2845 of the Civil Code (Sukut-Coulson, Inc. v. Allied Canon Co. (1978) 85 Cal. App. 3d 648, 654-655, 149 Cal. Rptr. 711 ; Garrett v. Bomash (1935) 10 Cal. App. 2d 288, 291, 51 P.2d 1100).

[AND/OR]

C. Creditor's Failure to Pursue Remedies Against Principal Did Not Prejudice Surety. If a creditor fails to pursue remedies against the principal on demand of the surety, the surety is still liable on its guaranty if the creditor's failure did not prejudice the surety (see Civ. Code § 2845; Glickman v. Collins (1975) 13 Cal. 3d 852, 862-863, 120 Cal. Rptr. 76, 533 P.2d 204).

[AND/OR]

D. Creditor Not Required to Pursue Remedies Against Principal That Are Available to Surety. A surety may not require the creditor to pursue a remedy against the principal that is available to the surety (see Civ. Code § 2845; Katz v. Haskell (1961) 196 Cal. App. 2d 144, 152-153, 16 Cal. Rptr. 453).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a party's contention that the surety is liable on the obligation. Although the surety is entitled to require the creditor to pursue certain remedies against the principal, that pursuit must be requested, and unless it totally discharges the obligation, it does not exonerate the surety [see Civ. Code § 2845]. Paragraph A sets forth the creditor's compliance with all the steps required of it. Paragraph B may be used when the surety has not made the demand of the creditor prior to the creditor's bringing an action against the surety. Paragraph C may be used if the creditor failed to act as the surety requested, but no prejudice occurred to the surety thereby. Paragraph D may be used if the surety requested the creditor to pursue a remedy which was available to the surety.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of the remedies available to the surety. For example, this argument may arise in opposing a motion for summary judgment or an appeal premised on the argument that the surety was not liable because there was another remedy available to the creditor [see, e.g., Garrett v. Bomash (1935) 10 Cal. App. 2d 288, 290, 51 P.2d 1100] . These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel might include facts alleging that the creditor had mechanic's liens on the property, the purchase payment price of which the surety had guaranteed. Although the surety did not demand that the creditor exercise its rights under those liens, had it done so, the surety's obligation would be reduced by the amount recovered on the liens [see, e.g., Sukut-Coulson, Inc. v. Allied Canon Co. (1978) 85 Cal. App. 3d 648, 149 Cal. Rptr. 711] .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Creditor Took All Steps Legally Required to Collect From Principal

In Wiener v. Van Winkle (1969) 273 Cal. App. 2d 774, 78 Cal. Rptr. 761 , defendants sold real property for which they received a promissory note secured by a purchase money deed of trust on the property sold. Defendants sold the note to plaintiffs, assigning it with recourse, and guaranteeing its payment. The makers of the note requested an extension of time for payment which plaintiffs refused to grant. Plaintiffs so informed defendants and asked them to take the note, trust deed, and personal guaranty in exchange for the amount due. Defendants did not comply with that request and plaintiff filed an action when the note was in default. Both the complaint and answer underwent several amendments. The trial court judgment was for plaintiffs for the deficiency remaining after foreclosure and denied plaintiffs' request for attorney's fees. Both parties appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, except as to the denial of attorney's fees, concerning which it reversed the judgment. After a thorough discussion of the complex factual and procedural machinations, the court addressed defendants' many contentions. Defendants claimed that plaintiffs' refusal to accept a conditionally offered payment from the makers was an unreasonable refusal and exonerated defendants. Defendants reasoned that since plaintiffs knew that defendants were unable to pay the note and had reason to believe that the land was of insufficient value to satisfy the amount due, their failure to accept the makers' offer was unreasonable. As support they cited Civ. Code § 2845, which provides that a surety may require the creditor to proceed against the principal, or to pursue any other remedy in the creditor's power which the surety cannot itself pursue, and which would lighten the surety's burden; and if in such case the creditor neglects to do so, the surety is exonerated to the extent to which it is thereby prejudiced. The court disagreed, observing that the offer by the makers was made with the condition that plaintiffs compromise their claim for attorney's fees. Plaintiff did not act unreasonably in refusing this conditional offer. The makers refused plaintiffs' counteroffer and at no time unqualifiedly tendered the amount due on the note. Under the circumstances, plaintiffs did all they were legally required to do in order to collect the amount due from the makers (273 Cal. App. 2d 774, 783-784) .

[b] Surety Must Make Demand of Creditor Prior to Creditor's Action Against Surety

In Sukut-Coulson, Inc. v. Allied Canon Co. (1978) 85 Cal. App. 3d 648, 149 Cal. Rptr. 711 , plaintiff subcontracted with defendant contractor to do construction work on a public improvement project. Defendant obtained the necessary bonds from two bonding companies. When defendant contractor defaulted on a later loan, the loan company became owner of record through a nonjudicial foreclosure on the trust deed. Prior to that time, plaintiff recorded mechanic's liens. Plaintiff filed an action seeking recovery on sums due and foreclosure of its mechanic's liens and later, in another action, sought recovery against the sureties on their bonds. The loan company filed a declaratory relief action seeking a determination that the surety bonds, not the mechanic's liens, were plaintiff's primary source of recovery. The three actions were consolidated for trial, after which the court entered a judgment for plaintiff on the construction contract, ordered foreclosure of the mechanic's liens, and held the bonding companies liable for any deficiency after foreclosure. One of the bonding companies and plaintiff cross appealed the judgment.

The court of appeal reversed that portion of the judgment limiting the sureties' liability to any lien deficiencies and remanded. The court found that the trial court erred when it ordered foreclosure on the mechanic's liens prior to any recovery on the surety bonds; plaintiff was entitled to judgment against one or both sets of defendants and entitled to pursue on execution whichever set of defendants best served its interests. The surety bonds were issued as required by statute and they inured to the benefit of contractors or subcontractors (85 Cal. App. 3d 648, 653) . Defendant contended that a contractor should be required to pursue foreclosure of the mechanic's liens prior to recovery on the bond. Civ. Code § 2849 provides that a surety is entitled to the benefit of every security held or acquired by a creditor to secure the principal's obligation, and Civ. Code § 2845 allows a surety to require a creditor to proceed against the principal or pursue other remedies not available to the surety. The court cautioned that even though defendant was entitled to the benefit of plaintiff's security and to become subrogated to their benefits on its payment of the underlying obligation, this did not ipso facto require plaintiff to pursue foreclosure of the mechanic's liens as its primary remedy. To hold so would emasculate the clear requirement under Civ. Code § 2845 that a surety make formal demand on its principal's creditor to pursue alternative remedies. That requirement is no mere formality, for implicit in such a demand is recognition by the surety of its obligation under the bond and, in effect, its admission of liability to the creditor. Defendant made no demand, and in fact, the sureties consistently denied any liability to plaintiff under the bonds. Defendant elected to resist the claims and deny liability, and having made that election, defendant could not require plaintiff to satisfy its judgment against other sources first, for at that point plaintiff could choose whichever defendant or cause of action it wished to pursue to satisfy its judgment (85 Cal. App. 3d 648, 654-655) .

In Garrett v. Bomash (1935) 10 Cal. App. 2d 288, 51 P.2d 1100 , defendants, husband and wife, executed a promissory note. Defendant husband transferred the note to plaintiff's assignor as additional security for another note, the payment of which defendant husband and another guaranteed. Other security was also pledged. Plaintiff brought suit on the promissory note when it was past due and unpaid. Defendant husband was eliminated by bankruptcy proceedings and the trial court judgment was against defendant wife. Defendant wife appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. In addition to defendant wife's contentions that she was not liable for the note, the court addressed her contention that she was not liable due to the other security for the note. No claim was made, nor was any evidence offered, that defendant had made any demand on the creditor that the property of the principal should first be applied to the discharge of the debt. The surety has the unquestioned right to make that demand, but there is no rule that the creditor may not sue the surety until the creditor has first proceeded against the principal (10 Cal. App. 2d 288, 291) .

[c] Creditor's Failure to Pursue Remedies Against Principal Did Not Prejudice Surety

The facts and procedural background of Glickman v. Collins (1975) 13 Cal. 3d 852, 120 Cal. Rptr. 76, 533 P.2d 204 , are discussed in § 222.100[3][a]. In Glickman, the Supreme Court affirmed the judgment for plaintiff creditor. Among the other issues in the case, defendant claimed that plaintiff failed to pursue her available remedies against the principal, in accordance with a demand made by defendant that she do so. The demand, allowed by Civ. Code § 2845, was made after the action had already commenced. Prior to that time plaintiff had no duty to pursue the principal as defendant's liability for each monthly payment became fixed and unconditional as each payment became due, without regard to plaintiff's remedies against the principal. Plaintiff had attempted to collect from the principal before filing the action and had obtained a judgment against him but was unable to satisfy it. Defendant did not indicate what other remedies she would have plaintiff pursue, but in view of the principal's impecuniousness, it appeared that pursuit would be futile. Moreover, defendant remained liable on the guaranty whether or not plaintiff complied with defendant's demand, for according to Civ. Code § 2845, plaintiff's noncompliance would have exonerated defendant in any event only to the extent that she was prejudiced thereby (13 Cal. 3d 852, 862-863) .

[d] Creditor Not Required to Pursue Remedies Against Principal That Are Available to Surety

In Katz v. Haskell (1961) 196 Cal. App. 2d 144, 16 Cal. Rptr. 453 , when defendant sold the apartment building he owned, he received a note secured by a third deed of trust as part of the purchase price. The note contained an acceleration clause in the event of a subsequent sale. Defendant assigned the note to plaintiff for value and guaranteed the payments. The property underwent several transfers of ownership, and ultimately was transferred to a second defendant. After default on the note, plaintiff sued the first defendant to foreclose the third deed of trust. The trial court ordered foreclosure and declared that defendant was personally liable on the guaranty. After defendant was granted credit for the sale price, the deficiency was charged to him. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The case was combined with a companion matter on appeal. In addition to considering the many points raised by defendant in both the cases, the court addressed defendant's arguments concerning plaintiff's actions. Defendant contended that the failure of plaintiff to resort to the security by the most expeditious method on the default, and on defendant's demand, exonerated defendant from liability to the extent of his injury. Defendant cited Civ. Code § 2845 as the authority for his position. However, defendant himself had ample funds with which to satisfy his obligations to plaintiff and therefore could have instituted his own foreclosure proceedings. Defendant had secured refinancing of the third trust deed and was in a position to pay off plaintiff, take back the trust deed, and immediately proceed with his own action (196 Cal. App. 2d 144, 152-153) .

§ 222.221 Supporting Contention That Surety Is Liable--Surety Waived Statutory Remedies [Civ. Code §§ 2845, 2849]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with a general contention form supporting the existence of a suretyship (see, e.g., § 222.20).]

_____ [Name], THE SURETY, IS LIABLE ON THE OBLIGATION, THE PERFORMANCE OF WHICH HE/SHE/IT GUARANTEED, BECAUSE _____ [name], THE SURETY, WAIVED HIS/HER/ITS RIGHT _____ [TO DEMAND THAT _____(name), THE CREDITOR, PURSUE OTHER REMEDIES AGAINST _____(name), THE PRINCIPAL and/or TO DEMAND ENTITLEMENT TO THE BENEFIT OF EVERY SECURITY FOR THE PERFORMANCE OF _____(name), THE PRINCIPAL, HELD BY _____(name), THE CREDITOR].

A. Surety May Waive Its Rights Against Creditor. A surety may waive the statutory rights afforded it under Section 2845 of the Civil Code, allowing it to require a creditor to proceed against the principal or pursue other remedies prior to claiming a remedy against the surety, as well as those rights afforded by Section 2849 of the Civil Code, entitling it to the benefit of every security for the performance of the principal held by the creditor (Guild Wineries & Distilleries v. Land Dynamics (1980) 103 Cal. App. 3d 966, 972-973, 163 Cal. Rptr. 348 ; Brunswick Corp. v. Hays (1971) 16 Cal. App. 3d 134, 137-139, 93 Cal. Rptr. 635 ; see Civ. Code §§ 2845, 2849).

B. Waiver Not Against Public Policy. A waiver of these rights by the surety is not against public policy (Union Bank v. Ross (1976) 54 Cal. App. 3d 290, 294-295, 126 Cal. Rptr. 646 ; Wiener v. Van Winkle (1969) 273 Cal. App. 2d 774, 786-787, 78 Cal. Rptr. 761).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a party's contention that the surety is liable on the obligation because the surety waived its right to require the creditor to first proceed against the principal or its right to the security held by the creditor for the performance of the principal [see Civ. Code §§ 2845, 2849].

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of the waiver of the surety's statutory rights. For example, this argument may arise in opposing an appeal premised on the argument that the creditor was required to act against the principal first, as demanded by the surety [see, e.g., Brunswick Corp. v. Hays (1971) 16 Cal. App. 3d 134, 93 Cal. Rptr. 635] . These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should describe the circumstances under which the waiver took place, and include the language in the guaranty in which the surety waived its rights to demand the creditor to first proceed against the principal [see, e.g., Guild Wineries & Distilleries v. Land Dynamics (1980) 103 Cal. App. 3d 966, 163 Cal. Rptr. 348] .

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 222.224 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Surety May Waive Its Rights Against Creditor

In Guild Wineries & Distilleries v. Land Dynamics (1980) 103 Cal. App. 3d 966, 163 Cal. Rptr. 348 , plaintiff granted defendant an option to purchase a winery. That option was assignable, but the agreement provided that on assignment defendant would become liable under a continuing guaranty, in favor of plaintiff, of the assignee's performance. Defendant, with plaintiff's consent, did assign its rights. Plaintiff sold the winery to the assignee, aware that it had some licensing difficulties. Defendant executed a continuing guaranty, undertaking to be a surety on the assignee's promissory notes. Defendant agreed that if the assignee was unable to obtain the license, it would acquire the winery. Defendant acquired the winery and later sold it. Plaintiff demanded an acceleration of the debt and the proceeds from the two sales as additional security. When defendant did not pay, plaintiff brought suit. The trial court judgment was for defendant. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. In addition to its other remarks, the court observed that under the agreement between the assignee and plaintiff, a default occurred when the collateral was transferred without plaintiff's written consent and the proceeds from the sale were not immediately delivered to plaintiff. Defendant's liability to plaintiff because of the assignee's defaults was based on its continuing guaranty executed in plaintiff's favor; that instrument providing a continuing guaranty of any and all indebtedness of the assignee. The court said that Civ. Code §§ 2845 and 2849, requiring a creditor to proceed against the principal debtor or pursue other remedies (for example, exhausting mortgaged property) prior to claiming against a guarantor, may be waived by a guarantor. In the case at hand, the court held that the continuing guaranty did waive those statutory requirements (103 Cal. App. 3d 966, 972-973) .

In Brunswick Corp. v. Hays (1971) 16 Cal. App. 3d 134, 93 Cal. Rptr. 635 , the principal purchased bowling lanes and equipment from plaintiff. The purchase required a small down payment, with the balance represented by a promissory note and conditional sales contract. As additional security defendant executed an individual written guaranty. When the principal failed to make the required payments, plaintiff accelerated the total amount of the note, repossessed, and resold the equipment. After defendant refused to pay the difference between the amount obtained through resale and the amount owing on the note, plaintiff brought an action to recover the deficiency. The court concluded that the application of the monies recovered from resale was not payment as contemplated in the guaranty contract. The trial court judgment was for plaintiff. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court said that Civ. Code §§ 2845 and 2849, which give a surety the benefit of all security held by the creditor for performance of the obligation and the power to require the creditor to proceed against that security, did not assist defendant. These protections may be waived by a guarantor. The contract provided that it was absolute, unconditional, and continuing, and payment of the sums for which guarantor was liable would be made notwithstanding that plaintiff held credits, security, or other guaranties against which it might be entitled to resort for payment. The court found that to be a waiver of Civ. Code §§ 2845 and 2849. After such a total waiver of those protections, defendant could not require plaintiff to exonerate him entirely because it resorted to other security and obtained only partial satisfaction (16 Cal. App. 3d 134, 137-139) . The court also said that when the performance of the primary obligor is involuntary, a guarantor has no right to direct the application of the proceeds and the court is not obliged to apply them so as to exonerate third persons. In the absence of a specific provision to the contrary in the guaranty contract, proceeds from the sale of the equipment could only be applied to exonerate the limited guaranty to the extent that the proceeds of the sale exceeded the amount of that portion of the original debt not covered by the limited guaranty (16 Cal. App. 3d 134, 137-139) .

[b] Waiver Not Against Public Policy

In Union Bank v. Ross (1976) 54 Cal. App. 3d 290, 126 Cal. Rptr. 646 , a promissory note executed by a company was guaranteed by four continuing guaranties executed by defendant, director of the company, and defendant stockholders. Defendant pledged his personal savings account and the other defendants pledged company stock. Defendant director did not read the guaranty which was provided by plaintiff before signing it. After the company defaulted, plaintiff set off some money from defendant's accounts, but returned the money in consideration for additional collateral and a second continuing guaranty. Plaintiff brought an action on the guaranties. Defendant counterclaimed against plaintiff for several causes. Plaintiff's motion for judgment under Code Civ. Proc. § 631.8 was granted. Defendant cross complained against defendant stockholders for indemnity and judgment was for defendant. The trial court judgment on the original action was against all defendants. Defendant director appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. Defendant argued that a creditor is required to sell collateral on demand if it is sufficient to satisfy the obligation. The court agreed, but said that defendants had waived their rights under Civ. Code §§ 2819 and 2845 by agreeing that the bank could alter, accelerate, or exchange their time and money for payment and by agreeing to waive all rights to require the bank to apply any security it might hold at any time or to pursue any other remedy. Defendants argued that the creditor's obligation to sell collateral could not be waived by the surety because it is against public policy. The court discussed defendants' reference to Durgin v. Kaplan (1968) 68 Cal. 2d 81, fn. 8, 65 Cal. Rptr. 158, 436 P.2d 70 (discussed in § 222.302), in which dicta indicated the Supreme Court's belief that a waiver of Civ. Code §§ 2822 and 2839 was against public policy. The court in Union Bank noted that although it was persuasive, courts have clearly held that a guarantor is permitted to waive the right by contract to require the creditor to proceed against security provided by the principal debtor. A waiver of the right to proceed against collateral is valid. If a surety can waive the right to have the creditor proceed against someone else's collateral, a surety should be able to waive the right to have the creditor proceed against his or her own collateral (54 Cal. App. 3d 290, 294-295) .

The facts and procedural background of Wiener v. Van Winkle (1969) 273 Cal. App. 2d 774, 78 Cal. Rptr. 761 , are discussed in § 222.220[3][a]. In Wiener, the court of appeal found the guarantors to be liable. The court said the guaranty agreement was subject to Civ. Code §§ 2845 and 2849, which provide a surety with the power to require the creditor to pursue the primary obligor and entitle the surety to the benefit of every security for performance of the principal debt. The guaranty agreement waived those statutory rights by providing that plaintiffs need not take any action against the debtors or resort to any other security held by it at any time before proceeding against defendants. Citing cases upholding similar waivers, the court said that the waiver of the guarantor's rights was not against public policy (273 Cal. App. 2d 774, 786-787) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Surety May Waive Its Rights to Require Creditor to Act

In American Guaranty Corp. v. Stoody (1964) 230 Cal. App. 2d 390, 41 Cal. Rptr. 69 , the court of appeal upheld the denial of defendant's motion to dissolve an attachment. Plaintiff creditor had secured the issuance of the writ of attachment after filing a complaint for breach of contract against defendant guarantor. Among the other arguments made, defendant asserted that Civ. Code §§ 2845 and 2849 applied to give him the benefit of the security given by the principal lessees under the original contract. Plaintiff argued that defendant expressly waived those statutory rights. The court found that in the contract defendant waived any right to require the lessor creditor to proceed against the principal lessees, proceed against or exhaust any security held from lessees, or pursue any other remedy in lessor's power, and noted that the waiver was not violative of public policy (230 Cal. App. 2d 390, 394-396) .

22-222 California Points & Authorities § 222.222

§ 222.222 Opposing Contention That Surety Is Totally Liable--Surety Entitled to Have Creditor Proceed Against Principal [Civ. Code § 2845]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief, and may be combined with a general contention form opposing the existence of a suretyship (see, e.g., § 222.21).]

_____ [Name], THE SURETY, IS NOT [TOTALLY] LIABLE FOR THE AMOUNT OF THE OBLIGATION OF _____ [name], THE PRINCIPAL, BECAUSE _____ [name], THE SURETY, REQUESTED _____ [name], THE CREDITOR, _____ [TO PROCEED AGAINST _____ (name), THE PRINCIPAL and/or TO PURSUE ANY OTHER AVAILABLE REMEDY WHICH WOULD LIGHTEN THE BURDEN OF _____ [name], THE SURETY. [_____ (Name), THE SURETY, IS _____ (TOTALLY or PARTIALLY) EXONERATED FROM LIABILITY BECAUSE THE FAILURE OF _____ (name), THE CREDITOR, TO PROCEED AS REQUESTED RESULTED IN PREJUDICE TO _____ (name), THE SURETY, IN AN AMOUNT _____ (EQUAL TO or LESS THAN) THE AMOUNT OF THE OBLIGATION].

Surety Entitled to Have Creditor Proceed Against Principal. The surety may require the creditor, subject to Section 996.440 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to proceed against the principal, or to pursue any other remedy in the creditor's power which the surety cannot pursue, and which would lighten the surety's burden. The surety is exonerated to the extent to which he or she is prejudiced by the creditor's failure to proceed as requested (Civ. Code § 2845; Moffett v. Miller (1953) 119 Cal. App. 2d 712, 713-714, 260 P.2d 215).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a party's contention that the surety is entirely liable for the amount of the principal's default. The ground of the opposition is that the surety is entitled to have the creditor pursue any other remedy in the creditor's power which the surety cannot pursue and which would lighten the surety's burden. If the creditor fails to act as requested, the surety is exonerated to the extent to which he or she is thereby prejudiced. The surety's request of the creditor is subject to the provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 996.440, which sets forth the procedures for a motion to enforce liability on a bond [see Civ. Code § 2845].

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of the creditor's obligation to pursue other remedies against the principal. For example, this argument may arise in opposing an appeal of a dismissal for nonsuit based on the creditor's failure to proceed as requested [see, e.g., Moffett v. Miller (1953) 119 Cal. App. 2d 712, 260 P.2d 215] . These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel might allege facts describing the other remedies available to the creditor, the surety's request to the creditor to pursue them, the creditor's failure to act, and the resultant prejudice to the surety [see, e.g., Moffett v. Miller (1953) 119 Cal. App. 2d 712, 260 P.2d 215] .

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities set out in § 222.220.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Surety Entitled to Have Creditor Proceed Against Principal

In Moffett v. Miller (1953) 119 Cal. App. 2d 712, 260 P.2d 215 , defendants guaranteed payment to plaintiff of a promissory note. The note was not paid at the time of maturity or thereafter, except for a small amount. Plaintiff gave notice to the principal debtor and defendants that the note was overdue and payment was required. Defendants made written demand on plaintiff to sue or first pursue the principal. No effort was made by plaintiff to collect from the principal. Plaintiff brought an action against defendants on the guaranty. Defendant's motion for nonsuit based on plaintiff's failure to follow its demand was granted, and the trial court dismissed the case. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court quoted Civ. Code § 2845 as controlling resolution of the case. Plaintiff was required after the demand made by defendants as guarantors to proceed against the principal before being able to secure a judgment against defendants. There was no pleading or proof of a lack of prejudice to defendants justifying the action against them without proceeding against the principal (119 Cal. App. 2d 712, 713-714) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Surety Entitled to Have Creditor Proceed Against Principal

In Price v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Companies (1987) 193 Cal. App. 3d 1536, 239 Cal. Rptr. 158 , the court of appeal held that a ward who sought recovery against a surety on a guardian's bond was not relieved of the requirement of obtaining an accounting and surcharge order against the guardian before bringing suit against the surety. Several exceptions to this requirement are recognized, such as when the guardian has died, has absconded, is removed before a final accounting, or is beyond the court's jurisdiction. Similarly, when an accounting is impossible or unnecessary, or the amount of liability can be ascertained without an accounting, none will be required. However, the guardian's mere avoidance of service of process and failure to appear in an action by the ward for conversion of estate assets does not render the guardian outside the court's jurisdiction and does not constitute absconding for this purpose (193 Cal. App. 3d 1536, 1541-1542) .
